2.3.6. Thronoi ("thrones": Col 1:16). This term appears to be a metonymy for the spiritual power that occupies the throne (cf. Asc. Isa. 7-8). In LXX Daniel 7:9 thronoi refers to the thrones set in place in the heavenly tribunal of the Ancient of Days, clearly indicating positions of transcendent authority. And in 2 Enoch 20:1 they are called the "many-eyed thrones" who with the cherubim, seraphim and heavenly forces occupy the seventh heaven. In Testament of Levi 3:8 they occupy the highest heaven and are privileged with the exousiai to be in the very presence of God. The use of the term in Colossians* may be attributed to the particular set of beliefs Paul challenged at Colossae, perhaps associated with the "worship of angels" (Col 2:18).

2.3.7. Kosmokratores tou skotous toutou ("cosmic rulers of this darkness": Eph 6:12). Kosmokratōr is used of the god Sarapis in the magical texts (PGM XIII.618-40). In Ephesians the evil nature of these powers is emphasized by the phrase ta pneumatika tēs ponērias en tois epouraniois ("spiritual forces of evil in the heavenlies": Eph 6:12).

2.3.8. Angeloi. In at least one case Paul speaks of angeloi ("angels" or "messengers") in a context suggesting they are evil powers who might attempt to thwart the purposes of God (Rom 8:38), and in other instances they appear to be in some sense culpable and to be judged by believers (1 Cor 6:3). More problematic is the usage in Colossians 2:18, where the angels are either the objects of misplaced devotion or their worship* of God is an object of human religious aspiration (note the ambiguity of the genitive in the phrase thrēskeia tōn angelōn, "worship of angels": if an objective genitive it means worship directed toward angels; if a subjective genitive it refers to angelic worship of God, or worship led by angels).

2.3.9. Inclusive Phrases. Paul also employs four phrases which are broadly inclusive of every imaginable power. In Romans 8:39, in a series of contrasting pairs, he uses a spatial image, "neither height nor depth (oute hypsōma oute bathos), which may refer to the zenith and nadir of the heavenly bodies and thus encompass the full sweep of celestial powers (cf. 1 Enoch 18:3, 11). Or it may simply refer to any powers that might occupy the height of heaven or the underparts of the earth—or any space between.

In Colossians 1:16 "all things in heaven and on the earth, things seen and unseen" (ta horata kai ta aorata) are said to be created by Christ. These are then enumerated as "thrones, dominions, principalities and powers."

In Philippians 2:10, in speaking of the exalted Christ (see Exaltation), Paul depicts the universal submission to the sovereign Lord by using a spatial image of a three-tiered universe: "every knee . . . in heaven and on earth and under the earth [epouraniōn kai epigeiōn kai katachthoniōn] should bow." Here Paul (or the hymn writer) seems to include every rational being—human and spiritual, good and evil—as ultimately (or presently) submissive to the rule of Christ (for reference to demons "of the air, on the earth and under the earth" see PGM IV.2694-2704). The echo of Isaiah 45:23 recalls the OT context of the enforced submission of earthly powers (cf. Is 45:24 and 24:21) as apocalyptic symbols.

Finally, in Ephesians 1:21, as the conclusion to a list of four names of evil powers, we find a global reference to "every name named, not only in this age but in the age to come" (pantos onomatos onomazomenou ou monon en tō aiōni toutō alla kai en tō mellonti). If this is taken as authentically Pauline, it is further evidence that Paul never intended to exhaust the possibilities of names. Against a cultural background in which the successful magical manipulation of evil powers was commonly believed to be predicated on the knowledge of the power's name, Ephesians emphasizes the triumph* and sovereignty of Christ over every power—known or unknown, real or imagined, present or future.

3. The Nature of the Powers.

Within the Pauline corpus the powers are mentioned in a variety of specific contexts, most notably those corresponding to decisive episodes in the story of ments about the principalities and powers.

See also ANGELS, ARCHANGELS; DEMONS AND EXORCISM; ENEMY, ENMITY, HATRED; ELEMENTS/ELEMENTAL SPIRITS OF THE WORLD; FLESH; LIFE AND DEATH; LAW; SATAN, DEVIL; SIN; TRIUMPH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. E. Arnold, Ephesians: Power and Magic: The Concept of Power in Ephesians (SNTSMS 63; Cambridge: University Press, 1989); idem, Powers of Darkness: Principalities and Powers in Paul's Letters (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1992); H. Berkhof, Christ and the Powers (Scottdale: Herald, 1977); M. Black, "πᾶσαι ἐξουσίαι αὐτῷ ὑποταγήσονται," in Paul and Paulinism, ed. M. D. Hooker and S. G. Wilson (London: S.P.C.K., 1982) 74-82; G. B. Caird, Principalities and Powers (Oxford: Clarendon, 1956); W. Carr, Angels and Principalities: The Background, Meaning and Development of the Pauline Phrase HAI ARCHAI KAI HAI EXOUSIAI (SNTSMS 42; Cambridge: University Press, 1981); O. Cullmann, The State in the New Testament (London, 1957); M. Dibelius, Die Geisterwelt im Glauben des Paulus (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1909); J. Y. Lee, "Interpreting the Powers in Pauline Thought," NovT 12 (1970) 54-69; G. H. C. Macgregor, "Principalities and Powers: The Cosmic Background of Paul's Thought," NTS 1 (1954-55) 17-28; O. Merk, "ἄρχων," EDNT 1.167-68; C. D. Morrison, The Powers That Be (SBT 29; Naperville, IL: Allenson, 1960); R. J. Mouw, Politics and the Biblical Drama (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1976); P. T. O'Brien, "Principalities and Powers: Opponents of the Church," in Biblical Interpretation and the Church, ed. D. A. Carson (Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 1984) 110-50; H. Schlier, Principalities and Powers in the New Testament (Freiburg: Herder, 1961); J. S. Stewart, "On a Neglected Emphasis in New Testament Theology," SJT 4 (1951) 292-301; K. Weiss, "ἀρχή," EDNT 1.161-63; W. Wink, Naming the Powers (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1984); J. H. Yoder, The Politics of Jesus (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1972).

D. G. Reid

PRISON, PRISONER

The fact that Paul was imprisoned on more than one occasion is well attested. For the reasons, circumstances and results of those imprisonments we are dependent on the evidence from Acts and chiefly Paul's letters, with an occasional allusion in the early Church Fathers (e.g., 1 Clem. 5.6: Paul was "seven times in chains"). Of particular significance is Paul's apostolic perspective on imprisonment, whether it be his own or that of his coworkers. The question of the possible locations from which Paul wrote his prison letters is discussed in the articles on Philippians, Colossians, Philemon and Ephesians.

1. Prison
2. Paul the Prisoner
3. Prisoners of War

1. Prison.

In Acts we read of Saul of Tarsus imprisoning men and women when he was persecuting the church (Acts 8:3; 22:4, 19; 26:10; cf. Acts 9:4-5). But as an apostle of Jesus Christ, he suffered imprisonment for the sake of Jesus Christ. Ironically, on the occasion of his final visit to Jerusalem it was a Roman prison that protected him from the hands of his Jewish persecutors (Acts 21:33-34). When Paul cataloged his afflictions* in 2 Corinthians 6:4-5 and 11:23-29 he alluded to his "imprisonments" (2 Cor 6:5), which numbered "far more" (2 Cor 11:23) than those of the "false apostles" who opposed him (see Opponentsof Paul). This statement implies that by the time of his writing 2 Corinthians (A.D. 55-56), just prior to his arrest (A.D. 57) and successive imprisonments in Jerusalem,* Caesarea and Rome,* Paul had been put in prison on more occasions than the one imprisonment related in Acts, that at Philippi (Acts 16:23-40).

The description of Paul and Silas's imprisonment at Philippi provides a valuable glimpse into a prison in a Roman colony. After Paul and Silas had suffered a severe beating with rods, the jailor was ordered by the magistrates to "keep them securely." The jailor (desmophylax) complied by placing Paul and Silas in the "innermost cell," chained, with their feet fastened in stocks, which served as an instrument of torture since the legs were painfully stretched. This cell is described as being in a building at least partially designated as a prison (alternately called phylakē, Acts 16:23, 24, 27, 37, 40, and desmōtērion, Acts 16:26), occupied by a number of prisoners, and under the direction of a jailor whose residence appears to have adjoined the prison, possibly upstairs from the prison (Acts 16:34).

But an official prison was not necessarily the norm; parts of buildings largely devoted to other uses could serve as prisons. At Jerusalem Paul was bound in two chains and held in the "barracks" (parembolē, Acts 21:37; 23:16) adjoining the Temple area, presumably in the fortress of Antonia. Later, at Caesarea, Paul was held under guard in Herod's palace (praitōrion, Acts 23:35). The narrative of Acts suggests a more relaxed detainment at Caesarea than at Jerusalem. After being transferred as a prisoner to Rome, Paul was kept for two years under house arrest (custodia libera) at his own expense (Acts 28:30), guarded by a Roman soldier (Acts 28:16) and restrained by a light chain (alysis, Acts 28:20). There he was granted the freedom to entertain numerous guests (Acts 28:17, 23, 30) and carry on his preaching and teaching (Acts 28:17-31). Both at Caesarea and at Rome, Paul's imprisonment paradoxically gave him access to audiences he would not otherwise have reached, especially if Philippians 1:13-14 and 4:22 relate to either of these captivities.

In the Roman world imprisonment was legally not a penalty for a crime. Prisons were sort of "holding tanks" used to detain those awaiting trial (custodia reorum) or execution (see Ramsay, 273-74). And, as Paul's recorded imprisonments indicate, the circumstances could vary: on the one hand, he was brutally scourged and then locked in stocks in the darkness of an innermost cell; on the other hand, he could experience the relatively humane detention of guarded house arrest.

2. Paul the Prisoner.

Paul employs several words to speak of prison and being a prisoner. He can speak of "chains" (desmoi, always plural in Paul), by which he means "imprisonment." He frequently refers to them as "my chains" (Phil 1:7, 13, 14, 17; Col 4:18) and sometimes uses them to speak of his situation "in prison" (Philem 10, 13; 2 Tim 2:9). In 2 Corinthians, when speaking of his afflictions as an apostle,* he refers to being en phylakais, "in prison" (2 Cor 6:5; 11:23). In Ephesians 6:20 and 2 Timothy 1:16 the apostle's imprisonment is indicated by the word halysis, "chain," and in Colossians 4:3 Paul speaks of being "bound" (dedemai).

Paul's repeated references in Philippians 1 to "my chains" offer insight into his experience and how he reconciled it with his calling as apostle, presumably questioned at Philippi by those who supposed that a suffering* apostle was a contradiction (see Bloomquist). Paul speaks from his imprisonment with a note of joy,* untarnished by self-pity, and confident that though he is confined to prison, the word of God is not confined. Hence the frequent mention of "my imprisonment" functions rhetorically as apologetic. Through his imprisonment it has "come to light" (phanerous ginomai) in all the praetorium and among those outside the praetorium that his imprisonment is en Christō, "for Christ" (Phil 1:13; see Caesar's Household). This effect, Paul implies, is due to divine providence, to which he appeals as a theodicy. Some of his fellow believers have found in Paul's imprisonment more confidence and motivation to preach the gospel* (Phil 1:14), knowing that Paul is held in prison so that he might give his defense of the gospel (Phil 1:16). Sadly for their sake, but happily for the gospel, others have been motivated out of selfish ambition to preach the gospel with the hope of increasing Paul's suffering in prison (Phil 1:17), perhaps by insinuating that he was not a true apostle since he was in jail and under sentence (Phil 1:22-23). But the Philippians, even at a distance, partake of Paul's ministry* by their prayers* and gifts, and so they too partake of the divine grace* of Paul's apostolic commission in its Christ-like afflictions (Phil 3:10) and defense of the gospel (see Hawthorne, 23; O'Brien, 70).

When Paul speaks of himself as "prisoner" (desmios), it is always as "prisoner of Christ* Jesus" (Philem 1, 9; Eph 3:1), "prisoner in the Lord*" (Eph 4:1) or "prisoner of him [our Lord]" (2 Tim 1:8). Though the phrase "prisoner of Christ Jesus" and its equivalents appears three out of five times in the contested Pauline letters, its presence in Philemon calls for it to be reckoned as an authentic piece of Pauline vocabulary and self-understanding. Does the genitive in the expression desmios Christou Iesou ("prisoner of Christ Jesus") indicate that Paul sees himself as one taken prisoner by Christ or as one who suffers imprisonment for the sake of Christ? Most commentators have understood it in the latter sense, appealing to Philippians 1:29-30. This seems to be the most likely meaning, with the implied nuance that it is Christ who is truly sovereign over Paul's circumstances. In Philemon 13 Paul refers to his desmoi tou euangeliou, which can scarcely be rendered "imprisonment of the gospel" and must be read "imprisonment for the gospel," an emphasis similar to that of Colossians 4:3, where Paul writes that he is in prison (dedemai, lit. "bound") for declaring the "mystery* of Christ." In opening the letter to Philemon with the words "Paul a prisoner of Christ Jesus," Paul is substituting this identification for his more usual "called to be an apostle," "an apostle* of Christ Jesus" and "a slave* of Christ Jesus." Whereas Paul elsewhere can pair "apostle" and "slave," in Philemon 9 he speaks of himself as "ambassador" (presbytēs should probably be so translated rather than "old man," see commentaries) and "prisoner" (cf. Eph 6:20, presbeuō en halysei, "I serve as ambassador in chains"). The situation from which Paul writes to Philemon is by all indications an actual imprisonment, so while "prisoner" does take on metaphorical overtones, it is rooted in Paul's simultaneous situation as a literal prisoner.

Paul's self-identification as a "prisoner of Christ Jesus" plays a rhetorical* function in Paul's appeal to Philemon* (as it does in Philippians for a different reason; see above). The humility Paul enacts in his submission and obedience to Christ—to the point of imprisonment—is the very humility Paul expects of Philemon as he responds to Onesimus "in the Lord" (see Petersen, 124-28). Clearly, Paul views his imprisonment as part of his apostolic activity. Inasmuch as his imprisonments are among his trials and afflictions as an apostle, he lives out his commitment to the "word of the cross*" as a prisoner of Jesus Christ, who took upon himself the end-time messianic woes. In his cruciform "weakness"* he finds and displays the power* of God (cf. 2 Cor 13:1-4). Thus Paul's identity as a prisoner serves both as an emblem of Christ's humiliation upon the apostle's life and as a symbol of Paul's apostolic authority.* Thus when he asks the Colossians to "remember my bonds" (Col 4:18), it is "not chiefly a matter of pathos but of authority" (Moule, 139). The rhetorical function of the prisoner theme is also evident in Ephesians 4:1: "I, therefore, the prisoner in the Lord, beg you to lead a life worthy of the calling to which you have been called." Here the pastoral* appeal of the letter is underscored by the costly commitment of the apostle, who was imprisoned for the sake of the Gentiles* now addressed (Eph 3:1; see Lincoln 234, cf. 171-72).

The interpretation of R. Reitzenstein bears mention here. Reitzenstein explained Paul's status as a "prisoner of Christ Jesus" not as literal imprisonment but as a metaphor shaped by the mystery religions in which the devotee was purportedly detained (katochē), or "imprisoned," prior to initiation. Paul, it was reasoned, regarded his imprisonment as preparation for entrance into the final mystery of Christ (Phil 1:23). Apart from the unproven influence of the mystery religions on Paul (see Religions), such an interpretation comes to grief on Paul's view of his imprisonment in Philippians, where he clearly wrestles with the possible outcomes of his imprisonment as either life or death (Phil 1:19-24), the desirable outcome being life and the opportunity to visit the Philippians again (Phil 1:25-26; 2:24; cf. Philem 22; see Kittel 43).

3. Prisoners of War.

Paul can use synaichmalōtos ("fellow prisoner [of war]") of certain coworkers* (Rom 16:7, Andronicus and Junia; Col 4:10, Aristarchus; Philem 23, Epaphras). Though he never uses aichmalōtos of himself (the closest allusion, if not the actual term is 2 Cor 2:14; see Hafemann, 18-39), he implies that he considers himself a prisoner of war by consistently speaking of synaichmalōtos mou, "my fellow prisoner"—these individuals are fellow prisoners of war with Paul. This military metaphor seems to fit well with Paul's occasional invoking of the warfare metaphor to speak of the work of Christ, the struggle of the church and the ministry of an apostle of Jesus Christ (see Triumph). It could be that synaichmalōtos was a rank of honor that Paul reserved for those who had borne with him the particular affliction of imprisonment for gospel ministry. But if so, it is notable that whereas in Philemon 23-24 Epaphras is called synaichmalōtos and Aristarchus is counted among Paul's "fellow workers" (synergoi), in Colossians it is Aristarchus who is called synaichmalōtos (Col 4:10) and Epaphras, who initially brought the gospel to Colossae (Col 1:7, note "Epaphras our beloved fellow servant," Epaphra tou agapētou syndoulos hēmōn), is called a "servant of Christ [Jesus]" (doulos Christou [Iēsou], Col 4:12; see Coworkers).

In Ephesians 4:8 the related verb aichmalōteuō ("take into captivity") and noun aichmalōsia ("captivity," "prisoners of war") are found in an adaptation of Psalm 68:18 (LXX 67:19), which many interpreters have understood as a reference to Christ's having taken spiritual powers captive and led them into captivity. In Romans 7 the verb aichmalōtizō ("take captive in war") is used to speak of the "law of sin*" taking "me" captive (Rom 7:23), and in Galatians 3:23 Paul speaks of the Law holding prisoners (ephrouroumetha syngkleiomenoi) before faith* was "revealed." In 2 Corinthians Paul writes that he takes every thought captive for Christ (2 Cor 10:5). Finally, in 2 Timothy reference is made to those who enter households and take "silly women" captive, or ensnare them (2 Tim 3:6).

See also COLOSSIANS, LETTER TO THE; EPHESIANS, LETTER TO THE; LEGAL SYSTEM, ROMAN; PHILEMON, LETTER TO; PHILIPPIANS, LETTER TO THE; SUFFERING; TRIUMPH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. M. Barth, Ephesians (AB; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1974); L. G. Bloomquist, The Function of Suffering in Philippians (JSNT 78; Sheffield: Academic, 1993); S. J. Hafemann, Suffering and the Spirit (WUNT 2.19; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1986); G. F. Hawthorne, Philippians (WBC 43; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); G. Kittel, "αἰχμάλωτος κτλ," TDNT I.195-97; idem, "δεσμός, δέσμιος," TDNT II.43; A. T. Lincoln, Ephesians (WBC 42; Dallas: Word, 1990); E. Lohse, Colossians and Philemon (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1971); C. F. D. Moule, The Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon (CGTC; Cambridge: University Press, 1957); P. T. O'Brien, Colossians, Philemon (WBC 44; Waco, TX: Word, 1982); idem, Philippians (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1991); N. R. Petersen, Rediscovering Paul: Philemon and the Sociology of Paul's Narrative World (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); W. M. Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1904); R. Reitzenstein, Hellenistic Mystery Religions (Pittsburgh: Pickwick, 1978); F. Staudinger, "δεσμός," EDNT 1.288-90.

D. G. Reid

PROMISE AND FULFILLMENT. See ABRAHAM; LAW; OLD TESTAMENT IN PAUL.

PROPHECY, PROPHESYING

Prophecy is one of the "gifts" (charismata) of the Holy Spirit* described within the Pauline corpus, especially in 1 Corinthians 12—14. Its action or use is prophesying (see Gifts of the Spirit). It consists of a word or oracle given or revealed by God* through the initiative and inspiration of the Holy Spirit and conveyed by a willing medium or participant sometimes designated as a "prophet" or as "one who prophesies." A prophecy is given in order to meet one or more needs within the Christian community for guidance and direction, edification, encouragement, consolation or witness, and it ultimately points back to the One who gives this gift.

1. Paul and OT Prophecy
2. Paul's Personal Experience with Prophecy
3. Paul's Reflections on Prophecy
4. The Limits of Prophecy
5. Appeals to Paul in Contemporary Claims to Prophecy

1. Paul and OT Prophecy.

The nature of prophecy for Paul is clearly informed by the nature of prophecy as it is expressed by the literary prophets of Israel. As one who had read, indeed, studied the prophetic writings of Israel's prophets, Paul attempted repeatedly to show that the Christian gospel stands in continuity with their message (see Prophet, Paul as). Critical to his argument are three factors.

(1) God has spoken through the prophets of Israel (Rom 1:1-2; 11:3; 16:26). Basic to the Hebrew term nāḇî' in the OT, which is typically translated as "prophet," is the idea that the nāḇî' is a person who speaks on behalf of another. The prophet of Yahweh served as a mouthpiece for God by proclaiming God's message to those who were to receive it. Paul affirmed repeatedly the idea that God had spoken through the OT prophets.

(2) The word or message of the literary prophets was considered to be authoritative. It was a word or message which originated with Yahweh and ultimately came to occupy an important position in Israel's own self-understanding of the relationship between Israel and Yahweh. It is true, as Paul observed, that Israel did not initially embrace the prophets or their messages. Indeed, Israel had killed prophets with unwelcome messages (Rom 11:3; 1 Thess 2:15). Ultimately, however, Israel came to recognize the genuine authoritative character of the prophetic words, even though the people did not always perceive their full meaning at the time in which they were given. The prophets were thus granted a special position alongside the Torah. The Law* and the Prophets were viewed as working in tandem with one another (Rom 3:21-22), and the prophets found their place among the holy writings (en graphais hagiais, Rom 1:2) of Scripture.

(3) The oracles which are found embedded within OT literature were originally directed toward a large community, a small group or an individual. Sometimes the message is predictive of a future event, while on other occasions it serves as an exhortation. On the whole, though, Paul regards the OT prophetic literature as having achieved at least two things: (1) the prophets have borne witness to the righteousness* of God (Rom 3:21) and (2) they have predicted, or promised beforehand, the good news (to euangelion; see Gospel) of God in Jesus Christ* (Rom 1:1-6).

The method by which the OT prophets received their message is described only indirectly by Paul. In Romans 16:25-26 he notes that it is a message which came by means of revelation (apokalypsis), but that its meaning had been mysterious* and kept secret until Paul's own day. Only recently had God made known the real meaning of the prophetic writings. In short, it is to divine revelation that Paul attributed genuine prophetic activity in the OT (see Old Testament in Paul).

2. Paul's Personal Experience with Prophecy.

2.1. Luke-Acts. According to Acts, Paul's first encounter with Christian prophetic activity occurred immediately after his encounter with the risen Lord on the road to Damascus (see Conversion and Call). Ananias, described by the writer of Luke-Acts simply as a "disciple" who lived in Damascus, is seldom, if ever, acknowledged as a prophetic figure. Two things suggest, however, that the role Ananias played with respect to Saul was, indeed, a prophetic one. First, it is said that the Lord spoke to him in a vision (en horamati), providing specific instructions for him to go to Saul (Acts 9:10-16). Second, Ananias went to Saul and gave him this message: "The Lord Jesus, who appeared to you on your way here, has sent me so that you may regain your sight and be filled with the Holy Spirit" (Acts 9:17). In short, the reception of a divine word of instruction by means of a vision and the conveyance of this message to Paul are clearly indicative of prophetic activity consistent with OT precedent. The OT prophet (nāḇî) had originally been called a seer (rō'eh) precisely because of the significant role visions and dreams often played in prophetic activity (1 Sam 9:9).

Shortly after Saul's conversion, Barnabas went to Tarsus to meet Saul and to take him to Antioch in Syria (Acts 11:22-26). Upon their arrival in Antioch, Barnabas and Saul began a ministry which lasted over a year. It was during this period that a group, or guild, of prophets, including one named Agabus, first came upon the scene. They had traveled from Jerusalem* to Antioch,* where Agabus "foretold [esēmanen] by the Spirit" that a great famine would soon engulf the world (Acts 11:27-28). The response of this congregation to Agabus's revelation was quick and tangible. They took an offering designated for the relief of Christians living in Judea, and they empowered Barnabas and Saul to convey the offering to the elders of Judea (Acts 11:29-30).

The Agabus story marks the first explicit occasion in which Saul came into personal contact with a Christian prophet. The prophetic act was predictive in its content, and the writer of Luke-Acts indicates that this prediction was fulfilled while Claudius was emperor (Acts 11:28; see Chronology). The themes of prophecy and fulfillment were deeply rooted in the religious life of Israel,* and the expectation that prophetic oracles, including predictive prophecies, should be tested was an injunction affirmed by the Mosaic Law (Deut 18:21-22). The action of this congregation at Antioch is unexplainable apart from certain testing which must have gone on once the prediction was made. The text is silent on who tested, interpreted or applied the oracle, or what tests were imposed to determine the genuine character of the oracle, but Paul's role in conveying the offering to Judea is sufficient evidence of his acceptance of Agabus's prediction as a genuine prophetic word. Barnabas* and Saul, having traveled to Jerusalem and delivered the offering, returned to Antioch and resumed their role in a Christian community in which both prophets and teachers were present (Acts 13:1). The writer of Acts notes that it was in the context of worship that the Holy Spirit indicated that Barnabas and Saul should be singled out for a specific ministry to which they had been called (Acts 13:2-3).

It is very likely that the Holy Spirit spoke through one of the prophets who was present at the time. While the text does not indicate clearly that this is what happened or that testing was undertaken, the presence of these prophets and the time of prayer and fasting suggests that this was a period in which the validity of this call could be and was tested. Once again, the fact that Barnabas and Saul acceded to the request, and that others laid hands upon them and sent them out, suggests that Saul understood this word of personal guidance to be a genuine oracle of the Holy Spirit.

A third incident in Luke-Acts is recorded in Acts 21:8-14. This incident takes place about a decade later than that mentioned in Acts 11. Once again Agabus appears upon the scene. Paul was on an extended journey to Jerusalem which eventually took him through Caesarea, where he found lodging with Philip the evangelist (Acts 21:8). Philip's four unmarried daughters were all known to prophesy (Acts 21:9). While Paul was visiting with these believers in Caesarea, Agabus came with a message for Paul regarding his intention to travel to Jerusalem. Agabus predicted that the Jews in Jerusalem would bind Paul and hand him over to the Gentiles* (Acts 21:11).

In this incident, the prophetic word was interpreted differently by Paul than it was by those who were accompanying him. Those who were with Paul understood this prediction to be a warning intended to serve a prescriptive purpose: "Do not go." As a result, they begged Paul to terminate his trip. Paul, on the other hand, viewed this oracle as informative or predictive, not as prescriptive: "Go, but know that you will not return." Ultimately, Paul's resolve to continue his journey to Jerusalem was acknowledged, and the believers prayed that the Lord's will would be done (Acts 21:14).

Some have argued from this passage that Paul resisted God's prescriptive warning and as a result paid the ultimate consequence in his capture and death. In support of this position they cite Acts 21:4, which states that at Tyre, certain Christians had told Paul explicitly, "through the Spirit," not to go to Jerusalem. Others, however, argue that Paul was not disobedient because he had been "bound in the Spirit" (Acts 20:22) to go to Jerusalem. Furthermore, in Acts 20:23 Paul acknowledged that as he advanced on his itinerary* to Jerusalem, the Holy Spirit in every city he visited had testified that he would undergo imprisonment and afflictions upon his arrival in Jerusalem. They argue that the apparent prohibition in Acts 21:4 should be understood as a mixture of genuine prophetic prediction and of mistaken interpretation, but that the mistake lies not with Paul, but with Paul's friends. In either case, it is clear from the Acts account that Paul had firsthand contact with Christian prophets over an extended period of time and that he took their ministries seriously.

2.2. Prophecy in the Pauline Corpus. Paul wrote of his own encounter with prophets, and for the purposes of this and subsequent discussions, Ephesians* and the Pastorals* are included under this heading. While incidents behind the letters are less graphic than are those found in Acts, they are no less informative. Paul, after all, had been in the company of prophets in Antioch, in Caesarea and presumably elsewhere. Paul understood prophets to be gifts which God had placed (etheto, 1 Cor 12:28) in or bestowed (edōken, Eph 4:11) upon the church, and that they had an ongoing ministry* to perform.

The language Paul adopts when he refers to prophets and prophesying is occasionally ambiguous. As a consequence, some scholars have concluded that while Paul maintained in theory that all Christians had the potential to prophesy, a goal toward which Paul seemingly exhorted all the Corinthians to move, in reality only a limited number of individuals ever did so, and these few occupied the office of prophet. Paul himself never uses the term office to describe the position of the prophet, but seems rather easily to alternate between using the noun for "prophet" (ho prophētēs) and a substantive participle, "the one who prophesies" (ho prophēteuōn). This suggests a fluidity during this period in which a variety of individuals, including both women (1 Cor 11:5) and men (1 Cor 11:4; see Man and Woman), or even groups such as elders (1 Tim 4:4), were prepared to speak on behalf of God under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. While within particular congregational settings some may have prophesied more frequently than others, Paul was aware of a wide range of such persons. Clearly, some seem to have been identified with their local congregations (1 Cor 14:29) while others appear to have engaged in a more itinerant form of ministry (e.g., Agabus).

One particular incident involving prophetic activity is described repeatedly in 1 and 2 Timothy. According to Acts 16:1-3, while staying in the city of Lystra, Paul met Timothy and asked this young believer to accompany him as he ministered throughout Asia Minor. Acts notes that the believers in Lystra and the neighboring town of Iconium "spoke well" of Timothy. It is likely that the description of Timothy's commission to the ministry is to be understood precisely in this context.

In 1 Timothy 1:18 a series of instructions are given to Timothy in keeping with the prophecies (prophēteiai) which had previously been made regarding him. The occasion during which these prophecies had been made appears to have been a meeting or council of elders or presbyters (see Church Order and Government). On this occasion one or more of them had laid hands upon Timothy (1 Tim 4:14). The result of this laying on of hands and the utterance of a prophetic oracle apparently can be linked to a divine call and the bestowal upon Timothy of a gift (charisma) of ministry. If this incident occurred in Lystra, as is likely, then Paul was present at the time. The statement in Acts 16:2 that the believers spoke well of Timothy may be Luke's way of describing the call and gifting of Timothy. Paul's presence at that event would also lend authority to Paul's repeated appeal for Timothy to remember this prophetic event (1 Tim 1:18; 4:14; 2 Tim 1:6-7).

Paul himself was no stranger to the phenomena frequently linked to prophetic activity. Acts tells us that he was the recipient of visions* (Acts 9:12; 16:9; 18:9) and trances (Acts 22:17) and that he was privy to angelic* appearances (Acts 27:23-25). In his letters he claims to have received revelations (2 Cor 12:1, 7; Gal 1:12) through the Spirit (1 Cor 2:10). Occasionally he speaks of a "command" (entolē) of the Lord (1 Cor 14:37) or a "word" (logos) of the Lord (1 Thess 4:15), and he views himself as one who had been called to pass on the meaning of what had previously been "hidden" or "mysterious" but which was now to be revealed and declared (1 Cor 4:1; 15:15; Eph 3:3-4; 5:32; 6:19; Col 4:3). Furthermore, Paul claimed to know of a man, in all likelihood himself, who was "caught up into Paradise" (2 Cor 12:4; see Heaven, Heavenlies, Paradise), where he heard unspeakable things. Acts portrays Paul as one "full of the Holy Spirit" (Acts 13:9) and as "bound in the Spirit" (Acts 20:22), and in 1 Corinthians Paul claims to "have the Spirit of God" (1 Cor 7:40) in the sense that he believed his reflections to be totally in line with those of God. In short, the evidence from Acts and the letters is that Paul was clearly at home with a range of prophetic phenomena, and as such his teaching on the subject reflects his own experience.

3. Paul's Reflections on Prophecy.

3.1. Prophecy as Charism. In two Pauline passages, 1 Corinthians 12—14 and Romans 12, the subjects of prophets and prophesying occur in conjunction with a uniquely Pauline term, charisma and its plural charismata. Outside the Pauline corpus this term occurs only in 1 Peter 4:10, and then with a distinctively Pauline flavor given to it. Rooted in the Greek term for "grace"* (charis), charisma suggests the "result or manifestation of divine grace" or "a special gift bestowed by the grace of God." A second concept which is shared by these two passages in which the gift of prophecy is mentioned is the metaphor frequently chosen by Paul to describe the nature of the church*: the body of Christ (see Body of Christ).

While the term charisma is absent from Ephesians 4, it also refers to prophets (Eph 4:11) and embraces the metaphor of the church as the body of Christ (Eph 4:12-16). Furthermore, Ephesians 4:11 notes that Christ "gave" (edōken) this "gift" (dōrea, Eph 4:7) as one of several to the church. It is likely, then, that in Ephesians 4 the terms dōrea and doma ("gift" Eph 4:8; cf.

LXX Ps 67[68]:19) serve as synonyms for charismata. In any event, the Pauline corpus is consistent in its attribution of the gift of prophecy to the grace of God. The consistent metaphorical portrayal of the church as the body of Christ in conjunction with the gift of prophecy suggests that the interrelationship between the various parts of the body working together in their unity and diversity is the locus in which this grace is most richly manifested.

It is clear from Paul's Corinthian* correspondence that the emphasis of many of the Corinthians was upon diversity at the expense of unity. Their emphasis was upon the ability to speak in tongues regardless of how this activity affected the rest of the community. Their undue emphasis upon speaking in tongues* as the manifestation of the so-called pneumatika ("spiritual gifts," 1 Cor 12:1) was misguided. The Corinthians mistakenly understood this to be a sign of Spirit possession and, by extension, of their own spirituality.* Their insistence that such activity need have no communal value for the church was also misinformed. By changing the focus of the discussion from pneumatika to charismata (cf. 1 Cor 12:1, 4), Paul underscored the fact that the various manifestations of the Spirit were gracious gifts of God and was thus able to recommend some concrete guidelines for their use within the Christian community. In short, he removed these manifestations of the Spirit, including prophecy, from a context of selfish and prideful individualism and set them in a context of community, accountability, mutual development, good order, intelligible worship* and ministry on behalf of others.

The charism of prophecy, then, becomes much more beneficial as a manifestation of the Holy Spirit within the community than does the ability to speak in tongues, except when the tongue is interpreted (1 Cor 14:5), precisely because it builds up the body. It is a gift that is bestowed "for the common good" (1 Cor 12:7 RSV). As a manifestation of God's grace, the ability to prophesy may be used for the "upbuilding and encouragement and consolation" (1 Cor 14:3 NRSV) of others.

For Paul the church is preeminently a charismatic community (Dunn). Prophecy as a manifestation of God's abiding, sustaining and operative grace must, therefore, be viewed as having corporate or community dimensions. Prophecies are intended to be shared with the community. Failure to do so is tantamount to quenching the Spirit (1 Thess 5:19), to manipulating individuals or, for that matter, the entire congregation (1 Cor 14:36-38; cf. Shepherd of Hermas Mandate 11). It is the sharing of the Holy Spirit by each member of the Christian community that creates the koinōnia, "fellowship," or participation in the lives of one another. This participation defines the charismatic community over against the world. The community, then, becomes the primary place where the Spirit-inspired speech of prophecy is intended to be given, for the good of the community (1 Cor 12:7; 14:4-5).

3.2. Prophecy as a Community Phenomenon. The prophet appears to have stood second only to the apostle if the Pauline order is to be taken seriously (1 Cor 12:28; Eph 4:11; 2:20). Paul's instructions to the Corinthians clearly demonstrate that he viewed prophecy as providing a major corrective to an otherwise dysfunctional appeal to tongues (1 Cor 14:5). Prophecy was a gift whose pursuit Paul encouraged and whose exercise was intended to be governed by the principle of love* (1 Cor 14:1). In spite of its significance, Paul was equally clear that it had its limitations. It was at best both partial and temporary (1 Cor 13:8-9), but nonetheless Paul extolled its value. It could edify, encourage and console (1 Cor 14:3); it could communicate a message directly understandable by all (1 Cor. 14:5), including a message of reproof or accountability (1 Cor 14:24). Its very exercise might be all that was sufficient for an outsider to recognize the presence of God in the midst of the Christian community (1 Cor 14:25). It acted as a sign of God's presence and of eschatological reality that the new age was inaugurated.

In order for such a gift to function properly, then, Paul established certain guidelines for its usage within the Christian community. Edification must play a central role (1 Cor 14:26). On occasion several persons might have a prophetic word to deliver at a single gathering, but order must reign (1 Cor 14:32-33). This order, consistent with the nature of the giver of the gift, might be maintained by limiting the number of individuals who would be allowed to prophesy (1 Cor 14:29). Or those intending to speak might exercise self-control (1 Cor 14:32), even to the point of deferring to another individual who, while sitting in their presence, receives what appears to be a spontaneous revelation (1 Cor 14:30). Like all other charisms, the presence of the prophetic gift is neither to be despised, thereby quenching the Spirit (1 Thess 5:19-20), nor accepted without question (1 Cor 14:29; 1 Thess 5:20-22), nor allowed to dominate the body of Christ at the expense of other charismatic manifestations (1 Cor 14:25-31) and in violation of the Lord's* command (1 Cor 14:37-38). Within the body of Christ prophecy might play an important role, but God had given other gifts as well and these deserved adequate time for expression.

3.3. Prophecy, Revelation and Mystery. A significant amount of discussion in recent years concerns the relationship between prophecy and apocalyptic. Attention has been focused primarily on the role which apocalyptic played as a successor to prophetic activity, particularly during the intertestamental period. In the NT attention has regularly been directed to John's Revelation which claims both to be "the revelation [apokalypsis] of Jesus Christ" (Rev 1:1) and "the words of the prophecy [tous logous tēs prophēteias]" (Rev 1:3). That a NT writer saw a relationship between revelation and prophecy, then, is fairly clear. The nature of apocalyptic* as a genre and the nature of both mystery and revelation as part of that larger genre, as well as the relationship between the apocalyptic and prophetic genres, have been the primary focus of the discussion.

In the Pauline corpus the verb apokalyptō, "to reveal," appears thirteen times and the noun apokalypsis, "revelation," occurs ten times. In several instances it is used to speak of the divine eschatological disclosure of the presently operative righteousness (Rom 1:17) or wrath* (Rom 1:18) of God, or the future glory* (Rom 8:18). In other words, the term suggests something eschatological* in nature that is being or will be made known. Within the context of prophetic discussion, however, these terms appear to have a more specific nuance, one which may form the basis of the content to be revealed.

In Paul's most explicit treatment of prophecy, he employs this group of words, "prophecy/revelation," three times. In 1 Corinthians 14:6 he asks, "How will I benefit you unless I speak to you in some revelation or knowledge or prophecy or teaching?" (NRSV) This statement appears to form a chiasmus, which, if it does, connects revelation with prophecy and knowledge* with teaching. In 1 Corinthians 14:26 the word apokalypsis occurs, and prophesying is left unmentioned. Still, within the immediate context other forms of inspired speech, such as a "tongue" or "interpretation," are mentioned, as is the designation "teaching."* Again, in 1 Corinthians 14:30-31 Paul clearly links together prophecy and revelation by mentioning revelation in the midst of his very specific discussion of prophecy. Prophecy, it appears, comes by way of revelation. The revelation when spoken forms the basis of the prophecy. And both revelation (1 Cor 2:10) and prophecy (1 Cor 12:8) come by means of the Holy Spirit (dia tou pneumatos).

Of equal importance is Paul's linkage of these terms to the idea of "mystery."* Paul understood himself to be a steward of God's mysteries (1 Cor 4:1), but he was not alone. He suggests that those who possess prophetic abilities and who understand all mysteries and knowledge (as though they might be the same person) but do not possess love are of no account (1 Cor 13:2). The concept of mystery for Paul is not something that remains hidden or secret, but something that is made known or revealed (Eph 1:9; 3:3). In Romans 16:25-26, then, he notes that the very gospel of Jesus Christ which he preaches was formerly a "mystery," but it is now "disclosed," or "revealed," through the "prophetic writings."

4. The Limits of Prophecy.

4.1. The Sovereignty of the Spirit's Distribution. In a sense, Paul viewed the prophetic gift as unlimited. If the Holy Spirit who distributed such gifts were present in all who believe (Rom 8:9), then theoretically all who believe should have the potential to prophesy. The Pauline wish that the Corinthians might earnestly desire the ability to prophesy (1 Cor 14:1) is by no means, then, a vapid rhetorical wish. It was a genuine possibility which stood in continuity with Moses' prayer that all of God's people might be prophets (Num 11:29), with Joel's prediction that the Lord's Spirit would be poured out on all persons, thereby enabling the sons and daughters of Israel to prophesy (Joel 2:28 [= MT 3:1]), and with Peter's identification of the Pentecost event (Acts 2:14-18) as the fulfillment of that for which Moses had longed and which Joel had predicted.

The limits of prophecy, however, were fixed not so much by possibility as by reality. In one sense the appearance of the prophetic gift, like all other gifts, was dependent upon the sovereign distribution of the gift by the Spirit of God (1 Cor 12:11). It was, after all, only one manifestation within the body of Christ. But it may also have been limited by the faith to receive and to act upon the inspiration which the Holy Spirit manifested (Rom 12:6). Paul is clear that there is no limitation of this gift on the basis of gender. Both men and women might prophesy (1 Cor 11:4-5), but they needed to be people whom the Spirit inspired to speak and people who chose to obey the Spirit's promptings.

To be sure, Paul viewed prophecy as providing a valuable corrective to the abuses of the Corinthian congregation. Its primary value was not so much individual as communal. It was intended to build up the community (1 Cor 14:3-5). Still, this gift was not the only gift granted to the church. Indeed, like all other gifts it was an imperfect one (1 Cor 13:9) with temporal limitations. And it needed to be exercised with restraint. Diversity within the one body of Christ anticipated that. The Holy Spirit distributed not only the prophetic gift but others as well. Paul recommended, therefore, that when the community gathered, only two or three prophetic utterances be given. Such a limitation would allow other individuals with other gifts adequate space to minister to the body (1 Cor 14:26). It would also make possible sufficient time for the various prophetic words to be given and to undergo the scrutiny of others (1 Cor 14:29).

But who are the "others" to whom Paul made reference here? Many have suggested that Paul envisioned a group of "prophets" who might weigh or test the oracle, but it is more likely that Paul saw a role for the entire congregation in this regard. Paul's injunction in 1 Thessalonians 5:20-21 that prophecy should not be despised but tested is not limited to a group of testing "prophets." It appears to be a congregational mandate. Regardless of who engaged in the discernment process, the important issue seems to have been that all claims to prophetic inspiration be limited to those who have been appropriately reviewed and accepted by the larger body.

4.2. Prophecy and the Need for Discernment. In every age there have been those who claim to have prophetic inspiration. Some claims may be true, while others are not. In Paul's day there were those who were designated as false prophets, such as Bar Jesus or Elymas (Acts 13:6, 8). There were also those such as the young slave girl at Philippi who had a spirit of divination and was engaged in soothsaying (Acts 16:16), an activity which had been condemned in the strongest of terms in the OT (Deut 18:10-12). Jesus had warned even his disciples that there would eventually arise false prophets who were actually wolves in sheep's clothing (Mt 7:15-20). It should come as no surprise, then, that Paul, who wrote about the gift of prophesying, should also address himself to the subject of verification. Prophetic claims, after all, are easily made. Besides, genuine prophetic activity demands a response. It is important, therefore, to see that those who anticipate genuine prophetic activity in their midst are granted the necessary tools to distinguish between genuine and illegitimate prophetic claims.

Paul's approach to this was twofold. On the one hand he spoke of another gift, the discerning of spirits (diakriseis pneumatōn, 1 Cor 12:10), which had been given to the body of Christ. In a sense, this gift should be viewed as a partner gift to the gift of prophecy. It too is a gift which is sovereignly bestowed upon certain individuals according to the will of the Spirit. It appears to be an ability to identify the source of the prophetic utterance, but that ability may also include the weighing of prophetic content. Paul himself may have exercised this gift when, "filled with the Holy Spirit," he identified the true character of Elymas the sorcerer (Acts 13:6-11). Similarly, he may have employed this gift at Philippi when he addressed the young woman with the spirit of divination (Acts 16:16-18). On the other hand, Paul provided some practical advice which could enable the body of Christ to distinguish true from false prophecy. Since the gift of prophecy was a charism bestowed upon the church, it is natural to begin the discernment by knowing who it is that makes prophetic claims. Genuine prophecy is more likely to be given by members of the body of Christ, that is, by members of the Christian community rather than by those outside. As members of the community, those who prophesy will also exhibit certain characteristics, or fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22-23), a test also found in Didache 11—13.

Paul was concerned to stop certain behavior at Corinth, including unquestioned prophetic claims which could lead to an abuse of power. The gifts of God must reflect the nature and character of God, bringing peace* rather than confusion (1 Cor 14:33) in a manner which is decent and orderly (1 Cor 14:40). In the case of the gift of prophecy, order includes the willingness of the person who prophesies to allow his or her utterance to undergo the scrutiny of others (1 Cor 14:29). Paul referred to this as a "command" of the Lord (1 Cor 14:37).

Associated with the requirement of order is Paul's clear understanding that a genuine prophet had a distinct prophetic consciousness. Unlike some who might claim the loss of their identity swallowed up in ecstasy, Paul viewed the genuine, gifted Christian prophet as one in full control of himself or herself. "The spirits of prophets are subject to prophets," Paul maintained (1 Cor 14:38). There was no excuse for unrestrained behavior or uncontrolled speech. There was no reason to accept the argument that the Spirit who had inspired the prophet had simply overwhelmed the prophet, robbing him or her of self-control or of his or her identity. Prophetic activity which reflected the character of God would be decent and orderly, and it would attract the notice of the unbeliever, drawing their attention not to the prophetic individual, but to the God who granted the gift (1 Cor 14:24-25).

The realization that prophetic activity was ultimately under the control of those who prophesied meant that this particular work of the Holy Spirit could also be quenched. Paul's instruction to the church at Thessalonica that they not quench the Spirit nor despise prophesying suggests that some Christians would rather deny a place to continuing or spontaneous prophecy than deal with the problems it might potentially raise (1 Thess 5:19-22). Paul's advice was to hear it out, then make a decision or test it (dokimazete), accepting what was valuable while discarding the rest. The assessment of prophetic content was also an important aspect of weighing the prophecy. Paul is clear that a primary purpose for prophecy is to edify or build up the body of Christ. But it is also for the encouragement and consolation of the body (1 Cor 14:3-5). Elsewhere in Scripture prophecy might even be understood as a means of calling others to account (cf. 2 Sam 12:1-15) or of disclosing the secrets of an individual heart (cf. Jn 3:16-19).

The Thessalonian congregation may have been troubled by prophetic claims which robbed them of hope or otherwise confused them. Paul wrote to them that they were not to let certain individuals, whether by Spirit (dia pneumatos) or by word (dia logou), trouble them with the claim that the Day of the Lord had already come (2 Thess 2:2; see Eschatology). These phrases suggest some prophetic activity or claim to prophetic inspiration in which a message had already been given within the Thessalonian context. The fact is that when he was with them Paul had already spoken to the Thessalonian Christians regarding the coming of the Lord (2 Thess 2:5). And in 1 Thessalonians 4:15 he refers to a "word of the Lord" (logos kyriou) that when the Lord returned those who had died in Christ would be raised first, then those who were yet alive would be caught up in the clouds together with those who had died in Christ, in order to be with the Lord forever (1 Thess 4:15-17). Paul's use of the designation "word of the Lord," a phrase used repeatedly in the OT to describe prophetic activity (e.g., Jer 1:2; Ezek 1:3; Hos 1:1; 4:1; Joel 1:1, etc.), and his exhortation to the Thessalonians to encourage, or comfort (parakaleō), one another with these words, an explicit function of prophecy articulated in 1 Corinthians 14:3, suggest that this passage possesses a prophetic character (Dunn). To say all of this, however, is merely to build a case by which 1 Thessalonians 4:15-17 may be understood as an actual prophetic oracle cited by Paul within his larger argument which seeks to allay the fears of the Thessalonian Christians.

Other interpretations of this passage are possible however. D. Hill, for example, has pointed out that the phrase "word of the Lord" need not be understood as a reference either to a revelatory word made known by the Spirit or a logion of the risen Lord. It may be a simple reference to an otherwise unknown saying of Jesus, or even a generic reference to the apocalyptic teaching of Jesus (cf. Wenham; see Jesus, Sayings of).

Regardless of the interpretation one adopts for 1 Thessalonians 4:15-17, Paul's concern is clear. There are limits to the genuine expression of prophetic activity, and these limits can and must be discerned by the community of the faithful who are both gifted and capable of doing their part. For the community to fail to discern the voice of the Lord, or for the so-called prophet to refuse the community its role in the discerning process is for the gift and its purpose to be thwarted.

5. Appeals to Paul in Contemporary Claims to Prophecy.

During the twentieth century the rise of Pentecostalism and the charismatic renewal movement has raised new questions regarding the gift of prophecy. The Reformers, Luther and Calvin, limited the spontaneous character of prophecy by defining this gift as the proper exposition of the Scriptures, hence, they popularized the idea of prophecy as preaching. During this century Benjamin B. Warfield's well-known "cessation theory" and Dispensationalist arguments, based upon a reading of 1 Corinthians 13:8-10 which suggests that the "perfect" has come in the form of Scripture, thereby ending the need for any continuing form of revelation, has led many to argue that if genuine prophecy exists at all today, it can only be understood as the exposition of a previously existing authoritative text, namely, Scripture.

If prophecy is viewed as revelatory in nature, or as in any way providing for new revelation, regardless of content, it is said to conflict with the role of Scripture as the canon by which all Christian life and thought is to be judged. Any hint of the possibility of new revelation is thought to make Scripture less authoritative than Protestants claimed in the Reformation cry of sola Scriptura, and makes possible the arguments or claims for subsequent "scriptures" such as the Book of Mormon (so Chantry).

Pentecostals and those Christians who align themselves with the charismatic movement tend to share some of these same ideas and concerns but differ on some of them as well. The exposition of Scripture in teaching and preaching, when undertaken with the Holy Spirit as one's guide, seems to parallel Paul's understanding of prophecy as the revelation of the mystery of God now made known (Eph 1:9; 3:3; Rom 16:25-26), although Dunn is probably correct in identifying this as inspired proclamation, a charismatic form of preaching, but not as prophecy per se. While some prefer to view the Spirit's role in prophetic preaching as limited to sermon preparation, others view it as something done with spontaneity, including a sudden illumination or application of the text made clear by the Holy Spirit during the act of preaching or teaching. Pentecostals and members of the charismatic renewal, however, are less concerned by the possibility that the value of Scripture in some way will be subverted by spontaneous oracles. On the whole they value the place of the spontaneous oracle alongside preaching as a genuine manifestation of prophecy which continues to appear within the contemporary church (cf. Yocum, Grudem, Cullmann). Such utterances are believed to play a role that may be both revelatory and authoritative, but these believers take their cue from Paul by emphasizing the need for discernment by the community of faith (1 Cor 14:29-33; 1 Thess 5:19-22).

At least three concerns continue to exist. First, such oracles appear to have limited value for specific people at a specific time and in a specific place. These utterances are not understood to possess the same universal authority of Scripture. They are a form of inspired speech which "ceases when the words cease" (Dunn). Second, these oracles are assessed according to the Pauline guidelines found in 1 Corinthians 12—14, Ephesians 4, Romans 12 and 1 Thessalonians 5. Because these oracles are scrutinized in the light of Scripture as it is understood by the believing community, the oracles are understood to be subservient to Scripture, which provides the norm by which all prophetic activity is to be assessed. Third, the purpose or purposes of such spontaneous oracles must be consistent with the God who reveals them; that is, they must be given in a decent, orderly and edifying manner. Prophetic claims that do not meet these criteria are disregarded. In the end, then, prophetic activity within the modern Pentecostal and charismatic movements functions at its best when it is submitted to the guidance of Scripture and follows the limitations and guidelines expressed by Paul.

See also APOCALYPTICISM; BODY OF CHRIST; GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT; HOLY SPIRIT; KNOWLEDGE, GIFT OF KNOWLEDGE; MYSTERY; MYSTICISM; PROPHET, PAUL AS; TONGUES; VISIONS, ECSTATIC EXPERIENCE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. E. Aune, Prophecy in Early Christianity and the Ancient Mediterranean World (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983); E. M. Boring, Sayings of the Risen Christ: Christian Prophecy in the Synoptic Tradition (SNTSMS 46; Cambridge: University Press, 1982); idem, The Continuing Voice of Jesus: Christian Prophecy and the Gospel Tradition (Louisville: John Knox, 1991); W. Chantry, Signs of the Apostles (2d ed; Edinburgh: The Banner of Truth Trust, 1976); T. M. Crone, Early Christian Prophecy: A Study of Its Origin and Function (Baltimore: St. Mary's University, 1973); O. Cullmann, Early Christian Worship (London: SCM, 1953); G. Dautzenberg, Urchristliche Prophetie (Stuttgart: W. Kohlhammer, 1975); J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1975); E. E. Ellis, Prophecy and Hermeneutic in Early Christianity (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); D. Gee, Concerning Spiritual Gifts (rev. ed.; Springfield, MO: Gospel Publishing House, 1980); W. A. Grudem, The Gift of Prophecy in 1 Corinthians (Washington, D.C.: University Press of America, 1982); idem, The Gift of Prophecy in the New Testament and Today (Westchester, IL: Crossway Books, 1988); H. A. Guy, New Testament Prophecy: Its Origin and Significance (London: Epworth, 1947); A. J. Heschel, The Prophets (2 vols.; New York: Harper & Row, 1962); C. Hill, Prophecy Past and Present: An Exploration of the Prophetic Ministry in the Bible and the Church Today (Ann Arbor: Servant, 1989); D. Hill, New Testament Prophecy (Atlanta: John Knox, 1979); G. Houston, Prophecy: A Gift for Today? (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1989); E. C. Huber, Women and the Authority of Inspiration (Lanham, MD: University Press of America, 1985); J. Lindblom, Prophecy in Ancient Israel (Philadelphia: Muhlenberg, 1973); U. B. Müller, Prophetie und Predigt im Neuen Testament (SNT 10; Gütersloh: Gerd Mohn, 1975); J. Panagopoulos, Ἡ Ἐκκλησία τῶν προφητῶν: Τὸ προφητικόν χάρισμα ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τῶν δύο πρώτων αἰώνων (Athens: Historical Publications, 1979); idem, Prophetic Vocation in the New Testament Today (NovTSup 45; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1977); J. R. Pridie, The Spiritual Gifts (1921); C. M. Robeck, Jr., "Canon, Regulae Fidei, and Continuing Revelation in the Early Church," in Church, Word and Spirit, ed. J. E. Bradley and R. A. Muller (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987) 65-91; idem, "The Gift of Prophecy in Acts and Paul, Parts I & II," in StBT 5 (1975) [5.1] 15-38; [5.2] 37-54; F. Rousseau, L' Apocalypse et le Milieu Prophétique du Nouveau Testament (Tournai: Desclée & Cie, 1971); C. Rowland, The Open Heaven: A Study of Apocalyptic in Judaism and Early Christianity (New York: Crossroad, 1982); D. Wenham, "Paul and the Synoptic Apocalypse," in Gospel Perspectives 2: Studies of History and Tradition in the Four Gospels (Sheffield: JSOT, 1981) 345-75; A. C. Wire, The Corinthian Women Prophets: A Reconstruction Through Paul's Rhetoric (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1990); B. Yocum, Prophecy: Exercising the Prophetic Gifts of the Spirit in the Church Today (Ann Arbor: Word of Life, 1976).

C. M. Robeck, Jr.

PROPHET, PAUL AS

Although nowhere in the NT is Paul ever explicitly called a prophet, scholars have nevertheless compared the apostle to the OT prophets. It has been observed that not only has Paul adopted some of the vocabulary of the prophetic call and ministry,* he has also adopted the hermeneutical principles employed by the prophets of the OT. It is likely, then, that in some sense Paul understood his apostleship in terms of the OT prophetic tradition.

1. Relationship between Apostle and Prophet
2. Prophetic Call
3. Prophetic Gospel
4. Prophetic Comparison
5. Prophetic Criticism

1. Relationship Between Apostle and Prophet.

Recent research has rightly recognized the close relationship between apostle* and prophet (Agnew, 90-96; Sandnes, 17-20). By definition, prophets are those who have been "sent" (Heb šālaḥ; Gk apostellō) by Yahweh. Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel are "sent" by God to the people of Israel (Is 6:8; Jer 1:7; Ezek 2:3). Throughout Israel's history God has sent his "servants the prophets to them" (Jer 7:25). Malachi prophesies that God will "send [his] messenger" (Mal 3:1) and "will send Elijah the prophet" (Mal 4:5). Similar language is employed in the NT, in reference both to OT prophets and to Jesus' disciples/apostles (Mt 23:37; Mk 1:2; Lk 9:2; 10:3; 13:34; 22:35; Jn 1:6; 3:28; Rom 10:15). In later traditions, the prophets are called "apostles" (cf. Mek. on Exod 12:1 [Pisḥa §1], where God says to Jonah: "I have other apostles [šᵉlûḥîn] like you"). The great lawgiver and prophet Moses is "sent" (Ex 3:10, 12, 13, 14, 15; 4:28; 7:16; Deut 34:11). In later Jewish and Samaritan traditions Moses is also called a šālîaḥ (Mek. R. Sim. Yoh. on Ex 3:10-11; 'Abot R. Nat. A §1; Exod. Rab. 3.4 [on 3:12]; 3.14 [on 4:10]; Memar Marqa 5:3; 6:3).

2. Prophetic Call.

In Galatians Paul adopts prophetic language in describing his apostolic calling. His reference to God "who set me apart from my mother's womb and called me through his grace . . . that I might preach him among the Gentiles" (Gal 1:15-16) is clearly reminiscent of the call of Jeremiah (1:5: "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you . . . I appointed you a prophet to the Gentiles") and of the language found in Isaiah (49:1, 5: "He called my name from my mother's womb . . . to gather Jacob and Israel to him"). Even Paul's criticism of his Galatian opponents* (Gal 1:6-9: "there are some who trouble you and wish to distort the gospel of Christ . . . But even if we, or an angel from heaven, should preach to you a gospel contrary to that which we preached to you, let him be accursed") likely echoes biblical language employed against false prophets and others who would encourage God's people to worship false gods (LXX Deut 13:12-18: "And if . . . evil men in one of your cities . . . say, 'Let us go and worship others gods, . . .' you will curse it"; cf. Deut 13:1-5, 6-11; 20:17-18). Prophetic language is also found in Paul's description before Herod Agrippa II of his Damascus Road experience (compare Acts 26:16-17 with LXX Jer 1:7-8; Ezek 2:1-3). Although the speech is a Lukan composition, the language may accurately reflect Paul's sense of a prophetic call (see Conversion and Call).

There is evidence, moreover, that prior to the Galatian crisis Paul understood himself as a prophet and that he did not adopt this vocabulary ad hoc to deal with the problem he faced in the churches of Galatia. His language in 1 Thessalonians, which is probably his earliest extant letter, suggests that Paul's prophetic self-understanding originated with his apostolic calling. His expression of sincerity (1 Thess 2:4: "even as we have been tested by God . . . to please God who tests our hearts") echoes the words of Jeremiah (LXX Jer 11:20: "Lord, who judges justly, testing the reins and the hearts . . ."). Both Paul and Jeremiah uttered these words in the face of opposition (cf. 1 Thess 2:2 with Jer 11:19). Later Paul again takes up the theme of persecution (1 Thess 3:4: "For when we were with you, we told you beforehand that we were to suffer affliction, just as it has come to pass"; cf. 2 Cor 11:23-27), which recalls the tradition of the suffering and persecuted prophet (cf. Lk 13:33-34; Pesiq. R. 26.2: "Jeremiah said, 'Master of the universe, I cannot prophesy to them. What prophet ever came forth to them whom they did not wish to slay?' "). Paul's eschatological warning (1 Thess 5:3: "When people say, 'There is peace and safety,' then sudden destruction will come upon them as travail comes upon a woman with child") echoes similar solemn warnings found in the OT prophets (cf. Jer 6:14, 24; 8:11, 21; 14:13-14; Ezek 13:10, 16; Hos 14:1; see Afflictions, Trials, Hardships).

Finally, it is important to observe that the very nature of Paul's conversion invites comparison with the prophets. Just as the prophets received revelations and visions of God and/or heaven, particularly in connection with their call to prophetic office (Is 1:1; 6:1-13; Ezek 1:1; 8:4; Obad 1; Nah 1:1; Hab 2:2), so also Paul received revelations and visions* (1 Cor 15:8; 2 Cor 12:1-4; Gal 1:12, 16; 2:2; cf. Acts 9:3-9; 22:6-11; 26:13-20).

3. Prophetic Gospel.

Paul's understanding of the apostolic obligation to proclaim the gospel is informed by the words of Isaiah 52:7: "And how can they preach unless they are sent? As it is written, 'How beautiful are the feet of those who preach good news' " (Rom 10:14-17; cf. Is 53:1; Dinter, 48). Moreover, when Paul says "Woe to me, if I should not preach the gospel" (1 Cor 9:16), he echoes the exclamations of the OT prophets (Is 24:16; Jer 13:27; Hos 9:12). Paul's anguish (Rom 9:2: "I have great sorrow and unceasing anguish in my heart"; Rom 11:1: "Has God rejected his people?") also is reminiscent of prophetic anguish: "Hast thou utterly rejected Judah?" (Jer 14:19; see Gospel).

Paul's allusion to and application of Isaiah 64:3 in 1 Corinthians 2:9 ("what eye has not seen") coheres with rabbinic discussion of the divine source of the prophetic message: "No eye has seen what God . . . will work for him who waits for him" (b. 'Abod. Zar. 65a). "All the prophets prophesied only for the messianic age, but in the world to come the eye has not seen, O Lord, beside you [what he has prepared for him who waits on him]" (b. Šabb. 63a).

4. Prophetic Comparison.

Despite the fact that relatively few Israelites had responded in faith to the gospel message, Paul was convinced that God* had not rejected Israel* (Rom 11:1-2). He grounds this conviction on the example of Elijah (Rom 11:3-4; cf. 1 Kings 19:10, 18) and on Isaiah's remnant theology (Rom 9:27-29; 11:5; cf. Is 1:9; 10:22). What is interesting here is Paul's comparison with Elijah. Evidently the apostle saw himself very much like Elijah of old, who felt alone and threatened. Just as God had preserved a remnant of the faithful in Elijah's time, so now in the eschatological period God once again has preserved a faithful remnant (see Restoration of Israel).

It is important to note too that Paul did not regard himself as an apostate from Judaism (Rom 11:1: "I myself am an Israelite, a descendant of Abraham, a member of the tribe of Benjamin"), but rather as an apostle (and prophet) to an apostate Israel, even as Elijah the prophet had been sent to an apostate Israel (see Jew, Paul the).

5. Prophetic Criticism.

Paul's application of Scripture to his own generation is similar to the hermeneutics of prophetic criticism employed by the "true" prophets of the OT (Evans 1984, 560-70). "True prophecy," as J. A. Sanders has explained (87-105), is theocentric, not ethnocentric. Unlike most of the "false prophets," who prophesied peace and safety, the true prophet understood sacred tradition and history from the divine point of view. Nowhere can this be seen more clearly than in the prophets' respective interpretations of Israel's sacred tradition. Ezekiel warns his contemporaries not to assume, as false prophets would have them believe, that since "Abraham was only one man, yet he got possession of the land, [then] we [who] are many" will surely be able to possess the land (Ezek 33:24). Jeremiah tells his contemporaries not to listen to the false prophets who assure the inhabitants of Jerusalem that there is nothing to fear because of the presence of the Temple: "Do not trust in these deceptive words: 'This is the Temple of the Lord' " (Jer 7:4); "No evil shall come upon you" (Jer 23:17). One of the most startling examples comes from Isaiah, who alludes to two of David's great victories over the Philistines: "The Lord will rise up as on Mount Perazim [cf. 2 Sam 5:17-21], he will rage as in the valley of Gibeon [cf. 2 Sam 5:22-25]; to do his deed—strange is his deed! and to do his work—alien is his work!" (Is 28:21; Evans, 1986, 96-97). But unlike the false prophets, Isaiah does not find in these victories assurance that Israel will once again be victorious against her enemies. On the contrary, Isaiah has "heard a decree of destruction from the Lord God of hosts" (Is 28:22). God is angry and ready to defeat sinners on the field of battle; only this time the sinners are the Israelites, not their enemies (see Triumph).

"Paul's understanding of God's continuing activity was prophetic and dynamic. God could, as in the days of Isaiah, do a 'new thing' " (Is 43:19; Dinter, 52). The new thing that God was doing in Paul's time was to take a noncovenant people and make a people of God out of them (Rom 9:25-26; cf. Hos 1:10; 2:23; see Covenant). Imprecations originally uttered against Israel's enemies are applied against Israel itself: "Let their table become a snare and a trap, a pitfall and a retribution for them" (Rom 11:9-10; cf. Ps 69:22-23; Evans 1984, 567-68). This remarkable application of the sacred tradition is not anti-Jewish—for Paul is a loyal Jew (cf. Rom 9:1-5; 11:1-2)—but rather prophetic in the same sense as that which we have seen in prophets like Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel. Paul is no more anti-Jewish than were these great prophets of old. If Paul's interpretation and application of the Scripture of Israel are to be properly understood, it will be necessary to take into account the apostle's prophetic self-understanding.

See also APOSTLE; CONVERSION AND CALL OF PAUL; FUTILITY; GOSPEL; ISRAEL; PROPHECY, PROPHESYING; OLD TESTAMENT IN PAUL; RESTORATION OF ISRAEL; VISIONS, ECSTATIC EXPERIENCE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. F. H. Agnew, "The Origin of the NT Apostle-Concept: A Review of Research," JBL 105 (1986) 75-96; P. Dinter, "Paul and the Prophet Isaiah," BTB 13 (1983) 48-52; C. A. Evans, "Isaiah's Use of Israel's Sacred Tradition," BZ 30 (1986) 92-99; idem, "Paul and the Hermeneutics of 'True Prophecy': A Study of Romans 9—11," Bib 65 (1984) 560-70; T. W. Gillespie, "A Pattern of Prophetic Speech in First Corinthians," JBL 97 (1978) 74-95; T. Holtz, "Zum Selbstverständnis des Apostels Paulus," TLZ 91 (1966) cols. 321-30; J. M. Myers and E. D. Freed, "Is Paul also Among the Prophets?" Int 20 (1966) 40-53; J. A. Sanders, "Hermeneutics in True and False Prophecy," in From Sacred Story to Sacred Text (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1987) 87-105; K. O. Sandnes, Paul—One of the Prophets? A Contribution to the Apostle's Self-Understanding (WUNT 2.43; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1991); J. M. Scott, "Coherence and Contingency: The Function of Scripture in 2 Corinthians 6.14—7.1," in C. A. Evans and J. A. Sanders eds., Paul and the Scriptures of Israel (JSNTSup 83; SSEJC 1; Sheffield: JSOT, 1993) 187-220; P. Stuhlmacher, "The Pauline Gospel," in The Gospel and the Gospels, ed. P. Stuhlmacher (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1991) 149-72. C. A. Evans

PROPHETIC PRAYER.

See PRAYER.

PROPITIATION.

See DEATH OF CHRIST; EXPIATION, PROPITIATION, MERCY SEAT.

PSEUDEPIGRAPHY.

See CANON; EARLY CATHOLICISM; EPHESIANS, LETTER TO THE; PASTORAL LETTERS.

PSYCHOLOGY

The term psychology is based on Greek (psychē ["soul"] + logos ["word"]) but is not Pauline. It is useful for denoting aspects of Paul's anthropology, so long as we recognize that Paul views the human being as a psychosomatic unity in whom rational, emotional and physical functions are fully integrated. We shall give our attention chiefly to Paul's use of kardia ("heart"), nous ("mind"), pneuma ("spirit"), psychē ("soul," "life"), sarx ("flesh") and esō anthrōpos ("inner person").

1. Pauline Psychology in Modern Study
2. The Person as God's Creation
3. The Person in Bondage to Sin
4. The Person Made Whole

1. Pauline Psychology in Modern Study.

The history of research into each of Paul's anthropological terms has been chronicled (to about 1970) by R. Jewett. The following points survey the principal issues that have occupied researchers in this field.

1.1. Dichotomy or Trichotomy? From the days of the Church Fathers until about 1850 this question was the main focus in discussions of Paul's anthropology: Does the person consist of two parts (body and soul) or of three (body, soul and spirit)? The Greek fathers favored the latter option, the Latin fathers the former. Through the influence of Augustine and the Protestant reformers, dichotomy became the established view in Western theology; but the debate has continued (Berkouwer, 194-233; Hoekema, 204-10). In one version of trichotomy God inhabits the spirit ("the inner person"), releasing it from bondage to the soul ("the outer person") and the body ("the outermost person") and making them subservient to the spirit instead. Dichotomy, however, remains the dominant view. J. G. Machen, for example, affirmed that the Bible "unquestionably . . . recognizes the presence of two distinct principles or substances in man—his body and his soul" (Machen, 143); soul and spirit denote the same reality (Machen, 159-73). More recently Hoekema, however, has rejected the word dichotomy ("to cut in two"), arguing that "the Bible describes the human person as a totality, a whole, a unitary being" who "in this present life cannot be so cut" (Hoekema, 210).

1.2. The Ancient Setting. Modern scholarship has rightly insisted that Paul's anthropology be interpreted in the light of his own historical and cultural milieu.

1.2.1. The Hellenistic Setting. Early in this century some scholars contended that Paul was strongly influenced by non-Jewish philosophy and popular religion, ideas perhaps mediated to him through Hellenistic Judaism or the Hellenistic church (see Hellenism). Among the suggestions in favor of this dependence, or at least influence, are: (1) Paul's use of sarkikos (and sarkinos, "fleshly"*), psychikos ("physical," "natural") and pneumatikos ("spiritual"), and his message about the renewal of the nous and the saving of the pneuma through gnōsis ("knowledge"*) and sōphia ("wisdom") in 1 Corinthians 2:6-16; 3:1-4; 5:5, show his alleged indebtedness to gnosticism. (2) The Pauline theme of warfare between the sarx and the pneuma (Gal 5:16-26; Rom 8:1-17) recalls the metaphysical dualism of Plato (spirit is good, matter is evil) and has antecedents in gnosticism and the mystery religions. (3) The distinction between the "outer self" and the "inner self" (e.g., 2 Cor 4:16) may be traced to a Hellenistic anthropological dualism. Yet all these positions have been challenged.

1.2.2. The Hebraic Setting. The latter half of the twentieth century has seen a growing scholarly consensus: (1) that Paul antedated or opposed much of the non-Jewish teaching on which he had allegedly depended, and (2) that the decisive influences upon him (apart from Jesus and early Christianity) were the OT and Palestinian Judaism (see Jew, Paul the). Some of the emphases are as follows: (1) As in the OT, Paul's concern is not human nature but its relationship to God* (Jacob in Dihle et al., 630-31; Stacey, 3). (2) Sarx in Paul does not denote the "earthly part" of the person over against the "divine part." Instead, like its OT counterpart bāśār, sarx signals the radical difference between God and humans, and the relationship between them: "flesh" depicts the whole person as a weak, vulnerable creature utterly dependent on God (Schweizer and Baumgärtel, 123). (3) In the vast majority of instances in Paul, pneuma designates not the human spirit but the Holy Spirit*—the essential source of life and power, like the OT's rûaḥ Yahweh. Pneumatikos (e.g., 1 Cor 2:15) identifies a person "who knows God's saving work by virtue of the Spirit of God" (Schweizer in Kleinknecht et al., 436). "Spiritual body" (sōma pneumatikon) "is to be understood, not as one which consists of pneuma, but as one which is controlled by the pneuma" (Schweizer in Kleinknecht et al., 421; cf. 1 Cor 15:44-45). (4) In Paul, as in the OT, kardia denotes the center of the person as a rational, emotional and volitional being (Baumgärtel and Behm 606-7; Jacob in Dihle et al., 626-28). (5) In Paul psychē is not the "soul," but the life or being of the whole person—as in Genesis 2:7, "man became a living being [Heb nefeš, LXX psychē]" (NKJV, as against KJV's "living soul"). Psychikos (1 Cor 2:14) denotes the "natural person" bereft of God's Spirit. Correspondingly, all who are in Adam* and who experience the life and mortality of present existence possess a "natural body" (sōma psychikon; 1 Cor 15:42-46). (6) Firmly rooted in the OT is Paul's usage of anthropological terms, starting with anthrōpos ("human") itself, to designate corporate solidarities (e.g., sōma in 1 Cor 12:12-13 and often [cf. Robinson, 49-83]; pneuma and psychē in Phil 1:27; and "old and new self" in Col 3:9-10 and Eph 4:22-24 [together with the references to Adam and Christ in Rom 5:12-21 and 1 Cor 15:21-22, 45-47]).

1.2.3. A Twofold Indebtedness. Recognizing the interlacing of Greek and Hebrew thought in Paul's day, and Paul's awareness of both strands, many scholars think his anthropology owes something to both.

(1) Some detect a shift within Paul's writings from a Judaic outlook to a Hellenistic perspective. In a work on Paul's anthropology published in 1872, H. Lüdemann argued that redemption in Galatians (expressive of Paul's earlier, Jewish outlook) rests upon God's juridical verdict of acquittal, whereas in Romans 5—8 (Paul's mature, Hellenistic view) redemption "was an ethical-physical transformation from 'flesh' to 'spirit' through communion with the Holy Spirit" (Ellis, 24). In an article published in 1934, C. H. Dodd argued that Paul's eschatology became less Jewish and more Hellenistic between the writing of 1 Corinthians 15 (the resurrection of a "spiritual body" at Christ's return) and 2 Corinthians 5 (the reception of "an eternal house in heaven" at death; cf. Ellis, 32).

(2) Some perceive in the letters an ongoing tension between Hebraic and Hellenistic elements. According to Bultmann, Paul opposes some of the gnostics' cherished notions (such as their depreciation of the body) but sees "so deep a cleft within man, so great a tension between self and self . . . that he comes close to Gnostic dualism" (Bultmann, 1.199). Similarly, says Bultmann, while Paul primarily uses psychē in the OT sense of "life" or "person," his use of the term "in a depreciatory sense" in contrast with pneuma betrays gnostic influence (Bultmann, 1.204).

(3) W. D. Stacey's more general thesis (Stacey, 39) is that Paul's anthropology was fundamentally Christian; that he normally used Jewish language (such as kardia and sarx) "because his Gospel sprang out of the Old Covenant"; that Hellenism sometimes offered a more adequate term (such as nous, "mind," or syneidēsis, "conscience"*); and that he was not consciously joining two cultures (Judaism and Hellenism) but seeking to express his Christian view of humanity in the best language available.

(4) R. Jewett argues that a principal reason for the presence of Hellenistic elements in the letters alongside those elements inherited from the OT and Judaism, is that Paul, for polemical purposes, frequently "borrowed anthropological terms from his conversation partners, redefining them to suit the needs of his argument" (Jewett, 447).

1.2.4. Monism or Dualism? Related to the preceding issue is the question whether Paul's anthropology is monistic or dualistic: do persons consist of one substance or two (see Machen under 1.1 above), or, as some prefer to put the question, are soul and body indivisible (though conceptually distinguishable) or divisible (though ideally inseparable)? Many, probably most, contemporary scholars choose the first option, some form of monism. A cosmic or eschatological or moral dualism is seen in Paul (see Cosmology; Eschatology), but his anthropology is said to be monistic, or basically so (any evidence of dualism is minimal and extraneous, a vestige of Greek influence; cf. the discussions in Whiteley, 32-34; Jewett, 82-95; Ridderbos, 29-32). This is the view, for instance, of Bultmann ("Man does not consist of two parts [sōma and psychē], much less of three [sōma, psychē and pneuma],. 1.209) and of Stacey ("The separation of psychē from sarx means . . . extinction for Paul," Stacey, 126).

Two arguments are commonly enlisted in support of this view: (1) While some expressions of Judaism in Paul's day were dualistic owing to Greek influence (Sjöberg in Kleinknecht et al., 377; Lohse in Dihle et al., 635-37), OT anthropology, the principal source of Paul's thinking on the subject, is monistic. Jacob maintains that "older distinctions between dichotomy and trichotomy must be abandoned so far as OT anthropology is concerned. Israelite anthropology is monistic. . . . The unity of human nature is not expressed by the antithetical concepts of body and soul but by the complementary and inseparable concepts of body and life" (Jacob in Dihle et al., 631). (2) In accord with the OT's nepeš (see 1.2.2 above), psychē in Paul never denotes the higher part of the person (Paul never joins sōma and psychē together as the two parts of the whole) or a disembodied, immortal "soul" (Jewett, 334-46; Schweizer in Dihle et al., 650, 655-56; Guthrie, 165). Paul "cannot conceive even of a future human existence after death . . . as an existence without soma," and "does not know the Greek-Hellenistic conception of the immortality of the soul (released from the body)" (Bultmann, 1.192, 203; cf. Ellis, 24).

That reading of Paul has been challenged by Gundry and Cooper. According to Gundry "anthropological duality," not "monadic unity," best describes Paul's view (Gundry, 79, 83): the whole person ("human," anthrōpos) consists of a corporeal side (for which Paul's favorite term is sōma, "body") and an incorporeal (whose various functions are described by pneuma, psychē, kardia, nous, esō anthrōpos, etc.); "there is an ontological duality, a functional pluralism, and an overarching unity" (Gundry, 84; cf. 156). Cooper's terms for Pauline and the biblical anthropology generally (Cooper, 50, 179) are "functional holism" (as opposed to "ontological holism") and "holistic dualism" (as opposed to "holistic monism").

Some of the arguments in support of this conclusion are:

(1) Like the OT, Paul represents the human being as a fully integrated whole, in which psychological and physical functions are joined inextricably together but remain ontologically distinct. Terms for a corporeal or incorporeal function (such as sōma or pneuma) may be applied by synecdoche to the whole person; but what represents the whole is not equated with the whole.

(2) In the OT and in Paul (also in most intertestamental Judaism) "persons are not merely distinguishable from their earthly bodies, they are separable from them and can continue to exist without them" (Cooper, 77); so Paul teaches in 2 Corinthians 5:1-10; Philippians 1:21-24. (For these two arguments, see Gundry, 117-56; Cooper, 36-103, 147-72.)

(3) Paul's "holistic dualism" is utterly opposed to other kinds of dualism in the ancient world (so that Gundry prefers "duality"), in which sarx or sōma is inherently evil, the human psychē or pneuma is inherently good, and salvation consists in the release of the soul from the body. Paul dreads entry into a bodiless state at death (2 Cor 5:1-5) because it is unnatural and abnormal, entailing a "cutting in two" (a "dichotomy") of what God created as a unified whole (which may explain why Paul never applies psychē to such an existence). That period is indeed an "intermediate state"; ultimate salvation awaits the reintegration of the person at the resurrection* of the body (1 Cor 15:42-58; Phil 3:20-21; see Gundry, 149-54, 159-83; Cooper, 89-103, 152-63, 173-95).

1.3. Contemporary Thought. These efforts to interpret Paul in the light of his own day also witness to the impact of modern currents of thought. A number of intellectual movements have shaped perceptions of Pauline psychology.

1.3.1. Idealism. The nineteenth-century theologian F. C. Baur, influenced by the idealism of G. W. F. Hegel, taught that the war between sarx and pneuma represented the conflict between the "finite and relative" and the "infinite and absolute" (Ridderbos, 16). Some advocates of "panpsychism" (a variety of idealistic monism according to which persons consist of just one metaphysical element—soul, mind or spirit) believe in the body's extinction but the soul's immortality (Cooper, 21 n.36; 51 n.26; 236-37).

1.3.2. Liberalism. H. Lüdemann and H. J. Holtzmann typify classical liberalism by explaining the conflict between flesh and spirit in terms of ethical dualism: for them sarx is "the outer man struggling against the inner, spiritual man" (Jewett, 52-55). "Thus 'spirit' is no longer taken . . . as the antithesis of the finite and the human (as with Baur), but as the antipode of the sensual. . . . The spirit [= nous] as the leading rational principle in man must gain victory over the lower sensual nature (sarx) and hold it in subjection" (Ridderbos, 18).

1.3.3. Existentialism. Bultmann argued that the Pauline conception of conflict between sarx and pneuma is far deeper than liberalism realized. In Galatians 5 and Romans 8 pneuma refers to God's Spirit, not human spirit (where Paul speaks of the latter, it is "not some higher principle within him or some special intellectual or spiritual faculty of his, but simply his self," 1.206); and sarx is not the lower, sensual part of the self but the whole self oriented toward itself and independent of God—a self-centeredness which expresses itself both in rebellion against God and in zeal for religion (Bultmann, 1.232-46; cf. Phil 3:3-6; Schweizer and Baumgärtel, 131-34). Every person must decide whether to live "according to the flesh" (a self-reliant, self-confident, worldly pursuit of one's own ends for one's own glory) or "according to the Spirit" (in which God is the center of attention and acknowledged to be the source of life and power, and Christ instead of self becomes the object of faith* and boasting).

1.3.4. Materialism. In this form of monism (opposite to that of idealism, see 1.3.1 above) human beings are thought to consist solely of matter and its functions. In behaviorism and epiphenomenalism, for example, "the mind and soul are no more than the combination of . . . brain-caused states" (Cooper, 18-19).

1.3.5. Psychology. By "psychological exegesis" G. Theissen seeks to discover Paul's relevance to current discussions in the field of psychology. For example, as religion entails confrontation with the unconscious, it is fruitful to explore such subjects as the disclosures of the heart at the last judgment* (1 Cor 4:1-5; Rom 2:16); the elucidation of the language of the unconscious (tongues*) through interpretation and prophecy* (1 Cor 14); and Christian enlightenment (by the gospel* and the Spirit) as the means whereby matters submerged in the unconscious (Phil 3:4-6) are brought to consciousness (Rom 7:7-23; 1 Cor 2:6-16), their threats removed and their beneficent aspects enrolled in the service of Christ.

1.3.6. Monism versus Dualism. Neither the monism of idealism that reduces the person to soul nor the monism of materialism that reduces the person to body is compatible with Paul. Nor are those contemporary forms of dualism which encourage (1) the saving of the soul and the depreciation of the body, (2) inattentiveness to the psychosomatic unity of the person and (3) a dichotomy between grace and nature (cf. Hoekema, 222-26). At the same time "the diagnosis fusing illicit dualisms with the body-soul distinction is mistaken" (Cooper, 209, cf. 198-209).

1.4. The Present Stance. This section may be concluded by indicating the standpoint from which this article is written.

(1) Scholars have long debated the extent to which the letters ascribed to Paul may be used as sources of Paul's own thought. Jewett, for example, excludes Colossians,* Ephesians* and the Pastorals* from his analysis; Bultmann excludes these five and 2 Thessalonians.* The following discussion takes account of all thirteen letters. A fuller study would need to consider how the distribution and the usage of the terms relate to the question of authorship.

(2) Paul uses the anthropological terms in the awareness of both Hellenistic and Hebraic settings (his indebtedness to the latter being by far the greater), for the singular purpose of propagating the Christian gospel* and explaining salvation* in Christ (thus too Stacey, 235-41; cf. 1.2.3 above). To reflect this perspective the terms will be joined together in a topical approach. A more detailed treatment would need to ask (i) what the distribution of terms reveals about Paul's theological and pastoral concerns, and (conversely) what light these concerns shed on the meaning of the terms (cf. Jewett); and (ii) what the chronological order of the letters discloses about developments in Paul's anthropology.

(3) Pauline psychology, like that of the Bible generally, is "practical rather than scientific" (Wright in Brown et al., 567); these letters do not teach "a theoretical anthropology or psychology" and may be called "pre-philosophical" (Cooper, 112, 180). Yet "although Scripture does not teach philosophy, it provides a normative framework for a Christian anthropology" (Cooper, 197). The view with which Pauline psychology is most compatible is "anthropological duality" or "functional holism" and "holistic dualism" (see 1.2.4 and 1.3.6 above). It will thus be necessary to give some attention to anthropological terms (notably sōma) treated elsewhere in this volume.

2. The Person as God's Creation.

A consideration of the self before the Fall will help us better to understand what Paul says about the impact of sin* and of Christ* respectively.

2.1. The Person's Diversity in Unity. In accord with both Hebrew and Greek antecedents, Paul views the person as both corporeal and incorporeal. His favorite word for the former is "body"* (sōma). He also uses "flesh"* (sarx) in this same sense: "always carrying around in our body [sōma] the death of Jesus . . . that the life of Jesus may be manifested in our mortal flesh [sarx]" (2 Cor 4:10-11). Being "absent in body" (1 Cor 5:3) is the same as being "absent in flesh" (Col 2:5; cf. Col 1:22, "the body of his flesh"). The "weakness of the flesh" (Gal 4:13-15) and the "thorn in the flesh" (2 Cor 12:7) describe the same (?) physical infirmities (see Healing, Illness).

Paul describes incorporeal activity by various terms whose meanings overlap considerably (Gundry, 156; Kümmel, 43). There is no significant difference between the apostle's presence "in spirit [pneuma]" (1 Cor 5:3) and his presence "in heart [kardia]" (1 Thess 2:17). One reasons and understands with "the mind [nous]" (1 Cor 14:14-16), but the heart (kardia) may likewise be "enlightened" (2 Cor 4:6; Eph 1:18), and "the spirit [pneuma] of the person" understands "the things of the person" (1 Cor 2:11; cf. Eph 4:23, "the spirit [pneuma] of the mind [nous]"). In 2 Corinthians 6:11-12 splanchna (NIV "affection") and kardia are synonymous expressions of love.* Obeying "from the heart [kardia]" (Rom 6:17; 1 Tim 1:5) is the same as obeying "from the soul [psychē]" (Eph 6:6, Col 3:23; NIV "heart") and serving "with my spirit [pneuma]" (Rom 1:9; NIV "whole heart"). To stand "in one spirit [pneuma]" is to struggle "with one soul [psychē]" (Phil 1:27), though Paul's concern here is not personal psychology but believers' harmony of purpose.

Paul distinguishes the incorporeal from the corporeal in several ways. He speaks of being devoted to the Lord "in body [sōma] and spirit [pneuma]" (1 Cor 7:34); of "being absent in body but present in spirit" (1 Cor 5:3), and of being separated "in person, not in heart [kardia]" (1 Thess 2:17 NRSV). He exhorts readers to purify themselves "from every defilement of flesh [sarx] and spirit [pneuma]" (2 Cor 7:1).

To the above we join Paul's distinction between the internal and the external. True circumcision* is not "outward" but "inward," not "in the flesh" but "of the heart" (Rom 2:28-29). Man's spirit is "in him" (1 Cor 2:11). Certain persons "boast in outward appearance and not in the heart" (2 Cor 5:12 NRSV). The corporeal dimension obviously embraces the internal as well as the external, the hidden organs as well as the visible ones. Moreover Paul describes certain incorporeal functions with terms which could also denote bodily organs—for example, the literal kardia (heart) or splanchna (variously the intestines, the liver, the kidneys, the lungs or the heart; cf. Baumgärtel and Behm, 606-11; Köster, 548-53).

In this light two points call for equal emphasis. (1) Paul never confines an incorporeal function to a particular bodily organ. In the verses cited above, kardia stands not for the literal heart but for "the whole of the inner being of man in contrast to his external side" (Baumgärtel and Behm, 612). In 2 Corinthians 3:3 "fleshly hearts" is no more literal than the handwriting of the Spirit. Paul's interest in splanchna is not physiological. This is "the most expressive term available to indicate the source of human emotion" (Silva, 55); by metonymy, Paul focuses on the emotion itself (the splanchna of Philem 12 may be translated "heart" or "love," BAGD). (2) Paul never dissociates the internal-incorporeal from the internal-corporeal. "An essential part of the original [i.e., literal] meaning has been retained to the degree that splanchna concerns and expresses the total personality at the deepest level" (Köster, 555). Kardia likewise stands for "the whole of the inner being" in both its corporeal and incorporeal dimensions. Thus fear, or anger or excitement causes the heart to beat rapidly.

2.2. The Person's Unity in Diversity. The self's diversity in unity must be kept in view as we proceed. But there is far greater emphasis in Paul's letters upon the self as an integrated whole.

In Paul the kardia is "the integrating center of man as a rational, emotional, volitional being" (Dunn 1988, 100; cf. 2.1 above; Baumgartel and Behm, 612; Ladd, 475). Thus the heart may be enlightened (Eph 1:18); it may experience anguish (2 Cor 2:4); and it is from the heart that one obeys (Rom 6:17).

Paul frequently denotes the whole self by means of terms which in other contexts designate an aspect or dimension of the self. In doing so he is not contradicting the other usage, or confusing the part with the whole. Rather, by synecdoche he is viewing the whole person from a particular standpoint, or stressing the contribution of a particular aspect to the functioning of the whole.

To present "your bodies [sōmata] as living sacrifices" (Rom 12:1) or to offer "your members" (Rom 6:13, 19; NIV "the parts of your body") is to offer "yourselves" (Rom 6:13, 16). In Romans 12:1 sōma denotes "the person in his corporeality, in his concrete relationships within this world; it is because he is body that man can experience the world and relate to others" (Dunn 1988, 709; cf. Gundry, 50). Yet sōma is not equated with the whole person; mind and will are active in the offering of the body (Rom 12:1-2).

Similarly sarx may denote the whole human being or all of humanity (see Flesh), in certain respects—as beings who (1) are by nature creaturely, limited and weak (Rom 6:19; "flesh and blood," Gal 1:16; 1 Cor 15:50; Eph 6:12); (2) devise and adhere to certain standards ("not many wise according to the flesh," 1 Cor 1:26); (3) belong to a physical lineage (e.g., Rom 1:3; 4:1; 9:3); and (4) stand in relationship both to other human beings and to God (Philem 16, "both in the flesh and in the Lord"; Rom 3:20). In none of these passages is the sarx depicted as inherently sinful (but see 3 below; cf. 1.2.2 above; Thiselton, 674-75).

Psychē ("soul" in earlier examples) may likewise denote one's whole life or, by metonymy, the whole person. "We loved you so much that we were delighted to impart to you not only the gospel of God but our own lives [psychai] as well" (1 Thess 2:8). Epaphroditus "almost died for the work of Christ, risking his life [psychē]" (Phil 2:30): his whole earthly or natural life was in danger, not just his "soul" (see also Rom 2:9; 11:3; 13:1; 16:4; 2 Cor 1:23). Such usage is thoroughly Hebraic (Jacob in Dihle et al., 620). Like sōma, psychē designates the person from a particular point of view: "man as a thinking, working, and feeling person" (Ladd, 460); "the ego, person, or personality . . . the whole man, with all that he believes, hopes and strives for" (Harder, 683). Similarly nous can mean "the whole thinking man, man as a creature capable of understanding" (Guthrie, 169).

While the corporeal and the incorporeal are distinguished, the dynamic activity between them witnesses to the unity of the person. The distinction between sōma and psychē is strictly anthropological, not ethical: the body is not intrinsically evil (it is integral to God's good creation*); and the soul is not a "higher self" which is by nature protected from temptation and sin. Moreover within creation the soul, far from being destined to overrule or escape the body, fulfills its purpose precisely in relation to the body. The "life" denoted by psychē is a bodily existence—which helps to explain why psychē can be employed by synecdoche for the whole person. Psychē is the person's vitality "from the point of view of his body and flesh" (Ladd, 460), as with nepeš in the OT (see Jacob in Dihle et al., 620). "Because of their interpenetration the soul is the animation of the body and the body is the incarnation of the soul. The soul has a body and the body has a soul and man as a whole is both, a psycho-physical unity." (Gundry, 121).

Much the same can be said of body and spirit. Paul does not view the pneuma "as a divine spark (the real 'I') incarcerated in the physical, 'the ghost in the machine' " (Dunn in Kamlah et al., 694). The self which, as spirit, experiences communion with God, is a bodily being. At the very moment Paul distinguishes the sōma from the pneuma, he unites them in devotion to Christ (1 Cor 7:34). Salvation* embraces both body (1 Cor 6:12-20; 15) and spirit (1 Cor 5:5). Similarly the offering of the sōma entails the renewal of the nous (Rom 12:1-2).

Paul likewise unites the flesh (sarx as a synonym of sōma) to the spirit. Both must be purified if the person is to become holy (2 Cor 7:1). It is instructive to juxtapose two texts: "I had no rest [anesin] in my spirit [pneuma], because I did not find my brother Titus there" (2 Cor 2:13); "For when we came into Macedonia, our flesh [sarx] had no rest [anesin], but we were distressed in every way—conflicts without, fears within" (2 Cor 7:5). "Spirit" and "flesh" are not interchangeable: the turbulence "within" (pneuma) affects the "outside" (sarx); "Paul carefully chooses his terms after the pattern of an anthropological duality" (Gundry, 144). Yet he describes one experience; his anxiety over Titus and the Corinthians affects his whole being.

1 Thessalonians 5:23, with its triad "spirit [pneuma], soul [psychē] and body [sōma]," appears to divide the person into three parts. But Paul's intention is just the opposite: "May God . . . sanctify you through and through [holoteleis]. May your whole [holoklēron] spirit, soul and body be kept blameless" at Christ's return. Far from dissecting the person, Paul expresses the hope that believers may, by God's sanctifying work, be saved from disintegration and preserved as whole (holos) beings. He joins the three terms together (here only in his letters) "for emphasis rather than for definition" (Guthrie, 165; cf. Deut 6:5; Mt 22:37).

2.3. The Person's Experience of Knowledge. As creatures made in the divine image, human beings have a unique capacity for knowing God. Knowledge entails the exercise of the nous. "My mind" knows that the Law* is good and wants to obey it (Rom 7:14-23). Decisions about special days call for rational deliberations: "Let all be fully convinced in their own minds" (Rom 14:5 NRSV). The heart (kardia) too has intellectual capacities. The Israelites' "minds [noēmata] are made dull," because "a veil covers their hearts [kardia]" (2 Cor 3:14-15)—where Paul describes not the effect of one organ on another, but the blunting of the heart's own cognitive powers (kardiai and noēmata are again closely parallel in Phil 4:7). If truth* about God is to be grasped, the kardia must be enlightened (2 Cor 4:1-6; Eph 1:17-19). Moreover the conscience* (syneidēsis) makes rational judgments when appraising one's actions (Rom 2:15).

Yet knowing is not purely cognitive. In Paul the nous is a place of moral judgments whose deliberations always affect the will (Behm, in Behm and Würthwein, 958-59; Ladd, 476; Bultmann, 1.211). The renewal of the nous is requisite for knowing and doing God's will (Rom 12:1-2). Being "convinced in one's own mind," affects behavior (Rom 14:1-8) and issues in a life of holiness* (Eph 4:20-32). Similarly the verb phroneō denotes an attitude of mind which finds expression in the will (Bultmann, 1.214). Once the believers' "attitude" is like Christ's (Phil 2:2, 5, where phroneō occurs three times), they will become obedient like him (Phil 2:6-11). When Christians "set their minds" on things above (Col 3:2, phroneō), their conduct will become holy (Col 3:5-17). The "mindset" (phronēma) of the flesh or the Spirit (Rom 8:6-7) determines a whole way of life (Rom 8:1-17). Insights of the kardia are likewise wed to conduct. Gentiles demonstrate "the work of the Law in their hearts" by doing what the Law requires (Rom 2:14-15). "Each of you should give as you have decided in your heart to give" (2 Cor 9:7). Obedience to apostolic teaching arises "from the heart" (Rom 6:17).

Pneuma designates the self's capacity for three kinds of knowledge:

(1) Knowledge of self. "For what human being knows what is truly human except the human spirit [pneuma] that is within?" (1 Cor 2:11 NRSV). Within the one question, pneuma represents both the whole self (what the human spirit knows, the human knows) and the internal or incorporeal dimension of the self

("the human spirit that is within").

(2) Knowledge of others. "For though absent in body [sōma] I am present in spirit [pneuma]; . . . When you are assembled, and my spirit [pneuma] is present" (1 Cor 5:3-4 NRSV). While distinguishing the corporeal from the incorporeal, Paul says that he himself will actually participate in the church's life; his pneuma is present and active by the agency of the divine pneuma, who works through the letter Paul is writing.

(3) Knowledge* of God. Galatians 6:18, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit, brothers and sisters," is just as comprehensive as 1 Thessalonians 5:28, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you." Or, as we may also put it, the pneuma is that dimension of the self through which the whole person engages in communion with God: "The Spirit [pneuma] testifies with our spirit [pneuma] that we are God's children"; through the Spirit's agency "we cry, 'Abba, Father' " (Rom 8:16, 15). Similarly 1 Corinthians 5:5 ("that the spirit [pneuma] may be saved") speaks not of the incorporeal to the exclusion of the corporeal (cf. 1 Cor 15) but of "the whole person as oriented towards God" (Fee, 212). (On the oscillation in Paul's use of pneuma between "person" and an "aspect" or a "dimension" of the person in communion with God, see Dunn in Kamlah et al., 693-94.)

There is a kind of knowledge that is distinct from the cognitive. "If I pray in a tongue, my spirit [pneuma] prays but my mind [nous] is unfruitful" (1 Cor 14:14). Such a prayer is unintelligible to the reason (whose activity is temporarily suspended), but the person is in genuine communion with God ("If you are praising God with your spirit," 1 Cor 14:16 NIV) and is thus edified (1 Cor 14:2, 4). Again speaking of prayer,* Paul affirms that "the peace of God, which surpasses all understanding [nous], will protect your hearts [kardiai] and your minds [noēmata] in Christ Jesus" (Phil 4:7). This is not descriptive knowledge about "the peace of God" (the faculties of the nous are superseded), but intimate knowledge of that reality (the peace of God is experienced in the heart). Paul prays that Christians "may know [ginōskō] the love of Christ, which surpasses knowledge [gnōsis]" (Eph 3:19).

3. The Person in Bondage to Sin.

Paul speaks of sin* (hamartia) much more often as a power than as an action. Sin is a ruthless tyrant which entered the world and established its rule through the transgression of Adam (Rom 5:12-21) and has henceforth held the whole of humanity in terrible bondage (Rom 3:9; 6:20; Gal 3:22). (When hamartia is depicted by Paul as a power, the capitalized "Sin" will be used in the following.)

In Paul, as with the equivalent term and usage in the OT, sarx signals creaturely impotence (see 2.2 above). But Paul also employs sarx to denote "man's being and attitude as opposed to and in contradiction to God and God's Spirit" (Bornkamm, 133; cf. Schweizer and Baumgärtel, 132; Thiselton, 675-76). The sarx has sworn allegiance to another power: "By means of the flesh I am enslaved to the law of Sin" (Rom 7:25). The sarx of every person from Adam onward, Jesus alone excepted (Rom 8:3), has been Sin's habitation and slave.

By means of the flesh, Sin subjugates the whole person. In the garden of Eden Sin's main appeal, through the serpent, is not to physical desire but to human reason and pride (Gen 3:1-6); Eve is deceived by the serpent's cunning (2 Cor 11:3; 1 Tim 2:14). So too, while "the works of the flesh [sarx]" (Gal 5:19-21) include what we would call fleshly sins such as sexual immorality and drunkenness, the catalog is dominated by sins of the mind and spirit: "hatred, discord, jealousy, anger, quarrels, dissensions, factions and envy" (see Virtues and Vices). Again by synecdoche Paul uses a term for a part of the self (sarx) to designate the whole person viewed in a certain way, namely in rebellion against God and in bondage to the powers of "the present evil age" (Gal 1:4), the chief of which is Sin.

Accordingly, neither the pneuma nor the nous nor the kardia escapes Sin's clutches. Believers must purify themselves "from every defilement of flesh [sarx] and spirit [pneuma]" (2 Cor 7:1)—that is, both corporeally and incorporeally. Where sarx wars against pneuma, it is invariably the human sarx, including its spiritual dimension, versus the divine pneuma: "those who sow to their own flesh [sarx] will from the flesh reap corruption; but those who sow to the Spirit [pneuma] will from the Spirit reap eternal life" (Gal 6:8; cf. 5:16- 26). The human pneuma, far from offering salvation, itself needs to be saved (1 Cor 5:5; cf. Kümmel, 44). (In Rom 8:10 pneuma denotes the Holy Spirit; with NRSV, against NIV.)

Paul speaks of "the mind [nous] of the flesh [sarx]" (Col 2:18), that is, the mind possessed by the flesh as the tool of Sin. The moral standing of the nous "is determined by what is dominating it, either the Spirit of God or the flesh" (Guthrie, 169). When ruled by the devil (see Satan, Devil), "we lived in the passions of our flesh [sarx], fulfilling the desires of the flesh [sarx] and of the thoughts [dianoiai]" (Eph 2:2-3). In this text it seems likely that the first sarx is broader than the second, and that the second sarx and dianoiai represent two ways "the passions of the flesh" find expression—sensually and intellectually (cf. Eph 5:3-5, akin to Gal

5:22-23; Behm in Behm and Würthwein, 966-67).

God judged those who "suppress the truth" by accelerating their descent into error: "they became futile in their thinking and their foolish hearts [kardia] were darkened"; "since they did not see fit to acknowledge God, he gave them over to a depraved mind [nous]" (Rom 1:18-21, 28). By the darkening of "their foolish [asynetos] heart" (1:21), Paul means "not merely a chance lack of knowledge . . . [but] a sign that a man in his deepest being rejects God. . . . [The] lack of insight must be regarded as culpable behaviour" (Goetzmann in Harder and Goetzmann, 132). The effect of the hardening of the heart is culpable "ignorance" (agnoia), a "darkened understanding [dianoia]" and "futility of mind [nous]" (Eph 4:17-18). While in Romans 1:14 the anoētoi ("foolish") are "the simple and uneducated whose power of thought is undeveloped," elsewhere in Paul (Gal 3:1, 3; Tit 2:3; 1 Tim 6:9) the term denotes "adverse religious and moral judgment" (Behm in Behm and Würthwein, 962). The sense of right and wrong is therefore blunted: "Both their [non-believers'] minds [nous] and consciences [syneidēsis] are defiled" (Tit 1:15; cf. 1 Tim 4:2).

In keeping with the unity of mind and will noted earlier (see 2.3 above), a depraved nous (and a foolish kardia produce "every kind of wickedness" (Rom 1:18-32). "Hostility of mind" toward God is joined to "evil works" (Col 1:21); those whose hearts are hardened and whose understanding is darkened predictably "indulge in every kind of impurity" (Eph 4:18-19). Talk among persons "of corrupt mind [nous], who have been robbed of the truth," inevitably leads to envy, avarice and the like (1 Tim 6:3-5; cf. 2 Tim 3:8).

In Paul's usage the sōma ("body") never belongs to itself but always to a master (Bornkamm, 131). By virtue of creation, the body belongs to God; but in consequence of the Fall it becomes the subject of Sin. The body is not inherently sinful; "the body of sin" is the body possessed by Sin (Rom 6:6; 5:12). Such a person habitually offers "the parts of [his/her] body to Sin, as instruments of wickedness" (Rom 6:13). "The deeds of the body [sōma]" which need to be destroyed are committed by persons who live "according to the flesh [sarx]" (Rom 8:13). "The body is not meant for sexual immorality" (see Sexuality), but this is exactly how it behaves as Sin's slave (1 Cor 6:12-20).

Psychē still means "natural life" but such life in its fallen state. The "natural person" (psychikos anthrōpos) is unable to understand spiritual realities (1 Cor 2:6-16); the "natural body" (sōma psychikon) is destined to perish (1 Cor 15:42-55).

Slavery to Sin offers no escape from personal responsibility. The self does not resist but readily submits to Sin's assaults. It is by the mind's own suppression of truth and the heart's willful disobedience that Sin establishes and maintains its mastery. The body readily gives itself—"yields its members"—to Sin's servitude (Rom 6:13; 7:23). Persons enslaved to Sin are nonetheless "held accountable to God" for their decisions and are "deserving of death" for their actions (Rom 1:32; 3:9, 19). As the ally of Sin (Rom 5:12-21), Death (see Life and Death) causes the disintegration of the self in flagrant violation of the magnificent unity in diversity which God created. Despite his assurance that "to be away from the body [is to be] at home with the Lord," Paul dreads bodiless existence (2 Cor 5:1-10; see 1.2.4 above). A. T. Lincoln observes that "what is to be seen here . . . is not an ultimate anthropological dualism but rather a temporary duality brought about by sin and death, which until the consummation of salvation continue to mar the wholeness of human existence" (Lincoln, 70).

4. The Person Made Whole.

Christ and the Spirit act to undo and to reverse the ruin and destruction which Sin and Death visited upon their victims.

4.1. New Creation. "The first man Adam became a living being [psychēn zōsan]; the last Adam, a lifegiving spirit [pneuma zōopoioun]" (1 Cor 15:45)—not pneuma zōn, "living spirit" (see Adam and Christ). Dunn comments, "The contrast is between man the recipient of the breath of life which constitutes him a living being, and Christ the giver of the life of the age to come, the life of the Spirit" (Dunn 1980, 108). Moreover, like the first Adam the last Adam is an inclusive being, the very place of new life (1 Cor 15:21-22, 48-49). The "old self" (palaios anthrōpos) (Rom 6:6)—humankind in Adam (Rom 5:12- 21)—is crucified, so that persons may be joined to the risen Christ (Rom 6:4-11). To "put on" the new humanity is to embrace Christ himself (Rom 13:14; Gal 3:27). The "one new humanity [kainon anthrōpon]" of Ephesians 2:15 is the corporate Christ—Christ himself together with all those united to him in his death and resurrection.* On this reality is founded the ethical imperative: "put away . . . your old self [palaion anthrōpon], corrupt and deluded by its lusts, . . . clothe yourselves with the new self [kainon anthrōpon], created according to the likeness of God in true righteousness and holiness" (Eph 4:22-24 NRSV; cf. Col 3:9-10).

To be understood in the same way, in my judgment, is "the inner being" (ho esō anthrōpos) (Eph 3:16 NRSV): this phrase identifies the person in Christ, in contrast to "the outer nature," the person in Adam and destined to perish. "Though our outer nature [exō anthrōpos] is wasting away, our inner [esō] nature is being renewed day by day" (2 Cor 4:16 NRSV), anticipating the full realization of the new humanity in the heavenly glory* (2 Cor 4:17-18; see Creation and New Creation). By the same token "the inmost self" of Romans 7:22 is equivalent to the "new self" implied in Romans 6:6 (for this understanding of "the inner self," see Barrett, 145-47; Dunn 1988, 394; Kim, 321-26). Others (e.g., Gundry, 135-40) take "inner and outer self" (as distinct from "old and new self") to denote the incorporeal and the corporeal aspects respectively.

4.2. The Renewal of the Person. The person united to Christ is transformed as a total being.

Death to Sin (Rom 6:1-14) entails death to the flesh (Rom 8:1-17; see Dying and Rising). Paul never speaks of the resurrection of the sarx, only of its destruction. 1 Corinthians 5:5 speaks not (or not necessarily) of the physical death of the incestuous man but of the end of his rebellion against God—as when in Galatians 5:24 Paul calls for the "crucifixion of the flesh with its passions and desires" (cf. Fee, 212; see Discipline). "Human commands and teachings" do not restrain but only encourage the sarx (Col 2:23). The power* of the Holy Spirit* is essential for conquering the flesh (Gal 5:22-26; Rom 8:1-17). Paul longs for "fleshly" (sarkinoi, sarkikoi) persons, still vulnerable to the sarx as the agent of Sin, to become "spiritual" (pneumatikoi) persons dominated by the Spirit, the agent of Christ (1 Cor 2:14—3:3). "Where the NT differs from behaviourist psychology is over the actual reality of the work of the Spirit" (Wright in Brown et al., 568).

Because the kardia is the integrating center of the person, renewal occurs from the heart outward. God causes the light* of the gospel* of the glory of Christ to "shine in our hearts" (2 Cor 4:4-6). It is here that Christ dwells (Eph 3:17), here that his peace* reigns (Col 3:15) and here that Christians are enlightened about God's saving purpose (Eph 1:18). It is the heart that receives the Holy Spirit (2 Cor 1:22), into the heart that God pours his love* by the Spirit (Rom 5:5) and "from a pure heart" that acts of love arise (1 Tim 1:5). Similarly it is Christ who explains Paul's "affection" (splanchna) for his people (Phil 1:8; Köster, 556). Corresponding to the depth of their former commitment to Sin, Christians believe the gospel "in the heart" (Rom 10:9-10) and obey apostolic teaching "from the heart" (Rom 6:17).

As part of the same process believers are "transformed by the renewing of [their] mind [nous]" for discovering God's "good, pleasing and perfect will," and for employing his gifts* in the church (Rom 12:2-8; cf. Col 1:9-10). Persons once duped by "the wisdom* of this age" are given "the wisdom of God" for understanding (if only in part) the person and work of Christ, and God's saving purpose for both humanity and creation (1 Cor 1:18—2:16; Col 1:15—2:5; Eph 1:8-19). In place of the futile mentality and darkened understanding which marked existence in Adam, persons incorporated into Christ are "renewed in the spirit of [their] minds" for growth "in true righteousness and holiness" (Eph 4:17-24). "The law of my mind" (Rom 7:23) is God's law,* to which the mind, now liberated, gives its hearty approval (see 4.3 below); the attitude of mind imparted by the Spirit is able and willing to obey God's law, and to resist the assaults of the flesh (Rom 8:1-17).

The believer's present sōma ("body") is mortal. "God will destroy" the food that the stomach receives, and the stomach itself (1 Cor 6:13), for this body belongs to a perishable order (1 Cor 7:29-31; 15:42-44). Yet the sōma itself is destined for resurrection (1 Cor 6:13-14; 15:20-23). At the end the perishable will be clothed with the imperishable, and the believer's lowly body transformed into a glorious body like that of Jesus himself (1 Cor 15:42-57; Phil 3:20-21). Yet it is this perishable body which Jesus has purchased and now calls into his service (1 Cor 6:12-20; Rom 6:11-23; 12:1). The body's mortality offers not the slightest excuse for indulging its cravings or yielding it to Sin's directives.

Given the self's unity in diversity, the experiences of the psychē and the pneuma are bound up with those of the sōma. Psychē still denotes "natural life" within the present order of existence. The believer is no longer a "natural person" (psychikos anthrōpos) but "spiritual" (pneumatikos) (1 Cor 2:14-15); yet the believer retains a "natural body" (sōma psychikon), another name for the "mortal, corruptible body" (1 Cor 15:42-44). The psychē will share in the transformation at the End (1 Thess 5:23). Till then the psychē is no less vulnerable than the sōma to the hazards of a deteriorating order and the lures of "the present evil age." Yet as with the body, it is this very "life" that Christ calls into his service: "Whatever your task, put yourselves [psychē] into it, as done for the Lord and not for your masters" (Col 3:23 NRSV); "as slaves of Christ, doing the will of God from your heart [psychē]" (Eph 6:6 NRSV); "we were delighted to impart to you . . . our lives [psychai] . . . because you had become so dear to us" (1 Thess 2:8). By the same token the human spirit (pneuma) is destined for final salvation (1 Cor 5:5; 1 Thess 5:23); can still experience the defilements of sin (2 Cor 7:1); can already experience deep communion with God through the Spirit (Rom 8:16; 1 Cor 14:2, 14-15); and is, together with the body, to be devoted to the Lord's service (1 Cor 7:34).

We have already observed that slavery to Sin, far from affording escape from personal responsibility, comes about through the self's willful surrender to Sin's demands. The same holds true (mutatis mutandis) for the slaves of Christ. Ethical* decisions matter; believers shall be answerable for them on the day of judgment* (1 Cor 3:12-15; 2 Cor 5:10). Moreover just as Sin exploited the self's unity in diversity, so Christ calls for the dedication of the whole person to the life of obedience. The proof of "knowledge and depth of insight" is righteous* conduct (Phil 1:9-11; cf. Col 1:9-11).

4.3. The Divided Self. We turn finally to Romans 7:14-25, a crucial passage for Pauline psychology, indeed for Paul's theology as a whole. We would argue that these verses describe a Christian's struggle, one that is exclusively Christian, and one in which Paul represents Christians generally. (For a recent defense of this view see Dunn 1988, 387-99, 403-12; for another view, see Moo, 448-98.)

4.3.1. Two Views of the Self. From one standpoint the self is a fleshly being. The words "that is, in my flesh" (Rom 7:18) serve to define rather than limit the "I" as here conceived. So should we also understand Romans 7:14. From the standpoint of one's participation in Adam (Rom 5:12-21), and one's continued vulnerability to Sin's agents, the "I" as a Christian is still "fleshly" (sarkinos), still subject to Sin's power (cf. 1 Cor 3:1). Behind the words "sold as a slave to sin" (Rom 7:14) lies the perfect participle pepramenos ("sold"), denoting a condition that began before conversion and carries over into Christian experience. From another viewpoint the self is renewed. In setting "the law of my mind [nous]" over against "the law of sin which is in my members" (Rom 7:23), Paul is not describing warfare between two segments of the self. Rather "my mind" designates the whole person as renewed by Christ and the Spirit, and "my members" the whole person as threatened by slavery to Sin (Rom 7:25). "The inner self" (Rom 7:22) is the self in Christ, what Paul elsewhere calls "the new self" (see 4.1 above); "the law of my mind" (Rom 7:23) is God's law, to which the person, now renewed by Christ, gives its allegiance (Rom 8:1-8). The non-believer's doing so was adversely affected by Sin's use of the law, or by one's own perverse motives (Rom 10:3). But whereas the nous used to capitulate to Sin's seductive uses of the law (Rom 7:7-11; Gal 3:22-23), it now resists (Rom 7:23). Paul the Christian knows what he does, and he understands what he does (Rom 7:15) and why (Rom 7:17-18). But he does not acknowledge the legitimacy of what he does. Even when succumbing to the dictates of Sin, he repudiates and loathes what he does; he recognizes that Sin's claims are illegitimate (Rom 6).

4.3.2. Two Kinds of Slavery. A servant* (diakonos) can serve more than one master, but a slave* (doulos) cannot (Mt 6:24). Yet consider Romans 7:25: "So then, I myself [autos egō] am enslaved [douleuō] to the law of God with the mind, but to the law of Sin with the flesh." "I myself" do both; douleuō governs both parts of the sentence. The explanation is that "I myself" participate in two humanities (represented by Adam and Christ respectively) and in two realities (the present evil age and the age to come). I am capable of giving myself totally to each, not alternately but simultaneously. This interpretation is supported by the order of clauses in Romans 7:24-25. First comes the cry "What a wretched man I am!" (Rom 7:24a), and finally the recognition of a deeply divided self (Rom 7:25b). In between stands the question "Who will rescue me from this body of death?" (Rom 7:24b) and the exclamation "Thanks be to God—through Jesus Christ our Lord!" (Rom 7:25a). Significantly this unmistakable reference to Christian experience is integral to the present discussion, not appended to it. The cry of Romans 7:24a is echoed in the more sober statement of Romans 7:25b. The verb of Romans 7:24b (rhysetai) is a true future: Jesus Christ "will rescue me from this body of death" at the resurrection (Rom 6:5, 8; 8:10-11). It is not merely the struggle against Sin (Rom 7:25b) which accounts for the anguish (Rom 7:24a). To have tasted the "already" of salvation creates a longing that is not fully satisfied until the "not yet" becomes a reality (Rom 8:18-25; 13:11-14). Assurance of eventual rescue prevents anguish from degenerating into despair; and the very division within the self shows that Sin is being effectively resisted in anticipation of final victory (see Eschatology).

See also ADAM AND CHRIST; BODY; CONSCIENCE; ESCHATOLOGY; ETHICS; FLESH; HOLY SPIRIT; IMMORTALITY; INTERMEDIATE STATE; LAW; LIFE AND DEATH; NEW NATURE AND OLD NATURE; SIN; SPIRITUALITY; WEAKNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. K. Barrett, The Second Epistle to the Corinthians (New York: Harper & Row, 1973); F. Baumgärtel and J. Behm, "καρδία κτλ," TDNT III.605-14; J. Behm and E. Würthwein, "νοέω κτλ," TDNT IV.948-1022; G. C. Berkouwer, Man: The Image of God (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1962); G. Bornkamm, Paul (New York: Harper & Row, 1971); C. Brown, H. Vörlander and J. S. Wright, "Man," NIDNTT 2.567; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, Vol. 1 (New York: Scribner's, 1951); J. K. Chamblin, Paul and the Self:

Apostolic Teaching for Personal Wholeness (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1993); J. W. Cooper, Body, Soul, and Life Everlasting (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1989); A. Dihle et al., "ψυχή κτλ," TDNT IX.608-66; C. H. Dodd, "The Mind of Paul: Change and Development," in New Testament Studies (Manchester: University Press, 1953 [1934]) 67-128; J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1980); idem, Romans 1-8 (WBC; Dallas: Word, 1988); E. E. Ellis, Paul and His Recent Interpreters (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1961); G. D. Fee, The First Epistle to the Corinthians (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987); R. H. Gundry, Sōma in Biblical Theology, with Emphasis on Pauline Anthropology (SNTSMS 29; Cambridge: University Press, 1976); D. Guthrie, New Testament Theology (Downers Grove: InterVarsity, 1981); G. Harder and C. Brown, "Soul," NIDNTT 3.676-89; G. Harder and J. Goetzmann, "Reason, Mind, Understanding," NIDNTT 3.122-34; A. A. Hoekema, Created in God's Image (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1986); H. J. Holtzmann, Lehrbuch der Neutestamentlichen Theologie, Vol. 2 (2d ed.; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1911); R. Jewett, Paul's Anthropological Terms (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1971); E. Kamlah et al., "Spirit, Holy Spirit," NIDNTT 3.689-709; S. Kim, The Origin of Paul's Gospel (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); H. Kleinknecht et al., "πνεῦμα κτλ" TDNT VI.332-455; H. Köster, "σπλάγχνον κτλ," TDNT VII.548-59; W. G. Kümmel, Man in the New Testament (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1963); G. E. Ladd, A Theology of the New Testament (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1974); A. T. Lincoln, Paradise Now and Not Yet (SNTSMS 43; Cambridge: University Press, 1981); H. Lüdemann, Die Anthropologie des Apostels Paulus und ihre Stellung innerhalb seiner Heilslehre (Kiel: University, 1872); J. G. Machen, The Christian View of Man (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1937); D. Moo, Romans 1-8 (WEC; Chicago: Moody, 1991); H. Ridderbos, Paul: An Outline of His Theology (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975); J. A. T. Robinson, The Body: A Study in Pauline Theology (SBT 5; London: SCM, 1952); E. Schweizer and F. Baumgärtel, "σάρξ κτλ," TDNT VII.98-151; M. Silva, Philippians (WEC; Chicago: Moody, 1988); W. D. Stacey, The Pauline View of Man (London: Macmillan, 1956); G. Theissen, Psychological Aspects of Pauline Theology (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1987); A. C. Thiselton, "Flesh," NIDNTT 1.671-82; D. E. H. Whiteley, The Theology of St. Paul (Oxford: Blackwell, 1964).

J. K. Chamblin

PURITY AND IMPURITY

The Pauline texts that relate to purity are found in those sections concerning controversies over food* (Gal 2:11-19; 1 Cor 8; 10:14—11:1; Rom 14:1—15:13); sections concerning sexual sin within the churches (1 Cor 5); and isolated texts in the Pastoral Letters that speak of the pure heart and the pure conscience.* Paul looks at purity and impurity from two viewpoints, that of the ceremonial purity of Mosaic Law* and moral purity.

1. Ceremonial Purity and Impurity
2. Moral Purity and Impurity
3. Background

1. Ceremonial Purity and Impurity.

Paul's stance on questions of ceremonial purity represents an enlightened viewpoint. He is careful to distinguish between his own view of the purity of food and others' scruples that are still based on Jewish food laws.

1.1. Paul's Own Stance on Issues of Ceremonial Purity and Impurity. As one who has died to the Mosaic Law (Gal 2:19), Paul no longer sees the Jewish food laws as binding on the Christian. Thus he accepts the teaching of Jesus that no food can be called unclean. The term koinon, meaning "common," or "unclean," which he uses in Romans 14:14, clearly refers to an unclean status in view of Jewish laws of ceremonial purity (cf. 1 Macc 1:47, 62). Because Paul is convinced that no food is unclean, he takes a liberal view on meat offered to idols* (1 Cor 10:25-26). The Christian Paul does engage in purification rites related to special vows, but this is done to placate those who saw him as completely antinomian (Acts 21:21-26).

1.2. Paul's Stance Toward Those Who Followed Ceremonial Purity Laws. Despite his enlightened view toward food, Paul is careful to respect the consciences of those who clearly feel defiled by ceremonially unclean food. While Paul thinks that no food is actually ceremonially unclean (Rom 14:14, 20; 1 Cor 8:4, 8; 10:25-26), he does recognize that if someone feels ceremonially defiled by a given food, for that person the food is to be considered unclean (Rom 14:14). This respect for another's conscience on questions of ceremonial purity leads Paul to place great responsibility on the strong in conscience to avoid offending the weak (see Strong and Weak). Thus he tells the Corinthians to abstain from food when they know a table partner will be troubled by seeing them eat it (1 Cor 10:28). Similarly, Paul tells the Romans to avoid consuming any food that will offend another Christian (Rom 14:21; see Rome).

2. Moral Purity and Impurity.

Paul's writings on moral purity deal with the subject both in an individual sense and in a corporate sense.

2.1. Paul's Stance on Moral Purity for Individuals.

Paul's teaching on individual purity includes both physical and spiritual levels (2 Cor 7:1). Thus we see strong words on the necessity of remaining pure in physical behavior (Rom 13:13-14; 1 Tim 5:22; Tit 2:5). The ground of Paul's appeals for physical purity is his understanding of the individual's body as "for the Lord" and as a temple* of the Holy Spirit* (1 Cor 6:13, 18-19).

More common in Pauline literature are encouragements for inner purity. Thus in the Pastorals we have references to purity of conscience (1 Tim 3:9; 2 Tim 1:3) and in Philippians and the Pastorals references to purity of heart or mind (Phil 4:8; 1 Tim 1:5; 2 Tim 2:22). Paul's major contribution to the idea of moral purity comes with his teaching that ceremonial impurity does not affect moral purity (1 Cor 8:4; Rom 14:14). This represents a major step beyond the decision of the Jerusalem* council (Acts 15:20). Paul's doctrine of individual moral purity must also be understood in light of his own sense of moral responsibility to carry the message of the risen Christ to others. Thus we read his attestations of innocence, or being undefiled by others' blood (Acts 18:6; 20:26). Paul is concerned with the question whether he is contaminated by the unbelief of others, but considers himself pure, or guiltless, in that he has delivered the message with which he was commissioned. Such attestations come from Paul's understanding of his call (see Conversion and Call) in light of the prophetic responsibility to deliver God's message completely (Jer 1:5,17; Ezek 3:16-21; Acts 9:15; 22:21; 26:16-20; 1 Cor 9:16; see Prophet, Paul As).

2.2. Paul's Stance on Moral Purity for the Church. Because of his view of the church* as the body of Christ (see Body of Christ), Paul taught that impurity in one member can contaminate a given body of believers (1 Cor 5:6-7, 13). It is because of this that members must be watchful to preserve the corporate purity, something for which Paul later commends the Corinthians* (2 Cor 7:11). The goal of this emphasis on purity is Paul's presentation of a pure church to Christ (2 Cor 11:2). Here we see a motivation for purity that arises out of eschatological* hope.* This is seen more clearly in 1 John 3:1-3 and is evident also in the Dead Sea Scrolls (1QS 5:13-20; 8:4-10; 9:3-6; see Qumran). Paul's emphasis on purity is not primarily motivated by this eschatological hope, however (except perhaps at Rom 13:11-14). It is rather based on his sense of God's election* of Christians to be like Christ (Rom 8:29-30). To follow Christ involves putting off moral uncleanness in order to be purified by the atoning work of Christ (Rom 3:21-26; 6:19) and the power of the Holy Spirit (1 Thess 4:7-8; cf. 2 Thess 2:13). Paul understands baptism* to be the symbol of this purification process (Rom 6:3-4; Eph 5:26).

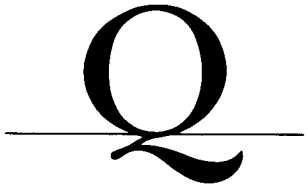
3. Background.

The background of Paul's teachings on purity is his knowledge of the historical Jesus, and not Greek views of purity (see Jesus and Paul; Jesus, Sayings of). Paul's statement in Romans 14:14 that he knows "in the Lord Jesus that nothing is unclean in itself" may be directly related to traditions now preserved in Mark 7:15-19. This view that impurity did not reside in a given object is also reflected in one strand of early Judaism (Tanḥuma Ḥuqat 26: Pesiqta de Rab Kahana), so one cannot say that this teaching was viewed as unique in first-century Palestine. The perception of things as pure to the pure in Titus 1:15 seems related to Jesus' logion now preserved in Matthew 6:22-23.

See also BAPTISM; CONSCIENCE; ETHICS; FOOD OFFERED TO IDOLS AND JEWISH FOOD LAWS; HOLINESS, SANCTIFICATION; HOLY SPIRIT; JERUSALEM; IDOLATRY; LAW; SEXUALITY, SEXUAL ETHICS; SIN, GUILT; TEMPLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. B. Janowski and H. Lichtenberger, "Enderwartung und Reinheitsidee: Zur eschatologischen Deutung von Reinheit und Sühne in der Qumrangemeinde," JJS 34 (1983) 31-59; J. Neusner, The Idea of Purity in Ancient Judaism (SJLA 1; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1973); M. Newton, The Concept of Purity at Qumran and in the Letters of Paul (SNTSMS 53; Cambridge: University Press, 1985); J. Neyrey, Paul, In Other Words: A Cultural Reading of His Letters (Louisville: Westminster/John Knox, 1990); W. Paschen, Rein und Unrein: Untersuchung zur biblischen Wortgeschichte (SANT 24; Munich: Kösel, 1970); J. P. Sampley, 'And the Two Shall Become One Flesh': A Study of Traditions in Ephesians 5:21-33 (SNTSMS 16; Cambridge: University Press, 1971).

M. Reasoner



QUMRAN AND PAUL

In 1947 a Bedouin boy, looking for lost goats in the caves overlooking the Dead Sea near the arid ruin of Khirbet Qumran, came upon a cache of scrolls which W. F. Albright soon pronounced to be "the greatest manuscript find of modern times." The first discovery led to a "scroll rush" of Bedouin and archeologists who found eleven caves with scrolls at Qumran and other caves throughout the Judean desert and at the mountain fortress of Masada. While the term Dead Sea Scrolls can refer broadly to all the finds, it is popularly used for those belonging to the distinctive community at Qumran.The Dead Sea Scrolls afford us the surest contemporary evidence of the Judaism from which first-century Christianity emerged. Knowledge of these scrolls is crucial to any careful study of the apostle Paul and his times.

1. Understanding the Qumran Community and Scrolls
2. Revelation
3. Interpretation of Scripture
4. God's Reign
5. The New Covenant
6. The Messianic Age

1. Understanding the Qumran Community and Scrolls.

Since their discovery the Qumran Scrolls have evoked varied and sometimes bizarre theories as to the origin of the community that penned them and its relationship to individuals and groups known from the NT.

1.1. Identity of the Sect. By the late 1950s a consensus among scholars identified the Qumran sect with the Essenes mentioned by Josephus, Pliny and Philo of Alexandria. Further, it was claimed that the Essenes took rise from the Hasidean reaction to Hellenization* of Judaism under the Seleucid kings such as Antiochus IV and the Jewish Hasmonean priest-kings who replaced them. The "Wicked Priest" who persecuted the sect's founder, the Teacher of Righteousness, was identified as the Maccabean priest-king Jonathan (152-142 B.C.) or Simon (142-134 B.C.). The "seekers after smooth things" (CD 1:18) were identified with the Pharisees, who split from the Essenes and subsequently allied themselves with the Hasmonean and Herodian regimes.

Since 1970 several well argued reconstructions, not to mention several speculative proposals, have complicated this scholarly consensus. Archeological data do provide a terminus a quo of the mid-second century B.C. and a terminus ad quem of the Jewish Revolt in A.D. 66-73 (see Revolutionary Movements). However, analysis of Qumran texts like the Damascus Covenant and the Temple Scroll suggest a longer prehistory to the movement than that focused on the Maccabean era. The collection at Qumran of nonsectarian apocalypses like 1 Enoch, the Aramaic Testament of Levi and Jubilees suggests that the Essene movement predates and subsumes the group at Qumran, as Josephus claimed. A newly published "halakic letter" (4QMMT) strengthens the view that the primary cause of the withdrawal to Qumran was a dispute over legal and calendrical rulings. The new text has also led one leading scholar (L. H. Schiffman) to conclude that the sect was not Essene in origin but Sadducean.

Despite the complexity of Qumran origins, the large overlap between Josephus's description and the Qumran texts themselves still favors the Essene hypothesis, but publication of new texts may force a change in the scholarly consensus.

1.2. Contents of the Library. The 800-plus scrolls from the Dead Sea caves comprise OT texts (including Tobit, Sirach and Baruch from the Apocrypha), pseudepigraphal works and sectarian compositions. All the books of the OT canon are represented except Esther, reflecting an intermediate stage of canon formation. It is unclear, however, what status the Essenes granted to patriarchal revelations such as 1 Enoch or "deuteronomic" restatements of the Law like the Temple Scroll.

The earliest scrolls published from cave 1 were, on the whole, the most complete because they were preserved in jars. They represent different genres: (1) sectarian rules, such as the Manual of Discipline (1QS); (2) exegesis, such as the pesher commentaries on the Prophets; (3) prayers and liturgies, such as the Hymns (1QH); and (4) messianic visions and plans, such as the War of the Sons of Light and the Sons of Darkness (1QM), the Messianic Rule (1QSa) and the New Jerusalem texts (e.g., 1Q32, 2Q24, 5Q15).

Much of the community library was deposited in the more vulnerable cave 4; the massive collection of fragments from this cave has been published over the past twenty-five years. Numerous manuscripts of The Book of Enoch written in Aramaic were published in 1976. The most startling discovery from the Aramaic versions of 1 Enoch is that an original "Book of Giants," detailing the escapades of the bastard sons of the "Watchers" (Gen 6:1-4), was replaced by the "Similitudes of Enoch" (1 Enoch 37—71) in the first century A.D. Since the latter book makes the most overt connection between a heavenly "son of man" and messiah, its relevance for NT Christology* is a matter of renewed debate. Several large scrolls have been published since the late 1970s. The Temple Scroll, confiscated by the Israelis in 1967 and published in 1978, appears to be an "inspired" revision of biblical Law, adapting earlier Essene legal rulings to the expected messianic age. In 1985 the full collection of the angelic liturgy texts, entitled Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice, saw the light of publication.The scholarly logjam to publishing the remaining Qumran scrolls seems to have broken up, and we should expect to have the entire Qumran corpus available by the end of the century. These new texts will sharpen our knowledge of the sect and Second Temple Judaism and thus further supplement our knowledge of NT background.

1.3. Qumran and Paul: Method of Study. Studies of Paul and Qumran have taken two directions. Earlier studies emphasized specific parallels between particular words and ideas in the two bodies of writings. For instance, strong similarities can be found in 2 Corinthians 6:14—7:1 to the Qumran exclusivist dualism of light* and darkness, God* and Belial. Pauline phrases like "righteousness of God"* (Rom 1:17/1QS 11:12), "works of the Law"* (Gal 2:16/4QFlor [4Q174] 1-2), "church* of God" (1 Thess 2:14/1QM 4:10), and "sons of light" (1 Thess 5:5/1QS 1:9 et al.) and "son of God"* (Rom 1:4/4QpsDan).

Parallels are particularly strong in the case of Ephesians* and Colossians* with their Semitic phraseology such as "a share in the lot of the saints in light" (Col 1:12/1QS 11:7-8). The elaborate introduction in Ephesians 1 reflects the style of Manual of Discipline as well as its idea that God's predestined yet mysterious plan has been fulfilled in the community.

On the strength of these parallels, some scholars would claim that Paul and his associates were influenced by the Essenes. Others would argue that we do not have sufficient comparative data to determine to what extent Paul and the Qumran texts were drawing from a common pool of contemporary Jewish usage (see Jew, Paul the).

A second, more recent approach has been to compare the "patterns of religion" between Paul's gospel* and the Essene covenant. E. P. Sanders emphasizes the overarching "covenantal nomism" which the Qumran sect shares with all other forms of Judaism in contrast with Paul's experience of salvation. A. F. Segal, developing Käsemann's claim that "apocalyptic is the mother of all Christian theology," points out the similar social psychology of messianic conversion in Paul and the Essenes. In another direction, J. Neusner rejects the idea of one normative pattern and emphasizes the distinctiveness of "Judaisms" in the period just before and after the destruction of the Second Temple.

The approach taken here is, without accepting fully any of these theories, to identify several major themes which appear in the theology of Paul and the Dead Sea Scrolls and to compare how they work within the worldview of their particular community.

2. Revelation.

A striking common note of the apocalyptic* writings of Qumran and Paul's letters is their claim to be a response to divine revelation.

2.1. Mysteries at Qumran. The Essenes were noted for the gift of prophecy (Josephus J.W. 1.3.5 §§78-80; 2.7.3 §§111-13; Ant. 15.10.4-5 §§371-79). While Josephus's examples of Essene prophecy are addresses to political leaders, he also mentions that they "kept the names of the angels" (Josephus J.W. 2.8.7 §142). This description corresponds to the practice of the Qumran community: revelations were to be kept secret from outsiders (1QS 10:24-25).

While the sect clearly shared in the apocalyptic tradition of Daniel and the pseudepigrapha, they attributed a fundamental role to the insight of the Teacher of Righteousness (CD 1:11; 1QpHab 7:4). In the Hymns the Teacher confesses: "Thou hast unstopped my ears to marvelous mysteries" (1QH 1:21). These mysteries include matters of creation, including all-important matters of astronomy and calendar, of the spirits of good and evil and their predestinated end, of the true interpretation of Torah and Prophets, and of the coming end of the evil age and restoration* of Israel.

The publication of the Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice has placed the community within a larger framework of Jewish mysticism. The 13 Sabbath Songs describe in hypnotic detail the worship of the angels in the heavenly temple and the movement of the divine throne-chariot (merkabah), and they seem to provide a communal context in which visions or auditions might be received.

2.2. Paul's Vision of Christ. Paul claims that his own ministry* was founded on a revelation, when God "was pleased to reveal his Son in me" (Gal 1:15-16; Acts 9 par.). From this conversion experience Paul derives the essential elements of his Gospel (see Conversion and Call). He also describes a subsequent experience when as "a person in Christ" he was caught up to paradise in the third heaven and heard inexpressible things (2 Cor 12:2-4; see Visions). Were these two revelations equivalent?

The discovery of a vital apocalyptic mysticism at Qumran has reinforced the view of Albert Schweitzer that the essence of Paul's Gospel was the experience of "being in Christ," though not as Schweitzer thought of it (see In Christ; Mysticism). However, it should be noted that Paul's reticence about his rapture to heaven* is in strong contrast with his insistence that he always preached the gospel publicly and freely (Gal 3:1). In this respect his Damascus Road conversion is more like a prophetic call in which the vision is prolegomenon to the message (1 Cor 9:1, 16; see Prophet, Paul As). In the doxological summary of the gospel in Romans 16:25-27, the "revelation of the mystery*" seems clearly linked to the public proclamation of salvation* by faith* to all nations (cf. Eph 6:19).

3. Interpretation of Scripture.

While claiming decisive new insight into God's truth, the Qumran community and Paul were both deeply biblical in their conviction that the Scriptures were the oracles of God addressed to the end of the ages.

3.1. Text and Canon. The Qumran library has enriched immeasurably our knowledge of the biblical text and the textual traditions of the time of Jesus and Paul. The Qumran manuscripts include various text types, predominantly of the Masoretic type which underlies our Hebrew text but with representation of Septuagint and Samaritan types. By contrast, late first-century manuscripts from other Dead Sea caves and Masada are almost exclusively of the Masoretic type.

The community practice of copying and storing biblical texts is a mark of its reverence for Scripture as an inspired word. The supplement to the Psalms Scroll ($11QPsa^a$), known as the "words of David," explains that David wrote 4,050 compositions and that "all these he uttered through prophecy which was given him from before the Most High." This text also suggests the existence of writings not in our present canon, and the Psalms scroll in fact include eight such psalms. While the covenanters revered works now called apocrypha and pseudepigrapha, they did not make commentaries on them, which may suggest that the distinction between canon and other inspired writings was already in existence.

While revering the letter of Scripture, the Qumran exegetes exercised considerable liberty in introducing variant readings for purposes of clarification of the text. In the Habakkuk commentary on Habakkuk 1:5, it seems virtually certain that where the MT reads "look among the nations (bagg̊ôyim)," the commentator introduced the variant "look at the traitors" (bôg̊ᵉd̊îm), with the sense that God is condemning the community's enemies.

There are thus general similarities in matters of canon and text between Qumran and Paul. Both look primarily to the canon of Law, Prophets and Psalms. Paul's citations are exclusively from the canonical OT, although he is willing to paraphrase and makes allusion to apocryphal texts and legends. In terms of text, Paul does not quote from one text type but shows awareness of LXX and MT texts as well as eclectic readings.

3.2. Methods of Interpretation. The Scrolls exhibit the most contemporary examples of Jewish exegetical method to the time of Paul (see Old Testament in Paul). Qumran exegesis is strongly literal, that is, it cites and interprets the actual words of Scripture. The earliest known targum (or Aramaic paraphrase), on the book of Job, is clearly not just a translation device but a form of meditation on the text. Legal application (halakah), seen preeminently in the Temple Scroll, works from specific Pentateuchal texts. The Genesis Apocryphon (1QapGen) is distinctive in its interspersing of haggadic legend with literal citation from Genesis.

The most distinctive Qumran method is that of pesher, which begins with the letter and discovers in it an eschatological meaning. More than a dozen continuous pesharim were found in portions of the prophetic books (and Ps 37). Thematic collections of testimonia were also found, which draw together proof-texts from various OT books. Finally, isolated pesher texts appear throughout the rules, suggesting a larger body of authoritative exegesis known to the community. Finally, in the Qumran hymns and wisdom writings, one finds unselfconscious reproduction of biblical style and thought.

A significant issue raised for Pauline studies is whether Paul employed specific exegetical techniques or to what extent both Paul and the Qumran exegetes exhibit an "intertextual" consciousness that allows them to make citations and allusions without recourse to a particular method of exegesis. In this respect the use of Scripture in the Qumran rules may present the closest parallels to Paul's letters. The rules demonstrate an eclectic use of Scripture, including quotation, allusion and paraphrase in the context of pastoral exhortation.

3.3. Eschatological Hermeneutic. The Qumran exegetes were convinced that the "hidden things," especially the cryptic words of the Prophets, had been revealed to their founder, the Teacher of Righteousness, and to his priestly descendants (CD 3:13-19; 1QpHab 7:1-17). In all the sectarian texts there is a consistent appropriation of Scripture, not as past history but as present fulfillment. Of particular interest is their deuteronomic typology. They see themselves as the remnant, the "penitents of the desert" who are waiting expectantly for redemption. Yet in a sense it is not a new dispensation but a recovery of the truth and perfection of the original Law of Moses (1QS 1:1-10).

Paul likewise sees the gospel as the eschatological fulfillment of Scripture (1 Cor 15:3) and the church as fulfilling the role of Israel* at the turn of the ages. But the gospel is not just a new insight but a new act of God* in Christ's death* and resurrection.* This new act, "what eye hath not seen nor ear heard," causes Paul to reorder the priorities of the old covenant,* most strikingly the role of Law observance, and it gives him a kind of exegetical virtuosity which differs from the studied insights of the priestly expositors at Qumran. Secondly, while for both the Essenes and Paul Scripture forms the way of life of a covenant community, the Pauline community operates on a new constitution, that of inclusion of the Gentiles* in the new Adam.* Qumran interpretation, despite its condemnation of those outside, is more in line with the exegesis of other Jewish groups as represented by Philo and the rabbinic writings.

4. God's Reign.

Paul shared with the writers of the Scrolls the monotheistic faith of Israel (see God). At the same time, comparison of Paul's theology and that of Qumran discloses a considerable flexibility in depicting the uniqueness of the one God and his governance of the world.

4.1. God and the Archangels. The "two spirits treatise" (1QS 3:13—4:26), which encapsulates the peculiar teaching of the Qumran sect, begins with a strong assertion of God's omnipotence and omniscience: "From the God of knowledge comes all that is and shall be. Before ever they existed he established their whole design . . . and they accomplish their task without change." As is suggested in many apocalyptic works, God's laws of creation and covenant overlap perfectly, and thus the courses of the sun and stars accord exactly with the community's 364-day festival calendar. Similarly, God's perfection of way extends to his predestination of history, mysterious though this may be (see 4Q180).

The two spirits treatise juxtaposes this strong monarchianism with a modified dualism which many scholars believe to have filtered down from Iranian sources: "He has created humankind to govern the world, and has appointed for them two spirits" (1QS 3:18-19). While these spirits have their psychological influence, they are primordially angels: the Prince of Light and the Angel of Darkness (1QS 3:20-21).

In other texts the public and esoteric names of these two angels* appear: Michael, the archangel of Israel, who is also called Melchizedek (Melkîṣeḏeq, "king of righteousness," 11QMelch), and his counterpart Belial, whose secret name is Melchiresha (Melkîreša', "king of wickedness," 4Q280-82). What is unusual in Qumran angelology is the supremacy granted to these opposite "princes" in the world. The Melchizedek scroll identifies the good archangel as Elohim, the agent of eschatological judgment* (11QMelch 24-25). This overlap of language for God and his angel is reminiscent of the "angel of the Lord" texts of the OT (e.g., Judg 6:11-24) and may anticipate later rabbinic discussions of "two powers in heaven" (see Segal, 40-52).

4.2. God and Christ. Paul's evangelical version of monotheism is captured in his reformulation of the OT Shema: "for us there is but one God, the Father . . . and one Lord, Jesus Christ" (1 Cor 8:6). The Damascus Road encounter with the Lord* of glory* provided a primary occasion for the development of Paul's christology.* This initial revelation has much in common with Jewish throne, or merkabah, visions* (e.g., 3 Enoch), like the one that Paul alludes to in 2 Corinthians 12:2-4. According to L. W. Hurtado, apostolic christology may represent a "mutation" in Jewish monotheism, which was assisted by the "divine agency tradition" which included the role of principal angels like Michael (Hurtado, 71-92).

Paul accuses his Colossian* opponents of "worship of angels" (Col 2:18). While it is unlikely that the Colossian heretics were Essene or that they literally advocated worshiping angels, they manifest a confusion between the "many lords" of the cosmic realm and the one Lord who is a legitimate object of worship,* at whose name "every knee should bow" (Phil 2:10). In their very pretension to God's authority, the powers are a "dominion of darkness" (Col 1:13; 2 Cor 4:4) whom Christ triumphed* over by his cross (Col 2:15).

4.3. God's Spirit and the Human Spirit. In its remarkable fusion of determinism and dualism, the two spirits treatise goes on to identify two predestined communities or "lots" (gôrāl), the sons of light and sons of darkness, who walk according to the two angelic spirits and reap the appropriate eternal reward (see Light and Darkness). However, the cosmic battle is also waged within the individual soul according to each person's spiritual portion. In a fragmentary physiognomic text (4QCryptic), each individual's character is judged by the balance of nine parts between the "House of Light" and the "House of Darkness." In this way no doubt, they could explain the fundamental separation of the elect as well as the differentiated ranks within the sect.

Even the most pious Essene was aware of the moral chasm between flesh and spirit: the sectarian Hymns contain moving confessions of sin and pollution (e.g., 1QH 1:21-23). The Holy Spirit is closely identified with God's attribute of mercy* but also with God's truth, the gift of insight into the Law (1QH 12:11-23). The sect looks forward to the day of visitation when God by his Spirit will "refine for himself the human frame" by imparting to the elect the angelic wisdom of Eden (1QS 4:20-26). In the meantime the community members are confident that they can "establish the spirit of holiness according to all truth" for Israel (1QS 9:3).

Paul's doctrine of humanity and the Spirit is intimately connected with his new perspective on Christ (2 Cor 5:16). If Paul's argument in Romans 1:16—3:20 reflects his pre-Christian viewpoint, then we can see a pattern similar to Qumran doctrine: the human race is fallen into sin* and idolatry,* and God will punish sin with disease and death (Rom 2:9; see Life and Death). The delusion of the Law-observant Jew, even as Paul describes his former life (Phil 3:6), is in confusing the insight that the Law is spiritual with the "boast" that the flesh* can obey it (Rom 3:17-20; 7:14).

Paul's doctrine of the Spirit (see Holy Spirit) is based on the incarnation of Christ as "the last Adam,* a life-giving Spirit" (1 Cor 15:45; Rom 1:4). The Holy Spirit cannot now be separated from the unity of God in Christ (Eph 4:3-6). The "flesh," epitomized by circumcision,* now becomes the marker of life under the old dispensation, to which the believer must die (Col 2:11-12; Gal 5:24). This death to all the elements* of this age, including the Law, frees the believer to walk by the Spirit (Rom 8:1-2).

Paul uses the form of exhortation from the "two ways" tradition of Judaism, though now reinterpreted in terms of one's status in Christ. He can speak of two "minds" (Rom 8:5), or of the fruit* of the Spirit and the works of the flesh (Gal 5:19, 22). He also expresses the awareness that Christian moral choice involves wrestling with unseen principalities* and powers (Eph 6:12) and the temptation to revert to the former life of the flesh (Gal 3:3).

5. The New Covenant.

One of the striking parallels between the NT and the Dead Sea Scrolls is the Essene claim to be the community of the new covenant (CD 6:19; 19:33; 20:12). It is important to determine in what way the religion of Qumran is new and how this new pattern compares with Paul's Gospel.

5.1. Law Keeping at Qumran. The sectarians of Qumran frequently referred to themselves as "covenant-keepers" (1QS 5:2) because they, like Abraham, kept the commandments of God (CD 3:2). While the halakah at Qumran are more directly biblical than Pharisaic/rabbinic rulings, it does seem that the sect distinguished between biblical laws, certain hidden laws revealed for the present evil age, and ideal laws to be instituted in the messianic age. M. O. Wise has proposed that the Temple Scroll is the messianic Law mediated by the Teacher as the eschatological prophet. If true, this thesis shows that the new covenant was a version of covenantal nomism even stricter than that of the OT, with wider application of purity rules and absolute exclusion of foreigners from Israel. Nevertheless the covenant was understood to be essentially continuous from creation to the end time.

E. P. Sanders and others have rightly insisted that Jewish Law* keeping is not to be caricatured as "legalism." The sect referred to the "covenant of grace" (1QS 1:8), and the Hymns make clear that "righteousness is not of humankind . . . except by the spirit which God created for them to make perfect a way for the children of humankind." (1QH 4:30-31). At the same time "keeping the covenant" involves exact performance of legal precepts as interpreted by the priests. Thus the pesher on Habakkuk 2:4 interprets "faith" as faith in the Teacher of Righteousness (i.e., in his exegetical insights and legal rulings).

The Essenes were renowned for their attention to ritual purity, and this feature of their life has been confirmed by archeologists' discovery of a massive water system at Qumran. Forgiveness of sins follows from entry into the community, acceptance of its secret knowledge and perfect obedience to its rules (1QS 1:6-11). By its corporate obedience, the community hoped to "atone for the land" and hasten the messianic age (CD 4:6-12).

5.2. Paul and the Law. Whereas the new covenant at Qumran is seen as a fuller unveiling of the Mosaic Law, Paul can speak of the discontinuity between the covenants of promise to Abraham* and of Law given to Moses* (Gal 3:17-18; 4:24-31). Paul recognized by revelation that zeal for God's Law had led not to righteousness* but to a legal curse* borne by Christ on the cross* (Gal 3:13). Thus Paul evaluates the Law differently as a Christian from what he did as a Pharisee: the Law brings knowledge of sin to both Jew and Greek that all may receive mercy through faith in Christ (Rom 3:20-31). Interpreters differ sharply as to what ongoing and positive role for the Law Paul may have seen for Jewish and Gentile Christians (see Law).

While Paul would agree fully with the Qumran Teacher that righteousness belongs to God alone, he would differ radically on the means by which the elect appropriate that righteousness. For Paul the role of faith* is part of the new revelation of the gospel, even though some like Abraham and Habakkuk had received it by anticipation (Rom 1:16; 4:18). Hence his use of Habakkuk 2:4-5 is fundamentally different from the Qumran pesher. Paul interprets the prophet as not calling for renewed faithfulness to covenant Law but for faith in God's new cosmic act of redemption,* which will initiate a new relationship with God in the Holy Spirit (Rom 5:1-11). While the church has a ministry of reconciliation (see Peace, Reconciliation), it is not a matter of "perfection of way" but of persuading others to believe that Christ died for all (2 Cor 5:11-15).

6. The Messianic Age.

The dawn of the messianic age in Qumran thought is, above all, the act of God in the unfathomable mystery* of his will. The term messianic can be used in the narrow sense of the expected Davidic savior of Israel or in the broad sense of an eschatological age of God's intervention in creation and history. While not all Jews maintained equal hope for both a messiah and a new age, the Qumran community did, though the picture is not simple, given the long history of the sect and the subsequent redactions of its documents.

6.1. The Messiah. Some texts which may predate Qumran suggest the coming of a single Davidic messiah (1QDibHam; 4QPBless). The community rules seem to foresee the messianic age ushered in by a prophet (the Teacher of Righteousness) and the "messiahs of Aaron and Israel" (e.g., 1QS 9:10-11; 1QSa). This dual anointing is in continuity with post-exilic prophecy and the theocratic vision of the Chronicler (Zech 4:14; 6:12-13; Neh 8:8-9). While most scholars have seen the reference to a messiah of Aaron as special sectarian pleading, the emphasis in the use of "anointed" may be more a matter of perspective than polemics. The priestly author of the Temple Scroll, for instance, specifies the duties of the ideal king in the perfected theocracy without mention of the messiah of Aaron.

The idea of messiah as God's son does not go beyond the biblical sources (4QFlor). Neither is there any certain indication of a supernatural birth or vicarious death of the messiah (despite an ongoing debate over two obscure readings in 1QSa and 4Q285). The role of the Davidic figure in the final battle is unclear in the War Scroll; it is the archangel Michael whom God sends to deliver Israel, and his victory will have cosmic reverberations: "[God] will raise up the kingdom of Michael among the gods [i.e., angels] and the realm of Israel in the midst of all flesh" (1QM 17:7-8).

While Paul is aware of the political dimension of messiah as son of David, it is Jesus' resurrection which dominates his view of Christ* (Rom 1:3-4; 2 Cor 5:16; see Son of God). All his references to Davidic anointing have become metaphorical (Rom 1:5). Interestingly, Paul can portray Christ as an eschatological warrior in a supra-mundane battle (1 Thess 4:16; see Triumph).

6.2. Eschatology. The Qumran writers, like many other apocalypticists, were interpreters of the times and especially the end of the age. The Damascus Rule (CD 1) gives an authoritative history of the community which sees it as the remnant foreseen by the prophets during the 390-year exile (c. 200 BC). The penitential movement struggled for twenty years until God sent the Teacher of Righteousness. While the Teacher laid the foundations of the community, the sect continued to be tested by enemies down to the present.

The community saw itself living between the time of revelation and fulfillment. Several scholars have seen in Qumran eschatology a spiritualizing of sacral imagery, especially that of the Temple (1QH 6:12-20; 1QS 11:8-9; cf. 1 Cor 3:9). In their observance of the Law they sought to abide by Temple purity rules extended to messianic dimensions. The messianic age, as imagined in the Temple Scroll and Messianic Rule, would involve restoration of the Law as interpreted at Qumran and a new Temple built along Ezekielian lines. Their vivid sense of standing in rank with the angels (1QH 3:22) may explain Josephus's comment that the Essenes believed in immortality of the soul (Josephus J.W. 2.8, 11 §§154-58). Hippolytus reports that the Essenes believed in resurrection, and by the "glory of Adam" they may envision a millennial life span (1QS 4:23; CD 7:6).

Paul's summary of salvation history is less speculative and yet depicts a more dramatic crisis of the ages: "When the time had fully come, God sent forth his Son" (Gal 4:4-5). The end time has already come (2 Cor 5:17); the church* as Christ's body* has taken over the Temple and festival imagery of Israel (1 Cor 3:9-15; 5:7-8; see Sacrifice), even though Paul sees a continuing identity for Israel* and its heritage (Rom 9:4-5).

Their sense of new access to God through Christ led some early Christians to "realize" the heavenly* realm by means of angelic glossolalia (1 Cor 13:1; Col 3:16; see Tongues) and liken their love feasts* to heavenly manna (1 Cor 10:2). Sexual* abstinence was now considered a spiritual gift* (1 Cor 7:7) and perhaps led to the thought that the old age had completely passed away, replaced by the resurrection* life. In Paul's tortuous argument exhorting women to wear an "authority"* in worship "because of the angels" (1 Cor 11:10), he may be reminding them that the angelic "rulers of this age" are still responsible for decent and orderly conduct between the sexes.

Finally, Paul reaffirms the resurrection of Jesus as the decisive event of history but adds that there is more history to come under his reign until he subjects himself to the Father and God is all in all (1 Cor 15:28; see Eschatology; Kingdom).

See also APOCALYPTICISM; ESCHATOLOGY; JEW, PAUL THE; LAW; OLD TESTAMENT IN PAUL; RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. Dimant, "Qumran Sectarian Literature," in Jewish Writings of the Second Temple Period: Apocrypha, Pseuedepigrapha, Qumran Sectarian Writings, Philo, Josephus, ed. M. E. Stone (CRINT 2.2; Assen: Van Gorcum) 483-550; J. A. Fitzmyer, The Dead Sea Scrolls: Major Publications and Tools for Study (rev. ed.; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1990); L. W. Hurtado, One God, One Lord (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); J. M. Murphy-O'Connor and J. H. Charlesworth, Paul and the Dead Sea Scrolls (New York: Crossroad, 1990 [1968]); C. A. Newsom, Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice: A Critical Edition (HSS 27; Atlanta: Scholars, 1985); H. Ringgren, The Faith of Qumran: Theology of the Dead Sea Scrolls (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1963); E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism: A Comparison of Patterns of Religion (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977); L. H. Schiffman, "The Significance of the Scrolls," BibRev (Oct. 1990) 19-27; A. F. Segal, Paul the Convert: The Apostolate and Apostasy of Saul the Pharisee (New Haven: Yale University, 1990); G. Vermes, The Dead Sea Scrolls in English (3d ed.; Sheffield: JSOT, 1987); M. O. Wise, A Critical Study of the Temple Scroll from Qumran Cave 11 (SAOC 49; Chicago: University of Chicago, 1990); idem, "Dead Sea Scrolls," DJG 137-46.

S. F. Noll

R

RABBINIC BACKGROUND. See JEW, PAUL THE.

READER-RESPONSE CRITICISM. See HERMENEUTICS/INTERPRETING PAUL.

RECONCILIATION. See CENTER OF PAUL'S THEOLOGY; PEACE, RECONCILIATION.

REDEMPTION

Paul uses the concept of redemption primarily to speak of the saving significance of the death* of Christ.* It is one of several Pauline metaphors for the work of Christ and is firmly rooted in the story of God's covenant relationship with Israel.*

1. Background
2. Redemption and the Cross
3. The Life of the Redeemed
4. Redemption and the Future

1. Background.

The fundamental idea of redemption in antiquity took its origin in such practices as when in warfare the victor in a battle would take prisoners and let it be known that he was ready to release them on payment of a price. The process was called redemption and the price paid was the ransom.

The Greco-Roman background for redemption was argued by A. Deissmann, who pointed out that slaves could be liberated by a procedure that entailed the fictitious transaction of paying or depositing money in the sanctuary of a god, notably at Apollos' shrine at Delphi. By this transaction, Deissmann argued, they became "slaves of Apollo" (see Deissmann, 319-30). But Deissmann's interpretation of the contracts of manumission inscribed on the wall at Delphi has been rejected by recent scholarship, which argues that the priests (and thereby the god Apollo) functioned as no more than intermediaries and public guarantors of the contracts of manumission (see Bartchy, 121-25).

The OT provides three special areas of interest, all relevant to Paul's thinking regarding redemption. First, the most important background is seen in the OT imagery of the Exodus, God's redemption of the people Israel from Egyptian servitude to become the community of God's covenant. One text (Ex 8:23 NRSV marg.) neatly sums up the basic Hebrew thought of this episode. Yahweh says "I will set redemption" between Israel and the Egyptians, thus claiming Israel as God's own possession as they are set free from tyranny and oppression, and are bound to God's covenant obligation and treaty (Ex 12—24). In the Exodus story God's strength and delivering activity in history are brought to the fore as the means of redemption (cf. Deut 7:8; 9:26; Ps 74:2; 77:15).

Second, because Israel was God's firstborn* (Ex 4:22) whom he had redeemed from helpless bondage, Israel in its life before God was also to redeem people and property from various situations from which they could not otherwise break free (see Adoption, Sonship). On occasion it could take the form of Israelites redeeming impoverished kinfolk who had sold themselves into slavery (Lev 25:47-49) or of redeeming a family's inheritance of land that had been sold (Lev 25:25-26). On the other hand, if a man owned an ox known to be dangerous and he let it escape and it killed someone, the ox and its owner must be put to death. But this was not willful murder, and provision was made for redemption: the man could pay a ransom and go free (Ex 21:29-30).

But as a regular practice, the firstborn redemptive status of Israel before Yahweh was to be reflected in Israel's "redeeming" and consecrating the firstborn males "of every womb," whether livestock or human, for Yahweh (Ex 13:12-16). Further, the Levites served as consecrated and "redeemed" representatives for the firstborn nation as they stood in for Israel's firstborn males (with the number of firstborn Israelites that exceeded the number of Levites being "redeemed" at the price of five shekels per person, Num 3:11-51).

Third, the ancient practice of prisoners in captivity being set free by payment of a ransom or an act of clemency on the part of the ruling authority is notably seen in the exiles being restored by Cyrus' decree (Ezra 1). Isaiah 45:1-25 speaks of a return celebration in which Cyrus is the agent who releases the Babylonian exiles, but the redeemer is God (Is 52:3). This release from Exile is spoken of as a new Exodus, an event likened to God's redemption of his people through the first Exodus from Egypt (e.g., Is 43:1-4, 14).

2. Redemption and the Cross.

Paul assumes the creation story which sees people as originally in right relationship to God.* But the coming of sin made them slaves to sin* (Rom 6:6) and liable to the sentence of death (Rom 6:23). One way of viewing what was done at the cross of Christ was to see it as the paying of a price (1 Cor 6:20; 7:23), specifically a ransom (1 Tim 2:6) that frees people from slavery* or the death sentence (see Life and Death). Releasing people from bondage with the payment of a price is just the sort of thing that the ancient world saw as redemption. Paul sees salvation* as a process of redemption.

Paul does not use the customary word for ransom (lytron), but he does employ a stronger term to denote the price (antilytron, 1 Tim 2:6). There is perhaps no great difference in meaning, but the compound strengthens the idea of substitution. Christ took the place of humans, undergoing death to set them free. We should perhaps notice that neither here nor anywhere else in the NT is there mention made of any recipient of the ransom price. To try and identify the one to whom the ransom was paid is to press the words beyond what they are meant to convey. The term indicates that redemption was costly, not that there was someone such as Satan* or demons* demanding that a price be paid.

The apostle makes a good deal of use of the unusual word apolytrōsis. This word is used ten times in the NT (seven times in Paul) and it is cited about the same number of times in all the rest of Greek literature. It may be that by the choice of this unusual word the Christian writers were hinting that the redemption of which they wrote was not the ordinary redemption with which everyone was familiar, but a very special redemption. Paul indicates something of this when he speaks of Christ "in whom we have redemption through his blood" (Eph 1:7, where he has "the forgiveness* of trespasses" in apposition; the identical expression is found in Col 1:14, except that most MSS omit "through his blood"). "His blood" means the death of Jesus, and again we have the thought that a high price was paid to set believers free from the consequences of their sins.

Paul links redemption with justification* when he speaks of "being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus" (Rom 3:24). The expressions are not to be identified; they are two ways of looking at the salvation Christ effected. Christ brought about acquittal (justification); he also set believers free (redemption).

In writing to the Galatians Paul twice links redemption with freedom from the Law.* In a striking statement he says that Christ "redeemed us from the curse of the Law, having become a curse for us," and he goes on to quote Deuteronomy 21:23, "cursed is everyone who hangs on a tree" (Gal 3:13). Paul has already said that everyone who does not continue in all that is written in the Law is accursed (Gal 3:10; so Deut 27:26; cf. 28:58). He is now saying that sinners stand under a curse* because they have broken the Law of God, but that Christ redeemed them, paid the price for setting them free (but see Law; Restoration of Israel).

The other passage is that in which Paul says that God sent his Son to be "born under Law in order that he might redeem them that are under Law" (Gal 4:4-5). We should notice that God initiated the process, and that the purpose of Jesus' coming was the redemption of those "under Law." In this place the reference will not be to Jews only, but to all those who have failed to keep God's Law and who thus are under a curse. Redemption means paying the price to release sinners. This truth is also behind the words to Titus, that Jesus "gave himself for us in order that he might redeem us from every iniquity" (Tit 2:14).

3. The Life of the Redeemed.

Paul reminds the Corinthians that they had been "bought with a price"; therefore, he says: "glorify God in your body" (1 Cor 6:20). We are not to think of redemption as some remote, ethereal process. Redemption has effects in everyday experience and living. This comes out again with another reference to being bought at a price, followed this time with "Do not be slaves of human masters" (1 Cor 7:23). The redeemed belong to God; they should not seek to have themselves enslaved to human opinions.

Twice Paul speaks of "redeeming the time" (Eph 5:16; Col 4:5). While in these cases the "redemption" is different from that wrought by Christ, it points to the conduct Paul sees as appropriate in the redeemed. They are to make the most of the time given them, the opportunities of service they encounter day by day. So also redemption is to result in "the praise of his glory*" (Eph 1:14).

4. Redemption and the Future.

In this life believers do not experience the fullness of redemption. Paul speaks of those who have received the Spirit as awaiting "sonship, the redemption of our body" (Rom 8:23; see Adoption, Sonship). Life's choices here and now will not be overlooked in the resurrection at the end of the age. Redemption extends to that era. This will be in mind also in Paul's reference to being "sealed [by the Holy Spirit*] unto the day of redemption" (Eph 4:30).

See also CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE; DEATH OF CHRIST; EXPIATION, PROPITIATION, MERCY SEAT; FORGIVENESS; JUSTIFICATION; PEACE, RECONCILIATION; SACRIFICE, OFFERING; SALVATION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. G. Aulén, Christus Victor (London: SPCK, 1931); S. S. Bartchy, MALLON CHRESAI (SBLDS 11; Missoula, MT: Scholars, 1973); C. Brown et al., "Redemption," NIDNTT 3.189-223; F. Büchsel, "ἀντίλυτρον κτλ," TDNT IV.351-56; A. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East (New York: Harper, 1927) 319-30; J. G. Gibbs, Creation and Redemption: A Study in Pauline Theology (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1971); K. Grayston, Dying, We Live: A New Enquiry into the Death of Christ in the New Testament (New York: Oxford University Press, 1990); D. Hill, Greek Words and Hebrew Meanings: Studies in the Semantics of Soteriological Terms (SNTSMS 5; Cambridge: University Press, 1967); K. Kertelge, "ἀπολύτρωσις," EDNT 1.138-40; idem, "λύτρον," EDNT 2.364-66; S. Lyonnet and L. Sabourin, ed., Sin, Redemption and Sacrifice (AnBib 48; Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1970); I. H. Marshall "The Development of the Concept of Redemption in the New Testament," in Reconcilation and Hope, ed. R. J. Banks (Exeter: Paternoster, 1974) 153-69 (= Jesus the Savior: Studies in New Testament Theology [Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1990] 239-57); L. Morris, The Apostolic Preaching of the Cross (3d ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1965) 11-64; idem, The Atonement (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1983) 106-31; H. W. Robinson, Redemption and Revelation (London: Nisbet, 1942).

L. Morris

RELIGIONS, GRECO-ROMAN

The adjective Greco-Roman indicates that the cults discussed in this article are those which were practiced in the ancient Mediterranean world during the Hellenistic* and Roman periods (i.e., from the late fourth century B.C. through the fifth century A.D.). These were periods of complex political and cultural change and syncretism in which first the Greeks and then the Romans provided the dominant political and cultural frameworks for life in the ancient Mediterranean world. Thus Greco-Roman religions include not only those public and private cults which had developed out of archaic and classical Greek and Roman religious practices, but also the many native cults and mystery religions which had arisen on ancient Near Eastern soil and which had subsequently spread to the major urban areas of the Mediterranean world, including early Judaism and early Christianity.

1. Political and Cultural Setting
2. Greek Religion
3. Roman Religion
4. Hellenistic Religions
5. Paul and Greco-Roman Religion

1. Political and Cultural Setting.

The political and cultural situation of the Mediterranean world changed radically following the victorious campaign which Alexander the Great, king of Macedonia, waged against the massive Persian empire beginning in 334 B.C. when Alexander invaded Anatolia with a force of 37,000. His father, Philip II, had earlier defeated the Greeks at the battle of Chaeronea in 338 B.C., and upon his death in 336 he was succeeded by his son Alexander III. Alexander was successful at the battle of Granicus in Anatolia in 334 B.C., where he first clashed with the Persian army under Darius and won decisively; the final blow was delivered at the battle of Gaugamela near the Ganges river in 331 B.C. Following the premature death of Alexander in 323 B.C., his empire crumbled.

The diadochoi, or Greek "successors," of Alexander fought among themselves in the attempt to gain control of ever larger parts of the vast region which Alexander had conquered. The more important among these successors were able to found dynastic kingdoms in which a Greco-Macedonian elite ruled over extensive native populations until the Roman conquest of the eastern Mediterranean. Ptolemy founded the Ptolemaic dynasty, which ruled Egypt (and Palestine until 201 B.C.); Seleucus founded the Seleucid dynasty, which ruled the territories from Syria to India; Antigonus founded the Antigonid dynasty, which ruled Macedonia, shorn of its empire; and Lysimachus and his successors ruled Armenia and Thrace.

After Rome had taken control of most of Italy shortly after the beginning of the third century B.C., she embarked on a series of wars with Punic Carthage in North Africa for control of the western Mediterranean. Following Roman victories in the First Punic War (264-241 B.C.) and the Second Punic War (220-201 B.C.), Rome turned to the eastern Mediterranean, initially to punish Philip of Macedonia for the military assistance he had provided to Hannibal, the Carthaginian general. Rome fought a series of three Macedonian wars (214-205, 200-196 and 148-146 B.C.). After the conclusion of the Third Macedonian War in 146 B.C.

(which included the complete destruction of Hellenistic Corinth in 146 B.C.), Rome turned Macedonia and Greece into Roman provinces. At the same time Rome permanently eliminated the economic competition afforded her by Carthage by completely destroying this Punic North African city in 146 B.C.

After the decisive Roman victories over Macedonia, Greece and Carthage in 146 B.C., Rome slowly began annexing the Hellenistic kingdoms which had achieved independence following the crumbling of Alexander's Greco-Macedonian empire. The last Hellenistic kingdom to be defeated was Ptolemaic Egypt; Octavian, the Roman general who was later to become the first Roman emperor and assume the titular name Augustus (meaning "venerable"), defeated Mark Antony and Cleopatra VII (the last Ptolemaic dynast) at the Battle of Actium in 31 B.C. At this point the Romans began to refer to the Mediterranean as mare nostrum ("our sea").

Rome had undergone profound changes since the city was founded c. 753 B.C. (the date preferred by the Roman antiquarian Varro, 116-27 B.C.). The period of the monarchy lasted from 753 to 509 B.C., when Tarquinius Superbus, the last of seven kings, was overthrown. The monarchy was succeeded by the Republic which lasted from 509 until it collapsed during the political and military chaos of 133-31 B.C. Following the Battle of Actium in 31 B.C., Octavian took firm control of political and military affairs in Rome. In 27 B.C. he became the first of a series of Roman emperors to rule until the collapse of the western empire in A.D. 476, when the last Roman emperor Romulus Augustulus was deposed.

2. Greek Religion.

The Greek world consisted of hundreds of poleis, or "city-states," on the Greek peninsula and islands, on the west coast of Asia Minor, Sicily and in Magna Graecia in Italy. Each polis was fiercely independent. Each had its own distinctive internal political and religious structure. Originating c. 750 B.C., perhaps linked to the transition from monarchy to aristocracy throughout much of the Greek world, the polis reached a fully developed form by the late sixth century, and typically included such features as an acropolis, walls, a market, temples, a theater and a gymnasium (Pausanias 10.4.1). There were, in addition, a number of interstate religious institutions and sanctuaries which did not function primarily for the benefit of a particular polis. These institutions provided the hundreds of Greek communities, separated both by distance and topography, with a variety of cult centers which, along with the use of a common language (in many dialects), contributed to the development of Hellenic national consciousness (Herodotus 8.144). The religious and cultural institutions accessible to all Greeks included the panhellenic games held at intervals of from two to four years (the Olympian games, the most famous, were held every four years beginning in 776 B.C.), the oracle of Apollo at Delphi, the healing cult of Asclepius at Epidauros and the Eleusinian mysteries at Eleusis in Attica. Another panhellenic religious development was the institution of the civic cult of the Twelve Gods instituted in a number of Greek cities beginning in the late sixth century B.C. In general, Greek religion was not organized around a set of coherent doctrines, but rather centered in the observance of traditional rituals such as processions, prayers, libations, sacrifice and feasting (see Worship).

2.1. The Gods. The Greek notion of deity contrasts sharply with traditional Jewish and Christian conceptions. For the Greeks the gods were not transcendent and passive, but rather immanent and active. They did not create the cosmos (which was thought to be eternal), but came into being after the cosmos. Consequently gods such as the sun, moon and stars were considered "eternals," while gods such as Zeus, Hera and Poseidon were considered "immortals." Though the Greek gods were thought to be more powerful than humans, both were subject to moira ("fate"). Further, gods were sustained by ambrosia and nectar, usually inaccessible to mortals, and "ichor" rather than blood flowed in their veins. Though considered very powerful and very wise, they were neither omnipotent nor omniscient. Human beings were considered mortal, while the Greek gods were considered immortal; in archaic and classical Greek religion, immortality was not a possibility for mortals. The scores of deities worshiped by various Greek cities were placed into a comprehensive genealogical relationship by Hesiod in his Theogony. In the Iliad and Odyssey, epic poems probably created by a series of bards collectively designated "Homer," a synthetic presentation of the many originally local divinities was depicted as a pantheon of Olympian gods (though chthonic deities such as Demeter and Dionysus are not mentioned). The cult of Twelve Gods, however, first appears in the late sixth century; literary and archeological evidence indicates that an Altar to the Twelve Gods was dedicated c. 520 B.C. (Herodotus 6.108; Thucydides 6.54.6; Plutarch Niceas 13.2). However, this group of Twelve, while they were probably major Attic deities, was not identical with the later pantheon of twelve Olympians (which typically included Zeus, Hera, Poseidon, Hades, Apollo, Artemis, Hephaestus, Athena, Ares, Aphrodite, Hermes, Hestia). The earth deities Demeter and Dionysus (absent from Homer) are sometimes substituted for Hades and Hestia. The earliest complete list of the Twelve Olympians comes from 217 B.C. in connection with the list of gods honored at the lectisternium (a sacred banquet where the gods were made guests at a meal; Livy 22.10.9-10; Quintus Ennius Annales 7.240-41).

The Greeks recognized three kinds of deities: Olympian gods, chthonic ("earth") gods and heroes. Some of the Olympian gods were of Indo-European origin and were brought with the Greeks when they migrated into the Greek peninsula c. 2000 B.C. The most important Greek deity, for example, was Zeus (the genitive form is Dios, a cognate of the old Sanskrit term dyaus, "bright sky"), who corresponds to the central Roman god Jupiter (derived from Dius + pater, i.e., "Zeus father"). Other Olympians, such as Athena, Apollo, Artemis and Poseidon, were indigenous to the Greek peninsula or western Anatolia. Most of the chthonic gods, including Demeter and Dionysus, appear to have been deities indigenous to the Greek world and associated with the earth, crops and the underworld. The heroes were thought originally to have been mortals (usually with one divine parent) who were deified upon death and received cultic honors at the supposed site of their tomb. The major exception to this generalization is Heracles, a mythological figure who was worshiped as a god in some places, but as a hero in others, even though he had no known tomb (Herodotus 2.43-45; Apollodorus 2.7.7). Some heroes appear to have originally been considered gods who subsequently "faded" to heroic status (e.g., Asclepios, Helen), some are mythical (e.g., Perseus, Achilles, Orestes, Oedipus, Theseus; on the last two see Sophocles Oedipus at Colonus 1590-1666; Plutarch Theseus 35-36), while yet others are historical (the Spartan heroes Brasidas and Lysander).

In general the Greeks were extremely open to new deities and cults, and often identified their own deities with some of the major foreign deities which they encountered. During the long contact that the Greeks had with Egypt, they developed an interpretatio Graeca, "Greek interpretation," of Egyptian religion in which they regarded various native Egyptian deities as identical with traditional Greek deities. For example, Demeter was thought to be the Greek equivalent of Isis, Athena of Thoeris, Zeus of Ammon and Hermes of Thoth. The pantheon of Olympian gods was the creation of the Homeric poet(s), who produced a synthetic assembly of divinities unknown before the seventh century B.C.

2.2. Prayer. From Homer on, Greek prayer involved formulas that were intended to ensure that the god addressed would not be offended by an incorrect invocation. The hymn of Zeus in the Agamemnon of Aeschylus is introduced in this manner: "Zeus, whoever he is, if this name pleases him in invocation." Here the liturgical formula hostis pot' estin, "whoever he is" occurs (lines 160-61). An earlier example of this formula occurs in Odyssey 5.445: "Hear, Lord, whoever you are." In Plato Cratylus 400d-e, a distinction is made between the names which the gods use of themselves, which are unknown to humans, and the customary names which humans use in prayers since the true names of the gods are unknown. Prayers were uttered aloud in connection with great public sacrifices, at the beginning of public assemblies (Aristophanes Thes. 295-305) and before battle (Aeschylus Sept. c. Theb. 252-60; Thucydides Hist. 6.32).

2.3. Sacrifice. The primary type of sacrifice practiced in Greek religious rituals was the slaughter of approved types of domestic animals, part of which was burned on an altar and part of which was consumed by those who offered the sacrifice. Such sacrifices could be part of domestic or public religious ritual. Certain animals were thought to be required of particular divinities. Cows were sacrificed to Athena, while pigs were sacrificed to Demeter. In the Greek protocol of sacrifice a distinction was made between sacrifices made to Olympian and to chthonic (earth) deities. Sacrifices to Olympians were made on a raised altar (bomos) during the day; the sacrificial animals were light colored; their throats were slit upward so that the blood would spurt toward the sky before running down on the altar. Sacrifices to chthonic deities, on the other hand, were made on a low altar (eschara) during the evening; the sacrificial animals were dark colored; their throats were slit downward so that the blood would spurt down upon the low altar or pit. The central event of many of the great civic religious festivals, such as the Hyacinthia at Sparta or the Panathenaia at Athens, was a great procession in which the priests and civic officials led the sacrificial victims to the altar, followed by the citizens. After the ritual slaughter, parts of the victims were burned on the altar, while the edible portions were divided up equally among the populace. These portions of meat were sometimes cooked and eaten on the spot or were taken to private homes for cooking and eating.

2.4. Festivals. In the polis of Athens, about which most is known, approximately 120 days of the calendar were devoted to religious festivals, and the number may have been even greater. Most of these festivals originated as rural, agricultural celebrations. The single festival found more frequently than any other throughout the Greek world was the Thesmophoria, celebrated in honor of Demeter, an indigenous Aegean earth goddess.

2.5. Temples. The Greek temple, a free-standing architectural form, originated in the early eighth century B.C., perhaps in conjunction with the rise of the polis. Most temples were rectangular (the Telesterion of Demeter at Eleusis was square), and in a central room, called the cella, was located a cult-statue of the divinity to whom the temple was dedicated, usually larger than life-size. The temple functioned primarily as a house for the god. Inside the temple various types of offerings and dedications to the deity were stored, and incense was burned in honor of the god. Altars where animals were sacrificed were always located in the open air, usually in front of the temple. Worshipers gathered outside the temple for festivals and sacrifices, never inside.

2.6. Divination. Oracles and divination played an important role in the lives of the Greeks from the archaic period until the triumph of Christianity in the fourth century A.D. Divination is the art or science of interpreting symbolic messages from the gods; often these messages are of an unpredictable or even trivial nature. Some of the more typical forms of divination included cleromancy (casting lots), ornithomancy (observing the flight of birds), hieromancy (observing the behavior of sacrificial animals and the condition of their internal organs before and after sacrifice), cledonomancy (interpreting random omens or sounds) and oneiromancy (dream interpretation). The general Greek term for the diviner was mantis, a word which is translated "diviner," soothsayer," "seer" and "prophet." Greeks and Romans often distinguished between "technical divination" (the interpretation of signs, sacrifices, dreams, omens and prodigies) and "natural divination" (the direct inspiration of the mantis through trance, ecstasy or vision), though in practice there was no rigid distinction between these two types of divine revelation.

The term "oracle" could refer both to the verbal response of a god to a query as well as to the sacred place where the god was consulted. Local oracles were of several types: lot oracles, incubation oracles and inspired oracles. One of the most famous incubation oracles of antiquity was the sanctuary of Asclepius at Epidauros. There healing was believed to be accomplished through the nocturnal appearance of the god to the patient, who was often given instructions about what he or she must do to be cured. The most famous inspired oracle of ancient Greece, which was combined with a lot oracle, was the panhellenic oracle of Apollo at Delphi. There on the seventh day of each month, inquirers could pose questions to the Pythia, a priestess believed to be the spokesperson for Apollo when seated on Apollo's throne-tripod. The male priests who assisted the Pythia would convey her responses, often in verse, in oral or written form to the inquirer. Apollo gave advice on such matters of state concern as the founding of colonies, the waging of war and issues of sacrificial ritual and protocol, and on such private matters as business trips, occupations, marriages and the whereabouts of stolen property. Thousands of such oracles have survived, most of them in literary sources, though most of them are not authentic. Since oracles were often phrased enigmatically, oracle interpreters (chresmologoi) would explain their meaning for a fee.

2.7. Domestic Cults. The ancient Greek extended family (the oikos, or household) was the context for a form of cult which focused on the hearth and the tomb. The hearth was the place where meals were cooked over a fire that was kept burning for an entire year. It was ritually extinguished each year only to be rekindled again the same day for the next year. Prayers were said before the hearth at the beginning and end of each day, and libations (drink offerings usually consisting of a mixture of wine and water) were poured out on the ground or on the hearth, which functioned as a domestic altar (Hesiod Op. 722-24). The male head of the household functioned as a priest, and such offerings were often made to deceased ancestors, who had been made divine upon death. Offerings to these ancestors were also made at the site of their tombs, located on land owned by the family.

3. Roman Religion.

Though Rome was a single city-state which became the political seat and administrative center of an enormous empire which surrounded the Mediterranean Sea and extended north and northeast into Europe, native Roman religious cults and cultic practices were never adopted in any significant way by those who were not Roman citizens. Even when citizenship was extended to all adult male inhabitants of the Roman empire by the emperor Caracalla in A.D. 212, the practice of the traditional Roman forms of public worship (religious rituals performed on behalf of the state by members of the college of priests and the magistrates, and rituals celebrated by all citizens) and private worship (the sacra domestica, "domestic worship," practiced by families and clans) remained almost exclusively the concern of those who were ethnically Roman. The following description of the public and private aspects of Roman religion focuses on the stage of development which had been reached by the reign of Augustus (27 B.C.-A.D. 14).

3.1. Central Features. One of the central features of Roman religion throughout its long history was an emphasis on the pax deorum ("peace with the gods"), that is, the conviction that the maintenance of a harmonious relationship with the gods was the basis for temporal prosperity and success. All public disasters were assumed to have been caused by a breach in the relationship between the Roman people and the gods and the reasons for these breaches must be diagnosed through divination and rectified by specific cultic measures. The pax deorum was maintained by following a number of measures: (1) deities must be placated by sacrifice and prayer, (2) all vows and oaths must be fulfilled exactly, (3) the city must be preserved from hostile influences by the ritual of lustratio and (4) strict attention must be paid to all outward signs of the will of the gods. By the imperial period, the most important aspect of the pax deorum was the support and protection of the emperor by the gods.

3.2. Roman Deities. The ancient Romans recognized three categories of divine beings. The first type was composed of the autonomous divinities, often arranged in triads (following the Etruscan model), such as Jupiter, Mars and Quirinus, or Jupiter, Juno and Minerva. These deities had a relatively fixed character and were individually honored but (unlike Greek divinities), though they could be called "Father" and "Mother," they did not have marital relationships or offspring. Consequently, the Romans had no native mythology recounting the adventures of the gods (Dionysius of Halicarnassus Ant. Rom. 2.19-20), though they later absorbed Greek myths about the gods, and their deities could never be arranged genealogically. Roman mythology took the form of historical accounts with a pervasive legendary component (e.g., Virgil's account of the origins of Rome in the Aeneid). The most important Roman god, Jupiter Optimus Maximus ("Jupiter Best and Greatest") had two partners (not wives), Juno and Minerva. Archaic Roman religion grouped Jupiter with Mars and Quirinus. There is evidence attributed to Quintus Ennius (early second century B.C.) for the introduction of the Greek grouping of Twelve Gods in Rome, called di consentes ("united gods"), under the names Juno (= Hera), Vesta (= Hestia), Minerva (= Athena), Ceres (= Demeter), Diana (= Artemis), Venus (= Aphrodite), Mars (= Ares), Mercury (= Hermes), Jupiter (= Zeus), Neptune (= Poseidon), Vulcan (= Hephaestus) and Apollo (Ennius Annales 7.240-41). During the terrifying days of Hannibal's invasion of Italy in 217 B.C. during the Second Punic War, the Greek municipal cult of the Twelve Gods was incorporated into the lectisternium of the Twelve Gods in Rome (previous lectisternia honored only six gods). A lectisternium was a "sacred banquet," held only at times of political or social crisis, at which the images of the Twelve Gods were placed in pairs on each of six couches (Livy 22.10.9-10); lectisternia were celebrated until at least A.D. 166 (see Scriptores Historiae Augustae, Marcus Antoninus, 13.1-2).

The second type of Roman divinity was the countless numbers of secret beings which were jealous of their anonymity and which were constantly helping or hindering the Roman people in their various undertakings, though the Romans were at a disadvantage because they were unable to name them and so control them through the appropriate ritual.

The third category of divinities were the so-called indigitimenta, teams of minor deities (existing in extensive lists) each with a minor function in assisting or hindering in each activity or fraction of various human activities, particularly those characteristic of rural areas and those involving private life (Tertullian Nat. 11; De An. 37-39; Augustine Civ. D. 4.11).

3.3. Priests. There were two different terms for "priest" in Roman religion, pontifex (a member of a college of priests holding supreme authority in public religious matters in Rome, and later a term for an inferior grade of priest) and flamen (a priest charged with carrying out the sacrificial ritual of a particular deity, and in the imperial period a priest of a deceased or living Roman emperor). The offices of priest and magistrate were not mutually exclusive, so that all priesthoods, with two exceptions (the rex sacrorum, "king of sacrifices," and the flamen Dialis, "priest of Jupiter"), were part-time positions which could be held for life (with the exception of the six Vestal virgins, who held office for thirty years). These customs ensured that no priestly class ever developed in Rome, just as none had developed in Greece.

During the late period of the Republic and the Empire there were four main colleges of priests that developed: (1) the collegium pontificum, or "college of priests," consisted eventually of sixteen flamines, including three flamines maiores, "major priests," the flamen Dialis, "priest of Jupiter" (Aulus Gellius Noc. Att. 10.15), the flamen Martialis, "priest of Mars," and the flamen Quirinalis, "priest of Quirinus" (reflecting the archaic triad of Jupiter, Mars and Quirinus), together with twelve flamines minores, minor priests. Other members of this college included the rex sacrorum, "king of sacrifices" (a survival of one function of the Roman kings) and six virgines vestales. This college was under the jurisdiction of the pontifex maximus, "high priest" (Cicero Phil. 11.18), an office regularly held by the emperor during the imperial period. (2) the college of sixteen augures, (3) quindecemviri sacris faciendis, a college of fifteen men "for conducting sacrifices," and (4) the septemviri epulones, a college of seven, and later ten "supervisors of public feasts"). Only the emperor could belong to all of the priestly colleges simultaneously (Augustus Res Gestae 7.3).

Public divination, the ius divinum, was an important part of Roman civic religion, for divination was the primary means for diagnosing the causes which were thought to have interrupted "peace with the gods" and for interpreting prodigies, signs sent by the gods. There were three types of public diviners whose chief task was to proclaim divine approval or displeasure by interpreting various types of symbolic messages sent by the gods: the augures, who interpreted the flight of birds and the meaning of thunder and lightning (Cicero De Leg. 2.30), haruspices, who interpreted the entrails of sacrificial animals, and the quindecimviri, who kept and interpreted the Sibylline books.

3.4. Prayer. The invocation of a god or gods by name is a universal feature of prayer. When Romans prayed or sacrificed, they always did so with their heads covered. In the polytheistic system of Roman religion, it was necessary to discover which deity one wanted to influence through invoking his or her name (Varro in Augustine City of God 4.22; Horace Odes 1.2.25-26). The Romans used a kind of "to whom it may concern" prayer formula so that their prayers would be properly addressed. This formula is usually phrased sive deus sive dea, or si deus si dea, "whether a god or goddess" (Livy 7.26.4; Cicero Rab. Perd. 5; Aulus Gellius Noc. Att. 2.28.3) or sive quo alio nomine te appellari volueris, "or whatever name you want to be called" (Virgil Aeneid 2.351; 4.576; Catullus 34.21-22). A regular part of the structure of ancient prayer was the reasons given why a deity should respond favorably to the request. Two common reasons were: (1) because the god had done so in the past, and (2) because it was within his competence to do so now. In Roman religious ritual, Janus was the first deity invoked in prayers and invocations (followed by Jupiter, Mars and Quirinus), while Vesta was the last.

3.5. Sacrifice and Temples. Sacrifice was one of the most important aspects of Roman religion, both public and private. One invariable rule was that male animals were offered to male deities and female animals to female deities. It was considered a good sign if animals went willingly to their slaughter. According to the Roman antiquarian Varro, the early Romans worshipped the gods without statues or temples for 170 years (Augustine Civ. D. 4.31), when the Etruscan king Tarquinius Priscus vowed to erect a temple to Jupiter on the capitol (Livy 1.38.7). Roman temples were usually rectangular buildings constructed on a raised platform and had four main features: (1) the inner room, or cella, contained the statue of the god to whom the temple was dedicated, together with an altar for the burning of incense; (2) a room or rooms behind the cella for the preservation of treasures; (3) an anteroom located in front of the cella, surrounded by (4) a roofed colonnade, oblong in Italian temples, but square in Romano-Celtic temples. A stone altar was usually located in front of the temple, where animal sacrifices were made. With the sacrifice of smaller animals, such as goats or lambs, the priest and the sacrificers could eat the edible portions of the sacrifice. The sacrifice of larger animals, such as oxen, provided a feast for a larger number of people, and often the excess meat was sold to the public in the market.

3.6. The Imperial Cult. The antecedents of the Roman imperial cult are to be found in the civic cults of the Hellenistic kings (see 4.2 below). The Hellenistic period is characterized in part by a tendency to blur the traditional Greek distinction between mortal and immortal. From the end of the third century B.C. on, there were many cults of Roman magistrates instituted by the Greek cities they controlled. The deified Julius Caesar and the deified Augustus, who were consecrated by official acts of the Roman senate, became part of the official pantheon of the Roman people. The imperial cult was of far greater importance in the provinces than in Rome itself. In Roman Asia in particular, the imperial cult provided a presence for an absent emperor. In the traditional form of the imperial cult, the emperor was worshiped as a god only after his death and apotheosis. In the imperial cults in Anatolia, the divinized emperor was usually associated with other, more traditional, gods such as Dea Roma or various groups of Olympian deities (see Emperors).

4. Hellenistic Religions.

4.1. Introduction. The Hellenistic period began with the conquests of Alexander the Great during the late fourth century B.C. Technically it concluded with the Roman conquest of the last independent Hellenistic kingdom, Ptolemaic Egypt, at the Battle of Actium in 31 B.C. Nevertheless, it actually continued on into the Roman period because of the enormous cultural influence which the Greeks had on their Roman conquerors. The immense political, social and cultural changes accompanying the conquests of Alexander meant that the tension between continuity and change was one of the central features of the Hellenistic age.

4.2. Hellenistic Ruler Cults. The development of the ruler cult of Alexander the Great, followed by the cults of subsequent Hellenistic kings, was in many respects an adjustment to the political reality that the cities were no longer independent. As such they required a type of cult appropriate to their subordinate status. One of the major forms of this adjustment is reflected in the development of the ruler cult. Such cults (with priests, processions, sacrifices and often games) were founded in honor of various Greek rulers such as Lysander of Sparta and Dion of Syracuse. Alexander the Great both requested and was granted a cult with divine honors. Greek cities often benefited from various privileges and benefactions from those Hellenistic rulers in whose honor they established cults. Cities normally took the initiative in founding ruler cults and these cults were integral to the affairs of each city-state. After the death of Ptolemy I (c. 280 B.C.), his son and successor Ptolemy II Philadelphos arranged for the formal deification of his father Ptolemy I and his mother Berenike, as theoi sōtēres, "savior* gods." In the 270s, Ptolemy II and his wife Arsinoe II were officially deified while yet living as theoi adelphoi, "sibling gods," and were offered divine worship in the shrine of Alexander the Great. After Ptolemy II, each successive Ptolemaic king and queen was deified upon accession and worshiped as part of the royal household.

4.3. Private Associations. During the Hellenistic and Roman period there were three types of voluntary associations (collegia), each of which had a religious character: (1) professional corporation or guilds (fishermen, fruit growers, ship owners, etc.), (2) funerary societies (collegia tenuiorum), and (3) religious or cult societies (collegia sodalicia), which centered in the worship of a deity.

4.4. Mystery Religions. Mystery religion is a general term for a variety of ancient public and private cults which shared a number of common features. The term mystery is based on the Greek term mystēs, meaning "initiant," from which is derived the term mystērion, meaning "ritual of initiation," that is, the secret rites which formed the center of such cults. In contrast to the public character of most traditional cults of the Greek city-states, the mystery religions were private associations into which interested individuals could be initiated by undergoing a secret ritual. The mystery religions did not appear suddenly in the Mediterranean world during the Hellenistic period, though the period of their greatest popularity appears to have been the first through the third centuries A.D. Many of the mystery cults in the Greek world were profoundly influenced by the oldest of all mystery cults (referred to as "the mysteries"), the Eleusinian mysteries with their cult center in Eleusis in Attica. While very little is known about these rituals of initiation (called teletē), they appear to have consisted of three interrelated features of a mystery cult initiation ritual: (1) dromena, "things acted out," or the enactment of the myth on which the cult was based; (2) legomena, "things spoken," or the oral presentation of the myth on which the cult was based; and (3) deiknymena, "things shown," or the ritual presentation of symbolic objects to the initiant. Initiants who experienced the central mystery ritual became convinced that they would enjoy sōtēria, "salvation," both in the sense of health and prosperity in this life as well as a blissful afterlife (Firmicus Maternus De Errore Prof. Rel. 22.1). Mystery religions were once thought to share a common focus in a divinity who represented the annual decay and renewal of vegetation through his or her death and restoration to life. In recent years the great diversity among those cults formerly lumped together as "mystery cults" has become increasingly apparent. Though there were many mystery cults in antiquity, only the Eleusinian Mysteries and the Mysteries of Mithra will be summarized.

4.4.1. The Eleusinian Mysteries. This cult was native to Attica until it was taken over by Athenians upon the unification of Attica under Athens. Originating as early as the fifteenth century B.C., the cult continued to flourish until the Telesterion, the rectangular temple in Eleusis which served as the center for the cult, was destroyed by the Goths in A.D. 395. The earliest literary evidence for this cult is found in the Homeric Hymn to Demeter, which originated c. 550 B.C. A story about the goddess Demeter and her daughter Persephone served as the central myth of the cult. Hades, the god of the underworld, seized Persephone and took her down into the underworld as his wife. Grieving for her daughter, Demeter sought her whereabouts for nine days, when Helios (the sun god) revealed to Demeter what had happened to her daughter. In anger Demeter left Olympus and caused a drought which deprived humans of food and gods of sacrifices. Zeus therefore sent Hermes to strike a compromise with Hades. Persephone was returned to her mother on the condition that she spend one-third of every year in the underworld with Hades. In this myth Demeter is literally the "earth mother," while Persephone represents grain. Persephone's presence with her mother for two-thirds of the year represents the rainy season (primarily during the winter) when crops flourish, while her descent to Hades each year represents the dry, dormant season of the year (Hesiod Op. 582-88).

These vegetation deities were understood as metaphors for life and death, and those initiants who voluntarily participated in this cult believed that their ritual identification with Persephone would guarantee them a blissful afterlife (Isocrates Paneg. 28-29). One fragment of Sophocles (found in Plutarch How to Study Poetry 22F) emphasizes the salvific benefits of initiation: "Thrice blest are those who go to Hades after beholding these rites. For them alone is there life there; for all others there is only evil" (see also Pindar in Clement of Alexandria Strom. 3.3.17).

Initiation into the Eleusinian mysteries was a voluntary, two-staged process. The first stage involved initiation into the Lesser Mysteries celebrated annually during the month Anthesterion. After the interval of at least one year, a candidate could be initiated into the Greater Mysteries, which took place during the month Boedromion (September/October). The ritual began in Athens with a gathering of the initiants and the offering of a sacrificial pig in honor of Demeter. Thereafter there was a torchlight parade to Eleusis culminating at the Telesterion, or "hall of initiation." The initiation concluded when the initiants were led into the Telesterion, and to the innermost room of that temple called the Anaktoron. There the initiation was completed. Though ancient sources divulge very little information about the specific character of the initiation ritual, the dromena ("things enacted") probably consisted of a nocturnal drama depicting Demeter's sufferings, the legomena ("things spoken") possibly consisted of a recitation of a myth similar to that preserved in the Homeric Hymn to Demeter, and the deiknymena ("things shown") may have consisted of the display of symbolic ritual objects such as an ear of grain.

4.4.2. The Mysteries of Mithra. Mithras was worshiped as the sun god, and the name is of Iranian origin. The actual Iranian connections of this cult are dubious, however. Though the earliest datable evidence for the existence of the Mithraic mysteries is the first century A.D., it is likely that this cult originated in the first century B.C. This mystery cult flourished in the second through the fourth centuries A.D., after which the triumph of Christianity resulted in its ultimate disappearance. Information about this cult is primarily available through archeological evidence, which suggests that it was particularly popular in Italy and in the region of the Danube. Epigraphical evidence indicates that members of the cult included soldiers, bureaucrats, merchants and slaves (women were excluded). The central focus of the cult was the preparation for astral salvation, which would be realized upon death when the soul would ascend through the seven planetary spheres to the place of its origin. Members of the cult were initiated into seven ascending levels or grades of initiation, each of which had the protection of a planetary god: (1) corax, "raven" (Mercury); (2) nymphus, "bride" (Venus); (3) miles, "soldier" (Mars); (4) leo, "lion" (Jupiter); (5) Perses, "Persian" (Moon); (6) heliodromus, "courier of the sun" (Sun); and (7) pater, "father" (Saturn). This cult worshiped in artificial caverns, structures called mithraea (fifty-eight of which have been identified by archeologists), located below grade. Every Mithraeum had an artistic representation of the tauroctony, or "bull-slaying" scene, in which Mithras is portrayed as slaying a bull, and it was probably the experience of this event, presented through the medium of a ritual, that constituted the central salvific events for adherents to the cult.

5. Paul and Greco-Roman Religion.

5.1. Introduction. Though there is little doubt that Paul must be understood primarily in terms of Judaism (he claims to have been an observant Jew and a Pharisee in Phil 3:5-6), it must also be recognized that he was a Hellenistic Jew from Tarsus who spoke and wrote fluent Greek and who lived in a context in which Judaism had undergone the process of Hellenization to various extents (see Jew, Paul the). Paul was fully aware that his pagan contemporaries recognized many gods and many lords (1 Cor 8:5). Both the Pauline letters and the Acts of the Apostles, the two primary sources for our knowledge of Paul, reflect the ways in which aspects of Hellenistic and Roman religious beliefs and practices had an effect on Paul and his missionary* activity.

5.2. Paul and the Mystery Religions. During the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, representatives of the German "history-of-religions school" maintained that early Christian sacramentalism (particularly the baptismal* experience of sharing the death* and resurrection* of Christ* reflected in Rom 6) was derived from the dying-and-rising god figure who was supposedly a central feature of Hellenistic mystery cults. Following R. Bultmann, several scholars have argued that Paul formulated part of his argument in Romans 6 and 1 Corinthians 15 in opposition to a Hellenistic sacramental theology which had been adopted by some segments of early Christianity (see Paul and His Interpreters). This theology consisted of a form of realized eschatology* understood in terms of the present realization of a resurrection mode of existence.

A. J. M. Wedderburn has provided a series of convincing arguments concerning the mystery cults and Paul's relationship to them: (1) The mystery cults were widespread in the first century A.D., and not primarily in the second century and later as some scholars have argued. (2) The mystery cults had no standard theology centering on the promise of immortality through the ritual experience of sharing the death-and-resurrection experience of the cult deity. (3) The view that the mysteries offered immortality through the ritual identification of the initiate with a dying-and-rising deity is not verified by the surviving evidence about the significance of such mystery initiations. (4) The close connection between baptism* and the Spirit* of God has no analogy in the mysteries.

Some scholars (H.-J. Schoeps; L. Goppelt; H. Böhlig) have proposed that Paul was, at least indirectly, influenced by the particular form of mystery cult found at Tarsus, the annual public festival in honor of the vegetation god Sandon-Heracles. During this festival an image of the god was burned on a funeral pyre. This cult reportedly centered on the dying of nature caused by the intense heat of the summer sun and its resurrection to new life when the rainy season began. In this cult Sandon-Heracles was celebrated as "savior," and the title "Lord" was also applied to him, supposedly in a way similar to Paul's use of the designation "Lord"* for Christ. More recent evidence suggests, however, that the cult of Sandon-Heracles cannot be considered a mystery cult, and it seems likely that the Pauline use of the titles "savior"* and "Lord" were derived from Jewish religious language rather than from the admittedly analogous use of religious language in the Greco-Roman world. However, there are what appear to be a number of words and phrases in Pauline vocabulary which seem to have been derived ultimately from the language used to describe aspects of the mystery cults. These terms, which include "wisdom"* (1 Cor 1:17-31), "knowledge"* (1 Cor 8:1; 13:8), "spiritual person" contrasted with "psychic person," (1 Cor 2:14-16), "to be initiated" (Phil 4:12), "mystery"* and "perfect"* or "mature" (1 Cor 2:5-6), "unutterable" (2 Cor 12:4), do not appear to be drawn directly from the mystery cults but had much earlier passed into the common fund of figurative religious language. In particular instances it appears that Paul actually adopted the language of his opponents in his attempt to refute them (e.g., 1 Cor 2:6-13).

5.3. Paul and the Imperial Cult. The imperial cult was particularly influential throughout Asia Minor, including the eastern region where Tarsus was located. Beginning with the divine Augustus, Roman emperors* were frequently lauded with such titles as kyrios ("Lord"*) and sōtēr ("savior"), and these titles were also used of Jesus by Paul and other early Christians (Rom 1:4; 4:24; 16:2; Phil 2:11; 3:20). While these titles are used of God frequently in the Greek OT, they would have had clear associations with the imperial cult to many ancient Mediterraneans. While the title "Son of God" was certainly derived from the OT (2 Sam 7:14; Ps 2:7), the phrase divi filius ("son of god") was used of Augustus (referring to his adopted father Julius Caesar) and was a title taken over by other Roman emperors to underline their filial relationship to their divinized predecessors, so that this designation would also have had associations with the imperial cult for many ancients.

5.4. Paul and Pagan Sacrifices (1 Cor 8:1-13; 10:14-33). Since observant Jews had scruples against idolatrous* practices and followed dietary laws based on the Torah, which prohibited the consumption of meat from unclean animals or even clean animals not killed in a ritually appropriate manner, Jews and Jewish Christians were naturally reluctant to eat the meat of animals sacrificed to pagan deities (2 Macc 6:7, 12; 7:42; 4 Macc 5:2; m. 'Abod. Zar. 2.3; Acts 15:20, 29; 21:25; Rev 2:14, 20; Did. 6:3; Aristides Apol. 15:5; Justin Dial. Tryph. 35; see Food). While part of the victims sacrificed in Greek temples was consumed on the premises by priests and worshipers, the rest was sold to the public in the market place. The practice of eating "meat sacrificed to idols*" (eidōlothyton in 1 Cor 8:1, 4, 7, 10; 10:19; or hierothyton in 1 Cor 10:28), could refer to participation in a sacral meal in a temple or during the distribution of sacrificial meat in the course of a public religious festival, or to the practice of eating meat purchased at the marketplace but which had originally been part of a pagan sacrifice. Paul thought that when people sacrificed to idols they were really sacrificing to demons (1 Cor 10:20), a view common in Judaism (Deut 32:17; Ps 19:5; Jub. 1:11; 11:4-6; 1 Enoch 19:1), and even found among some pagans such as the philosopher Celsus, though for him daimones were petty deities (Origen Contra Celsum 8.24).

5.5. Paul in Acts. In the narrative world of Acts the ubiquitous presence of a variety of Greco-Roman religious traditions and cults become the backdrop for Paul's missionary activity in Anatolia and Europe. In Philippi Paul exorcised a pneuma Pythōna, or "spirit of divination," from a young female slave used as a fortune teller by her owners (Acts 16:16-18; see Demons, Exorcism). While in Ephesus* (a famous ancient center for the practice of magic*), those who responded to the gospel reportedly rejected sorcery and burned their magical books (Acts 19:18-19). These clashes with paganism are either used by Paul as opportunities for proclaiming the existence and claims of the one true God, or reflect pagan hostility in response to Paul's successful proclamation of the gospel.*

5.5.1. Deities in Disguise (Acts 14:11-13). Following the narrative of the healing of a cripple at Lystra by Barnabas* and Paul, the onlookers make the acclamation "The gods have come down to us in human form," and they called Barnabas Zeus and Paul Hermes (cf. Acts 28:6). The priest of the local temple of Zeus then brought oxen and garlands with the intention of sacrificing to Barnabas-Zeus and Paul-Hermes. From Homer on, Greek tradition entertained the possibility that gods could disguise themselves as human beings (Iliad 24.345-47; Odyssey 1.105; 2.268; 17.485-87; Homeric Hymn to Demeter 94-97, 275-81; Plato Soph. 216b; Rep. 2.20 [381b-382c]; Silius Italicus 7.176; Ovid Metam. 8.626), though such disguises were not usually maintained very long and were generally followed by a recognition scene. Zeus and Hermes were occasionally paired since Zeus had chosen Hermes as his herald and spokesperson (Diodorus Siculus 5.75.2; Apollodorus 3.10.2; Iamblichus De Myst. 1.1). Paul was identified by the onlookers with Hermes precisely because he was the chief speaker (Acts 14:12). The closest mythological parallel recounts how Zeus and Hermes, disguised as mortals, were barred from a thousand homes until welcomed by the aged farm couple Baucis and Philemon (Ovid Metam. 8.611-724). In Greek tradition the appearance of a deity is traditionally the occasion when divine honors are instituted, a fact which accounts for the behavior of the priest of the temple of Zeus in Acts 14:13.

5.5.2. The "Unknown God" (Acts 17:23). In the context of a visit to Athens* narrated in Acts 17:16-34 (a section in which the author of Luke-Acts reveals a familiarity with philosophical traditions and language), Paul visits the Areopagus and, in the manner of an ancient philosopher, directs an apologetic speech to the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers present. In the introduction to this speech (the captatio benevolentiae), he congratulates the Athenians for their piety and then refers to an altar in the vicinity with an inscription "to an unknown god," claiming that it is this God whom he is now proclaiming to them. The German classical scholar E. Norden discussed this passage in detail on the basis of the evidence of the unknown gods of antiquity and claimed that the conception of an unknown god is oriental rather than Greek; this view has been refuted by P. W. van der Horst. Jerome thought that Paul had rephrased the inscription (Jerome Comm. in Tit. 1.12; Ep. 70), a view held by many modern scholars. Pausanias reports the existence of altars to "unknown gods" (in the plural) in Athens and Olympia (Pausanias 1.1.4; 5.14.8). Important cult centers such as Athens, Olympia and Pergamon had dozens of altars to traditional Greek gods (Zeus, Athena, Hermes, etc.), to less traditional deities (e.g., Helios, "sun," and Selene, "moon"), to abstractions (e.g., Pistis, "fidelity," and Arete, "virtue") and (in an attempt to be complete, i.e., to have a pantheos peribōmismos, a "precinct for altars of all gods without exception") to "unknown gods" and (safer still) to "all the gods." Though no inscription has been found which exactly reproduces the phraseology of Acts 17:23, it is quite possible that such inscriptions actually existed.

5.5.3. Artemis of the Ephesians (Acts 19:23-41). In this episode (perhaps alluded to in 1 Cor 15:32 and 2 Cor 1:8-11), Paul's success in proclaiming the gospel in the Roman Province of Asia is perceived as threatening the livelihood of the silver-workers guild, which made miniature silver replicas of the temple of Artemis to be sold as souvenirs or amulets (Acts 19:24). The temple of Artemis in Ephesus* was one of the seven wonders of the world (Strabo 14.1.20-23; Pausanias 2.2.5; 4.31; Achilles Tatius 7-8; Xenophon Eph. Ephesian Tale 1.1-3), and the city was given the title neōkoros, "temple-keeper" (Acts 19:35), as a major center of the imperial cult. The acclamation "Great is Artemis of the Ephesians" (Acts 19:28) reflects a popular title of the goddess (Xenophon Eph. Ephesian Tale 1.11).

See also ATHENS, PAUL AT; DEMONS AND EXORCISM; ELEMENTS/ELEMENTAL SPIRITS OF THE WORLD; EMPERORS, ROMAN; EPHESUS, PAUL AT; FOOD OFFERED TO IDOLS AND JEWISH FOOD LAWS; GNOSIS, GNOSTICISM; HELLENISM; IDOLATRY; MAGIC; PHILOSOPHY; WORSHIP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. Böhlig, Die Geisteskultur von Tarsos im augusteischen Zeitalter mit Berücksichtigung der paulinischen Schriften (FRLANT 19; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1913); W. Burkert, Ancient Mystery Cults (Cambridge: Harvard University, 1987); idem, Greek Religion (Cambridge: Harvard University, 1985); F. Cumont, The Mysteries of Mithra (New York: Dover, 1956); idem, Oriental Religions in Roman Paganism (New York: Dover, 1956); E. J. Edelstein and L. Edelstein, Asclepius: A Collection and Interpretation of the Testimonies (Salem: Ayer Company, 1988); J. Ferguson, The Religions of the Roman Empire (Ithaca: Cornell University, 1970); J. Finegan, Myth & Mystery: An Introduction to the Pagan Religions of the Biblical World (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1989); J. Fontenrose, The Delphic Oracle: Its Responses and Operations (Berkeley: University of California, 1978); P. W. van der Horst, "The Altar of the 'Unknown God' in Athens (Acts 17:23) and the Cult of 'Unknown Gods' in the Hellenistic and Roman Periods," ANRW II.18.2 (1989) 1426-56; J. H. W. G. Liebeschuetz, Continuity and Change in Roman Religion (Oxford: Clarendon, 1979); G. Luck, Arcana Mundi: Magic and the Occult in the Greek and Roman World (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins, 1985); J. G. Machen, The Origin of Paul's Religion (New York: Macmillan, 1921); R. Mac-

Mullen, Paganism in the Roman Empire (New Haven: Yale University, 1981); A. D. Nock, Conversion: The Old and the New in Religion from Alexander the Great to Augustine of Hippo (London: Oxford University, 1933); D. Ulansey, The Origins of the Mithraic Mysteries: Cosmology and Salvation in the Ancient World (New York: Oxford University Press, 1989); A. Wardman, Religion and Statecraft among the Romans (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins, 1982); A. J. M. Wedderburn, Baptism and Resurrection: Studies in Pauline Theology Against Its Graeco-Roman Background (WUNT I.44; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1987); L. B. Zaidman and P. S. Pantel, Religion in the Ancient Greek City (Cambridge: University Press, 1992). D. E. Aune

REMARRIAGE. See MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE, ADULTERY AND INCEST.

REMNANT THEOLOGY. See ISRAEL; RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

RESTORATION OF ISRAEL

Paul's attitude toward his people Israel* often seems quite contradictory. In one of his earliest letters, Paul comes down hard on "the Jews," affirming that "the wrath* of God has come upon them eis telos" (in one translation, "finally"; 1 Thess 2:14-16). In one of his latest letters, however, he expects that "all Israel will be saved" (Rom 11:26). Did Paul's view of Israel's future develop over the course of time or perhaps change periodically according to the missionary* situation with which he was confronted? In order to understand Paul's perspective on the future of Israel it is essential to appreciate the OT and Jewish background, for Paul's appropriation of the OT and his understanding of it provide the framework of his theology. Paul's Jewishness and immersion in biblical thought would have rendered him incapable of developing his theology apart from his traditional and biblical heritage. Against this background, furthermore, the apparent contradictions in Paul's perspective on Israel and her future tend to dissipate.

1. The Restoration of Israel in OT and Jewish Tradition
2. The Restoration of Israel in Paul

1. The Restoration of Israel in OT and Jewish Tradition.

For the purposes of this survey, the background of Paul's thinking can be traced to the two main streams of tradition which flowed out of the exilic and post-exilic situations.

1.1. The Exilic and Post-exilic Situations.

1.1.1. The Exile. The exile which came upon the northern kingdom in 722 B.C. and upon the southern kingdom in 587 B.C. represents a tragic phase in Israel's history and religious self-concept. A fundamental tenet of the ancient Israelite faith was that Yahweh had promised Israel land and statehood as signs of his special covenant relationship with her. These institutions included a capital city and a formal sanctuary where sacrificial worship was carried out. All these had been attained during the reigns of David and Solomon. Consequently the annexation of Israel to the Assyrian empire and of Judah to the Babylonian empire came as a direct challenge to the professed heritage of ancient Israel.

The prophets' response to this situation both before and after Israel's exile was basically to call their audience back to allegiance to Yahweh. The people were challenged to fulfill their responsibilities as his covenant people. From the prophetic perspective the exile was an act of God that was both punitive and redemptive. For, on the one hand, the prophets preached that the Exile was a judgment of God for Israel's failure to live up to her obligations as Yahweh's chosen people. The deportations of both Israel and Judah were understood to be Yahweh's way of dealing with the sins of his people. On the other hand, however, the prophets preached that if the people repented, there was hope of restoration for Israel in the future.

1.1.2. The Post-exilic Situation. When the Persians gained control of the Babylonian empire, they attempted to secure peace among a large and diverse mix of nationalities and cultures. This was done by allowing deported peoples to return to their homelands and to set up theocracies (i.e., political institutions that had priestly leadership). The edict of Cyrus allowed for the return of deported Jews to the homeland, as well as for the rebuilding of the city of Jerusalem and the Temple. Many Jews, however, who had been exiled to Babylonia did not take the opportunity to return to Palestine, for life there had become quite comfortable. And none of the ten tribes of the northern kingdom ever returned. A Davidic prince, Sheshbazzar, led the first group of those who returned, but he was not successful in reestablishing a new Jewish community in the homeland. An ambitious nephew, Zerubbabel, followed and sought to reopen the temple at Jerusalem to be a national and religious focal point. He was eventually removed by the Persian governor, who took measures to discourage further displays of royal ambitions. It was at this stage that the high priest of Jerusalem (Joshua ben Jehozadak) was vested with whatever leadership powers were deemed appropriate by the Persian governor. In 515 B.C. a modest temple was completed, which did not compare with the splendor of the former Solomonic Temple.

1.2. Streams of Tradition: The "Already" and the "Not Yet." From this point in Israel's history, two major streams of tradition developed which differed radically in their interpretation of the postexilic situation (see Steck 1968; Hengel 1973, 321-22). According to one pervasive Jewish interpretation, the promised restoration had already occurred, as evidenced by such events as the return from Exile and the rebuilding of Jerusalem and the Temple. This perspective was based on the theocracy, centered on the Temple and the priesthood, and stressed the putative continuity with the preexilic cult. According to another influential interpretation, however, the restoration had not yet occurred and could still be expected in the eschatological future. For although the Israelites could return from exile, a restoration of all twelve tribes did not occur; although the Israelites could again live in the promised land, they did so under foreign rulers; and although the Temple was rebuilt, it was not the center of a unified people in its own land. Hence the theological ambiguity of the events at the turn of the postexilic period allowed for both of these mainstream traditions to flourish, which they did throughout the Second Temple period and beyond.

1.2.1. The Theocratic Stream. The stream of tradition associated with Temple circles had as its theological agenda the establishment of the postexilic cult. According to Ezra 1:1, the seventy years of exile with which 2 Chronicles ends (36:16-21) are now over, and Yahweh has raised up Cyrus. Thus Israel is separated from the dark period of Exile, in which Yahweh requited the guilt of the last preexilic generation; the land has in between received the Sabbath years which were denied it; Israel stands again in continuity with the salvific dealings of God before the Exile. If Israel falls into sin, the cult can provide forgiveness and atonement. It does not matter that the northern tribes never returned from exile, nor even that most Judeans remained in the Diaspora, nor that all Israel (even those in Judah and Jerusalem) remain under foreign rule. The restoration has already been realized. For according to this perspective, there is only one theologically relevant factor: whether they adhere to the Jerusalem cult.

The theocratic tradition displays the "pattern of religion" which E. P. Sanders has called "covenantal nomism," identifying it as the common denominator of the various expressions of Palestinian Judaism from 200 B.C. to A.D. 200. "Briefly put," writes Sanders, "covenantal nomism is the view that one's place in God's plan is established on the basis of the covenant and that the covenant requires as the proper response of man his obedience to its commandments, while providing means of atonement for transgression" (Sanders 1977, 75). "All those who are maintained in the covenant by obedience, atonement and God's mercy belong to the group which will be saved" (Sanders 1977, 422). Unfortunately, however, Sanders has so stressed continuity in the covenantal relationship between God and his people, and readily available atonement for sin by means of repentance, that another major stream of tradition in Palestinian Judaism, which emphasizes prolonged discontinuity in the relationship as punishment for sin, has gone practically unnoticed. In no way can it be said that the "business-as-usual" approach of the theocratic stream prevailed in every quarter.

1.2.2. The Eschatological Stream. This stream of Jewish tradition takes the position that Israel has not yet been restored, but rather remains, until the eschatological restoration, under the wrath of God which came upon the people in 722 and 587 B.C. for their disobedience. From this perspective the Second Temple and its cult has no efficacy for atonement. In fact the Second Temple is often either considered polluted or deficient (cf. Dan 3:38 LXX; Sir 36:14; 1 Enoch 89:73; 90:28-33; Tob 14:5; T. Levi 16:1-5; 17:10-11; 2 Apoc. Bar. 68:5-7; T. Moses 4:8) or passed over altogether (cf. Yadin, 1:182-87). Many penitential prayers of the Second Temple period lament the present plight of Israel as a nation (e.g., Dan 9:4-19; Ezra 9:6-15; Neh 9:5-37; Bar 1:15—3:8; Pr Azar; Sir 36:1-17; see further Scott "Gal 3:10"). The people are seen as continuing under the judgment and curse of God. Theologically speaking, "all Israel is still in Exile just as before, whether she now finds herself in the Land, which others rule, or in the Diaspora" (Steck 1968, 454). Furthermore, this condition of Exile would last until God intervenes in the eschatological future, which is now recognized as a time well beyond the seventy years which Jeremiah had envisioned (cf. Dan 9:24: 70 x 7 years). Because God's judgment and curse on Israel persists, the whole sinful history from the Exodus on, which led to this judgment, also continues on the people. Therefore, the penitential prayers repeatedly acknowledge Israel's national guilt in order to declare the justice of God for the ongoing judgment (cf. von Rad). The earlier salvific deeds of God can now be only a pledge for the urgent plea that the expected restoration might come in order to bring an end to the present curse and remove the guilt of the people.

The eschatological stream is in no way limited to a few penitential prayers; it pervades Second Temple literature. Especially from the Seleucid period onward, this stream of tradition occupied an important place in postexilic theological history. It had become apparent from both the apostasy within Israel and the persecution of Antiochus from without that the idea of a realized restoration did not correspond to reality (cf. Neusner). As Nickelsburg comments:

> The destruction of Jerusalem and the Exile meant the disruption of life and the breaking up of institutions whose original form was never fully restored. Much of post-biblical Jewish theology and literature was influenced and sometimes governed by a hope for such a restoration: a return of the dispersed; the appearance of a Davidic heir to throw off the shackles of foreign domination and restore Israel's sovereignty; the gathering of one people around a new and glorified Temple. (Nickelsburg, 18)

Of particular importance to the eschatological stream is the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history, a pervasive OT/Jewish tradition which covered the whole history of Israel from its initial election to its ultimate salvation (cf. Steck 1967). By the final stage of its development (in the period from Antiochus IV to 2 Baruch), the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history was still a living tradition capable of a certain fluidity of expression, but it had also become a relatively fixed conceptual framework containing the following six elements:

(1) The Deuteronomic view of Israel's history begins with the affirmation that Israel has been persistently "stiff-necked," rebellious and disobedient during its whole long history. For example, the second-century B.C. national confession of sin in Baruch 1:15—3:8, which contains the Deuteronomic tradition, commences with the words: "We have disobeyed him [the Lord], and have not heeded the voice of the Lord our God, to walk in the statutes of the Lord that he set before us. From the time when the Lord brought our ancestors out of the land of Egypt to this day (cf. Deut 9:7; 29:3, 27; 2 Kings 17:23; 1 Esdr 8:73-74; 2 Esdr 9:7; Neh 9:32; Bar 1:13, 19; 2:6; Ezek 2:3; 20:31), we have been disobedient to the Lord our God, and we have been negligent, in not heeding his voice" (Bar 1:18-19). As is characteristic of other national confessions of sin in this period which reflect the Deuteronomic perspective, the contemporary generation of Israelites identifies with the sins of the fathers by means of the first person plural (cf. Scharbert; Steck 1967, 114, 119, 120-21, 124-27), just as Moses includes the Israelite community before the conquest with the exile and restoration of future generations by means of the second person plural (cf. Deut 4:25-31). This is because Deuteronomy and the Deuteronomic tradition view Israel as a unity in a historical continuum.

(2) After establishing the persistence of Israel's sin right up to the present, the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history goes on to affirm that God constantly sent his messengers, the prophets, to call his people to repentance and obedience.

(3) Nevertheless, Israel continued in its obduracy and rejected the message of the prophets. Again, the words of the national confession of sin in Baruch 1:15—3:8: "We did not listen to the voice of the Lord our God in all the words of the prophets whom he sent to us, but all of us followed the intent of our own wicked hearts by serving other gods and doing what is evil in the sight of the Lord" (Bar 1:21-22). Some texts which are framed by the Deuteronomic tradition stress that Israel not only rejected the message of the prophets but actually persecuted and killed them (e.g., Neh 9:26; Jub. 1:12; 1 Enoch 89:51).

(4) Therefore, in view of Israel's intransigence, the wrath of God burned against Israel; judgment came upon them starting in (722 or) 587 B.C.; and the people were sent into Exile. According to the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history, the condition of Exile lasted all through the Second Temple period and even beyond, because the sin of the people and therefore their guilt did not abate (cf. Steck 1967, 122; idem 1968, 453-54). Thus, as the narrative introduction to Baruch shows (1:1-14), the prayer in Baruch 1:15—3:8 was to be prayed on behalf of Jerusalem, because "to this day the anger of the Lord and his wrath have not turned away from us" (Bar 1:13). The confession itself goes on to state, in obvious allusion to Deuteronomy 27—32: "So to this day there have clung to us the calamities and the curse which the Lord declared through his servant Moses . . ." (Bar 1:20). And similarly, somewhat later in the same confession: "See, we are today in our exile where you have scattered us, to be reproached and cursed and punished for all the iniquities of our ancestors, who forsook the Lord our God" (Bar 3:8).

(5) The Deuteronomic view of Israel's history holds that during the protracted exile Israel still has the chance of repenting of sin. Thus the national confession of sin in Baruch 1:15—3:8 affirms, again referring to the latter section of Deuteronomy,

> Yet you have dealt with us, O Lord our God, in all your kindness and in all your great compassion, as you spoke by your servant Moses on the day when you commanded him to write your Law in the presence of the people of Israel, saying, "If you will not obey my voice, this very great multitude will surely turn into a small number among the nations > where I will scatter them. For I know they are a stiff-necked people. But in the land of their exile they will come to themselves and know that I am the Lord their God. I will give them a heart that obeys and ears that hear; they will . . . turn from their stubbornness and their wicked deeds." (Bar 2:27-33)

The confession goes on to implore the mercy of God, for although the petitioners are repentant, they are still in Exile (Bar 3:1-8). The point of much Second Temple literature is, however, that the obduracy of Israel persisted all during the protracted Exile (cf. Steck 1967, 187).

(6) If the people repent, then, according to the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history, God will restore them to the land and to a covenantal relationship with himself. Thus the national confession of sin in Baruch continues with the divine promise:

> I will bring them again into the land that I swore to their ancestors, to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. . . . I will make an everlasting covenant with them to be their God and they shall be my people; and I will never again remove my people from the land that I have given them. (Bar 2:34-35)

The "everlasting covenant" and the covenant formula allude here to Jeremiah 32:38, 40, which in turn recalls the "new covenant" and the covenant formula of Jeremiah 31:31-34. In other texts with the Deuteronomic perspective, the sixth element includes the expectation of an eschatological pilgrimage of the Gentiles to Zion to share in the restoration of Israel (cf. Pss. Sol. 17:30-35; 2 Apoc. Bar. 68:5; Tob 13:11; 14:6-7; 1 Enoch 90:30-36). Other texts emphasize that, along with the enemies of Israel, unrepentant Israel will fall under the final judgment of God.

2. The Restoration of Israel in Paul.

Does Paul's concept of the restoration of Israel agree with either one of these two divergent mainstreams of Jewish tradition? To answer this question it will be necessary to consider Paul's Pharisaic background, his apostolic self-concept and his use of Scripture.

2.1. Paul's Pharisaic Background. When Paul the apostle sought to list the reasons he might have for putting confidence in the flesh, he mentioned his Pharisaic background (Phil 3:5; cf. Acts 22:3; 23:6; 26:5; see Jew, Paul the). Although it is extremely difficult to ascertain the content of Pharisaic teaching before A.D. 70, and Pharisaism developed over time, splintering into factions (cf. Hengel 1973), nevertheless Steck (1967, 210-11) suggests that the Pharisees were probably bearers of the Deuteronomic tradition. This would correlate in general with Acts 23:6-10 (cf. Acts 24:15-16; 26:6-7; 28:20), where Paul is able to rally Pharisaic support for his cause in the Sanhedrin when he identifies himself as a Pharisee who is on trial for "the hope*" of Israel* and "the resurrection* of the dead" (Acts 23:6), two closely related themes in OT/Jewish tradition on the restoration of Israel (cf. Haacker).

2.2. The Apostle to the Gentiles for the Sake of Israel. Even after he became a believer and was spurned by his compatriots, Paul affirmed his Jewish ancestry and heritage (Phil 3:5; 2 Cor 11:22; Rom 11:1), and he called the Israelites his own people and kindred (Rom 9:3). Paul's starting point is that the Messiah of Israel (Rom 9:5) came to be the hope* of both Jews and Gentiles* alike (Rom 15:8-13). In true solidarity with his people, therefore, Paul mourned Jewish unbelief and hardening and wished that he himself could be cut off from Christ* and accursed on their behalf (Rom 9:2-3). Paul's heart's desire and prayer* to God* for Israel was that they may be saved (Rom 10:1).

Paul's concern for the salvation* of his people stems not merely from patriotism, but more particularly from the call of God upon his life. Most scholars assume (cf. Sandnes, 61-65) that Paul's description of his apostolic call (see Conversion and Call) in Galatians 1:15 ("But when he who has set me apart from my mother's womb and called me by his grace . . .") alludes to the calling of the Servant* in Isaiah 49:1 ("From my mother's womb he has called my name") and 49:5 ("the Lord, who formed me from the womb to be his own servant, to gather Jacob and Israel to him"; see Prophet, Paul as). If this is so, then Paul's apostolic commission must have included from the start a vision for the restoration of Israel (cf. Kim, 97), even though the universalistic purpose of his call is stressed in Galatians 1:16 (cf. Is 49:6, which ties together both aspects of the Servant's call—as an agent of Israel's restoration and as a light to the nations; see Universalism).

Paul might have been primarily the apostle* to the Gentiles (Rom 1:5; 11:13; cf. Gal 1:15-17; 2:7-8), but he was the apostle to the Gentiles for the sake of Israel. Even the gospel—the good news of Israel's restoration (cf. Is 52:7, cited in Rom 10:15)—which Paul was commissioned to preach was to the Jew first and also to the Greek (Rom 1:16). As a result, Paul would sometimes try to win Jews directly (1 Cor 9:20). More often, however, he would try to win them indirectly through his Gentile mission: "Inasmuch then as I am an apostle to the Gentiles, I magnify my ministry, in order to make my fellow Jews jealous, and thus save some of them" (Rom 11:13-14; cf. 10:19 [citing Deut 32:21]; 11:11). Not only does Paul view his Gentile mission as a catalyst to the present salvation of a remnant from Israel, he also views it as an essential precursor to the eventual salvation of all Israel; for it is not until the full number of the Gentiles comes in that all Israel will be saved (Rom 11:25-26). Hence Paul's driving passion is to bring the gospel to the Gentiles as quickly as possible, even as far as Spain (Rom 15:18-29), and to raise the collection for the saints (see Collection).

If Paul casts his Gentile mission as an effort to provoke Israel to jealousy,* it is not just a desperate attempt to demonstrate to Jewish Christians in Rome that he really is concerned for Israel after all (contra Räisänen, 187-88). For Paul bases this understanding of the role of Gentiles in the restoration of Israel on the eschatological* hope of Deuteronomy 32:21. In other words, Paul conceives his ministry as fitting within the framework of the aforementioned eschatological stream of Jewish tradition, particularly the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history.

2.3. The Deuteronomic Framework of Paul's Restoration Theology.

2.3.1. Deuteronomy and Paul's Use of Scripture. It has often been observed that Paul confines his citations of the OT to certain letters, and that he tends to gravitate toward certain OT books more than others (see Old Testament in Paul). Of the approximately one hundred explicit citations of the OT in the Pauline corpus, almost all appear in the Hauptbriefe ("chief letters," cf. D. M. Smith). In fact, among the uncontested letters of Paul, not only are the explicit citations confined to the Hauptbriefe, but fully half are found in Romans* alone. And fully half of the OT quotations in Romans are found in chapters 9—11. To match this uneven distribution of OT citations in Paul is an uneven selection of OT books cited. Paul obviously has a preference for citations of Isaiah, Psalms, Genesis and Deuteronomy. According to Dietrich-Alex Koch (33), Paul cites Isaiah twenty-eight times, Psalms twenty times and Genesis and Deuteronomy fifteen times each. No other book is quoted more than five times.

What attracts Paul to these specific OT books? On the one hand, the reason behind Paul's attraction to Isaiah is relatively clear. In the words of R. Hays,

> Isaiah offers the clearest expression in the Old Testament of a universalistic, eschatological vision in which the restoration of Israel in Zion is accompanied by an ingathering of Gentiles to worship* the Lord; that is why the book is both statistically and substantively the most important scriptural source for Paul. (Hays, 162)

This is true, according to Hays (46), even when Paul cites Isaiah 52:5 in Romans 2:24 ("For, as it is written, 'The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles because of you' ") and imaginatively assumes thereby that the present-day Israel that he is castigating is in exile, for the quotation of Isaiah 59:20 and 27:9 in Romans 11:26-27 shows that the apostle sees beyond the exile to Isaiah's words of hope and restoration.

On the other hand, what attracts Paul to Deuteronomy is perhaps less clear. Hays calls Deuteronomy "the most surprising member of Paul's functional canon within the canon" (Hays, 163). For, as he goes on to argue,

> One might expect this book of conditional blessings and curses to bear witness—as it apparently does in Gal 3:10, 13—to precisely the sort of performance-based religion that Paul wants to reject. In fact, however, none of Paul's other references to the book is pejorative in character; nowhere else is Deuteronomy disparaged as a retrograde voice of legalism. Instead, . . . the words of Deuteronomy become [in Romans] the voice of the righteousness from faith . . . [and] a prefiguration of Paul's gospel. (Hays, 163)

Hays never resolves the tension between Paul's uses of Deuteronomy in Galatians and Romans. He does, however, emphasize the key importance of the Song of Moses in Deuteronomy 32. In fact, Hays goes so far as to say that "Deuteronomy 32 contains Romans in nuce" (Hays, 164), a statement which he substantiates by two considerations:

(1) Deuteronomy 32 contains the salvation-historical scheme appropriated in Romans: God's election* and care for Israel (Deut 32:6-14), Israel's rebellion (Deut 32:15-18; cf. 32:5), God's judgment upon them (Deut 32:19-35) and ultimately God's final deliverance and vindication of his own people (Deut 32:36-43).

(2) Deuteronomy 32 contains both the prophecy that God would stir Israel to jealousy through the Gentiles, cited in Romans 10:19 (cf. Deut 32:21), and the invitation to the Gentiles to join with God's people in praise, cited in Romans 15:10 (cf. Deut 32:43).

For Hays, therefore, Deuteronomy is used by Paul in much the same way as Isaiah, that is, as a part of "his typological reading strategy" to find a scriptural basis for a universalistic, eschatological vision in which the restoration of Israel is accompanied by the inclusion of Gentiles to worship the Lord.*

There can be no question that Hays is fundamentally correct: Deuteronomy is crucial to Paul's thinking. As was discussed above, however, much of Second Temple literature is heavily influenced by Deuteronomic tradition. How does Paul square with this tradition? Although Hays recognizes that Paul's "typological reading strategy extends a typological trajectory begun already in the texts themselves" (Hays, 164), he does not follow through with this idea by showing how Paul's use of Deuteronomy is mediated by OT/Jewish tradition. In the following, it will be shown how Deuteronomic tradition is taken up by Paul in letters as early as 1 Thessalonians* and as late as Romans.

2.3.2. Paul's Use of Deuteronomic Tradition in 1 Thessalonians 2:15-16. In the polemic against the Jews in 1 Thessalonians 2:15-16 (which many have dismissed as a later, post-Pauline addition despite the fact that Rom 9:22 repeats the same idea), Paul appropriates a Hellenistic Jewish-Christian tradition which adapts the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history to include the death of Jesus (see Death of Christ) as the culmination of Israel's rejection of the prophets (cf. Steck 1967, 274-78). Beginning in 1 Thessalonians 2:14, Paul compares the persecution which the Thessalonians experienced from their fellow citizens to that which the churches in Judea suffered* at the hands of "the Jews." Then in 1 Thessalonians 2:15-16 he goes on to describe the Jews in more general terms as those > who killed both the Lord Jesus and the prophets, and drove us out; they displease God and oppose all people, by hindering us from speaking to the Gentiles so that they might be saved. Thus they have constantly been filling up the measure of their sins; but God's wrath has come upon them eis telos (lit. "finally" or "completely").

Here, as in the first element of the Deuteronomic perspective (see 1.2.2 above), the historic sin of the people is seen as ongoing even to the present. In fact the sin is steadily filling up to its full measure (cf. Mt 23:32). Here, as in the third element of the Deuteronomic perspective, the violent rejection of the prophets is seen as symptomatic of the continuing guilt and obduracy of the Jews. For Paul the Jewish people have been as unrepentant and recalcitrant in the face of his message (cf. 2 Cor 11:24-25) as they have always been toward the prophets during the long history of Israel. Hence, as in the fourth element of the Deuteronomic perspective, the wrath* of God came upon the people at a historical point in the past, most likely at the destruction of Jerusalem in 587 B.C. and the Babylonian Exile, and they still displease God. The ongoing "wrath" of God on Israel in Exile is a constant theme of the Deuteronomic perspective in OT/Jewish tradition (cf. Steck 1967, 364; McCarthy 1974).

If 1 Thessalonians 2:16 stresses the wrath of God which has come on Israel, that does not necessarily mean that the apostle views his people as doomed forever. While this may depend to a certain degree on whether eis telos (1 Thess 2:16) is translated "at last," "forever," "completely" or "to the end," Paul could have a positive outlook on Israel's future even if the phrase should be translated "forever." For even in the ultimately positive perspective in Romans 9—11, Paul cites Psalms 68:24 in Romans 11:10, which apparently pronounces eternal judgment* on the Jews (dia pantos). Furthermore, if Paul sees himself in 1 Thessalonians 2:15 (as elsewhere, cf. Sandnes) in the line of the OT prophets, and that particularly within the Deuteronomic tradition of the violent rejection of the prophets, then Luke's portrayal of Paul as a Deuteronomic-style preacher of repentance to Israel (cf. Moessner) gains credibility. Although Paul's verdict on the Jews in 1 Thessalonians 2:16 fails to express elements 5 and 6 of the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history (the traditional hope of repentance and restoration for Israel), this could reflect the apostle's contingent situation (cf. Acts 17:1-15; 2 Cor 11:24-25; Gal 5:11) rather than the coherence of his theological beliefs. The very fact that Paul appropriates the Deuteronomic tradition, which looks inexorably beyond present judgment to future hope, may indicate his basically positive conviction about Israel's future. In that case, there would be no fundamental contradiction or development between this passage and Romans 11:25-32, especially in light of the fact, as will be shown below, that Romans 9—11 is also framed by the same Deuteronomic tradition. Moreover, it is possible that Paul realized already in 1 Thessalonians 2:16—and not first in Romans 11:25-26—that Israel's complete and final salvation depends on the prior inclusion of the full number of the Gentiles, for his negative remarks about Israel's present standing with God follow directly upon his statement that the Jews are hindering him from preaching to the Gentiles that they might be saved.

2.3.3. Paul's Use of Deuteronomic Tradition in Galatians 3:10. Scholars have long been baffled about what kind of assumption lies behind Paul's citation of Deuteronomy 27:26 (+ 29:19) in Galatians 3:10: "For as many as are of works of the Law are under a curse*; for it is written, 'Cursed is every one who does not abide by all things written in the book of the law, to do them.' " How can Paul cite Deuteronomy in support of his point? Was Deuteronomy 27:26 not merely a warning of what would happen if Israel violated the covenant stipulations? How could Paul assume that the curse of Deuteronomy had indeed come upon Israel?

The Deuteronomic view of Israel's history provides the most plausible solution to this question (see Scott "Gal 3:10"). Paul's use of Deuteronomy in Galatians 3:10 assumes the same perspective that lies behind 1 Thessalonians 2:15-16, and behind the national confession of sin in Baruch 1:15—3:8, and especially behind the closely related prayer of Daniel 9:1-18. Just as Daniel 9:11 acknowledges that "the curse (katara) has come upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moses the servant of God, because we have sinned," so also Paul assumes in Galatians 3:10 that the "curse" (katara) "written" in Deuteronomy has come upon Israel because of the nation's sin. In fact the likeliest explanation as to why Paul considers Israel to be "under" a curse is that the Deuteronomic "curse" to which Daniel 9:11 refers came "upon" the people. For Paul Deuteronomy 27:26 is not a "retrograde voice of legalism." Paul evidently assumes the Deuteronomic perspective which was prevalent in Second Temple literature and reflected in Daniel 9, that the divine judgment begun in 587 B.C. continues on Israel, that the Jewish people remain in exile until the time of the restoration (cf. also N. T. Wright 1992, 140-41, 146). In other words, the use of Deuteronomy 27:26 (29:19) in Galatians 3:10 is another example of the exilic perspective which Hays has already noticed in the citation of Isaiah 52:5 in Romans 2:24.

As in Paul's citation of Isaiah 52:5 in Romans 2:24, however, his quotation of Deuteronomy 27:26 (29:19) in Galatians 3:10 sees beyond Israel's exilic situation. For the subsequent context of Galatians 3—4 goes on to make clear that Christ reverses the effects of the curses of Deuteronomy (cf. Dan 9:24-27) and thereby brings the redemption and restoration expected in Isaiah. According to Galatians 3:13, "Christ redeemed us from the curse of the Law, having become a curse for us; for it is written: 'Cursed is every one who hangs on a tree.' " Here Paul cites Deuteronomy 21:23 in combination with Deuteronomy 27:26, in order to adapt it to the previous citation of Deuteronomy 27:26 both lexically and materially. Paul's use of Deuteronomy in Galatians* is totally subordinated to the Deuteronomic tradition which reflects the situation of Israel since 587 B.C. From Paul's point of view, however, "the fullness of time has come" and the messianic Son of God has redeemed those who were under the curse of the Law (Gal 4:4-5). The fact that Galatians 3—4 moves from "curse" to "redemption" from the curse through Christ, and from there to the integrally related reception of the "Spirit"* and divine adoptive sonship (see Adoption and Sonship), shows unequivocally that Paul partakes here of restoration tradition. Thus Galatians 3:10 should be seen together with Galatians 3:13-14 as the negative side of the traditional hope—already articulated in Deuteronomy 27—32—which looks forward to the inclusion of the Gentiles in the restoration of Israel (cf. Deut 32:43, cited in Rom 15:10). Seen in this light, Paul's exilic understanding of the Deuteronomic curse in Galatians 3:10 parallels that found in Jewish inscriptions of Asia Minor (cf. Trebilco, 60-69), which may help to explain why the Galatian addressees could be expected to follow the rather enthymatic argument here.

2.3.4. Paul's Use of Deuteronomic Tradition in Romans 9—11. Here, again, the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history provides the framework for Paul's thinking. In Romans 9—11 Paul presents a sustained theological argument to solve the problem of Israel which was raised in the first eight chapters of the letter. That problem is as follows: although the gospel* is to the Jew first (Rom 1:16), most of Israel is closed to the gospel (Rom 10:16) and therefore has not received salvation (cf. Hofius, 175-78). Has God's promise to Abraham* and his seed been annulled (Rom 9:6)? Has God rejected his people (Rom 11:1-2)? These are the questions which, as an Israelite motivated by supreme love for his people (cf. Rom 9:2-3), Paul seeks to answer in this section, showing that "the gifts and calling of God are irrevocable" (Rom 11:29). Paul's salvation-historical argument in Romans 9—11 is framed by the six traditional elements of the Deuteronomic perspective (see 1.2.2 above).

(1) As in the first element of the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history, Paul affirms in Romans the recalcitrance and guilt of the Jewish people. He makes this point already in Romans 2:1-29, often alluding to Deuteronomy, and carries this thought forward in Romans 9—11. In Romans 9:31, for example, Paul states: "Israel who was pursuing the law of righteousness has not attained to that Law." In Romans 10:21, furthermore, Paul brings out the historical dimension of Israel's guilt by the citation of Isaiah 65:2: "But of Israel he [Isaiah] says, 'All day long I [God] have held out my hands to a disobedient and contrary people.' " In this citation, Paul thrusts forward the phrase "all day long" in order to stress the constancy with which God has graciously appealed to his people, most recently in announcing to them the gospel message. As Bultmann correctly observes,

> When Paul characterizes Israel according to Isaiah 65:2 as "a disobedient and contrary people" (Rom 10:21), he understands the history of Israel as a whole, that is, as a unified history of sin. And this sin is, so to speak, concentrated—and thereby in its essence manifested—in the Jews' lack of faith in Christ and the Christian message. All the accusations of the Jews and threats of the prophets are applied to the present time (Rom 9:25—11:10). (Bultmann, 100)

Thus Bultmann, who immediately before this comment denies that a Deuteronomic view of Israel's history is found in Paul, unwittingly makes a strong argument for its existence in Romans 9—11! For, as Steck (1967, 193) has shown, the Deuteronomic view brings the whole sinful history of Israel to bear on the present. As in 1 Thessalonians 2:15-16, Paul is saying here that Israel has been continually disobedient and obstinate.

(2-3) As in the second and third elements of the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history, Romans 9—11 features Israel's violent rejection of the prophets, at least tangentially. For in showing that God has not rejected his people totally and finally (cf. Rom 11:1-2a), Romans 11:2b-5 adduces 1 Kings 19:10, 14:

> Do you not know what the scripture says of Elijah, how he pleads with God against Israel? "Lord, they have killed your prophets, they have demolished your altars, and I alone am left, and they seek my life." But what is God's reply to him? "I have kept for myself seven thousand who have not bowed the knee to Baal." So too at the present time, there is a remnant, chosen by grace.

Although Paul's main point in citing this text is that now as always God has preserved a remnant in Israel (cf. Rom 9:27-29), the fact that the apostle thrusts forward the statement about the killing of the prophets suggests that he also wants to stress, as in 1 Thessalonians 2:15, the continual obduracy of Israel to the prophetic message, including his own gospel message (cf. Rom 10:16; 15:31). The Deuteronomic view of Israel's history traditionally uses Israel's violent rejection of the prophets as an indication of Israel's continual obduracy. In fact, 1 Enoch 89:51 alludes to 1 Kings 19:10, 14 in the context of the Deuteronomic framework (cf. Steck 1967, 155 n. 5). Therefore, the reference to Israel's killing of the prophets in Romans 11:3 should be seen, along with that in 1 Thessalonians 2:15, as an element of the Deuteronomic perspective (pace Steck 1967, 278 n. 2).

(4) As in the fourth element of the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history and 1 Thessalonians 2:16 which appropriates this perspective, Romans affirms the wrath of God on the Jewish people (Rom 2:6-8; 3:5, "on us"). Furthermore, as Hays has observed, the quotation of Isaiah 52:5 in Romans 2:24—"The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles because of you"—works in Paul's argument only if the Jewish readers castigated by the text take on the role of Israel in Exile. This does not require Jewish readers to strain their own imaginations, for the Deuteronomic tradition which Paul appropriates assumes that the Jewish people remain under judgment in Exile long after the sixth century B.C. and indeed until the time of the restoration.

The concept of the judgment on Israel is developed in more detail in Romans 9—11. Already in Romans 9:1-3 Paul implies that divine judgment rests on Israel, for, with great sorrow and anguish for his people, the apostle expresses the wish that he were "accursed and cut off from Christ for the sake of my own people, my kindred by race." Paul's anguish for his people stems from the realization, which he articulates in the subsequent context, that the majority of Israel remains under the condemnation of God, at least for the time being. The presence of a "remnant" may show that God has not abandoned his people (Rom 11:1-6), but the fact remains that the "rest" of Israel who are not included in the remnant stand under condemnation. For according to Romans 11:10, David's curse applies to "Israel" which "failed to obtain what it sought" (Rom 11:7; cf. 10:3): "let their eyes be darkened so that they cannot see, and keep their back forever bent" in servitude. Moreover, Romans 11:15 presupposes that God has rejected the majority of Israel. Romans 11:17-24 pictures Israel as an olive tree (see Olive Tree) whose branches are cut off because of their "unfaithfulness" (Rom 11:17, 19-22; cf. 3:3). The image stems from Jeremiah 11:16-17 (cf. Hos 14:6), which prophesies that as an olive tree Israel's branches would be broken for violating the covenant—a possible reference to the judgment in 587 B.C.

In view of this evidence, there is much to commend Wright's observation (1980, 218) that in Romans 9—11 Paul is "working out the exile-theology of Moses' closing speech in Deuteronomy, applying it to his new situation as others had applied it to the exile itself (Jeremiah) or the Maccabean crisis (Qumran, the apocalyptists), and would apply it to the events of A.D. 70 (4 Ezra, the Rabbis)."

(5) As in the fifth element of the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history, Romans 2:4-5 makes it clear that God wants to lead Israel to repentance before the final judgment, but that Israel has had a hard and impenitent heart (cf. Deut 31:27). Romans 9—11 elaborates on this point by arguing that Israel's present rejection of the gospel reflects their continual obduracy to the message of the prophets. During the period that God has been showing his wrath, he "has endured with much patience the vessels of wrath made for destruction . . ." (Rom 9:22; cf. 1 Thess 2:16). Paul writes in Romans 10:16, citing Isaiah 53:1: "But they have not all obeyed the gospel; for Isaiah says, 'Lord, who has believed what he has heard from us?' " In other words, what Isaiah could say in his day applies equally in Paul's day because of the continual obduracy of the people. Likewise in Romans 11:7b-8 Paul states, citing Deuteronomy 29:3 (+ Is 29:10): "The elect obtained it, but the rest were hardened, as it is written,

'God gave them a spirit of stupor, eyes that should not see and ears that should not hear, down to this very day.' " Thus Paul affirms, in accordance with the Deuteronomic perspective, that Israel has always been recalcitrant and continues to be so. Moreover, as Paul goes on to say in Romans 11:25: "a hardening has come upon part of Israel, until the full number of the Gentiles has come in." Yet Paul also argues on the basis of Deuteronomy 32:21, a text about Israel's experience in exile, that God seeks to make Israel jealous by means of the Gentiles in order to provoke Israel to repentance and emulation (cf. Rom 10:19; 11:11, 14).

Hence the apostle to the Gentiles has a twofold purpose in evangelizing the Gentiles as quickly as possible: First, he hopes thereby to provoke his fellow Jews to jealousy and thus bring some of them to salvation (Rom 11:13-14). If they do not persist in unbelief, the Jews will be grafted in, for God has the power to graft them in again (Rom 11:23). But, second, he also hopes to bring in the full number of the Gentiles and so bring about the parousia, when all Israel will be saved (Rom 11:25-26).

(6) As in the sixth element of the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history, Romans 9—11 expects the national restoration of Israel in conjunction with the eschatological pilgrimage of the Gentiles. In Romans 11:25-32 Paul reiterates that the salvation of Israel follows the salvation of the Gentiles (cf. Rom 11:11-15), and that the Gentile Christians are not to be conceited (cf. Rom 11:17-24). Paul is confident that the natural branches will be grafted back into their own olive tree (Rom 11:24). He then takes this a step further by describing how Israel will eventually be saved.

First, the hardening of Israel will continue "until the fullness* of the Gentiles comes in" (Rom 11:25), which implies an ongoing historical process which will be completed in the future. In accordance with the OT/Jewish concept of the "eschatological measure," the fullness of the Gentiles (cf. Rom 11:12) refers to a particular number of Gentiles who are predestined to be saved. In other words, as long as Israel remains hardened and thus fills up the measure of their sin* (cf. 1 Thess 2:16), the Gentiles would fill up another measure, according to the sovereign plan of God. Paul probably thought that once the Spanish mission was completed the full number of the Gentiles would be reached (cf. Riesner).

The idea of the Gentiles' "coming in" implies the OT/Jewish expectation of the pilgrimage of the Gentiles to Zion in the messianic time. If the image of the pilgrimage of the Gentiles in Isaiah 2:2-5 has been used here, the order has been reversed: The nations do not come to Israel because they see Israel's glory; rather, Israel comes to the nations because she sees the salvation and glory which they have in Christ. As Hofius (324) suggests, however, Paul may have in mind certain OT texts which put the eschatological pilgrimage of the Gentiles before the restoration of Israel. When the full number of the Gentiles comes in, then, second, all Israel, including the previously impenitent and hardened majority, will be saved at the parousia (cf. Hofius, 319-20). Thus Romans 11:26-27 states, citing Isaiah 59:20 and 27:9: "And so all Israel will be saved, just as it is written: The Deliverer will come from Zion, he will remove ungodliness from Jacob"; "and this will be my covenant with them when I take away their sins."

Interpreters often wonder whether "all Israel will be saved" means every single Israelite or only a full and proper representation of Israel. The answer may be neither, for according to the Deuteronomic tradition which frames Romans 9—11, Israel is a unity in a historical continuum (cf. 1.2.2. above). Therefore, Romans 11:26 probably has in view the people of Israel taken as a whole from their initial election to their ultimate salvation. This will be the time of the resurrection of the dead (cf. Rom 11:15), which is closely associated with the restoration of Israel (cf. Haacker). This will also be the time of the new covenant,* when God will restore the covenantal relationship with his people and forgive Israel's sins (Jer 31:31-34; cf. 1 Cor 11:25-26; 2 Cor 3:1-18; 6:14—7:1). Finally, this will be the time of the deliverance and vindication of Israel expected in Deuteronomy 32:36-43, when the Gentiles will rejoice with Israel (Deut 32:43). Interestingly enough, Paul cites Deuteronomy 32:43 LXX in Romans 15:10 for the benefit of Gentile believers. The fact that the Gentiles participate in the restoration of Israel was signaled already by the quotations of Hosea 2:25; 2:1 (LXX) in Romans 9:25-26.

E. P. Sanders (1985, 91-119) finds in Romans 9—11 such compelling evidence of traditional restoration eschatology that he suggests Paul can be adduced, together with John the Baptist, to show that the expectation of the restoration stands at the conclusion as well as at the beginning of Jesus' ministry. For Sanders, however, Paul's concept of restoration is a somewhat desperate expedient to solve what he calls Paul's "fundamental theological problem," that is, how to hold together and/or reconcile the two dispensations of election/Law and faith, and thus to save God's reputation from the charge of arbitrariness (Sanders 1991, 117-28; cf. also Räisänen, 196). Sanders thinks that Paul is caught in a dilemma—how to reconcile God's promises to Israel with the promise of salvation to those who have faith* in Christ—which cannot be solved as long as the apostle is considering the present age. Hence Paul changes categories by "lateral thinking," relegating the solution to the future, when God will save everyone and everything.

The problem with assuming such a dilemma, however, is that it ignores the fundamental question: Why did Israel need a restoration in the first place? Sanders fails to see that, according to the Deuteronomic view of Israel's history which Paul appropriates in Romans 9—11, there was a plight: Israel had apostatized from the covenant and this led to their judgment in exile; covenantal nomism had ceased to be a viable option after 587 B.C.

See also APOCALYPTICISM; COVENANT AND NEW COVENANT; CURSE, ACCURSED, ANATHEMA; ESCHATOLOGY; ISRAEL; JUDGMENT; LAW; WRATH, DESTRUCTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. H. Bell, "The Origin and Purpose of the Jealousy Motif in Romans 9-11: A Case Study in the Theology and Technique of Paul" (Dr. theol. dissertation, Eberhard-Karls-Universität, Tübingen, 1990); O. Betz, "Die heilsgeschichtliche Rolle Israels bei Paulus," Theologische Beiträge 9 (1978) 1-21; R. Bultmann, "Geschichte und Eschatologie im Neuen Testament," in Glauben und Verstehen. Gesammelte Aufsätze (2d ed.; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1962) 3.91-106; N. A. Dahl, "The Future of Israel," in Studies in Paul: Theology for the Early Christian Mission (Minneapolis: Augsburg, 1977) 137-58; K. Haacker, "Das Bekenntnis des Paulus zur Hoffnung Israels nach der Apostelgeschichte des Lukas," NTS 31 (1985) 437-51; S. Hafemann, "The Salvation of Israel in Romans 11:25-32: A Response to Krister Stendahl," Ex Auditu 4 (1989) 38-58; M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism (2 vols.; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1974); idem, The Pre-Christian Paul (Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1991); O. Hofius, "Das Evangelium und Israel. Erwägungen zu Römer 9-11," ZThK 83 (1986) 297-324; S. Kim, The Origin of Paul's Gospel (2d ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1984); B. W. Longenecker, "Different Answers to Different Issues: Israel, the Gentiles and Salvation History in Romans 9-11," JSNT 36 (1989) 95-123; D. J. McCarthy, "The Wrath of Yahweh and the Structural Unity of the Deuteronomistic History," in Essays in Old Testament Ethics (J. Philip Hyatt, In Memoriam), ed. J. L. Crenshaw and J. T. Willis (New York: Ktav, 1974) 99-107; D. P. Moessner, "Paul in Acts: Preacher of Eschatological Repentance to Israel," NTS 34 (1988) 96-104; J. Munck, Paul and the Salvation of Mankind (Atlanta: John Knox, 1959); J. Neusner, Self-Fulfilling Prophecy: Exile and Return in the History of Judaism (Boston: Beacon, 1987); G. W. E. Nickelsburg, Jewish Literature Between the Bible and the Mishnah: A Historical and Literary Introduction (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1981); G. von Rad, "Gerichtsdoxologie," in Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament, ed. R. Smend (Munich: Chr. Kaiser Verlag, 1973) 2.245-54; H. Räisänen, "Paul, God and Israel: Romans 9-11 in Recent Research," in The Social World of Formative Christianity and Judaism: Essays in Tribute to Howard Clark Kee, ed. J. Neusner et al. (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); R. Riesner, Die Frühzeit des Paulus. Studien zur Chronologie, Missionsstrategie und Theologie des Apostels bis zum ersten Thessalonicher-Brief (WUNT; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, forthcoming); E. P. Sanders, Jesus and Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); idem, Paul (Oxford: University Press, 1991); idem, Paul and Palestinian Judaism: A Comparison of Patterns of Religion (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977); K. O. Sandnes, Paul—One of the Prophets? A Contribution to the Apostle's Self-Understanding (WUNT 2.43; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1991); J. Scharbert, "Unsere Sünden und die Sünden unserer Väter," BZ 2 (1958) 14-26; J. M. Scott, Adoption as Sons of God: An Exegetical Investigation into the Background of ΥΙΟΘΕΣΙΑ in the Pauline Corpus (WUNT 2.48; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1992); idem, " 'For as many as are of works of the law are under a curse' (Gal 3:10)," in Paul and the Scriptures of Israel, ed. C. A. Evans and J. A. Sanders (Sheffield: JSNT, forthcoming); D. M. Smith, "The Pauline Literature," in It Is Written: Scripture Citing Scripture. Essays in Honour of Barnabas Lindars, ed. D. A. Carson and H. G. M. Williamson (Cambridge: University Press, 1988); O. H. Steck, Israel und das gewaltsame Geschick der Propheten. Untersuchungen zur Überlieferung des deuteronomistischen Geschichtsbildes im Alten Testament, Spätjudentum und Urchristentum (WMANT 23; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 1967); idem, "Das Problem theologischer Strömungen in nachexilischer Zeit," EvT 28 (1968) 445-58; P. R. Trebilco, Jewish Communities in Asia Minor (SNTSMS 69; Cambridge: University Press, 1991); N. Walter, "Zur Interpretation von Römer 9-11," ZThK 81 (1984) 172-95; N. T. Wright, "The Messiah and the People of God: A Study in Pauline Theology with Particular Reference to the Argument of the Epistle to the Romans" (D. Phil. thesis, University of Oxford, 1980); idem, The Climax of the Covenant: Christ and the Law in Pauline Theology (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1992); Y. Yadin, The Temple Scroll (Jerusalem: The Israel Exploration Society/The Institute of Archaeology of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem/The Shrine of the Book, 1983).

J. M. Scott

RESTRAINING POWER.

See MAN OF LAWLESSNESS AND RESTRAINING POWER.

RESURRECTION

The resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead is foundational to the Christian faith. It is referred to explicitly in seventeen books of the NT and is implicit in most of the remaining ten. Nearly all of the letters within the Pauline corpus refer to it (the exceptions are 2 Thess, Tit, Philem). Indeed, Romans 10:9 makes confession of the resurrection the equivalent of acceptance of the lordship of Jesus Christ and a necessary condition of salvation,* and 1 Corinthians 15:14 demonstrates how closely connected it is in Paul's mind to his own kerygmatic ministry.* In Romans 4:25 Paul decisively grounds the doctrine of justification* upon Christ's resurrection when he says that Jesus was "raised for our justification" (dia tēn dikaiōsin hēmōn); while in Philippians 3:11 he equates "knowing Christ" with knowing "the power of the resurrection." It is no surprise that the longest single chapter in the Pauline letters (1 Cor 15) is given over completely to a discussion of the resurrection.

The resurrection of Jesus Christ stands as the central motif in Paul's eschatology* insofar as it inaugurates the age to come and provides the basis for future hope. The Christ event is, in the evocative words of McDonald: "the Archimedean point that has levered the world of Jewish religion into a new order" (McDonald, 28). The resurrection of Christ and the resurrection of the faithful on the last day are related, the hope of the latter being based upon the certainty of the former.

Two remarks about the resurrection of Jesus Christ as it is portrayed in the Pauline letters need to be made at the outset. First, it is important to note that Paul never attempts to prove the historicity of the resurrection to any of the congregations to which he addresses his letters (contra Bultmann's views on 1 Cor 15:3-8). He simply asserts the resurrection as a fact (presumably believed by them) and seeks to draw out its implications for their life and faith. Paul is not concerned with philosophical questions of how subjective faith and objective history interrelate; this is predominantly a post-Enlightenment issue which is driven by positivistic concerns not a part of Paul's outlook. Modern attempts to argue for the historical verification of the resurrection of Jesus Christ based upon the Pauline materials are therefore misdirected, even though they are generally motivated by the best apologetic concerns (Ladd offers a readable discussion of this issue).

Second, Paul nowhere describes the actual resurrection of Jesus Christ itself, nor does he seek to provide an account of it simply as a historical event to be put alongside other events of history. The resurrection is historical, yes, but it is also more than historical (or to use McDonald's term, "meta-historical"; McDonald, 138). What descriptions Paul does offer about the risen Christ are postresurrectional appearances of the Lord which are taken to be illustrative of the event and serve as circumstantial guarantees of its historicity. Thus he begins his longest discussion of the resurrection theme by citing a traditional formula which summarizes the kerygma (1 Cor 15:3-4) and then proceeds to list the witnesses to these postresurrectional appearances of the Lord Jesus (1 Cor 15:6-8). The appeal to pre-Pauline tradition highlights the centrality of the resurrection proclamation from the earliest period of the Christian movement (see Kloppenborg and Murphy-O'Connor for a discussion of this passage).

Both of these considerations should be kept in mind in all apologetical concerns focusing on the resurrection as the basis of Christian faith.

1. The Origins of a Doctrine of Resurrection
2. Paul and Pharisaic Belief in the Resurrection
3. Terminology of the Resurrection
4. Images of the Resurrection
5. Co-Crucifixion and Co-Resurrection in Christ
6. The Resurrection: Some Issues of Interpretation

1. The Origins of a Doctrine of Resurrection.

Most scholars agree that the doctrine of bodily resurrection is a fairly late development within the writings of Judaism. The first unambiguous declarations in the OT of resurrection from the dead occur in Daniel 12:2 and (possibly) Isaiah 26:19, although there are antecedents of it in the miracles of resuscitation performed through Elijah and Elisha (1 and 2 Kings), and in images of a national revival within OT prophetic literature (notably Hos 6:1-2 and the vision of the valley of dry bones contained in Ezek 37:1-14). A bodily resurrection from the dead is also proclaimed in a number of Jewish apocryphal and pseudepigraphal texts, including 2 Maccabees, 4 Ezra, 1 Enoch and 2 Baruch. There are also important background materials, at least to do with postmortem life, within the classical tradition of Platonism, usually as an image of the spiritual awakening or the transmigration of the soul (see Perkins, 37-69). The matter has been well researched by scholarship and need not be rehearsed here (see Nickelsburg and Greenspoon for detailed studies of Jewish background texts).

While Paul's letters are the earliest Christian writings to mention the resurrection of Christ, there is every indication that the idea was part of Jesus' own belief and expectation. All four Gospels record reference to it in virtually all strata (some may deny it is expressed in 'Q'). Paul may have taken over the centrality of the resurrection as a theological idea from Jesus himself (see Witherington), although it certainly was present within the Pharisaic party of Judaism of which he was a member.

2. Paul and Pharisaic Belief in the Resurrection.
Paul's membership within the Pharisaic party of Judaism is asserted in both his letters (Phil 3:5) and by Luke (Acts 23:6; 26:5). In Acts the disagreement between the Sadducees and the Pharisees over the doctrine of a bodily resurrection is a prominent theme (Acts 4:2; 23:6-8; 24:21; cf. Acts 26:6; 28:20). It is reasonable to assume that Paul accepted the traditional Pharisaic view of the resurrection of the body and understood his encounter of the risen Lord Jesus Christ in light of it. As Sider states, "as a good first-century Pharisee, Paul could not conceive of the resurrection of the dead in purely immaterial terms" (Sider, 438; for further discussion see Davies, 285-320).

3. Terminology of the Resurrection.
There are several different words and phrases which are used to describe the idea of resurrection or associated concepts within the Pauline letters. The verb anistēmi ("raise up") is used a total of five times with reference to the resurrection, both of Christ (1 Thess 4:14; cf. Rom 15:12) and of the believer (1 Thess 4:16; Eph 5:14). The verb egeirō ("raise," "cause to rise") appears a total of thirty-eight times with reference to the resurrection (Rom 4:24, 25; 6:4, 9; 7:4; 8:11 (twice), 34; 10:9; 13:11; 1 Cor 6:14; 15:4, 12, 13, 14, 15 (twice), 16 (twice), 17, 20, 29, 32, 35, 42, 43 (twice), 52; 2 Cor 1:9; 4:14 (twice); 5:15; Gal 1:1; Eph 1:20; 5:14; Col 2:12; 1 Thess 1:10; 2 Tim 2:8); and the compound verb exegeirō ("raise up") once in reference to the resurrection of believers (1 Cor 6:14). In addition the noun anastasis ("resurrection") is used eight times (Rom 1:4; 6:5; 1 Cor 15:12, 13, 21, 42; Phil 3:10; 2 Tim 2:18) and the noun exanastasis ("resurrection") occurs once (Phil 3:11). These terms are used of both the resurrection of Jesus Christ himself and the raising of the believers which the Lord's resurrection guarantees (Dahl provides a chart detailing the use of the terms in the NT).

Some have argued that there is a difference in meaning between these two word groups (egeirō and anistēmi) and on that basis have attempted to trace a development in the use of the terms within the Pauline materials. Coenen, for example, suggests that a close examination "shows that egeirō, especially in the pass., is used predominantly for what happened at Easter, i.e. the wakening of the Crucified to life, while anistēmi and anastasis refer more specifically to the recall to life of people during the earthly ministry of Jesus and to the eschatological and universal resurrection" (Coenen, 276). However, an absolute distinction seems rather arbitrary and difficult to sustain (both 1 Cor 15:12-13 and 15:42 appear to use the two verbs interchangeably and Eph 5:14 includes both verbs within its citation of Is 60:1). It seems that Paul does not intend that any substantial difference be maintained between the two, although the use of egeirō may be more traditional and related to an underlying Palestinian source (it does appear frequently within passages often taken to contain creedal declarations such as 1 Cor 15:4; see Creed).

In Romans 6:10 and 14:9 the verb zaō ("to live") is used with reference to Jesus' resurrection. It is similarly used in 2 Corinthians 13:4 and is explicitly contrasted with the verb stauroō ("crucify"); the verse also applies the verb zaō to the Christians who will share in Christ's resurrection. The compound verb form syzēsomen ("we will live with [him]") in Romans 6:8 and 2 Timothy 2:11, as well as syndoxasthōmen ("we may be glorified with [him]") in Romans 8:17 are used to the same end. The use of the verb zōopoieō ("to give life to") also builds on a resurrection idea and occurs six times (Rom 4:17; 8:11; 1 Cor 15:22, 36, 45; 2 Cor 3:6), usually within the context of the ultimate resurrection of the saints and the manifestation of the glory* of God. Similarly the verb synegeirō ("to rise up together") in Colossians 2:12; 3:1 and Ephesians 2:6, as well as synezōopoiēsen ("he made alive together with [him]") in Colossians 2:13 and Ephesians 2:5 continue this theme, expressing the union of the church in Christ's death. The verb anagō ("to bring up") occurs once in Romans 10:7 with reference to the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead (Christon ek nekrōn anagagein, "to bring Christ up from the dead").

The use of anabainō ("to go up, ascend") in Ephesians 4:8, 10 and anelēmphthē ("he was taken up") in 1 Timothy 3:16 may also reflect an underlying resurrection theme, demonstrating how closely connected is the language of ascension and resurrection. This is particularly evident in pre-Pauline materials, such as those contained in Romans 1:4; 8:34; Philippians 2:9 and 1 Thessalonians 1:10 (Baird discusses this at some length).

4. Images of the Resurrection.
It is important to note that the English phrase "resurrection from the dead" evokes a rather different mental picture than does its Greek equivalent anastaseōs nekrōn (Rom 1:4; cf. Phil 3:11 which has ek nekrōn, lit. "out from the dead ones"). In English something of the dynamism of the phrase is lost due to the fact that we take "dead" to be a state of being or the place of habitation of those who are departed, almost as if it were a singular, abstract noun. In Greek, however, the noun behind nekrōn is a plural one, which means the phrase anastasis nekrōn may be translated literally as "resurrection from out of dead ones" (cf. Phil 3:11). The Greek expression contains a much more dynamic image, conjuring up a picture of "the standing up from the midst of corpses," and lending weight to the somatic nature of the resurrection body. But it is essential to observe that Paul does not proclaim a "resurrection of the flesh," as subsequent Christian writers were to do (including the author of 2 Clement and Justin Martyr). Paul maintains a distinction between sarx ("flesh") and sōma ("body") when it comes to his teaching about the resurrection.

It is important to show that Paul draws upon several different ideas in an effort to communicate the meaning of this resurrection, which he describes as "a mystery"* (mystērion) in 1 Corinthians 15:51. The wide variety of images employed is revealing in its own right; demonstrating the limitations of language when it is put into the service of attempting to describe the indescribable. There is an open-endedness, a flexibility of expression, within Paul's description of the resurrection which is both exhilarating and frustrating to interpreters. The images may be discussed under eight headings.

4.1. Resurrection as Transformation. At several points Paul uses the language of transformation in his description of the future resurrection awaited by the Christian. In Philippians 3:10 a participial form of the verb symmorphizō ("to take on the same form") occurs in precisely this context: "that I may know him and the power of his resurrection, and may share his sufferings, becoming like him (symmorphizomenos) in his death." At the conclusion of the same chapter the image is expanded and linked directly with the revelation of the Lord Jesus Christ as savior* from heaven (Phil 3:20). In Philippians 3:21 the language of transformation appears twice: "(Jesus Christ) will change (metaschēmatisei) our lowly body to be like (symmorphon) his glorious body." One of the clearest expressions of resurrection as transformation occurs in 1 Corinthians 15:51-52, where the apostle twice uses the verb allagēsometha ("we shall be changed") to describe what awaits the believing community at the parousia of Christ. This future transformation is described in verse 52 as instantaneous (en atomō, en rhipē ophthalmou, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye"). Such transformation language is different in emphasis from that contained in passages from earlier letters, such as 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18 where a spatial metaphor ("caught up together") dominates the action associated with the parousia. Gillman describes the shift such a difference represents as a move from the implicit to the explicit and suggests the "rapture" imagery of 1 Thessalonians 4 is fully compatible with the transformation motif in 1 Corinthians 15.

It is important to note that in 1 Corinthians 15:51-54a Paul is dealing with the matter of the transformation of those who happen to be alive at the parousia of Christ. Here the apostle teaches a universal transformation of all who are in Christ, both living and dead, but maintains that this does not mean that all will be resurrected. Only those who have died are in need of resurrection; for those who are alive at the parousia the transformation is sufficient to grant immortality in the age to come. Some NT commentators, notably J. Jeremias (following the lead of A. Schlatter), have taken the contrasting phrases in 1 Corinthians 15:50b-c to imply a similar distinction between those believers alive at the parousia and those who have already died (see 4.3 below for additional details). In any event the future transformation is clearly in view in 1 Corinthians 15.

By contrast we find eschatological transformation being described as presently taking place in 2 Corinthians 3:18. Here the present passive verb metamorphoumetha ("we are being transformed") is used in the midst of an extended passage in which Paul contrasts the glory of Moses with the glory of Christ (2 Cor 3:12—4:6). A similar use of the verb occurs in Romans 12:2, again emphasizing the present process of transformation.

The suggestion that transformation can be dualistically conceived (both present and future) demonstrates the tension inherent within Pauline eschatology as a whole. Despite this E. E. Ellis insists that Paul does not really present us with a true dualism since moral transformation is a present process, while mortal transformation awaits the granting of the resurrection body at the parousia of Christ; what unites the two aspects of transformation is a corporate existence, the fact that the believer is "in Christ." The idea of resurrection as expressing the present spiritual transformation of the believer in Christ can also be found in Romans 6:1-11; 2 Corinthians 4:10-12; 5:15; 13:4; Galatians 5:24-25; 6:14-45; Colossians 2:12 and Ephesians 2:5-6 (as Harris, 101-5, argues). Once again the close connection between the believers' unity with Christ in his resurrection and their ethical conduct is asserted.

4.2. Resurrection as Incorruption. In the midst of his extended treatise on the subject in 1 Corinthians 15 Paul uses a number of contrasting terms and images to describe how resurrection life differs from the present order of existence. Included are the contrasting pairs, perishable/imperishable (1 Cor 15:42); dishonor/glory (1 Cor 15:43); weakness*/power* (1 Cor 15:43); physical body/spiritual body (1 Cor 15:44; see Body); man of dust/man of heaven (1 Cor 15:47-49). In 1 Corinthians 15:50 Paul again asserts the first of these contrasting pairs, perishable/imperishable, when he says: "flesh and blood does not inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable." The relevant Greek terms (phthora and aphtharsia) provide quite a powerful image and are better translated as "corruptibility" and "incorruptibility" respectively. The term aphtharsia occurs seven times in the NT, all within the Pauline corpus (Rom 2:7; 1 Cor 15:42, 50, 53, 54; Eph 6:24; 2 Tim 1:10), while four of the seven instances of the cognate term aphthartos ("imperishable") in the NT are also found in Paul's letters (Rom 1:23; 1 Cor 9:25; 15:52; 1 Tim 1:17). There is a close connection between aphtharsia/aphthartos and the resurrection of Jesus Christ throughout, a vivid demonstration of the eschatological significance of the term.

In addition to the instances occurring within the extended discussion on the resurrection in 1 Corinthians 15, the revelation of aphtharsia through the destruction of death by means of Christ's resurrection is the focus of the assertion in 2 Timothy 1:10; aphtharsia is associated with eternal life in Romans 2:7; and aphthartos is used figuratively of the resurrection body within the confines of an athletic image in 1 Corinthians 9:25. Exceptions include Ephesians 6:24, where the term aphtharsia is used to describe Christian love of the Lord ("undying love"), and Romans 1:23 and 1 Timothy 1:17 where aphthartos is used as an attribute of God.*

Jeremias offers an interesting, if disputed, interpretation of 1 Corinthians 15:50, suggesting that a distinction be made between the metamorphosis of the living believer (1 Cor 15:50b) and the deceased one (1 Cor 15:50c), and that a contrast be drawn between Paul's language of corruption/incorruption and mortality/immortality.* In effect Jeremias says that the phrase "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God" refers to those who are alive at the parousia, and argues that "nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable" refers to those who have died before the parousia and are presently corpses in decomposition. He goes on to suggest that a similar distinction between the living and the dead is found in 1 Corinthians 15:50-53. However, the proposed distinction is almost certainly a forced one (or at least a limited one), and most scholars have not followed Jeremias in rigidly maintaining it (H. Conzelmann is a good representative of those who disagree with Jeremias).

An essential part of Jeremias's argument is the use of another term in 1 Corinthians 15:53-54, immortality (athanasia), a term usually used to describe, as in 1 Timothy 6:16, an attribute of God himself (Harris, 273-75, provides a full terminological discussion of aphtharsia and athanasia, both of which he renders as "immortality"*). Some have taken the language of investiture in 2 Corinthians 5:2-4 also to imply this distinction between the deceased believer and the believer who is alive at the parousia of Christ.

4.3. Resurrection as Immortality. Paul uses another interesting term to describe the resurrection in 1 Corinthians 15:53b-54. Here he describes it as the mortal nature (to thnēton) taking on immortality (athanasia). The resurrection is the means whereby Christians gain immortality, and death is, in the poetic image drawn from Isaiah 25:8, "swallowed up in victory." The distinction between athanasia and aphtharsia is not always easy to define, but the association of both with the resurrection of the body is sure. Harris argues persuasively that while immortality (either athanasia or aphtharsia) and resurrection are intimately linked, the former is consistently presented as a future possession granted at the parousia of Christ to those who belong to him. In any event, immortality and resurrection both belong in Paul's thinking and are seen as related but distinct ideas (as Harris notes). Both are grounded in Paul's belief that the eschatological hope of the believer is somatic in nature and future in temporality.

4.4. Resurrection and Exaltation. In several places in Paul's letters there is a close connection drawn between Jesus' resurrection from the dead and his exaltation* to the right hand of God. Several of the passages which juxtapose these two images are considered by many to reflect pre-Pauline traditions, namely Romans 1:3-4 and Philippians 2:9-11. In the case of the Philippian hymn the fact that there is movement from the death of Christ (Phil 2:8) to his exaltation (Phil 2:9-11) is somewhat unusual. This has caused many to consider that the original Christian proclamation about the resurrection was in fact a theological message of his vindication before God and not a historical message about his bodily resurrection from the dead. However, such a distinction is falsely conceived (as Harris points out). Exaltation is clearly set forth as following the resurrection at several other places within the Pauline letters (Rom 8:34; Eph 1:20; 2:6; Col 3:1). While it is true that resurrection and exaltation should not be viewed as synonymous, there is an essential theological linkage between them. The exaltation is not so much a theological interpretation of the resurrection as the inevitable consequence of it, the logical result to which it is leading. As Harris states, "(Jesus') resurrection was the prerequisite and means of his exaltation and the exaltation was the outcome of his resurrection" (Harris, 85-86).

Strictly speaking, Paul does not relate detailed descriptions of Christ's physical ascension as such; in the NT this is found only in Luke/Acts and in veiled terms using traditional material (such as 1 Tim 3:16). Rather, Paul's letters tend to express the postresurrectional state of Jesus Christ in terms of both the Lord's exaltation and his glorification. Paul does, however, imply that the believers will experience a physical ascension to heaven at the parousia (1 Thess 4:16-17).

4.5. Resurrection and Glorification. The ultimate revelation of the glory of God is a well-established feature of Jewish eschatology. Paul also uses the language of glorification at several points to describe the implications of the resurrection for the Christian believer (see Glory, Glorification). 1 Thessalonians 2:12 associates the kingdom of God and glory, while 2 Thessalonians 2:14 unites the Christian calling and the future attainment of the glory of Jesus Christ. In Romans 5:2 the hope of sharing in the future glory of God is a matter of rejoicing for Paul, and in 2 Corinthians 4:17 he uses the poetic phrase "the eternal weight of glory" (aiōnion baros doxēs) to describe what lies in store for the faithful believer. In Romans 8:11-17 and 2 Corinthians 4:10-18 both "mortal bodies" (ta thnēta ta sōmata) and "mortal flesh" (thnētē sarx) are spoken of being eventually glorified as a result of the union between Christ and his church. In Romans 8:30 Paul even uses a series of aorist verbs, including edoxasen ("he glorified"), to proclaim the certainty of salvation based upon the union between Christ and believers. This description of the glorification associated with the resurrection as something in the past anticipates the language of the later letters (Col 1:27; 3:1, 4).

4.6. Resurrection and Eternal Life. In Galatians 6:8 we have an illustration of sowing/reaping used by Paul in which the Spirit is said to impart eternal life to the believer. This image is certainly eschatological in meaning and is probably best taken to be synonymous with future resurrection life. The phrase "eternal life" (zōē aiōnios) also occurs in passages concerned with the results of belief in Jesus Christ (Rom 5:21; 6:22-23; 1 Tim 1:16; 6:12; Tit 1:2; 3:7) and with the righteous final judgment* (Rom 2:7). Whereas some images of resurrection in Paul clearly allow the focus to be on the present dimension of life in Christ, the granting of eternal life in all its fullness is (like immortality) something which lies in the future.

4.7. Resurrection and Conformity to the Image of Christ. The "image* of Christ" is a key means of expressing christological truth in Paul, particularly within the bounds of the Adam/Christ analogy (see Adam and Christ). The assertion that the believer is also in the process of being conformed to the image of God (in Christ) is mentioned at several points (Rom 8:29; 2 Cor 3:18; Col 3:10). In each instance there is an overlap of imagery involved; "conformity to the image of Christ" is the Christian's eschatological goal and as such might be taken to be an overlap with resurrection. This is further evidenced by the fact that in 1 Corinthians 15:49 the Christian's resurrection hope is described as "bearing the image of the man from heaven." The heavenly dimension of Paul's eschatological thought is an important ingredient within his understanding of cosmic redemption* (as Lincoln argues).

4.8. Resurrection and Redemption of the Body. Paul's teaching about the bodily resurrection arises out of a Jewish anthropology in which the "soul" (Heb nepeš; Gk psychē) is the animating principle of human life (see Psychology). In mainstream Jewish thought human beings do not have souls, they are souls. This anthropological underpinning has tremendous implications for a doctrine of the resurrection in that it refuses to surrender the somatic component of a human being. Resurrection involves the redemption of the physical body, although (as we noted above) the somatic nature of that resurrection existence gives scope for some of Paul's most creative thinking in 1 Corinthians 15:35-49. Given this background it is perfectly understandable how in Romans 8:23 Paul describes the effects of the resurrection in terms of the ultimate "redemption of our bodies" (tēn apolytrōsin tou sōmatos hēmōn). A similar idea is expressed in Philippians 3:20-21, this time where the resurrection body of the believing community is closely tied to that of the risen Lord Christ. Other instances of the idea of redemption (apolytrōsis) within the Pauline corpus (Rom 3:24; 1 Cor 1:30; Eph 1:7, 14; 4:30; Col 1:14) should be seen within the context of the resurrection of Jesus Christ and its implications for both humankind and the cosmos (see World, Cosmology).

5. Co-Crucifixion and Co-Resurrection in Christ.

So certain is Paul of the unity which exists between Christ and his church that the believers can be described (within the confines of the image of baptism) as participating in Christ's death and resurrection (Rom 6:3-4, 8; Gal 3:27; Col 2:12; see Dying and Rising with Christ). A similar declaration is contained in Colossians 3:1 where the verb synegeirō ("to raise up with") is used in a first-class conditional clause (assuming the truth of the statement). This union with Christ in his death and resurrection also means that Christian existence (the resurrection life) can be described as "walking in newness of life" (Rom 6:4; cf. Rom 8:13; 2 Cor 5:15; Gal 5:24). Similarly in Philippians 3:10 Paul associates "knowledge of Christ and the power of his resurrection" with participation in his sufferings, pointing to the importance of Christ's resurrection for an ethical lifestyle which endures trial. The aim of such conduct, Paul continues, is the attainment of the resurrection (Phil 3:11). In 2 Corinthians 4:10 another provocative image is used when Paul describes the believer as carrying the death of Jesus around bodily so as to manifest the resurrection.

6. The Resurrection: Some Issues of Interpretation.

Historically speaking, several important theological questions have been raised concerning resurrection. These issues particularly involve the exegesis of key Pauline passages or the interpretation of particular themes. Early evidence of the importance of Paul in these interpretative matters can be seen in the fact that Gnostic* writings very often based their teaching on materials contained in his letters. It would be true to say that the complicated Pauline teaching about the resurrection body became one of the mainstays for the beliefs of Gnostic Christians in the second and third centuries. A classic Gnostic text which wrestles with these issues in typically Pauline language is the Epistle to Rheginos, an anonymous work otherwise known as The Treatise on the Resurrection (see Pagels).

Three issues call for reflection:

6.1. The Resurrection and the Messiahship of Jesus. Several important passages within the Pauline corpus associate the messiahship of Jesus with his resurrection from the dead (Rom 1:3-4; 1 Cor 15:4; 2 Tim 2:8; see Christ). Although it would be going too far to suggest that for Paul the resurrection is the act that inaugurates Jesus' messiahship, it certainly would be true to say that his messiahship is vindicated and proclaimed by means of it. Indeed, it is possible to see the resurrection of Jesus as demonstrating not only his messiahship but his cosmic lordship (as Beasley-Murray argues; see Lord).

Nonetheless, it is possible to believe in the resurrection of Jesus from the dead without necessarily affirming that this divine act confirmed his messiahship. This may come as a surprise to many Christians since the two are sometimes taken to be equivalent. A good example of this viewpoint is the Jewish scholar P. Lapide, who accepts the historicity of Jesus' bodily resurrection, but does not therefore describe himself as a Christian (by definition, one who affirms Jesus as Messiah). For Lapide the resurrection of Jesus is part of God's preparatory work, making the world ready for the future revelation of the Messiah. The example of Lapide is a case in point for the too-casual assumption that the resurrection of Jesus is at the same time the self-evident proclamation of him as Messiah. At the same time, Lapide's argument offers an interesting insight into one of the peculiarities of modern NT interpretation. In an age when many competent Christian scholars find reason to deny the historicity of the bodily resurrection of Jesus and yet retain their Christian faith, here we have a Jewish scholar who strongly affirms the bodily resurrection and yet seeks to claim no faith on the basis of it. It is a salient lesson about the messianic content of the resurrection faith as Paul proclaims it.

6.2. The Resurrection and the Empty Tomb Motif. All four Gospels mention the empty tomb within their resurrection narratives (Mt 28:6; Mk 16:6; Lk 24:2; Jn 20:4-7). On the other hand, while Paul does explicitly mention the burial of Jesus (1 Cor 15:4; cf. Rom 6:4), he nowhere mentions the empty tomb in connection with the resurrection. Cranfield, however, feels it is "almost certainly implied" (Cranfield, 168) by the mention of Christ's burial between "died" and "he was raised" in 1 Corinthians 15:4. It could simply be an accident of circumstance that Paul never mentions the empty tomb, although R. H. Stein has put forward the suggestion that the omission is due to apologetic concerns on the part of Paul: "When it came to the resurrection appearances, the apostle could argue on equal terms with the other disciples. He, too, had seen the Lord! He could not, however, say the same about the empty tomb" (Stein, 12).

In any event, within the NT the empty tomb is never adduced as proof of the resurrection of Jesus from the dead. This has led some to drive a wedge between the resurrection of Jesus and the evidence of the empty tomb, with a view to denying the historicity of the resurrection itself. The resurrection is capable of thereby being "spiritualized," and its basis in history is seriously undermined if not jettisoned altogether. In recent years in Britain this line of argumentation has been popularly associated with the Bishop of Durham, David Jenkins (see Harris [1985] for details). The guarantee of the resurrection (so the argument goes) is not the empty tomb but the presence of the risen Lord in the lives of the believing community (see Harris, 37-44, and Walker). The Pauline materials, particularly 1 Corinthians 15, are at the heart of much of this modern discussion. It is unlikely that Paul would have accepted the truth of the resurrection of Jesus from the dead without also accepting that a corollary of this is an empty tomb. Barrett's comment succinctly makes the point about how faith in the historicity of the empty tomb must be delicately poised: "Faith . . . would be destroyed by the discovery of the dead body of Jesus, but it cannot be created simply by the discovery of an empty tomb" (Barrett 1968, 349).

A growing number of scholars affirm the historicity of the empty tomb and Paul's knowledge of it (see, e.g., Craig, 1985). The reason that the empty tomb is not explicitly discussed in Paul should not be taken as evidence of its historical unreliability, but of its unimportance as a matter of Christian proclamation.

6.3. The General Resurrection. Paul nowhere explicitly discusses a general resurrection for all people, although there are indications scattered throughout the letters that all (both believers and nonbelievers, the living and the dead) will face judgment* (Rom 2:6-11; 2 Cor 4:5; 5:10; 2 Thess 1:6-10; 2 Tim 4:1). The nearest place that Paul comes to suggesting a general (or universal) resurrection is in 1 Corinthians 15:22b: "in Christ shall all be made alive" (en tō christō pantes zōopoiēthēsontai). However, this declaration comes in the midst of Paul's Adam/Christ analogy and must be so interpreted (it is "all in Christ" who will be resurrected). Some have based a Pauline belief in general resurrection upon the words attributed to the apostle in Acts 24:15, but this is viewed as methodologically suspect by many. The idea of a universal resurrection cannot be dismissed out of hand, however. Allison argues that the whole of early Christianity, including Paul, associated Christ's rising from the dead with a general resurrection and understood the Lord's resurrection to have inaugurated the onset of it (Allison is attempting to counter interpretations which overemphasize the importance of a realized eschatological viewpoint in early Christian belief).

See also BODY; CHRISTOLOGY; DYING AND RISING WITH CHRIST; ESCHATOLOGY; EXALTATION AND ENTHRONEMENT; IMMORTALITY; INTERMEDIATE STATE; JUDGMENT; LIFE AND DEATH; POWER.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. C. Allison, The End of the Ages Has Come (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); W. Baird, "Ascension and Resurrection: An Intersection of Luke and Paul," in Texts and Textuality: Critical Essays on the Bible and the Early Church Fathers, ed. W. E. March (San Antonio: Trinity University, 1980) 3-18; C. K. Barrett, The First Epistle to the Corinthians (New York: Harper & Row, 1968); idem, "Immortality and Resurrection," in Resurrection and Immortality: Aspects of twentieth-century Christian belief, ed. C. S. Duthie (London: Samuel Bagster, 1979) 68-88; idem, Essays on Paul (London: SPCK, 1982); P. Beasley-Murray, "Romans 1:3f: An Early Confession of Faith in the Lordship of Jesus," TynB 31 (1980) 147-54; R. Bultmann, "The New Testament and Mythology," in Kerygma and Myth I & II, ed. H. W. Bartsch (London: SPCK, 1972) 1-44; H. C. C. Cavallin, Life After Death: Paul's Argument for the Resurrection of the Dead in 1 Cor 15 (ConB 7.1; Lund: Gleerup, 1974); L. Coenen, "Resurrection," NIDNTT 3.259-309; W. L. Craig, "The Bodily Resurrection of Jesus," in Gospel Perspectives 1: Studies of History and Tradition in the Four Gospels, ed. R. T. France and D. Wenham (Sheffield: JSOT, 1980) 47-74; idem, "The Historicity of the Empty Tomb of Jesus," NTS 31 (1985) 39-67; C. E. B. Cranfield, "The Resurrection of Jesus Christ," ExpT 101 (1990) 167-72; O. Cullmann, Immortality of the Soul or Resurrection of the Dead? (London: Epworth, 1958); M. E. Dahl, The Resurrection of the Body (London: SCM, 1962); W. D. Davies, Paul and Rabbinic Judaism (4th ed.; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980); J. D. G. Dunn, "I Corinthians 15:45—last Adam, life-giving spirit," in Christ and Spirit in the New Testament: Studies in Honour of C. F. D. Moule, ed. B. Lindars and S. Smalley (Cambridge: University Press, 1973) 127-41; idem, The Evidence for Jesus (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1985); E. E. Ellis, "II Corinthians V.1-10 in Pauline Eschatology," NTS 6 (1959-60) 211-24; J. Gillman, "Signals of Transformation in 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18," CBQ 47 (1985) 263-81; L. J. Greenspoon, "The Origin of the Idea of Resurrection," in Traditions in Transformation: Turning Points in Biblical Faith, ed. B. Halpern and J. D. Levenson (Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 1981) 247-317; M. J. Harris, Raised Immortal: The Relation Between Resurrection and Immortality in New Testament Teaching (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983); idem, Easter in Durham: Bishop Jenkins and the Resurrection of Jesus (Exeter: Paternoster, 1985); J. Jeremias, "Flesh and Blood Cannot Inherit the Kingdom of God," NTS 2 (1955-56) 151-59; J. Kloppenborg, "An Analysis of the Pre-Pauline Formula I Cor 15.3b-5 in the Light of Some Recent Literature," CBQ 40 (1978) 351-67; G. E. Ladd, I Believe in the Resurrection of Jesus (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975); P. Lapide, The Resurrection of Jesus: A Jewish Perspective (London: SPCK, 1984); A. T. Lincoln, Paradise Now and Not Yet (SNTSMS 43; Cambridge: University Press, 1981); J. I. H. McDonald, The Resurrection: Narrative and Belief (London: SPCK, 1989) 25-51; C. F. D. Moule, "St Paul and Dualism: The Pauline Conception of the Resurrection," NTS 13 (1966-67) 106-23; J. Murphy-O'Connor, "Tradition and Redaction in 1 Cor 15.3-7," CBQ 43 (1981) 582-89; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, Resurrection, Immortality and Eternal Life in Intertestamental Judaism (HTS 26; Cambridge, MA: Harvard University, 1972); E. Pagels, The Gnostic Gospels (New York: Random House, 1982) 35-54; B. A. Pearson, The 'Pneumatikos-Psychikos' Terminology in 1 Corinthians (Missoula, MT: Scholars, 1973); P. Perkins, Resurrection (London: Chapman, 1984); R. J. Sider, "The Pauline Conception of the Resurrection Body in I Corinthians XV.35-54," NTS 21 (1974-75) 428-39; R. H. Stein, "Was the tomb really empty?" Themelios 5 (1979) 8-12; D. A. Walker, "Resurrection, Empty Tomb and Easter Faith," ExpT 101 (1990) 172-75; B. Witherington, Jesus, Paul and the End of the World (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1992).

L. J. Kreitzer

REVELATION.

See CONVERSION AND CALL OF PAUL; JESUS, SAYINGS OF; JESUS AND PAUL; MYSTERY; PROPHECY, PROPHESYING; VISIONS, ECSTATIC EXPERIENCE.

REVERENCE.

See FEAR, REVERENCE.

REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS

Paul's missionary work among the Gentiles* occurred at a critical epoch in the history of Judea, the symbolic center of Judaism. His Gentile mission* must be seen against the background of the volatile political situation of Judea and the various revolutionary movements which were present at that time.

1. Paul's Critical Ministry Period
2. General Background to Revolutionary Movements
3. Immediate Background to Revolutionary Movements: Principes, Procurators and High Priests
4. Revolutionary Movements and Their Causes (A.D. 44-60)

1. Paul's Critical Ministry Period.

Our most complete information about Paul relates to the fifteen-year period (approximately) from the time of his ministry in Antioch in the mid-forties (Gal 1:21; Acts 9:30; 11:25-26) until his domicile in Rome in the early sixties (Acts 28:30). Only fragmentary data exist for the earlier period between his commission/conversion c. A.D. 34 and his arrival in Antioch c. 46 and the later period after his imprisonment in Rome prior to his death c. 60-65 (see Chronology).

Paul's own letters are the primary source for this well-illuminated period, supplemented by the Acts of the Apostles, whose chief character is Paul (cf. Acts 8:1; 9:1-31; 11:19-30; 12:25—28:31)—as the one sent to the Gentiles (Acts 9:15; 22:21; 26:17; see Apostle).

Within that decade and a half Paul ministered with Barnabas* in the church in Syrian Antioch and, in partnership with Barnabas and other colleagues, established and maintained links with churches in Galatia, Macedonia, Achaia and Asia. It is clear from (some of) his letters, however—as well as from Acts—that a Jewish mission or (missions) arose, in all probability from Judea (cf. Gal 2:2), whose delegates visited a number of Paul's churches to correct or even overturn his doctrines, replacing them with their own (see Opponents).

Since this countermission appears to have arisen in Judea, it is of interest to know as much as possible about the general history and currents of thought in Judea when Paul was active in Gentile regions. Specially significant are the revolutionary movements of that era since they may have influenced the countermission(s) against Paul in the churches of the Gentiles.

2. General Background to Revolutionary Movements.

It seems probable that the events and circumstances of the eastern Mediterranean in the previous centuries and decades significantly shaped the life and attitudes of the people of Palestine.

2.1. The Hellenistic Era. From the time of the Macedonian conquests of the East in the late fourth century B.C., led by Alexander, the Jews of Palestine found themselves an island in a Hellenistic sea. Specifically, they were subject for two and a half centuries to the hegemony of the Hellenistic kingdoms, first of Ptolemaic Egypt and then of Seleucid Syria. The pressures of Hellenism* on Jewish religious and national culture were generally all-pervasive and subtle but occasionally violent and confrontative. In reaction to this intrusive pagan influence, there arose the pietistic culture of groups like the Pharisees and the Essenes, but also expressions of zealous violence, as at the time of the Maccabean revolt (167 B.C.), when the Seleucids had attempted to compromise and therefore destroy Judaism.

2.2. The Roman Era: Herodian Rule. From the second century B.C., however, the eastern Mediterranean region—which had been subject to the Hellenistic kings—progressively succumbed to the eastward expansion of the Romans. By the end of the second century B.C. the Romans had secured and provincialized the Greek archipelago and western Anatolia. By the sixties (B.C.) the Roman legions had asserted their authority in Syria and Judea, and by the thirties (B.C.) Egypt had come within the sphere of Roman power.

In the case of Jewish Palestine the Romans were content at first to rule the Jews of Palestine at arm's length through local Jews whose loyalty they had secured and whom they appointed "client" rulers over an indigenous people with a complex religious culture. Specifically they worked through the Idumean Antipater in the first instance, but then as greater opportunity arose, through his son Herod, whom they appointed "king of the Jews" in Rome in 40 B.C. Herod first pacified the country which was ravaged by war, whereupon he took up unchallenged rule over the Jews of Palestine in 37-4 B.C. Throughout his long and repressive rule Herod effectively kept in check the pious groups such as the Pharisees and the Essenes. One exception was the refusal of six thousand Pharisees to give an oath of loyalty to Herod and Augustus in 7 B.C. (Josephus Ant. 17.2.4 §42; cf. 15.10.4 §369). Manifestations of zealous violence, however, do not appear to have arisen until the last year of Herod's rule when forty disciples of the rabbis Judas and Simon, heedless of the dire consequences, tore down from the gate of the Temple a giant effigy of an eagle which the king had erected. They suffered martyrdom for this act (Josephus J.W. 1.33.1-4 §§648-655).

Immediately after the death of Herod, the heir-designate Archelaus lost control of Jerusalem during the Passover, only restoring order by a brutal pogrom. When Archelaus and his brother Antipas traveled to Rome for Augustus to settle the disputed will of the late king, civil wars erupted in the three major regions of Herod's realm. Three charismatic pretenders opportunistically seized power—Judas in Galilee, Simon in Perea and Athronges in Judea—each claiming to be a "king." The legions of Varus, legate of Syria, were forced to march from Antioch to put down these uprisings and enable the three Herodian princes—Archelaus, Antipas and Philip—to assume power in their regions as designated by Augustus.

2.3. The Roman Era: Judea a Province (A.D. 6-41). After nine years Archelaus was dismissed as ethnarch of Judea-Samaria. Augustus took a momentous—but logical and ultimately inevitable—step. He annexed Judea as a Roman province subject to a military prefect. Galilee-Perea and Gaulanitis, however, were permitted to remain under the rule of the princes Antipas and Philip. These were allocated a set revenue from taxes,* some of which, presumably, was remitted to Rome. Judea, however, was subjected to a census and property assessment preparatory to the imposition of a head tax, payable directly to Rome. A zealous, violent movement arose, led by Judas the Galilean (Acts 5:37) and Saddok, a Pharisee (Josephus J.W. 2.8.1 §118; Ant. 18.1.1 §§3, 9-10). These leaders deemed the Roman action deeply offensive to their religious scruples, teaching that Roman domination was tantamount to handing over the kingship of Yahweh to the Gentile. Their zealous watch-cry was "No master except God." As in 4 B.C. Roman forces were again needed to put down what was, in effect, a rebellion against Roman rule. Judas was killed; nothing more is known of Saddok.

Convincing evidence is lacking to support theories (such as advocated by Brandon and Hengel) that a structured revolutionary organization existed throughout the Roman era A.D. 6-66. Rather, there seems to have been an attitude of religious zeal which would respond violently at the cost of one's own life, if that was necessary, when provoked by blasphemous acts by Gentiles. This mindset is referred to by Josephus as a "fourth philosophy," which he (incorrectly) says originated with the insurrection of Judas and Saddok over the imposition of a Roman head tax in A.D. 6-7 (Josephus Ant. 18.1 §§1-10; 18.6 §§23-25). The reaction of zeal for Yahweh can be seen earlier in the Maccabean revolt at Modein in 167 B.C., and the martyrdom of the rabbis and their disciples under Herod in 4 B.C.

Josephus may be correct, however, in suggesting that the more typical Jewish (Pharisaic) attitude was piously and passively to accept the awful circumstances of the moment as the deserved punishment of God, which of itself would—without violent action—bring the kingdom of God to them (As. Mos. 6; 9:7—10:3).

There is little information about life in Roman Judea under the Prefects Coponius (A.D. 6-9), Ambivius (A.D. 9-11), Rufus (A.D. 11-14) or Gratus (A.D. 15-26).

In the case of Pontius Pilate (A.D. 26-36?), however, much more is known both about him as praefectus and also about the circumstances in Judea during his tenure. Although appointed during the principate of Tiberius (A.D. 14-37), the first five years of Pilate's prefecture coincided with the notorious praetorian prefect L. Aelius Sejanus who de facto ruled Rome and the provinces (A.D. 26-31). Sejanus was reputed to be anti-Semitic (Philo Leg. Gai., 159-61), perhaps creating—directly or indirectly—an environment in which the newly arrived prefect of Judea would also act against the indigenous provincials. Occasional data support that general hypothesis, whether in the case of the unprecedented attempt to introduce into Jerusalem the military standards with their idolatrous insignia, or the seizure of money from the sacred treasury of the Temple for aqueduct construction (Josephus Ant. 18.3.1-2 §§55-62), or the minting of coins with pagan imagery or the slaughter of Galileans in the act of sacrificing the Passover lambs (Lk 13:1-2). The execution of Jesus of Nazareth occurred soon (?) after an "uprising" (Gk anastasis, Mk 15:7) in which Barabbas played a critical role. Possibly the "thieves" (Gk lēstai) crucified with Jesus were part of that uprising. It is likely that, as at other times of threat to their religious culture, this insurrection was motivated by zeal for Yahweh in response to the provocative actions of Pilate, the Gentile governor. For his part Pilate probably viewed Jesus as a revolutionary "king" like Judas the Galilean a quarter of a century earlier and fit for nothing but crucifixion* (Lk 23:1-3).

At the death of Tiberius in A.D. 37, Gaius (nicknamed Caligula) became emperor. Caligula lacked the sympathy for the Jews shown by his imperial predecessors, whether his great-grandfather Augustus or his granduncle Tiberius. Under Flaccus, prefect in Egypt, the large Jewish population of Alexandria began to suffer progressively in the face of local hostility so that serious riots broke out in the city in A.D. 38. Shortly afterwards an altar erected in Jamnia in Judea, celebrating Caligula's military victories in Germany, was demolished by the Jews. Incensed by this event, Caligula, who had become convinced of his own divinity (see Emperors), ordered that a gigantic statue of himself be erected within the Temple of God in Jerusalem. Suddenly Jews and Romans were at the brink of war. Nothing so potentially serious had happened since Antiochus Epiphanes had erected an altar to the Olympian Zeus in the Temple in 167 B.C. An uprising of monumental proportions was only averted in the short term by the intercession of Agrippa and finally by the assassination of Caligula in January, A.D. 41. Once again we observe that an assault upon deeply held Jewish religious tradition precipitated a reaction of zealous violence.

2.4. The Roman Era: Agrippa King of Judea (A.D. 41-44). Herod Agrippa I, grandson of Herod the Great, was brought up in Rome, in all probability as a pagan. Through the direct intervention of his childhood friend Caligula, he was appointed "king" first in A.D. 37 over Philip's tetrarchy and subsequently in A.D. 39 over Antipas' tetrarchy. The new princeps, Claudius—also a boyhood friend—secured Agrippa's royal appointment in A.D. 41, now to Judea in place of the prefects. Although apparently a Gentile at heart, Agrippa convinced the Jews that he was a devoutly observant Jew, committed to their national and religious cause. Part of this program, apparently, was to assault those Jews who had recently offered salvation* in the name of the false messiah, Jesus, to Samaritans and Gentiles, as Peter and John Zebedee had recently done (Acts 8:14-25; 10:24-48). Hence Agrippa had James Zebedee killed (in the absence of his brother, John?) and Peter arrested with a view to execution, because "he saw that it pleased the Jews" (Acts 12:1-5).

Not for many years had circumstances seemed so propitious to the Jews. The Roman prefect had decamped from Caesarea, and with him went the legionaries, the offensive Roman coinage and the payment of direct head tax to the Roman princeps. Instead, a Jewish king—apparently pious as well as zealous—sat on the throne. True, he was grandson of the hated Herod. But he was also descended from the heroic defenders of the faith, the Maccabees, through his grandmother Mariamne. His sudden and untimely death at Caesarea Maritima in A.D. 44 at the age of fifty-four must have been a severe blow to Jewish hopes. Not least, his special relationship with the principes Caligula and Claudius was seriously missed. His intercessions with Caligula A.D. 40 effectively delayed the planned desecration of the Temple. Had Agrippa survived, who knows what problems might have been averted between Claudius and the Jews during Claudius' principate (A.D. 41-54)?

3. Immediate Background to Revolutionary Movements: Principes, Procurators and High Priests.

The revolutionary movements in Judea which occurred during the height of Paul's missionary career (C. A.D. 46-60) must be viewed against the background of the two emperors Claudius (A.D. 41-54) and Nero (A.D. 54-68), and their policies as they affected that Roman province.

3.1. Claudius (A.D. 41-54). Although a friend of Agrippa, Claudius did not prove to be specially sympathetic to the Jews at large. In his famous letter to the Alexandrians, written in A.D. 41, in the aftermath of the racial riots, the emperor granted no favors to the Jews beyond those they had enjoyed as a tolerated secondary community within Alexandria. Instead he insisted that they should not agitate for access to individual privileges reserved for the citizens of Alexandria. In the same year he forbade the now multitudinous Jews in Rome from meeting regularly (Dio Cassius Roman History 60.6). A few years later, in A.D. 49, when disturbances arose within the Jewish community in Rome over "Chrestus"—a reference to Christ,* either Jesus Christ or another messianic figure (?)—Claudius took the drastic, if not unprecedented, step of expelling the entire Jewish population from Italy (Suetonius Claudius 25.4)! Jews everywhere, including within Judea, would have felt that the measure of protection enjoyed under Augustus and Tiberius had been somewhat diminished under Claudius.

In matters of provincial administration Claudius made changes which effectively altered the relationships of the Jews with Rome. When Judea was first annexed as a province to Rome the governors were titled prefects, signifying a predominantly military role. Under Claudius, however, they were called procurators, indicating a shift to a more fiscal role. Roman governors were, as a class, notoriously corrupt in their dealings with the provincials. In a cynical fable Tiberius argued against the rapid turnover of prefects, likening them to voracious flies sucking the blood from a dying man. Under Claudius's procurators it is likely that there were even greater opportunities for venality.

Another significant change made by Claudius related to the manner of appointing the high priest, upon whose style of religio-political leadership the stability of Judea so much depended. In the earlier period of annexation (A.D. 6-41), the prefect appointed the high priest, providing a direct chain of command from princeps to prefect to high priest. Moreover, for the greater part of that period the pontificate was held by one dynasty, that of Annas. Through all but two or three of those years the position of high priest was held either by Annas, his son-in-law Caiaphas, or his sons Jonathan and Theophilus. The pragmatism of that dynasty probably contributed to the relative stability of the earlier period.

Claudius, however, placed the appointment of the high priest in the hands of minor Herodians, first Herod of Chalcis (A.D. 44-48) and thereafter Herod Agrippa II, who became king of (part of) Galilee in A.D. 54. This method not only deprived the emperor of direct influence through his governor, it is equally probable that the appointment opened up a greater measure of bribery by those dynasties competing for the lucrative position.

The era on which we are concentrating (c. A.D. 45-60) was dominated by one incumbent high priest, the corrupt Ananias (A.D. 48-59). Ananias's name survives in the Talmud as one who seized sacrifices from the Temple for his own use (b. Pesaḥ. 57a), a practice which would be extended by his successor, Ishmael ben Phabi (Josephus Ant. 20.8.8 §§180-81). As an ex-high priest, Ananias was notorious for his bribery of Roman officials and the incumbent high priest as well as for his abuse of the poorer priests (Josephus Ant. 20.9.2 §§205-6). One of his last acts as high priest was his attempt to secure the conviction of Paul (Acts 23:1-5; 24:1-2). The long tenure of this venal person as the high priest of the Temple cannot but have contributed to the expressions of zealous violence during this period.

3.2. Nero (A.D. 54-68). Little is known of Nero's policies toward Judea during the first part of his principate. While his neglect of the provinces in the sixties is well known (cf. Josephus J.W. 2.13.1 §§250-51), such evidence as there is points to reasonably responsible attitudes during the fifties. In any case, the procurator Felix had been appointed by Claudius, a position he held until the end of the decade. Apart from adding Galilean territories to Agrippa II on his accession in A.D. 54, there is little evidence of Nero's attitudes to or involvement with the Jews of Judea during the fifties. That, however, would dramatically change in the sixties as crisis was added to crisis, igniting the flames of war between Jews and Romans in A.D. 66.

4. Revolutionary Movements and Their Causes.

Revolutionary movements among the Jews in this period did not arise in a historical vacuum. Rather, a potential for such movements was created three and a half centuries earlier by the Hellenizing of that part of the world to which Judea belonged, but also, more immediately, by its annexation as a Roman province in A.D. 6. The Hellenization and the overlapping Romanization of Judea generally heightened the religious nationalism of the Jews. Specific events like the emergence of a military or prophetic leader with his following tended to occur by way of reaction to specific events which were seen as an assault on Israel's religious tradition, in particular assaults on the Torah or the Temple. This, rather than a theory of a standing revolutionary faction ready to spring into action, is a more likely interpretation of the historical situation.

4.1. Theudas the Prophet. The reannexation of Judea, a bitter blow after the years of Agrippa's rule, occurred in A.D. 44 and with it the annexation of Galilee for the first time, at least until Agrippa II was appointed king in A.D. 54. The first procurator under reannexation was Cuspius Fadus (A.D. 44-46). Fadus faced the immediate difficulty of adjudicating in a frontier dispute between the Jewish village of Zia in Perea and the Gentile settlement of Philadelphia, in which he favored the Gentiles. Again, he was forced to hunt down and execute the "bandit-chief" Ptolemy, who had been attacking Idumeans and Arabs but not Jews. Moreover, he attempted unwisely, and as it happened, unsuccessfully, to regain custody of the high priest's vestments as a means of controlling the Jews.

In these troubled times a self-declared prophet named Theudas arose (in Jerusalem?) and persuaded a great crowd to follow him—with their possessions—to the Jordan where, at his word of command, the waters would part, giving them a dry passage to the wilderness (Josephus Ant. 20.5.1 §§97-98). Fadus, however, heard of this proposal and had many of Theudas's followers killed. Theudas was captured and executed. Theudas, whom we take to be a different person from that mentioned in Acts 5:36, seems to have regarded himself as a latter-day Moses or Joshua. His action appears to have attempted to activate the hand of God to rerun the conquest of the land at a time of occupation.

4.2. Jacob and Simon, Sons of Judas the Revolutionary. The next procurator was Tiberius Alexander (A.D. 46-48) who, though a member of a noted Jewish family from Alexandria, was an apostate. To any problems which might have arisen from this insensitive appointment was added the far-reaching social consequences of the severe famine which began during his procuratorship. Evidence from the period shows a sharp increase in grain prices throughout the eastern Mediterranean. Relief is known to have been sent to Judea from the royal family of Adiabene in Mesopotamia, who were proselytes to Judaism, and from the nascent Christian church in Antioch (Acts 11:27-30).

Jacob and Simon, sons of Judas the Galilean who led the insurrection over the imposition of Roman taxation in A.D. 6-7, were crucified—presumably for leading an insurrection (Josephus Ant. 20.5.2 §102). Famine created desperate people who would resort to violence. However, their father Judas is referred to as a "rabbi," suggesting that he was a pious, not merely opportunistic, leader (Josephus J.W. 2.8.1 §§117-18).

His sons may have been similarly devout, not merely brigands. Theirs may have been a banditry inspired by "zeal."

The private meeting in Jerusalem between Barnabas and Saul, delegates from the church in Antioch,* and James, Cephas and John, the "pillars" of the Jerusalem* church, probably occurred during the procuratorship of Tiberius Alexander. Shortly after their return to Antioch, Barnabas and Saul set out on a mission to Cyprus and from there into central Anatolia. When they returned to Antioch a serious dispute between Paul and Cephas occurred, precipitated—apparently—by the arrival of "certain men from James" from Jerusalem (Gal 2:11-14; Acts 15:1-2). It may have been about that time when Paul heard that troubles over judaizing* had arisen in the newly established Galatian* churches, quite possibly also from emissaries from Jerusalem (cf. Acts 15:23-24). The Galatian churches were "troubled" by a man who led a group of Jews (Gal 5:10, 12; 3:1; 1:7, 9) who urged that circumcision* was a prerequisite for membership in the Israel* of God (Gal 3:6-14; 6:16). These "agitators" and their leader were putting pressure on other Jewish believers to force Gentile members to be circumcised (Gal 6:12).

The Jerusalem Council met soon afterwards to resolve the question of Gentile observation of Jewish practices. The believers from among the Pharisees advocated the circumcision and the full observance of the Law* of Moses (Acts 15:5). Significantly, the Pharisees were involved—whether actively or passively—in the struggles and crises of the times between Jews and Romans. The religious nationalism of the Pharisees cannot but have flowed over into questions raised by Paul's mission to the Gentiles. The times in which mission work among Gentiles began in earnest, therefore, coincided with difficult times in Judea, which appear to have flowed back into the Gentile churches, especially through believers from the Pharisaic brotherhoods (see Opponents).

4.3. Near Rebellion Under Cumanus. Under the next procurator, Cumanus (A.D. 49-52), the Jews' religious scruples were again scandalized. In one incident during the Passover when Roman troops were having difficulties controlling the crowd in the precincts of the Temple, a soldier blasphemously exposed his genitals. In the ensuing uprising thousands of Jews were killed (Josephus Ant. 20.5.3 §112). In another incident near Beth Horon, during a military reprisal expedition on villages suspected of robbery, a soldier blasphemously tore up a copy of the Torah. Fearing further uprisings Cumanus executed the offending soldier. A third incident involved a skirmish between some Galilean Jews passing by a Samaritan village en route to a festival in Jerusalem. Bribed by the Samaritans—traditional religious enemies of the Jews—Cumanus failed to avenge the Jews who had perished in the fracas. Jewish raiding parties against the Samaritan villages ensued, which were joined by the notorious and long-term arch-brigand Eleazar ben Deinaeus.

Ultimately, Quadratus, legate of Syria, was drawn into an out-of-control situation. In his judgment the Samaritans were the guilty party. Cumanus and Ananias the high priest, with others, were dispatched to Rome for Claudius to decide the matter, while Quadratus visited Jerusalem to calm the populace. In Rome Cumanus was exiled and his military tribune, Celer, executed.

For the greater part of Cumanus's era the apostle Paul was traveling through Anatolia to Troas, then across to Macedonia, establishing churches in Philippi,* Thessalonica* and Berea. Thereafter he sailed to Achaia. He stopped briefly in Athens, and for a year and a half he worked at establishing a church in Corinth.* After a rapid round-trip, making only brief visits to Caesarea, Jerusalem and Antioch, Paul traveled overland through central Anatolia to Ephesus for a period of extended ministry. His arrival in Ephesus (C. A.D. 52) coincided with the beginning of Felix's turbulent era as procurator of Judea.

4.4. The Rise of Sicarii and Sign Prophets During the Time of Felix. Under Antonius Felix affairs in Judea were to deteriorate to a degree unprecedented in its years as a Roman province. No governor to this point—with the possible exception of Pilate—had provoked such a level of disturbance.

Felix's shortcomings are noted by Tacitus. Even allowing for his bias against the Julio-Claudians and the appointment of freedmen as officials, Tacitus' comments are quite damaging:

> Claudius . . . took advantage of the death or declining fortunes of the Jewish kings to commit the government of the provinces to Roman knights or freedmen. One of these, Antonius Felix, played the tyrant with the spirit of a slave, plunging into all manner of cruelty and lust. (Tacitus Hist. 5.9; cf. Ann. 7.54)

Felix, a mere freedman (a former slave), owed his appointment to his brother Pallas, Claudius' financial secretary. Something of Felix's aspirations may be observed from his successive marriages into royal families, of which the third was the Herodian. Felix married the teenaged Drusilla, sister of Agrippa II, who divorced her first husband for that purpose, something the Jews would have found offensive.

Like Fadus, Felix set about ridding the province of robber bands, in particular Eleazar ben Deinaeus, whom he apprehended and sent to Rome for trial. A notorious arch-bandit, Eleazar had in recent times become involved in the Jewish counterassault against the Samaritans but had "ravaged the land" for twenty years, that is, back to the time of Jesus. While Josephus presents Eleazar as nothing more than a fierce brigand, later writings point to him as dominant in his generation, as one who "sought to hasten the end" (Midr. Song 2.7); that is, by his violent actions he sought to force the hand of God to bring in his kingdom (cf. Mt 11:12). Contrary to Josephus' careful misrepresentations, Eleazar may well have been a popular and devout figure of the times. Josephus adds: "Of the brigands whom [Felix] crucified, and of the common people who were convicted of complicity with them and punished by him, the number was incalculable" (Josephus J.W. 2.13.2 §253).

Josephus mentions three "movements" which arose in Felix's time and which he appears to connect with the governor's extreme policies.

First, he describes the rise of the sicarii, so named after the Latin curved dagger (Josephus J.W. 2.13.3 §254). Although no leader or organization for the sicarii is known, their modus operandi was to murder individuals with the concealed sica, usually operating in broad daylight at times of the great feasts. Their targets were noted Jews, known to be sympathetic to Roman interests. Their most famous victims were the ex-high priests Jonathan and Ananias. Thus the sicarii appear to have been politically motivated, murdering those known to have been pro-Roman in order to intimidate others from such loyalty.

The term sicarii appears to have developed a more generalized use subsequently, being used by Luke of the supporters of the Egyptian prophet (Acts 21:38) and by Josephus of the supporters of Menahem and Eleazar ben Jair in the capture and defense of Masada (Josephus J.W. 2.17.6 §426; 7.8.2 §275). Nonetheless, the sicarii are not mentioned as participating in the war in Jerusalem in A.D. 66-70. The sicarii are to be distinguished from the "Zealot" faction which arose only after the war began and whose known activities were confined to Jerusalem, in particular the Temple precincts. (There were individual "zealots" in earlier times, including one among the followers of Jesus [Lk 6:15]. The pre-Christian Paul may have been such a "zealot" [Gal 1:14; Acts 22:3; cf. Phil 3:6]). As the war approached and then erupted there was a proliferation of military factions, some of whose leaders—such as John of Gischala, Eleazar ben Simon, Simon bar Giora—are known; others are not known. These factions dissipated their energies, warring with one another rather than against the common enemy, Rome.

Second, Josephus writes of "sign prophets" at that time who, "under the pretence of divine inspiration fostering revolutionary changes, they persuaded the multitude to act like madmen, and led them out into the desert under the belief that there God would give them signs of liberation" (Josephus J.W. 2.13.4 §259). Josephus does not say what those promised "signs" were. Given that the locale was the "desert"—so evocative in the salvation history of Israel—it is likely that the "signs" would include those performed by Moses and Joshua at the time of the exodus-conquest. The "liberation" would have been a reenacted defeat—Joshua-like—of the enemies of the moment, the Roman occupying force.

Another "sign prophet" to arise under Felix was the Egyptian prophet, who, collecting a large following, went to the Mount of Olives, promising that at his command—again, Joshua-like—the walls of Jerusalem would collapse, after which he would become "the ruler of the people" (Josephus J.W. 2.13.5 §§261-62).

These prophetic figures, who arose in reaction to Felix's excesses, appear to have been inspired by the examples of Moses and Joshua, and by their promised "signs" to have attempted to move the hand of God for the deliverance of his people. For their part, the Romans took these prophets seriously, dispatching troops and killing large numbers of their supporters, who appear to have been unarmed. (Other "sign prophets" arose in the sixties—both before and during the war, as well as afterwards [Josephus Ant. 20.8.10 §188; J.W. 6.5.2 §§284-86; 7.11.1 §438]).

Third, Josephus refers to some kind of an alliance between the prophetic figures and various brigands (lēstrikoi) in actions of a political—but religiously inspired—nature (Josephus J.W. 2.13.6 §§264-65). In a frenzied manner these organized themselves in companies, threatening to kill any who submitted to Roman rule. They moved through the countryside, murdering those who supported Rome, putting fire to many houses.

Such was the milieu of Judea in about A.D. 52-60, during the first five years of which the apostle Paul was engaged in ministry in the Aegean provinces. It was from this troubled environment, apparently, that Paul's opponents bound for Corinth set out in the mid-fifties. Judea under Felix was subject to political disintegration, revolutionary activism and apocalyptic fervor. These things most probably influenced and, to a degree inspired, Paul's opponents in their countermission against him in Corinth. Nationalistic Jews, including Christian Jews, must have been subject to great cultural and religious pressure at that time, which in turn they exerted on the messianic assemblies established by Paul among the Gentiles. To them Paul's mission to the Gentiles would easily have appeared to betray the cause of Israel (Acts 21:20-21). For his part, Paul devoted extensive parts of his second canonical letter in responding to their claims against him (2 Cor 2:17—4:6; 10:12—12:12).

But this was also the hostile world to which the apostle Paul returned in the late fifties, bringing the collection* for the Jerusalem church, while Felix was still the procurator of Judea. Paul was mistaken for the Egyptian prophet (Acts 21:38), which is ironic, granted that such prophets probably contributed indirectly to the problems Paul faced at the hands of the countermissionaries who came from Judea to capture his churches.

See also APOCALYPTICISM; CHRONOLOGY OF PAUL; CIRCUMCISION; EMPERORS, ROMAN; HELLENISM; JEW, PAUL THE; JUDAIZERS; OPPONENTS OF PAUL; POLITICAL SYSTEMS; RESTORATION OF ISRAEL.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. E. Bammel and C. F. D., Moule, ed., Jesus and the Politics of His Day (Cambridge: University Press, 1984); P. Barnett, "The Jewish Sign Prophets," NTS 27 (1981) 679-97; idem, "Opposition in Corinth," JSNT 22 (1984) 3-17; idem, Behind the Scenes of the New Testament (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1991); S. G. F. Brandon, Jesus and the Zealots (Manchester: University Press, 1967); F. F. Bruce, New Testament History (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1969); W. J. Heard, "Revolutionary Movements," DJG 688-98; M. Hengel, The Charismatic Leader and His Followers (New York: Crossroads, 1981); idem, The Zealots (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1989); R. A. Horsley and J. S. Hanson, Bandits, Prophets and Messiahs (New York: Winston, 1985); D. M. Rhoads, Israel in Revolution 6-74 C.E. (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); S. Safrai and M. Stern, The Jewish People in the First Century (CRINT 1.1; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (175 B.C.—A.D. 135), rev. and ed. G. Vermes and F. Millar (3 vols.; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1973-79); M. Smith, "Zealots and Sicarii: Their Origins and Relations," HTR 64 (1971) 1-19.

P. W. Barnett

REWARDS

For Paul rewards comprise both the enjoyment of all the blessings that are in Christ* and a future tangible recognition of service* in the furtherance of the gospel.* To continue to experience the former, diligence in running the race is essential; to receive the latter, one's works must survive the fiery testing at the final judgment.* Such teachings, however, have at times posed problems for the church.

1. Rewards as Christ's Blessings
2. Rewards as Recognition of One's Works
3. Conclusion

1. Rewards as Christ's Blessings.

This ongoing benefit finds its focus in an intimate fellowship* with Christ,* a gain of such surpassing worth that by comparison even the finest human accolades are a loss, no better than rubbish (Phil 3:8-11). Paul describes this fellowship also as the prize awarded to those who successfully finish the Christian race (1 Cor 9:24-27). While these blessings are enjoyed in part now, their full experience awaits the life to come (Phil 1:21, 23; 3:14).

1.1. The Problem of Works. Paul's insistence that failure to run the race single-mindedly threatens one with disqualification (1 Cor 9:27; cf. 2 Cor 13:5), the loss of salvation* itself, seems to encourage a works-righteousness, the amassing of deeds that God will find sufficiently meritorious to deserve his blessings. But Paul also firmly denies such a possibility: salvation is by faith* alone, apart from works* in which people can boast (Rom 3:27-28).

1.2. The Solution. Understanding the motivation of the runners resolves the difficulty. Were Paul to see their striving for the prize as calculated to earn God's favor through self-effort, a problem would exist. But this is not the case; the race is to be run in dependence upon Christ who enables the Christian to be victorious (2 Cor 12:9-10; Gal 2:20; Phil 2:12-13). And the works that are done en route, far from being meritorious, are works of faith (1 Thess 1:3; 2 Thess 1:11 RSV), done because the runner is convinced that to trust and obey is the essential condition for the enjoyment of fellowship with God (Phil 2:12). What motivates these works therefore is simply the desire to continue to enjoy the blessings God has promised. It is self-interest—and things done for one's own benefit can lay no claim to consideration as meritorious.

1.3. The Problem of Self-Interest. But does not this appeal to self-interest counter Paul's own exhortation not to seek one's own good but that of others (1 Cor 10:24; Phil 2:4)? Unquestionably his setting forth both positive and negative motivation—the continuing enjoyment of the blessings of the gospel versus their loss and thus the loss of salvation itself—does have one's own welfare in view.

1.4. The Solution. It is important, however, to differentiate between self-interest and selfishness. The latter is clearly objectionable because it promotes one's own welfare at the expense of others. But self-interest centered in the desire for fellowship with Christ can scarcely be faulted. Moreover this fellowship fills Paul with such joy* that he is impelled to bring as many others as possible to share in it (1 Cor 9:19-23). Thus far from being undesirable, to use the reward of Christ's blessing as an appeal to self-interest results in the greatest possible good—winning many more to him.

2. Rewards as Recognition of One's Works.

This second aspect of rewards is reserved for the life to come and will recognize the extent of one's accomplishments in the furtherance of the gospel (1 Cor 3:8, 10-14). Of necessity then rewards will be tangible so that the gradations may be visible to all. Here Paul defines them only as "praise from God" (1 Cor 4:5), but elsewhere he speaks of "crowns" that he equates with those he has won for Christ (Phil 4:1; 1 Thess 2:19). An attractive possibility therefore is that the tangible rewards will be literal crowns, representing in some manner his converts. And that Paul does consider his converts a part of his reward is evident from his summation of his life work as the gaining (kerdainō "to procure advantage or profit") of as many as possible for Christ (1 Cor 9:19-22 RSV; see Daube).

Not all, however, will receive these crowns, and here again Paul makes use of a negative appeal to self-interest. Those whose works do not endure the testing at the judgment will suffer loss (1 Cor 3:15). Though not the loss of salvation itself, this will clearly be a diminution of one's eternal happiness. Thus here too Paul's appeal to self-interest functions as an incentive to win men and women for Christ.

2.1. The Problem of Pride. But if degrees of accomplishment are displayed for all to see, this would seem inevitably to lead to pride and boasting on the part of those with more impressive crowns. How can this be harmonized with Paul's insistence that boasting is excluded, and God alone to be praised (Rom 3:27; 1 Cor 1:31)?

2.2. The Solution. The reason Paul sees pride in one's accomplishments as impossible is that the rewards do not reflect the glory* of those to whom they are given but the glory of the giver. For it is the joy of fellowship with him, and confidence in his integrity in keeping his promises, that provides the motivation. Furthermore, Paul's rule of life is that every thought, word and deed is to enhance the glory of God (1 Cor 10:31), to demonstrate that he is truly the summum bonum of life and thus worthy of worship.* Differing degrees of rewards then reflect not the relative worth of the individual per se but the extent to which each one has found delight in fellowship with God, and has thus been dedicated to the doing of his will.

3. Conclusion.

Rewards as Paul views them therefore play a most important role in encouraging Christ's followers to be faithful and diligent in the ministries to which each is called. Far from being questionable in any way, they are a most gracious provision by God to motivate his children to run the race successfully, and so to enjoy both in this life and in that to come the blessings of salvation.

See also APOSTASY, FALLING AWAY, PERSEVERANCE; ESCHATOLOGY; JUDGMENT; JUSTIFICATION; WORKS OF THE LAW.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. P. C. Boettger and B. Siede, "Recompense," NIDNTT 3.134-44; D. Daube, "Κερδαίνω as a Missionary Term," HTR 40 (1947) 109-20; F. V. Filson, St. Paul's Conception of Recompense (Leipzig: Hinrichs'sche Buchhandlung, 1931); R. M. Fuller, "A Pauline Understanding of Rewards" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Fuller Theological Seminary, 1990); J. M. Gundry Volf, Paul and Perseverance: Staying in and Falling Away (Louisville: John Knox/Westminster, 1991); W. Pesch, "μισθός," EDNT 2.432-33; J. Piper, Desiring God (Portland: Multnomah, 1986); H. Preisker, "μισθός κτλ," TDNT IV.695-728; J. E. Rosscup, "Paul's Teaching of the Christian's Future Reward" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, University of Aberdeen, 1976).

R. M. Fuller

RHETORIC

The world of Paul's day was deeply enamored with public oratory by virtuoso rhetors known as sophists. Because Christianity placed such an emphasis on public preaching, its speakers would inevitably be judged by sophisticated audiences according to the canons of rhetoric. Therefore, as a missionary, Paul needed to determine whether classical rhetoric was essential for Christian proclamation.

1. Paul's Training in Rhetoric
2. Paul's Use of Judicial Rhetoric
3. Paul's Renunciation of Rhetoric for Preaching
4. A Corinthian Critique of Paul's Rhetorical Presentation

1. Paul's Training in Rhetoric.

No direct information is provided on Paul's training in rhetoric. Although born in a noted center for rhetoric, Tarsus, he was educated in Jerusalem in the Jewish tradition at the feet of Gamaliel (Acts 22:3). This statement does not preclude his training in rhetoric, including the tertiary level, at one of the Greek schools which operated in Jerusalem from the third century B.C. It is more likely that he received such training in his early years rather than after his conversion (see Paul).

2. Paul's Use of Judicial Rhetoric.

According to Acts 24:1-21 Paul defended himself in a Roman court before Felix, the governor, against Jewish opponents represented by a professionally trained forensic rhetor, Tertullus (Acts 24:1). The latter mounted a seemingly formidable case of political agitation and insurrection in worldwide Jewry against Paul, a Roman citizen (see Citizenship). Paul reduced the serious criminal charge to a theological issue, the resurrection, which was the only comment he made before the Sanhedrin (Acts 23:6). He prescribed the limits of evidence to events in Jerusalem,* proscribed the charges of absent Asian Jewish accusers, used the forensic structure with an exordium (introduction), narratio (statement of facts), confirmatio (establishment of facts), refutatio (refutation) and peroratio (conclusion), and displayed his knowledge of the little-known right of appeal to Caesar (Acts 25:11). Legal training by means of forensic rhetoric was an essential part of Greek education, and this summary of Paul's defense reflects his professional forensic skills.

3. Paul's Renunciation of Rhetoric for Preaching.

The Corinthians loved public orations (Dio Chrysostom Or. 37.33). Paul saw the use of "the wisdom of rhetoric" (1 Cor 1:17) as the means of "emptying" the preaching of the cross,* for it was more interested in the skillful structuring and delivery of a speech than in its content (Epictetus Diss. 3.23.23-25). By citing the OT in 1 Corinthians 1:19 (citing Is 29:4; Ps 33:10) and 1 Corinthians 1:31 (citing Jer 9:22-23), he argued that God determined that "the debater of this age," that is, the virtuoso rhetor, or sophist (Philo Det. Pot. Ins. 1-5), as well as the Greek philosophers (see Philosophy) and Jewish teachers (1 Cor 1:20) did not bring people to the knowledge of God.*

Paul explained why he had renounced in his modus operandi all formal conventions whereby a foreign rhetor established his credentials when he first came to a city (1 Cor 2:1-5). He tells why he would not proclaim the gospel* using the superior presentation of rhetoric or wisdom* (1 Cor 2:1). While rhetors sought topics from their audience on which to declaim in order to demonstrate their prowess in oratory, Paul was concerned only to proclaim Jesus, the crucified Messiah (1 Cor 2:2; see Christ; Death of Christ).

Orators used three accepted proofs to persuade their audience: ethos, acting out a character; pathos, manipulating his audience's feeling; and demonstration, arguments. Paul uses none of these. He came "in weakness,* and in fear and in much trembling" (1 Cor 2:3)—the absolute antithesis to the powerful and commanding presence of the virtuoso rhetor (Philodemus On Rhetoric 1.194-200). His speech and his preaching did not make use of "persuasive rhetoric." It was a demonstration, not of rhetorical proofs, but of the Spirit (see Holy Spirit) and power* (1 Cor 2:4). It was a radical and costly step on the part of Paul to refuse to use the much admired rhetoric of his day in preaching.* His renunciation was motivated by the desire that his converts' faith* must not rest on human wisdom but on the power of God (1 Cor 2:5).

4. A Corinthian Critique of Paul's Rhetorical Presentation.

Following Paul's denunciation of contemporary rhetoric in preaching for theological reasons (1 Cor 1:17—2:5), his rhetorically minded opponents made a stinging critique of his oratorical abilities or lack of them (2 Cor 10:10). While conceding his letters were "weighty and strong" in rhetorical presentation, they said he failed as a public orator because he lacked "presence" (hypokrisis), that is, a beautiful body and a pleasant-sounding voice with appropriate gestures to match. His physical appearance was weak (tradition says he had crooked legs, a long nose and eyebrows which met, Acts of Paul and Thekla) and his voice lacked timbre (2 Cor 10:10; 11:6). Not preaching like a public orator, he called himself a "layperson" (i.e., a person trained in oratory but not making use of it—such is one meaning of idiōtes, see Isocrates Antidosis 204). However, as the Corinthians* well knew from his letters, he could use rhetoric with devastating effect (e.g., his skillful use of the device of the covert allusion in 1 Cor 4:6-13; see Rhetorical Criticism).

See also CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE; DIATRIBE; RHETORICAL CRITICISM; WEAKNESS; WISDOM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. D. Betz, "Rhetoric and Theology," in L'Apôtre Paul; Personnalité, Style et Conception du Ministère, ed. A. Vanhoye (BETL 73; Louvain: Louvain University/Peeters, 1986) 16-48; G. W. Bowersock, Greek Sophists in the Roman Empire (Oxford: University Press, 1969); C. Forbes, "Comparison, Self-praise and Irony: Paul's Boasting and Conventions of Hellenistic Rhetoric," NTS 32 (1986) 1-30; M. Hengel, The Pre-Christian Paul (Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1991); E. A. Judge, "Cultural Conformity and Innovation in Paul: Some Clues from Contemporary Documents," TynB 35 (1984) 3-24; idem, "Paul's Boasting in Relation to Contemporary Professional Practice," AusBR 16 (1968) 37-50; G. A. Kennedy, The Art of Rhetoric in the Roman World (Princeton: University Press, 1972); D. A. Russell, Greek Declamations (Cambridge: University Press, 1983); J. Weiss, "Beiträge zur paulinischen Rhetorik," Theologischen Studien B. Weiss (Göttingen, 1897) 165-247; B. W. Winter, "The Importance of the Captatio Benevolentiae in the Speeches of Tertullus and Paul in Acts 24:1-21," JTS 42 (1991) 505-31; idem, "Philo and Paul among the Sophists: A Hellenistic Jewish and a Christian Response" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Macquarie University, 1988).

B. W. Winter

RHETORICAL CRITICISM

Though Paul said that his preaching was not marked by the use of persuasive rhetoric (1 Cor 1:17—2:5), and his critics agreed (see Rhetoric), his letters were considered "weighty and forceful" even by those critics (2 Cor 10:10). Since Paul wrote his letters to be read aloud to the churches, there is a close connection between the forms of his letters and features of oration. In terms of an Aristotelian definition of rhetoric, Paul's letters are examples of the "faculty of discovering the possible means of persuasion." For this reason rhetorical criticism has often been used to clarify the rhetorical objectives, structures, style and techniques of his persuasive letters.*

1. Hellenistic Rhetoric
2. New Rhetoric
3. Conclusion

1. Hellenistic Rhetoric.

1.1. Rhetorical Handbooks. In The Art of Rhetoric (mid-4th century B.C.), Aristotle summarized and expanded discussions of rhetoric by such notable predecessors as Gorgias, Protagoras and Plato. Aristotle's work was the fountainhead for a stream of Greek and Latin handbooks on rhetoric down through the first century A.D. The most useful ones to survive are the Rhetoric to Herennius in Latin (c. 84 B.C.), Cicero's work On Invention and his Partitions of Oratory (c. 87 B.C.), and the major work of Quintilian, On the Education of the Orator (A.D. 92). Since these handbooks provide encyclopedic surveys of the theory and practice of rhetoric in Paul's time, they are frequently used by modern interpreters in the analysis of Paul's letters. Recent expositions of these handbooks on classical rhetoric are found in works by G. Kennedy and E. Corbett, and are summarized by L. G. Bloomquist.

Numerous comparisons of Paul's letters and the rhetorical handbooks of his day demonstrate that Paul employed the art of Hellenistic rhetoric to present his arguments. The extent of correspondence is too great to think otherwise. Yet, the point of using the classical handbooks in an analysis of Paul's letters is not to prove his dependence upon them but to be guided by them in a description of Paul's arguments. Classical rhetoric was based upon an inductive description of the elements of persuasive speech. Quintilian affirms that "it was then nature that created speech, and observation that originated the art of speaking. Just as men discovered the art of medicine by observing that some things were healthy and some the reverse, so they observed that some things were useful and some useless in speaking, and noted them for imitation or avoidance" (Quintilian 3.2.3). Since the classical rhetoricians were thorough in their observation and organization of almost every feature of argumentation, it should not be surprising that many of the features of Pauline argumentation are described in their handbooks. Rhetorical criticism of Paul's letters uses the parallels which are applicable from the rhetorical handbooks as descriptive tools.

1.2. Theoretical Concepts. According to Aristotle (Rhetoric 1.2.3), persuasion depends upon three factors: the moral character of the speaker (ethos), the emotions aroused in the hearers by the speech (pathos) and the logical arguments in the speech (logos).

Logical arguments are either inductive, by means of examples (paradeigmata), or deductive, by means of an enthymeme. What is known in logic as a syllogism includes a full statement of a major premise, a minor premise and a conclusion. But speakers and writers usually assume either the major premise or the minor premise. A deductive argument that omits either the major or minor premise is called an enthymeme. When an enthymeme runs from premise to conclusion it is often introduced by such signals as "therefore," "hence" or "thus" (Gk gar, ara, oun); when an enthymeme moves from conclusion to premise it may be introduced by "since," "for" or "because" (Gk hoti). Galatians 3:6-7 is an enthymeme: Paul assumes the major premise that God* will deal with all people as he dealt with Abraham*; his explicit minor premise states that "Abraham believed God, and it was reckoned to him for righteousness*" (Gal 3:6); the logical conclusion (signaled by ara) states that "those who are of faith are the children of Abraham" (see Hansen 1989, 112).

Three species of rhetoric are described in the classical tradition: forensic, deliberative and epideictic. Forensic speech defends or accuses someone regarding past actions; deliberative speech exhorts or dissuades the audience regarding future actions; epideictic discourse affirms communal values by praise or blame in order to affect a present evaluation. These three rhetorical genres seek different kinds of response from the audience. Forensic: Is it just? Deliberative: Is it expedient? Epideictic: Is it praiseworthy?

In Betz's opinion, Paul's letter to the Galatians* should be classified as an example of forensic rhetoric: Paul's objective is a defense of himself (a self-apology) and his gospel* against the attack of the intruders. Others have argued that Galatians is comparable to deliberative speech since Paul's primary aim is to exhort his readers to be true to the gospel and to dissuade them from accepting the false gospel of the Judaizers* (see Kennedy, Hall, Smit, Lyons). It is probably best to see Galatians as a mixture of the forensic and deliberative kinds of rhetoric (see Hansen, Longenecker). In the first half of the letter (Gal 1:6—4:11), Paul defends himself against accusations and accuses his opponents* of perverting the gospel. But in the second half of the letter (Gal 4:12—6:18), he seeks to persuade the Galatian believers to adopt a new course of action.

Similar attempts have been made to determine the rhetorical genre of Paul's other letters. G. A. Kennedy classifies 1 Thessalonians* as deliberative rhetoric (Kennedy 1984, 142); R. Jewett identifies it as epideictic (Jewett, 71-78). F. F. Church's study of Philemon* demonstrates Paul's use of deliberative rhetoric. M. M. Mitchell argues that the unity of 1 Corinthians* can be demonstrated when it is seen as deliberative rhetoric convincing the Corinthians to be reconciled to God and to Paul, and D. F. Watson argues similarly for the unity of Philippians (Watson 1988). G. A. Kennedy labels 2 Corinthians as forensic rhetoric, except for chapters 8 and 9 which are deliberative (Kennedy 1984, 87). W. Wuellner shows how discussion of the Law in Romans* can be clarified by observing the epideictic aim (not forensic, as in Galatians) of the letter. Rhetorical criticism of Philippians* suggests that it is either deliberative (Watson 1988, 59; Bloomquist, 120, but with more than one genus) or epideictic (Kennedy 1984, 77). It is probably composed of mixed rhetorical genera or types (so Black).

The structure of a speech, as described in the classical rhetorical handbooks, consists of six parts: (1) the introduction, which defines the character of the speaker and the central issue addressed; (2) the narration, which narrates the events related to the central issue; (3) the proposition, which summarizes the central theses to be proved; (4) the confirmation, which sets forth the logical arguments; (5) the refutation, which refutes the opponents' arguments; and (6) the conclusion, which recapitulates the basic points and evokes a sympathetic response. The structure of deliberative rhetoric and epideictic rhetoric is usually a simplified version of these six parts. Often in the practice of the rhetorical criticism of Paul's letters, the Latin terms of classical rhetoric are used to designate these six parts: exordium, narratio, propositio, probatio, refutatio, peroratio. Betz uses these terms for his outline of Galatians:

I. Epistolary Prescript (Gal 1:1-5)
II. Exordium (Gal 1:6-11)
III. Narratio (Gal 1:12—2:14)
IV. Propositio (Gal 2:15-21)
V. Probatio (Gal 3:1—4:31)
VI. Exhortatio (Gal 5:1—6:10)
VII. Epistolary Postscript (Peroratio, Gal 6:11-18).

Style received a major share of attention from the classical rhetoricians. The theory of style was based on an analysis of diction, the choice of words, and composition, the arrangement of words. Paul often chose a metaphor to express his thought. For example, the Law* is a jailkeeper with the power* to lock up and hold prisoners (Gal 3:23), and the Law is a tutor (paidagōgos) with the power of supervision (Gal 3:24-25). Sometimes Paul seems to use hyperbole to emphasize his point. According to J. D. G. Dunn, Paul's use of the words of Psalm 19:4 to assert that the gospel has gone "into all the earth" and "to the ends of the world" (Rom 10:18) provided "a hyperbolic vision of the full eschatological sweep of the gentile mission" (Dunn, 624). When Paul exhorts his readers to "present your bodies as a living sacrifice" (Rom 12:1), his choice of the word "body"* to represent the whole person is an example of synecdoche, a part for the whole. The NIV translation of "your bodies" as "yourselves" accurately interprets this synecdoche.

In his composition Paul often arranges words in the form of antitheses. "Hate what is evil; cling to what is good" (Rom 12:9). "We know that a person is not justified by observing the Law, but by faith in Jesus Christ" (Gal 2:16). Paul also works out his thoughts in a chiastic pattern. A chiasm is a crisscross pattern of words resembling the Greek letter X (Chi), and hence its name. For example, "the first shall be last and the last first." Words or concepts are stated in the order A B C and then repeated with important expansions in the reverse order C B A. Lightfoot observed the form of a chiasm in Galatians 4:4-5.

A The Son of God was born a man.
  B He was born under the Law,
  B to redeem those under the Law,
A that all men might become sons of God.

J. Bligh used this central chiasm as the starting point for outlining the chiastic nature of the entire letter of Galatians. However, the frequency of Bligh's changes in the text has made it appear that the chiastic patterns which he "finds" are actually imposed upon the text.

Another common element in Paul's style is his use of rhetorical questions: "Do we then nullify the Law by this faith?" "What, then, was the purpose of the Law?" "Is the Law, therefore, opposed to the promises of God?" These rhetorical questions (Rom 3:31; Gal 3:19, 21) prepare the way for Paul to make some of his most significant statements about the Law.

1.3. Methodology. Kennedy provides a helpful guide to the practice of rhetorical criticism (Kennedy 1984, 33-38). He outlines five stages of analysis.

First, determine the rhetorical unit to be studied. Usually, an entire letter of Paul is the rhetorical unit under observation. In some cases a clearly delineated passage within a letter (such as 2 Cor 10—13) may be the rhetorical unit chosen for examination.

Second, define the rhetorical situation. In the description of the persons, events and relations of the rhetorical situation, special attention must be given to the rhetorical problem faced by Paul in his relation to his audience. It is helpful at this stage to define the stasis, or basic issue, of the case. Was the basic issue about a question of fact, of definition, of quality or of jurisdiction? The species of rhetoric (forensic, deliberative or epideictic) used by Paul will also be defined at this stage.

Third, consider the arrangement of material in the text. What are the major subdivisions? What is the flow of the argument?

Fourth, list the devices of style and define their function in context.

Fifth, evaluate the impact of the entire rhetorical unit on the rhetorical situation.

2. New Rhetoric.

A recent approach in the application of rhetorical criticism to Paul's letters is the description of rhetorical techniques employed by Paul in his argumentation. A wide variety of rhetorical techniques is described by C. Perelman and L. Olbrecht-Tyteca in what Kennedy calls "the most influential modern treatise on rhetoric," The New Rhetoric: A Treatise on Argumentation (1969). The application of the categories of new rhetoric to Paul's letters is not anachronistic since the categories of the new rhetoric are derived from a thorough analysis of both ancient and modern examples of argumentation.

The five rhetorical techniques described here are illustrated by an application to Paul's letter to the Galatians (see Hansen, 79-93).

2.1. Argument by Authority. An argument that depends upon the prestige, reputation or moral character of the orator is an argument from authority.* Paul's double denial of any dependence on human agency or authority for the legitimacy of his apostleship and his claim to a divine commission (Gal 1:1) signal that his entire argument will be structured by this emphasis on authority. Yet Galatians 1:6-9 is not, as might have been expected, a direct development of Paul's claim to apostolic* authority. Instead Paul moves to a definition of the gospel which excludes any possible alternative versions. He then subordinates both himself and any angel* from heaven* to the one true gospel (Gal 1:8-9). Thus Paul responds to a challenge to his authority by establishing one ultimate measure of genuine authority: adherence to the gospel which he preached. In his autobiography (Gal 1:11—2:21) and in his interpretation of the Abrahamic promise (Gal 3:1—4:11) he demonstrates his faithfulness to this standard, in contrast to those who deviated from it. His adherence to the "truth of the gospel" in his life as well as his preaching (Gal 2:19-20; 6:14-15) makes his authority invulnerable. So he has the authority to appeal for his converts' allegiance, issue his apostolic decree (Gal 5:2) and establish the canon for the Israel* of God (Gal 6:15-16).

2.2. Argument by Definition. Paul's argument in Galatians is structured by the way he develops his definition of the gospel. When the gospel is first introduced as the focus of the problem in the Galatian churches, the quality of uniqueness is attributed to it. In all the successive stages of the argument the definition of the gospel is elaborated with the use of other key terms such as promise, faith, Law and works* of the Law.

2.3. Argument by Dissociation of Ideas. That Paul's argument in Galatians is structured by the dissociation of ideas is evident from his explication of antithetical pairs: curse/blessing, works/faith, flesh/spirit, Law/Christ, Law/Spirit, slavery/freedom.

2.4. Argument by the Severance of the Group and Its Members. Paul's dissociation of ideas in his argumentation also involves the dissociation of the group and its members by the use of the rhetorical technique of severance. Paul's argument is designed to drive a wedge between the Galatian believers and the false teachers so as to split them apart. The false teachers are perverters of the gospel (Gal 1:7); therefore, they are under a curse* (Gal 1:8-9); they are guilty of witchcraft (Gal 3:1); they do not seek the Galatian believers for good (Gal 4:17); they are children of Hagar, the bondwoman (Gal 4:29); they have obstructed the Galatians in the race (Gal 5:7); they are leaven in the lump (Gal 5:9); they seek to avoid persecution for the cross* of Christ (Gal 6:12); they do not keep the Law themselves (Gal 6:13). Paul's autobiographical remarks (Gal 1:11—2:21; 4:12-20) and his extended scriptural exposition are designed to validate the expulsion of the false teachers from the Galatian churches.

2.5. Argument by Sacrifice. In argumentation by sacrifice, sacrifice is presented as evidence of the value of the thing for which the sacrifice is made. Paul frequently points to the sacrifice* of the cross as the basis for the value of the freedom* in Christ which the false teachers were attempting to destroy (Gal 1:4; 2:4; 2:20, 21; 3:1, 13-14; 4:4; 5:1).

3. Conclusion.

Rhetorical criticism of Paul's letters enables the readers to engage in a detailed analysis of the structures and techniques of argumentation employed by Paul. If such analysis leads to a preoccupation with form over substance, then rhetorical criticism may be an obstacle to understanding the meaning of Paul's letters. But if the goal is clear exposition of what Paul meant by his arguments, then this methodology may be helpful by clarifying how Paul developed his arguments, just as historical criticism may be helpful by throwing light on why Paul wrote his letters.

See also DIATRIBE; GALATIANS, LETTER TO THE; HERMENEUTICS/INTERPRETING PAUL; LETTERS AND LETTER FORMS; RHETORIC.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. D. Betz, Galatians (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1979); idem, "The Literary Composition and Function of Paul's Letter to the Galatians," NTS (1975) 353-80; C. C. Black, "Keeping Up with Recent Studies: 16. Rhetorical Criticism and Biblical Interpretation," ExpT 100 (1989) 252-58; J. Bligh, Galatians in Greek: A Structural Analysis of St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians with Notes in Greek (Detroit: University of Detroit, 1966); L. G. Bloomquist, The Function of Suffering in Philippians (JSNTSup 78; Sheffield: Academic, 1993); H. W. Boers, "The Form-Critical Study of Paul's Letter: 1 Thessalonians as a Case Study," NTS 22 (1976) 140-58; B. H. Brinsmead, Galatians—Dialogical Response to Opponents (SBLDS 65; Chico, CA: Scholars, 1982); F. F. Church, "Rhetorical Structure and Design in Paul's Letter to Philemon," HTR 71 (1978) 17-33; E. Corbett, Classical Rhetoric for the Modern Student (New York: Oxford University, 1971); idem, ed., Rhetorical Analyses of Literary Works (New York: Oxford University, 1969); P. B. Duff, "Metaphor, Motif, and Meaning: The Rhetorical Strategy behind the Image 'Led in Triumph' in 2 Corinthians 2:14," CBQ 53 (1991) 79-92; J. D. G. Dunn, Romans (WBC 38; Dallas: Word, 1988); B. Fiore, " 'Covert Allusion' in 1 Corinthians 1—4," CBQ 47 (1985) 85-104; B. R. Gaventa, "Galatians 1 and 2: Autobiography as Paradigm," NovT 28 (1986) 309-26; R. G. Hall, "The Rhetorical Outline for Galatians: A Reconsideration," JBL 106 (1987) 277-87; G. W. Hansen, Abraham in Galatians—Epistolary and Rhetorical Contexts (JSNTSup 29; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic, 1989); J. D. Hester, "The Rhetorical Structure of Galatians 1:11—2:14," JBL 103 (1984) 223-33; R. Jewett, The Thessalonian Correspondence (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); G. A. Kennedy, New Testament Interpretation Through Rhetorical Criticism (Chapel Hill, NC: University of North Carolina, 1984); P. E. Koptak, "Rhetorical Identification in Paul's Autobiographical Narrative: Galatians 1:13—2:14," JSNT 40 (1990) 97-115; B. C. Letegan, "Is Paul Defending His Apostleship in Galatians?," NTS 34 (1988) 411-30; R. N. Longenecker, Galatians (WBC 41; Dallas: Word, 1990); G. Lyons, Pauline Autobiography: Toward a New Understanding (SBLDS 73; Atlanta: Scholars, 1985); A. Malherbe, "Exhortation in First Thessalonians," NovT 25 (1983) 238-56; M. M. Mitchell, Paul and the Rhetoric of Reconciliation (HUT 27; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1991); C. Perelmann and L. Olbrechts-Tyteca, The New Rhetoric: A Treatise on Argumentation (Notre Dame: University of Notre Dame, 1969); J. P. Sampley, "Paul and his Opponents in 2 Corinthians 10—13 and the Rhetorical Handbooks," in The Social World of Formative Christianity and Judaism: Essays in Tribute to Howard Clark Kee, ed. J. Neusner et al. (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988) 162-77; E. Schüssler Fiorenza, "Rhetorical Situation and Historical Reconstruction in 1 Corinthians," NTS 33 (1987) 386-403; R. Scroggs, "Paul as Rhetorician: Two Homilies in Romans 1—11," in Jews, Greeks and Christians: Essays in Honor of W. D. Davies, ed. R. Hamerton-Kelly and R. Scroggs (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1976) 271-98; J. Smit, "The Genre of 1 Corinthians 13 in the Light of Classical Rhetoric," NovT 33 (1991) 193-216; idem, "The Letter of Paul to the Galatians: A Deliberative Speech," NTS 35 (1989) 1-26; F. Vouga, "Zur rhetorischen Gattung des Galaterbriefes," ZNW 79 (1988) 291-92; D. F. Watson, "1 Corinthians 10:23—11:1 in the Light of Greco-Roman Rhetoric: The Role of Rhetorical Questions," JBL 108 (1989) 301-18; idem, "The New Testament and Greco-Roman Rhetoric: A Bibliography," JETS 31 (1988) 465-72; idem, ed., Persuasive Artistry: Studies in New Testament Rhetoric in Honor of George A. Kennedy (JSNTSup 50; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic, 1991); idem, "A Rhetorical Analysis of Philippians and Its Implications for the Unity Question," NovT 39 (1988) 57-88; A. C. Wire, The Corinthian Women Prophets: A Reconstruction Through Paul's Rhetoric (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1990); W. Wuellner, "Paul as Pastor: The Function of Rhetorical Questions in First Corinthians," in L'Apôtre Paul: personnal- ité, style et conception du ministère, ed. A. Vanhoye (BETL 73; Leuven: Leuven University, 1986); idem, "Paul's Rhetoric of Argumentation in Romans," CBQ 38 (1976) 330-51; idem, "Where Is Rhetorical Criticism Taking Us?" CBQ 49 (1987) 448-63.

G. W. Hansen

RICHES AND POVERTY

Neither the appropriate use of riches nor the plight of the economically deprived are dominant concerns for Paul, who usually spiritualizes the vocabulary of riches. Where Paul does display concern about economic issues, his teaching for the most part reflects standard Jewish piety.

1. Riches
2. Poverty

1. Riches.

The lack of attention in the Pauline letters to the rich and to the appropriate use of riches is remarkable. The subject is common in intertestamental Jewish wisdom literature and among contemporary Greco-Roman moralists, and of course the Synoptic Gospels and James evince considerable concern about the dangers of wealth. The evidence of Acts (e.g., Acts 16:14; 17:12; 18:7-8) and analysis of names mentioned in Paul's correspondence (e.g., Rom 16:1-23) suggest that there were many early converts who were well-to-do. Yet Paul scarcely touches on the subject of riches, and the only extended treatment is 1 Timothy 6:6-10, 17-19.

Admittedly, the use of wealth falls somewhat outside the scope of the interpersonal and intercommunity issues most characteristic of Pauline ethics.* It is possible that Paul's own "freedom from worldly concerns" (1 Cor 7:28-35; 8:1-27), his "contentment in any state" (Phil 4:10-13), rendered him less aware of the issue for others. Conversely, he may have been so sensitive to the issue that he gave instructions only verbally to individuals. Still, the fact that Paul was an itinerant who presumably lived with minimal possessions and yet required nothing like this for others, suggests that his expectations for rank-and-file believers were modest by comparison.

1.1. The Spiritualization of Riches. Among writers roughly contemporary with Paul, only Philo of Alexandria approaches Paul's spiritualization of the vocabulary of wealth. The character of God* in his bestowal of salvation* is described in terms of his "riches," especially in Romans* (Rom 2:4; 9:23; 10:12; 11:33) and Ephesians* (Eph 1:7, 18; 2:4, 7; 3:8, 16; cf. Phil 4:19; Col 1:27). Accordingly, God "enriches" the saints (Rom 11:12; 1 Cor 1:5; 2 Cor 6:10; 9:11; Col 2:2; 3:16; Tit 3:6).

In 2 Corinthians 8:9 Christ is said to have moved from wealth to poverty in order to make others "rich" spiritually. Christ's "impoverishment" here is usually understood as a reference to his exchange of a heavenly state for an earthly state at the Incarnation, but it is possible that it reveals a literal renunciation of wealth on the part of Jesus—or at least highlights the low economic level endured in his earthly ministry. Paul uses a similar line of argument in 2 Corinthians 6:10, contending that his own (economic) poverty leads to the (spiritual) wealth of the Corinthians.*

The inconsistency between Paul's titular status as a Roman citizen (probably indicative of a prosperous family; see Citizenship) and his life as an itinerant evangelist may provide a clue to his other-worldly view of riches: in Christ (see In Christ), as worldly measures of value are transformed, so worldly terminology must be redefined. 1 Timothy 6:17-19, with its wordplay on "rich," may represent the fullest development of Paul's thought in this regard.

1.2. Economic Level of Paul's Constituency. 1 Corinthians 1:26 indicates that "not many" Corinthians were in positions of power or nobility, but recent studies have shown that it is a mistake to take this as an indicator of a low economic level in the Pauline churches. "Not many" allows for significant exceptions (cf. Acts 18:7-8; Rom 16:23), and people could possess riches without prestige or rank. Indeed, Paul criticizes members of the church for social pretensions (1 Cor 11:19) and social prejudice (1 Cor 11:17-22), and his extended appeal for financial aid (see Financial Support) assumes their ability to support the cause of helping the Jerusalem poor (2 Cor 8—9; esp. 2 Cor 8:13-15). The emerging consensus is that Pauline churches represented a fair cross-section of urban society: few extremes on either end of the socioeconomic scale, and a preponderance of artisans and traders at various levels of income. Those with money but without other means of status may have been attracted to Christianity in part as a status-enhancing mechanism within the local community (see Social Setting).

1.3. Responsible Use of Riches. The personal economic ethic of the Pauline corpus reflects standard Jewish piety of the period. This includes warnings against greed (1 Cor 5:11; 1 Tim 3:8; Tit 1:7), avoidance of poverty by industry (Rom 13:8; 1 Thess 4:11-12; cf. 2 Thess 3:6-12), priority in giving to one's own household (Gal 6:10; 1 Tim 5:8; cf. Acts 11:27-30) and liberality toward others (Rom 12:8, 13; 1 Cor 16:2; 2 Cor 8:2; Eph 4:28). The focus of liberality for Paul is the collection for the saints (see Collection for the Saints), which appears to have taken the place of the Jewish Temple tax as a Pauline expression of solidarity with the Jerusalem* church (Rom 15:25-29; 1 Cor 16:1-4; 2 Cor 8—9; perhaps Gal 2:10). More specifically, the rich themselves are enjoined to generosity, which will result in spiritual blessings in this life (2 Cor 9:10-15; Phil 4:14-20) and the next (1 Tim 6:19).

Along with these Jewish features, there are also some Greek elements in Paul's teaching (especially in 2 Cor 8—9). The warning against "love of money" (1 Tim 3:3; 6:6-10; 2 Tim 3:2) is common in contemporary Greek literature. In Philippians 4:11-13 Paul argues for "self-sufficiency" in all circumstances (autarkēs, Phil 4:11; cf. 1 Tim 6:7-8), a term common among Stoics and Cynics (see Philosophy). In Cynic practice and in later Christian monasticism, autarkeia implied not only spiritual freedom or detachment but also voluntary reduction to a minimal economic level. Paul's teaching—and certainly his example—allow for such a radical degree of liberality on the part of the rich. Indeed, 1 Corinthians 13:3 alludes to those who "give away all" (provided they have love). But the fact that Paul does not make explicit such a demand suggests that his expectations for liberality are limited to such expressions of solidarity as the collection and provision for the subsistence of needy believers (Eph 4:28).

2. Poverty.

Paul has even less to say about the poor than he does about the rich. This may be due to Paul's own detachment, as suggested above. It may also be due in part to the lack of direct relevance of poverty to the Pauline churches. Among the urban artisans, traders and even slaves who comprised the early communities, there may have been very few who were poor by first-century standards; that is, without any means of livelihood apart from charity.

2.1. Responsibility to the Poor. To the extent that poor people can be found, they are the appropriate recipients of Christian liberality (Eph 4:28; cf. Acts 11:27-30), and Paul himself affirms that it is part of his commission to "remember" the poor (Gal 2:10; cf. instructions about widows in 1 Tim 5:3-16). The instructions regarding work in 1 Thessalonians 4:11-12 and 2 Thessalonians 3:6-12 imply a negative view of poverty that results from laziness. Elsewhere, we might infer a measure of sympathy for the plight of the needy from Paul's injunctions to kindness and love* for fellow believers, but poverty per se is not a concern. Paul draws attention to his own poverty not to call for financial assistance, which he forgoes (1 Cor 9:15; 2 Cor 11:10), but to highlight the spiritual riches his ministry bestows (2 Cor 6:10; cf. 1 Cor 4:9-13). He draws attention to the poverty of the Macedonians only as a rhetorical device to highlight their exemplary generosity (2 Cor 8:2).

2.2. "The Poor Among the Saints in Jerusalem." Romans 15:26 affirms the gifts of Macedonia and Achaia to "the poor among the saints at Jerusalem" (RSV). Since this is clearly a reference to the Pauline collection, which is not described elsewhere as social relief, it may be best to take the expression here as explicative: "the poor who are the saints in Jerusalem." This is consistent with the use of the title poor as a self-designation of the Jews, especially the Qumran sectaries (see 1QpHab 12:3, 6, 10; 1QM 11:9, 13; 4Q171 37:2-10; cf. Ps 69:32; 72:4), in contemporary literature. In this sense it is not primarily an economic designation but a signifier of the longing for the spiritual riches of salvation. This is in line with Paul's spiritualization of the terminology of riches, and it may indicate a noneconomic connotation in the reference to Paul's remembering the poor in Galatians 2:10. On the other hand, if believers in Jerusalem, or a subgroup of them, had suffered economically, the title may indicate economic deprivation. Some may have suffered from despoliation at the hands of antagonistic Jews (Heb 10:32-34), from famine (Acts 11:27-30) or from voluntary depletion of capital (Acts 4:32-37).

See also COLLECTION FOR THE SAINTS; SOCIAL SETTING OF MISSION CHURCHES; SUFFERING.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. E. Bammel, "πτωχός κτλ," TDNT VI.885-916; D. Georgi, Remembering the Poor (Nashville: Abingdon, 1992); F. Hauck and W. Kasch, "πλοῦτος κτλ," TDNT VI.318-32; M. Hengel, Property and Riches in the Early Church (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1974); B. Holmberg, Paul and Power (Lund: CWK Gleerup, 1978); L. E. Keck, "The Poor Among the Saints in the New Testament," ZNW 56 (1965) 100-129; R. M. Kidd, Wealth and Beneficence in the Pastoral Epistles (SBLDsss 122, Missoula: Scholar's, 1990); W. Meeks, The First Urban Christians (New Haven: Yale University, 1983); K. F. Nickle, The Collection: A Study of Paul's Strategy (London: SCM, 1966); G. Theissen, The Social Setting of Pauline Christianity: Essays on Corinth (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1982). T. E. Schmidt

RIGHTEOUSNESS, RIGHTEOUSNESS OF GOD

In the Pauline corpus the teaching about the righteousness of God* and the related doctrine of the justification* of the sinner* hold an important place. Though the centrality of these concepts in Pauline thought has in recent times been questioned (Schweitzer, Fitzmyer, Sanders; see Center; Justification; Paul and His Interpreters), they have in the past been the object of vigorous discussion, especially since these terms have been widely affirmed as a key to Paul's understanding of salvation.* But while there has been broad scholarly consensus about the significance of these terms in Paul's thought, there has not been agreement as to the precise meaning these terms have in Paul's usage.

1. Terminology, Background and Issues
2. Righteousness in Paul
3. History of Interpretation
4. God's Righteousness as Relation-Restoring Love

1. Terminology, Background and Issues.

The voluminous discussion has been focused largely on two questions: (1) how is the genitive construction dikaiosynē theou ("righteousness of God") to be interpreted, and (2) what does it mean in the overall context of Paul's thought? Is it to be understood in the so-called objective sense (somewhat straining the grammatical definition of objective genitive but frequently used by commentators to label this sense), that is, the righteousness which is valid before God? Or is it to be interpreted as a subjective genitive, referring either to God's own righteousness, describing his being (he is righteous) or God's action (God acts justly)? Further, is righteousness, or God's righteousness through Christ, received by impartation or imputation? Does this righteousness give juridical standing, a new status, or a new nature? And from the human side, is the righteousness of God experienced as ethical power, a new relationship with God, or a change of lordship? Is Paul using these terms within the context of Greco-Roman jurisprudence, where righteousness means "justice" or "righteous judgment" (in a legal sense), or is he using them in light of OT meanings?

1.1. Philological Concerns. In the interpretation of the theme righteousness of God, the problem begins when one considers the meaning of words. Words neither exist by themselves without a context, nor are texts written as free-floating packages of meaning without a historical basis or a place in their cultural milieu. The language Paul used was Greek, but as a Jew he participated in a culture that was Hebrew as well as Greco-Roman. Since Paul quotes passages of the OT throughout his letters, one must understand Paul as writing within the tradition of the Hebrew Bible. By reason of Paul's frequent use of the Septuagint version of the Hebrew Bible, the same concepts in the LXX should be given due consideration. In English translation the words righteousness or justification are used to translate the Greek dikaiosynē. These words may or may not connote the same meaning as the Greek term. These are just some of the linguistic issues that lie at the foundation of interpretation. If one couples the linguistic possibilities with various theological presuppositions, the interpretive options increase (see Hermeneutics, Interpreting Paul).

1.1.1. Etymology.

1.1.1.1. Hebrew. G. Quell provides an excellent introduction to the issues that are at the basis of the Hebrew understanding of righteousness. The concept of righteousness in the Hebrew Bible emphasizes the relational aspect of God and humanity in the context of a covenant. Among the various Hebrew word groups associated with righteousness, ṣeḏeq ("straightness," "justness," "rightness") and ṣᵉḏāqâ ("justice," "straightness," "honesty") suggest a norm. In the LXX dikaiosynē ("righteousness") is used 81 times for ṣeḏeq, 134 times for ṣᵉḏāqâ, and six times it renders freely the adjective ṣaddîq ("just," "righteous," "honest"). There are eight instances in which dikaiosynē ("righteousness") renders ḥeseḏ ("loving-kindness," "mercy," "piety," "goodwill"; e.g., Gen 19:19). Other Hebrew words meaning "genuine," "good," "evenness," "purity" and "simplicity" are occasionally translated by dikaiosynē. Dikaios ("observant of right," "righteous," "fair") renders the Hebrew ṣaddîq 189 times. In sum, of the predominant Hebrew terms the root ṣdq is the only one to be rendered mainly by dikē ("right," "law") and its derivatives, especially dikaiosynē, while other synonymous Hebrew terms such as ḥeseḏ are not given their due when the LXX translates them by eleos ("pity," "mercy"), which introduces an emotional element not present in the Hebrew. Dikaiosynē would have been a more accurate rendering of these words as well.

The common Hebrew word for righteousness is ṣeḏeq, or its feminine form ṣᵉḏāqâ, which occurs in the OT 117 and 115 times respectively. The Hebrew meaning of justice means more than the classical Greek idea of giving to every one their due. Usually the word suggests Yahweh's saving acts as evidence of God's faithfulness to the covenant. For this meaning of righteousness of God, dikaiosynē is not as flexible as the Hebrew word.

In the Tannaitic literature of rabbinic Judaism there was a theological and semantic shift restricting ṣeḏeq and ṣᵉḏāqâ to proper behavior, with ṣᵉḏāqâ being used primarily for almsgiving (Przybylski, 75). God's righteousness was increasingly understood as God's willingness to protect and provide for the poor. This association was already present within the Hebrew Bible; for example: "They have distributed freely, they have given to the poor; their righteousness endures forever" (Ps 112:9).

1.1.1.2. Greek. The richness of the Hebrew usage is generally well reproduced in the LXX (Quell). Of the relatively few instances in which ṣeḏeq, ṣᵉḏāqâ and ṣaddîq are not translated by dikai- words, eleēmosynē and eleos ("alms," "mercy") are employed for ṣᵉḏāqâ (cf. LXX Is 1:27; Ziesler, 59-60). Similar evidence of this is found in the NT at Matthew 6:1, where the variant readings of later MSS read eleēmosynēn for dikaiosynēn (see Przybylski, 78).

1.1.1.3. Latin. In the Western Roman Empire, the Old Latin versions of the NT displaced the Greek NT, and Paul was consequently understood via the Latin translation. The Old Latin and later Latin Vulgate rendered dikaiosynē by iustitia ("justice"). The legal connotation of this term in Roman Law was superimposed upon the word dikaiosynē, which Paul had employed. The Roman legal understanding of justice was in a distributive sense: to give to each their due, the bestowal of rewards and punishments according to merit. The OT sense of righteousness as grounded in covenantal relationship was weakened, and its place was taken by the courtroom image of the sinner before God's tribunal. Although righteousness in the OT had a legal aspect, it was that of a litigant being adjudged righteous by God before their enemies. The biblical image of the covenant between God and humanity faded into the background, while the Latin context called to mind stark legal realities of the court. The shift in language from Hebrew to Greek to Latin resulted in an alteration in theological content as the words that were employed either overlaid the earlier meaning or signified something new in the receptor language.

1.1.1.4. English. Modern English partakes of a double portion of Indo-European languages: a Germanic base from Anglo-Saxon as well as Latinate words from the Norman Conquest. Because of this characteristic of English, one can say either "to be righteous" (from the Anglo-Saxon verb rightwisen meaning "to make right, to rightwise"), or "to be justified" (a verbal form derived from ius, iuris and iustitia, meaning "to be declared just"). The semantic ranges of the two are not identical.

1.1.2. Worldviews.

1.1.2.1. Hebrew. An essential component of Israel's religious experience was that Yahweh was not only Lord of Law but also the one who was faithful to it. God was faithful to the covenant.* God's righteousness was shown by saving actions in accordance with this covenant relationship. A person was righteous by acting properly in regard to the covenant relationship with Yahweh. One's relationship with others reflected the relational aspect of the covenant with Yahweh. Righteousness was understood in terms of being in proper relation to the covenant rather than in terms of "right" or ethical conduct as determined by some abstract standard. When Judah says of Tamar, "She is more righteous than I," he is referring to her being righteous in her pursuit of covenantal, familial responsibility (Gen 38:26).

1.1.2.2. Greco-Roman. The gods of the Greco-Roman pantheon were thought to be subject to forces beyond their control (see Religions). This understanding later degenerated into a sort of inexorable fate to which even the gods were subject (see Worship). The Hellenistic theory of universal law meant that both the gods and humanity had to comply with these overarching norms in order to be righteous. Giving others their due was the basis of righteousness; one acted in accordance with a norm (Plato). In Greek thought, righteousness was a virtue. According to Aristotle, righteousness was the correct functioning of all the virtues. In Roman Civil Law, justice (iustitia) was done when one acted toward another in accordance with one's respective status established by tradition and the Roman legal corpus.

1.2. OT Background. While the OT uses righteousness terminology in numerous contexts involving all areas of life, the touchstone of righteousness is Israel's covenantal relationship with Yahweh. It is based on the standard of God's covenant faithfulness. Righteousness is not primarily an ethical quality; rather it characterizes the character or action of God who deals rightly within a covenant relationship and who established how others are to act within that relationship. "Shall not the judge of all the earth do what is right?" (Gen 18:25). The covenant faithfulness of God, the righteousness of God, is shown by Yahweh's saving acts. This salvation is variously experienced as Israel's victory over enemies, or personal vindication of one's innocence before God in the presence of one's enemies, and it involves both soteriological and forensic elements (see Triumph).

In the classical prophets of the eighth century, there is a greater emphasis on the juridical and ethical views of ṣeḏeq. Amos, on behalf of the poor, associates righteousness with doing justice (mišpāṭ, Amos 5:7, 24; 6:12). Corrupt judges who do not judge rightly do not reflect the righteousness of the covenant relationship. Their oppression of the poor is the antithesis of righteousness. Hosea, emphasizing divine love, links righteousness with loving-kindness and mercy as well as justice (Hos 2:19; 10:12). Micah refers only to God's righteousness as being his faithfulness to act within the covenant to save Israel from her enemies and to vindicate the penitent (Mic 6:5; 7:9). Isaiah associates the righteousness of the people and God's righteousness with just decisions (Is 1:26; 16:5; 26:9). God's faithfulness to deliver Israel is seen in the Servant of the Lord and Cyrus as God's chosen leaders/deliverers (Is 42:6; 45:8, 13, 19). Covenant relationship is the basis of righteousness (Is 51:1). God promises to bring righteousness, which is often understood as deliverance or vindication (Is 51:5, 8; 62:1, 2). In sum, the covenant understanding of righteousness in the classical prophets relates persons to the living God and his covenantal purposes in restoring order to his creation, not to an abstract norm of conduct (see Scullion).

1.3. Intertestamental Literature.

1.3.1. LXX. The Hellenistic idea of righteousness as a virtue, a meeting of the norm, was replaced with the idea of meeting God's claim in this covenant relationship (Schrenk). Thus the semantic range for dikaios in LXX Greek was enlarged due to the influence of the Hebrew background. In fourteen instances the Hebrew word ṣᵉḏāqâ, which could have been translated by dikaiosynē, was rendered by eleēmosynē (meaning "pity," "mercy"; e.g., Is 1:27; 59:16; Ps 34[35]:24). This added emotional element also limited the semantic value of dikaiosynē in later Judaism to almsgiving.

1.3.2. Apocrypha. In addition to the understanding of righteousness in the Hellenistic manner as personal virtue, there are Stoic virtues "associated" with righteousness: integrity, courage, constancy, even in the midst of personal woe, and self-control. In the apocryphal works there is an increasing interest in good works and the merits of the righteous. Tobit's farewell advice to his son Tobias portrays charity (eleēmosynē) as bringing safety rather than fulfilling the prayers of the poor: "For charity delivers from death and keeps you from entering the darkness" (Tob 4:10). In Tobit the focus is on the individual rather than on the community. We further find an emphasis on the relation between suffering and righteousness (Wis 3:1-5). The belief that the merits of some will assist others to gain righteousness appears in the Maccabean literature (2 Macc 12:38-46).

1.3.3. Pseudepigrapha. In the apocalyptic literature such as the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, the Book of Enoch and Jubilees, the idea is prominent that the righteousness of God will characterize the end time (e.g., T. Dan 5:7-13). In this literature God not only is faithful to the covenant, but beyond the present difficulty God will vindicate the covenant people in the eschatological future.

Characteristic of apocalyptic* is an added sense of the distinction between the righteous and the unrighteous. And righteousness is seen as an eschatological reality in that Yahweh will vindicate the righteous (1 Enoch 95:7). The righteousness of God will be shown in the vindication of the persecuted righteous. Thus there is a coupling of the motif of the suffering righteous with the traditional Hebrew understanding of God as the one who vindicates (Ps 26; 31:14-18).

1.3.4. Qumran. In the documents from Qumran* we find references to God's righteousness providing salvation and forgiveness. "And when I stumble, the mercies of God are always my salvation. When I stagger because of the evil of my flesh, my justification is in the righteousness of God which exists forever" (1QS 11:12). In the Thanksgiving Psalm, the righteousness of God shows God's faithfulness to the community: "You forgive the unjust and purify people from guilt by your righteousness" (ṣᵉḏāqâ, 1QH 4:37). In The War of the Children of Light, Yahweh is able to bring them to the joys of future vindication through the righteousness of God (1QM 18:8). "Essentially it means the covenantal faithfulness of God which is being revealed especially in the eschatological warfare for the rule of God's justice" (Kuyper).

2. Righteousness in Paul.

The noun "righteousness" (dikaiosynē), its related adjective "righteous" (dikaios), and the verb "to justify," "to pronounce/treat as righteous" or "put right" (dikaioō) are found in the Pauline writings over 100 times. The sheer volume of occurrences in their various usages and meanings indicates the central place they had in the theology of the apostle.

We will present the meaning of Paul's language of righteousness/justification in its various contexts, bearing in mind that not every instance of "the righteousness of God" carries the same meaning. We will then proceed to explain these terms within the history of interpretation, the currents of contemporary scholarship, and summarize our own conclusions regarding this central Pauline affirmation.

2.1. Dikaiosynē. Paul uses this word both in relationship to God and to human beings. In the latter case its ultimate origin is without exception the character and/or action of God. The term is used in various contexts or associations.

2.1.1. Righteousness Declared. A distinctive usage is found where Paul states that righteousness in believers is the result of a word, or declaration, of God. In Romans 4, where Paul interprets Abraham's* relationship with God as a scriptural foundation for his understanding of believers' "justification by faith" (explained in Rom 1—3), righteousness is said to be "reckoned to" (RSV) or "credited to" (NIV) Abraham by God on the basis of Abraham's believing/trusting in God (Rom 4:3, 5, 6, 9, 11, 22), rather than on the basis of his works. In Galatians 3:6 Abraham's faith in God is "reckoned to him as righteousness." Here, Abraham's trusting submission to God is evaluated as "righteousness."

2.1.2. Righteousness as Gift. Closely related are those usages where righteousness is stated to be a gift of God reigning in the believer (Rom 5:17, 21). Here it is seen as a new reality which dominates or directs the life in Christ (cf. Rom 8:10). According to Galatians 2:21, this righteousness results from God's grace, for if it were possible to achieve it via obedience to the Law, Christ's death would have been in vain. In Galatians 3:21 righteousness (in us, or as our new situation "in Christ") is equated with life, which the Law* is powerless to produce.

2.1.3. Righteousness of Faith. Righteousness, based on God's word and work in Christ, a gift of God's grace,* comes to believers in the context and through the instrumentality of faith.* Where righteousness and faith are related by Paul, it is almost always contrasted with a legalistic, or Law-oriented, righteousness. Thus in Romans 4:11, 13-14 the "righteousness of faith" is said to be based neither on circumcision* nor on the deeds of the Law. In Romans 9:30-32; 10:4-6, 10 the righteousness that comes by faith is contrasted with that which is based on the Law and the doing of the works of the Law. Only the former leads to life, to salvation. Philippians 3:9 speaks of the righteousness that results from faith in Jesus, rather than "my own righteousness" based on Law. This righteousness by faith is of course the righteousness from God, "which depends on faith." This conviction is affirmed by Paul in contrast to his own former experience where, on the basis of Law-based righteousness, he judged himself as "blameless" (Phil 3:6). Such moral perfectionism* as that which Paul had by pedigree and personal endeavor does not, however, bring one into right relationship with God. According to Titus 3:5 believers are saved, not because of deeds done in righteousness (here righteousness means "legal obedience"), but by God's merciful,* atoning work in Christ.

2.1.4. Righteousness of Obedience. A final context is the use of righteousness in an ethical sense, characterizing the life of obedience of those who have been justified. Romans 6:13, 18, 19, 20 contrast lives/bodies as instruments or slaves of wickedness with lives yielded to God as instruments of righteousness. What is clearly in view here is the expected result of life lived in relationship with Christ, right living that is in keeping with God's purposes. Righteousness (together with peace* and joy*) is that which marks the believer's relationship with others (rather than judging or offending others) and is the result of God's reign.

This view of righteousness is expanded in a number of Pauline passages. In 2 Corinthians 6:7, 14 it is given as a mark of the Christian life (acting rightly, justly, morally), in contrast with evil, falsehood, inequality (see Ethics). Righteousness is that quality of life which bears fruit in generous giving (2 Cor 9:10) or in purity* and blamelessness (Phil 1:11). In Ephesians 4:24 righteousness is paired with holiness* as resembling God, in contrast to corrupt, deceitful living. It is one of the marks of those who are "children of light*" in distinction from those who perform "unfruitful works of darkness" (Eph 5:9). In the Pastorals there are the exhortations to "aim at righteousness" (1 Tim 6:11; 2 Tim 2:22) and to receive "training in righteousness" (2 Tim 3:16); the context is clearly that of moral, ethical living. Finally, on the basis of faithful service, "the crown of righteousness" is granted at the eschatological* judgment* by God, "the righteous judge" (2 Tim 4:8).

2.2. Dikaios. The adjective dikaios ("upright," "just," "righteous") is ascribed to both human beings and to God. When applied to persons, it defines them as those whose lives are in keeping with God's purposes (Eph 6:1); who live before him in faithfulness (Rom 1:17; Gal 3:11); who are obedient to God's commands (Rom 2:13; 3:10; 1 Tim 1:9); live good, upright, virtuous lives (Rom 5:7; Phil 4:8; Tit 1:8); and exercise fairness and justice (Col 4:1).

Several times God is defined as "righteous" in his nature and action as the just one, the one who can be counted on to mete out justice and do what is right (Rom 3:26; 2 Thess 1:5-6; 2 Tim 4:8). Related to this is the conviction that God's Law is "holy, righteous and good" (Rom 7:12).

Paul's conviction (Rom 5:19) that Christ's obedience to God (in contrast to Adam's disobedience) will result in "many being made righteous" must be understood within the context of God's Law, which reveals the righteous purposes of God. In terms of God's will for humanity, the goal of God's work in Christ is to transform humans into those who are righteous, whose lives are aligned with God's purposes, and who, therefore, are in conformity with the image* of Christ (2 Cor 3:18).

2.3. Dikaioō. The verbal form of the noun righteousness, (dikaioō, "to justify" RSV, NIV, NEB; "to put right" TEV) is used almost always to describe that divine action which affects the sinner in such a way that the relation with God is altered or transformed (either ontologically, as a change in nature; or positionally, resulting from a judicial act; or relationally, as one who was alienated and is now reconciled [see 3 below]). Everywhere this action of God, emerging from his nature as the righteous one, is seen as an act of grace and takes place in the context of the exercise of faith, or trust or believing in Jesus.

Romans 3:21-31 is the most thorough statement of this distinctive Pauline theme. Its validity is grounded by Paul in the story of Abraham (Rom 4). Further reflection is given to it in such central theological texts as Romans 5:1, 9 and Galatians 2:17; 3:8, 24. The negative formulation of this truth is in the contrasting affirmation that no one is justified "by the Law." In Romans 3:20; 4:2 and Galatians 2:16; 3:11 Paul states categorically the impossibility of receiving this justifying action of God by means of successfully keeping the requirements of the Law.

There are several texts where this action of God is addressed not to the sinner but to those who are already "justified." The setting for this action is always eschatological judgment (Rom 2:13; 8:33; Gal 5:4-5). The issue in these instances is not salvation (either by works or by faith). Rather, those who have been justified (by grace through faith) appear before "the judgment seat of Christ" (2 Cor 5:10) where "the empirical reality of one's life before God as 'works' will be revealed and evaluated" (Cosgrove, 660; see Judgment; Rewards).

2.4. Dikaiosynē Theou. The concept of God's righteousness, its nature, function and result, is central to Paul's teaching on the justification of the sinner. The genitive construction dikaiosynē theou, "righteousness of God" (Rom 1:17; 3:5, 21, 22; 10:3; 2 Cor 5:21), or dikaiosynē autou, "his righteousness" (Rom 3:25, 26), or hē ek theou dikaiosynē, "righteousness from God" (Phil 3:9) are found ten times. Most of these are located in Romans,* Paul's fullest discourse on God's redemptive work in Christ.

Romans 1:16-17 is foundational for understanding the meaning of this concept. For Paul the gospel—the event of the life, death and resurrection of Christ—is the historical manifestation of divine redemptive power. In that gospel "God's righteousness is revealed." Here God's righteousness and the gospel (God's saving work in Christ) are virtually synonymous (with the revelation of the saving righteousness of God being contrasted with the revelation of the wrath of God in Rom 1:18). Faith responds to God's act of righteousness and life results.

In contrast to human faithlessness and wickedness (Rom 3:3-5), God remains faithful, and in that faithfulness his righteousness is manifested. This faithfulness (or righteousness) is given its historical particularity (according to Paul's sustained presentation in Rom 3:21-31) in the sacrificial atonement of Christ's death (Rom 3:24-25). It is explicitly stated that in this redemptive act God's righteousness has been manifested (Rom 3:21, 25, 26; see Death of Christ).

In all three passages in Romans (Rom 1; 3; 10), as well as in Philippians 3:9, the apprehension of God's righteousness and of its coming into the sphere of human experience is related to faith in Jesus and understood as a gift of God's grace. In addition, all the texts explicitly include a rejection of "works of the Law"* as a valid instrument for attaining or receiving this righteousness of, or from, God.

The use of "righteousness of God" in 2 Corinthians 5:21 is in a context which does not share all the elements of those in Romans and Philippians. References to the instrumentality of faith or works are absent here. The context is the new creation brought into being through God's work in Christ (2 Cor 5:17). This new creation consists of those who have been reconciled to God (2 Cor 5:18-19) and who at the same time become instruments of that reconciling work within the yet-existing old creation* (2 Cor 5:19-20; see Center; Peace, Reconciliation). Paul climaxes this passage with the affirmation that the purpose of Christ's identification with us in our sin-bound existence (2 Cor 5:21a) is so that we, in relationship with Christ, "might become God's righteousness" (2 Cor 5:21b). It is highly significant for the overall understanding of this term that Paul does not say that we in Christ "might become righteous" or "might receive God's righteousness," but rather "that we might become God's righteousness" (see 4 below).

3. History of Interpretation.

A. E. McGrath's study of the history of the doctrine of justification is instructive for discerning some of the reasons why the West has understood Paul's theology of God's saving action in Christ largely in terms of justification rather than relying on the varied richness of the biblical understanding of salvation in Christ. Several complex reasons for this include the interest in Paul evidenced by the rise in Pauline scholarship during the theological renaissance of the twelfth century, especially the use of Pauline commentaries as vehicles of theological speculation. Coupled with this, the Western church had a high regard for classical jurisprudence, which made possible the semantic relationship between iustitia (justice) and iustificatio (justification), and allowed theologians of High Scholasticism to find in the cognate concept of justification a means of rationalizing the divine dispensation toward humankind in terms of justice. Luther interpreted the scholastics as understanding the righteousness of God as that by which God punishes sinners (WA 54.185.18-20). Therefore, Luther could not see how the gospel revealing the righteousness of God could be "good news." Luther's "discovery" of the free imparting of the righteousness of God to believers is instructive in explaining why the Reformation came to be perceived as inextricably linked with the doctrine of justification. The Roman Catholic desire to establish a Catholic consensus on this issue resulted in the discussion at the Council of Trent of the reconciliation of humanity to God under the aegis of the doctrine of justification.

*3.1. Patristic-Medieval: East. In the East Paul's concept of the righteousness of God and the justification of the sinner was not a prominent means for understanding God's saving acts in Jesus Christ. J. Reumann notes that the apostolic fathers maintain the biblical view of righteousness as what God does, but they show a greater interest in the human response. Rather than giving importance to the righteousness of God and justification, Eastern Christianity emphasized the divine economy and the condescension of the Son, which led to human participation in the divine nature understood as deification (rather than justification). McGrath sees the theological differences between East and West as due to their different understandings of the work of the Holy Spirit: the West tended to subordinate the work of the Holy Spirit to the concept of grace interposed between God and humanity; the Eastern church holds to the immediacy of the divine and one's direct encounter with the Holy Spirit expressed as deification. With this emphasis it is natural that the Eastern Church did not evidence the Western commitment to justification as the fundamental soteriological metaphor.

*3.2. Patristic-Medieval: West. In the Latin fathers and Origen, the righteousness of God is understood as distributive justice: God gives to all their due, rewarding the good and punishing the wicked. The Reformers turned to Augustine for his views on the righteousness of God.

3.2.1. Augustine. Augustine thought the righteousness of God was not the righteousness characterizing God's nature, but rather that by which God justifies sinners. His idea of faith involved an intellectual aspect: to believe is to affirm in thought. Augustine coupled faith with love (Augustine Serm. 90.6; 93.5; Ep. 183.1.3). The love of God is the theme dominating his view of justification, whereas the Reformers would coin the slogan sola fide ("by faith alone") to characterize justification and their understanding of the righteousness of God. In his work On the Trinity, Augustine makes the statement that true justifying faith is accompanied by love (De Trin. 15.18.32). In his comments on 1 Corinthians 13:2 he remarks that genuine faith always works through love (recalling Gal 5:6: see Crabtree). Augustine, along with some Greek fathers, underscored the gift aspect of justification. He believed that one's nature was changed through this gift.

3.2.2. Roman Catholicism. In the Roman tradition the righteousness of God was understood more as that which was demanded by God. The medieval understanding of the nature of justification referred not merely to the beginning of the Christian life, but to its continuation and ultimate perfection, in which the Christian is made righteous in the sight of God and the sight of others through a fundamental change in nature (McGrath). The prevailing pre-Reformation view in the West of the righteousness of God was that of a distributive justice whereby God judges justly according to God's holiness. A common theological position was that righteousness of God was a subjective genitive, God's holiness being the norm by which all would be judged. Luther's personal struggle with the inexorable righteousness of God resulted in an understanding of the righteousness of God that was deeper than his tradition had grasped. In Catholic thought, justification was not considered something in the present as much as a process leading to the ultimate future judgment.

*3.3. The Reformation. Generally the Reformers and their theological heirs have interpreted the righteousness of God as a so-called objective genitive (see 1 above) in all instances in Paul's writings, with the possible exceptions of Romans 3:5, 25, 26. The righteousness of God was understood from the viewpoint of the individual, as that righteousness which God gives to people, and on the basis of which the sinner is approved by God. The theocentric OT meaning of the righteousness of God in the sphere of covenant relationship was displaced by an anthropocentric focus. The reformers and their successors often interpreted the righteousness of God from the human aspect because they had replaced the biblical basis of covenant relationship with the Hellenistic theory of universal law which both God and humanity had to fulfill in order to be regarded as righteous. The emphasis on the individual under universal law rather than in covenant relationship contributed to the later "legal fiction" theory whereby those who believe in Jesus are justified, deemed righteous, even though they are not actually righteous. In this view faith in Jesus takes the place of actual righteousness.

3.3.1. Luther. Luther's concern was personal and pastoral. The fine theological distinction maintained by the Roman Catholic magisterium did not "trickle down" to villages parishes. Luther interpreted the righteousness of God distinctively as a so-called objective genitive, rendering the Greek term dikaiosynē tou theou in Romans 1:17 as righteousness "which counts before God." Luther states the righteousness of God is the cause of salvation, and thus it is not the righteousness by which God is righteous in himself but the righteousness by which we are made righteous by God. This happens through faith in the gospel. Luther points to Augustine for the sense that the righteousness of God is that by which God imparts and makes people righteous. Luther emphasized the immediacy of justification. A person is at once just and unjust: this suggests a composite view of Luther's new understanding of the righteousness of God, in addition to the traditional understanding of the distributive justice of God.

For Luther works are the result of the righteousness given by God. Sanctification is a process that will not be consummated in this life. Luther clearly separated justification from regeneration and sanctification. This perspective gave rise to the understanding of justification as a new status before God: "Thus in ourselves we are sinners, and yet through faith we are righteous by God's imputation. For we believe Him who promises to free us, and in the meantime we strive that sin may not rule over us but that we may withstand it until He takes it from us" (WA 56.271). In Catholic thought, God responds to those who do what they can by giving them enabling grace which then leads to saving grace. Luther broke with this tradition in that he found that God provided the preconditions for justification (see Watson).

3.3.2. Calvin. Calvin in his Commentary on Romans presents his understanding of the righteousness of God in Romans 1:17 as that which is approved before God's tribunal. Calvin associated sanctification with justification and described sanctification in terms of being in Christ. According to Calvin, God communicates his righteousness to us. In a nearly mystical sense, through faith Jesus communicates himself to those who believe. Works have no place in the justification of sinners. Calvin refutes the notion of a fiction involved in the justification of sinners. God provides all that is necessary. He cautions not to understand righteousness as a quality; we are righteous only in so far as Christ reconciles the Father to us. Calvin, more so than Luther, emphasizes the relational aspect of the righteousness of God. Luther's view of the righteousness of God seems to contain the aspect of acquittal. Calvin emphasizes the marvelous nature of the communication, or imparting, of God's righteousness to us.

3.4. Post-Reformation. Just as the Western Church experienced the scholasticism of the twelfth century, Protestant Orthodoxy shifted from Calvin's christological emphasis to other matters, such as predestination, federal theology and the perseverance of the saints. Lutheranism shifted its emphasis from justification of sinners and the righteousness of God to deal with these developments within the Reformed camp. The Pietist movement within Lutheranism was a reaction against a strictly forensic understanding of righteousness. The pastoral aspects of Pietism later influenced Lutheranism to emphasize practical aspects of righteousness, reflecting an interest in promoting personal piety.

John Wesley argued for the Pietist position in his emphasis on personal righteousness subsequent to justification. In his sermon on "The Lord Our Righteousness" he adheres to imputation but understands the Holy Spirit to have a sanctifying aspect upon the believer. The believer's basis of justification is the righteousness of Christ "implanted in everyone in whom God has imputed it." He maintains there is no true faith—justifying faith—which does not have the righteousness of Christ for its object. Wesley sees faith in Jesus' death, and hence the imputation of his righteousness, as the cause, end and middle term of salvation.

3.5. Currents of Recent Discussion. The variations within the history of interpretation reflect two basic views: (1) that God's righteousness is a quality of God (or Christ) imparted, making the sinner righteous; (2) that God, the righteous one, declares the sinner to be righteous in a legal transaction (imputed). These dominant views have increasingly been challenged (see Paul and His Interpreters). J. Reumann contends that there is a stronger basis in Christian hymnody for these views than in the NT. For Paul does not speak of Christ's merits or God's righteous essence being so imputed to us. G. E. Ladd contends that forensic (declared) righteousness is real righteousness because our relationship with God is just as real as one's subjective ethical condition. One is in fact "righteous" (defined as right relationship with God) based upon what has been done for us objectively in Christ. The ethical content follows on its heels. Ladd maintains that righteousness as acquittal and right conduct belong together.

H. Cremer (1900) launched scholarship in a new direction by pointing to the OT understanding of ṣᵉḏāqâ ("righteousness") as covenant faithfulness, and seeing this meaning as the subjective genitive, not in the ontological sense, but as referring to God's saving activity as Redeemer.*

Some scholars, such as R. Bultmann, attempted to combine both the objective and subjective aspects of the righteousness of God, suggesting a "genitive of the author" to describe God's righteousness which is given to believers as the basis of one's relationship with God. The righteousness of God is the gift which makes possible this new existence for the individual. His existential interpretation involves the kerygmatic reality of the individual: one continues to appropriate God's "rightwising" verdict in obedient existential decision and becomes what one is declared to be. Bultmann's inattention to OT background and to Paul's apocalyptic understanding of history resulted in an anthropocentric and individualistic orientation of the righteousness of God.

There have been various attempts to reevaluate the meaning of the righteousness of God in Paul's writings (see bibliographical details in Brauch). In 1954 J. Bollier, a critic of the legal fiction theory of justification, suggested that God requires a person to be righteous, to recognize God's sovereignty and to submit to God's Lordship. Under the old covenant as well as the new, God has graciously offered faith as the way a person may recognize God as one's Lord and so gain God's approval. Faith is the appropriate human response to the self-revelation of God. Faith actually is righteousness, for it is the way in which one may fulfill this obligation toward God within the covenant relationship. Thus Paul speaks of the "righteousness of faith" in Romans 4:11, 13. Bollier opted for a subjective genitive, maintaining that the righteousness of God is God's own inherent righteousness rather than the righteousness of which God is the author and which he approves. Anticipating E. Käsemann, Bollier further posited that this righteousness of God has a transcendent as well as an immanent aspect, for one is directly affected by the manifestation of this righteousness.

E. Käsemann has had a great impact on the discussion. Although he sees the righteousness of God in Romans 3:5, 25-26 as referring to God's character, he emphasizes that Paul's view of the righteousness of God accents its gift-character against the backdrop of Jewish apocalypticism. "The gift itself has the character of power, salvation-creating power" (Käsemann). The gift is never a personal possession separated from the giver. In this way Käsemann captures the eschatological nature of the relationship of God with creation in a forward orientation toward the consummation of God's saving acts in Jesus Christ. God's faithfulness is faithfulness to the creation, not simply to the individual (cf. Bultmann). God's sovereignty over the universe is established eschatologically in Jesus. A person within that framework experiences a change in lordship. Johannine and Pauline language now go hand in hand, since by "abiding" in Jesus, believers become what they are. The righteousness of God is God's power in Christ reaching out to the world. Salvation is experienced in the sphere of Christ's lordship, which is entered in response to God's righteousness (Käsemann; on this see Way, 177-236).

The subjective genitive is also maintained by two of Käsemann's students, C. Müller and P. Stuhlmacher. Müller (1965) agrees with Käsemann, but places his emphasis on the eschatological victory of God, the final cosmic trial at which creation submits to God (see Eschatology). God's ultimate victory reveals his righteousness and is acknowledged by humanity. That final victory is anticipated in the present, where God's lordship is a reality in everyday life. P. Stuhlmacher stresses the saving aspect of the righteousness of God in that the creator makes right the world on account of his creation-faithfulness, even by raising the dead. The righteousness of God is God's creating power fostering faith and recreating the world. Stuhlmacher sees the righteousness of God as the center* of Pauline theology whereby Paul shows a complete correlation between judicial and ontological ideas of righteousness. Thus justification refers to a divine creative activity, the actualization of the righteousness of God as a "Word event" which creates a new being at baptism.* Stuhlmacher understands justification for Paul to mean the obligating, renewing call of the individual, by the power of God, into the realm of encounter with God which has been opened by Christ. The renewed calling culminates in service.

The Roman Catholic scholar K. Kertelge follows a similar line of thought to Stuhlmacher. The righteousness of God denotes God's redemptive activity and not God's gift of righteousness to us which leads to salvation. This reality consists of nothing except the new relationship between God and humanity created by God, which from the divine side is lordship and from the human side is obedience. For Paul the present and the future character of God's eschatological redemption are essentially identical, because both have their basis in the Christ event. Righteousness is by faith, not as a possession, but as a relationship in which one acknowledges God's claim upon one's life.

H. Brunner understands the OT material regarding righteousness to refer to a comprehensive order corresponding to God's will, which encompasses both nature and humanity. In Paul the theme is the change from alienation to reconciliation (2 Cor 5:17-21), from the old world to the new, from the old creation to the new. Humans are re-created by Christ: his death means his subjection to sin, namely the power of alienation from God; but it also means believers' becoming "God's righteousness." They become transformed by God's power into the people of the reestablished created order, the reconciled new world of God's people of the new covenant. In Romans 1 Paul speaks of the will of the creator being obscured by human rejection, but the gospel has revealed God's power for redemption. The righteousness of God is God's redemptive saving act. God's saving action has always been at work, as evidenced in the OT, but has now been clearly revealed in the Christ event. For those who believe in Christ, the reality and power of sin have been put aside. God's new created order, which is the removal of the alienation of sin, has been brought into being. To be righteous or declared righteous is neither a juridical act nor an ontological transformation, but a state of being restored to right relationship with God because the alienating reality of sin has been set aside.

4. God's Righteousness as Relation-Restoring Love. The history of interpretation, including the recent perspectives sketched above, reveals two facets; (1) that the understanding of the righteousness of God has been largely dominated by Greek and Latin categories, where righteousness as a quality of God's character is either given to us and makes us righteous, or is the basis for God's judical pronouncement, declaring us righteous; (2) that the more recent discussion, in seeking to take more seriously Paul's grounding in the OT, has found the earlier understanding to be an inadequate explication of Paul's meaning. Particularly important has been the insistence on the OT covenantal context of the righteousness of God as an interpretive background for the Pauline formulations.

Within that OT context, and beside other meanings and nuances (Brunner), the idea of God's righteousness appears prominently in salvation texts, where God's redemptive action toward his covenant people is defined by this term. It is God's righteousness which saves from enemies, from threatening situations, from the state of alienation from God. In such settings God's righteousness is frequently defined by the terms "steadfast love" and "faithfulness" (e.g., Is 11:5; 16:5; Ps 5:7-8; 89:13-14; 98:2-3). These relational attributes are in some contexts virtually synonymous with "righteousness" and "salvation" (e.g., Ps 85:7-13). Thus, God's righteousness may be rendered as "saving deed" or "relation-restoring love.*"

Paul's use of righteousness of God may best be understood against the background of this particular OT concept. For Paul "unrighteousness" results from disobedience, whether of persons generally, who refuse to acknowledge God (Rom 1:28), and obey unrighteousness and disobey truth* (Rom 2:8), or of God's people who refuse to acknowledge God, and are disobedient within the covenant relationship (Rom 3:3-5; 10:21).

It is the reality of alienation, defined synonymously as "faithlessness" (Rom 3:3) and "unrighteousness" (Rom 3:5), which Paul knows to have been addressed by the revelation (Rom 1:16-17) or manifestation (Rom 3:21-26) of God's righteousness. In both texts the concrete historical expression of "God's righteousness" is the event of Christ: defined in Romans 1:16 as "the gospel" and "the power* of God for salvation"; and in Romans 3:24 as "the redemption which is in Christ Jesus."

Paul contends that God is faithful to his creation/covenant relationship (Rom 3:3-4), his action is righteous (Rom 3:26), and it is this action in response to his rebellious creation which Paul therefore calls the righteousness of God. The term designates that act of God which restores the broken relationship. "Righteousness" in this context is not an attribute of God, but designates God's forgiving love and redemptive intervention in the world through Christ.

The righteousness of God understood as God's relation-restoring love is central to Paul's argument in Romans 3:21-26. The incarnation of the righteousness of God in the redemptive work of the cross leads to forgiveness*; and forgiveness restores broken relationships. Because this is purely the act of God, Paul calls it a gift. Since a gift is ineffective unless appropriated, it must be "received by faith." The result of this gracious act of God is the justification ("setting right") of the sinner. The passage says nothing about an essential or judical transaction; rather, it declares the restoration of the divine-human relationship through what Christ did by his death (see Expiation, Propitiation, Mercy Seat).

The language of "submitting to the righteousness of God" in Romans 10:3 confirms Paul's understanding of it as God's relation-restoring intervention. The attempt to establish one's own righteousness—one's own position before God—is a rejection of the coming of God's righteousness in Christ, God's way of saving the world. For to submit means to acknowledge one's severed relation with God and to confess the lordship of Christ (Rom 10:7; see Lord).

The difficult expression of 2 Corinthians 5:21, that in (relationship with) Christ "we might become the righteousness of God" further underlines a relational rather than a judicial or ontological meaning. The text is concerned with reconciliation to God in and through Christ (see Center; Peace, Reconciliation) and calls those who are reconciled to become instruments of that reconciling work (2 Cor 5:18-19). In that context, the phrase "to become God's righteousness" means that believers become participants in God's reconciling action, extensions of his restoring love.

For Paul, then, God's righteousness is God's saving deed. In continuity with OT expressions of God's righteousness as God's faithfulness and steadfast love toward Israel, Paul sees this divine action finally expressed in the life, death and resurrection of Jesus. The acceptance of that divine condescension through the act of faith justifies us (makes us right) with God. Righteousness is present in this restored relationship when life is lived in conformity with God's purposes.

See also CENTER OF PAUL'S THEOLOGY; CREATION AND NEW CREATION; CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE; ESCHATOLOGY; EXPIATION, PROPITIATION, MERCY SEAT; FAITH; GOD; JUDGMENT; JUSTIFICATION; LAW; LOVE; MERCY; PAUL AND HIS INTERPRETERS; PEACE, RECONCILIATION; RESTORATION OF ISRAEL; ROMANS, LETTER TO THE; SALVATION; TRIUMPH; WRATH, DESTRUCTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. O. Betz, "Der gekreuzigte Christus: unsere Weisheit und Gerechtigkeit (der alttestamentliche Hintergrund von 1 Kor 1—2," in Tradition and Interpretation in the New Testament, ed. G. F. Hawthorne with O. Betz (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987) 195-215; P. Blaser, "Paulus und Luther über Gottes Gerechtigkeit," Catholica 36 (1982) 269-79; J. A. Bollier, "The Righteousness of God," Int 8 (1954) 404-13; M. T. Brauch, "Perspectives on 'God's Righteousness' in Recent German Discussion," in E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977) 523-42; H. Brunner, "Die Gerechtigkeit Gottes" ZRG 39 (1987) 210-25; R. Bultmann, "ἔλεος κτλ," TDNT II.477-87; C. H. Cosgrove, "Justification in Paul: A Linguistic and Theological Reflection," JBL 106 (1987) 653-70; A. B. Crabtree, The Restored Relationship (London: Carey Kingsgate, 1963); H. Cremer, Die Paulinische Rechtfertigungslehre im Zussammenhang ihrer geschichtlichen Voraussetzungen (1900); J. A. Fitzmyer, Pauline Theology (Engelwood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice-Hall, 1967); E. Käsemann, " 'The Righteousness of God' in Paul," in New Testament Questions of Today (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1969) 168-82; K. Kertelge, "Rechtfertigung" bei Paulus (NTAbh n.s. 3; 2d ed.; Münster: Aschendorf, 1971); idem, "δικαιοσύνη," "δικαιόω," EDNT 1.325-34; L. J. Kuyper, "Righteousness and Salvation," SJT 30 (1977) 233-52; G. E. Ladd, "Righteousness in Romans," SWJT 19 (1976) 6-17; E. Lohse "Die Gerechtigkeit Gottes in der Paulinischen Theologie," in Die Einheit des Neuen Testaments (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1973) 209-27; A. E. McGrath, Iustitia Dei: A History of the Christian Doctrine of Justification (2 vols. Cambridge: University Press, 1986); R. K. Moore, "Issues Involved in the Interpretation of Dikaiosyne Theou in the Pauline Corpus," Colloquium: The Australian and New Zealand Theological Society 23 (1991) 59-70; C. Müller, Gottesgerechtigkeit und Gottesvolk (FRLANT 86; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1964); J. Piper, "The Demonstration of the Righteousness of God in Romans 3:25, 26," JSNT 7 (1980) 2-32; B. Przybylski, Righteousness in Matthew and His World of Thought (SNTSMS 41; Cambridge: University Press, 1980); G. Quell and G. Schrenk, "δίκη κτλ," TDNT II.174-225; J. Reumann, "Justification of God: Righteousness and the Cross," Moravian Theological Seminary: Bulletin (1964) 16-31; idem, "Righteousness (Early Judaism-New Testament)," ABD V.736-73; idem, Righteousness in the New Testament: Justification in the United States, Lutheran-Roman Catholic Dialogue (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1983); idem, "The 'Righteousness of God' and the 'Economy of God': Two Great Doctrinal Themes Historically Compared," in Askum-Thyateira, ed. G. Dragas (London: Thyateira House, 1985) 615-37; L. Sabourin, "Formulations of Christian Beliefs in Recent Exposition on Paul's Epistles to the Romans and Galatians," RSB 1 (1981) 120-36; A. Schweitzer, The Mysticism of the Apostle Paul (London: A & C Black, 1931); J. J. Scullion, "Righteousness (OT)," ABD V.724-36; M. L. Soards, "The Righteousness of God in the Writings of the Apostle Paul," BTB 15 (1985) 104-9; P. Stuhlmacher, Gerechtigkeit Gottes bei Paulus (FRLANT 82; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1965); idem, Reconciliation, Law, and Righteousness (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); P. Watson, Let God Be God (London: Epworth, 1953); D. V. Way, The Lordship of Christ: Ernst Käsemann's Interpretation of Paul's Theology (Oxford: Clarendon, 1991); S. K. Williams, "The 'Righteousness of God' in Romans," JBL 99 (1980) 241-90; J. A. Ziesler, The Meaning of Righteousness in Paul: A Linguistic and Theological Inquiry (SNTSMS 20; Cambridge: University Press, 1972).

K. L. Onesti and M. T. Brauch

RISING WITH CHRIST. See BAPTISM; DYING AND RISING WITH CHRIST; RESURRECTION.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS. See TRAVEL IN THE ROMAN WORLD.

ROMAN CHRISTIANITY. See ROME AND ROMAN CHRISTIANITY.

ROMAN CITIZENSHIP. See CITIZENSHIP.

ROMAN LEGAL SYSTEM. See LEGAL SYSTEM, ROMAN.

ROMAN POLITICAL SYSTEM. See POLITICAL SYSTEMS.

ROMAN RELIGION. See RELIGIONS, GRECO-ROMAN.

ROMANS, LETTER TO THE

Romans is both the least controversial of the major NT letters and the most important. Least controversial, at any rate, in the "who wrote what when to whom" questions which make it so difficult to gain a firm handle on most of the other NT writings. It is most important as being the first well-developed theological statement by a Christian theologian which has come down to us, and one which has had incalculable influence on the framing of Christian theology ever since—arguably the single most important work of Christian theology ever written. This double feature of Romans is important since it means that discussion of the letter can quickly leave behind such preliminary questions and can focus on its substantive theological content without too much distraction from nagging introductory unknowns.

1. Author, Date and Place of Origin
2. Recipients
3. Purposes
4. Literary Form and Coherence
5. The Issues at Stake
6. The Argument of the Letter

1. Author, Date and Place of Origin.

1.1. Author. There has never been any dispute of real significance over the authorship of Romans. It was written by Paul (Rom 1:1). More to the point is what the letter tells us about this Paul—particularly his sense of commissioning (see Conversion and Call) as an apostle* and consequent commitment to preaching the gospel* (Rom 1:1, 5, 12-17; 15:15-24). It is the fact that Paul the Jew,* or preferably, Paul the Israelite (Rom 11:1), believed himself thus commissioned as apostle to the *Gentiles (Rom 11:13), which gives the letter its distinctive character and cutting edge.

1.2. Date. As to date, the most significant fact is that Paul wrote his letter at a time when he thought he had completed a major phase of his work—his evangelization of the northeastern quadrant of the Mediterranean (Rom 15:19, 23; see Mission). The information that he was about to embark on a visit to Jerusalem* (Rom 15:25) ties in with the larger picture in Acts* of a final visit to Jerusalem at (what proved to be) the close of his work in Asia Minor and Greece (Acts 20). This certainly points to a date in the mid-50s (55-57), though a minority of scholars have argued implausibly for a date as early as 51/52 (see Chronology). The fact that in Romans 13:6-7 Paul felt it necessary to provide a theological rationale for paying taxes (see Civil Authority) may also reflect some unrest in Rome* on questions of taxation early in Nero's reign, that is, about the same period (56-58; Tacitus Ann. 13). The issue of precise date, however, is of minor significance beside the clear implication that the letter marks a climax in Paul's missionary work.

1.3. Place of origin. The correlation of Romans 15:25 with Acts 20 also suggests the place of origin, since Acts 20:3 speaks of three months spent in Greece at the beginning of the final journey to Jerusalem. That suggests Corinth, Paul's main headquarters in Greece, and fits with the information provided by chapter 16: Phoebe came from Cenchreae, one of Corinth's ports (Rom 16:1-2); and Gaius and Erastus (Rom 16:23) probably lived in Corinth (1 Cor 1:14; NewDocs 4.160-61). More to the point, a period of three months centered in a single location would give Paul the time to reflect, compose and dictate what is certainly the most carefully thought through and constructed of his letters.

2. Recipients.

There is as little dispute over the "to whom" question. The reference to "Rome" in Romans 1:7 is omitted by some manuscripts, but such omission is best explained by subsequent generalizing usage of a letter intended originally for a more specific audience. The more important issue is who the Christians in Rome were, and why Paul, who had never visited Rome, should think it necessary to write to them.

2.1. "Jews First . . ." The fact is that we simply do not know how Christianity began in Rome* and who, strictly speaking, its founding apostles were. We do know, however, that there was a large Jewish community in Rome in the first century (estimated at between 40,000 and 50,000). We also know that there was an active Christian mission among "the circumcised" (Gal 2:9), and that even the Gentile mission must have found its most fruitful ground among the Gentile proselytes and God-fearers who attached themselves to many Diaspora* synagogues* (as indicated also by Acts, and Paul's continuing identification with the synagogue implied by 2 Cor 11:24). Furthermore, we have the interesting information that many Jews were expelled from Rome in (probably) 49 because of disturbances "instigated by Chrestus" (Suetonius Claudius 25.4), where "Chrestus" is almost universally taken as a reference to Christ. And the number of slave names among those greeted in chapter 16 (at least fourteen out of twenty-four) suggests that not a few of those descended from the Jewish captives brought to Rome, particularly following Pompey's subjugation of Palestine in 62 B.C., came to believe in Jesus as Messiah (see Christ).

The obvious implication, then, is that Christianity first took root in Rome within and among the many Jewish synagogues of Rome. This would explain both how Peter could plausibly be regarded as the founder of the church in Rome, and, more to the point, why Paul's letter is so dominated by the motif "to Jew, but also to Gentile" (Rom 1:16; 2:9-10; 3:9, 29; 9:24; 10:12).

2.2. ". . . Also Gentiles." That Gentiles were drawn in to the church at Rome sooner or later in the earliest years is clearly implied in the letter itself, particularly Romans 11:13-32 and 15:7-12 (see also Rom 1:6, 13; 15:15-16). That means being drawn in to share in an essentially Jewish patrimony, inevitably raising questions as to Jewish and Christian identity. This alone is sufficient to explain some of the characteristic elements and themes in the letter: for example, "who/what is a Jew?" (Rom 2:25-29); who are "the elect of God"? (Rom 1:7; 8:33; 9:6-13; 11:5-7, 28-32); and the climactic position of Romans 9—11 and Romans 15:8-12. Whether the disturbances within the Jewish community of 49 were simply between Jews who believed Jesus to be Messiah ("Chrestus") and those who denied it, or between Jews who welcomed Gentiles and those (including Christian Jews) who did not, we cannot tell.

Moreover, if indeed many Christian Jews were among those expelled in 49 (cf. Acts 18:2), we may draw the further inference that the Roman churches were at that time shorn of much of their Jewish leadership and membership. Gentile leadership would have become more the norm. And when Christian Jews began to return to Rome as Claudius's rescript began to lapse, some tensions between old and new may well have arisen. This is just the circumstance which seems to be reflected in the exhortations in Romans 14:1 and 15:1, 7.

*2.3. The Social Context. Two other factors are important in filling in the background behind the letter, so far as that is possible. One is that the Jewish community was both influential in Rome and deeply despised, not to say hated, by the most influential voices of the Roman intelligentsia. This was partly because of its sheer size, partly because of the preferential treatment they had received from Julius Caesar and Augustus, and, probably more important, because of the numbers of Gentiles who were attracted to Judaism. These will also no doubt have been factors in the tensions between Jew and Gentile evident in the letter, and will help explain such emphases as Romans 1:16 and 12:14—13:7.

We also know that the Jewish community had no central authority in Rome (as was the case in Alexandria; see Diaspora). This indicates a more fragmented organization and, probably, a fair diversity among the different synagogues. Corresponding to this is the implication that the Christian community was equally lacking in organizational homogeneity (implied by the unusual fact that Paul does not speak of the "church,"* singular, in Rome). As we know the names of ten or so synagogues, so we know of several house churches (five may be implied in Rom 16:5, 10-11, 14-15).

All this suggests that the Christian groups formed something of a spectrum (some more Jewish in composition, some more Gentile, most mixed), which overlapped substantially with the spectrum of synagogues (see Social Setting). Paul knew enough of the people and the circumstances (Rom 14:1—15:7; 16:3-15) to frame his teaching and paraenesis accordingly. Among other things he would be aware that his letter would be read not to one single huge gathering of Christians (apart from anything else, such a gathering would be too dangerous in an imperial capital nervous of unlicensed gatherings), but repeatedly to the various house churches, where different facets of his exposition would resonate with different force among the different congregations. This would help explain the combination of general teaching and specific exhortation which is a feature of the letter.

3. Purposes.

Among introductory questions related to Romans the most lively discussion in recent years has centered on Paul's purpose(s) in writing it. Three in particular have been strongly canvassed.

*3.1. A Missionary Purpose. This emerges especially from Romans 15:18-24, 28: Paul as "apostle to the Gentiles," eager to bring in "the full number of Gentiles" (Rom 11:13-15, 25-26), writes to the capital of the Gentile empire (see Mission).

Some draw the inference that Paul was seeking to evangelize Rome itself (Rom 1:13-15). This cannot mean that he did not recognize a Christian presence already in Rome (contrast Rom 1:8; 15:14). It has been argued on the basis of Romans 15:20, however, that he saw the Roman churches as lacking an apostolic foundation and sought to fill the gap. But this is equally unlikely, since Paul regarded church founding as an apostolic work (1 Cor 9:1-2), and the slight embarrassment evident in Romans 1:11-12 is just what we would expect from Paul writing to churches in whose founding he himself had played no part.

More plausible is the thesis that Paul wrote to Rome with a view to the churches there providing a support base for his projected mission to Spain. This indeed is what Paul says explicitly (Rom 15:24, 28), and there is no cause to doubt it; the church in Philippi in particular had already served in such a role. In that case the letter would be Paul's attempt to set out the gospel which he had preached so successfully so far and which he intended to preach in Spain (Rom 1:16-17). At the end of the first (or preceding) phase of his great missionary strategy (Rom 15:19, 23) he uses the opportunity to set out in complete terms the theology of the gospel on the basis of which he would be asking the Roman Christians for support.

3.2. An Apologetic Purpose. The implication of such passages as Romans 1:16; 3:8 and 9:1-2, not to mention the repeated recourse to diatribe style, is that Paul felt himself and his understanding of the gospel under attack and needing to be justified. Hence the obvious conclusion has been drawn that the letter functions as Paul's apology for his gospel, and therefore also as a self-apologia, since his whole life's-work was bound up with the gospel he preached (see Center).

The apology is directed to Rome; by means of the unusually expanded introduction of Romans 1:2-6, including what seems to be a common creedal formula in Romans 1:3-4 (see Creeds), Paul presents his "calling card" and his bona fides. Was this simply because he looked to the Roman Christians for support in the next phase of his mission (to Spain)? Or did he already have an inkling that the Christian groups in Rome, itself the imperial capital, were bound in due course to become increasingly influential in relation to Christian work elsewhere in the empire? Also plausible is the suggestion that Paul set out a full statement of his gospel as a dress rehearsal for his self-defense in Jerusalem, and thus hoped to recruit the Roman congregations to his support in any confrontation in Jerusalem. The likelihood of such a confrontation, and not simply with his "unbelieving" fellow Jews, was very much in his mind, as is clearly indicated in Romans 15:31. Whether he thought the Roman congregations could actually send support, or was simply asking for their prayers (a real support in Paul's eyes) is left unclear by Romans 15:30.

3.3. A Pastoral Purpose. In recent years the section Romans 14:1—15:6 has assumed a central significance in attempts to clarify Romans' purpose: that Paul was writing to heal potential or real divisions among the churches in Rome (see Pastor). This makes good sense of the exhortations of Romans 14:1 and 15:7, especially when set against the background sketched above (particularly 2.2 above). Such attempts have been weakened by too casual identifications of "the weak" and "the strong" (as simply Jews and simply Gentiles; see Strong and Weak) and by hypothesizing too clearly distinct groups and too sharp differentiations between Jews and Christians. The probability is rather, as indicated above (see 2.3), that there were Jewish synagogues attended by both God-fearing Gentiles and Christian Jews and Gentiles, and that there was a diverse spectrum of Christian groupings, some with more Gentiles (Gentiles more dominant, though not necessarily less attracted to the synagogue), and others with more Jews (Jews more dominant, though not necessarily more conservative toward Jewish traditions and customs).

This would certainly help explain the character of the letter as a whole, and of Romans 14:1—15:6 in relation to the rest, namely: that Paul set out to explain the "both Jew and Gentile" character of the gospel and of the promises to Israel,* not exclusively, but also not least, to encourage his Roman auditors to work out in the experience of everyday what the gospel and these promises must mean in practice. Above all it would give proper significance to what is obviously a climactic expression and rounding-off conclusion of the letter's main theme in Romans 15:7-13. In contrast, attempts to read Romans 12:1—15:13 simply as generalized, all-purpose paraenesis, lifted in part from Paul's experiences with the Corinthian church, hardly explains the distinctiveness of Romans' paraenesis (see Teaching/Paraenesis), or the passion with which Paul writes, or, indeed, once again, the climax of Romans 15:7-13.

In addition, assuming that Romans 16 is part of the original letter, it is evident that Paul had some close contacts with various members of the Roman churches and would therefore have a fair knowledge of the character of the Roman churches and of their circumstances. From chapter 16 we can also see that Paul was writing to introduce and commend Phoebe (Rom 16:1-2); but that would be a subsidiary purpose and of itself could hardly explain the whole letter.

3.4. The Purposes of Romans. The fact that each of the above reasons for Romans can find such clear support from within the letter itself points to the obvious conclusion: that Paul had not simply one but several purposes in view when he wrote. Indeed, such a conclusion is more or less required by the character of the letter itself; no single suggested reason on its own can explain the full sweep of the document. On the contrary, it was presumably because Paul had several purposes in view that he found it desirable to set out his understanding of the good news of Christ so fully, including its practical implications. As he stood at one of the most important transition points in his whole ministry he saw both the need and the desirability of such a fully worked-out statement—to indicate to others clearly what was the gospel he preached, why as a Jew he preached it, and how it should come to expression in daily life and community. It is the completeness of the statement, as required by the multiplicity of purposes served, which lifts the letter above the immediacy of the circumstances in which and for which it was written and gives it, if not a timeless quality, at least its timeless significance.

4. Literary Form and Coherence.

4.1. The Literary Form. A second area of debate in recent years has been over the literary character of the letter (see Letters, Letter Forms). Much of it has been inconclusive and a somewhat pointless dispute about suitability of categories drawn from other literary and rhetorical forms—"epideictic" (demonstrative), "deliberative" (persuasive), "ambassadorial," to name but three (see Rhetoric; Rhetorical Criticism). But since these are hardly "pure types" themselves, and since different categories can be (and have been) applied to Romans, the point of the exercise becomes unclear. The fact is that whatever conventions Paul knew or used, the form he constructed is distinctive and unique in character and content. That being said, the inquiry into literary form and rhetorical parallels has contributed several points of significance to current understanding of Romans.

4.1.1. Introduction and Conclusion. One is greater clarification of the letter character of the document indicated by its beginning and end. The literary parallels show that Paul was quite aware of current conventions and that he was concerned to use a medium which would, at least initially, be familiar to his audience, however much he adapted it to his own ends. He writes, therefore, as the wise teacher, leading his audience through familiar forms to the real point of the letter. Equally important for the modern commentator, the literary parallels to the writing's introduction and conclusion show not only how Paul conformed to convention but also where and how he departed from it. The more standard were these conventions, the more distinctive his additions and modifications would be seen to be by his auditors. In particular, the considerable elaboration (Rom 1:2-6) of the normal greeting (Rom 1:1, 7) would indicate clearly enough to a literate audience what the thrust of the letter was to be.

4.1.2. Epistolary Framework and Body. Another point to emerge from the study of literary form is the importance of the relation between the epistolary framework and the body of the letter. It is not simply a matter of recognizing that the framework is important for interpreting the whole (Romans is not merely a dogmatic treatise, beginning at Rom 1:17). As we have already noted, the insertion of Romans 1:2-6 into the normal greetings structure gives these verses the force of a prologue to the whole letter. So too the fact that Romans 1:16-17 serves both as the climax to the introduction and the thematic statement for what follows indicates a concern on Paul's part to integrate the framework into the body of the letter. The same conclusion follows from Paul's repetition of his travel plans (Rom 1:8-15; 15:14-33; see Itineraries), as indeed of his self-claims to the grace* of God* in Romans 1:2-6 and 15:14-15, that is, after as well as before the body of the letter. Thus he indicates that the intervening exposition is both an expression of that grace (cf. Rom 1:12) and the theological basis of the specific request for support with which he concludes the restatement of his travel plans (Rom 15:30-33).

4.1.3. Diatribe. The third point of significance to emerge from studying Romans as a rhetorical form is the renewed appreciation of the diatribe* style used by Paul (dialogue with an imaginary interlocutor)—a feature at key phases in his argument (Rom 2:1-5, 17-29; 3:27—4:2; 9:19-21; 11:17-24). Characteristic of the diatribe is the attempt to criticize arrogance and correct pretension. Stowers in particular has pointed out that the typical function of the diatribe was not as polemic against an opponent but, in a philosophical school context, as a critical questioning of a fellow student intended to lead him to the truth. Thus awareness of contemporary rhetorical convention alerts the modern reader to the danger of reading passages like Romans 2 as the expression of out-and-out polemic against an "opponent"* or as indicating a complete break between two monolithic entities ("Judaism" and "Christianity"). What the diatribe passages indicate, rather, is Paul engaged in a critical dialogue with his fellow Jews and fellow Christian Jews about the significance of the new "philosophical sect" within Judaism (Christianity) as to its relation with its parent Judaism and with the other Judaisms of the time.

4.2. Literary Coherence. The a priori likelihood that Paul used or adapted material or themes which he had used in earlier teaching (cf., e.g., Acts 19:8-10) has resulted in various suggestions that some of this previous material can be distinguished as coherent blocks: for example, chapters 5—8 as a distinct homily, or chapters 9—11 as preformed material incorporated here somewhat awkwardly. Such hypotheses can never be proved or disproved since there is no clear line of distinction between re-use of oral patterns never before written down and re-use of written material. All we need say is that the various sections of the argument of Romans cohere with sufficient closeness and, indeed, with such a high degree of integration, that such hypotheses add nothing to our understanding of the letter. The same degree of coherence and integration, however, tells decisively against more complex dissections of the text or elaborate theories of substantial redaction, which unfailingly create more problems than they solve or leave us with a simplistic and monochrome Paul.

The one major issue raised by textual criticism (see Textual Criticism) is whether Romans 16 belonged to the original text dictated by Paul. A strong minority opinion continues to hold that chapter 16 was a separate letter written to Ephesus. This is unlikely. In particular, a letter ending with Romans 15:33 and without a "grace" benediction* (Rom 16:20) would be quite unlike Paul; Romans 16:1-23 has all the marks of an epistolary conclusion; and it is hardly implausible that Paul should know so many in Rome as the greetings indicate (the Jewish community was substantial, and the movements of Prisca and Aquila indicate that there was a fair amount of travel* to and from Rome, as might be expected in relation to the imperial capital).

The presence of Romans 16:25-27 at different places in the manuscript tradition (also after Rom 14:23 and after Rom 15:33), however, suggests that shorter forms of the letter were circulated. The consensus is that under Marcionite influence (see Canon) the letter was abbreviated (to Rom 1:1—14:23), to which Romans 16:25-27 was then added to provide a fitting conclusion. Early copyists would also see less point in transcribing all the names of chapter 16 and probably circulated a more general version ending at Romans 15:33, to which Romans 16:25-27 was also added. It is equally understandable that the very fitting conclusion, Romans 16:25-27, should likewise become attached to the full version in successive copyings. At all events, there is a strong consensus that Romans 16:25-27 is a later addition to the letter.

5. The Issues at Stake.

5.1. The New Perspective on Paul. Traditionally Romans has been treated as a work of systematic theology, "a compendium of Christian doctrine" in Melanchthon's words, a more or less timeless statement of what the gospel means (see Paul and His Interpreters). But the recent recognition that the letter is related to the particular emphases and circumstances of Paul's mission (see 3 above) carries with it the corollary that the issues addressed in the letter must also have been conditioned in greater or less measure by the same emphases and circumstances. What is at stake in Romans is not the gospel in general or in the abstract, but the gospel in particular as embodied by Paul's own life and work—a Jewish gospel for Gentiles, and the strains and tensions which stemmed from that basic conviction.

This perspective on the letter has been reinforced by the new perspective on Paul and on the Jewish context from which he emerged. Traditionally in Protestant exegesis Judaism has been seen as the foil to Christianity, as that which Christianity brought to an end or showed to be bankrupt, as that from which Paul was converted when he became a Christian. Read in that light the antitheses in Romans, particularly between sin* and grace,* death and life (see Life and Death), law* and faith,* though surprisingly less so between flesh* and Spirit (see Holy Spirit), appeared as antitheses between Judaism and Christianity. "The Jew" became the classic type of religion gone wrong, of religion understood in terms of human achievement, rather than as the expression of gratitude for, and response to, the initiative of divine grace.

Now, however, more scattered protest against such stereotyping of "the Jew" and Judaism has reached a climax, particularly in English-speaking scholarship from the Christian side, in the work of E. P. Sanders. It is he who more effectively than anyone else in the English-speaking world has succeeded in getting across the message that early Judaism at its heart was a religion of grace: its starting point, God's free choice of Israel and rescue from slavery; its system one which focused on repentance, atonement and forgiveness*; its emphasis on Law keeping, the appropriate response of gratitude and faithfulness on the part of the elect people. From this new perspective the theological issues at stake in Romans take on a different hue. In that sense Sanders marks a new epoch in the study of Paul, and commentaries on Romans can be categorized as pre- and post-Sanders—at least to the extent that one can assess work on the theology of Romans by whether it takes serious account of the new perspective (even if to disagree with it).

5.2. The New Perspective on Romans. In light of the new perspective on Paul the issues at stake in Romans receive a fresh clarity. The various themes are already sounded in the substantial elaboration of the more common introduction (Rom 1:2-7): (1) the gospel of God; (2) continuous with the prophecies of the Holy Scriptures; (3) focusing on Jesus, both Son of David and Son of God (see Son of God); (4) with his resurrection* marking out a new eschatological epoch (see Eschatology); (5) and his lordship (see Lord) validating its outreach, not least by Paul himself, to all the Gentiles; (6) among whom the Roman believers in particular are to be counted as numbered among the elect and beloved people of God. Hence the overarching emphasis on the gospel for Jew and Gentile already noted (see 2.1-2 above), is sounded both in the initial thematic statement (Rom 1:16) and in the climax of Romans 15:7-12. Hence also the repeated emphasis is on the gospel for all—"all who believe" (Rom 1:16; 3:22; 4:11; 10:4, 11-13), "all injustice" (Rom 1:18, 29), all under sin (Rom 3:9, 12, 19-20, 23; 5:12), "all the seed" (Rom 4:11, 16), "all Israel" (Rom 11:26). The issue is not so much the universality of human need and of the gospel's sufficiency as whether and how the gospel, Jewish in origin and in character, reaches beyond the Jewish nation to include the nations beyond ("all" = Gentile as well as Jew, Rom 1:18—5:21). And conversely, the issue is whether the gospel now drawing in Gentiles in such numbers remains a Jewish gospel and is still the gospel for the Jews ("all" = Jew as well as Gentile, Rom 9—11).

Of course this is a particular expression of the larger theological claim about the universality of human sin and of the gospel's provision, and it is wholly legitimate to validate such a larger theological claim from Romans. But it is important to recognize that the larger claim is derived from this particular expression, that is, both to recognize its historical specificity (including the continuing Jewish character of the Christian gospel), and to be alert to the possibility that individual elements in this particular expression are determined primarily by that context and thus are less amenable to generalization.

5.3. The Faithfulness of God. Within this overarching emphasis (Jew and Gentile) several other key themes in the letter fall into place. One is the issue of theodicy ("the gospel of God"). This is indicated at once in the centrality of "the righteousness of God" (particularly Rom 1:17; 3:5, 21-26; 4:1-25; 9:30—10:13; see Righteousness). The theme is through-and-through Jewish, its Pauline usage in direct continuity with the usage of the Psalms and Isaiah 40—66. The issue is twofold. (1) How the saving action to which God committed himself on behalf of Israel includes those outside Israel. The answer is given partly in terms of the correlated thematic word "faith": that this always was the human medium through which God exercised his saving righteousness (so again particularly Rom 4:1-25 and 9:30—10:17, also 14:22-23). And partly in terms of the new, climactic phase in God's purpose (the same purpose) marked by Christ's ministry (particularly Rom 3:22-26 and again Rom 9:30—10:13).

(2) What the Jewish gospel for Gentiles says about the faithfulness of God to his original promises to Israel. This theme is obscured somewhat by the fact that the Jewish motif of divine faithfulness is translated into Greek in two different ways: God's faithfulness (Rom 3:3; but perhaps also Rom 1:17 and 3:25) and God's truth (particularly Rom 1:25; 3:7; 15:8). The issue is clearly articulated in Romans 3:1-8, but Paul is able to address it in detail only in Romans 9—11, where it is posed in the key question of whether the word of God has failed (Rom 9:6). The importance of Romans 15:7-13 (here Rom 15:8) as summing up Paul's concerns and thus indicating what these concerns were in the letter is again underlined.

Somewhat surprisingly, christology* does not seem to be part of the issue. It is fundamental to the gospel, of course (Rom 1:3-4), but the fulcrum expression of it in Romans 3:21-26 is brief, probably makes use of pre-formed material, and seems to be noncontroversial (hence the brevity). The christology as such seems to be common ground. The universal significance of Christ is the presupposition of Romans 5—8 rather than the theme. And though Christ is presented as the stumbling-stone in Romans 9:32-33, it is striking that in the final resolution to the problem of Israel's unbelief a distinctively Christian (as distinct from Jewish) messianism is lacking (Rom 11:26; see Christ). Characteristic of the letter at this point is, once again, the climax of Romans 15:8: "Christ has become the servant of the circumcised for the sake of God's truth (faithfulness)."

5.4. The Subtheme of the Law. The other theme which falls into place in the light of the new perspective is the role of the Law* in Romans. The traditional view tended to see the Law as belonging wholly on the negative side of the antitheses posed by Paul—a hostile power, like sin and death (understandably in view of Rom 5:20 and 7:5), characterizing Judaism as legalistic, a religion of achievement, giving ground for human pride (cf. Rom 3:27-28; 9:11, 32; 11:6). The fact that Paul seems equally concerned to mount an apologetic in relation to the Law (Rom 3:31; 7:7-25; 8:3-4; 13:8-10) fitted ill with this understanding, but on the traditional view it was not easy to see any solution. The new perspective has shaken up the negative side of the equation, but for some (Sanders, Räisänen) the result has been only to increase the incoherence of Paul's overall position.

However, within the new perspective both on Paul and on Romans (see 5.1-2 above), a more coherent solution is possible. For where the primary issue is the tensions caused by a Jewish gospel being offered to Gentiles, the problem of the Law is likely to relate to that issue. The Law is then most naturally seen as a principal hindrance which prevents Gentiles from accepting the gospel. And so we find in Romans. It is the Jewish claim to have the Law and thus to have a privileged position before God (Rom 2:12-29) which focuses the problem of Israel's election* (Rom 3:1). It is the Jewish boast in this privileged status as marked out by their obedience to the Law which Paul seeks to counter by his focus on faith (Rom 3:27-31; 4:1-25). It is the Law, not as evil, but as weak and used as a cat's-paw by sin, which he attempts to defend (Rom 7:7-8:4). It is the Law typified by Jewish works and a focus of Jewish zeal (see Jealousy, Zeal) which Paul sees to have been ended by Christ, not "the Law of righteousness" (9:30—10:4); "the Law of sin and death," not "the Law of the Spirit of life" (Rom 8:2-4). Properly understood in the new light of Christ, therefore, what the Law calls for is not the "works" (see Works of the Law) which mark off Jew from Gentile (particularly, though by no means exclusively, circumcision* and food laws, Rom 2:25-29; 4:9-12; 9:10-13; 14:1-12), but love* of neighbor (Rom 13:8-10; 14:13—15:6).

In a word, then, it is not the Law as expression of human achievement which Paul questions, but the Law as expression of Jewish privilege. The solution to "the problem of the Law" in Romans lies not in a "demonizing" of the Law; nor in throwing up one's hands at Paul's "contradictions"; nor in distinguishing ceremonial law from moral law, though Paul's teaching can be worked out in these terms. Paul's concern was more with a nationalizing of the Law than with its ritualizing. It was because the Law could be so identified with Israel, and that identification focused so much in distinctive Jewish rites (particularly circumcision and food laws), that Paul found it necessary to distinguish fulfillment of the Law's requirements from doing such "works." Evidently, in the tensions caused by his proclamation of a Jewish gospel to Gentiles, it was only by so arguing that he could defend both features of the gospel—both its Jewish character and its openness to all nations (see Universalism).

6. The Argument of the Letter.

We are now in a position to appreciate the thrust and movement of Paul's thought in Romans. Since the main body of the letter is set out so systematically, a brief survey of it provides an invaluable synopsis of Paul's theology as he stood at this climax to his missionary career.

6.1. Introduction (Rom 1:1-17). We have already noted how the expanded greetings (Rom 1:1-7) allow Paul to introduce his theme while still at the stage of friendly introductions (see 5.2 above). We also noted that the personal explanations which follow, with their typical features of thanksgiving and prayer* (Rom 1:8-15; see Benediction, Blessing, Doxology, Thanksgiving), both root the letter as a whole firmly into the particular historical setting of its composition, and lead into the key thematic statement for what follows (Rom 1:16-17). Here the principal terms of the letter are clearly enunciated—the gospel as God's power* for salvation,* all who believe, Jew first and Greek, the righteousness* of God being revealed from faith* to faith—together with the supporting OT text (Hab 2:4).

6.2. The Human Condition—Gentile and Jew (Rom 1:18—3:20). In a manner followed in subsequent centuries by countless restatements of the Christian gospel or monographs on theology, Paul finds it necessary to define the human condition to which the gospel provides an answer.

6.2.1. Human Beastliness (Rom 1:18-32). He begins by characterizing what classically has been described as human depravity (see Sin). That is now too heavy or distancing a formulation, particularly when we appreciate that he rounds off his indictment with a description which includes the everyday nastiness and petty selfishnesses of human pride and ruptured relationships (Rom 1:29-31). Such negative features mark the breakdown of human society, features which all people of goodwill would deplore ("what is not fitting," Rom 1:28). The gospel starts by taking such things seriously (Rom 1:32).

Two other elements help explain the build-up to that climax. One is the strong echo of the Adam stories in Genesis 2—3 (Rom 1:19-23). The basic flaw in the make-up of human society is that the human creature has failed to live in accord with its creatureliness, has failed to acknowledge its dependence on God,* has sought to usurp the role of the creator. The consequence has been the opposite—not a rise above human creatureliness, but a fall below humanity to a level of beastliness, marked by idolatry, unnatural sexual practices (see Homosexuality; Sexuality) and the nastiness already mentioned. The other is the strong echo of characteristically Jewish polemic against Gentiles and particularly Gentile religion (Rom 1:24-27)—precisely as characterized by idolatry* and debased sexuality (cf. Wis 11—15). Thus at once Paul highlights the tension between Jew and Gentile as central to his concerns.

6.2.2. Jews Too (Rom 2:1-29). Romans 2 has caused more difficulties than any other chapter for commentators, particularly because it seems to envisage final justification as depending on human deeds rather than on faith, and because its argument seems to depend on a far too sweeping indictment of Jews at large. The key is to note that the chapter is framed, on the one side, by a typically Jewish attack on Gentile lifestyle (Rom 1:18-32) and, on the other, by a protest that Jewish privilege has been undermined (Rom 3:1). What is in view in Romans 2, therefore, is almost certainly the very sense of Jewish privilege and distinctiveness which was so clearly echoed in Romans 1.

This is confirmed by the first appearance of the characteristic diatribe form in Romans 2:1-5. Paul thus engages not with any imaginary onlooker but precisely with the typical Jew who would commend the typically Jewish indictment of Romans 1. The echoes of such Jewish reasoning as we find in Psalms of Solomon 15:8 and Wisdom 15:1-6 (Rom 2:3-4), as well as the explicit quotation of the Jewish theologoumenon in Romans 2:6, confirm that Paul has in view a Jewish rationalization which could justify or excuse in itself what it condemned in others (Rom 2:1-11).

The picture becomes clearer in Romans 2:12-16 as Paul attempts to undermine the confidence of those who think that because they have the Law they are advantaged in the judgment over those without the Law. On the contrary, Jewish teaching is precisely that doing the Law is more important than merely hearing it; the argument is ad hominem. The pride and presumption of "the Jew," by virtue of possessing the Law, becomes explicit in Romans 2:17-24. The intention of the forthright indictment of the typical Jewish interlocutor is not to condemn all Jews out of hand, but rather to argue that when the typical Jew breaks the Law in his presumption he undermines the whole basis of his privileged position. The point is brought to sharpest focus in circumcision,* that which is so much the mark of "the Jew" that Jews as a whole can be called simply "the circumcision." The failure to distinguish an outward, ethnic identity marker from the hidden work of the Spirit in the heart, and to play down the importance of the former in favor of the latter means that the typical Jew is in no better (indeed, maybe worse) standing before God than the Gentile (Rom 2:25-29).

6.2.3. Awkward Corollaries (Rom 3:1-8). Such an uninhibited attack on Jewish self-confidence in Israel's privileged status before God raises problems which Paul cannot ignore—particularly in relation to Israel's* election,* and thus also to God's faithfulness to the people he chose. It is to be noted that Paul does not wish to query the fact of that election, but also that his one-sentence defense of God's faithfulness looks beyond God's role as Israel's covenant* partner to his role as creator and judge. Thus he hints that the resolution to the tensions of "Jew and Gentile" will be to set Israel's covenant status before its God within the larger picture of the world's status before its creator. But such lines of thought can only be hinted at here.

6.2.4. Conclusion: All Under Sin (Rom 3:9-20). The summary gathers all humanity under the same indictment. But the target is still primarily Jewish presumption that "the Jew" is exempt. Thus the catena of OT texts which follows (Rom 3:10-18; see Old Testament in Paul) consists mainly of passages which assume that those condemned are "them" and not "us." Paul's point is that such an assumption is itself an expression of the power of the sin it condemned. The trust in privileged position, the boast in the Law (circumcision especially) as marking out Jew from Gentile, is itself an expression of the fleshliness (in this case, ethnic identity) which distances humankind from God (Rom 3:19-20).

6.3. The Gospel Answer (Rom 3:21—5:21). Again, providing a pattern for countless sermons and monographs, Paul, having indicted humanity as a whole, turns to the answer given by the gospel.

6.3.1. Through Faith in Christ (Rom 3:21-26). In a remarkably brief section (compared with the length of the indictment) Paul points to the death of Christ as the answer. The logic is not spelled out in any detail (why faith in Christ should provide the answer) and seems to draw on an accepted Christian formulation. So the answer must have been an already established Christian conviction which Paul did not need to elaborate.

Significant, however, is the emphasis again on complete continuity with what had gone before (Rom 3:21; Christ's death as a sacrifice, Rom 3:25). Presupposed therefore is the Jewish theology of sacrifice and of the need for an unblemished animal to act as a sin offering, with the probable implication that the animal's death served to put away or cover the sin, or indeed to kill off (in a representative way) the sin-affected offerer (see Expiation/Propitiation/Mercy Seat). For a reason not given in the text, Christ's death could be seen not just as such a sacrifice, but as a climactic sacrifice which was effective for all humankind past and present, Gentile as well as Jew, and thus by implication as a sacrifice which ended all further need for sacrifice and as such became the means by which all human relationship with God could be restored (see Justification).

6.3.2. To Jew and Gentile (Rom 3:27-31). Indicative of Paul's concern is the way he immediately (Rom 3:27) picks up the theme of "the Jew's" boasting indicted in Rom 2:17, 23. As already clearly implied, it is a boasting in Jewish privilege and prerogative which Paul condemns, a boasting which in effect regards God as "the God of Jews only" (Rom 3:29). The twin recognition that God is one (the Jewish credo), and that God accepts human beings on the basis of faith, shatters any such presumption. This universalism* (Gentile as well as Jew) is what is now effective through the death of Jesus Christ (Rom 3:21-26). But since it is also (properly speaking) a Jewish universalism, it does not contradict the terms of the initial offer of that grace to Israel; that is, the gospel of Jesus Christ stands opposed to the Law characterized by the works of Jewish prerogative, but confirms the Law as calling for the obedience of faith (Rom 3:31).

6.3.3. Abraham as a Test Case (Rom 4:1-25). To sustain this central claim Paul takes up the challenge of the precedent provided by "father Abraham."* The test case was crucial, since Abraham was widely regarded within Judaism as the model of piety. Already it was being said that he had observed the Law in its as-yet-unwritten state (e.g., Gen 26:5; CD 3:2). In particular, he was regarded as a paradigm of faithfulness to the covenant, because he came through so strongly when he was tested in the matter of the offering of Isaac (e.g., Jdt 8:26; Sir 44:19-21). It was in the light of this faithfulness that Genesis 15:6 was understood: Abraham was counted righteous on the basis of this faithfulness (1 Macc 2:52; so Jas 2:22-23).

Paul's response is to expound Genesis 15:6 afresh: "Abraham believed God, and it was reckoned to him for righteousness." This is one of very few extended expositions of a text from a first-century Jew (Philo excepted) and can thus be counted as a classic example of early Jewish midrash (see Old Testament in Paul). It proceeds simply by first announcing the text (Rom 4:3), then analyzing each of the key words in turn—"reckoned" (Rom 4:4-8) and "believed" (Rom 4:9-21)—and finally restating the text thus expounded (Rom 4:22) with its corollary (Rom 4:23-25).

"Reckoned," Paul notes, must have a different meaning in describing a divine-human relationship from its use in a human contract—a claim somewhat fortuitously but appropriately confirmed by the verb's appearance in Psalm 32:1-2. The exposition of "believed" is more tortuous, but builds on three points: the fact that Abraham's believing was prior to and fully effective before he was circumcised (or subsequently "tested") (Rom 4:9-12); the fact that it was faith in promise (Rom 4:13-17); and the fact that the promise was so impossible of fulfillment by any degree of Abraham's contriving (or faithfulness; Rom 4:17-21). This believing could be only trust in God, confidence in God's power alone, that and nothing more—faith, not faithfulness. The faith called for in the gospel is precisely the same faith in the life-giving power of God (Rom 4:23-25).

6.3.4. Conclusion: What This Means for Individual Believers (Rom 5:1-11) and for Humankind (Rom 5:12-21). Having made his case that the gospel of God's acceptance is for all through faith, Paul rounds off this central section of his argument by spelling out the consequences. For individual believers it means peace with God (see Peace, Reconciliation), an experience of grace which will shape the character through suffering,* and a secure basis of hope* for the future (Rom 5:1-11). The initiative of God, its overwhelmingly gracious character, and the experience of that love already manifested in Christ's death and in the gift of the Spirit (see Holy Spirit), is the firm rock on which the believer can face both present and future in complete confidence (the same confidence that Abraham had displayed in his paradigmatic believing).

Christ's death thus marks a whole new beginning, not just for individuals, but for all humankind (Rom 5:12-21). The tragedy which began to unfold with Adam, as implied in Romans 1:19-23 (see 6.2.1 above) and Romans 3:23, has been answered by another story (see Adam and Christ). The disobedience of Adam was the ancient way of explaining how the harsh reality of sin and death entered the world* and gained such domination over it. But now the obedience of Christ has opened the way and provided another model for human existence. Sin and death need not have the last word in human affairs.

These two men—Adam and Christ—sum up in themselves the two chief possibilities for humanity. That is also to say that they sum up the argument from Romans 1:18 onwards—from the condemnation of life "in Adam" and under the domination of sin and death, to the offer of life "in Christ" under the reign of grace. The whole opening section of the body of the letter (Rom 1:18—5:21) thus has an impressively rounded and global quality—from Adam to Christ as a comprehensive summary of human history. But the passage also brings to the fore the negative factors brought into play by Adam, sin and death, with the role of the Law as a further complicating factor (Rom 5:20-21), and what effect the gospel has on them requires further clarification.

6.4. The Problem of Sin, Death and the Law (Rom 6:1—8:39). Paul has essentially set out two principal alternatives for human existence and indicated that the individual believer can in effect transfer from one to the other in terms of basic motivation and character formation. The question at once arises, whether the transfer can be total. Paul's answer is summed up in terms of an already/not-yet formula (see Eschatology). Something decisive has already happened (Rom 5:1-11), but so long as life lasts within the transitoriness and weakness* of this bodily existence the outworking of that decisive act of God is not yet complete. That is to say, sin and death continue to exert an influence which believers cannot escape and to which they are in some measure (the measure of his human Adam-ness) still subject, but which they must continue to resist in the strength of the Spirit.

This is the basic line which Paul elaborates in the next three chapters—in relation first to sin, then to the Law, and finally to flesh and death. In each case he begins by stating clearly the new reality already made effective by God's action in Christ, before going on to indicate how the new reality must be lived out in the "not-yet" conditions of the still sinful flesh—the indicative of God's grace as the inspiration and enabling of human commitment and obedience.

6.4.1. The Problem of Sin (Rom 6:1-23). The claim that grace had more than accounted for sin gives rise to the ribald response: if sin results in grace, then the more sin the better. Paul's answer is to point to the decisive cut-off point for sin and death in the death of Jesus. Sin and death could reach as far, but no farther: "the death he died, he died to sin once and for all" (Rom 6:10). For those who have identified themselves with Christ in his death (through baptism*; see Dying and Rising), therefore, there can be no question of tolerating or cooperating with sin. The motivating center of their living is now directed toward and determined by the Christ on whom sin has no hold whatsoever.

Sin remains a reality, however, for believers have not yet shared fully in Christ's resurrection; they still must experience the outworking of fleshly corruption and death. Sin thus still has a foothold in them, and its wiles and enticements must be resisted until that end. But in the temptation of the not yet, the already of Christ's victory (see Triumph) is the basis and source of strength to resist and overcome, to live out their initial commitment in the renewed commitment of every day.

6.4.2. The Problem of the Law (Rom 7:1-25). Underlying the first critique of Paul's gospel outlined in Romans 6:1 was a Jewish suspicion that Paul's gospel meant abandoning the Law.* It was precisely the Law which served as a bulwark against the power of sin, did it not? But Paul's attack on Jewish presumption as focused in works of the Law could easily be heard by his fellow Jews (and modern commentators!) as an attack on the Law itself. It is this problem that Paul now addresses.

He begins, once again, by stating his position in bald terms. The (Jewish) Law is so much identified with the period before Christ that the new possibility of existence brought about by Christ is like a being freed from the Law. In terms of the earlier indictment (Rom 2—3), the Law has become the occasion for Jewish presumption, and thus the instrument of the very sin which it was intended to thwart. Thus the transfer from old to new, from Adam to Christ, from sin and death to grace, has become also a transfer from the legal code which defines Israel to the new life of the Spirit.

But surely such a treatment of the Law is tantamount to identifying the Law with sin. Paul's answer is that the Law is not to blame. It—and the "flesh"* (sarx, i.e., human frailty and finitude)—have been manipulated by sin. The reality of the already/not-yet tension between what has begun with and in Christ and the salvation yet to be completed is reflected in a double split—both in the individual who yearns to do the will of God but yet remains in "the flesh," and in the Law which expresses the will of God but is still the tool of sin and death.

6.4.3. The Problem of the Flesh and Death (Rom 8:1-39). The third restatement of the outworking of the gospel for the individual once again begins with strong emphasis on the divine indicative. What was impossible for the Law in the face of the power of sin and death and the weakness of human flesh, God has accomplished in Christ. Those who have received the Spirit of Christ thus have a completely other "base of operations" than simply the flesh. It is from this base that they must live and act. They must live out the reality of the sonship which they already experience through the Spirit and share with God's Son (Rom 8:1-17).

This does not mean that the flesh has been left behind or that death has been avoided. On the contrary, the reality of the human condition means continuing weakness and, not least, suffering, a condition which will continue until the completion of the redemption process in the resurrection of the body. The present tension is uncomfortable, but it is one shared with the whole of creation, likewise caught in the overlap of the ages between what has been and what will be, between Adam and Christ. And it is made bearable by the fact of the Spirit already present, already active in and through that weakness, the ground of a sure hope (Rom 8:18-30).

The section is rounded off with a shout of glowing assurance, all equivocation and qualification put aside. Whatever the continuing power of sin and death, the continuing weakness of the flesh, and the continuing hostility of this age, God's triumph is sure. God's purpose in Christ has already secured the victory. Neither death itself nor any other power can separate believers from the love of God in Christ (Rom 8:31-39).

6.5. What of Israel? (Rom 9:1—11:36). The issue of Jew and Gentile which dominated the first two main sections of the letter (Rom 1:18—5:21) had been largely lost to sight in the last section (chap. 7 apart) as Paul focused on the outworkings of the gospel in both global (Adam/Christ) and personal terms. But the language used had again and again been drawn from that of Israel's covenant promises. And the final assurance of God's faithfulness to his "elect" begged the whole question of God's faithfulness to his earlier covenant partner, Israel.* As the problem of the Law indicated, a division of history into before and after Christ ran the danger of dumping Israel as a whole into the Adam phase. What then of God's promises to Israel? How could the faithfulness of God to believers be asserted while his faithfulness to Israel was being thus discounted? This is the issue which Paul now addresses in one of the most tensely argued passages in all his writing.

6.5.1. Introduction (Rom 9:1-5). Paul begins by reasserting his personal concern for his own people and reminding his readers of Israel's covenant privileges in which they were now participants—that is, in Israel's covenant privileges.

6.5.2. The Call of God (Rom 9:6-29). He then proceeds to state his primary thesis: God's word (to Israel) has not failed. The failure has been (by implication on Israel's part) to recognize the character of Israel's election and calling—that is, what constituted Israel as Israel. That election was a wholly gracious act of God without respect for physical descent or for the works which had come to be seen as marking out covenant identity.

The negative side of this view of election is that there is a "non-Israel"—those whose function is to highlight the gracious character of Israel's election. This harsh, almost predestinarian view of history, is Paul's attempt to explain what he sees to be the simple fact of a chosen people within a hostile world, that the overall picture has many darker hues. The main point of the discussion, as becomes steadily more apparent, however, is not to dictate a doctrine of predestination (see Election and Predestination) but to undermine Israel's own doctrine of predestination. It is Jewish confidence that Gentiles are by definition "non-Israel" which he seeks to challenge. By citing Israel's own Scriptures, as now also being fulfilled through his own mission, Paul is able to argue that whoever non-Israel might be, the chosen people include both Jews and Gentiles.

6.5.3. Israel's Failure (Rom 9:30—10:21). Israel's failure, then, has been to understand its calling and privileges in a too narrow and restrictive way—a law understood in terms of works rather than faith, a righteousness understood as exclusively theirs from which Gentiles were excluded. The coming of Christ has put an end to such misunderstanding. He is the prophesied "stone of stumbling" (see Stumbling Block) in whom all may believe. The faith which is the only possible response to the completely gracious character of God's calling cannot be restricted within the confines of an exclusively Jewish Law. It now finds expression more fully in the word of preaching which is truly universal in scope, the call for faith in Jesus as Lord.* This is the word which is now being preached, not least by Paul himself, and which is being accepted by Gentiles. Israel, failing to recognize that this universal outreach expresses the same gracious character of its own calling, is refusing to receive this gospel, and thus is fulfilling its own Scriptures.

6.5.4. The Mystery of God's Faithfulness (Rom 11:1-32). The fact is that in the already/not-yet overlap period, Israel itself is as much split as the believer or the Law (Rom 7:7-25). There are some within Israel who have recognized the gracious character of Israel's election and responded in terms of that grace, like the Gentile believers. But the bulk have failed to recognize that standing with God is a matter of grace from start to finish. Ironically, unbelieving Israel thus finds itself in the role of non-Israel, the negative role filled by Esau and Pharaoh in Romans 9:13 and 17.

And thus begins to become clear the mystery of the divine purpose of mercy* and judgment.* As it was necessary for Pharaoh to play his negative role in order for the graciousness of God's redemption of Israel to be made clear, so it has been necessary for the bulk of Israel to refuse the gospel in order that the gracious character of the gospel for Gentiles as well as Jews might be made plain. Paul's hope is that the sight of so many Gentiles entering into Israel's covenant blessings will spur Israel to jealousy*; that is why he pursues his own mission to the Gentiles with such dedication. If Israel's failure has brought such blessing to Gentiles, what will be the blessing for the whole world when Israel as a whole accepts its own heritage in Christ (Rom 11:11-16)!

This in turn indicates that an equivalent warning to the Gentile believers is called for. The degree to which the blessings of Israel have passed to Gentiles gives no more cause for pride and presumption to the latter than Israel's original election did to Jews. God has not discarded Israel and started afresh. Gentiles are incorporated into Israel and remain part of Israel only so long as they maintain the fundamental grace-faith character of the relationship (Rom 11:17-24; see Olive Tree).

The fact of the divine faithfulness is that God's original calling of Israel remains constant, and constant in terms of grace and faith. The mystery* of the divine faithfulness is that the pre-Christian Jew-and-not-Gentile expression of election and the current Gentile-and-not-Jew response to the gospel are both phases in the larger divine purpose. God's purpose is that all Israel be saved. The perplexing disobedience shown in this phase of God's purpose is but the preliminary, and in some sense the means to realizing the ultimate purpose of showing mercy to all.

6.5.5. A Concluding Hymn of Adoration (Rom 11:33-36). Fittingly, Paul rounds off this exposition of high theological ideal and hope with a hymn* of praise to the one creator God, that is, of both Jew and Gentile.

6.6. The Practical Outworking of the Gospel (Rom 12:1—15:13). Having thus redefined the Israel of God it becomes necessary to spell out how this Israel should live. Israel defined simply in terms of the Jewish people knew at once the answer: the Law provided the guidelines for life lived within the covenant. But Paul's earlier critique and redefinition of the role of the Law (Rom 2:1—3:31; 7:1-25) must have left his auditors wondering where to find the guidelines for Christian living.

6.6.1. The Basis for Responsible Living (Rom 12:1-2). Paul therefore begins by calling for a commitment in daily living which is the Christian's equivalent to the discipline and order previously provided by the Jerusalem cult. Such committed openness to the Spirit of God allows the possibility of immediacy of knowledge of the divine will which the Scriptures themselves had always held out as the ideal.

6.6.2. The Community of Faith (Rom 12:3-8). In the new order the social equivalent of corporate Israel (Judaism) is the body of Christ (see Body of Christ). Life within ethnic Israel had involved the usual representative roles and functions of any national body. The body of Christ has its equivalent roles and functions, as determined and enabled by the Spirit. No member should think that he or she lacks a role or that there are only a few set roles to which all must aspire.

6.6.3. Love As the Norm for Social Relationships (Rom 12:9-21). As for the Christians' mutual relationships and relationships with the wider world, the norm is given by love. Paul illustrates what this will mean in practice. Then, turning to the wider relationships with outsiders, he draws on the accumulated wisdom of Diaspora Judaism on how to live within strange and hostile societies. Here peaceable good-neighborliness must be the rule.

6.6.4. Live As Good Citizens (Rom 13:1-7). In particular, and particularly living as they do within the imperial capital, the Roman Christians should endeavor to be as fully law-abiding as possible—including the payment of taxes levied on them (see Civil Authority).

6.6.5. Love Your Neighbor (Rom 13:8-10). The whole exhortation is summed up in the love command. It will be no accident either that this was also recognized within the rest of Judaism as a summary of the Law, or that the Gospels recall Jesus as giving it similar prominence (Mk 12:31 etc). Here, in other words, Paul indicates his desire to show that the Law still provides guidelines for living and how it does so—that is, by hearing it in the light of Christ's own teaching and ministry.

6.6.6. The Imminence of the End as Spur (Rom 13:11-14). Ever in the background of Paul's thought was the confidence that the already/not-yet overlap period would not be long drawn out, in terms either of personal salvation (Rom 7:24; 8:23) or of Israel's salvation (Rom 11:13-15). The same perspective should help provide a spur to live out of the new reality and motivation of being "in Christ" and not in terms of the self-indulgent, decaying flesh.

6.6.7. The Problem of Food Laws and Holy Days (Rom 14:1—15:6). The whole issue expounded in principle and practice in the preceding chapters comes to particular focus in an issue which was bound to create tensions in any mixed community of Jews and Gentiles. Wherever there were Jews who continued to identify themselves with the heritage of the Maccabees and the Judaism of the succeeding decades, observance of the food* laws was bound to be a matter of personal and national integrity (cf., e.g., 1 Macc 2:62-63). The same would apply to Gentile proselytes or God-fearers who had found themselves religiously by identifying with the Judaism of the synagogue. Such Christians would find it hard to dispense with the Jewish food laws. Other Jews, like Paul, would have come to regard such works of the Law as too restrictive of the grace of God and would have abandoned them in greater or lesser degree. Many Gentiles converted under such preaching would see no reason to subscribe to these laws. In mixed communities, where table fellowship was a fundamental expression of community, the tensions set up by these differences would be considerable. Presumably Paul knew of such tensions from his personal contacts in Rome, particularly within churches in Rome now mainly Gentile in character to which Christian Jews were returning after the period of expulsion under Claudius. The issue, it should be noted, was a serious one, since bound up with it was the whole question of the identity of the new movement—as a sect within Judaism, or what? Hence the prominence given to it by Paul.

Paul in effect addresses the two main groupings in turn. To the "weak," that is the more scrupulous, Law-abiding (mainly) Christian Jews who were defined as "weak" by the others who saw strength in their liberty from such scruples, Paul gives a simple warning: Do not make your own conscience the measure for others; recognize that God may be heard speaking differently to different people on such matters; you cannot condemn those whom Christ accepts (Rom 14:3-12; see Strong and Weak).

To the self-styled "strong," whose views Paul shares, Paul's advice is that they should hold strongly to conclusions reached in faith, but that they should be willing to limit their liberty (see Freedom) of practice if there was a real danger that their freer practice would cause genuine distress and harm to the faith of other members (Rom 14:13-23). The model for such behavior is Christ himself (Rom 15:1-6)—a confirmation that the teaching and example of Jesus provided the basic hermeneutic for this earliest Christian reinterpretation of the Law.

6.6.8. Concluding Summary (Rom 15:7-13). Paul neatly integrates this plea to mutual acceptance and tolerance into the overarching theme of the whole letter. Christ was a Jew, both to confirm God's faithfulness to the Jews, and to open the door of grace and faith to the Gentiles, in fulfillment of God's overall purpose as indicated in Scripture.

6.7. Conclusion (Rom 15:14—16:27). Paul rounds off his letter by reverting to the themes of the introduction. He describes in more detail his mission, indicating its continuity with the cultic ministry of the Jerusalem Temple and the successful conclusion of its eastern phase. Then he turns again to his plans for the future, indicating more clearly his reasons for wanting to visit his readers in Rome and the reasons for his delay. He ends by indicating his alarm at the possible outcome of his visit to deliver the collection in Jerusalem and asking for their prayers* (Rom 15:14-33; see Collection for the Saints).

The final section is a note of commendation for Phoebe, deacon and patron of the church in Cenchreae, and a lengthy list of greetings to those he knows personally or by name in the Roman churches, among whom several women leaders are prominent. A final stereotyped warning about dangers of dissension and a few greetings from others brings this most important of Paul's letters to a close (Rom 16:1-23).

See also CENTER OF PAUL'S THEOLOGY; ISRAEL; JUSTIFICATION; LAW; OLIVE TREE; PAUL AND HIS INTERPRETERS; PAUL IN ACTS AND LETTERS; RESTORATION OF ISRAEL; RIGHTEOUSNESS, RIGHTEOUSNESS OF GOD; ROME AND ROMAN CHRISTIANITY; WORKS OF THE LAW.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. Commentaries: C. K. Barrett, Romans (BNTC; 2d ed.; London: Black, 1991); C. E. B. Cranfield, Romans (2 vols.; ICC; Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1975, 1979); J. D. G. Dunn, Romans (2 vols.; WBC 38; Dallas: Word, 1988); E. Käsemann, Romans (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1980); O. Kuss, Römerbrief (3 vols.; Regensburg: Pustet, 1957, 1959, 1978); O. Michel, An die Römer (KEK; 14th ed.; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1978); D. Moo, Romans 1-8 (WEC; Chicago: Moody, 1991); H. Schlier, Römerbrief (HTKNT; Freiburg: Herder, 1977); U. Wilckens, An die Römer (3 vols.; EKK; Zürich: Benziger/Neukirchen: Neukirchener, 1978, 1980, 1982); D. Zeller, An die Römer (RNT; Regensburg: Pustet, 1985); J. Ziesler, Romans (TPINTC; Philadelphia: Trinity, 1989). Studies: W. S. Campbell, Paul's Gospel in an Intercultural Context: Jew and Gentile in the Letter to the Romans (Frankfurt: Peter Lang, 1991); K. P. Donfried, ed., The Romans Debate. Revised and Expanded Edition (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1991); J. D. G. Dunn, The Partings of the Ways: Between Christianity and Judaism and Their Significance for the Character of Christianity (Philadelphia: Trinity, 1991); N. Elliott, The Rhetoric of Romans. Argumentative Constraint and Strategy and Paul's Dialogue with Judaism (JSNTSupp 45; Sheffield: JSOT, 1990); R. D. Kaylor, Paul's Covenant Community: Jew and Gentile in Romans (Atlanta: John Knox, 1988); P. Lampe, Die stadtrömischen Christen in den ersten beiden Jahrhunderten (WUNT 2.18; 2d ed.; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1989); B. W. Longenecker, Eschatology and the Covenant. A Comparison of 4 Ezra and Romans 1-11 (JSNTSupp 57; Sheffield: JSOT, 1991); H. Räisänen, "Paul, God and Israel: Romans 9-11 in Recent Research," in The Social World of Formative Christianity and Judaism, ed. J. Neusner et al. (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988) 178-206; E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977); idem, Paul, the Law, and the Jewish People (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1983); S. K. Stowers, The Diatribe and Paul's Letter to the Romans (SBLDS 57; Chico: Scholars, 1981); F. B. Watson, Paul, Judaism and the Gentiles: A Sociological Approach (SNTSMS 56; Cambridge: University Press, 1986); A. J. M. Wedderburn, The Reasons for Romans (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1988); N. T. Wright, The Climax of the Covenant: Christ and the Law in Pauline Theology (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1991).

J. D. G. Dunn

ROME AND ROMAN CHRISTIANITY

As the center of the Mediterranean world, Rome was a pivotal city in Paul's mind. Already during the lifetime of Paul the Roman church, composed largely of Gentiles,* was gaining prominence in the Christian world. This motivated Paul to write to it and visit it, so that it would be considered among his spheres of service and aid him in his projected mission to Spain.

1. Rome in the First Century A.D.
2. Roman Christianity

1. Rome in the First Century A.D.

With a population of about one million people, the city of Rome in the first century A.D. drew people from every corner of the Empire and beyond. During Augustus's reign (27 B.C.-A.D. 14) an urban police force (cohortes urbanae) and fire prevention units (vigiles) were added to keep order in the growing city. Like the great cities of today, Rome was the place to visit in the imperial period. Paul's declaration that he had purposed many times to visit the Roman Christians before writing his letter to them (Rom 1:13) was therefore very similar to what any provincial would say before making final arrangements for a trip to Rome.

1.1. Ethnic Diversity in Rome. From at least the third century B.C. Rome had been a drawing point for people of a variety of ethnic backgrounds. The immigration of provincial Italians and Greeks that was occurring under the Republic was eclipsed in the early Principate by immigration from Syria, Asia Minor (modern Turkey), Egypt, Africa, Spain, and later Gaul and Germany. Juvenal's statement that "Long ago the Orontes has overflowed into the Tiber" (Juvenal Sat. 3.62) shows his perception of the high number of Semitic people living in first-century Rome. Most significant for a study of Roman Christianity are the Jewish immigrants. Record of a Jewish presence in Rome dates from 139 B.C., and it is known that the number of Jewish residents in Rome increased when in 62 B.C. Pompey brought back a large number of Jewish captives for use as slaves. By the time Cicero defended Flaccus in 59 B.C., it appears that the Jews were a significant political interest group in Rome (Cicero Pro Flacco 66). In the civil war that began in 49 B.C., the Jews in Rome and throughout the Mediterranean world supported Julius Caesar against Pompey. This explains why we read of Jews mourning the death of Caesar in 44 B.C. (Suetonius Julius 84.5). It is estimated that there were at least 40,000 Jews in Rome during the first century A.D. (see Diaspora). Literary sources from the late Republic and early Empire show that these foreign residents in Rome (peregrini) were not fully accepted and experienced racial discrimination. Greeks received slurs (Cicero Ep. 16.4.2; Tusc. 2.65; De Orat. 1.105; 2.13). Africans were also despised (Livy 30.12.18; Sallust Iug. 91.7). The Jews certainly were not exempt from such discrimination (Cicero Pro Flacco 66-69; Horace Sat. 1.9.71-72). The ethnic diversity in Rome gives rise to Paul's scope in his letter to the Romans,* where he is concerned about God's dealings with all of humanity, both Jew and Gentile (Rom 1:16; 1:18—2:29), both civilized and uncivilized (Rom 1:14). The diversity also makes it clear why the apostle* to the Gentiles would want to minister in Rome.

1.2. Roman Religion. Roman religion and the state's policies toward religion* affected the reception that the Roman people gave to foreign religions, including Christianity. Roman religion also affected the way Paul framed his gospel* when writing Romans (see Religions, Greco-Roman; Worship).

1.2.1. Features. It is important to know that Roman religion was closely bound up with the government of Rome. The priests of this state religion served as advisors to the senate. They were consulted for discerning the divine will through signs and for purifying significant areas (augures), setting the calendar and establishing religious law (pontifices), making war in religiously correct ways (fetiales), and keeping and interpreting the Sibylline Books (duoviri [later decemviri] sacris faciundis). Priests, by their function of interpreting foreign books (especially in the third century B.C.), served to call for the acceptance of certain foreign religions into Rome. At the end of the Republican age the haruspices (lit. "soothsayers") were organized as a priestly college. Its members were trained to discern the divine will from the entrails of sacrificial animals. Everywhere in first-century Rome there were reminders of the gods. On the hill known as Capitolium a large temple was dedicated to Jupiter, Juno and Minerva in the first year of the Republic. Though it burned in 83 B.C., a new temple was built in 69 B.C. This was repaired and embellished by Augustus in both 26 and 9 B.C. The temple therefore dominated the city when Christianity first made inroads there. On the southern border of the political center, the Forum, were temples of Saturn, the Castores, Vesta and the office spaces of the pontifices and another member of their priestly college, the rex sacrorum ("king of sacred things," a religious post representing the ancient kings of Rome). Privately, the lares (shrines for dead family members) and di penates (gods of the family cupboard) were constant reminders in the home of the connection in the Roman religious mind between this world and the other (see Worship).

Participation in religious ritual was a way of life for Romans. The possibility of choosing a religion and joining a group defined only for its religious identity was unknown. Groups that were organized solely for religious purposes, with the exception of vocational priesthoods in the state religion, synagogues and later the churches, were unknown. Though there were collegia named after certain deities, the members of such associations were joined by a common occupation or ethnic background. The churches in Rome arguably showed their faith as the organizing principle more than synagogues, since the churches likely consisted of a greater variety in ethnic and class backgrounds.

1.2.2. Legal Orientation. In public and in private, Roman religion was in essence the performance of ritual. Hence the great emphasis on the proper observance of ritual (Pliny Nat. Hist. 13.10). The organization of the priesthoods so closely with the legislative government and the elaborate rules within Roman religion point to the essential legal character of religion. Indeed, far from espousing a personal relationship with the gods, Roman religion taught that if one followed the rituals correctly, a contract would be made that obtained the "peace of the gods" (pax deorum). Paul's statement that believers have "peace* with God" on the basis of faith (Rom 5:1-2) thus gains significance when we know the impersonal and contractual connotation of such an idea in the background of his audience. Since the Romans considered religion as in essence a legal matter, it is possible that Paul had to present his gospel* to the Romans in legal terms, covering God's general moral law (Rom 2:14-16), Torah (Rom 3:21; 10:4) and political law (Rom 13:1-7). So his focus in the letter to the Romans on questions of law (Rom 2:12-27; 4:13-16; 7 passim) and his acknowledgement that his readers "know law" (Rom 7:1) are not simply reflections of the Jewish preoccupation with Torah nor the high percentage of secular lawyers in Roman society, but show Paul's recognition that Romans viewed religion as a matter of law.

1.2.3. Emphasis on Rationality. The Roman emphasis on "legal etiquette" in religion presupposed that the gods were rational, a point not shared with most foreign cults introduced to Rome. The religious vow of 217 B.C. (Livy 22.10) illustrates how a Roman priest could treat the gods as rational bargaining partners, much as one person would reason with another. Paul must have known of this rational emphasis, for it is his letter to the Romans that most emphasizes being rational in religion. The rational God hands over those who ignore him "to an unfit mind" (Rom 1:28); acting against one's mind is perceived as acting against God (Rom 7:20-24) and presenting one's body to God is reasonable religion, accompanied by a renewed mind (Rom 12:1-2).

1.2.4. Roman Policies and Attitudes to Foreign Religions. As one of the later foreign religions to seek entrance into Rome, Christianity inherited stereotypes and government policies developed from past encounters between the Roman government and foreign religions. Any study of church-state relations must not only begin with the state religion of Rome, but must also include the reception Rome gave to the foreign religions that antedated Christianity. It is first of all necessary to make clear that foreign religions could not be introduced in Rome without official approval from the senate. As seen above with Roman state religion, the Romans viewed religion as a concern of the state. Since the late Republic, Rome looked at all foreign religions with much suspicion. At the same time it was ready to attempt the introduction of a foreign religion when it perceived that cults offered a solution to an unmet need in Rome. For example the Asclepius cult (known in Rome as Aesculapius) was brought from Epidaurus to Rome when in 293 B.C. the Roman priests who kept the Sibylline Books called for its importation to quell a plague. Its temple on the island of Tiber was dedicated on January 1, 291 B.C. The minor deity Hygieia was also worshiped there, to whom the Romans later attached the name of their Italian goddess, Salus.

The official importation of a new cult did not mean that the state religion was somehow abandoned. There was actually no mechanism in Roman religion for abolishing any traditional practice. Rather, new cults were brought to Rome and new interpretations of state religion were made as history progressed. Religious exclusivism, such as was found in Judaism and Christianity, was therefore unheard of to the Roman religious mind. While Rome could bring in new religions for its people, it did not do this regularly after an event in 186 B.C. that raised the government's suspicions about foreign religions. In this year the Roman Senate acted to forbid the practice of the Dionysian orgia, or bacchanalia, as they are called in Latin. This cult had entered Rome from Campanian Italy. In response to the Senate's measures (CIL 1.196; ILS 18), the people of Rome reacted violently and an outbreak of crime spread through the city (Livy, 39.8-18). This incident, known now as the Bacchanalia, helped shape the Roman stereotype that foreign religions inevitably brought disorder. It stands to reason, then, that when Christianity entered Rome it was viewed with suspicion.

1.2.5. Judaism in Rome. Judaism had been accorded the status of a legal religion (religio licita) by Julius Caesar and then Augustus. This meant that the Jewish people were given permission to meet for religious purposes in their synagogues, and the Jews' observance of the Sabbath could not be used to their disadvantage. It is true that Jews were expelled from Rome in 139 B.C. (Valerius Maximus Fact. ac dict. 1.3.2), in A.D. 19 (Josephus Ant. 18.3.5 §§81-84; Tacitus Ann.

2.85.5; Suetonius Tiberius 36; Dio Cassius Hist. 57.18.5) and in A.D. 49 (Suetonius Claudius 25.4; Acts 18:1-2). The first two cases were probably a Roman response to active proselytizing by the Jews; the third was probably due to unrest within the Jewish community about Christianity (on the basis of Suetonius's "at the instigation of Chrestus" [impulsore Chresto]). But these expulsions were not permanent measures and at least in the latter two cases probably did not apply to Jews who were Roman citizens.

It is also necessary to realize that Judaism in Rome was closely tied to Judaism in Jerusalem.* Around 140 B.C. the high priests in Jerusalem had sent emissaries to Rome in order to offset the power of the Seleucid Empire. Later, ruling priests in the first century B.C. politically endorsed Julius Caesar (and not Pompey, who had entered the Temple in 63 B.C.) and Herod the Great was in political alliance with Augustus. In the first century A.D. princes in the family of Herod such as Agrippa II (who would later hold the rights of appointing high priests in Jerusalem) were raised in Rome under imperial patronage. Far from being an unruly cousin of Judaism in Jerusalem, then, Judaism in Rome was rather its devoted child. It was within the synagogues of Rome that Christianity first gained its inroads there.

2. Roman Christianity.

Although Christianity first appeared as a sect of Judaism, the Roman church by the time of Paul's initial visit (A.D. 60) was beginning to make the break with Judaism, a break that must have been complete by A.D. 64 when Nero focused persecution on Christians. The churches in Rome represented a body of Christianity that Paul could not ignore. Their strategic potential came from their close connection with Jerusalem, their location in the world capital, and their connections with the rest of the empire through people groups represented in Rome's congregations.

2.1. Origins. The connection between the Jews in Rome and Jerusalem and the Jewish element within early Roman Christianity lead to the probable conclusion that Christianity was brought to Rome by Jewish Christians from Palestine. This is confirmed by the note that Jews from Rome were in Peter's audience in Jerusalem at Pentecost (Acts 2:10). Jewish Christians most probably entered into dialogue with fellow Jews, and this resulted in tumultuous encounters and some conversions. One such encounter occurred in A.D. 49, when Claudius expelled the Jews from Rome. Suetonius's brief description of this event (see 1.2.5. above) is generally taken to mean that the Jews were arguing among themselves about Christ. The identification of Priscilla and Aquila as Jewish Christians who left Italy when Claudius expelled the Jews from Rome confirms this reconstruction (Acts 18:2).

It is generally accepted that Christianity in Rome arose not in a single church but in a plurality of house churches. The Jewish component in early Roman Christianity suggests that these house churches may have developed in association with various synagogues. Evidence for this plurality of churches comes from Paul's greeting given not to a church (cf. 1 Cor 1:2; 2 Cor 1:1) but to "all those who are in Rome, beloved of God, chosen saints" (Rom 1:7).

2.2 Characteristics. The Jewish presence in the Roman church and its ascetic element (see 2.2.3 below) presented both challenges and opportunities for Paul. The slaves who made up part of this church did not deter him from scaling theological heights in the presentation of his gospel, since Paul held that in Christ there is no slave or free (Gal 3:28) and considered himself bound to communicate his gospel to all (Rom 1:14-15).

2.2.1. Jewish Presence. Because of its likely origin in the synagogues of Rome, Jewish Christianity retained a close connection with its Jewish roots in Jerusalem. Paul's letter to the church is evidence for this (Rom 1:16; 3:1-30; 9-11). Half a century later, when Tacitus describes Christianity, he links it to Judea (Tacitus Ann. 15.44.2). Roman Christianity must have included a distinctly Jewish element. Theologically such a presence within the church most representative of the world's peoples forced Paul to outline his gospel in a manner that accounted for God's dealings with all people (Rom 2:1-16; 15:7- 13). Apologetically a letter and visit to this church provided opportunities for Paul to defend himself to people with close ties to the groups that most criticized and resisted Paul's ministry, the Judaism and Christianity of Jerusalem. Thus we see Paul working to defend before the Romans his theology (Rom 6:1-2) and mission* strategy (Rom 15:14-24). His upcoming visit to Jerusalem is explained and addressed to them as a worthwhile and spiritual endeavor (Rom 15:25-32). While Roman Christianity was primarily composed of Gentiles, as Paul's letter shows, it is probable that there was an ethnically Jewish presence in the Roman churches.

2.2.2. Servile Presence. Since many Jews first came to Rome as slaves, it is likely that some of the Jews within the Roman churches were of the servile classes (either slaves or freedmen and freedwomen; see Slavery). The slaves in Rome were primarily of foreign origin in the first century of the Principate. While there were certainly some freeborn foreigners in Rome, the possibility that many were servile foreigners fits with Suetoni-us's conviction that Nero administered Roman law properly when crucifying Christians (Suetonius Nero 16.2; 19.3), since Roman law prohibited crucifixion* of its citizens. Further evidence for the servile nature of the Roman church are the references to those of certain "households"* (Rom 16:10-11), a standard euphemism for the servile classes.

2.2.3. Asceticism. La Piana has suggested an ascetic element within the first-century Roman church. This seems fully in accord with extra-biblical evidence and indications in Paul's letter to the Romans. Vegetarianism was taught in the school of Quintus Sextius in the early first century. The philosopher Sotion led Seneca to practice vegetarianism for a time (Seneca Ep. 108.22). Another philosopher who was very influential during the reign of Nero, Musonius Rufus, also taught vegetarianism (Peri Trophes ed. Hense, 95). Vegetarianism is reflected in 1 Clement 20.4, while asceticism in dress is mentioned in 17.1 of the same letter. Biblical evidence for asceticism in Roman Christianity comes from Hebrews 13:9 and Romans 14:1-3, 21. In the latter reference the "strong"* and "weak" are differentiated within the Roman church by different postures toward ascetic practice. The mind/body dualism common to ascetics is found in Romans 1:24; 6:19; 7:23-24; 12:1-2. Later we see the ascetic tendencies of Roman Christianity worked out in one of its leaders, Tatian (fl. in Rome A.D. 160-172). The ascetic movement within the Roman church at the time Paul wrote his letter prompted him to delineate an ethic of responsibility in which the "strong" in conscience was to respect the "weak," more ascetic, Christian (Rom 14:14-17; 15:1-3).

2.3. Influence. By the time Paul wrote Romans, it is clear that the Roman church was ascendant in influence among churches of the Mediterranean world. Paul's uncharacteristic desire to visit the church in Rome that he had not founded is evidence of this (Rom 1:9-13; cf. 15:20). His need for the Roman church's endorsement and support (Rom 15:22-24) also shows the influence that this church carried in the Mediterranean world. Extra-biblical evidence for the influence of Rome comes as early as A.D. 96, when a letter from the church at Rome to the church at Corinth, 1 Clement, was written. In this letter we see the Roman church expecting its directives to its sister church in Corinth to be followed (1 Clement 7.1-3; 62.1-3; 65.1, cf. Ignatius Rom. Introduction).

2.4. Paul's Relationship with Roman Christianity. Though the church in Rome was not founded by an apostle, Paul is associated with its early history. As apostle to the Gentiles, he considered this within his sphere of ministry (Rom 1:11-15). His relationship with Roman Christianity certainly bore fruit from his presence there and continues to do so through his letter to the Romans.

2.4.1. Before A.D. 60. One's understanding of the relationship that Paul had with Roman Christianity before his visit in A.D. 60 affects not only one's conception of early church history, but also one's interpretation of the letter to the Romans.* For if Paul knew some of the Roman Christians and the circumstances of the churches there, his letter must be read not simply as a general theological treatise, but as an occasional letter to a particular body of believers. While it is true that Romans is the most systematic of Paul's letters, its occasional nature cannot be denied. The influence that Roman Christianity enjoyed likely meant that Christians throughout the Empire knew something about the Roman church. Paul's statement "Your faith is announced throughout the whole world" (Rom 1:8) is certainly more than epistolary flattery. Paul met Christians from Rome at least by A.D. 50, after Aquila and Priscilla had come to Corinth from Rome (Acts 18:1-2; cf. Rom 16:3-5). Christians in Pauline circles no doubt had associations with other Christians in Rome. The best evidence for this is Romans 16. While this chapter has been assigned an Ephesian destination by T. W. Manson, later works by Gamble, Lampe and Ollrog have conclusively demonstrated the integrity of this chapter as a part of the original letter. On the basis of Romans 16, then, it is most probable that Paul knew a number of people in Rome. The letter is written in order to strengthen an already existing relationship.

2.4.2. After A.D. 60. Paul arrived in Rome c. A.D. 60 (Acts 28:14-16) in order to stand trial before Nero's representative, the Praetorian prefect (see Political Systems). By the time Paul arrived in Rome, Nero had murdered his mother, his advisor Burrus had died and Seneca had retired. Rumors were probably spreading that the imperial government did not seem as stable as in the earlier part of Nero's reign. According to tradition Paul was freed after his first trial. From 1 Clement's testimony that Paul "reached the limits of the West" (1 Clement 5:7), it is possible that Paul then reached Spain as intended (Rom 15:24). It is then most likely that Paul was arrested and imprisoned again at Rome, where he was executed sometime between A.D. 64-67. First Clement 5:2-5, in citing "pillars of the church," mentions Peter first and then Paul as examples of endurance under suffering. Today one can see a carving of both apostles baptizing their jailers in the Mamertine Prison (Rome's state prison), another testimony to the tradition that both men suffered for their faith in Rome. The details of Paul's second trial (if he had one) and martyrdom are unknown. Tradition tells us that he was beheaded on the Ostian Way at about the same time and place as Peter (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 2.25.7-8). While the account of milk spurting out of his beheaded body is obviously legendary (Acts of Paul 11.5), Paul's association with Roman Christianity continues to provide both milk and solid food (1 Cor 3:2) for Christians throughout the world.

See also CAESAR'S HOUSEHOLD, IMPERIAL HOUSEHOLD; CITIZENSHIP, ROMAN AND HEAVENLY; EMPERORS, ROMAN; LEGAL SYSTEM, ROMAN; PASTORAL LETTERS; POLITICAL SYSTEMS; RELIGIONS, GRECO-ROMAN; ROMANS, LETTER TO THE; STRONG AND WEAK.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. M. Beard and M. Crawford, Rome in the Late Republic (London: Duckworth, 1985) 25-39; R. E. Brown and J. P. Meier, Antioch and Rome: New Testament Cradles of Catholic Christianity (New York: Paulist, 1983); H. Gamble, Jr., The Textual History of the Letter to the Romans (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977); P. Garnsey and R. Saller, The Roman Empire: Economy, Society and Culture (Berkeley: University of California, 1987); P. Lampe, Die stadtrömischen Christen in den ersten beiden Jahrhunderten: Untersuchungen zur Sozialgeschichte (WUNT 2.18; 2d ed.; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1989); G. La Piana, "La primitiva communità cristiana di Roma e l'epistola ai Romani," Ricerche Religiose 1 (1925) 209-26; 305-26; idem, "Foreign Groups in Rome during the First Centuries of the Empire," HTR 20 (1927) 183-403; H. J. Leon, The Jews of Ancient Rome (Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1960); T. W. Manson, "St. Paul's Letter to the Romans—and Others," in The Romans Debate, ed. K. P. Donfried (Minneapolis: Augsburg, 1978) 1-16; J. A. North, "Conservatism and Change in Roman Religion," PBSR 44 (1976) 1-12; idem, "Religion in Republican Rome," in CAH 7.2.573-624; W.-H. Ollrog, "Die Abfassungsverhältnisse von Röm 16," in Kirche, FS Günther Bornkamm, ed. D. Lührmann and G. Strecker (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1980) 221-44.

M. Reasoner

RULER CULTS. See EMPERORS; RELIGIONS, GRECO-ROMAN.

RULERS. See CIVIL AUTHORITY; EMPERORS, ROMAN; POLITICAL SYSTEMS; PRINCIPALITIES AND POWERS.

S

SABBATH. See HOLY DAYS.

SACRIFICE, OFFERING

In the world into which Christianity was born animal sacrifice was almost universally the central feature of worship.* The religions* of antiquity had marked differences from one another, but the offering of sacrifice to the deity, or gods/goddesses, featured in every cultus. The Christians formed a solitary group with their total rejection of the offering of animals.

1. The Sacrifice of Christ
2. Rejection of Customary Sacrifices
3. Christian Sacrifice

1. The Sacrifice of Christ.

Paul emphasizes that Christ has made the perfect sacrifice that puts away the sins* of humankind. He sometimes speaks of that sacrifice in general terms, as when he says that Christ loved us and "gave himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God" (Eph 5:2). Or he may select one specific sacrifice—for example, Christ as the "first fruits"* (1 Cor 15:20, 23), an expression that refers to the first sheaf of the harvest which was brought to the Temple* and offered in sacrifice to God (Lev 23; Deut 16). It is clear that, for Paul, Christ had offered the perfect sacrifice that put away sins once and for all, and because of this there was no longer a place for any of the customary offerings. This makes the sacrifice of Christ of critical importance. It is that sacrifice on which the forgiveness* of all the sins of all the believers depended.

In 1 Corinthians 5:7 Paul, rebuking the Corinthians for their failure to discipline erring members, likens the immorality in their midst to the little yeast that leavens a "whole batch of dough." Prior to the Jewish celebration of Passover, all leaven was to be removed from the house. The church now was to "clean out the old yeast," which served in this case as an image for evil (cf. Gal 5:9; Mt 13:33; Lk 13:20-21), and be the "new batch" which they have already become (1 Cor 5:7). This has taken place by divine initiative, symbolized by Christ, "our Passover" (to pascha hēmōn) who has already been sacrificed. The original Passover delivered Israel from death to life, in which the ways of Egypt had no place. Paul uses the image of Passover only glancingly, but it echoes the early-Christian tradition that Jesus chose to die at Passover and ate his Last Supper with the disciples as a Passover meal. Now Paul can enjoin his fellow-believers to "keep the feast . . . with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth" (1 Cor 5:8). In all likelihood Paul is using "the feast" as a metaphor for holy living based on the reality of Christ's saving death. But some interpreters have caught an allusion to the Lord's Supper,* or primitive Christian liturgy of Passover, which Paul is enjoining the Corinthians to keep without "the yeast of malice and evil" (see Jeremias, 901).

Sacrifice is in mind when Paul says that God set forth Christ as "a propitiation, through faith, in his blood" (Rom 3:25; see Expiation, Propitiation, Mercy Seat). The passage refers to the divine wrath* against sin, a wrath which is dealt with by Christ's offering of himself. "Blood" here will have sacrificial connotations as well as its customary meaning of the infliction of death. It is possible also to see a reference to the sin offering in Paul's statement in Romans 8:3 that God sent his Son* "in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin" (peri hamartias; NIV translates "to be a sin offering"; cf. 2 Cor 5:21, where "made him to be sin" also suggests a sin offering). The expression "for sin" is the usual rendering of "sin offering" in LXX. It is far from certain that this is the meaning in Romans 8:3, but it is a possibility, and it certainly is the case that Christ's death accomplished all that to which the "sin offering" pointed. Some interpreters have called attention to the sacrifice, or "binding" ('Aqedah) of Isaac (Gen 22), which in early Judaism (particularly in the Palestinian Targums) was understood to have an atoning sense (see Daly, though the currency of this idea in pre-A.D. 70 Judaism has been questioned; see Davies and Chilton, Alexander). This background might stand behind Paul's reference to God, "who did not withhold his own Son, but gave him up for all of us" (Rom 8:32 NRSV; cf. Gen 22:16 LXX).

2. Rejection of Customary Sacrifices.

Paul is clear that the sacrifices customary in the religions of his day were of no avail to meet human need. Worshipers in the Roman world held that they were offering their sacrifices to a variety of deities (see Yerkes), but for Paul it was clear that those deities were not real (so 1 Cor 8:4-6, in spite of Paul's ad hominem argument in 1 Cor 10:20-22). There is only one God* and the one sacrifice he recognizes is the sacrifice of Christ. But Paul says more than that the sacrifices in the religions were simply useless. They were worse than that, for the demons* were the recipients of these sacrifices; in effect the sacrifices were offered to the demons (1 Cor 10:20; see Idolatry; Religions).

We see this in Paul's rejection of the use of food* that had been offered to an idol. The practice in most animal sacrifices in antiquity was that part of the animal was burnt on the altar, part was eaten by the worshipers at a solemn meal in the temple, and part was given to the priests for their own use or to be sold in the market. Some Christians evidently held that since an idol is nothing it did not matter that meat had been offered to it. Paul agrees that an idol is nothing (1 Cor 8:4), but that does not mean that Christian converts might continue to eat meat offered in idol sacrifices. Christians invited to dinner by an idol worshiper might well find meat set before them that had been offered to an idol before being sold on the market. Paul agrees that an idol is nothing and that there can be no contamination in such meat. So believers might well eat it without question. But if someone with a weak conscience* were to point out to them that the meat had been part of a sacrifice, then they should not eat it. It is no longer good food that has come to them by unknown paths, but the end result of idol worship, i.e. worship that is offered to demons. Christians should therefore have no part in eating such meat (1 Cor 8:4-13; 10:19-22, 25-30).

3. Christian Sacrifice.

Paul uses the terminology of sacrifice to teach important truths about Christian service. Thus he exhorts the Romans to present their bodies "a living sacrifice" (Rom 12:1), a vivid and forceful way of indicating the need for the complete offering of the worshiper to God. Christians are to be totally committed to God. Similarly Paul speaks of "the offering [prosphora] of the Gentiles*" as "acceptable, sanctified in the Holy Spirit*" (Rom 15:16; on whether by "offering of the Gentiles" we should understand the Gentiles to be the offering [cf. Is 66:20] or the offering made by the Gentiles [i.e., their priestly ministry] see commentaries).

The apostle applies the terminology of offering and sacrifice to himself, saying to the Philippians that he is "offered [the verb spendomai means 'poured out as a drink offering,' cf., e.g., Lev 23:37] on the sacrifice [thysia] and service of your faith" (Phil 2:17). He combines the thought of his own giving of himself in sacrificial service (or in his death) with that of Philippians' service. He returns to sacrificial imagery when he speaks of the gifts the Philippians had made to him as "a sacrifice" (Phil 4:18). As could other sectors of Second Temple Judaism (e.g., 1QS 9:3-5; 4QFlor 1:6-7), Paul spiritualizes the sacrificial idioms of the OT cultus.

Paul also uses the imagery of first fruits.* He brings out the thought that ultimately all Israel will be saved by reminding the Romans that "if the part of the dough offered as first fruits is holy, then the whole batch is holy" (Rom 11:16 NRSV). The Jewish patriarchs are seen as the first fruits, and Paul sees this as having its consequences. The first part of the dough offered in sacrifice makes the whole from which it is taken holy.* The Jewish patriarchs likewise have sanctified the whole nation. When he speaks of individual Christians as first fruits (Rom 16:5; 1 Cor 16:15) Paul is saying that their coming to believe carried with it the thought that there would be other believers; they in some sense sanctified the local church.* There is a not dissimilar thought when, in discussing the resurrection,* Paul speaks of Christ as "the first fruits" (1 Cor 15:20, 23). His resurrection carries with it the implication that there would be others resurrected in the end time purpose of God.

See also CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE; DEATH OF CHRIST; EXPIATION, PROPITIATION, MERCY SEAT; FIRST FRUITS, DOWNPAYMENT; LORD'S SUPPER; REDEMPTION; WORSHIP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. P. S. Alexander, "Aqedah," in Dictionary of Biblical Interpretation, ed. R. J. Coggins and J. L. Houlden (Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1990) 44-47; J. Behm, "θύω κτλ," TDNT III.180-90; R. J. Daly, The Origins of the Christian Doctrine of Sacrifice (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1978) 59-65; idem, "The Soteriological Significance of the Sacrifice of Isaac," CBQ 39 (1977) 45-75; P. R. Davies and B. D. Chilton, "The Aqedah: A Revised Tradition History," CBQ 40 (1978) 514-46; G. D. Fee, "II Corinthians vi.14—vii.i," NTS 23 (1976-77) 140-61; E. Ferguson, "Spiritual Sacrifice in Early Christianity and Its Environment," ANRW 2.23.2.1151-89; M. Hengel, The Atonement: The Origins of the Doctrine in the New Testament (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1981); J. Jeremias, "πάσχα" TDNT V.896-904; E. L. Kendall, A Living Sacrifice (London: SCM, 1960); H.-J. Klauck, "Kultische Symbolsprache bei Paulus," in Gemeinde—Amt—Sacrament: Neutestamentliche Perspek- tiven, ed. H. J. Klauck (Würzburg: Echter, 1989) 348-58; J. Lambrecht, " 'Reconcile Yourselves' . . . A Reading of 2 Cor 5:11-21," in The Diakonia of the Spirit (2 Cor 4:7—7:4) (Rome: Benedictina, 1989); S. Lyonnet and L. Sabourin, Sin, Redemption and Sacrifice (AnBib 48; Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1970); L. Morris, The Atonement (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1983) 43-67; F. Thiele and C. Brown, "Sacrifice etc.," NIDNTT 3.415-38; H. Thyen, "θυσία, θύω," EDNT 2.161- 63; R. K. Yerkes, Sacrifice in Greek and Roman Religions and Early Judaism (New York: Scribners, 1952); F. M. Young, Sacrifice and the Death of Christ (London: SCM, 1975).

L. Morris

SALVATION

Salvation is a general term, denoting deliverance of varying kinds. It may be used of the healing of disease, of safety in travel and of preservation in times of peril. It may apply to people or to things. In the OT, when Israel was threatened by hostile nations, the term is used of God's protection. In the Gospels it is often used of Jesus' healings ("Your faith has saved [i.e., healed] you"). But the term is also used for deliverance from sin and for the ultimate deliverance when the saved enter bliss with Christ at the end of the age.

In the Pauline writings the important thing is deliverance from sin and from the consequences of sin,* though it is much more common for Paul to speak simply of salvation than to say what people are saved from. He uses the verb sōzō ("to save") twenty-nine times (which is more than anyone else in the NT), the noun sōtēr ("savior") twelve times (exactly half its NT occurrences), sōtēria ("salvation") eighteen times, sōtērion ("salvation") and sōtērios ("bringing salvation") once each. He uses rhuomai ("to rescue") eleven times. Such statistics show that Paul is interested in the concept of salvation, more so, indeed, than any other NT writer.

Salvation has a wide range of meaning and there are different emphases in different parts of the NT. In the Gospels, for example, we often have stories of Jesus doing miracles accompanied by such words as "your faith has saved you." In such contexts salvation has a strong physical component (though we would be wise not to exclude a spiritual component even in such passages). But this is not a Pauline usage (except in a few possible places, e.g., 1 Tim 2:15: see 3 below). For Paul "salvation" refers to what Christ has done in his great saving act for sinners; all the Pauline passages bear on this act in some way. It is central to the Pauline understanding of Christianity, for salvation is the very purpose of the incarnation of the Son of God: "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners" (1 Tim 1:15). Salvation is a comprehensive word bringing out the truth that God in Christ has rescued people from the desperate state that their sins had brought about.

1. "God Our Savior"
2. Human Agents in Salvation
3. Who Will be Saved?
4. Salvation in the Past
5. Salvation Now
6. A Future Salvation

1. "God Our Savior."

In the Pastoral* Letters there are several references to "God* our Savior*" (1 Tim 1:1; 2:3; Tit 1:3; 2:10; 3:4), or to "Christ* our Savior" (2 Tim 1:10; Tit 1:4; 2:13; 3:6). No great deal of difference should be made between these two groups of passages, for the accepted NT teaching that God acted in Christ is summed up in Paul's own words: "God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself" (2 Cor 5:19). From one point of view it is clear enough that salvation originated with the Father, and from another it was the Son* who did what was necessary to bring about salvation.

Paul writes that God did not destine the Thessalonians for wrath* but for salvation "through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess 5:9). It is Jesus who "delivers us from the wrath to come" (1 Thess 1:10), or to put it slightly differently, it is "through" Christ that believers shall be saved from the wrath (Rom 5:9). Paul develops this thought by saying that sinners were God's enemies* but that they have now been reconciled through the death of the Son and, having been reconciled, "we will be saved in his life" (Rom 5:10; see Peace, Reconciliation). It is unlikely that we should understand the apostle to mean that the death* of Jesus effects one form of salvation and his resurrected life another. He is referring to one great act of salvation involving the death and the resurrection* of Jesus, a salvation that delivers the saved from wrath and gives them continuing life. If the preposition "in" is significant, Paul is saying that our full salvation means being saved "in" the life of Christ. As he often speaks of being "in" Christ, this may well be the meaning here. It is explicit when he writes of people obtaining salvation "in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim 2:10). He can also refer to the importance of the Scriptures which can make us "wise unto salvation through faith in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim 3:15).

That salvation has its origin in God is brought out by speaking of God's "call"*: God "saved us and called us with a holy calling" (2 Tim 1:9). The idea of call is an important one for Paul, and here it brings out the truth that salvation comes as a result of a prior divine initiative. Or it may be linked with grace to bring out the fact that salvation is for all (Tit 2:11). This means that salvation is available to all, not that every individual is saved (see Universalism).

Paul uses a number of expressions that bring out the thought that salvation comes "through" the Christian message. Thus God was pleased to save believers "through the foolishness of what was preached" (1 Cor 1:21). Later in the same letter Paul makes known "the gospel . . . through which you were saved" (1 Cor 15:1-2). In both cases the preaching clearly means the preaching of what Christ has accomplished in dying for sinners. They are saved by what he has done. Paul can equate "the word of truth" with "the gospel of your salvation" (Eph 1:13), which underlies the reliability of the gospel* proclamation. The gospel tells of divine truth.* And it tells of divine action. The reference to the person who "will be saved, but so as through fire" (1 Cor 3:15) envisages a believer who has achieved so little in the Christian life that on the day of judgment* his or her work will be "burned up." But, being on the foundation Christ laid, that person will be saved. It is Christ who brings salvation, not human effort. It is the sure foundation, not the uncertain work, that is ultimately important.

Nowhere does Paul speak of a salvation brought about by human effort. He does indeed speak of himself and his coworkers* as being "afflicted"* for the salvation of the Corinthians (2 Cor 1:6; cf. Col 1:24), but this means no more than that the evangelists had to undergo troubles to bring the message of salvation to people; it certainly does not mean that their troubles merited the salvation of their hearers. This passage also speaks of the apostle as being encouraged, but it was not the encouragement Paul received that brought salvation. Salvation always comes from God. Another passage indicates that the troubles of the early believers were a token of their salvation (Phil 1:28).

Paul uses the language of salvation to bring out aspects of the great truth that when sinners could do nothing to escape the results of their evil deeds, God took action to deliver them. "By grace you have been saved," he writes to the Ephesians (Eph 2:8), an expression that follows "and he has made us alive in Christ when we were dead in our transgressions" (Eph 2:5). The implication is that sins bring death, but that Christ brings life to people who are dead in sin. So we find that it is "not of works of righteousness that we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us" (Tit 3:5).

The initiative in salvation is with God: "God chose us . . . for salvation" (2 Thess 2:13). Indeed almost every passage dealing with salvation could be cited, for characteristically Paul (like the other NT writers) puts before his readers information about a salvation in one sense already brought about by Christ and in another sense to be consummated in the age to come. In neither is there the slightest suggestion that human effort avails. It is relevant that Paul prays for the salvation of Israel* (Rom 10:1), for if their salvation is a matter for prayer,* then clearly it is to be a gift of God. Salvation is brought about by God in Christ. Christians are "the saved" (1 Cor 1:18; 2 Cor 2:15), not "saving ones" or people saved by their own efforts. This is so also when faith is linked with salvation (Rom 10:9; 1 Cor 1:21; Eph 2:8), for faith means trusting in Christ or in God, not relying on one's own efforts.

2. Human Agents in Salvation.

There are some passages where human agency is named in the bringing about of salvation, though this, of course, does not mean that people can save one another. When Paul, for example, speaks of himself saving some of the Israelites (Rom 11:14) he does not mean that his efforts will effect salvation, but only that he brings a message which he hopes will cause some of his own nation to turn to God and thus enter the salvation God alone can give. A similar comment should be made about a woman saving her husband and a man saving his wife (1 Cor 7:16). Paul is not claiming that people can effect the salvation of family members, but rather that a Christian wife or husband can so live as to cause the partner to turn to God and receive salvation from him. Paul sees the principle as of universal application among Christians. He concludes a passage on eating food* offered to idols* by telling his correspondents that whatever they eat or drink, indeed whatever they do, they should do all things for God's glory. He claims that he himself pleases everyone in all he does; he does not look for personal profit, but for that of the many "in order that they may be saved" (1 Cor 10:31-33).

Timothy is urged to remain in "the teaching." By doing this he will save himself "and those who hear you" (1 Tim 4:16). The reference to "the teaching" shows that the writer is not referring to some meritorious activity, but to the teaching that Christ is Savior. And those who hear this will be with Timothy in salvation. Again there is the thought of human effort leading to the salvation of other people. But it is God in Christ who saves.

3. Who Will Be Saved?

The fact that salvation is a divine deliverance does not mean that everybody will be saved. Paul quotes from Isaiah the words, "If the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, it is the remnant that will be saved" (Rom 9:27). The article is important; Paul does not say "a" remnant but "the" remnant. He is referring to the biblical remnant, the remnant that God has spoken of through his prophets. This remnant is the real people of God, and salvation comes to them, not to the multitudes of the nation, careless as these multitudes are about the things of God.

We should notice that while Paul looks to God to bring salvation to Israel, this does not mean that he sees himself as excused from doing anything to help his nation. Indeed, he regards his ministry* to the Gentiles* at any rate, as in one respect a means of commending the gospel to the Jews. He refers to his position as "the apostle* of the Gentiles" and trusts that his labors in that capacity "will provoke my own flesh and I will save some of them" (Rom 11:13-14). "My own flesh*" is unusual in the sense of "member of the same nation," but it emphasizes Paul's sense of kinship with the nation Israel. And he is expressing the hope that the success of his labors among the Gentiles will have its effect on the Jews so that "some of them," too, will be saved.

He regards it as a principal count against the Jews that they forbade the Christian preachers "to speak to the Gentiles so that they might be saved" (1 Thess 2:16). In another context he speaks of becoming "all things to all people so that by all means I may save some" (1 Cor 9:22). It is clear that for the apostle the bringing of salvation to people everywhere was of the first importance and that, though his own ministry was largely to the Gentiles, this did not mean that he had ceased to care about Israel. His agonizing over his nation in Romans 9—11 should never be forgotten.

We should probably understand the statement that God wills "all people to be saved" (1 Tim 2:4) in this connection. It is the negation of all exclusivism, be it that of the Jews or of the later Gnostics* (who confined salvation to those who had special enlightenment). "All" is to be understood in the same way as it is in the following sentence, which speaks of Christ as giving himself "as a ransom for all" (1 Tim 2:6). We should certainly not take it in the sense that God sets his will on the salvation of the whole human race and is disappointed. Another passage of the same sort is that in which God is referred to as "the Savior of all people, especially believers" (1 Tim 4:10). We should perhaps understand "Savior" here as "Preserver" (for God does "save" us all in some sense), but the emphasis on believers shows that the salvation that matters comes only to people of faith. We should remember that the Philippians were exhorted, "With fear* and trembling work out your salvation" (Phil 2:12). The plural may mean that the whole church is being exhorted to work hard at its spiritual wellbeing. If it is applied to the individual the meaning must be much the same. Paul never sees salvation as the result of the individual's own efforts, and it would be perverse to find such a meaning here (see Hawthorne, 98-100).

In a very difficult passage we are told that "the woman was deceived" (a reference to Eve), but that "she will be saved through the childbearing . . . if they abide in faith" (1 Tim 2:14-15). The plural shows that Paul is speaking of Christian women generally, not confining his remarks to Eve, but it is not easy to see how childbearing brings salvation ("this would be a very odd form of salvation by works," Ward, 53). Some interpreters have held that we should emphasize "the" childbearing (i.e., the bearing of the child) and see a reference to Christ, others that Christian women are assured of safe delivery. Paul later speaks of people who forbade marriage* (1 Tim 4:3), and it may well be that he is opposing false teaching and saying that women will be saved (provided, of course, that they "abide in faith and love and sanctification," 1 Tim 2:15) in the normal course of life, giving birth to children in marriage.

4. Salvation in the Past.

There is a sense in which salvation has already taken place. Paul can say, "in hope we were saved" (Rom 8:24), where the past tense looks back to the beginning of the Christian life.

"By grace you have been saved through faith and this not of yourselves; it is the gift of God, not of works lest anyone should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus" (Eph 2:8-10). This is the typical position in Paul's writings. Salvation is something brought about by God (or Christ) and there is nothing human endeavor can do to produce this result. Paul piles expression on expression to emphasize the truth that salvation has been achieved by God only; it is never the result of human initiative or human achievement. We see this also in the reference to Christ as "the head* of the church" and as "the Savior of the body" (Eph 5:23).

There is both a backward and a forward look when Paul writes "For we were saved in hope,* but hope seen is not hope" (Rom 8:24). This intriguing passage recognizes that there is a sense in which salvation is in the past: "we were saved." Paul looks back to the death of Christ for sinners and to the faith repentant sinners exercised when they came to Christ. But he also speaks of hope, and that points to the future when believers will experience to the full all that salvation means.

Salvation is past when the apostle says that God, "when we were dead in trespasses, gave us life in Christ—by grace you have been saved" (Eph 2:5). A little later he repeats the essential thought, "By grace you have been saved through faith" (Eph 2:8), where again the perfect tense points to a salvation already accomplished. The aorist of an event in the past is found when we read, "Not from works of righteousness that we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us" (Tit 3:5). Again, Christ "delivered us from the power of darkness" (Col 1:13). Paul leaves his readers in no doubt as to the reality of salvation as an accomplished fact. It happened in the past.

5. Salvation Now.

But in another sense Paul emphasizes that salvation is here and now. The gospel is "the power* of God for salvation" and God's righteousness* is being revealed in it (Rom 1:16-17). The tenor of the apostle's writings and the manner of his living show that this is a reference to a present happening. Again, he quotes Isaiah 49:8, referring to God's help in a day of salvation, and proceeds, "Look, now is the acceptable time; look, now is the day of salvation" (2 Cor 6:2). The doubled "now" conveys a sense of urgency; salvation is not to be deferred to some convenient time in the future. Salvation is now. The gospel must be accepted now.

A present salvation is meant when Paul speaks of the gospel as "the power of God to us who are being saved" (1 Cor 1:18), and when he refers to "those being saved" (2 Cor 2:15). "With the mouth one confesses for salvation" (Rom 10:10) is another indication of a present salvation, not only one that is looked for in the future. This is probably the case also with the "godly grief" that "works repentance" leading to salvation (2 Cor 7:10). Salvation is in the present when Paul asks rhetorically, "Who will deliver me from this body of death?" and answers, "Thanks be to God through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom 7:24-25). Paul is referring to this mortal body* and to the constant temptations to sin that such a body provides. And he exults in the deliverance Christ brings. In the battle of life, salvation may be said to be the "helmet" (Eph 6:17), or the helmet may be "the hope of salvation" (1 Thess 5:8). Either way, salvation is now a critical part of the Christian's armor.

The apostle's attitude to the salvation of Israel also reveals a longing for something to happen now. He speaks of his affectionate goodwill toward his nation and adds that his prayer is for their salvation (Rom 10:1). While, of course, there is an eschatological dimension to the salvation for which he prays, the emphasis in this passage is present: he wants Israel to be saved now! That salvation is present is seen in another reference to Israel, namely that it is due to Israel's transgression that salvation has come to the Gentiles (Rom 11:11).

6. A Future Salvation.

Paul is certain that salvation is a present reality and that it is a life-changing experience. But he is equally certain that the best we know of it now does not exhaust the subject. He looks for a future salvation when "all Israel will be saved" (Rom 11:26), or again when he urges, somewhat mysteriously, that a certain sinner be "delivered to Satan for the destruction of the flesh so that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord" (1 Cor 5:5; see Eschatology). There is much that is obscure to us in this passage, but salvation "in the day of the Lord" certainly looks for the ultimate salvation. This is very clear also in the apostle's reference to our citizenship* as being in heaven, "from where we await a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ" (Phil 3:20). The idea that salvation is nearer than when we first believed (Rom 13:11) also points to a future happening. The statements that "all Israel will be saved" and that "the Deliverer will come out of Zion" (Rom 11:26) may be understood of the present or of the future. Whichever way we take them, there can be no doubt that Christ is the deliverer and that he is seen as having full heavenly authority.

Paul does not see this future salvation as coming to all, and we must remember that there are passages in which, for example, he sets those who are saved over against "those who are perishing" (1 Cor 1:18; 2 Cor 2:15; 2 Thess 2:10). "The wrath*" (Rom 5:9) from which Paul is saved points forward to the ultimate disaster. Judgment day will test realities. The work of some will survive the fire, whereas that of others will be burned up; of such a one Paul says, "That person will be saved, but so as through fire" (1 Cor 3:15). Paul is here referring to believers and pointing to the difference between those who have built well and those who have built badly. But anyone who has built on the foundation Christ laid will be saved. Clearly this is the future salvation.

In his treatment of "the man of lawlessness"* at the end of the age, Paul says that the Lord Jesus will destroy that wicked one. He also says that this evil being will operate "with every deceit of unrighteousness in them that are perishing, because they did not receive the love of the truth so that they might be saved" (2 Thess 2:10). This is an unusual way of putting it but is a reminder that "the love of the truth" is important. Right up to the last days people will perish because they did not love the truth.

Paul looks forward to the day when the Lord "will save me into his heavenly kingdom*" (2 Tim 4:18). That also is the implication of the remark that the justified* "will be saved through him from the wrath" (Rom 5:9). There is a future dimension in salvation, which is important, for Paul is clear that ultimately sinners will face the wrath of God. But there is ultimate deliverance for those who have put their trust in God. Paul quotes the prophet Joel for the assurance that "Everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved" (Rom 10:13). "Calls"* does not mean calls in a superficial manner, as of one who simply wishes to avoid the personal consequences of sin. "Calls" here means a genuine calling on the Lord which proceeds from the conviction that God can and will save and that the caller is in desperate need.

From all this we see that salvation is the comprehensive term that includes a multiplicity of aspects. Sometimes more than one of these aspects occur together, as when the apostle says that Christ has delivered us "from so great a death" and who will deliver, and adds that this is the one "on whom we have set our hope that he will still deliver" (2 Cor 1:10). For Paul it was important that sinners be delivered from the condemnation their sin deserved, and he gives a good deal of attention to justification, the process of acquittal when believers stand at the bar of God's justice. But he also thinks of the present power of the Holy Spirit* in the lives of believers; salvation includes an ongoing triumph* over the forces of evil. And Paul looks forward to the end of this age and sees salvation as having its effect throughout eternity. We should not think of salvation as simply negative, as "deliverance from . . ." It is that, but it is more. It involves wholeness, wellness, health, goodness. Thus Paul says that Christ "delivered us from the power of darkness," but immediately adds, "and transferred us into the kingdom of his beloved Son" (Col 1:13).

See also CREATION AND NEW CREATION; DEATH OF CHRIST; ESCHATOLOGY; GENTILES; GRACE; HOPE; ISRAEL; JUSTIFICATION; PEACE, RECONCILIATION; RESTORATION OF ISRAEL; SAVIOR; TRIUMPH; UNIVERSALISM; WRATH, DESTRUCTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. W. Foerster and G. Fohrer, "σώζω κτλ," TDNT VII.965-1024; E. M. B. Green, The Meaning of Salvation (London: Hodder, 1965); R. Haughton, The Drama of Salvation (London: SPCK, 1976); G. F. Hawthorne, Philippians (WBC 43; Waco: Word, 1983); D. Hill, Greek Words and Hebrew Meanings: Studies in the Semantics of Soteriological Terms (SNTSMS 5; Cambridge: University Press, 1967); W. L. Liefeld, "Salvation," ISBE 4.287-95; H. R. Mackintosh, The Christian Experience of Forgiveness (London: Nisbet, 1927); L. Newbigin, Sin and Salvation (London: SCM, 1956); C. A. A. Scott, Christianity According to St. Paul (Cambridge: University Press, 1927); R. A. Ward, Commentary on 1 & 2 Timothy & Titus (Waco: Word, 1973).

L. Morris

SANCTIFICATION.

See HOLINESS, SANCTIFICATION.

SANHEDRIN.

See POLITICAL SYSTEMS.

SATAN, DEVIL

Paul refers to a personal, evil, spiritual being whose purposes are opposed to God, his people and his cosmos. "Satan" (or "Devil" occurring only in Ephesians and the Pastorals) are the most familiar terms Paul uses, but there are others. The OT and, more particularly, the varied Judaism of Paul's day help shed light on the terminology and understanding of Satan common to Paul and many of his contemporaries.

1. Background
2. Pauline Terminology
3. Satan As Hostile Enemy
4. Satan As Conquered Enemy

1. Background.

In the OT the Hebrew noun śāṭān, meaning "accuser" (with the nuance of "adversary" or "slanderer" in certain contexts; see Hamilton, 985-86), is used of both human (cf. 1 Sam 29:4; 1 Kings 11:14, 23, 25) and transcendent beings. The latter reference is found in three notable instances. In Job "the satan" appears before God acting as a sort of public prosecutor, possibly a member of the divine council, who brings accusation against Job. He is given only limited power to afflict Job and his family (Job 1—2). In 1 Chronicles 21:1 a "satan" incites David to take a census of the people, though in the parallel story of 2 Samuel 24:1 the same event is attributed to the influence of Yahweh. In Zechariah 3:1-2 "the satan" brings accusation against the high priest Joshua, as the latter stands before the angel of Yahweh. Yahweh "rebukes" (gā'ar) the satan, a powerful word of command with which Yahweh is known to overcome his enemies (e.g., Ps 18:15; LXX 17:16; cf. 1QapGen 20:28-29; 1QM 14:9-10). In none of these cases do we find a being clearly defined as a cosmic adversary who defies divine sovereignty and authority. But these three canonical contexts seem to have laid the foundation for a later development in Jewish thought in which an evil, transcendent spiritual being, known by various names, maintains a spiritual kingdom that is opposed, but ultimately subject, to God. Many scholars believe this development was due to the influence of Iranian thought in the intervening centuries, but this influence is difficult to prove. Whatever its origin, by the first century a dualistic cosmology seems to have been widely accepted.

Within this worldview intelligent beings, whether physical or spiritual, were ultimately aligned with either God or Satan, light or darkness (see Light and Darkness), good or evil (1QS 4:15-16). Whereas in the OT ancient Israel had been faced off against the nations, a deeper dimension was now added in literature outside the OT, though no doubt indebted to Daniel's visions (cf., e.g., Dan 10:1—11:1). Behind the story of Israel and the nations was a transcendent drama in which God* and angels* were set over against Satan and his minions. Moreover, just as the OT depicted rebellion and apostasy taking place within Israel itself, some now saw the spiritual battle lines dividing Israel and extending into a battleground of the individual heart, ultimately distinguishing the true children of light from the children of darkness (1QS 4:22-24; though Jub. 16:25-34 puts confidence in circumcision* as the sign of those who belong to God rather than Beliar/Mastema; cf. Jub. 48:2-4). This new perspective was accompanied by a mythology which traced the course of conflict, accounted for the origin of demons* (the spirits of the offspring of angels and human wives, Jub. 5:1-11; 10:1-14; 1 Enoch 15:8-9; cf. Gen 6:1-5) and retold Israel's history, now set off in relief by a host of spiritual forces. On this accounting, for instance, it was Satan, known as Mastema, who aided the magicians of Egypt and incited the Egyptians to pursue the Israelites (Jub. 48:9-12; see Magic).

In broad strokes, Satan was understood to be a personal spiritual being of the highest order (Life of Adam and Eve 12:1), originally created by God for good purposes (but cf. 1QM 13:11, "you created Belial for the pit") but now engaged as the leader of a cosmic rebellion (Life of Adam and Eve 12—16). While he exercises his power on earth (Life of Adam and Eve 16:1), he does not seem to have been barred from appearing in the courts of heaven, and either he or his delegates appear in heaven to bring accusation against God's people (1 Enoch 40:7; cf. T. Job 8:1-3; 3 Enoch 30:1-2). He rules over a destructive force of fallen angels or spirits (1QM 13:12; T. Jud. 25:3; T. Zeb. 9:8), leads the Gentile nations astray (1QM 1:1-2; 1 Enoch 69:28; T. Job 2:1—3:7), and actively and strategically works evil against God's people, whether as individuals, leaders (Mart. Is. 1:8-9), sect or nation (Jub. 1:19-21). Israel, or at least the righteous remnant within Israel, is protected by God or his archangelic agent, typically Michael, the Prince of Israel (1QM 13:9-11; 1QS 3:18—4:1; cf. 11QMelch). And both individuals and corporate Israel are enjoined to resist Satan's falsehoods, his malevolent schemes and his dangerous assaults (T. Reub. 4:11; 1QS 4:15-18). In due course Satan will be defeated and subdued by God (1QM 18:1-2; T. Levi 18:12; T. Jud. 25:3; T. Mos. 10:1), either single-handedly by the divine warrior or by means of an angelic prince (1QM 13:10-11; 1 Enoch 54:6). In either case, according to some apocalyptic scenarios the angelic warriors and the "children of light" might be pressed into service (11QM).

In Jewish literature of the Second Temple era a number of titles were given to this spiritual archopponent of God and his people: Satan (T. Job 3:6; 6:1—8:3; 1QH 4:6; 45:3; 1QSb 1:8), or Satanael/Samael (e.g., in Slavonic/Greek versions of 3 Baruch 4:8; cf. 2 Enoch 18:3[J]); the Devil (T. Job 3:3; LXX Job 1:6-8, 12; 2:1-7; Zech 3:1, 2); "the enemy" (T. Job 47:10); Belial (1QM 13:11; 14:9; 1QS 1:18, 24; 2:5, 19) or Beliar (T. Levi 3:3; 18:12; 19:1), from the Hebrew bᵉlîyā'al ("ruin," "destruction," "wickedness," cf. Nah 1:11); Azazel (1 Enoch 8:1; 10:4; Apoc. Abr. 13:6-14; cf. Lev 16:8); Mastema ("hatred," "enmity," from the verb root śtm, "hate"; Jub. 10:8; 11:5; 17:16; 19:28; cf. 1QM 13:4); "the spirit" or "angel of darkness" (1QS 3:20-24); and perhaps Melkîreša' ("king of wickedness," 4Q280-82, in contrast with Melkîṣedeq, "king of righteousness"; 11QMelch). In addition, the Gospels provide evidence for the name "Beelzebul," known as "the ruler of the demons" (Mt 12:24; Mk 3:22; Lk 11:15).

2. Pauline Terminology.

Within the Pauline corpus we also find an array of names or descriptive titles or phrases referring to this archenemy.

2.1. Satan. "Satan" (ho satanas Rom 16:20; 1 Cor 5:5; 7:5; 2 Cor 2:11; 11:14; 12:7; 1 Thess 2:18; 2 Thess 2:9; cf. 1 Tim 1:20; 5:15), a transliteration of the Hebrew śāṭān (e.g., Job 1:6-8, 12; 2:1-7; Zech 3:1, 2) is the term most commonly used to refer to the supernatural adversary of God and his purposes. In addition, various other terms are used.

2.2. Devil. The term, "devil" (diabolos), is found in Ephesians 4:27 and 6:11, and is used with some frequency in the Pastorals (1 Tim 3:6, 7; 2 Tim 2:26; 3:3; Tit 2:3). A Greek term, meaning "slanderer" or "adversary," diabolos is used in the LXX to translate the Hebrew śāṭān. But the term "devil" can be used in more than one sense. In 1 Timothy 3, while the devil is presented as one who condemns and ensnares church leaders (1 Tim 3:6, 7), the instruction is given that women deacons "must be serious, not slanderers [diabolous], but temperate, faithful in all things" (1 Tim

3:11 NRSV). On the other hand, in the Pastorals we also find reference to "Satan" (1 Tim 1:20; 5:15) and once to "the enemy" (antikeimenos, 1 Tim 5:14). This provides evidence of the interchangeability of the names Satan and Devil among early Christians, a phenomenon attested elsewhere in the NT in the Gospels (cf. Mt 4:1, 5, 8, 11 and 4:10; Mk 4:15 and Lk 8:12) and Revelation (where satanas appears eight times and diabolos five times).

2.3. Other Terms. Outside of Ephesians and the Pastorals Satan is alluded to as "Beliar" (2 Cor 6:15) or the "god of this age" (ho theos tou aiōnou toutou, 2 Cor 4:4; cf. Acts 26:18) who blinds unbelievers, keeping them from seeing the "light of the glory* of the gospel* of Christ." He is also called the "serpent" (ophis, 2 Cor 11:3; cf. 1 Enoch 69:6; 2 Enoch 31:6; Apoc. Abr. 23; Life of Adam and Eve 9; Apoc. Mos. 17), "the tempter" (ho peirazōn, 1 Thess 3:5; cf. Mt 4:3) and the "evil one" (ho ponēros, 2 Thess 3:3; cf. Eph 6:16 and Mt 5:37; 13:19, 38; Jn 17:15; 1 John 2:13-14; 3:12; 5:18-19). And in keeping with these sinister titles, in Colossians he is implied as controlling the "power of darkness" (Col 1:13) who stands in contrast with the "the holy ones in the light" (Col 1:12), perhaps a reference to the angels. Elsewhere when Paul refers to "darkness" in contrast with "light" (cf., e.g., Rom 13:12; 1 Thess 5:4, 5), we may infer that he (in a manner reminiscent of the conflict between light and darkness described in the Qumran* scrolls) has in mind the realm and influence of Satan. For Paul, however, Satan is not always so easily identified, for he may cross over into the camp of God's people disguised as an "angel (angelos) of light" (2 Cor 11:14; cf. Apoc. Mos. 17:1; Life of Adam and Eve 9:1).

Ephesians offers a particularly rich selection of descriptive titles. He is called the "prince (or "ruler," archōn) of the power of the air" (Eph 2:2; cf., e.g., Jn 16:11), the "spirit [pneuma] now at work among those who are disobedient" (Eph 2:2), the "evil one" (Eph 6:16; cf. 2 Thess 3:3) and "the devil" (Eph 4:27; 6:11).

3. Satan As Hostile Enemy.

Paul's references to Satan always occur in the course of meeting the demands of his apostolic ministry*; nowhere in the Pauline corpus is there any apparent attempt to set forth a systematic "satanology." But the picture which emerges from the fragments of evidence preserved in the Pauline letters seems in most respects compatible with that which we find in the common "satanology" of Judaism—though in Paul these themes are transposed into a Christian framework. Some have even suggested that the descent and ascent of Christ in the hymn of Philippians 2:6-11 is a mirrored counterimage of the story of Satan's attempt to grasp equality and glory with God, and his subsequent punishment, based on Isaiah 14.

3.1. The God of This Age. Paul clearly distinguishes between two kingdoms in the present age: the kingdom* of Christ and the kingdom of Satan. In 2 Corinthians 4:4 Paul maintains that the "god of this age (aiōn)" keeps his human subjects (hoi apistoi) from the gospel by blinding their minds from seeing "the revealed splendor of the gospel of the glory of Christ who is the image of God." That "good news" of a triumphant and exalted Christ, the glorious second Adam* in the image* of God, heralds the dawn of a new age and the passing of the old along with its dark lord. There may be a twist of irony in this allusion to the work of Satan, for the first-century A.D. Life of Adam and Eve (12—16) recounts that Satan fell when he refused to worship the image of God in the newly created Adam. In his rebellion he assailed Eve and so brought about Adam and Eve's expulsion from paradise and his own loss of glory. Satan, transformed as a bright angel (cf. 2 Cor 11:14), returned to her and led her astray with a false assurance of divine forgiveness. When Paul refers to "unbelievers" (2 Cor 4:4) he may have in mind false teachers who carry out Satan's work (cf. 2 Cor 11:13-15). The underlying point is that Satan is vested with a sovereignty, however limited it might ultimately be, that is powerful, compelling and clearly opposed to the work of God in Christ.

Such an understanding also surfaces in 2 Corinthians 6:15 where Paul warns the Corinthians not to be yoked with unbelievers, for "what agreement does Christ have with Beliar?" This passage (2 Cor 6:14—7:1), with its contrasts between Christ and Beliar, righteousness and lawlessness, light and darkness, believer and unbeliever, temple* of God and idols,* clean and unclean, resonates with language similar to that found in the Qumran scrolls. This has led some interpreters to suggest that Paul has here appropriated and reworked a passage of Essene origin (see Martin, 1986, 190-95, 199-201), thus explaining why this is the only occurrence of Beliar in Paul and the NT. Whether Paul appropriated it or not, Paul affirms the distinction between the two realms headed by Christ and Belial.

The same perspective is found in the contested Pauline letters of Colossians and Ephesians. In Colossians 1:13 the dominion (exousia) of darkness (implied to be Satan's) is contrasted with the kingdom of Christ. In language reminiscent of the exodus tradition, we read that believers have been rescued from the authority of darkness and delivered into the kingdom of God's Son.* In Ephesians 2:2 the archruler of this age is called "the ruler of the power [or realm, tēs exousias] of the air, the spirit that is now at work among those who are disobedient." The believers who are addressed were once slaves to the world order of this age, "dead" in their trespasses and sins (note the dual themes of liberation and forgiveness* in Col 1:13-14). But there is a new element in Ephesians, with the Devil (the term used in Eph 4:27; 6:11) being associated with the "air" and being called a "prince" or "ruler" (archōn). The "air" may refer to the lower reaches of the heavens,* believed by some in Paul's day to be just above the earth (cf. 2 Enoch 29:4-5). This lower atmosphere seems to be related to the "heavenly realms" which, according to Ephesians 3:10 and 6:12, are inhabited by the principalities and powers (see Principalities and Powers), who are in a power alliance with the Devil (Eph 6:11-12; see Lincoln, Arnold).

Finally, in Romans 8:19-23 Paul speaks of the subjection of the created order to "futility"* (or "vanity," mataiotēs, Rom 8:20) and the "bondage of decay" (Rom 8:21) in which it "groans in labor pains" (Rom 8:22) as it awaits its liberation. The suggestion has been made that Paul is here alluding to the created order's subjection to the power of Satan as the "god of this age," or to his agents. There is surely something to be said for this, for Paul ends his train of thought with a confident statement that no power of the cosmos can keep believers from the love of God in Christ (Rom 8:37-39; see Martin 1981, 53-54), and in Romans 16:20 he looks forward to the defeat of Satan in terms clearly echoing Genesis 3:15 (see 4 below).

3.2. Satan the Aggressor. There is active engagement between the kingdom of Christ and the kingdom of Satan. If Satan strives to maintain humans in his thrall, he also attempts to regain those who have been lost to Christ and he resists Paul, a leading opponent in the battle for human lives.

Among believers (both as individuals and in Christian community), we find that Satan brings sexual temptation to those who lack self-control (1 Cor 7:5) and he can outwit believers and leaders by taking advantage of unforgiving attitudes and discord in the community (2 Cor 2:11). Just as the serpent deceived Eve, Satan cunningly leads believers astray from a pure devotion to Christ by introducing "another gospel" (2 Cor 11:3) and even disguising himself as an angel of light (cf. Gal 1:8; Life of Adam and Eve 9:1; on Satan taking a guise, see T. Job 6:4). Here Paul is contemplating the fact that his opponents* at Corinth disguised themselves as ministers of righteousness when they were in fact false apostles* and ministers of Satan (2 Cor 11:15). It is interesting, however, that Paul never speaks of Satan "entering" someone (cf. Lk 22:3; Jn 13:27). On the other hand, trouble may also come in the form of persecution inflicted from outside the community, and the fear of an apostle is that in his absence new believers will be shaken by such events (1 Thess 3:1-4). This too Paul can attribute to the work of Satan, as the tempter (peirazōn), and consequently the work of a minister of the gospel might be in vain (1 Thess 3:5). From Paul's perspective, it was Satan who repeatedly thwarted his apostolic plans to return to Thessalonica (1 Thess 2:18).

In Ephesians and the Pastorals many of the same concerns come to the fore. The Devil is wily, and his strategems must be resisted by divine armor (Eph 6:11). Anger and an unrepentant or unforgiving spirit is a foothold for the Devil (Eph 4:27). Believers, and particularly church leaders, must be on the lookout for the "snare (pagis) of the devil" (1 Tim 3:7; 2 Tim 2:26). For an episkopos who is a recent convert, conceit can lead to condemnation by the devil (1 Tim 3:6). Some, perhaps Hymenaeus and Philetus who have "swerved from the truth" (2 Tim 2:18 NRSV), have already fallen into that snare and have been held captive (2 Tim 2:26). They may still, by the ministry of Timothy, be granted repentance and knowledge of the truth. Young widows, (presumably because of sexual unfulfillment, idleness or for lack of a living,) should marry so as to close a door of opportunity for the adversary (antikeimenos) to do his work (1 Tim 5:14). Indeed, "some have already turned away to follow Satan" (1 Tim 5:15).

Finally, Paul tells the Thessalonians that prior to the parousia of the Lord an eschatological rebellion, led by the "man of lawlessness,"* will occur in accord with the working of Satan (kat' energeian tou satana, 2 Thess 2:9). The "mystery of lawlessness" is already at work in Paul's day (2 Thess 2:7), but in its final crystallization of evil it will be accompanied by "power, signs, lying wonders, and every kind of wicked deception" (2 Thess 2:9-10).

3.3. Satan As an Instrument of Divine Will. Satan's opposition is carried out under the sovereignty of God. The theological perspective that evil can be used for divine purposes, even as a means of executing divine wrath* and discipline, is a theme familiar from the OT. On the one hand, Assyria and Babylon execute the divine judgment against Israel and Judah; on the other, Satan may be given permission to afflict an individual such as Job for a divine purpose.

Paul speaks of a "thorn in the flesh," a messenger (angelos) of Satan, which was permitted by God to afflict him (2 Cor 12:7). While this affliction (most likely a physical disability, see Martin, 1986, 410-17) was evil in itself, and "battered" Paul, it was allowed (edothē, "given") within God's providence and was not taken away despite Paul's fervent prayers. It was, in fact, instrumental in bringing home a message at the heart of Paul's theology of the cross*: "God's power is made perfect in weakness."

On another level Satan plays a role in community discipline.* Paul instructs the Corinthians that a certain man, guilty of incest, should be delivered over "to Satan for the destruction of his flesh, that his spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord" (1 Cor 5:5). This passage has puzzled interpreters, for it is not clear whether this is a remedial measure (with the expectation that the man will repent) or whether it was intended that his death would be his salvation (see Roetzel). One thing seems clear: that the individual, in being excommunicated from the blessings of community "in Christ"* (note that the community is to be gathered "in the name of the Lord," 1 Cor 5:4) by the "power of the Lord Jesus" would be placed outside, into the domain of Satan. In this case Satan perhaps is understood to operate like the forces who executed Yahweh's covenant curses* and wrath upon unfaithful Israel in exile. Like Israel, who was cut off from the blessings of the land of promise, this individual's flesh* (e.g., his propensity for sin) through suffering would be destroyed and thus he would be saved on the Day of the Lord (when the Lord would return to execute his final triumph over the enemy). In 1 Timothy 1:20 we find that Hymenaeus and Alexander have been turned over to Satan so that they may learn not to blaspheme.

4. Satan As Conquered Enemy.

In Romans 16:20 Paul expresses his victorious confidence that "the God of peace will soon crush Satan under your feet." The influence of Genesis 3:15 is clearly to be seen here. But whereas Genesis 3:15 speaks of the seed of the woman striking the head of the seed of the serpent, Paul speaks of "the God of peace," not Christ, who will defeat the enemy. In speaking of God as the subject and Satan "under your feet," Paul seems to be blending Genesis 3:15 with Psalm 110:1 and/or Psalm 8:6. The latter is the more likely text being echoed here, since it speaks of God placing the created order under the superintendence of humankind. On this reading Paul would be saying that in defeating Satan, who leads and epitomizes creation in rebellion, God will be restoring to the children of the Last Adam (the "seed of the woman") their role of dominion and eschatological shalom. That this will happen "soon" (en tachei) may be an indication of Paul's confidence in the coming triumph* of God. But it may also arise from his confidence that believers in Rome will soon experience divine victory over the present threat of "those who cause dissensions and offenses" and "deceive the hearts of the simple-minded" (Rom 16:17-19).

While the Gospels point to the defeat of Satan in the cross and resurrection* (cf., e.g., Lk 22:1-6, 53; Jn 12:31; 14:30; 16:11), Paul looks back to Christ's triumph at the cross over the "principalities and powers"* (Col 2:15; cf. 1 Cor 2:6-8). It is difficult to imagine that Paul would not have affirmed a proleptic triumph over Satan at the cross, for he speaks confidently of the defeat at the cross of the personified powers of sin,* death,* flesh* and even the Law* (see Triumph). Moreover, texts such as Galatians 1:4 ("he delivered us from the present evil age") and Colossians 1:12 ("he has rescued us from the power of darkness") imply a defeat of Satanic power reminiscent of God's victory in the Exodus.

But this defeat, though real, is only provisional. Satan is still a potent and aggressive force of evil seeking to thwart and upset the work of God in Christ. In the present Paul encourages his churches to look forward to the final crushing of Satan (Rom 16:20) and to rely on divine faithfulness and power, for "he will strengthen you and guard you from the evil one" (2 Thess 3:3). In Ephesians 6 the theme of divine weaponry, an image also employed in 1 Thessalonians 5:8 and Romans 13:12, is developed in memorable fashion (see Arnold). Paul points out that the enemy of the church does not consist of "flesh and blood" enemies (like those of the old Israel). God's people are now engaged with enemies in the form of principalities, powers and "the spiritual forces of evil in the heavenly realms" (Eph 6:12). These powers are under the direction of their leader "the devil," whose schemes (methodeiai) they carry out against the church. While Israel was organized and regulated as the army of God in the wilderness, dependent on the victorious power of Yahweh, the church is outfitted in spiritual weaponry and finds her strength in the Lord and in the power of his might (Eph 6:10). With the "shield of faith" believers can "quench all the flaming arrows of the evil one" (Eph 6:16).

See also ANGELS, ARCHANGELS; DEMONS AND EXORCISM; ELEMENTS/ELEMENTAL SPIRITS OF THE WORLD; PRINCIPALITIES AND POWERS; TRIUMPH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. E. Arnold, Ephesians: Power and Magic (SNTSMS 63; Cambridge: University Press, 1989); H. Bietenhard et al., "Satan, Beelzebul, Devil, Exorcism," NIDNTT 3.468-77; O. Böcher, "βελιάρ," EDNT 1.212; idem, "διάβολος," EDNT 1.297-98; P. L. Day, An Adversary in Heaven: Satan in the Hebrew Bible (HSM 43; Atlanta: Scholars, 1987); M. Dibelius, Die Geisterwelt im Glauben des Paulus (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1909); W. Foerster, "βελιάρ," TDNT I.607; idem, "διαβάλλω, διάβολος," TDNT II.71-81; idem, "σατανάς," TDNT VII.151-63; N. Forsyth, The Old Enemy: Satan and the Combat Myth (Princeton: University Press, 1987); V. P. Hamilton, "Satan," ABD V.985-89; R. Leivestad, Christ the Conqueror: Ideas of Conflict and Victory in the New Testament (London: SPCK, 1954); A. T. Lincoln, Ephesians (WBC 42; Dallas: Word, 1990); idem, Paradise Now and Not Yet (SNTSMS 43; Cambridge: University Press, 1981); R. P. Martin, 2 Corinthians (WBC 40; Waco: Word, 1986); idem, Reconciliation: A Study of Paul's Theology (Atlanta: John Knox, 1981); C. J. Roetzel, Judgement in the Community: A Study of the Relationship between Eschatology and Ecclesiology in Paul (NovTSup; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1972); J. B. Russell, The Devil: Perceptions of Evil from Antiquity to Primitive Christianity (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University, 1977); idem, Satan: The Early Christian Tradition (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University, 1981); G. H. Twelftree, Christ Triumphant: Exorcism Then and Now (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1985); idem, "Demon, Devil, Satan," DJG 163-72; R. Yates, "The Powers of Evil in the NT," EvQ 52 (1980) 97-111.

D. G. Reid

SAVIOR

The letters of Paul contain twelve of the twenty-four NT uses of the word sōtēr ("savior"). Ten of the twelve instances are in the Pastorals,* of which six are in Titus. In the Pauline literature, as in the overall NT usage, savior (sōtēr) means "one providing salvation," and often includes the related meanings of "deliverer" or "protector." The salvation that the savior brings is principally spiritual and usually eternal in scope, but it is also linked to the physical dimension. In the Pauline corpus the term savior is always applied either to Jesus Christ (six times) or to God (six times). Thus the question arises as to how both God* and Christ* can function as savior.

1. Savior in Hellenism and Judaism
2. Savior in Ephesians and Philippians
3. Savior in the Pastorals

1. Savior in Hellenism and Judaism.

Paul lived and ministered in a cultural environment where the term savior could be ascribed to gods, heroes and humans. Gods such as Zeus, Asclepius, Serapis, Isis and Sandon-Heracles (of Paul's native Tarsus) could be called "savior" for their reputed ability to deliver from the seasonal "death" of nature or from disease, mortality and other afflictions of life (see Religions). In the Hellenistic ruler cults that followed after Alexander the Great divine honors were attributed to rulers in life and in death. Thus after the death of Ptolemy I (c. 280 B.C.), he and his wife Berenike were honored as theoi sōtēres, "savior gods." And Ptolemy II and his wife Arsinoe II were deified while yet living. Likewise, beginning with Augustus, the Roman emperors* were given the titles "lord"* and "savior" in the emperor cult, which particularly prevailed in the cities of Asia Minor. In the case of rulers, their power as savior was evident in ending war and serving as the great benefactor (euergetēs) in bringing peace and prosperity (the news of this peace was frequently called euangelion, "good news"). Thus a wide range of deific associations attended the word sōtēr (see Bousset, Foerster and Fohrer, Nock, Wendland). But while the history of religions school attributed early Christianity's use of savior (and lord) to Hellenistic mystery religions (e.g., Serapis and Isis; see Bousset), such a genetic relationship has since been discredited (see Lord; Paul and His Interpreters; Religions). To whatever extent sōtēr was used of gods, heroes and humans in the first century, it should be seen as evidence of how the term could be used of a revered or transcendent figure, as a salutary reminder of how the term sōtēr might be misunderstood when attributed to Jesus, and as a contrast with the claims early Christians made of Christ.

The more likely background for savior in the Pauline corpus is the use of the term in the OT. There it is primarily God who is called "Savior" or identified as the one who brings salvation* (e.g., Deut 32:15; Mic 7:7; Hab 3:18), particularly in the Psalms (e.g., Ps 24:5; 27:1; 62:2) and in Isaiah (e.g., Is 12:2; 45:15, 21; 60:16; 63:8). Though humans may be called saviors, they serve only as agents of God's salvation (e.g., Judg 2:16; 3:9, 15; 2 Kings 13:5; Neh 9:27). The coming Davidic king was never identified as "savior," though Zechariah could speak of him as "having salvation" (Zech 9:9; cf. Servant, Is 49:6). The LXX regularly uses sōtēr to translate the Hebrew yᵉšûʿâ ("salvation"), yĕšaʿ ("deliverance," "rescue," "salvation") and the participle môšîaʿ ("savior"). The Greek texts of early Judaism do not use sōtēr of a messianic figure but limit it to God (Wis 16:17; Sir 51:1; Bar 4:22; 1 Macc 4:30; 3 Macc 6:29, 32; 7:16; Pss. Sol. 8:33).

2. Savior in Ephesians and Philippians.

Outside the Pastorals the term savior appears only in Ephesians 5:23 and Philippians 3:20. In considering these passages it is instructive to compare the usage in Acts 13:23, where Luke records Paul's early preaching.*

In Acts 13:16-41 Paul addresses Jews and Gentile God-fearers in the synagogue at Pisidian Antioch (Acts 13:14) on his first missionary journey. He proclaims Jesus as the "Savior" whom "God has brought to Israel" (Acts 13:23 NIV) from David's line (Acts 13:22-23). Paul's "message of salvation" (ho logos tēs sōtērias, Acts 13:26), that is, of Jesus as Savior, focuses on the death* and resurrection* of Jesus, the Son of God,* the Messiah, in fulfillment of the prophetic Scriptures. Although there is no evidence that savior was a messianic title in the NT period (Foerster, 1014), nevertheless Jesus is set forth as the Savior (Acts 13:23) who provides forgiveness* of sins* and justification,* which are to be received through faith in him and his victorious redemptive work (Acts 13:38-39). This is consistent with Peter's preaching in Acts 5:31 (cf. 2 Pet 1:1, 11; 2:20; 3:2, 18), as well as with the angel's proclamation in Luke 2:11 (cf. Lk 1:47) and the significance attached to Jesus' name in Matthew 1:21 ("he will save his people from their sins").

In Philippians 3:20 savior is used in an eschatological* context. Paul reminds the Philippian believers that their primary citizenship* is in heaven,* from which they "await a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ" (cf. 1 Thess 1:10). His coming will be accompanied by the glorious transformation of the believers' "body* of humiliation" to be conformed to the "body of his glory," a working of the same power by which he subjects all things to himself (Phil 3:21; cf. Phil 2:9-11). The eschatological context of the title squares with Paul's use of the term *salvation to refer to the completion of God's saving work in the end. From a critical perspective, this is the only use of savior in the generally acknowledged Pauline letters. And some have argued that the use of savior in Philippians 3:20 is due to Paul's use of pre-Pauline tradition at this point (see commentaries) or that Paul, having developed the metaphor of earthly and heavenly citizenship, or commonwealth (politeuma), wishes to contrast Christ the coming heavenly Savior with the earthly emperor as "savior."

Ephesians 5:23-32 develops the relationship of Christ to the church as the body of Christ (see Body of Christ). Paul discusses the way husbands should love and cherish their wives (Eph 5:25-32) by analogy with Christ, who is head* of the church* and—he adds—"is himself the Savior of the body" (Eph 5:23).

The significance of Christ as "Savior of the body" seems clear enough: it is summed up in his loving death for the church, his cleansing it from sin (Eph 5:26), his presenting it spotless to God (Eph 5:27) and his providing for its welfare (Eph 5:29). Here the Savior's work is seen as realized eschatology.* Ephesians 5:23-32 paints a picture of Christ as Savior that includes both the ideas of salvation from destruction, sin and death, and of protection and provision. But a point of comparison may be drawn between Ephesians 5:23 and Philippians 3:20: in both contexts the theme of subjection appears with the title Savior, as does the title "Lord" (cf. Phil 3:20; Eph 5:22) In Philippians 3:21 his future action on behalf of believers will be by the same power* with which he subjected "all things"; in Ephesians 5:24 the church is subjected to Christ, a theme reminiscent of Ephesians 1:22-23, where the church is the manifestation of the future subjection of all things to Christ.

The future benefits of the Lord Jesus as Savior described in Philippians 3:20 are given a predominantly present-tense focus in Ephesians 5:23, where the emphasis lies on Christ the Savior's provision and protection.

3. Savior in the Pastorals.

There is a notable shift from the rare appearance of sōtēr outside the Pastorals* to ten occurrences within the Pastorals. Six of these instances refer to God as Savior—three in 1 Timothy (1 Tim 1:1; 2:3; 4:10) and three in Titus (Tit 1:3; 2:10; 3:4). Jesus Christ also is called "Savior" (2 Tim 1:10), and sometimes both God and Christ are referred to as Savior in close proximity to each other (i.e., the frequent use of God as "Savior," especially as "Savior of all people," in the Pastorals: 2 Tim 1:3, 4; 2:10, 13; 3:4, 6). Foerster is representative of those who understand this emphasis on the "Savior of all people" against the backdrop of an emerging Gnosticism* that claimed that salvation was only for the few (Foerster, 1017). However, the presence of full-blown Gnosticism during the NT period has been widely questioned.

A more plausible alternative is to understand the designation of God as Savior as derived from the OT (see 1 above; see Fee). The expression, "God our Savior," occurs five times in the Pastorals (1 Tim 1:1; 2:3; Tit 1:3; 2:10; 3:4). The repeated use of "our" seems to indicate an appropriation of OT language to speak of God's spiritual deliverance of and provision for Christians. But the formulation may intentionally provide a counterpoint to the growing influence of the emperor cult.

God is also called "the Savior of all people" (sōtēr pantōn anthrōpōn) in 1 Timothy 4:10 (cf. Tit 2:10-11). Such a designation, however, is not intended to communicate a universalism* in which all people will ultimately be saved. Rather, this expression is tempered by the statement that God as sōtēr "desires (thelei) all people to be saved" through Jesus Christ (1 Tim 2:3-4). Such salvation is freely offered to all through the channel of preaching (Tit 1:3), but it is only actualized fully in the lives of those who believe (1 Tim 4:10). God's grace as Savior has been displayed to all people (Tit 2:10-11), and spiritual renewal and justification come only through "Jesus Christ as Savior" (Tit 3:6).

Jesus Christ is also called "our Savior" in Titus 1:4, 3:6; 2 Timothy 1:10, and probably in Titus 2:13 (cf. Schneider and Brown, 220). Because of the appearance (epiphaneia) of Christ as Savior in history (2 Tim 1:10), God's grace is made available through the apostolic gospel* (2 Tim 1:9-11). Christ as Savior is likewise involved in the application of divine saving grace* in the believer's rebirth and justification (Tit 3:4-7). The future appearing (epiphaneia) of Jesus as Savior is the Christian's "blessed hope*" and generates a lifestyle of godly gratitude (2 Tim 2:11-14). Thus the references to Christ as Savior in the Pastorals can speak of the past, present and future of God's salvation in Christ (cf. Eph 5:23; Phil 3:20; cf. Acts 13:23).

That God and Christ are both seen as sōtēr and closely interrelated has significance for the developing theological perspective in the Pauline literature and the entire NT. In Titus 1:3-4 "God our Savior" (Tit 1:3) is closely followed by a reference to "God the Father and Christ Jesus our Savior" (Tit 1:4 NIV). In Titus 3:4-6 "the love of God our Savior" (Tit 3:4) becomes a concrete reality in the Christian's life (Tit 3:5) "through Jesus Christ our Savior" (Tit 3:6). Titus 2:13 even appears to equate God and Savior with Jesus Christ (see Harris; Schneider and Brown, 220; see God). Certainly there is no developed doctrine here, but the delicate balance of the distinction between persons (Tit 1:4) and roles (Tit 3:4-6), and the apparent equality of God and Christ as Savior (Tit 1:3-4; 3:4, 6) and Deity (Tit 2:13) may be seen as a further development of the Pauline ascription of the attributes of God to Christ (see Christology; God).

See also CHRISTOLOGY; EMPERORS, ROMAN; GOD; LORD; RELIGIONS, GRECO-ROMAN; SALVATION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. W. Bousset, Kyrios Christos (Nashville: Abingdon, 1970) 310-17; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament (2 vols.; New York: Scribners, 1951, 1955) 2.292-306; J.-F. Collange, The Epistle of St. Paul to the Philippians (London: Epworth, 1979); O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament (rev. ed.; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1963) 238-45; M. Dibelius and H. Conzelmann, The Pastoral Epistles (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977) 100-103; G. D. Fee, 1, 2 Timothy, Titus (GNC; San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1984); W. Foerster and G. Fohrer, "σώζω κτλ," TDNT VII.965-1024; R. H. Fuller, The Titles of Jesus in Early Christology (London: Lutterworth, 1969); M. J. Harris, Jesus as God: The NT Use of Theos in Reference to Jesus (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1992); G. F. Hawthorne, Philippians (WBC 43; Waco: Word, 1983); A. D. Nock, Early Gentile Christianity and Its Hellenistic Background (New York: Harper & Row, 1964 [1928]) 35-44; J. Schneider and C. Brown, "Savior," NIDNTT 3.219-23; V. Taylor, The Names of Jesus (London: Macmillan, 1953); P. Wendland, "Σωτήρ," ZNW 5 (1904) 335-53.

A. B. Luter, Jr.

SCHOOL OF TYRANNUS. See EPHESUS.

SEA TRAVEL. See TRAVEL IN THE ROMAN WORLD.

SEED. See ABRAHAM.

SELF. See PSYCHOLOGY.

SENDING. See CHRISTOLOGY; SON OF GOD; WISDOM.

SERVANT, SERVICE

Various types of service are mentioned in Paul's letters: the service rendered by slaves; the service of Paul, his colleagues and believers generally, and also of those appointed to fulfill special functions within the Christian communities; the service rendered by governing authorities.

1. Serving as a Slave
2. Servants of God

1. Serving as a Slave.

In the Pauline letters slavery* terminology (doulos, douleuō) is used only of those who are slaves of human masters and in reference to Paul's own service as an apostle.* (There is only one exception to this rule: 2 Tim 2:24, which says the Lord's slave must not be quarrelsome, but kindly to all and an apt teacher.)

1.1. Slaves of Human Masters. Paul offers no theological justification for slavery in principle; on the contrary, he instructs believers not to become slaves by selling themselves into slavery (1 Cor 7:23), and (on one reading of 1 Cor 7:21; the majority understand the incomplete Pauline sentence, "But if you are able even to become free make the most of _____," to be supplied with a word like "your freedom"; see Bartchy, Trummer) encourages those who are slaves to obtain their freedom if they can. However, he recognizes that some of those to whom he writes must serve as slaves, and to these he offers encouragement and gives exhortation.

Paul encourages believing slaves to think of themselves as the Lord's freed persons, just as those who were free when they became believers are now

Christ's slaves (1 Cor 7:22). He reminds Philemon* that his runaway slave, Onesimus, having become a believer, is no longer just a slave but also a brother in Christ (Philem 16). He assures slaves that by serving their human masters they serve Christ* and that they will receive their reward* (Eph 6:8; Col 3:24). In serving their human masters well they do the will of God (Eph 6:5-8) and adorn the gospel* (Tit 2:9-10).

1.2. Paul as a Slave. Paul frequently refers to himself as a slave (doulos) of Christ (Rom 1:1; Gal 1:10; Phil 1:1; cf. Tit 1:1). In the LXX doulos is used not only to denote slaves of human masters, but also to describe kings and prophets as servants of the Lord. Therefore, Paul's description of himself as a slave of Christ probably has a double meaning: it reflects not only his understanding of the serving nature of his apostolate, but also his privileged status as an apostle* (see Sass). Paul speaks of himself as the slave of his converts (2 Cor 4:5) and of those to whom he preached the gospel (1 Cor 9:19), but they were not his masters. He acknowledged only one master, Christ, and he served others for his sake (2 Cor 4:5).

2. Servants of God.

In his letters Paul refers to various forms of service to God rendered by different people. In describing these forms of service he does not use the doulos word group. For the most part he uses two other word groups (diakonos, diakoneō, diakonia and leitourgos, leitourgeō, leitourgia).

2.1. Paul and His Colleagues as Servants. People such as Apollos, Archippus, Epaphras, Phoebe, Stephanus, Timothy and Tychicus are mentioned as those who, like Paul, labor in the service of God (see Coworkers). In some cases the nature of their service is unspecified (Eph 6:21; Col 1:7; 4:17), while in others it is clear what is involved, activities such as gospel ministry* (Phil 2:22; Col 4:10-11) and meeting the needs of Paul himself (Phil 2:25, 30, used of Epaphroditus of Philippi).

Paul speaks of himself as a servant (diakonos) of Christ (1 Cor 3:5; 2 Cor 11:23). His service consisted primarily of the ministry of the gospel to the Gentiles* (Rom 1:5; 11:13; 15:16). It was a ministry of the new covenant,* of the Spirit and justification* (2 Cor 3:7-9), through which people were brought to faith* in Christ (1 Cor 3:5). Alongside this gospel service Paul involved himself deeply in the ministry of relieving the needs of the poor believers in Jerusalem (see 2.4 below).

Paul never, in his own writings, identifies himself explicitly with the Isaianic Servant of the Lord (only in Acts 13:47); like others in the primitive church Paul seems to have identified the Isaianic Servant christologically* (Rom 4:25/Is 53:4-5; Rom 5:19/Is 53:11). However, there are hints in his writings (Rom 15:21/Is 52:15; Gal 1:15/Is 49:1; Phil 2:16/Is 49:4) that he understood the Isaianic Servant's sufferings to have prefigured his own sufferings as well as Christ's.

2.2. Believers as Servants. The apostle speaks of believers generally as servants of God. They perform various functions in accordance with the gifts each one has received from God (Rom 12:4-8; 1 Cor 12:4-6), and it is through their service that the church is enabled to grow in maturity (Eph 4:7-16; Col 2:18-19). Seeing that all believers (Jews as well as Gentiles) are servants of God, no one is to pass judgment upon another, remembering that it is before their own Lord that each servant (oiketēs) stands or falls (Rom 14:4).

2.3. Deacons. In several places in the Pauline letters the word diakonos is used of individuals who exercise a special function within the church. Phoebe is described as a deacon (servant) of the church in Cenchreae in Romans 16:1. Deacons (servants) are included among the addressees of the letter to the Philippians (1:1), and 1 Timothy 3:8-13 includes detailed prerequisites for those who might be appointed as deacons (servants), stating that those who serve well in this capacity gain a good standing for themselves and great boldness in the Lord. However, the Pauline letters give no indication concerning the exact nature of the service to be rendered by these appointees (see Church Order).

2.4. The Collection as Service. Paul devoted a large portion of his time and energy, and much space in his letters, to one particular piece of service: arranging the collection of contributions from his Gentile churches to relieve the need of poor Jewish believers in Jerusalem (Rom 15:25-32; 1 Cor 16:1-4; 2 Cor 8—9; Gal 2:10). This service was intended not only for the relief of need, but also as a recognition of the Gentile believers' indebtedness to Jewish believers (Rom 15:27). The contributions were also to be proof of the genuineness of the faith of the Gentiles, which would result in much thanksgiving to God (2 Cor 9:13-14). The acceptance of the collection by the Jewish believers in Jerusalem would also constitute a recognition on their part of the validity of Paul's mission* (cf. Rom 15:30-31; see Collection for the Saints).

2.5. The State as Servant. In Romans 13 Paul describes governing authorities as God's servants for good. They have been instituted by him (Rom 13:1). They approve those who do good and execute God's wrath* upon those who do evil (Rom 13:3-4). Because they are God's servants, Paul says, believers should pay them the taxes that are due (Rom 13:6-7; see Civil Authority).

See also APOSTLE; LORD; MINISTRY; SLAVE, SLAVERY; SUFFERING.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. S. S. Bartchy, MALLON CHRESAI: First-Century Slavery and the Interpretation of 1 Corinthians 7:21 (SBLDS 11; Missoula: Scholars, 1973); W. Beyer, "διακονέω κτλ," TDNT II. 81-93; D. Georgi, The Opponents of Paul in Second Corinthians (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); E. Kamlah, "Wie Beurteilt Paulus sein Leiden?" ZNW 54 (1963) 217-32; C. G. Kruse, New Testament Models for Ministry: Jesus and Paul (Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 1985); D. B. Martin, Slavery as Salvation: The Metaphor of Slavery in Pauline Christianity (New Haven: Yale University, 1990); R. Meyer and H. Strathmann, "λειτουργέω κτλ," TDNT IV.215-31; G. Sass, "Zur Bedeutung von δοῦλος bei Paulus," ZNW 40 (1941) 24-32; J. E. Stambaugh, "Social Relations in the City of the Early Principate: State of Research," (SBLSP 19; Chico, CA: Scholars, 1980) 75-99; D. M. Stanley, "The Theme of the Servant of Yahweh in Primitive Christian Soteriology, and Its Transposition by St Paul," CBQ 16 (1954) 385-425; P. Trummer, "Die Chance der Freiheit: Zur Interpretation des mallon chresai," Bib 56 (1975) 344-68.

C. G. Kruse

SERVICE. See SERVANT, SERVICE.

SEXUAL ETHICS. See SEXUALITY, SEXUAL ETHICS.

SEXUALITY, SEXUAL ETHICS

1. Paul's Experience
2. Basic Instruction
3. Responding to Problems
4. Conclusions

1. Paul's Experience.

Of Paul's own sexual experience little is known. It has been argued (e.g., by R. H. Gundry), on the assumption that Romans 7:7-25 is to be read autobiographically, that in Romans 7:7-8 Paul recalls the awakening of his sexual desire at the onset of puberty. When, as a young teenager, Paul assumed personal responsibility to keep God's Law* (with or without the formality of the later ceremony of bar-mitzvah), it was the tenth commandment that sin seized to stir up sexual lust. But both a general and a particular uncertainty attend this interpretation: in general, an uncertainty whether Romans 7:7-25 should be viewed as Paul's own story, and in particular, an uncertainty whether the "coveting" (NIV) of verses 7-8 has a sexual force.

Subsequently all we know is that Paul was single (1 Cor 7:7-8), but whether as a widower (cf. 1 Cor 9:5) or as one who never married or even as one whose wife left him on his conversion cannot be ascertained. He recognized God's gift (charisma) in enabling him to remain single, without suffering from inordinate sexual desire (1 Cor 7:9).

2. Basic Instruction.

Paul never addressed the subject of human sexuality in a systematic manner, but said much about it in response to particular questions. Nevertheless, 1 Thessalonians 4:1-8 suggests that his basic teaching to a community of new converts covered sexual behavior. This was only to be expected in the Greco-Roman world where various forms of sexual license were common. Paul now reminds the Christians at Thessalonica that God's will for their sanctification required abstinence from porneia (1 Thess 4:3, "sexual immorality" NIV). This Greek word and its cognates as used by Paul denote any kind of illegitimate—extramarital and unnatural—sexual intercourse or relationship. The Thessalonians must not yield to their sexual passions like Gentiles* ignorant of God* (1 Thess 4:4-5), but control their bodies (or possibly, sexual organs) or keep to or acquire their own wives, as 1 Thessalonians 4:4 may be variously interpreted. 1 Thessalonians 4:6 ("in this matter no one should wrong his brother") may suggest that adultery was particularly in view.

3. Responding to Problems.

3.1. Avoiding* Porneia. The greater frequency of references to sexual issues in Paul than in the Gospels reflects the laxer sexual mores of Hellenistic society. Paul stresses the incompatibility between a life of sexual license and the kingdom* of God: "no pornos ('immoral') or impure person . . . has any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God" (Eph 5:5). Some of the Christians at Corinth, before being "washed, sanctified and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God," had been pornoi (prostitutes?), adulterers and homosexually active (1 Cor 6:9-11; see Homosexuality). The inclusion of idolaters among these different sexual offenders (1 Cor 6:9) indicates the gravity of their sinfulness (see Sin). Foremost among "the acts of the sinful nature" (see Flesh) are "porneia ('sexual immorality'), impurity and debauchery" (Gal 5:19; cf. 1 Cor 10:8). It was chiefly in the disordered sexual vices of the Gentile world that Paul discerned God's judgment* on the godless (Rom 1:18-27; see Wrath).

Paul is consequently keenly concerned that the Christian congregations be kept free of such corruptions: "among you there must not be even a hint of sexual immorality (porneia), or of any kind of impurity, or of greed, because these are improper for God's holy people" (Eph 5:3). Paul is outraged that the Corinthian church is tolerating, rather than disciplining, a member indulging in incest with his father's wife (probably not the man's own mother, but his stepmother or his father's divorced or widowed wife. But the brevity of the reference counts against Countryman's view that Paul's interest lay chiefly in the breaching of family hierarchy.) Such porneia was not even countenanced among Gentiles (1 Cor 5:1-2). The offender must be expelled (1 Cor 5:11-13), which meant being handed over to Satan* for the purging of his "sinful nature" (NIV; sarx, 1 Cor 5:5; see Discipline). Paul's language betokens the gravity of such lawless sexuality—and of the Corinthians' vaunted Christian freedom.* Both were inconsistent with their new creation* in Christ* (1 Cor 5:6-8). 2 Corinthians 12:21 reveals Paul's persisting fear that on returning to Corinth he will find the sexually licentious still impenitent.

Less flagrant sexual problems at Corinth than incest evoked Paul's most extended discussions of sexuality. It appears that the Corinthians' distorted eschatology*—which had them exulting prematurely in the final completeness of salvation* here and now (cf. 1 Cor 4:8)—led some to be libertine, wielding the slogan "everything is permissible for me" (1 Cor 6:12), and others to be ascetic, under the banner "it is good for a man not to have sexual relations with a woman" (1 Cor 7:1 NIV margin). In meeting these challenges, of which the ascetic party seems to have been by far the stronger, Paul lays the groundwork for a suggestive and flexible Christian sexuality.

3.2. Sex, Self and Christ. For Paul sexual intercourse is not on a par with the satisfying of other natural appetites like eating. To that extent his approach is as inimical to the post-Christian West's obsession with unbridled sexual gratification as it was to Corinthian licentiousness. Sexual intercourse is uniquely expressive of our whole being. "All other sins a person commits are outside his body, but he who sins sexually sins against his own body" (1 Cor 6:18). To deal with a blatantly intolerable perversion of Christian freedom (unlike the subtler ascetic alternative), Paul applies his richly articulated concept of "body"* (sōma), which may mean—almost at one and the same time—a person's physical nature ("the body is not meant for sexual license," 1 Cor 6:13), the whole human self ("your bodies are members of Christ himself," 1 Cor 6:15; "your body is a temple* of the Holy Spirit," 1 Cor 6:19) and the church as Christ's body. According to Paul, "there is clearly something wrong in having both an intimate relationship with Christ as a member of his body and also a relationship which is intimate in another sense with a prostitute, especially if she is a temple prostitute" (Whiteley, 215). Abusing the body in this way conflicts also with its destiny to be raised from the dead (1 Cor 6:13-15; see Resurrection).

Undergirding such teaching lies Paul's distinctive anthropology, in which the flesh,* or body, is no mere external expression or instrument of the true person that resides in some inner essence (see Psychology). For Paul it is truer to say that a human being is a body rather than has a body. In the Corinthian context this is a way of speaking about a Christian both as a sexual being and as a being "in Christ,"* a member of his church-body. Hence, when Paul declares porneia to be uniquely a sin against our own body (1 Cor 6:18), he is not referring merely to the misuse of our sexual organs. Nor is he distinguishing sexual sins on the grounds that drunkenness or gluttony, for example, involve things outside the body—drink and food in this case. He may be picking up a notion advanced by some libertine Corinthians, that nothing one does sexually or physically can touch the inner citadel of the soul. (Such sentiments are found among later Christian gnostics.*) For Paul nothing could be further from the truth. Because sexual activity embodies the whole person, sinful union with a prostitute—or adultery or other extramarital intercourse—desecrates a Christian's bodily union with Christ. "The association between Christ and the believer is regarded as just as close and physical as that between the two partners in the sex act" (Schweizer, 1065).

3.3. Sex in Relationship. Paul cites Genesis 2:24 ("the two will become one flesh") to demonstrate what is involved in the seemingly casual one-night stand with another woman; you become one body with her (1 Cor 6:16; note that Paul substitutes his own favorite sōma for the Septuagint's sarx). It is the peculiar dignity of the one-flesh union of heterosexual marriage,* on the other hand, that not only is it quite compatible with spiritual union with the Lord (1 Cor 6:17), but also it expresses the mystērion ("mystery"*) of the union between Christ and his church (Eph 5:31-32; 2 Cor 11:2). The analogy covers not merely reciprocal mutual love, respect and care but the union itself. A couple's becoming "one flesh," which entails sexual congress whatever else it may entail, is comparable to the bonding between Christ and believers. They become members, limbs, of his body, just as a husband loving his wife loves his own body, his own self (Eph 5:28-30). There is a close affinity between the teaching of 1 Corinthians 6—7 and Ephesians 5.

3.4. The Goodness of Sex-in-Marriage. But if 1 Corinthians 6 responds to an antinomian "permissiveness" current in Corinthian Christianity, 1 Corinthians 7 deals with issues reflecting a more ascetic streak. At the outset Paul cites a statement from the Corinthians' letter (so most commentators agree), "It is good for a man not to touch a woman" (1 Cor 7:1; NIV margin, "not to have sexual relations with." See Col 2:21-23 for a possible parallel.)

The teaching this evokes from Paul is concerned solely with marriage and sexual relations within marriage. The assertion Paul quotes almost certainly expresses the conviction of some Corinthian Christians that sexual activity between male and female, even if married (hence NIV's rendering "good . . . not to marry," 1 Cor 7:1, is misleading), had no place in the Christian's life. (Perhaps teaching such as 1 Cor 6:15-16 had been misunderstood as warranting this conclusion. See also 1 Tim 4:1-5 for a reaffirmation of God's good creation of marriage.) The fact that Paul proceeds to speak only about marriage is highly significant: for him there is no acceptable context for sex except within marriage. Yet the issue is not marriage as such but sexual intercourse—or perhaps better still, marriage as inseparably entailing sexual relations.

Paul neither wholly rejects nor wholly endorses the Corinthians' sentiment (as with "everything is permissible for me" at 1 Cor 6:12 ; cf. 10:23). Yet his response is more "no, although" than "yes, but." It presents an elucidation of marital sexuality that is principled, yet nuanced and realistic.

Marriage (i.e., monogamy) is needed and right because porneia as an outlet for sexuality is intolerable (1 Cor 7:2). The implication is clear: the satisfying of sexual desires is not wrong, and marriage is its appointed setting. (The parallels with 1 Thess 4:3-5 exclude the reduction of marriage to merely a cover for uncontrolled sexual gratification.) Moreover, sex is not a dispensable dimension of marriage; like responsible love* and respect (cf. above on Eph 5), it is one of the mutual obligations of husband to wife and wife to husband (1 Cor 7:3). For within marriage neither partner retains sole ownership of his or her own body (1 Cor 7:4). Sex within marriage must exemplify what Paul teaches later in 1 Corinthians: "In the Lord, however, woman is not independent of man, nor is man independent of woman" (1 Cor 11:11; see Man and Woman).

The parity of authority and duty in conjugal sexual relations that Paul here ascribes to husband and wife alike is one fulfillment of Galatians 3:26-28: "You are all children of God, . . . for all of you who were baptized into Christ have clothed yourself with Christ. There is neither . . . male nor female, for you are all one in Christ Jesus." With the implications of this new parity between men and women in Christ for spheres such as church ministry or public service we are not here concerned. If Paul displays its outworking in Christian marriage in 1 Corinthians 7:2-5, 32-34, it is also possible that a radical exaggeration of it in asexual terms may be partly responsible for the ascetic refusal of sexuality that Paul counters in this chapter. We will return to this possibility.

3.5. A Place for Abstinence. From the perspective established by Paul in 1 Corinthians 7:2-4, the issue is no longer "is sex (within marriage) ever good?" but "when, if ever, is abstinence from sex within marriage right?" Paul sets out three criteria: (1) mutual consent, (2) for a limited time only, and (3) for religious purposes (1 Cor 7:5). And even this provision for abstinence is a concession—for verse 7 (Paul's recognition that singleness—involving abstinence—is possible by divine gift alone) suggests that the "concession" of verse 6 refers to verse 5, and not to verse 2-4. The underlying assumption is that by divine appointment marriage and sexual relations go together, as do singleness and abstinence from sex; what God has joined together, humans should not separate. Hence the concessionary character of verse 5, perhaps with the Corinthian ascetics particularly in mind.

The teaching of this chapter so far obviously disallows an understanding of sexual intercourse as intended solely for procreation. Even if artificial means of contraception are not in view, the accent falls unambiguously on sexual relations as expressive of selfless mutuality between married partners, of their belonging in the Lord to each other, not to him- or herself.

1 Corinthians 7:8-9 adds little to the picture painted so far. For reasons that Paul will spell out later, at 1 Corinthians 7:29-35, his preference is for the unmarried and widowed to remain so, like himself. But for those who lack the charisma of sex-free singleness, it is much better to marry than be consumed with inward desire—even, it seems, if that desire is controlled and not given vent in porneia. It is important to record that Paul is not ranking celibacy/virginity above marriage on some absolute scale. He is asserting that the sexless life is "good" only for those endowed with God's charisma, in the face of clamor at Corinth to make it a universal rule, with Paul's own example perhaps cited in its favor. It seems to be assumed that marriage-and-sex is "good" for all others—who apparently need no charisma.

3.6. Eschatological Perspectives. The "virgins" of 1 Corinthians 7:25 appear to be single women, and perhaps men also, who have had no sexual experience. The advice Paul gives them is consistent with what he has already taught in the letter. Because of the critical situation (the phrase in 1 Cor 7:26 seems to be clarified by verse 29a), the advantages of remaining single are obvious. Paul cites the matter-of-fact realities of married life, again, as in 1 Corinthians 7:3-4, maintaining scrupulously the parity of male and female in marriage (1 Cor 7:32-34).

The counsel of 1 Corinthians 7:29, "From now on those who have wives should live as if they have none," cannot override 1 Corinthians 7:2-5. 1 Corinthians 7:31 ("this world in its present form is passing away") combined with verse 29a ("the time is short") may suggest a reminder that marriage belongs to this order alone (cf. Mk 12:25). In the light of this eschatological perspective, spouses are called, not to sexual abstinence, but to "live in a right way in undivided devotion to the Lord" (1 Cor 7:35), to "use the things of the world [including marriage], as if not engrossed in them" (1 Cor 7:31).

The possibility was raised above that an extreme ascetic (encratite, perhaps) interpretation of "neither male nor female in Christ Jesus" (cf. Gal 3:28) may have been influential at Corinth. If, as commentators seem generally agreed, a major root of the Corinthian Christians' troubles lay in their believing that the age to come had already been consummated, and in their behaving accordingly, they—or at least the more ascetic among them—may have anticipated the fulfillment of Mark 12:25 (par. Lk 20:34-36: no marital relations in heaven; we may leave aside the question of the precise import of Jesus' words) and misrepresented Paul's teaching (cf. Gal 3:28) in support. The life of the world to come, according to such a standpoint, would be not only marriageless but even free of gender, and hence sexual, distinctions. But there is no basis in Paul or elsewhere in the NT for linking the expectation of Mark 12:25 with Galatians 3:28, which denotes parity of acceptance and status before God. It carries no ontological force and does not erode the distinctive gender-based sexual natures of male and female. (These sexual natures, to be sure, must in turn be distinguished from cultural developments or expressions of their differentiation. Does the omission of "neither male nor female" in the parallels to Galatians 3:28 at 1 Corinthians 12:13 and Colossians 3:11 suggest that it had been peculiarly prone to misunderstanding? Since 1 Corinthians 7:17-24 also deals with the other two pairs of Galatians 3:28—Jew and Greek, slave and free—the chapter may be viewed as clarifying, and correcting misreadings of, what it affirms.) There are no Pauline or NT grounds for holding that the destiny of redeemed humanity is to be androgynous, unisex, sexually undifferentiated. Paul goes no further than 1 Corinthians 7:29, which as we have seen is not concerned with abstinence from sex in marriage.

1 Corinthians 7:36-38 still finds commentators divided. The NIV rendering cuts various exegetical knots by opting for what seems, all things considered, the most plausible interpretation. (As far as this article is concerned, the issues are little different if the man is not a fiancé but a father. 1 Corinthians 7:2-5 rules out the interpretation that identifies the present relationship between the two as a "spiritual [i.e., sexless] marriage.") Among the questions the Corinthian letter had posed about "virgins" was the wisdom of engaged couples proceeding to get married. We note the implication of the description of the fiancée as "his virgin"; it is assumed (and no doubt the ascetics' interest hinges on this) that an engaged woman is a virgin until married. Again Paul has to emphasize that those who marry commit no sin (1 Cor 7:36; cf. 1 Cor 7:28), but in present circumstances there is advantage in not going through with the marriage (1 Cor 7:38-39; 7:8, 26, 28-35)—if, that is, they have the charisma to refrain.

4. Conclusions.

The prevalent sexual license of Western society makes Paul's teaching both peculiarly relevant—for it was addressed to Christians in a world in this respect not too dissimilar to ours—and painfully sharp. He allows no compromise of the restriction of sexual activity to (heterosexual) monogamous marriage. Such an ethic must seem almost utopian to our sex-besotted age, in which it appears at times that one's identity is made to reside in one's sexual organs and their untrammeled exercise. Paul espouses an altogether higher view of sex that could never allow it to be casual or promiscuous, simply because it is an act uniquely expressive of one's whole being. From a Pauline perspective a cavalier freedom in sexual behavior can be bought only at the cost of trivializing the human person. His emphasis on mutuality, including sexual mutuality, within marriage—so marked an advance on the practice and precept of contemporary Hellenism* and Judaism—is attractive in a day of increasing sexual violence and exaggerated insistence on individual sexual rights.

And if for Paul the eschatological urgency accentuated the advantages in remaining unmarried—but only with God's enabling charisma—he provides an example of a teacher on sexuality sensitive to differences of circumstances and persons. If his situation heightened the note of sexual discipline, it is arguable that it was in every way healthier—spiritually, psychologically, physically—than alternatives offered and promoted today.

See also BODY; ETHICS; FLESH; HOMOSEXUALITY; MAN AND WOMAN; MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE, ADULTERY AND INCEST.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. Baltensweiler, "ἐνκράτεια," NIDNTT 1.494-97; C. K. Barrett, The First Epistle to the Corinthians (HNTC; New York: Harper & Row, 1968); J. Calvin, The First Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1960); D. R. Cartlidge, "1 Corinthians 7 as a Foundation for a Christian Sex Ethic," JR 55 (1975) 220-34; L. W. Countryman, Dirt, Greed and Sex: Sexual Ethics in the New Testament and Their Implications for Today (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); G. D. Fee, The First Epistle to the Corinthians (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987); V. P. Furnish, The Moral Teaching of Paul (Nashville: Abingdon, 1979) 30-51; R. H. Gundry, "The Moral Frustration of Paul Before His Conversion: Sexual Lust in Romans 7:7-25," in Pauline Studies: Essays Presented to Professor F. F. Bruce on His 70th Birthday, ed. D. A. Hagner and M. J. Harris (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1980) 228-45; W. Günther et al., "Marriage, etc.," NIDNTT 2.575-90; F. Hauck and S. Schulz, "πόρνη κτλ," TDNT VI.579-95; B. Malina, "Does Πορνεία mean Fornication?," NovT 14 (1972) 10-17; W. E. Phipps, "Is Paul's Attitude Toward Sexual Relations Contained in 1 Cor. 7.1?" NTS 28 (1982) 125-31; H. Reisser, "πορνεύω," NIDNTT 1.497-501; E. Schweizer and F. Baumgärtel, "σῶμα κτλ," TDNT VII.1024-94; D. E. H. Whiteley, The Theology of St. Paul (2d ed.; Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 1974).

D. F. Wright

SHARING. See FELLOWSHIP, COMMUNION, SHARING; LORD'S SUPPER.

SIGNS, WONDERS, MIRACLES

In the early church Paul had a reputation as an exorcist and healer, as well as being involved in miracles. Paul's testimony is that miracles occurred wherever he proclaimed the good news and that they remained essential to the life of the church.

1. Signs and Wonders
2. Miracles in Paul's Mission
3. Signs of an Apostle
4. The Gift of Miracles
5. Miracles of Paul in Acts

1. Signs and Wonders.

For Greek writers a "sign" (sēmeion) could be, among other things, a ship's ensign (Euripides Iphigeneia at Aulis 253), a symptom of sickness (Philo Det. Pot. Ins. 43) or something in which a god was understood to communicate to a person (Plutarch Alex. 25.1). In the LXX sēmeion is almost always used of God showing himself to be the Almighty and Israel to be his chosen people through the events associated with Moses leading the Israelites out of Egypt (e.g., Deut 26:8; Jer 32:20-21; cf. Philo Vit. Mos. 1.210; Josephus Ant. 2.12.3—2.13.1 §§274-80).

A "wonder" (teras) was that which caused fear and trembling in people and indicated the proximity of and human dependence on the divine (Homer Iliad 4.408; Josephus J.W. 4.5.5 §287). For Philo and Josephus wonders, especially those performed by Moses, assisted those who witnessed them in knowing God's sovereignty (e.g., Philo Vit. Mos. 1.90, 95; Josephus Ant. 2.13.3 §§286-87). An explanation of a wonder was required to provide correct insight (Philo Agric. 96; Josephus J.W. 6.5.3-4 §§288-310), for charlatans could also perform wonders and mislead people (Josephus Ant. 20.8.6 168). In the LXX teras almost always translates môp̄ēṯ which meant something extraordinary from God which demanded attention (e.g., Ex 7:9; 1 Kings 13:1-5; Ezek 12:1-16) and sometimes revealed God's will (e.g., Ex 7:4). Teras became rare in Greek and Jewish literature in the NT period and the word does not occur in the NT without sēmeion. In the NT dynamis ("power") seems to replace teras, perhaps in order not to compromise the important element of autonomy in the miraculous activity of Jesus and the early Christians (cf. e.g., Lk 24:19; see 4 below).

The phrase "signs and wonders" (sēmeia kai terata) is first known in Polybius (Hist. 3.112.18) and refers to the superstitious rites of the Romans (cf. Plutarch Alex. 75:1). Plutarch uses the words synonymously (Plutarch Mor. 2.149C; cf. Josephus Ant. 10.2.1 §28). In the LXX the phrase is generally confined to the wonders associated with Moses' leading God's people to freedom, and Philo only takes up the phrase as a traditional description of miracles in Egypt (e.g., Spec. Leg. 2.218). Josephus uses the phrase once of God warning and directing his people and once of imposters deceiving people ("wonders and signs," Ant. 20.8.6 §168). He more often used "signs" for these latter events (e.g., Ant. 2.12.3 §274), probably to dissociate the work of Moses from the suspicion of magic (cf. Ant. 2.13.3 §284).

2. Miracles in Paul's Mission.

In light of the strong association between "signs and wonders" and the miracle stories of the Exodus tradition, the "signs and wonders" performed by Paul to win the Gentiles* (Rom 15:19) cannot refer only to Paul's sufferings,* nor can they be of merely secondary importance to him (as Käsemann maintains). Rather, as reluctant as Paul was to draw attention to his miracles in the way his opponents* did (1 Cor 1:22; 2 Cor 12:12), "signs and wonders" were the miracles he performed empowered by the Spirit* and integrally associated with his preaching to form part of the new Exodus to the freedom possible in the age of Christ. Thus the gospel* is, in part, the miracles that were performed (cf. Rom 15:18-19; 1 Thess 1:5).

The function of miracles in Paul's mission can be seen in, for instance, 1 Corinthians 2:1-5 where Paul explains that while he came to the Corinthians in weakness,* fear* and trembling, without lofty words or wisdom* to proclaim only Jesus Christ and him crucified,* his message came in the "demonstration" (apodeixis, only here in the NT) of Spirit and power, in order that their faith* would rest not in human wisdom but in the power* of God.* In Greek rhetoric an apodeixis was a technical word for a compelling conclusion to be drawn from a reasoned argument (e.g., Plato Tim. 40E; 4 Macc 3:19). However, the compelling proof of Paul's message was not in his rhetoric* but in the demonstrations "of Spirit and of power" (1 Cor 2:4). As "Spirit" and "power" can be interchangeable in Paul's writing (cf. Rom 15:13, 19; 1 Thess 1:5), both words here are likely to signify the same reality. In contrasting his weakness, fear and spoken word with the demonstration of the gospel, Paul is probably referring not only to the Corinthians' encounter with God's power to transform their lives in conversion, including the reception of the Spirit accompanied by spiritual gifts, but also to the miracles involved in his mission as the demonstration or proof of his gospel (cf. 2 Cor 12:9-10; 1 Thess 1:9). For in Romans 15:19 the power of the Holy Spirit is paralleled with the power of signs and wonders, and when the Galatians received Paul's message they experienced the gift* of the Spirit and miracles (dynameis, Gal 3:5; see 4 below). Also, in 1 Thessalonians 1:5, perhaps defending himself against a charge of bringing a message without demonstrating its efficacy, Paul says that his gospel came to them not only in word but also in power and in the Holy Spirit and in full conviction or assurance (en plērophoria pollē; cf. Rom 4:21; 1 Clem. 42.3) showing he considered his mission to involve not only proclamation, but also miracles and the inward conviction produced by the Holy Spirit.

3. Signs of an Apostle.

Paul's opponents may have denied he was able to perform miracles (cf. 2 Cor 10:1, 10; 11:5) and accused him of being ill (2 Cor 12:7-10). Defending his apostleship* before the Corinthians Paul says "the signs [sēmeia] of an apostle [tou apostolou] were performed among you in all patience, with signs and wonders and mighty works [sēmeiois te kai terasin kai dynamesin]" (2 Cor 12:12; cf. 13:3; 1 Cor 1:22). The first occurrence of sēmeia here probably means "indication" or "confirmation" and encompasses the second use which is one of three words (all in the dative) referring to miracles. The phrase "signs of an apostle" may have come from the Corinthians or perhaps from his opponents. As Paul's opponents seem to have performed miracles, Paul does not rely entirely on them as evidence of his apostleship and the truth of his message (cf. Rom 15:19; 1 Cor 2:4; 1 Thess 5:9; see 2 above). In 2 Corinthians Paul has already based the authenticity of his apostleship on his holy life of dependence on God (2 Cor 5:18-21; cf. 3:1-3), as well as on his own spiritual experience (2 Cor 1:12; 2:17; 4:2; 7:2), his suffering and weakness through which the power of God is seen (2 Cor 4:7-15; 6:4-10; 11:21-33), and the reconciliation that has taken place between the Corinthians and God (2 Cor 12:1-6). In any case, Paul is unlikely to rest his case entirely on the miraculous, for in 2 Thessalonians 2:9 he says the lawless one's attempt to deceive those who are to perish will be through "signs and wonders" empowered by Satan (cf. Josephus Ant. 20.8.6 §168; see Man of Lawlessness). Thus, the miracles along with his life of patient suffering in proclaiming the gospel and the experience of the Corinthians are the proof of his apostleship and the truth of his message, for in all of these the power of God can be seen (2 Cor 12:9).

4. The Gift of Miracles.

Paul describes one of the manifestations of the presence of the Spirit in a believer (1 Cor 12:7) as "workings of powers" (energēmata dynameōn, 1 Cor 12:10) or simply "powers" (dynameis, 1 Cor 12:28, 29). The word dynameis was commonly used for miracles (e.g., 1 Sam 14:48; Mt 7:22; Acts 2:22; 8:13), and Paul was no exception (cf. 2 Cor 12:12; Gal 3:5 and Acts 19:11), for miracles were understood as demonstrations of divine power (cf. P.Oxy 1381.21-26). The gift of miracles is distinguished from healing* (1 Cor 12:9), though it could refer to exorcisms (Dunn; see Demons, Exorcism). More likely the dynameis are miracles of nature, for, in relation to God, energeia ("working," or "power") was generally used of God's direct intervention in events through miracles (e.g., 2 Macc 3:29; 3 Macc 4:21; 5:28). Paul did not think that every one would be given the ability to perform miracles (1 Cor 12:19). The change in the way the gifts are listed in 1 Corinthians 12:28 (cf. 1 Cor 12:8-10) could mean that the gift of miracles is less closely associated with particular believers than God's appointment of apostles, prophets and teachers. But, miracles are sufficiently important to be listed immediately after these primary ministries (see Gifts of the Spirit).

5. Miracles of Paul in Acts.

A prominent feature of the portrayal of Paul in Acts is the miracle stories associated with him. In Acts 13:4-12 the proconsul believed when he saw Elymas the magician temporarily blinded by Paul for opposing him. In Acts 14:8-18, as a result of healing a cripple, Paul and Barnabas are hailed as gods having come down in human form, and they then take the opportunity to speak about the good news. In Acts 16:16-18 the exorcism of a spirit of divination from a slave girl brought the eventual conversion of the prison warden and his family. Acts 19:11-12, a summary of Paul's ministry, mentions his handkerchiefs being taken to the sick so that they were healed or freed from evil spirits. This contributes to the word of the Lord growing and prevailing mightily (Acts 19:20). In the raising of Eutychus from the dead in Acts 20:7-12, Paul is portrayed as a man of God like Elijah (1 Kings 17:17-24) and Elisha (2 Kings 4:32-37). As a result of Paul healing the father of Publius of fever and dysentery in Acts 28:7-10, the rest of the people on Malta are reported as bringing their diseased for curing. Paul is also portrayed as the object of miracles: he is healed from blindness (Acts 9:8, 18; 22:11-13), released from prison (Acts 16:25-34) and unharmed by a deadly snake (Acts 28:3-6). These stories, which embody theological themes in Acts, do not depict Paul as a miracle worker alone nor for its own sake but, as in the letters of Paul, show him to be proclaiming a gospel that involves both the miraculous and a message about the power of God.

See also AFFLICTIONS, TRIALS, HARDSHIPS; APOSTLE; DEMONS, EXORCISM; GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT; HEALING, ILLNESS; HOLY SPIRIT; MAGIC; POWER; VISIONS, ECSTATIC EXPERIENCE; WEAKNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1975); G. D. Fee, 1 Corinthians (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987); J. Jervell, "The Signs of an Apostle: Paul's Miracles," in The Unknown Paul (Augsburg: Minneapolis, 1984) 77-95; E. Käsemann, "Die Legitimität des Apostels. Eine Untersuchung zu II Korinther 10—13," ZNW 41 (1942) 33-71; R. P. Martin, 2 Corinthians (WBC; Waco: Word, 1986); C. F. D. Moule, ed., Miracles: Cambridge Studies in their Philosophy and History (London: Mowbry, 1965); F. Neirynck, "The Miracle Stories in the Acts of the Apostles: An Introduction," in Les Actes des Apôtres: Traditions, Rédaction, Théologie, ed. J. Kremer (Gembloux: Duculot, 1979) 169-213; S. M. Praeder, "Miracle Worker and Missionary: Paul in the Acts of the Apostles," SBLSP (1983) 107-29; K. H. Rengstorf, "σημεῖον κτλ," TDNT VII.200-61; idem, "τέρας," TDNT VIII.113-26; M. Whitaker, " 'Signs and Wonders': The Pagan Background," SE 5 (1968) 155-58.

G. H. Twelftree

SILENCE OF WOMEN. See MAN AND WOMAN.

SIN, GUILT

There are more than thirty words in the NT that convey some notion of sin, and Paul employs at least twenty-four of them. He makes very little use of the "guilt" terminology in the psychological sense, but it may fairly be said that many of the things he says about sin include the thought that sinners are guilty people. After all, to commit a sin is to be guilty of that sin. While it cannot be said that Paul has a morbid preoccupation with sin, it can be pointed out that he recognizes that the evil that people do is a barrier to fellowship with God* and that unless some way is found of dealing with the problem of sin, all people as sinners face a time of moral accountability (Rom 2:16; 1 Cor 4:5; 2 Cor 5:10). But with this we must also say that Paul's prevailing attitude is not one of unrelieved gloom and pessimism. Rather, he continually rejoices that in Christ sin has been defeated so that the believer has nothing to fear in this world or the next. (For the argument that Paul's thought moves "backward," from the solution of salvation in Christ to human human plight, see Sanders 1977, 442-47; 474-511; cf. Wright, 258-62.)

Paul presents a massive treatment of the problem of sin in his letter to the Romans,* where he uses the noun for "sin" (hamartia) forty-eight times, the noun "trespass" (paraptōma) nine times, the verb "to sin" (hamartanō) seven times, "sinner" (hamartōlos) four times, "bad" (kakos) fifteen times, and "unrighteousness" (adikia) seven times. In addition Paul uses a number of other words with similar meanings which individually do not occur frequently, but which when taken together add up to a significant part of Romans. This concentration of words about evil cannot be paralleled elsewhere in the NT. In this very weighty letter the problem of sin is examined very closely and some important statements are made in the light of his programmatic announcement of the good news of God in Romans 1:16-17.

Paul does not define sin, but clearly he does not see it as primarily an offense against other people; for him sin is primarily an offense against God (cf. Rom 8:7; 1 Cor 8:12). The disruption of a right relationship with God has its results in hindering right relationships with people, but it is the offense against God that is primary.

1. The Fall
2. The Universality of Sin
3. Sin and the Law
4. The Effects of Sin
5. The Death of Jesus
6. Christian Opposition to Evil
7. Overcoming Sin
8. The Judgment of Sin

1. The Fall.

Paul does not give much attention to the origin of evil; he does not, for example, speak in set terms of the fall as though he could explain the origin of evil. The one place where he describes the stage setting of humankind's fall is 2 Corinthians 11:3 (cf. 1 Tim 2:13-15), which in common with Jewish thinking traces Adam's* fall to Eve's influence (cf. Sir 25:24; Life of Adam and Eve 3). But he has an important treatment of Adam (Rom 5) in which he makes it clear that he accepts the truth that sin was no part of the original creation.* Romans 8:19-23 may suggest that the cosmos is affected by man's, or even Satan's,* downfall (see Futility). He sees sin as having been brought into the world by Adam and as having been practiced by the whole human race ever since, for "all have sinned" (Rom 3:23). All commit their own sins, to be sure, but in some way all are also caught up in the sin of Adam, for "by the one man's trespass the many died" (Rom 5:15). Paul does not see sin as part of human nature as God created it. God is not responsible for a flawed creation. It is this that made Adam's sin so serious. It meant the bringing of sin into a creation that originally was unflawed. Paul could have expressed himself in the words of 4 Ezra 7:118: "O Adam, what have you done? For though it was you who sinned, the fall was not yours alone, but ours also who are your descendants" (NRSV). Yet Paul never apostrophizes in this way.

2. The Universality of Sin.

As he begins Romans the apostle has a strong argument in which he shows that Jews and Gentiles* alike are all "under sin"; he quotes Scripture, "there is none righteous, not even one" (Rom 3:10). The whole human race is involved in sin. Paul does recognize that people on occasion act kindly and do good (Rom 2:7-10, 14). But that is not a problem. Sin is. And it is no minor problem, for it covers the whole human race and has calamitous consequences for every sinner (see Hooker).

3. Sin and the Law.

As a faithful Jew* Paul had accepted the Law* as a gift from God, a mark of divine favor. But as a Christian he came to recognize that the Law taught some uncomfortable things about sin. The Law makes all the world guilty before God: "As many as are of works* of Law (i.e., depend on the Law) are under a curse" (Gal 3:10). Through the Law comes the recognition of sin (Rom 3:19-20); indeed Paul would not have known what sin is apart from the Law (Rom 7:7). He does not see the function of the Law as the prevention of sin, and he can even say that it multiplied sin (Rom 5:20). Its function was to make clear what sin is; its sharp definition of right and wrong made it plain that many things were sinful which people in every age have been quite prepared to overlook. The Law could not bring them salvation,* but it could bring them to Christ so that they could be justified* by faith* (Gal 3:24; cf. Wright, 193-216, who understands the role of the Law as concentrating sin on Israel so that it might be dealt with in the Messiah, Israel's representative, once and for all).

4. The Effects of Sin.

Paul sees a link between sin and death; indeed he says that "death came through sin," and further that, since all have sinned, death comes to all (Rom 5:12; see Universalism; Life and Death). He recognizes that, although some people's sins are not like Adam's transgression, nevertheless death reigned over all the race (Rom 5:14; cf. 5:21) because all humankind seems to be represented in Adam (Rom 5:12; on this verse see commentaries and Williams). Elsewhere he says simply, "the wages of sin is death" (Rom 6:23). He was once alive apart from the Law, but "when the commandment came, Law sprang into life and I died" (Rom 7:9-10; cf. Gen 4:7). In Romans 7:11, 13 Paul repeats the thought that sin, conceptualized as a power (perhaps with the intimation that sin is like a demon, or monster) killed him. Indeed, the theme of sin as an alien, potent and active power recurs in Roman 5—7 (cf. Rom 5:12, 21; 6:6, 11, 12, 14, 16-18, 20; see Sanders ABD; Beker, 213-34; Röhser). In Ephesians Paul reminds his readers that they had been dead in their "trespasses and sins" (Eph 2:1). The apostle leaves no doubt that sin is death-dealing, cutting people off from that life that is life indeed (Eph 4:18).

Paul brings out the seriousness of sin in another way by insisting that sinners are slaves to sin (see Martin). They may fancy that when they commit an evil act, they are free and are doing what they choose to do, but Paul would not agree. He reminds the Romans that in their pre-Christian state they were "sin's slaves" (Rom 6:17, 20). He says that he himself is "fleshly, sold under sin" (Rom 7:14) and "captive to the law of sin" (Rom 7:23). Echoing Ovid, he remarks that he wants to do good, but he still does evil (Rom 7:19). With the mind he may serve the Law of God, but with the flesh* he is "a slave to the law of sin" (Rom 7:25). Even when he wants to do good, evil is with him, indeed sin "dwells" in him (Rom 7:20-21).

Sin creates a gulf between sinners and God, as Paul makes clear in Romans 1:21-25. He specifically speaks of being "alienated from the life of God" (Eph 4:18), and says that the Colossians had been "alienated and enemies* in their minds and engaged in evil works" (Col 1:21). In any case it is obvious enough that when created beings sin against their creator, they erect a barrier between God and themselves.

They also disrupt relationships with one another as, for example, the list of sins in Romans 1 makes clear: covetousness, envy, murder, strife, deceit, insolence, covenant breaking and the rest. Humans may be united in sin, but that does not make them united to one another.

Paul offers a unique insight in pointing to an alienation from creation that sin brings and on which he dwells in Romans 8:19-23. Informed by this teaching Christians do well to care for their environment, not only because of the urgings of modern secular environmentalists, but because this is God's world and Christians look forward to the time when the whole creation "will be freed from the bondage of corruption" (Rom 8:21).

Throughout his writings it is clear that Paul sees sin, however it may be described, as a serious matter and as something that is to be found throughout the whole human race. He sees this as persisting to the end, for when he is dealing with the end time he speaks of the coming of an evil being he calls "the man of lawlessness"* (2 Thess 2:3; traditionally he is called "the man of sin"). Clearsightedly, Paul sees sin as operative throughout the human race and as something that will last through the whole of the race's history.

If he sees sin as universal through the whole human race, he also sees it as pervasive through the whole human person. People have sometimes regarded sin as to be found in the bodily functions only, the "heart" or "mind" or "spirit" being unsullied. But there is no way this can be derived from the apostle (see Psychology). It is true that he says that the sexual* sinner "sins against his own body" (1 Cor 6:18). He also speaks of the flesh as opposed to the Spirit* and goes on to give a dreadful list of "the works of the flesh" (Gal 5:17-21; see Virtues and Vices). But his list includes such things as enmity and envy, which make it clear that he is speaking of sins of the human spirit as well as of those of the human flesh. Paul's writings as a whole demonstrate that he saw sin as involving the whole person, not one part only. To take an example at random, "the love of money" is not a fleshly activity, but it involves "all kinds of evil" (1 Tim 6:10).

5. The Death of Jesus.

Paul has a great deal to say about the death* of Jesus, far more in fact than any other NT writer. And he frequently says that the Savior's* death was due in some way to sin. Thus he says that Christ "died for our sins" (1 Cor 15:3; this creedal* statement, he says, "is of first importance"), and that he "gave himself for our sins" (Gal 1:4). He tells the Romans that Jesus "was delivered up for our offenses" (Rom 4:25), and again that "the death he died, he died to sin once for all" (Rom 6:10). There is not the slightest doubt that for Paul the death of Jesus was connected with humanity's sins, both in that human sins put Christ to death and that his death was designed to deal with sins.

He further says that Jesus' death was for sinners: Christ* "died for ungodly people" (Rom 5:6). In a noteworthy passage Paul tells us that "God shows his own love for us in that while we were still sinners Christ died for us" (Rom 5:8). "His own love" is important; it would be easy to say that the cross* demonstrates the love* of Christ, but Paul is making the point that, while that is true, it is also true that the love of the Father is demonstrated in the death of the Son.* And this death took place "while we were still sinners." It is not that we were somehow cleansed from sin and then the divine love was manifested. That divine love worked sacrificially to deal with the problem of human sin. In two further noteworthy statements Paul says, "one died for all" (2 Cor 5:14) and Christ "died for us" (1 Thess 5:10). The former statement brings out the truth that the death of Jesus is of universal application, the second that it is efficacious for believers. Paul can carry this latter thought a little further with his moving reference to "the Son of God who loved me and gave himself up for me" (Gal 2:20). The influence of Isaiah 53 as well as early creedal formulations is evident in these Passion texts (see Creed; see Popkes).

In an important passage Paul says, "Him who knew no sin he [i.e., the Father] made sin for us so that we might become the righteousness* of God in him" (2 Cor 5:21). This is often misquoted as a passive, "was made sin," which leaves the impression of an impersonal process. But Paul is referring to what the Father did as well as to the Son's saving action. The Father is involved in the solution to the problem of sin as well as the Son. It is important to be clear on this. Paul does not regard the Father as an indifferent spectator in the process of dealing with sin. He was there and the saving act was in accordance with his will. "Made sin" is not an easy expression but it surely indicates an identification with sin and sinners. Christ's death (like the offering of Is 53:6) was the sacrifice* that takes away sin.

Paul writes to the Colossians that in Christ we have "the forgiveness* of sins" (Col 1:14). The expression is in apposition with "the redemption*" and clearly points us to the cross again. It means much to the apostle that Christ has dealt with all the evil human beings have done and has brought forgiveness of sins to believers.

6. Christian Opposition to Evil.

Paul recognizes the pervasiveness of sin, yet he does not acquiesce in its inevitability. Constantly he urges believers not to give way to evil, but rather to do what is good. He prays that the Corinthians may do no wrong (2 Cor 13:7), and he urges the Colossians to put to death the evil that is within them (Col 3:5). He urges the Romans not to retaliate when evil is done to them but rather to overcome evil with good (Rom 12:17, 21), and he has a very similar exhortation for the Thessalonians (1 Thess 5:15). It is important to bear in mind that love, which of course should characterize all Christians, does not keep accounts of wrongdoing (1 Cor 13:5).

Paul does not confine himself to denouncing evils in the strictly religious area. He informs Timothy that "the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil" (1 Tim 6:10). He urges the Romans to do what is good and so to merit the approval of rulers (Rom 13:3) and reminds them that love works no evil to a neighbor (Rom 13:10).

7. Overcoming Sin.

That sin is all-pervasive and that Christ has died to deal with its effects are two points that Paul makes with some emphasis. He also has a number of statements that make it clear that he does not envisage Christians as people who continue to sin (Rom 6:1, 15; Gal 5:13), though with the added knowledge that their sin is forgiven. He is well aware that sin is so firmly rooted in human nature that in this life it is presumptuous to claim to be free of every sin. But he is also clear that "sin will not lord it over you" (Rom 6:14), adding, "for you are not under Law but under grace.*" It is not the submission to some set of rules (like the Jews with their claim to have kept the Law as an identity marker or badge of election) that marks the Christian, but the presence of the grace of God. It is by grace that the believer is saved, and it is by grace that the whole Christian life is lived. Indeed Paul can go as far as to say that Christians, now freed from sin's domination, have "become slaves of righteousness" (Rom 6:18).

8. The Judgment of Sin.

Sin inevitably leads to final judgment.* Some anticipation of the future is a present judgment, for to commit sin means to make oneself a sinner. The dreadful consequence of being a sinner is brought out in the threefold "God gave them up " in Romans 1:24, 26, 28, with its horrifying lists of the consequences of sin here and now (see Wrath). Paul further makes it clear that "the wages of sin is death" (Rom 6:23). He also points out that we reap what we sow and that to sow to the flesh means to reap corruption (Gal 6:7-8). This means that sin brings judgment here and now.

But Paul also insists that sin will be finally dealt with at the judgment at the tribunal of Christ, a truth he brings out forcefully in, say, Romans 2:1-12, 16. This judgment is part of Christian truth and points to the final dealing with evil (1 Cor 4:4-6).

See also ADAM AND CHRIST; CONSCIENCE; CURSE, ACCURSED, ANATHEMA; DEATH OF CHRIST; FLESH; FORGIVENESS; HOLINESS, SANCTIFICATION; IDOLATRY; JUDGMENT; JUSTIFICATION; LAW; LIFE AND DEATH; MAN OF LAWLESSNESS AND RESTRAINING POWER; NEW NATURE AND OLD NATURE; PURITY AND IMPURITY; RIGHTEOUSNESS, RIGHTEOUSNESS OF GOD; SATAN, DEVIL; VIRTUES AND VICES; WRATH, DESTRUCTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. C. Beker, Paul the Apostle (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980); R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament (2 vols.; New York: Scribners, 1951, 1957); C. E. B. Cranfield, "On Some Problems in the Interpretation of Rom 5:12," SJT 22 (1969) 324-41; W. Günther and W. Bauder, "Sin," NIDNTT 3.573-87; M. D. Hooker, "Adam in Romans 1," in From Adam to Christ: Essays on Paul (Cambridge: University Press, 1990); S. Lyonnet and L. Sabourin, ed., Sin, Redemption and Sacrifice (AnBib 48; Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1970); B. F. Malina, "Some Observations on the Origin of Sin in Judaism and St. Paul," CBQ 31 (1969) 18-34; D. Martin, Slavery as Salvation (New Haven: Yale University, 1990); L. Morris, The Epistle to the Romans (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988); W. Popkes, Christus Traditus: Eine Untersuchung zum Begriff der Dahingabe (ATANT 49; Zurich: Zwingli Verlag, 1967); G. Quell et al., "ἁμαρτάνω κτλ," TDNT I.267-335; G. Röhser, Metaphorik und personification der Sünde (WUNT 2.25; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1987); E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977); idem, "Sin, Sinners (NT)," ABD VI.40-47; J. Schneider,

"παραβαίνω κτλ," TDNT V.736-44; C. Ryder Smith, The Bible Doctrine of Sin (London: Epworth, 1953); F. R. Tennant, The Origin and Propagation of Sin (Cambridge: University Press, 1902); idem, The Concept of Sin (Cambridge: University Press, 1912); A. J. M. Wedderburn, "The Theological Structure of Romans 5:12," NTS 19 (1972-73) 339-54; N. P. Williams, The Ideas of the Fall and of Original Sin, Bampton Lectures, 1927 (London: Longmans, 1927); N. T. Wright, The Climax of the Covenant: Christ and the Law in Pauline Theology (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1991).

L. Morris

SINNERS. See FORGIVENESS; JESUS AND PAUL; JUSTIFICATION; SIN, GUILT.

SLAVE, SLAVERY

1. Slaves and Slavery in the Greco-Roman World
2. Slaves and Slavery in Paul

1. Slaves and Slavery in the Greco-Roman World.

The Greco-Roman slave system was an integral part of every aspect of life in Paul's time. Estimates are that 85-90 percent of the inhabitants of Rome and peninsula Italy were slaves or of slave origin in the first and second centuries A.D. Facts and figures about slavery in the provinces are sketchy by comparison with those in Italy, but the existing evidence suggests a comparable percentage (see Patterson, 105-31).

By law slaves were what Aristotle called "human tools." Nevertheless, in the first century they were granted many rights. They could worship as members of the extended family of their owner. They could marry. Such marriages, however, were called contubernium rather than matrimonium. This meant that the offspring of slaves became the property of the owner. Therefore, this may have been the largest source of slaves in the time of the early Empire. During the late Republic slaves were usually prisoners of war. Only very early in Roman history was slavery the result of debt. Slaves also were allowed to accumulate money of their own, the peculium, that often could be used by them to purchase their freedom or to start a business when once they were manumitted, that is, set free by their owners.

In addition to being farm workers or semiskilled laborers, slaves were also artisans, workers in crafts, architects, physicians, administrators, philosophers, grammarians, writers and teachers (see Tentmaking). Frequently they worked for industrial or building corporations for daily wages that were then paid in part (about two-thirds) to their owners. Sometimes slaves worked alongside freed persons, and freeborn workers. Such competition depressed wages and eliminated inflation from the fourth century B.C. to the end of the first century A.D.

Freed persons, that is slaves who had been manumitted, played an important role in society, if for no other reason than that by the beginning of the first century their numbers had increased dramatically. As a consequence Caesar Augustus saw to it that laws were passed governing the number and the ages of slaves who could legitimately be set free (Bartchy ISBE 4.545; ABD). Often these freed persons entered into business partnerships with their former owners. Usually such partnerships were informally negotiated between the two parties involved at the time of the slave's manumission. Cicero says that a slave could expect freedom in seven years, but in any case, under Roman law, persons in slavery could expect to be set free at least by the time they reached age thirty.

Because of the revolt of the Germanic slaves led by Spartacus in 73 B.C., the Romans showed a decided preference for slaves of eastern origin. Slaves from the north and west were given the most difficult tasks. They were the farm laborers who worked in chain gangs by day and were housed in ergastula ("workhouses") at night. The use of the ergastulum was a particularly hideous aspect of Roman life. It was a flat, solid structure, built low enough to the ground so that the slaves could not stand up in it. Slaves of eastern origin, on the other hand, enjoyed great popularity at Rome. They were the trusted household servants, teachers, librarians, accountants and estate managers. They were manumitted by the thousands in the late Republic and early Empire. One of the reasons for this was a sharp decline in the freeborn population during these periods. No doubt there were both slaves and masters in many of Paul's churches (cf. Philem; 1 Cor 7:21; Eph 6:5-9; Col 3:22—4:1; 1 Tim 6:1-2; also 1 Pet 2:18-21; see Households; Social Setting). "Often overlooked are the slaves included in the phrases, 'those of the household of. . .' (Rom 16:10-11), 'Chloe's people' (1 Cor 1:11) and 'the household of Stephanas' (1 Cor 1:16; see Acts 11:14). These phrases cover the same kind of extended households designated by the Latin term familia" (Bartchy ISBE 4.544-45). Jewish slaves had been brought to Rome by the tens of thousands from the time of Pompey's conquest until the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

2. Slaves and Slavery in Paul.

Paul refers by name to slaves or former slaves who were believers. He tangentially discusses the status of slaves in 1 Corinthians and Philemon. He also describes salvation by grace through the imagery of slavery.

2.1. A Theological Metaphor. Three key words—redemption,* justification* and reconciliation*—reveal the powerful role that the metaphor of slavery played for Paul in giving expression to his theology: redemption, literally the setting free of a slave, is used by him to say that Christ has liberated believers from their sin; justification, the act of being judged and found not guilty, is used to describe the Christians' freedom as the complete freedom a slave received upon manumission; and reconciliation, the bringing together of those who had been separated from each other, is used to convey the idea that as the slave, excluded from the rights and privileges of a free society, became a member of that society upon his manumission, so the one who comes to Christ becomes now a member of God's family. Redeemed, justified, reconciled—the believing person thus is lifted from the lowest level of a slave to that of a child and heir of the promised salvation by the grace of God (see Adoption, Sonship).

2.2. Slaves in Paul's Letters. The names of those mentioned in Romans 16 suggest that many had been slaves. Andronicus and Urbanus were exclusively slave names in the literature and inscriptions of Paul's day. Moreover, the references to the households of Aristobolus and Narcissus would almost certainly include slaves, probably in large numbers. They were both very wealthy men with powerful political connections.

Inscriptions from the two Jewish catacombs at Rome exhibit the phenomenon of Jewish slaves at Rome who raised their social status by changing their names. Most of the burials can only be determined to be Jewish by the presence of a star of David or a menorah above them. The deceased usually have lofty Roman names that give no hint of their Jewishness. Junius (Junias or Junia), identified as a compatriot of Paul in Romans 16:7 is no doubt a Christian Jew with an aristocratic Roman name. Rufus (Rom 16:13) could also be another of these, particularly if he is the Rufus of Mark 15:21.

In two significant passages Paul makes pronouncements on the status of slaves rather than slavery in the abstract. However, both instances are too enigmatic to be the basis for a definitive statement of Paul's views on this subject.

In 1 Corinthians 7:20-22 Paul writes: "Each one should remain in the situation which he was in when God called him. Were you a slave when you were called? Don't let it trouble you—although if you can gain your freedom, do so" (NIV). The expression "do so" is a translation of the Greek words mallon chrēsai, which could better be rendered, "make the most of, take advantage of." Commentators both ancient and modern have divided almost evenly between understanding these words to mean, "make the most of your slavery," or "make the most of your freedom" (cf. Bartchy: "Were you a slave when you were called? Don't worry about it. But if, indeed, you become manumitted, by all means [as a freed person] live according to [God's calling]"; Bartchy 1973).

A definitive answer to the question of which of these two interpretations is the better lies beyond the scope of this article. But the principle for interpreting 1 Corinthians is perhaps to be found in Paul's other remarks concerning a slave's personal circumstances—the letter to Philemon.* There Paul, an old man, begs for Onesimus' freedom because he was useful to him in his ministry (Philem 8-16). In making his request Paul couches it in a pun, for the word "useful" (euchrēstos) and "useless" (achrēstos) sound similar to the name of Christ (christos). However, in both of these passages (1 Cor 7:20-22 and Philem 8-16) the emphasis is on usefulness in ministry.* Thus the test for freedom for slaves was not an abstract moral imperative calling for the abolition of slavery, but an answer to the question "Given the fact of slavery, what are its advantages for the proclamation of the gospel?" (but see also Bartchy, Finley, Martin). Otherwise, Paul seems to be saying in 1 Corinthians that social, economic and religious standing are of no significance in the church. Believers should live without anxiety in their present circumstances whether married to a believer or an unbeliever; whether they had come to Christ as Jews or Gentiles; whether they were slaves or free; whether men or women.

Paul uses the imagery of slavery with some frequency in his letters. He identifies himself as a slave of Christ in the salutations of Romans and Philippians. He amplifies this idea in Romans 6:15-23. In answer to the question "Shall we sin because we are not under Law but under grace?" (Rom 6:15; cf. Rom 6:1), he answers, "You are slaves to the one whom you obey—whether you are slaves to sin, which leads to death, or to obedience, which leads to righteousness" (Rom 6:16). For Paul the one who is truly free is the person who is a slave of Christ (see Servant). That person is as free as mortal and dependent human beings can become, for not only does this new slave-master relationship result in freedom from sin, that destructive tyrant that leads its captives to destruction, but it also results in obedience to Christ, who leads his "slaves" into holiness, goodness and eternal life. The paradox is very strong. The one who is enslaved to Christ is ultimately free; free from sin and death and free to do the will of God and live.

See also HOUSEHOLDS AND HOUSEHOLD CODES; PHILEMON, LETTER TO; REDEMPTION; SERVANT, SERVICE; SOCIAL SETTING OF MISSION CHURCHES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. M. G. Barclay, "Paul, Philemon, and the Dilemma of Christian Slave Ownership," NTS 37 (1991) 161-86; S. S. Bartchy, Mallon Chresai: First Century Slavery and the Interpretation of 1 Corinthians 7:21 (SBLDS; Missoula, MT: Scholars, 1973, repr. 1985); idem, "Slavery: In the New Testament," ISBE 4.543-46; idem, "Slavery (New Testament)," ABD VI.65-73; W. W. Buckland, The Roman Law of Slavery (Cambridge: University Press, 1908); M. I. Finley, Ancient Slavery and Modern Ideology (New York: Viking, 1980); D. Martin, Slavery as Salvation (New Haven: Yale University, 1990); O. Patterson, Slavery and Social Death: A Comparative Study (Cambridge: Harvard University, 1982); W. L. Westermann, The Slave Systems of the Greek and Roman Antiquity (Philadelphia: American Philosophical Society, 1955). A. A. Rupprecht

SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS. See SOCIAL SETTING OF MISSION CHURCHES; SOCIAL-SCIENTIFIC APPROACHES TO PAUL.

SOCIAL SETTING OF MISSION CHURCHES

The churches founded by Paul were not abstract theological entities formed in a social vacuum but real life communities of men and women who inhabited particular social settings. The term social setting is a general one which includes matters of the social context of the churches; the social class of converts; the dynamics involved in the formation and development of the Christian communities; social aspects of Paul's own ministry; and social factors in the formation of early Christian doctrine, usually known as the sociology of knowledge. The contemporary discipline of sociology is useful in raising questions and pinpointing issues as well as providing models for analysis and explanation. But sociology needs to be used with caution since the material in question comes from the first century A.D. and is not necessarily open to present-day research.

NT scholarship is showing increasing awareness of the questions of the social setting of the Pauline churches. The approach is already bearing fruit not only in shedding light generally but in illuminating some specific matters of exegesis.

1. The Urban Environment
2. The Social Context of Paul's Mission
3. The Formation and Development of the Communities
4. Social Institutions
5. Social Composition
6. Social Factors in the Formation of Belief

1. The Urban Environment.

The mission* undertaken by Paul led to a remarkable social shift in the early Christian church. It moved away from being a predominantly Palestinian and rural movement to being a Gentile and urban movement. Paul's horizons were dominated by the ethos of the city not the countryside.

R. F. Hock (27) has calculated that Paul traveled nearly 10,000 miles on his missionary journeys; traveling having been made easier and safer by the Pax Romana (see Travel). The cities he visited lay on the East-West trade routes. Antioch* in Syria was the early base for his operations (Acts 13:1-3; 14:26-27; Gal 2:11). A city of a quarter of a million population, it was a city of some prosperity. It had been granted freedom by Pompey, a status later confirmed by Caesar, and so had become a thriving commercial center. Commercial activity was enhanced by its location on the main thoroughfare from Rome* to the Persian border and beyond to the East. Antioch served as the capital of the imperial province and was, in addition, an intellectual focal point. It had a large and long-standing Jewish population. It was a place where Eastern and Western cultures met, and its environment had a significant impact on the development of Paul's mission.

The other cities visited by Paul were nearly all centers of trade, and relatively prosperous. Laodicea, together with Hierapolis and Colossae, was the center of the wool trade (see Colossians). Philippi differed from the other cities of Paul in maintaining more of a Latin character and being primarily a center of agriculture rather than commerce (see Philippians). Ephesus* was a government center and was well known for its harbor, as well as being famous for its temple of Artemis. Like Ephesus, Corinth (see Corinthians) and Thessalonica (see Thessalonians) were important trading cities. The identification of "Galatia" is uncertain (see Galatians), but if by it Paul means Antioch in Pisidia, Iconium and Lystra, these too, like Philippi and Corinth, were Roman colonies.

The cities shared a common language in Greek and a common orientation toward Rome. They were all conveniently located for travel by land or sea. Their size would have varied, with Antioch being among the largest and Philippi among the smallest. With much space given over to public facilities, their residential areas were tightly packed. Privacy was rare. They contained a number of readily identified ethnic quarters, the most significant of which for the Pauline mission were the Jewish quarters. Five to six million Jews lived in the Diaspora.* They guarded their religious rights jealously but were otherwise politically quiescent. They could be found in most occupations and distributed widely through the status system.

The religious stage was already well populated when Christianity entered the ancient world (see Religions). Numerous cults were devoted to the worship of Olympian gods, the reigning emperor,* mystery religions or oriental deities. The cults were important for the economies of the cities, and their temples were prominent buildings within them. Their festivals provided them with public holidays and shaped the annual calendar. The imperial cult was a vehicle for reinforcing political allegiance and cohesion. But it was the more popular devotions which functioned to provide the masses with emotional satisfaction. Syncretism was common.

Cities had much greater potential for the Pauline mission than villages. This is not only because of their obvious value in terms of communication, as a result of their common language and favorable location on the trade routes for spreading the good news, but for deeper reasons to do with their character. Villages were conservative in character and evinced little openness. They were subsistence economies with no opportunities for upward social mobility. Cities were much more open. They possessed both power and potential for change. They would have within them more independently minded people who were open to the new message of the gospel* of Jesus Christ.

2. The Social Context of Paul's Mission.

Various estimates are given concerning Paul's own social status. A. Deissmann's early view stressed Paul's occupation and so placed Paul, not without difficulty, at the lower end of the social scale. But more recent estimates have been more generous (see Paul in Acts and Letters). Paul was a product of Tarsus and had apparently received a good education there. He had easy access to high authorities in Jerusalem, and although his writing was not of the highest classical quality, neither was it coarse or vulgar, as might be expected from one of low class origin. Whatever his class, largely an economic issue, his status is clear. As a Roman citizen (see Citizenship) he enjoyed many privileges and made use of them when the occasion demanded (Acts 16:37; 22:22-29). The reason for his citizenship is a matter of speculation, but it has been suggested that it may have been granted to his father (see Acts 22:28) for services rendered to the Roman army.

On entering a city Paul's mission* strategy was to make contact with people by using the existing social networks to which he related. So, originally, he made his way to the synagogue (Acts 13:5, 14; 14:1; 17:2; 18:4; 19:8) or, in its absence, the place of prayer* (Acts 16:13) to meet other Jews. Similar links with other expatriates and people who worked at the same trade (including Priscilla and Aquila) were also exploited, especially when the synagogues turned against his message. In each location Paul sought to establish a household as the base of his missionary endeavors and as an ongoing means of support for himself and his newly formed Christian community (Acts 16:15; 17:7; 18:1-3, 7-8; 1 Cor 16:15).

Attention has recently been focused on the significance of the household and the workshop for Paul's missionary activities. Households* were not the private residences of today but were most likely to be large houses which provided shops at the front and living accommodations at the rear. There would also have been room for workshops and living quarters for dependents and visitors. Such an arrangement would have ideally suited Paul's purposes by both enabling him to finance his mission through his work as a tentmaker (Acts 18:3; 20:34, 35; 1 Thess 2:9; see Tentmaking) and by providing him with a ready-made platform from which preaching and teaching could be conducted daily among the many who would have been around the workshop. The significance of the workshop has been brought into focus by research into the methods of other itinerant philosophers like the Cynics of Paul's day. Rather than viewing manual labor as demeaning, the Cynics adopted it as an ideal way of life and as the means by which a teacher could model his philosophy to his disciples.

R. F. Hock, A. J. Malherbe and W. A. Meeks have set the apostle Paul in the wider context of other itinerant philosophers. Their work serves two purposes. On the one hand it provides the key that unlocks a number of exegetical problems. It illuminates, for example, Paul's attitude to receiving money from the Corinthians (1 Cor 8—9; 2 Cor 11:7-11; see Financial Support); his use of boasting and folly (see Foolishness) in 2 Corinthians 11:16—12:11; his use of a phrase like "gentle . . . like a nurse" (RSV) in 1 Thessalonians 2:7 and his approach to ethics.* On the other hand it highlights the distinctiveness of Paul, especially in the message he preached. So, although superficially, the ethical codes he pronounces (Gal 5:19-23; Eph 5:21—6:9; Col 3:5-14, 18—4:4; 1 Thess 4:1-12) seem to be similar to other contemporary codes, with nothing remarkable about the qualities demanded, they are distinguished by the motivations Paul sets out for this behavior, for example, "to please God" and "in the Lord Jesus" (1 Thess 4:1), and by the power* offered through which a believer in Jesus Christ could meet the requirements. These things set Christians apart from those outside the church.*

3. The Formation and Development of the Communities.

Paul's primary interest was not in the conversion of individuals but in the formation of Christian communities. In a large city, such as Rome or Corinth, several communities may well have been brought into existence, each based on a different household. The language of Romans 16:10, 11, 14, 15, 23; 1 Corinthians 14:23 and 16:15 suggests a distinction between individual groups which met in particular households and "the whole church" which was composed of a number of such household groups meeting together occasionally. Furthermore, archeological evidence, as reported by J. Murphy-O'Connor (156), confirms that the average household could have only accommodated fifty (a realistic starting figure for the Christians we can actually identify with the church in Corinth) with difficulty. It is more probable then that they would have more regularly met as subgroups in smaller numbers. But the question here is how were such groups formed and their identity maintained?

3.1. Language. The language we speak plays an important role in interpreting and shaping the world in which we live. It is never neutral and always filters reality for us so that we always see reality through its eyes. Language plays a particularly important role in giving groups an awareness of their own identity, in maintaining cohesion and marking out boundaries. So Paul's letters are full of the language of kinship.

Christians are "children of God" and "brothers" and "sisters" to each other. The Christian family replaces the natural family. Body language (1 Cor 12:12-27) and other imagery makes for solidarity. There is also evidence of in-group language, such as Abba or maranatha. Other language sharply differentiates Christians from the wider society. Thus, just to take the example of 1 Thessalonians 1:9-10, Paul speaks of them having undergone a radical conversion which separated them from their fellow citizens. The use of the language of outsidership (1 Cor 5:12, 13; Col 4:5; 1 Thess 4:12) sharply separates Christians from others. As does also Paul's frequent references to unbelievers as members of "the world," "dead in sin," "a crooked and depraved generation" or other such terminology. The positive description of Christians as "saints," "beloved" or "coworkers with God" further reinforces their internal cohesion and external separation.

3.2. Rituals. Actions also contribute toward the formation and maintenance of distinct communities. Both baptism* and the Lord's Supper* are rituals associated with the death, burial and resurrection* of Christ, events which mark clear boundaries in the life of Christ and, consequently, in the life of those who are in union with him by faith.

Baptism is a ritual which symbolizes and effects a dramatic break with the candidates' former way of life and their incorporation into the church (Rom 6:1-4; 1 Cor 12:13; Gal 3:26-28). The use made of clothing imagery (cf. Eph 4:22-24; Col 3:9, 10), which probably had its origins in the baptismal rite, also served to reinforce the believers' new identity in Christ.

The Lord's Supper has been termed by Wayne Meeks as a "ritual of solidarity." It separates genuine believers from unbelievers and stresses the exclusivity of serving Christ (1 Cor 10:21). It reenacts the Last Supper Jesus had with his disciples (1 Cor 11:23) and emphasizes the believers' participation not only in Christ (1 Cor 10:16; 11:24-26) but with one another. That is why Paul denounces the Corinthians for turning what was meant to be a ritual reenactment of their unity into an instrument of social division (1 Cor 11:17-22). G. Theissen (121-140) helpfully suggests that social factors may have caused this division, with the strong being higher in the social scale than the weak. Other rituals, such as the weekly offering (1 Cor 16:2), not only strengthened their belonging to one another in the local community but gave the early Christians a vision of belonging to a worldwide community of faith (2 Cor 8—9). Ritual, as the symbolic reenactment of what the community believed about itself, played a significant role in both forming and maintaining community identity.

3.3. Communitas. The Pauline communities were not rigidly structured hierarchical organizations but were characterized by communitas. Communitas refers to patterns of relationship which are marked by a high degree of participation on the part of its members and a strong sense of belonging (see Sampley). They are antihierarchical brotherhoods which value spontaneity and are loose on structures. The pattern of worship* (1 Cor 14:26-33; Col 3:15-16); the emphasis on every believer receiving gifts* of the Spirit (Rom 12:3-8; 1 Cor 12:1-30; Eph 4:7-13); and the command to accept one another and practice hospitality (Rom 12:13; 15:17; cf. 1 Tim 3:2; 5:10; Tit 1:8) combine with the radical teaching that faith in Christ completely undermines social distinctions (1 Cor 7:21-22; Gal 3:28; Eph 6:5-9) to paint a portrait of Paul's churches as having the typical traits of communitas.

No group can exist for long on a level of pure communitas and some structural elements are evident in the Pauline community from the beginning (see Church Order). Elders and deacons were appointed. Worship was to be conducted "in a fitting and orderly way" (1 Cor 14:40). E. Käsemann has pointed out how the gifts of the Spirit contain an implicit ordering according to the use made of them by the body. It is likely that the wealthier householders who hosted the church would have played some inevitable leadership role. Nonetheless, in spite of any qualifications, Paul's communities were predominantly characterized by communitas, especially when compared with the more structured worship of the Jewish synagogues.

3.4. External Conflict. Conflict may have an adverse effect on the survival and development of groups but, providing the members of the group are given satisfactory explanations that legitimate their position, it may be highly constructive for the group's life. So it was for the Pauline churches. Opposition (see Opponents) was their recurring experience and consequently Paul frequently taught or wrote to explain why it should have been so (Acts 14:22; Phil 1:12-14, 29-30; 1 Thess 2:14-20; 3:4; 2 Thess 1:4-10; 2 Tim 3:10-14). The existence of conflict can strengthen a group by defining its boundaries, disciplining its members, bonding them together in more intense relationships against a common enemy,* demanding total adherence and heightening the sense members have of belonging. As well as energizing a group, it calls forth creative leadership and even makes a group attractive to nonmembers. All this is evident in the churches of Paul.

3.5. Institutionalization. Over time, and given the habitual nature of its activities, a group becomes institutionalized. That is, it loses its original purity and creativity and becomes more mixed in its purposes and motives and less flexible in its relationships and actions. The second generation of members are never as clear-sighted or totally committed as the original founders of a movement. Vested interests enter. Charismatic openness is channeled in certain expected and routinized ways. Worship adopts more predictable patterns. Ethical positions become less demanding and boundaries with the world are blurred. Paradoxically, ethical freedom* in the Spirit (see Holy Spirit) is gradually supplanted by the letter of the law. Leadership becomes more concerned with positions, hierarchy and offices. The organization develops and becomes more structured, less responsive to new needs and new times and less versatile (see Early Catholicism).

Many have detected the evidence of institutionalization in the NT, especially the Pastoral letters. M. MacDonald has traced its development in detail from the original Pauline communities of Galatia, Philippi, Thessalonica and Corinth, through the pastorally led communities represented by Ephesians and Colossians, to the Pastoral letters. She traces the development of institutionalization in terms of attitude to the world/ethics, ministry, ritual and belief.

To some extent the process was inevitable. Paul himself, the charismatic leader, was ultimately removed from the scene. His churches were conversionist sects, that is, voluntary religious groups which saw themselves as uniquely offering the way of salvation,* demanding great commitment from their members and seeing themselves in opposition to the world but intent on converting it. The desire to convert people from the world builds in an inescapable tension as it brings the Christians into contact with others, so giving opportunity to a host of temptations; it softens the boundaries between the sect and the world and leads toward compromise. The tension is evident in, for example, 1 Corinthians 5:9-10; 8:1-13; 14:23 and 1 Thessalonians 4:11-12. Even so, it is possible to overestimate the process of institutionalization and to let the theory outrun the evidence. The theory is highly dependent on particular views concerning the dating of the letters and if not careful, the argument becomes circular: here is evidence of institutionalization, so the letter must be of a late date; this letter is dated late, and so we must interpret it in terms of institutionalization.

3.6. Authority and Governance. No group can exist for any length of time without some form of authority structure. Much of what we learn about the exercise of authority* in the Pauline churches we learn by inference because of the tensions and disputes between Paul and competing authorities. Acts records the tensions which arose between the Pauline mission and the church at Jerusalem* that resulted in the eventual recognition of both as independent and yet in a mutual and continuing relationship with one another (Acts 15:1-35). Other insights arise from Paul's handling of itinerant apostles* who were claiming the allegiance of the church at Corinth (2 Cor 10—13). Further insights come from observing the handling of internal disputes, handling deviance within the community or tensions between settled community organizers and charismatic itinerants (see Opponents).

What was the basis for Paul's authority and apostleship? M. Weber classically defined three means by which authority is legitimated: those of legality or rationality, tradition and charisma. Most analyses of Paul's authority have taken place within that framework, although Theissen (51-54) has added the further concept of functional authority. These types of authority never exist in pure terms. Paul shows some concern to claim a traditional basis for his authority (1 Cor 11:23; 15:3) but not to justify his role by reference to the traditional center of Jerusalem (Gal 1:11—2:10). It is most appropriate to see Paul's authority as an institutionalized and rationalized form of charisma (Holmberg).

Paul's is not a pure type of charismatic authority since in the innovative work of the charismatic the pure charismatic points to himself as the one to follow while Paul stresses that his authority is derived from Jesus Christ and is not his own (2 Cor 10:3; 1 Thess 4:2). He limits his authority. He acts as father to the churches rather than as prophet, the archetype of charismatic authority. He refuses to accept financial support (1 Cor 9:1-18; 2 Cor 11:7-9; see Financial Support). He gives reasons for the instructions he gives and supports other churches not of his group, like Jerusalem, through the collection.* And he has a place for tradition. And yet, in his radicalism and innovativeness, in his putting himself forward as a model to be imitated, in his formation of communities, in his presentation of himself and his claims, he demonstrates some of the typical traits of the charismatic.

Unfortunately none of this has led to any agreement as to how authoritarian Paul was in practice and evaluations differ widely. Some stress his emphasis on liberty (1 Cor 10:23; Gal 5:1), his restricted use of authority (1 Cor 7:25; 2 Cor 10:8) and his desire to encourage the local church to assume responsibility for its own actions (1 Cor 5:1-5). Others highlight his directiveness and even accuse him of using manipulative techniques (1 Cor 7:17; 14:37-38; Phil 3:15).

Paul exercised his authority in a number of ways: through return visits, letters, locally appointed leaders and through sending his representatives, who carried his delegated authority, on visits (Eph 6:21; 1 Thess 3:2; Tit 1:5). While no clear pattern of local church leadership emerges, it seems that Paul appointed elders on his own authority (Acts 14:23) and that churches recognized elders and deacons (Phil 1:1). The word elder (presbyteros) seems synonymous with bishop (episcopos); the difference between them perhaps reflecting a more predominantly Jewish (for presbyteros) or Gentile (for episcopos) social context (see Church Order and Government).

It is often suggested that the early churches experienced tension between appointed leaders in structured positions and those itinerating or exercising the charismatic gifts of tongues* and prophecy, with each vying for authority. But it is easy to overdraw the contrast here and to present too simplistic a picture. Meeks (120-21) has drawn attention to some of the complexities: tongue speaking is learned behavior; Paul accepts the value of tongues (1 Cor 14:18), even if he wishes to discipline their use, and we dare not assume that the ones who spoke in tongues were too distinct from the leaders. Throughout the period of the Pauline mission there is a concern for both structural authority (see, for example, the early reference to elders in Acts 14:23) and for spiritual gifts (note, for example, the late references in 1 Tim 4:14 and 2 Tim 1:6-7).

Whatever questions remain unresolved about authority and leadership in the Pauline communities, and they are many, it is clear that the real authority was Jesus Christ (2 Cor 4:5; Eph 4:15) and human authorities played only a limited role. 2 Corinthians 1:24 captures the spirit of Pauline leadership, which inevitably leads the churches to being more egalitarian in form than most groups in the ancient world: "Not that we lord it over your faith, but we work with you for your joy. . ." (see Pastor).

4. Social Institutions.

It was not possible for new religions to set up novel institutions in the Roman Empire. They required a license. The emergence of the Christian church was made possible and its growth and continuance were made secure by the way in which it used existing social institutions and adapted them to its own ends. Three institutions are particularly relevant.

4.1. The Synagogue. Christianity entered the ancient world as a sect within Judaism which thereby afforded it legal protection in its formative years. The synagogue provided Paul with an immediate platform for his message and served in many ways, but not all, as a model for the emerging churches. The early churches imitated the synagogue in their Scripture reading and exposition, prayers and common meals and in the absence of sacrifices which were common among pagan cults. Other parallels can be seen in handling their own internal disputes, money raising, care for their members and their vision of belonging to a worldwide people of God. Perhaps also some organizational features were borrowed from the synagogue, such as the role of elders and patrons. But there were also many differences. Christians practiced baptism and not circumcision.* Their worship included prophecy* and tongue* speaking. Women had a much greater role. And churches were not formed on the basis of race.

4.2. The Household. Early households* were large, inclusive communities consisting not only of a principal family but of slaves and friends, tenants, partners or clients who would have been involved in a common commercial or agricultural enterprise. In the absence of buildings they provided ideal meeting places for the early Christians. The household was a hierarchical body under the authority of the father. Such people appear to have become patrons of the early Christian communities (Rom 16:4, 5, 14, 15, 23; 1 Cor 1:11; 16:19; Col 4:15, Philem 2). The fact that Christian groups were often located in households affected the way in which churches developed.

For this reason Theissen (107) has termed the Pauline communities "love-patriarchies." By doing so he has drawn attention to the role of the household patron in the early church and the shape it gave to social relations. Although, he argues, the gospel ameliorated social differences, the social differences were taken for granted, and respect and subordination were enjoined on those in the lower orders in the church toward their superiors. Evidence of this is found in the codes of household ethics (Col 3:18—4:1; Eph 5:22—6:9; 1 Tim 2:9-10; see Households and Household Codes). But love-patriarchalism would be in tension with the more radical and egalitarian claims of the gospel (Gal 3:28), and not all would think there is sufficient evidence to substantiate Theissen's view.

Other implications of the Pauline communities being located within households include questions of conversion, division and growth. The individualism of contemporary Western society would have been quite foreign to the way of thinking in Paul's day. Decisions would have been taken corporately, or more probably, by the leading member of the household on behalf of others. Hence we read of household conversions and baptisms (Acts 16:15, 31-34; 18:8; 1 Cor 1:16). When such a joint decision was taken it would not necessarily call forth equal acceptance, commitment or understanding by all who were involved. Negatively, the existence of various house churches in any one town would lead to a tendency to division; with one house fellowship* owing allegiance to one teacher and others to different teachers. It may be that this is the situation underlying Paul's words in 1 Corinthians 1:10-17. Positively, the household was ready-made to serve as the "basic cell" of the church and the primary unit for mission as it used its existing network of relationships outside its own membership to spread the gospel.

4.3. Voluntary Associations. The Roman Empire witnessed the growth of many and varied voluntary associations. These were private clubs to which admittance was gained by an initiation ceremony and were often based around a particular trade or objective. They existed to provide people with opportunities for festivity and frequently centered around meals. The associations provided people with the religious and emotional satisfaction which was lacking in the more public or official cults. Some existed as burial societies. For the most part they were tolerated by Rome but, in view of the secrecy of their activity, they had the potential to be politically subversive and so on occasions they were under scrutiny or restriction by the authorities.

Rome seems to have viewed Judaism, for legal purposes, as a voluntary association, albeit as an association with a difference in view of its international size. It is not surprising therefore that the early Christian communities should have been viewed also as a voluntary association. There are similarities in that they had private meetings, a voluntary membership, practiced initiation rituals, frequently met for meals, or the meal of the Lord's Supper, and had a degree of exclusivity about them. But there were also some marks which distinguish the early Christian communities from other voluntary associations. Paul's churches were much more socially inclusive and enjoyed equality of status within them, between males and females (see Man and Woman), slaves and free (see Slavery). With Judaism, the church shared an international membership. The commitment expected from members was also more demanding than that of most voluntary societies. There is no evidence of early Christian burial practices (except in the catacombs, of an uncertain date) and the terminology of the associations is absent from Paul's writings. Furthermore, voluntary associations did not usually concern themselves with ethical teaching. But the fact that Paul's churches could be seen to be nothing unusual enabled them to be accommodated by the Roman world.

5. Social Composition.

5.1. Social Stratification. The terminology of social class needs to be read back into the NT with extreme caution. Contemporary analysis of class is essentially a post-industrial analysis of people's economic position. In the world of Paul, birth and legal status were more significant. A number of ranks were clearly defined, namely, the senatorial aristocracy, the equestrian orders, various degrees within the municipal bureaucracies, plebs, freedmen and slaves. Status, therefore, seems to be a more useful analytic tool and realistically enables measurement of people's social position to take place on a number of dimensions, including those of power, wealth, education, occupation, family connections and so on.

Taking their cue from Paul's comments in 1 Corinthians 1:26 scholars used to argue that the early Christian churches were composed mainly of slaves and inconsequential people from the lower classes. A. Deissmann's work seemed to lend support to this view. His investigations into the language and literature of the NT led him to assert that the early church was nonliterary in nature, "a movement among the weary and heavy-laden, men without power and position . . . the poor, the base, the foolish, as St Paul with a prophet's sympathy describes them." Other contemporary comments by critics of Christianity seem to reinforce that view.

However, in recent days a new consensus has emerged from a fresh examination of the evidence which advances the view that early Christian communities were socially mixed communities with perhaps only the uppermost and lowest ranges of the social stratification system missing (see Rich and Poor). The consensus is the result of investigations into the names mentioned in the Acts and Pauline epistles, excluding the Pastorals, which amount to nearly eighty in all. Of these we may tentatively say something about the social status of thirty of them. Among those are clearly persons of some means. Some have an ability to travel which would have required finance. Some, like Lydia (Acts 16:14), we know to have been in the merchant classes. Others had houses sufficiently large to accommodate Christian meetings, such as Priscilla and Aquila (Rom 16:4-5), Gaius (Rom 16:23; 1 Cor 1:14), Nympha (Col 4:15) and Philemon (Philem 2). Some we can identify by the office they held like Crispus, the ruler of the synagogue (Acts 18:8; 1 Cor 1:14). Synagogue rulers were normally men of some substance. Erastus was the oikonomos tēs poleōs (Rom 16:23) at Corinth, a term which probably means either the city treasurer or director of public works. It would have been a position of consequence, if not wealth. While Stephanus (1 Cor 16:15) was by inference wealthy enough to act as a patron to the Pauline mission. The families of Aristobulus and Narcissus (Rom 16:10-11) both had good imperial connections.

The Pauline churches were not uniformly composed of such people. Among the names listed were many that were common slave names. The ethical sections concerning masters and slaves would have been superfluous unless slaves had joined the church as well as masters. Other passages about the life of the early church, such as those about giving (2 Cor 8 and 9), only make sense if social diversity is assumed. This is particularly true, as Theissen has shown, of 1 Corinthians. His analysis along lines of social stratification of the weak and the strong (1 Cor 8:1-13; see Strong and Weak) and the divisions at the Lord's Table, which he sets in the context of similar meals known to have taken place in voluntary associations, is especially illuminating.

Attempts to ally the use of the more expressive gifts exercised in Corinth with the poorer and less articulate members of the church are frequent but less successful. At least from the standpoint of contemporary Pentecostal and charismatic movements it is not possible to tie the exercise of charismatic gifts of tongues, healings and prophecy too tightly to social or economic deprivation.

Evidence then, of a direct and inferential nature, suggests that the early church was a socially diverse body.

5.2. Status Inconsistency. A particular theory about the social status of the Pauline converts, that of status inconsistency, has been put forward by W. A. Meeks (22-23, 174, 191). Status inconsistency occurs when the various dimensions by which status is measured are not in agreement with one another and a "criss-crossing of categories" takes place. So, a person may be wealthy but of low rank, educated but a slave, in a powerful position but a woman. The major source of tension occurs when a person's "achieved status," through wealth, occupation or education, is in conflict with one's "accredited status" due to one's race, sex or birth. A number of Paul's converts might be said to be suffering from status inconsistency. Among them were independent women of some wealth, rich Jews in a pagan society, skilled or wealthy freed people who were stigmatized by their former slavery and Gentile* God-fearers who had attached themselves to the synagogue.

The theory is used to explain why some people appeared to be more open to conversion than others and why there were particular attractions in apocalyptic* or millenarian preaching. Those whose status was consistent were more likely to be well integrated into their own appropriate social networks. But those whose status was inconsistent, like people who were socially mobile, were likely to be much less integrated into particular social circles. Consequently, they were more likely to be open to receive new teaching. Moreover, the dissonance such a person experienced might find expression and resolution in religious activities or beliefs. Meeks points out that millenarian teaching, with its symbolism of a world out of joint and its promise of radical transformation, might be particularly attractive to those whose own experience of life was ambiguous.

Meeks (68-70) further uses the theory to criticize Theissen's view of the weak and the strong in 1 Corinthians 8 as too simplistic and to suggest that those who showed signs of status inconsistency might have been those most partial to speaking in tongues.

The theory has its critics because of its imprecision and the slender basis of the evidence which supports it. Most evidence is drawn from 1 Corinthians. C. A. Wanamaker, in a recent commentary on 1 and 2 Thessalonians, has pointed out that although it should be ideal for explaining the situation at Thessalonica, we have no information about individuals there to determine if the theory is relevant or not. He further points out that other explanations for the acceptance of Paul's millenarian teaching at Thessalonica, such as its similarity to the Cabirus cult which had been robbed of its popularity by its incorporation into the civic cult, are more plausible (see Thessalonians). The theory, however, is not likely to be so easily disposed of and, given that many of the converts of Paul whom we can name seem to be converted from the ranks of the Jews or God-fearers rather than directly from paganism, it seems to hold some water.

6. Social Factors in the Formation of Belief.

A social science perspective on the NT is likely to reject what it sees as the fallacy of idealism, that is, that the determining role in historical development is played by ideas, in favor of a view that ideas are constructed on the basis of the social realities that underlie them. The social reality, in the case of Paul, is the situation of his mission churches, and attention is paid to ways in which that has shaped his theology. Many, who would give weight to this general approach, would wish to express it more cautiously than Holmberg (1980) who, in Watson's words (184), argues that, "Paul's theology is in fact 'a secondary reaction' to 'primary, concrete phenomenon in the social world.' "

This approach owes much to the writings of P. Berger and T. Luckmann who argue that, in spite of appearances, our interpretation of reality is not fixed but that all of us are engaged in the enterprise of constructing a universe of meaning. In their view, all that we encounter as reality is in fact socially constructed. Once it is admitted that all reality is constructed in this way it is not possible to dismiss particular constructions as "merely" socially constructed. The validity of all social constructions has to be judged on other grounds. It does not therefore, properly understood, lead to reductionism nor to a relativization of Paul's theology. Three issues illustrate the approach with reference to Paul.

*6.1. Sectarian Legitimation. Both Esler, primarily in relation to Luke-Acts, and Watson, primarily in relation to Galatians and Romans, have developed the perspective of the sociology of knowledge to expound Paul's ministry in terms of the legitimation of a sectarian movement. Christianity began, they argue, as a reform movement within Judaism before becoming a distinct sect (see 3.5) sharply distinguished from Judaism. Judaism then became a hostile opponent of Paul's mission churches, to say nothing of the more generally unpropitious environment in which they found themselves. But it is characteristic of sects to find themselves encountering hostility, and consequently to have to shore up the wavering commitment of their members. To do this sects engage in a process of legitimations, that is, explanations and justifications which legitimate their beliefs. These legitimations take a number of recognizable forms, including locating the sect meaningfully within the unfolding of history; looking backward and looking forward and reinterpreting past understandings, so that its beliefs are not seen to be radical, creations out of nothing, but traditional, what was meant or to be expected all along.

The central issue for Paul is the inclusion and place of Gentile* Christians within the church and the relationship of Christianity to Judaism with the problems it raised about covenant,* circumcision,* Law,* works (see Works of the Law), food* and table-fellowship. Paul seeks to show that the covenant of grace* is not in conflict with older covenants which appeared to major on the role of obedience to the Law but that the central feature of all covenants was that they depended upon faith* in God's promise (Rom 4:1-25; Gal 3:6-25). Thus, his gospel was not a radical departure from the old but a consistent development of the old. The more general question about persecution and the continuing success of evil and evildoers is also very evident, giving rise to his eschatological* and apocalyptic teaching.

When placed in the context of these social realities, the traditional Lutheran interpretation of Paul's views on justification* by faith is called into question, and further support is given to the recent interpretation of E. P. Sanders and others on the role of the Law* within the covenant.

6.2. Apocalypticism. Recent studies have highlighted the apocalyptic strain to be found in Paul's teaching. For Paul the age in which he lived was the last age and one which would be brought to a sudden conclusion by the imminent return of the Lord Jesus Christ who would bring an end to its rebellion against God, render judgment* on the wicked, vindicate the elect (see Election) and bring their salvation* to its consummation. Investigation into the social setting of Paul's teaching draws attention to the social realities that lay beneath it and also sets it in the wider framework of millenarian movements.

Millenarian movements, as summarized by J. Gager, have five basic traits: the promise of heaven on earth; the overthrow or reversal of the present social order; a terrific release of emotional energy; a brief life span and the central role of a messianic, prophetic or charismatic leader. With only a little modification these can be found as basic tenets of faith in Paul's churches. The new millennium will dawn at the return of Jesus Christ and the present social order will be transformed (Rom 8:18-23; 1 Cor 7:29-31; Gal 6:14; Eph 1:10; 1 Thess 1:10; 4:16; 2 Thess 1:6-10; Tit 2:12-14). The emotional energy generated can be seen in the movement's zeal for evangelism, the intense relationship between Paul and his converts (2 Cor 7:2; Phil 4:1; 1 Thess 2:17) and in the place given to the exercise of charismatic gifts (1 Cor 12:1-9; 14:1-40). In Paul's case the movement did not have a brief life span, but its continuity depended on it undergoing organizational change (see 3.5). The central messianic figure throughout was Jesus Christ, but Paul himself played a crucial role as a charismatic leader with authority derived from Jesus Christ.

People are open to become members of millenarian movements when there is a deeply felt dissatisfaction with the current situation and where there is a discrepancy between people's legitimate expectations and their current experience in society. Meeks has traced this to the status inconsistency suffered by members of Paul's churches (see 5.2). But wider factors of perceived deprivation, such as economic hardship, lack of political freedom or power, the failure by existing religious rituals to satisfy or low social status are also evident among Paul's converts.

6.3. Cognitive Dissonance. The theory of cognitive dissonance hypothesizes that when a specific belief held by a group is subjected to specific disconfirmation, the members of the group may not ease their mental discomfort (or dissonance) by giving up the belief but rather by holding it more firmly and vigorously propagating it in the hope that others will come to share it too. Their activism and success in gaining converts lessens the discomfort felt. As originally propounded by L. Festinger and others to contemporary movements, and applied by Gager to the early church in Jerusalem, whose expectation of the imminent arrival of the kingdom* (Acts 1:6) was, he says, disappointed, it was a theory with precise criteria. There had to be (1) a commitment to a belief, (2) which was held to be important and (3) subject to disconfirmation; (4) the disconfirmation must occur and be seen to occur and (5) the belief must be held by a group and shared by others. It is, however, now in common use as an explanation of the behavior of the early Christians and has consequently lost its precision and in turn some of its value. The generalized nature of its use makes it difficult to confirm or falsify. Meeks, for example, speaks of apocalyptic movements providing relief from cognitive dissonance and as having implications for the status inconsistency of some members and the socially mixed nature of the church but without spelling out the connections between them at all.

See also SOCIAL-SCIENTIFIC APPROACHES TO PAUL.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. Banks, Paul's Idea of Community (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1980); P. Berger and T. Luckmann, The Social Construction of Reality: A Treatise on the Sociology of Knowledge (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1966); C. S. Dudley and E. Hilgert, New Testament Tensions and the Contemporary Church (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1987); P. Esler, Community and Gospel in Luke-Acts (SNTSMS 57; Cambridge: University Press, 1987); L. Festinger, H. Riecken and S. Schachter, When Prophecy Fails (New York: Harper & Row, 1956); J. Gager, Kingdom and Community: The Social World of Early Christianity (Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, 1975); R. F. Hock, The Social Context of Paul's Ministry: Tentmaking and Apostleship (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980); B. Holmberg, Paul and Power: The Structure of Authority in the Primitive Church as Reflected in the Pauline Epistles (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980); idem, Sociology and the New Testament: An Appraisal (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1990); E. A. Judge, The Social Pattern of Christian Groups in the First Century (London: Tyndale, 1960); H. C. Kee, Christian Origins in Sociological Perspective (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1980); M. Y. MacDonald, The Pauline Churches: A Socio-Historical Study of Institutionalization in the Pauline and Deutero-Pauline Writings (SNTSMS 60; Cambridge: University Press, 1988); A. J. Malherbe, Paul and the Thessalonians (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1987); idem, Social Aspects of Early Christianity (Baton Rouge: Louisiana State University, 1977); B. Malina, The New Testament World: Insights from Cultural Anthropology (Atlanta: John Knox, 1981); W. A. Meeks, The First Urban Christians: The Social World of the Apostle Paul (New Haven: Yale University, 1983); idem, The Moral World of the First Christians (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); J. Murphy-O'Connor, St. Paul's Corinth: Texts and Archaeology (GNS 6; Wilmington, DE: Michael Glazier, 1983); J. P. Sampley, Pauline Partnership in Christ: Christian Community and Commitment in Light of Roman Law (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980); J. H. Schütz, Paul and the Anatomy of Apostolic Authority (SNTSMS 26; Cambridge: University Press, 1975); J. Stambaugh and D. Balch, The Social World of the First Christians (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); G. Theissen, The Social Setting of Pauline Christianity: Essays on Corinth (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1982); D. Tidball, The So- cial Context of the New Testament: A Sociological Analysis (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1984); C. A. Wanamaker, Commentary on 1 and 2 Thessalonians (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); F. Watson, Paul, Judaism and the Gentiles: A Sociological Approach (SNTSMS 56; Cambridge: University Press, 1986).

D. J. Tidball

SOCIAL STRATIFICATION.

See SOCIAL SETTING OF MISSION CHURCHES.

SOCIAL-SCIENTIFIC APPROACHES TO PAUL

1. The Legitimacy of a Social-Scientific Approach
2. The Advantages of Social-Scientific Interpretation
3. Problems in Social-Scientific Interpretation
4. Case Studies in Social-Scientific Interpretation
5. Conclusion

1. The Legitimacy of a Social-Scientific Approach. The interpretation of Paul and his letters is a necessarily (though by no means exclusively) historical task. The apostle Paul was a historical figure. The letters,* as ancient Greek texts of a recognizable epistolary form, are human artifacts from a particular time and place in antiquity. Furthermore, the content of the letters (including the ideas, events, problems and persons to which they make reference), their highly occasional character, and the readers to whom they were directed all invite and justify historical and literary-historical analysis. This is not to say that the truth to which Paul and his letters bear witness is confined to what can be determined by historical method. This would restrict unjustifiably the authority* of Paul's apostleship and the truth* of his gospel* to what is ascertainable according to the canons of contemporary, secular historiography—as if, for example, the truth of Paul's message about a "new creation*" through the crucified and risen Christ* were a matter only of the historical evidence for the crucifixion* and the empty tomb. Nevertheless, there can be no doubt for modern readers of Paul that an adequate interpretation of his letters and of the theology they express requires the historical perspective that the historical method aims to give.

But if history is important (something which is recognized widely already), so are the human sciences in general (something which is not yet recognized so widely). There are several reasons for this. First, more than any other texts of the NT, Paul's letters give us unique access to the apostle as an individual and complex personality. In a way that the gospels do not do for Jesus, the letters give us Paul at first hand. It is natural and legitimate, therefore, to see whether or not approaches from psychology and psychoanalysis may not deepen our understanding of the type of person Paul was, the nature of his experience of call (or "conversion"*), the way he behaved as a leader, the kinds of instruction he gave and the manner in which he gave it, and so on. If, as many agree, it is difficult to put Paul in his place, it may be that conscious or unconscious factors in Paul's make-up had a part to play. It may be the case also that psychological factors help to explain the complexities of the interaction between Paul, his followers and his opponents.

Second, there can be no doubt that Paul was involved deeply with the society of his day and that his letters are directed explicitly to groups of believers to whom he felt bound by strong ties of spiritual kinship. Paul, in other words, cannot be understood adequately in purely individual terms. His identity and self-understanding were bound up with those to whom he himself felt bound—to Christ as "Lord,"* to the people of Israel,* his "kinfolk by race" (Rom 9:3), to the groups of believers whom he had fathered in the faith, to his fellow workers in the apostolic ministry, to authority figures in Jerusalem* and to authority figures in Rome.* So in addition to a psychological dimension to the interpretation of Paul and his letters, there is an important sociological dimension also. This calls for the use of the kind of models which make sociological analysis possible. Such models are likely to be as relevant to the understanding of the situation of Paul's addressees as to the understanding of Paul's own situation.

Third, Paul's engagement with the society of his day often took the form of a provocative reinterpretation of his society's dominant cultural symbols. One only has to bring to mind the sharp controversy Paul generated in one context or another over matters such as Torah observance, circumcision,* table fellowship, the place of women (see Man and Woman) in the Christian assembly and the legitimacy or otherwise of eating meat offered to idols,* to see how subversive Paul appeared to supporters of the cultural status quo. But attempts to gauge the meaning and significance of these cultural symbols, both for Paul and for his opponents, are likely to lack precision if they fail to make use of critical tools for the analysis of culture. Such tools are those which have been developed and practiced in the discipline of social (or cultural) anthropology. Thus, as well as psychological and sociological dimensions to the interpretation of Paul, there are important anthropological dimensions also.

2. The Advantages of Social-Scientific Interpretation. Before proceeding to specific case studies of the application of the social sciences to the interpretation of Paul, it may be worth summarizing at a general level the advantages and disadvantages of the method. I begin with the advantages.

2.1. Synchronic Relations. As implied already, social-scientific interpretation is a natural development of the historical interpretation of Paul. If historical and literary-historical method helps us to decipher not only the meaning of Paul's letters but also the world of people and events to which the letters refer, then these other human sciences help us to take that process further. They make possible what anthropologist C. Geertz calls "thick description" in the interpretation of the world behind the text. Thus, where historical analysis focuses on diachronic relations, on relations of cause-and-effect over time, social-science analysis draws particular attention to synchronic relations, to the way meaning springs from interpreting the relation of one social actor to another within the complex web of culturally-determined social systems and patterns of communication.

For example, where historical criticism of Paul's letters seeks to answer questions of authorship, chronology,* sequence, place of writing, identity of addressees and the like, social-science criticism seeks to determine why Paul writes letters at all, what function letters play in relation to Paul's identity and authority as an apostle,* who needed letters of recommendation and for what purpose (cf. Rom 16:1-2), what factors influenced Paul's decision to write rather than visit in person (cf. 2 Cor 10:1-12) and what factors influenced how Paul's letters were received (see further, Petersen 1985).

2.2. A Corrective to "Theological Docetism." Social-science criticism offers a corrective to interpretations of Paul which suffer from what has been called "theological docetism": the assumption that what are important about Paul and his letters are the theological ideas irrespective of their being embedded in the lives of people and communities—ideas like justification* by faith,* or reconciliation (see Peace, Reconciliation), or new creation* in Christ, or the gifts* of the Spirit,* or the church* as the body of Christ.* The tendency to abstract these doctrines from their concrete historical, social and cultural setting in the lives of Paul and his fellow believers is countered in a very positive and illuminating way by the determination of a social-scientific analysis to find the bodies in the body of Christ, to see how slave-master relations are affected by reconciliation, to see how justification affects who eats with whom and who sleeps with whom, and to observe whether women understand and practice the new creation in Christ differently from men and if so, why. In other words, Pauline Christianity comes to be seen no longer as a kind of first-century theological seminary, but much more as an identity and commitment which groups of people are developing in the context of a common life, where the things that are important are, not just beliefs absorbed somehow on their own, but beliefs which shape (and in turn are shaped by) the concerns, experiences, politics and obligations of everyday life (see further, Elliott 1981, 1-20).

2.3. Models for Filling the Gaps. The social sciences are important also in helping to fill the gaps in our understanding of Paul and his letters. Precisely because our knowledge is based on fragmentary texts—some of Paul's letters plus the second-hand evidence of the Acts of the Apostles and subsequent letters from members of the Pauline school—it is useful to have models of interpretation which allow the fragments to be pieced together into a larger explanatory whole in a way which, though hypothetical, is nevertheless subject to the controls of the interpretative models themselves and the analogies used. For example, the sociology of the sect has been deployed to help answer such questions as, What was it like to become a Christian in the first century? Why are the language and thought forms of apocalyptic* so prevalent in Paul's letters? How did conversion affect household* relations? Why is there such a tension in Paul's teaching between freedom and conformity? Why is eating meat offered to idols so controversial, and why does Paul take an accommodating line (cf. 1 Cor 8) whereas the writer of the Apocalypse is so adamant in his opposition (cf. Rev 2:14, 20)? By drawing attention to the importance of boundary definition and boundary maintenance for the survival of small religious groups, the social sciences make possible a more holistic interpretation of Pauline Christianity as well as opening up fresh insights on old and often unresolved problems.

2.4. Understanding Ourselves as Readers. Another gain from the social sciences is the contribution they make to our self-understanding as the readers of Paul's letters. The temptation for any reader of Scripture is to find there a reflection of their own image. The Lutheran is likely to find the apostle of justification by faith; the charismatic will find the Paul who teaches about "spiritual gifts"; the Protestant will find Paul the preacher and teacher of the crucified Christ; the Roman Catholic will find Paul the apostle who, along with Peter and the other apostles, establishes the Church and teaches the sacraments; the feminist is likely to find Paul the liberationist or Paul the misogynist; and so on. Because the social sciences draw systematic attention to the sociological dimensions of the world behind the text, they raise simultaneously the question, What are the sociological dimensions of the world in front of the text, the world of the reader? To what extent are the ways we read and interpret Paul affected by the social determinants of our own identity, such as gender, class, race and religion? An awareness of this kind helps the reader avoid unconscious ethnocentric or "tribal" interpretations of Paul, while at the same time opening up the possibility of appropriating Paul more responsibly.

2.5. Gains for Theology and Ethics. A final advantage worth mentioning is the gain for theology and ethics.* Given the pivotal place of Paul in the formation of the beliefs, practices and self-understanding of followers of Christ, both in the first century and subsequently, it is essential for the integrity of Christian faith and discipleship that the truth of Paul's testimony to Christ, in all its dimensions, be subject to the scrutiny of all the disciplines of critical inquiry, including the social sciences. Faith seeking understanding (to use Saint Anselm's definition of theology) must include faith seeking social-scientific understanding. At some points this may help interpreters to see that the truth of Paul's testimony stands up to scrutiny well—as, for example, the primacy he gives to love (agapē) as the defining characteristic of Christian community (cf. 1 Cor 13). At other points it may lead interpreters to question the truth of Paul's testimony—as, for example, the teaching he gives on male "headship"* and symbols of gender differentiation, in 1 Corinthians 11:2-16 and 14:33-36.

3. Problems in Social-Scientific Interpretation.

If there are clear gains in using social-science models as heuristic devices in Pauline interpretation, there are difficulties and dangers as well—though these are not necessarily unique to social-scientific interpretation.

3.1. Anachronism. One problem is that of anachronism, of using sociological models and methods which have taken shape in the analysis of modern organizations, groups or societies and using them as tools of analysis for the interpretation of groups and societies in Mediterranean antiquity. This criticism has been made, for example, of attempts such as that of J. G. Gager to describe earliest Christianity as a millenarian movement on the analogy of nineteenth- and twentieth-century cargo cults studied by anthropologists like K. Burridge and P. Worsley. It has been made also of the application of E. Troeltsch's sect-church typology (taken further by H. R. Niebuhr and B. Wilson, among others) to developments in social patterns in the early church.

3.2. Circular Reasoning. A second problem is methodological also: that of circularity, of beginning with a social-scientific model and finding that the model is strangely self-authenticating, especially when the evidence is fragmentary. E. Gellner has argued persuasively that psychological and psychoanalytic theories are prone to this danger, not least because evidence which might appear counter-factual can be explained away within the terms of the theory itself, as "resistance" or "transference" or "regression" or, more generally, a manifestation of "the unconscious." The issue here, of course, is that the theory is not open to falsification. By being able to explain so much, it is in danger of not explaining anything at all. As another example of circularity, attempts to interpret Paul in terms of M. Weber's sociology of charismatic authority suffer from the problem that Weber's typology is itself rooted in his own study of primitive Christianity.

3.3. Claiming Too Much. Another problem for social-scientific exegesis is its proneness to claim too much, the result of which is to reduce a particular historical-religious phenomenon to its purported sociological determinants. Functionalist sociology is especially open to this problem, as can be seen in W. Meeks' innovative attempt to explain conversion to Paul's churches as a function of members' experiences of "status inconsistency" in the wider world (Meeks 1983). On this view, the outsiders who were attracted to Paul's gospel joined the Christian gatherings because they found there an ethos and identity which resolved the tensions of status and identity they experienced outside the gatherings. Such an hypothesis is valuable in so far as it draws attention to the possible—even likely—influence of hidden psycho-social and socio-economic forces on converts to Christianity. It is problematic, however, to the extent that it draws attention away from the participants' own ways of seeing things and plays down the intellectual, spiritual/mystical and emotional dimensions of the transformation which conversion doubtless involved (cf. 1 Thess 1:9-10; Gal 1:6-17; Phil 3:2-11).

3.4. The Limitations of Statistics. A related problem is that social science theories tend to operate on the basis of statistically assessed judgments about what is normal in a group or society—hence the importance of the questionnaire in social-science data gathering. Not only is it obvious that such procedures are difficult to apply in the study of antiquity: it is also the case that such procedures have an in-built bias against the unique, the particular and the creative role of the individual. Thus, for example, while Marxist social theory may be illuminating in setting the rise and development of Christianity within the macro-social context of a purported class struggle in the ancient world, it is likely to do less than justice to the interpretation of the gospel and mission of that most idiosyncratic figure, Paul.

3.5. Post-Enlightenment Presuppositions. Finally, it is important to be aware of the fact that, like all theories of interpretation, the social sciences have a history. Their roots lie in post-Enlightenment atheism and the hermeneutics of suspicion, according to which theology and religion have an epiphenomenal status only as the products of other forces and interests, whether the human unconscious (Freud), class conflict (Marx), the maintenance of society (Durkheim), the legitimation of patriarchal domination (feminism) or whatever. Interpreters of Paul who stand within a Christian faith tradition need to be aware of this history. Such an awareness might have at least two effects. On the one hand, it will act as a safeguard against allowing the agenda in Pauline interpretation to shift unwittingly in a secularizing direction, away from the evangelical imperatives of every community of faith for which the letters of Paul are part of the canon of Scripture and a constant source of inspiration. On the other hand, in so far as atheism and the hermeneutics of suspicion have developed often as a reaction against what J. Bowker calls religion's "licensed insanities," then it may be that the interpreter of Paul will welcome hermeneutical insights from the social sciences which make possible a more clear-sighted engagement with the truth of Paul's testimony and with perversions of it.

4. Case Studies in Social-Scientific Interpretation.

Perhaps the best way to see what is involved in this kind of approach to Paul is to take specific examples as case studies. Other surveys of this kind tend to proceed by looking at the work of leading scholars in the field of social-scientific exegesis (e.g., Garrett). The present account will consider instead a series of topics or themes in Paul's letters.

4.1. Paul's Theology of the Cross. The message of the cross and Christ crucified is central to Paul's understanding of the gospel (cf. 1 Cor 1:17—2:5; Rom 8:31-34; see Cross, Theology of the). For the contemporary theologian this is a foundational doctrine of the Pauline corpus, and rightly so. From the perspective of the social sciences, however, the doctrine of the cross is also and at the same time a social construct, part of a web of meanings embodied in social patterns and social relations. The power* of the message of the cross to "save" (1 Cor 1:18) is not only a spiritual/mystical power: it is cultural and social as well. Its structure, novelty and rhetorical* force as the negation, reversal or transformation of the dominant cultural values of Paul's world (cf. 1 Cor 1:22-25) provided the basis for developing an alternative symbolic world and an alternative society (the ekklēsia) with its own group boundaries, social patterns, leadership structure, ethos, moral order, vocabulary, worship and behavioral norms.

Furthermore, if we ask why it is so central to the preaching and self-understanding of Paul, and why he defends his gospel so vigorously on this score, the answer may be seen to be a matter, not only of what Paul regarded as the truth about God and Christ, but also a matter of Paul's social relations with the various Christian communities in which he claimed authority* as an apostle. Paul's gospel and Paul's authority are entwined inextricably (cf. Gal 1:6-17). His doctrine of the cross and his role and status in the Christian societies as an apostolos are two sides of the same coin; and Paul's authority depended upon his ability to mediate effectively the message of the cross along with its cultural and socio-economic corollaries. This he attempted to do by preaching it (with whatever lack of rhetorical finesse, cf. 1 Cor 2:3-4), teaching and writing letters about it, and by embodying it in his own apostolic lifestyle and person. It is no coincidence, therefore, that Paul "boasts" of his experiences of suffering* and humiliation (cf. 1 Cor 4:9-13; 2 Cor 4:7-12; 6:3-10; 11:21b-33), for it is these experiences which allow him to align himself most closely with the crucified Christ and to claim the authority to mediate Christ most effectively to his fellow-believers. This he does through the imitatio Pauli—"Be imitators of me, as I am of Christ" (1 Cor 11:1; cf. Phil 3:17; 4:9; see Imitation).

The limits of this kind of approach become apparent if it is claimed that Paul's preaching of the cross is a matter only of his personal authority as an apostle, and that the truth of the message is a matter only of its effectiveness in making possible social innovation. But this kind of reduction along functionalist lines is not integral to the approach per se. On the other hand, the potential benefit of a social-science reading is that the interpreter is provided with a method which opens up the cultural and social corollaries and connections of Paul's gospel. From being an important but rather disembodied doctrine, the cross comes to be seen also as a social reality embodied (both metaphorically and literally) in the self-understanding and social patterns of the first Christians and one of their leading apostles (see further, Barton 1982; Meeks 1982).

4.2. The Resurrection of Christ. Paul's doctrine of the resurrection* of Christ may be interpreted also in social-scientific terms. Traditionally this doctrine has been approached in terms of questions of historicity (the "what actually happened?" type of question) or of systematic theology (the "what does this tell us about God/Christ/eschatology/etc.?" type of question). These are central and entirely legitimate concerns to do, at least in part, with the truth claims of Christian faith for which the witness of Paul is crucial. But it is legitimate also to ask whether the meaning and significance of Christ's resurrection is exhausted by these traditional approaches. Is not Paul's belief in the resurrection of Christ as much a part of the social reality of Paul and his churches as the doctrine of the cross and, if so, in what sense? These are social-science questions, and a number of answers are possible (cf. Meeks 1982; Barton 1984).

First, the resurrection of Christ by God provides the raison d'être of the fundamental innovation in social patterns represented by the Christian community. In Romans 4:16-25 Paul argues that, just as the "resurrection" of the "dead" (i.e., impotent) bodies of Abraham* and Sarah made possible the creation of an elect people, so the resurrection of the dead Jesus makes possible the fulfillment of the promise to Abraham in the creation of the community of faith consisting now of Gentiles as well as Jews. The God "who gives life to the dead and calls into existence the things that do not exist" (Rom 4:17) is the God who has called into existence this new, universalist community of the justified, believed hitherto to be an ideal attainable only in the eschatological future. In terms of the sociology of knowledge, therefore, the resurrection constitutes the "sacred canopy" (so P. Berger) of the Christian conventicles. It legitimates their existence by reference to an act of God, and provides the foundation for their charismatic and novel form of society.

Second, the particularity of Paul's resurrection belief—that God had raised none other than Jesus—gives a particularity to the community. The elaboration of the meaning of the resurrection for Jesus is, at the same time, an elaboration of its meaning for the community of believers in Jesus. To put it another way, the community's self-understanding is mirrored in and enlarged by its representations of the crucified and risen Christ. Thus, according to Romans 1:4, Jesus was "designated Son of God" by his resurrection from the dead. It is noteworthy that the name given to believers corresponds directly. They are "sons of God," "children of God" and "fellow heirs with Christ" (Rom 8:14-17; see Adoption, Sonship). The identity of the risen one is determinative of the identity of the communities of believers in him. Furthermore, authority in the community is of a particular kind also. It lies in the hands of those who can claim to have been witnesses of the resurrection (cf. 1 Cor 9:1; 15:8-9).

Third, the resurrection, as a resurrection of one who had been crucified shamefully, serves as a powerful theodicy. The anomic threats to community life posed by the death of Jesus and by the suffering and death of other community members are overcome. The crucified leader is reincorporated into the community as its risen and heavenly Lord; and his triumph over death, repeatedly affirmed in creed,* hymn* and (baptismal) ritual, becomes a powerful symbol, both of the truth of the gospel and of the continuity and integrity of the community.

Finally, belief in the resurrection functions as a stimulus to social and cultural change in Pauline Christianity. The binary pattern, death-resurrection, is conducive to this, for it provides a structure of thought particularly amenable to the depiction of alternatives, progressions and transformations, all of which help to mark out the boundaries and contours of the new community. This transformation has a somatic aspect (cf. Rom 6:12-14). Necessarily, therefore, it also has a social aspect (cf. 1 Cor 6:12-20). But too much change or change of the wrong kind can be harmful: so it is noteworthy where Paul refrains from appealing to resurrection faith. A case in point may be Romans 13:1-7, where a pragmatic and conservative doctrine of political obedience is based on appeals to the sovereignty of God and the voice of conscience,* rather than to the perhaps more subversive doctrine of the resurrection (see Civil Authority).

More work needs to be done in this area, but once again it can be seen that the possibilities raised by questions from the social sciences are unhelpful only if they fundamentally skew the sense of Paul's letters or distract from their real meaning. The suggestions made here in relation to the resurrection, however, show to the contrary that the social sciences make an important contribution to what Meeks has termed the "hermeneutics of social embodiment" (Meeks 1986).

4.3. Financial and Material Support. To turn from the cross and resurrection to Paul's means of financial and material support may appear as a move from the sublime to the banal. But appearances may be deceptive; and it is precisely the social sciences which help the interpreter of Paul to see, not only that this is an important issue, but also why it is so (see Financial Support).

The careful reader of Paul's letters will be surprised, perhaps, by the extent of references to money matters and related issues such as patterns of subsistence. The great theologian of grace* and reconciliation seems unduly concerned with mundane matters of financial policy and employment (cf. 1 Thess 2:1-12; 1 Cor 4:8-13; 9:1-18; 2 Cor 8-9; 11:7-11). Why is this so? Why do money and work matter to Paul? Is it a clue to an important aspect of Paul's self-understanding as an apostle of Christ which we have overlooked in our one-eyed focus on Paul the theologian?

The subject surfaces very early in Paul's surviving correspondence. In 1 Thessalonians 2:3-12 Paul defends the authenticity of his gospel by claiming that he does not preach for pecuniary gain. His words are not a "cloak for greed"; and he does not use his apostolic authority to make financial and material demands upon his audience. So there is a clear link in Paul's apostolic self-understanding between the legitimacy of his message and the pattern of his material subsistence. Paul knows that money speaks. Above all, by maintaining his financial independence, Paul is able to protect and assert the independence and integrity of his gospel. It is "the gospel *of God" (1 Thess 2:2) and is neither subject to nor influenced by financial transactions: so it is not vulnerable to the charge of being shaped and fashioned in order "to please people" (1 Thess 2:4). Further, Paul himself is an "apostle of Christ" (1 Thess 2:6). He does not belong to a human benefactor, but to a heavenly benefactor; and his financial independence helps to express and guarantee that. Paul knows very well that money is a source of power and influence, that accepting and giving money creates obligations between people and binds them together in relations of subordination and domination. So he works for himself: "we worked night and day, that we might not burden any of you, while we preached to you the gospel of God" (1 Thess 2:9).

More analysis of a social-scientific kind needs to be done in what we can see now to be a highly illuminating aspect of Paul's missionary* practice. The most important contributions so far have been made by B. Holmberg (1978), R. Hock (1980) and G. Theissen (1982). They show that Paul's means of support are related intimately to the integrity of his gospel and the legitimacy of his apostleship, and that, by working sacrificially to support himself, Paul established a consistency between his own practice and the gospel he preached (cf. 1 Thess 2:8). Gospel and apostle are one: and Paul's refusal to conform to cultural norms which disparaged manual labor as demeaning, both expressed and embodied the culture-transforming insights of the gospel he preached. Furthermore, by offering the gospel "free of charge" (1 Cor 9:18) on the basis of his own labors in the workshop as a tentmaker* or leatherworker, Paul was able to reach those at the bottom of the social scale. For here was a gospel which did not entail entry into a burdensome financial tie, and it was offered by one who was himself a manual worker. Is it surprising, therefore, that the apostle who is able to step down in the world in order to gain the majority of people (i.e., the poor), is the one who also undertakes another financial obligation—the collection—for the impoverished believers in the Jerusalem church (cf. 2 Cor 9)? Perhaps it is worth observing that at this point in the interpretation of Paul, a significant convergence of interest between the social sciences and the theology of liberation becomes possible in a way which might not otherwise have been the case.

4.4. Food and Table Fellowship. Another mundane matter which appears to demand a considerable amount of Paul's attention has to do with food,* eating and meals. Such matters seem almost to dominate Paul's dealings with the Christians at Corinth (cf. 1 Cor 8:1-13; 9:4, 7, 8-12, 13-14, 22; 10:1-31; 11:17-34); but are not confined there, as Romans 14 shows. Traditionally, and quite properly, interpretation of these texts has focused on a range of important issues. First, there are historical-exegetical issues, such as, Who are the "weak" and the "strong"?* or, What is the nature of the purported gnostic heresy which Paul is attempting to combat? and so on. Second are theological issues, such as Paul's understanding of the Lord's Supper* in 1 Corinthians 10 and 11, or Paul's idea of the role of conscience* in the life of Christian discernment, or Paul's doctrine of the church.* Third, there are moral and pastoral issues to do with the problem of "the weaker brother" and the limits of Christian freedom, or the question of the limits of the believer's accommodation with "the world." Such concerns are entirely valid. From a social-science perspective, however, an important dimension is missing, a dimension which may throw new light on why questions relating to food and meals are given the prominence they are in Paul's letters, why such issues generate the anxiety that they do, and why Paul responds in the ways he does.

From a social-scientific point of view, food and meals are a fundamental symbolic means by which a group or society expresses its values and identity. What is natural (food and the bodily ingestion of food) is transformed into something cultural by being made to carry and express social meanings. As social anthropologists like C. Lévi-Strauss, M. Douglas and E. Leach have shown, food constitutes a system of communication, and cooking and eating constitute a kind of language through which a group defines itself. There is a symbolic relationship between the food ingested into the physical body and the identity and self-understanding of the social body. To put it another way, food dealings are a barometer of social relations and a mechanism for creating or destroying sociability. How food communicates—the semiotics of food—is enormously various. But, in general, it has to do with: (1) the type of food and drink consumed or abstained from—"clean" or "unclean," meat or vegetable, cooked or raw, alcoholic or non-alcoholic, etc.; (2) the time and frequency of eating (or fasting); (3) the time of and time taken for meal preparation; (4) the quantity of food consumed; (5) with whom meals are shared and who is excluded from the meal; (6) the symbolic geography of the meal—who sits where and why, where women sit in relation to men, whether the meal is taken in private or in public, etc.; (7) the clothes worn by participants; (8) appropriate sounds or silences at the meal; and so on (see further, Barton 1986).

When seen in this light, the degree of attention Paul gives to instructing his groups in the right ordering of their table fellowship becomes much more intelligible. We see, for example, that where eating meat consecrated to idols* is in danger of conveying the message that the all-important boundary between allegiance to idols and allegiance to the lordship of Christ has been compromised, Paul calls for extreme vigilance and, where necessary, separation. Where the believers' meals express only faction and division, Paul calls for a table fellowship which fosters and expresses solidarity. Where the meals become an opportunity for conspicuous consumption in a way which separates the rich members from the poor, Paul calls for self-control and other-regarding hospitality. Above all, Paul institutes a different kind of meal: the "Lord's meal" (kyriakon deipnon). This meal functions, anthropologically speaking, as a ritual of incorporation. The eating together, the recitation of the Last Supper tradition, the sharing of "the bread" and "the cup," the remembering and proclaiming, and the acts of moral and social self-examination enable people from separate (and potentially competing) household groups to renegotiate their patterns of allegiance without the threat of humiliation and to reconstitute themselves as members of a new society which they could represent as a single, transformed household of faith based upon love.*

A social-science reading of Paul in this way is likely to be unhelpful only if it distracts from the profound theological, ecclesiological and ethical questions which are raised in a letter like 1 Corinthians. It can be argued to the contrary, however, that far from being a distraction, such a reading makes possible a greater depth in interpreting and appropriating Paul because the bones of Pauline doctrine are given flesh and blood and come to life in their social and cultural milieu. To shift the metaphor slightly, the body of Paul's thought is able to be related to Paul and his fellow believers as individual bodies and to Paul and his fellow believers as "the body of Christ"* within the larger body of the cities and societies in which they lived. An important lead in this direction in the interpretation of Paul has been provided in the last decade or so by B. L. Malina (1981), G. Theissen (1982), W. A. Meeks (1983), L. W. Countryman (1988) and J. H. Neyrey (1990).

4.5. Apostolic Authority and Church Order. As a final case study, the theme of Paul's apostolic authority and the question of order in Paul's churches is worth attention. This is an important theme theologically and ecclesiologically. Theologically, it bears on the authenticity of Paul's gospel and his witness to Christ and the weight to be accorded his letters and those letters attributed to him in the canon.* Ecclesiologically, it bears on the legitimacy of the whole Reformation tradition and the associated and subsequent attempts to define church order in terms of charisma rather than office, spirit rather than law.

What is striking if a social-scientific approach is taken, however, is how strongly the traditional scholarly debate has focused on Paul's ideas, and how little attention has been given to social phenomena—as if to imply that Paul's ideas somehow emerged unconnected and floating free from his social and historical context. The kinds of phenomena to which the social scientist draws attention are: (1) the distribution of power in and between Paul's groups, including the effects of the all-pervasive system of patron-client and benefactor relations in Roman antiquity; (2) relations between Paul's groups and the Jerusalem* church, including the significance of Paul's collection* for Jerusalem; (3) the effects of differences of wealth, rank, status, gender and ethnicity on roles and functions in the churches; (4) the influence on the churches of patterns of social relationship and communal order practiced in the society at large—whether those of the city (polis) or the voluntary association (collegium, synagōgē, etc.) or the household* (oikos); (5) the role of Paul's coworkers,* emissaries and local representatives; (6) the means of communication and their relative efficacy, including Paul's own letters and his visits in person; (7) the evident willingness of Paul to adopt a conspicuously liminal lifestyle—culturally anomalous, socio-politically provocative, financially independent, transient, physically dangerous and so on.

Important contributions of both a social-history kind (e.g., Martin 1990) and a social-scientific kind (e.g., Holmberg 1978; Petersen 1985; Watson 1986; MacDonald 1988) have been made in this area in the last two decades especially. The benefits are evident. First, such approaches reveal the complexity of Paul's apostolic authority and of church order in Paul's groups (see Church Order). They show that attention to what Paul teaches is not a sufficient basis for an adequate interpretation of Pauline ecclesiology. Indeed, from a social-science perspective, to use a category like "ecclesiology" is to risk at the outset reducing a very complex and multifaceted social reality to a one-dimensional, doctrinal frame of reference.

Second, such approaches help counter an often apologetic and polemical idealizing of Paul's apostolic authority and of the life of Paul's groups. This is a very strong tendency among those for whom Paul as "apostle of liberty" or "apostle of the free Spirit" can be appealed to as a basis for justifying—rightly or wrongly—informal, small-group religion over against hierarchical, institutionalized religion (see Early Catholicism). It is a strong tendency also among those who want to denigrate one kind of church as "legalistic" or "tradition-bound" (after the pattern imagined to be that of the Jerusalem church) in favor of another kind of church which is "Spirit-led" and "participatory" (after the pattern imagined to be that of Paul and his groups).

Third, social-science approaches allow us to see that the process of institutionalization or (to use M. Weber's term) routinization which is evident in the Pauline and post-Pauline period is not necessarily a retrograde development, a fall from a charismatic golden age. On the contrary, the charismatic authority of Paul was related intimately to traditional and institutional kinds of authority (in Antioch and Jerusalem) from the very beginning; and it can be argued that routinization may have been essential if the originating impulse and impetus of the gospel was to be preserved and passed on.

5. Conclusion.

Approaches to NT interpretation from a social-science perspective are burgeoning and have begun to make a significant impact on our understanding of Paul and his letters (see further, Barton 1992). It remains here to venture a suggestion for continuing debate and possible ways forward. The proposal is that more attention needs to be given to the history and practice of Pauline interpretation from a specifically social-scientific point of view. In other words, sociological interpretation of Paul needs to be accompanied by sociological interpretation of Paul's readers and interpreters.

Such a process may make us more aware of how, in times past and present, the apostle Paul and the churches of Paul have been made captive—wittingly and unwittingly, for good and ill—to the ideological interests of his interpreters. K. Stendahl made an important beginning in this regard in his essay, "Paul and the Introspective Conscience of the West" (1963, in Stendahl 1977), where he argues that Paul's doctrine of justification* has been misrepresented by being made captive to an Augustinian and subsequently Lutheran and (later still) Freudian anthropology focused on the introspective conscience of the individual. More recently, feminist and liberation interpreters have used insights drawn from sociology of knowledge to question the adequacy of (respectively) androcentric and First-World interpretations of Paul and to make possible a process of "conscientization" in ways that have potentially radical implications (cf. Fiorenza 1983).

In a quite new way, then, the social sciences and the related hermeneutics of suspicion confront the interpreter of Paul with the problem of the theology and ethics of interpretation. This calls in turn for a degree of hermeneutical self-awareness on the part of interpreters which is both demanding and invigorating (cf. Thiselton 1992). The struggle to define the "center"* of Paul's theology and self-understanding as an apostle in his social and political context comes to be seen now as part of the struggle of the interpreter and the various communities of interpretation to define the center of their theology and self-understanding in their social and political contexts. What constitutes validity in this interpretative process has to do partly with the validity of the methods of interpretation used—and here models from the social sciences have their part to play alongside other methods of a historical and literary-exegetical kind. But it has to do also with (to use D. Kelsey's term) certain "policy decisions" on the part of the interpreter and the community to which he or she belongs. That is where the theology and ethics of interpretation are involved and where, again, the social sciences have a significant role to play.

See also APOSTLE; AUTHORITY; BODY OF CHRIST; CHURCH ORDER AND GOVERNMENT; CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE; ESCHATOLOGY; FINANCIAL SUPPORT; FOOD OFFERED TO IDOLS AND JEWISH FOOD LAWS; HERMENEUTICS/INTERPRETING PAUL; SOCIAL SETTING OF MISSION CHURCHES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. S. C. Barton, "Paul and the Cross: A Sociological Approach," Theology 85 (1982) 13-19; idem, "Paul and the Resurrection: A Sociological Approach," Religion 14 (1984) 67-75; idem, "Paul's Sense of Place: An Anthropological Approach to Community Formation in Corinth," NTS 32 (1986) 225-46; idem, "The Communal Dimension of Earliest Christianity: A Critical Survey of the Field," JTS 43 (1992) 399-427; L. W. Countryman, Dirt, Greed and Sex (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); J. H. Elliott, A Home for the Homeless (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1981); E. S. Fiorenza, In Memory of Her (New York: Crossroad, 1983); J. G. Gager, Kingdom and Community: The Social World of Early Christianity (Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice-Hall, 1975); S. R. Garrett, "Sociology of Early Christianity," ABD VI.89-99; R. F. Hock, The Social Context of Paul's Ministry (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980); B. Holmberg, Paul and Power (Lund: Gleerup, 1978); M. Y. MacDonald, The Pauline Churches (Cambridge: University Press, 1988); B. L. Malina, The New Testament World (Atlanta: John Knox, 1981); D. B. Martin, Slavery as Salvation (New Haven: Yale University, 1990); W. A. Meeks, "The Social Context of Pauline Theology," Int 37 (1982) 266-277; idem, The First Urban Christians (New Haven: Yale University, 1983); idem, "A Hermeneutics of Social Embodiment," HTR 79 (1986) 176-86; J. H. Neyrey, Paul, in Other Words (Louisville: Westminster/John Knox, 1990); N. R. Petersen, Rediscovering Paul: Philemon and the Sociology of Paul's Narrative World (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); K. Stendahl, Paul Among Jews and Gentiles (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); G. Theissen, The Social Setting of Pauline Christianity (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1982); A. C. Thiselton, New Horizons in Hermeneutics (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1992); F. Watson, Paul, Judaism and the Gentiles (Cambridge: University Press, 1986).

S. C. Barton

SON OF GOD

The divine sonship of Jesus is a major component of Paul's christology,* though in Paul's letters the references to Jesus as God's "Son" (seventeen times in the entire traditional Pauline corpus and only four instances of the full title "Son of God") are considerably fewer than Paul's many designations of Jesus as "Lord"* and "Christ."* Some have alleged that the idea of Jesus' divine sonship was an appropriation of pagan religious traditions, and that Paul thereby presented Jesus after the fashion of Greco-Roman cult deities (see Religions, Greco-Roman), but the evidence concerning the pagan religious background and Paul's use of the divine "Son" language goes against this.

Paul did not employ the language of divine sonship primarily to claim that Jesus was divine. Essentially Paul's references to Jesus as God's "Son" communicate Jesus' unique status and intimate relationship with God.* But the contexts of these references supply several additional and more particular nuances to the term. In some passages Jesus is presented as God's regally enthroned Son, drawing upon OT traditions of the Davidic king as "Son" of God (e.g., Ps 2:6-7; see Exaltation and Enthronement). In others Paul seems to allude to the offering of Isaac (Gen 22) to represent Jesus' death as the supreme act of redemptive love (e.g., Rom 8:32). Also Paul presents God's Son as the one sent forth to provide the standing with God for which the Torah was incapable. And Paul also portrays Jesus' divine sonship as the pattern for, and basis of, the enfranchisement of Christians as "sons of God."

1. Background
2. Jesus
3. Jesus' Divine Sonship Outside Paul
4. Paul's Usage

1. Background.

1.1. Pagan. In older history-of-religions scholarship, as represented by Bousset, Paul's references to "the Son of God" were taken as intended to denote Jesus as a divine being after the fashion of allegedly prominent pagan traditions about sons of gods with which Paul's Gentile converts would have been familiar (Bousset, 206-10). Though others (e.g., Schoeps) have repeated this viewpoint, it is not persuasive in the light of the main body of scholarly analysis which has on the whole confirmed Paul's fundamental conceptual indebtedness to his Jewish tradition and his disdain for pagan religion (e.g., Blank, Hengel, Kim).

Moreover, Bousset's idea that to communicate his message among his pagan converts Paul misguidedly appropriated pagan traditions that produced a fundamentally new christology is not borne out by a careful reading of what Paul says about Jesus or by the relevant evidence from Greco-Roman pagan religion. As Nock (1972) and Hengel (21-41) have shown, it is difficult to find true Greco-Roman parallels that would account for Paul's view of Jesus as God's "Son" or render it more intelligible to Paul's Gentile converts. The human race could be referred to as offspring of Zeus or other gods, but this generality seems irrelevant to the particular significance Paul attached to Jesus as God's unique Son. A great man (e.g., Alexander the Great) might be styled as a son of a god, but this appears to have been essentially an honorific gesture in recognition of some quality in the man such as wisdom or military prowess, and it is not clear that the man so designated was really thought of as anything other than an exceptionally impressive human being.

In fact the designation "son of god" was not common in Greco-Roman paganism and seems to have been used as a title only by Roman emperors (Latin divi filius rendered in Greek as theou huios). The deities of the so-called "mystery cults," for example, to which the early history-of-religions school attached such importance, were not referred to as "son of god." Any influence of Roman emperor devotion upon early christology was probably much later than Paul and likely involved Christian recoil from what was regarded as blasphemous rather than as something to be appropriated (e.g., Cuss). Nock's judgment concerning the Pauline use of "Son of God" still holds, ". . . the attempts which have been made to explain it from the larger Hellenistic world fail" (Nock 1964, 45).

1.2. Jewish. Consequently, most scholars have turned to the Jewish sources as more directly relevant background for Paul's references to Jesus' divine sonship. In Paul's Bible, the OT, the language of divine sonship is used with three types of referents. In passages that likely reflect an older usage, angels are referred to as "sons of God" (e.g., Gen 6:2-4; Deut 32:8; Ps 29:1; 89:6). Although in a number of cases in the LXX the Hebrew or Aramaic phrase "son(s) of God" is rendered in Greek as "angel(s) of God" (e.g., Deut 32:8; Job 1:6; 2:1; Dan 3:25), this is not consistently done (cf. Deut 32:43 LXX), showing that heavenly beings could still be referred to as "sons of God" among Greek-speaking Jews of the Greco-Roman period.

In some OT passages the Davidic king is referred to as God's "son" (2 Sam 7:14; Ps 2:7; 89:26-27). Psalm 2:7 refers to God having "begotten" the king, but it appears that this poetic language was a way of asserting his divine legitimation, with his enthronement being taken as a kind of divine adoption.

Royal Davidic traditions issued into Jewish messianic hopes of Paul's time. There is, however, no unambiguous evidence that the expression "son of God" was a messianic title, and it is difficult to say how widely the concept of divine sonship was a part of messianic expectation. The document known as 2 Esdras or 4 Ezra has several references to a messianic "son" of God in the surviving versions of this writing (e.g., Latin filius in 7:28; 13:32, 37, 52; 14:9), but it is now commonly accepted that these all are Christian translations of the Greek term pais ("servant"), which in turn may have rendered the equivalent Hebrew term 'ebed. Similarly 2 Baruch 70:9 refers to "my Servant, the Anointed One."

The Qumran* text 4Q174 (4QFlorilegium) contains a commentary on 2 Samuel 7:11-14, where God promises to make David's descendant God's "son," and the commentary applies the passage to the royal messiah. Since first notices of its existence in 1972, the Qumran document 4Q246 has received a great deal of attention because it refers to a ruler who will be acclaimed with the titles "son of God" and "son of the Most High," the same titles given to Jesus in Luke 1:32-35 (see, e.g., Fitzmyer, 90-94). Owing to the fragmentary nature of the document, it is difficult to be certain, but the eschatological flavor makes it quite possible that this document furnishes further evidence that the attribution of divine sonship, including the use of the title "son of God," was part of the messianism of at least some Jews.

One of the ways Philo refers to the Logos is as God's "firstborn son" (e.g., Philo Som. 1.215; Conf. Ling. 146), but there seems to be no direct connection between this and Paul's use of the term for Jesus. Instead, Philo exhibits an independent appropriation of an OT designation of the king (Ps 89:27) and of Israel (Ex 4:22), which, however, may illustrate how biblical imagery and concepts could be adapted to later religious belief, as seems to be the case also in the NT.

In fact the most common applications of the concept of divine sonship in ancient Jewish texts are with reference to the righteous individual, righteous Jews collectively and Israel as God's chosen people. In a number of OT passages Israelites are called God's "sons" (Deut 14:1; Is 1:2; Jer 3:22; Hos 1:10) and collectively God's "firstborn" (Ex 4:22) and "son" (Hos 11:1). And in extra-canonical Jewish texts these applications are frequent: Wisdom 2:18; 5:5; Sirach 4:10; Psalms of Solomon 13:9; 18:4 (righteous individuals); Wisdom 12:21; 16:10, 26; 18:4, 13 (Israel). In Joseph and Asenath, likewise, the righteous Israelites are called "sons" of "the living God" or "the Most High" (Jos. and As. 16:14; 19:8), and Joseph (who seems to be an idealized representation of the righteous Jew or of Israel) is acclaimed several times as "son" and "firstborn son" of God (Jos. and As. 6:3-5; 13:13; 18:11; 21:4; 23:10).

Vermes (206-11) has cited rabbinic texts in which ancient Jewish holy men are referred to as a "son" of God in the sense of being especially favored by God. With due caution about using such late texts to illustrate first-century Jewish religion, we may take the rabbinic figures Vermes cites as examples of the application to particular righteous individuals of the category of divine sonship as affirmed in Wisdom of Solomon and Sirach mentioned earlier.

2. Jesus.

It is widely accepted among scholars that Jesus spoke of God as "Father" (Aramaic 'abbā') in ways that expressed unusual familiarity and intimacy, and that he conducted himself in ways that reflect a profound sense of a special status and responsibility toward God. It is reasonable, therefore, to consider whether these features of Jesus' ministry might have influenced the view of Jesus as God's Son in Paul and early Christianity. For the present purpose we can make only a few relevant observations.

First, it seems likely that Jesus' own religious parlance and practice would have been of intense interest and relevance for his followers, both during Jesus' ministry and, especially in light of the conviction that he had been resurrected,* in the early years afterward. Second, Paul's preservation of the Aramaic term abba in his Greek-speaking churches and his use of it in contexts mentioning Jesus' divine sonship (Rom 8:15; Gal 4:6, the earliest Christian references to the term) are probably best accounted for as indications that traditions about Jesus' relationship with God were known and were in fact influential in shaping the early Christian view of him as God's Son.

Early christology of course was mainly driven by the conviction that the crucified Jesus had been resurrected and exalted to heavenly glory. But it is likely also that the traditions stemming from Jesus' ministry encouraged especially the identification of him as God's "Son," though the meaning attached to that identification seems to have grown far more exalted in the light of his resurrection and heavenly glorification than was ever explicit or even possible in Jesus' own ministry.

3. Jesus' Divine Sonship Outside Paul.

3.1. Pre-Pauline Tradition. A number of scholars have argued that Paul's references to Jesus' divine sonship show earmarks of "pre-Pauline" belief in Jesus as God's "Son," especially Romans 1:1-4; 1 Thessalonians 1:10; Galatians 4:4-6; and Romans 8:3. It is, however, misleading to speak of a christological "formula" of the divinely-sent-forth Son in Paul, which some have alleged in Romans 8:3 and Galatians 4:4. These two Pauline references use different Greek verbs, and have in common only the concept of the Son being divinely sent from God, an obvious enough way of referring to a figure seen as operating on a divine mandate.

As for Romans 1:3-4, Hengel (59) and Scott (236) have noted that attempts to reconstruct the actual wording of a pre-Pauline creedal statement (see Creeds) from Romans 1:3-4 have amounted to unverifiable (and divergent) hypotheses. Nevertheless, the passage may well preserve basic pre-Pauline convictions about Jesus as Davidic heir by physical descent (kata sarka) now "appointed [horisthentos] the Son of God in/with power [en dynamei]" by virtue of his resurrection [ex anastaseōs]. Likewise, 1 Thessalonians 1:9-10, which refers to Jesus as God's Son who has been resurrected to heavenly status and will come as deliverer from eschatological wrath,* is widely regarded as evidence of "pre-Pauline" divine Son christology. But if these passages do preserve "pre-Pauline" tradition, Paul's appropriation of the traditions shows that he saw no essential discontinuity between his view of Jesus and that of his predecessors and of the Jewish-Christian churches such as the one in Jerusalem.

3.2. After Paul. Jesus' divine sonship is of considerable importance in the Synoptic Gospels, which were written after Paul's letters, and carries varying connotations in each of the Evangelists. In Matthew Jesus' divine sonship, though infrequently mentioned, has a very strong messianic connotation and connection (e.g., Mt 16:16), and the disciples acclaim him as God's Son (e.g., Mt 14:33). A similar messianic connotation to divine sonship appears in Luke (e.g., Lk 1:32-35). In Mark, however, the claim is closely connected with the secrecy of Jesus' true (transcendent) identity and (with the ironic exception in Mk 15:39) only God (Mk 1:11; 9:7) and demons (e.g., Mk 3:11; 5:7) recognize Jesus' divine sonship.

Jesus' divine sonship is important also in Hebrews, where his status as Son distinguishes him above prophets (Heb 1:1-2) and also angels (Heb 1:3-14; 2:5). Indeed, in Hebrews 1:2 the Son is "heir of all things," giving his sonship a cosmic-scale significance.

It is, however, in John that Jesus' divine sonship has a transcendent connotation expressed with an explicitness and emphasis unmatched in any other NT writing. From the Baptist's confession (Jn 1:34) to the climactic purpose statement in John 20:31, the Fourth Evangelist emphasizes that Jesus is to be recognized as God's Son. And he makes it explicit that the Son is of heavenly origin (e.g., Jn 1:14; 17:1-5). In John, Jesus' claim to be God's Son amounts to a claim to divinity, as illustrated by the charges of blasphemy from Jewish characters in the story (Jn 5:18; 10:36; 19:7).

This Johannine emphasis flowered in the faith of Christianity subsequently, for "Son of God" became the most favored way of referring to Jesus as divine and was used to distinguish Jesus' divinity from his human nature, as seen already in Ignatius (Eph. 20:2). As Dunn has noted, no other christological expression "has had both the historical depth and lasting power of 'Son of God' " (Dunn, 12). But we must be careful to determine Paul's connotations in referring to Jesus as God's Son without reading into it the way the term was used by later Christians.

4. Paul's Usage.

In the thirteen writings attributed to Paul in the NT, the title "the Son of God" is neither fixed nor frequently used, appearing only four times and in varying Greek word order (Rom 1:4; 2 Cor 1:19; Gal 2:20; Eph 4:13). In the remaining thirteen references to Jesus' divine sonship, we find "his Son" (Rom 1:3, 9; 5:10; 8:29, 32; 1 Cor 1:9; Gal 1:16; 4:4, 6; 1 Thess 1:10), "his own Son" (Rom 8:3), "the Son" (1 Cor 15:28) and "the Son of his love" (Col 1:13). The conviction that Jesus is God's Son was apparently what mattered to Paul, not so much the christological title or fixed verbal formulas to express that conviction.

In all of his references to Jesus as God's Son Paul uses the Greek definite article, not always easily represented in translations. The connotation of the definite article is that Paul views Jesus' divine sonship as unique, and does not accord Jesus membership in a class of other figures who may be regarded as sons of God such as we encounter in the Jewish or pagan sources (e.g., angels,* the righteous, great men, wonder workers; but see 4.5 below).

It is also important, as Hengel has pointed out, that Paul refers to Jesus as God's Son mainly (eleven times) in Romans and Galatians (Hengel, 7). Both the comparative infrequency and the distribution of Paul's references to Jesus as God's Son suggest that for Paul Jesus' divine sonship did not constitute an appropriation of a pagan mythological concept as the crucial means of justifying the worship* of the man Jesus among Gentile converts (contra Bousset, 208-9). Instead, Paul refers to God's Son in terms adapted from the Jewish background to make boldly exclusivist christological assertions in ways and contexts that interact directly with traditional Jewish concerns. These included the Torah (see Law), the unique significance of Israel,* messianic hopes and the fundamentally monotheistic outlook which Paul continued to share and promote in his churches (see God).

From the entire fabric of Paul's christology, it is apparent that Paul saw Jesus as participating in God's attributes and roles, as sharing in the divine glory* and, most importantly, as worthy to receive formal veneration with God in Christian assemblies (see Worship). So we may say that the one Paul called "the Son of God" was regarded by him as divine in some unique way. But neither in the Jewish background of Paul nor in his own usage (unlike John's) did the language of divine sonship in itself attribute divinity. In Paul's Jewish tradition to call a human figure God's "Son" meant primarily to attribute to him a special standing, status and favor with God. Paul's references to Jesus as the "Son" of God meant that Jesus possessed a unique standing, status and favor with God.

In order to determine specifically what Jesus' sonship connoted for Paul, we must look more closely at the references in question. We shall concentrate on references in the letters whose Pauline authorship is almost universally accepted (though Col 1:13 and Eph 4:13 in fact fit the categories established in the undisputed letters). We shall try to establish Paul's meaning by paying attention to the contexts.

4.1. The Gospel and the Son. In Romans 1:9 Paul refers to "the gospel* of his [God's] Son," an unusual phrase in Paul (in addition to the numerous references to "the gospel," cf. "the gospel of God," Rom 1:1; 15:16; 2 Cor 11:7; 1 Thess 2:2, 8, 9; and "the gospel of Christ," Rom 15:19; 1 Cor 9:12; 2 Cor 2:12; 10:14; Gal 1:7; Phil 1:27; 1 Thess 3:2). It appears that the phrase is connected with the nearby references to Jesus as God's Son (Rom 1:2-4), and with the larger discussion in Romans in which Jesus' divine sonship is mentioned a number of times (seven of the seventeen instances in the traditional Pauline corpus; cf. 2 Cor 4:4, where the unique phrase "the gospel of the glory of Christ" appears to be linked similarly with the contextual discussion of Christ's divine glory in 2 Cor 3:12—4:6). But, though unique here in Paul, "the gospel of his Son" shows that Paul could refer to his message and ministry* as concerned with Jesus' divine sonship. And the prominence given to Jesus' sonship in Romans and Galatians further suggests that the identification of Jesus as God's Son was more important to Paul than might at first be assumed, especially in portraying Jesus' redemptive significance in theocentric contexts and vis-à-vis Jewish religious themes.

This suggestion is underscored by Paul's description in Galatians 1:15-16 of the experience that turned him from opponent to apostle* of Jesus: God "was pleased to reveal his Son to me [en emoi]" (Gal 1:16). To be sure, Paul elsewhere refers to having seen "Jesus the Lord" (1 Cor 9:1) and includes himself in a list of those to whom "Christ" appeared (1 Cor 15:1-8). But Galatians 1:15-16 indicates that the experience in question included the realization that Jesus is God's unique Son (ton huion autou) and that his calling was to proclaim God's Son (Gal 1:16) specifically among the Gentiles.* Paul had certainly already heard Jewish-Christian claims about Jesus, which he probably regarded as repugnant glorification of a false prophet, and which likely formed part of his reason for zealously opposing Jewish Christians in the name of Jewish tradition (Gal 1:13-14). In ancient Jewish tradition to hail a despised figure as a son of God was to accede to the figure's divine legitimation and righteousness (e.g., Wis 2:12-20; 5:1-8). Paul's reference to the revelation that Jesus is the Son of God (ton huion autou), therefore, can be taken as connoting that the experience involved for Paul a direct reversal of his view of Jesus, from false prophet to God's unique representative.

4.2. The Royal Son. In several passages Paul portrays Jesus in a royal status and role, drawing upon OT Davidic traditions and applying them to Jesus as royal-messianic "Son" of God. We have already noted two of these passages as possible evidence of "pre-Pauline" christology. In Romans 1:3-4 there are echoes of 2 Samuel 7:12-14. As "seed [sperma] of David," Jesus was "raised up [anastasis] from the dead" by God (cf. the LXX of 2 Samuel 7:12: "I will raise up [anastēsō] your seed [to sperma sou]"). And Jesus' appointment in power as divine Son in Romans 1:4 may echo God's promise in 2 Samuel 7:14, "I will be father to him and he will be to me a son." As well, we may have here an allusion to Psalm 2:7, where God announces that he has "begotten" the king as his Son (a symbolic description of the king's enthronement). And Paul's reference to his mission* to secure "obedience of faith among all the nations/Gentiles [ethnesin]" (Rom 1:5) may allude to God's promise to the royal "Son" in Psalm 2:8 to give "the nations [ethnē] as your inheritance."

In 1 Thessalonians 1:9-10, as in Romans 1:4, Jesus' sonship is mentioned in connection with God having resurrected [ēgeire] him from death. Although we do not have allusions to OT Davidic passages here, nevertheless as the divine Son who delivers from (divine) eschatological wrath (1 Thess 1:10), Jesus is given a messianic role that can be compared with messianic expectations at Qumran and in such documents as Psalms of Solomon 17—18. This eschatological flavor, plus the contrast between pagan "idols"* and "the living and true God" (1 Thess 1:9) all reflect strongly the Jewish religious background, providing further indication that the divine "Son" here who acts on God's behalf is, as in Romans 1:3-4, God's messianic representative.

Another reference to God's Son with a royal-messianic flavor is found in 1 Corinthians 15:24-28. Royal imagery abounds, with mention of a "kingdom"* (1 Cor 15:24), Christ reigning (1 Cor 15:25) and the putting of all "enemies under his feet" (1 Cor 15:25, an allusion to Ps 110:1, a Davidic royal psalm frequently cited and alluded to in the NT). After "all things" (including death, 1 Cor 15:26) have been subjected to this royal Son, he will then "be subjected" to God (1 Cor 15:28), a thought which further shows that the Son here is not a new and rival deity after the fashion of pagan mythology but functions (as the OT king and the messiah figures) on God's behalf. And, if Colossians be accepted as from Paul, the reference in Colossians 1:13 to "the kingdom of the Son of his [God's] love" likewise alludes to Jesus in royal-messianic dress.

Certainly the scope and basis of Jesus' sonship in Paul's references are far beyond that of the OT Davidic kings. In Jewish messianic expectations it is perhaps only in the "Elect One" of 1 Enoch (37—71) who sits on God's throne and seems to be clothed with transcendent attributes that we find anything approaching Paul's references to Jesus, the glorious and heavenly Son. And there is absolutely no parallel for the idea that the messianic figure was to be resurrected and thereby constituted God's Son who exercises divine power* and authority.* But in the passages considered Paul uses motifs, language and imagery from the Jewish royal-messianic tradition in expressing these bold beliefs about Jesus' exalted place in God's plan.

4.3. The Sacrificed Son. In at least three other passages Paul refers to Jesus as God's Son explicitly as given over, or having given himself, to redemptive death.* A striking example is Romans 8:32, where Paul says that God "did not withhold his own Son but gave him up for us all." The statement is made even more stunning theologically if one notices that "gave up" (paradidōmi) is the same verb Paul uses sonorously three times in Romans 1:24-28 to refer to God giving up sinful humanity to judgment,* making Jesus' death just as much a deliberate and solemn act of God as the divine wrath against human sin referred to in Romans 1. In Romans 8:32, however, the Son is given up for the sake of sinful humans, and provides assurance that they will not be condemned and separated from God.

But what is the significance of designating as God's "Son" the one given over in Romans 8:32? In Romans 4:25 Paul uses the verb paradidōmi to refer to "Jesus our Lord" being given up to death "for our transgression," and in Romans 8:34, shortly after the statement we are examining, Paul mentions "Christ Jesus who died," illustrating Paul's flexibility in language and christological titles referring to Jesus' death. The reason for the choice of "Son" in Romans 8:32 seems to be that Paul here wishes to emphasize God's personal investment, so to speak, in Jesus' sacrificial death: It is the death of God's Son (see Schweizer, 384).

Paul appears to have used a bold scriptural allusion to underscore this point. The phrase "did not withhold [ouk epheisato] his own Son" in Romans 8:32 seems intended to recall the words of the angel to Abraham,* "you have not withheld [ouk epheisō] your son, your only son" (Gen 22:12, 16), likening thereby God's offering up of Jesus to Abraham's offering of Isaac.

It is this emphasis on what Jesus' death represented for God that also likely accounts for Paul's reference to "the death of his [God's] Son" in Romans 5:10. The context illustrates Paul's general tendency to use the title "Christ" in references to Jesus' death (Rom 5:6, 8; and cf. the fuller "our Lord Jesus Christ" in Rom 5:11), especially in christocentric statements that portray the death as an act of Jesus. But Romans 5:10-11 has a theocentric focus on reconciliation* of God's "enemies"* to God, and on God-directed rejoicing (Rom 5:11) in consequence of this reconciliation. That this has taken place through the death of God's Son emphasizes how much God has been directly involved in accomplishing this reconciliation.

In Galatians 2:20 Paul refers to "the Son of God who loved me and gave himself up [paradidōmi] for me," a statement emphasizing Jesus' active role in a larger christocentric context (Gal 1:15-21). The textual variant, "God and Christ" in place of "Son of God," though supported by several important Greek manuscripts, is probably a corruption of the original text. And so we are left to try to determine the significance of mentioning "the Son of God" here when seven other times immediately preceding and following Galatians 2:20 Paul calls him "Jesus Christ" (Gal 2:16), "Christ Jesus" (Gal 2:16) and "Christ" (Gal 2:16-19, 21).

The expression "the Son of God" emphasizes the very high divine favor and honor of the one whose love and self-giving is stated. And this description of Jesus also implicitly makes God a party to Jesus' redemptive actions, as is confirmed in the following statement (Gal 2:21) where Paul refers to "the grace of God" in connection with Jesus' death.

Given that Romans 8:32 shows that Paul could liken the death of God's Son to the offering of Isaac, it is also possible that Paul's reference in Galatians 2:20 to the self-giving of the Son of God shows an acquaintance with Jewish tradition about the story. Though the Genesis account is silent about Isaac's attitude, ancient Jewish tradition attributes to him an eager willingness to offer himself in obedience to God (e.g., Pseudo-Philo Bib. Ant. 18:5; 32:2-4; 40:2; Josephus Ant. 1.13.2-4 §§225-36).

4.4. The Son and the Torah. Scholars frequently point to Romans 8:3 and Galatians 4:4 as examples of a christological "formula" in which the Son is referred to as "sent" by God. But, as has already been indicated, the identification of a verbal "formula" in these passages is dubious. It is far more relevant that both of these references to the Son being sent are in contexts dealing with the Torah, the Jewish Law.* The sending of the Son in Romans 8:3-4 is precisely to overcome the inability of the Torah to save as described in Romans 7, and to make possible the fulfillment of the Torah's "just requirement" in the freedom* of the Spirit* given through the Son. And Galatians 4:4 mentions the Son being sent forth "to redeem those who were under the law" (the limitations of which are emphasized in Galatians 3:1—4:1) and to make possible their "adoption* as sons."

As well, in Romans 8:3 and Galatians 4:4 Paul emphasizes that the divine Son appeared in human form, which may allude to the idea of Jesus being an "incarnation" of the "pre-existent"* Son. But the humanity of the Son also means that the divinely initiated deliverance from the Torah's condemnation was effected by the Son within the sphere of human existence, specifically through his death.

4.5. The Son and God's Sons. Though he consistently designates Jesus as the divine Son with an exclusivity connoted, in several passages Paul implicitly or explicitly refers to the enfranchisement of the redeemed into fellowship* with Jesus and into a filial relationship with God patterned after Jesus' sonship (on this see esp. Byrne). Galatians 4:5 gives as the purpose of the sending of the Son "that we might receive sonship [huiothesia]" (see Adoption, Sonship), and the following verses refer to Christians as God's "sons" (huioi) who have received "the Spirit of his Son," who join the Son in calling upon God as "Abba, Father," and are now God's heirs. (And, as Gal 3:27-28 makes clear, the "sons" of God include both female and male on equal terms [hence one can, with the NRSV, translate huioi as "children"].)

In Romans 8 as well, Paul explicitly connects Jesus the Son with the sonship of Christians. After referring to the sending of the Son in Romans 8:3, Paul mentions the bestowal of the Spirit (Rom 8:5-13, explicitly linked with Jesus, "the Spirit of Christ," Rom 8:9), and refers to Christians as "sons of God" (Rom 8:14) who call to God as "Abba, Father" (Rom 8:15) and are "fellow heirs with Christ." And in Romans 8:18-27 Paul elaborates both present and future consequences of divine adoption. Then comes Romans 8:28-30, a very theocentric passage emphasizing God's redemptive initiative, in which the redeemed are said to have been "predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son, in order that he might be the firstborn within a large family" (Rom 8:29 NRSV). That is, the one divine Son here is the prototype as well as the agent through whom others are enfranchised as sons of God. The uniqueness of Jesus the Son is not restrictive but redemptive. The term *firstborn may allude to Exodus 4:22, applying to Jesus a title of Israel and connoting that he has become the basis of God's reconstituted people that includes both Jew and Gentile.

The remaining Pauline references to the Son reflect this idea of God enfranchising others through the unique Son into a standing likened to his. 1 Corinthians 1:9 describes Christians as called by God into the "fellowship/participation [koinōnia] of his Son," which suggests that their status is both dependent upon the Son and also a partaking in his filial status. And 2 Corinthians 1:19-20 probably is to be seen as alluding to something similar. The divine "yes" is in Jesus, the Son of God (2 Cor 1:19), because "all the promises of God find their Yes in him" (2 Cor 1:20). And this means that Christians are enfranchised as God's own through the Son (2 Cor 1:20b) and given the Spirit as guarantee of full eschatological salvation* (2 Cor 1:22). (The "knowledge of the Son of God" in Eph 4:13 is probably also an allusion to the idea of the redemption of the elect being patterned after Jesus' divine sonship.)

This idea of other sons or children of God is interesting in light of the strong connotation of the uniqueness of Jesus' divine sonship we have noted earlier. The resolution to the apparent tension seems to be that Paul consistently refers to the sonship of Christians as derived sonship, given through and after the pattern of Jesus, whereas Jesus is the original prototype, whose sonship is not derived from another.

See also ADOPTION, SONSHIP; CHRIST; CHRISTOLOGY; DEATH OF CHRIST; EXALTATION AND ENTHRONEMENT; FIRSTBORN; GOD; HOLY SPIRIT; IMAGE, IMAGE OF GOD; LORD; PRE-EXISTENCE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Blank, Paulus und Jesus (SANT 16; Munich: Kösel, 1968); W. Bousset, Kyrios Christos (Nashville: Abingdon, 1970 [1921]); B. Byrne, "Sons of God"—"Seed of Abraham" (AnBib 83; Rome: Pontifical Institute, 1979); O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament (London: SCM, 1963); D. Cuss, Imperial Cult and Honorary Terms in the New Testament (Paradosis 23; Fribourg: University of Fribourg, 1974); J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making (2d ed.; London: SCM, 1989); J. A. Fitzmyer, A Wandering Aramean: Collected Aramaic Essays (SBLMS 25; Missoula, MT: Scholars, 1979); M. Hengel, The Son of God (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); S. Kim, The Origin of Paul's Gospel (2d ed; WUNT 2/4; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1984); W. Kramer, Christ, Lord, Son of God (SBT 50; London: SCM, 1966); O. Michel, "Son," NIDNTT 3.607-68; A. D. Nock, " 'Son of God' in Pauline and Hellenistic Thought," in Essays on Religion and the Ancient World, ed. Z. Stewart (Oxford: Clarendon, 1972) 2.928-39; idem, Early Gentile Christianity and its Hellenistic Background (New York: Harper & Row, 1964); H. J. Schoeps, Paul (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1961); E. Schweizer et al., "υἱός, υἱοθεσία," TDNT VIII.334-99; J. M. Scott, Adoption as Sons of God (WUNT 2/48; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1992); G. Vermes, Jesus the Jew (New York: Harper & Row, 1973).

L. W. Hurtado

SONGS. See HYMNS, HYMN FRAGMENTS, SONGS, SPIRITUAL SONGS.

SONS OF ABRAHAM. See ABRAHAM.

SONSHIP. See ADOPTION, SONSHIP; SON OF GOD.

SOUL. See PSYCHOLOGY.

SPIRIT (HUMAN). See PSYCHOLOGY.

SPIRIT OF CHRIST. See HOLY SPIRIT.

SPIRIT OF GOD. See HOLY SPIRIT.

SPIRIT WORLD. See ANGELS, ARCHANGELS; DEMONS, EXORCISM; HOLY SPIRIT; MAGIC; PRINCIPALITIES AND POWERS; SATAN, DEVIL.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS. See CORINTHIANS, LETTERS TO THE; GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT.

SPIRITUAL SONGS. See HYMNS, HYMN FRAGMENTS, SONGS, SPIRITUAL SONGS.

SPIRITUALITY

Spirituality in Paul can best be summarized as an expression of affirmation to God,* a grateful "Yes" from the heart of a believer which, in the power of the Spirit, is manifested in act and attitude. The glory and the possibility of this "Yes" are grounded in God's "Yes" to the believer in Jesus Christ,* a "Yes" experienced and expressed by Paul (2 Cor 1:17-20) and set out in Romans 8 as the thrust of his life and teaching.

The affirmations of Pauline spirituality may be pictured as an ellipse representing the believer's life. The Holy Spirit* as the effective power at work in the believer elicits the believer's "Yes" to God, a "Yes" that is expressed in the interactive poles of the ellipse—(1) the privileged responsibilities of the child of God (especially the triad of prayer,* word and community, culminating in worship*), and (2) the comprehensive obedience represented by the fruit* of the Spirit.

1. Background
2. The Spirit of God and Spirituality

3. Pauline Spirituality: "Yes to God"
4. The Experiential Foundation of Pauline Spirituality
5. Union with Christ
6. The Practice of the Spirit
7. Spirituality and Sanctification
8. Sin and Sanctification
9. Imitation and Discipleship
10. The Triad of Prayer, Word and Community
11. Prayer as a Primary Paradigm of Spirituality
12. The Locus of Spirituality
13. The Fruit and Gifts of the Spirit
14. The Spirit and the Common Life
15. Gratitude: The Heartbeat of Pauline Spirituality
16. Summary

1. Background.

However one understands and defines the spirituality of Paul, there is general agreement that it was both noteworthy in itself and critical in shaping the spirituality of the Christian church. Paul called Christian believers to imitate* his apostolic life and service* to Christ—which he experienced in the power* of the Spirit—even as he was an imitator of Christ (e.g., 1 Cor 11:1; cf. 1 Thess 1:6). Other than Jesus Christ, worshiped and served as Lord over all, no other person has had a greater impact upon Christian spirituality than Paul.

The importance of Paul notwithstanding, the modern quest to understand Pauline spirituality takes place in a paradoxical setting. On the one hand, the word spirituality, though widely used today, finds no consensus regarding its general definition, let alone Pauline spirituality. (Indeed, spirituality often seems to be subject to mutually exclusive definitions.) Just as Christianity historically has been marked by considerable confessional and other differences, so there have been divergent understandings of Pauline spirituality. In fact, the variety of Christian denominations can plausibly be attributed to divergent interpretations of Pauline spirituality. Although some NT scholars locate the differences within Paul himself, the spirituality of Paul, like his theological perspective, has a coherence that is frequently overlooked.

The history of Pauline interpretation has unveiled the depth and breadth and complexity of Pauline thought—whether observed as theology or ethics* or spirituality. No one of these three perspectives on Paul stands in isolation from the others. The complexity of Paul is exemplified in the failure of Pauline scholars even to approach a consensus regarding the "center"* of Pauline thought. Since there is widespread agreement that "spirituality" has to do with the central and most urgent aspects of (Christian) existence, uncertainty regarding the so-called centrum Paulinum suggests the likelihood that interpreters will diverge in their understanding of Pauline spirituality. However, the problem runs deeper than this. Interpreters have not been unified in the way they approach the immediate reference point of spirit- in the term spirituality. Should those who wish to comprehend Pauline spirituality understand spirit- to refer to the human spirit or to the Holy Spirit? Surely the Pauline answer is the Holy Spirit.

Although the entire Pauline corpus must naturally provide the grist for understanding Pauline spirituality, Paul's letter to the Roman church, as the mature summary of his theology, ethics and spirituality, is the touchstone for interpreting Pauline spirituality.

2. The Spirit of God and Spirituality.

If Paul himself is allowed to determine the meaning of the word spirituality in Christian usage, then one cannot speak of "the spirituality" of Paul apart from recognizing that Pauline spirituality (both words are to be emphasized here) is grounded in and determined by the divine, trinitarian community—God the Father, Jesus Christ the Son* and the Holy Spirit (see God). For Paul the glory and the basis of the human spirit is established and directed by the Holy Spirit (Rom 8:1-17; 1 Cor 2:12-16; 12:1-11; 2 Cor 1:21- 22; 5:5; Gal 3:1-6; 4:1-7).

Paul's proclamation of salvation* and his instruction regarding the mission of God in the world* is predicated on the understanding that the Holy Spirit, promised in the OT as a decisive aspect of the eschatological time of salvation, is powerfully at work in the world (see Eschatology). This is most decisively evident in the Spirit's raising Jesus, God's Messiah, from death* to life and now mediating the presence of the risen, exalted* Christ to the believing community (Gal 4:1-6; Eph 1:13). The apostle also associates the Holy Spirit with the believer's initial act of faith* (Gal 3:1-6; 4:1-7; 1 Cor 12:3; Rom 8:12-17), as well as the continuing confirmation and establishment of believers as sons and daughters of God in a community of the Spirit (2 Cor 13:13; cf. 1 Cor 12; 14) from whose hearts and lips arise the prayer, "Abba, Father" (Rom 8:15; Gal 4:6; see Adoption, Sonship; Liturgical Elements).

3. Pauline Spirituality: "Yes to God."

The spirituality of Paul may be defined as the grateful and heartfelt "Yes to God," the response of the child of God to the call of God in the Spirit. Expressed both in act and attitude, the believer lives in obedience to and imitation of Jesus Christ, the true Son of God, and walks in the disciplined and maturing pattern of love's obedience to God.

This human response is called forth by and founded on God's own overwhelming "Yes" to the believer—a "Yes" that is supremely manifested in and through God's Son (2 Cor 1:18-22). This "obedience of faith" (Rom 1:5; 16:26) working through love* (Gal 5:6) is enabled by the Spirit of God (Rom 8:1-17), who both makes Christ present to the believer and makes the divine will effective and fruitful in the lived-out faith of the believer (Gal 5:22-23).

Enabled by the indwelling Spirit of God to live in union with Christ, the child of God is ever being transformed into the image* of Christ (Rom 8:29; 1 Cor 15:49; 2 Cor 3:18), the true Son of God. Although in Pauline spirituality the pattern of life called forth by the sovereign, creator God effectively touches the whole of human existence, the Spirit of God has entrusted the believer with special means of grace which nurture a "disciplined" (see 10-11 below) relationship to the trinitarian community—the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. Through the use of these gracious means, the believer is enabled to live out the whole of life in the world in faithfulness to God. Thus the spirituality of the believer may be pictured as an ellipse with the two interactive poles representing (1) the exercise of the privileged responsibilities of the child of God and (2) a comprehensive pattern of obedience leading to a growing harvest of the fruit of the Spirit.

4. The Experiential Foundation of Pauline Spirituality. Two experiences were especially critical in shaping the spirituality of Paul: (1) his initial Israelite religious heritage and practice rooted in the OT and shaped by his Pharisaic commitment, (see Jew, Paul the) and (2) his encounter with the living Christ on the road to Damascus (see Conversion and Call).

4.1. Paul's Israelite Heritage. Paul's obedience to the ways of God set forth in the OT Scriptures established in him a pattern of prayer, direction by the Word of God in Scripture, and life lived in the context of a covenant community characterized especially by its devotion to God expressed in prayer and attentive listening to Scripture (e.g., Ps 1). This triad of prayer, Word of God and community of faith was conjoined in the central activity of the worship of God. Paul was, in his own understanding, an obedient child of God in the way of Israelite faith. For Paul as a pious Israelite the Scriptures everywhere made clear the total claim of God upon the faithful; they were called to walk in righteousness* as the people of a holy God.

4.2. Paul's Damascus Road Experience. As important as Paul's earlier religious experience is for understanding his postconversion pattern of spirituality, his earlier practice was deepened and utterly transformed by his initial encounter with the risen Christ (1 Cor 15:8-11; Gal 1:11-17). Prominent aspects of this new pattern of spirituality included: (1) An awareness of the presence in and among his people of the risen Jesus, now reigning as Lord (Rom 4:24-25; 5:21; 6:23; 8:31-39). (2) The experience of the grace of God—by one who was weak and sinful and an enemy* of God (see Rom 5:6-10; 1 Cor 15:10). (3) The "call" of God to faith in and through the risen Jesus (1 Cor 15:12-19; Rom 10:6-17). (4) The life, suffering,* death, resurrection* and glorification* of Jesus validated by God as the way of righteousness—with all that this means for believing existence (Gal 6:17; 2 Cor 4:5-12; 6:4-10; 12:23-31). (5) A new experience of the presence of God through the empowering action of the Holy Spirit, who brings the believer into union with Christ as an heir of salvation, and places in the believer's heart and mouth the prayer, "Abba, Father" (Rom 8:15; Gal 4:6).

Following Paul's encounter with Christ, his prayer took place within a new, essentially trinitarian framework. Prayer* was now offered to God in the name of the Son of God and mediated by the Spirit of God within the community of the Spirit (see Liturgical Elements), wherein believers constantly uphold one another in fervent prayer (Rom 15:30-33; 2 Cor 13:13; Eph 3:14-21; Col 1:3-10; 1 Thess 1:2-8). Again, just as Paul experienced through faith in Jesus Christ the coming of the Spirit promised in the OT, he also found that the Spirit newly illumined the OT in the context of the new creation in the Spirit, and raised up within the community of the Spirit gifted interpreters of that Word (2 Cor 3:1-18; 4:1-6; see Old Testament). The new community of the Spirit experienced the power of the Spirit in its midst, decisively characterized by faith working through love, expressed in forgiveness,* humility and mutual burden bearing, all functioning to sustain and build up the one body of Christ as the koinōnia of the Spirit (see Body of Christ).

5. Union with Christ.

The believer's transcendent experience of Christ in the present time has been characterized as "union with Christ"—a term which has often shaped discussions of the spirituality of Paul (see Dying and Rising). The term "union with Christ" reflects the extensive Pauline teaching regarding Christ dwelling in and with the believer, and the believer being in and with Christ (see In Christ). But this must be understood from the dual vantage points of the incarnate and risen presence of God in Christ (cf. 2 Cor 5:16), and in the believing community. For Paul, life in the Spirit is directed both from within and from without history. The Spirit of Jesus draws one into conformity to the pattern and model of the incarnate Lord* (2 Cor 3:18), whose obedience to God was lived out within the setting of first-century Palestine. Arguments that Paul was not interested in the incarnate ministry of Jesus collapse in the face of Paul's admission that he had persecuted the early followers of Jesus and his subsequent proclamation of the same Jesus as risen (Gal 1:13, 23); there was, for Paul, no separation between the incarnate and risen Lord (see Jesus, Sayings of; Jesus and Paul). Paul teaches that the believer is united in the present with the same Jesus who, in the power of the Spirit, became one with humankind, lived in obedience, and suffered and died on a cruel cross outside Jerusalem. But this union with the risen Christ also has a future dimension of glorification with Christ (Rom 8:17-25; 1 Cor 15:35-41; 2 Cor 4:16-17; Phil 3:17-21).

Paul knew himself to be mysteriously united with Jesus in his suffering and death and risen life—but also joined to all those who, by faith in Jesus, were by the Spirit adopted into the family of God as co-heirs with Jesus Christ. Paul was at once dependent upon the disciples of Jesus and upon the Jerusalem* church for their witness to Jesus' life and teaching. But he was also an "independent" apostle,* who knew himself to be called of God and entrusted with the gospel of Christ to the Gentiles,* along with the fuller explication of the meaning of that gospel. Pauline spirituality is simultaneously determined by his experience of Christ within the community of faith and in his more immediate, revelational experience of the risen Lord.

6. The Practice of the Spirit.

The spirituality of Paul, whether in life or teaching, rests on the foundation of God's gracious work through the divine Son, a grace* mediated to believers by and in the power of the Spirit of God. Paul understands that the Spirit is "poured out" (Rom 5:5) in the life of the believer in and through the response of faith (Gal 3:1-6; 4:1-7). From the moment of faith, Christ is present in the believer through the agency of the Spirit who is the Spirit of Jesus (2 Cor 3:17). But the coming of the Spirit is not simply a personal and individual event, or even a larger, "ecclesial" event within the boundaries of the people of God. Rather, the believer is brought into the new creation in Christ, in which all things are made new (2 Cor 3:6; 5:17-19; Gal 6:15; Eph 2:15; see Creation and New Creation). But this newness is realized only as the believer continues to walk in the Spirit, whose sanctifying work transforms the believer into the image of the Son.

"Walking in the Spirit" (Rom 8:4; Gal 5:16) is a vivid image of Pauline spirituality, one rooted in OT Scripture (e.g., Deut 10:12; 13:5; 26:17; 28:9) and in Jesus' "way" of discipleship (cf., e.g., Mk 1:17; 2:14; 8:34; 10:21). But the decisive role of the Spirit in directing Christian existence makes it useful to characterize the spirituality of Paul as the practice of the Spirit (as in Gal 5:25 NIV). Practice of the Spirit makes more explicit the intentionality and discipline anticipated by Paul's language of "walking." Practice here is understood as a comprehensive pattern of action governed by one's basic perspective. For Paul this perspective is theological and spiritual. It should be noted that although Paul can use the Greek equivalent (prassō/praxis) of our word practice (verb and noun) in a positive way (e.g., 1 Cor 7:9; 9:17; Eph 6:21; Phil 4:9; 1 Thess 4:11), he often uses the same term with strong negative connotations (e.g., Rom 1:32; 2 Cor 4:2; Eph 4:19; Col 3:9).

The preposition "of" in "the practice of the Spirit," lends a pragmatic (but valid) ambiguity to the expression. "Of the Spirit" may be understood simultaneously as a subjective and as an objective genitive. As a subjective genitive the practice is a pattern of action understood from the standpoint of its origins in the Spirit (a practice that comes from the Spirit); it is a practice determined by the Spirit as the divine agent seeking and establishing a community of saints who will walk in the ways of holiness* and righteousness.* As an objective genitive it characterizes the obedience of faith which opens itself to the impulses of the Spirit, an obedience which diligently seeks to use the means instituted by the Spirit in order to "walk in the Spirit."

Although the spirituality defined as the practice of the Spirit is decisively "from above," it is also a spirituality "from below." The Spirit acts "from above," originating, determining and enabling the believer's walk in the Spirit. The believer acts "from below," walking obediently, but freely, from the heart. The believer walks not in the flesh,* as a self-determined being, but in the Spirit, as a being willing and seeking to be determined by the Spirit of God, who is creator and sovereign over all. Within this framework, in the obedience of faith, the believer is illumined and empowered to walk truly in the Spirit, and to be transformed into the image of Jesus Christ, the prototype of life in God. Spirituality is the lived experience of the believer. But its life-giving center and righteous form is experienced as a gift from God through the Spirit of Jesus. This experience and truth shapes all other aspects of the believer's life (see 14 below).

7. Spirituality and Sanctification.
As the person and work of the Spirit stands at the beginning and center of Pauline spirituality, so the reality of sanctification as a continuing work of the Spirit is critical to Pauline spirituality (see Holiness, Sanctification).

In the divine work of sanctification the Spirit works to effect a two-fold human response. On the one hand, the Spirit calls believers to present or give themselves to God (see Rom 12:1; 6:15-22; 1 Thess 4:1-8). This involves a hearty obedience to the will of God (Rom 6:17) and, above all, a focus on Jesus Christ the Son of God, into whose image the believer is being transformed by the Spirit. On the other hand, there is a negative side to sanctification involving death to sin* (Rom 6:12-23), renunciation of the way of "the flesh*" (Gal 5:16-24; Rom 8:2-14) and full surrender of selfish autonomy to the holy will of God as it is brought to light through the agency of the Spirit.

How are spirituality and sanctification interrelated? Sanctification precedes, begets and undergirds spirituality, even as the new life of the believer comes from the Spirit of God who also sustains that life. Here two Pauline perspectives on the work of the Holy Spirit are important. On the one hand, the Pauline doctrine of sanctification stands as a "declaration" of the believer's location "in Christ"* and "in the Spirit," as an adopted* son or daughter of God. The believer is "called out" of, separated from, the world, and adopted into the holy family of God. At the same time, the Pauline understanding of sanctification anticipates a process of growth and maturation in and through the Spirit (1 Cor 3:6-7; 2 Cor 10:15; Eph 2:21; 4:13-16; Col 2:19), of being made perfect by the indwelling Spirit of Christ (Rom 12:2; 2 Cor 7:1; 13:9; 1 Thess 3:13).

Pauline spirituality is determined by one's status as a believer subject to the sanctifying work of the Spirit, whereby one is transformed into the image of Christ. As set apart (sanctified) to God, as a child of God, the believer is privileged to address God in the communion and conversation of prayer. The believer is also privileged to be addressed by the Word and promise of God; the one who first loves addresses his beloved children. And as a member of the family of God, the believer is blessed not only to know God as Father, but to live in a mutually supportive community of brothers and sisters in Christ.

But the believer's privileged status as a child of God brings responsibility. The gift (Gabe) and the believing response (Aufgabe) are always interrelated. Although God is a sovereign who claims the total obedience of the entire creation, Pauline spirituality may be understood as the "privileged responsibility" of the adopted children of God. They are called to the obedience of faith enacted through calling upon God in prayer, listening attentively to the divine Word, and living as responsible members of the household* of God. This triadic responsibility is expressed in the community's central act of worship and focused in the Lord's Supper* fellowship meal (1 Cor 10:16-22). Each aspect has many configurations; together they constitute the dynamic center of growth and perfection in grace.

The relationship of spirituality and sanctification may be pictured as a spiral. On the one hand, it is only as one is a child of God, sanctified in the Spirit of Christ, that the privileges embodied in the spiritual exercises are available. At the same time, believers realize the full meaning of that privilege only as they pray to God without ceasing, are open and obedient to the word of God, and live in love as members of the household of faith. Sanctification embodies a call to spirituality; spirituality realizes the promise of sanctification.

8. Sin and Sanctification.
For Paul, Jesus Christ is the mediator of the divine response to sin, the locus of the justification* of the sinner. God in Christ brings people into the new world of the Spirit. But, until the consummation of all things, the new life goes on in the midst of an old, dying world wherein weakness* and corruption, sin* and death (see Life), still assault the believer (Rom 7). Paul's constant and urgent call to sanctification is a divine antidote for the continuing hostility and power of sin.

Believers, indwelt by the Spirit, are called to a life of response to the Spirit, a new life in the Spirit that ever transcends the old life of the flesh. In this life, with God's own Spirit working in the weakness of the church, believers are called both to put to death the works of the flesh, and to dedicate themselves to God and live unto righteousness. This pattern of dying and rising with Christ is at the center of Paul's understanding of sanctification (as in Rom 6), and of his instruction to believers (above all, see Rom 6—8).

The continuing reality of sin and the call to sanctification means that both the individual believer and the believing community must employ all the means of grace established by the Spirit so as to walk in the Spirit and not quench the Spirit (1 Thess 5:19; cf. Rom 12:11). Thus, discernment (1 Cor 2:14), exhortation (Rom 12:1; 1 Thess 2:11; 4:1; 2 Tim 4:2), and repentant, prayerful turning to God (Rom 2:4; 2 Cor 7:9-10) are essential to the process of sanctification in the community of the Spirit.

9. Imitation and Discipleship.
The normative form of the practice of the Spirit is seen preeminently in Jesus Christ, the Lord of the church. Thus Paul exhorts believers to "the imitation of Christ," pointing to himself as an imitator of Christ and calling believers to follow him as he follows Christ (1 Cor 4:15-16; 11:1; Phil 3:12-17; 1 Thess 1:6; 2 Thess 3:9-12). In turn, believers themselves provide an example which others may imitate (1 Thess 1:6-7; 2:14). In spite of the distortions that the NT pattern of imitating Christ has suffered, the antidote is not to abandon the call to imitation, but rather to heed Paul's call to imitate Christ. To be sure, this is not a call to "mere imitation." It is a call to the obedience of faith, subjecting oneself to the pattern of Jesus' incarnate and continuing existence, so that the illumining and empowering work of the Spirit can effectively imprint the life of Jesus in the life of a believer (see Imitation).

For Paul the meaning of the incarnation is not limited to the suffering and death of Jesus, and neither is his understanding of imitation. Although Paul's references to the sayings and life of Jesus are primarily allusive, it is clear that Paul could not—and did not—separate the "historical" Jesus from the risen Christ. The power of the Spirit that transformed the life of the crucified into a glorious exalted existence is the same Spirit that works in the believer (Rom 1:3-4; 8:11; cf. 1 Cor 15:42-50). The risen Lord Jesus, in his exalted existence, is united to the children of God in their daily existence, an existence which he himself shared in his humiliation. The imprint of Jesus on the life of the apostle is a recurring theme in Paul. The fruit* of the Spirit in the believer is the imprint of that same life which was manifest in the incarnate Lord (2 Cor 4:7-12). This life placed before the churches in the fullness of the church's preaching* (kerygma), teaching* (didachē) and tradition* (paradosis). And Paul replicates the pattern of his Lord in his own prayerful existence, in his utter dependence upon the word of God in Scripture, and in his obedient life and suffering and dying for the sake of the people of God.

The imitation of Christ is the post-Easter continuation of discipleship to Jesus. Even though Paul does not use the specific language of "discipleship," his experience of the risen Christ on the way to Damascus transformed him into a disciple of the one whose disciples he had persecuted, and whose incarnate life and ministry became a central aspect of Pauline christology* (see Phil 2:1-11; Rom 5:6-21, esp. Rom 5:6-10). In spite of continuing scholarly reservations regarding any equation of "following" Jesus in the Gospels and imitating Jesus in Paul, it is apparent that the apostle uses the language of imitation to convey the essential meanings found in the way of discipleship to Jesus in the Gospels. Just as obedience to the historical Jesus was a primary mark of discipleship, so the Pauline theme of imitating Christ entails a central act of obedience to the call of God in Jesus Christ. This obedience brings believers into the presence of Christ and constant communion with him, making them subject to his person, way, and teaching, and uniting them with the Lord who walks in the way of suffering and death. To imitate Christ after Easter is to walk in the way of discipleship to the risen Lord. Thus, Pauline spirituality is joined with the way of discipleship to Jesus; and discipleship to Jesus finds its extension and fulfillment in the pattern of imitating Christ which Paul himself models.

10. The Triad of Prayer, Word and Community.
Paul's experience of the risen Christ in the power of the Spirit transformed and empowered the triad of prayer, Word of God and covenant people of God which he inherited from Judaism. Where Paul does not mention this interrelated triad, it can nonetheless be assumed as an abiding premise of Pauline spirituality. Each element of this triple practice is essential to both the solitary life of the individual believer and the corporate life of the body of Christ. The elements of this triad are embraced in the worshiping life of the community, and in this triadic practice the community expresses itself in the worship of Jesus Christ as Lord, the Son of God. Service and witness are also a reflex of this triad, with both emerging from the community at worship.

For Paul, life in prayer, life in the Word of God and life in community of the Spirit, are each and together a creation of the Spirit of God. The Spirit brings the deep prayer, "Abba, Father," to the heart and mouth of the believer (Rom 8:15; Gal 4:6) and sustains the believer, afflicted by a besetting weakness in prayer (Rom 8:26; see 11 below). The Spirit inspires (2 Tim 3:16) and illumines the Word of God (2 Cor 3:1-18). And the Spirit creates and builds up into Christ the community of faith (1 Cor 12; 14; esp. 1 Cor 12:3-13; 14:1-5). Through these means the Spirit continually nurtures an authentic "Yes" to God in the hearts of believers. In the divinely wrought symbiosis of prayer, Word and community, the believer, walking in the Spirit, grows in faith and is strengthened in faith (Phil 1:25; Col 2:7; 1 Thess 3:1-10; Rom 1:11; 16:25; 1 Thess 3:2), is perfected in holiness (2 Cor 7:1; Phil 1:6) and is transformed into the image of the Son (Rom 8:29; Col 3:10).

11. Prayer as a Primary Paradigm of Spirituality.
Through the centuries virtually all Christians have understood prayer to lie at the heart of their spirituality. This finds firm rooting in the practice and writings of Paul. The apostle's letters typically begin and conclude with notes and reports on prayer, and the contents of his letters underscore the great importance of prayer. We can note here only a representative sample of the Pauline data. The apostle shows that true prayer is from the heart (Rom 8:27; Phil 1:7); at the same time, he links effective prayer to the mind and to the spirit (1 Cor 14:14-15). A variety of expressions is used to describe the manner and significance of praying, such as persevering, wrestling, thankfulness and joyfulness. Paul regularly reports at the beginning of his letters his own prayer for the faithful (e.g., Rom 1:8-10; 1 Cor 1:4; Phil 1:3-12; 1 Thess 1:2-3; 3:9-10), and he likewise entreats their prayer for himself and for other believers near and far (Rom 15:30; Col 4:2-4; 1 Thess 2:5; 2 Thess 3:1). Paul reports that he prays "day and night" (1 Thess 3:10; note that Paul also works for Christ day and night, 1 Thess 2:9; 2 Thess 3:8), and he encourages all believers to pray without ceasing (1 Thess 5:17; Eph 6:18) and in every place (1 Tim 2:8).

Paul understands Christian existence as a new way of being in God, through Christ in the power of the Spirit, and so he specifically and sharply differentiates Christian existence from the religious experience of the surrounding Greco-Roman world. The apostle, along with the earliest Church, was encouraged and emboldened by the eschatological presence of the Spirit of Jesus to address God in the intimate pattern of Jesus—"Abba, Father" (Rom 8:15; Gal 4:6).

In Romans 8:26-27 Paul opens a window into his own understanding of the mystery of the Spirit's active presence in the believer's life in prayer. The following aspects of this passage merit mention with respect to Paul's experience, practice and teaching about prayer. (1) It is highly significant that Paul appeals to prayer in the heart of a critical discussion of the Christian experience of the Spirit. (2) As important as prayer is for Paul, he confesses human weakness and inability in praying—even as the entire creation in general (Rom 8:19-22), and the children of God in particular (Rom 8:23), live in a sinful, dying world, awaiting the promised redemption. (3) But Paul knows, as part of the experience of faith, that God's own Spirit assists the believer in prayer—even as God is for the believer in all things (Rom 8:31-39)—and that the Spirit, knowing the heart of the believer, intercedes on behalf of the believer. It is the Spirit, then, who enables "the practice of the Spirit." These three things—the prayerful practice of the Spirit, the human experience of spiritual weakness and transcendent enablement—characterize Pauline spirituality generally.

12. The Locus of Spirituality.
In light of peculiar ideas regarding the terms Spirit, spiritual and spirituality which have bedeviled the life of the church through the centuries, it is important to clarify Paul's own understanding of the locus of the Spirit in the individual and corporate life of faith.

Although the Pauline letters provide abundant resources for determining the locus of spirituality, Romans 12:1—13:7 notably and usefully summarizes the scope of Paul's instruction of the young churches. In Romans 8 Paul shows that the breadth and depth of the Christian life is generated by and subject to the trinitarian community. Romans 9 offers further commentary on the grace of God and the imperative of obedience to God. Then, beginning with Romans 12, Paul exhorts the Roman Christians by the mercy* and grace* of God to accept a pattern of life appropriate to those who are united to Christ and dwell in him by the power of the Spirit. Although interpreters have often discussed Romans 12:1—13:7 under the rubric of "Christian life" or "ethical imperative," the context and content also place this passage within the scope of spirituality, including the practice of the Spirit (see Rom 12:11). Clearly Paul is giving important instruction regarding the righteousness of the "sanctified" person who belongs to God and exercises the privileges and responsibilities of a child of God. Paul points to a transformed life in which the godless existence of the ungrateful person described in Romans 1:18-32 is transformed into the life of the believer dedicated to God. The very language of Romans 12:1-2 mirrors the thrust of Romans 6, a pivotal text in Paul's instruction regarding the sanctified life.

In successive textual units of Romans 12:1—13:7, Paul points to the following as loci of the Spirit's working in those who are in Christ. (1) Their *bodies (Rom 12:1) are to be presented to God as a living sacrifice. (2) Their minds (Rom 12:2) are to be submitted to God who—in the Spirit of Jesus—transforms them, establishing them in the pattern of Jesus' own life of obedience (note Rom 5:19 and Rom 15:3-4; see Psychology). (3) Believers as selves (Rom 12:3) before God and other members of the body of Christ, are to regard their selves as under divine Lordship, humanly frail and dependent upon God. (4) Believers are to take an active role within the corporate body of Christ (Rom 12:4-8) and according to the particular gifts given to them. (5) In the pattern of Jesus, and according to the reconciling action of God, believers are exhorted to produce the fruit of the Spirit, peace,* while living in a hostile world (Rom 12:14-21). (6) Finally, living within a world of political structures and powers (Rom 13:1-7), believers are ultimately subject to the lordship of God, who is sovereign over all (see Civil Authority).

A survey of the Pauline corpus quickly reveals the comprehensive perspective as well as the depth-dimensions of Pauline spirituality. There is no place where believers are outside the reign of the Lord who is the Spirit (2 Cor 3:17-18); walking in the Spirit of Jesus means that the whole person in its whole context is subject to the Spirit of God.

13. The Fruit and Gifts of the Spirit.

The fruit* of Spirit and the gifts* of the Spirit are two significant aspects of Paul's description of the practice of the Spirit. Since both aspects are the work of the one Spirit of God, it is imperative that we understand them in relation to one another. The fruit of the Spirit is to be evident in the common life of the believer (see 14 below) and in the exercise of the "privileged responsibilities" of prayer, listening to the Word and participating in the life of the body (see 10 and 11 above). The exercise of the gifts of the Spirit is subject to the control of the righteous fruit of the Spirit. And the fruit of the Spirit is caused to flourish and grow within the community wherein the gifts of the sanctifying Spirit are exercised. This symbiotic relationship between fruit and gift fosters the fulfillment of the divine intention that the gifts of the Spirit should sanctify and upbuild the church. Pauline spirituality, the practice of the Spirit, is the believer's "Yes to God," whose righteous fruit and gifts are to be sought, embraced and lived out in the community of the Spirit and in the world.

13.1. The Fruit of the Spirit. Galatians 5:22-23 is the locus classicus for Paul's teaching concerning the fruit of the Spirit. Although the catalog of the fruit of the Spirit does not appear to be "systematically" developed, that is, it represents but a part of the righteous fruit of the Spirit in human life as Paul understands it, the first three fruits—love,* joy,* peace*—play a major role in Pauline teaching. Statistically and generally this triad of righteous fruit far outweighs other fruits noted by the apostle. Within Romans, for instance, several passages (Rom 5:1-5; 12:9-21; 14:1—15:13, 30-31) directly or implicitly highlight this triad in a way that reflects its primary position in the formal listing of Galatians 5:22-23. Paul's exhortations and prayers generally focus on the necessity of this fruit in the lives of believers. It has often been suggested that love, joy and peace may be viewed as embodying all the other fruit. Paul's declaration in 1 Corinthians 13 that love is the greatest gift is everywhere reflected in the Pauline teaching—above all in Romans 5:5-10 and Romans 8:15-16, 8:26-27 and 8:28-39.

13.2. The Gifts of the Spirit. Paul's teaching regarding the gifts of the Spirit has been intensely studied in modern times, above all with an interest in the way in which the church is made fruitful in its mission through the gifts of the Spirit. Four points are of special importance with respect to spirituality as the practice of the Spirit. (1) The gifts of the Spirit are richly varied and are lavished on the community, which is being built up in the world. In Romans 12:4-8 Paul makes clear the varied nature of the gifts; in particular, gifts kindred to functions in common life—service and generosity and mercy—appear alongside gifts more kindred to the privileged responsibilities of prayer, Word and community, viz. prophecy,* teaching, exhortation and leadership. The former seem to be a concrete expression of the fruit of the Spirit. Only as the church recognizes the surpassing value of each gift, and of all the gifts of the Spirit working together, is the body of Christ built up. (2) The gifts are given to be exercised as a privileged responsibility (see esp. Rom 12:4-8). This accords with the structure of the Christian life as the obedience of faith and is congruent with spirituality as the believer's "Yes to God." (3) The exercise of the gifts is the fertile ground upon which the fruit of the Spirit flourishes. Proclamation, faithful teaching, exhortation, leadership—all exercises of the gifts of the Spirit—lead to a rich bounty of spiritual fruit in the community of the Spirit. (4) Believers are enabled to gauge the authenticity of their practice of the Spirit by the measure in which the fruits of the Spirit are evident in their lives. Exhortation in the power of the Spirit provides the believing community the wisdom* by which to judge the efficacy of its own practice of the Spirit.

14. The Spirit and the Common Life.

Paul understands the Christian way as "life in the Spirit" or "walking in the Spirit." The totality of Christian existence is subject to the Spirit of God, who is Creator and Lord of all life. Thus in his apostolic exhortation Paul repeatedly emphasizes the concrete shape of life in the Spirit. Rather than pass in review the full catalog of Pauline concerns, five critical intersections of the Spirit and common life may be noted: (1) daily human relationships; (2) everyday conversation; (3) eating and drinking; (4) money and goods; (5) sexual attitudes and relationships.

14.1. Daily Human Relationships. Just as Paul can proclaim that the love of God is poured out in believers' lives through the Spirit (Rom 5:5), so love, the most prominent fruit of the Spirit (1 Cor 13), sets the tone for the practice of the Spirit. In 1 Corinthians 13 Paul, in a hymnic style that resonates with his appeals for believers to pattern their lives after Jesus, outlines the contours of the Christian walk in the Spirit as a walk in love. In two major Pauline textual units, Romans 14:1—15:13 and Philippians 2:1-11 (see Thompson), Paul shows how the Christian's Lord models the pattern of love, providing the template (Rom 15:5) for their own life in the Spirit. Jesus, who is the incarnate mediator of divine love (see Rom 5:6-10), did not please himself (Rom 15:3) but opened his heart to the world (Rom 15:7) in redemptive service on behalf of weak, sinful, even hostile, humanity (Rom 5:8, 10). In Philippians Paul appeals to the exhortation in Jesus (Phil 2:1) and the koinōnia ("fellowship"*) in the Spirit, encouraging believers to share a common mind and love in the pattern of Jesus Christ, the mediator of their salvation, who took the form of a servant. Paul's abiding description of the spiritual life is that of humble and self-emptying service to one's neighbor. This accords with the Pauline understanding that the Spirit who indwells believers is the Spirit of Jesus.

14.2. Everyday Conversation. One of the most overlooked emphases in the Pauline letters is his exhortation concerning the spirituality of ordinary human speech. In Ephesians 4:25—5:20 and a parallel passage in Colossians (Col 3:5-17), we find the strongest possible language—both negative and positive—exhorting believers to give heed to their speech. The Ephesians passage is longer and more detailed: those who have "put on the new nature" (Eph 4:24; see New Nature) are not to lie, but to speak the truth (Eph 4:25); not to employ evil talk, but to use fitting, edifying speech which imparts grace to those who hear (Eph 4:29); not to be bitter or to slander, but to be tenderhearted, without malice, and forgiving (Eph 4:31-32); not to employ filthy or silly talk, but to give thanks (Eph 5:4). In keeping with the Pauline emphasis upon the urgency of thanksgiving (see 15 below), Paul concludes his commentary on Christian speech with an appeal to thanksgiving—"always and for everything, giving thanks in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ to God and the Father." This is the way of "true righteousness and holiness" (Eph 4:24); it is the fruit of having been taught in the way of Jesus, the Christ (Eph 4:20-21); it is life lived in imitation of God (Eph 5:1) and in the pattern of Christ (Eph 5:2). It is the fruit of the life which has been "sealed with the promised Holy Spirit" (Eph 1:13), so that the believer is "a dwelling place of God in the Spirit" (Eph 2:22).

14.3. Eating and Drinking. In Pauline perspective the simple act of eating and drinking is laden with spiritual import, for all of life is illumined and empowered by the Spirit of Jesus. Thus in Romans 14:1—15:13 Paul reveals a number of perspectives on eating and drinking. To be sure, Paul clearly declares that the kingdom of God has to do, not with "food and drink but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit" (Rom 14:17). Nonetheless, he surrounds that declaration with a formidable array of specific comments regarding the meaning of eating and drinking. In eating and drinking, one may honor or dishonor the Lord (Rom 14:6). Eating and drinking are an occasion for the attitude and expression of gratitude to God (14:6). In eating and drinking one lives unto the Lord and dies unto the Lord (Rom 14:7-9). Eating and drinking can be an instance of walking in love, or not walking in love (Rom 14:15-16)—as well as of living or not living in peace with others (Rom 14:19), or of edifying or not edifying the other (Rom 14:19). Of special interest is the section's concluding appeal to Jesus (Rom 15:7): "Welcome one another, therefore, just as Christ has welcomed you." It is impossible to suppose that Paul, who called believers to follow him in imitating Christ, did not have in mind the common meals in which Jesus participated—often with the rejected ones of contemporary society (see Food; Love Feast).

It is significant that all these "meanings" of Christian eating and drinking are otherwise closely associated with the Spirit in Paul (love, peace, edification, gratitude and honoring the Lord). Other Pauline passages, most notably significant elements of 1 Corinthians 9—11 where the Lord's Supper* and common meals are conjoined, offer parallel instruction. In all eating and drinking, the Christian believer is called to be "spiritual," not "unspiritual" (1 Cor 2:14-16), instructed in the mind of Christ (1 Cor 2:16).

14.4. The Handling of Money and Goods. One of the significant aspects of the ministry of Paul was the collection* for the saints which he solicited from Greek Christians in order to bring aid to poor Christians in Jerusalem.* In this collection the apostle, who otherwise was wholly devoted to the proclamation of the gospel and sought nothing for himself (1 Cor 9:3-15; 2 Cor 11:7-9; 1 Thess 2:9), nonetheless understood the ministry of proclamation and the ministry of collection as joined in service to Christ in the power of the Spirit. Thus in Romans 15:26 he speaks of the collection as a koinōnia in which the spiritual legacy of Israel* and the material assistance of the Gentiles are a unity. In 2 Corinthians 8—9 Paul speaks of the spiritual significance of the money which the Greeks are giving. It demonstrates genuine love (2 Cor 8:8), follows in the pattern of the self-giving Lord Jesus Christ

(2 Cor 8:9) and honors the Lord (2 Cor 8:21, 23; 9:13). The love of God rests upon the cheerful giver (2 Cor 9:7) whose giving is a "good work" (2 Cor 9:8) which issues in thanksgiving (2 Cor 8:16; 9:11-12, 15) and manifests grace (2 Cor 8:1, 6, 19-20; 9:14-15; see Financial Support).

14.5. Sexual Attitudes and Actions. The apostle Paul emphasized sexual attitudes and actions as strongly as any contemporary writer—but in his own way (see Sexuality; Homosexuality). For the apostle, the body—formed by God in a great creative act—was of great importance. This is especially clear in his arresting note in Romans 8:23, that the great adoption awaited by the children of God "who have the first fruits of the Spirit" is "the redemption of our bodies." In line with this understanding Paul declares that the body is "a temple* of the Holy Spirit" and that anyone who is united with the Lord will not violate the Lord's temple with illegitimate sexual attitudes and relationships.

Paul understands the power of sexuality—and enjoins the believers to allow that power its proper place in the proper marital relationship (1 Cor 7:1-7; see Marriage and Divorce). On the other hand, because of the power of sin (Rom 7:8-13), by which the righteous intentions of God the creator are sinfully subverted, Paul places the great stress on the sanctification of the body (Rom 12:1; 1 Cor 6:18-20; 7:34; 2 Cor 7:1; 1 Thess 4:4). It is a profound misunderstanding of the apostle to interpret Paul's warnings about sexual sin and his exhortations to sanctification of the body in respect to sexual attitudes and conduct as a derogation of human sexuality. On the contrary, it is in the practice of the Spirit, who as the Spirit of life sanctifies the human body as a temple of the Spirit, that the believer recognizes and honors the divine intentions in respect to human sexuality. For Paul, there is an intimate interrelationship between sexuality and spirituality; the right understanding and exercise of this relationship is a profoundly important aspect of love's obedience.

15. Gratitude: The Heartbeat of Pauline Spirituality. Gratitude permeates Paul's life and holds a prominent place in his letters to the young churches (see Blessing). Gratitude is not only the apostle's response to his overwhelming experience of the grace of God; it is also the prospective attitude that he carries—and exhorts believers to carry—into their daily life in the world. For Paul, thanksgiving marks the dividing line between belief and unbelief, between the obedient and the disobedient heart. It is in the expression of gratitude that one truly honors God as the creator and Lord of the world (Rom 14:6). On the other hand, a lack of gratitude is a primary sin against God (Rom 1:21).

Thanksgiving—gratitude experienced and expressed—is "the heartbeat" of Pauline spirituality. In the Pauline experience and understanding, thanksgiving is the deepest expression of recognition for the direct experience of God's grace (1 Cor 1:4; 15:57; 2 Cor 2:14; 9:15; Phil 1:3)—as well as of grace experienced through others (see esp. Phil 1:5-26; 4:14-20). But the righteous person also gives thanks for the simple blessing of daily sustenance (Rom 14:6; 1 Cor 10:30).

Prayer, faith at work in the front line of Pauline spirituality, is shaped by gratitude in tone and content (Rom 1:8; 14:6; 1 Cor 1:4). Thanksgiving stands at the opposite end of the spectrum from anxiety, which expresses a lack of faith in God (Phil 4:6). Where the peace of Christ rules, there is thanksgiving (Col 3:15). Those established in the faith abound in thanksgiving (Col 2:7). Paul's prayer of thanksgiving is ever and always rising to God (1 Cor 1:4; Col 4:2; 1 Thess 1:2; 2:13; Col 1:3; Philem 4); and the apostle likewise exhorts the Christian community to give thanks to God in all things (1 Thess 5:18; Eph 5:20; Col 3:17). As grace is multiplied, thanksgiving is increased (2 Cor 4:15; 9:11). Thanksgiving is a "peak moment" in Christian experience and appropriately comes to expression in hymns* and songs, in which the whole person expresses deep gratitude to God for great grace (see Eph 5:18-20; Col 2:14-17).

If Pauline spirituality can be summarized in the words "Yes to God," then thanksgiving to God, especially expressed in and through prayer, but in all activity devoted to God, is the believer's most fundamental acknowledgement of the experience of grace—grace experienced in one's self, and grace recognized in its abundant manifestation outside one's own life. At the forefront of the practice of the Spirit is the practice of thanksgiving for all that God is doing.

16. Summary.

The deep and abiding mystery of the gracious presence of God in the indwelling Spirit, and the comprehensive reach of that grace, pervade Pauline spirituality as the practice of the Spirit. However, several particular facets can be isolated as summarizing and characterizing Pauline spirituality.

(1) Pauline spirituality is the spirituality of faith. Paul's letters are addressed to believers, and in his address he ever and again makes clear the imperative of the obedience of faith. Pauline spirituality is not an "extra" to be sought beyond simple faith but the pattern in which faith is received, nurtured and expressed in social relationships.

(2) Pauline spirituality takes shape in the believer's grateful "Yes to God" expressed in loving obedience to God in the whole of life and in the privileged responsibilities of the child of God.

(3) Paul ever sets before himself and believers the incarnate and exalted Lord Jesus whom the apostle imitates and exhorts believers to imitate—and to exemplify to others.

(4) Spirituality is the practice of giving one's self wholly to the sanctifying work of the Spirit, so that there is a constant dying to sin and living unto righteousness, as manifest supremely in Jesus Christ, into whose image the believer is being transformed.

(5) Spirituality ever embraces faithfulness in the Spirit-given and interrelated triad of praying to God, receiving the Word of God, and living together as the people of God, so that the life of the individual and the community of faith is constantly being built up in the faith and turned toward the worship of God.

(6) Spirituality comes to expression in an ever growing manifestation of the good fruit of the Spirit, the evidence of which is a critical means of testing and discerning the authenticity of the practice of the Spirit.

(7) Within the context of a growing awareness of the great goodness and grace of God, Pauline spirituality is characterized by a rising hymn of thanksgiving to the gracious God; this alone is the gateway of Christian entry into fruitful engagement with a world which has not yet experienced the reason for that gratitude which rises from a life in which, in the power of the Spirit, faith is working through love.

In the final analysis, the Christian life in Paul is a life in which the believer is ever subject to the practice of the Spirit. From this standpoint, it would seem that "Christian spirituality" and "Christian life"—neither expression actually appearing in Paul—are one and the same thing. This is surely true when the Christian life is perfected in the practice of the Spirit. Short of that perfection, "spirituality" as "the practice of the Spirit" serves as a useful expression for describing the conscious and intentional obedience to God of the heart seeking after a more perfect love for God.

See also ADOPTION, SONSHIP; BODY OF CHRIST; CHRISTOLOGY; CHURCH; CREATION AND NEW CREATION; CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE; DYING AND RISING WITH CHRIST; FEAR, REVERENCE; FELLOWSHIP, COMMUNION, SHARING; FLESH; FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT; GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT; GOD; HOLINESS, SANCTIFICATION; HOLY SPIRIT; IMITATION OF PAUL/OF CHRIST; IN CHRIST; JOY; LORD'S SUPPER; LOVE; MYSTICISM; NEW NATURE AND OLD NATURE; PEACE, RECONCILIATION; PERFECT, MATURE; PRAYER; PSYCHOLOGY; SERVANT, SERVICE; SUFFERING; TONGUES; VISIONS, ECSTATIC EXPERIENCE; WEAKNESS; WORSHIP.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. K. Barth, The Christian Life (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1981); G. Bornkamm, Paul (New York: Harper & Row, 1971); idem, Early Christian Experience (New York: Harper & Row, 1969); L. Bouyer, The Spirituality of the New Testament and the Fathers (New York: Seabury, 1982); R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament (2 vols.; New York: Scribners, 1951, 1955); J. D. G. Dunn, Romans (WBC 38; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); G. D. Fee, "Some Reflections on Pauline Spirituality," in Alive to God: Studies in Spirituality Presented to James Houston, ed. J. I. Packer and L. Wilkinson (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1992) 96-107; idem, The First Epistle to the Corinthians (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987); M. Griffiths, The Example of Jesus (Downers Grove: InterVarsity, 1985); C. Jones et al., ed., The Study of Spirituality (London: Oxford University, 1986); R. P. Martin, The Spirit and the Congregation (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1984); J. K. S. Reid, Our Life in Christ (Philadelphia: Westminister, 1963); H. Ridderbos, Paul: An Outline of His Theology (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975); W. Schrage, The Ethics of the New Testament (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); L. Smedes, Union with Christ (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983); J. Sudbrack, "Spirituality," in Encyclopedia of Theology 1623-29; M. B. Thompson, Clothed with Christ: The Example and Teaching of Jesus in Romans 12:1—15:13 (JSNTSup 59; Sheffield: Academic, 1991); E. J. Tinsley, The Imitation of God in Christ (London: SCM, 1960).

R. P. Meye

STOICS. See PHILOSOPHY.

STRENGTH. See POWER; TRIUMPH; WEAKNESS.

STRONG AND WEAK

In 1 Corinthians 8—10 and in Romans 14—15 Paul addressed problems between "strong" and "weak" Christians. The strong were exercising their rights and freedom* to the detriment of more scrupulous believers whom they considered had a weak conscience* (1 Cor) or weak faith* (Rom). Although a common issue in both cases was the appropriateness of eating certain foods,* and Paul adopted a similar strategy in responding, the two letters reflect different situations.

1. Corinth
2. Rome
3. Paul's Responses

1. Corinth

At Corinth Christians were divided over the question of whether and where one could eat food* offered to idols* (eidōlothuta 1 Cor 8:1, 4, 7, 10; 10:19). The "strong" (a term not used in 1 Cor 8—10, but synonymous with "those who think they stand," 1 Cor 10:12) ate confidently in the knowledge that monotheism meant that idols have no real existence (1 Cor 8:1-6; see God). The weak had no such assurance, their conscience* (syneidēsis) preventing them from eating despite social (Willis), economic (Theissen) and religious pressure to do so. Eidōlothuta may refer specifically to food eaten in a pagan temple (Fee) or more generally to sacrificial food which could be eaten in a variety of places. In any case, the strong affirmed their right (1 Cor 8:9) to partake, even though this led the weak into the temptation of joining in what they believed to be an idolatrous act (1 Cor 8:10-13).

2. Rome

Many see Romans 14—15 as simply general paraenesis developed from Paul's earlier correspondence with the Corinthians (e.g., R. J. Karris in Donfried). A growing number of scholars, however, think Paul was speaking to specific circumstances in Rome (Donfried, Tomson, Wedderburn). The references to vegetarianism (Rom 14:2; because of the difficulty of getting certifiably kosher meat? cf. Josephus Life 3 §§13-14; see Rome), the observance of holy days* (Rom 14:5-6) and abstinence from wine (Rom 14:21; possibly hypothetical) are unparalleled in 1 Corinthians. The distinctive nuance of koinos ("unclean") in Romans 14:14 and katharos ("clean") in Romans 14:20 reflects disputes over Jewish scruples (cf. Rom 14:1; see Purity); neither word appears in 1 Corinthians, while the eidōl- and syneidēsis language frequent in 1 Corinthians 8—10 is absent in Romans. Furthermore, the close connection of Romans 15:7-13 to Romans 14:1—15:6 (cf. proslambanesthe, "welcome," in Rom 14:1 and 15:7), coupled with the overall argument of the letter, points toward disunity primarily between Jewish and Gentile* Christians.

Thus, against a background of anti-Semitism common in first century Rome, apparently some Gentile believers ridiculed more conservative Jewish Christians, whom they perceived as weak in faith (Rom 14:1) for their dietary and calendrical scruples (see Holy Days); the weak responded by passing judgment* on the strong (Rom 14:3-4, 10; cf. 2:1-11?). They felt no compulsion to abandon their Jewish heritage, and their differences made communal meals and worship* occasions of conflict (Rom 14:1). Paul did not doubt their motivation (Rom 14:6). Had the weak insisted that all Christians keep the Law, we would expect a response similar to that found in Galatians.*

3. Paul's Responses.

In both cases Paul clearly agreed with the strong that food in itself is religiously indifferent (1 Cor 8:8; Rom 14:14; 15:1). But Paul did not try to persuade the weak (apart from warning the Romans against judging the strong); his aim was mutual respect and acceptance of one another. Paul was not making the strong captive to the foibles of the weak. The strong were to refrain from eating meat not because others objected or were offended, but because the weak were in danger of compromising their integrity by succumbing to the temptation to adopt practices they fundamentally believed to be wrong (1 Cor 8:10; Rom 14:14-15). Paul prohibited the eating of idol food within pagan temples (1 Cor 10:14-22).

To act in a way that lays a stumbling block* (1 Cor 8:9, 13; 10:32; Rom 14:13, 20-21) before another for whom Christ died (1 Cor 8:11; Rom 14:15) is not to walk according to the way of love* which builds up both the individual and the community (1 Cor 8:1; 10:23; Rom 14:15, 19; 15:2). Behind the call to set the neighbor's interests above one's own lies the example and teaching of Jesus* (Thompson). Paul's refusal of his right as an apostle to material support (1 Cor 9; see Financial Support) illustrates the character of self-sacrificial love involved in becoming a servant* to all for their salvation* (1 Cor 9:19; cf. Mk 10:44). This ultimately is to serve Christ (1 Cor 8:12 negatively; Rom 14:6-8, 18), to imitate* him (1 Cor 10:33—11:1; Rom 15:3-6) and to glorify God (1 Cor 10:31; Rom 15:6-7, 9).

See also CONSCIENCE; DEMONS AND EXORCISM; FOOD OFFERED TO IDOLS AND JEWISH FOOD LAWS; IDOLATRY; LOVE; PURITY AND IMPURITY; ROME AND ROMAN CHRISTIANITY; SOCIAL-SCIENTIFIC APPROACHES TO PAUL; STUMBLING BLOCK

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. A. Black, Paul, Apostle of Weakness: Astheneia and Its Cognates in the Pauline Literature (AUS 7/3; New York: Peter Lang, 1984); K. P. Donfried, ed., The Romans Debate (rev. ed.; Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1991); G. D. Fee, "Eidōlothuta Once Again: An Interpretation of 1 Corinthians 8—10," Bib 61 (1980) 172-97; L. De Lorenzi, ed., Freedom and Love: The Guide for Christian Life (1 Co 8-10; Rm 14-15) (MSB; Rome: St. Paul's Abbey, 1981); W. Meeks, "Judgment and the Brother: Romans 14:1—15:13," in Tradition and Interpretation in the New Testament, ed. G. F. Hawthorne with O. Betz (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1988; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987) 290-300; G. Theissen, "The Strong and the Weak in Corinth: A Sociological Analysis of a Theological Quarrel," in The Social Setting of Pauline Christianity: Essays on Corinth, ed. J. H. Schütz (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1982) 121-43; M. B. Thompson, Clothed with Christ: The Example and Teaching of Jesus in Romans 12.1—15.13 (JSNTSS 59; Sheffield: JSOT, 1991) 161-236; P. J. Tomson, Paul and the Jewish Law: Halakha in the Letters of the Apostle to the Gentiles (CRINT 3.1; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1990); A. J. M. Wedderburn, The Reasons for Romans (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1988); W. Willis, Idol Meat in Corinth: The Pauline Argument in 1 Corinthians 8 and 10 (SBLDS 68; Chico CA: Scholars, 1985).

M. B. Thompson

STRUCTURALISM. See HERMENEUTICS/INTERPRETING PAUL.

STUMBLING BLOCK

Two Greek roots in Paul's letters are sometimes translated "stumbling block" or "to cause to stumble." Both roots are more serious than their translations may suggest, connoting occasions that can lead to spiritual ruin. Paul uses the terms in two basic contexts: with reference to Christ and the cross as an occasion for stumbling, and with reference to Christians who stumble, particularly with regard to the eating of food.*

1. Background
2. Proskomma/Proskoptō
3. Skandalon/Skandalizō

1. Background.

The image of stumbling or causing someone to fall is part of the common Jewish metaphor describing life as a walk or a path to follow. In the OT, language of stumbling describes either the action of stumbling or the cause of a fall. Insofar as an object which causes stumbling can be said to be in one's way, a "stumbling block" could be understood as a "hindrance" or "obstacle," but it is difficult to find examples where only these meanings are intended; an element of danger is always present. Stumbling often refers to idolatry* in its various forms and the enticement to ruin which it offered (e.g., Ex 23:33; 34:12). The metaphor was common in other Jewish writings (e.g., 1QS 2:12, 17; 11:12; 1QH 17:23; b. Sanh. 55a, m. B. Meṣ. 5:11; b. Pesaḥ. 22b), a number of which echo Leviticus 19:14.

2. Proskomma/Proskoptō.

The noun most commonly rendered "stumbling block" is proskomma, a term Paul used five times, four of which are in Romans. In their pursuit of righteousness* based on the Law* instead of faith* in Christ,* Paul says Israel* had stumbled (proskoptō) over the stumbling stone (proskomma) which is Christ (Rom 9:32). The quotation that follows in Romans 9:33 is a conflation of Isaiah 28:16 and Isaiah 8:14, and its unusual form is paralleled in 1 Peter 2:8, suggesting that Paul was citing a shared piece of early Christian tradition.

Elsewhere Paul used proskomma and proskoptō in admonitions to "strong"* Christians not to cause "weaker" Christians to stumble, particularly with reference to food (Rom 14:13, 20-21; 1 Cor 8:9). The weak were being tempted to compromise their integrity and participate in what they considered to be idolatry (1 Cor 8:7, 10) or impurity (Rom 14:14). Paul's strong language in 1 Corinthians 8:11 and Romans 14:15, 20, 22-23 reflects the gravity of the danger the strong were setting before the weak.

3. Skandalon/Skandalizō.

Coming over into English as "scandal," this root skandal- is more difficult to translate. Sometimes rendered "stumbling block" or "offense," the very rare term skandalon, like proskomma, signifies something which leads to disastrous temptation or spiritual ruin. In the LXX it most often renders the Hebrew for "trap" or "snare," and connotes a cause for falling, at times with the nuance of enticement to sin.

The word skandalon appears with proskomma in Romans 14:13, where translations such as "hindrance" (RSV/NRSV) and "obstacle" (NIV) reflect confusion about its meaning and have misled some interpreters. By skandalon Paul was not referring to attempts by the weak to foist their dietary restrictions on the strong; instead he was emphasizing the spiritual trap created when confident behavior by the strong (in effect) enticed weaker Christians to sin by acting contrary to their conscience,* as the parallel in 1 Corinthians 8:7 reveals (cf. Rom 14:15). In such cases Paul counseled the strong to govern the exercise of their freedoms by love for the weak. Paul was ready to forgo his rights rather than to risk destroying others by tempting them to do what they believed was wrong (Rom 14:21; 1 Cor 8:13). In his concern for the weak, Paul could not help but be deeply agitated when they were "scandalized" (2 Cor 11:29).

In Romans 16:17 Paul warns his readers to take note of those who create dissensions and skandala in opposition to the teaching they had learned. The translations "offenses" (NRSV), "difficulties" (RSV) and "obstacles" (NIV) are all too tame here, given the word's significance. Paul's strong language is strikingly similar to Jesus' stern warning against "scandalizing" one of the little ones (Mt 18:6 par. Mk 9:42 and Lk 17:2), and to other dominical sayings about skandala (Mt 18:7 par. Lk 17:1; Mt 13:41-42; 16:23).

Although Christ himself is never called a skandalon in the Synoptics, the use of skandalizō in the Gospels with reference to him consistently depicts Jesus as the occasion for danger, either through one's rejection of him or by persecution for his sake. It is not a long step from Jesus' declaration "Blessed is the one who is not 'scandalized' by me" (Mt 11:6 par. Lk 7:23; cf. Jn 6:61-64) to Paul who speaks of the skandalon of Christ crucified (1 Cor 1:23). For the Jews the cross was a stumbling block or snare (Gal 5:11) because they saw one hanged on a tree as under a curse rather than as a bringer of life (Deut 21:23; Gal 3:13). To those who, like the Pharisees, sought signs, Christ himself could become an occasion of spiritual ruin when encountered without faith (1 Cor 1:22; cf. Mk 8:11-12). So, in the quotation from Isaiah 8:14 in Romans 9:33, Christ is the petran skandalou, the "rock that will make them fall" (RSV/NRSV; "makes them fall" NIV).

See also CONSCIENCE; CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE; ISRAEL; STRONG AND WEAK.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. Giesen, "σκανδαλίζω," "σκάνδαλον," EDNT 3.248, 249-50; J. Guhrt, "Offence, Scandal, Stumbling," NIDNTT 2.705-10; H.-S. Lie, Der Begriff Skandalon im Neuen Testament und der Wiederkehrgedanke bei Laotse (Europäische Hochschulscrhriften XXIII/24; Bern: Herbert Lang; Frankfurt: Peter Lang, 1973); J. Mateos, "Analisis semantico de los lexemas skandalizo y skandalon," FN 2/1 (1989) 57-92; J. Moffatt, "Jesus upon 'Stumbling-Blocks,' " ExpT 26 (1914-15) 407-9; J. H. Moulton, "Σκάνδαλον," ExpT 26 (1914-15) 331-32; K. Müller, Anstoss und Gericht: Eine Studie zum jüdischen Hintergrund des paulinischen Skandalon-Begriffs (SANT 19; München: Kösel, 1969); G. Stählin, "σκάνδαλον, σκανδαλίζω" TDNT VII.339-58; M. B. Thompson, Clothed with Christ: The Example and Teaching of Jesus in Romans 12.1—15.13 (JSNTSup 59; Sheffield: JSOT, 1991) 174-84.

M. B. Thompson

SUFFERING

The questions of the inevitability and purpose of suffering in the life of Christians in general, and in the life of Paul as an apostle* in particular, are recurring themes of great significance throughout Paul's letters. In addition to the issues of death, his own imprisonment, and other specific instances of hardship and persecution, Paul speaks of affliction* and suffering per se over sixty times. In doing so, Paul employs the word groups for "suffering" (pathēma, paschō, etc.) and "affliction" (thlipsis, thlibō) interchangeably (cf., e.g., the alternation in 2 Cor 1:4-8 and Col 1:24), together with the general category of "weakness"* (astheneia), all three of which Paul can also use to describe the suffering and death* of Christ (cf. Phil 3:10; Col 1:24; 2 Cor 13:4). Paul's most sustained treatment of the subject occurs in 2 Corinthians, where he defends his apostleship against those who maintained that his suffering called into question the legitimacy of his own apostleship (cf. esp. 2 Cor 1:3-11; 2:14-17; 4:7-12; 6:3-10; 10-13).

1. Paul's Suffering as an Apostle
2. The Suffering of Believers
3. The Question of the Correct Interpretive Framework

1. Paul's Suffering as an Apostle.

According to Acts 9:15-16, Paul's call was inextricably linked to the fact that he would suffer greatly "for the sake of (the Lord's) name." The reality of this is attested throughout the book of Acts and reflected in every one of Paul's letters. Indeed, following the common Jewish notion that all suffering was part of death, Paul could look at his life and exclaim, "I die every day!" (1 Cor 15:31). Moreover, of all Paul's afflictions, he counted the pressure of his daily anxiety on behalf of his churches to be the climax of what he had to endure as a result of his calling (2 Cor 11:28; cf. 2 Cor 2:4, 13). Hence, rather than questioning the legitimacy of his apostleship because of his suffering, Paul considered suffering to be a characteristic mark of his apostolic ministry* (Gal 6:17; 1 Cor 2:1-5; 2 Cor 11:23-29; Phil 1:30; 2 Tim 1:11-12; 2:9; etc.), and an aspect of his own mortal life concerning which he was content, in which he rejoiced and about which he could appropriately "boast" (2 Cor 11:30; 12:10; Phil 1:19-26). Indeed, Paul willingly entered into suffering as a result of his decision to support himself financially when necessary (cf. 1 Cor 4:8-13, which Hock has shown reflects the descriptions of suffering typical of artisans such as Paul in the ancient world; 9:8-18; 2 Cor 2:17; 11:7-11; 12:14-16; see Tentmaking).

Paul's reason for this evaluation of suffering, however, was not experiential but theological. Paul understood that as an essential part of his calling to be an apostle, God* himself was continually leading him into situations of suffering, like one sentenced to death in the Roman arena or led to death in the Roman triumphal procession (cf. 1 Cor 4:9; 2 Cor 1:9; 2:14; 4:11; 2 Tim 1:11-12). God's purpose in doing so was to reveal his divine power* and to demonstrate the reality of the cross* and resurrection* of Christ in and through Paul's life (1 Cor 2:1-5; 2 Cor 2:14; 4:11), while at the same time making it clear that the age to come had not yet arrived in all its fullness (1 Cor 4:8-13; see Eschatology). Paul could thus interpret his suffering in terms of the cross of Christ, while his ability to endure it or God's action of deliverance from it, were an expression of the same divine power revealed in Christ's resurrection (cf. 1 Cor 4:8-13; 2 Cor 1:3-10; 4:7-12; 6:4-10; Phil 3:10-11; 2 Tim 3:10-11). The wisdom* and power of God first made known through the cross and resurrection of Christ were therefore now being further manifest and revealed publicly through Paul's own suffering as an apostle. In Galatians 3:1 Paul is thus referring to his own suffering as an embodiment of the gospel* and as the vehicle for displaying the truth of the cross when he reminds the Galatians that Jesus Christ was publicly portrayed as crucified before their very eyes.

Viewed from this same perspective, Paul's statement in Colossians 1:24 that his suffering "completes what is lacking in Christ's afflictions" does not refer to the concept of a certain amount of "messianic suffering" or "woes of the messiah" that must be fulfilled before the age can be consummated, as commonly interpreted (cf. Dan 12:1; 1 Enoch 47:1-4; 2 Baruch 30:2; Mt 24:8; Mk 13:8; see, e.g., O'Brien). Nor does Paul view his suffering as having an atoning significance in 2 Corinthians 4:7-12 (contra Güttgemanns). For Paul, Christ's suffering stands alone as unique and sufficient (cf. Col 2:13-14; Gal 1:4; 1 Cor 1:18-31; 2 Cor 5:16-21; Rom 3:21-26; etc.). Rather, Paul completes what is "lacking" in Christ's afflictions on behalf of the church in the sense that his ministry extends the knowledge and reality of the cross of Christ and the power of the Spirit (see Holy Spirit) to the Gentile* world (Col 1:23; cf. Eph 3:13). Paul's suffering also functioned to make it clear, therefore, that the power and knowledge of the gospel was God's and not his own, so that those who encountered Paul would place their faith* in the power of God and not in the person of the apostle (1 Cor 2:1-5; 2 Cor 4:7; 12:9-10). Whatever Paul's much debated (and still unclear) "thorn in the flesh" actually was, it too functioned in this way by keeping him from boasting in the abundance of the revelations that he had received (2 Cor. 12:7).

2. The Suffering of Believers.

The fact that others not only accepted Paul as a genuine apostle in spite of his suffering, but were also willing to imitate* him by joyfully continuing in faith,* hope* and love* in the midst of their own afflictions, became a sign for Paul of the legitimacy of their standing in Christ, even as it was a sign of his own legitimacy as an apostle (Gal 4:12-15; Phil 1:3-7; 4:14-15; 1 Thess 1:6; 3:1-5; 2 Tim 1:8). In addition, Paul's willingness to suffer on behalf of his churches also provided a model of Christian love, so that Paul could call his churches to follow his example of giving up their rights for others, even when this meant undue suffering and hardship (1 Cor 4:8-13; 6:7; 9:1-27; 12—14). Yet unlike the martyrdom theology of the later centuries, Paul stops short of teaching that all believers are called to suffer in the same way that he was as an apostle. Rather, Paul recognizes that all Christians simply will suffer as a result of identifying themselves with Christ (Rom 8:17; Phil 1:29-30; 2 Tim 3:12) and, to varying degrees, as a result of their distinct circumstances, since such suffering is inevitable in this evil age (cf. 1 Cor 7:28; 12:26; 1 Tim 5:23).

Nevertheless, for Paul, whenever Christians do suffer, they too must meet their suffering with joy,* knowing that their affliction is not senseless, but becomes the divinely orchestrated means by which God strengthens their faithful endurance and hope by pouring out his own love and Spirit to sustain or deliver them in their distress (Rom 5:3-5; 8:12-39; 2 Cor 1:6). As a result, they too come to embody the cross and resurrection in their lives as a witness to others of the truth of Christ, especially as this is seen in their ability to love others even when they are experiencing affliction (2 Cor 8:1-2; 1 Thess 1:2-7; 2 Thess 1:3-5). Paul can therefore encourage his readers to be patient and to endure in the midst of adversity, which is the outworking of their faith (Rom 12:12; 2 Tim 4:5), since he knows that only those who suffer with Christ in the endurance of faith will also be glorified with Christ (Rom 8:17; see Glory, Glorification). Finally, then, because of the faith and love made real in their lives through suffering, all believers will join Paul in experiencing not only the power of God made known in the cross of Christ as God sustains them in the midst of their adversities, but also the resurrection power of God as he uses their suffering as the pathway to sharing in Christ's glory (Rom 8:35; 2 Cor 4:14; 2 Thess 1:7). It is this hope which keeps one persevering in faith (Rom 4:18-25; 8:18-25; 1 Cor 15:20-34, 58; 2 Cor 4:16-18). As for those who do not share Christ's suffering by identifying with him, but who persecute those who do, they will experience suffering on the day of judgment* (2 Thess 1:6-10; Rom 2:9).

3. The Question of the Correct Interpretive Framework.

Apart from the interpretation of these crucial passages themselves, the scholarly debate in recent decades has focused on ascertaining the correct conceptual framework for understanding Paul's statements concerning the role of suffering in the believer's life, especially his own suffering as an apostle (see Bloomquist). This debate has been sparked primarily by the fact that, as Bultmann made clear, Paul presents his suffering in 1 Corinthians 4:8-13 and 2 Corinthians 4:7-12; 6:3-10; 11:23-29 in four "catalogues of suffering" (peristasis catalogues; see Afflictions) which seemingly parallel the kinds of lists found in popular Greco-Roman moral and philosophical portraits of the sufferings of sages and Stoics, as well as those in other walks of life (cf., e.g., Plutarch Mor. 326D-333C; 361E-362A; 1057D-E; Epictetus Diss. 2.19.12-32; 4.7.13-15; Seneca Ep. Mor. 85.26-27). This has led those such as J. T. Fitzgerald to argue that Paul's primary frame of reference is to this standard philosophical and rhetorical* form of testifying to one's legitimacy. Against this backdrop Paul's goal is to picture himself as the ideal sage and philosopher, whose virtue has been revealed by his perseverance of character in the midst of suffering. On the other hand, others such as Kleinknecht have argued that, although Paul may use the general form and some of the common vocabulary for afflictions as found in the peristasis catalogues, the backdrop for his thinking is that of the tradition of the suffering of the righteous in the OT and Judaism, as that was embodied in the suffering of the righteous one, Christ.* In making this case they point to the many OT allusions throughout the context of these sections and the direct quotes of Psalm 115:1 LXX in 2 Corinthians 4:13 and Isaiah 49:8 in 2 Corinthians 6:2. Paul's goal is thus to picture himself as suffering in the train of the OT righteous and, finally, of Christ himself as one of those who demonstrated their faith by their endurance in the midst of adversity.

Recently Garrett has questioned the either/or dichotomy in this debate and has attempted to show Paul's reliance both on Stoic philosophy* and on Jewish apocalyptic* thought, such as that found in the Testament of Job, in which Satan* and his allies are seen as the ultimate cause of Paul's troubles, with Paul's endurance being the sign that he is confident in God's ultimate victory. Though Garrett is certainly correct to emphasize the overlap between Hellenism* and Judaism in Paul's day, the attempt to derive Paul's thought in these contexts in any significant measure from the philosophical traditions of his day still remains unconvincing in view of Paul's explicit reliance on the Old Testament* and his christology.* Moreover, the wide gulf between Paul's understanding of God and his relationship to humanity and that of the Stoics adds to the difficulty of this attempt. It is still questionable whether there is, in fact, a significant conceptual parallel between Paul's endurance in the midst of adversity, as an expression of his dependence upon God's sovereign leading and working in his life, and the Stoic virtue of enduring hardship for the sake of a greater cause as an expression of one's character and self-mastery.

See also Afflictions, Trials, Hardships; Apostle; Cross, Theology of the; Crucifixion; Imitation of Paul/of Christ; Tentmaking.

Bibliography. H. D. Betz, Der Apostel Paulus und die sokratische Tradition (BHT 45; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1972); D. A. Black, Paul, Apostle of Weakness: Astheneia and Its Cognates in the Pauline Literature (New York: Lang, 1984); L. G. Bloomquist, The Function of Suffering in Philippians (JSNTSup 78; Sheffield: Academic, 1993); J. T. Fitzgerald, Cracks in an Earthen Vessel: An Examination of the Catalogues of Hardships in the Corinthian Correspondence (SBLDS 99; Atlanta: Scholars, 1988); S. R. Garrett, "The God of this World and the Affliction of Paul, 2 Cor. 4:1-12," in Greeks, Romans, and Christians, FS for A. Malherbe, ed. D. L. Balch et al. (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1990) 99-117; E. Güttgemanns, Der leidende Apostel und sein Herr. Studien zur paulinischen Christologie (FRLANT 90; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1966); R. F. Hock, The Social Context of Paul's Ministry: Tentmaking and Apostleship (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980); S. J. Hafemann, Suffering and Ministry in the Spirit: Paul's Defense of His Ministry in II Corinthians 2:14-3:3 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); K. T. Kleinknecht, Der leidende Gerechtfertigte. Die alttestamentlich-jüdische Tradition vom 'leidenden Gerechten' und ihre Rezeption bei Paulus (WUNT 2.13; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1984); P. T. O'Brien, Colossians, Philemon (WBC 44; Waco: Word, 1982).

S. J. Hafemann

SUFFERING SERVANT. See Christology; Death of Christ; Futility; Old Testament in Paul; Servant, Service.

SUFFICIENCY. See Corinthians, Letters to the; Mysticism; Philosophy; Riches and Poverty.

SUPER-APOSTLES. See Apostle; Corinthians, Letters to the; Opponents of Paul.

SYNAGOGUE. See Diaspora; Political Systems; Social Setting of Mission Churches.

T

TABLE FELLOWSHIP. See FOOD OFFERED TO IDOLS AND JEWISH FOOD LAWS; JESUS AND PAUL; LORD'S SUPPER; LOVE FEAST; SOCIAL-SCIENTIFIC APPROACHES TO PAUL.

TARSUS. See JEW, PAUL THE; PAUL IN ACTS AND LETTERS.

TEACHING OF JESUS. See JESUS, SAYINGS OF; JESUS AND PAUL.

TEACHING/PARAENESIS

Paraenesis is the technical term (the Greek word for "advice," sometimes spelled parenesis) for traditional moral exhortation concerned with practical issues of living. In some Pauline letters paraenesis is concentrated in a concluding section (Rom 12:1—15:13; Gal 5:1—6:10; 1 Thess 4:1—5:22; Col 3:1—4:6; Eph 4:1—6:20); in others it appears throughout the letter (1—2 Cor; Phil; the Pastorals). Paul's paraenetic teaching reflects the influence of Jewish, Hellenistic and Christian tradition(s).*

1. Characteristics
2. Forms
3. Determining Influences

1. Characteristics.

Paraenesis addressed themes or topics (topoi) of moral concern, such as friends, sex, money, parents, food, etc., offering clear, down to earth counsel. J. I. H. McDonald and D. E. Aune characterize paraenesis as (1) consisting of traditional ethical material, expressing conventional wisdom* approved by society; (2) general in nature, applicable to many situations; (3) so familiar it is often presented as a "reminder"; (4) illustrated by the use of individuals as examples or models of virtue; and (5) given by persons who claim to be more experienced than their audience.

2. Forms.

A topos could be treated with a simple imperative ("Be at peace among yourselves," 1 Thess 5:13), or it might be lengthened by adding contrasts, illustrations, similes, proverbs or quotations. Jewish paraenesis often included the distinctive "two ways" motif (Prov 4:18-19; Ps 1:6; T. Asher 1:3-5; 1QS 3:13—4:26). This ethical dualism is reflected in Paul's language of walking in the Spirit* (vs. the flesh*), or in the light* (vs. darkness), and in the call to put off and put on certain characteristics (Col 3:8-17; Eph 4:22-24), which Paul summarizes as putting on Christ (Rom 13:14).

Catalogs of virtues* and vices were a common device in the ancient world to delineate community values. Aune notes that, in contrast to the individualistic emphasis of typical Hellenistic exhortation, Paul's lists tend to focus on social virtues and vices, such as envy, strife or malice (Gal 5:19-23; Rom 1:29-31; 13:13; 1 Cor 5:9-13; 6:9-10; 2 Cor 6:6-7; 12:20; Col 3:5-17; Eph 4:2-3, 31-32; 5:3-5; 1 Tim 6:4-5; Tit 1:7-10).

Household* codes (often referred to by the German Haustafeln, "house-tables") specified reciprocal duties between husbands and wives, parents and children, and masters and slaves* (Col 3:18—4:1; Eph 5:21—6:9; Titus 2:1-10; 1 Tim 2:1-15; 5:1-8; 6:1-2; cf. 1 Pet 2:11—3:7). The Jewish roots of the Haustafeln appear in the fourth commandment and in the wisdom literature. J. E. Crouch argues that the household codes reflect concern in the later church to maintain stability and order in the face of enthusiastic tendencies and heresy. P. H. Towner has shown that the aim of the theology and paraenesis of the Pastoral* letters was not to preserve a bourgeois status quo, but to promote mission; it was thus consistent with a goal of paraenesis in earlier Pauline letters.

3. Determining Influences.

In the past, Pauline paraenesis attracted little attention from scholars, but the situation is changing. E. G. Selwyn's case for a primitive catechism or holiness code underlying early Christian paraenesis has never been conclusively proved or refuted. More recently, A. J. Malherbe has emphasized parallels with Cynic and Stoic thought, which Paul would have met in the Hellenistic culture of his birthplace, Tarsus (Acts 22:3; see Jew, Paul the; Philosophy). Although comparisons with Greco-Roman rhetorical techniques appear fruitful in the analysis of Paul's method, the content of his paraenesis reflects his Jewish background (cf. especially Rom 13:8-10). P. J. Tomson's study draws out the links between the apostle's exhortations and the halakah Paul inherited as a Pharisee. M. B. Thompson argues that the example and teachings of Jesus* provided the orientation for Paul's paraenesis.

The traditional nature of paraenesis was sometimes cited to show that Paul simply tacked it onto his letters without any tangible connection between his theology and ethics.* D. G. Bradley suggested that Paul drew his topoi from a "bag of answers" without the intention of thereby addressing specific needs in the community. V. P. Furnish, A. J. Malherbe and others have corrected this view, observing that Paul shaped most of his material for its recipients. Lists of vices addressed the problems of particular Pauline churches (1 Cor 5:9-10; 6:9-10; 2 Cor 12:20-21; see Virtues and Vices). Some recent studies of Romans* have argued that even in Paul's most general letter (to a congregation he had never visited), his paraenesis was conditioned by the circumstances of his readers.

Although he used traditional forms and content, the imperatives of Paul's moral teaching are rooted in the indicatives of what God has done in Christ, as seen in Christian baptism* (Rom 6:1-10, 11-23). They were shaped by Paul's awareness of Christian freedom* in the Spirit, by the mandate of Christian witness* to the world, and especially by the character of Christ, seen most clearly in the cross.*

See also ETHICS; HOLY SPIRIT; HOUSEHOLDS AND HOUSEHOLD CODES; JESUS, SAYINGS OF; NEW NATURE AND OLD NATURE; PHILOSOPHY; TRADITION; VIRTUES AND VICES; WISDOM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. E. Aune, The New Testament in Its Literary Environment (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1987); D. G. Bradley, "The Topos as a Form in the Pauline Paraenesis," JBL 72 (1953) 238-46; J. E. Crouch, The Origin and Intention of the Colossian Haustafel (FRLANT 109; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1972); V. P. Furnish, Theology and Ethics in Paul (Nashville: Abingdon, 1968); J. I. H. McDonald, Kerygma and Didache: The Articulation and Structure of the Earliest Christian Message (SNTSMS 37; Cambridge: University Press, 1980); A. J. Malherbe, Moral Exhortation: A Greco-Roman Sourcebook (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1986); W. A. Meeks, The Moral World of the First Christians (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1986); E. G. Selwyn, "On the Inter-Relation of I Peter and Other N.T. Epistles," in The First Epistle of St Peter (London: Macmillan, 1946) 365-466; M. B. Thompson, Clothed with Christ: The Example and Teaching of Jesus in Romans 12.1—15.13 (JSNTSup 59; Sheffield: JSOT, 1991); P. J. Tomson, Paul and the Jewish Law: Halaka in the Letters of the Apostle to the Gentiles (CRINT III.1; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1990); P. H. Towner, The Goal of Our Instruction: The Structure of Theology and Ethics in the Pastoral Epistles (JSNTSup 34; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1989).

M. B. Thompson

TEMPLE

Paul very clearly uses temple language at several points in his letters, and interpreters have drawn attention to other possible temple allusions. Paul primarily applied the imagery to the people of God,* both individually and corporately, and seems to have used its associated imagery to speak of Christ.*

1. Background
2. Terminology
3. Temple and People of God
4. Temple and Christology

1. Background.

The Temple of Jerusalem* was one of the principal symbols of the Jewish faith and worldview (along with the symbols of Torah, land and ethnic identity; see Wright, 224- 32; Dunn, 18-36). In pre-A.D. 70 Judaism the Temple represented the one place God had chosen to be uniquely present among his elect people; and it was the place where Israel's cultic worship* was focused, so much so that the prayers of the Synagogue were timed to the Temple hours of morning and evening sacrifice. The Temple was not only a place and symbol of immense religious importance, it was also a political and economic center, the control of which had deep implications for parties and sects within Judaism (see Dunn, 31-36). When Jews thought of their past, present or future, the Temple occupied a central place in their minds (cf. Ezek 40—48; 1 Enoch 90:28-29; 5Q15; 11QTemple), and Jesus' own attitude toward the Temple was a matter of interest and controversy in his day (e.g., Mk 11:15-17; Mk 14:49, 58; Mt 17:24-27; 23:37-39 par. Lk 13:34-35; see Wise). Acts shows Paul the apostle acknowledging an ongoing significance for the Jerusalem Temple (Acts 21:26-30; 22:17; 24:18; 25:8; 26:21). It was perhaps inevitable that when Paul spoke of God's new work in Christ,* he would appropriate temple imagery in some way. This was not only because of his Jewish heritage, but also because Paul carried out his mission* in a Greco-Roman world in which temples and sanctuaries of deities were well represented, with notable examples in Corinth* and Ephesus* (see Religions, Greco-Roman).

2. Terminology.

Paul used two different Greek words to speak of temple: naos and hieron. In terms of the Jerusalem Temple, naos refers to the building, the place of God's dwelling, and hieron refers to the entire area, or precincts, including the sanctuary (Michel, 880-90). Generally speaking, naos was used to designate the inner section of the Temple known as the holy place and the holy of holies, whereas hieron designated the outer court and the Temple proper. Fee summarizes, "The distinctions between the two words do not necessarily hold in all the Greek of the NT period, but the usage in the LXX, where the distinction is common, seems to have influenced Paul" (Fee, 146 n.6).

In Paul's letters the word naos appears six times (1 Cor 3:16-17; 6:19; 2 Cor 6:16; Eph 2:21; 2 Thess 2:4) and hieron once (1 Cor 9:13). In these verses Paul maintains the distinction of definition noted above. In 1 Corinthians 9:13 Paul, addressing the issue of whether "those who proclaim the gospel should get their living by the gospel," uses the analogy of the actual physical temple. He uses the word hieron to indicate the place where the priests offered up animal sacrifices* on the altar (1 Cor 9:13), which was situated in the outer court (see Ex 27—29, 40). And when Paul referred to the abominable act of the "man of lawlessness"* who usurps God's place in the temple, he used the word naos—the word that designates the place of the deity's presence (1 Thess 2:4).

In all the other Pauline passages, naos is used metaphorically—to depict a human habitation for the divine Spirit. In one instance the sanctuary image is used to describe the individual believer's body (1 Cor 6:19); in every other instance the sanctuary depicts Christ's body, the church (1 Cor 3:16-17; 2 Cor 6:16; Eph 2:21).

3. Temple and People of God.

3.1. 1 and 2 Corinthians. In arguing for sexual* purity Paul asked the Corinthians, "Do you not know that your body is a temple [sanctuary] of the Holy Spirit* within you, which you have from God, and that you are not your own?" (1 Cor 6:19 NRSV). It is possible that some of the Corinthian believers still frequented the pagan temples and had intercourse with the temple prostitutes; in so doing, Paul argued, they became one body with a prostitute (1 Cor 6:16). But Christ had redeemed them so that they might become united to him, for "anyone united to the Lord becomes one spirit [with him]" (1 Cor 6:17). Each person who has been spiritually united to the Lord is his holy dwelling place; his or her body belongs to the Lord* and must not be given to or joined with a prostitute. Those sanctified by the Lord are now his holy temple (as contrasted with a pagan temple), where he dwells by means of the Holy Spirit.

1 Corinthians 6:19 is the only Pauline passage that describes the individual believer as God's temple. Mistakenly, it is sometimes thought that 1 Corinthians 3:16-17 also speaks of the individual. According to the Greek text, it is unquestionably clear that Paul in 1 Corinthians 3:16-17 was not speaking about the individual but the local church in Corinth when he said, ouk oidate hoti naos theou este kai to pneuma tou theou oikei en hymin ("do you [plural] not know that you [plural] are God's temple and that the Spirit of God dwells in you [plural]?"). 1 Corinthians 6:19 should not be read back into 1 Corinthians 3:16 "as if it were a word of warning to individual Christians as to how they treat their bodies or live out their individual Christian lives. Both the context and the grammar disallow such interpretations" (Fee, 149). In the same vein, Paul in 2 Corinthian 6:16—7:1 speaks of believers corporately as "the temple of the living God" and applies to them Ezekiel's rendition of the old covenant's promise of the divine presence in Israel's midst (Ezek 37:27). Because they are inhabited by the holy God, they must live in holiness.*

When the Corinthians heard Paul's analogy in 1 Corinthians of the church as God's sanctuary, they would have understood the image from their knowledge of pagan temples. But Paul probably had in mind the one temple in Jerusalem. The Gentiles* had many gods with many temples in many cities; the Jews had one God with one temple in one place that he had chosen (cf. Deut 12). In the history of Israel this had helped to preserve the unity and identity of the people of God. The Corinthians needed spiritual unity; they were fragmented due to their individual preferences (see 1 Cor 1:10-13). In the context of the letter Paul emphasizes the need for the Corinthians to see that God was producing one spiritual habitation in Corinth. God had given them many workers (such as Paul and Apollos*) to lay the foundation (themelios; cf. Ps 118:22; Is 28:16; Eph 2:20-22) for this sanctuary (1 Cor 3:9-15); it was their responsibility to build (oikodomeō) with the right materials and not destroy the building by being divisive.

Finally, E. E. Ellis has suggested that when Paul writes in 2 Corinthians 5 of the destruction of the earthly "tent" (skēnē) and its replacement by a "building [oikodomē] from God . . . a house [oikos] not made with hands, eternal in heaven," he is speaking not of individual bodies but of the corporate "body" of Christ conceived as a new temple (see Body). In so doing Paul reflects the tradition of Jesus that he would destroy "this temple" and build one "not made by hands" (Mk 14:58; cf. Jn 2:19) and the early Christian tradition that God does not live in houses built by hands (Acts 7:48-49) and was now rebuilding David's "fallen tent" (Acts 15:16-18; cf. Amos 9:11-12; see Ellis).

3.2. Ephesians. In Ephesians 2:14-15 Christ is said to have destroyed the "dividing wall of hostility," referring to his abolishing the enmity between Jews and Gentiles and making them into one "new humanity." Commentators frequently identify the "wall" with the barrier in the Temple dividing the Court of the Gentiles from the Court of Women. This barrier, beyond which no Gentile was to venture on pain of death, has been figuratively torn down in Christ.

The Ephesian passage goes on to speak of the local churches as living, organic entities which are all (corporately speaking) growing "into a holy sanctuary [naon hagion] in the Lord" (Eph 2:21). This interpretation depends on the textual variant pasa oikodomē (supported by ℵ * B D 33 1739* and the text printed in NA[26]), which could be rendered as "every building" (i.e., every local church). The other reading, pasa hē oikodomē (found in ℵ[1] A C P 1739[c]), translated as "all the building" (referring to the universal church), is a scribal correction. Paul pictured each local church as providing God with a spiritual habitation in that locality (Eph 2:22) and as growing together with all the other churches into one holy, universal sanctuary for the Lord's indwelling. (Note, however, that A. T. Lincoln accepts the reading pasa oikodomē, but translates it "all the building" or "the whole building," arguing that it represents "a Hebraism which has affected Koine usage" [Lincoln, 124, 156]). The several words derived from oikos ("house") in Ephesians 2:19-22 (paroikoi, oikeioi, epoikodomēthentes, oikodomē, synoikodomeisthē, katoiketērion) suggest that the "building" metaphor was closely associated with that of "temple" (cf. 1 Tim 3:15; note 2 Sam 7 where "house" is used alternately of David's home and dynasty, and the house David proposes to build for Yahweh; cf. Is 66:1; Jer 12:7; Hos 9:8, 15; Zech 9:8; 1QS 5:6; 8:5, 9; CD 3:19; see Household).

4. Temple and Christology.

Finally, Paul seems to apply one aspect of temple imagery to Christ. In Colossians 1:19 Paul speaks of Christ as the one "in whom all the fullness* was pleased to dwell," and in Colossians 2:9 he writes "in him all the fullness of deity dwells bodily." The language of God being "pleased to dwell" is used in Psalm 68:16 (LXX 67:16; cf. Deut 12:5) of Zion, the mountain where God would reside forever, and it is later appropriated to speak of divine Wisdom* taking up residence in Zion (Sir. 24:3-12). In the OT the glory* of God which is said to "fill" the whole earth (Ps 72:19; Jer 23:24; Is 6:3) comes to "fill" his Temple (Ezek 43:5). So the "fullness" of God being "pleased to dwell" in Christ suggests an application of the temple metaphor to the incarnation.

See also CHRISTOLOGY; CHURCH; FULLNESS; HOUSEHOLDS AND HOUSEHOLD CODES; JERUSALEM; JESUS, SAYINGS OF; TRIUMPH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Coppins, "The Spiritual Temple in the Pauline Letters and Its Background," SE 6 (1973) 53-66; J. D. G. Dunn, The Partings of the Ways: Between Christianity and Judaism and Their Significance for the Character of Christianity (Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1991); E. E. Ellis, "II Corinthians V.1-10 in Pauline Eschatology," NTS 6 (1959-60) 211-24; G. Fee, The First Epistle to the Corinthians (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987); B. Gärtner, The Temple and the Community in Qumran and the New Testament (SNTSMS 1; Cambridge: University Press, 1965); A. T. Lincoln, Ephesians (WBC 42; Dallas: Word, 1990); R. J. McKelvey, The New Temple: The Church in the New Testament (Oxford: University Press, 1969); I. H. Marshall, "Church and Temple in the New Testament," TynB 40 (1989) 203-22; O. Michel, "ναός," TDNT IV.880-90; E. P. Sanders, Judaism: Practice and Belief 63 BCE-66CE (Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1992); G. Schrenk, "ἱερός," TDNT III.221-47; M. O. Wise, "Temple," DJG 811-17; N. T. Wright, The New Testament and the People of God (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1992).

P. W. Comfort

TENTMAKING

There are a number of references to Paul working to support himself, both from his own letters (1 Cor 4:12; 9:1-18; 2 Cor 6:5; 11:23, 27; 1 Thess 2:9; 2 Thess 3:8) and from the Acts (18:3; 20:34-35). By so working Paul supported himself (see Financial Support) and "those who were with [him]" (Acts 20:35).

Only one of these references, however, identifies the nature of Paul's work—tentmaking (Gk ēsan . . . skēnopoioi tē technē, Acts 18:3). The Greek skēnopoios literally means "tentmaker" or "leatherworker."

1. The Nature of Tentmaking
2. Paul: Tentmaker and Apostle
3. Paul's Reasons for Working
4. Problems Caused by Paul's Work
5. The Rabbis and Work

1. The Nature of Tentmaking.

Scholars are divided over the kind of material on which Paul worked. Many scholars from earlier generations suggested it was the rough cloth made of goats' hair, known as cilicium, which took its name from Paul's native province, Cilicia. Understandably, they have readily connected this local cloth with the Cilician Paul's "tentmaking," suggesting he may have learned this trade as a youth in Tarsus.

A majority today, however, noting that cilicium was used widely for purposes other than tentmaking, and that the patristic interpretations of skēnopoios point in the direction of leather goods, believe that tents were generally made of leather (Hock 1980, 20-21). It is now held that the material with which Paul worked was leather. "Tentmaking" may have taken its name from its primary task but have included manufacture and repair of a range of leather and woven goods. A problem with this view, however, is that if the tanning of leather was a despised trade among the Jews (Jeremias, 303-12), would not any kind of leatherworking have shared the same reputation? Moreover, the staining of hands through this work may have rendered Paul unacceptable in the upper-class circles in which he sometimes moved (e.g., Acts 17:12, 19; 19:31; Rom 16:23; but cf. "these hands" of Acts 20:34).

Aquila and Priscilla, tentmakers recently arrived in Corinth after Claudius' expulsion of the Jews from Rome,* appear to have been entrepreneurial manufacturers and traders in tents and related goods, who moved from city to city. At least, so far as the meager evidence about them goes, we see them first in Rome, next in Corinth (see Corinthians), then in Ephesus* and finally again in Rome (Acts 18:1-3, 26; Rom 16:3-4). Each of the places Paul is known to have "worked"—Thessalonica, Corinth or Ephesus—was a great urban center. Why would tents be needed in these well-developed cities? The many travelers to these great cities may have purchased, as well as sought the repair of, tents and similar items as they passed through. Sailors in these port cities would also have lived in tents while on shore. It is possible that "tentmakers" may have manufactured and repaired various kinds of booths, canopies and awnings for city use.

2. Paul: Tentmaker and Apostle.

It is clear that Paul's work was physical and arduous. Paul writes of "labor and toil . . . we worked night and day" (1 Thess 2:9; cf. 2 Thess 3:8; Acts 20:35) and of "working with our own hands" (1 Cor 4:12; cf. Acts 20:34). We gain an impression of one whose daily life was characterized by hard physical labor, which began before sunrise.

Hock has shown that, far from being peripheral to Paul's life, tentmaking was central to it. "More than any of us has supposed, Paul was Paul the Tentmaker. His trade occupied much of his time. . . . His life was very much that of the workshop . . . of being bent over a workbench like a slave and of working side by side with slaves" (Hock 1980, 67; see Slave, Slavery).

Fundamental to those passages where Paul catalogs his apostolic sufferings (see Afflictions, Trials, Hardships) we find references to Paul's "labor." Comparing himself with the Corinthians, he writes, "We are weak, but you are strong. You are held in honor, but we in disrepute. To this present hour we hunger and thirst, we are ill clad and buffeted and homeless, and we labor working with our own hands" (1 Cor 4:10-12; cf. 2 Cor 11:27).

Significantly, Paul connects his work with his ministry.* He reminds the Thessalonians, "Night and day working . . . we proclaimed . . . to you the gospel of God" (1 Thess 2:9). This probably means that Paul talked to people while he worked and also, almost certainly, that on some days, or during part of the day, he laid aside his apron and tools and taught the gospel* (Acts 19:9-11). His lifestyle was characterized by both work and preaching.*

3. Paul's Reasons for Working.

Greco-Roman culture was accustomed to traveling philosophers (see Philosophy) and teachers who would be paid a fee for their efforts or, alternatively, given hospitality and other benefits by wealthy patrons, sometimes under circumstances that generated scandal (see Stumbling Block). It was not uncommon for itinerant lecturers to enjoy an evil reputation (Philostratus Vit. Ap. 1.13; Lucian Herm. 59; Dio Chrysostom Disc. 8.9). Paul certainly enjoyed the patronage of the wealthy and could easily have sought and received payment (e.g., Acts 17:4, 12; Rom 16:23; 1 Cor 1:14; Acts 19:31).

There are three reasons in particular why Paul worked to support himself.

First, conscious that he may have been perceived as just one of many itinerant lecturers, some of whom were none too scrupulous, Paul may have worked to support himself out of concern lest his ministry and the message of the gospel be associated with other traveling philosophers (cf. 1 Thess 1:5; 2:3-6; 1 Cor 9:12; Acts 20:33-35). Paul contrasts with himself the newly arrived opponents in Corinth as "those who peddle (kapēleuontes) the word of God" (2 Cor 2:17), "[who] tamper (dolountes) with God's word" (2 Cor 4:2) and who "prey upon" (katesthiei, literally "devour") the Corinthians (2 Cor 11:20). This vocabulary implies the receipt of improper payment, the watering down of the message and the exploitation of the hearers. For his part Paul was true to the message, working rather than accept payment for his ministry, and caring for his congregations (cf. 1 Thess 2:5-10; see Pastor).

Second, Paul regarded idleness, which was endemic in Greco-Roman society, as inappropriate for the Christian believer. So he deliberately set the example of hard work to support himself and called upon his converts to imitate him (1 Thess 5:14; 2 Thess 3:6-13; see Imitation). The practical values of life in Christ were concretely exemplified in his own consciously executed lifestyle in which he supported himself by work (Eph 4:28; cf. Acts 20:35).

Third, as one called to be the apostle to the Gentiles,* Paul had no option but to obey God's call to preach the gospel. God called him, and so Paul made "the gospel free of charge" to the people to whom he came (1 Cor 9:16-18). His obedience to God would have been diminished by receiving payment from others. His pay was to receive no pay. His work was between him and God; he would not be paid for it.

4. Problems Caused by Paul's Work.

Paul's contemporaries generally regarded work as appropriate for slaves, but not for free citizens. Artisans and manual workers were looked down upon. Cicero commented that a workshop was no place for a free man (De Offic. 1.150). Members of churches established by Paul would probably have regarded his manual labor as remarkable and quite possibly offensive. There are hints from Paul himself that his work required a degree of condescension and "abasement" (2 Cor 11:7). That he was born as a Roman citizen (see Citizenship) is usually taken to imply an affluent background in provincial Cilicia (Acts 22:28).

It is evident from 2 Corinthians 11:7-10; 12:14-18 that Paul's defense for working to support himself in 1 Corinthians 9:15-18 had proved unconvincing to the Corinthians. It is probable that by working to support himself Paul had broken the conventions of patronage whereby the wealthy would provide for the visiting lecturer. Paul appears to have been guilty of a serious slight on the Corinthians, for which throughout the seven years of their active association, they never forgave him. His "sin" was compounded because he was prepared to receive assistance from the Macedonians (2 Cor 11:9).

5. The Rabbis and Work.

From late Jewish sources we learn that rabbis were expected to support themselves by some form of labor. Rabbi Zadok said, "Make not of the Torah . . . a spade wherewith to dig . . . whosoever derives a profit for himself from the words of the Torah is helping his own destruction" (Pirqe 'Abot 4.7). Rabbi Gamaliel III declared, "An excellent thing is the study of the Torah combined with some secular occupation, for the labor by them both puts sin out of one's mind. All study of the Torah which is not combined with work will ultimately be futile and lead to sin" (Pirqe 'Abot 2.12).

Based on these texts it is commonly assumed that Paul learned his tentmaking as a pupil rabbi (see Jew, Paul the). Although Hock has questioned this assumption, there is good reason to accept it. Otherwise, how can we explain a member of the provincial elite having such a menial trade?

See also APOSTLE; FINANCIAL SUPPORT; WEAKNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. F. Hauck, "κόπος, κοπιάω," TDNT III.827-30; R. F. Hock, "Paul's Tentmaking and the Problem of His Social Class," JBL 97 (1978) 555-64; idem, The Social Context of Paul's Mission (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980); G. H. R. Horsley, New Documents Illustrating Early Christianity (North Ryde, NSW: Macquarie University, 1982) 2.17; J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1969); P. Marshall, Enmity in Corinth: Social Conventions in Paul's Relations with the Corinthians (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1987); W. Michaelis, "σκηνοποιός," TDNT VII.393-94.

P. W. Barnett

TEXTUAL CRITICISM

Textual criticism, the art and science that seeks to reconstruct the original text of a document, is necessary in the Pauline letters because the autographs have perished and the extant copies differ from each other. It involves three major tasks: (1) gathering and organizing the evidence; (2) developing a methodology by which to evaluate and assess the significance and implications of the evidence in order to determine which of the variant readings most likely represents the original text; and (3) reconstructing the history of the transmission of the text, to the extent allowed by the surviving evidence. In addition, it makes a contribution to the questions of the formation of the Pauline corpus (see Canon) and of the integrity of the letters.

1. The Evidence
2. Textual Traditions
3. Methodology
4. The Textual History of the Pauline Corpus
5. Later Redaction or Interpolations?
6. Examples

1. The Evidence.

The textual evidence for the Pauline letters is extremely good. The traditional (if somewhat arbitrary) classification provides a convenient means to survey the more important witnesses. (For a listing by textual tradition see 2.1-4 below.)

1.1. Papyri. The earliest copy of the Pauline corpus, P^{46}, is also one of the most important. Dating from c. 200, and somewhat carelessly written by a professional scribe, it preserves a very old form of a very good textual tradition. The not-insignificant value of the other twenty-five Pauline papyri, which include portions of all but two (1 and 2 Timothy) of the traditional fourteen letters, is diminished by their fragmentary state of preservation.

1.2. Uncials. In the Paulines, the leading uncial witnesses include ℵ A B and C. On the other hand, D/06 F/010 and G/012 form a trio of important Greek/Latin diglot witnesses that often preserve very early readings. Other noteworthy non-Byzantine MSS include P/025 Ψ 075 and 0150.

1.3. Minuscules. While the mass of minuscules are Byzantine in character, a number preserve, despite their relatively late dates, valuable testimony. Chief among them is 1739, a tenth-century copy of a fourth-century copy of an old MS very closely related to P^{46} In addition to the well-known 33, other important (and often undervalued) minuscule witnesses include 81 365 1175 1241 1506 1881 and 2464.

1.4. Lectionaries. Relatively little is known about the lectionary text(s) of the Pauline letters, which in any case are more important for the later history of the text than for recovering the original.

1.5. Versions. Because the roots of the early versions antedate the great uncials, they comprise potentially significant witnesses to the text. But the contributions of the versions to Pauline textual criticism remain largely to be made, for the following reasons: the Itala (or Old Latin) is one of the most important of the early versions, yet a critical edition is available only for Ephesians through Hebrews. Of the Syriac translations, the Old Syriac and the Philoxenian versions of the Pauline letters have not survived, and the Peshitta and Harclean revisions are largely Byzantine in character. The many Coptic versions, by virtue of their close association with the history of Christianity in Egypt, are very important witnesses to the Greek textual tradition but remain largely unexplored. Later versions are less significant, as they almost always are based on another version rather than a Greek text, and thus are only indirect witnesses.

1.6. Patristic Citations. Citations by Marcion, Irenaeus, Tertullian and Clement of Alexandria, though not numerous, are very helpful in illuminating both the original wording and history of the text of the letters, as are those of Origen and Cyprian. But much work in this area remains to be done before the full value of the patristic evidence can be realized.

2. Textual Traditions.

The development of clearly differentiated text types did not occur until the third or early fourth centuries, and the MSS of the earlier period are distinguished from one another as much or more by the care (or lack thereof) with which they were copied and revised as by any distinctive textual characteristics. Yet it is possible in many instances to trace connections between earlier MSS and leading representative MSS of the later text types, which suggests that these MSS belong to a common textual trajectory or tradition. Three of these textual traditions have been identified to date in the Pauline letters: an Alexandrian, a Western and a Byzantine.

2.1. Alexandrian Witnesses. Primary Alexandrian witnesses include P^{46} ℵB 1739 Clement of Alexandria and Origen. Secondary witnesses include P^{11} P^{13} P^{16} P^{27} P^{32} P^{40} P^{49} P^{61} P^{65} (?) A C H/015 I 048 0243 33 81 104 1175 1506 1881 the Coptic versions, and later Alexandrian fathers.

2.2. Western Witnesses. Witnesses which are Western in the strict sense of the term—that is, those which are from the western part of the Roman Empire—include the Greek-Latin bilinguals D/06 F/010 G/012 Tertullian, the Old Latin and non-Vulgate quotations in Latin fathers.

2.3. Byzantine Witnesses. These encompass most of the later uncials, over eighty percent of the minuscules and most of the Greek fathers. Representative earlier witnesses include K/018 L/020 049 056 0151 424 945 and, among the versions, the Peshitta and Harclean Syriac.

2.4. Other Important Witnesses. Not all MSS fit into the three traditions identified thus far. These other important witnesses include P^{30} P/025 Ψ 075 0150 6 323 365 614 629 630 1241 2464 2495.

2.5. Relative Value of the Traditions. It has been observed that certain combinations of witnesses and/or textual traditions preserve original readings more often than others. Variants supported by both the Alexandrian and Western textual traditions generally will prove to be superior to other readings; an Alexandrian-Byzantine combination is almost as good. Variants with Western and Byzantine support are very ancient, but often not original. Readings found only in the Alexandrian tradition stand a good chance of being original; indeed, it is not unusual for a small group of primary Alexandrian witnesses to be original over against all other witnesses. Either the Western or Byzantine tradition alone can preserve an original reading, but this happens only rarely.

3. Methodology.

3.1. General Considerations. The classical method of textual criticism relied heavily upon a stemmatic or genealogical approach that sought to reconstruct a stemma or family tree of surviving MSS and thereby to determine the "best manuscript" upon which to base an edition. But in the case of the NT this classical approach has proven to be unworkable due to (1) the large number of MSS involved and (2) the ubiquitous presence of mixture (or "cross-pollination") within the textual tradition. This means that even the most reliable MSS are sometimes wrong, and conversely even a MS of very poor quality may occasionally preserve a true reading. Consequently, there has emerged an approach that is best described as a reasoned eclecticism.

This approach applies, on a passage by passage basis, all the tools and criteria developed by the classical method. No one rule or principle can be applied nor any one MS or group followed in a mechanical or across-the-board fashion; each variation unit must be approached on its own merits.

3.1.1. External and Internal Evidence. Differences in method today are largely a matter of differing judgments as to the relative weight to be given to external evidence (i.e., that provided by the MSS and other witnesses) over against internal evidence (i.e., considerations having to do with scribes or authors; cf. 3.2.1 below), although there are a few notable exceptions. One is the so-called rigorous eclecticism which relies almost exclusively on internal considerations and places little if any weight on external evidence, treating the MSS basically as a storehouse of readings to be evaluated on other grounds. On the other extreme is the majority text method which seeks to eliminate entirely any appeal to internal evidence, arguing that a variant which is supported by a majority of the MSS ought to be accepted as original. This amounts to a substitution of counting witnesses for reasoned criticism, and fails to realize that a thousand copies of a mistake do not make it any less a mistake.

3.1.2. History of the Textual Tradition. What the "Majority text" and the "rigorous eclectic" approaches have in common is a disregard for the history of the textual tradition. But when the history of the text is taken seriously, it becomes impossible to rely entirely on either external or internal criteria alone. Instead, depending upon the facts in a given instance, a reasoned eclecticism applies a combination of internal and external considerations, evaluating the character of the variants in light of the MSS evidence and vice versa in order to obtain a balanced view of the matter.

3.2. The Fundamental Guideline. One overarching guideline governs all other considerations: the variant most likely to be original is the one which best accounts for the existence of the others. That is, when confronted with a set of variant readings, one should ask: "Which one best explains, in terms of both external and internal evidence, the origin of the others?" (For examples see 6.1-2 below.) It is important to note that "best accounts for" is here defined in terms of both external and internal considerations, because prerequisite to reaching a judgment about a variant is the reconstruction of its history. This is where both the "majority text" and "rigorous eclectic" approaches fall short, in that they repeatedly contend for the originality of readings which cannot account for the historical (i.e., manuscript) evidence. Only the variant that can best account for all the evidence can seriously be considered as original.

3.2.1. Additional Factors. Within the framework established by the fundamental guideline, several factors must be taken into consideration. Exactly which ones ought to be considered and how much weight is to be given to each depends upon the facts and circumstances in a given case. The relevant evidence falls into two broad types. External evidence takes into account (1) the relative date of the witnesses, (2) their geographical distribution, (3) genealogical relationships between the MSS and (4) the relative quality of the witnesses. Internal evidence is of two kinds: transcriptional (dealing with the habits and practices of scribes and editors) and intrinsic (dealing with the author's style, vocabulary, argument, etc.). Intrinsic factors are often the most subjective kind of evidence the textual critic must take into account. In the case of the Pauline letters, however, more often than elsewhere, such exegetical considerations frequently are decisive in judging between variants.

3.2.2. A Final Consideration. The importance of exegesis for Pauline textual criticism is a reminder that it, like other historical disciplines, is not a branch of mathematics or an area in which the evidence may be processed in a mechanical fashion according to rigid rules. Each variant presents a potentially unique set of circumstances and must be approached on that basis.

4. The Textual History of the Pauline Corpus.

4.1. Due to the fragmentary and incomplete state of the evidence, any reconstruction of the transmission history of the Pauline letters involves a high degree of conjecture and hypothesis. It is also closely associated with the formation of the Pauline corpus. For clarity it will be helpful to distinguish three broad stages in the transmission process.

4.2. The Pre-Corpus Stage. Initially, some letters appear to have circulated independently, while others circulated from the first only as part of a collection. Small collections in individual churches grew through the exchange of copies until by mid-second century (c. A.D. 180 at the latest) the full fourteen-letter corpus was in existence, though not yet with any standardized order of the letters (see Canon).

Two seemingly contradictory observations call for explanation during this stage. First, the presence of shared errors in nearly all surviving copies suggests the existence of a common archetype of the corpus, which must have been created at a very early stage in the transmission process in order to have infected virtually the entire surviving tradition. But second, the survival of genuine readings in a few isolated MSS or one small part of the tradition suggests the possibility of access to independent copies uninfected by the errors of the archetype of the corpus—a circumstance which would, however, refute the very concept of an archetypal corpus. Zuntz suggests, therefore, that there must have existed an archetype equipped with variant readings drawn from MSS available to the editor who compiled the archetype, probably in Alexandria, possibly as soon as the very early second century. This would account for the presence of shared distinctive readings in otherwise widely separated branches of the textual tradition. Alternatively, the initial formation of smaller collections out of which a relatively fixed corpus eventually emerged is a very likely hypothesis.

4.3. From the Corpus to Text-Types. From the mid-second to mid-fourth century, the letters were widely copied in a largely uncontrolled manner in a sometimes hostile environment. Most MSS were copied in a relatively normal fashion, subject only to the usual slips, errors and vicissitudes of the copying process. Some, however, were copied—one might even say edited or revised—in a fairly free manner, while a much smaller number appear to be the work of trained and supervised scribes, possibly in a scriptorium. The result was a variety of MSS of widely varying quality and characteristics.

4.4. The Rise of Text-Types. Following the Diocletianic persecutions (303-311, during which many MSS perished) and the toleration of Christianity under Constantine (313), the church experienced much growth in numbers and ecclesiastical control. In this environment MSS supplied by influential bishops in Antioch and Alexandria, which naturally reflected the distinctive character of the MSS created or preserved by the exegetical schools in these cities, came to dominate the East and Alexandria, respectively. Here are to be found the origins of the Byzantine and Alexandrian text-types. The Byzantine tradition reflects the stylistically polished text attributed to Lucian, while in Alexandria a MS or MSS closely related to B became, due to Athanasius' influence, the model for Egypt.

4.5. Later Developments. Though both these traditions continued to develop, their essential characteristics had by now been established. The most significant later development was the eventual dominance of the Byzantine text-type (due largely to the reduction, following the Arab conquests, of Greek-speaking areas to the region dominated by Byzantium) and the steady infringement of Byzantine readings into other branches of the tradition.

5. Later Redaction or Interpolations?

Suggestions that one or more of the present letters are a composite of two or more originally separate letters, and/or that the letters were edited (sometimes extensively) or interpolated in the late first or early second century have long been a part of the textual and literary criticism of the letters. Recently it has been argued that the presence of interpolations should be assumed as a working principle, and that the burden of proof lies with those who would disagree.

The textual history of the letters, however, suggests a different perspective. In view of the circumstance that Romans certainly and other letters probably circulated independently prior to the formation of the corpus, the essential uniformity of the existing tradition is remarkable. This means that since the manuscript tradition began, the letters always have had the same form they now exhibit. (The one letter which does exist in multiple forms, Romans,* is the exception which proves the rule, since clear traces of later editorial activity are visible in the tradition.) Therefore any editorial activity, such as that proposed by partition or interpolation hypotheses, must have occurred prior to a letter's entrance into the textual tradition. The burden of proof lies on those who suggest otherwise, and any proposal regarding post-publication textual alterations which is unsupported by evidence of disruption of the textual tradition is inherently implausible.

6. Examples.

The following examples illustrate some of the points discussed above (cf. especially 3.2, 3.2.1 and 3.2.2). Details about signs and abbreviations used may be found in the introduction to the United Bible Societies' Greek New Testament (3rd ed. [corrected], 1983).

6.1. 1 Timothy 3:16. What is the initial word of the hymnic fragment in this verse? The MSS present three variants: (1) OC (hos, "who," referring to Jesus), read by ℵ A C F G 33 and 365 among others, two forms of the Syriac, and several church fathers, including Origen, Jerome and Epiphanius; (2) O (ho, "which," referring to "mystery"), read by D 061, the Old Latin and Vulgate, and several Latin fathers, including Pelagius and Augustine; and (3) ΘC (the abbreviation for theos, "God"), read by K L P Ψ 81 1739 and many others, including the Byzantine tradition, later correctors of ℵ A C D, Gregory of Nyssa, Didymus, Chrysostom and Theodoret. (The Harclean and Peshitta Syriac, and Sahidic and Bohairic Coptic versions read either "who" or "which.")

With regard to external evidence, one may say that (1) has excellent early support from at least two regions (Egypt and Syria); (2) finds its support almost entirely in the West, among Latin MSS and fathers; (3) receives widespread but relatively late support from a large number of Byzantine and other MSS, and from several fathers, the earliest of whom dates from the last third of the fourth century.

Looking at internal evidence, we may say that it appears that reading (2), "which" (neuter pronoun), arose as a scribal "correction" of (1), "who" (masculine pronoun), to bring it into agreement with the immediately preceding word in Greek, mystērion ("mystery," a neuter noun). Thus all witnesses reading "which" indirectly support "who" as the earlier reading. In evaluating (1) (OC, "who") and (3) (ΘC, "God"), one may note that scribes very frequently strengthened christological statements, but seldom weakened them; thus a change (due to either accidental misreading or deliberate alteration) from OC to ΘC is much more probable than the reverse.

Summarizing, variant (1) has the support of early MSS and all ancient versions, while there is no trace of (3) prior to the latter part of the fourth century, and (1) was more likely to have been changed to (3) than vice versa. In view of the fundamental guideline given above (3.2), OC must be accepted as the original reading because it best accounts for, in terms of both external evidence and transcriptional probability, the existence of the other two variants.

6.2. 1 Corinthians 2:1. Did Paul write about the "testimony" (μαρτύριον, martyrion; see Witness) or the "mystery"* (μυστήριον, mystērion) of God? The latter reading is found in P^{46} ℵ* A C 88 436 two Latin MSS, Peshitta, Bohairic and two fathers, while virtually all other evidence (including ℵ² B D G 33 1739 Origen) supports the former.

The external evidence is indecisive. While "testimony" has broad and strong support, the more limited evidence favoring "mystery" is perhaps even earlier and is geographically widespread.

In turning to internal evidence, we may adduce two points in favor of "mystery": first, its presence here prepares the way for its use in 1 Corinthians 2:7 and, second, the presence of "testimony" in 1 Corinthians 1:6 has led scribes to substitute that term here. On the other hand, 1 Corinthians 1:6 is rather distant to have had such influence, and the usage there ("testimony of Christ") is different. Further, to use "mystery" here does not so much anticipate 1 Corinthians 2:7 as rob the use of the word in that place of much of its impact. Finally, "testimony" is a less common and less colorful term than "mystery," and therefore more likely to be replaced by, than to replace, the latter.

In short, although it is possible to explain how the variant "testimony" might have arisen if "mystery" were original, the reverse seems much more probable. Thus "testimony" is, in view of the basic guideline, most likely the original reading.

6.3. Ephesians 1:1. This variant affects the interpretation of not only the destination and nature of Ephesians,* but also its place and role in the formation of the Pauline corpus.

While most MSS read "to the saints who are in Ephesus and faithful in Christ," some very significant (and the very earliest) witnesses (including P^{46} ℵ B 6 1739 Origen) omit "in Ephesus," and Marcion apparently knew the letter under the heading "to the Laodiceans."

If the reading "in Ephesus" is original, it is not easy to explain the rise of the variant. The phrase without the place name is difficult (if not impossible) to translate; if "in Ephesus" was deliberately omitted, it is odd that a few additional words were not also omitted, so as to produce a readable text (cf. Col 1:2). But because the grammar seems to demand a place name, and similar Pauline greetings (cf. Phil 1:1) typically have a place name at this point, it is easy to see how a scribe, once the superscription "to Ephesus" was attached to the letter, might insert "in Ephesus" into the text.

It appears, therefore, that the reading without "in Ephesus" is the earliest surviving form of the text. But in view of its severe grammatical and logical difficulties (a saint is by definition faithful; to speak of "saints who are also faithful" is nonsensical), it is unlikely that it is the original reading.

The most widely accepted explanation of these circumstances is that Ephesians is a circular letter, intended for several churches (this would account for the observation that whereas Paul ministered extensively at Ephesus, this letter contains no personal greetings and the author does not know the addressees personally; cf. Eph 1:15; 3:2; 4:21). On this view a gap was intentionally left in the original, to be filled in with the appropriate location in the copies produced for distribution. Ephesus, as the best known of the churches that received a copy, eventually excluded the names of the other recipients, while a copy sent to Laodicea (cf. Col 4:16) would account for Marcion knowing it as "to the Laodiceans."

But while there are ancient examples of duplicate copies being sent to multiple locations, there are no known instances of a letter with a gap in lieu of the place name. Moreover, there are additional grammatical irregularities to be accounted for, including the problematic kai ("and" or "also") before "faithful." Of the various attempts to explain these points, the least unlikely suggests that the letter was originally sent to two cities, Laodicea and Hierapolis. On this view the text without any place name is the result of efforts to create a more universal form of the letter (analogous to the 14- and 15-chapter forms of Romans) for liturgical or other use; it may even have been part of a "catholic" or "departicularized" collection composed of Romans, Hebrews, 1 Corinthians (cf. the variant at 1:2b) and Ephesians. The insertion of "in Ephesus" would represent a later development (but why Ephesus, since on this view Ephesus did not, in contrast to the "circular letter" view, receive a copy?).

To summarize, while the earliest surviving text is the one lacking "in Ephesus," it is a matter of continuing debate whether that is the original text. Clearly the last word about Ephesians 1:1 has not yet been spoken. Nevertheless, the preceding discussion of it and the other two variants serves to exemplify the practice and significance of textual criticism in the Pauline letters.

See also CANON.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. K. Aland, "Die Entstehung des Corpus Paulinum," in Neutestamentliche Entwürfe (Munich: Kaiser, 1979); K. Aland and B. Aland, The Text of the New Testament: An Introduction to the Critical Editions and to the Theory and Practice of Modern Textual Criticism (2d ed., rev. and enlarged; Leiden: E. J. Brill/Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1989); H. Gamble Jr., The New Testament Canon (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985) 36-46; idem, The Textual History of the Letter to the Romans (Studies and Documents 42; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977); B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament. Its Transmission, Corruption, and Restoration (3d, enlarged ed.; New York and Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1992); D. Trobisch, Die Entstehung der Paulusbriefsammlung: Studien zu den Anfangen christlicher Publizistik (Fribourg: Editions universitaires/Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1989); W. O. Walker Jr., "The Burden of Proof in Identifying Interpolations in the Pauline Letters," NTS 33 (1987) 610-18; G. Zuntz, The Text of the Epistles: A Disquisition Upon the Corpus Paulinum (The Schweich Lectures, 1946; London: The British Academy, 1953).

M. W. Holmes

TEXTUAL HISTORY. See TEXTUAL CRITICISM.

TEXTUAL TRADITIONS. See TEXTUAL CRITICISM.

THANKSGIVING. See BENEDICTION, BLESSING, DOXOLOGY, THANKSGIVING; LITURGICAL ELEMENTS.

THESSALONIANS, LETTERS TO THE

Paul and Silas, accompanied by their assistant, Timothy (see Coworkers, Paul and His), took the first steps toward the establishment of a Christian community in Thessalonica as part of the first Christian mission to the province of Macedonia. Thessalonica was one of the major cities of the Roman Empire. The missionaries' subsequent contact with the Thessalonian church included two letters (see Letters, Letter Forms), which are probably the oldest Christian documents that we possess. Despite their brevity and their relative lack of significantly developed theological themes compared to the other letters in the Pauline corpus, the two letters to the Thessalonian Christians have become the object of much recent scholarly examination, particularly in the areas of rhetorical criticism (see Rhetoric, Rhetorical Criticism), sociological analysis (see Social Setting) and the early development of Pauline theology.

1. Contents of the Letters
2. The City of Thessalonica
3. The Pauline Mission
4. The Writing of the Letters
5. Literary and Historical Questions
6. Early Pauline Theology

1. Contents of the Letters.

Both 1 and 2 Thessalonians identify themselves in their prescripts (1 Thess 1:1; 2 Thess 1:1-2) as coauthored by Paul, Silas (called Silvanus in the letters) and Timothy. But we can probably assume on the basis of Paul's later letters (and see 1 Thess 3:6) that Paul at least played the leading role in their composition.

1.1. 1 Thessalonians. In 1 Thessalonians Paul thanks God* for the Thessalonian Christians, remembering in particular how they "received the word" preached by Paul and his coworkers "in the midst of much suffering*" (1 Thess 1:6) and thus became an example for others who would hear the gospel* (1 Thess 1:7-10). He goes on to recall for them the difficult circumstances and the earnest sincerity that characterized the initial apostolic mission (see Apostle) to Thessalonica (1 Thess 2:1-12). He does so apparently to set forth himself and his coworkers as examples of blamelessness for his readers. Paul then returns to thanksgiving (see Benediction, Blessing, Doxology, Thanksgiving) for the Thessalonians' reception of the gospel. He sets them on one side of a divide between God's suffering* people and the persecuting rejectors of God's Word, the latter exemplified by the "the Jews" (1 Thess 2:13-16). He then tells of how his love for them and concern for their steadfastness has led him and his coworkers to seek renewed contact with the Thessalonians. Now, with Timothy successfully returned from Thessalonica, news of their steadfastness has arrived and has brought rejoicing (1 Thess 2:17—3:10; see Joy).

A prayer for continued contact, love* and blamelessness (1 Thess 3:11-13) closes out the first major section of the letter (1 Thess 1—3). In this section Paul has drawn strong continuities between the Gentile* Christians of Thessalonica (see 1 Thess 1:9) and others among the people of God, including the OT prophets (1 Thess 2:15) and especially the missionaries who brought the gospel to Thessalonica. By this emphasis on their place in the people of God and their links with the apostolic mission, Paul gives the Thessalonian Christians a way of thinking about themselves that will enable them to stand with certainty in the adversity that they are experiencing. This in turn lays the foundation for the second major section of the letter, in which Paul will repeatedly refer to traditions and instructions that the Thessalonians have received from the missionaries (1 Thess 4:1, 2, 9, 11; see Teaching/ Paraenesis).

The second section (1 Thess 4—5) begins with an exhortation to holy living (1 Thess 4:1-12), the main focus of which is sexual morality (see Sexuality). Paul then deals with Christ's return (1 Thess 4:13—5:11; see Eschatology), which provides the basis for an exhortation to alert and sober living, to faith,* love* and hope,* and to mutual encouragement (1 Thess 5:4-8, 11). His main motivation in penning this eschatological section appears, however, to have been concern on the part of some Thessalonian Christians about the fate of those of their number who had died before Christ's return (1 Thess 4:13-18; see Immortality; Resurrection). The letter closes with general admonitions and benedictions (1 Thess 5:12-28).

1.2. 2 Thessalonians. Paul's thanksgiving in 2 Thessalonians (2 Thess 1:3-12), like that in 1 Thessalonians, mentions the Thessalonian Christians' characteristic steadfastness in suffering and their example to others. Once again eschatology is the framework in which Paul views both their suffering and their accomplishments.

2 Thessalonians also reveals that central to Paul's concerns for the Thessalonian Christian community were questions regarding eschatology (2 Thess 2:1-12). Here the problem seems to be that some believed that "the day of the Lord" had already occurred (2 Thess 2:2). Paul answers this belief by speaking of events that must take place before "that day" (2 Thess 2:3-12). As in 1 Thessalonians, having answered these initial concerns Paul returns to thanksgiving for the Thessalonians (2 Thess 2:13-17). A particular problem addressed in the general admonitions in 2 Thessalonians (2 Thess 3:1-15) is the refusal of some in the church to work (2 Thess 3:10-12); here the practice of the apostolic missionaries is offered as an example of labor and economic self-sufficiency (2 Thess 3:7-9; see Tentmaking). The letter closes with benedictions and Paul's personal greeting (2 Thess 3:16-18).

2. The City of Thessalonica.

Thessalonica was a populous city enjoying good fortune throughout most of the Hellenistic and Roman period. It was founded (at or near the site of Therma) at the head of the Thermaic Gulf (now called the Gulf of Salonika) about 315 B.C. by Cassander, formerly a general of Alexander the Great and, when the city was founded, king of Macedonia. As an important military and commercial port, it became the principal city of Macedonia. It was designated the capital of one of the four administrative districts into which Rome divided Macedonia in 168 B.C. In 146 B.C. it became the capital of the now-unified province of Macedonia. In the same year the Egnatian Way, connecting Asia Minor with the Adriatic Sea (and Rome beyond the Adriatic), was put through. It was on this road that Paul and his coworkers traveled from Philippi to Thessalonica (Acts 17:1; see Travel). In return for its support of Antony and Octavian, Thessalonica became a free city in 42 B.C. It remained the most important and populous city of Macedonia into the third or fourth century A.D. As Salonika it is the second largest city of modern Greece and still an important seaport.

Archeological sites in the city include parts of the Roman city wall, a first-century Roman forum and an older Hellenistic agora, a hippodrome, three spans of the triumphal arch of Galerius and a number of Byzantine churches. The Vardar Gate, which spanned the Egnatian Way at the west side of the city as the arch of Galerius spanned it at the east end of the city, was dismantled in the nineteenth century. An inscription from the gate, dating from the late first century B.C. to the early second century A.D., uses the Greek word politarchēs ("civic official"), otherwise found only in the Acts account of the Pauline mission to the city (Acts 17:6). Inscriptional evidence of Jewish settlement in the city dates from the late Roman period; a Samaritan synagogue inscription dates from an earlier period, perhaps the third century B.C.

3. The Pauline Mission.

3.1. The Account in Acts. The Jewish setting of the initial Christian mission to Thessalonica is prominent in the Acts account (Acts 17:1-10). The mission of Paul and Silas, which took place mostly or entirely in a Jewish synagogue, was focused on proving to Jews from their Scriptures that Jesus was the Messiah (see Christ). The first converts included some Jews, a large portion of the local Gentile worshippers of the God of Israel* and a number of prominent women (who were probably also among the Gentile worshippers of Israel's God). Opposition to the mission began at the initiative of Jews (cf. Acts 17:13), though it quickly spread to Gentiles, first to an unruly mob, and then to the city officials. Apart from the difficulty it brought on the new Christian community, this opposition made it prudent for Paul and Silas (and Timothy, though he is not mentioned in Acts) to move on. Thus Jews who opposed the Pauline mission were successful before the officials in blaming their intended victims, the Christians, for a disturbance that the Jews themselves had actually created.

But Paul's letters to the Thessalonian Christians do not seem, at first examination, to support the Acts account of the beginnings of their church.* Despite Paul's argument in person from the Scriptures (so Acts 17:2-3), neither letter quotes the OT; there are only occasional vague echoes, the most significant being of Daniel 11:36 in 2 Thessalonians 2:4. This is not what we would expect from a writer steeped in the Scriptures, the writer of Galatians* and Romans,* least of all when that person was writing to people who had only recently been all habitués of a synagogue. Furthermore, the readers are reminded how they turned "from idols" (see Idolatry) to await God's Son (see Son of God) from heaven* (1 Thess 1:9-10). Nowhere in the letters is it even hinted that any of the readers had any positive and meaningful contact with Judaism before they met Paul and Silas, much less that any of them were Jews. (The contrast is at least less certain with regard to their opponents: In Acts the opposition is ultimately both Jewish and Gentile; in 1 Thessalonians the opponents are the Christians' "own countrymen" [1 Thess 2:14], and this designation might well include some Jews.) For these reasons it has been thought by many that the Acts account of the mission in Thessalonica is inaccurate or at least that it is part of its author's broader portrayal of Paul's mission strategy (see Mission) and of Jewish-Christian relations (cf. Acts 13:44-50; 14:19; 18:12-17; etc.).

3.2. The Picture Suggested by the Letters. The Acts account might, indeed, describe only one side of a mission that also (and even more significantly) touched Gentiles who had not been influenced by Judaism. By referring to his own physical labor in both letters (1 Thess 2:9; 2 Thess 3:7-9), Paul gives us a clue concerning this other side of the mission: His workplace may have been where many non-judaized Gentiles in the city heard the gospel (see Tentmaking). This would be in accord with the methods used by other preachers and popular philosophers (see Philosophy) of the day (Hock, 38-41; Malherbe 1987, 17-20). That Paul did enter into some sort of craft-business arrangement in Thessalonica (as in Corinth, Acts 18:2-3) suggests a longer stay in the city than the three weeks or a little more that might be inferred from the Acts account (Acts 17:2). It was more than once that the Philippian Christians sent Paul material assistance while he was in Thessalonica (Phil 4:15-16; see Financial Support); this points to the same conclusion.

But it may be that the situation was more complex not only than Acts suggests but also than what we might infer from the letters by themselves. Perhaps Paul sought to downplay what Jewish influence there was on some of the Thessalonian Christians. As it is, the belief structure reflected in the letters is a messianic-apocalyptic form of Judaism (see Apocalypticism; Eschatology), even though the letters never refer to the Jewish Scriptures (see Old Testament in Paul). They also include a strongly worded anti-Jewish polemic (1 Thess 2:14-16) and emphasize (perhaps even exaggerate) the pagan origin of the addressees (1 Thess 1:9)—possibly because of the circumstances under which the Thessalonian church began or because of Paul's reaction against Judaism coming out of his own call to Christian faith and apostleship (on the latter cf. Gager, though he does not extend his argument back to 1 Thessalonians).

Any attempt to say more about the Thessalonian Christians on the basis of the letters must reckon with the observation that Paul apparently preached a message with a strong eschatological orientation and that this orientation was apparently taken to an extreme by some members of the community (1 Thess 4:13—5:11; 2 Thess 2:1-12). Perhaps this eschatological excitement was great enough to prompt charges of political subversion (Acts 17:6-7). Sociological study of eschatologically focused, or millenarian, groups has emphasized that a new experience of relative deprivation arising from changes within society's structures and patterns of relationships generally lies behind this kind of eschatological interest. Paul's preaching of the gospel offered just such an eschatological faith. Was there a social situation at Thessalonica that would have made Paul's gospel attractive?

Even if the Thessalonian Christians were not at ease with the status quo, we would be mistaken to suppose that all of them were at the bottom of society. Indeed, W. Meeks suggests (173-74) that some of Paul's converts would have been people of some wealth experiencing "status inconsistency" or "status dissonance" because their social standing did not match their wealth. This inconsistency lay behind their attraction to the eschatological faith preached by Paul. A community consisting of both poor and rich persons is suggested by two lines of evidence: the decision of some to quit working (2 Thess 3:11) and Acts' references to "leading women" and to the householder Jason (Acts 17:4-5; see Social Setting).

R. Jewett (113-32) has suggested specific social factors at Thessalonica that may have played a role in certain Thessalonians responding to Paul's message. Jewett speaks of the absorption of the Cabirus cult into the city cult of Thessalonica during the first century A.D. (see Donfried). The Cabirus cult was a local eschatological redeemer cult once popular among the lower classes and with some superficial structural similarities to the Christian gospel. Some of the Cabirus cult's original adherents, having lost what their recently coopted faith had provided for them, may have found a suitable substitute in the gospel. Jewett also points to changes in Thessalonian society that had occurred with the shift to Roman power and the coming of new people who bore governmental and commercial power. This shift in power would have contributed to a social situation in which Paul's eschatological gospel would been viewed with favor.

However we picture its origin, the Thessalonian church apparently remained stable and on friendly terms with Paul and his coworkers: Acts 20:4 mentions two men of Thessalonica among the representatives of the Gentile churches accompanying Paul on his last journey to Jerusalem. 2 Timothy 4:10 mentions a "Demas" who deserted Paul and went to Thessalonica; this brief note is not enough to imply that the church there had become disaffected from the apostle.

4. The Writing of the Letters.

The letters to the Thessalonian Christians were apparently written not long after the departure of Paul, Silas and Timothy from Thessalonica and their arrival in Athens (1 Thess 2:17; 3:1; Acts 17:10-15). Paul's attempts to return to Thessalonica were hindered (1 Thess 2:18), perhaps by the guarantee that he would not come back, a guarantee forced out of the Thessalonian Christians by the city officials (Acts 17:9). But he did manage to send Timothy back (1 Thess 3:2).

A written message no doubt accompanied Timothy, but we do not have it, unless it is what we call 2 Thessalonians (which would then be the earlier of the two letters; so Wanamaker, 37-45; see below on the order of the letters). At any rate, 1 and perhaps 2 Thessalonians were written after Timothy's return from Thessalonica with good news concerning the stability of the Christian community there (1 Thess 3:6). Paul still hoped to return to Thessalonica (1 Thess 3:10-11). In the meantime he and his associates sent these two letters to encourage and exhort the fledgling church to attempt to clear up some confusion concerning the eschatological expectation that they had proclaimed and to address a problem of vagrancy on the part of some members.

The Thessalonian letters have often been viewed as arising out of a situation of particular ideological conflict. This situation has usually been defined under the influence of the interpretation of other, more clearly polemical letters of Paul (in different ways by, e.g., Schmithals, 123-218, and Jewett, 149-57). But such an approach is often part of an incorrectly monolithic picture of Paul's opponents* or of ancient religious currents (see Gnosticism; Judaizers). Furthermore, it is usually dependent on tenuous connections drawn between Pauline exhortations and other statements and phenomena in the ancient world or between the different letters of Paul (e.g., 1 Thessalonians and 2 Corinthians) and on a questionable identification of some parts of the Thessalonian letters as polemical (see 5.1 below). We are on the most secure ground if, generally speaking, we think of the problems in the Thessalonian church as arising from the possibilities within Pauline Christianity itself, not from any ideological corruption emanating from outside the community.

Within that framework, it does appear that an overrealized eschatology* was advocated by at least some in the Thessalonian church. The eschatological confusion Paul addresses was apparently centered upon questions concerning the time remaining before the expected return of Jesus. Some members of the community had already died, and those remaining were unsure how the dead could benefit from Christ's return (1 Thess 4:13-18). In this situation some of the community had perhaps found solace in believing that the expected eschatological return had, in some sense or another, already occurred (2 Thess 2:1-3; see Resurrection).

Paul does not indicate the reasoning that lay behind the refusal of some to work (1 Thess 4:10-12; 5:14; 2 Thess 3:6-12) or even that there was reasoning behind it. He does not even say or clearly imply that this pattern of behavior arose subsequent to their conversion to Christianity. So the common suggestion that this vagrancy was motivated by their new eschatological beliefs and that it was thus another manifestation of the eschatological confusion addressed in the letters (e.g., Marshall, 117, 218) is little more than a guess.

It has also been suggested that the problem of Christian preachers claiming support from their audiences was showing its face in this refusal to work (Trilling 1972, 96-98). But this problem, in which Paul wished to avoid any suggestion of involvement, whether in Corinth or in Thessalonica (1 Thess 2:9; 2 Thess 3:7-9; 1 Cor 9), and which the Didache (Did. 12) addresses, was associated with itinerant preachers. 1 and 2 Thessalonians, however, address a problem of vagrancy among the resident members of the community.

It has commonly been thought that 1 Thessalonians 2:1-12 answers charges that Paul and his associates were hypocritical, motivated not by loyalty to God and love for the Thessalonians but by love for money (e.g., Bruce, 27-28), or that it responds to charges that Paul neglected charismatic gifts (cf. 1 Thess 1:5; 2 Cor 10:10; 11:6; Schmithals, 139-40, followed by Jewett, 102-3; see Gifts of the Spirit). But it has been shown that this passage is merely an example of a common ancient rhetorical pattern in which the speaker or writer provides an example to be emulated by describing his own behavior in antithetical terms ("not that, but this") (Lyons, 184; Malherbe 1970, 1983).

It has also been claimed that some aspects of the hortatory material in 1 Thessalonians addressed specific problems in the Thessalonian Christian community (e.g., Jewett, 100-102 on 1 Thess 5:19-22, 103-4 on 5:12-13; Bruce, 87 on 1 Thess 4:3-8). It is clear that this is the case for the problem of vagrancy in 2 Thessalonians and, by extension, in 1 Thessalonians. But in the other exhortations, those concerning adultery and other forms of sexual immorality (1 Thess 4:3-8), and respect for church leaders (1 Thess 5:12-13, perhaps with 2 Thess 3:14-15), Paul is using standardized exhortations expressed in rhetorically normal patterns with no suggestion that particular problems are addressed.

5. Literary and Historical Questions.

5.1. Form Criticism and Rhetorical Criticism. Most of Paul's letters contain an "epistolary thanksgiving" after the salutation (e.g., Rom 1:8-15; 1 Cor 1:4-9; Phil 1:3-11), and in this they resemble other Hellenistic letters (see Letters, Letter Forms). Both 1 and 2 Thessalonians are anomalous in that they have what can be described as two thanksgiving sections each (1 Thess 1:2-10; 2:13-16; 2 Thess 1:3-4; 2:13-14), and later in 1 Thessalonians we encounter another renewal of thanksgiving (1 Thess 3:9-10). The presence of two thanksgivings in 2 Thessalonians is taken as evidence that it is a non-Pauline imitation of 1 Thessalonians (see below on the question of its authorship).

In 1 Thessalonians, however, this anomaly has been dealt with by adjustments of the normal form-critical categories (e.g., by speaking of the interpenetration of letter body and thanksgiving), by identifying 1 Thessalonians as the result of conflation of two letters (Schmithals) or by identifying 1 Thessalonians 2:13-16 as a post-Pauline interpolation into Paul's letter (e.g., Pearson, Schmidt). The interpolation view has also focused on the contrast between what Paul says in 1 Thessalonians 2:14-16 about "the Jews" (see Israel) and the high regard he shows for non-Christian Jews in Romans 9—11, including his statement regarding their future salvation* (Rom 11:26). The interpolation view has also focused on other arguments based on the content and structure of the "second thanksgiving."

It is usually taken for granted that the strongly worded polemics we see in 1 Thessalonians 2:13-16 arose out of a highly combative situation, but this assumption is undermined by the evidence for the general use of strongly worded polemics in the ancient world, both within Judaism and the church (see Johnson). Furthermore, Romans 9—11 itself seems to build on a negative assessment of the present situation of non-Christian Jews (particularly Rom 11:7-10). And if form criticism takes its place as a descriptive, rather than defining, tool, then it becomes difficult to build on it any argument for interpolation (or for regarding 1 Thess as a product of conflation). The same can be said regarding arguments that other passages in the Thessalonian letters were interpolated (e.g., 1 Thess 5:1-11).

Form criticism allows us to isolate the uniqueness, and therefore the special concerns, of the first three chapters of 1 Thessalonians, which are, in the most general terms, Paul's desire to return to thanksgiving as he thinks about his initial work among the Thessalonians (see Simpson). The renewal of thanksgiving in 2 Thessalonians 2:13, however it may be described in form-critical terms, allows the writer to contrast "those affecting you" (2 Thess 1:6) and "those perishing" (2 Thess 2:10) with the addressees and to bracket words about the former with thanksgiving for the latter.

Generally, rhetorical criticism of the letters has consisted of identifying the ancient rhetorical components (e.g., exordium, partitio, narratio, etc.; see Rhetoric, Rhetorical Criticism) of the letters and viewing the purposes of the sections and of the letters as wholes as the generalized functions associated with the rhetorical terms. In this way the letters are thought of as oratory set within epistolary frameworks. The increasing attention to the rhetorical structure of the letters has not led to complete agreement (see Jewett, 63-87, 221, 225; Wanamaker, 48-52). But it has allowed for more flexible approaches and new ways of understanding the functions of and relationships among the different parts of the letters, including 1 Thessalonians 2:13-16, particularly in comparison with thematic and form-critical analyses. Rhetorical analysis has also raised anew the question of the genre and focus of each of Paul's letters. The disagreements described above with regard to the purpose of 1 Thessalonians 2:1-12, for instance, have come increasingly to be described in rhetorical terms.

5.2. The Authorship of 2 Thessalonians. Many scholars working with the Thessalonian letters have concluded that though Paul and his coworkers wrote 1 Thessalonians to the Thessalonian Christians, a post-Pauline Paulinist wrote 2 Thessalonians, using the genuine letter as a model. The arguments for this view have usually been centered around an understanding of 2 Thessalonians as a conscious correction of an overheated apocalypticism partly inspired by the genuine letter. 2 Thessalonians 2:2 and 3:17 are regarded as attempts to cover the tracks of the forgery and to denounce 1 Thessalonians, and the direct appeal to apostolic authority in 2 Thessalonians 2:15 is seen as a mark of a post-Pauline setting.

But the difference in eschatology between the two letters has been exaggerated. That the parousia would be unexpected (1 Thess 5) and that signs would precede it (2 Thess 2) were, in fact, beliefs held together in the earliest church (e.g., Mk 13). 2 Thessalonians 3:17 would be, as a false claim to authenticity, far from convincing, since no other Pauline letter has anything like it. The appeal to apostolic authority in 2 Thessalonians 2:15 is not stronger, just more explicit, than what we find in 1 Thessalonians.

Trilling's influential arguments against Pauline authorship of 2 Thessalonians (see Trilling 1972) have shifted attention away from eschatology and the references to a previous letter and focused on other issues: (1) a number of stylistic and theological differences between 2 Thessalonians and 1 Thessalonians together with the other unchallenged Pauline letters, (2) the difference in tone between the two letters and (3) the lack of personal references in 2 Thessalonians.

The claim of 2 Thessalonians to be written by Paul and his coworkers still does not face any argument that, taken by itself, comes close to making post-Pauline authorship a compelling conclusion. Trilling's separate arguments, particularly that from stylistic differences, have carried little weight with some scholars who have examined them in detail. The different tone of the letters, which must be related to the lack of personal references in 2 Thessalonians, might point, not to different addressees, but to differing amounts of information about the same situation—which, under the assumption that both are Pauline, brings up the question of their chronological order.

5.3. The Order of the Letters. The canonical order (see Canon) of 1 and 2 Thessalonians matches the most-favored view of their chronological order, but is itself of no importance as an argument for it, being based simply on the length of the letters. What does matter is, first, the differences in how the same concerns are addressed in the two letters and, second, whatever clues about movements of people and letters can be found in the two letters. Is it more likely that the manner in which the concerns with eschatology and vagrancy are addressed developed from 1 to 2 Thessalonians, or the reverse? What shall we make of the references to persecution as, it seems, an experience of the past in 1 Thessalonians (1 Thess 1:6; 2:14; 3:3) but presently occurring in 2 Thessalonians (2 Thess 1:4-7)? Timothy no doubt carried some written communication with him on the journey described in 1 Thessalonians 3:2-8; was it what we call 2 Thessalonians? Or is 1 Thessalonians the letter mentioned in 2 Thessalonians 2:2? Has a deteriorating situation led from the friendly and grateful-to-God tone of 1 Thessalonians to the more "official" tone of 2 Thessalonians, or did a better understanding of the situation (through Timothy's report; cf. 1 Thess 3:6) lead to that more thankful tone?

Strong arguments can be built for the priority of both 1 Thessalonians (Jewett, 24-30) and 2 Thessalonians (Wanamaker, 37-45). Which came first is a question for which we do not have a clear answer. Therefore, we have no sure basis on which to build a theory of the setting of the letters. As is so often the case, what is available to us is the content of the letters and not knowledge of their origin in the amount that we might desire.

6. Early Pauline Theology.

Much of the value of 1 and 2 Thessalonians as documents of Pauline theology is based on their apparent closeness to Pauline mission preaching. The two letters are addressed to a church that has been in existence just a short time. Much of both letters speaks of the work of proclamation to which the church owes its beginnings, and little of their content is prompted by special situational concerns, at least in comparison with other letters of Paul. To a large extent they seek merely to encourage the members of the new Christian community in their new standing. Even where they do respond directly to special situational concerns—in the eschatological sections and in the words about the obligation to work—they do so in language that was probably used in the primary gospel proclamation and which is certainly no more than an expansion of themes in that proclamation.

1 Thessalonians 1:9-10 in particular allows us to see something of the general pattern of Paul's early preaching to Gentile audiences. The focus of this preaching was on the one God* and Jesus, the coming one, the mediator to humankind of divine redemption (cf. Acts 17:23-31; 1 Cor 8:6). The one God was essential to any Judaism, and the message of the apocalyptic end of the age was at home in much of Judaism, though, of course, the place of Jesus (see Jesus and Paul) in Paul's preaching went beyond most Judaism.

1 Thessalonians 1:9 also shows that Paul's preaching of Jewish monotheism (see God) included the standard Jewish polemics against pagan idolatry* (cf., e.g., Jer 10:1-10; Wis 13—15). This one God Paul identified as the "father" of Jesus and of Christians (e.g., 1 Thess 1:2-3, 9-10). Paul the preacher also spoke of Jesus' death (1 Thess 1:6; 2:15; 5:10; see Cross, Theology of the), resurrection* (1 Thess 1:10; 4:14) and expected eschatological return (1 Thess 1:10; 2:19; 3:13; 5:23—these references apart from the specific eschatological sections of both letters; see Eschatology). The main motivation given for accepting Paul's message (for "receiving the word of God," 1 Thess 2:13) was that faith in Jesus, "our Deliverer from the wrath* to come," is the way of escape from coming divine judgment* (1 Thess 1:10; 5:9; 2 Thess 2:13).

Though the letters do not make explicit any developed christology,* Jesus, "the Lord," is placed alongside God the Father as the source of the Thessalonian church's existence (1 Thess 1:1; 2 Thess 1:1), as the guide of the apostolic mission (1 Thess 3:11) and as the giver of Christian comfort and hope* (2 Thess 2:16). He is also seen as a model member of the suffering people of God (see Imitation), along with the prophets, the apostles and the Thessalonian Christians (1 Thess 1:6; 2:15). But his suffering and death have a greater significance: it is that which brings about believers' eternal life* "together with him" (1 Thess 5:10, 17).

This prospect of life with Christ (2 Thess 2:1-2) sets apart Christians as people who have hope (1 Thess 4:13, 18). This life will begin with the divine initiative in Jesus' descent from heaven* and the archangel's call (1 Thess 4:16; cf. 1 Cor 15:52); believers who have died will be resurrected and those living will be lifted up into the clouds so that both may share life with him (1 Thess 4:14-17; 5:10). This, the coming of Jesus and "our assembling together with him" (2 Thess 2:1), will be preceded by a manifestation of evil so great that it will attempt to take the place of God himself as the one who is worshipped, backing its claims with miracles and so convincing nonbelievers (2 Thess 2:3, 9-10; see Man of Lawlessness and Restraining Power). Such evil is already at work, though its effectiveness is now limited (2 Thess 2:6-7). When it does come to its full manifestation, it will do so only as part of God's plan for judgment (2 Thess 2:11-12) and only to be destroyed by Christ in his coming for believers (2 Thess 2:8).

Christ's coming will be unexpected by unbelievers, and no timetable can be set for it (1 Thess 5:1-3). For believers it is not only the focus of hope but also the fundamental motivation for right living and the building up of the community (1 Thess 5:4-11). Nothing in the details of Paul's moral exhortations to the Thessalonians is distinctively Jewish or Christian; all of it could be found among Gentile preachers and moral philosophers of the time (see Malherbe 1987; see Ethics; Virtues and Vices). But for Paul the basis of ethical exhortation is different: It is God's call "into his own kingdom and glory*" (1 Thess 2:12; cf. 2 Thess 1:11), God's will (1 Thess 4:3), knowledge* of God through the Christian proclamation (1 Thess 4:5) and expectation of God's ("the Lord's": perhaps Jesus') judgment (1 Thess 4:6). The call was to holiness* (1 Thess 4:3-4, 7; cf. 5:23) and to a relationship with God enjoyed by those who partake of his Spirit* (1 Thess 4:8; 5:19; 2 Thess 2:13).

Faith in the gospel had brought about a community that was to be focused on mutual love (1 Thess 3:12; 4:9; 2 Thess 1:3) and admonition (1 Thess 5:11; 2 Thess 3:15). The spread of the gospel to new areas was a major concern of the church and, even more, of its missionaries (1 Thess 1:8-9; 2 Thess 3:1). The letters grant little insight into the church structures that had emerged by this early stage, but Paul makes clear that both the missionaries and the local leaders were regarded as having authority* in the lives of believers. A significant function of both local and apostolic leaders was providing ethical example and exhortation (1 Thess 2:11-12; 5:12-13; 2 Thess 3:4, 14-15), but this responsibility was borne also by the rank and file of church members (1 Thess 5:11).

The centrality in Paul's theology of the suffering* of the proclaimers of the gospel, particularly of Paul himself, apparently received much of its formation in connection with the church of Thessalonica (see especially 1 Thess 2 and cf. in particular 2 Cor 10—13; Phil 3; Gal 4:12-19; 5:11). Imitation is the link between those coming to faith and their suffering leaders and predecessors in the faith (1 Thess 1:7; 2:14; cf. 2 Thess 1:4), and suffering is the inevitable experience of both the preachers and the Christian community (1 Thess 3:3-4).

See also ESCHATOLOGY; MAN OF LAWLESSNESS AND RESTRAINING POWER.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. Commentaries: F. F. Bruce, 1 and 2 Thessalonians (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1982); I. H. Marshall, 1 and 2 Thessalonians (NCBC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983); L. Morris, The First and Second Epistles to the Thessalonians (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1959); B. Rigaux, Saint Paul: Les Epîtres aux Thessaloniciens (EB; Paris: Gabalda, 1956); W. Trilling, Der zweite Briefe an die Thessalonicher (EKK; Neukirchener-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 1980); C. A. Wanamaker, 1 and 2 Thessalonians (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990). Studies: J. M. Bassler, ed., Pauline Theology Vol. 1: Thessalonians, Philippians, Galatians, Philemon (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1991); R. F. Collins, Studies on the First Letter to the Thessalonians (BETL 66; Louvain: Peeters/Louvain University); K. P. Donfried, "The Cults of Thessalonica and the Thessalonian Correspondence," NTS 31 (1985) 336-56; J. G. Gager, "Some Notes on Paul's Conversion," NTS (1981) 697-704; R. F. Hock, The Social Context of Paul's Ministry: Tentmaking and Apostleship (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980); F. W. Hughes, Early Christian Rhetoric and 2 Thessalonians (JSNTSS 30; Sheffield: JSOT, 1989); R. Jewett, The Thessalonian Correspondence: Pauline Rhetoric and Millenarian Piety (FF; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); L. T. Johnson, "The New Testament's Anti-Jewish Slander and the Conventions of Ancient Polemic," JBL 108 (1989) 419-41; G. Lyons, Pauline Autobiography: Toward a New Understanding (SBLDS 73; Atlanta: Scholars) 177-221; A. J. Malherbe, "Exhortation in First Thessalonians," NovT 25 (1983) 238-56; idem, " 'Gentle as a Nurse': The Stoic Background to 1 Thess. II," NovT 12 (1970) 203-17; idem, Paul and the Thessalonians: The Philosophical Tradition of Pastoral Care (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1987); W. Meeks, The First Urban Christians: The Social World of the Apostle Paul (New Haven: Yale University, 1983; B. A. Pearson, "1 Thessalonians 2:13-16: A Deutero-Pauline Interpolation," HTR 64 (1971) 79-94; D. Schmidt, "1 Thess 2:13-16: Linguistic Evidence for an Interpolation," JBL 102 (1983) 269-79; W. Schmithals, Paul and the Gnostics (Nashville: Abingdon, 1972) 123-218; J. W. Simpson, "Problems Posed by 1 Thessalonians 2:15-16 and a Solution," HBT 12 (1990) 42-72; W. Trilling, Untersuchungen zum zweiten Thessalonicherbrief (Leipzig: St. Benno, 1972). J. W. Simpson Jr.

THESSALONICA See THESSALONIANS, LETTERS TO THE.

THIS AGE. See ESCHATOLOGY; WORLD, COSMOLOGY.

THORN IN THE FLESH. See HEALING, ILLNESS; SUFFERING; VISIONS, ECSTATIC EXPERIENCE.

TIMOTHY, 1 AND 2. See PASTORAL LETTERS.

TITUS. See PASTORAL LETTERS.

TONGUES

The phenomenon called "tongues" is mentioned by Paul only in the catalog of charisms (charismata, "gifts") found in 1 Corinthians 12:8-10 and in the ensuing discussion regarding its proper use in 1 Corinthians 12—14 (see Gifts of the Spirit).

1. Terminology
2. The Prevalence of Tongues in the Early Church
3. Tongues at Corinth

1. Terminology.

Generally, this "gift of the Holy Spirit*" is represented in the NT by the combination of the verb laleō, meaning "to speak," and the noun glōssa, especially in its instrumental case, meaning "in," or "with," "tongues" (cf. 1 Cor 12:30; 13:1; 14:5, 18, 23, etc.). Occasionally Paul also employs the participial forms ho lalōn glōssē or ho lalōn glōssais when referring to the person or "the one who speaks in a tongue or tongues" (cf. 1 Cor 14:2, 4, 5, 6, 13, etc.). The modern anglicized version of these terms has yielded the term glossolalia.

In 1 Corinthians 12:10 the phrase heterō genē glōssōn has been translated as "various kinds of tongues" (so the RSV and NRSV), "different kinds of tongues" (so the NIV, which also always supplies the alternate reading of "languages" for "tongues"), "divers kinds of tongues" (AV/KJV and ASV), and even "ecstatic utterance of different kinds" (NEB). The diversity in translations of the noun glōssa, from the generic "tongue" to the alternate reading "language," or the interpretation "ecstatic utterance," represents the diversity of presuppositions embraced by various translation committees. The reading "languages" suggests that the Pentecost event described in Acts 2:5-11, in which the crowd heard the 120 speaking in various human languages (xenolalia) other than their own, provides the background for this reading. On the other hand, the translation "ecstatic utterances" reflects the conclusions of modern social-scientific studies (e.g., Samarin, Kildahl; cf. Gundry).

Those within the classical Pentecostal movement, as well as the charismatic renewal, speak in tongues, but only very rarely has there been sufficient documentary evidence to substantiate xenolalic claims. Social-scientific study, while not necessarily denying the legitimacy or benefit of certain modern glossolalic claims, tends to view them in terms of psychological and/or sociological influences (e.g., Malony/Lovekin). Paul's mention of the "tongues of mortals and of angels*" in 1 Corinthians 13:1 (NRSV) makes possible this wide variety of interpretations for glōssais lalein. Cultural, historical and theological biases against present-day claims for xenolalia undoubtedly influence such diverse translations as well.

2. The Prevalence of Tongues in the Early Church.

That Paul does not mention speaking in tongues in any letter other than 1 Corinthians has given rise to two possible yet conflicting explanations. Either (1) this phenomenon was so widespread among NT churches that Paul saw no need to mention it except where it was being abused (at Corinth), or (2) Paul chose not to mention this "problematic" charism to the Romans (Rom 12:6-8) or the Ephesians (Eph 4:11) when he addressed other charismatic phenomena, because he did not want to encourage the use or spread of this gift. Those who argue for the widespread presence of this charism appeal not only to the presence of tongues in Corinth, but to such passages as Acts 2:1-4 (Jerusalem), Acts 10:44-48 (Caesarea) and Acts 19:1-6 (Ephesus). Paul's expression of thankfulness for his own experience of speaking in tongues (1 Cor 14:18; though some commentators see this as irony), as well as his desire that all would speak in tongues (1 Cor 14:5), are also used to develop this case.

Those who argue that Paul did not care to see this charism spread to other congregations cite Paul's preference for intelligible prophetic phenomena (1 Cor 14:1-5, 18-19) alongside his silence on the subject where it might otherwise have seemed to be appropriate (e.g., Rom 12; Eph 4). Evidence from the patristic period suggests that while speaking in tongues did occur in many places, the church, in keeping with Paul's greater concern for the edification of the Christian community, generally encouraged prophetic activity over speaking in tongues.

3. Tongues at Corinth.

3.1. The Corinthian Situation. The Corinthian context provides a unique opportunity for a case study of speaking in tongues in the early church. Several facts are clear from Paul's discussion of this charism. First, it is apparent that the Corinthians placed a high value on speaking in tongues. Paul's repeated attempts to provide a meaningful context for the appropriate manifestation of this gift point clearly in this direction. Beginning in 1 Corinthians 12:1 he appears to borrow the vocabulary of the Corinthians by turning their attention to matters concerning ta pneumatika, literally to "the spirituals" (i.e., "spiritual persons") or "spiritual things." But Paul quickly redirects the focus away from pneumatika toward the charismata. This shift takes the emphasis off the one who manifests such "spiritual things" (pneumatika), with its implication that the individual is "spiritual" simply because he or she manifested these phenomena. Instead, it sets the emphasis on the giver of these pneumatika since they are in fact charismata, "manifestations of *grace" (1 Cor 12:4).

Second, Paul repeatedly demands that any manifestation of speaking in tongues within the congregation must also receive an interpretation. He does this by mentioning "speaking in tongues" in tandem with its complementary gift hermēneia glōssōn, the "interpretation of tongues" (1 Cor 12:10), and by making explicit the importance of using both charisms together (1 Cor 14:5, 13, 27). Furthermore, the fact that he illustrates repeatedly the fruitless nature of an uninterpreted outburst of tongues in a public setting (1 Cor 14:2-4; 6-12; 13-19; 23-25) suggests that the presence of uninterpreted tongues in the Corinthian community was indeed the central concern of his address. A simple retreat into a glossolalic utterance was no clear demonstration of one's spirituality. On the contrary, within the community context it was a selfish act which denied others the ability to enter fully into that experience which, if interpreted, was intended to build up the entire community of believers.

Genuine spirituality* would be demonstrated in more subtle ways. Speaking in tongues, as Paul describes it, is a genuine manifestation of God's grace, which is sovereignly bestowed by the Holy Spirit (1 Cor 12:8-11). But speaking in tongues is only one among a number of such manifestations. For someone to insist upon the gift of tongues as if it were the only legitimate charism of the Spirit is for that person to deny the legitimacy of other Christians who manifest other equally legitimate charisms but do not speak in tongues. Paul's question "Do all speak in tongues?" (1 Cor 12:30) is more than simply rhetoric. It anticipates a decidedly negative response. Speaking in tongues is, indeed, a legitimate manifestation of the Spirit who gives it to various members of the body of Christ. Paul's use of this metaphor, the body of Christ (see Body of Christ), for the community of faith in 1 Corinthians 12:12-27, is significant because it suggests that any legitimate expression of the charism within that body should (1) point toward the giver rather than toward its recipient, since it is a manifestation of divine grace; (2) be exercised according to the law of love* (1 Cor 13:1—14:1); and (3) seek the greatest good by contributing to the edification of those in whose presence it is manifest (1 Cor 14:2-5; 12-19). Apart from love, the ability to speak in tongues is a decidedly unspiritual act (1 Cor 13:1).

*3.2. Paul's Instruction. In order to redirect the thinking of his Corinthian audience, which was clearly given over to divisive behavior of several types, Paul encouraged them to live up to their calling as saints (1 Cor 1:2) by uniting together with a singleness of mind and purpose (1 Cor 1:10). He reflected on the theological character of speaking in tongues, and he set forth some general guidelines for its most fruitful use, describing its use in the context of his important metaphor of the body of Christ.

3.2.1. The Value and Limitation of Tongues. Paul recognized from first-hand experience that the ability to speak in tongues was a good thing. He claimed to speak in tongues himself (1 Cor 14:18), and he coveted such an experience for all those to whom he addressed this letter (1 Cor 14:5). He understood that the very act of speaking in tongues edified the one who engaged in it (1 Cor 14:4). After all, they were addressing God (1 Cor 14:2) even though it be in mysteries.* This gift was a type of prayer,* prayed in a preconceptual or transrational mode (1 Cor 14:14; cf. Montague), which when properly interpreted could enable the community of faith to bless, thank or praise God in a truly Spirit-inspired way (1 Cor 14:15-17). The parallels between this passage and Romans 8:26-27 have led many to suggest that some speaking in tongues may also be intercessory in nature and that Paul had speaking in tongues in mind when he penned Romans 8:26-27 (cf. Käsemann).

In spite of its value, the gift of tongues had distinct limitations as well. In an ultimate sense, it had only a temporary value. Unlike love, the ability to speak in tongues will ultimately come to an end (1 Cor 13:8). Exercised apart from love it could become nerve shattering (as a gong or cymbal, 1 Cor 13:1), a boastful, arrogant, rude, selfish and irritating expression of insensitivity to the community (1 Cor 13:4-7). Exercised in community but without an appropriate interpretation, any manifestation of speaking in tongues, whether by an individual or in concert by the entire Christian community, would lead to confusion (1 Cor 14:17, 23). And God* is not a God of confusion but a God of peace* (1 Cor 14:22).

3.2.2. Guidelines for Exercising the Gift. For the gift of tongues to be exercised to its fullest intended potential, Paul maintains that certain basic guidelines should be considered. The manifestation of grace bestowed by the Holy Spirit should reflect the character of the giver. If God is a God of peace, then the use of this gift should reflect that quality. It should not contribute to division or confusion, or to insensitivity to the needs of others. Indeed, the exact opposite should be true. It should contribute to unity and understanding, and it should be exercised in ways that are sensitive to the needs of others. Exactly how did Paul envision this?

The fact that Paul chose the metaphor of the body of Christ to describe the Christian community worked in his favor. This metaphor was consistent with his recognition that believers are called to koinōnia, often translated as "participation in" or "in fellowship with," a concept central to what it means to live as disciples of Jesus Christ* (1 Cor 1:9). It was an idea to which Paul had appealed repeatedly in 1 Corinthians 10:14-22, and in light of which he had observed that while everything was lawful, it was not necessarily beneficial or edifying, and that those who were called into koinōnia should seek the advantage of "the other" (1 Cor 10:23-24). There should not be dissension within the body (1 Cor 12:25a), but rather edification (1 Cor 14:12), peace (1 Cor 14:33), decency and order (1 Cor 14:40). Paul did not favor abandoning the gift of speaking in tongues on any grounds (1 Cor 14:39). To do so would surely make him guilty of something he did not condone, namely, quenching the Spirit (1 Thess 5:19), who sovereignly chose to bestow this charism upon certain individuals within the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:11). But he did believe that there was a need to recognize that any manifestation of a charism in or through an individual involved a cooperative effort between the Holy Spirit and the recipient of the charism (see Worship). Pauline theology makes it clear that while the ability of an individual to speak in tongues may bring personal edification (1 Cor 14:4), that individual should participate with the Spirit for the greater good of the congregation by choosing to limit his or her own action in certain ways.

No legitimate claim could be made that the Holy Spirit had simply overpowered the one who spoke in tongues. This is clearly evident in several ways. There appears to be something akin to a "prophetic consciousness" in those who speak in tongues, a consciousness which permits them to start and stop at will. Paul's observation that the spirits of the prophets* are subject to the prophets (1 Cor 14:32) appears to apply equally well to those who speak in tongues. The fact that (1) limitations can be placed upon the number of people who should speak in tongues during any particular meeting of the Christian community (generally no more than two or three), that (2) they can each take their turn in an orderly fashion, and that (3) they can choose to be silent, speaking quietly to God (1 Cor 14:27-28), all seem to indicate that those who speak in tongues are in complete control of their faculties. They can make conscious decisions regarding their behavior, and they can act in ways that ultimately contribute to the overall good of the community.

Paul's guidelines, which he claims are nothing less than a "command of the Lord" (1 Cor 14:37), place primary responsibility for "speaking in tongues" squarely on the shoulders of the speaker. The person who has the ability to speak in tongues also possesses the power to bring about confusion or to build up anyone who is present when he or she exercises that charism. Paul's repeated exhortation to do that which builds up and to be ruled by love may be the key to the whole of 1 Corinthians (cf. 1 Cor 8:1). Just as the church is not to forbid speaking in tongues (1 Cor 14:40), so too the person who manifests this gift is to act only in a manner which benefits the whole church as well as the outsider who may be present (1 Cor 14:1, 5, 12, 26, 40).

If an interpreter is not present, but a person believes that he or she has been inspired to speak in a tongue, that individual has two legitimate alternatives which will benefit the church:

(1) The person can take responsibility to ask God for the ability to interpret (1 Cor 14:13). Requesting the charism which would render the utterance in tongues intelligible to the community does not necessarily mean that the gift will be given. The Spirit who distributes such charisms is, after all, sovereign over their bestowal (1 Cor 12:11). But if the need is genuine and the Spirit chooses to intervene, there is clearly no harm in asking. For one to do so is not to be guilty of presumption. The congregation might ultimately be edified (1 Cor 14:5).

(2) The speaker can silently pray to God (1 Cor 14:28) a prayer which brings edification to the speaker and addresses God, but does not contribute to disorder and confusion in the congregation. The fact that Paul mentions such an option has led some to regard speaking in tongues as having a legitimate role as a private "prayer language" (e.g., Hayford).

The latter use of this gift, expressed without the need for interpretation because it does not intrude into the life of the community in the same way as would a loud vocal expression, may well be Paul's intent. Paul's own speaking in tongues may in fact have been expressed most frequently in precisely this silent manner. He celebrated the fact that he spoke frequently in a tongue (1 Cor 14:18), but his personal preference was not to do so within the context of a community meeting (1 Cor 14:19). This clearly suggests that when Paul spoke in tongues it was in a nondisruptive manner when he was in a community setting or in private as part of his personal devotional life.

The one exercise of tongues that Paul clearly condems as illegitimate is the very thing the Corinthian Christians seem to have embraced—speaking in tongues for the sake of speaking in tongues, without interpretation and without regard for the life and participation of the community.

According to Paul, speaking in tongues also has value as a "sign." The Corinthians thought tongues played a positive role as a sign of spirituality. Paul, on the other hand, was much more concerned about the potentially negative role the otherwise good gift could play apart from its appropriate context and practice. In Israel's past "strange tongues" had served as a sign of God's judgment. Paul's citation of Isaiah 28:11-12 in 1 Corinthians 14:21 was intended to provide a specific example of this. When the Assyrians overwhelmed Judah, their foreign tongue in the presence of Judah could be viewed as nothing less than God's judgment on Judah's unfaithfulness. So too, for a stranger to enter a meeting in which the babbling of strange tongues was being manifest apart from any interpretation, the very act of speaking in tongues held the potential of confirming that unbeliever in a failure to discern any presence of God (1 Cor 14:23). The judgment by the stranger or outsider that these people were mad rather than that God was present could prevent the stranger from further contact with these people, and ultimately serve as a negative sign of judgment upon the stranger.

It is important to note that nowhere does Paul argue that speaking in tongues is anything other than a charism, a gift of the Holy Spirit; Paul does not talk, as do many modern-day Pentecostals, of speaking in tongues as a sign or evidence of baptism in the Spirit. Within the context of 1 Corinthians 12—14 Paul does note that "in one Spirit we were all baptized into one body . . . and we were made to drink of one Spirit" (1 Cor 12:13), a clear indication that he has in mind the concept of conversion-initiation (so Dunn). On the whole, Pentecostals typically interpret this as a reference to the Spirit's role of placing believers into the body of Christ rather than as an outpouring of the Spirit by Christ (Brumback). As a result, they too insist that when Paul asks the question "Do all speak in tongues?" (1 Cor 12:30), he legitimately anticipates a negative response. All parts of the body of Christ are not to be understood as manifesting the same charism (1 Cor 12:14-27).

The insistence by many Pentecostals that the ability to speak in a tongue acts as a sign or the evidence of baptism in the Spirit that is available to all Christians (so Brumback) is not based upon Paul; rather, it relies heavily upon the writings of Luke, most notably upon Acts 2:1-39 (cf. also Acts 10:44-48; 19:1-6; and possibly Acts 8:9-19). This disunction does not differentiate between two phenomenologies; rather, it appeals to a single phenomenology with multiple purposes. Peter is understood to view speaking in tongues as a sign or evidence of the immanence of God's Spirit which has just been poured out, as the answer to Joel's prophecy (Acts 2:16-21 = Joel 2:28-32). Paul understood the gift of tongues also to point to the presence of God in grace, enabling the speaker to pray in a Spirit-inspired manner. When it was misused in public, however, it could act in a way which was contrary to its divine intent. It could become a sign of judgment against the unbeliever who interpreted it solely as a manifestation of madness (1 Cor 14:23). Paul's concern was that this charism be used in a positive, edifying manner, and not as a negative sign. As a result, when considering the proper conduct of Christians gathered for public worship Paul commended intelligible speech which involved the mind (1 Cor 14:19), and especially the gift of prophecy (1 Cor 14:1, 3-5).

In the end, Paul's discussion of speaking in tongues is clarified when we understand his concern that whenever any charism is manifest within the Christian community it is intended to build up that community. Any undue emphasis upon individual experience, flights of ecstasy or manifestations which are unintelligible to the whole community are to be avoided as misappropriations of God's grace in the life of the Christian community and as inconsistent with the very character of God who sovereignly bestows them upon various members of the church.

See also GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT; HOLY SPIRIT; PROPHECY, PROPHESYING.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. Brumback, What Meaneth This? (Springfield, MO: Gospel Publishing House, 1947); D. A. Carson, Showing the Spirit (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1987); D. Christie-Murray, Voices from the Gods: Speaking with Tongues (New York: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1978); G. B. Cutten, Speaking with Tongues (New Haven: Yale University, 1927); J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1975); G. D. Fee, The First Epistle to the Corinthians (NICNT, Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987); R. G. Gromacki, The Modern Tongues Movement (Philadelphia: Presbyterian & Reformed, 1967); R. H. Gundry, "Ecstatic Utterance, NEB," JTS n.s. 17 (1966) 299-307; J. Hayford, The Beauty of Spiritual Language (Dallas: Word, 1992); E. Käsemann, Perspectives on Paul (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1971); M. T. Kelsey, Tongue Speaking (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1964); J. P. Kildahl, The Psychology of Speaking in Tongues (New York: Harper & Row, 1972); K. McDonnell and G. T. Montague, Christian Initiation and Baptism in the Holy Spirit (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1991); H. N. Maloney and A. A. Lovekin, Glossolalia: Behavioral Science Perspectives on Speaking in Tongues (Oxford: Oxford University, 1985); R. P. Martin, The Spirit and the Congregation (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1984); W. E. Mills, ed., Speaking in Tongues (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1980); idem, A Theological/Exegetical Approach to Glossolalia (Lanham, VA: University Press of America, 1986); G. T. Montague, The Holy Spirit: Growth of a Tradition (New York: Paulist, 1976); C. M. Robeck, Jr., "Tongues, Gift of," ISBE 4.871-74; W. J. Samarin, Tongues of Men and Angels (New York: Macmillan, 1972); R. P. Spittler, "Glossolalia," in Dictionary of Pentecostal and Charismatic Movements, ed. S. M. Burgess and G. B. McGee (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1988) 335-41; C. G. Williams, Tongues of the Spirit (Cardiff: University of Wales, 1981).

C. M. Robeck Jr.

TORAH. See JEW, PAUL THE; LAW; WORKS OF THE LAW.

TRADITION

Like Jesus, Paul contrasted human tradition (paradosis) with revelation from God* (Col 2:8; Gal 1:14; cf. Mk 7:8-9, 13). Still, Paul's letters show us that the apostle* valued and used traditions, including those he inherited from the OT,* from the sayings of Jesus,* and from the creeds,* hymns* and catechisms of early Christian communities. For Paul, the Spirit* did not supplant traditions, but supplemented their application, guided their production, and spoke through their use.

1. Tradition and Revelation
2. Use of Tradition

1. Tradition and Revelation.

Paul insisted that he received his gospel* and other revelations from God (Gal 1:11-12, 15-17; 2:2; 2 Cor 12:1-7), but the content of his faith did not differ essentially from the faith of those who were Christians before him. After his conversion* he preached the faith he once sought to destroy (Gal 1:23; cf. Gal 2:6-9; 1 Cor 15:11). His emphasis on divine revelation in Galatians* came in response to those who insisted on requiring Gentile* Christian converts to keep Jewish traditions (circumcision,* food* laws, etc.). Writing to those who esteemed revelations, Paul reminded the Corinthians* of the traditions he had passed on to them (1 Cor 11:23; 15:3-11). He believed that the Spirit of the risen Lord* spoke through Christian traditions, including his own teachings (Cullmann). Paul admonished his readers to hold fast the traditions they had received from him (2 Thess 2:15; 3:6) and he commended his readers for doing so (1 Cor 11:2; cf. 1 Thess 4:1; Col 2:6-7). Many scholars (e.g., Wegenast) conclude that the emphasis in the Pastoral* letters on teaching (didaskalia) and keeping/guarding traditions reflects a post-Pauline situation, although more recent research has increasingly shown the profound influence and importance of tradition for Paul (Ellis; see Pastoral Letters).

2. Use of Tradition.

Although Paul used semi-technical Jewish terminology for receiving (paralambanō = qbl) and delivering (paradidōmi = msr) traditional material, he did not simply transfer his former rabbinic approach to the Christian message. Convinced of the Spirit's guidance, Paul rarely felt the need to quote his predecessors. Confidence and freedom in the Spirit (e.g., 2 Cor 3:17) led him to adapt earlier traditions in order to speak more directly to his congregations. This makes it difficult for us to identify precisely where he used traditions (apart from recognizable quotations), but subtle clues such as unusual vocabulary and theological emphases, changes in style, introductory formulae such as "Do you not know?" and tradition words such as "confess" or "testimony" can help us to isolate probable instances.

2.1. OT Traditions. Paul's letters indicate that he tended to cite the OT more frequently when writing to Jewish Christian congregations. He quoted it when establishing his gospel of grace* (over against others' insistence on the keeping of Jewish particulars) and when providing examples or summaries of moral teachings (Gal 5:14; Rom 13:9; 15:4; 1 Cor 10:11). For Paul, the OT was not so much the interpreter of Christ, but rather Christ became the hermeneutical key for his use of the OT (e.g., Gen 15:6 in Gal 3 and Rom 4; cf. 2 Cor 3:14-17). Paul fully accepted the authority of the OT; where he appears critical of the Law,* like Jesus he is responding to others' misuse of it. Whether he had a "testimony book" of messianic proof texts or simply shared in early Christian oral traditions of OT interpretation remains an open question (see Old Testament in Paul).

2.2. Jesus Traditions. Although like all other early Christian writers (apart from the Evangelists) Paul rarely alludes to Jesus' teachings (1 Cor 7:10; 9:14; 11:23-24; 1 Thess 4:15-17) and example (Rom 15:3; Phil 2:5-8), his letters echo a number of dominical sayings (e.g., 1 Thess 5:2-3; 1 Cor 13:2; Rom 12:14; 13:8-10; 14:14). The silence is not due to ignorance or a lack of interest (Thompson). Paul knew Jesus' teachings as such and distinguished between them and the inner promptings of the Spirit (1 Cor 7:12, 25), but he did not use the traditions as a new law (see Jesus, Sayings of).

2.3. Christian Traditions. Paul inherited a number of specifically Christian traditions, such as liturgical* (?) acclamations and confessions (1 Cor 12:3; Phil 2:11; Rom 10:8-9), creedal* formulations (1 Cor 15:3-5; Rom 1:3-4; 3:24-26; 4:24-25?; 1 Thess 1:9-10?; 2 Tim 2:8; cf. Rom 6:17) and hymns* (Phil 2:6-11; Eph 5:14; Col 1:15-20?). Paul's moral teaching or paraenesis (as found in, e.g., Rom 12:1—15:13; Gal 5:1—6:10; 1 Thess 4:1—5:22; Col 3:1—4:6) contains traditions from several sources, including Cynic and Stoic moralists, Jewish halakah, and dominical teachings, but most likely also reflects early Christian catechetical material (Selwyn). The authority of the Spirit within himself and other Christians (1 Cor 2:12-13; 14:31, 37) offered yet another source of traditions. Prophecies were tested, apparently by their coherence with fundamental traditions received from Jesus, the OT and the prior witness of the Spirit in the Christian community (1 Thess 5:20-21; 1 Cor 14:29).

See also CREEDS; HYMNS, HYMN FRAGMENTS, SONGS, SPIRITUAL SONGS; HOUSEHOLDS AND HOUSEHOLD CODES; JESUS, SAYINGS OF; LITURGICAL ELEMENTS; LORD'S SUPPER; OLD TESTAMENT IN PAUL; TEACHING/PARAENESIS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. F. F. Bruce, Tradition: Old and New (Exeter: Paternoster, 1970); K. Chamblin, "Revelation and Tradition in the Pauline Euangelion," WTJ 48 (1986) 1-16; O. Cullmann, "The Tradition," in The Early Church, ed. A. J. B. Higgins (London: SCM, 1956) 59-99; E. E. Ellis, "Traditions in I Corinthians," NTS 32 (1986) 481-502; R. P. C. Hanson, Tradition in the Early Church (London: SCM, 1960); A. M. Hunter, Paul and His Predecessors (rev. ed.; London: SCM, 1961); G. E. Ladd, "Revelation and Tradition in Paul," in Apostolic History and the Gospel, ed. W. W. Gasque and R. P. Martin (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1970) chap 14; J. I. H. McDonald, Kerygma and Didache: The Articulation and Structure of the Earliest Christian Message (SNTSMS 37; Cambridge: University Press, 1980) 101-25; E. G. Selwyn, "On the Inter-Relation of I Peter and Other N.T. Epistles," in The First Epistle of St Peter (London: Macmillan, 1946) 365-466; M. B. Thompson, Clothed with Christ: The Example and Teaching of Jesus in Romans 12.1—15.13 (JSNTSS 59; Sheffield: JSOT, 1991); K. Wegenast, Das Verständnis der Tradition bei Paulus und in den Deuteropaulinen (WMANT 8; Neukirchen, 1962); idem, "Teach," NIDNTT 3.759-75.

M. B. Thompson

TRANSFORMATION.

See CREATION AND NEW CREATION; PSYCHOLOGY.

TRAVEL IN THE ROMAN WORLD

One of the most important contributions to civilization made by the Roman Empire was the establishment of an elaborate and comprehensive network of travel and communications. Recent developments in archeological techniques have meant that our knowledge of the construction of roads and ports in the Roman world is greatly enhanced. The construction of roads connecting the far reaches of the Empire and the regularization of sea lanes undoubtedly helped facilitate the spread of the gospel by the followers of Jesus Christ. In a very real sense the Pax Romana could be seen as a divine preparation for the evangelistic activity of the church (see Mission).

Paul, as the "apostle to the Gentiles," was perhaps the most traveled person within the NT world and benefitted enormously by the ease of travel in the Roman Empire (see Paul in Acts and Letters). Assuming for the moment that he made the three missionary journeys from Antioch (Acts 13:1—21:17), the trip to Rome (Acts 27:1—28:16) and several other minor excursions, we arrive at a total distance covered of approximately 6,200 miles. The apostolic ministry of Paul was aided by the travel and communication links in the Roman world on three distinct fronts.

1. Overland Roads and Highways
2. Sea Routes
3. Postal Services

1. Overland Roads and Highways.

There is certainly a truth in the words of the adage "All roads lead to Rome." To highlight this point, it is worth noting that Dio Cassius (Hist. 54.8.4) tells us that in 20 B.C. the emperor Augustus constructed a "Golden Milestone" (miliarium aureum) in the Forum in Rome and that official distances were calculated from it. The Roman world was crisscrossed by a network of some 50,000 miles of main military highways and approximately 200,000 miles of secondary roads (over 4,000 milestones along the principal roads of the Empire have been recorded). Many of the most famous of these roads have their origins in public building projects and bear the name of their benefactor. One of the first was the Via Appia running south from Rome to Capua, begun by Appius Claudius in 312 B.C. These roads became the main thoroughfares for movements of Roman legionaries and later served as important trade routes for goods throughout the Empire. Their construction was of such high standards that many of them still survive today and form the basis of many modern transport systems.

The most common means of travel on the network of overland roads would have been by foot, making a good day's journey about twenty miles. Travel by animals, either by riding them or in a drawn carriage, would have yielded a rate of about five to six miles per hour.

Many of the main trade highways were used by Paul in his travels, such as the Egnatian Way which connected the Adriatic Sea with the East. Paul followed a portion of this highway in his second and third missionary journeys as he traveled from Neapolis to Philippi* and Thessalonica.* In Acts 28:14-16 we are told that Paul followed the Via Appia into Rome following his landing at Puteoli.

Paul occasionally uses travel imagery in describing the Christian journey of faith* (as in 1 Cor 12:31 and 1 Thess 3:11). In 2 Corinthians 8:19 he applies the designation "traveling companion" (synekdēmos) to an unnamed colleague (the same term is used in Acts 19:29 of Gaius and Aristarchus, the Macedonian companions of Paul).

2. Sea Routes.

The emperor Augustus (27 B.C.-A.D. 14) declares in Res Gestae 25, "I made the sea peaceful and freed it of pirates." The problem of piracy in the Mediterranean was a long-standing one which perplexed both imperial interests and those of local areas alike. Nevertheless, by the NT period, with the establishment of permanent Roman fleets at Misenum, Ravenna and elsewhere, a sense of stability in the matter had been won, and the sea lanes were open for both travel and commercial traffic (Starr gives details of this). The use of sea routes was especially important for the transport of food, such as corn from Egypt, to the major centers of population like Rome* and Antioch. The sea lanes were the commercial arteries of the Roman Empire and many coastal cities, like Tyre, Caesarea and Ostia (serving the city of Rome), were dependent upon the sea traffic.

Several kinds of ships were used for travel in the NT period. Warships, including biremes and triremes, were fitted with banks of oars and manned by rowers as an important means of locomotion. Most commercial ships were sailing vessels and were dependent on the winds and weather in their journeys, with winter travel being particularly hazardous. For reason of safety most sea voyages were undertaken during the day, with regular stops at night; this meant that established sea routes tended to follow coastlines. The main trans-Mediterranean route was the grain run from Rome to Alexandria, a journey of about 1,000 nautical miles which could be negotiated in approximately ten or twelve days. The return route for these ships, because of the prevailing winds of the Mediterranean, tended to follow the coast of Phoenicia, Asia Minor and Greece and could take up to two or three months (Casson 1971, provides table charts of distance, times and speeds based on Pliny's Nat. Hist. 19.3-4).

Paul made use of travel by sea in all four of his major journeys. His longest journey by sea was that from Caesarea to Rome. According to Acts 27:1—28:16 Paul traveled on a series of merchant sailing ships in this journey, which took him around Cyprus, Rhodes, Crete, Malta (where he was shipwrecked) and Sicily before landing in Italy. We gain some index to the hazards presented by sea travel from hints contained in 2 Corinthians 11:23-27. Coins of the ancient world remain one of the most interesting primary sources of information about the ships and harbors of the time, including places with which Paul almost certainly would have been familiar (Kreitzer).

Philo's Embassy to Gaius offers an interesting parallel to Paul's journey to Rome. It gives details of a journey made by a Jewish leader so as to appear before Caligula in A.D. 39 and present the case of the persecuted Jewish population in Alexandria to the emperor.*

3. Postal Services.

The organization of regular and reliable routes of travel also aided the establishment of a regular postal system in the Roman world (Casson 1974, discusses this at some length). The apostle Paul, along with others, was able to use this to great effect in maintaining contact with his friends and delivery of his letters to the recipient churches (see Letters). Timothy, Tychichus and Epaphroditus are all described as couriers of Paul in this regard (1 Thess 3:2; Col 4:7; Phil 2:25).

See also ITINERARIES, JOURNEYS, APOSTOLIC PAROUSIA.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. L. Casson, Ships and Seamanship in the Ancient World (Princeton: University Press, 1971); idem, Travel in the Ancient World (London: George Allen & Unwin, 1974); T. Cornell and J. Matthews, Atlas of the Roman World (Oxford: Phaidon, 1982); D. French, "The Roman Road System of Asia Minor," ANRW II.7.2.698-729; L. J. Kreitzer, "Nero's Rome: Images of the City on Imperial Coinage," EvQ 61 (1989) 301-10; S. V. McCasland, "Travel and Communication in the NT," IDB 4.690-93; A. McWhirr, "Transport by Land and Water," in The Roman World, ed. J. Wacher (2 vols.; London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1987) 2.658-70; W. M. Ramsey, St. Paul the Traveller and the Roman City (14th ed.; London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1920); G. Rickman, The Corn Supply of Ancient Rome (Oxford: Clarendon, 1980); C. G. Starr, The Roman Imperial Navy (31 B.C.-A.D. 324) (Cambridge: W. Heffer, 1960).

L. J. Kreitzer

TRAVEL PLANS. See ITINERARIES, TRAVEL PLANS, JOURNEYS, APOSTOLIC PAROUSIA.

TRIALS. See AFFLICTIONS, TRIALS, HARDSHIPS.

TRIUMPH

The theme of triumph in Paul may well be rooted in the OT theme of God as a divine warrior. In the OT this theme encompasses the broader aspect of cosmic conflict, but more frequently it occurs in the context of God's covenant* relationship with Israel* and so-called holy warfare. It is a theme that demanded resolution in Paul's understanding of the climax of God's dealings with Israel, the nations and the cosmos. It is part of the subtext, or implied story, that lies beneath the situational discourses of Paul's letters and occasionally it appears in a variety of contexts and metaphorical extensions.

1. The Triumph of the Divine Warrior in the OT
2. The Triumph of the Divine Warrior in Judaism and in Paul
3. Triumph over Principalities and Powers
4. Triumph over Sin, Flesh, Law and Death
5. Triumph at the End of the Age
6. Prisoners and Soldiers of Christ

1. The Triumph of the Divine Warrior in the OT.

The main features of the theme of Yahweh as a divine warrior may be summarized under three headings.

1.1. The Divine Warrior's Triumphs on Behalf of Faithful Israel. The archetype of Yahweh's warfare against Israel's enemies was the deliverance of Israel from bondage in Egypt, in which Yahweh overcame the imperial forces of Egypt and, by implication, Egypt's gods. The Exodus was celebrated in the "Song of Moses," where the hymnic celebration of Yahweh's victory over Pharaoh's army includes the acclamation "Yahweh is a warrior!" (Ex 15:3). Yahweh's covenant with Israel at Sinai was the covenant of a heavenly suzerain with his people, sealed by the promise of blessing and victory for Israel's faithfulness, and of curse and defeat for Israel's unfaithfulness. Within Israel's traditions a vocabulary of imagery and symbolism was employed to speak of the divine warrior and his work. For example, Yahweh is depicted as riding his cloud chariot (e.g., Ps 68:4; 104:3-4; Is 19:1; cf. Dan 7:13), a feature found also in the Canaanite Baal texts (cf. ANET, 134). In the Book of Numbers a prevailing image of the people of God is Israel as the army of God on the march to take the land of promise. The ark of the covenant, possibly representing Yahweh's footstool or portable throne, symbolized the presence of Israel's heavenly warrior-king as he encamped in Israel's midst and led the people through conquest to the land of their inheritance and his sacred mountain sanctuary, Zion (cf., e.g., Ex 15:17; Num 10:35-36). The wars of faithful Israel were occasions in which Israel (e.g., Deut 20), the heavenly army (e.g., 2 Kings 6:17) and creation (e.g., Josh 10:1-15; Judg 5:19-21) took part, but such warfare was clearly the divine prerogative, and it was Yahweh who led Israel into battle and brought the victory (e.g., Gen 14:19-20; 15:1; Josh 10:40; Judg 5:4-5; cf. 1QM 11:4-5).

1.2. Yahweh Fights Against Unfaithful Israel. The divine warrior's judgment against unfaithful Israel (Lam 2:5; Amos 2:6-16) was the reflex of the covenant blessing of victory in the shape of a covenant curse in which Yahweh deployed Israel's enemies to defeat his people (cf. Deut. 28:15 and 28:7; Is 10:5-19). In the wars of conquest it was illustrated by Israel's defeat by Ai (Josh 7). But its most poignant expression was the reversal of the Exodus, Judah's defeat and exile at the hands of the Babylonians. This was Yahweh's "strange deed" (Is 28:21), when the Lord rose up and turned his warrior's strength against his own people, who had continued in their unfaithfulness.

1.3. The Coming Day of Triumph. A final stage of the divine warrior's activity is the Day of the Lord. This is the sovereign warrior's day of conquest, in which Yahweh will defeat Israel's enemies, even those who formerly acted as the rod of his wrath (e.g., Assyria, Is 10:5-19). On this day he will restore Israel and inaugurate new dimensions of the covenantal blessings of land, community and divine presence. It is a conflict and triumph that will transcend the limits of Yahweh's former battles. The outcome, memorably portrayed later by Isaiah as a new Exodus (e.g., Is 40:1-5), would encompass the future of the nations and the emergence of a new creation. Israel, a disciplined and restored new Adam, will enter a blissful life of shalom in a new paradise, with the nations subdued (Is 60—66). Yahweh's universal and glorious sovereignty will be manifested visibly (Is 60:1-3; 62:1-2), and all evil will be subjected to the ḥērem, or "ban," of Yahweh's war (Is 63:1-6; 66:15-16, 24).

2. The Triumph of the Divine Warrior in Judaism and in Paul.

The Judaism in which Paul was raised knew this story well and, at least by some contemporary accounts, there were those who placed Israel in the paradoxical situation of being resident in the land of promise and yet still in exile, under Gentile dominion (see Restoration of Israel). For Jews who held this perspective the restoration of Israel had not yet occurred, the curse had not yet been exhausted, and Israel awaited the definitive triumph of God in which he would defeat the nation's enemies, resurrect his "dead" nation and usher in the age to come. The several Judaisms of Paul's day were not of one mind regarding how the Day of the Lord might be enacted, whether as the exclusive act of the divine warrior or by the agency of his Messiah, or a principal angel such as Michael or Melchizedek (11QMelch), or by some combination thereof (e.g., the Qumran War Scroll). But the hope of a future day of divine conquest and vindication of Israel was widely and popularly held.

Paul's understanding of Messiah Jesus was that God* in Christ* was reconciling (see Peace, Reconciliation) the world to himself and effecting a new creation* (2 Cor 5:17-19). The gospel was the revelation of the eschatological righteousness* of God, God's covenant faithfulness, by which he was powerfully setting the world right (Rom 1:17) and revealing his wrath* (Rom 1:18). Both aspects of God's work were presently operative and revealed to the eyes of faith; both aspects would be manifested clearly at the end of the age.

Paul's story of the triumph of God in Christ is portrayed in two episodes: the past event of his death/resurrection and the future hope of the Day of the Lord (see Eschatology). Christ in his death and resurrection engaged the enemy,* was victorious in an epochal battle (Col 2:15; cf. Col 1:12-14), and was exalted to God's right hand, where he reigns as cosmic Lord* (1 Cor 15:24-26; Phil 2:9-11; Col 3:1; Eph 1:20-22;

1 Tim 3:16). Like the divine warrior in the OT (and the pattern of divine conflict and triumph in ancient Near Eastern mythology), Christ's conquest is followed by building his new temple* (1 Cor 3:16-17; 2 Cor 6:16; Eph 2:19-22) and receiving universal praise and obeisance (Phil 2:10-11; see Worship). He will come again at the end of the age and seal his triumph over his enemies, who will have waged a final revolt (2 Thess 2:8). In the end death, the final enemy, will be defeated along with every other hostile power, and Christ will hand over his kingdom* to God (1 Cor 15:24-28). But in the meantime the people of the Messiah live between these two episodes and are engaged in eschatological warfare, enjoying the benefits and advantage of Christ's defeat of the enemy at the cross (Rom 8:37) and yet beset by a hostile foe (Eph 6:10-17) as they await their Lord to descend from heaven* on the final day (1 Thess 4:16-17).

This story of conflict and triumph presumes the existence and power of enemies, and Paul selected and fashioned a rich vocabulary to describe them in their various aspects. These enemies consisted not of Romans or Greeks, but of sin,* flesh,* death (see Life and Death), Law,* principalities* and powers, and a Satanically inspired enemy called the "man of lawlessness."*

3. Triumph over Principalities and Powers.
In Paul's story of salvation* the principalities and powers are equivalent to the enemy "nations" of Israel's story, seen from the perspective of cosmic warfare (see Principalities and Powers). The spiritual powers, or "demons,"* that Israel had understood as standing behind the nations and their gods (Deut 32:8-9, 17; Dan 7; cf. Sir. 17:17; Jub. 15:31-32) were now conceived as the opponents of Christ and his people.

3.1. Enemies Under His Feet. In speaking of Christ's triumph over the powers Paul adopts the image of the triumphant Davidic king seated at the Lord's right hand with Israel's flesh-and-blood enemies depicted as a footstool for his feet (Ps 110:1). Moreover, Paul builds on a Jewish self-understanding of Israel as God's new Adam* (e.g., 1QS 4:23; CD 3:20; 1QH 17:15; see Wright, 23-25) in the divine plan to redeem the cosmos, and he understands Christ as representing this new Adam/Israel.* Because the Davidic king represents Israel, when Paul speaks of the exalted Christ he freely combines the imagery of the triumphant Davidic Messiah (Ps 110:1) with that of the reigning "Adam" under whose feet God has placed "all things" (Ps 8:6). In Jewish apocalyptic interpretation of history the nations, as the enemies of God and Israel, could be depicted as "beasts," eventually to be brought into subjection to Israel's vice-regency over God's new creation (cf. Dan 7, where monstrous beasts represent Gentile empires and the Adamic "son of man" represents Israel). Thus in 1 Corinthians 15:22-28 Paul can compare Christ with Adam and then speak of Christ's triumph over the powers, in one breath alluding to the subjection of the "enemies" of Psalm 110:1 and "everything under his feet" from Psalm 8:6 (cf. Eph 1:19-22 and Col 3:1-11; in the latter an allusion to Ps 110:1 leads into the theme of the new humanity/Adam in Christ; cf. Heb 1:3, 13; 2:8; 1 Pet 3:22). All of this is set within the context of the eschatological work of God in which the effects of Adam's "death" are reversed by "resurrection,"* and a new cosmic order emerges. The divine purpose of creation is vindicated in the eschatological triumph. Thus the Pauline theme of the exaltation* and enthronement of Christ symbolizes the triumph of God in Christ.

3.2. Triumph at the Cross. Colossians 2:15 is the text where Paul most clearly alludes to the event of Christ's triumph over the powers. Here we find one of the two occasions (cf. 2 Cor 2:14) in which Paul uses the verb thriambeuō. This verb is correctly translated "lead in triumphal procession," for it is the Greek term for leading a Roman triumphal march (Latin triumpho) in which a victorious general or ruler in ceremonial dress would drive his captives—usually those who formerly had authority and power—and the spoils of war before him into Rome (see Hafemann, Versnel, Williamson; cf. Egan). Having arrived at the god's temple, the prisoners, or representatives of their number, would be executed. In this processional the glory and power of the Roman imperium was celebrated, with the triumphant general made up as Jupiter, the god who had blessed the warrior with victory in battle (cf. Josephus J.W. 7.5.6 153-55). But although the foreground imagery of Colossians 2:15 is Greco-Roman, its substructure seems to be the Jewish archetype of the divine warrior vanquishing his foes.

In 1 Corinthians 2:6-8 Paul alludes to the story behind the scene of the victory at the cross: the "rulers of this age" did not comprehend the mystery of the divine wisdom of the cross, "for if they had, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." Archontes, "rulers," a term commonly used of human rulers (so Rom 13:3), here refers to spiritual, cosmic powers (cf. LXX Dan 10; see Principalities and Powers). These hostile spiritual powers were oblivious to the wisdom of God's plan for the ages (cf. Eph 3:10) and so they crucified the Lord of glory. This was their monumental folly, and Colossians 2:15 alludes to the circumstances of their defeat.

Colossians 2:14-15 speaks of what happened at the cross. The subject of these two verses, we would argue, is Christ (see Yates). A crucial issue in understanding Colossians 2:15 is the meaning of the verb apekdysamenos (the aorist participle of apekdyomai, "to strip"). This verb should be understood as a true middle in voice (intransitive, with the subject acting upon itself), meaning Christ stripped himself of something (not an active, transitive verb, as some commentators maintain). The verb occurs twice in Colossians, here in Colossians 2:15 and in 3:9, and its related noun, apekdysis, occurs once (Col 2:11); these words occur nowhere else in the NT. In Colossians 2:11 the noun apekdysis speaks of the believer's circumcision* in the "stripping off [apekdysis] of the body of flesh," a metaphorical removal of flesh in some manner, called the "circumcision of Christ." This circumcision (with Christou as an objective genitive) most likely refers to Christ's death* on the cross, in which believers participate by baptism (Col 2:12). In Colossians 3:9 Paul uses apekdysamenoi, indisputably as a true middle participle, to refer to something that takes place in the experience of believers: those who are in Christ are to undergo an ethical renewal (Col 3:8), logically implied in their having "taken off" their old humanity (ton palaion anthrōpon, Col 3:9) and having "put on" (endysamenoi) their new humanity in Christ (Col 3:10; cf. ekdyō in 2 Cor 5:4 [5:3 in some MSS] used of taking off "this tent" [= body] at death). It seems unlikely that Paul would use apekdysamenos in Colossians 2:15 in the active sense (Christ stripping the powers of weaponry, power etc.), for Christ's action on the cross would seem to form the basis for Paul's appeal in Colossians 3:8-9. In their participation with Christ believers too have "stripped off" their old humanity. But many commentators do not understand Colossians 2:15 in this way and read apekdysamenos in the active, transitive, sense, suggesting that Christ divested the powers of their authority or weapons.

How could Christ have stripped himself of the powers—as if they were a garment? An unstated premise seems to stand behind this text. It was Christ's body* that was nailed (prosēloō, Col 2:14) to the cross (metaphorically portrayed as a "hand written document" cheirographon), and his body was the very point at which his divine nature met in solidarity with Adam (see Lightfoot, 190; Robinson, 34-48). Indeed, twice previously in Colossians Paul has spoken of Christ as the one in whom "all the fullness [of God] was pleased to dwell" (Col 1:19; 2:9, with minor variations). This is a christological application of language alluding to Yahweh's taking up residence in Israel, on Mount Zion (cf. Deut 12:5; LXX Ps 67[68]:16, where it is the divine warrior who chooses for his residence Mount Zion]; Sir 24:3-12; see Fullness).

In terms of the story of Israel, recapitulated and brought to a climax in Christ, we may conceive Paul's thinking as follows: The powers unleashed their assault on Christ's body, in a climactic expression of the nations attacking Zion, and on the cross they destroyed his "body of flesh" (Col 2:11; cf. Scott, 34-35). But this was a pyrrhic victory. Christ absorbed and exhausted their fury in his death (with his vindication in the resurrection implied) and so he triumphed over the powers (Col 2:15). In his death as obedient second Adam, Christ represented Israel under the curse, and thereby he stood in for humankind. The powers unwittingly played their part in executing the divine plan; their attack on the faithful and guiltless representative of Israel was their defeat, and Christ marched them in his own triumphal procession on the cross, publicly displaying (edeigmatisen en parrēsia, Col 2:15) their defeat and exposing them to shame. All of this may suggest Paul's familiarity with the early Christian tradition that Jesus spoke of the destruction of "this temple," "his body" (Jn 2:18-22), a saying perhaps garbled in the charge brought against Jesus at his trial and in the mocking at the cross (cf. Mk 14:57-58; 15:29-30; Mt 26:61; 27:40). In shifting from the imagery of Christ as "temple" to that of "body," Paul exchanged the metaphor of destruction for that of circumcision—a cutting off of flesh (cf. "not made by hands," acheiropoiētos, Mk 14:58; Col 2:11; 2 Cor 5:1, speaking of the heavenly "house" ["temple"?]). The imagery, on this reading, is not gnostic* (though it was later adopted by gnostic interpreters, see Gospel of Truth 20.20-30), but a thematic transposition of Jesus' reference to himself as temple and his death as its destruction.

The metaphor of victory is, at its heart, not simply the victory of a superior power, but the triumph of holy, righteous and creative love* over the destructive forces of evil and the reclaiming of a creation gone astray. It is an eschatological victory to be sure, in which is demonstrated the apocalyptic* judgment of the cross on all human sinfulness and the pretense of spiritual powers, and in it redemptive history is brought to a climax. But Paul elsewhere makes plain that the cross was not the last chapter in the warfare against the powers of this age. The enemy is still hostile and active, posing a threat to the church (Eph 6:10-18). On the final day this battle will reach its resolution when "every dominion, and every authority and power will be destroyed," along with the final enemy, death (1 Cor 15:24, 26; cf. 2 Tim 1:10). Such is the story of triumph as Paul saw it spelled out in Christ's salvific act. But in Paul's Hellenistic mission he was able to apply it to situations where the practice of magic, or the worship of angels,* or the grip of local or astral deities held people in fear and bondage (e.g., Eph, Col; see Arnold 1989). It is notable that many of the passages in Paul that speak of Christ's conquest or triumphant enthronement have been identified (with varying degrees of plausibility) as preformed hymnic* praises of Christ (Eph 1:20-22; 2:14-16; Phil 2:6-11; Col 2:14-15; 1 Tim 3:16). This suggests that, like Israel, early Christians associated with the Pauline mission celebrated the triumph of Christ in their worship,* and hailed a (future) eschatological event as present reality.

4. Triumph over Sin, Flesh, Law and Death.

Four powers—sin, flesh, Law and death—constitute the Pauline perspective on the human plight viewed from within the history of Israel as the story of the world. Sin entered the world through the first Adam, and death through sin. Israel, the new Adam, had been given the Law at Sinai. But no sooner had the Law been given, than sin was operative in Israel, and death struck down thousands in the wilderness. In the end sin, working through the Torah, brought death to Israel. In the course of Israel's history this death was spelled out, as with Adam and Eve, in forced exile from the divine presence and the Edenic land. The paradox of Israel's existence is this: though Israel was to be the agent of salvation for the world, it too became trammeled in sin and death by the very gift of divine Law (Wright, 193-216). This story lies behind Paul's narrative of sin, flesh, death and Law in Romans 5—7, in which they seem to function as personified forces opposed to divine redemption. The reign of sin and of death are intertwined, with sin reigning in death (Rom 5:21) and sin the "master" over humankind, the "slave" (Rom 5:6, 14). Moreover, sin finds its foothold in the flesh (Rom 6:12; cf. 8:7), and its soldiers wield "weapons" (hopla) of wickedness rather than weapons of righteousness (Rom 6:13; 2 Cor 6:7). Sin preys on people, awaiting the opportunity to make the Law a "bridgehead" (aphormē in Rom 7:8 can carry this military sense) into humans and so "wages war" (antistrateuomai, Rom 7:23) and "takes prisoners" (aichmalōtizō, Rom 7:23). Those caught in the bondage of these powers cry out, like Israel in lament, for a deliverer; thankfully, deliverance comes through "Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom 7:24-25; cf. 1 Cor 15:57). In Christ believers "are more than conquerors through him [Christ] who loved us," a love that no earthly or cosmic power can sever (Rom 8:37-38).

God initiated the deliverance by sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh (sarx, Rom 8:3; cf. Col 2:11), and in so doing the Son entered sin's sphere of dominion. But when sin pressed its claim upon Christ, he, being guiltless, condemned sin in the flesh. So Christ, coming as the Last Adam, conquered sin on its own ground and reversed the condemnation sin had brought upon Adam (Rom 5:18). The "condemning" of sin may refer to the execution of judgment in the decisive defeat of the power of sin in the death of Christ. This drama of deliverance is similar to the new Exodus motif found in Galatians 1:4 (". . . who gave himself for our sins to rescue us from the present evil age") and Colossians 1:13-14 (". . . who rescued us from the dominion of darkness and transferred us into the kingdom of his beloved Son, in whom we have redemption, the forgiveness of sins").

4.1. Death. The theme of death (see Life and Death) as a personified enemy is found in ancient Near Eastern mythology, where death could be viewed as a hostile cosmic power in the drama of divine conflict. Paul draws on an OT expression of this mythic theme when in 1 Corinthians 15:54-55 he taunts death by adapting lines from Hosea 13:14. But Paul introduces Hosea with a line from Isaiah 25:8, "Death is swallowed up in victory" (see commentaries for Paul's adaptation of Isaiah). These words are drawn from a hymn of thanksgiving that follows Isaiah's vivid picture of the divine warrior's epiphany on the Day of the Lord (Is 24). In Isaiah these words follow shortly after a description of Yahweh's defeat and punishment of "the powers in the heavens above and the kings on the earth below" (Is 24:21). Paul's use of Isaiah 25:8 at this point supports his own ordering of eschatological events—the powers will be defeated first (1 Cor 15:24-25), and then death (1 Cor 15:26)—and further confirms that he is reinterpreting divine warrior tradition and identifying the principalities and powers with the nations and their gods. The divine conquest of death recalls the OT hymnic theme of the rejoicing and renewal of creation at the triumph of the divine warrior (e.g., Ps 98:4-9).

4.2. Law. The notion of the Law* being an "enemy" to be overcome is a paradox. Though Paul views the Law in and of itself as holy and good (Rom 7:12), when seen from the perspective of the human plight the Law serves and empowers sin (Rom 7:8, 11; 1 Cor 15:56). The Law increases the consciousness of sin (Rom 3:20), brings wrath (Rom 4:15), makes sin evident (Rom 5:13) and abundant (Rom 5:20), and provokes further sin (Rom 7:7-25). Within the experience of Israel it served to "heap up" and consolidate sin in one place, where it could be dealt with (Wright, 151-53, 196, 209). Sin perverted the Law, and what the Law was powerless to do, overcome the flesh, God did in sending his Son* (Rom 8:3). The Law was a circumstantial accomplice in a cosmic revolt. And within the polemical context of Galatians, the Law is seen to be "added because of transgressions" (Gal 3:19). It acts as a jailor (Gal 3:22-23) and works its curse* upon Israel (Gal 3:10). Such was Israel's history under the Law, a history which led to the covenant curse of exile under which the nation still languished when God sent his Son.

In Galatians 4:1-7 Paul employs a new Exodus typology. In the eschatological fullness of time God again delivered his people, this time not from bondage to Egypt but from enslavement to the Law and the elemental spirits (Gal 4:3-5). The thought is parallel with Galatians 1:4—"to rescue us from the present evil age." But just as significant is Paul's unique expression in Galatians 3:13 of Christ's death bearing the curse of this Law. The means of redemption is Christ's taking on himself the curse of the covenant (Gal 3:13). "Hanging on a tree" (Gal 3:13) though directly quoted from Deuteronomy 21:23 (in the context of capital punishment), is a practice also evident in Israel's conquest and dispatch of the kings of Canaan. In a reversal of that imagery, Paul speaks of Christ absorbing the curse, or ḥērem, of the divine warrior against Israel, and so bringing redemption for his people and in turn for the world. Christ (like a warrior king) died hanging on a tree in his own land, a death and exposure reminiscent of that of the king of Ai (Josh 8:29) and the five kings of the Amorites (Josh 10:26). Seen from the perspective of divine warfare, the picture is a strange reversal of the expected norm. The divine warrior's covenant curse fell upon this representative of Israel, God's Son, upon whom the sins of the nation had been accumulated—and for Paul this is to say that God in Christ absorbed the ḥērem, or covenant curse. Here is the eschatological climax of a theme deeply imbedded in covenant Law and the Prophets: the divine warrior against Israel (see Prophet, Paul as). From this act emerges a new creation (Gal 6:15) for the Israel of God (Gal 6:16). The exile and restoration of Israel were transmogrified into the death and resurrection of Christ (Wright, 145-48).

Ephesians 2:14-15 is the one other place in the Pauline corpus where the Law is cast as an enemy, and it is the only place where Christ is said to have "destroyed" (katargeō) the Law or "rendered it powerless" (cf. Rom 3:31). The Law is here likened to a "barrier," or "dividing wall of hostility," a reference to the role of the Law in forming a barrier of racial and ethnic hostility (Eph 2:14, 16) between Jews and Gentiles* (cf. Letter of Aristeas 139). Commentators frequently find an allusion here to the balustrade in the Jerusalem Temple, a wall that separated the court of the Gentiles from the inner courts of Israel. But this Temple wall, part of a microcosmic representation of Israel's view of the world (cf. m. Kel. 1:6-9; Dunn, 31-41), was a Torah-inspired spatial representation of the distinction between Israel and the nations. Yahweh dwelt on Zion, with Israel encircling his dwelling and protected by walls from the nations. This dividing wall, the "law of commandments and regulations," Christ "destroyed" (Eph 2:15), "killing" (apokteinō, Eph 2:16) the enmity "in his body" (Eph 2:16).

Jesus' death as temple destruction may once again form the background, but it is worth noting that the most frequent reference to walls in the OT is to military fortifications surrounding cities, walls that are either defended or assaulted and torn down during warfare (e.g., Jericho). Further, Paul has already referred to the Gentiles as those once "separated" from Israel and "aliens" to the covenants (Eph 2:12). By the old covenantal standards they were "uncircumcised," "strangers to the covenant of promise," "in the world" and outside the "commonwealth of Israel," the land of promise. As Gentiles "far off," they had been potential enemies of Israel, subject to the assault of Israel and her divine warrior should they reject an offer of peace (see Deut 20:10-15 and instructions for warfare with nations outside the land; cf. mission of the seventy, Lk 10:1-20). But now they had been brought "near" by the blood of Christ (Eph 2:13) who is "our peace" (Eph 2:14). The Law, which had separated foreigners from the promise of Israel and made distant Gentiles the object of covenant curse and warfare, had been assaulted and destroyed by God's Messiah. And this Messiah had come and proclaimed peace to those "far" (Gentiles, cf. Deut 20:10-15) and to those "near" (Israel, cf. Is 57:19; Eph 2:17). The result is a new creation seen now in "one new humanity" (kainos anthrōpos, Eph 2:15) and the building of God's new temple (Eph 2:19-22).

The ancient pattern of conflict, triumph and temple building is recapitulated, and Ephesians 4:8-9 seems to extend this story by telling how Christ has outfitted his temple-body for ministry (Eph 4:11-16). Reciting the words of Psalm 68:18 (a psalm replete with the themes of divine warfare), Paul applies the imagery of the victorious divine warrior's ascent to his mountain sanctuary, with captives in his victorious train, to Christ's victorious ascension to his heavenly home, with captives in his triumphal procession. But whereas the divine warrior of the psalm receives gifts, Christ gives gifts. This reinterpretation of the psalm may have been suggested by Jewish interpretation (cf. Midr. T'hillîm on Ps 68:11 and 'Abot R. Nat. 2.2a, where Moses ascends and gives the Law; see commentaries) and the use of Psalm 68 as part of the synagogal readings for Pentecost. But its use in Ephesians (and early Christian tradition? cf. Acts 2:32-36, where Ps 110:1 appears) fits nicely the larger Pauline plot of Christ's triumph.

5. Triumph at the End of the Age.

When Paul spoke of the Day of the Lord (e.g., 1 Cor 5:5; 1 Thess 5:2, 4; 2 Thess 1:10; 2:2) he quite naturally used the imagery of the divine warrior's day of triumph (see Eschatology). The parousia, or "arrival," of Christ was a christological interpretation of the coming of the divine warrior. The overall impression is of the Lord Jesus acting as the eschatological agent of God the Father (cf. 1 Cor 15:23-28; 1 Thess 1:10; 4:14, 16; 5:9; but cf. Tit 2:13; Kreitzer, 112-28). God acts in Christ, and so Paul can readily ascribe the imagery of the divine warrior to the coming of Christ. The visual imagery includes fire (2 Thess 1:7; cf. Ps 104:4; Is 29:6; 30:30; 66:15-16; Dan 7:9); angels, or "holy ones" (1 Thess 3:13; 2 Thess 1:7; cf. Deut 33:2; Zech 14:5; 1 Enoch 1:9; Jude 14); and clouds, most likely an oblique reference to the cloud chariot of the divine warrior (Ps 68:4; Dan 7:13; Mk 13:26; cf. 2 Kings 2:11-12; see 1.1 above). The event of "meeting" (apantēsis) the Lord in the air (1 Thess 4:16-17) appears to be the greeting of Christ the arriving warrior to welcome and escort him in his triumphal approach (cf. Ps 68:24-35; Mt 25:6), as in the triumphal entry of Jesus into Jerusalem. The "loud command," the "call" of the archangel (1 Thess 4:16; cf. Josh 6:5; Judg 7:20; Zeph 1:16; 1 Macc 3:54) and the "trumpet call of God" (1 Cor 15:52; 1 Thess 4:16; cf. Num 10:9; Josh 6:5; Zeph 1:16; 1 Macc 3:54) all reflect a summons to battle. The cumulative picture recalls the processional of the divine warrior to his holy mountain and Temple to reclaim his territory. If 2 Thessalonians 2:3-12 should be understood as a continuation of this story, Christ finds on his arrival a usurping power seated in the "Temple of God" (2 Thess 2:3-4). This "man of lawlessness,"* who has led many astray by his counterfeit Parousia and is inspired by Satan* (2 Thess 2:9-10), is overthrown at the Parousia of Christ the divine warrior (2 Thess 2:8; cf. Is 66:6). This compressed episode in which the enemy is "destroyed" (anaireō) by "breath"/"spirit" (tō pneumati; cf. 4 Ezra 13:10) and "annihilated" (katargeō) by "splendor" (tē epiphaneia) recalls the victory of the messianic conqueror of Isaiah 11:4 (cf. 1QSb 5:24) and is replete with images of divine warfare.

Paul is clear in speaking of humanity's enmity, or hostility, toward God (Rom 5:10; Col 1:21), a condition that makes them objects of divine wrath* (Eph 2:3; Col 3:6). It is from this condition that believers have been rescued by divine initiative (Rom 5:10; Col 1:21-22). But as God's people they now face opposition from his enemies (1 Thess 2:2, 14-15; cf. Rom 11:28). Presently the powerful, salvific righteousness of God is at work in the gospel (Rom 1:16-17), but so also is the wrath of God (Rom 1:18). In the end God's wrath will overtake with eternal destruction those who persist in their enmity, who "do not know God" and "do not obey the gospel* of our Lord Jesus" (2 Thess 1:8). This includes Jews who have actively resisted the advance of the gospel of Christ (2 Thess 2:16, in a dramatic reversal of the fate of the Amorites in Gen 15:16). But faithful believers "are not destined for wrath but for obtaining salvation" by virtue of Christ's work (1 Thess 5:9-10). They await the coming of the Son from heaven, who rescues them from the coming wrath (1 Thess 1:10; cf. 11QMelch 8-9, 13). At this point the imagery of divine triumph and sacrifice meet: the drawing down of the covenant curse, or warrior's wrath of God, on the representative of God's people, who takes upon himself their sin, will save his people from the coming wrath that will reach all who do not stand under the shield of divine grace.*

Ultimately, it is Satan who stands behind this human opposition, whether it be the ongoing opposition to the gospel (1 Thess 3:5) or the final revolt (2 Thess 2:9). Paul tells the Romans that God will "soon crush Satan under your feet" (Rom 16:20), an allusion to divine triumph in which he incorporates Adamic imagery (cf. Gen 3:16; Ps 8:6) and the hope of a new creation.

6. Prisoners and Soldiers of Christ.

The Roman triumph was an image that Paul not only applied to Christ's work on the cross, but also to his apostolic ministry. In 2 Corinthians 2:14 Paul speaks of himself as being led in the triumphal procession of Christ. Here Paul is not one of the high ranking officers in Christ's army, but is himself being led in triumph (thriambeuonti hēmas) as a former enemy and persecutor of Christ, who has been conquered and is now marched as a captive, being constantly led to his death (cf. 2 Cor 4:10; Hafemann, 16-34; Duff).

By this metaphor he sets forth the paradox of his apostolic ministry: in his weakness and cruciform suffering the power of the triumphant Christ is made manifest (2 Cor 12:10). The triumph of God in Christ is not the triumph of brute force, as if to assert a cosmic principle of "might is right." It is a triumph of grace in which divine love goes forth in sacrifice (see Moule). God in Christ has absorbed the divine judgment due Israel and the world, and the peace of a new creation is offered to Israel and the world in the word of the cross and the ministry* of the apostle* (see Cross, Theology of the).

Yet Paul can speak of himself as engaged in a battle. He fights "in truthful speech and in the power* of God [en dynamei theou]; with weapons [hoplōn] of righteousness in the right hand and in the left" (2 Cor 6:7). Or again, he wages war (strateuometha), but not as the flesh* does. The weapons (hopla) of his warfare (tēs strateias) have divine power (dynata tō theō) to demolish strongholds (ochyrōmatōn; cf. Prov 21:22 LXX), arguments and pretension, and he takes captive (aichmalōtizontes) every thought to make it obedient to Christ" (2 Cor 10:3-5). At Ephesus Paul "fought wild beasts" (ethēriomachēsa, 1 Cor 15:32), perhaps an allusion to battle with human opponents of the gospel, behind whom Paul perceives demonic "beasts" (Dan 7; T. Naph. 8:4, 6; T. Jos. 5:2; cf. Ex 23:29; Hanson, 120). This perception of gospel ministry as warfare is reflected in the title of Epaphroditus and Archippus as "fellow soldiers" (systratiōtēs, Phil 2:25; Philem 2), and in Paul's comparison of his "working for a living" to someone in military service (strateuetai) paying their own expenses (1 Cor 9:7). In the Pastorals* Timothy is encouraged to "endure hardship with us like a good soldier of Christ Jesus" (2 Tim 2:3-4). In three instances Paul uses the term synaichmalōtos, "fellow prisoner of war": in Romans 16:7 of Andronicus and Junia, in Colossians 4:10 of Aristarchus and in Philemon 23 of Epaphras. Whether this allusion refers to those who, like Paul, have been taken captive by Christ or have been taken captive (imprisoned) in the course of gospel warfare is uncertain, but the metaphor of warfare is clearly present (see Prison, Prisoner).

The imagery of warfare is of course applied to all believers, who in the period between the cross and Parousia face spiritual opponents. They are to be armed for warfare (1 Thess 5:8), offer their "members" as weapons of righteousness (Rom 6:13, 23) and put on the armor of light (Rom 13:12). Most memorably, in Ephesians 6:10-17 believers are to take on defensive spiritual armor and shield (cf. Gen 15:1, 6), and the offensive weapon of the "sword of the Spirit," in their conflict with the devil, principalities, powers and spiritual forces of evil. Although the terminology is borrowed from the Roman world, it is in essence the armor of Yahweh the divine warrior (Eph 6:13; cf. Is 58:16-18; Wis 5:17-20), and the battle is engaged in "his mighty strength" (Eph 6:10).

See also DEATH OF CHRIST; DEMONS AND EXORCISM; ENEMY, ENMITY, HATRED; ESCHATOLOGY; EXALTATION AND ENTHRONEMENT; LAW; MAGIC; POWER; PRINCIPALITIES AND POWERS; PROPHET, PAUL AS; RESTORATION OF ISRAEL; SATAN, DEVIL; WRATH, DESTRUCTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. E. Arnold, Ephesians: Power and Magic: The Concept of Power in Ephesians (SNTSMS 63; Cambridge: University Press, 1989); idem, Powers of Darkness: Principalities and Powers in Paul's Letters (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1992); G. Aulén Christus Victor (New York: Macmillan, 1969); J. C. Beker, Paul the Apostle: The Triumph of God in Life and Thought (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980); M. Black, "πᾶσαι ἐξουσίαι αὐτῷ ὑποταγήσονται," in Paul and Paulinism, ed. M. D. Hooker and S. G. Wilson (London: S.P.C.K., 1982) 74-82; M. C. de Boer, The Defeat of Death (JSNTSup 22; Sheffield: JSOT, 1988); G. B. Caird, Principalities and Powers: A Study in Pauline Theology (Oxford: Clarendon, 1956); P. B. Duff, "Metaphor, Motif and Meaning: The Rhetorical Strategy behind the Image 'Led in Triumph' in 2 Corinthians 2:14," CBQ 53 (1991) 79-92; J. D. G. Dunn, The Partings of the Ways (Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1991); R. B. Egan, "Lexical Evidence on Two Pauline Passages," NovT 19 (1977) 34-62; S. J. Hafemann, Suffering and Ministry in the Spirit: Paul's Defense of His Ministry in II Corinthians 2:14—3:3 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); A. T. Hanson, "Militia Christi," in The Paradox of the Cross in the Thought of St. Paul (JSNTSup 17; Sheffield: JSOT, 1987); L. J. Kreitzer, Jesus and God in Paul's Eschatology (JSNTS 19; Sheffield: JSOT, 1987); R. Leivestad, Christ the Conqueror (London: SPCK, 1954); J. B. Lightfoot, St. Paul's Epistles to the Colossians and Philemon (London, 1879); M. C. Lind, Yahweh is a Warrior (Scottdale, PA: Herald, 1980); T. Longman III, "The Divine Warrior: The New Testament Use of an Old Testament Motif," WTJ 44 (1982) 290-307; G. H. C. Macgregor, "Principalities and Powers: The Cosmic Background of Paul's Thought," NTS 1 (1954-55) 17-28; P. D. Miller, The Divine Warrior in Early Israel (HSM 5; Cambridge: Harvard University, 1973); C. F. D. Moule, "Reflections on So-called 'Triumphalism,' " in The Glory of Christ in the New Testament: Studies in Christology in Memory of George Bradford Caird, ed. L. D. Hurst and N. T. Wright (Oxford: Clarendon, 1987) 219-27; P. T. O'Brien, "Principalities and Powers: Opponents of the Church," in Biblical Interpretation and the Church, ed. D. A. Carson (Exeter: Paternoster, 1984); J. A. T. Robinson, The Body: A Study in Pauline Theology (SBT 5; London: SCM, 1952); H. Schlier, Principalities and Powers in the New Testament (New York: Herder & Herder, 1961); C. A. A. Scott, Christianity According to St. Paul (Cambridge: University Press, 1961); S. Versnel, Triumphus (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1970); L. Williamson, "Led in Triumph: Paul's Use of Thriambeuo," Int 22 (1968) 317-32; W. Wink, Unmasking the Powers: The Invisible Forces that Determine Human Existence (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); N. T. Wright, The Climax of the Covenant (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1992); R. Yates, "Colossians 2.15: Christ Triumphant," NTS 37 (1991) 573-91.

D. G. Reid

TRUTH

A good deal of the discussion of truth centers on whether the NT writers followed the Hebrew idea, which stressed reliability, firmness and the like, or the Greek concept, in which the thought was that of reality as against appearance. For NT writers the antithesis is probably too sharply drawn, for they were heirs of both worlds. The only safe procedure is to study what they have said in their writings themselves and not to read them through Semitic or Hellenistic spectacles (see Thiselton).

Paul puts a good deal of emphasis on truth. He uses the noun alētheia forty-seven times, and eight times he uses the related words: the adjectives alēthēs ("true," "honest," "genuine" four times) and alēthinos ("true," "honest," "dependable"), the verb alētheuō ("tell the truth," "be truthful," twice) and the adverb alēthōs ("truly," "actually"). The noun alētheia occurs in every one of his letters except 1 Thessalonians and Philemon. He knows, of course, that truth is accuracy over against falsehood, and he can refer to speaking the truth just as we commonly do (Eph 4:25; 1 Tim 2:7; etc.). But more often he uses the word with a richer and fuller meaning.

1. The Truth of God
2. The Truth and the Gospel
3. Truth in Christian Living

1. The Truth of God.

On a number of occasions he refers to "the truth of God*" (i.e., God in his self-revelation, Rom 1:25; 3:7; 15:8) or "the truth of Christ*" (2 Cor 11:10); once he refers to speaking the truth in Christ (Rom 9:1). The judgment* of God is "according to truth" (Rom 2:2); human judgments might be biased according to class or creed, but with God truth is the only consideration. Paul speaks of the preachers as commending themselves "in the word of truth" which he immediately follows with "in the power* of God" (2 Cor 6:7). We should also consider here the apostle's recognition of "the form of the knowledge of the truth in the Law" (Rom 2:20). He denounced those who proclaimed salvation* by way of the Law,* but that did not prevent him from acknowledging the divine truth enshrined in the Law. Paul finds divine truth (which people reject) in creation as well as in Law (Rom 1:18-20).

Paul has an unusual expression when he says "as truth is in Jesus" (Eph 2:21). This is often rendered "the truth as it is in Jesus" (e.g., REB), but this is surely a misunderstanding. Paul is not saying that truth is many-sided and that he is concerned with that aspect of truth that we see in Jesus. Rather he is saying that real truth, ultimate truth, is to be found in Jesus and that we find it nowhere else. It is a claim that the revelation of truth in Jesus is utterly reliable. Often Paul has the thought that people have not received the truth. They suppress it in unrighteousness (Rom 1:18), exchange it for "the lie" (Rom 1:25). They refuse to obey it (Rom 2:8; Gal 5:7; 2 Thess 2:12). They did not receive a love for it and so lost salvation (2 Thess 2:10). Sinners turn away from truth (2 Tim 4:4; Tit 1:14). They are bereft of the truth (1 Tim 6:5). God has revealed the truth, indeed has sent his Son to live it and to proclaim it, but sinful people have refused to listen (see Sin, Guilt).

2. The Truth and the Gospel.

Paul can speak of "the word of the truth of the gospel*" (Col 1:5) and again of "the truth of the gospel" (Gal 2:5). He refers to "the word of truth, the gospel of our salvation" (Eph 1:13). The truth that is so closely bound up with God finds its expression here on earth in the gospel, which sets out the ultimate truths of the love* of God especially as shown in the cross,* the sinfulness of the human race, and the provision God has made for salvation. The gospel and truth are closely connected. This is so also in the passage in which Paul speaks of God's will for people "to be saved and come to the knowledge of truth" (1 Tim 2:4).

But while there is this clear revelation of the truth and this provision for sinners to be saved through the truth of the gospel, Paul regretfully sets forth the truth that sinners often refuse to receive the truth. They have missed it or turned from it (2 Tim 2:18). They resist it like Jannes and Jambres of old (2 Tim 3:8). Paul himself was "for the truth" and declared that he could not do anything against it (2 Cor 13:8), but he had to recognize that the sinners to whom he preached did not always emulate him. The truth of the gospel is real, but in the conditions of this world it is always possible for people to decline to receive it.

3. Truth in Christian Living.

English does not have a verb "to truth," but Paul uses such a verb, alētheuō, when he urges the Ephesians that " 'truthing' in love" they should grow in Christ in all things (Eph 4:15). We might understand this as "speaking the truth in love," but more probably we should see truth as a quality of action as well as of speech. Paul wants his converts to live the truth as well as to speak it.

Paul says that he himself speaks truth (2 Cor 7:14; 12:6), and of course he looks for a similar practice in his converts. He calls on the Corinthians to keep the feast (pascha, "Passover") "with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth," which he contrasts with "malice and evil" (1 Cor 5:8). Just as the Jews cleared out all leaven before their Passover, so believers must be rid of malice and wickedness since Christ, their Passover, has already been sacrificed (see Sacrifice). He points out that love "rejoices with the truth" (1 Cor 13:6); real love can take no pleasure in falsehood and unrighteousness, but truth and love go together. "The new self" he says, "is created in righteousness and holiness of truth" (some MSS, "and truth," Eph 4:24; cf. "sons of truth" in Dead Sea Scrolls, e.g., 1QS 4:2; see Murphy- O'Connor, 208-10). The "belt of truth" is part of the Christian's armor (Eph 6:14; cf. Is 11:5); it protects against the attacks of evil (cf. 2 Cor 4:2). When Paul asks the Galatians who has prevented them from "obeying the truth" (Gal 5:7), he is referring to the "truth of the gospel" (cf. Gal 2:5, 14) for which he has just argued (Gal 2—4). The truth of the gospel does not merely call for intellectual agreement. It is to be obeyed and to characterize the new life in Christ (see Barclay, 94).

See also GOSPEL; KNOWLEDGE, GIFT OF KNOWLEDGE; WISDOM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. M. G. Barclay, Obeying the Truth (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1991); R. Bultmann et al., "ἀλήθεια κτλ," TDNT I.232-51; H. Hübner, "ἀλήθεια κτλ," EDNT 1.57-60; J. Murphy-O'Connor, "Truth: Paul and Qumran," in Paul and Qumran, ed. J. Murphy-O'Connor (London: Geoffrey Chapman, 1968) 179-230; D. J. Theron, "Alētheia in the Pauline Corpus," EvQ 26 (1954) 3-18; A. C. Thiselton, "Truth," NIDNTT 3.874-902.

L. Morris

TÜBINGEN SCHOOL. See PAUL AND HIS INTERPRETERS.

TYPOLOGY. See ADAM AND CHRIST; MOSES; OLD TESTAMENT IN PAUL.

U

UNCIRCUMCISION. See CIRCUMCISION; GENTILES; ISRAEL.

UNCLEAN. See PURITY AND IMPURITY.

UNIVERSALISM

The notion that all intelligent, moral creatures (angels, humans, devils) will be saved in the end is called universalism. But commonly universalism refers specifically to the salvation* of all human beings. A number of Pauline texts have been thought to point toward universalism. Other Pauline texts speak of some perishing and have a particularistic understanding of salvation (restricted to the elect and/or believers). Some interpreters deal with this tension by trying to show how the universalistic sounding texts are compatible with the particularistic texts, or vice versa. Still others see inconsistency in Paul's statements, which they usually try to resolve in one of several ways. Any solution to the problem must first grapple with the exegetical issues involved in the key Pauline texts.

1. The Separation of the Saved and the Lost
2. The Universal Scope of Christ's Saving Work
3. Evaluating the Evidence

1. The Separation of the Saved and the Lost.

On the one hand, Paul thinks in terms of two possible ultimate destinies: to receive eternal life* and be with the Lord* forever, or to incur wrath, affliction and "eternal destruction," and to perish, be away from the Lord, and excluded from the kingdom (see, e.g., Rom 2:5-10; 5:9; Phil 1:28; 3:19; 1 Thess 1:10; 2 Thess 1:6-10; Gal 5:21). People will go to their respective destinies when Christ* returns in judgment.* Paul assumes that some will, not just could, perish. This thought is terrible for many modern readers to countenance, especially when conceived in terms of the eternal punishment of the lost. The phrase "eternal destruction" (olethros aiōnios) at 2 Thessalonians 1:9, however, may not refer to eternal suffering but "destruction that lasts forever," or annihilation (Marshall 1983, 178-79).

Already the separation is taking place: some are being saved and others are perishing (1 Cor 1:18; 2 Cor 2:15; 4:3). The response to or rejection of the gospel* is the criterion for this separation. Those who believe in the gospel are saved; those who stumble over it in opposition and unbelief, whose minds are blinded by the god of this age (2 Cor 4:4; see Satan), perish. Without standing firm in the gospel one can have no assurance of salvation (Gal 5:2; cf. Rom 10:1-4; see Gundry Volf, 159-229; see E. Boring, 271-72, however, for a discussion of attempts to interpret such texts in a way compatible with universalism). The double outcome of judgment which we find in Paul as well as in the rest of the NT—the division of humanity into two groups consisting of the saved and the lost—corresponds to the OT-Jewish worldview: there are two ways, one leads to life, the other to death (e.g., Deut 30:15-20; Jer 21:8). Universalism is foreign to this thought world (Oepke, 392).

2. The Universal Scope of Christ's Saving Work.

Nevertheless, Paul's understanding of the comprehensiveness of the saving work of Christ leads him to make statements that appear to speak of a final restoration of all. (Contrary to the view initiated by Origen, the phrase apokatastasis pantōn in Acts 3:21 does not denote the conversion of all persons but the "restoration of all things" [for the sense of pantōn as neuter, see Oepke, 391], or the universal renewal of the earth, a hope of the OT prophets to be fulfilled through Jesus Christ at his Parousia, according to Peter's sermon.) Did Paul leave behind his inherited particularism and move toward universalism at a later stage? Does he really express the view that all will be saved? Did he hold more than one view at the same time?

2.1. Romans 5:12-21. Romans 5:12-21 probably offers the greatest potential support for universalism of any text in the undisputed Pauline letters. Referring to Christ's death,* Paul makes the following statements: "through the righteous act of one, unto [eis, i.e., results in] justification of life for [eis] all people" (Rom 5:18); "through the obedience of the one, the many will be made righteous" (Rom 5:19); "the grace* of God and the gift in grace, which is of the one man Jesus Christ, abounded to many" (Rom 5:15). The thrust of the passage is that the deed of one person fundamentally determined the nature of human existence. Adam's sin* resulted in the reign of sin and death for all. Christ's obedience to the point of death, on the other hand, resulted in the reign of grace and life for all. Both deeds have a universal effect, but Christ's is greater. Who are the "all" and "many" whom Christ's deed affects? How does it affect them? And how is Christ's deed greater than Adam's deed?

The universalist position takes "all" (pantes) literally and, seeing the parallelism between "all" and "many" in the text (see Rom 5:12, 15, 16, 18, 19), argues that "many" (polloi) is a Semitism with an inclusive, not exclusive, sense referring to all who are not a few in number (i.e., the many who cannot be counted, Jeremias, 536-45). By contrast, E. P. Sanders (473) takes "many" in Romans 5:19 to be a restrictive modification of "all" in Romans 5:18. The Adam/Christ analogy has pushed Paul to a stronger conclusion than he can maintain, for, while Adam's deed resulted in the sin and death of all, Christ's deed results in the salvation of some, as other texts in Paul indicate (see Adam and Christ).

Others explain Paul's universalistic language here in terms of the wider context of his argument: Christ is the universal Savior* of all, whether Jews or Gentiles. All refers not to individuals but to groups. And even if it is true that all individuals sin and die as a result of Adam's transgression, not all individuals are saved as a result of Christ's death—there is thus an asymmetry in Paul's argument. Since faith is necessary for salvation according to Paul (as Romans 4 has just made plain), the all affected by Christ's death here are presumed to be believers: "all in Christ," who have been "transferred" to the sphere of Christ by faith.* Paul may be thinking of all who belong to Christ who will be raised to eternal life at the end (cf. 1 Cor 15:22), but not of unbelievers raised in a general resurrection.*

In support of the view that Paul has all believers in mind, some point to Romans 5:17, where he describes those affected by Christ's death as "those who receive the abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness." The participle hoi lambanontes, "those who receive," implies the decision of faith (Bultmann, 1. 302-3). Christ's death takes saving effect only in individuals who have faith in him. E. Boring (286-87), however, argues that the verb has a passive sense ("receive"), not an active one ("take"), and does not imply belief in the gospel. But I. H. Marshall (1990, 316-17) refutes Boring, citing references in which lambanō is used in clear conjunction with faith (Gal 3:2, 14) and where lambanō implies the decision of the recipient (e.g., Christ's taking the form of a servant, Phil 2:7).

Rather than understanding the "all" who are saved by Christ's death to be all who are actually in Christ by faith, C. K. Barrett argues that for Paul there are two ways of looking at humanity: as "in Adam" and thus under condemnation, and as "in Christ" and thus justified. Both are "universal possibilities, and even universal actualities, in the sense that they point to a dialectical truth which is valid for mankind as a whole, and for each individual man" (Barrett 1958, 116-17; cf. Barth, 181-82). Since this explanation still does not tell us whether Paul thought all would be saved at the last day, Barrett adds that the resolution of the dialectical duality lies with the merciful God. Barrett thus implies universalism.

E. Käsemann incorporates both universalistic and particularistic aspects of Romans 5:12-21 into his interpretation. The era of Christ and the reign of life and grace has replaced the era of Adam, dominated by sin and death. Nevertheless, grace must be seized unceasingly in renunciation of the old aeon (Käsemann, 156-57). While the point of the text is justification for believers, the motif of all-powerful grace suggests that unbelievers will not remain outside the scope of salvation, as Käsemann sees other texts to imply (these will be discussed below). Eschatological universalism is implicit in Käsemann's remarks, for "cosmology overshadows anthropology" (similarly, Beker, 193).

It is debatable, however, whether Paul saw the greatness of God's grace to imply universalism. Romans 11:32 does state God's intention "to have mercy on all," but the context clearly indicates that Paul is thinking of people groups: both Jews and Gentiles. No people is beyond the scope of God's grace, though all are shut up to disobedience. And Romans 5:15 says that grace abounded to all, but Paul seems to mean by this that grace was more than enough to deal with all of human sin and put a stop to the universal power of death, and that all can avail themselves of this abundant grace (Rom 5:17). The superiority of Christ's deed in comparison with Adam's (pollō mallon, "much more," Rom 5:15) consists in its replacing death with life. Of course Paul also makes the point that Christ's death affected all, just as Adam's sin affected all—but this is equivalence, not superiority, so it cannot explain the "much more" of Christ's work.

How then can Christ's death have affected all if it did not result in universal salvation? On the one hand Paul seems to be saying more than that the cross is sufficient for the salvation of all. It was an act of salvation: its result was "justification of life" (Rom 5:16, 18) and by it many will be constituted righteous (Rom 5:19). Sinners were reconciled to God through the death of his Son (Rom 5:10). God reconciled the world to himself in Christ (2 Cor 5:19). This interpretation of Christ's death highlights the graciousness of salvation. Paul's theology of the cross* comes to expression best in affirmations of "universal salvation" through Christ's death, which lacks nothing in its power and grace. Yet when Paul thinks concretely of the salvation of individuals, he recognizes the need for humans to appropriate by faith the benefits of Christ's death. It is doubtful that we should divorce Paul's theme of reconciliation (see Peace, Reconciliation) through the cross from that of justification* by faith. (Some universalists would argue that all will indeed eventually turn to God in faith, see Bauckham, 51-54.) The completeness of Christ's saving work dominates Romans 5:12-21, however, because Paul is at pains to show that God has provided a comprehensive solution to the problem of universal sin and death elucidated in Romans 1:18-32.

E. Boring (283-84) thinks Paul's universalism in this text (Rom 5:12-21) is the logical inference of the dominant image used to describe salvation here, namely, the image of the conquering king: sin and death are conquered, God alone is Lord, and nothing remains outside of his lordship. Yet when Boring says "all welcome the conqueror as the liberator from an alien tyrant," he is developing the image in a way Paul does not. By contrast, J. C. Beker speaks of the "destruction, judgment or torment of nonbelievers" as the necessary hermeneutical "consequence of the theme of the triumph of God" (194, emphasis added; see Triumph). Paul customarily distinguishes between those who believe in this Lord and those who do not. But according to Boring (287-92), Paul's characteristic insistence on faith belongs to a different image for salvation, which pictures God as a judge who separates people into saved and lost. He explains that the juridical image is logically incompatible with the image of royal conquest, but both express important truths. Neither of these images amounts to Paul's "real view." In the end, however, Boring wants to understand the destruction awaiting those outside of Christ as merely the "soft implication" of the juridical image of the salvation of believers through Christ (i.e., one can speak of salvation only if one also speaks of its opposite). Boring thus finds an implicit universalism in Paul (implicit in the image of God the king), and relegates Paul's explicit particularism to its being a necessary extrapolation of the image of God as judge. The tension is thus resolved in favor of universalism.

Instead of regarding the images Paul uses for salvation as logically incompatible, however, we might consider that Paul meant them to be interpreted in the light of each other and of the whole context of his teaching on salvation, including the need for the response of faith. This does not mean, however, that Paul's statements should be forced into a systematic-dogmatic construal (cf. Beker, 193).

2.2. 1 Corinthians 15:22. Here Paul uses the same Adam/Christ analogy, which leads him to an assertion similar to that of Romans 5:12-21: "as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive." But the parallelism is plainly asymmetrical, for the context shows that Paul is contemplating the resurrection of "those who belong to Christ" (hoi tou Christou, 1 Cor 15:23), a designation for believers (cf. 1 Cor 3:23). While Paul thinks of all humanity as being in Adam and thus subject to death, he apparently does not think of all humanity as being in Christ and thus destined to share his resurrection life. The destiny of those apart from Christ does not enter the picture here ("then the end," 1 Cor 15:24, probably does not mean "then the rest" [will be raised]). Rather Paul is concerned to assert that Christians still await resurrection, for Christ is the "first fruits* of those who sleep" (1 Cor 15:20). Boring, nevertheless, argues that universal salvation is supported by verse 28: "that God might be all in all." This monistic picture of the eschatological state, in which all is united under God's reign, does not allow for hell or annihilation (Boring, 280-81). The operative image of God the king here accounts for this one-group thinking. But, against Boring, Paul speaks in terms of all things being "subjected" to Christ and to God, which does not necessarily entail salvation (cf. Marshall 1990, 316), although it may (subjection is linked with transformation in Phil 3:21). Paul mentions the subjection and even destruction of antagonistic powers (1 Cor 15:24, 26-28), but they neither exclude the similar subjection of unbelievers, nor imply their salvation (see Principalities).

2.3. Philippians 2:10-11. Philippians 2:10-11 also uses the motif of the universal lordship of Christ. God exalted Christ "that at the name of Jesus every knee might bow, whether in heaven or on earth or under the earth, and every tongue might confess that Jesus Christ is Lord" (see Exaltation and Enthronement). The hymn* from which this quotation comes intends to affirm something about Christ in order to encourage the church: despite appearances, Christ is Lord of all by virtue of God's exaltation of him to the position of cosmic Lord. The universal acknowledgment of his lordship could coincide with his enthronement, as a present but not-yet-manifested reality, or it could refer to a still future event which will take place at the Parousia. The acknowledgement of Jesus Christ as Lord probably comes from the spiritual powers representing rival lordships, not human beings. The powers are subject to Christ; he is Lord of lords. Thus the hymn does not intend to indicate the extent of salvation, whether universal or particular (Marshall 1990, 318).

Boring, nevertheless, argues that the image of universal lordship in Philippians 2 points beyond the intention of the text itself to universal salvation. Otherwise, he reasons, one has the difficulty of positing that those who acknowledge Christ grudgingly will still be cast into the abyss, or that the spirit-powers are forced to acclaim Christ, but human beings are free to accept or reject him (Boring, 282-83). Neither of these implications may have concerned Paul, however, and we cannot determine his view by engaging in this kind of speculation. Furthermore, Boring's comments show that the image of God the king does not necessarily lead to a one-group eschatology in which all are saved, for the one group may consist of those who acknowledge Christ grudgingly as well as those who do so in genuine faith.

We now turn to three Pauline texts that describe Christ's reconciling work as having cosmic scope.

2.4. 2 Corinthians 5:19. Here Paul says that "God was reconciling the world to himself in Christ." The kosmos, "world,"* must be the human world, since Paul goes on to speak of God's "not counting their trespasses against them" (probably explicative of "reconciling"). But the reconciliation which was accomplished on the cross must now be preached and received: "We beseech you, . . . be reconciled to God!" (2 Cor 5:20). For some interpreters this constitutes evidence that the "reconciliation of the world" does not amount to universal salvation, rather that reconciliation is effective for a person only if it is received in faith (Murray, 23). The "reconciliation of the world" by Christ means that Christ is the only reconciler, not that all are effectively reconciled (Marshall 1990, 320). Others, however, argue that because reconciliation is effective for all, it should be preached and believed.

2.5. Colossians 1:20; Ephesians 1:10. The other two texts which speak of all-inclusive reconciliation through Christ are Colossians 1:20 and Ephesians 1:10, but many do not consider these letters authentically Pauline. According to Colossians 1:20 God purposed "through him [Christ] to reconcile (apokatallaxai) all things to himself." The reference is to Christ's death ("having made peace through the blood of his cross"). Marshall (1990, 321) thinks that "all things" refers primarily to the human world (cf. Col 1:22), though he does not rule out a reference to the powers defeated by Christ on the cross. In support of the latter referent, in Colossians 1:16 "all things" refers to all "created" things, "whether in heaven or on earth," and includes the "principalities and powers." These are named in Colossians 2:15 as those whom Christ "led in triumph," enemies defeated in his death (see Triumph).

What then is the nature of the reconciliation which Christ's death accomplished? Healing of the breach between human beings and God? Subjection or pacification of cosmic powers? Or, more generally, the establishing of cosmic peace* and order over the universe under Christ's headship*? P. T. O'Brien favors the third explanation (O'Brien, 55-56). Reconciliation would thus be a broad term embracing both the aspects of salvation and subjugation (Murray, 7). The significance of cosmic reconciliation for the readers is that they belong to the supreme Lord, and all other powers in the universe are under his lordship, though their resistance still makes itself known (cf. Marshall 1990, 319). But universal salvation does not appear to be the clear implication of this text. Paul is writing here of the salvation of the readers only (Col 1:21-22) and exhorts them toward steadfastness (Col 1:23; Murray, 18). Thus Marshall (1990, 321) and O'Brien (56-57) conclude that acceptance of reconciliation in repentance and faith is a necessary human response in order to be saved from judgment and assured of eternal salvation.

Ephesians 1:10 speaks of God's purpose "to sum up, bring together (anakephalaiōsasthai) all things in Christ, things in the heavens and things on earth." The verb used here is an alternative to "reconcile" (Bruce, 261). In Christ the diverse elements of the cosmos are integrated and harmony is restored. This summing up may be a past event, referring to the exaltation of Christ to the position of cosmic Lord (Lincoln, 34-35). Or it may refer to the future Parousia. The uniting of all things in Christ removes the grounds for fear of hostile cosmic powers: "no aspect of this universe . . . is outside the scope of God's redemptive purpose" (Lincoln, 35). Marshall (1990, 322), however, comments that there is no basis for saying that those hostile toward God will be reconciled. Rather the point of the text is that God's will for the whole universe is realized in Christ.

2.6. Pastorals. Finally, the Pastoral Letters contain a few references to the salvation of all. God "wills all people to be saved" (1 Tim 2:4). God "is the Savior of all people, especially of believers" (1 Tim 4:10). "The grace of God has been manifested for the salvation of all people" (Tit 2:11). Some interpreters see here the Pauline thought that the gospel has a universal scope over against the heretical restriction of salvation to an elite, or the mistaken assumption that some are outside the pale of God's redemptive purposes. Salvation is effective, however, only for believers (e.g. Fee, 64, 106). This interpretation complements the assumption in the Pastorals that some will not be saved. The verses quoted can thus be taken to express God's antecedent or absolute will for the salvation of all, which differs from God's consequent or conditioned will according to which only those who believe are saved. Following Barth, Barrett (1963, 51), on the other hand, sees universal salvation through election* to be possible here.

3. Evaluating the Evidence

There is no detectable chronological development in Paul away from particularism toward universalism (as argued by Dodd, 118-26; so Boring, 271; see Marshall's [1990, 325] critique of Stauffer's attempt to find such a development). The evidence that Paul did sometimes express the view that all will be saved is slight, if it exists at all. Some describe it simply as a "final hope" or "final tendency of the divine work of salvation" (Oepke, 392).

Those who see some ground for universalism in Paul have wrestled with the problem of Paul's consistency. What is to be made of the particularistic texts—short of merely discounting them as wrong? J. C. Beker (194) attributes the tension between universal and particular salvation in Paul to contextual differences: "the universalistic thrust of Paul's thought cannot be logically pressed, because the context decides at every turn Paul's argumentative stance." In D. Patte's structuralist approach (Patte, 193, 254-55), Paul's affirmations of particularistic salvation belong to his convictional logic (what Paul "really" thinks, the deep structure of his thought), and statements about universal salvation belong to his argumentative logic (the surface structure of his thought). The contradiction is only formal. E. Brunner (180-84) resolves the issue by redefining the function of Paul's statements about final condemnation and universal salvation. As predictions or pieces of information they are contradictory. But we ought to take them instead as threats or invitations intended to provoke belief and acceptance of God's will to save. Both final condemnation and universal salvation are "true" in the context of existential encounter.

Universalism may perhaps be best defended as an implication of some statements in Paul, or a "fuller insight" rooted in but going beyond Scripture (e.g., the notion that the love of God as portrayed in Scripture must logically entail the salvation of all, cf. Robinson). Marshall (1990, 325-26), however, warns against a methodology which seeks to ground universalism in something beyond the revelation of God already made known in the crucified Christ and accessible in Scripture. Even then, universalism would have to be understood as deliverance from a really possibile judgment* so as not to brush aside the texts that speak of a future judgment or dispose of the scriptural teaching of God's justice.

See also ADAM AND CHRIST; APOSTASY, FALLING AWAY, PERSEVERANCE; DEATH OF CHRIST; ELECTION AND PREDESTINATION; ESCHATOLOGY; HEAVEN, HEAVENLIES, PARADISE; IMMORTALITY; JUDGMENT; PEACE, RECONCILIATION; RESURRECTION; SALVATION; TRIUMPH; WRATH, DESTRUCTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. K. Barrett, A Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans (HNTC; New York: Harper & Row, 1958); idem, The Pastoral Epistles (Oxford: Clarendon, 1963); K. Barth, The Epistle to the Romans (6th ed.; London: Oxford University, 1933); R. J. Bauckham, "Universalism: A Historical Survey," Themelios 4 (1979) 48-54; J. C. Beker, Paul the Apostle: The Triumph of God in Life and Thought (2d ed.; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1984) 193-94; M. E. Boring, "The Language of Universal Salvation in Paul," JBL 105 (1986) 269-92; F. F. Bruce, The Epistles to the Colossians, to Philemon, and to the Ephesians (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1984); E. Brunner, Eternal Hope (London: Lutterworth, 1954) 170-84; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament (2 vols.; New York: Scribner's, 1955); W. V. Crockett, "The Ultimate Restoration of All Mankind: 1 Corinthians 15:22," in Studia Biblica 1978: III. Papers on Paul and Other New Testament Authors, ed. E. A. Livingstone (Sheffield: JSNT, 1980) 83-87; C. H. Dodd, "The Mind of Paul: II," in New Testament Studies (Manchester: University Press, 1953) 83-128; C. S. Duthie, "Ultimate Triumph," SJT 14 (1961) 156-71; G. D. Fee, The Pastoral Epistles (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1988); J. Gundry Volf, Paul and Perseverance: Staying In and Falling Away (WUNT 2.37; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr; Louisville: John Knox/Westminster, 1990); J. Jeremias, "πολλοί," TDNT VI.536-45; E. Käsemann, Commentary on Romans (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1980); A. T. Lincoln, Ephesians (WBC 42; Dallas: Word, 1990); I. H. Marshall, 1 and 2 Thessalonians (NCB; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983); idem, "Does the New Testament Teach Universal Salvation?" in Christ in Our Place: The Humanity of God in Christ for the Reconciliation of the World: Essays Presented to Professor James Torrance, ed. T. A. Hart and D. P. Thimell (Allison Park, PA: Pickwick, 1989) 313-28; W. Michaelis, Versöhnung des Alls (Gümlingen [Bern]: Siloah, 1950); J. Murray, "The Reconciliation," WJT 29 (1966) 1-23; P. T. O'Brien Colossians (WBC 44; Waco: Word, 1982); A. Oepke, "ἀποκαθίστημι, ἀποκατάστασις," TDNT I.387-93; D. Patte, Paul's Faith and the Power of the Gospel (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1983); J. A. T. Robinson, "Universalism—Is it Heretical?," SJT 2 (1949) 139-55; E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism: A Comparison of Patterns of Religion (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977) 472-74; R. J. H. Shutt, "The New Testament Doctrine of the Hereafter: Universalism or Conditional Immortality," ExpT 67 (1955-56) 131-35; J. Stott and D. L. Edwards, Evangelical Essentials: A Liberal-Evangelical Dialogue (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1988) 306-31; N. T. Wright, "Towards a Biblical View of Universalism," Themelios 4 (1979) 54-58.

J. M. Gundry-Volf

UNKNOWN GOD. See ATHENS, PAUL AT; RELIGIONS, GRECO-ROMAN.

URBAN ENVIRONMENT OF PAUL'S MISSION. See SOCIAL SETTING OF MISSION CHURCHES.

V

VANITY. See FUTILITY.

VICES. See VIRTUES AND VICES.

VIRTUES AND VICES

Lists of virtues and vices appear in all the Pauline letters except 1 Thessalonians, 2 Thessalonians and Philemon. They are by no means unique to the Pauline corpus since similar lists are found in other writings, and in some cases those in the Pauline letters appear to be adaptations to a greater or lesser extent of these.

1. The Function of Paul's Ethical Lists
2. The Background of Paul's Ethical Lists

1. The Function of Paul's Ethical Lists.

The ways the lists are used in the Pauline letters fall into essentially five categories: to depict the depravity of unbelievers, to encourage believers to avoid vices and practice virtues, to expose or denounce the failures of false teachers, to describe what is required of church leaders and to advise a young pastor.

1.1. To Depict the Depravity of Unbelievers. The list of vices in Romans 1:29-31 is used to depict the depravity of those (Gentiles) who suppress God's truth. In 1 Corinthians 5:9-11 Paul, when seeking to correct a misunderstanding arising from his "previous letter," lists various types of immoral people. He had not meant that his readers should dissociate themselves from all such immoral persons, but only from Christians who lived immorally.

1.2. To Encourage Believers to Avoid the Vices and Practice the Virtues. This is the predominant use made of the lists in the Pauline letters. In Romans 13:13 Paul lists those things which believers must lay aside as they seek to live honorably as people of the new day. Various types of wrongdoers are listed in 1 Corinthians 6:9-10 to warn the Corinthians (some of whom were defrauding one another and taking one another to court; see Law Suit) that wrongdoers will not inherit the kingdom* of God. In 2 Corinthians 12:20 Paul lists a variety of moral failures he feared he might still find among the Corinthians when he paid his third visit. In Galatians 5:19-23 Paul reminds his readers that freedom* from the Law* was no excuse to gratify the desires of the flesh* (listed in Gal 5:19-21); it should lead rather to the manifestation of the fruit* of the Spirit (listed in Gal 5:22-23). The lists of virtues and vices found in the Prison letters (Eph 4:25-32; 5:3-5; Phil 4:8-9; Col 3:5, 8, 12) all function as incentives to urge the readers to have done with the vices listed, and to practice the virtues. Several lists are included in Titus as part of the behavioral instructions to be passed on to various groups within the Christian community on Crete: the older women (Tit 2:3-5); the younger men, for whom Titus is to be a model (Tit 2:6-8); and slaves (Tit 2:9-10). Titus 3:1-3 includes virtues to be pursued by all believers, as well as vices to be shunned which were a part of their behavior before they were saved (see Pastoral Letters).

1.3. To Expose/Denounce the Failure of the False Teachers. Twice in 1 Timothy lists are included in advice about dealing with false teachers: In 1 Timothy 1:3-11, Timothy is told to curb the activities of certain false teachers who were ignorant of the fact that the Law is not intended for the innocent but the lawless, an illustrative list of whose characteristics is then given (1 Tim 1:9-10); and in 1 Timothy 6:4-5 a list of the vices of the false teachers themselves is provided.

1.4. To Describe What Is Required of Church Leaders. In 1 Timothy 6:11 there is a list of the virtues which Timothy, as a servant* of God, should pursue, and 2 Timothy 2:22-25 lists the vices which he is to avoid and other virtues which he is to pursue. The virtues required of, and the vices to be avoided by, those appointed as bishops, deacons, elders are set out in 1 Timothy 3:2-7, 8-13; and Titus 1:6-8 respectively.

1.5. To Advise a Young Pastor. A list of vices is used to warn Timothy of the behavior he will encounter in the last times (2 Tim 3:2-5), and a list of virtues is included to remind him of the way in which his mentor, Paul, conducted his life (2 Tim 3:10).

2. The Background of Paul's Ethical Lists.

Writing in 1932 B. S. Easton said: "It is now generally recognized that the catalogs of virtues and vices in the New Testament are derived ultimately from the ethical teaching of the Stoa." He also noted that such lists were fairly abundant in Hellenistic Jewish literature (esp. Philo). If this was the case, then the Pauline lists could be influenced by Stoicism directly or through Hellenistic Judaism.

In more recent times other suggestions have been put forward. Wibbing notes similarities between the NT lists and those found in the Qumran* literature (esp. 1QS), though he admits that there are features of the Pauline lists which distinguish them from the Jewish lists, including those of Qumran.

Kamlah divides Paul's virtue and vice lists into two categories, the paraenetic catalogs (e.g., Col 2:20—3:17) having a background in the Hellenistic syncretism of the mystery religions, and the descriptive catalogs (e.g., Gal 5:19-23) having, he claims, a background in ancient Iranian religion. However, the dualistic cosmology of ancient Iranian religion has no place in the Pauline understanding of virtues and vices (nor in ethical teaching of other Christian or Jewish writings).

Martin, following Schroeder, argues for a return to the OT-Jewish tradition as the preferred background for Paul's lists of vices and virtues.

2.1. Paul's Lists of Vices. Paul's lists resemble, in some cases, those developed in Hellenistic Judaism to depict the depravity of the Gentile world (cf., e.g., Rom 1:29-31; Wis 14:25-26). These lists had a regular form in which idolatry* is seen as the root cause of many other vices. Paul appears sometimes to include such lists without much adaptation to the context (e.g., 1 Cor 6:9-10). On other occasions his lists are adapted (to a lesser or greater extent) to the context (Gal 5:19-21; Eph 4:25-32; 5:3-5; Col 3:5, 8).

2.2. Paul's Lists of Virtues. Unlike his vice lists, Paul's lists of virtues have very few parallels in Hellenistic Judaism, but have significant parallels in Greek literature. Dibelius notes that the virtues required of a bishop in 1 Timothy 3:2-7 closely parallel those the tactician Onosander set down for a general. Other lists in the Pauline letters reveal greater selection and adaptation. In 1 Timothy 6:11 the Christian virtues of faith* and love* are introduced, and in 2 Corinthians 6:8 there is clear adaptation to describe the nature of Paul's ministry.* The lists in Galatians 5:22-23 and Colossians 3:12-14 are heavily influenced by typically Christian virtues.

2.3. Significance of the Parallels for Exegesis. If it is true that the lists of virtues and vices in the Pauline corpus are influenced to greater or lesser extent by similar lists in other literature, and if such lists have sometimes been incorporated with little adaptation to their context within his letters, then care will need to be taken not to overinterpret such lists, especially some of the vice lists, as if they were intended to be accurate descriptions of the conduct of those to whom they refer.

See also ETHICS; FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT; HOUSEHOLDS AND HOUSEHOLD CODES; NEW NATURE AND OLD NATURE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. E. Crouch, The Origin and Intention of the Colossian Haustafel (FRLANT 109; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1972); M. Dibelius and H. Conzelmann, The Pastoral Epistles (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1972); B. S. Easton, "New Testament Ethical Lists," JBL 51 (1932) 1-12; E. Kamlah, Die Form der katalogischen Paränese im Neuen Testament (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1964); R. P. Martin, "Virtue," NIDNTT 3.928-32; D. Schroeder, "Lists, Ethical," IDB Supplementary Volume (1976) 546-47; E. Schweizer, "Traditional Ethical Patterns in the Pauline and Post-Pauline Letters and Their Development," in Text and Interpretation, ed. E. Best and R. McL. Wilson (Cambridge: University Press, 1979) 195-209; S. Wibbing, Die Tugend—und Lasterkataloge in Neuen Testament und ihre Traditionsgeschichte unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der Qumran-Texte (BZNW 25; Berlin: Töpelmann, 1959).

C. G. Kruse

VISIONS, ECSTATIC EXPERIENCE

While Paul undoubtedly had visionary experiences, he rarely mentioned them. Greek has two terms for "vision," optasia and horama. Optasia is found only once in Paul's letters (2 Cor 12:1) and horama is not found at all. Apokalypsis, "revelation," and apokalyptō, "to reveal," are more frequent, but only occasionally do they contain a visionary component. Consequently it is difficult to describe the content of Paul's visions or to fix the role they played in his personal piety. While his own call to ministry* came in visionary form (Gal 1:11-12, 16), he plainly rejected visions as a criterion of apostolic authority* (2 Cor 12:12; see Apostle).

1. Pauline Visions in Acts
2. Paul's Own View
3. The Journey to Heaven in 2 Corinthians 12:1-4

1. Pauline Visions in Acts.

In the narrative of Acts Paul's Damascus Road experience is described three times (Acts 9:1-9; 22:6-11; 26:13-19); in two of these instances Paul himself describes the event, and elsewhere in Acts Paul is described as a man encouraged, driven and guided by ecstatic or vision-like experiences (Acts 9:12; 16:9-10; 18:9-11; 22:17-21; 23:11; 27:23-24). It is important to understand these reports in their connection with Luke's theological agenda, which was different from Paul's.

2. Paul's Own View.

Paul's own attitude toward visions can be contrasted with that of Luke. Luke emphasized the visions as part of his apologetic for the Gentile* mission*: this can only be the work of God and so visions corroborate the Pauline ministry in its call and fulfillment. Paul defends the Gentile mission and his role within it on the grounds that the Word has been proclaimed and the church established (2 Cor 3:2-3; 12:12; Rom 15:18-20). Ecstatic experiences are of value only to the extent that they carry forward that work (1 Cor 14:26, 30-33). For this reason they assume a secondary role in Paul's understanding of ministry.

Paul is willing to mention visions when he comes under attack, though always with reticence. In Galatians 1:12, 16; 2:2 he mentions revelations in response to the accusation that he lacked proper credentials from Jerusalem* (saying, in effect, "my commission came from the Lord"). In 2 Corinthians 12:1-4, he shifted the emphasis by creating an ironic parody of the claims being made by the "superlative apostles" whose representatives opposed his work; Paul is respectful to the leaders, if condemnatory of those who claimed to be their representatives (2 Cor 11:5, 13-15; 12:11; see Opponents). In that context, Paul claims an "abundance of revelations" (2 Cor 12:7). Chief among these is the journey to heaven* (harpagenta . . . heōs tritou ouranou) in 2 Corinthians 12:1-4.

3. The Journey to Heaven in 2 Corinthians 12:1-4.

It is generally agreed that the experience described in 2 Corinthians 12 is not the same as the Damascus Road experience of Acts; the dates do not match, and the Acts account was a commission to preach (Acts 26:16), whereas the 2 Corinthians 12 account contained a prohibition against speaking (2 Cor 12:4). A number of questions remain, including the relationship of the passage to its context, the nature of the attack brought against Paul, possible parallels in rabbinic Judaism of rabbis caught up to paradise (see Heaven, Heavenlies, Paradise), the cosmology of the heavens, the nature of the "thorn in the flesh" with which the vision is associated and the significance of vision as accreditation for ministry.

3.1. Context. This pericope falls in the middle of Paul's "fool's speech," 2 Corinthians 10—13, in which he answers specific challenges brought by opponents in Corinth. When we find him boasting of the revelations in 2 Corinthians 12:1-10, then, it must be in response to charges of inadequate spirituality* on his part. This charge would have made sense to the Corinthians, whose tastes ran toward the charismatic and who had seen little evidence of this in Paul's ministry. Whatever the date of 2 Corinthians 10—13, the vision Paul describes as having taken place fourteen years earlier (2 Cor 12:2) must have occurred prior to his founding the Corinthian church, yet Paul had never mentioned it to them despite their hunger for the visionary.

3.2. Literary Antecedents and Cosmology. Paul does not feed the Corinthians' appetites. His clear reticence about disclosing the details of his vision (2 Cor 12:2-4) leaves enormous room for speculation, of which the apocryphal* Apocalypse of Paul is a prime example. The idea of a heavenly ascent is widely found in ancient literature, both Jewish and Greek. The cosmology here is Jewish (see World, Cosmology). Mention of a "third heaven" (2 Cor 12:2) parallels 2 Enoch 8:1-8 and the Apocalypse of Moses 40:2. Many interpreters and commentators adduce parallels in Jewish Merkabah mysticism* (e.g., Bowker, Young, Segal).

3.3. The Thorn in the Flesh. The nature of Paul's thorn in the flesh remains unclear (see Healing, Illness). R. Price argues that in the Merkabah traditions, unworthy visitors to the throne of God* are buffeted by angels,* and that this is the reason for the language in 2 Corinthians 12:7 of a "messenger of Satan, sent to harass" Paul. Whatever its nature, Paul uses the thorn to repel any hint of self-aggrandizement. This is consistent with his ironic "refusal" to boast in his visions and his insistence that visions do not constitute a legitimate criterion for apostolic authority (see Healing).

3.4. The Rhetorical Structure. The tone of the entire fool's speech is clearly ironic (see Spencer), and some interpreters go so far as to say that it is derisive. Paul claims he will not boast, then does exactly that. He criticizes his opponents for measuring themselves against one another (2 Cor 12:12), then measures them against himself. The effect would be a kind of inverted understatement, were it not for Paul's obvious indignation (cf. 2 Cor 10:1 with 10:10). C. Forbes relates this to Hellenistic rhetorical* practice: one may use irony to attack an opponent, but not in self-defense. Here Paul is on the attack; he does not intend merely to defend his own authority, but to challenge theirs. The ironic tenor of the entire fool's speech parodies the claims the "superlative apostles" or their representatives are making on their behalf.

3.5. Visions and the Qualifications for Ministry. By repelling any self-aggrandizement, Paul calls attention to the error into which his opponents have fallen: he can match them point for point, but these are the wrong points. To secure that position, he offers his "defense" with great reluctance (we may note here the third person singular [2 Cor 12:2-5a]; the repeated recourse to apologies in 2 Cor 11:30-33; 12:1, 5 and 6; and the counterbalancing emphasis on humiliation, suffering and weakness* [2 Cor 11:32-33; 12:7-9, 10] typified in the crucified [2 Cor 13:1-4]). In the end, it is these limitations, and not visions, which represent the proper credentials for ministry.

See also APOSTLE; CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE; HEAVEN, HEAVENLIES, PARADISE; JEW, PAUL THE; MYSTICISM; WEAKNESS; WORLD, COSMOLOGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. W. Baird, "Visions, Revelation, and Ministry: Reflections on 2 Corinthians 12:1-5 and Galatians 1:11-17," JBL 104 (1985) 651-62; E. Benz, Paulus als Visionäer (Wiesbaden: Steiner, 1952); H. D. Betz, Paul's Apology: II Corinthians 10—13 and the Socratic Tradition (Berkeley: Center for Hermeneutical Studies in Hellenistic and Modern Culture, 1975); J. Bowker, " 'Merkabah' Visions and the Visions of Paul," JSS 16 (1971) 157-73; C. Forbes, "Comparison, Self-Praise and Irony: Paul's Boasting and the Conventions of Hellenistic Rhetoric," NTS 32 (1986) 1-30; A. T. Lincoln, " 'Paul the Visionary': The Setting and Significance of the Rapture to Paradise in II Corinthians xii.1-10," NTS 25 (1979) 206-20; S. E. McClelland, " 'Super-Apostles, Servants of Christ, Servants of Satan': A Response [to M. E. Thrall]," JSNT 14 (1982) 82-87; R. Price, "Punished in Paradise (An Exegetical Theory on 2 Corinthians 12:1-10)," JSNT 7 (1980) 33-40; H. Saake, "Paulus als Ekstatiker: Pneumatologische Beobachtung zu 2 Kor. 12, 1-10," NovT 15 (1973) 152-60; P. Schaefer, "New Testament and Hekhalot Literature: The Journey into Heaven in Paul and in Merkevah Mysticism," JJS 35 (1984) 19-35; A. F. Segal, Paul the Convert: The Apostolate and Apostasy of Saul the Pharisee (New Haven: Yale University, 1990); A. B. Spencer, "The Wise Fool and the Foolish Wise: A Study of Irony in Paul," NovT 23 (1981) 349-60; R. P. Spittler, "The Limits of Ecstacy: An Exegesis of 2 Corinthians 12:1-10," in Current Issues in Biblical and Patristic Interpretations, ed. G. F. Hawthorne (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975) 259-66; B. Young, "The Ascension Motif of 2 Corinthians 12 in Jewish, Christian and Gnostic Texts," GTJ 9 (1988) 73-103.

J. Camery-Hoggatt

VISITS TO JERUSALEM. See CHRONOLOGY OF PAUL; ITINERARIES, TRAVEL PLANS, JOURNEYS, APOSTOLIC PAROUSIA; JERUSALEM.

VOLUNTARY ASSOCIATIONS. See SOCIAL SETTING OF MISSION CHURCHES.

W-Z

WEAK. See ROMANS, LETTER TO THE; STRONG AND WEAK; WEAKNESS.

WEAKNESS

In Pauline literature, the term astheneia ("weakness") plays a distinctive role. In classical Greek usage, in the LXX and in other NT writers, the term almost always has the meaning "illness" or "powerlessness." In Paul, however, the word is developed into a significant theological concept, especially in his major writings: 1 and 2 Corinthians, and Romans. The term astheneia and its cognates (astheneō, asthenēma, asthenēs) occur fifteen times in 1 Corinthians, fourteen times in 2 Corinthians, eight times in Romans, but only seven times in all of Paul's other letters. Weakness as a significant theological motif is developed most fully in the Corinthian correspondence, where Paul argues against certain Jewish-Christian opponents* who boasted of their knowledge and sufficiency compared with Paul's apparent inadequacies. In the face of this opposition, Paul takes up their charges about his "weakness" and turns it to his own purpose of defending his gospel* and ministry.*

1. The Pauline Weakness Motif
2. Weakness, Apostleship and Christian Spirituality

1. The Pauline Weakness Motif.

Paul develops his concept in three basic ways: anthropologically, christologically and ethically.

Anthropologically, weakness presupposes that a person's whole being is dependent upon God* and is subject to the limitations of all creation (1 Cor 2:3). Weakness also involves the inability of human beings to attain God's favor by themselves (1 Cor 9:22).

Christologically,* weakness becomes a badge of honor for the believer "in Christ"* and the platform from which the power* of God is exhibited in the world.* For Paul, human weakness provides the best channel for divine power. The greatest revelation of this occurred in the person and work of Jesus Christ in the midst of his earthly and human existence (1 Cor 1:25—2:6). Paul has become like Christ in that the power of Christ has been revealed in Paul's own weakness (2 Cor 10—13).

Finally, at the ethical level Paul emphasized against his opponents that, due to the priority of love* over knowledge* and gift,* believers must hold their Christian freedom* in check in deference to the sensibilities of weak Christians (1 Cor 8—10). In the service* of Christ there is no place for selfish individualism, no matter how great or impressive one's abilities may be. The weaker members of the church actually are indispensable for the proper functioning of the body, just as the human body is dependent upon its weaker internal organs (heart, lungs), whose only protection is that which the stronger members afford. Hence a failure to help the weak (1 Thess 5:14) is a failure to recognize the mutual dependence of every member of the unity that characterized Christ's body (1 Cor 12:12-13; see Body of Christ).

Paul's concept of weakness is, in sum, markedly theocentric. God depends neither on human strength nor on human achievements, not even in the church. Instead, he seeks out the weak, the ungodly and the hostile to redeem them and to fit them as vessels of his own strength. Weakness is—as the Lord himself had expressed it to Paul—the place where God's power is perfected (2 Cor 12:9). Thus between Christ and the believer there is such an intimate identification in weakness that both can be said to live "by the power of God" (2 Cor 13:4).

2. Weakness, Apostleship and Christian Spirituality.

Paul's view of weakness is not to be understood only as an abstract doctrine, for it was developed in view of actual conditions. In the first place, weakness speaks of the reality of human finiteness and dependence upon God. It is just this that Paul declares when he says he is weak. He can claim no credit for any of his successes, for he knows that he has been sustained by God. If he has achieved anything, it is only because of God's power working through a weak but consecrated vessel (cf. 2 Tim 2:20-21).

Likewise, Paul teaches that God's way of exhibiting power is altogether different from human ways. Men and women try to overcome their weaknesses; God is satisfied to use weakness for his own special purposes. God's means of working, rightly understood, is not by making people stronger, but weaker and weaker, until the divine power alone is seen in them.

Finally, for Paul weakness is the greatest sign of apostleship because it identifies him with his crucified Lord.* By his death* Christ proved that God's weakness was stronger than human strength. This same Christ is now the example Christians are to follow (see Imitation). By living under the cross* of Christ and dying* daily with him, they participate in the weakness of Christ. This identification with their crucified Lord enables them not merely to endure their weaknesses but to glory* in them.

See also AFFLICTIONS, TRIALS, HARDSHIPS; CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE; POWER.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. A. Black, Paul, Apostle of Weakness: Astheneia and its Cognates in the Pauline Literature (New York: Lang, 1984); idem, "Paulus Infirmus: the Pauline Concept of Weakness," GTJ 5 (1984) 77-93; E. Fuchs, "La Faiblesse, Gloire de l'Apostolat Selon Paul (Etude sur 2 Co 10-13)," ETR 2 (1980) 231-53; E. Güttgemanns, Der leidende Apostel und sein Herr (FRLANT 90; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1966); M. Rauer, Die "Schwachen" in Korinth und Rom (Freiburg: Herder, 1923).

D. A. Black

WISDOM

Paul acknowledged that his preaching* was "not in plausible words of wisdom," yet he called his proclamation of the gospel* "wisdom of God" as Christ* himself is "the wisdom of God" (1 Cor 2:1-5, 7; 2 Cor 1:24, 30). Research on wisdom in Paul began with E. Grafe (1892) and since the 1960s (since A. Feuillet) has assumed considerable proportions as a result of increased interest in the wisdom tradition of the OT and early Judaism.

1. Criteria for Determining "Wisdom"
2. Wisdom Material in Paul's Traditions
3. Christology
4. The Gospel
5. Ethics
6. Eschatology

1. Criteria for Determining "Wisdom."

Paul referred to wisdom (sophia) more than any other writer in the NT (forty-four of the seventy-one occurrences). The notion of wisdom is not restricted to the occurrence of the term wisdom, however.

Equivalents which constitute the semantic field "wisdom" (Heb ḥokmâ, ḥāḵām; Gk sophia, sophos) include synesis ("what is understood," "understanding," "insight," "intelligence"); phronēsis ("thoughtful planning," "way of thinking," "outlook," "capacity to understand," "wisdom"), epistēmē ("ability to understand and evaluate," "intelligence," "understanding"), gnōsis ("information," "acquaintance," "the content of what is known," "knowledge," "perception," "understanding"; see Gnosis), aisthēsis ("capacity to perceive clearly and hence to understand"), boulē ("plan," "intention," "purpose"), paideia ("instruction with the intent of forming proper habits of behavior," "training in accordance with proper rules of conduct and behavior," "discipline"), with additional words appearing in close syntactical relationship with "wisdom," such as "teaching"* (didaskō/didachē/didaskalia, katēcheō, noutheteō, paradidōmi, paralambanō, paradosis), "prudence" (sōphrosynē, sophos), "plan" (thelō/thelēma, protithemai/prothesis, gnomē), "advice" (symbouleuō, paraineō, symbibazō), "perception" (figurative horaō/ophthalmos; noeō, syniēmi/synesis) and "success" (euodoomai, teleō/teleioō, plēroō, plērophoreō, ōpheleō).

The actual meaning of wisdom in the context of the OT and early Judaism can be divided into the three aspects of thought, discourse and action (von Lips):

(1) Thought. There is the act of perceiving wisdom with the focus on the acquisition of knowledge* and on the comprehension of life and reality. This includes psychological observations as well as observations on attitudes and frame of mind; human relations including charity, peaceableness, retaliation and slander; social affairs such as kingship, family and clan, legal and economic matters including wealth and poverty; observations on the conditionality of man and woman as God's creation as evident, for instance, in their mortality; the position of other nations; animate and inanimate nature, and orders of creation.

(2) Discourse. Wisdom is communicated with the focus on teaching, exhortation and evaluation of conduct. Besides experience and God's revelation which convey wisdom, teaching and education are the other major means for acquiring wisdom (Prov 13:20; 19:20; 23:19; Job 33:33; Wis 6:10; Sir 6:18; 39:1).

(3) Action. Wisdom can be viewed as action-related with the focus on conduct as a consequence of right perception, proper behavior in everyday life and capable workmanship. The sages often emphasize the mastering of the tongue, the ability to remain silent at the proper time, self-control in everyday life (restraint versus anger, humility versus pride, moderation in drinking, sexual ethics), prudence in everyday behavior (industry versus laziness, avoidance of evil) and familial solidarity. Thus wisdom has been defined as "the reasoned search for specific ways to assure well-being and the implementation of those discoveries in daily existence" (Crenshaw).

A remarkable element of the sapiential tradition is the personification of wisdom (Prov 8; Job 28; Sir 24; Wis 8—9), particularly its function as mediator of creation. Wisdom is the first creation or firstborn (Prov 8:22-31); wisdom was created "from eternity, in the beginning" (Sir 24:9); wisdom was present when God made the world (Prov 8:27-30; Wis 9:9); God founded the earth by wisdom (Prov 3:19; 8:30); wisdom is an "initiate in the knowledge of God and an associate in his works" (Wis 8:4). Scholars used to regard this wisdom figure as an instance of a hypostasis, the ascription of material or spiritual existence to a concept. More recently it has been argued that this divine wisdom, sometimes called Dame Wisdom, must not be understood as an intermediary being between God and creation, since wisdom is not given the status of an independent entity. The wisdom "from above" is rather a vivid poetic personification expressing God's nearness, God's acts and God's personal call.

In considering the question of wisdom influence in Paul, there are four lines of investigation: (1) the direct quotations from OT and early Jewish wisdom literature, recognizing that allusions to traditional wisdom texts do not automatically constitute sapiential influence and that connections with wisdom thinking need to be determined on the basis of the relevant contexts; (2) the use of genres which derive from the sapiential tradition, bearing in mind that detection of "sapiential style" is problematic on account of imprecise definitions; (3) the religion-historical analysis of sapiential terminology, themes, motifs and concepts; and (4) the tradition-historical analysis of the origins and communication of sapiential tradition.

2. Wisdom Material in Paul's Traditions.

2.1. OT Wisdom. Canonical wisdom texts include Proverbs, Job, Qohelet, certain Psalms (e.g., Ps 37; 39; 49; 73) and the wisdom influence which has been detected in Isaiah (cf. Is 9:6; 11:2, 9; 28:23-29; 31:2), Amos, Micah, 2 Samuel and 1 Kings (the succession narrative), Genesis (the Joseph narrative) and in other books. Wisdom genres or forms include hymns, dialogues, proverbs, riddles, admonitions, allegories, noun lists, didactic narratives and autobiographical narratives.

Paul quotes from Job (Rom 11:35; 1 Cor 3:19), wisdom psalms (2 Cor 9:9), Proverbs (Rom 2:6; 12:20; 2 Cor 9:7) and Qohelet (Rom 3:10; see Old Testament in Paul). As to wisdom genres, Paul employs proverbs and aphorisms (e.g., Gal 4:16, 18; 5:9; 6:7) as well as admonitions (e.g., Rom 12—13), then also allegory/parable (Rom 5:12-21; Gal 4:22-31), instructional discourse (e.g., Rom 7:7-25; 13:1-7; 1 Cor 10:1-13), instructional hymns* (the Christ hymns of Phil 2:6-11 and Col 1:15-18), dialogue (Rom), lists (vices, virtues,* household* codes, gifts* of the Spirit, fruit* of the Spirit and beatitudes (Rom 4:6-8; 14:22; 1 Cor 7:40).

The semantic field of "wisdom" can be observed in diverse contexts in most of Paul's letters: in sapiential perception (Rom 1:14; 11:33; 1 Cor 1:19, 21; 2:6, 8; 2 Cor 11—12; Col 1:9; 2:3), in communicative wisdom (1 Cor 1:17; 2:1, 4, 6, 13; 6:5; 12:8; Col 1:28; 3:16; 4:5-6; 2 Tim 3:15) and in action-related wisdom (Rom 16:19; 1 Cor 1:30; 3:10; Eph 5:15-20; Col 1:9-11; 3:16; 4:5).

2.2. Early Jewish Wisdom. Early Jewish wisdom texts include Baruch (3:9—4:4), Sirach and the Wisdom of Solomon, and numerous passages in the apocalyptic and Qumran literature as well as in Philo.

As to quotations from wisdom in Paul's letters, 2 Timothy 2:19 has been considered (Sir 17:26). Allusions are more numerous: Nestle-Aland (NA^{26}, 769-74) detects twenty-six allusions to Sirach, three to Baruch, thirteen to the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, forty to Wisdom of Solomon (besides seven in the Areopagus speech of Acts 17:22-31; see Athens) and allusions to other Jewish writings which show sapiential influence.

2.3. Sapiential Motifs. Wisdom themes are numerous in the Pauline letters, encompassing various areas of life and cosmos, from phenomena of creation to human individuals in their personal behavior and their interpersonal and social relationships.

Examples from Romans are: Romans 1:19-21 (self-revelation of creation); Romans 1:21-25 (misguided perception of God from creation, with idolatry and immorality as consequence); Romans 2:6 (retribution after deed): Romans 2:14-15 (perception of God's will with the conscience*); Romans 5:3-5 (chain reasoning); Romans 10:6-7 (word/wisdom is near); Romans 11:33-36 (praise of God's wisdom); Romans 12:3, 16 (sober judgment versus conceit); Romans 12:8 (charity); Romans 12:10 (admonition to show honor); Romans 12:11 (warning against indolence); Romans 12:12 (virtue of perseverance); Romans 12:13 (hospitality); Romans 12:15 (sharing joy* and sorrow with others); Romans 12:17-20 and 14:19 (endeavor to live peaceably); Romans 13:1-7 (respect for political power, social structures; see Civil Authority).

2.4. Dualistic Wisdom? The contrast of flesh* and Spirit (see Holy Spirit) which determines the existence of humanity before God (Rom 7:7-25; 1 Cor 15:35-58; Gal 5:16-26) has been explained on the background of Jewish-Hellenistic "dualistic" wisdom, as represented by Philo (Brandenburger). The fundamental conception of Philo, the dualism of God* and the world,* is seen to be the basis of his anthropology and ethics: the human spirit is a divine effluence, as God has breathed his spirit into humankind (Philo Det. Pot. Ins. 22); the human body is the prison in which the divine spirit is confined, it is the source of all evil (Philo Leg. All. 3.14); sin is innate in humankind as all sensuality is evil (Philo Vit. Mos. 2.29). The highest ethical principle is the radical renunciation of sensuality, the determined eradication of desire and passion. These bear obvious affinities to Stoic ethics.

It is being questioned, however, whether it is helpful to explain basic elements of Paul's anthropology on the background of the Jewish-Hellenistic "dualistic" wisdom of Philo (von Lips): (1) the Jewish sapiential tradition includes dualistic elements of an entirely different character as well (cf. the teaching about the two spirits in the T. 12 Patr.); (2) the contrast of flesh and Spirit implies conceptions of diverse provenance, including, for example, an interpretation of Genesis 1—2; (3) the assumed reconstruction of the origins of the dualism in Jewish wisdom is problematic; (4) Paul can encompass a variety of sapiential elements (cf. 1 Cor 1—2) which cannot be subsumed under the label "dualistic wisdom." Thus Paul's anthropology should not be analyzed in terms of dualistic wisdom.

2.5. The Jesus Tradition. The link between the wisdom tradition and Paul is not only a direct one; it was mediated through the sayings of Jesus as well (see Jesus, Sayings of; Jesus and Paul). This is apparent in the quotation of the dominical saying of Acts 20:35 (cf. Lk 6:30), which adapts a Greek proverb (Thucydides 2.97.4; Plutarchus 2.173d). Some Pauline admonitions which are also known in the sapiential tradition (T. Jos. 18:2; T. Benj. 3:6; Prov 3:4; T. Benj. 5:1) can be seen, likewise, as influenced by sayings of Jesus: the admonition to bless rather than to curse one's enemies (Rom 12:14; cf. Lk 6:28), the admonition to repay evil with good (Rom 12:17-21; cf. Mt 5:38-42) and the admonition to live in peace* with all if possible (Rom 12:18; cf. Mt 5:9; Mk 9:50).

3. Christology.

Jesus himself described his mission, if not his person, in terms of traditional divine wisdom: entrusted with the secrets of God, revealing them to humanity and being rejected by many but accepted by the poor and the unlearned (Mt 11:19 par.; 11:25-30 par.). Thus it is not surprising (Hengel, Gese) to see Paul articulating the significance of the person and the mission of Jesus Christ in terms of wisdom (acknowledged since the work of Windisch).

It is not impossible to surmise that Paul arrived at this identification of divine wisdom and Jesus Christ as a result of the Damascus revelation at his conversion (see Conversion and Call): as he saw Jesus as the Lord* exalted by God and sitting at the right hand (see Exaltation), he came to realize that Jesus was the Son of God (see Son of God) not only in the messianic sense but in the sense of standing in an intimate relationship with God from the beginning, being the image of God and his agent in creation* and now in salvation* (Kim).

3.1. Christ and Wisdom in 1 Corinthians 1—4. These chapters have the highest concentration of the word group sophia/sophos in the Pauline corpus (twenty-six occurrences). It is only here that Christ is explicitly called sophia (1 Cor 1:24, 30). Paul's formulation is not a polemical reaction against a gnostic sophia christology (Wilckens; see Gnosis, Gnosticism) nor a reaction against a Torah-centristic wisdom teaching in Corinth (Davis; see Corinthians), but should probably be understood in the context of his discussion with supporters of Jewish-Hellenistic wisdom speculation (Wilckens 1980). Whether Paul's wisdom language reflects the vocabulary and conceptuality of his opponents* or whether it is independently chosen is unclear.

In order to preserve the threatened unity of the church* (1 Cor 1:10-13), Paul established that the formation of inner-church groupings had no basis in his ministry as founder of the church nor in the gospel as such. He had baptized only a few of the Corinthians (1 Cor 1:14-17; see Baptism), and his teaching was not worldly wisdom teaching where one teacher may be superior to the other. On the contrary, he had promulgated the gospel (1 Cor 1:18—2:16)—proclaimed by himself and his fellow apostles* who were nothing but servants* of Christ responsible to God (1 Cor 3—4). Paul emphasized the dissimilarity between the word of the cross and "wisdom of speech" (1 Cor 1:17; see Cross, Theology of the) which is the "wisdom of the world" (1 Cor 1:20), "human wisdom" (1 Cor 2:5), the "wisdom of this age," which is the wisdom of the earthly "rulers of this age" (1 Cor 2:6)—mere "human wisdom" (1 Cor 2:13).

If the gospel is combined with such wisdom, it is emptied of its power* (1 Cor 1:17). Human wisdom, whether it be rhetorical skill (see Rhetoric) or human understanding as speculative grasp of reality, invalidates the cross of Christ since it understands Christ's death merely as a symbol of a universal truth or a transition stage in the drama of salvation. Thus Christ's death is stripped of its uniqueness and therefore of its effectiveness (Weder). A christology in which the cross, on account of a sapiential matrix, is not central lacks the fundamental reference to history. It loses the climax of salvation history, the revelation of the mystery* of God (1 Cor 2:1, 7-10). In the logic of human wisdom the cross of Christ is foolishness (1 Cor 1:18), but in reality the apparent weakness* of God is a demonstration of his power (1 Cor 1:24-25).

On a positive note Paul used the formulation "wisdom of God" to describe Christ and God's plan of salvation in Christ. God in his wisdom so arranged things that he cannot be grasped through human wisdom (1 Cor 1:21). A God derived by human wisdom is a source of pride and becomes God only for the elite and the deserving (Fee). The wisdom of God has become personified in Christ who is, for humanity, "the wisdom of God" (1 Cor 1:24) and "the wisdom from God" (1 Cor 1:30). The crucified Christ is the embodiment of God's plan of salvation, the true measure and the climactic expression of God's wisdom and power (Dunn). Therefore, the message of the gospel is "God's wisdom" (1 Cor 2:7), divine wisdom derived from the Creator whose previously hidden plan of salvation has become reality through the crucifixion* (1 Cor 2:8). Thus the proclamation of the gospel of Christ who is God's wisdom has the power to lead to faith* and the bestowal of the gift of the Spirit (1 Cor 2:4-5; see Holy Spirit).

3.2. Christ and Attributes of Wisdom. Paul transfers to Christ attributes of Wisdom which speak of her being and nature. We notice this transfer in the Christ hymns in Philippians 2:6-11 and Colossians 1:15-20 where Jewish wisdom theology has been recognized as part of the hermeneutical context (cf. Prov 8:22-25; Sir 1:4; 24:9; Wis 7:26; 9:4, 9-10).

The designation of Christ as being "in the form of God" and "being equal to God" (Phil 2:6) draws upon the thought of Wisdom being near to God, sharing in God's nature and existing before creation. The pattern of humiliation-exaltation and the concept of preexistence* is reminiscent of the Wisdom of Solomon (cf. Wis 2:12-20; 5:1-6; 6:18-19; 9:4-10).

The description of Christ as "the image* of the invisible God," "the first born* of all creation," "the beginning" and dwelling place of "all the fullness*" (Col 1:15, 18, 19) also takes up attributes of personified Wisdom: the Son is the manifestation of God in creation, he enjoys precedence in both rank and existence over creation, he is the effective presence of the divine power of creation, and he is the perfect manifestation of the attributes and activities of God.

3.3. Christ and the Functions of Wisdom. Along with the attributes of wisdom Paul also transferred functions of wisdom to Christ when he describes his work. With the confession that Jesus Christ is Lord "through whom are all things and through whom we exist" (1 Cor 8:6), Paul stressed his conviction that Christ is the mediator of both creation and salvation (as the new creation). In Jewish wisdom theology divine wisdom was described as mediating creation (Prov 8:27, 30; Wis 7:12, 22; 9:9; 14:2) and as having a soteriological role (cf. Sir 24:8-12; Wis 10:15-21).

Paul's midrash on the exodus tradition in 1 Corinthians 10:1-4 draws decisively on the wisdom literature and Philo (see Old Testament in Paul). In Wisdom 10:17-18; 11:4 the cloud which guided the Israelites in the wilderness was identified with sophia. Philo equated the rock from which they drank with sophia (and the Logos; Philo Det. Pot Ins. 115-118), and the spiritual interpretation of bread and water as gifts of wisdom is also sapiential (Prov 9:1-6; Sir 15:3). Thus the statement "they drank from the supernatural rock which followed them, and the rock was Christ" (1 Cor 10:4) implies that Christ is pre-existent and that Christ is understood in terms of divine wisdom both as mediator of God's life-giving salvation and revelation in the history of Israel.

The function of wisdom as mediator of creation and God's "master workman" (Prov 8:27-30; Sir 1:4; 24:9; 43:26; Philo Rer. Div. Her. 189, 199; Fug. 112; Quaest. in Gen. 2.118) was transferred to Christ in Colossians 1:16: "In him all things were created," that is, Christ is the sphere within which the work of creation takes place; "all things were created through him," that is, Christ is the instrument of creation; "all things were created for him," that is, Christ is the goal of creation and therefore of history (cf. Eph 1:10; see Creation and New Creation).

3.4. Pre-existence and Wisdom. Paul speaks of Jesus Christ as pre-existent (see Pre-existence) and as savior.* The link between pre-existence (Habermann) and the work of salvation becomes understandable on the background of the wisdom tradition.

3.4.1. Mediator of Creation and Salvation. The preexistent Christ is the mediator of creation and the incarnated Christ is the mediator of salvation (1 Cor 8:6; Col 1:15-20). This correlation of creation and salvation resumes the cosmological foundation of salvation in part of the wisdom tradition. The Christ hymn in Colossians 1 is particularly relevant: just as wisdom had been described as "image of God" (Wis 7:26; Philo Leg. All. 1.43), Paul calls Christ "the image of the invisible God" (Col 1:15; see Image); as wisdom was first creation, or "firstborn"* (Prov 8:22-29; Sir 1:4; 24:9; Wis 9:9; Philo Quaest. in Gen. 4.97; Virt. 62), Paul calls Christ "the firstborn of all creation" (Col 1:15); as wisdom was God's creative power in the creation of the world (Prov 8:27-30; Sir 1:4; 24:9; 43:26; Philo Rer. Div. Her. 189, 199; Fug. 112), Paul emphasizes that "in him all things were created" (Col 1:16) and "in him all things hold together" (Col 1:17). And Christ is the plerōma, the cosmic presence of God (Col 1:19; cf. Prov 8:12-14; Bar 3:38; Sir 24:4-11; see Fullness).

The objections of J. D. G. Dunn to the view that Paul's christological assertions in Colossians 1 presuppose pre-existence run contrary to the evidence. Whether we take the prepositional phrase "in him" (en autō) in an instrumental sense (cf. the similar constructions with dia in Col 1:16, and compare 1 Cor 8:6 and Jn 1:3; see Lohse) or in a broader sense as indicating the "sphere" within which the work of creation took place (Bruce), Paul asserts in Colossians 1:16a that the act of creation (aorist ektisthē) depended causally on Christ—an assertion which does not make sense if Christ was not present at creation.

3.4.2. Incarnation. The pre-existent Christ humbled himself by becoming human (Phil 2:6-11). The notion of incarnation may find a point of contact with the wisdom tradition in the Similitudes of Enoch (1 Enoch 48:1-7) where the messianic Son of Man, who is given traits of the pre-existent Wisdom, is said to establish God's kingly rule on earth (Schimanowski).

3.4.3. Sending. The notion of the sending of the Son into the world (Gal 4:4-5; Rom 8:3-4) is compared to the wisdom motif of God sending pre-existent Wisdom from the throne of his glory* (Schweizer). In Wisdom 9:10 the writer calls for wisdom to be sent forth (exaposteilon) "from the holy heavens" and correlates the giving of wisdom with the sending of the Holy Spirit "from on high" (Wis 9:17). Paul uses exapostellō only in Galatians 4:4, 6 where we also find the sending of the Son linked with the sending of the Spirit. As Wisdom 9:10 describes Wisdom dwelling with God before creation, so Paul obviously presupposes the existence of the Son in God's presence before his coming into the world.

3.5. Christ, Wisdom and the Law. It has been suggested that the identification of Jesus with pre-existent Wisdom as mediator of salvation replaced the traditional identification of Law* and wisdom (Merklein).

On the basis of the theology of Deuteronomy (cf. Deut 4:6-8; 30:11-14; 33:14) and certain wisdom psalms (Ps 1; 19; 119) the early Jewish wisdom tradition identified Law (Torah) and wisdom. Ben Sira, Torah scholar and wisdom teacher, formulated and implied this correlation repeatedly (e.g., Sir 15:1; 17:11; 19:20; 21:11; 24:23). Law and Wisdom are one in that they are both God's gift to Israel. The objective of both Law and wisdom is submission to God's will, both summarized in the concept of the "fear* of the Lord." Those who keep the commandments practice wisdom, and the sages obey the Law. Both Law and wisdom focus on leading the individual and the nation to a pious and successful life in the presence of God in the context of the world created by him. Both Law and wisdom reveal the will of God for humanity, and both are compared with light which gives orientation (Sir 24:32; 45:17). The scribe as sōpēr ("scholar") and ḥākām ("wise man") studies and teaches both the Law and the wisdom traditions (Sir 38:34—39:3).

It seems unlikely, however, that Paul's identification of Jesus Christ with Wisdom, thus establishing Christ's pre-existence, was derived from the traditional Jewish correlation of Law and wisdom. Paul never describes Christ in terms of Law (notice how he eliminates all references to the Torah when he uses Deuteronomy 30:12-14 to describe the presence of Christ in Romans 10:6-8). Rather, Paul describes and defines the Law in terms of Christ: the Law comes under the rule of Christ (Gal 6:2; 1 Cor 9:21; cf. Rom 3:27; 8:2). Paul apparently sought to avoid the misunderstanding that Christ, as the embodiment of God's will, brought a new Torah which humans must fulfill, replacing the old Torah. As Christ has fulfilled the Torah in his death and resurrection* "for us," the soteriological function of Torah (cf. the sacrifices) as a way to righteousness* has come to an end. Since Paul asserted that the Torah has lost all salvific significance with the death and the resurrection of Christ, it is doubtful that he would have transferred soteriological functions of Torah to Christ and thus have correlated Christ and the Law (Schnabel). It was possible for Paul to transfer functions of divine wisdom to Christ without having to introduce wisdom's correlation with Torah.

4. The Gospel.

4.1. Gospel and Wisdom in Romans 10:6-8. Quoting part of Deuteronomy 30:12-14, where Israel has been told that she does not have to climb up to heaven to discover God's will nor does she need to go beyond the sea or descend into the abyss as God has stooped down to reveal his will in the Law, Paul interpreted the passage by means of the pesher method. Where the quotation speaks about the Law, Paul speaks about Christ. Scholars have observed links between Paul's exegesis and the sapiential motif of the hiddenness of wisdom and of the impossibility of ascending to heaven and coming down (Job 28; Prov 30:4; Bar 3:29-30; Sir 1:3, 6; 24:3-7; 51:19). What Moses* had said of the divine Law and what the Jewish tradition had interpreted in terms of Wisdom, Paul says of Christ. God's Wisdom is no longer exclusively accessible in the Torah since the gospel, the goal of the Torah, is now universally available by faith in Christ. Although Christ is not present on earth, he is far from hidden or unattainable; he is present in the proclamation of the gospel of righteousness by faith.

4.2. The Revelation Scheme. Paul's theme of the mystery* of God which was formerly hidden but has now been revealed in the gospel of Jesus Christ (1 Cor 2:6-14; Eph 3:4-11; Col 1:26-27; Rom 16:25-26; 2 Tim 1:9-11; Tit 1:2-3) has affinities with the sapiential conception of the hiddenness of wisdom which is revealed in the Law (Wolter).

5. Ethics.

Because wisdom deals with the comprehension of life and reality, with exhortation and with proper behavior in everyday life, it is not surprising to observe the presence of the sapiential tradition in the ethics* of Paul.

5.1. Lists and House-Tables. Both the lists, or "catalogs," of vices and virtues (Rom 1:29-32; 1 Cor 5:9-11; 6:9-10; 2 Cor 12:20; Gal 5:19-21, 22-23; Eph 5:5; Phil 4:8; Col 3:5, 8, 12; 1 Tim 3:1-13; Tit 1:5-9; see Virtues and Vices) and the household codes, or Haustafeln (Eph 5:21—6:9; Col 3:18—4:1; 1 Tim 2:8-15; 6:1-2; Tit 2:1-10; see Households and Household Codes), have been compared with similar forms and concepts in the OT and early Jewish (Hellenistic) wisdom tradition (cf. Prov 6:17-18; Wis 14:23-26; Sir 7:18-28). The links with wisdom are evident in those areas where Paul characterizes specific behavior which is not covered by the commandments of the Decalog.

The lists of hardships, or peristaseis catalogs (1 Cor 4:9-13; 2 Cor 4:8-9; 6:4-10; 11:23-28; 12:10; cf. Rom 8:35-39; Phil 4:11-12; 2 Tim 3:11; see Afflictions, Trials, Hardships), share features found in similar lists of vicissitudes in the Greek tradition, particularly in Stoicism, where the true sage is the suffering sage, established as such by his endurance. These lists aim at magnifying the sage's endurance (askēsis) and serenity (ataraxia), proving that he is a sophos who cannot be prevented from acting virtuously by even the most dire calamities. Paul's peristaseis catalogues, at least in 2 Corinthians, appear to have a similar revelatory function: the hardships, which are attributed to God, show that he is a true apostle* and a person of proven integrity (2 Cor 6:4). However, his self-commendation by means of listing his hardships is far removed from egocentric boasting which sees endurance as a demonstration of one's own strength. When Paul boasts of his hardships he "boasts in the Lord" (1 Cor 1:31), as they provide the occasion for demonstrating the power of God (Fitzgerald).

5.2. Individual Exhortations. Paul's ethical exhortation shares numerous elements with the wisdom tradition, both in form (substantiated admonitions, e.g., 1 Thess 4:11-12; 2 Cor 13:11; Col 4:3-4; Phil 4:5; series of short, unsubstantiated admonitions: Rom 12:9-21; Gal 5:25—6:10; Phil 4:4-9; 1 Thess 4:1-12; Col 4:2-6; Eph 5:15-20) and in content.

5.3. Orientation for Living. Paul's ethics can be described in terms of the horizon of the traditional early Jewish correlation of Law and wisdom being fused with the horizon of God's salvific action in and through Jesus Christ. The Christian is called and enabled to submit to God's will as revealed in the Law, in the words of Jesus Christ and in the pronouncements of the apostles. At the same time he has the responsibility to realize God's will in the diverse situations of everyday life (Schnabel). This responsibility, as it is observed in Paul's letters, shares many links with wisdom theology (cf. Rom 16:19; Phil 1:9-10) as well as with Stoicism.

The affinities with Stoic ethics (e.g., the appeal to reason in Rom 12:2; 14:5; autarkeia/autarkēs in 1 Tim 6:6; Phil 4:11) are due both to Paul's cognizance of contemporary Hellenistic ethics as well as to the Hellenistic influences in contemporary Judaism (cf. Wisdom of Solomon, Aristobulos, 4 Maccabees, Philo). Such parallels must not obscure the fact that the basic structures of Stoic ethics (see Philosophy) are utterly distinct from Paul's ethics: Stoic ethics was fundamentally rationalistic, viewing humankind as the ultimate measure of morality, and pursuing the ideal of the autonomous and autocratic personality which could arrive at moral perfection in its own strength and on the basis of innate standards.

The following sapiential elements may be examined:

(1) Reference to social conventions, to what is generally accepted, necessary and befitting (Rom 12:2, 9; 13:3; 14:16; 15:2; 1 Cor 11:13; Eph 6:1; Phil 1:10; 4:8; Col 3:18, 20; 1 Thess 5:15; 1 Tim 2:10; Tit 3:8, 14), including consideration for the reaction of outsiders (Rom 14:18; 1 Cor 10:32; 1 Thess 4:12).

(2) The Spirit as guide for right decisions in discerning what is wise behavior in specific circumstances (Col 1:9-10).

(3) Christian love as leading to knowledge and insight in settling questions regarding behavior (1 Cor 3:18; Phil 1:9-10).

(4) Appeal to the cognitive faculties of the believer: reason which perceives what is good and right in specific situations (Rom 12:2; 14:5; 2 Cor 10:5; cf. the verb noutheteō "to put in the right mind, encourage" in Rom 15:14; 1 Cor 4:14; 1 Thess 5:12, 14; etc); discernment as critical choice and a practical testing for what is satisfactory (1 Thess 5:21; Rom 12:2; 14:22-23; Gal 6:2-5; Phil 1:9-11); and reflection on what is the appropriate attitude and action (Phil 4:8).

(5) Appeal to the conscience which is (partially) based in God's universally revealed Law/wisdom (Rom 2:15), which is, among other factors, motivated by God's orders of creation (Rom 13:5) and which functions, apart from being the tribunal which reminds of God's judgment,* as critical self-evaluation and self-judgment as to one's moral conduct (cf. 1 Cor 4:4; 2 Cor 1:12; Rom 13:5).

(6) Admonition with motivation, as Paul does not look for blind obedience but aims at understanding. This links Paul's ethics as apostolic teaching with practical admonition and wisdom (cf. Col 1:28; 3:16).

6. Eschatology.

When Paul discusses Israel's role in God's plan of salvation (Rom 9—11), arguing that when "the full number of the Gentiles" has come in "all Israel will be saved" (Rom 11:25-26; see Israel), his argument shows affinity with both apocalyptic* and sapiential thought. This confluence of apocalyptic and wisdom has been analyzed as enabling Paul to maintain a balanced tension between God's impartial treatment of all and God's faithfulness to Israel (Johnson). The wisdom theme of a potter and two types of vessels shows how God elects with purpose to demonstrate his wrath,* power* and glory* (Rom 9). The sapiential correlation of divine wisdom and Torah helps to show that the gospel as the new locus of God's will is universally available (Rom 10; cf. Rom 3:2). The mystery of Israel's salvation, which is a mystery of God's wisdom (Rom 11:25), leads Paul to a hymn in praise of God's wisdom and glory (Rom 11:33-36).

See also CHRISTOLOGY; ETHICS; FIRSTBORN; GOSPEL; HOUSEHOLDS AND HOUSEHOLD CODES; LAW; PHILOSOPHY; PRE-EXISTENCE; VIRTUES AND VICES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. E. Brandenburger, Fleisch und Geist (WMANT 29; Neukirchen: Neukirchener, 1968); J. L. Crenshaw, Old Testament Wisdom (Atlanta: John Knox, 1981); J. A. Davis, Wisdom and Spirit (Lanham: University Press of America, 1984); J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1980); G. D. Fee, The First Epistle to the Corinthians (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987); A. Feuillet, Le Christ Sagesse de Dieu d'après les Épîtres Pauliniennes (Paris: Gabalda, 1966); J. T. Fitzgerald, Cracks in an Earthen Vessel (SBLDS 99; Atlanta: Scholars, 1988 [1984]); H. Gese, "Die Weisheit, der Menschensohn und die Ursprünge der Christologie als konsequente Entfaltung der biblischen Theologie," SEA 39 (1979) 77-114; J. Habermann, Präexistenzaussagen im Neuen Testament (EHS 23/362; Bern/Frankfurt: Lang, 1990); R. G. Hamerton-Kelly, Pre-existence, Wisdom, and the Son of Man (SNTSMS 21; Cambridge: University Press, 1973); M. Hengel, "Jesus als messianischer Lehrer der Weisheit und die Anfänge der Christologie," in Sagesse et Religion (Paris, 1979) 148-88; E. E. Johnson, The Function of Apocalyptic and Wisdom Traditions in Romans 9-11 (SBLDS 109; Atlanta: Scholars, 1989); S. Kim, The Origin of Paul's Gospel (WUNT 2/4; 2d ed; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1984 [1981]); H. von Lips, Weisheitliche Traditionen im Neuen Testament (WMANT 64; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 1990); J. P. Louw and E. A. Nida, Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament Based on Semantic Domains (2d ed.; New York: United Bible Societies, 1989 [1988]); H. Merklein, "Zur Entstehung der urchristlichen Aussage vom präexistenten Sohn Gottes," in Zur Geschichte des Urchristentums, ed. G. Dautzenberg (Freiburg: Herder, 1979) 33-62; G. von Rad, Wisdom in Israel (Nashville: Abingdon, 1972); G. Schimanowski, Weisheit und Messias (WUNT 2/17; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1985); E. J. Schnabel, Law and Wisdom from Ben Sira to Paul (WUNT 2/16; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1985); E. Schweizer, "Zum religionsgeschichtlichen Hintergrund der 'Sendungsformel' Gal 4.4f., Röm 8.3f., Joh 3.16f., 1Joh 4.9," in Beiträge zur Theologie des Neuen Testaments (Zürich: Zwingli, 1970) 83-89; H. Weder, Das Kreuz Jesu bei Paulus (FRLANT 125; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1981); U. Wilckens, Weisheit und Torheit (BHT 26; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1959); idem, "σοφία κτλ," TDNT VII:496-526; idem, "Das Kreuz Christi als die Tiefe der Weisheit Gottes: Zu 1.Kor 2.1-16," in Paolo a una chiesa divisa (1 Cor 1-4) (Rome: St. Paul's Abbey, 1980) 43-81; H. Windisch, "Die göttliche Weisheit der Juden und die paulinische Christologie," in Neutestamentliche Studien, Festschrift G. Heinrici, ed. A. Deissmann and H. Windisch (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1914) 220-34; M. Wolter, "Verborgene Weisheit und Heil für die Heiden," ZTK 84 (1987) 297-319.

E. J. Schnabel

WISDOM CHRISTOLOGY.

See CHRISTOLOGY; LORD; PRE-EXISTENCE; WISDOM.

WISH PRAYERS.

See PRAYER.

WITCHCRAFT.

See EPHESIANS, LETTER TO THE; MAGIC.

WITNESS

In Greek the noun martys can refer to a witness who can certify facts, especially in a court of law. Martyreō can refer to the act of bearing witness; martyria, to the witness itself; and martyrion to the objective evidence or testimony provided. In the Pauline letters witness terms are used in a variety of ways.

1. Gospel and Witness
2. Apostleship and Witness
3. Inner Witness and Public Witness

1. Gospel and Witness.

It is instructive to begin by noting that the noun for "testimony" (martyrion) appears in Paul's letters as a synonym for the gospel.* Paul speaks of "the testimony about God" (1 Cor 2:1 NIV, if this is the correct textual reading), "our testimony about Christ" (1 Cor 1:6 NIV) or simply "our testimony" (2 Thess 1:10). The Pastorals* urge Timothy not to "be ashamed of your testimony to our Lord" (2 Tim 1:8 REB; cf. Rom 1:16) and observe that Christ's "testimony" was "borne at the proper time" (1 Tim 2:6 NASB).

Paul also mentions the testimony furnished by the Scriptures (cf. Jn 5:39; Acts 10:43; see Old Testament in Paul). Thus the righteousness* of God, which is revealed in the gospel, is "attested" by the Law* and the Prophets (martyroumenē, Rom 3:21). On the other hand, in the Pastorals the gospel is said to be "attested" by a good reputation (1 Tim 3:7) and by good deeds (1 Tim 5:10).

2. Apostleship and Witness.

The integrity of Paul's apostleship* and the truth* of the gospel were closely identified. Witness terminology thus plays an important role when Paul speaks of his apostleship.

2.1. Bearing Witness. Paul highlights the fact that he and the other apostles "testified" that God* raised Christ* from the dead (1 Cor 15:15). He uses martyreō repeatedly to insist on the truth of his assertions (e.g., Rom 10:2; 2 Cor 8:3; Gal 4:15). Here Paul attests respectively to the "zeal* for God" which the Jews display, the generosity of the Macedonian churches and the former helpfulness of the Galatians. More generally, Paul "testifies," or declares, a spiritual principle to the Galatians (Gal 5:3) and "solemnly warns" his hearers when this is necessary (diamartyromai, 1 Thess 4:6).

2.2. Credible Witness. Paul recognized that Christian witness required integrity. He appealed to the Thessalonians, reminding them: "You are witnesses, and so is God, of how holy, righteous and blameless we were among you who believed" (1 Thess 2:10 NIV). This is one of many places where he stresses his sincerity (Rom 9:1; 2 Cor 2:17; 11:10, 31; 12:19). Paul's life backed up the teaching of his lips. Both offered credible testimony to the gospel (1 Thess 1:5).

2.3. False Witness. Paul abhorred false witness, as he shows in drawing out the terrible consequences which follow if there is no resurrection* of Christ (1 Cor 15:12-19). The reference in 1 Corinthians 15:15 to the possibility of Paul as an apostle being found to be one of the "false witnesses" is striking (pseudomartyres, cf. Mt 26:60), for it recalls the strong OT prohibitions against false witness (Ex 20:16; Deut 5:20; Prov 21:28). It emphasizes the tremendous importance Paul placed on the resurrection of Jesus as the indispensable foundation for the Christian faith.

2.4. Pastoral Witness. Initial witness was not enough, for new Christians required discipling and encouragement (hence Paul's letters; see Pastor). For example, Paul instructed the Thessalonians about a Christian lifestyle (1 Thess 4:1-12). Because his converts misunderstood his witness, he had to write a second letter to warn them against idleness and irresponsible conduct. Nevertheless, he is able to rejoice "because you believed our testimony to you" (2 Thess 1:10 NIV). Paul's witness to them, and to the other communities where he worked, was no "flash in the pan." He cared deeply for the spiritual welfare of those he led to Christ, and he sought to instruct and nurture them in the things of God.

2.5. Multiple Witness. Paul applies the Jewish law of multiple witness, "that at the mouth of two or three witnesses every matter may be established" (2 Cor 13:1; cf. 1 Tim 5:19), to his warnings to the Corinthian church (perhaps associating the two or three witnesses with his second and promised third visit to Corinth; but see commentaries). This is clearly an important principle in both the OT and NT and is also evident in the Dead Sea Scrolls and the Talmud (Num 35:30; Deut 17:6; 19:15; 1 Kings 21:13; Mt 18:16; Jn 5:31-32; 8:13; Heb 10:28; cf. 1QS 9:16—10:3; b. Sanh. 9b).

2.6. Divine Witness. Repeatedly Paul calls on God as a "witness" (martys) to apostolic truthfulness and integrity (Rom 1:9; 2 Cor 1:23; Phil 1:8; 1 Thess 2:5, 10). The cognate verb martyromai is used to mean "solemnly charge" or "testify" (1 Thess 2:12; Eph 4:17), and the compound verb diamartyromai is employed (1 Thess 4:6); in the Pastorals this verb appears in impressive religious contexts: "I solemnly charge you in the presence of God and of Jesus Christ" (1 Tim 5:21 NASB; 2 Tim 2:14; 4:1).

3. Inner Witness and Public Witness.

3.1. Conscience as a Witness. In several passages Paul refers to the conscience* as a witness (Rom 2:14-15; 9:1; 2 Cor 1:12). In 2 Corinthians 1:12 Paul defends his trustworthiness in the face of slanderous opposition to his apostleship. He appeals to the witness (martyrion) of his conscience, that he has "behaved in the world with frankness and godly sincerity, not by earthly wisdom* but by the grace of God"—and "all the more" toward the Corinthians.

Similarly Paul mentions the conscience in Romans 2:14-15 and in Romans 9:1, where the conscience "bears witness with" something else (perhaps the divine law) in accusing or vindicating a person's integrity (symmartyreō is used). Here the conscience "joins in giving evidence" which will secure the acquittal or the vindication of the person concerned. The conscience of the Christian can function as a reliable witness, for it is capable of being illumined by the Holy Spirit* (Rom 9:1). Here again Paul insists on his veracity and truthfulness: "I speak the truth in Christ—I am not lying."

In Romans 8:16 the Holy Spirit "bears witness with" the Christian's own spirit that he or she is a child of God (see Adoption). This consentient divine witness undergirds the Christian's own testimony and is clearly a use of the formal principle of multiple witness which is employed by Paul elsewhere (2 Cor 13:1; cf. 1 Tim 5:19). Here the Spirit functions as an advocate in the inner court of the believer, testifying to his or her adoption into the divine family.

3.2. Public Witness. The witness theme is present in Romans 10: 9-10, where public "confession" of Christ is involved. This testimony is in keeping with the demand for open acknowledgement of commitment that is found in the teaching of Jesus (Mt 10:32; Lk 12:8; cf. Rev 3:5). Similar public testimony to Christ appears in the Pastorals, where Paul has spoken "before many witnesses" (2 Tim 2:2 RSV) and Timothy has made "the good confession in the presence of many witnesses" (1 Tim 6:12 RSV). Timothy's model is Christ himself, who made "the good confession," giving his witness in solemn court "before Pontius Pilate" (1 Tim 6:13).

See also APOSTLE; CONSCIENCE; GOSPEL; HOLY SPIRIT; TRUTH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Beutler, "μαρτυρέω κτλ," EDNT 2.389-91; idem, "μαρτυρία," EDNT 2.391-93; idem, "μάρτυς," EDNT 2.393-95; H. von Campenhausen, "Das Bekenntnis im Urchristentum," ZNW 63 (1972) 210-53; O. Michel, "ὁμολογέω κτλ," TDNT V.199-220; T. Preiss, "The Inner Witness of the Holy Spirit," Int 7 (1953) 259-80; H. Strathmann, "μάρτυς κτλ," TDNT IV.474-514; A. A. Trites, The New Testament Concept of Witness (SNTSMS 31; Cambridge: University Press, 1977); idem, New Testament Witness in Today's World (Valley Forge, PA: Judson, 1983); A. A. Trites and L. Coenen, "Witness," NIDNTT 3.1036-51; H. van Vliet, No Single Testimony: A Study in the Adoption of the Law of Deut 19:15 par. into the New Testament (STRT 4; Utrecht: Kemink & Zoon, 1958).

A. A. Trites

WOMAN. See HEAD; MAN AND WOMAN.

WOMEN IN MINISTRY. See MAN AND WOMAN.

WONDERS. See SIGNS, WONDERS, MIRACLES.

WORKS. See JAMES AND PAUL; JUDGMENT; LAW; WORKS OF THE LAW.

WORKS OF THE LAW

The phrase "works of Law" (erga nomou) is used eight times in Paul. He affirms that no one can be justified by "works of Law" (Gal 2:16; Rom 3:20, 28), that the Spirit (see Holy Spirit) was not received by "works of Law" but by responding to the gospel* in faith* (Gal 3:2, 5) and that those who are characterized by "works of Law" are cursed (Gal 3:10; see Curse). The meaning of the phrase is widely debated in contemporary Pauline scholarship. This article will argue that when Paul used the phrase "works of Law" he referred to doing what the Law commanded.* Paul maintained that no one can be justified (see Justification) before God* by doing what the Law commands, for no one can do everything which the Law demands and, should they experience some measure of success, they would sin* in their pride of achievement. Moreover, forgiveness is now only obtained through the death of Christ (see Death of Christ) on the cross, not through the OT cultus. Thus, those who seek to be justified by doing the "works of Law" end up cursed; the only way to receive the Spirit is not by obeying the Law (for no one can obey it fully) but by faith in Jesus. This definition and perspective on Paul is far from a consensus in NT scholarship. At least five other views must first be considered.

1. Nomistic Service
2. Jewish Nationalism
3. Legalism
4. Subjective Genitive
5. Human Inability
6. Human Inability, Legalism and Salvation History

1. Nomistic Service.

E. Lohmeyer claimed that "works of Law" does not refer primarily to the performance of the specific deeds commanded by the Law. Instead, the focus is on the religious context of existence in which the Law is kept. J. B. Tyson, drawing on the work of Lohmeyer, has argued for a similar view. The focus is not on "Law" as the demand of God which must be fulfilled; instead, the emphasis is on the condition of life under Torah, particularly the demand to observe food* laws and to be circumcised (see Circumcision).

Tyson describes such a way of life as "nomistic service," as "Jewish existence." Paul rejects "works of Law" for salvation-historical reasons. "Works of Law" are not excluded because they cannot be fulfilled nor because they lead to meritorious works-righteousness. The coming of Jesus marks the turn of an era; the era of separation between Jews and Gentiles* has ended.

2. Jewish Nationalism.

J. D. G. Dunn advocates a position similar to Lohmeyer's in many respects, but he sharpens it further. "Works of Law" does not focus on the Law in general but on "identity markers"—particularly circumcision, food laws and Sabbath keeping (see Holy Days)—which functioned to separate Jews from Gentiles. Contrary to Reformation exegesis, Paul was not criticizing self-achievement, legalism or the doing of the Law. What Paul had in mind when he wrote of "works of Law" was the social function of the Law insofar as it divided Jews and Gentiles. The problem was with Jewish nationalism and particularism, not with legalism or activism. Those who insisted on Gentiles observing the "works of Law" were requiring that Gentiles become Jews in order to enter the people of God (see Church), thereby limiting the people of God on racial and ethnic grounds.

The conclusions of E. P. Sanders and F. Watson are similar to Dunn's in some respects. Sanders stresses that Paul argued from solution to plight. In other words, Paul was convinced that "works of Law" do not save because, as a Christian, he believed that salvation* comes only through Jesus Christ. If salvation comes solely through Christ,* then it follows that obedience to Law is not crucial for salvation. Paul's real problem with Judaism, according to Sanders, was that it was not Christianity. To put it another way: Sanders rejects the idea that Paul excluded salvation by "works of Law" not because the Law could not be obeyed or because such obedience was legalistic. Instead, the reason Paul ruled out salvation by "works of Law" was because he was persuaded that salvation is available only through Christ.

F. Watson, in contrast with Sanders, emphasizes the social setting of Paul's ministry. Paul's view of the Law, according to Watson, has for too long been understood through the lens of Reformation exegesis. Paul's exclusion of salvation by "works of Law" is best understood sociologically. Paul insisted that salvation does not come via the Law because he wanted his congregations to separate from the Jewish community (see Social Setting). Thus Paul's negative statements about the Law served an ideology that supported the separation of Pauline congregations from the Jewish community.

3. Legalism.

D. P. Fuller argues that "works of Law" focuses primarily on laws such as circumcision and food laws, but he sees the underlying problem as legalism. In Galatians 3:10 Paul is not saying that no one can obey the Law perfectly, and that this imperfect obedience explains the reason for the curse. Such traditional exegesis reads an unwarranted proposition into the text. Rather, the verse claims that "those who are of the works of the Law are cursed" because those who are characterized by "works of Law" are guilty of the sin of bribing God. They think they can pile up merit before God and thereby escape the curse. Such exegesis is confirmed, says Fuller, by 2 Baruch 48:38; 57:2; Romans 10:3 and Philippians 3:9, where the fundamental sin consists in establishing one's own righteousness.* Moreover, Galatians 2:15-21 confirms such an interpretation, according to Fuller, for there the focus on the ritual Law shows that the problem is with Jewish pride and notions of superiority. Fuller emphasizes that Paul's polemic against "works of Law" was not a polemic against the OT Law per se, but was directed against the Judaizers'* legalistic distortion of what the OT Law teaches.

H. Hübner's understanding (representative of the Bultmann school) of "works of Law" is quite similar to Fuller's. He also sees legalism as the central problem Paul was resisting, the attempt to earn favor in God's sight by performing the Law. The distinctive feature in Hübner's (and the general Bultmannian) position is the contention that even if people could obey the Law perfectly, they would still be cursed. Such perfect obedience would still be sinful because it would be motivated by legalism, the attempt to merit favor with God by good works.

4. Subjective Genitive.

L. Gaston has concluded that nomou in the phrase erga nomou should be taken as a subjective genitive and translated "works which the Law does." A number of texts are marshalled in support of this interpretation: the Law produces wrath* (Rom 4:15), knowledge* of sin comes from the Law (Rom 3:20), the Law produces death (Rom 7:10; see Life and Death) and the Law deceives (Rom 7:11). Thus, when Paul says that no one can be justified by "the works of the Law," the point is that the Law produces sin and unrighteousness, and therefore it cannot make a person righteous.

5. Human Inability.

S. Westerholm maintains that when Paul uses the word works (erga) in the phrase "works of the Law," he does so in a general sense. Paul is arguing that no one can be right before God or receive the Spirit by doing what the Law commands, for no one obeys the Law perfectly. Paul excludes "works of Law" as a way of salvation not because they are a legalistic attempt to amass merit before God. It is not legalism which Paul opposes but human imperfection: the inability of people to do everything the Law demands.

6. Human Inability, Legalism and Salvation History. The view favored in this article is that Paul denied the possibility of righteousness by "works of Law" for three reasons: (1) no one can obey the Law perfectly; (2) any attempt to obey the Law to gain righteousness is legalistic and contrary to the principle of faith; and (3) the salvation-historical shift which took effect with the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

6.1. The Problem of Reductionism. Watson is probably right in detecting some sociological factors which contributed to Paul's understanding of "works of Law." But he unfortunately uses sociology in a reductionistic way and for all practical purposes eliminates the theological dimensions of Paul's thinking. Paul's own explanation for excluding "works of Law" as a way to righteousness is rooted in his theology (see 6.2-3 below). Watson attempts to circumvent Pauline theology by explaining Paul's view solely from a sociological perspective. A better approach would take more seriously the theological foundation of Paul's thinking.

Sanders' position is reductionistic in another way. He sees Paul as arguing from an a priori theological premise that salvation cannot come by "works of Law." He rightly argues that Paul rejected the Law as a way of salvation because of the change in dispensations. Paul no longer believed OT sacrifices atoned for sin. Salvation was available only through the death of Christ (Gal 2:21). Only he could remove the curse which remained on those who did not observe the Law (Gal 3:13). Nonetheless, Sanders' solution is not comprehensive enough, for Paul thought "works of Law" did not save because a shift had taken place in salvation history and because human beings could not keep the Law. R. H. Gundry has demonstrated that both of these convictions—the change in dispensations and human experience—were factors in Paul's dismissal of the Law as a way of salvation.

6.2. The Argument for Human Inability. The fundamental flaw of some of the positions described above (esp. Dunn's) is the limited focus assigned to the word erga in the phrase "works of Law." For example, to say that the focus in "works of Law" is on certain ritual laws (i.e., circumcision, food laws and Sabbath) collapses upon further reading of Galatians. Paul does not exclude righteousness based only on "works of Law," he also excludes righteousness by Law in a general sense (Gal 2:21; 3:11-12; 5:4). And since much of Galatians* centers on the temporally limited nature of the Mosaic covenant (Gal 3:15—4:7; see Covenant), it is strained to argue that only part of the Law is in focus when Paul speaks of "works of Law." Moreover, to say that Paul's emphasis when he refers to "works of Law" is on the ceremonial law is even harder to sustain in Romans, for the failure to be justified by "works of Law" in Romans 3:20 is due to the Jewish failure to obey the moral claims of the Law, not adherence to the ritual Law for nationalistic reasons. This last point is clearly supported by Romans 2:17-29 where the Jews are rebuked for failure to obey the Law, even though they are circumcised.

Moreover, both D. J. Moo and Westerholm have persuasively argued that the expression "works" (erga) in Paul refers to "deeds that are performed," and thus "works of Law" signifies the "deeds" or "actions" demanded by the Mosaic Law. The key to their argument is that in Romans 3—4 "works of Law" and "works" cannot be distinguished. Thus, in Romans 4:1-5 Paul says that Abraham* was not justified by his "works" (Rom 4:2) nor by "working" (Rom 4:4-5), and these cannot be limited to "identity markers" since Abraham lived before the arrival of the Mosaic Law. The example of Abraham is brought in to confirm what Paul has said earlier about justification by faith, and thus there is direct connection between the phrase "works of Law" in Romans 3:20, 28 and the concept of "works" developed in Romans 4:1-8. That Paul ruled out works generally as a way of obtaining salvation is also clear in Romans 9:11-12 where "works" are defined as "doing anything good or evil" (cf. Rom 11:6).

The connection between Paul's use of "works of Law" and "works" also undercuts Gaston's view that "works of Law" is a subjective genitive, for it is clear that "works" in Romans 4:1-5 refers to the good deeds done by Abraham. Moreover, the views of Lohmeyer and Tyson are also seriously called into question since the word works refers to concrete and specific actions which are performed; not just to a context of existence (cf. in Jewish literature 2 Bar 4:9; 57:2; 4QFlor 1:7; 1QS 5:21; 6:18; 1QH 1:26; 4:31).

Thus we agree with Fuller in affirming that Paul counters legalism, but disagree with his claim that Paul does not say that no one can obey the Law perfectly. The point of Romans 1:18—3:20 seems to be that no one can be justified because no one obeys the demands of the Law. The problem identified is not merely a wrong attitude toward the Law but a failure to obey it. The same conclusion is most naturally derived from Galatians 3:10. The reason "those who are of the works of the Law are under a curse" is that no one can obey the Law perfectly, for Deuteronomy 27:26 pronounces a curse on those who do not "abide by all things written in the book of the Law." So again, the problem cannot be limited to a wrong attitude, whether legalism (Fuller) or nationalism (Dunn). The fundamental error of those who seek to be righteous before God by "the works of the Law" is that they do not and cannot do everything which the Law demands.

Hübner's understanding that people will be cursed even if they obey the entire Law, because such obedience would be legalistic, is contradicted by Paul. The apostle clearly states that if one could obey the whole Law, then that person would live (Gal 3:12, 21; Rom 10:5; cf. Lev 18:5). Of course, Paul believes such perfect obedience is a practical impossibility, and thus no one can be justified by doing the "works of Law."

6.3. The Argument for Legalism. Thus far we have defended the notion that Paul says no one can be righteous by Law because no one can obey everything the Law commands and because Christ initiated a shift in salvation history. But Paul's polemic against "works of Law" also seems to be a polemic against legalism. Legalism, as defined here, has two characteristics: (1) The attempt to earn righteousness by Law-obedience and (2) human pride in the obedience accomplished. The first characteristic of legalism is logically required by Paul's polemic against "works of Law" as we have defined it above. If "works of Law" describes deeds that are done in accordance with the Mosaic Law, and if Paul says that no one can be righteous or receive the Spirit by "works of Law," then it logically follows that Paul is saying that no one can earn or merit right standing with God by obeying the Law. Today many scholars argue that no Jew or Jewish Christian would have held that righteousness could be attained by doing the Law. They would have maintained that God's grace is prior to any adherence to the Law. But it is improbable that Paul was arguing against an opponent who did not exist. In that case, one of the main points of his argument would have related to no one.

Furthermore, the probability that Paul was arguing against legalism is strengthened by considering Paul's words about boasting. Boasting is excluded, writes Paul, because righteousness does not stem from "works of Law" (Rom 3:27-28) or "works" (Rom 4:1-5). But surely if one did keep the Law, then one would be tempted to boast and take pride in one's performance. Again, it seems likely that Paul is addressing a real human problem (cf. Phil 3:4-11) and not simply making a theoretical statement. Otherwise, if no one struggled with this problem, it would seem pointless to exclude boasting. Knowledge of human nature also confirms that boasting in performance is natural to human beings. Of course, such boasting would be legitimate if people could actually do what the Law says. We have already seen, however, that Paul's foundational argument is that no one can obey the Law perfectly, and thus righteousness can never be attained by "works of Law." Thus, any boasting in human works is a perverse delusion since good works are lacking in any case, but those who are trying to impress God with their good works do not come to grips with their failures, thinking they have done enough good to merit favor from God. Such boasting lies at the root of human sin, the desire to heap glory and praise upon oneself instead of giving glory,* thanks and praise to the one and only God (Rom 1:21-23).

See also ABRAHAM; BOASTING; GALATIANS, LETTER TO THE; JAMES AND PAUL; JUDAIZERS; JUSTIFICATION; LAW; LAW OF CHRIST; RIGHTEOUSNESS, RIGHTEOUSNESS OF GOD; ROMANS, LETTER TO THE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. D. G. Dunn, "The New Perspective on Paul," BJRL 65 (1983) 95-122; idem, "Works of the Law and the Curse of the Law (Galatians 3.10-14)," NTS 31 (1985) 523-42 [= Jesus, Paul and the Law (Louisville: Westminster/John Knox, 1990) 183-206; 215-36]; D. P. Fuller, "Paul and 'the Works of the Law,' " WTJ 38 (1975) 28-42; L. Gaston, "Works of Law as a Subjective Genitive," SR 13 (1984) 39-46 [= Paul and the Torah (Vancouver: University of British Columbia, 1987) 100-106]; R. H. Gundry, "Grace, Works and Staying Saved in Paul," Bib 66 (1985) 1-38; H. Hübner, "Was heisst bei Paulus 'Werke des Gesetzes'?," in Glaube und Eschatologie: Festschrift für Werner Georg Kümmel zum 80. Geburtstag, ed. E. Grässer and O. Merk (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1985) 123-33; E. Lohmeyer, "Gesetzeswerke," ZNW 28 (1929) 177-207; D. J. Moo, " 'Law,' 'Works of the Law,' and Legalism in Paul," WTJ 45 (1983) 73-100; E. P. Sanders, Paul, the Law, and the Jewish People (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1983) 17-64; T. R. Schreiner, "Paul and Perfect Obedience to the Law: An Evaluation of the View of E. P. Sanders," WTJ 47 (1985) 245-78; idem, " 'Works of Law' in Paul," NovT 33 (1991) 217-44; F. Thielman, From Plight to Solution: A Jewish Framework for Understanding Paul's View of the Law in Galatians and Romans (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1989); J. B. Tyson, " 'Works of Law' in Galatians," JBL 92 (1973) 423-31; F. Watson, Paul, Judaism and the Gentiles: A Sociological Approach (SNTSMS 56; Cambridge: University Press, 1986); S. Westerholm, Israel's Law and the Church's Faith (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988).

T. R. Schreiner

WORLD, COSMOLOGY

In the Pauline corpus seven words are included in this semantic area, kosmos ("world," forty-seven times), aiōn ("age," thirty-one times), gē ("earth," "land," fourteen times), oikoumenē ("inhabited world," once), kairos ("time," thirty-one times which sometimes overlaps the temporal aspects of aiōn) and "creation"* (ktisis, cf. the verb ktizō) which is also called ta panta, "the all". This rich fund of language is derived from both the Jewish and Greek traditions.

Paul's understanding of the origin and structure of the world (cosmology) was dependent on the biblical teaching of creation and could have made use of a variety of mythical traditions concerning the origin and nature of the world. It is frequently suggested that the NT writers thought of the earth as a disc upon which the heavens rest like a dome and under which the waters of the deep formed the sea. But it could be a mistake to interpret such imagery as scientific description rather than as poetic portrayal. From the time of Aristotle the Greeks understood the world to be a sphere (Aristotle Cael II.2 p. 285a, 32) and perceptive attempts were made to calculate the circumference of the earth, though the debate persisted concerning whether the earth or the sun circled the other. Because the "world" is not treated systematically in the Pauline corpus, gaps must be filled in from what we suppose was commonly known. The task of dealing systematically with Pauline thought is made difficult by uncertainty about the authenticity of a number of letters and the recognition that all of the letters are occasional writings, not the expression of a unified systematic theology.

1. Terminology
2. The World of Space
3. The Temporal World
4. Perspectives in the Pauline Letters

1. Terminology.

Kosmos is sometimes understood as planet earth, at times with a special focus on its human inhabitants, but also in a wider sense as the universe. In this latter sense it has the same meaning as the OT "heaven and earth" (Heb haššāmayim wᵉhā'āreṣ), meaning the creation. Writers dependent on the OT used this language instinctively even though kosmos had become part of the vocabulary of Greek speaking Jews. The OT has no word comparable to kosmos and the translators of the LXX naturally translated the Hebrew "heaven and earth" as ouranos kai gē. Only in the later books composed in Greek, such as Wisdom of Solomon, 2 Maccabees and 4 Maccabees, was kosmos used (nineteen times, five times and four times respectively). Paul, after John, is the most prolific user of kosmos in the NT. He, like John, shows a preference for kosmos over gē, although gē is predominant in the NT. When gē occurs in the Pauline corpus it is often in an OT quotation. In Paul the creation of the heavens and the earth (Gen 1:1) finds expression in terms of the creation of the kosmos (Rom 1:20) or the creation of all things (ta panta, Eph 3:9; Col 1:15-17; cf. Eph 1:10). This idiom (ta panta) is characteristic of Stoicism (see Philosophy), the Corpus Hermeticum and Gnosticism.* In Colossians 1:16, 20 the reference is to "all things in heaven and earth," combining Greek and Jewish idioms. The notion of creation (ktisis, ktizō, ktisma, "creation") has its roots in Judaism. The language of Romans 11:36 and 1 Corinthians 8:6 is more ambiguous, raising the question of influences on the development of this language.

Four other expressions overlap the use of kosmos. Oikoumenē, which is short for oikoumenē gē ("inhabited earth"), was used in the LXX to translate the Hebrew tēḇēl. In poetic works tēḇēl is frequently used in parallel with 'ereṣ ("earth"). Oikoumenē is used in this way (in parallel with gē) in Romans 10:18 (Paul's only use) where it is a quotation from Psalm 19:4. By Paul's time oikoumenē had come to mean "the inhabited world," which was sometimes considered to be coterminous with the Roman empire. Kosmos is used in this sense in Romans 1:8 and Colossians 1:6. Aiōn was used to translate the Hebrew 'ôlām. Both words have a reference to time, and the expression "this age" has substantially the same meaning as "this world." Some of Paul's uses of kairos have much the same meaning. The notion of creation is important in the Pauline corpus where the verb ktizō, ("create") is used ten times (fifteen times in NT), the nouns ktisis ("creation") eleven times (nineteen in NT) and ktisma ("creature") once (four in NT). Paul's focus on creation reflects aspects of Hellenistic Judaism.

2. The World of Space.

The extensive nature of the world is expressed in Romans 10:18 (Ps 19:4) where "to the ends of the world (oikoumenēs)" parallels "to every land (gēn)." In Romans 9:17 (Ex 9:16) gē is used ethnically, not of planet earth as it is in the phrase "heaven and earth" (1 Cor 8:5; Eph 1:10; 3:15; Phil 2:10; Col 1:16, 20; and implied in Col 3:2, 5), the Jewish idiom for the whole creation. Heaven represents the realm of God and earth the sphere of human activity. Reference to the Lord performing his word on earth, a quotation of Isaiah 1:9 in Romans 9:28, is also a reference to planet earth. There is an instance where kosmos is apparently used of the promised land (Rom 4:13; cf. Gen 17:4-8; 12:3; 18:18; 22:17-18), while elsewhere it is used of the Gentiles* (Rom 11:12, 15).

3. The Temporal World.

3.1. Creation. The temporal nature of the world, with a definite beginning, is asserted in the teaching about creation (Rom 1:20, 25; 8:19-22, 39; 1 Cor 11:9; 2 Cor 5:17; Gal 6:15; Eph 2:10, 15; 3:9; 4:24; Col 1:15, 16, 23; 3:10; 1 Tim 4:4), which is expressly creation ex nihilo (Rom 4:17; 1 Cor 1:28). Ephesians 1:4 envisages the plan and action of God* before the foundation of the world (pro katabolēs kosmou). This Jewish expression is found four times in the Gospels (Mt 13:35 = Ps 78:2; Mt 24:21; Mk 10:6; 13:9) and with "before the ages" (pro tōn aiōnōn, 1 Cor 2:7) means "before the creation."

3.2. This Age (Gk aiōn; Heb 'ôlām). The notion of the two ages, this age and the age to come, has its roots in apocalyptic* Judaism (4 Ezra). "This age" is conceived as evil and Paul exhorts, "Do not be conformed to this age" (Rom 12:2; cf. 1 Cor 1:20; 2:6, 8; 3:18; 2 Cor 4:4; Eph 1:21). "This age" is comparable to "this world" (1 Cor 3:19; 5:10); and "the age of this world" (Eph 2:2) is contrasted with the coming of age (Eph 1:21; 2:7). The present age is evil (Gal 1:4), being ruled by the "elemental spirits of the world"* (ta stoicheia tou kosmou, Gal 4:3, 9; Col 2:8, 20), "the rulers of this age" (tōn archontōn tou aiōnos toutou, 1 Cor 2:6; cf. Jn 12:31), "the god of this age" (ho theos tou aiōnos toutou, 2 Cor 4:4), "the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit now working in the sons of disobedience" (Eph 2:2; see Satan, Devil), the "devil," "rulers," "powers," the "world rulers (kosmokratores) of this darkness," the evil spiritual powers in heavenly places (Eph 6:11-12; see Principalities and Powers). "This age" may also have the sense of "the present time"(ho nun kairos, Rom 3:26; 8:18; 11:5; 2 Cor 6:2; 8:13) and "the present age" (ho nun aiōn, 1 Tim 6:17; 2 Tim 4:10; Tit 2:12). This age/world is evil and opposed to God. It is ruled by spiritual powers and to it fallen, unredeemed humanity belongs (1 Cor 1:20, 21, 27, 28; 2:12; 3:19; 5:10; 6:2; 11:32; 2 Cor 7:10; Gal 4:3; 6:14; Eph 2:2; Col 2:8, 20) and is in need of redemption* (Rom 3:6, 19; 2 Cor 5:19). Here Paul gives expression to an apocalyptic worldview in which no explanation is given for the "fallen" world, unlike certain forms of Gnosticism where the coming into being of this world is itself understood as a fall which can only be reversed by a return to the original heavenly state.

3.3. The Coming Age. The notion of the coming age, explicit in Ephesians 1:21; 2:7 and implicit in Romans 8:18-25 and 1 Corinthians 15:20-28, implies the fulfillment of God's purpose in creation when evil and corruption will be overcome. For Paul creation is an eschatological* doctrine. That Christ is the meaning of creation is the point of the parallel statements about the creation and reconciliation (see Peace, Reconciliation) of ta panta ("all things") in Colossians 1:16, 20. The explicit essential connection between creation and redemption seems to have been a distinctive early Christian insight.

4. Perspectives in the Pauline Letters.

The major aspects of the theme of the world are found in the first four undisputed letters. Ephesians and Colossians add a christological and cosmic focus. 1 and 2 Thessalonians have an eschatological orientation similar to 1 Corinthians 15, though with more attention to the events leading up to the end time. The Pastorals* are also concerned with the degeneration preceding the end.

4.1. Romans. The understanding of God in creation (Rom 1:20, 25; 8:19-22, 39) as the basis of revelation has its roots in the Wisdom* tradition. Those who do not worship* God are without excuse (Rom 1:20). But in spite of the revelation, sin* entered the world, and as a consequence death (Rom 5:12; see Life and Death). Though sin was already in the world (Rom 5:13), the Law* was introduced to silence all appeals so that the whole world (pas ho kosmos is here a reference to humanity, fallen and guilty before God) would be accountable to God (Rom 3:19). Human sin also had consequences for the natural world because the judgment of God in response to human sin (Rom 1:18-31) subjected the world to futility* (mataiotēs). This judgment* has as its goal the redemption of the world, a theme given extensive treatment in Romans 8:18-25. The present age, subject to futility, corruption and suffering,* will be released in the coming age. God's purpose is redemption, in which the whole creation will participate through the revelation of the children of God (see Adoption) and the liberation (see Freedom) of the creation from the bondage of corruption. Similarly, God's judgment in casting away Israel* leads to the reconciliation of the Gentiles* (kosmos, Rom 11:12, 15; see Romans). Like corruption and suffering, this casting away is part of the paradoxical purpose of God for the redemption of all. The state of the world is a consequence of human sin and the consequent judgment of God. There is no reference to the powers of evil as in other letters. The theocentricity of Romans finds expression in the doxology of Romans

11:36. Here Paul affirms God to be the source (ex autou), the means or mediator (di' autou) and goal (eis auton) of all things (ta panta). (Contrast the subordinate christological focus in 1 Cor 8:6; 15:28; Eph 1:10, 22; Col 1:16, 20.)

4.2. 1 Corinthians. Here the world (this world/age) takes on an alien and hostile character (see Enemy, Enmity, Hostility). It is opposed to God just as the wisdom of the world is opposed to the wisdom of God. God chose the foolish, the weak* and the despised, and even those considered nonentities according to this world, which turn out to be the wisdom and power* of God in the fulfillment of his purpose (1 Cor 1:18-28; 2:6-13; 3:18-19; 4:9, 13). The rulers of this age (hoi archontes tou aiōnos toutou) lead the forces opposed to God (1 Cor 2:6, 8), and the spirit of the world is opposed to the Spirit* of God (1 Cor 2:12). The redemption of the world, treated in Romans 8:18-25, is picked up in 1 Corinthians 15:20-28, but from a new perspective. The resurrection of Christ is here portrayed as the first fruit* of the new creation. The reign of the risen Christ continues until all enemies (death is the last of these) have been subjected at the "coming" of Christ (see Triumph). For Paul the time for this event was growing near (1 Cor 7:29; 10:11) and this is the basis for his distinctive brand of asceticism (1 Cor 7:29-31). The urgency of the moment calls for denial, not because the physical world is evil in itself (1 Cor 10:26) but because the form of this world is passing away (1 Cor 2:6; 7:31) and the new age is dawning. Attachment to things of this world is not appropriate.

With the completion of the Son's saving purposes, the Son himself becomes subject to the one who subordinated all things to him, that God may be everything to every one (1 Cor 15:28; see Kingdom of God/Christ). Although the end is God, there is an important subordinate christological* focus. Christ is the means by which God achieves his sovereign purpose. This is reflected in the doxology of 1 Corinthians 8:6: "But for us there is one God the Father from whom are all things [ex hou ta panta], and we are for him [eis auton], and one Lord* Jesus Christ through whom are all things [di' hou ta panta] and we are through him." Though God is here the source of creation, Christ is the means or mediator of God's creative work. That mediation is affirmed twice, concerning all things and in the affirmation, "we are through him." The affirmation concerning God is not "we are from him" but "for him" (eis auton). This is generally translated "we live/exist for him." But as the first preposition ex relates to source/origin it is likely that the eis refers to the goal. We come from God and we go to God. Ultimately God will be "all in all." Then the saints will judge the kosmos (heaven and earth), including angels* (1 Cor 6:2-3).

4.3. 2 Corinthians. With the phrase "the god of this age/world" (2 Cor 4:4) the theme of the alien world is announced. This age has values opposed to God (2 Cor 7:10). A step beyond the mediatorial role of Christ in 1 Corinthians is taken by asserting, "God was in Christ reconciling the kosmos to himself" (2 Cor 5:19). Here it is uncertain whether kosmos means only sinful humanity or involves the whole creation, a theme taken up in Ephesians and Colossians. More likely it is the former.

4.4. Galatians. By giving himself for us, Christ has redeemed us from the present evil age according to the will of God our Father (Gal 1:4). Those belonging to this age are in bondage to the "elemental spirits of the world"* (ta stoicheia tou kosmou, Gal 4:3, 9 and cf. Col 2:8, 20). Redemption from this age and the spirits that control it involves death (crucifixion) to the world (Gal 6:14). The Jewish Law* seems to be part of the system of the world and thus has no place in the life of the believer who lives in the power of the Spirit of God and by faith.*

4.5. Ephesians. Like Romans, Ephesians* lays strong stress on creation, God as creator (Eph 2:10, 15; 3:9; 4:24), and the purpose of God originating before the foundation of the world (Eph 1:4). That purpose has a christological focus coming to fulfillment in the recapitulation (anakephalaiōsasthai) of all things (ta panta) in Christ (Eph 1:10). "All things" specifically includes what is in heaven* and what is on earth. This recapitulation is the reassertion of God's purpose for creation. It involves the overcoming of the evil powers in control of this present age (Eph 2:2; 6:11-12) and of the enmity manifest in human life (Eph 2:14-22). Consequently Ephesians sets the work of Christ in the context of God's eternal purpose and expounds its cosmic consequences into which humanity is caught up. Christ is the meaning and goal of creation. For a variety of reason many scholars deny the authenticity of Ephesians. Whether or not by Paul, Ephesians has a Pauline understanding of the world and its purpose, though this is set in a wider perspective than in the uncontested letters.

4.6. Colossians. Colossians* also has a strong emphasis on creation and the most detailed cosmology (Col 1:15-20) in the Pauline corpus. This cosmology can be illumined by appeal to Jewish wisdom* tradition, some form of Gnosticism* or a combination of the two. It can also be attributed to false teachings at Colossae upon which Paul has drawn in framing his response (see Colossians). The present age is ruled by the power/authority of darkness (Col 1:13; see Light and Darkness), by the elemental spirits of the world (ta stoicheia tou kosmou, Col 2:8, 20). Creation and redemption (apolytrōsis), the forgiveness* of sins, have been wrought by Christ (Col 1:14) who is called God's beloved Son* (Col 1:13) and designated the image of the invisible God (eikōn tou theou tou aoratou, Col 1:15; cf. 2 Cor 4:4; Wis 7:26; Philo Vit. Mos. 2.65; Leg. All. 1.43; Conf. Ling. 97, 147). Although recapitulation language is not used, the theme is implied. "All things" (ta panta) were created in/by (en) him and reconciled through (dia) him (Col 1:16, 20; see Peace, Reconciliation). Though en (Col 1:16) might have had a local sense in the false teaching (according to Philo Op. Mund. 17, 20, the Logos was the place [topos] of the eternal ideas [the kosmos noētos]), Paul is talking about the creation of the material world and en thus has an instrumental sense ("by"). This is confirmed by the reiteration in Colossians 1:16 which uses dia ("through"). All things were created not only through him but also for him (eis auton). This might seem to be contrary to Romans 11:36, but the mediatorial role of the Son here runs parallel to the role of God in Romans. The passage is framed by the parallelism of the two assertions (Col 1:16, 20) concerning the creation and reconciliation of "all things," which include the things in heaven and on earth. The Son is called the "firstborn* (prōtotokos) of creation" (Col 1:15) and the "firstborn of the dead" (Col 1:18). But between creation and reconciliation the world is depicted as alienated from and at enmity with God, dominated by the power of evil. The point of the parallelism is that reconciliation restores the purpose of creation. The Creator and reconciler is the Son. The cosmology is concerned with the relation of the Son to the Father. So that no separation from the Father can be envisaged, the Son is described as the image (eikōn) of the invisible God, emphasizing his mediatorial role. It is from this point of view that the goal of the preeminence of the Son is to be understood (Col 1:18).

See also CHRISTOLOGY; CREATION AND NEW CREATION; DEMONS AND EXORCISM; ELEMENTS/ELEMENTAL SPIRITS OF THE WORLD; ESCHATOLOGY; FIRSTBORN; FULLNESS; HEAVEN, HEAVENLIES, PARADISE; PEACE, RECONCILIATION; PRINCIPALITIES AND POWERS; SATAN, DEVIL.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. C. Beker, Paul the Apostle: The Triumph of God in Life and Thought, (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980) 135-81; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament (2 vols.; New York: Scribners, 1951, 1955); idem, "The Understanding of Man and the World in the New Testament and in the Greek World," in Essays Philosophical and Theological (London: SCM, 1955) 67-89; G. B. Caird, Principalities and Powers (Oxford: Clarendon, 1956); W. Carr, Angels and Principalities: The Background, Meaning and Development of the Pauline Phrase HAI ARCHAI KAI HAI EXOUSIAI (SNTSMS 42; Cambridge: University Press, 1981); J. G. Gibbs, Creation and Redemption (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1971); G. Gloege, "Welt," RGG VI. 1595-1603; G. Johnston, "Oikoumene and kosmos in the New Testament," NTS 10 (1963-64) 352-60; J. T. Sanders, The New Testament Christological Hymns: Their Historical Religious Background, (SNTSMS 15; Cambridge: University Press, 1971); R. Schnackenburg, Christliche Existenz nach dem Neuen Testament I (1967) 157-85 and II (1968) 149-85; H. Sasse, "αἰών, αἰώνιος," TDNT I.197-209; idem, "γῆ, ἐπίγειος," TDNT I.677-81; idem, "κοσμέω, κόσμος κτλ," TDNT III.868-95.

J. Painter

WORSHIP

1. Background
2. Contemporary Setting
3. Pauline Teaching

1. Background.

While there is no formal definition of what the worship of God means or entails in biblical literature, it can safely be said that in both testament ages worship originates in the understanding of God as creator and redeemer. (The scriptural references that follow are drawn mainly from the Pauline corpus.) God* is hailed as the sovereign Lord* who brought the world* into existence (Rom 4:17) and is the author of all that is (Rom 11:36; 1 Cor 8:6). He acted through the agency of his Son (Col 1:15-20; see Son of God) both to create and to rescue, taking action in salvation* to restore the universe once it had fallen from its original state and to save humankind implicated in sin* (Rom 5:1-21; 8:18-23). Notes of praise are sounded to herald the dawn of a new age of God's reconciling and renewing activity (2 Cor 5:17-21; see Peace, Reconciliation), and the church* of Jesus Christ is viewed both as the object of redemption (Eph 1:1-14) and the locus where God's saving activity is rehearsed and displayed (Eph 3:9-10). The scene is both terrestrial and set in the heavenly realms (see Heaven), brought together by the work of the regnant Christ* who is at once the unifier of heaven and earth and the means by which earth's praises connect with the heavenly, angelic worship.

The key, then, to worship in the Pauline churches is found in Paul's central affirmations concerning the primacy of divine grace* to meet the human and cosmic need and the pivotal role assigned to Jesus Christ, the once-crucified (see Crucifixion) and now risen (see Resurrection), ascended and glorified Lord* as head of the church and ruler of all creation (Phil 2:6-11; cf.

1 Tim 3:16). These twin assertions lie at the heart of Paul's practice of worship, seen in his praises, prayers* and confessions of faith* and addressed in the kind of celebratory activity in which he expected his congregations to engage.

2. Contemporary Setting.

2.1. Greco-Roman Religion and Cult. The ministry of Paul was set in a culture and civilization that had long since acknowledged the place of the gods and goddesses and responded to the elemental awareness of the divine (in the sense of numen, divine influence or eerie sensation felt by worshipers). In the ancient Greek world the deities of Homer and Hesiod were accepted as superior beings, linked with virtues and requiring obedience. They formed a society located on Mount Olympus and were presided over by Zeus, the father and king of the gods. Paul's tribute in 1 Corinthians 8:5 refers to deities "in heaven," presumably of the Homeric pantheon, and "on earth," relating to manifestations of the divine in fertility spirits or possibly deified kings and rulers.

At the center of traditional Greek religion was the idea that the gods were guardians of the moral order and were to be reverenced by offerings in a cultus as well as by prayer to secure a favorable "lot" in this world and in the underworld of Hades. The largely unpredictable "fate" awaiting the departed contributed to an uncertainty and fear which made worship at the shrines and temples a fitful experience. The linkage of the cultus with the cycle of nature and the desire for good harvests made religious practice an important feature of everyday life. But it added only to the uncertainty of life should the harvests fail and the herds be stricken with disease. A lot of traditional religion had a prophylactic element, that is, to ensure prosperity by warding off disease and danger.

The advent of Rome* as a military and world-embracing power gave opportunity for the Homeric deities to be associated with the national aspirations and (later) the ruling emperors. The Roman genius for government and political action promoted a sense of duty to the state and obligation on the part of the citizens. Hence "religion" took on its function according to its true etymology, that is, religare in Latin, meaning "to bind," namely, humanity to the gods. Religious observances, both domestic and on state occasions, served this wider interest. There was both a corporate and a contractual obligation, and traditional and customary ways of life were related to the various gods and their consorts in a non-exclusive, syncretistic way. Notions of uncertainty were reinforced by the admission that tychē ("luck," "chance") was at the heart of things, and the gods were often treated in a superstitious manner as averters of one's fortune. Household gods (the lares and penates) were regarded as guardians of hearth and home against evil influences or capricious "fate." A wonderfully revealing picture of the Superstitious Man is drawn by Theophrastus in his Characters (the text is given and commented on in Martin 1978, 2.36-38).

Hymns, prayers, votive offerings and sacrifices, at festival time and in conjunction with the shrines, are attested, with various deities being appealed to as a source of life and welfare and a giver of healing (notably of the cult of Asclepius) and prosperity. Divine guidance was sought at centers such as Delphi where the oracle in the hands of the priestesses of Apollo yielded direction to the inquirer. Tributes of praise called aretalogies are on record, addressed to the deities such as Apollo and Zeus (the notable Cleanthes' Hymn is a fine example; cited in Martin 1978, 2.42).

With the world-shaking conquests of Alexander in the fourth century B.C. the ancient world was to know changes of an irreversible character. Life was never to be the same, and notably in the matter of religious influence and worship. Two factors came into play. (1) There were political confusions that followed in the wake of Alexander's global influence and its sudden decline. The wars and the disturbances of the balance of power brought an unsettlement to the lives of ordinary people across the Mediterranean world and the Syrian Levant. This contributed to the sense of futility that fell across the spirit of Hellenistic society (see Hellenism) in the decades prior to Paul's mission (see Mission). (2) But there was a more serious dimension to the human condition in Paul's world that directly influenced the sense of worship.

A new view on the cosmos (see World, Cosmology) had been introduced by Greek scientists, with direct repercussions on the traditional theology of Homer that located the deities on Mount Olympus. At a single stroke they were rendered otiose as far as endeavoring to locate them in a mundane sphere; they were banished to the outer regions of starry space. With the fateful exploiting of these astrological and theological novelties by the astrologers and occult-practitioners from the oriental world, religion entered a new phase, one largely of pessimism and despair. Once the existence of personal gods and goddesses was either denied (but with little evidence of atheism in the modern philosophic sense) or "demythologized" (by reducing and explaining away their personal identity, as in Plato), no alternative seemed left but the sad conclusion that all things happen by chance. The next move was that the goddess Tychē (luck) was placed on the throne vacated by Zeus (Pliny Nat. Hist. 2.5.22: "We are so much at the mercy of chance that Chance is our god"). So it came about that everything in the cosmos—earthly, subterrestrial and in the heavenly sphere—was placed under the control of the star gods that controlled and determined the lot of humankind. Men and women were made to feel impotent and helpless, and religion was marked by a "failure of nerve" (to use G. Murray's phrase).

But escape was promised and sought along certain paths, all with their distinctive ethos and practice of worship. First, fellowship with a mighty god who was stronger than "necessity" was offered in the mystery religions that practiced an elaborate initiatory rite, as part of a baptismal and meal-event cultus. Second, the worship of Serapis, Isis and the healer Asclepius included the promise that worshipers could gain victory over their fate and be given hope. Third, by a life of renunciation and asceticism as well as the practice of magic, a yearning for salvation and harmony with the eternal world was expressed and celebrated in praise, ritual, sacrament and experience—with special emphasis on a knowledge of secret lore that would offer a passport to a union with the divine and a bridging of the gap that separated the worlds above and below. What Paul in Acts 17:22 said of the Athenian philosophers would be true of a wider constituency representing men and women throughout the Greco-Roman world: "I see that in every way you are very religious."

2.2. Jewish Practices.

2.2.1. Temple and Home. During the period when Palestine came under the influence of Alexander, the most notable change to Jewish worship was registered by the increasing Hellenization of Jewish ancestral culture. Greek influence, especially in education and thought forms, can be seen in the life of the synagogues. Although there were many challenges to Israel's theocracy, especially emerging from the Maccabean struggle of the mid-second century B.C., once the political threat was withdrawn, the cultural changes to Jewish life served only to enhance belief in one God and the sanctity of his house, the Temple at Jerusalem. Henceforth the creed* of "one God, one land" would be embedded in all kinds of liturgical praise.

The Jerusalem shrine remained the focal point of national worship, since (it was said) the world rests on the threefold foundation of Torah, Temple service and the practice of almsgiving (m. 'Abot 1:2). The Law* was the basis of postexilic Judaism, and its central place in the liturgy was unchallenged. It provided a divine revelation of all needed truth and its study and obedience was the gateway to salvation and holy living. The Temple was the focal point for corporate worship and offered the physical meeting point at which the celebration of the annual festivals and feasts could take place. The latter were prescribed in the Law and were obligatory to all Jews living in Israel and the Dispersion. Three great pilgrim feasts (Passover, Pentecost, and Booths or Tabernacles) could only be observed in the holy land. The result was that loyal Jews came to Jerusalem* to share in these occasions (see Acts 2:5-11; and for Paul himself, Acts 20:16).

Part of the Jewish way of life was Sabbath observance. The seventh day of creation was regarded with special esteem as God's gracious gift to his people and a time of gladness. It was often thought of as a picture of the age to come, as well as imposing an identity marker on Jews as a separate people in society. Domestic worship made much of preparation for Sabbath, a duty that fell to the Jewish mother and housewife, notably in lighting the Sabbath lamp as a symbol of her role in providing a model of godly living.

At Passover this motif was particularly prominent in a solemn searching out of leaven as a prelude to Paschal observance that allowed only unleavened bread to be in the home and kitchen (see Paul's application in 1 Cor 5:1-13). Passover commemorated the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, with a personal rehearsal and dramatization of the redemption in every age, and a pointing ahead to Israel's hope of Messiah's coming to set them free (m. Pesaḥ. 10). These two ideas of commemoration and anticipation were to be taken over in the Pauline account of the Lord's Supper (see Lord's Supper), set in a Passover framework (1 Cor 11:17-34).

The annual Day of Atonement was, in reality, a fast whose details are elaborated in the Mishnaic tractate Yoma based on Leviticus 16. Paul makes little use of this language, except at Romans 3:24-26, which may be an edited form of a Jewish-Christian credo (see Creeds; for details, see Martin 1989, 81-89).

In Colossians 2:16, 23 Paul knows the ways in which cultic practices, part Jewish, part pagan, can distort what are for him the essentials of faith. His employment of Temple cultus ideas and idioms is invariably spiritualized with some important results: The Temple* becomes the new Temple of God's habitation in the church (Eph 2:21) as the body of Christ (1 Cor 3:16-17; 6:19-20; see Body of Christ) and the shrine of the Spirit (see Holy Spirit). And the sacrificial idioms are now linked to the worship of the spirit (Rom 12:1-2) and the tangible expressions of giving to the apostolic mission (Phil 4:18-20) and to the collection for the Jerusalem poor (2 Cor 8—9; see Collection; on the profusion of cultic terms now lifted into a new setting see the commentaries).

2.2.2. Synagogue. The two loci of Jewish worship so far considered are the Temple and the home. In the latter category we must remember that Christian church buildings did not appear until the fourth century. Up to that point Christian believers met for worship in their houses, a practice that goes back to the scenes in Acts 2:42, 46-47; 16:15, 34, 40; 20:7-12 as well as an attested feature of Pauline house churches (see Col 4:15-16; Philem 2; cf. Rom 16:5; see Church).

The third setting for Jewish worship was the synagogue. Itself the venue for much that characterized Jewish community life and affairs in the first century A.D.—as a school, a law court and a town forum—the synagogue originated (it is assumed) in the historical development of Judaism as a meeting place for worship on the Sabbath and other set days in the week, usually market days. The format of worship is largely known from later sources, once Jewish sages had codified and elaborated the distinctive role of the synagogue in maintaining the national way of life. But, even if precise details are not given in any contemporary document, some valuable sources of information are provided in Luke 4:15-21 and Acts 13:13-43. Three main elements formed the genius of synagogue worship: praise, prayer and instruction. As Paul's understanding of Christian worship, notably at Corinth (1 Cor 12—14), is often thought to incorporate those features, it is worth turning to observe the chief emphases.

Praise. Corporate praise is the note that opens the service. The later Talmudic principle is thus enunciated: We "should always first utter praises, and then pray." It is illustrated in the synagogue liturgy for morning prayer called 'Alenu: "It is our duty to praise the Lord of all things." Worship is thereby directed to the covenant God of Israel as maker of all things and one worthy to receive the homage of his people.

Prayers. These prayers fall into two parts. The first group comprise two special concerns. The Yôsēr (meaning "He who forms") takes up the theme of God as creator, while the 'Aḥ^{a}ḇâ (a term for love) is related to the fact of God's love for Israel and requires their answering pledge of love to him. In prayers like these, God is "blessed," that is, his name is honored and extolled with some following description of his attributes and character. Hence, "Blessed are you, O Lord, who chose Israel your people in love." In Paul's letters the exordium, or opening, will often announce God's activity as an incentive to praise and supply reasons for the invocation of blessing (2 Cor 1:3-7; Eph 1:3-10) as well as communicate the epistolary theme to be developed in the body of the letter (see Benediction, Blessing). Part of the reasons for this rhetorical feature is to secure a good relationship with his readers by inviting them to join in a rehearsal of praise; part also is in the reminder that Paul's letters were meant to be read out in public assembly as the congregations gathered in homes for a liturgical service and assembly (see 1 Cor 5:3-5; Col 4:16; 1 Thess 5:27; Philem 2).

In synagogue worship, immediately following these prayers comes the Jewish creed, the Shema, which is both a confession of faith and a glad benediction. The title for the Shema derives from the opening word in Deuteronomy 6:4: "Hear (šᵉma'), O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord." The term one emphasizes the unity and sole reality of God that has always been a central Jewish affirmation. It receives, then, a special prominence in the liturgy—as, indeed, it is picked up and carried forward into Pauline theology (Rom 3:30; 1 Cor 8:6; 12:5; Gal 3:20; cf. 1 Tim 2:5) and doxology (Rom 11:36; Phil 2:9-11). (On Paul's wrestling with Jewish monotheism as a frame for his christology, see Hurtado; see God.)

The second division of synagogue prayers begins with a reminder that God's promises are sure and dependable; such reminder is expressed in the prayer titled "True and firm" (cf. 2 Cor 1:18-22 for Paul's exploiting of this conviction as an apologetic ploy; and in Rom 3:4; 2 Cor 11:31; Gal 1:20 he can call on the same attribute of God, in doxological form). At this juncture the synagogue leader summons a member of the assembly to lead in the "Prayer proper," that is, the Eighteen Benedictions (šᵉmōneh 'eśrēh), which laud the character of God in blessing as his benefits and mercies to Israel are recalled. The Eighteen Benedictions cover a wide range of themes. They are partly an expression of praise, partly supplication for those in need (exiles, judges, counselors and the chosen people). In the Pauline corpus a parallel may be seen in 1 Timothy 2:1-4, as well as in Paul's concern for good government and a stable social order (Rom 13:1-7; Col 3:18-4:6; cf. 2 Thess 3:6-13; see Civil Authority).

Instruction. Once the prayers are said, the service assumes a form and shape that has given the synagogue its distinctive ethos. Indeed, the Jews themselves call the synagogue a "house of instruction" (bêṯ hamiḏrāš), for nothing is more in keeping with Jewish worship than the emphasis that is placed on Scripture reading and exposition. Instruction is given by two means. First, the Law and the Prophets are read by members of the congregation who come up to the rostrum to share the task. Historically, as the ancient language of Hebrew was not understood by all the people present, a translator would turn the Scripture lessons into the vernacular, usually Aramaic. Second, a homily followed that was based on the passages read (e.g., Lk 4:20-21; Acts 13:15-16; 1 Tim 4:13, 16 for duties devolving upon the Pauline pastor). Any person in the assembly who was considered suitable was invited to deliver this sermon, as in the instances at Nazareth and Pisidian Antioch. The service concluded with a benediction and congregational "Amen" (attested to in 1 Cor 14:16; 2 Cor 1:20) to confirm the truthfulness of all that the service has conveyed to the faithful who utter a word of agreement and application in line with the OT precedent (e.g., Neh 5:13).

The issue of whether psalm singing was a feature in Palestinian synagogues is still unresolved (Bradshaw, 22-24). There is no clear attestation. It has been proposed (Hengel, 78-79) that in contrast to Hellenistic synagogues in the world of the Diaspora, where singing is reported and confirmed by Philo of the sect of the Therapeutae (Vit. Cont. 80) and at Qumran (1QS 10:9; 1QH 11:3-4), singing was not allowed by the Pharisees. They would have regarded the practice as heretical, since it was practiced by groups they judged to be deviant. By contrast again, Paul's one description of a rudimentary worship service (at Corinth) includes the use of religious song as a "hymn" (psalmos) brought to the assembly (1 Cor 14:26; cf. Eph 5:19-20; Col 3:16-17; see Hymns). If strict etymology is the determining factor, psalmos would suggest compositions akin to the Hebrew Psalter, the headings for which in the LXX read psalmoi (cf. Lk 24:44). But in a Hellenistic environment such as Corinth there is no certainty that psalmos would be interpreted according to its LXX background, and in any case the "hymn" of 1 Corinthians 14:26 seems clearly to be a newly produced composition made available by a gifted member of the church. Such tributes were evidently meant to be sung (as in 1 Cor 14:15), though the rubrics of Colossians 3:16 and Ephesians 5:19 emphasize that the melody is to find an echo "in the heart" and be a true expression of inner devotion, not just an unthinking act of praise. The musical terms in 1 Corinthians 13 do not appear as germane to our knowledge of early Christian praise (see Smith).

A final word may be added on the question of Jewish holy days. Obviously the Sabbath took pride of place, observed on a weekly cycle as a token of God's creatorial work and as a factor in redemptive history (Deut 5:12-15). The displacement of the Jewish seventh day by the Christian "first day" of the week is a thorny matter, since it seems that the transition was made only slowly. There can, however, be little doubt that the locus shifted from a memorial motif (Ex 20:8) to a day of celebration as a direct consequence of an appreciation of what Jesus did "on the first day." He was raised to new life and shared a meal with his followers as the living Lord (cf. the Gospel accounts of post-resurrection appearances, and the Gospel of the Hebrews with its record of a dominical word to James, "My brother, eat your bread, for the Son of Man is risen from among those who sleep"). As far as the Pauline records go, there is an awareness that "the first day of the week" is the time for the Corinthian gathering (1 Cor 16:1-2) which will involve the bringing of money to the assembly. J. Héring's proposal that the first weekday was a pay day at Corinth is not likely to command assent (Héring, 183). Paul, more likely, is investing a secular day with theological overtones as a tribute to the day as "the Lord's," just as he can commandeer the place of the agape-Lord's Supper as "the Lord's table" (1 Cor 10:21; see Rordorf, 274-75).

According to Acts 20:7-12, the believers at Troas gathered "on the first day of the week" in order to share a meal and to hear Paul speak. Evidently this was an evening-time occasion since (1) the hapless Eutychus was overcome by sleep as he sat at the window, and (2) Paul's resumed speech took him and his audience until daybreak before they dispersed. Later developments in the post-Pauline church gave a more reasoned conviction to the holy day as the start of a new age (Barn. 15:9; Did. 14:1; Rev 1:10) and placed the setting of the worship at dawn (Trajan-Pliny correspondence [Ep. 10.96] dates the synaxis "before daylight"), probably to herald the sunrise in christological terms (cf. the early Christian hymn, "Hail, gladdening light").

Yet the cameo of Acts 20:7-12 did play a more determinative role in the evolution of Christian worship, namely it set a pattern of the twofold shape of the liturgy—the preaching and the breaking of bread, the missa catechumenorum, open to all, followed by the missa fidelium, restricted to the believers—that by the mid-second century (Justin Apol. I 66) became standard procedure. The dual pattern of a liturgy of the Word and a liturgy of the upper room, as it is sometimes called, goes back to its genetic origin in Acts 20 and Paul in 1 Corinthians 11—14, with one member also directly traceable to the synagogue and the other taking its rise from the eucharistic tradition (1 Cor 11:23-26) Paul inherited and passed on to the Corinthians.

3. Pauline Teaching.

There is no systematized statement of what Paul understood to be a fitting worship practice, nor is there anything resembling a set of rubrics in later service books. Paul's teaching is scattered throughout his correspondence, and while there are some suggestions that he incorporated parts of a set pattern of worship (see the bold attempt of Cuming to construct a NT order of service) there is nothing definite. The one possible indication is seen in 1 Thessalonians 5:16-24, which is capable of being arranged in lines, each line purporting to be a service heading. (The arrangement, first proposed by J. M. Robinson, is set down by R. P. Martin 1975, 135-38, and since approved in part by D. Hill, 119-20. But see now the cautions voiced in Bradshaw, 30-55.)

In 1 Thessalonians 5:16-22 short sentences are carefully constructed. The verb stands last, and there is a predominance of words beginning with the Greek letter p, thus producing a rhythm. The sequence is noteworthy. First the note of glad adoration is sounded ("Rejoice always"). Prayer and thanksgiving are coupled—a linkage that derives from the synagogue. Christians are counseled to give the Spirit full rein, especially in allowing prophetic utterances to be heard (cf. Did. 10:7), but cautioned that they must test the spirits. Above all, nothing unseemly must enter the assembly, suggesting a control on unbridled worship practices. The closing part of this putative "church order" has a comprehensive prayer for the entire group (1 Thess 5:23) and an expression of confidence in God (1 Thess 5:24).

Parallels with 1 Corinthians 14 are suggested, with praise and "hymning" linked, and prayer and thanksgiving joined (1 Cor 14:13-18). There is the need to control prophecy and Spirit-inspired speech, especially by women prophets (1 Cor 14:34-36; see Prophecy, Prophesying). And in both accounts the need for good order prevails (1 Cor 14:40).

Procedurally it is easier to set down Paul's teaching under simpler headings, namely (1) evidence for the use of liturgical components in his churches; (2) corrective measures Paul took to deal with what he regarded as abuses and distortions; and (3) extrapolation of his theology of worship from the data thus displayed. These are not separate issues, and will be treated in passing as well as in sections.

3.1. Evidence of Worship Forms and Speech. At a later stage we shall need to clarify the ways Paul took over preformed liturgical pieces and allusions to incorporate them into the epistolary flow of his writing (see 3.1.1. and 3.1.2. below). It will become clear, we hope, that he did this to establish a rapport with his readers who were not always well disposed to him, his apostleship and his theology. If he can demonstrate acquaintance with a shared creed or well-accepted hymn, he has immediately put himself on common ground, even if he found it needful to redact the tradition to underscore a point or bring it into line with his own position. Yet another possible reason for his citing of liturgical specimens is seen in the use he intended for his letters. They were his alter ego, making up for his enforced absence yet conveying the immediacy of his person to those whom distance or circumstance kept apart (see 1 Cor 5:1-12; Col 2:5). To draw on a common fund of hymn, prayer, baptismal reminder or catechesis would again make his presence vividly known to his readers who often (apparently) concluded he had forgotten (2 Cor; Phil) or deserted them (1 Thess).

3.1.1. Traditional Forms. One of the most obvious indices of Paul's borrowing from the liturgical treasury comes at 1 Corinthians 16:22. The strange-sounding maranatha would be equally as puzzling to the Corinthian Greek speaker as to the modern reader. The expression lies in the text without comment, translation or application. Its very meaning is a source of debate, either "the Lord is coming" or "our Lord, come!" are possible, with recent linguistic discussion (see Fitzmyer) tipping the scale in favor of the second rendering (as in Rev 22:20). The use of an Aramaic prayer call can only be satisfactorily explained on the assumption that it belonged to the liturgical vocabulary of an early Palestinian or bilingual setting. It became embedded in the liturgy of the Didache (10:6) as part of a service preparatory to the Lord's table (as it may function in the letter ending of 1 Cor 16:22-24: see Bornkamm and J. A. T. Robinson). It must surely reflect current usage at Corinth; else why would Paul deliberately confuse his readers with an unexplained term? The significance, however, is what counts. The evidence of this ancient watchword throws a flood of light on the way Jewish Christians worshiped their Lord. Here is the earliest recorded Christian prayer, ascribing to the church's Lord highest honors and giving indication of a cult centered on him. It also indicates that those who had previously invoked the name of their covenant God in the synagogue liturgy now came to apply the same divine title to Jesus the Messiah.

"Calling on the name of the Lord" was also an appellation used to describe both the initiation of believers (Rom 10:12-17) and a self-designation of the church (1 Cor 1:2) as a group of men and women who prayed to the Lord (Jesus; cf. 2 Cor 12:1-10; Acts 7:55-60; 9:14; 22:16). Prayers to Jesus and in the name of Jesus were easily associated in a way we may find paradoxical, but the tension was evidently allowed to remain in Pauline circles, while strict monotheism and a worship directed to the risen Lord stood together with little attempt to correlate them (cf. Phil 2:9-11).

Triadic forms of prayer-praise-confession were also permitted to appear side by side (e.g., 2 Cor 1:20-21; 1 Cor 12:4-11; Eph 4:4-6), as the persons of the godhead (as they later were formulated) were associated with various ministries and offices. In Ephesians 1:3-14 there is (on one reading of the text) a trinitarian format as the Father is said to choose believers, the Son of his love to redeem, and the Spirit to authenticate salvation in human experience by applying the experiential seal (Eph 4:30; cf. 2 Cor 1:20-22; 5:5 in baptism?; see God).

Specific forms of prayer and praise occur mainly in the opening sections of Paul's epistles, and have been intensively studied (see Schubert; O'Brien; see Prayer). The consensus is that Paul used this device to state the epistolary context of what was to follow, and to encourage mutual goodwill by establishing friendly relation with his readers (Gk. philophronēsis). Linguistic evidence in constructions like the stringing together of participles, the use of relative pronouns and the fulsome expressions (e.g., Eph 1:6, "to the praise of his glory") all seem to indicate Paul's indebtedness to a liturgical vocabulary (e.g., 2 Cor 1:3; Col 1:9-14; Eph 1:3-14; 1:15-23; on the Greek forms of blessing God, see Bradshaw, 44-45).

3.1.2. Hymns and Creeds. The habit Paul has of inserting hymnic and/or creedal pieces into the epistolary sequence of his writing is well known, and there are certain criteria that betray the presence of quoted material (see Hymns). Though there has recently been some resistance to this idea of Paul's taking over preformed hymnic, poetic or confessional matter (see Lash), the main conclusions already established by E. Stauffer (338-39) and O. Cullmann in their seminal discussions (and now supplemented by monographs such as Deichgräber) do not seem to be shaken. The combined data of unusual and dignified vocabulary, use of rhetorical features such as participles, relative pronouns and figures of speech, and the way in which the hypothetically inserted material can be detached from the context—all these signs point to Paul's drawing on traditional forms in order to buttress his hortatory appeal (e.g., Phil 2:6-11 in the setting of Phil 2:1-4, 12-13) and to use "the story of Christ" to serve as a paradigm for ethical action (2 Cor 8:9, again in context of generous giving and service).

The main examples are Philippians 2:6-11; Colossians 1:15-20; 1 Timothy 3:16 (most recently grouped together and studied by S. E. Fowl). Aside from the paraenetic function served by those citations, attention is focused on the insight these hymnic compositions give into a Christian cultus in the Pauline churches.

The ruling motif may be said to be the cosmological-redemptive work of Christ, the church's Lord who came from God and as God. He achieved a cosmic reconciliation by his death and exaltation (see Exaltation and Enthronement), thereby uniting the disparate realms of heaven and earth (and so meeting the need evident in Greco-Roman religion, as noted earlier) and causing his triumph to be acknowledged in the underworld of demons and cosmic powers (thereby bringing all parts of the universe under his sway; see Principalities and Powers). The twin emphases of his pre-existence with God and his role in creation, on the one side, and his eschatological subjugation of all alien powers, especially the "elemental spirits" (stoicheia tou kosmou, Col 2:8, 20), served to assure the church that no hostile power can come between God and the world (Rom 8:38-39). The problem addressed in these hymnic/confessional tributes to the lordship of Christ (Rom 10:9-10; Phil 2:11) is that posed by gnostic dualism which made parts of the universe alien and hostile (see Gnosis, Gnosticism). God's rule in Christ, now established, and celebrated in song and creed, was the Christian response. Paul's unique contribution was (1) to anchor redemption and reconciliation in the deed of love* at the cross, not in a cosmic fiat (Phil 2:8; Col 1:20; cf. Col 2:15), and (2) to steer the church that sang these hymns and uttered these confessions away from a false triumphalism (see Triumph) that denied the continuing reality of evil as it telescoped the future into the present (see Eschatology). In its place Paul inserts the eschatological proviso of a "not-yet" factor (1 Cor 15:20-28) and maintains that hymns of triumph offered in worship must be tempered by a realistic assessment of ongoing struggle in anticipation of a future reign, now begun but not yet fully and finally achieved. The element of tension remains in Paul's soteriology, and some of the warning signs in his handling of worship problems are directed to this false emphasis, only too apparent when worship is unrestrained and too exuberant, as at Corinth (1 Cor 4:8; 12—14).

One specimen of Pauline hymnody (in Eph 5:14) is a reminder that not all worship forms were strictly theocentric and directed to the praise of God. Here the introductory words, "Therefore it is said," read as though they were added expressly to prepare for a citation of a familiar passage (otherwise unknown; not in the OT). Style, with a swinging trochaic rhythm and a rhetorical device whereby the ends of the first two lines match by assonance, prove this to be a carefully composed hymn. But it is addressed to believers, presumably newly converted and probably recently baptized, to call them to action and to promise them Christ's illumination. The idioms of awake/sleep and resurrection/death, along with light/dark (see Light and Darkness) indicate the setting in an initiatory rite to which these lines are the accompanying chant. They are words that would indelibly fix the meaning of baptism on the minds of the new believers.

3.1.3. Baptism. The appreciation of baptism* was evidently an important feature in the catechetical instruction offered to recent converts and adherents in the churches on a Pauline foundation. Sometimes (at Corinth) there was need to disabuse the people of wrongheaded notions regarding the practice of baptism (1 Cor 1:13-17; 10:1-17; 15:29). More prominently, Paul takes for granted the reality of what baptism entailed, and builds on it (Rom 6:1-14; Col 2:12). For Paul, baptism which is the believing, obedient individual's response to the word of the gospel* (Rom 1:16; 10:9-10) was regarded as the means of entry into the community of the new Israel, akin to the role played by circumcision* in a faith context (Rom 2:27-29; 1 Cor 7:19; Col 2:11-12). So 1 Corinthians 12:13 and Galatians 3:27 are most naturally to be understood. Membership of the elect community was signified by the rite of passage involving the use of water as lustration and initiation. Paul can therefore base an ethical appeal on the reality of his readers' having been baptized (Rom 6:15; 13:14; Col 3:10; cf. Eph 4:24). Their being identified with Christ in his death and new life is reenacted in baptism (see Dying and Rising), and is to be played out in the call to "die daily" (2 Cor 4:11-12). At baptism there is for Paul a genuine sacramental action in which God is at work (Col 2:12). God applies to believers the saving efficacy of Christ's death and resurrection in which they died and were raised, and puts them in a sphere of divine life (Gal 2:19-21) in which sin is conquered (Rom 6:7, 9-11). Henceforth, the Christian is bidden to work out the implications of what baptism means (Rom 6:12-14), just as the circumcised Israelite needed to make good his circumcision by a life of obedience within the covenant. The importance of confession at baptism (Rom 10:9-10; Eph 5:25-27) is thus given prominence. But sacramental action can be misrepresented when it is confounded with a gnosticized fiat without moral considerations. Hence the warnings Paul gives in 1 Corinthians 10.

3.1.4. Lord's Supper. Paul took over and enriched several traditions to do with a supper meal (see Lord's Supper), held in obedience to the Lord's intention "in the night he was handed over" to death (1 Cor 11:23). At an earlier (i.e., pre-Pauline) stage of development it looked as though the framework of the supper consisted of the following elements: a common meal based on Jewish table-fellowship custom and incorporating, we presume, the Jewish prayers for food and drink (with a Christian flavor seen in Did. 9—10); as bread and cup were taken, following the pattern of the upper room model, the Lord's presence was recalled "in remembrance of me"; and the simple rite pointed beyond itself to a future hope in the coming kingdom of God (see Kingdom). What Paul did in direct response evidently to social problems at Corinth was to enrich and apply these basic ideas with one practical consequence, namely the separation of the love feast (of a shared meal) from a more solemn eucharistic service. The reason for this disjunction lay in the abuses prevalent at Corinth, where too much food and drink led to indulgence and the late arrival of the poor believers meant that they would not share in the social meal (1 Cor 11:17-22). Divisions within the community had led to a breakdown in koinōnia (see Fellowship) and a refusal to accept one another in a Christian way (1 Cor 11:18-19, cf. 1 Cor 1:10-11; 3:3-4, 21). Paul finds the answer to this malady in a reemphasis on the "one bread" which betokens "one body" (1 Cor 10:16-17), and shows the way whereby the horizontal dimension of "fellowship in the body and blood" of the Lord sounds the death-knell to the party spirit and selfish concern for one's own interests.

The motif of "remembrance" is present in the Pauline account (1 Cor 11:24-25). He goes on to interpret this in the words "you proclaim the Lord's death." Equally, the future hope is stressed and held out in the reference "until he comes" (1 Cor 11:26). Both Pauline additions are to be understood against a Passover background (cf. 1 Cor 5:1-8) and enhance for Paul both the soteriological emphasis of Christ's dying for sins (1 Cor 15:3-5; Rom 5:1-10; 2 Cor 5:18-21; Gal 3:13) to procure a redemption greater than the Exodus deliverance and the eschatological reminder that the end is not yet (1 Cor 15:20-28) but will come at the Lord's parousia (1 Cor 16:22; see Eschatology). The latter will be both a final coming and an anticipation of the ultimate reality as he visits his people at the table.

3.2. Paul's Corrective Measures. The Pauline teaching on worship includes the unusual feature that certain beliefs and practices in his churches caused him to enter a set of protests with a view to reformation and correction. His countermeasures fall into two categories.

First, certain creedal and hymnic texts were taken over and edited in the process by Paul before he saw fit to include them in his epistolary instruction. Additions such as those in Philippians 2:8, "even the death of the cross," and Colossians 1:18, "the church" to explicate the sense of "he is the head of the body," show the thrust of these revisions, namely to enforce the centrality of the cross and to counteract any gnosticizing emphasis. In the creedal Romans 3:24-26 he evidently redacted a Jewish-Christian atonement formula (see Expiation/Propitiation/Mercy Seat) to highlight the universality of faith.

Then, at Corinth Paul confronted a volatile situation in which worship had become completely disorganized and marred by features he reprobated. His concern was to (1) check undue exuberance caused by a false concept of "spirit" (1 Cor 12:1-3; see Holy Spirit) and a realized eschatology that denied a future eschaton on the mistaken assumption that the kingdom was here in its fullness (1 Cor 4:8; 15:20-28); and (2) to insert controls to maintain good order, to curb unrestricted glossolalia without interpretation (see Tongues), to elevate prophecy to a high office, and to silence the unguarded and alien utterances of women (prophets) in the assembly (for details see the commentaries and Martin 1984, chaps. 5-7).

3.3. Paul's Distinctives. The way Paul tackled the problems at Corinth was primarily to accentuate the positive elements in Christian worship. In the main he did this by introducing the threefold criteria to test all spiritual gifts (charismata) that were exercised in the worshiping assembly (cf. Dunn, 293-97; Martin 1982, 194-200). They were:

(1) The firm nexus between the Jesus tradition and the Christ of experience (1 Cor 12:1-3), a connection which placed the cross at the center (1 Cor 5:6-7; 11:26; see Cross, Theology of the) and indicated that the church lives always between the times of the two advents and in a state of unfulfilled expectation that only the parousia and final kingdom will bring to fruition. In the interim believers have the Holy Spirit to indwell and inspire them in worship (1 Cor 3:16-17; 6:19; 12:3), and he is the first fruits (see First Fruits/Down Payment) of the coming redemption which is promised, but not yet actualized. No view of baptism that promotes the notion of an already attained resurrection* can be right for Paul since it denies the futurity of resurrection hope (Phil 3:10-15).

(2) The primacy of love (Gk. agapē, found in Paul 75 times out of 116 NT occurrences) means that all spiritual exercises stand under the power of an energy that is God's gift in Christ (Rom 5:1-10; 2 Cor 5:14) and is to regulate and direct all the motions and demonstrations of worship into channels that are consonant with the divine character and design for his people's lives (Eph 5:1-2).

(3) The goal of worship on the horizontal plane is edification (Gk. oikodomē) which, for Paul, is more than a feeling of well being or an ecstatic experience. Rather, oikodomē (in 1 Cor 14:3, 12, 17, 26; cf. 1 Cor 12:7) is a determined effort to promote God's will in human lives, our neighbor's no less than our own (1 Cor 8:9; 10:33; Rom 15:2 in the liturgical context of 15:5-6; Phil 2:3-4 in the context set by the hymn of Phil 2:6-11). At worship believers are actively to seek the good of the entire church, and thereby to glorify God (1 Cor 10:31) and enjoy his presence, while at the same time recalling that God is really among them in holy judgment* and renewing grace* (1 Cor 14:25; cf. 1 Cor 5:3-5; 11:29-32; 16:22).

See also BAPTISM; BENEDICTION, BLESSING, DOXOLOGY, THANKSGIVING; HYMNS, HYMN FRAGMENTS, SONGS, SPIRITUAL SONGS; LITURGICAL ELEMENTS; LORD'S SUPPER; PRAYER.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. G. Bornkamm, Early Christian Experience (London: SCM, 1969); P. F. Bradshaw, The Search for the Origins of Christian Worship (London: SPCK, 1992); A. Cabaniss, Pattern in Early Christian Worship (Macon: Mercer University, 1989); G. J. Cuming, "The New Testament Foundation for Common Prayer," StudLit 10 (1974) 88-105; R. Deichgräber, Gotteshymnus und Christushymnus in der frühen Christentum (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1984); G. Delling, Worship in the New Testament (London: Darton, Longman & Todd, 1962); C. W. Dugmore, The Influence of the Synagogue on the Divine Office (London: Oxford, 1944); J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1975); J. A. Fitzmyer, "Kyrios and Maranatha and their Aramaic Background," in To Advance the Gospel (New York: Crossroad, 1981) 218-35; S. E. Fowl, The Story of Christ (Sheffield: Academic, 1990); F. Hahn, The Worship of the Early Church (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1975); M. Hengel, "Hymns and Christology," in Between Jesus and Paul (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1983) 78-96; J. Héring, Commentary on First Corinthians (London: Epworth, 1962); D. Hill, New Testament Prophecy (Atlanta: John Knox, 1979); L. W. Hurtado, One God, One Lord (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); C. J. A. Lash, "Fashionable Sport: Hymn-Hunting in 1 Peter," SE 7 [TU 126] (1982) 293-97; R. P. Martin, Carmen Christi: Philippians 2:5-11 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, rev. ed. 1983); idem, New Testament Foundations, vol. 2 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); idem, "Patterns of Worship in New Testament Churches," JSNT 37 (1989) 59-85; idem, Reconciliation: A Study of Paul's Theology (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1989); idem, The Spirit and the Congregation: Studies in 1 Corinthians 12-15 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1984); idem, Worship in the Early Church (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975); idem, The Worship of God (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); C. F. D. Moule, Worship in the New Testament (London: Lutterworth, 1961); G. Murray, Five Stages of Greek Religion (Oxford: University Press, 1925); P. T. O'Brien, Introductory Thanksgivings in the Letters of Paul (Leiden: Brill, 1977); J. A. T. Robinson, "The Earliest Christian Liturgical Sequence," in Twelve New Testament Studies (London: SCM, 1962) 154-57; J. M. Robinson, "Die Hodajot-Formel in Gebet und Hymnus des Frühchristentums," in Apophoreta, ed. W. Eltester (Berlin: Töpelmann, 1964) 194-235; W. Rordorf, Sunday. The History of the Day of Rest and Worship in the Earliest Centuries of the Christian Church (London: SCM, 1968); P. Schubert, Form and Function of the Pauline Thanksgivings (Berlin: Töpelmann, 1939); W. S. Smith, Musical Aspects of the New Testament (Amsterdam: Kok, 1962); E. Stauffer, New Testament Theology (New York: Macmillan, 1956).

R. P. Martin

WRATH, DESTRUCTION

In the NT the Greek words for wrath, orgē and thymos, are basically interchangeable. In the Pauline corpus, however, thymos is primarily related to human anger and is used in lists of negative human actions (2 Cor 12:20; Gal 5:20; Eph 4:31 and Col 3:8), with the exception of Romans 2:8, where it refers to divine anger and judgment. In the case of orgē most of the uses can be read as the "wrath of God," even if the designation "of God*" is not present. When we turn to the idea of destruction, it quickly becomes evident that there is a rich variety of Greek words in Paul which carry the meaning of destroying, such as apollymi and apōleia (basically implying "hopelessness" and "ultimate loss"), olethros ("corruption," "ruin," and "death"; cf. olothreutēs, "destroyer, 1 Cor 10:10), katalyō and kathairesis ("tear down" or "take apart"), katargeō ("put an end to," "invalidate"), phtheirō ("ruin," "destroy") and portheō ("lay waste"). In the use of these words only the context will determine whether the destroying is speaking of human activity, Satanic* work, or the judgment* of God.

1. God's Wrath
2. Human Wrath
3. Destruction

1. God's Wrath.

In Paul the treatment of the wrath of God is most fully explicated in Romans* where God's wrath is said to be directed against human wickedness (Rom 1:18; 2:5-8). The prevailing thought is that the wrath of God which will be fully and finally revealed on the eschatological "day of wrath" (Rom 2:5; cf. 1 Thess 1:10; 5:9) is, like the saving righteousness* of God in the gospel,* already being revealed from heaven (Rom 1:18). In interpreting Paul, the eschatological nature of the wrath of God, with its roots in the OT and Judaism, must be recognized.

In the OT the wrath of God is not viewed as an essential attribute of God, but as an expression of his will as he deals with sinful and rebellious humankind in the context of history. Yahweh's wrath, as an expression of his holiness, his omnipotence and his sovereign, kingly rule, is executed against the nations who have rebelled against his sovereignty (e.g., Ex 15:7; Ps 2:1-6; Amos 1:2—2:5; see Herion). Yahweh's wrath is also aimed at Israel for failing to live by the covenant which Yahweh established with the chosen nation (e.g., Ex 32:10; Num 11:1, 33; Amos 2:6), a work that Isaiah calls Yahweh's "strange deed" (Is 28:21). A day will come when Yahweh will finally establish his sovereignty in history and defeat his enemies. That will be a "day of wrath" (e.g., Zeph 1:15, 18; 2:2-3). The question of how Israel will finally be delivered from the wrath of God was a lingering question in Paul's day. Some Jews apparently maintained that Israel still remained under the curse of exile and thus was not yet delivered from the wrath of God (see Restoration of Israel).

This background should inform the debate of whether Paul understands the wrath of God as emotional in nature (affective), or the necessary consequence of a holy God encountering sin* (effective). Any solution to the problem must account for both the judgment and the love* of God in his dealings with Israel and humankind in general, and must exclude any notion of malicious or capricious anger on the part of God. C. H. Dodd, noting that "Paul never uses the verb, 'to be angry,' with God as subject" and that wrath when used of God is "curiously impersonal," propounded the influential view that wrath is "not a certain feeling or attitude of God toward us, but some process or effect in the objective realm of facts" (Dodd, 21-22). In other words, wrath is the inevitable result, or consequence, of human sin in a moral universe—a calculable effect of certain behaviors or attitudes—and not the activity of God against sinners (Dodd, 23-24; cf. Hanson). But Paul seems to maintain that wrath is not simply something that can be attributed to the way the world is, but that it originates in God and is an activity of God (Dunn, 55). Already the wrath of God is being revealed "from heaven" in the wayward degeneration of humankind, whether Gentile or Jew (Rom 1:18—3:20).

Paul's argument is that no one remains untouched by sin (Rom 3:23) and therefore whether it is a matter of Jew or Greek, none is righteous (3:9-10) and thus all are liable to the wrath of God. Indeed, in Ephesians the readers in their pre-Christian state were "disobedient" and "by nature children of wrath," a Hebraic way of indicating a class of people doomed to suffer God's wrath because of their sinful disobedience (Eph 2:3; 5:6). According to Paul, all people are justified* by the sacrifice of Jesus Christ and will be saved from God's wrath (Rom 5:8-9). Neither Law* nor circumcision* serves as a refuge from wrath because law codes and physical signs such as circumcision are not the means of acceptance by God (Rom 2:25-28). Abraham's* life witnessed for Paul that acceptance preceded both circumcision and Mosaic Law. Indeed, without faith* the Law produces, or brings God's wrath into effect (katergazetai, Rom 4:15), in that it heaps up transgressions (Rom 5:20).

Paul views wrath as both a present reality and a future expectation. It is at this point that judgment and destruction intersect with wrath (cf. orgē and dikaiokrisia, "righteous judgment," in Rom 2:5). The present wrath is indicated by its present revelation from heaven (Rom 1:18) and in the threefold "handing over" (paradidōmi) by God of Gentiles to their abysmal lifestyles in which heart, passions and mind are all given over to wickedness (Rom 1:24, 26, 28) and an absence of covenantal relationship with God. Likewise, although the Jews have the commands of God (Rom 3:2), they are judged no better in actuality because of their disobedience (Rom 3:20). Thus, all—Jew and Gentile—stand under judgment. But the wrath of God at this point in the process is not final (Rom 5:9 and 1 Thess 1:10; cf. Col 3:6) but awaits a future manifestation, just as salvation is not yet complete, and will not be fully experienced (Rom 5:21; 6:22) until the last day.

The means by which believers escape the eschatological wrath is through God's action in Christ Jesus (Rom 5:8-9; cf. 1 Thess 1:10). Specifically, this involves the death* of Christ, a subject Paul has already developed with reference to the hilastērion of Romans 3:25. The question has been widely debated whether Paul uses the term hilastērion to refer to an expiatory sacrifice,* which focuses on the obliteration of sin, or a propitiatory offering, which in some way satisfies the divine wrath directed against sin. Some interpreters suggest that the term refers to Christ as the mercy seat where the blood of atonement was applied in the OT cultus. If propitiation is in mind, the idea is that Christ, having taken sin upon himself, substitutes or stands in for Israel and humanity in general, thus satisfying the holy wrath of God against sin. God in Christ bears, in love and mercy, the judgment of divine wrath upon himself (see Expiation, Propitiation, Mercy Seat).

2. Human Wrath.

Paul's concern is that Christians evidence a lifestyle of love (Rom 12:9) in response to Christ and leave vengeance to God (Rom 12:19). Salvation and wrath are for Paul polar opposites; Christians are not destined for wrath but for salvation (1 Thess 5:9). Accordingly, they are to avoid all semblance of evil, including all destructive types of human anger and wrath (thymos, 2 Cor 12:20; etc.). Some types of anger (parorgizō) may seem to have positive results (Rom 10:19), and in Ephesians it is suggested that one might indeed become angry (orgizomai), but it must not be indulged and permitted to develop into sin (Eph 4:26; see Lincoln, 301-2). Otherwise human anger and wrath are condemned by Paul.

Christians are likewise to be faithful citizens and therefore should not need to fear either the wrath of God or that of political authorities who rule with justice (Rom 13:4-5; cf. 1 Pet 2:13-17; see Civil Authorities). Even when the state is unjust, the assumption is that suffering Christians will still remain steadfast in their faith (cf. Rev 13:7-10), awaiting God's vindication of his people. Paul's conviction is that living authentically Christian lives and witnessing for Jesus is the role of the believer, which may indeed result in persecution. But he is convinced that the enemies of the gospel will at length (eis telos) experience the wrath of God (1 Thess 2:16).

3. Destruction.

Those who choose to live their lives in their own way quite apart from God's will are designated by Paul as "vessels fit for destruction" (Rom 9:22). Destruction in Paul has several meanings, and some words, like olethros, can mean simply "pain" or even "death," as in the "destruction of the flesh" (1 Cor 5:5; see Discipline). On the other hand, olethros aiōnios in 2 Thessalonians 1:9 seems to mean "eternal destruction" or the opposite of eternal life. In 1 Thessalonians 5:3 ephistatai olethros, "sudden destruction," evidently implies some irretrievable loss or catastrophic event in history. In 1 Timothy 6:9 the rich are said to fall into a pattern of life that leads to "ruin and destruction" (olethron kai apōleian), seemingly indicating the temporal consequences of a wayward life. As in determining the meaning of any word, so with destruction the interpreter must rely on context.

In the case of words like apollymi, the usual meaning in Paul is "final and hopeless judgment." For Paul, believing in the resurrected Christ Jesus is the foundation of the faith (1 Cor 15:14). Even though such believers should die, they have the hope of salvation and need not fear an ultimate destruction (1 Cor 15:17-18). But when Paul speaks of those who offend the sensibilities of weaker brothers and sisters by eating meat (offered to idols* in 1 Cor 8), he warns the "strong"* and those of robust conscience* that by their eating in such a manner they are contributing to the destruction (apollymi, perhaps in the sense of eschatological ruin) of the weak for whom Christ died (Rom 14:15; 1 Cor 8:11; see Dunn, 38b, 821). In another context Paul speaks of the dual effect of believers' lives. They are the "aroma" of Christ both to those who are being saved and to those who are being destroyed; "to the one a fragrance from death to death, to the other a fragrance from life to life" (2 Cor 2:15-16).

For Paul the threat of destruction, the figure of Satan* or the Son of Destruction, and the hostile principalities* and powers are realities, even as evil in the world and the human rejection of God's love are realities (2 Cor 4:3-4; 2 Thess 2:3-10; cf. Phil 3:19). The task of the Christian is to confront in Christ and through the power* of God all evil and its destructive results (Rom 6:6; 1 Cor 6:13-15; 2 Cor 10:8; Phil 1:27-28). Like Paul, Christians must not lapse from their commitment or take up their old way of life (Gal 1:23), because they are no longer blinded by the god of this world whose activities lead to destruction (2 Cor 4:3-4; 11:14-15).

See also CURSE, ACCURSED, ANATHEMA; ENEMY, ENMITY; ESCHATOLOGY; EXPIATION, PROPITIATION, MERCY SEAT; FORGIVENESS; GOD; JUDGMENT; LOVE; MERCY; RIGHTEOUSNESS, RIGHTEOUSNESS OF GOD; SIN, GUILT; TRIUMPH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. G. L. Borchert "Romans, Epistle to," in Mercer Dictionary to the Bible (Macon, GA: Mercer, 1990) 772-74; G. Bornkamm, "The Revelation of God's Wrath," in Early Christian Experience (London: SCM, 1969) 47-70; F. Büchsel, "θυμός κτλ," TDNT III.167-172; C. E. B. Cranfield, The Epistle to the Romans (2 vols.; ICC; Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark: 1975, 1979); C. H. Dodd, The Epistle of Paul to the Romans (MNTC; New York: Harper & Row, 1932); J. D. G. Dunn, Romans (WBC 38; Dallas: Word, 1988); A. T. Hanson, The Wrath of the Lamb (London: SPCK, 1957); G. A. Herion and S. H. Travis, "Wrath of God," ABD VI.989-98; H. Kleinknecht et al., "ὀργή κτλ," TDNT V.382-447; A. T. Lincoln, Ephesians (WBC 42; Dallas: Word, 1990); G. H. C. MacGregor, "The Concept of the Wrath of God in the NT," NTS 7 (1960-61) 101-9; L. Morris, The Biblical Doctrine of Judgment (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1960); A. Oepke, "ἀπόλλυμι," TDNT I.394-97; H. Ridderbos, Paul: An Outline of his Theology (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975) 91-149; J. Schneider, "ὀλεθρεύω κτλ," TDNT V.167-71; R. V. G. Tasker, The Biblical Doctrine of the Wrath of God (London: Tyndale, 1951); S. H. Travis, Christ and the Judgement of God (Basingstoke: Marshall Pickering, 1986); D. E. H. Whiteley, Theology of St. Paul (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1964) 61-72.

G. L. Borchert

YEARS. See HOLY DAYS.

ZEAL. See JEALOUSY, ZEAL.

ZEALOTS. See JEALOUSY, ZEAL; REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS.

ZION. See JERUSALEM.

Pauline Letters Index

Romans
1 6, 30, 54, 89, 105, 142, 260, 272, 322, 341, 414, 541, 620, 632, 668, 727, 747, 809, 832, 836, 845, 879, 904, 976, 980
1—3 716, 830
1—4 696
1—8 399, 775
1—11 214
1:1 48, 49, 55, 57, 85, 184, 369, 370, 397, 735, 838, 841, 870, 903
1:1-2 755
1:1-4 371, 902
1:1-5 93
1:1-6 755
1:1-7 551, 844
1:1-17 844
1:1—3:20 6
1:1—3:26 6
1:1—14:23 842
1:2 109, 371, 638, 641, 755
1:2-4 903
1:2-6 840, 841
1:2-7 842
1:3 98, 109, 256, 276, 278, 304, 305, 407, 498, 769, 812, 903
1:3-4 17, 106, 107, 109, 191, 192, 257, 276, 278, 348, 420, 421, 487, 782, 811, 840, 843, 902, 904, 911, 944
1:4 102, 256, 265, 275, 277, 278, 349, 566, 778, 781, 794, 807, 896, 903, 904
1:4-5 627
1:5 48, 56, 140, 191, 289, 337, 344, 450, 469, 470, 522, 529, 605, 612, 627, 722, 735, 782, 799, 838, 870, 904, 908
1:5-6 470
1:5-15 610
1:6 839
1:7 68, 84, 86, 244, 374, 397, 398, 558, 699, 727, 838, 839, 841, 853
1:8 70, 290, 735, 839, 854, 915
1:8-10 551, 606, 728, 912
1:8-15 6, 214, 391, 449, 728, 841, 844, 936
1:9 57, 109, 129, 256, 369, 370, 371, 769, 903, 974
1:9-13 854
1:10 43, 362, 450, 732
1:11 339, 340, 799, 911
1:11-12 450, 839
1:11-13 136, 719
1:11-15 854
1:12 290, 448, 841
1:12-17 838
1:13 144, 316, 337, 391, 450, 552, 685, 688, 839, 851
1:13-14 529
1:13-15 470, 711, 839
1:14 335, 470, 772, 851, 968
1:14-15 607, 853
1:15 86, 540
1:15-16 743
1:16 6, 43, 57, 98, 105, 285, 335, 371, 605, 681, 723, 782, 799, 802, 836, 839, 840, 843, 851, 853, 974, 989
1:16-17 286, 371, 520, 641, 832, 836, 840, 841, 844, 861, 877, 952
1:16—3:20 781
1:17 6, 281, 349, 363, 529, 555, 631, 640, 646, 676, 690, 759, 778, 831, 832, 833, 834, 841, 843, 947
1:17-18 207
1:18 32, 196, 206, 262, 281, 349, 364, 516, 541, 717, 759, 832, 843, 846, 947, 952, 954, 991, 992
1:18-20 954
1:18-21 772
1:18-27 871
1:18-31 980
1:18-32 6, 13, 207, 314, 379, 426, 772, 844, 912, 958
1:18—2:29 851
1:18—3:20 399, 696, 844, 977, 991
1:18—5:21 843, 846, 847
1:19 366, 717
1:19-20 717
1:19-21 968
1:19-23 354, 844, 846
1:19-25 194
1:20 348, 356, 413, 540, 717, 979, 980
1:21 70, 322, 348, 527, 556, 915
1:21-22 730
1:21-23 322, 348, 359, 978
1:21-25 879, 968
1:21-31 540
1:22-23 54
1:23 322, 348, 366, 431, 432, 809
1:24 206, 414, 426, 540, 854, 880, 992
1:24-27 844
1:24-28 904
1:24-32 322
1:25 69, 207, 356, 413, 540, 553, 558, 843, 954, 980
1:26 206, 272, 414, 540, 717, 880, 992
1:26-27 413
1:26-32 207
1:28 206, 207, 272, 386, 540, 772, 836, 844, 852, 880, 992
1:29 843
1:29-31 393, 413, 844, 922, 962, 963
1:29-32 972
1:30 235
1:32 540, 772, 844, 909
2 841, 844
2—3 847
2:1-5 214, 481, 841, 845
2:1-11 261, 845, 917
2:1-12 880
2:1-16 853
2:1-29 6, 802, 844
2:1—3:20 540
2:1—3:31 849
2:2 516, 954
2:3-4 845
2:4 318, 365, 826, 910
2:4-5 803
2:5 206, 281, 282, 365, 516, 992
2:5-8 991
2:5-9 314
2:5-10 956
2:5-11 517
2:6 516, 631, 845, 968
2:6-8 803
2:6-11 811
2:7 40, 431, 432, 554, 809, 810
2:7-10 878
2:8 206, 836, 954, 991
2:9 335, 769, 781, 920
2:9-10 839
2:10 335
2:11 228, 363, 516, 540
2:12 521
2:12-16 845
2:12-27 852
2:12-29 843
2:13 459, 518, 521, 522, 540, 831, 832
2:14 272, 878
2:14-15 770, 968, 974, 975
2:14-16 852
2:14-29 540
2:15 154, 770, 973
2:16 33, 57, 191, 261, 359, 369, 371, 516, 562, 638, 768, 877, 880
2:17 6, 7, 441, 540, 845
2:17-24 214, 845
2:17-29 214, 841, 977
2:17—3:8 718
2:17—3:20 470
2:18 527
2:20 954
2:21 735, 736
2:22 424
2:23 7, 540, 845
2:24 459, 540, 626, 631, 800, 802, 803
2:25-26 540
2:25-28 992
2:25- 29 138
2:25-29 839, 844, 845
2:26 540
2:26-27 335
2:27-29 989
2:28 303
2:28-29 138, 441, 442, 540, 639, 769
2:29 540
2:31 718
3 6, 274, 287, 388, 389, 390, 391, 832
3—4 977
3—5 220
3:1 647, 844
3:1-6 358
3:1-8 263, 843, 845
3:1-9 214, 392
3:1-30 853
3:2 973, 992
3:3 205, 287, 318, 803, 836, 843
3:3-4 836
3:3-5 832, 836
3:4 362, 631, 985
3:5 196, 281, 803, 832, 833, 835, 836, 843
3:5-6 282, 359
3:6 33, 359, 980
3:7 843, 954
3:7-8 19
3:8 205, 460, 540, 840
3:9 196, 207, 313, 335, 540, 647, 771, 772, 839, 843
3:9-20 6, 540, 845
3:10 730, 831, 878, 968
3:10-12 631
3:10-18 845
3:12 365, 843
3:13 477, 631
3:14 199, 631
3:15-17 631, 633
3:16 647
3:17-20 781
3:18 292, 631
3:19 540, 772, 980
3:19-20 843, 845, 878
3:20 304, 541, 631, 672, 730, 769, 832, 950, 975, 976, 977, 992
3:20-31 782
3:21 206, 281, 349, 363, 541, 639, 755, 832, 845, 852, 974
3:21-16 678
3:21-22 281, 676, 755
3:21-25 276
3:21-26 6, 182, 194, 205, 541, 776, 836, 843, 845, 920
3:21-31 832
3:21—4:3 647
3:21—5:21 399, 845
3:22 286, 363, 832, 843
3:22-24 273
3:22-26 843
3:23 13, 348, 360, 843, 846, 878, 991
3:23—4:8 113
3:24 129, 196, 206, 228, 312, 365, 373, 436, 785, 810, 836
3:24-25 285, 313, 832
3:24-26 93, 191, 193, 196, 282, 484, 944, 984, 990
3:25 206, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 311, 312, 349, 832, 833, 843, 845, 856, 992
3:25-26 219, 280, 281, 283, 835
3:26 196, 281, 286, 287, 444, 676, 831, 832, 833, 836, 980
3:27 7, 271, 287, 540, 820, 845, 971
3:27-28 819, 843, 978
3:27-31 740, 844, 845
3:27—4:2 214, 841
3:27—4:25 6
3:28 286, 541, 672, 975, 977
3:29 6, 335, 441, 839, 845
3:29-30 6, 338
3:30 6, 287, 335, 985
3:31 6, 206, 214, 509, 541, 638, 824, 843, 846, 951
4 6, 181, 287, 288, 415, 519, 641, 692, 830, 832, 944, 957
4:1 6, 304, 305, 541, 647, 769
4:1-5 541, 977, 978
4:1-8 138, 977
4:1-12 138
4:1-25 263, 843, 844, 846, 890
4:2 6, 7, 287, 540, 977
4:3 457, 631, 830, 846
4:3-4 287
4:4 7
4:4-5 373, 977
4:4-8 846
4:5 7, 194, 501, 830
4:6 830
4:6-8 968
4:7 312
4:7-8 7, 631
4:8 563
4:9 7, 335, 457, 830
4:9-12 7, 138, 468, 844, 846
4:9-21 846
4:10 7
4:10-12 7
4:11 7, 639, 830, 831,

835, 843
4:11-12 6, 138, 541
4:12 7, 287
4:12-21 219
4:13 7, 17, 286, 541, 835, 980
4:13-14 831
4:13-16 852
4:13-17 7, 469, 846
4:13-18 8
4:14 7, 287
4:14-16 442
4:15 7, 541, 950, 976, 992
4:16 7, 62, 286, 373, 444
4:16-25 896
4:17 6, 7, 631, 807, 896, 980, 982
4:17-18 335
4:17-21 846
4:17-25 8
4:18 7, 631, 782
4:18-21 641
4:18-22 7, 442
4:18-25 920
4:19 8, 182
4:20 8
4:21 8, 361, 876
4:22 287, 457, 830, 846
4:23-24 8
4:23-25 846
4:24 265, 287, 392, 794, 807
4:24-25 908, 944
4:25 8, 202, 219, 265, 276, 459, 481, 485, 486, 518, 806, 807, 870, 879, 904
4:29 442
5 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 36, 62, 72, 106, 257, 576, 696, 878, 912, 992
5—7 554, 878, 950
5—8 766, 843
5:1 113, 175, 286, 318, 366, 566, 696, 832
5:1-2 852
5:1-5 410, 416, 913
5:1-10 357, 989, 990
5:1-11 14, 94, 696, 782, 846
5:1-21 982
5:2 68, 99, 286, 360, 373, 411, 512, 697, 810
5:3 20, 41, 363, 697
5:3-4 20, 512
5:3-5 206, 271, 733, 920, 968
5:5 32, 40, 41, 364, 405, 411, 412, 575, 696, 773, 909, 913
5:5-6 727
5:5-8 407
5:6 195, 202, 206, 228, 280, 879, 905, 950
5:6-8 206, 275
5:6-10 908, 911, 914
5:6-11 501
5:6-21 911
5:6—8:21 219
5:7 206, 831
5:8 32, 41, 195, 202, 206, 228, 280, 281, 349, 364, 408, 572, 575, 696, 879, 905, 914
5:8-9 696, 992
5:8-11 696, 697
5:9 282, 314, 364, 696, 698, 858, 861, 862, 956
5:9-10 41, 518
5:9-11 206
5:10 109, 112, 206, 236, 238, 256, 280, 553, 696, 750, 858, 903, 905, 914, 952, 958
5:10-11 204, 905
5:11 236, 511, 566, 696, 697, 905
5:11-12 696
5:12 13, 15, 111, 112, 259, 314, 432, 554, 730, 766, 772, 843, 878, 881, 957, 980
5:12-14 189
5:12-18 112
5:12-19 348
5:12-21 12, 13, 14, 31, 78, 306, 314, 435, 554, 771, 772, 774, 846, 956, 957, 958, 968
5:12—8:39 555, 723
5:13 541, 621, 727, 950, 980
5:14 9, 11, 13, 259, 524, 554, 555, 620, 621, 878, 950
5:15 110, 112, 340, 878, 957
5:15-21 13
5:16 340, 516, 957, 958
5:16-21 285
5:17 89, 110, 112, 259, 459, 524, 554, 555, 831, 957
5:17-19 98
5:18 459, 950, 956, 957, 958
5:19 13, 499, 831, 870, 957, 958
5:20 541, 554, 843, 878, 950, 992
5:20-21 373, 846
5:21 259, 270, 314, 373, 432, 554, 566, 810, 831, 878, 908, 950, 992
6 63, 219, 220, 270, 313, 340, 353, 400, 694, 774, 793, 882, 910, 912
6—7 739
6—8 641, 696, 910
6:1 220, 373, 460, 540, 647, 718, 847, 880, 882
6:1-2 409, 853
6:1-3 214, 392
6:1-4 885
6:1-10 923
6:1-11 62, 63, 65, 195, 196, 219, 401, 435, 808
6:1-13 247
6:1-14 33, 64, 220, 773, 989
6:1-23 59, 93, 401, 847
6:1—8:39 399, 846
6:2 32, 230, 316, 373, 400, 701
6:2-11 270
6:3 62, 220, 428, 435, 621, 654
6:3-4 61, 111, 219, 689, 776, 810
6:3-6 624, 628
6:3-11 114
6:4 63, 219, 220, 265, 276, 277, 314, 349, 654, 807, 811
6:4-11 772
6:4-19 276
6:5 65, 195, 219, 352, 774, 807
6:5-12 270
6:6 9, 73, 198, 257, 314, 400, 554, 628, 664, 701, 772, 773, 785, 878, 993
6:6-7 32, 230
6:7 989
6:8 694, 774, 810
6:8-9 195
6:8-10 554
6:9 554, 807
6:9-11 989
6:10 807, 847, 879
6:11 220, 400, 554, 878
6:11-12 409
6:11-14 701
6:11-23 773, 923
6:12 72, 400, 401, 554, 878, 950
6:12-14 32, 896, 989
6:12-16 409
6:12-23 270, 313, 401, 910
6:13 129, 270, 314, 529, 554, 769, 772, 831, 950, 953
6:14 271, 313, 372, 373, 400, 541, 554, 672, 878, 880
6:15 142, 372, 373, 540, 690, 880, 989
6:15-16 214, 392
6:15-18 57
6:15-22 910
6:15-23 882
6:16 129, 554, 769, 882
6:16-18 878
6:17 57, 64, 187, 191, 372, 489, 768, 769, 770, 773, 878, 910, 944
6:17-18 211
6:18 554, 701, 831, 880
6:19 304, 399, 529, 769, 776, 831, 854
6:19-23 399
6:20 399, 554, 771, 831, 878
6:21 316
6:21-22 265
6:22 32, 399, 400, 554, 701, 992
6:22-23 810
6:23 314, 399, 432, 436, 517, 554, 566, 601, 785, 878, 880, 908, 953
7 73, 157, 160, 409, 754, 852, 905, 910
7:1 140, 527, 852
7:1-2 553, 596
7:1-3 596
7:1-6 313
7:1-25 847, 849
7:2 230
7:2-3 598
7:3 600
7:4 76, 163, 230, 265, 316, 317, 541, 576, 672, 807
7:5 271, 304, 305, 554, 843
7:6 230, 313, 541, 554
7:7 214, 541, 631, 878
7:7-8 871
7:7-11 774
7:7-12 541
7:7-13 313, 409
7:7-23 768
7:7-25 9, 158, 530, 843, 848, 871, 950, 968
7:7—8:4 844
7:8 950
7:8-11 259
7:8-13 915
7:9 553
7:9-10 878
7:9-14 258
7:10 976
7:11 878, 950, 976
7:11-17 271
7:12 477, 509, 541, 831, 950
7:13 214, 878
7:13-25 259
7:14 541, 774, 781, 878
7:14-20 211
7:14-23 770
7:14-25 409, 774
7:15 774
7:17-18 774
7:18 305, 774
7:19 879
7:20-21 879
7:20-24 852
7:21-23 541
7:22 9, 257, 541, 773, 774
7:23 754, 772, 773, 774, 879, 950
7:23-24 854
7:24 73, 774, 849, 950
7:24-25 774, 861
7:25 71, 305, 731, 771, 774, 879
8 17, 84, 271, 304, 306, 409, 410, 416, 437, 485, 559, 694, 749, 767, 905, 906, 911, 912
8:1 314, 434
8:1-2 407, 781
8:1-4 220, 367, 409
8:1-8 674, 774
8:1-11 409, 434
8:1-14 305, 576
8:1-17 314, 437, 554, 559, 765, 770, 773, 847, 907, 908
8:1-39 847
8:2 40, 263, 411, 434, 541, 971
8:2-4 271, 844
8:2-8 313
8:2-14 910
8:2-17 677
8:3 63, 98, 110, 205, 208, 256, 281, 304, 407, 730, 771, 856, 902, 903, 905, 951
8:3-4 208, 211, 314, 843, 905, 971
8:3-13 554
8:4 17, 18, 264, 319, 405, 409, 410, 541, 909
8:5 781
8:5-8 32
8:5-9 211
8:5-11 367
8:5-13 905
8:6 409, 411, 697
8:6-7 770
8:7 235, 540, 541, 750, 877, 950
8:8 108
8:9 108, 138, 265, 271, 314, 349, 400, 405, 407, 434, 469, 759, 905
8:9-10 319
8:9-11 31, 63, 278, 407
8:10 99, 263, 433, 435, 771, 831
8:10-11 33, 72, 469, 677, 774
8:11 17, 40, 108, 264, 265, 278, 349, 405, 407, 435, 807, 810
8:12-13 553
8:12-14 18, 409
8:12-15 409
8:12-17 410, 907
8:12-27 479
8:12-30 141
8:12-39 920
8:13 32, 314, 723, 772, 810
8:14 18, 400, 405, 409, 905
8:14-16 408
8:14-17 896
8:15 15, 17, 128, 264, 278, 293, 322, 358, 405, 479, 559, 562, 732, 771, 902, 905, 907, 908, 911, 912
8:15-16 358, 412, 913
8:15-17 483
8:16 16, 18, 771, 773, 975
8:17 17, 18, 41, 196,

294, 349, 629, 807, 920
8:17-25 909
8:18 31, 189, 350, 733, 759, 980
8:18-23 272, 891, 982
8:18-25 190, 313, 411, 437, 637, 774, 920, 980, 981
8:18-27 437, 905
8:18-30 847
8:19 17, 18, 267, 411, 507
8:19-20 32
8:19-21 350
8:19-22 34, 150, 189, 264, 912, 980
8:19-23 264, 267, 629, 741, 865, 878, 879
8:19-25 356
8:20 322, 865
8:20-21 352
8:20-22 105, 348
8:21 18, 30, 190, 322, 350, 507, 865, 879
8:21-22 112
8:22 437, 507, 865
8:22-23 322
8:23 15, 17, 40, 63, 71, 72, 258, 263, 264, 267, 300, 409, 411, 437, 733, 786, 810, 849, 912, 915
8:23-25 411
8:24 518, 860
8:25 40
8:26 405, 412, 437, 438, 733, 911
8:26-27 437, 733, 912, 913, 941
8:27 226, 397, 412, 681, 912
8:28 41, 226, 311, 357, 576, 740
8:28-30 302, 416, 622, 905
8:28-39 226, 363, 913
8:29 14, 17, 40, 128, 184, 227, 228, 256, 302, 310, 311, 349, 355, 358, 361, 427, 586, 810, 903, 905, 908, 911
8:29-30 40, 93, 226, 348, 386, 740, 744, 776
8:29-38 355
8:30 84, 227, 810
8:30-34 518
8:31 41, 226, 355
8:31-34 895
8:31-39 151, 437, 576, 847, 908, 912
8:32 17, 41, 109, 202, 256, 280, 392, 481, 485, 486, 572, 856, 900, 903, 904, 905
8:33 226, 518, 522, 832, 839
8:33-34 41
8:34 32, 226, 257, 277, 278, 381, 436, 437, 733, 807, 809, 904
8:35 18, 142, 226, 437, 920
8:35-39 41, 380
8:36 631
8:37 364, 948
8:37-38 950
8:37-39 359, 751, 865
8:38 21, 112, 262, 263, 302, 748, 749, 751
8:38-39 93, 142, 211, 240, 262, 274, 352, 988
8:39 32, 226, 364, 749, 980
9 237, 335, 575, 803, 839, 912, 973
9—11 6, 8, 31, 43, 110, 113, 227, 263, 338, 355, 391, 392, 441, 442, 443, 445, 501, 507, 521, 601, 615, 634, 639, 643, 678, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 843, 860, 936, 973
9:1 108, 154, 433, 434, 954, 974, 975
9:1-2 840
9:1-3 532, 607, 803
9:1-5 145, 750, 764, 848
9:1-9 718
9:1-22 443
9:1-29 237
9:1—11:36 847
9:2 764
9:2-3 507, 799, 802
9:3 200, 304, 305, 462, 577, 620, 769, 799, 892
9:3-5 647
9:3-9 8
9:4 15, 17, 179, 181, 264, 348
9:4-5 105, 113, 181, 237, 340, 783
9:5 33, 69, 98, 100, 105, 106, 304, 367, 487, 553, 558, 799
9:6 6, 8, 338, 442, 443, 505, 507, 638, 639, 802, 843
9:6-7 85, 505
9:6-8 639
9:6-13 839
9:6-18 392
9:6-29 443, 505, 506, 511, 848
9:7 8, 287, 443, 505, 631
9:7-8 8
9:8 8, 304, 442
9:9 8, 505, 631
9:10 8
9:10-13 844
9:10-16 85
9:10-28 505
9:11 226, 227, 843
9:11-12 977
9:12 237, 505, 631
9:12-13 237
9:13 8, 237, 505, 575, 631, 848
9:14 214
9:14-15 392
9:15 435, 505, 575, 601, 620, 621, 631
9:15-16 365
9:16 225, 227, 601
9:16-17 228
9:17 505, 626, 631, 632, 735, 848, 979
9:18 365, 575, 601
9:19-20 214
9:19-21 214, 228, 841
9:19-26 44, 358
9:20 631, 639
9:21 182
9:21-24 575
9:22 237, 442, 801, 992
9:22-24 182
9:22-29 444
9:23 348, 601, 826
9:24 335, 839
9:24-26 84, 85, 338, 505
9:25 631
9:25-26 764, 804
9:25-28 505
9:25-29 637
9:25—11:10 802
9:26 17, 18, 631
9:27 444, 505, 860
9:27-28 631, 633, 639
9:27-29 764, 803
9:28 980
9:29 505, 631, 639
9:30 473
9:30-32 506, 831
9:30—10:4 443
9:30—10:8 541
9:30—10:13 843
9:30—10:21 848
9:30—10:30 679
9:31 802
9:31-32 286
9:32 541, 843, 918
9:32-33 843
9:33 286, 482, 631, 633, 639, 918, 919
10 461, 508, 639, 832
10:1 286, 607, 728, 731, 799, 859, 861
10:1-4 145, 956
10:1-5 621
10:2 443, 974
10:2-3 540
10:2-4 48
10:3 363, 443, 520, 541, 676, 774, 803, 832, 836
10:3-4 647
10:4 113, 265, 313, 509, 510, 541, 576, 663, 672, 725, 843, 852
10:4-6 831
10:5 541, 631, 978
10:6 32, 381
10:6-7 968
10:6-8 541, 631, 635, 971
10:6-17 908
10:7 807, 836
10:8 290, 735
10:8-9 944
10:8-10 392, 393
10:9 61, 97, 192, 265, 276, 285, 360, 421, 459, 553, 743, 806, 859
10:9-10 191, 557, 562, 564, 725, 773, 975, 988, 989
10:9-14 731
10:10 459, 626, 831, 861
10:11 631
10:11-12 273
10:11-13 843
10:12 335, 444, 826, 839
10:12-17 987
10:13 405, 563, 626, 631, 862
10:13-15 370
10:14 194, 731
10:14-15 450
10:14-17 93, 763
10:15 369, 631, 763, 799
10:16 631, 802, 803
10:16-17 735
10:18 631, 823, 979
10:19 445, 462, 620, 621, 631, 799, 800, 804, 992
10:20 6
10:20-21 631
10:21 802, 836
11 181, 319, 361, 445, 617, 618, 639, 643, 716, 979
11:1 8, 181, 214, 338, 507, 647, 764, 799, 838
11:1-2 631, 764, 802, 803
11:1-5 85
11:1-6 145, 803
11:1-32 848
11:2 310, 311, 437, 803
11:2-6 444
11:3 554, 563, 631, 755, 769, 803
11:3-4 764
11:5 225, 226, 227, 311, 444, 764, 980
11:5-6 85, 373
11:5-7 839
11:6 365, 843, 977
11:7 181, 226, 227, 311, 803
11:7-10 936
11:8 631
11:9-10 631, 764
11:9-11 146
11:10 801, 803
11:11 40, 214, 462, 804, 861
11:11-13 8
11:11-15 804
11:11-16 848
11:11-24 146
11:12 319, 444, 804, 826, 980
11:13 48, 337, 462, 508, 683, 838, 870
11:13-14 508, 607, 799, 804, 860
11:13-15 839, 849
11:13-16 470
11:13-25 643
11:13-27 473
11:13-32 839
11:14 43, 304, 462, 804, 859
11:15 699, 803, 804, 980
11:16 258, 311, 642, 644, 857
11:17 294, 618, 643, 803
11:17-24 43, 145, 214, 473, 532, 803, 804, 841, 848
11:19 643
11:19-20 214, 355
11:19-22 803
11:20 8, 292
11:22 40, 359, 365, 445, 643
11:23 43, 361, 643, 804
11:23-25 113
11:24 8, 643, 804
11:25 299, 319, 445, 507, 508, 622, 804, 973
11:25-26 98, 146, 311, 445, 508, 800, 801, 804, 839, 973
11:25-28 236
11:25-31 470
11:25-32 801, 804
11:25-36 552, 643, 718
11:26 15, 227, 263, 319, 338, 796, 804, 843, 861, 936
11:26-27 43, 631, 800, 804
11:27 179, 181, 631
11:28 8, 226, 227, 236, 311, 355, 601, 750, 952
11:28-29 85, 227, 508
11:28-32 839
11:29 8, 181, 340, 355, 644, 802
11:30 601
11:30-32 365
11:31 601
11:32 338, 355, 602, 957
11:33 225, 361, 826, 968
11:33-34 527
11:33-35 226
11:33-36 354, 420, 421, 558, 849, 968, 973
11:34 631
11:35 631, 968
11:36 69, 356, 391, 553, 558, 717, 730, 980, 982, 985
11:36—12:1 552
12 79, 80, 272, 342, 757, 773, 912, 940
12—13 266, 968
12—14 341, 498
12—15 292, 479
12:1 56, 72, 129, 130, 391, 398, 409, 552, 602, 657, 717, 769, 773, 823, 857, 910, 912, 915
12:1-2 142, 479, 481, 732, 769, 770, 849, 852, 854, 912, 984
12:1-3 577

12:1—13:7 912
12:1—15:13 840, 849, 922, 944
12:2 31, 154, 256, 266, 272, 274, 700, 808, 910, 912, 972, 973
12:3 7, 289, 470, 912, 968
12:3-8 849, 885
12:4 654
12:4-5 71, 78, 79, 80, 81, 127, 128, 151, 373
12:4-8 603, 870, 912, 913
12:5 76, 80, 294, 435, 436, 654
12:6 289, 340, 346, 373, 759
12:6-7 340
12:6-8 187, 341, 344, 347, 373, 412, 940
12:8 81, 345, 473, 602, 605, 660, 826, 968
12:9 823, 992
12:9-13 481
12:9-21 458, 849, 913, 972
12:10 473, 577, 968
12:11 910, 912, 968
12:12 512, 920, 968
12:13 144, 145, 473, 826, 885, 968
12:13-14 271
12:14 199, 238, 318, 477, 478, 577, 944, 969
12:14-21 477, 478, 913
12:14—13:7 839
12:15 658, 885, 968
12:16 487, 577, 968
12:16-17 631
12:17 238, 477, 479, 481, 880
12:17-20 968
12:17-21 577, 578, 969
12:18 477, 577, 969
12:19 238, 364, 631, 992
12:19-21 477
12:20 238, 375, 631, 968
12:21 238, 880
13 142, 238, 479, 544, 545, 870
13:1 186, 274, 275, 769, 870
13:1-3 748
13:1-7 141, 142, 235, 262, 292, 393, 418, 487, 589, 742, 849, 852, 896, 913, 968, 985
13:2 516
13:3 292, 748, 880, 948, 972
13:3-4 870
13:4 142, 275, 292, 516, 544, 722
13:4-5 992
13:5 142, 154, 274, 973
13:6 142, 544
13:6-7 838, 870
13:7 140, 292, 479
13:7-8 479
13:8 319, 478, 826
13:8-10 271, 316, 317, 319, 478, 479, 541, 544, 576, 663, 843, 844, 849, 944
13:9 375, 478, 631, 944
13:10 238, 318, 319, 478, 576, 880
13:11 556, 861
13:11-12 272
13:11-14 266, 481, 774, 776, 849
13:12 462, 556, 864, 866, 953
13:12-14 141
13:13 272, 462, 922, 962
13:13-14 272, 690, 776
13:14 305, 462, 487, 772, 922, 989
14 41, 155, 187, 272, 487, 897, 917
14—15 314, 341, 916
14:1 289, 315, 316, 577, 839, 840, 917
14:1-3 854
14:1-8 770
14:1-12 567, 844
14:1-13 481
14:1-15 471
14:1-23 577
14:1—15:6 840, 849, 917
14:1—15:7 839
14:1—15:13 775, 913, 914
14:2 6, 404, 917
14:3 315, 316, 403
14:3-4 917
14:3-8 314, 316
14:3-12 850
14:4 214, 314, 870
14:5 6, 315, 364, 403, 404, 770, 972
14:5-6 487, 488, 917
14:5-8 567
14:6 6, 70, 566, 733, 914, 915, 917
14:6-8 917
14:7 839
14:7-9 914
14:7-12 33
14:8 566
14:9 191, 202, 208, 221, 276, 277, 360, 566, 567, 807
14:10 34, 214, 261, 359, 516, 521, 917
14:10-12 261
14:11 563, 631
14:11-12 358
14:13 481, 917, 918
14:13—15:6 844
14:13-23 315, 850
14:14 113, 477, 487, 489, 566, 775, 776, 917, 918, 944
14:14-15 917
14:14-17 854
14:15 42, 195, 316, 577, 917, 918, 993
14:15-16 914
14:15-21 155
14:15-23 155
14:16 972
14:17 108, 257, 318, 434, 479, 483, 500, 524, 696, 914
14:17-18 33
14:18 917, 972
14:19 41, 577, 914, 917, 968
14:20 477, 775, 917, 918
14:20-21 577, 917, 918
14:21 6, 775, 854, 917, 918
14:22 968
14:22-23 918, 973
14:23 155, 290, 842
14:30-31 913
15 118, 298, 448, 609, 726, 964
15:1 315, 839, 917
15:1-3 316, 478, 577, 854
15:1-6 850
15:1-7 656
15:2 41, 577, 917, 972, 990
15:2-3 577
15:3 486, 487, 499, 502, 631, 745, 914, 944
15:3-4 912
15:3-6 917
15:4 944
15:5 272, 558, 914
15:5-6 272, 577
15:5-7 316
15:6-7 917
15:7 133, 316, 360, 487, 840, 914, 917
15:7-12 338, 839, 843
15:7-13 840, 843, 850, 853, 917
15:8 98, 184, 501, 514, 745, 843, 954
15:8-9 481, 485, 487
15:8-12 316, 839
15:8-13 799
15:9 601, 626, 631, 917
15:10 445, 631, 800, 802, 804
15:11 335, 631
15:12 109, 631, 807
15:13 411, 412, 558, 876
15:14 552, 839, 972
15:14-15 841
15:14-21 610
15:14-24 853
15:14-32 247
15:14-33 449, 552, 841, 850
15:14—16:27 850
15:15-16 56, 373, 450, 470, 839
15:15-24 838
15:16 108, 129, 134, 369, 370, 398, 473, 605, 686, 732, 857, 870, 903
15:16-18 98
15:16-19 337
15:17-24 722
15:18 43, 409, 450, 529, 606, 654, 735
15:18-19 345, 380, 406, 409, 486, 605, 876
15:18-20 56
15:18-21 617
15:18-24 839
15:18-29 800
15:19 55, 118, 140, 369, 370, 448, 455, 463, 609, 612, 681, 687, 688, 724, 838, 840, 875, 876, 903
15:19-20 450, 627
15:20 470, 627, 654, 711, 735, 839, 854
15:20-21 687
15:21 631, 639, 870
15:22 450, 688
15:22-24 118, 854
15:22-27 455
15:22-29 214
15:22-31 448
15:23 118, 448, 688, 838, 840
15:23-24 145, 711
15:23-29 687, 711
15:23-32 680
15:24 140, 448, 451, 661, 839, 854
15:24-28 710
15:24-33 319
15:25 118, 143, 397, 540, 838
15:25-26 450
15:25-27 187, 448
15:25-29 826
15:25-31 718
15:25-32 295, 297, 454, 472, 853, 870
15:25-33 451, 454
15:26 143, 144, 270, 294, 297, 370, 397, 448, 455, 472, 702, 827, 914
15:27 134, 135, 143, 144, 145, 270, 294, 299, 304, 463, 472, 473, 657, 870
15:28 116, 145, 448, 472, 654, 839
15:28-29 118
15:29 68, 319
15:30 552, 576, 657, 730, 731, 840, 912
15:30-31 870
15:30-32 118, 450, 540, 726
15:30-33 841, 908
15:31 19, 119, 143, 145, 397, 450, 472, 803, 840
15:32 362, 450, 733
15:33 366, 558, 699, 727, 842
16 83, 84, 369, 448, 603, 657, 722, 840, 842, 854, 882
16:1 184, 185, 187, 870
16:1-2 589, 603, 838, 840, 893
16:1-3 390
16:1-16 433
16:1-23 826, 842, 850
16:2 397, 566, 567, 794
16:2-20 567
16:3 135, 183, 187, 436, 470
16:3-4 589, 926
16:3-5 184, 187, 685, 854
16:3-15 80, 587, 839
16:3-16 552, 589
16:4 70, 124, 554, 769, 888
16:4-5 889
16:5 6, 125, 174, 300, 306, 417, 662, 839, 857, 888, 985
16:6 184, 187
16:6-7 135
16:7 48, 184, 186, 187, 390, 436, 603, 657, 683, 754, 882, 953
16:8 566, 567
16:9 183, 184
16:10 84, 722, 885
16:10-11 6, 662, 839, 854, 881, 889
16:11 84, 186, 566, 722, 885
16:11-13 567
16:12 184, 187, 566, 603
16:13 187, 226, 566, 882
16:14 662, 885, 888
16:14-15 6, 839
16:15 187, 397, 885, 888
16:15-16 187
16:16 124, 125, 126, 552, 577
16:16-19 709
16:17 56, 215, 216, 217, 577, 647, 918
16:17-18 573
16:17-19 866
16:18 567
16:19 481, 485, 968, 972
16:20 32, 34, 68, 211, 236, 261, 262, 359, 372, 373, 566, 699, 727, 842, 863, 865, 866, 952
16:21 183, 184, 186
16:21-23 552
16:22 188, 436, 552, 663, 680, 738
16:23 125, 135, 141, 173, 183, 184, 662, 687, 826, 838, 885, 888, 889, 926
16:24 68
16:25 69, 191, 369, 371, 622, 735, 911
16:25-26 48, 622, 639, 755, 759, 761, 972
16:25-27 371, 552, 558, 779, 842
16:26 289, 337, 366, 371, 755, 908
16:27 360, 558

1 Corinthians

1 48, 57, 126, 272, 370, 408, 480, 551, 727, 811, 895, 907, 944
1—2 969

1—3 343
1—4 38, 545, 969
1:1 45, 48, 49, 85, 125, 164, 178, 184, 185, 344, 362, 548, 658, 719
1:1-3 164, 167
1:1-4 96
1:2 84, 86, 96, 99, 108, 126, 128, 175, 210, 244, 397, 398, 535, 627, 853, 941, 987
1:3 68, 164, 278, 374, 558, 699
1:4 70, 340, 365, 551, 912, 915
1:4-7 340
1:4-9 70, 130, 167, 936
1:5 38, 174, 340, 527, 826
1:6 33, 70, 96, 371, 732, 735, 931, 974
1:7 259, 277, 340, 732
1:7-8 34, 559, 567
1:7-9 730
1:7-10 96
1:8 33, 259, 260, 265, 564, 732
1:8-9 41
1:9 108, 126, 256, 287, 290, 294, 365, 407, 732, 903, 906, 941
1:10 55, 56, 164, 178, 552, 577, 627, 657, 941
1:10-11 217, 989
1:10-12 164, 692
1:10-13 924, 969
1:10-17 203, 888
1:10—4:21 165, 174, 178, 179
1:10—6:20 164
1:11 38, 164, 176, 662, 881, 888
1:11-12 667
1:12 38, 60, 165, 177, 462, 645, 692, 701, 702
1:13 198, 431, 626
1:13-17 989
1:14 70, 448, 838, 889, 926
1:14-17 134, 658, 969
1:15 626
1:16 300, 417, 881, 888
1:17 38, 165, 198, 370, 605, 654, 735, 821, 968, 969
1:17-18 370, 716
1:17-19 175
1:17-25 189
1:17-31 794
1:17—2:5 821, 822, 895
1:18 11, 165, 198, 201, 202, 235, 428, 518, 605, 723, 859, 861, 895, 956, 970
1:18-21 227
1:18-25 33, 165, 167, 169, 198, 199, 348, 406, 502, 716
1:18-28 981
1:18-29 717
1:18-31 193, 203, 313, 343, 920
1:18—2:16 345, 406, 481, 485, 969
1:18—3:23 175
1:19 175, 631, 821, 968
1:19-20 165, 558
1:19-25 716
1:20 31, 165, 256, 274, 361, 545, 821, 969, 980
1:20-22 173
1:20-24 165
1:20-25 481
1:21 194, 227, 285, 605, 718, 859, 968, 970, 980
1:21-23 736
1:21-25 735
1:22 335, 875, 876, 919
1:22-25 895
1:23 97, 104, 109, 113, 192, 198, 199, 201, 359, 428, 481, 735, 919
1:24 84, 103, 105, 150, 227, 969, 970
1:24-25 970
1:25—2:6 966
1:26 31, 84, 165, 304, 545, 769, 826, 888
1:26-27 173
1:26-31 164, 165
1:27 226, 304, 980
1:27-28 227, 274
1:28 980
1:29 304, 512
1:29-31 227
1:30 105, 194, 227, 361, 429, 436, 716, 810, 968, 969, 970
1:31 165, 175, 563, 631, 820, 821, 972
2 89, 167, 202, 260, 633, 735, 748, 768
2—3 253
2:1 38, 165, 622, 735, 931, 968, 970, 974
2:1-2 54
2:1-4 386
2:1-5 165, 169, 724, 821, 876, 919, 920, 967
2:1-16 407
2:2 198, 199, 201, 428, 499, 516, 743, 821
2:3 293, 685, 821, 966
2:3-4 895
2:3-5 165
2:4 38, 55, 211, 349, 486, 821, 876, 968
2:4-5 43, 264, 406, 409, 970
2:5 38, 286, 361, 821, 969
2:5-6 794
2:6 31, 38, 210, 265, 700, 718, 748, 750, 968, 969, 980, 981
2:6-7 31, 235
2:6-8 211, 256, 262, 349, 359, 406, 747, 866, 948
2:6-9 262
2:6-10 150
2:6-13 794, 981
2:6-14 972
2:6-16 48, 165, 314, 405, 406, 623, 716, 765, 768, 772
2:7 227, 228, 348, 361, 622, 639, 931, 967, 970
2:7-8 748
2:7-10 970
2:8 142, 186, 198, 210, 228, 276, 349, 481, 486, 564, 622, 748, 750, 968, 970, 980, 981
2:9 75, 130, 175, 576, 631, 764
2:10 226, 361, 622, 700, 757, 759
2:10-11 226, 405
2:10-16 406, 407
2:11 405, 527, 769, 770
2:12 226, 700, 980, 981
2:12-13 944
2:12-16 907
2:13 38, 48, 49, 968, 969
2:14 165, 406, 700, 731, 766, 910
2:14-15 75, 352, 773
2:14-16 794, 914
2:14—3:3 773
2:14—3:4 165
2:15 766
2:16 59, 175, 226, 354, 475, 489, 528, 563, 631, 633, 914
3 58, 359, 473
3:1 98, 184, 305, 406
3:1-3 178, 462, 655, 656
3:1-4 622, 765
3:2 133, 855
3:3 304, 305, 462
3:3-4 577, 989
3:3-9 38
3:4 462
3:4-9 617
3:5 184, 185, 566, 870
3:5-6 57
3:6 43, 654
3:6-7 910
3:6-9 133
3:6-15 418
3:8 183, 820
3:9 57, 183, 184, 185
3:9-15 924
3:10 58, 365, 373, 470, 609, 968
3:10-12 58
3:10-14 820
3:10-15 133, 608
3:10-17 535, 670
3:10-23 165
3:11 481, 482
3:11-15 560
3:12-15 261, 774
3:13 259, 261, 559, 608
3:13-15 42, 58
3:14 608
3:14-15 517
3:15 521, 608, 820, 859, 861
3:16 265, 407, 411, 435, 480, 481, 482, 489, 924
3:16-17 113, 127, 178, 751, 924, 948, 984, 990
3:17 11, 386, 398, 405, 435, 535
3:18 256, 267, 545, 972, 980
3:18-19 54, 981
3:19 165, 631, 633, 968, 980
3:19-20 175
3:20 322, 563, 631
3:21 989
3:21-22 272
3:21-23 717
3:22 177, 356, 553, 701, 702
3:22—4:1 185
3:23 565, 958
4:1 361, 418, 622, 757
4:1-2 55
4:1-5 481, 485, 567, 607, 768
4:1-13 165
4:1-21 174
4:2 290, 418
4:3 608
4:3-5 359, 481, 516, 560
4:4 153, 154, 267, 748, 973
4:4-5 566, 567
4:4-6 880
4:5 108, 259, 272, 516, 556, 559, 608, 820, 877
4:6 267, 577
4:6-13 165, 821
4:7 164
4:8 21, 175, 257, 273, 432, 524, 560, 872, 920, 988, 990
4:8-13 174, 175, 897, 919, 920
4:9 21, 169, 173, 184, 185, 262, 432, 919, 981
4:9-13 18, 50, 55, 428, 827, 895, 972
4:10 54, 692
4:10-11 485
4:10-12 926
4:11 449, 477, 886
4:11-13 166, 170, 477, 478
4:12 238, 477, 656, 886, 925, 926
4:13 56, 981
4:14 58, 178, 552, 578, 655, 656, 972
4:14-15 132
4:14-16 656, 689
4:14-21 165, 174, 391, 449, 656
4:15 56, 136, 174, 654, 655
4:15-16 911
4:16 56, 58, 133, 136, 166, 174, 175, 178, 428, 656, 657
4:16-17 606
4:17 124, 174, 186, 187, 269, 290, 448, 655, 656, 658, 661, 689
4:17-20 449
4:17-21 552
4:18-19 448
4:18—5:5 586
4:19 449, 450, 567
4:19-21 449
4:20 178, 257, 479, 483, 486, 500, 524, 525
4:21 56, 136, 292
4:33 658
4:40 658
5 131, 217, 403, 657, 728, 775
5:1 38, 59, 164, 176, 217, 600, 741
5:1-2 173, 872
5:1-5 136, 216, 510, 568, 600, 887
5:1-6 409
5:1-8 989
5:1-12 987
5:1-13 215, 217, 984
5:1—6:11 552
5:1—6:20 165, 175
5:2 42, 59, 165
5:3 768, 769
5:3-4 216, 738, 771
5:3-5 57, 136, 165, 261, 406, 985, 990
5:4 59, 178, 191, 216, 627, 866
5:4-5 131, 568
5:5 42, 44, 131, 178, 216, 217, 259, 261, 304, 517, 559, 564, 600, 689, 765, 770, 771, 773, 861, 863, 866, 872, 952, 992
5:5-8 218
5:5-13 43
5:6 165, 480, 481, 489
5:6-7 776
5:6-8 570, 574, 872
5:6-13 165
5:7 110, 178, 269, 435, 600, 856
5:7-8 42, 178
5:8 178, 403, 512, 856, 955
5:9 86, 164, 217, 252, 255, 266, 447, 886
5:9-10 141, 393, 660, 923
5:9-11 425, 962, 972
5:9-13 176, 409, 922
5:10 886, 980
5:10-13 59, 535
5:11 42, 164, 216, 217, 409, 626, 826
5:11-13 261, 872
5:12 885
5:12-13 42, 238
5:13 11, 218, 535, 631, 776, 885
6 142, 335, 544, 545, 572, 872

6:1 59, 142, 178, 397, 516, 545
6:1-6 165, 173, 178
6:1-8 544, 545
6:1-11 42
6:2 397, 480, 481, 489, 545, 980
6:2-3 261, 981
6:3 22, 34, 262, 481, 489, 586, 749
6:4 178, 545
6:4-5 136
6:5 968
6:6 142, 545
6:6-7 178
6:7 545, 920
6:7-8 165, 545
6:9 11, 165, 413, 414, 426, 460, 480, 481, 483, 489, 500, 524, 599, 600, 871
6:9-10 34, 42, 217, 235, 257, 263, 393, 479, 517, 524, 664, 922, 923, 962, 963, 972
6:9-11 871
6:10 524
6:10-11 173
6:11 398, 414, 518, 627
6:12 54, 59, 165, 460, 471, 717, 872, 873
6:12-20 72, 173, 210, 214, 363, 475, 584, 770, 772, 773, 896
6:13 477, 567, 600, 773, 776, 872
6:13-14 773
6:13-15 872, 993
6:13-16 597
6:13—7:40 567
6:14 265, 559, 560, 724, 807
6:15 78, 303, 480, 481, 482, 489, 872
6:15-16 599, 873
6:15-17 114, 480
6:15-20 407
6:16 10, 303, 480, 481, 482, 489, 631, 872, 924
6:17 178, 303, 408, 872, 924
6:18 178, 363, 600, 872, 879
6:18-19 776
6:18-20 409, 915
6:19 31, 113, 127, 400, 407, 411, 480, 481, 482, 489, 872, 924, 990
6:19-20 410, 984
6:20 178, 313, 314, 785
6:24 576
7 96, 105, 173, 256, 475, 584, 693, 694, 874
7:1 38, 136, 165, 256, 584, 597, 663, 741, 872, 873
7:1-5 165, 175
7:1-7 356, 915
7:1-16 400
7:1-40 165
7:2 584, 597, 873
7:2-4 873
7:2-5 584, 873, 874
7:2-6 256
7:3 273, 873
7:3-4 58, 584, 596, 599, 874
7:4 873
7:5 32, 261, 863, 865, 873
7:6 273
7:7 340, 379, 475, 481, 485, 488, 598
7:7-8 871
7:7-16 430
7:8 165, 273, 874
7:8-9 873
7:9 584, 871, 909
7:10 55, 57, 136, 273, 465, 480, 498, 572, 598, 944
7:10-11 475, 480, 482, 486, 488, 489, 584, 596, 598
7:10-12 567
7:11 475, 598, 695
7:12 57, 273, 480, 944
7:12-16 401
7:14 400, 435
7:15 84, 165, 584, 599, 695
7:16 584, 859
7:17 56, 85, 124, 887
7:17-24 165, 584
7:18 58
7:19 139, 536, 989
7:19-20 166
7:20-22 882
7:20-24 173
7:21 869, 881
7:21-22 588, 885
7:21-24 274
7:22 184, 277, 313, 567
7:23 313, 785, 869
7:24 85
7:25 57, 290, 365, 480, 488, 567, 602, 663, 741, 873, 887, 944
7:25-28 487
7:25-35 165, 256
7:25-38 584
7:26 256, 579, 597, 874
7:26-35 598
7:27 584
7:27-28 584
7:28 304, 874, 920
7:28-35 826, 874
7:29 256, 693, 874, 981
7:29-31 178, 773, 891, 981
7:29-35 873
7:30-31 274
7:31 112, 256, 274, 304, 356, 717, 874, 981
7:32-34 165, 584, 873, 874
7:32-35 274, 475, 567, 598
7:34 769, 770, 915
7:35 166, 874
7:36-38 165, 584, 874
7:37 376
7:38 165
7:38-39 874
7:39 378, 439, 553, 567, 584
7:40 57, 136, 480, 489, 757, 968
8 41, 272, 343, 481, 527, 742, 775, 889, 893, 918, 993
8—9 884
8—10 174, 314, 395, 396, 471, 487, 488, 543, 916, 917, 966
8:1 41, 155, 165, 166, 174, 315, 425, 429, 462, 527, 528, 576, 577, 663, 741, 794, 917, 942
8:1-3 166
8:1-6 917
8:1-10 309
8:1-13 471, 536, 794, 886, 889, 897
8:1-27 826
8:1—11:1 165, 166, 173, 174
8:3 232, 311, 576
8:4 309, 355, 359, 425, 535, 582, 775, 776, 794, 857, 917
8:4-6 166, 173, 857
8:4-7 210
8:4-8 314, 315
8:4-13 857
8:5 32, 232, 359, 381, 561, 749, 793, 983
8:5-6 93, 210, 356, 565
8:6 93, 105, 150, 151, 192, 256, 309, 355, 356, 367, 565, 569, 716, 745, 746, 938, 970, 971, 979, 981, 982, 985
8:7 42, 154, 173, 174, 309, 315, 425, 794, 917, 918
8:7-11 527
8:7-12 154
8:8 477, 775, 917
8:9 155, 178, 315, 376, 917, 918, 990
8:9-11 425
8:9-13 577
8:10 154, 155, 174, 309, 315, 425, 794, 917, 918
8:10-11 154, 426
8:10-13 917
8:11 59, 155, 174, 202, 310, 315, 343, 356, 917, 993
8:11-13 155
8:12 42, 154, 315, 425, 877, 917
8:13 155, 178, 315, 481, 917, 918
8:16 576
8:17 136, 920
8:23 136
9 295, 296, 370, 473, 475, 485, 819, 917, 936, 971
9—11 914
9:1 14, 31, 48, 49, 50, 102, 185, 266, 314, 370, 470, 624, 717, 896, 903
9:1-2 166, 174, 295, 683, 839
9:1-14 656
9:1-18 887, 897, 925
9:1-23 310
9:1-27 166, 174, 920
9:2 55, 469, 683, 689
9:2-5 177
9:3 49, 663
9:3-12 55, 391
9:3-14 166
9:3-15 914
9:3-18 55
9:4 376, 897
9:4-6 132, 702
9:4-14 295
9:4-15 135
9:4-18 49
9:5 48, 58, 344, 376, 498, 562, 645, 701, 702, 871
9:5-6 184, 185
9:6 48, 185, 454, 465
9:7 184, 897, 953
9:7-14 39
9:7-23 316
9:8-9 536
9:8-12 897
9:9 620, 631, 633, 636
9:9-12 621
9:10 271
9:10-11 270
9:11 304
9:12 43, 55, 132, 296, 376, 657, 903, 926
9:13 480, 482, 924
9:13-14 897
9:14 57, 183, 475, 480, 489, 498, 567, 572, 944
9:15 827
9:15-18 55, 166, 296, 927
9:15-19 296
9:15-23 296
9:16 450, 468, 763, 776
9:16-17 48, 605, 607
9:16-18 93, 927
9:17 418, 909
9:18 132, 605, 897
9:19 166, 271, 314, 315, 481, 717, 870, 917
9:19-22 820
9:19-23 139, 141, 191, 273, 309, 471, 536, 820
9:19-27 577
9:20 470, 471, 543, 799
9:21 335, 478, 536, 542, 543
9:22 315, 606, 860, 897, 966
9:23 43, 294, 396
9:23-27 166
9:24 387, 480, 482, 743
9:24-27 39, 172, 819
9:25 387, 809
9:26 387
9:27 11, 42, 72
10 57, 210, 272, 535, 897, 989
10—14 419
10:1 637
10:1-3 569
10:1-4 970
10:1-6 210
10:1-10 166, 315
10:1-11 42
10:1-13 210, 968
10:1-14 379
10:1-17 989
10:1-22 235, 620
10:1-31 897
10:1—11:1 536
10:2 435, 621
10:3 636
10:3-4 573
10:4 103, 104, 105, 192, 505, 621, 745
10:6 620
10:6-11 271
10:7 425, 631
10:8 871
10:10 991
10:11 31, 178, 219, 223, 256, 260, 265, 315, 320, 535, 637, 640, 689, 944, 981
10:11-12 166
10:11-13 409
10:12 40, 42, 315, 917
10:13 41, 42, 166, 290, 315, 365, 664
10:14 77, 173, 178, 315, 359, 409, 425, 426
10:14-22 42, 131, 210, 359, 689, 941
10:14-30 166
10:14-33 471, 794
10:14—11:1 775
10:15-17 570
10:16 69, 76, 77, 127, 294, 480, 482, 574, 578, 885
10:16-17 71, 77, 81, 127, 572, 577, 989
10:16-21 42
10:16-22 910
10:17 76, 77, 178, 572
10:18 294, 304, 441, 536
10:18-22 409
10:19 210, 425, 794, 917
10:19-21 315, 425
10:19-22 857
10:20 210, 294, 425, 570, 749, 751, 794, 857
10:20-21 105, 380, 426, 462, 573
10:20-22 857
10:20-30 173
10:21 77, 210, 379, 563, 568, 885, 986
10:22 462
10:23 41, 59, 210, 429, 471, 873, 887, 917
10:23-24 272, 429, 941
10:23-33 471, 577
10:24 315, 819

10:25 59, 154
10:25-26 314, 775
10:25-29 154
10:25-30 857
10:25-33 471
10:26 70, 315, 319, 356, 631, 981
10:27 154, 309, 315, 319, 425, 481
10:27-30 309, 689
10:28 425, 426, 775
10:28-29 155, 315
10:29 59, 154, 155, 315, 794
10:30 70, 733, 915
10:31 155, 409, 429, 820, 917, 990
10:31-32 166
10:31-33 859
10:31—11:1 577
10:32 124, 125, 126, 191, 536, 917, 972
10:32—11:1 606
10:33 429, 481, 917, 990
10:33-34 577
10:33—11:1 487
11 391, 395, 429, 571, 572, 574, 578, 897
11—14 124, 564, 986
11:1 114, 133, 136, 166, 174, 175, 187, 428, 429, 481, 485, 487, 656, 911
11:2 57, 489
11:2-6 585
11:2-16 166, 346, 390, 585, 603, 742, 894
11:2-26 21
11:2-34 57, 166
11:3 59, 376, 377, 378, 565, 586, 596
11:3-9 14
11:3-16 418
11:4 757
11:4-5 21, 346, 590, 603, 759
11:5 59, 135, 590, 733, 757
11:6 59
11:7 14, 348, 360, 426, 427, 586
11:7-8 354
11:7-9 591
11:7-12 586
11:8 376, 586
11:9 59, 980
11:10 21, 59, 262, 376, 586
11:11 166, 873
11:11-12 376, 586
11:12 376
11:12-14 346
11:13 972
11:13-15 586
11:16 124, 126, 136, 167, 300, 376, 586, 689
11:17 203, 579, 657
11:17-22 77, 826, 885, 989
11:17-32 689
11:17-33 568
11:17-34 129, 132, 166, 173, 306, 394, 429, 579, 897, 984
11:17—12:31 209
11:18 38, 124, 129, 741, 989
11:18-19 217, 379
11:18-22 166, 577
11:19 134, 605, 826
11:20 379, 570, 571, 578, 579
11:21 571
11:21-22 585
11:22 125, 126, 129, 134, 417
11:23 57, 486, 498, 566, 568, 570, 885, 887, 944, 989
11:23-24 482, 944
11:23-25 194, 201, 202, 208, 276, 465, 475, 486, 489, 498
11:23-26 57, 110, 370, 473, 480
11:23-32 77, 131
11:23-36 986
11:24 70, 76, 77, 578, 733
11:24-25 570, 989
11:24-26 885
11:25 77, 179, 180, 209, 475, 571
11:25-26 804
11:26 192, 259, 379, 557, 559, 568, 570, 989
11:27 42, 76, 77, 134, 568
11:27-32 167, 378
11:27-34 42, 517
11:29 76, 77, 178, 572
11:29-32 990
11:29-34 586
11:30 42, 255, 378, 439, 600
11:32 42, 516, 568, 980
11:33 572
11:33-34 166, 178
11:34 417, 657
12 48, 78, 79, 80, 81, 340, 341, 342, 377, 408, 411, 412, 416, 658, 724, 757, 874, 907, 911, 945, 989
12—13 407
12—14 164, 166, 223, 257, 339, 340, 341, 342, 344, 346, 437, 438, 603, 739, 762, 920, 939, 943, 985, 988
12—15 200
12:1 165, 266, 341, 663, 741, 758, 940
12:1-3 990
12:1-9 891
12:1-11 907
12:1-30 885
12:1-31 166
12:2 173, 210, 335, 425, 536
12:3 102, 192, 200, 288, 405, 407, 408, 435, 553, 557, 564, 907, 944, 990
12:3-6 108
12:3-7 366, 367
12:3-13 911
12:4 340, 342, 380, 527, 758, 940
12:4-6 133, 404, 405, 870
12:4-11 31, 166, 340, 405, 412, 603, 988
12:4-13 273, 408
12:4-27 429
12:4-30 342
12:4-31 145, 166, 411
12:5 340, 344, 985
12:5-6 266
12:6 340
12:7 133, 340, 346, 380, 406, 410, 527, 602, 758, 876, 990
12:7-10 266, 603
12:7-11 132, 404, 406
12:8 38, 174, 340, 412, 759, 968
12:8-10 340, 342, 343, 876, 939
12:8-11 133, 342, 940
12:9 288, 340, 380, 724, 876
12:9-10 211, 344, 345
12:10 133, 340, 341, 345, 346, 380, 411, 760, 876, 939
12:11 128, 133, 340, 346, 404, 405, 408, 527, 602, 759, 941, 942
12:12 78, 79, 435, 480
12:12-13 81, 407, 766, 966
12:12-16 178
12:12-26 78, 79
12:12-27 71, 81, 127, 133, 151, 654, 717, 941
12:12-31 377
12:13 60, 63, 64, 76, 79, 127, 128, 173, 335, 400, 404, 405, 406, 410, 435, 570, 624, 677, 689, 885, 943
12:14 178, 406
12:14-16 79
12:14-26 166, 473
12:14-27 943
12:15 571
12:15-16 79
12:15-26 343
12:17 79
12:17-20 128
12:17-21 128
12:18 79, 405
12:19 876
12:19-20 79
12:21 79, 151, 375, 377
12:22 79
12:23-25 79
12:24 79
12:25 658, 941
12:25-26 577
12:26 79, 405, 920
12:27 76, 78, 79, 80, 128, 178, 377, 480
12:27-28 78
12:27-30 343
12:28 134, 187, 340, 342, 345, 347, 380, 467, 590, 603, 605, 660, 757, 758, 876
12:28-29 340, 412
12:28-30 343, 344
12:29 289, 340, 876
12:29-30 342, 343
12:30 340, 345, 380, 939, 941, 943
12:31 340, 341, 740
12:31—13:2 576
12:34 134
13 145, 165, 166, 318, 410, 416, 421, 527, 577, 724, 894, 914, 986
13—14 346
13:1 21, 172, 175, 262, 342, 939, 940, 941
13:1-3 134, 167, 342, 344
13:1-13 315, 342
13:1—14:1 941
13:2 174, 288, 289, 340, 344, 345, 481, 528, 622, 759, 833, 944
13:3 72, 271, 577
13:4 318, 462
13:4-7 166, 487, 528, 941
13:5 462, 578, 880
13:6 955
13:7 578
13:8 340, 342, 344, 527, 794, 941
13:8-9 345, 758
13:8-10 761
13:8-13 167, 346
13:9 759
13:10 265, 700
13:12 345, 361, 527, 559
13:13 289, 459, 528, 578
14 56, 132, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 768, 886, 907, 911, 986, 987, 990
14:1 340, 341, 342, 758, 759, 942, 943
14:1-5 411, 412, 911, 940
14:1-19 342
14:1-25 342
14:1-40 166, 740, 891
14:2 346, 412, 622, 625, 771, 773, 939, 941
14:2-3 341
14:2-4 940
14:2-5 941
14:3 129, 411, 758, 761, 990
14:3-5 129, 577, 759, 761, 943
14:4 124, 346, 771, 939, 941
14:4-5 758
14:4-15 773
14:5 124, 346, 406, 410, 429, 758, 939, 940, 941, 942
14:6 134, 340, 342, 344, 345, 528, 759, 939
14:6-12 166, 940
14:6-19 166
14:9 134
14:10-12 346
14:12 124, 129, 342, 405, 429, 462, 577, 941, 942, 990
14:12-19 941
14:13 939, 940, 942
14:13-17 733
14:13-18 987
14:13-19 132, 412, 940
14:14 346, 771, 941
14:14-15 341, 346, 912
14:14-16 405, 768
14:14-17 731
14:14-19 412
14:15 345, 346, 412, 986
14:15-17 941
14:16 69, 134, 346, 558, 728, 771, 986
14:16-17 130
14:17 129, 429, 577, 941, 990
14:17-18 346
14:18 70, 625, 731, 887, 939, 940, 941, 942
14:18-19 174, 940
14:19 124, 406, 412, 942, 943
14:20 133, 265, 700
14:20-25 342
14:21 134, 536, 563, 631, 942
14:22 941
14:22-23 132
14:23 125, 536, 885, 939, 941, 942, 943
14:23-25 59, 940
14:24-25 178, 344, 346, 760
14:25 129, 345, 758
14:25-31 758
14:26 129, 134, 340, 342, 344, 345, 406, 410, 411, 412, 419, 429, 557, 577, 758, 759, 760, 942, 964, 986
14:26-29 343
14:26-33 342, 885
14:26-40 166, 342
14:27 940
14:27-28 346, 942
14:27-30 132
14:28 124, 132, 346, 942
14:29 59, 340, 343, 663, 757, 758, 760, 944
14:29-33 346, 762
14:30 132, 133, 344, 345, 758
14:30-31 346, 759
14:30-33 964
14:31 944
14:32 132, 134, 342, 758, 942
14:32-33 731, 758

14:33 59, 124, 366, 397, 603, 760, 941
14:33-35 418
14:33-36 894
14:34 124, 136, 390
14:34-35 132, 584, 590, 663, 664
14:34-36 987
14:35 124, 417
14:36 49, 590
14:36-37 342
14:36-38 758
14:37 130, 136, 175, 186, 340, 344, 475, 567, 757, 760, 942, 944
14:37-38 167, 578, 663, 758, 887
14:37-40 412
14:38 760
14:39 411, 412, 941
14:40 59, 132, 742, 760, 886, 941, 942, 987
15 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 65, 74, 97, 106, 112, 178, 236, 257, 258, 261, 277, 321, 391, 394, 416, 432, 439, 440, 499, 507, 557, 667, 669, 694, 766, 770, 771, 793, 795, 806, 808, 809, 811, 812, 980
15:1 44, 370
15:1-2 130, 191, 859
15:1-4 194, 371
15:1-5 167
15:1-8 412, 903
15:1-11 562, 671
15:1-20 371
15:1-58 167
15:2 321, 518
15:3 96, 136, 195, 202, 313, 393, 489, 557, 572, 879, 887
15:3-4 95, 195, 219, 348, 806
15:3-5 11, 49, 178, 191, 201, 392, 557, 648, 944, 989
15:3-7 258, 465
15:3-8 276, 473, 806
15:3-9 116
15:3-11 370, 944
15:4 110, 265, 807, 811
15:4-8 276
15:5 266, 465, 683, 701, 702
15:5-7 266, 702
15:5-8 185, 470
15:5-9 46
15:5-11 48
15:6 185, 266, 439, 467
15:6-8 806
15:7 46, 48, 55, 266, 465, 467, 683
15:7-11 344
15:8 31, 46, 48, 49, 50, 102, 186, 277, 370, 612, 624, 702, 763
15:8-9 49, 896
15:8-10 14, 48
15:8-11 174
15:9 50, 85, 116, 125, 126, 682
15:9-11 167
15:10 43, 93, 184, 321, 365, 470, 617, 681, 688, 735, 908
15:10-11 365
15:11 49, 58, 191, 370, 468, 470, 515, 648, 944
15:12 44, 74, 257, 258, 265, 273, 342, 359, 662, 735, 807
15:12-13 807
15:12-19 167, 432, 908, 974
15:12-57 555
15:12-58 694
15:13 807
15:14 289, 321, 806, 807, 992
15:15 265, 735, 757, 807, 974
15:17 289
15:17-18 44, 992
15:17-28 321
15:18 99, 439
15:19 108, 411, 553
15:20 11, 258, 263, 265, 300, 302, 303, 321, 350, 439, 856, 857, 958
15:20-21 258
15:20-22 11, 510
15:20-23 31, 33, 276, 773
15:20-26 314
15:20-28 29, 33, 34, 65, 93, 167, 211, 221, 259, 484, 500, 525, 526, 565, 980, 981, 988, 989, 990
15:20-34 920
15:21 110, 111, 807
15:21-22 11, 189, 434, 554, 766, 772
15:21-23 111
15:22 9, 78, 111, 435, 807, 812, 957, 958
15:22-24 741
15:22-28 948
15:23 11, 111, 258, 259, 300, 302, 303, 350, 467, 507, 567, 856, 857, 958
15:23-28 34, 359, 952
15:24 29, 105, 236, 260, 262, 264, 274, 302, 359, 383, 524, 525, 526, 582, 747, 748, 750, 751, 904, 949, 958
15:24-25 277, 950
15:24-26 105, 272, 277, 724, 751, 947
15:24-28 113, 190, 751, 904, 948
15:25 34, 276, 278, 359, 436, 631, 751, 904
15:25-26 554
15:25-28 12
15:26 236, 258, 272, 554, 751, 904, 950
15:26-28 958
15:27 111, 264, 356, 526, 631
15:27-28 277
15:28 104, 256, 265, 272, 278, 383, 903, 904, 981
15:29 989
15:29-34 167
15:29-41 214
15:30 50
15:30-32 357
15:31 566
15:32 50, 118, 252, 421, 631, 710, 953
15:33 386, 555
15:34 93
15:35 12, 73, 74
15:35-38 72
15:35-41 73, 909
15:35-44 75
15:35-49 810
15:35-53 694
15:35-54 75
15:35-56 167
15:35-58 968
15:36 807
15:37-38 74
15:37-40 72
15:38 303
15:38-39 303
15:39 72, 74, 217, 303
15:40-41 74
15:42 432, 807, 808, 809
15:42-43 349
15:42-44 72, 271, 276, 432, 773
15:42-46 766
15:42-49 74, 482
15:42-50 911
15:42-54 167, 409
15:42-55 772
15:42-57 773
15:42-58 314, 767
15:43 724, 808
15:43-44 350
15:44 12, 73, 74, 258, 408, 808
15:44-45 766
15:44-46 352
15:44-49 11, 111
15:44-50 276
15:45 9, 10, 12, 78, 107, 108, 110, 111, 112, 263, 349, 407, 435, 553, 554, 629, 631, 807
15:45-47 766
15:45-49 11, 12, 113
15:46 12, 73, 258, 467
15:47 10
15:47-49 12, 72, 808
15:47-50 32
15:48-49 717, 772
15:49 350, 427, 810, 908
15:50 34, 257, 263, 303, 432, 479, 480, 483, 524, 694, 769, 808, 809
15:50-53 560, 809
15:50-54 559
15:50-57 440
15:50-58 33
15:51 439, 507, 622, 808, 812
15:51-52 476, 808
15:51-53 33
15:51-54 808
15:51-56 525
15:51-57 31
15:52 432, 809, 938, 952
15:52-53 432
15:52-54 432
15:53 72, 431, 432, 809
15:53-54 271, 809
15:53-55 694
15:53-58 141
15:54 431, 631, 633, 809
15:54-55 71, 536, 554, 950
15:54-57 432
15:55 631, 739
15:55-57 554
15:56 313, 536, 537, 723, 950
15:57 71, 915, 950
15:58 167, 433, 567, 655, 920
16 300, 662
16:1 118, 124, 143, 145, 165, 323, 397, 447, 472, 663, 741
16:1-2 986
16:1-4 135, 143, 144, 171, 295, 297, 298, 448, 450, 451, 454, 472, 688, 826, 870
16:1-8 448, 455
16:1-12 167
16:2 404, 472, 570, 826, 885
16:2-4 118, 448, 450
16:3 143, 187, 373, 472, 473
16:3-4 187, 448
16:5-6 448
16:5-7 450
16:5-8 176
16:5-9 118, 168
16:5-12 552
16:6 403
16:7 450, 567
16:8 403, 447
16:10 184, 567
16:10-11 136, 176, 448
16:12 165, 183, 184, 362, 663
16:13 290
16:13-14 167
16:13-24 167
16:15 56, 133, 187, 397, 417, 857, 884, 885, 889
16:15-16 131, 135, 604, 662, 688
16:15-17 176
16:15-18 164, 176, 184
16:16 133, 135, 183, 657, 658
16:17 259
16:18 183
16:19 38, 39, 124, 125, 174, 187, 306, 326, 417, 447, 603, 710, 888
16:19-20 185
16:20 577
16:21 552, 573, 680, 738
16:21-24 663
16:22 101, 167, 191, 192, 200, 215, 216, 217, 260, 277, 557, 559, 562, 728, 731, 987, 989, 990
16:22-24 987
16:23 372, 552, 558
16:24 68, 552, 558, 576, 577

2 Corinthians

1 55, 58, 180, 186, 564, 670, 919, 974, 975
1—7 167
1—9 118, 178, 448
1:1 48, 49, 126, 184, 185, 244, 362, 397, 658, 660, 853
1:1-2 167
1:1—2:13 176, 177
1:2 68, 278, 699
1:3 168, 357, 365, 601, 728, 730, 988
1:3-4 68, 552, 733
1:3-7 20, 985
1:3-10 920
1:3-11 168, 169, 558, 919
1:4-7 357
1:5 50, 349
1:5-7 184
1:6 577, 920
1:6-7 168
1:7 168, 178, 294
1:8 118, 252, 391, 440, 441, 472, 686, 710, 724
1:8-9 19, 20, 219
1:8-10 219, 685
1:8-11 68, 219, 261, 552, 726, 731, 795
1:8—2:13 391
1:8—9:15 695
1:9 168, 169, 807, 919
1:10 168, 862
1:11 69, 70, 168, 340, 730
1:12 154, 168, 304, 876, 973, 974
1:12—2:13 168, 695
1:13 260
1:14 34, 259
1:15 168, 448
1:15-16 168, 450
1:15-22 362, 558
1:15—2:4 168
1:16 391, 448, 451, 454
1:17 168, 304, 305, 448, 450
1:17-20 906
1:17-22 287
1:18 55, 365, 558
1:18-22 908, 985
1:19 167, 256, 359, 369, 370, 447, 455, 647,

903, 906
1:19-20 168, 651, 906
1:20 69, 348, 558, 559, 906, 986
1:20-21 988
1:20-22 988
1:21 63, 96
1:21-22 405, 907
1:22 40, 263, 300, 301, 411, 412, 469, 576, 773, 906
1:23 168, 450, 769, 974
1:23-24 168
1:23—2:4 679
1:24 56, 132, 136, 290, 512, 657, 887, 967
1:30 967
2 50, 646
2:1 176, 450, 451, 455
2:1-2 176, 448, 450
2:1-4 176
2:1-5 168
2:3 176
2:3-4 448
2:3-9 176
2:4 86, 87, 252, 577, 578, 655, 769, 919
2:5 168
2:5-8 176
2:5-9 600
2:5-11 57, 94, 168, 215, 216, 217
2:6 59
2:6-7 312
2:7 150, 168
2:7-8 59
2:8 56, 577
2:8-9 168
2:9 136, 168, 448
2:10 150, 312
2:11 32, 105, 168, 261, 359, 731, 863, 865
2:12 455, 903
2:12-13 118, 168, 169, 448
2:12-23 176
2:13 50, 176, 184, 185, 448, 455, 554, 770, 919
2:13-14 304
2:14 71, 169, 450, 681, 754, 915, 919, 948, 952
2:14-16 9, 49, 257
2:14-17 919
2:14—3:5 647
2:14—3:6 169
2:14—6:13 177
2:14—7:16 171, 695
2:15 235, 859, 861, 956
2:15-16 169, 993
2:16 169, 178
2:17 39, 49, 50, 55, 58, 168, 169, 174, 175, 237, 647, 876, 919, 926, 974
2:17—3:1 651
2:17—4:6 819
2:24 656
3 175, 180, 271, 405, 617
3—4 181
3:1 175, 186, 537, 647
3:1-2 55, 537
3:1-3 55, 58, 315, 606, 647, 876
3:1-18 177, 537, 804, 908, 911
3:2 386
3:2-3 50, 169, 537, 607, 964
3:3 303, 407, 769
3:4-6 169
3:4-9 651
3:4-16 645, 647
3:4-17 313
3:4-18 103, 138, 175, 178, 646
3:4—4:6 14, 48
3:5 49, 646
3:5-6 50
3:6 169, 179, 180, 184, 185, 263, 348, 349, 537, 554, 646, 670, 672, 807, 909
3:6-7 646
3:6-16 287, 637
3:6-18 178, 349, 621
3:7 169, 355, 441, 537, 620, 621, 646
3:7-9 870
3:7-11 236, 348, 355, 537, 620, 637
3:7-18 169, 678
3:8 169, 349, 409, 620
3:8-9 169, 537
3:9 50, 349, 355, 537, 620, 646
3:10 150
3:10-11 170
3:11 108, 348, 620
3:11-12 169
3:12 620
3:12-13 169, 620
3:12-16 636
3:12-18 179, 537
3:12—4:6 808, 903
3:13 441, 538
3:13-15 621
3:14 108, 179, 180, 537, 620, 621
3:14-15 169, 770
3:14-17 944
3:14—4:4 55
3:15 620
3:15-17 620
3:15-18 564
3:16 108, 407, 563, 564, 620, 631
3:16-17 169
3:17 108, 265, 349, 367, 407, 909, 944
3:17-18 278, 410, 913
3:17-19 63
3:18 167, 169, 170, 358, 360, 363, 382, 407, 427, 482, 507, 527, 586, 620, 808, 810, 831, 908, 909
4 69, 70, 733
4:1 49, 365, 602, 646, 647
4:1-6 170, 770, 908
4:2 50, 154, 155, 876, 909, 926, 955
4:3 57, 370, 956
4:3-4 170, 731, 993
4:4 13, 105, 170, 211, 216, 235, 256, 262, 303, 349, 426, 427, 688, 736, 864, 903, 956, 980, 981, 982
4:4-6 266, 355, 556, 773
4:5 55, 170, 315, 370, 487, 577, 735, 811, 870, 887
4:5-12 908
4:6 103, 163, 170, 349, 356, 427, 556, 768
4:6—5:21 178
4:7 43, 681, 724, 920
4:7-8 49, 50
4:7-10 140
4:7-12 55, 724, 895, 911, 919, 920
4:7-15 169, 170, 196, 357, 876
4:7-18 407
4:7—6:13 170
4:8-9 18, 972
4:8-12 221, 607
4:10 170, 196, 304, 481, 486, 487, 502, 724, 810, 952
4:10-11 221, 768
4:10-12 808
4:10-18 810
4:11 72, 170, 304, 486, 919
4:11-12 989
4:12 170, 625
4:13 170, 289, 631, 635, 921
4:14 170, 265, 489, 807, 920
4:14-15 170
4:15 170, 360, 373, 915
4:16 9, 49, 257, 350, 554, 647, 717, 765, 773
4:16-17 909
4:16-18 170, 920
4:17 362, 378, 810
4:17-18 773
4:18 32, 717, 733
4:23 49
5 58, 204, 292, 394, 440, 606, 696, 766, 924
5:1 258, 381, 382, 432, 481, 482, 489, 949
5:1-5 32, 409, 440, 767
5:1-10 261, 266, 301, 305, 432, 439, 440, 555, 686, 767, 772
5:2 110, 381
5:2-4 170, 809
5:3 74, 382, 391
5:3-4 439
5:4 72, 555, 949
5:5 40, 170, 263, 301, 382, 405, 411, 412, 432, 469, 576, 907, 988
5:6 555
5:6-8 438
5:6-10 292
5:7 289, 717
5:8 73, 170, 258, 439, 440, 517, 686
5:9 409
5:9-10 170, 607
5:10 33, 34, 113, 261, 359, 516, 517, 521, 774, 811, 832, 877
5:11 154, 155, 170, 292
5:11-13 50
5:11-21 292
5:12 49
5:12-13 647
5:12-15 170
5:13 625, 647
5:14 145, 170, 202, 204, 220, 435, 575, 576, 605, 696, 879, 990
5:14-15 62, 576, 607, 696
5:14-21 96, 219
5:14—6:2 195, 204
5:15 63, 202, 204, 208, 220, 265, 408, 435, 572, 696, 808, 810
5:15-16 273
5:16 48, 50, 102, 170, 190, 276, 304, 305, 500, 736, 909
5:16-17 190, 204, 695
5:16-21 170, 920
5:17 14, 30, 31, 32, 65, 99, 112, 170, 189, 190, 205, 220, 223, 256, 257, 273, 349, 407, 629, 832, 980
5:17-18 189
5:17-19 909, 947
5:17-21 190, 716, 835, 982
5:18 93, 94, 105, 204, 280, 646, 695, 697
5:18-19 187, 236, 434, 695, 696, 832, 836
5:18-21 61, 93, 94, 141, 191, 280, 355, 651, 695, 876, 989
5:19 50, 96, 105, 170, 202, 204, 205, 281, 371, 433, 538, 695, 696, 858, 958, 959, 980, 981
5:19-20 618, 832
5:20 84, 94, 130, 170, 204, 605, 657, 695, 696, 735, 959
5:20-21 695, 696
5:21 170, 204, 208, 281, 349, 363, 484, 646, 676, 695, 832, 836, 856, 879
6 599, 827
6:1 43, 56, 94, 170, 185, 321, 657
6:1-2 204, 400
6:2 170, 631, 861, 921, 980
6:3 386, 646
6:3-10 49, 50, 169, 202, 895, 919, 920
6:3-13 170
6:4 184, 185, 362, 972
6:4-5 18, 449, 752
6:4-10 55, 117, 140, 357, 876, 908, 920, 972
6:5 752, 753, 925
6:6 577
6:6-7 922
6:7 361, 635, 831, 950, 953, 954
6:8 963
6:9 386, 635
6:10 826
6:11 577
6:11-13 94, 204
6:12 655
6:13 176, 655, 656
6:14 380, 396, 598, 804, 831
6:14-15 170
6:14-18 400
6:14—7:1 18, 167, 177, 399, 864
6:14—7:2 170
6:15 864
6:16 170, 481, 631, 751, 924, 948
6:16—7:1 482
6:16-18 127, 630
6:17 127, 170, 631
6:17-18 563
6:18 17, 18, 360, 631
7:1 170, 292, 303, 305, 397, 399, 400, 769, 770, 771, 773, 776, 910, 911, 915
7:2 168, 204, 555, 876, 891
7:2-5 171
7:2-15 171
7:3 577
7:5 293, 304, 448, 455, 554, 681, 770
7:5-7 168
7:5-8 171
7:5-13 177
7:5-16 118
7:6 658, 661
7:6-7 259, 448, 577
7:6-13 176
7:7 462, 658
7:7-16 168
7:8 660
7:8-11 578
7:8-12 176, 448
7:8-13 168, 176
7:9-10 910
7:9-13 57, 171
7:10 462, 861, 980, 981
7:11 292, 462, 776
7:11-16 171
7:12-13 661
7:13 655
7:14 955
7:15 136, 293
8 71, 657, 889
8—9 143, 144, 167, 187, 270, 295, 298, 299, 450, 718, 826, 827, 870, 885, 897, 914, 984
8:1 124, 326, 373, 915
8:1-2 920
8:1-4 270, 373

8:1-5 143
8:1-7 133
8:1-9 577
8:1-15 298
8:1—9:15 171, 472
8:2 826, 827
8:2-4 145
8:3 145, 974
8:4 143, 144, 270, 294, 370, 397, 472
8:5 537
8:6 143, 176, 472, 658, 915
8:6-7 171, 270
8:7 143, 289, 365, 373, 527
8:8 145, 171, 270, 914
8:8-9 145, 171, 577
8:9 71, 106, 109, 192, 270, 373, 487, 499, 502, 745, 746, 826, 915, 988
8:10 57, 472
8:10-11 171
8:11-12 145
8:12 143
8:13 980
8:13-14 145, 270
8:13-15 143, 826
8:14-15 171
8:15 270, 537, 631
8:16 71, 188, 576, 915
8:16—9:5 298
8:16-17 171
8:16-23 167, 184
8:16-24 47, 186, 448, 472
8:18 185
8:18-19 67
8:18-21 55, 143
8:18-23 171
8:19 124, 143, 145, 187, 945
8:19-20 915
8:20 143
8:20-21 168
8:21 272, 631, 915
8:22-23 185
8:23 45, 124, 183, 184, 185, 186, 683, 915
8:24 124, 145, 171, 188
8:35-39 972
9 144, 657, 889, 897
9—11 864
9:1 143, 397, 472
9:1-5 145, 171
9:1-15 577
9:2 143, 326, 463, 472
9:3 150
9:4 143
9:4-5 448
9:5 143, 176, 472
9:5-11 143
9:6-9 171
9:6-10 144
9:6-15 145, 171, 298
9:7 631, 770, 915, 968
9:8 171, 270, 361, 717, 915
9:9 631, 968
9:9-10 270, 271
9:10 146, 631, 831
9:10-12 171
9:10-15 827
9:11 70, 826, 915
9:11-12 915
9:11-13 728
9:12 70, 134, 143, 171, 397, 473
9:12-15 145
9:13 143, 144, 171, 271, 294, 370, 371, 915
9:13-14 270, 870
9:14 171, 371, 372, 728
9:14-15 915
9:15 71, 171, 354, 372, 915
9:27 400
10 647
10—12 645, 647
10—13 117, 118, 132, 176, 177, 260, 379, 386, 448, 669, 824, 886, 919, 939, 964, 966
10:1 56, 171, 487, 499, 607, 657, 876, 964
10:1-6 49
10:1-11 190
10:1-12 893
10:1—12:13 681
10:1—13:10 171
10:2 171, 304, 305, 607
10:3 132, 305, 887
10:3-4 304
10:3-5 657, 953
10:3-6 136
10:4-6 50
10:5 754, 972
10:6 171, 657
10:7 50, 645
10:7-11 171
10:8 49, 56, 130, 132, 657, 887, 993
10:9-10 607
10:10 38, 39, 169, 171, 175, 259, 607, 645, 821, 822, 876, 936
10:10-11 55
10:11 449, 738
10:12 171, 175, 647
10:12-14 49, 58
10:12-15 56, 132
10:12-16 609, 617
10:12-18 171, 362
10:12—12:12 819
10:13 56
10:13-14 647
10:13-18 650
10:14 56, 370, 645, 903
10:14-16 450
10:15 56, 289, 910
10:15-16 56, 58, 237
10:16 56, 645, 735
10:17 563, 631
10:17-18 171
11 556, 655, 919
11—12 295, 968
11:1 171
11:1-4 645
11:1-6 338
11:1—12:10 171
11:1—12:13 647
11:2 462, 606, 776, 872
11:3 49, 293, 555, 591, 771, 864, 865, 878
11:4 49, 50, 58, 170, 172, 174, 175, 176, 177, 371, 408, 645, 647, 649, 735
11:4-5 647
11:5 49, 171, 186, 645, 647, 650, 876, 964
11:5-6 132, 607, 647, 671
11:6 607, 645, 821, 936
11:7 370, 735, 903, 927
11:7-9 455, 887, 914
11:7-10 132, 927
11:7-11 168, 607, 884, 897, 919
11:7-12 55, 172
11:7-15 39, 169, 171, 174, 296
11:8 124, 296
11:8-9 118
11:9 296, 447, 927
11:10 827, 954, 974
11:10-18 296
11:11 577
11:12 172, 175
11:12-15 171, 172, 191
11:13 49, 58, 186, 236, 645
11:13-14 655
11:13-15 50, 55, 58, 237, 360, 645, 646, 670, 735, 864, 964
11:14 21, 32, 236, 261, 262, 379, 556, 650, 863, 864
11:14-15 58, 186, 379, 993
11:15 22, 49, 185, 186, 265, 645, 646, 865
11:16 132
11:16-21 171
11:16—12:10 219
11:17 49
11:18 175, 304
11:20 58, 237, 647, 926
11:21 895
11:21-22 58, 175
11:21-23 172
11:21-29 357
11:21-33 117, 876
11:22 8, 187, 354, 441, 504, 508, 607, 645, 647, 799
11:23 49, 118, 185, 252, 605, 647, 650, 671, 685, 710, 752, 753, 870, 925
11:23-27 450, 763
11:23-28 972
11:23-29 18, 379, 752, 919, 920
11:23-33 169, 171, 172, 607, 645
11:23—12:10 49, 50, 55, 362, 378
11:24 19, 215, 470, 838
11:24-25 801
11:24-27 380
11:24-28 735
11:25 140, 141, 449
11:25-27 451
11:26 19, 237
11:27 925, 926
11:28 124, 168, 655
11:28-29 606
11:29 655, 918
11:30 919
11:30-33 965
11:31 69, 106, 558, 974, 985
11:32 117, 719
11:32-33 121, 447, 454, 455, 683, 965
11:33 117
12 380, 382, 964, 972
12:1 31, 49, 58, 508, 607, 731, 757, 963, 965
12:1-4 508, 509, 625, 763, 963, 964
12:1-5 382, 607, 647
12:1-6 876
12:1-7 944
12:1-10 31, 41, 266, 361, 362, 383, 964, 987
12:2 36, 436, 508, 964
12:2-4 49, 964
12:2-5 965
12:2-10 686
12:3 361, 508
12:4 438, 508, 757, 794, 964
12:5-6 965
12:6 955
12:6-10 172
12:7 22, 32, 49, 217, 261, 262, 303, 378, 379, 380, 645, 757, 768, 863, 865, 920, 964
12:7-9 965
12:7-10 379, 724, 733, 876
12:8-9 20
12:9 172, 365, 373, 475, 700, 876, 966
12:9-10 19, 379, 607, 681, 819, 876, 920
12:10 18, 50, 365, 724, 919, 952, 965
12:11 49, 171, 645, 650, 964
12:11-12 607
12:11-13 607
12:11-18 172
12:11—13:10 172
12:12 49, 55, 58, 171, 175, 211, 345, 409, 481, 485, 486, 605, 647, 655, 683, 735, 875, 876, 963, 964
12:13 55, 124, 312
12:13-17 171
12:13-18 39, 168, 174, 296
12:13-19 169
12:14 56, 132, 171, 448, 655, 656
12:14-16 919
12:14-18 296, 298, 607, 927
12:14—13:13 449
12:15 577, 607, 655
12:16 49
12:16-18 55
12:18 56, 183, 188
12:19 49, 172, 578, 657, 974
12:19—13:10 172
12:20 132, 462, 922, 962, 972, 991, 992
12:20-21 171, 448, 732, 923
12:20—13:1 176
12:21 42, 172, 409, 448, 600, 872
12:23-31 908
13 56, 907
13:1 455, 537, 631, 632, 639
13:1-2 215, 216, 217, 448
13:1-4 171, 172, 449, 754, 965
13:2 42, 448, 451, 455
13:2-3 607
13:2-4 578, 607
13:3 49, 171, 724, 876
13:4 50, 198, 221, 349, 361, 365, 407, 435, 486, 607, 724, 808, 919, 966
13:5 43, 290, 732, 819
13:5-9 172
13:5-10 171
13:7 732, 880
13:8 954
13:9 577, 910
13:9-10 450
13:10 49, 130, 132, 172, 448, 449, 578, 607, 657
13:11 364, 577, 657, 699, 972
13:11-13 172
13:12 397, 577
13:12-13 552
13:13 108, 294, 364, 366, 372, 405, 407, 410, 412, 558, 566, 908
13:14 32, 68, 113

Galatians

1 89, 122, 125, 156, 158, 159, 160, 161, 314, 465, 498, 499, 651, 728, 944
1—2 162, 453, 562
1:1 48, 49, 55, 56, 86, 265, 326, 330, 468, 469, 481, 551, 605, 606, 739, 807, 824
1:1-2 185
1:1-5 329, 330, 551, 823
1:1-17 157
1:2 124, 323, 326, 660
1:3 278, 558, 699
1:3-4 716
1:3-5 558
1:4 31, 93, 105, 139, 195, 202, 205, 216, 235, 256, 264, 313, 330, 481, 485, 486,

538, 771, 825, 866, 879, 920, 950, 951, 980, 981
1:5 69, 354, 553, 558
1:6 84, 186, 329, 330, 371, 552, 737, 739
1:6-7 308, 360, 370, 468
1:6-8 735
1:6-9 2, 326, 655, 686, 763, 824
1:6-10 329
1:6-11 329, 823
1:6-17 131, 202, 894, 895
1:6—4:11 329, 330, 823
1:7 101, 329, 468, 649, 817, 824, 903
1:7-9 2, 330
1:8 5, 22, 32, 55, 56, 58, 130, 237, 262, 370, 381, 865
1:8-9 191, 200, 538, 552, 573, 578, 728, 824
1:9 136, 237, 649, 817
1:10 314, 329, 330, 870
1:11 370, 391, 468, 552, 606
1:11-12 55, 56, 157, 330, 624, 735, 944, 963
1:11-17 31, 50, 157, 262, 266, 908
1:11-23 101
1:11—2:10 887
1:11—2:14 117
1:11—2:21 329, 824, 825
1:12 31, 57, 103, 163, 266, 338, 468, 606, 624, 757, 763, 964
1:12—2:14 329, 823
1:12-16 481, 485
1:13 116, 126, 461, 682, 909
1:13-14 330, 513, 750, 903
1:13-16 323, 484
1:13-17 14, 48
1:13-21 330
1:13—2:10 55, 701
1:13—2:21 330
1:14 116, 338, 354, 461, 504, 682, 725, 818, 943
1:14-15 157
1:15 50, 157, 330, 365, 370, 445, 465, 467, 551, 735, 799, 870
1:15-16 49, 55, 85, 93, 101, 321, 529, 605, 612, 624, 735, 763, 779, 903
1:15-17 56, 157, 461, 606, 648, 687, 799, 944
1:15-21 905
1:15—2:9 649
1:15—2:14 648
1:16 56, 103, 117, 157, 256, 266, 303, 330, 370, 551, 553, 565, 624, 648, 683, 735, 763, 769, 799, 903, 963, 964
1:16-17 117, 157, 330, 447
1:17 46, 48, 117, 447, 455, 612, 651, 683
1:17—2:21 323
1:18 66, 102, 327, 328, 447, 454, 455, 465, 466, 467, 472, 498, 500, 648, 660, 701
1:18-19 47, 330, 447, 645
1:18-20 117, 451, 454, 687
1:18-21 607, 648
1:18—2:1 638
1:19 48, 457, 487, 562, 651, 683
1:20 121, 327, 453, 454, 648, 985
1:21 117, 186, 328, 447, 453, 454, 455, 467, 813
1:21-22 648
1:21-24 66, 330, 683
1:21—2:1 117
1:22 99, 124, 126, 436, 465
1:23 19, 290, 370, 447, 465, 735, 909, 993
2 102, 121, 122, 161, 230, 298, 307, 309, 337, 338, 392, 453, 454, 463, 465, 466, 467, 468, 486, 513, 514, 617, 624, 649, 669, 670
2—4 955
2:1 117, 121, 122, 183, 185, 187, 454, 465, 466, 467, 468
2:1-2 701
2:1-3 465, 466, 471
2:1-10 55, 66, 102, 117, 119, 143, 144, 307, 327, 328, 330, 447, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 465, 466, 467, 472, 474, 607, 648, 671, 683, 687
2:1-14 454
2:1-20 328
2:2 43, 55, 66, 122, 321, 346, 387, 453, 466, 467, 468, 470, 735, 763, 813, 944, 964
2:2-6 470
2:3 332, 469, 538
2:3-4 55
2:3-5 139, 469, 649
2:3-6 333
2:4 333, 648, 649, 825
2:4-5 187, 466
2:5 314, 323, 332, 370, 371, 648, 954, 955
2:6 56, 58, 327, 363, 471, 608, 648, 702, 703
2:6-9 330, 651, 944
2:6-10 468, 657
2:7 335, 467, 701, 735
2:7-8 466, 467, 485, 683, 701, 702, 799
2:7-9 48, 130, 466, 467, 470, 481, 648, 650, 681
2:7-10 465
2:8 47, 263, 467, 515, 701
2:9 56, 58, 66, 185, 373, 457, 465, 467, 470, 473, 481, 645, 650, 651, 660, 668, 670, 701, 702, 838
2:9-10 187, 295, 299
2:10 118, 119, 143, 187, 270, 297, 453, 466, 467, 472, 657, 686, 702, 827, 870
2:11 314, 701, 702, 883
2:11-13 67, 473
2:11-14 24, 58, 117, 145, 307, 314, 328, 330, 332, 447, 453, 454, 455, 466, 487, 488, 538, 544, 578, 645, 648, 649, 650, 693, 702, 703, 817
2:11-16 538
2:11-19 775
2:11-21 19, 317, 477
2:12 24, 292, 307, 314, 457, 513, 649, 651, 670, 702, 710
2:12-13 649
2:12-14 187
2:13 67, 183, 185, 465
2:13-14 24
2:14 370, 371, 513, 648, 701, 702, 955
2:14-21 314, 702
2:15 331, 702
2:15-16 55
2:15-17 702
2:15-21 329, 330, 331, 538, 823, 976
2:16 99, 271, 286, 287, 304, 323, 331, 371, 373, 468, 489, 509, 510, 529, 530, 538, 539, 631, 702, 778, 823, 832, 905, 975
2:16-19 905
2:16-21 530
2:17 99, 184, 331, 647, 832
2:18 331
2:19 198, 199, 205, 330, 331, 433, 639, 775
2:19-20 72, 220, 289, 331, 824
2:19-21 989
2:20 32, 93, 99, 109, 195, 202, 256, 266, 278, 287, 304, 318, 407, 481, 485, 499, 502, 572, 575, 577, 607, 691, 819, 825, 879, 903, 905
2:21 139, 202, 271, 330, 331, 365, 538, 825, 831, 905, 977
3 4, 5, 199, 200, 287, 333, 405, 639, 640, 738, 985
3—4 17, 678, 802
3—5 271
3:1 2, 139, 198, 199, 202, 323, 330, 331, 370, 486, 640, 649, 735, 772, 779, 817, 824, 825, 920
3:1-2 2, 326, 332, 407, 408
3:1-3 409
3:1-5 2, 3, 138, 145, 329, 331, 405, 538, 670
3:1-6 907, 909
3:1-9 214
3:1-14 198, 204
3:1—3:14 2
3:1—4:1 905
3:1—4:11 291, 824
3:1—4:31 559, 823
3:2 2, 55, 288, 331, 400, 406, 469, 640, 672, 957, 975
3:2-3 306
3:2-5 331
3:3 2, 304, 331, 772, 781
3:4 43, 321
3:4-5 346
3:5 2, 55, 211, 288, 331, 345, 380, 405, 406, 412, 486, 603, 876, 975
3:6 2, 3, 287, 457, 468, 631, 822, 830
3:6-7 640, 822
3:6-9 138, 469
3:6-12 323
3:6-14 649, 817
3:6-25 323, 890
3:6-29 331
3:6—4:11 329
3:7 3, 287, 338, 527
3:8 3, 5, 287, 369, 371, 435, 631, 741, 832
3:8-9 3, 68
3:9 287, 332, 435
3:10 3, 18, 199, 200, 332, 538, 631, 632, 633, 640, 672, 785, 797, 800, 801, 802, 878, 951, 975, 976, 978
3:10-12 672
3:10-13 313
3:10-14 138, 204, 538, 639, 682, 750
3:11 205, 271, 332, 555, 631, 632, 640, 831, 832
3:11-12 637, 977
3:12 286, 332, 631, 672, 978
3:13 3, 97, 102, 139, 199, 200, 205, 275, 281, 313, 330, 332, 572, 631, 782, 785, 800, 802, 919, 951, 977, 989
3:13-14 17, 199, 287, 288, 323, 332, 538, 802, 825
3:14 3, 68, 205, 332, 371, 957
3:15 179, 182
3:15-17 180
3:15-18 3, 348, 538
3:15-20 672
3:15—4:7 138, 977
3:16 3, 4, 17, 276, 332, 631, 632
3:16-17 4
3:17 3, 179, 538
3:17-18 782
3:17-19 672
3:18 4
3:19 3, 4, 232, 262, 531, 620, 621, 824, 951
3:19-21 332
3:19-22 4, 214
3:19-25 332
3:20 4, 355
3:20-21 320
3:21 332, 824, 831, 978
3:22 287, 313, 771
3:22-23 313, 774, 951
3:22-24 333
3:23 5, 286, 539, 754, 823
3:23-24 694
3:23-25 230, 232, 539
3:23-29 4
3:24 4, 32, 832, 878
3:24-25 271, 663, 823
3:25 4, 5, 286
3:26 5, 18, 62, 209, 290, 559
3:26-27 62, 63, 64, 220
3:26-28 60, 63, 435, 654, 873, 885
3:26-29 205, 273, 308, 332
3:26—4:7 313
3:27 17, 61, 62, 64, 487, 621, 772, 810, 989
3:27-28 267, 273, 577, 689, 905
3:27-29 209
3:28 5, 96, 113, 232, 267, 273, 323, 335, 338, 390, 419, 435, 583, 706, 853, 874, 885, 888
3:28-29 338
3:29 5, 287, 469, 640, 741
4 17, 408, 902
4:1 17, 205
4:1-2 5, 16, 18
4:1-6 907
4:1-7 16, 128, 907, 909, 951
4:1-10 5, 333
4:1-11 5, 332, 539
4:1—5:1 539
4:2 5
4:3 6, 205, 229, 230, 231, 262, 313, 583, 980, 981
4:3-5 951
4:3-7 17
4:4 17, 98, 104, 109, 256, 257, 276, 278, 319, 320, 407, 487,

498, 501, 538, 825, 902, 903, 905, 971
4:4-5 313, 360, 783, 785, 802, 824, 971
4:4-6 17, 367, 408
4:4-7 410
4:5 15, 16, 17, 109, 264, 330, 559, 905
4:5-7 358
4:6 17, 18, 256, 264, 265, 278, 323, 358, 405, 407, 412, 469, 479, 559, 562, 902, 903, 907, 908, 911, 912, 971
4:6-7 5, 483, 576
4:7 18, 559
4:8 2, 5, 230, 231, 232
4:8-9 5, 313
4:8-10 2, 210, 230
4:9 5, 6, 128, 210, 229, 230, 311, 322, 403, 527, 583, 663, 980
4:9-10 531, 663
4:10 5, 231, 403, 487, 538, 544
4:11 43, 293, 321, 332, 488
4:12 136, 329, 332, 656
4:12-15 118, 326, 920
4:12-19 939
4:12-20 5, 329, 330, 332, 391, 430, 449, 825
4:12—6:10 330, 332
4:12—6:18 823
4:13 304, 327, 328, 379, 447, 455, 466
4:13-14 304, 378
4:13-15 768
4:13-16 450
4:14 5, 22, 262, 366, 379, 380
4:15 974
4:16 236, 968
4:16-20 655
4:17 461, 462, 824
4:18 461, 462, 968
4:19 56, 133, 326, 357, 606, 655, 656, 691
4:20 449, 655, 679
4:21—5:1 5
4:21-31 323, 329, 330, 332, 539, 636, 637
4:21-32 180
4:22-31 968
4:23 304, 305
4:24 6, 179, 538, 539, 636
4:24-25 5
4:24-26 717
4:24-31 782
4:25 6, 333, 539
4:26 6, 34, 381, 382, 539, 744
4:27 6, 631
4:28 6, 538
4:28—5:1 6
4:29 6, 304, 305, 333, 442, 824
4:30 2, 6, 329, 333, 631
4:31 333
5 304, 317, 407, 410, 576, 668, 767, 871
5—6 341
5:1 6, 59, 180, 269, 313, 314, 323, 333, 739, 825, 887
5:1-2 649
5:1-12 329
5:1—6:10 329, 330, 333, 823, 922, 944
5:1—6:16 674
5:2 287, 326, 470, 551, 824
5:2-3 2, 5
5:2-4 43, 468, 469
5:2-6 138, 538, 544
5:2-12 55, 217, 333
5:3 513, 514, 538, 682, 974
5:4 40, 55, 271, 329, 338, 538, 977
5:4-5 518, 522, 832
5:5 270, 286, 288, 411, 462
5:5-6 289, 462
5:6 139, 145, 287, 436, 459, 529, 576, 833, 908
5:7 824, 954, 955
5:8 84
5:8-10 2
5:9 824, 856, 968
5:10 43, 649, 686, 817
5:11 19, 33, 139, 198, 330, 611, 649, 682, 801, 919, 939
5:11-12 538
5:12 237, 578, 649, 686, 817
5:13 84, 305, 314, 333, 462, 543, 657, 739, 880
5:13-14 271, 315, 323
5:13-21 663
5:13-26 93, 317, 641, 670
5:13—6:10 323, 333, 544
5:14 145, 238, 271, 319, 334, 478, 489, 539, 544, 577, 631, 944
5:15 314, 462, 544, 577
5:16 33, 305, 314, 317, 407, 409, 411, 462, 544, 554, 909
5:16-17 405
5:16-18 32
5:16-24 32, 42, 910
5:16-25 254
5:16-26 113, 380, 701, 765, 771, 968
5:16—6:10 314
5:17 305
5:17-21 879
5:18 317, 334, 373, 405, 544
5:19 426, 517, 538, 781
5:19-21 42, 217, 305, 314, 317, 318, 458, 459, 460, 544, 600, 694, 771, 962, 963, 972
5:19-23 393, 577, 884, 922, 962, 963
5:20 235, 462, 582, 991
5:21 34, 257, 263, 318, 329, 462, 479, 480, 483, 500, 524, 956
5:22 270, 271, 287, 288, 315, 407, 411, 462, 576, 699, 781, 963
5:22-23 32, 273, 289, 316, 317, 410, 458, 487, 512, 539, 544, 576, 577, 760, 771, 908, 913, 962, 972
5:22-26 306, 773
5:23 334
5:24 197, 198, 305, 330, 333, 538, 773, 781, 810
5:24-25 220, 808
5:25 32, 269, 317, 409, 462, 544, 554, 909
5:25—6:10 972
5:26 544
6 190, 418, 544
6:1 133, 216, 543, 544, 658, 733
6:1-2 409, 544
6:1-5 215, 216
6:1-10 314
6:2 271, 314, 319, 334, 478, 512, 539, 542, 543, 576, 577, 658, 733, 971
6:2-5 973
6:4 266, 270
6:6 134, 135, 185, 187, 270, 294, 604, 660
6:6-10 143, 544
6:7 968
6:7-8 880
6:7-10 409, 458
6:8 108, 305, 329, 516, 517, 538, 544, 554, 771, 810
6:10 145, 205, 270, 290, 577, 654, 826
6:11 380, 552, 680, 738
6:11-18 329, 330, 334, 663, 823
6:12 139, 198, 304, 305, 308, 330, 538, 649, 817, 824
6:12-13 2, 5, 55, 334, 538
6:13 304, 514, 538, 825
6:13-14 540
6:14 32, 93, 139, 196, 198, 230, 304, 330, 334, 512, 891, 980, 981
6:14-15 221, 274, 824
6:14-45 808
6:15 30, 31, 139, 187, 189, 190, 205, 257, 273, 308, 334, 441, 909, 951, 980
6:15-16 15, 189, 824
6:16 113, 329, 334, 441, 552, 602, 649, 728, 817, 951
6:17 334, 486, 487, 607, 908, 919
6:18 68, 334, 552, 558, 566, 771

Ephesians

1 30, 704, 750
1:1 48, 86, 241, 244, 246, 252, 290, 362, 397, 680, 931, 932
1:1-10 355
1:1-14 982
1:2 558, 699, 730
1:3 68, 126, 246, 372, 382, 583, 740
1:3-4 727
1:3-5 226, 227
1:3-6 373, 744
1:3-10 434, 985
1:3-14 68, 238, 366, 367, 372, 420, 421, 552, 558, 716, 988
1:4 68, 226, 228, 246, 247, 310, 356, 397, 398, 740, 980, 981
1:4-5 225, 575
1:4-6 348
1:5 15, 17, 227, 228, 264, 362, 583
1:6 365, 372, 988
1:7 246, 281, 312, 313, 372, 785, 810, 826
1:7-10 221
1:8-19 773
1:9 583, 622, 759, 761
1:9-10 189, 264
1:10 15, 32, 93, 94, 190, 228, 236, 246, 247, 264, 272, 320, 375, 381, 582, 583, 891, 959, 970, 979, 981
1:11 226, 227, 228, 583
1:11-14 301
1:12 80, 348
1:13 40, 108, 239, 288, 405, 859, 907, 914, 954
1:13-14 247, 407, 411, 469
1:14 40, 247, 263, 301, 313, 394, 418, 785, 810
1:15 244, 290, 397, 576, 931
1:15-18 289, 718
1:15-19 391, 551, 583, 606
1:15-23 239, 724, 733, 988
1:16 70, 242
1:16-23 728
1:17 348, 357, 360
1:17-19 606, 770
1:18 84, 348, 397, 768, 769, 773, 826
1:19 948
1:19-20 246, 406
1:19-21 276
1:19-23 247, 583
1:20 265, 277, 382, 436, 627, 807, 809
1:20-21 81, 627
1:20-22 582, 751, 947, 950
1:20-23 239, 360, 724
1:21 236, 256, 302, 313, 627, 747, 748, 749, 980
1:21-22 246, 277
1:22 59, 99, 125, 248, 320, 375, 377, 378, 627, 981
1:22-23 80, 81, 126, 272, 338, 378, 622, 868
1:23 71, 76, 80, 81, 128, 246, 248, 320, 353, 378
2 86, 211, 224, 629, 750
2:1 554, 555, 878
2:1-3 258, 314, 366, 723
2:1-10 33, 93, 235, 313
2:2 216, 262, 274, 582, 583, 623, 748, 864, 980, 981
2:2-3 771
2:3 236, 303, 952, 992
2:4 236, 246, 601, 826
2:4-5 575
2:5 247, 365, 373, 554, 807, 859, 861
2:5-6 126, 583, 694, 808
2:6 81, 151, 247, 382, 434, 807, 809
2:7 318, 320, 365, 826, 980
2:8 247, 286, 554, 859, 861
2:8-9 247, 373
2:8-10 860
2:10 247, 272, 373, 583, 980, 981
2:11 239, 335
2:11-13 698
2:11-21 468
2:11-22 94, 145, 182, 189, 190, 209, 252, 272, 273, 443, 470, 473
2:12 179, 366, 951
2:12-18 247
2:12-19 421
2:13 951
2:13-18 15, 369
2:14 236, 698, 951
2:14-15 103, 205, 925, 951
2:14-16 189, 236, 273, 353, 557, 950
2:14-17 698
2:14-18 239, 539, 750
2:14-22 338, 981
2:15 9, 80, 189, 236, 257, 698, 700, 772, 909, 951, 980, 981
2:16 71, 76, 80, 198, 204, 246, 247, 554, 697, 698, 699, 951
2:16-18 81
2:17 606, 698, 951
2:18 80, 81, 247, 366, 412, 732
2:18-21 359
2:19 397, 418
2:19-21 481
2:19-22 248, 418, 435, 751, 925, 948, 951

2:20 48, 135, 344, 346, 758
2:20-22 127, 129, 482, 924
2:21 80, 127, 398, 418, 910, 924, 925, 954, 984
2:21-22 434
2:22 127, 914, 925
3 48, 733
3:1 239, 242, 753, 754
3:1-13 48, 242, 247
3:2 247, 373, 931
3:2-6 241
3:2-11 622, 639
3:2-13 239
3:3 622, 624, 759, 761
3:3-4 48, 623, 757
3:4 622, 624
3:4-11 972
3:5 135, 185, 241, 346, 405, 622
3:6 80, 243, 247, 623
3:7 185, 247, 605, 724
3:7-8 185, 373
3:7-13 241
3:8 247, 397, 735, 826
3:9 356, 622, 624, 979, 980, 981
3:9-10 93, 338, 982
3:10 125, 126, 128, 236, 248, 262, 274, 361, 382, 623, 748, 751, 865, 948
3:11 226
3:12 247, 286, 732
3:13 920
3:14 242, 357, 626
3:14-15 357
3:14-17 410
3:14-19 391, 583, 606
3:14-21 239, 576, 724, 733, 908
3:15 9, 32, 257, 357, 381, 626, 979
3:16 348, 772
3:16-17 349, 406, 407, 583, 724
3:16-19 606, 724
3:17 289, 733, 773
3:18 397
3:19 320, 527, 700, 733, 771
3:20-21 239, 724, 734
3:21 125, 126, 248, 391, 558
3:21—4:1 552
4 129, 322, 367, 757, 762, 940, 988, 991
4:1 56, 85, 242, 247, 657, 753, 754
4:1-6 577
4:1-16 128, 133, 378
4:1—6:20 922
4:2 318
4:2-3 922
4:3 80, 373, 699
4:3-4 342, 726
4:3-6 781
4:4 71, 76, 80, 81, 345, 405
4:4-6 128, 239, 342, 366, 373, 404, 739, 988
4:5 80, 81, 223, 285
4:6 716, 717
4:7 129, 342, 373, 757
4:7-11 320, 373
4:7-13 313, 885
4:7-16 870
4:8 239, 557, 631, 635, 754, 758, 807
4:8-9 951
4:8-10 247, 277, 583
4:9 381
4:9-10 239
4:10 80, 320, 381, 807
4:11 48, 80, 187, 339, 342, 344, 345, 346, 347, 369, 654, 757, 758, 940
4:11-12 241, 278, 605
4:11-13 133, 603
4:11-16 129, 247, 951
4:12 76, 80, 81, 129, 134, 248, 397, 658
4:12-16 71, 80, 757
4:13 80, 129, 256, 265, 289, 320, 401, 700, 903, 906
4:13-16 910
4:14 133, 320
4:15 80, 81, 129, 134, 375, 377, 658, 887, 954
4:15-16 59, 80, 246, 376, 378, 434, 577
4:16 80, 81, 248, 378, 603, 658, 700
4:17 974
4:17-18 322, 772
4:17-23 421
4:17-24 773
4:18 878, 879
4:18-19 772
4:19 909
4:20 577
4:20-21 914
4:20-32 770
4:21 433, 656, 931
4:22 555, 628
4:22-24 9, 257, 434, 435, 629, 766, 772, 885, 922
4:23 768
4:23-24 189, 190
4:24 247, 363, 831, 914, 955, 980, 981, 989
4:25 80, 577, 914, 954
4:25-30 190
4:25-32 393, 962, 963
4:25—5:20 914
4:26 992
4:27 583, 723, 863, 864, 865
4:28 274, 826, 827, 927
4:29 374, 914
4:29-32 215
4:30 40, 108, 247, 260, 313, 407, 411, 469, 732, 786, 810
4:31 577
4:31-32 914, 922
4:32 190, 270, 312, 318
4:32—5:2 270, 577
5 557, 586, 867, 868, 872, 873
5—6 591
5:1 914
5:1-2 724, 990
5:2 129, 247, 572, 583, 856, 914
5:3 397, 600, 626, 872
5:3-5 771, 922, 962, 963
5:4 70, 914
5:5 359, 394, 426, 517, 524, 525, 527, 871, 972
5:6 237, 247, 262, 321, 364, 556, 992
5:7-11 556
5:8 435, 556
5:8-11 272
5:9 316, 831
5:10 409
5:11 274, 316
5:12-14 556
5:14 61, 239, 420, 421, 556, 557, 807, 944, 988
5:15-18 239
5:15-20 968, 972
5:16 31, 256, 785
5:18 70, 406, 576
5:18-19 412
5:18-20 915
5:18-21 588
5:19 70, 239, 345, 986
5:19-20 129, 419, 420, 557, 986
5:20 70, 627, 731, 732, 915
5:21 273, 292, 377, 393, 588, 596
5:21-33 293, 378
5:21—6:9 239, 274, 393, 401, 556, 884, 922, 972
5:22 596, 868
5:22-33 10, 80, 128, 418, 587, 596, 597
5:22—6:9 552, 717, 888
5:23 59, 71, 76, 80, 81, 126, 248, 277, 377, 378, 393, 586, 860, 868, 869
5:23-24 125
5:23-25 248
5:23-32 868
5:24 868
5:25 126, 273, 318, 349, 572, 596
5:25-27 61, 393, 989
5:25-32 248, 868
5:25-33 577
5:26 63, 192, 397, 398, 401, 776, 868
5:27 125, 126, 247, 248, 349, 398, 868
5:28-30 872
5:29 125, 126, 246, 248, 868
5:29-30 303
5:30 76, 80, 480
5:30-31 376
5:31 77, 80, 376, 631
5:31-32 872
5:32 10, 99, 125, 126, 248, 597, 622, 623, 757
5:33 292, 588, 589
6 481, 731, 753, 864, 866
6:1 831, 972
6:2 539, 656
6:2-3 631
6:5 274, 293
6:5-8 588, 870
6:5-9 588, 662, 881, 885
6:6 184, 768, 773
6:6-7 313
6:7 274
6:8 313, 870
6:9 32, 228, 274, 381, 588
6:10 272, 583, 866, 953
6:10-17 556, 948, 953
6:10-18 211, 236, 247, 313, 481, 723, 949
6:10-20 247, 582
6:11 262, 863, 864, 865
6:11-12 865, 980, 981
6:11-17 743
6:12 232, 235, 236, 241, 262, 274, 302, 303, 382, 556, 583, 747, 748, 749, 751, 769, 781, 865, 866
6:12-17 751
6:13 256, 262, 953
6:13-17 751
6:14 955
6:15 698, 724
6:16 289, 864, 866
6:17 751, 861
6:18 397, 412, 731, 733, 912
6:18-20 556, 724
6:19 622, 726, 735, 757, 779
6:19-20 141, 242, 731, 735
6:20 726, 753
6:21 183, 184, 870, 887, 909
6:21-22 188, 242, 661
6:22 527
6:23 289, 364, 576
6:23-24 185, 552
6:24 68, 809

Philippians

1 370, 753
1:1 49, 99, 134, 184, 185, 187, 244, 397, 604, 658, 660, 689, 710, 887, 931
1:2 98, 558, 565, 699
1:3 70, 551, 915
1:3-5 606
1:3-6 70
1:3-7 920
1:3-11 551, 936
1:3-12 912
1:4 70
1:5 70, 294, 370
1:5-26 915
1:6 33, 34, 40, 70, 93, 259, 394, 400, 911
1:7 191, 294, 362, 588, 655, 709, 711, 753, 912
1:7-8 391, 577
1:8 360, 576, 602, 773, 974
1:9 576
1:9-10 272, 576, 577, 972
1:9-11 70, 552, 606, 973
1:10 34, 259, 394, 972
1:11 316, 360, 576, 831
1:12 527, 552
1:12-14 472, 710, 886
1:13 83, 84, 234, 624, 709, 721, 753
1:13-14 720, 753
1:13-17 550
1:14 83, 185, 433, 624, 652, 753
1:14-17 710
1:15 652, 710
1:15-17 710
1:15-18 58, 237, 359, 370, 617, 686
1:16 360, 735, 753
1:17 652, 709, 753
1:18 58
1:19 265, 278, 400, 412, 634, 726
1:19-24 754
1:19-26 919
1:19-30 362
1:20 72, 553
1:20-21 432
1:20-24 555
1:20-26 577
1:21 42, 220, 258, 555, 682, 819
1:21-24 767
1:22 304, 316, 553
1:22-23 753
1:23 42, 258, 382, 394, 438, 440, 754, 819
1:24 304
1:24-25 449
1:25 286, 710, 911
1:25-26 754
1:26 259
1:27 141, 191, 289, 290, 448, 554, 577, 766, 769, 903
1:27-28 993
1:27-30 429
1:27—2:11 481
1:28 236, 859, 956
1:29 19, 294, 363
1:29-30 753, 886, 920
1:30 435, 919
2 106, 107, 393, 712, 713, 741, 959
2:1 294, 407, 412, 602, 624, 914
2:1-4 294, 396, 422, 577, 988
2:1-5 218
2:1-11 911, 914
2:2 770
2:3-4 141, 577, 990
2:4 272, 819
2:4-8 577
2:4-11 14

2:5 114, 270, 354, 422, 741, 770, 968
2:5-8 577, 627, 944
2:5-9 499
2:5-11 253, 422, 491, 499, 502, 745, 746
2:6 13, 104, 107, 192, 355, 421, 426, 427, 712, 745, 970, 983
2:6-7 105, 106, 107, 745
2:6-8 392, 393, 422, 429, 487, 712
2:6-9 349
2:6-11 13, 93, 100, 104, 191, 192, 193, 203, 208, 221, 270, 276, 278, 293, 352, 353, 392, 393, 421, 422, 557, 627, 711, 744, 745, 770, 864, 944, 950, 971, 988, 990
2:7 98, 106, 107, 110, 184, 407, 427, 635, 957
2:8 110, 198, 422, 809, 988, 989
2:9 104, 408, 626, 627, 751
2:9-11 192, 211, 272, 277, 304, 358, 360, 422, 563, 565, 568, 627, 634, 809, 868, 947, 985
2:10 32, 277, 627, 628, 749, 750, 780, 979
2:10-11 563, 627, 635, 751, 948, 958
2:11 98, 256, 265, 360, 565, 627, 794, 944, 988
2:12 40, 136, 259, 293, 422, 635, 655, 657, 819, 860
2:12-13 270, 819, 988
2:12-18 400, 556
2:13 40
2:14 634
2:14-15 18
2:14-16 608
2:14-18 396
2:15 256, 556, 634, 688
2:15-16 689
2:16 34, 43, 56, 191, 202, 261, 321, 683, 870
2:17 129, 134, 286, 357, 577, 634, 635, 857
2:19 183, 477
2:19-21 710
2:19-23 136
2:19-24 449, 577
2:19-30 391, 552
2:22 655, 656, 870
2:22-30 705
2:24 448, 624, 710, 754
2:25 47, 134, 183, 184, 186, 634, 661, 708, 710, 870, 946, 953
2:25-30 552, 711
2:27 602
2:28 133
2:29-30 689
2:30 134, 554, 634, 769, 870
3 137, 138, 156, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 539, 708, 868, 939
3:1 318, 512
3:1-3 634
3:1-6 396
3:2 157, 237, 338, 468, 539, 578, 652
3:2-3 353, 539
3:2-11 138, 539, 894
3:3 138, 157, 265, 305, 359, 411, 412
3:3-4 304
3:3-6 767
3:3-17 157, 158
3:4 305, 429
3:4-6 158, 504, 768
3:4-8 19
3:4-11 48, 484, 978
3:4-17 157
3:5 354, 461, 464, 799, 807
3:5-6 338, 465, 508, 540, 594, 750, 793
3:6 125, 126, 161, 461, 504, 652, 725, 781, 818, 831
3:7-8 158, 161, 429
3:7-11 221
3:7-16 686
3:8 108, 569, 625, 731
3:8-9 99
3:8-11 819
3:8-12 197
3:8-16 713
3:9 108, 158, 265, 286, 287, 363, 461, 520, 540, 541, 652, 676, 831, 832, 976
3:10 197, 208, 294, 349, 358, 423, 429, 486, 527, 625, 724, 753, 807, 808, 810, 919
3:10-11 140, 158, 221, 920
3:10-15 990
3:11 358, 806, 807, 810
3:11-12 43
3:12 197, 461
3:12-14 158, 700
3:12-15 400, 711
3:12-17 911
3:12-21 33
3:13-14 387
3:14 162, 461, 819
3:15 265, 700, 887
3:15-17 158
3:17 133, 136, 141, 162, 428, 429, 606, 656, 895
3:17-21 236, 909
3:18 198, 236, 429
3:18-19 396
3:19 141, 265, 352, 517, 652, 956, 993
3:20 32, 33, 76, 141, 277, 349, 350, 381, 382, 512, 524, 688, 794, 808, 861, 867, 868, 869
3:20-21 14, 33, 141, 264, 356, 507, 512, 712, 767, 773, 810
3:21 74, 76, 264, 394, 429, 512, 717, 808, 868, 958
4 558, 827
4:1 128, 436, 577, 655, 664, 820, 891
4:1-9 141
4:2 56, 577, 657
4:2-3 184, 187, 587, 589, 603, 708
4:2-4 552
4:3 56, 135, 626, 708
4:4 108, 318, 434, 436, 512
4:4-7 512
4:4-9 972
4:5 271, 567, 972
4:6 70, 727, 915
4:7 366, 699, 770, 771
4:8 318, 776, 831, 972, 973
4:8-9 57, 552, 962
4:9 57, 133, 430, 489, 699, 895, 909
4:10 512
4:10-13 826
4:10-20 296, 710, 711
4:11 625, 717, 972
4:11-12 972
4:11-13 827
4:12 794
4:12-13 625
4:13 724
4:14 294
4:14-15 920
4:14-20 827, 915
4:15 294, 296
4:15-16 118
4:15- 16 447
4:15-16 455, 539, 934
4:16 447
4:18 634, 857
4:18-20 984
4:19 69, 727, 826
4:20 69, 354, 360, 552, 558
4:21 397
4:21-22 185
4:22 83, 118, 233, 397, 417, 662, 722, 753

Colossians

1 109, 150, 903, 920, 959, 970, 971, 982, 988
1:1 48, 150, 184, 185, 362, 658
1:1-2 150
1:2 147, 150, 151, 185, 188, 244, 287, 397, 558, 699, 931
1:3 70, 551, 728, 915
1:3-8 56, 148, 150
1:3-10 908
1:3-14 551, 728
1:4 150, 397, 576
1:4-5 289
1:4-6 148
1:5 70, 150, 191, 381, 416, 717, 954
1:5-6 373
1:6 272, 316, 370, 371, 612, 979
1:7 148, 152, 184, 185, 252, 450, 703, 754, 870
1:7-8 187, 685
1:8 148, 412, 576
1:9 150, 968
1:9-10 606, 773, 972
1:9-11 774, 968
1:9-12 606
1:9-14 70, 152, 552, 988
1:10 150, 272, 316, 730
1:11 40, 150, 318, 349, 724
1:12 70, 113, 150, 235, 397, 525, 778, 864, 866
1:12-13 34
1:12-14 70, 125, 750, 751, 947
1:13 148, 150, 220, 256, 278, 355, 358, 359, 380, 480, 483, 524, 556, 699, 749, 781, 861, 862, 864, 903, 904, 981, 982
1:13-14 526, 865, 950
1:13-16 274
1:13-20 253
1:14 111, 148, 203, 281, 312, 785, 810, 880, 982
1:15 13, 93, 152, 278, 302, 303, 355, 376, 421, 426, 427, 697, 698, 699, 745, 970, 979, 980, 982
1:15-16 320, 744, 750
1:15-17 105, 152, 302
1:15-18 968
1:15-19 716
1:15-20 13, 79, 93, 94, 99, 100, 104, 105, 125, 147, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 189, 191, 192, 220, 258, 264, 276, 292, 355, 367, 377, 392, 421, 422, 557, 629, 651, 697, 698, 743, 745, 746, 944, 970, 981, 982, 988
1:15—2:5 773
1:16 32, 108, 149, 152, 236, 302, 356, 359, 381, 697, 698, 699, 716, 717, 745, 746, 748, 749, 750, 959, 970, 971, 979, 980, 981, 982
1:16-17 730
1:16-18 698
1:17 152, 697, 698, 716, 971
1:18 59, 71, 76, 79, 81, 125, 134, 151, 152, 277, 302, 353, 375, 376, 377, 697, 698, 699, 970, 982, 989
1:18-20 152, 698
1:18-22 698
1:19 98, 152, 232, 320, 436, 733, 925, 949, 970, 971
1:19-20 697, 698
1:20 32, 152, 198, 203, 204, 236, 264, 272, 582, 697, 698, 750, 959, 979, 980, 981, 982
1:20-21 236
1:20-22 697, 698
1:21 148, 235, 258, 750, 772, 879, 952
1:21-22 698, 952, 959
1:21-23 697, 698
1:22 72, 76, 125, 148, 151, 303, 397, 398, 697, 698, 768, 959
1:22-23 44
1:23 40, 150, 185, 186, 289, 371, 605, 735, 959, 980
1:23-29 48, 242
1:23—2:5 152
1:24 19, 71, 76, 79, 81, 125, 140, 151, 196, 202, 221, 304, 577, 625, 859, 919, 920
1:24-25 605
1:25 418
1:25-27 639
1:25-29 450
1:26 397
1:26-27 622, 972
1:27 243, 348, 350, 416, 433, 810, 826
1:28 150, 151, 265, 401, 606, 610, 656, 657, 700, 968, 973
1:28-29 606, 724
2 137, 150, 243, 378, 663, 751, 807, 808, 866, 947
2:1 147, 150, 187, 303
2:2 577, 622, 826
2:2-10 99
2:3 640, 968
2:4 149
2:5 132, 136, 148, 303, 987
2:6 148, 149, 150, 192, 557, 629
2:6-7 191, 944
2:6-8 148
2:6-10 151
2:7 70, 489, 656, 911, 915
2:7-8 187
2:8 22, 148, 149, 191, 229, 230, 262, 321, 359, 360, 583, 716, 737, 750, 943, 980, 981, 982, 988
2:8-10 229
2:8-23 148, 651
2:9 148, 151, 232, 355, 434, 436, 925, 949
2:9-10 651
2:10 149, 151, 376, 377, 747, 748, 750

2:11 139, 149, 150, 375, 949, 950
2:11-12 63, 149, 624, 781, 989
2:11-14 139, 230
2:12 60, 63, 150, 220, 265, 807, 810, 949, 989
2:12-13 151, 694
2:13 148, 150, 276, 312, 554
2:13-14 203, 236, 920
2:13-15 149, 313, 365
2:14 150, 198, 403, 538, 949
2:14-15 747, 948, 950
2:14-17 915
2:15 112, 205, 211, 232, 236, 262, 274, 277, 359, 582, 723, 748, 750, 781, 948, 949, 959, 988
2:16 150, 403, 693, 984
2:16-23 149, 232, 313
2:17 72, 79, 149
2:18 22, 23, 148, 149, 229, 262, 359, 663, 749, 771, 780
2:18-19 150, 870
2:19 59, 71, 76, 79, 80, 81, 128, 376, 377, 378, 577, 651, 910
2:20 22, 148, 149, 150, 229, 230, 262, 359, 403, 583, 624, 750, 980, 981, 982, 988
2:20-23 409
2:20—3:13 64
2:20—3:15 60
2:20—3:17 220, 963
2:21 148, 149, 150, 356, 403
2:21-23 873
2:22 149
2:23 148, 149, 150, 356, 663, 773, 984
3 129, 147, 627, 986, 989
3:1 32, 81, 125, 150, 151, 247, 277, 434, 436, 694, 751, 809, 810, 947
3:1-2 150
3:1-3 33, 651
3:1-4 141, 150, 151, 189, 277, 624
3:1-6 255
3:1-11 948
3:1—4:6 922, 944
3:2 770, 979
3:3 64, 125, 150
3:4 108, 125, 150, 151, 260, 350, 810
3:4—4:6 125
3:5 150, 151, 426, 481, 600, 880, 962, 963, 972, 979
3:5-8 629
3:5-9 190, 317
3:5-14 884
3:5-15 64
3:5-17 150, 770, 914, 922
3:6 151, 206, 236, 262, 364, 952, 992
3:8 150, 949, 962, 963, 972, 991
3:8-9 949
3:8-10 629
3:8-17 922
3:9 61, 273, 628, 766, 885, 909, 949
3:9-10 9, 189, 257, 772
3:9-11 435, 629
3:10 190, 273, 360, 426, 427, 434, 810, 885, 911, 949, 980
3:10-11 190, 629
3:11 189, 190, 273, 313, 335, 427, 435, 874
3:12 61, 150, 226, 318, 398, 576, 602, 962, 972
3:12-13 215
3:12-14 577, 963
3:12-15 318
3:12-16 273
3:12-17 15, 190
3:13 148, 203, 312, 478, 481, 656
3:14 576, 577, 700
3:15 70, 71, 76, 79, 81, 84, 135, 318, 698, 773, 915
3:15-16 133, 885
3:16 70, 187, 372, 412, 419, 420, 553, 557, 658, 735, 783, 826, 968, 973
3:16-17 986
3:17 70, 273, 372, 627, 915
3:18 150, 587, 596, 972, 985
3:18-19 597
3:18—4:1 239, 274, 393, 418, 552, 888, 922, 972
3:18—4:4 884
3:19 577
3:20 150, 972
3:22 292
3:22-23 97
3:22—4:1 706, 881
3:23 768, 773
3:24 97, 151, 292, 516, 525, 870
3:25 228
4 152, 238, 661
4:1 274, 831
4:2 70, 915
4:2-4 912
4:2-6 972
4:3 622, 704, 753, 757
4:3-4 731, 972
4:5 785, 885, 968
4:5-6 968
4:6 87, 374, 578
4:7 183, 184, 188, 290, 946
4:7-8 136, 183, 242
4:7-13 152
4:8 150
4:8-9 704
4:9 184, 448, 680
4:10 66, 150, 184, 185, 186, 465, 754, 953
4:10-11 184, 187, 479, 870
4:10-17 552
4:11 34, 151, 184, 483, 524
4:12 148, 150, 184, 187, 450, 700, 703, 754
4:12-13 685
4:12-14 706
4:12-18 704
4:13 148
4:14 183, 184, 186, 378
4:15 125, 150, 174, 185, 187, 306, 417, 662, 888, 889
4:15-16 151, 985
4:16 35, 86, 187, 188, 244, 354, 391, 553, 660, 663, 704, 737, 932, 985
4:17 184, 680, 704, 870
4:18 150, 552, 663, 680, 738, 753, 754

1 Thessalonians

1 992
1—3 933
1:1 49, 99, 124, 185, 369, 417, 434, 534, 551, 558, 562, 658, 699, 932, 938
1:2 70, 551, 728, 730, 915
1:2-3 912, 938
1:2-7 920
1:2-8 908
1:2-10 936
1:2—3:13 551
1:3 40, 70, 289, 398, 459, 522, 562, 576, 730, 819
1:3-5 70, 370
1:4 225, 226
1:4-5 84, 664
1:4-6 406, 409, 716
1:4-10 410
1:5 43, 55, 211, 369, 371, 405, 486, 655, 735, 876, 936, 974
1:5-6 370
1:6 398, 408, 428, 429, 487, 562, 567, 655, 656, 907, 911, 920, 932, 938
1:6-7 911
1:6-9 429
1:7 398, 939
1:7-10 133, 932
1:8 398, 688
1:8-9 938
1:9 53, 57, 117, 425, 535, 684, 876, 904, 933, 934, 938
1:9-10 31, 53, 57, 129, 260, 265, 276, 499, 716, 717, 736, 885, 902, 904, 934, 938, 944
1:10 32, 53, 54, 206, 256, 278, 314, 381, 524, 807, 858, 868, 891, 902, 903, 904, 938, 952, 956, 991, 992
1:11 952
2 89, 260, 370, 938, 939
2:1 321, 655
2:1-12 655, 897, 933, 936, 937
2:2 141, 236, 409, 447, 455, 655, 735, 763, 897, 903, 952
2:2-3 717
2:2-9 481, 485
2:3 717
2:3-12 897
2:4 398, 763, 897, 924
2:4-5 735
2:5 655, 717, 912, 974
2:5-10 927
2:6 47, 55, 96, 186, 897
2:6-8 717
2:7 55, 184, 357, 655, 656, 884
2:8 577, 607, 655, 735, 769, 773, 897, 903
2:9 274, 296, 370, 556, 577, 655, 735, 884, 897, 903, 912, 914, 925, 926, 934, 936
2:9-10 475
2:10 974
2:10-12 610
2:11 56, 132, 655, 656, 657, 910
2:11-12 479, 489, 939
2:12 34, 84, 358, 483, 500, 524, 656, 810, 974
2:13 43, 70, 130, 150, 191, 663, 738, 915, 938
2:13-16 263, 429, 709, 933, 936, 937, 939
2:14 96, 126, 428, 429, 535, 911, 934, 952
2:14-15 236
2:14-16 19, 796, 934, 936
2:14-20 886
2:15 276, 755, 801, 803, 933, 938
2:15-16 801, 803, 939
2:16 236, 237, 265, 470, 481, 593, 601, 801, 803, 804, 860, 992
2:17 117, 655, 768, 891, 935
2:17-18 447, 450
2:17-20 607
2:17—3:10 933
2:17—3:11 552
2:17—3:13 449, 552
2:18 32, 261, 680, 688, 863, 865, 935
2:19 259, 567, 820, 938
2:19-20 608, 732
3 216, 576
3:1 455, 935
3:1-2 447
3:1-4 865
3:1-5 920
3:1-6 447
3:1-8 117
3:1-10 911
3:2 183, 184, 187, 370, 887, 903, 911, 935, 946
3:2-8 937
3:3 294, 625, 655
3:3-4 489, 939
3:4 655, 763, 886
3:5 43, 56, 150, 262, 321, 864, 865, 952
3:6 136, 187, 447, 459, 576, 655, 737, 932, 935, 937
3:6-10 577
3:7 294, 625
3:8 436
3:9 70, 732
3:9-10 607, 912, 936
3:10 556, 655, 732, 912
3:10-11 447, 450, 935
3:11 938, 945
3:11-13 552, 558, 727, 730, 933
3:11—4:1 552
3:12 271, 577, 655, 938
3:12-13 576, 577, 732
3:13 22, 31, 150, 259, 261, 397, 398, 400, 563, 567, 910, 938, 952
4 55, 130, 394, 398, 399, 400, 440, 694, 776, 807, 808, 938
4—5 394, 933
4:1 56, 57, 136, 391, 409, 433, 655, 657, 884, 910, 933, 944
4:1-2 489, 567
4:1-7 64
4:1-8 871, 910
4:1-12 57, 567, 884, 933, 972, 974
4:1-18 399
4:1—5:22 922, 944
4:2 55, 476, 477, 535, 655, 657, 887, 933
4:3 398, 410, 600, 871, 938
4:3-4 938
4:3-5 873
4:3-8 410, 936
4:4 398, 871, 915
4:5 398, 535, 871, 938
4:6 398, 516, 567, 871, 938, 974
4:6-10 576
4:7 85, 358, 363, 398, 410, 938
4:7-8 410
4:7-9 535
4:8 31, 136, 265, 363, 400, 410, 481, 485, 938
4:9 274, 358, 473, 576, 655, 933, 938
4:10 56, 655, 657
4:10-12 936
4:11 274, 657, 826, 827, 909, 933

4:11-12 274, 972
4:12 272, 656, 885, 972
4:13 136, 257, 439, 694, 741, 938
4:13-18 31, 33, 34, 261, 416, 477, 525, 808, 812, 933
4:13—5:10 391
4:13—5:11 255, 260, 272, 933, 934
4:13—5:24 141
4:14 439, 476, 938, 952
4:14-17 938
4:15 57, 259, 439, 477, 498, 507, 553, 562, 757, 761
4:15-17 475, 476, 567, 761, 944
4:15—5:7 477
4:16 20, 22, 32, 96, 99, 111, 262, 277, 381, 476, 807, 891, 952
4:16-17 34, 809, 948, 952
4:17 467, 476, 553
4:18 129, 938
5 481, 663, 737, 762, 910, 937
5:1-3 938
5:1-4 34
5:1-7 476
5:1-11 936
5:2 33, 259, 476, 489, 564, 567, 655, 952
5:2-3 944
5:2-6 556
5:2-7 477
5:2-10 476
5:3 264, 476, 517, 763, 992
5:4 259, 864, 952
5:4-8 933
5:4-10 113
5:4-11 938
5:5 556, 864
5:8 416, 556, 576, 861, 953
5:9 40, 206, 314, 364, 399, 858, 876, 938, 952, 991, 992
5:9-10 93, 208, 952
5:10 202, 879, 938
5:11 129, 577, 655, 657, 658, 933, 938, 939
5:12 56, 58, 134, 183, 272, 345, 604, 605, 658, 972
5:12-13 131, 187, 604, 660, 936, 939
5:12-28 933
5:13 58, 922
5:13-14 577
5:14 56, 59, 129, 215, 657, 658, 927, 936, 966, 972
5:15 238, 271, 477, 481, 577, 880, 972
5:16-18 731
5:16-22 987
5:16-24 987
5:17 912, 938
5:18 70, 915
5:19 732, 758, 938, 941
5:19-20 404, 412, 758
5:19-21 59, 603, 604, 605
5:19-22 346, 760, 762, 936
5:20 346
5:20-21 343, 760, 944
5:20-22 758
5:21 272, 973
5:21-22 346
5:23 31, 71, 96, 259, 270, 366, 398, 400, 518, 567, 699, 770, 773, 938, 987
5:23-24 41, 727
5:24 987
5:25 726
5:26 577
5:26-27 124
5:27 86, 87, 354, 391, 551, 553, 985
5:28 96, 771

2 Thessalonians

1 236
1:1 124, 185, 369, 417, 434, 534, 658, 938
1:1-2 932
1:2 699
1:2-12 551
1:3 70, 551, 576, 938
1:3-4 936
1:3-5 920
1:3-12 728, 933
1:4 40, 124, 126, 939
1:4-5 34
1:4-7 937
1:4-10 886
1:5 483, 516, 524
1:5-6 831
1:5-12 31
1:6 236, 516, 937
1:6-10 516, 811, 891, 920, 956
1:7 22, 32, 236, 259, 381, 920, 952
1:7-8 563
1:8 516, 952
1:9 278, 360, 516, 517, 992
1:9-10 516
1:10 236, 350, 397, 516, 952, 974
1:11 85, 819, 938
1:12 130, 350, 372, 627
2 130, 262, 575, 617, 937
2:1 56, 130, 259, 938
2:1-2 188, 938
2:1-3 936
2:1-12 31, 33, 236, 262, 481, 934
2:1-15 57
2:2 257, 259, 346, 592, 737, 761, 933, 937, 952
2:3 34, 40, 262, 535, 592, 879, 938, 993
2:3-4 952
2:3-8 592
2:3-12 933, 952
2:4 34, 235, 924, 934
2:5 761
2:6 262, 593
2:6-7 262, 617, 938
2:7 34, 262, 622
2:7-8 535
2:8 34, 259, 592, 938, 948, 952
2:8-9 259
2:9 34, 380, 865, 876, 952
2:9-10 865, 938, 952
2:10 259, 861, 937, 954
2:11-12 938
2:12 954
2:13 70, 93, 187, 191, 258, 363, 371, 399, 776, 859, 936, 938
2:13-14 40, 70, 367, 551, 936
2:13-17 933
2:14 70, 84, 369, 371, 801, 810
2:15 57, 130, 187, 477, 489, 656, 660, 663, 937, 944
2:16 354, 364, 367, 801, 938, 952
2:16-17 577, 727
3 431, 663
3:1 912, 938
3:1-2 726
3:1-15 188, 933
3:3 41, 365, 864, 866
3:4 130, 939
3:5 364, 575, 576, 727
3:6 55, 57, 59, 64, 130, 187, 216, 274, 428, 430, 477, 489, 627, 944
3:6-11 187
3:6-12 657, 826, 827, 936
3:6-13 927, 985
3:6-15 57, 215, 216, 217, 236, 657
3:7 656
3:7-9 430, 606, 933, 934, 936
3:8 605, 912, 925, 926
3:9 55, 132, 428, 656
3:9-12 911
3:10 183, 274
3:10-12 933
3:11 274, 935
3:11-13 64
3:12 55, 57, 274, 657
3:14 130, 216, 578, 737
3:14-15 59, 551, 936, 939
3:15 217, 938
3:16 552, 699, 727
3:16-18 933
3:17 552, 680, 738, 937
3:18 552, 558

1 Timothy

1 160
1:1 48, 858, 868
1:2 374, 602, 655
1:3 44, 448, 604, 661
1:3-5 663
1:3-7 661
1:3-11 393, 604, 962
1:4 44
1:4-7 591
1:5 155, 265, 289, 576, 768, 773, 776
1:6-7 44
1:7 663
1:9 831
1:9-10 393, 664, 962
1:10 413, 414
1:11 370
1:12 70, 71, 724
1:12-16 158, 602
1:12-17 157
1:13 44, 602, 730
1:13-14 730
1:14 576
1:15 99, 664, 858
1:15-16 730
1:16 50, 365, 554, 810
1:17 69, 366, 420, 431, 432, 554, 558, 664, 717, 730, 809
1:18 346, 347, 655, 757
1:18-20 215
1:19 44, 155
1:19-20 216, 661
1:20 44, 216, 217, 591, 863, 864, 866
2:1 56, 437, 727
2:1-4 985
2:1-7 273, 418
2:1-8 726
2:1-15 418, 604, 922
2:2 142, 554, 591
2:3 359, 858, 868
2:3-4 868
2:4 142, 860, 954, 959
2:5 100, 110, 355, 985
2:5-6 664
2:6 572, 785, 860, 974
2:7 56, 186, 656, 954
2:8 401, 590, 591, 732, 912
2:8-15 418, 590, 972
2:9-10 590, 888
2:9-15 10, 587, 591
2:9—3:1 664
2:10 972
2:11-14 590
2:11-15 390, 603, 693
2:12 44, 524
2:12-15 136
2:13 9, 10, 591
2:13-14 10, 591
2:13-15 878
2:14 9, 10, 771
2:14-15 860
2:15 401, 576, 591, 858, 860
2:16-18 257
2:17-18 195
3 605, 660, 863
3:1 135, 664
3:1-7 128, 134, 418, 603
3:1-13 604, 972
3:2 591, 597, 603, 885
3:2-7 962, 963
3:3 827
3:3-5 733
3:4 417
3:5 131, 417, 603
3:6 137, 863, 865
3:7 419, 591, 863, 865, 974
3:8 185, 826, 962
3:8-13 134, 418, 603, 870
3:9 155, 623, 776
3:10 591
3:11 591, 863
3:14 448, 661
3:15 128, 418, 662, 925
3:16 21, 192, 266, 276, 277, 304, 349, 371, 392, 412, 421, 422, 557, 623, 664, 751, 807, 809, 930, 948, 950, 983, 988
4 887
4:1 44, 290, 380, 664
4:1-2 661
4:1-3 663
4:1-5 664, 693, 873
4:2 155, 772
4:3 44, 70, 155, 353, 356, 597, 663, 693, 860
4:3-4 155
4:4 70, 757, 980
4:5 356, 437
4:6 129, 185, 290
4:6-16 623
4:7 36
4:7-8 387
4:8 734
4:9-10 664
4:10 387, 860, 868, 869, 959
4:11 129
4:12 290, 577, 606
4:13 129, 661, 986
4:14 341, 346, 347, 757
4:16 859, 986
5 591, 660
5:1-2 128, 134, 136, 418
5:1-8 922
5:2 133
5:3-16 827
5:4 226, 417
5:5 128, 556
5:6 553
5:7 591
5:8 44, 418, 826
5:9 597
5:9-16 604
5:10 398, 591, 885, 974
5:13 417, 662
5:14 587, 591, 597, 864, 865
5:14-15 693
5:15 863, 864
5:16 128
5:17 129, 135, 183, 603
5:17-21 604
5:18 183, 631, 633
5:19 216, 974, 975
5:19-22 215, 216, 217
5:20 216, 293
5:21 21, 226, 974
5:22 135, 401, 604, 776
5:23 920
6 772

6:1 259, 273, 419, 560, 591, 626
6:1-2 418, 881, 922, 972
6:1-7 662
6:2 560
6:3-5 591
6:4-5 393, 922, 962
6:5 155, 555, 954
6:6 717, 972
6:6-8 717
6:6-10 826, 827
6:7 274
6:7-8 827
6:8 274
6:9 772, 992
6:9-10 274
6:10 44, 879, 880
6:11 393, 576, 717, 831, 962, 963
6:11-12 136, 664
6:12 84, 387, 554, 717, 810, 975
6:13 99, 202, 975
6:15 359, 360
6:15-16 420, 664, 730
6:16 431, 432, 557, 558, 717, 809
6:17 662, 980
6:17-19 418, 826
6:19 827
6:20 223, 321, 353, 661, 663
6:20-21 663

2 Timothy
1:1 48, 362
1:2 183, 374, 602, 655, 699
1:3 70, 155, 606, 776, 868
1:4 556, 868
1:6 340, 341
1:6-7 757, 887
1:7 293, 406, 576, 724
1:8 136, 259, 361, 369, 406, 724, 735, 753, 920
1:8-10 420
1:9 84, 310, 365, 858
1:9-10 664
1:9-11 869, 972
1:10 259, 276, 369, 371, 431, 432, 554, 557, 809, 858, 868, 869, 949
1:11 656
1:11-12 919
1:12 44, 259
1:13 576
1:14 223
1:15-16 663
1:15-18 661
1:16 417, 602, 662, 693, 727, 753
1:16-17 448
1:16-18 687
1:17 118
1:18 259, 564, 602, 727
2:1 655, 724
2:1-2 129
2:2 57, 604, 975
2:2-7 137
2:3 184
2:3-4 953
2:4 554
2:5 387
2:6 183, 184
2:8 57, 109, 256, 265, 369, 807, 811
2:8-13 221
2:9 448, 753, 919
2:10 20, 44, 226, 259, 858, 868
2:10-11 44
2:11 694, 807
2:11-13 44, 422, 664
2:11-14 869
2:12 44
2:13 868
2:14 664, 974
2:14-15 129
2:16-17 661
2:17 591
2:18 44, 257, 353, 663, 693, 694, 807, 865, 954
2:19 44, 626, 631, 968
2:19-21 664
2:20-21 418, 966
2:21 44, 401, 560
2:22 576, 776, 831
2:22-24 136
2:22-25 393, 962
2:24 184, 271, 869
2:25 44, 727
2:25-26 216
2:26 863, 865
3:1-5 664
3:1-9 620
3:2 70, 730, 827
3:2-4 577
3:2-5 44, 962
3:3 863
3:4 576, 868
3:5 44
3:6 417, 754, 868
3:6-7 591, 663
3:6-9 661
3:8 44, 582, 620, 621, 772, 954
3:10 136, 223, 576, 962
3:10-11 920
3:10-14 886
3:11 972
3:12 19, 920
3:13 582
3:15 858, 968
3:16 271, 742, 831, 911
4 663
4:1 33, 259, 480, 524, 553, 811, 974
4:1-5 129
4:2 216, 910
4:3-4 44, 661
4:4 44, 954
4:5 369, 920
4:6 258
4:6-7 662
4:6-8 448
4:7 700
4:7-8 44
4:8 259, 564, 831
4:10 183, 188, 323, 661, 980
4:10-11 36, 183
4:10-12 183
4:11 67, 184, 186
4:12 183, 188
4:13 88, 662
4:13-15 448
4:14 524, 728
4:16 727
4:16-18 448, 687
4:17 36, 724
4:18 44, 69, 360, 480, 524, 558, 862
4:19 417, 603, 661, 662, 693
4:19-20 183
4:19-22 663
4:20 183, 448, 661, 662

Titus
1 660, 772, 795
1:1 48, 226, 870
1:1-4 551
1:2 362, 416, 554, 810
1:2-3 972
1:3 735, 858, 868, 869
1:3-4 869
1:4 183, 602, 655, 699, 858, 869
1:5 183, 448, 603, 604, 661, 887
1:5-8 135
1:5-9 130, 134, 137, 603, 604, 972
1:6 591, 597
1:6-8 962
1:7 418, 603, 826
1:7-10 922
1:8 401, 831, 885
1:9 44, 129, 216, 603, 664
1:10 44, 187, 662, 663
1:10-11 661, 663
1:10-16 661
1:10—2:2 604
1:11 44, 155, 417, 662
1:12 386, 421, 664
1:13 216, 290
1:14 954
1:15 155, 663, 776
1:15-16 155
1:16 155
2 184, 605
2:1-5 591
2:1-9 137
2:1-10 393, 922, 972
2:1—3:8 418
2:2 290, 576
2:3 772, 863
2:3-5 962
2:3—3:11 604
2:4 577
2:4-5 587
2:5 272, 401, 419, 596, 776
2:6-8 962
2:7 136, 606
2:7-8 604
2:8 419, 591
2:8-10 272
2:9 560
2:9-10 870, 962
2:10 359, 419, 591, 858, 868
2:10-11 868, 869
2:11 228, 259, 365, 373, 859, 959
2:11-14 664
2:12 272, 980
2:12-13 373
2:12-14 891
2:13 259, 359, 416, 858, 869, 952
2:14 313, 373, 397, 572, 785
2:15 216
3 664
3:1 142
3:1-3 962
3:2 271
3:3 235
3:3-7 664
3:3-8 664
3:4 318, 359, 365, 858, 868, 869
3:4-5 406
3:4-6 366, 367, 869
3:4-7 420, 421, 869
3:5 40, 64, 831, 859, 861, 869
3:5-7 63
3:6 826, 858, 869
3:7 416, 554, 810
3:8 217, 271, 972
3:9 44, 217
3:9-14 661
3:10 419
3:10-11 44, 215, 216, 217
3:12 183, 188, 403, 448, 661
3:13 183, 185
3:14 972

Philemon
1 448, 703, 704, 753
1-2 135, 187, 706
1-3 703
2 125, 174, 187, 306, 354, 417, 657, 662, 680, 888, 889, 953, 985
3 558, 699
4 70, 551, 915
4-5 576
4-6 606
4-7 551, 703, 704, 705
5 289, 398, 705, 739
6 294, 436, 705
7 398, 552, 739
8 56, 136
8-16 704, 882
8-22 703
8-9 657
9 56, 577, 703, 739, 753
10 56, 655, 656, 703, 704, 705, 753
11 703, 705
11-13 705
12 704, 769
13 703, 704, 735, 753
14 704
15 705
16 271, 304, 395, 655, 703, 705, 706, 769, 870
16-17 274
17 703
17-22 704
18 703, 705
18-22 703
19 663, 680, 703, 705
21 136, 395, 703, 705, 706
21-22 449
22 448, 552, 704, 726, 754
23 706, 754, 953
23-24 754
23-25 703, 704
24 67, 183, 186

Subject Index

Abba 17, 264, 358, 368, 392, 408, 412, 479, 483-485, 490, 496, 557-560, 562, 628, 732, 771, 885, 902, 905, 907, 908, 911, 912
Abomination of desolation 262, 384, 593, 594
Abraham 1-9, 16-18, 20, 25, 49, 62, 68, 78, 138, 145, 180-182, 200, 204, 205, 232, 263, 273, 276, 285-288, 287, 294, 300, 304, 305, 308, 323, 327, 329, 331-334, 337-339, 368, 371, 415, 416, 424, 435, 441, 442, 444, 446, 457-460, 469, 470, 501, 504-506, 508-510, 515, 519, 538, 539, 541, 553, 614, 621, 638, 640, 641, 644, 648, 670, 715, 764, 781, 782, 799, 802, 822, 824, 825, 830, 832, 846, 896, 904-906, 977, 978, 992
Abrahamic covenant 180, 181, 333
Accursed 55, 102, 197, 199, 200, 209, 217, 334, 461, 542, 735, 763, 785, 799, 803, 805, 880, 993
Achaia 87, 117-119, 121, 144, 164, 172, 297, 326, 448, 454, 472, 609, 646, 650, 660, 661, 684-688, 720, 726, 813, 817, 827
Achaicus 173
Acrocorinth 172, 173
Acropolis 787
Acts of Paul 35, 36, 91, 451, 661, 662, 693, 821, 855
Acts of Paul and Thecla 35, 36, 693
Acts of the Apostles 51, 54, 65, 67, 123, 163, 353, 381, 455, 456, 463, 474, 499, 547, 550, 649, 679, 680, 684, 691, 693, 793, 813, 877, 893, 934
Adam 9-15, 22, 25, 30, 32, 65, 72, 74, 76-78, 81, 100, 106, 107, 109-112, 114, 115, 163, 167, 190, 257, 258, 263, 267-269, 273, 277, 278, 291, 302, 322, 348-351, 368, 407, 409, 427, 428, 431, 432, 434-436, 482, 509-511, 554, 555, 586, 591, 608, 620, 621, 628, 629, 638, 679, 691, 712, 744-746, 766, 771-774, 780-782, 810, 812, 831, 844, 846-848, 863-866, 878, 880, 947-950, 957, 958, 960
Adoption 9, 15-19, 39, 62, 68, 71, 94, 105, 109, 141, 155, 175, 180, 181, 196, 197, 205, 227, 228, 233-235, 242, 256, 258, 260, 263, 264, 267, 290, 293, 301, 303, 305, 322-324, 329, 348, 357, 358, 368, 370, 374, 376, 380, 408, 409, 411, 412, 416, 417, 421, 424, 427, 429, 479, 480, 483-485, 502, 505, 518, 521-523, 532, 551, 556, 558, 559, 562, 597, 648, 661, 678, 692, 709, 715, 721, 728, 732, 733, 743, 762, 763, 784, 786, 789, 793, 794, 802, 805, 823, 882, 884, 896, 898, 901, 905-907, 909, 910, 915-917, 949, 975, 980
Adultery 57, 414, 545, 592, 594-596, 598-600, 871, 872, 875, 936
Advocate 66, 216, 254, 437, 453, 525, 545, 595, 645, 705, 975
Affliction 18-21, 41, 45, 50, 55, 102, 117, 118, 168, 170, 193, 196, 197, 215, 217, 221, 293, 294, 298, 349, 350, 357, 362, 363, 378, 379, 381, 428, 429, 441, 511, 567, 625, 635, 645, 752-754, 756, 763, 865, 867, 877, 919-921, 926, 956, 967, 972
Agabus 120, 468, 756, 757
Age to come 27-29, 31, 32, 69, 112, 129, 167, 178, 189, 256, 263, 264, 268, 322, 336, 383, 407, 410, 411, 432, 480, 507, 525, 554, 627, 629, 637, 694, 700, 749, 772, 774, 806, 808, 859, 874, 919, 947, 980, 984
Agrippa 84, 119, 120, 140, 159, 386, 550, 720-722, 763, 815-817, 853
Alexander the Great 16, 163, 234, 249, 383, 619, 786, 791, 792, 796, 867, 900, 933
Allegory 5, 6, 180, 182, 212, 329, 330, 332, 333, 384, 636, 640, 715, 717, 968
Almsgiving 145, 828-830, 984
Altar 52, 61, 280, 296, 384, 573, 787-789, 791, 795, 814, 857, 924
Ambassador 84, 170, 605, 618, 682, 696, 724, 735, 753
Amen 46, 69, 291, 334, 362, 392, 557-560, 731, 734, 986
Amphipolis 450
Ananias 66, 101, 119, 120, 159, 450, 725, 755, 816-818
Anathema 22, 197, 199, 200, 209, 217, 334, 377, 542, 559, 805, 880, 993
Anatolia 249, 651, 684, 687, 786, 788, 791, 794, 813, 817
Ancestors 157, 375, 461, 789, 798, 799
Andronicus 48, 186, 589, 603, 683, 754, 882, 953
Angel 4, 5, 8, 20-23, 25, 27, 28, 32, 34, 42, 75, 93, 148, 149, 175, 186, 186, 195, 197, 200, 210, 226, 228-233, 236, 261, 262, 268, 274, 326, 342, 366, 370, 379, 381, 404, 408, 468, 509, 557, 580, 581, 586, 620, 621, 651, 662, 693, 698, 726, 747-749, 751, 752, 763, 778-780, 782, 783, 824, 862-865, 866, 868, 901-904, 940, 943, 947, 950, 952, 956, 964, 981, 982
Angel of the Lord 20, 23, 780
Anger 206, 237, 247, 364, 401, 462, 513, 572, 600, 693, 732, 769, 771, 792, 798, 865, 967, 991, 992
Anointing, anointed 33, 95-98, 100, 102, 199, 201, 782, 901
Anthropology 9, 12-15, 31, 33, 71, 72, 74, 76, 81, 154, 156, 193, 198, 205, 207, 253, 255, 257, 264, 306, 432, 495, 503, 674, 701, 705, 765-768, 770, 772, 775, 810, 872, 891, 892, 899, 900, 957, 969
Anti-Semitism 335, 336, 339, 368, 511, 722, 814, 917
Antigonus 385, 786
Antinomianism 60, 142, 273, 353, 543, 645, 775, 872
Antioch 23-25, 30, 36, 46, 49, 58, 66, 67, 88, 117, 119, 121-123, 145, 185, 211, 249, 299, 306-308, 310, 314, 323-326, 328, 330-332, 334, 338, 351, 385, 447, 449-451, 453-455, 464, 467, 468, 470, 474, 477, 489, 499, 511, 513, 515, 548, 613, 618, 647-651, 659, 671, 683, 684, 687, 690, 702, 703, 725, 735, 755, 756, 813, 814, 816, 817, 855, 868, 883, 899, 930, 945, 946, 986
Antioch in Syria 25, 351, 450, 648, 755
Antiochus 24, 30, 138, 147, 262, 324, 384, 533, 777, 798, 814
Antipas 719, 813-815
Antipater 250, 813
Antonia 472, 687, 721, 752
Apocalypse 10, 25, 26, 29, 31, 33, 34, 37, 91, 254, 268, 269, 351, 381, 525, 744, 762, 893, 964
Apocalypse of Paul 37, 964
Apocalyptic 19, 20, 23, 25-37, 40, 92, 142, 177, 179, 189, 205, 223, 224, 253-256, 260, 262, 264, 266-269, 294, 305, 306, 353, 368, 369, 383, 388, 393, 394, 404, 415, 492-494, 503, 506-510, 515, 526, 554, 574, 616, 622, 625, 647, 664, 676, 677, 679, 717, 744, 749, 750, 759, 761, 762, 778-780, 818, 830, 835, 863, 889-891, 893, 921, 934, 938, 948, 949, 968, 973, 980
Apocalypticism 25-32, 34, 35, 266-269, 506, 507, 509, 511, 517, 526, 593, 594, 762, 783, 805, 819, 835, 890, 934, 937
Apocrypha 35-37, 35, 37, 91, 177, 351, 353, 381, 531, 581, 638, 693, 695, 695, 777, 779, 779, 783, 806, 830, 830, 964
Apocryphal Pauline literature 35, 91, 351, 353, 693, 695
Apollonia 325, 450, 662
Apollos 37-39, 60, 165, 167, 183, 185, 186, 188, 251, 310, 387, 589, 617, 662, 667, 692, 702, 784, 870, 924
Apostasy 39, 40, 45, 85, 156, 163, 210, 218, 229, 289, 291, 424, 446, 511, 517, 533, 593, 625, 652, 658, 678, 701, 731, 783, 798, 820, 863, 960, 965
Apostles 21, 22, 36, 37, 45-51, 54, 55, 57-59, 60, 65-67, 88, 91, 98, 116, 123, 129-132, 134-136, 163, 167, 171, 172, 175, 185, 186, 188, 210, 215, 223, 236, 237, 241, 247, 277, 295-297, 299, 323, 327, 328, 330, 331, 340, 343-345, 347, 353, 361, 362, 381, 447, 450, 453, 455, 456, 463-465, 467-469, 474, 475, 492, 499, 513, 514, 516, 547, 548, 550, 589, 590, 603, 605-608, 617, 644-653, 659-662, 667-672, 674, 678-680, 682-684, 689, 691-693, 702, 703, 736, 752, 763, 793, 813, 838, 854, 865, 876, 877, 886, 893, 895,

934, 938, 964, 965, 969, 972, 974
Apostleship 43, 45-51, 55, 56, 58, 109, 168-171, 174, 176, 178, 185, 237, 239, 266, 294, 295, 300, 317, 321, 330, 344, 362, 373, 397, 465, 467-470, 485, 537, 551, 607, 608, 612, 627, 651, 657, 682, 683, 687, 689, 710, 739, 762, 824, 825, 876, 886, 891, 892, 897, 919, 921, 934, 939, 966, 967, 974, 987
Apostolic decree 307, 310, 337, 466, 469, 470, 474, 687, 824
Apostolic parousia 123, 391, 446, 449, 450, 455, 474, 551-553, 618, 946
Apphia 135, 703
Aqedah 856, 857
Aquila 38, 70, 96, 120, 121, 135, 173, 183, 251, 436, 589, 603, 662, 685, 710, 722, 842, 853, 854, 889, 926
Arabia 66, 117, 119, 122, 123, 330, 447, 449, 451, 455, 612, 648, 687
Aramaic 60, 66, 101, 212, 260, 264, 277, 358, 384-386, 404, 504, 559-563, 566, 569, 622, 635, 701, 731, 777-779, 901, 902, 906, 986, 987, 990
Archangel 20-22, 37, 476, 748, 780, 782, 938, 952
Archelaus 324, 813, 814
Archippus 680, 703-705, 870, 953
Areopagus 51, 52, 54, 57, 356, 386, 547, 715, 718, 735, 795, 968
Aretas 117, 121, 123, 447, 454, 719
Aristarchus 754, 945, 953
Aristobulus 84, 384, 385, 533, 534, 722, 889
Armor of God 731, 743
Arrest 36, 119, 121, 146, 186, 246, 327, 448, 451, 465, 472, 472, 547, 548, 550, 662, 680, 686, 687, 704, 705, 709, 710, 719, 752, 753, 815, 854
Artemas 188, 662
Artemis 243, 247, 249-252, 425, 547, 685, 787, 788, 790, 795, 883
Ascension 2, 30, 37, 195, 276, 277, 407, 662, 807, 809, 812, 951, 965
Ascension of Paul 37
Asceticism 44, 148, 149, 151, 155, 175, 177, 231, 232, 256, 273, 352, 353, 597, 651, 662, 663, 665, 692-694, 717, 727, 734, 853, 854, 872-874, 981, 984
Asia Minor 25, 35, 36, 86, 87, 89, 147, 185, 211, 235, 241-246, 249, 252, 253, 301, 323-325, 334, 351, 386, 421, 548, 549, 583, 609, 623, 627, 659-661, 684, 719, 757, 787, 794, 802, 805, 838, 851, 867, 933, 946
Assos 450
Astrology 231, 233, 243, 245, 246, 362, 402-404, 581, 583, 751, 983
Athens 51-54, 57, 117-119, 121, 325, 354, 356, 386, 387, 414, 425, 426, 447, 449, 450, 455, 547, 548, 550, 587, 685, 715, 716, 735, 737, 762, 788, 792, 793, 795, 817, 935, 968
Athlete, athletic imagery 72, 172, 250, 336, 384, 387, 642, 809
Atonement 20, 32, 77, 110, 163, 199, 200-209, 215, 217, 279, 281-285, 312, 402, 422, 435, 461, 482-484, 489, 531, 575, 672, 673, 776, 781, 786, 797, 831, 832, 842, 856-858, 920, 984, 990, 992
Atoning sacrifice 20, 110
Attalia 450
Augustus 24, 97, 233-235, 249, 324, 326, 385, 548, 715, 718, 721, 722, 787, 789, 791, 794, 813-815, 839, 851-853, 867, 881, 945
Authority 10, 16, 21, 22, 36, 37, 45-47, 49, 50, 54-59, 86-88, 90, 91, 97, 109, 123, 129-133, 135-137, 140, 141, 144, 153, 154, 164, 165, 168, 171, 172, 174, 176, 178, 188, 191, 192, 194-198, 202, 215, 216, 223, 224, 235, 236, 245, 262, 271, 274, 275, 277, 290, 295, 296, 301, 302, 315, 316, 324, 326, 327, 330, 337, 344, 346, 352, 360, 370, 371, 377, 383, 384, 391, 395-397, 403, 408, 417, 418, 422, 427, 428, 431, 433, 436, 449, 460, 465, 474, 475, 477, 479, 489, 490, 498, 500, 501, 526, 536, 537, 541, 545-547, 550, 552, 566, 568, 572, 584-587, 589-592, 600, 607, 608, 627, 638, 642, 648, 649, 651, 654, 657, 658, 660, 663, 670, 679, 681, 688, 690, 702, 704-708, 718-720, 722-724, 738, 743, 747, 749, 751, 754, 757, 762, 780, 783, 784, 790, 813, 824, 838, 839, 861, 862, 864, 873, 886-888, 891-899, 904, 937, 938, 944, 948, 949, 963, 964, 968, 981, 985
Autobiography 157, 158, 160, 161, 193, 196, 207, 234, 241, 242, 327, 329, 330-332, 334, 337, 385, 400, 478, 503, 504, 508, 509, 648, 649, 824, 825, 939, 968
Banquet 309, 394, 788, 790
Baptism 17, 18, 33, 35, 36, 38, 39, 42, 60-66, 79, 81, 94, 99, 101, 104, 108, 109, 120, 128, 134, 150, 182, 185, 195, 210, 218-222, 239, 245, 246, 251, 258, 267, 270, 308, 342, 352, 400, 405, 408, 410, 420, 421, 428, 435, 436, 469, 479, 482, 498, 557, 569, 570, 574, 575, 608, 620, 621, 626, 628, 629, 654, 658, 676, 689, 694, 708, 725, 735, 776, 794, 796, 810, 835, 847, 854, 873, 885, 887, 923, 943, 949, 969, 988-990
Baptism into 104, 128, 267, 428, 620, 621, 626, 689, 873, 943
Bar Kochba 385
Barbarians 64, 198, 213, 335, 339, 383, 387, 388, 612
Barnabas 24, 25, 48, 66, 67, 88, 91, 120, 135, 183, 185, 186, 188, 210, 295, 307, 308, 327, 328, 330, 337, 338, 408, 447, 450, 453, 454, 465-467, 473, 484, 498, 548, 642, 648-650, 658, 681, 683, 684, 686, 687, 701, 702, 708, 719, 721, 725, 755, 756, 795, 805, 813, 817, 877
Basic principles 229, 230
Baur, F. C. 31, 165, 223, 240, 243, 248, 263, 492, 513-515, 608, 613-615, 645, 647, 659, 660, 666-674, 677-679, 703, 709, 713, 767
Beasts 36, 252, 690, 693, 751, 948, 953
Beatings 18, 117, 548, 549, 720, 752
Belial, Beliar 21, 28-30, 747, 749, 750, 778, 780, 863, 864
Benediction 68, 71, 106, 134, 164, 238, 329, 334, 366, 370, 372-374, 391, 392, 441, 551-553, 558-560, 562, 566, 664, 665, 703, 704, 707, 725, 727, 734, 738, 739, 842, 844, 933, 985, 986, 990
Benefactor 187, 234, 298, 867, 897, 898, 945
Benjamin 504, 681, 761, 764
Berea 119, 143, 186, 450, 455, 547, 548, 684, 685, 687, 817
Binding of Isaac 208
Binitarianism 108, 562, 563, 565
Birth pangs 264
Bishop 24, 86, 88, 301, 474, 597, 602-605, 659, 660, 662, 664, 689, 704, 705, 709, 811, 812, 887, 930, 962, 963
Blasphemy 44, 216, 336, 471, 866, 902
Blessing 1-3, 7, 68-71, 98, 105, 106, 113, 126, 130, 134, 143, 145, 168, 199, 200, 204, 205, 232, 238, 263, 271, 278, 287, 288, 294, 297-300, 304, 312, 319, 327, 331, 332, 338, 358, 359, 370-372, 374, 382, 391, 404, 405, 407, 421, 432, 435, 472, 473, 478, 483, 510, 551-553, 558, 560, 574, 595, 614, 615, 618, 620, 621, 687, 689, 692, 693, 703, 714, 725, 728, 730, 733, 734, 739, 744, 800, 819, 820, 824, 827, 844, 848, 866, 869, 910, 915, 919, 933, 941, 947, 948, 969, 985, 988, 990
Blessing of Abraham 3, 200, 287, 288, 332, 371
Blind, blindness 52, 407, 446, 461, 503, 582, 621, 731, 736, 877, 956, 973, 993
Blood 41, 42, 74, 76, 102, 110, 180, 203, 209, 246, 274, 279, 282, 285, 303, 309, 312, 313, 330, 336, 379, 433, 471, 504, 573, 648, 684, 689, 694, 697, 698, 750, 751, 769, 776, 785, 787, 788, 808, 809, 812, 815, 856, 866, 898, 948, 959, 989, 992
Blood of Christ 77, 283, 294, 572, 951
Boasting 6, 7, 41, 49, 50, 58, 132, 150, 158, 164-166, 171-175, 204, 205, 221, 227, 228, 266, 296, 304, 321, 322, 333, 379, 429, 465, 494, 504, 512, 540, 607, 608, 643, 645, 647, 650, 676, 681, 714, 731, 740, 768, 769, 781, 819, 820, 821, 844, 845, 860, 884, 919, 920, 964-967, 972, 978
Body *8-12, 14, 15, 24, 31, 36, 41, 42, 58, 59, 63-65, 71-82, 83, 86, 90, 93, 94, 99, 102, 104, 108, 111, 112, 114, 115, 118, 125-131, 133, 137, 145, 148, 150, 151, 164, 166, 167, 170, 174, 178, 191, 196, 209, 221, 226, 239, 241, 243, 244, 246-248, 257, 258, 261, 264, 271, 272, 283, 290, 293, 294, 301, 303-306, 314, 320, 336, 341-345, 347, 349-352, 373, 375-380, 382, 387, 391, 398, 400, 405, 407-411, 419, 429,

430, 432-436, 438-440, 463, 472, 473, 475, 480, 482, 484-486, 507, 512, 525, 527, 536, 546, 551-555, 563, 567, 572-574, 577, 596, 603, 621, 623-625, 640, 647, 654, 658, 677, 679, 682, 689, 693-695, 698, 705, 706, 712, 714, 718, 724, 728, 734, 738-740, 757-762, 765-776, 779, 783, 785, 786, 807-812, 821, 823, 841, 844, 846, 847, 849, 852-855, 860, 861, 868, 872, 873, 875, 879, 885, 886, 888, 889, 893, 898-900, 908, 911-913, 915, 916, 924, 936, 941, 943, 949, 951, 953, 966, 969, 984, 985, 989, 990

Body of Christ 9, 10, 14, 15, 59, 64, 65, 71, 75-82, 94, 102, 104, 115, 125, 127-131, 137, 151, 166, 178, 209, 226, 241, 243, 247, 248, 272, 294, 320, 341, 347, 352, 373, 375, 377, 378, 380, 405, 407, 408, 410, 411, 419, 429, 435, 436, 473, 475, 480, 482, 484, 485, 525, 527, 572, 574, 577, 603, 623-625, 658, 677, 706, 724, 757-762, 776, 849, 868, 893, 898, 899, 908, 911-913, 916, 941, 943, 966, 984

Body of death 73, 774, 861

Body of humiliation 429

Body of sin 73, 772

Bondage 148, 149, 232, 246, 328, 352, 376, 497, 556, 584, 649, 784, 785, 865, 879, 947, 950, 951, 980, 981

Bondage to decay 190, 507, 554

Bondage/Slavery to sin 64, 148, 208, 313, 314, 723, 765, 771, 772, 774, 785, 878, 882

Bondage/Slavery to the Law 6, 313, 323, 333

Book of life 626

Bread 70, 74, 76, 77, 110, 300, 379, 570-574, 578, 579, 733, 856, 898, 955, 970, 984, 986, 989

Bultmann, R. 13-16, 18, 31, 33, 73, 76, 77, 81, 92, 153-156, 177, 179, 191, 192, 213, 214, 243, 248, 254, 255, 269, 275, 276, 285, 291, 301, 305, 306, 310, 311, 313, 316, 320, 351-353, 373, 374, 385, 387, 394, 401, 412, 417, 421, 423, 433, 483, 494-497, 500, 502, 503, 509, 510, 518, 520, 521, 523, 530, 542, 555, 578, 602, 613, 615, 616, 645, 669, 670, 676-678, 696, 699, 712, 713, 718, 726, 734, 736, 747, 766-768, 770, 774, 793, 802, 805, 806, 812, 834, 835, 837, 869, 880, 916, 920, 955, 957, 960, 976, 982

Buried with Christ 62-64, 220

Caesar 24, 83, 84, 97, 140, 172, 233-235, 249, 417, 419, 472, 479, 547-550, 685, 687, 709-711, 713, 720-722, 753, 791, 794, 821, 839, 851-853, 855, 881, 883

Caesar Augustus 97, 233, 249, 881

Caesar's Household 83, 84, 235, 417, 419, 709, 713, 721, 722, 753, 855

Caesarea 66, 83, 84, 119-123, 140, 144, 152, 187, 246, 337, 350, 386, 448, 450, 451, 455, 472, 548-550, 680, 686, 687, 705, 710, 711, 720, 752, 753, 756, 815, 817, 940, 946

Caiaphas 815

Calendar 149, 402, 403, 440, 567, 778, 780, 788, 851, 884

Caligula 24, 30, 117, 234, 235, 262, 592, 593, 719, 722, 814, 815, 946

Call of Abraham 7

Call of believers 84-86, 164, 165, 182, 225, 228, 365, 398, 575, 858, 862, 910, 911

Call of Israel 227, 443, 848

Call of Paul 43-46, 48-50, 85, 98, 101-103, 156-163, 168-170, 202-204, 262, 330, 335, 337, 338, 363, 370, 461, 468, 470, 501, 605, 609, 610, 612-614, 616-618, 624, 625, 648, 657, 674-677, 682, 683, 687, 701, 702, 755-757, 762-764, 776, 779, 799, 838, 892, 903, 908, 919, 920, 927, 963, 964, 969

Canon, canonical 23, 35, 37, 46, 57, 59, 67, 78, 85, 86, 89-92, 100, 114, 150, 175, 176, 198, 215, 223, 224, 241, 245, 248, 268, 329, 351, 352, 396, 397, 404, 422, 431, 469, 587, 599, 640, 659, 661, 663, 665, 692-695, 703, 704, 706, 729, 738, 744, 761, 762, 777, 779, 800, 819, 824, 842, 862, 895, 898, 901, 927, 930, 932, 937, 968

Cappadocia 324

Captive, Captivity 83, 84, 116, 118, 121, 169, 188, 205, 313, 320, 435, 532, 675, 680, 716, 753, 754, 784, 865, 878, 899, 917, 952, 953

Carpus 88, 662

Celibacy 36, 165, 273, 340, 475, 584, 595, 597, 598, 600, 693, 694, 873

Cenchreae 172, 450, 455, 589, 603, 838, 850, 870

Center of Paul's theology 92, 95, 162, 190, 209, 254, 371, 393, 396, 480, 494, 497, 502, 522, 523, 616, 618, 666, 668, 674-678, 699, 737, 837, 850, 910

Centurion 549, 720

Cephas 38, 46-48, 60, 165, 292, 447, 648, 649, 667, 670, 692, 701-703, 817

Ceremonial law 694, 844, 977

Charism 288, 344, 347, 527, 528, 595, 598, 757, 758, 760, 940-943

Charismata 59, 339-347, 373, 380, 526, 603, 604, 755, 757, 758, 939, 940, 990

Childbearing 8, 591, 860

Children of Abraham 2, 4, 5, 62, 205, 338, 501, 506, 640

Children of God 8, 18, 32, 62, 180, 196, 209, 263, 267, 290, 322, 323, 332, 350, 358, 411, 442, 507, 556, 634, 707, 873, 885, 896, 906, 910-912, 915

Children of wrath 992

Chloe 164, 881

Chreiai 213

Christ 2-15, 17, 19-22, 24-26, 30-34, 38-50, 53-59, 60-65, 68-72, 74-82, 84-86, 92-117, 123-131, 133, 134, 136-139, 145-154, 156-172, 174, 175, 178, 180-183, 185-187, 189-197, 199, 200, 201-211, 218-222, 224, 226-232, 235-248, 251, 253-284, 285-294, 296-304, 306-321, 323, 326-334, 338, 339, 341, 344, 345, 347-373, 375-383, 385, 388, 392, 393, 397-412, 415-417, 419-423, 425-447, 449, 450, 459-463, 468, 469, 473-475, 478-480, 482-493, 495, 496, 499, 500, 502, 503, 505-517, 519-521, 523, 524-528, 529-532, 534-544, 549-551, 553-569, 572, 574-578, 582, 583, 586, 588, 594, 596-598, 602, 603, 605-610, 613-625, 626-629, 632, 634-636, 639, 640, 642, 644-646, 648, 650-653, 654, 656-659, 663, 665, 667, 669, 671-678, 680-683, 686-704, 706-709, 711-713, 716, 719, 723-739, 741, 743-747, 749-755, 757-763, 766, 767, 768-774, 776, 779-783, 784-786, 793, 794, 799, 801-812, 815, 819-821, 823-826, 828, 831-836, 838, 840, 843-850, 853, 856-862, 864-874, 876-882, 884, 885, 887, 890-900, 903-921, 922-925, 927, 931, 933-935, 938, 941, 943-955, 956-960, 965, 966-978, 980-982, 984, 988-990, 992, 993

Christ's death 41, 61-63, 95, 96, 99, 110, 112, 114, 127, 158, 191-193, 195, 196, 201-203, 206, 208, 219-221, 259, 268, 269, 279-283, 280, 285, 310, 312, 331, 348, 407, 416, 434, 435, 483, 484, 572, 575, 583, 623, 646, 696, 780, 782, 807, 810, 831, 832, 845, 846, 856, 879, 880, 917, 949, 951, 956-959, 969, 989, 993

Christological monotheism 309, 355, 367

Christology 9, 14, 15, 18, 20, 22, 30, 31, 82, 94, 95, 99-101, 103-108, 112-115, 150-152, 163, 164, 175, 178, 179, 194, 197, 201, 209, 227, 240, 241, 246, 248, 253, 254, 259, 264-266, 268, 269, 275, 276, 278, 288, 291, 302, 303, 309, 310, 320, 349, 350, 353, 356, 359, 361, 368, 377, 378, 385-387, 393, 401, 407, 412, 421-423, 426, 428, 436, 438, 440, 485-487, 490-494, 498-500, 502, 516, 524, 526, 544, 557, 560, 561, 565, 569, 623, 628, 651, 674, 712, 713, 726, 737, 743, 745, 746, 775, 778, 780, 812, 843, 869, 900-904, 906, 911, 916, 921, 923, 925, 938, 953, 967, 969, 973, 982, 985, 990

Chronology 4, 86, 115-123, 143, 147, 177, 260, 262, 304, 307, 323, 327, 334, 455, 456, 457, 467, 474, 547, 609, 618, 665, 685, 691, 721, 756, 813, 819, 838, 893

Church 9-13, 15, 19-21, 24, 26, 31, 34-40, 42, 44, 46-51, 55-59, 60, 61, 64-67, 71, 72, 76-82, 86-91, 95, 98-101, 103, 108-110, 114, 116, 119, 120, 122-137, 141-147, 150, 151, 157-160, 162-168, 170-179, 185-193, 195, 200, 201, 202, 204, 208-210, 214-216, 218, 220, 223-226, 235-241, 243-248, 251, 252, 256-258, 260, 261, 265, 267-274, 276-278, 285, 287, 289-291, 294-299, 306-310, 317, 319, 320, 323, 327, 330, 331, 333-335, 337-340, 342-351, 353, 355, 359, 361, 367-371, 373, 375-378, 390, 393, 394, 396, 398, 401-410, 412, 413, 415-420, 422, 430, 434, 436, 438,

441-443, 445-448, 451-453, 457, 460-474, 476, 477, 479, 480, 482-485, 488-490, 492, 494, 495, 498, 499, 501, 504, 510, 511, 513-517, 523, 525, 527, 529, 530, 533-536, 540, 542-546, 551, 557, 560, 565, 568-575, 577-579, 582, 583, 585, 586, 589-593, 596-600, 602-608, 615, 618-621, 623, 626, 627, 630, 634, 639, 641, 642, 644, 647-651, 654-663, 665-668, 671, 672, 676, 678-696, 698, 700-710, 712, 713, 718, 723-727, 730, 733, 734, 736-739, 741, 742, 746, 747, 751, 752, 754, 757-760, 762, 765, 771, 773, 776, 778, 780, 782, 783, 807, 810, 812, 813, 816, 817, 819, 823, 825-827, 832-834, 839, 840, 850, 852-854, 856, 857, 860, 863, 865, 866, 868, 870, 872, 873, 875, 882, 883, 885-891, 893, 894, 897-899, 907, 909, 910-913, 916, 920, 922, 924, 925, 930-940, 942-945, 949, 953, 958, 962, 964, 966, 969, 974, 976, 979, 982, 984-991

Church of God 85, 124-126, 128-130, 178, 330, 535, 606, 654, 682

Church order 131, 132, 137, 188, 223, 224, 590, 597, 599, 602, 608, 658-660, 665, 680, 757, 870, 886, 887, 898, 899, 987

Cilicia 66, 117, 119, 121-123, 186, 324, 326, 328, 330, 386, 447, 449, 450, 453-455, 464, 467, 470, 549, 609, 638, 648-651, 681, 683, 684, 687, 926, 927

Circumcision 1-3, 5, 7, 8, 19, 24, 48, 50, 55, 62, 63, 65-67, 98, 103, 137-139, 145, 149, 157, 158, 175, 180, 182, 187, 189, 190, 221, 232, 233, 237, 287, 292, 303, 306-308, 310, 314, 327, 331-334, 337, 339, 353, 371, 384, 411, 436, 441, 458, 459, 465-471, 474, 489, 501, 505, 510-515, 531-534, 536, 538-541, 543, 544, 606, 646, 648-652, 661-663, 668, 682, 694, 701, 702, 711, 717, 741, 769, 781, 817, 819, 831, 844, 845, 863, 887, 890, 892, 944, 949, 975-977, 989, 992

Circumcision party 187, 307, 469, 470, 514, 648-650, 661, 663

Citizen, Citizenship 16, 84, 123, 139-142, 235, 251, 252, 334, 381-383, 456, 472, 547, 549, 550, 596, 612, 619, 681, 682, 685, 687, 708, 711, 715, 718, 720-722, 789, 821, 826, 855, 861, 868, 884, 927

Civil authority 59, 141, 142, 153, 235, 238, 262, 274, 275, 292, 293, 316, 418, 479, 544, 545, 547, 550, 589, 718, 722, 747, 748, 838, 870, 896, 913, 968, 985, 992

Claudia 662

Claudius 24, 25, 84, 97, 120, 122, 142, 177, 234, 235, 387, 545, 548-550, 652, 685, 720-723, 756, 815-817, 838, 839, 849, 853, 926, 945

Clean, cleansing 34, 61, 155, 156, 280, 292, 308, 435, 477, 794, 856, 864, 868, 898, 917

Cleanthes 356, 420, 983

Clement 35, 66, 67, 86-91, 116, 175, 185, 223, 240, 241, 321, 350, 451, 626, 659, 661, 662, 687, 692-694, 702, 708, 709, 793, 808, 854, 928

Coherence of Pauline theology 30, 92, 94, 393, 522, 676, 677, 736, 801

Collection for the saints 47, 55, 119, 122, 123, 143, 144, 146, 164, 176, 178, 294, 295, 297, 299, 374, 450, 451, 455, 463, 468, 472, 474, 657, 680, 686, 800, 826, 827, 850, 870

Colossae 22, 23, 56, 79, 86, 87, 125, 147, 148, 151-153, 185, 187, 203, 230-232, 245, 252, 353, 355, 368, 448, 645, 651, 655, 662, 680, 685, 703-705, 716, 749, 754, 883, 981

Colossian heresy 78, 147-149, 151, 353

Colossians 22, 64, 79-80, 94, 125, 128, 147-153, 189-190, 203, 204, 220, 221, 229-233, 238-243, 264, 272-274, 292, 293, 302, 303, 401, 403, 420-423, 526, 557, 582, 622, 629, 651, 697-698, 706, 745-746, 752-754, 948, 959, 981, 982, 988, 989

Commandments 1, 178, 271, 336, 337, 404, 462, 478, 479, 483, 509, 529, 530, 534, 542, 543, 576, 641, 664, 673, 698, 781, 797, 871, 878, 922, 951, 971, 972

Commonwealth of Israel 951

Compassion 1, 2, 37, 64, 68, 134, 145, 190, 357, 365, 437, 445, 490, 530, 575, 577, 578, 601-603, 728, 729, 733, 798

Condemnation 13, 42, 103, 155, 206, 237, 271, 281, 364, 409, 413, 435, 516, 517, 537, 538, 620, 641, 646, 780, 803, 846, 862, 865, 905, 950, 957, 960

Confession 47, 61, 63, 96, 103, 191, 192, 200, 220, 238, 239, 276, 356, 360, 367, 371, 407, 408, 421, 422, 424, 425, 459, 535, 565, 634, 664, 713, 725, 727, 731, 798, 799, 801, 806, 812, 902, 944, 958, 970, 975, 985, 988, 989

Conscience 41, 42, 142, 153-156, 268, 272, 275, 309, 310, 315, 316, 425, 426, 504, 594, 615, 616, 619, 675, 683, 684, 690, 766, 770, 774-776, 850, 854, 857, 880, 896, 897, 899, 916-919, 968, 973-975, 993

Contentment 322, 624, 625, 717, 826

Contingency of Paul's Theology 94, 104, 254, 255, 393

Conversion (general) 44, 63, 126, 139, 169, 189, 272, 409, 414, 425, 433, 508, 628, 690, 693, 774, 885, 888, 889, 893, 894

Conversion of Paul 19, 31, 60, 66, 85, 95, 101-103, 114, 116, 117, 119-123, 146, 156-163, 202, 266, 327, 330, 379, 447, 451, 453, 454, 461-463, 465, 467, 493, 499, 503, 530, 607, 612, 613, 615, 622, 624, 625, 675, 682, 686, 690, 691, 725, 750, 755, 763, 764, 779, 796, 799, 813, 871, 892, 908, 944, 969

Converts 2, 19, 23, 43, 54, 56-58, 66, 69, 83, 127, 132, 133, 136, 137, 139, 148, 155, 160, 163, 181, 185-187, 189, 191, 199, 245, 246, 290, 300, 307, 309, 316, 326-328, 332, 333, 338, 395, 403, 420, 430, 431, 441, 468, 489, 496, 500, 502, 508, 512, 513, 515, 538, 553, 562, 570, 576, 582, 603, 605-608, 610, 616, 648, 654-658, 675, 679-681, 683, 684, 686, 689, 708, 711, 718, 724, 729, 732, 733, 820, 821, 824, 826, 857, 870, 871, 883, 889-891, 894, 900, 903, 927, 934, 935, 944, 955, 974, 989

Corinth 8, 11, 21, 22, 36, 38, 39, 47, 49, 50, 54, 56, 58, 64, 76-78, 86, 87, 91, 94, 118-123, 125-133, 135, 136, 144, 156, 164-168, 171-177, 179, 180, 185, 187, 190, 193, 195, 200, 202-204, 217, 237, 251, 252, 255, 257, 258, 269, 270, 290, 291, 293, 295-297, 305, 309, 310, 343, 345, 352-355, 362, 371, 379, 385, 387, 394, 406, 425, 426, 428, 447-451, 454, 455, 462, 487-489, 491, 496, 513, 515, 516, 527, 528, 536, 544-546, 548, 567, 569-571, 574, 575, 579, 589, 592, 597, 603, 606-608, 617, 619, 620, 622, 626, 635, 644-647, 649-652, 654, 655, 657, 658, 661, 662, 668-671, 679, 681, 684, 685, 687-689, 694, 702, 710, 711, 719, 721, 726, 741, 760, 787, 817-819, 827, 838, 854, 865, 871-874, 883, 885, 886, 889, 891, 897, 900, 916, 917, 918, 923, 924, 926, 927, 934, 936, 939, 940, 964, 969, 974, 985-990

Corinthian church 11, 35, 42, 57, 78, 165, 170, 173, 200, 252, 296-298, 323, 462, 482, 489, 535, 545, 570, 585, 590, 596, 598, 607, 667, 692, 696, 840, 872, 964, 974

Corinthians 8-15, 21-23, 34-39, 41-44, 46-49, 72-79, 94, 126-129, 153, 154, 163-179, 180-181, 189-197, 201-205, 209-211, 256-269, 295-301, 339-347, 352, 373-381, 410-412, 425-426, 428-429, 475-478, 535-538, 568-574, 579, 584-592, 594-600, 622, 695-697, 702, 755, 762, 821, 871-878, 924, 939-943, 958-960, 969, 970, 981

Cornerstone 127

Corporate personality 78, 434, 436

Cosmic Christ 94, 95, 105, 150, 203, 240, 246, 651

Cosmic powers 28, 32, 128, 142, 232, 246, 359, 698, 723, 724, 748, 751, 948, 959, 988

Cosmology 32, 34, 99, 190, 192, 278, 306, 322, 381, 383, 403, 555, 583, 697, 699, 716, 748, 766, 796, 810, 863, 957, 963-965, 979, 981-983

Cosmos 25, 28, 30, 32, 33, 79, 93, 99, 183, 189, 203, 204, 207, 229-231, 253, 264, 275, 320, 355, 416, 554, 581, 626, 697, 747, 751, 787, 810, 862, 865, 878, 946, 948, 959, 968, 983, 984

Council in Jerusalem 185, 330, 651, 684, 687

Covenant 1-3, 5-7, 9, 15, 17, 42, 49, 50, 57, 58, 62, 77,

115, 129, 130, 138, 145, 169, 170, 175, 178-183, 194, 199, 200, 205-210, 229, 250, 279, 281, 283, 287, 291, 310, 316, 327, 331, 333, 335, 336, 338, 339, 348, 349, 355, 358, 369, 403, 404, 426, 436, 441-444, 446, 462, 463, 469, 470, 482-484, 489, 504, 508, 510, 516, 519-521, 523, 529, 531-542, 572, 573, 595, 597, 598, 601, 614, 620, 621, 630, 638, 640, 643, 646, 649, 672-674, 676-679, 741, 744, 750, 764, 766, 777, 778, 780-782, 784, 796, 797, 799, 801, 803-805, 828-830, 833-836, 845, 846, 848-850, 866, 870, 879, 881, 890, 908, 911, 924, 946, 947, 951, 952, 954, 977, 985, 987, 989, 991, 992

Covenant blessing 848, 947

Covenant curse 866, 947, 951, 952

Covenantal nomism 18, 102, 182, 183, 233, 510, 519, 531, 673, 675, 778, 797, 805

Covetousness 426, 879

Coworkers 49, 56, 67, 87, 136, 137, 148, 152, 167, 183, 185-189, 286, 369, 417, 428, 430, 450, 476, 551, 552, 589, 592, 602, 604, 608, 617, 618, 626, 647, 652, 657, 658, 661-665, 684, 701, 703-706, 752, 754, 859, 885, 898, 932, 933, 935, 937

Creation 6, 10, 11, 13-15, 28, 30-34, 59, 64, 65, 68, 69, 72, 75, 91, 93-95, 99, 103, 105, 108, 110, 111, 141, 142, 147, 149, 152, 156, 163, 170, 178, 182, 185, 189, 190, 194, 197, 204, 205, 207, 208, 219-221, 256, 264, 267-269, 272-274, 276, 277, 282, 283, 302, 303, 305, 317, 320, 322, 334, 339, 348-350, 352, 354-357, 359, 361, 367, 368, 376, 381, 383, 389, 395, 402, 407, 409, 411, 413, 416, 417, 420, 422, 426-428, 433, 434, 436, 437, 441-443, 464, 483, 485, 497, 500, 507, 526, 528, 538, 555, 556, 569, 573, 574, 583, 585, 586, 591, 595, 598, 627, 629, 638, 674, 676, 677, 684, 696, 698, 716, 717, 723, 730, 731, 741, 743-746, 750, 765, 768, 770, 772, 773, 778, 780-782, 785, 786, 788, 830, 832, 835-837, 847, 862, 866, 872, 873, 878, 879, 892, 893, 896, 908, 909, 910-912, 916, 947-954, 966-971, 973, 979-982, 984, 988

Creator 2, 5, 6, 8, 52, 64, 69, 70, 190, 194, 207, 264, 273, 314, 320, 348, 354-356, 358, 366, 413, 414, 427, 443, 494, 516, 730, 835, 836, 844, 845, 849, 879, 908, 909, 913, 915, 970, 981, 982, 985

Creed 46, 48, 57, 61, 64, 65, 93, 97, 101, 134, 188, 190-192, 201, 219, 238, 239, 253, 257, 258, 276, 277, 354, 356, 360, 366, 370, 391-393, 412, 420, 421, 423, 458, 459, 460, 499, 557, 560, 564, 565, 659, 664, 726, 736, 737, 739, 807, 840, 879, 896, 902, 943, 944, 954, 984, 985, 987, 988-990

Crescens 323, 662

Cretans 386

Crete 188, 448, 451, 605, 661, 946, 962

Crispus 38, 173, 719, 889

Cross 15, 19, 20, 38, 50, 62, 76, 77, 93, 94, 97, 99, 104, 109, 114, 138, 139, 148, 165, 167, 169, 174, 175, 178, 192-200, 201-209, 221, 227, 236, 246, 247, 254, 257, 259, 262, 264, 265, 276, 280-284, 285, 294, 304, 308, 309, 313, 318, 323, 324, 330-332, 334, 343, 345, 349, 370, 371, 396, 406, 407, 422, 423, 428-431, 435, 437, 460, 483, 486, 488-490, 492-494, 497, 499, 500, 502, 512, 525, 543, 575, 577, 582, 606, 613, 622-624, 627, 628, 646, 673, 677, 697-699, 707, 711, 717, 723, 724, 734, 735, 737, 743, 746, 748, 750, 751, 754, 781, 782, 784-786, 821, 824-826, 836, 837, 857, 864, 866, 879, 880, 895, 896, 899, 909, 916, 918, 919, 920, 921, 923, 929, 938, 948, 949, 952-954, 957-959, 965, 967, 969, 970, 975, 988-990

Crown 172, 240, 387, 608, 655, 686, 732, 831

Crucifixion 33, 34, 54, 60, 66, 97, 102, 109, 116, 121, 123, 192-195, 197-200, 201, 203, 204, 209, 210, 221, 276, 305, 351, 379, 454, 486, 492, 496, 500, 507, 622, 628, 682, 736, 773, 806, 810, 814, 854, 892, 921, 970, 981, 982

Cumanus 817

Cup 25, 69, 76, 180, 479, 570-574, 715, 898, 989

Cup of blessing 574

Cup of demons 210, 379

Cup of the Lord 379

Curse 18, 55, 69, 113, 197, 209, 217, 281, 282, 287, 313, 322, 323, 330, 334, 339, 375, 435, 478, 533, 534, 537, 539, 558, 559, 573, 580, 581, 591, 592, 599, 682, 727, 728, 763, 782, 797, 798, 800-803, 805, 824, 866, 878, 880, 919, 947, 949, 951, 952, 969, 975-977, 991, 993

Curse of the Law 3, 102, 199, 200, 288, 332, 538, 542, 785, 802, 978

Cybele 243, 250

Cynics 173, 213, 295, 387, 395, 584, 655, 657, 713, 715, 717, 827, 884, 922, 944

Cyprus 23, 24, 66, 67, 119, 120, 144, 185, 350, 395, 450, 455, 582, 684, 687, 721, 817, 946

Dalmatia 188

Damascus 46, 50, 66, 117, 119-123, 159, 211, 330, 385, 447, 449, 450, 455, 465, 612, 613, 636, 648, 682, 683, 719, 720, 755, 777, 782, 911, 969

Damascus Road 16, 31, 48, 49, 78, 95, 97, 101-103, 156, 157, 161-163, 262, 266, 275, 370, 444, 461, 500, 506, 622, 624, 675, 725, 763, 779, 780, 908, 963, 964

Darkness 28, 105, 125, 148, 150, 163, 220, 226, 232, 233, 235, 262, 272, 274, 316, 322, 348-350, 352, 382, 435, 437, 526, 527, 530, 555-557, 583, 598, 605, 690, 691, 693, 730, 731, 734, 748-753, 772, 773, 778, 780, 781, 788, 797, 803, 830, 831, 861-864, 866, 922, 950, 953, 980-982, 989

David 17, 57, 95, 109, 131, 182, 209, 256, 258, 276, 302, 304, 415, 463, 498, 725, 744, 764, 779, 782, 796, 803, 811, 842, 862, 868, 882, 901, 904, 925

Day of Atonement 279, 283, 402, 984

Day of Christ 40, 43, 259, 266, 278, 321, 576, 577, 606, 608, 683, 732

Day of the Lord 22, 33, 42, 64, 216, 229, 253, 259, 264, 265, 268, 278, 304, 346, 564, 567-569, 592, 608, 737, 761, 861, 866, 933, 947, 950, 952

Day of wrath 991

Deacons 130, 155, 589, 603, 604, 850, 863, 870, 887

Dead in Christ 111, 507

Dead to sin 60, 62-64, 220, 373, 554, 847, 879

Dead to the Law 220, 289, 331, 639

Death of Christ 33, 60, 62, 63, 65, 75, 163, 168, 170, 193-197, 199, 200, 201, 203-209, 221, 228, 264, 281-284, 312, 313, 321, 331, 353, 401, 422, 437, 468, 486, 502, 555, 572, 574, 578, 629, 646, 695, 696, 699, 716, 737, 768, 785, 786, 801, 809, 810, 832, 845, 847, 857, 858, 860, 862, 878-880, 896, 906, 911, 950, 953, 975, 977

Decalogue 271, 317

Deconstructionism 389

Decree 139, 185, 188, 234, 236, 307, 309, 310, 327, 328, 337, 396, 403, 464, 466, 469-471, 474, 529, 547, 550, 687, 764, 785, 824

Defilement 42, 105, 127, 153-156, 215, 280, 292, 305, 338, 384, 399, 693, 769, 771, 772, 775

Deity, Deities 21, 98, 107, 108, 151, 211, 219, 229, 231, 232, 249, 250, 252, 277, 279, 290, 291, 309, 355, 356, 360, 368, 373, 420, 424, 425, 427, 434, 560, 561, 563, 580-582, 581, 583, 623, 627, 714, 716, 787-792, 794, 795, 851, 852, 856, 857, 869, 884, 900, 901, 904, 923-925, 950, 983

Deliverance 36, 73, 87, 88, 93, 101, 141, 148, 150, 154, 168, 175, 187, 195, 196, 200, 202, 205, 208, 221, 230, 231, 236, 244, 247, 259, 264, 297, 315, 340, 346, 356, 359, 409, 415, 424, 433, 435, 445, 446, 448, 450, 465, 473, 475, 477, 489, 518, 524, 526, 549, 556, 557, 601, 634-636, 641, 644, 656, 682, 685, 687, 693, 726, 731, 756, 758, 776, 782, 786, 800, 804, 818, 829, 830, 850, 856, 858, 859, 861, 862, 864, 866-868, 879, 905, 919, 920, 947, 950, 951, 960, 984, 986, 989, 991

Deliverer 33, 249, 445, 512, 804, 861, 867, 902, 938, 950

Demas 36, 183, 662, 935

Demons, Demonic 21, 27, 31, 42, 44, 47, 77, 105, 166, 192, 209, 210, 211, 228-231, 235, 236, 251, 272, 313, 315, 316, 352, 359, 360, 379-381, 404, 405,

424-426, 458, 460, 462, 572, 573, 580-583, 623, 627, 663, 714, 723, 747, 749, 750-752, 785, 794, 795, 857, 863, 866, 867, 876-878, 902, 917, 948, 953, 982, 988
Demythologization 676, 677, 747
Derbe 119, 143, 323-326, 447, 450, 451, 455, 684
Destruction of Jerusalem 263, 463, 473, 474, 593, 637, 798, 801, 881
Deutero-Pauline Letters 86-88, 91-93, 137, 224, 255, 260, 347, 891, 939
Deuteronomic perspective 798, 799, 801-804
Devil 21, 23, 211, 236, 238, 247, 262, 274, 381, 557, 582, 583, 724, 731, 751, 752, 771, 862-867, 880, 953, 980, 982
Diana 250, 592, 790
Diaspora 2, 23, 45, 47, 66, 143-146, 173, 211-213, 297, 335, 337, 354, 386, 387, 414, 463, 503, 504, 511, 531, 583, 612, 618, 635, 645, 650, 651, 662, 669, 672, 718, 719, 722, 728, 738, 797, 838, 839, 849, 851, 883, 986
Diatribe 213, 214, 358, 387, 392, 505, 552, 553, 643, 715, 740, 821, 825, 840, 841, 845, 850
Dietary laws 113, 458, 511, 794
Dionysus 250, 387, 587, 588
Disciple 24, 47, 67, 74, 87, 159, 240, 251, 276, 430, 431, 463, 464, 479, 498, 501, 507, 559, 570, 572-574, 587, 589, 655, 659, 690, 703, 712, 714, 726, 755, 760, 763, 811, 813, 814, 856, 884, 885, 902, 909, 911, 941
Discipleship 203, 278, 429, 431, 502, 894, 907, 909, 911, 974
Discipline 20-22, 39, 42, 45, 55-57, 59, 72, 131, 136, 137, 200, 214-218, 224, 261, 304, 312, 327, 373, 394, 406, 419, 430, 470, 517, 568, 600, 612, 635, 656-658, 663, 689, 725, 773, 777, 778, 849, 856, 865, 866, 872, 874, 883, 887, 892, 908, 909, 947, 967, 992
Disease 380, 381, 781, 858, 867, 877, 983
Disobedience 13, 72, 73, 112, 131, 142, 155, 171, 200, 216, 217, 231, 235, 237, 267, 291, 292, 322, 338, 413, 431, 432, 442, 446, 475, 501, 517, 521, 533, 534, 537, 538, 539, 541, 556, 601, 602, 643, 756, 772, 797, 798, 802, 803, 831, 836, 846, 849, 864, 865, 915, 957, 980, 991, 992
Dividing wall 205, 236, 353, 468, 925, 951
Divine man 177, 178, 488, 516, 645, 646, 670, 671
Divine sonship 18, 276, 479, 900-903, 906
Divine warrior 22, 750, 863, 946-953
Divorce 57, 106, 178, 275, 376, 400, 401, 414, 475, 480, 482, 485, 584, 592, 594-600, 731, 875, 915, 958
Downpayment 263, 417, 857
Doxology 68, 69, 106, 193, 238-240, 354, 367, 370, 371, 374, 391, 392, 412, 551-553, 557, 558, 560, 622, 664, 665, 707, 725, 727, 728, 734, 779, 844, 933, 980, 981, 985, 990
Dreams 25, 27, 755, 789
Drink, Drinking 42, 63, 210, 238, 295, 314, 356, 379, 403, 405, 569-571, 573, 579, 689, 702, 711, 789, 857, 859, 872, 898, 913, 914, 943, 967, 989
Drunkenness 246, 414, 476, 556, 570, 571, 574, 579, 771, 872
Dualism 27, 28, 31, 32, 72, 75, 76, 92, 174, 175, 200, 224, 235, 255-257, 262, 264, 282, 305, 306, 350, 351, 352, 432, 435, 438, 441, 694, 724, 765-768, 772, 778, 780, 781, 808, 812, 854, 863, 922, 963, 968, 969, 988
Dying and rising 62, 65, 77, 93, 125, 150, 153, 163, 195, 197, 205, 209, 218-222, 229, 268, 278, 314, 383, 402, 428, 431, 500, 553, 554, 555, 583, 624, 625, 628, 629, 694, 773, 810, 812, 847, 908, 910, 916, 989
Early catholicism 152, 223-225, 248, 665, 886, 899
Early church tradition 37, 91, 225, 351, 353, 396, 665, 690-692, 709
Earth 29, 30, 32, 33, 47, 54, 70, 98, 104, 108, 111, 126, 127, 130, 141, 151, 189, 190, 224, 229-231, 257, 260, 264, 286, 292, 302, 319-321, 348, 354, 356-358, 381, 382, 403, 408, 410, 411, 424, 426, 427, 432, 438, 440, 464, 473, 510, 525, 530, 577, 581, 612, 617, 622, 626, 627, 661, 666, 698, 712, 726, 733, 747-751, 787-789, 792, 823, 829, 863, 865, 891, 922, 925, 950, 954, 956, 958, 959, 968, 971, 972, 979-983, 988
Earthly tent 301, 382, 555
Eating, Meals 24, 41, 42, 70, 77, 129, 134, 153-155, 166, 183, 203, 210, 214, 216, 238, 276, 290, 294, 306-310, 314-316, 330, 331, 336, 353, 356, 375, 379, 395, 403, 425, 426, 431, 462, 471, 498, 533, 535, 543, 559, 567-574, 578, 579, 606, 648, 649, 684, 689, 702, 708, 714, 725, 741, 742, 775, 788, 789, 791, 794, 856, 857, 859, 872, 887-889, 892, 893, 897, 898, 910, 913, 914, 916-918, 984, 986, 989, 992, 993
Ebionites 692-694
Ecstatic experience 46, 163, 200, 266, 381, 383, 407, 508, 511, 625, 686, 716, 734, 762, 764, 877, 916, 990
Eden 10, 27-30, 130, 274, 306, 381, 591, 771, 781, 950
Edification 41, 129, 130, 289, 341, 345, 346, 374, 411, 412, 577, 610, 755, 758, 761, 914, 940-942, 990
Egypt 1, 16, 20, 24, 30, 89, 173, 188, 211, 213, 244, 350, 351, 383-385, 424, 427, 463, 464, 569, 580, 585, 612, 723, 785-788, 791, 798, 813, 814, 851, 856, 863, 875, 928, 930, 931, 946, 947, 951, 984
Egyptian prophet 818, 819
Elders 84, 130, 131, 134, 135, 137, 216, 337, 386, 451, 463, 504, 602-605, 649-651, 654, 657, 660, 661, 664, 665, 684, 719, 725, 726, 756, 757, 886, 887, 962
Election 8, 17, 20, 21, 29, 40, 41, 43, 45, 68, 70, 78, 85, 109, 181, 182, 225-229, 237, 238, 310, 311, 320, 348, 355, 356, 361, 365, 373, 421, 434, 443, 446, 508, 510, 519, 575, 601, 616, 621, 622, 643, 679, 682, 740, 743, 746, 776, 781, 782, 798, 800, 803, 804, 839, 842, 844, 845, 848, 849, 880, 890, 896, 904, 906, 923, 956, 960, 989
Elemental spirits, stoicheia 5, 17, 22, 23, 148, 203, 205, 210, 211, 229-233, 262, 403, 421, 539, 583, 747, 751, 752, 795, 866, 951, 980-982, 988
Eleusinian mysteries 787, 792, 793
Elijah 30, 437, 444, 655, 763, 764, 803, 806, 877
Elisha 655, 806, 877
Emperors 24, 30, 34, 83, 84, 141, 142, 233-235, 262, 360, 369, 384, 417, 472, 476, 546, 547, 550, 560, 561, 569, 592, 593, 682, 687, 707, 710, 715, 719-723, 756, 787, 789-791, 794, 795, 814-816, 819, 855, 867-869, 884, 901, 945, 946, 983
Emperor cult, worship 233, 234, 360, 791, 792, 867, 868
End of the Law 163, 509, 510
Endurance 19, 20, 40, 41, 44, 55, 169, 170, 175, 349, 363, 392, 524, 578, 692, 708, 724, 820, 854, 919, 920, 921, 953, 967, 972
Enemies 8, 25, 28, 30, 41, 167, 186, 206, 235-238, 246, 258, 259, 265, 271, 277, 278, 280, 313, 314, 318, 359, 364, 379, 411, 421, 429, 436, 439, 444, 477, 488, 491, 501, 513, 554-556, 581, 601, 606, 687, 693, 696-699, 707, 710, 711, 747, 750-752, 764, 779, 782, 799, 817, 818, 829, 836, 858, 862-864, 866, 867, 879, 886, 904, 905, 908, 947-953, 959, 969, 981, 991-993
Enmity 179, 181, 235, 236, 238, 280, 295, 366, 411, 441, 442, 444, 545, 555, 695-699, 752, 863, 879, 925, 927, 951-953, 981, 982, 993
Enthronement 248, 268, 275, 277, 278, 422, 436, 438, 526, 569, 582, 627, 812, 900, 901, 904, 906, 948, 950, 953, 958, 988
Epaphras 147-149, 152, 187, 680, 685, 688, 703, 754, 870, 953
Epaphroditus 47, 133, 186, 554, 602, 689, 705, 707, 708, 769, 870, 946, 953
Ephesians 78-82, 99, 118, 189-190, 238-248, 301, 345, 353, 375-378, 401, 418, 421, 583-592, 596, 622-623, 626-629, 697-699, 862-866, 868, 925, 931-932, 951, 959, 981
Ephesus 25, 35, 36, 38, 86-88, 118, 119, 121, 123, 144, 147, 148, 151, 152, 164, 176, 177, 188, 244-253, 354, 387, 403, 418, 425, 447-451, 455, 472, 474, 547, 580, 582, 583, 590, 591, 605, 618, 623, 627, 661, 662, 680, 684, 685, 687, 688, 690, 703-705, 710, 711, 738, 748, 794,

795, 817, 842, 883, 923, 926, 931, 932, 940, 953
Epicureans 52, 385-387, 713, 714, 716, 795
Erastus 173, 183, 662, 838, 889
Esau 237, 376, 505, 506, 848
Eschatological antagonist 29-31, 33, 34, 235
Eschatology 9, 11, 21, 25-28, 30-35, 41, 45, 57, 65, 71, 73, 76, 96, 99, 103, 105, 112, 115, 146, 147, 150, 151, 164, 167, 175, 178, 189, 190, 195, 199, 201, 205, 206, 209, 216, 220, 221, 224, 225, 238, 240, 241, 243, 247, 253-261, 263-269, 274, 277, 286, 301, 321, 346, 350, 354, 368, 370, 381-383, 394, 399-401, 404, 407, 409, 411-413, 417, 428, 432-434, 438, 440, 445, 446, 476, 490, 491, 493, 495, 496, 500, 502, 503, 507, 511, 512, 516-518, 524-526, 535, 536, 554, 557, 559, 564, 567-569, 577, 593, 594, 608, 612, 616-619, 629, 638, 640, 660, 667, 671, 672, 674-677, 686, 693, 694, 700, 701, 717, 732, 746, 751, 761, 766, 774, 782, 783, 793, 804-806, 808, 810, 812, 820, 835, 837, 842, 846, 850, 861, 862, 867, 868, 872, 896, 899, 907, 919, 925, 933-935, 937-939, 947, 952, 953, 959, 960, 967, 973, 982, 988-991, 993
Essenes 49, 175, 337, 402, 509, 669, 777, 778, 780-782, 813, 864
Eternal destruction 236, 350, 360, 952, 956, 992
Eternal life 26, 84, 108, 265, 270, 301, 314, 329, 340, 382, 399, 416, 432, 436, 480, 504, 529, 554, 771, 809, 810, 812, 882, 938, 956, 957, 992
Ethics 8, 10, 14, 19, 28, 32, 40, 41, 57, 60, 64, 65, 72, 93, 94, 103, 104, 139, 140, 142, 151, 153, 154, 156, 176, 178, 193, 201, 203, 217, 218, 220, 225, 238, 247, 252-254, 256, 257, 259, 264-266, 268-275, 290, 305, 310, 314-319, 323, 329, 330, 333, 334, 341, 347, 354, 379, 393, 397-399, 401, 402, 404, 410-412, 414, 418, 419, 422, 423, 426, 428, 431, 435, 460, 471, 479, 485-487, 493-495, 502, 510, 535, 542, 544, 567, 575-578, 588, 592, 600, 629, 663, 666, 667, 674, 676, 679, 689-691, 693, 706, 712, 715, 739, 743, 745, 746, 766, 767, 770, 772, 774, 776, 805, 808, 810, 826, 828, 829, 831, 834, 854, 871, 874, 875, 884, 886, 888, 889, 894, 898, 899, 907, 912, 916, 922, 923, 933, 938, 939, 949, 962, 963, 966, 967, 969, 972, 973, 988, 989
Ethnarch 117, 335, 719, 814
Eubulus 662
Eucharist 66, 76, 77, 81, 210, 352, 385, 485, 559, 575, 578, 579, 608
Euodia 603, 626, 708
Evangelism 57, 81, 136, 246, 300, 406, 409, 468, 499, 518, 619, 687, 891
Evangelists 36, 113, 129, 135, 198, 345, 347, 369, 464, 504, 603, 611, 654, 685, 712, 756, 826, 859, 902, 944
Eve 10, 22, 30, 111, 328, 402, 428, 453, 509, 511, 586, 591, 649, 771, 860, 863-865, 878, 950
Evil 20-22, 28-33, 40, 41, 69, 71, 93, 103, 112, 142, 149, 153, 165-167, 189, 205, 209-211, 217, 218, 221, 224, 225, 228, 235, 246, 247, 252, 256, 264, 271, 274, 275, 285, 289, 292, 305, 313, 330, 332, 346, 350, 352, 356, 359, 365, 380, 382, 416, 426, 431, 458, 507, 517, 533, 535, 536, 541, 555, 556, 567, 581-583, 587, 593, 594, 641, 647, 694, 696, 698, 711, 714, 723, 724, 726, 731, 732, 747-749, 751, 763-765, 767, 770-774, 778, 781, 793, 798, 823, 830, 831, 844, 856, 859, 861-867, 870, 877-880, 890, 914, 920, 926, 938, 947, 949-951, 953, 955, 967, 969, 977, 980-983, 988, 992, 993
Evil age 28-32, 69, 165, 189, 205, 264, 313, 330, 507, 724, 771, 773, 774, 778, 781, 866, 920, 950, 951, 981
Evil One 289, 365, 593, 864, 866
Exaltation 12, 21, 22, 41, 54, 68, 81, 84, 97-99, 101, 102, 104, 107, 108, 109, 113, 150, 151, 191, 192, 200, 202, 212, 238, 239, 245-248, 257, 265, 268, 270, 272, 275-278, 349, 353, 361, 367, 382, 392, 393, 396, 408, 422, 433, 436-438, 487, 502, 526, 557, 563, 565, 566, 568, 569, 582, 602, 605, 606, 623, 625, 627, 628, 634, 645, 682, 689, 712, 716, 723, 736, 741, 749-751, 809, 812, 864, 900, 902, 904, 906, 907, 911, 916, 947, 948, 953, 958, 959, 969, 970, 988
Example of Christ 209, 487, 577, 713
Exile 1, 17, 18, 26, 123, 205, 211, 231, 348, 402, 455, 504, 532-534, 595, 615, 691, 782, 785, 796-805, 866, 947, 950, 951, 984, 991
Exodus 16, 17, 108, 169, 181, 205, 278, 348, 365, 380, 390, 407, 424, 564, 572, 621, 632, 634, 744, 784, 785, 797, 818, 864, 866, 875, 876, 905, 947, 950, 951, 970, 989
Exorcism 209-211, 380, 381, 582, 583, 627, 752, 794, 795, 866, 867, 876, 877, 917, 953, 982
Expiation 196, 203, 209, 279, 280, 282, 285, 312, 313, 349, 786, 836, 837, 845, 856, 857, 990, 992, 993
Fadus 816, 818
Faith 2-8, 14, 19, 30, 31, 39-46, 48, 56, 60-63, 66, 68-70, 73, 75, 83-85, 88, 90-92, 96, 99, 100, 102, 103, 115, 130, 132, 133, 138, 145-148, 155, 156, 161-163, 166-168, 171, 172, 178, 180-183, 187, 189-191, 193-195, 197, 202-204, 209, 220, 221, 223, 224, 229, 237, 239, 245-247, 254, 257, 258, 263, 265, 267, 269-276, 281, 285-291, 294, 301, 306, 310, 311, 315, 316, 318, 321, 323, 327, 330-334, 342-345, 349, 351, 352, 354, 355, 362, 363, 365, 367, 369-371, 373, 380, 388, 390-393, 401, 402, 405-411, 415-422, 424, 429, 430, 432, 434, 436, 442-448, 450, 452, 457-460, 462, 463, 469-471, 473, 479, 482, 493-497, 502, 503, 506-510, 512, 515-523, 524, 528, 529-532, 535, 541, 542, 549, 550, 554-556, 562, 564-566, 569, 576-578, 593-595, 598, 599, 603, 605, 606, 608-610, 612, 614, 616, 619, 623, 624, 630, 635, 637, 640-643, 651, 652, 655-658, 667, 671, 672, 674-677, 679, 683, 688, 689, 691, 692, 694, 700, 702-708, 711, 713, 716, 717, 723, 724, 726, 728, 730-733, 735, 736, 740, 741, 743, 754, 759, 762, 764, 768, 779-783, 796, 800, 802, 804-806, 811, 812, 815, 819, 821-824, 830-837, 842-846, 848-850, 852, 854, 856-861, 866, 868, 870, 876, 878, 885, 887, 890-896, 898, 902, 904, 907-913, 915-921, 923, 933-935, 938, 939, 941, 944, 945, 947, 957-959, 961, 963, 970, 972, 974, 975, 977, 979, 981, 983-985, 989, 990, 992
Faith of Abraham 3, 5, 7, 8, 288
Faith of Jesus Christ 287, 291, 334
Faithfulness 2, 11, 41-44, 55, 57, 69, 72, 85, 99, 136, 147, 148, 151, 168, 170, 171, 182, 194, 196, 204-207, 209, 226, 244, 257, 281, 285, 287, 288, 290, 291, 308, 311, 316, 318, 330, 362, 365, 408, 412, 415, 416, 418, 420, 429, 430, 442-446, 475, 489, 492, 518, 520, 521, 524, 533, 558, 559, 595, 597, 602, 604, 606, 610, 641, 655, 664, 665, 676, 677, 699, 729, 730, 732, 738, 741, 761, 764, 782, 806, 810, 820, 824, 828-832, 834-837, 836, 842, 843, 845, 846, 848-850, 863, 866, 878, 908, 912, 913, 916, 920, 931, 932, 946, 947, 949, 952, 973, 986, 992
Falling away 39-41, 43, 45, 85, 156, 218, 229, 291, 311, 517, 593, 658, 701, 731, 820, 960
False apostles 50, 58, 132, 171, 186, 236, 237, 296, 607, 645, 650, 651, 670, 693, 694, 752, 865
False prophet, prophecy 30, 33, 58, 760, 763-765, 903, 904
False teaching 22, 30, 44, 87, 90, 149-151, 224, 229, 231, 252, 320, 321, 421, 448, 462, 591, 606, 662, 860, 982
Family 2, 35, 66, 78, 83, 84, 94, 128, 132-134, 147, 173, 182, 187, 207, 215, 216, 227, 228, 269, 290, 295, 300, 302, 325, 356, 357, 376, 377, 383, 391, 393, 397, 400, 417, 418, 425, 465, 484, 487, 501, 510, 533, 539, 577, 585-588, 592, 595, 608, 626, 646, 654, 656, 681, 682, 688, 693, 706, 716, 721, 722, 784, 789, 816, 817, 826, 851, 853, 859, 862, 872, 877, 881, 882, 885, 887-889, 905, 909, 910, 929, 967, 975
Famine 24, 144, 297, 319,

328, 465, 473, 579, 722, 756, 816, 827
Famine relief, relief visit 66, 67, 119-121, 123, 185, 327, 450, 451, 453, 454, 466-468, 687
Fasts, Fasting 44, 80, 118, 290, 329, 333, 346, 402-404, 439, 444, 483, 634, 725, 756, 898, 944, 984
Fate 37, 43, 198, 230, 232, 245, 262, 263, 362, 403, 420, 426, 473, 477, 502, 549, 581, 583, 615, 709, 715, 787, 829, 933, 952, 983, 984
Fear 24, 29, 40, 170, 202, 219, 245-247, 291-293, 314, 319, 332, 338, 357, 399, 421, 448, 454, 459, 465, 479, 512, 513, 527, 530, 548, 578, 581, 583, 627, 652, 681, 685, 690, 694, 708, 714, 751, 761, 764, 769, 770, 817, 821, 840, 860, 865, 872, 875-877, 916, 950, 959, 971, 983, 992
Feast of Tabernacles 2
Feast of Unleavened Bread 300
Feast of Weeks 744
Feasts 144, 173, 210, 402, 424, 573, 578, 783, 791, 818, 984
Felix 116, 119, 120, 143, 297, 472, 549, 550, 650, 687, 720, 721, 816-819, 821
Fellow prisoner 754, 953
Fellow soldier 706
Fellowship 19, 24, 42, 57, 58, 66, 77, 81, 108, 113, 125, 126, 130, 131, 137, 143, 146, 197, 210, 216, 220, 221, 276, 293-295, 298, 299, 301, 307-309, 314, 328, 330, 331, 349, 365, 366, 370, 381, 382, 407, 410-413, 418, 447, 454, 457, 462, 467, 469, 483, 487, 489, 501, 510, 511, 555, 567, 574, 577, 579, 598, 600, 608, 648, 651, 684, 689, 697, 702, 706, 728, 730, 739, 758, 819, 820, 849, 877, 888, 890, 892, 897, 898, 905, 906, 910, 914, 916, 941, 984, 989
Feminist hermeneutics, interpretation 389, 390, 397
Festivals 5, 212, 231, 234, 250, 309, 402-404, 512, 534, 570, 574, 725, 780, 783, 788, 789, 794, 817, 884, 983, 984
Final judgment 22, 29, 257, 259, 261, 265, 271, 272, 516-518, 567, 696, 799, 803, 810, 819, 880
Financial support 49, 55, 135, 137, 146, 166, 188, 271, 294-297, 310, 316, 370, 374, 485, 536, 604, 607, 618, 634, 656, 658, 680, 702, 705, 720, 826, 884, 887, 889, 896, 899, 915, 917, 925, 927, 934
Fire 21, 22, 24, 116, 229-231, 348, 403, 509, 608, 687, 715, 722, 789, 818, 851, 859, 861, 952
First Adam 13-15, 111, 112, 407, 432, 712, 772, 950
First fruits 11, 111, 167, 288, 300, 301, 303, 412, 416, 417, 444, 469, 473, 507, 510, 856, 857, 915, 990
Firstborn 105, 115, 126, 128, 187, 258, 300-303, 320, 349, 376, 377, 784, 901, 905, 906, 982
Flesh 6, 8, 20, 22, 32, 33, 42, 63, 71-77, 93, 102, 103, 105, 106, 108-110, 113, 131, 148, 150, 157, 158, 168, 170, 172, 189, 197, 203, 211, 217, 220, 230, 235, 254, 258, 264, 271, 274, 276, 281, 286, 289, 303-306, 308, 312-319, 323, 330, 333, 334, 336, 351, 373, 376, 379-382, 401, 405-407, 409-411, 421, 426, 433, 434, 442, 459, 462, 475, 480, 504, 507, 529, 533, 536-539, 554, 555, 568, 582, 595, 648, 652, 684, 686, 693, 694, 698, 723, 724, 733, 747, 750-752, 765-776, 781, 782, 799, 808-810, 812, 824, 830, 842, 847, 849, 856, 860, 861, 865, 866, 871, 872, 875, 879, 880, 898, 909, 910, 916, 920, 922, 946, 948-950, 953, 962, 964, 968, 969, 992
Flesh and blood 74, 76, 102, 110, 274, 303, 330, 433, 694, 750, 751, 769, 808, 809, 812, 866, 898
Flock 300, 654
Food 5, 24, 42, 70, 103, 113, 148, 149, 153, 155, 166, 210, 214, 233, 238, 295, 296, 314-316, 319, 326, 356, 359, 386, 403, 424-426, 449, 458, 462, 471, 487, 532, 533, 543, 567, 569-574, 577, 620, 622, 652, 656, 683, 684, 689, 702, 708, 711, 741, 742, 773, 792, 794, 855, 857, 859, 872, 890, 897-899, 914, 918, 922, 944, 946, 975-977, 989
Food laws 156, 212, 232, 290, 306, 307, 316, 335, 337, 339, 426, 510, 544, 574, 579, 648, 663, 775, 776, 795, 844, 849, 899, 917, 976, 977
Food offered/sacrificed to idols 156, 166, 306, 315, 316, 339, 359, 425, 426, 543, 574, 579, 741, 742, 776, 795, 899, 917
Fool, Foolishness 2, 20, 21, 49, 54, 102, 165, 171, 172, 194, 227, 321-323, 329, 331, 335, 348, 350, 361, 406, 428, 431, 445, 647, 717, 730, 735, 772, 859, 884, 889, 964, 965, 970, 981
Forbearance 281, 312, 318
Foreknowledge, divine 228, 229, 303, 310, 311, 348, 361, 744
Forgiveness 7, 94, 148, 150, 156, 196, 204, 208, 209, 215, 218, 246, 247, 279, 280, 281, 283, 285, 311-313, 374, 402, 484, 501, 502, 523, 526, 531, 537, 601, 602, 690, 699, 703-706, 716, 731, 736, 739, 781, 785, 786, 797, 804, 830, 836, 842, 856, 862, 864, 865, 868, 880, 908, 950, 975, 982, 993
Form-criticism 94, 95, 419, 494, 825, 936, 937
Form of a servant/slave 106, 107, 427, 712, 914, 957
Form of God 104, 106, 349, 427, 712, 745, 970
Fornication 42, 173, 309, 426, 471, 684, 875
Fortunatus 173
Fourth Philosophy 814
Freedom 6, 16, 32, 54-56, 59, 61, 84, 108, 134, 137, 141, 142, 147, 155, 166, 178, 180, 194, 228-230, 251, 271-273, 275, 285, 295, 296, 313-317, 322, 323, 328-330, 332-334, 349, 350, 403, 407, 409, 421, 425, 428, 443, 470, 471, 475, 483, 486, 501, 512, 513, 527, 533, 539, 541, 543, 549-551, 554, 584, 587, 588, 598, 601, 644, 649, 657, 690, 709, 720, 722, 732, 739, 742-744, 752, 785, 824-827, 850, 869, 872, 874-876, 881-883, 886, 891, 893, 897, 905, 916, 917, 923, 944, 962, 966, 980
Fruit 63, 145, 148, 270, 271, 288, 289, 300, 315-319, 334, 341, 347, 371, 399, 407, 410, 412, 416, 459, 462, 472, 507, 511, 512, 517, 522, 528, 544, 556, 576, 578, 607, 612, 643, 644, 699, 730, 760, 781, 792, 831, 854, 883, 906-908, 911, 913, 914, 916, 962, 963, 968, 981
Fruit of the Spirit 288, 289, 316-319, 334, 347, 407, 410, 412, 459, 511, 512, 517, 544, 576, 578, 760, 908, 913, 914, 916, 963, 968
Fulfillment 3, 14, 26, 41, 43, 127, 138, 139, 146, 169, 195, 204, 223, 260, 262-265, 267, 271, 274, 282, 286, 316, 318, 319, 348, 375, 376, 405, 415, 420, 446, 472, 473, 488-490, 496, 501, 510, 517, 534, 535, 537, 539, 541, 544, 584, 614, 618, 624, 627, 630, 636, 639-641, 651, 674, 680, 699, 756, 759, 780, 782, 844, 846, 850, 868, 873, 874, 905, 911, 913, 964, 980, 981
Fulfillment of the Law 478, 512
Fullness 5, 17, 40, 41, 80, 81, 98, 128, 131, 148-152, 167, 175, 178, 193, 195, 232, 240, 243, 262, 264, 319, 320, 353, 355, 376, 382, 400, 411, 426, 428, 434, 445, 525, 565, 569, 643, 677, 697, 700, 701, 723, 733, 785, 802, 804, 810, 911, 919, 925, 949, 951, 970, 971, 982, 990
Fullness of time 5, 17, 131, 262, 264, 525, 802, 951
Futility 43, 56, 189, 229, 231, 274, 289, 316, 320-322, 332, 345, 348, 350, 352, 385, 430, 437, 556, 608, 730, 764, 772, 773, 865, 878, 927, 980, 983
Gaius 38, 125, 135, 234, 235, 376, 384, 546, 719, 721, 722, 814, 838, 889, 945, 946
Galatia 2-5, 8, 18, 58, 86, 101, 117-119, 121-124, 139, 163, 183, 202, 230-232, 304, 319, 323-328, 331, 333, 334, 352, 369, 370, 373, 413, 441, 447, 451, 453-455, 466, 469, 472, 489, 512, 514, 515, 532, 544, 551, 604, 606, 608, 609, 649, 650, 669-671, 684, 686, 688, 742, 763, 813, 883, 886
Galatians 2-6, 45-51, 101-103, 115-119, 156-163, 179-183, 229-233, 266-271, 313-319, 323-334, 403, 453-455, 465, 474, 478, 479, 499, 500, 512-516, 529, 542-544, 576, 583, 650, 701-703, 763, 785, 801-803, 822-826, 913, 950, 951, 981
Galilee 47, 212, 213, 386, 463, 498, 504, 681, 720, 814, 816
Gallio 116, 120-123, 177, 454, 548, 685, 720, 721
Gamaliel 386, 387, 461, 464, 465, 504-506, 594, 682, 820, 927

Genealogy 1, 10, 787, 929
General resurrection 33, 34, 506, 507, 525, 811, 812, 957
Genre 19, 34, 35, 213, 214, 240, 242, 253, 266, 268, 335, 388, 390, 391, 395, 420, 499, 663, 726, 759, 777, 822, 823, 825, 937, 968
Gentile 1-8, 19-21, 23, 24, 28, 43, 45-50, 53-59, 67, 68, 70, 80, 84, 85, 92, 94, 96, 98, 99, 102, 103, 109, 110, 111, 113, 114, 117, 121, 123, 126, 127, 130, 131, 137-139, 143-148, 153, 156-163, 165, 173, 180-183, 186, 187, 189, 190, 199, 200, 204-206, 212, 214, 227, 230, 232, 236, 237, 239, 242, 243, 245-248, 251, 252, 258, 262, 263, 266, 268, 270, 272, 273, 275, 281, 286-288, 292, 294, 297, 299, 307-309, 314, 316, 317, 319, 321-323, 327, 328, 330-339, 353, 363, 370, 371, 373, 380, 385-387, 393, 396, 402-404, 409, 414, 415, 418, 420, 425, 426, 435, 441-447, 449, 450, 453, 454-460, 462, 463, 466-474, 483, 484, 486, 487, 489, 490, 493, 497, 501, 502, 504, 506-508, 510-516, 518, 519, 523, 529, 531-543, 548, 549, 551, 559, 561-563, 569, 582, 583, 593, 601-603, 605-607, 609, 611-619, 621-624, 634, 638-640, 642-646, 648-652, 654, 657, 662, 667, 668, 671, 673, 675, 678, 680-684, 686-688, 691-694, 698, 699, 701-703, 711, 716-718, 726, 731, 732, 735, 738, 750, 751, 754, 756, 763, 770, 780, 782, 799-805, 812-817, 819, 823, 838-840, 842-845, 847-851, 853, 854, 857, 860-863, 868-872, 875, 878, 882, 883, 887, 889, 890, 892, 896, 900, 903, 904, 906, 909, 914, 917, 918, 920, 923-925, 927, 933-935, 938, 944, 945, 947, 948, 951, 957, 962-964, 973, 976, 978, 980, 991, 992
Gentile Christianity 96, 159, 337, 385, 514, 644, 667, 668, 671, 869, 906
Gentile mission 70, 110, 117, 121, 144, 159, 160, 162, 180, 181, 187, 262, 297, 299, 307, 335, 337-339, 393, 396, 441, 444, 445, 453, 466, 468, 474, 497, 501, 502, 508, 514, 531, 532, 612-614, 616-618, 681, 683, 687, 726, 732, 799, 800, 813, 823, 838, 964
Gentle, gentleness 56, 136, 215, 316, 318, 449, 499, 578, 607, 655, 658, 708, 717, 884, 939
Gift of knowledge 347, 353, 526, 527, 762, 955
Gift of tongues, Glossolalia 344, 346, 407, 412, 437, 438, 624, 625, 783, 939, 940, 941, 943, 990
Gifts of the Spirit 59, 81, 137, 178, 319, 339, 341, 342, 345, 347, 372-374, 380, 381, 412, 526, 528, 590, 608, 755, 762, 877, 886, 907, 913, 916, 936, 939, 943, 968
Glorification 17, 40, 178, 226, 227, 268, 272, 277, 301, 311, 348-350, 401, 428, 682, 701, 809, 810, 902, 903, 908, 909, 920
Glorify 17, 40, 41, 48, 69, 70, 70, 113, 130, 163, 171, 171, 226, 227, 236, 298, 298, 299, 348-350, 360, 393, 408, 408, 416, 537, 601, 623, 627, 627, 682, 688, 730, 730, 785, 798, 807, 810, 917, 920, 982, 990
Glory 13, 14, 17, 21-23, 29, 31, 40, 41, 54, 61, 63, 69, 84, 103, 105, 107, 109, 125, 130, 155, 163, 165, 169-172, 178, 179, 181, 192, 196, 219, 220, 226, 228, 232, 238, 245, 259, 265, 267-269, 276-278, 294, 301, 311, 320, 322, 348-350, 355, 357, 360-362, 368, 371, 372, 382, 401, 407, 411, 416, 417, 420, 427-429, 432, 433, 437, 441, 445, 463, 479, 489, 507, 512, 527, 537, 558, 559, 563-565, 569, 586, 601, 613, 620-622, 627, 629, 682, 688, 701, 712, 723, 730-734, 736, 748, 759, 767, 773, 780, 782, 785, 804, 807, 808, 810, 820, 859, 864, 868, 902, 903, 906, 907, 920, 925, 938, 948, 953, 967, 971, 973, 978, 988
Glory of God 13, 163, 169-172, 267, 348, 349, 360, 416, 427, 563, 565, 569, 712, 810, 820
Gnosis 46, 152, 174, 194, 248, 350, 352-354, 387, 426, 428, 430, 497, 527, 528, 623, 645, 652, 663, 669, 694, 695, 714, 795, 967, 969, 988
Gnosticism 10, 23, 27, 35-37, 46, 72, 73, 76, 77, 90, 92, 149, 151, 152, 174, 177, 178, 194, 200, 203, 223, 232, 236, 241, 243, 245, 246, 264, 288, 291, 320, 350-356, 361, 387, 421, 430, 434, 497, 515, 516, 527, 528, 531, 556, 557, 570, 591, 622, 623, 644, 645, 647, 651, 652, 658, 661, 663, 667-669, 671, 692-695, 712, 714, 748, 765, 766, 795, 811, 812, 860, 868, 872, 897, 935, 939, 949, 965, 969, 979-981, 988
Gnostic Paul 353, 692-695
God 1-9, 12-23, 25-34, 37-45, 47-59, 60-64, 68-72, 74-77, 79, 80, 84, 85, 89, 92-115, 123-132, 136, 138, 140-142, 144-151, 154-158, 160-172, 175, 178, 180-183, 186-197, 199, 200, 201-211, 217, 219-221, 224-233, 235-239, 243, 246-248, 250, 251, 253, 254, 256-284, 285-294, 296-316, 318-322, 323, 326, 327, 329-332, 334-344, 346-373, 377-383, 385-387, 390-393, 396-423, 424-429, 431-438, 441-446, 449, 450, 458-462, 467-470, 473-475, 478-480, 482-486, 488-497, 500-502, 504-512, 516-523, 524-528, 529-544, 548, 551-570, 572-579, 580, 582, 583, 586, 588-608, 610, 612, 614, 616-618, 620-625, 626-629, 630, 633-636, 638-644, 646, 648-650, 652, 654, 656, 663-667, 672-682, 684-686, 688-701, 707, 708, 711-719, 723-751, 753-776, 777-783, 784, 785, 788-805, 807-812, 814, 816-824, 826-853, 856-871, 873-880, 882, 884, 885, 887, 889, 890, 895-897, 900-917, 919-921, 923-927, 931-934, 936-938, 940-944, 946-948, 950-954, 956-960, 962, 964, 966-982, 984-993
God of this age 170, 262, 731, 864, 865, 956, 980, 981
Gods 2, 5, 20, 23, 51-53, 209, 210, 225, 230-232, 234, 250, 306, 309, 322, 324, 326, 332, 335, 336, 357, 360, 367, 368, 380, 387, 391, 403, 419-421, 424, 425, 533, 551, 561, 580, 582, 621, 714, 716, 717, 749, 751, 763, 782, 787-793, 795, 798, 829, 832, 851, 852, 856, 867, 877, 884, 900, 924, 943, 947, 948, 950, 983, 984
God's will 68, 70, 102, 154, 169, 226, 228, 311, 362, 405, 409, 449, 450, 479, 504, 510, 527, 539, 541, 606, 666, 700, 714, 728, 731-734, 770, 831, 835, 871, 875, 938, 954, 959, 960, 968, 971-973, 990, 992
Goodness of God 360, 365
Gospel 2-6, 8, 15, 18-20, 22, 24, 30, 31, 34, 38, 39, 42-44, 47-51, 53-59, 61-63, 65, 67, 68, 70, 82, 83-85, 93, 96, 100-103, 105, 109, 110, 112-115, 122, 126, 129-131, 136, 139, 141, 143, 145-150, 152, 155-158, 160, 161, 163, 165, 166, 167, 169-172, 174-176, 178, 181-183, 186, 188, 191-193, 196, 197, 199, 201, 202, 209, 214, 217, 219, 220, 223-225, 227, 228, 236, 237, 240, 242, 246, 251, 259, 262, 268, 269, 276, 278, 281, 283, 284, 286, 288-291, 294-299, 306-310, 313-317, 320, 321, 323, 326, 328-332, 334, 337-339, 347-349, 351, 354, 355, 359-361, 365, 366, 369-374, 378, 380, 386, 392, 396, 405, 406, 408, 409, 419-421, 423, 427-430, 432, 441-448, 450, 455, 457, 460, 463, 464, 467-471, 473, 475, 477, 483-486, 488-494, 496, 499, 502, 507, 508, 513, 515, 516, 518, 520, 522, 523, 524, 528, 536, 538, 540, 541, 543, 545, 553, 555-560, 562, 567, 573, 575, 577-579, 580, 582, 588, 589, 593, 595, 596, 598-601, 603, 605-610, 612, 613, 616-621, 623, 624, 627, 630, 637-639, 641-644, 648, 651, 652, 654, 655, 657, 663, 667, 668, 670-681, 683-695, 701, 703, 707-709, 711, 712, 717, 718, 721, 723, 724, 726-728, 730, 731, 733-737, 739, 742, 743, 746, 748, 750, 753-755, 759, 762-766, 768, 769, 773, 775, 778-782, 794, 795, 799, 800, 802, 803, 805, 812, 819-821, 823, 824, 832, 834, 836, 838, 840, 842-853, 859-861, 864, 865, 869, 870, 876, 877, 882, 884, 888, 890, 891, 892, 894-899, 903, 906, 909, 914, 920, 924, 926, 927, 932-935, 938, 939, 943-945, 947, 949, 952-955, 956, 957, 960, 961, 966, 967, 969-975, 986, 989-992
Gospels 74, 90, 91, 114, 197, 198, 224, 259, 265, 276, 307, 337, 372, 397, 402, 424, 474, 476, 483, 486-494, 496-498, 504, 525, 526, 560, 573, 639, 694, 701, 726, 737, 765, 806, 811, 812, 826, 849, 858, 863, 864, 866, 871, 892, 902, 911, 918, 980

Governor 83, 324, 384, 447, 546, 547, 549, 550, 662, 710, 721, 796, 797, 814, 816-818, 821
Grace 7, 13, 39, 40, 43-45, 48, 60, 63, 65, 68, 81, 84, 85, 92-94, 98, 102, 103, 110, 112, 114, 139, 158, 160, 163, 164, 168, 170, 202, 210, 220, 224-229, 247, 248, 265, 269-272, 285, 286, 294, 296, 298, 299, 310-313, 315, 318, 320, 321, 329, 333, 338, 340, 341, 348, 354, 355, 358, 360, 364, 365, 368, 369, 371-374, 379, 391, 392, 411, 416, 420, 441, 443, 444, 446, 457, 459, 461, 468-470, 483, 484, 487, 488, 496, 499, 501, 510-512, 517, 519, 521-523, 526, 529-531, 551-553, 558, 569, 576-578, 601-603, 607, 616, 617, 621, 645, 676, 681, 682, 684, 686, 689-691, 693, 695, 699, 704, 706, 716, 717, 723-725, 727, 728, 730, 731, 733, 735, 738, 739, 742, 750, 753, 757, 758, 763, 768, 771, 781, 785, 799, 803, 831-834, 841, 842, 846-850, 859-862, 869, 880-882, 890, 897, 905, 908-910, 912, 914, 915, 916, 940, 941, 943, 944, 952, 957-959, 975, 978, 982, 990
Greece 51, 119, 121, 172, 173, 183, 185, 211, 324, 413, 450, 455, 585, 592, 659, 660, 662, 722, 728, 748, 751, 787, 789, 790, 838, 933, 946
Greek 3, 6, 79, 226, 321, 337, 386, 470, 739, 765, 786, 799, 825
Greeks 20, 23, 24, 53, 66, 132, 148, 173, 251, 284, 336, 339, 380, 383-385, 388, 423, 431, 536, 548, 586, 602, 606, 629, 636, 647, 650, 655, 657, 688, 707, 708, 738, 751, 786-789, 791, 825, 851, 914, 921, 948, 979
Groaning 301, 322, 356, 409, 411, 416, 437, 479, 507, 733, 865
Guilt 13, 42, 45, 53, 155-158, 160, 161, 226, 280, 283, 306, 313, 316, 401, 484, 504, 555, 621, 682, 701, 707, 730, 776, 797, 798, 801, 802, 830, 877, 993
Hagar 1, 5, 8, 180, 182, 183, 333, 516, 539, 636, 640, 824
Haggadah 505, 620, 621, 669, 779
Hair 36, 62, 75, 324, 472, 585, 586, 590, 926
Halakah 307, 337, 542, 777, 779, 781, 923, 944
Hardening 8, 43, 228, 639, 643, 772, 799, 804
Hardness of heart 322
Hardships 18-20, 45, 50, 55, 117, 144, 166, 193, 196, 221, 252, 362, 379, 381, 449, 450, 511, 681, 763, 877, 891, 919-921, 926, 953, 967, 972
Hasmoneans 384, 533, 534, 777
Hatred 235, 237, 238, 771, 823, 863, 953
Head 3, 14, 19, 21, 36, 59, 78-81, 111, 125, 128, 130, 131, 151, 207, 229, 241, 243, 246, 248, 303, 318, 320, 336, 340, 346, 360, 367, 375-378, 434, 460, 482, 542, 584-588, 591, 592, 596, 600, 623, 682, 693, 737, 789, 814, 815, 860, 866, 868, 933, 982, 990
Head covering 21, 59, 585
Headship 71, 79, 81, 94, 99, 111, 126, 128, 131, 313, 368, 375-378, 586, 596, 600, 603, 894, 959
Healing 20, 36, 77, 134, 135, 171, 172, 211, 217, 251, 288, 304, 326, 340, 343-345, 363, 378-380, 447, 488, 490, 500, 517, 581, 581, 602, 603, 628, 693, 713, 726, 733, 768, 787, 789, 794, 840, 858, 876, 877, 889, 959, 964, 983
Heart 9, 17, 24, 28, 64, 65, 74, 81, 92, 96, 103, 108, 138, 153, 156, 169, 171, 174, 180, 181, 192, 196, 215, 228, 231, 246, 259, 263, 268, 273, 275, 276, 285, 292, 298, 306, 309, 315, 319, 322, 338, 344, 362, 364, 383, 390-392, 402, 407, 411, 412, 422, 425, 457, 474, 491, 497, 501, 502, 510, 512, 533, 537, 541, 542, 544, 575-577, 600, 602, 614, 615, 639, 646, 654, 655, 666, 670, 674, 678, 680, 691, 693, 703, 705, 708, 723, 728, 731, 740, 743, 761, 764, 765, 768-773, 775, 776, 799, 803, 811, 815, 842, 845, 863, 866, 879, 906, 908, 909, 911, 912, 914-916, 949, 966, 983, 986, 992
Heaven 21-23, 26, 29, 31-33, 35-37, 76, 81, 98, 102-104, 111-113, 125-127, 129, 130, 141, 149-151, 190, 195, 231, 232, 248, 253, 257, 260, 266, 268, 269, 274, 276-278, 281, 302, 356-358, 361, 366, 368, 370, 381-383, 390, 408, 424, 432, 434, 436, 437, 439, 468, 482, 508, 509, 512, 530, 573, 580, 622, 624, 625, 626, 627, 647, 677, 686, 688, 694, 698, 708, 712, 733, 736, 744, 747-751, 757, 762, 763, 766, 779, 780, 808-810, 824, 861, 863, 867, 868, 874, 891, 924, 934, 938, 948, 952, 958-960, 963-965, 971, 979, 981-983, 988, 991, 992
Heavenlies 81, 248, 264, 268, 278, 381-383, 508, 747, 749, 751, 757, 960, 965, 982
Heavenly citizenship 140, 141, 868
Heavenly Jerusalem 6, 37, 744
Heavenly man 12, 189
Heavenly redeemer 46
Hebrew 1, 3, 9, 20, 23, 60, 61, 66, 68, 78, 91, 95, 96, 106, 124, 153, 158, 279, 284, 311, 320, 335, 357, 360, 369, 377, 381, 384-386, 391, 405, 413, 431, 434, 464, 465, 504-506, 511, 529, 532, 558, 561-563, 565, 585, 601, 630, 632-637, 641, 642, 693, 695, 699, 718, 728, 729, 748, 749, 755, 766, 768, 779, 784, 786, 805, 828-830, 862, 863, 867, 901, 918, 954, 979, 985, 986
Heir 5, 7, 16, 182, 442, 443, 459, 539, 596, 798, 813, 882, 902, 908
Hellenism 115, 388, 511, 542, 652, 805
Hellenistic Christians, church 386, 394, 676, 765
Hellenistic Judaism 142, 152, 208, 212, 239, 270, 272, 279, 306, 317, 352, 385, 386, 394, 413, 418, 421, 504, 516, 531, 611, 635, 652, 670, 765, 963, 979
Hellenists 30, 66, 147, 187, 369, 383, 386, 444, 461, 464, 472, 484, 487, 491, 498, 504, 515, 516, 650, 682, 728
Hermeneutics 92, 93, 188, 200, 204, 214, 268, 352, 368, 378, 388-390, 392, 394-397, 413, 497, 511, 528, 530, 538, 553, 592, 616, 620, 633, 634, 636, 638-640, 642, 666, 678, 679, 695, 743, 747, 750, 762, 764, 765, 780, 825, 828, 850, 895, 896, 899, 900, 944, 958, 965, 970
Hermes 582, 787, 788, 790, 792, 795
Hermogenes 36
Herod the Great 24, 84, 198, 385, 387, 463, 815, 853
Herodians 231, 722, 777, 813, 814, 815, 817
Hierapolis 87, 147, 148, 244, 245, 685, 883, 932
High priests 19, 33, 78, 119, 120, 141, 231, 234, 283, 384, 463, 473, 651, 682, 718-720, 790, 796, 813, 815-818, 853, 862
Hillel 504, 505, 594, 637, 682
Historical Jesus 209, 276, 408, 474-477, 487, 490, 491, 494-498, 500, 502, 503, 606, 667, 668, 676, 736, 776, 911
Historical-critical method 703, 705, 825, 893
History-of-religions school 243, 385, 493, 615, 668-670, 793, 867, 901
Holiness 40, 45, 108, 127, 165, 194, 214, 218, 237, 241, 258, 265, 270, 280, 282, 292, 316, 319, 355, 360, 363-365, 368, 371, 397-401, 412, 437, 503, 518, 535, 641, 691, 701, 713, 723, 732, 770, 772, 773, 776, 781, 831, 833, 880, 882, 909-911, 914, 916, 922, 924, 938, 955, 991
Holy days 5, 148, 231, 233, 327, 337, 402, 403, 458, 488, 532, 538, 544, 567, 849, 917, 976, 986
Holy kiss 124, 552
Holy Spirit, Spirit *2, 3, 5, 11, 12, 16-18, 21, 31-33, 38, 40-42, 48, 49, 55, 60, 63-66, 68, 70, 76, 79, 80, 81, 94, 98, 99, 103-109, 111-115, 127, 128, 130, 132-138, 142, 145, 146, 148, 154, 165-170, 172, 173, 175, 178, 180, 181, 182, 185, 188, 200, 204, 205, 211, 216, 218, 220, 221, 223, 225, 226, 239, 247, 248, 251, 254, 257, 258, 263-265, 268, 269, 271, 273, 275, 277, 278, 285, 288, 289, 294, 300, 301, 304-306, 308, 312-319, 322, 323, 326, 330-334, 339-347, 349, 355, 356, 358-361, 363, 364, 366-368, 371-374, 380-382, 398-401, 404-413, 415-418, 420-422, 434, 435, 437, 438, 442, 444, 450-451, 459, 462, 464, 468, 469, 471, 479, 480, 482, 483, 485, 486, 489-491, 496, 512, 514, 517, 525-528, 533, 535-544, 554, 555, 559, 564, 568-570, 572, 575, 576, 588, 590, 593, 603-605, 608, 620-624, 633, 637, 639, 645, 646, 654, 670, 672-674, 676, 677, 683, 684, 686-689, 691, 694, 696, 697, 699-

701, 703, 704, 715, 716, 718, 723-728, 731-734, 739, 742, 751, 755-762, 766, 771-776, 781, 782, 786, 802, 804, 810, 821, 833, 834, 842, 844-847, 849, 857, 861, 862, 871, 872, 876, 877, 879, 885-887, 893, 898, 899, 905-916, 920-924, 938-944, 952, 953, 959, 962, 963, 968-973, 975, 977, 978, 980, 981, 983, 984, 987-990

Homosexuality 207, 275, 385, 413-415, 587, 600, 844, 871, 875, 915

Honor 8, 15, 20-22, 37, 69, 104, 129, 135, 151, 183, 192, 207, 209, 225, 233-235, 268, 269, 291, 295, 301, 325, 360, 378, 385, 426, 446, 515, 516, 564, 565, 569, 577, 586, 589, 626, 657, 681, 689, 690, 720, 754, 789, 792-794, 825, 905, 914, 926, 966, 968

Hope 9, 14, 15, 20, 27, 33, 40, 41, 43, 44, 52, 54, 69-71, 73, 75, 83, 86, 95, 98, 99, 108, 130, 150, 167, 171, 175, 176, 181, 197, 199, 206, 221, 227, 236, 239, 256-261, 268, 271, 275, 284, 286, 288, 289, 291, 301, 311, 313, 322, 342, 348, 350, 370, 371, 381, 394, 404, 405, 411, 415-417, 430, 431, 437, 438, 440, 444, 445, 463, 477, 483, 502, 503, 507, 511, 512, 519, 520, 523, 524, 525, 556, 567, 568, 606, 608, 620, 622, 643, 676, 687, 688, 697, 699-701, 717, 726, 730, 732, 733, 741, 753, 761, 770, 776, 782, 786, 796, 798-802, 806, 809, 810, 846-849, 860-862, 869, 891, 920, 933, 938, 947, 952, 956, 960, 984, 987, 989, 990, 992

House arrest 246, 550, 680, 687, 704, 705, 709, 752, 753

House churches 6, 39, 125, 126, 128, 131, 134, 137, 164, 167, 186, 187, 245, 252, 307, 376, 392, 395, 417, 419, 578, 579, 585, 603, 604, 661, 662, 706, 839, 853, 888, 985

Household codes 128, 131, 137, 238, 239, 273-275, 293, 391, 393, 417-419, 552, 553, 556, 560, 587-589, 592, 600, 883, 888, 922, 923, 925, 944, 963, 968, 972, 973

Household of God 128, 248, 418, 419, 592

Human plight 112, 193, 306, 322, 542, 877, 950

Humility 14, 23, 40, 85, 148, 150, 215, 227, 270, 273, 349, 353, 422, 487, 490, 492, 583, 707, 711, 724, 753, 908, 967

Husbands 36, 58, 80, 135, 239, 256, 273, 292, 293, 376-378, 393, 400, 418, 435, 575, 584-590, 594-599, 603, 606, 665, 693, 817, 859, 868, 872, 873, 922

Hymenaeus 44, 195, 865, 866

Hymn fragments 71, 114, 192, 419, 560, 944, 990

Hymns 13, 21, 69-71, 79, 93, 99, 100, 104-107, 113, 114, 129, 134, 150-153, 188, 190-192, 201, 203, 208, 238-240, 243, 258, 264, 276, 278, 302, 345, 352-356, 377, 392, 393, 396, 412, 419-423, 499, 552, 553, 557, 560, 623, 627, 634, 635, 659, 664, 697, 707, 711, 712, 726, 739, 741, 745, 746, 749, 750, 778, 779, 781, 788, 792, 793, 795, 809, 849, 864, 896, 914-916, 930, 943, 944, 947, 950, 958, 959, 968, 970, 973, 982, 983, 986-990

Iconium 35, 36, 119, 323-326, 447, 450, 451, 548, 684, 725, 757, 883

Idolatry 1, 3, 5, 6, 9, 41, 42, 51, 52, 54, 77, 148, 155, 166, 170, 173, 210, 231, 232, 309, 310, 315, 322, 336, 354, 359, 380, 413, 424-426, 462, 471, 533, 535, 543, 569, 570, 572, 577, 582, 620, 684, 689, 716, 749, 776, 781, 795, 844, 857, 871, 880, 917, 918, 934, 938, 963, 968

Idols 5, 41, 51-54, 57, 77, 153-156, 166, 210, 306, 309, 310, 315, 316, 322, 339, 359, 384, 395, 396, 424-426, 429, 462, 471, 535, 543, 574, 579, 606, 684, 716, 736, 741, 742, 747, 751, 775, 776, 794, 795, 857, 859, 864, 892, 893, 898, 899, 904, 917, 918, 934, 993

Illness 20, 22, 47, 135, 211, 217, 304, 326, 332, 378-380, 386, 447, 450, 517, 581, 602, 768, 877, 964, 966

Illyricum 118, 448, 450, 455, 463, 609, 612, 681, 687, 688

Image of Christ 14, 163, 228, 303, 407, 427, 433, 810, 910

Image of God 9, 13-16, 23, 64, 163, 170, 303, 349, 350, 361, 368, 426-428, 691, 712, 731, 745, 746, 774, 810, 864, 906, 958, 959, 969, 970

Image of his Son 310, 349, 358, 744, 905

Imitation of Christ 114, 133, 208, 270, 428-431, 485, 487, 707, 911, 914, 916, 939

Imitation of Paul 58, 133, 136, 137, 162, 166, 275, 401, 428-431, 502, 606, 658, 660, 692, 713, 895, 916, 920, 921, 927

Immortality 28, 34, 54, 71, 72, 74-76, 219, 268, 301, 348, 366, 371, 426, 431-433, 439, 440, 507, 526, 554, 555, 557, 712-714, 730, 767, 774, 782, 787, 791, 793, 794, 808-810, 812, 933, 960, 961

Immortal God 54, 348

Imperial household 83, 84, 235, 419, 713, 721, 722, 855

Imprisonment 84, 116, 119-123, 140, 152, 186, 240, 246, 247, 252, 406, 448, 449, 451, 465, 548, 549, 617, 652, 655, 659, 661, 662, 664, 680, 685-687, 704-707, 709-711, 719, 721, 726, 735, 752-754, 756, 813, 854, 919, 953

Impurity 310, 322, 339, 398, 399, 401, 503, 511, 723, 732, 772, 775, 776, 871, 880, 917, 918

In Adam 11, 13-15, 72, 78, 111, 322, 349, 409, 434, 435, 510, 554, 628, 629, 766, 772-774, 846, 878, 957, 958

In Christ 3, 4, 5, 11, 31, 60, 62-64, 78, 96, 98, 99, 107, 113, 114, 126, 150, 156, 158, 160, 162, 164, 167, 183, 209, 220, 226, 244, 247, 269, 278, 286-288, 290, 314, 323, 399, 407, 411, 419, 422, 429, 433-437, 508, 512, 535, 541, 543, 555, 576, 621, 624, 625, 628, 654, 658, 674, 675, 689, 692, 697, 700, 706, 723, 724, 727, 730, 731, 733, 734, 741, 751, 771, 785, 831, 836, 846, 849, 858, 860, 866, 873, 874, 910, 957, 966, 992

In God 2, 3, 6-8, 20, 41, 44, 64, 94, 99, 103, 113, 124, 128, 129, 138, 141, 144, 145, 154, 165, 170, 171, 183, 188, 206, 217, 220, 227, 263, 271, 272, 281, 285, 286, 288, 290, 293, 298, 318, 320, 322, 335, 337, 338, 353, 356, 359, 360, 362-364, 366-368, 372, 382, 406, 411, 415, 421-423, 434, 437, 438, 441, 445, 459, 491, 511, 517, 530, 534, 538, 540, 557, 568, 602, 616, 622, 628, 629, 644, 665, 672, 673, 688, 707, 724, 728, 745, 747, 750, 775, 782, 797, 830, 836, 843, 846, 858, 859, 862, 890, 903, 904, 906, 909, 912, 915, 921, 970, 971, 973, 976, 987, 991

Incarnation 33, 63, 81, 105, 109, 110, 195, 266, 277, 309, 310, 314, 351, 367, 371, 392, 393, 420, 487, 499, 586, 593, 663, 744-746, 770, 781, 826, 836, 858, 905, 911, 925, 971

Incest 57, 216, 336, 592, 594-596, 600, 657, 689, 773, 866, 872, 875

Inheritance 3, 4, 7, 16, 70, 84, 113, 125, 150, 193, 257, 263, 288, 294, 301, 332, 358, 416, 426, 443, 519, 524, 525, 557, 622, 750, 784, 864, 871, 904, 947

Inner being/self/person 99, 228, 257, 406, 410, 765, 769, 772, 773, 774

Inspired utterance 343, 345, 346, 527, 736

Institutionalization 886, 891, 899

Insurrections, insurrectionists 142, 198, 547-549, 814, 816, 821

Intercession 2, 41, 257, 277, 278, 416, 436, 437, 551, 703, 705, 725-728, 730, 731, 733, 734, 815, 912

Intermediate state 74, 75, 261, 268, 383, 394, 432, 433, 438-440, 517, 555, 686, 712, 767, 774, 812

Introspective conscience 616, 675, 899

Irony 51, 52, 197, 213, 312, 539, 700, 821, 864, 940, 964, 965

Isaac 1, 5, 6, 8, 182, 208, 304, 333, 424, 442, 458, 505, 506, 595, 715, 799, 846, 856, 900, 905

Isaiah 18, 27, 29, 30, 95, 97, 109, 113, 146, 170, 181, 189, 191, 208, 239, 259, 261, 268, 277, 317, 321, 322, 355, 358, 361, 363, 369, 375, 444, 445, 482, 536, 538, 540, 543, 563, 564, 594, 628, 633-635, 639, 640, 642, 662, 664, 749, 763, 764, 785, 799, 800, 802-804, 806, 809, 829, 843, 860, 861, 864, 867, 870, 879, 918, 919, 921, 942, 947, 950, 952, 968, 980, 991

Israel 4, 7-9, 15-18, 20, 21, 26-29, 31, 34, 43, 58, 63, 68, 77, 80, 83-85, 98, 103-105, 109, 110, 113, 114, 124, 125, 129-131, 144-146, 159, 166, 169, 180-182, 187, 189, 190, 200, 204-210, 226-229, 231, 232, 237, 247, 259, 263, 268, 286, 297, 299-304, 311, 312, 315, 317, 319-321, 332, 334-336, 338-340, 348, 355, 357, 363, 365, 367, 369, 370, 373, 386, 403, 405, 412, 413, 415, 420, 424, 425, 437, 441-446, 461-463, 473, 474, 491, 492, 497, 500, 501, 503-508, 510, 511, 515, 516, 518, 519, 521, 529, 530, 532-542, 565, 569, 595, 597, 601, 619-623, 630, 634, 636, 639, 642-644, 649, 650, 671, 675, 678, 679, 681, 682, 692, 701, 725, 728, 745, 746, 748, 750, 751, 755, 756, 759, 762-765, 778, 780-805, 816-819, 824, 829, 837, 840, 842-850, 856-863, 865, 866, 868, 875, 878, 892, 901, 903, 906, 914, 918, 919, 923, 924, 934, 936, 942, 946-951, 953, 970, 971, 973, 979, 980, 984, 985, 989, 991, 992

Israel of God 113, 205, 334, 441, 442, 501, 644, 849, 951

Itinerary 6, 116, 117, 123, 168, 391, 403, 446, 447, 449, 450, 452, 455, 472, 474, 551-553, 609, 612, 618, 661, 738, 756, 841, 946

Jacob 237, 424, 445, 715, 744, 751, 763, 765-767, 769, 770, 799, 804, 816, 829

James (letter) 457-461

James (of Jerusalem) 46-48, 56, 146, 307-309, 330, 331, 337, 338, 447, 453, 465, 466, 473, 513-515, 521, 522, 644, 650-652, 683, 684, 702, 826

Jannes and Jambres 582, 620, 621, 954

Jealousy 235, 445, 461-463, 473, 504, 508, 577, 607, 692, 732, 771, 790, 799, 800, 804, 805, 844, 848

Jerusalem 6, 20, 23, 24, 27, 37, 45-50, 55-59, 62, 66, 67, 102, 117-127, 131, 140, 143-147, 164, 167, 168, 171, 185-189, 198, 211, 212, 231, 235, 237, 251, 263, 270, 275, 294, 295, 297, 299, 300, 306-309, 319, 327, 328, 330-334, 336-339, 353, 373, 382, 384-387, 396, 414, 420, 435, 447-455, 457, 458, 460, 461, 463-474, 476, 482, 484, 492, 498, 499, 504, 506-508, 511, 513-515, 532, 539, 540, 547-550, 562, 570, 573, 574, 581, 593, 606-609, 612-615, 618, 637, 638, 642, 644, 645, 647-652, 657, 658, 660, 662, 667, 668, 670, 671, 674, 678, 680-684, 686-688, 698, 701-703, 710, 711, 714, 718-721, 725, 726, 744, 752, 756, 764, 776, 778, 796-798, 801, 805, 813, 814, 816-821, 826, 827, 838, 840, 849, 850, 853, 870, 881, 884, 886, 887, 891, 892, 897-899, 902, 909, 914, 923-925, 927, 935, 940, 951, 952, 964, 984

Jerusalem apostles 297, 299, 453, 468, 469, 606-608, 644, 647-651, 668, 670, 671, 674, 684

Jerusalem Collection 55, 147

Jerusalem conference/council 57, 67, 306, 307, 309, 327, 328, 330, 451-454, 458, 465-472, 649, 650, 817

Jerusalem decree 188, 396, 471

Jesus 3, 5, 6, 8-15, 17, 18, 21-27, 30-34, 37, 38, 40, 41, 45-50, 52, 53, 55-57, 59, 60-62, 64-66, 68-72, 74-78, 81, 84-86, 92-116, 124, 126-131, 137, 139, 140, 145-149, 152, 156-160, 162-164, 170, 179, 180, 182, 185, 186, 189-200, 201-210, 215, 216, 219-221, 224, 229, 239, 241, 242, 244, 246, 247, 251, 253-269, 274-278, 280-283, 285-291, 294, 300-302, 307, 309, 310, 312, 315, 320, 323, 328, 330, 332, 334, 337, 338, 347, 350, 351, 355-360, 365-374, 385, 387, 390, 392, 396-400, 404-412, 415-417, 419, 420, 422, 423, 424, 425, 427-429, 431-437, 443, 444, 459-464, 469, 470, 473-480, 482-504, 507, 508, 511-513, 515, 516, 520, 524-526, 528, 530-532, 534, 535, 538, 540-544, 546, 547, 551, 552, 555, 557-560, 562, 564-577, 579, 582-584, 587-589, 592-600, 602, 605-608, 612-614, 617, 619, 622, 624, 625, 626-629, 633-637, 639, 645, 648, 650, 652, 654, 658, 667, 668, 670, 672-676, 678, 681-683, 689, 692-694, 696-699, 701, 702, 704, 706-709, 712, 713, 716, 717, 723-725, 727, 728, 730, 731, 732, 734-737, 739, 741, 743, 745, 746, 748, 750-755, 759-763, 765, 768, 771, 773-776, 779, 780, 782, 783, 785, 786, 794, 801, 804-812, 814, 815, 818, 819, 821, 823, 826, 831-839, 842, 845-850, 856, 858, 860, 861, 866-869, 871, 873-879, 884, 885, 887, 890-892, 896, 900-914, 916-920, 923-925, 927, 930, 934, 935, 938, 941, 943-945, 947, 949-954, 956-959, 966, 969-978, 981, 982, 986, 987, 990, 992

Jesus and Paul 26, 85, 109, 115, 203, 276, 371, 423, 474, 475, 483-485, 487, 489-498, 500-503, 526, 606, 608, 619, 648, 668, 678, 736, 737, 776, 779, 871, 909, 938, 969, 990

Jesus tradition 251, 464, 474, 479, 486, 488-492, 498, 599, 736, 969, 990

Jew 6, 7, 24, 31, 38, 56, 57, 64, 80, 96, 98, 100, 103, 105, 109, 113, 116, 139, 156-163, 173, 179, 182, 185, 190, 200, 204-206, 212, 214, 230, 232, 236, 246, 247, 251, 252, 267, 272, 273, 281, 292, 297, 299, 304, 307, 308, 316, 323, 331, 335-339, 354, 363, 371, 384, 386, 387, 403, 427, 441-444, 446, 458, 460, 461, 463, 464, 468, 470, 473, 493, 500, 502-504, 506-511, 513, 515, 516, 518, 531, 532, 536, 538-541, 543, 549, 583, 594, 596, 613, 614, 635, 638, 642, 643, 648, 650, 655, 657, 678, 681, 691, 692, 702, 706, 725, 728, 732, 750, 764, 765, 778, 781-783, 793, 799, 802, 815, 819, 828, 838-847, 849-851, 874, 878, 882, 901, 906, 908, 923, 927, 965, 978, 991, 992

Jewish Christianity 115, 282, 312, 338, 385, 420, 435, 474, 510, 511, 513, 516, 667, 672, 853

Jewish exegesis/interpretation 586, 630, 635-638, 797, 951

Jewish Gnosticism 352, 645, 651

Jewish mission 813

Jewish Revolt 515, 777

Jewish War 198, 336

John Mark 66, 67, 484

Josephus 1-6, 23, 24, 26, 120, 122, 124, 132, 138, 144, 147, 197, 198, 210-212, 231, 235, 251, 279, 335, 384-386, 413, 435, 463, 473, 513, 533, 534, 561, 581, 587, 589, 638, 647, 650, 651, 711, 719, 722, 777, 778, 782, 783, 813, 814, 816-818, 852, 875, 876, 905, 917, 948

Journeys 19, 20, 31, 36, 67, 97, 116-123, 143, 159, 176, 297, 328, 337, 361, 382, 394, 395, 425, 446, 449, 450, 451, 454, 455, 465-467, 472, 474, 531, 540, 551-553, 609, 618, 647, 658, 661, 662, 684, 686, 687, 705, 707, 710, 711, 715, 721, 756, 838, 868, 883, 935, 937, 945, 946, 963-965

Joy 68, 108, 130, 155, 171, 189, 219, 259, 273, 286, 316, 318, 319, 337, 405, 410-412, 431, 483, 511, 512, 552, 608, 655, 696, 699, 713, 732, 733, 753, 820, 831, 887, 913, 914, 916, 920, 933, 968

Judaism 2, 3, 7, 9, 12, 15-23, 25, 27, 28, 32-35, 45, 50, 59, 71, 75, 81, 95-98, 100, 101, 104, 105, 113, 115, 134, 138, 142, 145, 147, 149, 152, 157-159, 161, 162, 177, 180, 182, 186, 189, 190, 197, 199, 208, 210-215, 230-232, 239, 248-250, 256, 266-270, 272, 278, 279, 284, 291, 297, 302, 306, 309, 310, 317, 319, 320, 330, 335-337, 339, 346, 352, 354, 358, 361, 366, 368, 369, 384-388, 390, 392-394, 397, 399, 402, 404-406, 413, 414, 417-419, 421, 424, 425, 431, 436, 443, 446, 457, 458, 460, 461, 463, 464, 474, 478, 480, 483, 492, 493, 497, 498, 503-520, 522, 523, 529-532, 534, 536, 538, 542, 544, 558, 570, 573, 581-583, 588, 592, 594, 609, 611, 614-616, 618, 619, 621, 622, 635, 637, 638, 642, 645, 650-652, 663, 669-675, 677-679, 681, 682, 691, 715-717, 720, 725, 729, 746, 750, 762, 764-767, 776, 777, 778, 781, 783, 786, 793, 794, 797, 805-807, 812, 813, 816, 825, 828, 830, 837, 839, 841-843, 846, 849, 850, 852, 853, 856-858, 862, 864, 867, 874, 880, 881, 887, 888, 890, 892, 900, 911, 921, 923, 925, 934, 936, 938, 946, 947, 961, 963, 964, 967, 972, 976, 978-980, 984, 985, 991

Judaizers 2, 8, 24, 49, 50, 55, 56, 137, 138, 145, 157, 177, 178, 180, 182, 187, 193,

199, 232, 236, 237, 247, 265, 308, 327, 333, 334, 352, 353, 370, 371, 396, 462, 489, 490, 493, 512-516, 532, 534, 542, 553, 606, 618, 638, 644-647, 649-652, 662, 663, 665, 668-671, 675, 711, 737, 742, 819, 823, 935, 976, 978
Judas the Galilean 814, 816
Judea 24, 66, 124-126, 141, 143, 145, 198, 270, 297, 307, 308, 330, 384, 385, 387, 429, 447, 463-465, 515, 550, 609, 647, 648, 650, 651, 679, 682, 683, 687, 721, 722, 726, 756, 801, 812-819, 853
Judgment 20-22, 26-29, 33, 34, 36, 37, 40-43, 45, 53, 57, 58, 61, 72, 127, 131, 151, 154, 158, 164, 165, 167-172, 190, 197, 206, 209, 215, 217, 218, 228, 253, 257, 259, 261-263, 265, 267-272, 281-283, 292, 301, 315, 316, 355, 359, 364, 365, 367, 368, 371, 375, 378, 379, 403, 404, 411, 415, 424, 425, 430, 431, 435, 444-446, 459, 477, 483, 485, 490, 516-518, 521, 522, 525, 540, 556, 560, 566, 567, 570, 572, 600, 601, 608, 636, 643, 676, 677, 689, 693, 696, 700, 716, 717, 720, 721, 768, 772, 774, 780, 796-803, 805, 810-812, 817, 819, 820, 828, 831-833, 837, 845, 848, 859, 861, 865, 870, 871, 878, 880, 890, 901, 904, 917, 920, 929, 938, 942, 943, 947, 949, 950, 952, 954, 956, 958-960, 968, 973, 980, 990-993
Judgment seat 58, 170, 261, 359, 516, 832
Junia/Junias 48, 186, 589, 603, 683, 754, 882, 953
Jupiter 788, 790, 791, 793, 851, 948
Justice 37, 94, 161, 194, 206-208, 228, 234, 262, 270-272, 274, 281, 292, 318, 336, 363, 364, 390, 404, 471, 503, 516, 520, 521, 550, 638, 641, 692, 722, 723, 728, 737-740, 747, 797, 828-834, 862, 895, 960, 992
Justification 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 13, 14, 20, 31, 36, 40-43, 60, 62, 68, 92-94, 103, 138, 155, 156, 159-163, 165, 193, 194, 196, 197, 204-206, 209, 220, 224, 226, 227, 237, 247, 254, 263, 265, 268, 271, 273, 275, 282, 285, 286, 291, 311, 313, 318, 323, 331, 334, 349, 360, 362, 373, 388-393, 397-399, 401, 410, 415, 416, 434, 444, 457-461, 468, 470, 471, 477, 483-485, 487, 490, 491, 495-497, 501, 506, 509-511, 515, 517-523, 529-531, 538, 538, 542, 562, 566, 572, 610, 616, 619, 624, 627, 640, 641, 646, 652, 667, 669, 671, 672, 674-678, 690, 691, 696, 699, 701, 702, 731, 743, 785, 786, 806, 820, 823, 827-837, 840, 844, 845, 850, 862, 868-871, 878, 880, 882, 887, 890, 892, 893, 896, 899, 910, 956-958, 975-978, 992
Justus 135, 173, 187
Käsemann, E. 33, 34, 51, 77, 81, 92, 95, 137, 142, 152, 153, 177, 179, 182, 192-195, 197, 220, 222, 223-225, 240, 243, 248, 253-255, 268, 347, 353, 393, 397, 401, 402, 422, 423, 434, 436-438, 446, 487, 491, 496, 503, 516, 518, 520-523, 526, 600, 616, 619, 669, 670, 676, 677, 695, 697, 699, 733, 734, 778, 835, 837, 850, 875, 877, 886, 941, 943, 957, 960
Kerygma 57, 94-96, 199, 202, 224, 225, 371, 372, 486, 495, 496, 502, 503, 676, 680, 695, 730, 735-738, 743, 806, 812, 835, 911, 923, 945
Kingdom 26, 29, 32, 34, 42, 47, 60, 62, 64, 65, 76, 84, 104, 125, 140, 148, 150, 165, 175, 178, 220, 221, 228, 235, 249, 253, 257, 265, 268, 278, 313, 324, 329, 358, 359, 383, 384, 396, 411, 415-417, 420, 426, 432, 433, 444, 445, 447, 449, 458-460, 462, 463, 475, 479, 480, 482-486, 488-492, 494, 496, 497, 500-502, 504, 507, 517, 524-526, 560, 574, 595, 598, 600, 615, 625, 636, 674, 675, 677, 694, 696, 723, 734, 735, 741, 782, 783, 787, 791, 796, 808-810, 812, 814, 818, 862, 864, 865, 871, 891, 904, 914, 938, 948, 950, 956, 962, 981, 989, 990
Kingdom of Christ 34, 359, 426, 524-526, 864, 865, 871
Kingdom of God 29, 32, 34, 42, 47, 60, 64, 76, 140, 150, 165, 175, 178, 220, 221, 257, 268, 278, 359, 411, 415, 426, 432, 433, 445, 449, 458, 459, 475, 479, 480, 483-486, 488-492, 494, 497, 500-502, 507, 517, 524-526, 595, 598, 675, 677, 694, 735, 741, 808-810, 812, 814, 864, 914, 981, 989
Knowledge 24, 25, 27, 30, 38, 52, 70, 87, 99, 109, 136, 137, 141, 148-150, 153-155, 159, 163, 166, 169, 170, 174, 175, 178, 185, 190, 192, 202, 210, 221, 225, 238, 239, 247, 253, 255, 272, 273, 276, 277, 285, 289, 309-311, 315, 336, 339, 340, 343-345, 347-350, 352, 353, 359, 361, 362, 381, 387, 390, 392, 396, 403, 405-407, 412, 413, 425, 427, 431, 449, 457, 461, 475, 480, 484-491, 495, 508, 516, 526-528, 540, 541, 577, 581, 593, 603, 607, 616, 622, 627, 636, 640, 646, 648, 659, 662, 663, 679, 680, 682, 692, 693, 702, 712, 714, 716, 717, 727, 731, 733, 736, 749, 759, 762, 765, 770-772, 774, 776, 777-782, 793, 794, 810, 811, 821, 840, 849, 865, 880, 883, 890, 891, 893, 896, 899, 906, 917, 920, 924, 937, 938, 945, 954, 955, 966-968, 972, 976, 978, 984, 986
Knowledge of sin 541, 782
Lamb 110, 113, 209, 269, 313, 570, 574, 786, 791, 814, 993
Lament 797, 950
Land 1, 3, 7, 20, 33, 66, 105, 113, 115, 124, 146, 211, 212, 300, 317, 324, 326, 334, 336, 424, 427, 441, 480, 504, 533, 534, 540, 548, 619, 684, 707, 750, 764, 781, 784, 789, 796-799, 816, 818, 866, 883, 923, 946, 947, 950, 951, 979, 980, 984
Laodicea 56, 87, 125, 147, 148, 244-246, 685, 704, 705, 719, 883, 932
Last Adam 11-15, 76, 100, 106, 107, 109-112, 114, 167, 263, 269, 277, 278, 349, 368, 407, 432, 482, 712, 772, 781, 812, 864, 866, 949, 950
Last day 125, 433, 440, 608, 806, 957, 992
Last Supper 25, 70, 110, 180, 202, 203, 208, 306, 475, 480, 482, 485, 502, 569-572, 574, 575, 578, 579, 856, 885, 898
Latin 13, 35, 37, 89, 173, 233-235, 323, 324, 339, 350, 385, 513, 520, 643, 663, 695, 701, 765, 818, 822, 823, 829, 833, 836, 852, 881, 883, 901, 928, 931, 948, 983
Law 2-9, 15-19, 22, 25, 42-45, 50, 55, 59, 60, 62, 67, 76, 84, 89, 98, 102-104, 109, 113, 137-139, 141, 142, 145-147, 149, 153, 154, 156-158, 160-163, 169, 173-175, 178, 180-183, 194, 197, 199, 200, 205-207, 209, 212, 217, 220, 221, 223, 225, 228-233, 235-238, 249, 250, 265, 271, 272, 275, 281, 282, 284, 285-289, 291, 296, 299, 305-310, 313-319, 323, 327-335, 337, 339, 348, 352, 355, 368, 370-373, 375, 376, 384, 392, 403, 404, 408-410, 426, 442, 444, 446, 453, 457-461, 464-466, 471, 474, 477-479, 483, 484, 489-494, 496-498, 500-502, 504-506, 508-516, 518, 519, 521, 523, 527, 529-550, 554, 555, 559, 576, 584, 587, 592-596, 600, 603, 611-614, 616, 618-621, 630, 637-642, 645, 647, 649-652, 656, 663, 665-668, 670-676, 678, 679, 682-686, 688-695, 698, 699, 702, 705-708, 711, 715, 717, 718, 723, 725, 740, 742, 744, 747, 751, 752, 754, 755, 756, 770, 771, 773-776, 777-783, 785, 798, 801, 802, 804, 805, 815, 817, 820, 823, 824, 828, 829, 831-833, 837, 842-852, 854, 866, 871, 878-883, 886, 890, 891, 898, 903, 905, 917, 918, 923, 941, 944, 946, 948, 950-954, 962, 971-981, 984, 985, 992
Law of Christ 102, 156, 265, 271, 275, 314-316, 334, 478, 512, 536, 539, 542-544, 576, 596, 978
Law of sin 305, 541, 691, 754, 771, 774, 844, 879
Law of the Spirit 541, 844
Lawsuits 22, 142, 165, 544, 545, 550
Leaven 218, 337, 403, 435, 824, 856, 955, 984
Lectionaries 928
Legal system 141, 142, 235, 471, 545, 546, 593, 707, 723, 730, 754, 855
Legalism 84, 147, 149, 150, 177, 193, 317, 319, 488, 491, 494, 501, 530, 544, 614, 616, 668, 669, 672, 673, 675, 676, 725, 739, 781, 800, 802, 831, 843, 899, 975-978
Legend 35-37, 384, 484, 594, 695, 779, 790, 855
Letter forms 68, 70, 240, 329, 391, 396, 550-552, 658,

663, 704, 707, 738, 825, 841, 932, 936
Letter writing 534, 552, 553
Levites 300, 784
Liberation 105, 189, 196, 275, 313-315, 322, 334, 389, 390, 396, 426, 569, 691, 773, 784, 818, 865, 882, 897, 899, 980
Liberty 137, 196, 213, 313-317, 368, 425, 438, 471, 507, 511, 674, 687, 690, 710, 743, 779, 850, 887, 899
Life setting 238, 241, 246, 392, 395, 421, 423, 486, 559, 680, 730
Ligaments 80, 377
Light and darkness 350, 555-557, 781, 863, 864, 982, 989
Linus 662
Literary criticism 395, 423, 659, 663, 705, 930
Liturgical elements, material 71, 93, 101, 150, 168, 188, 190-193, 238, 354, 392, 396, 423, 475, 553, 557, 558, 560, 562, 573, 574, 659, 664, 734, 739, 908, 944, 990
Liturgy 21, 22, 132, 133, 153, 357, 365, 508, 559, 624, 635, 725, 744, 778, 856, 984-987
Lord 11, 12, 14, 16, 20-23, 31, 33, 34, 40-44, 46-50, 55-59, 60-62, 64-66, 68-71, 74, 76-78, 80, 81, 85, 86, 92, 96-98, 100-106, 108, 110, 112, 113, 115, 124, 126-132, 134, 145-150, 152, 154, 159, 164-167, 170-173, 178, 180, 182, 185, 191, 192, 200, 202, 203, 208-210, 216, 217, 219-221, 226, 227, 229, 236, 239, 242, 246, 247, 251-253, 255-268, 275-278, 285, 287, 289, 290, 292-294, 296, 300, 302-304, 306, 307, 309, 310, 312-315, 317-319, 321, 337, 340, 342, 344, 346, 348-350, 356, 358-360, 363, 364, 366-373, 379, 385, 387, 392, 395, 398-400, 403-411, 417, 420, 422, 423, 424-426, 429, 430, 433-436, 439, 449, 450, 459, 460, 462, 463, 465, 470, 473, 475-477, 479, 480, 482, 484, 485, 487-491, 493, 495, 498, 500, 502, 507-509, 511, 512, 514, 516, 517, 534, 552, 555, 556, 558-579, 581, 582, 586, 588, 592, 596-598, 602-606, 608, 614, 620, 622-625, 626-628, 633-635, 640, 645, 648, 650, 651, 655-658, 683, 686, 688-690, 693, 696, 697, 699, 702-705, 707, 712, 713, 722, 724-728, 730-733, 735-737, 739, 748-751, 753-761, 763, 764, 769, 771-774, 776, 780, 783, 788, 794, 798-801, 803, 806-812, 829, 830, 834-836, 842, 848, 856-858, 861, 862, 864-874, 877, 880, 884, 885, 887, 888, 889, 890, 892, 896-898, 900, 903-911, 913-916, 919, 924, 925, 933, 938, 942, 944, 947, 948, 950, 952, 956, 958, 959, 964, 966, 967, 969-972, 974, 979, 981, 982, 984-990
Lord of lords 359, 730, 959
Lord's Supper 42, 57, 65, 69, 70, 76, 77, 81, 110, 129, 131, 132, 134, 166, 173, 178, 180, 182, 192, 200, 203, 209, 210, 260, 306, 307, 315, 346, 379, 395, 403, 404, 475, 491, 502, 559, 568-571, 573-575, 578, 579, 620, 648, 689, 856, 857, 885, 888, 897, 910, 914, 944, 984, 986, 989, 990
Love 2, 21, 32, 41, 44, 57, 64, 65, 69, 70, 75, 80, 85, 94, 96, 112, 129, 134, 136, 145, 146, 148, 155, 165-167, 171, 172, 203-206, 217, 218, 220, 221, 225-229, 236-239, 245-248, 269-275, 280-282, 287, 289, 293, 298, 302, 306, 309, 311, 315-319, 323, 331, 333, 334, 340-342, 348, 349, 355, 357, 358, 360, 363-365, 367, 368, 370, 372, 374, 378, 380, 393, 398, 401, 403, 404, 407, 410, 412, 416, 417, 420, 425, 436, 437, 441, 449, 459, 462, 463, 471-473, 477-479, 483, 487, 490, 491, 493, 499, 501, 502, 512, 527-529, 539, 542-544, 556, 559, 569, 572-579, 583, 587, 588, 595-597, 602, 604-607, 622, 655, 656, 686, 691, 696, 699, 700, 703, 704, 706, 708, 722, 724, 727-730, 732, 733, 739-741, 751, 758, 759, 768, 769, 771, 773, 783, 802, 809, 821, 827-829, 833, 836, 837, 844, 846, 847, 849, 856, 860, 861, 865, 868, 869, 872, 872, 873, 879, 880, 888, 894, 898, 900, 903-905, 908, 910, 913-918, 920, 933, 936, 938, 941, 942, 949, 950, 952, 954, 955, 960, 963, 966, 972, 985, 988-993
Love command 491, 501, 578, 849
Love feast 403, 404, 574, 578, 579, 914, 989
Luke (person) 87, 143, 144, 146, 159-163, 183-188, 223-225, 250-252, 277, 308, 337-339, 548-550, 573, 574, 582, 583, 680, 681, 683-685, 755-757, 964
Lycus valley 147, 148, 245, 651, 685, 688, 704
Lydia 125, 126, 135, 144, 147, 249, 387, 708, 726, 889
Lystra 66, 67, 119, 143, 323-326, 356, 447, 450, 451, 455, 548, 684, 725, 757, 794, 883
Maccabees 29, 30, 101, 208, 212, 213, 279, 283, 305, 384, 386-388, 533, 695, 719, 777, 803, 806, 813-815, 830, 849, 972, 979, 984
Macedonia 47, 87, 96, 118, 119, 121, 124, 143, 168, 176, 177, 211, 297, 326, 383, 447-450, 454, 455, 472, 587, 589, 609, 646, 661, 684-688, 707, 708, 726, 770, 786, 787, 813, 817, 827, 932, 933
Magic 210, 211, 243, 246-248, 250-252, 351, 379, 405, 425, 580-583, 623, 627, 628, 724, 725, 734, 747-749, 751, 752, 794, 795, 863, 866, 875, 877, 950, 953, 984
Magician 350, 405, 580-582, 620, 667, 721, 863, 877
Malta 381, 451, 726, 877, 946
Man from heaven 278, 432, 482, 808, 810
Man of dust 808
Man of lawlessness 34, 40, 235, 236, 262, 268, 535, 592, 593, 617, 622, 861, 865, 876, 879, 880, 924, 939, 948, 952
Manna 783
Maranatha 260, 277, 392, 557-560, 562, 563, 573, 731, 885, 987, 990
Marcion 35, 86, 87, 89-91, 150, 175, 241, 244, 351, 353-355, 630, 659, 690, 692-695, 928, 931, 932
Marriage 8-10, 36, 45, 57, 58, 141, 165, 173, 256, 269, 273, 275, 293, 314, 340, 352, 353, 376, 396, 400, 401, 414, 471, 475, 480, 484, 485, 533, 545, 567, 584, 585, 587, 589, 592, 594-600, 663, 694, 702, 722, 725, 860, 865, 872-875, 881, 915
Mars Hill 51
Martyrdom of Paul 35
Martyrs, martyrdom 15, 23, 35, 36, 43, 116, 118, 178, 208, 209, 260, 279, 283, 350, 362, 422, 451, 502, 515, 533, 579, 592, 661, 662, 689, 690, 694, 703, 722, 808, 813, 814, 855, 920
Mature, maturity 75, 129, 136, 149, 165, 255, 265, 271, 411, 528, 539, 606, 610, 622, 657, 699, 700, 724, 766, 794, 870, 907, 916
Mediator 4, 9, 22, 27, 100, 105, 110, 149, 169, 178, 410, 457, 620, 697, 744, 910, 914, 938, 968, 970, 971, 981
Meekness 318, 487, 499, 607, 711
Melchizedek 1, 22, 780, 947
Mercy 43, 49, 53, 64, 68, 71, 81, 85, 145, 168, 170, 196, 204, 209, 225-227, 238, 239, 273, 279, 280, 282, 283, 303, 312, 313, 316, 338, 341, 345, 347, 365, 367, 368, 372, 374, 441, 442, 444, 445, 492, 501, 502, 575, 577, 578, 601, 602, 643, 691, 692, 699, 728, 730, 781, 782, 786, 797, 799, 828-831, 836, 837, 845, 848, 849, 856, 857, 859, 861, 912, 913, 957, 984, 990, 992, 993
Mercy seat 196, 209, 279, 280, 282, 283, 312, 313, 786, 836, 837, 845, 856, 857, 990, 992, 993
Merit 67, 217, 229, 285-287, 327, 444, 492, 509, 510, 517, 519, 521, 522, 529, 530, 601, 614, 704, 705, 829, 830, 834, 880, 912, 929, 976-978
Merkabah 22, 31, 266, 508, 509, 511, 624, 779, 780, 964, 965
Messiah 15, 17, 20, 26-29, 31-34, 37, 38, 47, 64, 69, 95, 97, 98, 100, 102-106, 109, 112, 113, 115, 129, 137, 146, 157, 162, 201, 207, 208, 247, 256, 257, 260, 263, 264, 294, 302, 339, 348, 355, 405, 420, 433-436, 461, 484, 494, 495, 523, 524, 525, 593, 614, 618, 622, 650, 678, 682, 699, 736, 744, 750, 751, 778, 782, 799, 805, 811, 815, 819, 821, 838, 839, 868, 878, 901, 904, 907, 920, 934, 947, 948, 951, 984, 987
Messianic age 404, 411, 415, 531, 617, 663, 671, 764, 777, 778, 781, 782
Messianic hope 95
Messianic suffering 920
Messianism 28, 100, 843, 901
Michael 20, 22, 23, 37, 91, 137, 179, 293, 310, 658, 713, 748, 750, 751, 780,

782, 863, 891, 947
Midrash 11, 103, 180, 181, 239, 505, 506, 511, 552, 581, 637, 638, 664, 846, 970
Miletus 119, 448, 450, 455, 654, 661
Military 140, 198, 211, 230, 233, 234, 251, 324, 375, 385, 417, 547, 549, 550, 682, 707, 713, 720, 722, 749, 751, 786, 787, 814-818, 900, 933, 945, 950, 951, 953, 983
Minister 22, 47, 50, 129, 148, 169, 183, 185, 187, 296, 299, 347, 418, 470, 473, 537, 556, 589, 602, 605, 620, 621, 647, 662, 760, 851, 865
Ministry 9, 20, 36-38, 45-51, 56, 60, 66, 70, 81, 85, 94, 97, 103, 106, 109, 112, 113, 116-120, 122, 123, 129, 131, 135, 137, 140, 143-145, 147, 152, 153, 165, 168-170, 172, 175, 178, 179, 181, 183, 185-188, 190, 193, 202, 208, 216-221, 223, 236, 241, 242, 244, 246-249, 251, 252, 257, 262, 263, 275, 278, 289, 292, 294-301, 321, 341, 343-345, 347, 349, 358, 362, 369, 370, 378, 383, 385, 394, 397, 409, 418, 437, 444, 447, 448, 451, 454, 457, 463, 464, 467, 470, 471, 486, 487, 490, 492, 496-501, 508, 524, 537, 548-550, 552, 558, 562, 567, 575, 582, 584, 589-592, 597, 602-608, 610, 618, 620, 625, 627, 635, 637, 639, 646, 647, 650, 654, 655, 658-661, 664-666, 668, 671, 680, 683, 685-689, 695, 700, 702-704, 706, 717-719, 721, 722, 724-727, 729-731, 735, 737, 745, 753, 754, 756-758, 762, 779, 782, 799, 800, 804, 806, 807, 813, 817, 818, 826, 827, 840, 843, 849, 850, 853, 854, 860, 864, 865, 870, 871, 873, 877, 882, 883, 886, 890, 891, 892, 900, 902, 903, 909, 911, 914, 919, 920, 921, 926, 927, 939, 945, 951-953, 963-965, 966, 969, 976, 983
Ministry of reconciliation 94, 292, 695, 782
Miracle 2, 34, 36, 55, 58, 96, 134, 251, 285, 289, 340, 343-345, 347, 379, 380, 381, 405, 406, 409, 412, 464, 486-488, 498, 500, 603, 620, 645, 647, 652, 666, 693, 726, 735, 806, 858, 875-877, 938
Mishnah 139, 147, 213, 215, 337, 530, 637, 805, 984
Mission 24, 25, 46, 47, 49, 56, 57, 67, 70, 93, 94, 98, 101, 105, 110, 117-119, 121-123, 126, 131, 140, 142-144, 146, 147, 156, 159-162, 171, 180, 181, 183, 185-188, 191, 192, 197, 198, 204, 209, 213, 262, 270, 273, 274, 294, 297, 299, 300, 307, 321, 328, 330, 331, 335, 337-339, 352, 365, 366, 368, 370, 379, 393-396, 404, 408, 419, 421, 441, 444-448, 450, 451, 453-455, 466-468, 470, 472, 474, 477, 485, 487, 491, 493, 497, 501, 502, 508, 513-516, 523, 531, 532, 593, 598, 606, 608-619, 649-652, 654, 658, 661-664, 671, 679-681, 683-688, 691, 701, 702, 708, 710, 718, 719, 726, 729, 732, 736, 737, 799, 800, 804, 805, 813, 817-819, 823, 826, 827, 838-840, 842, 848, 850, 851, 853, 870, 875, 876, 883, 884, 886-890, 895, 899, 904, 907, 913, 922, 923, 927, 932-934, 938, 945, 949-951, 964, 969, 983, 984
Mission of Jesus 366, 969
Mission strategy 53, 671, 708, 840, 934
Missionaries 46, 55, 67, 114, 177, 178, 181, 185-188, 210, 610, 611, 645, 669, 670, 684, 702, 711, 725, 819, 932, 933, 938
Missionary journeys 97, 116, 118-123, 143, 176, 328, 337, 394, 425, 450, 454, 455, 465, 467, 472, 647, 658, 661, 662, 721, 868, 883, 945
Mitylene 450
Money 44, 135, 143-145, 173, 175, 251, 295, 297-300, 448, 545, 549, 550, 570, 575, 577, 656, 657, 665, 680, 683, 705, 718, 720, 722, 784, 814, 826, 827, 879-881, 884, 887, 896, 897, 913, 914, 922, 936, 986
Monotheism 4, 6, 8, 23, 53, 103, 106, 309, 310, 336, 355, 366-368, 424, 426, 434, 563, 565, 569, 715, 780, 917, 938, 985, 987
Moral teaching 134, 266, 414, 875, 923, 944
Mortal body 71-75, 221, 861
Mortality 34, 71-75, 221, 258, 271, 272, 301, 304, 378, 426, 431, 432, 439, 553-555, 710, 712, 714, 766, 768, 773, 787, 791, 808-810, 861, 867, 882, 919, 967
Moses 2, 4, 8, 10, 18-20, 25, 29, 55, 62, 78, 102, 124, 138, 145, 169, 175, 177-179, 181, 182, 332, 337, 348, 368, 381, 407, 424, 435, 461, 462, 464, 471, 499, 504, 529, 533, 535, 537, 539, 554, 582, 617, 620, 621, 635, 636, 645-647, 649, 650, 693, 694, 717, 719, 744, 746, 759, 763, 780, 782, 797, 798, 800, 802, 803, 808, 816-818, 875, 947, 952, 964, 971
Mystery 10, 16, 21, 27, 48, 65, 66, 87, 99, 110, 149, 155, 173, 197, 222, 226, 227, 241, 243, 246-248, 250, 264, 268, 340, 344-346, 348, 353, 354, 361, 362, 366-368, 385, 405, 425, 437, 476, 497, 507-509, 511, 561, 570, 576, 581, 583, 597, 610, 621-625, 628, 639, 649, 669, 714, 718, 726, 751, 753, 754, 758, 759, 761, 762, 765, 778, 779, 782, 786, 787, 792-796, 808, 848, 849, 865, 867, 872, 884, 901, 912, 915, 931, 941, 948, 963, 970, 972, 973, 984
Mystery cults, religions 16, 149, 173, 246, 353, 354, 385, 425, 508, 561, 570, 610, 622, 623, 628, 669, 754, 765, 786, 792-795, 867, 884, 901, 963, 984
Mysticism 31, 34, 35, 82, 99, 149, 152, 163, 254, 266-269, 353, 385, 413, 436, 493, 503, 508, 509, 511, 521, 526, 616, 619, 623-625, 628, 651, 674, 675, 679, 716, 727, 734, 762, 778, 779, 837, 916, 964, 965
Myth 29, 30, 46, 231, 243, 434, 436, 591, 593, 712, 714, 747, 751, 788, 792, 793, 795, 812, 867, 903, 950, 979
Nag Hammadi 10, 36, 37, 241, 350-354
Name 1, 9, 21, 23, 24, 33, 35, 37, 45, 48, 51, 52, 55, 56, 59, 60-62, 66, 67, 69, 70, 86, 87, 95-98, 104, 113, 129-131, 152, 159, 164, 183, 186, 210, 216, 220, 233, 242, 244, 251, 276-278, 323, 325, 326, 350, 355, 357, 358, 360, 363, 364, 387, 398, 424, 429, 433, 441, 445, 467, 476, 486, 487, 505, 506, 510, 561, 564-566, 568, 569, 581-583, 589, 591, 626-628, 645, 650, 651, 657-660, 670, 671, 680, 681, 689, 690, 701, 704, 708, 709, 712, 715, 720-722, 725, 731, 732, 738, 744, 745, 749, 763, 773, 780, 787, 788, 790, 791, 793, 799, 800, 803, 815, 816, 824, 841, 850, 852, 862, 863, 866, 868, 871, 881, 882, 890, 896, 903, 908, 914, 919, 926, 931, 932, 945, 958, 985, 987
Name of God 23, 61, 69, 277, 278, 445, 561, 564, 626, 800, 803
Narrative criticism 395
Narrative tradition 475, 486, 487, 490
Nationalism, Jewish 24, 339, 510, 615, 650, 651, 816, 817, 818, 975, 976, 978
Nations 1-3, 7, 21, 26, 29, 52, 85, 127, 130, 231, 232, 237, 262, 263, 286, 300, 322, 335, 348, 371, 424, 425, 435, 443, 445, 462, 533, 535, 586, 595, 601, 612, 614, 617, 618, 627, 634, 696, 748-751, 779, 798, 799, 804, 843, 844, 858, 863, 904, 946-951, 967, 991
Natural theology 54, 354, 716, 717
Neighbor 4, 148, 231, 236, 238, 271, 309, 315, 319, 335, 424, 478, 483, 539, 543, 571, 655, 689, 844, 849, 880, 914, 917, 990
Nero 30, 36, 77, 78, 83, 84, 116, 120, 142, 234, 235, 250, 550, 593, 652, 661, 662, 687, 720-722, 815, 816, 838, 853, 854, 946
New birth 78
New covenant 17, 49, 50, 57, 129, 130, 138, 169, 175, 178-180, 182, 209, 210, 338, 339, 349, 358, 446, 470, 533-539, 541, 542, 572, 573, 620, 621, 640, 646, 649, 674, 777, 781, 782, 799, 804, 805, 836, 870
New creation 11, 13, 15, 30-34, 64, 65, 94, 99, 110, 111, 141, 156, 163, 170, 178, 182, 189, 190, 197, 204, 205, 219-221, 256, 267-269, 273, 282, 283, 302, 303, 322, 334, 339, 348-350, 368, 381, 383, 409, 417, 433, 441, 483, 485, 500, 526, 555, 629, 674, 676, 677, 698, 772, 773, 832, 837, 862, 872, 892, 893, 908, 909, 916, 947, 948, 951-953, 970, 981, 982
New Exodus 17, 785, 876, 947, 950, 951
New humanity 189, 190, 302, 303, 407, 409, 410, 427,

428, 434, 629, 772, 773, 925, 948, 949, 951
New Israel 77, 189, 441-443, 536, 537, 989
New moon 182, 402
New nature 9, 15, 62, 64, 65, 190, 257, 273, 363, 401, 410, 554, 628, 774, 828, 880, 914, 916, 923, 963
New perspective on Paul 200, 200, 212, 232, 460, 460, 509, 509, 510, 523, 523, 532, 583, 614, 614, 619, 619, 671-674, 678, 679, 679, 781, 842, 842, 843, 863, 978, 978, 981
New self 257, 628, 766, 772-774, 955
Nicopolis 448, 661
Noachian commandments 470, 471
Noah 78, 595
Nomism 18, 84, 102, 182, 183, 233, 308, 358, 510, 519, 531, 673, 675, 778, 781, 797, 805, 975, 976
Nurse 133, 658, 884, 939
Nympha 125, 126, 135, 889
Oath 130, 327, 453, 727, 790, 802, 813
Obedience 1-5, 7-9, 13, 32, 40, 48, 50, 55, 61, 62, 72, 102, 112, 113, 129, 130, 136, 139, 140, 149, 153, 159, 165, 178, 183, 191, 199, 200, 203, 206, 208, 209, 220, 237, 259, 270-275, 285, 289-291, 293, 298, 299, 316, 317, 319, 332, 334, 380, 395, 401, 404, 410, 418, 422, 424, 431, 433, 436, 450, 458-460, 475, 486, 494, 499, 501, 502, 516, 521, 522, 529-531, 533, 537, 538, 540, 541, 544, 566, 567, 577, 588, 605, 606, 612, 627, 635, 641, 654, 657, 670, 673, 676, 701, 707, 715, 722, 732, 745, 748, 753, 759, 768, 770, 773, 774, 781, 797, 798, 819, 831, 835, 836, 844, 846, 847, 882, 890, 896, 904-913, 915, 916, 927, 952, 954, 955, 956, 957, 971, 973, 975-978, 983, 984, 989
Offering 1, 53, 61, 71, 77, 78, 101, 110, 143, 146, 207, 209, 231, 270, 280, 283, 297, 298, 300, 313, 372, 373, 458, 472, 473, 484, 525, 540, 570, 573, 574, 578, 605, 615, 618, 634, 645, 686, 709, 713, 732, 756, 769-771, 786, 789, 793, 845, 846, 856, 857, 880, 885, 886, 897, 900, 905, 922, 983, 992
Old covenant 169, 170, 178-182, 199, 348, 489, 535, 537, 538, 541, 542, 620, 672, 674, 678, 750, 766, 780, 835, 924
Old humanity/nature/self 9, 15, 36, 62, 64, 65, 190, 257, 314, 401, 409, 554, 555, 628, 753, 772, 774, 880, 882, 916, 923, 949, 963
Olive Tree 8, 43, 181, 182, 292, 339, 355, 446, 618, 642-644, 803, 804, 848, 850
One body 63, 76, 77, 79-81, 94, 104, 128, 239, 247, 294, 303, 342, 377, 378, 405, 410, 435, 436, 480, 572, 623, 689, 698, 739, 759, 872, 908, 924, 943, 989
Onesimus 87, 88, 152, 274, 304, 395, 655, 680, 703-706, 739, 753, 870, 882
Onesiphorus 36, 602, 662, 693
Opponents 2-5, 8, 12, 19, 20, 22, 44, 49, 50, 54, 55, 58, 59, 72, 73, 76, 101, 137, 138, 145, 148, 149, 157, 164, 168-172, 174-182, 185, 186, 188, 190, 200, 202, 204, 213, 218, 224, 237, 238, 252, 260, 273, 296, 304, 327, 329, 334, 352, 353, 360, 370, 379, 381, 386, 392, 403, 453, 459, 466, 469, 473, 488, 489, 500, 512-516, 535, 537-539, 543, 559, 578, 581, 597, 606, 607, 617-619, 634, 644-647, 649-652, 662, 663, 665-675, 678, 679, 685, 686, 691, 693, 694, 707, 709, 711, 723, 731, 737, 750, 752, 763, 780, 794, 813, 817-819, 821, 823, 825, 865, 871, 875, 876, 886, 892, 926, 934, 935, 948, 953, 964, 966, 969
Oracles 30, 414, 474, 476, 663, 714, 755-757, 760-762, 779, 787, 789, 795, 983
Ordination 135, 137, 228, 267
Pagans, paganism 1, 5, 51-54, 61, 65, 66, 69, 75, 101, 142, 148, 149, 154, 166, 173, 191, 210, 211, 217, 222, 230-232, 236, 245, 246, 253, 279, 280, 296, 306, 307, 309, 310, 314, 315, 327, 336, 339, 353, 357, 358, 380, 384, 385, 393, 413, 414, 419, 420, 424-426, 434, 443, 510, 511, 533, 561-563, 570, 573, 581, 582, 598, 600, 611, 619, 621, 623, 635, 662, 684, 689, 708, 716, 721, 730, 730, 745, 793-796, 813-815, 877, 887, 889, 890, 900, 901, 903, 904, 917, 924, 934, 938, 984
Palestine 2, 23, 47, 48, 50, 142, 199, 211, 212, 331, 339, 383, 385, 386, 388, 447, 463, 464, 470, 500, 501, 504, 506, 508, 531, 533, 538, 547, 585, 710, 718, 719, 750, 776, 786, 796, 813, 838, 853, 909, 984
Palestinian Christians, church 257, 277, 369, 385
Palestinian Judaism 9, 45, 95, 101, 182, 197, 212, 291, 368, 385, 397, 436, 497, 503, 504, 508, 511, 518, 519, 523, 531, 542, 614, 619, 637, 642, 670, 673, 675, 679, 750, 765, 783, 797, 805, 837, 850, 880, 881, 961
Paphos 450
Parables 98, 114, 476, 478, 483, 485, 487, 488, 497, 498, 501, 639, 730, 968
Paradise 9, 37, 112, 131, 153, 248, 268, 269, 278, 368, 381-383, 433, 440, 508, 509, 511, 625, 647, 672, 691, 712, 757, 775, 779, 812, 864, 867, 947, 960, 964, 965, 982
Paraenesis 214, 242, 253, 344, 391, 393, 398, 401, 422, 474, 489-491, 528, 543, 544, 552, 553, 566, 655, 729, 736-738, 839, 840, 917, 922, 923, 933, 944, 963, 988
Parousia 22, 31, 33, 34, 40, 71, 74, 96, 123, 141, 151, 189, 190, 192, 203, 208, 217, 220, 224, 253-257, 259-262, 264, 266-269, 272, 276, 277, 356, 359, 382, 391, 394, 409, 415, 430-432, 438-440, 446, 449, 450, 455, 474, 476, 516, 524, 525, 551-553, 582, 594, 617, 618, 660, 686, 732, 738, 804, 808, 809, 865, 937, 946, 952, 953, 956, 959, 989, 990
Participation in Christ 208, 220, 221, 294, 479, 519, 523, 531, 583, 691
Particularism 6, 182, 513, 614-616, 618, 956, 957, 958, 960, 976
Paschal lamb 110, 113, 209, 269, 313, 574, 786
Passion 94, 191, 201-203, 219, 296, 364, 485, 490, 519, 624, 625, 725, 727, 730, 750, 800, 840, 879, 969
Passion narratives 198, 209, 475, 486
Passover 110, 113, 144, 209, 263, 313, 337, 570, 573, 574, 786, 813, 814, 817, 856, 955, 984, 989
Pastor 66, 87, 129, 133, 137, 332, 345, 347, 357, 600, 603, 608, 654, 657, 658, 734, 825, 962, 974, 986
Pastoral Letters 36, 40, 44, 45, 86-88, 90, 91, 98, 99, 100, 118, 123, 133-137, 153, 155, 156, 183, 188, 216, 224, 225, 253, 259, 274, 290, 347, 352, 353, 359, 391, 394, 397, 401, 414, 419, 422, 448, 455, 529, 554, 557, 587, 590, 604-606, 623, 626, 630, 645, 652, 656, 658-664, 666-668, 680, 693, 727, 756, 768, 775, 776, 831, 862-865, 867-869, 889, 922, 944, 953, 959, 960, 962, 974, 975, 980
Patriarch 1, 2, 5, 6, 8, 28, 103, 181, 227, 287, 300, 302, 435, 444, 501, 715, 830, 857, 968
Peace 61, 68, 72, 84, 94, 98, 105, 113, 143, 147, 155, 163, 170, 172, 189, 190, 203, 209, 215, 219, 231, 236, 238, 248, 268, 272, 283, 286, 289, 292, 307, 313, 316, 318, 319, 339, 355, 366, 369, 370, 374, 391, 399, 400, 409, 410, 412, 420, 441, 442, 483, 512, 530, 551, 558, 573, 618, 622, 623, 646, 695-699, 713, 727, 728, 735, 738, 739, 750, 760, 763, 764, 771, 773, 782, 786, 790, 791, 796, 831, 832, 836, 837, 846, 852, 858, 862, 866, 867, 893, 913-916, 922, 941, 947, 951, 953, 958-960, 969, 980, 982
Pentateuch 384, 505, 533, 535, 715
Pentecost 60, 66, 83, 116, 143, 144, 176, 185, 403, 448, 469, 759, 853, 940, 952, 984
People of God 7, 8, 17, 27-31, 33, 64, 84, 85, 102, 113, 123, 138, 147, 151, 162, 178, 205, 233, 287, 289, 332, 335, 340, 341, 369, 398, 418, 435, 441-443, 446, 473, 482, 484, 501, 508, 510, 512, 518, 519, 523, 531, 532, 535-538, 572, 595, 599, 601, 614, 643, 644, 676, 678, 723, 750, 764, 805, 842, 860, 887, 909, 911, 916, 923-925, 933, 938, 947, 976
Perfect, perfection 20, 23, 25, 28, 29, 64, 81, 103, 110, 111, 149, 172, 200, 247, 256, 265, 288, 319, 332, 361-363, 397, 399, 400, 401, 410, 437, 512, 514, 577, 597, 607, 629, 673, 699-701, 711, 712, 715, 717, 733, 761, 773, 774, 780-782, 794, 833, 856, 861, 866, 910, 916, 970,

972, 976, 978
Perga 67, 450
Persecution 6, 18-20, 23, 40, 44, 116, 125, 141, 142, 144, 193, 209, 236, 308, 337, 379, 429, 461, 465, 484, 487, 498, 548, 550, 662, 681, 682, 730, 731, 733, 763, 798, 801, 824, 853, 865, 890, 919, 930, 937, 992
Perseverance 39-41, 43-45, 85, 156, 166, 167, 218, 229, 291, 311, 517, 641, 658, 679, 701, 731, 733, 820, 834, 921, 960, 968
Pesher 239, 636, 777, 779, 781, 782, 971
Peter 22, 24, 25, 27, 36, 37, 39, 47, 55, 56, 58, 60, 66, 67, 88, 91, 100, 102, 113, 114, 116, 120, 137, 141-143, 145, 155, 156, 158, 160, 161, 163, 165, 179, 182, 185, 186, 189, 193, 214-218, 220, 223-225, 228, 229, 235, 307-310, 314, 327, 328, 330, 331, 334-338, 351, 393, 402, 408, 418, 419, 446, 447, 453, 454, 457, 461, 463, 465-470, 472, 473, 477, 478, 482, 484, 487, 488, 494, 498-500, 503, 504, 506, 508-511, 513-515, 531, 546, 549, 570, 573, 578, 579, 589, 592, 594, 607, 613, 617, 621, 625, 637, 644, 645, 647-651, 659-662, 667, 668, 669, 670, 672, 673, 676, 678, 683, 684, 686, 690, 692, 693, 701-703, 719, 725, 730, 746, 750, 757, 759, 777, 781-783, 793, 799, 806, 807, 813-815, 817, 839, 850, 853-855, 868, 893, 908, 917-919, 923, 943, 945, 956, 965, 986, 990
Philemon (letter) 88-91, 152, 252, 274, 304, 448, 449, 680, 703-707, 752-754, 881-883
Philemon (person) 94, 125, 135, 294, 703-707, 870, 889
Philetus 195, 865
Philippi 47, 83, 86, 87, 94, 118, 119, 121, 125, 136, 140, 144, 157, 210, 297, 337, 360, 403, 422, 447-451, 455, 489, 515, 548, 589, 592, 603, 606, 608, 634, 645, 652, 655, 662, 684, 685, 687, 688, 705, 707-711, 713, 719, 720, 725, 752, 753, 760, 794, 817, 840, 870, 883, 886, 933, 945
Philippians 35, 69, 70, 83, 84, 89, 104-107, 110, 138, 157-158, 161, 162, 197, 218, 221, 252, 264, 318, 352, 353, 393, 419-423, 429, 432, 447-449, 499, 504, 511-512, 538-540, 557, 563, 565, 626-628, 634, 635, 652, 668, 669, 680, 707-713, 744-746, 752-754, 832, 867-870, 958, 959, 988-990
Philo 1-3, 5-7, 10, 38, 39, 78, 79, 84, 112, 124, 138, 139, 173, 185, 199, 210-212, 231, 234, 235, 258, 270, 279, 300, 302, 305, 310, 352, 353, 375, 376, 384-387, 405, 413, 414, 418, 505, 534, 561, 585, 587, 589, 621, 636, 637, 715, 717, 718, 728, 748, 777, 780, 783, 814, 821, 822, 826, 846, 875, 901, 905, 946, 963, 968-972, 982, 986
Philosophy 39, 51, 53, 54, 78, 147-150, 208, 212-214, 230, 231, 272, 275, 295, 321, 360, 383, 385, 387, 397, 494, 496, 503, 587, 589, 621, 655, 666, 667, 682, 713-716, 718, 737, 765, 768, 795, 814, 821, 827, 877, 884, 921, 923, 926, 934, 972, 973, 979
Phoebe 589, 603, 838, 840, 850, 870
Phrygia 119, 121, 147, 323-325, 450, 451
Physical body 12, 72, 73, 75, 76, 258, 264, 345, 379, 432, 554, 555, 694, 698, 808, 810, 898
Piety 2, 27, 51, 145, 149, 159, 191, 193, 212, 232, 270, 296, 299, 310, 338, 354, 357, 402, 460, 493, 494, 566, 714, 717, 725, 781, 795, 813, 815, 816, 826, 828, 834, 846, 908, 939, 963, 971
Pilate 99, 197, 202, 814, 817, 975
Pillars 56, 58, 113, 118, 128, 143, 251, 465, 467, 514, 648-650, 668, 670, 671, 674, 683, 686, 687, 817, 854
Pisidia 67, 119, 324-326, 883
Platonism 71, 112, 384, 387, 713-718, 806
Plight 21, 112, 193, 230, 306, 321, 322, 390, 534, 540, 542, 591, 673, 797, 805, 826, 827, 877, 950, 976, 978
Political systems 141, 142, 235, 249, 547, 550, 718, 819, 854, 855
Politics 310, 396, 491, 503, 752, 819, 893
Pontus 249, 324-326, 351, 662
Poor, poverty 106, 143-147, 167, 270, 271, 275, 294, 295, 297-300, 373, 379, 390, 395, 453, 466, 467, 472, 474, 483, 487, 490, 499, 501, 502, 569, 571, 579, 582, 657, 658, 663, 684-686, 688, 702, 710, 718, 745, 826-830, 870, 889, 897, 898, 914, 929, 935, 967, 969, 984, 989
Possessions 146, 274, 300, 657, 816, 826
Postal services 118, 945, 946
Power of God 43, 45, 63, 105, 165, 178, 208, 239, 285, 286, 359-361, 399, 409, 520, 529, 543, 605, 607, 677, 723, 724, 735, 743, 821, 835, 846, 861, 876, 877, 920, 966, 972
Praetorium 709, 710, 721, 722, 753
Praise 21, 54, 68, 69, 71, 130, 149, 152, 164, 168, 169, 171, 188, 228, 238-240, 246, 316, 317, 348, 354, 360, 365, 367, 372, 387, 391, 392, 412, 420, 422, 485, 552, 557, 558, 623, 688, 725, 727, 728, 731, 732, 751, 771, 785, 800, 820-822, 849, 941, 948, 965, 968, 973, 978, 982-988
Prayer 21, 35, 37, 58, 59, 68-71, 127, 130, 141, 143, 150, 152, 159, 164, 171, 211, 212, 238-240, 242, 260, 278, 289, 294, 298, 346, 349, 350, 354, 358, 364, 365, 370, 384, 391, 392, 401, 405, 410, 412, 420, 437, 438, 447, 449, 479, 530, 540, 551, 552, 557-560, 563, 573, 574, 576, 578, 590, 606, 607, 622, 627, 655, 665, 686, 703, 707, 708, 723-734, 738, 742, 744, 753, 756, 759, 771, 778, 787-791, 797, 798, 799, 802, 830, 840, 844, 850, 859, 861, 866, 884, 887, 906-908, 910-913, 915, 916, 923, 933, 941-943, 983, 985, 987, 988, 989, 990
Preaching 2, 3, 5, 19, 22, 36, 43, 47, 52, 54-58, 67, 83-85, 93, 95-98, 103, 109, 116, 117, 126, 129, 130, 131, 136, 139, 141, 168-170, 172, 174, 175, 183, 185, 187, 191-194, 197, 202, 207, 213, 224, 225, 227, 236, 237, 250, 251, 284, 295-297, 299, 309, 315, 321, 330, 338, 345, 348, 358, 359, 370-372, 378, 380, 387, 396, 397, 406, 409, 425, 434, 447, 450, 458, 464, 468, 474, 475, 480, 482-486, 489-493, 495-497, 499, 500, 502, 507, 529, 538, 540, 547, 553, 593, 602-607, 609, 610, 612, 622, 624, 642, 648, 652, 654, 657, 661, 669, 676, 680-682, 685-687, 695, 707-709, 715-717, 719, 724, 728-731, 735-743, 753, 761-763, 786, 799, 801, 820-824, 824, 838, 840, 848, 849, 859, 867-869, 876, 884, 889, 895, 897, 911, 926, 927, 935, 938, 964, 967, 986
Predestination 17, 28, 40, 45, 84, 85, 225-229, 310, 311, 320, 348, 443, 446, 575, 622, 740, 743, 744, 778, 780, 781, 804, 834, 848, 905, 960
Pre-existence 12, 99, 104, 107, 114, 115, 195, 278, 303, 320, 368, 386, 422, 487, 697, 743-746, 906, 970, 971, 973, 988
Pre-Pauline tradition 31, 32, 79, 96, 97, 152, 193-195, 215, 258, 264, 282, 283, 312, 730, 736, 806, 807, 809, 812, 868, 902
Priesthood 248, 300, 473, 719, 797
Priestly service 686
Priests 19, 26, 33, 78, 119, 120, 134, 141, 227, 231, 234, 251, 283, 300, 307, 324, 373, 384, 463, 473, 605, 634, 651, 682, 718-720, 777, 781, 784, 788-792, 794-796, 813, 815-818, 851-853, 857, 862, 924
Principalities and powers 21, 23, 31, 38, 41, 93, 97, 105, 128, 142, 149, 152, 192, 205, 210, 211, 221, 228-230, 232, 233, 235, 238, 241, 246-248, 262, 274, 277, 278, 313, 316, 359, 380, 383, 403, 422, 526, 582, 583, 622, 627, 628, 699, 723, 724, 731, 746, 747, 749, 751, 752, 865, 866, 946, 948, 950, 953, 959, 980, 982, 988
Prisca 183, 436, 589, 842
Priscilla 38, 70, 120, 121, 135, 173, 183, 251, 589, 603, 662, 685, 710, 722, 853, 854, 884, 889, 926
Prison 47, 71, 83, 118, 152, 153, 183, 196, 233, 242, 248, 252, 352, 394, 448, 512, 549, 550, 627, 635, 667, 680, 682, 685, 699, 703, 705, 707-711, 719, 727, 735, 752, 753, 854, 877, 953, 962, 969
Prisoner 83, 242, 406, 550, 588, 662, 680, 709, 711, 739, 752-754, 953
Proclamation 38, 39, 85, 130, 163, 187, 190-192, 202, 228, 232, 256, 263, 264, 276, 297, 321, 361, 406, 408, 434, 494, 495, 522,

525, 556, 557, 562, 565, 570, 572, 606, 609-611, 617, 622, 695, 698, 708, 723, 731, 735, 736, 761, 779, 794, 806, 809, 811, 820, 844, 859, 868, 876, 882, 907, 909, 913, 914, 938, 967, 970, 972

Proconsul 116, 172, 395, 546-548, 582, 682, 685, 710, 720, 721, 877

Procurator 120, 141, 473, 533, 546, 547, 651, 687, 710, 720, 721, 813, 815, 816, 817, 819

Promise 1, 3-8, 13, 15-17, 20, 39, 40, 42, 62, 69, 94, 105, 109, 113, 127, 129, 138, 146, 168, 172, 181, 182, 195, 204-206, 224, 227, 236, 237, 239, 260, 262, 263, 271, 286-288, 292, 300, 301, 303-306, 315, 323, 329, 332, 333, 335, 338, 348, 362, 371, 381, 395, 404, 405, 415-417, 442-444, 449, 482, 483, 489, 501, 519, 524, 534, 535, 537, 538, 542, 558, 559, 618, 623-625, 630, 636, 639-641, 651, 673, 675, 723, 734, 782, 793, 799, 802, 804, 820, 824, 830, 834, 840, 843, 846, 848, 866, 889-891, 896, 901, 904, 906, 910, 924, 947, 951, 984, 985, 988

Promises of God 129, 168, 332, 416, 417, 524, 675, 824, 906

Prophecy 21, 26, 27, 30, 59, 66, 91, 120, 127, 129, 166, 188, 210, 286, 299, 331, 340, 341, 343-347, 363, 368, 404, 405, 407, 411-413, 445, 468, 511, 528, 533, 590, 594, 603, 625, 636, 639, 641, 660, 661, 664-666, 679, 716, 726, 736, 740, 755-762, 764, 765, 768, 778, 779, 782, 800, 805, 842, 887, 889, 891, 913, 943, 944, 987, 990

Prophets 25, 26, 30, 33, 34, 58, 66, 85, 91, 109, 129, 135, 157, 163, 185-188, 206, 238, 241, 259, 266, 321, 322, 330, 340, 342-348, 355, 370, 371, 404, 410, 424, 444, 445, 475, 494, 534, 537, 542, 556, 569, 590, 596, 603-605, 636, 640, 641, 647, 663, 776, 778-782, 789, 796, 798, 799, 801-803, 805, 816-819, 825, 829, 830, 860, 862, 870, 876, 887, 889, 902-904, 933, 938, 942, 951, 953, 956, 974, 985, 987, 990

Propitiation 196, 203, 209, 279-282, 284, 285, 312, 313, 349, 786, 836, 837, 845, 856, 857, 990, 992, 993

Proselytes 23, 62, 138, 139, 232, 307, 336, 337, 458, 538, 610, 615, 816, 838, 849

Prostitute, prostitution 78, 173, 303, 350, 410, 413, 415, 475, 480, 501, 567, 585, 587, 871, 872, 924

Proverbs 27, 238, 336, 479, 744, 922, 968

Psalms 70, 97, 129, 134, 239, 357, 412, 420, 463, 499, 556, 632, 635, 642, 725, 730, 779, 800, 801, 843, 845, 867, 901, 904, 968, 971

Pseudepigrapha 531, 581, 659, 778, 779, 830

Pseudepigraphy 75, 259, 261, 524, 638, 659, 661, 777, 806

Psychology 9, 71, 76, 112, 156, 303, 306, 342, 406, 440, 554, 600, 628, 717, 727, 765, 767-769, 773, 774, 778, 810, 872, 879, 892, 912, 916, 943

Ptolemais 144, 450

Pudens 662

Punishment 18, 25, 37, 53, 59, 97, 112, 204, 207, 215, 217, 292, 311, 312, 376, 383, 406, 424, 427, 516, 517, 520, 530, 532, 533, 539, 548, 554, 594, 595, 720, 781, 786, 797, 798, 814, 818, 864, 950, 951, 956, 965

Purity 18, 19, 58, 105, 153, 155, 158, 165, 175, 214, 215, 218, 226, 231, 237, 307, 310, 325, 336, 339, 363, 371, 397-401, 410, 462, 464, 483, 493, 501, 503, 504, 509-511, 577, 600, 605, 665, 676, 690, 693, 707, 714, 717, 723, 750, 769, 771, 773, 775, 776, 781, 782, 828, 830, 831, 841, 865, 880, 885-887, 917, 924

Putting off 61, 63, 629, 776

Putting on 61, 62, 64, 155, 190, 273, 306, 432, 434, 462, 482, 487, 629, 689, 694, 743, 772, 914, 922, 949, 953

Quartus 173

Qumran, Dead Sea Scrolls 10, 21-23, 26, 28, 34, 75, 76, 96, 112, 149, 175, 177, 190, 199, 214-216, 239, 240, 259, 285, 305, 336, 386, 399, 402, 404, 411, 413, 420, 431, 439, 458, 482, 508, 509, 511, 531, 533, 542, 556, 557, 561, 563, 581, 586, 622-624, 632, 636-638, 641, 642, 660, 663, 664, 666, 725, 729, 730, 744, 749, 750, 776-783, 803, 827, 830, 864, 901, 904, 925, 947, 955, 963, 968, 974, 986

Rabbinic tradition 215, 239, 336, 402, 725

Rabbis 27, 62, 382, 386, 387, 395, 460, 487-490, 505, 530, 589, 594, 615, 637, 638, 640, 655, 719, 725, 744, 803, 813, 814, 816, 925, 927, 964

Reader-response criticism 389, 397

Realized eschatology 21, 73, 150, 151, 167, 175, 240, 241, 254, 258, 274, 354, 382, 394, 445, 559, 793, 868, 935, 990

Reconciliation 61, 65, 72, 80, 84, 92, 94-96, 98, 99, 105, 110, 147, 149, 152, 163, 170, 171, 177, 190, 197, 199, 202-204, 209, 215, 219, 221, 236, 238, 246, 247, 249, 263, 268, 272, 281-284, 291, 292, 307, 309, 313, 339, 355, 371, 393, 397-399, 402, 420, 422, 423, 446, 448, 483, 485, 506, 507, 511, 523, 539, 565, 579, 618, 622, 623, 646, 672, 680, 695-699, 706, 718, 723, 735, 782, 786, 804, 825, 832, 833, 835-837, 846, 858, 862, 867, 876, 882, 893, 897, 905, 916, 947, 958-960, 980, 982, 988, 990

Redeem, Redemption 3, 9, 11, 14, 16, 17, 32, 40, 63-65, 68, 69, 71, 72, 94-97, 102, 104, 105, 109, 111, 112, 127, 128, 148, 163, 181, 190, 192, 194-196, 199, 200, 205, 206, 209, 214, 219, 221, 226, 227, 238, 239, 245-247, 257, 260, 263-265, 267, 268, 272, 273, 283-285, 287, 288, 300, 301, 311-313, 317, 322, 362, 363, 367, 368, 390, 407-409, 411, 412, 416, 420, 421, 434, 436, 437, 461, 492, 523, 526, 565-567, 569, 572, 598, 601, 622, 629, 662, 665, 672, 674, 712, 723, 725, 731, 733, 738, 741, 743, 747, 751, 766, 780, 782, 784-786, 802, 810, 824, 835, 836, 847, 848, 857, 858, 874, 880, 882, 883, 905, 906, 912, 915, 924, 938, 948, 950, 951, 966, 980-982, 984, 988-990

Redeemer 43, 46, 62, 95, 105, 112, 243, 348, 351, 352, 434, 486, 712, 785, 834, 935, 982

Religion 16, 18, 23, 28, 44-46, 52, 54, 65, 75, 101, 134, 157, 161, 163, 173, 210, 211, 219, 223, 230, 232, 234, 238, 243, 246, 250, 251, 273, 274, 279, 324, 326, 338, 351, 353, 354, 358-360, 375, 376, 380, 385, 387, 388, 419-421, 423-426, 436, 463, 492-494, 497, 503, 504, 508, 511-513, 519, 529-531, 533, 542, 548, 557, 565, 570, 583, 592, 610, 611, 615, 618, 619, 622, 623, 625, 628, 668-670, 673, 675-679, 685, 691, 708, 714, 716, 718, 722, 751, 754, 765, 767, 768, 778, 781, 783, 786, 788-793, 795-797, 800, 805, 806, 829, 842-844, 851, 852, 855-858, 867, 869, 884, 887, 894, 895, 899-901, 906, 923, 935, 961, 963, 968, 973, 983, 984, 988

Remarriage 567, 584, 592, 595-600

Remnant 85, 227, 311, 336, 338, 373, 444-446, 764, 780, 782, 800, 803, 860, 863

Repentance 42, 44, 53, 54, 59, 165, 168, 170-172, 174, 176, 215-218, 228, 346, 365, 462, 469, 470, 501, 517, 529-531, 600, 716, 732, 736, 740, 796-799, 801, 803-805, 842, 860, 861, 865, 866, 910, 959

Rescue 96, 143, 220, 313, 314, 472, 493, 540, 541, 720, 723, 736, 774, 842, 858, 864, 866, 867, 950-952, 982

Restoration of Israel 18, 28, 34, 43, 85, 146, 182, 190, 200, 205, 268, 321, 338, 339, 441, 444-446, 474, 491, 501, 503, 511, 534, 542, 644, 678, 764, 783, 785, 796, 799, 800, 802, 804, 819, 837, 850, 862, 947, 951, 953, 991

Restrainer, restraining power 34, 262, 268, 592, 593, 617, 880, 938, 939

Resurrection 11, 12, 17, 26, 27, 29-36, 43, 44, 46, 48-50, 52-55, 57, 61-66, 71, 73-76, 78, 84, 93-96, 99, 102-104, 107-116, 148, 149, 151, 158, 167, 168, 175, 178, 179, 185, 189-197, 201, 202, 204, 208, 209, 219-222, 239, 241, 253, 255-258, 261, 263-269, 273, 275-278, 282, 285, 287, 300-302, 305, 306, 314, 321, 342, 348-350, 352, 353, 355, 358, 360, 371, 381-383, 387, 394, 406-410,

415-417, 429, 432-441, 445, 461, 463-465, 470, 474, 480, 482-486, 489, 490, 492-497, 499, 500, 502, 504, 506, 507, 510, 523, 524-526, 536, 540, 555, 559, 562, 564, 566, 572, 574, 575, 613, 624, 625, 627, 629, 636, 648, 662, 663, 665, 682, 683, 686, 693-695, 700, 702, 712, 713, 716, 717, 719, 723, 735, 736, 743, 766, 767, 772-774, 780, 782, 783, 786, 793, 794, 796, 799, 804-812, 821, 832, 837, 842, 847, 857, 858, 866, 868, 872, 885, 896, 899, 902, 908, 919, 920, 933, 936, 938, 947-949, 951, 957, 958, 960, 971, 974, 977, 981, 982, 986, 989, 990

Resurrection appearances 48, 50, 116, 167, 266, 465, 470, 811, 986

Resurrection body 12, 71, 74-76, 257, 258, 261, 349, 432, 439, 440, 482, 808-812

Resurrection of Christ 11, 31, 113, 167, 178, 191, 204, 208, 219-221, 282, 321, 415, 416, 490, 499, 502, 523, 682, 694, 806, 832, 896, 920, 951, 971, 981

Retribution 53, 206, 236, 238, 282, 364, 530, 728, 764, 968

Revelation 2, 17, 20, 25, 26, 29, 31, 33, 34, 40, 48, 52, 54, 57, 66, 67, 85, 101, 103, 112, 113, 122, 124, 149, 157, 158, 162, 163, 180, 182, 192, 193, 206, 223, 235, 248, 257, 260, 262, 266, 267, 281, 285, 328, 330, 338, 344-346, 348-350, 354, 355, 359, 360, 364, 368, 370, 373, 382, 383, 402, 404, 447, 453, 461, 466, 468, 476, 488, 492, 499, 507, 509, 520, 525, 527, 554, 559, 567, 573, 605, 606, 620, 622-624, 641, 644, 664, 666, 667, 684, 701, 703, 716, 726, 742, 755, 756, 758, 759, 761, 762, 777-780, 782, 786, 789, 808, 809, 811, 832, 835, 836, 864, 904, 943-945, 947, 954, 960, 963, 965, 966-970, 972, 980, 984, 992, 993

Reverence 52, 91, 291-293, 488, 491, 561, 563-565, 569, 596, 715, 779, 916

Revolutionary movements 308, 331, 384, 387, 461, 534, 538, 777, 812, 813, 815, 816, 819

Rewards 28, 58, 132, 135, 166, 170, 183, 268, 286, 292, 296, 321, 324, 390, 398, 516, 517, 519, 520, 530, 544, 545, 608, 693, 781, 819, 820, 829, 832, 870

Rhetoric 38, 39, 132, 179, 191, 212-214, 239, 269, 293, 329, 334, 342, 343, 350, 368, 386, 387, 392, 397, 553, 565, 569, 585, 586, 589, 607, 647, 677, 704, 715, 724, 735, 737, 739, 762, 820-826, 841, 850, 876, 932, 937, 939, 941, 965, 969

Rhetorical criticism 192, 214, 239, 329, 334, 392, 396, 397, 553, 647, 704, 739, 821-826, 841, 932, 936, 937

Rich, riches 13, 65, 66, 71, 144, 156, 161, 195, 205, 209, 246, 248, 270, 274, 275, 294, 297, 299, 300, 312, 324, 340, 348, 349, 365, 368, 371, 372, 374, 402, 472, 497, 503, 504, 527, 569, 571, 572, 579, 582, 601, 602, 611, 618, 622, 655, 657, 684, 706, 722, 735, 745, 826, 827, 850, 864, 889, 898, 913, 935, 948, 973, 979, 991, 992

Right hand of God 32, 41, 97, 125, 127, 257, 275-277, 382, 408, 437, 809, 947

Righteousness 2, 3, 6-9, 16, 28, 49, 50, 58, 64, 94, 102, 110, 112, 138, 157, 161-163, 169, 171, 182, 186, 190, 193, 194, 196, 197, 205-207, 219, 224, 227, 237, 247, 249, 270, 275, 281-284, 286-288, 301, 312, 316, 331, 332, 338, 349, 359, 360, 363-365, 368, 371, 390, 399, 401, 402, 411, 432, 443, 458, 459, 461, 465, 473, 483, 484, 491, 497, 500, 504, 506, 508-510, 517-521, 523, 529, 530, 537, 540-542, 555, 556, 576, 598, 620, 621, 629, 639-641, 644, 646, 647, 649-652, 672-678, 682, 690, 691, 696, 711, 725, 742, 755, 759, 772, 773, 777, 778, 780-782, 800, 802, 819, 822, 827-837, 843, 844, 846, 848, 850, 859, 861, 863-865, 879, 880, 882, 903, 908, 909, 910, 912, 914, 916, 918, 947, 950, 952, 953, 955, 957, 971, 972, 974, 976-978, 991, 993

Righteousness of God 6, 8, 50, 94, 190, 194, 197, 205, 206, 275, 281, 283, 284, 286, 287, 360, 363, 364, 368, 401, 402, 491, 517, 519-521, 523, 541, 542, 646, 652, 676-678, 690, 691, 778, 827-830, 832-837, 843, 850, 880, 952, 978, 993

Rising with Christ 65, 125, 150, 153, 195, 197, 209, 218-220, 222, 268, 278, 383, 402, 431, 482, 555, 624, 625, 629, 810, 812, 910, 916

Ritual purity 19, 175, 215, 307, 400, 509, 781

Roman Christianity 123, 235, 652, 850, 851, 853-855, 917

Roman citizenship 16, 139-142, 252, 334, 381, 456, 472, 547, 549, 612, 619, 681, 682, 685, 687, 711, 718, 720, 821, 826, 884, 927

Roman Empire 23-25, 34, 66, 140, 197, 211, 235, 249, 250, 360, 394, 425, 426, 503, 545, 546, 550, 580, 588, 592, 593, 612, 619, 707, 719, 723, 789, 795, 796, 821, 829, 855, 887, 888, 928, 932, 945, 946, 979

Roman political system 718, 719

Roman religion 420, 786, 789-791, 793, 795, 851, 852, 855, 858, 983, 988

Romans 6-15, 50, 78, 79, 100-115, 141-143, 151, 153-156, 179-182, 192-196, 199-209, 218-222, 226-229, 257, 258, 261-268, 279-284, 285, 291, 300, 301, 313-316, 335-347, 352, 363, 364, 397-403, 407, 409, 415-417, 426, 436-438, 441-446, 462, 477-479, 501, 517-523, 529-542, 589, 601, 602, 626-629, 642-644, 646, 647, 696, 697, 731-736, 757-759, 762, 797-806, 830-836, 838-850, 865, 866, 871, 874-882, 896, 897, 902-906, 912-917, 930, 956-958, 980, 990-993

Rome 6, 8, 9, 18, 24, 25, 27, 29, 36, 47, 56, 66, 83, 84, 86, 87, 89, 91, 116, 118-123, 127, 128, 140-142, 144, 148, 152, 172, 173, 175, 179, 181, 186, 211, 214, 219, 222, 233-235, 241, 244, 246, 249, 262, 295, 297, 314, 324, 350, 351, 368, 385, 404, 409, 448-451, 455, 465, 470, 472, 474, 515, 533, 534, 540, 542, 546, 548-550, 587-589, 592-594, 609, 612, 641, 652, 654, 655, 659, 661, 662, 666, 667, 679, 680, 682, 685-688, 690-692, 703, 705, 707, 709-711, 719-722, 752, 753, 775, 786, 787, 789-791, 800, 813-815, 817, 818, 838-840, 842, 849-855, 858, 866, 880-883, 885, 888, 892, 906, 916, 917, 926, 933, 945, 946, 948, 973, 983

Rufus 226, 250, 814, 854, 882

Ruler of Synagogue 164, 548, 889

Runner 536, 819

Sabbath 5, 149, 212, 232, 233, 327, 335, 336, 384, 402-404, 471, 483, 488, 501, 510, 531-534, 538, 539, 543, 570, 574, 744, 778, 783, 797, 852, 976, 977, 984-986

Sacrifice 20, 41, 72, 74, 78, 96, 110, 113, 129, 143, 145, 153-155, 166, 200, 203-210, 234, 247, 250, 264, 269-271, 279, 282, 283, 286, 296, 297, 300, 306, 309, 312-315, 331, 349, 380, 414, 422, 424, 425, 426, 437, 462, 463, 472, 484, 569, 570, 572-575, 577, 586, 596, 634, 684, 686, 689, 696, 698, 707, 714, 750, 769, 778, 783, 786—796, 814, 816, 823, 825, 832, 845, 851, 856-858, 880, 887, 904, 912, 917, 923, 924, 952, 955, 971, 977, 983, 984, 992

Sadducees 402, 504, 549, 719, 777, 807

Salamis 350, 450

Salvation 6, 8, 11, 14, 17, 27, 31-33, 39-45, 51, 61, 62, 65, 68, 71, 84, 85, 92-94, 97-99, 102, 103, 109-114, 126, 138, 139, 145-147, 150, 163, 167, 181, 182, 192, 193, 195, 201, 202, 205-207, 209, 223, 224, 227-230, 232, 237, 239, 246, 247, 256, 257, 259, 263, 264, 268-270, 272, 278, 280, 281, 283, 285-289, 293, 294, 299-301, 310, 311, 321, 323, 330-332, 337, 338, 348, 350, 352, 358, 360, 361, 363-365, 367, 369, 371-373, 381, 382, 390, 396, 397, 399, 401, 411, 415, 416, 420, 421, 435-437, 441, 443-446, 450, 458, 460, 462, 463, 469, 471, 473, 474, 483-490, 492, 494-496, 500, 501, 508, 509, 516-521, 529-532, 539-541, 554, 556-559, 572, 575, 578, 591, 594, 601, 602, 605, 614, 616, 617, 619-622, 624, 625, 628, 629, 634, 641, 643, 644, 651, 665, 671-673, 675, 676, 689, 691, 692, 696-698, 700, 712, 713, 723, 724, 730, 731, 735, 736, 743, 744, 767, 768, 770-774, 778, 779,

783, 785, 786, 792, 793, 796, 798-802, 804-806, 810, 815, 818-820, 826-837, 844, 847, 849, 858-862, 866-869, 871, 872, 877, 878, 880-883, 886, 890, 900, 906-908, 914, 917, 936, 948, 950, 952, 954, 956-960, 969-971, 973, 975-978, 982, 984, 988, 992
Salvation History 14, 17, 31, 138, 145, 182, 195, 224, 232, 237, 323, 332, 367, 420, 500, 519, 521, 539, 619, 621, 624, 629, 665, 671, 672, 736, 783, 800, 802, 805, 818, 970, 975-978
Sanctification 40, 41, 43, 45, 108, 194, 227, 241, 292, 316, 319, 368, 371, 373, 397-401, 412, 437, 518, 627, 641, 701, 713, 770, 776, 834, 860, 871, 880, 907, 910, 913, 915, 916
Sanctuary 324, 784, 789, 796, 924, 925, 947, 951
Sanders, E. P. 6, 7, 9, 18, 41-43, 45, 92, 93, 95, 144, 147, 153, 183, 197, 213, 286, 291, 339, 355, 368, 388, 393, 397, 421-423, 435, 436, 443, 446, 497, 503, 509-511, 518, 519, 521-523, 531, 532, 542, 553, 560, 613, 614, 616-619, 652, 671-673, 675, 679, 691, 728, 734, 746, 764, 765, 778, 781, 783, 797, 804, 805, 827, 837, 842, 843, 850, 877, 878, 880, 881, 890, 925, 957, 961, 976-978, 982
Sanhedrin 119, 141, 142, 215, 463, 472, 473, 505, 511, 718, 719, 799, 821
Sarah 1, 5, 8, 180, 182, 183, 333, 505, 506, 516, 592, 636, 640, 896
Satan 21-23, 28-30, 32-34, 42, 44, 50, 57, 58, 105, 131, 155, 168, 170, 186, 210, 211, 216, 217, 236-238, 247, 261, 262, 265, 274, 304, 378-382, 447, 450, 516, 555-557, 568, 582, 583, 593, 600, 646, 652, 653, 688, 693, 723, 724, 731, 733, 748, 751, 752, 771, 785, 861-867, 872, 876, 878, 880, 921, 952, 953, 956, 964, 965, 980, 982, 991, 993
Savior 32, 80, 97-100, 102, 115, 191, 231, 285, 290, 312, 359, 369, 371, 373, 377, 378, 406, 416, 432, 507, 531, 557, 569, 577, 604, 694, 782, 786, 792, 794, 808, 858-862, 867-869, 879, 957, 959, 970
Saying of Jesus 102, 265, 351, 464, 474-480, 482, 483, 485-491, 498, 503, 524, 584, 736, 761, 776, 909, 918, 943, 944, 969
Scandal 113, 193, 201, 500, 918, 919, 926
School of Tyrannus 251
Schoolmaster, Pedagogue 232, 539, 694
Schweitzer, A. 27, 34, 35, 78, 82, 93, 99, 253, 254, 269, 413, 434-436, 493, 494, 496, 503, 522, 523, 525, 526, 613, 616, 619, 624, 625, 674, 675, 677, 679, 779, 827, 837
Scourging 140, 215, 549, 682, 753
Scribe 21, 27, 215, 244, 471, 514, 551, 578, 606, 633, 701, 709, 719, 925, 928-931, 971
Scripture 2, 9, 15, 18, 65, 89-91, 109, 115, 129, 134, 136, 138, 178, 182, 187, 191, 204, 208, 209, 224, 272, 287, 320, 329-332, 352, 353, 368, 371, 377, 381, 384, 390, 397, 410, 415, 434, 441, 442, 445, 446, 469, 470, 471, 488, 489, 499, 504-506, 532, 542, 591, 592, 630, 633-642, 644, 655, 663, 669, 678, 691, 694, 703, 726, 727, 730, 731, 739, 741-743, 755, 761, 762, 764, 765, 768, 777, 779, 780, 799, 800, 803, 805, 842, 848-850, 858, 868, 878, 887, 893, 895, 908, 909, 911, 934, 960, 974, 985
Scythian 64
Sea travel 945, 946
Seed 2-4, 7-9, 17, 18, 49, 75, 109, 180-182, 215, 232, 270, 296, 298-300, 304, 332, 368, 394, 443, 505, 506, 556, 632, 685, 714, 802, 843, 866, 904, 906
Seed of Abraham 8, 17, 18, 49, 232, 300, 368, 906
Seleucia 36, 450
Self-control, discipline 32, 72, 166, 213, 273, 316, 318, 319, 401, 693, 758, 760, 830, 865, 898, 967
Seneca 19, 35, 77, 78, 335, 430, 717, 718, 721, 722, 854, 921
Septuagint, LXX 3, 4, 5, 6, 12, 16, 20, 22, 42, 45, 46, 68, 69, 73, 76, 98, 106, 109, 124, 138, 169, 170, 181, 187, 199, 209, 212, 226, 227, 239, 271, 277-280, 282-284, 300, 302, 304, 305, 310, 312, 318-322, 335, 348, 369, 375, 377, 379, 381, 384, 386, 398, 405-407, 414, 420, 424, 425, 459, 509, 513, 514, 536, 537, 554, 563, 585, 586, 595, 597, 601, 628, 630, 632-635, 640, 641, 699, 728, 730, 748, 749, 754, 758, 763, 766, 779, 797, 804, 828-830, 856, 862, 863, 867, 870, 872, 875, 901, 904, 918, 921, 924, 925, 948, 949, 953, 966, 979, 986
Sergius Paulus 120, 721
Servant 20, 64, 98, 104, 106, 107, 109, 113, 134, 137, 170, 172, 191, 208, 242, 247, 293, 314, 315, 321, 330, 373, 378, 422, 427, 431, 445, 478, 484, 491, 514, 543, 544, 551, 560, 589, 608, 635, 640, 645, 657, 708, 712, 713, 724, 725, 735, 737, 741, 742, 745, 754, 762, 774, 798, 799, 802, 829, 843, 867, 869-871, 882, 883, 901, 914, 916, 917, 957, 962
Servant of the Lord/Yahweh 64, 113, 208, 321, 484, 543, 829, 870, 871
Servants 23, 25, 58, 83, 134, 135, 155, 171, 173, 183, 210, 236, 237, 265, 277, 292, 361, 379, 417, 516, 543, 560, 644-646, 649-653, 662, 671, 714, 724, 748, 750, 763, 869, 870, 881, 965, 969
Service 10, 42, 64, 81, 83, 98, 118, 129-135, 137, 140, 142, 143, 151, 186-188, 192, 202, 205, 219, 221, 234, 247, 251, 267, 271, 274, 286, 291-293, 299, 300, 313, 341-345, 347, 378, 391, 400, 407, 418, 431, 450, 475, 484, 485, 487, 490, 501, 502, 517, 545, 567, 586, 596, 601-604, 608, 634, 658, 678, 686, 688, 704, 705, 717, 722, 724, 731, 732, 741, 742, 747, 748, 751, 768, 773, 774, 785, 808, 819, 831, 835, 851, 857, 863, 869, 870, 873, 907, 911, 913, 914, 916, 953, 966, 975, 976, 984-989
Sexual ethics 217, 275, 379, 401, 414, 592, 600, 693, 776, 871, 875, 933, 967
Sexual immorality 57, 173, 217, 246, 247, 363, 426, 471, 535, 568, 689, 771, 772, 871, 936
Sexuality 10, 57, 75, 217, 256, 267, 275, 303, 379, 401, 414, 426, 510, 535, 567, 592, 599, 600, 684, 693, 772, 776, 844, 871-874, 915, 933
Shalom 98, 391, 739, 866, 947
Shame 77, 155, 216, 298, 406, 416, 585, 633, 746, 949, 974
Shema 309, 356, 424, 425, 565, 725, 780, 985
Sheol 32, 381
Ships 472, 684, 792, 875, 946
Sicarii 817-819
Sidon 451
Sign prophets 817-819
Signs 30, 34, 49, 51, 55, 58, 87, 169, 175, 211, 215, 231, 236, 289, 296, 367, 380, 381, 389, 405, 409, 469, 486, 493, 605-607, 645, 647, 683, 685, 735, 789-791, 796, 818, 851, 865, 875-877, 889, 919, 930, 937, 988, 992
Silas 124, 140, 183, 185-188, 369, 547-549, 647, 658, 684, 687, 719, 726, 752, 932, 934, 935
Silvanus 49, 183, 186, 188, 429, 447, 476, 484, 647, 680, 684, 687, 932
Sin 9, 10, 12, 13, 15, 17, 18, 37, 41, 45, 50, 59, 60-64, 71-73, 99, 110-112, 148, 155, 160, 166, 178, 189, 190, 193, 196, 205-208, 210, 211, 219-221, 228, 230, 236, 237, 246, 259, 262, 265, 271, 273, 279-283, 285, 287, 290, 292, 293, 303-306, 313, 314, 316, 319, 331, 348, 360, 363, 364, 373, 378, 379, 399, 401, 406, 409-411, 424-426, 432, 460, 476, 494, 517, 518, 536-541, 543, 553-556, 572, 576, 577, 592, 600, 621, 628, 629, 646, 672, 674-676, 690, 691, 696-698, 701, 716, 723, 730, 732, 744, 747, 751, 752, 754, 765, 768, 770-776, 781, 782, 785, 786, 797-799, 801, 802, 804, 806, 810, 832, 834-836, 842-847, 856, 858, 859, 861, 862, 866, 868, 871, 872, 874, 877, 878, 879-882, 885, 904, 907, 910, 915, 916, 918, 927, 946, 948, 950, 952, 954, 957, 958, 969, 975-978, 980, 982, 989, 991-993
Sinai 22, 124, 129, 169, 178, 180, 181, 232, 333, 407, 529, 533-535, 538, 539, 541, 543, 620, 621, 672, 719, 947, 950
Sinews 377
Sinners 13, 28, 37, 41, 62, 76, 93, 99, 111, 158, 206, 207, 215, 224, 228, 229, 280-283, 285-287, 289, 307, 312, 313, 318, 331, 336, 344, 349, 364, 365, 459, 483, 484, 487, 489, 490, 492, 496, 497, 501, 502, 510, 520, 529, 600-602, 696, 697, 702, 730, 764,

785, 827, 829, 831-834, 836, 858-862, 877-881, 910, 954, 958, 991
Slander 19, 190, 413, 647, 732, 862, 863, 914, 939, 967, 974
Slave 4, 5, 18, 61, 64, 83-85, 97, 104, 133, 140-142, 166, 169, 173, 183, 187, 196, 205, 210, 211, 233, 235, 239, 267, 271, 273, 274, 277, 292, 293, 304, 313-316, 323, 325, 329, 332, 333, 360, 385, 393, 399, 404, 417-419, 427, 471, 536, 539, 549, 560, 579, 587-589, 592, 662, 665, 680, 692, 703-706, 710, 712, 718, 721-723, 739, 741, 753, 760, 771-774, 784, 785, 793, 794, 817, 827, 831, 838, 851, 853, 865, 869-871, 874, 877-883, 887-889, 893, 922, 926, 927, 950, 962
Slavery 5, 6, 16, 17, 61, 141, 148, 149, 208, 230, 273-275, 293, 313, 314, 316, 322, 323, 332, 333, 358, 390, 399, 403, 419, 424, 492, 497, 539, 569, 588, 589, 703, 705, 706, 723, 741, 745, 772, 774, 784, 785, 824, 842, 853, 869, 871, 880-883, 888, 889, 900, 926
Slaves of righteousness 880
Sleep 382, 432, 439, 440, 556, 958, 986, 989
Social institutions 273, 883, 887
Social setting 9, 131, 133, 179, 188, 191, 310, 394, 395, 417, 419, 429, 501, 571, 575, 579, 592, 608, 618, 619, 648, 658, 662, 678, 688, 691, 826, 827, 839, 881, 883, 890, 891, 899, 900, 917, 932, 935, 976
Social stratification 274, 888, 889
Sociology 18, 125, 163, 173, 267, 394, 397, 611, 619, 678, 705, 706, 754, 883, 890, 891, 893, 894, 896, 899, 900, 977
Soldiers 83, 84, 383, 549, 550, 706, 708, 709, 721, 752, 793, 817, 946, 950, 952, 953
Solomon 75, 97, 105, 124, 232, 352, 357, 358, 387, 431, 534, 581, 583, 666, 744, 745, 796, 845, 901, 904, 968, 970, 972, 979
Son from heaven 952
Son of David 109, 256, 258, 782, 842
Son of God 8, 16-18, 69, 92, 99-103, 107, 109, 115, 191, 220, 257, 258, 278, 282, 289, 303, 331, 357, 358, 368, 386, 421, 479, 486, 491, 492, 495, 502, 560, 569, 676, 682, 725, 778, 782, 794, 802, 824, 842, 858, 868, 879, 896, 900-908, 910, 911, 934, 969, 982
Son of man 12, 23, 98, 110, 111, 114, 259, 265, 491, 676, 746, 778, 948, 971, 973, 986
Songs 18, 70, 71, 129, 192, 239, 324, 372, 381, 412, 419, 420, 462, 543, 557, 560, 778, 783, 800, 818, 915, 944, 947, 986, 988, 990
Sons of Abraham 3, 5, 287, 333, 822
Sons of God 9, 15-18, 20, 21, 332, 366, 368, 507, 678, 751, 805, 824, 896, 900, 901, 903, 905, 906, 980
Sonship 8, 15-18, 62, 94, 105, 180, 181, 196, 258, 276, 278, 290, 293, 301, 303, 323, 331, 357, 358, 368, 408, 412, 417, 479, 505, 559, 732, 784, 786, 802, 847, 882, 896, 900-907, 916
Sophia 38, 343, 351, 352, 967, 969, 970
Sorrow 42, 168, 171, 292, 462, 479, 764, 803, 968
Sosthenes 164, 167, 188, 548, 719
Soul sleep 432, 440
South Galatia 121, 325, 327, 328, 455
Sowing 298, 299, 689, 810
Spain 116, 118, 145, 448, 451, 455, 472, 477, 609, 612, 654, 661, 680, 687, 710, 800, 839, 840, 851, 854
Spirit (human) 28, 71, 72, 73, 303, 449, 765, 767-770, 824
Spirit of adoption 17, 479, 732
Spirit of Christ 108, 278, 404, 406-408, 410, 434, 437, 493, 634, 847, 905, 910
Spirit of God 31, 32, 108, 263, 271, 278, 288, 343, 361, 404, 405, 407, 411, 462, 527, 576, 694, 757, 759, 766, 771, 849, 906-911, 913, 924, 981
Spirits 17, 21, 23, 28, 36, 47, 148, 203, 205, 209, 210, 211, 229-232, 235, 246, 252, 262, 293, 341-343, 345, 380, 405, 421, 539, 580-583, 603, 627, 663, 747, 751, 752, 760, 778, 780, 781, 794, 795, 863-866, 877, 942, 951, 969, 980-983, 987, 988
Spiritual body 12, 71, 73-75, 112, 167, 350, 408, 432, 507, 766, 808
Spiritual drink 569
Spiritual food 569, 570
Spiritual songs 70, 71, 129, 192, 239, 419, 420, 560, 944, 990
Spirituality 58, 165, 166, 196, 319, 342, 347, 401, 407, 412, 430, 517, 518, 527, 629, 694, 701, 725-727, 734, 758, 774, 906-916, 940, 942, 964, 966
Star deities 229, 231, 232, 581, 950
Stephanas 133, 135, 658, 881
Stoicism 52, 77, 213, 272, 356, 386, 387, 395, 413, 418, 586, 588, 625, 636, 682, 714-718, 795, 827, 830, 921, 922, 939, 944, 963, 969, 972, 979
Stone of stumbling 848
Strong and weak 41, 59, 154, 156, 275, 314, 316, 395, 396, 425, 426, 471, 536, 577, 775, 840, 850, 855, 889, 916, 919
Structuralism 389, 396, 960
Stumbling Block 8, 166, 240, 296, 315, 425, 431, 443, 446, 655, 735, 830, 843, 848, 917-919, 926, 956
Suffering 19, 20, 37, 41, 50, 97, 113, 125, 140, 165, 166, 168-172, 174, 175, 178, 179, 182, 191, 193, 196, 197, 201-203, 206, 208, 209, 217, 219, 221, 222, 246, 281, 294, 321, 332, 349, 350, 358, 362, 363, 373, 378, 381, 382, 390, 407, 416, 417, 429, 430, 431, 437, 479, 484-487, 492, 499, 502, 511, 512, 524, 607, 624, 625, 635, 640, 641, 645, 662, 711, 712, 724, 733, 735, 753, 754, 763, 793, 808, 810, 825, 827, 830, 846, 847, 854, 866, 870, 871, 875, 876, 889, 895, 896, 908, 909, 911, 916, 919, 920, 921, 926, 932, 933, 938, 939, 952, 953, 956, 965, 972, 980, 992
Suffering Servant 113, 191, 208, 635, 640
Sufficiency 164, 169, 178, 213, 274, 317, 393, 501, 502, 625, 646, 717, 827, 843, 933, 966
Super-apostles 49, 50, 516, 650, 652, 653, 964, 965
Symposium 571
Synagogue 24, 38, 47, 56, 67, 83, 84, 124, 135, 139, 164, 173, 211-213, 215, 251, 327, 337, 357, 365, 376, 384, 417, 421, 470, 471, 548, 585, 589, 590, 592, 604, 610, 621, 635, 660, 681, 684, 688, 718, 719, 725, 738, 838-840, 849, 851-853, 868, 884, 886, 887, 889, 923, 934, 984, 985-987, 990
Syncretism 149, 232, 786, 884, 963
Syntyche 603, 626, 708
Syria 23, 25, 46, 66, 117, 119, 121-123, 211, 328, 330, 351, 383, 384, 447, 449, 450, 453-455, 467, 470, 504, 547, 609, 638, 648-651, 683, 684, 687, 721, 756, 786, 813, 814, 817, 851, 883, 931
Syrian Antioch 66, 185, 249, 449, 725, 813
Table fellowship 19, 24, 58, 307, 308, 314, 328, 331, 454, 457, 469, 487, 489, 501, 510, 579, 648, 684, 702, 849, 892, 897, 898
Table of demons 166, 210
Table of the Lord 568, 570, 579, 689
Talmud 382, 402, 505, 506, 511, 530, 542, 581, 637, 655, 719, 816, 974
Tannaitic Period 336
Targum 239, 635, 663, 779, 856
Tarsus 24, 37, 66, 119-121, 140, 185, 186, 386, 450, 455, 461, 464, 465, 474, 504, 549, 585, 638, 658, 681-683, 714, 715, 721, 725, 729, 752, 755, 793, 794, 820, 867, 884, 922, 926
Taxes 140, 142, 144, 212, 292, 297, 300, 375, 383, 463, 472, 501, 707, 748, 814-816, 826, 838, 849, 870
Teacher 36, 39, 44, 52, 54, 58, 66, 94, 101, 129, 135, 149, 150, 152, 153, 155, 185-188, 213, 295, 329, 340, 343-345, 347, 351, 360, 377, 387, 392, 393, 465, 488-490, 493-495, 498, 504, 539, 578, 589-591, 603-605, 623, 637, 641, 652, 654, 656, 659, 660, 663, 665, 682, 715, 719, 726, 739, 756, 777, 778, 780-782, 821, 824, 825, 841, 864, 869, 874, 876, 881, 884, 888, 893, 926, 962, 969, 971
Teacher of Righteousness 641, 777, 778, 780-782
Teaching of Jesus 57, 78, 145, 215, 220, 276, 356, 357, 473, 476478, 480, 484, 485, 487, 488, 492, 493, 495, 496, 498, 500-503, 526, 543, 668, 674, 730, 761, 775, 917-919, 923, 945, 975
Temple 21, 28, 31, 32, 34, 67, 77, 80, 81, 113, 119, 124, 127, 128, 131, 134, 144, 147, 159, 165, 166,

170, 173, 178, 189, 208, 211, 212, 215, 231, 235, 239, 249-251, 282, 283, 297, 300, 307, 309, 324, 326, 336, 339, 348, 353, 363, 384, 385, 402, 404, 410, 411, 417, 418, 425, 426, 434, 435, 461, 463, 472-474, 480, 482, 484, 485, 490, 498, 504, 514, 529, 532, 534, 535, 547, 549, 577, 581, 582, 592, 593, 610, 619, 634, 666, 685-687, 689, 693, 698, 711, 718, 720, 725, 744, 750-752, 764, 776, 777-779, 781-783, 789, 791-800, 802, 805, 813-818, 826, 850-853, 856, 857, 863, 864, 872, 883, 915, 917, 923-925, 948, 949, 951, 952, 984, 985

Temple cult 211, 282, 283

Temple of God 34, 127, 165, 178, 480, 482, 535, 593, 693, 814, 952, 984

Temple tax 144, 212, 297, 463, 826

Tentmaking 39, 49, 55, 135, 166, 295, 300, 395, 397, 430, 611, 618, 681, 881, 884, 891, 897, 919, 921, 925-927, 933, 934, 939

Tertius 188, 552, 680

Testimonia 779

Testimony 70, 89, 114, 154, 190, 204, 212, 262, 289, 338, 406, 485, 555, 654, 683, 692, 708, 735, 854, 875, 894, 895, 928, 931, 944, 974, 975

Testimony book 944

Textual criticism 244, 590, 633, 660, 701, 842, 927-929, 932

Thanksgiving 2, 6, 64, 68-71, 110, 145, 148, 150, 155, 164, 167, 169, 207, 239, 295, 297-300, 329, 348, 370, 372, 374, 391, 398, 551-553, 558, 560, 570, 573, 574, 576, 578, 583, 603, 627, 665, 685, 686, 703, 705-707, 709, 725, 727-731, 734, 738-740, 774, 830, 844, 861, 870, 912, 914-916, 932, 933, 936, 937, 940, 950, 978, 987, 990

Theology of the cross 19, 38, 192-197, 204, 205, 209, 423, 488, 489, 494, 737, 866, 895, 958

Theophany 14, 159, 265, 360

Thessalonians 53, 54, 126, 141, 215-218, 253-268, 272, 274, 346, 363, 364, 394, 398-402, 428-431, 475-477, 481, 490, 491, 534, 535, 567, 603-608, 655-658, 736, 760-762, 770, 801, 803, 807, 808, 810, 827, 865, 890, 897, 932-939, 974, 980, 987

Thessalonica 57, 86, 87, 91, 117-119, 121, 124, 126, 144, 186, 187, 217, 256, 261, 265, 296, 297, 346, 369, 370, 394, 429, 447, 449, 450, 455, 476, 547, 548, 550, 551, 603, 610, 655, 684, 685, 687, 688, 719, 737, 760, 817, 865, 871, 883, 886, 890, 926, 932-936, 939, 945

Theudas 26, 816

This age 27-29, 31, 32, 38, 69, 165, 170, 189, 210, 256, 261, 262, 322, 352, 359, 383, 407, 411, 416, 507, 593, 629, 700, 731, 747-749, 751, 773, 781, 783, 821, 847, 862, 864, 865, 948, 949, 956, 969, 979-981

Thorn in the flesh 20, 22, 172, 217, 303, 373, 379, 381, 382, 686, 724, 768, 865, 920, 964

Tiberius 24, 25, 84, 233, 234, 719, 722, 814-817, 853

Timothy, Letters to 10, 21, 44, 110, 158, 215-217, 252, 341, 353, 414, 590-592, 602-606, 623, 659, 661-666, 757, 826, 880, 930, 962, 988

Timothy (person) 136, 139, 176, 186-188, 341, 447-449, 602-606, 659, 661-666, 737, 757, 859, 937, 962, 974, 975

Titus, Letter to 44, 63, 64, 401, 418, 659, 661-663, 665, 666, 867-869, 922, 962

Titus (person) 36, 44, 136, 139, 168, 171, 176, 177, 186-188, 298, 337, 447, 448, 468, 469, 603-606, 648, 649, 655, 659, 661-663, 665, 666

Tongue 21, 49, 69, 166, 175, 195, 251, 325, 341-347, 386, 412, 437, 438, 458, 536, 603, 622, 625, 628, 634, 731, 733, 734, 740, 758, 759, 762, 768, 771, 783, 887, 889, 916, 939-943, 958, 967, 990

Torah 2, 4, 27, 103, 113, 161, 182, 200, 212, 302, 308, 319, 336-339, 355, 383, 387, 402, 410, 446, 461, 463, 491, 501, 503, 504, 508-512, 535, 542, 543, 594, 655, 672, 718, 719, 744, 750, 755, 778, 794, 816, 817, 852, 892, 900, 903, 905, 923, 927, 950, 951, 969, 971, 973, 975, 978, 984

Tosefta 402

Tradition 3-5, 8, 10, 14, 17, 18, 21-23, 25, 27, 29, 30, 32, 34-38, 42, 46, 47, 55, 57, 59, 62, 64, 66, 77, 86, 88, 91, 93-97, 101, 102, 110, 111, 116, 120-122, 142, 148, 149, 151, 158, 159, 165, 167, 174, 175, 178-180, 185, 186, 191, 193-195, 198, 201-203, 209, 223, 225, 235, 239, 241, 242, 244, 251, 252, 262, 266, 268, 269, 273, 276, 282, 283, 292, 306-308, 321, 330, 336, 337, 350, 351, 353, 359, 368, 369, 371, 384, 387, 388, 390, 391, 396, 402, 412, 414, 420, 428, 430, 431, 437, 445, 446, 451, 452, 454, 460, 461, 464, 473-477, 479, 480, 482, 484-492, 498, 499, 501-503, 505-508, 510, 515, 516, 520, 521, 563, 565, 567, 569-574, 578, 583, 590, 595, 597-599, 604, 621, 624, 632, 633, 635, 637, 640, 652, 658-661, 663-666, 670, 676, 678, 682, 687, 690-692, 694, 702, 703, 709, 712, 714, 716, 717, 719, 725, 730, 736-738, 743-748, 762-764, 778, 780, 781, 796-804, 806, 812, 815, 816, 820-822, 828, 829, 833, 834, 837, 842, 854, 855, 856, 857, 864, 867, 868, 875, 886, 887, 895, 898, 899, 900, 902-905, 911, 917, 918, 921, 922-925, 928-931, 939, 943-945, 949, 950, 952, 963, 965, 967-972, 980, 981, 986, 987, 990

Transformation 14, 28-30, 32-34, 62, 92, 94, 99, 141, 158, 160, 162, 163, 189, 253, 257, 264, 276, 282, 382, 385, 390, 396, 400, 410, 417, 437, 440, 483, 501, 503, 507, 520, 521, 527, 624, 676, 700, 750, 766, 773, 808, 812, 836, 868, 889, 894-896, 958

Travel 6, 66, 67, 116-121, 123, 139, 167, 168, 391, 446, 448-451, 454, 455, 474, 552, 609, 612, 618, 710, 756, 841, 842, 858, 883, 889, 933, 945, 946

Travel plans 6, 117, 167, 168, 391, 446, 448, 450, 474, 552, 841

Trial, Legal 52, 119, 121-123, 140, 141, 451, 472, 473, 546-550, 686, 687, 709, 719, 721, 722, 753, 835, 854, 855, 972

Trials 18, 19, 41, 45, 50, 55, 117, 193, 221, 294, 301, 318, 357, 362, 379-381, 511, 547, 549, 645, 754, 763, 877, 921, 926, 967

Tribal deities 232

Tribulation 26, 29, 41, 50, 429

Tribune 472, 549, 720, 817

Trinitarian 68, 108, 113, 278, 342, 349, 366, 367, 421, 565, 626, 907, 908, 912, 988

Trinity 103, 115, 141, 146, 147, 265, 339, 366-368, 375, 377, 388, 446, 463, 515, 542, 652, 737, 805, 812, 821, 833, 850, 925, 953

Triumph, victory 8, 19, 34, 41, 44, 50, 71, 92, 94, 104, 115, 139, 149, 152, 167, 197, 203, 205, 209, 211, 221, 225, 232, 238, 239, 247, 254, 259, 268, 272, 274, 275, 277, 278, 289, 313, 316, 362, 369, 371, 381, 385, 396, 409, 411, 412, 416, 422, 432, 469, 502, 512, 520, 536, 548, 554, 555, 564, 567, 568, 582, 583, 594, 624, 627, 629, 645, 647, 676, 677, 681, 698, 699, 711, 723-725, 737, 739, 746, 749, 750-752, 754, 764, 767, 774, 781, 782, 786, 789, 793, 809, 819, 825, 829, 835, 837, 847, 862, 864, 866, 867, 868, 896, 921, 925, 946-954, 958-960, 981, 982, 984, 988

Triumphal procession 21, 169, 681, 750, 919, 948, 949, 951, 952

Triumphalism 50, 203, 681, 953, 988

Troas 88, 118, 119, 144, 168, 176, 186, 448-450, 455, 570, 661, 662, 684, 688, 708, 817, 986

Trophimus 183, 549, 661, 662

Trumpet 22, 952

Truth 3, 8, 11, 13, 28, 32, 44, 64, 90, 93, 108, 122, 128-130, 139, 148, 150, 154, 155, 170, 179, 191, 204, 213, 214, 236, 247, 257, 272, 275, 285-287, 289, 290, 295, 296, 308, 312, 314, 316, 317, 319, 323, 324, 328-332, 334, 351, 362, 370, 371, 390, 392, 394, 396, 397, 399, 401, 404, 408, 409, 433, 439, 445, 453, 469, 489-491, 544, 556, 606, 608, 620, 621, 623, 639, 642, 648, 663, 684, 691-693, 695, 706, 743, 770, 772, 779-781, 785, 810, 811, 824, 832, 836, 841, 843, 856, 858-861, 865, 872, 876, 878-880, 892, 894-896, 909, 914, 920, 945, 949, 954, 955, 957, 962, 969, 974, 975, 984

Tryphaena 603
Tryphosa 603
Tübingen School 666-669, 674, 678, 679
Two Ways 31, 47, 122, 336, 408, 771, 781, 785, 922, 956, 957
Tychicus 87, 183, 187, 188, 242, 244, 290, 662, 704, 870
Typology 11, 16, 17, 110, 111, 114, 283, 391, 427, 482, 621, 640, 780, 894, 951
Tyre 144, 262, 450, 726, 756, 946
Uncircumcision 7, 64, 85, 139, 148, 189, 190, 221, 287, 300, 308, 312, 336-338, 436, 441, 468, 469, 536, 540, 541, 543, 629, 648, 951
Unclean 41, 47, 113, 127, 308, 336, 400, 414, 477, 533, 543, 775, 776, 794, 864, 898, 917
Under his feet 111, 236, 278, 359, 627, 904, 948
Under the Law 98, 103, 104, 109, 158, 161, 230, 232, 271, 314, 317, 323, 332-334, 403, 471, 498, 501, 504, 508, 509, 536, 543, 824, 905, 951
Unfaithfulness 206, 207, 281, 335, 555, 585, 599, 606, 607, 803, 866, 942, 947
Ungodliness, ungodly 7, 29, 40, 43, 193, 194, 196, 206, 207, 224, 262, 275, 280-282, 322, 364, 415, 445, 483, 496, 501, 804, 879, 966
Union with Christ 62, 63, 77, 79, 81, 115, 220, 247, 270, 331, 435, 512, 554, 555, 621, 624, 677, 810, 826, 872, 907, 908, 916
Universalism 45, 263, 268, 435, 510, 513, 613-615, 618, 699, 799, 844-846, 859, 862, 868, 878, 956-958, 960, 961
Unknown God 51-54, 795
Unleavened bread 300, 570, 856, 955, 984
Unmarried 273, 485, 536, 567, 596-598, 756, 873, 874
Unveiled 169, 620, 907
Urbanus 882
Vanity 43, 44, 56, 167, 170, 321, 322, 332, 384, 416, 433, 468, 608, 617, 665, 683, 831, 865
Vegetarians 315
Veil, veiled 14, 108, 169, 179, 181, 231, 349, 379, 395, 407, 537, 564, 620, 621, 636, 731, 742, 770, 809
Vengeance 238, 727, 992
Vices 32, 42, 44, 77, 142, 172, 213, 214, 217, 247, 269, 272, 275, 316, 317, 319, 320, 344, 391, 393, 401, 414, 467, 664, 771, 871, 879, 880, 922, 923, 929, 931, 938, 948, 956, 962, 963, 968, 972, 973
Vine, vineyard 113, 317, 326, 487, 488, 737
Violence 67, 200, 383, 548, 624, 682, 719, 813, 815, 816, 874
Virgin 36, 37, 115, 476, 487, 488, 584, 585, 602, 606, 790, 873, 874
Virtue and vice lists 214, 391, 393, 963
Virtues 2, 3, 5-8, 32, 56, 59, 61, 62, 107, 132, 213, 214, 223, 228, 247, 264, 272, 275, 283, 285, 289, 306, 316-319, 346, 375, 391, 393, 401, 414, 416, 499, 512, 545, 572, 576, 583, 587, 618, 621, 656, 664, 700, 703, 706, 715, 741, 766, 771, 772, 795, 829, 830, 845, 879, 880, 902, 921-923, 928, 938, 952, 958, 962, 963, 968, 972, 973, 983
Visions 14, 20, 21, 25, 27, 31, 36, 49, 58, 94, 113, 114, 149, 150, 159, 163, 209, 255, 266, 267, 308, 361, 370, 379, 381-383, 407, 438, 444, 445, 450, 494, 501, 508, 509, 511, 572, 574, 607, 612, 624, 625, 645, 647, 662, 686, 687, 708, 710, 716, 726, 727, 731, 734, 742, 751, 755, 757, 762-764, 778-780, 782, 789, 799, 800, 806, 823, 863, 877, 885, 887, 916, 963-965
Voluntary association 135, 792, 888, 889, 898
Vow 146, 471, 472, 595, 727, 775, 790, 852
Wages of sin 554, 555, 628, 878, 880
War 21, 28, 111, 124, 140, 141, 198, 210, 249, 324, 333, 336, 383-385, 492-494, 556, 696, 724, 726, 747, 750-752, 754, 765, 767, 774, 778, 782, 784, 786, 789, 790, 813, 814, 816, 818, 830, 851, 867, 881, 946-953
Washing 64, 401
Water 24, 61-64, 99, 103, 229-231, 238, 387, 401, 403, 579, 620, 689, 720, 781, 789, 890, 946, 970, 989
Way of the cross 174, 202, 331
Weakness 20, 39, 41, 42, 50, 59, 154-156, 165, 169, 171, 172, 175, 194, 197, 202, 203, 208, 227, 230, 232, 243, 271, 272, 275, 276, 283, 289, 304-306, 309, 314-316, 349, 351, 363, 365, 373, 378, 379, 381, 382, 395, 396, 407, 416, 425, 426, 428, 429, 431, 432, 437, 438, 449, 469, 471, 477, 487, 501, 536, 538, 577, 585, 589, 607, 608, 645, 647, 658, 668, 681, 685, 686, 700, 723-725, 733, 754, 766, 768, 769, 774, 775, 808, 821, 840, 844, 846, 847, 850, 854, 855, 857, 866, 876, 877, 885, 889, 897, 908, 910-912, 914, 916-919, 921, 926, 927, 952, 965, 966, 967, 970, 981, 993
Wealth 23, 39, 84, 147, 172, 173, 187, 295, 298, 326, 387, 424, 483, 539, 546, 547, 579, 622, 662, 681, 703, 708, 714, 715, 717, 720, 826, 827, 882, 888, 889, 898, 926, 927, 935, 967
Weapons of righteousness 950, 953
Wicked 28, 29, 32-34, 37, 218, 256, 262, 533, 535, 641, 726, 777, 798, 799, 833, 861, 865, 890
Widows 37, 144, 473, 567, 597, 600, 604, 665, 827, 865
Wild beasts 36, 252, 690, 693, 953
Wilderness 19, 20, 42, 103, 105, 166, 210, 315, 449, 540, 620, 621, 634, 636, 688, 744, 745, 816, 866, 950, 970
Will of God 49, 149, 154, 164, 167, 209, 238, 272, 274, 344, 362, 398, 416, 438, 494, 501, 510, 600, 729, 732, 733, 773, 847, 870, 882, 910, 971, 981
Wisdom 6, 14, 25, 27, 29, 38, 39, 75, 99, 100, 103-105, 114, 115, 128, 136, 148, 149, 152, 165, 168, 174, 175, 179, 189, 194, 197, 203, 210, 225-228, 239, 240, 245, 246, 253, 274, 286, 293, 302-304, 310, 320, 343, 345, 348, 352, 353, 355, 356, 358, 360-363, 368, 387, 404-406, 409, 412, 425, 431, 432, 464, 488, 489, 505, 527, 528, 534, 603, 610, 622, 623, 625, 638, 640, 647, 655, 657, 658, 662, 688, 692, 700, 715-718, 735, 744-746, 748, 751, 765, 773, 779, 781, 794, 821, 826, 845, 849, 874, 876, 900, 901, 913, 920, 922, 923, 925, 948, 955, 967-973, 975, 979-981
Wisdom christology 320
Wish prayers 727, 731
Witchcraft 210, 580, 582, 824
Witness 16, 55, 59, 74, 89, 96, 99, 114, 116, 154, 155, 190, 216, 241, 275, 299, 331, 336, 341, 358, 371, 408, 420, 424, 438, 464, 469, 492, 523, 533, 573, 574, 589, 591, 592, 609, 623, 639, 640, 660, 665, 680, 683, 686-688, 719, 728, 730, 735, 737, 755, 767, 800, 892, 896, 898, 909, 911, 920, 923, 931, 944, 973-975
Wives 42, 58, 77, 80, 134, 135, 165, 239, 256, 273, 293, 295, 376-378, 393, 400, 418, 419, 435, 510, 550, 568, 584-590, 592, 594-600, 664, 665, 693, 702, 703, 722, 726, 790, 792, 859, 863, 867, 868, 871-874, 922
Woes 19, 294, 450, 625, 735, 754, 763, 830, 920
Women in ministry 131, 603
Wonders 30, 34, 49, 55, 58, 87, 236, 250, 289, 303, 380, 381, 409, 469, 486, 605-607, 655, 685, 735, 795, 865, 875-877
Works of the Law 2, 3, 8, 18, 50, 138, 139, 145, 182, 194, 199, 200, 228, 232, 286, 287, 291, 306, 310, 323, 330-334, 370, 371, 373, 404, 457, 458, 460, 474, 483, 484, 490, 501, 509-511, 515, 518, 519, 523, 529, 531, 532, 538, 540, 542, 603, 614, 640, 647, 672, 673, 678, 679, 682, 702, 742, 778, 801, 805, 820, 831, 832, 844, 847, 849, 850, 890, 975-978
Works righteousness 157, 162
Worship *2, 9, 10, 14, 20-23, 51-54, 59, 61, 65, 68, 69, 71, 77, 86, 101, 103, 104, 115, 125, 127, 129-131, 133, 137, 142, 148, 149, 165, 166, 168, 181, 189, 191, 192, 215, 229, 231-235, 238, 239, 248, 250, 298, 316, 336, 340, 342, 344-348, 353, 354, 357-359, 362, 367, 368, 378, 380, 386, 391-393, 404-406, 408, 411-413, 417, 419, 420, 422, 423, 424-426, 428, 429, 437, 438, 461-463, 491, 530, 533, 536, 548, 557-560, 564-566, 568, 569, 573, 574, 581, 585, 586, 604, 627, 628, 651, 686, 706, 712, 713, 725, 727, 730, 732-734, 739, 742, 745, 746, 749, 756, 758, 763, 779, 780, 783, 789,

792, 795, 796, 800, 820, 851, 856, 857, 864, 881, 884-887, 895, 903, 906, 908, 910, 911, 916, 917, 923, 941, 943, 948, 950, 980, 982-991
Worship of angels 22, 149, 229, 231, 232, 651, 749, 780, 950
Wrath 7, 40, 41, 51, 53, 196, 200, 204-207, 236-238, 262, 265, 268, 279-283, 314, 349, 364, 367, 368, 516-518, 530, 541, 544, 593, 600, 601, 628, 690, 696, 697, 717, 736, 759, 796-798, 801, 803, 805, 832, 837, 856, 858, 861, 862, 865, 866, 870, 871, 880, 902, 904, 938, 947, 950, 952, 953, 956, 960, 973, 976, 991-993
Written code 305, 646, 649
Yahoel 22, 23
Yeast 269, 856
Zeal 19, 157, 158, 160, 287, 330, 342, 373, 443, 461-463, 484, 504, 508, 509, 533, 538, 650, 662, 682, 725, 750, 767, 782, 813-817, 844, 891, 974
Zealots 285, 308, 341, 405, 461-463, 542, 549, 818, 819
Zenas 662
Zeus 16, 66, 250, 326, 356, 420, 787, 788, 790, 792, 795, 815, 867, 900, 983, 984
Zion 29, 124, 146, 299, 320, 333, 445, 463, 640, 672, 799, 800, 804, 861, 925, 947, 949, 951

Articles Index

Abraham 1
Adam and Christ 9
Adoption, Sonship 15
Afflictions, Trials, Hardships 18
Angels, Archangels 20
Antioch on the Orontes 23
Apocalypticism 25
Apocryphal Pauline Literature 35
Apollos 37
Apostasy, Falling Away, Perseverance 39
Apostle 45
Athens, Paul at 51
Authority 54

Baptism 60
Barnabas 66
Benediction, Blessing, Doxology, Thanksgiving 68
Body 71
Body of Christ 76

Caesar's Household, Imperial Household 83
Call, Calling 84
Canon 85
Center of Paul's Theology 92
Christ 95
Christology 100
Chronology of Paul 115
Church 123
Church Order and Government 131
Circumcision 137
Citizenship, Roman and Heavenly 139
Civil Authority 141
Collection for the Saints 143
Colossians, Letter to the 147
Conscience 153
Conversion and Call of Paul 156
Corinthians, Letters to the 164
Covenant and New Covenant 179
Coworkers, Paul and His 183
Creation and New Creation 189
Creed 190
Cross, Theology of the 192
Crucifixion 197
Curse, Accursed, Anathema 199

Death of Christ 201
Demons and Exorcism 209
Diaspora 211
Diatribe 213
Discipline 214
Dying and Rising with Christ 218

Early Catholicism 223
Election and Predestination 225
Elements/Elemental Spirits of the World 229
Emperors, Roman 233
Enemy, Enmity, Hatred 235
Ephesians, Letter to the 238
Ephesus 249
Eschatology 253
Ethics 269
Exaltation and Enthronement 275
Expiation, Propitiation, Mercy Seat 279

Faith 285
Fear, Reverence 291
Fellowship, Communion, Sharing 293
Financial Support 295
First Fruits, Down Payment 300
Firstborn 301
Flesh 303
Food Offered to Idols and Jewish Food Laws 306
Foreknowledge, Divine 310
Forgiveness 311
Freedom/Liberty 313
Fruit of the Spirit 316
Fullness 319
Futility 320

Galatians, Letter to the 323
Gentiles 335
Gifts of the Spirit 339
Glory, Glorification 348
Gnosis, Gnosticism 350
God 354
Gospel 369
Grace 372

Head 375
Head, Christ as 377
Healing, Illness 378
Heaven, Heavenlies, Paradise 381
Hellenism 383
Hermeneutics/Interpreting Paul 388
Holiness, Sanctification 397
Holy Days 402
Holy Spirit 404
Homosexuality 413
Hope 415
Households and Household Codes 417
Hymns, Hymn Fragments, Songs, Spiritual Songs 419

Idolatry 424
Image of God 426
Imitation of Paul/of Christ 428
Immortality 431
In Christ 433
Intercession 436
Intermediate State 438
Israel 441
Itineraries, Travel Plans, Journeys, Apostolic Parousia 446

James and Paul 457
Jealousy, Zeal 461
Jerusalem 463
Jesus, Sayings of 474
Jesus and Paul 492
Jew, Paul the 503
Joy 511
Judaizers 512
Judgment 516
Justification 517

Kingdom of God/Christ 524
Knowledge, Gift of Knowledge 526

Law 529
Law of Christ 542
Lawsuit 544
Legal System, Roman 546
Letters, Letter Forms 550
Life and Death 553
Light and Darkness 555
Liturgical Elements 557
Lord 560
Lord's Supper 569
Love 575
Love Feast 578

Magic 580
Man and Woman 583
Man of Lawlessness and Restraining Power 592
Marriage and Divorce, Adultery and Incest 594
Mercy 601
Ministry 602
Mission 608
Moses 620
Mystery 621
Mysticism 623

Name 626
New Nature and Old Nature 628

Old Testament in Paul 630
Olive Tree 642
Opponents of Paul 644

Pastor, Paul as 654
Pastoral Letters 658
Paul and His Interpreters 666
Paul in Acts and Letters 679
Paul in Early Church Tradition 692
Peace, Reconciliation 695
Perfect, Mature 699
Peter 701
Philemon, Letter to 703
Philippians, Letter to the 707
Philosophy 713
Political Systems 718
Power 723
Prayer 725
Preaching, Kerygma 735
Preaching from Paul Today 737
Pre-existence 743
Principalities and Powers 746
Prison, Prisoner 752
Prophecy, Prophesying 755
Prophet, Paul as 762
Psychology 765
Purity and Impurity 775

Qumran and Paul 777

Redemption 784
Religions, Greco-Roman 786
Restoration of Israel 796
Resurrection 805
Revolutionary Movements 812
Rewards 819
Rhetoric 820
Rhetorical Criticism 822
Riches and Poverty 826

Righteousness, Righteousness of God 827
Romans, Letter to the 838
Rome and Roman Christianity 850

Sacrifice, Offering 856
Salvation 858
Satan, Devil 862
Savior 867
Servant, Service 869
Sexuality, Sexual Ethics 871
Signs, Wonders, Miracles 875
Sin, Guilt 877
Slave, Slavery 881
Social Setting of Mission Churches 883
Social-Scientific Approaches to Paul 892
Son of God 900
Spirituality 906
Strong and Weak 916
Stumbling Block 918
Suffering 919

Teaching/Paraenesis 922
Temple 923
Tentmaking 925
Textual Criticism 927
Thessalonians, Letters to the 932
Tongues 939
Tradition 943
Travel in the Roman World 945
Triumph 946
Truth 954

Universalism 956

Virtues and Vices 962
Visions, Ecstatic Experience 963

Weakness 966
Wisdom 967
Witness 973
Works of the Law 975
World, Cosmology 979
Worship 982
Wrath, Destruction 991