Several OT motifs are prominent in Jude, among them the antithesis of the ungodly and the faithful, theophany and judgment, and divine foreknowledge or divine preservation. Two sets of triplets (Jude 5-7 and Jude 11) illustrate the fundamental antithesis between the faithful and faithless. The ungodly, furthermore, are described as the antithesis to Michael the archangel, who though he possessed divine authority still deferred to the Lord of Hosts (Jude 8-9). Members of the second triad of faithless are united by means of a woe cry. Each is signified by a formula—"the way of Cain," "the error of Balaam," "the rebellion of Korah"—which would give the appearance of a standardization of type that had emerged in Jewish circles. A significant part of the Genesis account is given to Cain, whose murder of his brother qualifies him as the archetype of disobedience (Gen 4:10-12, 15-16). In Balaam we encounter an individual who is seduced by riches, who counseled Balak to corrupt Israel through defilement, and whose greed assisted Israel's enemies, prompting the intervention of an angel (Num 22—25). And in Korah we find a notable example of defying authority; his fate was commensurate with his rebellion (Num 16). These three might be seen as depicting Jude's opponents in three levels of ascending gravity, from initial departure to final ruin (see also 2.2 above).

One of the most central of themes in the OT is that of Yahweh's coming, frequently depicted in the form of fire, flood or storm. Often, though not exclusively, theophany in the OT occurs in the context of judgment and destruction. The prediction employed in Jude 14-15 (1 Enoch 1:9) appears to derive from the theophany recorded in Deuteronomy 33. The text of Jude 14-15, a christological reshaping of the theophany tradition, and 1 Enoch 1:9 bear striking resemblance to the general pattern of theophany statements throughout the OT (e.g., Deut 33:2; Judg 5:4; Ps 18:9; 46:8-9; 68:17; 76:9; 96:13; Is 19:1; 31:4, 27; 40:10; 66:15; Jer 25:31; Dan 7:10; Amos 1:2; Joel 3:2; Mic 1:3; Hab 3:3; Zeph 1:7-9, 12; Hag 2:22; Zech 3:8; 9:14; Mal 3:3-5). A common link between Jude, 1 Enoch and the OT is the catchword ungodly (asebeia/asebeis/asebeō).

Jude's hermeneutic facilitates two goals: he is faithful to the OT tradition of theophany statements, and in 1 Enoch he exploits a literary work of sectarian Judaism* with which his readers were more than likely acquainted (Charles 1993, 153-62). The statement in 1 Enoch, rooted in antecedents from the OT, rings prophetically true concerning Jude's adversaries.* In Jude theophany and judgment merge to counter the distortions of the ungodly.

A feature common to the OT and Jewish intertestamental literature is the notion of names recorded in heavenly books (e.g., Exod 32:32-33; Ps 40:4; 56:8; 69:29; 139:16; Is 4:3; Jer 22:30; Dan 7:10; 12:1; Mal 3:16; 1 Enoch 81:1-2; 89:62; 90:14, 17, 20, 22; 104:7; 108:3, 7; 2 Apoc. Bar. 24:1; cf. Rev 3:5; 5:1, 7-8; 10:8-11; 20:12). These heavenly books reflect a religious self-understanding fundamental to Hebrew thought: the divine purpose, though hidden from human view, is predetermined and revealed in history. The scroll* of Revelation 5, for example, is a view of that history from the divine standpoint. The heavenly books point to the divine foreknowledge by which "the chosen" of Israel were called to be Yahweh's own possession and instrument in the earth (see esp. Ps 139:16; Jer 1:5).

The reference in Jude 4 to the ungodly as "those whose judgment was written down long ago" conforms to this apocalyptic convention of heavenly books and resembles the juridical pronouncements found in Jeremiah 22:30 and Malachi 3:16, which carry specifically penal ramifications. Moreover, this designation is contrasted with Jude's description of the faithful, who are depicted as "chosen" (klētoi) and "preserved" (tetērēmenois) in the letter's introduction. At the same time, just as God has "reserved" (tērein) for the great day of judgment the angels who deserted their heavenly position (Jude 6), "blackest darkness" has been "reserved" for the ungodly (Jude 13). Casting his opponents as godless antitypes for whom judgment, long since prescribed, has already been established, Jude views judgment as fulfilled in the ungodly of the present.

Three paradigms underscore the certainty of this judgment: unbelieving (apostate) Israel, the fallen angels and Sodom and Gomorrah (Jude 5-7). Each of the three exhibits for the readers an unnatural brand of rebellion. Israel, God's chosen, had been redeemed "once for all" (hapax), yet tragically was later (deuteron) destroyed because of unbelief. Although material from Numbers 11, 14, 25 and 32 is most explicit in describing Israel's unbelief, the whole of the OT corpus is a constant calling to remember Israel's unrepeatable deliverance from Egypt. The present as well calls for a prophetic reminder.

The angels, despite their created exaltedness, chose to desert their heavenly dwelling. Although Jewish angelology is far more systematic and imaginative following the exile, several precedents for angel typology suggest themselves in the OT: Isaiah 14:5-23, a taunt against "the king of Babylon"; Isaiah 24:21-22, a symbolic representation of Yahweh's judgment; and Ezekiel 28:1-19, a prophetic funeral dirge against the "king of Tyre." With the angels these figures share a common fate: each is stripped of an exalted rank. While the idea of "imprisoned spirits" is unrefined in the OT and pronounced in Jewish apocalyptic, Jude appears to combine typological treatment of the OT with conventional notions of angelology. Apocalyptic mythology frequently exhibits a conspicuous pattern: war erupts in heaven (depicted in astral terms), followed by a spilling over of this rebellion to earth, resulting in ultimate vindication and punishment by the king of heaven.

Sodom and Gomorrah, the third part of this prophetic triplet, consistently stand out in the OT as a model of finality in judgment (e.g., Deut 29:23; 32:32; Is 1:9-10; 3:9; Jer 23:14; 49:18; 50:40; Ezek 16:46-59; Amos 4:11). Having given themselves over to unnatural sexual expression, the cities of the plain serve as an abiding example (prokeintai deigma) of divine punishment. Jude's burden is to remind his audience that moral agency is the defining human characteristic.

3.4. 1 John. Although it is generally conceded that direct influence of the OT, with the exception of 1 John 3:12, is absent from the Johannine epistles (see John, Letters of), it should be noted that the substructure underlying the writer's polemic in 1 John reveals more about his opponents' confession than it does about their social location. Parallels between Johannine and Essene literature (see Noncanonical Writings) suggest that 1 John initially circulated in a Jewish Christian orbit and thus is firmly rooted in a Jewish Christian milieu (Longenecker, 193).

See also INTERTEXTUALITY IN EARLY CHRISTIAN LITERATURE; JAMES; JOHN, LETTERS OF; JUDE; NONCANONICAL WRITINGS, CITATIONS IN THE GENERAL EPISTLES; OLD TESTAMENT IN HEBREWS; 1 PETER; 2 PETER.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, "James, 1 and 2 Peter, Jude" in It Is Written: Scripture Citing Scripture: Essays in Honour of B. Lindars, ed. D. A. Carson and H. G. M. Williamson (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1988) 303-17; E. Boehl, Die Alttestamentliche Zitaten im Neuen Testament (Wien: W. Braumueller, 1878); J. D. Charles, Literary Strategy in the Epistle to Jude (Scranton: University of Scranton Press, 1993); idem, " 'Those and These': The Use of the Old Testament in the Epistle of Jude," JSNT 38 (1990) 109-24; P. H. Davids, "Tradition and Citation in the Epistle of James" in Scripture, Tradition and Interpretation, ed. W. W. Gasque and W. S. LaSor (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978) 113-26; W. D. Davies, "Reflections about the Use of the Old Testament in the New in Its Historical Context," JQR 74 (1983) 105-36; E. E. Ellis, The Old Testament in Early Christianity (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1991); idem, Prophecy and Hermeneutic in Early Christianity (WUNT 18; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1978); J. A. Fitzmyer, "The Use of Explicit Old Testament Quotations in Qumran Literature and in the New Testament," NTS 7 (1960-61) 297-333; M. Gertner, "Midrashim in the New Testament," JSS 7 (1962) 267-92; L. Goppelt, TYPOS: The Typological Interpretation of the Old Testament in the New (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); G. L. Green, "The Use of the Old Testament for Christian Ethics in 1 Peter," TynB 41-42 (1990) 277-89; A. T. Hanson, Living Utterances of God: The New Testament Exegesis of the Old (London: Darton, Longman & Todd, 1983); R. N. Longenecker, Biblical Exegesis in the Apostolic Period (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975); M. P. Miller, "Targum, Midrash and the Use of the Old Testament in the New Testament," JSJ 2 (1970) 29-82; D. M. Smith, "The Use of the Old Testament in the New" in The Use of the Old Testament in the New and Other Essays, ed. J. M. Efird (Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 1972) 3-65; K. R. Snodgrass, "The Use of the Old Testament in the New" in New Testament Criticism and Interpretation, ed. D. A. Black and D. S. Dockery (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1991) 409-34; R. W. Wall, "James as Apocalyptic Paraenesis," RestQ 32 (1990) 11-22.

J. D. Charles

OLD TESTAMENT IN HEBREWS

Of all the NT literature no document cites the OT text more extensively than Hebrews.* By implicit and explicit references the author weaves a tapestry presupposing and proposing points of continuity and contrast between the old and new covenant eras. The author's art in using the OT follows patterns discerned in early Judaism* and that shed light on the book's structure, theology and methods of argumentation.

1. Phenomena
2. Text Type
3. Employment of the Old Testament
4. Theological Implications
5. Conclusions

1. Phenomena.

The exact enumeration of OT references in Hebrews frustrates even the most careful analyst on account of the author's mix of direct quotations, allusions to specific passages, uses of biblical phraseology and general references to OT historical events and persons. However, there are roughly thirty-six quotations, thirty-five allusions, eighteen cases where OT material is summarized and fourteen where an OT name* or topic is referred to without reference to a specific context. In his discourse the author depends most heavily on the Pentateuch and the Psalms, deriving his comments concerning redemptive history mostly from the former and his christology* from the latter.

Hebrews never mentions an OT author and never introduces a quotation with Paul's favorite introductory formula gegraptai ("it is written"). Rather, forms of legein ("to say") are employed most often, especially the present participle legōn ("saying"). Quotations of the OT are almost always framed as falling from the lips of God;* twenty-three of the thirty-six quotations in Hebrews have God as the speaker. Four passages are attributed to Christ and four others to the Holy Spirit.* In addition Moses* speaks concerning a command of God (Heb 9:20) and expresses terror at God's revelation* (Heb 12:21). Although the quotations in these passages have a human speaker, the context is still that of divine revelation. Finally, the unusual introductory formula at Hebrews 2:6 ("but somewhere one has testified saying") was likely a rhetorical device employed to add effectiveness to the discourse and to keep the focus on God as the primary speaker.

2. Text Type.

One of the primary issues surrounding the use of the OT in Hebrews concerns the author's text. The assumption among NT scholars is that a Greek rather than a Hebrew text was used. In recent years attention has shifted to the question of which set of manuscripts the author accessed. The format for the current debate was initiated in the last century by F. Bleek. In Der Brief an die Hebräer Bleek argued against Pauline authorship of Hebrews, partly on the basis that Paul used a text similar to Codex Vaticanus when quoting a Greek text. According to Bleek, Hebrews gives evidence of its author's partiality to a text similar to Codex Alexandrinus. However, scholars such as P. Katz have questioned Bleek's observations, and discussions in this century have dealt with how the author's text relates to one or both of these major codices. J. C. McCullough has emphasized the need to focus research on recensions of the Greek text on a book-by-book basis rather than on one or two extant manuscripts. McCullough concluded that for several books of the OT, such as Jeremiah and Psalms, the recension from which the text quoted is taken is fairly clear, whereas a great deal of uncertainty surrounds other OT books. It seems the author of Hebrews used and reproduced faithfully the local text of various OT books available to him.

3. Employment of the Old Testament.

In the past the exegetical methodology of Hebrews has been most often associated with the allegorical exegesis of Philo.* This argument was made by such commentators as J. Moffatt and C. Spicq. A number of scholars, however, have noted the sharp differences between Hebrews and Philo, placing Hebrews in the mainstream of Jewish and primitive Christian thought and methodology (e.g., Caird, Hurst, Williamson).

3.1. General Forms.

3.1.1. Midrash. Although the ambiguous term midrash may refer to a genre of literature produced by rabbis of the tannaitic and amoraic periods, most recent work on the OT in the NT has focused on midrash as an expositional activity in which the NT author cites and then explains an OT text on the basis of Jewish-rabbinic hermeneutical* principles. E. E. Ellis distinguishes between this type of exposition, which he designates "explicit midrash" and "implicit midrash," by which the author integrates interpretive elements into the OT quotation (Ellis 1978, 152-57). The author of Hebrews employs the latter sparingly. His quotation of Haggai 2:6 at Hebrews 12:26 offers a possible example. The LXX text reads eti hapax egō seisō ton ouranon kai tēn gēn ("yet once more I will shake heaven and earth"). However, Hebrews 12:26 offers eti hapax egō seisō ou monon tēn gēn alla kai ton ouranon ("yet once more I will shake not only the earth but also heaven"). The author reverses the references to heaven* and earth and includes the phrases "not only" and "but also" to bring out the significance of the text for his discussion.

Much more prevalent is the author's use of explicit midrash. For example, he quotes Psalm 39:7-9 (LXX) at Hebrews 10:5-7 and in Hebrews 10:8-10 presents an explanation of the OT text built around the words tote ("then") and thelēma ("will"). Based on the psalmist's use of tote the author explains that there is a temporal relationship between the first part of the passage, having to do with God's lack of desire concerning sacrifices,* and the second part concerning what does afford God pleasure. He interprets tote to mean that the old order has been set aside prior to establishing the new order.

Another example of explicit midrash comprises the content of Hebrews 7:1-10. In this passage the author summarizes Genesis 14:17-20 and then examines various aspects of the OT text. He discusses Melchizedek's* name (Heb 7:2), his lack of genealogy and the lack of information concerning his birth and death (Heb 7:3), and his greatness in comparison to the levitical priesthood* (Heb 7:4-10). J. A. Fitzmyer has observed that this exposition resembles that found in Genesis Rabbah 43:6.

3.1.2. Chain Quotations. The rabbis and the interpreters of Qumran* at times used Stichworte ("catch words") to chain together a number of OT texts. The chain quotations, or ḥaraz ("to string"), were used to support a topic under discussion by virtue of the quantity of scriptural quotations brought to bear. In Hebrews 1:5-12 the author presents three pairs of passages supporting the Son's* superiority to the angels.* The first pair (Ps 2:7; 2 Sam 7:14) concerns the Son's superiority by virtue* of his unique relationship to the Father (Heb 1:5); the second (Deut 32:43/Ps 96:7 LXX; Ps 103:4 LXX), the angels' inferior position (Heb 1:6-7); and the third (Ps 44:7-8 LXX; Ps 101:26-28 LXX), the Son's eternal reign (Heb 1:8-12). Each of the three pairs is joined by a Stichwort (see 3.2.6 below): hyios (Heb 1:5), angelos (Heb 1:6-7) and forms of the pronoun su (Heb 1:8-12). This chain's climax comes with the quote of Psalm 109:1 (LXX) at Hebrews 1:13. The effect of the ḥaraz is to impress the unqualified superiority of the Son upon the hearers in order to set up the a fortiori exhortation of Hebrews 2:1-4 (see 3.2.7 below).

3.1.3. Example Lists. Another use the author of Hebrews makes of the OT is in line with rhetorical practices of the ancient world. The formulation of example lists (exempla) to prove or illustrate an author's exhortation finds expression in a number of literary traditions (e.g., 4 Ezra, Cicero's De Orat., Philo, the CD of Qumran and 1 Macc). Although these lists are diverse in expression, their common function is exhortation. By presenting the examples cited as representative of a much larger body of evidence, the author challenges his hearers to action (Cosby). In Hebrews 11 the author uses this technique, listing biblical heroes in chronological order. These heroes are presented as people of pistis ("faith"), a term used anaphorically to drive home the author's point. The list impresses upon the audience the effectiveness of living by faith* and their responsibility to live faithfully in the face of great difficulties.

3.2. Principles Used in Interpretation.

3.2.1. Dispelling Confusion. It was common practice among the rabbis to clear up a verse open to theological misunderstanding (Cohn-Sherbok). In Hebrews 2:8-9 the author offers comment on Psalm 8:5-7 (LXX). After asserting the comprehensive nature of all things being made subject to the Son of Man, he clarifies with the statement "but now we do not yet see all things as subjected to him." The clarifying statement shows the author's concern to alleviate any confusion this passage might cause for his hearers, who are struggling with forces obviously not submitted to God's rule. He asserts that the reality perceived by the hearers does not contradict the OT text and that all has indeed been subjected to Christ's rule.

3.2.2. Reinforcement. Reinforcement is a technique by which a rabbi adds support to an exhortation by quoting a biblical phrase, often using "for" as part of the introductory formula. In Hebrews 10:19-39 the author exhorts the readers to persevere in their confession of faith

(see Creeds), concluding with a conflated quotation from Isaiah 26:20 and Habakkuk 2:3-4: "For in a very short time the coming one will arrive." Similarly the exhortation to financial contentment in Hebrews 13:5-6 finds reinforcement in a scriptural reference: "I will never desert or forsake you" (Deut 31:6, 8).

3.2.3. Implications. Another common rabbinic procedure involved drawing out the implications of a text. At Hebrews 8:7-12 the new covenant* is introduced through Jeremiah 38:31-34 ([LXX] = Jer 31:31-34). After the extensive quote—the longest OT quotation in the NT—the author presents the implication of the text, focusing on the word kainēn. Hebrews 8:13 contains the inference, tersely expressed with en tō legein kainēn pepalaiōken tēn prōtēn ("By saying 'new' he has declared the first obsolete").

3.2.4. Literal Sense. This principle refers to a teacher seizing upon and emphasizing a word's meaning with great precision, and it is used extensively in Hebrews. The idea is to focus the hearer's attention on a specific aspect of the text's proclamation in order to support the speaker's case. The author utilizes this principle to advantage at Hebrews 4:7-8 where, concentrating on the term sēmeron ("today"), he argues that the word refers to a day of rest other than the one offered to the wilderness wanderers.

3.2.5. Typology. When interpreting Hebrews one must make a distinction between the way the author uses the words typos and antitypos and his practice of typology. The noun typos finds expression in this letter only at Hebrews 8:5 and based on the context should be translated "pattern" or "model." Antitypos, used in Hebrews 9:24, means "copy" or "counterpart," referring to the earthly holy place over against the heavenly. Although some have associated Philo's use of the typos word group with that of Hebrews, the two utilize these terms quite differently. In Philo's interpretation of Exodus 25:40 (Philo Vit. Mos. 2.76; Philo Som. 1.206) archetypos designates the original pattern as conceived in the mind of God, typos the copy of the archetypos as impressed on the mind of Moses and mimēma the completed structure. For our author the heavenly tabernacle* was a structure built by God, not merely an ideal blueprint (Heb 9:11). This concept represents apocalyptic* symbolism rather than Philonic idealism. Jewish apocalyptic traditions held belief in a heavenly city containing a heavenly place of worship.*

The author's practice of typology, in the sense of identifying preordained connections between events, persons or institutions in the span of salvation history, finds considerable expression in his section on the superior heavenly offering of the heavenly high priest* (Heb 8:3—10:18). For example, the writer describes regulations for old covenant tabernacle worship (Heb 9:1-7), stressing that only the high priest could enter the holy of holies once a year. The author then explains this as indicating the need for Christ's superior, high-priestly ministry* (Heb 9:8-10), which would open the way for all God's people to enter the true holy of holies. The OT pattern serves as a type for the new covenant ministry of Christ.

3.2.6. Verbal Analogy. Of the seven hermeneutical principles traditionally attributed to Hillel (t. Sanh. 7.11; 'Abot R. Nat. [A] §37), two play key roles in Hebrews' appropriation of the OT. The first, Gezērâšāwâ, suggests that verbal analogy between two passages warrants the consideration of both passages in an interpretation of each. The author of Hebrews uses this principle to pair one OT text with another at numerous places in the development of the discourse. Examples include Hebrews 4:3-5 and Hebrews 5:5-6. "Rest" constitutes a main topic of Hebrews 3:7—4:11, the author following the quotation of Psalm 94:7-11 (LXX) with a treatment of the OT wilderness wanderers who through disobedience (see Obedience) failed to enter God's rest (Heb 3:12-19). After a transitional statement in Hebrews 4:1-2, he continues with a discussion of the promised rest for those who are obedient, introducing Genesis 2:2 for consideration: kai katepausen ho theos en tēn hēmera tē hebdomē apo pantōn tōn ergōn autou ("and God rested on the seventh day from all his works"). The cognates rest and rested provide the connection between the two passages and demonstrate that the "rest" addressed in the psalm is sabbath rest, a rest that involves the cessation of one's own work.

The verbal analogy between two passages may even be based on the common use of a pronoun, as is the case with the pairing of Psalm 2:7 and Psalm 109:4 (LXX) in Hebrews 5:5-6. These two OT texts, among the most important texts in the discourse's development, meet by virtue of the pronoun su ("you"). Gezērâšāwâ is employed to effect a transition from a discussion focused on Jesus as Son to a discussion focused on Jesus as high priest. These passages proclaim Christ's two eternal, exalted positions, each specified in an oath of God: "You are my Son"; "You are a high priest."

3.2.7. Argument from Lesser to Greater. Qal waḥômēr, also referred to as a fortiori argumentation, states that what applies in a less important situation applies in a more important situation, often with greater implications. For example, the logic of Hebrews 10:28-29 is as follows: those who rejected the law* of Moses in the OT were severely punished; those who reject the Son, rejecting the superior covenant and insulting the Spirit of grace,* deserve an even greater punishment. Other examples of qal waḥômēr, are found at Hebrews 2:2-3; 9:13-14; 12:9; 12:25.

For a complete listing of OT references in Hebrews, see figure 1.

4. Theological Implications.

Having considered the author's methods of employing the OT, we turn to his theological presuppositions and motives. We first examine the presuppositions that seem evident from the ways in which he uses the OT and then analyze the theological content grounded in the author's uses of the OT.

4.1. Presuppositions Evident in the Author's Use of the OT. First, with the rabbis of his day, the author of Hebrews utilizes methods presupposing God's inspiration of the exact words and phrases of the OT text. In Hebrews, as in other Jewish-Hellenistic synagogue* homilies of the day, one notices a propensity to cite Scripture as falling from the lips of God (Thyen 1955, 69-74). Also, principles such as the literal sense and argument from lesser to greater (see 3.2.4 and 3.2.7 above) depend on exact meanings in the OT text. The presupposition seems to be that God has built those exact meanings into the text for specific didactic and hortatory purposes. Second, and following from the first point, the words of the OT, as the words of God, are authoritative* both in the sense of reflecting truth and possessing the right to command adherence.

4.2. Explicit Theological Teachings Grounded in the OT.

4.2.1. God as Communicator. "God as communicator" also finds explicit expression as a key aspect to the book's overarching message. The first words of the discourse proclaim "God, having spoken formerly in many and various ways to the fathers by the prophets, at the inception of these last days he spoke to us by a Son." The people of God should listen to the voice of God through the OT Scriptures and the NT kerygma* (Heb 2:1-4; 3:7-19; Ps 94:8-11 LXX) and should do so on the basis of God's promises* (e.g., Heb 8:8-12; Jer 38:31-34 LXX), warnings (e.g., Heb 3:11; 4:3; Ps 94:11 LXX) and proclamations concerning the Son (e.g., Heb 5:5-6; Ps 2:7; 109:4 LXX). Hebrews addresses an audience in danger of turning away from the Christian faith and returning to Judaism (Bruce, 8-9; Lindars, 4-15). The purpose of the book, therefore, is to exhort the readers to endure in their quest for the promised, new covenant reward in obedience to the word of God and on the basis of their relationship with God's superior Son. God's proclamations concerning the Son are developed in four steps and comprise the expositional sections of the book.

4.2.2. The Son's Superiority to the Angels. Hebrews 1:5-14 argues for the superiority of the Son in relation to the angels (see 3.1.2 above). Each of the three main movements of this passage presents the Son as superior on the basis of a pair of OT texts. Psalm 2:7 and 2 Samuel 7:14 support the unique father-son relationship Jesus enjoys with God (Heb 1:5). The first is a declaration to the Son ("You are my son") and the second a declaration about the Son ("I shall be a father to him and he shall be a son to me"). The second pair (Heb 1:6-7), a conflation of Psalm 96:7 (LXX) and Deuteronomy 32:43 (LXX) presented in tandem with Psalm 103:4 (LXX), proclaim the inferior position of the angels, and the third (Heb 1:8-12), Psalm 44:6-7 (LXX) and Psalm 101:25-27 (LXX), proclaim the eternal reign of the Son. In the second pair the Son's preexistence* and his right to worship by the angels finds expression. In the third, the Son is called "God" (ho theos), is said to have an eternal reign and is said to have been the agent of creation.*

The passage ends with the quote of Psalm 109:1 (LXX) on the exaltation* of the Son to the right hand of God. The theological message of Hebrews 1:5-14 is that the Son of God has a unique and supreme status in the universe.

4.2.3. The Incarnation. The superior, heavenly Son became incarnate* to render the devil (see Satan) powerless, to become a high priest and to bring the sons of earth to glory.* Use of Psalm 8:5-7, a text that includes references to

Figure 1: Chart of Old Testament References in Hebrews

Hebrews	Old Testament	Quote	Allusion	Summary	Name/Topic
1:3d	Ps 110:1		*
1:5a	Ps 2:7	*
1:5b	2 Sam 7:14	*
1:6	Ps 96:7 (LXX) = Ps 97:7/Deut 32:43	*
1:7	Ps 103:4 (LXX) = Ps 104:4	*
1:8-9	Ps 44:6-7 (LXX) = Ps 45:6-7	*
1:1-12	Ps 101:26-28 (LXX) = Ps 102:25-27	*
1:13	Ps 109:1 (LXX) = Ps 110:1	*
2:6-8	Ps 8:5-7 (LXX) = Ps 8:4-6	*
2:9-10	Ps 8:5-7 (LXX) = Ps 8:4-6		*
2:12	Ps 21:23 (LXX) = Ps 22:22	*
2:13a	Is 8:17	*
2:13b	Is 8:18	*
2:16	Is 41:8-9		*
2:17	(high priest)			*
3:1	(high priest)				*
3:2	Num 12:7		*
3:7-11	Ps 94:7-11 (LXX) = Ps 95:7-11	*
3:13	Ps 94:7-8 (LXX) = Ps 95:7-8	*
3:15	Ps 94:7-8 (LXX) = Ps 95:7-8	*
3:16-19	(wanderings)			*
3:18	Ps 94:11 (LXX) = Ps 95:11		*
4:1	Ps 94:11 (LXX) = Ps 95:11		*
4:3, 5	Ps 94:11 (LXX) = Ps 95:11	*
4:4	Gen 2:2	*
4:7	Ps 94:7-8 (LXX) = Ps 95:7-8	*

4:10	Ps 94:11 (LXX) = Ps 95:11 + Gen 2:2		*
4:14-15	(high priest)				*
5:1-4	(high priest)				*
5:4	(Aaron)				*
5:5	Ps 2:7	*
5:6	Ps 109:4 (LXX) = Ps 110:4	*
5:7-9	Ps 114, 115 (LXX) = Ps 116		*[1]
5:10	Ps 109:4 (LXX) = Ps 110:4		*
6:8	Gen 3:17-18		*
6:13-15	Gen 22: 16-17		*
6:14	Gen 22:16-17	*
6:19	Lev 16:12		*
6:20	Ps 109:4 (LXX) = Ps 110:4		*
7:1-2	Gen 14:17-20			*
7:4	Gen 14:20		*
7:5	(Levi, Abraham)				*
7:5-11	(Levi, priests)			*
7:14	(Judah, Moses)				*
7:19	(Law)				*
7:21	Ps 109:4 (LXX) = Ps 110:4	*
7:22	(covenant)				*
7:24	Ps 109:4 (LXX) = Ps 110:4		*
7:26-28	(Law)				*
7:28	Ps 2:7		*
8:1	Ps 109:1 (LXX) = Ps 110:1		*
8:5	Ex 25:40	*
8:6	Jer 38:31-34 (LXX) = Jer 31:31-34		*
8:8-12	Jer 38:31-34 (LXX) = Jer 31:31-34	*
8:13	Jer 38:31-34 (LXX) = Jer 31:31-34		*

[1]See A. Strobel, "De Psalmengrundlage der Gethsemane-Parallele hbr. 5, 7ff.," ZNW 45 (1954) 252-66.

9:1-7	(ministry of priests			*
9:12-14	(sacrifice)				*
9:15	Jer 38:31 (LXX) = Jer 31:31		*
9:18-19	Ex 24:6-8			*
9:20	Ex 24:8	*
9:21-22	Ex 24:6-8			*
9:28	Is 53:12		*
10:1	(Law)				*
10:5-7	Ps 39:7-9 (LXX) = Ps 40:6-8	*
10:8-9	Ps 39:7-9 (LXX) = Ps 40:6-8	*
10:10	Ps 39:9 (LXX) = Ps 40:8		*
10:12-13	Ps 109: (LXX) = Ps 110:1		*
10:16-17	Jer 38:33-34 (LXX) = Jer 31:33-34	*
10:27	Is 26:11 (Zeph 1:18)		*
10:28	Deut 17:6		*
10:30a	Deut 32:35	*
10:30b	Deut 32:36	*
10:37-38	Is 26:20-21 + Hab 2:3-4	*
11:3	Ps 33:6, 9; Gen 1		*
11:4	Gen 4			*
11:5	Gen 5:24		*
11:7	Gen 6:13-22			*
11:8-12	Gen 12-17		*
11:12	Gen 22:17		*
11:17	Gen 22:1-10			*
11:18	Gen 21:12	*
11:20	Gen 27:27-29			*
11:21	Gen 47:31		*
11:22	Gen 50		*
11:23-26	Ex 2			*

11:30-31	Josh 6		*
11:32	(various heroes)				*
12:2	Ps 109:1 (LXX) = Ps 110:1		*
12:5-6	Prov 3:11-12	*
12:12-13	Is 35:3/Prov 4:26 Job 4:3-4		*
12:15	Deut 29:18		*
12:16-17	Gen 25-27			*
12:18-21	Ex 19			*
12:20	Ex 19:12-13		*
12:21	Deut 9:19	*
12:24	Jer 38:31-34 (LXX) = Jer 31:31-34; Gen 4:10			*
12:26	Hag 2:6	*
13:5	Deut 31:6, 8	*
13:6	Ps 117:6 (LXX) = Ps 118:6	*
13:11	Lev 16:27		*

both exaltation and incarnation, effects the transition from the exalted position of Hebrews 1:5-14 to the earthly ministry of Hebrews 2:10-18. The OT texts employed in Hebrews 2:12-13, Psalm 21:23 (LXX) and Isaiah 8:17-18, have to do with the Lord's brotherly relationship with God's people and presence among God's people. The sons are called "brothers" and "children," and the Son is in their midst. This solidarity with family members, with whom he shares flesh and blood, was a necessary prerequisite for the Son's death and appointment as high priest.

4.2.4. Appointment as High Priest. The high-priestly christology of Hebrews appears nowhere else in the NT. Hebrews 5:1-7:28, strategically interrupted by the hortatory material of Hebrews 5:11-6:20, addresses the appointment of the Son as high priest. The focal OT text providing the basis for this section is Psalm 109:4 (LXX), the author also offering a midrashic treatment of Genesis 14:17-20 (Heb 7:1-10). These two OT passages alone mention the enigmatic Melchizedek. Based on these texts the author reasons that the Melchizedekean priesthood of Jesus is superior to the Aaronic priesthood of the older covenant (Heb 7:11-28). The appointment stems from Christ's imperishable nature (Heb 7:16) rather than tribal descent. His indestructibility and God's pronouncement of his position with an oath ("You are a priest forever") assure the permanence of his priesthood, offering believers a superior basis of hope.*

4.2.5. The Superior Offering. This superior high priest has offered a superior new covenant offering (Heb 8:3-10:18). Hebrews sets forth Jeremiah 31:31-34 as proof that the new covenant has superseded the old (Heb 8:7-13). The new covenant offering is greater than the old covenant offerings on three bases (Heb 9:1-18). First, the new covenant offering was made in the true, heavenly tabernacle (Heb 9:11) rather than the earthly copy. Second, Christ's offering consisted of his own blood rather than the blood of animals (Heb 9:12-14). Third, his offering, rather than having to be repeated year after year, was made once for all time (Heb 10:1-18). Since his superior offering perfects new covenant believers permanently, God no longer remembers their sins* (Heb 10:14-18) and they receive a superior basis for endurance* in the Christian way.

4.2.6. Promise and Punishment. Eschatologically," the wandering people of God are traveling toward the heavenly kingdom and city. In addition to their relationship to Jesus, they have the promise of rest (Heb 4:1-11; Gen 2:2; Ps 94:7-11 LXX), the example of the OT faithful (Heb 11) and the knowledge* that true children face discipline* from the heavenly Father (Heb 12:4-13; Prov 3:11-12) to sustain them. At the same time the OT warns that punishment awaits those who prove faithless (e.g., Heb 3:7-19; Ps 94:7-11 LXX; Heb 10:30; Deut 32:35-36). The harsh warnings of the hortatory sections of Hebrews have the OT wilderness episodes as their backdrop. The important motif of falling must be understood in light of those faithless ones who incurred God's wrath* through their unbelief.

5. Conclusions.

It is clear that the author of Hebrews drew from a wide range of homiletical and hermeneutical techniques common to his milieu. Rather than employing these in a fantastic and reckless appropriation of the OT, his discourse evinces careful study, reflection and craftsmanship. The importance of understanding his methodology and therefore his logic can hardly be overemphasized. Furthermore, and most importantly, the author uses the OT as one vitally important basis for his theology. The theological tapestry he weaves, although grounded in the early Christian kerygma, cannot be understood apart from a comprehension of his uses of the OT text.

See also ANCESTORS; INTERTEXTUALITY IN EARLY CHRISTIAN LITERATURE; MELCHIZEDEK; MOSES: PRIEST, HIGH PRIEST; PROMISE; SACRIFICE, OFFERINGS, GIFTS; TABERNACLE, SANCTUARY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. M. Barth, "The Old Testament in Hebrews" in Issues in New Testament Interpretation, ed. W. Klassen and G. F. Snyder (New York: Harper & Row, 1962) 65-78; F. Bleek, Der Brief an die Hebräer (Berlin: Ferdinand Dümmler, 1828); F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews (NICNT; rev. ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); G. B. Caird, "The Exegetical Method of the Epistle to the Hebrews," CJT 5 (1959) 44-51; R. E. Clements, "The Use of the Old Testament in Hebrews," SWJT 28 (1985) 36-45; H. Cobrink, "Some Thoughts on the Old Testament Citations in the Epistle to the Hebrews," Neot 5 (1971) 22-36; D. Cohn-Sherbok, "Paul and Rabbinic Exegesis," SJT 35 (1982) 117-32; M. Cosby, "The Rhetorical Composition of Hebrews 11," JBL 107 (1988) 257-73; E. E. Ellis, Paul's Use of the Old Testament (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1981); idem, Prophecy and Hermeneutic in Early Christianity: New Testament Essays (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); J. A. Fitzmyer, " 'Now This Melchizedek' (Heb 7:1)," CBQ 25 (1963) 305-21; G. Howard, "Hebrews and the Old Testament Quotations," NovT 10 (1968) 208-16;G. Hughes, Hebrews and Hermeneutics: The Epistle to the Hebrews as a New Testament Example of Biblical Interpretation (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1979); L. D. Hurst, The Epistle to the Hebrews: Its Background of Thought (SNTSMS 65; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1990); P. Katz, "The Quotations from Deuteronomy in Hebrews," ZNW 49 (1958) 213-23; S. J. Kistemaker, The Psalm Citations in the Epistle to the Hebrews (Amsterdam: van Soest, 1961); B. Lindars, The Theology of the Letter to the Hebrews (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991); R. N. Longenecker, Biblical Exegesis in the Apostolic Period (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975); J. C. McCullough, "The Old Testament Quotations in Hebrews," NTS 26 (1979-1980) 363-79; J. Moffatt, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1924); K. J. Thomas, "The Old Testament Citations in Hebrews," NTS 11 (1965) H. Thyen, Der Stil des jüdisch-hellenistischen Homilie (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1955); J. Van der Ploeg, "L' exégèse de l'Ancien Testament dans l'Épître aux Hébreux," RB 54 (1947) 187-228; M. Wilcox, "On Investigating the Use of the Old Testament in the New Testament" in Text and Interpretation: Studies in the New Testament Presented to Matthew Black, ed. E. Best and R. Wilson (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1979) 231-44; R. Williamson, Philo and the Epistle to the Hebrews (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1970).

G. H. Guthrie

OLD TESTAMENT IN REVELATION

No book of the NT is more thoroughly saturated with the thought and language of ancient Scripture than the book of Revelation (see Revelation, Book of). Yet, in contrast to much of the NT, Revelation never mentions the Scriptures (hai graphai) and never cites as Scripture (graphē) any individual passage from either the Hebrew Bible, now known to Christians as the OT, or the Greek Bible, known as the Septuagint. Nor does John, the writer of Revelation, ever appeal to the authority* of Scripture with the phrase "it is written" (gegraptai) or state that something happened "to fulfill" (hina . . . plērōthē) some prophecy written in the Bible.

1. Writing and Books in the Revelation of John
2. Characters and Authors
3. The Hebrew Bible as Prophecy
4. Biblical Language in the Revelation

1. Writing and Books in the Revelation of John. A great deal of writing goes on in the book of Revelation itself. John is repeatedly told to "write" (grapson; an imperative) what he sees (Rev 1:11, 19; 2:1, 8, 12, 18; 3:1, 7, 14; 14:13; 19; 21:5; cf. 10:4). When he looks at his own finished work he speaks of "the things written" in it (ta gegrammena, Rev 1:3; 22:18, 19). Names especially are often "written": a new name* on a white stone* for Christian believers (Rev 2:17); the name of God or God's city written on the believers themselves (Rev 3:12); the names of the Lamb* and of the Father on their foreheads (Rev 14:1); a name of mystery* on the forehead of Babylon* the prostitute (Rev 17:5); an unknown name written on the rider on the white horse (Rev 19:12); and the name "King of kings and Lord of lords" on his clothing and armor (Rev 19:16).

Books or scrolls* are said to be "written," with the implication that the writing was done before the book of Revelation itself was written. John sees in heaven* "a scroll [biblion] written on the inside and on the back, sealed with seven seals" (Rev 5:1, NRSV; see Seals). At the last judgment* "books (biblia) were opened," and "another book [biblion] was opened, which is the book of life. And the dead were judged by what was written [ek tōn gegrammenōn] in the books, by what they had done. . . . And if any one's name was not found written in the book of life, he was thrown into the lake of fire" (Rev 20:12, 14, RSV). Earlier visions* mention the beast* "whose name is not written" (Rev 13:8) and "the dwellers on the earth whose names are not written" (Rev 17:8) in this book of life. In one of the prophecies* to the seven churches* the victorious Christian is promised that "I will not blot his name out of the book [biblos] of life" (Rev 3:5).

Few interpreters will argue that either the "book of life" or the other "books" opened at the judgment represent the Hebrew Bible. The "book of life" is a list of all who are chosen for salvation* (cf. Ex 32:32-33), while the other books are divine records of deeds done by every person on earth (cf. Dan 7:10; 1 Enoch 90:20; 4 Ezra 6:20; 2 Bar 24:1). The writer of Revelation knows of many "books" written before his own, yet he is strangely silent about the one Christians would come to call the OT.

2. Characters and Authors. Unlike many Jewish apocalyptic* works, the book of Revelation does not claim to be written by an OT character or author such as Enoch, Ezra or Baruch. Other than Moses,* the only characters from the Hebrew Bible who are mentioned are the twelve patriarchs listed in Revelation 7:5-8 (see also Judah in Rev 5:5), David (in the phrase "the root of David," Rev 5:5; 22:16), and Balaam, Balak and Jezebel as examples of false prophecy (Rev 2:14, 20). The only biblical author named is "Moses, the servant of God" (Rev 15:3), and he is mentioned not as a writer of Scripture but as the one who led Israel* across the Red Sea, even as Christian believers cross the "sea of glass mixed with fire" in John's immediate context (Rev 15:2). The term "servant of God" (see Servant) identifies Moses as a prophet,* the only one of God's "servants the prophets" (Rev 10:7) who is designated by name—possibly because John viewed him as the first prophet and a standard by which all prophecy was measured (see Deut 18:15-18). Moses' "song" (Rev 15:3-4) has no direct links to the "song of Moses" found in Exodus 15:1-18 but is jointly the song of Moses and of the Lamb (Rev 15:3). Possibly it is the same as the "new song" that only the 144,000 on Mount Zion could learn (Rev 14:3; see Jerusalem, Zion).

If Moses is the only named biblical prophet (other than false prophets) in the Revelation, John himself is the only named Christian "servant" or "prophet" (Rev 1:1, 9-10; 22:8-9). This fact may help to illumine John's use of the OT. John as a prophet seems to have viewed all Scripture as prophecy. His role is not that of a scribe interpreting a written text but of a prophet incorporating the spoken words of ancient prophecies into new prophecies for a new time. To John, the truth* he presents is not derivative from those ancient prophets he knows but never identifies by name—Daniel, Ezekiel, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Zechariah. Rather, it comes from the same wellspring of divine inspiration on which they drew. His visions and auditions, no less than theirs, are revelations* from God.

Some scholars, while granting this in theory, still use the OT as a framework within which the book of Revelation must be interpreted. For example, the system commonly known as dispensationalism adds together two of the time periods designated in the Revelation as "42 months" (Rev 11:2, 13:5) or "1,260 days" (Rev 11:3, 12:6) to make a total of seven years, which are then understood to be the "seventieth week" of Daniel 9:27. In a different vein, G. K. Beale suggests that when John mentions "what will [or must] take place after this" (e.g., Rev 1:19; 4:1) he refers to what was future from Daniel's standpoint (Dan 2:45), not necessarily his own. A better approach is to recognize that in the book of Revelation the language and thought of the OT are not only preserved and reaffirmed but transformed. The lasting contribution of A. Farrer (even though many of his examples are questionable) is the insight that in the Revelation biblical images are reborn and given not just life but new life.

3. The Hebrew Bible as Prophecy.

To introduce a modern analogy from the world of computers, John uses the OT not as hard copy but as soft copy. Because he himself is a writing prophet who goes so far as to insist that nothing be added to or subtracted from what he has written (Rev 22:18-19), John understands that the hard copy—the written text of the Bible—exists, and he has no desire to change it. What is written in Daniel is written. What Ezekiel has written, he has written. John is more interested in the soft copy, the revelation as it came orally from God to the prophets. These ancient oracles inform and shape his own work in his own time. To be sure, John knows them from written texts, whether texts he has read or texts he has heard read in Christian congregations. Such written prophecies, when read aloud, become oral once again and in that sense soft copy. They take on new life in John's visions as part of the language by which he speaks to situations not imagined at the time the prophecies were given. This phenomenon, known to students of literature as intertextuality,* is nowhere better illustrated in the NT than in the Revelation. John is not so much rewriting ancient texts as creating from them (he would say transmitting) something new. John anticipated that his prophecies too would have a continuing life, both written (Rev 22:18-19) and oral (Rev 1:3) in Christian communities, and that they would not replace but stand alongside the Jewish Scriptures. This is what happened.

4. Biblical Language in the Revelation.

How do John's visions make use of the OT, and what parts of it do they use? Only a small sampling is possible.

4.1. Genesis. From the early chapters of Genesis John draws the image of the "tree of life" (Gen 2:9; 3:22, 24) with the promise* that victorious Christians will gain access to that long-guarded treasure (Rev 2:7; 22:2, 14, 19). The "ancient serpent" in the Garden of Eden (Gen 3:1-5) becomes "the great dragon," also known as "the Devil and Satan, the deceiver of the whole world" (Rev 12:9; see Satan). While the curse on the serpent in Genesis 3:14 is ignored in the book of Revelation, the curse's continuation in Genesis 3:15 is taken seriously indeed.

The conflict between the woman and her offspring and the serpent-dragon and his "offspring" becomes the controlling image of Revelation 12 and 13, where the dragon tries unsuccessfully to destroy first the woman's child as soon as he is born (Rev 12:4-5), then the woman herself (Rev 12:13-16) and finally "the rest of her offspring—those who obey God's commandments and hold to the testimony of Jesus" (Rev 12:17, NIV; see Commandments). The dragon carries out the last of these evil intentions by summoning from the sea a beast who looks like him, with "ten horns and seven heads" (Rev 13:1; cf. 12:3) giving the beast his own "power and his throne and great authority" (Rev 13:2, NRSV). Significantly one of the beast's heads "seemed to have received a deathblow, but its mortal wound had been healed" (Rev 13:3, NRSV; cf. Rev 13:12, 14). The beast bears the scars of the conflict prophesied in Genesis 3:15. If Revelation 12 describes the first stage of the prophecy, "enmity between you and the woman," Revelation 13 describes the second, "enmity between your offspring and hers."

4.2. Daniel. At the same time the beast is painted in colors taken from Daniel's dream in Babylon (Dan 7:1-8). Daniel saw four beasts, one like a lion, one like a bear, one like a leopard and the fourth "different from all the beasts that preceded it, and it had ten horns" (Dan 7:7, NRSV). John sees just one beast, with ten horns and seven heads, "and on its horns were ten diadems, and on its heads were blasphemous names. And the beast that I saw was like a leopard, its feet were like a bear's, and its mouth was like a lion's mouth" (Rev 13:1-2, NRSV). It is as if John sees Daniel's four beasts rolled into one. The beast's seven heads are the only conspicuous detail of the vision not rooted in Daniel's dream. Moreover, the grotesque appearance of the beast in Revelation 13 has already shaped to some extent the transformation of the serpent of Genesis in Revelation 12 into a dragon "with seven heads and ten horns" (Rev 12:3).

The use of Daniel in the book of Revelation is evident in John's first vision (Rev 1:12-20). John, on the island of Patmos, sees an angelic figure recognizably similar to one Daniel saw on the bank of the Tigris River: "I looked up and saw a man clothed in linen, with a belt of gold from Uphaz around his waist. His body was like beryl, his face like lightning, his eyes like flaming torches, his arms and legs like the gleam of burnished bronze, and the sound of his words like the roar of a multitude" (Dan 10:5-6, NRSV; cf. Rev 1:13-15). John, like Daniel, falls to the ground but is touched by the figure he sees and told, "Do not fear" (Dan 10:9, 10, 12; cf. Rev 1:17).

Instead of simply "a man," John's angel* is identified as one "like a son of man" (Rev 1:13, NIV), a phrase echoing such passages as Daniel 10:18 ("one in human form," NRSV) and in different settings Daniel 7:13 ("one like a human being") and Ezekiel's vision of the throne of God* with "something that seemed like a human form" above it (Ezek 1:26). That Daniel 7 at least is in John's mind alongside Daniel 10 is clear from other details of his description of the figure he saw: "His head and his hair were white as white wool, white as snow" (Rev 1:14). These comparisons come neither from Daniel's description of the man by the Tigris in Daniel 10 nor from his reference to the "one like a human being" in Daniel 7:13 but from his description of the "Ancient One" into whose presence the "one like a human being" came, whose "clothing was white as snow, and the hair of his head like pure wool" (Dan 7:9, NRSV). Daniel's "Ancient One," his "one like a human being" and his man by the Tigris River all merge into one in John's remarkable opening vision.

John's figure finally identifies himself as the risen Jesus, not by name but with the words "I am the first and the last, and the living one. I was dead, and see, I am alive forever and ever; and I have the keys of Death and Hades" (Rev 1:17-18, NRSV). The point, however, is not to assert that Daniel repeatedly saw Jesus in his visions. Revelation is not interpreting Daniel in the sense in which Jewish or Christian scribes customarily interpreted ancient written texts. Nor is its use of the OT like that of John's Gospel, where Isaiah is quoted with the notice that the prophet saw Jesus' glory* and wrote about him (Jn 12:42), nor like that of Paul, who claimed that the Israelites in the desert "drank from the spiritual rock that followed them, and the rock was Christ" (1 Cor 10:4, NRSV). Instead Revelation borrows Daniel's language to articulate visions that Daniel never saw. There is no interest in Daniel as a book of the Bible or in the intentions of its author, for John is preoccupied with his own visions and consequently with his own authorial intentions.

4.3. Ezekiel. The same is true of the book of Ezekiel. When John first looks into heaven (Rev 4 and 5) he echoes Ezekiel more than Daniel. What he sees there resembles in part what Ezekiel saw centuries before—the throne of God, a rainbow, an expanse of shining crystal and four living creatures around the throne, each with four wings and the four faces of a human being, a lion, an ox and an eagle. In John's vision each living creature has one of the four faces, the expanse of crystal has become a sea of glass, and other details (such as twenty-four elders on twenty-four thrones) have been added, yet John's heaven is still recognizably Ezekiel's. Later, when John receives his call to "prophesy again about many peoples and nations and languages and kings," his experience of taking a scroll, eating it and finding it sweet in his mouth but bitter in his stomach (Rev 10:8-11) virtually reenacts the prophetic call of Ezekiel (Ezek 2:8-3:3).

4.4. Narrative as Prophecy. John's visions do not distinguish biblical prophecy from narrative, and his choice of narratives is not limited to the early chapters of Genesis. Narrative too is prophecy to him. In telling the story of two witnesses who will confront an ungodly world in Jerusalem (Rev 11:1-13), he draws freely and simultaneously on Zechariah's prophecy of two olive trees and a lampstand representing "the two anointed ones who stand by the Lord of the whole earth" (Zech 4:11-14, NRSV) and on well-known biblical stories about Elijah withholding rain from the land (1 Kings 17:1) and Moses turning the waters of Egypt to blood (Ex 7:17-19; see Rev 11:4-6). If Jewish thought customarily summed up the Hebrew Bible as "the law and the prophets" (see e.g. Mt 5:17) without regard for other genres such as poetry, history or wisdom, the book of Revelation largely ignores the category of law and views the whole Bible under the single rubric of prophecy.

4.5. A New World and a New Covenant. John's concluding visions of "a new heaven and a new earth" (Rev 21:1) and of "the holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband" (Rev 21:2; see also 21:9—22:5) blend visions from the books of Ezekiel and Isaiah. The new heaven and new earth echo Isaiah 65:17 and 66:22, while a number of details in John's description of the holy city correspond to Ezekiel's blueprint for a restored temple* (Ezek 40—48)—but with one conspicuous and decisive exception: John "saw no temple in the city, for its temple is the Lord God the Almighty and the Lamb" (Rev 21:22). The key to Revelation's use of the Hebrew Bible is perhaps John's vision of consummation in the new heaven and new earth (Rev 21:3), where "a loud voice from the throne" confirms certain biblical promises made in connection with God's covenant* with Israel, above all Leviticus 26:11-12 ("I will place my dwelling in your midst. . . . And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and you shall be my people") and Ezekiel 37:27 ("My dwelling place shall be with them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people"). Again, however, there is a decisive difference. What John hears from God is a promise not to "people" but to "peoples." The promise to Israel has been broadened to embrace "a great multitude that no one could count, from every nation, from all tribes and peoples and languages, standing before the throne and before the Lamb" (Rev 7:9).

The use of the Bible in the book of Revelation is quite different from its use in Paul's letters, but one passage in Paul (not altogether typical and often said to be non-Pauline) closely parallels John's way of using the Bible, in particular John's vision of the new covenant in Revelation 21:1-8. The only difference is that what John assigns to the future, Paul places in the present: "For we are the temple of the living God; as God said, 'I will live in them and walk among them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Therefore come out from them, and be separated from them, says the Lord, and touch nothing unclean; then I will welcome you, and I will be your father, and you shall be my sons and daughters, says the Lord Almighty' " (2 Cor 6:16-18, NRSV). Without specific citation Paul combines Leviticus 26:11-12 and Ezekiel 37:17 in much the same fashion as John does in Revelation 21:3, and Paul applies the promise of 2 Samuel 7:14 to faithful Christians just as John does in Revelation 21:7. The parallels suggest that John's method of drawing freely on OT language was not unique in early Christianity but surfaced from time to time wherever emphasis was placed on the conviction that the same Spirit (see Holy Spirit) who had inspired the biblical prophets was speaking again through Jesus Christ and his servants.

See also APOCALYPTIC, APOCALYPTICISM; BABYLON; BEASTS, DRAGON, SEA, CONFLICT MOTIF; ESCHATOLOGY; INTERTEXTUALITY; REVELATION, BOOK OF.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. G. K. Beale, The Use of Daniel in Jewish Apocalyptic Literature and in the Revelation of St. John (Lanham, MD: University Press of America, 1984); J. Cambier, "Les images de l'Ancien Testament dans l'Apocalypse," NRT 77 (1955) 113-23; R. H. Charles, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Revelation of St. John (2 vols.; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1920); A. Farrer, A Rebirth of Images: The Making of St. John's Apocalypse (Boston: Beacon, 1963); J. Fekkes III, Isaiah and Prophetic Traditions in the Book of Revelation (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1994); A. Feuillet, The Apocalypse (Staten Island, NY: Alba House, 1965) 77-80; F. Jenkins, The Old Testament in the Book of Revelation (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1976); E. Lohse, "Die alttestamentliche Sprache des Sehers Johannes," ZNW 52 (1961) 122-26; F. D. Mazzaferri, The Genre of the Book of Revelation from a Source-critical Perspective (Berlin and New York: Walter de-Gruyter, 1989); J. R. Michaels, Interpreting the Book of Revelation (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1992) 107-27; S. Moyise, The Old Testament in the Book of Revelation (JSNTSup 115; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995); J. Paulien, "Elusive Allusions: The Problematic Use of the Old Testament in Revelation," BibRes 33 (1988) 37-53; M. Rist, "The Use of the Old Testament by the Author of Revelation," Iliff Review 17 (1960) 3-10; J. P. Ruiz, Ezekiel in the Apocalypse (New York: Peter Lang, 1989); H. B. Swete, The Apocalypse of St. John (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, n.d.) cxl-clviii; P. Trudinger, "Some Observations Concerning the Text of the Old Testament in the Book of Revelation," JTS 17 (1966) 82-88; J. T. Willis, "The Old Testament and the Book of Revelation" in Johannine Studies, ed. J. Priest (Malibu, CA: Pepperdine University, 1989).

J. R. Michaels

OPPONENTS. See ADVERSARIES.

ORACLES. See RELIGIONS, GRECO-ROMAN.

P

PARABLES OF HERMAS. See HERMAS, SHEPHERD OF.

PARAENESIS. See TEACHING, PARAENESIS.

PAROUSIA

Parousia is a quasi-technical term usually used with reference to the future coming of Jesus Christ* in glory* at the end of the world as the consummation of the saving actions of God* and as the culmination of the eschatological process. More popularly (and much less precisely) the term is often equated with the Second Coming of Jesus Christ on the clouds of glory, based mainly on passages which occur in the Gospels (such as Mt 24:3, 27, 37, 39) and in the Pauline epistles (such as 1 Cor 15:23; 1 Thess 2:19; 3:13; 4:15; 5:23; 2 Thess 2:1, 8-9; see DJG and DPL, Eschatology). The Parousia is important in that it serves as an intersection of Christian understandings of christology,* eschatology* and soteriology: as the supreme moment of revelation of Jesus Christ as Lord* for all the created order to see, as the culmination of God's eternal purposes as they are worked out in human affairs and as the time at which the world is judged and believers are granted resurrection* existence and are ultimately united with their Lord.

At the same time, perhaps no other single idea has engendered so much theological debate over the centuries as has the Parousia, given that it has challenged Christians to think afresh about the meaning and significance of eschatological hope.* Insofar as the so-called "delay of the Parousia" (discussed below) has prompted discussion about Jesus' own expectations as well as raise questions about the extent of his human nature (did he know the time of the final Parousia or was he just mistaken?), it has remained an important item on the christological agenda of many modern theologians. Insofar as the Pauline letters, and indeed most of the rest of the NT documents, contain references to the Parousia within them, questions about the reliance of these materials upon Jesus' own ideas about the Parousia arise. Similar questions are prompted about the nature and extent to which specifically Christian eschatological ideas are to be seen as natural developments of Jewish literature in its prophetic, wisdom and apocalyptic traditions.

All of this is to say that the Parousia stands as an important theological crossroads at which many strands of NT theology* and hermeneutical debate come together. To engage in a discussion of the Parousia of Jesus Christ, seemingly at any point, is to enter an exegetical minefield; yet to refuse to engage in such a discussion is to run the risk of overlooking a central feature of NT teaching, one which may in fact go a long way toward clarifying many other critical issues of Christian faith and belief. We will concentrate our discussion on the NT materials addressed within the confines of this volume, but we will necessarily spill over in our analysis into the Gospels, the Pauline letters and other early Christian writings. This is unavoidable given the complex interconnection between them all on such a matter as foundational as the Parousia of Jesus Christ.

1. The Background of the Idea of the Parousia within Jewish Thought
2. The Parousia of Jesus Christ in Acts, Epistles and the Book of Revelation
3. The Delay of the Parousia

1. The Background of the Idea of the Parousia within Jewish Thought.

The concept of the Parousia of Jesus Christ is best viewed as a development of the generalized hope for the future which is found throughout the OT, particularly within the prophetic literature. It is to be seen as intimately related to God's promises to his people that a better future awaited them, a time when injustices would be righted, the world order transformed and divine values made to hold sway in human lives. Within the NT these ideas are particularly associated with expectations of the coming of the kingdom* of God and are given explicit christological content.

There is much to suggest that the idea of an imminent arrival of the kingdom of God was a foundational idea within the thought and teaching of Jesus of Nazareth. Yet insofar as his own messianic self-understanding led him to see his life and ministry as the means of bringing the kingdom of God to earth, it can be said to be realized in the present. It is therefore reasonable to infer that the idea of the Parousia, as it is expressed in the various writings of the NT, is an extension of Jesus' own thought, although understandably it shows signs of Christian expansion and development (see Ladd 1975 on this point). The Pauline letters are especially significant in this regard, inasmuch as they stand as the earliest extant Christian writings. We see within Paul's letters how the apostle reinterpreted the Jewish idea of the Day of the Lord (as contained in such passages as Amos 5:18; Is 2:6-22 and Zech 14:3-5) and reshaped it christologically.

We can also detect the same process of reinterpretation going on in a variety of subsequent Christian writings, especially with regard to Zechariah 14:3-5; the same OT theophany is explicitly cited in Didache 16:7 and is applied to the Parousia of Jesus Christ. Many other Jewish documents of the first and second century A.D. also help to provide an understanding of the idea of the Parousia, notably Jubilees, 1 Enoch 37—71, 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch (although Glasson 1945, 1953 and 1971 strongly disagrees). In short, Christian declarations about the coming Parousia of Jesus Christ arise out of Jewish eschatological thought about the coming of the kingdom of God. At the same time it appears to be rooted more in theophanic descriptions than in messianic belief, although it is difficult to draw hard and fast distinctions between these two focal points, so intertwined are they within Christian writings, apparently from the very beginning.

Such a consideration helps explain how frequently it happens that confusion reigns in the NT writings when it comes to identifying who it is that comes (God or Christ?) in judgment at the final consummation (see the discussion of the various NT documents below). Nevertheless, there is an additional linguistic consideration to keep in mind as well, since the term parousia was used in the larger Hellenistic world at the time that many of the NT writings were being produced.

1.1. Terminological Considerations. It is often noted that the meaning of parousia in Hellenistic Greek is used to denote the "presence" or "arrival" of someone (the Latin equivalent is adventus). Both parousia and adventus are thus used with reference to the arrival of a Roman emperor in a province, such as the visit of the emperor Hadrian as proclaimed on Roman imperial coinage (as Kreitzer 1988 argues). The key thing to be observed here is how the term is used non-eschatologically. It is also interesting to note in this regard that Josephus uses the term parousia in a non-eschatological sense to describe the epiphany of God at Sinai and in the temple,* as well as the revealing of his presence to the Roman legate Petronius during the tension-filled incident when the Emperor* Caligula wished to have his image placed in the temple at Jerusalem (Josephus Ant. 3.5.2 §80; 3.8.5 §203; 18.8.6 §284). At the same time it is important to remember that the expectation of a future deliverer was widespread within the first-century world and that it was often linked to imperial aspirations. We find clear evidence that some writers entertained the suggestion that the future world leader would rule from Judea. A classic example of this is Josephus's prophecy about the Roman Emperor Vespasian being hailed as the Messiah (Josephus J.W. 6.6.4 §§312-313 ; cf. Tacitus Hist. 5.13 and Suetonius Vespasian 4).

We are so accustomed to using the term Parousia exclusively with reference to Jesus Christ, effectively taking it to be shorthand term for "Christian eschatology," that it sometimes comes as a surprise to find that outside of Matthew and the Pauline letters the term parousia occurs only six times in the whole of the NT (Jas 5:7, 8; 2 Pet 1:16; 3:4, 12; 1 Jn 2:28). However, a wide number of related terms and expressions are used outside the Gospels and the Pauline corpus to express the idea of an eschatological fulfillment wherein Jesus Christ is presented as the one who comes to bring God's kingdom to its completion. In this connection, forms of the verb phaneroō appear fourteen times (Heb 9:8, 26; 1 Pet 1:20; 5:4; 1 Jn 1:2 (twice); 2:19, 28; 3:2, 5, 8; 4:8; Rev 3:18; 15:4); and forms of the verb erchomai occur numerous times in (seemingly) eschatological contexts (including Acts 1:11; 3:20; Rev 1:7; 2:5, 16; 3:11, 20; 22:7, 12, 20). Meanwhile, the noun apokalypsis is used three times in 1 Peter 1:7, 13 and 4:13 to speak of the "revelation"* of Jesus Christ in a context which clearly implies his Parousia at the final judgment, and a verbal form of the same word appears in 1 Peter 5:1. Similarly, in Acts 2:20 the writer quotes the LXX of Joel 3:4 using the noun epiphanēs within Peter's sermon at Pentecost.

Several equivalent expressions for the future day of eschatological judgment* are contained in the NT. For example, in Hebrews 10:25 the phrase "the day" is found; in Jude 6 mention is made of "the great day"; and in Revelation 6:17 and 16:14 the complementary phrases "the great day of wrath" and "the great day of God Almighty" appear (see Day of the Lord). It is not always clear within these passages whether the writer(s) has the (so-called) first coming or the Second Coming (or Advent) of Jesus Christ in mind, or even (as in Jude 6 and Rev 6:17; 16:14) whether they are speaking more generally of the great eschatological Day of the Lord and have not yet recast what was originally an OT theological concept into a specifically NT christological form. It needs to be remembered that it is not until the writings of Justin Martyr (C. A.D. 110) that a formal distinction is made between the first and second comings of Christ (they are distinguished in his Apol. I 52.3; cf. Dial. Tryph. 14.4; 118.2), although Hebrews 9:28 is very close to making such a distinction (for further lexicographical details see Oepke, McArthur, Brown, Radl).

1.2. Conceptual Considerations. Different ways of conceptualizing the Parousia of Jesus Christ are to be found within the NT, most arising directly out of the matrix of Jewish eschatology. These are indicative of the astonishing range of theological truth associated with the concept and they witness to its importance as a focal point of Christian belief. They also serve as gathering points for theological interpretation by NT scholars who seek to explore the multifaceted concept we describe as the Parousia. Thus, the Parousia has been understood as an act of vindication, a time of visitation, a decisive moment of judgment, a time of deliverance and the climactic event of consummation. The boundaries of these ideas are difficult to define. At times one dimension, one facet of belief in the Parousia may be focussed upon more than another, but collectively they constitute the multi-dimensional nature of Christian proclamation about the Parousia, the advent of Jesus Christ.

2. The Parousia of Jesus Christ in Acts, Epistles and the Book of Revelation.

References or allusions to the Parousia of Jesus Christ are to be found in nearly all of the NT documents under consideration, the only clear exception being 3 John. However, since 1 John does contain an explicit reference to the Parousia (in 1 Jn 2:28), we can safely say that the idea of the final eschatological act of God in the return of Jesus Christ is one of the few theological ideas to enjoy unanimous support in all strata of the NT.

2.1. The Book of Acts. The interpretation of the eschatology of Acts* is closely tied up with the interpretation of the Gospel of Luke. It is quite impossible to separate the ideas contained within the two documents, and they are best viewed as complementing one another at several key points in matters of eschatology, including the presentation of the Parousia of Jesus Christ (contra Wilson, who argues for a subtle, but important, difference between the eschatology of Lk and that of Acts on this point). Inevitably decisions about the place that eschatology has within the thought of the writer of Luke-Acts become intertwined with suggestions as to the purpose the author had in mind when writing his two-volume work.

Following the lead (if not agreeing with the conclusion) of H. Conzelmann, most scholars accept that in Luke-Acts eschatological hope has been deferred in some way and the belief in the imminent arrival of the Parousia is in some measure downplayed. This adjustment is most notable in the Lukan reworking of Jesus' discourse contained in Mark 13, in the reworking of some of the parables of Jesus (as evidenced in such verses as Lk 18:1; 19:11) and in the ascension* story (Lk 24:50-51; Acts 1:6-11) which prompts a new understanding of the fulfillment of history. Indeed, the very existence of Acts itself may be taken to indicate this shift of eschatological emphasis. As J. D. G. Dunn puts it: "the very act of writing a history of earliest Christianity (rather than an apocalypse) was an admission that the earliest Parousia hope was mistaken and that the Parousia hope itself had faded" (Dunn, 348).

Conzelmann is well known for arguing that the motivation for the composition of Luke-Acts was disappointment over the non-fulfillment of the Parousia. Many important German interpreters of Acts have followed Conzelmann on this point (notably Grässer, Haenchen and Lüdemann, with English-speaking interpreters generally less enthusiastic, the important work of Esler being a notable exception). However, caution needs to be exercised here, and has been in more recent investigation. In the words of W. W. Gasque: "One conclusion that unites nearly all recent study of Lk-Acts is that Conzelmann's classic formulation of the purpose of the Lukan writings, put forward in The Theology of St. Luke, was incorrect. Lk-Acts was certainly not written to deal with the problem of the delay of the parousia" (Gasque, 346). Something of a scholarly consensus has been reached to the effect that Luke-Acts contains many passages which maintain a firm belief in the possibility of an imminent Parousia (contra Conzelmann), while containing at the same time many passages which present it as coming sometime in the indefinite future (Hiers 1973-74 and Wilson offer interpretations along these lines).

So central has the question of the delay of the Parousia been for studies of Luke-Acts (in light of Conzelmann's work) that it is worth considering briefly some of these scholarly investigations, complex and novel though they tend to be. Some interpreters of Luke-Acts have ruthlessly followed the logic of the de-eschatologizing process which is said to be going on in Luke-Acts and identified the resurrection of Jesus with the arrival of the kingdom of God, thus rendering the future Parousia secondary, if not superfluous. Several passages are cited as supporting such an interpretation, including Luke 23:42 and Acts 1:3 which speak of resurrection and the arrival of the kingdom of God together. Others (such as Flender and Franklin) have come to similar conclusions about the ascension as the central eschatological event in the theology of Luke-Acts, an approach which relegates the future Parousia to a position of serving as mere confirmation for the ascension and, conversely, takes the ascension to be an anticipation of the Parousia (see Parsons for a full discussion).

The vision of Stephen* contained in Acts 7:54-60 has also attracted some discussion about it as implying the Parousia of the Son of Man. The fact that the Son of Man is described as "standing" (estōta), in contrast to the description of him as sitting (kathēmenos) in Luke 22:69, is sometimes taken to mean that he stands in order to come at the Parousia. Since the context of the pericope is concerned with the martyrdom* of Stephen, this has led to interpretations of the passage as a personal Parousia which Stephen experiences when he is stoned to death (H. P. Owen and C. K. Barrett [1964] both offer interpretations along these lines). Similarly, the stress placed on the Jewish-Gentile mission within Luke-Acts is sometimes said to be related to the author's handling of the theological problems raised by the delay of the Parousia. Thus in Acts 1:6 the disciples question the risen Lord about the timing of the arrival of the kingdom of God only to find Jesus reply by exhorting them against date-fixing (Acts 1:7), promising them the gift of the Holy Spirit* (Acts 1:8a) and commissioning them with the mission to the Gentiles (Acts 1:8b). The incident is then rounded off by the ascension story which concludes with an assurance of his Parousia in the future (Acts 1:11). Other key passages in Acts also associate the fulfillment of the church's mission with the Parousia, including Acts 3:19-21 where Peter addresses the Jews in Solomon's portico and calls them to repentance so as to hasten the sending of the appointed Christ Jesus; and Acts 10:42 where Jesus Christ is described by Peter (in his speech following the Cornelius* episode) as the judge of the living and the dead who is ordained by God.

The connection between the Parousia and the future judgment that it brings is found in several other places in Acts. Included are: Acts 2:20 where the Day of the Lord is described in the words of a prophecy of Joel 2:31 as "the great and manifest day"; Acts 3:19-21 where it is portrayed as the fulfillment of OT prophecy and the provocative phrase "until the time of the restoration of all things" is used; Acts 17:31 where mention is made of the day on which Christ will judge the world as God's divinely appointed judge; and Acts 24:25 where mention is made of Paul's talking to the Roman procurator Felix and his Jewish wife Drusilla about the future judgment (tou krimatos tou mellontos). It may well be that the open-ended references to future salvation* (such as Acts 2:21, 40; 4:12; 11:14; 13:26; 15:1, 11; 16:17, 30-31) and to hope (such as Acts 2:26; 23:6; 24:15; 26:6-7; 28:20) also have the Parousia as a backdrop in that it is the time of both deliverance and assurance.* The curious linking of persecution* and entry into the kingdom of God contained in Acts 14:22 is taken by some to reflect traditional ideas about persecution of the faithful as a sign of the end times (as it is in 1 Pet). If the Parousia is taken to be the moment of vindication for the persecuted, then a connection can be set up between it and the "entry into the kingdom of God."

One final observation is worth noting in that it is intimately connected with interpretations offered of the Parousia in Acts, particularly those which suggest (partly on an interpretation of key passages in Acts) that the idea of the Parousia was not part of Jesus' own thought and teaching. We have noted (see 1.2 above) that one common conceptualization of the Parousia is to view it as an act of vindication. J. A. T. Robinson (1957), for example, pursued this line of thought, suggesting that early on in Christian thinking the Parousia was taken to be the vindication of Jesus Christ to God, and that this was accomplished in his resurrection* from the dead. A crucial point here is that there is no temporal lag between the resurrection of Jesus Christ and his vindication as Lord at the Parousia; in fact, Jesus' resurrection is seen as the event which serves as his vindication. Thus Robinson argues that the two (resurrection and Parousia) are twin aspects of a single event, and he points to Acts 2:36 as evidence for this association of Parousia with Jesus' resurrection/vindication (Acts 17:31 might also be called into service on this point since it declares that the resurrection of Jesus from the dead serves as a guarantee [pistis] for the Parousia).

Even so, Robinson continues (1956), there is a stage of theological thinking which is prior to this, a stage reflected in Acts 3:18-21. This is a passage that is generally accepted as expressing expectation of the Parousia of Jesus Christ following the conversion of the Jews. However, Robinson argued, highly contentiously, that the passage merely proclaims that Jesus is the Messiah-elect and that the messianic age is yet to be inaugurated. The net result of this line of argumentation is that the future Parousia, far from being the eschatological culmination of God's purposes in the glorious appearance of Jesus Christ, is taken to be the time at which Jesus will be confirmed as the Messiah (cf. Rom 1:3-4, a passage which figures prominently in debates about adoptionism). As a result, Robinson describes Acts 3:18-21 as "the most primitive christology of all," while decrying the tendency for interpreters of Acts to read traditional Parousia beliefs into it (F. F. Bruce 1988, 60, counters by describing the passage as arguably containing "the most primitive eschatology of all"; C. K. Barrett 1985 offers additional discussion). In that Acts 3:18-21 does not explicitly speak of Jesus as the Messiah by virtue of his resurrection (in contrast to Acts 2:36) it paves the way, so Robinson concluded, for the eventual development of a belief in the Second Coming of Jesus Christ at the end of time.

There has been much critical reaction to Robinson's theory and his interpretation of the Parousia passages in Acts has been largely rejected (his handling of Acts 10:42 seems almost sleight-of-hand!). Nevertheless, it has engendered much discussion about the place of the Parousia in Christian belief and his views are a reflection of the thinking of many today.

2.2. Hebrews. Few would dispute the essentially pastoral nature of Hebrews.* The fact that the anonymous author is addressing real concerns within the congregation he writes to is clear, as is the fact that he sets all of his "word of exhortation" (logos paraklēseōs, Heb 13:22) against a backdrop of traditional Jewish eschatological expectations, an approach which distinguishes him from the platonic ideas of Philo of Alexandria with whom he is often compared. The frequent use of the term "salvation (sōtēria) is a good indication of this; generally it is used in contexts which are eschatological in tone and associate the salvation hoped for with the Parousia of Jesus Christ as the time it is either granted or finds its fulfillment (Heb 1:14; 2:3, 10; 5:9; 6:9). Nowhere is this made more explicit than in Hebrews 9:26-28 where the future Parousia of Jesus Christ (verse 28) is set over against the reference in verse 26 to his appearance as a human being who dies a sacrificial death* "once for all at the end of the age." Clearly the writer thought Christians to be living in "the last days" (Heb 1:2) with the "powers of the age to come" (Heb 6:6) impinging upon them.

Not only does the key word "salvation" (sōtēria) appear in Hebrews 9:28, but so too does the curious description of Christ's future "appearance" for a second time (the verb ophthēsetai is here used of him, a verb which is often used with eschatological overtones). Nowhere else in the NT is the future Parousia described in terms of the second appearance of Jesus Christ. So unusual is this expression that it has led to an interesting suggestion (as argued by Bruce 1964 and Lane 1985) that the cultic imagery of the high priest entering the temple* to make sacrifice* on behalf of the people on the Day of Atonement is ultimately responsible for the description of the re-appearance of Jesus Christ the High Priest (see Priest). Just as the people of Israel* waited for the Jewish high priest to return after he had offered sacrifice, so too do the people of the new covenant* now wait eagerly for Christ's return following his sacrifice offered once and for all (Sir 50:5-10 is an important comparative text for this idea).

The other key text which makes explicit reference to the future coming of Christ is Hebrews 10:35-37. Here allusion is made in Hebrews 10:37 to an expectation of the imminent coming of the Messiah by means of a midrashic reworking of Habakkuk 2:3-4 (see Old Testament in Hebrews). The effect is reminiscent of the description of Jesus as "the coming one" (ho erchomenos) in the Gospels (Mt 11:3; Luke 7:19-20; Jn 6:14; 11:27) and Isaiah 26:20 (see Lewis for an interesting interpretation of the passage). The explicitness of the language used in Hebrews 10:37 is probably an indication that the delay of the Parousia was one of the pastoral problems in the church to which the anonymous writer addresses his exhortation (as Attridge argues).

In general the future Parousia of Christ is described throughout Hebrews in terms of its being a time of judgment, as in Hebrews 10:25 where the readers are warned to act accordingly as they "watch for the approaching day," a phrase which is sometimes seen as predictive of the fall of Jerusalem and is often invoked as an argument for the pre-A.D. 70 dating of Hebrews. Beyond this key passage the judgment theme is a prominent one throughout Hebrews, finding explicit reference in a number of places, many of which speak of God as the judge (Heb 2:2; 4:1, 12-13; 6:2, 4-8; 9:27; 10:27, 30-31; 12:5-11, 18-19, 23, 25, 29; 13:4, 17). Given the frequency of this theme, the suggestion of G. Buchanan that the original letter (Heb 1:1—12:29) ended with the citation of Deuteronomy 4:24 ("The Lord your God is a devouring fire") and that the concluding chapter 13 is thus to be viewed as an appendix, is not as far-fetched as it might first appear. However, his argument that Hebrews 1:1—12:29 is a midrashic homily based upon Psalm 110 does not seem to provide a sufficient base for the eschatological element so determinative in the letter.

B. Lindars, in contrast, offers an interpretation which makes Hebrews 13 the key to understanding the letter as a whole, including its eschatological teaching. As a means of emphasizing the terrible nature of the future judgment the author cites several passages from the OT about the giving of the law* on Mount Sinai (drawn from Ex 19—20 and Deut 4—5). His point is that the future Parousia of Jesus Christ will be an even greater cataclysm than was the giving of the Mosaic law. The prominence of the idea of future judgment, whether exacted by God or Jesus his Messianic agent, is hardly surprising given the author's basic intentions of warning his audience against the dangers of apostatizing from their Christian faith. Interestingly, some recent interpretations of Hebrews have linked this move toward apostasy* specifically with the idea of the Parousia of Christ. Thus Lindars suggests a crisis arose within the church about postbaptismal sin which was causing a drift toward apostasy. As Lindars remarks: "They simply assumed that they would remain in a state of grace until the parousia" (Lindars, 13). Not all would agree with such an assessment of the root problem being addressed by the author, but it certainly demonstrates how the idea of the Parousia figures prominently in recent interpretations of Hebrews.

The novel idea of a "Sabbath rest" in Hebrews 4:9 (sabbatismos, a hapax in the NT; but see Barn. 15.1-5) is also to be seen as a demonstration of the eschatological context of the epistle as a whole (the related term katapausis appears eight times in Heb 3:11, 18; 4:1, 3, 5, 10, 11; the corresponding verb katapauō is used three times in Heb 4:4, 8, 10). This is closely related to the way in which the Christian life is described as a journey of faith throughout Hebrews. In Hebrews 11:13 the believers on such a journey are specifically noted to be "pilgrims" (parepidēmoi; Käsemann 1984, whose assumption about Gnosticism as generating the idea must be questioned; cf. R. McL. Wilson; Johnsson provides a thorough discussion of the theme using a phenomenological model).

Such a travel motif becomes all the more related to an eschatological mindset when we recall that Jesus is described in Hebrews 12:2 as the "Pioneer and Perfector" of faith,* the one who not only begins but brings to completion the journey of faith. It is difficult not to see the future Parousia of Jesus Christ as the time when his role as "Perfector" is played out, a suggestion which also helps to make sense of the curious declaration made in Hebrews 4:9 about Joshua not giving "rest" to the people of God. It seems certain that the author is playing with the name "Joshua" (Iēsous), seeing the OT character as a prefigurement of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The frequent use of forms of the verb teleioō (9 times), together with the abstract nouns "maturity" (teleiotēs) in Hebrews 6:1 and "perfection" (teleiotēs) in Hebrews 7:11, are also related to this journey motif. Taken together they indicate the ultimate goal, the Parousia of Christ, to which everything, including Christian discipleship as well as the world order, is moving (see Hübner, Carlston, Peterson). This future perspective also finds expression in Hebrews 12:18-24 and 13:14 where it is connected with the coming heavenly Jerusalem* (Barrett 1956 offers a solid discussion of both the journey motif and the heavenly city motif as integral parts of the author's eschatological mindset; MacRae develops the heavenly temple motif further, although the distinction he makes between the Alexandrian imagery of the author and the apocalyptic imagery of the recipients of the epistle seems forced upon the text).

In summary, most commentators agree that eschatology has a central, if not overtly expressed, place within the thought of Hebrews. The controlling idea of Christianity as a new covenant* is based upon the eschatological understanding of the author, who saw Jesus, particularly through his atoning death, as the fulfillment of the promises made by God to his people of old. To the author of Hebrews, therefore, Christians are seen to be delicately poised between an inaugurated eschatology and a futuristic one which focussed on the Parousia of Jesus Christ as the moment of hope and judgment. As W. Manson puts it: "He sees all things in the light of the crisis brought about by the announcement of the Eternal World in Jesus and the swift approach of the end of the present order, including the Last Judgment." (Manson, 9, who argues on the basis of the story of Stephen in Acts 7 that there is a close connection between Heb and the early Christianity of Jerusalem, especially with the drive toward world-wide mission). The ability to combine both spatial and temporal models of reality (the horizontal and the vertical) so as to form his eschatological message and to do so while employing the cultic and sacrificial imagery drawn from Judaism stands as the distinctive contribution of Hebrews within the NT.

2.3. James. This epistle (see James) has been called "the most consistently ethical document in the New Testament." (Laws, 27). It should not be surprising, therefore, that the eschatological materials are closely intertwined with its ethical* sections; effectively eschatological punishment and reward are used to reinforce the author's demands for righteous living. Some commentators (such as Reicke) have interpreted the ethical demands made by the author as arising out of a setting of real persecution. Others (such as Laws) have taken the tribulations* to reflect the everyday struggles of an individual and downplay a setting of real persecution. In either case, the application of traditional eschatological forms, including the sober warning of a future Parousia of Jesus Christ, is made by the author of the epistle.

There are a number of passages in James which reflect a traditional eschatological viewpoint concerning the certainty of future judgment. Thus we see in James 1:12 a powerful declaration that the faithful follower of Christ who has endured a time of trial will receive a crown of life in the future judgment (cf. Rev 2:10 and 1 Pet 5:4); whereas James 2:12-13 promises a future judgment according to the law of freedom*; and James 4:11-12 where judging one's brother is condemned in view of the fact that God judges us all. It is not unreasonable to assume that the future Parousia of Jesus Christ is the time at which God's judgment is enacted. Judgment is to be seen as a key eschatological motif for the author of James and is thus closely connected to his understanding of the Parousia of Christ. Similarly, another eschatological image is found in James 1:18, where Christians are described as "firstfruits of his [God's] creation." If the eschatological use of aparchē in Paul's letters (as in Rom 8:23; 1 Cor 15:20, 23; cf. Rev 14:4) is anything to go by, it suggests that the idea of the Parousia underlies the author's thought here by virtue of its association with the present possession of the Spirit and the future resurrection of the body.

However, the most sustained section of James which deals with eschatological matters is James 5:1-11, an exhortative section which blends a severe pronouncement of future judgment and a comforting word of assurance about God's mercy* together with a double-barreled declaration about the Parousia of the Lord (Jas 5:7-8; Feuillet's attempt to interpret the passage as the historical coming of Jesus to the nation Israel culminating in the debacle of A.D. 70 must be regarded as unconvincing). The passage contains several interesting references to the judgment, including James 5:9 where Christians are told to stop complaining about each other since the Judge stands ready at the door (as in Rev 3:20?); and James 5:12 where the prohibition against oath-taking is asserted lest believers fall under God's judgment.

Of these passages, James 5:9 provides the most opportunity for interpretative debate in that it raises questions about who is understood to be the judge. Most commentators (including Laws, Davids, Martin and Moo) interpret Jesus Christ as the judge, usually on the basis of the parallelism between James 5:9 and the preceding verse. Yet despite the clear reference to the future Parousia of Christ in James 5:7-8, the urgency and frenetic concern which often characterizes other discussions of the theme is missing here; it is simply asserted with a calm assurance which is encapsulated in the call for patience among the "brethren" (makrothymēsate oun adelphoi). As R. P. Martin says: "The postponement of the Parousia is not the problem vexing James's readers, nor the question of why the end does not come soon" (Martin, 188).

There is some debate about whether kyrios in James 5:7-8 means God or Christ (as Laws rightly notes). There is something to be said for it being God, especially since the verses immediately preceding (Jas 5:4-5) speak of a "day of slaughter" and seem to use traditional Day of the Lord battle imagery drawn from Jewish prophetic and apocalyptic literature (such as Is 34:2; Ezek 21:15; Jer 12:3; 25:34 and 1 Enoch 94:8-9; contra Blackman who takes the "day of slaughter" to be an image of feasting following victory). Likewise, the three references to kyrios following (in Jas 5:10-11) are also best taken as having God in mind, although some have interpreted the allusion in James 5:10 to refer to the Parousia of Jesus Christ on the strength of the unusual phrase "the end" in the verse (see Gordon). This leaves James 5:7-8 as one of the few places in the epistle where something explicitly Christian is said, making it (together with the two mentions of Iēsous in Jas 1:1 and 2:1) a key focal point in debates about whether James is a Christian or a Jewish document.

2.4. 1 Peter. Of all of the epistles in the NT 1 Peter* demonstrates most clearly an atmosphere of persecution and oppression (whether this is to be regarded as actual or potential is a matter of considerable scholarly debate). Given the frequent reference to the trials and tribulations that are faced by the church, it is perhaps understandable that the Parousia of Jesus Christ has such a high profile within the letter in that it concentrated on a time of future hope and certainty in the midst of a time of despair and uncertainty. As E. G. Selwyn remarks (1956, 394): "there is no book in the New Testament where the eschatology is more closely integrated with the teaching of the document as a whole" (Davids 1990, 17, concurs: "apocalyptic eschatology colors the whole of the epistle").

The term parousia does not appear in the epistle, although apokalypsis is used as a virtual equivalent three times (Selwyn argues that the use of apokalypsis reflects Petrine authorship of the letter, based upon the use of the term in the Gospel materials; Michaels 1988 suggests a comparison between 1 Peter and Jewish apocalypses, such as 2 Baruch and 4 Ezra, on the basis of questions of genre raised by the use of the term). Nevertheless, allusions and veiled references to the Parousia are scattered throughout the epistle, although most simply give tacit expression to traditional eschatological expectations rather than adding anything startlingly new or taking the idea in a different direction. Indeed, the one wholly distinctive passage in the epistle, the story of Christ preaching to the spirits of Noah in prison (1 Pet 3:19-20), does not appear to contain any explicit link to the author's hope in the Parousia (although Michaels 1966-67 offers an eschatological interpretation based on 1 Pet 3:17 which introduces the passage).

The epistle opens with a hymn* of praise and thanksgiving (1 Pet 1:3-12), followed by an exhortation to holy living (1 Pet 1:13-25) which contains a cluster of images and terms calling to mind the future Parousia of Jesus Christ. The term apokalypsis appears twice in these verses (1 Pet 1:7, 13), offering consolation to a persecuted congregation based upon the assurance of his appearing. The Christians are said to have an "imperishable inheritance" (1 Pet 1:4), which is "kept in heaven"; is "guarded through faith" (1 Pet 1:5); and is "to be revealed in the last time" (1 Pet 1:5). In 1 Peter 1:13 they are exhorted to set their hope "completely" (teleiōs) on the coming revelation of Jesus Christ, an exhortation which grounds the development of Christian maturity firmly in eschatological expectation and demonstrates yet again how central the idea of "completion" (whether it be moral or historical) is to the notion of the future Parousia. In 1 Peter 1:23 the Christians are said to be born "not of perishable but imperishable," an image Paul uses in 1 Corinthians 15:42 with reference to the resurrection of Jesus and applies to his description of what happens to the believers at Christ's Parousia.

The unusual phrase "the day of visitation" (en hēmera episkopēs) occurs in 1 Peter 2:12, an expression probably taken from Isaiah 10:3 and used here as part of the author's exhortation to his readers to live as befits their status as aliens and exiles in the world until the coming of the Parousia (a similar phrase also occurs regularly in the Qumran materials, such as in 1QS 3:18: "the time of his visitation"). In 1 Peter 3:9 mention is made of inheriting a blessing* (presumably given at the Parousia) and in 1 Peter 3:15 the readers are called to the apologetic task and "to account for the hope" that is within them, a hope that (presumably) finds its fulfillment in the Parousia of Jesus Christ.

In 1 Peter 4:5 the lawless are said to have to face Christ "who is ready to judge the living and the dead"; and in 1 Peter 4:7 it is declared in no uncertain terms that "the end of all things is at hand" (pantōn de to telos ēngiken, note the use of the perfect; cf. Mk 1:15; Jas 5:8) with a corresponding list of ethical demands following in 1 Peter 4:7-11. Similarly, 1 Peter 1:9 asserts that the result of the believers' faith is that they obtain the "salvation of their souls." Meanwhile, in 1 Peter 4:13 we have the third explicit reference to the apokalypsis of Christ contained in 1 Peter; the declaration here is given to console the Christians in light of the persecution they were undergoing. The imagery of this verse is somewhat obscure and many commentators turn to the apocalyptic idea of "the messianic woes" (as a prelude to the arrival of the Messiah) in explanation (Best is a good example). This is followed by another passage (1 Pet 4:17-19) in which God exercises judgment in the church.* This stands as a prefigurement of what he will do to the world at the end of time when Christ comes (Selwyn 1956, 397, suggests that with the exception of 1 Pet 4:5 it is the Father rather than Christ who is thought of as the judge throughout the epistle). The verb "to make manifest" (phaneroō), which appeared already in 1 Peter 1:20 as an expression of the incarnation, is used again in 1 Peter 5:4, this time as an expression of the Parousia. Here it occurs in conjunction with a rather unusual title for Jesus (found only here in the NT), describing him as "the Great Shepherd*" (ho archipoimēn, cf. Heb 13:20).

As further evidence of the prominence of eschatological concerns in 1 Peter we note that the key word "glory"* (doxa), often associated with the idea of the Parousia, appears ten times in the epistle; the corresponding verb (doxazō) occurs four times. Most of these occurrences appear in contexts which refer to, or at least imply, the future Parousia of Christ (including 1 Pet 1:7, 11, 21 (?); 2:12; 4:11, 13; 5:1, 4, 10). 1 Peter uses the word "salvation"* (sōtēria) four times (1 Pet 1:5, 9, 10; 2:2), again as another key expression of his hope in the Parousia of Christ. The single instance of the verb "exalt" (hypsoō) in 1 Pet 5:6 is perhaps related to this expression of hope, particularly as it appears to speak about a time of future exaltation,* although here it is again interesting to note that God, not Christ, is the active agent. The idea of Christian life as an earthly pilgrimage toward a heavenly destination, which finds the Parousia as the time of fulfillment, is sometimes argued to underlie the letter (see the discussion of Heb above). The references to such terms as paroikos ("stranger") and parepidēmos ("stranger") might be taken to support such an eschatological interpretation, although sociological studies of the epistle (like that of Elliott) offer another way of interpreting these.

Some debate about the tense of the verb "rejoice" (see Joy) in 1 Peter 1:8 (agalliate/ agalliasthe; Is it present or future?) has arisen, a matter which is tangentially related to the question of the Parousia in 1 Peter. If the present tense variant is adopted then the delicate balance between the present experience of the believers and their future hope, so characteristic of the epistle as a whole, is maintained (see Davids 1990 and Michaels 1988 for differing views on this particular point).

2.5. 2 Peter. The interpretation of the eschatological teaching of 2 Peter* is intimately tied up with questions about its authorship, intended audience and date. Decisions about who wrote the document, to whom and when tend to govern how the eschatological teaching contained within the epistle is interpreted. The fact that Paul's letters are mentioned (in 1 Pet 3:15-16); that allusions appear to both 1 Peter and the epistle of Jude (in 2 Pet 2:1-18; 3:1-3); and that the first explicit citation of 2 Peter occurs in the work of Origen (c. A.D. 215-51) have all been used to date the epistle. For many, the operating assumption that 2 Peter is a pseudonymous* work of the second century (c. 150), employing the form of a dying saint's last testament and probably directed to the church in Rome,* offers the best way to proceed. However, the matter is still a subject of some debate, and a wide range of dates has been proposed (M. Green suggests a date in the 60s; R. Bauckham [1983] a date of 80-90; B. Reicke a date of 90; J. N. D. Kelly a date of 100-110; J. H. Elliott [1992] a date in the first quarter of the second century; and C. E. B. Cranfield a date in the first half of the second century).

There are several passages in 2 Peter which might be described as expressing a generalized eschatological hope and which thus have the Parousia as a backdrop. It is clear that matters relating to the future are central to the author's thought and form the basis of his reply to his doubting opponents who perhaps are motivated by an over-realized eschatological perspective (although Bauckham [1983] has reservations about this). Explicit reference to "the power and the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" is made in 2 Peter 1:16; a number of supportive echoes of this essentially eschatological belief are also to be noted. For example, in 2 Peter 1:14 the author makes reference to his future resurrection by means of the curious phrase "the putting off of my bodily-tent" (perhaps as a deliberate echo of 2 Cor 5:1-4?). This, the author of 2 Peter asserts, is something which will take place in the near future and was revealed to him by the Lord Jesus Christ.

References to a time in the future when the believer will be provided "an entrance into the kingdom" (2 Pet 1:11); to the future "dawning of the day" and "the appearance of the morning star" (2 Pet 1:19; cf. Rev 2:28); to "the destruction" (2 Pet 2:3); to "the day of judgment" (2 Pet 2:9); and to "destruction" (2 Pet 2:12) might all legitimately be seen as expressive of the eschatological framework of the author's thought in which the Parousia of the Lord holds central place. It appears that even the curious reference to the transfiguration of Jesus Christ contained in 2 Peter 1:17-18 is to be viewed as a prefigurement of the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ, which is to be revealed in the Parousia. It is a matter of some speculation, however, why the author chooses the transfiguration rather than the resurrection of Jesus Christ for this (perhaps the gospel tradition that Peter was an eye-witness at the transfiguration is central here).

It is 2 Peter 3 which has occupied the major share of exegetical discussion since the chapter contains the most explicit treatment of the delay of the Parousia in the NT (see below). Based on his interpretation of this chapter, E. Käsemann (1964) described the epistle as "an apologia for primitive Christian eschatology," arguing that the Petrine community to whom the letter was written was disturbed and embarrassed by the nonappearance of Christ. In Käsemann's estimation any interpretation of the epistle as a whole must proceed giving due weight to this fact (it is worth noting that Käsemann effectively defines apocalyptic as belief in the imminent Parousia of Christ). Primitive Christian hope in the imminent Parousia of Christ has given way to skepticism and downright derision by certain segments of the community. It is to this that the author of 2 Peter 3 (so Käsemann argues) responds.

Yet, ironically (Käsemann concludes), the apologia which the author of 2 Peter puts forward is rather inadequate to the task, misunderstanding the very nature of the eschatological message as it does and thus reflecting the retrograde step toward "early Catholicism"* (Frühkatholizismus) which the church took. The author of 2 Peter appeals to traditional apocalyptic eschatology, the idea of the coming of the Lord at the Parousia, but betrays via his unconvincing use of Psalm 90:4 that he himself has given up on any belief in Christ's imminent return. In fact Käsemann goes so far as to suggest that the apologia is in effect "the demonstration of a logical absurdity" (Käsemann, 194) as far as the delay of the Parousia is concerned (a remark which causes Bauckham 1983 to summarize Käsemann's interpretation as a "full-scale theological attack on 2 Pet").

Such an interpretation of 2 Peter 3 has been contested in various quarters, not least because of its assumption that the challenge to traditional eschatological beliefs is being generated by Christian sectarians who are Gnostic* in orientation (Käsemann assumes that there is an inherent conflict between Gnosticism and primitive Christian eschatological belief, which saw fulfillment as a future, as opposed to a present, matter). Influential though Käsemann's interpretation has been, and there have been important variations of it (such as that offered by Talbert, which focuses on the identification of the heresy being confronted as the key to the eschatology of the epistle, and Fornberg, which places the epistle within a concrete situation, namely a thoroughly Hellenized society), it is now recognized to be an anachronistic interpretation which is badly in need of correction (both Moore and Bauckham 1983 offer solid critiques of Käsemann's interpretation).

It is important to remember that the crucial verse which mentions the nonappearance of the Parousia (2 Pet 3:4) is in fact a citation of the mocking words of his opponents (see Adversaries) by the author of the epistle, which elicits his rebuking quote of Psalm 90:4 ("With the Lord one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day") in 2 Peter 3:8. This verse, incidentally, is cited by M. Green as evidence for the Petrine authorship of the letter in that it does not go on to express an explicit chiliasm (see Millennium) so common of most second-century works (such as Barn. 15.4 and Justin Martyr Dial. Tryph. 81.3-4) which cite the OT passage. The author Peter then moves on in 2 Peter 3:9 to interpret the OT verse as demonstrating God's forbearance by providing additional time for people to repent, as well as warning in 2 Peter 3:10 against precise calculations of the exact time of the Parousia of the Lord by means of the stock image of a thief coming in the night at an unknown hour (see Mt 24:43 and 1 Thess 5:2). The passage also makes reference in 2 Peter 3:12 to "the day of God," effectively reinforcing the OT prophetic tradition which underlies the hope in the Parousia (Sidebottom stresses the way in which the Parousia is generally presented as theophany rather than christophany within the letter). It is clear that there is a close connection between the Parousia and the judgment theme which appears frequently within the letter. Illustrations of how God judged the world in the past, notably through the flood in the days of Noah (2 Pet 3:5-7), are given as a warning of the judgment which is to come at the Parousia of Christ.

Interestingly, the author of 2 Peter offers some novel ideas about the cosmic implications of this Parousia of Jesus Christ in 2 Pet 3:10-13, closely associating the Parousia with the final conflagration of creation (the nearest OT equivalent is Zeph 3:8, although many Stoic parallels are in evidence). He says that the "heavens and the earth are reserved for fire" (2 Pet 3:7; see Heaven, New Heaven); that the "elements will be dissolved with fire" (2 Pet 3:10, 12), and that "a new heaven and earth will issue forth in which righteousness dwells" (2 Pet 3:13).

J. H. Neyrey (1993) attempts to follow through literary approaches of interpretation, giving attention to the rhetorical argument being pursued within the epistle as a whole. At the same time Neyrey combines this insight with a number of social-science models designed to help facilitate understanding of the letter in that they sensitize us to the fact that the cultural perspective of the author of 2 Peter is so vastly different from our own. What is important to note for our purposes is the way that Neyrey identifies the debate about the Parousia as central to this formal structure of the letter. He outlines a highly formalized series of challenges and replies about some aspect of divine truth (notably eschatological matters associated with the Parousia and judgment) which are addressed by the author. A five-part division of the body of the letter results, which emphasizes its nature as a document juxtaposing polemic and apology (2 Pet 1:16-18; 1:19-21; 2:1-3, 4-10a; 3:1-3, 4-7; 3:8-9, 10-13).

While we may feel that the outline structure Neyrey imposes on the epistle is not without its problems, his interpretation does give proper stress to the centrality of the Parousia as one of the central matters being debated. The proposal is imaginative and has much to offer, including some interesting suggestions about a possible connection between the opponents being addressed in the letter and the Epicurean philosophical school which wrestled with the problems of theodicy and the delay of divine judgment. We find, so Neyrey argues (1980), precisely these issues being debated within 2 Peter (an argument supported by the association of both 2 Pet 2:11 and 3:9a with 3:4 in terms of reconstructing the opponents' views).

It seems clear that the writer used the Parousia-judgment motif as a means to exhort his audience, notably the sectarians he is seeking to correct, to right ethical behavior and dutiful Christian service (2 Pet 3:11-12). The delay between the resurrection of Jesus Christ and his Parousia is thus to be viewed as a period of God's grace, offering time for the church to enjoy both eager expectation and to discharge its responsibilities. In 2 Peter 3:12 this is characterized by the expression "waiting and hastening the Parousia." The author of the letter concludes his exhortation to the church with another unusual, if indirect, reference to the Parousia of Jesus Christ when he says, "To him be the glory both now and to the day of eternity" (2 Pet 3:18).

2.6. Jude. Like its literary counterpart 2 Peter, the epistle of Jude* contains a number of passages which speak of or allude to the future Parousia of Jesus Christ and the judgment that his appearing brings, including Jude 4, 6, 9, 13. Evocative imagery is used by the author to communicate this idea of future judgment, including "fire" (Jude 22), "gloomy darkness" (Jude 13) and analogy from the three OT figures (Cain, Balaam and Korah) upon whom divine judgment is pronounced in Jude 5-7 (note "the eternal fire" in verse 7). On a more positive note, the letter is addressed (Jude 1) to "those called and kept" by Jesus Christ (cf. 1 Pet 1:4 where a similar expression is also used with reference to the believers at the Parousia); in Jude 21 it exhorts its readers to "wait for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life" (Bauckham 1983 takes the verb to be an imperative); and in Jude 24-25 the author also speaks of a future time of glory and joy accomplished through the saving act of God in Christ. Again it seems likely that Christ's future Parousia is in mind within all of these passages.

Moreover, the most important of the references in Jude to the Parousia occurs in Jude 14-16 where the author cites from the pseudepigraphal 1 Enoch 1:9, creatively reworking an OT image of theophany to serve his own particular purposes (see Non-Canonical Writings). It appears that he does this in order to proclaim the assurance of Christ's judgment upon the godless opponents who have invaded the church and are causing problems for it (we see hints of their disruptive influence in Jude 4 and 19). This is so despite the fact that the reference to kyrios in Jude 14 is probably a christological refinement of the passage from 1 Enoch 1:9, which speaks more vaguely of "he" (meaning God). The result is that the passage is better viewed as a christophany rather than a theophany (see Osburn and VanderKam for a discussion of this). Further debate about Jude 14 focuses on the aorist tense of ēlthen (a change from the Greek versions of 1 Enoch which have the present tense verb erchetai). Most commentators take this to reflect a Semitic prophetic perfect, expressing what is meant to be a future event as if it has already happened. The openness to Jewish pseudepigraphal literature in Jude is also evidenced by the allusion to legends surrounding the dispute between Michael and the devil over the body of Moses in Jude 8-9, probably based on Testament of Moses (see Bauckham 1983, 65-76, for a detailed study of this). Again the Lord's "rebuke" (at the end of Jude 9) could be associated with the judgment that comes at Christ's Parousia.

In any event, the epistle of Jude does not deal with the problem of the delay of the Parousia as explicitly as does 2 Peter, although his opponents seem to have adopted an overrealized eschatology which led them to deny the Lord Jesus Christ (Jude 4) in that they denied the need for a future resurrection and judgment at the Parousia (similar to the situation we see recorded in 2 Tim 2:17-18). If such an interpretation of the opponents' "denial of the Lord Jesus Christ" is allowed, we can infer a similarity of circumstance between Jude and 2 Peter wherein proponents of these ideas are challenged and rebuked by the respective authors of the letters. The fact that within the two epistles the same word is used to describe the opponents (the noun "scoffers" [empaiktai] which appears only in these two places within the NT) lends weight to this suggestion (Rowston and Cavallin both discuss the possibility of a relationship between the opponents being addressed within the two epistles). However, the word may appear in 2 Peter 3:3 simply because it is borrowed from Jude, and it is by no means certain that the situation addressed in 2 Peter is also at the root of the problems tackled in Jude. Debates about an early dating of Jude may have some bearing on the question of the Parousia hope that is contained within it (Ellis suggests a date between 55-65; Robinson 1976 a date of 61-62), although a later date has also been proposed.

2.7. The Johannine Epistles. The most important text in the Johannine epistles (see John, Letters of) which makes mention of the Parousia of Jesus Christ is 1 John 2:28. Remarkably, this is the only instance in the Johannine letters where the term parousia is used, a fact which has led some commentators (such as Bultmann 1973) to assign the verse to a later editor (Schnackenburg 1992 is more cautious on this point, although he too sees the problems posed by the expression; Marshall 1978, 166, is more dismissive of Bultmann's theory of a later redactor, describing it as "unnecessary and unconvincing"). The verse concludes a short section (1 Jn 2:18-29) which demonstrates the eschatological mindset of the author. The declaration "it is the last hour" occurs twice in 1 Jn 2:18, and it clearly is meant to indicate the author's belief that his readers were living at the point of the consummation of the age and argues that this is confirmed by severe tensions within the community (the appearance of antichrists*!) which has led to some members breaking fellowship and leaving (1 Jn 2:19).

The declaration made in 1 John 2:28 is somewhat unusual in that no explicit mention is made of Jesus Christ himself—the key verb phanerōthē ("revealed") is left indefinite, as is the autou ("his") which qualifies the word parousia. The obscurity of 1 John 2:28—3:2, with its fluctuation of focus between Jesus and God, is noted by J. Lieu, who remarks that the lack of precision in the author's thought means that "we cannot speak with any confidence of Jesus' eschatological role in 1 John" (Lieu, 73). Nevertheless, there is little serious doubt that the Parousia of Jesus Christ is in mind within the passage, especially since the verse begins with a reference to "remaining in him"; the verb menein ("to remain") is used seven times in 1 John 2:18-29 and ultimately links back to "Jesus Christ the righteous" in 1 John 2:1.

The writer's injection of the imminent future Parousia in 1 John 2:28 is sometimes taken as a response to the disputes within the Johannine community which have become overbalanced in favor of a realized eschatology (both Houlden and Brown offer discussion on this, as does Grayston, although he suggests that the writer of 1 Jn means the past resurrection of Jesus Christ and not a future coming when he uses the term parousia here). In any event, the verse prompts a call for Christian faithfulness and steadfastness, so that shame can be avoided when Christ comes and boldness (parrēsia) be seen to characterize the believer's life (Smalley thinks that the author is making a deliberate play on the words parousia and parrēsia in the verse).

However, the hope of the Parousia is not restricted to the single reference to the term in 1 John. Several other passages also hint at the importance of the future revelation of Jesus Christ for the writer. For example, 1 John 3:2-3 appears to make veiled allusion to the future appearance of Jesus Christ and the fact that when he appears the faithful believers shall be like him. However, there is some debate about the meaning of these verses, especially since the subject of the instances of the verb "to reveal" is not clear (both Schnackenburg 1992 and Brown 1982 take it to be an impersonal subject and not an explicit reference to the Parousia of Christ). Meanwhile, in 1 John 4:17 the "day of judgment" is mentioned, again with the hope that the believer may be able to meet it with confidence (the term parrēsia is here again used; cf. 1 Jn 3:21; 5:14). On the strength of these passages it is sometimes argued (as for example by Dodd 1946) that 1 John represents a departure from the realized eschatology of the Gospel of John and a return to a more futuristic eschatology which characterized the early church. Needless to say, much depends on the assumptions one has about the eschatology contained in John's Gospel in making such a claim.

The reference to "receiving the full reward" in 2 John 8 could be taken to imply the future Parousia, in that it is at the Parousia at the end of time that such a reward* would be granted to the faithful. Beyond this possible allusion, however, there are no further clear references to the Parousia in either 2 John or 3 John.

2.8. The Revelation to John. Most of the difficulties which arise generally in the interpretation of NT eschatology come into sharp focus within the book of Revelation.* Nowhere is this better illustrated than when we come to consider the question of the timing of the Parousia as it is expressed within this work, a question which is inevitably related to a consideration about the historical situation being addressed within the document (is a dating during the reign of the emperor Domitian [A.D. 81-96] to be assumed or not?).

The idea of the imminent Parousia of the Messiah is woven through the very fabric of the Revelation to John like a golden thread, giving consistency to the eschatological pattern contained within it. Although the term parousia itself is not found in Revelation, it seems clear that the idea of the imminent Parousia is what is meant in Revelation 1:1 when, in the opening paragraph of his work, the author describes his apokalypsis as a revelation of "the things that are soon to take place." He follows this up by pronouncing a blessing on the readers in Revelation 1:3, concluding with the declaration that "the time is near." At the same time, the phrase "the time is near" is repeated in Revelation 22:10, with the declaration "I am coming soon" repeated three times in Revelation 22:7, 12, 20. Thus it could be argued that the expectation of an imminent Parousia of the Messiah effectively provides a literary framework for the composition as a whole.

Beyond this eschatological framing, there are many passages which also seem to allude to or speak of the imminent Parousia of Jesus Christ, including Revelation 1:7 where a pair of OT passages (from Dan 7:13 and Zech 12:10) are used to express the idea (see Scott for a discussion of this verse); Revelation 1:19 where John is commissioned to write down the contents of his vision, which is described as a revelation of "what is and what is to take place" (see Beale's study of this crucial verse); Revelation 4:1 where a similar declaration is made as part of the introductory vision given to John: "I will show you what must take place after this"; Revelation 12:12 where the devil is said to know that "his time is short"; and Revelation 22:6 where God is again said to send his angels to reveal "the things that are soon to take place." The threefold declaration of the divine being as "He who is, and was, and is to come" (Rev 1:4, 8; 4:18) is also significant (although note the deletion of ho erchomenos in Rev 1:17 and 16:5). A comparable description is applied to Satan* and his personification in Revelation 17:8, 10.

Likewise, the threefold reference to Jesus Christ coming soon (in Rev 22:7, 12, 20) has parallels in the so-called Seven Letters to the Seven Churches (Rev 2—3), namely in Revelation 2:16 where Jesus Christ threatens to come to the church of Pergamum and war with them; in Revelation 2:25 where Christ exhorts the church at Thyatira to hold fast to what they have until he comes, at which time he will give the faithful "the morning star" (cf. 2 Pet 1:19); in Revelation 3:3 where the traditional image of Christ coming like an unexpected thief is invoked to the church at Sardis (cf. Rev 16:15 where the same image is used; it is a common image within eschatological literature and is also found in Mt 24:43 and 1 Thess 5:2); and in Revelation 3:11 where Christ promises to arrive soon in order to vindicate the faithful of the church at Philadelphia. Similarly, the "coming" of Christ to judge the churches of Ephesus and Smyrna in Asia Minor (the verb erchomai is used in both Rev 2:5 and 2:16) is also worth noting, although it is by no means certain that the final Parousia of Christ at the end of time is in view here. It may well be that a spiritualized coming of the Lord in judgment within the life of the churches concerned is in mind.

In any event, future tense verbs abound throughout Revelation 2—3, and each of the so-called Seven Letters to the Seven Churches contains a declaration of what will happen to them in the future when the Lord comes to them. The element might properly be considered a highly-structured pattern which unites the seven letters in terms of form (see Hemer). In short, there are a number of passages within Revelation which reflect the idea of an imminent Parousia.

At the same time there are one or two places within the body of the Apocalypse where the Parousia of Jesus Christ is presented as if it has already been realized, especially as the future judgment of God becomes the focal point within the imagery of the vision. Thus in Revelation 6:16-17 we have the declaration that the great day of the wrath* of the Lamb* has already arrived upon the world as part of the destruction wrought by the opening of the sixth seal (see Scrolls, Seals); in Revelation 14:7 it is said that the hour of judgment has come as part of the extended description following the sounding of the seventh trumpet*; in Revelation 14:15 the time for reaping the harvest is said to have arrived; and in Revelation 18:10 the hour of judgment upon the city of Babylon is said to have fallen. In all these instances the aorist verb ēlthen ("has come") is used. The same point might be raised in connection with Revelation 15:4 where it is said that the judgments of God have been revealed (the aorist passive verb ephanerōthēsan is used here); in Revelation 16:17 where the seventh angel pours out his bowl of judgment upon the earth, accompanied by a solemn declaration from heaven, "It is done!"; and in Revelation 19:2 where God is said to have "judged the great harlot."

Given these frequent references to the judgment as something in the past, it is understandable how it might be argued (as by Hanson) that the judgment which comes to Babylon* (Rome!), particularly as expressed through the "wine of wrath imagery," refers to the processes of history and not only to the final eschatological act. As Hanson puts the key point: "This is not to say that the wrath has no reference to the end of history; but it never refers purely to that end. It is always a process; sometimes a process viewed as culminating in the End" (Hanson, 165).

Given the frequent references to the idea of the imminence of the Parousia which are juxtaposed with those passages that speak about judgment as if it is a past event, what are we to make of the idea of the delay of the Parousia in Revelation? Is there any evidence within this work that the Parousia of Jesus Christ is an event which is to take place far off in the distant future, following a period of delay? When Revelation is viewed as a whole there is certainly room for precisely just such an interpretation. Indeed, it could also be argued that Revelation 6—11, which trace the movement from the victorious cross of Jesus Christ to his final Parousia in glory by means of a series of images (the seven seals and the seven trumpets), are concerned precisely with this question. These chapters appear to presume something of a delay before the final consummation in the revelation of Jesus Christ. Indeed, it is precisely this which gives rise to the anguished cry by the martyrs in Revelation 6:10 as the fifth seal is opened: "O Sovereign Lord, holy and true, how long before thou wilt avenge our blood on those who dwell upon the earth?" In short, it appears that the idea of a delay of the Parousia was also an integral part of the apocalyptic vision presented by the writer of Revelation. The theme appears explicitly, or is at least lurking behind the scenes, in many of the key passages of the work (as Bauckham 1980 correctly notes).

This motif of delay adds to the complexity of the picture of judgment as it is contained in Revelation, heightening our awareness of the delicately balanced handling of judgment as something which is past, present and future. Thus it is also important to remember those passages which speak of the judgment as something which is yet to be awaited. A key text for this is Revelation 17:14 which, in describing the war of the powers of evil against the Lamb of God (arnion is used some twenty-eight times in Rev with reference to Jesus Christ), concludes with a resounding note of future victory: "the Lamb will conquer them." In short, we need to remember that the past, the present and the future are not rigidly separated in the thought of the Seer, and that he freely moves from one to the other with ease. As Thompson helpfully puts the crucial point: "past, present, and future are not separated by fixed, absolute boundaries." On the contrary, he says, there are "soft boundaries in time" (Thompson, 84).

The declaration in Revelation 22:20, "Come, Lord Jesus!" has been the subject of considerable scholarly debate in view of the fact that it appears to be a translation of the Aramaic marana tha, an expression found only in the NT in 1 Corinthians 16:22 (cf. Did. 1.6 where it is used as a prayer in connection with the Lord's Supper). The basic question is whether in 1 Corinthians 16:22 the word is to be taken as a perfect ("Our Lord has come!") or an imperative ("Our Lord, come!"). Although both translations of the Aramaic are linguistically possible, the latter is to be preferred if for no other reason than the vocative parallel contained in Revelation 22:20. (Moule and Black offer interesting interpretations of the expression).

There are two specialized items of interpretation which need to be mentioned in connection with the idea of the Parousia in Revelation. Each has generated a considerable amount of scholarly debate. It is to these that we now turn.

2.8.1. The Divine Warrior of Revelation 19:11-16. One of the fullest mythological descriptions of the future Parousia is contained in Revelation 19:11-16, a passage which builds creatively upon the ancient Jewish mythic language surrounding the Divine Warrior and reinterprets it so as to express christological belief. A key issue here is whether the essentially Jewish idea of a Divine Warrior is ultimately incompatible with the Christian idea of the Parousia of Jesus Christ in judgment. Most commentators feel that the two ideas are not to be so rigidly juxtaposed (among others, A. Y. Collins and Ford 1975 and 1984 usefully discuss the background to the Divine Warrior motif, although Ford's suggestion, partly based on her consideration of the motif, that a disciple of John the Baptist is the author of Rev 12—22 must be judged as suspect).

As we noted above, Revelation contains perhaps the most detailed treatment of the judgment theme in the NT, interweaving complex images of judgment (past, present and future) within the apocalyptic vision related by the Seer. The use of the Divine Warrior motif might be seen as an extension of this judgment theme which is so central to the book of Revelation as a whole. Yet its intimate connection to other images of judgment, notably the "wrath of the Lamb" motif (Rev 6:16) and the "wine-press" motif (as in Rev 14:19-20; a common OT image found in Joel 3:13 and Is 63:1-6), is not to be overlooked. This is particularly so when it is recognized that the appearance of the Divine Warrior is presented as a vindication of the sacrificial slaughter of the Lamb (Jesus Christ!) which took place on the cross of Calvary and has been prefigured earlier within the book in the crucial vision of the worthy Lamb who was slain in Revelation 5:6-14 (Hanson discusses this point at length, arguing that it is this christological feature which defines Revelation as a distinctively Christian work).

Thus, there is an overlapping of images of divine judgment occurring here, which is hammered home most powerfully by the reference in Revelation 19:13 to the Divine Warrior as having his robe "dipped in blood." This is a profound image which effectively integrates all three motifs (Divine Warrior, wine-press, slaughter of the Lamb) and points to the death of Jesus Christ as the place where God's judgment is firmly and decisively anchored in world history, although the effects of that death transcend the boundaries of time. Thus the Lamb can be described in Revelation 13:8 as having been slain "before the foundation of the world."

2.8.2. The Millennium of Revelation 20:1-4. The book of Revelation has been described as "the playground of the eccentrics." Nowhere is this more evident in the variety of ways in which the idea of the final Parousia of Jesus Christ has been interpreted, particularly in connection with its relationship to the millennium* described in Revelation 20:1-4. There are a number of curious, not to say down-right bizarre, interpretations which may be noted in passing. It would take too much space to discuss these at length, but given the centrality of the millennial kingdom within discussions of Revelation in particular and within Christian apocalyptic literature in general it seems appropriate that we mention briefly some of these interpretations as well as some of the critical reactions to them.

Some interpretations of the millennium approach it from the standpoint of the contents of the book of Revelation as a whole. For example, R. H. Charles takes Revelation 13—20 to teach that the Parousia of Jesus Christ is applicable only for those who have been martyred in the great tribulation* (for it is only they who will be raised at the Parousia). This has been described as "the universal martyrdom of the church." However, this interpretation is plagued with difficulties, not least the fact that it runs against the presentation of the Parousia contained in Revelation 1—3, where the hope of the Parousia is presented as something for all of the church (not just those who have suffered martyrdom) to await eagerly (as Marshall 1964 rightly notes in his critique of Charles). However, more generally it is true to say that the main battleground of interpretative debate is to be found in Revelation 20 itself.

Debates about the interpretation of Revelation 20:1-10 are among the most heated, particularly in some conservative circles where one particular line or another is made an axiom of Christian belief. Does the passage teach a literal one-thousand-year reign of Christ on earth, or is it to be taken as a symbolic or metaphorical reference to God's kingdom? It is striking that the word translated "millennium" (chilioi) occurs some six times in Revelation 20:2-7, and probably should be associated with the idea of a cosmic week based on the statement contained in Psalm 90:4 (see Brown "Number" for a discussion of this.) How do time and eternity come together within the Seer's apocalyptic vision?

And most importantly for our consideration, where does the Parousia or, as it is popularly described when speaking about Revelation 20, "the rapture," fit into the author's scheme of things? In fact, the appropriateness of the term rapture to describe the future Parousia of Christ has been the subject of considerable theological interest (Ladd 1956 offers a study of this question). Does the Parousia inaugurate the messianic kingdom, come during it or conclude it? Are we to interpret the passage as espousing a pretribulation rapture, or is it expressing a posttribulation rapture, or perhaps even a midtribulation rapture? Or are we much nearer the truth when we adopt the position of amillennialism when interpreting the book, effectively refusing to be drawn on the question of how the Parousia and the millennium fit together by refusing to see the millennium in literal, chronological terms? Should we see the judgment following the millennium described in Revelation 20:7-10 as merely a doublet for the judgment enacted at the Parousia of Christ which is portrayed in Revelation 19:11-21 (as Schnackenburg 1963 suggests)?

These matters of millennial interpretation have long been contentious within the history of the church, even from its earliest days (as Bietenhard argues). It is possible to find early Christian writers arguing for a literal millennium based upon the passage (a classic example being Barn. 15.3-9); at the same time it is also possible to find other Christian writers vehemently opposing such a literalism (a classic example being Augustine Civ. D. 20.6-7). Indeed, within this century volume after volume, article after article, sermon after sermon, have been put forward to debate this matter of millennialism, often with an aggressiveness of spirit not in keeping with Christian demands of tolerance and charity. In fact, a wide variety of positions have been credibly argued by competent scholars and most good commentaries of recent years will provide some discussion of the issue (such as those by Beasley-Murray, Lane, Caird, Ladd, Wilcox, Morris, Goldsworthy, Walvoord, Summers and Rowland). Beyond that, several useful volumes and articles offering an in-depth comparison of the various millennial perspectives are well worth considering (including Barr, Clouse and Osborne).

3. The Delay of the Parousia.

We now discuss briefly the so-called "delay of the Parousia" (a translation of the German word Parusieverzögerung first launched onto the agenda of NT studies by A. Schweitzer in The Quest for the Historical Jesus [1906]). The "delay of the Parousia" has been a subject of considerable debate since it inevitably invites discussion on a number of fronts, not least the development of Christian understandings about the purposes of God in history, the connection with Jewish eschatological hopes and the nature of the church. A wide variety of approaches to the subject are in evidence, as NT scholars attempt to unravel this veritable "Gordian knot" of NT theology.

Some have attempted to solve the problem of the "delay of the Parousia" by seeing it against the backdrop of the gradual diminishment of eschatology in apocalyptic belief which occured as the church moved from an essentially Jewish provenance into the wider Hellenistic world. Thus Schweitzer saw the Parousia as an element of Jewish apocalyptic thought which is eventually jettisoned by the church in light of its nonfulfillment. Others, such as C.H. Dodd (1936) and J. A. T. Robinson (1957), have attempted to explain it in terms of the church's inability to reckon with Jesus' proclamation of the completely realized nature of the kingdom of God. In this instance the church is viewed as responsible for the refocusing on or indeed the creation of the idea of the Parousia by failing to grasp with the import of Jesus' life and teaching. Others, notably Rudolf Bultmann (1953) and his followers, have attempted to demythologize the meaning of the Parousia in favor of an existentialist encounter with the risen Lord, thereby loosing the bonds that the Parousia has with future history. This has led others, such as O. Cullmann (1951), to reassert the future Parousia as the culminating event in salvation-history. Each of these solutions has its own strengths and weaknesses, although each represents, in some way or another, a response or a reaction to the program of consistent eschatology proposed by Weiss and Schweitzer (their suggestion was that Jesus' message was consistently, or thoroughly, eschatological in nature and that everything taught and believed was conditioned by this perspective). Each is, in the evocative phrase of R. H. Hiers (1966, 171), who is echoing A. Schweitzer, part of "the struggle against eschatology."

More recently there has been a considerable move to re-assess the idea of the "delay of the Parousia" altogether. It is by no means clear that the delay of the Parousia ever evoked quite the crisis of faith among the early Christians that it is sometimes assumed to have done. Even the proof text often appealed to by those who want to argue for the position, namely 2 Peter 3:1-13, is taken by many NT scholars (such as E. Käsemann) to be rather the exception than the rule when it comes to establishing what was normative Christian eschatological belief. In fact, explicit formulation of the delay of the Parousia as a theological question is found only in 2 Peter 3:4 within the whole of the NT; elsewhere it is an inference at best.

Indeed, many NT interpreters would dispute that the delay of the Parousia necessitated the kind of theological accommodation it is often assumed to have required, effectively rendering the extremes of interpretation outlined above somewhat irrelevant. It may well be that early Christians were able to believe in the imminent arrival of the Lord Jesus at the Parousia while recognizing fully the difficulties posed by the lapse of time between the death, burial and resurrection of Christ, and his future coming at the end of time in order to fulfill God's redemptive purposes. As D. Aune puts it: "The very paucity of references to a supposed delay of the eschaton is indicative of the fact that the delay of the Parousia was largely a nonproblem within early Christianity" (Aune, 103).

In this regard, the theological problems raised by the delay of the Parousia, which the Christians were wrestling with, are precisely the same sorts of problems that other Jewish authors were wrestling with in their works (notably the authors of 2 Apoc. Bar. and 4 Ezra). In short, many of the theological problems associated with eschatological delay are endemic to the literature of apocalypticism as a whole (as Bauckham 1980 argues). Indeed, the idea of a delay of God's eschatological judgment surfaces in some of the OT prophetic literature, as Ezekiel 12:21-25 and Habakkuk 2:2-5 serve to indicate. In other words, there are good grounds for suggesting that imminence and delay are held in creative tension by many Jewish and Christian writers of the NT period, and any credible interpretation of the idea of the Parousia of Jesus Christ can only be offered when this crucial fact is kept in mind. Passages in the NT which stress the imminence of the Parousia of Jesus Christ may be much more concerned with theological relationship between the present reality and future hope than they are with the chronological relationship between them (contra Cullmann).

Once this crucial point is recognized, the "problem of the delay of the parousia" diminishes greatly in importance (see Smalley; Travis). As C. C. Rowland states in his summary of the issue: "Within the apocalyptic framework adopted by the early Christians there lies the resource to cope with the delay in the fulfillment of the promise" (Rowland 1985, 293). That resource, which is absolutely central to the early Christians as they sought to hold together the reality of what has already happened in Christ and their faith in what is yet to be accomplished, is the confident assurance that they share in the heavenly life of the risen Lord (see Col 3:1-4 for the classic Pauline expression of this).

See also APOCALYPTIC, APOCALYPTICISM; ASCENSION; DAY OF THE LORD; ESCHATOLOGY; JUDGMENT; MILLENNIUM; RESURRECTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. W. Attridge, The Epistle to the Hebrews (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1989); D. E. Aune, "The Significance of the Delay of the Parousia for Early Christianity" in Current Issues in Biblical and Patristic Interpretation: Studies in Honor of Merrill C. Tenney, ed. G. F. Hawthorne (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975) 87-109; J. Barr, Fundamentalism (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1978); C. K. Barrett, "The Eschatology of the Epistle to the Hebrews" in The Background of the New Testament and Its Eschatology: Festschrift for C.H. Dodd, ed. W. D. Davies and D. Daube, (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1956) 363-93; idem, "Stephen and the Son of Man" in Apophoreta: Festschrift für Ernst Haenchen, ed. W. Eltester and F. H. Kettley (BZNW 30; Berlin: Töpelmann, 1964) 32-38; idem, "Faith and Eschatology in Acts 3" in Glaube und Eschatologie: Festschrift für W.G Kümmel, ed. E. Grässer and O. Merk (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr [Paul Siebeck], 1985) 1-17; R. J. Bauckham, "The Delay of the Parousia," TynB 31 (1980) 3-36; idem, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); G. K. Beale, "The Interpretative Problem of Rev. 1:19," NovT 34 (1992) 360-87; G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation (NCB; rev. ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); idem with H. H. Hobbs and R. F. Robbins, Revelation: Three Viewpoints (Nashville: Broadman, 1977); E. Best, 1 Peter (NCB; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977); H. Bietenhard, "The Millennial Hope in the Early Church," SJT 6 (1953) 12-30; M. Black, "The Maranatha Invocation and Jude 14, 15 (I Enoch I.9)" in Christ and Spirit in the New Testament: in honour of Charles Digby Moule, ed. B. Lindars and S. S. Smalley (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1973) 189-96; E. C. Blackman, The Epistle of James (TBC; Naperville, IL: Allenson, 1957); C. Brown, "Number," NIDNTT 2.683-704; idem, "Present, Day, Maranatha, Parousia," NIDNTT 2.886-935; R. E. Brown, The Community of the Beloved Disciple (New York: Paulist, 1979); idem, The Epistles of John (AB; New York: Garden City, 1982); F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1964); idem, "Eschatology in Acts" in Eschatology and the New Testament: Essays in Honor of George Raymond Beasley-Murray, ed. W. H. Gloer (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1988) 51-63; G. W. Buchanan, To the Hebrews (AB; New York: Doubleday, 1972); R. Bultmann, "History and Myth" in Kerygma and Myth 1, ed. H.-W. Bartsch (London: SPCK, 1953) 1-44; idem, The Johannine Epistles (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1973); G. B. Caird, The Revelation of St. John the Divine (HNTC; New York: Harper & Row, 1966); C. Carlston, "The Vocabulary of Perfection in Philo and Hebrews" in Unity and Diversity in New Testament Theology: Essays in Honor of George E. Ladd, ed. R. A. Guelich (Grand Rapids, MI, 1978) 133-60; R. G. Clouse, ed., The Meaning of the Millennium: Four Views (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1980); H. C. C. Cavallin, "The False Teachers of 2 PT as Pseudo-Prophets," NovT 31 (1979) 263-70; R. H. Charles, The Revelation of St. John (2 vols.; ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1920); A. Y. Collins, The Combat Myth in the Book of Revelation (Missoula, MT: Scholars Press, 1976); H. Conzelmann, The Theology of St. Luke (New York: Harper, 1960); idem, Acts of the Apostles (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1987); C. E. B. Cranfield, I & II Peter and Jude (TBC; London: SCM, 1960); O. Cullmann, Christ and Time (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1951); P. H. Davids, The Epistle of James (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); idem, The First Epistle of Peter (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); C. H. Dodd, The Apostolic Preaching and Its Developments (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1936); idem, The Johannine Epistles (MNTC; London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1946); J. D. G. Dunn, Unity and Diversity in the New Testament (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1977) 344-51; J. H. Elliott, A Home for the Homeless (London: SCM, 1982); idem, "Peter, Second Epistle to," ABD 5.282-87; E. E. Ellis, Prophecy and Hermeneutic in Early Christianity (Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1978) 221-36; P. Esler, Community and Gospel in Luke-Acts (SNTSMS 57; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1987); A. Feuillet, "Le sens du mot Parousia dans l'Evangile Matthieu—Comparaison entre Matth. 24 et Jac. 5, 1-11" in The Background of the New Testament and Its Eschatology: Festschrift for C. H. Dodd, ed. W. D. Davies and D. Daube (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1956) 261-80; H. Flender, St. Luke: Historian and Theologian (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1967); J. M. Ford, Revelation (AB; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1975); idem, "Tribulation and Peace: The Fate of Shalom in Jewish Apocalyptic," HBT 6 (1984) 1-26; T. Fornberg, An Early Church in a Pluralistic Society: A Study of 2 Peter (CB 9; Lund: Gleerup, 1977); E. Franklin, "The Ascension and the Eschatology of Luke-Acts," SJT 23 (1970) 191-200; W. W. Gasque, A History of the Interpretation of the Acts of the Apostles (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1989); T. F. Glasson, The Second Advent (London: Epworth, 1945); idem, His Appearing and His Kingdom (London: Epworth, 1953); idem, "The Second Advent—25 Years Later," ExpT 82 (1971) 307-9; G. Goldsworthy, The Gospel in Revelation (Exeter: Paternoster, 1984); R. P. Gordon, "KAI TO TELOS KURIOU EIDETE (JAS. V.11)," JTS 26 (1975) 91-95; K. Grayston, The Johannine Epistles (NCB; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1984); M. Green, 2 Peter and Jude (TNTC; Leicester: Inter-Varsity; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1968); E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles (Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 1971); A. T. Hanson, The Wrath of the Lamb (London: SPCK, 1957); C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in Their Local Setting (JSNTSup 11; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic, 1986); R. H. Hiers, "Eschatology and Methodology," JBL 85 (1966) 170-84; "The Problem of the Delay of the Parousia in Luke-Acts," NTS 20 (1973-74) 145-55; J. L. Houlden, A Commentary on the Johannine Epistles (HNTC; New York: Harper & Row, 1973); H. Hübner, "τέλειος" "τελειόω," "τελέω," "τέλος" EDNT 3.342-48; W. G. Johnsson, "The Pilgrimage Motif in the Book of Hebrews," JBL 97 (1978) 239-51; E. Käsemann, "An Apologia for Primitive Christian Eschatology" in Essays on New Testament Themes (London: SCM, 1964) 169-95; idem, The Wandering People of God (Minneapolis: Augsburg, 1984); J. N. D. Kelly, A Commentary on the Epistles of Peter and of Jude (HNTC; New York: Harper & Row, 1969); L. J. Kreitzer, "Hadrian and the Nero Redivivus Myth," ZNW 79 (1988) 92-115; G. E. Ladd, The Blessed Hope (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1956); idem, A Commentary on the Revelation of John (Grand Rapids, Eerdmans, 1972); idem, "Apocalyptic and New Testament Theology" in Reconciliation and Hope: New Testament Essays on Atonement and Eschatology Presented to L. L. Morris on his 60th Birthday, ed. R. Banks, (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975) 285-96; W. Lane, Call to Commitment: Responding to the Message of Hebrews (Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 1985); S. Laws, The Epistle of James (HNTC; New York: Harper & Row, 1980); T. W. Lewis, "'. . . And if He Shrinks Back' (Heb. X. 38b)," NTS 22 (1976) 88-94; J. Lieu, The Theology of the Johannine Epistles (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991); B. Lindars, The Theology of the Letter to the Hebrews (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991); G. Lüdemann, Early Christianity According to the Traditions in Acts: A Commentary (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1989); G. W. MacRae, "Heavenly Temple and Eschatology in the Letter to the Hebrews," Semeia 12 (1978) 179-99; W. Manson, The Epistle to the Hebrews (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1951); I. H. Marshall, "Martyrdom and the Parousia in the Revelation of John," SE 4 (1964) 333-39; idem, The Epistles of John (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); R. P. Martin, James (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); H. K. McArthur, "Parousia," IDB 3.658-61; J. R. Michaels, "Eschatology in 1 Peter III.17," NTS 13 (1966-67) 394-401; idem, 1 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); D. J. Moo, The Letter of James (TNTC; Leicester: Inter-Varsity, 1985); A. L. Moore, The Parousia in the New Testament (NovTSup 13; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1966); L. Morris, The Revelation of St. John (TNTC; Leicester: Inter-Varsity, 1969); C. F. D. Moule, "A Reconsideration of the Context of Maranatha," NTS 6 (1959-60) 307-10; R. H. Mounce, The Book of Revelation (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977); J. H. Neyrey, "The Form and Background of the Polemic in 2 Peter," JBL 99 (1980) 407-31; idem, 2 Peter, Jude (AB; New York: Doubleday, 1993); A. Oepke, "παρουσία," TDNT 5.858-71; G. R. Osborne, "The 'Rapture' Question," Themelios 2 (1977) 77-80; C. D. Osburn, "The Christological Use of 1 Enoch I.9 in Jude 14-15," NTS 23 (1977) 334-41; H. P. Owen, "Stephen's Vision in Acts VII.55-56," NTS 1 (1954-55) 224-26; M. C. Parsons, The Departure of Jesus in Luke-Acts (JSNTSup 21; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic, 1987); D. Peterson, Hebrews and Perfection (SNTSMS 47; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1982); W. Radl, "παρουσία," EDNT 3.43-44; B. Reicke, The Epistles of James, Peter, and Jude (AB 37; New York: Doubleday, 1964); J. A. T. Robinson, "The Most Primitive Christology of All?," JTS 7 (1956) 177-89; idem, Jesus and His Coming: The Emergence of a Doctrine (New York: Abingdon, 1958); idem, Redating the New Testament (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1976); C. C. Rowland, Christian Origins (SPCK: London, 1985); idem, Revelation (EC; London: Epworth, 1993); idem, "Parousia," ABD 5.166-70; D. J. Rowston, "The Most Neglected Book in the New Testament," NTS 21 (1974-75) 554-63; R. Schnackenburg, God's Rule and Kingdom (Edinburgh: Nelson, 1963); idem, The Johannine Epistles (Tunbridge Wells: Burns & Oates, 1992); R. B. Y. Scott, "Behold, He Cometh With Clouds," NTS 5 (1959-60) 127-32; E. G. Selwyn, The First Epistle of Peter (London: Macmillan, 1947); idem, "Eschatology in 1 Peter" in The Background of the New Testament and Its Eschatology: Festschrift for C. H. Dodd, ed. W. D. Davies and D. Daube (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1956) 394-401; E. M. Sidebottom, James, Jude, 2 Peter (NCB; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1971); S. Smalley, "The Delay of the Parousia," JBL 83 (1964) 41-54; idem, 1, 2, 3 John (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1984); R. Summers, Worthy is the Lamb (Nashville: Broadman, 1951); J. Tabor (with P. Arnold), "The David Koresh Manuscript: Exposition of the Seven Seals" (Houston, TX: Reunion Institute, 1994); C. H. Talbert, "II Peter and the Delay of the Parousia," VC 20 (1966) 137-45; L. Thompson, The Book of Revelation: Apocalypse and Empire (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1990); S. Travis, I Believe in the Second Coming of Jesus (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); J. VanderKam, "The Theophany of Enoch I 3b-7, 9," VT 23 (1973) 129-50; J. F. Walvoord, The Revelation of Jesus Christ (Chicago: Moody, 1966); M. Wilcox, The Message of Revelation (BST; Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1975); R. McL. Wilson, Hebrews (NCB; Basingstoke: Marshall, Morgan & Scott, 1987); S. G. Wilson, The Gentiles and the Gentile Mission in Luke-Acts (SNTSMS 23; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1973).

L. J. Kreitzer

PASCHAL HOMILY. See MELITO OF SARDIS.

PASCHAL LAMB. See LAMB.

PASTORAL THEOLOGY

Pastoral theology in the most general sense is the application of Christian truth* to pastoral situations. Therefore pastoral theology is both a contemporary pursuit as well as a historical phenomenon. The latter is the primary focus of this article, as the authors of our literature reveal the pastoral concerns that lie behind their purposes for writing.

1. Definitions
2. Backgrounds
3. Pastoral Emphases

1. Definitions.

1.1. Pastoral Theology as a Contemporary Pursuit. T. C. Oden defines pastoral theology as "that branch of Christian theology that deals with the office and functions of the pastor" (Oden, x). It is theology because it treats the consequences of God's* self-disclosure in history and concerns itself with theological meaning of life events. It is pastoral because it concerns itself with the appropriate methods by which Christian pastors should function in the practice of ministry,* including roles, tasks and duties. Therefore as a contemporary pursuit pastoral theology is a theology of the practice of ministry, including the church disciplines of pastoral care and counseling, preaching, liturgy, religious education, mission, evangelism and social ministries (Oden, x; Malony, 631; Tidball 1995, 42).

Four representative traditions in pastoral theology—Roman Catholic, Lutheran, Anglican and Reformed—reveal special emphases. With its emphasis upon sin as the problem of life and penance and acts of satisfaction as the solution, the traditional Roman Catholic teaching sees that the goal of pastoral theology is to nurture souls and prepare them for heaven* through spiritual discipline. The Lutheran tradition became more concerned with the problem of faithlessness, including the concerns of pride,* self-righteousness, lack of trust and anxiety, so that the approach of pastoral theology is to induce feelings of despair and repentance,* followed by encouragement to have faith.* The Anglican tradition sees sin as disorder, inward, interpersonal and social, so the pastoral role is to restore order by embodying the grace* of God that allows the possibility of Christian growth. With their emphasis upon predestination, Reformed Christians need concrete assurance* of their foreordination to salvation,* so much of pastoral theology focuses on the procedures to determine the true state of their souls and to achieve evidence of their security (see Malony, 631; Cooke, 1-24).

1.2. Pastoral Theology in Early Christian Literature. Pastoral theology is the subject of exegesis and is at least in part the source for contemporary pursuits. From an exegetical perspective, pastoral theology surfaces through three primary levels of inquiry. These three levels of exegetical analysis are combined to provide the broadest perspective of pastoral theology as "the application of Christian truth to pastoral situations" (Tidball 1986, 17).

First, the authors of the biblical texts and the apostolic authors (see Apostolic Fathers) had pastoral intentions as they wrote to their respective audiences. Pastoral theology is revealed in the text as the exegete determines an author's purpose for writing to a particular audience. For example, the "elder" in 2 John displays a pastoral concern for the elect lady and her children, encouraging them to continue to walk in truth and love (2 Jn 4-6), while at the same time—like a good shepherd—warning them of the false teachers who want to deceive them (2 Jn 7-11; see John, Letters of).

Second, a biblical theology of "shepherding" surfaces from these texts that can be systematically organized as pastoral theology to provide pastoral help for general readers and also provide a resource for those engaged in pastoral ministry. When Paul declares that the goal of pastoral ministry is to proclaim Christ, "admonishing and teaching everyone in all wisdom, so that we may present everyone perfect in Christ" (Col 1:28), this task can be clarified throughout the NT by other texts that echo that goal and specify aspects of it (e.g., 1 Pet 1—2). For example, Peter focuses his readers' attention on the process of growth in this life (1 Pet 1:3-9), calls them to obedient living (1 Pet 1:13-25; see Obedience) and admonishes them to follow the example of Jesus (1 Pet 2:21-24), all with a pastoral goal in mind: "for you were going astray like sheep, but now you have returned to the shepherd and overseer of your souls" (1 Pet 2:25).

Third, specific texts give instruction in the pastoral office or describe the pastoral role within the early church.* These texts can be organized into a pastoral theology that provides a statement of pastoral responsibilities. Caregiving is a distinctive of NT faith, both of individual believers toward one another and for those engaged in the pastoral office. Paul admonishes the Galatian readers to "bear one another's burdens, and in this way you will fulfill the law of Christ" (Gal 6:2), which is supplemented by the statement of the author of Hebrews*: "Let us consider how to stimulate one another to love and good deeds, not neglecting the meeting together, as is the habit of some, but encouraging one another" (Heb 10:24-25). When Paul emphasized the gifted person who would be "pastor-teacher" of the church (Eph 4:12), he furthers the shepherding motif that he had admonished the Ephesian elders to assume as their role among the flock or church (Acts 20:25-31). This theme is expanded upon when compared with Peter's instructions to the sheep and undershepherds among his readers (1 Pet 5:1-5; cf. Jn 21:15-19) and the various other terms that lay out the variety of pastoral roles (e.g., bishop, elder; cf. Ign. Magn. 6:1-2; Ign. Trall. 3.1; Ign. Phld. 5.1).

Our focus in this article is upon pastoral theology as an exegetical concern, although we recognize that this exercise is intended to inform the contemporary pursuit as well.

2. Backgrounds.

2.1. Gospels. The Gospels traditionally have been seen as historical and theological documents, but recent approaches (e.g., redaction criticism) have demonstrated an awareness of their pastoral dimensions. In the attempt to provide a historically credible document, Luke provides pastoral help to Theophilus (either individually or representing the community), who appears to have doubts and uncertainties about the faith (Lk 1:1-4; cf. Marshall, 21-52). The author of the Fourth Gospel wished to present various signs* Jesus performed in his historical ministry in such a way that they would convince his readers that Jesus was the Christ,* the Son of God,* and that they would have life* through this belief (Jn 20:31). This is pastoral concern, whether of mission or of edification and comfort (cf. Carson, 87-95; 660-63).

Therefore the Gospels provide different pastoral perspectives. The first is the pastoral emphasis of Jesus. One of the striking metaphors Jesus used to define his relationship to his followers was as the shepherd* of the sheep (Jn 10:1-18; 21:15-19), terminology that was followed explicitly by the early church to designate those who had responsibility for caring for the church (e.g., 1 Pet 5:1-5). Jesus in his shepherding role becomes the pivotal analogy of pastoral care as he calls, protects, leads, feeds and even lays down his life for his sheep (Oden, 51-53). The author of Hebrews refers to Jesus as the great Shepherd of the sheep (Heb 13:20; cf. Mt 26:31), a metaphor we will see Peter allude to as well (cf. 1 Pet 2:25). The second is the pastoral emphasis of the Evangelists. When seen as pastoral pamphlets, the Gospel records become models of pastoral care for communities of faith. Through the stories of Jesus and his interaction with his followers and even opponents, the Evangelists instruct, admonish, comfort, warn and edify their readers. Third, we begin to gain insight to the pastoral functioning of the communities, an insight that will be fleshed out in the Epistles. Since new disciples are to be taught to obey all that Jesus had commanded (Mt 28:19-20), the Gospels become in part manuals of discipleship by which the pastoral teaching role in the church can be facilitated (cf. Wilkins, 172-239).

2.2. Paul. Paul testifies that pastoral concerns loomed large in his apostolic ministry: "there is daily pressure upon me of concern for all the churches" (2 Cor 11:28; see DPL, Pastor, Paul as). Paul's pastoral ministry was rooted in the character and meaning of the gospel message he carried and is seen in the three major facets of his ministry: his proclamation of the gospel, his establishing of congregations and his nurture of them (cf. Furnish).

The letters* of Paul are explicit in their pastoral thrust. The needs of the recipients are usually addressed directly, and the letters contain immediate instruction and exhortation to meet the doctrinal, corporate and personal needs and problems of believers. Paul's pastoral approach is normally didactic, relating the experience of his readers to the doctrines of the faith. Even though he may not be the present leader of the local church to which he writes (e.g., Philemon) and never uses the term pastor of himself, Paul brings a translocal authority to the text that is intended to influence the church to remember that, since they are in Christ, they are responsible to heed Paul's pastoral guidance. He appeals to his readers to heed him as their spiritual father and to heed also his spiritual offspring who share his pastoral role among them (e.g., Timothy in 1 Cor 4:14-17; cf. Petersen, 287-302; see DPL, Pastor, Paul as)

3. Pastoral Emphases.

The book of Acts,* the General Epistles, the Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) and the writings of the apostolic fathers are varied in their approach but nonetheless are pastoral in their intent, designed to apply Christian truth to specific conditions and needs.

3.1. Acts: Purpose and Spiritual Power. As was the case with his Gospel, so the author of Acts had a pastoral intention in composing his document. R. P. Martin (1978, 53-67) demonstrates that this is revealed first in the emphasis upon the power of the Holy Spirit* through God-ordained messengers in the universal spread of the church, which compels the readers to accept that this movement truly is "of God" (Acts 5:39). Second, the author confirms to Theophilus that the Christian church is not politically dangerous: It is innocent of the charges leveled against it, as was its Lord* (Acts 5:39). This should encourage him to continue (or begin) to identify with the movement. Third, the author challenges the readers, now a multiracial church that has come out of Judaism,* to recognize that it continues to have links that cannot be severed with God's program of the ages because of its place in salvation history. Ernst Haenchen, who goes too far with his suggestions of the writer's freedom from historical reporting, nonetheless points rightly to the writer's pastoral intent of impressing upon the reader unforgettably the truth of the power of God in his unfolding narrative (Haenchen, 103-10). Such a narrative is sure to offer to the church the confidence to accept that the life of the Christian community on this earth is now relatively fixed and settled and that its future shares the same task of the apostles,* to offer the gospel message to a waiting world (Martin 1978, 56-63).

3.2. Hebrews: Defection and Real Confession. W. L. Lane concludes that the book of Hebrews is "a pastorally oriented sermon." The author, concerned that his readers are in danger of forsaking Christianity and lapsing back into Judaism, possibly to avoid persecution,* engages in a careful exposition of the superiority of the new covenant* to the old. But biblical and theological exposition ultimately serve the paraenetic purpose. The book was written to arouse, urge, encourage and exhort those addressed to maintain their Christian confession. The writer wants to dissuade the readers from a course of action that would be catastrophic (Lane, c).

Throughout the document the author encourages the readers to reexamine the basis of their faith by looking closely at Jesus (Heb 2:9; 3:1; 12:2-3). On the one hand they must recognize that in every possible way Jesus Christ is superior to all, whether angels* (Heb 1:5—2:18), Moses* (Heb 3:1-19), Joshua (Heb 4:1-13), the high priest* (Heb 4:14—5:10) or Melchizedek* (Heb 7:1-28). Jesus Christ is superior to the revelation* that came through the law,* especially as the law was applied through the levitical priesthood. Although the law was God's revelation and the argument of Hebrews is founded on the OT, the new revelation in Christ has superseded the old. Jesus provides a better way from humans to God (Heb 8:1—10:18). But on the other hand the author recognizes that in addition to intellectual needs, the readers have pressing situational needs. As a tried and tested people, they must look to Jesus who was fully human (Heb 2:14) and who can sympathize with their temptations (Heb 4:15), their sufferings* (Heb 5:7-9) and their perseverance (see Endurance), even if it must be to death (Heb 2:14; 13:12).

The author applies pastoral care to his readers. Intermittent exhortations (Heb 2:1; 3:12; 4:11, 14; 5:11-12; 6:1; 10:35-36; 12:1, 12, 25; 13:9, 22) call the readers to apply what they know about Jesus to make a firm intellectual stand in their faith. The author also uses direct warnings (Heb 2:2-3; 6:1-8; 10:26-31; 12:25) about the direction their spiritual lives seem to be taking to call them to recognize the consequences of traversing that path. Even while the author speaks directly of judgment,* a note of encouragement quickly follows (Heb 6:6-10; 10:32-35) that apprises the readers that they can recover from their present dilemma, because the history of God's people is filled with examples of others who have faced similar difficulties (Heb 6:13-15; 11:1—12:1; 13:7). But these truths must now be applied by the readers. They must take them to heart as the only means of withstanding the influence of the false teachers (Heb 13:9) so that they can carry out the will of God through Jesus Christ (Heb 13:20-21; cf. Tidball 1986, 124-30).

3.3. James: Economics and True Faith. While the precise location of writing, destination and dating of James* remain problematic, the pastoral nature of the letter is widely acknowledged. D. J. Moo states, "First and most prominent is the strong tone of pastoral exhortation. . . . James issues his commands, for the most part, in a tone of tender pastoral concern" (Moo, 36; see also Chester, 15). The author writes to urge his readers to make necessary changes in their lives and in their relationships with one another within the community. Writing to a community (or communities) that apparently is well versed in fundamental Christian teaching, the author has at least two overriding pastoral concerns (see Martin 1988, lxvii-lxix; Davids, 34).

First is the author's regard and sympathy for the poor and disadvantaged (Jas 1:9-11; 1:26-27; 2:1-13; 4:13—5:6). The author offers both comfort to those suffering under economic trials and denunciation to those who are taking advantage of them. He draws on the rich OT background of God's regard for the poor and downtrodden by reminding his readers that the wealth of this world does not always indicate those whom God has chosen to enjoy the eschatological* riches of the kingdom (Jas 2:5; see Kingdom of God). He declares that the essence of true religion is evidenced by social and economic concern for those in need (Jas 1:26-27). Rich merchants (Jas 4:13-17) and landowners (Jas 5:1-6) are condemned both because of their arrogant attitude that forgets God and because of their exploitation of the poor in general and their poor workers. The poor must not fawn on the rich by showing them favoritism (Jas 2:1-7), because the rich who have not humbled themselves will wither under the scorching of God's judgment (Jas 1:9-11).

The second pastoral concern is vitally connected to the first. The poor and oppressed must not allow their circumstances to destroy the unity of the church, nor must they succumb to the temptation to take the path of social revolution as the means of rectifying their plight. They must be single-minded in relying upon the wisdom* of God (Jas 1:2-7) or else anger and envy (Jas 1:19-27) will turn both inward to cause quarreling (Jas 4:1-3, 11-12) and outward to attempt to rectify their plight by aligning themselves with worldly powers (Jas 4:4-10; cf. Jas 3:13-18; 5:7-11).

The poor and oppressed are called to act upon the truths of the faith. They must rely on the wisdom of God, not their own. They must patiently wait for the Lord's coming judgment, not taking judgment into their own hands. They must show by their actions that they have true faith in God, not in themselves or the world.

3.4. 1 Peter: Persecution and Living Hope. The primary distinctive of 1 Peter's* pastoral theology is found in the author's caregiving to those who are suffering persecution. The persecution comes from local rather than imperial sources. The readers appear to be relatively new Christians (cf. 1 Pet 1:22-23; 2:2-3; 3:21) who are a minority social group within the local pagan environment. The genre of 1 Peter can be classified at least in part as paraenesis, since the author does not attempt to convince the readers of new ethical rules. Rather he assumes that they already know and accept the rules. The author's main task is to enhance their right attitudes and make them more steadfast in their convictions, which in turn will lead to right action (cf. Thurén, 226).

Three of the readers' critical needs become the focal points for author's pastoral caregiving. First, since the readers were at odds with society around them, they were feeling persecution from local authorities and community pressures (1 Pet 1:6; 3:13-14; 4:4, 12-16; 5:9-10). The author suggests that the readers' attractive conduct is the best apologetic to hostile neighbors and authorities (1 Pet 2:12, 16-17; 3:16; 4:12-16). Second, since the readers have only recently been converted to Christianity, their social status has been thrown into question; they are now an alienated social group that needs to understand their identity (1 Pet 2:10; 4:4). The author boldly declares that they now belong to the people of God that stretches back to Abraham* and Sarah (1 Pet 3:5-6) and forward to the complete household* of faith one day to be realized (1 Pet 2;4-10; 4:17-19). Third, these new believers apparently were struggling with age-old questions: Why do good people suffer? Why does God allow suffering to occur? Where is God in the middle of suffering? (1 Pet 1:6; 2:19; 4:12). The author offers classic pastoral help through his theodicy: God's plan is at work in and through human pain, misery and affliction, and at the end of history this plan will be fully known (1 Pet 1:5-9; 4:7; 5:10). Therefore the Christian life is centered in a living hope in the God whose purposes are known in Christ (1 Pet 1:3, 21; 3:5, 15; 4:11; see Martin 1994, 89-90, 123).

A second distinctive of pastoral theology in 1 Peter is the discussion of the pastoral leaders (1 Pet 5:1-5). The group of elders (1 Pet 5:1) are told to "shepherd the flock of God" among them (1 Pet 5:2) until the appearing of the chief Shepherd (1 Pet 5:4; cf. Jn 10:1-18; Mt 26:31). The verb shepherd (poimainō; cf. Jn 21:16; Acts 20:28) points to a pastoring or shepherding role for the elders. They have a unique responsibility to care for the household of God. They must guide and shepherd their charges willingly and without complaint, not for financial gain or ego satisfaction. Their lives are to an example for the rest of the assembly (1 Pet 5:3). The mention of the younger men (1 Pet 5:5) indicates either a second, junior branch of church leadership or more likely a call to the rest of the assembly to recognize the designated authority* of the elders. But all, whether or not elders, are to act in humility toward one another (1 Pet 5:5; cf. Michaels, 288-91).

3.5. 2 Peter and Jude: Guard and Grow. 2 Peter* and Jude* take the approach of apocalyptic,* which can be effective in providing a strong dose of pastoral medicine. Serious inroads and threats against the church were being made by false teaching, so 2 Peter and Jude mount polemics against it (2 Pet 2:1-20; Jude 4-19). The authors take seriously their responsibility to guard their readers from false teaching but also to help them grow in their faith until the coming of the Lord. The pastoral concerns of these two letters are devoted to three issues. First, the false teaching and its adherents are not unlike the godless, false teachers that have plagued the human race in general and the people of Israel* in particular throughout history. Second, by twisting the truth these false teachers fall prey to their own wicked teaching and plunge into moral perversion and degradation (but see Bauckham for the view that the moral perversion is the false teaching). Third, the judgment that will accompany the coming of the Day of Lord* (2 Pet 3:1-13; Jude 14-15) will vindicate the long-suffering of God and the maintenance of his promises* (2 Pet 3:8-9).

It was the authors' responsibility to remind the readers of the truth (1 Pet 1:12; 3:1-2, 14-17; Jude 3, 5, 17), so that they could identify the false teachers. But just as importantly the truth will encourage the readers in their personal and corporate growth (2 Pet 3:18; Jude 20), it will remind them to keep pure until the coming of the Lord (2 Pet 3:11-12, 14-17; Jude 21), and it will equip them to rescue others who are under the influence of the false teachers and teaching (2 Pet 3:17-18; Jude 22-23).

3.6. Johannine Epistles: Truth and Love. The cardinal tenet of pastoral theology in the Johannine epistles, following that of the Fourth Gospel, is found in the interrelatedness of christology* and ethics*: knowing the truth about Jesus' identity will be evidenced in love* within the community of faith. The Johannine community behind the three epistles seems to be composed of two groups of believers. One group was made up of Jewish Christians, whose background in Judaism would have made it difficult to accept the full messiahship of Jesus. Another group was made up of Hellenistic Christians, whose background in pagan religions (see Greco-Roman Religions) with dualistic systems of salvation would have made it difficult to accept the full humanity of Jesus.

John writes with an eye toward both of these groups as he strikes a christological balance. Both groups had begun to discern the real identity of Jesus, but in neither group was the estimate adequate. In fact, from the time of the writing of the Fourth Gospel to the epistles, fringe members of both groups were moving toward heretical polar positions (for details see Brown). Friction was increasingly evident as the groups took their theological stances. John's task was to move them closer to christological truth while at the same time emphasizing that Jesus' love for his disciples (Jn 13:34-35) is recapitulated in their love for one another (1 Jn 4:7-12). Secession from the community had begun (1 Jn 2:18-19). Ethical implications on both sides emerged. An emphasis on law marked the Jewish Christian sector (1 Jn 2:7-8), and an indifference to right conduct, including love, marked the Hellenistic Christian sector (1 Jn 3:10-11). By the time of 2 and 3 John the theological and ethical divisions had widened. Further secessions occur (2 Jn 7), and an organizational threat to the unity of the community was embodied in persons like Diotrephes (3 Jn 9-10).

John writes as one who has a solid base of relationship with his readers. While he writes to correct error, he especially writes to instruct and encourage the faithful. They are his "dear children" (1 Jn 2:1, 12-13, 18; 3 Jn 4) and "dear friends" (1 Jn 2:7; 3:2, 21; 3 Jn 1, 2, 5), and he intends to build on this solid pastoral relationship. He continually reminds them of what they already know (1 Jn 2:7-8, 21-22; 2 Jn 5). He calls them to lay claim to that truth, which will then enable them to love each other, which in turn will bring them into healthy moral and ethical relationships with one another. The epistles emphasize certainty and assurance in the light of the uncertainty and confusion surrounding the readers. There is a clear statement of truth in these epistles, and the readers must cling to it to avoid being swayed by the errors of the day and to enable them to love one another truly (see Smalley, esp. xxiii-xxxii; Smith, 222-26).

3.7. The Revelation: Eschatology and Perseverance. Early in the twentieth century H. B. Swete caught the essence of the book of Revelation: "In form it is an epistle, containing an apocalyptic prophecy; in spirit and inner purpose, it is a pastoral" (Swete, The Apocalypse of St. John, xc). The opening verse declares the eschatological purpose: "The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave him to show his servants what must soon take place" (Rev 1:1). Through the revelation God shows that even as humankind and the satanic forces in the last days will attempt to establish the antikingdom on the earth, God will finally bring judgment upon the earth for its wickedness, he will finally fulfill his promise of restoration to the people of God, and he will finally establish his kingdom on the earth.

The author also has a profound pastoral purpose. The book is designed to encourage the readers to persevere in the middle of their suffering and testing. When the temptation comes to forsake the Lord while being persecuted, one must recognize that God will ultimately be victorious. When the temptation comes to choose the wicked ways of the world because it is more convenient and comfortable to do so, one must recognize that the ways of the world will finally be judged, and the one who remains faithful to God will finally be rewarded. The author encourages authentic Christian living by explaining suffering and martyrdom* in the light of the way in which Jesus' death brought victory over evil.

3.8. Apostolic Fathers: Institutionalism and Clergy. D. J. Tidball identifies four factors that stand out when considering the development of pastoral theology in the writings of the apostolic fathers. First, the church was subject to the natural processes of institutionalization. Second, the increasing need to define and defend orthodox belief began to result in divisions within the church. Third, the leaders of the church were products of their culture and intellectual environment and often unconsciously shaped the ministry to conform to it. Fourth, the church begins this period as a persecuted minority, but there are signs of the change to come, when Christianity will be the recognized religion of the empire and the baptizer of its culture (Tidball 1986, 147).

Nearly all of the apostolic fathers say something about pastoral ministry. While itinerant teachers and prophets* continue to be valuable as they traverse the landscape, the *Didache lays down precautionary guidelines for their reception: for example, if they stay longer than three days, they are suspect of being a false prophet (Did. 11.5; 12.1-5); they were to be dismissed as charlatans if they asked for money for themselves (Did. 11.6) or asked for food while "in a spirit" (Did. 11.9); and their behavior is the proof of the validity of their prophecy (Did. 11.8). But it is clear that local leaders were assuming greater significance than the itinerants (Did. 15; Tidball 1986, 148).

The most significant issue for pastoral theology is in the development of the pastoral office (cf. Volz, 19-26; Tidball 1986, 148-49). We find an increasing division between clergy and laity in the apostolic fathers (1 Clem. 42—47), especially in Ignatius's* writings (cf. Schoedel, 10-27). A threefold ministry of bishops, priests and deacons is in existence. Ignatius writes, "Similarly let everyone respect the deacons as Jesus Christ, just as they should respect the bishop, who is a model of the Father, and the presbyters as God's council and as the band of the apostles. Without these no group can be called a church" (Ign. Trall. 3.1). These offices now are the essence of the church. Ignatius time and again exhorts his readers to obey the bishops, because power was conferred on them by God (Ign. Magn. 3.1) and they were to be followed like sheep (Ign. Phld. 2.1). Obeying them was like obeying the voice of God (Ign. Phld. 7.1;Ign. Smyrn. 8), for all those who belong to God and Jesus Christ are with the bishop (Ign. Phld. 3.2; Ign. Eph. 4.1; see Wilkins 1992 "Interplay of Ministry").

The hierarchical mentality was surely motivated by the desire to protect the flock, but it was not universal. Polycarp* likewise encourages obedience to the clergy and deacons, but he does not mention the office of bishop. Instead he emphasizes the qualities desired of the clergy: they are sympathetic and compassionate for humanity; they turn back those going astray; they visit the sick, widows, orphans and the poor; they aim for what is honorable in the sight of God and people; they avoid anger, partiality and unjust judgment; they are free from love of money; they do not believe things spoken against others; they are not harsh in judgment; and they are included in the debt of sin (Pol. Phil. 6.1).

See also APOSTASY; ASSURANCE; CHURCH; CHURCH ORDER, GOVERNMENT; DISCIPLINE; ENDURANCE, PERSEVERANCE; HOUSEHOLD CODES; HOUSEHOLD, FAMILY; MARRIAGE, DIVORCE, ADULTERY; MILK, SOLID FOOD; MINISTRY; REPENTANCE, SECOND REPENTANCE; SERVANT, SERVICE; SEXUALITY, SEXUAL ETHICS; SHEPHERD, FLOCK; SOCIAL SETTING OF EARLY NON-PAULINE CHRISTIANITY; TEACHING, PARAENESIS; WOMEN IN THE EARLY CHURCH; WORSHIP AND LITURGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. J. Atkinson, "Pastoral Theology" in The Blackwell Encyclopedia of Modern Christian Thought, ed. A. E. McGrath (Oxford: Blackwell, 1993) 426-28; R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); R. E. Brown, The Community of the Beloved Disciple (New York: Paulist, 1979); J. T. Burtchaell, From Synagogue to Church: Public Services and Offices in the Earliest Christian Communities (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1992); D. A. Carson, The Gospel According to John (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1991); A. Chester, "The Theology of James" in A. Chester and R. P. Martin, The Theology of the Letters of James, Peter and Jude (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994); B. Cooke, Ministry to Word and Sacraments: History and Theology (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); P. H. Davids, The Epistle of James: A Commentary on the Greek Text (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); idem, The First Epistle of Peter (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); V. P. Furnish, "Theology and Ministry in the Pauline Letters" in A Biblical Basis for Ministry, ed. E. E. Shelp and R. Sunderland (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1981) 101-44; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles: A Commentary (14th ed.; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1971); C. G. Kruse, New Testament Models for Ministry: Jesus and Paul (Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 1985); W. L. Lane, Hebrews (2 vols.; WBC 47; Dallas: Word, 1991); H. N. Malony, "Pastoral Theology" in New Twentieth Century Encyclopedic of Religious Knowledge, ed. J.D. Douglas (2d ed.; Grand Rapids: Baker, 1991) 631-32; I. H. Marshall, Luke: Historian and Theologian (3d ed.; Exeter: Paternoster, 1988); R. P. Martin, James (WBC; Dallas: Word, 1988); idem, New Testament Foundations: A Guide for Christian Students, 2: The Acts, the Letters, the Apocalypse (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); idem, "The Theology of Jude, 1 Peter and 2 Peter" in A. Chester and R. P. Martin, The Theology of the Letters of James, Peter and Jude (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994); D. J. Moo, The Letter of James: An Introduction and Commentary (TNTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1985); T. C. Oden, Pastoral Theology: Essentials of Ministry (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1983); N. R. Petersen, Rediscovering Paul: Philemon and the Sociology of Paul's Narrative World (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); W. R. Schoedel, Ignatius of Antioch (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); S. S. Smalley, 1, 2, 3 John (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1984); D. M. Smith, "Theology and Ministry in John" in A Biblical Basis for Ministry, ed. E. E. Shelp and R. Sunderland (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1981) 186-228; L. Thurén, Argument and Theology in 1 Peter: The Origins of Christian Paraenesis (JSNTSup 114; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995); D. J. Tidball, "Practical and Pastoral Theology" in New Dictionary of Christian Ethics and Pastoral Theology, ed. D. J. Atkinson et al. (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1995) 42-48; idem, Skillfull Shepherds: An Introduction to Pastoral Theology (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1986); C. A. Volz, Pastoral Life and Practice in the Early Church (Minneapolis: Augsburg, 1990); M. J. Wilkins, Following the Master: A Biblical Theology of Discipleship (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1992); idem, "The Interplay of Ministry, Martyrdom and Discipleship in Ignatius of Antioch" in Worship, Theology and Ministry in the Early Church, ed. M. J. Wilkins and T. Paige (JSNTS 87; Sheffield: Academic Press, 1992) 294-315. M. J. Wilkins

PAUL AND PAULINISMS IN ACTS

The role of Paul (Saul) in Acts can be summarized as follows. We are introduced to Saul, the persecutor of the earliest followers of Jesus, in Acts 7:58. In Acts 9 we read of the conversion of Saul the persecutor into Paul the Christian missionary. Paul drops from view until Acts 13, when he and Barnabas are commissioned by the believers in Antioch* to go and spread the gospel. This is usually referred to as Paul's first missionary journey. While he plays a surprisingly limited role in the council of Jerusalem, from Acts 15:20 onward Paul is the central character of the narrative.

Paul's second missionary journey begins at Acts 15:36. It is here that Paul and Barnabas part company, Paul taking Silas and eventually Timothy along with him. The highlight of this second journey is the founding of the church in Corinth, where Paul remains "for a considerable time" (Acts 18:18). Paul's third and final journey begins hard on the heels of the second. The narrative of this journey is focused on Ephesus (Acts 19). This journey reaches its climax with Paul's arrival and eventual arrest in Jerusalem (Acts 21).

The rest of the narrative explains how Paul the prisoner eventually reaches Rome, having appealed his case to Caesar (Acts 25:11). The narrative of Paul's arrest and travel to Rome takes up more space in Acts than do the narratives of his missionary activities. We do not learn of Paul's death (except by inference in Acts 20:29). Rather, the narrative ends with his arrival in Rome. Throughout these chapters Paul is cast as a charismatic visionary, a preacher, a healer and a worker of miracles.*

An extensive body of scholarly literature compares the Paul of Acts with the Paul of the epistles. The vast majority of such comparative work aims to make historical judgments about the nature of earliest Christianity, about the biographical and chronological details of the life of the historical Paul and about the historical author of Acts and that person's relationship to Paul. (See DPL, Chronology of Paul; Itineraries, Travel Plans, Journeys, Apostolic Parousia; Paul in Acts and Letters.) This article will focus primarily on the narrative of Acts and the picture of Paul that emerges in it. When comparisons between Acts and the epistles are made, it is to help clarify the picture presented in Acts rather than to establish a picture of the "real" Paul (see Fowl for a discussion of the "real" Paul). This discussion will begin with an examination of the way Paul characterizes himself in Acts. The picture of Paul that emerges from that examination will then be situated within the broader scope of Acts as a whole.

1. Paul's Characterizations of Himself
2. Paul's Place Within the Scope of Acts

1. Paul's Characterizations of Himself.

Paul gives two kinds of accounts of himself in Acts,* both of which are central to an understanding of Paul in Acts as a whole. First, we have Paul's farewell address to the Ephesian elders in Acts 20:18-35, an account rendered before friends. Second, there are three occasions on which Paul has to defend himself before hostile or potentially hostile audiences (Acts 22; 24; 26).

In all of the speeches in which Paul gives an account of his life and ministry,* there is always some reflection on his conversion. In Acts Paul's encounter with the resurrected Christ* on the road to Damascus (Acts 9:1-19) and the accounts of this which Paul later gives in Acts (Acts 22; 24; 26) play a much more explicit and important role than they do in the epistles (see Gaventa, chap. 2). Acts 9 narrates the events of Paul's miraculous encounter with Christ. This passage does several important things for our understanding of Paul in Acts. It establishes Paul as an apostle* who has seen the resurrected Christ and has been given a special task (Acts 9:15). In addition we learn of the sufferings* that are to characterize Paul's ministry (Acts 9:16). As important as Acts 9 is, we come to a fuller understanding of Paul's character as he reflects on his conversion in the accounts he gives of himself in the later chapters of Acts (see Witherup).

1.1. Paul's Farewell Address to the Ephesian Elders (Acts 20:17-35). This account of Paul's life and ministry is given to fellow believers. This account has the most in common with the accounts Paul gives of himself in the epistles (cf. Gal. 1:11—2:21; Phil. 3:2-16). Paul is known to his audience. He is not introducing or defending himself before strangers. Paul's speech is occasioned by the fact that he is soon to be permanently separated from the Ephesians.

In addition to saying good-bye and to foreshadowing his impending imprisonment, Paul wishes to leave the Ephesians with an account of his ministry that will be a guide and a resource to them in the future (see Tannehill, 2:253). Paul reminds the Ephesians of his persistence and boldness in proclaiming the gospel to them. As the plot of Acts has unfolded, the progress of the gospel has been unremitting, spreading out from Jerusalem* and soon to reach Rome.* As opposition has become more violent, the message and the messengers have grown more resilient. According to Paul, nothing can thwart the plan of God.* It is this plan that Paul boldly proclaimed to the Ephesians (Acts 20:27) and in which Paul willingly participates. Paul notes the tribulations he has encountered and that more await him (Acts 20:22). Nevertheless he intends with the Holy Spirit's* help to finish the course of his ministry (Acts 20:24).

As Paul sees it, his sufferings are roadblocks that threaten to derail his pursuit of the course of his ministry. This perspective is consistent with that of Acts more generally. Paul, like Peter, Stephen* and others, has been made a witness* to the work of God, and God has providentially overseen the success of that testimony by means of visions,* auditions, miraculous escapes and the aid of various sympathizers. Paul's sufferings provide both tests for his ministry and occasions for the providential work of God.

Rather than focus on the content of this message, Paul emphasizes his way of life among the Ephesians. He notes that he was not a financial burden on them (Acts 20:33). Since he did not preach good news to them for a living, his preaching had no ulterior motives (cf. 1 Thess 2:1-12). Paul's support of himself allowed resources to be given to those in need (Acts 20:35). As the Ephesians prepare for a future without him, Paul characterizes his own ministry among them as a standard against which they can measure both their own ministry of service* and the faithfulness of future teachers.

1.2. Paul's Accounts of Himself Before Various Authorities (Acts 22; 24; 26). The other occasions on which Paul gives an account of himself are all situations in which he defends himself before authorities (see Neyrey; see Civil Authority). Although there are obvious differences among these passages, they do not warrant individual treatments of each of these chapters. The Roman authorities are the ones who ultimately sit in judgment, but Paul's accusers are Jews. Paul's characterization of himself is framed by Jewish accusations, particularly in Acts 22 and Acts 26. As a result Paul goes to great lengths to characterize himself as a faithful and loyal Jew (Acts 22:3-5; 26:4-11). Even when Paul characterizes himself before Felix he asserts that he "worships the God of our ancestors, believing in the things written in the law, the prophets and the writings" (Acts 24:14). He aims "to keep a clear conscience before God" (Acts 24:16). One further way in which Paul characterizes his faithfulness is to note that he was a persecutor of Christians (Acts 22:4-21; 26:9-18). Paul portrays this aspect of his life in a matter-of-fact way. He does not express remorse. Rather it marks his diligent adherence to the truth of God as he then saw it (this seems to parallel the way Paul discusses this aspect of his life in Phil 3:6 and Gal 2:13, but cf. 1 Cor 15:9).

In these defensive contexts Paul's characterization of himself seems to have a dual rhetorical* aim. On the one hand he wishes to make it clear that he was and is still a faithful Jew. He has broken neither Roman nor Jewish law.* Hence the charges brought against him are baseless. On the other hand he wants to convince his audience that the only way to account for his transformation from persecutor to witness is by assenting to his claims about the resurrected Christ (Tannehill, 2:279). This point is not lost on King Agrippa, and Paul implies that this is his ultimate aim (Acts 26:28-29).

It is here, in these three speeches rather than in Acts 9, that we begin to get an insight into how we are to view Paul's conversion. Paul portrays himself as a faithful defender of the truth of God, devoted to the law and the prophets* and more committed to Jewish ways than are most of his contemporaries. This commitment and devotion are channeled in a new direction when he encounters the resurrected Christ. Paul characterizes himself as one who initially found his direction and coherence by participating in a story of conquest that moved in a seemingly irresistible path from Jerusalem toward Damascus. Paul's participation in this story ceases when he encounters the resurrected Christ.

Prior to his conversion Paul characterizes himself as an independent though faithful agent. He controls his own actions. From the time he encounters the resurrected Christ on the road to Damascus, Paul presents himself as someone who is called and acted upon (see also the similar perspective in Paul's self-characterization in Phil 3:12-16). As soon as Ananias restores Paul's sight we find out that God has set aside things for Paul to do (Acts 22:10). Rather than be a defender of the truth, he is to become a witness to it (Acts 22:14-15, 18; 26:16, 22).

As Paul tells it, he has been incorporated into God's story, a story that he now sees as having a basis in the history of the people of Israel,* which has its climax in the death and resurrection* of Jesus and that is leading to the incorporation of the Gentiles* into the people of God (Acts 22:15, 21; 26:22-23; see Church as Israel; Death of Christ). Paul sees himself as having a significant role to play in this divine drama. By characterizing himself as he does in these chapters, however, Paul makes it clear that this is not a role he could have anticipated, nor is it a role he could have chosen himself. He had to be acted upon by God. Even then his opportunities to be a witness are the result of divine aid (Acts 26:22).

2. Paul's Place Within the Scope of Acts.

While an examination of Paul's accounts of himself is crucial to an understanding of Paul in Acts, it is hardly sufficient. It is important to remember several things about these accounts. First, Acts or even the second half of Acts is not primarily about Paul. Rather, Paul is a chief character in the story of the spread of the gospel from Jerusalem to Rome (see Witherup's point, 85, that in Acts characterization is in the service of plot). Acts ends not with Paul's death but with the gospel's arrival in Rome. Although Paul is a crucial character, his importance derives from his role in the spread of the gospel.

With this in mind, it is also important to remember that these accounts are not Paul's autobiography. They are not written by Paul; these are Luke's accounts. There seems to be little reason to question the historicity of the overall scope of events related in these chapters, but we should not assume, for example, that Luke was producing the transcripts from Paul's various trials. The accounts Paul gives of himself in Acts are not given for their own sake, to chronicle the life and adventures of an interesting person. Rather, Luke characterizes Paul as he does to serve the larger aims of Acts. Hence noting what Paul says about himself will not be sufficient. In the case of Acts there is a larger story being told, the story of God's action in the maintenance and spread of the gospel. How one tells that story shapes and is shaped by the ways in which Paul's account of himself fits into that larger story about God. Questions about how Luke tells this larger story will be important for understanding the picture of Paul that emerges in Acts. It is also useful to notice how the picture of Paul in Acts fits into patterns and themes that are already developed in Luke's Gospel.

2.1. Paul as Luke's Ideal Disciple. If one compares the picture of Paul in Acts with that in Luke's Gospel, Paul can be seen as an example of the ideal disciple, presenting a sharp contrast, for example, with those pictures of failed discipleship narrated in Luke 9:57-62. As Jesus begins his journey to Jerusalem and the cross* (Lk 9:51), we are presented with three characters who for various reasons fail to join the journey. This prompts Jesus to say, "No one who puts a hand to the plow and looks back is fit for the kingdom of God" (Lk 9:62). Alternatively, having been called by the resurrected Christ, Paul joins in what is to become his own cruciform journey, never looking back. Paul, as a Pharisee (Acts 22:3; 23:6; 26:5) who follows Jesus, stands as an antitype to the pharisaic opposition Jesus encounters in Luke (see Lk 11:37-54).

2.2. Paul as Witness and Example of Restored Israel. More generally, Paul stands as an example of the reformed and reconstituted people of Israel. As Luke presents it, the reformation and ingathering of the people of God is one of the crucial aims of Jesus' mission. This mission continues in Acts. The picture of Paul fits into this emphasis on the eschatological* reconstitution of Israel (see DPL, Restoration of Israel). As Paul understands it, God's activity in the life, death and resurrection of Jesus is intimately connected to the story of God's ongoing dealings with Israel. This means that Paul views his conversion as a homecoming. That is, he does not see his conversion to be at odds with his Judaism.* This is seen in Paul's customary missionary practice of going to the synagogue* first. Only in the face of rejection there does he turn to the Gentiles.

Paul even sees the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles as one of God's ultimate ends in restoring Israel. In his extensive engagement with the Jews of Pisidian Antioch Paul cites Isaiah 49:6 (LXX: "I have appointed you as a light for the Gentiles that you may be for salvation to the ends of the earth") to just this effect (Acts 13:47). The claim that God's restoration of Israel is at least in part to "bring salvation to the Gentiles" surprises and divides the Jews in Paul's audience. For an attentive reader of Luke-Acts, however, this should come as no surprise. The citation from Isaiah 49:6 echoes the prophecy of Simeon that Jesus would become a "light to enlighten the Gentiles" as well as a glory to Israel (Lk 2:29-32). John the Baptist, also citing Isaiah, indicates that with the advent of Jesus "all flesh shall see God's salvation" (Lk 3:6). According to the resurrected Christ, the Scriptures themselves note that repentance* and forgiveness* of sins in Jesus' name* are to be proclaimed to "all nations" (Lk 24:44-47). In addition there is the commission of the resurrected Christ to be witnesses "to the ends of the earth" (Acts 1:8). Preceding Paul's arrival in Antioch of Pisidia, Peter had encountered Cornelius* (Acts 10), and we read about the recognition that "God has given even the Gentiles the repentance that leads to life" (Acts 11:18).

2.3. Paul and the Gentiles in Acts. Paul's primary concern with Gentiles is with their place in God's restored people, Israel. In addition, although we learn that Paul is a Roman citizen and this fact ultimately brings him to Rome, Paul in Acts never reflects on issues of his own citizenship and its relationship to the gospel (cf. Rom 13). As J. Lentz (24) notes, however, the combination of Pharisee of Pharisees and Roman citizen in a single individual is astonishing (it is less clear that Paul is "proud" of his Roman citizenship [Lentz, 6]).

Gentile opposition to Paul is typically generated by those who profit materially from pagan worship (Acts 16:16-24; 19:21-41). This fits in with the more general Lukan theme that pursuit of riches is a substantial threat to one's abilities to respond well to the gospel. This sort of opposition results in a disturbance of civic peace (Acts 19:40-41) in Ephesus and the charge against Paul and Silas that they are disturbers of the peace in Philippi (Acts 16:20).

Acts 17:16-35 is Paul's most sustained address to the pagan world* on its own terms. This is Paul's speech before the Athenians at the Areopagus, where Paul "discusses" (dielegetō) the gospel as a "philosopher." Paul does not argue from Scripture. Instead he quotes a pagan poet, calling the Athenians to learn of the gods they already revere as creator. He uses this longing to know the Creator of all things as a way to call the Athenians away from ignorance and idolatry* (Acts 17:24-30). The resurrection proves to be a major stumbling block for the Athenians (Acts 17:34; cf. 1 Cor 1:20-25). Paul does not enjoy a great deal of success in Athens, but he does come across as a philosopher, and Christianity is seen as cultured learning rather than superstition (see Pervo, 61-62).

2.4. Paul, Suffering and the Gospel. The picture of Paul that emerges in Acts presents an account of the suffering and opposition Paul faced that differs somewhat from what we find in the epistles. In this respect P. Vielhauer rightly notes that the issue of the cross provides the sharpest contrast between Luke's picture of Paul and that found in the epistles (see Vielhauer, 45-49). I am unconvinced that one can extrapolate from this to make larger claims about differences between Lukan and Pauline theologies as Vielhauer does. This larger question goes beyond the confines of this article; however, it will be useful to summarize the differences between Acts and the epistles on these matters as a way of enabling further debate about these issues.

Acts generally, and the Paul of Acts in particular, has an unfailing confidence in God's providence. Paul's imprisonment, persecutions,* arrest, beatings and shipwreck are seen as hurdles placed by Satan* in the way of the gospel. These hurdles are all overcome. For example, Paul is forewarned of the rejection he will face in Jerusalem (Acts 20:23; 21:11). When this happens, it does not raise questions about Paul's message and mission. Instead the Lord informs Paul (and us) that this is all part of the divine plan to move the gospel to Rome (Acts 23:11). Paul's appeal to the emperor,* which initially saves him from a plot by the Jews, keeps him in prison when he should be set free. Even this is not seen as a problem. It provides both opportunity for authorities to proclaim Paul's innocence (Acts 26:31-32) and the mechanism to get Paul on his way to Rome.

Without question, Paul in Acts has an unshakable confidence in God's providential care. This is true of the epistles as well. Nevertheless, because of the aims of the narrative of Acts and his place in that narrative, Paul does not have to address seriously those who would see the opposition and persecution Paul faces as signs of the unworthiness of Paul and his message. Luke's narrative of God's providential oversight of the Christian mission not only gives direction and coherence to the narrative's paradigmatic missionary but also provides a particular perspective from which Paul can characterize his own tribulations. In contrast to Philippians, Galatians and especially the Corinthian correspondence, in Acts Paul does not have to address questions about his status or his message based on the fact that he suffers persecution and opposition. The Maltese quickly judge him to be a malefactor when he is bitten by a viper. Within the space of a verse, however, they are convinced he is a god when he shows no ill effects from the snakebite (Acts 28:5-6).

In the epistles, too, Paul is convinced that he and his gospel will ultimately be vindicated by God. His own sufferings, however, appear to raise questions both about the importance of the cross for Christian living and about Paul's status as an apostle. These questions are most directly addressed in Philippians and the Corinthian correspondence. It is clear that Paul recognizes his suffering and humiliations as real and significant, but these things are to be transformed finally. In these texts the cross provides Paul with an ironic perspective. From this ironic perspective past achievement can be seen as rubbish; present weakness becomes an opportunity for God's power; current judgments about status and wisdom* are overturned by the "foolishness of God." The Paul of the epistles struggles (often against fellow believers) with the scandal of the cross and its moral and theological significance to a much greater degree than in the picture of the apostle found in Acts.

In Acts it is clear the Paul is an example of cruciform living, but in Acts this does not seem to raise the problems that such a life raises in the epistles. This further reminds us that Acts is not primarily a story about Paul but a story about the gospel in which Paul is a central character.

See also ACTS OF THE APOSTLES; MISSION, EARLY NON-PAULINE; PAULINE LEGACY AND SCHOOL.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. Brawley, "Paul in Acts: Aspects of Structure and Characterization" SBLSP (1988) 96-103; J. T. Carroll, "Literary and Social Dimensions of Luke's Apology for Paul" SBLSP (1988) 106-18; S. Fowl, "Who's Characterizing Whom and the Difference This Makes: Locating and Centering Paul" SBLSP (1993) 537-53; B. R. Gaventa, From Darkness to Light: Aspects of Conversion in the New Testament (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); J. Jervell, "Paul in the Acts of the Apostles: Tradition, History and Theology" in The Unknown Paul: Essays on Luke-Acts and Early Christian History (Minneapolis: Augsburg, 1984) 68-76; L. T. Johnson, The Acts of the Apostles (SacP; Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1992); J. Lentz, Luke's Portrait of Paul (SNTSMS 77; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993); D. Moessner, "Paul in Acts: Preacher of Eschatological Repentance," NTS 34 (1988) 96-104; J. Neyrey, "The Forensic Defense Speech and Paul's Trial Speeches in Acts 22—26" in Luke-Acts: New Perspectives from the Society of Biblical Literature Seminar, ed. C. H. Talbert (New York: Crossroad, 1984); R. I. Pervo, Luke's Story of Paul (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress, 1990); SBL Seminar Papers (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1983, 1988, 1993), essays on Paul and Acts; R. Tannehill, The Narrative Unity of Luke-Acts (2 vols.; Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress, 1990); P. Vielhauer, "The Paulinisms of Acts" in Studies in Luke-Acts, ed. L. E. Keck and J. L. Martyn (Nashville: Abingdon, 1966) 33-50; R. Witherup, "Functional Redundancy in the Acts of the Apostles," JSNT 48 (1992) 67-86.

S. E. Fowl

PAULINE LEGACY AND SCHOOL

Paul was the most significant Christian theologian of all time. His writings have been an indispensable starting point for creeds* and confessions more or less from the first. Most of the greatest restatements of Christian theology have understood themselves as a reworking or an elaboration of Paul's theology, and all theologians have found it necessary to justify their enterprise by reference to Paul in some degree. In that sense all who take the NT seriously as a theological book share in Paul's legacy. In a more precise sense we would have to make special mention of Irenaeus and Augustine from the early centuries, Luther and Calvin from the Reformation period and Baur and Barth from the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Within the first two generations of Paul's death, however, we can recognize two groups of early Christian writers who deserve to be called Paul's heirs in a fuller sense—one group in which the legacy is clear and boldly attested, the other in which the legacy is more a matter of influence, still direct but less obvious.

1. The Immediate Heirs
2. The Wider Circle of Pauline Influence
3. The Legacy of Paul

1. The Immediate Heirs.

If we ask who were the immediate heirs of Paul, those who could be said to belong to a Pauline school, the focus narrows properly and appropriately to the question of the post- or deutero-Pauline epistles, that is, letters written in his name but today generally regarded as written after his death by a disciple (see Pseudepigraphy). The majority of scholars regard the Pastoral Epistles as the clearest example, with Ephesians not far behind. There is much greater dispute over 2 Thessalonians and Colossians. I regard both as Pauline, but since the latter is so closely related to Ephesians and thus also gives a clear indication as to how we should understand the transition from Pauline to post-Pauline, it shall be included here too.

1.1. Colossians. Colossians may be said to stand at the transition point from Pauline to post-Pauline. The most detailed stylistic analysis (W. Bujard) demonstrates that it was composed by someone other than Paul. At the same time the detail of the final section (Col 4:7-17), including the overlap with Philemon, and the final autograph of Colossians 4:18 strongly indicate the personal involvement of Paul himself. The most obvious solution is that Timothy, named as joint author (Col 1:1), composed the letter on their behalf and that Paul was able to give his approval of the sentiments and to add a final confirmatory signature before the letter was dispatched. Even if we cannot be sure whether this hypothesis is correct, the detailed specification of Paul's colleagues (Timothy, Tychicus, Onesimus, Aristarchus, etc.), and the typical Pauline concern for a church founded within his mission, albeit not by him, is evidence enough that the letter stems immediately from a circle of Paul's closest associates. (For arguments in favor of Pauline authorship, see DPL, Colossians.)

If it is Pauline, Colossians is already being shaped by the concerns that became more prominent in the post-Pauline period; if it is post-Pauline, Colossians is the clearest echo of and reflection on Paul's own concerns. The point can be best illustrated by three aspects characteristic of Paul's theological and pastoral emphases.

On the new movement's relationship with Israel* and Israel's inheritance, Colossians is as Pauline as Galatians. Here is the same insistence on Gentiles* fully sharing in that inheritance ("saints," Col 1:2, 12; 3:12; Gal 3:6-29), the same pointing to the cross* and experience of grace (Col 2:6-15; Gal 3:1-5), the same warning against circumcision (implied), festivals and food laws (Col 2:11, 16, 21; Gal 2:4-5, 11-16; 4:10), the same talk of "the elemental forces" (Col 2:8, 20; Gal 4:3, 9) and the same assertion that distinctions between Jew and Gentile have lost their force (Col 3:11; Gal 3:28). The characterization of "uncircumcision" as a state of deadness (Col 2:13) and the warning against "sexual sin, impurity, evil desire and the covetousness which is idolatry" (Col 3:5) are characteristically Jewish (see Idolatry; Purity). At the same time the mystery motif, introduced in Romans 11:25-26, has shifted slightly from the thought of God's eschatological* purpose to unite Jew and Gentile to the thought of "Christ in you, the hope of glory" (Col 1:26-27; 2:2; 4:3). And there is no real polemic against the law as such (the term nomos is absent from the letter), as distinct from particular regulations (Col 2:14-17, 20-23).

The central concern of Colossians to highlight the full sufficiency of Christ* as redeemer, reconciler and victor over the powers (particularly Col 1:14, 20-22; 2:15) naturally shapes the emphases of the letter. Most interesting is how the so-called Christ hymn (Col 1:15-20) goes well beyond anything earlier in Paul (1 Cor 1:24, 30; 8:6) in lauding Christ in terms of divine Wisdom. Still more striking is the way the ecclesiology is linked into this Wisdom christology* in what appears to be a continuum—cosmos, body (of Christ), church (Col 1:18; 2:10). This ties in with a significant variation of the earlier Pauline body imagery (1 Cor 12; Rom 12:4-8)—Christ as the head of the body (Col 1:18; 2:19). At the same time the body imagery is stretched the other way by the unusual emphasis on the fleshly nature of Christ's crucified body (Col 1:22; 2:11), highlighting the christological claim of Colossians 2:9 still more starkly (see DPL, Head, Christ as).

It is not quite correct to say, as many scholars have, that Colossians's eschatology is wholly realized (note particularly Col 3:2-4), but it is true that more weight seems to be attributed to the "already" stage in the process of salvation (Col 1:13; 2:12; 3:1; cf. Rom 6:4-5; 8:11). At the same time the characteristic balance of Pauline ethics, between indicative and imperative, is maintained with fresh vigor (Col 3:5-12). But we also note the first appearance of what was to become a recurrent feature in second- and third-generation Christianity, the list of "household rules" (Haustafeln; Col 3:18—4:1; Eph 5:22—6:9; 1 Pet 2:18—3:7; cf. 1 Tim 2:8-15; 6:1-2; Tit 2:1-10; Did. 4.9-11; Barn. 19.5-7; 1 Clem. 21.6-9; Ign. Pol. 4.1—5.2; Pol. Phil. 4.2-3). In each case the inference is probably sound that the Haustafel expresses a realization that the Christian community must settle to a pattern of responsible living within the structures of society as it was traditionally ordered (see Household Codes).

In the continuity of Pauline theology, Colossians thus stands at a crucial transition point. Colossians indicates how the Pauline legacy would be stewarded in the generation following Paul's death and may be said to provide the canonical validation for subsequent Pauline school works to be designated as Pauline and properly attributed to Paul himself.

1.2. Ephesians. Ephesians looks like a conscious attempt by a disciple of Paul to preserve the heritage of Paul in a form that was of general rather than specific use, that was easy to incorporate within congregational worship and that maintained the earlier Pauline emphases regarded as of greatest continuing value. (For arguments in favor of Pauline authorship, see DPL, Ephesians.) This would explain its general character: not directed to a particular church—the words "in Ephesus" (Eph 1:1) are not present in the earliest and best manuscripts; not addressed to particular issues; and lacking Paul's normal list of greetings.

It would also explain the richly resonant style, the first three chapters almost taking the form of a lengthy thanksgiving prayer, full of what might be called "liturgical redundancies" (Eph 1:17-19; 2:13-18; 3:14-19), and the elaboration of the body imagery in Ephesians 4:7-16, of the marriage imagery in Ephesians 5:21-33 and of the warfare imagery in Ephesians 6:10-17, all serving to nurture a Pauline congregation's devotion and dedication more effectively than Paul's more typically epigrammatic exhortation. The number of passages in which Ephesians seems to have drawn on Colossians (e.g., Eph 1:15-17/Col 1:3-4, 9-10; Eph 2:5/Col 2:13; Eph 4:16/Col 2:19; Eph 5:19-20/Col 3:16; Eph 6:21-22/Col 4:7) gives particular point to the suggestion that Colossians provided the precedent for further post-Pauline attempts to preserve the Pauline legacy for continuing use. Again the case can be illustrated in three ways.

First, the typically Pauline emphasis on the Jewish character of the faith proclaimed is enhanced. The recipients are described as "saints" or "holy" more often than in any other Pauline letter (ten times), and their share in the promised "inheritance" is a reiterated assertion (Eph 1:14, 18; 5:5). The unique and impressive blessing (Eph 1:3-14) and the following prayer (particularly Eph 1:17-19) use characteristic Jewish language throughout. And there are regular citations of and allusions to Jewish scriptures and apocrypha* throughout Ephesians 4—6 (explicitly Eph 4:8-10, 25-26; 5:31; 6:2-3).

Most notable is Ephesians 2:11-22, which serves as a clearer statement of Paul's vision of Jew and Gentile integrated within eschatological Israel than anything Paul wrote earlier, not least with its Jewish sense of Gentile lack ("alienated from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world") now made good by the reconciling death of Christ* ("no longer strangers and aliens but . . . fellow citizens with the saints and members of the household of God"). Equally striking is the elaboration of the mystery motif. The language is drawn most directly from Colossians (Eph 3:3-5, 9/Col 1:26-27; Eph 6:19/Col 4:3), but the emphasis reflects the earlier Pauline concern (Gentiles as fellow heirs, Eph 3:6, 8) more closely than does Colossians. These were evidently still living concerns or at least represent an attempt to harvest the full benefit of this central emphasis in Paul's ministry and theology (cf. Rom 9—11). The echo of the earlier Pauline polemic against works (of the law) and boasting (Eph 2:8-9), however, is little more than that—an echo (contrast Gal 2:15—3:14; Rom 3:20—4:6; 9:11, 32). And the Shema, so creatively reworked in 1 Corinthians 8:6, seems to have been absorbed into a more ecclesiastically structured confession (Eph 4:4-6).

Second, in an odd way the christology, so powerful in Colossians, seems to have been somewhat diminished in emphasis as the vision of the church becomes more glorious. The church, characteristically the local church (in house, city or region) in the earlier Paulines is now for the first time understood consistently as the universal church (see DPL, Church). The cosmic christology of Colossians 1:17-19 has been developed into the striking, not to say astonishing, cosmic ecclesiology of Ephesians 1:22-23 ("the church that is his body, the fullness of him who fills all in all"). Christ's ascension* had as a primary purpose the giving of gifts to the church, and the measure of the resulting maturity of the church is "the full stature of Christ" (Eph 4:7-13). The first part of the Colossians's Haustafel has been transformed by the glorification of the church as bride of Christ (Eph 5:23-27). Analogously the eschatology is more consistently realized: "salvation" is an accomplished act (Eph 2:5, 8; 6:17); they are already raised and seated with Christ "in the heavenly places" (Eph 2:6); and there is no reference to Christ's coming again (contrast Eph 4:15; 5:27).

Third but not least in significance is the way in which the writer seems to be looking back to an apostolic age and to Paul as the archetypal apostle.* "The apostles" belong to the church's foundation, with the implication that the superstructure built thereon is well advanced (Eph 2:20), and they are designated as specially "holy" (Eph 3:5). The self-reference to Paul in Ephesians 3:1-13 at first looks to be strong evidence of Pauline authorship. But as the paragraph proceeds, the measure of boasting goes well beyond what Paul had previously claimed for his own role and sounds more and more like a eulogy penned by an admirer (cf. 1 Tim 1:15-16). Even with Ephesians 3:1 and Ephesians 4:1, the addition of the definite article turns the humble self-designation of Philemon 1 and 9 ("a prisoner of Christ Jesus") into something more like a title ("the prisoner of Christ Jesus," "the prisoner in the Lord").

All in all Ephesians can fairly be called the high point of Paulinism, as having harvested much of the most distinctive of the earlier Paul and having done so in such a memorable and inspirational way.

1.3. The Pastorals. With the Pastorals the question is provoked as to whether the Pauline legacy is beginning to be stretched too far and too thin. (For arguments in favor of Pauline authorship, see DPL, Pastoral Letters.) It is not that the traditional Pauline emphases and concerns are lost to sight. It is rather that the typical balance of emphasis that Paul achieved and sustained is in danger of being lost and of being replaced by one that Paul himself may not have recognized. The claim of the author is that what he writes does indeed stand within the tradition that Paul inaugurated. The verdict of the churches in accepting the Pastorals as Pauline is to accept and affirm that same claim. And since many of those involved stood a good deal closer to Paul in time and probably in personal knowledge, it ill behooves those writing nineteen centuries later to think we know Paul better than they did. Nevertheless a close comparison between the Pastorals and the undisputed Pauline letters does raise the question as to whether the Pauline legacy is beginning to be decisively eroded. And we are not surprised that the Pastorals had no successors (the drop in quality as we move into the subapostolic age is often noted), the Pastorals themselves having already begun to draw near to the boundaries of what could justifiably claim the epithet Pauline.

If we follow a similar sequence of analysis as in the last two cases, we should note first how remote the Jew/Gentile issue, still so prominent in Ephesians, seems to be. Paul's ministry to the Gentiles is recalled (1 Tim 2:7; 2 Tim 4:17) but with none of the fiery passion so characteristic of the earlier Paul. The mystery, so prominent in Colossians and Ephesians, has become something more formalized: "the mystery of faith," "the mystery of our religion" (1 Tim 3:9, 16; see DPL, Mystery). The positive value attributed to the law in 1 Timothy 1:7-9 echoes earlier assertions (Rom 2:12-16; 7:12-13; 13:3-4), but without the more characteristically negative thrust of so much of Paul's earlier teaching (echoes in 1 Tim 4:3-5 and Tit 3:9) the earlier balance is lacking. So too the talk of grace and works in 2 Timothy 1:9 and Titus 3:5 seems even more dispassionate and formulaic than even Ephesians 2:8-9, with the consistent commendation of "good works" (twelve times) underlining how much the perspective has shifted.

The developments in Pauline christology seem also to have shifted gear and to be moving in a direction different from the cosmic christology of Colossians and Ephesians. A stronger concern to reassert a clear monotheism seems evident (1 Tim 1:17; 2:5; 6:15-16); God is consistently described as "Savior" (1 Tim 1:1; 2:3; 4:10; Tit 1:3; 2:10, 13; 3:4). In correlation the christology is more in terms of Jesus as mediator' with God (1 Tim 2:5) and as sharing in God's role as Savior (2 Tim 1:10; Tit 2:13; 3:6). Most striking is the designation of Christ as "the glory of our great God and Savior" (Tit 2:13), which reads more like a variation of the earlier Wisdom christology, with Christ designated as the visible manifestation of the transcendent God (see DPL, Christology).

Equally noteworthy is the way in which faith in this Christ has become something more established and fixed: "the faith" (eleven times); "the teaching," "sound teaching" or "good teaching" (eleven times). "The faithful sayings" represent a similar sense of consolidation of tradition, not least in terms of the faith to be believed regarding Jesus (1 Tim 1:15; 2 Tim 2:11; Tit 3:5-8). It is not that such emphases are foreign to the earlier Paul. It is rather that the sense of a faith being freshly forged, of a dynamic tension between older traditional understandings and fresh revelation is lacking. A primary concern of the churches of Paul is now to gird themselves for the safe transmission of the tradition that began with Paul (2 Tim 1:12-14; 2:2).

The greatest development in the Pauline heritage of the Pastorals comes in the ecclesiology. The charismatic interplay of gifts and ministries so vividly portrayed in Paul's metaphor of the body of Christ in Romans 12:4-8 and 1 Corinthians 12, and still influential in the reworking of Ephesians 4, seems to have been left behind—understandable as that would be in a second-generation situation. "Elders" are in evidence for the first and only time in the Pauline corpus (1 Tim 5:1-2, 17, 19; Tit 1:5). "Overseers" (1 Tim 3:1-7; Tit 1:7-9) and "deacons" (1 Tim 3:8-13) now appear as established offices (1 Tim 3:1). "Charism" is spoken of as though it denoted an engracing of more limited scope (1 Tim 4:14; 2 Tim 1:6). Timothy and Titus begin to assume something of the role of a monarchical bishop with supreme responsibility (1 Tim 1:3; 4:6, 11; 5:1-16, 19-22). Again parallels can be drawn with particular features of Paul's earlier letters, but again the point is that the overall balance, which included the responsibility of Paul's churches to test and admonish and encourage, seems to have been lost, and the attempt to achieve a structured and ordered charismatic community has already largely given way to a straightforward hierarchical structure (see Church Order, Government).

2. The Wider Circle of Pauline Influence.
The second circle of Pauline influence includes several other writings within the NT itself.

2.1. Hebrews. An obvious candidate is Hebrews,* still attributed to Paul in the King James Version. And certainly there is a considerable overlap of concern between them, particularly in their perception of the importance of Christianity's relationship with its Jewish heritage and the terms in which they each conceive of that relationship. At each point, however, the weight of emphasis is significantly different, so that the question is whether the influence is specifically Pauline or a feature of early Christianity in general.

For example, the theme of the new covenant* is central to Hebrews in a way that is somewhat paralleled in 2 Corinthians 3; but the use of the covenant motif in Romans and Galatians, the fullest treatments of the relationship between Christianity and pre-Christian Judaism,* is quite different (Rom 9—11; Gal 3—4). The law* is a major theme in common; but Paul's concern is with circumcision* and other works of the law; the concern of Hebrews is almost exclusively with the temple cult (Heb 7—10). The most Hebrews-like feature in the Paulines at this point is Colossians 2:18/Hebrews 10:1. Faith* is another prominent Pauline word in Hebrews; but the great roll call of faith in Hebrews 11 starts from a somewhat different definition of faith (Heb 11:1) from Paul's in Romans 4. The overlap of Wisdom christology in Hebrews 1:3-4 is primarily with Colossians 1:15-20. And the high-priestly christology that dominates Hebrews has a foothold in Paul only at Romans 8:34.

2.2. 1 Peter and James. Of the other NT letters 1 Peter* can properly be called Pauline, at least on a number of key points. The christology of the suffering servant (1 Pet 2:24) is an explicit exposition of what is usually only alluded to by Paul (particularly Rom 4:25; 2 Cor 5:21). The conduct encouraged in 1 Peter 3:16 has several echoes of Pauline paraenesis, as the commentaries indicate. Most striking is the theology of charisms in 1 Peter 4:10-11, the only passage outside the Paulines to use the term charisma

(cf. particularly Rom 12:3-8; 1 Cor 12:8-10). But the idea of sharing Christ's sufferings* (1 Pet 4:13) is also distinctively Paul's (e.g., Rom 8:17; 2 Cor 1:5; Phil 3:10).

The implication that the Petrine school was influenced by the Pauline school is confirmed by 2 Peter 3:15-16. Evidently Paul's letters were well known in Petrine circles, and the "things in them hard to understand" were being all too influential for the writer of 2 Peter.*

Somewhat similar is the obvious allusion to Paul's teaching on faith and works (particularly Rom 3:28—4:22; see Faith and Works) in James 2:18-24. The influence of Paul's formulation seems to have been similarly "twisted" and so misapplied, in the view of James.*

2.3. Mark. It is even plausible to regard the Gospel of Mark as falling within the circle of direct influence from Paul (see DJG, Mark). The argument is that Paul both introduced the term gospel (the noun itself) into Christian vocabulary and fixed its meaning as focused on the death and resurrection of Christ (particularly 1 Cor 15:1-5; Gal 1:6-7; 3:1). It was evidently Mark who introduced the same term into the Gospel tradition, and his own use of it in Mark 1:1 effectively fixed the form of a Gospel as a "passion narrative with an extended introduction" (Kähler). The possibility that Mark wrote his Gospel to correct a misplaced emphasis on Jesus as miracle worker (particularly Mk 8) may also reflect a challenge to the gospel similar to that which drew forth Paul's most striking exposition of the power of Christ as strength in weakness (2 Cor 12:1-10; 13:4).

2.4. Acts of the Apostles. The most plausible candidate for the title of disciple of Paul outside the Pauline corpus, however, is the author of Acts* (Luke). At the least he was obviously a great admirer of Paul (see Paul in Acts). More than half of his book has Paul as the principal hero. Paul's missionary work particularly in the Aegean basin is the decisive expansion of Christianity into the Gentile world. And the final quarter of Acts is chiefly occupied with an elaborate defense of Paul against any charge of apostasy* from his ancestral faith. At these points Acts properly echoes and defends Pauline concerns. The case would be all the stronger if the minority view that Luke also wrote the Pastorals could be sustained. But the parallels suggest more the extent of Paul's influence than a common hand.

Despite his admiration for Paul, Luke seems to have been equally concerned to display the coherence and connectedness of Paul's mission with the Christianity that first emerged in Jerusalem.* In so doing, however, he underplays the points that Paul himself emphasized (Paul's apostleship, his confrontations in Antioch* and Galatia, the collection) and plays up points that run counter to Paul's own claims (his repeated visits to Jerusalem, his part in disseminating the apostolic decree and his concern to observe the law). Luke, we may say, was a disciple or an admirer of Paul trying to integrate the Pauline legacy within a missionary church, where Spirit and good order went hand in hand, where the apostolic decree was the basis for mixed congregations and where elders provided a common form of church government (see Worship).

2.5. 1 Clement. Beyond the NT itself we would have to make special mention of *1 Clement, written from Rome to Corinth in the second half of the 90s. Clement obviously admired Paul greatly (1 Clem. 5.6-7). He certainly knew several of Paul's letters (cf. particularly 1 Clem. 35.5-6 with Rom 1:29-32) and evidently modeled his own on 1 Corinthians (1 Clem. 47; cf. also 1 Clem. 24 with 1 Cor 15; 1 Clem. 37.5—38.2 with 1 Cor 12; 1 Clem. 49—50 with 1 Cor 13; and 1 Clem. 42.4 with 1 Cor 16:15). The most interesting Paulinism is the reference to "justification by faith" in 1 Clement 32.4. But equally striking is the way he treats Abraham* as a model of obedience* (1 Clem. 9—10) and links faith with "hospitality"* (1 Clem. 10.7) in a manner closer to James than to Paul (1 Clem. 30.3; 31.2-3). It would be widely agreed that the echoes of Paul's distinctive theology lack the cutting edge of Paul's own perception and formulation.

2.6. Ignatius. The only other person with a real claim to belong to the wider circle of Pauline influence is Ignatius,* who wrote his sequence of letters while being taken prisoner through Asia Minor on the way to martyrdom* in Rome sometime in the 110s. Like Clement, he admired Paul greatly (Ign. Eph. 12.2; Ign. Rom. 4.3). Like Clement, he knew 1 Corinthians (Ign. Eph. 16.1; 18.1; Ign. Rom. 5.1; 9.2). And Ephesians 12.2 also makes it clear that he knew that Paul had written several letters. The evidence of specific influence, however, is often hard to evaluate. For example, while the "in Christ" phrase of Ephesians 8.2 is no doubt derived from Paul, the echo of Romans 1:3-4 (Ign. Eph. 18.2; 20.2; Ign. Rom. 7.3) may equally be explained as knowledge of common creedal material.

The substantive parallels are enhanced by the fact that both could evaluate their suffering positively, precisely because they understood it as a sharing in Christ's sufferings—"imitating the passion of my God" (Ign. Rom. 6.3)—and the similar opposition they waged against judaizing movements within the churches addressed (Ign. Magn. 8—10; Ign. Phld. 6.1). In the first case, however, Ignatius's eagerness for martyrdom strikes many readers as somewhat unhealthy, and in the latter the antithesis is between "Judaism" and "Christianity" with a sharpness that Paul would probably have regretted. And while Ignatius's strong advocacy of episcopacy can be seen as an extension of the line of development through the Pastorals, his abandonment of Paul's clear distinction (1 Cor 15:44-50) between a spiritual (resurrection) body and the body of flesh (Ign. Smyrn. 3.1) contributed, ironically, to early Christianity's loss of the sense of the present body as a positive feature of createdness.

4. The Legacy of Paul.

It is the measure of the greatness of an innovative or inspirational figure that he gathers disciples and generates imitators. Rarely do such disciples and imitators rise to the heights of the master, though Ephesians could be said to do so in this case. What is important for us at this distance is (1) to recognize the character of the original inspiration, its theological insights and pastoral concerns, and not allow the shifting emphases of the Pauline school or the circles of diminishing influence to blur or dull the impact of that original inspiration; (2) to observe how the content and emphases of Paulinism changed in character in the succeeding generation but were still acknowledged as Pauline and legitimate bearers of his name; and (3), if we cherish the legacy of Paul, to engage in the equivalent reworking of that legacy in relation to the changing circumstances, needs and challenges of our own day as Augustine and Luther and Barth did in their day. Only so will the legacy of Paul be preserved in its full value.

See also NEW TESTAMENT THEOLOGY; PAUL AND PAULINISMS IN ACTS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. K. Barrett, Paul: An Introduction to His Thought (Louisville, KY: Westminster/John Knox, 1994) chaps. 4—5; J. C. Beker, Heirs of Paul: Paul's Legacy in the New Testament and in the Church Today (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1991); W. Bujard, Stilanalytische Untersuchungen zum Kolosserbrief (SUNT 11; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1973); H. Conzelmann, "Die Schule des Paulus" in Theologia Crucis-Signum Crucis, ed. C. Andresen and G. Klein (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1979) 85-96; E. Dassmann, Der Stachel im Fleisch: Paulus in der frühchristlichen Literatur bis Irenäus (Münster: Aschendorff, 1979); J. D. G. Dunn, "The Deutero-Pauline Letters" in Early Christian Thought in Its Jewish Context, ed. J. Barclay and J. Sweet (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1996) 130-44; G. S. Holland, The Tradition That You Received from Us: 2 Thessalonians in the Pauline Tradition (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1988); K. Kertelge, Paulus in den neutestamentlichen Spätschriften (QD 89; Freiburg: Herder, 1981); A. T. Lincoln and A. J. M. Wedderburn, The Theology of the Later Pauline Letters (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993); A. Lindemann, Paulus im ältesten Christentum: Das Bild des Apostels und die Rezeption der paulinischen Theologie in der frühchristlichen Literatur bis Marcion (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1979); D. R. MacDonald, The Legend and the Apostle: The Battle for Paul in Story and Canon (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1983); M. Y. MacDonald, The Pauline Churches: A Sociohistorical Study of Institutionalization in the Pauline and Deutero-Pauline Writings (SNTSMS 60; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1988); I. H. Marshall, "Prospects for the Pastoral Epistles" in Doing Theology for the People of God: Studies in Honor of J. I. Packer, ed. D. Lewis and A. McGrath (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1996) 137-55; H. Räisänen, " 'Righteousness by Works': An Early Catholic Doctrine? Thoughts on 1 Clement" in Jesus, Paul and Torah: Collected Essays (JSNTSup 43; Sheffield: JSOT, 1992) 203-24; F. Young, The Theology of the Pastoral Letters (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994). J. D. G. Dunn

PEACE

The idea of peace (eirēnē), primarily in the objective sense of a state of affairs or a type of relationship, is widely employed in early Christian literature as an important component of the salvation* accomplished by Jesus Christ and therefore as a basic characteristic of Christian existence and behavior (see DJG, Peace; DPL, Peace, Reconciliation). NT usage draws heavily on the OT (see esp. šālôm), both through direct exegesis and as the OT (Hebrew and/or Greek) was mediated to the individual writers through Jewish and antecedent Christian thought. (For the concept of peace in the Hebrew OT, see DJG, Peace, and note also Durham. On the Hebrew OT but also on the Septuagint, other Jewish literature and secular Greek and Latin literature, with further details regarding terminology, see Foerster and von Rad; Healey and Klassen; Yoder and Swartley.)

Ideas of eirēnē stemming from Greco-Roman traditions (usually summarized as "the absence of war") can also be detected. Yet attempts to separate and tag Hebrew and Greek ideas, although they sometimes provide useful references points, can lead to artificially precise distinctions, especially in a milieu where Judaism and Hellenism are not distinct categories. In terms of the Christian literature before us, it must be said that the idea of peace was in the public domain and therefore conforms in each case to the particular historical and theological contexts of the separate writings. Of interest is not merely how the words are defined in each case but how the idea is employed and developed in the given context as well as its place in Christian traditions.

Only Jude* will be omitted from the following treatment of the General Epistles. "Peace" appears verbally only in the letter's greeting (Jude 2), where it is joined with mercy* and love.* Though the absence of peace is evident in the lives of the itinerant teachers or prophets (e.g., Jude 12-13) and is notably absent in the wake of their activities (Jude 19), Jude shows no interest in promoting peace as such. His desire is rather to rouse the church to "contend for the faith."

1. Acts
2. Hebrews
3. James
4. 1-2 Peter
5. 1-3 John
6. Revelation
7. Postapostolic Writings
8. Conclusions

1. Acts.

In Acts 10:36 (see Acts), probably an allusion to Isaiah 52:7, eirēnē is a summary of the message God had preached through Jesus to the people of Israel* (cf. Acts 3:19-20, which employs the related idea of "refreshment"; see Laansma, 274-75) and that has already spread through Judea. It conveys the comprehensive "salvation" (cf. Lk 1:79; 2:14) attending reconciliation (cf. DPL, Peace, Reconciliation) between God and Israel; in the context of Peter's inaugural sermon to the Gentiles* ("He is Lord of all!"), it signifies reconciliation between God and humankind and thus between Jews and Gentiles. The action of Moses* in Acts 7:26 ("reconcile in peace") might be noted in this connection if this detail is included as a parallel to Jesus.

Luke notes that the "church throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria enjoyed peace, being built up" (Acts 9:31). The image is of a church both relatively free from internal strife and external persecution* and positively thriving (see also, e.g., Acts 2:43-47). Then, in the context of the council's decision on the status of the Gentiles, we read of Judas and Silas, itinerant prophets* whom the church at Antioch* "sent off in peace [probably in a formal setting] . . . to those who had sent them [believers in Jerusalem]" (Acts 15:33 NRSV; cf. 3 Jn 5-8; Jas 2:15-16; Acts 20:7-12; Acts 20:36-38), thus marking harmony between the churches.

The expression probably used on that occasion is used also by the converted Philippian jailer when he releases Paul from prison: "Go in peace" (Acts 16:36). This Jewish expression on the lips of a Gentile converted only a few hours earlier serves to underline the genuineness of the man's conversion, while setting the stage for Paul's attempt to secure peace for the converts he leaves behind.

In two instances the term eirēnē is used in a political setting, both of which ring hollow. In Acts 12:20 the people of Tyre and Sidon seek peace (reconciliation) with Herod because they are economically dependent on Judea. The lawyer Tertullus begins his case against Paul by declaring to Felix, "We have through you attained much peace" (Acts 24:2). The statement is mere flattery and exaggeration, since Felix's tenure of office was far from peaceful, but it sets the stage for the case against Paul as a rabble-rouser. It is possible then that Luke views the peace that is brought through the Messiah-king's birth (Lk 2) and proclamation (Acts 10) and that is spreading geographically and ethnically (Acts 9:31; cf. Acts 10:36-37; 15:33) as the true counterpart to the Pax Romana (Hasler, 395-96).

2. Hebrews.

Each usage of the term eirēnē (eirēnikos, used once) in Hebrews* bears the stamp of the old link of peace and righteousness* (e.g., Is 9:7; 11:1-10; 32:17; Ps 72:7 [LXX 71:7]; Ps 85:10 [LXX 84:11]; Rom 5:1; see 3 and 4 below), whether verbally (Heb 7:2; 12:11; 12:14 [hagiasmon, "holiness," in the last]) or conceptually (Heb 11:31; 13:20-21).

The nonscriptural detail that Rahab received the spies "with peace" (Heb 11:31) probably indicates that she is a model of the hospitality* enjoined in Hebrews 13:2. In James 2:25 Rahab's faith* is noted for its hospitality (hypodexamenē) to the spies (James's term is angelous; a short route to the idea of Heb 13:2?) in a list that may be dependent on the same tradition as 1 Clement 12, where she is also noted for her "hospitality" (philoxenia; cf. Heb 13:2). This sort of hospitality was an essential complement to the itinerant nature of much early ministry* (cf. Acts 15:33; Jude in the introduction above; 5 below [2 Jn and 3 Jn]; Mt 25:35; Did. 11; often elsewhere); in Hebrews it is a specific application of Hebrews 12:14.

Also similar to James* is the way in which the "peaceful fruit of righteousness" caps an ethical* section drawing on wisdom* (Heb 12:4-11; cf. Jas 3:18; eirēnikos occurs in the NT only here and in Jas 3:17). The latter expression is a compact way of saying that the harvest of God's parental discipline consists in peace (broadly conceived as šālôm) and righteousness, which are gifts of the eschatological* salvation (e.g., Is 32:17) and are linked to the enjoyment of God's presence. The exhortation to "pursue peace with [not: in company with] all" (Heb 12:14) draws on the language of Psalm 34:14 [LXX 33:15] (see 4 below [1 Pet]) and probably refers to internal affairs of the church. There is no apparent problem with strife among community members, but willing participation in the disciplinary process that leads to full peace (Heb 12:4-11) is flagging (e.g., Heb 10:24-39; 13:3, 13). The exhortation of Hebrews 12:14 is probably included in that broad sense, that is, "pursue the things that lead to salvation and well-being with all" (Heb 12:12-13). This idea is then developed in general (Heb 12:15-29; cf. Heb 10:32-34) and particular (Heb 13:1-19) ways. It is noteworthy that peace is here linked with the cultic notion of sanctification. "Communal 'peace,' in the broadest sense, is rooted in, and is the fullest expression of, the holiness of the community gathered around Christ's 'altar'" (Attridge, 367).

It is against the background of Hebrews 12:11, 14 that the benediction (Heb 13:20-21, "God of peace") is to be understood in the first instance, although the language is traditional (1 Thess 5:23; Rom 15:33) and probably cannot be contextually restricted (cf. "covenant of peace"; Num 25:12; Is 54:10; Ezek 34:25). The expression "king of peace" (Heb 7:2) is likewise semantically ambiguous (subjective or descriptive genitive?) and of uncertain thematic importance. "King of peace" is one element in a dense midrash, and the etymology of Melchizedek's* name was apparently well known (Philo Leg. All. 3.79; Josephus Ant. 1.10.2 §180). It is possible that the combination of "king of righteousness" and "king of peace" was meant to highlight Jesus' messiahship (cf. e.g., Is 9:7), but this is not developed. Nor is this "peace" obviously related to the katapausis theme of Hebrews 3:7—4:11 (but see, e.g., 1 Chron 22:6-10; Is 32:17; Sir 47:13, 16), as the latter passage focuses primarily on the image of a sabbath celebration in God's resting place (on the motif of rest see Laansma). It is difficult to know, therefore, either what the author meant by "king of peace" or how integral this idea is to his "word of exhortation," unless it is in anticipation of the ethical applications in Hebrews 12.

3. James.

The shock value of James's illustration (Jas 2:15-16; cf. 1 Jn 3:17) may be partially lost on a society foreign to oriental norms of hospitality, but in his own context the profound incongruity of such an empty pronouncement in the face of such need would have registered even with many pagans. "Go in peace" was a common Jewish farewell (for parallels, see Judg 18:6; 1 Sam 1:17; Jdt 8:35; Jub. 18:16; Mk 5:34; Acts 16:36), and that it here carries the broader sense of šālôm is evident from the additional comments: "keep warm and eat your fill" (NRSV). The utterance was misguided but probably sincere. The illustration is suited to the context (Jas 2:1-13) and is probably chosen because peacemaking, thus defined as the active promotion of šālôm, epitomizes James's ethic (Jas 3:18; see also Guelich, 106-7, on Mt 5:9). The point is not merely that deficient faith would make such a hollow pronouncement but that "saving" faith would express precisely that sentiment and follow through with appropriate action.

Wisdom's gentle peacemaking (Jas 3:13-18) is in contrast to the wisdom that brings disorder (akatastasia), but it also consists positively in impartial acts of mercy (Jas 1:27; cf. Jas 2:1-13) and good fruits, and the "fruit of righteousness is sown in peace by those who make peace" (probably an attached proverb). The close association of righteousness and peace in the OT (see 2 above) can be felt here, possibly with a sense of eschatological fulfillment (Jas 1:16-18; Jas 5:3, 7-9). In the light of the broad idea of šālôm in James 2:16, the meaning is not merely that harmony is the soil in which righteousness flourishes, as true as that is (Jas 1:20), but that righteousness and šālôm (eirēnē) are materially related and necessarily joined. The way to peace is then portrayed in James 4:1-12 and elsewhere in the letter.

4. 1-2 Peter.

The greetings and closings of 1 Peter (1 Pet 1:2; 1 Pet 5:14), although formulaic (see Letters; 1 Peter; 2 Peter), convey not only the pastoral desire that these people would possess in the fullest measure the source (grace*) and content (peace) of the divine blessings* in the midst of a hostile world but also the assumption that these blessings of šālôm, along with the other privileges of Israel (1 Pet 2:9-10), have now been assigned restrictively to those who are "in Christ."

Wives are to adorn themselves for God's eyes first (1 Pet 3:4; cf. Mt 6:4, 6, 18), resulting in a display of beauty that emanates from a "meek and quiet spirit" on behalf of their unbelieving husbands. This is to shape, rather than to exclude, bodily adornment and is social rather than private, having to do with how wives relate to their potentially hostile husbands both actively and passively. As the centerpiece of Peter's counsel on submission, for which Sarah is an example, 1 Peter 3:4 involves the wives' domestic application of the general injunction borrowed from Psalm 34:13-17: "seek peace and pursue it" (zētēsatō eirēnēn kai diōxatō autēn, 1 Pet 3:11).

The latter expression is unique in the OT with the possible exception of Jeremiah 29:7 (LXX 36:7: zētēsatō eirēnēn kai diōxatō autēn, Ezek 7:25 has a different sense), and its wording can be detected in several NT texts (see also Rom 14:19; Heb 12:14; possibly 2 Tim 2:22), indicating that Psalm 34:14 was popular in apostolic Christianity. The expression in its present context suggests an indefatigable promotion of peace in all dealings with unbelievers, and, as in Hebrews and James, the idea includes "doing good" and "righteousness." Numerous comments in the epistle give shape to the sentiment, drawing prominently on the example of Christ.* It may also be, as B. Winter has suggested (Winter, 22-23 and passim), that the idea of Jeremiah 29 underlies it, namely, that the believers are literally to seek the welfare (šālôm) of the city (Jer 29:7) in which they live as resident aliens through civically recognized acts of public beneficence so that "the Gentiles . . . though they malign you as evildoers . . . may see your honorable deeds and glorify God when he comes to judge" (1 Pet 2:12 NRSV).

The greeting of 2 Peter 1:2 specifies that it is in the sphere of "the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord" that believers will receive the full measure of grace and peace. This idea is carried through to the end of the letter where, in view of the inevitability and nature of the coming judgment,* the readers are to "strive to be found [in the eschatological judgment] by him without spot or blemish, in peace" (2 Pet 3:14), which is accomplished positively by growing "in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet 3:18). The peace in view is not merely harmony as opposed to dissension, nor is this an inner feeling. The idea may be one of peace with God (a state of reconciliation) at the time of judgment, but it probably also includes the life (šālôm) after which they are to strive (2 Pet 1:3-11) and which stands in contrast to the existence of the false teachers (2 Pet 2).

5. 1-3 John.

The idea of peace is not expressed verbally in 1 John (see John, Letters of) and it receives formulaic expression in 2 John 3 (cf. 1 Tim 1:2; 2 Tim 1:2) and 3 John 15. 2 John 3 substitutes an affirmation for a prayer* in its greeting and groups together grace, mercy, and peace (eirēnē) as gifts from God for those who walk in the realm of the gospel's truth and love. 3 John closes (3 Jn 15) with the simple benediction pronounced by the elder on Gaius: "Peace to you" (eirēnē soi). The same epistle confirms that the full OT sense of šālôm is intended: "I pray that all may go well with you and that you may be in good health [hygiainein], just as it is well with your soul" (3 Jn 2 NRSV). This prayer is then developed in terms of life consistent with the gospel's truth (3 Jn 3-4) and love (3 Jn 5-8), making evident that peace consists of fellowship* with God and with one another and by extension that peace from God is mediated through human fellowship (cf. 3 Jn 2, 5-8 with 1 Jn 3:17; Jas 2:16). In this case the elder is concerned that šālôm (Judg 19:20) should be extended to the itinerant preachers and that they should be sent out in proper fashion (see 1 above [Acts 15:33]), although they are strangers to Gaius (cf. Heb 13:2), in contrast to Diotrephes' practice.

1 John does not allude verbally to peace but everywhere develops the associated ideas of walking in truth and love as well as fellowship with God and one another. That the idea of peace is everywhere present in 1 John can also be seen, for example, in the references to "confidence" (parrēsia; 1 Jn 2:28; 1 Jn 3:21; 1 Jn 4:17; 1 Jn 5:14) available to believers and related comments: being "unashamed" (1 Jn 2:28); "reassure our hearts before him" (1 Jn 3:19; cf. Jn 14:27); and "casts out fear" (1 Jn 4:18; cf., with differences, Jn 14:27; Jn 16:33).

6. Revelation.

War and peace are of thematic significance in Revelation (see Revelation, Book of). The Apocalypse speaks to a church suffering persecution at the hands of Rome, within the sphere of the militarily imposed Pax Romana, but also to one subject to the insidious, corrupting and powerfully alluring religious and economic influence of the beckoning "harlot." Drawing on the OT as well as Jewish traditions of martyrdom* and holy war, the book offers its vision of the holy war to be waged against this power (Bauckham).

God himself removes both human peace (Rev 6:4; probably with an eye on the Pax Romana) and war and establishes his own lasting and perfect peace through the Lamb's* death and eschatological warfare (Rev 5:5-6; 19:11—20:15). The role of believers on the earth is secondary but significant: to resist assimilation to Rome's corruption; to have a faithful testimony (completed by martyrdom); to engage in works of faith, love, service and patient endurance;* and to keep the commandments* of God. They conquer after the pattern of the slaughtered Lamb: "by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony, for they did not cling to life even in the face of death" (Rev 12:11). Though martyrs are present with the Lamb in the battle preceding the thousand-year earthly reign (Rev 19:14-15; cf. Rev 17:14; Rev 2:27), they play no specified role in the fight (Rev 19:21). Before that time, in the heavenly regions they cry out for vengeance but are told to rest, to wait quietly until their number has been completed (Rev 6:11).

Again it is said in one of the seven beatitudes, " 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from now on.' 'Yes,' says the Spirit, 'they shall rest from their labors, for their works follow them'" (Rev 14:13). Meanwhile the book's greeting pronounces "grace and peace" on those still alive on the earth (Rev 1:4-5). The tailoring of this greeting to the book's contents suggests that peace takes the form of a confident assurance gained from the transcendent and eschatological perspective of the prophecy but also consists in the salvific victory already achieved on behalf of the living (Rev 1:5-6; cf. Jn 16:33), while it anticipates the universal victory and ensuing peace of the book's final three chapters. The peace of God is not established through human force, whether military or political, nor is it brought in through social transformation. Yet the saints' martyrdom is construed as active participation in the holy war—as conquering—and their righteousness presumably leaves its mark.

7. Postapostolic Writings.

Most of the documents included in groupings of the early apostolic fathers* contain scattered references to peace or concord by name (eirēnē, homonoia and cognates; see also hēsychia, diallagē, apallagē, epikatallagē and cognates), with the highest concentration in 1 Clement, Ignatius* and the Shepherd of Hermas. *The following examples are largely restricted to passages using the preceding terms, although passages exhorting to peace and concord in other ways could be multiplied. In particular the idea is embedded in the Two Ways doctrine and is stressed in connection with the Eucharist. Peace in the sense of rest is characteristic of gnostic thought (for the idea of rest in the non-gnostic literature of this period see Laansma, 118-33; see Gnosis).

7.1. The Two Ways. Both the *Didache and the *Epistle of Barnabas contain extended Christian versions of the Two Ways doctrine, and among their several points of similarity are the command "you shall not desire a schism but shall reconcile [eirēneuseis] those who strive" (Did. 4.3; cf. Barn. 19.12; on the idea of reconciliation see DPL, Peace, Reconciliation) and the virtues of "meekness" and "quietness" (Did. 3.7-8; Barn. 19.4). In the NT the latter pair occurs in 1 Peter 3:4 (see 4 above [1 Pet]). This pair occurs frequently in Hermas as well (Herm. Man. 5.2.3; 5.2.6; 6.2.3; 11.8; with the last compare Jas 3:17-18), which is usually considered to reflect Two Ways thinking (esp. Herm. Man. 6.2.3 above).

7.2. Instructions on the Eucharist. According to Didache 14.2 it was necessary for those quarreling to be reconciled (diallagōsin) before participating in the Eucharist, or else the sacrifice would be defiled. Ignatius exhorts the Ephesian believers to come together more frequently "to give thanks" (probably a reference to the Eucharist), but he assumes rather than commands that the meeting will be imbued with homonoia ("concord") and eirēnē ("peace"). The reason for the frequency of the meetings is that by their concord Satan's* mischief is brought to nothing, and by peace every war in heaven and on earth is destroyed (Ign. Eph. 13.1-2; cf. Ign. Eph. 5.2). Redemption* is thereby advanced.

7.3 1 Clement. The occasion for 1 Clement is dissension (stasis) within the Corinthian community involving a few younger men who have unseated the older bishops. This dissension Clement* of Rome attributes chiefly to jealousy and envy (zēlos kai pētēonos—specifics are unclear) so that the entire, wide-ranging letter is summed up as an "entreaty for peace and concord" (tēn enteuxin . . . peri eirēnēs kai homonoias, 1 Clem. 63.2), beginning with the reestablishing of good order: the exile of the pretenders and the restoration of the deposed bishops (see Church Order). The usage of relevant terminology (esp. eirēnē, homonoia) is therefore extensive, and the epistle abounds with illustrations of and arguments for concord drawn from the OT, Jesus' teachings, the apostles* and nature.

Yet the expression "peace and concord" was a standard way of referring to the well-being of the Roman Empire* from the first century B.C. on, and this is the basic source of Clement's thought. His letter conforms closely to a specific type of deliberative discourse, an "appeal for concord," of which there are several extant examples; their authors, "generally philosophers or rhetoricians, seek to calm the outbreak of faction, within cities or between cities, by dissuading from strife (stasis) and exhorting to concord (homonoia)" (Welborn, 1058). In general, Clement's, or the Roman church's, response is favorably disposed toward the Roman imperium and seems to follow the approach of the Roman senate and emperor in dealing with strife within the empire, possibly indicating an early and presumptuous (if well-intentioned) move toward that church's primacy. Compared to the NT, the center of Clement's idea of peace seems to have shifted from soteriology and christology* to ecclesiology, drawing on pagan models.

7.4. Ignatius. The political background of homonoia is less pronounced in Ignatius. His characteristic concern that bishops be regarded as the Lord* himself (Eph 6.1) is reflected in a repeated appeal for homonoia on behalf of the bishops (Ign. Eph. 4.1; Ign. Magn. 6.1-2; Ign. Trall. 12.2; Ign. Phld. presc.). In one of these (Ign. Eph. 4) he works the idea up into the memorable image of harmonious (symphōnos) love and concord in which Jesus Christ is sung in the key of God. He also appeals to several churches to send a delegation to Antioch in Syria, Ignatius's own church, to congratulate the church there for having restored to itself peace (eirēnē; Ign. Phld. 10.1; Ign. Smyrn. 11.2; Ign. Pol. 7.1). He does not elaborate on the situation behind that request, but it may have involved an earlier attack on his own authority* as bishop that had been properly dealt with after his departure.

7.5. The Shepherd of Hermas. Hermas's emphasis on quietness as an ethical quality has already been noted. Several times 1 Thessalonians 5:13 (cf. Mk 9:50) is alluded to in slogan fashion (Herm. Vis. 3.6.3; 3.9.2; 3.9.10; 3.12.3; Herm. Sim. 8.7.2): "be at peace among yourselves" (eirēneuete en heautois). The idea is associated with the sharing of material goods (Herm. Vis. 3.9.2), with mutual correction (Herm. Vis. 3.9.10; cf. Did. 15.3; 4.3; 14.2; Barn. 19.2) and with the promise of further visions* (Herm. Vis. 3.12.3). Evil speech in particular is cited as detrimental to communal peace; those refraining from such speech will have well-being at all times with all (Herm. Man. 2.3; Herm. Sim. 8.7.2). Homonoia is included in a list of the best things in life (Herm. Man. 8.9), bringing a blessing. When it is possessed along with other virtues* and the name of the Son of God,* it brings entrance into the kingdom of heaven* (Herm. Sim. 9.15.2; in 2 Clem. 10.2 peace is the eschatological reward* for righteousness).

7.6. Gnosticism. The idea of rest is characteristic of gnostic thought, where the term anapausis ("rest") is a synonym of eirēnē (Helderman, 47-84) and is expressed in terms of most of the major features of the system(s) (see Helderman; Williams; Laansma, 134-39, 142-46; these syntheses utilize several gnostic writings, many of which are later than A.D. 150). Thus rest is the original state of the Pleroma and the original home of the Gnostic. Since the "fall," existence for the Gnostics is characterized by "unrest" and turbulence (cf. Gos. Truth 28.29—30.4). The divine Logos comes to reveal to the Pneumatics their original resting place, and the fruit of the gnosis he bestows is rest (Gos. Truth 22.9, 12). "Rest" is also descriptive of the unity (homonoia) of the Pneumatics with each other (Gos. Phil. 72.22-23; 79.3-13). Upon death the light particle is freed from the material body and returns to the repose of the Father. At the end of history, when all of the estranged particles of light have been restored to the Pleroma, the original condition of absolute rest and silence will return (Gos. Truth 41.3—43.3; Gos. Mary 17.4-7). The concept is deeply indebted throughout to Platonic traditions of the stability of the transcendent and of the mind that contemplates it in contrast to the instability, movement and flux of the material creation (Williams). (For further developments following A.D. 150 see Hamman; Yoder and Swartley, 189-91; Dinkler, 466-93; Huber et al., 618-46.)

8. Conclusion.

The following generalizations seem to constitute a fair representation of the idea as indicated by the specific terms used within the literature we have surveyed. Within the apostolic period "peace" is spoken of in christological and soteriological terms, as the eschatological gift of reconciliation in Christ from the God of peace and as an appropriate behavioral reflection of the new covenant* relationship between believers and God and each other. There are significant implications for the relationship of believers to the society in which they live (e.g., 1 Pet 3), though there is no social or political agenda separate from the advancement of the gospel. Among the Fathers, where the idea is utilized most prominently in connection with developing notions of the church as an institution, the communal aspect in an ecclesial setting is the most outstanding development. Clement in particular relies heavily on the model of the Roman state and its promotion of concord. In Gnosticism the idea of peace is expressed most characteristically in the frequent references to "rest." The latter concept is drawn from Greek metaphysical ideas of transcendent stability in contrast to the instability and flux of the material world. In this sense it is characteristic of all the major elements in the gnostic system(s) and is one of its most important soteriological concepts.

Certain features seem to link the various NT usages of the idea, beyond the common reliance on the OT and Jewish concept of šālôm. For example, Psalm 34 underlies both Hebrews 12 and 1 Peter 3. Its use elsewhere in the NT suggests that it had a fixed place in early paraenesis. Hebrews and James both place the fruit of righteousness and peace at the climax of an exhortation drawing on wisdom, and the reference to Rahab in Hebrews may reflect early Christian lists of OT examples also used by James and Clement of Rome. But there are also differences in emphasis. For example, Luke may be quietly positing the peace of the gospel as an alternative to the Pax Romana, while the author of Revelation rejects the latter in favor of an eschatological peace issuing from the Lamb's final victory. Not long after Revelation is written, Clement of Rome draws on the Roman state as a positive model of concord for the church. Other differences arise due to the differing theological emphases of the letters and writers.

See also DEATH OF CHRIST; FELLOWSHIP; REDEMPTION; RIGHTEOUSNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. Attridge, Hebrews (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1989); R. J. Bauckham, The Climax of Prophecy (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1993); E. Dinkler, "Friede," RAC 8:434-505; J. I. Durham, "שלום and the Presence of God" in Proclamation and Presence: Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies, ed. J. I. Durham and J. R. Porter (London: SCM, 1970) 272-93; W. Foerster and G. von Rad, "εἰρήνη κτλ," TDNT 2:400-420; R. A. Guelich, The Sermon on the Mount (Waco, TX: Word, 1982); A. Hamman, "Peace" in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, ed. A. Di Berardino (New York: Oxford University Press, 1992), 664-65; V. Hasler, "εἰρήνη," EDNT 1:394-97; J. P. Healey and W. Klassen, "Peace," ABD 5:206-12; J. Helderman, Die Anapausis im Evangelium Veritatis (NHS 18; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1984); W. Huber et al., "Frieden," TRE 11:599-646; J. Laansma, " 'I Will Give You Rest.' The Background and Significance of the Rest Motif in the New Testament with Special Reference to Mt 11 and Heb 3—4" (Ph.D. dissertation, University of Aberdeen, 1995; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, forthcoming); C. Spicq, "εἰρηνεύω" in Theological Lexicon of the New Testament (3 vols.; Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1994) 1:424-38; L. L. Welborn, "Clement, First Epistle of," ABD 1:1055-60; K. Wengst, Pax Romana and the Peace of Jesus Christ (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1987); M. A. Williams, The Immovable Race: A Gnostic Designation and the Theme of Stability in Late Antiquity, ed. F. Wisse (NHS 29; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1985); B. Winter, Seek the Welfare of the City (FCCGRW, Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994); P. B. Yoder and W. M. Swartley, eds., The Meaning of Peace (Louisville, KY: Westminster/John Knox, 1992). J. C. Laansma

PELLA, FLIGHT TO

Early Christian sources speak of a group of Jewish Christians fleeing from Jerusalem prior to or during the Jewish war of A.D. 67-70 and settling in the Perean city of Pella. One of the cities of the Decapolis, Pella was located at the base of the foothills in the northern Jordan Valley, about two miles east of the Jordan River and eighteen miles south of the Sea of Galilee. Despite critical issues that have been raised, the historical probability of this event seems well grounded.

1. The Pella Tradition
2. Critical Issues
3. Conclusions

1. The Pella Tradition.

Eusebius provides the earliest account of this tradition in Ecclesiastical History 3.5.3. He tells us that "the people of the church of Jerusalem, in accordance with a certain oracle given by revelation," were instructed to depart from Jerusalem* before the war "and dwell in one of the cities of Perea which they called Pella." This was so that when the Christian believers had deserted the capital and all of Judea, "the judgment of God might at last overtake them [the Jews] for all their crimes against the Christ and his apostles" (cf. 1 Thess 2:14-16). What was the source for Eusebius's tradition? We cannot be certain. It may have been from Hegesippus or from Aristo of Pella (see Lüdemann 1980, 165-66), a Christian apologist of the mid-second century.

Epiphanius, writing in A.D. 377 in his Panarion ("medicine chest"), mentions the flight to Pella in his discussions of the Nazoreans (Epiphanius Pan. 29.7.7-8) and of the Ebionites (Epiphanius Pan. 30.2.7). These two Jewish-Christian sects, according to Epiphanius, had roots in Pella. In 392, writing in his Treatise on Weights and Measures 15 (a biblical reference work), Epiphanius describes the small "church of God" existing in Jerusalem when Hadrian and his Jewish interpreter, Aquila, visited the ruined city in 129. He speaks of how the "disciples of the disciples of the apostles" had returned to Jerusalem from Pella and briefly recounts their original flight to Pella. When Jerusalem was "about to be seized by the Romans," the disciples were "forewarned by an angel to depart from the city." They settled in Pella "of the Decapolis," "across the Jordan." "But after Jerusalem was destroyed, they returned."

In the Syriac version of the Pseudo-Clementine Recognitions 1.37, 39, we find an indirect testimony to what appears to be the Pella tradition (for the text, see Koester, 98-101). Christian believers "would be led to a secure place of the land that they might survive and be preserved from the war" (Recog. 1.37.2), and "they would be saved from the war which was about to come for the destruction of those who were not persuaded" (Recog. 1.39.3). This text may reflect a second-century tradition that circulated among Christian communities in Transjordan, where the allusion to "a secure place of the land" would have been understood as a reference to Pella (Koester, 101-2).

In Luke 21:20-22 we find Jesus warning his disciples, "When you see Jerusalem surrounded by armies, then know that its desolation has come near. Then those in Judea must flee to the mountains, and those inside the city must leave it" (NRSV). Here Luke differs from Mark 13:14, where the "abomination of desolation set up where it ought not to be" serves as the warning for those in Judea to flee to the mountains.

Does Luke's version of this saying reflect a knowledge of the Pella tradition? While "the mountains" might be understood as alluding to the mountains east of the Jordan, including the region of Pella, there is no compelling reason to understand it in this manner. Since the warning is directed toward "those in Judea," the mountains of Judea are more likely in view (see Marshall, 772).

If Luke is writing post-A.D. 70, it is not clear that he is shaping these words in light of the Pella tradition. Is this saying of Jesus, or a version of it, perhaps the oracle of which Eusebius speaks? In other words, has an oracle that was received during 67-70 been placed on the lips of Jesus or shaped an already existing saying of Jesus? This possibility cannot be ruled out, but the evidence does not demand the conclusion, and the fact that Eusebius does not point out the correlation with Jesus' warning is notable. On the whole, the Lukan version of Jesus' warning of the coming destruction of Jerusalem, though giving the verisimilitude of specificity informed by hindsight, is no more specific than what one might generally expect of the siege of a city in the ancient world. In fact, some details are at variance with the account we have from Josephus* (see DJG, "Destruction of Jerusalem" §3). It remains questionable that Luke provides an additional testimony to the Pella tradition.

2. Critical Issues.

Do we have two testimonies to Pella in Eusebius and Epiphanius, or only one? In other words, was Epiphanius dependent on Eusebius's account? While G. Lüdemann concludes that Epiphanius was dependent on Eusebius (Lüdemann 1980, 164-65), C. Koester has examined the vocabulary of both accounts and effectively shown that Epiphanius was not dependent on Eusebius's account, though the "main elements . . . are essentially the same" (Koester, 94-95). There is good reason to conclude that in Eusebius and Epiphanius we have two explicit and independent accounts of the flight to Pella, and to these may be added another independent though indirect testimony in the Pseudo-Clementine Recognitions.

Granted that Christians did reside in Pella after the war, was their origin in Jerusalem, as the Pella tradition claims, or was the story of the flight from Jerusalem a tradition that emerged in the interest of claiming an apostolic lineage for Transjordanian Jewish Christianity? Lüdemann has argued that the latter was the case. According to Lüdemann, when Epiphanius speaks of the postwar church in Jerusalem as consisting of returnees from Pella, he is combining his knowledge of the (actually unhistorical) Pella tradition with his knowledge of a postwar Christian community in Jerusalem. In placing the postwar heirs of the apostles* in Jerusalem, he is counteracting the claim of apostolic lineage made by Jewish Christian heretics in Pella. In Epiphanius's mind, the true descendants of the Jerusalem apostles returned to Jerusalem after the war. But Koester has pointed out that if the Pella tradition emerged out of this interest, Epiphanius, who locates the origin of the "Nazorean heresy" in the region of Pella (Epiphanius Pan. 19.7.7-8), would surely have taken opportunity in his Panarion to refute any claim they made to apostolic descent. But he does not. And there is no indication of a tradition that the refugees included apostles. Instead Epiphanius calls the refugees "disciples" (Epiphanius Pan. 29.7.8), and in Weights and Measures he explicitly refers to them as "disciples of the apostles" (Weights 15).

A more probable motivation behind the tradition may be found near the surface of the texts: to recount historical events that testified to the divine favor shown to the Jewish Christian community as they were warned through supernatural revelation* (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.5.3; Epiphanius Weights 15) to flee from Jerusalem and thus escape the divine judgment,* which would befall non-Christian Jews remaining in Jerusalem.

There seems to be no substantial reason for doubting the historical authenticity of the account that Jewish Christian refugees from Jerusalem did settle in Pella. Their flight probably took place "before the war," as Eusebius asserts, and prior to the siege of Jerusalem, as Epiphanius maintains (Epiphanius Pan. 29.7.8). The Jewish Christians who settled in Pella gradually took on distinctive beliefs that Epiphanius would later identify as the "Nazorean heresy" (nazōraious hairesis, Pan. 29.7.8; see Jewish Christianity). And Epiphanius traces the origin of the Ebionites* to Pella, where "Ebion's pretense began" (Epiphanius Pan. 30.2.7).

If these Jewish Christians did flee Jerusalem, when would they have done so? Eusebius's report that they did so "before the war" allows more possibilities than does Epiphanius's account, that they did not flee until "the city was about to be conquered." From Josephus we learn that the first outbreak of fighting took place in the summer of 66 (Josephus J.W. 2.15.4 §284), while Vespasian's campaign was begun in 67. Josephus also recounts how many Jews fled the city immediately after the Jewish victory over the Twelfth Legion in November of 66 (Josephus J.W. 2.20.1 §556). Jewish Christians might well have been among these refugees (for objections, see Brandon, 168-78). Although Brandon appeals to Josephus (Josephus J.W. 4.413-39) for evidence of Vespasian's carrying out a punitive campaign in the vicinity of Pella in 68, Pella is not mentioned by Josephus in that account, and there is no reason to believe that a Hellenistic and pro-Roman city such as Pella would have been the target of punishment any more than was Gadara, which was spared (see Sowers, 307-10, for a rebuttal of Brandon). Its political safety may have been an attractive reason for Jewish Christians to seek refuge in Pella, perhaps under the sponsorship of Gentile* Christians (so Sowers, 310 n. 14).

3. Conclusions.

It is plausible that prior to the siege of the city, Jewish Christians fled Jerusalem for Pella while there was still opportunity. Their presence in the city until a relatively late hour is what we might expect of Jewish Christians, for Jerusalem held for them a significant role in history and theology. Their departure as described in the Pella tradition, however, indicates a self-identity that was distinct from Jewish nationalism and zealotry. Eusebius is offering his own interpretation in saying that the coming defeat under the Romans was the judgment of God upon unbelieving Jews, but given the historic destruction of Jerusalem under the Babylonians, the interpretation would seem naturally to have followed for the refugees themselves. For Jewish Christians the event must have represented a defining moment in distinguishing themselves from "mainstream" Judaism.*

Epiphanius's report (Epiphanius Weights 15) that some of these Jewish Christians returned to Jerusalem after 70 is not difficult to believe. It fits with the Eusebian picture of a Christian community in Jerusalem after the war, "the whole church consisting of believing Hebrews," and his recounting of a succession of fifteen "bishops in Jerusalem" until the siege of Hadrian in 135 (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.5). There is no reason to assume that all of those who fled to Pella returned to Jerusalem after the war, and the evidence from Epiphanius and elsewhere (see Van Elderen) of a continuing Jewish Christian presence in Transjordan suggests that some of the original refugees remained in Pella and its environs.

See also EBIONITES; GALILEAN CHRISTIANITY; JEWISH CHRISTIANITY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. S. G. F. Brandon, The Fall of Jerusalem and the Christian Church (2d ed.; London: SPCK, 1957); B. C. Gray, "The Movements of the Jerusalem Church During the First Jewish War," JEH 24 (1973) 1-7; J. J. Gunther, "The Fate of the Jerusalem Church: The Flight to Pella," TZ 29 (1973) 81-94; C. Koester, "The Origin and Significance of the Flight to Pella Tradition," CBQ 51 (1989) 90-106; G. Lüdemann, "The Successors of Pre-70 Jerusalem Christianity: A Critical Evaluation of the Pella Tradition" in Jewish and Christian Self-Definition, vol. 1, ed. E. P. Sanders (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1980) 161-73 and as "Appendix: The Successors of Earliest Christianity: An Analysis of the Pella Tradition" in Opposition to Paul in Jewish Christianity (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1989) 200-13; I. H. Marshall, Commentary on Luke (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); S. S. Sowers, "The Circumstances and Recollection of the Pella Flight," TZ 26 (1970) 315-20; B. Van Elderen, "Early Christianity in Transjordan," TynB 45.1 (1994) 97-117.

D. G. Reid

PENTECOST

Acts 2:1-42 contains Luke's dramatic story of the giving of the Spirit (see Holy Spirit) to Jesus' followers at the Jewish feast of Pentecost (see Judaism). This distinct event, occurring fifty days after the resurrection,* is depicted as the miracle* that began the period of the church* and energized its mission.* Extraordinary audible and visible phenomena accompany a filling with the Holy Spirit that enables each person to speak in other languages. Crowds of Jerusalem residents, who represent every nation, gather and recognize in their native language praise* of God's* mighty works. Others mock at this scene and believe the disciples are drunk. Peter, as representative of the Twelve, replies to the accusation in a discourse that explains what has occurred and its relation to Scripture and God's activity in Jesus of Nazareth. He concludes by calling on his audience to repent* and be baptized.* About three thousand people respond positively and become part of a new community.

1. The Role of Pentecost in the Narrative of Luke-Acts
2. Historical Issues
3. The Theological Significance of Pentecost

1. The Role of Pentecost in the Narrative of Luke-Acts.

1.1. Narrative Linkage. The account about Pentecost is linked with the open-endedness of the closure of Luke's first volume, which foretells the disciples' witness,* involving a proclamation to all nations, beginning from Jerusalem* (Lk 24:47-48), and its unfulfilled promise*: "And see, I am sending upon you what my Father promised; so stay here in the city until you have been clothed with power from on high" (Lk 24:49; see Power). This link between the two parts of Luke's narrative is reinforced when the latter saying is substantially repeated in Acts 1:4-5.

In Luke's second volume, Acts,* Pentecost constitutes a decisive part of the commissioning element of the plot, which leads through conflict to a resolution that has features of both closure and open-endedness. Insight into the commissioning and a partial outline of the plot are provided in Acts 1:8: "But you will receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you will be my witnesses in Jerusalem, in all Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth" (see Samaria). Pentecost enables Jesus' followers to begin carrying out this commission.

1.2. Narrative Shaping. Pentecost as part of the promise-fulfillment schema not only joins Luke's two volumes but also helps to shape the overall narrative, because Pentecost also fulfills John the Baptist's promise that "he will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire" (Lk 3:16). The eschatological* judgment* and purification by the wind and fire of the Spirit begin in the experience at Pentecost. The fulfillment of the promise that launches the story line of Acts has parallels in the Gospel's plot with the commissioning element at the baptism of Jesus, which launches his ministry* (Lk 3:21, 22). While Jesus is at prayer,* the Holy Spirit descends on him, accompanied by visible and audible phenomena. Shortly thereafter Jesus, filled with the power of the Spirit, gives a discourse that is programmatic for the rest of the Gospel's narrative (Lk 4:16-30). In Acts this pattern is repeated with the praying disciples (Acts 1:14) as the recipients of the Spirit and Peter providing the programmatic speech (Acts 2:14-42).

The theophanic elements and the miracle in which the Spirit produces not just ecstatic utterances (Acts 10:46; 19:6) but other languages make the manifestation of the Spirit at Pentecost unique in the narrative (see also 2.4 below). Despite the unrepeatable character of Pentecost as inaugurating a decisive new stage in God's saving purposes, there are references back to Pentecost or mini-Pentecosts at key points in the narrative's depiction of the church's expansion—in Samaria, with Cornelius,* at the Jerusalem council and in Paul's work at Ephesus (Acts 8:14-17; 10:44-48; 11:15-17; 15:7-9; 19:1-7).

1.3. Characterization of the Spirit. While Jesus' followers are the human protagonists in the plot of Acts, the narrator shows that the primary character at Pentecost is a divine character, the Spirit. The disciples are at first passive recipients; the action is that of the divine Spirit (Acts 2:1-4). The sound that fills the house comes from heaven* (i.e., from God; Acts 2:2) and the event is depicted in terms of a theophany. In Jewish literature wind and fire accompany divine manifestations. Wind is mentioned in 2 Samuel 22:11, 16; Job 37:9, 10; 38:1; Ezekiel 13:13. Fire is a common feature in theophanies and an integral element in the theophany at Sinai (Ex 19:18). The account in Exodus does not mention wind at Sinai, but other versions of the event do (Josephus Ant. 3.80). Philo mentions the noise created by God's pneuma, breath or wind (Philo Decal. 33) and has the voice of God visible as flames and becoming articulate speech in the language familiar to the audience (Philo Decal. 46). The interpretation of the event in Peter's discourse also emphasizes that the Spirit is God's Spirit (Acts 2:27, 28) and that what Christ pours out he has first received from the Father (Acts 2:33).

From now on the divine Spirit will be a significant character with a prominent and determinative role in the narrative. The Spirit will give courage to the Jerusalem community under persecution* (Acts 4:31) and to Stephen* in the face of martyrdom* (Acts 7:55) and will be responsible for extraordinary acts of power* (e.g., Acts 13:9). The Spirit will guide new departures and crucial stages in the church's mission, such as singling out Barnabas and Saul (Acts 13:2), inspiring the apostolic decree (Acts 15:28), directing the second journey of Paul (Acts 16:6, 7), leading Paul to go to Jerusalem (Acts 19:21) and making known to him what would befall him there (Acts 20:22, 23; 21:4, 11). At the end of the narrative Paul in Rome attributes to the Holy Spirit the passage from Isaiah that justifies his decision to turn from the Jews to the Gentiles* (Acts 28:25-28).

1.4. Intertextuality. Pentecost as the fulfillment of promise provides continuity between Luke's narrative and an earlier text, the Jewish Scriptures (see Intertextuality; Old Testament in Acts). This is most clearly seen in the use of the citation from Joel 3:1-5 (LXX) in Peter's discourse (Acts 2:17-21). Through the introductory pesher formula—this which has happened is that which was spoken of in Scripture—Pentecost is interpreted as the fulfillment of the promise that in the end times God will pour out his Spirit on all flesh.* The continuity motif is strengthened as Peter points out that the Christ who has poured out the Spirit (Acts 2:33) is the fulfillment of Psalm 16 and Psalm 110 and more generally of God's plan in Scripture (Acts 2:23).

2. Historical Issues.

Views on the historicity of the account range from acceptance of the substantial historicity of all its elements (Marshall) to skepticism about any historical tradition underlying most of them (Zehnle). Of the historical issues that have been raised, five major ones should be mentioned.

2.1. Diverse Views of Christian Origins. Questions are raised by the absence of any other NT reference to an event so extraordinary and so significant for the church's existence. Paul appears to see Christ's resurrection, exaltation* and his becoming life-giving Spirit as a single complex. John's equivalent to Pentecost occurs on the same day as the resurrection and is for a small group of disciples (Jn 20:22). It does not follow that because John may be considered to have a tendency to bring out the unity of salvation* events, Luke's presentation is to be preferred historically. Luke can be shown to have an equal tendency to separate salvation history into distinct though related episodes. Elsewhere in the NT, such as in Paul's view of the commissioning of an apostle* or in the Great Commission (Mt 28:18-20), resurrection appearances are the presupposition for mission. Luke's schema of separating the resurrection appearances from Pentecost entails that in his narrative the Pentecostal experience of the Spirit rather than resurrection appearances is the indispensable presupposition for mission.

2.2. Place. Another well-known tendency of Luke is to give Jerusalem a central role in the structure of his narrative. In contrast to the other Gospels, the disciples are told not to leave Jerusalem between the resurrection and Pentecost (Lk 24:49; Acts 1:4), and Luke omits Mark 14:28 and alters Mark 16:7 (cf. Lk 24:6), thereby suppressing the tradition of resurrection appearances in Galilee. For this reason some have held that it is likely there were independent origins of churches with accompanying experiences of the Spirit in places such as Galilee and Damascus (Acts 9:19) and that Luke has again suppressed these in order to retain a neater schema with Jerusalem at the center. Two arguments suggest otherwise. The chief leaders of the earliest Jerusalem church were Galileans—James, Peter and John, as Paul attests independently. This makes it unlikely that Galilee* played any major role as the place of the church's origins, and in view of current eschatological expectations and their convictions about Christ's imminent Parousia,* it would make sense if there had been an early move of disciples from Galilee back to Jerusalem, where the events of the end were expected to unfold. It is also clear that Paul, particularly in Galatians, knows of only one place that could lay claim to be the center of the early Christian movement or the mother church, and that is Jerusalem.

2.3. Time. If, as Mark and Matthew indicate, the first resurrection appearances took place in Galilee, then, although this runs counter to Jesus' command in Luke's narrative, it might still be said that Pentecost would provide the obvious time to return to Jerusalem. But the issue of dating is tied up with Luke's depiction of a period of forty days of resurrection appearances with an ascension* as a separate event bringing the period to a close, and a number of reasons suggest that the dating may be part of Luke's reshaping of his traditions. Both Luke's Gospel and John's have the ascension on the day of the resurrection. A comparison of Acts' forty-day schema with the sequence of resurrection appearances, including an appearance to more than five hundred at one time (1 Cor 15), also suggests that the Acts schema is a narrative construct. Luke has separated what others regarded as one saving event. He has distinguished the resurrection from a physical exaltation by confining appearances to a symbolic period of forty days between the two events and has separated the bestowal of the Spirit from both by having it at the next appropriate date, the fiftieth day. Given Luke's interest in the notion of a renewed Israel,* Pentecost was a particularly appropriate date because of the associations of this festival with the renewal of the covenant* (see 3.3 below).

2.4. The Miracle of Language. In terms of the narrative itself there appears to be no particular need for a language miracle (see also 1.2 above). The audience of Jews would have understood either Aramaic or Greek. Elsewhere in Acts and in 1 Corinthians the Spirit produces glossolalia, ecstatic speech that ordinarily does not involve foreign languages. The comment of some within the narrative about the disciples' drunkenness (Acts 2:13) makes sense as a reaction to ecstatic speech (see also 1 Cor 14:23) but not as a response to hearing foreign languages. Some scholars have therefore proposed that originally the disciples spoke glossolalia but that some hearers recognized phrases as their native language. But if Luke or an earlier stage of the tradition could reinterpret a hearing miracle as a language miracle, they could equally well have reinterpreted glossolalia as languages in an attempt to show the special and universal features of the first experience of the Spirit (see Tongues).

2.5. Peter's Speech. As with other speeches in Acts, there are questions about the relation between tradition, if any, and redaction. In this case prior traditions, such as the christological* use of Psalm 110 and other OT texts, the primitive kerygma* and the invitation to repentance and faith,* may well have been incorporated, but the style is similar to that of other speeches in Acts and reflects Luke's hand. Its form is similar to that of a synagogue* homily, quoting a text at the beginning, weaving other texts into the address and finishing with an allusion to the original text. Some of its points appear to depend on the Septuagint text. Would Peter have quoted this to his Jewish audience?

2.6. Conclusions. Given that NT narratives consist of a mixture of historical tradition and theological shaping whose final form is authoritative* for the church, we cannot be certain of some aspects of this narrative's historicity. These include the dating at Pentecost and the miracle of languages. Luke, however, is likely to have known of traditions of an initial powerful experience of the Spirit by the first followers of Jesus in Jerusalem that involved visionary elements and glossolalia, of Peter's early leadership and of early Christian preaching about Jesus that involved use of OT proof-texts. These constitute the materials he has reworked and reinterpreted for his narrative presentation.

3. The Theological Significance of Pentecost. Aspects of the theological significance of Pentecost, such as the outpouring of the Spirit as fulfillment of promise, the divine nature of the Spirit, prayer and the reception of the Spirit and the Spirit's role in the church's expansion, have already emerged from a consideration of narrative features of this episode. Four further theological themes will be highlighted.

3.1. Pentecost and Christ. Just as the Spirit poured out at Pentecost is the Spirit of God, so that same Spirit does not operate in isolation from Christ but is the Spirit of Christ. The Spirit who descended on Jesus and filled him with power for his mission to bring good news to the poor and release to captives is the Spirit with whom he will baptize others (Lk 3:16; 24:49). In the narrative the Pentecostal experience depends on Christ's ascension as its presupposition, and Peter's speech makes clear that because of Christ's exaltation he has received the Spirit from the Father in such a way that he can now bestow the Spirit on others (Acts 2:33, 34).

3.2. Pentecost and the Filling of the Spirit. With the exception of Ephesians 5:18 the notion of being filled with the Spirit is a distinctively Lukan one. It can be employed for the initial and permanent endowment of a person who is to serve God, such as John the Baptist (Lk 1:5) or Paul (Acts 9:17). It is especially used when a person is inspired by the Spirit to make a prophetic statement or preach (e.g., Lk 1:41, 67; Acts 4:8, 31; 13:9). In Luke's terminology the filling with the Spirit at Pentecost is synonymous with the baptizing, the gift or the outpouring of the Spirit. It may well be that "filling" is the term chosen for the Pentecost experience because of the association with inspired utterances, both those of all the disciples and that of Peter. It is significant also that in Peter's speech "and they shall prophesy" is added to the citation from Joel after "I will pour out my Spirit" (Acts 2:18). For the disciples Pentecost involved a filling of the Spirit that was both an equipping for inspired speech and an initiation into a new eschatological epoch ("in these last days" is another addition to the Joel prophecy in Acts 2:17).

3.3. Pentecost and the People of God. Pentecost produced not simply Spirit-filled individuals but a new community. The three thousand who were baptized "devoted themselves to the apostles' . . . fellowship" and "were together and had all things in common" (Acts 2:42, 44). The outpouring of the Spirit was appropriate at Pentecost because for many Jews this festival was a celebration not simply of the offering of the first fruits of the wheat harvest but of the renewal of the covenant made by God with Israel, particularly the covenant at Sinai (see Church as Israel). This significance of the festival existed from the middle of the second century B.C. (cf. Jub. 1:5; 6:11, 17; 15:1-24; 1QS 1:7—2:19). The narrative depicts Pentecost as the end-time renewal of the people of God, "the whole house of Israel" (Acts 2:36, 39), and the Spirit is therefore also the fulfillment of covenant promise (cf. Acts 3:25).

3.4. Pentecost and Mission. Pentecost is not only the inauguration of the renewed Israel with the Twelve as its foundation and the Jerusalem church as its representative. It also foreshadows the universality of the mission of this renewed people of God. The Jerusalem residents who appear on the scene turn out to be representatives "from every nation under heaven" (Acts 2:5-11). The citation from Joel speaks of "all flesh" and "whoever calls on the name of the Lord" (Acts 2:17, 21). Although Gentiles are not mentioned in their own right but appear only as proselytes to Judaism* (Acts 2:11), Pentecost launches the church's mission, which will take it to the ends of the earth (Acts 1:8).

The outpouring of the Spirit produces the energizing power for witness (Lk 24:48, 49; Acts 1:8). This witness of proclamation and mission is not something believers can carry out unaccompanied. The initial filling and the continuing impetus and empowering of the Spirit are its indispensable prerequisites. The account indicates that not only preaching* but also signs and wonders* will be part of the witness as a consequence of the Spirit's empowerment. The citation from Joel is revised to read of "portents in the heavens above and signs on the earth below" that will accompany the outpouring of the Spirit (Acts 2:19); Peter's speech emphasizes that Jesus himself was "a man attested to you by God with deeds of power, wonders and signs" (Acts 2:22); and as a result of their Pentecost experience such deeds are replicated in the mission of his followers, as "many wonders and signs were being done by the apostles" (Acts 2:43).

See also ACTS OF THE APOSTLES; HOLY SPIRIT; SIGNS AND WONDERS; TONGUES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. K. Barrett, Acts 1-14 (ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1994); J. D. G. Dunn, Baptism in the Holy Spirit (London: SCM, 1970); idem, "Baptism in the Spirit: A Response to Pentecostal Scholarship on Luke-Acts," JPT 3 (1993) 3-27; idem, Jesus and the Spirit (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1975); J. A. Fitzmyer, "The Ascension of Christ and Pentecost," TS 45 (1984) 409-40; L. T. Johnson, The Acts of the Apostles (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1992); A. T. Lincoln, "Theology and History in the Interpretation of Luke's Pentecost," ExpT 96 (1985) 204-9; G. Lüdemann, Early Christianity According to the Traditions in Acts (London: SCM, 1989); I. H. Marshall, "The Significance of Pentecost," SJT 30 (1977) 347-69; R. P. Menzies, The Development of Early Christian Pneumatology with Special Reference to Luke-Acts (Sheffield: JSOT, 1991); M. C. Parsons, The Departure of Jesus in Luke-Acts (Sheffield: JSOT, 1987); J. B. Shelton, Mighty in Word and Deed: The Role of the Holy Spirit in Luke-Acts (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1991); R. B. Sloan, "'Signs and Wonders': A Rhetorical Clue to the Pentecost Discourse," EvQ 63 (1991) 225-40; R. Stronstadt, The Charismatic Theology of St. Luke (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1984); R. C. Tannehill, The Narrative Unity of Luke-Acts (2 vols.; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1990) vol. 2; A. J. M. Wedderburn, "Traditions and Redaction in Acts 2:1-13," JSNT 55 (1994) 27-54; R. F. Zehnle, Peter's Pentecost Discourse: Tradition and Lukan Reinterpretation in Peter's Speeches of Acts 2 and 3 (New York: Abingdon, 1971). A. T. Lincoln

PERSECUTION

The NT and church history in general highlight various episodes of persecution against the followers of Jesus and typically treat them as defining moments in the life of the church. For the purposes of this article, persecution is the violation of anyone's property or physical person because of the victim's identification with a religious group.

1. Overview of Persecution Against Christians
2. Reasons for Persecution
3. Christian Attitudes to Persecution
4. Theological Significance of Persecution

1. Overview of Persecution Against Christians.

In order to understand the significance of persecution in the NT and its place in the first two centuries A.D., a literary survey of the NT and a chronological survey are presented below. Such surveys as follow are clearly incomplete. The NT and other early Christian works never had as their purpose to provide a complete catalog of persecutions. These surveys focus on the significant instances of persecution preserved in the literary evidence; it is certain that many of our ancestors in the faith experienced persecutions concerning which we have no record.

1.1. Literary Survey of the New Testament. With the exception of 2 Peter,* Jude* and the Johannine epistles (see John, Letters of), the NT books under consideration in this volume provide a variety of descriptions of persecution and responses to it by the Christians.

1.1.1. Acts. Acts* is an account that is focused on Peter's early ministry* and on Paul's part in the spread of Christianity from Jerusalem* to Rome.* As such it does not provide an exhaustive account of the persecutions occurring in the time period it covers (c. 30-62). It is also clear from his Gospel and Acts that Luke is pro-Roman in political orientation. Given these caveats, the testimony of Acts is worth consideration.

Acts describes persecution by the Jews who were against the message of Jesus' followers, persecution that included commands for silence about Jesus (Acts 4:18; 5:40); beatings (Acts 5:40; 18:17; 21:30-32); imprisonment (Acts 5:18); stoning (Acts 7:58-60); and legal prosecution (Acts 18:12-16; 24:2-9). Of special interest is the repeated account of the persecutions that Saul brought against believers: arresting and imprisoning them (Acts 9:2; 22:4-5; 26:10) and approving of their executions (Acts 8:1; 26:10). In a dramatic reversal, this same Saul becomes the target of Jewish plots after his conversion (Acts 9:23-24; 20:19; 23:12-14) and appears as the central victim of persecution in the last half of the book.

There are also accounts of persecutions brought against believers by Jews in complicity with Gentiles: stonings (Acts 14:5 [attempted]; 14:19) and unspecified persecution (Acts 13:50; 17:5-9, 13).

We also have a description of Agrippa I (called King Herod by Acts and Eusebius) executing James the apostle* and imprisoning Peter (Acts 12:2-4; Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 2.9). Eusebius's account adds the detail (from Clement of Alexandria Hypotyposes 7) that the bailiff who escorted James to trial professed his faith after hearing James's court testimony and was executed with James.

Gentiles* who persecute believers include the mantic slave girl's owners, who bring Paul and Silas to be beaten and imprisoned (Acts 16:22-23). If we take Suetonius's impulsore Chresto ("by the instigation of Chrestus") as descriptive of Christ* as the point of contention among tumultuous Jews (with Lampe), then Claudius's expulsion of Jews in 49 might be considered an instance of persecution against Jews and Jewish Christians in Rome (Acts 18:2; Suetonius Claudius 25.4; Dio Cassius Hist. 60.6.6; Orosius Pag. 7.6.15), though Claudius may have been motivated by concern for the Jews' safety, as his policies in Alexandria* and Judea show (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 2.19). This was one of two expulsions of Jews under the Julio-Claudians (the other in 19 by Tiberius), both of which seem to be attempts to quiet unrest rather than persecutions of Jews for religious reasons. There is also a description of a disturbance in Ephesus against "the Way" (Acts 19:23-41). Paul's final imprisonment in Acts is portrayed as a Roman action against him (Acts 28:16-17, 30), though Paul blames it on the Jews (Acts 28:17-19).

1.1.2. Hebrews. The author of Hebrews* knows that the letter's* first readers had experienced significant though not continued persecution, including confiscation of property (Heb 10:32-34). Hebrews 12:4 might indicate that the readers had not yet been put to death for their faith.

1.1.3. James. The text of James* does not single out persecution as a challenge for Christian experience, though the trials mentioned in James 1:2 may include persecution. James the Just, as Eusebius calls the author, was martyred at the temple* in Jerusalem for his testimony to Jesus. Eusebius identifies the persecutors as "scribes and Pharisees" who threw James off the top of a wall around the temple, stoned him and then allowed one of their number to club his head (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 2.23.8-18; cf. Epiphanius Haer. 78.14). Epiphanius connects this martyrdom* to the beginning of Vespasian's siege, thus dating James's death to 66, since this would have been the last time that Jews from around the Mediterranean would be able to gather for a Passover (Meyer and Bauer). Josephus, however, dates James's death to about 62, since he links it to the beginning of Albinus's tenure as procurator (Josephus Ant. 20.9.1 §§200-201). This is the preferred date for James's death, since Josephus is writing in the same century and the passage bears no evidence of emendation by Christian scribes (cf. Josephus Ant. 18.3.3 §§63-64).

1.1.4. 1 Peter. Of the two Petrine letters, 1 Peter* is clearly written at a time when Christians have experienced persecution. The command in 1 Peter 4:12 not to think it strange that "the fiery trial" has occurred among the readers is strong evidence that this letter, written from Rome (= Babylon,* 1 Pet 5:13), dates from around the time of Nero's persecution of Christians after the fire in Rome (64).

Tacitus (Tactitus Ann. 15.38-44) describes the fire and how Nero shifted the blame for the fire from himself to the Christians and then began to persecute them. Tacitus is not at all sympathetic to Christianity, calling it a superstitio and including Christians among the dregs of the Roman Empire.* His record of Nero's persecution of them is therefore reliable, since he has no intention of making the Christians look good. Tacitus tells us that Nero had some Christians dipped in oil and then set afire to serve as lights in his gardens at night. Thus "the fiery trial" of 1 Peter 4:12 could refer both to the persecution that arose because of the fire and one mode of persecution that Nero used. The translations that offer words outside of the semantic field of "burning" or "fire" for the noun pyrōsis miss the historical allusion here, as well as the link with "the trial by fire" of 1 Peter 1:7, and the intertextual, eschatological connection made between this fire and a fire God will use to judge the earth and vindicate his people (2 Pet 3:7, 12; Did. 16.5). The fact that 1 Peter deals so much with persecution (1 Pet 1:6-7; 3:13—4:19) and mentions obedience* to the government (1 Pet 2:13-17) makes the connection between this letter and the fire of 64 most probable. Since 2 Peter* is more concerned with false teaching than with persecution, it does not have the emphasis on faithfulness in persecution that 1 Peter does.

1.1.5. Revelation. The book of Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) contains many references to persecution, since persecution forms the occasion for this book's composition. As the Apocalypse begins, the author is depicted as being in exile for his Christian message (Rev 1:9). In his letters to the seven churches, reference is made to affliction (Rev 2:9-10) and martyrdom* (Rev 2:10, 13).

The second and third visions* in the book also include references to martyrdom (Rev 6:9-11; 16:6; 17:6; 18:24; 19:2). The woman who is drunk with the blood of the saints is clearly identified as Rome in Revelation 17:9. The descriptions at least of this woman therefore refer to the execution of Christians by Roman authorities; we cannot say whether the mention of martyrdom made to the churches of Smyrna and Pergamum was carried out by local residents (note "those called Jews" in Rev 2:9) or Roman authorities. The problem of persecution drives this Apocalypse (see Apocalyptic) and forms the occasion for John's visions that climax in Christ's ultimate vindication of the elect* (Rev 19:11-21), God's judgment* of all according to their works (Rev 2:23; 18:6; 20:12-13; 22:12) and the final rest of the redeemed in a restored creation* (Rev 21:1—22:15). Revelation is primarily a theodicy of persecution, not a definitive time line of the future or a sure guide to persecutions that were taking place. W. H. C. Frend links the high prices (Rev 6:6) and boycotts (Rev 13:16-17) to the famine that occurred in 92-93 in Asia Minor. This is possible, but it is equally possible that the author imagined how the persecution related to the imperial cult might progress.

1.2. Chronological Survey. This survey begins with Domitian, the first emperor* after Nero known for persecuting Christians (see 1.1.1 for a rough chronological outline through Nero's persecution). The survey ends with Marcus Aurelius, emperor in 161-80.

1.2.1. Domitian's Persecution. According to Melito* of Sardis (in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.26.9) and Tertullian (Apol. 5.4), Domitian was the second emperor who persecuted Christians. We have little certain evidence of what Domitian did; Tertullian tells us that he did not persecute the Christians for long and that he recalled those whom he had exiled. Among those may have been Domitilla, Domitian's niece, whom he exiled to Pontia (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.18.4; Eusebius's identification of Domitilla as Flavius Clemens's niece is probably mistaken).

Also noteworthy is Dio Cassius's description of Domitian's persecution of those who were practicing Jewish ways. They were charged with atheism; some were deprived of property, while others were executed (Dio Cassius 67.14.1-3). Given Judaism's* status as a legal religion, his reference to the charge of atheism makes one wonder whether his source had confused Jewish ways with Christianity.

Dio's description at least confirms Domitian's reputation as a persecutor. Suetonius describes how "Lord God" became Domitian's standard title in correspondence and conversation, how images of this emperor in Rome had to be of a certain weight of gold or silver and how various architectural embellishments proliferated as means of encouraging worship of Domitian (Suetonius Domitian 13). Because of this strong push toward deification within his lifetime and the record that he did persecute Christians, Domitian remains the best candidate for being identified as the second beast* of Revelation, whose image was supposed to be worshiped (Rev 13:15; note also Suetonius's remark that his troops referred to him as "God" immediately after his assassination [Suetonius Domitian 23]).

Although there is not agreement on his number (Rev 13:18), it is likely that 666 refers to Nero, who then would be identified as the first beast (Rev 13:1-8), since this is the numerical value of "Neron Caesar" when it is spelled in Hebrew letters. This would then make sense of the statement that the second beast had the authority of the first beast (Rev 13:12), since both these emperors are known to have persecuted Christians. Domitian's number would thus identify him as another Nero. E. Stauffer has suggested that the number derives from an abbreviated form of Domitian's titular name, spelled in Greek. No claim to certainty on these apocalyptic codes can be made, but Revelation 17:7-9 clearly associates the beast with Rome; thus the best interpretations of the beasts depicted in Revelation equate the beasts with Roman emperors. Evidence for early Christian understanding of them in this way may be found in the letter concerning the martyrs of Lyons, where the crowd is stirred up by the "wild beast," perhaps a reference to the emperor or the governor of Gaul, though Kirsopp Lake takes this beast to be the devil (in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 5.1.57; 5.2.6).

1.2.2. Policy of Trajan and Hadrian. With the younger Pliny's correspondence with Trajan, we have valuable evidence for how Christians were perceived and treated by the authorities in the province of Bithynia in 112-13. If those who were indicted as Christians persisted in admitting this several times before Pliny, the emperor's legate with praetorian power (legatus Augusti pro praetore) there, he executed them, though he would send Roman citizens who were guilty of being Christians on to Rome (Pliny Ep. 10.96.3-4). The emperor affirmed Pliny's policy, cautioning him only not to seek out Christians and to acquit any who chose to deny being a Christian and proved such denial by worshiping "our gods" (Pliny Ep. 10.97). More important for a general understanding of persecution, however, is the second sentence of this imperial letter, which states that no universal policy can be enacted for dealing with Christians. This makes explicit what is obvious for the first two centuries: there was no single, official policy on Christians; Roman authorities responded to them differently in various times and places of the Principate.

Hadrian's rescript to the proconsul of Asia, Minucius Fundanus, about 124 or 125, also illustrates this nuanced treatment of Christians. He gives the proconsul freedom to punish Christians who can conclusively be identified as such, with punishments in proportion to the laws they have violated. He also rules that false informers are to be prosecuted with stiffer penalties.

1.2.3. Persecution Under the Antonines. The martyrdom of Justin and his colleagues occurred under the urban prefect Rusticus, but it was this man's emperor, Marcus Aurelius, who has achieved greater notoriety for persecuting Christians. It is clear that Marcus knew of Christians and approved of their execution. But it has never been shown conclusively that Marcus enacted laws explicitly against Christians or initiated persecution against them as Nero and Domitian did. Indeed, a decree of the joint emperors during 166-68 to offer sacrifices* to the gods so that the empire could survive a plague and invasions by German tribes may have led to mob reactions against Christians in certain locations.

Rescripts to Asia (not necessarily originating with the emperor; perhaps from the proconsul) apparently made it easier for people to inform on Christians (Melito, in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.26.5), and this time period is known more for outbreaks of persecution throughout the empire: in 166-67 Christians were sought out in Smyrna, where Polycarp* met his death (Mart. Pol.); some scholars would date this as early as 156-57, based on information about the presiding consul, L. Statius Quadratus. Dionysius of Corinth mentions a martyrdom and persecution in Athens that occurred perhaps around 170 (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.23.2).

Eusebius (Hist. Eccl. 5.1.3-3.3) includes much from a letter by Christians in Gaul about the persecution in the Rhône Valley in Lyons during Marcus Aurelius's reign, in 177. Here we have a record of a persecution that began by local antipathy toward the Christians, many of whom were Asian in ethnic extraction, at the time of a festival in Gaul. The literary evidence indicates a significant persecution, since it records how all of the most devout Christians of Lyons and Vienne were arrested. Even non-Christian servants of these believers were arrested. The Christians were tortured in order to get them to recant. Some of the Roman citizens among the accused were jailed while the governor awaited word from Rome. The emperor's word was that those who recanted should be released, while noncitizens who continued to identify themselves as Christians should be exposed to the animals in front of the festival crowd. Roman citizens who remained firm in their identification as Christians were beheaded. Eusebius preserves the record that those who had experienced some of this persecution did not want to be called "martyrs" but stated that Christ was the true martyr (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 5.2.2-3). This illustrates the fluidity in the use of the term martyr, which did not become a technical term for one who had died for religious belief until the middle of the third century.

1.2.4. Conclusion. While the available evidence makes us wonder whether persecution was as pervasive within Christendom as 2 Timothy 3:12 hints at (cf. 1 Pet 5:9), this overview shows that there were significant though not constant outbreaks of persecution within the first 150 years of the church's existence.

2. Reasons for Persecution.

The reasons for persecution do not always seem clear from the early Christian literature available to us. For example, in most of Acts, it is the believers' commitment to Jesus as Messiah that brings persecution from the Jews (e.g., Acts 5:40). Yet in Acts 16:20-21 the charge brought against Paul and Silas in the Roman colony of Philippi is that they are Jews who teach things unlawful for Romans. The theological significance that persecution carried for the early Christian writers (see section 4 below) obscures our understanding of the historical reasons behind some of the persecution accounts. For the most part, however, the NT presents persecution as arising from identifying with Jesus (Rev 1:9; 12:17; 19:10) or from rivalry with the Jews (see references in 1.1.1 above), presumably over the Christians' claim to inherit the promises* made to Israel (e.g., Acts 13:32-41).

2.1. Reasons for Official Persecution by Rome.

In the Roman sources available to us, the reasons for persecution seem similar to the reasons the Romans persecuted the followers of Bacchus in 186 B.C., the Jews in A.D. 19 or the astrologers (see Magic), who were occasionally expelled from the city of Rome in the first century A.D. In the instances of persecution against these groups as well as against Christians, what prompted the Roman authorities to take hostile action was not an ideological problem with the religious practice but rather a threat to the Romans' ideas of a properly ordered society.

Though they were particularistic in different ways, both Judaism and Christianity were regarded by some Romans as antisocial (Philostratus Vit. Ap. 5.33; Tacitus Ann. 15.44). The practice of Christians to meet in private, behind closed doors, also seemed suspicious to Roman sensibilities. This was because some collegia, Roman social clubs, had been looked on as extremely disorderly (e.g., Bacchanales; see CIL 1.196; ILS 18; Livy 39.8-18) or politically dangerous, as Augustus's law from around A.D. 7, requiring either senatorial or imperial approval for any club to exist (ILS 4966), shows. Emperors could shut down these collegia at any time (Pliny Ep. 10.34). Pliny was aware of this and shows the Roman suspicion of unauthorized collegium when he describes for Trajan how Christians used to meet in his province (Pliny Ep. 10.96.7). Pliny's request of imperial permission for a group of firemen to be formed for the safety of Nicomedia was rejected by Trajan, on the grounds that all groups of people inevitably become political (Pliny Ep. 10.34). This illustrates well for us the Roman preoccupation with order and the imperial suspicion of anything that might upset such order.

Besides the Christians' suspicious practice of gathering for worship,* the social leveling that occurs in some early Christian literature (e.g. Gal. 3:28) perhaps was a threat to the highly stratified Roman conception of an ordered society (Dio Cassius Hist. 52.19.1-4). This possibility supports R. Scroggs's claim that the egalitarian nature of the early church was one of the factors that makes it identifiable as a sectarian movement (Scroggs, 25, 39-40). Rome's official acceptance of Christianity in the fourth century is due not only to the groundswell of Christians in the empire but also to a fundamental change in Roman society, which made lower-status groups such as the Christian house churches more acceptable than they had been in preceding centuries. This change included the growing acceptance of provincials with lower status into the senatorial order (Gager, 107-8). Before this time the composition of Christian house churches would have naturally sparked Roman disdain.

One might object to the alignment at the beginning of this section of the persecution of Christians alongside the Roman persecution of the Jews, citing the identity of Judaism as a legal religion (religio licita), a recognition that Christianity did not receive until 313. But Rome continued to persecute followers of Judaism in the first and second centuries (e.g., Vespasian's destruction of the Jewish temple in Leontopolis [Josephus J.W. 7.10.2 §§420-2]) for the same reasons that it persecuted Christians: in order to reestablish a sense of Roman boundaries and order in places within the empire where such order appeared in question. This similarity in the reasons for Roman persecution of various religions accounts for the association that is made between practicing Jews and followers of Isis in accounts of the expulsion of 19 (Philo Leg. Gai. 159-61; Josephus Ant. 18.3.4-5 §§65-84; Suetonius Tiberius 36.1; Tacitus Ann. 2.35.4-5; Dio Cassius Epit. 57.18.5A). It may also account for Suetonius's reference to Chrestus (Christ?) when he wrote of Claudius's expulsion of the Jews from Rome (Suetonius Claudius 25).

Any attempt at explaining Roman persecution of Christians, therefore, must include an account of Roman action toward other foreign religions, beginning at least with the Bacchanalia incident of 186 B.C. (Livy Hist. 39.8-18). Rome sought to rid itself of any threat to its understanding of law and order; it did not persecute Christians because of a religious antipathy toward Christianity. As G. E. M. de Ste. Croix has shown, persecutions by Roman authorities were not directly about what Christians believed or confessed but were carried out because the Christians refused to sacrifice to the gods. This refusal was a violation of the Roman sense of order.

2.2. Reasons for Popular Movements Against Christians. The reasons the masses opposed Christians were not always as spiritual as a believer might wish. Christians typically were thought to be countercultural. Suspicions of such counterculturalism and the resultant antipathy might operate along ethnic lines. Claudius's expulsion of Jews, if it was because of arguments over Chrestus (Christ), may have been partially motivated by anti-Semitism directed toward the Jewish Christians in Rome. Similarly Tacitus's description of the "depraved superstition" known as Christianity makes clear its origins in Judea (Tacitus Ann. 15.44).

Justin's first apology, written about 150 in Rome, indicates that there were charges against Christians (Justin Apol. I 3) that included accepting the name Christian (Justin Apol. I 4), atheism (Justin Apol. I 5—6) and evil deeds (Justin Apol. I 7). His martyrdom (c 165) with that other believers, including the imperial slave Euelpistus, is narrated in the Acts of Justin. Here it is clear that they are executed because they freely admit to being Christians and refuse to offer sacrifices to the gods (Acts Just. Rec. A, B, C 3-5). Atheism (Mart. Pol. 3; 9; Justin Apol. I 5—6), cannibalism (Justin Dial. Tryph. 10.1) and incest (Athenagoras Leg. 3.1) seem to have remained within the popular caricature of Christianity. In addition there is evidence that Christians were blamed for earthquakes (c. 152) and the plague (c. 165) in Asia Minor, much as Christians were blamed for the decline of the Roman Empire in Augustine's time (Augustine Civ. D. 1.1-36). These are probably some of the reasons behind Tacitus's enigmatic remark that Christians were arrested in Nero's persecution because of the Christians' hatred of the human race (Tacitus Ann. 15.44).

It is also probable that Christians were caricatured in some circles as a rebellious people. Origen preserves the charge that Christianity is a group that arose out of rebellion against Jews (Origen Cont. Cels. 5.33). Marcus Aurelius depicts Christians as those who abandon the fatherland (Marcus Aurelius Med. 3.16; also included in this passage are charges of atheism and doing things behind closed doors). This stereotype of rebellion was associated with the way Christianity arose, its followers worshiping someone crucified by the Romans. The charge of insubordination may explain why NT authors take pains to tell Christians to follow the government (Rom 13:1-7; 1 Tim 2:1-4; 1 Pet 2:13-17; see Civil Authority) and why Justin wants to say that Christians keep the law (Justin Apol. I 12).

3. Christian Attitudes to Persecution.

Both the NT and extracanonical early Christian literature provide ample testimony that Christians reacted in a variety of ways to persecution.

3.1. Eagerness to Be Persecuted. The most well known example of this wish to experience persecution is Ignatius* of Antioch.* His eagerness to experience martyrdom is amply sprinkled throughout his letters (Ign. Eph. 1.2; 8.1; 11.2; 18.1; Ign. Trall. 4.2; 10; Ign. Rom. 1.2; 2.2; 3.2; 4.1-3; 5.2-3; 6.1-3; 7.2; 8.3). Inherent in this attitude is the motivation that persecution is a way to reach God or Jesus (see 4.2.3 below). But this attitude was not universally held throughout Christendom.

3.2. Avoidance of Persecution. An equally attested attitude was one that would seek to avoid persecution. Such avoidance was carried out in different ways that gave evidence of different attitudes toward it.

3.2.1. Flight from Persecution. The dominical command to flee (Mt 24:16; Mk 13:14; Lk 21:21) endorses the natural human response to the violence of persecution. At the same time such flight is based on the stubborn refusal to surrender and change one's religious identity to avoid the persecution. We see flight from persecution in the example of the early believers (Acts 8:1) and in the experiences of Paul (Acts 9:23-25; 23:12-35), Polycarp* (Mart. Pol. 5.1; 6.1), Cyprian (Cyprian Ep. 2; Cyprian Laps. 10) and Lactantius (Lactantius Div. Inst. 4.18.1-2; Athanasius Fug.). It is also worth noting that the deserts of Egypt swelled with monks in the years of the great persecution (303-13).

3.2.2. Apostasy. Another well attested response was to say the words and perform the sacrifices necessary to avoid persecution. In Pliny's letter to Trajan we read of those who recanted their Christian confession in front of Pliny and of others who said that they had abandoned their identity as Christians three to twenty years previously (Pliny Ep. 96.6). Because some renounce their faith during persecution, the church's response to such lapsed who later seek restoration is a recurring point of contention throughout church history (Jn 21:15-19; Rev 20:4-5; Cyprian Laps.; Augustine Ep. 93). Some Gnostics,* because of a docetic* or otherwise nuanced christology* and the view of the passion that this entails, as well as their independence from what came to be orthodox church authority,* did not value martyrdom as did other believers and may have outwardly recanted to avoid persecution (Heracleon, according to Clement of Alexandria Strom. 4.71-72).

3.3. Orthodox Attitudes to Persecution. It is an established tradition within the Christianity that became identified as orthodox that those who intentionally sought martyrdom would not be recognized as martyrs (Clement of Alexandria Strom. 4.17.1; Mart. Pol. 1.4; Council of Elvira canon 60). The Martyrdom of Polycarp is carefully written to show that Polycarp did not seek his martyrdom. Those who were persecuted were certainly honored, as any perusal of the martyrologies will show. But if one engineers persecution upon oneself, one has annulled its value. What is valuable is to suffer for doing good (1 Pet 3:13-17).

4. Theological Significance of Persecution.

Already in the NT we see a complex of theological issues embedded in the persecution texts. Persecution itself is not simply a historical phenomenon; it is also a theologoumenon in its own right.

4.1. The Origin of Persecution. The descriptions of persecution in the NT and early Christian literature demonstrate tensions in defining the identity of the forces behind persecution of Christians.

4.1.1. The Divine/Diabolical Tension. In Revelation 6:9-11 we have a strong affirmation that God allows persecution and sets limits on its extent, an idea already affirmed in Job 1:12 and Job 2:6. As in the book of Job, however, Revelation identifies the immediate powers involved in persecution as diabolical (Rev 2:10; 13:2, 4, 11; 16:13), with its references to the dragon clearly identified as Satan* in the description of the millennium (Rev 20:2). Origen makes the point that martyrs' souls destroy the power of demons, as if the very act of martyrdom carries spiritual significance. Since the demons have learned this point, he says, Christians will not be persecuted until the time the demons forget it (Origen Cont. Cels. 8.44). This statement is predicated on the causal connection between the diabolical and persecution, a similar link to that in Revelation 13 (see also Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 5.1.16; Origen Pass. Perp. Fel. 20.1).

4.1.2. The Divine/Human Tension. The NT also seems to balance its descriptions of persecution as arising from divine or human agency. The exchange between Pilate and Jesus concerning Pilate's authority to persecute Jesus illustrates this well (Jn 19:10-11). Peter's description of responsible parties in the death of Jesus also illustrates this. He refers to Jewish leaders ("you") and Roman soldiers ("godless men"), but these agents are all subsumed under God's predetermined will (Acts 2:23).

4.1.3. Depictions of Jewish Persecutors and Anti-Semitism. Within the human side of persecution the NT identifies a significant amount of persecution from the Jews. The Gospels seem cognizant of such persecution (Mt 10:17; 23:34; 24:17 par. Mk 13:9; Lk 21:12; Jn 9:34; 16:2). Acts also contains such descriptions (see 1.1.1. above), and Paul does not hesitate to identify some of his persecutors as Jewish (Rom 15:31; 2 Cor 11:24; Phil 3:2; 1 Thess 2:14-16). Revelation 2:9 and Revelation 3:9 do identify some persecution as arising from Jews, though they are not the main agent of persecution in Revelation.

Such descriptions inevitably give rise to a consideration of the alleged anti-Semitism in the NT. A full consideration of the evidence demands that we note that many of the NT writers consider themselves still within the Judaisms present in first-century Judea and the Diaspora (Mt 5:17-20; 19:28 [= Lk 18:30]; 23:1-3; Acts 23:6; 2 Cor 11:22; Gal 6:16; Heb 7; Jas 1:1; 1 Pet 1:1; 2:9; Rev 7:4-8; 21:12; see Diaspora Judaism). They continue to look at being Jewish as though it has inherent value (Mt 13:52; Rom 3:1-2; 9:3-5; 11:26-29; Rev 5:5; 14:1-5; 22:16). In Acts 2:23 the crucifixion is God's plan in which Jews and Romans participated; in 1 Corinthians 2:8 "the rulers of this age," if they are political agents rather than spiritual powers who crucified Jesus, were ignorant. The sins of the elect put Jesus on the cross, not any specific group's malevolence (1 Cor 15:3; Gal 3:10-14). However anti-Semitic later Christian authors appear on the issue of persecution (e.g., Barn. 5.11; Mart. Pol. 12.2; 17.2), the charge of anti-Semitism based on NT persecution texts betrays an anachronistic reading of an intra-Jewish struggle for legitimacy.

4.2. The Spiritual Value of Persecution. Though persecution is never identified as a sacrament, it is clear in the NT that Christians valued persecution (Acts 5:41). This valuation arose from Judaism and was articulated by Christians in terms of following Jesus' example, drawing closer to God or Jesus and gaining rewards.*

4.2.1. The Origin of the High Appraisal of Persecution. Frend's thesis that early Christians valued persecution and respected its victims because of Jewish attitudes toward persecution is essentially correct. It is clear that the writers of the NT and later Christian authors have adopted a Jewish theology of persecution (Rom 8:36; Heb 11:35-38; Origen Exhort. Mart. 22—27). But they do not emphasize dying for Torah as in descriptions of Jewish martyrs (2 Macc 7:9, 11; 4 Ezra 7:89); they rather add the idea of following Christ through persecutions. At least one link was explicitly made between Christian persecution and a Hellenistic respect for martyrdom, but this is not the norm (Acts Apoll. 39—41, citing Plato Rep. 2.5.361E and the example of Socrates).

4.2.2. A Means of Following Jesus. The Gospels include the idea that Jesus' followers will imitate him in experiencing persecution (Mt 10:24 par. Lk 6:40; Jn 13:16; 15:20). This idea is also espoused throughout the NT (Phil 3:10; Heb 12:2-3; 1 Pet 2:21-25; Rev 1:9).

4.2.3. A Means of Approaching the Divine. Persecution is also linked to drawing near to God or Jesus (Rom 8:17; Phil 3:10-11; Ign. Rom. 5.3; 7.2; Ign. Smyrn. 4.2). Sometimes persecution is causally linked to becoming pure (1 Pet 4:1; Origen Exhort. Mart. 30) or accomplishing something that is spiritually necessary, thus allowing one to approach the divine (Col 1:24; Ign. Rom. 3.2-3; Mart. Pol. 2; Apoc. Pet. 74.4-16; Tertullian Apol. 50). Intimate knowledge of Jesus' own sufferings qualifies one for authority in the church (Jn 19:34-35; Gal 6:17; 1 Pet 5:1).

4.2.4. A Means of Gaining Rewards. The dominical saying on rewards for persecution (Mt 5:11-12 par. Lk 6:22-23) fuels the idea of otherworldly rewards for persecution. Revelation describes such rewards for those who endure persecution, especially martyrs (Rev 2:10; 6:11; 7:13-14; 11:18; 22:12). This idea would inspire Christians through the centuries.

4.3. The Necessity of Persecution. There is one strand in the persecution material that treats it as a necessary component of any believer's life. Perhaps arising from an absolute reading of such texts as Luke 6:26 and 2 Timothy 3:12, this has led Christians to expect and in some cases orchestrate their own persecutions. Early Christian tradition did not universally hold this view, however, as the ample evidence of flight from persecution attests (see 3.2.1 above).

While persecution therefore is not a requirement for every believer, the NT and early Christian literature attribute to persecution such results as church growth (Acts 8:1-4; Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 5.1.48-49) and spiritual gain (Phil 1:21; Rev 14:13; Origen Exhort. Mart. 14).

See also ADVERSARIES; APOSTASY; BABYLON; BEASTS, DRAGON, SEA, CONFLICT MOTIF; EMPEROR, EMPEROR CULT; ENDURANCE, PERSEVERANCE; MARTYRDOM; SUFFERING.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. T. D. Barnes, "Legislation Against the Christians," JRS 58 (1968) 32-50; W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church (New York: New York University Press, 1967); idem, "Persecutions," Encyclopedia of the Early Church, ed. A. Di Berardino (2 vols.; New York: Oxford University Press, 1992); J. G. Gager, Kingdom and Community: The Social World of Early Christianity (Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice-Hall, 1975); P. Keresztes, "Marcus Aurelius a Persecutor?" HTR 61 (1968) 321-41; P. Lampe, Die stadtrömischen Christen in den ersten beiden Jahrdunderten (WUNT 2.13; 2d ed.; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1989); A. Meyer and W. Bauer, "The Relatives of Jesus" in New Testament Apocrypha, ed. E. Hennecke, W. Schneemelcher and R. McL. Wilson (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1963) 418-32; O. Nicholson, "Flight from Persecution as Imitation of Christ," JTS 40 (1989) 48-65; N. M. P. Nilsson, "Bacchanalia," OCD, 2d ed.; E. Pagels, "Gnostic and Orthodox Views of Christ's Passion: Paradigms for the Christian's Response to Persecution?" in The Rediscovery of Gnosticism, ed. B. Layton (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1980) 262-83; L. V. Rutgers, "Roman Policy Towards the Jews," Classical Antiquity 13 (1994) 56-74; R. Scroggs, "The Earliest Christian Communities as Sectarian Movement" in The Text and the Times (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1993) 20-45; A. N. Sherwin-White, Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament (New York: Oxford University Press, 1963); M. Slusser, "Martyrium 3.1 NT/Alte Kirche," TRE; E. Stauffer, "666," ConNT 11 (1947) 237-41; G. E. M. de Ste. Croix, "Why Were the Early Christians Persecuted?" in Studies in Ancient Society, ed. M. I. Finley (London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1974) 210-49; G. H. Stevenson, "Clubs, Roman," OCD, 2d ed.

M. Reasoner

PERSEVERANCE. See ENDURANCE, PERSEVERANCE.

1 PETER

The Gospels consistently present the apostle* Peter as leader and spokesperson among Jesus' disciples, a role he continues to play in the beginnings of the Christian movement as described in the first half of the book of Acts.* It is not surprising, therefore, that two NT letters* bear his name. The first of these (traditionally called "first" because the other, shorter letter explicitly calls itself the "second," 2 Pet 3:1) is a remarkably concise and powerful summary of Christian belief and practice.

1. Author and Readers
2. Integrity and Literary Structure
3. Historical and Social Situation
4. Theological Contributions to the Canon

1. Author and Readers.

First Peter follows closely the literary format of the letters of Paul, identifying both author and readers in the first two verses of the letter and following the identification with a "grace and peace" formula. It differs from Paul's letters (except for Galatians and Ephesians) in being addressed not to one specific local congregation but to a circle of congregations spread over a considerable geographical area (in this respect compare Revelation [see Revelation, Book of], esp. Rev 1:4-6, 10-11).

1.1. Peter as Implied Author. Just as Paul in five of his letters is "Paul, apostle of Jesus Christ," so this author identifies himself as "Peter, apostle of Jesus Christ" (1 Pet 1:1). Whoever the real author may be, he is writing as the apostle Peter. In the context of the NT canon* it appears that Peter is here exercising the judicial authority* Jesus gave him (according to Mt 16:19) to bind and loose or is carrying out the command of Jesus (according to Jn 21:15-17) to feed or shepherd* the Christian flock.

Little is made explicitly of this claim of apostolic authority in the rest of the letter. Only three times does the author write in the first person singular. In the first of these instances (1 Pet 2:11) he says "I appeal" (parakalōn); in the second, "I appeal to any elders among you," referring to himself not as an apostle but as a "fellow elder and witness to the sufferings of Christ and a sharer as well in the glory to be revealed" (1 Pet 5:1; see Glory; Witness). On the surface this is a more modest claim, but its apparent purpose is to establish collegiality and common ground with the readers, precisely as a great authority figure might do. We might compare Peter to John the prophet* describing himself to his readers as "your brother and sharer in the tribulation and kingdom and patient endurance in Jesus" (Rev 1:9; see Endurance; Kingdom of God) or even to the angel* who, addressing John, claimed to be a "fellow servant with you and your brothers" (Rev 19:10; 22:9; see Servant). Such language presupposes a certain status and sense of personal authority on the part of the speaker, and this kind of authority is evident throughout 1 Peter.

In his third use of "I," Peter concludes, "I have written these few lines through Silvanus (whom I consider a faithful brother) to appeal [parakalōn] and give testimony that this is true grace from God" (1 Pet 5:12; see Grace). Then he sends greetings from "the sister [congregation] in Babylon, chosen along with you, and Mark, my son" (1 Pet 5:13). The effect is to locate Peter geographically in "Babylon"* (probably a metaphorical name for Rome, as in Revelation) and to link him with two of Paul's companions, Silvanus (1 Thess 1:1; 2 Thess 1:1; 2 Cor 1:19) and Mark (Philem 24; Col 4:14; 2 Tim 4:11).

Because of his adoption of the Pauline letter form and his references to Paul's companions, some have inferred that the author of 1 Peter wants to present Peter as a friend or an associate of Paul (compare the explicit reference to "our beloved brother Paul" in 2 Peter 3:15). This tendency to make the implied author a Paulinist is a matter of indifference in itself, though the idea is hardly verifiable. But when it leads interpreters to measure the letter by the standards of Paul's writings it fails to do justice to 1 Peter, for then that letter is found to be either lacking the great Pauline themes of justification by faith* and life* in the Spirit (see Holy Spirit) or (somewhat inconsistently) as exhibiting a derivative brand of Paulinism. Instead 1 Peter should be read on its own terms as a significant independent witness* to Christian faith and life.

Not only where he specifically refers to himself but also throughout the letter this author wears his identity as "Peter, apostle of Jesus Christ" rather lightly. Jesus called Simon Peter a "rock" (Mt 16:18), but in 1 Peter the "living Stone" is Jesus Christ himself (1 Pet 2:4; see Stone). Jesus also said to Peter, "You are a scandal to me" (Mt 16:23), but in 1 Peter it is Jesus Christ who is "a stone of stumbling and a rock of scandal" (1 Pet 2:8)—not to the people of God* but to unbelievers. The irony is unmistakable. Jesus designated Peter as shepherd to his flock (Jn 21:15-17), but again the author of 1 Peter assigns this role to Jesus himself, "the Shepherd and Guardian of your souls" (1 Pet 2:25). "Shepherd the flock of God that is in your care," he tells the elders (1 Pet 5:2), but he gives no particular significance to his own role as shepherd. Instead he and the elders together wait for Christ to be revealed, for Christ is the "chief shepherd" (1 Pet 5:4) to whom all sheep and all shepherds are accountable.

The implied author's claim to be "witness to the sufferings of Christ and a sharer as well in the glory to be revealed" (1 Pet 5:1) should not be understood as emphasizing Peter's eyewitness role in relation to either Jesus' life or his death (see Death of Christ) on the cross* (e.g., as in 2 Pet 1:16-18). Strictly speaking Peter was not an eyewitness to Jesus' sufferings because, with other disciples, he deserted Jesus in Gethsemane and was not present at the crucifixion. Moreover, this author is stressing that which he has in common with the "elders" to whom he is writing, not that which he can claim and they cannot. He is saying that like them (and like the prophets of old, 1 Pet 1:11) he bears his witness or testimony to the gospel* of Jesus' suffering* and vindication as he waits for the future glory to be revealed.

1.2. Peter as Real Author. Early church tradition, where it mentions this letter at all, is unanimous in identifying Peter as its real author. Papias of Hierapolis, writing in the mid-second century from within the general area to which the letter is addressed, accepts the letter's claim to come from Peter, to be written from "Babylon" (which Papias understood as Rome) and to convey greetings from Mark, whom Peter called his "son" (1 Pet 5:13; see Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 2.15.2). Irenaeus too, who lived first in Asia Minor and then in Gaul, cited 1 Peter late in the second century as Peter's work (Irenaeus Haer. 4.9.2; 4.16.5; 5.7.2). The same is true of Tertullian in Roman North Africa (Scorp. 12) and Clement of Alexandria in Egypt (e.g., Clement Paed. 1.6; Clement Strom. 3.12). Origen, also from Alexandria, expressed in one breath acceptance of 1 Peter and doubt about 2 Peter: "Peter, on whom Hades shall not prevail, has left one acknowledged epistle, and, it may be, a second one, for it is doubted" (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 6.25.8; this claims to be from a portion of Origen's commentary on John that is not extant).

Modern scholars, unlike the ancient church, do not universally accept this letter's claim to come from Peter's hand. Peter is indeed the implied author, but is he the real author? Some who hold that 1 Peter is pseudonymous (i.e., that a later author adopted Peter's name as a literary device) argue that the style is far too elegant for Simon Peter, the Galilean fisherman. In Acts 4:13, just after Peter had quoted Psalm 118:22 (the same text he quotes in 1 Pet 2:7), he and his companion, John, are described as "uneducated and ordinary men" (NRSV). Yet 1 Peter contains some of the finest Greek in the NT. Others, pointing to traditions about Peter's martyrdom* c. A.D. 64 in the persecution* under Nero, contend that 1 Peter cannot have been written before that date.

The latter argument is precarious because no one knows when or how Peter died. The testimony of 2 Peter (2 Pet 1:12-15) is that he had ample time to prepare and plan for his departure and is consistent with the notion that he died a natural death. This testimony carries weight even if Peter did not write 2 Peter, for it reflects early Christian belief about Peter's death. The same is true of the reference to his death in John's Gospel (Jn 21:18-19), which is more like a riddle about youth and old age than a prediction of martyrdom. Only later traditions make Peter into a martyr (e.g., Origen, Tertullian, Eusebius and above all Acts of Peter 30-41; 1 Clement 5.4, written from Rome near the end of the first century, is far from clear on the subject).

As to the letter's style, a number of scholars (Selwyn, Kelly, Davids, Marshall) have attributed its actual composition to Silvanus ("through Silvanus," 1 Pet 5:12), but the expression is more likely a commendation of Silvanus as the bearer of the letter—as in the letters of Ignatius to the Philadelphians (Ign. Phld. 11.2), Smyrneans (Ign. Smyr. 12.1), Romans (Ign. Rom. 10.1) and Polycarp (Ign. Pol. 8.1) and of Polycarp to the Philippians (Pol. Phil. 14.1). Although this hypothesis has become popular among some scholars as a defense of Petrine authorship, its effect is to make Silvanus and not Peter the real author of the letter, just as Mark and not Peter was identified as author of the Gospel of Mark (see DJG, "Mark, Gospel of" §1.2). At least one defender of this hypothesis allows the possibility that Peter "may have never even seen" the letter, "having given only the briefest of instructions" to Silvanus (Davids, 7).

The notion that Peter had help in the composition of this letter does not stand or fall with the theory about Silvanus. If 1 Peter is, as it appears to be, an encyclical on behalf of the church at Rome* ("Babylon") to a wide circle of churches on the frontiers of the Roman Empire* in five provinces of Asia Minor ("Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia," 1 Pet 1:2), then the author would likely have had scribal help with vocabulary and style, and his helpers would likely have remained anonymous. The burden of proof is still on those who reject the letter's claim to come from Peter the apostle.

1.3. The Implied Readers. 1 Peter shows little or no knowledge of the circumstances of its readers because they are spread over a huge and distant geographical area, and all we can know about the readers is the way in which the author visualizes them. Like the readers of Paul's letters, these implied readers are Gentiles* who have come to believe in Jesus. They are no longer slaves* to "the impulses that once drove [them] in [their] ignorance" (1 Pet 1:14) but are "redeemed from the empty way of life that was [their] heritage" (1 Pet 1:18). They have given up their former "acts of immorality and lust, drunken orgies, feasts, revelries and lawless acts of idolatry" (1 Pet 4:3; see Idolatry; Law; Purity). Through Jesus Christ they have come to faith and hope* in the one true God, the God of Israel* (1 Pet 1:21). Christian salvation* is theirs, but they lack a past and a sense of identity. The letter confers on them a Jewish past and a quasi-Jewish identity by claiming that certain titles of privilege once given to Israel are now theirs as well. They are "a chosen race, the king's priesthood, a holy nation, a people destined for vindication" (1 Pet 2:9a; cf. Ex 19:6; Is 43:20-21; see Priest).

Just as in ancient Israel, such privileges carry corresponding responsibilities. Like the Jews, these Gentile Christians are a diaspora, a chosen people scattered and living as strangers in a hostile world (1 Pet 1:1). Their task is to "be holy in all [their] conduct" (anastrophē, 1 Pet 1:15) and in this way to "sound the praises of him who called [them] out of darkness to his marvelous light" (1 Pet 2:9b; see Light). The society they live in is hostile, but Roman magistrates are fair (1 Pet 2:13-17; see Civil Authority). Their responsibility is to "show respect for everyone and love for the brotherhood, reverence toward God and respect for the emperor" (1 Pet 2:17; see Emperor). This will not keep them from being accused of wrongdoing (1 Pet 2:12; 3:15-16; 4:15-16), but the hope is that when they are, their accusers will either be "put to shame" (1 Pet 3:16) or will, "from observing your good works, glorify God on the day of visitation" (1 Pet 2:12).

The readers' life situation is not a local or specific one but rests on the author's generalization about the situation of Christians in Roman society at the time the letter was written. In the author's mind his readers represent all Christian believers everywhere. For this reason the classification of 1 Peter as one of the catholic or general letters is an appropriate one.

2. Integrity and Literary Structure.

2.1. Integrity. Efforts to call into question the literary integrity of 1 Peter have been largely rejected in recent years. Arguments that part of the letter (1 Pet 1:3—4:11) was originally a baptismal* sermon for new converts or even a full baptismal liturgy (see Liturgical Elements; Worship), common in an earlier generation (e.g., Windisch, Preisker, Cross), are seldom made today. Nor has C. F. D. Moule's suggestion of a break between 1 Peter 4:11 and 1 Peter 4:12 found much recent support. Moule argued that persecution, a rather remote possibility in 1 Peter 1:3—4:11, becomes an urgent matter in 1 Peter 4:12—5:11. Either the author received sudden news of a wave of persecution or deliberately planned two letters, one for congregations faced with social pressures but not outright persecution (1 Pet 1:1—4:11; 5:12-14) and a shorter, more urgent one for congregations already suffering the "fiery trial" (1 Pet 1:1—2:10; 4:12—5:14). All such theories are speculative and without support in ancient manuscripts.

2.2. Literary Structure. There is a discernible break in structure between 1 Peter 4:11 and 12, even though it does not call the letter's integrity into question. The break is marked by the direct address "Beloved" (NRSV) or "Dear friends" (NIV; agapētoi) in 1 Peter 4:12. The same personal address marks a similar break at 1 Peter 2:11. The two appeals divide the letter into three main parts (followed by a postscript): 1 Peter 1:1—2:10; 1 Peter 2:11—4:11; 1 Peter 4:12—5:11.

The first part centers on the implied readers' identity as people of God, based on their spiritual rebirth (1 Pet 1:3, 22-23; 2:2-3) and consequent hope of salvation (1 Pet 1:5, 9-10; 2:3). Peter announces their identity programmatically in 1 Peter 1:1-2 and confirms it in 1 Peter 2:9-10, framing the whole section. Within this framework he interweaves a recital of what God has done and will do (1 Pet 1:3-12, 18-21, 2:4-8) with a reminder of their responsibility to live in hope as a holy* people (1 Pet 1:13-16), in reverent fear* of the God who saved them at infinite cost (1 Pet 1:17-19), with love* for each other and a desire for God (1 Pet 1:22; 2:1-3).

The second section is an appeal to the implied readers (1 Pet 2:11) focusing on their responsibility to show reverence toward God, love for one another and honor and respect for everyone, starting with the emperor (1 Pet 2:13-17). Peter urges peace* and respect specifically toward those who denounce their Christian faith and accuse them of wrongdoing (1 Pet 2:12; 3:16). He envisions social conflict in the setting of the Roman household,* among Christian slaves owned by non-Christian masters (1 Pet 2:18-25) and Christian wives married to unbelieving husbands (1 Pet 3:1-6; see Marriage). His so-called household duty codes (unlike those in Col 3:18—4:1; Eph 5:21—6:9; see Household Codes) are oriented more to relationships of Christians with unbelievers (even in the same household) than with one another and stand at the heart of the letter's ethical* demands. Christians are called to do good in the face of slander and threats (1 Pet 3:8-9), just as Christ did (1 Pet 2:22-23), with full assurance that God will vindicate them (1 Pet 3:16-17; 4:5-6) as he vindicated Christ in the resurrection* and victorious journey to heaven* (3:18-22). Peter then accents the responsibility of Christians toward God and one another by urging mutual love, ministry* and hospitality* within the believing community and concludes with a doxology (1 Pet 4:7-11).

The third section reiterates the themes of the second, with particular attention to congregations ruled by the older members, or "elders." The address in 1 Peter 4:12 ("dear friends") anticipates 1 Peter 5:1, "To any elders among you I appeal" (cf. 1 Pet 2:11, "Dear friends, I appeal"). Peter's intent is to develop further the admonitions he began in 1 Peter 4:7-11 by spelling out more fully the mutual responsibilities of older and younger members of the congregations (at least those congregations that operated with such a distinction). But he digresses (1 Pet 4:12-19) in order to highlight again and with greater urgency the themes of the previous section in light of his stated conviction that "the end of all things is near" (1 Pet 4:7). Peter sees a "fiery ordeal" (1 Pet 4:12) breaking out and divine judgment* beginning "from the house of God" (1 Pet 4:17). With Ezekiel he interprets this to mean that the judgment begins "from the elders" among the people (cf. Ezek 9:6). Therefore he starts with elders and their responsibilities (1 Pet 5:1-4) and moves on to the younger persons and thus to everyone in the congregations (1 Pet 5:5) in relation to the coming crisis (1 Pet 5:6-9). Again he concludes with a doxology (1 Pet 5:10-11).

Rhetorically 1 Peter is best described as an appeal, or persuasive discourse (see Rhetoric). In his postscript (1 Pet 5:12-14) Peter seems to describe the letter as a combination of appeal and testimony (parakalōn kai epimartyrōn, 1 Pet 5:12), but the two terms are not to be separated. Peter's "testimony" here is not so much the announcement of salvation that underlies his appeal (e.g., in 1 Pet 1:3-12) as the conclusion to the appeal itself. Specifically it is Peter's solemn assurance that the letter he has just written is "true grace from God" (1 Pet 5:12). The letter is his own demonstration of the principle that Christians should use their respective spiritual gifts in ministry to one another, "faithfully administering God's grace in its various forms" (1 Pet 4:10, NIV).

3. Historical and Social Situation.

For the past two hundred years biblical scholarship has tried to determine the precise historical situation out of which or to which individual books of the Bible were written. For the past twenty years or so, equal or greater attention has been given to the social situation or social world of biblical writings.

The difference between the two enterprises, at the simplest level, is that historical investigation deals with what is unique, datable and historically and geographically fixed about the life setting (Sitz im Leben) of these ancient works, while social scientific theory looks at factors that are not unique but closely paralleled in other times, places and different—sometimes very different—cultures. In the past social scientific study was done under the broad canopy of historical study but the recent trend has been to separate the two, especially when historical investigation by itself proved inconclusive. In the case of 1 Peter the two disciplines are interrelated but not quite interchangeable.

3.1. Historical Setting. It has become commonplace to define the life setting of 1 Peter as one of suffering or persecution. This has tended to locate the letter historically in a time of known persecution* in the Roman Empire, either under Nero (c. A.D. 64) on the assumption that Peter is the real author (Selwyn) or under Trajan in the early second century on the assumption that the letter is pseudonymous (Beare). A third option, that it was written in Domitian's time (between A.D. 81 and 96) is less common, possibly because the evidence for persecution during that period is weak. But does the letter presuppose a situation of outright persecution? Peter's attitude toward the Roman Empire seems similar to Paul's: "Defer to every human creature for the sake of the Lord, whether to the emperor as sovereign or to magistrates as those sent by him to punish wrongdoers and commend those who do good deeds" (1 Pet 2:13). If anything he is clearer and more explicit than Paul, who spoke vaguely of "governing authorities" or "those authorities that exist" (Rom 13:1, NRSV). It is difficult to imagine either Paul or Peter writing such words in a time of systematic persecution of Christians.

Yet Peter does refer to "various trials" or ordeals, of faith being "tested by fire" (1 Pet 1:6-7), even of "the fiery ordeal that is taking place among you to test you" (1 Pet 4:12, NRSV). At least some of his rhetoric is the rhetoric of persecution and martyrdom. Christ is the supreme example for Christians precisely as a vindicated martyr, the One who was "put to death in the flesh but made alive in the Spirit" (1 Pet. 3:18; cf. 2:21-24; 4:1-2).

Undeniably Peter saw himself and his readers in danger but not from the emperor or provincial governors, whose legitimate task it was "to punish those who do wrong and to praise those who do right" (1 Pet 2:14, NRSV). The threat he saw was from fellow citizens in Rome (and, Peter assumes, in the provinces) who did not share the implied readers' Christian faith and who consequently rejected their distinctive worship* and lifestyle. Peter urges, therefore, "that by doing right you should silence the ignorance of the foolish" (1 Pet 2:15, NRSV). The persecution in view is the kind carried out not with fire or sword but with words—words of ridicule, slander and sometimes formal accusations of crimes against society (see 1 Pet 2:12; 3:13-17; 4:14-16).

Such persecution is difficult to locate either chronologically or geographically. It could fit almost any time and place in the Mediterranean world in the late first or early second century. The uncomfortable fact is that we know little or nothing of the historical setting of 1 Peter. It is possible that when Peter says the "time for judgment to begin from the house of God" has come (1 Pet 4:17), he has in mind the destruction* of Jerusalem* and the Jewish temple* in A.D. 70 by the Romans ("Babylon," 1 Pet 5:13) and sees this event as heralding danger for all who worship the God of Israel, Christians as well as Jews. But there is no proof of this. Without clearer points of reference we cannot use contemporary history to illumine the text of 1 Peter.

3.2. Social Setting. Since the 1970s studies of 1 Peter (e.g., Goppelt, Elliott and Balch) have centered more on its social than its historical setting. Whatever its precise historical context, the letter speaks to a situation in which the implied readers are visualized as outsiders in the Roman Empire. Peter writes from a Christian community in "Babylon" (1 Pet 5:13), in Jewish tradition the place of exile and alienation, to Christians who are similarly in exile, a "diaspora" (1 Pet 1:1) scattered as strangers throughout the Roman provinces. For author and implied readers alike, dramatic differences separate their values from those of the societies in which they live.

The works of J. H. Elliott and D. Balch uncovered a tension in 1 Peter between "acculturation" (i.e., conforming where possible to dominant values) and "boundary maintenance" (i.e., the preservation of Christian distinctives in a hostile society). As one observer put it, the letter has two goals at once: "(1) the social cohesion of the Christian groups, and (2) the social adaptation of the Christian groups to their cultural setting. Without the first, Christian identity would have been lost. Without the second, Christians would have had no social acceptability, which is also necessary for survival and outreach" (Talbert, 148).

Christians did have some values in common with the culture of the Mediterranean world, notably the contrasting social realities of honor and shame. Virtually all recent studies of the social world of the NT deal in some way with honor and shame, and in no book of the NT is the contrast highlighted more than in 1 Peter. Both to those addressed in the letter and to their enemies in Roman society, honor was a desirable goal, perhaps the supreme goal in life, while shame was something to be avoided at almost any cost. The radical difference between Christians and their contemporaries lay in what constituted honor and what constituted shame.

Honor to the Romans involved the praise* and esteem of fellow citizens, usually with some kind of public recognition of their good deeds either within the household or on behalf of the larger community. Individual deeds of honor brought honor to the family, the state, the emperor and the gods. Shame was the result of antisocial behavior that tended to undermine or discredit these same institutions and consequently to disgrace in the eyes of the community those guilty of such behavior.

According to 1 Peter, honor and shame are determined not by public opinion, the emperor or the Roman gods but solely by the God of Israel, who is Father of those who believe in Jesus and the universal Judge to whom all are accountable (1 Pet 1:17; 4:5). Not their acts of public service but their loyalty to God and faithful endurance of "various trials" are what Christians will exchange for "praise, glory and honor" at the future "revelation of Jesus Christ" (1 Pet 1:6-7; see Revelation). Jesus was slain as God's "faultless and flawless lamb," but God "raised him from the dead and gave him glory" (1 Pet 1:19, 21; see Lamb). Drawing on biblical language (Is 28:16), Peter compares Jesus to "a choice and precious stone, a cornerstone in Zion" and announces that "the person who believes in him will never be put to shame" (1 Pet 2:6). This honor (of never being put to shame) belongs to Christians (1 Pet 2:7), while to unbelievers Christ becomes "a stone for stumbling and a rock to trip over"—a fate to which they were "appointed" (1 Pet 2:8). The dualism of such texts is absolute: Christians are destined for honor and non-Christians for eternal shame.

Yet Peter's values also overlap those of the wider society, for he is willing at times to measure honor and shame by a person's responsibilities to family, the wider community and the state, as well as to God and fellow believers: "Honor everyone," he writes, "love the brotherhood, fear God, honor the emperor" (1 Pet 2:17).

Peter urges his readers to answer the slanderous words of their detractors with kind words and good conduct, "so that in a case [en hō] where they accuse you of doing wrong they may, from observing your good works, glorify God on the day of visitation" (1 Pet 2:12). His goal is not to undermine the social world in which his readers live but to win it over—or at least to win converts from it who will honor the Christian God and receive in return the honor that only God can give. Peter knows this will not always happen. He writes at times as if he suspects it may never happen. But regardless of the outcome, Christians must "always be ready to answer anyone who demands from you an accounting of the hope that is yours . . . out of humility and reverence, with a good conscience, so that in a case [en hō] where you are accused, those who denounce your good conduct in Christ may be put to shame" (1 Pet 3:15-16).

These imagined cases, or occasions when Christians are charged with wrongdoing or antisocial behavior, are for Peter the decisive tests of honor or shame respectively, whether for the accused Christians themselves or their accusers. "Let none of you suffer as a murderer or a thief," he concludes, "or any kind of criminal, or even as a busybody. But if you suffer for being a Christian, do not be ashamed, but glorify God in such a case" (1 Pet 4:15-16, where the text followed by the KJV is to be preferred). To be accused of criminal acts, as Christians occasionally were, or to be slandered as "busybodies" (self-appointed guardians of public morality), as they often were (and still are), is no reason for shame, according to Peter. Shame is appropriate only when such charges are true.

Honor in 1 Peter is the reward* not of suffering as a virtue in itself but of suffering for doing good. Peter is not encouraging either paranoia or masochism. Make sure, he says, that when you are denounced or accused it is not because you are guilty of wrongdoing or antisocial behavior but solely because of your Christian faith. The Roman ideal of honor and good citizenship is transcended and relativized but not negated. Christians are a counterculture in Roman society, sharing the commitments of other Romans and provincials to the household and the state as long as these commitments do not entail worship of the Roman gods (see Religions).

At the time of writing, the author is confident of his readers' conduct. While martyrdom is not out of the question (1 Pet 4:6; 5:8-9), neither is it a major theme of the letter. "Babylon" is still the place of exile, not the throne of Satan* or the antichrist,* as in the Book of Revelation. The stark dualism of 1 Peter is qualified by the realities of life in what we would call a pluralistic society. For Western Christians at the close of the twentieth century, this brief tract written within a culture not yet Christian becomes a relevant textbook on Christian living in a culture no longer Christian.

4. Theological Contributions to the Canon.
1 Peter's place in the NT canon has been a humble one, given Peter's prominence as the rock on which the church would be built (Mt 16:18-19) and the shepherd whose responsibility it was to feed Christ's sheep (Jn 21:15-17). This could be because of the letter's brevity, or because Peter has only two NT letters bearing his name while Paul has twelve, or because 1 Peter has long been yoked with 2 Peter, whose authenticity was disputed from the start. Or perhaps the author's self-deprecating attitude toward his own identity as "Peter" (see 1.1 above) had a lasting influence on how his letter was read. For whatever reason, when Christians spoke of "the apostle" (especially in connection with the canon) in the early centuries, they almost always meant Paul, not Peter.

Yet 1 Peter strikes a more even balance than Paul between the teaching* and example of Jesus on the one hand and his death and resurrection on the other. More than any other NT letter, 1 Peter completes or extends the testimony of the four Gospels, especially Mark. It does so in three respects: first, it gives the reader a sense of living in a world where Jesus is no longer or not yet visible; second, it accents Christian discipleship as a journey in Jesus' footsteps to the cross and beyond the cross to heaven; finally, the victory over "unclean spirits" (see Spirits) that began in Jesus' ministry continues in 1 Peter in his resurrection and ascension,* assuring his disciples of vindication against their oppressors when he becomes visible once again.

4.1. The Hidden Christ. The "living hope" of Christians (1 Pet 1:3) is not the "coming" (parousia) of Jesus, but rather his revelation or apocalypse (apokalypsis; see 1 Pet 1:7, 13). When he is revealed "salvation" (1 Pet 1:5, 9) and "glory" (1 Pet 4:13) will be revealed as well. Jesus appeared or was made visible in the world once and will be again (phanerōthentos, 1 Pet 1:20, 5:4).

These are clearly apocalyptic themes in that they deal with a decisive apocalypse or revelation. Yet 1 Peter is not an apocalyptic letter like the book of Revelation. It never calls itself an apocalypse, as the Revelation does (Rev 1:1), nor does it claim that Peter, like Paul (Gal 1:12), received a direct revelation from Jesus Christ (contrast 2 Pet 1:16-18). The decisive revelation or apocalypse is future. The only other revelation mentioned was a sort of nonrevelation to the ancient prophets, telling them that their prophecies of Christ were not for themselves or their own time but for a distant future that to Peter and his readers is present (1 Pet 1:10-12). 1 Peter is not so much an apocalytic as a preapocalyptic letter. Christians cannot see Jesus now (1 Pet 1:8), but they stand on the threshold of a great apocalypse in which they will see him in all his glory and joyfully embrace the salvation he holds in store for them.

4.2. Discipleship as a Journey. One might conclude from this that the revelation of Jesus Christ and of full salvation is something for which Christians simply wait. Peter's reference to "an indestructible, incorruptible and unfading inheritance reserved in heaven for you" (1 Pet 1:4) is open to such an interpretation. But this is not the case. Salvation is not something that comes to us but something standing at "the end" of an active life of faithfulness (1 Pet 1:9) and toward which we "grow" (1 Pet 2:2). Jesus is viewed not as one who comes to us but as one toward whom we are coming (1 Pet 2:4), first in conversion and then in a lifelong process of being "built into a spiritual house for holy priesthood" (1 Pet 2:5; see House). Peter's favorite metaphor for this process is that of the journey, or "following in Jesus' footsteps" (1 Pet 2:21).

This is the metaphor of the Gospel writers, above all Mark (see Mk 1:16-20; 8:34), and presumably of Jesus himself. Paul preferred for the most part the nonmetaphorical notion of faith, or believing. Although it can be plausibly argued that Paul himself understood faith as the equivalent of following Jesus' example of faithfulness, it remained for 1 Peter to bring together Paul's notion of faith and the command of Jesus in the Gospels to follow him as disciples. Whatever "faith" means in Paul, in 1 Peter it includes faithfulness (see 1 Pet 1:5, 7, 9), and faithfulness means following Jesus on a journey to the cross—and beyond (1 Pet 2:21-25).

Already in Mark there is a hint that the journey extends beyond the cross. If it were only a journey to the cross it would be a failure, for the disciples deserted Jesus at his arrest (Mk 14:50). Yet when Jesus predicted their desertion (Mk 14:27), he added, "But after I am raised up, I will go before you [that is, lead you as a shepherd] into Galilee" (Mk 14:28). Ironically it was Peter who protested, "Even though all become deserters, I will not" (Mk 14:29), and it is Peter who seems to allude to the incident: "For you were going astray like sheep, but you have turned now to the Shepherd and Guardian of your souls" (1 Pet 2:25).

The situation of the implied readers corresponds to that of Peter and the original disciples. The journey of Jesus in 1 Peter reaches beyond the cross, beyond Galilee, to heaven itself. As the next chapter makes clear, Jesus not only was "put to death in the flesh" and "made alive in the Spirit" (1 Pet 3:18) but also has "gone to heaven, with angels and authorities and powers in submission to him" (1 Pet 3:22). Consequently the journey of Christian disciples is a journey to heaven as well, like the Christian pilgrimage in the letter to the Hebrews* (e.g., Heb 11:10, 16; 12:22; 13:14) or the journey of Christian in John Bunyan's The Pilgrim's Progress. The goal of Jesus' faithful followers is nothing less than God's "marvelous light" (1 Pet 2:9) or "eternal glory" (1 Pet 5:10).

1 Peter is not alone in the NT in accenting the truth that a believer's "whole life" (anastrophē; see 1 Pet 1:15, 17; 2:12; 3:1-2, 16) is a journey to heaven in the footsteps of Jesus. Yet its testimony stands as a serious caution against three popular misconceptions: that salvation is merely something that happened to Christian believers in the past, that their only responsibility now is to wait passively for the Second Coming and that "going to heaven" is something that begins when they die.

4.3. Victory over Evil Spirits. At one other point 1 Peter extends the Markan testimony to Jesus beyond Jesus' ministry on earth and into the time and circumstances of its implied readers. Mark's Gospel pays special attention to incidents in which Jesus drove "unclean spirits" out of those who were demon-possessed (see Mk 1:23-28, 32-34; 3:11-12; 5:1-20; 7:24-30; 9:14-29). Although several of these stories are repeated in Matthew and Luke, exorcism has no place among the gifts and ministries mentioned by Paul in his letters and plays only a minor role in narratives of the early Christian mission* (see Acts 16:16-18, 19:11-16).

Only 1 Peter develops the theme of victory over evil spirits in connection with Jesus' resurrection and ascension (1 Pet 3:18-22). On his way to heaven Jesus "made proclamation" to the spirits, described here as "disobedient spirits" and viewed as offspring of an unnatural union between women and evil angels (Gen 6:1-6; see 1 Enoch 15:8-10 and the discussions of Dalton and Michaels 1988). In doing so he gained victory over these spirits on behalf of his followers. The implication drawn in 1 Peter is not that those who have passed (like Noah) through water, the saving water of baptism (1 Pet 3:20), now have the power to perform exorcisms but that they have nothing to fear from human oppressors in Roman society who (like the spirits) are "disobedient" to God (see 1 Pet 2:8; 3:1; 4:17; see Obedience). Peter's triumphant message is that Jesus Christ reigns from heaven over all "angels and authorities and powers" (1 Pet 3:22).

4.4. Conclusion. These and other features of 1 Peter not only justify its inclusion in the NT canon but also suggest that its importance within the canon has been underrated. Despite its association with 2 Peter by virtue of common attribution of authorship, all it has in common with 2 Peter is a strong emphasis on the coming judgment of God. Its more significant function in the NT is as a link or a bridge between the Gospels and the letters of Paul.

First Peter itself seems to signal such a function with its terse references at the end to Paul's companion Silvanus and to "Mark, my son" (1 Pet 5:12-13). Mark was for centuries a neglected Gospel, and if we begin to think of 1 Peter as a sort of companion piece to Mark (in keeping with Papias's tradition about Mark as the inscribing of Peter's memoirs; Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.39.15), it is perhaps not surprising that this short letter has been neglected as well. The abundance of recent studies may indicate that this "exegetical step-child" (Elliott's term) within the canon is on its way to the rehabilitation it deserves.

See also HOUSEHOLD CODES; OLD TESTAMENT IN GENERAL EPISTLES; 2 PETER.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. Commentaries: P. J. Achtemeier, 1 Peter (Herm; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1996); F. W. Beare, The First Epistle of Peter (3d ed.; Oxford: Blackwell, 1970); E. Best, 1 Peter (NCB; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1971); N. Brox, Der erste Petrusbrief (2d ed.; EKK; Zurich: Benziger, 1986); P. H. Davids, The First Epistle of Peter (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); L. Goppelt, A Commentary on 1 Peter, ed. F. Hahn (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993); F. J. A. Hort, The First Epistle of St. Peter 1:1-2:17 (London: Macmillan, 1898); J. N. D. Kelly, A Commentary on the Epistles of Peter and Jude (HNTC; Harper & Row, 1969); I. H. Marshall, 1 Peter (IVPNTC; Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1991); J. R. Michaels, 1 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); B. Reicke, The Epistles of James, Peter and Jude (AB; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1964); E. G. Selwyn, The First Epistle of Peter (2d ed.; London: Macmillan, 1947); D. Senior, 1 and 2 Peter (NT Message 20; Wilmington, DE: Michael Glazier, 1980); H. Windisch and H. Preisker, Die katholischen Briefe (HNT; 3d ed.; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1951). Studies: D. Balch, Let Wives Be Submissive: The Domestic Code in 1 Peter (SBLMS 26; Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1981); A. Chester and R. P. Martin, The Theology of the Letters of James, Peter and Jude (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994); F. L. Cross, 1 Peter: A Paschal Liturgy (London: Mowbray, 1954); W. J. Dalton, Christ's Proclamation to the Spirits: A Study of 1 Peter 3:18-4:6 (2d ed.; Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1989); J. H. Elliott, 1 Peter: Estrangement and Community (Chicago: Franciscan Herald, 1979); idem, A Home for the Homeless: A Sociological Exegesis of 1 Peter, Its Situation and Strategy (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1981); T. W. Martin, Metaphor and Composition in 1 Peter (SBLDS 131; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1992); J. R. Michaels, Word Biblical Themes: 1 Peter (Dallas: Word, 1989); C. F. D. Moule, "The Nature and Purpose of 1 Peter," NTS 3 (1956-57) 1-11; W. L. Schutter, Hermeneutic and Composition in 1 Peter (WUNT; Tübingen: Mohr/Siebeck, 1989); C. H. Talbert, ed., Perspectives on First Peter (NABPRSS; Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1986); W. C. van Unnik, "The Teaching of Good Works in 1 Peter," NTS 1 (1954-55) 92-110; B. W. Winter, Seek the Welfare of the City: Christians as Benefactors and Citizens (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994). J. R. Michaels

2 PETER

Second Peter presents itself as a testament or farewell discourse of the apostle* Peter, written in the form of a letter* shortly before his death (2 Pet 1:14). Its object is to remind the readers of Peter's teaching* and to defend this teaching against objections raised by false teachers who were casting doubt on the Christian expectation of the Parousia* and advocating ethical* libertinism.

1. Literary Structure and Genre
2. Attribution to Peter and Date
3. Opponents and Response
4. Theological Character

1. Literary Structure and Genre.

The structure of 2 Peter can be analyzed as follows

(A = apologetic; E = exhortation/denunciation; L = letter; T = testament):

(L^1) Address and Greeting (2 Pet 1:1-2)

(T^1) Theme: A Summary of Peter's Message (2 Pet 1:3-11)

(T^2) Occasion: Peter's Testament (2 Pet 1:12-16)

(A^1) First Apologetic Section (2 Pet 1:16-21)
Two replies to Objection 1: that the apostles based their preaching of the Parousia on human-made myths (2 Pet 1:16-19)
Reply to Objection 2: that OT prophecies were the products of human minds (2 Pet 1:20-21)

(T^3) Peter's Prediction of False Teachers (2 Pet 2:1-3a)

(A^2) Second Apologetic Section (2 Pet 2:3b-10a)
Reply to Objection 3: that divine judgment never happens (2 Pet 2:3b-10a)

(E^1) Denunciation of the False Teachers (2 Pet 2:10b-22)

(T^4) Peter's Prediction of Scoffers (2 Pet 3:1-4) (including Objection 4: 2 Pet 3:4)

(A^3) Third Apologetic Section (2 Pet 3:5-10)
Two replies to Objection 4: that the expectation of the Parousia is disproved by its delay (2 Pet 3:5-10)

(E^2) Exhortation to Holy Living (2 Pet 3:11-16)

(L^2) Conclusion (2 Pet 3:17-18)

Second Peter is clearly a letter, since it has a formal letter opening (2 Pet 1:1-2), and the conclusion (2 Pet 3:17-18), while not specifically epistolary in character, can function as a letter closing. Moreover, 2 Peter seems to be addressed to those churches or some of those churches to which 1 Peter* had been addressed (2 Pet 3:1). As well as being a letter, 2 Peter belongs to the literary genre of testament, well known in the Jewish literature of the period (e.g., T. Mos.; 1 Enoch 91-104; 2 Bar 57-86; 4 Ezra 14:28-36). In such testaments an OT figure, such as Moses* or Ezra, knowing that his death is approaching, gives a final message to his people, which typically includes ethical exhortation and prophetic revelations of the future. In 2 Peter four passages (marked T^1-T^4 in the analysis above [2 Pet 1:3-11, 12-16; 2:1-3a; 3:1-4]) particularly resemble the Jewish testament literature and clearly identify the work as Peter's testament. In 2 Peter 1:12-15, a passage full of conventional testament language, Peter describes the occasion for writing as his awareness of approaching death and his desire to provide for his teaching to be remembered after his death. The teaching is summarized in 2 Peter 1:3-11, which is a miniature homily, following a pattern used in farewell speeches. It plays a key role in the book as a definitive summary of Peter's ethical and religious instruction. There are also two passages of prophecy* (2 Pet 2:1-3a; 3:1-4) in which Peter foresees that after his death his message will be challenged by false teachers.

The rest of 2 Peter is structured around the four passages that belong to the testament genre. It includes three apologetic sections (marked A^1-A^3 [2 Pet 1:16-21; 2:3b-10a; 3:5-10]) whose aim is to answer the objections the false teachers raise against Peter's teaching. There are four such objections, only the last of which is explicitly stated as such (2 Pet 3:4). In the other three cases the objection is implied in the author's denial of it (2 Pet 1:16a, 20; 2:3b). These apologetic sections give 2 Peter its polemical character as not simply a testamentary statement of Peter's message but also a defense of it against objections. Two passages (marked E^1, E^2 [2 Pet 2:10b-22; 3:11-16]) contrast the libertine behavior of the false teachers denounced in 2 Peter 2:10b-22, with the holy* living expected of the readers if they are faithful to Peter's teaching (2 Pet 3:11-16).

2. Attribution to Peter and Date.

The problem of the authorship of 2 Peter arises in part out of the form and structure. In the Jewish literature of this period, testaments were pseudepigraphal.* They were attributed to OT figures long dead and were probably understood as exercises in historical imagination, putting into the mouth of these figures the kind of thing they might have been expected to say in farewell speeches. This establishes an initial presumption that 2 Peter is likewise a work written in Peter's name by someone else after his death, though it remains possible that the testament genre could have been used by Peter to write his own, real testament.

But it should be noted how the predictive character of the testament genre is used in 2 Peter. Nothing in the letter reflects the situation in which Peter is said to be writing; the work is addressed to a situation after Peter's death. Peter's two predictions of false teachers (2 Pet 2:1-3a; 3:1-4) function as pegs on which is hung the apologetic debate with these false teachers about the validity of Peter's message.

Moreover, whereas the testamentary passages speak of the false teachers in the future tense, predicting their rise after Peter's death (2 Pet 2:1-3a; 3:1-4; cf. 3:17), the apologetic sections and the denunciation of the false teachers refer to them in the present tense (2 Pet 2:3b-22; 3:5-10, 16b). It is hardly possible to read 2 Peter without supposing the false teachers to be contemporaries of the author with whom he is already in debate. The alternation of predictive and present-tense references to them (most obvious in 2 Pet 3:1-10, 16b-17) is therefore best understood as a deliberate stylistic device by which the author conveys that these apostolic prophecies are now being fulfilled. In other words, Petrine authorship is a fiction that the real author does not feel obliged to maintain throughout his work. In that case it must be a transparent fiction, a literary convention that the author expected his readers to recognize as such. (That the author inadvertently slips into the present tense, forgetting that he is meant to be referring the false teachers from Peter's perspective in the past, is not plausible, because 2 Peter is a carefully composed work, and the alternation of future-tense and present-tense references to the false teachers follows a structural pattern.)

These considerations of literary genre are probably the most important elements in the scholarly consensus that 2 Peter is pseudepigraphal, from which only a few recent discussions of the work still dissent. The most cogent additional reasons for denying Peter's authorship are the Hellenistic religious language and ideas and the evidence for dating the work after Peter's death in the mid-60s (see below). While the use of Hellenistic religious language and ideas by a Palestinian Jew should no longer be regarded as incredible, nevertheless the use of Hellenistic religious terminology is a particularly striking feature of 2 Peter and is more easily attributed to a Christian of Diaspora* Jewish or Gentile origin. However, since Peter could have employed a collaborator in writing the letter, this argument cannot be decisive. The dating of the work is probably more significant for the question of authenticity.

It has been common to regard 2 Peter as the latest of the NT writings, to be dated well into the second century, even as late as 150. But there is no good reason to postulate such a late date. The clearest evidence of a postapostolic date is 2 Peter 3:4, which indicates, in the context of raising the problem of the delay of the Parousia, that the first Christian generation (here called "the fathers") has died. The probability is that the letter was written when this had only recently become true, c. A.D. 80-90. This was the time when those who had expected the Parousia during the lifetime of the generation of the apostles would face the problem of the nonfulfillment of that expectation. There is no evidence that this particular issue continued to be felt as a problem in the second century (though John 21 may hint at the problem).

The literary relationship between 2 Peter and Jude* is another consideration that could be relevant to the date of 2 Peter. There are such close resemblances (especially between Jude 4-13, 16-18 and 2 Pet 2:1-18; 3:1-3) that some kind of literary relationship seems certain. Some scholars have held that Jude is dependent on 2 Peter or that both depend on a common source, but most conclude that 2 Peter has used Jude as a source. However, this requires a late date for 2 Peter only if Jude is dated late.

If 2 Peter was written not by Peter but after Peter's death, why did the real author present the work as Peter's testament? Probably because his intention was to defend the apostolic message in the period after the death of the apostles (2 Pet 3:4) against teachers who held that in important respects the teaching of the apostles was discredited. Whereas they were claiming to correct the apostles' teaching, the author of 2 Peter regards it as normative for the postapostolic church. By writing in Peter's name he claims no authority* of his own except as a faithful mediator of the apostolic message, which he defends against attacks. The form of the letter as an apostolic testament is therefore closely connected with its apologetic purpose as a vindication of the normative authority of the apostolic teaching. That the author chose to write Peter's testament is probably best explained if he was a leader in the Roman church (see Rome), which had counted Peter as the most prestigious of its leaders in the previous generation.

3. Opponents and Response.

The false teachers whom the letter opposes have usually been identified as Gnostics,* but this identification, as recent scholarship has recognized, is insecure. The only features of their teaching that are clear from the author's refutation of it are eschatological* skepticism and moral libertinism. The Parousia had been expected during the lifetime of the apostles, but the first generation of Christians had passed away and in the opponents' view this proved the primitive Christian eschatological hope* to have been mistaken (2 Pet 3:4, 9a). There would be no eschatological judgment* (2 Pet 2:3b), no divine intervention to eliminate evil and to establish a world* of righteousness.* This attitude seems to have been based on a rationalistic denial of divine intervention in history (2 Pet 3:4b), as well as on the nonfulfillment of the Parousia prophecy. But it also related to the ethical libertinism of the opponents. They claimed to be emancipating people from the fear* of divine judgment and therefore from conventional Christian morality (2 Pet 2:19a). Evidently they felt free to indulge in sexual immorality (see Purity) and sensual excesses generally (2 Pet 2:2, 10a, 13-14, 18).

This teaching involved a critique of the traditional teaching inherited from the apostles. The opponents claimed that the apostles had invented the idea of the Parousia (2 Pet 1:16a) and denied the inspiration of the eschatological prophecies of the OT (2 Pet 1:20-21a). Either they appealed to Pauline teaching about freedom* in support of their libertine views or they considered that Paul's expectation of the imminent Parousia discredited his teaching. The claim that they distort what Paul wrote (2 Pet 3:16b) could be taken in either of these senses.

There is no basis in 2 Peter itself for supposing that these teachings had a gnostic basis. There is no indication, for example, of the dualism that is a defining characteristic of gnostic thought. The views of the opponents are more plausibly understood as reflecting popular pagan attitudes and deploying pagan skeptical arguments (such as were used by the Epicureans) about eschatology and revelation.* The opponents probably aimed to disencumber Christianity of elements that seemed to them an embarrassment in their pagan cultural context: its cosmic eschatology, alien to most Hellenistic thinking and especially embarrassing after the apparent failure of the Parousia hope, and its ethical rigorism, which contrasted with more permissive attitudes in the cultural context.

In response to this challenge, the author of 2 Peter mounts a defense of the apostolic expectation of judgment and salvation* at the Parousia and of the motivation for righteous living this provides. His definitive summary of Peter's teaching (2 Pet 1:3-11) stresses the need for moral effort if eschatological salvation is to be assured. This positive statement is then backed up by apologetic arguments in the rest of the letter.

The author argues that the apostles' preaching of the Parousia was soundly based on their witnessing of the transfiguration of Jesus, when God* appointed Jesus to be the eschatological judge and ruler (2 Pet 1:16-18), and on the divinely inspired prophecies of the OT (2 Pet 1:19-21). OT examples prove that divine judgment does happen and prefigure the eschatological judgment (2 Pet 2:3b-10a). As God decreed the destruction (see Wrath) of the ancient world in the flood, so he has decreed the destruction of the present world in the fire of his eschatological judgment (2 Pet 3:5-7, 10). The problem of the delay of the Parousia is met by traditional arguments drawn from Jewish tradition: that the delay is long only by human standards, not in the perspective of God's eternity,[c] and should be seen as God's gracious withholding of judgment so that sinners may repent (2 Pet 3:8-9; see Repentance; Sin). Such arguments enable the author, at a time when the hope of the Parousia had become problematic, not to let it fade by postponing it indefinitely but vigorously to reassert the traditional Christian hope and its relevance. Throughout 2 Peter the author is concerned that the hope for the vindication and establishment of God's righteousness in the future (2 Pet 2:9; 3:7, 13) necessarily motivates the attempt to realize that righteousness in Christian lives (2 Pet 3:11, 14).

4. Theological Character.

The distinctive theological character of 2 Peter is found in its remarkable combination of Hellenistic religious language and Jewish eschatological ideas and imagery. On the one hand, for example, the author summarizes Peter's teaching in a passage that in its religious and ethical terminology is perhaps the most typically Hellenistic in the whole NT (2 Pet 1:3-11). This can be seen both in the ethical terms drawn from Hellenistic moral philosophy (2 Pet 1:5-7; see Virtues and Vices) and in the promise* of escaping corruption and sharing divine nature (2 Pet 1:4). Such Hellenistic terminology is carefully situated in a context that gives it Christian meaning (e.g., the list of virtues* in 2 Peter 1:5-7 is given Christian definition by its first and last items: faith* and love*) but seems nevertheless a striking and deliberate attempt to make contact with the Hellenistic religious environment. On the other hand, 2 Peter accurately and effectively reproduces the concepts and imagery of Jewish cosmic eschatology, especially in 2 Peter 3:3-13, which may be drawing directly on a Jewish apocalypse.*

This combination of two different theological styles can be explained by the author's intention of both interpreting and defending the apostolic message in a postapostolic period and a pagan cultural context. When he states the Christian message positively (2 Pet 1:3-11) he does so in terms that make contact with the ideals and aspirations of contemporary pagan culture. He is engaged in the task of translating the gospel* into terms intelligible in a new cultural environment. But this is a delicate task that requires care lest the real Christian content of the gospel be lost. In the author's view that was happening in his opponents' version of Christianity. In their attempt to adapt Christianity to Hellenistic culture they were compromising essential features of the apostolic message, advocating mere pagan skepticism about eschatology and mere acquiescence in moral permissiveness.

In order to defend the gospel against this excessive Hellenization, therefore, the author resorts to sources (including the letter of Jude) and ideas close to the eschatological outlook of early Jewish Christianity (see Jewish Christianity). He sees that if Hellenized Christianity is not to become paganized Christianity, cosmic eschatology—the hope for the triumph of God's righteousness in the whole of his creation*—has to be reasserted, along with the ethical motivation it provides. 2 Peter thus maintains a careful balance between a degree of Hellenization of the gospel message and a protest, in the name of cosmic eschatology, against an extreme Hellenization that would dissolve the real Christian substance of its message. It is a valuable witness to the church's difficult transition from a Jewish (albeit Hellenized) context to a predominantly non-Jewish Hellenistic environment and from the apostolic to the postapostolic age.

This understanding of the theological character of 2 Peter, it may be claimed, does better justice to its content than the tendency of older scholarship to assign it to the category of early catholicism,* a classification that has usually been at the same time a way of denigrating the book as a lapse from the theological standards of earlier (usually meaning Pauline) Christianity. This classification of 2 Peter requires attributing to it features of so-called early catholicism that cannot be found in the text—such as ecclesiological institutionalization and the crystallization of the faith into rigid formulae. It also fails to explain or to appreciate 2 Peter's deliberate and creative combination of Jewish eschatology and Hellenistic religious terminology.

See also ADVERSARIES; EARLY CATHOLICISM; JUDE; PAROUSIA; 1 PETER; PSEUDEPIGRAPHY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); idem, "2 Peter: An Account of Research," ANRW II.25.5 (1988) 3713-52; A. Chester and R. P. Martin, The Theology of the Letters of James, Peter and Jude (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994); T. Fornberg, An Early Church in a Pluralistic Society (ConNT; Lund: Gleerup, 1977); E. Fuchs and P. Reymond, La Deuxième Epître de Saint Pierre; L'Epître de Saint Jude (CNT; Paris: Delachaux & Niestlé, 1980); A. E. Harvey, "The Testament of Simeon Peter," in A Tribute to Geza Vermes: Essays on Jewish and Christian Literature and History, ed. P. R. Davies and R. T. White (JSOTSup 100; Sheffield: JSOT, 1990) 339-54; E. Käsemann, "An Apologia for Primitive Christian Eschatology," in Essays on New Testament Themes (London: SCM, 1964) 169-95; J. B. Mayor, The Epistle of St. Jude and the Second Epistle of St. Peter (London: Macmillan, 1907); D. G. Meade, Pseudonymity and Canon (WUNT; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr [Siebeck], 1986); J. H. Neyrey, 2 Peter, Jude (AB; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1993); A. Vögtle, Der Judasbrief; Der 2. Petrusbrief (EKK; Solothurn: Benziger Verlag, 1994); D. F. Watson, Invention, Arrangement and Style: Rhetorical Criticism of Jude and 2 Peter (SBLDS 104; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1988); A. Wolters, "'Partners of the Deity': A Covenantal Reading of 2 Peter 1:4," CTJ 25 (1990) 28-44.

R. J. Bauckham

PETER, GOSPEL OF

The Gospel of Peter is an apocryphal Christian writing from the mid-second century bearing the name of Peter, extant only as a fragmentary account of the trial, death, burial, resurrection* and appearances of Jesus (see DJG, Gospels [Apocryphal]).

1. Discovery and Identification
2. Narrative Perspective
3. The Question of Sources

1. Discovery and Identification.

Eusebius notes that Bishop Serapion of Antioch,* who flourished from c. 190, developed a concern regarding a Gospel of Peter because it had been used by some at the church in Rhossus to support docetic* ideas (see Canon). Brief mention is also made of a Gospel of Peter by Origen (Origen Comm. Mt. 10.17). No such book was known, however, until the end of the nineteenth century. In 1886-87 a French archaeological team excavating in a cemetery in Akhmîm (Egypt) found a small codex including a fragment of a work that begins in mid-sentence with an account of the trial of Jesus and ends in mid-sentence with Simon Peter and others at the sea where, presumably, it would be recorded that the risen Lord* appeared to them. Because of the spacing and ornamentation preceding and following the text, it appears that the scribe had access only to this excerpt.

Initial examination noted that Simon Peter speaks in the first person (Gos. Pet. 14.60; cf. 7.26) and drew attention to alleged docetic features, leading to the identification of this text with Serapion's Gospel of Peter. The Akhmîm fragment has been dated as early as the fifth century or as late as the ninth. Two small papyrus fragments from Oxyrhynchus (POxy 2949) provide a second witness to the manuscript tradition of the Gospel of Peter (Gos. Pet. 2.3-5), and these were written c. 200 (On the relation of these two witnesses see Treat.) A further papyrus (POxy 4009), also dated to the second or third century, may bear witness to a postresurrection scene similar to that in John 21, possibly witnessed in the Gospel of Peter following the point at which the Akhmîm fragment breaks off (Lührmann).

The Greek text is available (e.g., in Neirynck, 171-75; for photographs see von Gebhardt, I-X) and in recent English translation (e.g., in Brown, 2:1318-21).

2. Narrative Perspective.

Although one may observe points of contact between the extant material from the Gospel of Peter and what is said of earlier, now lost portions of the narrative (Brown, 2:1317-18 n. 4), it is impossible to reconstruct its story line and theological tendencies before the trial of Jesus. Certain themes are brought into the foreground by the extant text, however.

First, one finds a strong anti-Jewish sentiment. According to the Gospel of Peter, the Jews bear sole responsibility for the crucifixion of Jesus. The account begins with the Jews and Herod, their king, refusing to wash their hands, presumably after Pilate had done so (Mt 27:24); later Pilate proclaims, "I am clean of the blood of the Son of God," blaming the Jews for the execution of this just man (Gos. Pet. 11.46). It was Herod who handed "the Lord" over to death (Gos. Pet. 1.2). When Joseph, "friend of Pilate and the Lord" (Gos. Pet. 2.3; and not a faithful Jew, as in the canonical Gospels), requests the body of Jesus, Pilate must gain permission from Herod (Gos. Pet. 2.4-5). The Jews, the elders and the priests* mock and crucify Jesus (Gos. Pet. 3.6—7.25); following his death they recognize their wrongdoing and mourn because of the judgment* that would now befall them—namely, the fall of Jerusalem (Gos. Pet. 7.25). Even if the Jewish people are rehabilitated somewhat in their responses to the portents following the crucifixion (Gos. Pet. 7.25-26), the negative portrayal of the Jewish leaders, who fear the people more than God (Gos. Pet. 11.48), is relentless.

Is the Gospel of Peter docetic? That it can be read in this way is clear from Serapion's response (see 1 above). Certainly there are phrases that would be attractive to gnostic* Christians, including the narrator's statement upon Jesus' crucifixion, "He was silent, as if having no pain" (Gos. Pet. 4.10); in addition, the description of the moment of his death (Gos. Pet. 5.19) is susceptible to the interpretation that the divine element of Jesus left him prior to his suffering* and death.* Of course, canonical materials, including the Gospel of John and certain Pauline epistles, also were used by gnostic Christians.

The Gospel of Peter evidences a relatively high christology.* This is perhaps most recognizable when Jesus' body, taken from the cross and placed on the ground, causes an earthquake (Gos. Pet. 6.21), and when the body of the risen Lord stretches from the earth to the heavens, taller even than the angels* supporting him (Gos. Pet. 10.40). In addition Jesus is never referred to by personal name but usually by "Lord" or "Son of God"; even "the Jews, elders and priests" recognize him as righteous (Gos. Pet. 7.25), and those who guard his tomb, both soldiers and Jews, acknowledge him as God's Son (Gos. Pet. 10.38; 11.45; cf. 3.6-9).

Finally, not least in contrast with the canonical Gospels, the Gospel of Peter presents a fail-safe apologetic for the resurrection of the Lord (Gos. Pet. 8.31—11.49). Pilate provides a centurion and soldiers who together with the Jewish elders close off the tomb and seal it with seven seals, and they all stay through the night in order to safeguard the tomb. Moreover, they all witness the Lord's exit from the tomb in the company of two angels (unlike the canonical Gospels, which never describe the emergence from the tomb).

3. The Question of Sources.

From the beginning of scholarly study of the Gospel of Peter, opinions divided over the relationship between this apocryphal* writing and the canonical Gospels. J. A. Robinson has been joined by others, both in the decades following his publication of the text in 1892 and more recently, in holding that the Gospel of Peter depended on the NT Gospels (e.g., Brown, Green, Mara, Neirynck, Vaganay). A. von Harnack, however, insisted that the Gospel of Peter bore witness to a tradition independent of the canonical Gospels, and this view has found subsequent support and restatement (e.g., Crossan, Denker, Koester). A century after those first studies of the problem, the source-critical initiative appears in many circles to lie with the views of H. Koester, who argues that the Gospel of Peter was a very early form of the passion and resurrection accounts, or J. D. Crossan, who insists that the Gospel of Peter contains within it a very early, precanonical account (the "Cross Gospel").

This view is problematic for two reasons. First, the modern reaffirmation of the independence of the Gospel of Peter is assumed or asserted more than argued by its proponents; in particular Crossan's work suffers from his failure to provide any detailed analysis of the text of the apocryphal Gospel that would lead to the conclusion of its early and independent origins (see Brown, Green, Kirk). Second, the views of both Crossan and Koester depend on an unsupported theory—in Koester's words, "The details and individual scenes of the narrative do not rest on historical memory, but were developed on the basis of allegorical interpretation of Scripture" (Koester, 224). Evidence for this sort of allegorical interpretation, leading to the creation of narrative in the absence of historical data either in earliest Christianity or in contemporary Judaism,* has not been presented by Koester or Crossan, however, and counterevidence is easy to find (e.g., the measured comments in Marcus; also Green). Greater attention at the level of presuppositions and precision of argument is thus needed, but the way forward in this debate is undoubtedly in the more nuanced exploration of the role of oral tradition in the formation of the Gospel of Peter (Schaeffer).

When was the Gospel of Peter written? It had to have been written before the end of the second century, since it was by then a source of controversy in Rhossus. A further judgment on this question is dependent upon one's views on the relationship between this writing and the canonical Gospels. Those who believe that the Gospel of Peter evidences a precanonical passion narrative may date it into the mid-first century. As seems more likely, however, the Gospel of Peter borrows from and builds on the canonical Gospels and so must be dated after 100, probably in the first half of the second century.

See also APOCRYPHAL AND PSEUDEPIGRAPHAL WRITINGS; MARK, SECRET GOSPEL OF; THOMAS, GOSPEL OF.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. E. Brown, The Death of the Messiah—From Gethsemane to the Grave: A Commentary on the Passion Narratives (2 vols.; ABRL; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1994) 2:1317-49; idem, "The Gospel of Peter and Canonical Gospel Priority," NTS 33 (1987) 321-43; J. D. Crossan, The Cross That Spoke: The Origins of the Passion Narrative (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1988); J. Denker, Die theologiegeschichtliche Stellung des Petrusevangeliums: Ein Beitrag zur Frühgeschichte des Doketismus (EH 23: Theologie 36; Frankfurt: Peter Lang, 1975); O. von Gebhardt, Das Evangelium und die Apokalypse des Petrus (Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1893); J. B. Green, "The Gospel of Peter: Source for a Precanonical Passion Narrative?" ZNW 78 (1987) 293-301; A. von Harnack, Bruchstücke des Evangeliums und der Apokalypse des Petrus (2d ed.; TU; Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1893); A. Kirk, "Examining Priorities: Another Look at the Gospel of Peter's Relationship to the New Testament Gospels," NTS 40 (1994) 572-95; H. Koester, Ancient Christian Gospels: Their History and Development (London: SCM; Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1990) esp. 216-40; D. Lührmann, "Ein Neues Fragment des Petrusevangeliums" in The Synoptic Gospels: Source Criticism and the New Literary Criticism, ed. C. Focant (BETL 110; Louvain: Louvain University, 1993) 579-81; J. W. McCant, "The Gospel of Peter: Docetism Reconsidered," NTS 30 (1984) 258-73; M. G. Mara, Évangile de Pierre: Introduction, Texte Critique, Traduction, Commentaire et Index (SC; Paris: Cerf, 1973); J. Marcus, "The Old Testament and the Death of Jesus: The Role of Scripture in the Gospel Passion Narratives" in The Death of Jesus in Early Christianity, ed. J. T. Carroll and J. B. Green (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1995) 205-33; F. Neirynck, "The Apocryphal Gospels and the Gospel of Mark" in The New Testament in Early Christianity, ed. J.-M. Servin (BETL 86; Louvain: Louvain University, 1989) 123-75; J. A. Robinson and M. R. James, The Gospel According to Peter and the Revelation of Peter: Two Lectures on the Newly Discovered Fragments Together with the Greek Texts (London: C. J. Clay, 1892) 83-88; S. E. Schaeffer, "The Gospel of Peter, the Canonical Gospels and Oral Tradition" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Union Theological Seminary, 1991); J. C. Treat, "The Two Manuscript Witnesses to the Gospel of Peter," SBLSP (1990) 391-99; L. Vaganay, L'Évangile de Pierre (2d ed.; EB; Paris: Librairie Lecoffre, 1930). J. B. Green

PHILIP THE EVANGELIST

The description—"the evangelist, one of the Seven"—in Acts 21:8 distinguishes this Philip from his apostolic namesake (Lk 6:14; Acts 1:13) and recalls his roles as pioneering proclaimer of the Christian gospel* (Acts 8; see Evangelism) and partner in charitable ministry* (Acts 6:1-6). Other traditions about Philip must be compared with the primary portrait provided in the canonical Acts.*

1. Philip in Acts
2. Philip in Other Early Christian Traditions

1. Philip in Acts.

1.1. Table Servant in Jerusalem. Philip first appears, after Stephen,* in a list of seven servants (see Service) chosen to oversee the Jerusalem* church's daily dole of food, especially to poor Hellenist widows (Acts 6:1-3, 5). With established reputations as wise, Spirit-filled persons (Acts 6:3; see Holy Spirit), Philip and his associates seem to have been community leaders prior to this new assignment. Moreover, any supposed inconsistency between Philip's social duty and subsequent evangelistic activity vanishes in light of the Lukan emphasis on "serving tables" and "serving the word" as complementary diaconal (diakoneō) ministries (Acts 6:2, 4; cf. Lk 9:1-6, 10-17; 12:37-42; 17:7-10; 22:14-27).

1.2. Evangelist to the Samaritans. A campaign of persecution* against the Jerusalem church, beginning with the stoning of Stephen, drives Philip to Samaria,* where he performs miracles* of healing* and exorcism and proclaims the good news of Jesus Christ (Acts 8:5-8, 12). This mission* marks the gospel's first advance beyond Jerusalem, following the plan outlined in Acts 1:8. Apart from geographical expansion, Philip's outreach also crosses socioreligious boundaries dividing Samaritans and Jews, as evidenced earlier in the Lukan narrative in the Samaritan villagers' refusal to host the Jerusalem-bound Jesus, as well as James and John's hotheaded retort (Lk 9:51-56).

The character and strength of Philip's Samaritan mission is particularly demonstrated in his overwhelming of Simon Magus (see Magic), who had previously dazzled the crowds with his grandiose claims and wondrous displays. In contrast to Simon's soliciting devotion to himself as "the Great Power [dynamis megalē] of God," Philip promotes commitment to "the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:9-12; see Kingdom of God). And whatever the greatness of Simon's feats, Philip's "great powers" (dynameis megalas) are notably superior, prompting even Simon's amazement and apparent conversion (Acts 8:13). This discomfiture of a popular magician-sorcerer characterizes Philip as a Moses*-style prophet* (Ex 7:22; 8:7, 18-19; Deut 18:9-18) and matches Paul's work at the beginning of his three main missionary journeys (Acts 13:6-12; 16:1-18; 19:11-20).

Subsequent events involving Peter and John's conveyance of the Spirit to the Samaritan believers (see Pentecost) and exposure of Simon's greedy insincerity (Acts 8:14-24) raise possible questions about Philip's discernment. Such concerns are offset, however, by the Lukan emphasis on the Spirit as God's sovereignly bestowed gift—irrespective of human channels (Lk 11:13; Acts 2:38; 8:20; 10:44-48; 11:15-17)--and frank acknowledgment of other fraudulent disciples, including Jesus' own apostle,* Judas (Lk 22:3-6; Acts 1:16-20; cf. Lk 8:14; Acts 5:1-11).

1.3. Evangelist to the Ethiopian Eunuch. Philip also spreads the gospel along Israel's Mediterranean coast from the Gaza region to Caesarea (Acts 8:26, 40). The most memorable encounter is with a eunuch returning home to Ethiopia from Jerusalem. Starting with the text of Isaiah 53:7-8, which the eunuch had been reading, Philip expounds the good news about Jesus (Acts 8:32-35). The eunuch responds with a request for baptism,* which Philip promptly fulfills just before the Spirit whisks him away (Acts 8:36-39).

Once again Philip proves to be a boundary-breaking pioneer. Geographically, he extends the gospel not only to the Judean coastal plain but also toward the eunuch's Ethiopian homeland, situated at "the ends of the earth" in Greco-Roman thought (Homer Odys. 1.22-24; Strabo Geog. 17.2.1; cf. Acts 1:8; Ps 68:31). Ethnically, Philip evangelizes a black African, Jewish-sympathizing Gentile* ("God-fearer"). Socially, Philip's witness spans two poles. On the one hand he advises an elite government official (dynastēs), the queen's treasurer (Acts 8:27). On the other hand, however, he reaches out to a castrated male (eunouchos), who, despite his interest in Judaism,* would have been regarded according to traditional law* as impure and disgraceful, forever cut off from the covenant* community (Lev 21:18-20; Deut 23:1; Josephus Ant. 4.8.40 §290-91; Philo Spec. Leg. 1.324-25). Within this scenario Philip's identification of Jesus with the shorn and scorned figure of Isaiah 53 becomes especially relevant.

Philip's interaction with an inquiring foreign official, culminating in the latter's baptism, recalls Elisha's dealings with Naaman (2 Kings 5:1-15; cf. Lk 4:27) and previews Peter's breakthrough to Cornelius* (Acts 10:1-48). Interesting links have also been noted between the revelatory ministries of Philip and Jesus to confused travelers on the roads to Gaza and Emmaus respectively (cf. Lk 24:13-35).

1.4. Resident Host in Caesarea. Philip ultimately settles in Caesarea with his four unmarried daughters, known for their prophetic vocation. For several days Philip hosts Paul and his companions (the "we" group) on their way to Jerusalem (Acts 21:8-14).

Philip's domestic-residential service in Caesarea both parallels his table waiting in Jerusalem and balances his evangelistic-itinerant mission in Judea and Samaria. Moreover, his gracious hosting of Paul (see Hospitality) constitutes a remarkable conciliatory gesture to this former instigator of persecution surrounding Philip's earlier ministry (Acts 8:1-3; 9:1-2). In sum, Philip emerges as a key agent of unity in Acts, bringing together different forms of service* and different types of people.

2. Philip in Other Early Christian Traditions.

2.1. Johannine. In four passages, unparalleled in the Synoptic tradition, the Fourth Gospel refers to a disciple of Jesus named Philip from Bethsaida in Galilee (Jn 1:43-48; 6:5-7; 12:20-22; 14:8-9). Although this Philip is not identified as one of the twelve apostles and does bring Nathanael and some Greek seekers into contact with Jesus, any tie-in with Philip the evangelist in Acts remains speculative. Presumed connections between the anonymous "other" laborers in the Samaritan mission field in John 4:38 and Philip in Acts 8 are also tenuous.

2.2. Patristic. Eusebius reports the claims of the second-century Ephesian bishop, Polycrates, and the Montanist leader, Proclus, that the luminous apostle Philip and his unmarried, prophetic daughters were laid to rest in Asia Minor. Eusebius clearly associates this Philip with Acts 21:8-9, thus blurring the distinction between apostle and evangelist (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.31.2-5; 5.24.2). He also mentions that Philip's daughters recounted a wondrous resurrection* story (involving their father?) to Papias of Hierapolis and cites the opinion of Clement of Alexandria that Philip eventually gave his daughters in marriage (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.39.9; 3.30.1; Clement of Alexandria Strom. 3.52.5).

2.3. Gnostic. In various gnostic* traditions Philip becomes one of the main channels of special revelation* among Jesus' disciples (Gos. Phil. 73.8; Soph. Jes. Chr. 92.4; 95.19; Pistis Sophia). In The Letter of Peter to Philip (late second or early third century) Peter urges his estranged "brother" Philip to rejoin the apostolic fold (Ep. Pet. Phil. 132.10—133.19), signaling perhaps some conflict among gnostic circles involving these two figures. Although this tractate makes no explicit reference to the material about Philip in Acts, numerous allusions to Acts 1—12 may suggest that the letter's addressee again represents an amalgam of Philip the evangelist and Philip the apostle.

See also ACTS OF THE APOSTLES; HELLENISTS; SAMARIA; STEPHEN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. K. Barrett, "Light on the Holy Spirit from Simon Magus (Acts 8,4-25)" in Les Actes des Apôtres: Traditions, rédaction, théologie, ed. J. Kremer (BETL 48; Paris-Gembloux: Duculot; Louvain: Louvain University, 1979) 281-95; F. Bovon, "Les Actes de Philippe," ANRW 2.25.6 (1988) 4431-527; T. L. Brodie, "Towards Unraveling the Rhetorical Sources in Acts: 2 Kgs 5 as One Component of Acts 8,9-40," Bib 67 (1986) 41-67; S. R. Garrett, The Demise of the Devil: Magic and the Demonic in Luke's Writings (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1989); A. M. Johnson Jr., "Philip the Evangelist and the Gospel of John," AbrN 16 (1975-76) 49-72; C. H. Lindijer, "Two Creative Encounters in the Work of Luke: Luke xxiv 13-35 and Acts viii 26-40" in Miscellanea Neotestamentica, ed. T. Baarda, A. F. J. Klijn and W. C. van Unnik (NovTSup 48; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1978) 77-85; C. J. Martin, "A Chamberlain's Journey and the Challenge of Interpretation for Liberation," Semeia 47 (1989) 105-35; M. W. Meyer, The Letter of Peter to Philip: Text, Translation and Commentary (SBLDS 53; Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1981); D. M. Parrott, "Gnostic and Orthodox Disciples in the Second and Third Centuries" in Nag Hammadi, Gnosticism and Early Christianity, ed. C. W. Hedrick and R. Hodgson Jr. (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1986) 193-219; F. S. Spencer, "The Ethiopian Eunuch and His Bible: A Social-Science Analysis," BTB 22 (1992) 155-65; idem, The Portrait of Philip in Acts: A Study of Roles and Relations (JSNTSup 67; Sheffield: JSOT, 1992).

F. S. Spencer

PHILO

Philo Judaeus, also known as Philo Alexandrinus, lived in Egypt from about 20 B.C. to A.D.

50. He is never mentioned in the NT and in his writings never directly address Christianity or any of the leaders of the early Christian church. Yet Philo's extant works provide a window on the first-century world shared by Christianity.

1. The Man
2. The Writings of Philo
3. Philo and the New Testament
4. Summary

1. The Man.

Philo was a member of one of the most prominent Jewish families in Alexandria.* His brother, Alexander, was a political ally of Herod Agrippa (Josephus Ant. 18.6.3, §159). Alexander's son Marcus was wed to Agrippa's daughter Bernice (cf. Acts 25:13, 23; 26:30). Another of Philo's nephews, Tiberius Julius Alexander, served as procurator of the province of Judea in A.D. 46-48 (Josephus Ant. 20.5.2 §100-104; Acts 11:28; 12:20-23). Despite these connections with Palestine, Philo mentions only one visit to Jerusalem (Philo Prov. 2.64).

Philo's writings reveal a creative, educated man struggling to synthesize the two most prominent elements of his personal existence: Greek wisdom and the Jewish religious tradition (see Judaism). The early Christian church struggled to work a similar synthesis as it proclaimed the message of the Messiah in a Hellenized Gentile world. As a result, the Christian church found Philo's writings helpful, and his works survived primarily in the church.

2. The Writings of Philo.

Two of Philo's writings have survived as complete documents only in Armenian: Questions and Answers on Genesis (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesin) and Questions and Answers on Exodus (Quaestiones et Solutiones in Exodum). These occupy the final two volumes of the twelve-volume Loeb collection. Organizing Philo's other works into helpful subdivisions has proven difficult. Scholars typically find from three to six major divisions but confess that the content of the documents in these divisions frequently overlaps.

2.1. Historical Works. Two of Philo's most notable historical documents are Flaccus (In Flaccum) and On the Embassy to Gaius (De Legatione ad Gaium). Flaccus, the prefect of Egypt, was responsible for the Jewish pogrom of A.D. 38. The Jews sought to counter the pogrom by sending Philo as the leader of an embassy to the emperor,* Gaius Caligula. Eventually Flaccus was recalled to Rome, exiled and executed. Philo used the account to make the theological point that evil will ultimately reap divine punishment. Another historical work, On the Contemplative Life (De Vita Contemplativa), focuses on a religious order, the Therapeutae, which Philo compared briefly to the Essenes. The Essenes are also mentioned in That Every Good Man Is Free (Quod Omnis Probus Liber sit), which reflects Stoic wisdom by drawing a sharp distinction between the spiritual nature of virtue* and the physical origin of vices.

2.2. Philosophical Works. This grouping of writings (occupying the first five Loeb volumes following On the Creation of the World [De Opificio Mundi]) could easily be labeled Philo's allegorical digressions. This series of treatises follows the order of Genesis 1-17, 27, 37. Philo began each treatise with a biblical citation but allegorized the text and moved rapidly to a rambling discussion of spiritual-philosophical matters in general.

2.3. Exegetical Works. Philo's exegetical works begin with On the Creation of the World (De Opificio Mundi) which strives to demonstrate the harmony between natural law and divine law. A series of treatises on key figures (On Abraham [De Abrahamo], On Joseph [De Iosepho] and On the Life of Moses [De Vita Mosis]) provide living examples of the goodness of the law. These in turn lead the reader to Philo's treatises On the Decalogue (De Decalogo) and On the Special Laws (De Specialibus Legibus).

3. Philo and the New Testament.

Much has been written regarding Philo and the NT texts. Scholarly attention has focused primarily on three areas: Hebrews,* some sections of the Gospel of John and some portions of the writings of Paul. Each of these demonstrates varying degrees of affinity with the writings of Philo.

3.1. Hebrews. The author of Hebrews reveals an impressive knowledge of the Jewish Scriptures, an unmistakable commitment to the supremacy of the Christian gospel* and a greater similarity to Philo than any other NT writer. The book delivers its lesson based on the Greek text of the OT and reflects training in the art of Greek rhetoric. This combining of Hebrew revelation* and Greek wisdom* gives Hebrews a Philonic flavor.

Philo and Hebrews both show a preference for the Pentateuch. Both give considerable attention to Moses* (cf. Heb 3:1-6 and Philo Vit. Mos.), the priesthood* and the Jewish cult (cf. Heb 4:14—5:10; 7:23-28 and Philo Spec. Leg.). Both treat OT persons and events as symbols of deeper realities and both distinguish between an immature knowledge of the revelation versus a true deeper understanding.

In spite of these commonalities, significant differences also exist. For the author of Hebrews it was Christ and the work of Christ that defined all wisdom (Heb 1:1-4). Thus he interpreted the Septuagint via typology and finds Christ there. Philo interpreted the Septuagint via allegory and found there the foundation for all wisdom, especially Greek wisdom. In line with Greek wisdom, Philo's dualism is ontological. Matter and spirit are opposed, God* is transcendent, and ascending to the enlightened level of true spiritual being is humanity's goal. The dualism of Hebrews is eschatological. Material existence is not essentially evil and God is directly involved with it. The two worlds discernible in Hebrews (the heavenly and the earthly) are tightly tied to one another as the present age flows into the age to come (Heb 9:23-28). Such deep discontinuities between the thought of Hebrews and that of Philo outweigh their superficial similarities and should prevent us from labeling Hebrews as Philonic.

3.2. John. The Gospel of John also exhibits several parallels with the writings of Philo. Dualism is evident in John and is predominantly an ontological dualism. For both authors true spiritual enlightenment or true life is attained through the knowledge of the one true God. For both the knowledge of God derives from the Jewish Scriptures. Both John and Philo also struggled to communicate the knowledge of this one true God to the broader Hellenized world. This attempt is perhaps best seen in the use by both authors of Logos terminology (Jn 1:1-18; Philo Som. 1.75; Philo Migr. Abr. 102). Yet at this point the most basic difference between Philo's writings and John can be seen.

In general in Hellenistic philosophy the Logos (the "word") is an impersonal force. It is the reason or logic that unified and made sense of the world. The wise and enlightened person sought to understand and cooperate with the Logos (see Logos Christology). Both Philo and John made use of the Hellenistic Logos concept by linking it to the biblical concept of the "Word" of God. For Philo the Word reveals God and wise persons allow that Word to inform and shape their lives. In its prologue, however, John takes an additional crucial step by proclaiming that the Word became flesh* and identifying that Word as Jesus Christ (Jn 1:14-17).

Philo used personification to discuss the Logos (Philo Conf. Ling. 146), but his Hellenistic worldview would never allow its actual incarnation (Philo Conf. Ling. 147). By contrast the incarnation of the Logos made sense for John. His understanding of the world was dominated by his knowledge of the divine in the man Jesus. Through Jesus true life is secured and God is revealed. Jesus serves as the bridge between humanity's darkness and divine light.* The Logos was for John what it could never be for Philo.

3.3. Paul. Numerous parallels in terminology exist also between Paul's and Philo's writings. Both revered the Jewish Scriptures and cited or alluded to the Septuagint frequently. Both worked primarily in the Diaspora* communicating the revelation of the Jewish God to Hellenized audiences. Both wrote of humanity as a complex of body, soul and spirit (or in Philo "mind") and as persons capable of living dominated by the flesh or guided by the spirit (Philo Gig. 36-37; 1 Thess 5:23).

However, the distance between Paul's gospel and Philo's philosophy is great. As in John, Paul's Logos was the Christ, Jesus. For Philo it was a timeless, noncorporeal reality. So for Paul the separation between the transcendent God and humanity had been bridged in a way that was impossible for Philo. Likewise the hope* of the Parousia* and of a physical resurrection* in Paul (1 Cor 15:3-57) bring together the world of the divine and the human in a way that Philo's dualism could not countenance.

Philo and Paul both respect and comment on the law as the wisdom of God. Philo integrated the law and Hellenistic wisdom by means of allegorical interpretation. The law, properly understood, was for Philo a guide that humanity should and can obey and that if obeyed would lead to an enlightened, spiritual existence (Philo Migr. Abr. 89-93). Paul laments that humanity is incapable of keeping the law. Salvation* is accomplished through faith* in Christ completely apart from obedience* to the Law. Thus Paul's writings are centered on a dilemma (humanity's inescapable captivity to sin* and death, Rom 3:9-20) and a solution to that dilemma (deliverance by grace* through faith in Christ, Rom 3:21-26) that Philo's writings do not reflect.

4. Summary.
John, Hebrews, Paul and Philo clearly shared common vocabulary and engaged in dialogue with the same Hellenized world. As a result our knowledge of that world is greatly enhanced through a familiarity with Philo's writings. It is unlikely, however, that any of the biblical authors were directly influenced by a knowledge of Philo's works.

See also HEBREWS; JOSEPHUS; LOGOS CHRISTOLOGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. P. Borgen, Philo, John and Paul (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1987); G. Meyer, Index Philoneus (New York: Walter de Gruyter, 1974); R. Radice and D. T. Runia, Philo of Alexandria: An Annotated Bibliography 1937-86 (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1988); D. T. Runia, Philo in Early Christian Literature (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1993); idem et al., The Studia Philonica Annual (BJS; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1989—); S. Sandmel, Philo of Alexandria (New York: Oxford University Press, 1979); R. Williamson, Jews in the Hellenistic World: Philo (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1989); idem, Philo and the Epistle to the Hebrews (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1970). D. M. Martin

POLEMIC, JEWISH-CHRISTIAN.

See CHRISTIANITY AND JUDAISM: PARTINGS OF THE WAYS.

POLYCARP OF SMYRNA

Bishop of Smyrna, Polycarp (c. A.D. 69/70—c. 155-160) was an important Christian leader in Asia Minor in the first half of the second century, the author of a letter to the church in Philippi and the subject of the earliest extant Christian martyrdom.

1. Polycarp of Smyrna
2. The Letter of Polycarp to the Philippians
3. The Martyrdom of Polycarp

1. Polycarp of Smyrna.
Already bishop of Smyrna when his friend and mentor Ignatius* of Antioch addressed a letter of encouragement and advice to him (c. 110 or later), Polycarp died a martyr's death (see 3.5 below) several decades later at age 86 (c. 155-160), having served as bishop for at least forty and possibly sixty or more years. His one surviving letter reveals a direct and unpretentious style and a sensitive pastoral manner, while in the Martyrdom he is described as the "teacher of all Asia" (Mart. Pol. 12.2). His life and ministry spanned the time between the end of the apostolic era and the emergence of catholic Christianity (see Early Catholicism), and he was deeply involved in the central issues and challenges of this critical era: the growing threat of persecution* by the state; the emerging gnostic* movement (he is particularly known for his opposition to one of the movement's most charismatic and theologically innovative teachers, Marcion,* whom he reportedly encountered, perhaps while in Rome* [Irenaeus Adv. Haer. 3.3.4; Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.14.7]); the development of the monepiscopal form of ecclesiastical organization (see Church Order, Government); and the formation of the canon* of the NT.

Both Irenaeus (who as a child met Polycarp) and Eusebius considered him to be a significant link in the chain of orthodox apostolic tradition. (Their claim that he had known John the apostle among others [Irenaeus Adv. Haer. 3.3.4; Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.14] is unverifiable and perhaps confused). Irenaeus also associates him with Papias (Irenaeus Adv. Haer. 5.33.4) and Florinus (before he became a heretic; Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 5.20.4-8) and reports (probably correctly) that he traveled to Rome to discuss the Quartodeciman controversy (a dispute over the date for celebrating Easter) with Anicetus, bishop of Rome (Irenaeus Adv. Haer. 3.3.4; Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 5.24; 4.14). Conservative and traditional, Polycarp exercised influence far beyond Asia as he sought to protect and maintain the orthodox faith.

2. The Letter of Polycarp to the Philippians.
Only a single document by Polycarp survives (Campenhausen's attempt to show that Polycarp was also the author of the Pastoral Epistles has met with very little acceptance). Written in response to a letter from the church in Philippi (cf. Pol. Phil. 3.1, 13.1), it seeks to define and reinforce community boundaries (Maier) while responding to their request for a discussion of "righteousness"* (Pol. Phil. 3.1) and dealing with the problem of Valens, an avaricious presbyter (Pol. Phil. 11.1-4).

2.1. Integrity and Date of the Letter. Determination of the date of Polycarp's letter is dependent upon the question of its integrity, because it has been suggested that the document as we now know it preserves not one but two letters.

The references to Ignatius in Philippians 1.1 and 9.1 (which imply that Ignatius is already dead) and Philippians 13.2 (where Polycarp asks for information about his fate) are usually understood to indicate that while sufficient time has passed since Ignatius's final departure for Rome for Polycarp to assume that Ignatius has by now been martyred, he has not yet received a confirmatory report. Thus the letter is customarily dated within a few weeks (or at most a few months) of the time of Ignatius's death (c. 110 or later).

Harrison has argued that Polycarp's "letter" is actually two letters: a brief one, comprising chapters 13—14, that was written shortly after Ignatius left Philippi, and a longer one (chapters 1—12) written some decades later, about 135-137 (the basis for this date being alleged anti-Marcionite elements in the letter, such as Pol. Phil. 7.1). While initial reaction to Harrison's thesis was enthusiastic, subsequent investigations have pointed out (1) the absence of any distinctively Marcionite aspects of the teaching refuted in the letter and (2) that the remembrances of Ignatius and his companions in Philippians 1.1 and 9.1 are far too fresh and vivid to allow for the passage of two or three decades since the event being remembered. Recent discussions, whether rejecting (Schoedel 1967, Paulsen, Dehandschutter 1989) or accepting (Barnard 1966) the possibility of division into two letters (a division which a formal epistolary analysis permits but does not require), insist on a date very close to the time of Ignatius's death.

Theories of interpolation (e.g., Joly) arise out of Polycarp's testimony to Ignatius (cf. Schoedel 1987, Dehandschutter 1989), and thus more properly belong to a discussion of the authenticity of the Ignatian letters (a collection which Polycarp apparently initiated [Pol. Phil. 13.2]).

2.2. Genre. Polycarp's letter is a complex hortatory letter that (1) combines elements of at least three common letter* types (paraenesis, advice and admonition), and (2) employs in portions of the letter a sermonic or homiletic style of discourse, the "word of exhortation." While its structure owes more to the "word of exhortation" model than to either Hellenistic epistolary conventions or rhetorical* theory, awareness of the latter two is evident throughout the letter.

2.3. Contents. The following topical outline of the body of the letter offers an overview of the document's contents.

I. Righteousness (2.1—10.3)
  A. Righteousness defined (2.1-3)
  B. Occasion for letter: a request about righteousness (3.1-2)
  C. Faith/Hope/Love: the essence of righteousness (3.3)
  D. Table of duties: the living out of righteousness (4.1—6.2)
    1. "Weapons of righteousness" combat a love of money (4.1)
    2. Men (4.1)
    3. Wives (4.2)
    4. Children (4.2)
    5. Widows (4.3)
    6. Whole community (5.1)
    7. Deacons (5.2)
    8. Younger men (5.3)
    9. Younger women (5.3)
    10. Presbyters (6.1)
    11. Forgiveness: the duty of all (6.2)
  E. Follow the Lord, not false brothers (6.3)
  F. Rejection of heretics who reject Christ 7.1-2)
  G. Christ the guarantee of our righteousness (8.1-2)
  H. The martyrs as examples of righteousness (9.1-2)
  I. Exhortation to godly living (i.e., righteousness) (10.1-3)
II. The matter of Valens (11.1-4)
  A. Comments about Valens (11.1-2)
  B. Commendation of the community (11.3)
  C. Concern for Valens (11.4a)
  D. Instructions to the community (11.4b)

2.4. Central Concerns. The central interpretive question is the relationship (or lack thereof) between the two main issues and the pervasive exhortation. The shortcomings of purely theological readings (which stressed the antiheretical aspects at the expense of other elements) have been indicated by sociological* analyses (Maier), which give due weight to the exhortation but are unable adequately to account for the historical particularities of the situation. Recent investigations stressing the thematic unity of the letter have differed regarding its precise delineation (Meinhold, Schoedel 1967, Steinmetz).

Analyses of the historical context (e.g., the antiheretical elements likely reflect the situation in Smyrna, not Philippi, and Marcion is nowhere in view) and of the epistolary, rhetorical and sociological aspects of the letter converge to suggest that Polycarp's key goal was to maintain and protect the integrity of the community in terms of both its beliefs and behaviors. It was Polycarp's conviction that wrong behaviors were prima facie evidence of wrong beliefs, and wrong beliefs axiomatically produced wrong behaviors. Further, wrong beliefs and/or behaviors are characteristic of outsiders, not insiders; consequently Valens's behavior represents a major threat to the stability and self-understanding of the Philippian community.

This understanding makes sense of the way Polycarp stresses so strongly the behavioral aspects of what is usually viewed as a purely "theological" concept, righteousness. For him, orthopraxy is the other side of the coin of orthodoxy; if the community is behaving properly, it is also likely believing properly. Here may be the explanation of the vigor with which he reinforces the community's sense of norms and standards throughout the letter.

2.5. Written Sources. The letter reveals a deep indebtedness to the Scriptures (in the form of the Septuagint; see Old Testament in Apostolic Fathers) and early Christian writings. It is "fairly certain" that the letter "reflects more or less direct contact" with the following writings: Psalms, Proverbs, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Tobit; Matthew, Luke, Acts, Romans, 1—2 Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, 1—2 Timothy, 1 John, 1 Peter and 1 Clement* (Schoedel 1967); Polycarp seems to be particularly familiar with the last two. The way he uses these documents is noteworthy: (1) while apparently none of the NT books are cited as "Scripture" (the reference to Ephesians in Pol. Phil. 12.1 is a possible exception), (2) the manner in which he refers to them clearly shows that he considered them to be authoritative.

3. The Martyrdom of Polycarp.

3.1. Genre and Content. The letter from the church at Smyrna to the church at Philomelium known as the Martyrdom of Polycarp is the oldest written account of a Christian martyrdom* outside the NT. A genuine letter which integrates narrative and paraenetic elements (Buschmann), it became the model for what would become a very popular genre of literature, the martyrdom. Apparently written by eye-witnesses (Mart. Pol. 15.1) not long after the event (Mart. Pol. 18.1), it records, in sometimes gruesome detail, the death of Polycarp at age 86. An introduction (Mart. Pol. 1) precedes a brief account of the martyrs who preceded Polycarp (Mart. Pol. 2-3) and of Quintus who, after volunteering, turned coward and sacrificed to the emperor (Mart. Pol. 4). The bulk of the account describes Polycarp's pursuit and arrest (Mart. Pol. 5—8), trial in the stadium before the proconsul (Mart. Pol. 9—12), death (Mart. Pol. 13—17) and final disposition (Mart. Pol. 18). A conclusion (Mart. Pol. 19—20) and several appendices (Mart. Pol. 21—22) complete the narrative.

3.2. Context. The account illuminates a growing challenge confronting the church around the middle of the second century. Because of its belief in one God,* the church found itself engaged in a struggle with the Roman state which permitted no compromise and from which eventually only one of the two parties would emerge victorious. The Martyrdom sets out quite clearly both the issue at stake—Lord* Christ* vs. Lord Caesar (Mart. Pol. 10.1)—and the state's (as well as the general population's) view of Christians as disloyal atheists (Mart. Pol. 9.2) who threatened the well-being of the Empire (see Roman Empire).

3.3. Central Themes. The narrative is clearly intended to set forth "a martyrdom in accord with the gospel" (Mart. Pol. 1.1) as a corrective of erroneous conceptions. The portrait of the havoc caused by Quintus (who volunteered himself and forced others to go forward, and then turned coward) and the community's response (no praise for volunteers) demonstrate an awareness of the dangers of enthusiasm to the well-being and stability of the community. Further, Martyrdom of Polycarp 17.3 may reflect an attempt to circumscribe an incipient tendency to overvalue the role and significance of martyrs (Saxer).

Polycarp's behavior is presented as exemplary in every respect. The concept of "imitation" (Ger. Nachahmung), which could lead to a focus on the martyr, is subordinated to "following after" (Ger. Nachfolge), which emphasizes more the concept of obedience and faithfulness to God, to whose will Polycarp conforms (Schoedel 1967; Dehandschutter 1982, 1993, 514; Buschmann places greater weight on imitation). This view is reinforced by Polycarp's prayers*; instead of seeking personal glory, Polycarp takes advantage of his circumstances to pray for God's people (Mart. Pol. 7.2—8.1). In short, the narrative displays a balanced response that seeks both to preserve the stability of the group and also to meet the challenge of external threats (Schoedel 1992, 394).

3.4. Integrity. Chapters 21—22 and certain incidental details (e.g., the dove in Mart. Pol. 16.1) may be (and the notes by Gaius, Socrates and Pionius certainly are) later additions to the text. Moreover, there are differences between Eusebius's citations and the text preserved by the manuscript tradition. These circumstances have led to suggestions that the main narrative itself has been interpolated; in particular, that the story has been expanded in light of the Gospels by a later interpolator in order to make more obvious the parallels between the sufferings of Jesus and Polycarp (Campenhausen, Conzelmann). But the value of the differences between the manuscripts and Eusebius is questionable, especially as Eusebius himself may be responsible for some of them. Moreover, the imitatio Christi motif is no indicator of lateness, since it occurs as early as Paul's writings. Consequently in recent studies Campenhausen's thesis has been modified (Schoedel 1967) or rejected (Barnard 1970, Saxer, Dehandschutter 1993). Ronchey's thesis that it is a mid-third-century forgery is even less compelling.

3.5. The Date of Polycarp's Martyrdom. The information in Martyrdom of Polycarp 21 mentions the month and day (February 22, or perhaps 23), but not the year of Polycarp's death. According to Eusebius he died in 167, but the reliability of his information is questionable. Evidence regarding the proconsulship of Statius Quadratus suggests a date around 156; this squares well with the report that not long before his arrest Polycarp visited Bishop Anicetus of Rome, who became bishop there not earlier than 154 (Barnard 1970) Dehandschutter 1993). In view of the various difficulties, including a possible leap year, greater precision than c. 155 to 160 may be unwarranted (Schoedel 1967, 1993). If the information provided by Martyrdom of Polycarp 21 is discounted as a later addition (note the last sentence of Mart. Pol. 20), the Eusebian date becomes possible (Frend, Brind'Amour). A date as late as 177 (Grégoire and Orgels) is unlikely.

See also APOSTOLIC FATHERS; IGNATIUS; MARTYRDOM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. Text and Translation: J. B. Lightfoot and J. R. Harmer, The Apostolic Fathers: Greek Texts and English Translations of Their Writings, ed. and rev. Michael W. Holmes (2d ed.; Grand Rapids: Baker, 1992). Commentaries and/or Editions: P.-Th. Camelot, Ignace d'Antioche: Lettres. Lettres et Martyre de Polycarpe de Smyrne (4th ed.; SC 10; Paris: Cerf, 1969); J. B. Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, Part II: S. Ignatius. S. Polycarp (2d ed.; 3 vols.; London: Macmillan, 1889); H. Paulsen, Die Briefe des Ignatius von Antiochia und der Brief des Polykarp von Smyrna (Zweite, neubearbeitete Auflage der Auslegung von Walter Bauer; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1985); W. R. Schoedel, Polycarp, Martyrdom of Polycarp, Fragments of Papias (AF 5; Camden, NJ: Nelson, 1967). Studies: L. W. Barnard, "The Problem of St. Polycarp's Epistle to the Philippians" in Studies in the Apostolic Fathers and their Background (New York: Schocken, 1966) 31-39; idem, "In Defence of Pseudo-Pionius' Account of Saint Polycarp's Martyrdom" in Kyriakon: Festschrift Johannes Quasten, ed. P. Granfield and J. A. Jungmann (2 vols.; Münster: Aschendorff, 1970) 1.192-204; G. A. Bisbee, Pre-Decian Acts of Martyrs and Commentarii (HDR 22; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); A. Bovon-Thurneysen, "Ethik und Eschatologie im Philipperbrief des Polycarp von Smyrna," TZ 29 (1973) 241-56; P. Brind'Amour, "La date du martyre de saint Polycarpe (le 23 février 167)," AnBoll 98 (1980) 456-62; G. Buschmann, Martyrium Polycarpi—Eine formkritische Studie: Ein Beitrag zur Frage nach der Entstehung der Gattung Märtyrerakte (BZNW 70; Berlin/New York: de Gruyter, 1994); H. von Campenhausen, "Polykarp von Smyrna und die Pastoralbriefe" in Aus der Frühzeit des Christentums (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1963) 197-252; idem, "Bearbeitungen und Interpolationen des Polykarpmartyriums" in Aus der Frühzeit des Christentums (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1963) 253-301; H. Conzelmann, "Bermerkungen zum Martyrium Polykarps" Nachrichten der Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen: Philologisch-historische Klasse 1978.2 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1978) 41-58; B. Dehandschutter, "The Martyrium Polycarpi: a Century of Research," ANRW 2.27.1 (1993) 485-522; idem, "Le Martyre de Polycarpe et le développement de la conception du martyre au deuxième siècle" in Studia Patristica XVII, ed. E. A. Livingstone (3 vols.; Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1982) 2.659-68; idem, "Polycarp's Epistle to the Philippians: An Early Example of 'Reception' " in The New Testament in Early Christianity, ed. J.-M. Sevrin (BETL 86; Leuven: Leuven University Press and Peeters, 1989) 275-91; W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church: A Study of a Conflict from the Maccabees to Donatus (Oxford: Blackwell, 1965); H. Grégoire and P. Orgels, "La véritable date du martyre de S. Polycarpe (23. 2. 177) et le 'Corpus Polycarpianum'," AnBoll 69 (1951) 1-38; P. N. Harrison, Polycarp's Two Epistles to the Philippians (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1936); R. Joly, Le dossier d'Ignace d'Antioche (Brussels: Éditions de l'université de Bruxelles, 1979); H. O. Maier, "Purity and Danger in Polycarp's Epistle to the Philippians: The Sin of Valens in Social Perspective," JECS 1 (1993) 229-47; E. Massaux, The Influence of the Gospel of Saint Matthew on Christian Literature before Saint Irenaeus, Book 2: The Later Christian Writings, ed. A. J. Bellinzoni (NGS 5/2; Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1990); P. Meinhold, "Polykarpos," RE 21.2.1662-93; S. Ronchey, Indagine sul Martirio di San Policarpo: Critica Storica e fortuna agiografica di un caso giudiziario in Asia Minore (Rome: Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo, 1990); V. Saxer, "L'authenticité du Martyre de Polycarpe. Bilan de 25 ans de critique" in Mélanges de l'Ecole française de Rome. Antiquité 94 (1982) 979-1001; W. R. Schoedel, "Polycarp, Epistle of," ABD (1992) 5:390-92; idem, "Polycarp, Martyrdom of," ABD (1992) 5:392-95; idem, "Polycarp of Smyrna and Ignatius of Antioch," ANRW 2.27.1 (1993) 272-358; idem, "Polycarp's Witness to Ignatius of Antioch," VC 41 (1987) 1-10; P. Steinmetz, "Polykarp von Smyrna über die Gerechtigkeit," Hermes 100 (1972) 63-75. M. W. Holmes

POSTMODERNISM. See HERMENEUTICS.

POSTSTRUCTURALISM. See HERMENEUTICS.

POVERTY. See RICHES AND POVERTY.

POWER

The concept of power in early Christianity is intimately linked to a knowledge* of the one true God.* He is represented as powerfully at work in history creating a people for himself, redeeming them through the work of the Lord* Jesus Christ* on the cross, defeating death* by raising Jesus from the grave, and empowering them to lead holy lives and fulfill the mission he has given them.

1. Terminology and Expressions of Power
2. The Almighty God
3. The Power of the Lord Jesus Christ
4. Power to Live a Godly Life
5. Power to Proclaim the Gospel
6. Power to Do Signs and Wonders
7. Power over Demons
8. Power in Suffering

1. Terminology and Expressions of Power. The most common term for power in this literature is dynamis, although some authors (e.g., Hermas) use ischys and its cognates just as frequently. Both terms refer to the inherent or derived ability to perform an action. A third term, kratos, was used in the same sense, but occurs most commonly in doxologies. The right to exercise power is expressed by the word exousia, "authority." The verbs dynamoō and endynamoō were regularly used to convey the notion of divine empowerment of individuals. Hermas, however, prefers ischyropoieō, "to make powerful"—a term that never occurs in the NT. The common verb dynamai appears most frequently as a simple modal ("I can"), but in certain contexts the notion of ability or power may be emphasized.

The concept of power is expressed through numerous other terms and ideas. Whenever God* acts, the concept of power is present because of God's limitless ability to accomplish whatever he intends. Similarly the Holy Spirit* represents God's empowering presence in the lives of his people. Words such as grace* and glory* are further expressions of the power of God.

The early Christian view of supernatural power is deeply rooted in the OT concept of relationship to the one true almighty God, who redeems a people for himself, fights for them and superintends the course of history. This stands in contrast to some of the prevailing notions of power in the Greco-Roman world. A. D. Nock described popular belief in the Roman Empire as "directed to divine power rather than to divine personalities" (Nock, 35). Certainly we find this to be true of Simon Magus— "the Great Power"—who valued access to new supernatural abilities far more than forgiveness* of sin and a relationship to Christ (Acts 8:19). The Epistle of Barnabas 20.1 warns that among the many vices on the evil path is the exaltation of power.

The concept of power in our literature is also distinct from the popular notion of supernatural power as an impersonal substance. The power of God is not stored in names, amulets, precious stones or metals, or certain combinations of vowels. Neither is the power of God mediated through incantations or formulas. The background for the early Christian conception of divine power is a knowledge of the personal God and a submission to his will. God's self-revelation to his people is decisive: "I am the Lord . . . I will redeem you with an outstretched arm and with mighty acts of judgment. I will take you as my own people, and I will be your God" (Ex 6:6-7).

2. The Almighty God.

The one God* is unequalled in power and sovereignty. He is therefore acclaimed pantokratōr, "all powerful." The epithet appears nine times in the Apocalypse (e.g., Rev 4:8; 11:17; 15:3), seven times in 1 Clement (e.g., 1 Clem. 2.3; 8.5; 32.4) and elsewhere in the apostolic fathers* (Herm. Vis. 3.3.5; Pol. Phil. prologue; Did. 10.3). He is "marvelous in strength and majesty" (1 Clem. 60.1).

Numerous doxologies acknowledge and proclaim his power throughout our literature. 1 Peter 4:11 exclaims, "to him be the glory and the power [kratos] for ever and ever" (see also 1 Pet 5:11; Rev 4:11; 5:13; 7:12; 19:1; 1 Clem. 64.1; 65.2; Mart. Pol. 20.2; Did. 9.4; 10.5).

This one God is worthy of praise because he is the Creator and the one who sits on the heavenly throne (Rev 4:11; cf. also 1 Clem. 33.3;). The heavenly temple* is filled with his glory and his power (dynamis) (Rev 15:8). As Creator of all the angelic* forces he is "Lord of Hosts," or "Lord of the Powers" (kyrios tōn dynameōn, Herm. Vis. 1.3.4)—a title deeply rooted in the OT (e.g., 2 Sam 6:2; Ps 89:8 [LXX 88:9]). He has power over the sun, moon, stars and all of creation.* Angels serve him and worship* him. He is the one who manifests his power in providing salvation* (Rev 7:12), conquering and judging evil, and completely realizing all of his plans for a reign of peace* (Rev 11:17; 12:10; 19:1).

The Lord God has no rival. The doxology at the end of Jude* ascribes glory, majesty, power (kratos) and authority* (exousia) to the only God (Jude 25). Yet God has his enemies. There are supernaturally powerful forces that oppose God and his purposes (see Satan). Any description of the power of God needs to be understood against the power of this opposing sphere. John understood the entire world as under the grip of the power of the evil one (1 Jn 5:19). It is against these forces of darkness that God fights, rescuing a people for himself (Acts 26:18) and working to bring about the demise of their evil purposes, most notably the power of death (Heb 2:14). Satan's* power is limited. There is nothing in our literature that even hints of a thoroughgoing cosmic dualism. According to the Apocalypse, one of God's angels can even bring about the fall of the devil in heavenly warfare (Rev 12:7-9). Satan "was not strong enough (ouk ischysen)" to withstand Michael and his angels (Rev 12:8).

3. The Power of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Lord Jesus Christ, the Son* of God, shares in the awesome power of the Father. The prologue to Hebrews* describes the Son as "the radiance of the glory of God" as well as the agent and sustainer of creation (Heb 1:1-3).

In his account of Peter's Pentecost* message, Luke portrays Jesus as performing works of power (dynameis), signs* and wonders in his earthly ministry (Acts 2:22). Luke later observes that "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit and power [dynamis]" which made it possible for Jesus to heal* those under the oppression of the devil (Acts 10:38).

The writer to the Hebrews makes it clear that one of the primary purposes of Jesus' incarnation and death* was to nullify the power of the devil and thereby free those held in bondage by this evil tyrant (Heb 2:14). The writer claims that the devil had "the power [kratos] of death." W. L. Lane rightly comments, "the devil did not possess control over death inherently but gained his power when he seduced humankind to rebel against God" (Lane, 61). The death of Jesus effectively dealt with this problem because "he made atonement for the sins of the people" (Heb 2:17). Death itself was not able to keep its hold on Christ, because the one God manifested his almighty power in raising Jesus from the grave (Acts 2:24; see Resurrection). The Apocalypse can therefore portray death as ultimately having no authority over the people of God (Rev 20:6). Those who have "washed their robes" by appropriating the blood of Christ for the forgiveness* of sins have the right (exousia) to the tree of life (Rev 22:14).

The people of God properly respond to the Messiah by giving him doxological praise alongside the Father: "to him who loves us and has freed us from our sins by his blood, and has made us to be a kingdom and priests to serve his God and Father—to him be glory and power for ever and ever!" (Rev 1:6; cf. also Rev 5:12, 13; 12:10). Thus in a development that demarcated early Christianity from the synagogue,* believers worship* Christ and ascribe to him the glory once reserved only for the Father (see Hurtado; see Christology).

4. Power To Live a Godly Life.

The coming of Christ inaugurated the beginning of a new era. According to the writer of Hebrews, people can now experience the power of the age to come (Heb 6:5). God imparts divine power to his people so they can overcome the evil one, proclaim the message of the gospel, and faithfully endure until the end.

Peter reminds his readers of the unchanging purpose of God that his people become holy and pure (1 Pet 1:15-16). God empowers believers to this end: "His divine power [theia dynamis] has given us everything we need for life and godliness" (2 Pet 1:3). Believers are therefore called to "escape the corruption in the world caused by evil desires" (2 Pet 1:4) and to acquire the ethical virtues* consistent with their calling as Christians. In his eloquent doxology, Jude* assures his readers that God exercises his power on behalf of believers to keep them from falling (Jude 24-25). John has seen Christians appropriate this power in his community and find victory over the evil one in his attempts to inspire sin* and apostasy* (1 Jn 2:14).

It is essential that the people of God exercise faith* in their Lord to obtain the strength they need for life and service. Peter stresses the role of faith* in experiencing God's protecting and keeping power (1 Pet 1:5). The writer to the Hebrews strongly emphasizes the importance of faith in God for accomplishing what he calls his people to do. Those who look to God in faith are strengthened in their weakness (edynamōthēsan apo astheneias, Heb 11:34).

The Mandates of the Shepherd of Hermas have much to say about drawing on God's strengthening power for getting rid of sinful tendencies and acquiring virtue. In Mandates 5.2, for example, Hermas stresses the need to deal with an angry temper. He sees it as a dangerous vice that opens the believer up to the influence of evil spirits. Hermas suggests that those who are filled with faith can overcome it "because the power of the Lord is with them [hē dynamis tou theou met' autōn estin]" (Herm. Man. 5.2.1). For Hermas, since faith is powerful (ischyra), believers should "trust God that you will receive all the requests you make" (Herm. Man. 9.7; cf. also Herm. Man. 9.10; 11.4). One needs to guard against doubt (dipsychia) because it is from the devil (Herm. Man. 9.9). In drawing on the power of God, Hermas also emphasizes the need to repent* from sin (Herm. Vis. 3.5.5.), fear* the Lord (Herm. Man. 7.4: "the fear of the Lord is powerful"), and trust in the Holy Spirit* (Herm. Man. 11.21: "the divine Spirit that comes from above is powerful").

Of utmost importance for Ignatius was the maintenance of doctrinal purity among the churches. He asserts that the power (dynamis) of Jesus is what has enabled believers at Ephesus to remain in agreement with the apostles (Ign. Eph. 11.2). He also calls believers to persevere to the end "by the power of faith [en dynamei pisteōs]" in pursuing love and eliminating sinful practices (Ign. Eph. 14.2). One of the keys for receiving the power of God, according to Ignatius, is united prayer (Ign. Eph. 5.2).

5. Power to Proclaim the Gospel.

Luke records that before Jesus ascended* to heaven, he promised his disciples that they would receive power (dynamis) when the Holy Spirit* came upon them, and they would become his witnesses throughout the world (Acts 1:8). The book of Acts* thus becomes the story of the powerful spread of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ throughout the Mediterranean region. The apostles testified to the resurrection* of the Lord Jesus "with great power [dynamei megalē]" (Acts 4:33) and "the word of the Lord grew mightily and prevailed" (Acts 19:20). Luke depicts, for example, how Apollos powerfully (eutonōs) refuted unbelieving Jews by showing that Jesus is the Messiah (Acts 18:28). Immediately after his conversion, "Saul grew more and more powerful [enedynamouto] and baffled unbelieving Jews in Damascus by proving that Jesus is the Messiah" (Acts 9:22). James declares the life changing impact of this gospel when he urges his readers to "receive the implanted word which has the power [ton dynamenon] to save your souls" (Jas 1:21). W. Grundmann thus aptly comments, "the Gospel is saving power" (Grundmann, TDNT 2.310).

6. Power to Do Signs and Wonders.
God bestowed his power on the apostles and other leaders in the early Christian movement to perform various kinds of miraculous deeds (see Signs and Wonders; Miracles). Luke presents Stephen as full of grace and power (plērēs charitos kai dynameōs) to do signs and wonders (Acts 6:8). Philip,* likewise, did many astonishing works of power (dynameis, Acts 8:13) as also did Paul in Ephesus and throughout his ministry (see esp. Acts 19:11). The writer to the Hebrews teaches his readers that these signs and wonders were God's means of vouching for the message of salvation* that these servants were proclaiming (Heb 2:4).

7. Power Over Demons.
The exorcisms recounted by Luke in Acts graphically demonstrate the power and authority bestowed on the church by Christ to defeat the powers of darkness in carrying out the mission* (Acts 16:16-18; 19:11). John commends the young men in his community for their strength and for overcoming the evil one (1 Jn 2:14). Ignatius exclaims that the powers of Satan* are overthrown by faith (Ign. Eph. 13.1). Likewise, Hermas tries to reassure his readers that Christians have power to conquer the works of the devil (Herm. Man. 12.6.2, 4). He says that, "those who are full in the faith resist him mightily [ischyrōs], and he leaves them alone, because he finds no place [topos] where he can gain entrance" (Herm. Man. 12.5.4; cf. Eph 4:27).

8. Power in Suffering.
The empowering presence of God does not guarantee a life devoid of suffering* and struggle but enables believers to endure to the end. This is particularly clear in 1 Peter—a letter written to people facing localized outbreaks of persecution and suffering in Asia Minor. Peter assures his readers of God's protective power in spite of the inevitable suffering and trials they would face (1 Pet 1:5-6). God's power would help them in their quest toward holiness.* He promises that "the God of all grace . . . after you have suffered a little while, will himself restore you and make you strong [sthenōsei], firm, and steadfast" (1 Pet 5:10).

Journeying toward his martyrdom,* Ignatius urges the Roman Christians to pray that God would strengthen him to be faithful as a true Christian (Ign. Rom. 3.2). When he writes to the church of Smyrna, he is exultant over Christ's strengthening power: "Only let it be in the name of Jesus Christ, that I may suffer together with him! I endure everything because he himself, who is perfect man, empowers me [me endynamountos]" (Ign. Smyrn. 4.2).

See also AUTHORITY; GLORY; GOD; HOLY SPIRIT; MAGIC AND ASTROLOGY; MIRACLES IN ACTS; RESURRECTION; SIGNS AND WONDERS; SPIRITS; SUFFERING.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. E. Arnold, "Power, New Testament Concept Of," ABD 5.444-46; O. Betz, "Might, Authority, Throne," NIDNTT 2:601-16; G. Friedrich, "δύναμαι," "δύναμις," EDNT 1:355-58; W. Grundmann, Der Begriff der Kraft in der Neutestamentilichen Gedankenwelt (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1932); idem, "δύναμαι κτλ," TDNT 2.284-317; L. Hurtado, One God, One Lord (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); W. L. Lane, Hebrews (WBC 47; 2 vols.; Dallas: Word, 1991); A. D. Nock, "Studies in the Graeco-Roman Beliefs of the Empire" in Arthur Darby Nock: Essays on Religion and the Ancient World, ed. Z. Stewart (Oxford: Clarendon, 1972) 32-48 (= JHS 48 [1928] 84-101); C. H. Powell, The Biblical Concept of Power (London: Epworth, 1963).

C. E. Arnold

PRAYER

Prayer played a central role in the activities of the early church.* From the records in Acts* of the earliest Christian community in Jerusalem* (Acts 1:14, 24; 2;42; 3:1; 4:31) to the records of the apostolic fathers* in the Mediterranean world at the beginning of the second century (e.g., Ign. Eph. 1.2; Ign. Magn. 7.1; Ign. Smyrn. 7.1), prayer was a central activity and unifying feature of the Christian community.

1. Categories of Prayer
2. Types of Praying

1. Categories of Prayer.
The richness of prayer in the life of the early church is indicated by the diversity of expressions used to record practice, form and teaching of it. Various categories have been proposed to isolate aspects of prayer. While it is commonly understood primarily as some form of request, prayer overlaps in NT usage with other Christian activities. We isolate here four broad, overlapping categories: petition, worship, thanksgiving and conversation.

1.1. Prayers of Petition. We find in early Christian usage a variety of terms for making petition to God.* The most general term for prayer is proseuchomai, which in ancient Greek was a technical term for invoking a deity. In the early church proseuchomai (Acts 1:24; proseuchē, Acts 2:42; euchomai, Jas 5:16; euchē, Jas 5:15) covers every aspect of invocation, including request, entreaty, vow or consecration.

Another term, aiteō (1 Jn 5:14; aitēma, 1 Jn 5:15), meaning "ask, petition, demand," has both a secular use, as when the Jewish crowds asked or demanded to have Barabbas released instead of Jesus (Acts 3:14), and a religious use, as when obedient believers can receive from God whatever they ask (1 Jn 3:22).

Deomai (Acts 4:31; dēesis, 1 Pet 3:12), "ask, seek," denotes the powerful prayer of the righteous person (Jas 5:16). Hiketēria, found only once in the NT, means "supplication" (Heb 5:7). Entygchanō (Heb 7:25; hyperentygchanō, Rom 8:26; enteuxis, 1 Tim 2:1; 5:5), used infrequently in the NT (only in Heb 7:25; Rom. 8:26 1 Tim 2:1; 5:5; see 1 Clem. 56.1), carries a meaning of "intercession" (Heb 7:25).

Epikaleō occurs frequently in contexts of calling on God or his name in prayer, as in Peter's famous declaration, "And it shall be that everyone who calls (epikaleō) on the name of the Lord shall be saved" (Acts 2:21).

Petitions made to God are of two broad types: petitions for the one asking and petitions for others (Hultgren, 27-33).

1.1.1. Petitions for the Petitioner. Men and women of faith* regularly petition God for themselves. One can petition the Lord* for salvation* from sin (Acts 2:21; 22:16; epikaleō), as Ananias told Saul in Damascus: "Get up, be baptized and wash your sins away, calling on his name" (Acts 22:16; epikaleō). The person who is suffering is to pray (Jas 5:13; proseuchomai). If one lacks wisdom or is in want, that person is to ask God (aiteō; Jas 1:5-6; 4:2; 1 Jn 3:22; see also Herm. Man. 9.7.8). A person who has committed wickedness is to pray in repentance* for his or her forgiveness* (Acts 8:22; deomai). Jesus offered up prayers (deomai) and supplications (hiketērias) with loud cries and tears to the one who was able to save him from death (Heb 5:17).

1.1.2. Petitions for Others. Even more frequently men and women pray for others. This is often rendered as "intercession," as when the writer to the Hebrews* declares that Jesus "always lives to make intercession for them" (Heb 7:25; entynchanō). A person who has performed wickedness can ask for another to pray for his or her forgiveness (Acts 8:24; deomai), and the church must intercede (entnchōmen) for those who have fallen into transgression (1 Clem. 56.1).

Fellow believers can offer significant help for each other. As they confess their sins to one another they are to pray for one another (Jas 5:16; euchomai). The elders are to pray for the healing of those who are sick (Jas 5:14; proseuchomai), even as Peter effectively prayed for Tabitha's healing and Paul prayed for Publius's father (Acts 9:40; 28:8; proseuchomai). The apostles* and the early church prayed (proseuchomai) for workers (Acts 6:6), converts (Acts 8:15) and missionaries who were being sent off (Acts 13:3; see also Ign. Eph. 21.2; Ign. Magn. 14.1; entynchanō, 1 Clem. 56.1; Pol. Phil. 4.3; 1 Clem. 59.2 combines aiteō, dēesis, hikesia). The author of Hebrews can ask for prayer from his readers (Heb 13:18), while he or she can offer a wish-prayer for the readers, expressing a desire that God take action on their behalf (Heb 13:20-21). The prayer of a righteous person accomplishes much for others of the assembly (Jas 5:16; deomai), in the same way that Elijah's prayer for rain resulted in earth's bounty (Jas 5:17; proseuchomai).

1.2. Prayers of Worship. Prayer is consistently linked with worship, whether it is the spontaneous outburst of the individual believer or the developed liturgical response of the community of faith. The earliest gathering of the Christian community involved devotion to the apostles' teaching, fellowship,* breaking of bread and prayers (Acts 2:42; proseuchomai). The worship and prayers of the church combined to mark them as filled with the Holy Spirit* and bold to proclaim the word of God (Acts 4:23-31). In the heavenly scene when the elders fell down to worship the Lamb,* the sacrifice* of the golden bowls* of incense were the prayers of the saints (Rev 5:8; proseuchomai).

A number of activities relate prayer to worship, such as reverence (proskyneō, Rev 4:10), glorify (doxazō, Rev 15:14), praise (aineō, Heb 13:15) and singing hymns* (Acts 16:25, hymneō; cf. exomologeō, 1 Clem. 61.3; Barn. 6.16; proseuchomai, Ign. Magn. 7.1). The Jewish berakah ("benediction") style of prayer occurs rarely in the NT—only three times in our material (1 Pet 1:3; Ign. Eph. 1.3; Barn. 6.10). The structure of the berakah suggests a liturgical setting, since the "blessing" formula is followed not by petitions but by praise (Bradshaw, 30-31). Another liturgical type of prayer inherited from Judaism* was anamnēsis, a "recollection" of God's mighty works, which proceeded directly from recollection to petition or intercession without any introductory formula (see Acts 4:24-30; Bradshaw, 33-34).

1.3. Prayers of Thanksgiving. Closely related to the praise of God in worship is thanksgiving (eucharisteō), but thanksgiving especially entails remembering God's answers to prayers as well as remembering what God has done for the individual believer and the believing community (Acts 28:15; Rev 11:17; 2 Clem. 18.1; Herm. Sim. 2.5; 9.14.3). So important is thanksgiving that P. Miller subsumes all prayer under two categories, prayers for help and prayers of thanksgiving, whether in the OT generally, in the Eighteen Benedictions of Judaism or in the prayers of the NT (Miller, 305). Like Hellenistic Judaism, Christians frequently used the hodayah ("thanksgiving") pattern of prayer, which characteristically began with the phrase "I/we thank you," using variations of eucharisteō (Rev 11:17-18) and homologeō (Heb 13:15; Bradshaw, 31-33).

Giving thanks to God at the breaking of bread is a recollection that God is Creator and Provider. Even as Jesus blessed God (Lk 9:16; 24:30; eulogeō; not a bestowal of blessing on the bread, Turner, 60 n. 7) and gave thanks (Lk 22:[17], 19; eucharisteō) to God in typically Jewish fashion, so the early church gave thanks at the breaking of bread (even at crisis times) as a testimonial of God's protection and provision (see Acts 27:35). Thanksgiving took such a prominent place in the celebration of the Lord's Supper* that the verb eucharisteō ("give thanks") provided the name Eucharist for the church's thankful acknowledgment of the redemptive work of Christ (cf. Did. 9—10). Prayer that is offered without a corresponding thankfulness is ingratitude.

1.4. Prayers of Conversation. Prayer of a general sort can be seen as a dignified conversation and personal communion with God. Indeed, Oscar Cullmann declares that "the essence of all prayer is that it is a conversation with God as the partner" (Cullmann, 17). While formal prayer in the OT is often tied to a particular occasion, in the later OT (e.g., Dan 6:10-12), in Judaism at the time of the NT and in the further development in NT teaching and practice, we find prayer as "a spiritual discipline, that is, as an ongoing and regular part of the relationship with God" (Miller, 312).

The intimacy that the disciples enjoyed with Jesus during his earthly ministry* could now be maintained through prayer. They devoted themselves to prayer not only to petition his help, not only to worship, but also to maintain the personal nature of their unique master-disciple relationship (Wilkins, 276-78). One can enter into living, personal contact with Jesus, talking with him just as one did when he was on earth (cf. Acts 9:10-16; 2 Cor 12:8-9). Even at a specified time of prayer Peter did not recite a standardized prayer; he held a conversation with his risen Lord (Acts 10:9-16). The early church experienced the presence of the risen Lord to the degree that Stephen,* in his dying moments, speaks to the Lord Jesus (Acts 7:59; Polycarp also in Mart. Pol. 15.1). The intimacy of prayer is revealed as believers confess Jesus' name and their sins to God (Heb 13:15; 1 Jn 1:9; 2:23; homologeō). Those who suffer injustice can cry out to the listening Lord (Jas 5:4; krazō and boē), even as those martyred can cry out to the Lord to avenge them (Rev 6:10; krazō). Jesus used "knocking" as a metaphor of the prayers of his followers (Mt 7:7-8; Lk 13:25), and in John's vision* the risen Lord Jesus "knocks" so that the church would hear and open themselves to the intimacy of his fellowship (Rev 3:20; krouō).

2. Types of Praying.

2.1. Acts: Prayer in a New Age. The prayer life of the early church as recorded in Acts was influenced by two primary features: its roots in Judaism and its relationship to Jesus.

2.1.1. Influence from Judaism. The early church was thoroughly Jewish, which meant that its prayer life was governed by the common practices of Jewish prayer, informal and formal, private and public, individual and corporate.

While continuing the ancient practice of personal, spontaneous prayers (note that Cornelius* as a God-fearer both kept traditional times of prayer as well as prayed "continuously," Acts 10:2-4), Jews of the late Second Temple period gathered for increasingly fixed, communal prayer (Charlesworth, 265-66). In Diaspora Judaism* Jews were characterized by their commitment to times of communal prayer (see Acts 16:13, 16). The synagogue* and temple* were places Jews gathered to pray. We find that the early church was a distinct entity gathered for prayer (Acts 1:13-14; 2:42), while at the same time they carried out the traditional times of prayer individually (Acts 10:9) and at least at the beginning attended the temple at the prescribed hour of prayer (Acts 3:1; cf. Acts 2:42, 46, "the prayers"). The apostle Paul regularly went to the synagogue upon arriving at a new location on his missionary journeys (Acts 13:5, 14; 14:1; 16:13; 17:1-2, 10, 17; 18:4, 19: 19:8).

2.1.2. Influence from Jesus. The prayer life of the early church was also influenced by its relationship to Jesus. In the first place Jesus' personal practice of prayer set an example for the early church. Jesus derided public, ostentatious prayers and called his followers to personal prayer with the Father (Mt 6:5-8), thereby enhancing private prayer and leading to silent prayer as a discipline (cf. van der Horst, 16-18). Jesus prayed at special times of crisis and need, but prayer was also the "daily inspiration of His life" (Martin 1974, 28-29).

Second, Jesus' practice of prayer reflected his relationship to Judaism. All four Evangelists concur that Jesus frequently attended synagogue services on the sabbath, and his cleansing of the temple was based upon his desire that it should be a "house of prayer" (Mk 11:17). These activities established continuity with Judaism but also set the stage for the breach between the church and Judaism (see Christianity and Judaism). "The originality of Christian worship is not that it rejects Jewish worship but that it reforms and develops that worship, in accordance with Jesus' teaching and in recognition of his saving work" (Beckwith, 65).

Third, therefore, "the prayers the church offers are now Christocentric" (Turner, 73-74). What Israel had identified as divine prerogatives the church now attributes to Jesus: he is the one Lord on whose name (in Joel's terms) people are now to call for salvation (Joel 2:17-39); he speaks to Saul in conviction (Acts 9:4-6) and Peter in direction (Acts 10:13-16); prayer is offered to him by Stephen (Acts 7:59) and Ananias (Acts 9:10-16). Soon after the ascension* of Jesus, the nascent church gathered to pray (Acts 1:14). They prayed for the Lord to show them which of the two who qualified—Joseph Barsabbas and Matthias—should take Judas's place (Acts 1:15-26). This scene marks a central aspect of the new form of discipleship: although their Lord is no longer with them personally, they can still ask him and the Father for help in times of need through prayer.

Fourth, the age of fulfillment that was announced by John the Baptist and Jesus (Mt 3:2; 4:17) was now experienced in the outpouring of the Spirit (Acts 2:14-41). The earliest gathering of the Christian community involved devotion to the apostles' teaching, fellowship, breaking of bread and the prayers (Acts 2:42). The primitive church, already both within and outside Israel, now offered prayers in "Easter joy" (Alsup, 34) and in the power of the Holy Spirit.

2.2. Hebrews: Jesus the High-Priestly Intercessor. The substantive contribution of Hebrews to the NT view of prayer is the portrayal of Jesus, the Son of God, as high priest (Cullmann, 115). Jesus is the champion of his people both through what he accomplished in his earthly ministry and in what he is doing now (Lane, cxl-cxliii). He wrestled with spiritual forces in his earthly life, overcoming all temptation* to sin. Therefore he can sympathize with our weaknesses, and we can with confidence (parrēsia) draw near to the throne of grace (Heb 4:14-16). His prayers and supplications in the most difficult of his circumstances acknowledge the intimate, Father-Son relationship that led him to obey the Father's will for his life, even though it meant suffering* (Heb 5:7).

Jesus offered the perfect sacrifice in his death and now sits enthroned in the heavenly sanctuary. He applies the benefits of his finished work to those who draw near to God through him (Heb 10:11-23; Peterson, 104), giving NT believers confidence, which is the basis of the certainty that prayer will be heard (see 1 Jn 5:14-15). His high-priestly ministry of intercession (Heb 7:25) includes eschatological* salvation (Heb 1:14; 5:9; 9:28) but also reflects the current experience of the community. Because of his sustained interest in the welfare of his people, his support is available to those who turn to him at each critical moment (Lane, 189-90).

2.3. James: Prayer of Faith. If we understand "testing of faith" (Jas 1:2-3) to be a central concern for James* (Davids, 57), then we should expect to find this theme in his discussion of prayer. This is the case in the three primary passages on prayer (Jas 1:5-8; 4:1-4; 5:13-18), all of which are critical of the community's practice.

2.3.1. Faith Without Doubt (Jas 1:5-8). James offers a general principle when he reminds his readers that God gives good gifts, namely, "wisdom," to those who ask him (Jas 1:5, 17). But prayer must be of the right sort: one must ask in faith, without doubting (Jas 1:6). This seems to reflect Jesus' teaching on prayer (cf. Mt 7:7-12; 21:21-22) and understands faith as a wholehearted commitment of oneself to God. The person who doubts wavers in commitment to God; he or she is a "double-minded" person (Jas 1:8), doubting God's ability or willingness to give the wisdom* that God has said he would give to those who ask. The right sort of prayer turns the person away from other, competing allegiances, especially one's own human resources and devices, and places full confidence in God to bring about deliverance from life's trials (Martin 1988, 21).

2.3.2. Faith Without Wrong Motives (Jas 4:1-3). In a community torn by wars and fightings caused by internal "passions," James gives another general principle on prayer: "you do not have because you do not ask" (Jas 4:2). But further, his readers ask with wrong motives: "to spend it on your passions" (hēdonai, the same term as in Jas 4:1). Instead of asking God for solutions that will advance one's own desires, the right sort of prayer seeks God's solutions—God's kingdom* and righteousness*—within the community, even if his solution goes contrary to our own desires. "God is no magic charm which must help if the proper words are uttered" (Davids, 159). God's solution to the problem is within reach if one will only ask and receive.

2.3.3. Faith Without Sin (Jas 5:13-18). In a major passage on prayer, a final general principle of prayer echoes the first: as one must "ask in faith" (Jas 1:6), so one must offer a "prayer of faith" (Jas 5:15). One must pray with single-minded devotion to God, a genuine trust in God and his promises.* All of the circumstances of life offer opportunities for different kinds of prayer. If one suffers, direct communion with God in prayer brings an empathetic companion in God (Jas 5:13). If one is cheerful, one can offer a prayer of praise to God (Jas 5:13). If one is weak, especially with illness, calling for the intercession of church leaders brings healing* and forgiveness of sins (Jas 5:14-15). Although anointing* with oil can indicate medicinal care, it more likely is a symbolic action, possibly indicating that the sick person has been set aside for special attention, favor or use by God (Moo, 180-81; Martin 1988, 208-9). If one has committed sins, confession to one another and prayer for one another brings spiritual and physical healing within the community of faith (Jas 5:16).

Prayer is a powerful activity of faith (the participle energoumenē is most likely in the middle voice; see Martin 1988, 211-12; Moo, 187) for the person who in purity* of life has confessed sin and is available as a righteous channel through whom God can bring healing (Jas 5:16). The OT prophet* Elijah is used by James as an example ("of like nature with ourselves," RSV) for the church of the intense prayer (proseuchē prosēuxato) of faith that accomplished the impossible (Jas 5:17-18).

But the prayer of faith is not to be equated with magical manipulation of the divine. James has boundless confidence in the promise of answered prayer, but not all prayer is answered in the way the person requests. James has already indicated that some prayer is not answered in the way requested because the person prays with wrong motives (Jas 4:1-3). Jesus also instructed his disciples to pray with unlimited expectation (Mk 11:22-24; cf. Jn 16:23); however, his own prayers and supplications (Heb 5:7) ultimately were not answered according to his own request but rather were subject to the Father's will (Mk 14:36), a theme we see echoed for all believers by John (cf. 1 Jn 5:14-15). "All prayer is bounded by the providence and sovereign favor of God, who knows believers' truest needs and may not grant their natural requests in just the way they would choose" (Martin 1988, 215-16).

2.4. Petrine Epistles: Unhindered Prayer. The importance of prayer in 1 Peter* and 2 Peter* is indicated by the wide range of prayer material. It includes opening and closing wish-prayers (1 Pet 1:2; 5:14; 2 Pet 1:2), brief doxologies (1 Pet 4:11; 5:11; 2 Pet 3:18), the longer praise form related to the Jewish berakah style of liturgical prayer in which praise (1 Pet 1:3-4) merges into exhortation (1 Pet 1:5-12), and specific exhortations to prayer, including invocation of (1 Pet 1:17), entrusting themselves to (1 Pet 4:19) and casting their anxieties upon (1 Pet 5:7) God, who cares for them while they encounter various difficulties (1 Pet 4:17).

Of special interest in 1 Peter are passing references to conditions that can either enhance or hinder prayer (1 Pet 3:7, 12; 4:7). Within a discussion of godly marital relationships (1 Pet 3:1-7) Peter motivates husbands to live considerately with their wives by warning, "so that nothing may hinder your prayers" (1 Pet 3:7). "Your (hymōn) prayers" may point only to the prayers of the husband (Reicke, 103) or to the common prayers of husbands and wives (Michaels, 171), but either way in the background resides the principle that a genuine relationship with God depends on right relationships with other people (cf. Mt 5:23-24; 1 Cor 11:1-34; Jas 4:1-4; Peterson, 114). The hindrance may result from lack of attention on the part of those praying, from lack of cooperation in the prayer effort by the marital partners or from divine judgment* for disobedience. The last may be more likely in view when we see the warning in the light of Peter's quotation from Psalm 34:15-16: God's ears are open to the prayers of the righteous, but his face is against evildoers (1 Pet 3:12). Personal righteousness, especially practiced in all relationships between "coheirs" (1 Pet 3:7), enhances the effectiveness of prayers to God.

A final passing reference to prayer is found in Peter's exhortation to prepare for the end of all things through mental alertness in "attending to prayers" (1 Pet 4:7) within the loving fellowship of the community of faith (1 Pet 4:8-11). Alert, clear-headed prayer keeps the community from being distracted during spiritual warfare and the trials associated with the end of the age (Michaels, 246).

2.5. Johannine Epistles: Confidence in Prayer. Some general forms of prayer appear in 1, 2 and 3 John (see John, Letters of), such as an assurance* of blessing* to the readers (2 Jn 3), a petition for the good health and well-being of body and soul (3 Jn 2) and a wish-prayer in the form of a blessing (3 Jn 14). But the chief contribution lies in the confidence believers have that results from prayer. The prayer of confession brings confidence that one's sins are forgiven and confidence to walk in fellowship with God and his people (1 Jn 1:5-10). This confidence is secured because Jesus Christ the righteous is our advocate or intercessor (paraklētos) with the Father (1 Jn 2:2; cf. entynchanō in Heb 7:25).

One may have confidence before God that we will receive what we ask when we have a clear conscience* and we are obedient to God (1 Jn 3:21-22). Similar to the image in John 15:7, the thought here is of a person whose life is lived in conformity to Christ's. A Christlike person has confidence in prayer because he or she is intent upon carrying out the will of God the Father, a theme that surfaces explicitly in 1 John 5:14-17. The true child of God is confident that God cares enough to hear and that this caring God does not simply hear prayers of his children but also gives to them whatever they ask. The key to this assurance is the will of God. A true child of God seeks to carry out the will of God in prayer for self and for others, even for those who sin (1 Jn 5:16-17). Jesus instructed his disciples to pray that the Father's will be accomplished (Mt 6:10), and he submitted his own destiny to his Father's will (Mt 26:39, 42). Prayer then becomes not a self-gratifying pursuit but a means by which his children become more effective at seeking first the kingdom of God and establishing his will in their own lives and in the lives of those around them.

2.6. Jude: Prayer in the Spirit. Jude offers a wish-prayer for his readers in the salutation (Jude 2), renders a magnificent doxological prayer to God our Savior in the conclusion (Jude 24-25) and exhorts the readers to "pray in the Holy Spirit" (Jude 20). While this last expression may indicate charismatic prayer, glossolalia, in which the words are given by the Spirit (Dunn, 245-46; Bauckham, 113), the connection with the preceding exhortation to "build yourselves up in your most holy faith" suggests that prayer in the power and under the guidance of the Holy Spirit brings the strength necessary to confront the false teachers who do not have the Spirit (Jude 18-19; cf. Eph 6:18; see Miller, 318-21).

2.7. Revelation: Worship in Prayer. The prayers of the Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) are many and varied, but generally they bear marks of worship in its manifold splendor. Apart from the cry of prayer ("Come, Lord Jesus," Rev 22:20), it does not contain petitionary prayer (Cullmann, 116). As John addresses the recipients of the book, he launches into a doxology to Christ that merges with a staccato exclamation concerning the coming of Christ (Rev 1:4-7). A benediction reminiscent of Paul (e.g., Col 4:18; 5:28) concludes the book (Rev 22:21).

As is the case with its other pictures of worship, the book of Revelation sets dramatic scenes of prayerful thanksgiving in worship. From the four living creatures gathered around the throne (Rev 4:9), to the angels* standing around the throne and the Lamb (Rev 7:12), to the twenty-four elders sitting on their thrones before God, thanksgiving is given to Lord God Almighty, "for you have taken your great power and begun to reign" (Rev 11:17).

Three special features in Revelation expand our understanding of NT prayer. The first special feature are hymns of praise and gratitude to Christ, the Lamb who was slain (e.g., Rev 5:9-10, 12, 13; 7:10, 12; 11:15, 17-18; 15:3-4; 19:1-8), which will become a standard feature of later Christian worship in prayer.

The second is the emphasis upon "hearing." The risen Lord "knocks" so that the church might open the door to fellowship with him (see 1.4 above). Genuine prayer is not monologue but dialogue in which the person praying is often silent in order to listen to Jesus' word and command. At the end of the seven letters the churches are admonished, "He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches" (Rev 2—3). As in the OT, prayer is something personal and specific, a genuine conversation with God or Jesus Christ or the Spirit of God (Schönweiss, 867).

The third special feature is the eschatological character of prayer that anticipates the end of the book and the end of the age: "Amen. Come, Lord Jesus!" (Rev 22:20; Cullmann, 117-18). These fervent words, part of the liturgy of the early church (cf. Did. 10.6), are a prayer of invocation. The equivalent of the transliterated Aramaic formula marana tha (1 Cor 16:22), it is the oldest Christian prayer of which we have record, showing how those who had invoked the name of their covenant God as "Lord" in the synagogue worship "now came to apply the same divine title to Jesus the Messiah" (Martin 1974, 32-33; see also Mundle, Brown; see Worship; Liturgical Elements).

2.8. Apostolic Fathers: Developing a Life of Prayer. The wide diversity of prayer terms found in the NT continues in the writings of the apostolic fathers (Maschke, 103-11). We find also three important developments in the apostolic fathers: prayer as discipline, the use of the Lord's Prayer and prayer for civil authorities.*

2.8.1. Prayer as Discipline. While the apostolic fathers emphasize that prayer is to be a continuous activity for all Christians (Ign. Pol. 1.3), as Paul had admonished his readers (1 Thess 5:17), they reflect an increasing movement toward prayer occurring in a pattern of spiritual discipline. The *Didache admonishes the church that fasts are not to be held on Monday and Thursday, as do the hypocrites (i.e., Jews), but rather on Wednesdays and Fridays. Further, they were to pray three times daily (Did. 8.1-3). These prayers were likely intended to be said for the church as a whole, but they set a pattern that later was to include a private, personal discipline of prayer (Volz, 37-40; cf. Hippolytus Apos. Trad. 36.2). Polycarp,* harking back to the account of Jesus in Gethsemane, combines the admonition "giving attention to the prayers" with an admonition to fasting (Pol. Phil. 7.2), likewise reflecting a pattern of spiritual discipline.

2.8.2. The Use of the Lord's Prayer. The Didache, in the same context in which fasting and thrice-daily prayers are admonished, directs the church not to pray as the hypocrites "but as the Lord commanded in his Gospel" (Did. 8.2). Then the so-called Lord's Prayer is quoted with the added doxology. Whether we understand the author to intend that the Lord's Prayer itself was the prayer to be prayed or whether it was to be used as an example of the kind of prayer to be prayed three times daily, we can see that the Lord's Prayer had become an integral part of Christian worship by this time (cf. Bradshaw, 26-28; Volz, 40-44).

2.8.3. Prayer for Civil Authorities. 1 Clement includes a lengthy prayer that continues a tradition in the NT to pray for civil authorities (e.g., 1 Tim 2:1-2). But the prayer's length and repeated positive assessment of rulers and governors goes beyond anything found in the NT. While some scholars see the prayer as a theological apology for the Pax Romana and others suggest that it reflects an attempt to build a bridge from the emerging church to larger Roman society (Jeffers, 198), it probably applies the enigmatic saying of Jesus to "render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's and to God the things that are God's" (Mk 12:21; see Bowe, 93).

See also BLESSING; FELLOWSHIP; GOD; LITURGICAL ELEMENTS; WORSHIP AND LITURGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Alsup, "Prayer, Consciousness and the Early Church: A Look at Acts 2:41-47 for Today," Austin Seminary Bulletin 101 (1985) 31-37; R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); R. T. Beckwith, "The Daily and Weekly Worship of the Primitive Church in Relation to Its Jewish Antecedents," EvQ 66 (1984) 65-80; B. E. Bowe, "Prayer Rendered for Caesar? 1 Clement 59.3—61.3" in The Lord's Prayer and Other Prayer Texts from the Greco-Roman Era, ed. J. H. Charlesworth with M. Harding and M. Kiley (Valley Forge, PA: Trinity Press International, 1994) 85-99; P. F. Bradshaw, Daily Prayer in the Early Church: A Study of the Origin and Early Development of the Divine Office (New York: Oxford University Press, 1982); J. H. Charlesworth, "A Prolegomenon to a New Study of the Jewish Background of the Hymns and Prayers in the New Testament," JJS 33 (1982) 265-85; O. Cullmann, Prayer in the New Testament (OBT; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1995); P. H. Davids, The Epistle of James: A Commentary on the Greek Text (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1975); A. J. Hultgren, "Expectations of Prayer in the New Testament" in A Primer on Prayer, ed. P. R. Sponheim (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); J. S. Jeffers, Conflict at Rome: Social Order and Hierarchy in Early Christianity (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1991); W. L. Lane, Hebrews 1—8 (WBC; Dallas: Word, 1991); R. P. Martin, James (WBC; Dallas: Word, 1988); idem, Worship in the Early Church (1964; rev. ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1974); T. Maschke, "Prayer in the Apostolic Fathers," SecCent 9 (1992) 103-18; J. R. Michaels, 1 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); P. Miller, They Cried to the Lord: The Form and Theology of Biblical Prayer (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1994); D. J. Moo, The Letter of James: An Introduction and Commentary (TNTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1985); W. Mundle and C. Brown, "maranatha," NIDNTT 2:895-98; D. G. Peterson, "Prayer in the General Epistles" in Teach Us to Pray: Prayer in the Bible and the World, ed. D. A. Carson (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1990) 102-18; B. Reicke, The Epistles of James, Peter and Jude (AB; 2d ed.; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1964); H. Schönweiss, C. Brown and G. T. D. Angel, "Prayer, Ask, Kneel, Beg, Worship, Knock," NIDNTT 2:855-86; M. M. B. Turner, "Prayer in the Gospels and Acts" in Teach Us to Pray: Prayer in the Bible and the World, ed. D. A. Carson (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1990) 58-83; P. W. van der Horst, "Silent Prayer in Antiquity," Numen 41 (1994) 1-25; C. A. Volz, "Prayer in the Early Church" in A Primer on Prayer, ed. P. R. Sponheim (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988) 36-47; M. J. Wilkins, Following the Master: A Biblical Theology of Discipleship (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1992).

M. J. Wilkins

PRAYER ACCLAMATIONS. See LITURGICAL ELEMENTS; PRAYER.

PREACHING, APOSTOLIC. See KERYGMA AND DIDACHE.

PREACHING FROM ACTS, HEBREWS, GENERAL EPISTLES AND REVELATION

Preachers committed to proclaiming faithfully the whole counsel of God must not limit themselves to the riches of the Gospels and the epistles of Paul but must also attend to the rest of the NT, not only despite but also because of the challenges and perplexities confronting interpreters of these diverse materials. Some of these challenges are the same for preaching texts chosen from any part of the Bible: discerning the original cultural setting and the concerns the biblical writer intended to address; understanding how the grammatical constructions and formal literary characteristics of the passage bear on interpretation; hearing the word God would speak through this ancient text to God's people in a particular setting in today's world; shaping a sermon that effectively and engagingly presents the claim of the passage upon the modern hearer. Other challenges, however, present themselves with particular force in one or more of the books under consideration, such as how to read apocalyptic* symbolism or how to hear the one voice of the Spirit (see Holy Spirit) in statements that appear theologically discrepant.

1. General Considerations
2. Cultural Considerations
3. Theological Considerations
4. Formal Considerations

5. Issues Related to Particular Books
6. Shaping the Sermon

1. General Considerations.

The preacher may regard the diversity of style and viewpoint found in Acts,* the General Epistles and Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) not as a thorny problem to fight one's way through or a series of peaks and valleys begging to be made level but rather as an encouraging, intriguing manifestation of the Lord's preservation of the individuality of his messengers and suggestive of the particularity of the Lord's concern for his people. An analogous maintenance of one's own faithful individuality and a particularity of concern for one's own people will rightly be reflected in the words spoken from the pulpit. While God's eternal truth is not internally contradictory, preachers should not treat aspects of that truth as if they were disembodied and independent of their context, as Job's friends heard to their sorrow when their utterances—many of them fully orthodox—were rejected by God (Job 42:7). A fitting word for the energetically self-justifying (some of Paul's hearers?) may be a dangerous word for those slothfully certain of their safety (some of James's hearers?).

Furthermore, preachers may be instructed by the extent to which biblical writers freely assumed the prevailing understandings of their own culture not only in terms of common knowledge (as presumably of the meaning of many of the symbols in Revelation) but also and more problematically in terms of some incorporation of what may be seen as noncanonical materials and worldview (in particular the use Jude* apparently made of Enoch). Granting the need for discernment and caution, preachers may yet believe from the model of Scripture itself that they ought not to be so elitist as to scorn or ignore popular culture if they wish to be heard and understood. However, sensitivity to the realities of diversity and of biblical engagement with the culture of the writers' own day should also inoculate preachers against falsely universalizing the particular: points of great doctrinal and practical consequence ought not to be made to rest upon isolated statements not elsewhere attested in Scripture, nor should ideas taken from very different contexts (e.g., Thess and Rev) be asked to march hand in hand.

2. Cultural Considerations.

2.1. The Culture of the Writer and of the Original Recipients. What the text meant (what the writer intended to communicate and expected the reader or hearer to understand) sets limits for what the text may be legitimately taken by contemporary readers to mean. Therefore it is incumbent upon preachers to do that research in commentaries and their introductions, Bible dictionaries and Bible encyclopedias that will enable them not only to clarify obscurities, like what the archangel Michael's dispute over the body of Moses* (Jude 9) might have been about, but also to understand such matters as what might be tempting John's contemporaries to deny that Christ has come in the flesh* (1 Jn 4:2) or what it was like to be a first-century beggar in Jerusalem (Acts 3). The point is not to find material for a speculative psychologizing of the text but rather to discipline a too-direct identification of an earlier situation with a superficially similar one of today (see Best on the difference between situation and the much deeper issue of culture: similar situations may have different weights and meanings in different cultures). Need for outside resources becomes more evident when one recognizes that the biblical writers did not have to state directly what was the common knowledge of those for whom they wrote, whether cultural specifics or details related to problems of particular churches*—knowledge that we by no means automatically share (Ericson, 249).

2.2. The Culture of the Preacher. Regarding their own cultures, preachers have two sometimes conflicting responsibilities: to be keen participant-observers of their cultures, so as to know the images, symbols and examples that will help them communicate clearly, effectively and movingly; and to seek that measure of critical distance that will allow them to be attuned to at least some of the underlying values and unexamined, unarticulated assumptions that govern the culture's understanding of Scripture (and everything else), so that the Bible does not become captive to the culture. The Bible must be preached in culturally specific ways, but no culture rightly escapes God's judgment,* as if its ways can be identified with God's ways.

2.3. The Problem of Cultural Relativism. Because communication can take place only by utilizing the forms, symbols and options available or at least conceivable in a given culture, it sometimes becomes difficult to discern what belongs to the essential message of Scripture and what is a function of the circumstances in which a passage was written. Common sense easily betrays us here, for it is precisely the "common sense" of a particular culture (see Fee and Stuart, 61-77). By the late twentieth century (though not earlier) most preachers might agree that the word to slaves* in 1 Peter* (1 Pet 2:18-25) is a means of granting human dignity to those scarcely considered persons rather than a word to slave owners sanctioning their keeping slaves. But that a similar interpretation should be given to the immediately following words to wives (1 Pet 3:1-6) would be less generally accepted.

There is no infallible path through this thicket, except by a trust in the Holy Spirit to continue to guide the church as a whole into a better understanding of God's will. Meanwhile, if only one cultural option or institution appears to have been open or viable when a text was written, the likelihood that a scriptural expression of that option is culturally relative increases. When a biblical writer goes against the commonly accepted norm, the likelihood that the writer is making known a truth of cross-cultural importance increases. When biblical writers take different positions on an issue (e.g., two attitudes to the Roman government [see Civil Authority] in Revelation 13 versus Romans 13), the likelihood that their words reflect situational differences and that the principles they articulate should be applied in ways sensitive to situational differences increases. Responsible preachers will ponder questions of these kinds. They will then seek ways of handling them that are faithful to their central theological understandings of the Lord's provision in Christ for fallen humanity and that tend to shape Christ-like behavior in the hearers. Interpretations of ambiguous matters that compromise the core of the gospel or that tend to generate self-serving, immoral, bigoted or hateful attitudes or behaviors are always suspect.

2.4. Crossing the Cultural Gap. Neither "bridging" nor "leaping" metaphors for crossing the cultural gap are satisfactory, the first because it suggests too wooden and mechanical a process, the second because it might seem to sanction flights of fancy. A legitimate homiletical crossing involves first the faithful exegetical work that leads to as deep an understanding of the text and its original setting as possible and then the pastorally sensitive, imaginative approach that not only discerns directly comparable situations in contemporary life but also risks seeking those parallels and analogies that capture the inner dynamic and intended impact of the scriptural text. The preliminary reestablishing of the strangeness and alien quality of the biblical world may help the preacher to be fresh and relevant, for one needs a certain amount of distance in order to hear a text afresh, to be freshly confronted by it and to ask of it those questions that may, by the grace* of the Holy Spirit, help its truth to come alive for modern hearers.

3. Theological Considerations.
Although some preachers seek to avoid theology on the grounds that doctrinal systems distort particular texts in the interests of their own internal coherence, these preachers will either utilize an unacknowledged grid of their own to make sense of diverse materials, read so selectively or undiscerningly that they miss many important questions, or allow such intellectual chaos to reign that this week's sermon from James* flatly contradicts last week's from Paul. The better preachers comprehend how their own traditions treat the range of major theological loci and also particular problems, the better they will be able to maintain balance in their preaching, avoid undoing next week what they accomplished this week and also see where particular texts challenge their tradition's understanding. A broad theological awareness becomes especially significant when one must consider the diverse perspectives of Acts, the General Epistles and Revelation.

3.1. Doctrinal Diversity. Acts, the General Epistles and Revelation have been especially fruitful sources of denominational differences (not to mention a seedbed for sects that may find their justification in isolated and perhaps hard-to-interpret texts). Preachers from Pentecostal or primitivist groups turn often to Acts; those from holiness groups concerned about backsliding will emphasize warnings in Hebrews* about apostasy* more than Paul's teaching on perseverance (see Endurance); millenarian groups rely heavily on Revelation and may mute Jesus' affirmation that no one knows the time of the end; preachers in the liberation theology camp may find the perspective on the state in Acts 4 and 5 and Revelation 13 pertinent to the current scene, while those with conservative political commitments may turn instead to Romans 13 and 1 Peter 2:13-17. It behooves preachers both to be faithful to their own convictions and to be candid that other Christians may have legitimate biblical grounds for a different viewpoint. Charity to those who differ will serve the church better than pulpit bombast (Liefield, 147).

*3.2. Unity Without Homogeneity. Those who acknowledge the superintendence of the Holy Spirit in the writing and transmission of Scripture will grant a fundamental unity to the Bible (despite some anomalies they may not be able conscientiously to sort out) and believe that the whole of it serves God's purpose for our salvation, but they need not draw the false corollary that therefore every writer is saying the same thing or that a theologically loaded word has the same sense no matter which writer uses it. "Faith" (pistis), for instance, does not have the full Pauline sense of heartfelt trust when used by James (who employs the word more in the sense of orthodox opinion) or the writer of Hebrews (who is thinking more of faithfulness, of persevering while holding on to God's promises*). Preachers alert to such variations in usage will spare themselves many theological conundrums. Or, to take a different example, suppose one grants that James, John and Paul were all concerned about right action but that (to oversimplify) James spoke of it directly while John started from love* and Paul from faith.* One may then grant the importance and note the hazards of each style. The direct approach can foster works-righteousness (see Faith and Works) and moralism; the love route, too little regard for the shape love must have truly to be loving; the faith route, quietism. Preachers sensitive to the whole counsel of God will avoid false alternatives and seek not to err on any of the available sides.

3.3. Holding on to the Center. Whatever they take up in a sermon, preachers should not let a particular problem or the intricacies of a particular text obscure their fundamental duty to preach the gospel—good news of what God has done, is doing and will do in Christ for us sinners. That does not mean that every sermon will mention directly the cross and resurrection,* but it does mean that preachers will not forget them and the necessity for them as they construct their sermons. Keeping a firm grip on the theological center will help preachers to avoid majoring in the minors or designing sermons that offer primarily moralisms, good advice, mental hygiene, pop psychology, social or political commentary or the preacher's present view of life. The focus on God must not be swallowed up in discussion of what we are or ought to be doing. At the same time biblical truth is never truth meant only for intellectual apprehension and having no practical consequences: the sermon that remains at the level of abstract discussion of the dimensions of the new Jerusalem (Rev 21) has failed as seriously as the one that lets the transcendent slip from view in a practical discussion of the wrong use of the tongue (Jas 3).

4. Formal Considerations.

*4.1. Genre. The books considered here fall into three main genres, with some books showing aspects of more than one: history (regarded as an expression of salvation history), epistles and apocalyptic.

4.1.1. History. Acts is the continuation of a narrative that Luke plainly says is intended as a careful account of events (Lk 1:1-4), a historical narrative. Truthfulness about what occurred and disinterested objectivity are not, however, the same thing. Luke's account is marked by his theological concern to perceive and vividly set down real events that showed what God was doing in history; his purpose was not to present a series of uninterpreted, coldly objective facts. (Hellenistic history generally did not conform to our ideas of critical historiography, and all history is of necessity selective and interpretive.) Therefore the preacher does well to ask why Luke has placed a speech in a particular location or why he has chosen to include certain events and not others, remembering that the speeches, letters and sermons in Acts are almost certainly Lukan compositions in their present form, probably combining research and memory with materials that would be seen as suitable to the occasion, and that the events narrated are selected to make a point. Given the large number of miracles in Acts and the Hellenistic skepticism regarding the miraculous, it is notable that Luke emphasizes "many convincing proofs" for the resurrection: whatever freedom current literary standards gave him, he obviously wished to emphasize the factual grounding of his account (Acts 1:3; Aune, 125, 135).

4.1.2. Epistles. James, 1 and 2 Peter (see 2 Peter), 1, 2 and 3 John (see John, Letters of) and Jude constitute what have been called the catholic or General Epistles. A few scholars would add Hebrews to the list. These books, although they are identified as letters, vary in their adherence to traditional letter form and tend to show signs both of conscious literary effort and of being directed to a more general audience than the letters of Paul. They manifest a kind of church consciousness: even when they mention specific people, they do so because of the danger these people pose to the church at large (Doty, 67). Despite the intent of the authors to address the whole church, the modern preacher must recall that the documents come from the early days of the church and assume specific and diverse circumstances by no means identical with our own. Thus they may not directly address certain present-day questions the preacher brings to them but need to be understood first within their own context.

Because of the literary conventions governing Hellenistic letters,* elaborated by Paul (see DPL, Letters, Letter Forms), the preacher needs to distinguish those components dictated by convention from those expressive of the writer's particular purpose: in our culture, for instance, the salutation dear does not imply affection between the correspondents. Additions to, omissions from and alterations of traditional forms may give significant clues to the writer's attitude and purpose. 2 and 3 John largely exemplify the common Greek letter tradition, as do the letters in Acts (Acts 15:23b-29; 23:26-30), whereas 1 John has no formal elements of a letter. The opening letters in Revelation are the creation of the writer, but Revelation as a whole may, especially given the closing benediction (see Liturgical Elements), be seen as a letter to the churches (Tate, 130).

That these books are presented as epistles should not obscure characteristics of other literary forms that may be significant to how they are to be interpreted and preached. Hebrews, 1 Peter and 1 John all have sermonic qualities. James resembles a moral tract with similarities to wisdom literature. 2 Peter has characteristics of a last testament, while Jude is a single-purpose polemic tractate (Ericson, 245).

4.1.3. Apocalyptic. The only NT apocalypse is the Revelation of John (which also manifests prophetic* and epistolary characteristics), but Hebrews 1 and 2, 2 Peter 2 and 3 and Jude, as well as the Gospels and Pauline epistles, have apocalyptic aspects. Apocalyptic works, common in certain Jewish circles between about 200 B.C. to A.D. 200, were literary creations. They were not generally intended to give a precise chronology of future events but were designed to help their recipients think and act in terms of a transcendent perspective, since God would shortly intervene and do away with the present order (only a few apocalypses lack this latter, eschatological,* component). They offer revelatory* visions* characterized by imaginative, symbolic language; conflicts between supernatural forces; reference to extreme suffering* and final judgment; and a view of history that does not expect development but rather the final inbreaking of God.

Preachers do well to honor the intent of the biblical apocalypse to encourage godly behavior and give hope* and power* to persevere in the face of affliction rather than to derive from it eschatological schemas and timetables. They should also pay careful attention to the symbolism and how it is used, getting help from responsible commentators in discerning OT allusions as well as images that were common to the nonbiblical apocalyptic, mythology or culture of the day. However, the meaning of many symbols comprehensible at the time may be lost to us. Such gaps ought not to be filled by flights of speculation, nor should details of symbolic presentations be allegorized. Above all preachers should recognize that they are being less, not more, faithful to the text if they interpret literally what was initially intended to be taken symbolically.

4.2. Literary Structures and Rhetorical Devices. The alert preacher will be sensitive to the inclusion in the biblical text of traditional materials, perhaps adapted for the occasion, and also to the use of rhetorical devices that give emphasis to particular ideas. Vice and virtue* lists and household codes* were common in Greek writing. When used in the literature we are considering (e.g., Rev 9:20-21; 2 Pet 1:5-8; 2:13—3:7) they may in many respects be quite stereotyped, not necessarily addressing specific problems in the community and apparently intended to show that Christianity was not subversive of the social order (Doty, 57; Aune, 196). Liturgical materials, including hymns* and hymn fragments, creedal statements (see Creeds) and doxologies, may give a sense of the tone as well as the content of early worship* (e.g., Rev 4:8-11; 1 Pet 3:18-22; Jude 24-25). Diatribes, as in James 2:1—3:12 and 4:13—5:6, are marked by a dialogical character, and the preacher should be alert for imaginary opponents, hypothetical objections and false conclusions that provide a foil for the writer (Aune, 200). Techniques such as repetition of words and ideas, chiasm (an a b b′ a′ pattern, as in Heb 1:5-8), parallelism and antithesis all provide ways of giving weight to main ideas.

5. Issues Related to Particular Books.

5.1. Acts. Luke, the only Evangelist who adds a second book to his narrative, clearly wishes to affirm the historical continuation (see also 4.1.1 above) of the whole biblical drama in the time of the church (note his use of OT prophecy; see Old Testament in Acts). By his way of detailing the proclamation of Jesus, the maintenance of an apostolic* group that will guard the tradition* and the rejection of deviants like Simon Magus (see Magic), he does present a kind of normative Christianity (Gasque, 120; Aune, 137-38). Thus the preacher may be tempted to frame merely historical sermons or sermons that present some narrated detail of early church life as prescriptive for all time—temptations to be avoided (see Fee 1991, 83-104). The preacher will rightly observe, however, the overriding faithfulness of God in fulfilling his promises, the importance of the church (over against its cultured despisers) and striking evidences of mutual care (e.g., Acts 4:34; 6:1-3; 11:27-30) as well as attend to diverse examples of church life and individual conversion.

Acts shows the spread of the church from Jewish sect (see Christianity and Judaism) to worldwide movement, breaking down barriers between people by the power of the word of God and the activity of the Holy Spirit, which will not be thwarted. Triumphalists should be chastened, though, by the striking alternation of successes with suffering on the part of the disciples and scoffing on the part of the unconvinced: the trials are not to be ignored in proclamation of the triumphs. Those moved by the inclusive reach of the gospel should take equal note of its conditions (Acts 4:12; 10:35-36; 13:46) and the demands for repentance* and change of life. Those with an unnuanced view of the proper relationship of Christians and secular or religious authorities should observe both how often the disciples are at odds with them and the fact that Paul is willing to make use of his status as a Roman citizen to gain protection (e.g., Acts 16:35-40; 25:10-12).

5.2. Hebrews. The writer of the letter to the Hebrews seeks to steady wavering Christians in their faith by presenting the surpassing excellence of Christ, an excellence that makes turning away to any other or for any reason absurd as well as fatal. The author uses a sermonic style, and the preacher may note both the attention given to rhetorical effect and the way exhortation frequently interrupts complex arguments. The preacher may also observe strong contrasts of realm (heavenly versus earthly) and time (ways of the past made obsolete by Christ; the present marked by the finality and sufficiency of Christ's work on our behalf; the promised perfection of the future to be pursued with hope and faith, following the One who has gone before us). The writer's high christology* is combined with an equally strong emphasis on the full humanity of Jesus, which makes him a fit help for us. The preacher will need to pay special attention to the writer's use of the OT, since most of the argument of the epistle turns on key OT passages (see Old Testament in Hebrews). Recognition that the writer usually quotes the Septuagint rather than the Hebrew text and that he or she uses extensive typology and interprets christocentrically will help resolve some difficulties, as will familiarity with Jewish midrashic styles of commentary on texts (Hagner 1981, 217-33).

5.3. James. James writes with the practical purpose of calling people to live the Christian life, taking up topics with sometimes little discernible order (though he may return to topics, so preachers should be alert to what has gone before and what follows). Preachers may note resonances with the wisdom tradition (see Old Testament in the General Epistles) and in particular with the Gospel of Matthew. Though christological teaching is scant, one must keep in mind the grace to which response is necessary and the point that the Christian duty to fulfill the royal law* (Jas 2:8) rests precisely on its author being king of the universe (Ladd, 638).

5.4. 1 Peter. Peter writes with sermonic tone to a church on the fringes of society and threatened by persecution*—a difference of setting that preachers in secure, mainstream contexts should keep in mind. His stress on God's providence in unmerited suffering surely applies to all Christians, yet Christians in positions of power may have different responsibilities in this regard, especially as regards others who suffer, than do the powerless. One may note that his strong emphasis on future hope is put in the service of discipline* in the present and is not a means of escape from present duties (e.g., 1 Pet 1:13-17).

5.5. 2 Peter. 2 Peter addresses the problem of false teachers—about which some in the contemporary church may be insufficiently concerned—in the context of the power and truth of the gospel (2 Pet 1) and the certainty, despite delay, of the end (2 Pet 3). Preachers need to pay special attention to specialized vocabulary, background ideas and allusions to noncanonical literature.

5.6. 1 John. 1 John maintains a warmly pastoral tone while addressing the effects of the teaching of errorists who deny the Incarnation. The preacher might reflect on various ways in which false doctrine leads to failures in living and hence on the importance of right knowledge of Christ. John's ethical* and theological terminology will also repay exploration. The preacher should be forewarned that John's line of thought is by no means so straightforward as it may at first appear: particular attention to coherent sermonic structure will likely be needed.

5.7. 2 and 3 John. 2 and 3 John provide brief case studies of particular situations in churches facing challenges from without and within. These are true letters, so the preacher should be careful not to overinterpret the merely formal elements.

5.8. Jude. Jude makes clear his purpose that his readers hold on to and contend for their faith in the face of false teachers (Jude 3), an ongoing need in a pluralistic society. The letter is closely related to 2 Peter but has a particularly harsh and urgent tone, suggestive of imminent crisis; preachers addressing less immediately critical situations should be careful of their own sermonic tone when preaching from Jude.

5.9. Revelation. Revelation affirms that the omnipotent God, the nature of whose power is defined by the slain and risen Lamb,* is Lord of history, despite what historical evils and suffering might suggest to the contrary—an affirmation desperately needed by those who have been sobered by the Holocaust and other overwhelming historical evils. It also depicts the church and individual Christians in unequivocal opposition to the corporate forces of evil, as manifested in the state and in social and economic structures. This latter emphasis may give grounds for preachers to raise questions about too-easy accommodation to seemingly all-determining corporate forces even in times of cultural tranquility, where the power of Caesar is transmuted into the power of money: late-twentieth-century cases in which tranquility has erupted into overt or covert conflict reveal a contemporary church that has often been unable to separate its calling from its temporal self-interest. But Revelation makes clear that death itself is far from the worst thing that can happen to believers (contrast Rev 14:13 with Rev 9:6).

Preachers do well to preach from the whole of Revelation, not least to help inoculate hearers against popular literalist misinterpretations of the book (see also 4.1.3. above). They also do well to observe the prominence of worship and praise in the midst of suffering and to read large portions of the book aloud so as to begin to sense the evocative power of the language and imagery. A sermon that reflects this evocative power will be in harmony with Revelation's purpose not only to convince people that it is right to worship God instead of the beast but also to persuade them to stake their lives on it (Fiorenza, 134).

6. Shaping the Sermon.

6.1. Choosing a Text. Pastoral discernment must be employed at the level of choice of an appropriate passage of Scripture as well as at the level of illustration and application: not every biblical truth is fitting for every situation. The text should be a coherent unit of thought, usually at least a paragraph. The preacher may avoid a text so long that it raises too many diverse issues, but he or she may not responsibly avoid considering how the context bears on the proper interpretation of the passage selected. Occasional efforts to bring home the central idea of a short letter will be fruitful for preacher and congregation alike.

6.2. Clarifying Theme and Purpose. The preacher should be able to state the theme of the sermon (what it is about) and the purpose of the sermon (what the preacher intends the sermon to accomplish) each in a clear, focused, simple sentence; this theme and purpose should govern the whole development of the sermon. While they may not be identical with the biblical writer's own theme and purpose in a given passage, they must be in fundamental harmony with it. The preacher should beware of purposes that do not go beyond the cognitive (e.g., that hearers understand something without its implications for life being addressed) or those that are merely moralistic (telling hearers to do or be good without grounding the imperative in the enabling acts of God on our behalf).

6.3. Sermon Structure. The text itself should suggest not only the theme of the sermon but also the way the theme will be developed. Keeping the sermon close to the text will help the sermon not only to be faithful to what the text is saying but also to do what the text is doing. Within those guidelines, openness to using a variety of forms will aid in keeping preaching fresh and perhaps suggest approaches especially effective for bringing out the force of a particular text. Introduction and conclusion, as points of special prominence, need extra attention so that the lead-in is accurate and engaging and the culmination brings the main idea home.

6.4. Connecting with Hearers. Preachers who bore themselves will almost certainly bore their hearers. Preachers need to wrestle with their text until it speaks compellingly to them. Having done faithful exegetical work, they should avoid proclaiming historical background or exegetical detail for its own sake but rather include only what moves the sermon forward. The background work is not lost; it provides grounding for a faithful but also imaginative discernment of contemporary connections by which the gospel and its implications come alive in a new setting.

See also HERMENEUTICS; LETTERS, LETTER FORMS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Allen, Contemporary Biblical Interpretation for Preaching (Valley Forge, PA: Judson, 1984); D. E. Aune, The New Testament in Its Literary Environment (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1987); E. Best, From Text to Sermon: Responsible Use of the New Testament in Preaching (2d ed.; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1988); M. E. Boring, "The Theology of Revelation: 'The Lord Our God the Almighty Reigns,'" Int 40 (1986) 257-69; J. W. Cox, ed., Biblical Preaching: An Expositor's Treasury (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1983); F. B. Craddock, "Preaching the Book of Revelation," Int 40 (1986) 270-82; W. G. Doty, Letters in Primitive Christianity (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1973); N. R. Ericson, "Interpreting the Petrine Literature" in The Literature and Meaning of Scripture, ed. M. A. Inch and C. H. Bullock (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1981) 243-66; G. D. Fee, Gospel and Spirit: Issues in New Testament Hermeneutics (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1991); idem, New Testament Exegesis: A Handbook for Students and Pastors (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1983); G. D. Fee and D. Stuart, How to Read the Bible for All Its Worth: A Guide to Understanding the Bible (2d ed.; Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1993); E. S. Fiorenza, "The Followers of the Lamb: Visionary Rhetoric and Social-Political Situation," Semeia 36 (1986) 123-46; W. W. Gasque, "A Fruitful Field: Recent Study of the Acts of the Apostles," Int 42 (1988) 117-31; S. Greidanus, The Modern Preacher and the Ancient Text: Interpreting and Preaching Biblical Literature (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988); D. A. Hagner, "Biblical Theology and Preaching," ExpT 96 (1985) 137-41; idem, "Interpreting the Epistle to the Hebrews" in The Literature and Meaning of Scripture, ed. M. A. Inch and C. H. Bullock (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1981) 217-42; S. J. Kistemaker, "The Theological Message of James," JETS 29 (1986) 55-61; G. E. Ladd, A Theology of the New Testament, ed. D. A. Hagner (rev. ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993); W. L. Liefeld, New Testament Exposition: From Text to Sermon (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1984); R. P. Martin, "Approaches to New Testament Exegesis" in New Testament Interpretation: Essays on Principles and Methods, ed. I. H. Marshall (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977) 220-51; W. R. Tate, Biblical Interpretation: An Integrated Approach (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1991); W. H. Willimon, " 'Eyewitnesses and Ministers of the Word': Preaching in Acts," Int 42 (1988) 158-70.

M. Shuster

PREACHING OF PETER. See APOCRYPHAL AND PSEUDEPIGRAPHAL WRITINGS.

PREEXISTENCE

In NT studies preexistence refers to the notion that a person or a thing exists in heaven* prior to its entrance into history. This idea is not unique to early Christianity; it is also present in various forms in Plato, some eastern philosophies and Jewish theology, particularly the apocalyptic* and wisdom* traditions during the Second Temple period (see Judaism). The preexistent state may be described as ideal (existence in the mind or plan of God*) or actual (existence alongside and distinct from God; Hamerton-Kelly, 1-13). Although the term preexistence does not occur in the NT, the notion is expressed in descriptions of the person and work of Christ as well as other entities.

1. The Origin of the Concept
2. New Testament Writings
3. Post-New Testament Writings
4. Conclusion

1. The Origin of the Concept.

1.1. Hellenism. Scholars debate the background out of which the concept of preexistence emerged. Some locate the origin of a preexistence christology* in the Hellenistic church, a community allegedly far removed from the practices and beliefs of monotheistic Judaism. R. H. Fuller (93-97, 203-32) posits a distinction between the Palestinian Jewish, Hellenistic Jewish and Hellenistic Gentile* church (see Hellenists). During the Gentile mission,* he maintains, preachers translated the kerygma* of the Palestinian church into Hellenistic categories and thought-forms in order to reach Greeks and Romans with the gospel.* This conscious and unconscious assimilation resulted in theological formulations not present in the earliest Jewish congregations.

According to this approach, the most likely analogue to christological preexistence would have been the gnostic* redeemer myth. In this story a heavenly figure descended into the material world to effect redemption* and ascended back to the heavenly realm. The parallels between christological preexistence and the preexistence of the redeemer, it is assumed, are obvious. Other scholars (Hengel, 33-41) disagree and consider the gnostic redeemer myth to be the construct of scholarly imagination rather than an accurate reading of the data. There is no evidence to suggest that such a myth existed early enough to influence NT writings. Moreover, most scholars today reject hard divisions between Palestinian Jewish and Gentile congregations, since it is apparent Hellenistic culture had made inroads in Palestine centuries before the beginnings of Christianity. Consequently, because Second-Temple Judaism provides an adequate conceptual base, the view is that the background for a preexistence christology is found in Judaism.

1.2. Second-Temple Judaism. Preexistence requires prior existence somewhere; that somewhere is understood generally as heaven. OT writers, particularly exilic and postexilic authors, envisaged a heavenly, transcendent world that ran concurrent with the earthly realm. From time to time the heavenly would break through to the faithful in visions* and revelations.* During the crisis of exile, for example, Ezekiel experiences the heavenly realm in his vision of the throne-chariot by the Chebar River and glimpses at the manlike figure identified as the "glory of the Lord" (Ezek 1:1-26; see Glory). Another national crisis precipitates Isaiah's vision of the Lord* who appears high and lifted up, accompanied by ministering seraphim (Is 6:1-12). In a related way the priestly* tradition found significance in Israel's* covenant* story at Mt. Sinai. In it God reveals to Moses* a heavenly tabernacle* and orders him to construct the earthly model and its furnishings according to its heavenly prototype (Ex 25:9, 40; 26:30; 27:8; Num 8:4).

These images become important for the Jewish apocalyptic and mystical traditions. Echoing the story of the tabernacle, 2 Baruch 4:1-7 promises the eschatological* revelation of the heavenly temple and paradise that God created but took away when Adam sinned. On Mt. Sinai God showed Moses the heavenly temple that was to serve as a pattern for the earthly tabernacle and its furnishings. Among the Dead Sea Scrolls (see Qumran) the Angelic Liturgy (4Q400-407) portrays the heavenly worship* of angels* as exemplary to the community and assumes a celestial sanctuary as well as the throne-chariot of God's glory. 1 Enoch 46--48 describes a heavenly Messiah called the Righteous One, the Chosen One and the Son of Man. He is a preexistent, heavenly being described in majestic symbols of power.* He appears at the end of the age to reward* the righteous and punish the evil. In the same way 4 Ezra 7:26-30 portrays the end of the age and declares that God's eschatological promises, including the city, the land* and his Son,* the Messiah, will be revealed.

1.3. Wisdom. While the priestly, apocalyptic and mystical traditions in Judaism provided a cosmology suitable for the expression of preexistence, most scholars today point to the wisdom tradition as the matrix of preexistence christology. Therein Lady Wisdom is personified. Proverbs 8:22-31 describes the divine origin of Wisdom; she was created before the earth and present with God as a "master worker" (Prov 8:30, NRSV). Similarly Wisdom 7:22-25 portrays her (sophia) as the "fashioner of all things" and "a pure emanation of the glory of the Almighty" (Wis 7:25, NRSV). In Sirach 24:1-29 God commands Wisdom to dwell with Israel and identifies her with the book of the Law* of Moses (cf. Bar 3:9-4:4).

Interpreters disagree over the significance of such reflection. J. D. G. Dunn (168-76) and L. W. Hurtado (42-50), for example, conclude that Wisdom is not a hypostasis or intermediary figure independent of YHWH. Wisdom language, they say, emerged as a vehicle to express the immanence and redemptive activity of the one, transcendent God. J. E. Fossum (345-46) argues that these texts demonstrate the belief in Judaism that entities such as divine Wisdom existed independently of God. The crux of the disagreement lies in the nature of Jewish monotheism and how the language of personification should be understood.

As Jews, the earliest Christians inherit the cosmology and reflection on Wisdom's role in the creation,* redemption and governance of the world. Preexistence christology then emerges first as wisdom christology. What devout Jews said of Sophia, devout Jewish Christians said of Christ. The early Christians' experience of Jesus both before and after Easter led them to envisage Jesus as the embodiment of divine Wisdom. Given this category, they were able to apply to Jesus the language and the ideas associated formerly with Wisdom. This transference appears to occur in some of the earliest NT documents (1 Cor 8:6; Col 1:15-20) and continues into the latest (e.g., Jn 1:1-18).

2. New Testament Writings.

2.1. Hebrews. Scholars generally agree that this anonymous letter (see Hebrews) represents the setting and doctrine of second-generation Christianity (as Heb 2:1-5 may suggest). Preexistence language is present and less ambiguous than in earlier writings (e.g., those of Paul). Many interpreters assume that, in addition to a Jewish background, a modified Platonic cosmology undergirds the worldview of the author of Hebrews. This dualistic perspective envisaged a heavenly world of ideas and forms that preceded and corresponded to the earthly world of shadows and copies (Plato Tim. 51-52; Plato Rep. 7.1-3; 9.592b; Plato Soph. 246-47; see also Philo Leg. All. 3.100-103).

Hebrews begins with clear affirmations of Christ's preexistence in what may be a preformed hymn* about the Son, a key christological title throughout the book. First, God created the universe through his Son, and the Son sustains the world by his powerful, enabling word (Heb 1:2-3; cf. Jn 1:1-3; Col 1:15-16). The same idea is expressed when the author quotes Psalm 102:25-27 and applies it christologically to the role of the Lord (kyrios), who made heaven and earth (Heb 1:10). As God's agent of creation, the Son exists before his earthly manifestation as the man Jesus and takes on functions attributed to Wisdom in Hellenistic Judaism.

Second, the Son is "the reflection [apaugasma] of God's glory" (Heb 1:3). Though this statement by itself does not require a claim for preexistence, inasmuch as it draws upon notions of creation and Wisdom, the claim appears to be implied. No literary dependence can be proven, yet the christological affirmation in Hebrews 1:3 may conflate two statements made about Wisdom in the Wisdom of Solomon. Wisdom is "a reflection [apaugasma] of eternal light" and "a pure emanation of the glory of the Almighty" (Wis 7:24-25, NRSV). Philo* uses the same Greek word to speak of the Logos* in relation to the most high God (Philo Op. Mund. 146; Philo Plant. 50). Philo's Logos doctrine appears closely associated with the christological reflection in Hebrews 1:1-3 (e.g., Philo Plant. 18; Philo Som. 1.241; Philo Cher. 127; Philo Vit. Mos. 1.155).

Third, the author quotes Psalm 45:7-8 as God's address to the Son: "Your throne, O God, is forever and ever, and the righteous scepter is the scepter of your kingdom" (Heb 1:8). The application of "God" (theos) to the Son is rare but not without parallel (cf. Jn 1:1; 20:28); it is nevertheless more significant since it is contained in a scriptural quotation. The phrase "forever and ever" may imply the eternality of the Son's rule and carries the preexistence of Christ beyond a precreational context (Harris, 205-27).

The preexistence of Christ in Hebrews becomes all the more potent when contrasted with his humanity. Employing Psalm 8:4-6 (LXX), the writer depicts Jesus as one who "for a little while was made lower than the angels" (Heb 2:7-9). Moreover, he refers to Jesus' high-priestly duties "in the days of his flesh" (Heb 5:7; see Flesh), the Son's obedience* learned through suffering* (Heb 5:8) and his ability to sympathize with every human weakness since he was subject to every human temptation but did not sin* (Heb 4:14-15). Hebrews stresses Jesus' humanity and his earthly pilgrimage while contextualizing this state between the time of his preexistent work and his exaltation* (Heb 1:3). What results is a descent-ascent christology typical of other presentations of Christ in the NT (cf. Phil 2:6-11; 2 Cor 8:9). In a similar vein the author utilizes incarnational language to describe Christ's thoughts as he came into the world to accomplish God's will and entered a body that God prepared for him (Heb 10:5-7; cf. 1:6). Therefore it is evident that Hebrews presents God's Son as preexistent, the agent of creation and incarnate in the man Jesus.

Other entities in Hebrews are characterized in the language of preexistence. Hebrews 11:3, for example, states the creation was prepared by the word of God so that the visible world was made from things that are invisible. Some interpreters understand this as creatio ex nihilo. Others consider it an expression of Platonic cosmology whereby the invisible things precede and correspond to the visible world. Perhaps more explicit is the description of the sanctuaries in Hebrews 8:1-7. In the heavens the great high priest sits at God's right hand and ministers in the one, true sanctuary and tabernacle of the Lord, a tabernacle that no mortal has erected. In contrast, priests on earth sacrifice* daily in another sanctuary that is "a copy and shadow of the heavenly" (Heb 8:5). The author grounds his argument in the Sinai narrative and alludes to God's command to Moses to make the tabernacle according to the pattern shown him on the mountain (Ex 25:40; cf. 25:9; 26:30; 27:8). For the author the heavenly, eternal sanctuary existed prior to the earthly and constituted the pattern by which the latter was made.

2.2. 1 Peter and Jude. Traditions associated with Peter (see 1 Peter) and Jude* also speak of Christ in language linked to preexistence. In what may be part of an early hymn the author writes that Christ was "predestined before the foundation of the world, made manifest at the end of the times for you" (1 Pet 1:20). While the first clause could be interpreted that the Messiah is God's eternal plan for saving the world (ideal preexistence), the second clause containing the word phanerōthentos ("made manifest") rules this out. The verb phanerousthai ("to be manifested") implies the revelation of something concealed. The idea appears to be that Christ existed with God, not merely in the plan or mind of God. Formerly, however, Christ was kept in heaven awaiting the eschatological day of redemption (cf. 1 Pet. 1:3-5). A similar thought is reflected earlier in 1 Peter 1:11, which claims the "Spirit of Christ" spoke through the OT prophets about salvation* in general and the sufferings of the Messiah in particular. For the "Spirit of Christ" to communicate to and through the prophets means that Christ must have existed prior to the man Jesus. Herein his preexistent reality is described as "spirit" (pneuma), a concept suggested elsewhere in the NT (2 Cor 3:17-18; 1 Tim 3:16; Heb 9:14) and taken up later in a developed "Spirit Christology" (Kelly, 142-45).

A reference to the preexistence of Christ in Jude is less certain. Jude 5 states that the Lord (kyrios) saved Israel from Egyptian bondage and also destroyed the unbelieving element of Israel sometime later. The original reading of this text is uncertain. Two manuscripts, Codex Alexandrinus and Codex Vaticanus, which are generally considered reliable witnesses,* contain the name Jesus instead of the title Lord. This would be the more difficult reading and if original would indicate that Jesus existed during the period of OT history and was God's agent in leading the captives out of bondage. But if "Jesus" is not original the author may still have intended a reference to the "Lord Jesus" since kyrios is most often a christological title in the NT, and elsewhere in Jude kyrios is used almost exclusively in reference to Christ (Jude 4, 14, 17, 21, 25). If the writer intended to refer to God the Father and not the Lord Jesus, there is no allusion to the preexistent Christ in this book. Nevertheless, the manuscripts containing the name Jesus instead of "Lord" evince the tendency of copyists and theologians to read the preexistent Christ into OT history at an early date (cf. Justin Martyr Dial. Tryph. 120.3).

2.3. The Johannine Epistles. Close linguistic and conceptual ties exist between the prologue of the Fourth Gospel (Jn 1:1-18) and the beginning of 1 John (1 Jn 1:1-4; see John, Letters of).

The author of the epistle purposes to witness to the "Word of Life" (tou logou tēs zōēs) and describes it as present with the Father "from the beginning." This phrase may refer to creation, a reading suggested by 1 John 2:13-14 and 1 John 3:8, or the moment when true faith* came to the believing community, a reading made possible by 1 John 2:7, 24 and 1 John 3:11. The ambiguity may be deliberate since the birth of the Christian community may be described as a new creation in which "the darkness is passing away and the true light already is shining" (1 Jn 2:7-8; cf. 2 Cor 5:17; see Light). The parallel with the Gospel's prologue renders creation a likely motif. The writer affirms that the "Word of Life" has been manifested to "us" (the apostolic community) and is confirmed by the testimony that "we have heard," "we have seen" and "our hands handled" it. The language certainly speaks of preexistence but stops short of speaking unambiguously of Christ. What preexists and is manifested is called the "Word of Life" and "eternal life." Clarity begins to dawn in 1 John 1:3 when the proclamation and reception of the "Word of Life" promises to engender "fellowship with the Father and His Son, Jesus Christ" (see Fellowship). By linking the Father and the Son in this way, the author apparently connects the Son with the "Word of Life" and envisages the preexistence of Christ.

1 John 4:2 and 2 John 7 describe the confession (see Creeds) of genuine believers as those who confess that "Jesus Christ has come in the flesh." The phrase "in the flesh" is similar to the incarnational language of John 1:14 and assumes existence prior to "fleshly" existence, although the manner of existence is left undefined. Most interpreters agree the discourse combats an incipient Gnosticism that denied the Incarnation and emphasized the divinity of Christ to the exclusion of his humanity. Those who deny the Incarnation are not "from God" and carry the "spirit of the antichrist" (see Antichrist). Evidently the author or authors of 1 and 2 John insist on a real, lasting union between the preexistent Son of God and the flesh in Jesus.

2.4. Revelation. As the only thoroughgoing apocalyptic book in the NT, Revelation's (see Revelation, Book of) images and symbols move about on two dimensions, time and space. The temporal duality juxtaposes "things which are" with "things which are going to happen," while a corresponding spatial duality contrasts heaven and earth. As a result the apocalyptic notion of preexistence suggests things exist in heaven that will be revealed in the last days. John experiences visions of "things which are" in heaven with the promise they are also "things which are about to happen" for the benefit of believers suffering persecution* in Asia Minor (Rev 1:19). He sees events (e.g., the worship of all God's people, Rev 4:1-11; the final battle, Rev 19:11-21; the last judgment,* Rev 20:11-15) as well as entities (e.g., the tree of life, Rev 2:7; the throne of God, Rev 4:1-5; the new Jerusalem,* Rev 21:1-2). These events and entities exist in heaven, as the visions suggest, and will occur or be revealed at the proper time. How they exist or when they come to be is never stated. The vision nevertheless guarantees the future deliverance of God's suffering people.

Besides these preexistent entities and events, Revelation also portrays the preexistent Christ. In the initial vision John sees one like a Son of Man whom he represents in images used to describe the Ancient of Days in Daniel 7:9-14. He discovers that this one is none other than the crucified and risen Jesus. The merging of this Son of Man with the Ancient of Days modifies the story in Daniel 7 and appears to identify Jesus with God. The basis for this revisionary reading is the resurrection,* which exalts the crucified one and makes him worthy of the worship accorded God (Rev 4:1—5:14). Such a claim clearly assumes the preexistence of Christ. This interpretation is made sure by the words of the Son of Man, who says, "I am the first and the last" (Rev 1:17; cf. 2:8). The claim to be "first" implies pretemporal existence.

The same expression is found at the end of the prophecy; this time, however, it is merged with other expressions implying preexistence: "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and the end" (Rev 22:13). The claim to be "the Alpha and the Omega" echoes the beginning of the prophecy (Rev 1:8) and the vision of the throne (Rev 21:6) in which the same formula expresses God's existence. By associating protology and eschatology so closely, the author envisions the dissolution of the present age and the arrival of the new creation that results in a new heaven and earth. The authority* Christ has to consummate the age is based ultimately upon his pretemporal activity as "the Alpha."

The Son of Man instructs John to write seven letters* to seven churches in Asia Minor. The letter addressed to the church in Laodicea comes from "the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of God's creation" (Rev 3:14). To be "the beginning of God's creation" may mean either the first created being or the origin or source of creation. It is likely that the latter is intended, given the use of similar language in other NT writings with creational mediation as the driving motif (cf. Jn 1:1-3; Col 1:15-16; Heb 1:2). Yet even if the writer intends the former, the first created being exists prior to the creation of other entities and before his historical manifestation as the man Jesus (Rev 1:18).

3. Post-New Testament Writings.

At the end of the apostolic age not all strains of Christianity profess the preexistence of Christ. The Ebionites,* for example, consider Jesus the Messiah but know nothing of the deity of Christ, his Virgin Birth or any notion of his personal preexistence.

The prevailing orthodoxy as expressed in the apostolic fathers* assumes the preexistence of Christ. Clement* of Rome writes that Christ spoke through the Spirit in the Psalms (1 Clem. 22.1). The author of the *Epistle to Barnabas declares that the Lord Jesus was present at creation and affirms that God addressed the statement "Let us make humanity in our image" (Gen 1:26) to him (Barn. 5.5; 6.12). Ignatius* states that the Son was "born and unborn, God in man" (Ign. Eph. 7.2), "God manifest in human form" (Ign. Eph. 19.3). According to R. E. Brown, Ignatius may be the first Christian theologian to link clearly the Virgin Birth with the Incarnation (Ign. Smyrn. 1.1), an association not made in the NT (Brown, 134). The author of 2 Clement understands that Christ was first Spirit and then became flesh to call humanity to salvation (2 Clem. 9.5). The Shepherd of Hermas appears to evidence a spirit christology as well. It describes the Holy Spirit as "preexistent" (proon), the agent of creation and made to dwell in human flesh (Herm. Sim. 5.6.5). As a reward for admirable service* to the Spirit, God chose this flesh to be a "companion" with the Spirit and so identified the Son with the Spirit (Herm. Sim. 9.1.1). At the same time Hermas can say the Son of God is older than creation, the Father's "counselor" (symboulon) in fashioning the world (Herm. Sim. 9.12.1-3).

In his defense of Christianity Justin Martyr develops a logos christology. Beginning with the Logos idea current in Stoicism and later Jewish thought, he presents the divine "Word" (logos) as God's agent of creation and revealer of truth* to humanity. Accordingly he narrates the OT and claims the Jewish ancestors and Moses experienced the Logos, God's offspring (Justin Dial. Tryph. 62.4), in a variety of forms. Called "angel," "God" and "Lord," the Logos is distinct from "the Maker of all things" numerically but not in will (Justin Dial. Tryph. 56.1-10). In Jesus Christ, the Logos took shape and became human (Justin Apol. I 5.4; Justin Apol. II 10.1). As a result Justin concludes that the OT theophanic appearances of the angel of YHWH were manifestations of the preexistent Christ (e.g., Justin Dial. Tryph. 56.1-10; 58.3; 59.1).

2 Clement envisions also the preexistence of the church. It states the first church, the spiritual church, was created before the sun and moon. The church, which is the body of Christ (cf. Eph 1:20-23), was Christ's companion from the beginning. Just as Jesus was manifest in the last days, so the preexistent church was manifest in him (2 Clem. 14.1-3).

4. Conclusion.

The presence of a preexistence christology in several books under a variety of forms suggests this doctrine held wide currency in Christian communities during the first and second centuries. Through the apocalyptic and wisdom traditions, Second Temple Judaism provided the cosmology and images to facilitate the attribution of preexistence to Christ and to see heavenly entities before they become earthly realities. The way NT and early patristic writers approached the subject insinuates it is known already in the churches. Since they do not give systematic treatment to the doctrine, important considerations are left undefined: the nature of preexistent entities and the point when they came to be.

Foundational to the doctrine of the preexistence of Christ is the belief that the crucified Jesus had been resurrected and exalted to the right hand of God. Scholars think most christological development proceeds from the resurrection. Early Christians' belief in and experience of the resurrected Christ served as the catalyst of many christological formulations, including preexistence. This perspective prompted them to apply to Jesus language and functions originally attributed to God the Father and Wisdom. In addition it led to revisionary readings of the OT that place the preexistent Christ in key moments of creative and redemptive history.

See also CHRISTOLOGY; GOD; LOGOS CHRISTOLOGY; LORD.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. E. Brown, An Introduction to New Testament Christology (New York: Paulist, 1994); D. B. Capes, Old Testament Yahweh Texts in Paul's Christology (WUNT 47; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1992); F. B. Craddock, The Preexistence of Christ in the New Testament (Nashville: Abingdon, 1968); O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1959); J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making: A New Testament Inquiry into the Origins of the Doctrine of the Incarnation (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1980); J. E. Fossum, The Name of God and the Angel of the Lord: The Origins of the Idea of Intermediation in Gnosticism (WUNT 36; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1985); R. H. Fuller, The Foundations of New Testament Christology (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1965); J. Habermann, Präexistenzaussagen im Neuen Testament (EH series 23, vol. 362; Frankfurt: Peter Lang, 1990); R. G. Hamerton-Kelly, Preexistence, Wisdom and the Son of Man: A Study of the Idea of Preexistence in the New Testament (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1973); M. J. Harris, Jesus As God: The New Testament Use of Theos in Reference to Jesus (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1992); M. Hengel, The Son of God: The Origin of Christology and the History of Jewish-Hellenistic Religion (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); L. W. Hurtado, One God, One Lord: Early Christian Devotion and Ancient Jewish Monotheism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); R. Jewett, ed., Christology and Exegesis: New Approaches (Semeia 30; Decatur, GA: Scholars Press, 1985); M. de Jonge, Christology in Context: The Earliest Christian Response to Jesus (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1988); J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Doctrines (rev. ed.; San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1978); I. H. Marshall, Jesus the Savior: Studies in New Testament Theology (Downer's Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1990); idem, The Origins of New Testament Christology (Leicester: Inter-Varsity Press, 1976); H. Merklein, "Zur Entstehung der urchristliche Aussage vom präexistenten Sohn Gottes" in Zur Geschichte des Urchristentums, ed. Gerhard Dautzenberg et al. (QD 87; Freiburg: Herder, 1979); J. T. Sanders, The New Testament Christological Hymns: Their Historical Religious Background (SNTSMS 15; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1971). D. B. Capes

PRESBYTERS. See CHURCH ORDER, GOVERNMENT.

PRIDE AND HUMILITY

In the NT a number of colorful words express the idea of pride. Alazoneia is the loud boasting of someone who has no basis for bragging. Closely related is kenodoxia ("empty conceit, vainglory"). Paul's favorite term for boasting, kauchēma, is found only once in later NT texts, where, however, it has a good connotation, "pride in hope" (Heb 3:6). Tolmēros, which is not found in later NT literature, means "audacious," and hybris is "pride" or "injury." Hybris is the main Greek word for the Promethian pride that resists the will of the gods and must be punished. It is rarely used with that meaning in the NT but more commonly with the idea of "insult" (Heb. 10:29) or "injury" (Acts 16:12, 22-24; 27:10, 21). The more common NT word for arrogant pride is hyperēphania or the adjective hyperēphanos, the latter of which occurs in several places (e.g., Jas 4:6; 1 Pet 5:5; 1 Clem. 16.2; 30.2; 59.3; Ign. Eph. 5.3). Hypsoō means "to exalt," and when it is used reflexively it can mean "self-exaltation." Physioō ("to blow up"), common in Paul's writings, with the same twist—to be puffed up with one's sense of self-importance—is not represented in the later NT but appears in Ignatius* (Ign. Trall. 4.1; Ign. Smyrn. 6.1).

The range of words for humility—mainly praÿtēs ("meekness") and tapeinophrosynē ("lowliness," "humility")—is more limited. Praÿtēs, meaning the gentle self-control that takes all of life in stride, was a favorite word with the Stoics. In the NT it refers more to one's relationship to God.* "Lowliness" was not considered a virtue by the Greeks but was viewed as weakness. Sometimes this negative meaning appears in the NT, as when Paul's opponents at Corinth remarked about the "weakness" of his personal demeanor (2 Cor 10:1) and when he referred to the artificial acts of self-abasement of the Colossian false teachers (Col 2:18, 23). The joining of humiliation with fasting is found in the Shepherd of Hermas (Herm. Man. 4.2.2; Herm. Sim. 5.3.7) and in Barnabas (Barn. 3.5, based on Is 58:10). Several times it refers to "humiliation" through persecution* in Acts* (Acts 20:19) or physical deprivation (Phil 4:12). The more usual NT meaning is "humility" in one's relationships, whether to God or to other persons (e.g., 1 Pet 5:8; Jas 4:6, utilizing the Gospel tradition of Mt 11:29; 23:12, and frequently in 1 Clement, e.g., 1 Clem. 62.2; cf. 1 Clem. 56.1; 58.2).

1. Humility in One's Relationship to God
2. Humility in One's Relationships with Others

1. Humility in One's Relationship to God.

The OT view of Israel's* relationship to God provides the background for the NT understanding of humility. God is Creator, and the creature should humbly submit to the Creator's will. Over against God, all human pride is sin and rebellion (Is 2:6-22; Ezek 16:49-50; Amos 6:8). God will not tolerate the haughty (Ps 101:5). The arrogant nation will not escape God's punishment (Is 10:12-19; Jer 50:29-32; Obad 1—4; neither will the arrogant person (2 Chron 26:16; Dan 5:20). God protects the humble (Is 61:1), however, and heeds the contrite spirit (Is 66:2). He defends the physically poor (Ex 23:6, 11; Deut 15:4, 7, 11). The "poor" are often virtually synonymous with the righteous*; they will experience God's mercy* (Zeph 2:3;,3:12-13). In Second-Temple Jewish literature the suffering righteous are those whom God exalts (Wis, Sir) in a pattern that the rabbis were to elaborate (see Kleinknecht).

The NT follows the same line: the proper religious attitude is submission to God, a teaching reflected in James 4:6-7 and 1 Peter 5:5. The congregants in James* are to have this spirit, which befits those who receive meekly God's word (Jas 1:21; 3:13), and in 1 Peter* leaders are to be examples to the people.

On the other side stands the arrogant, self-confident attitude that does not recognize any dependence on God or humbly submit to his will. It is the error of the merchants in James 4:16, who made all their plans but in their arrogant self-sufficiency left God out of the picture. It is a common trap for the rich, ensnared by the lust of the eyes and the pride of life (1 Jn 2:16; cf. 1 Tim 6:17). Later Christian writers often pointed to the danger of self-pride, born from the delusion of riches (Herm. Sim. 8.9.1). Not restricted to the rich, the peril is present as well for would-be teachers, to anyone who falls into the sin of presumption (Herm. Sim. 9.22.1-3; cf. Jas 3:1-12). Humanity owes all to the Creator; there is no room for his creatures to boast (1 Clem. 38.3-4).

Running throughout the NT teaching on humility is the theme of eschatological* reversal that goes back to the teaching of Jesus and beyond him to Jewish martyrology: "Whoever exalts themselves shall be brought down, and whoever brings themselves down shall be exalted" (Mt 23:12; Lk 14:11; 18:14). It is the OT theme of God overthrowing humanity's injustices, exalting the lowly and abasing the proud. It is the song of the coming messianic age that Mary* sings (Lk 1:51-53). It is echoed in James 1:9-10 and reechoed in James 4:6 and 1 Peter 5:5-6. The latter two are strikingly similar and may reflect a common teaching in the early church. Both quote Proverbs 3:34, which shares the same sentiment as Jesus' saying, which in turn is based on the rabbinic teaching of "my humiliation is my exaltation" (see Kleinknecht, Schweizer): God opposes the proud and shows favor to the lowly. Later Christian writers were also familiar with the proverb (1 Clem. 30.2; cf. Sir. 3:17-18).

Not only did Jesus teach reversal of the world's norms but also he embodied it in his own ministry.* He was "meek and lowly of heart" and bade his disciples to be the same (Mt 11:29). He entered Jerusalem* as its meek King in fulfillment of Zechariah 9:9 (Mt 21:5) and set an example of servanthood* by washing his disciples' feet (John 13:14-15; cf. 1 Tim 5:10). Above all he was obedient to God's will, even to the death of the cross* (Phil 2:5-11; see Death of Christ).

Later Christian writers appeal to Christ's* humility as an example to imitate (Heb 12:2-3; 1 Pet 2:18-24; and Rev 14:4, where "following the lamb" is a key idiom; see Bauckham, 66-108; see Imitation; Lamb). This is particularly true of 1 Clement, where humility is held up as the essence of Christian living (1 Clem. 13, 14), and Christ's sufferings* are portrayed as the supreme example of humility (1 Clem. 2.1). Clement quotes all of Isaiah 53:1-12 and Psalm 22:6-8 to depict the humiliation of Christ (1 Clem. 16.16) and concludes with the question, If Christ was so humble in spirit what else could his followers be? (1 Clem. 16.17). Not content to end there, Clement launches into a long roll call of "pioneers in humility,' a list that includes Abraham,* Job and Moses* (1 Clem. 17), David (1 Clem. 18), Jacob (1 Clem. 31.4), and Esther (1 Clem. 55.6-7).

2. Humility in One's Relationships with Others. There are frequent references to pride and humility in the ethical* sections of the NT, especially in the virtue* and vice lists. In Mark 7:22 Jesus lists blasphemy and arrogance together as vices that come from within people and defile them. A similar linkage of self-willfulness and blasphemy occurs in 2 Peter 2:10. 2 Timothy 3:2 links boastfulness with love of money and self-love. Titus 1:7 lists arrogance as a quality that should not be found in a bishop. Later Christian literature continues to list pride among the deadly sins. Hermas, for example, lists five pride words in his vice catalog (Herm. Man. 8.3-5; cf. Didache and Barnabas with their common Two Ways moral teaching).

"Humility" often appears in lists of virtues. Sometimes the word is "meek" (prayïs, Mt 5:5; 1 Pet 3:4); sometimes it is "lowliness" (tapeinophrosynē; the adjective is found in 1 Pet 3:8). Meekness is necessary when sharing the faith* in adverse circumstances (1 Pet 3:15). People cannot claim meekness for themselves; it must be seen in them by others (1 Clem. 38.2).

Another traditional form of ethical teaching came into Christianity through Judaism*: that of the Two Ways. A section in the Qumran* Rule of the Community is devoted to the "two spirits" in humans, the spirit of truth and the spirit of error (1QS 3.13—4.26). Hermas employs the same device, sometimes speaking of "two angels" (Herm. Man. 6.2.2), sometimes of "two spirits" (Herm. Man. 11.8). The *Epistle of Barnabas and the *Didache both draw on a common source of Two Ways and are closely parallel in their treatment of pride (Barn. 19.6; Did. 3.9). In all these the evil way or spirit is characterized by arrogance, the righteous way or spirit by humility.

From Paul's emphasis on humility as a key to church unity, it was a small step for later writers to insist on humility for maintaining authority* in the congregation. This is true for 1 Peter and the Pastorals as well as for Ignatius, who condemned as being arrogant those who opposed the bishops (Ign. Eph. 5.3; see Church Order and Government). 1 Clement dwells on the virtues of humility, viewing meekness as a means of overcoming the Corinthians' opposition to their leaders (1 Clem. 48.6). It is better to be a humble member of Christ's flock than to be rich and famous but not share its spirit (1 Clem. 57.2).

See also ETHICS; MERCY; REPENTANCE, SECOND REPENTANCE; SIN, WICKEDNESS; SUFFERING; VIRTUES AND VICES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, The Theology of the Book of Revelation (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993); E. Best, 1 Peter (NCB; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977); E. J. Cook, "Meekness," IDB 3:334-35; P. H. Davids, The Epistle of James (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); B. S. Easton, "New Testament Ethical Lists," JBL 51 (1932) 1-12; W. Grundmann, "ταπεινός κτλ," TDNT 8:1-26; F. Hauck and S. Schultz, "πραύς, πραΰτης," TDNT 6:645-51; K. T. Kleinknecht, Der leidende Gerechtfertige (WUNT 2.13; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1984); L. H. Marshall, The Challenge of New Testament Ethics (London: Macmillan, 1946); W. A. Meeks, The Moral World of the First Christians (LEC 6; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1986); G. E. Mendenhall, "Humility," IDB 2:659-660; R. Schnackenburg, The Moral Teaching of The New Testament (New York: Herder & Herder, 1965); E. Schweizer, Lordship and Discipleship (London: SCM, 1960); M. J. Suggs, "The Christian Two Ways Tradition: Its Antiquity, Form and Function" in Studies in New Testament and Early-Christian Literature, ed. D. E. Aune (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1972). J. B. Polhill

PRIEST, HIGH PRIEST

In the later NT writings the word priest (hiereus) occurs three times in Acts, fourteen times in Hebrews and three times in Revelation. In Acts* it is used in a straightforward way during Luke's historical account, twice to refer to the Jerusalem priests (Acts 4:1; 6:7) and once to refer to a pagan priest of Jupiter (Acts 14:13). Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) uses it collectively to refer to the Christian church* ("kings and priests," Rev 1:6; 5:10; "priests," Rev 20:6). In Hebrews the old Israelite priesthood forms the framework for the author's depiction of Christ.

The term "high priest" (archiereus) follows the same pattern, being used in the historical sense twenty-two times in Acts for the leader(s) of the temple complex in Jerusalem, while in Hebrews it is used seventeen times either for Christ or for the OT figures who foreshadowed his work in the heavenly tent.

The word priest is never used in the NT for an individual Christian, and priestly language is used only once to explain a specifically ministerial role, when Paul, in a violent metaphor, speaks of his "priestly administration (hierourgounta) of the gospel of God that the sacrificial offering of the Gentiles may be acceptable, sanctified in the Holy Spirit" (Rom 15:16). In 1 Peter 2:9-10 the term is broadened to include the role of the people of God, who are designated in language drawn from Exodus 19 as the "new people" or God's choice, exercising the priestly ministry of praise.

1. Hebrews
2. Post-Apostolic Writers
3. Conclusion

1. Hebrews.

Hebrews* has been justly called the epistle of priesthood. Nowhere else in the NT is Christ's* work set forth against the background of the OT priesthood. He is our great high priest (Heb 4:14) who is able to "sympathize with our weaknesses" and who was "tempted in every point as we are" (Heb 4:15). But in setting forth Christ as a priest the author does not limit himself to the common Jewish stereotypes of a Jerusalem* priest. The epistle understands the sacrifice* of Christ in language taken from the levitical ritual but in no other way connects it with levitical sacrifices.

In setting forth the priesthood of Christ the author points his readers' attention away from Aaron, who embodies what might be called an exclusive priesthood (to which only a select few were admitted) to another OT figure, Melchizedek.* For this author the OT is a book of anticipation, and as such the priesthood of Christ is anticipated by Aaron only as "sketch" and "shadow" (Heb 8:5; 10:1), whereas in Melchizedek is seen the "likeness" of Christ (Heb 7:15). These two words, "shadow" and "likeness," are not used casually by the author; they point to two competing models of ministry.* The OT priesthood is "but a shadow of the good things to come instead of the true form of these realities" (Heb 10:1). Aaron had the trappings of priesthood, but he lacked the ability to enable worshipers to draw near to God.* The sacrifices appeared to solve the problem of human misery, but they did not have the power to purify the conscience* from dead works. It is different with Melchizedek, of whom the author declares, "resembling the Son of God he continues a priest forever" (Heb 7:3).

1.1. The Role of Melchizedek. Many modern interpreters have attempted to discover the true identity of Melchizedek in Hebrews, he who is "without father, without mother, without genealogy" (Heb 7:3), but most of their efforts have been unnecessary. For the author tells his readers plainly what Melchizedek's significance is. His priesthood is no shadow but participates in the reality of the priesthood of Christ. It was a genuine anticipation. For in Jesus "another priest arises in the likeness (homoiotēs) of Melchizedek, who has become a priest not according to a legal requirement concerning bodily descent but by the power of an indestructible life" (Heb 7:15). In other words, Melchizedek embodies a priesthood that is based not upon heredity or outward appointment but on the inner spiritual resources of a person's character. Through Melchizedek, Abraham* was enabled to draw near to God; even though he did not have any of the outward requirements of priesthood (e.g., correct parents or genealogy), nonetheless he acted as priest to Abraham.

The author's handling of Melchizedek requires careful and detailed examination. His interest in Psalm 110, one of the most popular testimonies used by the NT writers (cf. Mk 12:36; Acts 2:33-34; Rom 8:34; Eph 1:20; 1 Pet 3:22), leads him to ask after the identity of the mysterious personage of Hebrews 7:4. It would then be natural to go back to Genesis 14 for the answer. Part of the problem of modern interpreters who have grappled with the author's use of Melchizedek is the frugality of his explanations. He never explains, for instance, how for him Melchizedek became a priest or of what his "greatness" (Heb 7:4) consisted. Confining himself to the biblical account, he mentions only signs of that greatness—the blessing* of Abraham and the reception of tithes (Heb 7:1-2). Yet the most logical inference would be that for this author both Melchizedek's priesthood and his greatness resided in the quality of life he lived. This must remain the central point of comparison between the two figures—the possession of an ability to stand on the "godward" side of the human race (to borrow A. Nairne's phrase), an ability found not in any external system of law* but in the eternal will of God, a will that may be performed by those who know what that will is (Heb 10:5-18).

The so-called hymn* of Hebrews 7:3 continues to vex commentators and remains the main stumbling block to construing Melchizedek in purely human, historical terms. How is he "without father, without mother, without genealogy"? To this question there continue to be two frequent answers.

(1) The author intends a literal understanding of apatōr, amētōr, agenealogētos. Thus Melchizedek is seen as a supernatural, heavenly being. In defense of this view it must be admitted that apatōr and ametōr are used in pagan texts for the miraculous birth of deities or demigods. Its fatal objection in the context of Hebrews may be stated simply: if Melchizedek was not understood by the author to be a human being, his extensive arguments for the authority of Melchizedek over Abraham and Levi are unnecessary.

(2) The author intends a typological significance of these words that rests upon the rabbinical principle of quod non in Thora, non in mundo ("what is not in the Torah does not exist in the world"). Into this class fall those commentators who understand the author to be combating a view (such as is found in Qumran*) of Melchizedek as a supernatural, heavenly being similar to the archangel Michael. Thus through the use of typology the author is said to provide his counterargument; namely, that Melchizedek, far from being a supernatural being, anticipates only symbolically (in the remarks and silences of Scripture) the actual attributes of the eternal Son.*

But this view also has stumbling blocks. If Hebrews 5—7 constitutes the author's answer to a too-exalted view of Melchizedek, why then is nothing negative said about him? The other figures from the old covenant* are all treated in negative fashion: angels* (Heb 1—2) lack the exalted titles; Moses* is a servant* in God's house,* not Son (Heb 3—4); Aaron and the system he represents were never really able to remove sin (Heb 8—10). Nothing negative, however, is recorded against Melchizedek. In Hebrews, Melchizedek and Christ are not, as are Aaron and Christ, related as shadow to substance. It is not that Jesus has something really that Melchizedek has merely symbolically. The author's use of homoiotēs (Heb 7:15) strongly implies that what is said about the one must be construed in the same way as applying to the other.

The difficulty lies in finding the author's point of comparison between Melchizedek and Christ. It is useful to recall B. F. Westcott's (7) description of Christ's appointment as Son in Hebrews: it is an eternal appointment that has inceptive fulfillments in time but with no particular time at which it begins. Similarly the priesthood of Melchizedek and Christ is founded upon an eternal decree, and the force of their indestructible lives puts that decree into operation. Since their appointment is grounded in the eternal will of God and not in any set of outward human ordinances, there is no "beginning of days" to their priesthood; and since both live beyond death, there can be no end to their lives. (The author's reasoning comes very close to that of Mark 12:26-27: because God is the father of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, he is the God of the living, not of the dead.) Insofar as the figure of Psalm 110:4 is "like" the priest Melchizedek, it is "witnessed" that Melchizedek "lives." And if he lives, his priesthood must therefore be perpetual. In other words, a comparison of Hebrews 7:3, 8 with Hebrews 7:24 suggests that the same thing is being said about both Melchizedek and Christ.

For this writer Melchizedek and Christ are priests "continually" (eis to diēnekes, Heb 7:3; eis ton aiōna, Heb 7:24). F. L. Horton and D. M. Hay have correctly perceived that the burden of Hebrews 7:13-28 is the question of priesthood rather than that of any divine qualities. This then puts the expositor into a position to understand the author's distinctive use of Melchizedek. The question he is asking is, What is the basis of the respective OT priesthoods? Since Aaron's was founded on an external system of rules and regulations, his days as priest were numbered: they commenced with the initiatory rite (when the Levite reached a certain age—thirty) and were terminated by death. Melchizedek's days as priest had no such temporally conditioned beginning, insofar as they were rooted in the eternal will of God. It is important to recognize that the phrases "no beginning of days" and "no end of life" are not strictly parallel. One looks backward, drawing the readers' attention to a superior priesthood within God's predestining purposes; the other looks forward, impelling the readers to consider the afterlife. While "no end of life" includes the idea of perpetual priesthood, it widens in scope to include the resurrection* life* itself.

That the known terms apatōr and amētōr are combined with agenealogētos, a word apparently coined by the author, suggests strongly that he employs the first two terms in an unusual sense. He is qualifying the two familiar terms with the third, as if to say, "and by that I mean . . . " Agenealogētos thus indicates not biology but the absence of any genealogical credentials for priesthood. Remaining doubts as to this point are removed by Hebrews 7:13-14: there the author admits that Jesus did come from the tribe of Judah. What is true of Jesus—that he had a human genealogy—for this writer cannot have been untrue of Melchizedek.

The term taxis in the Septuagint of Psalm 110:4 has also resulted in considerable misunderstanding. The common translation, "order," implies "succession," but this is not the author's idea. It is much better translated "character" (see Heb 7:15, whereas tēn homoiotēta is a clear paraphrase of the kata of Ps 110:4). The author's argument in Hebrews 5:6, Hebrews 6:20, and so forth, may therefore be paraphrased, "You are a priest forever, according to the character of Melchizedek" (or, "just as Melchizedek is"). Melchizedek has a character dependent upon not any external ordinance but the prior, eternal will of God, and as such his priesthood is of the same substance as that of Christ.

1.2. The Role of Aaron and the Levitical Priests. The correspondences between Christ and the Aaronic priesthood are, as we have seen, drawn differently from those of Melchizedek. Aaron's priesthood relates to Christ's as shadow to substance (Heb 8:5; 10:1). Positive correspondences are clearly drawn, but the ancient rituals are a "sketch and shadow" (hypodeigma kai skia, Heb 8:5 NRSV) of the heavenly things and Christ's ministry in them. The author is interested in the levitical service in which the priest is chosen from among men and appointed by God (Heb 5:1; 8:3) to serve in the earthly sanctuary (see Tabernacle), and he is particularly interested in the ritual of the Day of Atonement, wherein the animal was killed and its blood brought into the holy of holies by the high priest (Heb 9:7) so that the people might have access to God (Heb 4:16; 7:18-28; 10:1, 19, 22).

In a similar but superior way Jesus has entered the "greater and more perfect tent made without hands" (Heb 9:11) and into "the holy place, not through the blood of goats and calves but through his own blood, thus securing an eternal redemption" (Heb 9:12). Despite what is often said, the author is not saying anything platonic in these passages, as if countering the heavenly to the earthly as ideal versus material. He is working with a biblical, horizontal promise-fulfillment scheme, maintaining that, once the superiority of Christ's priesthood is recognized, the OT ritual has much to offer as a picture book (or sketchbook) of Christ's priestly work. It makes the real thing recognizable when it comes. The old covenant priesthood was valuable in its day in that it pointed the way forward to Christ's priesthood (cf. Paul's similar point in Gal 3:23-26; there the law* is our "tutor" to lead us to faith*).

2. Post-Apostolic Writers.

Among the apostolic fathers* the idea of Christ as priest or high priest is found in Ignatius* ("Priests are a fine thing, but better still is the high priest who was entrusted with the holy of holies"; Ign. Phld. 9.1); 1 Clement 91.3 ("through the high priest and guardian of our souls") and 1 Clement 36.1 ("the high priest of our offerings, the protector and helper of our weakness"); and the Martyrdom of Polycarp 14.3 ("through the eternal and heavenly high priest, Jesus"). For Justin Martyr the twelve apostles* are "the bells on the garment of the high priest." Clement of Alexandria and Origen refer to Jesus as "great" high priest (Clement of Alexandria Strom. 6.153-54; Origen Comm. Joh. 6.53, 275), while Origen adds the terms true (alēthinos) and perfect (teleios) to the term archiereus (Origen Hom. in Jos. 26.3; Comm. Joh. 28.1, 6). Other phrases such as "logos high priest" and "Christ priest" are found in Justin, Clement of Alexandria and Origen (cf. the references in Schrenk). In these various instances the Fathers are clearly developing the metaphorical language of the author of Hebrews in ways consistent with but less imaginative than his usage.

The apostolic fathers also refer to humans as priests. Both Justin (Justin Apol. I 2) and Ignatius (Ign. Eph. 5.9) refer to the whole people of God (see Church as Israel) as a "royal priesthood," following 1 Peter.* Didache 13.3 cites the prophets* as high priests, indicating the respect due to them. And Ignatius frequently refers to the bishop as priest or high priest (e.g., Ign. Eph.; Ign. Magn. 3.11, 19; Ign. Phld. 4.11; Ign. Smyrn. 9.17).

3. Conclusion.
The author of Hebrews bases much of his understanding of Jesus as priest on one OT passage, Psalm 110. Since this text was composed at a time when the temple* ritual was in the hands of the levitical priests who traced their ancestry to Aaron, the question is raised, Why should the psalmist imagine a day when God would inaugurate a new priestly order? The answer is that for the author the present order was unsatisfactory. He then takes his readers on a relatively modern exegesis of Genesis 14, not to provide a fantastic allegory like that of Philo* of Alexandria but to ask the question, What did the words "priest forever after the order of Melchizedek" mean to the psalmist who wrote them? For him Psalm 110 is a claim by the psalmist that a new priesthood was needed to intercede between God and his creatures, and he found that in the figure of the priest-king Melchizedek of Genesis 14, who is like Jesus in that his priesthood is based on character and rooted in the eternal will of God rather than in any outward human ordinances.

Aaron's role in the levitical ritual is then seen (Heb 8—10) as a helpful sketching, ahead of time, of Christ's work in the heavenly sanctuary, but Aaron's priesthood relates to that of Christ as shadow to reality rather than partaking of the substance of Christ's work. The readers of Hebrews, failing to see this, are in danger of lapsing back into the than benefiting from the full substance of Christ's sacrificial ministry on their behalf.

See also MELCHIZEDEK; TABERNACLE, SANCTUARY; TEMPLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. W. Attridge, The Epistle to the Hebrews (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1989); J. Baer, "Priest," NIDNTT 3:32-44; F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1964); G. B. Caird, "The Exegetical Method of the Epistle to the Hebrews," CJT 5 (1959) 44-61; idem, New Testament Theology, completed and ed. L. D. Hurst (Oxford: Clarendon, 1994); P. Ellingworth, The Epistle to the Hebrews (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993); D. A. Hagner, Hebrews (San Francisco: Harper, 1983); D. M. Hay, Glory at the Right Hand: Psalm 110 in Early Christianity (Nashville: Abingdon, 1973); F. L. Horton, The Melchizedek Tradition (SNTSMS 30; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1976); L. D. Hurst, The Epistle to the Hebrews: Its Background of Thought (SNTSMS 65; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1990); M. Isaacs, Sacred Space: An Approach to the Theology of the Epistle to the Hebrews (JSNTSup 73; Sheffield: JSOT, 1992); D. Juel, Messianic Exegesis: Christological Interpretation of the Old Testament in Early Christianity (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); S. J. Kistemaker, The Psalm Citations in the Epistle to the Hebrews (Amsterdam: van Soest, 1961); G. E. Ladd, A Theology of the New Testament, ed. D. A. Hagner (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993); W. L. Lane, Hebrews (2 vols; WBC; Dallas: Word, 1991); B. Lindars, The Theology of the Letter to the Hebrews (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991); O. Michel, "Μελχισέδεκ," TDNT 4:568-71; A. Nairne, The Epistle of Priesthood (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1913); D. Peterson, Hebrews and Perfection: An Examination of the Concept of Perfection in the Epistle to the Hebrews (SNTSMS 47; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1982); G. Schrenk, "ἱερός κτλ," TDNT 3:221-83; B. F. Westcott, The Epistle to the Hebrews (London: Macmillan, 1989 [1892]); R. Williamson, Philo and the Epistle to the Hebrews (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1970). L. D. Hurst

PRISCILLA. See WOMEN IN THE EARLY CHURCH.

PROMISE

In Christian literature God's activity spans the time frames of past, present and future. The concept of promise weds the three into a composite picture of God's involvement in the concerns of his people. In the NT and the apostolic fathers,* promise refers to both the pledge made by God* and the substantive fulfillment of that pledge in relation to his covenant* people, centering especially in God's gift of salvation* through Jesus Christ, who inaugurates salvation in the present age and will consummate it at the Parousia.*

1. The Concept as Expressed in the New Testament
2. The Concept Outside the New Testament
3. Promise in Acts, Hebrews, General Epistles and Revelation
4. Promise in the Apostolic Fathers
5. Conclusions

1. The Concept as Expressed in the New Testament.
Although authors of the NT utilize the words hosios (Acts 13:34) and pistis (1 Tim 5:2) to communicate the idea of promise, epangelia and its cognates are the primary conveyors of the concept. The term epangelia occurs fifty-two times and has wide distribution especially in Acts,* portions of Pauline literature and Hebrews.* Usage is noticeably absent from the Gospels with the exception of Luke 24:49, where Jesus speaks of the promised Holy Spirit.* The verbal form epangellomai enjoys a similar distribution but is employed only fifteen times. Proepangellomai, "to promise beforehand," and epangelma each are used only twice in the NT.

2. The Concept Outside the New Testament.
No single term conveys the idea of promise in the OT, the authors using a variety of common words such as dbr ("to speak") and 'amar ("to say") to express the idea of God's pledge. God's declaration of his intentions for his people nevertheless plays a central role in the OT. God's promises to his covenant people are grounded especially in the foundation stories of the nation (Weinfeld, 353) and particularly in the promises to Abraham* concerning the land,* the greatness and vastness of his descendants and the nation's role in blessing* all the peoples of the earth (Gen 15:1-6; 17:3-8; 22:15-18).

In the Septuagint the translators use the term epangelia most often to communicate the promise one person makes to another, especially in political contexts (e.g., 1 Esdr 1:7; Esther 4:7; 1 Macc 10:15). God's covenant promise is in view only at 2 Maccabees 2:17-18 and 3 Maccabees 2:10, where the verbal form is used. These two passages are especially significant since they address God's attention to and salvation of his people, notions related to uses made of the epangelia word group in the NT.

In the broader Greco-Roman world the term epangelia could convey the idea of a command, summons, notification, offer, promise, profession or undertaking. As in the Septuagint, the most common usage is in military and diplomatic contexts. In these contexts a commander or an official might make a promise communicating self-resolve, exhortation to the promisee, deception or encouragement. Furthermore, a speaker might point to past promises, made by himself or another, as reminders, exemplary illustrations, exhortations to purity* and endurance,* thanksgivings, appeals or criticisms (Worley, 18-67).

3. Promise in Acts, Hebrews, General Epistles and Revelation.
Almost half the uses of epangelia in the NT are found in Acts and Hebrews, their authors employing the word twenty-two times. The term also finds expression at 2 Peter 3:4, 2 Peter 3:9 and 1 John 2:25. Nine of the fifteen occurrences of epangellomai in the NT are found in Acts, Hebrews, James,* 2 Peter* and 1 John (see John, Letters of). 2 Peter 1:4 and 2 Peter 3:13 contain the only two uses of epangelma in NT literature. When these uses of epangelia and its cognates are surveyed three distinct categories may be delineated: a person's promise to another person; promise as a component of Israel's* foundation stories; and promise and eschatological* salvation.

Acts 23:12-22 records a plot against Paul's life and the report concerning that plot made by Paul's nephew to the Roman commander in Jerusalem. In the boy's report he says that the Jews await the commander's promise (epangelia) granting their request for another interrogation of Paul. Of the NT occurrences this one fits the most common secular uses of the day. 2 Peter 2:19 also records the promise made on the person-to-person level. In this text false teachers offer the empty promise of freedom* to the immature.

The promises made to Abraham form not only the foundation of Israel's history but also the foundation of the NT theology of promise. Especially in Acts and Hebrews Abraham is presented as the paradigmatic receptor of God's promises. God called Abraham out of Mesopotamia and promised him descendants and a new land (Acts 7:5, 17). As the promisee, Abraham exercised faith* in response to the promise and thus received God's favor. Remaining faithful to God, although he did not receive the fulfillment of the promise in his lifetime, he offers an example to those promised the new covenant (Heb 6:13-15; 7:6; 11:8-19).

The great theological focal point for the NT teaching on promise lies in a soteriological framework. God's promises through the ages are summed up in the person of Christ and the salvation he brings. This salvation has been inaugurated in his new covenant community and will be consummated at the end of the age.

Most uses of the promise motif in Acts relate to aspects of salvation as inaugurated in God's people in the present age. The Holy Spirit about whom Jesus spoke to his disciples (Acts 1:4), that Spirit he received from the Father (Acts 2:33) and poured out on the new community, is the promised gift received at the inauguration of salvation (Acts 2:38-38). The coming of Jesus, a Savior who would provide forgiveness* of sins* and justification, was promised to the ancestors* (Acts 13:23, 32). God's fulfillment of that promise appears dramatically in the resurrection* of Jesus from the dead (Acts 13:33-39; 26:6-8).

Some scholars have seen this promise-fulfillment motif as a theological center for Acts, guaranteeing continuity with OT Israel and instilling hope* in the persecuted Christian community (Karris; see Persecution). The motif is better seen as one important component in the complex of Luke's theology (Talbert, 91). Although Acts seems to emphasize the inauguration of eschatological salvation, the close ties to resurrection from the dead and the day of the Lord (Acts 2:20) also anticipate the consummation of that salvation at the end of the age (Kaiser, 116-22).

The exact delineation of now-and-not-yet tensions in Hebrews is notoriously difficult and displayed in the author's uses of epangelia and epangellomai. The promises found in the new covenant certainly relate to the establishment of a relationship with God and forgiveness of sins (Heb 8:6-12; Jer 31:31-34; Heb 9:15). In Hebrews 4:1 the promise of rest as presented concerns hearing the gospel* with faith, but the author's audience needs perseverance to receive what has been promised (Heb 4:11; 6:12; 10:23, 36). As a future component in the author's message, the promised inheritance plays an important role in the dichotomy of decision facing the hearers. The word of God to them is either a word of punishment (e.g., Heb 2:1-4; 3:7-11) or a word of promise. If they do not heed the warnings they will fall back through unbelief; but if they endure by receiving the author's encouragement and the positive examples of the OT faithful, they will inherit the fulfillment of the promises. This hope ultimately resides in the faithfulness of God as the new-covenant promise maker (Heb 6:17; 10:23) (Rose, 188-89). He has brought new-covenant salvation to his people on the basis of his promises and will consummate that salvation at the end of the age, at which time he has promised to shake heaven* and earth (Heb 12:26).

The scope of God's promises also becomes apparent in the General Epistles. At 2 Peter 1:4 and 1 John 2:25 God's promises concern the quality of life experienced by believers. However, the full realization of God's promises will be obtained at the promised coming of Christ (2 Pet 3:4; 3:9). Believers will receive the crown of life (Jas 1:12) and a kingdom* (Jas 2:5) and will experience the new heaven and earth (2 Pet 3:13).

4. Promise in the Apostolic Fathers.

When one considers the concept of promise as utilized in the so-called apostolic fathers, there appears both continuity with and some slight divergence from Acts, Hebrews and the General Epistles. Forms of the noun epangelia and its verbal cognate epangellomai occur thirty-three times in the apostolic fathers, nineteen of these being nouns and fourteen appearing as verbs or participles. In general the uses may be categorized as in our treatment of the NT literature.

For example, one finds a person's promise to another person in the *Shepherd of Hermas (Herm. Vis. 3.2.3; Herm. Sim. 5.2.7). In the former Hermas begs a heavenly messenger, the "Lady," to show him the vision* she had promised him. In the latter passage (Herm. Sim. 5.2.7) the master in the parable promises freedom to his faithful slave.* The master makes good his promise and eventually makes the servant (see Servant) joint heir with his son. One also finds an interesting reference (Herm. Man. 9.10) in which faith is personified and said to promise and perfect all things.

Promise also occurs in the apostolic fathers with reference to the foundation stories. In 1 Clement 10.2 the author speaks of the faithfulness and obedience* of Abraham, who inherited the promises of God. This passage plays part in an example list (1 Clem. 9-12) similar to that found in Hebrews 11:1-40. 1 Clement 32.2 notes the promise "your seed shall be as the stars of heaven," a promise fulfilled by God's blessings on the patriarch's kingly descendants.

As in the NT, the apostolic fathers are most interested in promise as related to the character of God. God may give a specific promise (2 Clem. 15.4; Herm. Vis. 3.1.2; Ign. Trall. 11.2) or may be referred to as one who is faithful to his promises in general (1 Clem. 27.1; Herm. Vis. 2.2.6; 5.7; Herm. Sim. 1.7). However, unlike the NT, the apostolic fathers are far more focused on God's promises as they relate to future reward* than the promise of salvation's inauguration, possible references to the latter occurring only in the *Epistle of Barnabas 5.7, 6.17 and 16.9. For those who persevere in waiting and are faithful, Christ leads them to rest in the coming kingdom (Barn. 15.7; 2 Clem. 5.5; Diogn. 10.2), and the evil pleasures of this life cannot compare with the joys* and rewards of that promised life to come (1 Clem. 35.4; 2 Clem. 10.3-4; 11.6). In 1 Clement 26.1 the author speaks of the promised resurrection, having used the dying and rising phoenix as an illustration. Those who have suffered for the Name* have greater glory* than the rest of believers but share in the same gifts and promises (Herm. Vis. 3.2.1).

5. Conclusions.

It is important to note that the promise motif in Acts, Hebrews and the General Epistles finds expression most often in the context of preaching.* In Acts the preachers Peter, Stephen* and Paul use the motif in their sermons (Acts 2:33-39; 7:17; 13:23-32; 26:6). The author of Hebrews, an excellent example of early Christian homiletics, makes ready use of epangelia in the hortatory sections of the work. Just as promises were used to motivate hearers in military and diplomatic contexts of the ancient world, NT preachers appropriate epangelia and cognates to help their hearers draw the connection between the faithfulness of God and the hearers' faith response to God's promises. The apostolic fathers continue this message, focusing on the eschatological hope of future, promised rewards.

See also ABRAHAM; ESCHATOLOGY; HEBREWS; HOPE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. F. F. Bruce, ed., Promise and Fulfillment: Essays Presented to Professor S. H. Hooke (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1963); J. A. Fitzmyer, "The Use of the Old Testament in Luke-Acts" in SBLSP (1992), 524-38; E. Hoffmann, "Promise," NIDNTT 3:68-74; W. C. Kaiser Jr., "The Promise of God and the Outpouring of the Holy Spirit" in The Living and Active Word of God: Studies in Honor of Samuel J. Schultz, ed. M. A. Inch and R. Youngblood (Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 1983), 109-22; R. Karris, What Are They Saying About Luke-Acts? (New York: Paulist, 1979); P. S. Minear, "Promise," IDB 3:893-96; C. Rose, "Verheissung und Erfühllung: Zum Verständnis von ἐπαγγελία im Hebräerbrief," BZ 33 (1989) 178-91; A. Sand, "ἐπαγγελία κτλ," EDNT 2:13-16; C. H. Talbert, "Promise and Fulfillment in Lukan Theology" in Luke-Acts, ed. C. H. Talbert (New York: Crossroad, 1984) 91-103; M. Weinfeld, "The Promise to the Patriarchs and Its Realization: An Analysis of Foundation Stories" in Society and Economy in the Eastern Mediterranean (c. 1500-1000 B.C.), ed. M. Heltzer and E. Lipiski (Louvain: Uitgeverij Peeters, 1988) 353-69; D. R. Worley, "God's Faithfulness to Promise: The Hortatory Use of Commissive Language in Hebrews," (Unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Yale University, 1981). G. H. Guthrie

PROPHECY, PROPHETS, FALSE PROPHETS

The Gospels depict John the Baptist and Jesus as prophets and make Jesus the one who bestows the Holy Spirit* on his disciples. For Paul the universal gift of the Holy Spirit means among other things that the Christian community is a body in which there are many members, each with his or her own ministry.* These ministries exercised by the grace* (charisma) given by God are numerous and varied, and none is more important than that of prophecy (1 Cor 14:1-5). Luke, the author of the book of Acts,* and John, the author of the book of Revelation (see Revelation, Book of), also highlight the ministry of prophecy, but each in his own way says something distinctive on this matter. In the second century, prophets and prophecy continue to be known, although a diminution in prophetic ministry can be seen.

1. Acts
2. General Epistles
3. Revelation
4. Postapostolic Age

1. Acts.

The importance of prophecy for Luke is immediately brought to the reader's attention by the prominent use of the extended quotation from the OT prophet Joel in Acts 2:17-21 (see Old Testament in Acts). This text assumes that when the Spirit is universally given to God's* people they will all prophesy (Acts 2:17-18). Luke understands that this prediction was fulfilled when the Holy Spirit was given on the day of Pentecost,* thereby inaugurating "the last days" (Acts 2:17). A new age of prophecy had dawned. All agree that Luke is especially interested in prophecy, but who should be considered a prophet in Acts and how we are supposed to understand this ministry are debated questions. In broad terms two schools of thought about early Christian prophecy bear upon the interpretation of the data in Acts. One limits early Christian prophecy to episodic, oracular utterances that are spoken on the basis of supernaturally given revelation* via dreams, visions* and angelic* visitors (e.g., Aune, Dautzenberg). The other holds that early Christian prophecy was not a narrowly defined phenomenon and could take many forms, the oracular utterance given by direct divine intervention being but one form (e.g., Ellis, Hill, Dunn). It would seem that the Lukan writings support the latter position. Luke defines Jesus (see DJG, Luke, Gospel of §3.2) and all the leading figures in Acts in prophetic terms and allows that all forms of authoritative proclamation may be thought of as prophecy.

1.1. The Prophetic Spirit in Acts. In Lukan theology a disciple is someone who knows the blessing of sins forgiven (see Forgiveness) and the experience of the divine presence. In the Gospel narrative the disciple encounters the divine presence in the company of Jesus; in Acts the divine presence is known in the gift of the Holy Spirit whom Luke can call "the Spirit of Jesus" (Acts 16:7). When Luke speaks of the gift of the Spirit he insists that it is given to "all" who respond to the proclamation of the gospel* (Acts 2:4, 17; 4:31; 10:44), but he does not inseparably link believing in Christ, water baptism* and the reception of the Holy Spirit. The three can be conjoined (Acts 2:38), but sometimes believing and baptism go together and the reception of the Spirit follows (Acts 8:12-15), and sometimes believing comes first and the reception of the Spirit and baptism follow (Acts 9:17-18). Luke implies that all three are part of the normal Christian life, but in telling his story he does not let doctrine determine the order.

The Spirit as the divine presence with the believer enables prophecy (Acts 2:17-18; 19:6). But while the Spirit makes it possible for all to prophesy Luke insists that prophecy tended to manifest itself preeminently through certain "leading men" (Acts 15:22) who thus became known as "prophets," as well as a few leading women* (Acts 21:9).

1.2. The Prophets in Acts. Luke suggests that prophecy was pervasive in the early church and that a number of people in each Christian community came to be recognized as prophets. He mentions one group of prophets who belong to the church in Jerusalem,* among whom he names Agabus (Acts 11:27-28; 21:10), Judas and Silas (Acts 15:22-32). Another group is found at Antioch,* of whom he names Barnabas, Symeon, Lucius, Manaen and Paul (Acts 13:1). The four daughters of Philip* resident in Caesarea are usually taken as another group since Luke makes it clear by the use of the present tense (prophēteuousai) that they prophesied regularly (Acts 21:9). Although these prophets are associated with particular Christian communities, some of them at least on occasion traveled. In two instances Agabus is found outside Jerusalem, once in Antioch (Acts 11:27-28) and once in Caesarea (Acts 21:10). After the Jerusalem council (Acts 15) the assembled leaders send the prophets Judas and Silas to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas to pass on the decree, given in letter form (Acts 15:22-32). Luke then speaks of them exercising their prophetic ministry by encouraging and strengthening the church (Acts 15:32).

It seems that Luke deliberately draws Christian leaders as prophets. This is often indicated by speaking of such people as "full" (plērēs) of the Holy Spirit (Acts 6:3, 5, 8; 7:55; 11:24)—a continuous state. Barnabas, for example, is one of those so designated (Acts 11:24), but in introducing him in Acts 4:36 Luke says he was given this name presumably to indicate his characteristic ministry. Previously he had been known as Joseph the Levite from Cyprus. Barnabas is a Semitic name that Luke takes to mean "son of exhortation or encouragement" (hyios paraklēsis). Hebrew or Aramaic parallels and other uses of the word paraklēsis in Acts and the NT suggest that Luke is introducing Barnabas as "a son of prophecy" (i.e., a prophet; Ellis, Hill, Brock). In Acts 13:1 Barnabas (see DPL, Barnabas) is called a prophet.

Paul likewise is drawn as a prophet (see DPL, Prophet, Paul as). At the conclusion of the first account of his encounter with the risen Christ Paul is filled with the Holy Spirit (Acts 9:17). Luke gives this story three times (Acts 9:1-19; 22:4-16; 26:9-19), and while it is usually called Paul's conversion, the OT parallels suggest Paul's life-changing experience should also be understood as his commissioning as a prophet to the nations (cf. Is 49:6; Jer 1:5-7; see DPL, Conversion and Call, §3.3).

Peter, the leader of the twelve apostles,* is never explicitly called a prophet, but when Luke says Peter preached "filled with the Holy Spirit" (Acts 4:8; cf. 2:4, 14) he is indicating that the apostle spoke under divine initiative: as a prophet.

Stephen* is also depicted as a prophet. He is permanently "full of the Holy Spirit" (Acts 6:4; 7:55). His long sermon not only appeals frequently to the OT prophets but also reads like one of their speeches. He denounces Israel's* leaders for their hardness of heart and vain confidence in the temple.* This leads to his death, which Luke understood is the fate of the prophet (Lk 6:23; 11:48-50; 13:34).

Philip, another of the Seven, is also said to be "full of the Spirit." Admittedly Luke once calls him "the evangelist" (Acts 21:8), probably to distinguish him from one of the Twelve* with that name, but otherwise he too is depicted in prophetic terms. An angel of the Lord sends him on his mission (Acts 8:26), the Holy Spirit directs him to approach the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:29), and when Philip had baptized him, "the Spirit" snatched Philip away. The imagery of the Spirit transporting a person is reminiscent of what happened to certain OT prophets (see 1 Kings 18:12; 2 Kings 2:9-16; Ezek 3:12, 14).

1.3. Prophetic Speech. D. E. Aune (262-68) limits the examples of early Christian prophetic speech in Acts to two predictive oracles by Agabus (Acts 11:28; 21:11) and three oracles of assurance given to Paul (Acts 18:9-10; 23:11; 27:23-24). In Acts 11:28 Agabus predicts through the Spirit that a severe famine will soon come and in Acts 21:11 that Paul will be arrested and handed over to the Gentiles* if he goes to Jerusalem. The second of these narratives is particularly important, first, because it provides the only example in the NT of a prophecy with the introductory formula "the Holy Spirit says." This is to be taken as the Christian counterpart of the OT messenger formula "thus says the Lord." Second, only here is there to be seen an instance of a Christian prophet performing a symbolic action that he then interprets by a prophetic word. The three assurance oracles are given by dream or vision to Paul. The first two are recounted by Luke, and the third is retold by Paul in a speech to the crew and passengers in the storm-tossed ship. The revealer in the first two is the Lord (Jesus) and in the third an angel of God.

But if Luke has a broader definition of prophecy than Aune allows, then many more examples of prophetic speech may be found in Acts (see in particular Turner 1992, 38). These include (1) prophecies grounded on specific revelation that at some later time are passed on to one or more persons--an example of this is when Peter tells those assembled in the home of Cornelius* of his vision (Acts 10:30-33); (2) prophecies that come from immediate inspiration such as when the Holy Spirit directed the church at Antioch to "set apart for me Barnabas and Saul" (see also Acts 13:9; 21:11; cf. Lk 1:41, 67); (3) words of exhortation and encouragement spoken by prophets to assembled believers (Acts 14:22; 15:32, 41; 18:23); (4) expository sermons in which the interpretation and the application are given by the Holy Spirit (Acts 4:8-12; 7:2-53; 13:16-41); (5) praise addressed to God in a language not known to the speaker (Acts 2:4, 11; 10:46; 19:6; in this view tongues* is a special form of prophecy.) Examples can be multiplied, but Luke does not give enough information to enable exact classification of all his allusions to prophetic speech. The fact that Luke can speak of certain people as "prophets and teachers" (Acts 13:1) also suggests that for him prophecy was not narrowly defined.

1.4. The Source of the Prophetic Message. The differing forms of prophecy imply differing means of charismatic revelation. The quotation from Joel highlights the importance of visions and dreams (Acts 2:17) in imparting revelation that provides the content for specific prophecies. Except for the book of Revelation no other writing in the NT says more about visions, supernatural voices and dreams than Acts (see Acts 8:26; 9:10; 10:3, 17, 19; 11:5, 7; 16:9; 18:9; etc.). But Luke seems to allow that prophetic inspiration can come in less specific ways as well. Sometimes prophetic speech erupts as the Holy Spirit comes upon a person in an episodic way (Acts 4:18-31; 13:9). At other times, such as with the ministry of exhortation and charismatically inspired expository preaching,* the mind of the speaker seems to be more active. In these examples, Luke suggests, the Spirit imparts divine wisdom* and boldness of speech (Acts 4:13, 29, 31; 9:29; etc.) rather than specific content. In Luke's account of Stephen's ministry he notes not only that Stephen is full of the Spirit but also that he is full of wisdom (Acts 6:3, 5, 10). If Stephen's sermon illustrates such inspiration, then prophetic speech, at least as far as Luke is concerned, is not always grounded in supernaturally disclosed revelation. Prophecy may also be a form of Spirit-guided preaching that builds on perceived insights into how Scripture once given now speaks to the present, particularly in relation to the Christ event.

1.5. False Prophecy. There are no warnings about or examples of false Christian prophets or prophecy in Acts, but Luke recounts one story about "a false Jewish prophet" (Acts 13:6) and one about a slave* girl, presumably a pagan, "who had a spirit of divination which brought her owners much gain by soothsaying" (Acts 16:16). These narratives are a reminder that prophecy of one form or another was a common feature of first-century Mediterranean life. In Paul's final address to the Ephesian elders (Acts 20:17-35) he says, "I know that after my departure savage wolves will come in among you, not sparing the flock. Some even from your own group will come distorting the truth" (Acts 20:29-30). The introductory "I know" suggests that this is a prophecy (cf. Rev 2:2, 9, 13, 19; 3:1, 8, 15), but the "savage wolves" are not identified as prophets. The task of the elders is to guard the flock (see Shepherd) against such persons (Acts 20:28), some of whom may be false prophets.

2. General Epistles.

2.1. The Johannine Epistles. John's Gospel and the epistles of John (see John, Letters of) reflect an abiding awareness of the dynamic presence of the Holy Spirit, and in the latter case this is explicitly associated with prophetic activity. In 1 John 2:20, 26-27 the author claims that the anointing* (chrisma) of the Holy Spirit gives personal knowledge* of the truth* that will protect believers from those "who would deceive." In 1 John 4:1-3 these deceivers are identified as false prophets. The readers are told "to test the spirits to see whether they are from God; for many false prophets have gone out into the world." This comment suggests that prophecy was well known and usually accepted as from God. The author does not question the prophetic ministry as such but insists that it must be judged by its content: a true prophecy will acknowledge that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh* (1 Jn 4:2-3). Prophecies that do not make this confession (see Creeds) come from the antichrist* (1 Jn 4:3).

2.2. 2 Peter and Jude. Both 2 Peter* and Jude* are polemical documents written to counter the influence of false teachers in the churches addressed. Most modern commentators hold that 2 Peter is dependent on Jude, but from this it should not be concluded that the same group or error is combated in both epistles.

In Jude the author's adversaries* are drawn as itinerant, antinomian prophets. They reject all moral authority* (Jude 4, 8-10), arguing that those who possess the Spirit (Jude 19) are the judge of their own actions (cf. Jude 9). These people clearly claim to be Christians, for they take part in the Eucharist (Jude 12). Jude's categorical reply is that they are in fact "devoid of the [Holy] Spirit" (Jude 19). In Jude 18 an apostolic prophecy is quoted that foretold these very problems.

The major error combated in 2 Peter is "eschatological scepticism" (Bauckham). The false teachers were undermining belief in the return of Christ and of future judgment* (2 Pet 2:3, 4, 9). One argument the author uses in reply is an appeal to "the [OT] prophetic writings" (2 Pet 1:19; see Old Testament in General Epistles). Such prophecies, he insists, did not come "by human impulse but as men [and women] moved by the Holy Spirit spoke from God" (2 Pet 1:21). In this affirmation, albeit in reference to OT prophecy, a broad definition of prophecy is given. Prophecy is proclamation inspired by the Holy Spirit which expresses the mind of God. The author then warns against false teachers who he sees as the counterpart of the false prophets under the old covenant* (2 Pet 2:1). On the basis of the parallel made the question follows, Is he speaking of false prophets who give false teaching or of false teachers as such? The latter is a distinct possibility, as prophets and teachers can be equated (Acts 13:1), prophets can be said to teach (Rev 2:20; cf. 1 Cor 14:31), and Jude seems to be combating false prophetic teachers.

3. Revelation.

Prophets and prophecy play an important part in the book of Revelation. Although the book is often taken as a classic example of early Christian apocalyptic* literature, it is important to note that the author intended it to be taken as a prophecy (Rev 1:3; 22:7, 10, 18, 19). Revelation reflects the influence of the Jewish apocalyptic tradition but shows many differences, the most significant for this discussion being that the author, John, writes in his own name and bases his authority on the fact that he has been called and addressed directly by the risen Christ. The identity of this John is not given, but he was probably a Palestinian Jewish Christian because Hebrew or Aramaic seems to have been his native tongue.

3.1. Church Order. The church order reflected in the book of Revelation is undeveloped, with little fixed structure. The whole church is described as "kings and priests" (Rev 1:6; 5:10; see Priests); all are God's servants (Rev 2:20; 7:3; 19:2; 22:3), and all can be named saints (Rev 5:8; 8:3, 4; 13:7). When the Spirit speaks to the churches (Rev 2 and 3) he addresses the whole community. The only group standing apart somewhat are "the prophets" (Rev 10:7; 11:18; 16:6; 18:20, 24; 22:6, 9). But even here the idea that all members of the church were at least potentially able to prophesy (cf. Acts 2:17-18; 1 Cor 14:1, 5) appears to be maintained. This we can take to be the meaning of the somewhat enigmatic statement, "for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy" (Rev 19:10). "The testimony of Jesus" is the testimony to Jesus that elsewhere in Revelation is said to be borne by all Christians (Rev 1:9; 6:9; 11:7; 12:11), and "the spirit of prophecy" is a Jewish expression for prophecy itself.

3.2. Eschatological Prophecy. John describes his work as "the revelation of Jesus Christ" (Rev 1:1), and he says the revelation came to him while he was "in the Spirit" (Rev 1:10; cf. 1:3; 4:2; 21:10). As the phrase is repeated, we presume this was an intermittent state. Some of the book is in the first person as if Christ himself is speaking, notably in the letters to the seven churches, but most of the book is a record of seven sets of visions that John apparently received and then put in writing. The prophecies are in part predictive. They are given "to show to his servants what soon must take place" (Rev 1:1). We find the same expression again in Revelation 22:6 and a similar one in Revelation 2:16; 3:11; 22:7, 12, 20. Some have supposed that the book therefore maps out human history until Christ returns. But we would agree with D. Hill (86), who says that John's "interest in the prophetic portrayal of eschatological events which are regarded as rapidly approaching is really in their significance for John's own time. He offers no review of past history; he is not concerned with predicting events in the near or distant future, but addresses a church presently involved in a situation of stress and oppression." Thus, in the letters to the seven churches, the Lord through John offers words of exhortation, consolation and a warning of impending judgment to the recipients. The welfare of the church is the vital issue in this period of great testing. Trials facing the churches, John maintains, show that the end of all things is close at hand.

3.3. The Prophetic Use of the Old Testament. The profound dependence on the Jewish Scriptures evident in this piece of prophetic writing is also to be noted (see Old Testament in Revelation). The book is saturated with words and phrases drawn from the OT, which is not quoted in a deductive fashion but rather is read typologically so that the creation,* exodus, covenant, Jerusalem and temple motifs are transposed and become eschatological* realities. In this way a living unity is established between the revelation under the old covenant and the new. This method of appropriating the OT may be taken as a classic example of prophetic exegesis. The ultimate meaning of the OT text is given by revelation to the prophet.

3.4. Examples of Prophetic Speech. Aune makes it his special concern to isolate and analyze originally independent prophetic utterances that have been incorporated into the text of Revelation. He maintains that the seven letters to the churches (Rev 2-3) represent a typical form of prophetic speech. In each case the letters begin "thus says" (tade legei); the prophecy is said to come from the risen Christ (identified by one or more picturesque titles); the actual prophecy is introduced by the revelatory indicator "I know" (oida); and then a stereotyped message follows. Other examples in Revelation are where God or Christ is quoted in the first person singular (e.g., Rev 1:7-8, 17-20; 16:15; 21:5-8; 22:7, 12-14, 18-20) and where oracular speech is evident (e.g., Rev 13:9-10; 14:6-11; 18:21-24; 19:9; 21:3-4, 5-8).

4. Postapostolic Age.

In the second century the prominence and importance of prophets and prophecy declined. The ministry of the prophet was still known, but the impression is given that it was not always encouraged because local bishops often assumed the prophetic ministry themselves and false prophecy had become a growing problem.

4.1. 1 Clement, the Didache, Ignatius and Hermas. The occasion for the writing of 1 Clement (c. A.D. 96) was a schism at Corinth (see Clement of Rome), caused by a revolt of young men who set themselves against the elders of the church. As these young men claimed special revelations (1 Clem. 48.5) and are said to have had powers of persuasive speech (1 Clem. 21.5; 57.2), we may take it that they were claiming prophetic gifts.

In the *Didache (c. A.D. 100) prophets are frequently mentioned and held in great esteem (Did. 10.7-8; 11.3-12; 13.1-4), but the bishops and deacons are seen as the successors to the prophets (Did. 15.1-2).

Ignatius,* the bishop of Antioch in the early years of the second century, assumes the title God-inspired (Ign. Magn. 1.1), which is a claim to be a prophet. Writing to the Philadelphians, he refers to one of his prophecies by saying, "When I was among you, I cried aloud . . . with the voice of God, 'Give heed to the bishop and the presbytery and the deacons.'" These words, he adds, were given to him by the "Spirit" (Ign. Phld. 7.1-2). In his letter to the Ephesian church he speaks of revelations granted to him (Ign. Eph. 2.20), and in another letter he urges Polycarp,* the bishop of Smyrna, to seek heavenly revelations (Ign. Pol. 2.2). In the mid-second-century work the Martyrdom of Polycarp, the bishop is called a "prophetic" man (Mart. Pol. 16.2).

The charisma of prophecy is also associated with Melito,* the bishop of Sardis. Polycrates describes him as "one who lived entirely in the Holy Spirit" (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 5.24). Melito's homily On the Passover, apparently written in A.D. 167-68, contains a long section in which the Lord speaks through Melito in the first person of prophetic speech. In these examples the bishop has assumed the prophetic ministry and it would seem silenced others.

The *Shepherd of Hermas (c. A.D. 140) takes it for granted that prophets and prophecy will be prominent in the church. Hermas does not claim for himself the title prophet, but he clearly functions as a prophet. He insists that true prophecy takes place when "the prophetic spirit rests on a man and fills him, and being filled with the Holy Spirit, he speaks to the congregation as the Lord wills" (Herm. Man. 11.9).

4.2. Justin and Irenaeus. Justin Martyr, in his Dialogue with Trypho (A.D. 160), several times speaks of Christian prophecy. He says that in contrast to Judaism* the church still has those who have the spirit of prophecy (Justin Dial. Tryph. 39.1). Later he says even more explicitly, "The prophetic gifts remain with us even to the present time" (Justin Dial. Tryph. 82.1). They are evident "among us" as gifts given to both "women and men" (Justin Dial. Tryph. 88.1).

Similarly Irenaeus, in about A.D. 190, insists that the charismata are still evident in the Christian church. He writes that some "have foreknowledge of things to come: they see visions and utter prophetic expressions" (Irenaeus Haer. 2.32.4). In the same treatise he adds that the heretics reject both "the gospel and the prophetic Spirit. . . . They set aside the gift of prophecy. . . . They cannot admit the apostle Paul either. For, in his epistle to the Corinthians he speaks expressly of prophetic gifts, and recognizes men and women prophesying in church" (Irenaeus Haer. 3.11.9). But in our churches, he adds, "we do hear many brethren . . . who possess prophetic gifts" (Irenaeus Haer. 5.6.1).

4.3. Montanism. One deviation that significantly escaped the lash of Irenaeus in his monumental work Against Heresies was Montanism. This was a late-second-century apocalyptic movement that began in Phrygia when Montanus, and later Maximilla and Prisca, began to prophesy about the end of the world and other matters. The movement soon gained a wide following.

But while Irenaeus did not denounce this movement, many other church leaders did. They did not deny prophecy as such but denied that the Montanists were true prophets. It was claimed that they had introduced into the church pagan ecstatic prophecy (see Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 5.16.6-9). All the major features of early Montanism, however, can be paralleled in the apostolic writings. Aune argues that Montanism is better seen as a "renewal movement" within the church (the Montanists called themselves "the new prophecy"). Eusebius says that one of their opponents drew up a "catalog" of authentic Christian prophets insisting that "the apostle grants that the prophetic gift shall be in all the church until the final coming" (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 5.17.4). Unfortunately Eusebius mentions only two names from this list of Christian prophets, Amnia and Quadratus, apparently because these two were widely known.

Condemnation of the Montanists was by no means universal. "The Confessors of Lyons," for instance, sent a letter by Irenaeus to Rome* admonishing Pope Eleutherius and the church of Asia not to quench the Spirit by condemning the Montanists. The next pope, Victor, almost gave official acknowledgment to the prophetic gifts of Montanus, Prisca and Maximilla and was persuaded only at the last moment not to do so. Most significant of all is the fact that Tertullian (A.D. 160-220), the brilliant exponent of trinitarian theology, joined the movement and became its apologist.

4.4. False Prophecy. In the postapostolic age the issue of false prophecy comes to the fore. In the Didache the true prophet can be recognized because he exhibits "the behavior of the Lord." He does not order meals or ask for money "in the Spirit" but "teaches the truth" (Did. 11.8-12). Mandate 11 in the epistle of Hermas deals almost entirely with the problem of false prophecy. Again the behavior of the prophet is the key issue. The true prophet is "meek, gentle, lowly-minded, refrains from all wickedness and evil desire of the world, and makes himself poorer than all men" (Herm. Man. 11.8). The true prophet also does not give oracular answers to questions put to him, especially in private. The authentic prophetic ministry is a congregational one that arises as the community is in prayer (Herm. Man. 11.9).

4.5. The Demise of Prophecy. But while the prophetic ministry was known throughout the second century, it was not as evident or as widespread as it was in the Pauline churches while the apostle was alive or as Luke suggests. The earliest hint that prophecy was to come under threat is seen in the Pastoral Epistles (see DPL, Pastoral Letters), the latest epistles ascribed to Paul. Here the ministry of the prophecy is subordinated to more ordered leadership. In the Didache the suggestion is that the bishops and deacons are to take the place of the prophets (Did. 15.1). The way this happened in regard to bishops is illustrated in the writings of Ignatius, and other examples are seen in the case of Polycarp and Melito. Later in the century Justin and Irenaeus know of prophets and prophecy but speak about prophecy only to argue that this characteristic ministry of the apostolic age is still to be seen in orthodox churches. After the activity associated with Montanism prophecy is only rarely mentioned.

Some scholars following A. von Harnack argue that the growing importance of the canonical Scriptures silenced the prophets as it was thought no new revelation was needed. But both Irenaeus and Eusebius appeal to Scripture in support of the ministry of prophecy. Other scholars hold that the growing problem of false prophecy rang the death knell for prophecy, but this was not a new problem. The most important factor seems to have been the growing importance of the ordered ministry, especially that of the bishop (see Church Order). Human organizations have a tendency to move from the more spontaneous to the more ordered. As this happened in the life of the church an uneasy tension between recognized office bearers, especially the bishop as the leader of the local church, and charismatic prophets developed. The more the church became institutionalized, the less free expression of charismatic gifts, and prophecy in particular, was encouraged. This trend progressed throughout the second century of Christian history. Gradually the prophets were silenced as the bishops assumed their ministry and usurped their place. The fundamental issue raised by Montanism was whether or not the church should be led by prophets. The verdict was a resounding no. In the face of this threat to its institutional life, the church closed ranks. The Montanists and prophecy itself were pushed to one side. Thus Montanism represents the last flare-up of prophecy in the early church and its virtual demise. Eventually Montanism, and by implication prophecy itself, was condemned in about A.D. 200 by Asian synods.

See also ADVERSARIES; ESCHATOLOGY; HOLY SPIRIT; REVEAL, REVELATION; VISIONS; WORSHIP AND LITURGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. L. Ash, "The Decline of Ecstatic Prophecy," TS 37 (1976) 227-52; D. E. Aune, Prophecy in Early Christianity (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983); R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); idem, The Theology of the Book of Revelation (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993); idem, The Climax of Prophecy (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1993); S. P. Brock, "Barnabas: Hyios Parakleseos," JTS 25 (1974) 93-98; G. Dautzenburg, Urchristliche Prophetie (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1975); J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit (London: SCM, 1975); E. E. Ellis, Prophecy and Hermeneutic in Early Christianity (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); K. N. Giles, Patterns of Ministry Among the First Christians (Melbourne: Collins-Dove, 1989); idem, What on Earth is the Church? (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1995); T. W. Gillespie, The First Theologians: A Study in Early Christian Prophecy (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994); D. Hill, New Testament Prophecy (Basingstoke: Marshall, Morgan & Scott, 1979); R. P. Menzies, The Development of Early Christian Pneumatology (Sheffield: JSOT, 1991); J. Reiling, Hermas and Christian Prophecy: A Study of the Eleventh Mandate (NovTSup 37; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1973); M. Turner, The Holy Spirit and Spiritual Gifts: Then and Now (Carlisle: Paternoster, 1996); idem, Power from on High (JPTSup 9; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1996); idem, "The Spirit of Prophecy and the Power of Authoritative Preaching in Luke-Acts: A Question of Origins," NTS 38 (1992) 66-88.

K. N. Giles

PROPHETS. See PROPHECY, PROPHETS, FALSE PROPHETS.

PROSELYTISM, JEWISH. See GENTILES, GENTILE MISSION.

PROVIDENCE. See GOD.

PSEUDEPIGRAPHAL WRITINGS, CHRISTIAN NONCANONICAL. See APOCRYPHAL AND PSEUDEPIGRAPHAL WRITINGS.

PSEUDEPIGRAPHAL WRITINGS, JEWISH. See JUDAISM, POST-A.D. 70.

PSEUDEPIGRAPHY

The issue of pseudepigraphy has a bearing on the NT because several of the writings included in the NT have commonly been regarded as pseudepigraphal or pseudonymous. The terms denote literary works falsely (pseud-) attributed (epigraphos = "superscription") or falsely named (onoma = "name"), although only the former goes back to antiquity (attested as early as the second century B.C. in an inscription from Priene). In both cases what is in view are writings that explicitly claim to have been written by a certain person but that by common consent were written by someone else.

It is on the issue of falseness that the significance of pseudepigraphy within the NT hangs. The issue should not be confused with that of anonymity. Many NT writings are anonymous (the Synoptic Gospels, for example), but that fact raises no point of principle about such writings being included in the NT. Nor should pseudepigrapha be confused with apocrypha. Both terms were used in the early church regarding those books that today are almost universally known as the OT Pseudepigrapha (the books of Enoch, the testamentary literature attributed to the patriarchs), but in this case "apocryphal" has the sense of suitable for private reading, as opposed to the public reading of recognized apostolic and hence canonical works (Synopsis sacrae scripturae 75, attributed to Athanasius).

By putting the emphasis on false attribution, however, the term pseudepigraphy implies a negative value judgment as to a document's integrity and acceptability. This is clear from its earliest attested use in Christian circles, where Serapion (second century A.D.) applies it to the Gospel of Peter: "the writings that falsely bear their names [Peter and the other apostles] we reject . . . knowing that such were not handed down to us" (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 6.12.3). It is this judgment of falseness, of an intent to deceive and mislead, particularly by passing off as apostolic what should not be so regarded, that makes the issue of pseudepigraphy in the NT so sensitive. J. I. Packer put the point tersely: "Pseudonymity and canonicity are mutually exclusive" (Packer, 184; similarly Ellis; cf. Marshall).

In the light of the negative judgment implicit in the term itself, the claimed presence of pseudepigraphy in the NT would seem to pose a moral and theological problem for the notion of an authoritative canon* of Scripture. The uncomfortable fact is, however, that a large consensus of NT scholarship maintains that certain NT writings, particularly Ephesians, the Pastorals and 2 Peter, are pseudepigraphic, the first two attributed to Paul, the last attributed to Peter. How then to handle the seeming contradiction within the very phrase "NT pseudepigraphy"?

1. Attempts to Ease the Problem of New Testament Pseudepigraphy
2. Pseudepigraphy as Living Tradition
3. Pseudepigraphy in the New Testament
4. Conclusion

1. Attempts to Ease the Problem of New Testament Pseudepigraphy.

In the modern period there have been various attempts to hold together the conflicting ideas of pseudepigraphy within the canon.

1.1. Intellectual Ownership in the Ancient World. An early attempt was to argue that writers in antiquity did not share the modern idea of copyright. If writings had no author ownership as such and were in effect common property, then use of another's name need not be understood as an attempt to deceive by claiming the named person's authority for the writing. The strength of this argument is that there is a difference between modern copyright mentality and the lack of inhibition among ancient writers in the way they freely incorporated material written by others within their own works. Nevertheless, W. Speyer has shown that the sense of intellectual ownership was already well developed in Greek culture long before the first century B.C. And though the Israelite literary tradition was characterized by anonymity the influence of Greek culture brought the concept into Judaism in the Hellenistic era. This is evident, for example, in the ready acknowledgment that the writer of 2 Maccabees makes to the five volumes of Jason of Cyrene (2 Macc 2.23) and in the sensitivities regarding false attribution in 2 Thessalonians 2:2 and Revelation 22:18.

1.2. An Accepted Literary Device? A second suggestion is that pseudepigraphy was widely recognized as an acceptable literary device in the ancient world. This argument works well with documents that first appeared centuries after the claimed author had died. As B. M. Metzger observes, the Neo-Pythagoreans attributed their writings to Pythagoras himself, even though he had lived many centuries earlier; according to Iamblichus (c. A.D. 300), it was an honorable act to publish one's treatises in the name of so venerable a teacher (Metzger, 7). It is hard to believe that such a convention was not recognized, at least by most thoughtful readers, in the case of the Enoch corpus, the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs or the Apocalypse of Adam, all written probably between second century B.C. and second century A.D.

Similar in the Christian period are the sixth-century works claiming Dionysius (or Denys) the Areopagite (cf. Acts 17:34) as their author but clearly drawing on Neo-Platonic philosophy. But does the argument work so well in the case of Ephesians, appearing within a decade or two of Paul's death? There is a major difference between a writer adopting the pseudonym of an ancient or symbolic figure from an earlier epoch, particularly one not hitherto known as an author, and someone purporting to continue a particular literary tradition within a few years of its author's demise. The former may count as an acceptable device that was not seriously intended to deceive. The issue of deception is more delicate in the latter, and there is enough evidence that the ancients were alive to the issue (Metzger, 12-16).

1.3. Mystical or Spiritual Identification. A more popular view has been that pseudepigraphy was acceptable when it embodied the writer's claim to some sort of mystical or spiritual identity with the one whose name was used. This is certainly possible to conceive within cultures where inspired individuals could assume the persona of the one in whose name they spoke or acted as the mouthpiece for the divine being who inspired or possessed them. The OT prophets so spoke, and in the second century A.D. Celsus claimed that there were many such (Origen Cont. Cels. 7.9).

K. Aland in particular saw a solution here to the problem of pseudepigraphy in the first century and a half of Christianity: the attribution of authorship in effect to the Holy Spirit* by the Spirit-inspired author threw "a bridge across the generations"; the Spirit being the real author, the identity of the human author did not matter. But in so arguing he ignores the widespread recognition in earliest Christianity of the danger of false prophecy* (e.g., 1 Cor 12:3; 1 Jn 4:1-3; Herm. Man. 11). The argument does have greater plausibility when it is applied to writings that themselves purport to describe visions* and heavenly journeys on the part of the author; hence, presumably, its appeal to D. S. Russell in his treatment of apocalyptic* writings (similarly Speyer's category of "echte religiöse Pseudepigraphie"). But even there the sense of a mystical or an ecstatic identification of actual author with his pseudonym is lacking in the writing itself. And whether the argument works at all with a letter* genre must be regarded as highly questionable.

1.4. Revered Antiquity and the Noble Falsehood. Among more recent studies N. Brox draws attention to three features in particular that at least help us understand the why of the phenomenon of pseudepigraphy. One is the characteristic love of antiquity that is such a feature of the epoch. So, for example, since what was ancient called for respect, it was evidently important for the Jewish apologist Aristobulus (second century B.C.) to argue that famous Greek thinkers like Pythagoras and Plato had been imitators of Moses. Pseudepigraphy then was a way of expressing the value of the past and of enabling readers to participate in it.

Another relevant point is the similarly widespread idea of the noble falsehood, the idea that falsehood in support of a noble cause like religion was acceptable and did not attract the stigma of deceit. Brox notes that the Fathers too seem to have accepted the principle of what we might call the white lie, the good objective legitimating the questionable means.

The third feature is the related principle, again evident in the Fathers, that the content of the writing was deemed more important than its authorship. An illustration would be Serapion's evaluation of the Gospel of Peter, where Serapion goes on to note "that the most part [of the Gospel] was in accordance with the true teaching of the Savior but that some things were added." However, valuable as these observations are in catching something of the relevant attitudes of the times, it is questionable how much they contribute to the specific issue of NT pseudepigraphy.

1.5. Authoritative Tradition. The most promising contribution to the discussion of NT pseudepigraphy in recent years has been the thesis of D. G. Meade. He argues that the most obvious context within which to examine the issue of NT pseudepigraphy is not Greco-Roman literary genres and practices (as still Donelson, 14-15), and not simply particular Jewish apocrypha and pseudepigrapha, but the process in Jewish religious writing whereby tradition has accrued to a prominent historical figure and particularly the process whereby an original oral or literary deposit has been expanded by the attribution of further material to the originating figure. He instances Isaiah, the Solomonic corpus and the Daniel and Enoch traditions. In each case he finds that "attribution is primarily a claim to authoritative tradition, not a statement of literary origins" (Meade, 102).

When he turns to the NT Meade observes similar features in the letters usually regarded as pseudepigraphal, "a consistent relationship between the development of the Petrine and Pauline traditions and the literary forms which they take" (Meade, 192-93). In other words the relation of Ephesians and the Pastorals to the undisputed Paulines could be regarded as equivalent to the relation of Second and Third Isaiah to First Isaiah. In each case the motivation was to "make present, contemporize" (Vergegenwärtigung) or renewedly actualize the authoritative Petrine and Pauline traditions for the following generation.

Of all the approaches to the issue of NT pseudepigraphy, Meade's seems to have the greatest potential to explain the conundrum of pseudepigraphy within the canon; that is, how it could be that the earliest Christians may have accepted documents claiming as author someone who was already dead.

2. Pseudepigraphy as Living Tradition.

It is important to recognize the degree to which the elaboration of original tradition (attributed to a particular figure) in the NT mirrors the same process in the OT. The point can be illustrated by reference to the three traditional divisions of the OT before we turn to the NT.

2.1. The Torah/Pentateuch. Few scholars today would wish to dispute the consensus that the canonical Pentateuch is the result of a lengthy tradition process, including the later emergence of Deuteronomy and the postexilic editorial work of Ezra in establishing that canonical form—a process, it should be noted, stretching over several centuries.

Several features are to be noted. First, the process had a clear and authoritative starting point: Moses. However much or little of the Torah goes back to Moses himself, the tradition is unanimous in attributing its character and authority to Moses. Second, Moses did not leave a rigid tradition, fixed and closed, but a living tradition, one that was expanded and elaborated as circumstances changed and new insights emerged. This process was obviously not regarded as illegitimate or deceitful. On the contrary it was understood as a restatement of the tradition stemming from Moses; it was still the law of Moses. Only an elaboration that was in the spirit of the earlier and in recognizable continuity with it would have succeeded in this. And the community accepted the result as "the book of the law of Moses," the account of Nehemiah 8—9 presumably representing the climax of that process. Third, there was a point of transition when the process of Vergegenwärtigung changed in character, from an elaboration within the tradition itself to an interpretation of the tradition now more or less fixed. The tradition having become established in canonical form (though textual variations retain a certain fluidity) the role of the targumist and halakist takes over. The vitality of the tradition is maintained, not least in the claim of Mishnah Aboth 1:1 of an unbroken tradition of Torah from Moses, through Joshua, the elders and the prophets to the men of the great synagogue.* But any suggestion of pseudepigraphal elaboration has long been superseded.

2.1. The Prophets. If we take the example of Isaiah, the scholarly consensus is that while much of Isaiah 1—39 can be referred to the eighth-century Isaiah of Jerusalem, Isaiah 40—55 come from an unknown hand during the exilic period and Isaiah 56—66 are probably a collection of multiauthored oracles from a still later period. Variations on the basic consensus still have to reckon with a tradition that, on the most plausible reading of the text(s), spans several generations, in which case we see the same three features present.

First is an authoritative starting point for the tradition. Isaiah of Jerusalem was evidently a prophet who made a huge impact and whose prophecies were treasured as living resources within the circle that most revered his memory.

Second, there is a clear continuity and fundamental identity of religious perspective between the first two Isaiahs. That is to say, Second Isaiah consciously stood within the living tradition that stemmed from Isaiah of Jerusalem and can be seen quite properly as a creative reinterpretor of the earlier oracles.

Third, with Third Isaiah the earlier tradition seems to have become more fixed: the material is full of near or complete citations from the two earlier stages; and the reworking of the tradition begins to assume more the character of a midrashic exposition of these texts. It would appear then that the process of pseudegraphical elaboration within such a tradition can last only so long as there is an appropriation and reworking of the tradition that can legitimately claim to reexpress the mind of the tradition's originator and be recognized and accepted as doing so.

2.3. The Writings. Here we might instance the Psalms. The attribution of the book of Psalms to David is an attribution of genre rather than necessarily of each of the 150 psalms. Nevertheless the point once again is that David was regarded as the founder and originator of the canonical psalms, and the addition of subsequent psalms is a vivid illustration of the vitality of the tradition of psalm writing and singing that he inaugurated and authorized. The vitality of that tradition is well illustrated by the presence of further psalms naming David as their author among the Qumran* scrolls (Charlesworth, 2:609-24). In this case the function of the psalms as part of regular worship must have helped maintain the vitality of the tradition, raising the question as to whether canonical closure was ever an issue. Perhaps we should best compare the sense of living tradition in Orthodox liturgy that is such a distinctive character of the Orthodox churches.

More apposite here is probably the Solomonic corpus. There was evidently an early memory of Solomon's wisdom (1 Kings 4:29-34) that can be said to legitimate the attribution of the proverbial tradition (Prov 1:1) to him as, once again, the authoritative starting point of the tradition. The tradition was so powerful that it attracted also Qoheleth (Ecclesiastes) to his name (Eccles 1:1, 12; 12:8-14). In this case the process consisted not of a reworking of older traditions from within but in the attribution of a separate book to Solomon. And in this case the attribution proved to be successful in its claim to stand within the tradition of Solomon, at least to the extent that Qoheleth made it (just!) into the Hebrew canon. At the same time, however, although the name of Solomon continued to gather fresh works around it (Wisdom of Solomon, Psalms of Solomon, Odes of Solomon) there was never any question of their acceptance into the canon. By then the connection and continuity with Solomon was too remote for the attribution to be regarded as anything other than a literary fiction honoring the memory of Solomon as a sage and composer of psalms and odes but not constituting a claim to stand within Solomon's authoritative tradition.

The Jewish background to the issue of NT pseudepigraphy thus reveals a consistent pattern of living tradition with the same three features: a revered figure in the past to whom a particular character of authoritative tradition could properly be attributed; an elaboration of that tradition from within or at least in a manner whose continuity with and contemporizing of the original tradition was widely acknowledged; and a recognition that the vitality of the tradition could not be maintained in that way when the connection and continuity with the authoritative originator became too distant, tenuous or artificial.

3. Pseudepigraphy in the New Testament.
In the light of the preceding discussion it becomes possible to recognize an element of pseudepigraphy within the NT without any implication of deceit or fraud and without triggering the antithesis between pseudepigraphy and canonicity.

3.1. The Gospels. There is a striking parallel between the Gospels and the Pentateuch. The parallel is not in quantity but in the quality of the traditioning process. There need be little doubt that the great bulk of the Synoptic tradition goes back to Jesus (sayings) and his immediate circle (narratives). Even so, however, there is a measure of organization and interpretation incorporated into the Synoptic tradition that shows clearly enough that it was a living tradition, used and reflected on and elaborated within the churches that cherished these memories of Jesus, that fed on them as spiritual food and that found in them inspiration for their own living in often adverse conditions. As C. F. D. Moule has demonstrated, this is one of the lasting fruits of form criticism. In contrast the longer ending of Mark (Mk 16:9-20) represents a later elaboration of the tradition that went just beyond general acceptance.

Pursuing the parallel between the Gospels and the Pentateuch, we may further say that John's Gospel is somewhat equivalent to Deuteronomy—a distinctive unit within the whole but with sufficient continuity and overlap with the Synoptics for it to be recognized as a legitimate restatement of the original or earlier tradition. In John's case the degree of elaboration of the Jesus tradition brought it close to the boundary of what was and was not counted acceptable. It was Irenaeus's advocacy of John as part of the fourfold Gospel witness, despite its attractiveness to the Gnostic* sects, that made its place within the emerging orthodox canon secure. Others, like the *Gospel of Peter and the *Gospel of Thomas, were judged to have transgressed the boundary of acceptable Vergegenwärtigung.

The issue, it should be noted, was not settled simply on the question of attribution of authorship. It was the character of the tradition so attributed, whether it stood in sufficiently close continuity with and as an acceptable elaboration within the living tradition that was decisive. If so, the later attribution to John, however elaborated the tradition, was acceptable; if not, the attribution to Peter or Thomas was insufficient to secure its widespread acceptance. In an important sense, therefore, the issue of pseudepigraphy was secondary. Of course, the issue of the authorship of John's Gospel is a question for another volume than this (see DJG, John, Gospel of). I touch on it only to make the point that a parallel needs to be recognized between John's elaboration of the Jesus tradition and the Pastorals' elaboration of the Paul tradition. Those who recognize John as an authentic reexpression of the Jesus tradition arguably need feel no qualms in recognizing the Pastorals as acceptable Pauline pseudepigraphy.

3.2. Colossians and Ephesians. In the light of the tradition process illustrated, these two letters are the best place to start a discussion of the issue of Pauline pseudepigraphy. By broad consent Colossians stands close to the border that marks off Pauline from post-Pauline authorship: either very late in his life or very early after his death. And as agreed by a larger majority, Ephesians shows marked dependency on Colossians. In other words Colossians probably represents such a development of Pauline thought as to illustrate and even document the way in which Pauline merged into post-Pauline, itself an expression of the continuity and vitality of the Pauline tradition.

This last observation gains in plausibility when we recall a number of features in Colossians. First, as W. Bujard in particular has demonstrated, the style of Colossians is so different from that of the earlier Paulines as to make it very difficult to maintain that Paul himself composed the letter. Second, the theological and paraenetic content is also significantly different in content and character. In both cases, whether we use the term Pauline or post-Pauline, we have to speak of development, of a "late Paul" if not of someone writing in Paul's name. The close overlap with Philemon, the detailed personal requests made in Colossians 4:7-17 and the concluding autograph (Col 4:18) make it hard to doubt that Paul himself stood behind the letter in some personal capacity. The best solution is probably that the letter was composed by Timothy (named as coauthor in Col 1:1) but approved by Paul with the addition of his own name at the end. If so, then indeed we can speak of Colossians as the bridge between Pauline and post-Pauline. More to the point, the line between personal authorship and pseudepigraphy begins to become blurred and the evidence of continuity and proper claim to represent the named author's views becomes crucial in validating the means used. (See Pauline Legacy and School §1.1; for arguments in favor of Pauline authorship see DPL, Colossians.)

In the case of Ephesians the arguments for post-Pauline authorship are more compelling. (1) The style is quite distinct from anything else in the Pauline corpus, marked for example by long sentences, repetition and piling up of adjectives, phrases and clauses such as we find in Ephesians 1:17-19, 2:13-18 and 3:14-19. (2) At point after point, particularly in Ephesians 4—6, the phraseology of Colossians reappears in Ephesians (e.g., Col 3:12/Eph 4:2; Col 2:19/Eph 4:16; Col 3:5-6/Eph 5:5-6; Col 3:18-19/Eph 5:22, 25; Col 3:22—4:1/Eph 6:5-9; Col 4:7/Eph 6:21-22), indicating probably that the less personal and more general Ephesians has used Colossians as a kind of model. (3) The perspective seems to be more that of a second generation looking back to a past foundation period (cf. Eph 2:20; 3:5). (4) And the theological perspective seems to have shifted beyond that even of Colossians (e.g., Eph 1:22-23; 2:5-8). Here, in other words, the developments in the Pauline tradition are such that a defense of Pauline authorship in effect dissolves the distinction between "late Paul" and "disciple of Paul." The explanation that makes best sense of the evidence is that Ephesians was written by an associate or a disciple of Paul who stood within the tradition begun by Paul and was recognized to do so, was seen to represent the Pauline tradition after Paul's death and was able to reexpress it in significant measure in his own terms but in Paul's name and without deceit. (See further Pauline Legacy and School §1.2; for arguments in favor of Pauline authorship see DPL, Ephesians.)

3.3. Pastoral Epistles. If the debate on the Pauline authorship of Colossians and Ephesians is more evenly balanced, there is a much clearer majority opinion in favor of the post-Pauline authorship of the Pastorals. The language is more characteristic of a later generation (e.g., "epiphany," "godliness"), and stylistic features are again markedly different. The opposition confronted in the Pastorals seems to reflect developments that led to the gnostic systems of the second century (e.g., 1 Tim 1:4; 6:20; see Adversaries). The structure envisaged for the churches in view seems to demonstrate the sort of institutionalizing tendencies (overseers, deacons and elders) that are characteristic of the second and third generations of charismatic movements (see Early Catholicism). And the earlier, more vital understanding of "faith" seems to have crystallized into more set forms of "the faith" ("sound teaching," "faithful sayings"). It is not appropriate to debate the significance of these features in detail, and it must suffice to indicate the typical features that have led most scholars to the conclusion of post-Pauline authorship (see Pauline Legacy and School §1.3).

The significance for the present discussion is that documents so markedly different from the earlier Paulines could still claim Pauline authorship and the claim not be regarded as illegitimate. It can be and is still argued conversely by an important minority that the letters' own claim to have been written by Paul outweighs the above evidence (see DPL, Pastoral Letters). But the earlier discussion shows how equally plausible it is that associates or disciples of Paul could legitimately write in the name of Paul, as a claim to represent Paul's counsel in the face of later challenges, and that the literary device could be accepted without demur because the writings were recognized as standing in a direct line of continuity with those of Paul himself (note 2 Tim 2:2) —possibly aided by the incorporation of brief notes (particularly 2 Tim 4:9-15) from Paul's final imprisonment. Though no one need have been in any doubt as to their post-Pauline authorship, what mattered was their Pauline character. In Meade's terms, their attribution to Paul was primarily "a claim to authoritative tradition, not a statement of literary origins." The living Pauline tradition, despite already solidifying into "sound teaching," was still sufficiently fluid and developing from within.

In contrast, the line of continuity was presumably not sufficiently sustained in the case of 1 Clement, or Clement was a sufficiently independent figure of authority in his own right for it to be necessary to present its exhortation under Paul's name. Subsequently the Acts of Paul (including 3 Corinthians) never gained much credibility, and the Epistle to the Laodiceans was too obviously a clumsy pastiche, though it was widely disseminated in the West.

3.4. 1 and 2 Peter. It is unnecessary to repeat the various arguments about authorship in this case. The particular problem with 1 Peter is that we have no undisputed Petrine tradition with which to compare it. Meade, however, has drawn renewed attention to repeated echoes of Jesus' teaching (in the Gospel tradition) and to a number of parallels between 1 Peter and the sermons attributed to Peter in Acts (Meade, 173-74). These may not be enough to sustain a hypothesis of Petrine authorship as such; though, given that our knowledge of Peter is always allusive and at best second-hand, what would count as sufficient evidence? Such cross-references and allusions may, however, be sufficient to sustain the conclusion that 1 Peter was accepted as Petrine because it was recognized to embody Petrine traditions, to stand directly in a line of tradition and emphasis that began with Peter himself. The value of this conclusion once again would be that 1 Peter's canonical status and authority therefore need not depend on a verdict as to whether Peter himself was actually responsible for the letter. The judgment of those who first received and cherished this letter as authentically Petrine would be sufficient to authenticate it, and the claim expressed in its opening word ("Peter . . . to the exiles") can be seen still today as properly inviting that judgment and not contradicting it. (For arguments in favor of Petrine authorship, see 1 Peter.)

Whatever the precise status of 1 Peter, 2 Peter* can be said to stand within and indeed as the most striking example of the accepted tradition of canonical pseudepigraphy. It was written to meet the danger of false interpretation of older revelation (2 Pet 1:20; 3:15-16). It did so by appealing back to the already acknowledged Petrine tradition (2 Pet 1:16-18; 3:1). In particular it presents itself as Peter's last testament and by implication as the means by which Peter's teaching could be recalled after his death (2 Pet 1:12-15). All this speaks strongly of the tradition of legitimate pseudepigraphy already outlined. Here is the appeal to authoritative tradition and the claim to a continuity with that tradition that maintains its authentic voice. This claim almost failed in the subsequent evaluation of the letter; presumably it was written so much later than Peter that its claim to continuity and still to speak with Peter's voice had become more open to question. Its close relationship with Jude (Jude 4-13, 16-18/2 Pet 2:1-18; 3:1-3) cannot have helped (why was it not designated 2 Jude?). But in the event the greater pull of Petrine authority succeeded—it was deemed to be genuinely Petrine and part of the Christian canon—whereas the verdict went the other way in the case of the Gospel of Peter.

3.5. 2 Thessalonians, James and Jude. We need say little more about the other claimed pseudepigrapha in the NT: 2 Thessalonians, James and Jude. In the first case the issue is more disputed; but if 2 Thessalonians should be regarded as post-Pauline, it may introduce one new element into the discussion. This is the suggestion that the warning against a letter falsely claiming to be by Paul (2 Thess 2:1-2) refers to 1 Thessalonians itself—the pseudepigrapher attacking the authoritative originator of the tradition. But the suggestion runs counter to the character of the pseudepigraphic traditioning process outlined; its warning was surprisingly ineffective if both letters were accepted as authoritatively Pauline; and that very acceptance indicates clearly enough that the allusion in 2 Thessalonians 2:1-2 was understood from the first as to some letter other than 1 Thessalonians. (For arguments in favor of Pauline authorship see DPL, Thessalonians.)

In the case of James* and Jude,* "brother of James," the parallel of 1 Peter covers the ground sufficiently for present purposes. The fact is that we know so little of the style and teaching of these brothers of Jesus that the letters themselves constitute the major testimony to an authentic Jacobean and Jude traditions. In such circumstances both attest the same principle of a characteristic tradition acknowledged and cherished as deriving from an authoritative member of Christianity's founding generation. Whether the letters should be attributed to James and Jude themselves or to collaborators or reworkers of teachings stemming from them is of secondary concern. In James and Jude in particular (as with 1 Peter) the distinction between genuine and pseudepigraphic is more or less meaningless.

4. Conclusion.
There is, then, what might be called a biblical practice of continuing and developing a literary tradition, begun by an authoritative figure in the past, after his death. That second phase could be and in various well-documented cases evidently was recognized as sharing in the authority of the tradition's originator and accepted as also authoritative under his name. In each case the traditioning process that bore the author's name was also recognized to be of limited duration, after which the tradition had become too fixed or claims to write in the authoritative name were no longer widely accepted.

If pseudepigraphy continues to be the appropriate name for what was composed within the second phase of that process, then we have little choice other than to regard it as legitimate and to distinguish what we might call canonical pseudepigraphy from other kinds. It also follows that in such cases the charge of deceit and falsehood leveled against these writings becomes inappropriate; what we have rather is a legitimate speaking in and use of the great teacher's name, recognized as such by the churches that first used the letters in question. In this case also the choice between pseudepigraphy and canonicity need not be pressed to an either-or. Perhaps the most appropriate analogy is therefore the paintings that come from the studio of a great master, where the brushstrokes may not have been made by the master himself, but the character and quality and inspiration of the work can properly be said to be his, even when the work was conceived and executed after his death.

See also PAULINE LEGACY AND SCHOOL; 2 PETER.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. K. Aland, "The Problem of Anonymity and Pseudonymity in Christian Literature of the First Two Centuries" in The Authorship and Integrity of the New Testament (SPCK Theological Collections 4; London: SPCK, 1965) 1-13; N. Brox, Falsche Verfasserangaben: Zur Erklärung der frühchristlichen Pseudepigraphie (SB 79; Stuttgart: KBW, 1975); idem, ed., Pseudepigraphie in der heidnischen und jüdisch-christlichen Antike (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1977); J. H. Charlesworth, The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha (2 vols.; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1983, 1985); L. R. Donelson, Pseudepigraphy and Ethical Argument in the Pastoral Epistles (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1986); J. D. G. Dunn, The Living Word (London: SCM, 1987) chap. 4; E. E. Ellis, "Pseudonymity and Canonicity of NT Documents" in Worship, Theology and Ministry in the Early Church: Essays in Honor of R. P. Martin, ed. M. J. Wilkins and T. Paige (JSNTSup 87; Sheffield: JSOT, 1992) 212-24; K. von Fritz, ed., Pseudepigrapha I (Vandoeuvres-Geneve: Fondation Hardt, 1972); D. Guthrie, "The Development of the Idea of Canonical Pseudepigrapha in New Testament Criticism" in The Authorship and Integrity of the New Testament (SPCK Theological Collections 4; London: SPCK, 1965) 14-39; I. H. Marshall, "Prospects for the Pastoral Epistles" in Doing Theology for the People of God: Studies in Honor of J. I. Packer, ed. D. Lewis and A. McGrath (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1996) 137-55; D. G. Meade, Pseudonymity and Canon (WUNT 39; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1986); B. M. Metzger, "Literary Forgeries and Canonical Pseudepigrapha," JBL 91 (1972) 3-24; C. F. D. Moule, The Birth of the New Testament (3d ed.; San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1982); J. I. Packer, "Fundamentalism" and the Word of God (London: Inter-Varsity Fellowship; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1958); S. E. Porter, "Pauline Authorship and the Pastoral Epistles: Implications for Canon," BBR 5 (1995) 105-23; idem, "Pauline Authorship and the Pastoral Epistles: A Response to R. W. Wall's Response," BBR 6 (1996) 133-38; M. Rist, "Pseudepigraphy and the Early Christians" in Studies in New Testament and Early Christian Literature, ed. D. E. Aune (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1972) 75-91; D. S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic (London: SCM, 1964); W. Speyer, Die literarische Fälschung im Altertum (Munich: Beck, 1971); R. W. Wall, "Pauline Authorship and the Pastoral Epistles: A Response to S. E. Porter," BBR 5 (1995) 125-28. J. D. G. Dunn PSEUDO-CLEMENTINES. See APOCRYPHAL AND PSEUDEPIGRAPHAL WRITINGS; CLEMENT OF ROME; JEWISH CHRISTIANITY.

PSYCHOLOGY

By psychology we mean the terms used for the parts of the human person and their mutual relationship, whether the author implies by them a Hellenistic dualism or a higher and lower part of the human being or a functional holism or holistic dualism characteristic of Paul, in which the person is viewed as essentially a psychosomatic unity (see DPL, Psychology). The following discussion will survey the use of various psychological terms, testing in particular whether the writers' use of these expressions implies an acceptance of the functional holism or holistic dualism characteristic of Paul.

1. The New Testament
2. After the New Testament

1. The New Testament.

1.1. Use of Old Testament Terms. Many instances of psychological terms occur in OT quotations or allusions, suggesting that the authors took over a Hebraic understanding of humanity as fundamentally holistic. See, for example, the use of "hearts" from Psalm 95 in Hebrews 3:8, 10, 15; 4:7; and "all flesh is like grass" (Is 40:6) in 1 Peter 1:24.

1.2. Aspects of Human Persons. Significant features of the use of the main terms may be summarized as follows.

"Body" (sōma) sometimes denotes the physical body of either humans or animals (Heb 13:3, 11; Jas 2:16). Elsewhere it is used by synecdoche to represent the whole person with its physical aspect particularly in view. In Hebrews 10:5-10 the sacrifice* of Jesus' body means not merely his physical suffering* but also his total self-offering expressed in his suffering on the cross.* Other passages that appear to divide the person into distinct parts do so only to stress different aspects of a unified person. For example, James* says that the body without the spirit is dead (Jas 2:26) in order to insist that the two belong together. Or the body may be contrasted with the heart or conscience* to distinguish between inward and outward aspects of a person (Heb 10:22; cf. sarx, "flesh," in 1 Pet 3:21).

"Flesh" (sarx) can denote a complex range of meanings similar to that found in Paul. In James 5:3 it means human flesh literally. Sometimes it denotes the earthly, physical life of human beings (1 Pet 4:2) or specifically of Jesus (Heb 2:14; 5:7; 1 Jn 4:2; 2 Jn 7). Or it expresses the sinfulness of humanity out of harmony with God's will, as in the phrase "desire of the flesh" (epithymia sarkos, 1 Jn 2:16; cf. 1 Pet 2:11; 2 Pet 2:18). In Jude 8 it probably refers specifically to sexual sin. But even here there is no suggestion that the physical body is inherently sinful or inferior to other parts of a person.

"Soul" (psychē) refers to physical life in Revelation 12:11. More commonly it denotes the center of personality, the inner person in its capacity to direct one's life and to relate to God* (Heb 6:19; 1 Pet 1:21; 2 Pet 2:8; Rev 18:14). It is therefore the object of salvation* (Jas 1:21; 5:20; 1 Pet 1:9; cf. Heb 10:39; 13:17). But again this is an aspect, not a part, of personality. Psychē clearly represents the whole person in 1 Peter 3:20, 1 Peter 4:19 and 2 Peter 2:14. In Revelation 18:13 both sōma and psychē refer to slaves* as whole persons (cf. Ezek 27:13). A distinct usage is the description of the dead martyrs as psychai in Revelation 6:9-11 and Revelation 20:4. Though they await resurrection* they are not less than whole persons, as is indicated by the masculine pronoun in Revelation 20:4.

"Heart" (kardia) is the seat of human will and desire. It is the source of emotions and passions (Jas 3:14), understanding and reflection (Heb 4:12), and hence the whole inner being in contrast with the external aspect (Heb 10:22; 1 Pet 3:4; 1 Jn 3:19-21). Its desires may be in tune with God's will (Heb 8:10; 1 Pet 1:22; 3:15) or in conflict with it (Heb 3:12; Jas 1:26; 2 Pet 2:14). It naturally stands for the whole self in James 1:26 and James 5:5.

"Mind" (nous, dianoia) is the faculty of thought and understanding and the attitudes that it produces (Heb 8:10; 10:16; 1 Pet 1:13; 2 Pet 3:1). Since the mind of the Christian is open to God, both Greek words may represent God-given insight (1 Jn 5:20; Rev 13:18; 17:9).

"Spirit" (pneuma) is used much more frequently to refer to the Holy Spirit* (and occasionally to angels,* evil spirits or the breath of life) than to the inner life of human beings. But in 1 Peter 3:3-4 we see "heart" and "spirit" contrasted with outward appearance. The pneuma as the self in its capacity to relate to God is implied in Hebrews 12:9, where the unique description of God as "father of [our] spirits" is contrasted with "our fathers of the flesh" (i.e., our earthly ancestors).

The statement in Hebrews 4:12 that God's word "penetrates even to divide soul and spirit" has sometimes been taken to imply a dualism (or a trichotomy of spirit, soul and body). But probably the author does not intend to be precisely analytical. He wants to express vividly how God's word probes the inner recesses of human personality (Bruce, 113). In Hebrews 12:23 the plural pneumata denotes dead saints, a usage similar to that of "souls" in Revelation 6:9-11 and Revelation 20:4.

1.3. The Inner Conflict and the Person Made Whole. These writers give ample evidence of the distance that people may travel from the will of God and of the external temptations* and inner forces that may drive them there. They know too that believers in their own strength are weak and subject to temptation (Heb 4:15-16). Christians may become "double-minded" (dipsychoi), with their passions (epithymiai) at war within them (Jas 1:8; 4:8; 4:1). But their hearts may be purified (Jas 4:8). They may learn to live not for evil human desires (anthrōpōn epithymiai) but for God's will (1 Pet 4:2). This vision of the human personality reintegrated around a new center and oriented toward God is expressed particularly in 1 Peter 1:14-15 (cf. 1 Pet 1:22-23; 2:9-12).

1.4. Some Hellenistic Traits? The issue arises as to whether there are not some Hellenistic traits in our literature; namely, passages in which the human is divided into body and spirit/soul in such a way that the spiritual is viewed as higher in contrast with the lower, physical part of the person. Two passages will be discussed here. E. Schweizer has called 1 Peter 2:11 "the most strongly hellenized psychē passage in the New Testament" (Schweizer, 653). The conflict between the soul and the desires (epithymiai) of the flesh* recalls Plato's division of the soul into three, of which the lowest part was the epithymētikon, the seat of desires, which must be controlled by the highest part, the rational. This is the only NT passages in which sarx clearly stands in opposition to psychē, suggesting that the soul is a higher part of the person than is the flesh. The idea is different from Paul's description of the conflict between sarx and pneuma, since in Galatians 5:18-23 it is God's Spirit that fights against the flesh. Yet the dualistic thrust of the statement in 1 Peter* can be exaggerated. The thought is not very different from that of Romans 7:23, where Paul acknowledges the reality of conflict within a person. And psychē here may be interpreted not as the immaterial or superior part of a human being but as "life" in the sense of Mark 8:35-37 (Michaels, 116-17).

In 1 Peter 3:18 and 1 Peter 4:6 the author contrasts sarx and pneuma in a way that may suggest that he is influenced by the Hellenistic idea of two spheres or levels, of which pneuma represents the higher sphere and sarx the lower. In both instances sarx refers to the death of the body, not to sinful human nature. According to 1 Peter 3:18, "his death took place in the sphere of 'the flesh', the earthly, temporal existence; his resurrection took place in the sphere of 'the spirit', the eternal, the indestructible, the heavenly. This does not imply any rejection of the thought of a bodily resurrection, but rather that the body in which He is 'made alive' is itself 'spiritual' " (Beare, 143; on the interpretation of this problematic passage see especially Dalton). In Pauline literature we find parallels in Romans 1:3-4 and especially 1 Timothy 3:16—both, like 1 Peter 3:18-21, generally agreed to derive from earlier Christian tradition. Although the idea of two spheres is present in all three passages, there is no suggestion that spirit and flesh are two distinct parts of the person. Death and resurrection happened to the whole Christ* (1 Pet 3:18) and to the whole persons referred to in 1 Peter 4:6.

1.5. Conclusion. Though we have seen limited evidence of Hellenistic forms of thought, the evidence gathered shows that these authors affirm a fundamentally Hebraic understanding of humanity that may be described as holistic dualism. In a variety of expressions they speak of persons in their various aspects but always think of the person as a unified whole. Even where Hellenistic influence may be detected, there is no reference to the immortal soul as the guarantee of eternal life,* no clear suggestion that the soul is superior to other aspects of humanity or that sin resides in one part of the person.

2. After the New Testament.

2.1. The Biblical Tradition Continued. There is clear continuity between biblical perspectives and literature of the early second century. Psychological terms appear frequently in quotations from the OT and less frequently from the NT. For OT examples see 1 Clement 2.8; 8.4; 15.2-4; 16.11-3; 18.10-12, 17; 52.4; Barnabas 6.7; 9.1-5; 10.12; for NT examples see 1 Clement 36.2; 2 Clement 19.2; Ignatius Polycarp 1.3; Polycarp Philippians 4.3; 7.2; 8.1.

As the seat of desire the heart may be focused on evil thoughts (Herm. Vis. 3.6.3) or on God (Herm. Man. 9.2; 12.5.2; 2 Clem. 11.1); it is a shrine of God (Barn. 6.15; 16.7). The spirit is the inner person (Herm. Vis. 3.11.2) or the whole person (2 Clem. 20.4). The meaning of "soul" is frequently very similar. It is the inner being (2 Clem. 13.1) or the whole person (1 Clem. 64.1; Ign. Phil. 1.2; Barn. 3.5; 17.1) and therefore the object of salvation (Barn. 19.10).

The apostolic fathers* continued the range of meanings for sarx that are found in the NT, including the physical body (on which see below). As in Paul, to act "according to the flesh" (kata sarka) can mean to operate on a merely earthly level without reference to God (Ign. Magn. 6.2; Ign. Rom. 8.3). It rarely means "sinful nature," though Ignatius* has this sense in mind when he stresses the impossibility of being fleshly (sarkikos) and spiritual (pneumatikos) at the same time (Ign. Eph. 8.2). In 1 Clement 38.2 it denotes sexual sin (in contrast to enkrateia, sexual restraint). These examples perhaps indicate a tendency to equate sinful desires with bodily indulgence. But in Barnabas 10.9 "desire of the flesh" (epithymia tēs sarkos) refers to an inability to understand Scripture on a spiritual (allegorical) level. Diognetus 5 provides an interesting example of a thoroughly Pauline use of the phrases "in the flesh" and "according to the flesh" (en sarki . . . kata sarka), referring respectively to neutral living in the world and living in a sinful way.

Some significant passages, by combining terms such as "spirit," "soul," "body" and "flesh," show concern to express the relationship between various aspects of human personality. Ignatius refers to acting and being "in flesh and spirit" (Ign. Magn. 13.1-2; Ign. Trall. 12.1; Ign. Pol. 1.2; 5.1). Perhaps Polycarp 2.2 ("You consist of flesh and spirit, that you may deal tenderly with the things which appear visibly") shows that Polycarp* understands the relationship of spirit to flesh in terms of the inner and outward aspects of personality. Though the spirit is perhaps more important than the flesh in that it operates on a deeper level, Ignatius is not negative about the body (cf. Ign. Phil. 7.1; 1 Clem. 64.1; 2 Clem. 12.3-4). The Shepherd of Hermas, Similitudes 5.7.1-4 says that spirit and flesh must both be kept pure because one cannot be defiled without also defiling the other. In Diognetus 6, however, there is a stronger insistence that "the immortal soul inhabits a mortal tent" and directs the body; paradoxically, "the flesh hates the soul," but "the soul loves the flesh."

This essentially positive view of the body is related to a specific understanding of the person of Jesus. Christ himself in his incarnation, death (see Death of Christ) and resurrection was "both spiritual and fleshly" (Ign. Eph. 7.2; Ign. Smyrn. 3.2; 12.2). His fleshly or bodily nature was essential for the salvation of ours, and that salvation includes resurrection of the flesh (1 Clem. 49.6; 2 Clem. 9.5). There is here the idea of two spheres or levels (see 1.4 above). Christ came from the spiritual sphere to the earthly sphere to unite the two. He did not come to rescue humanity from the flesh but in the flesh. Hence there will be a "resurrection of the flesh" (sarkos anastasis, not a NT phrase, appears in Justin Martyr Dial. Tryph. 80.5; cf. Ep. Apos. 21).

2.2. The Gnostic Strand. In contrast with the orthodox concern to hold together the different aspects of humanity, gnostic* texts display an evident dualism. Although Gospel of Thomas affirms Jesus' appearance in the flesh, it stresses the subsidiary role of the body and even asserts that the division of the two is desirable (Gos. Thom. 28—29, 112). In the Treatise on Resurrection the flesh is viewed negatively, as the temporary, earthly mode of existence for both the Savior and the elect.* It is abandoned at death, to be replaced by a new transformed flesh (Treat. Res. 47.6-8; see Resurrection). Rheginos is warned in this epistle against living "according to the flesh" (Treat. Res. 49.9-16). Though the language echoes that of Paul, the author apparently identifies the physical flesh with the seat of sin and thus advocates an ascetic ethic. The mind or soul, however, survives death (Treat. Res. 46.21-4; 47.38—48.2). By an act of faith, therefore, it must direct its thought away from the body and toward the truth. Bodily resurrection becomes irrelevant.

2.3. Conclusion. After the NT Christians continued to grapple with the task of interpreting a biblical understanding of the person in a predominantly Hellenistic culture. In the orthodox strand there is a recognizable continuity with the NT's holistic dualism; in the gnostic strand there is a much sharper dualism, which upholds the significance of the soul or mind at the expense of the essentially bodily nature of human personality.

See also CONSCIENCE; FLESH; SIN, WICKEDNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. F. W. Beare, The First Epistle of Peter (Oxford: Blackwell, 1947); F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews (rev. ed.; NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); W. J. Dalton, Christ's Proclamation to the Spirits: A Study of 1 Peter 3:18—4:6 (Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1965); A. A. Hoekema, Created in God's Image (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1986); W. G. Kümmel, Man in the New Testament (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1963); J. R. Michaels, 1 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); M. L. Peel, The Epistle to Rheginos: A Valentinian Letter on the Resurrection (London: SCM, 1969); E. Schweizer et al., "ψυχή, κτλ," TDNT 9:608-66. S. H. Travis PUNISHMENT. See HELL, ABYSS, ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

PURITY AND IMPURITY

Purity is best understood as the condition which God* demands of his people for contact with him. In the case of Israel, specific foods, objects and physical characteristics are demanded for any approach of the divine. Even then, priests* mediate in the final acts of sacrifice,* because greater purity is required the closer one comes to God's holiness.*

Two sorts of impurity threatened Israel: impurity by contagion and impurity by holiness. Impurity by contagion results from contact with anything which should not exist. A corpse or a monstrous beast (e.g., Dan 7:3-8), for example, are not a part of the created order intended by God, and must not be brought near God. But it is equally dangerous to approach what belongs to God alone: blood, for example, threatens Israel's existence because it is too holy to be eaten, containing the very "life" (nepeš) of an animal as given by God, and not because it is essentially impure.

Both forms of impurity can be mortal, unless they are prevented or dealt with once they emerge. Nadab and Abihu offer an unwarranted sacrifice, and they are consumed by fire (Lev 10:1-3). But God also "broke out" against Uzzah, because he had touched the ark in order to steady it during transport (2 Sam 6:6-10). Such stories show that Israel's existence was balanced on a knife's edge according to this overall concept of purity. On the one side were the basic impurities which God categorically would not tolerate. On the other side was the holiness which destroyed even what was pure by simple contact. Defining what is pure was held to be Israel's charter for existence. Earlier inhabitants of the land had been expelled because they did not attend to the purity required by God (see Lev 18:24-30). That belief clearly marks the systemic importance of the observation of the clean and the unclean within Israel.

Issues related to the overall definition of purity were prominent within Jesus' discussions and disputes with his contemporaries. His stance in regard to those questions was so coherent as to amount to a program. As the cultural milieu of Jesus' movement changed after the resurrection, the principal circles of the primitive church (represented by Peter,* James* and Paul) developed distinctive understandings of purity. Tensions among those positions were resolved in the equation of purity with virtue. That resolution is one of the most important theological achievements of the NT.

1. Strategies of Purity Within Early Judaism
2. Jesus' Program of Purity
3. The Conflicting Strategies of Peter, James and Paul
4. The Resolution of Purity and Virtue in Hellenistic Christianity

1. Strategies of Purity Within Early Judaism. That purity is required of Israel is axiomatic within the Hebrew Bible, but distinct strategies of defining, achieving and maintaining purity were developed. The best known and most comprehensive strategy is the priestly scheme represented in the book of Leviticus, and most discussions understandably begin at that point (see DJG, Clean and Unclean). But that picture is to be supplemented by the alternative strategies of other circles within Israel. Ezekiel, Leviticus and Deuteronomy provide patterns of understanding which were classic within the understanding of Israel and formative for several groups within Judaism during the time the NT emerged.

In Ezekiel 40—48 a vision establishes the purity by which Israel gains access to the holy, the powerful source of its inheritance. Only Zadokite priests are to serve God in his sanctuary (Ezek 44:15-16). Foreigners are to be excluded, as "foreskinned in heart and foreskinned in flesh" (Ezek 44:9). Levites are relegated to an ancillary function, owing to their previous involvement in idolatry (Ezek 44:10-14): service in the funeral cult of dead kings (Ezek 43:6-9). The Zadokite priests, in turn, are carefully regulated in respect of their clothing (Ezek 44:17-18), coiffeur (Ezek 44:20), temperance (Ezek 44:21) and marriages (Ezek 44:22). The priests are to leave their clothing in sacred chambers and put on other clothing before they meet the people in the outer court, "lest they make the people holy with their garments" (Ezek 44:19).

Purity and sanctity are complementary and yet distinct. What is pure is accessible to the holy and for that very reason must be protected from the holy.

The priests are also charged with teaching the people the difference between the holy and the profane and with making known the difference between the defiled and the clean (Ezek 44:23). Both basic impurity and any outbreak of holiness are dangers which must be guarded against. Priestly concerns within the logic of cleanness are developed further in Leviticus. Certain things, such as blood and the parts of beasts which are to be offered, are unclean because they belong to the divine alone (e.g., Lev 7:22-27; 17:10-14). But other things, impure beasts and carcasses, are not fit for consumption, whether human (Israelite) or divine (Lev 7:19-21; 17:15-16). But whether viewed from the perspective of impurity or of holiness, the thread of the argument is the same: the laws of cleanness are Israel's means of maintaining a solidarity of sacrifice with God, apart from which the land* may not be retained. Indeed, the claim is here explicitly made that the former inhabitants of the land failed to keep the rules of purity and for that reason were expelled, so that Israel might suffer the same fate (Lev 18:24-30). The land, in Leviticus, is not for Israel; Israel is for the service of God in his land. The conditionality of Israel's presence is cognate with the fierce emphasis on cutting off what is unclean (cf., e.g., Lev 7:19-21, 22-27), and separating from the Gentiles (cf., e.g., Lev 18:3; 20:23).

Holiness is a curiously ambivalent force. It is what gives Israel the land, but also what destroys anything that is not compatible with it. The priests are to be the instruments of Israel's compatibility with the holy, and for that reason they are both oddly privileged and fiercely punished. They partake of holy sacrifices, and are held to a higher order of sanctity than the generality of Israel (Lev 21:6, 8, 14, 15, 22, 23). When Nadab and Abihu, sons of Aaron, offer incense in a foreign manner, they are consumed in fire, and God announces without remorse, "I will be sanctified among those who are near me, and I will be glorified before all the people" (Lev 10:1-3). Death then becomes the sanction for breaking the specific requirements of priesthood (cf. Lev 10:6-11; 16:1-2). God's desire is to consume a part of what is pure, but he will extirpate the impure, and his destruction of what he does not want is more comprehensive than his consumption of what he sets aside for himself. The priests are to keep those laws of purity which they teach and more, because they are the guardians of Israel's cleanness, the peoples' tenuous compatibility with the holy (Lev 10:10, 11).

The notion that there are three feasts which all male Israelites are to keep is paradigmatic within the Torah (cf. Ex 23:14-17; Lev 23; Num 28, 29), but Deuteronomy 16 is especially plain in its requirement. In Deuteronomy the emphasis is not on what is offered to God, as in Leviticus and Numbers, nor on appearing before him, as in Exodus, but on the fact that a pilgrimage is necessary (see Temple). From the perspective of Moses, of course, Jerusalem itself is not at issue, but readers or hearers can only identify that city with the single "place" (hāmāqôm) where God is to be worshiped (Deut 12:5-14). Because the ambit of activity in Deuteronomy extends far from Jerusalem (to which pilgrimage is necessary), the slaughter and consumption of animals outside of Jerusalem, explicitly as non-sacrificial, is permitted, provided the blood is poured out and the beast concerned is not owed as a sacrifice (Deut 12:15-28).

The assumption of Leviticus is quite different; the priestly focus of its scheme imagines all meat being offered in sacrifice prior to consumption (see Lev 17:1-9). Just as Deuteronomy replaces that impracticable requirement with a concept of a secular meal, so it widens the definition of the meat that may be eaten. The gazelle and the hart are specifically authorized for eating in Deuteronomy 12:22, although they are not mentioned in Leviticus 11. Deuteronomy establishes a conception of purity which functions as related but not identical to the category of what may be sacrificed. Yet Ezekiel, Leviticus and Deuteronomy all represent the covenantal regulation of sacrifice and make the temple in Jerusalem the sole focus of that regulation.

Sacrifice includes certain pragmatics, things offered in the appropriate place by certain people. The pragmatic offering is associated with specific emotions and is justified by articulated ideologies. Ezekiel defines a particular space and its priests by visionary means; the pragmatics of Leviticus are the animals offered by specified procedures; Deuteronomy motivates Israel to join in sacrifice on festive occasions. Ezekiel looks forward to security, Leviticus to separation from Gentiles, Deuteronomy to the joy of households. What justifies the particular sacrifices of each book? The memory of idolatry in Ezekiel; the picture of those expelled from the land in Leviticus; the anticipation of prosperity in Deuteronomy.

The Hebrew Bible attests, then, that the single covenant with Israel was consistent with varying emphases and practices within the conception of purity. Variation in that regard was also characteristic of well known Judaic groups in the first century (see DJG, Judaism, 400-404). Priests, Essenes and Pharisees evolved characteristic concerns of purity. The parable of the Good Samaritan presents a priest and Levite avoiding a man left for dead on the side of the road; their fear of contamination from an unclean corpse overcame their compassion (Lk 10:31-32). Similar attitudes may be the source of Josephus's complaint that the Sadducees generally are boorish and suspicious (J.W. 2.8.14 §166). Josephus also describes the Essenes' peculiar habits in regard to purity: among other things, he specifies the avoidance of oil, the practice of ablution and changing clothes prior to ritual meals, and the treatment of the eating hall "as if it were a holy temple" (J.W. 2.8.3-5 §§123-131). The Pharisees also used changing clothes as a marker of purity: an associate was not to accept the hospitality of a person of the land and could only receive a person of the land as a guest if a fresh clothing was provided for the guest (see m. Dem. 2:3).

2. Jesus' Program of Purity.

Jesus' circle was centered in Galilee and was characterized by fellowship at meals involving various people with different practices of purity (see Mt 11:18-19 par. Lk 7:33-35). That description applies to the period of Jesus' own activity and also to the period after his death when Peter appears to lead the movement. In either phase, the circle of Jesus needed to cope with the social issue of possible defilement as one member of Israel (with one set of practices) met another member of Israel (with a different set of practices).

One of the best attested of Jesus' sayings is his assertion that defilement is a matter of what comes from within, not from without (Mk 7:14-15). The point of this saying (and those to which it may be compared, Mt 15:10-11 and Lk 11:40-41) is that there is a link between integrity and cleanness: that Israelites are properly understood as pure and that what extends from a person, what he is and does and has, manifests that purity. Paul was to write some twenty-five years later (and for his own purposes), "Do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit within you, which you have from God?" (1 Cor 6:19). Paul may be alluding to a particular saying of Jesus (cf. Jn 2:21) or to what he takes to be a theme of Jesus; in either case, he refers his readers to what he assumes to be elementary knowledge of the gospel.

That Jesus and especially Paul (who associated himself with the Pharisees, cf. Phil 3:5) speak from such a perspective is not unusual. It is said that Hillel took a similar point of view and expressed it in a more heterodox manner. He defended an Israelite's right to bathe in Roman installations on the grounds that if Gentiles deem it an honor to wash the idols of their gods, Israelites should similarly deem it an honor (indeed, a duty) to wash their bodies, the image of God (Lev. Rab. 34.3). In other words, bathing does not make one pure but celebrates the fact of purity; in their quite different ways, Hillel and Paul demonstrate that representatives of the Pharisaic movement conceived of purity as a condition which all Israelites could be assumed to enjoy, and out of which they should act. Fundamentally, Jesus' concern appears similarly to have been with cleanness as a matter of production rather than of consumption.

Jesus' interest in the definition of purity is also evident in the Synoptic story of what is known as Jesus' cleansing of a leper (Mt 8:2-4; Mk 1:40-44; Lk 5:12-14). In the story, a leper approaches Jesus and for no stated reason asserts that Jesus is able to cleanse him. Jesus assents, touching the man and pronouncing him clean and ordering him (a) to show himself to a priest and (b) to offer the sacrifice prescribed by Moses for cleansing. The terms of reference of the actions described are explicitly given within the book of Leviticus (chaps. 13 and 14). The assumption of Leviticus 13 and 14, and therefore of the story in the Synoptics, is that "leprosy," which might more literally be rendered "outbreak" (ṣāra'at), comes and goes and that its presence and absence can be detected. In Leviticus 13, when the issue is "outbreak" in humans (as distinct from cloth and houses), it is clear that the great concern and the cause of uncleanness is broken flesh (Lev 13:15). The suspicion of "outbreak" arises when there is a change in the pigmentation of the skin and accompanying hair, but a total change signals a return to cleanness (Lev 13:12, 13), since the fundamental concern is broken flesh (and therefore blood), to which no human correctly has access. Accordingly, sufferers are banned (Lev 13:45, 46).

In the event one is declared clean by a priest, two quite distinct offerings are enjoined in Leviticus 14. The first is a local sacrifice and may take place wherever there is flowing water. The priest kills a bird in a earthen vessel over the water and dips a living bird in its blood, having beforehand attached cedar, scarlet and hyssop to it. He then sprinkles the sufferer from "outbreak" with the living bird and releases it (Lev 14:1-8). Purification follows (cf. Lev 14:9), after which the sufferer needs to offer two male lambs, a ewe, cereal and oil; together they constitute a sacrifice for guilt, a sacrifice for sin, a burnt sacrifice and a cereal sacrifice, all with the sufferer particularly in view (Lev 14:10-20). Exceptional provisions are made for instances of poverty (Lev 14:21-32), but the requirement of ownership remains onerous.

Within the setting envisaged in Leviticus, the story concerning Jesus therefore refers to a specific moment. The sufferer from "outbreak" attributes to Jesus the ability to adjudicate the status of his skin, and Jesus accepts the responsibility of telling him he may proceed directly to the sacrificial moment which is to occur after cleanness has been declared. Although Jesus is not portrayed as taking over any sacrificial function, he is explicitly assigned—within the terms of reference the story itself establishes—the authority to pronounce on matters of purity. Pharisees were similarly involved, as an entire tractate of the Mishnah (Nega'im) attests. Jesus and his circle appear to have been keenly concerned with purity as such, in a manner similar to the Pharisees (although purity was generally a focus of discussion and controversy within early Judaism). Jesus' stance is perhaps more similar to the Pharisees' than to the sectarians' of Qumran (who separated from ordinary worship in the temple) or the priests' (who perpetuated that worship), but the formal categorization of Jesus as a Pharisee is not warranted.

The essential assumption in Jesus' cleansing of the man with "outbreak" is that purity is not merely a function of diagnosis by observation. The integrity of the skin proceeds from the integrity which animates the skin. Others concerned with purity might tell priests how to declare on the basis of their observations, advise concerning the removal of suspicious growths or counsel when the priest could best be visited (so the tractate Nega'im); Jesus appears in the story to hold that the determinative factor is the man's approach in the expectation of purity and his own agreement to purification by contact with the man. The link between purity and righteousness is implicit within the sacrificial systems of the Hebrew Bible, and Psalms brings to open expression the systemic association of righteousness and purity (cf. Ps 18:20 [MT 18:21]; Ps 24:3-6; 26:4-7; 51:2, 6, 7, 10 [MT 51:4, 8, 9, 12]; Ps 119:9).

Jesus' perspective in regard to purity is reflected within a passage which is also common to the Synoptics, but which is particularly articulated in the source of Jesus' teaching commonly called Q. (Q is principally attested in Matthew and Luke, but parts of the source are also reflected in Mark. See DJG, Q.) In the commission to his twelve followers (and, in Luke, seventy followers) to preach and heal, Jesus specifically commands them to remain in whatever house they are received within a given village, until they depart (Mt 10:11-14; Mk 6:10; Lk 9:4; 10:5-7). That commandment by itself is a notable development compared with a Pharisaic construction of purity because it presupposes that what the disciples eat, within any house which might receive them, is clean. Jesus' itinerancy and that of his disciples, treated in much recent literature as if it were an obviously Greco-Roman practice, was a profound statement of the general purity of food in Israel. The sayings source underscores that statement by having the disciples pronounce their peace upon the house in question (Mt 10:12, 13; Lk 10:5, 6), and Luke's Jesus particularly insists that the disciples should eat what is set before them in whatever town they might enter (Lk 10:7, 8 see also Gos. Thom. l:14). The pronouncement of peace and the injunction not to go from house to house within a given community (cf. Lk 10:7) but to stay put until the visit is over had obvious utility within the missionary* concerns of the movement after the resurrection. (The message of the resurrection proved to be more divisive than Jesus' own preaching. The temptation to try to find especially sympathetic households prior to settling into a mission must have been great.) But the particular focus upon purity, all but obscured in Q within missionary directives, appears to have belonged to Jesus.

A last peculiarity of the commission in Q, which has long seemed incomprehensible, finds its sense according to our analysis. Although Mark's Jesus has the disciples without bread, bag, money or a change of clothes, he does permit them a staff and sandals (Mk 6:8, 9). In the mishnaic-like source of Jesus' instruction ("Q"), however, just those obviously necessary items are singled out for exclusion (cf. Mt 10:9, 10; Lk 9:3; 10:4). The traditional attempt to explain differences within the lists as the result of missionary practices within the early church is reasonable superficially, but that attempt only diverts attention from the obvious fact that the commission makes extremely poor sense as a missionary instrument. Why tell people not to take what on any journey they, practically speaking, might need? But if we understand the commission to treat every village they might enter as clean, as purely Israel as the temple itself, the perplexing imperatives of the commission makes eminent sense. The disciples are to enter villages exactly as pilgrims were to enter the temple within Pharisaic teaching: without the sandals, the staffs and the purses (cf. m. Ber. 9:5; b. Yebam. 6b) which would normally accompany a journey. Q makes Jesus' commission into a missionary discourse; within his ministry, it was designed to be an enacted parable of Israel's purity.

Whether in the triply attested material of the Synoptics (a probable reflection of Petrine tradition) or in the doubly attested mishnaic source known as Q, a circle of concern associated with Jesus is held to see purity as proceeding from Israel. Once one is identified with Israel, it is not that which is without which defiles, but those things which come from oneself. Separation from that which is outside one does not therefore assure purity, and non-Jews in the mixed environment of Galilee* pose no particular danger to Israel. The circle of Jesus frames its rhetoric for its specific, social circumstance of Israel in the midst of the nations. Defilement here is a matter of failing to recognize the others of Israel, refusing to produce from within and to contact on that basis the pure Israel which those others represent.

3. The Conflicting Strategies of Peter, James and Paul.

Peter shared with Jesus the hope of a climactic disclosure of divine power, signaled in the willingness of nations to worship* on Mount Zion (see Jerusalem, Zion). That hope is certainly attested within sources extant by the first century. Chief among them, from the point of view of its influence upon the NT, is the book of Zechariah.

Zechariah provided the point of departure for Jesus' inclusive program of purity and forgiveness as the occasions of the kingdom. Jesus is said to have mentioned the prophet by name (see Mt 23:34-36; Lk 11:49-51). The book programmatically concerns the establishment of restored worship in the Temple, especially at the feast of Sukkoth (Zech 14:16-19). "All the nations" are to go up to Jerusalem annually for worship (Zech 14:16), and the transformation of which that worship is part involves the provision of "living waters" from the city (Zech 14:8, cf. Jn 4:10, 14). That image is related to an earlier "fountain opened for the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem in view of sin and uncleanness" (Zech 13:1). Here we see the association of forgiveness and purity which is a feature of Jesus' program, as well as the notion of an immediate release without any mention of a preliminary act of sacrifice, from what keeps Israel from God. God himself is held to arrange the purity he requires, so that the sacrifice he desires might take place. Zechariah features the commissioning of a priest (Zech 3, see Mt 16:18, 19), an oracle against swearing (Zech 5:3, 4, see Mt 5:33-37), a vision of a king humbly riding an ass (Zech 9:9, see Mt 21:1-9; Mk 11:1-10; Lk 19:28-40; Jn 12:12-19), the prophetic receipt of thirty shekels of silver in witness against the owners of sheep (Zech 11:4-17, see Mt 26:14-16; 27:3-10; cf. Mk 14:10, 11; Lk 22:3-6).

It is obvious that the connections between Jesus' ministry and Zechariah do not amount to a common agenda, and Matthew clearly reflects a tendency to increase the fit between the two. But the similarities are suggestive of Jesus' appropriation of Zechariah's prophecy of eschatological purity, as a final, more fundamental connection would indicate. The climactic vision of Zechariah insists that every vessel in Jerusalem will belong to Yahweh and become a fit vessel for sacrifice. As part of that insistence, the text asserts that no trader will be allowed in the temple (Zech 14:20, 21). In the light of Zechariah, Jesus' occupation of the temple appears an enactment of prophetic purity in the face of a commercial innovation, a vigorous insistence that God would prepare his own people and vessels for eschatological worship (see Temple).

Peter perpetuated that vision by means of his fidelity both to breaking bread at home with the disciples and in worship within the temple. At the same time, Acts portrays Peter's activity much further afield (see Temple). The reason for this connection between Peter's residence in Jerusalem and his activity in Syria and beyond is provided by the vision which he relates as the warrant for his visit to the house of Cornelius,* the Roman centurion (Acts 10:1-48). Peter is praying on a roof top in Joppa around noon. His vision occurs while he is hungry and concerns a linen lowering from heaven, filled with four-footed animals, reptiles and birds. A voice says, "Arise, Peter, slaughter and eat," and he refuses (in words reminiscent of Ezek 4:14). But a voice again says, "What God has cleansed, you will not defile" (see Acts 10:9-16).

In the course of a dispute with those who argued that circumcision* was a requirement of adherence to the movement, Peter defends his baptisms* in the house of Cornelius on the basis of his vision (Acts 11:1-18). He cites his activity among non-Jews at a later point, in the context of what has come to be called the Apostolic Council (Acts 15:7-11). Throughout, the position of Peter appears to have been consistent: God may make and has made eschatological exceptions to the usual practice of purity. Those exceptions include the acceptance of uncircumcised men in baptism and fellowship with them.

The policy of accepting non-Jews, who were baptized but not circumcised, was perhaps the most important decision which the primitive church made. It is presented as formalized in the book of Acts in a single session (Acts 15:1-35), but the reference to the dispute earlier (Acts 11:1-3) shows that the policy was framed over a number of years. Moreover, what appears as a single meeting in Acts 15 addresses two distinct issues. The first issue was whether non-Jews might be baptized without being circumcised (Acts 15:1-12). The second issue was whether such baptized Gentiles could be embraced in a single fellowship with Jews who had been baptized (Acts 15:13-29).

In his letter to Galatians, Paul reflects the discussion and dispute over the two issues as a vitally concerned participant (Gal 2:1-10). Paul records the agreement of the "pillars" of the church in Jerusalem that there should be an apostolate to the uncircumcised (represented by Paul) as well as to the circumcised (represented by Peter). (Of course, other apostolates—such as James's and his emissaries [Gal 2:12; cf. 2 Cor 10—13]—also concentrated on the circumcised; Paul's point is that Peter was especially concerned with the circumcised outside of Jerusalem and even beyond territorial Israel.) Those pillars include James, Jesus' brother, Peter himself and John. Paul goes on to describe the contention which emerged in Antioch,* a dispute which split the church for decades, but the remarkable agreement on a central point should not be overlooked: James, Peter and Paul agreed that there was a place for non-Jews within the movement.

Those who disagreed with them, the adherents to the Abrahamic requirement of circumcision (see Gen 17:10-14), were not silenced and maintained their position (see Acts 11:2-3; 15:1; Gal 5:2-12). Ebionite* Christianity, however, appears to have been the only wing of the church in the second century in which their stance prevailed (see Irenaeus Haer. 1.26.2; see Jewish Christianity). However much the position of the circumcisers could claim the warrant of Scripture, the vision of Peter represents the dominant tendency toward an acceptance of non-Jews.

The inevitable question emerged: did the acceptance of non-Jews imply their full fellowship with Jewish believers? In their response to that question, Peter, James and Paul went their separate ways. Paul reports favorably on the practice in Antioch before emissaries from James came, when meals could be conducted with common fellowship among Jewish and non-Jewish followers of Jesus (see Gal 2:12). According to Paul, the arrival of those emissaries caused Peter to separate from non-Jews, and even Barnabas acceded to the separation (Gal 2:12-13). The tendency of Hellenistic communities of Christians to mix their Jewish and non-Jewish constituencies and therefore to relax or ignore issues of purity in foods* is here documented by Paul (c. A.D. 53).

When Acts gives an account of the Jacobean policy toward Gentiles,* James appears much more sympathetic but nonetheless rigorous. The occasion of his statement of policy is said to be the suggestion that one must be circumcised in order to be saved (Acts 15:1), a suggestion which is associated with a form of Christian Pharisaism (Acts 15:5). Peter is said to side with Paul with the argument that Gentiles who receive the Holy Spirit should not have the burdens laid on them "which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear" (Acts 15:10, within verses 7-11). Peter sounds remarkably Pauline at this juncture: Paul uses a similar line of argument against Peter in Galatians 2:14-21, and Peter, according to Acts 15:11, sums up by averring that both Jews and Gentiles are to be saved "through the grace of the Lord Jesus" (cf. Eph 2:5). Whatever the precise relationship between Acts 15 and Galatians 2 (see DPL, Galatians; Jerusalem), it is apparent that the Lukan portrayal of Peter has been framed in the interests of an accommodation with a Pauline perspective. James in Acts agrees that Gentiles who turn to God are not be encumbered (Acts 15:19), and yet he insists they be instructed by letter to abstain "from the pollutions of idols and from fornication and from what is strangled and from blood" (Acts 15:20).

The grounds given for the Jacobean policy are that the law* of Moses is commonly acknowledged (Acts 15:21); the implication is that to disregard such elemental considerations of purity as James specifies would be to dishonor Moses.* Judas Barsabbas and Silas are then dispatched with Paul and Barnabas to deliver the letter in Antioch along with their personal testimony (Acts 15:22-29), and they are said particularly to continue their instruction as prophets (Acts 15:32, 33). They refer to the regulations of purity as necessities (Acts 15:28), and no amount of Lukan gloss can conceal that what they insist upon is a serious reversal of Paul's position (see 1 Cor 8). The dispatch of Judas and Silas implicitly undermines the standing of Paul and Barnabas, and James's policy amounts to a constraint upon the behavior of Gentiles who joined the movement. The constraints are sometimes compared to the so-called Noachic commandments of b. Sanhedrin 56a-b, which are held to be binding on non-Jews.

While Paul held that there was a new "Israel* of God" (Gal 6:16), defined by having faith in Jesus just as Abraham had faith in God (Gal 3:6-9), Peter conceived of the acceptance of non-Jews in baptism more as a gracious inclusion than the "new creation" of which Paul spoke (Gal 6:15). Once non-Jews had been accepted in baptism, Peter might sometimes have fellowship* with them and sometimes not. As an apostle,* such contact might be necessary; as a faithful Jew, it was not natural. Within Paul's perspective, that was hypocrisy; within Peter's perspective, it was a consistent consequence of proceeding by the revelation of whom and what God accepts (and when) rather than a predetermined policy. James, while accepting the baptism of non-Jews, nonetheless maintained that a policy of their separation from Jews should be followed, unless they observed enough of the commonly acknowledged rules of purity to honor in practice the status of the Torah as the revelation to Moses, warranted in Scripture.

4. The Resolution of Purity and Virtue in Hellenistic Christianity.

The logical extension of Paul's conception was that all things are pure to the pure, precisely the formulation of Titus 1:15. But Paul's actual practice turned out to be otherwise. He indeed departs from the policy of James in 1 Corinthians 8, by accepting that food offered to idols* might be eaten, on the grounds that idols represent entirely fictional gods (1 Cor 8:4-6). But he also warns against eating such food if some who believe in such gods are confirmed in their idolatry, "and their conscience, being weak, is defiled" (1 Cor 8:7-13, esp. v. 7). The defilement here is internal and moral rather than pragmatic, but it is nonetheless dangerous; Paul declares that he would prefer not eat meat at all rather than cause a brother to sin (1 Cor 8:13; see the restatement of the principle in Rom 14:13-23). By means of his own characteristic argument, Paul approximates to what the rabbis would come to teach concerning the danger of idolatrous feasts (see b. 'Abod. Zar. 8a, instruction in the name of R. Ishmael). Paul in this aspect reflects a more general tendency in Hellenistic* Christianity. In his letters and in letters attributed to him there is an express connection between named vices (which are catalogued) and "impurity" (Rom 1:24; Gal 5:19; Eph 4:19;

5:3; Col 3:5). Early Christianity saw a shift in the understanding of the medium of impurity: no longer foods, but moral intentions, conveyed the danger of defilement. And those intentions are as specifically identified in the NT as impure foods are discussed in rabbinic literature, because the danger in both cases was understood to be an impurity which made a real and dangerous separation from God.

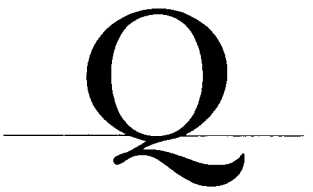
The cataloguing of sins and their classification with impurity is scarcely a Christian invention. It is represented, for example, in Wisdom 14:22-31. But the genre is mastered to brilliant effect in Romans 1:24-32; Galatians 5:19-21; Ephesians 5:3-5; Colossians 3:5-6, and is taken up in the period after the NT (see Did. 5; Herm. Man. 8). What is striking in each case is not only the equation of impurity and sin, but a clear indication that impurity as such remains a fundamental category: sexual* contact, a concern from at least the time of Leviticus 18, survives the declining significance of alimentary purity, even within Paul's thought. There is no question, therefore, of purity simply being abstracted into the realm of intention. Rather, intentionality of practice as well as observation of the integrity of one's body are together held to define an ambit of purity. On such an understanding, one's body was indeed a temple of the Holy Spirit (see 1 Cor 6:18-20; see 1 Cor 3:16-17), and a rigorous attitude toward marriage is completely coherent with the emphasis that a new purity is required by God for the inheritance of his kingdom* (see Mt 5:27-28, 31-32; 19:3-12; Mk 10:2-12; Lk 16:18; 1 Cor 7:10-16).

The success of the gospel of Jesus within the Hellenistic environment of primitive Christianity was in no small measure a function of its ability to frame a rational, practical but stringent system of purity. The marketplace is declared pure in itself, provided it does not encourage the defilement of idolatry, and the requirements of James are largely forgotten. But moral, and especially sexual, requirements make it clear that purity has not been abandoned as a regulatory system, despite the efforts of Paul in regard to alimentary purity.

The success of the resolution of virtue* and purity within primitive Christianity was sealed by the attribution to Jesus of the identification between the two. The attribution appears in Mark (and the Matthean parallel) just after Jesus' own teaching about what truly defiles (Mk 7:15). First by means of comment in response to a question (Mk 7:17-19) and then by means of comment and catalogue (Mk 7:20-23) the rhetoric attributes the shift in the medium of impurity to Jesus himself. The rhetoric is the product of an interpretative community, a circle sufficiently influential to cast what it had been taught concerning Jesus' principle into the terms of reference of the Hellenistic mission. The circle is concerned with issues of fellowship at meals but is unwilling to dismiss purity as a divine category, as Pauline rhetoric could do (Rom 14:14). The circle responsible for Mark 7:20-23, on the other hand, insists upon the danger of impurity but sees the contagion in moral terms. Such an attitude is closer to that of the lists of vices which Paul repeats than it is to the innovative aspects of his argument and rhetoric.

The identification of the authority behind the circle is obviously a matter of inference, but—among the possibilities given by Paul in Galatians 2—the most plausible suggestion is that it represents the apostolate of Barnabas. Barnabas is described by Paul as being less engaged with purity than either James or Peter but also as having been taken up in their "hypocrisy" (Gal 2:11-13). In effect, once Jesus enters the house in Mark 7:17, a new social setting is addressed, and the point of his teaching, as commented upon and expanded by means of a catalogue, is that vices rather than foods are sources of impurity. The categories of the pure and the impure are maintained, but they are worked out on the basis of moral rather than alimentary materials.

The dramatic shift in rhetoric and meaning within the Barnaban circle could not have succeeded by means of the comment (Mk 7:17-19) and the catalogue (Mk 7:20-23) alone. After all, they were by way of appendix to the principal matter of the emerging text, which still concerned corban (Mk 7:6-13) and the direction of impurity (Mk 7:14-15). In order to recast the whole of the tradition as an assertion of a new medium of impurity, defined on Jesus' authority, a rhetorical method needed to be found which would point all of the arguments in the same direction which the latest developments indicated.



The solution was a synthetic device of enormous power: narrative context. The arguments generally—with their varying rhetorics and different topics—are presented in the context of a single dispute. Pharisees and scribes observe that Jesus' disciples do not wash their hands before meals; they object, and Jesus goes on to reply by means of the material already described (Mk 7:1-2, 5). The new context, of course, has nothing precisely to do with the arguments which are then attributed to Jesus. Corban, the direction of defilement and the comparative danger of foods and vices are all interesting matters more or less related by a common interest in what true purity is, but none of those arguments actually answers the Pharisaic/scribal objection to not washing prior to a meal. The narrative context proceeds on the assurance that the readership already understands that all Pharisaic/scribal practices are to be grouped together and accorded the same sort of weight one would attribute to washing one's hands.

The power of the rhetoric is demonstrated by the fact that Jesus never actually answers the question which is posed to him. The response needs to be filled in by the hearer or reader who has been catechized to the point that it seems evident that there is a new, inner purity of moral intention which supersedes the practices of Judaism. The Gospels, as well as the more obviously Hellenistic documents of the NT, attest the resolution of virtue and purity which was a vital part of the genius of Christianity.

See also FOOD, FOOD LAWS, TABLE FELLOWSHIP; GENTILES, GENTILE MISSION; HOLY, HOLINESS; SACRIFICE, OFFERINGS, GIFTS; SEXUALITY, SEXUAL ETHICS; SIN, WICKEDNESS; TEMPLE; VIRTUES AND VICES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. P. Booth, Jesus and the Laws of Purity: Tradition and Legal History in Mark 7 (JSNTS 13; Sheffield: JSOT, 1986); A. Büchler, Studies in Sin and Atonement (New York: Ktav, 1967); R. Caillois, L'homme et le sacré: Edition augmentée de trois appendices sur le sexe, le jeu, la guerre dans leurs rapport avec le sacré (Paris: Gallimard, 1989); D. R. Catchpole, "Paul, James and the Apostolic Decree," NTS 23 (1977) 428-44; B. Chilton, A Feast of Meanings: Eucharistic Theologies from Jesus through Johannine Circles (NovTSup 72; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1994); M. Detienne and J.-P. Vernant (with J.-L. Durand, S. Georgoudi, F. Hartog and J. Svenbro), The Cuisine of Sacrifice Among the Greeks (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1989); M. Hengel, "Jakobus der Herrenbruder—der erste 'Papst'?" in Glaube und Eschatologie: Festschrift für Werner Georg Kümmel zum 80. Geburstag, ed. E. Gräs„er and O. Merk (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1985) 71-104; J. D. Levenson, Theology of the Program of Restoration of Ezekiel 40-48 (HSMS 10; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1986); J. Milgrom, Studies in Cultic Theology and Terminology (SJLA 36; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1983); E. P. Sanders, Jewish Law from Jesus to the Mishnah: Five Studies (Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1990); J. Z. Smith, To Take Place: Toward Theory in Ritual (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1987); D. P. Wright, The Disposal of Impurity. Elimination Rites in the Bible and in Hittite and Mesopotamian Literature (SBLDS 101; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1987). B. Chilton

QUMRAN

The chance discovery in 1947 of the ancient manuscripts known as the Dead Sea Scrolls in many ways marked a new chapter in biblical study. Found at Wadi Qumran on the northwest shore of the Dead Sea, the writings were secreted in caves (most likely by a monastic Jewish sect, possibly the Essenes) about the time of Christ. From the eleven caves at Qumran came a total of approximately eight hundred documents, many of them fragmentary. Written in Hebrew, Greek and Aramaic, the material consists of a variety of literary genres: biblical texts (all books of the OT in whole or more frequently in fragments, except for Esther), commentaries (targums), hymns,* benedictions, psalms, prayers, a monastic rule (the Manual of Discipline, or Community Rule), a War Scroll (predicting a final, apocalyptic battle between the forces of good and evil) and a Temple Scroll. The last, describing an idealized Jewish temple* and its people, is thought by some to predate the Jewish sect that produced the rest of the documents (for a survey of the entire range of material, see DJG, Dead Sea Scrolls).

A number of the NT writings, particularly John, Acts, Revelation and Hebrews, not to mention the historical figure of John the Baptist, have been seen in a new perspective owing either to possible influence from Qumran or to light that the Qumran documents may shed upon ideas and practices reflected in the NT writings. Scholars, however, have not been able to achieve a consensus on how much influence or overlap should be seen, and the discussion will continue in the foreseeable future.

1. Qumran, Acts and Revelation
2. Qumran and Hebrews
3. Conclusion

1. Qumran, Acts and Revelation.

1.1. Qumran and Acts. Some scholars have detected similarities between the communal life of the Qumran sect and the life of the early church as it is reflected in the Acts* of the Apostles. This is seen primarily in two ways. (1) The emphasis on the Holy Spirit* and baptism* at Qumran (e.g., 1QS 4:6, 21) is said to be reminiscent of Acts 2:38: "Repent, and let each of you be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of your sins, and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit" (cf. Johnson, 10-11). For the Qumran sect the water rituals were frequent and continuous, whereas for the early church baptism was a once-and-for-all, unrepeatable act of identification with Christ.* (2) Some scholars have seen a parallel between the communal sharing of Acts 2:44-45 and 1QS 1.12 and 1QS 6.16-20 (see Capper). The attempt to trace a direct relationship has been generally less appealing than the explanation that the sharing of the early church grew out of Jesus' instructions to his followers as recorded in such texts as Matthew 5—7, 18 and 25.

1.2. Qumran and Revelation. Occasionally parallels are drawn between the apocalyptic* dualism of the Qumran War Scroll and that of Revelation (see Revelation, Book of). The Qumran community looked forward to the final, great battle between the sanctified people of God ("the Sons of Light"), led by the warrior angels* Melchizedek and Michael, and the forces of evil ("the Sons of Darkness"). Revelation similarly sees history reaching its climax in the final battle of Armageddon (Rev 16:16). There is, however, a major difference. "In the Qumran War Scroll, the final battle takes place here on earth; in Revelation, the final battle takes place in Heaven, and only the backlash of that battle is felt on earth" (LaSor, 198-99). In all probability the similarities between the two literatures result form a common indebtedness to OT apocalyptic such as is found in Isaiah 24—27, Daniel 7—9 and Zechariah 12—14.

2. Qumran and Hebrews.

In 1958 Y. Yadin advanced the thesis that before their conversion to Christianity, the recipients of Hebrews* had been members of the Qumran sect (the Essenes) who came into the church "carrying with them some of their previous beliefs" (Yadin, 38). According to Yadin, the primary similarities between the scrolls and Hebrews are as follows. The sect had an overly exalted view of angels, which the author of Hebrews combats in Hebrews 1—2. Further, the sect expected not one but two messiahs, a priestly* and a lay figure, which is countered by the argument in Hebrews that Jesus combines both offices in one person. Hebrews 1:1, which places the revelation* brought by Jesus over against that of the prophets,* "is obviously directed against the belief . . . that in the eschatological era a prophet should appear—a prophet who is not to be identified with the Messiah himself" (Yadin, 53). For Yadin this figure is the Mosaic prophet of Deuteronomy 18:15-16, which accounts for much of the concentration on Moses* in Hebrews. The frequency of quotations in Hebrews from the Pentateuch is a direct answer to the sect's focus on its wilderness calling.

Thirteen years later H. Kosmala went beyond Yadin by claiming that the readers of Hebrews were members of the Qumran sect who had not yet converted to Christianity but were in process of being instructed as part of a Christian mission to the Essenes (Kosmala, x). Central to the theologies of both groups, claimed Kosmala, was the prophecy of Malachi, in which Elijah is identified with the high priest of the last days (Kosmala, 76-81). In order to mount his thesis, Kosmala had to eliminate such passages as Hebrews 5:11-14 and Hebrews 6:6 as later interpolations (Kosmala, 17-30).

The Qumran hypothesis for Hebrews still exercises some popularity in NT studies, but it has been experiencing a gradual drop-off of interest. This was largely the result of the simultaneous judgments of F. F. Bruce (1963) and J. Coppens, both of whom felt the similarities to be largely illusory. Interest was regenerated, however, with the publication in 1965 of the Melchizedek fragment from Qumran cave 11 and the possible light it might shed on Hebrews 5—7.

The main points in the debate may be summarized briefly under the following headings (for a much fuller treatment, see Hurst, 45-65).

2.1. The Role of Angels. Yadin urged strongly that at Qumran angels are regarded as God's sons* and dominate eschatology.* Michael, the Prince of Light, assists the saints and has absolute authority.* Thus, Yadin claimed, the readers of Hebrews were angel worshipers. This, however, is highly unlikely. The author's concern with angels in Hebrews 1—2 is not part of a polemic against angel worship but is an attempt to prove the superiority of the new covenant* to the old. He connects angels with the Torah (Heb 2:2), and this serves to link the angels of Psalm 8 (cf. Heb 2:5-18) with those of Hebrews 1. If Jesus mediates a superior covenant, he must be superior to all those covenant mediators with whom the readers are familiar (angels, Heb 1—2; Moses, Heb 3—4; Aaron, Heb 5—7). It is therefore highly unlikely that Qumran can be seen as the background of one of the central themes of Hebrews 1—2.

2.2. Messianic Conceptions. For Yadin the epistle depicts Christ as priest because "this subject is forced upon the author . . . his readers' conceptions regarding the Aaronic priestly Messiah make it impossible for them to accept Jesus' unique authority" (Yadin, 44). The readers of Hebrews are said to have held the notion, reflected in CD and 1QS, that a messiah of the levitical line was expected who would dominate the Davidic Messiah and who would reinstate the levitical sacrifices* in the new age. Thus it was difficult for the readers to accept the supremacy of Jesus, who was not of the levitical line.

There are two points, however, at which this theory falls to the ground. First, there never was a heterodox, two-messiah doctrine at Qumran. The messianism of Qumran was identical to that of the OT, which spoke of two "anointed ones" (not "Messiahs" with a capital "M")—an anointed king and an anointed priest—who would accompany him (Zech 4:14; cf. Hurst, 47-48). Second, the presentation of the high priesthood of Jesus in Hebrews is sharply at variance with such a preconception. The lack of an emphasis on Jesus' Davidic lineage would be odd if the author were striving to establish a union of the so-called levitical and Davidic messiahs into one person. Psalm 110, rather than any alien notions of priesthood, forms the impetus for his speculations.

2.3. The Prophet Like Moses. Both Hebrews and the Qumran documents emphasize the role of prophets. For Yadin Jesus' superiority to "the prophets" in Hebrews 1:1-2 corrects a Qumranian belief, reflected in 1QS 9:11 ("until the coming of a prophet and the messiahs from Aaron and Israel") and 4QTestimonia (the quotation of Deut 18:18-19) of a prophet like Moses who would accompany the messiahs and found the new covenant. But this, again, is unlikely. Hebrews has comparatively little to say about the prophets as a group or any individual prophet in particular, and there is virtually no evidence that the Mosaic "prophet" of 1QS 9:11 is in view in Hebrews. There Moses is not Moses redivivus but rather falls into the category of traditional biblical typology. Deuteronomy 18, furthermore, is never used in Hebrews, nor is Moses anything other than a figure of the past who points forward to the "better things" of Christ.

2.4. Melchizedek. When he first launched his case Yadin could not claim that the author's arguments regarding Melchizedek* had any parallel at Qumran because until then not a trace of him had been found. Then A. S. van der Woude published his version of the fragmentary text from cave 11, 11QMelch, in which Melchizedek is connected to the eschatological deliverance of the righteous* and the annihilation of the wicked. Claims for Hebrews began appearing immediately, notwithstanding the fact that the problems of interpreting the Melchizedek of Hebrews against 11QMelch are multiple. The text of 11QMelch is so mutilated as to make certainty about its meaning impossible. Further, scholars cannot agree whether in 11QMelch Melchizedek is a supernatural figure or a contemporary human figure of great prominence. In Hebrews the author interprets him as the historical figure of Genesis 14 (see Priest, High Priest). The ideas connected with Melchizedek in 11QMelch have nothing to do with Psalm 110 or Genesis 14, the two texts crucial to Hebrews 7; the picture of him at Qumran, while employing OT language, has little to do with the OT. The superiority of Melchizedek over Aaron in Hebrews is never the result of any angelic status of the former; it is seen in the fact that Abraham* paid him tithes and that he blessed Abraham. What is remarkable about the two treatments of the same figure is that they have nothing in common.

2.5. The Use of the Old Testament. Since the Qumran sect and the author of Hebrews both use the OT extensively (see Old Testament in Hebrews), this has frequently been seen as an area of agreement. S. J. Kistemaker and F. C. Fensham, for instance, claim to find an affinity in text form and interpretation. According to Kistemaker, "nearly every chapter of Hebrews reveals the peculiar feature of the midrash pesher" (Kistemaker, 74). Here comparison is often made with the Habakkuk Commentary (1QpHab) and 4QFlorilegium (4QFlor), which use various devices—textual variations, conflations, plays upon words and an application of Scripture to the present. It is unlikely once again, however, that any overlap between the two literatures can be traced. The use of Habakkuk 2:3-4 in 1QpHab and Hebrews 10:37-38, for instance, is totally different (see Hurst, 64-65), while G. B. Caird has shown convincingly that the midrash pesher label does not fit Hebrews: its author is an exegete who asks after the original meaning of his texts in a way similar to the method of modern interpreters. Thus in a comparison of the use of the OT in Hebrews and Qumran, nothing has been found that requires or even suggests a Qumran background for the former.

3. Conclusion.

Points of contact have been traced between the Qumran writings and Acts, Revelation and Hebrews, with the bulk of the comparisons centering on Hebrews. The enthusiasm that was initially attached to these alleged parallels has dissipated somewhat with time. In many cases the overlaps are apparent rather than real, and in the case of Hebrews a certain distortion of its argument, not to mention that of the evidence of Qumran, has been required to sustain the argument. Most of the points of comparison are probably due to a common background—the influence of the OT. It is improbable that any situation other than that of the pastoral problem of the readers, discouragement in the face of persecution,* called forth the response of the epistle.

See also JOSEPHUS; JUDAISM, POST-A.D. 70; PHILO.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. W. Attridge, The Epistle to the Hebrews (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1989); M. Black, The Scrolls and Christian Origins (Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1961); H. Braun, Qumran und das Neue Testament (2 vols; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1966); R. E. Brown, "The Messianism of Qumran," CBQ 19 (1957) 53-82; F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1954); idem, " 'To the Hebrews' or 'To the Essenes,' " NTS 9 (1963) 217-32; G. B. Caird, "The Exegetical Method of the Epistle to the Hebrews" CJT 5 (1959) 44-61; B. Capper, "The Palestinian Cultural Context of Earliest Christian Community of Goods" in The Book of Acts in Its Palestinian Setting, ed. R. J. Bauckham (BAFCS 4; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1995) 323-56; J. Carmignac, "Le document de Qumran sur Melkisékeq," RevQ 7 (1970) 348-78; J. J. Collins, "Dead Sea Scrolls," ABD 2:85-101; J. Coppens, Les Affinités qumraniennes de l'épître aux Hébreux," Nouvelle revue théologique 84 (1962) 128-41, 257-82; F. M. Cross, The Ancient Library of Qumran and Modern Biblical Studies (rev. ed.; New York: Doubleday, 1961); J. Daniélou, The Dead Sea Scrolls and Primitive Christianity (New York: Mentor Omega, 1962); P. Ellingworth, The Epistle to the Hebrews (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993); F. C. Fensham, "Hebrews and Qumran," Neot 5 (1971) 9-21; J. A. Fitzmyer, Essays on the Semitic Background of the New Testament (London: Chapman, 1971); E. F. Harrison, Interpreting Acts (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1986); D. M. Hay, Glory at the Right Hand: Psalm 110 in Early Christianity (Nashville: Abingdon, 1973); F. L. Horton, The Melchizedek Tradition (SNTSMS 30; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1976); L. D. Hurst, The Epistle to the Hebrews: Its Background of Thought (SNTSMS 65; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1990); S. J. Kistemaker, The Psalm Citations in the Epistle to the Hebrews (Amsterdam: van Soest, 1961); H. Kosmala, Hebräer-Essener-Christen (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1971); W. L. Lane, Hebrews (2 vols.; WBC; Dallas: Word, 1991); W. S. LaSor, The Dead Sea Scrolls and the New Testament (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1972); R. N. Longenecker, Biblical Exegesis in the Apostolic Period (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1975); idem, The Christology of Early Jewish Christianity (London: SCM, 1970); S. Johnson, "The Dead Sea Manual of Discipline and the Jerusalem Church of Acts" in The Scrolls and the New Testament, ed. K. Stendahl (Westport, CT: Greenwood, 1957) 129-42; J. C. Vanderkam, The Dead Sea Scrolls Today (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994); A. S. van der Woude, "Melchizedek als himmlische Erlösergestalt in den neugefundenen eschatologischen Midraschim aus Qumran Höhle XI," Oudtestamentliche Studiën 14 (1965) 354-73; Y. Yadin, "The Dead Sea Scrolls and the Epistle to the Hebrews," ScrHier 4 (1958) 36-53.

L. D. Hurst

QUOTATIONS OF OLD TESTAMENT.

See OLD TESTAMENT.

R

RABBINICAL SCHOOLS. See JUDAISM, POST-A.D. 70.

RAHAB. See ANCESTORS.

READER-RESPONSE CRITICISM. See HERMENEUTICS.

REDEMPTION

The word group and motif of redemption are employed outside the Gospels and the Pauline corpus (see DJG, Ransom Saying; DPL, Redemption) to explain the significance of the work of Jesus in delivering believers from captivity to sin* and its consequences.

1. Background
2. The Gospels and Paul
3. The Rest of the New Testament
4. The Common Teaching
5. The Doctrine in the Early Second Century

1. Background.

A typical act of redemption in the OT is the buying back of somebody or something that has passed into another person's possession. If a member of a family fell into debt and was enslaved by his creditor, it was the duty of another member to secure his release if possible by making the appropriate payment. If family property fell into somebody else's hands, a member of the family would attempt to buy it back.

In the same way God's action in delivering the people of Israel from their bondage in Egypt was spoken of as an act of redemption in which he acted as their next of kin and did what was needed to set them free (Ex 6:6-8; see Freedom). Later the return of the people from exile in Babylon to live again in their own land was identified as an act of God and understood, by analogy with the deliverance from Egypt, as an act of redemption (Is 48:20). The language of payment was used metaphorically of God's action (Is 43:3-7; but see Is 52:3), but there is no thought of God paying anybody to set his people free. Yet the thought is not confined to that of deliverance. Rather, when he acts in sovereign power to liberate them, it costs him something to do so.

Alongside this concept of national redemption there stands the belief in God as the deliverer of sinful individuals who trust in him from dire situations, including the threat of death (Job 33; Ps 49).

In NT times the idea of redemption was commonplace in the Greco-Roman world with reference to the freeing of slaves.* Slaves were not necessarily bound for their lifetime; various possibilities of manumission existed, normally by a monetary payment to the owner. For example, slaves could pay money out of the small wages that they received into a temple.* When sufficient funds had accumulated, the money could be used to purchase freedom. However, since slaves were not legal persons in their own right, able to enter into and make legal contracts, a fictitious arrangement was created whereby the god worshiped at the temple bought a slave from an earthly master; the slave was freed in respect of earthly masters but was technically the property of the god who had bought him or her. A. Deissmann claimed that this practice forms the background to the metaphor of redemption used in the NT. It would be a vivid way of bringing home to freed slaves in the congregation the nature of what happened to them when they became Christians.

However, there are weighty arguments against this explanation. First, E. Pax has noted that in the secular world the chief actor is the slave's master, and the god is scarcely ever mentioned. But in the Christian use of the picture the old master of believers is not mentioned and all the stress lies on Christ as the new master.

Second, the slave was not wholly free from the old master; the slave still had an obligation to serve the master but as a freed person. Third, the aim of Greeks was to belong to themselves. Fourth, there were no personal relationships between the slave and the master or the god. And fifth, the vocabulary used in the secular and Christian usages is different. These points are sufficient to show that Paul's usage is not derived from Greek sacral manumission, although it shows parallels to it.

Pax himself looks to Jewish slavery for the background. In the OT, Hebrew slaves, who were normally enslaved because of debt, served for a maximum of seven years and then had to be set free; they could, however, be redeemed for payment at an earlier point. (They might also be unwilling to leave their master at the end of the seven-year period and could become permanent slaves of the master whom they loved.) After the OT period we find examples of slaves being adopted by masters as their children.[15] Further, the stress is on the person who frees the slave rather than on the master who lets him go. This practice of redeeming slaves was the basis for the OT picture of divine redemption in which the Israelites were set free from Pharaoh to become the servants (see Servant) of Yahweh (e.g., Deut 7:8).

2. The Gospels and Paul.

In the NT redemption is a general term for the end-time act and resulting state of deliverance promised by God and awaited by his people, who were conscious that they were still oppressed politically by their enemies and morally by their own sinfulness (Lk 2:38; cf. 1:68). The latter emphasis is in mind when Jesus states that as Son of Man he gives himself as a ransom for many (Mk 10:45; par. Mt 20:28). In the Pauline writings two related ideas appear. The first is that of redemption in the strict sense: people are released from some kind of bondage or slavery. They are delivered from being under the law* and the curse that it inflicts on those who are under it but do not keep its requirements (Gal 3:13; 4:5). In a second type of imagery slaves are bought from their previous master in order to belong to a new master whom they are under obligation to serve (1 Cor 6:20; 7:23). The church is a people purchased by God with the blood of "his own" (Acts 20:28), presumably Christ.

3. The Rest of the New Testament.

3.1. The Book of Revelation. In Revelation 1:5 (see Revelation, Book of) Jesus is described as the one who loved us and loosed us from our sins by his blood, making us into a kingdom* and priests.* The language is of deliverance from sin and its effects, and the motivation for the action lies in the love of Christ. Behind the language lies Psalm 130:8, where God redeems Israel from all its iniquities. When the motif is repeated (Rev 5:9), the thought of deliverance from sin is replaced by that of believers having been purchased for God by the blood of the Lamb.* Similarly, believers present in heaven* are those who were bought from the earth as first fruits for God and the Lamb (Rev 14:3-5). The means of redemption from sin or purchase for God is the blood of Jesus, i.e., his sacrificial death (see Death of Christ). Thus the concept is understood not in terms of the payment of a monetary price but of the offering of a sacrifice.* When believers are said to have been bought, the question is, Out of what? or From whom? The question is not answered directly, but the implication is that they are set free from their sins or alien powers by the sacrifice of Jesus. The recurrence of the verb in 1 Corinthians 6:20; 7:23; 2 Peter 2:1 shows that traditional language is being used.

3.2. 1 Peter. 1 Peter 1:18 (see 1 Peter) describes believers as those who have been ransomed from their pointless way of life* with the precious blood of Christ, who is likened to a spotless and unblemished lamb. Here the deliverance is not so much from a master as from a way of life that was godless, sinful and leading nowhere. The concept of sacrifice is linked with that of redemption. The comparison with a monetary payment suggests that a parallel is being drawn with the state of slavery, from which people could be released by a ransom. But in the case of sinners a sacrifice is involved. Their way of life stands under condemnation from God, and only by a sacrifice can the condemnation be cancelled. The cancellation of the condemnation carries with it release from the captivity to the futile way of life.

3.3. Hebrews. In Hebrews 11:35 (see Hebrews) the word is used of people, doubtless the Maccabean martyrs* and others, who refused to accept deliverance for themselves when they were being tortured to death, in order that they might attain a better resurrection. This usage is nonreligious and refers to release from torture and imprisonment at the price of apostasy.*

In Hebrews 9:11-14 Christ obtained eternal redemption by entering into the heavenly tabernacle* with his own blood. The result is explained in that he offered himself as a sacrifice to God and so was able to purify the consciences* of believers from dead works to serve the living God. In Hebrews 9:15 it becomes clear that Jesus died in order to secure redemption from the transgressions committed in the time of the first covenant.* Thus once again redemption is linked to the remission of sins and is tantamount to forgiveness.*

4. The Common Teaching.

A motif in NT theology is like an object that is being tossed around just beneath the surface of a turbulent sea; whenever it emerges from the waves it is seen from a slightly different angle, and therefore different parts of it are observed, but it is one and the same object that keeps appearing. By combining the observations it is possible to form a fair idea of the total shape and appearance. From the various references to redemption we can see that there was a general understanding of the motif that surfaces and shows different facets. The controlling background lies in the OT. The basic idea of deliverance at great cost persists. The agent is always Christ, the motive is the love of God for humankind, and the thought leads to praise. Human beings are enslaved by a futile, sinful way of life that leads ultimately to death, as God's judgment* upon sin. The deliverance is from the rather than from a specific captor, and it is effected by the death of Jesus understood as a sacrifice. The sacrifice, which is both provided by God and offered to him, is the means of cancelling the effect of sin. At the same time it acts as a price that is paid to set people free from their , and the result is that they are bought by God to be his people to serve him. The language of purchase is retained, not because a purchaser is in view but in order to express the tremendous cost to God without which deliverance would not have been possible.

5. The Doctrine in the Early Second Century.

In the immediate post-NT writings there are some hints of salvation* by human effort: "If you have anything passing through your hands, you shall give a ransom for your sins" (Did. 4.6; see Didache). The way of light* includes not only "saving souls by your word" but also "you shall work with your hands for a ransom for your sins" (Barn. 19.10; see Epistle of Barnabas). When 2 Clement 17.4 (see Clement of Rome) refers to "the day of his appearing when he shall come and redeem us, each according to his works," it confuses judgment by works (see Faith and Works) with redemption by grace.*

Elsewhere the thought is more in line with canonical writings. In 1 Clement 12.7 the scarlet thread hung out of the window by Rahab "shows beforehand that through the blood of the Lord there shall be redemption for all them that believe and hope on God." Barnabas 14.5-8 speaks of the "Lord Jesus who was prepared beforehand for this purpose, that appearing in person he might redeem out of darkness our hearts which had already been paid over to death" (cf. Barn. 19.2). The statement is backed up with prophecies* from Isaiah 42:6-7 and Isaiah 49:6-7 in which the Lord,* who sends his servant, is himself "the Lord who ransomed you, even God" (see also Justin Martyr Dial. Tryph. 86).

But the brightest star in the collection is the *Epistle to Diognetus:

> When our iniquity had been fully accomplished, and it had been made perfectly manifest that punishment and death were expected as its recompense, and the season came which God had ordained . . . he hated us not, nor rejected us, nor bore us malice, but was long-suffering and patient, and in pity for us took upon himself our sins, and himself parted with his own Son as a ransom for us, the holy for the lawless, the guileless for the evil, the just for the unjust, the incorruptible for the corruptible, the immortal for the moral. For what else but his righteousness would have covered our sins? In whom was it possible for us lawless and ungodly people to have been justified, save only in the Son of God? O the sweet exchange, O the inscrutable creation, O the unexpected benefits; that the iniquity of many should be concealed in One Righteous man, and the righteousness of One should justify many that are iniquitous! (Diogn. 9.2-5, Lightfoot/Harmer trans.).

See also SALVATION; SLAVE, SLAVERY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. F. Büchsel, "λύω κτλ," TDNT 4:328-56; W. Haubeck, Loskauf durch Christus:

Herkunft, Gestalt und Bedeutung des paulinischen Loskaufmotivs (Giessen/Basel: Brunnen, 1985); D. Hill, Greek Words and Hebrew Meanings (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1967) chap. 3; B. Janowski, "Auslösung des verwirkten Lebens. Zur Geschichte und Struktur der biblischen Lösegeldvorstellung," ZTK 79 (1982) 25-59; I. H. Marshall, "The Development of the Concept of Redemption in the New Testament" in Reconciliation and Hope, ed. R. Banks (Exeter: Paternoster, 1974) 153-69; L. Morris, The Apostolic Preaching of the Cross (3d ed.; London: Tyndale, 1965) chap. 1; E. Pax, "Der Loskauf. Zur Geschichte eines neutestamentlichen Begriffes," Antonianum 37 (1962) 239-78; J. Schneider and C. Brown, "Redemption, etc.," NIDNTT 3:177-223; J. Unterman and G. S. Shogren, "Redemption," ABD 5:649-57; B. B. Warfield, The Person and Work of Christ (Philadelphia: Presbyterian and Reformed, 1950) 325-48, 429-75.

I. H. Marshall

REIGN OF GOD. See KINGDOM OF GOD.

RELATIVES OF JESUS

Various relatives of Jesus are the subject both of historical traditions and of legendary imagination in early Christian literature. Historical traditions attest the important role they played in the leadership of the early Christian movement. Legendary developments focus especially on Jesus' mother.

1. The Known Relatives of Jesus
2. The Brothers and Sisters of Jesus
3. The Relatives as Early Christian Leaders
4. Mary and Joseph

1. The Known Relatives of Jesus.

From the NT and other reliable early sources, especially the second-century writer Hegesippus, who preserves Palestinian Jewish Christian traditions, the following relatives from the generation of Jesus' parents onward are known:

Jesus' mother Mary* and adoptive father Joseph.

Joseph's brother Clopas (Hegesippus, quoted in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.11; 3.32.6; 4.22.4). "Mary of Clopas" (Jn 19:25) is probably his wife. He may well be the same person as Cleopas (Lk 24:18). Clopas is a Semitic name and Cleopas is a Greek name; Jews of this period frequently used both a Semitic name and a Greek name that sounded similar.

Elizabeth, the mother of John the Baptist, was a relative of Jesus' mother, Mary, according to Luke 1:36 (the precise relationship is not specified).

Jesus' four brothers: James, Joses (or Joseph; Joses is an abbreviated form), Judas (or Jude, an English variant of the name that is sometimes used for this brother of Jesus) and Simon (Mt 13:55; Mk 6:3).

Jesus' sisters (at least two: Mt 13:56; Mk 6:3). Later sources, perhaps correctly, name them Mary and Salome (Protev. James 19.3—20.4; Gos. Phil. 59.6-11; Epiphanius Haer. 78.8.1; 78.9.6).

Simeon (Simon) son of Clopas (Hegesippus, quoted in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.11; 3.32.6; 4.22.4).

Zoker and James, two grandsons of Jesus' brother Jude (Hegesippus, quoted in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.19.1-3.20.7; 3.32.5-6; and in Paris MS 1555A; Bodleian MS Barocc. 142).

Abris, Abraham and his son James, three descendants of the family of Jesus. They are named in medieval chronicles, which may preserve early sources, as bishops of Ctesiphon-Seleucia in central Mesopotamia in the second century.

Conon of Magydos, martyred in 250-51, was probably a descendant of the family of Jesus (Martyrdom of Conon 4.2).

2. The Brothers and Sisters of Jesus.

Since the terms brother and sister could be used of relatives other than full blood siblings, the precise relationship of these persons to Jesus has been debated. The issue has been closely connected with the traditional belief in the perpetual virginity of Mary, which can be found already in early second-century Christian literature. The three major views have come to be known by the names of their fourth-century proponents: Helvidius, Epiphanius and Jerome. The Helvidian view, which most modern exegetes hold, is that the brothers and sisters were children of Joseph and Mary, born after Jesus. The Epiphanian view, which is the traditional view in the Eastern Orthodox churches, is that they were children of Joseph by a marriage prior to his marriage to Mary (and therefore Jesus' adoptive siblings). The Hieronymian view, which through Jerome's influence became the traditional Roman Catholic view, is that they were first cousins of Jesus (usually considered children of Clopas). The last view depends largely on identifying Jesus' brothers with other persons of the same names (Mt 10:3; 27:56; Mk 3:18; 15:40, 47; 16:1; Lk 6:15-16; 24:10; Hegesippus, quoted in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.22.4) but is rendered improbable by the fact that the brothers of Jesus are invariably called "the brothers of the Lord" in early Christian literature. If they were cousins of Jesus we should expect them to be occasionally so described, as Hegesippus describes Simeon son of Clopas (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.22.4).

It is much more difficult to decide between the Helvidian and the Epiphanian views. Nothing in the NT provides decisive evidence either way, while the only works from an early period that are unambiguous about the relationship take the Epiphanian view. These are the Protevangelium of James, the Gospel of Peter (see Peter, Gospel of) and the Infancy Gospel of Thomas, probably all from second-century Syria. In the Protevangelium of James the perpetual virginity of Mary is also implied, and so a belief that it was inappropriate for the mother of Jesus also to bear other children may have produced the Epiphanian view of Jesus' brothers and sisters. Alternatively it may be that these prominent early Christian leaders were known from tradition to be children of Joseph but not of Mary and that belief in the perpetual virginity of Mary was possible only for this reason.

The apostle Thomas, known in east Syrian Christian tradition as Judas Thomas, is considered in some east Syrian Christian literature to be the twin brother of Jesus (Acts of Thomas 11; 31; 39; Book of Thomas 138.4, 7, 19), presumably identified with Jesus' brother Jude. The tradition stems from the fact that the name Thomas means "twin" (Jn 21:2) and probably at first indicated a relationship of spiritual rather than physical twinship with Jesus.

3. The Relatives as Early Christian Leaders. There is good evidence that a considerable number of members of the family of Jesus, from the earliest period of the church down to the early second century, were prominent leaders in the Jewish Christian movement in Palestine and perhaps also were missionaries outside Palestine (see Jewish Christianity). Jesus' brother James,* whose importance as a Christian leader of the first generation is equaled only by that of Peter and Paul, quickly became prominent in the leadership of the Jerusalem* church* and then its unique head until his martyrdom in 62. Since the Jerusalem church was the mother church of all the churches and by many early Christians accorded a central authority* over the whole Christian movement, James played a key role throughout the Christian movement. In the letter of James he writes from this position of central authority in Jerusalem to Jewish Christians throughout the Diaspora.* Many references to him (e.g., Gos. Thom. 12) and works associated with him in early Christian literature outside the NT also attest the remarkable impact he made.

After James's death (whether immediately or after 70 is unclear) his cousin Simeon son of Clopas succeeded him as leader of the Jerusalem church. Simeon occupied this position for at least forty years, until he was put to death by the Roman authorities on a charge of political subversion, since he belonged to a Davidic family (either between 99 and 103 or between 108 and 117; Hegesippus, quoted in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.11; 3.32.6; 4.22.4). It is possible but not certain that the third leader of the Jerusalem church, named in the Jerusalem bishops' lists as either Justus or Judas, was also a relative of Jesus.

While James occupied the position of central authority in Jerusalem, the other three brothers of Jesus and perhaps also his sisters were traveling missionaries. Paul's reference to them in this role (1 Cor 9:5) is revealing, since it shows that they, along with Peter, were the obvious examples for Paul to cite, even when writing to Corinth, of people well known as traveling missionaries, whose right to the support due to apostles* was unquestionable. The letter of Jude* can be understood in relation to the implication of 1 Corinthians 9:5 that Jude the brother of Jesus was a very well-known Christian leader.

Paul's reference correlates with the later testimony of Julius Africanus, who lived at Emmaus in the early third century and derived his information from a Palestinian Jewish Christian source. He says that the relatives of Jesus, who were known as the desposynoi, "from the Jewish villages of Nazareth and Kokhaba traveled around the rest of the land" (quoted in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 1.7.14). The term desposynoi, meaning "those who belong to the Master [or Sovereign: despotēs]," is not known from any other source and must be the term by which members of the family of Jesus were known in those Palestinian Jewish Christian circles in which they were revered leaders. It demonstrates that not only "the brothers of the Lord" but also a wider circle of relatives (including, for example, Clopas and his wife, Mary) played a prominent leadership role. Kokhaba is a village close to Nazareth. Evidently the traditional Galilean homes of Jesus' relatives remained the base from which they traveled and exercised leadership elsewhere in Jewish Palestine.

Among those who were prominent in the leadership of the Christian movement at the end of the first century were the two grandsons of Jude. This at least must be a reliable inference from the somewhat legendary account that Hegesippus gives about them. He says that, like Simeon son of Clopas, they came under suspicion, since they were descendants of David, and were brought before the emperor Domitian himself. As evidence that they were not politically dangerous, they pointed out that they were merely hard-working peasant farmers, farming only 39 plethra of land (quoted in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.19.1—3.20.7; 3.32.5-6). The precise figure suggests an accurate knowledge of the size of the family's small holding in Nazareth, which had passed down to Zoker and James and would have been well known to Palestinian Jewish Christians.

4. Mary and Joseph.

From the second century onward Christian literary and legendary imagination gave much attention to Jesus' family background and especially to his mother, Mary. From the early second century onward, not only Joseph but also Mary was considered a descendant of David (Ign. Eph. 18.2; Ign. Trall. 9.1; Ign. Smyrn. 1.1; Asc. Isa. 11.2; Justin Dial. Tryph. 45.4; 100.3; Protev. Jas. 10.1). The mid-second-century Protevangelium of James tells of the birth of Mary to her parents Joachim and Anna, her childhood spent in the temple,* her marriage to Joseph, already an aged widower with children who takes her into his house as her guardian, and the birth of Jesus in a miraculous manner, leaving Mary's virginity unimpaired. The work seems designed especially to celebrate the role of Mary as pure virgin and instrument of God's salvation.* The miraculous birth of Jesus also appears in Ignatius* (Ign. Eph. 19.1), the Ascension of Isaiah (Asc. Isa. 11.2-14) and the Odes of Solomon (Odes Sol. 19).

Later birth and infancy gospels follow the model provided by the Protevangelium of James, but only the Coptic History of Joseph the Carpenter (probably fourth or fifth century) focuses on Joseph, featuring especially an account of his death narrated by Jesus. Of Mary's life after the ministry of Jesus the NT gives only a very early glimpse in Acts 1:14. According to later tradition, reflected in the Assumption literature (fourth century onward), she stayed in Jerusalem, where this literature describes her death and burial and the assumption of her body to heaven. That she moved to Ephesus with the apostle John (cf. John 19:27) and died there is an alternative later tradition with no support in the earlier Christian traditions associated with Ephesus.

See also JAMES; JEWISH CHRISTIANITY; JUDE; MARY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, "The Brothers and Sisters of Jesus: An Epiphanian Response to John P. Meier," CBQ 56 (1994) 686-700; idem, Jude and the Relatives of Jesus in the Early Church (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1990); idem, "Mary of Clopas (John 19:25)" in Women in the Biblical Tradition, ed. G. J. Brooke (Lewiston, NY: Edwin Mellen, 1992) 231-55; W. A. Bienert, "The Relatives of Jesus" in New Testament Apocrypha, ed., W. Schneemelcher and R. McL. Wilson, (2 vols.; rev. ed.; Louisville: Westminster/John Knox, 1991) 1: 470-91.

R. J. Bauckham

RELIGIONS, GRECO-ROMAN

The traditional religions of Greece and those of Rome underwent significant changes in the Hellenistic and Roman imperial periods. Nevertheless it would be a mistake to minimize the influence of the traditional religion and traditional religious attitudes in NT times. Against the background of the old cults and their practices, certain expressions of the religious spirit attained new prominence or new manifestations in the period of the rise of Christianity: the imperial cult (see Emperor), the mysteries, oracles and healing,* magic,* demons, astrology and fate (see DPL, Religions).

1. Ancient Greek and Roman Religion
2. Characteristics of Religion in the Hellenistic-Roman Age
3. Civic Cult
4. Imperial Cult
5. Mysteries

6. Other Features
7. Concluding Observation

1. Ancient Greek and Roman Religion.
The difference between the traditional religion of Greece and that of Rome is typified by the fact that Greek religion derived from the myths in the epics of Homer and Roman religion was ascribed to the institutions of the lawgiver Numa. The Greeks dealt with their deities as they would with larger-than-life human beings, whereas Roman religion had a definite legal cast. The Greek deities were anthropomorphic, displaying human passions, portrayed as human beings and taking an interest in and interfering in human affairs but differing from humans by being ageless and deathless, not limited by space and being above ordinary morality (see Purity). Sacrifices did not require a professional priesthood and were governed by the bargaining spirit that "I give gifts to the gods and ask that they may do things for me" (see Plato Euthyphro 14C-E). Roman deities were less personalized powers (numina) that had specific and limited functions. Human relations with the divine were of a more contractual nature so that ceremonies had to be exactly followed, and many religious observances were performed for the people by the professional experts (pontifices and augures). The domestic cult in both Greece and Rome continued with great consistency. Meals began with a sacrifice of food and ended with a libation.

2. Characteristics of Religion in the Hellenistic-Roman Age.
The modern distinction between religion and the state did not operate. Since idolatrous practices permeated all aspects of life (politics, the military, the theater, athletics, business), Jews and Christians were at a severe social and economic disadvantage.

Syncretism was encouraged by the transplanting of Greek gods to foreign lands and the immigration of foreign gods into the Greek and Roman worlds, resulting in the identification of deities and borrowing of ideas.

Polytheism was tolerant, or nonexclusive; the exclusivism of Judaism* and Christianity was highly offensive to the pagan mentality. There was an inclination toward monotheism, but even where a supreme god was acknowledged, the old gods were kept as subordinate powers.

The increased individualism of the Hellenistic age put more emphasis on chosen relationships at the expense of inherited relationships, but the chosen relationships continued to express the corporate or social side of religion.

Piety (Lat pietas; Gk eusebeia) had to do primarily with external rites rather than inner attitudes. The pious person was the one who performed the required duties properly.

Morality was not derived primarily from the religious cult. The literary tradition provided examples of what was and was not done, and philosophers assumed the role of teachers of popular morality. Some of the cults began to include moral regulations along with rules for ritual purity.

By the first century, psychological needs included a feeling of helplessness before fate, uncertainty about the hereafter, curiosity about the supernatural and a sense of the instability of human affairs.

3. Civic Cult.
Contrary to what is often said, the traditional civic cults remained vibrant in the early centuries of the Christian era. The decline of local autonomy in Hellenistic and imperial times seemingly led to an awakening of loyalty and pride in the civic cult. As the political importance of the Greek cities diminished, their glory became associated with their temples and gods. The patriotism of the leading classes found expression in commissioning the writing of local histories, the study of old customs and myths, the building of new temples, instituting festivals and setting up commemorative or celebratory inscriptions. The civic cults were nurtured by primary and secondary education, where Homer was the basic textbook. Thus the educational curriculum transmitted the traditional myths and with them the traditional values of Greek culture.

The civic authorities determined the selection of cult personnel, requirements for ritual purity, distribution of items brought for sacrifice, order of march in processions, and other such externals of cultic affairs, and these regulations were often inscribed on stone monuments. The essential requirement of a religious sanctuary was an altar for sacrifice. Grain or bread, vegetables, olive oil and wine were more common sacrifices than meat, but the latter was the principal sacrifice at the periodic (often annual) state-sponsored festivals, the main time the poorer people had meat in their diet. Roman sacrifices were accompanied by the burning of incense and the playing of a pipe (tibia), with the priest wearing a veil over the head. The altar was outside the temple, which was the house of the deity, not an assembly hall for worshipers (see Worship). The deity's presence was symbolized by the cult statue, the central point of focus in the temple. The periodic festivals, in addition to the public procession and sacrifices, often included games and contests. The principal occasion of private sacrifice was the votive offering, the gift brought to the deity in fulfillment of a vow, a central act of personal piety and religious life.

Two narratives in Acts* illustrate important features of local civic cults. In the episode at Lystra (Acts 14:11-13), which may have its background in the story recorded by Ovid (Ovid Met. 8.620-724), note may be taken of the following items: the anthropomorphic nature of the gods, who appear in human form; the giving of Greek names (Zeus, the chief god, and Hermes, the messenger of the gods) to native deities; the priest assigned to a deity; the identification of the cult as "Zeus-Outside-the City" (NRSV footnote), where the sanctuary was located; and the intention to sacrifice bulls (the most expensive sacrifice and so an indication of the perceived importance of the occasion) that are garlanded, a common decoration of the sacrificial animal.

In one of the episodes at Ephesus (Acts 19:23-41) other features related to civic cults stand out: once more the giving of a Greek name to a local deity (Artemis of the Ephesians is not the classical Greek goddess of the hunt but an Asia Minor mother goddess; although the fertility feature is not specifically attested for Artemis of the Ephesians, the analogy with other Anatolian mother goddesses suggests fecundity of nature but not sexual immorality); the alliance of the most important local deity with the civic magistrates (Acts 19:35, 38-39), provincial authorities (Acts 19:31, 38) and economic activity (Acts 19:24-27); the making of images of the deity for sale as souvenirs or as votive offerings (Acts 19:24); the use of acclamations (Acts 19:34); the designation of Ephesus as "temple keeper" (neōkoros) of Artemis (Acts 19:35); and a divine origin attributed to the image or symbol of the deity (Acts 19:35).

4. Imperial Cult.

Under the empire the principal local civic cult was often joined to the imperial cult. Giving divine honors to the rulers was the climax of civic cult in the Greco-Roman world, only now the city (Rome) was the world and the city was personified in the royal family. Precedents for the ruler cult were provided by the Near-Eastern view of kings as divine by reason of office and by the Greek cult of heroes, notable human beings who by reason of their achievements were elevated to the status of divinities. Alexander the Great and his successors received divine honors, and the Roman emperors succeeded to these honors in the Greek East and ultimately received them in the Latin West as well. Such was the great power exercised by the rulers and such was the gratitude for the peace and prosperity brought by the emperor that only the honors shown to the gods seemed an adequate expression of homage. The social elite, who benefited the most from Roman rule, were especially active in promoting the ruler cult, and generally the impetus came from the provinces, but certain rulers like Caligula and Domitian insisted on receiving divine honors.

The external forms taken by the imperial cult included the dedication of altars and temples, erection of statues to the person in the appearance of a deity, commemorative inscriptions, sacrifices in the ruler's honor, instituting new festivals or renaming old ones and ascribing divine titles. Although miracle* stories were often associated with the birth of the ruler, there seems to have been no expectation that the ruler would act supernaturally. Prayers* and votive offerings to the ruler were rare or nonexistent. The imperial cult was an acknowledgment of what seemed almost supernatural power and an act of gratitude for benefactions (see Blessing) received or an anticipation of them. It was an expression of the status of the ruler, of loyalty to him or her and of the unity of the subjects. Thus its importance was more political and social than religious.

The story of Herod Agrippa I (Acts 12:20-23) illustrates the hyperbole of court flattery to a king from those who expected benefits from him (cf. the fuller account in Josephus Ant. 19.8.2 §343-352). The Asiarchs mentioned in Acts 19:31 were members of the provincial council of Asia, who without necessarily being personally involved, oversaw the imperial cult as part of their duties. The book of Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) shows the greatest antagonism of any NT writing toward Rome and its embodiment in the imperial cult. The religious aspect of the beast* who will be overthrown by the Lord* stands out (Rev 13:1, 4-8, 11-15; 19:20). Astral imagery, associated not only with the gods of paganism but also on the coins of Domitian with the imperial family, is subordinated to Christ, who holds in his hands "the seven stars" (Rev 1:16), which are really the "angels of the seven churches" (Rev 1:20; see Angel), and who is the true world conqueror (Rev 3:21). Revelation from its beginning counters the imperial ideology by asserting that Christ is "ruler of the kings of the earth" (Rev 1:5) and that he has made his people "to be a kingdom" (Rev 1:6, 9; see Kingdom of God). It gives great emphasis throughout to the royal rule of God (Rev 11:15, 17; 12:10; 15:3; 19:6), to Christ as "Lord of lords and King of kings" (Rev 17:14; 19:16) and to the rule of the saints (Rev 5:10; 20:4, 6; 22:5).

5. Mysteries.

The mysteries, secret cults in which the uninitiated could not participate, were a feature of classical Greek religion. One of the oldest and the most influential was the Eleusinian mysteries celebrated in honor of Demeter. They were a local mystery, in that a person had to go to Eleusis, near Athens, to receive the initiation. A site mentioned in the NT where local mysteries were celebrated is Samothrace (Acts 16:11), where were worshiped the "Mother of the gods" and the Cabiri, the latter in Roman times confused with the Dioscuri, Castor and Pollux, who were protective deities of sailors (Acts 28:11). Also known in classical times were the mysteries of Dionysus, which were not confined to one locality.

Several Eastern cults, when their devotees became part of the Greek world, copied the Greek practice of mystery initiations. Especially widespread were the Egyptian deities Isis and Osiris (the latter largely replaced by Sarapis in the Greek world). Two second-century sources attest their popularity: the philosophical interpretation of the cult myth by Plutarch (Plutarch Iside 12-21, Mor. 355D-359) and the circumstantial account of the initiation (without divulging its secrets) by Apuleius (Met. 11), who also describes other features of the religion.

Numerous archaeological remains attest the spread of the mysteries of Mithras, especially in the second and third centuries after Christ. Although worshiping the Persian god Mithras, Roman Mithraism seems not to have been derived from Persian religion. Mithras was associated with astrological phenomena and was worshiped as having control over celestial forces. There were seven grades of initiation, from the rank of "raven" to that of "father." That Mithraism initiated only men and that it placed an emphasis on loyalty perhaps account for its popularity with soldiers and government officials.

The mysteries flourished around the beginning of the Christian era, especially in the second century, because they conveyed an assurance of higher status, a sense of a closer relationship with the deity and the hope of blessedness in the hereafter. They have in common with Christianity a concern with salvation,* but their salvation was from fate and the terrors of the afterlife, not from sin.* The "dying and rising" of the deities in the mysteries, where it occurs, relates to the cycle of nature and was no true resurrection.* The NT terminology of mystery has to do with the divine plan, previously hidden but now revealed. The Christian initiation was not secret. Where washings occur in the mysteries, this was part of the purification preliminary to the initiation, not the initiation itself as in Christian baptism.* The mysteries were rather expensive and were for the few deemed already worthy, whereas Christianity invited everyone (as the pagan critic Celsus pointed out—according to Origen Cont. Cels. 3.59).

6. Other Features.

6.1. Oracles and Healing. The sanctuary of Apollo at Delphi had been the principal site for receiving divine communications in classical times, but it was in decline at the beginning of the Christian era, a fact for which Plutarch sought explanations (On the Obsolescence of Oracles, Mor. 409E-438E). Its influence was partially inherited by daughter sanctuaries at Claros and Didyma in Asia Minor and Daphne near Antioch* in Syria. By the beginning of the Christian era the oracles were no longer determinative of political and religious developments, but they continued to be consulted by cities on formal sacred affairs and by individuals on affairs of personal life. Delphi was also known by the name Pytho, from Python, the female serpent representing the earth goddess who was killed by Apollo, and his priestess through whom the oracles were given was known as Pythia; hence "Pythian spirit" was used for the power* to utter oracular messages such as the fortunetelling by the slave* girl in Acts 16:16 (see Prophecy).

Dreams (see Visions) were considered another important source of divine communication, a belief shared by pagans and Jews and a frequent medium of providential guidance in the book of Acts (Acts 10:10-16; 16:9-10; 23:11; 27:23-24).

Many of the healing sanctuaries were properly shrines for oracles. The most important healing deity in the Greco-Roman world was the hero Asclepius, son of Apollo. In addition to his important sanctuary at Epidaurus, he had healing sites at Cos, Corinth, Athens and Rome. Rivaling Epidaurus was the sanctuary of Asclepius at Pergamum (Rev 2:12-17; see Hemer), celebrated by the second-century orator Aelius Aristides in his Sacred Tales. The satirist Lucian of Samosata, also second century, tells the story of Alexander the False Prophet, who created his own healing and oracular sanctuary in Asia Minor and duped many people, in a narrative that reveals the religious mentality of the age as well as the author's rationalist criticism. The sanctuaries of Asclepius often worked in cooperation with the medical profession to effect healing, but there were also told miracle stories of the most extraordinary kind. The expectation that divine power works miracles of healing is evident in many passages in Acts (Acts 3:1-10; 8:4-7; 9:32-41; 14:8-11; 28:8-9), but these accounts are more sober than the propaganda stories for Asclepius and are related to the saving work of Jesus as carried out by his messengers.

6.2. Magic. Religion and magic* were considered distinct, but they are not easily distinguished in the ancient world. In spite of laws against its practice, magic was widespread. As a somewhat artificial modern construct, the word magic as applied to ancient religion is used for efforts to compel supernatural forces by means of certain material objects and verbal formulas. Curse tablets sought to bring punishment on an enemy, and amulets were used to ward off potential attacks by evil forces. An extensive magical literature is preserved on papyri, often containing, it seems, the recipe books of practicing magicians (see Acts 19:19).

The term magic was derived from the name of a Persian priestly tribe and was used by the Greeks to refer to strange rites and formulas and then as a semitechnical term for the activity of those considered magicians. The use in Acts 8:9-11 illustrates the association of magic with the supposed control of supernatural power. The title magos is used for Bar-Jesus (or Elymas), also called a "false prophet," in Acts 13:6, 8. The Jews were widely regarded in the Greco-Roman world as possessing magical power. This association is evident also in the story in Acts 19:11-20, appropriately occurring in Ephesus, a city known as a center of magical activity (see Arnold). The story illustrates the use of formulas of constraint in magic and the common belief that knowledge of the name* of a supernatural power gave one control over that power (Acts 19:13), but it also exemplifies the different significance "the name of the Lord Jesus" had for Christians (Acts 19:15).

6.3. Demons and Superstition. By Hellenistic times the word daimōn had come to be used for intermediate divine beings that might be either good or bad. Plato's student Xenocrates had classified the kinds of demons; another Platonist, Plutarch, gives considerable information on demonology at the end of the first Christian century. The tendency by philosophers to blame the intermediate beings for bad things and for the less acceptable features of pagan religion prepared for the Jewish and Christian appropriation of daimonion for evil spiritual beings (Jas 2:19; 3:15; Rev 9:20; 16:14; 18:2).

The term deisidaimonia ("fear of the demons") became the common Greek term for "superstition" (see Plutarch On Superstition, Mor. 164E-171F). The word could have a neutral sense, even as daimoniōn ("divinities") does in Acts 17:18. Whether it is used in a neutral or a negative sense in Acts 17:22 depends on whether Paul is making a factual observation about the religiosity of the Athenians or is identifying with the philosophical criticism of Greek popular religion.

6.4. Astrology and Fate. Astronomy and astrology were not distinct in the ancient world (see Magic and Astrology). The belief that the movements of the heavenly bodies in absolute regularity control earthly events up to the smallest detail was developed by Greeks in Egypt in the Hellenistic age and began to be popularized under the early Roman Empire. The emperor Tiberius became so absorbed in astrology (Suetonius Tiberius 69) that he neglected the practice of religion, but few went that far. The religious aspect of astrology came from the identification of the planets with the traditional deities of Greece and Rome, but the planets themselves did not receive cultic devotion. The learned astronomy gave a new worldview that distinguished the sublunary world and the seven planets, characterized by change and corruption, from the supralunary world of the fixed stars, characterized by unchangability and perfection. Astrology became a principal support for the idea of absolute fate. Although some people gladly embraced this view, the popular religions were those that offered deliverance from fate—the mysteries of Isis and Mithras as well as Christianity (see DPL, Worship, §2.1).

7. Concluding Observation.

A snake was associated with many of the Greco-Roman deities. Among the forms that Zeus took, particularly in the household* cult, was that of a snake. A snake was portrayed on the shield of Athena, the patron goddess of Athens, and a snake was associated with Apollo at Delphi. The snake entwined around a staff was the symbol of Asclepius, and, from confusion of that with the twin snakes on the herald's staff of Hermes, this symbol has continued in use by the medical profession. The protective spirit of the Greek household, the Agathos Daimon, was depicted as a snake, and a snake represented the genius, or life principle, of the family on Roman household altars. Considering the biblical associations of the snake with Satan* (Rev 20:2), there is little wonder that Jews and Christians saw pagan religion as inspired by the devil.

See also GNOSIS, GNOSTICISM; IDOLATRY; MAGIC AND ASTROLOGY; ROMAN EMPIRE, CHRISTIANS AND THE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. E. Arnold, Ephesians: Power and Magic (SNTSMS 63; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1989); E. Ferguson, Backgrounds of Early Christianity (2d ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993) 137-298; J. Ferguson, The Religions of the Roman Empire (Aspects of Greek and Roman Life; Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1970); A. J. Festugière, Le Monde Gréco-Romain au temps de notre-Seigneur, 2: Le Milieu Spirituel (Bibliothèque Catholique des Sciences Religieuses 7.2; Paris: Blond & Gay, 1935); D. Fishwick, The Imperial Cult in the Latin West (2 vols. in 4 pts.; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1987-92); D. W. J. Gill and B. W. Winter, "Acts and Roman Religion" in The Book of Acts in Its Greco-Roman Setting, ed. D. W. J. Gill and C. Gempf (BAFCS 2; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994) 79-103; F. C. Grant, ed., Ancient Roman Religion (The Library of Religion; New York: Liberal Arts Press, 1957); idem, Hellenistic Religions: The Age of Syncretism (The Library of Religion; New York: Liberal Arts Press, 1953); C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in their Local Setting (JSNTSup 11; Sheffield: JSOT, 1986); H. C. Kee, Medicine, Miracle and Magic in New Testament Times (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1986); R. MacMullen, Paganism in the Roman Empire (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1981); M. W. Meyer, The Ancient Mysteries: A Sourcebook (San Francisco: Harper, 1987); M. P. Nilsson, Geschichte der griechischen Religion, 2: Die hellenistische und römische Zeit (Handbuch der Altertumswissenschaft; Munich: C. H. Beck, 1950); A. D. Nock, Conversion: The Old and the New in Religion from Alexander the Great to Augustine of Hippo (Oxford: Clarendon, 1933); idem, Essays on Religion and the Ancient World, ed. Z. Stewart (2 vols.; Oxford: Clarendon, 1972); S. R. F. Price, Ritual and Power: The Roman Imperial Cult in Asia Minor (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1984); J. Z. Smith, Drudgery Divine: On the Comparison of Early Christianities and the Religions of Late Antiquity (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1990); D. Ulansey, The Origins of the Mithraic Mysteries (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1989); A. J. M. Wedderburn, Baptism and Resurrection: Studies in Pauline Theology Against Its Greco-Roman Background (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1987).

E. Ferguson

REPENTANCE, SECOND REPENTANCE

Repentance is the divinely appointed means of repairing the relationship between God and humankind. It is God's gift, allowing the wayward the opportunity to repudiate sin and turn again to please God and honor God with one's life. It is a gift not to be taken for granted, nor is God's favor to be presumed upon. Repentance permits a person to return to God and seize upon a regenerate life, but provides no license for entering lightly into sin and apostasy.

1. Jewish and Greco-Roman Background
2. Acts
3. Hebrews
4. General Epistles
5. Revelation
6. Other Early Christian Literature

1. Jewish and Greco-Roman Background.

1.1. Old Testament and Hellenistic Judaism. The idea of repentance in Judaism* arose within the context of the covenant* between God* and Israel.* The people individually and collectively transgressed the law* and stood in need of reconciliation with God and restoration to favor. This was sought through inward contrition, accompanied by outward signs of regret such as confession, lamentation, wearing sackcloth and offering sacrifices* (Joel 2:12-13; Hos 14:2-5; Ezek 14:6; Pr Man 7-14). The OT speaks of repentance as a "turning" (Heb šûḇ) away from sin* and rebellion and "returning" to God, covenant loyalty and obedience.* R. D. Witherup correctly observes that the summons to repent is often an internal call to Israel, not an invitation to the nations (though some exceptions exist, such as Jonah's ministry). The OT and related texts speak of God's favorable acceptance of the penitent, a conviction dramatically expressed in the Prayer of Manasseh. Texts such as Jeremiah 31:31-34 provide a crucial link between this notion of repentance under the Mosaic covenant and the NT call to repent in response to God's promise* of the new, eschatological* covenant. Qumran* also links repentance with joining the covenant of the true Israel.

1.2. Greco-Roman Literature. While metanoia carries the general sense of a "change of mind," sometimes accompanied by a certain feeling of regret for having held to a former opinion, J. N. Bailey has convincingly shown (versus Behm) that it often achieves the full sense of conversion in the usage of certain philosophical schools. Some Stoics disparaged repentance, for one ought to approach all things with circumspection so as not to have any regrets (Epictetus Ench. 34; Marcus Aurelius Med. 8.2); others, however, viewed repentance favorably as an opportunity to change for the better, to put away vice and error in favor of virtue* and wisdom* (Dio Chrysostom Or. 12.44). Repentance is often occasioned by a philosopher's oration, which stings the conscience* and motivates reform (Plutarch Adulat., Mor. 56A). This has special significance for the call to repentance often attached to the speeches of Acts.*

2. Acts.

Repentance figures prominently in Acts, particularly as the desired response to the speeches of Peter and Paul. In the earlier sermons Peter calls the Jewish people and rulers to repent of the specific sin of rejecting and murdering the chosen Messiah, Jesus (Acts 2:36-39; 3:17-21; 5:29-32; cf. Tannehill) and to turn to a vital trust in him. Jews in the Diaspora* are not implicated: the benefits of Jesus' death and exaltation* are proclaimed to them as "release" from the sins committed under the Mosaic covenant (Acts 13:27-39). Gentiles* are called to repent of their former ignorance concerning the one God (despite God's self-revelation in creation,* Acts 17:26-27; cf. Rom 1) and their worship* of idols (see Idolatry), since the true knowledge* of God is now made available to them in the Christian mission* (Acts 14:15; 17:24-31; cf. 1 Thess 1:9-10). Bailey rightly observes that for both Jew and Gentile repentance in Acts means commitment to ethical* behavior (Acts 26:20) as well as assimilation to the new people God is forming (Acts 2:38-42), symbolized through baptism.* The result for both groups, now made one people, is "life"* (Acts 11:18) and "forgiveness of sins" (Acts 5:19; see Forgiveness) so that the new people of God may receive the promised blessings* of the "times of refreshing" (Acts 3:19).

3. Hebrews.

Believers enter the community of the saved in part through "repentance from dead works" (Heb 6:1). Turning away from dead works or sin, in the sense of directing one's life toward attaining the temporary goods of this world* (cf. Heb 11:25), is linked with "faith towards God" (Heb 6:1), a complete reorientation of loyalty, commitment and service.* This repentance is made possible and effective through God's favor, won by the unique sacrifice of Jesus, who provides the benefaction of "remission of sins" (Heb 10:18) and thus a cleansed conscience that enables one to stand before God as favored child (see Son) rather than condemned offender (Heb 4:14-16). The battle against sin is lifelong and may result in the loss of life (Heb 12:4), property and status (cf. Heb 10:32-34).

Since these penalties are exacted of the believer by the society, sin appears to entail much more than recognized vices. It includes adopting society's goals, values and ideals where these conflict with God's. Jesus' continued intercession assumes that believers will sin after baptism and thus continue to need his mediation (Heb 7:25).

Hebrews* raises the special problem of a "second repentance." For those who turn away from God (Heb 6:6; cf. 3:12) and renounce their allegiance to the divine patron, thus dishonoring God and showing contempt for Jesus' costly mediation of God's favor (Heb 6:6; 10:29), the author threatens the impossibility of a second repentance. Just as Christ's sacrifice is unrepeatable, so coming to faith* is unrepeatable (Heb 10:18-19: his mediation, however, continues for believers who sin without reorienting their hearts toward the world). The theological concern for "eternal security" and "final perseverance of the saints" (see Endurance) often obscures the first-century context of these warnings (cf. Sailer), which is the set of expectations attached to patron-client relationships (see deSilva). As with the wilderness generation (Heb 3:7-4:11; cf. Num 14:1-35) and Esau (Heb 12:16-17), distrust in God to provide greater gifts than the world offers and disloyalty to the divine patron amount to the cardinal sin of ingratitude, from which one could not expect a return to favor, or grace* (cf. Dio Chrysostom Or. 31.65: "those who insult their benefactors will by nobody be esteemed to deserve a favor"). When assessing the theological weight of such statements, it is important to consider their rhetorical purpose. Hebrews addresses believers, whom it seeks to confirm in loyalty and endurance at any cost. The author thus urges them to consider the irreplaceable value of the favor in which they stand and not to do anything that might jeopardize it. We should not assume that this author would say the same words to those who had left the fellowship* and sought to return with penitent hearts (so Carlston and Solari). Nevertheless it is clear that this author would urge us not to take grace for granted but rather to consider it the pearl of greatest price, not to be sacrificed for anything.

4. General Epistles.

First John (see John, Letters of) offers a particular challenge when speaking of sin and repentance. 1 John 3:4-10 leaves one with the impression that there is no place for sin in the life of the believer. 1 John 1:8—2:2, however, makes clear provision for dealing with postbaptismal sin, while 1 John 2:1 and 3:3 amount to injunctions against sin and exhortations toward purification. J. Painter offers a plausible solution: 1 John 3:4-10 answers not the question, Can believers sin? but rather, What shows one to be a true believer? Against his opponents, John stresses that it is not the mere possession of God's "seed" but rather the imitation of God's character, seeking holiness and purity (1 Jn 3:2-3). Praise of an ideal (cf. Marshall) effectively exhorts the hearers to strive for that ideal, thus making 1 John 3:4-10 another exhortation to put away sin. The hearer is stirred up by the desire to show himself or herself God's true child and so returns to the battle against sin with greater drive. Repentance is therefore an essential part of the ongoing life of believers when they fall into sin and must seek the means provided by God for cleansing and renewal in life and fellowship (1 Jn 1:8—2:2).

Both 1 Peter* and James* emphasize the call to leave behind all manner of sin and pursue holiness,* the call which began with conversion ("returning to the shepherd and guardian of your souls," 1 Pet 2:25; see Shepherd). For both the initial experience of repentance and conversion leads to a lifelong process of overcoming sin and progressing toward the holiness of God (1 Pet 1:14-16; Jas 4:8). James envisions a community in which confession of sin and mutual prayer* for forgiveness of sins is a regular occurrence, always with the promise of healing* and restoration (Jas 5:16, 20). 2 Peter also emphasizes the ethical fruit that repentance must bear in order to be genuine and effective (2 Pet 1:5-9). Defection from the true gospel* is a most serious offense, placing one in a worse position than the unbelievers (2 Pet 2:20-22; cf. Heb 6:4-8; 10:26-31). While 2 Peter* does not, like Hebrews, indicate that such people as the false teachers he opposes are beyond repentance, he suggests that such people will become hardened, so as not to repent and thus be kept "under punishment until the day of judgment" (2 Pet 2:9; see Judgment). This age, however, is an age for repentance, and God in God's mercy* has delayed the end in order to extend this opportunity for all to return (as God's patience is often linked, as R. J. Bauckham notes, with the opportunity for sinners to repent [cf. Jon 4:2]). Believers are thus urged not to presume upon God's patience as well as God's mercy by continuing in sin and taking repentance for granted.

5. Revelation.

Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) begins as a call to the churches, urging them to repent from lack of love,* doctrinal impurity, accommodation with the religious demands of the unbelieving society and imperfect commitment (Rev 2:5, 16, 21, 22; 3:3, 19). The call to repent is a continuing sign of Christ's love and desire to save (Rev 3:19) and has a continuing place in the life of the church.* There is a stark contrast between the expectation that the churches will respond in repentance during the period of preparation and the depiction of a recalcitrant world refusing God glory once the tribulation begins (Rev 9:20-21; 16:9, 11), despite repeated appeals from God's messengers (Rev 11:3; 14:6-7). They display a hardness of heart reminiscent of Pharaoh, which accords well with Revelation's borrowings from Exodus.

Repentance includes a call to Gentiles to turn away from "worshiping demons and idols" and from all manner of sinful behaviors (Rev 9:20-21; 16:11) and to turn toward the one God who created all things and whose Messiah redeemed a people for God through his blood (Rev 4:11; 5:9). It is synonymous with the call to "fear God and give God honor" (Rev 14:6-7; cf. 11:13)—thus an acknowledgment of God's legitimate claim on our lives and a repudiation of the illegitimate claims made by society's gods and rulers. John calls the churches to remain firm in their repentance, making firm their commitment to this one God and God's people. He reinforces this not by denying apostates (see Apostasy) a chance to repent but by depicting the hardness of heart that falls upon the partners of the beast* and dragon, assuring their dismal destiny (Rev 22:4).

6. Other Early Christian Literature.

6.1. Clement. The shed blood of Jesus "won the gift of repentance for the entire world" (1 Clem. 7). Repentance is thus a gift from God but one that God is most eager to give. Following the OT, this repentance involves both a renunciation of former sins as well as a commitment to a life of holiness, justice and charity (1 Clem. 8). Clement* allows a place for repentance in the life of the believing community, urging the Corinthians not to harden their hearts but rather to repent of their rebellion against their justly installed presbyters (1 Clem. 19, 44, 51) with tears, humility and submission to their discipline.* The homily attributed to Clement also speaks of repentance as a characteristic of the believer, who is continually being molded and reshaped by the Potter. Repentance is accessible as long as the believer remains in the world, just as the clay may be remolded up to the time it is put in the kiln (2 Clem. 8).

6.2. Ignatius, Polycarp and Didache. Ignatius,* like Clement, allows repentance for postconversion sin. He exhorts those who have broken with the bishop: "as many as repent, let them come into the unity of the church" (Ign. Phld. 3.2; 8.1; Ign. Smyrn. 4.1). The *Didache presents repentance as a normal part of church worship: in order that prayers may be unhindered and the "sacrifice" pure, any believers who have sinned are to repent, confessing their transgressions (Did. 4.14; 10.6; 14.1; cf. Barn. 19.12). In Martyrdom of Polycarp the proconsul urges Polycarp* to repent of his Christian convictions on pain of death. Polycarp answers that Christians may not repent of the "better" in order to turn to the "worse," for they have already exchanged baseness for righteousness* (Mart. Pol. 11.1). The believer's initial repentance thus involves both the repudiation of sin and the beginning of a life of virtue, along which road the believer must continue to move forward, even in the face of death.

6.3. The Shepherd of Hermas. Repentance dominates Hermas—the shepherd is none other than the angel of repentance. The book begins by addressing Hermas's need and the need of his children for repentance (Herm. Vis. 1.2-3) but quickly moves on to call all believers who have sinned to hasten to repent (Herm. Sim. 8.11). By repentance the "Gentiles" may join the church, represented as a tower being built in a vast plain; it is also the means by which believers who have fallen again into sin may be restored to their place in the church. L. Pernveden helpfully distinguishes between the church as a historical institution and the church as the eternal assembly of the purified that receives the promise of God. Sinners may be found in the midst of the former, but only those who repent shall attain to the latter.

Hermas lends urgency to repentance by stressing the proximity of the end of the age, when the tower shall be completed and the unrepentant shut out forever (Herm. Vis. 3.5; Herm. Sim. 10.4). He lends seriousness to repentance by proclaiming that there is only one repentance for the believer (Herm. Man. 4.1). Believers may be forgiven and restored, but they must repent speedily and not fall away again; novitiates must not fall away at all (Behm). Repentance is always the gift of God (Herm. Sim. 8.6), who desires that "all who were called through his Son should be saved" (Herm. Sim. 8.11; cf. 1 Tim 2:4). It is an understanding that a certain action is wrong and blameworthy, combined with a commitment to walk thereafter in the right way (Herm. Man. 4.2). For repentance to be shown to be pure and genuine, and thus to result in remission of sin, it must bear the fruit of obedience to the commands of God (Herm. Man. 2; Herm. Sim. 9.33), given in a sort of shorthand in the Mandates. As in 1 and 2 Peter, repentance for sins is inseparable from the positive counterpart of commitment to righteousness (Herm. Sim. 6.1). The one repentance must be kept undefiled: the Christian life is a preservation of one's withdrawal from the control of sin and Satan* and one's submission to the works and commands of God (Herm. Man. 12.3).

As P. Henne observes, it is noteworthy that despite the severity of Hermas's doctrine of repentance, no sin excludes a person from coming to repentance save that of apostasy (thus continuing the tradition of Hebrews). This sin involved blaspheming the name* of God, showing Hermas's affinity with early Jewish notions of the gravity of hillûl ha-šēm, "profaning the Name" (cf. Herm. Vis. 3.7; Herm. Sim. 9.19). These have utterly abandoned themselves to the lusts of the world, by which they have brought dishonor to God's name (Herm. Sim. 6.2; cf. Rom 2:24). Hermas allows those who formerly denied Jesus to repent but allows no chance for repentance for those who, after his proclamation, deny the Lord* (Herm. Vis. 2.2), suggesting that Hermas's situation is one of high tension between church and society. His rhetoric promotes fidelity at any cost, as did the rhetoric of Hebrews. It is better for a person to remain an unbeliever than to come to the knowledge of God only to fall away again (Herm. Sim. 9.17.5—18.2; cf. 2 Pet 2:20-22).

Hermas combines a sharpened eschatological consciousness with a keen sense of God's mercy, for the building of the tower is halted to allow for an opportunity to repent (Herm. Sim. 9.14; 10.4). God's mercy, however, is a precious gift, not to be trampled (Herm. Man. 9.32) or taken for granted. Such a view provides powerful motivation for the believer to seize the opportunity and to pursue a regenerate life, so as not to have received God's mercy in vain.

See also ASSURANCE; ENDURANCE, PERSEVERANCE; FAITH, FAITHFULNESS; FORGIVENESS; HEBREWS; HERMAS, SHEPHERD OF; SIN, WICKEDNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. N. Bailey, Repentance in Luke-Acts (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, University of Notre Dame, 1993); R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); J. Behm and E. Würthwein, "μετανοέω, μετάνοια," TDNT 4:975-1008; C. E. Carlston, "Eschatology and Repentance in the Epistle to the Hebrews," JBL 78 (1959) 296-302; D. A. deSilva, "Exchanging Favor for Wrath: Apostasy in Hebrews and Patron-Client Relations," JBL 115 (1996) 91-116; B. R. Gaventa, From Darkness to Light: Aspects of Conversion in the New Testament (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); J. Goetzmann, "μετάνοια," NIDNTT 1:357-59; P. Henne, O.P., L'Unité du Pasteur d'Hermas (CRB 31; Paris: Gabalda, 1992); J. C. McCullough, "The Impossibility of a Second Repentance in Hebrews," BibTh 20 (1974) 1-7; I. H. Marshall, The Epistles of John (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); J. Painter, "The 'Opponents' in 1 John," NTS 32 (1986) 48-71; L. Pernveden, The Concept of the Church in the Shepherd of Hermas (STL 27; Lund: Gleerup, 1966); W. S. Sailer, "Hebrews Six: An Irony or a Continuing Embarrassment?" EvJ 3 (1985) 79-88; J. K. Solari, The Problem of Metanoia in the Epistle to the Hebrews (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Catholic University of America, 1970); R. C. Tannehill, "The Functions of Peter's Mission Speeches in the Narrative of Acts," NTS 37 (1991) 400-14; R. D. Witherup, Conversion in the New Testament (ZS:NT; Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1994). D. A. deSilva REST. See PEACE.

RESURRECTION

The resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead is referred to explicitly in three of the NT documents considered here. It is difficult to imagine that the remaining documents could have been written without an underlying conviction that Jesus was risen and accessible to Christian believers. In the second century the resurrection of Jesus and of believers continued to be a significant theme in Christian writings. Divergent interpretations of it marked the emerging divide between orthodox and gnostic streams in the church.

1. Hebrews, 1 Peter, Revelation
2. After the New Testament
3. Conclusion

1. Hebrews, 1 Peter, Revelation.

1.1. Terminology of Resurrection. Like the English verbs raise and rise, the verbs used in the NT do not refer exclusively to the raising of people from among the dead (see, e.g., Heb 7:11, 15; Jas 5:15). The only occurrence in these documents of egeirō with reference to the resurrection of Jesus is 1 Peter 1:21. Anastasis refers to Jesus' resurrection in 1 Peter 1:3; 3:21; to a general future resurrection in Hebrews 6:2; 11:35; and to what John calls "the first resurrection" in Revelation 20:5-6. The verb zaō ("live") describes Jesus' resurrection in Revelation 1:18 and Revelation 2:8 and "the first resurrection" in Revelation 20:4-5. Zōopoieō ("make alive") denotes Jesus' resurrection in 1 Peter 3:18. Finally, anagō is used of God "bringing back" Jesus from the dead in Hebrews 13:20.

1.2. Hebrews: Resurrection and Exaltation. For the writer of Hebrews* "resurrection of the dead" is part of basic Christian instruction (Heb 6:2). The linking of resurrection with "eternal judgment" suggests that he envisages a future universal resurrection, of the righteous* to eternal life* and of the wicked to condemnation (cf. Dan 12:2; Jn 5:28-29; Acts 24:15). Later he sees restoration to physical life (egeirein, Heb 11:19; anastasis, Heb 11:35) as a picture of the future resurrection of the faithful to eternal life.

Jesus' resurrection is mentioned explicitly only once, in the prayer* of Hebrews 13:20-21. Elsewhere the focus is on his exaltation* to the right hand of God.* The writer's distinctive emphasis on Jesus' exaltation rather than on resurrection is a natural consequence of his concentration on Christ's* work as high priest* foreshadowed in the ritual of the Day of Atonement. Just as the high priest of the OT entered the holy of holies with the blood of the sacrificial victim, so the crucified Jesus appeared at God's right hand in the heavenly sanctuary (Heb 9:11-12; see Tabernacle). In this pattern stressing Jesus' exaltation to heaven* there is no separate place for his resurrection. It is presupposed (cf. the linking of these two themes in Rom 8:34; Eph 1:20; Col 3:1; 1 Pet 3:22). Christ's exaltation to God's right hand presupposes his resurrection from the dead; his resurrection was the way to exaltation.

Theologically, Jesus' resurrection-exaltation is linked with other key themes in Hebrews. It demonstrated God's acceptance of his atoning sacrifice* (Heb 10:12; 13:20-21). It confirmed his divine sonship (Heb 1:3-5, 13; see Son), his high priesthood (Heb 5:5-10; 8:1) and his status as the last Adam (Heb 1:13—2:9, combining Ps 110:1 with Ps 8:4-6; see Dunn, 108-13).

The connection between Jesus' past resurrection and believers' future resurrection is hinted at in Hebrews's unique description of Jesus as "forerunner" (prodromos, Heb 6:20). Meanwhile he "is permanently alive to plead their cause" (Heb 7:25). The knowledge that he went via the cross* to God's right hand inspires them to remain faithful, confident that they will share his destiny.

The question of the timing of future resurrection is raised by the reference to "the spirits of the righteous made perfect" (Heb 12:23). This is commonly taken to mean dead believers (cf. 1 Enoch 22:9), waiting in an intermediate state to receive resurrection bodies at Christ's second coming (see Parousia). However, Hebrews 12:22-24 seems to portray the ultimate encounter with God in the heavenly Jerusalem* rather than in a preliminary or an intermediate state. Hence the "spirits" are probably the righteous in their ultimate state, in their "spiritual bodies" (1 Cor 15:44). If this is so, the text does not address the question whether there is an interim, disembodied state between death and the Parousia (see further Peterson, 163-67).

1.3. 1 Peter: Hope of Vindication. The resurrection of Jesus is the foundation of hope* for the author of 1 Peter* and for his readers in churches facing persecution* (1 Pet 1:3, 21; 3:15). The key passage is 1 Peter 3:18-22, which is widely regarded as drawing on primitive liturgical traditions (see Hymns; Liturgical Elements), especially in 1 Peter 3:19-21 (see Michaels, 197-99).

Christ was "put to death in the flesh but made alive in the spirit" (1 Pet 3:18). The contrast between flesh* and spirit has sometimes been taken to imply a dualism within Christ's human nature or a contrast between his divine and human natures. These terms, however, denote not two parts of Christ but two spheres of existence. His earthly life ended in death, but that was succeeded by his risen life in what Paul calls his "spiritual body" (1 Cor 15:42-44; note the similar contrast between flesh and spirit in Rom 1:3-4; 1 Tim 3:16; and discussion in Dalton, 124-34; Michaels, 204-5).

1 Peter 3:21-22 leads the readers' thought from Jesus' resurrection to his exaltation to God's right hand (cf. 1 Pet 1:21; Eph 1:20-22). So whatever the meaning of the intervening passage about his preaching to the spirits in prison, the focus is on his vindication by God and his lordship over all things.

For Peter's readers, God's vindication of Jesus gives them solid hope that he will also vindicate them. Through Jesus' resurrection God has given to believers new birth, a secure inheritance to be revealed at the last time (1 Pet 1:3-4), conveyed through baptism* (1 Pet 3:21). Because God has called them in Christ to eternal glory* they may stand firm in suffering* (1 Pet 5:10).

The author maintains the typically Pauline tension between salvation* already experienced and salvation yet to be received in its fullness (e.g., in 1 Pet 1:3-9). The link between baptism and resurrection in 1 Peter 3:21 echoes the language of Romans 6:1-14. But because he addresses Christians in the context of persecution, Peter uses the theme of resurrection with more focus on the future than does Paul in Romans. Although Jesus' resurrection means that believers enter into new life now, it inspires a greater hope that God will in the future bring them through suffering to glory.

1.4. Revelation: "I Was Dead and Am Alive For Ever." The threat of persecution and the promise* of vindication shape John's message also in Revelation (see Revelation, Book of). The death of believers for their witness* (martyria) to Christ has already occurred, and for others it will occur (Rev 2:10, 13; 6:9-11; 12:11; 17:6; 20:4).

The book is introduced with a vision* of the risen Christ, "the first and the last and the living one" (Rev 1:18; cf. Rev 2:8). Since "the first and the last" is a title of God in Isaiah 44:6 and Isaiah 48:12 (cf. Rev 1:8; 21:6), the resurrection points to Christ's participation in the eternal being of God and his rule over creation* (Bauckham 1993 Theology, 54-58).

More specific references to resurrection indicate the centrality of this theme in John's thought. Jesus is introduced as "the firstborn from the dead and the ruler of the kings of the earth" (Rev 1:5). This phrase combines the idea that Christ pioneered for others the way to resurrection (cf. Col 1:18; "firstfruits" in 1 Cor 15:20) with the language of Psalm 89:27, where the Davidic king is described as "my firstborn, the highest of the kings of the earth." By virtue of his resurrection Jesus is already establishing God's rule over earthly powers* (cf. Rev 5:3-5).

The risen Lord has begun to fulfill the hope of establishing God's rule over the earth, so that ultimately God will through him make all things new (Rev 21:5). In the new heaven and new earth God will live with his resurrected people (Rev 21:3-4). John nowhere speaks of resurrection bodies, but the imagery of Revelation 21—22 would hardly fit with the notion that God's people are permanently disembodied spirits (see Charles, 1:81-83, 176, 184-88, 210, 213-14; 2:127-28, for the argument that in Revelation white robes represent resurrection bodies). He does not speculate about the separation or reassembly of bodies and spirits or souls but speaks simply of the death and resurrection of persons (Bauckham 1993 Climax, 62-70). John's hope, like the Jewish hope out of which it sprang, is not merely for the resurrection of individuals but also for resurrection of God's people in fellowship* with each other in a renewed world.

Two related passages require special attention. According to Revelation 6:9-11, those who have been killed because of their faithful witness are told that they will be vindicated against their persecutors when the full number of martyrs is complete. Like some Jewish apocalyptic* texts, this passage refers to dead saints awaiting resurrection as "souls" (psychai; cf. 1 Enoch 22:3; 2 Bar. 21:23). The text provides some support for the concept of an intermediate state, though the fact that the "souls" are described as wearing robes shows that they are not purely spiritual entities. Probably John's concern is not to teach about an intermediate state but to speak of the eschatological* delay during which the church must continue its witness (Bauckham 1993 Climax, 55-56).

The promise of Revelation 6:9-11 finds its fulfillment in the millennium (Rev 20:4-6). The souls of the martyrs "came to life (ezēsan) and ruled with Christ for a thousand years." John comments that those who take part in this "first resurrection" (anastasis) are protected from "the second death" (eternal, spiritual death, cf. Rev 20:14). In contrast with them, "the rest of the dead did not come to life until the thousand years were completed." (For the view that in Revelation 6:9-11 and Revelation 20:4-6 John is concerned exclusively with Christian martyrs see Beasley-Murray, 293-94. For the view that a wider group of believers is implied see Harris, 178-79, 228; Mealy, 110-15.)

After the thousand years there is a scene of universal judgment,* for which all the dead are gathered before God's throne (Rev 20:11-15). This must be the "second resurrection" implied by the earlier reference to the "first resurrection" (Rev 20:5). But it may be significant that John refrains from calling their standing before God for judgment a resurrection. Perhaps, like Paul, he prefers to reserve resurrection language for the raising of people to eternal life with Christ.

1.5. Other New Testament Literature. In the shorter letters* resurrection language hardly occurs, though there are occasional promises of "eternal life" (Jude 21), "a new heaven and a new earth" (2 Pet 3:13), entry into "the eternal kingdom" (2 Pet 1:11) or into "the presence of his glory" (Jude 24). In James,* Jesus Christ is "our glorious Lord" (Jas 2:1) who promises "the crown of life" to those who remain faithful under testing (Jas 1:12).

Though 1 John (see John, Letters of) retains the Fourth Gospel's stress on eternal life as a present possession (1 Jn 3:15; 5:11-12), there is also an important future perspective. "We know that when he appears we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is" (1 Jn 3:2). There are uncertainties of interpretation. For example, is "he" God or Christ? Shall we be "like him" in character, or in form or appearance? Though most commentators take John to refer to transformation of character at the Parousia, it is likely that his focus is on the prospect of having resurrection bodies like that of Christ (cf. Phil 3:21; Col 3:4).

1.6. Conclusions on New Testament Literature. Most of this literature expresses, like Paul, the central importance for Christian faith* of the resurrection of Jesus and the expectation of the resurrection of believers. But there is no sustained reflection on the nature of resurrection such as we find in 1—2 Corinthians.

Like Paul, these writers see Jesus' resurrection as the prototype of the resurrection of believers. They focus on resurrection as God's vindication of those who suffer for Christ's sake. They make no sharp distinction between Christ's resurrection and his exaltation. They offer only limited material on the timing of the resurrection of believers or the nature of an intermediate state. While there is implicit affirmation of the idea that all the dead will be raised for final judgment, no writer explicitly speaks of a resurrection for judgment. Evidently, like Paul, they prefer to reserve the term resurrection for God's raising of Jesus and of believers to eternal life in his presence.

2. After the New Testament.

On his journey toward martyrdom* in Rome* Ignatius* wrote of Jesus "who was truly raised from the dead . . . , just as his Father will raise up in Christ Jesus us who believe in him, without whom we have no true life" (Ign. Trall. 9.2). He thus affirms the traditional Christian belief in Jesus' resurrection and the future resurrection of believers. But the emphatic "truly" (used four times in the passage) indicates that the affirmation is being made in the context of criticism by docetists.* In the period A.D. 95-150 attitudes to the resurrection became an important indicator of the rift between orthodox and gnostic Christians.

2.1. The Apostolic Fathers and the Development of Orthodoxy. NT themes are easily recognizable in the works of most of the apostolic fathers,* but there are signs of development in response to controversy. Jesus' resurrection is celebrated in quasi-creedal statements (Ign. Magn. 11.1; see Creeds). The God who raised Jesus will also raise those who do his will (Pol. Phil. 2.2; 9.2; 12.2). The idea that Jesus' resurrection is a prototype of believers' resurrection, so typical of Paul, is combined with a more moralistic emphasis on future resurrection as a reward for the righteous and as compensation for present suffering (cf. 1 Clem. 26.1; 2 Clem. 19.3-4; Barn. 21.1; Ign. Pol. 7.1).

In defense against Docetism it is insisted that Jesus rose "in the flesh" or "in flesh and spirit" (Ign. Smyrn. 3.1-3; 12.2) and that for Christians too "this flesh" will be raised (2 Clem. 9.1-5). Ignatius warns that docetists will find themselves without bodily reality, just as they imagine Christ to have been (Ign. Smyrn. 2.1). And although these writers sometimes seem, like Paul, to reserve resurrection language for believers only (Ign. Trall. 9.2; Did. 16.6), some speak explicitly of the resurrection in flesh, or in the body, of all people for judgment (Barn. 5.6-7; cf. later Ep. Apos. 26; Justin Martyr Apol. I 19—20).

There are two apologetic concerns apart from the argument against Docetism. First, orthodox Christians saw belief in resurrection of the flesh as a deterrent against asceticism and libertinism. Since the flesh will rise for judgment it is necessary to treat it responsibly in this life (2 Clem. 9; Aristides Apol. 15—16; cf. the stress in Apoc. Peter 4—12 on the reassembly of body, soul and spirit for judgment, followed by eternal physical torment for the wicked). Belief in immortality of the soul without resurrection of the body, or in the mere dissolution of persons at death, is an inadequate bulwark against immorality (Justin Apol. I 18; Justin Dial. Tryph. 80; see Purity). Second, the emphasis on the futurity of resurrection and judgment counterbalances an overrealized eschatology such as that already found among the false teachers criticized in 2 Timothy 1:18 (cf. Polycarp Phil. 7.1; and see Donfried, 103-7, 141-45 on this motivation in 1-2 Clem.).

A more general apologetic motive is evident in 1 Clement 24—26 (see Clement of Rome), where the future resurrection of humanity is argued from the sequence of the seasons, grains of seed, the story of the phoenix, scriptural prophecy and God's omnipotence and providence. Justin develops similar arguments, concluding that "we will receive again our own bodies, though they be dead and cast into the earth, for we maintain that with God nothing is impossible" (Justin Apol. I 18). The use of analogy is designed not only to counter specific heresy but also to make the case for Christian orthodoxy in a pagan world that accepts only the immortality of the soul.

2.2. The Development of Gnosticism. The preceding discussion shows that orthodox Christians were in conflict with others whose approach to resurrection was different. There were not two clear-cut schools of thought, and some documents do not fit neatly into one category or another. For example, the Gospel of Peter, which was probably used by the orthodox Justin and Melito of Sardis,* gives a vivid portrayal of the rising of Jesus from the tomb which seems intended to exclude a resurrection of the flesh (Gos. Pet. 9—10). This description is echoed in the Ascension of Isaiah 3.16-17, which elsewhere says that the righteous will ascend "from the body" to receive garments representing angelic glory (Ascension of Isaiah 4.16-17; 8.14-15, 26; 9.2, 9-11, 26; 11.40).

In the documents that show gnostic* traits three features highlight the contrast with orthodoxy. First, a number of documents take the form of revelation discourses in which the risen Lord addresses disciples (e.g., Ap. John, Soph. Jes. Chr.; see Perkins 1980, 37-58). This genre is used to further the claim to reveal the hidden teaching* of Christ. It is probably this alleged distortion and creation of sayings of Jesus that Polycarp* has in mind when he denounces those who "pervert the sayings of the Lord for their own desires" (Pol. Phil. 7.1).

Second, they affirm that resurrection has already been experienced by Christians, sometimes with an appeal to texts such as Ephesians 2:5-6 or Colossians 3:1-4. In Gospel of Thomas 51 Jesus' disciples ask when the repose of the dead and the new world* will come, and Jesus replies: "What you expect has come, but you do not know it." The Treatise on Resurrection makes a similar affirmation (Treat. Res. 43.35—44.2) and appeals to Rheginos: "Do not live in conformity with this flesh . . . but flee from the state of dispersion and bondage, and then you already have resurrection" (Treat. Res. 49.9-16).

Third, they reject resurrection of the body or the flesh in favor of a more spiritual understanding. Gospel of Thomas 71 may be a polemic against belief in Jesus' bodily resurrection: "Jesus said: 'I shall destroy [this] house and no one will be able to build it.' " In the gnostic revelation discourses the risen Lord appears not in bodily form but as a luminous presence (e.g., Soph. Jes. Chr. 91.10-13).

Though its basic thought patterns are undoubtedly gnostic, the Treatise on Resurrection does not reject the involvement of flesh in resurrection. A highly paradoxical passage seems to mean that physical flesh is not resurrected, but resurrection involves a transformed flesh: "You received flesh when you entered the world. Why will you not receive flesh when you ascend to the aeon? That which is better than the flesh is for it the cause of life" (Treat. Res. 47.5-10; see Donfried, 138-41). If it is "transformed flesh" of which the writer speaks, perhaps his thought is closer to Paul's idea of a transformed "spiritual body' than the orthodox insistence on the resurrection of the flesh of the present physical body. But, like other Gnostics, he lacks any sense of future corporate resurrection at the Parousia. The NT vision of the resurrection of all God's people at Christ's coming has been reinterpreted as resurrection as a present spiritual experience and a return at death to the heavenly world.

3. Conclusion.

After the NT, Christian thought about resurrection developed along two distinct trajectories. The orthodox trajectory saw Jesus' resurrection as the climax of his life, teaching and death, affirmed the literal resurrection of his flesh and looked forward to a future resurrection of the physical flesh of believers at the Parousia. The gnostic trajectory reinterpreted and created sayings of Jesus to convey hidden teaching, affirmed that resurrection is fundamentally already past in the true believer's experience and played down or rejected the bodily nature of resurrection. Both strands distort the fine balance in Paul's thought about resurrection, between the already and the not yet, and between continuity and discontinuity of the person between this life and the next.

See also ASCENSION; CHRISTOLOGY; CREATION, COSMOLOGY; ESCHATOLOGY; EXALTATION, ENTHRONEMENT; GLORY; HEAVEN, NEW HEAVEN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, The Climax of Prophecy: Studies on the Book of Revelation (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1993); idem, The Theology of the Book of Revelation (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993); G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation (NCB; London: Marshall, Morgan & Scott, 1974); R. H. Charles, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Revelation of St. John (2 vols.; ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1920); B. E. Daley, The Hope of the Early Church: A Handbook of Patristic Eschatology (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991); W. J. Dalton, Christ's Proclamation to the Spirits: A Study of 1 Peter 3:18—4:6 (Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1965); K. P. Donfried, The Setting of Second Clement in Early Christianity (NovTSup; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1974); J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making (London: SCM, 1980); M. J. Harris, Raised Immortal: The Relation Between Resurrection and Immortality in New Testament Teaching (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983); D. M. Hay, Glory at the Right Hand: Psalm 110 in Early Christianity (Nashville: Abingdon, 1973); J. W. Mealy, After the Thousand Years: Resurrection and Judgment in Revelation 20 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1992); J. R. Michaels, 1 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); M. L. Peel, The Epistle to Rheginos: A Valentinian Letter on the Resurrection (London: SCM, 1969); P. Perkins, The Gnostic Dialogue: The Early Church and the Crisis of Gnosticism (New York: Paulist, 1980); idem, Resurrection: New Testament Witness and Contemporary Reflection (New York: Doubleday, 1984); D. Peterson, Hebrews and Perfection (SNTSMS 47; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1982); J. M. Robinson, "Jesus: From Easter to Valentinus (or to the Apostles' Creed)," JBL 101 (1982) 5-37. S. H. Travis

REVEAL, REVELATION

Revelation signifies the unveiling or disclosure of that which is hidden or secret. In the NT it refers usually to the disclosure of divine things, which cannot be known apart from a divine act of revelation often attributed to the Spirit of God (see Holy Spirit).

1. Terminology
2. The Gospels and Paul
3. The Rest of the New Testament
4. Post-Apostolic Writers

1. Terminology.

1.1. The Terms Used. In the NT the idea of revelation is presented in two ways: by descriptions or associations of the making known of the divine counsel that transcend the meaning of single words and especially by the specific use of a number of terms that signify revelation. The focus on the later literature of the NT (Acts,* Hebrews,* the General Epistles and Revelation [see Revelation, Book of]) makes concentration on specific terms inevitable, though descriptions or associations will be also kept in view. Not all of these terms had religious significance in pre-NT times.

Apokalyptō since Herodotus has both the sense of "to uncover" (e.g., the head, Plutarch Crassus 6, cf. Herodotus 1.119; the breast, Plato Protag. 352a) as well as the secular sense of "to reveal" (e.g., rhetoric, Plato Protag. 352a; Gorg. 455d; 460a; one's mind, Plutarch Alex. 55; Diod. Sic. 17, 62. The religious sense of "to reveal" occurs first in the Septuagint; apokalypsis occurs in a nonreligious sense four times in the Septuagint (1 Kings and Sir) as well as in Philodemus Vit. 38 (first century B.C.) of the uncovering of the head and in its religious sense first in the NT.

Gnōrizō, "to make known," since Aeschylus and Sophocles does not occur in a religious sense before the Septuagint.

Dēloō, "to declare" or "to make manifest or clear," since Aeschylus and Sophocles occurs in the sense of "to reveal" (through dreams, Aeschylus Pers. 519, as well as of divine revelation, Sophocles Oed. Tyr. 77).

Epiphainō, "to show" or in the middle "to show oneself," since Herodotus (1.24) has also the religious sense of revelation by visions* or dreams (Herodotus 2.91; 3.27) and especially of the revelation of a deity (e.g., of Artemis, Syll. Inscr. Graec. 557.5 (third century B.C.).

Phaneroō since Herodotus has the secular sense of "to make or to be made known" (Dion. Hal. 10.37); the passive, "become famous" (Herodotus 6.122), occurs once in the Septuagint (in a defective text with unclear meaning, Jer 40:6). Its religious sense is witnessed first in the NT.

1.2. Definition of the Terms Used. In the NT apokalyptō (LXX: mainly for pi'el of gālah: "to unveil," "to uncover," "to disclose," "to reveal") implies the unveiling or uncovering of something objectively existing but unknown (e.g., a mystērion, Rom 16:25; Eph 3:3-5) or something that is hidden from sight (e.g., Mt 10:26; Lk 2:35; Jn 12:38; Rom 1:17-18), especially something that necessitates divine (i.e., the Holy Spirit's) activity for its disclosure (1 Cor 2:10-16).

Gnōrizō, (LXX: mostly for hiph'il/haph'el of yada'), or "make known" (e.g., Lk 2:15-20; Jn 15:15; 1 Cor 12:3; 15:1; Gal 1:11), is used especially of something unknowable by natural means but communicated by divine initiative (e.g., a mystērion, Eph 1:9).

Dēloō, (LXX: mainly for hiph'il of yada'), meaning "to make clear" or "to show," especially implies explanation or interpretation (1 Cor 1:11; Col 1:8). Occasionally it also indicates something verging on revelation (Heb 9:8; 2 Pet 1:14).

Epiphainō (LXX: mainly for hiph'il of 'ôr) means "to let light come upon," "to let appear" or "to show" (Lk 1:79). The middle, "to appear" or "to show oneself" (epiphaneia, "appearance," esp. of the self-revelation of a divinity; e.g., 2 Thess 2:8; 2 Tim 1:10), emphasizes the outcome of the process of revelation (Tit 2:11: 3:4).

Phaneroō (LXX: only Jer 40 (33):6 for pi'el of gālah) means "to make visible," obvious, manifest, open, clear or known (e.g., Mk 4:22; Jn 3:21). The idea is that what once was invisible, unclear, in the dark has now become evident and can be apprehended. This may be in reference to the introduction of Jesus to Israel* (Jn 1:31); to the revelation of Jesus' glory* (Jn 2:11); to God's works (Jn 9:3), his name* (Jn 17:6) or his righteousness* (Rom 3:21); to the mystērion kept silent since ages past (Rom 16:25); or to the Christian life that is hidden in God (2 Cor 3:3; 4:10-12; Col 3:4; see also Warfield, 97-99; Bultmann TDNT 1:718; 2:61-62; Bultmann and Lührmann, 9:1-10).

However, once these terms have come to be used of the disclosure of God or of his counsel or of some of its details, it is practically impossible to distinguish neatly among them. Except for epiphaneia all the terms occur in our literature, though not all of them in the technical sense of revelation.

2. The Gospels and Paul.

In the Gospels and Paul the idea of revelation is the great presupposition and basis of the teaching of Jesus, encompassing not only his various acts making up his complex proclamation of the kingdom of God in word and deed (Mt 11:25-27 par. Lk 10:21-22 [apokalyptō]; Jn 15:15 [gnōrizō]; Jn 17:6 [phaneroō]) but also and especially his person (Mt 16:16-17; Lk 17:30 [apokalyptō]; Jn 1:31; 2:11 [phaneroō]), who thus brings the revelation of God (cf. Jn 17:26) to its hitherto most complete expression (Jn 14:9).

In the Pauline corpus revelation is of central significance: the revelation of God's person as well as the whole complex of his salvific counsel. In Romans the two loci of God's revelation are heaven and the gospel. From heaven is revealed his wrath* and his righteous judgment (Rom 1:18—2:6), while in the gospel is revealed his righteousness (in the sense of salvific justifying grace, representing the whole Christ event; e.g., Rom 1:16-17; 3:21-26). The Pauline understanding of the revelation occurrence implies two conditions: revelation occurs when it is both given objectively by God and apprehended subjectively by people (Caragounis 1990, 23). These two conditions find an illustration in the contrast between Ephesians 1:9; 3:3, 5 (apokalyptō), which refers to God's revelation of his mystērion to the apostles,* and Colossians 1:24-28; 4:4 (phaneroō = Eph 6:19, gnōrizō), which refers to the apostles' revelation, the proclamation of it to the church* (Caragounis 1977, 102, esp. n. 24), thus enabling the church to apprehend the revelation.

3. The Rest of the New Testament.
In our literature the terms occur sparingly and without the rich variation found in the Pauline texts. Of the five books—Hebrews, 1 Peter,* 2 Peter,* 1 John (see John, Letters of) and Revelation—in which the idea of revelation figures through one or more of these terms, 1 Peter and 1 John are the most important. In these the idea of revelation is expressed chiefly by apokalyptō or apokalypsis and phaneroō respectively.

3.1. Acts. The book of Acts does not fully develop the concept of revelation with reference to God's eternal counsel. However, Acts abounds with echoes or hints of revelations, appearances or visions* by means of the Holy Spirit* or an angel.* These intimations of the divine will concern the Spirit's manifestations in the church of the end time through the fulfillment of the prophecy* from Joel (Acts 2:16-36); God's fulfillment of his old plan through the Christ event (Acts 3:13-26); the revelation of the risen Christ to Paul (Acts 9:3-7; 22:6-9; 26:13-16); the church's mission* strategy (Acts 13:1-2), as well as the guidance of the church or its leaders in the progress of the gospel (e.g., Philip* and the eunuch, Acts 8:26-29; Peter and Cornelius,* Acts 10:3-22); Agabus's prophecies about the famine (Acts 11:28) and Paul (Acts 21:11); the Spirit's guiding Paul to bypass certain parts of Asia Minor in order to reach Macedonia (Acts 16:6-10); the encouragement given to Paul in Corinth (Acts 18:9-10); the witness* of the Spirit to Paul that "prison and hardships are facing [him]" (Acts 20:23); and the salvation* of Paul's companions in the shipwreck, where epiphainō is used (Acts 27:20-24). Acts 14:17 and Acts 17:26-31, though not developing a natural theology (see Gärtner, esp. 73-83, 144-69; Caragounis 1990, 23-26 and the literature), imply an elementary witness to God's constant care of his creation.*

3.2. Hebrews. This letter develops no concept of revelation in the strict sense. However, the idea of revelation is implicit in God's communication of his will through the prophets and in particular through the Son* (Heb 1:1-2). The recipients' faith* and new life* in Christ, spoken of as an enlightenment (Heb 6:4), presuppose a revelation of some sort. The earthly counterparts of heavenly realities (Heb 9:23-26), as well as the law's* being a shadow of future reality (Heb 10:1-4), cannot be understood apart from the concept of revelation.

In addition, Hebrews uses the terms dēloō and phaneroō in the sense of "to indicate" and "to appear" or "to disclose." Thus at Hebrews 9:8 the entrance of the high priest into the holy of holies, once a year and never without blood, was the way that the Holy Spirit had chosen to indicate (dēlountos) that the way into the Most Holy Place had not yet been disclosed (pephanerōsthai) as long as the first tabernacle* was still standing. At Hebrews 9:26 pephanerōtai is used of Jesus' earthly appearance to offer himself as a sacrifice,* while at Hebrews 12:27 dēloi introduces an explanation of an OT phrase.

3.3. 1 Peter. Unlike the Pauline corpus, where these terms occur particularly about the revelation of God's purposes, a revelation that has already been effected through Christ and cover a wide spectrum of ideas, in 1 Peter the revelation is wholly eschatological,* or future, and relates primarily to the final salvation with one exception (1 Pet 1:20). In 1 Peter 1:5 those "born again" (see New Birth) are said to be watched over by God's power* through faith for the eschatological, definitive salvation, which is about to be revealed (apokalyphthēnai) in the last time. Thus, although salvation is understood also as a present event, it is above all an eschatological reality. It will come in its full force with the eschatological apokalypsis of Jesus Christ (1 Pet 1:7, 13), where again the multifaceted revelation of Christ as depicted in the Gospels and Paul is limited to the vindication of those saved and their entrance into their inheritance.

This same salvation had engaged the OT prophets intensely (exēraunēsan, exezētēsan, 1 Pet 1:10), who searched for the intended times indicated by the Spirit of Christ (edēlou to en autois pneuma Christou). To them was revealed (apekalyphthē) both the fact of Christ's salvific sufferings* and coming glory* as well as the time when these were to take place (1 Pet 1:11-12). This last passage goes counter to the so-called Revelationsschema as found in certain but not all Pauline texts (Bockmuehl 1990, 208-10), according to which the revelation through Christ was withheld from God's people of old. At 1 Peter 1:20 we approach the earlier Revelationsschema when it is said that Christ was chosen before the creation of the world but was revealed (phanerōthēntos) at the end of time, referring again to his first advent. This ambivalence is found also in the Pauline corpus.

It appears that for this author the eschatological revelation of Christ in glory (1 Pet 4:12-14; 5:1) is set in sharp contrast to his protological coming in lowliness and his sufferings. In this connection it is worth noting that the protological appearance of Christ for the purpose of suffering, which is placed "in these last times," is expressed by phanerōthēntos (1 Pet 1:20). This contrast has undoubtedly a paraenetic pastoral function assisting the recipients of this letter, whose perseverance (see Endurance) in the faith was put to hard test on account of persecution.* This is exemplified by the paraenesis to the presbyters to shepherd* the flock of God faithfully and thus be in a position to receive the unfading crown of glory at the appearing (phanerōthēntos) of the chief Shepherd (1 Pet 5:4).

3.4. 2 Peter. This letter uses only gnōrizō and dēloō, once each. Gnōrizō occurs at 2 Peter 1:16, an ambiguous passage that refers to either the first or the Second Coming of Christ. The first alternative is supported by the context, which has the present Christian life in view, eschatology and the Second Coming not being taken up until 2 Peter 3:4. In addition gnōrizō in the NT is always used of making known past events, especially the kerygma* and the mystērion (it would thus correspond to Eph 6:19, gnōrizō, and Col 1:24-28; 4:4, phaneroō, never future, eschatological events. The other alternative, accepted by most commentators, has in its favor the fact that in the NT parousia is always used of the Second Coming, as at 2 Peter 3:4 (the delay of the Parousia,* Bauckham 1980, 19-28)—though 2 Peter 1:16 need not be interpreted in the light of 2 Peter 3:4, since the context in the latter passage is eschatological (it is used of the first coming by Ignatius,* Justin, and others). In this case the reference to the transfiguration may have paradigmatic significance, giving a hint of what the Second Coming will be like. The combination of dynamis and parousia, even if it is taken as a hendiadys (i.e., "his coming in power"), makes good sense of both comings of Christ. However this may be, the verb refers to the author's making known the power and coming of Christ through proclamation, not to any revelatory event.

At 2 Peter 1:14 the author's approaching death is said to have been made clear (edēlōsen) to him by Christ himself, but no further indication is given as to when or how this took place (see Bauckham 1983, 199-201). Almost certainly it does not imply a revelation in the strict sense.

3.5. 1 John. This letter contains only phaneroō and that no fewer than nine times. This word occurs another nine times in the Fourth Gospel, making it a well-nigh Johannine term (in the Pauline corpus it occurs twenty-two times). All but one of its nine occurrences refer to revelation, which relates both to the first and the second advent. 1 John, unlike Paul, is not concerned with the revelation of God's counsel but concretizes divine revelation in the Incarnation of the Logos (see Logos Christology) and the Second Coming. Revelation consists not in the disclosure of abstract truth* or even of the things that God has in store for his chosen ones but in the one act of God whereby his person, attributes and salvific intentions for humankind were made manifest through the manifestation of his Son.

Thus at the outset of his letter the author, emphasizing the reality of the Incarnation, states as an incontrovertible fact (here the polemic against heretical deniers of the Incarnation is obvious) that life was manifested (1 Jn 1:2). Though life here may not be quite equivalent to Jesus as the Logos, this life is said to have been with the Father (pros ton patera; cf. Jn 1:1, where a similar grammatical expression is used of the Logos), and the manifestation is connected with the earthly life of Jesus (e.g., heōrakamen, epsēlaphēsan, "we have seen," "they have handled," 1 Jn 1:1). This manifestation of the Son of God is related to two salvation-historical activities coming under the purview of the Incarnation: to take away our sins (1 Jn 3:5) and to destroy the works of the devil (1 Jn 3:8; see Satan). These concrete acts of God, leading to eternal life for humankind, are the best proof that the Incarnation and the earthly life of Jesus as well as his death make up the supreme manifestation of God's love* (1 Jn 4:9). God is revealed concretely through his acts.

The concreteness that revelation has for John exemplified in the manifestation of Jesus in his first coming, leads him to speak in identical terms about Jesus' Second Coming. The recipients of this letter are exhorted to abide in him, so that when he appears (phanerōthē) at his Second Coming they may have confidence and not be ashamed at his Parousia (1 Jn 2:28). In the same vein, in describing the love of God that has raised them to the status of being his children, the author says that the character of their future existence has not yet been disclosed (oupō ephanerōthē). However, his revelation (ean phanerōthē) at his Parousia will imply for them their total conformity to him (1 Jn 3:2).

At 1 John 2:19 the term phanerōthōsin occurs once in a nontechnical sense of the exposure of the real character of the heretics, who by leaving the community proved that they had never really belonged to it.

3.6. Revelation. In Revelation 1:1 the titular apokalypsis has assumed the technical sense of denoting a literary genre (having given its name to the apocalyptic* movement as well as its literature), though it also covers the contents of that book. In this book the heavenly curtain is lifted up and a vision of what is in store for the near future is shown to the servants (see Servant) of God (ha dei genesthai en tachei, "the things that must shortly take place"). "In this eschatological orientation and the related visionary apparatus the last book of the NT shows great affinity to the Jewish apocalyptic to which it has given its name. But it is closer to genuine prophecy and has more of the content of biblical revelation" (Oepke, 3:589). At Revelation 3:18 phaneroō is used in the nonreligious sense of the appearance (of nakedness), but at Revelation 15:4 it seems to have the sense of the disclosure of God's "sentence of condemnation" (BAGD).

It may be conceded that in the NT "the word-group is just in the process of attaining a firm religious content" and that the idea of revelation is influenced by Jewish apocalypticism (Holtz, 1:132). But that the idea of uncovering what has been there previously is retreating before an understanding according to which revelation unfolds as God acts in history seems to be only partly true. Even in Revelation 13:8 the Lamb,* which figures conspicuously in half of the chapters of this book, is described as slain from the creation of the world.

4. Postapostolic Writers.

In the early Christian writings the concept of revelation is put forward mainly by means of the terms referred to. Of these apokalyptō or apokalypsis occurs in 1 Clement (once, in a quotation; see Clement of Rome), Ignatius (once), the Martyrdom of Polycarp (twice), the Epistle to Diognetus (twice) and the *Shepherd of Hermas (thirty-three times). Gnōrizō occurs in the *Didache (three times), the *Epistle of Barnabas (twice), Diognetus (once) and Hermas (eleven times). Phaneroō or phaneron occurs in 1 Clement (three times), 2 Clement (four times), Ignatius (seven times), Martyrdom of Polycarp (three times), Barnabas (seventeen times), Diognetus (six times) and Hermas (eight times). All three terms are quite frequent in the later Pseudo-Clementine writings.

The conspicuous fact about these writings is that the idea of revelation of God's counsel or of Jesus' person has lost its NT content and has been reduced chiefly to visionary and apocalyptic experiences. Characteristically these terms do not refer to the counsel of God or to the Second Coming of Christ. The picture is, however, more varied than A. Oepke implies (3:591). Thus Ignatius speaks of God manifesting himself through Christ (Ign. Magn. 8.3; see also Ign. Eph. 19.3). Diognetus states that no man has ever seen God; he himself has manifested himself (heauton epedeixen, Diogn. 8.5), or Christ manifested himself as Son of God (Barn. 5.9), or the Logos manifested himself to the disciples (Diogn. 11.2), or God has revealed (ephanerōsen) the truth through his Son (2 Clem. 20.5), his goodness for our salvation (Diogn. 9.2) or what he has prepared from the beginning (Diogn. 8.11; 11.8).

One unusual example with cosmological interest is 1 Clement 60.1. While the first coming of Christ is hinted at as a revelation in the flesh (2 Clem. 14.3; Barn. 6.7; 14.5; Ign. Eph. 19.2; Herm. Sim. 9.12.3), the nearest we come to his Second Coming is when Barnabas says, "For the Lord has made known [egnōrisen] to us through the prophets things past and things present and has given us the firstfruits of the taste of things future" (Barn. 1.7; see also Barn. 5.3) and 1 Clement refers to the "visitation of Christ's kingdom" (1 Clem. 50.3).

For the rest, and this means the great majority of instances, revelation is used of visionary experiences and their interpretation (almost all of the examples from Hermas [more than fifty]), of personal directions (e.g., Ign. Eph. 20.2; Ign. Rom. 8.2; Ign. Pol. 2.2; Mart. Pol. 12.3; 14.2; 22.3) or the disclosure of various matters (e.g., Barn. 7.1, 3; 8.7; 11.1; 16.5; Diogn. 11.5). Even though Oepke's apposite conclusion with regard to Hermas—"Even the word 'apocalyptic' would be a little too exalted for these well-meaning but tepid outpourings of a limited soul" (3:591)—would not apply to the rest of these writings, all of these works have distanced themselves considerably from the NT center of gravity with regard to the concept of revelation.

The Didache uses gnōrizō three times in connection with the eucharistic prayer for God's making known "the Holy Vine of David, Thy Child," "life and knowledge" (or knowledge of life) and for "thy Holy Name . . . for the knowledge and faith and immortality which thou didst make known to us through thy child" (Did. 9.1—10.2).

See also APOCALYPTIC, APOCALYPTICISM; ESCHATOLOGY; GLORY; GNOSIS, GNOSTICISM; KNOWLEDGE; MYSTERY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, "The Delay of the Parousia," TynB 31 (1980) 3-36; idem, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Dallas: Word, 1983); idem, The Theology of the Book of Revelation (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993); M. N. A. Bockmuehl, Revelation and Mystery in Ancient Judaism and Pauline Christianity (WUNT 2/38; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1990); idem, "Das Verb phaneroō im Neuen Testament," BZ 32 (1988) 87-99; R. Bultmann, "The Concept of Revelation in the New Testament" in Existence and Faith (New York: Meridian, 1960) 58-91; idem, "δηλόω," TDNT 2:61-62; idem, "γινώσκω κτλ," TDNT 1:689-719; R. Bultmann and D. Lührmann, "φαίνω κτλ," TDNT 9:1-10; C. C. Caragounis, The Ephesian Mysterion: Meaning and Content (ConBNT 8; Lund: Gleerup, 1977); idem, "L'Universalisme moderne: Perspectives bibliques sur la révélation de Dieu," Hokhma 45 (1990) 17-45; B. Gärtner, The Areopagus Speech and Natural Revelation (ASNU 21; Uppsala and Lund: Gleerup, 1955); T. Holtz, "ἀποκαλύπτω," EDNT 1:130-32; A. Lindemann, Die Aufhebung der Zeit: Geschichtsverständnis und Eschatologie im Epheserbrief (Gütersloh: Gütersloher Verlagshaus Mohn, 1975); D. Lührmann, Das Offenbarungsverständnis bei Paulus und in paulinischen Gemeinden (WMANT 16; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1965); A. Oepke, "καλύπτω κτλ," TDNT 3:556-92; B. B. Warfield, "The Biblical Idea of Revelation" in The Inspiration and Authority of the Bible (Philadelphia: Presbyterian and Reformed, 1948; repr. 1970); U. Wilckens, "Das Offensbarungsverständnis in der Geschichte des Urchristentums" in Offenbarung als Geschichte, ed. W. Pannenberg (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1961) 42-90.

C. C. Caragounis

REVELATION. See REVEAL, REVELATION.

REVELATION, BOOK OF

The Book of Revelation is acknowledged to be a closed book by the majority of modern readers. This is largely due to the unfamiliarity of the prophetic books in the OT, the almost total ignorance of Jewish apocalyptic writings and the historical setting of the book which determines its content. In this article we shall endeavor to clarify these features and so enable the message of the last book of the Bible to be grasped.

1. Genre
2. Date
3. Historical Situation
4. Content and Structure
5. Authorship
6. The Expectation of Antichrist
7. The Purpose of the Revelation
8. The Significance of the Revelation for Today
9. The Revelation in the Earliest Post-New Testament Writings

1. Genre.

1.1. Apocalypse. The book of Revelation is the only work of its kind in the NT, but there were many like it in the ancient world, written especially by Jews but later also by Christians. These were called apocalypses, which is a Greek term from the verb apokalyptō, meaning "to uncover," "to reveal" or "to disclose" what is hidden. The characteristic motive of such works was to keep alive the flame of faith in difficult times and to maintain hope in the coming of the Day of the Lord (see Day of the Lord) and of the kingdom of God (see Kingdom of God). Accordingly the apocalyptic* movement is commonly viewed as the child of prophecy.* Jewish apocalypses, however, were not entirely concerned with the eschatological* hope of their people, for they frequently contain descriptions of the heavens* and the earth and their inhabitants, including angelic* and demonic powers. Nevertheless it is the eschatology of the apocalyptic writings that is most commonly in mind when one speaks of apocalyptic literature.

The most notable example of apocalypse in the OT is the book of Daniel, which became the model for subsequent apocalyptic writings. Other prophetic works, however, contain features that are related to apocalyptic thought and mode of expression. Ezekiel, for example, is sometimes called "the father of apocalyptic." Many passages in Isaiah 40—55 anticipate the apocalyptic style and content, along with Isaiah 25—27 and Zechariah 9—14. All these and other passages from the OT prophets contain representations of the intervention of God* for the salvation* of his people.

The book of Revelation opens with the words, "The Revelation (apokalypsis) of Jesus Christ that God gave him." We cannot be certain as to whether John intended to describe his work as an apocalypse. Was he implying that this revelation,* given by God to Jesus (Rev 1:1-2), provided the definitive declaration of that which other writings of this kind sought to give? The nature of that which follows may be thought to justify it. If this admission is acknowledged, it would be of utmost importance in interpreting the language and symbolism of the book. Much of the teaching of Jesus is conveyed in parables; the book of Revelation employs parabolic pictures for setting forth its representation of the past, present and future of history. An understanding of the use of such parables in related literature is invaluable for their interpretation in John's apocalypse. The pictorial language of Jewish apocalypses is itself rooted in the OT, and in turn the authors of the OT used imagery familiar to the nations of the Middle East. John the prophet was evidently acquainted with all that background, for it is recognized by virtually all scholars that his work reflects a mind soaked in the OT, and his language is dominated by it. A knowledge of this background is a prerequisite for a right understanding of his book.

1.2. Prophecy. The second sentence of the Revelation reads, "Happy is the one who reads [to others] and they who listen to the words of the prophecy and keep the things that are written in it." It is evident that John is aware that he was commissioned by the Lord to write this prophecy and that he is numbered among the prophets of God. As such he will have realized that he stands in the succession of the prophets of the new covenant.* More than once this is mentioned in his book. The epilogue relates how John fell at the feet of the angel who had showed him the visions* he had seen in order to worship him, but this he was forbidden to do: "You must not do that! I am a fellow servant with you and your brothers the prophets, and those who keep the words of this book. Worship God" (Rev 22:8-9). In Revelation 19:10 the angel tells John, "I am a fellow servant with you and your brothers who hold the testimony of Jesus . . . for the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy." That appears to mean that the Holy Spirit* who inspires prophecy enables prophets to bear witness to the revelation that Jesus brought and brings. It accords with the description of the content of the Revelation in its first sentence, where it is stated to be "witness to the word of God and the testimony of Jesus" (Rev 1:2). In light of these statements, indeed of the content of the entire book, we are to recognize that the Revelation is the work of the Spirit, who from Pentecost* on has enabled Christians to bear prophetic witness to "the word of God and the witness of Jesus." That witness includes God's word concerning his will for humankind in the present and in the future.

It is evident, accordingly, that John's work is not to be viewed either as an apocalypse or as a prophecy, as though those terms were mutually exclusive; rather one should acknowledge that it has the features of both; that is, his work is to be defined as an apocalyptic prophecy and/or a prophetic apocalypse.

1.3. Letter. After the first paragraph John greets his readers in the conventional manner of one writing a letter* (Rev 1:4-5). Correspondingly he concludes the prophecy with a benediction such as is normal in the NT epistles (Rev 22:21). Moreover John was commanded to write what he was about to see and to send the work to seven churches* in the Roman province of Asia (Rev 1:11). All these churches have a short letter addressed to them. The latter always includes the exhortation, "Let anyone who has an ear listen to what the Spirit is saying to the churches" (e.g., Rev 2:11).

It is clear that the seven letters were intended for the benefit of all the seven churches addressed. Significantly the cities in which the seven churches were located were centers of civic administration and of postal distribution in their areas. It was therefore possible for copies of the whole prophecy to be dispatched to churches in other cities of the province. NT letters were clearly intended to be read to gathered congregations; the same applies to the entire book of Revelation, as is clear from the beatitude in Revelation 1:3 and from the epilogue in Revelation 22:6-21. If then the book of Revelation was a letter to the churches of Roman Asia, it is manifest that it was addressed to their situations.

In this respect Revelation stands in contrast to the opening paragraph of 1 Enoch, which states that what the prophet saw was "not for this generation, but for a remote one which is to come." The situations and needs of the churches to which John wrote were as truly in John's mind as the situations and needs of the churches to which Paul and other Christian leaders wrote. The recognition of this fact has important consequences for the interpretation of the whole work. The prophet was bidden to write to the churches of Roman Asia in view of events that were developing in their time and to prepare them for their future. Just as the rest of the letters in the NT require the circumstances of the churches to which they were addressed to be known for understanding their content, so it is with the book of Revelation. Failure to grasp this fact has led innumerable readers to misinterpret the book by identifying the figures and events described in it with persons and events of their own times. Such misunderstanding is corrected by every effort to perceive the situation addressed in the book and its message for those living in it and for all subsequent generations.

1.4. Liturgy. Not a few books in the NT reflect liturgical elements in them (see Liturgical Elements), especially prayers* and hymns* and confessions of faith (see Creeds). One thinks of Ephesians 1 and the prayer of Ephesians 3:14-21; the christological* hymn in Philippians 2:6-11 and that in Colossians 1:15-20; the short snatch of a hymn in Ephesians 5:14 (all thought by some scholars to have been composed for the celebration of baptism*) and the various "faithful sayings" of the Pastoral Epistles. The book of Revelation has more such songs scattered through its pages than does any other writing in the NT. Their substance and contexts led M. H. Shepherd to suggest that the early paschal liturgy of the churches formed the model for the Revelation. This interpretation has not found acceptance by most scholars, but the presence of liturgical forms in so many sections of the book is important; their combination with other liturgical forms should be acknowledged.

1.5. Drama. In the Greek tradition, worship* and drama are closely linked. The presence of the many hymns in the book of Revelation has encouraged some interpreters to see in the book a drama of the end time. J. G. Bowman observed that the book is made up of seven acts and seven scenes. The hymns have a similar function to the choruses in Greek drama: they throw light on the visions of the book. This E. Schüssler Fiorenza acknowledges: "They [the hymns of Revelation] function in the same way as the chorus in Greek drama, preparing and commenting upon the dramatic movements of the plot"; but she asserts that the Revelation is not a drama (Schüssler Fiorenza, 166), and with this most concur while readily admitting that the book is a remarkably dramatic work.

2. Date.

Two chief possibilities as to the time of writing the Revelation have been and still are maintained by scholars, namely, either in the turbulent period shortly after the death of Nero (A.D. 68-69) or toward the end of Domitian's reign, about A.D. 95.

The former view is held on the basis of the likelihood that John had endured the fearful persecution* of Christians by Nero and also because there is no clear reference in the book to the destruction of Jerusalem* in A.D. 70. If Revelation 11:1-2 is interpreted literally, it can indicate that Jerusalem had been under prolonged attack and that the altar and outer court of the temple* either had been seized or could not be kept from the Roman forces, whereas the sanctuary itself continued to be preserved by God.

In the latter chapters of the book Rome is called "Babylon" (see Rev 14:8; 16:19; 17:5; 18:2, 10, 21). The most probable reason for giving the name Babylon to Rome was that as Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, had destroyed Jerusalem in 586 B.C. so Rome had done in recent times. The dirge over Babylon* in Revelation 18 views the current tyrant city as another Babylon. The apocalypses 4 Ezra and 2 Baruch were written at the end of the first century of the Christian era and also gave the name of Babylon to Rome for the same reason.

In Revelation 13:3 (cf. Rev 13:14) it is stated that one of the heads of the "beast,"* the antichrist,* had received a deadly wound, but he lived again and was empowered by Satan* to rule the empire (cf. Rev 17:8). This appears to refer to the contemporary belief that the wounded "head" was Nero and that he had not been killed, whether by himself or another, but had escaped and would return to rule the empire (see Roman Empire). Revelation 17 has a developed form of this notion and represents the belief that the Beast Nero had risen from the dead and would come with a confederate army from the East and destroy "Babylon the Great." This expectation would require a later date than the death of Nero.

The majority opinion as to the date of Revelation is that of Irenaeus, who wrote concerning the book, "That was seen no very long time since, but almost in our own day, toward the end of Domitian's reign" (Irenaeus Haer. 5.30.3). Eusebius cited this judgment with approval (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.18-20; 5.8.6). This assessment of the date of Revelation suits other evidence of the character and contents of the book, above all the delineation of the antichrist as another Nero.

The explanation in Revelation 17:9-11 as to the meaning of the seven heads of the beast has been investigated with a view to determining the date of the Revelation, but in vain. Two meanings are given in the text, the one identifying the seven heads with the seven hills of Rome, the other representing seven emperors. Both explanations are secondary, since they are applications to a contemporary situation of an ancient myth or saga of the seven-headed monster of the deep who opposed the powers of heaven. The list of emperors up to Domitian is Julius Caesar, Augustus, Tiberius, Gaius, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, Vitellius, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian—twelve in all. Of these John states that five have fallen, one is (the sixth), one is to come (for a short time only), the eighth is one of the seven and will be the antichrist. Starting from Julius Caesar, John would be writing in Nero's reign, but the difficulties discussed remain. The simplest solution is to assume that the "five" that have "fallen' represent the majority, the sixth is the reigning emperor, Domitian; the seventh will reign for a short time and the antichrist will follow.

3. Historical Situation.

3.1. The Imperial Cult in Roman Asia. It is imperative to bear in mind that the churches for which Revelation was written were situated in the province of Roman Asia and that the emperor* cult (i.e., the worship of the emperor) was enthusiastically adopted in that area, possibly more than elsewhere in the Roman Empire. L. L. Thompson pointed out that the imperial cult had its high point in the reign of Augustus: "Language praising him is lofty and is similar to that offered to the gods" (Thompson, 159). All the cities of the seven churches had the worship of the emperor in their midst. In many cities annual festivals were held, especially on the emperor's birthday, and such festivals were supported by people from all walks of life. Thompson, however, urges that the importance of the worship of the emperor for the early Christians should not be exaggerated. In his view the greater issue revolved around Christians' relation to adherents of traditional religious cults rather than their relation to the cult of the emperor, for sacrifices were made in connection with them also (see Religions, Greco-Roman).

Domitian, in whose reign the Revelation is believed to have been written, has had the reputation of being a monster, who carried to an extreme the imperial cult. He is said to have erected an immense number of statues of himself, demanded that he be addressed as "our Lord and God" (dominus et deus) and embarked on a vicious persecution of the churches. Thompson has investigated the truth of these claims and come to the conclusion that they are false. The portrait of Domitian was drawn a few years after his death by a circle of writers around Pliny the Younger, which included Tacitus, Dio Chrysostom and Suetonius. After Domitian's assassination Nerva became emperor, but his reign lasted only two years (A.D. 96-98). He was succeeded by Trajan, who recognized his need of writers and orators who could promote his ideas. He found them in Pliny and his friends. They pursued a common policy of exalting Trajan by contrasting him with Domitian. Pliny, for example, wrote of the pleasure of being appointed consul during September, a month of triple rejoicing "which saw the removal of the worst of emperors [Domitian], the accession of the best [Nerva] and the birth of one even better than the best" (i.e., Trajan; see Pliny Panegyr. 92.4).

On this procedure Thompson comments: "Propagandists for a new age have to sharpen both edges of their two-edged sword; both the ideal present and the evil past have to be exaggerated" (Thompson, 115). Contrary to the claim that Domitian demanded to be addressed as "our Lord and God," Statius reports that when Domitian was acclaimed as Dominus at one of his Saturnalia he forbade those who did so to address him in this manner (Statius Silvae 1.6, 81-84). There are no references to Domitian as dominus et deus on any inscriptions, coins or medallions from the Domitianic era. Certainly there were people who referred to Domitian as dominus et deus, but Thompson urged that one must reckon with popular opportunism among those seeking benefits from the emperor (Thompson, 105-6).

If Thompson has made a strong case for clearing Domitian's name as a monster obsessed with his inherited divinity, with others he has underestimated the threat of the emperor cult to the churches and instead has imputed to John the prophet an obsession with Jewish apocalyptic. While recognizing that apocalyptic writings have frequently been due to crises precipitated by persecution, Thompson denies that such action of governing authorities in Roman Asia existed in John's day. He cites the concept of "perceived crisis" put forward by J. J. Collins: that is, the apocalyptist sees in the situation in which he lives a crisis that is nonexistent but is "perceived" through interpreting his situation from the viewpoint of apocalyptic beliefs (Collins, 2-8). Far from being an objective analysis of society at that time, Thompson affirms, "First century Roman life was . . . one of the most integrated, peaceful, meaningful periods of history for most of those who lived in the empire. This confusion of a particular social location with society as a whole is not uncommon in the study of early Christianity" (Thompson, 237 n. 10).

When one bears in mind that Roman society was dependent on sixty million slaves,* many whose life of slavery was largely due to conquest of their countries by Rome's armies, the compulsion of many male slaves to become gladiators for the entertainment of crowds in the amphitheaters and female slaves to become prostitutes, such a statement is beyond comprehension. John the prophet refers to these in his doom-song over the fall of Babylon as he concludes his list of the trades of the city with the words, "cattle and sheep, horses and chariots and bodies and souls of men" (Rev 18:13). He was no small-minded man, limited to an isolated congregation in a restricted area. He exercised an influential ministry over a group of churches in what was probably the most Christianized area of the Roman Empire in the late first century A.D. He was in a position to know what happens when emperors take measures against subjects whose conscience* forbids them to acknowledge his divinity; for example, the action of Antiochus Epiphanes to compel the Jews to forsake their own religion and adopt that of the rest of his domain, including sacrificing to himself as the representative of Zeus; Caligula's attempt to set his own statue in the temple of Jerusalem and the panic caused by that among the Jews of Jerusalem; and the appalling cruelty of Nero in his persecution of Christians in Rome during John's own lifetime.

Certainly John knew the teaching of the book of Daniel and its attitude to rulers who claimed to be not only divine but above the gods. Not that he interpreted the reigning emperor as holding that notion of himself, but it is evident that he saw in the enthusiastic pursuit of the emperor cult a preparation for the emergence of an antichrist who would not only declare war on the church but, astonishingly, destroy the empire itself (see Rev 17:12-17).

3.2. Persecution. Earlier beliefs that Domitian had already begun a severe persecution of the church are not borne out by the Revelation itself. References such as Revelation 2:10 and Revelation 2:13 indicate a present hostility toward Christians but speak of a future increase of such opposition. Nevertheless, the fact that John had been removed to Patmos is evidence that the governing authorities in Roman Asia were taking action against the Christian church. John had been banished to Patmos because of his powerful ministry* of the word of God and witness* of Jesus and therefore was viewed by the authorities as a dangerous leader of the Christian sect. His perception of the nature of the imperial cult accordingly was conditioned by his experience, not his prejudice.

4. Content and Structure.

4.1. Introduction (Rev 1). The opening chapter forms an introduction to the book, with a prologue (Rev 1:1-8) and a vision of the risen Christ* given to the prophet John (Rev 1:9-20). The former makes known the origin and nature of the book, pronounces the first of seven beatitudes in the work on its readers and hearers, gives a greeting from the triune God, a doxology to Christ and two prophetic sayings stating the theme of the book. The vision that follows contains a commission to John to write what he sees to seven churches in Roman Asia. The description of the risen Lord echoes that of the Ancient of Days in Daniel 7:9 and the powerful angel in Daniel 10:5-62.

4.2. Letters to Seven Churches (Rev 2—3). A series of seven letters to the churches named in Revelation 1:11 is given in Revelation 2—3. They are very brief, reminding us of the eight short oracles of Amos 1—2. The letters have an identical structure: an introductory statement from the risen Christ, drawn from the opening vision and usually pertinent to the contents of the letter; praise for the good qualities of the church and/or criticism of its faults; a promise* to the victor relating to the blessings* to be bestowed in the kingdom of Christ; and an exhortation to listen to what the spirit is saying to the churches.

4.3. Vision of the Heavenly Throne Room (Rev 4—5). As the vision of Christ in Revelation 1 leads into the seven letters, so the vision of heaven in Revelation 4—5 leads into the main body of the Revelation. It initiates the process of events leading to the unveiling of the final kingdom of God (Rev 6—19) and at the same time determines the symbolism of the first series of messianic judgments* (Rev 6:1—8:5).

4.4. Seals, Trumpets and Bowls (Rev 6—16). At this point we have to make a decision on how to interpret the relation of the three series of judgments that dominate the major part of the Revelation (Rev 6:1—19:10), portrayed under the symbolism of the opening of seven seals* of the document in God's hands (Rev 6:1—8:5), the sounding of the seven trumpets* (Rev 8:6—11:19) and the outpouring of seven bowls* of wrath (Rev 15—16). These three series of judgments in Revelation have been interpreted as following in chronological sequence (see, e.g., Charles, 1:xxiii; Farrer 1964, 9-23; Court, 74-75; Rowland, 416).

There is, however, one major feature of the three series of judgments that makes this interpretation difficult to accept: each of the three series concludes with a description of the Day of the Lord, which leads to a revelation of the final kingdom of God. The first series of judgments is closely paralleled with features of the eschatological discourse of Mark 13, although ostensibly it employs the imagery of four riders on horses, adapted from Zechariah 1 and 6. The fifth seal reveals the cry of martyrs beneath the throne of God, "How long?" but the sixth seal brings the judgments to a climax as it tells of a great earthquake, the sun becoming black as sackcloth, the moon as blood, the stars falling to earth, the sky vanishing like a rolled up scroll, and every island and mountain removing from its place. The kings and the mighty call on the rocks of the mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of God and the wrath* of the Lamb,* "for the great day of their wrath has come, and who is able to stand?" The passage is made up of citations from OT prophetic descriptions of the Day of the Lord (e.g., Is 13:10, 13; 34:4; Zeph 1:14-15), the meaning of which is not the destruction of the universe but a pictorial representation of the terror of the universe when the God of heaven steps forth to judge the world (cf. the last judgment scene, Rev 20:11).

In Revelation 6:12-20 the end of the rebellion of humankind in history has been reached, and with the opening of the seventh seal in Revelation 8:1-5 the prayers of the martyrs beneath the throne of God and of the saints on earth are answered, and the accompaniments of the coming of Christ in his kingdom take place (with Rev 8:5 cf. Rev 11:19; 16:17-18).

The judgments of the seven trumpets are described in a similar fashion as those at the opening of the seven seals: the judgments of the first four trumpets are adaptations of those on Egypt at the exodus; they are followed by the announcement of three woes to come on earth, but the third woe is withheld until later, and instead a song of triumph that celebrates the consummation of the kingdom of God is sung in Revelation 11:15-18:

"The kingdom of the world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he will reign for ever and ever."
The twenty-four elders then fall on their faces and worship God:
"We give you thanks, Lord God Almighty, who is and who was,

for you have taken your great power and begun your reign."

Observe that whereas the elders in Revelation 4:8 sing to him "who was, and who is, and who is to come," they now sing of him "who was, and who is," for God has come, and his reign of ultimate salvation in the fulfilled kingdom of God has begun.

The same goal has evidently been reached on the completion of the outpouring of the seven bowls of wrath. A voice from the temple and the throne proclaims "It is done" (Rev 16:17; cf. Rev 21:6, where the cry signifies that the completion of God's purpose in creation has arrived). It would appear that with the end of each series of messianic judgments, the end of history that precedes the triumph of the kingdom of God has also arrived. A corollary of this element of parallelism is that the period of divine judgments is not elongated into an interminable series of punishments but is a comparatively short period of intensified judgments executed by the Lord of history.

It is, however, important to note that John has linked the three series by a technique that has been variously described as "overlapping or interweaving" (Bauckham 1994, 8-9), "interlocking" (A. Y. Collins 1976, 16-18), "intercalation" (Schüssler Fiorenza, 172-73). Between the silence in heaven and the offering of prayers to God for the kingdom's coming the seven angels who are to sound the trumpets are introduced (Rev 8:1-5). After the sounding of the seventh trumpet the opening of the temple of God in heaven is mentioned, and thereby the ark of the covenant is seen (Rev 11:19). Similarly Revelation 15:5-6 tells of the opening of the temple of the tent of witness in heaven out of which proceed the angels with the seven last plagues, so bridging the extensive gap of Revelation 12-14 (Bauckham 1994, 8-9). By this method of repetition and development John builds up to the advent of Christ in an awe-inspiring climax.

4.5. Interludes: Glimpses of the Church and Its Conflicts (Rev 7; 10:1—11:13; 12—14). Between the three descriptions of the messianic judgments are set episodes that throw light on what happens to the church during the period of tribulation* and also the nature of its task.

In Revelation 7, between the opening of the sixth and seventh seals, occur two visions, the first of which recounts the sealing of God's people for protection in the time of trial (cf. Ezek 9:1-11), the second giving a proleptic description of their joy* in the final kingdom of God. Likewise between the sixth and seventh trumpets a more extensive interlude takes place in which John is confirmed in his prophetic ministry (Rev 10), and an oracle reveals the church's vocation to carry out a powerful prophetic witness expected of Elijah and Moses* in the last days (Rev 11:1-13). Revelation 12—14 provide the longest interruption in the judgment visions; these chapters set the opposition between the emperor worship and the church in the context of the age-long conflict between the powers of darkness (see Light) and the God of heaven.

4.6. The City of Antichrist and the City of God (Rev 17:1—22:5). One would have expected that after completing the description of the messianic judgments John would portray at once the coming of the Christ and his kingdom. Instead he reveals the doom of the antichristian empire as it falls prey to its own forces of destruction (Rev 17—18) and the praise of God's people and heaven's hosts over it (Rev 19:1-10). Then John is free to describe the coming of Jesus to defeat the enemies of God by his all-powerful word (Rev 19:11—21:3), the kingdom of Christ in the world (Rev 20:4-6), the last vain attempt of Satan to overthrow that kingdom (Rev 20:7-10), the last judgment of the human race (Rev 20:11-15), the new heaven and earth (Rev 21:1-8) and the city of God, the new Jerusalem (Rev 21:9—22:5).

It is important to observe that, strictly speaking, the story of salvation, the new exodus, ends at Revelation 21:8 with its depiction of the new creation.* The description of the city of God, the bride of the Lamb, is given in a deliberate contrast to the antichristian city described in Revelation 17. The book of Revelation reaches its climax as the story of the harlot and the bride. It is in truth a tale of two cities!

4.7. Epilogue (Rev 22:6-21). The concluding paragraphs of the Revelation sum up and press home on the conscience of the readers and hearers the practical lessons of the book. It primarily emphasizes the authenticity of the book as a true revelation from God and the nearness of the fulfillment of its message.

5. Authorship.

The author makes himself known in the first sentence of the Revelation as "his [God's] slave, John." The use of that term slave jolts the modern reader, as it did the translators of the King James (Authorized) Version, for although the term frequently appears in the original languages of both Testaments, it occurs once only in the KJV OT (Jer 2:14) and once in the KJV NT (Rev 18:13). Paul began his letter to the Romans, "Paul, a slave of Christ Jesus, called to be an apostle." John wrote in the same way, but whereas he often refers to himself in his book, he never speaks of himself as an apostle* (contrast 1 Cor 1:1; 2 Cor 1:1; Gal 1:1; Eph 1:1; Col 1:1).

From the latter part of the second century it was assumed that the Fourth Gospel, the letters of John (see John, Letters of) and the book of Revelation were all written by John the son of Zebedee. Nevertheless, from early times it was recognized that there are difficulties in that assumption, notably with respect to the differences between the Revelation and the Gospel. The issues were clearly stated by Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria in the third century. He had been disturbed by the spread of millennial teaching in his diocese and wished to discourage it. He therefore sought to establish first that the Revelation is not to be interpreted literally and then to demonstrate that the book could not have been written by John the apostle. He adduced three reasons for the latter position.

First, the author did not claim to be the Beloved Disciple, or brother of James, or an eyewitness and hearer of the Lord, as John the Evangelist did; many Christians had the name John, and there were two Christian leaders of that name in Roman Asia and two tombs in Ephesus that were acclaimed to be the tomb of John.

Second, there are many contacts of thought between the Gospel and letters of John, but the Revelation is utterly different from both: "It scarcely, so to speak, has a syllable in common with them."

Third, the style of the Gospel and letters is different from that of the Revelation; the former are written in excellent Greek, but the latter is often ungrammatical and uses barbarous idioms.

While Dionysius has been applauded for his insight in the critical evaluation of the Revelation, the issues are much more complicated than he realized. That he was right on the last point there is no doubt: John does break rules of Greek grammar frequently but not always through lack of knowledge; it has been said that for every solecism in Revelation there is an example of correct linguistic usage (note, e.g., John's refusal to decline the divine name after a preposition in Rev 1:4 immediately followed by the correct use in relation to the seven spirits before God's throne). It is now generally recognized that behind the Revelation is the mind of a Semitic author, one whose native language is Hebrew or Aramaic, but how that relates to the style and language of the book is uncertain.

R. H. Charles held that John thought in Hebrew and wrote in Greek (Charles, 1:cxliii). H. H. Rowley maintained that John's first language was Aramaic and that he thought in Aramaic as he wrote in Greek (a view he communicated in a letter to this author). C. C. Torrey affirmed that John wrote his book in Aramaic and someone else translated it into Greek very literally out of reverence for the master (Torrey, 158). If Torrey's view were adopted, it would complicate discussion on the linguistic differences between the language and style of the Gospel and the Revelation. Ironically, however, C. F. Burney wrote a book entitled The Aramaic Origin of the Fourth Gospel (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1922) to demonstrate that the Gospel of John was written in Aramaic and later translated into Greek! It will be appreciated that recent scholars are wary of accepting that whole books of the NT were originally written in Aramaic and translated into Greek. In this case the argument has reached stalemate.

Dionysius's statement that Revelation has scarcely a syllable in common with the Gospel and letters of John is an exaggeration. Part of the problem of determining the relation between the Gospel and the Revelation is precisely their differences and likenesses. Both works alone, for example, use the term logos (the "Word") of Christ, both see in the Lamb of God a coalescence of the concept of the apocalyptic Warrior Lamb and the Passover Lamb (see Beasley-Murray 1978, 124-26; and 1986, 24-25, 354-55). Moreover the terms for witness, life, death, thirst, hunger and conquer in a spiritual or moral sense occur so frequently in the Gospel and the Revelation as to suggest a positive relationship in the area of soteriology between the two works.

Yet these two books almost uniquely express the minds and personalities of two authors. Their works were composed with utmost care and in a peculiarly intricate manner. It is increasingly agreed that the Fourth Gospel contains material that not only has been thought over carefully but also has been preached a great deal through the years, and it displays a first-hand knowledge of rabbinic thought and Greek philosophical theology. The Revelation comes from a mind imbued with the OT but also reflects a first-hand knowledge of apocalyptic literature, so that John finds it natural to express himself in this mode of writing.

How then are we to account for the relationships between the two works? Their authors must have been well acquainted. Of late the postulate of a school of John has been put forward to explain the origin of the Johannine writings, which is a highly plausible hypothesis (see esp. Culpepper). There is, however, a further feature about this problem: it never occurred to Dionysius that the son of Zebedee may have been John the prophet and not the author of the Gospel.

H. B. Swete, in his discussion on the authorship of Revelation, was impressed with the kinship between the character of John the apostle as he appears in the Synoptic Gospels and what one would expect of John the prophet. He and his brother James were named by Jesus "Boanerges," that is, "Sons of Thunder" (Mk 3:17); John forbade one who was not a member of the apostolic group to cast out demons in the name of Jesus; he wanted to call down fire from heaven on Samaritans who would not give Jesus and his disciples hospitality* (Lk 9:52-55); he was a witness of the transfiguration of Jesus and of his resurrection.* Swete therefore was inclined to view John the apostle as the author of the Revelation and to divorce the problem from that of the authorship of the Fourth Gospel, but he wished to keep an open mind on the issue (Swete, clxxx-clxxxv).

M. Kiddle, forty years later, adopted a similar attitude and stated, "The authorship of the Revelation may prove to be the one mystery of the book which will never be revealed in this world" (Kiddle, xxxvi). W. G. Kümmel, yet another generation after Kiddle, wrote, "We know nothing more about the author of the Apocalypse other than that he was a Jewish Christian prophet by the name of John" (Kümmel, 331). Do we need to know more? In no other book of the Bible is the identity of the author of so little importance, for it is not, as earlier editions of the Bible had it, "The Revelation of St. John the Divine," but the revelation of Jesus Christ to his servant John. The question of authorship is settled not by the name of the person who received the Revelation and wrote it down but by the nature of the work, which in the providence of God completes the canon* of the Scriptures as its crown.

6. The Expectation of Antichrist.

We have already observed the connection between the emperor cult and the anticipation of the appearance of an antichrist who shall rule not only the empire but also the world. This expectation dominates Revelation 12—14 and Revelation 16—17, passages in which the apocalyptic style reaches its height in the Revelation. The imagery of a woman clothed with the sun, with the moon beneath her feet and twelve stars above her head, and a dragon in the sky that throws a third of the stars down to earth clearly reflects ancient sources. These were known not only to writers of the OT but also to all the nations of the Middle East and were utilized in many ways. Common to all of them was the concept of a monster of the sea who fought the gods of heaven and sought to overthrow them. The imagery is clear in such a passage as Isaiah 27:1: "The Lord with his cruel and great sword will punish Leviathan the fleeing serpent, Leviathan the twisting serpent, and he will kill the dragon that is in the sea." The vision of the world empires in Daniel 7 that are symbolized by beasts that emerge from the sea, culminating in a fearful adversary of God and man, is an application of that same imagery to a contemporary tyrant who not only oppressed God's people but also sought world domination.

This symbolism was applied frequently in the OT as a cartoon for oppressive rulers, all of whom were doomed to be overcome by Israel's God, the Lord of heaven and earth. That cartoon was applied by the prophet John to the awaited antichrist emperor. It must be emphasized, however, that John did not look upon the reigning emperor as the antichrist; rather he viewed the emperor cult as preparing the way for an antichrist who would exploit it to the full, in a comparable manner as Paul in 2 Thessalonians 2:7 spoke of "the mystery of lawlessness" as already at work in the world. More precisely, John applied the dragon symbol to Satan (Rev 12), to the antichrist (Rev 13) and to the city and empire over which he ruled (Rev 17).

But John goes further in that he conjoins the antichrist concept with the contemporary expectation of the return of Nero to Rome. This is seen first in his description of the antichrist as smitten by a deadly wound and coming to life after it (Rev 13:3), secondly by Revelation 13:18: "Let anyone with understanding calculate the number of the beast, for it is the number of a person. Its number is 666." The possibility of representing a name by a number lies in the fact that Hebrew and Greek did not have separate signs for numbers but used instead letters of the alphabet, so that "a" = 1, "b" = 2, "c" = 3, and so on. On this basis any name could be calculated by adding up the values of its letters. A. Deissmann, for example, cites a graffito on a wall in Pompeii reading, "I love her whose name is 545" (Deissmann, 275).

Through the centuries many names that add up to 666 have been suggested as the answer to the puzzle set by John, but in recent years a large measure of agreement has arisen that the name John had in mind is Nero Caesar in Hebrew. If one asks how Greek-speaking congregations could have known that, the answer is that it almost certainly arose among Hebrew- and Aramaic-speaking Jews; they had no reason to love Nero (the Roman-Jewish war began in his reign), and it would have become common knowledge among the churches, just as Abba and Maranatha became known among them all. Confirmation of this is found in an alternative reading of Revelation 13:18 in some manuscripts; that is, 616, which is the Hebrew number of the Latin form of Nero. By contrast it was early known among Christians that the name Jesus in Greek totals 888, which represents an advance upon perfection (777), as the antichrist shows a consistent falling below it. That indicates that the antichrist of Satan falls as far short of being the deliverer of humanity as the Christ of God exceeds all the hopes of humanity for a redeemer.

As to the historic Nero, Suetonius reported that when Nero learned that the Roman senate had proclaimed him a public enemy and troops were on their way to capture him, he committed suicide by slitting his throat and was buried in the tomb of his family (Suetonius Nero 49-50). This lack of a public burial for Nero led to widespread doubt that he really had died and contributed to the supposition that he had fled to the East. No fewer than three claimants to be Nero rose in subsequent years, one in the year following his death (A.D. 69), the second in A.D. 80 and the third in A.D. 88-89; this last one almost convinced the king of Parthia that he was Nero and nearly led to an invasion of the Roman Empire. Whereas earlier it was often supposed that Nero was still alive, a generation later it was thought that he had risen from the dead and would return to take vengeance on Rome. That is so expressed in the third, fourth and fifth books of the Sibylline Oracles.

John made use of this widespread expectation. In Revelation 13:3 he wrote that one of the beast's seven heads "was as it were slaughtered to death," a peculiar way of stating it, "and its deadly wound was healed." This is a reminiscence of Revelation 5:6, where the Lamb is described as "standing as it were slaughtered." The Christ of Satan is plainly a parody of the Christ of God, in this as in all other respects (see Rissi 1966, 66). The adaptation of the Nero anticipation to the coming antichrist appears again in Revelation 17:7-18 but with a different emphasis, in that the beast represents both the empire and the antichrist. On the one hand the beast on which the woman sits "was, and is not, and is to ascend from the abyss and go off to destruction" (Rev 17:8) and on the other hand it is said, "The beast who was and is not is the eighth [head], and is of the seven, and he goes off to destruction."

In light of Revelation 13 the eighth king is plainly Nero, in whom the nature and the destiny of the antichristian empire were embodied. Both share in the likeness of the dragon (Satan), both oppose the Lord in his people, both belong to the "abyss" (see Hell, Abyss) and both are doomed to suffer the fate of those who make war on the Lamb (Rev 16:14). But one major difference is apparent in the representations of the antichrist in Revelation 13 and Revelation 17: in the former the empire receives a boost from the antichrist, so that all in the world, apart from those whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life, receive the mark of the beast and worship him (Rev 13:8, 16-18). In Revelation 17 the fears of many are fulfilled, and the Christ of Satan persuades the kings of the East to join him in attacking "Babylon the Great," and the city is destroyed and burned with fire (Rev 17:15-17). Such is the outcome of the emperor cult. The beast and his allies remain in the hand of the God they defy, and by the impulse of the devil they fulfill the words of God (Rev 17:16-17; on this see Bauckham 1994, 329-417).

One point must be clarified concerning John's use of the so-called Nero myth. There is no question that John looked for Nero literally to return from the dead to fulfill the role of the antichrist. He utilized the current expectation to portray the works of the antichrist as those of another Nero, and that for a good reason: Nero was the first Roman emperor to persecute the Christian church, and he did so with such bestial cruelty as to provide a pattern for the beast of Satan to follow in his war with the Lamb (Rev 11:7-10; 13:7; 17:12-14). By his presentation of antichrist as another Nero, John has made it clear that the cult of the emperor is a projection of what will take place when the seeds of its beginning reach their full harvest. It could not be otherwise. The emperor cult, as R. J. Bauckham observed, was a deification of power (Bauckham 1994, 451-52). History, not least in the twentieth century, shows that such deification is capable of reappearing with appalling results. Humankind ignores that to its peril.

7. The Purpose of the Revelation.

E. F. Scott described the Revelation as "a trumpet call to faith" (174). For the Christians of John's generation, especially in Roman Asia, the exaltation of Rome and the popularity of the emperor cult made the living of the Christian life difficult and the future dismaying, in light of the pressure to join the majority in the celebration of Caesar's divinity and the readiness of informers to report to the authorities their refusal to do so. Yet to yield to such pressure entailed the denial of the Christian faith in its entirety, which was unthinkable. John therefore wrote at the behest of the risen Lord to strengthen the faith and courage of believers, to nerve them for battle with antichristian forces in the world and to help them to bear witness to the one true Lord and Savior.

The whole book of Revelation is rooted in its portrayal of God Almighty as the Lord of history and his redemptive activity in Christ. So surely as Jesus has accomplished the first and most important stage in the redemption* of humanity, so he will complete his appointed task of bringing to victory the kingdom of God and thereby the total emancipation of humanity from the powers of evil. The followers of the Lamb cannot expect to avoid sharing his sufferings;* hence the call early in the letters to the churches: "Be faithful until death, and I will give you the crown of life" (Rev 2:10). And that will be to participate in life eternal in the company of God and the redeemed in the eternal city of God.

8. The Significance of the Revelation for Today.

The book of Revelation has been an inspiration for the church through the ages, above all when it has known the fierce opposition of ruling authorities (see Civil Authority). From time to time, however, it has been criticized as a sub-Christian book. R. Bultmann, to cite one example, considered that it presents "a weakly Christianized Judaism" (Bultmann 1955, 2:175). Bultmann's criticism reflects his rejection of all apocalyptic, yet he is aware that the NT presents the atonement as involving both the love* and judgment of God. This is seen especially in John 12:31-32 but also in John 3:16-21; on the latter Bultmann made the striking comment, "There would be no judgment at all were it not for the event of God's Love" (Bultmann 1971, 154).

A. Y. Collins cites D. H. Lawrence as asserting that the book vents the anger, hatred and envy of the weaker against the strong, against civilization and even against nature (cited by A. Y. Collins 1984, 169). Lawrence's evaluation of the Revelation is typical of his outlook on life, but it is disturbing that Christian exegetes should adopt such a view. Collins considers that John sought to overcome the tension between reality and faith, what is and what ought to be. Faith* includes that God is ruler of all, Jesus is King of kings and Lord of all and that in the messianic kingdom all Christians will rule with him. The reality is the power of Rome and the powerlessness of Christians, their fear of denunciation before Roman authorities, their recollection of Nero's persecution, the destruction of Jerusalem and the banishment of John. This led to aggressive feelings of envy of the wealthy, frustration about the emperor cult and desire for vengeance for the violent acts of the empire. But these violent images were transferred to God and Christ in the Revelation; hence Jesus will make war with the sword of his mouth against followers of Balaam, Nicolaitans and Jezebel ("fellow Christians"!) as well as the generals and rich and strong (Rev 6:15-17) and the armies that follow antichrist (Rev 19:21; see A. Y. Collins 1984, 156-57).

Much more is written in this vein, which requires more space to answer than is possible here. A few points, however, need to be made. If it be a question of realism, John the prophet has it. The followers of Balaam, the Nicolaitans and Jezebel are not broadminded Christians but those affected by the antinomianism of emerging Gnostics,* and their influence had to be opposed. The hostility to the emperor cult is inevitable in any generation, and use of the cartoons derived from the ancient Middle East religions is justified. Regarding the violence in applying the latter, it is essential to recall the tradition of hyperbole used by the OT prophets. An outstanding example is seen in Zephaniah's language. In Zephaniah 1:2-6 the judgments of God are described in terms that involve the destruction of all living creatures on the Day of the Lord. That language is repeated in Zephaniah 3:8.

"In the fire of my passion all the earth shall be consumed."

This is immediately followed by Zephaniah 3:9:

"At that time I will change the speech of the peoples to a pure speech, that all of them may call on the name of the Lord and serve him with one accord."

Such contradiction of utterance cannot be taken literally, but the judgment and salvation of the Jews and Gentiles* is seriously meant, as the rest of the book makes plain. The like holds good in the Revelation, as Revelation 11:10 and Revelation 15:3-4, the survival of earth's inhabitants in the millennium, Revelation 20:4-6, and the kings of the earth bringing their gifts into the new Jerusalem (Rev 21:24-27) indicate. The picture of the city of God in Revelation 21:9—22:5 goes far beyond abating alleged anger and envy of Christians; its ultimate motive is to reveal the fulfillment of God's purpose for his creation in a redeemed humanity in fellowship* with himself. In declaring this revelation the prophet John was truly led by the spirit (Rev 19:10). The church today will do well to give heed to the appeal that appears in every one of the letters to the seven churches: "Let anyone who has an ear listen to what the spirit is saying to the churches."

9. The Revelation in the Earliest Post-New Testament Writings.

A number of the apostolic fathers* indicate the influence of the book of Revelation in their works, though not all do so. *Didache, 1 Clement (see Clement of Rome), the letters of Ignatius* and the letter of Polycarp* to the Philippians show little or no reflection of the Revelation and are more concerned with the life of the church, its order (see Church Order) and worship. The conclusion of the Didache (Did. 16) has an "apocalyptic postscript," but it clearly echoes the eschatological discourse of the Gospels (Mark 13 par.) rather than the Revelation. The *Epistle of Barnabas adopts the interpretation of creation in six days as a figure of the cosmic week of history: the latter lasts for six thousand years and is followed by the sabbath rest of the kingdom of God (Barn. 15). This could well be one of the traditions that contributed to John's picture of the millennium. It is also found in 2 Enoch 33, a book possibly of the same period as the Revelation.

The Visions of the *Shepherd of Hermas are also in the apocalyptic tradition. They concern the life of the church and are therefore close to the Revelation. The like may be said of the Similitudes of Hermas, especially in the prominence given to angels, who are represented as responsible for creation, and a good and an evil angel are set over people (Herm. Man. 6.2.1; Herm. Vis. 3.4.1).

Papias above all was enthusiastic about the millennium.* His famous statement relating to the extraordinary fruitfulness of the earth in that time is attributed to "the Lord" as made known by "presbyters who saw John." Vineyards will have "ten thousand vines, and each vine ten thousand branches, and each branch ten thousand shoots, and on every shoot will be ten thousand clusters, and in every cluster ten thousand grapes, and every grape when pressed will yield twenty-five measures of wine." Such growth will apply to wheat grains, fruit trees, seeds and herbs, and animals who eat them will be peaceable to each other and to man (reported by Irenaeus Haer. 5.33.3-4). A related but less extravagant statement is found in 1 Enoch 10:19.

L. Gry suggested that Papias's concept of the millennium was gained from the followers of Aristion and the elder John. It is evident that Papias's ideas were widespread in the church of his time and led to the endeavor of Dionysius to diminish the influence of the Revelation. Nevertheless, the millennial interpretation of Revelation 20 was firmly held by Justin Martyr, Irenaeus, Hippolytus and Victorinus. Origen, however, was "the vehement opponent of millenarianism" (Beckwith, 323). Tyconius in his commentary followed in Origen's steps, and Augustine buried chiliasm by his doctrine of the millennium as the age of the church. Needless to say, the doctrine of the earthly kingdom of Christ has been resurrected in later centuries and espoused by many interpreters.

See also ANTICHRIST; APOCALYPTIC, APOCALYPTICISM; BABYLON; BEASTS, DRAGON, SEA, CONFLICT MOTIF; BOWLS; CHRISTOLOGY; ESCHATOLOGY; HEAVEN, NEW HEAVEN; JERUSALEM, ZION, HOLY CITY; JUDGMENT; LAMB; LITURGICAL ELEMENTS; MARTYRDOM; MILLENNIUM; OLD TESTAMENT IN REVELATION; PAROUSIA; PERSECUTION; PROPHECY, PROPHETS, FALSE PROPHETS; SCROLLS, SEALS; TRUMPETS; VISIONS, ECSTATIC EXPERIENCE; WORSHIP AND LITURGY; WRATH, DESTRUCTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. Commentaries: D. E. Aune, Revelation (WBC; Dallas: Word, 1997); G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation (rev. ed.; NCB; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); I. T. Beckwith, The Apocalypse of John (New York: Macmillan, 1919); M. E. Boring, Revelation (IntC; Louisville, KY: John Knox, 1989); G. B. Caird, The Revelation of St. John the Divine (HNTC; New York: Harper & Row, 1966); R. H. Charles, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Revelation of St. John (2 vols.; ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1920); J. M. Ford, Revelation (AB; New York: Doubleday, 1975); W. J. Harrington, Revelation (SacP 16; Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1993); M. Kiddle, The Revelation of St. John (MNTC; New York: Harper, 1940); G. E. Ladd, A Commentary on the Revelation of John (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1972); H. Lilje, The Last Book of the Bible (Philadelphia: Muhlenberg, 1957); E. Lohmeyer, Die Offenbarung des Johannes (2d ed.; HNT; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1953); E. Lohse, Die Offenbarung des Johannes (NTD; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1960); L. Morris, The Revelation of St. John (2d ed.; TNTC; Leicester: Inter-Varsity Press, 1987); R. H. Mounce, The Book of Revelation (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977); A. Schlatter, Die Briefe und Offenbarung des Johannes (Stuttgart: Calver Verlag, 1938); E. F. Scott, The Book of Revelation (London: SCM, 1939); J. P. M. Sweet, Revelation (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1979); H. B. Swete, Commentary on the Book of Revelation (3d ed.; London: Macmillan, 1909). Studies: D. E. Aune, "The Apocalypse of John and the Problem of Genre," Semeia 36 (1986) 65-96; R. J. Bauckham, The Climax of Prophecy (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1994); idem, The Theology of the Book of Revelation (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993); G. R. Beasley-Murray, John (WBC; Dallas: Word, 1986); J. G. Bowman, "The Revelation of John: Its Dramatic Structure and Message," Int 9 (1955) 436-53; R. Bultmann, Gospel of John (Oxford: Blackwell, 1971); idem, Theology of the New Testament (New York: Scribners, 1951, 1955); A. Y. Collins, The Apocalypse (Wilmington, DE: Michael Glazier, 1979); idem, The Combat Myth in the Book of Revelation (HDR 9; Missoula, MT: Scholars Press, 1976); idem, Crisis and Catharsis: The Power of the Apocalypse (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1984); J. J. Collins, The Apocalyptic Imagination (New York: Crossroad, 1984); J. Comblin, Le Christ dans l'Apocalypse (Paris: Desclée, 1976); J. M. Court, Myth and History in the Book of Revelation (Atlanta: John Knox, 1979); A. Culpepper, The Johannine School: An Evaluation of the Johannine School Hypothesis Based on an Investigation of the Nature of Ancient Schools (SBLDS 26; Missoula, MT: Scholars Press, 1975); A. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1978 [repr.]); A. M. Farrer, A Rebirth of Images (Westminster: Dacre, 1949); A. Feuillet, The Apocalypse (Staten Island, NY: Alba House, 1965); L. Gry, "Henoch X,19 et les belles promesses de Papias," RB 53 (1946) 197-206; P. D. Hanson, The Dawn of Apocalyptic (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1979); C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in Their Local Setting (Sheffield: JSOT, 1986); T. Holtz, Die Christologie der Apokalypse des Johannes (TU 85; Berlin: Akademie Verlag, 1962); W. G. Kümmel, Introduction to the New Testament (Nashville: Abingdon, 1975); F. D. Mazzaferri, The Genre of the Book of Revelation from a Source-Critical Perspective (BZNW 54; Berlin and New York: Walter de Gruyter, 1989); M. Rissi, The Future of the World: An Exegetical Study of Revelation 19:11—22:15 (SBT 2d ser.; London: SCM, 1972); idem, Time and History (Richmond, VA: John Knox, 1966); C. C. Rowland, The Open Heaven (New York: Crossroad, 1982); E. Schüssler Fiorenza, The Book of Revelation: Justice and Judgment (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); M. H. Shepherd, The Pas- chal Liturgy and the Apocalypse (Richmond, VA: John Knox, 1960); L. L. Thompson, The Book of Revelation: Apocalypse and Empire (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1990); C. C. Torrey, Documents of the Primitive Church (New York and London: Harper, 1941).

G. R. Beasley-Murray

REVERENCE. See FEAR.

REWARDS

A reward may be defined as a benefit promised or given in response to fulfilling a specified requirement. Spiritual blessings* as well as material ones may be included, for while biblical writers seldom use the specific term for blessings such as fellowship* with God,* they are "an aspect of the New Testament concept of reward, and a fundamental one" (Reicke). Such rewards therefore have great power* to motivate biblically mandated actions, positively through the hope* of enjoying them and negatively through the threat of their loss. Thus both Jesus and Paul offer rewards to encourage needed changes in the lifestyles of their hearers (e.g., Mt 10:42; Lk 6:35; 1 Cor 3:12-15; 9:24-27; Col 3:22-24). Material benefits are limited to this age (Lk 18:29-30). Spiritual blessings, however, are both present and future, though their enjoyment in the age to come will be greater (1 Jn 3:2; 1 Cor 13:12-13). This same understanding of rewards is carried on in the remainder of the NT and with some modification into the writings of the apostolic fathers.* Like the teachings* of Jesus and Paul, here the prospect of rewards is used to motivate the readers to turn from sinful (see Sin) ways and to live holy (see Holy, Holiness) lives. (For a response to the objections that such an appeal to self-interest might raise see DPL, Rewards.) In the apostolic fathers, however, a new note is sounded with the teaching that rewards can be earned or merited.

1. The General Epistles
2. Revelation
3. The Apostolic Fathers

1. The General Epistles.

1.1. Hebrews. Hebrews 10:35-36 (see Hebrews) provides the key to the author's understanding of rewards: "Do not throw away your trust in God, which has a great reward. For you need to persevere so that you keep on doing the will of God and thus receive what is promised." The rewards enjoyed by the readers therefore consist of all that God has promised to do for those who persevere in trusting him (Heb 11:6; see Endurance). And while the full realization of these promises* awaits the age to come, to "share in Christ" (Heb 3:14) in this age is a great reward.

Though initially bold in enduring persecution* (Heb 10:32-34), in the face of a renewed threat the readers appear to be leaning toward a reversion to Judaism,* a protected religion in the empire (see Roman Empire). But this means a rejection of Christ, who is vastly superior to and has now superseded the OT cult. For them to turn their backs on Christ would be to call down the most dire consequences (Heb 10:28-31).

Thus powerful incentives are given to persuade the readers to continue cleaving to Christ even in the face of persecution. Though there is some mention of material gain—sons and land* (Heb 11:8, 11-12)—the emphasis is on the unsurpassed benefits of salvation*: deliverance from the fear* of death, forgiveness* of sins, having a faithful helper in times of temptation* (Heb 2:15-18); having God always with them so that they have no need to fear (Heb 13:5-6); complete equipping to do God's will (Heb 13:20-21). With Jesus as their model in perseverance they are to keep their eyes on him (Heb 12:2), who was able to endure even the terrible suffering* of the cross* because of the joys* that awaited him. The wonders of God's promises should therefore similarly strengthen the readers if they are called to further suffering. They should also be strongly motivated by stern warnings of the fearful consequences of failure to trust Christ: unless the readers' downward slide is arrested, they are in danger of forfeiting the blessings of salvation (Heb 2:2-3); only if they hold fast to their courage are they members of God's household* (Heb 3:6); only if they hold their first confidence firm unto the end will they share in Christ (Heb 3:14; also 4:1; 6:4-6, 11; 12:14, 25).

At the outset such threats might seem to remove any assurance* of being able to persevere unto the end. But because the threats are directed against unbelief, they serve as one of God's means to keep believers trusting in him (Heb 4:1-2). Being forced to consider the fearful alternative to persevering in faith* serves as an incentive to fight diligently against unbelief and thus to be assured of enjoying the blessings of God both in this life* and the next.

1.2. James. A specific reward borrowed from the Greek world is the "crown of life" (Jas 1:12; see James). As a wreath, or crown, of leaves was awarded to winners of the athletic contests, so God will award his crown of eternal life to those who have persevered in trusting and loving him in the face of trials. Allusion is also made to present blessings that faith in God brings: wisdom* (Jas 1:5; 3:17), forgiveness of sins (Jas 4:8-10; 5:15); victory over the devil (Jas 4:7; see Satan); friendship with God (Jas 1:18; 4:8).

Unlike Hebrews, where persecution was in view, here the test that must be steadfastly withstood is "all kinds" of trials and temptations (Jas 1:2). The author's goal therefore is to encourage his readers to persevere in faith so that they become mature and complete in God's sight, not deficient in any way (Jas 1:4).

To be genuine, faith must express itself in actions, and James, therefore, admonishes his readers to comply with many commands. He reinforces them with both reminders of the great advantages of commitment to the messianic faith and warnings of what failure to act in line with that faith will mean. Among the advantages of steadfastly trusting and obeying God is the inheritance of the riches* of his kingdom* and his blessing on all the readers' activities (Jas 2:5; 1:25). Material as well as spiritual bounties are in view, for God is the giver of every good gift. Warnings also abound against actions that betray a lack of trust: do not just listen to God's commands; do them, for this shows you are trusting him to guide you (Jas 1:22). Do not neglect the care of widows and orphans, for unless your faith in God's provision of your needs is sufficient to cause you to care for the needs of others, it is dead (Jas 1:27; 2:14-26). Do not presume to plan your life on your own; only God knows the future (Jas 4:13-15). Do not grumble and complain, for this shows you do not believe that your present lot is God's wise and gracious way of looking out for you (Jas 5:9). Along with these admonitions come assurances that God's wisdom and grace* is always available to those who humbly trust him, so that they, like Abraham,* will be called God's friends (Jas 2:22-24).

1.3. 1 Peter. The writer describes these benefits glowingly: a living hope and an imperishable inheritance (1 Pet 1:3-4); inexpressible and glorious joy (1 Pet 1:8). His readers are a chosen people, a royal priesthood,* God's precious possession (1 Pet 2:4-5, 9-10) whose sins have been forgiven through Christ's death on the cross (1 Pet 2:24). Tangible recognition is also in view in the promise that steadfast faith will receive praise, glory and honor at the revelation* of Jesus Christ (1 Pet 1:7). Visible too is the "crown of glory" promised to shepherds* (i.e., pastoral leaders) who faithfully care for their sheep (1 Pet 5:4).

The writer's concern is to stiffen his readers' resolve to stand firm in adversity by continuing to trust that God will soon bring great blessing (1 Pet 5:9-10). Though their painful trials are attributed to their being Christians (1 Pet 4:12-14, 16), these are less likely an officially sanctioned persecution than the sufferings that being different from the world inevitably involves.

The marvelous blessings promised are powerful incentives to the holy living enjoined by the writer. But perhaps even more effective is his warning to "live your lives in fear" (phobos, 1 Pet 1:17) so that the readers will not fail to set their hope fully on Christ and live solely to glorify God (1 Pet 1:13; 2:12). They are warned too that every deed will be judged by God, whose "face is against those who do evil" (1 Pet 1:17; 3:12). As further encouragement they are assured that the faith they must fight to maintain is of the greatest value in God's sight (1 Pet 1:7).

1.4. Conclusion. Thus God's rewards offer the strongest of incentives to persevere in faith, both by the promise of enjoying them and the threat of forfeiting them. Those who believe him take seriously the threats of what a failure to trust will mean—not only the loss of the blessings of salvation in this life but also in the next the fearful prospect of falling into the hands of the God who justly and severely punishes every unforgiven sin (Heb 2:2-3; 10:31), especially apostasy,* which at least hypothetically was the readers' chief peril (see Heb 6:9). These threats reinforce the motivating power inherent in the promised rewards. Allusion is made to material benefits as well as tangible recognition, but the emphasis is on spiritual blessings such as the forgiveness, fellowship and imperishable inheritance that are promised to those whose faith is steadfast. Though this faith must result in appropriate actions (Jas 2:14-26), these are never works in which the readers could boast (see Faith and Works), for what motivates them is the firm belief that God will keep his promises and will honor their faith with his blessings. Thus because they so greatly desire to enjoy these benefits (e.g., Heb 11:8-10; 24-27), they are to bend every effort to make their calling and election* sure (2 Pet 1:4-11) by firmly resisting Satan's efforts to destroy their faith (1 Pet 5:8-9). This faith is not in their own abilities to persevere but in the "God of all grace," who promises to keep them from succumbing to unbelief in this life and to bring them without fault into the next, there to enjoy to the full his rewards (Jude 24).

2. Revelation.

With one exception—being kept in the hour of trial (Rev 3:10)— the rewards proffered are all heaven-oriented and astonishing in their richness: the right to eat of the tree of life and of hidden manna (Rev 2:7, 17); being given the crown of life, a new name* and the morning star (Rev 2:10, 17, 28); being acknowledged by God and seeing his face (Rev 3:5); the right to sit with Jesus on his throne (Rev 3:21); the end of all tears and pain (Rev 21:3). Tangible recognition is also in view, for the deeds of the dead are said to follow them (Rev 14:13), and Jesus declares that each will receive according to his or her works (Rev 2:33). But whatever form this may take, it is clear that such recognition is given only that it may in some way reflect and honor the power and glory of God.

As a prediction of events leading to the establishment of the new heavens* and earth, Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) speaks in ultimate terms. The condition for the enjoyment of the blessings is "overcoming" present hindrances to faith (Rev 2:7, 17, 26; 3:5, 12, 21). This includes refusing either to allow one's initial, fervent love for Jesus to waver for any length of time or to condone false teaching and immorality (see Purity). And because eternity is at stake, the punishments that await those who fail to persevere are likewise eternal: being forced to drink the wine of God's fury as they suffer forever in the lake of fire (Rev 14:9-12; 20:15; 21:8).

Here the motivating power both of rewards and punishments is seen at its highest. Only two eternal futures lie before humankind: to be forever with the Lord, enjoying the unimaginable delights of life with him, or being tormented in the lake of fire. With issues of such great consequence in view the incentive to persevere in faith, though it entails great suffering and even martyrdom,* could scarcely be stronger.

As the culmination of NT teaching the ultimate nature of God's rewards and his punishments stand as awesome means to motivate believers to the firmness in faith essential for the enjoyment of his blessings.

3. The Apostolic Fathers.

The fullest treatment of rewards is found in 1 Clement and 2 Clement, where the writer(s) (see Clement of Rome) make explicit the NT's implicit equating of spiritual blessings with rewards: an inheritance of glory and honor, being confessed by Christ and the joys of eternal life (1 Clem. 45.7; 2 Clem. 3.2-3; 8.4). This understanding of rewards is found throughout the apostolic fathers, as is the condition for receiving them: perseverance in suffering and a holy, righteous life (1 Clem. 5.2-7; 2 Clem. 5.6; Pol. Phil. 5.2; Herm. Vis. 5.7). What awaits the disobedient (see Obedience) is seen both as torture in unquenchable fire (2 Clem. 17.7) and a double punishment that culminates in eternal death (Herm. Sim. 9.18.2).

As in the NT, rewards play a crucial role in motivating righteous living. But a new note appears in the teaching that believers can earn blessings from God, both by their repentance* and by turning others to him (2 Clem. 9.7-8; 15.1-2). Similarly Ignatius,* in response to the Smyrneans' love for him and loyalty to the bishop, assures them that "God is your reward," not misthos but amoibē, implying "repayment or return" (Ign. Smyrn. 9.2). Drawing on a Roman custom in the military, he writes to Polycarp,* "Let your works be your deposits that you may receive the back-pay due you" (Ign. Pol. 6.2). The *Didache and the *Epistle of Barnabas warn against reluctant giving, because "thou shalt know who is the good Paymaster of the reward" (Did. 4.7; Barn. 19.11). And of the martyrs it is said that by a single hour of despising worldly tortures they purchased eternal life (Mart. Pol. 2.3). A belief that rewards can be earned or merited leads to the teaching that even greater benefits result from works of supererogation, or going beyond what is commanded (Herm. Sim. 5.2.1—3.3).

In the apostolic fathers rewards appear in a new light. Though still understood primarily as spiritual blessings, they are also seen as benefits that are earned. And this opens the door to the self-sufficiency so firmly denounced by the NT.

See also BLESSING; ESCHATOLOGY; GLORY; HOPE; JUDGMENT; MARTYRDOM; SUFFERING.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. Boettger and B. Siede, "Recompense," in NIDNTT 3:134-144; R. Bultmann, "ἐλπίς κτλ," TDNT 2:517-33; R. M. Fuller, "A Pauline Understanding of Rewards" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Fuller Theological Seminary, 1990); W. Grundmann, "στέφανος κτλ," TDNT 7:615-36; H. Kraft, "στέφανος κτλ," EDNT 3:273-74; C. S. Lewis, The Weight of Glory (New York: Macmillan, 1949); W. Pesch, "μισθός," EDNT 2:432-33; J. Piper, Desiring God (Portland: Multnomah, 1986); H. Preisker, "μισθός κτλ," TDNT 4:695-728; B. Reicke, "The New Testament Conception of Reward" in Aux sources de la tradition chrétienne (Neuchâtel: Delachaux & Niestlé, 1950), 195-206; W. Telfer, The Forgiveness of Sins (London: SCM, 1959); T. F. Torrance, The Doctrine of Grace in the Apostolic Fathers (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1959).

R. M. Fuller

RHETORIC, RHETORICAL CRITICISM

The rhetorical criticism of the General Epistles and apostolic fathers* is still in its infancy. Most works have appeared only during the 1980s and 1990s. Current practitioners are using a variety of methodologies based on Greco-Roman rhetoric, modern rhetoric or both. Much is being discovered about the argumentation, arrangement and style of these books. Our understanding of the interplay of their rhetorical and historical contexts, authors, audiences and purposes is increasing.

Although rhetorical criticism of the General Epistles and apostolic fathers has begun, it will take time for synthesis of the rhetorical studies of each work to emerge. This is especially true of the works of the apostolic fathers, which have undergone little rhetorical analysis. Thus the major rhetorical analyses of each work can be discussed, but no definitive rhetorical analysis can be offered. However, these books are involved in the emerging discussion of the distinctives of Christian, Jewish and Greco-Roman rhetoric, as well as social-scientific study of the NT.

1. The Practice of Rhetorical Criticism
2. Rhetorical Criticism of Hebrews, the General Epistles and Revelation
3. Rhetorical Criticism of the Apostolic Fathers

1. The Practice of Rhetorical Criticism.

Rhetorical criticism of the NT and apostolic fathers has used the Greco-Roman rhetorical conventions and more modern rhetoric and related literary criticism. The former has the advantage of placing these works in their oral and written culture, while the latter helps these texts to function in addressing modern audiences and their concerns.

1.1. Using Greco-Roman Rhetoric. Rhetorical analysis of the General Epistles and apostolic fathers has often concentrated on the use of Greco-Roman rhetoric, with the methodology of George Kennedy being prominent. Kennedy proposed the following five-step methodology: determine the rhetorical unit; define the rhetorical situation; determine the rhetorical problem or stasis and the species of rhetoric; analyze invention, arrangement and style; and evaluate the rhetorical effectiveness. To understand this methodology and its current application, a brief overview of Greco-Roman rhetoric is necessary.

There are three main species of rhetoric: judicial, deliberative and epideictic. Their use is determined by the audience and the context. Judicial rhetoric is concerned with accusation and defense, usually in a legal setting. It stresses what is just or unjust. Deliberative rhetoric is advice giving, persuasion and dissuasion, usually in the political arena. It emphasizes what is advantageous or harmful. Epideictic rhetoric praises and blames, and concerns itself with what is honorable or the dishonorable with a view to increasing or decreasing assent to values. In a NT book one species of rhetoric typically predominates while the other two are supportive.

The stasis is the basis of the conflict addressed. There are three stases: fact, definition and quality. The stasis of fact involves whether something was done or whether it was done by the person accused. The stasis of definition admits the facts but denies that they have been defined correctly. The stasis of quality admits the facts but denies any wrong was committed. It also inquires into the nature of something, a function it frequently has in the NT.

Invention, arrangement and style are employed to compose the speech or document. Invention is the creation of convincing proofs. These can be either created or found by the rhetor. Those proofs not found by the rhetor include previous judgments or documents, which in the NT are usually eyewitness testimony and quotations of the OT. Those proofs created by the rhetor are ethos, pathos and logos. Ethos is the moral character of the rhetor, which is demonstrated in the discourse. Pathos is the arousal of the audience's emotion for the position of the rhetor and against the position of any opponent. Logos is reason from induction and deduction, proof from example and argument respectively. Examples used in the NT are often drawn from the OT, Jewish tradition and nature. Rather than the formal syllogism, arguments used in the NT often take the form of an enthymeme, a proposition with one supporting reason. Argumentation makes use of topics, some common to many types of argumentation (e.g., possible-impossible). In addition detailed schemes for elaborating themes and complete arguments are used in proof.

Arrangement is the persuasive ordering of the discourse. It requires an exordium, an introduction that strives to make the audience attentive, well-disposed and receptive to the message. This was often followed by a narratio, a narration of pertinent facts, and a partitio, an enumeration of the propositions to be discussed. The body of the discourse, the probatio (sometimes called argumentatio or confirmatio), follows and presents the argumentation. It both proves the rhetor's case (confirmatio) and disproves the case of any opposition (refutatio, sometimes called confutatio). It concludes with a peroratio, a recapitulation of the main points and an appeal to the audience's emotion in order to facilitate a desired response.

Style is presenting a discourse in language appropriate and expedient to the subject, audience and situation addressed and promoting the desired persuasive effect. Prominent in the discussion of style were figures of speech and thought. Important for the NT are repetition, hyperbole, paronomasia, metaphor, antithesis, irony and personification.

Greco-Roman rhetorical conventions had been incorporated in part into Jewish rhetorical practice by the Christian era. Within Hellenistic culture rhetoric was central to secondary education. Even if a NT writer had not been formally educated, rhetorical practice was everywhere and its forms would have been familiar. Much of Jewish and Greco-Roman rhetorical practice was shaped by the needs oral culture. Most people were illiterate and could only hear the message, and the forms devised to facilitate that hearing were well recognized (e.g., repetition and parallelism).

1.2. Using Modern Rhetoric. Many forms of modern rhetoric are used for rhetorical analysis. These include the new rhetoric of C. Perelman and L. Olbrechts-Tyteca (ancient rhetoric reconceptualized), Continental theories of literary rhetoric and American rhetoric within social-science hermeneutics. Modern rhetoric is also used in combination with other related methodologies, including literary criticism, reader-response criticism and discourse analysis. The position is that Greco-Roman rhetoric, while it is historically anchored in the NT era, does not address all theoretical, practical or philosophical questions posed by speech.

2. Rhetorical Criticism of Hebrews, the General Epistles and Revelation.

2.1. Hebrews. Greco-Roman and Jewish rhetorical features in Hebrews* are so prevalent that David E. Aune can state, "The author obviously enjoyed the benefits of a Hellenistic rhetorical education through the tertiary level" (212). For example, the comparative argument from the lesser to the greater (argumentum e minori ad maius/qal wahomer, "light and heavy") is common in Hebrews. There are many studies of particular rhetorical features such as antithesis and chiasm in Hebrews. Notable is M. R. Cosby's study that shows how the example list in Hebrews 11:3-40 provides the readers with famous examples illustrating the enduring faith* encouraged in Hebrews 10:19-39 and defined in Hebrews 11:1-2.

In spite of obvious rhetorical features, the genre, the overall rhetorical strategy and the social matrix of the Hebrews are elusive. Regarding genre, Hebrews calls itself a "word of exhortation" (logos paraklēseōs, Heb 13:22), a designation also used of Paul's sermon in Acts 13:15. L. Wills argues that Hebrews is a sermon or homily that in both individual units and larger cycles exhibits a threefold pattern of Hellenistic-Jewish and early Christian sermonic material: the presentation of biblical examples and authoritative exposition of theological points; a conclusion based on the examples, which indicates their significance to those addressed; and exhortation based on the conclusion (e.g., Heb 3:1—4:16; 8:1—10:25). In response C. C. Black states that the features noted by Wills are to be placed in the Greco-Roman rhetorical tradition. Many of these we will now explore.

Barnabas Lindars classifies Hebrews as deliberative rhetoric. It seeks to persuade a Jewish-Christian* audience, driven by a guilty conscience* due to sin, to return to the apostolic faith after it turned to Judaism* for purification. W. Übelacker agrees that Hebrews is deliberative rhetoric. It seeks to persuade the audience to accept Jesus' sacrifice* as sufficient to provide access to God.* He outlines Hebrews as exordium (Heb 1:1-4), narratio (Heb 1:5—2:18, with 2:17-18 as the propositio), argumentatio with probatio and refutatio (Heb 3:1—12:29), peroratio (Heb 13:1-21) and postscriptum (Heb 13:22-25). His work builds upon that of K. Nissilä, who analyzed the passages pertaining to the high priesthood* and devised a similar outline, also classifying Hebrews as deliberative rhetoric. However, the following developments make it more difficult to argue that Hebrews conforms to the standard Greco-Roman arrangement of a speech.

C. F. Evans explores the recurrent and dominant role in Hebrews of synkrisis, or comparison. This rhetorical form compares representatives of a type in order to determine the superiority of one over the other. It is a means of praise or blame by comparison and usually makes the comparison with people using the topics of family, natural endowments, upbringing and education, achievements and death. Through comparison, Hebrews shows Christ to be superior to angels,* the levitical priesthood and human worthies of salvation history. Synkrisis helps explain the christology* of Hebrews, in which the types of Christ are demoted or depreciated by comparison with Christ, the divine hero.

Also noting synkrisis in Hebrews, T. H. Olbricht classifies Hebrews as both epideictic and deliberative rhetoric and proposes that the book is modeled on the funeral orations of classical Greece and the early church fathers. Central to such orations was comparison of the deceased with illustrious personages of the past in order to prove the superior status of the deceased. In Hebrews the comparison of Christ with worthies of salvation history serves to amplify the argument as a whole. In each case the christological comparison is followed by exhortation to spiritual renewal based on the christology.

While rejecting the comparison with the funeral oration, T. W. Seid builds on Olbricht's observations on synkrisis. Rejecting the typical identification of Hebrews as a midrash or homily, Seid classifies Hebrews as a written speech of encomium belonging to the genre of synkrisis. The synkrisis alternates with exhortation (paraenesis) based on the synkrisis (as in Plutarch's Parallel Lives) for the purpose of moral exhortation. Such exhortation is found in encomia in the Greek protreptic tradition. The synkrisis/paraenesis alternation gives structure to the book: comparison of Son and angels (Heb 1:1-14) and paraenesis (Heb 2:1-18), comparison of Moses* and Christ (Heb 3:1-6) and paraenesis (Heb 3:7—4:16), comparison of Aaron and Christ (Heb 5:1-10) and paraenesis (Heb 5:11—6:20), comparison of Melchizedek* and Christ and the levitical priesthood (Heb 7:1-25) and paraenesis (Heb 7:26—8:3), comparison of the first covenant* and the new covenant (Heb 8:4—10:18) and paraenesis (Heb 10:19—12:29), and epistolary appendix (Heb 13:1-25). This alternation shows the superiority of Christ over the elements of the first covenant. It encourages the audience to progress in moral conduct by remaining faithful to the greater revelation* in Jesus Christ and emulating the models of its scripture. It also warns the audience of the greater judgment* to befall those unfaithful to the greater revelation.

2.2. James. Commentators have long noted the seemingly chaotic nature of James,* often attributing it to its paraenetic content. Usually paraenesis is viewed as unstructured exhortation strung like pearls. However, paraenesis can be an integral part of a rhetorically sophisticated text. Consensus is emerging that James is a thematic and rhetorical unity, even though there is disagreement on how to describe this unity.

W. H. Wuellner outlines James as epistolary prescript (Jas 1:1), exordium (Jas 1:2-4), narratio (Jas 1:5-11), propositio (Jas 1:12), argumentatio (Jas 1:13—5:6) in five units and peroratio (Jas 5:7-20). Modifying the work of Wuellner, E. Baasland classifies James as a protreptic, wisdom* speech in letter* form. He gives the outline of exordium (Jas 1:2-18), transitus (Jas 1:16-18), propositio (Jas 1:19-27), confirmatio (Jas 2:1--3:12), confutatio (Jas 3:13—5:6) and peroratio (Jas 5:7-20). The figures of style used in James are numerous and serve to clarify and amplify the argumentation.

Also building upon the work of Wuellner, J. H. Elliott uses rhetorical and social-scientific study to affirm the thematic cohesion of James. He outlines James as an introduction (Jas 1:1-12) composed of epistolary address and salutation (Jas 1:1-2), statement of the main theme concerning completeness and wholeness and its implied opposite of division and fragmentation (Jas 1:3-4), and related contrasts (Jas 1:5-12). The body of the argument (Jas 1:13—5:12) consists of exhortation in seven subsections contrasting negative indictments of division with positive recommendations for integrity and wholeness. James concludes with material echoing the introduction (Jas 5:13-20). Central is encouragement to reestablish the distinctive Christian ethos over against society at large. This is done by choosing heavenly versus earthly wisdom (Jas 3:13-18) and observing distinctions of purity* versus pollution (Jas 1:26-27). This choice ultimately leads to wholeness and holiness* rather than division and the devilish on the correlated personal, social and cosmic levels.

L. Thurén claims that James is epideictic rhetoric, reinforcing values the audience already holds. He analyzes the rhetoric of the entire letter according to Greco-Roman categories. The exordium (Jas 1:1-18) introduces the two central themes of perseverance* in trials in the practical areas of wisdom/speech and money/action. The propositio (Jas 1:19-27) is to accept the word and live by it. The argumentatio (Jas 2:1—5:6) develops the two themes of the exordium in three parts: James 2:1-26 on action and money, James 3:1—4:12 on speech and wisdom, and James 4:13—5:6 supplying a climax dealing with both themes focused on the rich man. The peroratio (Jas 5:7-20) consists of recapitulatio, or reiteration of the theme of perseverance in speech (Jas 5:7-11), and conquestio, or final exhortation (Jas 5:12-20). Thurén explains the obscurity of the surface level of the letter as the use of insinuatio or subtlety in rhetorical approach to avoid being too obvious to a rhetorically sophisticated audience. However, it is more likely that James does not conform to Greco-Roman standards in its overall arrangement.

D. F. Watson demonstrates that the central portion of James is deliberative rhetoric aimed at advising the audience to take certain courses of action and dissuade it from others. It contains three sections that use the Greco-Roman pattern of elaboration for themes and the complete argument. In these sections James advises his audience that partiality is inconsistent with faith (Jas 2:1-13), faith without works does not profit (Jas 2:14-26; see Faith and Works), and not many should become teachers (Jas 3:1-12). The pattern used to elaborate each of these propositions into complete arguments is propositio (proposition), ratio (reason for the proposition), confirmatio (proof of the reason by comparison, example and amplification), exornatio (embellishment of the argument) and conplexio (conclusion drawing the argument together). Paraenetic materials and diatribal features are incorporated into this pattern of argumentation.

2.3. 1 Peter. 1 Peter* is addressed to churches in Asia Minor undergoing local persecution.* Thurén classifies 1 Peter as epideictic rhetoric intended to reinforce the audience's adherence to values it already holds. He uses ancient and modern rhetoric to determine the function of ambiguous expressions in 1 Peter, such as whether the participles are indicative (encouraging) or imperative (exhorting). This ambiguity allows the author to address simultaneously two different groups in the audience and their individual response to suffering*: those passively assimilating to the world* to avoid suffering* and those actively avenging injustice and incurring more suffering. To the first group the author directs a critique of unacceptable portions of pagan culture to help them avoid undue assimilation. To the second group he upholds acceptable portions of pagan culture to help increase such assimilation. Ambiguous expressions allow each group to hear the letter differently according to its predisposition. Thurén outlines the letter as exordium (1 Pet 1:1-12); argumentatio aimed mainly at the passive audience (1 Pet 1:13—2:10), the active audience (1 Pet 2:11—3:12) and both audiences (1 Pet 3:13—5:7); and peroratio (1 Pet 5:8-14).

J. W. Thompson identifies 1 Peter as a sermon and analyzes it according to Greco-Roman rhetoric. As indicated in the conclusion (1 Pet 5:12), the letter is meant to exhort (parakaleō) and testify (epimartyreō). It is hortatory literature with a deliberative purpose of encouraging the audience to a certain course of action; that is, maintaining hope* and good works in spite of suffering (1 Pet 2:13-15, 20; 3:6, 17). Although it does not conform to the typical elements of rhetorical arrangement, 1 Peter 1:3-9 functions like an exordium, 1 Peter 1:10-12 like a narratio, 1 Peter 1:13—5:5 like a probatio and 1 Peter 5:6-11 like a peroratio. The subsections of the probatio are patterned as exhortation followed by justification for the prescribed conduct based on Scripture and the tradition of the community.

T. Martin discovered three distinctive clusters of metaphors in 1 Peter that describe the status of the audience and define three main sections: the elect* household* of God (1 Pet 1:14—2:10), the concept of aliens in this world (1 Pet 2:11—3:12) and sufferers in the Diaspora* (1 Pet 3:13—5:11). The Diaspora is the controlling metaphor that provides the thematic motif of 1 Peter. All the metaphors contribute to the author's objective of demonstrating conduct appropriate for the Christian eschatological* journey and dissuading the audience from defecting from the faith. In comparison P. J. Achtemeier sees "the Christian community as the new people of God constituted by the Christ who suffered and rose" as the controlling metaphor of 1 Peter. The author contrasts the audience's past in Greco-Roman social and religious life with their present life as the new people of God (see Church as Israel) and the suffering of their present with the greater glory* of the future. The argumentation and exhortation are based on the assurance that as long as the audience remains faithful, as the present transformed the past, so the future will transform the present and its suffering.

2.4. 2 Peter. 2 Peter* was probably written about A.D. 80-90 from Rome* to churches in Asia Minor in a time of eschatological crisis caused by the delay of the Parousia* of Christ. It seeks to counter the infiltration of these churches by false teachers whose solution to the crisis was denial of the Parousia (2 Pet 1:16-21; 3:1-4, 8-13) and the judgment expected to accompany it (2 Pet 2:3-10; 3:1-7), with immoral behavior resulting (2 Pet 2:10-22). Watson proposes that 2 Peter is mainly deliberative rhetoric intended to advise the churches to adhere to the promises* of Christ and the apostolic tradition and to dissuade them from accepting the teaching of the false teachers (see Adversaries). However, judicial rhetoric is used to refute the teachings of the false teachers and affirm the Parousia and judgment as eschatological realities (2 Pet 1:16—2:10; 3:1-13). Also, epideictic rhetoric is used to denounce the character of the false teachers (2 Pet 2:10-22). The stasis or basis of the argument is one of quality: determining the truth* of the apostolic doctrines of the Parousia and its judgment. The arrangement of the letter is epistolary prescript (2 Pet 1:1-2); exordium (2 Pet 1:3-15) upholding apostolic doctrine; probatio (2 Pet 1:16—3:13) refuting the doctrinal challenges of the false teachers and confirming apostolic doctrine; and peroratio (2 Pet 3:12—16) summing up key points and eliciting emotion. The style is complex and plays an important role in amplifying the refutation and denunciation. The letter gives us a glimpse into early Roman Christian apologetics and rhetorical approach to false teaching.

2.5. Jude. Jude* was probably written in A.D. 50s from Jerusalem* to Jewish Christian churches in Palestine. It addresses the problem of the infiltration by itinerant prophets* or teachers who denied the authority* of the law* of Moses and Christ and were sexually immoral (Jude 4, 6-8, 10, 16). Watson contends that Jude uses deliberative rhetoric to advise the churches to contend for the apostolic faith (Jude 3) and to dissuade them from following the teaching and practice of the false teachers. Jude works through a variety of proofs from example (Jude 5-10) and prophecy (Jude 11-13, 14-16, 17-19) to demonstrate that the false teachers are those prophesied as coming in the last days and that they will be judged for their sexual immorality and their rejection of authority. In order to destroy the authority of these teachers, Jude also uses epideictic rhetoric to denounce them as comparable to notorious sinners of the past and the subject of prophecies of judgment (Jude 4-13). The stasis or basis of the argumentation is quality, showing that the words and deeds of the false teachers are ungodly and subject to judgment.

Watson arranges Jude as epistolary prescript (Jude 1-2), exordium (Jude 3) using a petition giving the main reason for writing as contending for the apostolic faith, narratio (Jude 4) providing the need to contend for the faith as the infiltration of false teachers who are the ungodly of prophecy, probatio (Jude 5-16) proving that the false teachers are the ungodly of prophecy, peroratio (Jude 17-23) summing up key points and instructing the churches on how to respond to the crisis, and epistolary postscript as a doxology (Jude 24-25; see Liturgical Forms). Style plays an important role in proving the false teachers are ungodly, especially strong metaphors and triads. The letter gives us a glimpse into early Jewish Christian polemic and rhetorical approach to opponents.

S. J. Joubert, while apparently unaware of the work of Watson, reaches many of the same conclusions. He stresses the positive/negative presentation strategy of the letter: the positive presentation (laudatio) of the congregation as faithful to apostolic tradition and the negative presentation (vituperatio) of the opponents as intruders rejected by God. This presentation gives the faithful the opportunity to live within the image of themselves projected by the text and reject the opponents and their teachings. J. D. Charles adopts Watson's outline while discussing literary strategies in general. E. R. Wendland analyzes the discourse structure of Jude to find that the entire letter is an extended structural and thematic chiasm or introversion.

2.6. The Johannine Epistles. The Johannine Epistles (see John, Letters of) address a schism within the Johannine community caused by secessionists who were espousing a corrupt christology and becoming morally indifferent. They denied that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God, come in the flesh* and come by water and blood (1 Jn 2:22-23; 3:23; 4:2-3; 5:1, 5-6; 2 Jn 7). Minimizing the earthly ministry* of Jesus, they also minimized the moral walk that he modeled. They had formed their own community in opposition to those addressed by these epistles (1 Jn 2:18-19, 2 Jn 7).

Watson proposes that the author uses epideictic rhetoric to try to increase the adherence of the faithful to the traditional christology and ethics* of the Johannine community. The author upholds pursuing these as the honorable and beneficial course of action. The stasis or basis of 1 John is quality, for the author claims what is the best course of action and inquires into the nature of both the traditional and the aberrant christology and ethics. The exordium (1 Jn 1:1-4) affirms that the discourse is authoritative because its content derives from eyewitnesses of the revelation of the word of life. The probatio (1 Jn 1:5—5:12) upholds the teachings of the Johannine community and refutes those of the secessionists. As is typical of epideictic rhetoric, it abounds in propositions advanced as certain, antitheses, enthymemes and exhortation. Amplification of topics is a major part of the inventional strategy. The peroratio (1 Jn 5:13-21) enumerates points made and proposes policies to be pursued in light of them.

F. Vouga proposes that 1 John is deliberative rhetoric and has the following outline: epistolary prescript (1 Jn 1:1-4); exordium (captatio benevolentiae) (1 Jn 1:5—2:17), which gives the content of the revelation announced in the prescript; narratio (1 Jn 2:18-27) explaining the implications of the schism; propositio (1 Jn 2:28-29) concerning abiding in Christ; probatio (1 Jn 3:1-24) confirming the convictions of the exordium and interpreting the situation to show that the letter is justified; exhortatio (1 John 4:1-21) exhorting the churches to preserve the unity of the community; peroratio urging the maintenance of unity (1 Jn 5:1-12); and epistolary conclusion (1 Jn 5:13) and epistolary postscript (1 Jn 5:14-21). However, 1 John is not deliberative rhetoric because the churches addressed are faithful and do not need to be persuaded to a course of action.

The Presbyter wrote 2 John to further address the problem of secessionists, perhaps between A.D. 90-110. Watson proposes that he uses deliberative rhetoric to advise that the most beneficial course of action: to love* one another (2 Jn 5) and maintain the teachings of the community so as not to lose eternal life and fellowship* with the Father and the Son (2 Jn 8-9). To do otherwise is to share in the wicked deeds of the secessionists (2 Jn 11) and become antichrist* (2 Jn 7). The stasis of the argument is quality, for it is concerned with whether the christology of the secessionists is appropriate for the Christian life. The letter is arranged rhetorically as epistolary prescript (2 Jn. 1-3); exordium (2 Jn 4) giving the main topic as walking in the truth; narratio (2 Jn 5) petitioning the churches to adhere to the love commandment,* which embodies the proper understanding of christology and ethics; probatio (2 Jn 6-11) using exhortation and amplification to persuade the churches to adhere to the love commandment and not to extend the secessionists hospitality* or give them a hearing; peroratio (2 Jn 12) amplifying the importance of the message; and epistolary postscript (2 Jn 13).

The Presbyter wrote 3 John because a leader, Diotrephes, refused to receive missionaries and has ordered the members of his church to do the same (3 Jn 9-10). This refusal may be due to prideful rebellion (see Obedience; Pride) or an attempt to prevent the spread of secessionist influence. The Presbyter urges a Christian named Gaius to continue extending hospitality (3 Jn 3-8, 11-12). Watson proposes that 3 John is best classified as epideictic rhetoric of praise and blame. It commends Gaius for his hospitality and encourages him to continue to demonstrate it and accuses Diotrephes of refusal to extend hospitality and rebuffing the authority of the Presbyter. The stasis is quality, for it concerns the nature and necessity of hospitality. The letter is composed of an epistolary prescript (3 Jn 1); exordium (3 Jn 2-4) praising Gaius for walking in the truth; narratio (3 Jn 5-6) praising Gaius for hospitality and petitioning him to continue extending it; probatio (3 Jn 7-12) demonstrating the need for hospitality, amplifying Gaius's hospitality and denouncing the lack of the same by Diotrephes; peroratio (3 Jn 13-14) emphasizing the importance of the message; and epistolary postscript (3 Jn 15).

H.-J. Klauck qualifies the work of Vouga and Watson on the Johannine Epistles, arguing for the structural priority of the epistolary form. He questions the assumption that rhetorical invention and arrangement are found in the detail proposed for these letters.

2.7. Revelation. Reid shows that apocalyptic* literature relies upon contrasting metaphors, particularly the animalistic metaphors (e.g., Jesus as Lamb,* Satan* as serpent) and the light* and darkness metaphors (good and evil). Such literature is persuasive with people who are deeply dissatisfied with their present and whose future is uncertain. It explains their present distress as part of God's plan and reassures them that they are God's instruments in working out that plan, which is near to fulfillment. In its argumentation apocalyptic identifies a specific object of hatred and arouses fear while also giving the oppressed divine authority and purpose in working in God's service.*

S. D. O'Leary views the rhetoric of Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) as epochal discourse in which the systematic and symbolic division of historical time accords weight to events in history and mediates the relationship of past, present and future. Using dramatistic theory he proposes that the argument of Revelation is dramatic because it is placed within the cosmic drama depicted by the myth and symbolic universe it creates. Within the plot, the fate of the wicked is a tragic movement downward while the fate of the faithful is a comic movement upward. This drama helps the community deal with the apparent contradiction of salvation* and suffering and ultimately with death itself.

J. T. Kirby classifies Revelation as deliberative rhetoric. It is prophecy intended to persuade the seven churches to take a certain course of action in light of future events (Rev 1:1, 3) for its own advantage (Rev 22:11-12). Revelation 1:1-8 acts like a proem, while the vision* of Revelation 1:9-20 establishes the ethos of John as a prophet and elicits pathos (awe) from the churches. Each of the seven letters of Revelation 2-3 falls into four parts roughly corresponding to the proem, narration, proposition and epilogue. In the proem Jesus identifies himself and establishes his ethos for the pronouncements that follow. The narration is tailored to the nature of the individual churches addressed and forms the basis of the pronouncements and warnings of the proposition. Metaphor and paradox are the stylistic hallmarks of the narration and proposition. The epilogue is a promise promoting pathos in terms appealing to Christians undergoing persecution.

E. Schüssler Fiorenza proposes that Revelation is at once deliberative (call for decision), judicial (indictments and warnings) and epideictic (liturgical and hymnic) rhetoric. Regarding style, it uses sacred language and images from Jewish and Greco-Roman tradition to create the narrative symbolic universe in which the audience is to participate. Socioeconomic language and political-mythological imagery predominate because political and social issues predominate in the audience addressed. Regarding arrangement, the composition of Revelation is dramatic. It is unified by the appearance of key symbols and images throughout (e.g., Babylon*), preannouncements and cross-references, contrasts and numerical patterns. Interludes in which eschatological promises are clarified show the audience that the future gives meaning to their present and vice versa. Inter-calation, the ABA′ pattern (material sandwiched between two similar episodes or symbols), organizes smaller units and larger portions. Overall there is movement from promise to fulfillment.

Schüssler Fiorenza also describes how invention in Revelation functions. As a poetic work with symbolic language and images, Revelation evokes rather than defines meanings. It creates or organizes imaginative experience. The structure and strategy of Revelation and its function within a particular historical-rhetorical situation help the symbols and images make sense within a symbolic universe that invites participation. The rhetoric channels audience perceptions and emotions in an attempt to persuade it to change attitudes and motivations. Revelation seeks to fit a rhetorical situation—to clarify audience allegiances in a time of emperor* worship, social and economic ostracism, and even death. The audience is struggling with the seeming contradiction of participating in Christ's kingship and power* yet being persecuted by an empire challenging Christ as Lord.* It is struggling also with the temptation* of adaptation and acquiescence to political powers. Revelation encourages the audience to align itself with the heavenly world of God and to dissociate itself with the idolatry of the emperor cult backed by Satan. Using Jewish symbolic language it creates an alternative symbolic universe that gives meaning to the suffering of the community and individual death. It gives the audience a dramatic-cathartic journey that moves the audience to control its fear and sustain its vision.

3. Rhetorical Criticism of the Apostolic Fathers. Little study has been made of the rhetoric of the apostolic fathers. Further study of these works will yield important information about Christian rhetorical practice at the close of the first century and the beginning of the second century A.D., especially in its relationship to the rhetoric of the NT, Judaism and the Greco-Roman world. Among other things such study will reveal early Christian argumentative schemes and apologetic strategies. This in turn will reveal community values and assumptions that support such argumentation and ultimately our study of early Christianity in general.

3.1. 1 Clement. 1 Clement was written by Clement of Rome* to the church of Corinth around the turn of the first century A.D. The letter describes itself as one of counsel (symboulē, 1 Clem. 58.2), indicating that its rhetoric is deliberative. Using exhortation and warning, it is intended to persuade the Corinthians about what is beneficial and honorable and to dissuade them from what is harmful and dishonorable. The letter also describes itself as an appeal to peace* and concord or harmony (enteuxis . . . peri eirēnēs kai homonoias, 1 Clem. 63.2), a type of deliberative rhetoric necessitated by the uprising of younger men who have removed several presbyters from office and caused division in the church (1 Clem. 3; 44; 46.5-9; 47.5-7; see Church Order).

3.2. 2 Clement. Baasland argues that 2 Clement is a sermon. It is deliberative speech designed not to win outsiders but to strengthen the self-understanding of insiders (having the force of protreptic). It begins with an exordium (2 Clem. 1.1-2), providing the theme "Christ as God who suffered for our salvation" as the grounding for the exhortation to follow. The propositio (2 Clem. 1.3-5) poses questions that are answered in the body of the sermon: What service will we render to God in return? and What fruit is worthy to render? The body of the sermon (2 Clem. 1.6-18.2) answers these questions but not by using logical argumentation intended to elicit a judgment. Rather, the topics of gift/reward* and gift in turn/service in return, which are introduced in the exordium and propositio, are developed throughout the body, most particularly in 2 Clement 3.3; 9.5-11; 11.5-7; 15.1-2; and 19.1. The sermon concludes with a peroratio, summarizing this development (2 Clem. 19.1—20.5).

3.3. The Letters of Ignatius of Antioch. Ignatius,* bishop of Antioch,* wrote his seven letters approximately A.D. 100-118 to churches in Asia Minor and Rome while he was on his journey from Syria to Rome to face martyrdom.* These letters exhibit short cola (often in parallelism), rhythmic prose and such rhetorical figures as anaphora, homoeoteleuton, antithesis, metaphor, paronomasia and hyperbole (see Worship). This vigorous style has been attributed to the emotion of their epistolary situation. However, O. Perler more accurately identifies the style as Asian rhetoric common to Antioch of Syria and Asia Minor in the first and second centuries A.D. Asian rhetoric was a popular, exaggerated form of rhetoric that emphasized pathos (arousing emotion; see Melito of Sardis).

H. Riesenfeld adds that the sophistication in the subtleties of Asian rhetoric imply that Ignatius had a formal rhetorical education. He shows that the images and metaphors Ignatius uses are drawn from the Hellenistic rhetorical practice, such as a sailor waiting for fair wind or taking a storm-tossed vessel to the shelter of a harbor (Ign. Pol. 2.3).

D. L. Sullivan claims that the letters of Ignatius are epideictic rhetoric. They are intended to construct a social structure and maintain and increase the communities' adherence to its values. Ignatius helps the communities distinguish orthodoxy from the emerging heresies of judaizing and Docetism.* He does this using proofs from ethos, logos and pathos to create alter ego ideologies (images of what the community is not or what those outside the community are) and ego ideologies (images of what the community is). Alter ego ideology is created by forming negative images of the heterodox (ethos), exposing the falsity of their teaching (logos) and fostering a negative attitude toward them (pathos). However, the positive creation of ego ideology to foster community identity is the emphasis. Ignatius portrays the church as a dwelling place and a city and the leadership as hierarchial (Christ, bishop, clergy, laity) and worthy of imitation (ethos); describes the truth using semicreedal* passages and strong assertions of truth (logos); and enjoins the church to embrace certain attitudes and emotions (pathos).

3.4. Epistle to Diognetus. C. S. Wansink observes that the *Epistle to Diognetus is protreptic; that is, literature aimed at extolling the truth and virtue of a certain philosophy or school of thought as opposed to others in order to convince the uninitiated to embrace it. This obscure work with an unknown past is probably an exercise of a young Christian convert in catechetical school. It focuses on the use of protreptic, subordinating theology to the rhetorical forms. The rhetoric is highly stylized and comes from rhetorical training. Of note is the use of well-balanced sentence structure, antithesis, paronomasia, alliteration, chiasm and repetition.

3.5. Other Apostolic Fathers. The epistle of Polycarp* to the Philippians (second century A.D.) is comprised of a series of exhortations often supported by citation of the NT. The *Didache is a manual of church instruction, perhaps from the second century A.D. Both works exhibit Christian rhetoric that relies more on the ethos or authority of the author and citation of Scripture and church tradition than on example or logical argumentation. Neither their argumentation nor arrangement reflects Greco-Roman conventions typical of the speech.

The Martrydom of Polycarp was written from the church of Smyrna to the church of Philomelium about A.D. 155. A narrative of the martyrdom of Polycarp in terms of the passion of Christ, the letter upholds Polycarp and ultimately Christ for imitation* (Mart. Pol. 1.1-2; 17.3; 19.1; 22.1). The weaving of allusions to the passion of Christ into the narrative is a rhetorically sophisticated use of comparison and exemplification. The Epistle of Barnabas (see Barnabas, Epistle of) presents what the author feels is the correct understanding of the OT. It argues logically throughout with many enthymemes, a proposition with supporting reason. The reason is often a quotation of the OT. Rhetorical questions amplify the significance of individual points of an argument as well as move the argumentation along. The Shepherd of Hermas (see Hermas, Shepherd of) is not arranged according to Greco-Roman rhetorical convention but does exhibit some important rhetorical features. In all three main divisions (the Visions, Mandates and Similitudes) development depends upon Hermas and various interlocutors using rhetorical questions to develop the revelation or teaching. The Mandates are commandments that are carefully developed in much the same way as an ancient thesis or proposition, using examples and contraries. The Similitudes or parables use diverse imagery drawn from such things as comparison of two cities, trees, vineyards, shepherds,* mountains and a tower.

See also HERMENEUTICS; LETTERS, LETTER FORMS; NARRATIVE CRITICISM; STRUCTURALISM, DISCOURSE ANALYSIS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. P. J. Achtemeier, "Newborn Babes and Living Stones: Literal and Figurative in 1 Peter" in To Touch the Text: Biblical and Related Studies in Honor of Joseph A. Fitzmyer, S.J., ed. M. P. Horgan and P. J. Kobelski (New York: Crossroad, 1989) 207-36; D. E. Aune, The New Testament in Its Literary Environment (LEC 8; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1987); E. Baasland, "Der 2.Klemensbrief und frühchristliche Rhetorik: 'Die erste christliche Predigt' im Lichte der neueren Forschung," ANRW 2.27.1 (1993) 78-157; idem, "Literarische Form, Thematik und geschichtliche Einordnung des Jakobusbriefes," ANRW 2.25.5 (1988) 3646-84; C. C. Black, "The Rhetorical Form of the Hellenistic Jewish and Early Christian Sermon: A Response to Lawrence Wills," HTR 81 (1988) 1-18; J. D. Charles, Literary Strategy in the Epistle of Jude (Scranton, PA: University of Scranton Press, 1993); M. R. Cosby, The Rhetorical Composition and Function of Hebrews 11: In Light of Example Lists in Antiquity (Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1988); idem, "The Rhetorical Composition of Hebrews 11," JBL 107 (1988) 257-73; J. H. Elliott, "The Epistle of James in Rhetorical and Social Scientific Perspective: Holiness-Wholeness and Patterns of Replication," BTB 23 (1993) 71-81; C. F. Evans, "The Theology of Rhetoric: The Epistle to the Hebrews" (Friends of Dr. Williams's Library, Lecture 42; London: Dr. Williams's Trust, 1988); S. J. Joubert, "Persuasion in the Letter of Jude," JSNT 58 (1995) 75-87; G. A. Kennedy, New Testament Interpretation Through Rhetorical Criticism (Chapel Hill, NC: University of North Carolina, 1984); J. T. Kirby, "The Rhetorical Situations of Revelation 1-3," NTS 34 (1988) 197-207; H.-J. Klauck, "Zur rhetorischen Analyse der Johannesbriefe," ZNW 81 (1990) 205-24; I. Lana, "La cristianizzazione di alcuni termini retorici nella Lettera ai Corinti di Clemente" in Forma Futuri: Studi in Onore del Cardinale Michele Pellegrino (Turin: Bottega d'Erasmo, 1975) 110-18; B. Lindars, "The Rhetorical Structure of Hebrews," NTS 35 (1989) 382-406; T. Martin, Metaphor and Composition in 1 Peter (SBLDS 131; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1992); K. Nissilä, Das Hohepriestermotiv im Hebräerbrief: Eine exegetische Untersuchung (SFEG 33; Helsinki: Oy Liiton Kirjapaino, 1979); T. H. Olbricht, "Hebrews as Amplification" in Rhetoric and the New Testament: Essays from the 1992 Heidelberg Conference, ed. S. E. Porter and T. H. Olbricht (JSNTSup 90; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1993) 375-87; S. D. O'Leary, "A Dramatistic Theory of Apocalyptic Rhetoric," Quarterly Journal of Speech 79 (1993) 385-426; C. Perelman and L. Olbrechts-Tyteca, The New Rhetoric: A Treatise on Argumentation (Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 1969); O. Perler, "Das vierte Makkabaeerbuch, Ignatius von Antiochien und die aeltesten Martyrerberichte," Rivista di Archeologia Cristiana 25 (1949) 47-72; R. F. Reid, "Apocalypticism and Typology: Rhetorical Dimensions of a Symbolic Reality," QJS 69 (1983) 229-48; H. Riesenfeld, "Reflections on the Style and the Theology of St. Ignatius of Antioch," SP 4 (= TU 79), ed. F. Cross (Berlin: Akademie, 1961) 312-22; E. Schüssler Fiorenza, Revelation: Vision of a Just Word (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1991), esp. 20-37, 117-39; idem, "Visionary Rhetoric and Social-Political Situation" in The Book of Revelation: Justice and Judgment (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985) 181-203; T. W. Seid, "The Rhetorical Form of the Melchizedek/Christ Comparison in Hebrews 7" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Brown University, 1996); D. L. Sullivan, "Establishing Orthodoxy: The Letters of Ignatius of Antioch as Epideictic Rhetoric," JCR 15 (1992) 71-86; J. W. Thompson, "The Rhetoric of 1 Peter," RQ 36 (1994) 237-50; L. Thurén, The Rhetorical Strategy of 1 Peter: With Special Regard to Ambiguous Expressions (Åbo: Åbo Academy Press, 1990); idem, "Risky Rhetoric in James?" NovT 37 (1995) 262-84; W. Übelacker, Der Hebräerbrief als Appell: I. Untersuchungen zu exordium, narratio, und postscriptum (Hebr 1-2 und 13,22-25) (ConBNT 21; Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 1989); F. Vouga, "La réception de la théologie johannique dans les épîtres" in La Communauté Johannique et son histoire: La trajectoire de l'évangile de Jean aux deux premiers siècles, ed. J.-D. Kaestli, J.-M. Poffet and J. Zumstein (Le Monde de la Bible; Geneva: Labor et Fides, 1990) 283-302; C. S. Wansink, "Epistola ad Diognetum: A School Exercise in the Use of Protreptic" in Church Divinity 1986, ed. J. Morgan (Church Divinity Monograph Series; Bristol, IN: Wyndham Hall Press, 1986) 97-109; D. F. Watson, "Amplification Techniques in 1 John: The Interaction of Rhetorical Style and Invention," JSNT 51 (1993) 99-123; idem, "An Epideictic Strategy for Increasing Adherence to Community Values: 1 John 1:1-2:27," Proceedings: Eastern Great Lakes and Midwest Biblical Societies 11 (1991) 144-52; idem, Invention, Arrangement and Style: Rhetorical Criticism of Jude and 2 Peter (SBLDS 104; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1988); idem, "James 2 in Light of Greco-Roman Schemes of Argumentation," NTS 39 (1993) 94-121; idem, "The Rhetoric of James 3:1-12 and a Classical Pattern of Argumentation," NovT 35 (1993) 48-64; idem, "A Rhetorical Analysis of 2 John According to Greco-Roman Convention," NTS 35 (1989) 104-30; idem, "A Rhetorical Analysis of 3 John: A Study in Epistolary Rhetoric," CBQ 51 (1989)

479-501; L. L. Welborn, "Clement, First Epistle of," ABD 1:1055-60; E. R. Wendland, "A Comparative Study of 'Rhetorical Criticism,' Ancient and Modern—With Special Reference to the Larger Structure and Function of the Epistle of Jude," Neot 28 (1994) 193-228; L. Wills, "The Form of the Sermon in Hellenistic Judaism and Early Christianity," HTR 77 (1984) 277-99; W. H. Wuellner, "Der Jakobusbrief im Licht der Rhetorik und Textpragmatik," LB 43 (1978) 5-66. D. F. Watson

RICHES AND POVERTY

The abundance or lack of material possessions was not a dominant concern for Christians of the late first and early second centuries. There is little apocalypticism,* and most paraenetic statements are continuous with Jewish piety rather than the radical statements of the Gospels. More distinctively Christian developments include a stress on hospitality* and an exchange of prayers* on the part of the poor for the beneficence of rich believers.

1. New Testament Writings
2. Early Noncanonical Literature

1. New Testament Writings.

1.1. Acts. Two key summary passages, Acts 2:43-45 and Acts 4:32-37, focus on the unity of believers in the first Jerusalem* church.* With respect to material possessions the passages contain two distinct features: that property was held in common (Acts 2:44; 4:32) and that possessions were sold to prevent anyone from being needy (Acts 2:45; 4:35). These features appear to represent a departure from the radical renunciation demanded of disciples in the Gospel (e.g., Lk 5:11; 14:33; 18:22), but it may be a way to meet that demand (cf. Lk 8:3; 12:33; 16:9; 19:8). Material giving in Acts* may assume what is stressed in the Gospels—that is, the need of the disciple to express complete dependence on God*—but the focus is on the need of community members. This is consistent with the praise given to other characters who give charitably to the needy (Acts 9:36; 10:2, 4; cf. Acts 6:1-6) and the condemnation of those who would put money above the needs of others (Acts 5:1-11; 8:14-24). It is also consistent with the Hellenistic ideal of friendship or unity of mind, often expressed in terms of common possessions, but here the practice is driven by the Spirit (see Holy Spirit) rather than by friendship.

Some scholars have suggested that community of possessions is not mentioned in early Christian writings after Acts 4 because it failed as a social experiment or because it was a temporary measure to help itinerant pilgrims who left when it became apparent that the eschaton was delayed (see Parousia). But a more likely implication of silence following such a glowing description of early church communal life is that believers failed to sustain their initial level of obedience.*

1.2. Hebrews, General Epistles and Revelation. The Pastoral Epistles and Hebrews* reflect what we might term middle-class values. These letters* share an interest in contentment with one's current economic status (1 Tim 6:6-10; Heb 13:5b) and condemn love* of money (1 Tim 6:10; 2 Tim 3:2; Heb 13:5a; cf. Tit 1:7) without condemning those who possess much. The recommendation to the rich is "to do good, to be rich in good works, generous, and ready to share" (1 Tim 6:17-18, NRSV). All believers are enjoined to practice hospitality (1 Tim 5:10; Heb 13:2, 16).

The letters of Peter (see 1 Peter; 2 Peter) and John (see John, Letters of) contain little relevant material. Peter warns against mercenary motives in ministry* (1 Pet 5:2; 2 Pet 2:14-15) and John recommends generosity toward needy believers (1 Jn 3:17); both command hospitality (1 Pet 4:9; 3 Jn 5-8).

James* and Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) evince more of the critical attitude toward the rich and praise for the poor that are characteristic of the Gospels, but this does not mean that the audience is from the lowest stratum of society. Diatribes against the rich in James 5:1-6 appear to be directed toward non-Christian oppressors, but other passages (Jas 1:10-11; 2:1-7; 4:13-15) imply the presence of affluent believers. Moreover, both rich and poor are described as "they" in relation to the recipients of the letter (Jas 2:1-7). James tells poor believers to boast that they will soon be "lifted up" and rich believers to boast that they will soon be "brought low" (Jas 1:9-11). The boasting is in the transitoriness of their wealth as compared to the permanence of the coming kingdom,* but James does not allow humility to remain at the level of attitude. "Doers of the word" (Jas 1:22) must care for the needy (Jas 1:27) and renounce worldly pleasures (Jas 4:3-10).

In Revelation Jesus commands the church of Laodicea to turn from its boast that "I am rich" to "buy from me gold refined by fire" (Rev 3:17-18, NRSV), a possible allusion to Gospel passages (Mt 13:44-45; Lk 16:9) in which "buying" is a metaphor for renunciation of possessions. Elsewhere in Revelation earthly riches are associated with the powers of evil, and Revelation 18 offers a lengthy woe against Babylon,* who "glorified herself and lived luxuriously" (Rev 18:7, NRSV). Although the depiction of commercial enterprise is to some extent a metaphor for spiritual rebellion, the recommendation for believers is plain: "Come out of her, my people, so that you do not take part in her sins" (Rev 18:4, NRSV).

Revelation closes with a contrasting description of a heavenly kingdom made of gold, crystal and jewels (Rev 21:1-22:6; see Heaven). This too is metaphorical, a representation in prophetic* language of a community perfectly ordered by God. But in its almost ironic depiction of unimaginable material riches as the reward for those who renounced the same on earth, it partakes of a tradition going back at least to Job and continuous with Matthew 5:3-5, 2 Corinthians 8:13-15 and Revelation 2:9: "I know your affliction and your poverty, even though you are rich" (NRSV).

2. Early Noncanonical Literature.

Writings from the late first to mid-second centuries are dominated by defense of the gospel* against paganism or heresy and exhibit a relative lack of interest in either the rich or the poor. What references are made generally lack force or originality. Modern curiosity about the early Christian social situation is frustrated by the paucity of evidence and the inability to be certain about the import of the evidence. Does an author criticize the rich because he wants to partake in a prophetic or paraenetic tradition? to encourage an audience of (mostly) poor people? to exhort an audience of (partly) rich people? Does the author know his audience well, or is he simply concerned about the needy or the danger of wealth? Is his concern typical of Christian leaders at that time or in that region? Since it is impossible to answer such questions on the basis of literary evidence alone and since there is little other evidence, we do best to defer reconstructions of the social situation and consider instead the intrinsic meaning of the texts.

2.1. Themes Continuous with Jewish and New Testament Ethics. Late Second Temple Jewish writings share with early Christian writings an interest in almsgiving, which was at that time not a matter of giving loose change to beggars but a significant economic sacrifice* in the interest of others. There is ample evidence that both Jews and Christians regarded the practice as so significant that it had an atonement function. While this function may be evident in Gospel passages (e.g., Mt 6:19-21; Lk 16:9; 19:8), it is more explicit in Jewish and noncanonical early Christian writings. Polycarp* quotes Tobit 4:10, "almsgiving delivers from death" (Pol. Phil. 10.2; cf. Did. 1.5). 2 Clement 16.4 asserts that "almsgiving is good as repentance for sin." The Shepherd of Hermas enjoins believers, "instead of lands, buy afflicted souls . . . and you will be saved" (Herm. Sim. 1.8-11; cf. 10.4.1-3).

In other respects late first- and early second-century writers have much in common with OT prophetic writers and NT authors, but no particular theme dominates. God makes both rich and poor (1 Clem. 59.3). One should be content (2 Clem. 20.1-4) and not love money (e.g., 2 Clem. 4.3; Ign. Rom. 7.2-3; Barn. 19.6; Pol. Phil. 2.2) or indulge in luxury (2 Clem. 6.1-6; Herm. Man. 8.3; Herm. Sim. 6.2-5; 9.20, 31).

2.2. Hospitality. The alternative to avarice or luxury is generosity, especially hospitality*—and that especially to Christian workers. This is a common theme in the literature. Clement of Rome* begins his letter to the Corinthians by praising their "character so magnificent in its hospitality" and for their "giving more gladly than receiving" (1 Clem. 1.2; 2.1; 10.7; 12.1; 35.5). Numerous other passages exhort believers to practice hospitality or generosity to needy believers (Did. 13.4, 7; Barn. 19.6-11; 20.1-2; Herm. Man. 2.4; 8.10; Herm. Sim. 8.10.3; 9.27.2; Diogn. 5.13).

2.3. Exchange Between Rich and Poor. The most interesting development in attitudes toward rich and poor appears to have emerged from the tension between the presumed piety of the poor (Lk 6:20; Jas 1:9) and the presumed difficulty of the rich to enter heaven (Mt 19:24; Lk 6:24). How is it "possible for God" (Mt 19:26) to receive the rich? From the late first century on, we come across the idea that the poor, who had spiritual power, could pray for the salvation* of the rich if the rich, who had economic power, would keep the poor from becoming destitute.

The arrangement may have its roots in passages like Acts 4:42, but the early Christian expressions of it do not explicitly rely on any biblical text. Clement writes, "Let the strong care for the weak and let the weak reverence the strong. Let the rich man bestow help on the poor and let the poor give thanks to God, that he gave him one to supply his needs" (1 Clem. 38.2). Similarly Hermas enjoins, "Let therefore they who have overabundance seek out those who are hungry. . . . See to it then . . . that the destitute may not groan, and their groans go up to the Lord, and you with your goods be shut outside the door of the tower" (Herm. Vis. 3.9.5-6). Hermas Similitude 2.5-10 is the fullest statement:

> The rich man has much wealth, but he is poor as touching the Lord, being busied about his riches. . . . But . . . the poor is rich in intercession and confession, and his intercession has great power with God. . . . The poor man, being helped by the rich, makes intercession to God. . . . Therefore the two together complete the work, for the poor works in the intercession in which he is rich . . . and the rich man likewise provides the poor, without hesitating, with the wealth which he received from the Lord.

This solution to a practical problem is nothing if not creative, and it survives in less explicit form alongside more modern attempts to resolve the same tension presented by the biblical material.

See also HERMAS, SHEPHERD OF; HOSPITALITY; JAMES; SOCIAL SETTING OF EARLY NON-PAULINE CHRISTIANITY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. L. W. Countryman, The Rich Christian in the Church of the Early Empire: Contradictions and Accommodations (Lewiston, NY: Edwin Mellen, 1980); R. Garrison, Redemptive Almsgiving in Early Christianity (Sheffield: JSOT, 1993); J. Gonzalez, Faith and Wealth: A History of Early Christian Ideas on the Origin, Significance and Use of Money (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1990); M. Hengel, Property and Riches in the Early Church (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1974); L. T. Johnson, Sharing Possessions: Mandate and Symbol of Faith (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1981); P. U. Maynard-Reid, Poverty and Wealth in James (Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 1987); C. Osiek, Rich and Poor in the Shepherd of Hermas: An Exegetical-Social Investigation (Washington, D.C.: Catholic Biblical Association of America, 1983).

T. E. Schmidt

RIGHTEOUS ONE. See RIGHTEOUSNESS.

RIGHTEOUSNESS

In the biblical tradition the noun righteousness and the adjective righteous normally denote the character, behavior and status appropriate to the covenant* relationship God* formed with the world through Israel.* God demonstrates righteousness through faithfulness to his promises,* while humanity expresses righteousness in and through loyal obedience.* "To justify" denotes the activity of "putting right" (in the case of God) and "being put right" (in the case of humans). This "being put right" can be ethical* (i.e., "to be transformed"), forensic (i.e., "to be declared right") or relational (i.e., "to be reconciled").

Despite a long and cherished history in Christian theology (see McGrath), the varied theological nuances of righteousness language within the Bible have sometimes been overlooked. Part of the problem is that English employs two word families ("righteousness"/"righteous" and "justify"/"justification") to translate only one family of words in Greek—the noun dikaiosynē, the adjective dikaios and the verb dikaioō. Because the word justification has obtained prominence as a legal term in English, there is a strong temptation to read juridical connotations into any occurrence of a dik- stem word in Greek. The forensic interpretation of the Protestant slogan "justification by faith alone" has further blinded readers to the diverse and often ethical uses of righteousness language. Moreover, the supposed anthropological orientation of righteousness in Paul has unfairly truncated the meaning of justification: as the antidote to a guilty conscience,* it primarily relates to the resolution of an individual's existential crisis (Stendahl). However, the kaleidoscopic contextual meanings and the variegated theological uses of the noun dikaiosynē, the adjective dikaios and the verb dikaioō mean that righteousness or justification cannot be reduced to a single theological concept. Righteousness justification language is one of the many ways that early Christians sought to convey the meaning and significance of God's saving deeds wrought in Jesus.

Thus it is not surprising to find that in the later NT documents and the apostolic fathers* language about righteousness or justification falls into four, broad domains of usage: a theological domain (to speak of God), a christological* domain (to define the person and work of Jesus), a soteriological domain (to describe the means and consequences of salvation*) and an ethical domain (to depict the character and behavior associated with spiritual transformation). Informing and guiding the use of language about righteousness or justification in each of these domains is an eschatological* perspective common to early Christianity.

1. The Righteousness of God
2. Jesus, the Righteous One
3. Justification by Faith as a New Pattern of Religion
4. Righteousness and Ethics
5. Righteousness and Eschatology
6. Summary

1. The Righteousness of God.

Given the supposed foundational character of "righteousness of God" (dikaiosynē theou) as God's saving activity in Paul's thinking (Rom 1:17; 3:5, 22; 10:3; 1 Cor 1:30; 2 Cor 5:21; cf. Phil 3:9; see Käsemann, Stuhlmacher), it is remarkable that the phrase so rarely appears in post-Pauline Christianity. Outside of Paul the phrase occurs only twice (Mt 6:33; Jas 1:20; on 2 Pet 1:1 see 2 below).

James* states that the "anger of man does not work the righteousness of God" (Jas 1:20). There are three ways to understand the phrase dikaiosynēn theou. (1) Human anger does not produce (ergazetai) the proper moral disposition or behavior (dikaiosynēn) within humans (see discussion in Davids, 93). (2) Human anger does not achieve (ergazetai) the level of perfection that God demands (dikaiosynēn), especially that demand to be revealed at the last judgment* (Ziesler 133, 135). Or, preferably, (3) human anger does not bring into being (ergazetai) the state of affairs that God desires (dikaiosynēn). By tying together the moral, forensic and eschatological senses, this last reading conceptually links the "righteousness of God" here with the "kingdom of God"* in the teaching of Jesus (Martin, 48). This reading also reveals that James is not reacting against Paul's notion of dikaiosynē theou (cf. Dibelius, 111). James stands much closer to Matthew, where righteousness is indicative of God's kingdom (Mt 6:33; cf. Przybylski, 89-92).

While Clement's quotation of Psalm 50:16 (LXX) does delimit the meaning of righteousness as "salvation" (1 Clem. 18.15: "My tongue will rejoice in your righteousness"), it is hard to see that Clement (see Clement of Rome) quoted the psalm specifically for this sense of dikaiosynē. The closest we come to Paul's rich and highly charged notion of dikaiosynē theou is in 1 John. The author claims that "If we confess our sins, he [God] is faithful and just [pistos estin kai dikaios] and will forgive our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 Jn 1:9). The paralleling of dikaios with pistos points to God's activity of forgiving sins and echoes his long-standing commitment to honor repentance* and sacrifice* (e.g., Ex 34:6-7). God's faithfulness thus becomes synonymous with his righteousness (Schnackenburg, 83).

The other uses of righteousness with reference to God are all clearly forensic (see God). Paul in his Areopagus speech (Acts 17:31) declares that God has a fixed day in which he will "judge the world in righteousness" (krinein . . . en dikaiosynē). This quotation of Psalm 95:13 (LXX) positions God in a traditional role as judge. 1 Peter (1 Pet 2:23) depicts Jesus as trusting the one (i.e., God) "who judges justly" (tō krinonti dikaiōs). Three times in Revelation (Rev 16:5, 7; 19:2; cf. Rev 15:3) is it said of God that his judgments are 'just" (dikaios). 1 Clement too affirms that God is righteous in his judgments (1 Clem. 27.1; 60.1). The *Shepherd of Hermas (Herm. Sim. 6.3.6) even calls God a "righteous judge" (dikaios kritēs). Finally Polycarp* (Pol. Phil. 5.2), within a general admonition to "live in a manner that is worthy of his commandment," singles out the deacons for special attention. They "must be blameless before his righteousness" (katenōpion autou tēs dikaiosynēs). God is a righteous judge who demands purity.

2. Jesus, the Righteous One.

Righteousness language is also applied to Jesus. In fact various traditions entitle Jesus the "Righteous One" (ho dikaios). In their speeches Peter, Stephen* and Paul all name Jesus the "Righteous One" (ho dikaios). Peter (Acts 3:14) charges his Jewish listeners with having denied "the Holy and Righteous One" (ton hagion kai dikaion). Stephen (Acts 7:52; cf. Heb 10:37-38) understands the prophets* as preaching about the "coming of the Righteous One" (tēs eleuseōs tou dikaiou). Ananias (Acts 22:14) interprets Paul's christophany as an apocalyptic appearance of the "Righteous One" (ton dikaion).

Jesus' priestly* role as an advocate with the Father earns him the title "Jesus Christ, the Righteous" (Iēsoun Christon dikaion), a confession common within the Johannine community (1 Jn 2:1, 29; 3:7). 1 Peter* and the *Epistle to Diognetus also name Jesus the "Righteous One" (dikaios) in early confessions* of faith* (1 Pet 3:18; Diogn. 9.2). Hebrews* applies Psalm 45:7 to Jesus to show that God's Son* "loved righteousness and hated lawlessness" (Heb 1:9). 1 Clement interprets the life of Jesus according to the Servant of Isaiah when he designates Jesus as the "Just One [dikaion] who is a good servant to many" (1 Clem. 16.12; cf. Is 53:11 [LXX]). Polycarp likewise appeals to Isaiah 53: he identifies Jesus as "the guarantee of our righteousness [arrabōni tēs dikaiosynēs hēmōn], the one who bore our sins in his own body upon the tree" (Pol. Phil. 8.1; Is 53:3-5 [LXX]; cf. 1 Pet 2:24). Diognetus invokes more Adamic imagery when describing Jesus as that "one righteous man [dikaiō heni] who justifies many sinners" (Diogn. 9.5; cf. Rom 5:15).

The special endowment of a figure with one of God's attributes (e.g., wisdom,* holiness* or glory*) or the outright personification of an attribute were important ways Jews portrayed divine meditation (Hurtado, 41-50). In Second Temple Judaism* God's attribute of righteousness was often personified or given as a special endowment to some heavenly figure (e.g., 1 Enoch 38:2; 53:6; 1QM 1:8; 17:8; 1QMyst 5-6; $1QIsa^a$ 51:5; $11QPsa^a$ 26:11; see Baumgarten, 219-39). Entitling Jesus the "Righteous One" positions him as God's chief agent.

As the "Righteous One" Jesus manifests what P. G. Davis calls the "triple pattern" of divine mediation. Jesus' substitutionary death (1 Pet 3:18; 1 Clem. 16.12; Pol. Phil. 8.1; Diogn. 9.2-3; cf. Jas 5:5; Barn. 6.7) represents the legacy pattern, emphasizing the soteriological consequences of his past mediatorial deeds. Jesus' continuing role as an advocate with God the Father (1 Jn 2:1) reveals an interventionistic pattern, emphasizing the efficacy of his present mediatorial deeds. And the revelation of Jesus as a righteous judge at the Parousia* (Rev 19:11; cf. Acts 7:52) displays the consummation pattern, emphasizing the forensic character of his future mediatorial deeds. Thus while the title "Righteous One" closes the gap between God and Jesus (i.e., Jesus is marked as a special agent of God because he embodies one of God's attributes), the mediatorial deeds ascribed to Jesus as the "Righteous One" also represent a significant innovation: the concentration of the triple pattern of mediation in Jesus—a rarity in Judaism (Davis, 502)—highlights his unique status. The title "Righteous One" may well have been one of the earliest ways that Christians expressed their belief in the divinity of Jesus (Longenecker, 47).

One reading of 2 Peter's opening address supports such a view. There the author affirms that the readers have obtained a "faith in the righteousness of God and Christ" (pistin en dikaiosynē tou theou hēmōn kai sōtēros Iēsou Christou, 2 Pet 1:1; cf. 2 Thess 1:12; Tit 2:13). Since it is best to understand both theou and sōtēros as appellations of Jesus (Brown, 184; Cullmann, 314), this text refers to Jesus as God (not to Jesus and God). The resulting translation would be "faith in the righteousness of our God and Savior, Jesus." 2 Peter* then seems to endorse a belief in the righteousness (= divinity or divine status) of Jesus (cf. Harris, 237). Like the attributes glory and wisdom, righteousness not only associates Jesus with God as his chief vizier but also helps demarcate Jesus as God (the embodiment of God's divine presence).

3. Justification by Faith as a New Pattern of Religion.

E. P. Sanders helpfully outlines the way in which Palestinian Judaism worked. He describes a fivefold soteriological pattern: Jews believed (1) that they were elected* by grace*; (2) that God gave the commandments* as a gift; (3) that obedience to the commandments brings blessing* while disobedience brings cursing; (4) that repentance and atonement for sin (5) will yield God's forgiveness.* Sanders terms this pattern of religion "covenantal nomism." Within this pattern of religion, righteousness was seen as a way of maintaining the covenant relationship and never as a means of obtaining or earning a relationship with God (Sanders, 205, 544).

This makes Paul's theology of justification distinctive. For Paul, in direct contrast to Judaism, both "righteousness" and "faith" were used as entry terms: justification by faith was the means of obtaining a right relationship with God. Furthermore, Paul insisted that a person initially justified by faith remains so through faith (Gal 3:1-3; Col 2:6-7; see Gundry). Paul, for all of his indebtedness to Judaism, conceptualized a completely new pattern of religion. The clarity and force of Paul's soteriological innovations make an examination of statements about justification in other Christian writers all the more intriguing.

3.1. Acts. Acts* twice depicts Paul as preaching about righteousness or justification. In his Areopagus speech (Acts 13:38-39) Paul declares that through Jesus God forgives sins and that belief in Jesus "justifies" (dikaiountai) when the law* was unable to do so (ouk . . . dikaiōthēnai). Justification here describes the movement from being unsaved to being saved and consequently fits closely to the pattern of religion envisioned by Paul (see esp. Rom 8:2-4). In his defense before Felix, Paul again preaches about "faith in Christ Jesus" (Acts 24:24). This "faith in Christ" is further defined as "righteousness [dikaiosynēs], self-control and judgment" (Acts 24:25; cf. Barn. 1.6). As Acts styles it, Paul's christocentric preaching consisted in a message about salvation (righteousness), ethics (self-control) and eschatological judgment (but see Reumann, 141). "Righteousness" here again describes "entrance" into salvation.

3.2. Hebrews. The use of righteousness language in two short comments about Abel and Noah in Hebrews allows a glimpse of that author's soteriological pattern. "By faith" Abel offered a better sacrifice and thereby "received approval as righteous" (emartyrēthē einai dikaios), in that God accepted his gift (Heb 11:4; cf. 1 Jn 3:12). Noah became an "heir of righteousness that comes by faith" (tēs kata pistin dikaiosynēs egeneto klēronomos) when he constructed the ark (Heb 11:7; cf. 2 Pet 2:5). Although it does not employ the formula "justified by faith," Hebrews, in its retrofitting of these two OT stories, represents a perspective that coheres with Paul's (Lane, 2:340; cf. Bacon, 14). Abel and Noah exemplify the faith praised at Hebrews 11:1 and Hebrews 10:37-38 (quoting Hab 2:4; Bruce, 71-72) and illustrate that faith serves as the only legitimate ground for righteousness.

3.3. James. Ever since Luther, James 2:14-26 has long plagued interpreters with its apparent contradictions with Paul at the point of justification. However, a close reading of James's rhetoric reveals that this passage complements rather than contradicts Paul.

James's opponents contend that faith and works (see Faith and Works) can legitimately be separated from each other (Jas 2:18; see Martin, 82-84). James responds by arguing for the interdependence of faith and works (Jas 2:18). Through an ironic appeal to the "faith" of demonic powers, James shows that "faith" is a necessary but insufficient basis for enjoying salvation (Jas 2:19). "Faith apart from works is barren" (Jas 2:20). James finds proof for this in the figure of Abraham* (Jas 2:21-22). In the offering of his son Isaac (Gen 22:1-14) Abraham "was justified" (edikaiōthē). Faith "was active" (synērgei) in Abraham's works, and works "completed" (eteleiōthē) his faith. Genesis 15:6—"Abraham believed God, and it was reckoned to him as righteousness [dikaiosynēn]"—was fulfilled (eplērōthē) in Genesis 22 (Jas 2:23). Thus for everyone, and not for Abraham alone, the presence of justifying faith is demonstrated by works (Jas 2:24). To this, James provides a second example, that of Rahab, whose faith was also completed in her works (Jas 2:25). James finally reiterates his point that faith apart from works is "dead" (Jas 2:26)

James is obviously seeking to correct something in early Christianity that he saw as a error (Reumann, 150). Specifically James is responding to opponents who had either misunderstood Paul or improperly radicalized Paul's teaching of "justification by faith alone" (Davids 51, 130-31). Because of his opponents' misuse of the words, "faith" and "justify" take on different meanings for James than they do for Paul. Faith in James refers to intellectual assent, whereas for Paul faith means the commitment of one's life, which includes a change in one's behavior. Thus what Paul means by faith (as in Gal 5:6) is functionally equivalent to James's faith-as-demonstrated-by-works formula. For James the verb justify (Jas 2:21, 24, 25) bears a demonstrative meaning, whereas dikaioō in Paul should be read most often as forensic declaration.

What James and Paul do agree upon is that "faith" and "justify" are entry terms (Sloan, 8-9), that complete and utter commitment to God is the means of justification and that good works should follow initial justification.

3.4. 1 John. 1 John (see John, Letters of) makes nearly the same point as James: righteous deeds are evidence of salvation. (This lends credence to the theory that [Paul's?] teaching on justification by faith alone had been greatly misunderstood; see 2 Pet 3:16.) The author explicitly ties the practice of righteousness (ho poiōn tēn dikaiosynēn) with conversion (1 Jn 2:29; 3:7, 10). Good works become the mark of conversion. While not specifically connecting righteousness or justification with faith, 1 John does ground the practice of righteousness with christology. "He who does right is righteous, as he [Jesus] is righteous" (1 Jn 3:7). Laying claim to righteousness involves a christoformic pattern of living.

3.5. 1 Clement. Although some scholars have defended him as a "Paulinist" (e.g., Buchanan, 84), most see Clement as corrupting Paul's doctrine of justification (e.g., Wrede, 84-86; Torrance, 44-55) or as hopelessly inconsistent on the matter (e.g., Lightfoot, 1.1:397-98). Two things can and should be said about Clement's theology of justification.

It is clear that Clement embraced "justification by faith" as the way to obtain salvation (contra Räisänen). Abraham "attained righteousness and truth through faith" (1 Clem. 31.2), and all who experience salvation in Christ are "justified" (dikaioumetha) "through faith" (dia tēs pisteōs) and not through "wisdom," "piety" or "works" (1 Clem. 32.4; see also 2 Clem. 6.9). In fact faith is the means by which God has "justified" (edikaiōsen) everyone from the beginning of time (1 Clem. 32.4). Thus Clement, like Paul, sees initial, forensic justification as occurring through faith.

It is also clear that Clement understood good works as the means to maintain salvation. Clement exhorts (1 Clem. 30.3) his readers to "clothe" themselves in unity, "being justified by works and not words (ergois dikaioumenoi kai mē logois)." Here Clement addresses the issue of how those who have already experienced salvation are expected to maintain it. The disunity within the congregation, according to Clement, is a great soteriological threat; Clement advises the Corinthians to remain saved through their practice of works, specifically hospitality* (Chadwick; 1 Clem. 3.4; 12.1; 13.1; 17.3; 22.6-7; 30.7; 33.7; 35.1; 50.5).

Clement thus evinces a twofold soteriological pattern (Newman, 113-35); like other Christian writers (especially Paul), Clement sees that one is initially justified by faith and that (in distinction from Paul) one remains justified by works.

3.6. Epistle to Diognetus. When Diognetus questions "In whom was it possible for us, the lawless and ungodly, to be justified, except in the Son of God alone?" (Diogn. 9.4) and then details the unexpected way in which Jesus "should justify many sinners" (Diogn. 9.5), it is hard to determine if the two uses of dikaioō should be construed ethically ("make righteous") or forensically ("declare righteous"). While the context argues for the former (note the opposition of righteousness to wickedness in Diogn. 9.1; Ziesler, 215), the clear substitutionary flavor of Diognetus 9.3-5 argues for the latter. In either case Diognetus embraces a pattern of religion that emphasizes entrance into salvation though justification by faith.

4. Righteousness and Ethics.

In the later documents of the NT the noun dikaiosynē and the adjective dikaios always have an "ethical content" (Ziesler, 141). This ethical content can be expressed in many ways. Righteousness language can refer to the character of a human (2 Pet 2:8; Rev 22:11); behavior (Acts 10:35; 1 Pet 2:24; 3:13-14; 1 Jn 3:12); a person's status, which is grounded in behavior (Acts 10:22; 1 Pet 4:18; 2 Pet 2:7-8; Jas 5:16); or to the process of moral transformation (Heb 12:11; Jas 3:18; 2 Pet 2:21).

A near identical situation holds in the apostolic fathers; the noun and the adjectives always have an ethical connotation (Ziesler, 214). Again this ethical connotation can include the character of a human (e.g., 2 Clem. 13.1; Ign. Eph. 1.1; Mart. Pol. 11.1; Herm. Vis. 3.9.1; Herm. Man. 1.2; 12.2.4), behavior (e.g., 1 Clem. 9.3; 33.8; 42.8; 2 Clem. 6.9; 19.3; Ign. Smyrn. 1.1; Pol. Phil. 2.3; 3.3; Herm. Vis. 3.3.3; Diogn. 10.8), a person's status grounded in behavior (e.g., 1 Clem. 33.7; 2 Clem. 2.4; 20.3-4; Ign. Magn. 12.1; Mart. Poly. 14.1; Did. 3.9; Barn. 5.9; 10.11; 17.1; Herm. Vis. 1.1.8) or the process of transformation (e.g., 2 Clem. 5.7; 18.2; Did. 5.2; 11.1; Barn. 1.7; 15.4; Herm. Man. 5-6 passim). The verb dikaioō in all but four occurrences bears a forensic meaning, "acquit" (Ziesler, 214); in the four exceptions the verb refers to the process of "making righteous" (Barn. 15.7; Herm. Vis. 3.9.1; Herm. Man. 5.1.7; 5.7.1).

5. Righteousness and Eschatology.

The soteriological and ethical uses temporally anchor righteousness or justification language to the writers' past or present. However, early Christianity also employed righteousness language to describe what the future was to be like. The new heavens* and new earth will be a place in which righteousness dwells (2 Pet 3:13). The righteous person should look forward to the age to come (Barn. 10.11), despite the prospect of a righteous judgment (Acts 17:31; Rev 19:11). The future will entail a resurrection* of both the just and unjust (Acts 24:15). The future will be a time of final salvation for the righteous (1 Pet 4:18), a time in which final transformation (Heb 12:23) and reversal will occur (Ign. Rom. 5.1; Ign. Phld. 8.2; Diogn. 5.14). Because the future kingdom is immanent, there is an ethical urgency for the righteous to practice righteousness (Rev 22:11). To live this life as though one were already justified is a significant error (Barn. 4.10). Even those who have already experienced salvation should take care "for the time for the righteous to repent is at hand" (Herm. Vis. 2.2.5).

6. Summary.

Teaching about righteousness or justification formed part of early Christian catechesis. Along with hope* and love,* righteousness was, according to Barnabas (Barn. 1.6), one of the "three basic doctrines of the Lord" (tria dogmata kyriou). Christians were to be skilled in the "word of righteousness" (Heb 5:13; Pol. Phil. 3.1). This instruction emphasized God's righteousness (his faithfulness and his righteous character), Jesus as the Righteous One (his unique status and past, present and future deeds), the proper place of faith and works in salvation, and a hope for a future in which righteousness will rule. Early Christianity's use of the language of righteousness or justification is as diverse as it is evocative.

See also ABRAHAM; COVENANT, NEW COVENANT; DEATH OF CHRIST; ESCHATOLOGY; FAITH AND WORKS; FORGIVENESS; GOD; JUDGMENT; LAW; OBEDIENCE, LAWLESSNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. B. W. Bacon, "The Doctrine of Faith in Hebrews, James and Clement of Rome," JBL 19 (1900) 12-21; J. M. Baumgarten, "The Heavenly Tribunal and the Personification of Sedeq in Jewish Apocalyptic," ANRW 2.19.1 (1979) 219-39; R. E. Brown, An Introduction to New Testament Christology (New York: Paulist, 1994); F. F. Bruce, "Justification by Faith in the Non-Pauline Writings of the New Testament," EvQ 34 (1952) 66-77; J. Buchanan, The Doctrine of Justification (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1867); H. Chadwick, "Justification by Faith and Hospitality," TU 79 (1961) 281-85; O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1959); P. H. Davids, The Epistle of James (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); P. G. Davis, "Divine Agents, Mediators and New Testament Christology," JTS 45 (1994) 479-503; M. Dibelius and H. Greeven, James (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); R. H. Gundry, "Grace, Works and Staying Saved in Paul," Bib 66 (1985) 1-38; M. J. Harris, Jesus as God: The New Testament Use of Theos in Reference to Jesus (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1992); L. Hurtado, One God, One Lord: Early Christian Devotion and Ancient Jewish Monotheism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); E. Käsemann, " 'The Righteousness of God' in Paul" in New Testament Questions of Today (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1969) 168-82; W. L. Lane, Hebrews (2 vols.; WBC; Dallas: Word, 1992); J. B. Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, part 1: Clement of Rome (2 vols.; London: Macmillan, 1890); R. N. Longenecker, The Christology of Early Jewish Christianity (London: SCM, 1970); A. E. McGrath, Iustitia Dei: A History of the Christian Doctrine of Justification (2 vols.; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1986); R. P. Martin, James (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); C. C. Newman, "Righteousness/Justification Language in 1 Clement: A Linguistic and Theological Enquiry" (unpublished M.Th. thesis, University of Aberdeen, 1985); B. Przybylski, Righteousness in Matthew and the World of His Thought (SNTSMS 41; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1980); H. Räisänen, "Righteousness by Works: An Early Catholic Doctrine? Thoughts on 1 Clement" in Jesus, Paul and Torah: Collected Essays (JSNTSup 43; Sheffield: JSOT, 1992) chap. 8; J. Reumann, Righteousness in the New Testament (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1983); E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977); R. Schnackenburg, The Johannine Epistles (New York: Crossroad, 1992); R. B. Sloan, "The Christology of James," CTR 1 (1986) 3-29; K. Stendahl, "The Apostle Paul and the Introspective Conscience of the West" in Paul Among Jews and Gentiles (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976) 78-96; P. Stuhlmacher, Gerechtigkeit Gottes bei Paulus (2d ed; FRLANT 82; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1966); T. F. Torrance, The Doctrine of Grace in the Apostolic Fathers (London: Oliver and Boyd, 1948); W. Wrede, Untersuchungen zum ersten Klemensbriefe (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1891); J. A.

Ziesler, The Meaning of Righteousness in Paul: A Linguistic and Theological Enquiry (SNTSMS 20; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1971).

C. C. Newman

ROMAN ADMINISTRATION.

See ROMAN EMPIRE, CHRISTIANS AND THE.

ROMAN CHRISTIANITY.

See ROME AND ROMAN CHRISTIANITY.

ROMAN EMPIRE, CHRISTIANS AND THE

The expression "Roman Empire" most frequently calls to mind the extensive territory under Roman rule during the period from Augustus's victory at Actium in 31 B.C. until the fifth century A.D. It may also be helpfully considered in terms of the network of political, military, economic and judicial arrangements by which Rome exercised dominion over much of the ancient world.

1. The Geographic Extent of the Empire
2. Imperial Administration
3. Travel and Commerce
4. Empire and Christianity

1. The Geographic Extent of the Empire.

Rome was founded, according to tradition, in 753 B.C. Its power increased initially under the direction of kings until 509 B.C., when it was reconstituted as a republic headed by consular magistrates elected annually by the Senate. Through a two-century period of internal conflict and warfare with the league of Latin cities, Rome emerged in 275 B.C. in effective control of much of Italy. It next annexed, through war and the failure of treaty negotiations, Sicily (241 B.C.), Sardinia (233 B.C.), Corsica (231 B.C.), the two Spains (197 B.C.) and Africa and Achaia (146 B.C.). The territories of Asia (133 B.C.) and Bithynia and Cyrene (74 B.C.) came into Rome's hands as bequests from foreign monarchs.

During the instability of social turmoil and civil war and as a result of the adventurism of powerful Roman generals, Crete (68 B.C.), Syria (63 B.C.), Cyprus (58 B.C.) and a reorganized Gaul fell within the Roman orbit. The forty-five years of Augustus's reign and the efforts of the Julio-Claudian emperors who followed added a dozen more provinces, notably Egypt (31 B.C.), Galatia (25 B.C.) and Judea (A.D. 6). The grave crisis of the year of the four emperors (A.D. 69) ushered in nearly a century of consolidating gains, suppressing rebellious provinces and repulsing invading foreigners at the periphery of the empire.

2. Imperial Administration.

2.1. The Roman Interest. It would be incorrect to assume that the geographic extent of the empire represented a conscious centuries-long strategy to Romanize the entire Mediterranean world. Rome's involvement was essentially pragmatic, and its objectives were limited. The principal interest was a peace that ensured Roman prosperity. Threats to the integrity, sovereignty or material prosperity of Rome or to buffer states with whom alliances had been made called for decisive response. Ongoing instability resulted in Rome's ongoing presence. The security advantages of a relationship with such an honorable and zealous partner as Rome were clear.

Roman administration was less intrusive in the affairs of its subject peoples than is oftentimes thought. Taxation was generally structured by Rome, but collections were farmed out to successful bidders among the élite of the local communities. Where local laws and structures of governance were generally serviceable to the objective of peace for prosperity, they were permitted with a minimum of intrusion. Intervention usually occurred only where the Roman interest was threatened.

2.2. Governors. Provincial government was in the hands of senatorial and imperial nominees. Their duties included managing finances, hearing cases and employing the military forces in their charge for security and peacekeeping operations. They were granted the "power of the sword" (ius gladii; cf. Dio Cassius Hist. 52.22; 53.13.6-7; 53.14.5; Rom 13:4), a nontransferable jurisdiction to punish with death provincials and Roman citizens. Such powers held great potential for abuse, as did the fact that only in the year following their return to Rome could governors be prosecuted by aggrieved provincials for maladministration.

Proconsular provinces were governed by former praetors or consuls appointed by lot by the Roman senate. Appointments were generally for a year but could be renewed. These provinces had generally been pacified and so required smaller military forces to ensure the peace. Sergius Paulus at Cyprus (Acts 13:7), Gallio at Achaia (Acts 18:12) and the unnamed individual(s) identified by the Ephesian town clerk (Acts 19:38) are NT examples of proconsuls.

The governance of strategic and/or unpacified territories had been voted to the emperor Augustus early in his reign; hence their designation as imperial provinces. He appointed expraetors and consuls from the Senate as imperial legates (legati Augusti pro praetore) in some. Quirinius served in this capacity in Syria-Cilicia (Lk 2:1-2; cf. Acts 5:37). Other provinces, like Judea, were governed by equestrian nominees called prefects or procurators whose terms could be considerably extended. The procurators Felix (Acts 23:24—24:27; Josephus Life 3 §13; Josephus Ant. 20.7.1—20.8.9 §137-82; Josephus J.W. 2.12.8—2.13.7 §247-70; Tacitus Ann. 12.54; Tacitus Hist. 5.9) and Porcius Festus (Acts 24:27—26:32; Josephus Ant. 20.8.9—20.9.1 §182-200; Josephus J.W. 2.14.1 §271-72) dealt with the politically charged case of Paul in the last years of the sixth decade A.D. Felix's venality and his and Festus's pliability in the hands of irate provincial élites show both the character of these men and the considerable pressures they faced.

2.3. Army. Following the heavily militarized period leading up to the battle of Actium, the victorious Augustus consolidated the Roman army. Despite its reduced size, it was still the chief means of enforcing peace in the provinces and at the periphery of the empire. It was comprised of legionary and auxiliary forces. A legion, of which there were twenty-five at Augustus's death, consisted in a force of between 4,000 and 6,000 men who were divided into ten cohorts of six centuries each (a century having a nominal strength of 100 men). The maniple, consisting of two centuries, was the basic fighting unit. A division (ala) of 120 or more cavalry was also attached to the legion. Men were enlisted in the legions from the Roman citizen population and after a twenty-year (earlier, sixteen-year) term of service were discharged with a lump-sum cash payment and a land grant somewhere in the empire.

The auxiliary forces, whether alae or cohortes, were comprised of freeborn noncitizen soldiers levied from the local tribes and cities of imperial provinces on the frontier. Often they had specialized skills (e.g., the two hundred dexiolaboi of Acts 23:23?). They received proportionately less pay and a more extended term of service than did their legionary counterparts; auxiliary soldiers received Roman citizenship as part of their discharge.

Four regular legions were in Syria by A.D. 23, and several more were added from Nero's reign to the time of the Jewish rebellion. There is also evidence for the presence of significant numbers of auxiliary troops there during the first and second centuries A.D. In Judea auxiliaries were the dominant military force. Five cohorts were stationed in the Judean capital, Caesarea, and one in Jerusalem. Briefly in the hands of King Herod Agrippa I until his death (A.D. 44; Acts 12:23; Josephus Ant. 19.8.2 §343-50), these troops eventually reverted to the charge of a procuratorial appointee.

We meet soldiers of several ranks in the pages of Acts.* Peter's first Gentile* converts are a God-fearer named Cornelius,* a centurion of the Italian Cohort, and his household* (Acts 10:1-2). His forebears were among the ten thousand slaves granted freedom by P. Cornelius Sulla in 82 B.C. He had risen to the command of a nominal force of one hundred men. The Italian Cohort, which would have been first called up in Italy, may well be the cohors II Italica civium Romanorum, which was in Syria in A.D. 69, though there is no record of its being in Judea before A.D. 41. The presence of Cornelius's extended household in Caesarea may suggest that he was retired.

If Herod's forces were structured on Roman lines, as seems likely, the four squads of four soldiers who guarded Peter (Acts 12:4-10, 18-19) represent either two units of "bunkmates" (contubernales; the contubernium was the basic army unit; cf. Vegetius Epit. Rei Milit. 2.8, 13; 3.8) or eight pairs of "privates" from every barracks unit in one of the centuries stationed in Jerusalem. If the soldiers were executed on account of Peter's escape instead of being punished in some other way (cf. Code Just. 9.4.4; Dig. Just. 48.3.12, 14), this would represent the nominal decimation of an entire century, no doubt shattering military morale and further explaining the great hostility of the troops toward the Jewish Herod (cf. Josephus Ant. 19.9.1-2 §356-65).

Paul was taken into custody by a tribune in Jerusalem (Acts 21:31--23:30). The tribune was the highest-ranking officer in Jerusalem, commissioned to lead a double cohort, as the title chiliarchos suggests. He must have worked his way through the ranks of the auxiliary forces in Syria, purchasing his Roman citizenship, as he indicates, and probably his equestrian status and military tribunate as well. The name Claudius Lysias (Acts 23:26; 24:22) and the "great cost" of his citizenship (Acts 22:28) make it likely that he was a Greek and had received the franchise early in the emperor Claudius's reign (cf. Dio Cassius Hist. 60.17.5-6).

The fact of increasing hostility and tension between Jews and non-Jewish provincials and auxiliary forces throughout this period in Judea (cf. Josephus passim) ought not to be forgotten when gauging what custodial relations must have been like for the Jewish Paul in the Fortress Antonia at Jerusalem (Acts 22:23-29; 23:16-22) and in Herod's praetorium at Caesarea (Acts 23:35; 24:23, 27; 26:29). They would have been far from pleasant despite the indications in the text of formal benevolence.

Julius, a centurion of the Augustan Cohort, was charged with heading up a military detail to take Paul and other prisoners to Rome (Acts 27:1). He would hardly have used the name Julius unless he possessed citizenship. Claudius had capitally punished individuals who illegitimately used the Roman nomen gentile (Suetonius Claudius 25.3). The designation Augusta for an auxiliary unit is more likely to be official than honorific. There is record of a cohors I Augusta levied from the Syrian population and found in Syria during the time of Quirinius (A.D. 6; ILS 1.2683) and a prefect "of the Augustan cohort" stationed in Batanaea east of Galilee some time during the reign of Herod Agrippa II (OGIS 421).

The Western text, if it can be accounted a reliable record at this point, indicates that on arriving in Rome Paul was handed over to the stratopedarchēs (Acts 28:16). We may doubt that this person should be identified with the prefect of the urban cohorts or for that matter the princeps peregrinorum, who had charge of a force responsible for the imperial grain supply and security. The urban prefect was concerned with local police matters; the princeps and his staff and force were of centurial rank (note the assignment to a regular soldier at Acts 28:16), too small and mobile and probably too late in time to guard Paul. We should rather understand the designation to indicate, if not the prefect of the praetorian forces located near the Viminal Gate, then more probably one of his subordinates.

For Ignatius* of Antioch (c. A.D. 108) the military constitute a great trouble. He writes to the Roman* church that his Syrian military escort of ten soldiers (likened to leopards) treats him with unremitting animosity. They respond to Christian kindnesses with increased harshness (Ign. Rom. 5.1).

3. Travel and Commerce.

3.1. Pax Romana. One of the legacies of Augustus's efforts to ensure security for prosperity was a two-century period of unprecedented peace, the pax Romana (cf. Philo Leg. 47; Plutarch Fort. Rom., Mor. 317B, C). Extending the Roman road network and clearing the seaways of pirates not only aided better official communications but also opened up the empire to increased commercial and private traffic (Pliny Nat. Hist. 14.1.2). This aided immensely the spread of the gospel (Acts 1:8).

3.2. Land and Sea Travel. Mention is made in Acts of a wheeled conveyance that could cover twenty-five to thirty miles a day (Acts 8:28-29, 38); travel by horse (Acts 23:23-24, 33) might double that distance. The most common means of travel, however, was by foot. The average distance of about twenty miles per day is confirmed by the journeying of Peter and Cornelius's servants between Caesarea and Joppa (Acts 10:23-24, 30). Even Paul's official Damascus mission appears to have been by foot (Acts 9:7-8). Greater distances in a day's time might be achieved, as during the forced march from Jerusalem to Antipatris (Acts 23:23-35). What Paul was prepared to brave in his various travels (2 Cor 11:26-27) suggests that he pushed the seasonal limits for travel as a professional merchant would, rather than being a fair-weather traveler.

Christians also frequently traveled by ship (Acts 13:4, 13; 14:26; 16:11; 17:15; 18:18, 22; 20:6, 13-17; 21:1-6; 27:2—28:13). Maritime transport, for all the safety that the Roman peace afforded, was still a risky business, and this Paul knew by experience (2 Cor 11:25-26; cf. Josephus Life 3 §14-16; Lucian of Samosata Tox. 19). Weather and sea conditions could be quite changeable, and there were generally agreed good and bad times for travel (cf. Vegetius Epit. Rei Milit. 4.39; Pliny Nat. Hist. 2.47-48.122-130; Tacitus Hist. 4.81). Rich imperial inducements for merchants to risk the season to supply grain for Rome, however, were difficult to resist (Suetonius Claudius 18-19; cf. Dio Cassius Hist. 60.11; Pliny Nat. Hist. 2.47.125). It is not surprising to find the centurion Julius requisitioning passage for himself, Paul and the rest of his prisoner detail on two Alexandrian free merchant grain carriers in the off season (Acts 27:6; 28:11). Ignatius's guards would have made similar arrangements (Ign. Rom. 5.1; Pol. Phil. 8.1).

3.4. Hospitality. Travelers had to make stops along the way. If they could not avail themselves of private lodging, prevail upon friends or requisition the facilities of the public post (cursus publicus) by virtue of their office, they might have to put up in a boarding house or wayside inn. Such rented accommodation was generally of poor quality (e.g., Petronius Sat. 94-99; Acts of John 60). It is not difficult, therefore, to understand the pattern of hospitality* found throughout Acts, epistolary encouragements to assistance (1 Pet 4:9; Heb 13:2) and epistolary recognitions of those who helped Christians on their way (e.g., Ignatius, passim).

4. Empire and Christianity.

4.1. The Roman Attitude to Christianity. The Roman stance toward Christianity underwent some change over time. In the earliest period Christianity, as a faction within Judaism,* was a matter of mild Roman interest (Acts 24:22, 24-25). Jewish religious objections to Christianity appear not to have provoked a Roman inclination judicially to intervene (Acts 18:15-16; 22:30; 23:29; 25:19-20, 25; 28:18); Roman religious objections, however, did (Acts 16:20-21). Manifest disturbances of the Roman peace (Acts 18:2-3; 21:30-40; cf. Suetonius Claudius 25.4) and formal accusations to that effect by Jewish ruling élites or their Roman proxies (Acts 17:6-7; 24:5-9, 12) received immediate official attention. Prosecutions during this time were localized, isolated and privately entered rather than being undertaken by the Roman state.

Before the great fire of A.D. 64 in Rome and Nero's persecution,* it appears that Christians had come to be detested in their own right. Tacitus notes with some irony that Christians, whom he indicates deserved exemplary punishment because of their superstitio and its "degraded and shameful practices," began to evoke Roman pity because they were unjustly accused by Nero of incendiarism and punished viciously (Tacitus Ann. 15.44; cf. Suetonius Nero 16.2). The fact that believers became the objects of imperial delation was a significant downward turn in Roman and Christian relations. State prosecutions on the charge of simply being a Christian would be initiated later (cf. Pliny Ep. 10.95-96; Acts of the Christian Martyrs, passim).

4.2. The Christian Attitude to the Empire. The Christian attitude to imperial authority and governance was enlightened yet restrained in the early period. Paul saw a belated advantage (owing to his Christian Jewish commitments) in intimating his Roman citizenship to the appropriate authorities (Acts 16:37-38; 22:22-29; 23:27). He initially affirmed at Caesarea the equity of Roman provincial governance (Acts 24:10) but ultimately preferred to entrust himself to an imperial legal decision by appealing to Caesar (Acts 25:10-12, 25; 26:32; 28:19).

Peter acknowledged that believers were suffering in the imperial capital ("Babylon"; 1 Pet 5:13) and in the provinces at the hands of hostile communities and officials. He advised exemplary behavior and political quietism (1 Pet 2:13-15; 4:19). Suffering* as a Christian was the will of God (1 Pet 3:17; 4:13, 19) and was to be patiently endured because it inaugurated the apocalyptic* judgment* of the world and would end in joy* (1 Pet 4:1, 7, 17; 5:6-10; see Endurance). While the devil (see Satan) is identified as the ultimate enemy (1 Pet 5:8-9), a clear connection is not made with him to anti-Christian communities or Roman authorities (see Civil Authority). Christians are called to submit to the "king" (= emperor) and to the governors sent to punish malefactors and commend those who do right (1 Pet 2:13-14, 17; cf. Rom 13:1-7).

Hebrews,* which may well have been written to Rome, indicates past and present Christian sufferings at the hands of government officials (Heb 10:32-34). The recipients are challenged to see in this God's discipline, to persevere in their faith, to help fellow sufferers and to wait upon God's apocalyptic sweeping aside of the old order in favor of the new (Heb 10:32—12:29). Here too the writer does not, as it were, pass judgment upon government authority.

Revelation, to the contrary, in a later decade expresses an apocalyptic picture of anti-Christian government and its ultimate end (see Revelation, Book of). There is no reason to doubt that John, exiled on Patmos by the provincial authority (Rev 1:9), has Roman emperors* particularly in view when he speaks of "beasts"* with horns, heads and crowns who rule over the earth's inhabitants, utter blasphemy against God, martyr Christians and demand worship (Rev 13; 17; see Martyrdom). The references suggest the ruler cult in which deificatory honors were voted by the Senate to deceased emperors. Some emperors, however, not content to be known as "sons of the gods," ambitiously pressed for divinization in their lifetimes—with disastrous effects. Christians are challenged by John to endure patiently and in faith (Rev 14:12) until the beast is divinely judged (Rev 19:19-20).

Clement (1 Clem. 60.4—61.2), Ignatius (passim) and Polycarp* (Pol. Phil. 12.3) seem to follow the earlier apostolic attitude of a prayerful and cooperative rather than stridently negative attitude toward the Roman authority.

See also CHRONOLOGY; EMPEROR, EMPEROR CULT; MARTYRDOM; PERSECUTION; ROME AND ROMAN CHRISTIANITY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. S. Benko and J. J. O'Rourke, The Catacombs and the Colosseum: The Roman Empire as the Setting of Primitive Christianity (Valley Forge, PA: Judson, 1971); T. R. S. Broughton, "The Roman Army" in The Beginnings of Christianity, ed. F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake (5 vols.; Grand Rapids: Baker, 1979 [1932]) 5:427-45; P. A. Brunt, "Charges of Provincial Maladministration Under the Early Principate," Historia 10 (1961) 189-227; L. Casson, Ships and Seamanship in the Ancient World (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1971); idem, Travel in the Ancient World (London: George Allen & Unwin, 1974); P. Garnsey, "The Criminal Jurisdiction of Governors," JRS 58 (1966) 51-59; idem, Social Status and Legal Privilege in the Roman Empire (Oxford: Clarendon, 1970); P. Garnsey and R. Saller, The Roman Empire: Economy, Society and Culture (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1987); R. M. Grant, "Roman Empire," IDB 4:103-9; B. Levick, The Government of the Roman Empire: A Sourcebook (London and Sydney: Croom Helm, 1985); H. Musurillo, ed., The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford: Clarendon, 1972); B. M. Rapske, Paul in Roman Custody (BAFCS 3; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994); A. N. Sherwin-White, Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament (Sarum Lectures 1961-62; Oxford: Clarendon, 1963); J. Wacher, The Roman Empire (London and Melbourne: J. M. Dent & Sons, 1987); G. Webster, The Roman Imperial Army of the First and Second Centuries A.D. (3d ed.; London: A & C Black, 1985); C. Wells, The Roman Empire (2d ed.; London: Fontana/Harper Collins, 1992). B. M. Rapske

ROME AND ROMAN CHRISTIANITY

Rome of the first and early second centuries A.D., as principal city of Italy and administrative seat of so much of the ancient world, is synonymous with both the empire and the civilization it spawned. The focus of this article, however, is drawn somewhat more narrowly upon the city itself as well as Christianity's early establishment in and relations with it.

1. The City of Rome
2. Roman Christianity

1. The City of Rome.

1.1. Situation. According to legend, the city of Rome was founded by Romulus in 753 B.C. Cicero wrote: "It seems to me that Romulus must at the very beginning have had a divine intimation that the city would one day be the seat and hearthstone of a mighty empire; for scarcely could a city placed upon any other site in Italy have more easily maintained our present widespread dominion" (Cicero De Repub. 2.5.10). The movement from republic to empire and the corresponding increase in the sphere of Rome's governance only confirmed this assessment. The city was ideally located at a crossroads of several major land routes, the bridgehead of the river Tiber, connected with the sea and at the geographic heart of the Mediterranean.

About 15 miles inland from the mouth of the river Tiber, Rome spread on the east over the seven hills (the central Palatine encircled by the Capitoline, Aventine, Caelian, Esquiline, Viminal and Quirinal), northeast from the seven hills over the floodplain known as the Campus Martius and over the Transtiberim in the area west of the river. The Tiber gave Rome an access to the Mediterranean Sea that was of immense importance to its commercial development. The strategic weaknesses in security implicit in such easy maritime access, however, were significantly counterbalanced by the seven hills, which acted as a natural fortress, and by the 13.2 miles of walls that circumscribed them.

1.2. Population. Rome was both populous and cosmopolitan. During the later republican period, Italians displaced and destitute because of war migrated to Rome as a place of refuge and opportunity. Prisoners of war were the human fuel of its ancient economy and a means whereby the wealthy might demonstrate their place in the élite hierarchy. The population may have quintupled during this time.

After the turbulence of the shift to imperial administration came a period of relative stability and growth that had profound effects upon the capital city. The increasing inflow of resources through taxation and commerce furnished Rome with the means to feed, maintain, build, entertain and significantly enrich itself. Foreign merchants, entrepreneurs and fortune seekers were drawn to this concentration of wealth. As the most significant administrative and juridical seat of the Mediterranean, Rome was also a place of great influence and opportunity for those who sought social and political advancement. A city so awash in wealth and greatness also drew educators and tourists and with them all, invariably, new cultural and religious practices and philosophical ideas.

The population was comprised of the few and the many: At the tip of the pyramid was the emperor and his household. Next was a group of some six hundred aristocratic citizen families who met the minimum property requirement of one million sesterces and from whose ranks magistracies, places in the Senate and consular posts were filled. The larger equestrian order was comprised of freeborn and highborn citizens possessing a minimum of four hundred thousand sesterces who might better their standing in the social hierarchy through serving in a number of salaried military, procuratorial and Roman civic posts. This was the fractional community of Rome.

The great mass of the city's population consisted of lowborn citizens, freedmen, foreigners and slaves. The poor vastly outnumbered the rich; men outnumbered women; and there were fewer children than adults. Average life expectancy is generally agreed to have been about twenty-five years.

Rome probably had a first-century A.D. population of about one million inhabitants. This figure is based upon a combination of indicators: the average dietetic value of grain, records of the amount of grain sent annually to Rome, records of the number of adult male citizens who qualified for the official public grain distribution (5 modii monthly, year round) and calculations of what proportion of the total population the grain distribution recipients would have represented.

1.3. Accommodation. The capital city was a cripplingly expensive place to live. If Julius Caesar's maximum remittances to soldiers were an attempt at general parity, they suggest that accommodation in the city was about four times more expensive than anywhere else in Italy (Suetonius Julius Caesar 38.2; cf. Martial Epigr. 3.38.5; 12.32.2-3; Juvenal Sat. 3.164-66, 223-25; 9.63-64; 10.18). Only the very wealthy and privileged few could afford to own or rent a spacious private house (domus). These were generally situated on the ridges or slopes of the seven hills where ventilation, drainage and view were best. They were designed for comfort and as a means of displaying wealth and social position.

The rest of Rome's million inhabitants lived in the valleys between the hills and in the areas close to the river Tiber, in a room or rooms in one of the many thousands of multistory tenement buildings (insulae). A typical structure might be three to five stories high, having a central courtyard and shop dwellings at street level and apartments above.

The need to house a large population and investors' prospects for speculating in the rental market often frustrated sound architectural principles and imperial legislation for safety. Structures were frequently built cheaply, as high as legally permissible and with a mix of rent levels and degree of tenant crowding that generated the highest profits. In consequence, fires and building collapses were all too common (cf. Strabo Geog. 5.3.7; Seneca Ben. 6.15.7; Seneca De Ira 3.35.5; Juvenal Sat. 3.190-98; Aulus Gellius Noc. Att. 15.1.2-3).

Height was inversely proportional to rental cost and therefore reflected the renter's status and means. Ground- and first-floor units could only be afforded by the better-off, and leases were generally long-term and end-paid. The less easily accessible and more dangerous upper floors and rooftop garrets housed much poorer renters; lease arrangements for them were less favorable (cf. Martial Epigr. 1.117.7; Juvenal Sat. 3.198-208, 232-35).

Those who could not afford even a rooftop garret might seek accommodation in a boarding house or an inn. These were often disreputable places peopled by individuals of dubious morals (cf. Petronius Sat. 94—97). The most destitute—and Rome would have had many—slept in shanties against walls, in stairwells, cellars, vaults and tombs or wherever they might find a relatively safe place.

1.4. Administration. It was evident in the latter years of the republic that existing administrative institutions were incapable of dealing efficiently with a city of such size and population density. Augustus, in consequence,created a new administrative order. Rome was divided into fourteen regiones, each of which was in the charge of a praetor, tribune or aedile chosen by lot (cf. Suetonius Augustus 30; Dio Cassius Hist. 55.8). These regiones were further divided into 265 neighborhood wards (vici), and each ward was under the care of four district superintendents (Pliny Nat. Hist. 3.66-67).

Specific administrative and policing responsibilities in the capital were assigned to various individuals. The urban prefect, a senatorial appointee, was charged with general oversight of the city, including siting new statues, repair work to public buildings and peacekeeping. He presided over his own court. Under him were three cohorts (the cohortes urbanae) charged with keeping law and order in the city. The praetorian prefect, drawn from the equestrian ranks, had oversight of a military force of nine cohorts (the cohortes praetoriae), of which no more than three were to be situated in the city at a time. These were the emperor's personal bodyguards who, outside of duties during wartime, discharged ceremonial functions and could also assist in quelling civil disturbances. They were eventually housed by Tiberius in barracks at the Viminal gate.

Because of the continuing fire risk to the capital, Augustus instituted a seven-cohort corps (the cohortes vigilum) under the direction of an equestrian prefect. Their duties were night patrol or peacekeeping and firefighting. Each cohort was quartered in and had charge of two regiones of the city.

Mention should also be made of the two detachments of soldiers in Rome whose principal tasks were the supervision of navigation on the river Tiber and patrol of the military harbors. They were stationed at the castra Misenatium.

The water supply of the capital was also a matter of official interest. The construction and care of aqueducts fell to curatores aquarum. Near the end of the first century A.D., 9 aqueducts fed 591 open water basins throughout the city (Frontinus 2.78; cf. Strabo Geog. 5.3.8; Pliny Nat. Hist. 36.123). A. Scobie calculates that these furnished 992,000 cubic meters of fresh water daily for Rome's consumption and bathing needs. Aediles supervised the building and maintenance of the extensive sewer network of the city. Few dwellings, however, were directly connected to it. The resulting refuse disposal and sanitation methods (cf. Martial Epigr. 10.5.11-12; Juvenal Sat. 3.269-77; Dig. Just. 43.10.1.5) probably contributed significantly to the low average life expectancy.

Except for wagons used during official religious events, wheeled traffic was banned during daylight hours. While this reduced congestion and fatalities when the populace was up and about the streets, the resultant nighttime traffic led to great disturbance and sleeplessness (Juvenal Sat. 3.232-39, 254-61).

1.5. Food. It was a challenge to feed the vast population of Rome. The Roman diet consisted of such produce as olives and olive oil, wine, honey, onions, radishes, turnips and other tubers, green vegetables, fruits, fish and poultry and, for those who could afford it, pork, mutton and beef. Condiments included salt, pepper and a briny fish sauce called garum. The staple of the Roman diet, however, was grain.

The regular supply of grain to the capital was an absolute priority for the imperial administration, requiring importation from various points, notably Africa and Egypt. A large segment of the citizen population was dependent upon the monthly distribution of grain (frumentum publicum). The numbers of those entitled to subsidized or free grain fluctuated over time from 150,000 to 320,000 through the later republican to early imperial period. Scarcity of grain and inflated prices at Rome had resulted in civil disorder in Rome (cf. Seneca Brev. Vit. 18.5; Dio Cassius Hist. 55.26.2-3; 60.11; Tacitus Ann. 2.87; 6.13; 12.43; Suetonius Claudius 18—19). As such, the grain supply was a matter of considerable political importance to the emperors. Responsibility for supervising the supply from the provinces to Rome's grain market fell to an imperial appointee of equestrian rank called the praefectus annonae.

2. Roman Christianity.

2.1. Early Developments. No clear indication can be found of the first appearance of Christianity in Rome. Earliest exposure of Latin speakers to the gospel seems to have occurred at Pentecost* in Jerusalem* (Acts 2:5, 10-11, 14). Whether these were residents or pilgrims, Luke's information suggests the probable line of interchange along which Christianity made its way to the imperial capital in the fourth decade A.D. (cf. Tacitus Ann. 15.44.2). Christian proselytism in Rome appears to have been vigorous in the fifth decade. The Claudian expulsion edict of A.D. 49 (Suetonius Claudius 25.4) caught the tentmaking missionaries Aquila and Priscilla in its wake (Acts 18:2-3, 18-28). Whether the unrest had to do with Christianity is somewhat uncertain (Suetonius uses the phrase impulsore Chresto; Luke is silent). By the late sixth decade Paul could acknowledge the Roman church's long existence (Rom 15:23-24; cf. Acts 19:21), renowned faith (Rom 1:8) and evangelistic zeal (Rom 16:3-16).

2.2. Paul. Paul arrived in Rome as a prisoner missionary at the beginning of the seventh decade A.D. (Acts 28:14). Like Ignatius* on the way to Rome and Peregrinus in Palestine at a later time, Paul received the official and public support of the church's leadership in Rome (namely, the "brothers," Acts 28:15). His motivation in early calling the leaders of the Jews together to speak with them was strategically wise. The Jewish community, dating back to before 139 B.C., might have numbered as many as fifty thousand in the city. They were a significant, if not generally loved, presence with vital connections to official Judaism* in Jerusalem (Acts 28:21). Though probably not centrally organized, they could exert considerable power through public demonstration, and they had influence in high places (cf. Josephus Life 3 §16; Josephus J.W. 2.6.1 §80; 2.7.1 §105 [Josephus Ant. 17.11.1 §300; 17.12.1 §330-31]; Josephus Ant. 20.8.11 §195; Tacitus Ann. 16.6). Non-Christian Jews and Christians in Rome appear not to have interacted at that time if Acts 28:22 is any indication.

Because he was a prisoner under restraint and not likely to have been permitted to ply his trade, Paul's rented accommodation was probably a third-floor or higher room in a tenement rather than a spacious house or lower-level apartment (Acts 28:16, 23, 30). The increasingly larger numbers of those who came to hear him (Acts 28:17, 23, 30) imply the availability of a gathering place (perhaps an apartment courtyard?). Paul's ministry in these circumstances, far from being frustrated or fruitless, was effective (Acts 28:24-25, 30-31; cf. Phil 1:12-15). Luke's description of Paul's engaging in a free, house church type of ministry (Acts 28:30-31; cf. Acts 1:13; 9:37; 20:8; Mart. Justin Rec. A & B 3.3 on the use of upper rooms) is positive, forward reaching and powerful by ancient Christian reckoning. The custodial arrangements suggest both official tolerance and a favorable Roman assessment of Paul's prospects for release at the end of the two full years.

Being a Roman citizen, of legal age and formally domiciled in the city, Paul may have been able to defray some of the high living costs by sharing in the monthly grain distribution. That he was a prisoner would have been immaterial to his legal entitlement (cf. Seneca Ben. 4.28.2).

2.3. 1 Peter, Hebrews and Revelation. 1 Peter 5:13 appears to make the connection between the apostle* Peter, the "elect lady" (referring to the church) and Babylon,* the image of the conquering world power that, most scholars agree, refers to Rome. Ignatius asserts that Peter "commanded" the Roman church (Ign. Rom. 4.3); Clement (see Clement of Rome) indicates that he was martyred there (1 Clem. 5—6). Peter and the Roman believers can well identify with the trouble and hostility being experienced by the letter's recipients (1 Pet 4:17; 5:9). Peter instructs them to exemplary living in the face of community slander and submission rather than militancy toward the secular authority (1 Pet 2:13-17; see Civil Authority). The challenge to good domestic relations and hospitality* (1 Pet 2:18—3:7; 4:9, 17) intimates the Roman pattern of using homes as meeting places. Church leadership is in the hands of "elders" (1 Pet 5:1-5). We may doubt that Peter visited Rome as early as the fourth decade (see Acts 12:17 for the cryptic reference to "another place"). The date of the letter is probably the eve of the Neronian persecution* of A.D. 64 (Tacitus Ann. 15.44; Suetonius Nero 16; see 1 Peter).

There is reason, beyond the rather ambiguous greeting from the "Italians" (Heb 13:24), to believe that the book of Hebrews* may have been written to the Roman church. The earliest attestations to Hebrews come from 1 Clement and Shepherd of Hermas, which both are connected with Rome. The writer's concern is that Roman believers not reject Jesus in order to return to something like Judaism. He recalls to them their steadfastness in earlier sufferings of public ridicule and persecution, imprisonment and the confiscation of their property (Heb 10:32-34) and encourages them to stand firm in faith and upright behavior and to maintain community cohesion (Heb 13). Again one sees a call to practice hospitality through the troubles. The reminder that they do not live in an "enduring city" (Heb 13:14) may serve warning against endearing themselves not only to Jerusalem and what it symbolizes but also to Rome as well.

While the image of Babylon in the Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) may not be exhausted by exclusive application to Rome, there is much about the imperial capital that well fits the apocalyptic* denunciation. Babylon is the "great city" (Rev 16:19; 18:10, 16, 19, 21) seated on "seven hills" (Rev 17:9) and "the waters" which are "peoples, multitudes, nations and languages" (Rev 17:1, 15). It is the political power which holds kings and nations in thrall (Rev 17:2, 18; 18:3, 9), the great parasite to which vast goods and wealth go (Rev 18 passim). Babylon is the prostitute; morally corrupt and a corruptor (Rev 14:8; 17:5; 18:2). It is the place where the blood of the apostles, prophets* and saints has been shed (Rev 17:6; 18:20, 24). John calls for believers to "come out of" or disassociate themselves from the city's sins (Rev 18:4). These indications and the exile of John (Rev 1:9) suggest a time of persecution somewhere in the final four decades of the first century A.D.

2.4. The Apostolic Fathers. 1 Clement, written from Rome about A.D. 96, refers to the church there as "sojourners" (1 Clem. presc.). This image of transience may spring in part from the "sudden and repeated" persecutions that have delayed the epistle's writing (1 Clem. 1.1). The apostles Peter and Paul are held up as past examples of endurance* to the point of martyrdom* "among us" (1 Clem. 6.1). The vigorous encouragements to hospitality and good order in homes (1 Clem. 1.2-3; 11.1; 12.1, 3) implies the continued use of house churches throughout the city.

Ignatius writes to the church at Rome shortly before his martyrdom (c. A.D. 108). He indicates the Roman church's primacy over other churches in Italy (Ign. Rom. presc.; 2.1) and reminds it of the directive ministry of the apostles Peter and Paul (Ign. Rom. 4.3). Ignatius's pleas that the Roman church not hinder his martyrdom (Ign. Rom. 1—2 et passim) may suggest its ability successfully to influence the secular judicial power. It receives correspondence concerning the flow of Christian prisoners to the capital and is told to continue to help and encourage them (Ign. Rom. 10.2).

Shepherd of Hermas, written perhaps as early as the first or second decade of the second century A.D., indicates the Roman church's directive ministry to other churches: Clement, it is said, writes letters that are sent out in the name of the Roman presbyters and bishops (Herm. Vis. 2.4). The Roman church is led by elders, bishops, teachers and deacons (Herm. Vis. 2.4; 3.1, 5; see Church Order, Government) and has a ministry to and possibly of widows and orphans (Herm. Vis. 2.4; Herm. Sim. 9.28). Persecutions have caused certain wealthy believers to deny the faith (Herm. Vis. 3.2; 3.5-6; Herm. Sim. 1). True religion is expressed by, among other things, helping widows, orphans and the needy, ransoming believers from afflictions and being hospitable (Herm. Man. 8; cf. Herm. Sim. 1; 9.27).

See also BABYLON; CENTERS OF CHRISTIANITY; CLEMENT OF ROME; EMPEROR, EMPEROR CULT; HEBREWS; 1 PETER; REVELATION, BOOK OF; ROMAN EMPIRE, CHRISTIANS AND THE; SHEPHERD OF HERMAS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. S. Benko and J. J. O'Rourke, The Catacombs and the Colosseum: The Roman Empire as the Setting of Primitive Christianity (Valley Forge, PA: Judson, 1971); R. E. Brown and J. P. Meier, Antioch and Rome: New Testament Cradles of Catholic Christianity (New York: Paulist, 1983); J. Carcopino, Daily Life in Ancient Rome (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1940); A. D. Clarke, "Rome and Italy" in The Book of Acts in Its Greco-Roman Setting, ed. D. W. J. Gill and C. Gempf (BAFCS 2; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994) 456-78; B. W. Frier, Landlords and Tenants in Imperial Rome (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1980); idem, "The Rental Market in Early Imperial Rome," JRS 67 (1977) 27-37; P. Garnsey and R. Saller, The Roman Empire: Economy, Society and Culture (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1987); A. G. McKay, Houses, Villas and Palaces in the Roman World (Aspects of Greek and Roman Life; Southampton: Thames & Hudson, 1975); R. Meiggs, Roman Ostia (2d ed.; Oxford: Clarendon, 1973); W. J. Oates, "The Population of Rome," Classical Philology 29 (1934) 101-16; J. R. Patterson, "The City of Rome: From Republic to Empire," JRS 82 (1992) 186-215; B. M. Rapske, Paul in Roman

Custody (BAFCS 3; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994); G. Rickman, The Corn Supply of Ancient Rome (Oxford: Clarendon, 1980); O. F. Robinson, Ancient Rome: City Planning and Administration (New York amd London: Routledge, 1992); A. Scobie, "Slums, Sanitation and Mortality in the Roman World," Klio 68 (1986) 399-433; J. E. Stambaugh, The Ancient Roman City (Ancient Society and History; Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1988).

B. M. Rapske

RULE OF FAITH. See CREEDS, CONFESSIONAL FORMS.

RULER OF THIS AGE. See SATAN, DEVIL.

S

SABBATH. See LORD'S DAY.

SABORAIM. See JUDAISM, POST-A.D. 70.

SACRED SPACE. See LAND IN EARLY CHRISTIANITY.

SACRIFICE, OFFERINGS, GIFTS

In the world of the first century the offering of sacrifices was a common feature of the traditional religion of the Greeks and Romans (see Religions, Greco-Roman), as it was for adherents of Judaism,* even though Jewish ritual was differentiated from the former by its rejection of any kind of human sacrifice. This cultural background enabled the concept of Jesus' death as a sacrifice to be comprehended by Greeks and Romans without much difficulty. However, the early Christians' insistence that Jesus' death eliminated the need for any further animal sacrifices set them apart from both the pagan culture as well as the Jewish religion, which continued to offer animal sacrifices in Jerusalem until its destruction in A.D. 70.

1. Jesus' Death as Sacrifice
2. Christian Sacrifice

1. Jesus' Death as Sacrifice.

1.1. Acts. Jerusalem* with its temple* played an important role in the early chapters of Acts* as the locus of the fulfillment of God's* promises* to Israel.* To them God gave his law* as living oracles (Acts 7:38) with attendant instructions concerning sacrifices. However, Israel's worship of God was not always pure, for Israel's history was replete with either sacrifices offered to idols* (Acts 7:41) or sacrifices offered to God accompanied by a stubborn heart (Acts 7:42, 51). Nonetheless, Luke also indicates that, apart from Israel's disobedience, there was something deficient in this sacrificial system of Mosaic law: it was unable to free or justify the believer and thereby grant forgiveness* of sins, which the apostles* claimed was now possible through Jesus (Acts 13:38-39).

Although Luke's general treatment of salvation* is based upon the death and resurrection* of Jesus as a unified matrix of events (e.g., Acts 2:23-24; 3:15; 5:30-31; see Death of Christ), the significance of Jesus' death for procuring forgiveness of sins is not wholly absent (cf. Acts 20:28; and the citation of Is 53 in Acts 8:32-33). Moreover there is an underlying recognition that the death and resurrection of Jesus is in continuity with and fulfillment of the OT (cf. Acts 13:32; 24:14; 28:23). It may seem surprising, therefore, that Luke describes an occasion where Paul offers Nazarite sacrifices (Num 6:1-21) in the temple (accompanying his vow in Acts 21:23-26; cf. Acts 24:18), even though Christ's death has already secured forgiveness of sins by the shedding of his own blood (Acts 20:28). Paul was clearly indifferent to these Nazarite offerings (cf. 1 Cor 9:19-20), and there is no reason to infer that Luke's record of this incident suggests that Christ's sacrificial death required any further offering prescribed by the Mosaic law. The pressing need for Paul's involvement in these temple activities was not initiated by the apostle but suggested by the Jerusalem elders for the purpose of not offending the Jews. This was the reason for Paul's action, as was his decision to circumcise* Timothy (Acts 16:3). However, Paul's desire not to offend the Jews did not extend to his willingness to compromise the gospel (Acts 15:2-11), nor did it prevent him from turning to the Gentiles* in the face of Jewish opposition, in accordance with Isaiah's prophecy (Acts 28:25-28).

1.2. Hebrews. Like Paul, the author of Hebrews* recognizes the climactic finality of the death of Christ (see DPL, Sacrifice, Offering). The writer is at pains to emphasize that Jesus' death has made the first covenant,* with its sacrifices and offerings, obsolete (Heb 8:13). This has come about by way of fulfillment rather than merely by replacement.

The continuity between the old and the new is evident not only in the pattern of the tabernacle,* reflecting the heavenly original (Heb 8:5; cf. Acts 7:44), but also by the manner of Jesus' priestly sacrifice, which of necessity shares aspects with the levitical high priest's ritual (Heb 8:3; cf. Heb 13:11-12). Like the high priest,* Jesus is chosen rather than self-appointed (Heb 5:4-5); like the high priest, he offers gifts and sacrifices to God on behalf of men and women (Heb 5:1; 8:3); like the high priest, Jesus is able to sympathize with human frailty (Heb 2:17-18; 4:15; 5:2).

However, there are distinct differences. Jesus' high priesthood is not an earthly high priesthood but rather a heavenly one (Heb 5:6; 7:16-17); Aaron stands (Heb 10:11), whereas Jesus sits (Heb 10:12); unlike Aaron, Jesus takes office with an oath (Heb 7:21-22, 28); where the number of levitical high priests are multiple and each holds limited tenure (Heb 7:23-24), Jesus' priesthood is singular and forever; the high priests under the law make offering first for themselves and then for the people (Heb 5:3, 7:27; 9:7), yet Jesus, being sinless, has no need to offer sacrifice for his own sin. In summary, Jesus' high priesthood is of the order of Melchizedek,* the very existence of which presupposes the inadequacy of the Aaronic priesthood (Heb 6:20–7:28).

The reason for a careful description of Jesus' high priesthood, however, lies in the kind of offering that he makes. Unlike the Mosaic offerings of bulls and goats, it is the offering of himself, the offering of his body through his blood, that the writer to the Hebrews wishes to emphasize (Heb 9:12, 14, 26; 10:10). This sacrifice secures redemption,* which is an eternal redemption (Heb 9:12). Moreover, the efficacy of the old covenant sacrifices finds its explanation in the sacrifice of Christ. For under the typology of Mosaic sacrifices and offerings, the conscience* of the worshiper was not perfected. However, Christ's death is retrospective in efficacy. For whereas the blood of bulls and goats could never take away sins (Heb 10:4, 11), the sacrifice of Christ has guaranteed the forgiveness of sins committed under the old covenant, that is, the sins of the penitent living under the old covenant (Heb 9:15), as well as the sins of the penitent living under the new covenant (Heb 10:19-22).

Previously forgiveness was declared to Israel through the work of the high priest (Lev 4:20, 26, 31, 35). Yet this forgiveness, while it was not illusory (contrary to Schenk), was promissory. For the efficacy of the ritual pronouncement of forgiveness lay not in the animal sacrifices of Mosaic legislation but in the future prospect of Jesus' sacrifice, of which the sacrifice of bulls and goats was but a copy, a shadow of the good things to come (Heb 8:5; cf. Rom 3:25-26).

The fullness of God's promise to save has arrived with the time of reformation (Heb 9:10), when Christ offered for all time a single sacrifice for sins (Heb 10:12; cf. Heb 1:3). In the light of this declaration of forgiveness, there is no longer any need of an offering for sin (Heb 10:18).

1.3. 1 Peter. Although Peter does not use the language of sacrifice and offering when describing Jesus' death, the concept is patently present (see 1 Peter). The ransom of believers by "the precious blood of Christ, like that of a lamb without blemish or defect" (1 Pet 1:19) is clearly cast in the sacrificial terms of the OT. Jesus bore our sins in his body on the tree (1 Pet 2:24), so that he might bring us close to God having died for sins once for all (1 Pet 3:18). This emphasis on the uniqueness of Christ's death, requiring no repetition, echoes the teaching found in the letter to the Hebrews.

1.4. 1 John. John (see John, Letters of), like Peter, does not explicitly use the language of sacrifice and offering, but he does speak of the removal of sin (1 Jn 3:5) and of Jesus' death as the propitiation for our sins (1 Jn 2:2; 4:10). The apostle is intent on teaching his readers that a remedy for sin is found in Jesus' death and that through that death we may be cleansed from all sin and find forgiveness. Moreover, while sin may still persist in the believer, the forgiveness flowing from Jesus' blood is constant, thus echoing the uniqueness and efficacy of Jesus' sacrifice.

1.4. Revelation. The technical language for offerings and sacrifice is not found in the Revelation to John (see Revelation, Book of); however, like some of the other later NT letters,* there is a focus upon the death of Christ that is unmistakably set within the sacrificial framework. The opening verses remind readers that they have been freed from their sins by the blood of Jesus (Rev 1:5). He is the lamb* that was slain (Rev 5:6,12; 13:8), and the blood of the lamb cleanses the saints (Rev 7:14) and makes them conquerors (Rev 12:11). The implicit finality and centrality of the lamb's sacrifice for the people of God (Rev 5:9) is highlighted by the absence of the temple in the new Jerusalem (Rev 21:22), since the final sacrifice has been made once and for all.

2. Christian Sacrifice.

2.1. Hebrews. The writer to the Hebrews, more than any other NT writer, stresses the finality and unrepeatable nature of Jesus' death as sacrifice and thus establishes the theological rationale for recognizing the obsolescence of offering any further animal sacrifices. However, like Paul, the writer to the Hebrews continues to employ the language of sacrifice when describing the Christian's response to the sacrifice of Christ. In this way the writer redefines the cultic categories, originally applying only to the temple and its sacrificial order, to the whole life of the Christian. This concept receives particular emphasis at the close of the letter, where the language of sacrifice and offering is now descriptive of lives of obedience and praise* (Heb 13:15-16), a fulfillment of Psalm 40:6-8, which the author had previously cited in Hebrews 10:5.

In a similar vein to Paul's instruction to present one's body as a living sacrifice (Rom 12:1-2), Hebrews declares that the sacrifices pleasing to God are the fruit of lips that acknowledge his name and the display of good works that emanates from those sanctified under the new covenant. This is the acceptable worship* that Christians are to offer God with reverence and awe (Heb 12:28). This new covenant worship includes loving fellow Christians (Heb 13:1), showing hospitality* (Heb 13:2), remembering prisoners (Heb 13:3) and holding marriage* in honor (Heb 13:4). It is acceptable "worship" (latreia) that is offered by Christians, because it is offered in response to the one sufficient offering of the blood of Christ (Heb 9:14). This is aptly described as "the participation of believers in the worship of Jesus" (Peterson 1992, 238-46).

2.2. 1 Peter, James and Revelation. The concept of Christian sacrifice as a response to God's grace in Christ* is also evident in Peter's first epistle. Christians are "like living stones being built into a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood, to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ" (1 Pet 2:5; see House; Stone). The nature of these spiritual sacrifices is not defined. However, the use of the word "spiritual" (pneumatikos) identifies them as those activities that are characteristic of new covenant believers, who have been sanctified by the Holy Spirit* (1 Pet 1:2). In contrast to the sacrifices regulated by the OT, which were only offered by the levitical priests, all believers are now a holy priesthood, and their whole lives, characteristic of children of obedience (1 Pet 1:14; see Son), are seen as a holy response to God.

In a similar vein James* describes the new covenant lifestyle as true "religion" (thrēskeia). This term was originally replete with ritualistic content but now describes such practicalities as visiting orphans and widows (Jas 1:26-27). Although the book of Revelation describes the prayers* of the saints as an offering of incense rising up to God (Rev 5:8; 8:3,4), there is no explicit reference to Christian sacrifice apart from the tangential references to Christians as pillars in God's temple (Rev 3:12) and their worship day and night in the heavenly temple (Rev 7:15). On the last day this will be superseded by the new Jerusalem, which has no temple, though it is characterized by a worshiping, obedient people (Rev 21:22; 22:3-5).

2.3. Apostolic Fathers. In accordance with the later writers of the NT, the apostolic fathers recognized Jesus' death as a fulfillment of OT sacrifices (note the elaborate detail of the description in Barn. 7.1-11; 8.1-7, which Behm, 190, calls a "rather crude spiritualising"). The fulfillment found in Christ has thereby abolished the need for ritual sacrifices in the Christian era (Barn. 2.6). The *Epistle to Diognetus, when it compares the worship of Christians and Jews, suggests that the offering of ritual sacrifices to God is foolishness rather than reverence, because God has no need of such offerings (Diogn. 3.1-5; cf. Barn. 2.7-8). The sacrifice to be offered by Christians is that of praise (1 Clem. 35.12; 52.3); the sacrifice of a broken heart (Barn. 2.10; cf. 1 Clem. 18.17; 52.4); the sacrifice of fasting (Herm Sim. 5.3). Nonetheless, Clement (see Clement of Rome) can also draw upon the stipulations for OT sacrifices to counter anti-institutional abuses in the church (cf. 1 Clem. 41.2 and the comments of Daly 1978 Origins, 85-86).

Moreover, in the Didache is found the beginning of a trend, to be developed in later centuries, of associating the sacrificial language of the OT with the celebration of the Lord's Supper. This text even describes the offering as a sacrifice (Did. 14.2; cf. Justin Martyr Dial. Tryph. 41) and cites Malachi 1:11 as the justification for this language. The reference to the "gifts" (dōra) of the bishop in 1 Clement 44.4 may also allude to the Eucharist. Yet this development was a distinct break from the teaching of the apostles. While the authors of the NT guarded the uniqueness of the sacrifice of Christ, they were willing to use the language of sacrifice and offering when they described the ethical* obedience of Christians but never applied sacrificial language to a liturgical setting (Daly 1978 Origins, 82). Such a narrow focus was to play a major role in the development of the Christian priesthood and the sacrifice of the Roman Mass, but it always lacked the endorsement of the NT.

See also COVENANT, NEW COVENANT; CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE; DEATH OF CHRIST; HEBREWS; LAMB; LORD'S SUPPER, LOVE FEAST; MARTYRDOM; PRIEST, HIGH PRIEST; TABERNACLE, SANCTUARY; WORSHIP AND LITURGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. T. Beckwith and M. J. Selman, eds., Sacrifice in the Bible (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1995); J. Behm, "θύω κτλ," TDNT 3:180-90; R. J. Daly, Christian Sacrifice: The Judeo-Christian Background Before Origen (Washington, DC: Catholic University of America, 1978); idem, The Origins of the Christian Doctrine of Sacrifice (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1978); D. Kidner, "Sacrifice, Metaphors and Meanings," TynB 33 (1982) 119-36; W. L. Lane, Hebrews (2 vols.; WBC; Dallas: Word, 1991); S. Lyonnet and L. Sabourin, Sin, Redemption and Sacrifice: A Biblical and Patristic Study (Rome: Biblical Institute Press, 1970); D. G. Peterson, Engaging with God (Leicester: Apollos, 1992); idem, Hebrews and Perfection (SNTSMS 47; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1982); W. Schenk, "προσοέρω," EDNT 3:177-78; T. R. Schreiner, "Sacrifice and Offerings in the New Testment," ISBE 4:273-77; H. Thyen, "θυσία, θύω," EDNT 2:161-63; K. Weiss, "προσφέρω," TDNT 9:65-68; F. M. Young, The Use of Sacrificial Ideas in Greek Christian Writers from the New Testament to John Chrysostom (Cambridge, MA: Philadelphia Patristic Foundation, 1979). G. N. Davies

SALVATION

With the noun salvation (sōtēria) is directly associated the verb save (sōzō) and rather more obliquely the noun savior (sōtēr). In both the Septuagint and secular Greek the first two are connected with the notion of physical deliverance (e.g., from peril, illness, death or). "Savior," however, issues from the vocabulary of the ruler cult of the Greco-Roman kingdoms of the NT era. According to the Priene inscription from Asia Minor, "Providence . . . has sent to us . . . a savior . . . who has put an end to war . . . Caesar [Augustus]" (Spicq, 3:353). Throughout the NT this word group lends itself metaphorically to the notion of eschatological* salvation.* The title sōtēr is applied to both God* and the Son* he sent into the world for its salvation (see DPL, Salvation).

1. Acts
2. Hebrews, the General Epistles and Revelation
3. Apostolic Fathers

1. Acts.

The underlying idea of physical deliverance from both illness and may be seen at several points (Acts 4:9; 14:9; 7:25).

The more prominent idea, however, is metaphorical as applied to eschatological salvation. This appears early in the narrative, on the day of Pentecost,* when, in light of the Holy Spirit's* coming, Peter quotes Joel 2:32 (LXX): "Whoever calls on the name of the Lord will be saved." The Spirit's arrival is evidence that the Lord,* uncorrupted by death, is risen and ascended* and that the gate to salvation, as heralded by the prophets,* is now open. Hence, "save yourselves," Peter exhorted his hearers; day by day the Lord added "those who were being saved" (Acts 2:40, 47). Peter makes clear that only in Jesus Christ of Nazareth, crucified but risen, is salvation to be found (Acts 4:12). He is the savior whom God has exalted to his right hand (Acts 5:31; see Exaltation). Against those who asserted that circumcision* was a prerequisite to salvation Peter declared that both Gentiles* and Jews will be saved "through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 15:1, 11). The apostolic word is the announcement but also, as apprehended by the hearers, the means of salvation (Acts 11:14).

In the second part of Acts* Paul, speaking as a Jew to a synagogue* audience, stated that "to us has been sent the message of this salvation." This is the good news about a descendant of King David, Jesus, whom God has brought to Israel* as a "savior," whom, uncorrupted by the grave, God has raised up alive (Acts 13:26, 23, 30-41). But this message, rejected by those Jews, was also for the Gentiles. Indeed God had appointed Paul to be a "light for the Gentiles," to bring God's salvation to them (Acts 13:47). Paul's emphasis in his preaching on salvation may be seen in the Philippian soothsayer's parroting of the message, "These men . . . proclaim to you the way of salvation" (Acts 16:17). This is borne out by the jailer's question, "What must I do to be saved?" to which Paul replied, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and you will be saved" (Acts 16:30, 31).

In short we learn from the ministries* of the apostles Peter and Paul in Acts that salvation is in fulfillment of OT prophecy (see Old Testament in Acts), has become a present but exclusive reality in the death for sins and the resurrection* from the dead of Jesus of Nazareth the descendant of David, and is apprehended by receiving the apostolic message.

2. Hebrews, the General Epistles and Revelation.

The language of salvation appears often in this literature, though with different nuances.

2.1. Hebrews. In the letter to the Hebrews* we find several references to physical salvation from death (Heb 5:7) and from the deluge (Heb 11:7). According to Hebrews, eschatological salvation belongs to the future (Heb 1:14), at the appearing of the Son of God (Heb 9:28; see Son of God). In Hebrews, faith is the active expectation of the salvation, a hope that unceasingly and against all odds presses forward toward it (Heb 11:1-40 passim). Such faith is exercised in obedience* to the good news, promising salvation (Heb 2:3; 4:1-6). This salvation is in the presence of the God who is holy,* whither the incarnate Son of God has already arrived in virtue of his faith and obedience. Thus he is the "file leader" (archēgos) of his people, the exemplar of perseverance and obedience, to be followed after in the path to God's salvation (Heb 12:2). Nonetheless access to this salvation is not by self-effort but "through" the One who is high priest* forever, after the order of Melchizedek* (Heb 7:25, 15-17). He is the "source" of eternal salvation to all who obey him (Heb 5:9), having offered for all time a single sacrifice for sins (Heb 10:12).

2.2. James. In the letter of James* only the verb save is employed. It is the soul that is saved, and it is saved from death and from being "destroyed" (Jas 1:21; 4:12; 5:20). Thus salvation is eschatological. According to James, it is the Lawgiver and Judge, that is, God, who both "saves and destroys" (Jas 4:12). Nonetheless the Lord, that is, the Lord Jesus Christ who is to come (Jas 5:7), will "raise . . . up" those who offer the prayer* of faith,* a deliberate double meaning, pointing to both physical healing* and final resurrection (Jas 5:15). How is one saved, according to James? It is by a lively faith that is authenticated by works (see Faith and Works); an empty or hypocritical faith will not save (Jas 2:14).

2.3. 1 Peter, 2 Peter and Jude. The language of salvation is important in 1 Peter.* Such salvation is a present reality in Jesus Christ, who was predestined before the foundation of the world but who has been made manifest at the end of times (1 Pet 1:20), who "bore our sins on the tree" and who was raised from the dead as "a living hope [of salvation]" for those who believe in him (1 Pet 2:24; 1:3). This salvation, which will be "unveiled in the last time" (1 Pet 1:5), is entered into now through the preaching of the good news (1 Pet 1:12, 23). Baptism,* a response to the gospel, "saves," though not by its water but by the inner reality of a cleansed conscience* in relationship with the God who is holy, through the resurrection of Jesus from the dead (1 Pet 3:21). As not yet revealed, this salvation is the goal or end point of faith (1 Pet 1:9), a salvation for which the "newborn" is nourished by the "pure spiritual milk"* of the gospel (1 Pet 2:2).

There is an alternative to this eschatological salvation. It is the judgment* of the living and the dead by God, who is holy (1 Pet 4:5; 1:15), upon "the passions . . . of ignorance" (1 Pet 1:14; 4:2). Quoting Proverbs 11:31 (LXX), Peter asks, "If the righteous man is scarcely saved, where will the impious and sinner appear?" (1 Pet 4:18).

Only once in 2 Peter* does this language appear: "And count the forbearance of the Lord as salvation" (2 Pet 3:15). Here Peter is alluding to the salvation of which his "beloved brother Paul" wrote (in Rom 2:4?), "as he does in all his letters." Peter recognized the importance of salvation in the writings of the apostle Paul. In a context relating to the sudden, unheralded coming of the Day of the Lord* and its judgment, Peter is teaching that God's withholding of salvation is an expression of divine forbearance, providing space and opportunity for people to find salvation.

Second Peter, like the Pastorals, is marked by a number of references to "savior." Unlike the Pastorals, however, in which both God and the Lord Jesus Christ are called the, or our, savior, 2 Peter confines this title to Jesus Christ. This usage may have been a polemical rebuttal of the contemporary application of this title to the Roman emperors*; Jesus Christ is the true savior. This possibility is strengthened by Peter's bracketing with "savior" other imperial titles, "god" and "Lord" (2 Pet 1:1, 11; 2:20; 3:2, 18). Against pretentious and often evil rulers Jesus is God, Lord and Savior through whom we "escape the corruption that is in the world because of passion and become partakers of the divine nature" (2 Pet 1:4). This is salvation, which "is granted to us by way of God's precious and very great promises" (2 Pet 1:4)

Jude,* unlike 2 Peter, applies the title savior to "the only God our savior" (Jude 25). Thus "our common salvation" is to be attributed to God, who saved a people out of Egypt. The alternative to this salvation is a "punishment of eternal fire" in the "judgment of the great day" (Jude 5, 6, 7). Thus Jude warns, "Save some by snatching them out of the fire" (Jude 23).

2.4. Johannine Literature. The letters of John (see John, Letters of) have only one example from the word group: "the Father has sent the Son as the savior of the world" (1 Jn 4:14; cf. Jn 4:42). In a parallel passage John's meaning becomes clear: "God . . . sent his Son to be the expiation (hilasmos) of our sins" (1 Jn 4:10; cf. 1 Jn 2:2). The Son of God, Jesus Christ the righteous, is the savior because by his death he has propitiated the wrath* of God toward sins or has covered sins (cf. Rom 3:25). Access to this salvation is by means of the apostolic proclamation of the message of the incarnation and death of the Son of God (1 Jn 1:2-3; 2:1-2).

In the Revelation salvation belongs to God, who "sits on the throne" of history and whose "judgments are just and true" (Rev 7:10; 19:1). Sharing that throne with God is the Lamb* (Rev 7:10; 19:1), an indication of the divine sovereignty of the Lamb (cf. Rev 4:11; 5:1-5, 7, 13). Although Revelation is interested in the unfolding of history leading to God's final, apocalyptic* conclusion (Rev 16—22), that history and its consummation are in light of the salvation that is a present reality. The present and the future, which are awesome in their evil, unfold out of the already completed salvation of God in the death and resurrection of the Lamb (Rev 5:7-13). "Now the salvation . . . of our God and the authority of his Christ have come" (Rev 12:10). Thus, despite appearances to the contrary, "the kingdom of the world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ" (Rev 11:15; cf. Rev 1:6; 2:8). Those who "follow the Lamb" in his faithful witness* and in purity* of life (Rev 14:3-5) already have this salvation, already have begun to reign with Christ, as a kingdom and priests to God (Rev 1:6; 20:4, 6) and will not be subject to the "second death" (Rev 2:11; 21:7).

In the General Epistles and the Revelation, for the most part salvation is eschatological in its realization, is a present reality in Jesus Christ, fulfills the expectations of the OT and is made available by the word of God. The letter of James is silent as to its present reality and the OT expectations.

3. Apostolic Fathers.

The "save"/"salvation" vocabulary appears to a limited degree in this literature (most commonly in 2 Clem.). Although these writers are in close historical continuity with the NT, we now step into a different world (see Apostolic Fathers). If the concept of salvation is less, this is probably due to a rather more vague eschatology, both future and realized, than in the NT and unclear views of sin and redemption.*

In 1 Clement the underlying secular notion of physical preservation occurs (e.g., in the reference to OT deliverances, 1 Clem. 7.6-7). But it is not clear that "salvation" is related to the future general resurrection (1 Clem. 25—26) or that it is the eschatological alternative to eternal destruction. It does not appear that such salvation is one's certain possession now, based on the death and resurrection of Christ, as mediated by the gospel. Christ's blood was "poured out for our salvation," but this was to bring "the grace of repentance to all the world." It is this repentance and godly obedience, based on OT examples, that issues in "salvation" (1 Clem. 7.4-7; 9.1-4; 11.1; see Grace; Repentance).

By contrast 2 Clement does appear to hold a view of salvation as a present possession (e.g., 2 Clem. 1.4, 7; 2.7; 3.3; 9.2). 2 Clement, however, lacks the sense of salvation as a "finished work" accessible to faith through the gospel. As with 1 Clement, this author places great emphasis on the ongoing repentance and obedience of the "saved" person. "Keep . . . the seal of baptism undefiled, that we may obtain eternal life" (2 Clem. 8.6).

The letters of Ignatius,* unlike other literature in this period, make reference to the title savior as applied to Christ (e.g., Ign. Eph. 1.1; Ign. Phld. 9.2). Unlike the later NT writings, in which sōtēr is used of Christ polemically to establish an antithesis between him and the imperial rulers, this is not Ignatius's emphasis. The other language of salvation, however, is not prominent in Ignatius (cf. Ign. Eph. 18.1), though he does refer to "immortality" (e.g., Ign. Eph. 17.1) or the "abolition of death" (Ign. Eph. 19.3), the means to which is repentance, membership in the bishop-led church* (see Church Order) and participation in the sacraments, which are "the medicine of immortality" (Ign. Eph. 20.2; Ign. Magn. 6.2; see Worship).

In the *Epistle of Barnabas there is some reference to salvation (e.g., Barn. 1.3; 2.10; 14.8; 16.10; 17.1); however, the way to it is by "works," the keeping of the commandments* of God (Barn. 19.1-12). The vocabulary of salvation is infrequent in Polycarp,* the *Didache and the *Shepherd of Hermas. Hermas does make a connection between baptism and repentance and being saved, but there is no future certainty.

The future salvation brought into the present by the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, in fulfillment of the prophets, as mediated by the word of the gospel—ideas that are so powerfully stated or implied across the later as well as the earlier NT writings—are muted or absent in the postapostolic literature. J. N. D. Kelly concluded that "while enumerating all sorts of benefits bestowed by Christ, the apostolic fathers nowhere co-ordinate their main ideas or attempt to sketch a rationale of salvation" (Kelly, 163).

See also ASSURANCE; BAPTISM, BAPTISMAL RITES; DEATH OF CHRIST; ESCHATOLOGY; FORGIVENESS; GRACE; NEW BIRTH; REDEMPTION; REPENTANCE, SECOND REPENTANCE; RIGHTEOUSNESS; SAVIOR.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. W. Foerster and G. Fohrer, "σώζω κτλ," TDNT 7:965-1003; E. M. B. Green, The Meaning of Salvation (London: Hodder, 1965); J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Doctrines (London: Black, 1980); A. McGrath, Christian Theology: An Introduction (Oxford: Blackwell, 1994); I. H. Marshall, Luke: Historian and Theologian (Exeter: Paternoster, 1970); D. G. Peterson, Hebrews and Perfection (SNTSMS 47; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1982); W. Radl, "σώζω," EDNT 3:319-21; K. H. Schelkle, "σωτηρία," EDNT 3:327-29; C. Spicq, Theological Lexicon of the New Testament (3 vols.; Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1994) 3:344-57; B. H. Throckmorton, "Σώζειν σωτηρία in Luke-Acts," SE 6 (1973) 515-26. P. W. Barnett

SAMARIA

In the NT Samaria is mentioned only in the Gospels and Acts. We cannot be absolutely certain that the term when used in these documents refers to the province rather than a city by that name. Acts, however, makes it clear that this territory or city played a pivotal role in the expansion of early Christianity.

1. History
2. Samaria in Acts

1. History.

1.1. City of Samaria. Omri, king of the northern tribes of Israel, founded the city of Samaria in the latter part of the ninth century B.C. (1 Kings 16:24). From then on it served as the capital of the northern kingdom until the city's destruction by Sargon II of Assyria in 721 B.C. (2 Kings 17). The city of Samaria was then rebuilt as the administrative capital of the Assyrian province of Samaria.

Not much is known about Samaria until the time of the exiles' return from Babylon (see DJG, Samaritans §2.4). In Ezra 4 we find opposition (by those living in the cities of the province of Samaria) to the rebuilding of the temple* in Jerusalem.* Approximately 332 B.C. the capital city itself came under the control of Alexander the Great. However, he soon destroyed it in response to the burning to death of the prefect by the city's inhabitants. Alexander deported many of its inhabitants to Shechem and settled the city with Syro-Macedonians. It then became a non-Samaritan religious city, and Shechem became the Samaritan religious center.

John Hyrcanus captured Shechem in 128 B.C. and destroyed the city of Samaria between 111 and 107 B.C. Herod the Great rebuilt the latter in Hellenistic style and returned it to the glory it had in the Israelite period. He then changed the city's name to Sebaste (i.e., Augusta) in honor of the emperor,* Caesar Augustus.

In the beginning of the Jewish revolt against Rome, Samaria was one of the first cities to suffer. It was captured and sacked by the Jews in the first month of A.D. 66.

1.2. Territory of Samaria. In the centuries following the founding of the city by Omri, the name Samaria was used to designate the area or territory of the northern kingdom lying between Judea to the south and Galilee to the north as well as the city. When Herod the Great rebuilt the city and renamed it Sebaste, the term Samaria was used exclusively to identify the province. Thus it seems more than likely that when the term is used in the NT, in most instances the province is denoted (see Lk 17:11; Jn 4:4; Acts 1:8; 8:1; 9:31; 15:3; see DJG, Samaritans §4).

2. Samaria in Acts.

2.1. Jesus' Commission to Samaria. Acts 1:8 has been considered as a sort of table of contents for Acts* or the theme verse that provides an outline for the book. The geographical places mentioned are significant because Samaria is specifically mentioned. Although Judea and Samaria are attached without a repetition of the Greek article and preposition and thus appear to be a single compound, Luke has Jesus specifically authorizing a mission to Samaria (the only non-Jewish area or city identified). Jesus and Luke thus wish to highlight Samaria as an important place in the "history of salvation" (see Cullmann).

2.2. The Beginnings of the Church in Samaria. Acts 8 details the inception of the church* in Samaria. Persecution* and dispersion of the Jerusalem church (Acts 8:1) brought about the fulfillment of Acts 1:8. But the mission to Samaria was not an evangelistic outreach to Gentiles.* Samaritans were viewed not as Gentiles but as schismatics, heretics or half-breeds. They were regarded as a sort of tertium quid—neither Jew nor Gentile. Thus they stood as a halfway house between the Jewish and Gentile worlds leading to a transition to the Gentile mission.

O. Cullmann argued that the basis for this mission to Samaria was laid by Jesus in the event recorded in John 4. After her encounter with Jesus, the so-called Samaritan woman returned to the city and testified to Jesus. The result was that "many Samaritans from that city believed in him" (Jn 4:39). And it has also been suggested that the behind the speech of Stephen* in Acts 7 lies a Samaritan theology and that Stephen was either a Samaritan and not a Hellenist (Spiro) or that the Hellenists were markedly influenced by Samaritan theology (Scobie). But this understanding of Stephen and the Hellenists has been severely criticized (see, e.g., Hill).

2.2.1. Philip in Samaria. Philip's* venture in to Samaria was a significant break with Jewish tradition. From that point on the gospel began to know no geographic or ethnic bounds. In Samaria he preached, exorcised demons and performed physical healing* (Acts 8:5-8) He also confronted and converted the famous magician, Simon (Acts 8:9-13).

Where Philip did his preaching, signs* and miracles* is a source of debate. In the Greek text of Acts 8:5 the definite article is omitted in some manuscripts before the word city, while in others it is included. If the definite article is omitted, it would seem that the province of Samaria was meant (as it is in the rest of the NT). However, if we follow the earlier and better manuscripts and include the article, then we must decide whether the reference is to Shechem or Sebaste, or even Gitta, the traditional birthplace of Simon (Acts 8:8). Because the religious Samaritan's main center was Shechem and there is no trace of Hellenism in the narrative, it seems that Sebaste should be ruled out. Philip's mission therefore was in the main city of the indigenous Samaritans.

2.2.2. Peter and John in Samaria. When the apostles* in Jerusalem received the news of Philip's success in Samaria, they sent Peter and John to the province (Acts 8:14). The purpose of the visit was not to begin the church but to legitimize and endorse the new church and mission.* This was accomplished as they prayed for the new members and laid hands upon them to bestow the Holy Spirit* (Acts 8:14-17). They also enthusiastically participated in the evangelistic mission, preaching in many Samaritan villages as they returned home (Acts 8:25).

2.2.3. Simon Magus of Samaria. The most prominent person from Samaria in Christian literature is Simon, whose magical* activity was superseded by Philip (Acts 8:9-24). In postapostolic times Simon was depicted as the father of Gnosticism.* Justin Martyr, himself a Samaritan, wrote that Simon was a native of Gitta with a large following not only in Samaria but also in Rome and was worshiped by many as the supreme deity (Justin Apol. I 26.3).

There is great uncertainty as to whether Justin's Simon is the same as the one mentioned in Acts. The fact that the earliest gnostic Simonian teachings lack a Judaic flavor suggests that their roots were not in early Samaritan Christianity. On the contrary, these second-century Gnostics seem to have co-opted the Lukan Simon in order to give their movement roots in the NT.

2.3. Post-Philip Mission. The Samaritans proved receptive to the gospel, as is evidenced not only in the result of Philip's mission but also in the fact that they are included in Luke's statement that the church throughout Judea, Galilee and Samaria was built up and increased in numbers (Acts 9:31).

The church in Samaria seemed to be more liberal than its counterpart in Jerusalem. Luke reported that as Paul passed through Phoenicia and Samaria the believers there rejoiced at the inclusion of Gentiles in the church (Acts 15:3).

After this we learn extraordinarily little about the church in Samaria. It is possible that the church there was devastated during and after the Jewish war under Vespasian. Samaria might be included in Eusebius's statement that just before the siege Christians left Jerusalem and the surrounding territories, and the whole land of Judea was left destitute of righteous persons (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.5.3).

See also ACTS OF THE APOSTLES; HELLENISTS, HELLENISTIC AND HELLENISTIC-JEWISH CHRISTIANITY; PHILIP THE EVANGELIST.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. F. F. Bruce, Commentary on the Book of Acts (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1979); A. D. Crown, The Samaritans (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1989); O. Cullmann, "Samaria and the Origins of the Christian Mission" in The Early Church (London: SCM) 185-94; K. Haacker, "Samaritan, Samaria," NIDNTT 3:449-67; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles (Oxford: Blackwell, 1971); C. C. Hill, Hellenists and Hebrews: Reappraising Division with the Earliest Church (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1992); J. Jeremias, "Σαμάρεια κτλ," TDNT 8:88-94; J. B. Polhill, Acts (NAC; Nashville: Broadman, 1992); E. Richard, "Acts 7: An Investigation of the Samaritan Evidence," CBQ 39 (1977) 190-208; J. A. T. Robinson, "The Others of John 4:38" in Twelve New Testament Studies (London: SCM, 1962) 61-66; C. H. H. Scobie, "The Origins and Development of Samaritan Christianity," NTS 20 (1972-73) 390-414; G. S. Sloyan, "The Samaritans in the New Testament," Horizons 10 (1983) 7-21; A. Spiro, "Stephen's Samaritan Background" in The Acts of the Apostles, J. Munck (AB; New York: Doubleday, 1967) 285-300; G. E. Wright, "Samaria," BA 22 (1959) 67-78. P. U. Maynard-Reid SANCTUARY. See TABERNACLE, SANCTUARY; TEMPLE.

SATAN, DEVIL

The documents of early Christianity consistently reflect a belief in a powerful, hostile, supernatural enemy of God* most commonly called "Satan" or "the Devil" (See DJG, Demon, Devil, Satan; DPL, Satan, Devil). This personal being maliciously works to thwart the redemptive purposes of God and to perpetrate evil throughout the world and among the people of God. His demise is certain, however, because of his defeat at the cross* of Jesus Christ. The consummation of the age will mark the end of his pernicious activities.

1. Names and Titles
2. The Nature and Authority of Satan
3. The Defeat of Satan at the Cross
4. Satan's Hostility Against the Church
5. Christian Means of Victory Over Satan
6. Final Overthrow and Judgment of Satan

1. Names and Titles.

1.1. Satan. Although Satan (ho satanas) is a common title for this evil being in Revelation (see Rev 2:9, 13, 24; 3:9; 12:9; 20:2, 7), it is less common elsewhere, only occurring in Acts 5:3 and 26:18 (see also, Ign. Eph. 1.13; Pol. Phil. 7.1; Barn. 18.1; Pap. Frag. 11), and not at all in Hebrews, James, 1 and 2 Peter, Jude or the Johannine letters. The term is a transliteration of the Hebrew Śāṭān (Job 1:6-8, 12; 2:1-7; Zech 3:1-2) and characterizes his role as one who brings accusation or slanders. In our literature it has become a proper name to designate this supernatural adversary.

1.2. Devil. Essentially interchangeable with the title Satan is the designation devil (diabolos). Although its original meaning also has to do with slander and accusation, it has simply become a common way of referring to Satan. The term is used widely throughout the NT (e.g., Acts 10:38; 13:10; Heb 2:14; Jas 4:7; 1 Pet 5:8; 1 Jn 3:8, 10; Jude 9; Rev 2:10; 12:9, 12; 20:2, 10) and the Apostolic Fathers (24 times in Hermas; 2 Clem. 18.2; Ign. Eph. 10.3; Ign. Trall. 8.1; Ign. Rom. 5.3; Ign. Smyrn. 9.1; Pol. Phil. 7.1; Pap. Frag. 11).

1.3. The Evil One. The depraved character of Satan is unequivocally expressed in the title "the evil one" (ho ponēros), which appears frequently in 1 John (1 Jn 2:13, 14; 3:12; 5:18, 19) but rather infrequently in the apostolic fathers (Ign. Eph. 7.1; Barn. 2.10; 19.11; 20.2; Did. 8.2).

1.4. The Serpent. Satan is identified as "the serpent" (ho ophis) who tempted Eve in Revelation 12:9, 14, 15; 20:2 as well as in Barnabas 12.5, Diognetus 12.3, 6, 8, and Papias Fragment 11. His work of tempting is envisioned as ongoing.

1.5. The Dragon. In Revelation 12 and 13, Satan appears as "the great red dragon" (drakōn, Rev 12:3, 4, 7, 9, 13, 16, 17; 13:2, 4, 11; see also Rev. 16:13 and the quotation of Rev. in Pap. Frag. 11) who faces Michael in heavenly battle (see Beasts, Dragon).

1.6. The Ruler of this Age. The preferred designation for Satan in Ignatius is "the ruler of this age" (ho archōn tou aiōnos toutou, Ign. Eph. 1.17, 19; Ign. Magn. 1.2; Ign. Trall. 4.2; Ign. Rom. 6.3; Ign. Phld. 6.1; see also Barn. 4.13; 18.2). The inspiration for this usage comes from the Apostle Paul (see 1 Cor 2:6, 8).

1.7. Other Titles. There are a variety of other descriptive titles used for Satan in this literature: "the deceiver of the world" (ho kosmoplanēs, Did. 16.4), "the one who is in the world" (1 Jn 4:4), "the adversary" (ho antidikos, 1 Pet 5:8; ho antikeimenos, 1 Clem. 51.1), "the accuser" (ho katēgōr, Rev 12:10), "the black one" (ho melas, Barn. 4.9; 20.1), "the lawless one" (ho anomos, Barn. 15.5) and "the worker" (ho energoun, Barn. 2.1).

2. The Nature and Authority of Satan.

The background of much of what is said in this literature about Satan is deeply rooted in the OT and Jewish thought (see DPL, Satan, Devil).

2.1. Nature. The various titles of Satan give poignant expression to his evil character. He is the personification of all that is evil and thereby stands in direct opposition to the righteous and loving God. John claims that from the very beginning of creation* he sinned and has worked to instigate and inspire sinful behavior among all people (1 Jn 3:8, 10). According to John, evil behavior finds its paternity in Satan.

Satan is nowhere represented as an equal to God. There is not an absolute dualism as we find in certain strands of Persian religion which portrays a cosmic struggle between Ahriman and Ahura Mazda. Neither is there a two-god theology as we find in Gnosticism.*

Satan appears to be a major angelic figure: he is a heavenly being (Rev 12:10), he stands at the head of a host of evil angels* (Barn. 18.1; cf. Rev 16:13), he disputes with Michael (Jude 9), and ultimately he leads his angels in heavenly warfare against Michael and the hosts of God (Rev 12:7-10)

2.2. Authority. Satan's sphere of authority* and influence encompasses the whole of creation. John states this most emphatically when he declares, "we know that the whole world is under the control of the evil one" (1 Jn 5:19).

His malevolent exercise of power,* however, is limited only to the present evil age. This Jewish two-age understanding is a presupposition of all of these writings (see Apocalyptic; Eschatology). Ignatius speaks frequently of Satan as "the ruler of this age" and the Epistle of Barnabas describes him as "the ruler of the present era of lawlessness" (Barn. 18.2).

Deception is one of the primary means Satan uses to keep people from a knowledge* of the truth* and the revelation* of Jesus Christ. He deceives the entire world, leading people astray from the one true God (Rev 12:9). Satan is the animating power behind other religions* as well as magic* and sorcery. Therefore the temple of Zeus (or possibly the Asclepion) at Pergamum could be spoken of as "Satan's throne" (Rev 2:13), and the Jewish magician Elymas can be referred to as a "son of the devil" (Acts 13:10). The two beasts of Revelation 13 represent a satanically inspired intermingling of idolatry* and secular power through which the devil would "deceive the inhabitants of the world" (Rev 13:14). The early Christian apologetic document known as the Epistle to Diognetus refers to the devil only three times, each of which indicate his role as one who deceives (Diogn. 12.3, 6, 8).

Satan thus holds people in bondage (Acts 10:38; 26:18; 1 Jn 3:8, 10) from which they are unable to escape by their own ability or resources. The plight of humanity is extraordinarily grim since Satan holds the power of death (Heb 2:14)—a power he gained when he seduced humanity to rebel against God (Lane, 61).

3. The Defeat of Satan at the Cross.
The death* and resurrection* of Jesus Christ dealt an irrecoverable blow to Satan and his evil designs. The writer of Hebrews declares that "through his death" Christ destroyed (katargēsē) the one who holds the power of death, the devil (Heb 2:14). Satan was not in some way annihilated at the cross*; rather, it was through the once-for-all sacrifice of Jesus as an offering for sin that the compelling power of the evil one was thwarted (Heb 10:11-13). As a result, Christ brought the possibility of freedom* and release to all of those in and bondage (Heb 2:15).

In a similar way, John claims that the Son of God came "to destroy the works of the devil" (1 Jn 3:8). No longer is the entire world under the power of the evil one. Jesus has nullified Satan's power to enslave and thereby can gather people into a new community.

4. Satan's Hostility Against the Church.
In spite of his defeat at the cross, Satan continues to rage in powerful opposition to the people of God. Peter gives vivid expression to this in his portrayal of Satan as "the adversary" who prowls "like a roaring lion seeking someone to devour" (1 Pet 5:8). Most of our literature, in fact, is concerned precisely with recognizing and dealing with Satanic attack.

4.1. He Tempts. As John notes, from the very beginning Satan has sought to inspire people to sin* (1 Jn 3:8). Accordingly he put it in Cain's heart to murder Abel (1 Jn 3:12; cf. Jn 8:44). Luke credits Satan with influencing Ananaias and Sapphira to sin by saying, "Satan has filled your heart [eplērōsen satanas tēn kardian sou] to lie to the Holy Spirit" (Acts 5:3).

After attributing temptation* to the impact of the evil inclination within individuals (Jas 1:13-15), James draws a close connection between the evil impulse and the work of the devil. He observes that the tongue is set on fire by Gehenna (Jas 3:6; a way of referring to Satan as the ultimate source) and that the so-called wisdom of the opposition is not only "earthly and unspiritual" but "of the devil" (daimoniōdēs, Jas 3:15). Thus, "behind the evil impulse lies the devil" (Davids, 166).

In 2 Clement 18.2 we read of temptations as the "tools of the devil." Ignatius depicts sin and vice as weeds planted by the devil (Ign. Eph. 10.3). When he writes to the Romans, he reflects on his own struggle with "the ruler of this age," who wants to "take me captive and corrupt my godly intentions" by inspiring him to desire the things of the world (Ign. Rom. 7.1).

Much of the Shepherd of Hermas discusses how to respond appropriately to Satan when he tempts believers to sin (e.g., Herm. Man. 4.4.6). Hermas remarks that "evil desire is a daughter of the devil" (Herm. Man. 12.2.2). In Mandate 5.1 he describes how an angry temper can be exploited by an evil spirit. He observes that "the devil lives in an angry temper" (Herm. Man. 5.1.3), and suggests that it severely restricts the work of the Holy Spirit.*

4.2. He Inspires False Teaching. Just as Satan worked to deceive humanity through idolatry, he continues his work of deception within the church by inspiring deviant teaching (see Adversaries). Thus the Johannine community is urged to "test the spirits to see whether they are from God" (1 Jn 4:1-4). Some who were once affiliated with the church are now teaching, among other things, that Christ did not come in the flesh. Some in the church at Thyatira, following the teaching of a prophetess, were learning "the deep things of Satan" (Rev 2:24). This probably refers to a syncretistic* teaching involving a combination of Christianity with the cultic worship of Apollo Tyrimnaeus in the context of the local pagan guild feasts (Hemer, 122-23).

The issue of unacceptable and dangerous teaching becomes a prominent topic in the postapostolic generations of Christianity. The sentiment that such teaching has demonic roots is emphatically asserted by these writers. Polycarp declared that the person who denies the apostolic traditions about Christ "is the firstborn of Satan" (Pol. Phil. 7.1)! In his discussion about the inspiration of a false prophet, Hermas explains that "the devil fills him with his own spirit, to see if he will be able to break down any of the righteous" (Herm. Man. 11.3; cf. also 11.17). The Epistle of Barnabas urges vigilance "lest the evil one should cause some error to slip into our midst" (Barn. 2.10).

Ignatius, likewise, is deeply concerned about those who spread heresy (hairesis, Ign. Trall. 6.1). These are dangerous snares of the devil (Ign. Trall. 8.1). Part of the solution for Ignatius is the elevation of the role of the bishop (epi- skopos) to function as a custodian of doctrinal purity for the church. Thus, he goes so far as to assert, "whoever does anything without the bishop's knowledge serves the devil" (Ign. Smyrn. 9.1; see Church Order)

4.3. He Creates Doubt and Fear. As "the Accuser," the evil one continuously brings indictments to God against believers (Rev 12:10). This can result in doubt and lack of assurance for the people of God. Hermas emphasizes Satan's work of inspiring doubt (dipsychia). He calls it "a daughter of the devil" and "an earthly spirit from the devil that has no power" (Herm. Man. 9.9, 11)

The image of Satan as "a roaring lion" (1 Pet 5:8) captures the fear he seeks to instill in people. Hermas was well aware of this stratagem of Satan and urged his readers not to fear the devil (Herm. Man. 12.4.7). He responds to a common worry many Christians felt about the inevitability of demonic oppression. They say, "the devil is hard and oppresses (katadynasteuein)" believers, but Hermas attempts to dispel this defeatist attitude: "He cannot oppress God's servants who hope in him with all their heart. The devil can wrestle with them, but he cannot throw and pin them. So, if you resist him, he will be defeated and flee from you in disgrace" (Herm. Man. 12.5.1-2).

4.4. He Incites Hatred of Christians. The church has faced violent opposition and persecution* since its inception. Peter perceived the devil as behind the suffering* which the believers in Asia Minor were experiencing when he wrote to them (1 Pet 5:8-9). The stringent opposition that Christians in Smyrna and Philadelphia faced at the hands of the local Jewish populace led to each of their synagogues being dubbed "the synagogue of Satan" (Rev 2:9; 3:9). The letter warns the church in Smyrna that "the devil will put some of you in prison to test you" (Rev 2:10). Satan is even seen as behind the martyrdom* of a Christian leader in Pergamum (Rev 2:13).

The seething violence of Satan toward the people of God is symbolically depicted in Revelation 12—13. The red dragon persecutes the woman (Rev 12:13) and wages war against her seed (Rev 12:17). The beast of the sea is animated by Satan and goes to make war with the saints (Rev 13:7).

Ignatius* saw his own suffering and eventual martyrdom as incited by Satan. He describes "fire and cross and battles with wild beasts, mutilation, mangling, wrenching of bones, the hacking of limbs, the crushing of my whole body" as "cruel tortures of the devil" (Ign. Rom. 5.3). Yet at the same time he could say, "let these come upon me, only let me reach Jesus Christ!"

5. Christian Means of Victory Over Satan.

The basis for victory over Satan is the appropriation of his work on the cross (see Death of Christ). This is what makes it possible for people to turn "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God" (Acts 26:18) where they experience forgiveness of sins and are incorporated into the people of God. As people in relationship to the almighty God, there is not only the possibility to resist Satan but a call to resist him (Jas 4:7; 1 Pet 5:8-9; Barn. 4.9). This potential for victory can be seen in the successful experience of the readers of 1 John: "I write to you, young men, because you are strong, and the word of God lives in you, and you have overcome the evil one" (1 Jn 2:13-14).

5.1. The Blood of Christ. Satan's ability to prevent or sever a relationship with God comes through his power to incite sin and transgression. The death of Christ on the cross has effectually dealt with this problem. Therefore in spite of Satan's ability to accuse, God's people overcome him "by the blood of the lamb" (Rev. 12:11; see Lamb). It is precisely the blood of Christ that redeems people from and bondage to sin and Satan (cf. Rev 5:9).

5.2. The Power of God. Successfully resisting Satan depends on drawing near to God, who in turn draws near to his people (Jas 4:8) and fights on their behalf. Peter assures his readers that "the God of all grace . . . will make you strong [sthenōsei]" (1 Pet 5:10) in resisting the adversary. In Revelation it is God who gives escape and protection to the woman by providing her the wings of an eagle (Rev 12:14; cf. Ex 19:4). Hermas counsels, "turn to the Lord with all your heart, . . . and you will have the power to conquer the devil's works" (Herm. Man. 12.6.2)

5.3. The Presence of Christ. The indwelling presence of Christ himself assists believers in their ongoing struggle with the evil one. John assured his readers in the face of demonically inspired false teaching that "the one who is in you is greater than the one who is in the world" (1 Jn 4:4). He also consoles them by affirming the protective power of Christ: "the one who was born of God [Christ] keeps him safe, and the evil one cannot harm him" (1 Jn 5:18).

5.4. Humility and Faith in Turning from Sin. Peter explicitly calls people to trust God and humble themselves in the midst of their struggle against Satan: "resist him, standing firm in the faith" (1 Pet 5:6-9). James provides much the same counsel, insisting on contrition for sin as a part of humility before God (Jas 4:7-10). In Revelation we read that faith* will be necessary for believers who face the hostilities of the beast* that comes from the sea (Rev 13:10). Hermas gives eloquent expression to the indispensability of faith when Christians are tested by the devil: "All those who are full in the faith resist him mightily, and he leaves them alone, because he finds no place where he can gain entrance" (Herm. Man. 12.5.4.). In a unique development of Christian doctrine, Hermas teaches the possibility of only one repentance after conversion (Herm. Man. 4.3.6; see Repentance, Second Repentance).

5.5. The Word of God. Echoing one of the lessons gained from the account of Jesus' temptation, John stresses the importance of "the word of God" dwelling in believers (1 Jn 2:14). He claims that the young men are strong and have overcome the evil one as a result of the word of God abiding in them.

5.6. Fellowship and Unity. Ignatius appeals to his Ephesian readers to strive for fellowship* and unity as a means of overcoming Satan. He notes, "for when you meet together frequently, the powers of Satan are overthrown and his destructiveness is nullified by the unanimity of your faith" (Ign. Eph. 13.1; cf. also Barn. 4.10).

5.7. Angelic Help. Hermas conceives of special angelic* help and strengthening for the struggle with the devil (Herm. Man. 12.6). He speaks of an "angel of repentance" who comes to strengthen people in the faith. The help does not come in response to someone calling on an angel but rather in response to repentance and turning to the Lord. Hermas says that the angel "will crush all the power of the devil," and he and the angel together "will rule over him [the devil] and prevail over all his works" (Herm. Man. 12.6.4).

6. Final Overthrow and Judgment of Satan. The Apocalypse is dramatically clear that Satan's time of perpetrating incessant evil is limited, his doom is sure. The devil will finally be judged and punished for his deception and evil works (Rev 20:10; cf. also Barn. 21:3). In the words of the Apocalypse, the devil will be "thrown into the lake of burning sulphur" where he "will be tormented day and night for ever and ever."

What happens just prior to this time in the events leading up to the judgment* has been a matter of debate for centuries. The text of Revelation 20:2 speaks of a binding of Satan that lasts for a thousand years. Is the binding of the devil spoken of here something that has already taken place through the work of the Lord Jesus Christ and the thousand years a way of referring to the time between advents? Or is this binding of Satan something that is yet to be fulfilled, which will be followed by a thousand year reign of Christ on earth? Most supporters of the first view recognize the difficulty of seeing Satan as bound in some absolute sense by the cross/resurrection event. They contend that Satan is therefore bound only with respect to deceiving the nations (cf. Rev 20:3); that is, he is "unable to prevent the spread of the gospel throughout the Gentile world in the period between the advents" (Page, 219). Thus Satan may still be active, but he cannot thwart the evangelistic success of the church.

Although this is a difficult problem that requires a deeper treatment of many related issues to reach a conclusion (see Millennium), the text appears to point to a future binding of Satan. The language and imagery of the text is too strong to allow for this particular binding to have occurred in the work of Christ on the cross. The writer of the apocalypse uses a series of five aorist indicative verbs to express this total suppression of Satanic opposition: (1) the angel seizes Satan, presumably with the chain he carries, (2) binds him for a thousand years, (3) throws him into the Abyss (see Hell, Abyss), (4) locks the Abyss with the key he possesses, and (5) seals it over him. The seizing, binding, casting, locking and sealing imagery leaves little room for seeing Satan as active on earth, even in a partial sense.

See also ADVERSARIES; ANGELS, HEAVENLY BEINGS, ANGEL CHRISTOLOGY; ANTICHRIST; APOCALYPTIC, APOCALYPTICISM; BEASTS, DRAGON, SEA, CONFLICT MOTIF; DAY OF THE LORD; ESCHATOLOGY; HELL, ABYSS, ETERNAL PUNISHMENT; JUDGMENT; MAGIC AND ASTROLOGY; MILLENNIUM; PAROUSIA; SPIRITS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. Bietenhard, "Satan, Beelzebul, Devil, Exorcism," NIDNTT 3.468-72; P. Davids, James (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); E. Ferguson, Demonology of the Early Christian World (SS 12; Lewiston: Mellen, 1984); S. R. Garrett, The Demise of the Devil: Magic and the Demonic in Luke's Writings (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1989); C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in Their Local Setting (JSNTSup 11; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1986); W. L. Lane, Hebrews 1-8 (WBC 47a; Dallas: Word, 1991); T. L. Longman III and D. G. Reid, God is a Warrior (SOTBT; Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1995); S. Page, Powers of Evil: A Biblical Theology of Satan and His Forces (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1995); K. van der Toorn, B. Becking, and P. van der Horst, Dictionary of Deities and Demons in the Bible (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1995); C. E. Arnold

SAVIOR

The Greek term sōtēr ("savior, deliverer or preserver") is found twenty-four times in the NT, with twelve of those in the traditional Pauline literature (see DPL, Savior). There are two uses in Acts, five in 2 Peter, one in Jude and one in 1 John. Other than Titus (with six), 2 Peter contains more occurrences of sōtēr than does any other NT book.

In Acts, the General Epistles and Revelation, the description of God as sōtēr is seen only in Jude. Otherwise it is Jesus who is referred to as sōtēr in Acts, 2 Peter and 1 John, where he is also called the Savior of the "world" (kosmos). The uses in Acts and 2 Peter likely imply deity for Jesus also.

1 Judaism and Hellenism
2 Acts
3 2 Peter and Jude
4 1 John
5 Apostolic Fathers

1. Judaism and Hellenism.

In the OT, God* is the ultimate Savior, frequently in a military sense, though the spiritual aspect of salvation* is clearly present. It is unlikely to be a coincidence that in the Septuagint sōtēr so frequently renders the Hebrew yᵉšû'âh, which is also the proper name Joshua, the Greek form of which is lēsous (Jesus).

Greco-Roman thought reflects the idea of the gods as helpers and deliverers of humankind. Invocations of gods such as Asclepius or goddesses like Isis implore their assistance in delivering devotees from danger or promoting physical health (sōtēria can mean either; see Wendland 1913). Certain human rulers were also called sōtēr, often indicating their desire to be attributed divine status and honor. Though it was not an official part of the titles of Roman rulers, it was common for certain Caesars to be referred to as "savior of the world" (Schneider and Brown, 217; see Emperor).

2. Acts.

Both inclusions of sōtēr in Acts* occur in Jewish contexts. In Acts 5:31 "Peter and the other apostles" (Acts 5:29) witness before the Jewish Sanhedrin. Their testimony is that God resurrected Jesus and exalted him to heaven* as "Prince (archēgos) and Savior," enabling Jesus to offer "repentance and forgiveness of sins to Israel" (Acts 5:31 NIV; see Exaltation; Resurrection; Repentance). The furious response of the members of the Sanhedrin at this point (Acts 5:34) indicates that the author believes they understood the apostles' words as an implicit claim of deity for Jesus, since the exalted Messiah is described as dispensing to Israel* forgiveness,* a prerogative belonging to God himself as Yahweh in the OT and rabbinic soteriology (cf. Mk 2:1-12 for similar ideas). Some scholars conclude, with R. J. Bauckham (169), that the "early Christians saw Jesus as the one who exercised the divine function of salvation."

In Acts 13:23 Paul (Acts 13:16) is addressing a Jewish synagogue* in Pisidian Antioch on the first missionary journey. His elaborate "message of salvation" (sōtēria; Acts 13:26; see Salvation) is that Jesus is the son of David, the promised messianic figure that the Jewish Scriptures and people had long anticipated (Acts 13:17-25). Paul argues that Jesus' death and resurrection were fulfilling God's plan as prophesied in the OT (Acts 13:27-37; see Death of Christ), then ties his climactic offer of forgiveness of sins to this presentation of Jesus (Acts 13:38-39). The negative reaction to Paul's claim that Jesus is the resurrected Messiah is delayed in this setting but again is significant (Acts 13:45, 48, 50).

Thus in Acts Jesus' status as sōtēr derives both from his messianic lineage and his death and resurrection. Though it is found only twice, the usage by both the apostles* in Jerusalem* (Acts 5) and Paul in a Diaspora* synagogue (Acts 13) strongly implies that the understanding that Jesus as Savior is a central part of the author's gospel message.

3. 2 Peter and Jude.

Three of the five uses of sōtēr in 2 Peter* occur in the exact phraseology "our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (tou kyriou hēmōn kai sōtēros Iēsou Christou; 2 Pet 1:11; 2:20; 3:18). A fourth inclusion is worded simply "our Lord and Savior" (2 Pet 3:2), though the mention of the apostles (2 Pet 3:2) and its proximity to 2 Peter 2:20 are likely to account for the abbreviated form.

The only varied wording is encountered in "our God and Savior Jesus Christ" (tou theou hēmōn kai sōtēros Iēsou Christou) in 2 Peter 1:1. Since this is the initial usage in 2 Peter, though, this variation should be considered quite significant, especially since 2 Peter 1:2 immediately refers to "Jesus our Lord."

For the writer of 2 Peter, it is a basic understanding that Jesus the messianic (i.e., Christ) sōtēr is both God and Lord* (for these two titles in collocation, see Bauckham, 168-69). In the concluding benediction, the readers are instructed to "grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet 3:18 NIV), which is sharply contrasted with being "carried away by the error of lawless men" (2 Pet 3:17 NIV), almost certainly the false teachers and their "destructive heresies" predicted in 2 Peter 2:1.

At the core of this false teaching is the denial of "the sovereign Lord" (despotēn) and his redemption* (2 Pet 2:1). The false teachers are later described as having turned their backs on the knowledge* of "our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet 2:20). Therefore, 2 Peter's concluding benedictory admonition to grow in "the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet 3:18) is seen to be crucial in combating the onslaught of heresy, though there is apparently no developed teaching on gnosticizing* "knowledge," against which the author inveighs (Bauckham, 338).

The single inclusion of sōtēr in Jude* is as "God our Savior" in the concluding doxology (Jude 24-25). Though this wording is found in proximity to "Jesus Christ our Lord" (Jude 25), the two are not directly connected, as might be expected because of the extensive parallels between Jude and 2 Peter. God is rarely called "savior" in early Christian literature (only in Lk 1:47 and six times in the Pastorals; cf. 1 Clem. 59.3).

As a background to the usages in 2 Peter and Jude, we should remark that the phraseology "God our Savior" is common in the Pastorals (1 Tim 1:1; 2:3; 4:10; Tit 1:3; 2:10; 3:4), where Jesus is also affirmed as sōtēr (2 Tim 1:10; Tit 1:4; 2:13; 3:6) and apparently placed on par with God as divine Savior in Titus 2:13 (see Harris; Schneider and Brown, 220). Thus Jude 25 should not be viewed as contradictory to the emerging NT theological presentation of sōtēr but as in line with a complementary aspect of the overall understanding. Both applications of sōtēr to God and Jesus reach back to Jewish usage (in LXX "our savior" occurs in Ps 64:6; 78:9; 94:1; Pss. Sol. 8:33; 17:3).

4. 1 John.

The only use of sōtēr in 1 John (see John, Letters of) is in 1 John 4:14, where the "Savior of the world" (NIV) is also said to be the Son* of (God) the Father. The wording "Savior of the world" is virtually identical to that of John 4:42, where that description of Jesus ("this man") is on the lips of Samaritans (Smalley, 252).

Therefore 1 John's lone usage emphasizes the universal* offer of salvation made available by Jesus as sōtēr, as the centerpiece (1 Jn 4:10, 14) of God's initiating love* toward humanity (1 Jn 4:7-19). It is in properly responding to Jesus as Son of God (1 Jn 4:15) and Savior (1 Jn 4:14) that the believer (1 Jn 5:1) enters new spiritual life* (1 Jn 4:9) and receives God's love with which to love others (1 Jn 4:11-12, 19). The setting is evidently John's insistence that the Father and the Son are one in purpose and salvific design (Jn 10:30), which extends to embrace "all peoples" in its scope (Jn 11:52; 1 Jn 2:2; Smalley, 253). We should also include John's emphasis on Jesus' humanity as savior "come in the flesh."

The issue is often raised why the occurrence of "savior" is so limited in the NT and it is found mainly in the later (chronologically speaking) books. The Pauline references (Phil 3:20; Eph 5:23) are descriptive of Christ's work and should be regarded as adjectives, not as nouns. Only in the later letters* do we encounter the titular usage of sōtēr.

The most probable explanation lies in the way the title could easily have been misunderstood in public proclamation (akin to Son of God*), where it might well have evoked ideas of Hellenistic cult figures and Roman emperors who were hailed as "divine son" and "savior." Similarly when the church was reaching out to the Hellenistic world, the title came to signify that Christ was equally the answer to pagan longings for deliverance and hope. So sōtēr became part of the "religious vocabulary of [the] Hellenistic environment," where it was appropriate to "communicate the gospel meaningfully to Gentile converts" (Bauckham, 169) as an in-house christological* appellation rather than as a part of kerygmatic terminology. Additionally, at an earlier time there was the danger of tautology when the simple name Jesus (used frequently in Paul, e.g., 2 Cor 4) conveyed the thought of God the Savior (= Jeshua/Joshua).

5. Apostolic Fathers.

Whatever inhibitions restricted the usage in the NT writings, the term became much more frequent in early second-century Christian works (2 Clem. 20.5; Ign. Eph. 1.1; Ign. Magn. inscrip.; Ign. Phld. 9.2; Ign. Smyrn. 7.1; Pol. Phil. 19.2; Diogn 9.6, Gos. Pet. 4:13; Quadratus in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.3.2).

See also CHRISTOLOGY; SALVATION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); W. Bousset, Kyrios Christos (Nashville: Abingdon, 1970); O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament (rev. ed.; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1963); W. Foerster and G. Fohrer, "σώζω κτλ," TDNT 7:965-1024; R. H. Fuller, The Titles of Jesus in Early Christology (London: Lutterworth, 1969); E. M. B. Green, The Meaning of Salvation (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1965); M. J. Harris, Jesus as God: The Use of Theos in Reference to Jesus (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1992); J. Schneider and C. Brown, "Redemption etc.," NIDNTT 3:216-23; S. S. Smalley, 1, 2, 3 John (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1984); V. Taylor, The Names of Jesus (London: Macmillan, 1953); P. Wendland, "Hellenistic Ideas of Salvation in the Light of Anthropology," AJT 17 (1913) 345-51; idem, "Σωτήρ," ZNW 5 (1904) 335-53.

A. B. Luter Jr.

SCROLLS, SEALS

Revelation mentions the concept of a sealed book in connection with the following: the Apocalypse itself, the seven-sealed book shown to the Seer, the unsealed "little book" and the sealing of the words of the seven thunders. The concept of a sealed book is not found in the apostolic fathers.*

1. Revelation
2. The Words of the Seven Thunders
3. The Seven-Sealed Book
4. The Little Book

1. Revelation.

Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) uses the concept of a book that must remain sealed until the appointed time, as is found in apocalyptic* writings such as Daniel 12:1-4. In Revelation, however, the scroll in which the Seer is instructed to write what is shown to him (Rev 1:11) must not be sealed (Rev 22:10): because the prophecy* is about to be fulfilled, it must be published openly.

2. The Words of the Seven Thunders.

The exception to the Seer's commission to record what he sees is that he must "seal" (i.e., not write down) the utterances of the "seven thunders" (Rev 10:4).

3. The Seven-Sealed Book.

Revelation 5:2 depicts a seven-sealed scroll written on both sides, but no one is found qualified to open the seals* and reveal the scroll's contents, until "the Lion of the tribe of Judah," Christ,* is found worthy. The image is of a typical first-century document written on a scroll made of sheets of papyrus or (less often) parchment or leather sewn together. Letters,* legal documents and the Scriptures themselves were written on such scrolls. Wax seals were often affixed to a document to conceal its contents or (with the impression of the writer's or signatory's mark in the wax) to confirm its authenticity.

That a new vision* is seen as each seal is broken suggests that seals had been affixed to the scroll at seven different places as it was rolled up. Yet none of the contents of a real scroll with multiple seals would be visible until the last seal had been broken—and at that point the whole of its contents would be revealed. Perhaps we should not try to visualize the physical "reality" that the Seer saw but rather look beyond the image to its significance.

But what kind of document was this scroll? It could be "the Lamb's book of life" (Rev 13:8; 20:15; 21:27), but the seals suggest that it is a legal document, perhaps a testament, a document of divorce or a book of destiny and/or world history; yet they also recall Isaiah's lament that his vision concerning Jerusalem* and its fate has become like a sealed book to the people (Is 29:11-12). That it is written on both sides is reminiscent of the tablets of the Torah (cf. Ex 32:15) but also of the scroll whose contents Ezekiel was to proclaim to the rebellious Israelites (Ezek 9:3-6).

The first four visions (each depicting a rider on a horse of a different color—the four horsemen of the Apocalypse) are distinguished from the latter three. B. J. Malina argues that what the Seer actually saw and formed the basis of his visions (seen through the lens of the OT and other Jewish traditions) were comets, which the Greeks often envisaged as horses, with the constellations Leo, Virgo, Libra and Scorpio as the riders (Malina, 126).

Although the first four seal visions could have historical referents—such as the unrest in various parts of the Roman Empire,* the Jewish war and the severe famines of the first century—it is important to consider these visions as a whole against their OT background. There are clear parallels with Ezekiel 5—7, which warns the disobedient and idolatrous Israelites of judgments* similar to those depicted here. Ezekiel 4:16 warns that famine will overtake the inhabitants of Jerusalem (cf. Rev 6:5-6), while Ezekiel 14:21 threatens Jerusalem with the same punishments* as those in Revelation 6:8. Jeremiah too threatens the people and Jerusalem with punishments like those depicted in the seal visions (Jer 6:22-26; 14:11-12; 15:1-2; 16:4-5; 18:11-21; Jer 21:8-10; 38:2; 44:11-14). The same punishments are among the judgments to come upon Yahweh's covenant* people if they forsake him (Deut 32:23-35). Like these OT passages, the judgments in the Apocalypse are examples of "covenant judgment" on Israel in accordance with Leviticus 26 and Deuteronomy 28 (van der Waal 1971, 143).

The fifth seal vision parallels Jesus' words in Matthew 23:35, threatening Jerusalem with punishment because of its ill-treatment of the prophets.

The sixth seal vision could refer to the various earthquakes and solar eclipses that occurred during the first century. Yet language like this is found in such passages as Isaiah 2:10, 19, 21; Jeremiah 4:29; Hosea 10:8 (cf. Lk 23:30; cf. van der Waal 1971, 191; Vos, 113-16).

An interlude (Rev 7:1-17) between the opening of the sixth and seventh seals reflects Ezekiel's image of a man sent through Jerusalem marking the foreheads of those who grieve over the city's evils and who will escape the slaughter that will commence at the sanctuary itself and encompass the whole city (Ezek 9:4; cf. Sweet, 150).

The content of the seventh seal could be merely the brief "silence in heaven" (Rev 8:1); the silence, the introduction of the seven angels* with trumpets,* and the vision of the angel with the prayers* of the saints (Rev 8:1-5); the whole series of trumpet visions (Rev 8:1—11:19); or even the whole of the rest of the book (Michaels, 56-57).

The striking resemblance between the whole series of seal visions and the Synoptic Apocalypse (Charles, 1:158), together with the use of so many OT texts referring to Jerusalem, suggests that the Seer has in mind either a calamity to come on Jerusalem or a worldwide judgment in which Jerusalem is especially afflicted.

4. The Little Book.

The Seer also sees an opened "little scroll" in the hand of a "strong angel" (Rev 10:2). This could be a separate scroll from the seven-sealed scroll seen earlier. It could also be the same scroll described differently; although strictly speaking biblaridion is a diminutive of biblion, the two words (together with biblidion) may be used interchangeably, as in Hermas Vision 2.1.3-4; 2.4.1-3. Moreover, Revelation 10:8 uses biblion of the scroll that is designated as biblaridion in Revelation 10:2; 10:9-10. Perhaps the diminutive is used to contrast the scroll with the "mighty angel" rather than with the scroll mentioned earlier (cf. Michaels, 60).

See also APOCALYPTIC, APOCALYPTICISM; REVELATION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, The Climax of Prophecy: Studies on the Book of Revelation (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1993); A. J. Beagley, The 'Sitz im Leben' of the Apocalypse with Particular Reference to the Role of the Enemies of the Church (BZNW 50; Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 1987); G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation (NCB; London: Oliphants, 1978); I. T. Beckwith, The Apocalypse of John: Studies in Introduction with a Critical and Exegetical Commentary (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1979 [1919]); G. B. Caird, The Revelation of St. John the Divine (HNTC; New York and Evanston: Harper & Row, 1966); P. Carrington, The Meaning of the Revelation (London: SPCK, 1931); R. H.

Charles, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Revelation of St. John (2 vols.; ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1920) vol. 1; J. M. Court, Myth and History in the Book of Revelation (London: SPCK, 1979); J. C. De Young, Jerusalem in the New Testament: The Significance of the City in the History of Redemption and in Eschatology (Kampen: Kok, 1960); G. Fitzer, "σφραγίς κτλ," TDNT 7:939-53; B. J. Malina, On the Genre and Message of Revelation: Star Visions and Sky Journeys (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1995); J. R. Michaels, Interpreting the Book of Revelation (GNTE; Grand Rapids: Baker, 1992); R. H. Mounce, The Book of Revelation (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977); G. Schrenk, "βίβλος, βιβλίον," TDNT 1:615-20; J. Sweet, Revelation (WPC; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1979); H. B. Swete, The Apocalypse of St. John: The Greek Text with Introduction, Notes and Indices (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1968 repr.); C. van der Waal, Openbaring van Jezus Christus 2: Inleiding en Vertaling (Groningen: De Vuurbaak, 1971); idem, Openbaring van Jezus Christus 2: Verklaring (Oudkarspel: De Neverheid, 1981); L. A. Vos, The Synoptic Traditions in the Apocalypse (Kampen: Kok, 1965).

A. J. Beagley

SEA. See BEASTS, DRAGON, SEA, CONFLICT MOTIF.

SEALS. See SCROLLS, SEALS.

SECOND APOCALYPSE OF JAMES. See APOCRYPHAL AND PSEUDEPIGRAPHAL WRITINGS.

SECOND REPENTANCE. See REPENTANCE, SECOND REPENTANCE.

SECRET GOSPEL OF MARK. See MARK, SECRET GOSPEL OF.

SERMONIC GENRE. See HEBREWS.

SERVANT, SERVICE

Believers and their leaders are referred to as servants or slaves* of God* in the literature covered by this dictionary. In various places the work of the Twelve,* Paul and his colleagues, other apostles,* prophets,* bishops, presbyters, teachers, deacons and the compassionate acts of believers are referred to as service.

1. Acts
2. Hebrews, General Epistles and Revelation
3. Other Early Christian Writings

1. Acts.

Believers and their apostles are both referred to as servants (douloi, lit. "slaves"*) of God (Acts 2:18; 4:29; 16:17). In the Septuagint doulos is used not only for slaves of human masters but also for kings and prophets as servants of God. In Acts, the term probably reflects not only the servant/master relationship in which all believers stand with God but also their privileged position as God's servants.

The ministry* of the Twelve is described as service (diakonia). It was a diakonia of witness to the resurrection* of Jesus (Acts 5:42), which Judas was to have shared with them (Acts 1:15-17). But seeing that he forfeited his share in this ministry by betraying Jesus and subsequently committing suicide, another had to be chosen to take his place (Acts 1:21-26). The ministry of the Twelve is further described as a diakonia of the word and prayer* (Acts 6:2). The ministry of the word appears to have included the teaching* of believers (Acts 2:42) as well as public witness* to the resurrection. Paul's apostolic ministry of testifying to the gospel* of God's grace* among the Gentiles* is also depicted as diakonia (Acts 20:24).

The daily distribution of aid to needy people in the congregation, for which the Twelve would not take responsibility because it interfered with their ministry of the word and prayer, is also described as diakonia (Acts 6:1-2). Along similar lines the collection of material aid in the church* at Antioch* and its conveyance to the needy believers in Jerusalem* by Barnabas and Paul are both described as diakonia (Acts 11:29; 12:25), as is the assistance rendered to Paul by Timothy and Erastus (tōn diakonountōn autō, Acts 19:22).

2. Hebrews, General Epistles and Revelation.

In a number of these documents, particularly in Revelation (see Revelation, Book of), believers and their leaders are referred to or refer to themselves as servants or slaves (douloi) of God (Jas 1:1; 1 Pet 2:16; 2 Pet 1:1; Jude 1; Rev 1:1; 2:20; 7:3; 11:18; 19:2, 5; 22:3, 6). As in the case of Acts, the term doulos probably reflects not only the relationship in which believers stand with God but also their privileged position as God's servants.

The word diakoneō ("to serve"), used in relation to Christian ministry, is found in Hebrews 6:10, where the author assures his readers that God will not forget the love* they have shown in serving his people. The best explanation of what such service involved is found in Hebrews 10:33-34, where the fact that readers stood with those in prison and joyfully accepted the confiscation of their property is reported. In 1 Peter 4:10-11 believers are urged to serve or minister to (diakoneō) one another as each has received a gift (charisma) to do so. These ministries are categorized as either speaking or serving (diakoneō). In Revelation 2:19 Christ assures the church of Thyatira that he knows about its works, love, faith,* service (diakonia) and forbearance. What the service involved is not made known.

3. Other Early Christian Writings.

The predominant designation for believers in the *Shepherd of Hermas is "servants of God" (douloi tou theou), an expression used more than forty times. Living as a believer is described as serving God (douleuein theō). Similar expressions are found scattered through the other literature under investigation (e.g., Ign. Rom. 4.3; 1 Clem. 60.2; 2 Clem. 6.1; Mart. Pol. 9.3; 20.1).

Beside the references to the service rendered by deacons in these documents (see Ministry) there are a number of references to the service rendered by other members of the Christian community and other Christian leaders. The *Didache says that care should be taken in the appointment of bishops and deacons because they minister (leitourgousi) the ministry or service (leitourgian) of prophets and teachers to the Christian community (Did. 15.1).

Clement* argues that the Master has fixed by his supreme will the places and persons who are to offer the oblations and that believers should not transgress the appointed rules of ministration or service (leitourgias) given by him (1 Clem. 40.1-4; 41.1). Clement asserts that the apostles, foreseeing the problems that would arise in the church, not only appointed their successors but also made provision for other approved men to succeed to the ministry or service (leitourgian) of these appointees (1 Clem. 44.2). Clement reprimanded the Corinthians who removed from their episcopate and ministry or service (leitourgias) those presbyters who ministered or served (leitourgēsantas) without blame (1 Clem. 44.3-6).

In the letters of Ignatius* also the service (diakonia) of Christian leaders receives some attention. Bishops are said to be entrusted with a diakonia for the common good (Ign. Phld. 1.1). Deacons are entrusted with the diakonia of Christ (Ign. Magn. 6.1), and they are servants (diakonoi) not of food and drink only but are servants (hyperērtai] of the church of God (Ign. Trall. 2.3). Deacons may also perform the diakonia of ambassadors from one church to another (Ign. Phld. 10.1-2).

The Shepherd of Hermas speaks of apostles, bishops, teachers and deacons serving (diakonēsantas] the elect (Herm. Vis. 3.5.1), but its main emphasis is upon the ministry of giving: the proper use of wealth (see Riches). In the second mandate Hermas is exhorted to give to all in need, because God wishes gifts to be made of his bounty. Such ministry or service (diakonia) is honorable before God (Herm. Man. 2.5-6). In the first similitude the purpose for attaining riches is that one might purchase afflicted souls and look after widows and orphans. It is in order that they may fulfill these ministries (diakonias) that the Master makes people rich (Herm. Sim. 1.8-9). In the second similitude the rich are said to need the poor as a vine needs an elm tree over which to grow so that it might produce abundant fruit (if it lies on the ground it produces little fruit and rotten). The wealthy who understand these things will be able to perform some good service (dynēsetai diakonēsai ti agathon); the good service being understood as providing for the poor (Herm. Sim. 2.1-10).

Corrupt deacons who serve amiss are given warnings (Herm. Sim. 9.26.2). These are guilty devouring the living of widows and orphans, making personal gain from the ministry (diakonias) they had received to administer (diakonēsai). Standing in contrast to these are the bishops who by their service (diakonia) ceaselessly shelter the destitute and receive the servants of God into their houses gladly (Herm. Sim. 9.27.2; see Hospitality).

See also CHURCH ORDER, GOVERNMENT; MINISTRY; SLAVE, SLAVERY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. L. Bartlett, Ministry in the New Testament (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1993); H. W. Beyer, "διακονέω κτλ," TDNT 2:81-93; H. von Campenhausen, Ecclesiastical Authority and Spiritual Power in the Church of the First Three Centuries (London: A. & C. Black, 1969); J. N. Collins, Diakonia: Reinterpreting the Ancient Sources (New York and Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1990); K. H. Giles, Patterns of Ministry among the First Christians (Melbourne: Collins-Dove, 1989); K. Hess, "Serve, Deacon, Worship," NIDNTT 3:544-53; A. Lemaire, "From Services to Ministries: Diakonia in the First Two Centuries," Concilium 10 (1972) 35-49; idem, "The Ministries in the New Testament: Recent Research," BTB 3 (1973) 133-66; idem, Ministry in the Church (London: SPCK, 1977); J. B. Lightfoot, "The Christian Ministry" in Saint Paul's Epistle to the Philippians (London: MacMillan, 1898) 181-269; H. O. Maier, The Social Setting of the Ministry as Reflected in the Writings of Hermas, Clement and Ignatius (Waterloo, ON: Wilfrid Laurier University Press, 1991). C. G. Kruse

SERVICE. See SERVANT, SERVICE.

SEVEN, THE. See MINISTRY.

SEXUAL ETHICS. See MARRIAGE, DIVORCE AND ADULTERY; SEXUALITY, SEXUAL ETHICS.

SEXUALITY, SEXUAL ETHICS

The guidance of the later NT and the early church fathers on sexual conduct was given against a backcloth of widespread sexual license in the Mediterranean world. They showed little or no interest in accommodation to prevalent mores. In general, they advocated rigorous marital and sexual discipline and evinced growing esteem for ascetic abstinence from sex.

1. The Later New Testament Writings
2. The Early Patristic Writings

1. The Later New Testament Writings.

The books of the NT other than the Gospels and the Pauline Epistles (see DPL, Sexuality, Sexual Ethics) confirm rather than add to the teachings on sexual issues given by the earlier books. Thus Hebrews* reminds its readers of the honorable estate of marriage* and the need to guard it against adultery and sexual irregularity in general (Heb 13:4; cf. Heb 12:16, which may echo post-OT tradition on Esau's sexual sins; Bruce, 366-67; see Purity). The seventh commandment against adultery is reiterated in James 2:11 (cf. metaphorical application in Jas 4:4; see James), and 1 Peter* beautifully commends holy and considerate marital relations (1 Pet 3:1-7). Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) employs the imagery used from the prophets to Paul of the church* as the bride, the wife of Christ* the Lamb* (Rev 19:7, 21:2, 9; cf. possibly 2 Jn 1, 5).

No particular context need be supposed for repeated warnings against licentiousness in sexual and other behaviors (cf. 1 Pet 4:3). The inclusion of abstinence from porneia among the three provisions of the so-called apostolic decree, which clarified the modus vivendi for Gentile* and Jewish Christians* to share congregational life together (Acts 15:20), illustrates the contrast felt to obtain between pagan Gentile and Jewish codes of sexual mores. Here the infant church's leaders agreed to build upon minimal Jewish standards of sexual ethics (i.e., the commands Jews believed were given to Noah), a fact significant in itself for present-day debates, in which it is often assumed that Christian sexual ethics should function on guidelines independent of the OT. From Jesus onward (cf. Mt 5:27-8, Mk 10:1-12) the ethical teachings of the new order witnessed the adaptation and adoption of OT standards.

The Revelation of John makes frequent use of the language of prostitution and fornication, sometimes literally (Rev 9:21) but more often figuratively of idolatry* and the excesses of debauched luxury (Rev 14:8, 17:1-5, 18:3, 19:2); clearly the sexual, religious and other moral dimensions are not neatly separable. In these later chapters pagan, Christian-persecuting (see Persecution) Rome* seems to embody these forces of evil, but the letters to the Asian churches in Revelation 2—3 reveal subtler internal threats. Local allusions probably explain the imagery of Revelation 3:4, 18, but the churches at Ephesus, Pergamum and Thyatira had been disturbed by the teachings of the Nicolaitans (Rev 2:6, 15, presumably named after some Nicolas), whose ranks included a prophetess (Rev 2:20; she may well have named herself Jezebel). They appealed to Jewish traditions about Balaam (Rev 2:14; cf. 2 Pet 2:15; Jude 11; Num 22-4) and propagated a religious and sexual libertinism (Rev 2:14, 20) with Jewish roots (especially if Rev 2:9 [Smyrna] and Rev 3:9 [Philadelphia] allude to the same movement). The Fathers from Irenaeus on incorporate the Nicolaitans into their inventories of gnosticizing heretics but apparently with no independent knowledge about them.

Finally, among the later NT writings, the interpretation of Jude 7 (cf. 2 Pet 2:6) is much contested: "Similarly Sodom and Gomorrah . . . , having indulged in sexual immorality in the same manner as these [i.e., the angels of Jude 6] and having pursued after different flesh, are set forth." The reference is clearly to Genesis 19:1-29, where the Sodomites sought sex with two male angelic visitors (see Angels). The issue focuses largely on the preciseness of the analogy with Jude 6, whose "angels" (i.e., "the sons of God" of Genesis 6:1-4) married human wives (Bauckham, 50-53). Does heteras ("different, strange") mean that the "flesh" the Sodomites sought was angelic (i.e., nonhuman rather than homosexual)? The tradition of Hellenistic Judaism,* insofar as it identified Sodom's sin as sexual, saw it as homosexual (more so than Bauckham, 54 allows) rather than as transspecies. Testament of Naphtali 3:4-5 correlates the sins of Genesis 19 and 6 as departures from the order of nature. But modern preoccupations may be dictating an unreal choice. Just as abuse of hospitality* in antiquity often involved sexual aggression rather than mere breach of etiquette, so the angelic dimension may be a submotif in the Sodomites' same-sex lust, given the charge of "defilement of the flesh" in Jude 8 (cf. Jude 23).

2. The Early Patristic Writings.

Against some of the Gnostics,* Irenaeus and others leveled charges of sexual license (Irenaeus Haer. 1.13.5-7, concerning the Marcosians), but restraint on sexuality was overwhelmingly the order of the day. "There is little in the writings of the church fathers that could bolster a modern argument for 'sexual liberation'" (Clark, 1054).

Almost without exception early church writers regarded divorce and remarriage as inconceivable, even when they allowed or even required separation in cases of adultery or sometimes unbelief. There are few issues on which the patristic testimony is so unanimous (see Crouzel).

On the issue of remarriage for widowed persons the trend is clear, but no obvious consensus prevails. The debate can be read in Tertullian. To His Wife 1 urges her not to remarry if he dies; book 2 relents, no doubt out of greater anxiety that she remarry to a pagan, and insists that she marry only a Christian; Monogamy, written in his later Montanist phase, excludes remarriage as little better than licensed fornication.

As the second century advanced, voices are heard suggesting that for Christian married couples intercourse has only procreation in view (Justin Apol. I 29; Athenagoras Suppl. 33). This position is unambiguous in Clement of Alexandria (long before Augustine, who is often blamed for it).

At the same time abortion and infanticide, including exposure of unwanted children, were condemned from the Didache 2.2 onward (see Didache). Both practices were often ranked along with killing, whether in homicide, warfare or capital punishment. The need to disown the abandonment of children (Justin Apol. I 27) starkly sketches the harsh backdrop to early Christian sexual and marital ethics.

The Fathers trod a middle path between unqualified denigration of sexual relations and denial of the superiority of total abstinence from them. The former was espoused by nearly all varieties of Gnosticism* and by Marcion,* as well as by extreme, rather than heretical, movements such as Montanism. Gnosticism proper was fired by a thoroughgoing flesh-spirit dualism that in effect regarded the material as evil. In Montanism renewed eschatological* urgency led to a ban on marriage, whereas in other fringe groups, such as those to which the apocryphal* acts of the apostles appealed, abandonment of sexual activity enjoyed a high profile as the ethic of the élite—and afforded Christian women a paradoxical liberation from being sex partner, wife and mother.

Yet while the Fathers vindicated the intrinsic goodness of the created order (see Creation) and of marriage and childbearing within it, there was no gainsaying the enormous attraction of the ascetic option within mainstream catholic Christianity. In the Syriac-speaking church even baptism* may have been open only to celibate people for a period in the early centuries. Tatian, the author of the Diatessaron, a harmony of the Gospels, came from eastern Syria and is portrayed as founder of the Encratites, who condemned matrimony and all sexual activity. But encratism (Gk enkrateia, "self-control") was more widely diffused than a single sect; it has been detected, for example, in the Gospel of Thomas from Nag Hammadi. And its influence is discernible in catholic writers such as Clement of Alexandria.

Individuals or groups (e.g., virgins and widows) committed to permanent continence are attested within congregations from the apostolic fathers* onward (1 Clem. 38.2; Ign. Pol.

5.2). Both widows and virgins appear in the Hippolytan Apostolic Tradition (c. 215) under the bishop's supervision. The "spiritual marriage" of ascetics of both sexes living together, perhaps already glimpsed in Hermas's symbolism (see Hermas, Shepherd of), is condemned for its abuses from the early third century.

The prevalence of asceticism cannot be traced to a single source or motivation. Selective use of the canonical Gospels and Paul, the Stoic ideal of apatheia ("passionlessness"), Platonic dualism, the influence of Essene and other Jewish communal practices and the widespread ascetic impulse in serious circles in the Greco-Roman world all contributed. From no later than the mid-second century, the Protevangelium of James propagated reverence for Mary's* perpetual virginity.

The import of the limited NT references to homosexuality (see DPL, Homosexuality) is left in no doubt from a patristic perspective. Although it was never made the subject of any extended treatment, male homosexual behavior is one of a trio of sexual sins (the others being adultery and fornication) found together from the Didache 2.2 onward. It is regularly regarded as contrary to the natural order and discerned in the offense of the Sodomites. Female homosexuality is similarly rejected, though rarely mentioned, as in antiquity in general. There is no evidence that the teaching mind of the early church viewed same-sex eroticism with other than disapprobation, but it was not singled out for special condemnation.

A society obsessed with freedom of sexual expression is badly disadvantaged in interpreting early Christian sexual ethics sympathetically. But Christian people called to holiness* in body and spirit in such a setting may well find them peculiarly challenging. Certainly they cannot be understood except against the backdrop of patterns of exploitation and license that sound familiar today. And they even remind us of easily forgotten notes of sexual self-denial in the NT itself.

See also ETHICS; MARRIAGE, DIVORCE, ADULTERY; WOMAN AND MAN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: 1983); P. Brown, The Body and Society: Men, Women and Sexual Renunciation in Early Christianity (New York: Columbia University Press, 1988); F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1964); V. Burrus, Chastity as Autonomy: Women in the Stories of the Apocryphal Acts (Lewiston, NY: Edwin Mellen, 1987); H. von Campenhausen, Tradition and Life in the Church (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1968); H. Chadwick, "Enkrateia," RAC 5 (1962) 343-65; E. A. Clark, "Sexuality," Encyclopedia of Early Christianity, ed. E. Ferguson (2 vols; 2d ed.; New York: Garland, 1997) 2:1053-54; H. Crouzel, L'Eglise primitive face au divorce (Paris: Beauchesne, 1971); M. Goguel, "Les Nicolaïtes," RHR 115 (1937) 5-36; R. B. Hays, The Moral Vision of the New Testament (San Francisco: HarperCollins, 1996); D. G. Hunter, ed., Marriage in the Early Church (SECT; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1992); T. E. Schmidt, Straight and Narrow?: Compassion and Clarity in the Homosexuality Debate (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1995); D. F. Wright, "Early Christian Attitudes to Homosexuality," SP 18:2 (1989) 329-34; idem, "Homosexuality," Encyclopedia of Early Christianity, ed. E. Ferguson (2 vols.; 2d ed; New York: Garland, 1997) 1:542-43; idem, "Homosexuals or Prostitutes? The Meaning of arsenokoitai (1 Cor. 6:9, 1 Tim. 1:10)," VC 38 (1984) 125-53.

D. F. Wright

SHALOM. See PEACE.

SHEEP. See SHEPHERD, FLOCK.

SHEKINAH. See GLORY.

SHEPHERD, FLOCK

Shepherd and sheep imagery appear frequently in early Christian literature, reflecting the broader familiarity with the task of shepherding in ancient Mediterranean culture.

1. Background for the Image
2. Jesus as Shepherd in Early Christian Literature
3. Shepherds as Church Leaders
4. The Shepherd in the Shepherd of Hermas

1. Background for the Image.

1.1. Negative Background for the Shepherd Image. Whereas shepherding was a typical Israelite occupation through much of Israel's history (e.g., Gen 46:33—47:4; Bright, 81), the roles of shepherds had begun to change by the time of Jesus. Many scholars observe that Jewish people commonly despised shepherds (b. Sanh. 25; Jeremias 1972, 132-33; idem 1971, 110; idem 1975, 304; Talbert, 33; Bailey, 147; Tooley, 23).

Many Jewish people were employed as shepherds (e.g., CPJ, 1:15), and E. P. Sanders cautiously warns against reading the pharisaic prejudice against shepherds as indicative of all Judaism* (Sanders, 461-64). Nevertheless the pharisaic view probably reflects a wider view throughout the Roman Empire* that shepherds were of lower status than other peasants (MacMullen, 1-2, 15). Although members of particular trades presumably had more respect for their own professions than did the small number of aristocrats (cf. MacMullen, 120), aristocratic ideology toward pastoralists would have especially influenced the thinking of urban dwellers, who made up the majority of the readers of the documents under consideration.

1.2. Positive Background for the Shepherd Image. Yet Jewish people did not uniformly despise shepherds (Josephus Ant. 1.53), and they never imposed the prejudices of their own time onto the popular shepherds of the biblical record. The Hebrew Bible supplies various images of shepherds upon which early Christian writers could draw. Whereas the flock almost invariably represented God's people (e.g., Ps 74:1; 77:20; 78:52; 79:13; 80:1; 100:3; Is 49:9; 63:11; Jer 13:17; 31:10; Zech 9:16; 10:3)—Sirach 18:13 and Philo De Agricultura 50—53 are exceptions—writers felt free to assign the title shepherd slightly more diversely.

Shepherds long provided natural analogies for rulers or leaders (cf. Anacharsis Ep. 7; Artem- idorus Oneir. 2.12; Homer Il. 1.263). David, who first watched over his father's flock (1 Sam 16:15, 34-37; Ps 78:70-71), became a shepherd of Israel in his generation and the future (2 Sam 5:2; 1 Chron 11:2; Ps 78:70-72; Ezek 34:23; 37:24; in later literature cf. Pss. Sol. 17:40; Gen. Rab. 59:5). The psalmist calls Moses,* who had forty years' experience as a shepherd (Ex 3:1), a shepherd of Israel (Ps 77:20; Is 63:11; in later literature cf. 1 Enoch 89:35; Pseudo-Philo 19.3; Sipre Deut. 305.3.1; y. Sanh. 10:1, §9; Soṭa 5:4, §1; Pesiq. Rab Kah. 2:8; Ex. Rab. 2:2; Marmorstein, 100-101).

This image naturally applied to the Davidic Messiah as well (Mic 5:2-4; cf. Jer 23:1-6; Longenecker, 48-49) and sometimes Jewish teachers (Derrett, 26-28). The leaders God assigned to care for his flock for him (prophets, priests, rulers and officials) were also "shepherds" (Num 27:17; 1 Kings 22:17; Jer 3:15; Mek. Pisha 1.162-63; CD 19.8-9); the righteous prophets,* usually addressing wicked generations, especially apply the term ironically to Israel's leaders performing their work unjustly (Is 56:11; Jer 22:22; 23:1-4; 25:34-36; Zech 10:3; 11:5, 15-17; 13:4-7). When God portrays Israel as a scattered or lost flock, his shepherds are often to blame (Jer 10:21; 50:6-7; Ezek 34:1-10).

The primary biblical portrait of Israel's shepherd, however, applied to God himself, especially in the Bible (Ps 23:1-4; 28:9; 74:1-2; 77:20; 78:52; 79:13; 80:1; 100:3; Is 40:11; Jer 13:17; 31:10; Ezek 34:11-17; Mic 7:14; Zech 9:16; 10:3) but also in some later literature (Sir 18:13; 1 Enoch 89:18; Philo Agric. 50—53; Pseudo-Philo 28.5; 30.5; b. Ḥag. 3; Pes. 118; Ex. Rab. 34:3; Lam. Rab. 1:17, §52; Pesiq. R. 3:2). He performed shepherdlike functions for his people, carrying the young (Ps 28:9; Is 40:11; 46:3-4) and leading his flock as in the first exodus (Ps 77:20; 78:52; 80:1; Is 40:11; 63:14; cf. Ex 13:21; 15:13; Deut 8:2; Ps 78:14; 106:9; 136:16; Neh 9:12; Is 48:21; Jer 2:6, 17; Hos 11:3-4; Amos 2:10). The image of God as shepherd was an image of leadership and protection moved by caring for and commitment to his people. Although it never became a predominant image, later Jewish teachers also recognized that God was a shepherd (b. Ḥag. 3; Pes. 118; Ex. Rab. 34:3; Lam. Rab. 1:17, §52; Pesiq. R. 3:2; cf. Philo Agric. 50) and Israel his flock (e.g., 1 Enoch 89—90; Ex. Rab. 24:3; Pesiq. R. 9:2; 26:2).

2. Jesus as Shepherd in Early Christian Literature.

2.1. Jesus as Shepherd in Revelation and the Johannine Literature. Although early Christian literature may contain allusions to the David-shepherd tradition (in more literal translations cf. Jn 10:9 with 2 Sam 5:2; Ezek 46:10; but this was a common Semitism: Num 27:17; 1 Kings 3:7; Rev 3:12; m. Mid. 1:3), early Christians probably drew especially on the image of God* as the chief shepherd. Thus in John 9:39—10:18 Jesus defends the blind man (Jn 9) as one of his sheep, that is, part of the true Israel,* while excoriating the Pharisees (Jn 9) as "thieves and robbers" (Jn 10:8-10) comparable to the false shepherds of Jeremiah 23:1-2 and Ezekiel 34:1-10. He himself is no hireling but the ultimate shepherd who has come to save the lost sheep (Jn 10:11-16), fulfilling the role the Hebrew Bible assigns to God (Ezek 34:11-22; cf. Jer 23:6), as befits Johannine christology* (cf. Barrett, 163; Payne). Revelation, whose divine christology closely resembles that of John, undoubtedly intends the image in much the same way (Rev 7:17).

In Revelation (see Revelation, Book of), however, Jesus' roles as shepherd and lamb* appear closely connected (Rev 7:17), emphasizing that Jesus not only is the leader of the flock but also participated in the humanity and death that characterize the flock (for the image of a leading sheep see Beasley-Murray, 149). This accords with the OT image of sheep's vulnerability that early Christians applied to Jesus (Acts 8:32, from Is 53:7, the Suffering Servant) and his followers (Rom 8:36, from Ps 44:22). At the same time the text's verbal allusions to Isaiah 49:10 indicate that Jesus fills the role of God in this passage.

2.2. Hebrews 13:20. The christology of Hebrews* is often as explicit as that of John, and its closing blessing adduces the familiar Johannine image of shepherd of God's sheep. In this instance, however, Jesus and the salvation of the promised new exodus is compared with Moses and the salvation of the first exodus (cf. Heb 3:1-6), for the writer depends directly on the Septuagint of Isaiah 63:11-14. As God brought Israel and its shepherds up from the Red Sea (Is 63:11), he brought up the great shepherd from the dead (Heb 13:20; cf. similarly the midrash on Deut 30 in Rom 10:6-8).

2.3. 1 Peter 2:21-25. Although household codes* traditionally addressed only the paterfamilias (male head of the household), Peter addresses particularly the oppressed slaves* and wives in the Christian community. In contrast to Paul, who compared the role of the paterfamilias to Christ's authority* (Eph 5:23; 6:5), Peter compares the suffering* and submission of the slave and the wife to that of Christ (1 Pet 2:21-25; 3:1: "in the same way"). He cites Isaiah 53:9 to prove that Christ was punished unjustly, perhaps intending also to recall the context of the servant who is silent like a sheep (Is 53:7). He continues with implicit citations of Isaiah 53: Christ "bore our sins" (1 Pet 2:24 = Is 53:4), and believers' sins are "healed by his wounds" (1 Pet 2:24 = Is 53:5), because they had been "wandering like sheep" (1 Pet 2:25 = Is 53:6). Jesus' death (see Death of Christ), however, restored the wandering sheep to the Shepherd, which could mean the Father (cf. 1 Pet 4:19) but very probably refers to Jesus (1 Pet 5:4). Some scholars believe that Peter here draws on a paschal homily that incorporated Isaiah 53 (Lindars, 82), but early Christians applied the passage to Jesus consistently with or without paschal associations (e.g., Acts 8:32-33; Pol. Phil. 8; probably Mk 10:45).

2.4. Other Christian Texts. The church* continues to be portrayed as Christ's flock in early Christian literature (1 Clem. 16.1), with Jesus as the shepherd and helmsman (Mart. Pol. 19.2). Jesus' followers are like lambs among wolves, and though the wolves may kill them, they should fear not those who can kill but the one who has authority to cast into hell* (2 Clem. 5.2-4; cf. Mt 10:16, 28). Ignatius* also speaks of wolves seeking to overcome the sheep (Ign. Phil. 2.1-2).

3. Shepherds as Church Leaders.

If most christological shepherd texts draw on biblical imagery associated with God, most shepherd texts applying to the church draw on biblical images of shepherds as human leaders of God's people.

3.1. 1 Peter 5:2-4. In some cases, such as 1 Peter 5, the two images are intertwined. When Peter first calls Jesus the "shepherd," he also calls him the "overseer" (1 Pet 2:25; cf. Acts 20:28; CD 13.7-9). Judaism frequently applied the title overseer to God (e.g., Wis 1:6; Sib. Or. 1.152; 2.177; Frag. 1.3. T. Benj. 4:3; 6:6; 4 Bar. 7:35; cf. Wis 7:23; Theon Progymn. 11.194). But the Mediterranean world generally used it for broader leadership designations (e.g., 1 Macc 1:51; Plutarch Numa 9.5, Vit.; Epictetus Disc. 3.22.72; 1QS 6.12; CD 9.18-22; see Dibelius and Conzelmann, 54). Several texts in Ignatius (Ign. Eph. 1.3; Ign. Magn. 3.1; Ign. Rom. 9.1) imply Christ is a heavenly overseer. Both terms recur in Peter's exhortation to church leaders (elders, 1 Pet 5:1) in 1 Peter 5:2-3: they are to shepherd and oversee the flock, awaiting the appearance of the "chief shepherd" (1 Pet 5:4; for the term see Deissmann, 99-100). This text plainly alludes to the prophetic conception that leaders among God's people are undershepherds expected to answer in all respects to God, the ultimate shepherd of his people (Jer 23; Ezek 34; cf. Jn 10:10-16).

3.2. Shepherds as Pastors in General. Although overseers and elders (bishops and presbyters) are distinct as early as the early second century (Ign. Trall. 3), the local churches of the first century in Acts* (Acts 20:17, 28), 1 Peter* (1 Pet 5:1-2), the Pastoral Epistles (Tit 1:5-7) and apparently Philippians (Phil 1:1) still used them interchangeably. Because Acts (Acts 20:28) and 1 Peter (1 Pet 5:1-2) also employ "shepherd" ("pastor") interchangeably with "overseer" and "elder," we may assume that early Christians particularly employed "shepherds" for this local church office (Eph 4:11). Early second-century writers portrayed overseers as shepherds (Ign. Phld. 2.1) and recognized that if necessary God could function as shepherd in their place (Ign. Rom. 9.1; cf. Ezek 34:11). Ignatius believes that the flock should follow their shepherds (Ign. Phld. 2.1), although he claims less than apostolic authority for the bishops (Ign. Rom. 4.3; cf. Mart. Pol. 16.2; see Church Order, Government).

4. The Shepherd in the Shepherd of Hermas.
Hermas's use of "shepherd" is quite different from the earlier uses. In the Shepherd of Hermas the "shepherd" is a sort of guardian angel, an "angel of repentance" (Herm. Vis. 5.3, 7; Herm. Man. 12.49.1; Herm. Sim. 2.1; 8.1.4; 8.2.5-8; 8.4.1; 8.6.1; 9.2.6; 9.5.7; 9.7.1; 9.10.1; 9.11.1; 9.23.5; 9.33.1; 10.1.1; 10.4.5). This angel seems to derive its character more from the Roman genius than from Jewish categories (just as the visionary experiences borrow from Jewish apocalyptic* but reflect Roman images like those of Virgil); the shepherd functions, however, as the angelic guide of apocalyptic literature (e.g., Herm. Sim. 8.2.5-3.1). Nevertheless the doctrine of deeds being ruled by either the good or the evil angel, also attested at Qumran,* informs Hermas's angelology (Herm. Man. 6.2). Hermas entitles even evil angels "shepherds" (Herm. Sim. 6.1.5—2.2; 6.3.2).

See also HERMAS, SHEPHERD OF; LAMB; MINISTRY; PASTORAL THEOLOGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. K. E. Bailey, Poet and Peasant: A Literary Cultural Approach to the Parables in Luke (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1976); C. K. Barrett, "The Old Testament in the Fourth Gospel," JTS 48 (1947) 155-69; G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation (NCB; Greenwood, SC: Attic; London: Marshall, Morgan & Scott, 1974); J. Bright, A History of Israel (3d ed.; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1981); A. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1978 [repr.]); J. D. M. Derrett, "The Good Shepherd: St. John's Use of Jewish Halakah and Haggadah," ST 27 (1973) 25-50; M. Dibelius and H. Conzelmann, The Pastoral Epistles: A Commentary on the Pastoral Epistles (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1972); J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1975); idem, New Testament Theology (New York: Scribner's, 1971); idem, The Parables of Jesus (2d rev. ed.; New York: Scribner's, 1972); B. Lindars, New Testament Apologetic (London: SCM, 1961); R. N. Longenecker, The Christology of Early Jewish Christianity (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1981 [1970]); R. MacMullen, Roman Social Relations: 50 B.C. to A.D. 284 (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1974); A. Marmorstein, The Old Rabbinic Doctrine of God: The Names and Attributes of God (New York: KTAV, 1968 [1927]); P. B. Payne, "Jesus' Implicit Claim to be Deity in His Parables," TJ 2 (1981) 3-23; E. P. Sanders, Judaism: Practice and Belief, 63 B.C.E.—66 C.E. (Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1992); C. H. Talbert, Reading Luke: A Literary and Theological Commentary on the Third Gospel (New York: Crossroad, 1982); W. Tooley, "The Shepherd and Sheep Image in the Teaching of Jesus," NovT 7 (1964) 15-25.

C. S. Keener

SHEPHERD OF HERMAS. See HERMAS, SHEPHERD OF.

SIBYLLINE ORACLES. See APOCRYPHAL AND PSEUDEPIGRAHAL WRITINGS.

SIGNS AND WONDERS

The word pair "signs and wonders" ("wonder," teras, was archaic by the NT period and is always paired with "sign") and in most cases "sign" (sēmeion) by itself refer in our literature to miracles* worked by humans or directly by divine agency. Generally these signs and wonders serve to attest a divine or pseudo-divine messenger, although by the time of the apostolic fathers the reference is either historical or eschatological.*

1. Background
2. Acts
3. Revelation
4. Post-New Testament Writers

1. Background.
In Greek literature the word pair "signs and wonders" occurs as early as the second century B.C. for a miracle produced by a miracle worker or a divinity (Polybius Hist. 3.112.18). In the Septuagint and Jewish literature the pair, which appears twenty-seven times, normally refers to the miracles worked by Moses* (Ex 3:20; 4:30; 7:3; Deut 4:34; 6:22; 7:19; Jer 32:20-21; see DPL, Signs, Wonders, Miracles). However, it can also refer to the signs that confirm a prophet's* call to others (Is 8:18) or attest to God's* sovereignty, usually including the attesting to the prophet as his spokesperson (Dan 4:3; 6:27).

2. Acts.

Acts* refers to signs thirteen times in Acts 2—15, often in the explicit word pair "signs and wonders." The use by Stephen* in Acts 7:36 for the signs of the exodus parallels the use in the Septuagint. However, when Acts 2:22 points to Jesus as one attested to by God through signs and wonders (which use is also found in Heb 2:4, where God witnesses to Jesus with signs and wonders), we receive an indication of the distinctive use of this term in Acts.

In the prophecy from Joel cited in Acts 2, signs and wonders are associated with the pouring out of God's Spirit (Acts 2:19), which the author stresses is the Spirit of prophecy. With this Spirit poured out on them, each of the most significant figures in Acts is attested to by signs and wonders as Jesus had been. In Acts 2:43 the apostles* in general receive this attestation, and in Acts 4:16, 22 it is Peter and John in particular. Later the collective group prays for evangelistic boldness (also associated with the pouring out of the Holy Spirit*) accompanied by signs and wonders from God (Acts 4:30). Acts 5:12 reports that this is exactly what happened. Furthermore, Stephen (Acts 6:8), Philip* (Acts 8:6, 13) and Paul and Barnabas (Acts 14:3; 15:12) all receive similar attestation as they proclaim the gospel among the Hellenists, Samaritans* and Gentiles* respectively. Thus in Acts (unlike Luke, where "sign" is associated with the deeds of Jesus only by unbelievers and "mighty deed," dynamis, is his term for Jesus' miracles) signs and wonders indicate those miraculous acts associated with the outpouring of the Spirit in "the last days" that God does to attest his messengers.

3. Revelation.

Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) refers to signs or signs and wonders seven times. Three passages (Rev 12:1, 3; 15:1) speak of signs in heaven* with no agent named, but four times Revelation refers to signs produced by an agent (Rev 13:13-14; 16:14; 19:20). In every case the signs are the miracles of the "false prophet" of the beast* or the "demonic spirits" released by them. When Revelation speaks of judgment miracles produced through godly individuals, namely, the two prophetic witnesses* (Rev 11), they are not called signs. Instead these two are said to "have authority" to do this or that. While the "beast from the earth" or "false prophet" is also said to have authority* (i.e., that of the "beast from the sea"), thus we cannot conclude that "have authority" is the term for godly miracle workers and "signs and wonders" for ungodly ones, it is clear that Revelation avoids the use of "sign" or "signs and wonders" for godly miracles. (The three times "signs" is used without a named agent, it apparently stands for symbolic figures, and one of them is the devil.)

Could it be that in whatever form of the Johannine tradition with which Revelation had contact "sign" was appropriate only for the miracles of Jesus? That would explain the difference between Revelation and the Fourth Gospel. Or was it that some of the opponents mentioned in Revelation 2—3 (such as the prophetic "Jezebel") described the miracles they worked as signs (cf. 2 Cor 12:12)? Or does Revelation, with its stress on martyrdom,* wish to avoid giving Christians the impression that a miracle might deliver them and instead sees the conquering of evil coming mainly through faithfulness unto death? It is possible that all of these could play some role in Revelation's use of "signs and wonders."

4. Post-New Testament Writers.

If "signs and wonders" referred to the authentication of the godly miracle-working messenger in Acts and to that of the miracle-working evil messenger in Revelation, in the apostolic fathers it refers mostly to past events, especially those of the OT, returning almost full circle to the use of the phrase in the Septuagint.

The signs and wonders of the exodus and the wilderness wanderings are referred to in 1 Clement 51.5; Barnabas 4.14, 5.8 and 12.5 (in the latter the sign is the bronze serpent, which points to Christ*). Three other signs referred to are Lot's wife (1 Clem. 11.2), Rahab's scarlet thread in Jericho (1 Clem. 12.7) and in pagan mythology the story of the phoenix (1 Clem. 25.1). Signs for these writers are generally events in the history of Israel that are then interpreted typologically.

The one exception to this use of "sign" is Didache 16.4, 6 where, in a passage drawing heavily on the tradition in Matthew 24, the terms are used eschatologically. There we learn that "in the last days" the "deceiver of the world" who impersonates Christ "shall do signs and wonders." Yet when all seems lost, "then shall appear the signs of truth," namely, "the sign spread out in heaven," the "sound of the trumpet" and "the resurrection of the dead." Here we revisit the use of "signs and wonders" in Revelation but with the optimistic teaching that, as in the exodus, God's signs are the true signs of the future.

See also ACTS OF THE APOSTLES; HEALING, ILLNESS; HOLY SPIRIT; MIRACLES IN ACTS; TONGUES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1975); O. Hofius, "Miracle," NIDNTT 2:626-27, 629-35; H. C. Kee, Medicine, Miracle and Magic in New Testament Times (SNTSMS 55; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1986); F. Neirynck, "The Miracle Stories in the Acts of the Apostles: An Introduction" in Les Actes des Apôtres: Traditions, Rédaction, Théologie, ed. J. Kremer (Gembloux: Duculot, 1979) 169-213; S. M. Praeder, "Miracle Worker and Missionary: Paul in the Acts of the Apostles," SBLSP (1983) 107-29; H. Rengstorf, "σημεῖον κτλ," TDNT 7:200-261; idem, "τέρας," TDNT 8:113-26; R. Stronstad, The Charismatic Theology of St. Luke (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1984); M. Whitaker, " 'Signs and Wonders': The Pagan Background," SE 5 (1968) 155-58; D. Williams, Signs, Wonders and the Kingdom of God (Ann Arbor, MI: Servant, 1989). P. H. Davids

SIMILITUDES OF HERMAS.

See HERMAS, SHEPHERD OF.

SIMON MAGUS.

See GNOSIS, GNOSTICISM.

SIN, WICKEDNESS

Sin and wickedness are concepts frequently mentioned in this body of NT writings and in the works of the apostolic fathers by means of a number of different Greek words. The major words used for sin and wickedness are kakos and ponēros, two general words for evil or bad behavior; adikia, a general word for evil or sin; hamartia, a more specific term for sin often involving the breaking of God's law; asebeia, a term for impiety; and parabasis, a specific word for sinful disobedience, and their cognates. Although in some contexts it is possible to distinguish clear meanings for these words, there is also a large amount of overlap, so much so that it is better to distinguish various senses of sin and wickedness rather than usage of individual lexical items.

Sin and wickedness are condemned as inappropriate and even law-breaking behavior in relation to one's fellow humans and God. Often sin and wickedness are contrasted with positive qualities, such as goodness and love. This dualism is in keeping with the hortatory moral and paraenetic nature of much of this writing. The results of sin and wickedness are the severing of human and divine relationships and consequent punishment, including final judgment and condemnation.

1. Sin and Human Behavior
2. Sin and Christ
3. Sin and Love of God
4. Sin and Final Judgment

1. Sin and Human Behavior.

One of the fundamental distinctions in this body of writings is the opposition of good and evil, usually in terms of acts or behavior. In the opposition, good is to be preferred and is a reflection of maturity, obedience* and seeking to do good things, while evil is to be shunned and is a reflection of immaturity, disobedience and the doing of wrong (e.g., Heb 5:14; Jas 2:9; 1 Pet 2:14; 3:8-12; cf. Ign. Phld. 2.2). In many contexts evil is directly equated with sin and wickedness, since it is behavior that contravenes God's* goodness and righteousness* (Heb 1:9; 3:12; 8:12; Jas 1:13; 4:17; 1 Pet 2:1, 16; 3:12; 3 Jn 11).

In these writings humans are often categorized by their sinful or evil behavior. Instruction is given not to be the kind of person who is found doing wicked or evil things (e.g., Acts 3:26; 8:23; Heb 12:1; Jas 2:4; 4:16; 2 Pet 2:13, 15; 3 Jn 11; Rev 2:2), who has an evil conscience* due to impurity (Heb 10:22; see Purity) or even who welcomes one who does evil into his house (2 Jn 11). In James* some sin is depicted not as outright disobedience to God's law* but as the result of desire that has been allowed to give birth to sin and then leads to death (Jas 1:15; 5:20). The classic example of this process may well be the evil that Cain did to his brother Abel (1 Jn 3:12). Because Cain belonged to the evil one (see also 1 Jn 2:13, 14; 5:18, 19), he did the evil deed of killing his brother, whose actions were righteous.

In Hebrews* as well as in James, a clear exposition of sin as disobedience to God's law is given. The book resonates with the language of the OT temple* and the cultus (e.g., purification, Heb 1:3; atonement, Heb 2:17; as well as the law as a shadow of that which was coming, Heb 10:2-4, 8). Analogies are drawn with the priesthood* performing its functions in relation to sin offerings (Heb 5:1, 3; 10:11; 13:11), in which the priest's role is now taken by Christ* (Heb 2:17). The author goes further and not only equates the priestly function with Christ but also depicts Christ himself as the singular sacrifice* itself (Heb 7:27; 9:28; cf. Rev 1:5) that removes any further need for sacrifice to remove sin (Heb 9:26). The result is forgiveness* of sins—their never being remembered (Heb 8:12; 10:18). Hebrews 9:15 well summarizes the discussion of sin in the book when it speaks of Christ as the mediator of a new covenant* with the reward of an eternal inheritance, since Christ died to free humans from their sins committed under the earlier covenant.

The apostolic fathers* have a view of sinful human behavior similar to that of the NT writings cited above. Four major emphases are worth noting. The first is that they draw upon examples from the OT in exhorting their readers to shun evil and do good. For example, the book of Job is frequently drawn upon (e.g., 1 Clem. 17.3; 39.9; 56.8), and the psalms are invoked for their passionate call to depart from evil (e.g., 1 Clem. 18.4; 22.3, 4, 6).

Second, the reality of sinful desires is recognized (e.g., Did. 2.6, where the Ten Commandments are adapted to a Gentile* audience; Herm. Man. 12.1.1, a highly controversial section in the Shepherd because of his apparent view of sin as eradicable; Herm. Sim. 9.25.2). Evil is often seen in contrast to that which is good. For example, in Hermas Mandates 8.2 there is exhortation to shun that which is evil and do what is good (see also Herm. Man. 7.4; 10.2.3, 4).

Third, conscience* is seen to play a role in determining what is evil. For example, Didache 4.14 exhorts the reader not to pray having an evil conscience (see also Herm. Man. 3.4).

Fourth, and perhaps most clearly, sexual sin looms large. It appears to be the single sin that solicits the greatest concern and merits specific and direct address at numerous places in the apostolic fathers (Barn. 4.12, 13), with explicit equation of sexual sin with wicked desire (see Herm. Man. 12.2.5; Herm. Sim. 5.3.6). The nature of the Shepherd* literature perhaps makes this inevitable, although the Shepherd itself perhaps reflects that in the early church sexual sin was seen to be particularly dangerous (e.g., Herm. Vis. 1.1.7, 8; 1.2.4; 3.7.3; 3.8.4; Herm. Man. 2.3; 4.1.1, 2; 8.3; 12.1.3; Herm. Sim. 5.1.5).

2. Sin and Christ.

In several passages in this body of writings, comments are made regarding the sinlessness of Jesus Christ, which stands in opposition to sinful human behavior. These passages have raised theological issues regarding the possibility of Christ's sinning—for example, whether he was perpetually sinless, whether he was ever able to sin, or whether he achieved sinlessness and was exalted in his attained sinless state.

In Hebrews 4:15 the author states that humans do not have a high priest who is incapable of sympathy with their weakness but have one who has been tempted in every way, just as humans are. Nevertheless he was without sin. It is this phrase, "without or apart from sin," that has caused the most difficulty. Sin in the context of Hebrews seems to revolve around Jesus' response to temptation* rather than some kind of inherent sinless nature or his kinship with fallen humanity. The assertion seems to be that Christ resisted temptation at every stage of his life, so that when he is offered without blemish before God (Heb 9:14), this reflects not a final or an achieved blamelessness but the perfection of one who had always resisted temptation.

There is the same sense in 1 Peter 2:22, when the author quotes Isaiah 53 9, stating that Christ committed no sin and no deceit was found in him (see also 1 Clem. 16.10, which cites Is 53:9 in the midst of citing most of Is 53:1-12 in a similar way). This allows the author of 1 Peter to state in 1 Peter 3:18, the opening verse of the most important christological* section in the book, that Christ's death was that of a righteous person dying for the unjust concerning their sins (see Death of Christ). In language redolent of 1 Peter 3:18 as well as Paul, Diognetus 9.2 contrasts Christ and the wicked, with Christ depicted as the son* who was given as ransom, the blameless for the evil.

3. Sin and Love of God.
An assumption of this part of the biblical literature is that impiety and godlessness are forms of sinfulness and are to be rejected (Jude 4, 15, 18; 2 Pet 2:5, 6; 3:7). God is angry at sin, both in the past with disobedient angels* (2 Pet 2:4) and the Israelites (Heb 3:17) and with contemporary Christian behavior. This dynamic is well illustrated in 1 John, a letter concerned to explicate the ethical* mandate incumbent upon those who have seen and known Christ. The letter* exemplifies what it means to love God in terms of loving behavior toward others (see also 1 Pet 4:8).

Several passages in 1 John imply that sinlessness is achievable, while other passages recognize the factuality of human sinfulness. R. E. Brown lists seven possible solutions to the problems raised by these passages, although none is entirely convincing. For example, a standard distinction between the present and aorist tenses of the Greek verb, whereby although humans might continue the occasional one-time sin (aorist tense) they do not persist in sin (present tense), runs afoul of usage in the book. For example, 1 John 3:4, 6 and 8 use the present tense to describe actual sinful acts, and the perfect tense is used in 1 John 1:10 to make the opposite statement regarding sin.

A more plausible solution, and one not dependent upon the Greek tense forms, is that a balance is being struck in the letter between the ideal of one not sinning and thus being consistent with one's confession of Christ and the reality of persistent human sinfulness. The ethical ideal is tempered by moral reality, although without neglecting the provision for forgiveness. In the argument of the letter, the reality is stated before the ideal. In 1 John 1:8-10 the author states that if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves. If we say that we do not sin, we make God a liar, and his word is not in us. The ideal is established in such passages as 1 John 3:6, where the author says that everyone who abides in Christ does not sin, and everyone who does sin has not seen him; and 1 John 5:18, where he states that everyone who is begotten from God does not sin. Sin is clearly seen here as a breaking of divine law (1 Jn 3:4). Although those abiding in Christ know the demand of loving behavior through obedience, they will inevitably fail. Nevertheless all is not lost. The solution of the dilemma is found in Christ. In 1 John 2:1, after stating that he is writing so that his audience may not sin, the author says that if they sin, they have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. It is Christ who cleanses and forgives from all sin (1 Jn 1:7, 9; 2:12; 3:5), since he is the propitiatory sacrifice for sins (1 Jn 2:2; 4:10).

4. Sin and Final Judgment.
In a few passages in the NT writings and the apostolic fathers, there are explicit statements regarding the ultimate and final judgment* of sinners and the wicked. These passages impress the reader with the seriousness of sin and wickedness, in the light of God and his demand for righteous behavior. In the NT these passages often utilize apocalyptic* imagery in painting a picture of final judgment. For example, Hebrews 2:2-3 asks the rhetorical question that if the message of angels was that every violation of God's law and every act of disobedience received punishment, how can Christians expect to escape if they ignore the call of salvation? Similarly Hebrews 10:26 says that those who keep on sinning can expect God's judgment. Revelation 18:4-8 and following draw a contrast between those who share in Babylon's* sin and those who do not. Those who do can look forward only to trouble, including repayment for their sins in terms of ultimate death and fiery consumption meted out by a judging God.

Although this kind of apocalyptic language is fairly frequent in Revelation (see Revelation, Book of), one of the most concentrated passages with such imagery is 2 Peter 2:9-16. After discussing how God has not spared others in the OT, the author asserts that God certainly knows how to rescue the godly from their trials and to hold the unrighteous for their day of punishment. He then depicts such unrighteous people in a lengthy catalog of their vices, including blasphemy and other sins so wicked that not even the angels would dare do the same. But these people will be paid back for their sins. The author describes this in anticipation of the day of the Lord (see Day of the Lord), when the ungodly will be destroyed (2 Pet 3:7). A passage that uses similar imagery is Diognetus 10.7, which implores believers to choose heaven* over death and the everlasting fire that punishes for eternity.* Similar in perspective if not in language is Didache 5.1-2, which defines the "Way of Death" in terms of a catalog of sinful behavior

(cf. Barn. 20.1, which mentions the devil; see Satan). This language is more typical of the apostolic fathers, who appear regularly to use death as a means of speaking of eternal punishment (cf. Herm. Man. 12.1.2, 3; 12.2.2, 4).

See also CONSCIENCE; FLESH; FORGIVENESS; JUDGMENT; OBEDIENCE; REDEMPTION; RIGHTEOUSNESS; VIRTUES AND VICES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. E. Brown, The Epistles of John (AB; New York: Doubleday, 1982); A. Chester and R. P. Martin, The Theology of the Letters of James, Peter and Jude (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994); R. B. Edwards, The Johannine Epistles (NTG; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1996); W. Günther, "Sin," NIDNTT 3:573-85; J. A. Kleist, The Didache, Etc. (ACW 6; Westminster, MD: Newman, 1948); J. Lawson, A Theological and Historical Introduction to the Apostolic Fathers (New York: Macmillan, 1961); J. Lieu, The Theology of the Johannine Epistles (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991); B. Lindars, The Theology of the Letter to the Hebrews (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991); D. Peterson, Hebrews and Perfection (SNTSMS 47; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1982). S. E. Porter SISTERS OF JESUS. See RELATIVES OF JESUS.

SLAVE, SLAVERY

In the hierarchical societies of the early Roman Empire,* the legal ownership of human beings who could be used as property (chattel slavery) had long been widespread and regarded as appropriate and moral. Polybius, the Greek historian of Rome's rise to power, noted that both slaves and cattle were essential to life (Polybius Hist. 4.38.4). As many as one-third of the population of the empire were enslaved, and an additional large percentage had been slaves earlier in their lives. Those laboring in rural slavery provided their owners' primary income, from which the owners drew to maintain a large number of domestic slaves who not only provided a wide range of personal services but also displayed their owners' economic status. The Christian movement developed in such a social and cultural context, with the result that many important passages in early Christian documents cannot be understood apart from keen awareness of those features that make Greco-Roman slavery unique.

1. Modern Readers and Ancient Slavery: Avoiding Anachronism
2. "Slaves of God" in the Biblical Tradition: Serving with Honor
3. Terminology of Slavery or Enslavement in Early Christian Texts: Clarifying the Contexts

1. Modern Readers and Ancient Slavery: Avoiding Anachronism.

Throughout history a large number of societies have chosen not to kill their vanquished enemies but to force them to serve as slaves, subjecting them to a "social death," separated from blood kin, from homeland and from legal protections enjoyed by free persons (see Patterson). The Greeks and Romans, however, independently transformed such enslavement into something original, "namely, an institutionalized system of large-scale employment of slave labor in both the countryside and the cities" (Finley, 67). Scholars have identified these societies as two of only five in world history rooted in "slave economics," that is, as having developed an economy and high culture made possible by extensive use of involuntary labor (see Ste. Croix). The other three were created later in Brazil, the Caribbean and the southern United States of America. It is natural then to think that knowledge of New World slavery can provide the modern interpreter with insight into the social, economic and legal context of the early Christians. Yet such information has frequently created serious misunderstandings.

Modern readers must overcome their temptation to read into any ancient Jewish, Greek or Roman text their knowledge of modern slavery. The meanings of any familiar-sounding terms can be determined only by a close investigation of the particular social systems and cultural values the early Christian writers took for granted (see Malina). Among the distinctive and often surprising features of slavery as practiced around the Mediterranean in the early centuries of our era are these:

1. An enslaved person generally could not be identified by appearance or clothing; racial or ethnic origins were not reliable indicators of social or legal status.

2. The cultural and religious traditions of slaves were usually those of their owners and other free persons.

3. Education of slaves was encouraged, enhancing their value; some slaves were better educated than their owners. Rome's cultural leadership in the empire largely depended on educated, foreign-born slaves who had been taken there.

4. Partially as a result, many slaves functioned in highly responsible and sensitive positions such as workshop and household managers, accountants, tutors, personal secretaries, sea captains and physicians (see Martin, 1-49). An important minority of slaves had considerable influence and social power, even over freeborn persons of lesser status than the slaves' owners.

5. By no means were the enslaved regularly to be found at the bottom of the socioeconomic pyramid. Rather those free and impoverished persons who had to seek work each day without any certainty of employment occupied the lowest level. Some of them sold themselves into slavery in order to obtain job security, food, clothing and shelter.

6. Slaves could own property, including their own slaves. They could accumulate funds that they might use to purchase their own freedom.

7. Because slaves were owned by persons across the range of economic levels, they developed no consciousness of being a social class or of suffering a common plight (see Garnsey and Saller, 109-25). Thus no laws were needed to hinder public assembly of slaves.

8. In contrast to New World slavery, ancient owners did not regard their adult slaves paternalistically; they clearly distinguished the roles of parents and of owners and felt no need to justify the institution of slavery.

9. Persons not infrequently sold themselves to pay debts, to escape poverty, to climb socially or to obtain special governmental positions (see Dio Chrysostom 15.23).

10. A large number of domestic and urban slaves, perhaps the majority, could anticipate being set free (manumitted) by age thirty, becoming a freedman or a freedwoman (see Acts 6:9, "the synagogue of the freedmen"). At any moment innumerable ex-slaves throughout the empire were proof that slavery need not be a permanent condition (see Bradley 1987, 81-112). And even ancient Greek commentators expressed astonishment that slaves freed by Roman citizens usually became Roman citizens themselves at their manumission. Notable in Acts 23—25 is the Roman governor Marcus Antonius Felix, who had been a slave until Antonia, the emperor Claudius's mother, manumitted him.

Slavery then was a fundamental aspect of daily life in the early Roman Empire, and virtually no one questioned its morality. Roman jurists and philosophers, some of whom noted that holding human beings as slaves was contra naturam, seemed never to have doubted the practical necessity or moral appropriateness of this practice. Not even the Stoic-Cynic philosopher Epictetus, who was raised and educated in slavery, regarded release from legal slavery as a desirable goal in itself. For him, as for the Jewish philosopher Philo* of Alexandria,* a person's achieving inner freedom from domination by social conventions, life's circumstances and one's passions was far more important than any change in one's social-legal status.

2. "Slaves of God" in the Biblical Tradition: Serving with Honor.

Neither Greeks nor Romans used the phrase "slave of God" in self-description, for the lack of freedom* implied by such a metaphor would have been intolerable. Thus kneeling played no role in the ceremonies of Greek and Roman worship; such "slavish" behavior would have met with contempt and would have been a cause for shame (see Bartchy 1985, 121-25).

In sharp contrast, in the Hebrew tradition the Israelites are frequently identified as "slaves of Yahweh," emphasizing their exclusive loyalty to their new Lord* following his liberation of them from Egyptian chattel slavery at the exodus (Lev 25:55; see Ex 20:2). This is especially interesting, since in Palestine a peasant economy prevailed, with legal slavery (usually for debt) playing only a minor role. In the Hebrew Bible the phrase in the singular "slave of Yahweh" identifies persons who came to enjoy an especially honored relationship to Israel's God, such as Abraham,* Isaac, Jacob, Moses,* David and Job. Paul of Tarsus boldly claims this designation of honor for himself and Timothy (Phil 1:1), as do James* (Jas 1:1), Jude* and the author of 2 Peter* ("slave of Jesus Christ," Jude 1; 2 Pet 1:1). Once Paul even refers to freeborn, Greco-Roman Christians in general as "slaves of the Lord" (1 Cor 7:22). Early Christian writers freely extended this phrase to identify all Christians.

3. Terminology of Slavery or Enslavement in Early Christian Texts: Clarifying the Contexts.

3.1. Acts, Revelation and the Slaves of God.

Early in Acts* Peter quotes the prophecy* from Joel according to which God's Spirit will be poured out "even upon my slaves, both men and women," echoing Mary's* response to the angel* Gabriel in the words: "Here I am, the slave of the Lord" (Lk 1:38, 48). Luke uses the phrase again in the prayer* in Acts 4:29: "grant to your slaves to speak your word with all boldness." And in Acts 16:17 even a pagan diviner, herself a slave, identifies Paul, Silas and Timothy as "slaves of the Most High God." Paul's bold exorcism of her profitable "spirit of divination" infringed on the property rights of her owners, whose charges against Paul and Silas led to their flogging and imprisonment.

In the Revelation of Jesus to John (see Revelation, Book of), the author immediately identifies both himself and his intended readers as slaves of Jesus Christ.* While occasionally referring to "slave and free" in inclusive series (Rev 6:15; 13:16; 19:18), John uses slave terminology primarily to emphasize the exclusive loyalty of Moses, the ancient prophets and his readers to God (e.g., Rev 10:7; 11:18; 19:5; 22:6). Note also that in four of his letters* Ignatius* refers to himself as a "fellow slave" (syndoulos), especially of the 'deacons" (diakonoi), perhaps because he has identified them as representatives of Christ (Ign. Magn. 6.1).

3.2. 1 Peter, the Treatment of Slaves and Christ's Suffering Example. After exhorting all Christians to "live as free people, yet without using your freedom as a pretext for evil; but live as slaves (douloi) of God" (1 Pet 2:16), the author of 1 Peter* turns to the vulnerable plight of those Christians in domestic slavery (oiketai) who were owned by pagans who perhaps treat them cruelly (1 Pet 2:18-23). The author urges them nevertheless to accept their owners' authority* (1 Pet 2:17).

How an enslaved person, especially a household slave, was treated day to day depended almost entirely on the character and disposition of the owner. Greco-Roman laws and customs gave slave owners much leeway to act cruelly or compassionately in response to slaves, who were conventionally expected to act with fawning deception. Slaves were vulnerable to corporal punishment, including whippings that reinforced both the owners' domination and the slaves' lack of honor and dignity. As Christians, such slaves are addressed here as moral agents who like Christ himself may also suffer even though they are innocent of any wrongdoing (1 Pet 2:19-21; 3:14, 17; 4:1, 12-19; 5:10). Yet to endure abuse for doing what is right is honorable, not shameful. They, as Christians, are exhorted to refuse to return evil for evil, following Christ and sharing in his suffering* (see Elliott, 142-43, 205-8).

3.3. 1 Clement and Self-Sale into Slavery. Two former imperial slaves, Claudius Ephebus and Valerius Bito, were the delegates of Christians in Rome* to carry the letter now known as 1 Clement to the house churches* in Corinth at the end of the first century. This letter had been written in hope of inspiring the troublemakers among the Christians in Corinth to repent. The author points to the exemplary behavior of "many of our own number who have had themselves imprisoned in order to ransom others. Many have sold themselves into slavery (douleia) and given the price to feed others" (1 Clem. 55.2). These heroic examples of self-sacrifice, subverting the system for the sake of the common good (contrast Seneca Ep. Mor. 47.7), may already have been well known to the Corinthians. C. Osiek observes that "the fact that the letter is written from the Roman church to the Corinthian church further indicates that the examples cannot be localized; they belong to a common tradition of early Christian hagiography" (Osiek 1981, 370). The "ransoming of others" through imprisonment probably refers to a Christian's self-substitution for a person imprisoned for debt.

3.4. Ignatius to Polycarp and the Manumission of Enslaved Christians. Ignatius of Antioch* is the first Christian writer after Paul (1 Cor 7:21) to comment on the manumission of Christian slaves. From his letter to Polycarp,* bishop of the Christians in Smyrna, it is clear that some slaves, presumably already members of some of the house churches, had come to expect that the price of their manumissions would be paid from the churches' common funds (Ign. Pol. 4.3). Ignatius took up this issue in a household code* dealing with care for widows and the behavior of slaves, wives, husbands and those practicing voluntary celibacy (see also Ign. Smyrn. 6.2).

First Ignatius exhorts Polycarp to lead in caring for every member of the house churches and especially by not acting arrogantly to enslaved Christians. In turn he urges these slaves not to permit the new honor in which they are held to lead to insolence. Rather they should honor God by giving "more devoted service, so that they may obtain from God a better freedom." Then Ignatius warns them against making themselves "slaves of selfish passion" by seeking to obtain funds from the common chest (to be used for the widows?) to purchase their manumission. Perhaps experiences in Antioch led Ignatius to oppose the assumption that becoming a Christian gave a slave a right to manumission paid from the common treasury. He may also have been wary of provoking public slander of the Christian community as a cause of social instability. J. A. Harrell argues that "Ignatius showed concern only for the abuses of corporate manumission, not private manumission," concluding correctly that neither Ignatius nor Paul expressed any opposition to the liberation of Christians in slavery (Harrell, 194).

3.5. The Didache and God's Impartial Judgment of Slaves and Owners. Only one passage in the *Didache mentions slaves or slavery. In a long chain of admonitions to practice extraordinary forms of generosity, the author cautions slave owners: "Do not be harsh in giving orders to your male and female slaves" (Did. 4.10), for those in slavery "hope in the same God as you," and cruel treatment could lead them to "cease to honor the God over you both." Enslaved Christians then are exhorted to "obey [their] owners with reverence and respect, as if they represented God" (Did. 4.11). This God, however, gives no advantage to owner over slave: "when he comes to call us, he will not respect our station but will call those whom the Spirit has made ready."

These admonitions extend the tradition of the NT household codes (see Col 3:22-23; Eph 6:5-8) which sought to transform negative attitudes engendered by the Roman patriarchal system. Owners are urged to exchange casual cruelty for fairness and compassion and slaves to abandon servile deception in favor of honesty and hard work. Both owners and slaves should imitate God's impartiality, thus profoundly altering interpersonal relationships. Many aspects of the slaves' social death were effectively overcome in the Christian house church "families." But the slave system as such was not called in question. With improved relations between slaves and their owners, ironically the system worked better than ever before.

3.6. The Shepherd of Hermas and the Obligations of Formerly Enslaved Christians. The author of the *Shepherd of Hermas employs terms of slavery or enslavement far more than does any early Christian author, referring to Christians in general as "slaves of God" at least thirty-five times. He claims to have been an ex-slave himself (Herm. Vis, 1.1), and he directed his writing about the uses of wealth and the dangers of social climbing "to a large and influential group of freedmen and women in the Christian community" (Osiek 1993, 134). Here, for the first time in Christian writing, prosperous Christians are exhorted "not to oppress poor debtors" (Herm. Man. 8.10); such oppression frequently led to imprisonment or enslavement for debt, which some of these Christian freedmen and freedwomen may have suffered themselves.

These former slaves had become the majority of small business people, tradesmen and craftsmen in Rome. Hermas challenged them to repent and use their wealth on behalf of the needy among the Christians, including "purchasing afflicted souls" (Herm. Sim. 1.8; see Herm. Man. 8.10), a phrase that may include the act of buying Christian slaves from pagan owners (Gülzow, 89, opposed by Osiek 1981, 372). In any case, later writings indicate that Christians became known for their efforts to rescue prisoners, captives and slaves (e.g., the Apostolic Constitutions 4.9.2; see Harrell, 178-82).

As the Christians moved into the second century, they continued to share with their pagan contemporaries the view that slavery was an integral part of civilization. But by referring to themselves as "slaves of God," in an extension of an honorable OT tradition, they risked deeply offending Greco-Roman sensibilities. In the awareness that "people are slaves to whatever masters them" (2 Pet 2:9), both slaves and their owners were exhorted as Christians to root their treatment of each other in their voluntary and exclusive enslavement to the holy master of them all.

See also FREEDOM, LIBERTY; HOUSEHOLD CODES; HOUSEHOLDS, FAMILY; ROMAN EMPIRE, CHRISTIANS AND THE; SOCIAL SETTING OF EARLY NON-PAULINE CHRISTIANITY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. S. S. Bartchy, "MALLON CHRESAI," First-Century Slavery and the Interpretation of 1 Corinthians 7:21 (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1985); idem, "Greco-Roman Slavery,"

ABD 6:65-73 (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1992); K. R. Bradley, Slavery and Society at Rome (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994); idem, Slaves and Masters in the Roman Empire: A Study in Social Control (New York: Oxford University Press, 1987); J. H. Elliott, A Home for the Homeless: A Sociological Exegesis of 1 Peter, Its Situation and Strategy (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1981); M. I. Finley, Ancient Slavery and Modern Ideology (New York: Viking, 1980); P. Garnsey and R. Saller, The Roman Empire: Economy, Society and Culture (Los Angeles: University of California Press, 1987); H. Gülzow, Christentum und Sklaverei in den ersten drei Jahrhunderten (Bonn: Habelt Verlag, 1969); J. A. Harrell, Manumission of Slaves in Early Christianity (HUT 32; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1995); K. Hopkins, Conquerors and Slaves (New York: Cambridge University Press, 1978); B. J. Malina, "Reading Theory Perspective: Reading Luke-Acts" in The Social World of Luke-Acts: Models for Interpretation, ed. J. Neyrey (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1991); D. B. Martin, Slavery as Salvation (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1990); C. Osiek, "The Ransom of Captives: Evolution of a Tradition," HTR 74 (1981) 365-86; idem, Rich and Poor in the "Shepherd of Hermas" (Washington, DC: Catholic Biblical Association of America, 1983); O. Patterson, Slavery and Social Death: A Comparative Study (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1982); G. E. M. de Ste. Croix, The Class Struggle in the Ancient Greek World: From the Archaic Age to the Arab Conquests (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1989); T. Wiedemann, Greek and Roman Slavery (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1981). S. S. Bartchy

SOCIAL SETTING OF EARLY NON-PAULINE CHRISTIANITY

"Social setting" is an umbrella term for an aspect of the study of the historical context of (in this case) early Christianity. By studying its social setting we gain a deeper understanding of the relationship between the first Christians and the world in which they lived. This helps us to recognize that early Christian belief and practice did not take shape in a vacuum but rather in the daily struggle of individuals and groups to bear witness to the lordship of Christ in a Mediterranean culture that acknowledged "many gods and many lords" (1 Cor 8:5).

1. Directions
2. Method
3. Later New Testament
4. Postapostolic Period

1. Directions.

In an influential article J. Z. Smith sets out four directions that the study of the social setting of early Christianity can take.

A first direction is the description of the social facts to which the Christian texts refer often only in passing because those facts were well known to their first-century readers. Important sources of information that supplement the literary evidence are such nonliterary evidence as provided by archaeology, epigraphy and papyrology (cf. Horsley). Even basic facts such as the size of houses and therefore the likely number of people who would be able to gather for worship in a house church give significant insight into the ethos of early church life.

Then there is the creation of a genuine social history that integrates what is known about the social facts into an account of early Christianity as a religious, cultural and social movement within the geographic, social, economic and political framework of the Roman Empire.* Exemplary here is the work of R. MacMullen (1981, 1984) and, from an earlier generation, A. D. Nock.

The third direction addresses questions of social organization "in terms of both the social forces which led to the rise of Christianity and the social institutions of early Christianity" (Smith, 20). Examples of social forces behind the rise of Christianity include the kind of political, economic, ecological and cultural factors identified by G. Theissen in his studies of both the rural, Palestinian "Jesus movement" (1978) and the urban, Pauline house churches (1982). An early and influential study of the social institutions of the city-state (politeia), the household (oikonomia) and voluntary associations (koinōnia) presupposed in the NT and beyond is that of E. A. Judge.

A final direction of inquiry is one that draws its main inspiration from the sociology of knowledge and interprets early Christianity "as a social world, [that is,] as the creation of a world of meaning which provided a plausibility structure for those who chose to inhabit it" (Smith, 21). Attention focuses on describing the ethos of the Christian groups over against that of Qumran,* the synagogue,* the Cynics or the mystery cults (see Religions, Greco-Roman), what it felt like to convert and how the meaning of belonging was expressed through the particular language, rituals and symbols that the Christians developed (cf. Meeks 1983, 140-92).

2. Method.

In addition to understanding the various directions that the study of the social setting of early Christianity can take, it is important to be aware of ongoing debates over method. Two of these are particularly prominent in current discussion.

2.1. Social History or Social Science? One debate is whether study of the social setting of early Christianity is an exercise in social history using the standard tools and techniques of the contemporary historian or whether it is also an exercise requiring the models and methods of the social sciences. For those who favor the social-history approach, social-scientific method is rejected on various grounds: its models are anachronistic; the sources are not such as to make controlled social-scientific analysis possible; it fails to allow for incommensurability between the past and the present; its genealogy lies in a hermeneutic of suspicion that is hostile to theology and the supernatural; and it tends to reduce the meaning of particular historical realities to the level of their social function in relation to general underlying needs and forces.

For those who favor the social-scientific approach, the social-history approach is held to be seriously lacking. First, "the historian's conceptualization tends to be implicit, arbitrary and unsystematic, whereas the social scientist's is explicit and systematic" (G. Barraclough, in Malina 1986, 174); second, there is the historian's tendency "to evade so far as possible the theoretical issues, and also to deal for preference less with the underlying structure than with events and personalities" (G. Barraclough, in Malina 1986, 174). At first glance this looks like a difference between a theory-laden (social-scientific) approach and a theory-free (social-history) approach. In fact it is a difference between approaches that make explicit their theoretical foundation and those that leave them implicit. At issue are serious questions, perhaps not sufficiently acknowledged, that have to do with theology and the politics and ethics of interpretation (cf. Malina 1986; Holmberg, 145-57; Elliott 1993, 87-100). In this article the insights of both the social-history and social-scientific approaches will be deployed depending on what is appropriate to the subject matter under discussion.

2.2. Social Setting and Canonical Scripture. The other important debate over method is how investigation of the social setting of early Christianity is to be related to reading the NT and other early Christian texts as Scripture and tradition of and for the church. For some scholars, study of social setting is part of that larger enterprise called historical criticism that drives a wedge between Scripture and the church (see Braaten and Jenson). It does so by treating the text as a source for historical reconstruction rather than spiritual illumination and by putting to the text (now referred to as the "documents") questions that are honed not by the Christian tradition and the life of faith but by the Enlightenment tradition of the academy. For others, study of the social setting, both of the world behind the text and of the world within the text, is not inimical to the scriptural approach. On the contrary, it is a way of attending with greater seriousness to the remarkable realities to which these historical texts bear witness (see Barton). It is a way of putting body and soul together again in biblical interpretation that Meeks (1986) calls a "hermeneutics of social embodiment" and of becoming better informed about what kinds of questions a text like this deserves.

Historically and hermeneutically speaking, the former position with its emphasis on church and tradition is more Catholic, while the latter position with its emphasis on the text in its original context is more Protestant. The former position is a helpful reminder that the work of students of the social setting of early Christianity is to some extent parasitic upon the church for the authority attaching to what they do. The latter position is a reminder that the authority of the early Christian writings as Scripture and tradition depends in part on ongoing, skilled attention to what these writings make known. Both positions have something important to offer the task of interpretation (cf. Levenson, 106-26).

3. Later New Testament.

It is not possible here to give a comprehensive account of what is involved in investigation of the social setting of the later NT and beyond.

We will proceed instead by selected case studies related to particular texts. The aim in each case will be to show the implications for interpretation of an understanding of issues of social setting.

3.1. Acts: Meals and Table Fellowship. The attention given to meals, table fellowship and table talk in Luke's two volumes is remarkable and all-pervasive (Moxnes). Clearly there is for Luke more to meals than the satisfying of physical hunger, although that is important in itself. What this extra dimension is becomes clearer in the light of the social and religious history of Israel* and the Jews, for whom food and meal practices were governed by the levitical purity rules (see Food, Food Laws) and marked them out as God's* elect* (Lev 11; Deut 14; cf. Dan 1:3-17; 2 Macc 7). But it also becomes clearer in the light of the broader, cross-cultural insights of social anthropology, according to which meals meet social needs as well as physical ones and have as much to do with the social body or the body politic as with the physical body (cf. Neyrey). This is because meals involve the consumption of food in a social context and are part of an elaborate system of communication within a particular culture. Food dealings generally are a barometer of social relations and a powerful mechanism for both creating sociability and, alternatively, for destroying it.

If we ask how meals communicate meanings, how they provide food for thought, as we might say, anthropologists like M. Douglas (1975) draw attention to the way whole societies or groups within a single society both constitute themselves and distinguish themselves from others by their meal practices. Significant factors tend to be the type of food consumed or abstained from (clean or unclean, cooked or raw, meat or vegetable); the time and frequency of eating and abstaining (or fasting); the time of and time taken for meal preparation (e.g., whether it is permitted on the sabbath or not); the quantity and quality of food consumed (e.g., the phenomenon of conspicuous consumption, in which what is vital is that the consumption is conspicuous); who is allowed or invited to eat with whom and who is excluded from table fellowship; the symbolic geography of the meal (including who sits where, the position of men in relation to women, whether the meal is in public or in private); the clothes worn by participants (formal or informal, colored or not); and the sounds (if any) that are appropriate to accompany the meal (silence, table talk, prayers,* readings and hymns*).

Seen in the light both of the history of Israel and Judaism* and of the insights of social anthropology, meals and table fellowship in Luke-Acts take on a profound level of significance (cf. Esler, 71-109). First, by virtue of the inclusion of Gentiles* at table, they represent a challenge to the boundaries and self-understanding both of the Jewish ethnos and of the Jewish Christians* in Jerusalem* and elsewhere. The story of Peter and the Roman centurion Cornelius* is an obvious case in point (Acts 10—11). Second and related, meals and table fellowship constitute the starting mechanism of a new group, an eschatological* society based upon radically novel criteria of acceptability (cf. Lk 14:1-24) and therefore open to Jews and Gentiles, men and women, rich and poor. This helps to explain the repeated attention drawn to the first Christians' meal practice and the honor it attracted from outsiders: "And day by day, attending the temple together and breaking bread in their homes, they partook of food with glad and generous hearts, praising God and having favor with all the people" (Acts 2:46; cf. Acts 2:42; 4:32-35).

Third and conversely, it is not surprising that an important manifestation of problems in the Jerusalem church* was the breakdown in table fellowship represented by the neglect of provision for the widows of the Hellenists (Acts 6:1-6). If meals are a potential source of unity and honor, they are also a potential source of conflict and shame. Fourth, the offering of food serves as part of a larger pattern of social exchange based on reciprocity. This helps to explain the references in Acts* to the hospitality* offered to apostles* like Paul: after his own conversion, Paul receives food in the house of Judas in Damascus (Acts 9:19); the convert Lydia receives Paul and his companions into her house to stay (Acts 16:15); the Philippian jailer expresses his gratitude to Paul by feeding him in his own house (Acts 16:34); and in Troas, Paul's teaching all night long is punctuated by his receiving sustenance in the communal breaking of bread (Acts 20:11). Such hospitality makes it possible for beneficiaries of the apostle's ministry* to reciprocate and thereby play a part in the apostolic mission and the life of the church.

Finally, table fellowship in Acts has a mimetic quality. The breaking of the bread that takes place when the Christians gather together (cf. Acts 2:42, 46; 20:7, 11) is a solemn, but also joyful, reminder of the breaking of the bread by Jesus both at the Last Supper before the crucifixion (Lk 22:19) and at the house in Emmaus after the resurrection* (Lk 24:30, 35). Thus the meal is a symbolic act that communicates to participants the very heart of what unites them. Its repetition also is significant in social-scientific terms. In the day-to-day life of the church, it binds the believers not only to one another but also to the crucified and risen Lord* who is the true host, now ascended into heaven* (cf. Lk 22:30).

3.2. The Pastoral Epistles: Gendered Church Order. As children of the Enlightenment who espouse democratic individualism and the equality of the sexes, many readers of the Bible in Western cultures find puzzling and offensive instructions on church life that presuppose neither democracy nor egalitarianism. A case in point is the gendered church order in the Pastoral Epistles: "I desire that in every place the men should pray, lifting holy hands without anger or quarrelling; also that women should adorn themselves modestly and sensibly in seemly apparel. . . . Let a woman learn in silence with all submissiveness. I permit no woman to teach or to have authority over men; she is to keep silent" (1 Tim 2:8-15). This instance is certainly not unique in the NT and beyond (cf. 1 Cor 11:2-16; 14:33-36), even if it is by no means the only side of the story (cf. Gal 3:27-28; Rom 16:1-16), as social historians and feminist theologians, among others, have pointed out (Meeks 1974; Fiorenza). Responsible interpretation of texts like these requires the exercise of Christian theological judgment within the life of the church. Understanding these texts in their original social setting is an important contribution to the wise exercise of such judgment. Here we can draw attention to just a few of the pertinent areas of consideration.

First, the genderization of church order* in the Pastorals should not come as a surprise. Christians were the heirs of traditions and practices in Israel and Judaism that took for granted a system of holiness* symbolically elaborated along lines of purity* that at certain points distinguished between men and women. In this complex symbolic system, the rationale for which remains largely unexplained and implicit, men and women were organized in ways that enabled them to symbolize the holy in complementary ways (Archer). This meant, for example, that in a system in which bodily wholeness symbolized the oneness of God and the holiness and set-apartness of the people of God, things that crossed or confused the boundaries of the physical body became potent symbols of the impurity or chaos that constantly threatened the holiness of the social body (Douglas 1966, 1973; Countryman).

Thus bodily emissions, especially menstrual blood in the case of women and seminal emissions in the case of men, were regarded as sources of contagious impurity that temporarily disqualified the impure person from participation in celebrations of God's holiness in the cult (cf. Lev 12; 15). Greater seriousness was attached to the impurity of women through menstruation, not (it may be argued) because of the lower status of women but because of the symbolic weight accorded to blood as the symbol of life, which is sacred (Lev 17:11, 14). Nevertheless the regularity of ritual impurity through menstruation (and, related to this, childbirth) did mean that men alone were able to function as priests of the cult. Even here, a single tribe, the Levites, was set apart for the purpose. This cult and this symbol system are part of Christianity's cultural inheritance and help to explain the gendered ordering of the church in the Pastorals and elsewhere.

A second, related social factor that throws light on church order in the Pastorals is that, in the Mediterranean world generally, social space was divided up and marked out in a number of ways, one of the most important of which was the differentiation of the public domain from the private along lines provided by the binary opposition of male and female. It is as if the physical bodies of men and women served as a kind of map not only of the moral ordering of the social body but of its spatial ordering as well. The male represents public space and what is associated with it: leadership in politics, philosophy, rhetoric,* litigation, business, warfare and the arena. The female represents the more circumscribed, private space of the household. This is where women have authority* that they are to exercise on behalf of the male household head in ways intended to protect his honor. This gendered ordering of social space is maintained by deep-rooted custom and convention and by the powerful social values of honor and shame. Eloquent expression of this gendered order comes from the Hellenized Jew Philo* of Alexandria*:

> Marketplaces and council halls and law courts and gatherings and meetings where a large number of people are assembled and open-air life with full scope for discussion and action—all these are suitable to men both in war and peace. The women are best suited to the indoor life that never strays from the house, within which the middle door is taken by the maidens as their boundary and the outer door by those who have reached full womanhood. Organized communities are of two sorts, the greater, which we call cities, and the smaller, which we call households. Both of these have their governors; the government of the greater is assigned to men under the name of statesmanship (politeia), that of the less, known as household management (oikonomia), to women (Philo Spec. Leg. 3.169-70).

In this light, the fact that the early Christians met together in houses (i.e., that a public or semipublic assembly took place regularly in a private place) makes it likely that conventional lines separating public and private spheres and related male and female authority became blurred. This blurring must have been accentuated also by claims by women as well as men to a new, charismatic authority that transcended legal and traditional household patterns; not to mention doctrines of an apocalyptic* or a gnostic* kind that encouraged celibacy and the reevaluation of the accepted social order (1 Tim 4:1-4; cf. Acts of Paul and Thecla; Kraemer). Thus it is not surprising that the Pastorals give such single-minded attention to the respective roles and authority of men and women and seek to put in place a gendered church order more in keeping with scriptural norms and wider cultural patterns (possibly including contemporary synagogue practice). This may reasonably be seen as an attempt both to protect the church against disintegration from powerful centrifugal forces and to maintain a credible witness to gospel truth in the society at large.

Interpreters may be right to see here the beginnings of the institutionalization and patriarchalization of the church and a decline from the discipleship of equals in the time of Jesus and his first followers (cf. Fiorenza, 288-94). But this may not be the fairest way to characterize either the Jesus movement (with its core of twelve male apostles) or what the Pastorals have in mind. For in their own social context, the issues dealt with are not primarily the politics of gender relations. They are to do much more with the disciplined ordering of the household* of God in the face of serious threats to its common life and public reputation.

3.3. 1 Peter: Household Order and Christian Benefactors. The central section of 1 Peter* contains remarkable and extensive instruction on the Christian's social obligations (1 Pet 2:11—3:17), making it one of the most significant non-Pauline texts to address the perennial theological question of the relationship between Christianity and culture. Particularly important are the metaphors aliens (paroikoi) and exiles (parepidēmoi), which are used to express the Christians' self-understanding (1 Pet 2:11; cf. 1 Pet 1:1, 17). Once we grasp what this designation implies, we have a key to interpreting the instructions about the Christian's social obligations. Are the instructions, in particular the so-called household code* (1 Pet 2:13—3:7), intended to separate the church from the surrounding culture? Or do they represent a compromise with society at large? Or should they be seen somewhat differently?

The first position is that taken by J. H. Elliott in one of the first works of sociological exegesis of the NT (1981). He argues that paroikos is as much a social as a religious category and that the addressees of the epistle were marginalized "resident aliens" (paroikoi) of Asia Minor who were attracted to Christianity because it offered, both socially and religiously, a home for the homeless. However, because their conversion increased the antagonism of the native residents toward them, they developed the ethos and identity of what we would call a conversionist sect in tension with the surrounding society. The strategy of the letter* is to confirm the believers in their social and religious separation from outsiders and to emphasize their incorporation into an alternative society, the household of God (1 Pet 4:17; cf. 1 Pet 2:5). The role of the household code and the wider instruction on social obligation is to accentuate the distance between believers and the world around them by increasing their self-understanding as the new eschatological people of God.

Not everyone has been persuaded by Elliott's proposal (cf. Winter, 11-23; Volf). While acknowledging the important point that "aliens and exiles" may have social as well as religious connotations, it appears rather one-sided to represent conversion and subsequent Christian instruction as the product of underlying social forces of marginalization when it appears more likely that the marginalization of the Christians is the result of their conversion and distinctive lifestyle. At the least the relation between social and religious factors is likely to be a complex one with lines of influence running in both directions. It may also be the case that Elliott's position is so predisposed toward accentuating the separatist, sectarian character of early Christianity that the relation between church and culture is polarized in a way that does not do justice to the more complex picture of the relation that 1 Peter implies. The act of distinguishing categories like "social" and "religious" (or "church" and "culture") that derive from our modern, secular way of seeing things may be a fundamental mistake. It predisposes us to define things from the beginning in terms of either the one or the other and to look for one-way causal relations that may be either simplistic or prone to ideological hostage-taking.

Different from Elliott's interpretation is that of D. Balch. On the basis of a comparison of the household code in 1 Peter with codes from the wider Hellenistic Jewish environment, Balch argues that the high degree of correspondence between the respective codes shows that, far from trying to distance themselves from society at large, the Christians in Asia Minor were being encouraged toward accommodation and greater integration. The motivation suggested is essentially apologetic. By accommodating to generally accepted social norms in relation to politeia and oikonomia, the Christians would counter the slander of outsiders who viewed them as a threat to civic order and household stability. In consequence the risk of discrimination or persecution* would be reduced.

Balch's comparative historical work is important for helping modern readers of the letter understand why the instructions on social ethics* tie together political obligation and household relations; why the household itself is given so much attention; and why the household code follows the pattern it does (with its overwhelming stress on the subordination of slave* to master and wife to husband). This makes sense in a historical and cultural context that viewed the stable household as the fundamental building block of society and that ordered itself according to class and gender in strictly hierarchical, patriarchal terms.

What is problematic, however, is the assumption that because the Christian household code is close to the Hellenistic Jewish code, the Christians must be losing their radical nerve and accommodating to the world around them. This implies that the Christians began as a minority group of outsiders and gradually accommodated to the majority by becoming insiders. But this kind of polarization obscures (in a way similar to Elliott's model of a conversionist sect) as much as it reveals. For, rather than involving a transfer from one society to another, it is far more likely that the effect of conversion was to bestow on converts membership of two societies simultaneously: earthly households and the household of God.

If so, 1 Peter may represent an attempt neither to bolster sectarian separation (Elliott) nor to encourage cultural accommodation (Balch) but to do something more subtle because the situation of the addressees is more complex (Volf). This something has to do with encouraging the Christians to realize more fully and in practice their own vocation as people who by God's mercy* "have been born anew to a living hope . . . [to be] a royal priesthood, a holy nation, God's own people" (1 Pet 1:3; 2:9). Sometimes this call to holiness is likely to involve rejection of the surrounding culture; at other times, acceptance and, even more, acts of public benefaction for the welfare of the city (Winter, 11-40). But the motivation for rejecting or accepting or serving as a public benefactor need not be those forces (sociological, political or others) that come solely from outside. To see things in this way reduces the profound theology and ethics of the letter to social pragmatics. It also distracts attention from the main point: the eschatological reality of God's holy people to which 1 Peter is both witness and summons (cf. 1 Pet 1:13-17).

4. Postapostolic Period.

Study of the social setting of early Christianity is not limited to the texts of the NT. Its range is much broader than that. This is partly because the interests of the social historian tend not to be confined to the boundaries set by the canon* of Scripture; partly because study of what came later helps us to see the period of origins in a clearer perspective; and partly also because of the availability of a variety of source materials that cry out for investigation.

4.1. The Didache: Morality and Greco-Roman Voluntary Associations. One of the perennial questions of interest in the study of early Christianity is the question of conversion: what was involved in conversion, what motivated people to convert and what did people think they were converting to (cf. Nock)? The Didache is particularly interesting in this regard. It is a late first- or early second-century manual of Christian instruction intended for the preparation of catechumens for baptism.* Beginning with an extensive statement of moral rules (the so-called Two Ways; see also Barn. 18—20), it then proceeds to instruction on baptism, fasting and prayer, Eucharist, church order (apostles and prophets,* bishops and deacons), Sunday worship,* and warnings about the end time.

If we focus attention on the teaching about the Two Ways, which takes up the first half of the work as a whole, what is striking is the emphasis on moral rigor in conformity to traditions that, as the informed reader recognizes, are overwhelmingly biblical and evangelical. Addressed "to the pagans" (tois ethnēsin) as teaching of "the Lord" mediated through the apostles, this instruction marks out the "way of life" consonant with Christian profession (Did. 1—4) and the "way of death" to be shunned (Did. 5—6). But it is noteworthy how lacking this material is in Christian narrative setting and Christian doctrinal warrant. As W. A. Meeks (1987, 151) puts it: "At the lowest level, there is much here which a simple believer could take as simply rules for keeping in tune with the divine order of things, practices that the Greeks would call eusebeia and the Romans religio, but that a satirist might call 'superstition.' "

This observation is a useful reminder that the moral rigor that attracted pagans to Christianity and Judaism was not without parallel in Greco-Roman society beyond the church and synagogue. It needs to be recognized more widely that many pagans converted to Christianity because they found in the Christian groups moral standards that they recognized already as profoundly important for human welfare; and many others scorned Christianity because they regarded the behavior of the Christians as reprehensible (e.g., Pliny Ep. 10.96: "I found nothing but a degenerate sort of cult carried to extravagant lengths."), a point about which a number of Christian writers from Paul on were particularly sensitive (cf. Wilken, 15-30).

A fine illustration of the high moral standards able to be found in Greco-Roman voluntary associations, for example, comes in the form of an inscription from a private cult group dedicated to a pantheon of gods in Philadelphia, Asia Minor, dated to the late second or early first centuries B.C. (text and translation in Barton and Horsley). This inscription sets out in considerable detail a moral code that those who enter cult meetings are to swear to uphold:

> When coming into this oikos let men and women, free people and slaves, swear by all the gods neither to know nor to make use wittingly of any deceit against a man or woman, neither poison harmful to men nor harmful spells. They are not themselves to make use of a love potion, abortifacient, contraceptive or any other thing fatal to children. . . . Apart from his own wife, a man is not to have sexual relations with another married woman, whether free or slave, nor with a boy, nor with a virgin girl; nor shall he recommend it to another. . . . A free woman is to be chaste and shall not know the bed of, nor have sexual intercourse with, another man except her own husband. . . . At the monthly and annual sacrifices may those men and women who have confidence in themselves touch this inscription on which the ordinances of the god have been written, in order that those who obey these ordinances and those who do not may be manifest.

Analogies with the early Christian groups are numerous and indicate the extent to which these groups must have appeared to outsiders as another form of club or voluntary society. The analogies include the open access given to "men and women, free people and slaves"; the regular meeting together for a religious purpose; the location of meetings in a privately owned house or shrine (oikos); the placing of moral responsibility on both men and women; a stringent sexual code; the respecting of marital and household ties; the protection of children (including the unborn); and the threat of divine sanction against oath-breakers. In relation to the Two Ways code in the Didache, especially noteworthy are the linguistic parallels to at least four of the forbidden practices: deceit (dolos), poison (pharmakon), destruction by abortion (phthoros) and murder (phonos) (cf. Did. 2.2). Comparable in meaning if not linguistically are the prohibitions against the enchanter, astrologer and magician,* the prohibition on infanticide and the command to "make no evil plan against your neighbor" (Did. 2.6).

These analogies are not fortuitous. They reflect the early Christians' indebtedness to the social patterns and moral consciousness of their times, Greco-Roman as well as biblical and Jewish. Thus we may assume that attraction to Christianity on the basis of its moral appeal had its parallels and precedents in attraction to cult groups like the one at Philadelphia. Such parallels and precedents allowed later apologists like Tertullian (c. 160-220) to use the language both of the voluntary religious association and of the philosophical school as a vehicle for persuading opponents that their fears about the Christian gatherings were groundless:

> We are an association (corpus) bound together by our religious profession, by the unity of our way of life (disciplina) and the bond of our common hope. . . . We meet together as an assembly and as a society. . . . We pray for the emperors. . . . We gather together to read our sacred writing. . . . After the gathering is over the Christians go out as though they had come from a "school of virtue" (Tertullian Apol. 39, in Wilken, 46).

In the light of such evidence, it is a mistake to attempt to explain conversion and baptism as simply a progression from darkness to light,* depravity to moral rigor, impiety to piety—however effective such an explanation might be from a rhetorical point of view. The reality of the social and religious setting was much more complex than this kind of polarization allows. The Philadelphian inscription is an important reminder that it was not only Jews and Christians who took morality and religion seriously.

4.2. Ignatius of Antioch and Judaism. If the previous example drew attention to aspects of the Greco-Roman social setting of early Christianity, this final case study looks at the continuing importance of Judaism for Christian practice and self-understanding into the second century. Good illustrations of this come in the letters written by Ignatius,* bishop of Antioch,* during his journey under arrest from Antioch to Rome,* where he was martyred* sometime toward the end of the reign of the emperor Trajan (98-117). However, relations between Christians and Jews are not Ignatius's principal concern. These become an issue primarily because they bear on something even more fundamental: the unity of the churches. As W. R. Schoedel puts it: "Ignatius' letters reflect the conviction that the success of his martyrdom depends on the establishment and maintenance of peace and concord in the churches. Thus he calls for obedience to bishops and avoidance of false teachers, and his views on these matters are uncompromising" (Schoedel, 12).

Of the seven letters, those to the Philadelphians and Magnesians are particularly relevant (Stanton, 176-81; translation in Schoedel). In the former Ignatius unambiguously identifies as one threat to unity those who are encouraging the Christians to follow Jewish practices: "But if anyone expounds Judaism to you do not listen to him; for it is better to hear Christianity from a man who is circumcised than Judaism from a man uncircumcised; both of them, if they do not speak of Jesus Christ, are to me tombstones and graves of the dead" (Ign. Phld. 6.1). This is striking evidence of the parting of the ways between church and synagogue in the early second century (see Christianity and Judaism), for Ignatius can speak of Ioudaismos and Christianismos as two separate religions (cf. Ign. Magn. 10.1-3, where the proper noun Christianity occurs for the first time in Christian literature).

Nevertheless, the possibilities of mutual influence and interaction remain strong, so much so that Christians are "not to listen" to people advocating the adoption of Jewish ways. Particularly repugnant for Ignatius is the phenomenon of Gentiles (the "uncircumcised") advocating Judaism, for it is acceptable to move from Judaism to Christianity, but quite unacceptable to move from Gentile Christianity to Judaism. The fact that Ignatius speaks so strongly on this to a church that he knows personally shows how real he felt the threat to be. This suggests in turn that Jewish laws and customs had an ongoing appeal to Christians of the second century and that this appeal was by no means limited to former members of the synagogue.

But it was not only the laws and customs of Judaism that exerted an influence: the Scriptures of the Jews were influential (and a source of division) also. Some of Ignatius's opponents appear reluctant to accept the teaching of Christ if it cannot be shown to be scriptural (Ign. Phld. 8.2). Ignatius's response is revealing, since it almost admits the point before appealing to a higher authority, reinterpreting "the charters" (i.e., the Scriptures) as Jesus Christ himself and his "cross and death and resurrection and faith through him."

Ignatius then brings his argument to a climax with a comparison between the old and new dispensations in order to convince potential dissenters of the superiority of the latter and of the divine and human unity to which it gives access: "The priests are also good; yet better the high priest entrusted with the holy of holies, who alone is entrusted with the secrets of God, since he is the door of the Father through which enter Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and the prophets and the apostles and the church—all these—into the unity of God" (Ign. Phld. 9.1-2). It is worth noting also that Ignatius passes in silence over Moses* and the law* in favor of the Hebrew ancestors* and prophets.* This is typical of his reinterpretation of the Jewish Scriptures and is a tendency found also in other contemporary Christian texts and writers, notably the *Epistle of Barnabas and Justin Martyr (Stanton, 181-88). For the prophets in particular can be made to speak of Christ more easily than can the law, and in any case it is the law whose significance Ignatius wanted to play down because of its appeal to his Judaizing opponents.

The other letter of Ignatius that shows the prominence of Judaism in the social world of Christians in Asia Minor is the letter to the Magnesians, especially Magnesians 8—10. Once again the dominant concern is the unity of the church in the true faith* under the authority of the bishop, presbyters and deacons (Ign. Magn. 6—7). In single-minded pursuit of this unity, Ignatius's tendency is to polarize reality in terms of what brings life and what leads to death (e.g., Ign. Magn. 5; cf. Malina 1978, 82-95). Compromise is not an option. In particular compromise with Judaism and Judaizers is ruled out emphatically: "Set aside then the evil leaven, old and sour, and turn to the new leaven, which is Jesus Christ. Be salted with him to keep anyone among you from being spoiled, since you will be convicted by your odor. It is ridiculous to profess Jesus Christ and to Judaize; for Christianity did not believe in Judaism, but Judaism in Christianity, into which every tongue that has believed in God has been gathered together" (Ign. Magn. 10.2-3).

It is remarkable how far this uncompromising, polarized stance is from the position of Paul, who, in writing to the Corinthian church a generation or two earlier, can testify to having become "to the Jews as a Jew . . . to those under the law as one under the law" (1 Cor 9:20). For Ignatius the lines of continuity between Christianity and Judaism are weaker than they were for Paul; and the lines of discontinuity are greater. Whereas Paul distinguishes between grace* and the law, Ignatius distinguishes between grace and Judaism: "For if we continue to live until now according to Judaism (kata Ioudaismon), we confess that we have not received grace" (Ign. Magn. 8.1). In consequence the prophets are christianized in a radical way (Ign. Magn. 8.2; 9.2), and the way of life associated with sabbath observance is replaced by the way associated with the Lord's Day* (Ign. Magn. 9.1). It is plain, therefore, that for Ignatius Christianity is the negation of Judaism, and any reversion to it is anathema. This is the way he responds to the threat to church unity posed by Gentile Judaizers: not by what we would call interfaith dialogue but by strengthening the boundaries and sharpening the lines of demarcation. For Ignatius too much was at stake to allow compromise: the truth of the gospel of Christ crucified and risen, the unity of the churches under their respective bishops and the witness* of his own approaching martyrdom.*

See also ARCHITECTURE; EARLY CHURCH; CENTERS OF CHRISTIANITY; CHRISTIANITY AND JUDAISM: PARTINGS OF THE WAYS; CHURCH ORDER, GOVERNMENT; CIVIL AUTHORITY; EMPEROR, EMPEROR CULT; FOOD, FOOD LAWS, TABLE FELLOWSHIP; HOUSEHOLD CODES; HOUSEHOLDS, FAMILY; PERSECUTION; ROMAN EMPIRE, CHRISTIANS AND THE; SEXUALITY, SEXUAL ETHICS; SLAVE, SLAVERY; WOMAN AND MAN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. L. Archer, "Bound by Blood: Circumcision and Menstrual Taboo in Post-Exilic Judaism" in After Eve: Women, Theology and the Christian Tradition, ed. J. M. Soskice (London: Marshall Pickering, 1990) 38-61; D. Balch, Let Wives Be Submissive: The Domestic Code in 1 Peter (Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1981); S. C. Barton,

"Historical Criticism and Social-Scientific Perspectives in New Testament Study" in Hearing the New Testament, ed. J. B. Green (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1995) 61-89; S. C. Barton and G. H. R. Horsley, "A Hellenistic Cult Group and the New Testament Churches," JAC 24 (1981) 7-41; C. E. Braaten and R. W. Jenson, eds., Reclaiming the Bible for the Church (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1995); L. W. Countryman, Dirt, Greed and Sex (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); M. Douglas, "Deciphering a Meal" in Implicit Meanings (London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1975) 249-75; idem, Natural Symbols (2d ed.; London: Barrie & Jenkins, 1973); idem, Purity and Danger (London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1966); J. H. Elliott, A Home for the Homeless: A Sociological Exegesis of I Peter, Its Situation and Strategy (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1981); idem, Social-Scientific Criticism and the New Testament (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress, 1993); P. F. Esler, Community and Gospel in Luke-Acts: The Social and Political Motivations of Lukan Theology (SNTSMS 57; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1987); E. Schüssler Fiorenza, In Memory of Her (New York: Crossroad, 1983); B. Holmberg, Sociology and the New Testament (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress, 1990); G. H. R. Horsley, New Documents Illustrating Early Christianity (5 vols.; Macquarie, Australia: The Ancient History Documentary Research Centre, Macquarie University, 1981-89); E. A. Judge, The Social Pattern of Christian Groups in the First Century (London: Tyndale Press, 1960); R. S. Kraemer, "The Conversion of Women to Ascetic Forms of Christianity," Signs 6 (1980) 298-307; J. D. Levenson, The Hebrew Bible, the Old Testament and Historical Criticism (Louisville, KY: Westminster/John Knox, 1993); R. MacMullen, Christianizing the Roman Empire (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1984); idem, Paganism in the Roman Empire (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1981); B. J. Malina, "The Received View and What It Cannot Do: III John and Hospitality," Semeia 35 (1986) 171-94; idem, "The Social World Implied in the Letters of the Christian Bishop-Martyr (Named Ignatius of Antioch)," SBLSP (1978) 2:71-119; W. A. Meeks, The First Urban Christians (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1983); idem, "A Hermeneutics of Social Embodiment," HTR 79 (1986) 176-86; idem, "The Image of the Androgyne," HR 13 (1974) 165-208; idem, The Moral World of the First Christians (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1986); H. Moxnes, "Meals and the New Community in Luke," SEÅ 51-52 (1986-87) 158-67; J. H. Neyrey, "Ceremonies in Luke-Acts: The Case of Meals and Table Fellowship" in The Social World of Luke-Acts, ed. J. H. Neyrey (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1991) 361-87; A. D. Nock, Conversion (Oxford: Clarendon, 1933); W. R. Schoedel, Ignatius of Antioch (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); J. Z. Smith, "The Social Description of Early Christianity," RelSRev 1 (1975) 19-25; G. N. Stanton, "Other Early Christian Writings: Didache, Ignatius, Barnabas, Justin Martyr" in Early Christian Thought in Its Jewish Context, ed. J. Barclay and J. Sweet (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press and 1996) 174-90; G. Theissen, The Social Setting of Pauline Christianity (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1982); idem, The Sociology of Early Palestinian Christianity (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1978) [published in U.K. as The First Followers of Jesus: A Sociological Analysis of the Earliest Christians (London: SCM, 1978)]; R. L. Wilken, The Christians as the Romans Saw Them (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1984); B. W. Winter, Seek the Welfare of the City (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994); M. Volf, "Soft Difference: Theological Reflections on the Relation Between Church and Culture in 1 Peter," Ex Auditu 10 (1994) 15-30.

S. C. Barton

SOLID FOOD. See MILK, SOLID FOOD.

SON OF GOD

Application of the title "Son of God" to Jesus underwent considerable change in early Christianity. In the earliest Christian communities it was primarily a functional expression, taking an image from extant OT and Jewish thought and applying it in a generally imprecise way to articulate the meaning of the Christ event. In combination with insights drawn from other images (notably of the divine logos), "Son of God" was gradually invested with more metaphysical understandings until it eventually became the church's preferred christological title. Several phases of this development can be traced in the literature dealt with here, though by the end of the period there was still some way to go before the emergence of the mature Son of God christology* of the classic creeds.*

In the past this development engendered heated debate. The history of religions school highlighted the terminology of divine sonship as a leading example of the intrusion of alien categories in Christianity, and while there is still some peripheral argument about the possible influence of gnostic* categories, for example, most recent discussion has focused on theological concerns over whether the church* made an appropriate contextualization of its original faith in Jesus when it adopted the Son of God terminology. Was the notion of divine sonship alien to the teaching of Jesus and the beliefs of the first disciples, or did it make explicit in the context of Hellenistic culture what was already implicit in the Jewish culture within which the church originated?

1. Jewish Background
2. The Title and Its Development
3. Method

1. Jewish Background.

The generic term "son of God" had a wide currency in ancient culture. It could as easily be applied to the heroes of traditional Greek mythology (often referred to as sons of Zeus) as to Egyptian pharaohs or Roman emperors.*

Within Jewish culture the term was applied to Israel itself (Ex 4:22; Jer 31:9; Hos 11:1; Wis 9:7; 18:13; Jub. 1:24-25; Pss. Sol. 17:30), to leading individuals in the nation (Deut 14:1; Is 1:2; 43:6; Jer 3:22; 31:9; Hos 1:10; Wis 2:13-18; 5:5; 12:21; 16:10, 26; 18:4; Sir 4:10; 51:10; Pss. Sol. 13:8-9; 18:4; 2 Macc 7:34; Philo Conf. Ling. 145-47; Philo Spec. Leg. 1.318), to angels* and other heavenly beings (Gen 6:2-4; Deut 32:8; Job 1:6-12; 2:1-6; 38:7; Ps 29:1; 89:6; Dan 3:25; 1 Enoch 13:8, 106:5), to the king (2 Sam 7:14; 1 Chron 17:13; 22:10, 28:6; Ps 2:7; 89:26-27; 4Q174; 4Q246; cf. Philo Som. 1.215; Philo Conf. Ling. 146), to the Messiah (2 Esdr 7:28; 13:32, 37, 52; 14:9 may be later Christian interpolations; 1QSa 2:11-12; 4QFlor 1:10-13; 4QPsDan A) and later to individual rabbis (m. Taan. 3:8; b. Taan. 24). It did not, however, denote a divine figure descending from heaven* as the bearer of salvation, except insofar as angels were messengers or agents of God or Philo's application of it to the divine logos could be so understood. On the contrary, when the status "son of God" was conferred on someone it was a recognition of a particular achievement. We therefore need to allow the literature itself to define the nature and scope of the term's meaning for early Christians.

2. The Title and Its Development.

2.1. General. Within the literature considered in this volume "Son of God" is absent from James* and the Epistle of Polycarp, while 1 Peter 1:3 and Jude 1 describe God as Jesus' Father (but without corresponding imagery of "son"; see 1 Peter; Jude). The *Martyrdom of Polycarp has only a peripheral reference as part of a confessional formula (Mart. Pol. 17, with a similar statement in the Moscow manuscript of Mart. Pol. 22), and Revelation 2:18 is similar. The *Didache likewise uses it as part of a formalized confession of faith (Did. 7.3), though Didache 16.4 testifies to continued currency of a more general understanding of the term not necessarily connected to Jesus.

2.2. Son of God as Functional Eschatological Image. Acts* uses "father" to describe God's* relationship with Jesus (Acts 1:4, 7), but "Son of God" is not among the many christological titles in the early chapters (unless Acts 8:37 is accepted as genuine, against the best manuscripts). It first appears in Paul's postbaptismal message (Acts 9:20) as a synonym for "Messiah" (Acts 9:22; cf. Acts 17:4; 18:5; 24:24). Acts 13:33, however, contains a typical eschatological* use of the term, in which Jesus' status as Son of God is conferred as a result of the resurrection,* in much the same way as are the titles *Lord and Messiah (Acts 2:36). This usage is widespread throughout the earlier NT, usually associated (as here; see also 2 Pet 1:16-18) with a reference to Psalm 2:7, which celebrates the status of the king as God's adopted son.* There is an implied connection with belief in Jesus as Davidic king and Messiah, though understood in the functional sense that if Jesus was Messiah, then such imagery could appropriately be applied to him. There is no suggestion that Jesus was intrinsically related to God apart from his accomplishment as eschatological Messiah and not a hint of later notions such as preexistence.*

2.3. Son of God from Functional Savior to Incarnational Idea.

2.3.1. Hebrews. Hebrews* represents an important transition from early images of sonship to later metaphysical beliefs. Jesus as Son of God is a key theme and a basic confession of faith* (Heb 4:14). "Sonship" can be almost synonymous with the perfection and totality of salvation* (Heb 4:14—5:9; 6:6; 7:3, 28; 8—9), rooted in the assumption that Jesus achieved this status through suffering* and resurrection (Heb 5:8; 6:6; 10:29) and with the language of divine begetting (Ps 2) providing the frame of reference. However, other passages go well beyond this, identifying the Son as the agent of creation,* sharing God's own nature in language that is clearly related to philosophical categories applied elsewhere to the divine logos* (Heb 1:2-4). In Hebrews 3:2-6 Jesus is "appointed" (like Moses*), but as the Son he has a greater ontological (as distinct from functional) significance, a contrast that occurs again when Jesus' priesthood* is compared to that of Melchizedek.* While being "Son of God" is the typological fulfillment of Melchizedek's priesthood, this status also identifies Jesus with a preexisting ideal type, which explains why he is of greater significance than Melchizedek (Heb 5:6; 7:13, 15-17).

Little is known for certain about the background to Hebrews, but the author is clearly searching for relevant philosophical categories as a vehicle for Christian belief; hence the occurrence of a more obviously incarnational Son of God christology. At the same time Hebrews preserves the language of adoption while making no attempt to combine the two: they stand together in an unintegrated symbiosis. Jesus as Son is the heavenly (ideal world) archetype in comparison with which other (this world) claims are inadequate. As the church moved into a Hellenistic milieu with a Platonic worldview, it was natural for Jesus' eschatological significance to be described in these terms. For Hebrews, however, the starting point is the Platonic worldview, not reflection on the significance of Jesus per se. This fact explains why there is no concept of the personal preexistence of the Son who is Jesus but only the abstract theological idea of preexistence, which then demands explanation by reference to the more traditional category of sonship through adoption or achievement. Again, later concerns about ontological or metaphysical substance do not occur. In this sense Hebrews appears to represent a midpoint between the Christ event and its explanation in purely OT categories and the later development of a fully fledged, incarnational christology.

2.3.2. 1 Clement. 1 Clement does not use the full term "Son of God," though like Hebrews it compares the Son with priests and angels (1 Clem. 36). Unlike Hebrews, it does not elaborate this in terms of preexistence but refers to Psalm 2 and the theme of divine begetting. The *Epistle of Barnabas links preexistence more directly to incarnation (Barn. 5.11) though still emphasizing Jesus' death and resurrection as key functional elements in his status as Son (Barn. 12.9; 15.5). But whereas Hebrews adopts the metaphysical language of sonship without personal reference to Jesus, Barnabas extrapolates the functional language of adoption from its personalized context in the story of Jesus' resurrection in such a way that the historical reality effectively becomes a theological abstraction (Barn. 6). Barnabas thereby takes the reformulation of the older understanding a stage nearer the point where it could be completely expressed in philosophical categories.

2.3.3. Johannine Literature. In the Johannine literature Son of God language is central. It defines the purpose of the Fourth Gospel (Jn 20:31) and is even more prominent in 1 John (it does not appear in 2-3 Jn, though 2 Jn 3, 9 use Father/Son imagery of Jesus and God; see John, Letters of). There is still a clear connection between Jesus' status as Son and his death and resurrection (1 Jn 1:7; 3:8; 4:10).

As in Hebrews, belief in Jesus as Son appears as the functional equivalent of a dependable salvation (1 Jn 5:18-21). But there is in addition a more cognitive, theological content to such belief, which serves to distinguish truth* from error (1 Jn 2:22-27; 3:23; 4:2, 9-12; 4:14-15; 5:5, 9-12). This entails metaphysical propositions, including belief that God and the Son are one and that the Son as a human being came from heaven. John's Jesus is Son of God not primarily because of his exaltation* or even as a by-product of the application of Platonic terminology to his functional importance but because he always had a personal existence with God that was of the same quality and purpose in this preexistence in heaven as it was during his lifetime on earth. This understanding probably emerged not from John's intrinsic concept of sonship but from a combination of that with the logos Christology that also features strongly in this literature. This association of preexistence with sonship goes further than does Hebrews, though 1 John still shows no interest in speculation about the precise ontological relationship between Jesus and God (yet the prologue, 1 Jn 1:1-4, comes near to that) and therefore never asks what oneness between Father and Son might mean.

2.3.4. The Epistle to Diognetus. The Epistle to Diognetus quotes from the Johannine literature in this connection with extensive considerations of the Son as preexistent agent of both creation and redemption (Diogn. 8—11), though all these themes are expounded through the concept of the eternal logos rather than from an understanding of sonship itself. Diognetus 7 highlights the continued significance of the functional understanding of sonship related to OT themes of the king as son in his capacity as God's personal representative.

2.4. Toward Pragmatic Metaphysics.

2.4.1. Ignatius of Antioch. Ignatius* provides several examples of creedal statements incorporating Son of God terminology (Ign. Eph. 2; 4; 20; Ign. Magn. 1; 3). But the most significant passages are occasioned by his opposition to a docetic* christology not too different from that evidenced in 1 John (compare 1 Jn 4:21; 5:6 with Ign. Magn. 1.2; Ign. Smyrn. 1—3; 5.2). In counteracting, this Ignatius not only unhesitatingly uses Son of God terminology but also directly applies the epithet God to Jesus, in six instances quite explicitly (Ign. Eph. presc; Ign. Eph. 18.2; Ign. Rom. presc.; Ign. Rom. 3.3; Ign. Smyrn. 1.1; Ign. Pol. 8.9) and in others by implication (Ign. Eph. 1.1; 7.2; 15.3; 19.3).

Ignatius's primary focus, however, is not in relation to Christ's preexistence but in the opposite direction, in regard to the incarnation. His main concern was to affirm that Jesus was truly human while at the same time maintaining his divinity without raising later ontological questions as to how the two might be related. In this respect Ignatius goes little further than the same terminology used in the Fourth Gospel (Jn 20:28). At the same time he shows a clear awareness of some of the problems involved in relating the god of the philosophers (remote, nonmaterial, all-powerful) to the God incarnated in Jesus, even if he engages with them only tangentially as he discusses the relationship between the virginal conception of Jesus and Incarnation (Ign. Eph. 18.2) or by adopting Son of God language to distinguish Jesus' divinity from his human nature.

Ignatius's main concern was essentially practical and polemical. It is less important for him to explain the unity of Father and Son than it is to state it, in opposition to Docetism on the one hand and as the foundational principle of church unity on the other (Ign. Eph. 3.2; 5.1; Ign. Magn. 7.1-2; Ign. Smyrn. 3.3; 8.1; Ign. Phld. 7.2). In doing this he clearly builds on earlier NT statements (compare, e.g., Ign. Eph. 7.2 with Jn 1; Ign. Trall. 9.1-2 with 1 Cor 15), though he extends them so as to address the needs of the churches in his day.

2.4.2. Shepherd of Hermas. In all this literature the Shepherd of Hermas reflects the most fully developed Son of God christology. There is only one passing reference to divine sonship in the Visions (Herm. Vis. 2.2), but Similitude 9 displays an increasingly close identification between different aspects of the Godhead, in which preexistence and incarnation are two sides of the one coin. Some scholars detect adoptionism in Hermas Similitude 5.2, 5-6 and in Hermas Similitude 8.3, 11. Consequently they dismiss Similitude 9 as a later interpolation, but that assumes a more integrated approach to christology than is necessary for this period. Hermas Similitude 9 shows a growing concern to define the functions of Father, Son and Spirit not in relation to the historical circumstances of Jesus of Nazareth but ontologically in relation to all that might be encompassed by the notion of God. So while the Son and the Father are the same in terms of being (including preexistence and involvement in creation), it is God who is surrounded by angelic majesty while the Son is the gate through which humanity can gain access to God. Likewise a distinction is made between thirty-five believers who are prophets* and ministers of God and another forty who are apostles* and teachers of the preaching of the Son of God (Herm. Sim. 9.15). There is still a long way to go from these statements to the more complex formulations embodied in the classic creeds, but Hermas foreshadows most of the raw materials from which the creeds were constructed.

3. Method.

A key consideration in all discussion of christology at this period is the need to avoid imposing later categories of thought. For example, by later standards the earliest understanding of Jesus as Son of God, based on Psalm 2, might well look like adoptionism, though in its context it was the opposite: not a denial of preexistent sonship but an affirmation of Jesus' actual status as Son. Similarly, preexistence never occurred to anyone until some denied it or the need emerged to justify Christian belief in philosophical categories. While earlier writers fail to affirm it, that does not mean they were denying it, and terms like kenoticism are inappropriately applied to them. During this period there was a gradual universalization of what were originally specific images as the articulation of theology moved from concern with the faith journeys of particular people to an effort to understand things in some absolute sense. As part of that process relational and functional statements about Jesus as Son of God were gradually displaced by metaphysical and ontological statements about the essence of God and Jesus as part of that.

See also CHRISTOLOGY; GOD; SONSHIP, CHILD, CHILDREN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament (London: SCM, 1963); C. J. Davis, The Name and Way of the Lord: Old Testament Themes, New Testament Christology (JSNTSup 129; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1996); J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making (London: SCM, 1989); F. Hahn, The Titles of Jesus in Christology (London: Lutterworth, 1969); J. A. Grassi, "From Jesus of Nazareth to Christ, the Son of God," Bible Today 61 (1972) 826-34; M. Hengel, The Son of God (London: SCM, 1976); J. Hick, ed., The Myth of God Incarnate (London: SCM, 1977); P. E. Hughes, "The Christology of Hebrews," SWJT 28 (1985) 19-27; J. Knox, The Humanity and Divinity of Christ (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1967); W. Kramer, Christ, Lord, Son of God (London: SCM, 1966); J. T. Lienhard, "The Christology of the Epistle to Diognetus," VC 24 (1970) 280-89; H. L. MacNeill, The Christology of the Epistle to the Hebrews (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1914); J. Macquarrie, Jesus Christ in Modern Thought (London: SCM, 1990); P. S. Minear, "The Idea of Incarnation in 1 John," Int 24 (1970) 291-302; E. Schweizer, "Variety and Unity in the New Testament proclamation of Jesus as the Son of God," AusBR 15 (1967) 1-12; D. Trakatellis, "God Language in Ignatius of Antioch" in The Future of Early Christianity, ed. B. A. Pearson (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1991) 422-32.

J. W. Drane

SONGS. See HYMNS, SONGS.

SONSHIP, CHILD, CHILDREN

The terminology of childhood features with remarkable infrequency in the NT (see DJG, Child, Children) and is not mentioned at all in most of the literature surveyed here. Where it occurs the motif has three dominant usages.

1. Childhood as an Image of Growth
2. Childhood as a Theological Image
3. Children in the Christian Community

1. Childhood as an Image of Growth.
Modern understandings of childhood date from the Renaissance. For the Romans being a child was merely the necessary means to becoming adult (which was at an early age: girls might marry at twelve, boys typically at fourteen). Children were defined by reference to their function in the household* and so provided an appropriate image to apply to Christians, both in relation to God and to one another. As raw materials in process of formation, children were immature and undeveloped (cf. Plato Leg. 808D, E). Childhood could be synonymous with childishness, a fitting image for spiritual immaturity (Jas 1:6; Heb 5:13; 1 Pet 2:2-3).

Some scholars have seen the background for such terminology in the mystery religions (see Religions, Greco-Roman), with their notion of spiritual progression through various cultic rituals. Though some aspects of these texts can be understood in this context (e.g., the theme of milk* and solid food: Heb 5:12-14; 1 Pet 2:2; cf. Barn. 6.17), the notion of stages of faith was already present in some of the most distinctive teaching of Jesus, and ordinary family relationships provide a more plausible background here.

There is also a more positive use of the image. Christians could be addressed as "(little) children" (1 Jn 2:1, 12, 14, 18, 28; 3:7, 18; 4:4; 5:21; 2 Jn 1; 4; 13; 3 Jn 4; Barn. 7.1; 9.2; Did. 3.1; 1 Clem. 22.1; Herm. Vis. 3.9.1), evoking teacher/pupil or parent/child relationships (cf. Sir 3:1; 4:1) and emphasizing the role of the child as a symbol of the future. The description suggests the focus for hope through whom the community's wider values would be perpetuated (cf. Rev 12:2). When it is used in this way the metaphor also heightens the significance of the message itself, in much the same way as a child's presence in the family underlined the importance of internalizing and living out the inherited tradition.

2. Childhood as a Theological Image.
The same image can also be applied as a theological metaphor of some substance to describe the Christian's relationship to God.* Here the focus is not on childhood but on the nature of Jesus as Son of God* and on believers as sharing in that. A major theme of 1 John is that because of Jesus' status as divine son (hyios), Christians become "children of God" (tekna). Paul used similar concepts (Gal 4:5; Rom 8:15, 23; Eph 1:5), though there are important differences. Paul applied the word hyios to describe the status of Christian believers as well as Jesus' own filial relationship to God (see DPL, Son of God). He also wrote of the "adoption" (hyiothesia) of Christians, just as Hebrews 2:10-12 depicts Jesus the Son as the firstborn in the eschatological* family of God, conferring the status of siblings on Christian believers (see DPL, Adoption, Sonship).

In 1 John, however (compare 1 Pet 1:3, 23), Christians are God's children by birth (cf. Heb 12:5-11). No doubt this reflects the more developed Johannine christology* as well as the particular circumstances addressed (see John, Letters of). Being children of God is not merely a metaphor for having a relationship with God (as it seems to be in Rev 21:7; Herm. Sim. 9.12; Barn. 6.11); it is a statement about the ontological nature of believers. The precise point at which they achieve this new birth* is never spelled out, though 1 John 5:6-8 may imply a baptismal context. 1 Peter 1:3, 23 use similar language about being born, though without explicitly including the imagery of childhood, and that certainly seems to be against the background of baptism.*

This concept leads to some unresolved tensions in 1 John. On the one hand children of God cannot sin, because God's nature is in them, and they are qualitatively different from "children of the devil" (1 Jn 3:8-10), for they belong to a place where sin is powerless (1 Jn 5:18). On the other hand the reality is that they do habitually sin (1 Jn 2:1; 5:16) and need constant encouragement to behave in accordance with their true nature. Though there is a hint of some eschatological tension, with Christians apparently awaiting the full outworking of the consequences of their being children of God (1 Jn 3:2), the ethical* questions raised by this perspective are not addressed directly (a contrast with Paul, whose imagery of a final adoption at the resurrection* ultimately leads to a more integrated theological outcome).

Other matters that gave rise to later debate are similarly left hanging in midair. For example, do people begin from a kind of neutral position and then choose to become children either of God or of the devil, or do they begin as children of the devil and remain so until they choose to become children of God? Nor is it obvious where we might helpfully locate any background to the Johannine use of this imagery. R. Bultmann's notion that there was some dualistic gnostic* influence here is hard to sustain in view of John's clear preference of an ethical dualism over against a material distinction (also found in Ign. Phld. 2.1). It is tempting to locate the origin of the imagery in those OT passages where sonship is a consequence of one's status within the covenant* people (e.g., Ex 4:22; Deut 32:5-6; Wis 12:19-20), but the dualistic contrast between children of God and children of the devil has no place there.

Qumran* might provide such a contrast (1QS 3:19—4:26), but unlike 1 John that is firmly within a covenantal context and provides no scope for the notion of divine begetting or new birth. The one thing that seems clear is that Jesus' relationship to God as Son is somehow to be shared with believers (1 Jn 2:24; 4:15; 5:20), though there is never complete identification since Jesus is the "only begotten" and "unique" son (1 Jn 4:9; cf. 1 Jn 3:1, 10), a distinction further underlined by the careful differentiation of hyios from teknon. One obvious place to look for further enlightenment would be Psalm 2:7, which was widely used in the early church* to explain Jesus' status as divine son. But unlike other writers, the author of 1 John makes no explicit reference to that passage, nor does he specifically say that Jesus' sonship is to be taken as a model for explaining the standing of disciples.

3. Children in the Christian Community.
The earliest Christian communities were based in the Roman household, and the place of children in the church was determined by their place in this wider social context. In this respect they were no different from women and men. Though there are few specific references to the role of children, Acts 2:39 gives theological legitimation to their inclusion in the church, while Acts 21:5 documents their presence and involvement. In general they were assumed to be part of the household of faith* (Ign. Pol. 8.2), sufficiently important that they could be singled out as a separate group (Ign. Smyrn. 13.1). The rejection of such common practices as abortion, sexual abuse and infanticide suggests they were valued in their own right (Barn. 19.5; 20.2; Did. 2:2; cf. Did. 5.2).

The most significant references to children are contained in the so-called Haustafeln, or household codes,* found in several places in the literature (1 Pet 2:18—3:7; Did. 4.9-11; Barn. 19.5-7; 1 Clem. 21.6-9; Ign. Pol. 4.1—5.2; Pol. Phil. 4.2-3). These codes reflect concerns for the ordering and stability of society that were shared by Christians and non-Christians. They have often been perceived as the ultimate expressions of patriarchy and obviously originated in and reflect the concerns of a patriarchal culture (children are the responsibility of their fathers, as wives are the responsibility of their husbands). But the Christian codes reflect a more complex understanding than this. A purely patriarchal culture would have addressed only men, masters, fathers and husbands, whereas these lists (most of them quotations from or variations on Col 3:18—4:1) include instructions for children, slaves* and women,* suggesting they were accepted as equal members of the community. On this basis it has been argued that these codes were drawn up to affirm that Christian faith did not undermine family loyalties or social stability—and underlying this concern was a certain tension between the more open relationships of the church and what was culturally acceptable in the household in the wider culture.

Infant baptism had not yet developed within this period, though some passages imply that children had their own place within the regular catechetical programs of the church (1 Clem. 21.7; Herm. Sim. 7.6), albeit generally on the same terms as adult converts rather than in a context of a theology of childhood (e.g., Herm. Vis. 1.3.2). It would be some time before children, as children, found full acceptance in the life of the church, but already the seeds of radical change can be traced here, giving some hint of the direction in which theological reflection on personhood would later develop.

See also HOUSEHOLD CODES; HOUSEHOLD, FAMILY; MILK, SOLID FOOD; SON OF GOD.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. S. C. Barton, ed., The Family in Theological Perspective (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1996); J. Francis, " 'Like Newborn Babes'—The Image of the Child in 1 Peter 2:2-3," Studia Biblica 3 (1978) 111-17; C. J. A. Hickling, "John and Hebrews: The Background of Hebrews 2:10-18," NTS 29 (1983) 112-16; J. M. Lieu, "Authority to Become Children of God," NovT 23 (1981) 210-28; B. Rawson, ed., The Family in Ancient Rome (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1986); T. Wiedemann, Adults and Children in the Roman Empire (London: Routledge, 1989).

J. W. Drane

SOUL. See PSYCHOLOGY.

SPEAKING IN TONGUES. See TONGUES.

SPEECHES OF ACTS. See ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

SPIRITS

The plural form "spirits" (Gk pneumata) is used in Acts and the General Epistles in ways mostly identical to its use in the Gospels and the Pauline literature. It may designate angels,* demonic spirits, human spirits, winds or the Holy Spirit.* All of these uses have their antecedents in OT and Second Temple Jewish literature. The designation spirits (pneumata) for evil supernatural beings is a usage not native to Greek, which favors daimon or daimonion, but has been imported from Jewish and Christian literature under the influence of the use of Hebrew rûaḥ (Paige, 198-220). "Spirit" (rûaḥ or pneuma) is increasingly used in later Jewish writing for angels or demons (usually in the plural) at Qumran* and in rabbinic and apocalyptic* literature (Sekki, chap. 5; Foerster, 13; Sjöberg, 375-76). Hence the reference to "evil spirits" and especially "unclean spirits" (Acts 5:1; 8:7; Rev 16:13, where the phrase is equated with "demonic spirits," pneumata daimoniōn; Rev 16:14; 18:2) clearly shows a Jewish Christian influence.

1. Acts
2. Hebrews
3. 1 Peter 3:19-20
4. 1 John
5. Revelation
6. Early Patristic Literature

1. Acts.

In Acts* we hear of the apostles,* in particular Peter, gaining such a reputation for healing* that people would bring those who were sick and afflicted with "unclean spirits" and lay them in the streets where they knew Peter would pass (Acts 5:15-16). Clearly this power over sickness and supernatural evil echoes Jesus' healing ministry* (cf. Mk 6:56; Lk 6:17-18). Those who seek the apostle to exorcise these evil spirits are implicitly contrasted to Ananias, who also is said to be "filled" with Satan's* influence but yields to it and lies to the apostles (Acts 5:3-4). Ananias dies at God's* hand, while the demon-possessed seekers are healed.

In Acts 8:4-13 Philip* proclaims the gospel and performs "signs" (Acts 8:6, 13), including the exorcism of "unclean spirits" (Acts 8:7) and healings. His ministry echoes Peter's and Jesus' earlier ministries (cf. Mk 1:26; Lk 4:33). This power over evil spirits is a sign that God's presence is active in and with the proclamation of the gospel and that the kingdom of God has already begun to arrive (see Kingdom of God). The authentic, astounding power over the supernatural that Philip displays is contrasted with the pathetic chicanery of the self-proclaimed "Great Power," Simon (Acts 8:9-12).

In Acts 19 Paul is also shown as one who heals and exorcises evil spirits (Acts 19:11-12). As in Acts 8, authentic spiritual power is contrasted with the false. The sons of Sceva are Jewish exorcists who attempt to cash in on Paul's success, using "Jesus" as a magical name and throwing "Paul" in for good measure (Acts 19:13). But when they are confronted with the power of evil, they discover their magic formula is useless and are roughly assaulted by a demon-possessed man (Acts 19:16). The only security against such evil forces is repentance* and faith* in the Jesus who saves and delivers from the power of darkness (see Light). The magical* papyri confirm that pagans and Jews attempted to use the name* of Jesus, along with variations of the divine name YHWH and other Jewish terms (the ancestors' names, "sabaoth," e.g., PGM 4.3007-86, an exorcism spell that includes a reference to "the god of the Hebrews, Jesus").

It is thought by some scholars that the presentation of Paul as a miracle worker is the romantic fiction of a later age (see Jervell). Although Paul is reluctant to speak of any achievements in this regard, his own letters clearly state that the Spirit's "power" was at work in his evangelism (1 Thess 1:5; 1 Cor 2:4-5) and that "signs and wonders"* were performed through him (Rom 15:19; 2 Cor 12:12).

2. Hebrews.

In Hebrews* pneumata may stand for "winds" in a citation of Psalm 104:4 (Ps 103:4 LXX; Heb 1:7), for angels as "ministering spirits" (Heb 1:14) or for human "spirits of just people who have been made perfect" (Heb 12:23). Whose spirits these are is debated: whether they are of old covenant* or new covenant saints, and whether they include the living. It is probably best to take them as all the redeemed of all ages, who because of the new covenant can together participate in the ultimate worship* of God in heaven* (Heb 12:22-24; cf. Heb 11:40), either including the living (Dumbrell) or perhaps referring only to "the godly dead" of all ages, for this is the meaning of the expression "spirits of righteous persons" in Jewish apocalyptic literature (Lane, 2:470).

The significance of the title "Father of Spirits" (Heb 12:9) is also disputed. In the context the writer is comparing earthly fathers and the discipline of their children to God as Father (see Sonship), whose discipline may involve suffering.* Just as we give respect and obedience* to earthly parents, so all the more we owe this to God, who is worthy of it and who only has our good in mind, sharing his holiness* (Heb 12:10). P. E. Hughes suggested the title refers to God as "heavenly" Father, contrasted with "earthly" fathers. But even better is to take the term spirits as used at Hebrews 1:14 for angelic beings, in which case the term signifies God's majesty as ruler over the angelic armies of heaven, the supernatural world. This interpretation is supported by the parallel idea found in Numbers 16:22 (LXX) and Numbers 27:16 (LXX), where God is called "the God of spirits and of all flesh" (cf. 2 Macc 3:24). And M. Black has shown that the title "Father of spirits" in the Ethiopic translation of 1 Enoch may be a paraphrase for the Hebrew title "the Lord of hosts," God as the commander of angelic armies. These texts reflect a traditional title known to early Christians and used in Hebrews.

3. 1 Peter 3:19-20.

There are three major questions here: Who are the "spirits" to whom Christ preached? What and where is the "prison"? And when did this happen? The context states that these spirits had "disobeyed" in the days of Noah (1 Pet 3:20), though it does not say that those were the days when Christ* preached (as if through Noah). The creedal statement of the preceding verse (1 Pet 3:18) sets the relative time for this "preaching": after Easter. Hence Jesus did not descend into hell* while in the grave. Neither does it make much sense in the context of Peter's exhortation to the church* if we interpret this of Jesus preaching to Noah's generation in hell. Furthermore, "spirits" in the Septuagint and apocryphal* literature usually refers to supernatural beings rather than human souls, especially when it is used without a qualifier such as "spirits of men" (Selwyn, 198-99; Kelly, 154).

This leaves the possibility that "spirits" refers to fallen angels, the "sons of God" of Genesis 6:1-4, which Jewish tradition held responsible for the wickedness that led to the flood (cf. Gen 6:5). These spirits who mated with humans were held to be a source of pagan idolatry* and continuing malevolent influence (Reicke, 109-11). J. R. Michaels prefers to connect these spirits to the "giants" (Gen 6:4) that Jewish tradition believed had become the evil spirits who trouble humanity and whom Jesus opposed during his ministry (Michaels, 207-8). But this requires a questionable interpretation of the word prison (Gk phylakē) as being the "sanctuary" of planet earth. There is a tradition in the apocryphal literature that the fallen angels were imprisoned by God (esp. in 1-2 Enoch; cf. 2 Pet 2:4; Jude 6), and several times its location is above the earth, in some quarter of the heavens.

Further, the verb for "preaching" in 1 Peter 3:19 can also have the neutral sense of "proclaim." Therefore the reference may be to an event that occurred after or during Christ's ascent to the Father's throne, when Jesus "proclaimed" his victory to these who are the archetype of sin's rebelliousness and the source of paganism's evil orientation. If this is the case, then we do have an immediate link with Peter's exhortation to his readers to continue patiently living out their witness to Christ in the face of opposition. Peter says those who oppose the gospel have "disobeyed" (1 Pet 2:7-8; 3:1), following the pattern of the fallen angels (1 Pet 3:20). Just as Christ did not hesitate to proclaim his cosmic victory even to these archsinners, so Peter's readers may be emboldened to "give an answer to everyone who asks [them]" (1 Pet 3:15), and they may be consoled with the thought that those who now torment them and refuse to repent will share the fate of those "spirits in prison."

4. 1 John.

1 John 4:1-3 urges the readers to "test the spirits" and provides criteria by which this is to be done. The question is, Does "spirits" stand for the human spirits of prophets*; a multiplicity of spirit beings, good and evil; the one Spirit of God versus evil spirits; or spirit-inspired utterances?

The "because" (Gk hoti) of 1 John 4:1 shows the testing of spirits is necessary due to the activity of "false prophets" who have gone out "into the world." The false prophets are not activated by or informed by God's Spirit. They are the "antichrists" of 1 John 2:18-19 (cf. 2 Jn 7), the false prophets whom Jesus warned would arise (Mt 24:11). If they are listened to, they will lead God's people astray. Nowhere else in the NT does the term spirits, without qualification, refer to people; and the idea is common to all religious groups in the first century that supernatural beings may accompany, inspire and lead people (cf. the "Spirit of Truth" and "Spirit of falsehood" at Qumran, 1QS 4). So John refers in 1 John 4:1 to supernatural entities accompanying "prophets" and inspiring their messages. There is only one good Spirit for John, the Holy Spirit,* though many evil spirits may exist (Brown, 486, 491-92).

Some passages in 1 Corinthians could be read to suggest that for Paul the line between human and divine spirits could be blurred: so G. D. Fee understands that "my spirit" and "in spirit" in 1 Corinthians 14:14, 15 refer to both kinds of spirit simultaneously. Such an understanding might also be suggested for 1 John 4:1-3 by the references to the "confession" of "every spirit" (every human spirit of a prophet leaves telltale evidence of how it is inspired). But in light of 1 John 4:1, that the testing is whether the spirits are "from God" and considering that it would be odd to refer to the person of the prophets this way (their spirit being sent from God), it is better to understand the references to "every spirit" as vividly individualizing encounters with prophets. Though there is ultimately only one good spirit, the force of the expression (1 Jn 4:2-3) is, "every time you encounter a 'spirit' speaking through a prophet which agrees with the truth that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh, know that it is from God."

How does one test a "spirit"? Indirectly, by means of what effect it has on people's conception of Jesus and God (as here, 1 Jn 4:1-3) and by observing how it affects behavior (the test of love, 1 Jn 4:7-21). In the OT also an important test of a prophet was what he said about God (Deut 13:1-5; 18:15-22). There are false prophets or teachers who travel from one Christian community to another, living off their offerings and claiming to present a message from the Spirit (2 Jn 7-11). Perhaps for fear of committing the "blasphemy against the Holy Spirit," Christians were loath to publicly question or criticize a prophet. This attitude is illustrated in the Didache: "Do not put to the test, nor try to exercise judgment on any prophet speaking 'in Spirit,' 'for every sin will be forgiven, but this sin will not be forgiven.' But not everyone speaking 'in Spirit' is a prophet, unless that person has the behavior of the Lord. So you will know the false prophet and the true prophet by their lives." Even though the author of the *Didache is aware that the "spirit" speaking through a prophet may not be the Holy Spirit, he cautions his readers not to challenge a prophet.

A similar reverence about enthusiastic spiritual manifestations in the Johannine community may have left them open to deception. In support of this the opening command of 1 John 4:1 could be translated "Stop putting your faith in every 'spirit' [that speaks through a prophet]!"—suggesting the community was already vulnerable to hypocritical swindlers.

5. Revelation.

In Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) the "seven spirits of God" make up four of the seven occurrences of pneumata (Rev 1:4; 3:1; 4:5; 5:6). Some scholars have suggested the phrase has reference to the famous seven archangels who serve God (Tob 12:15; 1 Enoch 20:1-8; cf. Rev 8:2). Although "spirits" can stand for angels, the structure of Revelation 1:4 appears trinitarian: greetings from "him who is, and who was, and who is to come [God]," from "the seven spirits before his throne" and from Jesus Christ. In Revelation 3:1 the "seven spirits" are distinguished from angels (the "seven stars," cf. Rev 1:20).

In John's vision* of God's throne (Rev 4, echoing Isaiah's call, Is 6), the seven spirits are again pictured before God's throne, symbolized by seven lamps (Rev 4:5). The spirits are grouped with other manifestations of the theophany proper (lightning and thunder); significantly the seven spirits are never said to join in the adoration of God by this court (Rev 4:8, 9-11).

In the final occurrence the seven spirits are pictured as members of the Lamb* of God, who shares God's awesome throne: "Then I saw a Lamb . . . standing in the center of the throne. . . . He had seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent out into all the earth" (Rev 5:6). All of these suggest that the "seven spirits" are another way of speaking of the Holy Spirit. The language and imagery are most likely influenced by Zechariah, who in one of his visions sees a gold lampstand with seven lights, representing "the eyes of the Lord, which range throughout the earth" (Zech 4:4, 10; cf. Rev 5:6). The number seven suggests completeness, "the Holy Spirit in his fullness of life and blessing" (Beasley-Murray, 56). Older interpreters (including patristic interpreters) looked to Isaiah 11:2-3, where the Septuagint lists seven descriptions of the spirit that will rest upon the promised future ruler, each beginning with "a spirit of . . ." Few modern interpreters hold this to be the source for Revelation. And the message that God will establish his people and his plans "not by might nor by power but by my Spirit" (Zech 4:6) fits Revelation's emphasis on God's sovereignty in history despite the appearance of powerful worldly opposition.

Two other references in Revelation are to evil spirits, called "unclean" and "demonic" (Rev 16:13, 14), who are sent out to deceive world rulers and draw them into a battle that will result in their destruction by God (cf. the deceiving spirit who draws Ahab to his last battle, 1 Kings 22:21-22).

"The God of the Spirits of the prophets" (Rev 22:6) is part of the conclusion to Revelation, which echoes themes of the introduction, bracketing the whole in a declaration of its divine origin and emphasizing that it contains true prophecy. Revelation's link of this Spirit that works in the prophets' "spirits" to God on the one hand and Jesus on the other ensures that the reader understands that the true prophetic working of the Spirit is the presence of Christ in the world and bears witness to him (cf. Rev 19:10, "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy"). Fee has suggested that a similar expression in 1 Corinthians 14:32 may be understood as a reference to the prophets' human spirits (plural) as energized and informed by the Spirit (singular) who indwells them. A similar suggestion was already made by H. B. Swete: "the natural faculties of the prophets, raised and quickened by the Holy Spirit" (The Apocalypse of St. John [3d ed., Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1908], 303).

6. Early Patristic Literature.

The plural "spirits" (pneumata) does not occur in the Didache, 2 Clement, Polycarp's* Letter to the Philippians, the Martyrdom of Polycarp, the Epistle to Diognetus or the letters of Ignatius.*

6.1. 1 Clement. 1 Clement cites Hebrews 1:7 once (1 Clem. 36.3) and uses pneumata three more times, at which places it seems to refer to human spirits (souls) but may also include divine beings. 1 Clement 59.3 speaks of God as "the creator and overseer (episkopon) of every spirit." This text and 1 Clement 64.1 speak of God's role in relation to both "spirits" and "all flesh." Does Clement (see Clement of Rome) mean to speak of both sides of human nature (perishable and imperishable or spiritual and material), or does he present God's activity in its totality, over the supernatural world ("spirits") and the natural world ("all flesh")? On balance the contexts seem to indicate references to human beings. 1 Clement 59.3 echoes Numbers 16:22 in its statement that the Lord* is "the finder of spirits and the God of all flesh" (some variants read, "benefactor of spirits"). He is the One in control of human fate, the One who raises the humble and brings down the proud. 1 Clement 64.1 is a prayer* for the readers: "May God, who watches over all, is master of spirits and Lord of all flesh . . . give faith, fear, peace, endurance and patience, self-control, holiness and sobriety to every soul that has called upon his glorious and holy name."

6.2. Barnabas. For the writer of the *Epistle of Barnabas the two plural uses of "spirits" occur in references to his readers, who have "blessed and glorious spirits" that cause the writer to rejoice (Barn. 1.2; cf. Barn. 1.5, where "such spirits" = "you").

6.3. Shepherd of Hermas. The Shepherd of Hermas has by far the most references to "spirits" among the works of the apostolic fathers (seventeen times). Five of these refer to the human spirits (souls) of his readers, which have been or will be renewed by God (Herm. Vis. 3. 8.9; 3.12.3; 3.13.2; Herm. Sim. 8.6.3). And he tells his readers how to spot false prophets, warning them not be gullible about self-proclaimed spiritual men: "For if you pack wine or oil into a pantry, and you put an empty jar in with them, and then you want to unpack the pantry, that jar that you put in empty you will find still empty. In the same way also, whenever the 'empty' prophets come to the spirits of just men, they are discovered to be just whatever sort of people they were when they came" (Herm. Man. 11.1.15).

Hermas refers to evil spirits (pneumata) six times, though some of these are references to things such as quick temper (Herm. Man. 5.2.4-5, 7) and sorrow (Herm. Man. 10.1.2), which are "earthly spirits" (Herm. Man. 11.1.19) contrasted with the influence of the Holy Spirit. They seem to be more than mere literary personifications and (like Paul's use of "sin" in Rom 7) are thought of as active forces opposed to God and in league with Satan (cf. Herm. Man. 11.1.15). He also has one vision explained as symbolizing the fate of Christians who have sinned so as to be cast out of God's church: "after they entered in together and became one body, some of them defiled themselves and were cast out from the family of the righteous. . . . Those who have come to know God and have seen his great works, and [yet] continue to do evil, they will be punished doubly and will die forever" (Herm. Sim. 9.17.5; 9.18.2). These are "stones"* taken from the "tower" that represents the church and are "handed over to evil spirits and thrown out from there" (Herm. Sim. 9.18.3).

The most idiosyncratic of Hermas's uses of pneumata occurs in relation to the Spirit of God. At several places he refers to "virgins" in his vision who "are holy spirits; and a person cannot be found to be in the kingdom of God in any other way except by them putting their clothes on him" (Herm. Sim. 9.13.2; cf. Herm. Sim. 9.13.5, 7). These "clothes" that the believer receives may refer to the Spirit as marking those who are saved (as Eph. 1:13-14) or perhaps also to the godly virtues* that the Spirit engenders (see below on Herm Sim. 9.15.2). Further, "these virgins are powers of the Son of God" (Herm. Sim. 9.13.2). Hence the saving and sanctifying presence of the Holy Spirit is pictured as a plurality of Spirits (of God), as the presence of the Son and metaphorically as "virgins" who are also identified elsewhere as virtues (reminiscent of Paul's fruit of the Spirit, Gal. 5:22): faith, temperance, power, patience, simplicity (or generosity, haplotēs), guilelessness, holiness, cheerfulness, truth, understanding, agreement and love (Herm. Sim. 9.15.2). J. Quasten holds that Hermas has a binitarian theology: God the Father and God the Holy Spirit, who can also be known as the Son of God (Quasten, 100). Hermas's use of a plurality of spirits to represent the one Holy Spirit is reminiscent of Revelation, from which he may have gathered inspiration for his unique usage.

6.4. Justin Martyr. In his first and second apologies Justin never uses the term pneumata of good or evil spirits; for the latter he uses daimonia. Only in his Dialogue with Trypho (directed to a Jew) does he use pneumata of evil spirits, and this is the only way the term is used there. In four of his five uses of the word, Justin describes the "spirits" as being "deceitful" (or some translations, "spirits of error," pneumata tēs planēs, Dial. Tryph. 7; 30; 35; 39; 76). The association of these "spirits" with untruth and mental influence is echoed in his reference to "the unclean spirit [singular] of the devil," which shoots things into people's minds (Justin Dial. Tryph. 82).

6.5. Irenaeus. Irenaeus can speak of evil spirits, also known as "deceiving spirits" (Irenaeus Haer. 1.9.5; 1.16.3; 2.6.2). Valentinian Gnostics* teach that from grief came the "spirits of wickedness," along with the devil, Cosmocrator, and every wicked spiritual being (Irenaeus Haer. 1.5.4). The heretics can command spirits, which are actually sent forth by Satan (Irenaeus Haer. 1.13.4); and the antichrist* will deceive the world by means of "demons and apostate spirits" (Irenaeus Haer. 5.28.2). Christians exorcise evil spirits even in Irenaeus's day in the name of Jesus, and in doing this along with other miracles they show the power and truth resident in the true church (Ireneaus Haer. 2.32.4). At Adversus Haereses 4.6.7 he writes that even "apostate spirits and demons" testify to Jesus' deity, referring to Jesus' exorcisms (compare Irenaeus Haer. 4.6.6).

The Gnostic elite believe when they rid themselves of their bodies and (lower) souls, they will become "intelligent spirits" and companions of angels (Irenaeus Haer. 1.7.1-2; 2.29.1). Human "spirits" will be included with body and soul at the resurrection* of the righteous (Irenaeus Haer. 2.33.4); souls and spirits (human or other?) are part of God's creation* and may exist as long as God so wills it (Irenaeus Haer. 2.34.3). "Spiritual people" are human saints, not "incorporeal spirits" (Irenaeus Haer. 5.8.2). Two instances are citations: Hebrews 1.7 (Ps 104:4) at Adversus Haereses 2.30.1, describing angels; and Revelation 5:6 at Adversus Haereses 4.20.11, the vision of the lamb with "seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God."

See also ANGELS, HEAVENLY BEINGS, ANGEL CHRISTOLOGY; CHRISTOLOGY; GOD; HOLY SPIRIT; IDOLATRY; RELIGIONS, GRECO-ROMAN; SATAN, DEVIL.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, "The Role of the Spirit in the Apocalypse," EvQ 52 (1980) 66-83; G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation (NCB; London: Oliphants, 1974); M. Black, "Two Unusual Nomina Dei in the Second Vision of Enoch" in The New Testament Age: Essays in Honor of Bo Reicke, ed. W. C. Weinrich (Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1984) 53-59; R. E. Brown, The Epistles of John (AB; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1982); F. F. Bruce, "The Spirit in the Apocalypse" in Christ and Spirit in the New Testament, ed. B. Lindars and S. S. Smalley (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1973) 333-44; R. Bultmann, The Johannine Epistles (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1973 [1967]); A. Deasley, "The Holy Spirit in the Dead Sea Scrolls," WTJ 21 (1986) 45-73; W. J. Dumbrell, "Spirits of Just Men Made Perfect," EvQ 48 (1976) 154-59; W. Foerster, "δαίμων κτλ," TDNT 2:1-20; P. E. Hughes, A Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977); J. Jervell, "The Signs of an Apostle" in The Unknown Paul (Minneapolis: Augsburg, 1984) chap. 5; J. N. D. Kelly, The Epistles of Peter and of Jude (BNTC; London: A. & C. Black, 1969); W. L. Lane, Hebrews (2 vols.; WBC; Dallas: Word, 1991); J. Lawson, A Theological and Historical Introduction to the Apostolic Fathers (New York: Macmillan, 1961); I. H. Marshall, The Epistles of John (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); J. R. Michaels, 1 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); R. H. Mounce, The Book of Revelation (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977); T. Paige, "Spirit at Corinth: The Corinthian Concept of Spirit and Paul's Response as Seen in 1 Corinthians" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, University of Sheffield, 1994); J. Quasten, Patrology, 1: The Beginnings of Patristic Literature (Westminster, MD: Christian Classics, 1986 [1950]); B. Reicke, The Epistles of James, Peter and

Jude (AB; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1964); A. E. Sekki, The Meaning of Ruaḥ at Qumran (SBLDS 110; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1989); E. Sjöberg, "πνεῦμα κτλ: Palestinian Judaism," TDNT 6:375-89; S. Smalley, 1, 2, 3 John (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1984). T. Paige

SPIRITUAL HOUSE. See HOUSE, SPIRITUAL HOUSE.

STEPHEN

Stephen, member of the Seven, evangelist and the first known Christian martyr, makes his appearance in the NT solely in the Acts of the Apostles (Acts 6:1—8:3). The Jerusalem church,* acting at the direction of the Twelve, chose Stephen and six others to administer its charitable distribution of food in such a way that the widows among the Hellenistic Jewish Christians would be equitably served (Acts 6:1-6). Stephen also performed miracles* and preached the new faith* in one or more Hellenist synagogues* in Jerusalem* (Acts 6:8-10). This led to charges that he was guilty of blaspheming both Moses* and God* (Acts 6:10-11). Upon being arrested, he appeared before the Sanhedrin and delivered a speech that so infuriated his hearers that they stoned him to death (Acts 6:12—8:1). Saul of Tarsus, present at and consenting to this stoning, forthwith led a persecution* of the Jerusalem church, many of whose members were forced to flee the city (Acts 8:1-3).

1. Stephen Within the Literary and Theological Context of Luke-Acts
2. Tradition-Historical Issues Surrounding Stephen

1. Stephen Within the Literary and Theological Context of Luke-Acts.

In the story of Stephen, Luke is able to develop several themes that appear more widely in Luke-Acts. Most of these relate to the rejection of Jesus and his disciples by many of the Jews, particularly the authorities in Jerusalem. As Jesus faced rejection, he prophesied that his disciples would encounter the same hatred, with some having to suffer martyrdom* (Lk 9:23-24; 12:8-12; 21:12-19; Acts 7:54-60). Stephen is just such a martyr, who, as Jesus promised, was able to speak before his adversaries with a wisdom and a Spirit that they could not withstand (Lk 12:11-12; 21:12-15; Acts 6:10). Yet because he acknowledged Jesus before others and lost his life for Jesus' sake, he saved his life and was acknowledged by the Son of Man (Lk 9:23-24; 12:8; 21:19; Acts 7:55-56).

The hostility of one or more Jerusalem synagogues and the Sanhedrin against Stephen typifies Jerusalem's unbelieving rejection of the prophets* up to and including Jesus, the prophet like Moses and the Messiah. Thus the obstinate disobedience of Stephen's adversaries underscores the guilt on account of which Jesus predicted that God would punish them by forsaking the city and its temple* to destruction, plundering and occupation by the Gentiles* (Lk 11:47-51; 13:33-35; 19:27-28, 42-44; 20:9-19; 21:5-6, 20-24; 23:28-31). In the first five chapters of Acts,* the apostles offer pardon and salvation* to all who incurred guilt on account of Jesus' death. But while many repent, the Sanhedrin only increases its opposition to the disciples. At first the Sanhedrin threatens Peter and John against any further preaching of Jesus (Acts 4:1-22). Next, all of the apostles are imprisoned and flogged (Acts 5:17-40). Finally this hostility climaxes with the stoning of Stephen and Saul's savage persecution (authorized by the high priest* [Acts 9:1]) that followed in its wake. Only following this decisive rejection does Luke's story turn away from Jerusalem toward various missions to regions beyond Judea.

Readers of Luke-Acts have long noticed that various details in the story of Stephen closely correlate him to Jesus and Paul, the dominant figures in these works. Stephen, like Jesus and Paul, is a Spirit-filled man whose empowerment is manifest in both speech and miracles (Lk 3:21-22; 4:1, 14-15, 18; Acts 6:3, 5, 8, 10, 51, 55; 9:17; 13:1, 4, 9-12; 14:3; 15:12). Stephen is especially at one with Jesus and Paul with respect to the opposition that they endured at the hands of Jewish unbelievers, particularly the authorities.

Stephen, like Jesus, was rejected in the synagogue, was arrested and brought before the Sanhedrin, faced trumped-up charges, appealed to the Son of Man at God's right hand, committed his spirit to the Lord,* prayed that his executioners would be forgiven and died as a martyr outside Jerusalem's walls (Lk 4:16-30; 22:54, 66; 23:1-5, 13-17, 34a [of uncertain textual status], 46; Acts 6:9-15; 7:55-60).

Like Paul, Stephen was a powerful speaker whose efforts to evangelize Hellenist Jews was repaid with persecution; he was arrested and brought before the Sanhedrin before whom he defended himself against the false charges of speaking against the law* and the temple; finally, due to the Sanhedrin's furious opposition, he suffered martyrdom (Acts 6:8-15; 7:54, 57-59; 9:28-29; 21:21, 24, 27-36; 22:22-23; 22:30—23:10; 23:12-15; 24:1-9, 11-21; 25:8; 28:17-19; Acts probably assumes Paul's martyrdom [Acts 20:22-24, 29, 37-38; 21:10-14; 23:11]).

Building on the work of O. Steck, D. Moessner has argued that these parallels exist because Luke views Jesus, Stephen, Paul and also Peter as Deuteronomistic rejected prophets. Thus "Israel's continued disobedience . . . is the linchpin of cohesion" (Moessner, 227) among these figures, despite Luke's conviction that Jesus is unique in salvation history.

Within Acts, Luke skillfully uses the narratives about Stephen to display the relationship between the earliest Jewish church, led by the Twelve, and later mission efforts and personalities. In his account of the choosing of the Seven (Acts 6:1-6), Luke continues his exclusive focus on the Jewish Jerusalem church. However, the mention of Stephen as one of the Seven (Acts 6:5) leads directly to an account of his evangelistic preaching, which in turn results in his stoning (Acts 6:8—7:60). At this point Luke introduces Saul (= Paul), who approvingly witnessed Stephen's death and thereupon led a persecution of the Jerusalem disciples so vicious that they, save the apostles, fled the city (Acts 7:58; 8:1-3).

This scattering of the disciples allows Luke to narrate momentous missionary developments, geographical and ethnic, that occupy almost all of the balance of Acts (see Acts 1:8). The flight of Philip* the Evangelist leads him to evangelize Samaritans* (Acts 8:4-25) and an Ethiopian treasurer, apparently a Jewish proselyte (Acts 8:26-40). These advances on the mission* to Judean Jews prepare for Peter's epoch-making evangelization of the household* of Cornelius,* an unqualified Gentile (Acts 10:1—11:18). The diaspora of the Jerusalem disciples also sets the stage for the importance of Paul and the church in Antioch* in Luke's story. It is on his way to Damascus to arrest dispersed disciples that Paul encounters the risen Jesus and thereby becomes the major witness of Jesus in the latter half of Acts (Acts 9:1-19). Stephen's death also leads to a Jewish Christian mission to Gentiles in Antioch. Upon reaching the Syrian capital, scattered Jewish Christians originally from Cyprus and Cyrene exceeded the limits of their compatriots by evangelizing Gentiles (Acts 11:19-21). Subsequently this ethnically mixed church becomes the launching base for the three great Pauline mission trips.

Stephen's martyrdom leads to geographical and ethnic development of the Christian mission, but does Luke intend that we see in Stephen an instance of theological development? It is usually held that Stephen, perhaps since he was a Hellenist, plumbed the depth of the divine revelation* in Christ* and perceived that both the Mosaic law and the temple had been superseded. Stephen must have been critical of the law, since witnesses accused him of saying that Jesus would change the "customs" (ethē) delivered by Moses (Acts 6:14; cf. Acts 8:11, 14). Likewise he was charged with claiming that Jesus would destroy the temple (Acts 6:13-14). While this latter charge might not be entirely accurate, Stephen himself was allegedly critical of the temple (Acts 7:47-50). Against these considerations, however, one should note that Luke represents the charges against Stephen as false (Acts 6:13); Stephen refers to the law positively as "living oracles" (logia zōnta, Acts 7:38); Stephen accuses his hearers of refusing to keep the law "as ordained by angels" (Acts 7:53); the conjunction (de) introducing Acts 7:48 need not imply disapproval of the building of the temple; Acts 7:48-50 need not challenge the legitimacy of the temple but only its necessity; and Luke later takes pains to show that Paul too was charged with profaning the temple and sitting loose to the law but that these accusations were false (Acts 21:20-36; 22:30—23:5; 24:6, 10-21; 25:7-11; 28:17).

2. Tradition-Historical Issues Surrounding Stephen.

C. C. Hill has helpfully outlined a consensus of opinion surrounding the historicity, transmission and redaction of the Stephen traditions in Acts (Hill, esp. 5-16). This interpretation, rooted in the work of F. C. Baur and recently fortified in the main by M. Hengel, views the Hellenist (i.e., Greek-speaking) Jewish Christians, of which Stephen was a leader, as a group theologically distinct from the early Aramaic-speaking Christians, who continued their pre-Christian devotion to the law and the temple. Stephen and other Hellenists, however, realized that temple worship and the law had become superfluous. Stephen's advocacy of such radical views brought him into violent conflict with a group of Jerusalem Jews who lynched him. This incident led to a persecution of the Hellenists. That the more conservative portion of the church was not targeted by the persecutors is deduced from Acts 8:1, which states that the apostles stayed in Jerusalem while other disciples were driven out.

It is widely agreed that at least some of Luke's Stephen narratives are attributable to a source or sources (emanating from the Antioch church, according to many, e.g., Harnack and Hengel), but many interpreters suspect that the appointment of the Seven to rectify problems in the charitable distribution to widows is an inaccurate explanation of a real distinction and tension between the Twelve and the Seven. It has also become popular to reject the historicity of Stephen's trial before the Sanhedrin and to regard Stephen's address as based upon something other than a reliable, remembered summary of his preaching. The source of the speech, for example, has been traced to a Samaritan tract (e.g., Scobie) or a Diaspora synagogue sermon (e.g., Haenchen); more recently there is a definite trend toward viewing it as Luke's own composition (Bihler, Richard, Kilgallen).

The identification of the extent and accuracy of the sources lying behind Luke's story of Stephen has proved to be notoriously difficult and controversial (Dupont). And yet apart from such information it is very difficult to assess the historicity of anything other than the barest outlines of the story. It is also difficult, however, to rule out with confidence disputed elements on historical grounds. Hill (24-28), for example, has recently argued that there is nothing inherently improbable in Luke's account of the Hebrew-Hellenist conflict and Stephen's role in its resolution. Furthermore, C. K. Barrett (1:321) has recently added his name to the list of those who believe that Stephen's trial before the Sanhedrin was already in a source employed by Luke. Finally, the general historical reliability of Stephen's speech still has its advocates (Bruce, Marshall), and even if Luke composed the speech or adapted a speech from a source other than Stephen, it is by no means impossible that he did so on the basis of accurate knowledge concerning Stephen's theology and the accusations on account of which he was killed.

Apart from the question of sources, however, the consensual notion that Stephen and his fellow Hellenists held more radical views about the temple and the law than did their Aramaic-speaking fellow Christians rests on questionable arguments. Their tenuousness has been effectively demonstrated by Hill, who has explored in detail the considerations embedded in the last paragraph of the preceding section. Since Stephen's views and activity do not appear to represent an innovation in the Lukan outlook, it is precarious to look for it behind his presentation.

See also ACTS OF THE APOSTLES; HELLENISTS, HELLENISTIC AND HELLENISTIC-JEWISH CHRISTIANITY; MARTYRDOM; TEMPLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. K. Barrett, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles (2 vols.; ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1994-); J. Bihler, Die Stephanusgeschichte im Zusammenhang der Apostelgeschichte (MTS 1.16; Munich: M. Hueber, 1963); T. Brodie, "The Accusing and Stoning of Naboth (1 Kings 21:8-13) as One Component of the Stephen Text (Acts 6:9-14; Acts 7:58a)," CBQ 45 (1983) 417-32; F. F. Bruce, Peter, Stephen, James and John (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1979); J. Dupont, The Sources of Acts: The Present Position (London: Darton, Longman & Todd, 1964); G. D. Fee, God's Empowering Presence: The Holy Spirit in the Letters of Paul (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1994); E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles: A Commentary (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1971); M. Hengel, "Between Jesus and Paul: The 'Hellenists,' the 'Seven' and Stephen (Acts 6:1-15; 7:54—8:3)" in Between Jesus and Paul (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1983) 1-29; C. C. Hill, Hellenists and Hebrews: Reappraising Division within the Earliest Church (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1992); J. Kilgallen, The Stephen Speech: A Literary and Redactional Study of Acts 7:2-53 (AnBib 67; Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1976); E. Larsson, "Temple Criticism and the Jewish Heritage: Some Reflections on Acts 6—7," NTS 39 (1993) 379-95; D. Moessner, " 'The Christ Must Suffer': New Light on Jesus—Peter, Stephen, Paul Parallels in Luke-Acts," NovT 28 (1986) 220-56; H. Räisänen, The Torah and Christ (Suomen Eksegeettisen Seuran julkaisuja; Helsinki: Finnish Exegetical Society, 1986); E. Richard, Acts 6:1—8:4: The Author's Method of Composition (SBLDS 41; Missoula, MT: Scholar's Press, 1978); M. Scharlemann, Stephen: A Singular Saint (AnBib 34; Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1968); C. H. H. Scobie, "The Use of Source Material in the Speeches of Acts 3 and 7," NTS 25 (1979) 399-421; D. D. Sylva, "The Meaning and Function of Acts 7:56-60," JBL 106 (1987) 261-75.

B. L. Blackburn

STONE, CORNERSTONE

"Stone" and "cornerstone" represent several words and phrases in the original Greek. The idea and associations of stone are thoroughly exploited in the NT, owing to the fact that they lend themselves readily to various metaphorical usages to set forth such functions of Christ as his being a foundational stone or a cornerstone. From such a usage the meaning passes easily on to the believers' character of living stones built on him. This imagery is developed by the early Christian authors, especially Hermas, while in Revelation various kinds of precious stones adorn the foundations fo the heavenly Jerusalem.

1. Terminology
2. Usage in the Later New Testament
3. Usage in Early Christian Writers

1. Terminology.

Greek uses several words for stone: petra usually denotes "rock, bedrock, cliff" (often from Homer on) but has also, though less frequently, the sense of "stone" (for its many uses see Caragounis, "Petra"). It is normally distinguished from petros, a free-standing stone; however, petros sometimes is used interchangeably with petra for "rock" or "bedrock."

Lithos, which according to the database TLG occurs approximately ten thousand times times in Greek literature (including inscriptions and papyri), is the usual word for "stone" from Homer to post-Christian times. This is so less frequently in Byzantine and especially Modern Greek (often in the diminutive form lithari[on]), in which petra has been substituted, and its earlier meaning of "bedrock" is now expressed by vrachos. The variety of its uses include stones thrown by warriors (Homer Il. 5.308), stones for building (P Cair. Zen. 499.20), gravestones (Callimachus Epigr. 8.1; in the feminine), rostra (Aristophanes Acharn. 683), marble (Herodotus 3.57), an altar at Athens before which public servants took their oath (Demosthenes Ag. Conon 1265), precious stones (Herodotus 2.44), hard-heartedness (Homer Odys. 23.103; metaphorically), as well as a stupid (Aristophanes Nubes 1202) or an insensitive person (Plato Gorg. 494).

The idea of "cornerstone" is expressed in two ways: by the adjective akrogōniaios (akron = "end," "extremity" + gōnia = "corner") with lithos (sometimes without lithos) and by the phrase kephalē gōnias ("head of the corner"). Akrogōniaios occurs first in Isaiah 28:16 (LXX), and its metaphorical significance is something that constitutes a solid or sure basis for deliverance. Kephalē gōnias occurs first in Psalm 118 (LXX Ps 117:22). Neither of these terms occurs in secular Greek literature.

2. Usage in the Later New Testament.

In our literature (Acts, the General Epistles and Revelation) the normal word for "stone" is lithos. This is the normal Septuagint translation of Hebrew 'eben. Petra (which usually translates Heb. sela' and ṣur but never 'eben) occurs only once in our literature with the sense of "stone" (1 Pet 2:8). In the entire NT petros occurs only as a proper name: that of the apostle Peter. Akrogōniaios occurs just once (1 Pet 2:6) in the quotation from Isaiah 28:16, being a neologism (Lust, Eynikel and Hauspie, s.v.).

2.1. Lithos. Our literature does not evince the rich variety of usage found in ancient authors or even in the NT as a whole. The word occurs only in Acts,* 1 Peter* and Revelation (see Revelation, Book of).

2.1.1. Acts. In his speech before the Jewish authorities in Acts 4:11 Peter quotes Psalm 118 (LXX Ps 117:22), "the stone (lithos) the builders rejected has become the capstone (kephalē gōnias)." Peter applies "the stone" as a building material in a metaphorical sense to Christ* and "the builders" to the authorities, who are thus declared guilty of having crucified the elect One of God.* In his Areopagus speech in Acts 17:29, Paul, in typical Jewish polemic against idolatry* (cf. Is 44:9-20), points out to the Athenians that the God whose offspring we all are (tou gar kai genos esmen, Acts 17:28, quoted from Aratus Phaen. 5 but probably echoing Cleanthes' Hymn to Zeus 4) cannot possibly be identified with "gold or silver or stone (lithō), an image made by man's design and skill." In a context such as this lithos is used of the statues of the Athenian gods made of stone or marble, which are thus contrasted to the God from whom human beings derive their existence (on Acts 17:29 see Gärtner, esp. 179-98, 219-28).

2.1.2. 1 Peter. A more varied usage of lithos is found in 1 Peter 2:4-8, where the word occurs five times. "Living stone . . . chosen and precious" (lithon zōnta . . . eklekton kai entimon) describes Christ who, though rejected by unbelievers, has been chosen by God (1 Pet 2:4). The imagery is one of building—a spiritual building—into which the recipients of this letter are drawn as living stones (lithoi zōntes, 1 Pet 2:5). The background to this is the quotation of Psalm 118 (LXX Ps 117:22), which is adumbrated in "rejected" (apodedokimasmenon) and is quoted in full in 1 Peter 2:7. The metaphorical use of "living stone" as applied to Christ passes on into the idea of the foundational stone.

Hence when the reasoning is being supported by the quotation from Isaiah 28:16 (1 Pet 2:6), the imagery of the "living stone" changes in accordance with the OT wording to that of "cornerstone" (lithon akrogōniaion). At this point the double function of this "stone" comes into view: for those who believe the stone is a "cornerstone" (lithos akrogōnias, 1 Pet 2:6), that is, a sure foundation upon which to build their existence; but for those who refuse to believe, the same stone turns out to be a "cornerstone" (kephalēn gōnias, 1 Pet 2:7) as well as, in the words of Isaiah 8:14, "a stone that causes men to stumble and a rock that makes them fall" (NIV; lithos proskommatos kai petra skandalou, 1 Pet 2:8). In this double function of the stone 1 Peter takes a different line from that of Paul (Rom 9:33), who embeds Isaiah 8:14, the saying on the stone of offense, within Isaiah 28:16, giving the combined quotation a mainly negative thrust though including an aspect of hope by quoting the last part of Isaiah 28:16. There is also a coincidence with the Greek idea expressed by Lydia lithos or lithos basanou, a "touchstone" or "testing stone" (on the above passage as a whole see Michaels, 94, 98-99).

2.1.3. Revelation. In Revelation the word lithos occurs eight times (once to describe a millstone and seven times to identify various types of precious stones) as well as in a variant reading at Revelation 15:6 (as a precious stone). At Revelation 4:3 the firelike appearance of the Almighty is described as one of "jasper and carnelian" (lithō iaspidi kai sardiō), obviously implying the red rather than the green type of jasper.

In Revelation 17—18 the great harlot, Babylon,* is attired with "gold, precious stones (lithō timiō) and pearls" (Rev 17:4; 18:16), while her destruction leaves the merchants of the earth without a buyer for their merchandise of "gold, silver, precious stones (lithō timiō) and pearls" (Rev 18:12). The sudden and violent destruction of this city is typified when an angel* throws into the sea "a stone large as a millstone" (lithon hōs mylinon megan, Rev 18:21; so correctly Luther's translation, Swedish translation, 1981; Modern Greek translation, 1989; against NEB, NIV following the AV: "like a great millstone").

At Revelation 21:11 the light (phōstēr; the same term in Gen 1:14, 16 is used of the sun and the moon, but here in view of Rev 21:23 it probably refers to the radiance emitted from the throne) of the heavenly Jerusalem is like "a most precious stone" (lithō timiōtatō), like "a jasper stone" (lithō iaspidi), clear as crystal, while at Revelation 21:19 the foundations of the heavenly Jerusalem are adorned with every kind of precious stone (panti lithō timiō). Revelation 21:19-20 mention twelve kinds of precious stones (jasper, sapphire [lapis lazuli], chalcedony, emerald, sardonyx, carnelian, chrysolite, beryl, topaz, chrysoprase, jacinth [turquoise], amethyst), one for each foundation. At Revelation 15:6, in spite of considerable manuscript support for lithon, the correct reading ought to be linon ("made of flux"; see, e.g., Charles, 2:38, to whose few classical examples of linon add those of the papyri).

2.2. Cornerstone. Three basic OT texts speak of a cornerstone. The first is Psalm 118, which refers to 'eben l'rôš pinnah (LXX Ps 117:22, lithon eis kephalēn gōnias), "a stone for the head of a corner." Isaiah 28:16 reads 'eben pinnat (LXX: lithon akrogōniaion) "a cornerstone"; and Jeremiah 51:26 reads 'eben l'pinnah (LXX Jer 28:26, lithon eis gōnian), "a stone for a corner."

In all three cases the basic Hebrew word is pinnah ("corner"), showing that all three texts have the same meaning. The texts in Isaiah and Jeremiah clearly have foundational cornerstones in view. The referent of the passage from Psalms is uncertain, though it is understood as a foundational cornerstone by Matthew 21:42 and Luke 20:17 (Mk 12:10 is unclear). The function of such stones was to hold two walls together at their meeting point. This stone is spoken of in the singular not because there was only one such stone in every building but as representing its category and function.

Some scholars (e.g., Jeremias, TDNT 4:274-75) have tried to see in this stone "a keystone" or a 'capstone" placed over the entrance or the porch of a building. This is done on the basis of Symmachus's (who uses akrogōniaios) and the Syriac ("head of the building") translations of Psalm 118:22, Testament of Solomon and a few authors such as Hippolytus and Tertullian. Such a stone would strictly apply to a pyramid. Besides, Testament of Solomon speaks of "a gigantic cornerstone" lying around, which Solomon decided (eboulomēn) to put into new use, that is, as a capstone. Moreover, the use of akrogōniaios in Psalm 118:22 by Symmachus shows only that this term had the same sense as kephalē gōnias. This is proved by the fact that both the MT pinnat "corner(stone)" and the "cornerstone" (LXX akrogōniaios) of Isaiah 28:16 are equivalents. Jeremias's theory of a capstone is thus difficult to maintain at least for the biblical texts.

2.2.1. Acts. The expression kephalē gōnias ("head of the corner" or "cornerstone") occurs once at Acts 4:11 in a citation from Psalm 118 (LXX Ps 117:22). Following the application of this term to Jesus in the Gospel tradition, Luke has Peter quote this text in his apology before the Jewish leaders in support of his claim that the one who was put to death by the Jewish nation (note Luke's addition of hymas, "you") ironically was the one chosen and destined by God to be their Savior. Since there is no building imagery in this context, this text is quoted solely for the contrast it provides between the despisedness and rejection of the earthly Jesus by the Jewish authorities and the exaltation of the resurrected Christ by God himself.

2.2.2. 1 Peter. Here too the expression kephalē gōnias occurs only once at 1 Peter 2:7 in the quotation of Psalm 118:22, which is embedded between the quotations of Isaiah 28:16 and Isaiah 8:14. The depiction of Christ as a living stone (i.e., a foundational stone) and of the recipients of the letter as living stones built on him to constitute a spiritual temple* calls forth three OT texts.

In the first text the stone is a "cornerstone" (akrogōniaios; its only other use in the NT is Eph 2:20), on whom people may put their trust without fear of being let down. The second quotation, from Psalms, addresses those who refuse to believe, for whom the same stone becomes a kephalē gōnias. The question that arises is whether in this negative function the stone takes on a different character, for example, that of a keystone or capstone, the final stone of the building—in other words, its crown. Such an understanding would lend support to Jeremias's theory. That this is an unlikely interpretation is shown by the fact that the third quotation (Is 8:14), which is used in close conjunction with the psalm quotation, with both quotes making the same negative point (cf. kai, "and"), speaks of a "stumbling stone, a stone that makes them fall," that is, obviously a stone lying on the ground, not a capstone. Behind the "and" in the third quotation lies a Hebrew waw-explicativum ("and" in the sense of an elaboration of meaning). The text does not speak of two different stones or of one stone and one rock, one making people stumble and the other making them fall, but of one and the same stone: "a stone that causes people to stumble," that is, "a stone that makes them fall." Greek lithos and petra are here used synonymously and have the same referent (see Caragounis 1990, 14-16).

3. Usage in Early Christian Writers.

The combination of the texts found in Romans 9:33 and especially 1 Peter 2:4-8 probably implies that they had been brought together as christological proof-texts (i.e., Testimonia) and were so utilized even by other early Christian authors, such as Justin Martyr, who takes lithos (e.g., Justin Dial. Tryph. 34.2; 100.4; 114.2) and lithos akrogōniaios (Justin Dial. Tryph. 114.4; 126.1); as standing appellations of Christ.

Among the apostolic fathers* lithos occurs in the *Epistle of Barnabas (4 times), the Epistle to Diognetus (twice), Ignatius (once), Martyrdom of Polycarp (once) and the *Shepherd of Hermas (85 times). Akrogōniaios and kephalē gōnias occur once each in Barnabas 6.2 and Barnabas 6.4 respectively. The Epistle to Diognetus ridicules the heathen idols as made of stone (lithos) and other materials (Diogn. 2.2), which like a stone (lithos) are insensitive of what humans do with them (Diogn. 2.9). In the Martyrdom of Polycarp the pious regard Polycarp's* bones, which they collect, as more precious than precious stones (Mart. Pol. 18.2). Barnabas 6.2, 4 applies stone (lithos) to Christ in connection with his citation of Isaiah 28:16 and Psalm 118:22, where he also uses, uniquely in the apostolic fathers, the terms akrogōniaios and kephalē gōnias.

The line initiated implicitly by Ephesians 2:20-22 and explicitly by 1 Peter 2:4-5, whereby the believers are said to constitute stones built upon Christ to form the new temple, is taken up once by Ignatius (Ign. Eph. 9.1).

This imagery is exploited by Hermas in his Visions 3 (17 times) and especially in his Similitudes 9 (66 times), in which the church, compared to a tower (Herm. Sim. 9.13.1), is built of various kinds of stones, some taken from the sea, others from the dry land. Upon the rock (petra), which signifies Christ, are built four rows of stones (lithoi) taken from the deep: the first two rows represent two generations of righteous, the third prophets* and servants and the fourth row apostles* and teachers (Herm. Sim. 9.4.3). Upon this foundation are built all other stones (lithoi) taken from various mountains and fields and representing various kinds of stones (Herm. Sim. 9.4.4): square, rounded, and so on. The building includes many unworthy elements, which are tested by the Lord* and rejected (Herm. Sim. 9.8.1-7). Many of these, however, after further work done on them are made fit to be reinserted into the building. Thus the parable not only shows that the visible church does not correspond entirely with the church approved by its Master but also adumbrates the later doctrine of purgatory, offering a second chance of salvation* for those who have expiated their sins: "they will fit another place much more inferior, and even this after they have been tormented and fulfilled the days of their sins" (Herm. Vis. 3.7.6).

See also CHRISTOLOGY; TEMPLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. C. Caragounis, Peter and the Rock (BZNW 58; Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 1990); idem, "Petra," Theologisches Begriffslexicon, ed. K. Haacker and L. Coenen (2d ed.; Wuppertal: R. Brockhaus, forthcoming); R. H. Charles, The Revelation of St. John (2 vols.; ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1920) 1975-76; B. E. Gärtner, The Areopagus Speech and Natural Revelation (ASNU 21; Uppsala: Gleerup, 1955); J. Jeremias, "λίθος," TDNT 4:268-80; idem, "γωνία," TDNT 1:791-93; H. G. Link, E. Tiedike and C. C. Caragounis, "Lithos," Theologisches Begriffslexicon, ed. K. Haacker and L. Coenen (2d ed.; Wuppertal: R. Brockhaus, forthcoming); J. Lust, E. Eynikel and K. Hauspie, eds., A Greek-English Lexicon of the Septuagint (2 vols.; Stuttgart: Deutsche Bibelgesellschaft, 1992, 1996) vol. 1; J. R. Michaels, 1 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); W. Mundle and C. C. Caragounis, "Gōnia," Theologisches Begriffslexicon, ed. K. Haacker and L. Coenen (2d ed.; Wuppertal: R. Brockhaus, forthcoming). C. C. Caragounis

STRANGERS. See HOSPITALITY.

STRUCTURALISM AND DISCOURSE ANALYSIS

The field of NT studies is becoming increasingly interdisciplinary. As scholars bring the insights of other disciplines to bear on the interpretation of the NT, they are recognizing the inadequacies of the historical-critical method. Two disciplines recently brought to NT studies are structuralism and discourse analysis. Both are concerned with the final form of the NT texts and how the texts are constructed and read to generate meaning. They are valuable new tools which can supplement traditional methods of interpretation.

1. Structuralism
2. Discourse Analysis

1. Structuralism.

Structuralism is based on semiotic theories, which in turn are a development of structural linguistic theories. Structuralism deals with the implicit deep structures that generate a text rather than the surface structures of that text. It searches for the permanent and deep structures and categories that the mind uses to create order from its experience of the world. The method has been applied to virtually all disciplines in the sciences and humanities, especially literature, with narrative texts being the primary focus.

1.1. Origins. The work of the linguist Ferdinand de Saussure (1857-1913) is foundational to structuralism. Saussure argued that the meaning of a word is not found in its history (etymology), as was assumed at the time by linguists, but in its use in current language in relationship to other words. Language is a system of signs that are meaningful because of their interrelationships and their differences within structures. Linguistic systems with their structures and grammar are called langue. The langue constitutes the resources from which individual speech utterances or parole are drawn and derive their meaning. A piece of literature can also be considered a langue with its own conventions and system of meaning analogous to those of a language. These insights were incorporated by two groups of scholars developing semiotic theories. One group found in North America stresses the insight that language is a system of signs. The other group stresses that signs obtain meaning through their interrelations and differences.

M. W. Stibbe notes that Vladimir Propp (1928) was the first to apply structuralism to narrative (Russian fairy tales), discovering the typical structure with characters having a limited range of functions to perform in a wide-ranging possibility of manifestations. The anthropologist Claude Lévi-Strauss later applied Saussure's theories to myth. He discovered that myths are based on the permanent structure of oppositions and the desire to resolve these oppositions (e.g., immortal-mortal). Both Propp and Lévi-Strauss discovered the permanent structure through comparative analysis of and abstraction from the logical structure. A number of theories within structuralism have in turn generated a number of textual, exegetical strategies based upon them. Plot function (Propp) and resolution of oppositions (Lévi-Strauss) have been the focus of many studies of the NT. The following discusses structuralism in relation to written language and the NT.

1.2. Basic Assumptions. Structuralism assumes that a text is written in order to communicate or make sense to an audience. It presupposes that human communication, despite cultural differences, obeys similar rules throughout the centuries. Meaning does not reside in the text studied but is given to it by the cultural and intellectual systems in which it is found. A text has meaning if its features are recognized as different, and these features are interrelated in a structure. A word derives meaning from being recognized as being different from other words and from how it relates to words in its context and the language in general. Being recognized as different and in structure are also necessary for other text features such as sentences, paragraphs, plot, subplots and metaphors to have meaning. The focus of structuralism upon one or more of these features results in quite different analyses of the same text. A text has several dimensions that generate meaning, and the process of reading may produce several meanings. The context of the readers influences what meaning-producing dimensions of the text they focus upon and what they find to be its meaning.

Structuralism is mainly a synchronic method, approaching the language at a given moment in time, rather than a diachronic method, which examines a language over time. It assumes that the meaning of language differs acording to focus: upon its own meaning system (synchronic connections) or upon it as part of a historical process (diachronic connections). It directs NT studies to move from diachronic word study to synchronic word study, which accounts for the use of a word in a particular text at a particular time.

D. Patte points out that historical-critical methodologies are concerned with what is new in a text, how material has been transformed. The approach is diachronic—the sources and traditions are traced through time to a text from a particular time. What is significant is viewed as what is different about the text in relationship to what went before. Structuralism assumes that what is significant in a text is how features of a communication are interrelated in a language system, with one another in a text, with other systems in the environment (religions, political, social) and how the text engages its readers and produces meaning.

1.3. Focus and Methodology. In biblical studies structuralism has been applied mainly to literary analysis as begun by the French structuralists, especially the literary critic Roland Barthes. It reveals the mechanisms by which biblical writers convey their message. It explains how meaning is created in the text and often finds new meaning not revealed by traditional exegesis. Special focus is upon the structure or arrangement of the text, elements such as formulas, repetition, comparison, contrast and chiasmus.

The role of structuralism in determining the faith convictions of a biblical author is particularly noteworthy. It isolates the author's system of convictions, as well as those he is using that belong to that of his audience, in order to convince them to adopt his own. Since the system of convictions derives from the text itself, structuralism moves beyond the limitations of the history of religions school, which determines the religion of biblical texts by comparison to religious texts of the period.

Patte has generated a six-step method for performing a structural exegesis of the NT that combines several of the individual textual approaches within structuralism. Step 1 is the delineation of the discourse unit within a larger discourse. Usually the final form of the discourse is selected, assuming the results of text, source and redaction criticisms. Unlike other criticisms, which examine the complete text through the characteristics of the smaller units, structuralism begins with elucidating the characteristics of the text overall. It is a working assumption that smaller units reflect the basic characteristics of the text as a whole. The whole text is structured with an inverted parallelism between the introduction and the conclusion. The introduction presents a theme as problematic in terms of the audience's old knowledge, and the conclusion presents the theme as resolved according to the audience's new knowledge. This new knowledge is derived from the transformation that the text has wrought on the audience's old knowledge in the process of argumentation. This inverted parallelism between the introduction and conclusion of the text is repeated within each subunit, thus serving to indicate subunit boundaries. To illustrate, John 3:1-21, the story of Nicodemus, is a unit as defined by inverted parallelism. It begins with Nicodemus coming to Jesus at night (John 3:1) and ends with Jesus calling people to the light* (John 3:21). It begins with Nicodemus affirming Jesus as a teacher* come from God* (John 3:2) and ends affirming that God sent Jesus into the world* (John 3:16, 17, 19).

Step 2 is identifying explicit oppositions of actions that express each author's system of convictions. Truths that authors believe are self-evident shape the way they view themselves and the purpose and meaning of their lives. Convictions are often stated by stipulations of what they do not mean—as explicit oppositions between what they want to say and what they do not want to say. Explicit oppositions of actions directly express the author's convictions and are expressed in the text by two verbs of doing; one action is positive and the other negative from the point of view of the discourse. For example, in John 3:2 the opposition of actions is of Jesus doing signs (positive action) and of others being unable to do signs (negative action).

Step 3 is identifying the qualifications through which the opposed subjects (the characters that perform the opposed actions) are contrasted. This clarifies the first series of convictions underscored by the oppositions. These convictions are identified by what qualifications distinguish one person from all other persons, through negative comparisons (contrasts) and positive comparisons (correlations). In the opposition of actions in John 3:2, Jesus is able to perform signs because he is from God and God is with him, while others do not have these qualifications.

Step 4 is identifying the effects of opposed actions upon the receivers (the persons or things affected by the actions) and thus contrasting those opposed actions. This clarifies a second series of convictions underscored by the oppositions. It studies the contrasts between opposed receivers in each opposition of action and the correlations among either positive or negative receivers. In the case of John 3:2, receivers are not mentioned. This illustrates that not all steps will bear fruit for all oppositions of actions.

Step 5 is constructing the system of convictions of the author in the passage. It is using the convictions identified in steps 2-4 to demonstrate that the author's convictions are interrelated in categories posited by the theme, the inverted parallelism, and the oppositions of the passage and the work as a whole as discovered in step 1. These categories are about the divine, a mediator, religious leaders and believers, and their negative counterparts. All categories of convictions are organized according to a positive and negative hierarchies of values that are part of a shared pattern of the discourse unit and the discourse as a whole. This pattern reflects the author's way of perceiving human experience.

Step 6 is identifying the ways the author uses the theme of the discourse to communicate his or her pattern of convictions to the readers in order to have them accept this pattern as their own way of perceiving meaningful human experience. These convictions are usually expressed in terms of the readers' old views in order to facilitate their acceptance of them. This step is the typical starting point for historical-critical methods. This includes examination of metaphors and figurative language.

1.4. Strengths and Weaknesses of the Method. Structuralism is another methodology to add to the arsenal of the tools of biblical interpretation. It has helped us to see the role of oppositions in biblical narrative and the function of the elements of plot. Familiar texts can be seen from fresh vantage points. However, Stibbe points out five weaknesses of structuralism that need to be kept in mind when one uses the methodology in biblical studies. (1) It ignores the historical-critical method and its findings. It stresses the final form of the text to the exclusion of the historical and diachronic features of biblical narrative and the referential dimensions of the narrative. (2) The classifications used in structuralism are often arbitrary, especially when labeling binary oppositions and genre components. (3) The interpretative models employed are not as universal or as easily applied as is often claimed. (4) The characters and their relationships and other details of the narrative are often abstracted and obscured. (5) The anti-authorial stance of structuralism stands in opposition to the desire in biblical studies to discuss theological motivation and authorial intention.

1.5. Poststructuralism. There are new methodologies that can be labeled poststructuralism. These do not assume that the text contains a system of meaning that it seeks to impart but that the readers are themselves bringing meaning to the text from their own linguistic systems. Reading is a creative, interactive enterprise as the reader brings expectations and meaning to the text (cf. reader-response criticism).

2. Discourse Analysis.

Discourse analysis is the study and interpretation of spoken and written human communication. It is interested in the role of speaker or writer, oral communication or written text and the hearer or reader in the communicative process. It asks, How is language used? and How are discourses and texts produced and processed? It is a synthetic discipline within modern linguistics that seeks to unite many of the other disciplines of linguistics, such as semantics, pragmatics and sociolinguistics. In its quest to study and interpret language, discourse analysis is also interdisciplinary, seeking the aid of such other disciplines as reader-response criticism, anthropology, rhetoric,* semiotics, sociology and literary criticism. Once discourse analysis was confined to oral communication and text linguistics was confined to written communication, but the distinction is no longer made. Now both oral and written communication are discussed under the domain of discourse analysis.

2.1. Origins. Discourse analysis has emerged since the 1960s and 1970s and has only recently begun to be used as a methodology in NT studies. J. B. Green points out that the discipline is founded upon several shifts in hermeneutics. One is the shift away from the historical questions that lie behind the text to focus on the text itself as an act of communication. Historical questions are still asked (e.g., Are traditions used in the composition of the work?), but the focus is now on the function of the text (e.g., What is the function of the traditions being used in the text?). Another shift is the recognition that a discourse has multiple readings depending upon the readers and their reading situations. Although these readings are constrained by the discourse, they emerge in the interplay of the reader and the discourse. Finally, discourse is understood not just as something to be deciphered and understood but also, through embedded factors, as defining relationships and social positions (e.g., wealth, authority, solidarity) that motivate the audience to achieve certain aims.

There is as yet no single methodology or agreed-upon terminology in discourse analysis. Any discussion of discourse analysis will act more like a photograph of it at this stage in its development than as a definitive portrait of a mature discipline. The following explanation is such a photograph, and the discussion is oriented to written texts.

2.2. Basic Assumptions. Green highlights three main assumptions of discourse analysis. First, communication is social, transcending words and sentences. Communication is embedded in ongoing social interaction and cannot be interpreted apart from the context of that social interaction. Second, language is always embedded in culture and assumed common knowledge and experience. Cultural assumptions embedded in the text and those brought today to the text must be analyzed to understand communication. Third, human beings strive to make sense of their world. Discourse analysis assumes that communication is meant to be coherent and relevant and that readers try to make sense of the text. It seeks to understand how language is used to create a coherent communication.

2.3. Focus and Methodology. Discourse analysis moves beyond the traditional concern of linguistics with the sentence level. Rather it is concerned with the use of the smallest unit of language (morphemes), their use in constructing larger wholes (words, clauses, sentences, paragraphs, entire discourses) and the interrelationship of all the units; that is, with micro- and macrostructural analysis. Discourse analysis investigates the role of the writer in the production of discourse. How did the speaker or writer create the discourse? How did the original hearer or reader comprehend, process and respond to the discourse? Discourse analysis poses many challenges to the preoccupation of traditional NT studies with interpreting words to the neglect of the function of Greek in discourse.

S. E. Porter notes that in investigating language in use, discourse analysis combines the three main areas of linguistic analysis: semantics, syntax and pragmatics. Semantics pertains to the language forms conveying meaning (what the form means). Syntax entails the arrangement of language forms into meaningful units to form a cohesive piece of communication (how the forms create meaning together). Pragmatics is concerned with the meaning of language forms in linguistic contexts, between the discourse and shared, unarticulated presuppositions (what the speaker means when using the forms). Discourse must be analyzed in its social context to assess its social functions. This concern also ties the discipline with sociolinguistics, which investigates how language use fulfills social objectives.

Interrelated levels of reality influence the linguistic choices made in producing and comprehending discourse: intertext or context of culture, discourse situation or context of situation and cotext. Intertext or context of culture is the larger linguistic frame of reference on which a discourse consciously or unconsciously draws its meaning. It is where presuppositions and the reference of a discourse reside. This context of culture includes the standard linguistic code shared by a group of people, variety of language or dialects shared by various subgroups and idolect of a particular author. Readers bring assumptions and experiences drawn from the context of culture that allow the actualization of a text in the process of reading. When one analyzes the NT, knowledge of the oral, literary and rhetorical conventions of the first century is essential.

A second level is the discourse situation or context of situation, the sociohistorical realities in which a discourse is set. It is the moment of a communication act when the discourse was originally written and the time when it is read today. Thus discourse analysis is concerned with the multiple levels of communication and social interaction. This might include the communication occurring between characters within a discourse, the communication between the author and the audience receiving the discourse and the communication between the discourse and the modern audience. By reading a text the modern reader also generates meaning. Discourse analysis concerns how the use of language invites this participation, how meaning is generated in the reading and how the reader is shaped by the reading.

A third level is the cotext or the string of linguistic material in which a text is set (e.g., the relation of a sentence to a paragraph). It refers to previous discourse material written or read, which influences how material further along in the discourse is written or read. This includes giving prominence to some material (staging) that helps the reader comprehend what a discourse is about. For example, a formal opening introducing major themes to be developed in a discourse leads the reader to expect to find such themes in the process of reading.

2.4. Cohesion and Constituent Analysis. A key concern of discourse analysis is cohesion, the relationships within a unit of discourse and the identification of the boundaries and relationships between all these units within the discourse as a whole. G. H. Guthrie applies text linguistics (discourse analysis) to Hebrews* and gives one of the clearest discussions of the methodology. He is concerned with the author's selection of individual words, grammar and style to develop a theme into cola (grammatical structure with subject and predicate) and paragraphs. In order to understand the thematic development of Hebrews, Guthrie performs a lexical, syntactical and rhetorical analysis of the cola that make up the paragraphs. To understand the entire discourse he analyzes the relationship between the paragraphs that divide the discourse into smaller embedded discourses. These embedded discourses constitute the macrostructure of the discourse.

To isolate the paragraphs and embedded discourses, Guthrie investigates the signals that mark the beginnings and endings of units. Cohesion shifts (cohesion is a property of a text that gives it unity) and inclusion (the use of similar wording at the beginning and ending of a unit that acts like bookends to the intermediate material) mark these beginnings and endings. At the paragraph level cohesion is achieved by a variety of factors: genre (because a genre is established when literature consistently exhibits certain characteristics); topic or thematic development in a group of cola; connection or interdependence between cola, especially conjunctions; the consistent use of the same subject, verb tense, person or number; reference of the relation between an element of the text to something else in the text, especially pronominals (e.g., she, her, hers); lexical cohesion (the repetition of the same or similar lexical forms); and temporal and spatial indicators referring to the same time frame and location. Cohesion shifts and inclusion are also indications of cohesion in the larger embedded units of the macrostructure.

Once the units of a discourse are isolated, discourse analysis investigates the connection of these units as embedded discourse at the macrolevel. This interrelationship is indicated by inclusions comprising many discourse units, lexical and pronominal cohesion between units and transition devices such as hook words, reiterations and summaries. Once the macrolevel is delineated, the question remains as to why the units are arranged in their present position. On the macrolevel, discourse has an introduction, points that develop the argument, a peak or climax and a conclusion.

Investigating the macrostructure of Hebrews, L. L. Neely created the following outline of the constituent structure of Hebrews: thematic introduction (Heb 1:1-4), point 1 (embedded discourse 1, Heb 1:5—4:13), point 2 (embedded discourse 2, Heb 4:14—10:18), peak (embedded discourse 3, Heb 10:19—13:19), conclusion (Heb 13:20-21) and formalized closing (Heb 13:22-25). Guthrie has refined this outline with cohesion analysis and established the boundaries within the embedded discourse units and the transitions used to connect them into embedded units.

2.5. Schools of Discourse Analysis. Although it is difficult to categorize and although the works of major scholars overlap categories, Porter defines four models in the understanding and practice of discourse analysis in NT studies. The first is the North American school epitomized by the Summer Institute of Linguistics (SIL) at Dallas, which concentrates upon discourse analysis as related to biblical translation and the level of sentence grammar but has neglected work on the theory of discourse analysis in favor of textual analysis alone. The second is the English and Australian school, which stresses that language is a network of systems or groupings of choices that give it meaning. The third school is the continental European school, whose practice is wide-ranging and lacks a single model. It is particularly known by the model practiced in Scandinavian NT studies. This model focuses on the macrostructure of the text and tends to divide analysis into syntax, semantics and pragmatics. The fourth is the South African school, which has had a large influence on the theoretical and applicational levels. It is greatly influenced by the work of J. P. Louw, who concentrates on the level of the cola and their interconnections. However, there is no comprehensive theory underlying the work of this school.

See also HERMENEUTICS; NARRATIVE CRITICISM; RHETORIC, RHETORICAL CRITICISM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. Barthes et al., eds., Structural Analysis and Biblical Exegesis: Interpretational Essays (PTMS 3; Pittsburgh: Pickwick, 1974); D. A. Black, ed., Linguistics and New Testament Interpretation: Essays on Discourse Analysis (Nashville: Broadman, 1992); G. Brown and G. Yule, Discourse Analysis (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983); P. Cotterell and M. Turner, Linguistics and Biblical Interpretation (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1989); M. Coulthard, An Introduction to Discourse Analysis (2d ed.; London: Longman, 1985); J. B. Green, "Discourse Analysis and New Testament Interpretation" in Hearing the New Testament: Strategies for Interpretation, ed. J. B. Green (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans; Carlisle: Paternoster, 1995) 175-96; G. H. Guthrie, The Structure of Hebrews: A Text-Linguistic Analysis (NovTSup 73; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1994); C. Lévi-Strauss, Structural Anthropology (New York: Basic, 1963); J. P. Louw, "Discourse Analysis and the Greek New Testament," BT 24 (1973) 101-18; L. L. Neely, "A Discourse Analysis of Hebrews," OPTT 3-4 (1987) 1-146; D. Nunan, Introducing Discourse Analysis (Harmondsworth, England: Penguin, 1993); D. Patte, "Structural Criticism" in To Each Its Own Meaning: An Introduction to Biblical Criticisms and Their Application, ed. S. L. McKenzie and S. R. Haynes (Louisville, KY: Westminster/John Knox, 1993) 153-70; idem, Structural

Exegesis for New Testament Critics (GBS; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1990); S. E. Porter, "Discourse Analysis and New Testament Studies: An Introductory Survey" in Discourse Analysis and Other Topics in Biblical Greek, ed. S. E. Porter and D. A. Carson (JSNTSup 113; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995) 14-35; V. Propp, Morphology of the Folktale (Austin: University of Texas Press, 1968); J. T. Reid, "Modern Linguistics and the New Testament: A Basic Guide to Theory, Terminology and Literature" in Approaches to New Testament Study, ed. S. E. Porter and D. Tombs (JSNTSup 120; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995) 222-65; F. de Saussure, Course in General Linguistics (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1966); M. W. Stibbe, "Structuralism" in A Dictionary of Biblical Interpretation, ed. R. J. Coggins and J. L. Houlden (London: SCM; Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1990) 650-55; M. S. Stubbs, Discourse Analysis: The Sociolinguistic Analysis of Natural Language (Language in Society 4; Chicago: University of Chicago; Oxford: Blackwell, 1983); T. A. van Dijk, ed., Handbook of Discourse Analysis (4 vols.; London: Academic Press, 1985). D. F. Watson

SUFFERING

Certain NT books are more focused on the subject of suffering than are others. The authors of 1 Peter and Revelation are intensely interested in understanding and interacting with the problem of suffering in their communities. Since suffering is a central focus of these two works, their contribution will be developed at length. The theme of suffering plays an important but somewhat secondary role in Acts, Hebrews and James. In other works, such as 1, 2 and 3 John, 2 Peter and Jude, suffering is rarely mentioned. Beyond the NT, however, the early church fathers continued to theologize in the area of suffering, especially developing the theme with respect to martyrdom.

1. 1 Peter and Revelation
2. Acts, Hebrews and James
3. Early Church Fathers

1. 1 Peter and Revelation.

1.1. 1 Peter. The apostle* Peter probably wrote to the churches of Asia Minor in the early to mid-60s, during the reign of Nero (A.D. 54-68; see 1 Peter). Like the writer of Revelation, Peter uses the encrypted "Babylon" (i.e., Rome) as a backdrop to at least some of his concern (1 Pet 5:13; cf. Rev. 17:9-10). However, the suffering described in 1 Peter is not caused by official state persecution* or by any statewide program authorized by the Roman government. The reference to Babylon* is likely a way for the author to identify with the recipients in their struggles, rather than to define their situation.

Instead the plight of the Asian community is primarily social in nature. The Christians are referred to as "exiles of the dispersion" (parepidēmoi diasporas, 1 Pet 1:1), as "aliens" (paroikoi, 1 Pet 2:11) and "strangers" or "exiles" (parepidēmoi, 1 Pet 2:11). These Christians suffer the lot of outcasts and displaced persons in the very towns and cities where they lived and worked. As undesirable "resident aliens" they lacked the status and security that they used to enjoy. They had become the object of gossip, ridicule and social ostracism: "the hatred of the human race" (Tacitus Ann. 15.44.28). Their situation was one of homelessness and social disenfranchisement, instigated by those people the readers would encounter every day in their attempt to make a living. A dramatic change in their lifestyle—both withdrawing from immoral activities of their pagan past (1 Pet 2:11; 4:3-4) and a new quest for doing what was "right" and "good" (1 Pet 2:12, 14-15, 20; 4:14-15)—made them a vulnerable target for retaliation. 1 Peter does not describe a traumatic or climactic moment of acute suffering but the kind of suffering that wears people down because of its daily pressure (see Beker).

To these marginalized Christians Peter brings a message of hope that mirrors their sociological dilemma. He deals with their suffering as "aliens" or "homeless" (paroikoi) by finding them a new "home" (oikos, 1 Pet 2:5) in the covenant* community. To those now without a people, "strangers" (parepidēmoi), he grants a sense of belonging within the new "people" of God* (laos, 1 Pet 2:9-10; see Elliott). For readers sensing rejection, the new "house" or "home" is built upon the cornerstone of one who like themselves was "rejected by people but chosen by God." Along with this cornerstone, they too become the stones* out of which God is building a new temple* and people or house (1 Pet 2:4-10). The new community then adds a dimension of much-needed stability in the lives of these dispossessed people.

Within this new community christology* and slavery* are closely interwoven with suffering.

The Asian churches appear to have been composed of many individuals from a lower socioeconomic status, since the household code* addresses primarily the underside of the social hierarchy and gives an unusual prominence to slaves (compared with other NT household codes). In this respect Christ's* role as Suffering Servant or slave (1 Pet 2:21-25, a portrait drawn from Isaiah's Suffering Servant) becomes the paradigm for all believers. The material about slavery along with Jesus' servantlike response to suffering (1 Pet 2:18-25) establishes a pattern for all believers within the community: exposure to harsh owners typifies the vulnerability of all to the hostilities of the "Gentiles"* (1 Pet 2:18; cf. 1 Pet 2:11-12; 3:13, 16; 4:4, 12, 16; 5:8-9); the possibility of slaves suffering though innocent is characteristic of the experience of all believers (1 Pet 2:19-20; cf. 1 Pet 1:6; 3:14, 17; 4:1, 13, 16, 19; 5:9-10); slaves as well as all Christians are instructed to suffer with clear consciences* (1 Pet 2:19; cf. 1 Pet 3:16, 21) and to do good (1 Pet 2:20; cf. 1 Pet 2:14-15; 3:6, 17; 4:19); both slaves and the congregation at large needed to "entrust themselves" to God (1 Pet 2:23; cf. 1 Pet 4:19); and both are "called" to act in the nonretaliatory manner like the christological Servant, who brought blessing* and healing* rather than exchanging insult for insult (1 Pet 2:21-22; cf. 1 Pet 3:9).

1 Peter adopts a bifocal strategy toward suffering. A future orientation and perspective motivates persistence in the face of suffering. Even if death should be the readers' fate (1 Pet 4:6), they have the assurance* of being "brought to God" along the path of Christ's vindication (1 Pet 3:18-22). Since justice and judgment* will ultimately fall upon the disobedient (1 Pet 1:7-8; 2:23; 4:17), the believers should entrust themselves to God and continue to do good (1 Pet 2:23; 4:19). Yet, as suggested above, the setting is one of social conflict in which only a few might encounter suffering as severe as death. Most of the readers would endure abuse from an everyday, common occurrence of social tension. As a result an other-worldly perspective (though clearly evident) is somewhat subdued and a present perspective has considerable room for development. There are hopeful possibilities in this immediate world. For instance, suffering offers the believer the opportunity for faith's refinement (1 Pet 1:6-7) as well as something of a missionary opportunity in the present. Suffering for "the name of Christ" (1 Pet 4:14) elicits paradoxical joy* and praise,* since one's faith is being refined in a manner that demonstrates its lasting quality (1 Pet 1:7-9; 4:16). Righteous suffering thus acts as a sign that the "Spirit of glory" rests upon believers (1 Pet 4:14) and they have found God's favor and blessing (1 Pet 2:20). Yet beyond these community borders, suffering functions redemptively in the lives of the outside, antagonistic society. A loving, nonretaliatory response to those inflicting the abuse (as well as the pursuit of what is good and commendable) should quiet, perplex, shame and possibly even bring about the salvation* of unbelievers (1 Pet 2:12, 15; 3:1-2, 9, 16; cf. 1 Pet 2:24-25; 3:18). Suffering then produces an internal and external witness* to the grace* of God in the present.

Since this present-redemptive feature to suffering is so strikingly different from what one finds in Revelation, it is worth highlighting some of the key texts. As the prologue to the entire household code, 1 Peter 2:11-12 significantly shapes the rest of the epistle. The way that the Asian community responded to social conflict was viewed as having a profound influence upon unbelievers: "As aliens and strangers . . . conduct your lives honorably among the Gentiles, so that, though they malign you as evildoers, they may see your good deeds and glorify God in the day of his visitation [eschatological appearing and judgment]." Although it is an interpretive crux, the expression "glorify God in the day of his visitation" should probably be understood as a conversion formula in view of its source connections to the Jesus tradition* with similar themes (cf. Mt 5:16) and its verbal tie to 1 Peter 3:2, where the unbelieving husband is won to the Lord through "seeing/intently watching" (epopteusantes) his wife's "lifestyle" (anastrophēn). Both terms appear in the prologue of 1 Peter 2:11-12. Along similar lines, the Christian's response to a hostile environment has the potential to "silence the ignorance of the foolish" (1 Pet 2:15), to "put them to shame" (1 Pet 3:16) and to create a certain "attractiveness" about Christianity (1 Pet 2:12; 3:8-9). It is likely that even the christological material was intended to be read within this "community mission" focus and not strictly from a soteriological perspective. As with Christ, the community's "stripes" and "wounds" in one sense also bring healing to the world around them (1 Pet 2:23-24; cf. 1 Pet 3:18).

1.2. Revelation. Although the date of Revelation is contested (see Revelation, Book of), the prophet* John may well have written his apocalypse* toward the end of Domitian's reign (81-96). The exact date and background are not essential for understanding his theology of suffering. Yet it is necessary to reach some kind of conclusion about the work in relationship to its political milieu. Certain recent studies have argued that the "dark images" of Nero and Domitian as portrayed by early writers such as Tacitus, Suetonius, Dio Chrysostom and Juvenal are entirely distorted (see Thompson) or that the political crisis in Revelation is more perceived than real (see Collins). L. L. Thompson, for example, goes so far as to suggest that John himself was on the island of Patmos by his own initiative as part of a missionary journey to evangelize the area, not because he had been banished there by political leaders. Such an understanding of John's opening words, "I was on the island of Patmos because of the word of God and the testimony of Jesus" (Rev 1:9), is rather dubious. A comparison of his rationale with the language of other texts places it in a negative context of persecution from external or political sources: the souls under the altar had been slain "because of the word of God and the testimony of Jesus" (Rev 6:9); the reigning saints of Revelation 20 had been beheaded "because of their testimony for Jesus and because of the word of God" (Rev 20:4). Most likely John was exiled for the same reason that these other Christians had lost their lives. The setting on Patmos creates an immediate affinity between John's life and the suffering circumstances of his audience.

While few NT scholars would lessen the political-religious conflict in Revelation to this extent, these studies have helped bring some balance to the portraits of terror that are frequently developed on a popular level. It is fair to say that Nero and Domitian have been somewhat caricatured by both the secular writers of their day and by Christians. The bloodbath portrayal of suffering in Revelation is a dramatic image and is more descriptive of collective, community pain felt from hostile actions taken toward certain individuals within the community. Also, it may have been escalated from historical reality as a way of fusing their present situations with eschatological* expectations. Yet, as with the case of most apocalyptic literature, there seems to have been a significant and real threat (and on a political level in the case of Revelation) in order to account for this work and its images, even if the apocalyptic portrait goes beyond the historical reality.

Even with this guarded approach, the intensity and scope of the suffering in Revelation clearly transcends that of 1 Peter. The hostility in Revelation extends beyond the social plight of 1 Peter by taking on political and religious proportions. From the perspective of the Apocalypse, much of the persecution was due to a political movement to enforce the cult of emperor* worship. In Pergamum, the official center for emperor worship in Asia (comparable to Rome in the West; see Hemer), Antipas was put to death for not renouncing his faith (Rev 2:13). Other Christians appear to have been forced into economic hardship (Rev 2:9; cf. Rev 13:17), imprisoned (Rev 2:10) or slain for their faith (Rev 2:10; 6:9; 13:15; 18:24; 20:4; cf. Rev 2:10; 11:7-10) as a result of their refusal to participate in the emperor cults (cf. Rev 13:17; 14:9, 11; 15:2; 16:2; 19:20; 20:4). This political persecution was compounded by a growing antagonism from the Jewish population toward Christianity. Judaism* enjoyed a privileged status under Roman rule, so that Jews were sheltered from the demands for emperor worship. Christians were vulnerable to hostile Jews who found it an opportune time to shut the doors of the synagogue* on the followers of Christ (Rev 2:9; 3:9; cf. Rev 14:1-17).

The severity of persecution described in Revelation produces a markedly different theology of suffering. While 1 Peter responds to suffering in a bifocal manner, combining the hope of coming glory* with a hopefulness about present possibilities, Revelation's perspective is almost exclusively one-sided. John directs his readers to a unifocal and other-worldly hope found in the eschaton. His readers were to await the "soon" coming of the righteous* judge (Rev 19:11-16), the prospect of reigning with Jesus (Rev 20:4-6), the finality of God's judgment (Rev 19:11-15) and the rebirth of the old order into a "new heavens and earth" (Rev 21:1). Christians still act as witnesses for Jesus (Rev 1:2, 9; 6:9; 12:17; 19:10; 20:4). However, unlike 1 Peter, there is little optimism about the missionary outcome of their witness. The happy prospect of conversion resigns itself to the hardness and lack of repentance* of unbelievers (Rev 9:20-21; 16:9, 11; cf. Rev 11:10; 12:17). Antagonism has reach the point of open and antithetical conflict. Instead of blessing, curses fall upon the hostile society, and the reader enters into jubilant applause at the destruction of Babylon (Rev 18:1—19:8; cf. Rev 11:5).

Accordingly, the themes of cosmic transcendence and eschatological reversal dominate John's approach to suffering. The believer's individual suffering fuses with a much larger cosmic battle between Christ and Satan,* between good angels* and evil demons, between old-world Babylon and the new Zion (see Jerusalem). Christians are encouraged to endure* patiently the present crisis in view of a better world in the future, a world in which their fortunes will be different. For example, in the present Satan is enthroned and Christians are being thrown into prison (Rev 2:10, 13). Ultimately this picture will be reversed: one day Christians will reign with Christ and Satan will be imprisoned (Rev 20:1-6). Whether John envisioned this happening at the death of a believer or as a distinct eschatological reality (forging another epoch in salvation history) should not hinder contemporary readers from seeing the dramatic reversal in fortune. Similarly, while now the saints lament and cry out in anguish (Rev 6:10), in a future day God will "wipe away every tear," and "there will be no more death or mourning or crying or pain" (Rev 21:4; cf. Rev 7:15-17). Likewise the enduring wealth of eschatological Zion compared with the fall of opulent Babylon (Rev 17:4; 18:3, 7, 9-20; 21:11-21) would have clearly spoken to those readers who in their testimony for Jesus had lost property and wealth (Rev 2:10; cf. Rev 3:17).

Due to the book's apocalyptic framework, Christian suffering and martyrdom* in Revelation are typically spoken of as passive. Since the world is empty of redemptive possibilities, suffering becomes a passive form of victimization (see Beker). However, such a perspective has a growing number of challengers (see Boesak, Reddish). Suffering for the apocalyptists was passive only in the sense that hope for reforming this world had dwindled. It is probably more accurate to see suffering within Revelation as an act of open defiance against the social norms and political structures. Martyrdom was the supreme demonstration of rejecting the values of this present world and embracing those of the coming world and its new political structure. In that coming world a "slain lamb"* sits on the throne.

2. Acts, Hebrews and James.

2.1. Acts. The book of Acts* provides an invaluable glimpse into the experience of suffering of the early church.* The range of suffering experienced by Christians included being threatened (Acts 4:21, 29), conspired against (Acts 9:23, 29; 14:5), mocked and maligned (Acts 13:45; 17:32; 18:6), arrested and put in jail (Acts 4:3; 6:12; 8:3), placed in stocks or chains (Acts 16:24; 26:29; 28:20), brought before councils and courts (Acts 5:27; 22:30—23:10; 24:1; 25:23), falsely charged (Acts 25:7), flogged (Acts 5:40; 16:23; 22:19, 24), vilified by crowds (Acts 19:23-41; 21:27-36), forced to flee homes and relocate (Acts 8:1, 4; 11:19), displaced from synagogues (Acts 9:2; 22:19; 26:11; 18:7; cf. Acts 18:17), expelled from cities (Acts 13:50), stoned to death (Acts 7:54-60; 14:19; cf. Acts 26:10), and beheaded by the sword (Acts 12:1-2). Most of the persecution appears to have been motivated by jealousy from the Jewish community leaders and by a zeal to protect their religious traditions (Acts 13:45; 17:5; 22:3-5). At times the pagan cults were also threatened by the spread of Christianity and so responded with hostility (Acts 19:19, 23-27; cf. Acts 16:19). In contrast to these religious institutions, however, any threat to Roman political structures is minimized. Luke intentionally counters such an idea by presenting it as a "trumped-up" charge by the Jews (Acts 17:7; 25:8). Unlike Revelation, in Acts the relationship between Rome and Christians is a compatible one. Roman structures protect the preachers of the gospel from attack and facilitate their mission (Acts 17:1-9; 18:12-17; 19:23-41; 21:30-32; 23:12-35; cf. Acts 24—28; see Talbert 1983).

Luke portrays suffering as an integral part of Christian mission and particularly as a catalyst for the expansion of the gospel. In the book of Acts suffering repeatedly follows ministry* and mission.* In turn suffering provides a new opportunity for ministry. Through persecution the gospel spreads from Jerusalem to Samaria* (Acts 8:4-24): the scattering of Christians was a significant step forward in the mission of the early church. As I. H. Marshall aptly observes, "One might say that it required persecution to make them [Christians] fulfill the implicit command in [Acts] 1:8" (Marshall, 152). In a similar way persecution and hardship causes the spread of the gospel to Rome* (Acts 20:17—28:31). Paul and his coworkers move on to other places as opposition arises (Acts 13:48-52; 14:5-6, 19-20; 16:25-40; 17:10, 13-15). This combination of suffering and mission exposes an underlying irony in Luke's theology. Far from dampening the spread of the gospel, persecution and suffering facilitated its geographical expansion.

Through suffering the church enters into the suffering mission of Jesus. For example, the language from Isaiah's texts about the Suffering Servant builds an affinity between the mission of Jesus and his followers (Acts 8:32-33; 26:23; cf. Acts 9:15-16; 13:47; 26:16-18; 28:28). In their suffering Christians extend the servant mission of Christ, especially in bringing the gospel to the Gentile world. The literary parallel between Luke and Acts also unites Jesus' suffering and Paul's suffering. Like Jesus, who "must" travel to Jerusalem and suffer (Lk 9:51; cf. Lk 13:22; 17:11; 18:31; 19:11), so too Paul "must" travel to Rome and suffer (Acts 20:22-23; 21:4, 12; 23:11; cf. Acts 25:12, 25; 26:32; 27:1, 24; 28:14, 16). The early church in effect completes the extended mission of Christ through its suffering. Its suffering is no more an accident than was Jesus' suffering. This affinity between Christ and his church's suffering is further illustrated in the response of Jesus to Saul on the Damascus road: "I am Jesus, whom you are persecuting" (Acts 9:4-5; cf. Acts 26:14-15). The ascended Lord* continues to suffer in and through his people's sufferings (a rather profound insight into the mysterious waters of suffering; see Bauckham, Moltmann).

2.2. Hebrews. If we accept the traditional view that this letter* addresses a movement from Judaism to Christianity, then the primary hardship on the Christians in Hebrews* is having to leave their cherished traditions and sociorelligious roots. The role that suffering plays in trials and learning obedience* both for Christ and by implication for his people (Heb 2:18; 4:15; 5:8) should probably be read against this background of pain related to the departure from Judaism (e.g., the loss of participation in the religious festivals; Heb 9:10; 13:9-10). Beyond these central considerations, however, the external pressures appear to be a minimal component in the readers' crisis of faith. The writer does not place resistance to persecution at the center of his appeal (simple neglect by some and willful abandonment by others are only secondarily related to persecution). In earlier days the community had happily faced occasional insults, imprisonment and confiscation of property (Heb 11:32-34; cf. Heb 11:26, 35-38) and had helped each other through these difficult times (Heb 11:34; 13:3; cf. Heb 6:10). They are now encouraged to continue along this path. As Jesus endured the cross "for the joy set before him," the readers should likewise persevere in their present hardships, which have not reached the point of death (Heb 12:2-4), and function as loving discipline to ensure their legitimacy as God's children (Heb 12:5-12; see Sonship).

2.3. James. The epistle of James* adds yet another perspective to the suffering experienced by the early church. Along the lines of 1 Peter, suffering is related to social factors. However, in James the focus is further narrowed to socioeconomic injustice against the poor. Poverty-stricken readers were suffering from withheld wages (Jas 5:4), legal exploitation (Jas 2:6), social humiliation (Jas 2:1-4), hunger and the lack of adequate clothing (Jas 2:15). Unlike 1 Peter, the suffering in James is depicted more in economic than religious terms. It is possible that some of their suffering was due to religious conviction (Jas 2:7 is ambiguous). However, the struggle in James seems to be largely attributed to economic factors: a struggle between the poor as a class of people who were vulnerable to abuse by the wealthy. In order to show God's affinity with the poor, the author broadly depicts the wealthy class as "wicked oppressors" and the poor as "pious sufferers" (a poverty-piety equation rooted in Judaism; see Davids). Yet the church included some wealthy people (Jas 2:2, 16; 4:13; cf. the examples of wealthy Abraham* and Job), and obviously many poor lived outside the church community and would have been vulnerable to the same kind of abuse.

James responds to this economic injustice in two ways. Instilling a future hope, the community must wait patiently for the eschatological judge to bring justice and a reversal of fortunes (Jas 5:7-9; cf. Jas 1:9-11). However, he directs any present reformation toward the believing community. Within the church the poor are to be elevated in status and provided for in a tangible and generous manner as an expression of true religion (Jas 1:27; 2:14-26); the wealthy are not to be shown favoritism or held in higher esteem by the congregation (Jas 2:1-13). In sum, the hoped-for justice of the eschaton penetrates the community as a present reality.

3. Early Church Fathers.

In the early fathers a theology of suffering emerges with a marked emphasis on martyrdom.* One finds some discussion of social conflict as "strangers and aliens" along the lines of 1 Peter (Herm. Sim. 3.1.9-2.2) and even the suffering of humanity as part of a sin-cursed world (Barn. 6.9). However, an interest in martyrdom eclipses all other discussion about suffering. Early martyrs became the supreme standard and example of suffering for all Christians to follow even though their suffering may not be as severe (Pol. Phil. 9.1-2; Mart. Pol. 2.1; 3.1—5.2; 17.3; 1 Clem. 6.2). Accordingly, various martyrs are named and spoken of as heroes within the Christian communities, both men (e.g., Ignatius,* Zosimus, Rufus, Polycarp,* Justin) and women (e.g., Danaids and Dirkai, mythic names in 1 Clem. 6.1 that would cover a group of courageous women; see Hall). Aside from a status as role models, their place in the eschaton is significantly elevated. Martyrs are seated at the right hand of God, whereas other believers sit on the left (Herm. Vis. 3.1.9—3.2.2).

At its core, martyrdom was imitation and participation in the sufferings of Christ. Since Christ suffered for the martyr, the martyr is ready and glad to die for Christ. During the execution Christ comes and talks with the suffering believer (Mart. Pol. 2.2; 17.2). Through death the martyr enters into the sufferings of Christ in the most profound sense (Pol. Phil. 7.2; 9.2; Mart. Pol. 1.6-7; 6.2). On a number of occasions Ignatius argues that only death as a martyr would show him and others to be "true disciples" of Christ (Ign. Eph. 1.2; Ign. Magn. 9.1; Ign. Rom. 4.2; 5.1-2; 6.1-3; Ign. Pol. 7.1). As with Christ's death, the death of the martyr was an acceptable and pleasing sacrifice* to God (Ign. Rom. 2.2; Mart. Pol. 14.1-2). In view of the affinity between Christ's suffering and the martyr's plight, there was an added pragmatic need to establish the heretical nature of Docetism,* which taught that Christ's suffering was merely a semblance of reality (Ign. Trall. 10.1; Ign. Smyrn. 2.1).

The martyr lived out a "witness" toward the hostile realms. Whether burning at the stake or being torn apart by animals, the martyrs' deaths functioned as dramatic testimonies to their faith in Christ, which at times led some observers to convert (Mart. Pol. 1.2; 2.2; 7.3; Justin Apol. II 12). Far from being passive, martyrdom was viewed as a strong protest against the emperor and a statement of allegiance to the ascended and reigning Christ. In an act of civil disobedience, the Christian refused to denounce Christ and scoffed at Roman gods and political structures (Mart. Pol. 9.1—12.3; 21.1). As in Revelation, this earthly conflict entered into the larger cosmic battle between Christ and Satan (Mart. Pol. 19.2).

It is fitting to conclude our survey with Justin Martyr, since he departs from the typical approach to martyrdom found in the apostolic fathers.* Christian apologists, like Justin, spoke as philosophers about their quest for the supreme philosophy and of being persecuted for their pursuit of the truth (which they had come to realize in Christianity). As with Socrates of old, they were on trial as witnesses for the truth. Unlike Ignatius, Justin does not see martyrdom as a sacrifice, nor does he give special glory to the martyr as a hero of the faith. All Christians share in the witness to the truth*; the martyr expresses it more fully. Justin also abandons Ignatian mysticism about imitation* and union with Christ for more philosophical and rational categories that would be shared by his audience. A few words from his first apology capture the direction of his thought: "The lover of truth must, under all circumstances and even under threat of death, choose to say and do what is right, even when it may cost one their life" (Justin Apol. I 2.1).

See also DEATH OF CHRIST; ENDURANCE, PERSEVERANCE; HEALING, ILLNESS; MARTYRDOM; PERSECUTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, " 'Only the Suffering God Can Help': Divine Passibility in Modern Theology," Themelios 3 (1984) 6-12; J. C. Beker, Suffering and Hope: The Biblical Vision and the Human Predicament (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994); A. A. Boesak, Comfort and Protest: Reflections on the Apocalypse of John on Patmos (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1987); A. Y. Collins, Crisis and Catharsis: The Power of the Apocalypse (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1984); P. H. Davids, The Epistle of James (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); idem, "Sickness and Suffering in the New Testament" in Wrestling with Dark Angels, ed. C. P. Wagner and F. D. Pennoyer (Ventura, CA: Regal, 1990) 215-37; J. H. Elliott, A Home for the Homeless: A Social-Scientific Criticism of 1 Peter, Its Situation and Strategy (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1981); E. Schüssler Fiorenza, The Book of Revelation: Justice and Judgment (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church (Oxford: Blackwell, 1965); L. Goppelt, A Commentary on 1 Peter (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993); S. G. Hall, "Women Among the Early Martyrs" in Martyrs and Martyrologies, ed. D. Wood (SCH 30; Oxford: Blackwell, 1993) 1-22; C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in Their Local Setting (JSNTSup 11; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1989); P. R. House, "Suffering and the Purpose of Acts," JETS 33 (1990) 317-30; I. H. Marshall, The Acts of the Apostles (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1980); J. Moltmann, The Crucified God: The Cross of Christ as the Foundation and Criticism of Christian Theology (London: SCM, 1974); M. G. Reddish, Apocalyptic Literature: A Reader (Nashville: Abingdon, 1990); J. P. M. Sweet, "Maintaining the Testimony of Jesus: The Suffering of Christians in the Revelation of John" in Suffering and Martyrdom in the New Testament, ed. W. Horbury and B. McNeil (New York: Cambridge University Press, 1981) 101-17; C. H. Talbert, Learning Through Suffering: The Educational Value of Suffering in the New Testament and in Its Milieu (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1991); idem, "Martyrdom in Luke-Acts and Lukan Social Ethic" in Political Issues in Luke-Acts, ed. R. Cassidy and P. Scharper (Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 1983) 99-110; L. L. Thompson, The Book of Revelation: Apocalypse and Empire (New York: Oxford University Press, 1990).

W. J. Webb

SYNAGOGUE

Recent research into the origin and development of the synagogue has confirmed its central importance for an understanding of the NT. Relationship to synagogues features as a major term of reference not only within the ministry of Jesus (see DJG, Synagogue) but also within the emergence of Christianity as a distinctive Judaic movement which finally separated from Judaism (see Christianity and Judaism).

1. The Functions of Synagogues
2. Jesus' Relation to Synagogues
3. Paul and the Hellenistic Synagogue
4. Rivalry Between Church and Synagogue

1. The Functions of Synagogues.

The earliest epigraphal references to synagogues come from Egypt (from the third century B.C.), where they were known generally as "places of prayer." But prayer was only one function of what might also be called a "house of learning" (Sir 51:23). Philo describes synagogues as "schools of prudence, courage, temperance, justice, piety, holiness and every virtue" (Philo Vit. Mos. 2.216), and he assumes that a reverent, communal reading of the Torah with exposition on the Sabbath is their principal purpose (Philo Leg. Gai. 156); In that the latter reference is to a longstanding custom in Rome, Philo attests the common knowledge that synagogues are a well known feature of Judaism, and hardly a local peculiarity of Egypt. It is a reasonable inference that Philo's own monumental exposition of the Torah was designed to complete the process of advanced education which synagogues sometimes occasioned.

The epigraphal remains of Jews in Egypt reflect their political situation. One slab of limestone refers to the synagogue as "in honor of King Ptolemy and of Queen Berenice," which permits a dating within the reign of Ptolemy III Euergetes (246-221 B.C.; Griffiths, 4-5). Evidently a degree of protection was claimed by such dedications (of which Griffiths gives further examples).

But to speculate from such evidence that the institution of the synagogue actually originated in Egypt is unwarranted. It has been claimed, for instance, that 1 Maccabees and 2 Maccabees contain "not a word" about the institution, so that evidence of synagogues in Palestine "is lacking before the first century B.C. and perhaps even until the first CE" (Grabbe, 21, 25). 1 Maccabees 3:46-54 in fact refers to a previous "place of prayer" in Mizpah, where the Israelites gathered after the desecration of the sanctuary. There they fast and do penance, read from the Torah and assemble what they can of the priestly vestments and the offerings, all the while seeking divine guidance. Mizpah, of course, is a place of sacrifice and assembly according to biblical precedent (Gen 31:44-54; Judg 20:1-3; 21:1-8; 1 Sam 7:5-16). But in 1 Maccabees it is presented as what Philo might have called a school of prudence and courage, a place where the Torah alone is guide, in terminology which corresponds well to the language of the epigraphal remains from Egypt.

What is evidenced in Egypt is an institution typical of the Judaism of the time, a gathering for accepting the guidance of the Torah with prayerful dedication. The generality of the synagogue is attested by the decree of Caesar Augustus that money for the temple tax might be stored in synagogues, and that confiscation should be regarded as sacrilege (Josephus, Ant. 16.6.2-3 §§162-66).

The range of purposes a synagogue might serve is attested by the inscription of Theodotus, which establishes that a synagogue was constructed in Jerusalem "for purposes of reciting the law and studying the commandments," as well as "to provide for the needs of itinerants from abroad" (see DJG, Synagogue, 783). The association with institutions such as the synagogues mentioned in Acts 6:9 is natural.

Unless synagogues needed to be public for some particular purpose (such as to claim political protection or to offer hospitality), they were for the most part "located in houses with the plan and facade of private homes" (Tsafrir, 79). Only from the third century in Palestine do typical patterns of construction for synagogues become widespread, and at the same time stunning artistic embellishments are widely represented. The Dura Europos synagogue in Dura, a Syrian town on the Euphrates, represents a similar development. The third-century building, the object of a famous excavation, was the result of successive adaptations of a private dwelling (Kraabel, 99). The magnificent paintings of Dura represent that same later phase, as does its prominent shrine for the Torah.

Synagogues built long after the destruction of the temple came to take on some of the aspects of the temple.* Tosefta Megilla 4(3):22, for example, insists that entrances for synagogues open only to the east, as in the temple. In the same vein, representations of the menorah, the lulav, the shofar and the incense shovel within synagogues reflect a consciousness of their quasi-cultic function (Dar and Mintzker, 163; Gal, 166-73).

Before the synagogue was felt to replace the temple, it had complemented it. The official function of receiving taxes for its upkeep is one example. Another is its function as a gathering of elders for the purpose of administering justice. When Paul refers to beatings in synagogues (Acts 22:19, see also 2 Cor 11:24), it corresponds to the judicial power that Mishnah also attributes to communal authorities (m. Mak. 3:1-14). A document from the Persian period in Babylonia (dated 511 B.C.) shows the attempt of a Jewish family to control the behavior of a daughter (Bickerman, 349-50); the emergence of the synagogue provided an occasion for such legal instruments. Although the implements of the temple were later associated decoratively with synagogues, the ark for the scrolls of the law is attested as early as Caesar's edict, as quoted by Josephus (Ant. 16.6.2 §164). The centrality of reading and interpreting the law is also conveyed in the scene of Nehemiah 8, which the rabbis of Talmud later associated with reciting the Scripture and giving its interpretation in Aramaic (see DJG, Targums; b. Meg. 3a; b. Ned. 37b).

The judicial function of the synagogue was not merely a punitive matter: Torah also provides for the support of the poor. Matthew 6:2 and Tosefta Baba Batra 8:4 in their differing ways agree that synagogues are places of charity (Safrai, 191-94). Within the first century, sites of synagogues are typically associated with miqvaoth, or ritual baths (Reich, 289-97), and that association is probable in the case of the synagogue in Arsinōē-Crocodilophilus (from 113 B.C.; Kasher, 217). A particular affinity between the synagogue and the adjudication of purity is therefore signaled by the archeological evidence.

The functions of the synagogue must be appreciated before the accumulating archeological data may be suitably assessed. It is a mistake of categories to expect Palestinian synagogues of the first century to be purpose-built structures, clearly labeled for the archeologist. As long as the Jerusalem temple stood, synagogues were usually no more than large rooms, typically in the midst of other smaller rooms (as in a private dwelling). Their purpose was the interpretation and application of the Torah, with the prayerful intent which the Torah presupposes. Some might criticize the ostentation of teachers and/or their prayer (see Mt 6:5; 23:6; Mk 12:39; Lk 11:43; 20:46), but the centrality of prayerful teaching is a matter of record. The diverse functions of the synagogue cannot be understood simply in terms of services of worship in churches today (so McKay), but most of what we call worship took place in that setting, no doubt with less organization (and decorum) than characterizes modern liturgies.

The synagogue at Migdal (Magdala) measures 8.16 m x 7.25 m; the one at Gamla measures 19.6 m x 15.1 m (Groh, 58-59). Both feature banked seats and columns arranged around a central area. They are designed for attentive listening. Beyond that, the use of such spaces for purposes of public meeting, the collection of alms, adjudication, higher learning, disputation, local administration and hospitality would vary from place to place, depending upon the needs, resources, and aspirations of the local community. Because local needs, resources and aspirations themselves can change before buildings can be altered, there is no reason to imagine all public functions took place in the same place in every community. The place of prayer in Philippi is said in Acts 16:13 to be beside a river. Local exigencies might demand outdoor meetings, as in the case of Judas Maccabeus at Mizpah. Only a simplistic obsession with monuments demands a marked, purpose-built structure for the claim to be made that those who revered the Torah read it regularly together and tried reverently to apply it.

2. Jesus' Relation to Synagogues.

The portrayal of Jesus' activity in the Gospels often corresponds to what may be known of synagogues within his period and place, although at times the presentation seems to reflect more the customs within Greek-speaking congregations in the Diaspora.* Luke 4:16-21 is the most vivid example of both aspects of the representation of Jesus (Chilton 1979, 123-77).

As the text reads, Jesus simply stands and recites a text and claims it has been fulfilled. General amazement is the result (Lk 4:22), and the congregation is startled even before Jesus announces the fulfillment of Scripture (Lk 4:20). What is missing from the text is an indication that Jesus has here provided a targum, a translation of the passage into Aramaic, because in the Hellenistic Diaspora the Scriptures were simply read in Greek, rather than read and then translated. It has often been observed that the citation from Isaiah 61:1-2a, the principal source Jesus cites here, omits the reference to divine vengeance in Isaiah 61:2b. That might have occasioned mild surprise, but scarcely astonishment. After all, the choice of where a passage of reading should end was largely left open during the first century. The key to an understanding of what Jesus says is that it is not a simple reading of Isaiah 61:1-2, but a conflation of that passage with Isaiah 58:6, which speaks of forgiving, that is, releasing, those who are oppressed. In the underlying tradition which informed the passage, Jesus stood in the synagogue and gave a new rendering of the book of Isaiah in Aramaic, targeted on the issue of forgiveness. That motivated his omission to speak of divine vengeance.

His assertion of the new activity of God is, it has been proposed, most accurately represented in the text of the Old Syriac Gospels:

> The Spirit of the Lord is upon you, > because of which he anointed you to > preach to the poor, > and he has sent me to preach to the captives > forgiveness, and to the blind sight > —and I will strengthen the broken with > forgiveness—
> and to preach the acceptable year of the > Lord.

The reading reflects the linkage between Jesus personally and the distinctive issue of his new "reading": the issue of forgiveness. That linkage, the claim of an offer of forgiveness "fulfilled" by Jesus, causes astonishment in the synagogue.

In what follows in the text of Luke, astonishment turns inexplicably to scandal (Lk 4:22-30). The experience of preachers of Jesus in synagogues nearer Luke's time is reflected, as can be seen in the similarity of the pattern of presentation in Acts 13:13-52 concerning Paul and Barnabas at Pisidian Antioch. The sequel has Paul stoned by Jews in Lystra (Acts 14:19), so that the comparability with the presentation of Jesus in Nazareth becomes all the more plain.

Nonetheless, Jesus' activity in synagogues, including his sympathetic relations with leaders of synagogues such as Jairus, is amply attested (see DJG, Synagogue). The general pattern of teaching in synagogues (Mt 4:23; 9:35; 13:54; Mk 1:39; Lk 4:15; Jn 18:20) confirms the connection between Jesus and the targumic tradition (see DJG, Targums; Chilton 1984). There is no evidence to support the contention that lectionaries of readings were fixed within the first century, and that complements the NT's picture of the freedom which Jesus and his followers enjoyed to choose the texts which suited them. It is also striking that the question of healing is at issue in synagogues, in the idiom of disputes about keeping the Sabbath (Mt 12:9-14; Mk 3:1-6; Lk 6:6-11; 13:10-17; 14:1-6) and about purity* (Mk 1:21-28; Lk 4:31-37). Purity is also an implicit concern in approaching the supposed corpse of Jairus' daughter (Mt 9:18-19, 23-26; Mk 5:21-24, 35-43; Lk 8:40-42, 49-56). That issue is underlined within the tradition, as is shown by the inclusion of the story of the woman with a flow of blood (Mt 9:20-22; Mk 5:25-34; Lk 8:43-48). That Jairus would have lived adjacent to any meeting room now seems entirely plausible in light of archeological data.

Indeed, the synagogue may have featured more prominently in Jesus' ministry than appears at first sight. Peter and Andrew are depicted as residing adjacent to a synagogue in Capernaum (Mk 1:29; cf. Lk 4:38), and they may have been leaders there. Also at Capernaum, an appeal is made to Jesus to be sympathetic to a centurion on the grounds that he had built a synagogue (Lk 7:5); Jesus' high esteem of the institution is obviously presupposed (see also Jn 6:59). Likewise, Jesus himself is assumed to be an acceptable teacher in his own home town (Mt 13:54; Mk 6:2; Lk 4:16). Jesus' pronouncement that the "leper" who approached him was clean (Mt 8:1-4; Mk 1:40-45; Lk 5:12-16) may originally have been set in a synagogue, and that is the most appropriate setting for his teaching concerning defilement (Mk 7:15; Mt 15:10-11; see Purity). The "house" in which Jesus is placed at the time he declared the paralytic free of both sin and disease was possibly a synagogue (Mk 2:1-12; cf. Mt 9:1-8; Lk 5:17-26); that would explain the crowd and the degree of controversy involved.

3. Paul and the Hellenistic Synagogue.

Only at a later stage in the development of the Gospels was the synagogue assumed to be a place of persecution for disciples (Mt 10:17; 23:34; Mk 13:9; Lk 12:11; 21:12). That assumption reflects hard experience, as intimated, for example, in the allusion within the source called Q to failed missions in Chorazin and Bethsaida, and even in the formerly sympathetic Capernaum (Lk 10:13-15 par. Mt 11:20-24; see Catchpole, 171-76).

Acts* reflects something of the attempt after the resurrection, by some unsympathetic leaders of synagogues, to coordinate a denunciation of Jesus' followers with the help of the authorities of the temple (Acts 9:1-2; 22:19; 26:11; cf. 24:12). But the focus is so consistently upon Paul's reception in synagogues (together with Barnabas's, as Paul's companion) that it is a matter of supposition how other Christian leaders, such as Peter and James, were received in synagogues. Presumably their experience was as different from Paul's as their teaching was less radical, and James in fact cites the preaching of Moses* in synagogues as a reason for non-Jewish believers to maintain a rudimentary purity* (Acts 15:19-21). But Paul becomes the lens through which Acts views the institution of the synagogue.

Despite the radicalism of his message, Acts assumes that Paul is received into synagogues and that he is permitted to preach (Acts 13:13-43). The repeated opportunity permits Paul to reach non-Jewish hearers in the synagogues, which provokes jealousy among "the Jews" (Acts 13:44-52). That experience in Pisidian Antioch brings Paul and Barnabas to Iconium: some Jews and Greeks believe as a result of what they hear in a synagogue, but some people "sided with the Jews" (Acts 14:1-4). The threat of stoning (by both Gentiles and Jews) drives the apostles on to Lystra, where a similar pattern of experience results in the actual stoning of Paul because the people of Lystra are incited by antagonistic Jews from Antioch and Iconium (Acts 1:5-20).

Although much of the language of Acts suggests that there was a united Jewish front against Paul (and against Jesus before the time of Paul), the fact is that the synagogue remains Paul's customary point of entry into the communities he visits. Thessalonica (Acts 17:1-9), Beroea (Acts 17:10-14), Athens (17:16-17) all hear Paul first in their synagogues. The pattern of persecution from both religious and civic leaders is represented again, and the last example shows how dispute in the synagogue could spill over into the market place (Acts 17:18-34).

The link between the synagogue and wider civic debate was forged particularly by those known as "God fearers," those who acknowledged the God of Israel without accepting circumcision.* As a type of believer, they are represented by the centurion Cornelius* in Acts, who is converted by Peter (Acts 10:1-48). Paul is portrayed as even more effective in his ministry to them (Acts 13:16, 26). A similar group is referred to with the designation of those who "worship" God (see Acts 13:43, 50; 16:14; 17:4, 17; 18:7; the RSV often renders the usage with the adjective "devout").

But Paul's focus in Corinth continues to be the synagogue (Acts 18:1-4), and Crispus—ruler of the synagogue—is baptized with his household (Acts 18:5-11). The synagogue is Paul's introduction to Ephesus (Acts 18:19; 19:8), and it is also the place where Apollos preaches (Acts 18:26). Even the final chapter of Acts presents Paul in the company of local leaders of the Jews in Rome, gathered to hear him out, perhaps in their synagogue (Acts 28:17-22).

Paul's own letters do not use the term synagogue, because their concern is not with that institution. His interest is rather the definition and salvation of "Israel" (see Rom 9:6; 11:26; Gal 6:16), in which all who believe—Jew and Greek, slave and free, male and female (Gal 3:28)—are included (see Rom 4:1-25; Gal 3:6-7, 14, 27-29). The synagogue was therefore for Paul an occasion, not a limit, of operation. Even in his case, because the ultimate aim was to constitute Israel (however radically defined), the synagogue was a natural place to operate, no matter what the level of opposition to him (see 2 Cor 11:23-27). And in his case, as in the case of Christians leaders contemporaneous with him, it is difficult to imagine how the gospel could have been preached without the previous establishment of synagogues in the Mediterranean world and apart from their relative toleration of unconventional teachers.

4. Rivalry Between Church and Synagogue. Although the letter of James* reflects a familiarity with the term church (ekklēsia) in order to refer to communities of believers (Jas 5:14), the term synagogue (synagōgē) also appears (Jas 2:2). The usage does not represent a formal claim to replace the most prominent institution of Judaism after A.D. 70, but the willingness to use the word itself is notable. It probably means no more than an assembly in context, but an assembly for the purpose of discerning and keeping the true, "royal law" (Jas 2:8) represents an implicit challenge to other congregations which claim to uphold the Torah.

James uses negative examples to insist by way of contrast that the poor should not be treated worse than the rich (Jas 2:1-7), that the whole of the law* is to be understood in the commandment* to love* (Jas 2:8-13), that faith* apart from actions is dead (Jas 2:14-26). The principal ethical interest of the letter closes with an explicit encouragement of prayer* (Jas 5:13-18), underlined—as the letter is generally—with scriptural example and allusion. The letter, in other words, is setting up the church as the true synagogue, a school of wisdom and action whose curriculum is the law correctly understood.

The irony is that the rivalry between church and synagogue was greatest when Christians most consciously adhered to their Judaic roots. The Revelation* of John sets up its vision as involving the divine court (Rev 1:12-16), the very throne of God (Rev 4:1-11); the terms of reference are principally drawn from Daniel and Ezekiel. But because this vision occurs on the "Lord's day"* (Rev 1:10), not during the Sabbath meeting in the synagogue, any opposing institution must be a "synagogue of Satan" (Rev 2:9; 3:9). That is the inevitable alternative to the discovery of the heavenly sanctuary under the guidance of Jesus as "one like a son of man" (Rev 1:13, alluding to Dan 7:13).

These developments in the Revelation presuppose the growing antipathy of leaders of the synagogue after A.D. 70, who were increasingly influenced by the Pharisees/rabbis. The period saw the development of the "blessing of the minim," a petition within the "Eighteen Benedictions" which cursed disloyal Jews such as the Christians (see Christianity and Judaism). Perhaps an even greater occasion of rivalry between churches and synagogues was the decision that certain of the rituals of the temple could be conducted in the synagogue. Such a decision was made by R. Yohanan ben Zakkai at Yavneh, when he permitted the shofar, the ram's horn, to be blown at the feast of the new year in the synagogue as it once had been in the temple (m. Roš Haš. 4:1-4). For those who saw Jesus as the true access to the sanctuary, any transfer of the temple's function to the synagogue necessitated the replacement of that institution; from that time, the attempt to replace the institutions of Judaism within Christianity became programmatic (see Temple).

See also ARCHITECTURE, EARLY CHURCH; CHRISTIANITY AND JUDAISM: PARTINGS OF THE WAYS; DIASPORA JUDAISM; JUDAISM; TEMPLE; WORSHIP AND LITURGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. E. J. Bickerman, "The Babylonian " in The Cambridge History of Judaism, ed. W.

D. Davies and L. Finkelstein (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1984) 1.342-58; D. R. Catchpole, The Quest for Q (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1993); B. Chilton, A Galilean Rabbi and His Bible: Jesus' Use of the Interpreted Scripture of His Time (GNS 8; Wilmington: Glazier, 1984); idem, God in Strength: Jesus' Announcement of the Kingdom (SNTU 1; Freistadt: Plöchl, 1979), reprinted in The Biblical Seminar (Sheffield: JSOT, 1987); S. Dar and Y. Mintzker, "The Synagogue of Horvat Sumaqa, 1983-1993" in Ancient Synagogues: Historical Analysis and Archaeological Discovery, ed. D. Urman and P. V. M. Flesher (SPB 47; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1995) 157-64; A. Finkel, The Pharisees and the Teacher of Nazareth (AGSU 4; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1964); P. V. M Flesher, "Palestinian Synagogues before 70 C.E.: A Review of the Evidence" in Approaches to Ancient Judaism 6, ed. J. Neusner and E. S. Frerichs (Atlanta: Scholars, 1989) 67-81, reprinted in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 27-39; Z. Gal, "Ancient Synagogues in the Eastern Lower Galilee" in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 166-73; L. L. Grabbe, "Synagogues in Pre-70 Palestine: A Re-assessment," JTS 39 (1998) 401-10, reprinted in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 17-26; J. G. Griffiths, "Egypt and the Rise of the Synagogue," JTS 38 (1987) 1-15, reprinted in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 3-16; D. E. Groh, "The Stratigraphic Chronology of the Galilean Synagogue from the Early Roman Period Through the Early Byzantine Period (ca. 420 C.E.)" in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 51-69; A. Kasher, "Synagogues as 'Houses of Prayer' and 'Holy Places' in the Jewish Communities of Hellenistic and Roman Egypt" in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 205-20; A. T. Kraabel, "The Diaspora Synagogue: Archaeological and Epigraphic Evidence since Sukenik," ANRW 2.19.1 (1979) 477-510, reprinted in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 95-126; H. McKay, Sabbath and Synagogue: The Question of Sabbath Worship in Ancient Israel (RGRW 122; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1994); L. Morris, The New Testament and the Jewish Lectionaries (London: Tyndale, 1964); idem, "The Saints and the Synagogue" in Worship, Theology and Ministry in the Early Church, ed. J. Wilkins and T. Paige (JSNTSup 87; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1992); J. Neusner, Development of a Legend: Studies on the Traditions concerning Yohanan ben Zakkai (SPB 16; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1970); R. Reich, "The Synagogue and the Miqweh in Eretz-Israel in the Second-Temple, Mishnaic, and Talmudic Periods" in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 289-97; Z. Safrai, "The Communal Functions of the Synagogue in the Land of Israel in the Rabbinic Period" in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 181-204; Y. Tasfir, "On the Source of the Architectural Design of the Ancient Synagogues in the Galilee: A New Appraisal" in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 70-86; D. Urman and P. V. M. Flesher, Ancient Synagogues: Historical Analysis and Archaeological Discovery (SPB 47; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1995).

B. Chilton

SYNCRETISM

The term syncretism is used by anthropologists and historians to refer to the blending of religious beliefs. This typically occurs when the social circumstances of one group bring them into contact with another. As the two groups interact, members of one group may begin to assimilate aspects of the religious beliefs of the other, resulting in a transformation of the traditional religion. For Christians throughout history, the notion of syncretism has had largely negative connotations and is sometimes associated with heresy. This is due to the fact that assimilation is often perceived as a departure from the purity of the original. Many modern-day missiologists thus distinguish syncretism from contextualization, with the latter understood as an appropriate expression of the gospel in culturally relevant forms.

1. Religious Syncretism in the Hellenistic and Roman World
2. Christianity as a Syncretistic Religion?
3. Syncretistic Trends in Early Christianity
4. Gnosticism and Christianity

1. Religious Syncretism in the Hellenistic and Roman World.

The political circumstances in the Mediterranean world from the time of Alexander the Great to the Roman imperial period resulted in an incredibly changed network of social and cultural contacts. Greeks made their way to the East, Persians came to the West, Egyptians did business in Asia Minor and Rome, Jewish communities were scattered throughout most of the important cities (see Diaspora Judaism) and Roman colonists were everywhere. This Hellenistic-era internationalism forced the various peoples to interact with other cultures and religious beliefs. As they did so, a variety of responses emerged, ranging from a reaffirmation of the pure form of the traditional religion to a borrowing and assimilation to the religions of the new environment (see Religions).

The syncretism of this era often extended to a complete identification of two deities with originally different mythologies, cults, rituals and functions (see Martin, 10-11). Thus the local fertility deity in Ephesus is identified as Artemis by early Greek settlers and as Diana by the Romans. In the second-century Isis aretalogy (ascription of praise) found in Egypt (P. Oxy. 1380), Isis is identified with nearly twenty other deities, including Aphrodite, Artemis, Astarte, Athena, Hera and Kore.

Judaism* struggled with syncretism throughout its history. The people of Israel often showed a tendency to assimilate Canaanite deities and religious beliefs. Thus there is frequent anti-idolatry polemic in the historical and prophetic writings of the OT. A king like Josiah is praised for demolishing the high places, cutting down the Asherah poles and removing cult objects associated with Baal from the Jerusalem temple (2 Kings 23).

There is ongoing scholarly debate as to the extent of Jewish syncretism in the Hellenistic and Roman periods. A writer like Philo* went a long way in absorbing the prevailing Greek philosophical views of the day (esp. Middle Platonism) and presenting Judaism in these terms to his pagan contemporaries. Yet he stops short of identifying Yahweh with Zeus or Sarapis. Neither does he attempt to transform Judaism by infusing it with rituals and beliefs from Egyptian or Greek religions. E. R. Goodenough's contention that Philo had assimilated many mystery-cult beliefs has been shown to be without support. Although Philo often uses the language of the mysteries, he does so more to present his own ancestral faith in language that would have been comprehensible to pagans. Furthermore, there is still no concrete evidence that Diaspora Jews had developed mystery cults based on and borrowing from the pagan mystery cults (see G. Lease).

Some scholars claim to have found evidence of Jewish syncretism in the cults of Theos Hypsistos and Sabazios in Asia Minor. We know very little about the worship of these two deities since they are only attested epigraphically. Based on this evidence, however, F. Cumont argued that the pagan use of Hypsistos ("most high god") was stimulated by the Jewish worship of Yahweh as Hypsistos in Asia Minor. He further suggested that a few pagan thiasoi (cult associations) had arisen independently of the synagogues devoted to the worship of the Most High and assimilated many Jewish religious concepts into a syncretistic fusion of pagan and Jewish ideas (see Cumont, 62-66, 162). Both Cumont and R. Reitzenstein contended that the Asia Minor cult of Sabazios represents the identification of the Jewish "Lord of Hosts" (LXX = kyrios Sabaōth) with a local Phrygian-Thracian deity (Sabazios) also identified with the Phrygian Jupiter and Dionysus (Cumont, 64; Reitzenstein, 123-25). Recent scholarship has called into question Cumont's interpretation that these two cults represent some sort of syncretism with Judaism. P. Trebilco and A. T. Kraabel contend that there is adequate reason to view both of these cults as purely pagan without postulating that they represent some sort of declension within Judaism or even Jewish influence on a pagan cult (see Trebilco, 127-44, and Kraabel, 450-51).

Nowhere is syncretism illustrated more clearly than in the magical and astrological beliefs of the era (see Magic and Astrology). In this realm power* takes precedence over personality. Commitment to one deity or fidelity to one cult gives way to rituals of power that work. Thus many gods and goddesses could be invoked at the same time by one person. Yahweh (or Iao) could be invoked in the same breath as Artemis and Hekate. Palestinian and diaspora Jews participated in this form of syncretism. Numerous Jewish magical amulets, spells and astrological documents attest to the prevalence of syncretistic Jewish magic (see Alexander).

2. Christianity as a Syncretistic Religion?

To what extent did the Hellenistic/Roman syncretism influence the development of early Christianity? H. Gunkel and other adherents of the History-of-Religions School argued that it was a major factor. Gunkel, in fact, concluded that, "Christianity is a syncretistic religion" (Gunkel, 95). He argued that the NT was strongly influenced by many foreign religions, but that these beliefs entered Christianity in the first instance through Judaism, which itself was very strongly syncretistic. R. Bultmann spoke of syncretism more often in connection with Hellenistic Christianity, which he sharply distinguished from Jewish Christianity. He noted, "on the whole, one could be tempted to term Hellenistic Christianity a syncretistic structure" (Bultmann, 1.164). For Bultmann the Jewish apocalyptic* kerygma of Jesus was combined with the gnostic* myth of redemption as Christianity spread to the Gentile world. Like Gunkel, however, he saw Hellenistic Judaism as "in the grip of syncretism" (Bultmann, 1.171) and therefore as the purveyor of these concepts to Christianity.

The subsequent course of scholarship has effectively dismantled many of the conclusions drawn by the History-of-Religions School. Various studies have demonstrated that there was not one coherent gnostic redeemer myth nor was there a common mystery-religion theology. We have already touched on the fact that Judaism was not the syncretistic religion that some scholars once thought that it was. Now most scholars are reluctant to assume that Gnosticism even existed during the genesis and early development of Christianity.

The majority of scholars are reaffirming the essential Jewishness of the early Christian movement. The background of various Christian rites, ideas and terms is being illustrated out of the OT and Judaism, in contrast to the previous generation that pointed to gnostic texts and the mystery religions. The background of the Christian practice of baptism,* for instance, is now seldom traced to the mystery initiation sacraments of Attis, Adonis or Osiris but to the OT initiation rite of circumcision* and the Jewish water purification rituals.

Gunkel, Bultmann and others clearly undervalued the formative influence of the OT and Judaism for early Christianity. Neither were they sufficiently open to the possibility that the NT writers could use religious language shared by adherents of other religions without adopting the full meaning of that language, as it was understood in other religious contexts. In other words, Christian writers could use the term *mystery (e.g., Rev 10:7; Ign. Magn. 9.1; Diogn. 4.6) without implying that Christianity is a mystery religion like the cults of Cybele or Mithras. John could use the image of light* (1 Jn 1:5, 7; 2:8, 9, 10) without dependence on a gnostic light-darkness dualism. Both of these terms have long histories of usage in the OT that provide us with the essential conceptual framework for understanding their NT usage. Yet at the same time they are terms that would communicate in a Gentile world, albeit now with a different set of connotations.

There is also evidence that the apostles and leaders in the early Christian movement made explicit and earnest attempts to resist the syncretistic impulses of the age. For example, when Paul preached in Lystra (Acts 14:8-20), he was faced with an opportunity to make a syncretistic innovation to the gospel. Luke records that after Paul healed a crippled man the people of the city mistook him for Hermes (the messenger of Zeus) and Barnabas for Zeus. Rather than allowing any form of identification with their gods (even the identification of "the living God" with Zeus), Paul takes the bold step of telling them to "turn from these worthless things" to the one God, the Creator (Acts 14:15). Earliest Christianity appears to have made stringent effort to resist the larger cultural trend toward the identification of deities and directed people to the God of Israel, who had now revealed himself in the Lord* Jesus Christ.

3. Syncretistic Trends in Early Christianity. Nevertheless, there were clearly some syncretistic trends in the early Christian movement for which we can find evidence in the NT and the apostolic fathers. Invariably the NT writers portray the assimilationist tendencies as unacceptable. A few representative examples illustrate these trends.

3.1. Assimilation of Magic (Acts 8:9-25; 19:17-20). In Luke's portrayal of the Simon Magus episode (Acts 8:9-25), the reader is left with no uncertainty regarding the inappropriateness of understanding Christianity through the lenses of a magical worldview. The magician is severely upbraided for seeking power rather than forgiveness* of sin and a relationship of submission to the will of the risen Christ.

Many Christians did find it difficult to give up their magical practices and depend on Christ alone for protection and enablement. The great number who burned their magical texts in Ephesus were Christians, not pagans from the Gentile* population (Acts 19:17-20). The dramatic event involving the Jewish exorcist Sceva and his sons was the catalyst for these Ephesian Christians to reevaluate their involvements with magic. Again, Luke's narrative makes it clear that the most appropriate response for Christians converted from a background in the occultic arts is to renounce it completely and give their total allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ. The fact that some Christians did not follow the example of this story and rid themselves of these practices is now well attested by a corpus of Coptic and Greek "Christian" magical texts found in Egypt (see Meyer and Smith).

3.2. Assimilation of Local Cult Practices (Rev 2:20-29). The church at Thyatira comes under strong rebuke in the Apocalypse for tolerating the teachings of a local prophetess whom the writer refers to as a "Jezebel" (Rev 2:20). She is said to deceive many of the believers in the church by leading them into sexual immorality and eating food sacrificed to idols. A brief look at the local religious milieu helps us to understand how this could have happened. The most popular deity of the city was Apollo Tyrimnaeus who was the patron god of the local trade guilds. C. J. Hemer has contended that the influential prophetess was probably urging an accommodation to the beliefs and practices of the local Apollo cult (Hemer, 118). Specifically she was arguing (perhaps appealing to prophetic inspiration) that Christians could maintain their membership in the guilds and participate in the temple feasts (where meat sacrificed to Apollo would be consumed and sexual liaisons in the name of the god would be made) without compromising their faith. This syncretistic accommodation to the local cult was deemed unacceptable. Hemer concludes that in the eyes of John, trade guild membership "necessarily involved contradiction of the Apostolic Decree and the needed repentance must necessarily involve repudiation of the guilds" (Hemer, 123).

3.3. Assimilation of Epicurean Rationalism (2 Peter). Recent study of 2 Peter* has shown that a strong tendency to assimilate an Epicurean set of beliefs into Christianity characterized the adversaries* (Neyrey; Bauckham, 154-57). This faction appears to have adopted a commonsense rationalistic view of the world after rejecting the traditional primitive Christian eschatological* expectation of a return (see Parousia) of Christ and judgment* (2 Pet 2:3; 3:4, 9). They also appeared to discount the power of the devil (see Satan) and his angels* (2 Pet 2:10). Their resultant "freedom" evidently justified their participation in sexual* immorality, drunkenness and various other vices (2 Pet 2:2, 10, 13-14, 18). Neyrey suggested that these and other aspects of the beliefs of the opponents are more consistent with adopting an Epicurean point of view, as opposed to assuming that they represent a splinter group that have become Gnostics. The letter itself, however, reveals an early Christian resistance of assimilationist tendencies found in the churches.

3.4. Assimilation of Platonic Dualism (Johannine Letters). It has long been thought that the schismatics in the Johannine community were Gnostics of some sort. The trend in recent scholarship, however, has moved away from this facile identification since many crucial aspects of gnostic theology do not appear to be present in the teaching of the opponents. For instance, there is no polemic indicting the gnostic understandings of the demiurge as evil, the ascent of the soul after death or the preexistence of the souls of the pneumatikoi.

Many scholars have been content to look to the evidence of the text itself and identify the secessionists as having docetic* tendencies without appealing to developed Gnosticism for an explanation. R. E. Brown, for instance, describes the opponents in 1 John as docetists who arrived at their position through their idiosyncratic interpretation of the Gospel of John. After they were cut off from the Johannine community, they became even more "progressive" in their christology and ethics. This group, in the opinion of Brown, "offered a marvelous catalyst to docetic and gnostic strains of Christian thought" (Brown, 45-115, esp. 104).

Brown does not deal sufficiently with why one segment of the Johannine community would read the Gospel of John through a docetic lens. He isolates the Johannine community too much from the world in which it existed. At this juncture, one needs to factor into the discussion the increasing popularity of Platonic thought (viz. the rise of Middle Platonism). The example of Philo himself is sufficient to show the attraction of this philosophical system to some educated Jews in the diaspora. The platonic distinction between two levels of reality, in which the highest value is placed on the transcendent models (ideas) and little epistemological value is given to the level of sense perception, may have inclined some to interpret the gospel in a docetic direction. The end result is a syncretism of the gospel with platonic ideas that may have been mediated to the church through Hellenistic Judaism or directly through the pagan culture itself.

This trend toward docetism continues to be a problem well into the second century, not only in Asia Minor, but possibly also in Antioch* (Syria), if Ignatius* reveals anything of his own situation. Ignatius is aware of, and warns the church against, those who "do not confess that he [Jesus] was clothed in the flesh" (Ign. Smyrn. 5.2; cf. 4.2).

4. Gnosticism and Christianity.

Middle Platonic philosophy and a docetic view of Christ were indeed streams of thought that fed into the fully developed gnostic systems that we find reflected in the writings of Irenaeus, Hippolytus and others. Gnosticism represented the grandest form of syncretism in combining aspects of Judaism, Platonism, Greco-Roman and Egyptian religions (including mystery cults), magic, astrology and Persian thought into various systems of redemption (see Rudolph, 54-55).

See also ADVERSARIES; DIASPORA JUDAISM; DOCETISM; GNOSIS, GNOSTICISM; MAGIC AND ASTROLOGY; PHILO; RELIGIONS, GRECO-ROMAN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. P. S. Alexander, "Incantations and Books of Magic" in The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. and ed. G. Vermes, F. Millar and M. Goodman (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1986) 3.1.342-79; C. E. Arnold, The Colossian Syncretism: The Interface Between Christianity and Folk Belief at Colossae (WUNT 2/77; Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1995); R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC 50; Waco: Word, 1983); W. Bauer, Orthodoxy and Heresy in Earliest Christianity, ed. R. A. Kraft and G. Krodel (2d. ed.; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1971); R. E. Brown, The Epistles of John (AB 30; Garden City, NY, 1982); R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament (2 vols.; New York: Scribner's, 1951, 1955); C. Colpe, "Syncretism," ER 14.218-27; J. D. G. Dunn, Unity and Diversity in the New Testament (2d ed.; Valley Forge: Trinity Press International, 1990); E. Ferguson, Backgrounds of Early Christianity (2d ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993); E. R. Goodenough, By Light, Light: The Mystic Gospel of Hellenistic Judaism (New Haven: Yale, 1935); H. Gunkel, Zum religionsgeschichtlichen Verständnis des Neuen Testaments (Göttingen, 1903); C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in their Local Settings (JSNTSup 11; Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1986); A. T. Kraabel, "The Roman Diaspora: Six Questionable Assumptions," JJS 33 (1982) 445-64; G. Lease, "Jewish Mystery Cults Since Goodenough," ANRW 2.20.2 (1987) 858-80; L. Martin, Hellenistic Religions (New York: Oxford University Press, 1987); M. W. Meyer and R. Smith, Ancient Christian Magic: Coptic Texts of Ritual Power (San Francisco: Harper, 1994); J. H. Neyrey, "The Form and Background of the Polemic in 2 Peter," JBL 99 (1980) 407-31; H. Paulsen, "Synkretismus im Urchristentum und im Neuen Testament" in Neu Glauben? Religionsvielfalt und neue religiöse Strömungen als Herausforderung an das Christentum, ed. W. Grieve and R. Niemann (Gütersloh: Mohn, 1990) 34-44; R. Reitzenstein, Hellenistic Mystery-Religions (PTMS 15; Pittsburgh: Pickwick, 1978); K. Rudolph, Gnosis: The Nature and History of Gnosticism (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1987); P. Trebilco, Jewish Communities in Asia Minor (SNTSMS 69; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991). C. E. Arnold

SYRIA, SYRIAN CHRISTIANITY

Syrian Christianity began in Syrian Antioch,* an important urban center of early Christianity, and spread into the greater Syrian-speaking world, with Edessa becoming another important Christian center. Although many questions remain to be answered regarding the origins and early history of Syrian church, the available evidence offers a valuable glimpse of an important sector of early Christianity.

1. Ancient Syria
2. The Arrival of Christianity in Syria
3. Early Syrian Christianity
4. Early Syriac Literature and Christian Life

1. Ancient Syria.

Syria, that most valued province of the eastern Roman Empire,* was bounded on the north by Cilicia, on the south by Galilee and Judea and on the east by the tiny kingdom of Osrhoene and the massive Persian (Parthian) Empire. The term Syria also refers to a West Asian Semitic culture and its ancient language, Syriac. The Syriac language developed in the regions around Edessa from the Mesopotamian tribal language of Aramaic, which in turn is a Syro-Arabian (Semitic) language. Syriac script was first found on inscriptions in the first century A.D. (around Edessa, present-day Urfa in southeast Turkey), and by the ninth century the language had virtually disappeared except in liturgical literature. There are three Syriac scripts: Estranghelo is the original uncial script from which the Serto (used by the Jacobites and Melkites) and Nestorian scripts developed.

The Syrian church, speaking mostly Greek, flourished from earliest times in Roman Syria, but in the Syriac language the gospel also spread from Edessa through Osrhoene, Adiabene, Armenia and Persia (modern-day Iraq and Iran). Before the end of the second century the church was well established in India. Syrian Christianity became very divided beginning in the fourth century because of the christological* controversies, persecutions* and imperial wars.

The main city of Roman Syria, Antioch,* was not only an important church center (Acts 11:26) but also a key military hub for Rome and an international trading center since it was the first city on the Old Silk Route through central Asia to Cathay (China). Flourishing trade created a cosmopolitan city with an especially large group of Jews. Jews had been encouraged by the Seleucids to settle in Antioch, and during the Maccabean wars other Jews fled from Judea to Antioch and further east to Edessa. Antioch, like the rest of Syria, was known for its schools: Jewish, pagan and then Christian. The intercultural mix made this third largest Roman city a strategic center for the church and for missionary activity (Acts 11:19-30; 13:1-3; 14:21-28; 15:22-35).

In the postapostolic age Antioch continued to be a theological and missionary center. Ignatius* (c. 35-c. 107) was either the second (after Peter) or third bishop (after Euodius) of Antioch, and though he was likely of pagan Syrian origin, his greatest influence was on the Western church through the letters he wrote on his way to martyrdom* in Rome.*

Christianity that was later called Syrian and characterized by its use of the Syriac, rather than the Greek language, flourished beyond the bounds of Antioch and the Syrian province of the Roman Empire. Edessa was a Syriac cultural center and the capital of the first Christian kingdom: Osrhoene. It was in the environs of Edessa and the eastern Persian city of Nisibis that Syrian Christianity developed its theological, monastic and missionary characteristics.

2. The Arrival of Christianity in Syria.

The early history of Syrian Christianity is clouded by myth and legend, yet it contains certain lines of historical development. Acts 2:9 records that Medes (from western Iraq), Parthians (Persians), Elamites (from Iran) and residents of Mesopotamia were present in Jerusalem* on the day of Pentecost* and witnessed the birth of the church. Although we have no record of these travelers returning to their homes and starting churches, we do know that by the end of the second century the church had spread to all of these areas, mostly along the Silk Route. Syrian Christianity of the first few centuries seems very Jewish in expression, but it shows no signs of the judaizing elements that Paul warned against in Galatians. We can say little with confidence about the heritage of Syrian Christianity, but later legends abound.

Legend has it that the apostle Thomas spread faith in Jesus to the East. Eusebius tells us that Thomas was designated to evangelize Parthia (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.1), but Rufinus of Aquileia and Jerome (Jerome Vita Apost. 5) both say he was sent to Persia. Gregory of Nazianzus (Gregory Oration 33.11) held the traditional East Syrian view that Thomas was sent by Christ to India, where he planted churches and then was martyred (Gregory Oration 25). This story is told in the Acts of Thomas 1 (a third-century Syriac work) and was also accepted by the great Syrian saint Ephrem (c. 306-73; Ephrem Hymns on Nisibis 42), who explains that Thomas's body was later returned to Edessa. Thus traditions have Thomas going to south India, north India and Parthia, but all traditions have him going to Asia and dying in Asia. Indian Christians mark his place of martyrdom and his grave in Mylapore, south of Madras in southeast India. Nothing conclusive can be said about Thomas's mission to India, but it should be noted that Christianity in southern Tamil Nadu and Kerala first spread from the east, indicating that Christian missionaries or merchants arrived near Mylapore in the southeast and then, under persecution, spread westward.

3. Early Syrian Christianity.

As the Christian faith spread eastward from Jerusalem and Antioch, Edessa, capital of the client kingdom of Osrhoene, was the first major city to be reached. Eusebius (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 1.13) records that Addai (Thaddeus) was sent by Thomas to the king of Osrhoene, Abgar V ("the Black"), to bring healing* from Jesus to the afflicted king. Eusebius claims to quote from an extant correspondence between Abgar and Jesus regarding the king's healing (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 1.13.6-10). This story is also told in the Doctrine of Addai (late fourth or early fifth century), which also speaks of the later conversion of the entire city of Edessa. This story has historical elements (early Jewish converts, large national Christian movement, a king who converts to Christianity), yet it is not likely that Christianity became the national religion until the reign of Abgar VIII (177-212). Thus two Abgars may be confused in the Doctrine of Addai.

Although there are reports that Christianity moved to Edessa from the east rather than from the west, both geography and the strongest traditions suggest that the eastern city of Arbela (modern Erbil), the capital of Adiabene on the Tigris River, was evangelized after Edessa. Josephus (Josephus Ant. 20.21-5 §§17-53) reports that in about A.D. 36, King Ezad and Queen Helena both converted to Judaism.* This might have prepared the way for conversion to Christianity, but Christian tradition does not mention a Jewish king. According to Syrian tradition, it was either the successor of Addai, Aggai (Doctrine of the Apostles), Mari (Acts of Mari) or Addai himself (Chronicle of Arbela) who first planted the church in Arbela. Adiabene, located more deeply in Persian territory, claims no Jewish connection, and its church seems to have a Zoroastrian or pagan cultural heritage. Early persecutions from Zoroastrians must have been a common Christian concern, for there are numerous extant, though certainly embellished, martyr stories that tell of terrible persecutions.

4. Early Syriac Literature and Christian Life. The early Syrian form of Christianity, found partially in the Roman Empire but mostly in the small kingdoms of Osrhoene and Adiabene and in Persia, developed a Christian Syriac literature at the turn of the second century that fully flowered from the fourth to the ninth centuries. The earliest Christian writings extant in the Syriac language are the Scriptures and the Odes of Solomon. The Syriac Bible, known as the Peshitta ("simple" or "plain" version), was probably the work of a number of translators in Edessa, translating at times very literally from the OT Hebrew text. NT portions were not fully translated from the Greek until the fifth century (Cureton and Siniatic manuscripts). Prior to the fifth century the Gospel account used was Tatian's Diatessaron (late second century), a single telling of the life of Jesus "through four" (dia tessarōn) Gospel accounts. Although there appears to be an Old Syriac version (c. 200) of Acts* and the Pauline epistles that was the basis of the Peshitta, this text is no longer extant. It must be noted that the development of the Syriac Scriptures was occurring almost simultaneously with the development of the Syriac language and script.

The Odes of Solomon, a corpus of forty-two Syriac and some Coptic Christian hymns,* seems to be the oldest extant Christian Syriac literature. The hymns have been dated as late as the early third century, but internal evidence (primitive Jewish Christianity,* a lack of NT quotations or images, inconsistent titles for church leaders) points to a very early stage when the Edessan church was developing in the midst of gnostic* movements and Jewish synagogues.* The hymns seem to have been written by a single author who claims direct inspiration for his oracles. They mention an incarnation (Odes Sol. 41.8-10) and a resurrection* (Odes Sol. 42.6) and have a strong missionary concern (Odes Sol. 12). The Odes read like OT psalms, with parallel lines in couplets (distichs), and are clearly meant for public reading or singing in worship.*

Syrian Christianity, although translating Greek Christian and philosophic works, developed a very different form of Christianity from that of the Roman Empire. Syrian Christianity spread first among Jewish trading communities and retained many Semitic characteristics. The Syrian literature, including exegesis, is more poetic than philosophic or dogmatic, often expressing ideas in hymns and parallel strophes. Images dominate over didactic or polemical discourse in the early literature. It is likely that the inferior position of Christians in Persian and Indian societies and the extensive persecutions produced the austere and at times ascetic life that is characteristic of the early Syrian church. From Syrian Christianity flowed both the extreme forms of asceticism (Stylites, Sons and Daughters of the Covenant) and the great missionary zeal that had reached China by 635.

See also ANTIOCH; IGNATIUS OF ANTIOCH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. A. Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (Bonn, 1922); S. P. Brock, The Bible in the Syriac Tradition (SEERI Correspondence Course on the Syrian Christian Heritage 1; Kottayam, 1989); idem, Syriac Perspectives on Late Antiquity (Collected Studies Series 119; London: Variorum Reprints, 1984); F. C. Burkitt, Early Eastern Christianity (London: John Murray, 1904); J. H. Charlesworth, The Odes of Solomon: Syriac Texts Edited with Translation and Notes (Oxford: Clarendon, 1973); J. M. Fiey, Jalons pour une histoire de l'Eglise en Iraq (Louvain: Secretariat du Corpus SCO, 1970); G. Howard, trans., The Teaching of Addai (Texts and Translations 16; Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1981); A. F. J. Klijn, The Acts of Thomas: Introduction, Text and Commentary (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1962); J. Labourt, Le Christianisme dans l'Empire Perse sous le dynastie Sassanide (Paris: Lecoffre, 1904); S. H. Moffett, A History of Christianity in Asia, 1: Beginnings to 1500 (San Francisco: Harper, 1992); A. M. Mundadan, History of Christianity in India, 1: From the Beginning Up to the Middle of the Sixteenth Century (Bangalore: Church History Association of India, 1989); R. Murray, Symbols of Church and Kingdom: A Study in Early Syriac Tradition (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1975); J. B. Segal, Edessa, "The Blessed City" (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1970); A. Voobus, Celibacy, A Requirement for Admission to Baptism in the Early Syrian Church (CSCO 128, Subsidia 3; Stockholm; Secretariat du Corpus SCO, 1951); idem, History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient: A Contribution to the History of Culture in the Near East, 1: The Origin of Ascetism: Early Monasticism in Persia (CSCO 184, Subsidia 14; Louvain: Secretariat du Corpus SCO, 1958); W. Wright, A Short History of Syriac Literature (Amsterdam: Philo Press, 1966 [1894]).

S. Sunquist

T

TABERNACLE, SANCTUARY

Paul applied the imagery and language of the temple* primarily to the people of God, defined in terms of their relationship to Christ (see DPL, Temple). This understanding is similarly expressed by Peter in his first letter and to an extent by John in the book of Revelation. However, John also recognizes that the dwelling of God in heaven is the locus of the true temple, and the believers' final incorporation into that temple is the consummation of God's purposes for his people. The writer to the Hebrews has a particular concern to establish the reality of the heavenly temple as the locus of Christ's redemptive activity, which has now superseded the earthly temple, being but a shadow of the true one in heaven. (For further background on the Jerusalem temple, which forms the basis of these writers' imagery, see DJG, Temple.)

1. Terminology
2. Acts
3. Hebrews
4. 1 Peter
5. Revelation
6. Apostolic Fathers

1. Terminology.

The Greek words for sanctuary (naos) and temple (hieron) are usually used to describe the inner sanctuary of the temple and the whole temple precincts respectively (Michel, 880-99); however, this is not an invariable distinction for all NT authors. In Acts, Luke uses hieron exclusively for the temple in Jerusalem* and naos when he refers to pagan temples (Acts 17:24; 19:24). When referring to the tabernacle of Moses,* he uses skēnē ("tent"; Acts 7:44; cf. Acts 15:16). In the book of Revelation, however, John uses naos exclusively for his description of the temple, whether earthly or heavenly. The writer to the Hebrews uses neither hieron nor naos. By contrast, this author uses hagion (or its plural form, hagia) and skēnē when referring to either the earthly tabernacle or the heavenly sanctuary. The apostolic fathers, however, use naos exclusively when referring to the temple, whether literally or metaphorically.

2. Acts.

The opening chapters of the book of Acts* focus particular attention upon the temple in Jerusalem (Acts 2:46; 3:1—4:4; 5:20-32, 42; 6:13-14; 7:44-50), and toward the end of the book the temple again figures prominently in the record of Paul's arrest (Acts 21:15—23:35; 24:6-18; 25:8). However, unlike the Pauline letters, there is no attempt by Luke to regard the church* as the new temple or the replacement of the temple. On the contrary, as J. B. Chance argues, the temple appears as a mark of continuity between the people of God under the old and new covenants.*

It has been argued by A. Cole and others that Stephen's* speech (esp. Acts 7:44-50) has an intrinsic though not explicit reference to the new temple being the church. However, this view has been challenged by those who argue that Luke is not propounding a replacement theology of the temple, in terms of the Messiah or his people (McKelvey, 87; Chance, 39-40). The contrast expressed in Stephen's speech is not one of temple and Christ or temple and church; rather it is between a house made with hands and a house made without hands: a contrast between the earthly temple and the heavenly temple (the latter being the pattern for the former, Acts 7:44). Luke's interest in the physical temple in Jerusalem is not to be thought incompatible with a replacement theology in which that temple is replaced; it is merely that we should recognize Luke has omitted an explicit statement of this idea.

3. Hebrews.

The letter to the Hebrews* is well known for its teaching concerning the heavenly temple. This is but one strand of many in the author's desire to establish the superiority of the new covenant to that of the old. Hebrews 8—10 are at the heart of the epistle, and here the writer expounds the relationship between the earthly tabernacle and its heavenly counterpart. As indicated (see 1 above), the usual words for temple and sanctuary are absent, the author preferring to use skēnē and hagion or hagia. The reason for this choice is most probably that the point of comparison for the writer is Moses' tabernacle rather than Solomon's temple, complementing the characterization of Jesus' superiority to Moses (Heb 3:3). Normally the author uses the two terms without any apparent difference in designation (Heb 13:11) and can even combine the two expressions in a hendiadys describing the one object (e.g., Heb 8:2; see Peterson, 130).

However, in Hebrews 9:11-12 the writer makes a distinction between the two terms, where the tent (skēnē) through which Jesus passed is distinguished from the holy place (ta hagia) that he entered (Peterson, 130; Lane, 237-38). However, it is likely that this distinction is made here only because it suits the author's purpose to distinguish between the front compartment and the rear compartment of the earthly tabernacle in order to draw a parallel between the first covenant and the second covenant. The spatial reference to the first (front) compartment is symbolized as a temporal reference, describing the Mosaic covenant with its attendant veil depicting, for the people, a barrier between them and the holy place. Yet now that Christ has entered through the skēnē and into the holy place, access to God's holy place has been permanently guaranteed.

For the writer to the Hebrews the sanctuary or holy place depicts the dwelling place and presence of God.* The Mosaic tabernacle is a copy of the true sanctuary in heaven* (Heb 8:5; cf. Heb 9:23) and therefore has pedagogic value for understanding the heavenly counterpart. However, the writer is not concerned to allegorize the various furnishings of the tabernacle, preferring instead to concentrate upon the broad sweep of redemptive history, which has been revealed by the Holy Spirit* (Heb 9:8). The heavenly sanctuary is not made with hands (Heb 9:11), unlike the earthly sanctuary (Heb 9:24); the heavenly sanctuary is not of this age (Heb 9:11, "of this creation"), unlike the earthly tabernacle, which is symbolic for the present age (Heb 9:9). For with the accomplishment of Christ* a new age has dawned, access to God's presence has been established through his blood, and believers are invited to enter that sanctuary where Jesus now is (Heb 10:19-22). Yet there is an eschatological* tension here, in that believers "have [already] come to Mt. Zion, the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem" (Heb 12:22). Entering the heavenly sanctuary, it would appear, has a present dimension to it as well as a future one, which provides a richer background for understanding Paul's concept of the people of God (see Church as Israel) being the temple of God in Christ.

4. 1 Peter.

The first letter of Peter (see 1 Peter) does not use the technical terminology for temple or sanctuary. However, the description of believers as living stones* being built into a spiritual house (oikos) to be a holy priesthood* offering spiritual sacrifices* is replete with temple imagery (1 Pet 2:4-10). Here the apostle* employs the language of the temple to describe Christians' relationship with Christ: they have come to him, the living stone (1 Pet 2:4). In the same way that the believers' inheritance is not in the land* of Israel but in heaven itself (1 Pet 1:3-5), it is not their relationship to the earthly temple that is of importance but their being joined to the eschatological temple that is being built in Christ. It is the temple of Christ's new community that is in view, and in this respect Peter's temple theology is an extension of Paul's understanding of the people of God as God's new temple, defined christologically.*

5. Revelation.

Unlike Hebrews, Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) uses the term naos (but neither hieron nor hagion) to describe the temple and skēnē to describe the tabernacle. The two words are virtually synonymous and always refer to the heavenly or eschatological reality (with the exception of Rev 11:1-2).

However, whereas Hebrews' use of temple imagery is primarily concerned with the redemptive historical accomplishment of Jesus' entrance into the holy of holies, Revelation has a focus upon the heavenly temple as the place of God's abode (Rev 15:8), the place from which the earth is governed and judgment* emanates (Rev 14:15, 17; 16:1, 17). Yet it is also the place of safety for the saints (Rev 3;12; 7:15). Where God is, there his temple is; from his throne issue both wrath* and mercy.* Although John does not show any interest in the earthly temple, his description of the heavenly temple containing the long-forgotten ark of the covenant (Rev 11:19) is clearly related to the sanctuary or temple of the OT. Yet there can be no physical temple in heaven. The saints themselves are pillars in God's temple (Rev 3:12). The reality of God dwelling with his people has arrived, and the need for copies of the original has passed. The city with its cubical dimensions (Rev 21:16-18) reflects the dimensions of the holy of holies, and John declares that there is no temple in the city, for the Lord God the Almighty and the Lamb* are its temple (Rev 21:22). In this final reference to the temple in the NT canon* the categories of temple are submerged in the vision* of God and the Lamb, in whose presence the saints experience the fulfillment of the promise* of God, to dwell with his people forever (Rev 22:1-5).

6. Apostolic Fathers.

Those postapostolic authors (see Apostolic Fathers) who make use of the temple imagery in their writings tend to follow the development of the Pauline corpus, where the focus is upon the Christian community or the individual Christian as the temple of the Holy Spirit. Thus Clement (see Clement of Rome) exhorts his readers to preserve the flesh as the temple (naos) of God (2 Clem. 9.3).

In the *Epistle of Barnabas the author devotes a whole section of his letter to the temple. He castigates the Jews for having put their faith in a temple building instead of God himself. By faith, believers have received remission of sins, and "God truly dwells in us, in the habitation which we are" (Barn. 16.8). Since God dwells in us, we are "a spiritual temple being built in the Lord" (Barn. 16.10).

Likewise Ignatius* exhorts the Philadelphians: "Keep your flesh as the temple of God" (Ign. Phld. 7.2). To the Ephesians, borrowing the language of 1 Peter, he writes: "You are stones of the temple of the Father made ready for the building of God . . . you are then all fellow travelers and carry with you God and the temple and Christ" (Ign. Eph. 9.1-2).

All these examples reflect the consistent application of temple imagery to the earthly locus, where God dwells in and among his people. The heavenly locus, as it was developed by the authors of Hebrews and Revelation, does not explicitly appear in the writings of the first three centuries, even though such a conception would not have been at variance with their teaching. Their concern was to impress upon their readers the reality of God dwelling in them and that they were living temples of God. It was a much later development that saw the imagery of the sanctuary and the temple being used to describe church buildings, an association that was unknown to the apostolic church and the apostolic fathers.

See also COVENANT, NEW COVENANT; GLORY; HEBREWS; OLD TESTAMENT IN HEBREWS; PRIEST, HIGH PRIEST; SACRIFICE, OFFERINGS, GIFTS; TEMPLE; WORSHIP AND LITURGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. B. Chance, Jerusalem, the Temple and the New Age in Luke-Acts (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1988); E. P. Clowney, "The Final Temple" in Studying the New Testament Today, ed. J. H. Skilton (Nutley, NJ: Presbyterian & Reformed, 1974) 97-132; A. Cole, The New Temple: A Study in the Origins of the Catechetical 'Form' of the Church in the New Testament (London: Tyndale, 1950); Y. M.-J. Congar, The Mystery of the Temple: The Manner of God's Presence to His Creatures from Genesis to the Apocalypse (London: Burns & Oates, 1962); W. J. Dumbrell, The End of the Beginning: Revelation 21—22 and the Old Testament (Sydney: Lancer, 1985); W. L. Lane, Hebrews (2 vols.; WBC; Dallas: Word, 1991); R. J. McKelvey, The New Temple: The Church in the New Testament (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1969); O. Michel, "ναός," TDNT 4:880-90; D. G. Peterson, Hebrews and Perfection (SNTSMS 47; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1982); G. Schrenk, "τὸ ἱερόν," TDNT 3:230-48. G. N. Davies

TABLE FELLOWSHIP. See FOOD, FOOD LAWS, TABLE FELLOWSHIP; HOSPITALITY; SOCIAL SETTING OF EARLY NON-PAULINE CHRISTIANITY.

TALMUD. See JUDAISM, POST-A.D. 70.

TANNAIM. See JUDAISM, POST-A.D. 70.

TARGUM. See JUDAISM, POST-A.D. 70.

TEACHING, PARAENESIS

Paraenesis is a technical term for moral exhortation and advice. While catechesis is the form of teaching that tends to emphasize basic instruction in the content of the faith, paraenesis is the instructional model in which ethical counsel and moral education were provided in a pattern of exhortation applied to practical problems or issues of living.

"Paraenesis" is a transliteration of the Greek noun parainesis ("advice"), a term that is abundant in secular Greek literature but absent from the NT. The verb parainеō ("advise," "exhort") occurs in the NT only at Acts 27:9, 22 in a nontechnical manner, where Paul "advises" the ship's officers not to sail the winter seas but then "exhorts" them to keep up their courage once they ignored his advice and set out to sea.

1. Background
2. Characteristics of Paraenesis
3. Paraenetic Forms

1. Background.

As an educational and literary form, paraenesis occurs throughout the ancient Mediterranean world. Since the major Hellenistic schools of philosophy (Stoics, Cynics, Epicureans) all emphasized ethics,* moral exhortation and advice, paraenesis is prominent in their writings. Seneca included consolation, warning, exhortation, scolding and praising as means of offering advice (Seneca Ep. Mor. 94.39).

The gulf from the fixed form of the Torah (and the later Prophets and Writings) to the situational needs of Israel's community contributed to the rise in the Jewish milieu of exegetical teaching traditions and paraenesis. The emergence of the paraenetic topos is bound up with the development of the wisdom tradition (e.g., Prov 10:1—22:16). The paraenetic Two Ways, as in Psalm 1, arises from the duality of Jewish ethical thinking (e.g., "the way of righteousness" and the "way of the wicked" and the "two inclinations" of the rabbinic tradition; cf. McDonald, 73-79).

2. Characteristics of Paraenesis.

Paraenesis is a complex subject that has recently become a focus of NT scholarship. While some scholars have attempted to draw distinct lines between forms of exhortation, such as protrepsis (exhortation to an agreed upon good), paraklēsis (exhortation of edification and encouragement) and paraenesis, recent scholarship has demonstrated that ancient usage was more vague (cf. Gammie, passim; Stowers, 91-94). In the NT recognizable paraenetic material is intertwined with paraklēsis to form a broader "word of exhortation." For example, the author of Hebrews* concludes his epistle with paraklēsis (parakaleō . . . paraklēseōs; Heb 13:22), which is included within a larger section of paraenesis (Heb 13:1-21). This forms a model of apostolic paraenesis quite similar to paraenetic conclusions found in other NT letters,* especially Paul's (cf. Meeks, 79-82; Lane, 497-507). The expression "word of exhortation" in Hebrews 13:22 is strikingly similar to the invitation offered to Paul and Barnabas to speak "a word of exhortation" to the Jews gathered in the synagogue* at Antioch of Pisidia (Acts 13:15). This may have been a fixed Hellenistic-Jewish expression (cf. 1 Macc 10:24; 2 Macc 7:24; 15:11; cf. 1 Macc 12:9) that was then taken up and combined with paraenetic expression by the Christian community (cf. Wills, 278-85).

Several important characteristics are shared between the classical form of paraenesis found in Greek literature and that found in the NT. Paraenesis is traditional, reflecting conventional wisdom generally approved by society (Isocrates Nicocles 40-41; cf. Phil 4:8); applicable to many situations (Seneca Ep. Mor. 94.32-35; cf. Gal 5:13-14); related or adapted to the immediate setting (Seneca Ep. Mor. 64.6-10; cf. 1 Cor 7:10-11, 17); so familiar that it is often presented as a "reminder" (Seneca Ep. Mor. 13.15; 94.21-25; cf. 1 Thess 4:1-2); exemplified in exceptional people who are models of virtue for the audience (Seneca Ep. Mor. 6.5-6; 11.9-10; 95.72; cf. Acts 20:31-35; 2 Thess 3:7; Phil 3:17; 4:9); usually transmitted by persons who are socially and morally superior to those they address; used to commend or compliment the audience for what they are already doing (cf. 1 Thess 4:1, 10; 5:11; Ign. Pol. 1.2; Ign. Eph. 4.1; Ign. Trall. 2.2; see Aune, 191; Malherbe, 65-66, 125).

D. E. Aune states, "Paraenesis is really an indirect way of addressing a behavioral problem. Since the content of paraenesis is generally approved by society, it provides a basis of agreement in situations that are potentially divisive" (191). We must add that paraenesis does not simply have the goal of social control or changing behavior. It often confirms existing behavior (Stowers, 92) and intensifies and reinforces values, convictions and attitudes (Thurén, 17-18).

3. Paraenetic Forms.

Paraenesis sometimes refers to content, that is, traditional maxims or precepts of wisdom, especially moral wisdom.* It could also refer to the form or process of addressing words of encouragement or discouragement about behavior to persons (Stowers, 91).

Paraenesis as a hortatory style occurs in diverse forms. A distinctive feature of Pauline letters is the presence of a concluding section of paraenesis (e.g., Rom 12:1—15:13; Gal 5:1—6:10; 1 Thess 4:1—5:22). In other NT letters paraenesis is woven throughout the composition (e.g., James,* Hebrews, 1-2 Corinthians, Philippians). Among the paraenetic forms found in the later NT and the apostolic fathers* are topos, vice and virtue* lists, codes of household ethics (see Household Codes) and the Two Ways tradition.

3.1. Topos. One of the most common forms of paraenesis is topos (pl. topoi), a word whose connotation of location or place—including geographical, physiological, psychological or ethical—made it suitable to use in rhetoric* to denote a commonplace of subjects related to questions of justice or politics. In paraenesis topos denotes a particular topic of moral concern. On the one hand paraenetical exhortation as found in Xenophon could include a listing of topoi in his record of the teaching of Socrates as courage, wisdom, prudence, justice, madness, envy, leisure, kings and rulers (Socrates Memorabilia 3.9). On the other hand a minimal topos may consist of only a sentence or so devoted to one subject, including an imperatival or gnomic statement such as Isocrates' charge, "Fear the gods; honor your parents as you would wish your children to act toward you" (Isocrates Dem. 16; see McDonald, 70-71).

The authors of the later NT material and the apostolic fathers addressed similar paraenetic procedures to the particular situations that they confronted (e.g., 1 Pet 1:13-16; 1 Clem. 38.1-4; cf. Bowe, 131-35). In addition they addressed paraenetical topoi to the institutional needs of the church and its ministry*; that is, paraenetical topoi were used by Christian writers to give guidance to Christians in areas of belief and conduct.

Topical figures in early church instruction were less frequent and less consciously rhetorical or literary than non-Christian counterparts. But when the extended simile and metaphor do occur they are integral to the purpose of the topic, such as in the simile in 1 Peter*: "Like newborn babes, long for the pure spiritual milk" (1 Pet 2:2; see Milk), or in the author's of Hebrews use of parabolē to denote Israel* being debarred from the inner sanctuary of the temple* as "symbolic for the present age" (Heb 9:9; cf. Heb 11:9), or the *Epistle of Barnabas's use of the latter twice in relation to scriptural interpretation (Barn. 6.10, citing Ex 33:1-3; cf. McDonald, 94).

3.2. Virtue and Vice Lists. Virtue* and vice lists were common in antiquity as means of delineating desired and undesired behaviors and values. The content of these lists as they are found in the later NT often display traditional values that are common to Jews, Christians and pagans. In the literature of the later NT we find lists of vices (e.g., Jas 1:21; 1 Pet 2:1; 4:3) and lists of virtues (Heb 7:26; 1 Pet 2:1), while in the apostolic fathers the lists become more extensive (e.g., 1 Clem. 13.1; 35.5; Did. 5; Pol. Phil. 2.2; 4.3; Herm. Man. 5.2; 6.2; 8.3-5; Herm. Sim. 6.5; 9.15).

3.3. Codes of Household Ethics. Household codes* of ethics (commonly referred to by the German Haustafeln, "house tablets") were widespread in the Greco-Roman world. These codes focused on three primary levels of reciprocal submission and obligations within the extended family: wives to husbands, slaves to masters, children to parents. Jewish forms of household codes are evident in the context of the Shema (Deut 6:4-9), in the Fourth Commandment and in the wisdom literature. The NT codes prominently include obligation to governmental authority (see Civil Authority). A code of household ethics is found in 1 Peter 2:11—3:12 (cf. 1 Tim 2:1-15; Tit 2:1-15; Eph 5:21—6:9; Col 3:19—4:1), in part occurring as an apologetic to show that Christianity was not culturally subversive (Balch, 81-109). Early Christianity apparently applied the household model to relationships within the church* itself, producing ecclesiastical station codes (e.g., 1 Clem. 1.3; 21.6-9; Ign. Pol. 4.1—6.1; Did. 4.9-11; Pol. Phil. 4.1—6.3; Aune, 196; McDonald, 97-98, 190).

3.4. Two Ways Tradition. The Two Ways motif, drawing on two ways or paths as a metaphor for a life of vice or virtue, was frequently used in the Greco-Roman world. This metaphor was a staple of Jewish wisdom, eschatology* and apocalyptic* and is prominent in the teaching of Jesus and in early Christian paraenesis. We find the Two Ways motif in the paraenesis of James 4, the light* and dark contrasts in the epistles of John (see John, Letters of) and the eschatological contrasts in 2 Peter 2:1-2. The metaphor is introduced similarly in Didache 1—6 and Barnabas 18—21, leading to extensive Two Ways material. Ignatius* gives two ways of life* and death as ultimate alternatives, but no moral exhortation is included (cf. McKenna, 403-6; Bauckham, 238-43; van de Sandt, 40-41; Aune, 197).

See also COMMANDMENTS; ETHICS; HOUSEHOLD CODES; KERYGMA AND DIDACHE; MILK, SOLID FOOD; PASTORAL THEOLOGY; RHETORIC, RHETORICAL CRITICISM; VIRTUES AND VICES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. D. E. Aune, The New Testament in Its Literary Environment (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1987); D. L. Balch, Let Wives Be Submissive: The Domestic Code in 1 Peter (SBLMS 26; Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1981); R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); B. E. Bowe, A Church in Crisis: Ecclesiology and Paraenesis in Clement of Rome (HDR 23; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1993); J. G. Gammie, "Paraenetic Literature: Toward the Morphology of a Secondary Genre," Semeia 50 (1990) 41-77; D. Hill, " 'To Offer Spiritual Sacrifices. . . ' (1 Pet 2:5): Liturgical Formulations and Christian Paraenesis in 1 Peter," JSNT 16 (1982) 45-63; W. L. Lane, Hebrews (2 vols.; WBC 47; Dallas: Word, 1991); E. Lohse, "Parenesis and Kerygma in 1 Peter" in Perspectives on First Peter, ed. C. H. Talbert (NABPRSS 9; Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1986) 37-59; J. I. H. McDonald, Kerygma and Didache: The Articulation and Structure of the Earliest Christian Message (SNTSMS 37; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1980); M. M. McKenna, " 'The Two Ways' in Jewish and Christian Writings of the Greco-Roman Period: A Study of the Form of Repentance Parenesis" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, University of Pennsylvania, 1981); A. J. Malherbe, Moral Exhortation: A Greco-Roman Sourcebook (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1986); W. A. Meeks, The Origins of Christian Morality: The First Two Centuries (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1993); S. K. Stowers, Letter Writing in Greco-Roman Antiquity (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1986); L. Thurén, Argument and Theology in 1 Peter: The Origins of Christian Paraenesis (JSNTSup 114; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1995); H. W. M. van de Sandt, "Didache 3.1-6: A Transformation of an Existing Jewish Hortatory Pattern," JSJ 23 (1992) 21-41; L. Wills, "The Form of the Sermon in Hellenistic Judaism and Early Christianity," HTR 77 (1984) 277-99.

M. J. Wilkins

TEACHINGS OF SILVANUS. See APOCRYPHAL AND PSEUDEPIGRAPHAL WRITINGS.

TEMPLE

The temple in Jerusalem* was of central importance within early Judaism. The primitive communities of Christians reflected in the NT are examples of Judaic movements, and they developed distinctive policies toward the cult and the temple. Those policies clearly reflect the theological processes which brought about the emergence of early Christianity as separable from Judaism at the close of the NT period (see Christianity and Judaism).

1. The Operation of the Second Temple
2. The Attitude of Jesus Toward the Temple and Its Cult
3. The Cultic Piety of the Circle of Peter
4. The Cultic Piety of the Circle of James
5. The Assimilation of the Temple's Function by the Community
6. The Theology of the Definitive Replacement of the Temple

1. The Operation of the Second Temple. The temple was the place of God's* dwelling, where his "glory"* (or, as was said during the Rabbinic period, his "Presence" [šᵉkînâ]) abides. That understanding has been well established in research; the architecture of the temple in Jerusalem attests it (see DJG, Temple, §1). But the picture of the temple as a divine "house" is only helpful when it is borne in mind that the house was not only for God but for his people and his goods: the entire household was involved in sacrificial activity. Sacrifice* involved all Israel, and even those beyond the territorial limits of Israel.

Deuteronomy identifies Jerusalem as the single "place" (hāmāqôm) where God is to be worshiped (Deut 12:5-14). Sacrifices to the Lord elsewhere are specifically prohibited (Deut 12:13, 14), and the complete destruction of the "places" of all other gods is prescribed (Deut 12:2, 3). Provisions are made for the long journeys which centralization sometimes demanded: sacrifices of the tithe may be converted into money, which is then used to purchase food and drink to eat before the Lord (Deut 14:22-27). Contrary to the prescriptions of Leviticus, the slaughter and consumption of animals outside of Jerusalem, explicitly as non-sacrificial, is permitted, provided the blood is poured out and the beast concerned is not owed as a sacrifice (Deut 12:15-28; see Purity and Impurity).

The strict limitation of sacrifice to Jerusalem creates the imperative of the pilgrimage. Being in the "place" is naturally an occasion for joy (Deut 12:7, 12, 18). Sacrifice in Jerusalem is the celebration and at the same time a guarantee of prosperity. Disobedience, within the Deuteronomic scheme, can only result in Israel's destruction, its scattering in the manner of the Assyrian conquest (Deut 4:25-31). But keeping the commandments ensures that the Lord will give possession of the land to his people, thrust out their enemies, and provide physical and agricultural prosperity and freedom from disease (Deut 6:17-19; 7:1-16). The dynamic heart of the promise is that Israel is holy, a people for the possession of God (Deut 7:6): the central fact that God has acquired Israel is the sole cause of their redemption from Egypt and their future prosperity in just those aspects in which Egypt had been afflicted (Deut 7:7-16). Sacrificial "rejoicing" is a way both to celebrate and to secure that blessing of God which is Israel's prosperity.

The terms of reference established by sacrifice as an act of "rejoicing" in the single, sacred "place" from which God gives Israel prosperity are precisely observed in the calendar in Deuteronomy 16. The three feasts of Passover, Weeks and Sukkoth are carefully specified, and each—even Passover, originally a domestic meal (see Ex 12)—is made the occasion of pilgrimage. The feasts of pilgrimage are occasions on which both the map and the calendar of Israel are routinely redrawn. Three times a year, Israel is back in the desert, redeemed from Egypt, new in their freedom, living in booths. The land which has so desperately been sought and acquired disappears from view, in order to be received again as the gift of God to his own people, complete with the prosperity and health he alone can bestow. Variety in the understanding of the worship which God requires in the single temple is evident within the Hebrew Bible itself. But the Deuteronomic prescriptions give a good indication of the prevailing rationale of cultic practice, as it was based upon the Mosaic covenant. Pluralization in definitions of Judaism was more radical by the first century (see DJG, Judaism, §4; the discussion which follows supplements that description).

The Sadducees probably owe their name to Zadok (the priest of David's and Solomon's time), but their loyalty to the settlement in the temple, in which the Romans effectively chose high priests, made them appear to many to be upholders of privilege. Josephus describes attempts by prophetic pretenders and later Zealots to disentangle the operation of the temple from collaboration with Rome (see J.W. 2.13.3-6 §§254-65; 7.11.1-2 §§437-46; and, on the Zealots, J.W. 2.20.3 §§564-65; 4.4.1 §§224-25). Even among the priesthood, nationalism was a natural outgrowth of a desire for the cultic integrity of the temple (see J.W. 2.20.3-4 §§562-68).

The apocalyptic* perspective within early Judaism also resulted in critical attitudes toward the temple (cf. DJG, Judaism, §4.1; Dead Sea Scrolls, §1.2.1; Temple, §2). The book of Daniel (Dan 7—12) anticipates by visionary means an eschatological triumph, of which the principal agent is the archangel Michael (Dan 12:1-4); the temple's renewal is part of the scenario (Dan 12:11-12). Several of the documents found near Qumran represent an apocalyptic point of view and envisage that the sect of covenanters will direct the operation of the temple in the final days (see 1QM, 1QS, CD). More recently discovered materials (Temple Scroll, New Jerusalem, Miqsat Ma'aseh Torah) attest a directly practical interest in the conduct of sacrifice in Jerusalem. Josephus reports that one of the priestly nationalists involved as a general with him in the war against Rome was John the Essene (J.W. 2.20.4 §567; 3.2.1 §11; 3.2.2 §19), and he relates the repute of the Essenes for courage under Roman torture (J.W. 2.8.10 §§152-53). Indeed, the correspondence between Josephus's extensive description of the Essenes (J.W. 2.8.2-13 §§119-61) and the evidence which continues to emerge from Qumran is such as to make recent attempts to drive a wedge between the two seem even more apologetic than Josephus himself was.

The Pharisees, in their attempt to influence what the high priests did in the temple rather than to replace those institutions definitively, appear more conservative than the Essenes and nationalistic priestly families. Josephus reports that the Pharisees made known their displeasure at Alexander Jannaeus by inciting a crowd to pelt him with lemons (at hand for a festal procession) at the time he should have been offering sacrifice. His response to the claim that he was unfit to hold office was to have some six thousand people killed (Ant. 13.13.5 §§372-73). Josephus also relates, from a later period, the teaching of the rabbis (probably Pharisees) who were implicated in dismantling the eagle Herod had erected over a gate of the temple (J.W. 1.33.2-4 §648-55; Ant. 17.6.2-4 §§149-67). That gesture was less subversive of the established authority in the cult than what earlier Pharisees had done, but Herod correctly understood that it was a deliberate challenge to his authority, and he responded with summary executions.

Paradoxically the willingness of the Pharisees to consider the Hasmoneans and Herodians in their priestly function, in distinction from the Essenes, involved them not only in symbolic disputes but in vocal and bloody confrontations. Alexander Jannaeus is reported to have executed by crucifixion eight hundred opponents, either Pharisees or those with whom the Pharisees sympathized, and to have slaughtered their families; but his wife came to an accommodation with the Pharisees which guaranteed them considerable influence (J.W. 1.4.6—1.5.3 §96-114).

2. The Attitude of Jesus Toward the Temple and Its Cult.

The expulsion of traders in animals is the single point of consensus in the canonical Gospels concerning what Jesus did during his occupation of the temple. Indeed, it is the only specific point mentioned in Luke (Lk 19:45-48), which presents the sparsest account (cf. Mt 21:12-16; Mk 11:15-18; Jn 2:14-22). The expulsion of the traders is what is agreed in the Gospels (cf. Gos. Thom. 64) to have been the point of Jesus' action; the action was immediately directed at neither the Romans nor the high priests and had nothing whatever to do with destroying the fabric of the edifice itself. Once it is appreciated that Jesus' maneuver in the temple was in the nature of a claim upon territory in order to eject those performing an activity of which he evidently disapproved, it is more straightforward to characterize it as an "occupation," rather than a "demonstration"; the traditional "cleansing" is obviously an apologetic designation. But the target of his activity makes good sense within the context of what we know of the activities of certain Pharisaic or early rabbinic teachers.

Hillel insisted that owners should lay their hands on their offerings prior to giving them over to priests for slaughter. Another rabbi was so struck by the rectitude of Hillel's position, he had some 3,000 animals brought to the temple, and gave them to those who were willing to lay hands on them in advance of sacrifice (b. Beṣah 20a, b; the passage is discussed further in DJG, Rabbinic Traditions and Writings, §4). The tradition concerning Hillel envisages the opposite movement from what is represented in the tradition concerning Jesus: animals are introduced rather than their traders expelled. But the purpose of the action by Hillel's supporter is to enforce a certain understanding of correct offering. Hillel's rule requires the participation of the offerer by virtue of his ownership of what is offered. Jesus' occupation may be understood—along lines similar to those involved in the provision of animals to support Hillel's position—as an attempt to insist that the offerer's actual ownership of what is offered is a vital aspect of sacrifice. Jesus wanted Israel to offer of its own, not to purchase sacrifices in the temple.

From a period slightly later than that of Jesus, Mishnah (Ker. 1:7) relates a story concerning Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, who crafted his teaching in order to bring down the price of offerings in the temple, which he considered to be exorbitant (see DJG, Rabbinic Traditions, §4.3). Hillel, Simeon and Jesus are all portrayed as interested in how animals are offered to the extent that they intervene in the court of the temple in order to influence the ordinary course of worship. Jesus can best be understood within the context of a particular dispute in which the Pharisees took part, a controversy over where action was to occur. In that the dispute was intimately involved with the issue of how animals were to be procured, it manifests a focus upon purity which is akin to that attributed to Hillel and Simeon.

The Gospels describe the southern side of the outer court as the place where Jesus expelled the traders. The exterior court was well suited for trade, since it was surrounded by porticos on the inside, following Herod's architectural preferences. But the assumption of rab-binic literature and Josephus is that the market for the sale of sacrificial beasts was not normally located in the temple at all, but in a place called Hanuth (meaning "market" in Aramaic) on the Mount of Olives, across the Kidron Valley. V. Eppstein has argued that rabbinic literature attests the innovation to which Jesus objected. It is recorded that, some forty years before the destruction of the temple, the principal council of Jerusalem was removed from the place in the temple called the Chamber of Hewn Stone to Hanuth (cf. b. 'Abod. Zar. 8b; Šabb. 15a; Sanh. 41a). Eppstein argues that Caiaphas both expelled the Sanhedrin and introduced the traders into the temple.

Caiaphas enjoyed a good relationship with Pilate, under whom he served for ten years, and on whose departure he was removed (Josephus Ant. 18.4.3 §90-95). Given that he enjoyed the support of the Romans, and that he was involved in disputes concerning the location of the council, the allegation of the Gospels that trade was permitted in the temple during his tenure seems plausible.

From the point of view of Pharisaism generally, trade in the southern side of the outer court would have been anathema. Purses were not permitted in the temple according to the Pharisees' teaching (m. Ber. 9:5). Sufficient money might be brought to put directly into the large containers for alms (cf. m. Šeqal. 6:1, 5; 7:1), to purchase seals redeemable for libations (cf. m. Šeqal. 5:4) and/or to exchange against Tyrian coinage in order to pay the annual half-shekel (cf. m. Šeqal. 1:3; 2:1), but the introduction of trade for animals into the temple rendered the ideal of not bringing into the temple more than would be consumed there impracticable. (References in Mt 21:12 and Mk 11:15 to people selling and buying animals within the court may even imply that serial transactions were involved.) Moreover, the installation of traders in the porticos would also have involved the removal of those teachers, Pharisaic and otherwise, who taught and observed in the temple itself (cf. m. Sanh. 11:2; Pesaḥ 26a).

From the point of view of the smooth conduct of sacrifice, of course, the innovation was sensible. One could know at the moment of purchase that one's sacrifice was acceptable and not run the risk of harm befalling the animal on its way to be slaughtered. It is therefore unnecessary to impute malicious motives to Caiaphas in order to understand what was going on, although it may be assumed that additional profit for the temple was also involved. But when we look at the installation of the traders from the point of view of Hillelite Pharisaism, for example, Jesus' objection becomes understandable. Hillel had taught that one's sacrifice had to be shown to be one's own, by the imposition of hands; part of the necessary preparation was not just of people to the south and beasts to the north, but the connection between the two by appropriation. Caiaphas's innovation was sensible on the understanding that sacrifice was simply a matter of offering pure, unblemished animals. But it failed in Pharisaic terms and in the terms of Jesus, not only in its introduction of the necessity for commerce into the temple, but also in its breach of the link between worshiper and offering in the sacrificial action.

3. The Cultic Piety of the Circle of Peter.

One of the principal reasons that make it plain that Jesus himself was loyal to the temple, even as he attempted to insist upon a distinctive view of the purity God requires within it, is that the movement which continued in his name after the crucifixion was largely centered in the temple. The picture provided in Acts* is clear and consistent: under the leadership of Peter* and a group of Twelve, the followers of Jesus lived commonly, broke bread together regularly in their homes and participated in the cult in the manner of devoted, nonpriestly Israelites (see Acts 1:12-26; 2:46; 3:1-26; 4:1-37).

Within Jesus' practice, meals had been occasions on which eating together had been taken as a pledge of the festivity of the kingdom* of God (see Mt 8:11, 12; Lk 13:28, 29). Near the end of his life, Jesus had approved the communal wine and bread as more acceptable to God than regular sacrifice. With the words "this is my blood" and "this is my flesh" Jesus insisted that God approved a meal in his fellowship more than the conduct of worship* in the temple, where sacrificial arrangements had become too commercial (Mt 26:26, 28; Mk 14:22, 24; Lk 22:19-20; 1 Cor 11:24-25; Justin Apol. I 66.3).

The Petrine circle literally domesticated such meals, holding them at home and yet deliberately taking part in the worship of the temple (see Lord's Supper; Worship). At the same time, Peter's group accommodated the meal of fellowship to the general, ancient and widespread practice of blessing what was consumed at meals (see m. Ber. 6:5-8 and b. Ber. 41b—45a), beginning with bread (see b. Ber. 46a).

Acts also places Peter in Samaria* (Acts 8:14-25), Lydda (Acts 9:32-35), Joppa (Acts 9:36-43) and Caesarea (Acts 10:1-48; 12:19). Paul refers, as if as a matter of course, to Peter's presence personally in Antioch* (see Gal 2:11-14), and by the time of 1 Peter* he is pictured as writing from Rome with Silvanus (see 1 Pet 5:12-13) to churches in the northeast of Asia Minor (1 Pet 1:1, 2). If, then, Jerusalem* was a center for Peter in the way it was not for Jesus, it was certainly not a limit of his operations. Rather, the temple appears to have featured as the hub of a much wider network of contacts which linked Jews from abroad and even Gentiles* (see Acts 10:1-48; 11:1-18, 15:1-11 with Gal 2:1-14) in common recognition of a new, eschatological fellowship defined by the teaching of Jesus. The Petrine circle took part in worship within the temple, embracing it in a way Jesus had not, and yet at the same time viewed Jesus as the source of a teaching which envisaged the participation in worship of those far outside Jerusalem. Peter's activity, centered on but not limited to Jerusalem, was motivated by the eschatological* promise of Zion's place at the heart of the worshiping nations.

4. The Cultic Piety of the Circle of James. Hegesippus—as cited by Eusebius (Hist. Eccl. 2.23.1-18)—characterizes James,* Jesus' brother, as the person to whom immediate control of the church in Jerusalem passed. James practiced a careful and idiosyncratic purity in the interests of worship in the temple. He abstained from wine and animal flesh, did not cut his hair or beard and forsook oil and bathing. If the report of Hegesippus is to be taken at face value, those special practices gave him access even to the sanctuary. Josephus reports he was killed in the temple c. 62 at the instigation of the high priest Ananus during the interregnum between the Roman governors Festus and Albinus (Josephus Ant. 20.9.1 §§197-203).

In addition to the sort of close association with the temple which could and did result in conflict with the authorities there, the circle of James is expressly claimed in Acts to have exerted authority as far away as Antioch, by means of emissaries who spoke Greek (Acts 15:13-35). The particulars of the dispute (with both Pauline and Petrine understandings of purity) will not detain us here (see Purity and Impurity), but it is of immediate import that James alone determines the outcome of apostolic policy. James in Acts agrees that Gentiles who turn to God* are not be encumbered with needless regulations (Acts 15:19), and yet he insists they be instructed by letter to abstain "from the pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from what is strangled, and from blood" (Acts 15:20).

The grounds given for the Jacobean policy are that the law* of Moses is commonly acknowledged (Acts 15:21); the implication is that to disregard such elemental considerations of purity as James specifies would be to dishonor Moses.* Judas Barsabbas and Silas are then dispatched with Paul and Barnabas to deliver the letter in Antioch along with their personal testimony (Acts 15:22-29) and are said particularly to continue their instruction as prophets* (Acts 15:32, 33). They refer to the regulations of purity as necessities (Acts 15:28), and no amount of Lukan gloss can conceal that what they insist upon is a serious challenge of Paul's position (compare 1 Cor 8, which is ignorant of the so-called decree).

James's devotion to the temple is also reflected in Acts 21. When Paul arrives in Jerusalem, James and the presbyters with him express concern at the rumor that Paul is telling Jews who live among the Gentiles not to circumcise* their sons. Their advice is for Paul to demonstrate his piety by purifying himself, paying the expenses of four men under a vow and entering the temple with them (Acts 21:17-26). The result is a disastrous misunderstanding. Paul is accused of introducing "Greeks" into the temple, a riot ensues and Paul himself is arrested (Acts 21:27-36). James is not mentioned again in Acts, but Hegesippus's notice would suggest his devotion to the temple did not wane.

Within the Gospels certain passages reflect the exceptional devotion of James's circle to the temple. The best example is Mark 7:6-13 (and, with an inverted structure, Mt 15:3-9); although the topic of the chapter overall is purity, the issue addressed in the passage itself is the sanctity of the temple (Mk 7:6-13). The issue is spelled out in terms of a dispute concerning qôrbān, the Aramaic term for a cultic gift (Mk 7:11).

The dispute reflects Jesus' own stance, that what is owed to one's parents cannot be sheltered by declaring it dedicated to the temple. The crucial point of such a gambit of sheltering is that one might continue to use the property after its dedication, while what was given to a person would be transferred forthwith. The basic complaint about the practice, especially as stated in the simple epigram of Mark 7:11-12, derives from Jesus. The complaint is characteristic of him; quite aside from his occupation of the temple, he criticized commercial arrangements there (see Mt 17:24-27; Mk 12:41-44; Lk 21:1-4).

The dominical epigram has here been enveloped in a much more elaborate argument. Mark 7:6-13 is a syllogism, developed by means of scriptural terms of reference. Isaiah's complaint (Is 29:13) frames the entire argument: the people claim to honor God, but their heart is as far from him as their vain worship, rooted in human commandments (Mk 7:6b-7). That statement is related in Mark 7:10-12 to the tradition of qôrbān, taken as an invalidation of the Mosaic prescription to honor parents. The simple and unavoidable conclusion is that the tradition violates the command of God (Mk 7:8-9, 13).

The argument as it stands insists upon the integrity of the temple and the strict regulation of conduct there; it attacks opponents for too little concern for the temple, not too much. At the same time the passage presents Jesus as maintaining a literal loyalty to the Scriptures (in their Septuagintal form), which the Pharisees did not. Those aspects of the presentation of Jesus' saying are arguably typical of the circle of James.

5. The Assimilation of the Temple's Function by the Community.

Jesus' conception at the end of his ministry was that his meals, his wine and bread, were more acceptable to God as "blood" and "flesh" than sacrifices in the temple were. In the circles of Peter and of James, as well as in other communities of primitive Christianity, a cultic understanding of the meal was preserved (and developed further). That practice led naturally to the claim that a church at worship* took the place of the temple.

The theme is evident in Pauline and deutero-Pauline passages such as 1 Corinthians 3:16-17; 6:19; 2 Corinthians 6:14-7:1; Ephesians 2:19-22 (see DPL, Temple). Comparable claims in the Dead Sea Scrolls (see, for example 1QS 9:5-6) demonstrate that the assimilation of cultic functions by a community need not imply that the temple is no longer the place of divinely mandated worship. The Essenes envisaged their place in the temple, as did James, Peter and Paul.

The assimilation of the functions of the temple, however, could develop into the expectation of its eschatological replacement. The Revelation of John represents that development clearly. The confident statement in the vision of the New Jerusalem in Revelation 21:22, "I saw no temple" in the city, probably reflects the awareness that the edifice had been destroyed as a result of the Roman siege of Jerusalem. But the theology of the passage is its real contribution, "for its temple is the Lord God the almighty and the lamb." Here a major theme of the Revelation that Jesus as the Lamb of God is the object of heavenly worship (see Rev 5 and Jn 1:29) finds its climax. In time to come, Jesus is to assume all the value of the temple itself.

The theme of the eschatological replacement of the temple is also voiced in the Gospels. The most obvious case is the interpreted compendium of Jesus sayings in Mark 13 (with Mt 24-25; Lk 21:5-36), a complex of material developing an apocalyptic scenario in which the most important elements are the destruction of the temple and Jesus' coming as the triumphant Son of Man of Daniel 7.

A less obvious instance of the theme of the eschatological replacement of the temple is the way in which Jesus' occupation of the temple is presented in Mark 11:15 and Matthew 21:12, but not in Luke 19:45. Instead of simply objecting on the ground of purity to trading in the temple, Jesus is made to attack those who were changing money for the annual tax of the half shekel. The fact of the matter is that every year money changing for that purpose went on publicly throughout Israel. The process commenced a full month before Passover, with a proclamation concerning the tax (m. Šeqal. 1:1), and exchanges were set up in the provinces ten days before they were set up in the temple (m. Šeqal. 1:3). Moreover, according to Josephus the tax was not even limited to those resident in the land of Israel (Josephus J.W. 7.6.6 §218; Ant. 18.9.1 §312), so that the procedure itself would not have been stopped by the sort of interruption the Gospels describe.

For reasons which have already been discussed, Jesus' occupation of the temple for the purpose of expelling vendors should be acknowledged as fully historical. The additional aspect of expelling the money-changers provided warrant at a later stage for the refusal of churches to participate in the collection of the half shekel (both in Jerusalem and abroad). John's picture (Jn 2:13-17), in which the smaller coins involved in the sale of animals were scattered, is historically plausible but also shows (in Jn 2:17-22) how the tradition developed toward the symbol of eschatological replacement, which Matthew and Mark present in narrative terms with the expulsion of the money-changers.

6. The Theology of the Definitive Replacement of the Temple.

The Epistle to the Hebrews* spells out how Jesus' replacement of the temple is not simply eschatological but already accomplished and definitive. Chapter nine of Hebrews begins with the "first" covenant's regulations for sacrifice,* involving the temple in Jerusalem. Specific mention is made of the menorah, the table and presented bread in the holy place, with the holy of holies empty but for the gold censer and the ark (Heb 9:2-5). The reference to the censer as being in the holy of holies fixes the point in time of which the author speaks: it can only be the day of atonement, when the high priest made his single visit to that sanctum, censer in hand (Lev 16).

That precise moment is only specified in order to be fixed, frozen forever. For Hebrews, what was a fleeting movement in the case of the high priest was an eternal truth in the case of Jesus. The movement of ordinary priests* in and out of the holy place, the "first tabernacle*" (Heb 9:6), while the high priest could only enter "the second tabernacle," the holy of holies (Heb 9:7), once a year, was designed by the spirit of God as a parable: the way into the holy of holies could not be revealed while the first temple, the first tabernacle and its service continued (Heb 9:8-10). That way could only be opened, after the temple was destroyed, by Christ,* who became high priest and passed through "the greater and more perfect tabernacle" of his body (Heb 9:11) by the power of his own blood (Heb 9:12) so that he could find eternal redemption in the sanctuary.

Signal motifs within the Gospels are developed in the Hebrews passage. The identification of Jesus' death* and the destruction of the temple, which the Gospels achieve in narrative terms, is assumed to be complete. (It is not even clear what exactly the author made of the interim between the two events.) Moreover, the passage takes it for granted that Jesus' body was a kind of "tabernacle," an instrument of sacrifice (Heb 9:11), apparently because the Gospels speak of his offering his body and his blood in the words of institution. (And John, of course, actually has Jesus refer to "the temple of his body," Jn 2:21.) "Body" and "blood" here are Jesus' self-immolating means to his purpose as high priest. In Hebrews the temple in Jerusalem has been replaced by a purely ideological construct. The true high priest has entered once for all (Heb 9:12) within the innermost recess of sanctity, so that no further sacrificial action is necessary or appropriate.

From the perspective of Hebrews there is only a short step to that of the Epistle of Barnabas (c. A.D. 130), where it is held that "the spiritual temple," God's word dwelling in the believer, takes the place of the temple of Jerusalem (Barn. 16.6-10). The physical temple was always a mistaken attempt to worship God; it was destined for destruction (Barn. 16.1-5). A proper, allegorical reading of such rites as the Day of Atonement (Barn. 7.3-11) and the red heifer (Barn. 8.1-7) testifies to the reality of Christ at the heart of Israel's Scripture; he is the truth behind the veil of the temple.

See also CHRISTIANITY AND JUDAISM: PARTINGS OF THE WAYS; EBIONITES; JERUSALEM, ZION, HOLY CITY; JEWISH CHRISTIANITY; JUDAISM, POST A.D. 70; LORD'S SUPPER, LOVE FEAST; PRIEST, HIGH PRIEST; SACRIFICE, OFFERINGS, GIFTS; SYNAGOGUE; TABERNACLE, SANCTUARY; WORSHIP AND LITURGY.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. G. A. Anderson, Sacrifices and Offerings in Ancient Israel: Studies in their Social and Political Importance (HSMS 41; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1987); T. S. Beall, Josephus' Description of the Essenes Illustrated by the Dead Sea Scrolls (SNTSMS 58; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1988); Th. A. Busink, Der Tempel von Jerusalem von Salomo bis Herodes: Eine archäologisch-historische Studie unter Berücksichtigung des westsemitischen Tempelbaus, 2 vols. (SFSMD 3; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1970, 1980); B. Chilton, The Temple of Jesus: His Sacrificial Program within a Cultural History of Sacrifice (University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press, 1992); idem, "[ὡς]" φραγέλλιον ἐκ σχοινίων [John 2:15]" in Templum Amicitiae: Essays on the Second Temple Presented to Ernst Bammel, ed. W. Horbury (JSNTS up 48; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1991) 330-44; V. Epstein, "The historicity of the Gospel account of the Cleansing of the Temple," ZNW 55 (1964) 42-58; J. Gnilka, "2 Cor 6:14-7:1 in the Light of the Qumran texts and the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs" in Paul and Qumran. Studies in New Testament Exegesis, ed. J. Murphy-O'Connor (London: Chapman, 1968) 48-86; M. Haran, Temples and Temple-Service in Ancient Israel: An Inquiry into the Character of Cult Phenomena and the Historical Setting of the Priestly School (London: Oxford University Press, 1978); J. Jeremias, Jesus' Promise to the Nations (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1982) 65-70; K. Lake, "The Apostolic Council of Jerusalem" in The Acts of the Apostles, ed. F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1979) 5.195-212; B. A. Levine, In the Presence of the LORD: A Study of Cult and some Cultic Terms in Ancient Israel (SJLA 5; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1974); C. Roth, "The Cleansing of the Temple and Zechariah XIV 21," NovT 4 (1960) 174-81; W. R. Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites: Burnett Lectures (London: Black, [1889] 1901); M. Weinfeld, Deuteronomy and the Deuteronomic School (Oxford: Clarendon, 1972); K. Wengst, Tradition und Theologie des Barnabasbriefes (AK 42; Berlin: de Gruyter, 1971); R. K. Yerkes, Sacrifice in Greek and Roman Religions and Early Judaism: The Hale Lectures (New York: Scribner's, 1952).

B. Chilton

TEMPTATION

The NT assumes every Christian is destined to undergo temptation, even as Christ did. Temptation occurs when Satan uses life's circumstances to confront people with the opportunity to sin, to choose an action that goes against the character and will of God. Temptation focuses on causing Christians to fall away from faith in Christ.

1. New Testament Terminology
2. The General Epistles and Revelation
3. Evil Inclination
4. Early Church Fathers

1. New Testament Terminology.

The key Greek word that carries the concept of "tempt" in the NT is peirazō. This word describes the devil's approach to Jesus in the wilderness after his baptism* (Mt 4:1, 3; Mk 1:13; Lk 4:1, 3, 13) but also the predicaments the Pharisees and Sadducees set before Jesus, such as demanding a sign from heaven* (Mt 16:1; Mk 8:11; Lk 11:16), questioning him about divorce (Mt 19:3; Mk 10:2), handing him a coin (Mt 22:18; Mk 12:13), pressing him about which is the greatest commandment* (Mt 22:35) and casting an adulterous woman at his feet (Jn 8:6). Luke 22:28 uses this word to characterize his entire ministry.

Satan,* though not always named, is assumed to be the tempter or the agent wanting Christians to fail and sin (1 Cor 7:5; 1 Thess 3:5; Rev 3:1). However, Paul can characterize Jews as tempting him by their plots (Acts 20:19).

God* can be tempted in the sense that his character and will may be challenged, as when Ananias and Sapphira tempt the Holy Spirit* by lying to the church* (Acts 5:9) and when the church is said to tempt God by demanding Gentiles* be circumcised* before they can be Christians (Acts 15:10).

Peirazō most often is used in this pejorative sense. It can, however, convey the sense of a test or a trial in which success is likely. Thus before feeding the five thousand Jesus tests Philip* about acquiring bread (Jn 6:6). James 1:2 speaks of trials as beneficial to Christians. Paul encourages believers periodically to test themselves to determine if they are "in the faith" (2 Cor 13:5).

Used in this sense, peirazō overlaps in meaning with dokimazō, which means "test" in the sense of proving one's success or worthiness. Deacons must be proved (1 Tim 3:10). Spirits must be proved (1 Jn 4:1). Faith* must be proved genuine (1 Pet 1:7). After using peirazō initially in 2 Corinthians 13:5, Paul conveys his hope that believers will not fail their self-examination by using dokimazō five times in the next two verses. By definition James 1:12 asserts that one who "endures testing" (peirazō) is "proved" (dokimazō).

2. The General Epistles and Revelation.

2.1. Temptation Expected and Welcomed. Because temptation in the form of testing provides opportunity for growth and maturity, James 1:2 emphasizes that it should be not only expected but also welcomed. This can happen "whenever" (hotan) it occurs, and it should be anticipated with "all joy." James 1:5 assumes that wisdom* from God is both attained and received during the course of succeeding against trial and temptation. According to James 1:12, opportunity to receive "the crown of life" necessarily depends not only on experiencing trials and temptations but also on overcoming them.

1 Peter 1:6-9 underlines the necessity of trials and temptations in believers' lives. They take place "so that your faith might demonstrate itself proved." Understanding that these experiences may be painful, 1 Peter 1:5 speaks of suffering.* Yet, precisely because of overcoming challenges to faith, 1 Peter 1:8 can anticipate "inexpressible and glorious joy" when Christ* is seen face to face and fullness of faith culminates in salvation* (see 1 Peter).

2.2. Identification with Christ. The temptation of Christians is connected to the temptation of Christ. 1 Peter 4:12-13 emphasizes that the Christians' anticipation of trial and temptation grows out of their identification with Christ. "Do not be surprised," this text says, "at the fiery ordeal to tempt you as a strange happening among you; rejoice, because you are sharing in the sufferings of Christ." Temptation desires to derail the divine mission first in Christ, then in Christians and the church. As Christians suffer rejection and persecution,* they demonstrate their oneness with him.

Certainly the cross* is the focus of Christ's suffering, as 1 Peter 2:23-24 elaborates. In this respect Christ's temptation to escape from the cross as pictured in the prayer* in Gethsemane (Mt 26:36-46; Lk 22:39-46) is the ultimate temptation of his human experience.

The wilderness temptations (Mt 4:1-11; Mk 1:12-13; Lk 4:1-13) provide a glimpse at this kind of unique temptation Christ experienced throughout his ministry in relation to his messianic mission. However, Hebrews 4:15 dwells not on the uniqueness of Christ's temptations but on their conformity with the temptations of all God's people: "He was tempted in every way we are." Christ does not escape any kind of suffering, whether common to humanity or unique to himself. He does not have special privileges. As M. Shuster (201) states, he experiences "the needs, limitations, and frailties of a human's body, mind, and circumstances."

Jesus' sinlessness despite the full range of temptations (Heb 4:15), according to Shuster, has to do with his ability to face suffering without giving in to the temptation to escape from it. Any faltering negates his mission. He stands as a model for Christians in precisely this way. As he did, so must Christians remain true to their purpose in God and not give in to the temptation to abandon it in the midst of suffering difficulties in life.

2.3. Power and Protection. Christ not only provides the spiritual strength to overcome temptation but also secures for Christians God's shielding hand from temptation that is greater than their level of maturity. Because Christ has experienced the temptations of life, as all humans do, yet never failed to obey God and do his will, he has much to teach about overcoming temptation. Christians are encouraged to call on Christ for help when temptation to sin becomes irresistible. Hebrews 2:18 assures the readers, "He is able to help those who are being tempted."

As high priest* Christ provides direct access to God, whose sovereignty allows him to monitor the level of temptations Christians undergo. Christians may confidently expect God "to help us in our time of need" (Heb 4:16). The Lord's* rescue of Lot, says 2 Peter 2:9, demonstrates that he "knows how to rescue the godly from temptation." Revelation 3:10 asserts that because of the church of Philadelphia's endurance,* Christ will prevent it from experiencing the temptation that will come upon the whole world. God's capability of shielding the godly from irresistible temptation is also assumed in the request in the Lord's Prayer ("Lead us not into temptation," Mt 6:13; Lk 11:4).

2.4. Varied Temptations. Circumstances that tempt people to sin vary widely and are rarely specified. Instead James 1:2 speaks of experiencing "many kinds of temptations," and 1 Peter 1:6 talks of suffering grief "in many kinds of temptations." Most translations correctly translate peirasmos as "trials" in these two places because they recognize that each passage has in mind external experiences and circumstances. Both passages use peirasmos because they have in mind any number of situations, including persecution, that can tempt a person to sin against God and perhaps fall from faith. Such situations will vary from one person to another and can only be gauged individually as spiritual challenges.

2.5. Sources of Temptation. Revelation 2:10 names the devil as the source of temptation.

Hebrews 11:17 uses peirazō when it refers to the time God "tempted" Abraham.* James 1:13-15 asserts vehemently that the responsibility for temptation lies with each individual's "evil desire." Can these positions be reconciled?

James 1:13 asserts: "When tempted, no one should say, 'God is tempting me.'" The passage demands that people take full responsibility for their participation in temptation. It also alerts people to the potential danger in compounding their resulting sin by blaming its irresistibility on God. The verse supplies two reasons for not blaming God. The second flatly denies the point by stating, "He tempts no one." The first reason varies in translation with the interpreter: "God cannot be solicited to evil" (Laws), "God is inexperienced in evil" (Martin), "God should not be tested by evil men" (Davids).

The interpretive problem revolves around the fact that the word apeirastos ("untempted") is not used anywhere else in the NT or the Septuagint and that the simplest translation, "God is untempted by evil," begs for a specialized sense more related to the point it is supposed to support. Although the parallel P. H. Davids draws with Deuteronomy 6:16 is interesting, it is not compelling because it places this first reason in disjunction with the second by focusing on the person being tempted rather than the character of God.

Regarding the other two interpretations, it goes without saying that God "cannot be solicited to" and is "inexperienced in" evil. Somewhere between these two interpretations most likely lies the point. Perhaps James means to assert that God and evil are separate or perhaps more pointedly that God is superior to or above evil. If God is so distant from evil as to be untouchable by its power, then surely he does not tempt anyone and is rightly affronted by any thought or utterance from one being tempted that suggests anything like it. Such a person is truly "doubleminded" or "unstable in all he does," as James 1:8 remarks.

James 1:14-15 go on to place the blame for temptation and the resulting sin squarely on each individual being "attracted" and subsequently caught by the enticing bait offered by his or her own "evil desire." In using the term "evil desire," James probably depends on rabbinic theology, which developed the concept of "evil impulse" as part of the makeup of every human being. Left unchecked, this evil impulse leads people into sin (see 3 below). James proceeds to describe the process of sin in terms of conception and birth. The evil impulse penetrates the womb and fosters a child, who is publicly identified as sin, and this leads to conviction for adultery and the punishment* of death. The onus of sin lies with each individual, not on God or even on the devil, who is carefully ignored in all this.

Thus it is correct to translate peirazomenos (as in Heb 11:17) as "test," not "tempt." God allows temptation by the devil but is not associated with it himself. From his perspective it is testing, the opportunity to demonstrate endurance and hone maturity in believers. Although the devil is the external power involved in temptation, it is the internal source, the uncontrolled evil impulse, that provides the transition from temptation to sin.

2.6. Sin, Doublemindedness and Perfection. James 1:8 and James 4:8 introduce the vocabulary of doublemindedness (dipsychos) into the biblical picture of temptation and sin. In James 1:8 it is the chief characteristic of a person whose prayer God does not answer. Although some scholars (Wolverton) have tried to draw this term into the web of Jewish background discussions surrounding evil and good inclination (yeṣer) in spiritual battle over a person's sinful or wise actions, this is inappropriate. For James doublemindedness is not a neutral term describing someone on the borderline between temptation and sin. Rather doublemindedness describes a sinner who does not trust in God's loving care. In James 4:8 "doubleminded" is used as an alternative way of addressing "sinners" who need to repent. "Purify your hearts" indicates that the opposite of doublemindedness is singleminded devotion to God as in Deuteronomy 6:5 and as amplified in Jewish literature, including Sirach 1:28-29 and Sirach 2:12-14.

Both 1 Peter 4:1 and 1 John 3:6 apparently contemplate a Christian life free from sin. What do the authors mean by that, and does this mean a life free from temptation? Despite the wording of "ceases from sin" and "does not sin," the wider contexts of both books concern themselves with the reality of both temptation and sin in the lives of Christians. Although H. Swadling dismisses 1 John 3:6 as "polemical" (what his opponents advocated but he vehemently denies), V. K. Inman and especially S. Vitrano make a strong case for John's intending to separate the rebellious attitude of the worldly from the believer's orientation to sin. Regarding 1 Peter 4:1, I. Blazen's assessment (41) is similar when he says, "At rock-bottom, ceasing from sin has to do with the putting away of the old vices of pagan society." Ultimately the point of these passages is that a Christian never considers sin in his or her life acceptable. Sin is always at odds with the new sin-free life purchased with the blood of Christ.

So sin and its forerunner, temptation, remain real for the believer. Yet they should not be viewed as synonymous. Temptation is not sin. Recognition of temptation to sin is the essential spiritual function for ultimately choosing to follow God's way and not sin. Thus Jesus can be tempted and not sin. The truth of this is identifiable only because he was tempted.

3. Evil Inclination.

Most scholars consider the use of "evil desire" in James 1:14 the clearest example in the NT of yēṣer ("inclination") theology developed in Jewish extrabiblical literature. The starting point for this development, as F. C. Porter observed, is Genesis 6:5 and Genesis 8:21, both of which use yēṣer to grasp the tendency of humans to rebel against God, a state for which we are culpable. Later biblical texts, such as 1 Chronicles 28:9, 1 Chronicles 29:18 and Isaiah 26:3, use yēṣer not only assuming its innateness but also conceiving the possibility of a good yēṣer.

A key transition reference from the OT and James, as J. Marcus and others note, is Sirach 15:11-20. In this passage yēṣer becomes the buffer between humans' capacity for sin, which comes from being made in God's image, and humans' responsibility for sin, which comes from their own choice to follow their yēṣer. Yēṣer may be the vehicle for sin, but it is not sin itself. The domination of yēṣer can be diminished, according to Sirach 21:11, only by the observing the law.*

Considerable excitement stirred among scholars when yēṣer ideas were found in the Qumran* literature (Flusser, Kuhn, Murphy, Seitz, Malina). Numerous instances of the word occur in the primary sources. Most of these, as noted by Marcus, associate yēṣer with evil: a trait of the flesh (1QH 10:23), desire for wealth (1QH 10:22), lustful eyes (CD 2:16), something to be circumcised (1QS 5:3-7) and the opposite of following God in all his ways (CD 2:14-15). Occasionally good or "steadfast" yēṣer is linked with concern for the poor, slowness in anger and wisdom (1QH 1:34-37) and standing up for faith in God (1QS 8:3). Marcus notes the startling similarities to concerns in James (Jas 1:5, 19; 2:1-7) at this point and in CD 3:2-3, where Abraham (Jas 2:23) is singled out as being a friend of God because "he kept the commandments of God and did not choose the will of his own spirit," presumably in the sense that he successfully resisted his evil yēṣer.

The direct association of "desire" (epithymia) and yēṣer ("evil inclination"), though noted in one Qumran passage (1QH 10:23) by D. Flusser (which he connects to Gal 5:16), becomes more evident in Philo.* Among other passages in Philo, Marcus mentions De Specialibus Legibus 4.15.85, in which Philo names desire as the originator of evil, and De Decalogo 28.150, in which Philo compares desire to the creeping sickness that spreads throughout the body.

Although Philo usually uses diaboulion ("deliberation") to translate yēṣer from Hebrew, the terms can overlap, as when Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs uses both diaboulion and epithymia ("desire") in conjunction with sexual sin (T. Jud. 11:1; 14:3).

Rabbinic literature further develops yēṣer ideas in its tendency to personify evil yēṣer and use it in place of the name of Satan (b. Sukk. 52; b. B. Bat. 16). Other passages (b. Sabb. 146; b. Yebam. 10:36) indicate that evil yēṣer came into humanity as a result of intercourse between Eve and the serpent. Yet in other references, as in Sirach, God himself creates evil yēṣer (Gen. Rab. 9:7; b. Yoma 69). The concept of two hearts is also associated with an evil and a good yēṣer (Midrash Tehillin, Ps 14:1, explaining 1 Chron 28:9; b. Ber. 9:5).

Despite the significance of yēṣer in Jewish literature for understanding James, it should be noted, as Marcus emphasizes, that although reference to evil yeṣer seems clear in James 1:14-15 and James 4:5, no specific reference to good yēṣer is present.

4. Early Church Fathers.

4.1. Continuity. In the early church fathers (see Apostolic Fathers) it is still assumed that not even Christians pursuing righteousness* escape temptation and that the "engines of the devil" are the source of temptation (2 Clem. 18.2). "Lead us not into temptation" remains a byword for seeking God's protection over and monitoring of temptation (Did. 8.2; Pol. Phil. 7.2). Yet testing continues to be viewed as a means of purification for the next age, even as fire purifies gold (Herm. Vis. 4.3.4).

Influence of good and evil yēṣer concepts may be observed particularly in Hermas Mandates, which can speak interchangeably of "two angels" (Herm. Man. 6—7), "two spirits" (Herm. Man. 5.2), "the desire of the devil" and "the desire of righeousness" (Herm. Man. 12), and of being filled with "the devil's spirit" and "the Divine Spirit" (Herm. Man. 11), as O. J. F. Seitz observes. It is less certain that Barnabas 18.1-2, when it refers to "two ways of doctrine," or Didache 1.1, when it speaks of "two ways, one of life and one of death," can be linked to Jewish yēṣer theology. In 2 Clement 17.3 the power of desire continues to be a chief culprit in turning temptation into sin. Much as James tags evil desire (Jas 4:2-3) and doublemindedness (Jas 1:6-8) as impediments to successful prayer, so also Hermas Mandate 9.7 labels temptation as an interference.

4.2. Testing Prophets. In this postapostolic period concern for proving the genuineness of church leaders (Did. 12.1; 15.1, 1 Clem. 42.4), especially prophets* (Did. 11.1, 7), increases dramatically. Hermas Mandate 11 provides lengthy commentary on how to "test the life" of those claiming to be prophets to determine if they truly have the "Divine Spirit." 1 Clement 44.2 determines that after the apostles* fall asleep, other "proven men" should succeed them. A "proven spirit" is the mark of a mature believer in Hermas Vision 1.2.4.

4.3. God's Judgment and the Angel of the Lord. In Hermas testing by God takes a negative turn implying judgment and appears to have been turned over to the angel of the Lord. Those who escape the Shepherd's examination "I will try at the altar," says the angel of the Lord (Herm. Sim. 8.2.5). The tower (an image of the church) awaits completion until the Lord comes to test for the decayed stones, which he will remove (Herm. Sim. 9.5.2). In Hermas Similitude 7.1, Hermas is informed that his afflictions occur because "the glorious angel" intends to bring not Hermas but his household* to repentance.*

See also ENDURANCE, PERSEVERANCE; ESCHATOLOGY; FORGIVENESS; PASTORAL THEOLOGY; SATAN, DEVIL; SIN, WICKEDNESS; SUFFERING; TRIBULATION, MESSIANIC WOES; WATCHFULNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. G. C. Berkouwer, "Perseverance and Temptation" in Faith and Perseverance (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1958) 157-92; I. Blazen, "Suffering and Cessation from Sin According to 1 Peter 4:1," AUSS 21 (1983) 27-50; D. Bonhoeffer, Temptation (New York: Macmillan, 1955); R. B. Crotty, "The Literary Structure of the Letter of James," AusBR 40 (1992) 45-57; P. H. Davids, "The Meaning of ΑΠΕΙΡΑΣΤΟΣ in James 1:13," NTS 24 (1978) 386-92; idem, "Themes in the Epistle of James That Are Judaistic in Character" (unpublished Ph.D dissertation, University of Manchester, 1974); D. Flusser, "The Dead Sea Sect and Pre-Pauline Christianity" in Aspects of the Dead Sea Scrolls, ed. C. Rabin and Y. Yadin (Jerusalem: Magnes, 1958) 249-59; K. Grayston, "Satan and Job," Scripture Bulletin 23 (1993) 2-7; V. K. Inman, "Distinctive Johannine Vocabulary and the Interpretation of 1 John 3:9," WTJ 40 (1977) 136-44; K.-P. Kloppen, "The Interpretation of Jesus' Temptations (Mt 4:1-11; Mk 1:12-13; Lk 4:1-3) by the Early Church Fathers," Patristic and Byzantine Review 8 (1989) 41-43; K. G. Kuhn, "New Light on Temptation, Sin and Flesh in the New Testament" in The Scrolls and the New Testament, ed. K Stendahl (London: SCM, 1957) 94-113; S. Laws, A Commentary on the Epistle of James (BNTC; London: A. & C. Black, 1980); B. J. Malina, "Some Observations on the Origins of Sin in Judaism and St. Paul," CBQ 31 (1969) 18-34; J. Marcus, "The Evil Inclination in the Epistle of James," CBQ 44 (1982) 606-21; R. P. Martin, James (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); F. C. Porter, "The Yeçer Hara: A Study in the Jewish Doctrine of Sin" in Biblical and Semitic Studies (New York: Scribner's, 1901) 93-156; O. J. F. Seitz, "Antecedents and Signification of the Term ΔΙΨΥΧΟΣ," JBL 66 (1947) 211-19; idem, "Two Spirits in Man: An Essay in Biblical Exegesis," NTS 6 (1959) 82-95; M. Shuster, "The Temptation, Sinlessness and Sympathy of Jesus: Another Look at the Dilemma of Hebrews 4:15" in Perspectives on Christology: Essays in Honor of Paul K. Jewett, ed. M. Shuster and R. Muller (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1991) 211-30; H. Swadling, "Sin and Sinlessness in 1 John," SJT 35 (1982) 205-11; S. Vitrano, "The Doctrine of Sin in 1 John," AUSS 25 (1987) 123-31; W. Wolverton, "The Double-Minded Man in Light of the Essene Psychology," ATR 38 (1956) 166-75.

W. R. Baker

TER SANCTUS. See LITURGICAL ELEMENTS.

TESTAMENTARY LITERATURE. See 2 PETER.

TEXTUAL CRITICISM

Textual criticism is the field of study whose practitioners examine variant readings in various manuscripts in the effort to reconstruct the original wording of a written text. This kind of study is needed for texts whose autographs are no longer extant, which is the case for most ancient documents and all of the books of the NT.

1. The Quest for the Original Text
2. Textual Criticism of Acts, Hebrews, General Epistles and Revelation

1. The Quest for the Original Text.

1.1. Earliest New Testament Copies. Because not one original writing, or autograph, of any NT book exists, we depend on copies for reconstructing the original text. According to most scholars, the earliest copy of any NT book is a papyrus manuscript designated P^{52}, dated around 110-25, containing a few verses of John (Jn 18:31-34, 37-38). This fragment, arguably only thirty years removed from the autograph, was part of one of the earliest copies of John's Gospel.

Other scholars, however, believe there is an even earlier manuscript, designated 7Q5, which preserves two incomplete verses of Mark 6:52-53. This fragment, found in a cave with all Greek manuscripts, was first identified as Markan by J. O'Callaghan and dated to about 65. But because of its smallness and because there is writing only on one side, this identification was strongly contested. Yet in recent years scholars did a complete computer search on 7Q5 and concluded that this fragment does not fit anywhere in all of Greek literature except the Gospel of Mark. Subsequently its Markan identity has been affirmed by several papyrologists.

Another very early manuscript is P^{46}, otherwise known as the Chester Beatty Papyrus II. It contains Hebrews and all of Paul's epistles except the Pastorals, and it can be dated to the early part of the second century. Other second-century manuscripts are P^{4}, P^{64}, P^{67} (Matthew, Luke), P^{32} (Titus), P^{66} (John), P^{75} (Luke, John), P^{77} (Matthew), P^{87} (Philemon), P^{90} (John) and P^{98} (Revelation).

1.2. Numbers of Copies. We possess many other early copies of various parts of the NT; several other papyrus manuscripts (about 40) are dated in the third and fourth centuries. And there are several other manuscripts of the NT, which are called uncials (manuscripts written in "biblical uncial" on vellum) and minuscules (manuscripts written in cursive). At present we have more than 6,000 manuscript copies of the Greek NT or portions thereof. No other work of Greek literature can boast such numbers. Homer's Iliad, the greatest of all Greek classical works, is extant in about 800 manuscripts; and Euripides' tragedies exist in about 350 manuscripts. The numbers on all the other works of Greek literature are far less.

Furthermore, it must be said that the span of time between the original composition and the next surviving manuscript is far less for the NT than for any other work in Greek literature. The lapse for most classical Greek works is about eight hundred to a thousand years, whereas the lapse for many books in the NT is around one hundred years. Because of the abundant wealth of manuscripts and because several of the manuscripts are dated in the early centuries of the church, NT textual scholars have a great advantage over classical textual scholars. The NT scholars have the resources to reconstruct the original text of the NT with great accuracy, and they have produced some excellent editions of the Greek NT.

1.3. Form of Texts. When speaking of the original text, many scholars are referring to the published text—that is, the text as it was in its final edited form and as it was released for circulation in the Christian community. For some books of the NT, there is little difference between the original composition and the published text. After the author wrote or dictated his work, he or an associate made the final editorial corrections and then released it for distribution. As is the case for books published in modern times, so in ancient times the original writing of the author is not always the same as what is published—due to the editorial process. Nonetheless the author is credited with the final edited text, and the published book is attributed to the author and considered the original published text.

Some scholars think it is impossible to recover the original text of the Greek NT because they have not been able to reconstruct the early history of textual transmission. Other scholars are less pessimistic but still quite guarded in affirming the possibility. And yet others are optimistic because we possess many early manuscripts of excellent quality and because we are quite certain that various sectors of Christianity, particularly Alexandria, maintained textual acumen to a large degree. Alexandrian manuscripts such as P^{1}, P^{23}, P^{39}, P^{65}, P^{75}, P^{91} and P^{98} must be very close replicas of the autographs.

The recovery of the text of the NT must be done on a book-by-book basis. The recovery pertains to individual books of the NT, not to the entire volume per se, because each book or group of books, such as the Pauline epistles, had its own unique history of textual transmission. The earliest extant copy of an entire NT text is the one preserved in Codex Sinaiticus (compiled about 375). (Codex Vaticanus lacks the Pastoral Epistles and Revelation.) Prior to the fourth century, the NT was circulated in its various parts: as a single book or a group of books, such as the four Gospels or the Pauline epistles. Manuscripts from the late first century to the third century have been found with individual books, such as Matthew (P^{1}), Mark (P^{88}), Luke (P^{69}), John (P^{5}, P^{22}, P^{52}, P^{66}), Acts (P^{91}), Revelation (P^{18}, P^{47}, P^{98}), or containing groups of books, such as the four Gospels with Acts (P^{45}), the Pauline epistles (P^{46}), the Petrine epistles and Jude (P^{72}). Each of the books of the NT has had its own textual history and has been preserved with varying degrees of accuracy. Nonetheless, all of the books were altered from the original state due to the process of manual copying decade after decade and century after century. And the text of each of the books has needed to be recovered.

1.4. Textual Transmission. By the end of the second century and into the third century many of the significant variant readings that we know today had entered into the textual stream. But the early period of textual transmission was not completely marred by textual infidelity and scribal liberty. Some scribes copied the text with exacting fidelity, due either to professional pride or perhaps to respect for a sacred text. The formalization of canonization did not ascribe this sacredness to the text. Canonization came about as the result of common, historical recognition of the sacredness of various NT books. Certain NT books, such as the four Gospels, Acts and Paul's epistles were considered inspired literature from the onset. Certain scribes, therefore, copied them with reverential fidelity. Other scribes, however, felt free to make alterations in the text either in the interest of doctrine and harmonization or due to the influence of a competitive oral tradition (see Williams). The manuscripts produced in such a manner created a kind of popular text, that is, an uncontrolled text. This text type has usually been called the Western text, but some scholars argue that this is nothing more than a catch-all category for anything other than Alexandrian.

Most of the Alexandrian manuscripts are purer than other manuscripts because scribes from Alexandria or scribes familiar with Alexandrian scriptoral practices would generally take care in producing accurate copies. In the Hellenistic world there were many who had come to appreciate the scholarly practices of Alexandria.* Among the more noteworthy Alexandrian manuscripts are Codex Vaticanus (B) and Codex Sinaiticus (ℵ). These are the two manuscripts that B. F. Westcott and F. J. A. Hort greatly esteemed, especially Codex Vaticanus, and these are the manuscripts that they believed most carefully preserved the original wording of the NT text. Based on this perspective, they developed a genealogical tree that traced back from Codices Vaticanus and Sinaiticus to the originals. According to their theory, Vaticanus is almost a perfectly transmitted text from the original. Westcott and Hort called this the "Neutral Text"—that is, a text void of textual corruption. Their theory was revolutionary, and their text was responsible for overthrowing the Textus Receptus.

1.5. Internal and External Criticism. Beginning in the middle of the twentieth century, however, textual critics became skeptical of recovering the original text through genealogical means. It was judged by several scholars that Westcott and Hort had made a subjective selection about the purity of Vaticanus and then used that to determine the impurity of other manuscripts. Thus Westcott and Hort's theory was no longer heartily endorsed. Left without a solid theory for making external judgments, textual critics turned more and more to internal evidence. They began to endorse the rule, or canon, that the reading that is most likely original is the one that best explains the variants. This canon is a development of J. A. Bengel's maxim proclivi scriptoni praestat ardua (the harder reading is to be preferred), a maxim he formulated in responding to his own question as to which variant reading is likely to have arisen out of the others. This canon for internal criticism involves several criteria, which one scholar or another has posited and/or implemented during the past three hundred years of NT textual criticism.

The internal criticism principle allows for the possibility that the reading selected for the text can be taken from any manuscript of any date. This produces subjective eclectism. Modern textual scholars try to temper the subjectivism by employing a method called reasoned eclectism. This approach employs a combination of internal and external criticism in the evaluation of the variant readings in light of the documentary evidence. This approach is aimed at producing a balanced view of the matter.

K. Aland favored a similar approach, calling it the local-genealogical method. According to this approach, the textual critic must make decisions on variant readings one by one. After carefully establishing the variety of readings offered in a passage and the possibilities of their interpretation, it must always then be determined afresh on the basis of external and internal criteria which of these readings is the original, from which the others may be regarded as derivative. This method assumes that for any given variation unit, any manuscript or manuscripts may have preserved the original text. Applying this method, however, can produce an uneven documentary presentation of the text. Furthermore, the danger of doing textual criticism on the local-genealogical basis is that the editors must decide what the authors most likely wrote on a phrase-by-phrase basis. This verges on claiming knowledge of the author's original intentions. But no one can do this with any degree of certainty. Those who say they can run the risk of falling prey to the intentional fallacy. Thus the recent trend in emphasizing internal criticism needs to be tempered by Hort's maxim, "knowledge of documents must precede all judgments on readings."

2. Textual Criticism of Acts, Hebrews, General Epistles and Revelation.

These books of the NT have had a textual and canonical history distinct and separate from those of the four Gospels and Paul's epistles (see Canon). From as early as the second century, the four Gospels were being collected together into one volume, as were Paul's epistles (minus the Pastorals). But this was not so for the other NT books. In fact only a few other books were widely read in the Christian church—namely, 1 Peter and 1 John. The book of Acts was also well-known, but it was separated from its companion volume, Luke, when Luke was joined with the other four Gospels. And Hebrews was widely read in Christendom, especially in the East, where it was considered Pauline and therefore included in the Pauline corpus. All the other books had a difficult time making it into the NT canon: James, because of its apparent opposition to Pauline soteriology; 2 Peter, because of its dissimilarity to 1 Peter; 2 John, 3 John and Jude, because of their obscurity; and Revelation, because of its mystery.

By an act of providence the book of Acts and the General Epistles became companions. This is displayed in one manuscript, P^{74} (Papyrus Bodmer XVII), from the seventh century; it is a codex that contains only Acts and all the General Epistles. Incidentally, Westcott and Hort's Greek New Testament displays the same arrangement. Despite its late date, P^{74} is important because it presents an Alexandrian text and is an excellent witness for the book of Acts.

2.1. The Book of Acts. The book of Acts* existed in two distinct forms in the early church—the Alexandrian and the Western. The Alexandrian text is usually found in manuscripts such as P^{45}, P^{74} (ℵ), A, B, C, 33. The other form has been called the D-text because this text is primarily represented by D (Codex Bezae of the fifth century). But this text was not created by the scribe who produced Codex Bezae, even though he may have added his own enhancements. The Western text or D-text of Acts existed as early as the late second century or early third century. We know this because a few third-century papyrus manuscripts display this text—namely, P^{29}, P^{38} and P^{48}. The Western text is also attested by the African Old Latin manuscripts, marginal readings in the Harclean Syriac translation and the writings of Cyprian and Augustine. The Western text, which is nearly one-tenth longer than the Alexandrian, is more colorful in circumstantial details.

Theories abound as to which form of the text is genuine or even if Luke wrote both. The major scholarly consensus is that the Alexandrian text is primary and the Western secondary. J. H. Ropes considered the Western text to be "a paraphrastic rewriting of the original," the "work of a single editor trying to improve the work on a large scale" (Ropes, ccxxii-xxiii). R. P. C. Hanson characterized this reviser as an interpolator who made large insertions into an Alexandrian-type text. Hanson hypothesized "that these interpolations were made in Rome between A.D. 120 and 150, at a time when the book of Acts was not yet regarded as sacrosanct and inspired"(Hanson, 224).

More often than not, the editors of Nestle-Aland text (27th ed.) and the United Bible Societies (4th ed.) considered the Alexandrian text, as the shorter text, to have preserved the original wording. In nearly every instance where the D-text stands alone against other witnesses, especially the Alexandrian, it is a case of the Western scribe functioning as a reviser who enhanced the text with redactional fillers. This reviser must have been a well-informed scholar who had a propensity for adding historical, biographical and geographical details. More than anything, he was intent on filling in gaps in the narrative by adding circumstantial details. Furthermore, he shaped the text to favor the Gentiles* over the Jews, to promote Paul's apostolic mission and to heighten the activity of the Holy Spirit* in the work of the apostles.*

2.2. Hebrews. In Egypt and the East the book of Hebrews was considered part of the Pauline writings. So Hebrews was included in the Pauline corpus, according to P^{46}, the exemplar for B, as well as several other manuscripts. The copyist of another papyrus manuscript, P^{13}, used a manuscript very much like P^{46}, and the copyist of B used an exemplar very much like P^{46} and P^{13}. The original text of Hebrews has been largely preserved in P^{13}, P^{46} and B. Western manuscripts of Hebrews include Dp, Ep of the sixth century.

*2.3. The General Epistles.

2.3.1. James. James* has been preserved in two third-century manuscripts: P^{23}, showing affinities with ℵ, and P^{20}, bearing resemblance to B. These manuscripts usually reflect the original wording of the text. The entire text of James is best preserved in the fifth-century manuscripts Codex Alexandrinus (A) and Codex Ephraem Rescriptus (C).

2.3.2. 1 and 2 Peter and Jude. Peter's first epistle, accepted from the onset as authentic and apostolic, was quite well preserved in its early textual transmission (see 1 Peter). This textual fidelity is manifest in one late third-century manuscript, P^{72} (Papyrus Bodmer VII-VIII), and another fourth-century manuscript, P^{81}. P^{72} displays a text that resembles B and yet is closer to the original than B, while P^{81} has more affinity with (ℵ) than with B.

The original texts of 2 Peter* and Jude* were not as well preserved in the early period of textual transmission because these books were not readily acknowledged as apostolic, canonical texts by all the sectors of the early church. The manuscript evidence for these books is quite diverse, marked by independence. This is evident in the two papyri, P^{72} (especially for Jude) and P^{78}. All in all, Codex Alexandrinus (A) is the best witness for these epistles.

2.3.3. John's Epistles. Unlike John's Gospel, which was very popular throughout the early church, John's epistles (see John, Letters of) were far less known and read. A portion of 1 John exists in one third-century papyrus, P^{9} (a product of careless copying) and a portion of 2 John exists in one fourth-century vellum manuscript, 0232 (which could have originally contained the Johannine corpus: Gospel, Epistles, Revelation). Out of all the manuscripts, 0232 bears the most resemblance to Codex Alexandrinus, which is the best witness to John's epistles.

*2.4. The Book of Revelation. Although the early textual history of Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) is not as clear as we would like it to be, it is apparent that some scribes (generation after generation) treated the text carefully. According to J. Schmid, who produced a magnum opus on the text of Revelation, the best text was preserved in A and C. This text seems to have been antedated by two third-century manuscripts, P^{18} and P^{24}, and one second-century manuscript, P^{98}. The second best text is that found in ℵ, whose precursors are P^{47} and P^{85} (which accords almost completely with P^{47}). Two other trustworthy sources are a mass of manuscripts that follow Andreas of Caesarea's commentary on Revelation (marked as M^{A}) and a common group of other Koine manuscripts (marked as M^{K}).

See also CANON.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. K. Aland and B. Aland, The Text of the New Testament (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1988); J. A. Bengel, Gnomon Novi Testamenti, ed. J. Steudel (3d ed.; Tübingen, 1855); P. W. Comfort, The Quest for the Original Text of the New Testament (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1992); P. W. Comfort and D. Barrett, The Complete Text of the Earliest New Testament Manuscripts (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1997); R. P. C. Hanson, "The Provenance of the Interpolator in the 'Western' Text of Acts and of Acts Itself," NTS 12 (1965) 211-30; M. Holmes, "New Testament Textual Criticism" in Introducing New Testament Interpretation, ed. S. McKnight (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1989) 53-74; Y.-K. Kim, "Paleographic Dating of P^{46} to the Later First Century," Bib 69 (1988) 248-57; S. Kubo, "P^{72} and the Codex Vaticanus," Studies and Documents 27 (Salt Lake City: University of Utah Press, 1965); B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (3d ed.; Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1992); J. O'Callaghan, "¿Papiros neotestamentarios en la cueva 7 de Qumran?" Bib 53 (1972) 91-100; J. H. Ropes, "The Acts of the Apostles" in The Beginnings of Christianity, ed. F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake (London: Macmillan, 1926) vol. 3, pt. 1; J. Schmidt, Studien zur Geschichte des griechischen Apokalypse-Textes (3 vols.; Munich: Zink, 1955-56); C. S. C. Williams, Alterations to the Text of the Synoptic Gospels and Acts (Oxford: Clarendon, 1951). P. W. Comfort THEOLOGY OF THE CROSS.

See CROSS, THEOLOGY OF THE.

THOMAS, APOSTLE.

See SYRIA, SYRIAN CHRISTIANITY.

THOMAS, GOSPEL OF

Since its publication in 1959 (see Guillaumont et al.) the Coptic Gospel of Thomas has been divided into 114 sayings, or logia. The title of this work is derived from a subscript at the conclusion, which reads euangelion kata Thoman ("the Gospel according to Thomas"), a phrase borrowed from the Greek Gospels. But Thomas is not a Gospel in the sense of narrative or biography; it is a "sayings" Gospel, as seen from the prologue's incipit: "These are the secret sayings that the living Jesus spoke." Many of these sayings are introduced with the words "Jesus said." On occasion a question or a request elicits a reply from Jesus. The incipit further claims that these sayings were recorded by "Didymos Judas Thomas," one of Jesus' disciples and one whose standing among the disciples has been elevated (Gos. Thom. logia. §13). This pseudepigraphic* attribution suggests that Thomas was composed in eastern Syria, where legends about Thomas circulated. In recent years Thomas has figured prominently in discussion of the Gospels and the historical Jesus.

1. Manuscripts
2. Relation to the New Testament
3. Theology of Thomas

1. Manuscripts.

The Gospel of Thomas survives in Coptic as the second tractate in Codex II of the Nag Hammadi library (discovered in 1945) and survives partially in Greek in Oxyrhynchus Papyri 1, 654 and 655 (discovered at the end of the nineteenth century). POxy 654 contains the prologue to the Gospel of Thomas, logia §§1—7 and a portion of logion §30. POxy 1 contains Gospel of Thomas logia §§26—33. POxy 655 contains Gospel of Thomas logia §§24, 36—39 and 77. Although the point has been disputed, most scholars contend that Thomas was originally composed in Greek and that the Oxyrhynchus Papyri probably stand closer to the original form of the tradition than does the Coptic edition.

The Coptic text of Thomas is dated to the middle of the fourth century. The Oxyrhynchus papyri are much older, with POxy 1 dating to shortly after A.D. 200 and POxy 654 and POxy 655 dating to the middle of the third century. These three papyri appear to represent distinct copies of the writing, though what relation, if any, they may have to one another cannot be determined. The Coptic text itself suggests that other editions of Coptic Thomas were in circulation. Sometime near the end of the first quarter or first third of the third century, Hippolytus of Rome (Hippolytus Haer. 5.7.20) quotes a variant of logion §4 and explicitly identifies it as deriving from the Gospel of Thomas. All of this suggests that there were many editions, or recensions, of Thomas in the third and fourth centuries.

The date of the earliest editions of Thomas is hotly debated. This issue is tied closely to the question of this writing's relation to the NT. Those who have concluded that Thomas contains substantial amounts of material that is independent of the NT Gospels tend to argue for an early date, such as the last quarter of the first century (Cameron, Koester, et al.) or even as early as the middle of the first century (Crossan). Those who have concluded that Thomas contains little or no independent material tend to argue for a second-century origin (Blomberg, Evans 1994, Snodgrass).

2. Relation to the New Testament.

In recent years several scholars have argued that the Gospel of Thomas is a first-century composition originally independent of the NT Gospels and only later influenced by them. This may be true, but numerous difficulties attend efforts to cull from this collection of logia material that can with confidence be judged primitive, independent of the canonical Gospels and even authentic. Quoting or alluding to more than half of the writings of the New Testament (Mt, Mk, Lk, Jn, Acts, Rom, 1—2 Cor, Gal, Eph, Col, 1 Thess, 1 Tim, Heb, 1 Jn, Rev; see Evans et al. 1993), Thomas could be little more than a collage of NT and apocryphal* materials that have been interpreted, often allegorically, in such a way as to advance second- and third-century Gnostic* ideas (see Blomberg, Brown, Dehandschutter, Fieger).

Moreover, the traditions contained in Thomas hardly reflect a setting that predates the writings of the NT, which is why J. D. Crossan and others attempt to extract an early version of Thomas from the Coptic and Greek texts that are extant. Assertions that a consensus is beginning to emerge in which Thomas is recognized as primitive and independent (see Davies) claim too much. Lately Thomas has enjoyed a great deal of publicity through the publications emanating from the Jesus Seminar. For example, Thomas is the fifth Gospel in the recently published The Five Gospels (see Funk and Hoover), a work that grades the authenticity of the sayings of Jesus with the colors red (= words of Jesus), pink (= approximation of something Jesus said), gray (= considerable doubt that Jesus said it) and black (= Jesus did not say it). In this work Thomas compares favorably with the canonical Gospels.

There are several indications that Thomas is secondary to the canonical Gospels. First, material identified as M (special Matthean material) and L (special Lukan material) is found in Thomas (cf. Evans 1994, 498). This is not easily explained on the basis of the independence of Thomas. Second, in places Thomas's readings agree with Matthean and Lukan redaction (cf. Blomberg, Evans 1994, 499-502). This is so even in cases involving the Oxyrhynchus papyri. These observations should seriously undermine confidence in the antiquity and independence of Thomas. It is much more probable that Thomas is made up of materials derived from the canonical Gospels and extracanonical sources (though not necessarily directly) that in many cases have been edited to suit second- and third-century gnostic tastes. Although it is possible that Thomas may contain a few primitive sayings, it has little to offer Jesus research.

3. Theology of Thomas.

The Gospel of Thomas presents Jesus as a heavenly revealer, the embodiment of wisdom,* whose teachings, or "secret words," have an esoteric quality. This quality is underscored in the first two logia: " 'Whoever finds the interpretation of these words will not taste death.' Jesus said: 'Let him who seeks not cease seeking until he finds, and when he finds, he will be troubled, and when he has been troubled, he will marvel and he will reign over the All.' "

Although some scholars have insisted that the Gospel of Thomas is not Gnostic, most believe that it is. Several features suggest that this collection of the sayings of Jesus reflects a gnostic milieu. Interest in "the All" (log. §2; cf. log. §77) finds expression elsewhere in the writings of the Nag Hammadi library. The anticipation of becoming a "single one" (log. §4; cf. log. §11, §22, §106) probably reflects gnostic interpretation of Genesis 1—2 (cf. log. §85), in which humanity is divided into the two sexes. According to some strains of Gnosticism, man and woman will someday be reunited as an androgynous Human. The saying about being naked and unashamed (cf. log. §37) probably has to do with a return to a primordial state. The saying about coming from the light (log. §50) also has to do with gnostic cosmogony. The reference to the heaven that is above heaven* (log. §11) probably alludes to gnostic cosmology, in which an ultimate heaven is conceived. Criticism of the world as "drunk" (cf. log. §28) and in "poverty" (cf. log. §3, §29) is also a commonplace in gnostic writings. The quest for "rest" (cf. log. §50, §51, §60) is an important feature in gnostic eschatology.

See also GNOSIS, GNOSTICISM; JESUS TRADITIONS; MARK, SECRET GOSPEL OF; PETER, GOSPEL OF.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. L. Blomberg, "Tradition and Redaction in the Parables of the Gospel of Thomas" in Gospel Perspectives 5: The Jesus Tradition Outside the Gospels, ed. D. Wenham (Sheffield: JSOT, 1984) 177-205; R. E. Brown, "The Gospel of Thomas and St John's Gospel," NTS 9 (1962-63) 155-77; R. Cameron, The Other Gospels: Noncanonical Gospel Texts (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1982); J. H. Charlesworth and C. A. Evans, "Jesus in the Agrapha and Apocryphal Gospels" in Studying the Historical Jesus: Evaluations of the State of Current Research, ed. B. D. Chilton and C. A. Evans (NTTS 19; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1994) 479-533; B. D. Chilton, "The Gospel According to Thomas as a Source of Jesus' Teaching" in Gospel Perspectives 5: The Jesus Tradition Outside the Gospels, ed. D. Wenham (Sheffield: JSOT, 1984) 155-75; J. D. Crossan, Four Other Gospels (Sonoma, CA: Polebridge, 1992) 3-38; S. Davies, The Gospel of Thomas and Christian Wisdom (New York: Seabury, 1983); B. Dehandschutter, "The Gospel of Thomas and the Synoptics: The Status Quaestionis" in Studia Evangelica VII, ed. E. A. Livingstone (TU 126; Berlin: Akademie, 1982) 157-60; idem, "L'évangile de Thomas comme collection de paroles de Jésus" in Logia: Les Paroles de Jésus—The Sayings of Jesus, ed. J. Delobel (BETL 59; Louvain: Peeters, 1982) 507-15; idem, "Recent Research on the Gospel of Thomas" in The Four Gospels 1992, ed. F. Van Segbroek et al. (BETL 100; Louvain: Peeters, 1992) 2257-62; C. A. Evans et al., eds., Nag Hammadi Texts and the Bible: A Synopsis and Index (NTTS 18; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1993) 88-144; F. T. Fallon and R. Cameron, "The Gospel of Thomas: A Forschungsbericht and Analysis," ANRW 2.25.6 (1988) 4213-24; M. Fieger, Das Thomasevangelium: Einleitung, Kommentar und Systematik (NTAbh 22; Münster: Aschendorff, 1991); J. A. Fitzmyer, "The Oxyrhynchus logoi of Jesus and the Coptic Gospel According to Thomas" in Essays on the Semitic Background of the New Testament (SBLSBS 5; Missoula, MT: Scholars Press, 1974) 355-433; R. W. Funk and R. W. Hoover, eds., The Five Gospels (New York: Macmillan, 1993); B. Gärtner, The Theology of the Gospel of Thomas (London: Collins; New York: Harper & Row, 1961); A. Guillaumont et al., The Gospel According to Thomas (New York: Harper & Row, 1959); H. Koester, Ancient Christian Gospels: Their History and Development (London: SCM; Philadelphia: Trinity Press International, 1990) 75-128; idem, "Apocryphal and Canonical Gospels," HTR 73 (1980) 105-30; J. Ménard, L'Évangile selon Thomas (NHS 5; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1975); R. J. Miller, ed., The Complete Gospels (Sonoma, CA: Polebridge, 1992) 301-22; S. J. Patterson, The Gospel of Thomas and Jesus (Sonoma, CA: Polebridge, 1993); idem, "The Gospel of Thomas and the Historical Jesus: Prospectus and Retrospectus" in SBLSP (1990) 614-36; J. M. Robinson, ed., The Nag Hammadi Library in English (rev. ed.; San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1988) 124-38; W. Schneemelcher, ed., New Testament Apocrypha, 1: Gospels and Related Writings (rev. ed.; Cambridge: James Clarke; Louisville, KY: Westminster/John Knox, 1991) 110-33; W. Schrage, Das Verhältnis des Thomas-Evangeliums zur synoptischen Tradition und zu den koptischen Evangelienübersetzungen (BZNW 29; Berlin: Töpelmann, 1964); K. R. Snodgrass, "The Gospel of Thomas: A Secondary Gospel," SecCent 7 (1989-90) 19-38; W. D. Stroker, Extracanonical Sayings of Jesus (SBLRBS 18; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1989); R. McL. Wilson, Studies in the Gospel of Thomas (London: Mowbray, 1960).

C. A. Evans

TONGUES

The phenomenon of speaking in "unknown tongues," or glossolalia, has existed in many religious contexts, including the Old Testament (e.g., the prophesying of Saul in 1 Sam 10:5-6, 10) and various Mediterranean cults (see Religions, Greco-Roman). In the Christian context of our literature this phenomenon (i.e., making vocal sounds, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, that are unintelligible to at least some of those hearing), is mentioned by Paul (1 Cor 12, 14; see DPL, Tongues) and the author of Acts. This article will focus on tongues in Acts.

1. The Occurrence of Tongues in Acts
2. The Meaning of Tongues in Acts
3. Acts and the Rest of the New Testament
4. Acts and the Postapostolic Period

1. The Occurrence of Tongues in Acts.

The first reference to tongues occurs in Acts 2:4-13. When the Holy Spirit* comes at Pentecost,* he appears to those in the room as "divided tongues of fire" or "tongues of fire distributed among them" (Bruce), and they as a result began to speak in "other languages [tongues]" as the Spirit granted them ability. The text emphasizes that people from many nations each heard the praises of God* in their own dialect (Acts 2:8) or language (i.e., tongue; Acts 2:11). Acts* then reports Peter explaining this phenomenon in terms of Joel's prophecy* (Joel 2:28-32).

The second reference appears in Acts 10:44-48, where the Holy Spirit interrupts Peter's address to the Gentile* Cornelius* and falls upon Cornelius and his associates. Peter recognizes the presence of the Spirit in their glossolalia and orders their baptism,* since they had received the Holy Spirit just as Peter and his fellow Jewish Christians had.

The final occurrence in Acts comes in Acts 19:1-7, where Paul finds a group of "disciples" who are ignorant of the Holy Spirit. The reason for this is that they know only John the Baptist's teaching and practice. After baptizing them in the name of Jesus, Paul lays hands on them, and the dozen disciples speak in tongues and prophesy.

There are other places in which Acts implies similar phenomena (e.g., Acts 8:17-19, where Simon observes some phenomenon) or refers to the explicit passages (e.g., Acts 11:15-17; 15:8), but none of them adds significantly to the three passages cited above.

2. The Meaning of Tongues in Acts.

When we examine the material in Acts, we can draw a number of conclusions.

First, Acts does not appear to differentiate clearly between tongues and prophecy. While the passage in Acts 19 mentions both spiritual gifts (to use the Pauline terminology), one wonders if this is not a type of emphasis. In Acts 2 the phenomenon is described as glossolalia, but in Peter's speech "this is that" refers to prophecy. In one place (Acts 2:18) "and they will prophesy" is added to Joel's prophecy to make his point clear. One might object that in Acts 2 the "tongues" are understandable as praise of God and thus prophetic, but Acts has already implied that because people from "every nation" were present presumably all languages were understood.

Second, Pentecost appears to reverse Babel. In Genesis 11:1, 6 it is underlined that humanity was monolingual; the confusion of language in Genesis 11:7 leads to the scattering of the nations (Gen 11:8-9). In Pentecost, people (both Jews and proselytes, thus former Gentiles) from all over the world* (the list in Acts 2:9-11 appears to parallel deliberately the geographic spread of the table of nations in Gen 10) are gathered in Jerusalem* and through the gift of tongues can all understand God's praise in their own language.

Third, glossolalia appears in Acts as an outward sign signaling the presence of the empowering Holy Spirit. If the point of Acts is that the mission* of the church was Spirit-driven rather than a human plan, then the function of glossolalia is to indicate that each phase of the mission is indeed the work of the Spirit. It is thus in Acts 2 a sign of the universal mission planned by the Spirit, then an indication of the initiative of the Spirit in the move to the Gentiles in Acts 10. The passage in Acts 19 probably demonstrates the universality of the presence of the Spirit in the church as a fringe group is integrated through the action of the Spirit. It is not the sole indicator of the presence of the Spirit, however, for such things as joy* (Acts 13:52; 16:34), the sharing of goods (Acts 4:32) and speaking the word with boldness (Acts 4:31) are also evidence of the Spirit cited in passages in which tongues are not mentioned.

3. Acts and the Rest of the New Testament.

The only other passage in the NT that refers to glossolalia is 1 Cointhians 12—14 (it does not appear in the shorter gifts lists in Rom 14, Eph 4 or 1 Pet 4). There Paul's concern is to dampen the Corinthian preference for tongues and to raise their appreciation of the more intelligible gift of prophecy. (Why this was not an issue for him elsewhere is unknown, just as it is unknown why Corinth in particular had a problem with the Lord's Supper.*) Neither the differentiation of the gifts nor the concern with intelligibility is a problem for Acts, possibly because in Acts the gifts are intelligible either by speakers of the various languages or as signs of the activity of God (ironically, in contrast to 1 Corinthians 14:22, tongues in Acts function as much a sign for believers as for unbelievers, especially in Acts 10).

4. Acts and the Postapostolic Period.

There are no references to glossolalia in the apostolic fathers, although there are twelve references to the tongue in terms of speech ethics* and one to the peoples of the languages of the world gathered in judgment.* Thus it appears that by the second century this phenomenon was subsumed under the term prophecy (i.e., the lack of differentiation in Acts carried to its logical conclusion). This is clearly the case in Irenaeus (Irenaeus Haer. 3.12.15; 5.6.1; cf. Irenaeus Haer. 3.17.2; 2.32.4) and appears also to have been true of at least some Montanist "prophecy." M. T. Kelsey and A. Bittlinger therefore read Martyrdom of Polycarp 7.3 and the references to prophecy in Ignatius,* *Didache and *Shepherd of Hermas as including glossolalia. Whether their conclusion is accepted or not, what is clear is that speaking in tongues does not have a special significance in any of these works.

See also ACTS OF THE APOSTLES; HOLY SPIRIT; PENTECOST.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. A. Bittlinger, Glossolalia: Wert und Problematik des Sprachenredens (Schloss Craheim: Rolf Kühne Verlag, 1969); F. F. Bruce, The Acts of the Apostles: The Greek Text with Introduction and Commentary (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); S. D. Currie, " 'Speaking in Tongues'; Early Evidence Outside the New Testament Bearing on 'Glossais Lalein,' " Int 19 (1965) 274-94; J. G. Davies, "Pentecost and Glossolalia," JTS n.s. 3 (1952) 228-31; J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1975); J. M. Ford, "Towards a Theology of 'Speaking in Tongues,' " TS 32 (1971) 3-29; K. Haacker, "Das Pfingstwunder als exegetisches Problem" in Verborum Veritas: Festschrift für Gustav Stählin, ed. O. Böcher and K. Haacker (Wuppertal: Brockhaus, 1970) 125-32; H. Haarbeck, "Word," NIDNTT 3:1078-81; M. T. Kelsey, Tongue Speaking: An Experiment in Spiritual Experience (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1964); G. J. Sirks, "The Cinderella of Theology: The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit," HTR 50 (1957) 77-89; R. Stronstad, The Charismatic Theology of St. Luke (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1984). P. H. Davids

TORAH. See LAW.

TRADITION. See JESUS TRADITIONS.

TRAVEL AND COMMERCE. See ROMAN EMPIRE, CHRISTIANS AND THE.

TRIBULATION, MESSIANIC WOES

In this portion of the NT and the apostolic fathers, tribulation is seen by these authors as something characterizing the Christian era, even if it intensifies nearer to the time of the return of Christ. The major word group regarding tribulation is thlipsis and its cognates, a word that is found in surprisingly few places in the NT or the apostolic fathers. Tribulation is one of the characteristics of what is sometimes called the messianic woes. The messianic woes were part of the Jewish eschatological framework in which it was thought that a certain number of tribulations and related signs needed to be experienced before the messianic age could be ushered in, a concept not well developed in the apostolic fathers. The relationship between tribulation and messianic woes indicates that the NT authors were probably heavily influenced by Jewish messianism such that they characterized both the first coming of Christ and their own age, culminating in the expected return of Christ, their Messiah, in such messianic terms.

1. Tribulation
2. Messianic Woes
3. Conclusion

1. Tribulation.

Reflecting apocalyptic language of the OT, especially Daniel, the book of Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) is the most extended depiction of tribulation in the NT, even though the word thlipsis is used only a few times. Although the reference in Revelation 7:14 to the great tribulation (cf. Mt 24:21) has caused unnecessary theological debate in terms of establishing the precise time and character of this tribulation in some futuristic eschatological* schemes, Revelation 6—19 clearly reflects a series of graphically depicted events of tribulation before the return of Christ* (Rev 19:11-21; see Parousia). This period is described in terms of the imagery of seven seals* (Rev 6:1—8:1), seven trumpets* (Rev 8:2—11:19) and seven bowls* (Rev 15:1—16:21), all containing various disastrous events culminating in judgment.* There have been numerous interpretations of how the seals, trumpets and bowls relate to each other, some interpreters seeing them consecutively and others with various degrees of overlap, some more and some less literally, but in any event in the end Babylon* is destroyed (Rev 17:1—18:24), making way for the return of Christ.

Although some persons have wanted to appropriate this book for their own theological purposes, interpretation in its original context indicates that it, like virtually all other biblical apocalyptic* passages, seems to reflect a time of imminent and impending if not already present persecution,* and hence persecution during the span of the Christian era. Although some writers have depicted this as a time when Christians are exempt from persecution, the evidence seems to indicate otherwise, with the tribulation being suffered by those by or for whom the books are written alongside others. This is certainly the case in Revelation. For example, in Revelation 1:9 the author, John, characterizes himself as a brother and companion in the tribulation or suffering,* kingdom and endurance* of his readers. In Revelation 2:9-10 the author speaks similarly to the church in Smyrna, recognizing their tribulation and poverty and instructing them that they can expect to have tribulation.

The same emphasis appears in other places in which tribulation is explicitly referred to in this literature (Heb 10:33; Jas 1:27; cf. Heb 11:37 regarding those in the OT). Even though the word for tribulation does not appear other than in James 1:27 in James,* A. Chester claims that such passages as James 1:2-4, 12-15 and James 5:7-12 also reflect tribulation. This is within the context of what the audience of the book is currently experiencing. This pattern is consistent with the rest of the NT. John 16:33 says that followers of Jesus can expect to have tribulation in this world,* and Acts 11:19 shows how the church* began to spread after persecution connected with the martyrdom* of Stephen.* Paul typifies his ministry* as one filled with tribulation (Acts 20:23) and admonishes Christians to whom he writes that tribulation is part of the endurance connected with faith* in Christ (Rom 5:3; 8:35; 12:12; 2 Cor 1:4, etc.).

The apostolic fathers* develop these concepts further in two important ways. The first is the recognition that the condition of the Christian is to have tribulation and suffer persecution. For example, in 1 Clement 59.4, a passage that invokes a number of similar OT passages (see Old Testament in Apostolic Fathers), the author beseeches God* on behalf of all of those who have fallen into misfortune, including the overtly afflicted. In Hermas Similitudes 7.1-6, the shepherd* is told that his continued suffering of various forms of punishment is a means of inducing repentance* and purification for his sinful deeds. No other way is said to be effective.

2. Messianic Woes.

The messianic woes refers to the kinds of travails to be experienced not only by the Messiah but by humankind in general in anticipation of the establishment of the messianic kingdom (see Kingdom of God). The travails include various kinds of turmoil and evil, including a general lack of humanity, earthquakes, famines, fire and various mysterious portents on earth and in the heavens. This was a fairly common idea in several strains of Jewish, especially apocalyptic, thought as well as some Greek thinking and is to be found specifically in Daniel (Dan 7; 9:20-27; 12:1-4), 1 Enoch (1 Enoch 80:2-8; 99:4-9; 100), Jubilees (Jub. 23:11-25), 4 Ezra (4 Ezra 5:1-13; 6:17-28; 7:10-35), Sybilline Oracles (Syb. Or. 3.538-44, 633-51, 796-807; 5.512-31), 2 Apocalypse of Baruch (2 Apoc. Bar. 25--27; 32:1; 70), Testament of Moses (T. Mos. 8; 10:1-10), the Qumran* literature (e.g., 1QH 3; 1QM 12; 19) and rabbinic literature (e.g., m. Soṭa 9:15; b. Sanh. 93; 98), among others.

The Suffering Servant passages in Isaiah, especially Isaiah 53:4-7, seem to have been instrumental in generating thought of a suffering Messiah. What characterizes those passages that introduce the Messiah is the expectation that the messiah, as a righteous person, was to be loaded down by God with cares, sorrows and even wounds and would suffer and possibly die. Whereas the vast mainstream of Jewish thought does not appear to have equated this death with an atoning death, on the basis of reflection upon Isaiah 53:4-7 it appears that at least in some circles the thought did develop into seeing the Messiah suffering as an atonement for human sin (see Justin Martyr Dial. Tryph. 89—90). The Messiah therefore not only fulfilled the commandments* of God but also in some way atoned for the failings of other humans by his abundance of righteousness.*

The question of major concern is what impact this thinking may have had on the NT writers. Whereas it appears that the NT accurately reflects Jewish lack of thinking of a dying, atoning Messiah (see Mt 16:22; Lk 18:34; 24:21; Jn 12:34), the NT writers themselves seem to see Jesus' suffering and death as atoning, quite possibly in terms of the messianic woes described in the Jewish literature (e.g., Mk 10:45 par. Mt 20:28; see Death of Christ). D. S. Russell has noted that Jesus' discourse on approaching judgment (Mk 13; Mt 24; Lk 21) is followed by the story of his suffering and death. Jesus agonizes in the garden and dies on the cross* before being resurrected as an inauguration of the day of the Lord (see Day of the Lord; Resurrection). Matthew depicts the death and resurrection with strange natural and other phenomena, such as an eclipse, the tearing of the temple* curtain, an earthquake and the splitting of rocks, tombs breaking open and the bodies of the holy* being raised (Mt 27:51-53). As Acts 2:22 (see also Acts 2:24) states through the mouth of Peter, Jesus was a man recognized by his miracles,* wonders and signs (see Signs and Wonders).

Three passages from the literature that we are discussing have primary importance in discussing the concept of the messianic woes. The first is Revelation 12, especially Revelation 12:1-6. In this chapter a woman is depicted as in the throes of birth. Just as she is about to give birth a dragon* appears from heaven* and intends to devour her child as she gives birth to it. She gives birth to a son who, the author says, is to rule all the nations with an iron scepter, and the child is snatched up to God. The result is a war in heaven, and Michael and his angels* defeat the dragon, who is Satan,* and he is hurled to earth. Even though the dragon pursues the woman, she escapes, and the dragon makes war against those obedient to God. This passage seems to reflect the Isaianic literature regarding the birth of a significant child (see Is 9:6), hence the imagery of the "birth pangs," found here only in the literature under discussion (but see Mk 13:8; Mt 24:8; cf. 1 Thess 5:3; Gal 4:19, 27; Col 1:24).

The second passage is 1 Peter 2:21-25, a possibly preformulated creedal section that appears to be an extended reflection on Isaiah 53:4-9 (including quotation of Is 53:9 in 1 Pet 2:22; see Creeds). At the end of a section of household responsibilities (see Household Codes; Household, Family), after having summarized proper obedience* in 1 Peter 2:17, the author recapitulates regarding slaves* submitting to their masters. He draws an analogy between a slave suffering for doing good with what Christ suffered. Christ suffered "for you," or on their behalf, leaving himself as an example to be followed. After quoting Isaiah 53:9, the author recapitulates Christ's suffering (cf. 1 Pet 5:1) in terms of the Suffering Servant, who does not retaliate or recriminate but entrusts himself to God. He bore their sins when he was crucified so that in his death they might live. Alluding to Isaiah 53:5, the author says that by his wounds they have been healed, and alluding to Isaiah 53:6, he compares Christians to being sheep who have gone astray. This passage reflects the messianic suffering that is a foretaste of glorification and applies it directly to the Christian audience (see also 1 Pet 4:12-19).

A third passage is Didache 16, called by J. Lawson "an apocalyptic exhortation to faithfulness" (Lawson, 100). Didache 16 speaks of Christians maintaining readiness for the return of Christ, especially in the light of various forms of false prophets* and corrupters, including finally the deceiver of the world. At this point suffering and persecution seem to increase to their full complement until the return of the Lord. This highly apocalyptic passage is fully consonant with the imagery developed in Revelation but even more so with the apocalyptic passages in the Gospels, especially Matthew 24. It is fitting that it is the final and closing section of the *Didache.

Several other NT passages are also worth noting as possibly reflecting the language of the messianic woes in which Jesus suffers and brings atonement as a prelude to glorification. All of them seem to reflect Isaiah 53. These include Hebrews 5:8-9, which speaks of Jesus, who though being a son* learned obedience from what he suffered and, having been made perfect, became the source of eternal salvation* for all. 1 Peter 1:11 speaks of the sufferings of Christ and the glories that would follow, reflecting movement from messianic suffering to the day of the Lord. And 1 John 3:5 says that Christ appeared so that he might take away sins.

3. Conclusion.

Although there is little in the texts discussed to argue for the tribulation as conceived in systematic theological constructs, there is a noteworthy and sizeable amount of overlap between the conception of intensified tribulation before the return of Christ as depicted in some theological schemes and the concept of the messianic woes preceding the day of the Lord. The following features are worth noting. The biblical texts arguably endorse the idea that the suffering of tribulation is something that Jesus Christ himself as the Isaianic messiah underwent in his suffering and death. In that sense he was subject to the messianic woes of the expected Jewish Messiah, anticipated in a variety of biblical and extrabiblical literature. The tribulations associated with him are seen by the biblical authors to be continued in his followers, as attested by various statements throughout the NT. There also appears to be an expectation of heightened suffering associated with following in the footsteps of the Messiah and in anticipation of his return. In this way contemporary Christians, as reflected in the NT texts, are experiencing a period of messianic woes in expectation of the future day of the Lord. Continued tribulation is seen as a necessary prelude to the return of Christ.

See also APOCALYPTIC, APOCALYPTICISM; DAY OF THE LORD; ESCHATOLOGY; PAROUSIA.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. M. Bockmuehl, This Jesus: Martyr, Lord, Messiah (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1996); A. Chester and R. P. Martin, The Theology of the Letters of James, Peter and Jude (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994); J. J. Collins, The Apocalyptic Imagination: An Introduction to the Jewish Matrix of Christianity (New York: Crossroad, 1984); P. H. Davids, The First Epistle of Peter (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); W. Grundmann et al., "χρίω κτλ," TDNT 9:493-580; R. H. Gundry, The Church and the Tribulation (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1973); C. E. Hill, Regnum Caelorum: Patterns of Future Hope in Early Christianity (Oxford: Clarendon, 1992); G. E. Ladd, The Last Things (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978); J. Lawson, A Theological and Historical Introduction to the Apostolic Fathers (New York: Macmillan, 1961); J. B. Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers (pt. 1; 2 vols.; New York: Macmillan, 1890); D. S. Russell, Apocalyptic: Ancient and Modern (London: SCM, 1978); idem, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic (London: SCM, 1964); E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (175 B.C.-A.D. 135), rev. and ed. G. Vermes et al. (3 vols.; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1973-77).

S. E. Porter

TRUMPETS

Revelation uses "trumpet" and its cognates "trumpeter" and "to sound a trumpet" in two notable contexts: to depict the character of a voice that addresses the Seer; in connection with a series of seven visions,* each of which commences with a trumpet blast. A third and minor context is the desolation of the wicked city, Babylon,* where the sound of trumpeter is no longer to be heard (Rev 18:24). In the apostolic fathers* "trumpet" denotes the clarity and forcefulness of the Word of God.

1. The Voice Like a Trumpet
2. The Trumpet Visions
3. Patristic Uses

1. The Voice Like a Trumpet.

Revelation 1:10 and Revelation 4:1 refer to a "voice like a trumpet" that addressed the Seer. The trumpet of those days was primitive and produced only a few notes with a raucous sound; it was better suited as a signaling and warning device than as a musical instrument. The Seer therefore seems to be indicating the distinctiveness or loudness of the sound of the voice—a sound that could not be ignored. Yet the use of the trumpet in the OT—to call those who were to participate in the holy war (Judg 3:27; 6:34; 1 Sam 13:3; Jer 51:27; Ezek 7:14), as the accompaniment of a theophany, to announce the Day of the Lord* and to mark the eschatological* judgment* (Joel 2:1; Zeph 1:16), the beginning of the new era of salvation* and the restoration of Israel*—cannot be overlooked. Seen against such a background, a trumpet blast is an appropriate way to introduce the Apocalypse (see Revelation, Book of), which announces the fulfillment of the reign of Christ* and calls on his people to engage in the holy war against the enemies of God.

2. The Trumpet Visions.

Like the preceding judgments of the seals* (Rev 6:1—8:1), the seven judgments of the trumpets in Revelation 8:2—11:19 are divided into groups of four and three, with an interlude between the sixth and seventh visions. Yet the trumpet visions provide greater detail and are of greater severity than are the seal visions: whereas the seal judgments affected one-fourth of the individual target groups, the trumpet judgments affect one-third of each group.

The seven trumpet blasts are particularly significant when they are seen against the background of the trumpet blasts accompanying the conquest of Jericho (Josh 6:4, 8, 13). In the context of the whole Apocalypse the situation is reversed: now it is Jerusalem* and the people of Israel who are defeated by their Gentile* enemies. Much of the imagery in the trumpet visions comes from the OT account of the plagues on Egypt; since Revelation 11:8 applies the name Egypt to Jerusalem, the implication is that these judgments are to fall on Jerusalem. The use in the individual visions of imagery drawn from prophetic denunciations of Jerusalem and Israel because of their idolatry* and apostasy* also suggests that the Seer regards Jerusalem and the Jewish people of his day as the object of God's* wrath.* But there are also allusions to OT texts proclaiming doom for Babylon, thus preparing the way for a more detailed description of the fate of the symbolic Babylon in Revelation 17—18.

2.1. The First Trumpet. The image of hail, fire and blood falling on the earth may be based on Amos 7:4, referring to a fire burning up the land of Israel.

2.2. The Second Trumpet. The image of something resembling a burning mountain plunging into the sea, killing one-third of the marine life and destroying one-third of the ships (Rev 8:8-9), could be a reference to the eruption of Vesuvius in A.D. 79. But it could also refer to Jeremiah 51:25, depicting Babylon as a mountain, fallen to earth and burned.

2.3. The Third Trumpet. The transformation of waters to wormwood and the subsequent deaths (Rev 8:10-11) are the reverse of the miracle at Marah, where bitter and undrinkable water was made drinkable (Ex 15:25). Moreover, in Jeremiah 9:15 Yahweh says that he will feed Judah with wormwood and give them poisonous water to drink because they have forsaken him and practiced idolatry (cf. Jer 9:14). Jeremiah 23:15 makes the same threat against the false prophets.*

2.4. The Fourth Trumpet. The reduction of the light of the sun, moon and stars (Rev 8:12) is a variation on Isaiah 49:10: what was to be a blessing* for the returning exiles is instead a curse. There is also an allusion to Amos 8:9, where Yahweh announces that he will darken the earth because of Israel's injustices and religious formalism. Moreover, the darkness that enabled Joshua to defeat Israel's enemies now becomes the means of Israel's defeat at the hands of her enemies (Josh 10:12-14).

2.5. The Fifth Trumpet. The plague of locusts like horses could allude to the presence of Gessius Florus's cavalry in Judea, seen as a fulfillment of Joel's prophecy of horselike locusts invading Palestine (Joel 1—2). There may also be a reference to Jeremiah 51, which warns of an attack on Babylon by "horses like bristling locusts" (Jer 51:17) and an invasion and conquest by an army as numerous as locusts (Jer 51:14). The Greek name of the locust plague's leader, "Apollyon," perhaps reflects the claims of Nero and Domitian to be incarnations of Apollo.

2.6. The Sixth Trumpet. Most scholars see the mention of the river Euphrates as a reference to Rome's fear of a Parthian invasion from the East under the leadership of a revived Nero—and thus as confirmation of the view that the Seer is concerned with Rome (see Roman Empire) as the enemy of the church.* Yet the prophets sometimes used the Euphrates (Israel's northern frontier) to signify Assyria and Babylon as the area from which Israel's punishment would come (cf. Is 7:20; 8:7; Jer 46:10), and many prophecies spoke of the invasion of Israel by a foe from the north (e.g., Is 14:31; Jer 1:14-15; 13:20: 47:2; Ezek 38:6, 15). The ability of the "horses" to wound both with their tails and with their mouths (Rev 9:19) could refer to the Parthians, whose bowmen were renowned for their skill in shooting arrows both ahead of and behind them.

2.7. The Seventh Trumpet. The vision of the ark of the covenant within "God's temple in heaven" (Rev 11:15-19) reflects the Jewish tradition that Jeremiah had hidden the ark and the altar of burnt offering so that they would not fall into the hands of the Chaldeans. Since the ark would not be restored until God regathered his people (cf. 2 Macc 2:4-8), the Seer may be hinting that the time of regathering has arrived. That the ark is seen in heaven* rather than in the temple* in Jerusalem suggests that the earthly temple has been superseded.

3. Patristic Uses.

"Trumpet" occurs in the later literature as a simile for the clarity and force with which the Word of God comes (Justin Martyr Or. Gr. 5), its eschatological announcement (Did. 16.6) or as a historical allusion to the OT (Irenaeus Haer. 4.18).

See also BABYLON; REVELATION, BOOK OF; VISIONS, ECSTATIC EXPERIENCE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. A. J. Beagley, The 'Sitz im Leben' of the Apocalypse with Particular Reference to the Role of the Enemies of the Church (BZNW 50; Berlin: Walter de Gruyter, 1987); G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation (NCB; London: Oliphants, 1978); I. T. Beckwith, The Apocalypse of John: Studies in Introduction with a Critical and Exegetical Com- mentary (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1979 [1919]); G. B. Caird, The Revelation of St. John the Divine (HNTC; New York: Harper & Row, 1966); P. Carrington, The Meaning of the Revelation (London: SPCK, 1931); R. H. Charles, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Revelation of St. John (ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1920); A. Y. Collins, The Combat Myth in the Book of Revelation (HDR 9; Missoula, MT: Scholars Press, 1976); A. Feuillet, The Apocalypse (Staten Island, NY: Alba House, 1965); J. M. Ford, Revelation; Introduction, Translation and Commentary (AB; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1975); G. Friedrich, "σάλπιγξ," TDNT 8:71-88; S. Giet, L'Apocalypse et l'histoire; Étude historique sur l'Apocalypse Johannique (Paris: University of Paris, 1957); H. W. Günther, Der Nah- und Enderwartungshorizont in der Apokalypse des heiligen Johannes (FBib 41; n.p.: Echter, 1980); B. Malina, On the Genre and Message of Revelation: Star Visions and Sky Journeys (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1995); J. R. Michaels, Interpreting the Book of Revelation (GNTE; Grand Rapids: Baker, 1992); R. H. Mounce, The Book of Revelation (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1977); J. Sweet, Revelation (WPC; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1979); C. van der Waal, Openbaring van Jezus Christus: Inleiding en Vertaling (Groningen: De Vuurbaak, 1971); idem, Openbaring van Jezus Christus II: Verklaring (Oudkarspel: De Neverheid, 1981).

A. J. Beagley

TRUTH

The English word truth typically translates the Greek alētheia and related forms in the NT, but one must caution against equating modern notions of truth with its functions in early Christianity. Whereas truth in Western cultures often concerns facts that can be proven logically or scientifically, truth in the NT may deal with genuine, dependable, faithful behavior or "things as they really are" in contrast to something that has been hidden or concealed (cf. Hübner, 58 and Bultmann, 238, though etymological appeals to lanthanō ["forget," "cover up"] as a basis for interpreting alētheia are suspect).

Nonetheless, as is seen especially in Acts, alētheia can be used with reference to the truth or reality of historical events or a speaker's statements (see also 8 below on Ignatius). A matter of truth is rarely defended with logical arguments, but instead the author often appeals to the source of revealed truth or assumes the veracity of the claims.

Furthermore, whereas today it is commonplace to question the truth of God's existence, this existence was typically assumed in NT contexts. Instead the authors debated which religious beliefs and behaviors were true or truthful in contrast to those that were false or deceitful.

In addition it is important to remember that abstract terms such as "truth," "true" or "real"—which are extremely difficult to define out of context—are best treated in view of closely related words. Therefore the following study attempts to understand Greek terms for "truth" (alētheia and related forms) in conjunction with terms meaning "false" (pseudos and related forms) and "belief" (pistis and related forms), an approach substantiated by the Septuagint translation of the Hebrew 'emet with Greek words for righteousness* and faith.*

1. Johannine Epistles
2. Acts
3. Hebrews
4. James
5. Petrine Epistles
6. Jude
7. Revelation
8. Apostolic Fathers

1. Johannine Epistles.

Of the fifty-five uses of alētheia or related terminology in Acts, the General Epistles and Revelation, almost 51 percent appear in the Johannine epistles (see John, Letters of): 1 John (sixteen times), 2 John (five times) and 3 John (seven times). Even more importantly "truth" and "falsehood" play central roles in the thematic structures of all three letters. Hence we start with this corpus.

In these letters certain behavior is required of believers who claim to "be in the truth" (1 Jn 1:8), "know the truth" (2 Jn 1-2) or "walk in the truth" (2 Jn 4; 3 Jn 3-4). Believers must admit to "having sin" (1 Jn 1:8). They must keep the commands of God (1 Jn 2:4). They must not hate their fellow believers (1 Jn 2:8-11; 4:20) but instead love them with their actions (1 Jn 3:16-19; 2 Jn 1; 3 Jn 1). They must not deny that Jesus is the Messiah (1 Jn 2:20-22) and that he came in the flesh* (1 Jn 4:1-3; cf. 2 Jn 7). They accept as true God's* testimony that he has given them eternal life* through his Son* (1 Jn 5:10-11).

The author assumes that truth can be known and discerned (2 Jn 1-2; cf. 1 Jn 4:6). The basis of truth is God (1 Jn 5:9-10), and the revealer and giver of truth is Jesus (1 Jn 5:20), who is described as the "true one" (1 Jn 5:20). But whereas God and the Spirit teach that which is true (1 Jn 2:27; 1 Jn 4:6; 1 Jn 5:6), there are also false spirits and prophets* (1 Jn 4:1-6) and idols* (1 Jn 5:21) that lead away from the truth.

2. Acts.

Despite its length Acts* uses alētheia only five times and pseudos three times; the author prefers pistis when speaking of one's belief or trust in the truth of something. Twice alētheia is used with the preposition epi in the sense of "indeed, truly": in Acts 4:27 to emphasize that Psalm 2:1-2 was "in fact" fulfilled in the persecution* of Jesus and in Acts 10:34 to highlight that Peter now "truly" understands God's impartiality in view of Cornelius's* encounter with a divine being (Acts 10:30-33). In Acts 12:9 Peter is not sure if his rescue from prison by an angel* was "real" (alēthōs) or a "vision"* (horama); here the author makes a clear distinction between events in time and space that happen and those that only appear to happen. When the angel leaves Peter standing in the street, Peter states in Acts 12:11 that he now "truly" (alēthōs) knows that the events surrounding his rescue actually occurred. Twice in Acts "truth" concerns the veracity of a person's actions or words. In Acts 5:3-4 Peter charges Ananias with lying (pseudomai) to the Holy Spirit* and to God after giving the church* only a portion of the proceeds from the sale of his property. In Acts 26:25 Paul responds to Festus's challenge of the truthfulness of his courtroom defense by claiming, "I speak words of truth (alētheia)"; that is, he is not lying.

3. Hebrews.

In Hebrews 6:18 God's promise* to Abraham* is said to be authenticated by the fact that it was confirmed with an oath, which must be true because God cannot "lie" (pseudomai); that is, God is the basis of truth since by his very nature he presents things as they are. Twice in Hebrews* the author contrasts an earthly religious entity with its true counterpart: the true (alēthinos) heavenly tabernacle* (in contrast to the earthly one), in which our high priest* Jesus now resides, has been set up by the Lord,* not humans (Heb 8:2); and similarly Christ* is said to have entered heaven,* not holy places (of the temple*) that are mere copies of the true ones (Heb 9:24). Hebrews 10:22 uses the adjective (alēthinos) in a practical sense, stating that we should approach God with a true (almost in the sense of "pure, righteous") heart, one that has been cleansed from an evil conscience.* In this sense a true heart is dependent upon its moral qualities. Hebrews 10:26 speaks of truth (alētheia) as something that is bestowed to someone and demands certain conduct: "If we willfully sin after receiving the knowledge of truth, there no longer remains a sacrifice for sins."

4. James.

The letter of James* juxtaposes truth and wisdom* (sophia) with falsehood and deception (planaō). God is the one who gives wisdom to individuals but only if they ask and believe (Jas 1:5-6). James 1:18 similarly treats God as the one who "brought us forth by the word of truth," probably a reference to regeneration and the gospel (Davids, 89). Those who have "wisdom" and "understanding" (epistēmōn) should demonstrate it by means of humble actions (Jas 3:13). Such "humble wisdom"—a wisdom that is defined as pure, peaceable, gentle, submissive, full of mercy* and good fruit, impartial and sincere—is contrasted with harsh zeal and selfish ambition, and persons who exhibit these latter characteristics are warned not to "lie against the truth" (Jas 3:14). The author still describes such conduct as "earthly, unspiritual and devilish" wisdom, yet a wisdom that is not from heaven (Jas 3:15). The verb planaō is used to warn the reader not to be "deceived" (Jas 1:16) and to speak of the possibility of "being led away" from the truth (Jas 5:19).

5. Petrine Epistles.

In 1 Peter* the readers are encouraged to "obey the truth" (1 Pet 1:22) with the result that they love their fellow believers (cf. the Johannine letters); in 1 Peter 5:12 the author states that "this" (= the content of the letter or perhaps the suffering* of the readers; see Michaels, 308-10) is the "true grace of God" (1 Pet 5:12; see Grace). Notions of truth and falsehood play a more important role in 2 Peter.* In 2 Peter 1:12 the author reminds the readers of truths in which they are already firmly established. In 2 Peter 2—3 (esp. 2 Pet 2:1-2) the author warns of false prophets and teachers who lead people astray and cause the "way of truth" to be blasphemed (2 Pet 2:2). 2 Peter 2:3 and onward then describes the punishment* and sinful conduct of these individuals and (in 2 Pet 3:3-4) possibly hints at their denial of the "Day of the Lord."* In the closing of the letter, the author again warns the readers to guard against "lawless men" but instead to "grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet 3:18).

6. Jude.

It is surprising that Jude* never uses any of the common words for "truth" or "falsehood," since this brief letter is primarily an attempt to warn the readers against "godless men" who have "secretly crept in" among them (Jude 4)—a prime opportunity to make claims about truth and falsehood. However, Jude 10 does address the ability of these so-called godless men to "understand" (epistantai) by equating their minimal understanding with that of "unreasoning animals," who only have a "natural" (or instinctual) type of understanding. By implication the ability to understanding things (i.e., to know the truth about something) depends upon the level of one's understanding. According to this author, there are "natural," "logical" and perhaps even "spiritual" (see Jude 19, where the "godless men" are described as not having the Spirit) abilities to understand; these types of understanding are not further clarified.

7. Revelation.

All ten uses of truth language in Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) are with the adjective alēthinos. Often the adjective describes the activities or characteristics of Jesus or God as true. In Revelation 3:7, 14 Jesus is spoken of as the "true one" and "true witness" respectively. In Revelation 6:10 the Lord is praised as "holy and true"; in Revelation 15:3 "just and true" are the ways of the Lord God; in Revelation 16:7 and Revelation 19:2 God's judgments are "true and just." Several times in Revelation the words that John is being told to write down are declared to be "true" (Rev 19:9; 21:5; 22:6). Aside from these instances, alēthinos is used in Revelation 19:11 for the name of the rider of the white horse, namely, "Faithful and True."

As one would expect in a book with several instances of language about truth, there are various uses of terminology about falsehood: in Revelation 3:9 there are those who "lie" about being Jews but are really part of the "synagogue of Satan"; in Revelation 14:5 the 144,000 who follow the Lamb* are said to have no "lie" in their mouths; Revelation 16:13; 19:20; 20:10 speak of the "false" prophet; and Revelation 21:27 and Revelation 22:15 describe both those who are not part of the book of life and those who are deemed "outsiders" as people who practice "falsehood" (pseudos).

8. Apostolic Fathers.

Greek words for "truth" appear approximately one hundred times in the writings of the apostolic fathers*; in several cases truth is contrasted with "falsehood" or "heresy" (Ign. Eph. 6.2; Did. 11.10; 16.3, 6). God and Christ are repeatedly described in terms of truth: God loves truth (1 Clem. 18.6); God is true or is a God "of truth" (2 Clem. 3.1; 19.1; 20.5; Mart. Pol. 14.2; Herm. Man. 3.1; Diogn. 8.8); Jesus is true life (Ign. Eph. 7.2; Ign. Smyrn. 4.1) and true love* (Pol. Phil. 1.1). Ignatius* calls his readers the "children of truth" (Ign. Phld. 2.1). The Scriptures are said to be true (1 Clem. 45.2; cf. Pol. Phil. 3.2, where Paul is said to have taught the truth to the Philippians). God is the source of truth (1 Clem. 35.2; 2 Clem. 20.5; cf. 1 Clem. 60.2; Diogn. 7.2). "Truly" is occasionally used to validate an author's claim (1 Clem. 23.6; 47.3; Ign. Eph. 17.2; Barn. 1.3; 7.9); for example, Ignatius stresses that the events of Jesus' virgin birth, persecution, death (see Death of Christ), burial and resurrection* "truly" happened (Ign. Magn. 11.1; Ign. Trall. 9.1; Ign. Smyrn. 1.1, 2; 2.1).

But in these writings truth is typically treated in relation to the behavior of people: Job was righteous, unblamable and true (1 Clem. 17.3); Abraham worked righteousness and truth through faith (1 Clem. 31.2); Christians should "live" according to the truth and "walk" or "serve God" in truth, which implies righteous behavior (1 Clem. 35.6; 62 2; Ign. Eph. 6.2; Pol. Phil. 2.1; 5.2; Herm. Man. 12.3.1; Herm. Sim. 9.25.2; cf. Barn. 20.2 and Did. 5.2, where "hating the truth" is found in a list of vices); God can be called upon in faith and truth (1 Clem. 60.4); people should speak the truth (2 Clem. 12.3; Herm. Man. 3); wives are told to cherish their husbands in all truth (Pol. Phil. 4.2); the truth of something should be investigated as to its veracity, not merely believed (Herm. Man. 10.1.4, 5, 6); truth can be abandoned (Herm. Sim. 6.2.1, 4; 8.9.1). One of the most concentrated discussions of truth is found in the third mandate of the Shepherd of Hermas,* which highlights the virtue* of speaking the truth and condemns falsehood and lying.

See also AUTHORITY; GNOSIS, GNOSTICISM; GOSPEL; KNOWLEDGE; WISDOM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. W. Bauer, A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature, rev. F. W. Gingrich and W. Danker (2d ed.; Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1979); R. Bultmann, "ἀλήθεια κτλ," TDNT 1:232-51; P. H. Davids, Commentary on James (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); H. Hübner, "ἀλήθεια κτλ," EDNT 1:57-60; J. R. Michaels, 1 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); A. C. Thiselton, "Truth," NIDNTT 3:874-902.

J. T. Reed

TWELVE, THE. See APOSTLE, APOSTLESHIP.

TWELVE TRIBES. See ISRAEL, TWELVE TRIBES.

TWO WAYS. See TEACHING, PARAENISIS; VIRTUES AND VICES.

TYPOLOGY. See INTERTEXTUALITY IN EARLY CHRISTIAN LITERATURE; MOSES; OLD TESTAMENT IN HEBREWS.

U

UNCLEAN. See PURITY AND IMPURITY.

UNIVERSALISM

Universalism is the theory that ultimately everyone will be saved. A key text for this theory as developed in the early church is found in our portion of the NT at Acts 3:21, relying heavily upon the significance of the Greek word apokatastasis ("restoration"). Origen (c. 185-c. 254) is the first explicit proponent of universalism, or apokatastasis, and draws mostly upon Romans 5:19, Romans 11:32, 1 Corinthians 15:22 and 1 Timothy 2:4 (see DPL, Universalism). The wording of 2 Peter 3:9 also is suggestive if it is read through a universalist lens.

1. Acts 3:21
2. 2 Peter 3:9
3. Conditional Salvation in the Later New Testament

1. Acts 3:21.

1.1. The Restoration of All. Acts 3:17-21 can be taken one of two ways, dramatized by the differences in how the RSV and NRSV translate Acts 3:21. Jesus is to remain in heaven "until the time for establishing all that God spoke" (RSV) or "until the time of universal restoration that God announced long ago through his holy prophets" (NRSV). In the RSV's rendering, apokatastasis pantōn is read in the light of Luke's desire to demonstrate divine fulfillment in the unfolding events (e.g., Acts 2:23). God's purpose, as in the life and work of Christ* so in the second coming, will be established at the time he foretold through the prophets (cf. the use of the verb apokathistanō in Acts 1:6; Bruce). The NRSV rightly follows the RSV in rendering pantōn as a neuter ("all things") instead of taking it as "all people." But the NRSV's translation emphasizes the Jewish expectation that the Messiah would return all things to their original state.

1.2. Origen. Origen used Acts 3:21 as the basis for the doctrine of apokatastasis, the doctrine of the restoration of all created things. Central to his view is that the goal of God's work of salvation* is to remove all disorder in creation* that has resulted from sin, restoring all things and every person in the end to the primeval order they had in the beginning. He goes beyond the messianic expectation of the restoration of the universe to posit an anthropological effect, the reconciliation of all people to God. He reinterprets texts about judgment* in light of the absolute nature of God's dominion (Origen De Princ. 1.6.1-4). Since God will ultimately rule all things again, the punishment of the wicked is temporary and consists in their own internal anguish at the realization of their separation from God. The scriptural depictions of eternal punishment have value as deterrents, but they will one day come to an end. Acts 3:21, in Origen's view, hints at the time when all created things will be restored to the harmony and unity of original creation (Origen De Princ. 3.6.3), "when all things shall be reestablished in a state of unity and when God shall be all in all" (Origen De Princ. 3.6.6).

2. 2 Peter 3:9.

2.1. A Universalist Misreading of 2 Peter 3:9. The wording of 2 Peter 3:9 is suggestive along the lines of universalism: the Lord* "does not wish anyone to perish but wants all to come to repentance." The argument can be advanced that God's purpose is never thwarted, and the divine perogative will be fulfilled. Salvation for all will be fully realized because the God who wills it is omnipotent. So note the echo of 2 Peter 3:9 in 1 Clement: "Since then he wishes all his beloved to partake of repentance, he has established it by his almighty will" (1 Clem. 8:5).

2.2. 2 Peter 3:9 in Context. The syntax and immediate context of 2 Peter 3:9 militate against a restorationist reading. The syntax does not address all people everywhere. Rather the author speaks of a limited sphere of concern: "but he is forebearing toward you" (eis hymas), that is, 2 Peter's* auditors. The "anyone" (tinas) he does not wish to perish and the "all" (pantas) he wants to repent are those toward whom he is patient among the community addressed by the letter (Bauckham). Likewise the immediate context rules out a universalist reading as a misreading. 2 Peter 3:7 clearly delineates a conditional salvation and a "day of judgment and destruction of the godless." The discussion is not about the unconditional salvation of all human beings but about why the Parousia* delays due to God's patience, allowing an extended opportunity for repentance.* The Lord's patience and "slowness" to return are to allow more people into the kingdom (see Kingdom of God) but does not ensure that all will enter.

3. Conditional Salvation in the Later NT.

The dominant eschatology* of the later NT writings is unified around the judgment and permanent punishment of the godless (2 Pet 3:7). So Revelation 20:10 warns, "And the devil who had deceived them was thrown into the lake of fire and sulfur, . . . and they will be tormented day and night forever and ever" (NRSV). Judgment awaits some humans too: "anyone whose name was not found written in the book of life was thrown into the lake of fire" (Rev 20:15 NRSV). Examples need not be multiplied to demonstrate the density of language in the eschatological statements of the later NT, language that includes "destroy" (apollymi, phtheirō), "destruction" (apōleia, olethros) and "abolish" (katargeō). These terms characterize human destiny apart from Christ.

See also CREATION, COSMOLOGY; ESCHATOLOGY; EVANGELISM IN THE EARLY CHURCH; GENTILES, GENTILE MISSION; MISSION, EARLY NON-PAULINE; SALVATION; WORLD.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); F. F. Bruce, The Book of the Acts (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1981); J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Doctrines (rev. ed.; San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1978 [1960]); H.-G. Link, "Apokatastasis," NIDNTT 3:146-48; P.-G. Müller, "ἀποκαθίστημι, ἀποκαθιστανω," EDNT 1:129-30; A. F. Segal, "Conversion and Universalism: Opposites That Attract" in Origins and Method: Toward a New Understanding of Judaism and Christianity, ed. B. McLean (JSNTSup 86; Sheffield: JSOT, 1993) 162-89; R. J. H. Shutt, "The New Testament Doctrine of the Hereafter: Universalism or Conditional Immortality," ExpT 67 (1955-56) 131-35.

B. J. Dodd

V

VALENTINUS. See GNOSIS, GNOSTICISM.

VIALS. See BOWLS.

VICES. See VIRTUES AND VICES.

VIRTUES AND VICES

Ethicists define a virtue as one of an integrated set of habitual inner dispositions of an ideal human life that is displayed by positive action. By contrast, a vice is a habitual inner disposition to do evil or not to do good. Yet neither virtue nor vice is to be confused with specific actions of good or evil; each holds in view inner tendencies rooted in character. Any naming or consideration of virtues and vices needs to be understood within its respective worldview, for any given term for a virtue or vice can take on different shades of meaning in the light of various and distinct moral visions.

The later NT literature, like the Pauline Epistles (see DPL, Virtues and Vices), exhibits several listings of virtues and vices, a feature that is also found in the apostolic fathers.* However, it should be noted that not everything that is classified as a virtue or a vice in these lists (or in this article) would be so defined by ethicists. In some cases they are simply abstentions from or addictions to sinful or evil deeds. An important consideration for interpreting these lists is the common Greco-Roman practice of listing virtues and vices as a form of moral exhortation. Nonetheless there are valuable precedents in the OT-Jewish moral traditions, as we shall observe, particularly in the wisdom traditions.

1. Greco-Roman and Jewish Background
2. Later New Testament Writings
3. Apostolic Fathers

1. Greco-Roman and Jewish Background.

The NT emerged in a world in which moral thought was well developed. Aristotle's work on the virtues was four hundred years old by the time the NT literature was written. The cataloging of virtues and vices may be traced to the Stoic philosophers, beginning with Zeno's founding of the Stoa in Athens c. 308 B.C. By the first century A.D. moral philosophy was a popular topic of instruction and discussion at various levels of Roman society. In the homes of the wealthy, in rented lecture halls and on street corners, popular philosophers of one sort or another, typically Stoics or Cynics, found a venue for their instruction, which frequently included the topics of virtue and vice. It should come as no surprise then that early Christian writers found the language and forms of moral instruction ready at hand in the popular philosophies of the day. Although transformed in its new context of the gospel, the NT's language and listing of virtues and vices is best understood with this Greco-Roman background in mind (see Kamlah, Vögtle, Wibbing, Zoeckler; for a sampling of relevant background texts, see Malherbe).

Stoic philosophers adopted the platonic fourfold division of virtue (aretē) into wisdom (phronēsis), moderation (sōphrosynē), justice (dikaiosynē) and courage (andreia). These four cardinal virtues the Stoics divided into various subvirtues. The four virtues were opposed by the four vices of folly (aphrosynē), licentiousness (akolasia), injustice (adikia) and cowardice (deilia), which in turn were expressed in subsidiary vices. These virtues and vices became a staple of moral discourse, and the listing of virtues and vices became an accepted and popular literary and rhetorical convention. A list could evoke a picture of an ideal good life set in contrast with a life of bad character and irrational behavior. When carefully ordered, a list of virtues could suggest a taxonomy of the ideal moral life.

The cataloging of virtues and vices is not a feature of the OT (though cf. the "seven evils" of Prov 6:16-19 and the divine virtues of, e.g., Ex 34:6-7; Num 14:18; Ps 86:15) but the influence of this Hellenistic tradition is evident in Second-Temple Jewish writers such as Philo* of Alexandria, who developed extensive lists (e.g., Philo Sacr. 15-33; Leg. All. 86-87; Virt. 182). Hellenistic-Jewish writings such as Wisdom of Solomon (Wis 8:7; 14:22-27), 4 Maccabees (e.g., 4 Macc 1:2-4, 18-28; 2:15) and Sibylline Oracles (e.g., Sib. Or. 2:254-282; 3:377-80) utilized lists. And listings may also be found in the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (e.g., T. Reub. 3:3-8; T. Levi 17:11; T. Iss. 7:2-6) and 3 Apocalypse of Baruch (e.g., Apoc. Bar. 4:17; 8:5; 13:4). The rabbinic traditions of the Mishnah and Talmud barely exhibit this feature (see m. 'Abot 3:11; 4:21; m. Soṭa 9:15; b. Soṭa 42a; b. Sanh. 75a).

A related Second-Temple Jewish form is the Two Ways tradition. This is best exemplified by the Qumran* text, 1QS 4:3-14, where the two ways are aligned with the "spirit of truth [or light]," and the "spirit of perversity [or darkness]." Likewise the Testament of Asher utilizes this motif (T. Asher 1:3-9; 2:5-8), where the "two ways" are further defined as "two mind-sets, two lines of action, two models, two goals . . . everything is in pairs, the one over against the other" (T. Asher 1:3-4). The influence of this Two Ways tradition on the NT has been variously assessed (see Suggs, Wibbing), with Paul's listing of the works of the flesh and fruit of the Spirit in Galatians 5:19-26 being a focal point of investigation (see, e.g., Longenecker). Whatever conclusions one might draw regarding the influence of the Jewish Two Ways tradition on the NT literature, the tradition is clearly developed in the apostolic fathers (Did. 1—5; Barn. 18—20; Herm. Man. 6.2.1-7; see 3 below).

2. Later New Testament Writings.

Within the later NT literature outside the Pauline corpus there are several lists of virtues (Heb 7:26; Jas 3:13, 17-18; 1 Pet 3:8; 2 Pet 1:5-7) and vices (Jas 3:14-16; 1 Pet 2:1; 4:3, 15; Rev 9:21; 21:8; 22:15). These texts will be examined below. But we should recognize that within the disputed Pauline letters there are several lists of both virtues (Eph 4:2-3, 32—5:2; 5:9; Col 3:12-14; 1 Tim 3:2-4, 8-10, 11-12; 4:12; 6:11, 18; 2 Tim 2:22-25; 3:10; Tit 1:8; 2:2-10) and vices (Eph 4:25-32; 5:3-5; Col 3:5-8; 1 Tim 1:9-10; 6:4-5; 2 Tim 3:2-4; Tit 1:7; 3:3). These particular Pauline virtue and vice lists are viewed by some scholars as partial evidence for dating these letters in the post-Pauline era, when Paul's ethical wrestling with the eschatological tension between the present and future was reduced to lists of norms, and the spiritual endowment requisite for community leadership was supplanted by civic virtues. There is a plausibility to this assessment, particularly with regard to the Pastorals, but the use of virtue and vice lists must be considered along with a number of other factors (see commentaries), including the viability of the notion of early catholicism* as a theory of early Christian development.

2.1. Virtues. In Hebrews 7:26 the focus is on the transcendent virtues of Christ* the heavenly high priest,* who is distinguished from earthly high priests by his being inherently "holy, blameless, undefiled, separated from sinners, and exalted above the heavens" (NRSV). In 1 Peter 3:8, immediately following the household code* of 1 Peter 2:13—3:7, we find a listing of five community virtues commended for these "resident aliens" who are to conduct themselves "honorably among the Gentiles" (1 Pet 2:11-12; see 1 Peter): unity of spirit (homophrones); sympathy (sympatheis), love for one's brother or sister (philadelphoi), tenderheartedness (eusplanchnoi), humility of mind (tapeinophrones). L. Goppelt has demonstrated that these virtues are a Hellenistic formulation of the virtues found in Roman 12:10, 15, 16, where they appear in a Jewish conceptual dress (Goppelt, 230-31). This suggests that both texts are reflecting a common tradition of early Christian paraenesis (cf. also 1 Pet 3:9 and Rom 12:14, 17).

In James 3:13, 17-18 we find a listing of virtues that unfold from the "wisdom from above" (Jas 3:17). The proof of wisdom* and understanding is a good life and works characterized by "gentleness of wisdom" (en praÿtēti sophias, Jas 3:13). In James 3:17 wisdom is first of all pure, then its subvirtues are set out in two series, the first set beginning with the Greek letter e (with the last two ending in -ēs): eirēnikē ("peacable"), epieikēs ("gentle"), eupeithēs ("deferential"), eleous ("merciful"); the second set beginning with the Greek letter a (with the last two ending in -kritos): [karpōn] agathōn ("good [fruit]"), adiakritos ("impartial"), anypokritos ("without hypocrisy"). This listing owes much to the Jewish wisdom tradition and may well be addressing the tensions that arose for Jewish Christians* as they lived through the events leading up to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 (see Martin, 124-38).

2 Peter 1:5-7 provides the most extensive and significant listing of virtues in the later NT (see Charles). This list, or chain, of virtues is presented by means of a literary device called sorites, a series, or chain, of statements that builds step by step in a logical progression to a climactic conclusion (e.g., Rom 5:3-5; Jas 1:15; Herm. Vis. 3.8.7; cf. Wis 6:17-20; m. Soṭa 9:15). Thus 2 Peter envisions eight virtues, progressing from faith* to love,* each virtue producing, or furnishing (epichorēgō), the next. The eight virtues are as follows (in order): faith (pistis), excellence (aretē), knowledge* (gnōsis), self-control (enkrateia), steadfastness (hypmonē), piety (eusebeia), brotherly/sisterly affection (philadelphia), love (agapē). By framing the list with faith and love (cf. Herm. Vis. 3.8.1), the fundamental importance of two of the three Christian virtues of faith, hope and love is accented (see Neyrey, 155, who finds steadfastness as an equivalent to hope). The other six virtues are all found in pagan lists of virtues, and it appears that by incorporating these virtues within the framework of Christian paraenesis and its corresponding moral vision, 2 Peter lays claim to contemporary Hellenistic ethical ideals for those Christians who are experiencing moral failure in the midst of a pagan society (see Early Catholicism). These familiar virtues, shaped into an ethical progression from faith to love, are an antidote to blind stumbling (2 Pet 1:8-10) and a surefooted pathway to entering "the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet 1:11).

2.2. Vices. Vice lists appear in the later NT in James, 1 Peter and Revelation. In James 3:14-16 the opposite of "wisdom from above" (see 2.1 above) is spelled out: "earthly, unspiritual and devilish" wisdom is characterized by envy, selfish ambition, boastfulness and denial of the truth, and from this springs "disorder and all manner of evil." James, it would appear, has in mind a specific situation in which behavior, buttressed by persuasive ideology ("wisdom"), is seriously disrupting the well being of the community.

In 1 Peter 2:1 the readers are enjoined to rid themselves of a number of vices that destroy community: "all malice, and all guile, insincerity, envy, and all slander" (NRSV). The counterpoint is not a list of virtues but the image of longing "like newborn infants" for "pure, spiritual milk*" so that they may "grow into salvation" (1 Pet 2:2).

1 Peter 4:3 recalls the readers' past life of pagan vices: "For you have spent enough time in the past doing what the Gentiles like to do, living in licentiousness, passions, drunkenness, revels, carousing and lawless idolatry" (NRSV). In this case behavior is viewed from a distinctly Christian perspective. Although some of these excesses were also condemned by pagan philosophers, the warning against "lawless idolatry" (athemitoi eidōlolatriai) is a condemnation that penetrates to the religious heart of pagan society and casts a distinct moral light on the preceding vices.

In 1 Peter 4:15, believers are warned that their suffering should not be "as a murderer, a thief, a criminal, or even as a mischief maker" (for these terms, all of which are debated as to their meaning, see commentaries). Rather their suffering* should be for the sake of Christ, a "sharing in Christ's sufferings" (1 Pet 4:13).

In Revelation* there are three instances of vice lists, each of which depicts those outside the church. Those spared from the plagues of the sixth trumpet* still do not repent of their murders, magic,* sexual immorality or thefts (Rev 9:21). In contrast with the redeemed who make up the new Jerusalem,* the cowardly, unbelieving, vile, murderers, sexually immoral, practitioners of magic, idolaters and liars will be consigned to the lake of fire (Rev 21:8). And in much the same vein, those who are granted access to the tree of life,* to enter the gates of the city, are contrasted with those outside who are "dogs," practitioners of magic, sexually immoral, murderers, idolaters and lovers of falsehood (Rev 22:15). The repeated vices of magic, murder and sexual* immorality are striking, but the total picture evokes those whose allegiance is given to the beast* and Babylon.*

3. Apostolic Fathers.

A number of virtue and vice lists of varying length have been identified in the apostolic fathers (Barn. 2.2-3; 18—20; 1 Clem. 3.2; 30.1, 3, 8; 35.5; 62.2; 64.1; 2 Clem 4.3; Did. 1.1—5.2; Herm. Man. 5.2.4; 6.2.3-5; 8.3-5, 9-10; 11.8, 12; 12.2.1; 12.3.1; Herm. Sim. 6.5.5; 9.15.2-3; Herm. Vis. 3.8.3-7; Ign. Eph. 3.1; Pol. Phil. 2.2; 4.3; 5.2; 12.2). A few examples will serve to illustrate the nature and use of these lists in this post-canonical literature.

The *Didache and *Barnabas provide striking examples of the Two Ways tradition being used in Christian ethical exhortation (see Kirk). In Barnabas 18—20 the "two ways of teaching and power, one of light and one of darkness" are clearly set out (see Light and Darkness). Barnabas, like 1QS (see 1 above), identifies the spiritual overseers of the two ways: for the way of light, the angels* of God; for the way of darkness, the angels of Satan.* The extensive list of so-called virtues (Barn. 19) associated with the way of light appear in the form of commandments* reminiscent of the Decalog (e.g., "Thou shalt love thy maker . . . Thou shalt not commit fornication . . . Thou shalt not procure abortion, thou shalt not commit infanticide"). The other pathway, "the way of the black one [tou melanos hodos]" (Barn. 20), is marked by the more abbreviated language of vice lists, though its indebtedness to Jewish moral thought is clearly evident.

Didache 1.1—5.2 develops the doctrine of the Two Ways in much the same manner as Barnabas, but here the setting of baptismal* instruction becomes evident, with the catechumen being addressed as "my child" (Did. 3.1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 4.1). Hermas Mandate 6.2.1-7 also appears to be indebted to the Two Ways tradition when it speaks of the "two angels with man," recalling the rabbinic notion of a good and evil "tendency," or "impulse" (yēṣer) within humans. The angel of righteousness* enters the human heart and commends virtues; the angel of wickedness enters the heart and advises evil. The voice of the one is to be heeded, the other shunned.

In the *Shepherd of Hermas the virtues and vices are several times portrayed in personified terms. In Hermas Vision 3.8.3-7 we are introduced to seven women surrounding a tower who are seven virtues surrounding the church.* These virtues are described as a generational chain of successive "daughters," seven virtues that follow one from another: faith, continence, simplicity, innocence, reverence, knowledge* and love. "Whoever serves them and has the strength to lay hold of their works, shall have his dwelling in the tower with the saints of God" (Herm. Vis. 3.8.8). Again in Hermas Similitude 9.15.2-3 the virtues are personified as twelve maidens (earlier introduced as holy spirits,* or powers of the Son* of God, Herm. Sim. 9.13.2) who personify the virtues of faith, temperance, power,* longsuffering, simplicity, guilessness, holiness,* joyfulness,* truth,* understanding, concord and love. Believers must bear their names (or be clothed with their raiment, Herm. Sim. 9.13.3), in addition to bearing the name of the Son of God, in order to enter the kingdom* of God (Herm. Sim. 9.15.2). Set in contrast to these maidens of virtue are twelve women clothed in black who personify the vices of unbelief, impurity, disobedience, deceit, grief, wickedness, licentiousness, bitterness, lying, foolishness, evil-speaking and hate. Those who "bear these names shall see the kingdom of God but shall not enter into it" (Herm. Sim. 9.15.3).

In Hermas Mandate 5.2.4 a chain of vices unfolds from "ill temper": foolishness, frivolousness, silliness, bitterness, wrath, rage and fury, and from fury the "great and inexpiable sin." These vices, also depicted as evil spirits indwelling a human "vessel," crowd out the Holy Spirit* who is "delicate" and unaccustomed to dwell with evil spirits* (Herm. Man. 5.2.4-7).

Finally, Polycarp* in his Letter to the Philippians 2.2 exhorts believers to maintain a virtuous life, to "do his will, and walk in his commandments and love the things which he loved." Likewise they should refrain from the vices of "unrighteousness, covetousness, love of money, evil speaking, false witness" and vengeance. The teaching of Jesus is recalled as support for the virtues of forgiveness* and mercy* (Pol. Phil. 2.3; cf. Mt 7:1-2; Lk 6:36-38). This picture of Christian virtue is filled out in Polycarp's closing prayer* for the Philippians (Pol. Phil. 12.2). Elsewhere the desirable virtues of widows are set forth in a partial echo of 1 Timothy 5:5 (Pol. Phil. 4.3) and the virtues of deacons echo the wording of 1 Timothy 3:8 (Pol. Phil. 5.2; see Church Order and Government). Among the apostolic fathers, Polycarp's language of virtue bears the closest similarity to the NT letters.

Although virtue was no new thing to the world in which Christianity was born, the qualities of Christian virtues and the community, narrative and theology that undergirded them (see MacIntyre) were to have far reaching effects. The virtues, no matter how formulaic and rote in their presentation, were sufficiently nurtured, active and on display to capture the attention of pagan neighbors and onlookers. A Christian community living by the ideal of mutual love and practicing mercy (a "virtue" despised by pagan philosophers) toward needy outsiders was a compelling apology for the truth of its gospel* story and moral vision (see Stark, esp. 209-15).

See also ETHICS; FAITH, FAITHFULNESS; HOUSEHOLD CODES; IDOLATRY; MERCY; OBEDIENCE, LAWLESSNESS; PRIDE AND HUMILITY; PURITY AND IMPURITY; RIGHTEOUSNESS; SEXUALITY, SEXUAL ETHICS; SIN, WICKEDNESS; TEACHING, PARAENESIS; WISDOM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco: Word, 1983); J. D. Charles, Virtue Amidst Vice: The Function of the Catalog of Virtues in 2 Peter 1.5-7 (JSNTSup 150; Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1997); K. P. Donfried, The Setting of Second Clement in Early Christianity (NovTSup 38; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1974); B. S. Easton, "New Testament Ethical Lists," JBL 51 (1932) 1-12; J. T. Fitzgerald, "Virtue/Vice Lists," ABD 6:857-59; L. Goppelt, A Commentary on 1 Peter (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993); E. Kamlah, Die Form der katalogischen Paränese im Neuen Testament (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1964); K. E. Kirk, The Vision of God: The Christian Doctrine of the Summum Bonum (London: Longman, 1932); R. N. Longenecker, Galatians (WBC; Dallas: Word, 1990) 249-52; N. J. McEleney, "The Vice Lists of the Pastoral Epistles," CBQ 36 (1974) 203-19; A. MacIntyre, After Virtue. A Study in Moral Theory (2d ed.; Notre Dame, IN: University of Notre Dame Press, 1984); A. Malherbe, Moral Exhortation: A Greco-Roman Sourcebook (LEC 4; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1986); R. P. Martin, James (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1988); W. Meeks, The Moral World of the First Christians (LEC 6; Philadelphia: Westminster, 1986); G. Mussies, Dio Chrysostom and the New Testament (SCHNT 2; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1972); J. H. Neyrey, 2 Peter, Jude (AB; New York: Doubleday, 1993); E. Osborn, Ethical Patterns in Early Christian Thought (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1976); R. Stark, The Rise of Christianity: A Sociologist Reconsiders History (Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1996); M. J. Suggs, "The Christian Two Way Tradition: Its Antiquity, Form, and Function," in Studies in the New Testament and Early Christian Literature (NovTSup 33; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1972) 60-74; A. Vögtle, Die Tugend- und Lasterkataloge im Neuen Testament (NTAbh 16.4/5; Münster: Aschendorff, 1936); H. Währisch, H.-G. Link, A. Ringwald and R. P. Martin, "Virtue, Blameless," NIDNTT 3:923-32; S. Wibbing, Die Tugend- und Lasterkataloge im Neuen Testament und ihre Traditionsgeschichte unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der Qumran-Texte (BZNW 25; Berlin: Töpelmann, 1959); O. Zoeckler, Die Tugendlehre des Christentums (Gütersloh: C. Bertelsmann, 1904). D. G. Reid

VISIONS, ECSTATIC EXPERIENCE

Ecstasy is the state of being removed from the awareness of the mundane perceptions of the sensory world and awakening to the perception of the extrasensory world. Those who experience ekstasis, and the community that has a sufficient number of members who have this experience, are confirmed in their convictions that the visible world is only the partial context in which one lives out one's life. In the early church, visions and ecstatic experience serve to confirm for its members the sense that the new community is in tune with the invisible, eternal, divine order. The presence of God's Spirit assures them of God's approval of the new community and direction of its life and mission. This confirmation allows them to deflect the criticism of and withstand hostility from those outside the community who do not have the "Spirit," who are therefore ignorant of God's perspective.

1. Acts
2. Revelation
3. Other Early Christian Literature

1. Acts.

The early Christians were vividly aware of the presence of God* in their midst. Ecstatic speech, visions and inspired utterances were commonplace. That these were manifestations of the eschatological* outpouring of God's Spirit was a common conviction of these communities (cf. Mk 1:8; Jn 7:39; Acts 2:16-21; 1 Cor 12:4-11; Gal 3:14; 4:4-7). The presence of ecstasy in the new community demonstrated to its members that God's anointing* rested upon them, while the old vessels of divine charisma had dried out. The Holy Spirit's* activity in the Christian movement meant that the consummation of God's plan was near, that the promises* of a restored Israel* and converted Gentile* world* were on the verge of fulfillment and that this new community would be the instrument of God's end-time purpose.

Within the narrative world of Acts,* the Christian movement derives its impetus from the initial outpouring of the Spirit at Pentecost* (Acts 2:1-21) and the visible manifestations of this divine anointing in the form of ecstatic experiences. The temple,* as former site of interaction with the divine, stands in contrast with the group forming around the apostles,* where access to God's power and presence is now enjoyed. That God's Spirit now invades the mundane sphere through this marginal group validates the very existence of the movement and offers conclusive proof of God's approval of its testimony about Jesus. The presence of charisma, the immediacy of access to the divine, legitimates the group's break with the traditional order and worldview of Jewish society.

Visions play a significant role in the narrative of Acts. A revelation* from the Spirit prepares for and initiates each new development in the early church.* Philip's* evangelizing (Acts 8:26, 39-40), Paul's conversion and reception into the church by Ananias (Acts 9:3-17), Paul's timely departure from Jerusalem* and reorientation toward a Gentile mission (Acts 22:17-21), Peter's preaching to the household* of the Gentile Cornelius* (Acts 10:3-6, 9-16), Paul and Barnabas's commission (Acts 13:2), Paul and Barnabas's mission to Macedonia (Acts 16:6-10), Paul's preaching in Corinth (Acts 18:9-10), Paul's imprisonment and trial (Acts 20:23) and Paul's testimony in Rome* (Acts 23:11; 27:23-24) are all prompted or supported by the Spirit. The paired visions that surround Paul's conversion (Paul's in Acts 9:3-9 and Ananias's in Acts 9:10-16) and Peter's preaching to Cornelius (Cornelius's vision in Acts 10:1-6 and Peter's in Acts 10:9-16) create an especially strong sense of God's orchestration of the Christian movement.

This connection of the ethos and mission* of the Christian movement with the unmediated direction of the Spirit legitimates the group's activities, since these are grounded in the authority* of God. When the representatives of Judaism* confront Peter and the apostles, Peter can oppose submission to their authority to submission to God's authority (Acts 4:19). To the Sanhedrin this distinction was unthinkable, for they represented God's authority. For the Jesus movement, however, the experience of the Spirit's guidance through visions and ecstatic manifestations led them away from submission to traditional authorities. The charismatic experience assured them that their own existence and activity were legitimate in God's sight, since they could no longer assure themselves of their place in God's will on the basis of the ratification of traditional authorities.

A case of central importance for Acts is the conversion of the centurion Cornelius, a Gentile. The vexed issue of how Jewish Christians and Gentile Christians were to relate in the early church is well attested (Acts 10—15; Gal; Eph 1—3; see Jewish Christianity). Advocates for including Gentiles in the new community on the basis of their full conversion to ethnic Israel had a ready arsenal of traditional forms of legitimation. The Hebrew Scriptures spoke clearly about membership in the people of promise (e.g., Gen 17:14; Is 52:1; Ezek 44:5-9; Jdt 14:10). In the two texts that address this issue directly (Gal; Acts), the experience of the Spirit provides the authority to move beyond traditional revelation.

Visions prepare the participants and the reader for the amazing breakthrough of ethnic boundaries and long-standing identity markers (Acts 10:1-16). Peter's vision is an essential part of his defense before the "circumcision party" (Acts 11:2-10; see Circumcision), clarifying for them and the reader that he was acting not on his own initiative but rather following the legitimate and unimpeachable authority of the Spirit (Haenchen, Johnson). Moreover the decisive evidence in this case (as for Paul's case in Galatia) was the ecstatic manifestation of the outpouring of the Spirit upon Cornelius's household at the hearing of Peter's message (Acts 10:44-47; 11:15-18; 15:8-9; cf. Gal 3:1-5; 4:6-7). Peter explicitly links this to Pentecost (George, Johnson): the same experience of the Spirit that constituted the Jerusalem church now demonstrates God's acceptance of the Gentile as Gentile into the new community. The awareness of God's presence and ratification of this new step alone provided the courage required for the participants to move beyond Israel's traditional understanding of its separateness and consecration to the God of Israel (cf. Johnson). Direct experience of the Spirit of holiness* assured the early church that it possessed a new mark of sanctification and dedication to the one God.

2. Revelation.

In the Revelation to John (see Revelation, Book of) we see visionary rhetoric in its most powerful expression. The contents of this work are explicitly ascribed to ecstasy. John was "in the Spirit" (Rev 1:10; cf. 1 Cor 14:2, 14-16), commissioned by the glorified Christ* to write down what he saw and send this message to the seven churches within which he exercised his prophetic ministry* (Rev 1:11). Every "I saw" and "I heard" serves to ground the message of the book in the ultimate, unquestionable realm. John's work is an apocalypse,* an unveiling of the true nature of the visible realities of the communities' experience as well as of unseen realities. It is debated whether the work reflects a genuine ecstatic experience or is rather a literary production that effects its message through its medium. In the climate of John's churches, ecstatic experience was not the anomaly it is for modern scholars. As a prophet, John expected to receive revelatory visions; it is natural to find these visions shaped and colored by the traditions of the Hebrew Scriptures, early church, extracanonical apocalypses and John's reflection on the social, political and religious situation of his churches.

An apocalypse as literary creation or ecstatic experience has been defined as a disclosure of "a transcendent reality" in terms of both space and time (Collins). It has the effect of placing everyday realities within a broader context that provides an interpretative lens for those experiences. John's apocalypse places the everyday world of the churches spatially between the activity around God's throne (Rev 4—5) and the bottomless pit (Rev 9:2) and in time between the triumph of Jesus (Rev 5:5-12) and the consummation of that salvation* in the new Jerusalem (Rev 21—22). The realia of the believers' world, such as the cult of the pagan gods, the imperial cult and the expansion of Roman power, all find a place within John's vision. The ideology of the emperors* as benefactors of humankind and Rome (see Roman Empire) as the bringer of peace and prosperity to the world are turned upside down in John's unveiling of Satan's* effective and final deception of the world (Rev 12—13). The Revelation stands as a complete symbolic universe (Fiorenza, building on Berger and Luckmann) in light of which Roman power loses its legitimacy and faithful witness* to Jesus becomes the only sane course of action (Rev 12:11).

As a vision, a revelation of the way things really are, Revelation accomplishes the basic goals of religion (Geertz). It formulates a picture of the cosmic order, lends credibility to this picture through anchoring it in divine revelation (ecstasy) and elicits the emotional and behavioral responses from the hearers necessary to maintain their minority culture. Roman power and the Greco-Roman people who everywhere welcomed Rome and the opportunity for prosperity it brought were in a position to exercise a great amount of social pressure on deviants. Rome was the instrument of the gods, fulfilling its eternal mission of unifying people, establishing peace and facilitating trade; the emperor was the supreme patron, able to grant such weighty benefits that any return short of worship seemed to be base ingratitude. Piety and justice demanded that Rome, its emperors and their representatives be honored as those who established order out of chaos (cf. Berger, deSilva).

Only a vision, a revelation of the bigger picture, could overturn such a powerfully supported ideology. John shows that the emperors are agents of the dragon (see Beasts) and that to honor them was to "make a compact with the primeval forces of darkness" (Berger). Rome was no divine agent of peace but a ravenous whore exploiting the known world. Partnership with Rome meant full participation in the judgment* God would inflict upon Rome for all its bloodshed, idolatry* and self-glorification (Rev 17—18). Only the faithful Christians—that small, marginalized, minority group—were truly in touch with the divine order, worshiping the One who alone established order out of chaos. The Christians might easily have been made to believe society's opinion of them, that they were a deviant group and a source of pollution and danger to the vast majority who rendered proper reverence to the gods and their representative on earth. John assures his readers that they are not deviants. The throne of the beast and the temples of the gods all appear marginal and vulnerable in John's alternative vision of reality (Rev 9:20; 16:10-11).

The vision of Revelation serves two purposes. For the committed believers (Smyrna and Philadelphia), it serves as encouragement that they have chosen the honorable course; for the believers who are too much at home in the Greco-Roman society, who have enjoyed a profitable partnership with the provincial economy (Laodicea, Thyatira and the Nicolaitan gospel), it serves as a warning to recognize whose interests that economy ultimately serves. John's vision looks forward in time to persecution* of all who will not worship the emperor, glorifying those who hold fast the testimony of Jesus. The vision thus corrects the notion entertained by many believers that they may be friends of the world as well as God. Ultimately the two are incompatible. The doubleminded must now break off that partnership with the world and recommit themselves to following the Lamb.* D. L. Barr notes that the hearers are enabled by the liturgical* reading of this book to share in John's ecstatic experience: they return to the world changed by this encounter, seeing their relationships and dealings with Greco-Roman society with new eyes and with a greater vigilance concerning the inviolability of their commitment to Jesus.

3. Other Early Christian Literature.
Awareness of the Spirit's activity in the life of the church continues into the postapostolic period. Alongside the growing "traditional" authority of church offices (see Church Order) that preserve the apostolic traditum, the direct experience of the Spirit still offers encouragement and direction to the believing communities.

3.1. The Martyrdom of Polycarp and the Didache. While praying shortly before his arrest, Polycarp* has a vision of his pillow bursting into flame and turning to ashes, a vision fulfilled in his sentence to be burned for his confession. The martyrdom* is recounted with a miraculous tenor: the flames do not touch Polycarp (recalling Dan 3); he is finally stabbed, with the result that the flow of blood (recalling Jn 19) extinguishes the flames. The author surrounds the execution of Polycarp with these manifestations of supernatural phenomena in order to encourage the readers that the aged bishop died a "good death," one that expressed God's sovereignty rather than the hostile governor's power over life and death. The narrative encourages believers who may face death themselves for the confession: their death signals not society's rejection so much as God's approval of their life.

The *Didache speaks of itinerant charismatic teachers as a regular feature of life in the church at the beginning of the second century. These figures traveled from community to community, bringing words from the Spirit that they received in a state of ecstasis. While the Didache offers some guidelines for their treatment and discernment of their genuineness, these teachers enjoyed considerable carte blanche by means of their charismatic authority.

3.2. Shepherd of Hermas. Hermas is also concerned about the discernment of the true charismatic prophet and the exploiter of the office. The true prophet speaks to the assembled community: his or her visions are directed to strengthening the group's convictions and offering moral direction. The profiteer offers answers to individuals who come with questions like people consulting a pagan oracle (Herm. Man. 11.1-17). Visions and ecstatic utterance are not private matters but aim at the confirmation of the group.

The *Shepherd of Hermas is a collection of revelatory discourses and is often called an apocalypse (Osiek; Hellholm). It is reminiscent of Daniel and 4 Ezra in its emphasis on the need for ascetic preparation for visions. Some scholars, following J. Donaldson, debate this generic definition on account of the abundance of paraenetic material, particularly in the last two sections (the Commands and Parables). These moral directives, however, are embedded in and legitimated by the prophet's ecstatic experiences: the commands are spoken directly by the angelic being to Hermas, and the parables are a combination of angelic revelation and the seer's participation in the visions themselves. Hermas is therefore very much in keeping with other early Christian apocalypses (Osiek) and is best analyzed from within that genre.

The author himself is a prophet within the circle of churches at or near Rome. L. W. Barnard finds ample evidence within the book for the activity of prophets in the Roman church, as well as echoes of Hermas's own ministry within that circle (Herm. Vis. 2.2.6-8; Herm. Vis. 3.8.9-11; Herm. Sim. 10.2.2-4). S. Tugwell has suggested, plausibly, that Hermas's "children" are the people of the Christian community in which he exercises this prophetic and admonitory ministry. The book functions in a manner very similar to Revelation. The seer opens for his congregation a window into the plan of God, and within this larger context he asks them to reevaluate their lives and commitments.

Hermas expresses deep concern that all believers should repent and rededicate themselves to walking in righteousness. C. Osiek and Tugwell agree that he shows special concern for those who are doubleminded, among whom the wealthy figure prominently. These believers are in danger of denying their Lord* for the sake of their property when persecution comes (Herm. Vis. 3.6.5-7) and are caught between dedication to the law* of God and the laws of the earthly city in which they are too much at home (Herm. Sim. 1.1-11). Such people suffer from placing too much value on this world and its concerns; the remedy is to set their life in the world in a larger interpretative context. Again the vision form is effective, challenging the visible world's claim to primary importance with a glimpse of the eternally significant.

Through the series of visionary revelations Hermas clarifies for his congregations the nature of the world in which they live. The primary goal of life is incorporation into the church (the tower that is being built and tested even now). All worldly business and actions must be evaluated by this one criterion: Does it lead toward cementing or jeopardizing one's place in the body of the saved? Moreover the tower is revealed as nearing completion; there can be no delay in responding to the offer of repentance* and rededication. The believers stand near the close of this age and the dawn of the next, when the righteous shall receive their inheritance and the wicked shall be exposed (Herm. Sim. 3—4). Hermas's vision gives considerable significance to the present moment in which repentance is offered and steadfastness to the end mandated. The commands of the Shepherd are given as a sort of end-time rule; the visions' unveiling of the demands of the moment gives these commands their binding authority.

In a manner again similar to Revelation, Hermas posits a coming period of persecution (Herm. Vis. 2.2.6-8; 4.1.1—4.2.6). Here Hermas seeks, in Osiek's words, "to shape heavily a community's perception of reality." The believers must not forget that the unbelieving society is hostile to Christ and therefore to Christ's true followers. We have seen Hermas's concern for the believers who have prospered in an all too comfortable relationship with that society. The word of the vision shatters this symbiosis. As the prosperous Christians in Asia Minor were most in danger of participating in Babylon's* sins and succumbing to the pressure to join the worshipers of the beast, so the wealthy in the Roman church are called to question their easy alliance with the pagan society and, when the time comes, be prepared to choose their Lord over their property and place in society. The restrictions on the term of repentance also serve to motivate the believers to fortify themselves in their commitment now, since future apostasy* will receive no pardon (Herm. Vis. 2.2.8).

See also HOLY SPIRIT; PROPHECY, PROPHETS, FALSE PROPHETS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. L. W. Barnard, Studies in the Apostolic Fathers and Their Background (Oxford: Blackwell, 1966); D. L. Barr, "The Apocalypse as a Symbolic Transformation of the World: A Literary Analysis," Int 38 (1984) 39-50; P. L. Berger, The Sacred Canopy (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1967); P. L. Berger and T. Luckmann, The Social Construction of Reality (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1967); J. J. Collins, ed., Semeia 14: Apocalypse: The Morphology of a Genre (Missoula, MT: Scholars Press, 1979); D. A. deSilva, "The Construction and Social Function of a Counter-Cosmos in the Revelation of John," Forum 9 (1993) 47-61; idem, "The 'Image of the Beast' and the Christians in Asia Minor: Escalation of Sectarian Tension in Revelation 13," TJ n.s.12 (1991) 185-208; idem, "The Social Setting of the Revelation to John: Conflicts Within, Fears Without," WTJ 54 (1992) 273-302; J. Donaldson, A Critical History of Christian Literature and Doctrine, 1: The Apostolical Fathers (London: Macmillan, 1864); E. Schüssler Fiorenza, The Book of Revelation: Justice and Judgment (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); C. Geertz, The Interpretation of Cultures (New York: Basic Books, 1973); A. George, "L'Esprit Saint dans l'Oeuvre de Luc," RB 85 (1978) 500-542; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1971); D. Hellholm, Das Visionbuch des Hermas als Apokalypse, Bd. 1 (ConBNT 13.1; Lund: Gleerup, 1980); L. T. Johnson, The Acts of the Apostles (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1992); C. Osiek, "The Genre and Function of the Shepherd of Hermas," Semeia 36 (1986) 113-21; L. L. Thompson, The Book of Revelation: Apocalypse and Empire (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1990); S. Tugwell, O.P., The Apostolic Fathers (Harrisburg, PA: Morehouse, 1989).

D. A. deSilva

VISIONS OF HERMAS. See HERMAS, SHEPHERD OF.

VOLUNTARY ASSOCIATIONS, GRECO-ROMAN. See SOCIAL SETTING OF EARLY NON-PAULINE CHRISTIANITY.

W

WATCHFULNESS

Most of the references in our texts use the verb grēgoreō ("to be awake," "to keep awake," "to watch"). This is a derivative of egeirō ("to rise") and means to be in a state or a condition of being awake or watchful, as distinct from being drowsy or asleep.

1. Acts
2. General Epistles and Revelation
3. Apostolic Fathers
4. Summary

1. Acts.

The guiding principle on this theme is given in the charge to the disciples in the opening verses of Acts.* Whereas in Luke 24:49 the disciples had been told to stay in Jerusalem* until the power of the Holy Spirit* came upon them, in Acts they are to wait for that no longer. Rather than speculating about when the kingdom would come (Acts 1:7; see Kingdom of God) or stare after the ascended Lord* (Acts 1:11; see Ascension; Exaltation), they are to bear witness* to the gospel to the ends of the earth. Thereafter the emphasis is on going forth with the gospel.

In Paul's farewell address to the Ephesian elders at Miletus, we see the need to be on the alert against people who will bring division and heresy (Acts 20:31). This concept probably derives from the warnings in the Gospels about false messiahs and prophets* (Mk 13:22) and warnings in the Torah against false prophets, who lead the people of God astray after false gods (Deut 13:1, 2). In this passage it is used in the context of the metaphor of the alert shepherd* protecting the flock against the incursion of wild animals. Such warnings are not untypical of the later Pauline letters (e.g., 1 Tim 4:1-3; 2 Tim 3:1-9), and they anticipate the situation of heterodoxy in the postapostolic period (see 3 below).

2. General Epistles and Revelation.

Specific references to this theme are restricted to James,* 1 Peter* and Revelation (see Revelation, Book of). James 5:7 refers to the need for patience in waiting for the coming of the Lord, using an agricultural analogy of a farmer waiting for his crops to receive the early and late rains. This theme of patience may have been necessary because the Parousia* seemed delayed, yet James tells his readers that it is near (ēngiken). P. H. Davids (39) sees this as an atmosphere of "intense apocalyptic expectancy."

In 1 Peter, the only other specific reference to being watchful in the canonical literature under review, the need to be on the alert for the devil is made clear: "Be sober, be watchful. Your adversary the devil prowls around like a roaring lion, seeking someone to devour" (1 Pet 5:8). The train of thought may be that of staying on the alert against temptation* (cf. the Gethsemane story, Mk 14:38). Sobriety (the verb used is nēphō) is probably used synonymously here, indicating the opposite of drowsiness or intoxication. The setting of the letter* is probably implicit opposition to and persecution of Christians, perhaps in the form of ostracism, confiscation of goods and other socially alienating and disenfranchising measures of the late first century, possibly the Domitian persecution.* Those outside the community are demonized (literally) as being in league with Satan* (see Elliott 1990; 1993, 70-86, for further discussion).

Watchfulness and wakefulness are synonymous in some texts. The antithesis of being on the alert is to be asleep (metaphorically). Thus the church at Sardis is exhorted to awaken (Rev 3:2, 3). Being awake and therefore ready for the coming of the Lord is mentioned also in Revelation 16:15, where the opposite attitude will result in being ashamed when the Lord comes.

3. Apostolic Fathers.
In the apostolic fathers* the theme of watchfulness against heresy (rather than for the Lord's coming) is continued. Thus Ignatius* urges Polycarp* to "be watchful and keep the spirit from slumbering" (Ign. Pol. 1.3). The context seems to be general moral exhortation, as in the surrounding passage of the same letter, although in Polycarp 3.1 false teachings are also mentioned. These might have taken the form of ideas that seemed immoral to Ignatius's Christian conscience.*

In the Didache (Did. 16.1), however, the advice to "watch over your life" is motivated by the unknown time of the Parousia, echoing such Gospel passages as Matthew 24:44, Mark 13:35 and Luke 12:35. This, the last section of the Didache, builds up to the conclusion of the tract with the theme of the return of the Lord, influenced by a number of passages in the Gospels (esp. the apocalyptic discourse of Mk 13), as well as Pauline texts such as 1 Corinthians 15:22, 52; 16:22; 1 Thessalonians 3:13; 4:12, 16. In the Didache the association of false teachings or prophets and the end time is found, as in the Gospels, Paul and other apostolic fathers.

We might expect the theme of watchfulness in these texts to be more closely tied to the Parousia, but this is not wholly common. The specific theme of watchfulness itself is infrequent. The reason for this is unlikely to be given by any explanations that evoke the delay of the Parousia or early catholicism.* It is more likely that there is an indirect link between the Lord's coming and the exhortations. The Gospels, particularly the apocalyptic discourse, link the Parousia with false prophets and messiahs; in the Pauline letters this is developed into warnings against heresy and false teaching. In both groups of texts there are warnings about opposition and persecution of disciples.

In our texts the admonition against being asleep and the encouragement to watch arise precisely because the warnings in the earlier Christian literature are being experienced: false teaching, opposition, even threatened martyrdom* (which both Ignatius and Polycarp suffered). Christians are to be on the alert for those things which are themselves the forerunners of the Parousia. Barnabas 4.9 exhorts the readers to avoid evil in the last days. The Didache stands out as having a more direct eschatological* orientation; in the other writings it is indirect. Even in 2 Clement 12.1, the exhortation to "wait" (ekdechomai) for the kingdom (which is explained as God's "appearing," epiphaneia) is given because its time is unknown. The discussion in the following verses in 2 Clement 12, using traditions similar to those of the Gospel of Thomas 22, hardly gives the impression of the imminence of the epiphaneia.

4. Summary.
The exhortation to watchfulness is directly linked with the Parousia and the end times in the Gospels and Apocalypse and with that same expectation in the Didache. In the other texts where it is mentioned, the context seems to suggest that disciples need to be aware of the phenomena associated with the Parousia such as false teaching or persecution. It is the more immediate issues that are in mind. Vigilance is necessary in the Christian life, against temptation or trials.

See also ADVERSARIES; ESCHATOLOGY; PAROUSIA; SATAN, DEVIL.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. V. P. Cruz, "The Beatitudes of the Apocalypse: Eschatology and Ethics" in Perspectives on Christology: Essays in Honor of Paul K. Jewett, ed. M. Schuster and R. A. Muller (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1991); P. H. Davids, The Epistle of James (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); J. H. Elliott, A Home for the Homeless (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress, 1990); idem, What Is Social-Scientific Criticism? (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1993); D. G. Horrell, The Social Ethos of the Corinthian Correspondence: Interests and Ideology from 1 Corinthians to 1 Clement (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1996); E. Lövestam, Spiritual Wakefulness in the New Testament (Lund: Gleerup, 1963); W. R. Schoedel, "Theological Norms and Social Perspectives in Ignatius of Antioch" in Jewish and Christian Self-Definition, ed. E. P. Sanders (3 vols.; London: SCM, 1980) 1:30-56; W. H. Wagner, After the Apostles: Christianity in the Second Century (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1994). D. J. Graham

WICKEDNESS.

See SIN, WICKEDNESS.

WIDOWS.

See SOCIAL SETTING OF EARLY NON-PAULINE CHRISTIANITY; WOMEN IN THE EARLY CHURCH.

WISDOM

The term wisdom has a wide variety of meanings and applications in secular and biblical thought. The Hebrew, ḥôkmāh, includes such cognate ideas as insight, thought and understanding. It is applied to individuals who were skilled in certain occupations, had a basic understanding of laws governing the world and were able to live wisely and successfully.

In Greek sophia also connotes the idea of knowledge, ability, skill and the application of wisdom to life. The NT uses sophia as the intellectual and/or spiritual ability of human beings, such as Jesus (Mt 13:54 par. Mk 6:12; Lk 2:40, 52), Stephen* (Acts 6:10), Joseph (Acts 7:10), Moses* (Acts 7:22) and Solomon (Mt 12:42 par. Lk 11:31), a special endowment of the Spirit (1 Cor 2:13; 12:8; Eph 1:17; Col 1:9) or gift of God (Jas 1:5; 3:17; Rev 13:18; 17:9) and a personification of God (Mt 11:19; Lk 7:35; 11:49).

1. A Brief Survey of Backgrounds and Pauline Usage
2. Wisdom in Other New Testament Literature
3. Wisdom in the Early Fathers
4. Summary

1. A Brief Survey of Backgrounds and Pauline Usage.

1.1. From the Old Testament to Paul. In the OT and intertestamental literature, wisdom is a special attribute of God* (Dan 2:20-23) that is manifest in creation* (Job 38:37; Ps 104:24; Prov 3:19; Wis 7:22; 8:1, 6; Sir 24:3-5) and may be given to certain individuals as a gift (e.g., Solomon [1 Kings 3:5-14; 10:23-24; 2 Chron 9:22-23]) and to others who ask God for it (2 Chron 1:10; 1 Esd 4:59-60) and who regulate their life by it (Prov 8:32-36). The "fear of the Lord," in the sense of reverence, submission and obedience,* is considered the beginning of wisdom (Prov 1:7; 9:10; 15:33; Ps 111:10; Job 28:28).

The so-called Wisdom Literature of postexilic Judaism* (usually understood to refer to Proverbs, Job and Ecclesiastes in the OT and Sirach and the Wisdom of Solomon from the Apocrypha) preserves many thoughts of the ancient sages. A significant development of this literature is the personification of wisdom—that is, wisdom portrayed in personal terms but not regarded as an intermediate being or an independent deity—as a preexistent* female expression of God (Prov 1:20-23; 8; Job 28; Sir 24; Wis 7:7—9:18). In some Jewish texts obedience to Torah (the Law*) is identified as a sign of true wisdom and understanding (Sir 1:26; 6:37; 9:15; 15:1; 19:20; 21:11; 24:23-24; Bar 3:9—4:3; 4 Macc 1:16-17). In the Qumran* literature wisdom occasionally is found within the context of knowledge and insight (see 1QS 4:2-6). Wisdom is given to the elect* for teaching (1QS 4:22) and to discern God's eschatological* plan (1QS 4:18; see Wilckens, 504-5). K.-G. Sandelin's monograph focuses on the life-giving quality of wisdom through such metaphors as "hostess," "mother," "teacher," "wife," "the vine" or "tree of life" (cf. Prov 9:1-6; Sir 24; Wis 7—9).

1.2. Wisdom in Paul. There is no appreciable difference or development of wisdom in the Pauline and deutero-Pauline literature. Most of the references to wisdom in Paul are found in 1 Corinthians, where the apostle apparently is reacting to some kind of Jewish-Hellenistic speculation that emphasized human wisdom and the rhetorical skills of certain leaders (1 Cor 1—4; on Wisdom in Paul, see Ellis, Goulder, Horsley, Scroggs; see DPL, Wisdom). Paul derides these so-called sophists and pneumatics for their worldly wisdom (1 Cor 1:19, 20, 22; 2:1, 4), claiming that from God's perspective their wisdom is foolish and worthless because it is devoid of the gospel. True wisdom—the wisdom of God—is found in the proclamation of the gospel, is empowered by the Spirit (1 Cor 2:4, 5, 13; 12:8; 2 Cor 1:12) and focuses on the cross* of Christ* (1 Cor 1:17, 21, 30; 3:19). Those who know Christ by faith have the "power" (1 Cor 1:24) and "wisdom" (1 Cor 1:30) in its fullness.

A similar attack is made against the false teachers in Colosse who take pride in their philosophy, which Paul denounces as "human tradition" (Col 2:8) and labels counterfeit ("an appearance of wisdom," Col 2:23). In 1 Corinthians 1:30 and Colossians 1:15-20, Paul identifies Christ as God's wisdom for the believer (cf. also the confession* in 1 Cor 8:6; see DPL, Wisdom, 970). The Christ-hymn* in Colossians (Col 1:15-20) contains Wisdom christology* quite similar to that in the prologue in Hebrews 1:1-3.

Other references to wisdom in literature attributed to Paul are associated with "knowledge," "understanding" and "mystery" (Rom 11:33; 16:25-27; 1 Cor 2:6-10; 12:8; Col 1:9, 26-28; 2:3; Eph 1:8-9, 17; 3:4-11; 2 Tim 1:9-11; Tit 1:2-3; see Knowledge; Mystery), worship* (1 Cor 12:8; Col 3:16) and conduct (Rom 16:19; Eph 5:15; Col 1:10; 4:5; see lists of vices and virtues* and the household codes* in the NT, which share affinities with earlier traditions of wisdom [Prov 6:16-18; Wis 14:23-26; Sir 7:18-28; see DPL, Wisdom, 972]). Ephesians, with its emphasis on cosmology, defines the divine plan of salvation* as "the wisdom of God in its rich variety" (polypoikilos sophia tou theou). This is understood as God's divine and wise ordering of history so that which formerly was hidden (i.e., a mystērion) from the eons is now made known through the church* (Eph 3:10; cf. Ign. Eph. 19).

2. Wisdom in Other New Testament Literature.

2.1. The Gospels. The wisdom passages (Logion sayings) in the double tradition of the Synoptics known as Q present Jesus as a teacher of wisdom (see Mt 11:16-19 par. Lk 7:31-35; Mt 11:25-27 par. Lk 10:21-22; Mt 12:42 par. Lk 11:31; Mt 23:34-36 par. Lk 11:49-51; Mt 23:37-39 par. Lk 13:34-35). The consensus among scholars is that Matthew redacts some of the material in this tradition and is the first to identify Jesus with God's divine Wisdom. Jesus is Wisdom; he is Sophia (see DJG, Wisdom, 875; Dunn, 204-11). John appears to go further than Jewish literature, Philo* and the Synoptics by associating Wisdom with the Logos* (Jn 1:1-18). "Jesus is presented materially and essentially as the unique Wisdom—Word of God" (DJG, Wisdom, 876; see also Dunn, 213-50).

2.2. Hebrews. A number of commentators suggest that the opening hymn (Heb 1:1-3) in the epistle to the Hebrews* contains christological motifs similar to those that emerged from Alexandria* through Philo. J. D. G. Dunn, although he acknowledges such possibilities, argues that the concepts in Hebrews 1:1-3 are influenced more by Wisdom christology than by Philo's concept of the Logos (Dunn, 206-9; note the similar phraseology in this passage with Wis 7:25-26: "For she [Wisdom] is a breath of the power of God, a pure emanation of the glory of the Almighty . . . a reflection of eternal light, a spotless mirror of the working of God and an image of his goodness"). According to Dunn, the thought in Hebrews "is primarily of Christ as the eschatological embodiment of the wisdom of God, as the one through whom the Creator God in all his fullness had revealed himself most clearly and definitively for man's salvation and creation's renewal" (Dunn, 211).

2.3. James. H. Conzelmann has stated that "the entire Letter of James is a wisdom document in parenetic style" (Conzelmann, 960). This observation is confirmed in most serious studies of James,* which clearly acknowledge that the author's ideas come from Hellenistic (i.e., Diaspora) Judaism, including the conscious or unconscious adoption of Jewish wisdom traditions (Davids, Dibelius and Greeven, Martin). This is especially evident in James 1:5-8, where wisdom is a gift of God requested by the righteous within the context of "trials" or the "testing" of faith (peirasmos), and in James 3:13-18, where wisdom produces certain virtues of speech and conduct. Both of these passages reflect the influence of "a wisdom ideology" (Martin, xcii) from the OT, intertestamental and Qumran literature (see Davids, 51-56).

The concept of wisdom as a divine gift that is granted to those who have faith* in God while experiencing certain afflictions is a common theme in wisdom literature (see Wis 5:1-14; 7:7; 8:21; 9:4-6; 10:5). Hence James reminds his readers about the inevitability of opposition and persecution* in this life (cf. Jas 1:12-16; Wis 2—5) and summons them to seek wisdom as a way of understanding and coping with the trials they are facing.

As James 1:5-8 reminds the readers that wisdom is God's gift to believers, James 3:13-18 reminds them that genuine wisdom, "wisdom from above" (Jas 3:17), leads to a number of Christian virtues.* This passage compares two types of wisdom and could correctly be classified as "practical wisdom" (Martin, 129). The fact that the author finds it necessary to contrast earthly and divine wisdom suggests an ecclesiastical setting in which teachers and/or the entire congregation had serious misconceptions about the nature of this divine gift.

Wisdom from above (anōthen, i.e., from God) was a common theme of Jewish wisdom teaching (Prov 2:6; 8:22-31; Sir 1:1-4; 24:1-12; Wis 7:24-27; 9:4, 6, 9-18). Such wisdom, according to James, manifests itself as virtues of the Christian life (Jas 3:17), not unlike the fruit of the Spirit (Gal 5:22-23). Earthly wisdom, however, produces unspiritual and disruptive behavior (Jas 3:15-16). This focus on wisdom as conduct rather than knowledge or insight (see 1 above) is an important contribution by James.

A number of scholars have commented on the "wisdom pneumatology" of James. The idea of J. A. Kirk—that the concept of wisdom in James is equivalent to the Holy Spirit* in certain portions of the Bible, particularly in Paul's letters* (such as Gal 5:22-23)—is taken up and developed by P. H. Davids. Thus Davids concludes: "If some works have a wisdom Christology, James has a wisdom pneumatology, for wisdom in James functions as the Spirit does in Paul: wisdom helps one stand, delivers one from 'the flesh' . . . and produces the fruit of the Christian life" (Davids, 55-56).

2.4. 2 Peter. The reference to the "wisdom" (sophia) given to Paul (2 Pet 3:15) could be an early recognition of the apostolic authority* given to some of his letters that were being circulated and used by the church.

2.5. The Apocalypse of John. In Revelation (see Revelation, Book of) the Lamb* is praised by the heavenly choir (Rev 5:12; 7:12) who ascribe to him wisdom as an attribute of God. Sophia also is the secret knowledge* of believers by which they can interpret some of the symbols and apocalyptic* mysteries in John's vision* (Rev 13:18; 17:9). This appears to follow the pattern of earlier apocalyptic literature, in which wisdom is an eschatological gift to the faithful and righteous (1 Enoch 5:8; 2 Esd 8:52; 2 Apoc. Bar. 44:14; 59:7).

3. Wisdom in the Early Fathers.

First, Wisdom appears as the designation of the Proverbs, which are attributed to Solomon. Justin Martyr, for example, refers to the "book of Wisdom" when he quotes from Proverbs 6. Proverbs 1:23-33 is quoted by Clement (1 Clem. 57:3-7). And Eusebius indicates that it was common to equate Wisdom and Proverbs in the early church: "And not only he [Hegesippus] but Irenaeus also and the whole body of the ancients called the Proverbs of Solomon 'Wisdom, comprehending every virtue'" (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.22.9; see also Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 4.26.14).

Second, wisdom is an attribute of God (Justin Dial. Tryph. 38.2; 121.2; Barn. 16.9), which he gives to individuals and which is manifested by intelligent choices and good deeds (Barn. 5.3; 6.10; 21.5; 1 Clem. 38.2; 48.5; Ign. Smyrn. 1.1). The Lord* does not approve of wisdom that is selfish or arrogant (1 Clem. 13.1; 32.4; 38.2).

Third, wisdom as a reference to Christ. Only one passage equates Christ with Wisdom (Justin Dial. Tryph. 126.1). In this respect we note U. Wilckens's conclusion to his extensive study of sophia: "There is no further development of primitive Sophia Christology in the first half of the 2nd cent.; only in the second half of the 2nd and in the 3rd cent. does this play a part in the working out of the early Chr. doctrine of the Trinity" (Wilckens, 525). Logos christology dominates christological discussions in the second and third centuries.

4. Summary.

From this brief account of wisdom in the later NT and early church fathers (see Apostolic Fathers) we are able to discern several important developments: that in a number of cases wisdom continues to be viewed as a present, divine gift that manifests itself in wise choices and virtuous behavior (especially in James); that wisdom is an eschatological gift to understand divine secrets or mysteries (Eph; Rev); that wisdom traditions that circulated in the early church as sapiential literature were influential in the composition of the letter of James, and wisdom for James functions in much the same way as the Spirit does for Paul and other authors of Scripture (Kirk); that the Wisdom christology already present in Paul (Cor) is developed further in other literature (Col; Mt; Heb; Fourth Gospel). Jesus, in other words, is considered the embodiment of divine wisdom.

See also CHRISTOLOGY; GOD; KNOWLEDGE; LOGOS CHRISTOLOGY; TRUTH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. H. Conzelmann, "Wisdom in the New Testament," IDBSup 956-60; P. H. Davids, James (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); M. Dibelius and H. Greeven, James (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making (2d ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1989), esp. 163-212; E. E. Ellis, "Wisdom and Knowledge in 1 Corinthians," TynB 25 (1974) 82-98; G. D. Fee, The First Epistle to the Corinthians (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1987); J. Goetzmann, C. Brown and H. Weigelt, "σοφία," NIDNTT 3:1026-38; M. D. Goulder, "Σοφία in 1 Corinthians," NTS 37 (1991) 516-34; R. G. Hamerton-Kelly, Preexistence, Wisdom and the Son of Man (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1973); A. R. A. Horsley, "Wisdom of the Word and Words of Wisdom in Corinth," CBQ 39 (1977) 224-39; L. Hurtado, One God, One Lord (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); J. A. Kirk, "The Meaning of Wisdom in James: Examination of a Hypothesis," NTS 16 (1969-70) 24-38; R. P. Martin, James (WBC; Dallas: Word, 1988); J. M. Robinson and H. Koester, Trajectories Through Early Christianity (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1971), esp. 71-113; K.-G. Sandelin, Wisdom as Nourisher: A Study of an Old Testament Theme, Its Development Within Early Judaism and Its Impact on Early Christianity (ÅBO: ÅBO Akademi, 1986); R. Scroggs, "Paul: Σοφός and Πνευματικός," NTS 14 (1967-68) 33-55; G. T. Sheppard, "Wisdom," ISBE 4:1074-82; U. Wilckens and G. Fohrer, "σοφία," TDNT 7:465-528.

A. G. Patzia

WITNESS

In the NT a "witness" (martys) is one who testifies to either the events of Jesus' life or the message of the gospel (see DJG, DPL, Witness). The term becomes closely associated with persecution in some texts but takes on the meaning of "martyr" only in the postcanonical literature.

1. Acts
2. Hebrews and the General Epistles
3. Revelation
4. Apostolic Fathers

1. Acts.

The words of Jesus to the eleven disciples at his ascension* set the tone for the concept of witness in the rest of Acts*: "you shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem, in all Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth" (Acts 1:8). This is the agenda of Acts and a summary of the rest of the book as well as the rest of Christian history. Being a witness—not simply in the sense of having observed Jesus in his life, death and resurrection but in bearing testimony to it—is a key qualification for the one to be elected as the twelfth disciple, a role left open after Judas's death (Acts 1:22; see Death of Christ). The testimony to Jesus' life is likewise mentioned in the sermons (Acts 10:39). The opening prologue of 1 John also emphasizes this.

Witness to the resurrection* is especially important in Acts, where rumors and doubts surrounding the stories of the resurrection are answered, especially in the preaching of the early church* (Acts 2:32; 3:15; 4:33; 5:32; 10:41; 13:31). In the accounts of Paul's calling, he is to be a witness (Acts 22:15, 18; 26:16; cf. Acts 9:15, where he is to bear the Lord's* name* before Jews, Gentiles* and kings). This is confirmed in a vision* or a dream after his arrest (Acts 23:11), which Acts must see taking place in Acts 28:23-31, where Paul is described as preaching and teaching in Rome.* In Paul's story, witness amounts to preaching and teaching the gospel of the kingdom (Acts 28:23; see Kingdom of God).

Paul describes Stephen* as a witness (Acts 22:20) and associates this fact with Stephen's death. In contrast, Luke's own account of Stephen's death draws attention only to false witnesses (Acts 6:13; 7:58). We shall see that some of the apostolic fathers identify the two ideas of witness and martyr even more closely.

God* is also a witness in Acts, both to the gospel by confirming its message with miracles* (Acts 14:3) and in the providence of creation* (Acts 14:17).

2. Hebrews and the General Epistles.

The theme of God as witness is found also in Hebrews 2:4, where miracles corroborate the message of salvation* (cf. Acts 14:3, above). Hebrews 7:8 uses the verb martyreō to mean the testimony of Scripture (in this case to the person of Melchizedek*), a point reinforced in Hebrews 7:17, where the Scripture in mind (Ps 110:4) is quoted. The way in which Scripture testifies (witnesses) becomes more clear in Hebrews 10:15, where it is stated that the Holy Spirit* bears witness through Scripture (Jer 31:33-34 is used to support the author's thesis about forgiveness* and sacrifice*). The same concept, that of Scripture as a witness, can also be found in Hebrews 11:4-5, where Genesis 4:5 is alluded to in a discussion of the offering of Abel and Cain. Finally, in Hebrews 12:1 "witness(es)" is used as an equivalent to spectators at games, a different image from its other uses in the letter (see Hebrews).

The apostles' witness to the life of Jesus is an important qualification in 1 Peter 5:1 and 1 John 1:2 (cf. Acts 1:21), the former of these referring to his sufferings. 1 John 4:14 may make a similar point. 1 John 5:7-11 deals with the witness of God (cf. Acts 14:3, 17 above). This is complicated by textual problems, however, and the precise relationship of the witnesses mentioned. The best solution seems to be that God is the ultimate witness and that testimony reaches believers through the life and death of Jesus (the water and the blood) and is conveyed by the Spirit. Its content is the message of eternal life* in Christ.* 3 John 3, 6, 12 speaks of Christians bearing witness to fellow believers' faith* and love.*

3. Revelation.

Disciples as witnesses to the faith emerge as an important theme in the Apocalypse (see Revelation, Book of). The backdrop of persecution* and martyrdom* sharpens this subject, and Revelation 1:2 sets this in the context of John's own exile and persecution because of his faith (cf. Rev 1:9, where this is understood as "testimony to Jesus"; cf. Rev 12:17).

Several other texts refer to Christian disciples as witnesses. In Revelation 19:10 witness to Jesus is described as "the spirit of prophecy" (to pneuma tēs prophēteias). As with Revelation 12:17 (above), Revelation 19:10 is best understood as referring to the content of the proclaimed Christian message.

Testimony to Jesus is closely linked with martyrdom in several texts. Antipas is a faithful witness "who was killed among you" (Rev 2:13). The conclusion that this was a martyrdom seems compelling. In Revelation 6:9 there are people who had been killed for their testimony (also Rev 17:6). And in Revelation 11:3, 7, God's own two witnesses are killed. Although in these instances people are identified as "witnesses" and then face death, this close connection of witness and death for the faith serves as a bridge between Acts 22:20 and some of the texts in the apostolic fathers.

In Revelation Jesus himself (or perhaps his angel*) is called a witness (Rev 1:5; 3:14; 22:16, 18, 20).

4. Apostolic Fathers.

We find several uses of witness in the apostolic fathers.* In Barnabas 1.6, "love of joy and of gladness is the testimony (martyria) of the works of righteousness." In 1 Clement 30.7; 38.2; 63.3 it is other people who testify to the good deeds in others rather than the good deeds themselves being the witness. In Hermas Similitudes 5.2.6 testimony is the reputation a believer has. Diognetus 12.6 links witness specifically to a lived-out evidence of the knowledge* that believers possess. In 1 Clement 5.4-7 we read that Peter and Paul witnessed to the faith and then went to glory.* Although witness and (a martyr's) death are not specifically identified with each other here, they are mentioned within the same brief text and are thus closely related. In Ignatius* the words of the gospel can act as a witness against people who do not listen to it or obey it (Ign. Trall.; Ign. Phld. 6.3). And in Ignatius Philadelphians 7.2 Christ is the witness of Ignatius's words.

In the Martyrdom of Polycarp (Mart. Pol. 1.1; 14.2; 15.2; 16.2; 17.3; 19.1; 21.1; 22.1) the meaning of "witness" is specifically tied to martyrdom. It is here, more than in any other text we have considered, that the concept of testifying to the faith becomes a specific reference to dying for the faith, a connection that would be made in many other writers thereafter.

In summary, we have several uses of witness: that of God, Christ and the Spirit; of Scripture; and of Christian believers, the latter sometimes specifically associated with dying for the faith.

See also MARTYRDOM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. J. Beutler, "μαρτυρέω κτλ," EDNT 2:389-91; idem, "μαρτυρία," EDNT 2:391-93; idem, "μάρτυς," EDNT 2:393-95; H. von Campenhausen, "Das Bekenntnis im Urchristentum," ZNW 63 (1972) 210-53; B. Dehandschutter, "The Meaning of Witness in the Apocalypse" in L'Apocalypse johannique et l'Apocalyptique dans le Nouveau Testament, ed. J. Lambrecht (Louvain: Louvain University Press, 1980) 283-88; S. de Diétrich, " 'You Are My Witnesses'—A Study of the Church's Witness," Int 8 (1954) 273-79; O. Michel, "ὁμολογέω κτλ," TDNT 5:199-220; T. Preiss, "The Inner Witness of the Holy Spirit," Int 7 (1953) 259-80; H. Strathmann, "μάρτυς κτλ," TDNT 4:474-514; A. A. Trites, "Μάρτυς and Martyrdom in the Apocalypse: A Semantic Study," NovT 15 (1973) 72-80; idem, The New Testament Concept of Witness (SNTSMS 31; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1977); idem, New Testament Witness in Today's World (Valley Forge, PA: Judson, 1983); A. A. Trites and L. Coenen, "Witness," NIDNTT 3:1036-51. D. J. Graham

WOES, MESSIANIC.

See TRIBULATION, MESSIANIC WOES.

WOMAN AND MAN

The roles of women in the Roman Empire varied from place to place, according to social class and other factors. The early Christian views of role relationships between men and women at some points reflected those of their environment while at other points stood quite in contrast to that environment. This sometimes created tensions or confusion, and various Christian writers responded to this tension in different ways.

For example, examining gender relations in the book of Acts, which is largely narrative, involves a variety of ancient cultural issues that must be addressed text by text. The epistles in this discussion often reflect a specific formulation called household codes, however (for fuller discussion, see Balch 1988). From Aristotle on these household codes (German Haustafeln) focused especially on the relationships between the male head of the aristocratic household and his wife, children and slaves. Household codes so defined were often part of a broader set of moral instructions on relationships sometimes subsumed under the category of city management, including instructions on how to behave toward the state, parents, elders, friends, and so on. We often find only specific components of such instructions (e.g., exhortations concerning the state, slaves and parents), but even these briefer clusters of relationship instructions point to the fuller collections of moral exhortations that stand behind them. The early Christians, like other minority religions within the Roman Empire,* were eager to establish their fidelity to the Roman state against the xenophobic rumors concerning subversive Eastern cults. Thus the Christians began adapting household codes as early as Paul's letter labeled "to the Ephesians" (Keener 1992, 146-47; see DPL, Man and Woman) and 1 Peter (Balch 1981).

1. Women's Roles in Acts
2. Woman and Man in 1 Peter
3. Woman and Man in Revelation
4. Woman and Man in 1 Clement
5. Woman and Man in Ignatius and Polycarp
6. Woman and Man in Other Patristic Writers
7. Conclusion

1. Women's Roles in Acts.

Scholars have long recognized that Luke's Gospel shows a special interest in women's roles, amplifying a distinctive feature already found in earlier tradition (e.g., Mk 5:21-43; 7:24-30; cf. Michaels). In his Gospel, Luke typically joins stories about women to stories about men, recounts Jesus' parables about women alongside parables about men, and so forth (cf. e.g., Maly; Flanagan; Tannehill, 132-39; pagan healing reports include women but more often focus on men).

Luke continues this practice in the second volume of his history (e.g., Acts 9:32-42; 16:16-18). Tradition did not always supply women's names for Luke's Gospel accounts, but because the author's probable travels with Paul include two years in Judea and Caesarea (Acts 21:15—27:1), Luke would have had access to the names of characters who were members of the churches there (e.g., Rhoda, Acts 12:13; cf. Acts 17:34). In Luke's view women and men are equally morally responsible (Acts 5:1-11)—that is, Luke lacks the condescension toward women's moral weakness that was typical of males in his day (e.g., Plutarch Con. Praec. 48, Mor. 145DE; Josephus Ag. Ap. §§200-201).

If the traditional ascription for authorship is correct, Luke's background as a physician may have increased his sensitivity to such issues; this profession was open to both men and women, although the latter often functioned as midwives (Lefkowitz and Fant, 27, 161-64; Friedländer, 1:171). Luke, whose work seems to have been sponsored by the patron Theophilus (Lk 1:3), may also address an upper class in which women tended to be more educated and influential.

Women in Acts* fulfill many of the roles assigned to the more influential women of their culture. First of all, women serve as patrons, such as Tabitha, who seems to support widows (Acts 9:36, 39; Verner, 139; cf. Safrai, 762-63), and Mary, who hosts a house church* in Jerusalem* (Acts 12:12). The gate, servant and location near the Fortress Antonia on the Temple Mount (from which Peter undoubtedly escaped) all suggest that Mary was relatively wealthy. Lydia, who showed great hospitality* to Paul and his companions, acted as a patroness (Acts 16:15). She was also undoubtedly well-to-do, as businesswomen selling purple fabrics normally were. (See Keener 1992, 243, 254-56, for further details. Inscriptions attest the prominence of women in Macedonian religion [see Abrahamsen 1986, 1987], which coincides well with the NT evidence; see Acts 16:13-16; Phil 4:2-3.) Inscriptions suggest that many women served as patrons, although they made up at most 10 percent of the total (cf. Meeks, 24; Keener 1992, 240).

Second, Luke is aware that prominent women held considerable social power, which could be used for good or for ill (the empress Livia, mother of Tiberius Caesar, was probably the early Roman Empire's most famous example). Thus one notes the powerful women of Acts 13:50 (see also Bernice in Acts 25:13, 23, 30; cf. Judge 1960 "Early Christians," 128; on local aristocracies cf. Lewis, 36-41). Although the idea of a queen ruling the Roman Empire would have been foreign to Romans, they knew of Candace, the name or the dynastic title of several queens of the African kingdom of Meroë. Luke's treatment of a male official subordinate to this queen (Acts 8:27) seems entirely positive.

Third, women also appear to have been more susceptible to "foreign" religions, including Judaism* and Christianity, than most men were (Acts 17:4, 12, 34; cf. Judge 1960 Social Pattern, 44). This susceptibility may have issued in part from the limitation of Jewish circumcision* to male converts but also derived from men's social status and educational background. Men's status depended more heavily on their participation in socially acceptable religious structures; hence their public status advantage often proved inversely proportional to their openness to early Christian missionaries. Even given women's greater openness, whole families usually acted together as relatively cohesive units (e.g., Acts 16:31-34), perhaps even more so when acting as Christians (cf. Acts 21:5). Nor were such conversions limited to Gentiles*; when the number of men (the term is gender-specific) came to five thousand (Acts 4:4), the counting method undoubtedly reflects Luke's source, following an ancient method of reckoning by men. Yet women were surely converted on this occasion as well; the precipitating event occurred directly outside the court of women (Acts 3:2).

Still, Acts portrays many early Christian women as enjoying some roles the culture usually, though not exclusively, applied to men. Although husband-and-wife teams are known in other professions (e.g., Gardner, 240), women rarely taught Torah (Ilan, 190-204; Keener 1992, 83-84; Swidler, 97-111). Yet Priscilla, who works alongside Aquila when Paul meets them (Acts 18:2; for more detail see Keener 1992, 240-41), joins her husband in instructing the noted Apollos (Acts 18:26). Women and men also prayed together (Acts 1:14), although this practice in Jerusalem may not be as distinctive of Christians as some writers have thought; the evidence for gender segregation in synagogues* in this period is not substantial (Brooten, 103-38).

Charismatic empowerments heighten the roles for women still more plainly, as the programmatic text for Acts makes clear: both "sons" and "daughters" will prophesy (Acts 2:17). Because "sons" in Hebrew could also include "daughters" when the term is used generically, the prophecy's* specific mention of daughters is hardly superfluous; the prophetic Spirit would break barriers of gender, age (not reserving authority for elders) and perhaps class (Joel 2:29 has "the servants" rather than "my servants"). The Holy Spirit's* function here, as it is often in the Hebrew Bible and early Judaism (e.g., 1 Enoch 91:1; Jub. 31:12; Josephus Ant. 6.166; 1QS 8:16; t. Pesaḥ 2:15), is prophetic empowerment to speak under inspiration, including bearing witness* to Christ* (Acts 1:8; the prophetic "word" throughout Acts is the gospel) and tongues* (Acts 2:4).

Luke provides a specific example of this gender- and age-neutral phenomenon in Acts 21:9. Although Romans seemed to believe that perpetual virgins could acquire special favor from the gods (cf. Keener 1991, 70), Luke's point in noting that Philip's* daughters were virgins is probably the more customary sense that they were not yet of marriageable age. Neither age nor gender prevented their remarkable empowerment (the form of the term prophesying suggests a regular phenomenon). Prophecy marks the new era for all God's people and was the most significant ministry gift next to apostleship (1 Cor 12:28). Though different levels of prophecy existed in ancient Israel* as well as early Christianity, one of the most authoritative prophetic figures was a woman (Judg 4:4).

2. Woman and Man in 1 Peter.

The most thorough discussion of the relevant passage in 1 Peter* (1 Pet 3:1-7) is D. L. Balch's work (1981), and many insights that follow depend on his analysis. Peter addresses the role of wives in a manner analogous to the way he addresses the role of slaves* (1 Pet 2:18-25); hence he commences the relevant paragraph with the words "in the same way" (1 Pet 3:1). Peter's instructions to both groups fit the context of household codes* (and the broader topos of management, including a discussion of relations to civic officials [1 Pet 2:13-17]; see Civil Authority). The discussion also reflects the principles of submission to those in existing positions of authority* (e.g., elders in 1 Pet 5:5); while Christians should also practice mutual submission (1 Pet 5:5), Peter especially addresses wives whose husbands are not believers

(1 Pet 3:1). Nonbelievers would follow the standard patterns of society, which Peter expected these wives to uphold under normal circumstances. These patterns included the wife's quietness and obedience* to her husband (e.g., Sir 26:14-16; 30:19; see Balch 1981, 99-103); other moralists also typically attacked outward adornment (cf. Keener 1992, 103-7).

Roman men particularly resented and retaliated against non-Roman cults that drew their wives away from the family religion and so shamed the husband's authority (e.g., Rabello, 697); when those religions incited women or slaves to disobey the male head of the household* in other matters, this increased the level of hostility (e.g., Plutarch Con. Praec. 19, Mor. 140D). Many felt that foreign cults targeted well-to-do Roman women (cf. Liefeld, 239-42). Writing with the conviction that the level of persecution* existing or imminent in Rome* would soon spread to other provinces, Peter exhorts his audience to uphold appropriate family standards of Roman society. Like members of other persecuted sects and like Paul before him (Keener 1992, 139-224), Peter adapts popularly used household codes of the day to make Christian behavior less needlessly objectionable to outsiders.

Scripture provides Peter precedent for arguing that such submission can be appropriate: the Israelite women of old (like the proverbial virtuous matrons of Roman legend; e.g., Dixon, 3) submitted to their husbands (1 Pet 3:5). If the exact sense of "submit" is debatable from one context to the next, the sense of "obedience" is not: Sarah obeyed Abraham,* calling him "lord" (or "sir"; 1 Pet 3:6). Genesis does indicate that Sarah heeded or obeyed Abraham—though he labored alongside her (Gen 18:6-8)—but also points out that Abraham heeded Sarah (Gen 16:2), at least once at God's command (Gen 21:12; also Jub. 17:6). Peter mentions only the example that he needs to illustrate his point, however. Like others who respectfully addressed those of higher social status (Gen 33:13-14), ancient Israelite women may have regularly called their husbands "sir" (some cite Hos 2:16); in Genesis 18:12 and especially later Jewish tradition (T. Abr. 5—6A; 4, 6B) Sarah grants Abraham this title. Yet Isaac also grants a form of this title to Sarah (T. Abr. 3A, using the feminine form), and Abraham also grants it to guests (Gen 18:3-5; T. Abr. 2A; cf. T. Abr. 15, 18A; 8, 10, 12B). Use of the title did not necessarily accompany submissive behavior (Jos. and As. 4:5/7, 12/16), although Peter clearly does invite such behavior. At issue is not a transcultural example of patriarchal dominance but an appropriate example of respect.

At the same time Peter reminds wives not to "fear" mortals (1 Pet 3:6, 14; except in the sense of "reverence," 1 Pet 2:17; 3:2); pagan husbands had legal authority even to discard infants, but Peter exhorts the wives to stand firm (cf. Moffatt, 133; Balch 1981, 105). While insisting on wives' and slaves' submission for the sake of witness within a hostile society, Peter's sympathy apparently lies more with the Christian wife than with the non-Christian husband. His instructions to wives follow on the analogy of his instructions to slaves, where he compares their enduring of suffering* to that of their Lord* himself (1 Pet 2:21-25); after instructing wives about submission to husbands he returns to the issue of Christians responding to persecution. Though he is not addressing the institutions of slavery or patriarchal marriage structures themselves, Peter recognizes the unjust use of such structures (1 Pet 2:19) and encourages believers in unjust situations to act strategically within them for the long-range interests of the gospel (cf. Balch 1984).

Like the instructions of other writers who are speaking in general principles (cf. 1 Cor 7:21; see Keener 1991, 22-25), Peter's words apply under general circumstances but not necessarily under circumstances he does not address. Thus he recognizes that slaves must endure beatings, often without any wrongdoing on their part (1 Pet 2:20); slaves, however, normally had little choice but to endure such beatings. By contrast Roman wives could divorce their husbands, and Christians could often flee local persecution; Peter's instructions to submit to authorities (1 Pet 2:13-17) and to husbands (1 Pet 3:1-6) involved normal and not abusive situations. The instructions to wives address what appears to be the least abusive situation in the context.

Then Peter addresses Christian husbands (1 Pet 3:7). Instead of exhorting them how to make their wives obey them, however, as would have been customary in household codes (Keener 1992, 166-70), he exhorts them to be sensitive to their wives. Other ancient writers who regarded women as the weaker gender normally meant that they were morally or mentally inferior (Apuleius Met. 7.8; 'Abot R. Nat. 9, §24B; Gardner, 21, 67; Pomeroy, 150, 230; Lefkowitz, 112-32; Wegner, 159-62; less pejoratively, 4 Macc 15:4-5; 16:5, 14); this could entitle them to special consideration (Ep. Arist. 250; b. B. Meṣ 59a; Plutarch Rom. 108, Mor. 289E; Muson. Ruf. frag. 12; Chariton Chaer. 2.2.2; cf. 1 Cor 12:23). The rest of Peter's instructions to the husband rules out the sense of moral or mental weakness, however; Peter either thinks of the wife as weaker with regard to her societal status or because Greek men around age thirty often married women in their mid-teens, producing a disparity of social and intellectual maturation. In any case, like some of his contemporaries, Peter felt that this weakness entitled wives to special consideration and sensitivity ("according to understanding" or "knowledge"; cf. Sir 7:25).

Peter emphasizes that husbands should treat their wives with "respect" or "honor" (1 Pet 3:7), as he had exhorted wives to treat their husbands (1 Pet 3:2, using a different term). They should likewise view them as fellow heirs of the grace* of life. Whereas women's inheritance rights were normally subordinate to those of men (Num 27:8 improved their status in Israel), all God's people shared the same inheritance in the world* to come. By emphasizing the wives' spiritual equality, Peter prevents the husbands from taking his instructions to the wives as grounds for the husbands to subordinate them. The husband who failed to keep this in mind would hurt his own relationship with God in prayer* (1 Pet 3:7, 12; in a more general vein, harmony between spouses was a traditional Greco-Roman topic [Balch 1981, 88]).

Although we have focused on women's roles because most ancient literature assumes the man's status as the norm, the behavior of men toward wives in early Christianity was less culturally predictable than that of women toward husbands. In the household codes of Aristotle and later Roman ideology, a true man was a paterfamilias who ruled his household. Yet while Christian wives in general remained submissive, early Christians did not emphasize that husbands and fathers should express their manhood primarily by authority; rather they were to express it by service.* Thinking of a wife as a "coheir of grace" despite culturally defined power structures (1 Pet 3:7) was distinctive. A man's identity modeled after Christ contrasts not so much with womanhood as it does with boyhood; rather than being self-centered, a Christlike man must be responsible, a voluntary servant, looking out for others' interests. In contrast to Paul, who defines authority positions in terms of Christ's servanthood (Eph 5:21—6:9), Peter draws a parallel only between Jesus and those in socially weaker power roles (1 Pet 2:21-25); in either case early Christian writers summoned their hearers to imitate Christ's servanthood, not his power.

3. Woman and Man in Revelation.

Revelation portrays the city of God (new Jerusalem, Rev 12:1-2; 21:2) and the city of the world (Babylon,* Rev 17:4-5; cf. 2 Bar. 11:1-3 for another contrast between Jerusalem and Babylon) as women—one a virtuous mother and bride and the other a prostitute, with Christ as a son and bridegroom (Rev 12:5; 19:7). The descriptions tell us little about the author's view of gender roles, however, for they reflect traditional imagery. The Hebrew Bible had long portrayed Israel and Jerusalem as God's bride and the mother of the saved remnant, and Israel's straying from God had often earned it the image of a prostitute. The images of a heavenly Jerusalem as mother of the church and of the church as Christ's bride already appeared in earlier Christian texts (Gal 4:26; 2 Cor 11:2; Eph 5:25-27). The symbols functioned within a culture whose shared assumptions conceived of women socially primarily in their sexual relation to men, but the author employs such symbols to communicate the reality the symbols represent, not to address the cultural conception from which the images draw their force.

3.1. God's People as a Virtuous Woman. Revelation 12 draws on the widespread ancient myth of a dragon seeking to destroy a divine child, who then overcomes the dragon and brings deliverance. In the early empire the myth appears most commonly in its Greek form (e.g., Aune, 112) but appears in Egyptian and other forms as well (e.g., Koester, 1:188; Beasley-Murray, 193). Many scholars argue that the emperor's propagandists from Virgil on portrayed him as the divine child and that even here Revelation is challenging the imperial cult (e.g., Knox 1939, 18-19; Caird, 148; Beasley-Murray, 193-94); second-century Christians, at least, may have applied the divine child imagery to Christ (cf. Sib. Or. 8:196-97). Although Revelation opposes idolatry, Jewish apocalyptic elsewhere borrows pagan imagery, and there is no reason to doubt that process was at work here (Bergmeier 1982; pace Ford, 188).

Women appeared in other visions (e.g., Plutarch Ser. Num. Vind. 33, Mor. 568A; Herm. Vis. 8.1) and were employed as symbolic images (e.g., 3 Bar. 9:3, the moon in a chariot, following Greek imagery). The direct background for the woman of Revelation 12 is, however, the OT. As Ford (195) notes, the biblical tradition already portrays Zion as God's wife (Is 54:1, 5, 6; Jer 3:20; Ezek 16:8-14; Hos 2:19-20); Zion as a mother (Is 49:21; 50:1; 66:7-11; Hos 4:5; Bar 4:8-23); and in birth throes (Mic 4:9-10; cf. Is 26:16-18; Jer 4:31; 13:21; Sir 48:19[21]). (Rissi, 36-37, thinks Is 26:17—27:1 provides the closest parallel here.) The twelve stars on the woman's head represent the whole zodiac, which was popular in contemporary Judaism as a symbol for God's creation. But while a zodiacal crown was characteristic of Helios (probably echoed in Jos. and As. 5:5/6), the biblical background here consists of the tribes of Israel in Joseph's dream (Gen 37:9; cf. echoes in T. Abr. 7A, B); as elsewhere in Revelation (e.g., Rev 7:4-8; 21:12-14; elsewhere, e.g., Ep. Arist. 97), twelve stands for the people of God. Thus the woman here stands for the ideal Zion (e.g., Caird 1966, 149; Feuillet 1965, 115; cf. Minear 1960, 54; cf. Is 65:17-19; 66:7-13).

This image of Zion giving birth continued to be developed in subsequent Jewish tradition: thus Zion appears as a woman giving birth in 4 Ezra 10:44-46 (though in 5:50 and 10:9-14 "our mother" is earth, as in Greek story of Deucalion and Pyrrha); mourning in 4 Ezra 9:38—10:24, Zion is transformed into the heavenly Jerusalem in 4 Ezra 10:25-28 (cf. Gal 4:26). Scholars debate the precise nature of the image in 1QH 3:1-18: some think it refers to a messianic individual; probably more are skeptical, finding instead the sufferings of the community or of the psalmist himself. But in any case this passage echoes OT language about Zion giving birth in pain. In Revelation 12, Zion's birth pangs probably represent the cross (so also Caird, 149-50; cf. Jn 16:21-22).

Although most scholars concur that the woman of Revelation 12 symbolizes the people of God, many scholars have seen Mary here as well (e.g., James 1960; O'Donoghue 1960; cf. Feuillet 1978; but note also e.g., Ford 207; Feuillet 1965: 115). Bruns goes so far in his parallel between the church and Mary* here to link the harlot of Revelation 17 with another concrete historical character, the mid-first century empress Messalina (Bruns, 462). But even early patristic exegesis of the text provides little support for Marian interpretation (so e.g., Stefaniak). Because Revelation provides no specific allusions to Mary (without recourse to parallels in John, or a new interpretation of Eve, or by a sensus plenior on the basis of later tradition), the text itself does not support the Marian exegesis.

The Book of Revelation also employs traditional Jewish imagery in portraying the church as Christ's bride (cf. similarly Eph 5:21-33; 2 Clem. 14). This image itself recalls Israel as God's wife in the Hebrew Bible (e.g., Jer 3:1; Hos 2:16, 19-20) and in later Jewish texts (e.g., Sipra Šemini Mekilta deMiluim 99.2.2; Sipre Deut 43.16.1). The closing chapters of Revelation present the New Jerusalem, a traditional Jewish hope (cf. Is 65:17-18; Tobit 13:7-16; Pss. Sol. 11:7; 4 Ezra 7:26), as Christ's bride (Rev 21:2), employing various literary figures. One is an announcement of the impending messianic banquet of the world to come (in Jewish texts, m. 'Abot. 3:17; t. Ber. 6.21), viewed in Revelation 19:7 as Christ's wedding banquet. Another is the description of the bride, which in Revelation 21 coalesces with a literary form common in antiquity, namely an encomium on cities (e.g., Aelius Aristides on Rome; cf. Balch 1982; Ps 48). "Jerusalem" represents the people who lived in the city as well as the place (e.g., Is 3:8), and in Revelation the New Jerusalem clearly represents the saints (with e.g., Gundry).

3.2. The Prostitutes of Revelation. Scholars have proposed various solutions regarding the identity of "Jezebel" (Rev 2:20-23), for example, that she may be the leader of a competing prophetic guild (Aune, 197). The roles of women in Thyatiran society in general provide a broad context for interpreting this figure. First of all, women were involved in business guilds in Thyatira (Hemer, 121). Others have noted that the goddess Sambathe was identified with the Sibyls in Asia Minor; some have thus suggested that "Jezebel" reflects the influence of a Jewish cult associated with this syncretism in Thyatira (Ford, 405; Hemer, 119). Although this remains speculation (Ramsay, 337), we do know that second-century Christians had embraced some Sibyllism in its Jewish form (e.g., Herm. Vis. 8.1; Theophilus Autol. 2.36; Tertullian Apol. 19.1). Artemis Boreitene was the prominent city-goddess of Thyatira (Hemer 118), and we also know that some women were also involved in the imperial cult in first-century Asia Minor (e.g., Lalla in Lycia; Lefkowitz and Fant, 157 §159).

The nature of Jezebel's "prostitution" may be disputed. The earlier reference to "Balaam" (Rev 2:14) might suggest literal cultic prostitution (Num 25:1-3), but spiritual immorality is far more likely here (Caird, 44; cf. e.g., Jer 3:1-6; Hos 1:2; Wis 14:12; 4QpNah 3:4), given the likelihood that her "children" (Rev 2:23) represent her disciples (cf. 2 Jn 1, 13; 3 Jn 4). The "harlotries" of Jezebel in 2 Kings 9:22 represented leading Israel into the worship of Baal; here they may represent compromise with the imperial cult (Fiorenza, 195). Later in Revelation this idolatrous prophetess of compromise becomes a model for Babylon the harlot.

"Babylon the Great" represents Rome, as is usually acknowledged (Rev 17:9, 18); as the place of the new , Rome had already received the name Babylon in Jewish and Christian (1 Pet 5:13) literature. The "prostitute" image is somewhat more complex. God's unfaithful wife Israel was usually the prostitute in biblical tradition (e.g., Is 1:21; Jer 2:20; 3:1; Ezek 16:15-16; 23:5; Hos 3:3; 4:15), but Nineveh fills the role in Nahum 3:4 and Tyre in Isaiah 23:15-16; the collapse of Tyre's mercantile empire in Isaiah 23:1-14 fits the dirge of Revelation 18. Artists often portrayed a city as a goddess by their city's river (Ford, 277); Sibylline Oracles 3:356-59, 385-87, 469 also portray cities or regions as women; the image here especially resembles that of first-century depictions of Rome (Beauvery 1983). Babylon's reputation for harlotry (cf. the slander in Herodotus Hist. 1.199) may have augmented the image, but the biblical background and the contrast with the virtuous people of God from whom Christ sprang and with whom he would be united provide the primary context of the image.

4. Woman and Man in 1 Clement.

Clement (see Clement of Rome), probably writing about 95 or 96, maintains this Pauline and Petrine tradition of Greek and Roman household codes. As one writing within the sphere of apostolic tradition, however, he adapts those codes according to distinctive Christian emphases on mutual submission, even if his words on the subject appear less striking than those of some of his Christian predecessors.

In his first exhortation to women (1 Clem. 1.3), Clement may deliberately echo some of the language in Titus 2. Thus when he admonishes wives to be blameless and to show natural affection to their own husbands, he adds that wives must be "obedient" or "subordinate" to their husbands (1 Clem. 1.3, as in household codes; cf. Tit 2:5). With somewhat different language Clement elsewhere speaks of obedience to God (1 Clem. 19.1; 60.4) and to earthly rulers (1 Clem. 63.1). Clement also calls on the wife to "rule her house" (1 Clem. 1.3); Greek writers who emphasized the wife's subordination nevertheless provided for her authority in the relatively autonomous domestic sphere (see also Tit 2:5; 1 Tim 5:14). The "pure" conscience* (1 Clem. 1.3) might indicate undivided passion for one's husband (1 Clem. 38.2; cf. 2 Clem. 8.6; Ign. Pol. 5.1; Tit 2:4-5), although it is not clear that Clement intends the phrase so narrowly (1 Tim 1:5; Heb 9:14; 10:22; 2 Clem. 11.1; 16.4). Especially in times of public suspicion of Christianity, Christian women must be prudently self-controlled (Tit 2:4-5; 1 Clem. 1.3), as must the men (Tit 2:6).

It is noteworthy that Clement interchanges between genders some exhortations from Titus 2, however, recognizing that they apply in principle to both genders: like men (Tit 2:2, 8), women are to exercise dignity (1 Clem. 1.3). Titus's warning that women should not slander (Tit 2:2) applies in 1 Clement to all Christians (1 Clem. 30.3). But what is most noteworthy is that Clement, like some NT writers, places wifely submission in the broader context of mutual submission. Before addressing the appropriate role of Christian wives, Clement calls for submission to their leaders (1 Clem. 1.3; cf. 1 Clem. 57.1-2) and older men; but this submission becomes complementary, as in 1 Peter 5:5 (1 Clem. 2.1).

Presumably exaggerating their virtues (as was customary in an introductory exordium; cf. 1 Cor 1:5-7), Clement emphasizes the Corinthians' initial humility (1 Clem. 2.1), introducing a central motif in his letter* (1 Clem. 16.1-2; 19.1; 21.8; 30.2-3, 8; 38.2; 58.2; cf. 1 Clem. 59.4), which can also be applied to a heroic woman in 1 Clement 55.6 (cf. 1 Pet. 5:6). Both in 1 Clement 2.1 and elsewhere (1 Clem. 16.2; 21.5; 57.2; cf. 1 Clem. 1.1; 30.8) he emphasizes lack of boastfulness; at times he follows the ancient rhetorical motif of critiquing self-boasting (1 Clem. 30.6; 38.2). In emphasizing submission to those in authority (1 Clem. 1.3; 57.1-2) he nevertheless praises those who submit rather than seek others' submission (1 Clem. 2.1). Clement undoubtedly emphasizes humility because of the strife among leaders (1 Clem. 43—50; see Church Order), but his dependence on this earlier Christian ethic* in the context of the Haustafeln affects his portrait of submission. Apparently less egalitarian than Paul, Clement is nonetheless more egalitarian than most of his contemporaries who employed household codes.

A fuller treatment of household codes and other relationships appears in 1 Clement 21.6-9. Clement exhorts readers to reverence Christ, respect their leaders, honor their elders and educate young men in the wisdom* that begins with the fear of God (1 Clem. 21.6). He also exhorts men to lead their wives in the way of good (1 Clem. 21.6), advocating purity,* sincere meekness and silence (1 Clem. 21.7), all of which were cultural marks of appropriate wifely virtues* (Keener 1992, 164-66). He also exhorts Christian women to a more distinctively Christian virtue of loving all fellow Christians equally (the ancient language of "friendship") and impartially (1 Clem. 21.7); this final exhortation is distinctively Christian in that it treats all Christians as members of one family or social group, regardless of class or gender divisions. Then Clement provides instruction for minor children* (1 Clem. 21.8-9; cf. Eph 6:1-4).

Clement's Christian understanding of male-female relationships also affects his understanding of marriage.* Because marriage makes one flesh, jealousy between spouses is harmful in a marriage (1 Clem. 6.3; 1 Clem. 3—6 probably focuses on jealousy largely due to the situation of jealousy over church offices attested in 1 Clem. 43—44). Following Genesis, Clement also recognizes that God created humanity, both male and female, in his image (1 Clem. 33.4-6; cf. Keener 1992, 37). Yet Clement chooses a specifically masculine term to describe the messengers he has sent with the letter as its possible interpreters, possibly implying the growing preference for male leadership in the Roman church (1 Clem. 63.3; contrast Rom 16:1-2; Keener 1992, 238).

Clement recognizes women heroines (1 Clem. 55.3-6), including apparently Christian martyrs* (1 Clem. 6.2). He describes their heroism as becoming "manly" not in the Philonic or gnostic* sense of "becoming male" (cf. perhaps Herm. Vis. 3.16.4) but in the common use of the term for "courage" (see Keener 1992, 164; Pol. Phil. 9.1; Herm. Vis. 1.4.3). Others also often viewed women taking a male role of leadership or responsibility as noble, provided a crisis forced them to do so; such writers extolled the virtue of women who acted courageously in exceptional circumstances (Plutarch Mul. Virt., Mor.). Like men, however, women could also constitute negative examples (cf. the sin of both Valens and his wife in Pol. Phil. 11.4). Thus Clement illustrates damnable apostasy* by Lot's wife (1 Clem. 11.1-2); immediately thereafter, however, he employs Rahab as an example of saving faith (1 Clem. 12.1), emphasizing her gender (1 Clem. 12.8). He demands moral purity from both genders (1 Clem. 60.2). The language of motherhood or the frailty of those "born of women" often merely reflects biblical language without indicating Clement's views relating to women's roles (1 Clem. 18.5; 30.5; 35.8).

5. Woman and Man in Ignatius and Polycarp. Ignatius* provides a partial set of household duties in his letter to Polycarp. First, he exhorts Polycarp to look after the widows in his congregation (Ign. Pol. 4.1; cf. 1 Tim 5:3). Second, he addresses slaves, perhaps because they also might require financial help from the church. He advocates treating both male and female slaves as fellow Christians, not according to their societal status, but also warns against them becoming puffed up with pride,* urging them to serve their masters for God's honor (Ign. Pol. 4.3). These instructions probably presuppose a situation in which Christianity was maligned as a potentially subversive cult (Tit 2:5, 8-10; cf. Keener 1992, 139-56). That Ignatius resists the idea that the Christian community pay for their emancipation (Ign. Pol. 4.3) may reflect limited funds, the threat of massive slave conversions for ulterior motives and the recognition that household slaves could often save enough for their own manumission. It probably also suggests, however, that some slaves had also adopted the natural position that their Christian siblings should contribute to their efforts to purchase freedom. Some later Christian writers, such as John Chrysostom, were more sympathetic with this position (Longenecker, 65), but many free Christians were apparently too much a part of their culture to think in these terms (cf. Mart. Pol. 6.1; 7.1).

Finally, Ignatius turns to husband-wife relations, urging husbands and wives to love one another faithfully (Ign. Pol. 5.1). Rather than calling for wifely obedience, Ignatius merely exhorts "his sisters" to be content with their husbands in flesh and spirit, while reiterating Paul's demand that husbands love their wives as Christ loves the church (Ign. Pol. 5.1).

Polycarp,* apparently strongly influenced by Ignatius's personal exhortations to him (Pol. Phil. 13.2), seems to echo his household codes (Pol. Phil. 4.2), probably following Ignatius's instruction to offer homilies against misbehavior (Ign. Pol. 5.1). Ignatius's letter undoubtedly strengthened Polycarp's own position in the church (Ign. Pol. 6.1), a fact that may have made an enduring impression on Smyrna's bishop. Following the traditional pattern of household codes, which normally addressed only the male householder (contrast Eph 5:22—6:9), Polycarp exhorts husbands to instruct their wives in the importance of marital fidelity and of loving everyone equally in a pure way (Pol. Phil. 4.2; cf. the influence of Ign. Pol. 5.1; 1 Clem. 21.7).

Polycarp then addresses guidance to prominent groups in the church: widows, who are to avoid slander and like offenses (Pol. Phil. 4.3; cf. 1 Tim 4:7; 5:13; Tit 2:3); deacons and elders (Pol. Phil. 5.2; 6.1; on church leadership and household codes see Verner); and younger men (Pol. Phil. 5.3). He instructs the young men more on sexual behavior than he does the women (Pol. Phil. 5.3 versus Pol. Phil. 4.2), perhaps because young men in the eastern Mediterranean were far more likely to be single than were the women (whom Polycarp treats as "wives" and "widows," Pol. Phil. 4.2-3). Just as he elsewhere continues the traditional duty of prayer for rulers (Pol. Phil. 12.3), Polycarp preserves the Pauline tradition of mutual submission even though he does not use it directly to qualify the household codes (Pol. Phil. 10.2; cf. Eph 5:21).

Ignatius's greeting to the "household of Gavia" (Ign. Smyrn. 13.2) could reflect her role as leader of a house church but could also reflect merely her prominence as a hospitable mother in the faith, possibly a widow who opened her home to the church as a patroness. He also greets in Smyrna a woman named Alce (Ign. Smyrn. 13.2), and in his letter to Smyrna's bishop, Polycarp, he greets the same person (Ign. Pol. 8.3), possibly suggesting that Gavia is the unnamed "widow of Epitropus" whom Ignatius greets there with her household (Ign. Pol. 8.2). Finally, Ignatius recognizes Christ's deity in humanity in terms of his birth from both Mary* and God (Ign. Eph. 7.2; cf. Ign. Eph. 18.2; 19.1; Ign. Trall. 9; Ign. Smyrn. 1.1).

6. Woman and Man in Other Patristic Writers. Like 1 Clement, the *Didache preserves substantial early tradition; the *Epistle of Barnabas includes considerably more late material but also depends heavily on catechetical material called the Two Ways that it shares with the Didache. Although these texts comment little on husband-wife relations, household instructions appear in Didache 4.9-11, where the tradition exhorts attention to one's children (Did. 4.9) and prohibits speaking to slaves in anger, since masters and slaves were equals before God (Did. 4.10; cf. Barn. 19.7). Slaves were nevertheless to submit to masters respectfully as to those who by virtue of their office functioned as God's representatives (Did. 4.11; cf. Barn. 19.7). Barnabas exhorts to humility in this same context (Barn. 19.6).

2 Clement (perhaps c. A.D. 120) and Clement of Alexandria (Clement Strom. 3.13.92) cite a supposed saying of Jesus (the latter referring to the Gos. Eg.) that finds a parallel in Gospel of Thomas 22. When someone asked Jesus when his kingdom would come, he replied that when two would become one and gender distinctions would cease (2 Clem. 12.2). It is possible that the earliest form of the saying referred to husband and wife becoming one flesh (Mk 10:8) and that the removal of gender distinctions referred to the catastrophic reversal of the social order anticipated in the messianic woes of early Jewish expectation (e.g., m. Soṭa 9:15; cf. perhaps 1 Cor 7:29). 2 Clement, however, interprets the saying positively: husband and wife share the same soul and gender would become a nonsexual issue, for one would treat fellow Christians merely as brothers and sisters in all purity (2 Clem. 12.3-5; cf. 1 Tim 5:1-2; there is no indication in the passage of sexual asceticism within marriage). This writer indicated that Jesus expected the kingdom to come when his followers could live so righteously; the saying thus matches less the frequent Jewish doctrine of the messianic woes and more the frequent Jewish doctrine that Israel could hasten the time of the end through good works.

Thomas naturally interprets the saying in a more gnosticizing direction, changing the question about the time of the kingdom (2 Clem. 12.2) to one about how to enter it (Gos. Thom. 22). In making male and female the same, Thomas apparently follows the lead of Philo,* for whom divinity was male and all else was female by comparison and for whom a praiseworthy woman such as the empress Livia was becoming "male in her reasoning powers" (see Baer). That 2 Clement, which retains some traditional Palestinian Jewish motifs (e.g., possibly the Kiddush ha-Shem, 2 Clem. 13.1-2) alongside Diaspora Jewish motifs (see Diaspora Judaism), may share a somewhat similar Philonic picture is suggested by his view that the humanity God created male and female refers to Christ (the male) and his church (the female, 2 Clem. 14.2). 2 Clement probably builds on the Pauline analogy between the church as Christ's bride, hence one "flesh" or spirit with him, and the church as Christ's body (Eph 5:29-32; cf. 1 Cor 6:17), but he reads these metaphors in a platonizing direction ("this flesh is an antitype of the Spirit," 2 Clem. 14.3). The feminine character of the church prevailed apart from such philosophical frameworks, however; following Jewish teaching concerning Israel, Hermas envisions the church as a woman "on account of whom the world was made" (Herm. Vis. 2.8.1). Hermas also portrays the virtues as women (Herm. Vis. 3.16.3-5; virtues were feminine in Greek).

The allegorist Pseudo-Barnabas perpetuates one stream of Jewish criticism of Eve (e.g., Life of Adam and Eve) in emphasizing that the serpent brought about humanity's sin "by Eve" (Barn. 12.5). Papias preserves an account from Philip's daughters subsequent to their youthful prophetic activity in Acts 21, apparently accepting them as persons of status within the Christian community (Papias frag. 3.9, in Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.39).

7. Conclusion.

Earliest Christianity reflected the most socially progressive alternatives on women's roles in general circulation in its day, but in time much of the church began to reflect the more conservative values of the majority culture. The step from Jesus' practices to first-century epistles containing household codes was a large one, but it was a cultural accommodation that most early Christians apparently felt necessary in order to survive in a hostile environment. Even these codes were qualified, but in time a church increasingly at home in its culture became increasingly estranged from the more radical elements in its roots, and the dominant culture of late antiquity overwhelmed the incipient egalitarianism argued by Jesus and preserved in Pauline and Petrine qualifications.

See also HOUSEHOLD CODES; HOUSEHOLD, FAMILY; MARY; MINISTRY; WOMEN IN THE EARLY CHURCH.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. V. A. Abrahamsen, "The Rock Reliefs and the Cult of Diana at Philippi" (unpublished Th.D. dissertation, Harvard Divinity School, 1986); idem, "Women at Philippi: The Pagan and Christian Evidence," JFSR 3 (1987) 17-30; D. E. Aune, Prophecy in Early Christianity and the Ancient Mediterranean World (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983); R. A. Baer, Jr., Philo's Use of the Categories Male and Female (ALGHJ 3; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1970); D. L. Balch, "Early Christian Criticism of Patriarchal Authority: 1 Peter 2:11—3:12," USQR 39 (1984) 151-73; idem, "Household Codes" in Greco-Roman Literature and the New Testament: Selected Forms and Genres, ed. D. E. Aune (SBLSBS 21; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1988) 25-50; idem, Let Wives Be Submissive: The Domestic Code in 1 Peter (SBLMS 26; Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1981); idem, "Two Apologetic Encomia: Dionysius on Rome and Josephus on the Jews," JSJ 13 (1982) 102-22; G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation (NCBC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1974); R. Beauvery, "L'Apocalypse au risque de la numismatique: Babylone, la grande Prostituée et le sixième roi Vespasien et la déesse Rome," RB 90 (1983) 243-60; R. Bergmeier, "Altes und Neues zur 'Sonnenfrau am Himmel (Apk 12).' Religionsgeschichtliche und quellenkritische Beobachtungen zu Apk 12:1-17," ZNW 73 (1982) 97-109; B. J. Brooten, Women Leaders in the Ancient Synagogue: Inscriptional Evidence and Background Issues (Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1982); J. E. Bruns, "The Contrasted Women of Apocalypse 12 and 17," CBQ 26 (1964) 459-63; G. B. Caird, A Commentary on the Revelation of Saint John the Divine (HNTC; San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1966); G. Clark, Women in Late Antiquity: Pagan and Christian Lifestyles (Oxford: Clarendon, 1994); P. Davids, The First Epistle of Peter (NICNT; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990); S. Dixon, The Roman Mother (Norman, OK: Oklahoma University Press, 1988); A. Feuillet, The Apocalypse (Staten Island: Alba House, 1965); idem, "Le chapitre XII de l'Apocalypse: Son caractère synthetique et sa richesse doctrinale," Esprit et Vie 88 (1978) 674-83; E. Schüssler Fiorenza, The Book of Revelation: Justice and Judgment (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985); N. M. Flanagan, "The Position of Women in the Writings of St. Luke," Marianum 40 (1978) 288-304; J. M. Ford, Revelation (AB; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1975); L. Friedländer, Roman Life and Manners Under the Early Empire (4 vols; New York: Barnes & Noble, 1907) vol. 1; J. F. Gardner, Women in Roman Law and Society (Bloomington, IN: Indiana University Press, 1986); R. H. Gundry, "The New Jerusalem: People as Place, not Place for People," NovT 29 (1987) 254-64; C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in Their Local Setting (JSNTSup 11; Sheffield: University of Sheffield, 1986); T. Ilan, Jewish Women in Greco-Roman Palestine (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1996); P. P. James, "Mary and the Great Sign," AER 142 (1960) 321-29; E. A. Judge, "The Early Christians as a Scholastic Community: Part II," JRH 1 (1960) 125-37; idem, The Social Pattern of the Christian Groups in the First Century: Some Prolegomena to the Study of New Testament Ideas of Social Obligation (London: Tyndale Press, 1960); C. S. Keener, And Marries Another: Divorce and Remarriage in the Teaching of the New Testament (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1991); idem, Paul, Women and Wives: Marriage and Women's Ministry in the Letters of Paul (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1992); W. L. Knox, St Paul and the Church of the Gentiles (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1939); H. Koester, Introduction to the New Testament (2 vols.; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1982); M. R. Lefkowitz, Women in Greek Myth (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1986); M. R. Lefkowitz and M. B. Fant, Women's Life in Greece and Rome (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1982); N. Lewis, Life in Egypt Under Roman Rule (Oxford: Clarendon, 1983); W. L. Liefeld, "The Wandering Preacher As a Social Figure in the Roman Empire" (unpublished Ph.D. dissertation, Columbia University, 1967); R. N. Longenecker, New Testament Social Ethics for Today (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1984); E. H. Maly, "Women and the Gospel of Luke," BTB 10 (1980) 99-104; W. A. Meeks, The First Urban Christians: The Social World of the Apostle Paul (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1983); J. R. Michaels, "Pairs and Parallels: Jesus and Inclusive Language," Daughters of Sarah 11 (1985) 7-10; P. S. Minear, Images of the Church in the New Testament (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1960); J. Moffatt, The General Epistles: James, Peter and Judas (MNTC; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, Doran & Company, 1928); N.-D. O'Donoghue, "A Woman Clothed with the Sun," Furrow 11 (1960) 445-56; S. B. Pomeroy, Goddesses, Whores, Wives and Slaves: Women in Classical Antiquity (New York: Schocken, 1975); A. M. Rabello, "The Legal Condition of the Jews in the Roman Empire," ANRW 2.13 (1980) 662-762; W. M. Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1979 [1904]); M. Rissi, Time and History: A Study on the Revelation (Richmond: John Knox, 1966); S. Safrai, "Home and Family" in The Jewish People in the First Century: Historical Geography, Political History, Social, Cultural and Religious Life and Institutions, ed. S. Safrai, M. Stern with D. Flusser and W. C. van Unnik (2 vols.; CRINT 1.1; Assen: Van Gorcum, 1974) 728-92; E. G. Selwyn, The First Epistle of St. Peter: The Greek Text with Introduction, Notes and Essays (2d ed.; New York: Macmillan, 1947); L. Stefaniak, "Mulier amicta sole (Apok 12, 1-17)," Ruch Biblijny i Liturgiczny 9 (1956) 244-61; L. Swidler, Women in Judaism: The Status of Women in Formative Judaism (Metuchen, NJ: Scarecrow, 1976); R. C. Tannehill, The Narrative Unity of Luke-Acts: A Literary Interpretation, 1: The Gospel According to Luke (2 vols.; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1986); D. C. Verner, The Household of God: The Social World of the Pastoral Epistles (SBLDS 71; Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1983); J. R. Wegner, Chattel or Person? The Status of Women in the Mishnah (New York: Oxford University Press, 1988); B. Witherington III, Women in the Earliest Churches (SNTSMS 59; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1988). C. S. Keener

WOMEN IN THE EARLY CHURCH

The vigorous participation of women in the life of the early church is attested by a considerable body of evidence, both literary and archaeological. Many of these women are nameless; frequently they are designated by the category of their ministry or by their social or marital status. Sometimes there are hints of deep involvement in leadership that cannot be demonstrated with surety. Nevertheless those possibilities deserve to be acknowledged and explored.

1. Women as Leaders in Acts and the Apostolic Fathers
2. Paul's Ministry Among Women in Acts
3. Priscilla: A Test Case
4. Women in Prophetic Ministry
5. Women in Evangelistic Traditions
6. Women as Leaders of House Churches
7. Widows and Disenfranchised Women
8. Married and Unmarried Women

1. Women as Leaders in Acts and the Apostolic Fathers.

Throughout Acts* there is a careful inclusion of women as well as men, both as believers (Acts 5:14; 8:12; 17:4, 12) and as objects of persecution* (Acts 8:3; 9:2-3; 22:4). No fewer than eleven women are specifically named, and five are involved in church-related ministries. After the ascension* of Christ,* Mary* the mother of Jesus and her female associates are included in the decision making to select Judas's replacement among the Twelve (Acts 1:14). The qualification for an apostle* is that the individual have traveled with Jesus throughout his ministry* and been a witness* for the resurrection* (Acts 2:21-22). Although a woman is not chosen for the office, Luke's record makes it clear that some of Jesus' female followers fulfill the specifications (Lk 8:1-3; 23:49, 55-56; 24:1-10). At a different level one woman, Dorcas, is specifically called a "disciple" because her ministry of social and spiritual outreach rendered her invaluable to the nascent church. And upon her untimely death, she was restored to the community who so sorely needed her services (Acts 9:36-41).

In the writings of the apostolic fathers,* greetings are sent by Ignatius to Tavia and her family, and Alce is mentioned twice (Ign. Smyrn. 13; Ign. Pol. 8.3). Alce's name occurs too in the Martyrdom of Polycarp 17 as a relative of the official responsible for Polycarp's arrest. Though the correspondence between Ignatius and Mary of Cassobel is generally regarded as spurious, its preservation indicates a tradition in which respect might be accorded to a female leader. In his purported reply, Ignatius gladly accedes to her recommendation for clergy appointments and declares that her piety and command of the Scriptures have made a tremendous impression on the church at Rome* during the time that Linus was bishop.

Clement of Rome,* the successor of Linus, was well aware that women were capable of heroism, and he urged them to follow the examples of Queen Esther and of Judith, who delivered her people from the oppression of Holofernes (1 Clem. 55). Like James,* who commended Rahab as one whose faith* was accounted for righteousness* (Jas 2:25), Clement held her forth as a paradigm of courageous hospitality,* a woman in whom dwelt both faith and prophecy* (1 Clem. 12).

While the writer of the *Shepherd of Hermas was to read its contents in the Roman congregation, Clement, as bishop, was to send copies of the document to the "cities abroad" (Herm. Vis. 2.8.3). A second copy was to be delivered to a female leader named Grapte in order that she might instruct the widows and children. Evidently she held a significant position in the church.

The shepherd receives much of his teaching from a succession of female figures, one of whom is certainly mother church (Herm. Vis. 1.1.4-5; 2.2). He reports a vision of maidens—subsequently allegorized as virtues*—building the church of Christ, represented as a tower (Herm. Man. 9.2-13). The scene is painted upon the ceiling of one of the chambers in the San Gennaro dei Poveri Catacomb in Naples, an indication not only of the local acceptance of the canonicity of Hermas but also of the strong ministry of women in southern Italy. That women should be forceful builders and teachers can be readily understood in an area that had been dominated by the Sibyl of Cumae. Here and elsewhere the sibyl was replaced in Christianity by the woman prophet.

2. Paul's Ministry Among Women in Acts.

Luke particularly noted the response of women to the apostle Paul. Upon his arrival at Antioch of Pisidia, he was welcomed into the synagogue* and encouraged to return the next sabbath (Acts 13). The congregation, composed of Jews, proselytes and God-fearers, took offense at the disruptive behavior of the Gentiles* who attended the worship* service on the succeeding sabbath. Those who were accustomed to worshiping in the orderly Hebrew fashion were angered at the ochlos of the heathen. (The Greek term can be used both for a crowd and for the disorderly behavior of which it is capable; see Acts 19:26; 24:12.) The well-bred women (euschēmonai) who participated in the sober life of the synagogue were particularly incensed, perhaps by the conduct of the heathen women, and insisted upon Paul's expulsion from the city (Acts 13:50).

Repugnance for the outrageous and abandoned worship patterns of non-Jewish women was a familiar literary and artistic theme (e.g., Juvenal Sat. 6; Plutarch Mul. Virt. 13, Mor.; Diodorus Siculus 4.3.2) Drunkenness, indecent and destructive conduct, obscenity, nudity, promiscuity, and ritual cries were significant components in their cults. Some of these elements are well illustrated in the famous fresco of a Dionysiac initiation at the Villa of the Mysteries in Pompeii. In certain ecstatic religions of the area (see 1 Cor 12:2), women engaged in the tearing apart of young animals and consuming of the flesh while it was still raw, warm and quivering. It would be exceedingly difficult to incorporate such individuals into a worshiping community without seriously affronting the sensibilities of others.

At the end of Paul's first missionary journey, he and Barnabas are summoned to Jerusalem* to determine how Gentiles might be integrated into faith communities composed largely of Jews and proselytes. Certain practices are proscribed, especially idolatry,* immorality and the consumption of blood (Acts 15:20, 29). Armed with these interdictions, Paul returns to all of the churches visited on the first journey and explains the decision of the Jerusalem council (Acts 15:36). Thereafter he is highly successful with the very sort of well-bred women who objected so vehemently to his missionary endeavors in Antioch of Pisidia. His first contact in Philippi is mainly feminine, and Lydia, the first convert, becomes the leader of a house church (Acts 16:12-15, 40). Although Paul has received a vision* of a man from Macedonia calling him to move in a new direction, the first objects of his ministry are women.

Prominent Hellenistic women receive Paul's message gladly in Thessalonica (Acts 17:4) and in Berea, where the response of the women is noted before that of the men (Acts 17:12). In Athens, the intellectual center of the ancient world, a woman named Damaris is converted. She was probably one of the highly cultured courtesans (hetairai) attached to the various schools of philosophy, but her presence in the academic circle of the Areopagus indicates that she was well equipped to follow Paul's argument and to draw her own conclusions (Acts 17:34).

3. Priscilla: A Test Case.

In Acts 18 we first encounter Priscilla, a major woman associate of the apostle Paul and a strong proponent of the gospel in her own right. Married to a Jew from Pontus in Asia Minor, she is apparently a native of Rome, from whence the couple were driven by persecution under the emperor Claudius. The name Aquila, though sometimes borne by citizens of Rome, was more commonly a slave name and may indicate that he was an enterprising freedman. "Priscilla" was a name more frequently given to patrician women, perhaps denoting non-Jewish birth and a higher social status.

Husband and wife received the apostle Paul into their home, their business operation (that of tent making) and into Christian fellowship* and ministry. They may well have extended their hospitality to Timothy and Silas as well (Acts 18:5). Priscilla and Aquila's mobility in missionary travel may indicate that they owned a string of family enterprises at Rome (Acts 18:2; Rom 16:3-5), Corinth (Acts 18:2), Ephesus (Acts 18:18-19) and perhaps other points as well. Such branch businesses at far-flung locations are well documented in the ancient world.

At the end of Paul's first visit to Corinth, Priscilla and Aquila accompany the apostle on his journey to Ephesus. The text here places Priscilla's name before that of her husband (Acts 18:18, as well as at Acts 18:26; Rom 16:3; 2 Tim 4:19), apparently indicating that her ministry and influence are more forceful than his. After Paul's departure, Priscilla and Aquila encounter in the synagogue Apollos, a brilliant Jewish thinker whose knowledge of the gospel is incomplete, despite a powerful command of the Scriptures. Again Priscilla's name stands first as the couple take him aside, perhaps actually into their home for a season, in order to give him the instruction he lacks. The term expounded (exethento) implies a careful examination of the Scriptures (compare the use of this same verb in Acts 11:4 and Acts 28:23). Though Apollos's basic understanding was adequate, a more complete level of instruction is supplied by the highly capable Priscilla and her husband.

Apparently Priscilla was possessed of a fine mind and an excellent education in order to have so impacted the learned Apollos. Thereafter he was able to "debate daily with the Jews, powerfully demonstrating from the Scriptures that Jesus was indeed the Christ" (Acts 18:28). For this reason Chrysostom dubbed Priscilla "a teacher of teachers," noting that she did the same evangelistic work as her husband (PG 60.281D) and recognizing in her a greater zeal (PG 62.658A; 51.187).

When Apollos wished to continue his evangelistic outreach in Greece, the Ephesian believers, among whom Priscilla and Aquila were foremost, furnished him with letters of recommendation. The reception that he was accorded is surely an indication of the confidence that the Christian community reposed in Priscilla and Aquila. They were apparently well known and revered throughout the Pauline world as "fellow laborers" who had risked their lives for the sake of the apostle (Rom 16:3-4).

A. von Harnack was one of the first to suggest that Priscilla and Aquila might be the authors of the epistle to the Hebrews,* a suggestion that found support from J. H. Moulton, F. M. Schiele, A. S. Peake, J. R. Harris and others. Harnack reasoned that if Priscilla were perceived as the primary author, there might be a tendency to suppress this fact. As indicative of scribal prejudice against women, he cites Codex Bezae's elimination of the conversion of Damaris in Acts 17:34 and its change of "not a few of the honorable Greek women and men" (Acts 17:12) to "of the Greeks and the honorable. many men and women." Codex Bezae also reverses the order of Acts 17:4, placing the mention of the men before that of the women. In such a climate the ascription of a woman author might well disappear from sight.

Although the letter* bears unmistakable signs of close association with Paul, it is not by the apostle himself and is a document in the NT to which no authorship is ascribed. The writer belongs to Paul's inner circle and enjoys a relationship of collegiality with Timothy (Heb 13:23). He or she had not known Jesus but rather received his teachings from others with direct experience (Heb 2:3). The apostolic tone bespeaks the level of influence and authority* wielded by the composer of the epistle (Heb 13:17-23).

The writing team or person was familiar with the persecutions that had been experienced in Rome and was demonstrably influenced by the thought of Philo* of Alexandria,* the Jewish philosopher who had visited Rome in A.D. 40. Priscilla and Aquila would be the Pauline associates most likely to have gained a familiarity with Philo.

The authors had been leaders in the community addressed by the letter and possessed an intimate knowledge of its members' lack of spiritual maturity (Heb 5:11-12). Steeped in Jewish Scriptures, they write of the ritual of the tabernacle* but give no hint of an acquaintance with temple* procedure. A Jew who had visited Jerusalem would almost inevitably have included allusions to temple practice. Priscilla and Aquila are unusual among Paul's coterie in never being recorded as traveling to Jerusalem.

Harnack observed that the author or authors move easily from a first person singular to first person plural in a manner that may suggest a team effort rather than the work of a single individual. The use of a masculine singular to refer to the writer at Hebrews 11:32 may indicate male input, while the marked sympathy for women may point toward the interests of Priscilla (Heb 11:11, 31, 35). In contrast to the reference in Genesis to Sarah's laughter of unbelief at the promise* of a son in her old age (Gen 18:11-15), the account in Hebrews emphasizes her faith as she faced the challenges of conception, gestation and birth (Heb 11:11). The record in Exodus described the activities of the mother of Moses* in concealing his birth and preserving his life (Exod 2:2-9), but here the parental action of both husband and wife is noted (Heb 11:23). Priscilla might well have empathized with the faith of a non-Jewish woman, Rahab, as she exercised the ministry of hospitality to the people of God (Heb 11:31). Harnack's theory cannot be substantiated but is worthy of respectful consideration.

4. Women in Prophetic Ministry.

Women are full recipients at the outpouring of the Holy Spirit* (Acts 2:37-38) at Pentecost* as foretold by the prophet* Joel. His promise that "your daughters shall prophesy" (Joel 2:28-32) is fulfilled in the ministry of Philip* the Evangelist's prophesying daughters as reported in the account of the apostle Paul's visit to their home (Acts 21:8-9). Later tradition maintained that Philip journeyed with his daughters to Hierapolis, where he engaged in evangelistic endeavors that led ultimately to his martyrdom.* The daughters continued in ministry, two of them being buried at Hierapolis. According to Papias, these women collected traditions about the life of Christ, and Papias maintains that his own knowledge of two Gospel events derived from these women (Eusebius Hist. Eccl. 3.31, 37, 39).

Besides the women prophets at Corinth (see Wire), another female prophet was based in Asia Minor, a citizen of Thyatira. Her teachings are regarded as erroneous (Rev 2:14). Significantly she was condemned not for her gender but for the harm she caused. Like the Nicolaitans of Pergamum (Rev 2:14-15), she instructed her followers to eat meat offered to idols and to practice ritual fornication (Rev 2:20). Her doctrines were regarded as "the deep things of Satan" (Rev 2:24) and were perhaps an early form of gnostic* Ophitism. She was threatened with retribution for her lack of chastity (Rev 2:22-23) and for the misleading of God's people. Perhaps as early as the mid-second century, Montanist women in Phrygian Asia Minor were to take up this tradition of prophesying. As support for their ministry, they claimed the precedent of Deborah, Huldah, Anna, the daughters of Philip and an unknown prophet named Ammia.

5. Women in Evangelistic Traditions.

Among the nonbiblical traditions preserved of the apostles, few are better attested than that of Paul's empowerment of women in ministry. Before his call to the church of Antioch,* he appears to have engaged in widespread evangelism in Asia Minor (Acts 11:25-26; 15:41). Consistent with Paul's designation of seven women as his fellow laborers (Rom 16;3, 6, 12, 16; Phil 4:2-3) are later accounts of women established in ministry. Pliny the Younger, writing from Asia Minor to the emperor Trajan in A.D. 112, tells of interrogating two leaders of the Christian community, slave women called ministrae ("deacons" or "ministers"; Pliny Ep. 96—97).

The most interesting story, however, is that of Paul's commissioning his young convert Thecla to become an apostle to Seleucia, close to his native city of Tarsus. Her story is contained in The Acts of Paul and Thecla, a composition usually placed in the mid-second century (MacDonald). W. M. Ramsay, however, insisted that the work "goes back ultimately to a document from the first century" (Ramsay, 375-76), though embellished with later accretions. As he saw it, at least some of the features necessitated an intimate knowledge of a first-century environment and threw "light on the character of popular Christianity in Asia Minor during the period" (Ramsey, 403).

The site of her ministry (Aya Theckla), one of the best attested in Christian antiquity (Festugière, 21-22), was continuously occupied as a place of pilgrimage and monastic community until the Turkish invasion in the fifteenth century. Part of the apse still stands above the great sanctuary built over the original cave where she established her ministry. The little underground chapel adjoining the cave bears evidence of masonry dating to the first century (Herzfeld and Euyer). The consistent attachment to the site of the same feminine name indicates the involvement of a strong woman leader in the early christianization of Seleucia.

6. Women as Leaders of House Churches.

From the biblical texts we know the names of female leaders more often than we know the names of male leaders of house churches. Women who exercised the grace of hospitality received into their homes both traveling missionaries and those seeking a place of Christian worship and fellowship. The mother of John Mark, a widow, opened her doors to a prayer* meeting even in the danger-filled atmosphere of Jerusalem as the execution of Peter was expected the next day. The practice of assembling there must have been a regular one, for Peter threaded his way to her house after his miraculous release from prison (Acts 12:5-17). The gatekeeper, a trusted slave woman named Rhoda, recognized his voice and ran to the others for permission to allow him to enter. Although the participants at the prayer meeting initially challenged the credibility of her story, she remained steadfast in the midst of their opposition. At Rhoda's insistence the door is opened, Peter received and the slave woman vindicated. Her critically responsible position as guardian of the gate during a time of intense persecution bespeaks her importance to the Christian community and its confidence in her. Through this house church, whose leaders are Mary and Rhoda, Peter sends his message to the believers of Jerusalem (Acts 12:17).

The home of Lydia, the first European convert, becomes the center of the nascent Christian community in Philippi; and it is here that Paul and Silas repair after their release from prison. B. Witherington observes, "At the two points in Acts where Luke clearly tells us of a church meeting in a particular person's home, it is in the home of a woman" (Witherington 1990, 213). We read also of house churches in the homes of Chloe, Nympha, and Priscilla and Aquila (Col 4:15; 1 Cor 1:11; 16:19; Rom 16:3-5). Women with enough space in their homes (see Architecture) thus provided a needed function both in their hospitality and in caring for the congregational life that developed in their homes.

In the case of Lydia, her workroom as well as her house may have served the purposes of the gospel. Like Priscilla, she was involved in the textile industry and operated a business, manufacturing coveted purple cloth. We are specifically told that all of her household* were baptized (see Baptism), including her domestic staff. The women's workroom, as well as the house, offered prime opportunities for the propagation of the gospel in the early centuries of the church (den Boer).

The Johannine epistles (see John, Letters of) reveal the importance of the hospitality extended by influential Christians to traveling missionaries and evangelists who might bring both spoken and written messages (3 Jn 5-10; see also Did. 11—12; Rom 12:13; 1 Pet 4:9; Heb 13:2). Leaders of a house church in a community might control the purity of the gospel message by their selection of appropriate emissaries to receive into their homes (3 Jn 8). To welcome in a false teacher imperiled the spiritual life of the entire believing community (2 Jn 10-11).

Thus house churches became the fundamental bases for the furtherance of the gospel in their respective communities, with the hosts becoming "fellow laborers" (3 Jn 8). D. W. Riddle has suggested that not only did these leaders further the spread of the kingdom but also these households served as collecting stations for oral and written traditions that would later be preserved in the writings of the NT. The role of women leaders of house churches is thus far more significant than might appear at first glance.

Although the majority of biblical scholars have maintained that the "elect lady" to whom 2 John is addressed represents a church rather than an individual, a few are of the opinion that a specific woman is addressed (A. T. Robertson, A. Clarke, A. Plummer, C. C. Ryrie, A. Ross, D. W. Burdick). If that is the case, she must have been a leader of a house church somewhere near Ephesus. It is her duty to defend her children against heresy. Her appellation, Kyria Eklektē, is ordinarily translated "elect lady," though Kuria was a proper name attested in Asia Minor, actually a Greek rendering of the Aramaic "Martha" (Harris). The text of 2 John also contains greeting from an "elect sister" who sends greetings along with her children (2 Jn 13), either a sister congregation or another woman leader of a house church. A. Spencer points out that an entire congregation cannot be addressed as both the lady and her children (Spencer, 110-11). In 1 John and 3 John, the children represent the flock while the leaders are indicated as separate individuals.

7. Widows and Disenfranchised Women. Throughout Luke-Acts disadvantaged women are shown a special sympathy, so that Paul heals a deranged slave woman at the risk of his own safety (Acts 16:16-24). Several slave women are given positions of particular responsibility in the nascent church: Rhoda is doorkeeper of a house church, and two slave women of Bithynia are leaders of the Christian community and are specifically called ministers or deaconesses. As required by Roman law in the case of slaves, their testimony is obtained under torture and vindicates the harmless nature of Christian worship (Pliny Ep. 96).

A particular sensitivity is demonstrated toward widows or those suffering deprivation. Aware that widows of Hellenistic Jews are receiving less help than those of Palestinian background, the leaders of the early church form an order of deacons to insure an equitable distribution (Acts 6:1-6; cf. Mk 12:40; Lk 18:2-5). Dorcas's ministry is specifically said to have extended to widows, who were welded into a responsive and godly fellowship of caring (Acts 9:36-41; for the view that Dorcas was the leader of an order of widows, see Viteau; Parvey, 145).

James* the brother of Jesus enjoins upon believers a concern for widows (Jas 1:27), while the first epistle to Timothy provides these bereaved women with rules of conduct as well as legitimation and empowerment for an organized ministry of outreach and intercession (2 Tim 5:3-16). Ignatius begs Polycarp* to take special care of widows and to assume their guardianship (Ign. Pol. 4). Ecclesial widows were supported by the gifts of church members in return for their spiritual and social services. Polycarp recognizes their presence in the Philippian congregation (Pol. Phil. 6.1) and provides instructions for the proper attitude and deportment in the fulfillment of their duties. They were to be discreet, to avoid tale bearing, spite, gossip, greed and false allegations. Rather they were to give themselves to constant prayer for everyone because "they are an altar of God" (Pol. Phil. 4).

Ignatius* of Antioch appears to be addressing women belonging to a definite office when he writes to "virgins who are called widows" (Ign. Smyrn. 13.1). Witherington suggests that "widow" became a technical term for "all unmarried women dedicated to chastity and the Lord's work, including those who have never been married" (Witherington 1988, 201; see also Stählin, 9:451). Grapte was to give the widows special instruction about the message of Hermas (Herm. Vis. 2.8.3.), while Hermas is to give himself to the care of widows and orphans (Herm. Man. 8.10). Especially in the East, widows would later become a part of the ordained clergy, attached to local churches and committed to a ministry of prayer and good works.

8. Married and Unmarried Women.

The marital status of women is of considerable interest to the writers of the early Christian literature. Married women appear in Acts as fully mature persons, required to take responsibility for their own actions. Sapphira is held accountable along with her husband for the deception that they conspire to perpetrate (Acts 5:1-10). Priscilla participates equally in the leadership and exercise of the ministry that she shares with her husband. Even the Herodian queens listen to Paul's message with interest (Acts 24:24; 25:13, 23; 26:20). Though viewed in secular historical sources as concubines and oft-married pawns of power-hungry rulers, they appear in Acts as persons of power and integrity, capable of making their own moral and spiritual decisions.

As Jesus had warned (Mt 10:35-36; Lk 14:26), embracing the new faith did not always make for harmonious family relations, though sometimes it strengthened the bonds. Domitilla, the niece of the emperor Domitian (reigned 81-96), was exiled; her husband, also apparently a Christian, was executed (Suetonius Dom. 10.15.17; Dio Cassius Hist. 67.14). Justin Martyr (Justin Apol II 2) tells of a woman whose profligate husband denounced her as a Christian and secured the punishment of her instructor.

Virginity in dedicated women commands a special respect. The four prophesying daughters of Philip were virgins, while the widow Anna, the sole prophet on hand to proclaim the birth of the Messiah, had lived all but seven years of her life as a celibate. Thecla, convert and follower of the apostle Paul, made celibacy a condition of her apostolic calling. Such tendencies are precursors of the asceticism that was later to pervade the early church.

The Shepherd of Hermas displays a knowledge of a practice known as syneisakatism, the living together of a man with a woman "as brother and not as husband" (Herm. Sim. 9.11.3; cf. Herm. Vis. 1.7.2). Though they might occupy the same bed as the man, the women (called subintroductae or agapētai) were ostensibly virgins, committed to gospel ministry. The apostle Paul may refer to this arrangement when he speaks of the virgin who is free to serve Christ rather than her husband and of the man who "keeps his virgin" (1 Cor 7:34-37). One advantage of such a "spiritual marriage" was that it afforded material security, male protection and freedom from marital responsibility to a single woman intent on Christian service (McNamara).

According to a tradition known to Clement of Alexandria, the wives of the early apostles accompanied them in their travels in order to spread the gospel more effectively (Clement of Alexandria Strom. 3.6; cf. Ambrosiaster PL 17, c496). An indication of this shared ministry may be found in the declaration of 1 Peter 5:13, "the fellow elect lady who is in Babylon greets you along with Mark my son."

While some scholars have suggested that the allusion is a personification of an entire congregation, it does not seem congruent in juxtaposition with the direct mention of Mark, who is attending Peter in Rome. It was Mark who had duly recorded the fact of the apostle's marriage in the Gospel that bears his name (Mk 1:29-31). Since "Babylon" was a widely used code name for Rome, J. A. Bengel, E. T. Mayerhoff, K. R. Jachmann, H. Alford, A. T. Robertson and others suggest that this may be a reference to Peter's wife, who is known to have journeyed with him in his missionary travels (1 Cor 9:5). Clement of Alexandria even preserved an account of the encouragement that Peter offered her as she was led to a martyr's death (Clement of Alexandria Strom. 7.11.63). C. Bigg observed that it would be natural for a woman who had shared in her husband's ministry to wish to send her own greeting to churches that she too had served in the gospel. He finds Peter's inclusion of a message from his wife "a noble and distinctive feature of St. Peter's character and . . . a touch of nature which speaks strongly in favour of the genuineness of the Epistle" (Bigg, 77).

Like Sarah as she forsook a settled existence for a life of wanderings (1 Pet 3:6), Peter's spouse persevered as a steadfast companion to found a new community with a new and living faith. Men and women throughout the Roman empire* faced this same challenge when they embraced Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord* of their lives and became indeed "children of Sarah."

See also WOMAN AND MAN.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. C. Bigg, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Epistles of St. Peter and St. Jude (ICC; Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1961); W. den Boer, "Gynaeconitis, a Center of Christian Propaganda," VC 4 (1950) 61-64; A. J. Festugière, Sainte Thècle, saints Côme et Damien, saints Cyr et Jean [extraits] saint George (Paris: A. and J. Picard, 1971); R. Gryson, The Ministry of Women in the Early Church (Collegeville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1976); A. von Harnack, "Probability About the Address and Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews" in The Bible Status of Woman, ed. L. A. Starr (New York: Revell, 1926) 394-414; R. Harris, "The Problem of the Address in the Second Epistle of John," Expositor (1901) 194-203; E. E. Herzfeld and S. Euyer, Miriamlik und Korkyos: zwei christliche Ruinenstätten des Ruhen Kilikiens (MAMA 2; Manchester: Manchester University Press, 1930); D. R. MacDonald, The Legend and the Apostle: The Battle for Paul in Story and in Canon (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1983); M. L. McKenna, Women of the Church: Role and Renewal (New York: P. J. Kennedy and Sons, 1967); J. A. McNamara, A New Song: Celibate Women in the First Three Christian Centuries (New York: Harrington Park Press, 1985); W. M. Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire Before A.D. 170 (London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1893); D. W. Riddle, "Early Christian Hospitality: A Factor in the Gospel Transmission," JBL 57 (1938) 141-54; A. B. Spencer, Beyond the Curse: Women Called to Ministry (Nashville: Thomas Nelson, 1985); G. Stählin, "χήρα," TDNT 9:40-65; J. Viteau, "L'institution des diacres et des veuves—Actes 6:1-10, 8:4-40, 21:8," RHE 22 (1926) 532-36; A. Wire, The Corinthian Women Prophets: A Reconstruction Through Paul's Rhetoric (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress, 1990); B. Witherington III, Women and the Genesis of Christianity (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1990); idem, Women in the Earliest Churches (SNTSMS 59; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1988).

C. C. Kroeger

WORKS. See FAITH AND WORKS.

WORLD

The "world" (kosmos) is used in three main ways in the later NT: spatially, temporally and anthropologically. Spatially "world" is used to refer to the created order, the earth or the earth's inhabitants. Temporally "world" refers to the inception of creation* or of the age of creation or to contrast this life with the next. Anthropologically "world" includes all people at enmity with God* and is often used in a sharp contrast between the things and people who belong to God and the things and people who belong to "this world." All of these uses are carried forward in the writings of the early church fathers.

1. Spatial Concept
2. Temporal Concept
3. Anthropological Concept

1. Spatial Concept.

As we might expect from the English use of the word, "world" is used in various places in the later NT and early church fathers (see Apostolic Fathers) to refer to the created order. For example, God "made the world and everything in it" (Acts 17:24; cf. 1 Clem. 19.2; 38.3; 60.1). God's judgment* of the creation in the flood narrative is what is meant by "world" in 2 Peter 3:6 (cf. Heb 10:5; 11:7, 38; 1 Pet 5:9). Sometimes "world" is used inclusively to encompass the entire universe, or sometimes it is used in a more specific way to designate the earth and its inhabitants, a usage continued in the early church fathers (1 Clem. 5.7; 7.4; 9.4; 20.8; 28.2; 59.2; Barn. 4.12; 5.5; 21.5).

2. Temporal Concept.

"World" can also be used temporally in one of two ways. In the commonly used phrase "foundation of the world" it refers to the time before creation began. "World" is also use eschatologically* to contrast this age with the next.

2.1. "Foundation of the World." This common phrase in the later NT refers to the completion of God's act of creation in which his "works were finished from the foundation of the world" (Heb 4:3; cf. Barn. 5.5). The foundation of a building determines the structure and limits of the edifice erected upon it. So it is also with the world's foundation. This was the time when God set history on its course and when the plan of salvation* through Christ* was conceived, since he was "destined" to be the redeemer "before the foundation of the world" (1 Pet 1:20; Jn 17:24). Even the elect* are somehow distinguishable from this critical moment in time, their names "written before the foundation of the world in the book of life of the Lamb that was slain" (Rev 13:8; cf. Rev 17:8; see Lamb).

2.2. Eschatological Usage. James* poses the rhetorical question, "Has not God chosen those who are poor in the world to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom that he has promised to those who love him?" (Jas 2:5). Here "the world" is synonymous with "this life" in contrast to the next, where true wealth is found. Hebrews* may contain a passage with this same sense of the term. The roll call in Hebrews 11 lists some of the faith's heroes and heroines, who are said to have achieved their eschatological reward.* Their mistreatment when they were alive shows that this age did not deserve those "of whom the world was not worthy" (Heb 11:38). 2 Peter* makes escape from the defilement of this age a goal of the Christian life, for the author prays that believers "may escape from the corruption that is in the world" (2 Pet 1:4). This eschatological usage is virtually the only employment of the term world found in the *Didache (Did. 10.6; 16.8) and 2 Clement (2 Clem. 5.1, 5; 8.2-3; 19.3; see Clement of Rome) and is one way "world" is used by Ignatius* (Ign. Rom. 2.2; 3.2; 4.2) and in the *Epistle of Barnabas (Barn. 10.11; 15.8).

3. Anthropological Concept.

3.1. The World at Enmity with God. The most common usage of "world" in James, 2 Peter and 1 John is to identify people at enmity with God, those who oppose God's will and purpose: "Do you not know that friendship with the world is enmity with God?" (Jas 4:4). Therefore a Christian is "to keep oneself unstained from the world" (Jas 1:27). 2 Peter describes the world as the place where antagonism toward God dwells, incurring "defilements" that need to be escaped (2 Pet 2:20; cf. Pol. Phil. 5.3; Ign. Rom. 3.3; 7.1).

3.2. The World in Johannine Literature. In 1 John (see John, Letters of) and John's Gospel, where more than half of the occurrences of kosmos in the NT occur, the focus is no longer on the world perceived as creation, but now the emphasis lies upon the world as people who have turned away from God to deceit and delusion (see DJG, World). 1 John depicts a sharp dichotomy between two sides, the world's and God's. The two are diametrically opposed, and his auditors must choose between the world and God. The world is considered apostate* from God, and the whole point of John's rhetoric is to urge full loyalty to God: "We know that we are of God, and the whole world is in the power of the evil one" (1 Jn 5:19); "they are of the world, therefore what they say is of the world and the world listens to them" (1 Jn 4:5). The believer is not to "love the world or the things in the world. If anyone loves the world, love for the Father is not in him" (1 Jn 2:15). Because the things of God and the people of God are in sharp opposition with the world, believers are not to be perplexed that the world "hates" them (1 Jn 3:13). Sinfulness originates from and belongs to this world and is to be avoided (1 Jn 2:16-17; cf. 1 Jn 4:3-5, 9). Similarly Ignatius sharply exhorts, "Do not talk about Jesus Christ while you desire the world" (Ign. Rom. 7.1).

Even though the world is characterized in so many negative ways in the Johannine writings, there is hope for it because Christ was sent "as the savior of the world" (1 Jn 4:14), and whoever has faith* in him will be victorious in overcoming the opposition of the world (1 Jn 5:4-5). It is worthwhile to compare this distinctive emphasis with the Fourth Gospel's characterization of the world as a place under God's mercy* (e.g., Jn 3:16-17; 12:47), though still in opposition to the truth* (Jn 15:18-19), and Johannine believers are rescued "from the world"

(Jn 17:6; cf. Jn 17:11) to which they are sent back (Jn 17:18). 1 John uses "world" sometimes in a sense that encompasses the entire sphere of people outside the church. This is how false teachers can be identified: they no longer side with the church but "have gone out into the world" (1 Jn 4:1). Since they are "of the world" they no longer should be heeded or trusted (1 Jn 4:5; cf. 2 Jn 7).

See also CREATION, COSMOLOGY; ESCHATOLOGY; HEAVEN, NEW HEAVEN; JOHN, LETTERS OF; KINGDOM OF GOD; SIN, WICKEDNESS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco, TX: Word, 1983); R. E. Brown, The Epistles of John (AB; Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1982); R. Bultmann, The Johannine Epistles (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1973); idem, Theology of the New Testament (2 vols.; New York: Scribners, 1951, 1955); J. Schneider, Church and World in the New Testament (Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1983). B. J. Dodd

WORSHIP AND LITURGY

1. Encouragements and Cautions
2. Method and Approaches
3. Paul and the Pauline Legacy
4. Evidence from Syria-Palestine
5. The Rome-Asia Minor Axis
6. Johannine Patterns and their Influence
7. Some Conclusions

1. Encouragements and Cautions.

What could be said of worship as it may be understood from the evidence of the Pauline literature (see DPL, Worship) is equally valid in reference to the non-Pauline literature. That is, based on the traditions of belief and praxis inherited from Judaism,* Christian understanding and praise of God* expressed itself in acknowledging him as Creator and Redeemer.* God is still hailed as the sovereign Lord whose fiat brought the world into existence (Heb 11:3; Rev 4:11) through the mediation of the cosmic Christ* (Heb 1:2; John 1:3) and by whose will the creation* is sustained (Rev 4:11; cf. Col 1:15-18). The same God has acted savingly in the coming of Christ to rescue and restore the lost creation. Revelation 5:9-14 expresses this jubilation in lyric form, while the cosmic backdrop of the new age Christ has inaugurated is seen in Ignatius's* "song of the star" (Ign. Eph. 19.1-3; on this text as a Christ-hymn see Lohmeyer, 64; with further comment in Martin 1997, 10-13). In a crisp, creedal* formulary, the incarnational-redemptive tag is given in 1 Peter 1:20 in a context of Christ's sacrifice* (1 Pet 1:18-19) and victory (1 Pet 3:21-22). Praise is thus directed to Israel's God, known as the Father of Jesus Christ (1 Pet 1:3) and the Father of those whose trust is in him (1 Pet 1:17; Heb 2:10-13; 1 Jn 1:3; 2:1, 13; 3:1) and who are part of the new creation that celebrates his grace* (Jas 1:18) in hymns* and in worship speech and acts (Rev 1:12-18; 19:10; 22:8-9; for such texts that forbid worship when angelomorphic beings were regarded as rivals to the one God, see L. T. Stuckenbruch).

Just as scholars, by applying form-critical methods to the Pauline letters, have identified several passages as liturgical (see DPL, Liturgical Elements), so by means of these same techniques parts of 1 Peter,* Hebrews,* James* and Revelation* have been treated as embodying worship forms and fragments (see Liturgical Elements; Hymns). Indeed, theories that have tried to understand whole NT books as emanating from a liturgical setting and incorporating rudimentary service directives have been proposed. This has tended to bring the entire approach into disrepute, with accusations of "pan-liturgism," that is, the misplaced confidence of being able to "detect reverberations of liturgy in the New Testament even where no liturgical note was originally struck" (Moule 1961, 7; cf. Dunn, 1990, §36). One notable example will illustrate the danger. Reasoning back from the Passover celebration which may underlie Hippolytus's order in the Apostolic Tradition (c. A.D. 215, at Rome), M. H. Shepherd (1960) proposed that the parallel structure he perceived in Revelation contained the framework of a fully developed baptismal liturgy, made up of interrogations; preparatory fastings, leading to the initiation itself; lessons from the Law, the Prophets and Gospel, with psalmody and a baptismal Eucharist. Aside from the debated issue of whether all these elements of worship are seen in Hippolytus, it raises much skepticism to think that the entire Apocalypse is a virtual transcript of a Paschal initiation rite, composed as a running commentary on what was happening liturgically. Much the same can be said for F. L. Cross's equally imaginative reconstruction of the scenario behind 1 Peter* as a baptismal liturgy.

To remain unconvinced by these somewhat outlandish proposals, which have not withstood critical scrutiny, however, does not cast doubt on the more reasoned bids to discover snatches of hymnic and confessional forms, baptismal images and reminders, Eucharistic prayers and catechetical instructions in several places of the NT corpus (see Liturgical Elements). Alert to the dangers of seeing liturgical data everywhere, we are not precluded from investigating the literary, stylistic and contextual shape of the passages under review with a view to placing them in a suitable Sitz im Leben of the churches' worshiping life and practice, if that placement throws light on their origin and gives an extra dimension to their point.

Two other considerations, moreover, pose a warning as we seek to deduce what worship was like in the congregations reflected in our texts. One is the temptation to harmonize. In the case of the Pauline materials, the task of constructing a picture of the worshiping life of his communities was not hampered by an impossible diversity. Churches on the Pauline foundation, while different in cultural background and outlook and facing several problems, were at least kept together by their common allegiance to Paul and his colleagues and belonged together as a corpus within a manageable time frame. The biblical books under review in this article have no such unifying thread and represent a wide spectrum of diverse cultures, interests, compositions and challenges, to say nothing of the multiform nature of the literature in its genre (Acts, epistles, apocalypse) we are seeking to encompass. Given these inconcinnities, to collate the worship styles and practices with their meanings across such a wide terrain into an intelligible picture is almost an impossible venture; and to seek to harmonize the different features and findings so as to yield a common pattern is to run the risk of a false harmonization which will only distort the evidence and give a wrong impression. When we attempt a summing up, this caveat will need to be borne in mind and a question-mark will need to be reasserted against those attempts to find in too detailed a way a basic liturgical unity within the late apostolic period (see Cullmann, 7-36; Bradshaw 1992, 37).

The other pitfall is that mentioned in Bradshaw's handbook, The Search for the Origins of Christian Worship (1992), which by its title confesses to the tentative nature of any reconstructions of early worship and the danger of reading back from the later liturgies the evidence that all too easily we profess to find in the earlier (NT) documents. This method was the outstanding feature of H. Lietzmann's celebrated monograph, Mass and Lord's Supper (ET 1953, 1978), which sought to work backward from the service books and later manuals to the more fragmentary and disputed data. As a technique this may be defended, but it exposes the readers to a false impression that Christian worship developed in a linear fashion, and that we can trace the lines of development with unbounded confidence.

2. Method and Approaches.

The merit, however, of Lietzmann's approach was that it gave due respect to the origins of worship patterns in the differing geographical areas from which such service books came, using a technique that W. Bauer also employed in the same period as Lietzmann's work appeared (Bauer in 1934; Lietzmann's Messe und Herrenmahl in 1926). While the Bauer-Lietzmann approach is open to criticism in several of its aspects (see Turner, T. A. Robinson), there is less criticism when a similar appreciation of geographical spread is seen to underlie B. H. Streeter's works. There is no denying that early Christianity expanded across key areas of the ancient world from the Syrian Levant (see Syria, Syrian Christianity) to centers and hinterlands of the Greco-Roman provinces, including Rome itself (see Rome, Roman Christianity; Alexandria, Alexandrian Christianity; Centers of Christianity).

Equally it is true that the configurations of Christian life and worship, along with the more important aspects of belief and praxis, changed according to the places that spawned the literature emanating from such regions. Granted that in several cases the tie-in between location and literature is problematic, and we have to rest content with informed guesswork and sometimes speculation, yet it is undeniable that the pluriformity of expression of both teaching and expected life-style represented in the documents of the later NT and its developments into the so-called apostolic fathers is an attested reality. It provides a suitable framework for the evolution of worship styles and practices. The close connectedness of belief and worship, incidentally, is now an obvious datum on the principle lex orandi, lex credendi (how a person prays is an expression of that person's beliefs). The data will amply illustrate this linkage as we proceed to pass the evidence under review according to hypothetical geographical stemma.

The functionality of this approach will, we hope, be clear, and its serviceability seen in that it obviates the more simplistic way of treating the NT books seriatim and/or in canonical sequence. An alterative approach might have been to follow the lead of Koester and Robinson with their proposed trajectories or lines of development as we pass each aspect of worship practices under review and observe, for example, how baptism* was understood from its chronological beginnings in the post-Pentecost church(es) to the second-century congregations of Ignatius, Justin and the Marcionite* conventicles. This method might well have served the readers' interests, were it not for the possible misleading impression it would give that early liturgical observances developed in a system of end-on evolution. The truth rather is that often the local conditions that emerged in distinct and distinctive regions provided pressure points that shaped the growth or malformation of worship no less than the rise of "heresy and orthodoxy." This was the case until what emerged as "normative Christianity" (to use Hultgren's nomenclature) began to be dominant and was seen to be so in light of the embryonic creedal statements embodied in the traditions and the regula fidei from the mid-second or late-second century onward. In each case the items cherished as "normative" took shape within the setting of the cultural climate of the place on the map as well as under the constraints of local problems and their solutions.

3. The Pauline Legacy.

The contributions to the topic that stemmed from Paul's correspondence with his congregations have been noted elsewhere (see DPL, Worship). In summary, these distinctives were related to the need to regulate the use of spiritual gifts in a situation (such as Corinth) which had become chaotic and unbridled. Paul's response is given in terms of a practical reiteration of the tension between the already and the not-yet elements in Christian salvation. Believers are now in God's realm where Christ's lordship is acknowledged in worship (1 Cor 12:3). Yet the fullness of their redemption is set in the future, at the Parousia when God's final kingdom will be established (1 Cor 15:28). The worship cry, "God is really here" (1 Cor 14:25) needs to be heard in this context, uniting both the reality of present salvation and its necessary futurity at the end time, which will usher in the resurrection of the dead (1 Cor 15:42). In the interim of the church's life "between the times," the emphases Paul makes are in terms of an exercise of love and thankfulness for God's acts in Christ and the altruistic call to build up the body of believers (1 Cor 14:3, 12, 17, 26; 1 Cor 12:7).

These same emphases, boldly remarked in his Corinthian correspondence, come over into Paul's later writings, whether treated as his final reflections from a Roman near the end of his days or as the legacy he bequeathed to his followers who published letters to churches that claimed to be on a Pauline foundation, at Colossae, Ephesus and its environs (see Pauline Legacy/School). As might well be expected, there are fresh emphases since new situations have emerged. In particular the need to consolidate the church, now dubbed "the pillar and bulwark of the truth" (1 Tim 3:15), is evident in the face of new doctrines, and its witness needs to be safeguarded against false teachers who deny the (future) resurrection. So in baptismal confessions (2 Tim 2:11-13; Tit 3:4-7), sometimes prefaced by the formula of a "trusted word," and in christological hymns (e.g., 1 Tim 3:16, introduced by "we confess") the Pauline gospel is reasserted as deserving of all acceptance (1 Tim 1:15). This is accompanied by the cardinal teachings of one God and one mediator (1 Tim 2:5-7), known to be Paul's strong conviction. Jewish-Christian prayer language is scattered through these letters (e.g., 1 Tim 1:17), partly to demonstrate the church's close ties with its roots and partly to restate the (Jewish) belief in the goodness of God's creation, which is hallowed by prayer based on Psalm 24:1 (1 Tim 4:4-5).

The baptismal teachings in Colossians-Ephesians have given rise to debate, chiefly on the issue whether they mark a divergence from Paul's careful distinction as we saw between what is true now (we are being saved) and the future hope (we shall be saved—in hope of the Parousia, Rom 5:9-10; 6:1-14). Colossians emphasizes the present possession of salvation (Col 1:12-14) and reconciliation (Col 1:21-22), with the hymn of Colossians 1:15-20 inserted to celebrate the completeness of the universe's restoration to harmony with the Creator's will and the pacification of the evil powers (Col 2:15). Believers have entered into the benefit of Christ's cosmic triumph at baptism (Col 2:12-13) with no explicit eschatological proviso of what still awaits completion at the Parousia. But the eschatological hope, while it is muted, sounds in Colossians 3:3, so it may be fairly claimed that Colossians reflects the true Pauline tradition at this point.

Less confidence is engendered, however, in the case of Ephesians. Here the implied baptismal setting of Ephesians 1:13-14, where "the seal of the Spirit" became a shorthand expression for a person's baptism (Lampe), though it does look on to the future possession of salvation, seems rather to situate the church's hope in the present (Eph 2:1-10; 5:14) and to reflect a fading of an imminent Parousia. The church is already raised to the heavenly places (Eph 2:6) where the regnant Christ has begun his rule (Eph 1:22-23, a creedal fragment, it is believed). This noble prose poem celebrates Christ's lordship in exalted, hieratic terms drawn from the worship idioms of the Asian churches. Such an eclipse of the apocalyptic* denouement, associated with Christ's return from heaven, may well be explained by the unique occasion of Ephesians, if its purpose is more doxological than edificatory or polemical. The nuances of liturgical language have given rise to the idea of the church as already triumphant and transcendent in its heavenly glory now and indeed as taking its place within the creedal confession (Eph 4:4-5), as though the church professes belief in itself—a forerunner of the sentence in the Apostles' Creed ("I believe in . . . one, holy, catholic, apostolic church")—and has its place in salvation history securely grounded on a (true) apostolic base (Eph 2:20; 3:5).

4. Evidence from Syria-Palestine.

4.1. Jerusalem. It is not easy to separate out from the data and descriptions in the book of Acts* what is objective historical reporting of church life and practice in the holy city (see Jerusalem; Jewish Christianity) and the holy land, with extensions to the Syrian province from Damascus to Antioch* (Acts 8:1; 9:19; 11:19-29; 13:1-3), and Luke's conscious bid to idealize the scenes in the interests of his own theological viewpoints. Perhaps the truth lies in a mediating position. Assuming that the writing of Luke is meant to have an edificatory purpose (so both Haenchen, 103-110; and Marshall, 33), it would be natural to suppose that the author recalls the early days of the church not in a nostalgic vein but in order to point up certain lessons for the church of his own day. He tells the story, based on reliable eyewitness testimony, he believed (Lk 1:1-4; Acts 1:1), of how it was in the beginning when the Spirit first came on God's new creation. He raises the cry ad fontes: back to the fountainhead of the church's early moments, yet he does so with a view to recapturing the past as he retells it so as to make it speak to his present. Luke's successive pictures of the church at worship are arranged to drive home a single point—that worship in his church needs to recover the emphases and features that marked the first generation, with the Holy Spirit's* power* in evidence (Acts 4:31; 13:1-3), giving rise to great freedom* and joy* (Acts 2:46, 47) and fidelity to apostolic norms (Acts 2:42).

Initiation into the community life is by baptism—based on ritual baths in distinctive Judaisms, both mainline and sectarian (Qumran, Therapeutae)—in the name of Jesus (Acts 2:38). This was a practice that spread with the expansion of the message to embrace disciples in Samaria (Acts 8:12), in Caesarea (Acts 10:47-48), in Damascus (Acts 9:18 and par.) as well as more remote, unspecified regions as the Gaza strip (Acts 8:36: v. 37 mg. in the Western reading offers a fuller account of the baptismal interrogation and response). Initiation "in the name" of Jesus (Christ) was evidently meant to confess his messianic headship of the new community and the place individuals had in this messianic group as a mark of the new age he brought. Little further theologizing of baptism is found, though Acts 19:1-7 poses the problems associated with groups that had known only John's baptism. If Acts 10 (baptism and receiving the Spirit in the home of Cornelius*) is meant to imply a Gentile* Pentecost* (cf. Lampe, chap. 5, Dunn 1970, 80-82; 1975, 154-56), then the baptism of John's disciples accompanied by the imposition of hands and gifts of tongues* and prophecy* may well indicate to Luke's readers how "disciples" become full-blown believers in Jesus as Lord.*

On face value the record in Acts gives cameo pictures of the worshiping/communal life in Jerusalem (notably at Acts 2:41-47; 4:32-35) as ideal scenes, meant to challenge and rebuke later loss of "apostolic simplicity." Features that marked out the earliest community fresh from its Pentecostal experience and radiating the Spirit's joy (Acts 2:26 based on Ps 16:8-11; cf. Acts 2:46) include above all the theme of exultant praise, whether the locale is the temple (Acts 3:1-10) or private residences (Acts 1:3; 2:46; 9:11; 9:36-43; 10:1-8, 24; 12:12). Prayers were offered for guidance (Acts 1:23-25) and for courage in the face of threats and dangers (Acts 4:23-31), though the reference to "the prayers" (Acts 2:42) suggests a continued adherence to the Jewish temple liturgy (Dugmore).

The "apostles' teaching" has been customarily regarded as a sign of early catechetical instruction, while "fellowship"* indicates either a generalized reference to common life or, more specifically, to the material contributions expected, but not demanded, of each member (Acts 4:32; 5:1-11, Jeremias once believed 2:42 referred to the offering as koinonia, but changed his mind; see Cullmann, 120). The "breaking of bread" is a Jewish expression for a meal occasion, presumably a communal social event in which food was shared and eaten as a sign of mutual love* (hence the name agapē, see Jude 12 where intruding teachers have "defiled" such convivial gatherings; and 2 Pet 2:13 if agapais, is read in place of apatais, see Bauckham, 1983; Ign. Smyrn. 8:2, Acts of Paul and Thecla 5, 25 shows how the practice persisted into later decades). If Didache 9—10 gives the text of prayers at the love-meal (see 4.2 below), how such meal occasions were understood may be revealed and the way the agape functioned as a prelude to the later solemn Eucharist of the Lord's sacrifice (Didache 14:1) is evident, perhaps explaining the link in 1 Corinthians 11:17-22 as a preparatory rite of sharing, paving the way for the solemn Pauline meal in 1 Corinthians 11:23-26.

Special mention should be made of the invocatory prayer, maranatha (found untranslated in its Aramaic form in 1 Cor 16:22; Did. 10.6). It may be claimed that here we have the oldest surviving prayer specimen, with one possible exception (an inscription on an ossuary found in Jerusalem with the wording, "Jesus (let the one who rests here) arise," thereby invoking Jesus as Lord of resurrection* (So B. Gustafsson, NTS 3, 1956-57, 65-9. But this interpretation of the graffito is contested, see J. P. Kane, PEQ 1971, 103-08). Maranatha is a composite word, almost certainly to be divided as māranā' tā' (Fitzmyer) and meaning, "Our Lord, come," expressing a prayer call for the Lord (i.e., Jesus) to be present either at the Eucharist (Cullmann) or the eschaton. The evidence at this point is finely balanced. Didache 10.6 is part of a meal liturgy while Revelation 22:20 ("even so, come, Lord Jesus") looks to be a variant of maranatha and is eschatological.* The setting is perhaps not exclusively one or the other; what counts is the existence of a cultus, however rudimentary, where the risen Christ is invoked in prayer as a forerunner of later, more developed invocations and hymns.

If we are safe in including as representative of early Jewish Christianity the letters of James* and Jude,* the picture may be enlarged. Jude's epistle is notable for its fulsome liturgical ending (Jude 24, 25). This feature provides a window into how Christian praying matched human need in one of the earliest NT letters emanating from Palestinian Christianity (Bauckham). The idioms in these two prayer verses correspond exactly to the felt need of the community, exposed as it was to dangers from antinomian intruders (Jude 4) and the threat of apostasy* from a common faith (Jude 3, 22; Martin 1994, 80-81). Links with Davidic heritage represented by the holy family (Jude 1; see Relatives of Jesus) and the catechetical apostolic traditions (Jude 17) show affinity with the situation mirrored in the Didache. The teaching office of prophets and leaders is the bulwark against some influences boasting of ecstatic experiences and a trust in immediate spiritual inspiration (Jude 8; Martin 1994, 83-4).

James's* letter may well embody early Judaic traditions (Davids) that go back to Palestinian communities. Such traditions and teachings may conceivably have been carried to Antioch in Syria, where an editor fashioned them into our existing letter with its excellent Greek and literary flourishes. Liturgical practices may reflect this dual setting and include a heavy emphasis on prayer in faith (Jas 1:6), especially for an individual's healing by elders at prayer (Jas 5:13-16), once confession and forgiveness* are realized and oil applied (on the possible significance of the use of oil here, see Martin 1993, 124-26). The church has an honored teaching office (Jas 3:1-12) with possible suggestions of ecstatic speech as causing problems (Martin 1988, 103, 123-24). The "excellent name" (Jas 2:7) is one invoked in baptism; and it is proposed that James 2:2, 3 conceals the presence of a church/synagogue "door-keeper," known in the later church as ostiarius (Cabaniss 1954, 29).

4.2. Antioch-Syria. The material associated with the northern part of Syro-Palestine (see Antioch; Syria, Syrian Christianity) is more plentiful—if we are permitted to base our conjecture of appropriate documents from this region on some recent findings, then the NT books will include (the redacted version of) James* and Matthew's Gospel (see Matthean Community), to which we may add Didache and Ignatius's letters. In listing these Christian writings it is interesting that the first three are joined by at least one shared feature: they depend on and draw from the oracles/teachings of the Lord that modern research has identified as "source strand" in the Synoptic Gospels, namely Q. Antioch has been identified (since Streeter's time) as the most likely place where this collection of the Lord's sayings was assembled and used. The three main documents do not belong to the same literary category. Matthew shares the genre "gospel," or more precisely biblos (Mt 1:1). The Didache is a church order-cum- "manual of discipline" incorporating earlier and common traditions known as the "Two Ways" (Did. 1-6; Barn. 18-20). James is usually classified as paraenetic miscellany (Dibelius, 3), but it has been editorially completed to conform to the rhetorical* genre of "epistle" with both a superscription (Jas 1:1) and letter-close (Jas 5:12-20). Yet all three documents do possess common elements (cf. Shepherd 1956) and each, along with the logia source (Q; see Hartin), may be justifiably located in congregations in the same geographical region, namely around Antioch on the Orontes.

For our purposes we may note the following items in the worship life of these communities. (1) Much is made of the role of the teacher, who is to be honored (Mt 13:52; Did. 4:1-4; 13:2; 15:2; Jas 3), with due caution that no one should aspire to the office too hastily (Mt 23:1-12; Jas 3:1). (2) Baptism is administered in the triune name as a distinct development from initiation in the name of the (Lord) Jesus found in Acts (see Mt 28:18-20; Did. 7:1-3; Jas 2:7 may allude to baptism in referring to the "worthy name" called over messianic believers). (3) Prayers couched in language and idioms directly indebted to Jewish synagogue worship (Mt 6:7-13 which incorporates the prayer "Our Father"; see Charlesworth), given in its Matthean form in Didache 8:2-3 with instructions to pray thus thrice daily. In James 1:13-16 the use of prayer is treated as a pastoral issue. All documents emphasize the role of corporate praying based on God's role as heavenly parent (Mt 5:16; 6:9; 16:17; Did. 9:1; 10:1; Jas 1:17, 27; 5:13-18), with special stress laid on the need for mutual forgiveness and confession leading to reconciliation and absolution (Mt 5:21-26; 6:12, 14-15; 18:21-22, 35; Did. 1:4; 2:7; 4:3-4; 14:1-3; Jas 2:8; 4:11; 5:16, 19-20). Fasting is a token of true worship, along with almsgiving (Mt 6:1-4, 16-18; Did. 1:5-6; 4:5-8; 7:4; 8:1-3; 13:3-7; Jas 1:27; 2:15, 16 on giving to the needy). (4) Confession of belief in the one God (a hallmark of Jewish Christianity derived from the shema of Judaism, Deut 6:4) runs through these documents (Mt 19:17; 22:37; 23:9; Did. 6:3 against idolatry; Jas 2:19).

(5) Special attention is drawn to the observance of the eucharistic service based on the Last Supper words in Matthew 26:26-29 (see Lord's Supper). In the main, these dominical statements conform to the Markan wording, with the important exceptions that the cup word is enlarged to connect the "blood of the covenant" represented in the cup with the forgiveness of sins ("which is poured out for many for the forgiveness of sins"). It has been surmised that for theological reasons, since remission of sins was evidently a live issue in the Matthean community, the evangelist has transferred the promise of forgiveness* from the Markan version of John the Baptist's role (Mk 1:4; cf. however, Mt 3:4-6) to his version of the Last Supper. He did so in order to relate forgiveness more intimately with the impending death* of the Lord. The sacrificial motifs expressed in Matthew's upper-room account links with Didache 14.1-3, which is best taken to refer to the church's Sunday Eucharist in contradistinction to the teaching expressed in the prayers of Didache 9—10, which are more suitably explained in reference to an agape meal. They contain no allusion to the Lord's death (unless "broken bread," klasma, makes this connection, but it is more likely drawn from the non-eucharistic setting of Jn 6) and are patterned on the Jewish table prayers (birkath hammazon; see for these examples of grace after meals in Jasper and Cuming, 9-10) in spite of the occasion being titled as eucharistia in Didache 9.5. A convincing datum is in Didache 10.1 ("But after you are filled [with food]" which suggests that the meals in view in Didache 9—10 are taken to satisfy natural hunger, not to serve as sacramental reminders.

The issue, however, is still unresolved (see Srawley, 18-25; Bradshaw 1992, 132-37, for a conspectus of opinion). The safest conclusions are that both canonical Gospel and the Didache are tentative data for the deep roots of the liturgy in Jewish covenantal theology, and the patterns of table fellowship and solemn celebration have some intimate connection with both the synagogue service and the table graces of the Jewish tradition, into which the Matthean Jesus has injected overtones of his atoning sacrifice. Didache 14 only faintly echoes this in its allusion to sacrifice/offering (thysia, 3 times) which is drawn from Malachi 1:11, 14.

(5) Set in the dialogical form of the prayers in Didache 10.6 is the versicle/response:

> Let grace come, and let this world pass away
> Hosanna to the God of David.
> If any one is holy, let that person come!
> If any is not, let such repent.
> Marana tha [our Lord, come!]
> Amen.

The framework suggests a call to self-scrutinizing (already the table is "fenced" in Didache 9.5, citing Matt 7:6) before the congregational meal is taken, akin to the rubrics implied by Paul in 1 Corinthians 11:27-34; 16:22, 23 (see Bornkamm 1969; J. A. T. Robinson). What comes through in this dialogue is the immediacy of judgment/invitation and welcome stemming from the presence of the Lord with his people. He comes to meet them and greet the penitent with offers of his grace now as a prelude to his coming at the last day (Did. 16.7, 8, noting Mt 24:30), an eschatological note sounded in both Matthew 26:29 and frequent in James 5:7-11. Yet it is the awareness of the living Lord in the midst of his own that shows how these Syrian Christians had grasped the genius of early worship as an encounter with the risen Christ who comes to meet those gathered in his name (Mt 18:20; 28:20; a variant is seen in Gos. Thom. 30, cf. 77) as their call to him is "Hosanna," that is, "Save now!" "Blessed is he who comes in the Lord's name. Hosanna in the highest!" (Mt 21:9).

Ignatius of Antioch picks up this last-mentioned realization exactly in his dictum: "Wherever Jesus Christ is, there is the universal church" (Ign. Smyrn. 8.2), as if to emphasize the unrestrictedness of the risen Lord who comes to join his people as they sing their hymns* through Christ to the Father (Ign. Eph. 4.2) and recognize that he is dwelling in them (Ign. Eph. 15.3) as members of God's Son* (Ign. Eph. 4.2). The earlier description (Ign. Eph. 4) offers the attractive picture of a Christian assembly in which "by your concord and harmonious love Jesus Christ is sung," with its suggestion that Christ is not only the mediator but also the object of hymnic praise (so Kroll, 19; Bauer 1924, 204). Granted that Ignatius is using the features of the liturgy—notably unison, harmony, the right key as in music (eine Tonart, so Dölger, 127)—to drive home the need for church unanimity and a closing of ranks behind and in submission to the ecclesiastical leaders (Ign. Eph. 5.3), it still affords some confirmation of the centrality of Christ in his depictions of worship.

Specimens of Ignatian hymnody are seen in Ephesians 7.2 (Kroll, 20 points to the semitic coloring, the elevated style, the antithetical sentences and their interrelatedness to suggest a snatch of creedal-hymnic material; cf. Norden, 256-57). Thus we read:

> [there is] One physician, > who is both flesh and spirit,
> born and yet not born.
> God in man, true life in death,
> both from Mary and from God, > first, subject to suffering,
> then, impassible,
> Jesus Christ our Lord.
> (Ign. Eph. 7.2)

This antithetical pattern occurs also in Melito's* homily and is amplified in Ignatius's Letter to the Ephesians 19, expounding the "silence" of Ephesians 15.2, in which three mysteries were accomplished: the virginity of Mary,* her giving birth and the Lord's death. He was revealed to the "Aeons" (Bultmann, 1.177) and in the appearance of his natal star, which illumined the heavens with indescribable brightness and attracted the veneration of the constellations, including the sun and the moon, the new age was born. "When God appeared in human form to bring the newness of eternal life," all the cosmos was affected, with the ancient (demonic) astral powers overthrown and death itself defeated.

This celebration of Christ's victory and reign was evidently meant to be sung in veneration as the planetary powers too join in a chorus (Ign. Eph. 19.2), once we link the text with Ignatius's Letter to the Romans 2.2: "You form a chorus of love in singing to the Father in Christ Jesus."

A similar confession-like tribute to Christ is offered as part of Ignatius's anti-docetic polemic (see Docetism, for example, in Trallians 9.1-2 (cf. Smyrn. 1:1—3:3), which again may be cast in verse form (by Norden, 266). This christological text rehearses the movements of Christ's birth, earthly career, condemnation "under Pontius Pilate" (pointing to the Apostles' Creed), death on the cross (attested by all the powers, heavenly and demonic, Phil 2:10 in Paul providing the exact wording) and resurrection. All these events are connected by the adverb "truly," with the result they lay the foundation for "true" life in the church's resurrection.

Ignatius's recourse to creedal and hymnic forms obviously have a polemical thrust, yet they do throw light on how he conceived of congregational worship in the centers to which he wrote. His great fear was that of the churches' becoming fragmented and being dissipated by schism. Hence his call is to rally round the bishop and his officers (Ign. Phil. 3.1-3), which leads him to lift up the central role of the Eucharist as the church's focal point, with the episkopos as the indispensable ministrant (Ign. Smyrn. 8.1-2; Pol. 6.1-2). Moreover, the Eucharist for Ignatius now takes on a quasi-magical significance, seen most starkly in Ephesians 20.3, which calls it "the medicine of immortality, the antidote that we should not die, but live forever in Jesus Christ." Again, it is possible the constraints of false teaching which in turn led to rebellion against "the bishop and the presbytery" drove Ignatius to this strongly worded eucharistic teaching, since the sentence is introduced by the renewed call to unity based on "breaking one loaf" (cf. 1 Cor 10:17 in Paul).

When Ignatius writes of worship practices, mainly of baptism, confession, creedal formulas and the Eucharist, it is difficult to know whether he is describing traditions current at Antioch where he was bishop or the various centers through which he passed or to which he was headed. We may assume some common cultic practices since he makes these allusions the basis of his appeal, all set in a trinitarian frame (Ign. Magn. 13.1), typifying the threefold clerical ministry (bishop, elder, deacon).

5. The Rome-Asia Minor Axis.

Interestingly the parameters of this section are set by two scenes that represent an early cameo of worship in Asia Minor (Acts 20:7-12) and nearly a century later a more detailed description of how worship was understood in Rome* c. A.D. 150 (Justin Apol. I 67). While these two accounts are separated in time and by background, what is significant is the common elements they share. (1) The time is "the first day of the week," later to be known as "the day called Sunday" (Justin, Dial. Tryph. 41.4; 138.1; see Lord's Day). Barnabas 15.3-9 gives the theological reasoning behind this shift from Sabbath to the day following, "the eighth day," when Jesus rose and was made manifest and ascended to heaven,* thereby claiming the day of celebration as his own (Rev 1:10; Did. 14:1; Gos. Pet. 12.50) as the risen Lord who greeted his own people at a Sunday eucharistic meal, in accordance with the Gospel evidence (Jn 20:19; Lk 24:30, 41-43; cf. Acts 1:3-4; Rordorf 1992; McKay).

(2) The nature of the assembled company is understood as a "gathering" (synēgmenōn in Acts 20:7, a verbal form from which "synagogue" is derived; cf. Jas 2:2; Heb 10:25 for this verb/noun) as people come together, with the emphasis falling more on their associating than on a consecrated building or space. At this time Christians met in house congregations. Special structures are to be dated from the third/fourth centuries, with the earliest, best-attested example at Dura-Europos in Syria, c. A.D. 256 (Hopkins; see Architecture, Early Church). Yet the format and ethos of synagogue worship (see Morris, with more cautious approach in McKay) carried over into the Christian synaxis (a technical term for such a gathering, as the word implied).

(3) The setting in Acts 20 suggests a two-part arrangement of public speaking (by Paul) and a meal occasion (Acts 20:11) with some more discourse to follow. This interrelation of sermon and sacrament provided the basis for the later development of the liturgy of the Word followed by the liturgy of the upper room. One of the clearest illustrations of this dual rhythm is in fact provided in Justin, who proceeds in his description: "the memoirs of the apostles or the writings of the prophets are read. . . . When the reader has finished, the president in a discourse urges and invites [us] to imitate these noble things. . . . And, as we said before [Justin Apol. I 65 refers to the presenting of bread and a cup of water-and-wine, over which prayers of thanks are offered, regarded as consecrated, and then shared and distributed to those absent], when we have finished the prayer, bread is brought, and wine and water," followed by prayers and the offering. Justin sums up: "We all hold this common gathering on Sunday."

The stark simplicity of these details captures some of the basic ingredients of worship in the period c. A.D. 50-150, with suitable variations that are distinctive to each part of the Rome-Asia Minor axis.

For what developed in Asia we need to turn to the Johannine* writings. Yet the witness in the cognate epistles, Colossians-Ephesians in the Pauline corpus, must find a place in any appreciation of how worship was practiced in the churches of Paul's foundation. Colossians 3:16-17 (par. Eph 5:19-20) provides evidence of congregational assemblies who met to admonish one another in both instruction ("in all wisdom"; cf. 1 Cor 12:8 for "utterances of wisdom" as a spiritual charism) and singing of hymns (evidently christological compositions) along with psalms (perhaps drawn from the Hebrew psalter or Jewish-Christian canticles, see DPL, Hymns) and "songs of the Spirit" (cf. Odes Sol. 14:7). All such tributes were intended to express thanks to God, and so formed part of the genre hodayah/ eucharistia, which Bradshaw (1981, 30-7; 1992, 44) maintains with some cogency, was more characteristic than the berakah/ eulogia type in early Christianity. Expressions of praise occur in Colossians 1:3, 12-14 with the longer, more stately and measured version in Ephesians 1:3-14, which rehearses the ground-plan of salvation-history in a trinitarian frame (Martin 1992, 13-15). Indeed the first three chapters of Ephesians have been viewed as based on a transcript of praise familiar in the Asian congregations and as celebrating the characteristic themes of the success of the Pauline gospel in repelling challenges to it (cf. 1 Tim 1:15) and the pivotal role of the apostle as its chief exponent.

Hymnic specimens are clearly to be seen in these letters. Colossians 1:15-20 has evidently been subject to authorial redaction, and it is just possible (if not likely) that it incorporates a pre-Christian version in praise of gnostic redemption (Käsemann 1964: see critique in the commentaries). As it stands, it announces the universal reconciliation that both rests on Christ's redemptive work (Col 1:20) and includes his authority* as head of the ecclesial body (Col 1:18). Both these themes are important in the polemical use made of them, as seen in Ephesians 2:11-22 (incorporating, it may be, a pre-Pauline version) and in the teaching of true headship as Christ's role as heavenly bridegroom is unpacked (Eph 5:32). Moreover, Ephesians 5:14 contains one of the clearest evidences of baptismal hymnody in the Asian churches, with its swinging, trochaic rhythm and its motifs of paraenesis and application sounded in the wake-up call to move forward in Christ's light that first shone on the baptismal candidate, who is cleansed in water (Eph 5:26).

Clearly in these twin epistles we are in touch with the vibrant worshiping life that pulsated through these communities as the author(s) faced threats to Paul's apostolate and authority in Asia. The use of liturgical idioms (such as "to the praise of his glory," Eph 1:6, 12, 14), baptismal recall (in Col 1:12-14; 2:11-14; Eph 5:26) and eucharistic language (eucharisteiō, "to thank," is a frequent idea in Eph), along with creedal expressions (e.g., Eph 4:4-6) and samples of prayer-speech—all give indications of the letters as steeped in a liturgical atmosphere. They were meant to be read out in congregational assembly (Col 4:16) and passed on to neighboring churches, evidently at worship gatherings when their pastoral and didactic appeal would be most effective in catching the mood of praise and exultation (especially Ephesians, as in Paul's opening benedictions generally; see O'Brien) and bidding the hearers to participate in (and thereby to accept) the truth claims they make.

Ignatius, also reflecting the life-setting of the Asian churches, followed in this tradition of letter-writing habits. As we observed, many of his allusions to music, creed and adherence to the teachings are cited to repel what he regarded as error and seem to have the scenario of the churches at worship in view. Indeed, H. Schlier (48-49) regards Ignatius's Letter to the Ephesians 4 as showing his acquaintance with Paul's representation of the church's gathering for worship in canonical Ephesians 5:15-21.

It could also be submitted that the ordering of church life in the Pastoral Epistles, equally of Asian provenance, could have led to Ignatius's view of a strictly hierarchical government of bishop and presbyters and deacons (see 1 Tim 3:1-3; Tit 1:7-9), who are shown to be faithful in maintaining discipline* and repulsing deviance from apostolic-Pauline norms by inculcating sound teaching and promoting worship in a proper manner (1 Tim 4:11-16). False notions must be exposed and denounced by Timothy's recourse to the church's confessions of faith and creedal formulas (1 Tim 3:16, whose introductory sentence is a sign of the six-line, hymnic-poetic christological tribute that follows; 2 Tim 2:11-13). Worship functions in the pastors' congregations as a stabilizing, boundary-fixing marker (see MacDonald), whose effect is to close ranks within an inward-looking community. This body of literature evinces a trait, shared alike by Ignatius and Ephesians, of the church's assuming a role in salvation history centered on itself as an article of its faith (Eph 4:4, and often in Ignatius; cf. 1 Tim 4:15). We are here on the threshold of ecclesiastical history, where the church itself is part of God's salvific plan (Eph 3:10) and sees no incongruity—indeed it rejoices in this—that it professes to believe in itself. "I believe in . . . one, holy, catholic, apostolic church" is a sentence ready to be inserted in the creed.

If we wanted to see how the church's liturgical acts were becoming integrated into its understanding of its message and mission, the thrust conveyed in the letter to the Hebrews* would provide encouragement. By common consent, this sermon-like (Heb 13:22) document (see Rhetoric) reflects Roman Christianity in the post-A.D. 70 decades of the first Christian century (see Rome, Roman Christianity). The author's purpose is stated with clarity: it is to show the finality and superiority of the new economy brought by Christ who is both minister (Heb 2:10-13; 8:2) and sacrifice (Heb 9—10) in the new sanctuary. Repeatedly his arguments and appeals are punctuated with liturgical idioms, often drawn from the levitical prototypes but always suffused with and corrected by Christian overtones (e.g., Heb 13:10-16). The language of offering and sacrifice is pressed into service in order to highlight the immeasurable greatness of the new covenant, based on the better sacrifice of Jesus (since it was made once-for-all) and the better effectiveness (securing a full and final forgiveness). Yet the high priestly* ministry of Jesus continues in a heavenly sanctuary (e.g., Heb 7:25; 9:24; 13:10, sometimes taken in a eucharistic sense, see Dunnill 240-42), and the implied call is made that the church is to share in this worship of God through him who is the perfect worshiper (Heb 2:11-12; 13:12-16).

This is an aspect of worship here receiving its emphasis in a unique way (in the NT) but with repercussions that were later to be enlarged and felt in the decades (e.g., 1 Clem 36:1; 40:1-5) and centuries to come. Worship is both "through Christ" (Heb 13:15) and "in Christ," making the church one with his self-offering (Heb 7:25) so that its sacrifices of praise are joined with the one offering that is both complete (once-for-all, eph'hapax) and ever-renewed as it is freshly appropriated by and mediated to the believing community. Hebrews 13:17 mentions the leaders who serve the community; 1 Clement 41—44 reflects debate over the rightful authorities in the church (at Rome?), who should succeed the apostles in presenting the church's "sacrifices and services" (1 Clem. 40:2); namely, the credibility of other approved persons who as overseers have "offered the sacrifices" (1 Clem. 44:4).

The audience of Hebrews needs both to catch this vision of itself as an eschatological people sharing in the heavenly host's triumph (Heb 12:22-24; the realized eschatology in these verses puts this part of Hebrews in touch with the "already accomplished" emphasis in Ephesians) and equally to face the stern realities of its life on earth as pilgrims and strangers (Heb 11:13-16; see Johnsson, Käsemann 1984). The way to win through, for this author and the readers, is to remain committed to early baptismal pledges (e.g., Heb 4:14; see Bornkamm 1963) and keep the lines of communication with God, established in corporate worship, open (Heb 4:16) and intact (Heb 10:19-25). The temptation to withdraw from public assembly is evidently strong in time of testing (Heb 10:32-39); so the author makes adherence to the assembly a focal point of resistance and renewal, thereby giving to worship its pragmatic value and socializing dimension.

A parallel side to the way worship is seen to provide identity markers for the new Israel and to build confidence is evident in another document also associated with Rome. In 1 Peter the addressees are facing a loss of faith but for a different set of reasons. In Hebrews, where hope plays a key role (Heb 6:9-20; 11:1), the conflicts were domestic and internal, and there was theological questioning about the imminent Parousia* (Heb 10:37-39). The call to hope in 1 Peter (1 Pet 1:3, 13, 21; 3:5; 5:20) is couched against a different background. Here the hostility is directed to the churches in Pontus-Bithynia (1 Pet 1:1) from outside (1 Pet 2:12; 4:1-6), and there seems to be no debate about their final salvation at an expected appearing of the Lord (1 Pet 1:5, 13; 4:7). The root problem faced in 1 Peter is the loss of social identity and sense of rootlessness that has come to people who, from their pagan environment, have joined the church and accepted its mores and manners. Their (physical) sufferings are raising problems to do with theodicy as they seek to understand and make sense of life's contrarieties and uncertainties when their new-found faith is tested (1 Pet 1:6; 2:19; 4:12).

The author's response in this hortatory document (1 Pet 5:12) is to impart social identity to the readers as those belonging to the "people of God," stretching back to Abraham* and Sarah (1 Pet 3:5, 6) and onward to the complete "household of faith" soon to be realized (1 Pet 2:4-10; 4:17-19) and to offer assurance that God's plans do not miscarry as the churches come to see how Christ's victory over all his enemies is one to be shared by his followers who walk in his steps (1 Pet 2:21; 3:18-22; see Martin 1994, 100, n. 26). Liturgical emphases play their role in enforcing these precise points, notably in the poetically structured passage (1 Pet 2:1-10; see commentaries, esp. Selwyn) that celebrates the church as God's new Israel* in which erstwhile strangers and alienated people find their new home as worshipers and family; and in the christological hymn* of 1 Peter 3:18-22, whose original form may well have looked like this:

Who suffered once for sins,
To bring us to God;
Put to death in the flesh,
But made alive in the spirit,
In which he went and preached to the spirits in prison,
[But] having gone into heaven he sat at the right hand of God,
Angels and authorities and powers under his control.

The intricacies of debate over this obscure passage are many (see commentaries by Reicke, Dalton, Boismard for basic treatments—all reacting to Bultmann's seminal work of 1947; for survey and bibliographical references, see Martin 1978, 335-44; 1994, 95, 110-117). For our purposes it is enough to seek to inquire how the cited lines functioned as a hymn. The key to this problem is suggestively to observe that the section encompasses a drama of Christ's odyssey, framed by two occurrences of the verb "to go" (represented in italics above). He went to visit the realm of the demonic; he went after his triumph to take his place on the universe's throne, with all cosmic powers held in subjugation. So the journey motif is the key, unlocking the chief problematic issue which is to know how relevantly such a piece of christological suprahistory would affect the lives of Peter's readers, who are also reminded of their baptism (in turn typified in the ark by which Noah's family was saved in a generation Jewish thinkers regarded as the worst imaginable and the cause of demonic influence in the world). In Christian baptism—a thought conceivably inserted by Peter into the preformed creed-hymn—there is an appropriating of Christ's identification with dark powers and his subsequent victory over them.

Here baptism receives a treatment that ostensibly links it with Paul (in Rom 6; cf. Col 2:12; 3:1). Yet it adds a dimension of considerable pictorial, even mythological, effect. It proclaims that believers share in Christ's achievement in both its horror and its glory. He made himself one with human enslavement to evil and then in his triumph over it (see Martin 1994, 114-17, referring to Rev 1:18), thus connecting its kinetic-dramatic theology with other hymns, notably Philippians 2:6-11, as well as the scenario in Gospel of Peter 10.41-42 and Acts of Pilate 5.1—8.2, in the section Christ's Descent into Hell, and of course the Apostles' Creed statement (at Rome, c. A.D. 150, as a baptismal creed; Kelly): "crucified, dead, and buried; he descended into Hades. The third day he rose again and ascended into heaven." The Christus victor theme reaches its zenith in the acknowledgement and proclamation that in baptism all demonic agencies that would tyrannize over the church and hold it prey are overcome, since Christ knew both their power to hurt and their being reduced to impotence. The logical and liturgical outcome of this theologoumenon will be the use of exorcistic and renunciation formulas as a prelude to the actual baptism seen in Hippolytus' Apostolic Tradition (Cuming).

6. Johannine Patterns and their Influence.
If we are correct in assuming the presence in the Rome-Asia axis of styles of worship that looked to Paul's and Peter's deposits of teaching to inform them, with the universally accepted practices of baptism as initiatory rite and the Lord's Supper as celebratory of Christ's resurrection victory and set in a structure that tended to respect the authority of leaders, then in the Johannine literature the emphasis falls elsewhere (see John, Letters of).

The powerful influences seen in the Pastorals, the Didache, Ignatius and 1 Clement, with their concerns over set prayers (the permission of Did. 10:7, "allow the prophets to give thanks at will," needs to be read in light of Did. 15:1-2 which shows that itinerant prophets are on the way out and are to be succeeded by "bishops and deacons," as in Ign. Smyrn. 8; 1 Clem. 44), regular ministries, orderly worship (1 Clem. 20) and an incipient sacramental system (Ign. Eph. 20) seem to brook no challenge. Yet there is another strand that mirrors a reaction in the Asian churches in which the Johannine influence is strong. This body of literature (John's Gospel, Johannine Epistles and to an extent the Apocalypse) speaks to a situation where there are competing emphases, partly christological, partly ecclesiological, in the "community of the beloved disciple" (Brown). We may even postulate a threat to worship, as John's disciples feared it. Both the Johannine Gospel and Epistles raise a warning against the trend to over-institutionalize. John senses the danger of suffocating the Spirit by placing too much emphasis on creedal orthodoxy, relying too heavily on structural forms and limiting the spontaneity that we saw to be evident in Luke's depictions. It is a moot point whether John's protest may be directed to just such a situation as that envisaged in the Pastoral Epistles, 1 Clement and later in Ignatius.

At all events, for John the way forward is to stress the believer's individual participation in true spirituality, as he dubbed it. (1) Worship is "in the Spirit" (1 Jn 3:24) as in reality and is largely independent of outward forms, locations and ceremonials (Jn 4:20-24). The water of Jewish purification rituals is marvelously transformed into the wine of the new age, where Jesus' glory shines out as the universal logos* (Jn 2:1-11).

(2) Love* of God and his family members is the real test of authentic spirituality (1 Jn 3:1-18; 4:7-21), over against creedal rigidity and a blind trust in sacraments. The antisacramentalism alleged in the Fourth Gospel (Bultmann 1971) is a timely, if overstressed, protest against the opposite viewpoint of Cullmann who sees baptism, unction and the Eucharist everywhere on almost every page. There is no explicit institution of the Lord's Supper in John 13, which does, however, have an upper-room meal. But the Evangelist has incorporated a discourse set in the synagogue at Capernaum (Jn 6) as though to stress that the Eucharist has an individualized, inner meaning as nothing less than a feeding on Christ the bread of life, just as John's earlier chapter (Jn 4) had depicted Jesus as the giver of living water to an individual woman of Samaria. The same note is struck in Revelation 3:20: "if any one hears my voice, I will . . . eat with that person."

(3) It cannot be fortuitous that this body of literature lacks completely the term "church"* (ekklēsia). (Revelation is the exception, and it is notable for its inclusion of liturgical-hymnic tributes linking the old Jewish worship [Rev 4:8, 11; 7:12; 15:3-4] to the new age of Messiah's redemption [Rev 5:9-14] and victory [Rev 12:10-12]). Yet for John believers do form a society under the imagery of a flock (Jn 10:1-16; cf. 11:52; see Shepherd, Flock) and the vine (Jn 15:1-11), but inevitably in such images the important thing is the personal relationship the believer sustains to the Lord. As the sheep hear the shepherd's voice when he calls each by name (Jn 10:3-5; cf. Heb 13:20; 1 Pet 5:2-4 has the chief shepherd with many under-shepherds to tend the flock, and Peter will assume such a role in Jn 21), so there is no possibility of life unless the separate branches are linked to the parent stem of the vine (Jn 15:4, 5). John's view of the church governs his concept of worship.

The church is made up of individual believers (Moule 1962) who are joined one-by-one to the Lord by the highly personal ties of baptism and new birth (Jn 3:1-6; see New Birth). The worship they offer springs from the experience of an enriched individualism: "the individual's direct and complete union with Jesus Christ sets its stamp on the ordering of the (Johannine) church" (Schweizer, 124). This is true also of its liturgy, remarkable for its absence of set forms and a Johannine passing over of much that other Christians elsewhere may have taken for granted.

7. Some Conclusions.

The above survey of worship materials and patterns, drawn from literature of a wide time span and diverse geographical and cultural spread, cannot pretend to be comprehensive. The soundings we have taken are at best, we hope, typical of the regions mentioned. Yet the picture is still incomplete, and the settings proposed conjectural. It is difficult therefore to plot a trajectory or suggest a developing pattern with any convincing coherence. The bold attempt as proposed by G. J. Cuming (SL 10 [1974] 88-105), ranging from salutation (grace* and peace*) by way of intercessions, Scripture readings to doxology, kiss of peace and dismissal is hardly convincing (see Martin 1982, 190, n. 6). A lot of the material emerges from the socially conditioned pressures on both writers and congregational addressees. The most we can hope for is to plot certain nodal points along the way. And as these are observed, we can submit that certain trends are visible.

7.1. Growing Systematization of Order. In the later Pauline/deutero-Pauline literature there is a growing move to systematization based on various factors: the squelching of charismatic fervor seems the inevitable concomitant of the growing emphasis on instruction/teaching roles (themselves in response to deviant notions that challenged the legacy of Paul's doctrine, e.g., in the Pastorals and Colossian-Ephesians). The rise of churchly concerns over order and fixity put a brake on immediacy and spontaneity in worship that we see at Corinth. Paul had sounded the caution, "let all things (in the worshiping assembly) be done in seemly fashion and in good order" (1 Cor 14:40, a phrase evidently picked up in 1 Clem. 40, panta taxei poiein opheilomen); and the growing strength and authority accorded to duly appointed leaders (in the Pastorals and Eph 4:11-16; see commentaries; Martin 1992) tended to focus the spotlight on the hierarchical controls required to ensure that unity was promoted (Ign. Smyrn. 8, for instance) and the episcopal office maintained (1 Clem. 44). Along the way from the picture of congregational egalitarianism to the recognition of a settled ministry (a transition point seen in Did. 9—15), we may note the recourse made to apostolic teaching (Acts 2:42; Jude 17; Did. incipit; Heb 13:7; cf. Heb 2:3; the Johannine letters, 1 Clem. 42) to repel false ideas that began to rear their head.

7.2. Emerging Trinitarian Focus. The occasional nature of much of the liturgical language, called out by the contingencies of congregational problems and challenges, should not blind us to some well-attested constants. Among these we may include: (1) the appreciation of God* as the holy object of Christian adoration and praise. The legacy of the OT-Judaic traditions is not overlooked but carried forward and enriched by an emerging trinitarian faith, for example, the "thrice holy" of Isaiah 6:3 is heard in Revelation 4:8, though the history of the Sanctus in the eucharistic liturgy is still a complex issue (cf. 1 Clem. 34:6; Spinks, especially 46-54). All the documents in our period highlight the transcendence and worthiness of God, without which worship (as classically understood) fails.

(2) As a counterbalance, God is praised as intimately near in Christ his Son, whose true incarnation, death for sinners and resurrection victory over all evil forces are pivotal events in salvation history (cf. creedal-hymnic forms in 1 Pet, Heb 1:1-4;1 John 4:1-6; 5:20; Rev 5:1-14; Ign. Eph. 19). This prepares the ground for a doctrine of the priestly office of the exalted Christ as intercessor and participant in the church's offices (Heb 7:25; 1 Clem. 40; 59—62.3; 1 Clem 61.3 is an interesting specimen of prayer speech with nine pairs of parallel lines [in 1 Clem. 59.3] consisting of divine predications and hymnic sentences [Robinson 1964] offered through "Jesus Christ the high priest and guardian of our souls through whom be glory and majesty"). The Pauline verse (Eph 2:18) is sometimes hailed as encapsulating the essence of early worship in its trinitarian format (Crichton, 18, 19) and as offering a "basic morphology that cannot be violated if liturgical theology is to be Christian" (Hoon, 115). The data that begin with Paul's borrowing of formulas like 2 Corinthians 13:13 (14) take on this shape in Matthew 28:19,20; Acts 2:33; Hebrews 9:14; 1 Peter 1:2; Didache 7:1-4; and Ignatius's Letter to the Trallians (incipit) on the road to full-blown trinitarian creeds (in Irenaeus and beyond; see Wainwright).

7.3. Placing the Risen Lord Alongside the Father

The place of the risen Lord in early Christian worship is still hotly debated (see representative positions held in Jungmann, Harris, Bauckham, France, Hurtado, Casey). From allusions that are at best inferential (Jn 14:14 RSV mg.; cf. Jn 16:23) or incidental (Acts 7:59; 1 Clem. 21:6) to others that precisely speak of invoking the living Christ* (1 Cor 16:22; Rev 22:20; Did. 10:6) or else set the exalted one at the center of a cultus on a par with Israel's covenant God (Rev 5:12-14; cf. 3:21; see Guthrie, Thompson), the line moves inexorably to a placing of Jesus alongside the Father as worthy of worship and the co-author of salvation blessings for the church and the world. The title "God," so reticently applied to Jesus in the NT literature (though see Harris for the maximum value to be extracted from such verses as Heb 1:8; 2 Pet 1:1; 1 Jn 5:20), may well have received fresh impetus from the role cast for him in the Christians' assembly when as Christians met on an appointed day (i.e., Sunday, so called in Justin Apol I 67 as the day after Saturday before daybreak [stato die ante lucem]) hymns were sung antiphonally "to Christ as to God" carmen quasi Deo (Pliny Ep. 10.96.7 for this text, c. A.D. 112; see Cabaniss 1989, 11-18).

See also BAPTISM, BAPTISMAL RITES; CENTERS OF CHRISTIANITY; GOD; HYMNS, SONGS; LITURGICAL ELEMENTS; LORD'S DAY; LORD'S SUPPER, LOVE FEAST; PRAYER; SYNAGOGUE; TEMPLE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY R. J. Bauckham, Jude, 2 Peter (WBC; Waco: Word, 1983); idem, "The Worship of Jesus" NTS 27 (1981) 323-31; W. Bauer, Orthodoxy and Heresy in Earliest Christianity (Philadelphia: Fortress 1971 [1924]); idem, Die apostolischen Väter II (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1924) 204; G. Bornkamm, Early Christian Experience (London: SCM, 1969); idem, "Das Bekenntnis im Hebräerbrief" in Studien zu Antike und Urchristentum (2d ed.; Munich: Kaiser, 1963) 188-203; P. F. Bradshaw, The Search for the Origins of Christian Worship (New York: Oxford University Press, 1992); idem, Daily Prayer in the Early Church (New York: Oxford University Press, 1982); R. E. Brown, The Community of the Beloved Disciple (New York: Paulist, 1979); R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament (2 vols.; New York: Scribner's, 1952, 1955); idem, The Gospel of John (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1971); A. Cabaniss, "The Epistle of Saint James," JBR 22 (1954) 27-9; idem, Pattern in Early Christian Worship (Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1989); M. Casey, From Jewish Prophet to Gentile God (Louisville: Westinster/John Knox, 1991); J. H. Charlesworth, ed., The Lord's Prayer and Other Prayer Texts from the Greco-Roman Era (Valley Forge: Trinity Press International, 1994); J. D. Crichton, "A Theology of Worship" in The Study of Liturgy, ed. C. Jones, G. Wainwright and E. Yarnold (2d. ed.; New York: Oxford University Press, 1992), 3-29; F. L. Cross, 1 Peter: A Paschal Liturgy (London: Mowbray, 1964); O. Cullmann, Early Christian Worship (SBT 10; London: SCM, 1953) 7-36; P. H. Davids, Commentary on James (NIGTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1982); M. Dibelius, James (Herm; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976); F-J. Dölger, Sol salutis: Gebet und Gesang im christlichen Altertum (2d ed.; Münster: Aschendorff, 1925); C. W. Dugmore, The Influence of the Synagogue on the Divine Office (London: Oxford University Press, 1944); J. D. G. Dunn, Baptism in the Holy Spirit (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1970); idem, Jesus and the Spirit (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1975); idem, Unity and Diversity in the New Testament (2d ed.; Louisville: Westminster, 1990); J. Dunnill, Covenant and Sacrifice in the Letters to the Hebrews (SNTSMS 75: Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1992); J. A. Fitzmyer, "The Aramaic Language and the Study of the New Testament," JBL 99 (1980) 5-21; R. T. France, "The Worship of Jesus" in Christ the Lord, ed. H. H. Rowdon (Leicester/Downers Grove: InterVarsity, 1982) 17-36; D. Guthrie, "Aspects of Worship in the Book of Revelation" in Worship, Theology and Ministry in the Early Church, ed. M. J. Wilkins and T. Paige (Sheffield: Academic Press, 1992) 70-83; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles (Philadelphia: Westminster, 1971); M. J. Harris, Jesus as God: The New Testament Use of Theos in Reference to Jesus (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1992); P. J. Hartin, James and the Sayings of Jesus (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1991); P. W. Hoon, The Integrity of Worship (Nashville: Abingdon, 1971); C. Hopkins, The Discovery of Dura-Europos (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1979); A. J. Hultgren, The Rise of Normative Christianity (Minneapolis: Augsburg/Fortress, 1994); L. W. Hurtado, One God, One Lord (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1988); R. D. Jasper and G. J. Cuming, Prayers of the Eucharist: Early and Reformed (London: Collins, 1975); J. Jeremias, The Eucharistic Words of Jesus (3d ed.; Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977); W. G. Johnsson, "The Pilgrimge Motif in the Book of Hebrews" JBL 97 (1978) 239-51; J. A. Jungmann, The Place of Christ in Liturgical Prayer (New York: Alba, 1965); E. Käsemann, "A Primitive Christian Baptismal Liturgy" in Essays on New Testament Themes (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1982 [1964]); idem, The Wandering People of God (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1984); J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (5th rev. ed.; London: A. C. Black, 1977); H. Koester and J. M. Robinson, Trajectories through Early Christianity (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1971); J. Kroll, Die christliche Hymnodik bis zu Klemens von Alexandreia (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1968 repr.); G. W. H. Lampe, The Seal of the Spirit (2d ed.; London: SPCK, 1967); H. Lietzmann, Mass and Lord's Supper: A Study in the History of the Liturgy (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1953-1978); E. Lohmeyer, Kyrios Jesus: eine Untersuchung zu Phil 2.5-11 (2nd ed.; Heidelberg: Winter, 1961 [1928]); M. Y. MacDonald, The Pauline Churches (SNTSMS 60; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1988); I. H. Marshall, Acts (TNTC; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1980); R. P. Martin, A Hymn of Christ (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1997 [1967, 1983]); idem and A. Chester, The Theology of the Letters of James, Peter and Jude (NTT, Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994); idem, James (WBC; Waco: Word, 1988); idem, Ephesians, Colossians, Philemon (Int; Louisville: Westminster, 1992); idem, "New Testament Worship: Some Puzzling Practices" AUSS (1993) 119-26; H. A. McKay, Sabbath and Synagogue: The Question of Sabbath in Ancient Judaism (RGRW 122; Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1994); L. Morris, "The Saints and the Synagogue" in Worship, Theology and Ministry in the Early Church, ed. T. Paige and M. J. Wilkins (Sheffield: Academic Press, 1992) 39-52; C. F. D. Moule, Worship in the New Testament (London: Lutterworth, 1961); idem, "The Individualism of the Fourth Gospel" NovT 5 (1962) 171-90; E. Norden, Agnostos Theos (Stuttgart: Teubner, 1956); P. T. O'Brien, Introductory Thanksgivings in the Letters of Paul (NovTSup 49: Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1977); J. A. T. Robinson, Twelve New Testament Studies (SBT 34; London: 1962) 154-57; J. M. Robinson, "Die Hodajot-Formel im Gebet und Hymnus des Frühchristentums" in Apophoreta: Festschrift für Ernst Haenchen, ed. W. Eltester (Berlin: Töpelmann, 1964) 194-235; T. A. Robinson, The Bauer Thesis Examined: The Geography of Heresy in the Early Christian Community (Lewiston, NY: Mellen, 1988); W. Rordorf, Sunday (London: SCM, 1968); idem, "Sunday" in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, ed. A de Berardino (New York: Oxford University Press, 1992) 2.800-801; H. Schlier, Die Verkündigung im Gottesdienst der Kirche (Würzburg: Werkbung-Verlag, 1953); E. Schweizer, Church Order in the New Testament (SBT 32; London: SCM, 1961); E. G. Selwyn, The First Epistle of St. Peter (London: Macmillan, 1947); M. H Shepherd, "The Epistle of James and the Gospel of Matthew," JBL 75 (1956) 40-51; idem, The Paschal Liturgy and the Apocalypse (Richmond: John Knox, 1960); B. D. Spinks, The Sanctus in the Eucharistic Prayer (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991); J. H. Srawley, Early History of the Eucharist (2d ed.; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1947); B. H. Streeter, The Primitive Church (London: Macmillan, 1929); L. T. Stuckenbruch, "A Refusal of Worship of an Angel: The Tradition and its Function in the Apocalypse of John," SBLSP (1994); M. M. Thompson, "Worship in the Book of Revelation", Ex Auditu 8 (1992) 45-54; H. E. W. Turner, The Pattern of Christian Truth (London: Mowbray, 1954); A. W. Wainwright, The Trinity in the New Testament (London: SPCK, 1962).

R. P. Martin

WRATH, DESTRUCTION

The two standard words for anger or wrath, orgē and thymos, are used in these NT writings as well as those of the apostolic fathers.* Although the two words significantly overlap in meaning, there is also the distinction that orgē seems more characteristic of wrath or anger that leads to sin and destruction, and thymos denotes a kind of passion. Although there are a number of words for destruction used in these and other NT writings, the usage is more restricted in the apostolic fathers. The two most frequent words are apollymi, which denotes a process of perishing, and apōleia, the destruction that results. Next most frequent are phtheirō and diaphtheirō, words that seem to imply a corruption leading to destruction. Also used are lyō ("break to pieces"), katargeō ("render ineffective or powerless") and olothreuō ("complete destruction"). Context must prove decisive for determining the meanings of these overlapping words.

1. Divine Wrath
2. Human Wrath
3. Destruction

1. Divine Wrath.

The preponderance of words for wrath or anger in these writings refers either directly or indirectly to divine wrath or anger. Indirect reference includes Hebrews 3:11 and Hebrews 4:3 (orgē), both quotations of Psalm 95:11. Whereas the original psalm has God* speaking (as does Heb 4:3), in Hebrews 3:11 the extended quotation of Psalm 95 in Hebrews 3:7-11 is attributed to the Holy Spirit.* In both instances the quotation is used to support the faithfulness of God despite the sinfulness of the Israelites in the desert, with a word of exhortation to readers to remain faithful so that they can enter into God's rest. Similarly in 1 Clement 39.7, Job 4:16—5:5 is quoted, with destruction said to be the outcome of those who experience God's wrath, that is, the foolish and sinners.

The explicit language of wrath and anger is otherwise confined in the biblical writings to the book of Revelation (see Revelation, Book of). The language of anger and wrath is occasionally used in a context of praise and exaltation of God by those around him. Thus in Revelation 11:18 worshipers praise God for coming in his wrath (orgē) to judge the dead and reward* those faithful to him.

The vast majority of NT usage, however, is within the apocalyptic* context of the great final conflict between God or Christ* alongside their emissaries and the forces of the devil (see Satan). Thus the language is often hyperbolic, not given to fine nuances in the depiction of these warring parties. In Revelation 6:16-17 the wrath (orgē) is said to be the wrath of the Lamb* that is to fall upon the kings of the earth. They are unable to stand in the day of their wrath. This is consistent with the use of figurative language in Revelation, in which various characters in the divine apocalyptic drama are personified. The Lamb is the crucified and risen Christ.

In contrast is Revelation 12:12, which depicts the futile wrath (thymos) of the devil, passionately angry because of his knowledge that he only has a short time before his destruction. In Revelation 14:10 an angel* threatens that anyone who worships the beast* will suffer the wrath of God (orgē), said to be mixed in the cup of his anger (thymos). Here thymos is probably used in distinction to orgē, representing its more passionate as opposed to judicial dimension.

The punishing dimension of God's wrath is developed in the apostolic fathers in Hermas Visions 3.6.1 and Hermas Visions 4.2.6, with the same sense as the biblical writers. In Revelation 14:19 an angel gathers grapes from the earth and throws them into the wine press of God's wrath (thymos), symbolic of his judgment* of the world.* In Revelation 15:1, 7, the author sees seven angels, the final episode in the wrath (thymos) of God, carrying bowls* full of God's wrath (thymos). In Revelation 16:1 these angels are told to go and pour out their bowls of God's wrath (thymos) upon the earth. In Revelation 16:19, at the fall of Babylon,* the city is remembered before God, so that he can give to it the anger (thymos) of his wrath (orgē). In Revelation 19:15 a sword comes from God's mouth, and he strikes the nations and metes out judgment of the anger (thymos) of his wrath (orgē).

Revelation 16:19 and Revelation 19:15 are the only two occasions in the NT writings where the two nouns are used together (cf. Rom 2:8). In the apostolic fathers they are used together at 1 Clement 50.4 in a quotation of Isaiah 26:20; the reference does not have "wrath and anger" but only wrath (orgē). There are several possible ways that the two terms may be understood together, but this may well be a way of emphasizing the profound anger of God that results in his punishing vengeance against his enemies: "wrathful anger." The only major passage in the apostolic fathers that speaks of divine wrath in this language is Ignatius* (Ign. Eph. 11.1), who speaks of fearing the wrath to come or loving the grace* that is present.

Despite the views of some scholars earlier in this century (such as C. H. Dodd, who contended that anger is not a quality that is associated with God in the NT), the evidence is clear that wrath and anger are readily associated with the divine character in a number of explicit and forceful passages. This concept is present though not as thoroughly developed in the apostolic fathers.

2. Human Wrath.

In opposition to divine wrath, there are several more references to nondivine wrath in these writings. It is not entirely correct to label them instances of human wrath, since in several of the instances the context involves personification.

In two instances the writer of James* (Jas 1:19, 20) directly speaks of human anger (orgē). In a word of direct exhortation, the author instructs his readers to be quick to hear, slow to speak and slow to anger. The reason for this is that human anger is not compatible with the righteousness* of God. These people are blessed for having undergone various trials (Jas 1:12), and the author instructs them not to say that God is subjecting them to such temptations.* They are said already to know that a response of anger is incongruent with accomplishing God's purpose. Although wrath or anger is not specifically defined, it seems here confined to a kind of human response to being subjected to difficulties in the course of life. It is perhaps surprising, due to the exhortative tone of James, that wording of wrath and anger does not appear more often.

The theme of exhortation against anger and wrath runs throughout the apostolic fathers. In Ignatius (Ign. Eph. 10.2), in language somewhat reminiscent of James 1, the author instructs his audience to respond appropriately to the wrath of others. The trait of wrath is mentioned as a characteristic to be avoided in a number of passages. In some contexts wrath is singled out as a specific trait, as in Didache 15.3, where wrath is opposed to peace* (the context is the appointment of church leaders; see Church Order). In other contexts wrath is listed as one of several characteristics to avoid, as in 1 Clement 13.1, 1 Clement 63.2 and Didache 3.2. (All of the above examples use orgē.)

In Hebrews 11:27 the author recounts the life of Moses,* stating that Moses did not fear Pharaoh's wrath or anger (thymos). Here wrath or anger seems to be much more than simply antagonism but refers to the life-threatening anger of Pharaoh toward Moses. In 1 Clement 45.7 the author invokes the story of the men in the furnace (Dan 3) as an example of the results of those overcome by rage and anger (thymos). In Revelation 14:8 and Revelation 18:3, in two similar passages, an angel proclaims that Babylon the whore, a personification of Rome (see Roman Empire), has fallen. She is the one who made the nations drink the wine of the passion (thymos) of her immorality. There is the possibility that thymos here should be interpreted anger or wrath, in the light of Babylon's destructive and bloodthirsty purposes.

In a passage that in some ways reflects Romans 7 (although the level of argumentation and the concerns are more mundane) and in some ways encapsulates the moral exhortation regarding anger and wrath in the Fathers, the Shepherd traces a progression from simple ill-temper, which is foolish and silly, to bitterness, wrath (thymos), anger (orgē) and then great sin (Herm. Man. 5.2.4).

3. Destruction.

The language of destruction is consonant with and even consequential to what is said of divine wrath. As Revelation 11:18 says, God's wrath came and destroyed those who were destroying the earth (diaphtheirō).

Destruction is spoken of in these writings in several different ways. One of them contrasts the transience and destructibility of the world and the enduring quality of God. For example, Hebrews 1:11 contrasts the fact that heaven* and earth will perish (apollymi), with God remaining. Earthly things, such as the beauty of the flower (Jas 1:11) and even gold (1 Pet 1:7) and other luxurious things (Rev 18:14), are transient and pass away (apollymi), as did humanity when it was destroyed (apollymi) by the flood (2 Pet 3:6), even though God does not want any to be destroyed (apollymi; 2 Pet 3:9).

Destruction is also spoken of in more spiritual terms. This appears to be the emphasis with the use of language of destruction in the apostolic fathers, as well as the NT writings. Rejecting the faith* is said in Hebrews 10:39 to be the sure way to incur destruction (apōleia) and Hermas Similitudes 6.2.4 warns that the result of spiritual death is eternal destruction (apōleia). The author of 2 John warns his readers (2 Jn 8) lest they lose what they have accomplished (apollymi). For the author of 2 Peter, the ungodly face judgment and destruction (apōleia), especially anyone who distorts the teaching* of Paul's letters* (2 Pet 3:7, 16). The same fate of divine destruction awaits various unbelievers, such as revilers (phtheirō; Jude 10), those in the rebellion of Korah (apollymi; Jude 5, 11), blasphemers (phtheirō; 2 Pet 2:12) and the whore who corrupts (phtheirō) the earth (Rev 19:2). This is to be contrasted with Jesus, who as God's Christ did not see destruction or corruption (diaphthora; Acts 2:27, 31; 13:34-35). 2 Clement emphasizes at several places that it is Jesus Christ, who as God, is responsible for the salvation* of those who are perishing (apollymi; 2 Clem. 1.4; 2.5, 7; 15.1) and that it is the responsibility of believers to help to save them (2 Clem. 17.1-2). This balance between the work of Christ and Christian works is typical of this homily.

In some contexts destruction is spoken of in abstract fashion, as in 2 Peter 2:1, 3, where even though the author offers OT examples he says that destructive heresies such as denying the Master bring impending destruction (apōleia). There are also several contexts in which the agent of destruction is explicitly stated. In often apocalyptic terms, God is frequently said to be the destroyer. Thus in James 4:12 God is called a lawgiver and judge, the one who saves and destroys (apollymi). In Hebrews 11:28 God is depicted as the destroyer (olothreuō) of the firstborn in Egypt. In Revelation 8:9 God's angels destroy (diaphtheirō) a third of the world's ships. What is said of God is also applied to Christ. In Hebrews 2:14 it is said that the death of Christ renders powerless (katargeō) the one with the power of death, the devil (see Death of Christ). 1 John 3:8 speaks of the Son of God as being able to destroy (lyō) the works of the devil (Rev 18:8, 11 also speaks of the beast's destruction [apōleia]). In the apostolic fathers it is more common to speak of the devil as the agent of destruction (Herm. Sim. 6.2.1, 2; Barn. 20.1 [not found in the parallel in Did. 5.1]).

See also BOWLS; DAY OF THE LORD; DEATH OF CHRIST; ESCHATOLOGY; HELL, ABYSS, ETERNAL PUNISHMENT; JUDGMENT; TRIBULATION, MESSIANIC WOES.

BIBLIOGRAPHY. A. Chester and R. P. Martin, The Theology of the Letters of James, Peter and Jude (NTT; Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994); J. A. Kleist, The Didache, Etc. (ACW 6; Westminster, MD: Newman, 1948); J. Lawson, A Theological and Historical Introduction to the Apostolic Fathers (New York: Macmillan, 1961); J. B. Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers (pt. 1; 2 vols.; London: Macmillan, 1890); L. L. Morris, The Apostolic Preaching of the Cross (3d ed.; Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1965); S. H. Travis, "Wrath of God (NT)," ABD 6:996-98. S. E. Porter

Z

ZION. See JERUSALEM, ZION, HOLY CITY.

Scripture Index

Old Testament

Genesis 1, 342, 402, 414
1:1, 252, 439
1:2, 489, 492, 558, 636, 657
1:3, 657, 785
1:4, 657
1:7, 785
1:9, 785
1:9-10, 128
1:14, 1127
1:16, 1127
1:26, 485, 610, 960
1:26-27, 793
1:27, 831
1:29, 6
2:2, 266, 417, 673, 740, 844, 850
2:7, 489, 610, 793
2:8-9, 6
2:9, 481, 852
2:16, 485
2:17, 485
2:24, 713
3, 278, 537
3:1-5, 852
3:1-7, 485
3:8, 489
3:14, 852
3:14-16, 539
3:15, 852
3:22, 610, 852
3:24, 852
4, 836
4:1, 639
4:3, 836
4:4, 836
4:5, 836, 1204
4:7-8, 42
4:8, 718
4:10-12, 840
4:15-16, 840
4:17, 639
4:25, 639
6, 41, 459, 538, 671
6:1-4, 44, 63, 716, 1089, 1119
6:1-6, 100, 538, 922
6:2-4, 1112
6:3-7, 41
6:4, 1119
6:5, 1119, 1169
6:9, 38
6:18, 246
7:1, 38, 512
7:11, 636
8:21, 1169
9:3-4, 162, 610
9:8-16, 246
10, 754, 1178
11:1, 1178
11:6, 1178
11:7, 1178
11:8-9, 1178
12:1, 2
12:1-2, 3, 38
12:1-3, 390
12:2-3, 3, 38
12:3, 1
12:7, 2, 40
12:8, 3
13:3, 3
13:10, 341
13:14-16, 38
13:15, 2, 40
14, 964, 967, 999
14:17-20, 3, 729, 731, 843, 849
14:18, 730, 731
14:18-20, 45
14:20, 3
15:1-6, 39, 968
15:5, 3, 38
15:6, 88, 89, 537, 837, 1056
15:7, 2, 3, 40
15:9-21, 278
15:13-14, 2, 40
15:18-21, 643
16:2, 1208
17:3-8, 968
17:4-5, 5
17:5, 3, 38, 390
17:7, 2
17:7-8, 40
17:10-14, 38, 993
17:14, 1195
17:15-22, 39
17:23, 512
18, 5, 44, 502, 538, 817
18:1, 3
18:1-21, 4
18:6-8, 1208
18:9-15, 39
18:11-15, 1218
18:12, 4, 538, 601, 1208
18:16-33, 839
18:18, 1
18:20, 485
18:22-32, 41
18:25, 621
18:27, 830
19, 502, 1089
19:1-11, 41
19:1-29, 1089
19:5, 715
19:12-14, 715
19:12-22, 41
19:12-29, 538
21:1-4, 2, 38
21:8-14, 1
21:12, 4, 1208
21:15-19, 2
22, 816, 1056
22:1-14, 1056
22:14, 816
22:14-17, 729
22:15-18, 968
22:16, 3, 38
22:17, 3, 130, 731
22:18, 1
23, 2
25:34, 42
26:1-5, 246
27, 129
27:1-40, 39
27:30-40, 42
27:41-45, 41
28:12, 817
28:13-15, 246
28:18, 48
31:44-54, 1141
33:13-14, 1208
33:18-20, 2
37:9, 1210
37:11, 42
37:28, 42
40:1—41:36, 40
41:40, 512
41:41, 40
41:57, 40
42:22, 832
45, 512
45:4, 42
45:8, 40
46:33, 1090
47:29-31, 39
48, 129
48:1-22, 39
48:4, 2, 40
48:12-14, 121
48:12-20, 39
48:14-15, 828
49:1, 331
49:8-12, 331
49:29-32, 2
50:13, 2
50:24, 265
50:24-25, 39

Exodus
1:15-22, 39
2, 779
2:1-2, 39
2:2, 39
2:11-12, 39
2:11-15, 40
2:14, 42
2:15, 778
2:21-22, 40
2:22, 2, 40
3:1, 1091
3:1-12, 40
3:2-6, 493
3:5, 486
3:5-6, 40
3:6, 1, 43
3:12, 2, 40
3:14, 485
3:20, 1094
4:22, 1112
4:30, 1094
6:6-7, 939
6:6-8, 1001
7, 779
7:3, 1094
7:14, 132
7:14-21, 132
7:14-24, 779
7:17-19, 854
7:22, 930
8:7, 930
8:18-19, 930
9:8-12, 132
10:21-23, 133
11:1—12:28, 39
12, 280, 1160
12:1, 644
12:5, 174
12:6, 196
12:11, 642
12:42, 779
13:21, 1091
14:21, 489
15, 780
15:1, 781
15:1-18, 851
15:8, 489
15:11, 128
15:13, 1091
15:25, 1183
16:23, 486
16:31, 838
17:1-7, 42
17:8-13, 779
18:1-5, 40
18:13-27, 466
19, 246, 445, 964
19:4, 1080
19:5, 270
19:5-6, 538
19:6, 196, 199, 200, 318, 481, 488, 838, 917
19:8, 816
19:16, 780
19:20-24, 485
20, 815, 827
20:2, 1099
20:3, 162, 413
20:4-5, 528
20:8, 130, 828
20:13, 537
20:13-14, 240, 645
20:14, 537
20:17, 715
22:7, 825
23:1, 718
23:6, 962
23:11, 962
23:14-17, 989
23:20-21, 666
23:22, 538
23:30-33, 133
24, 279
24:1-8, 485
24:3-8, 199
24:6-8, 780
24:9-12, 439
24:16, 396
24:18, 673
25:9, 439, 956
25:22, 396
25:40, 40, 439, 844, 956, 958
30:26-32, 48
31, 674
31:10, 486
31:13, 487
31:18, 673, 828
32, 674
32:1, 40
4, 42
32:7-10, 830
32:7-19, 673, 830
32:15, 1085
32:16, 673
32:31-32, 830
32:32-33, 318, 851
33:1, 5
33:1-3, 1158
33:3, 5, 42
33:7, 817
33:11, 781
34:1-10, 828
34:6-7, 1054, 1191
34:22, 492
34:24, 268
34:28, 239, 646, 673, 828

Leviticus
4:3-6, 174
4:13-17, 174
4:20, 275, 1070
4:26, 275, 1070
4:31, 275, 1070
4:35, 275, 1070
5:5-6, 691
7:19-21, 989
7:22-27, 989
8, 117
8:15, 281
9:3, 279
10:1-3, 988, 989
10:6, 838
10:6-11, 989
10:10, 989
10:11, 989
11, 989, 1104
11:1-23, 377
11:1-45, 647
11:3, 673
11:13-16, 540
11:44, 240, 535, 838
11:44-45, 196, 423
13, 990
13:12, 991
13:13, 991
13:15, 991
13:45, 991
13:46, 991
14, 991
14:1-8, 991
14:5-7, 174
14:9, 991
14:10-20, 991
14:21-32, 991
15:10, 729
16, 274, 279, 485, 487, 1165
16:1-2, 989
16:3, 280
16:5, 280
16:9, 280
16:12-15, 607
16:14-19, 99
16:15-19, 274
16:18-21, 607
16:21-22, 828
17, 422
17:1-9, 989
17:7, 716
17:8-13, 162
17:10-14, 989
17:11, 1105
17:14, 1105
17:15-16, 989
18:3, 989
18:5, 365
18:21, 3
18:24-30, 989
18:26, 162
19, 484, 490, 553, 560, 649, 815
19:1-18, 486
19:2, 240, 485, 486, 538
19:2-14, 488
19:9-10, 486
19:12-18, 480
19:14, 486
19:15, 480
19:18, 240, 480, 537, 568, 827
19:33-34, 502
20:7, 538
20:8, 487
20:23, 989
20:26, 538
21:6, 989
21:8, 485, 989
21:14, 989
21:15, 487, 989
21:18-20, 930
21:22, 989
21:23, 989
22:9, 487
22:16, 487
22:32, 487
23, 989
23:29, 673, 824
23:43, 639
25:23, 643
25:55, 1099
26, 1085
26:1-2, 133
26:11-12, 854
26:18, 133
26:21, 133
26:23-24, 133
26:28, 133
26:41, 42

Numbers
6:1-21, 1069

6:5, 486
6:13-18, 486
8:4, 956
11, 460
11:17, 779
11:26-30, 466
11:29, 837
12, 517
12:1-15, 42
12:3, 780, 781
12:7, 510, 781, 782, 830, 838
13:16-17, 779
14, 42
14:1-35, 1013
14:20-23, 42
16, 840
16:1-35, 43
16:5, 43
16:13, 196
16:17, 936
16:22, 1118, 1121
16:35, 936
17, 830
18:3, 495
18:26-28, 3
19, 5, 279
20:2-12, 42
20:29, 938
21:9, 779
22, 840
22:17, 715
22:18, 43
22:33, 270
23, 129
23:7, 154
24:13, 43
24:14-19, 331
24:17, 180, 605
25:1-2, 26
25:1-3, 43, 715, 1211
25:12, 995
26:9-10, 43
27:8, 1209
27:15-17, 270
27:16, 1118
27:17, 1091
28:26, 492
31:8, 715
31:16, 43, 819, 836

Deuteronomy
1:9-18, 466
1:16, 827
1:17, 827
1:35, 781
2:5, 2
4, 861
4:2, 673, 827
4:2-7, 639
4:19, 42, 704
4:24, 419, 861
4:25-31, 1160
4:25-46, 825
4:32-39, 639
4:34, 38, 1094
5, 815, 827
5:6-7, 413
5:11, 610, 673
5:17, 537
5:18, 537
6, 412
6:4, 164, 412, 413, 421, 1229
6:4-9, 1158
6:5, 827, 831, 1168
6:16, 1168
6:17-19 1160
6:22, 1094
7:1-16, 1160
7:5-6, 495
7:6, 270, 485, 838, 1160
7:7-16, 1160
7:8, 1002
7:19, 1094
8:2, 1091
8:3, 737
8:5, 326
9:12-14, 830
9:12-17, 830
10:3, 48
10:14, 439
10:16, 42, 228
10:17, 785
10:18, 502
12:2, 1159
12:3, 1159
12:5-14, 989, 1159
12:7, 1160
12:12, 1160
12:13, 1159
12:14, 1159
12:15-28, 989, 1160
12:18, 1160
12:22, 989
12:32, 827
13:1, 1199
13:1-5, 1120
13:2, 1199
14, 1104
14:1, 1112
14:2, 38, 270, 838
14:3-21, 377
14:6, 673
14:22-27, 1160
15:4, 962
15:7, 962
15:7-9, 318
15:11, 962
15:17-18, 240
16, 989, 1160
16:9-12, 492
17:6-7, 718
17:12, 283
18, 826, 999
18:9-18, 930
18:15, 356, 779
18:15-16, 536, 998
18:15-18, 780, 851
18:15-22, 1120
18:18, 467, 779
18:18-19, 356, 999
18:18-22, 51
18:19, 536, 824
19:15, 718
19:19, 283
21:9, 283
21:22-23, 20, 272, 287
21:23, 280
23:1, 18, 930
23:4, 43
24:1-4, 713
25:18, 838
26:18, 270
27:6, 174
28, 133, 1085
28:10, 786
28:29, 658
28:49, 15
29:18, 305
29:23, 841
30:3, 832
30:15-20, 47, 827
31:6, 567, 844
31:8, 567, 844
31:30, 204
32:5, 781
32:5-6, 1116
32:8, 537, 1112
32:8-9, 44
32:15, 830
32:18, 793
32:20, 781
32:32, 841
32:35, 486
32:35-36, 850
32:43, 252, 537, 843, 845
33, 818, 840
33:2, 445, 840
33:3, 20, 196
33:26, 396
34, 818
34:1, 778
34:1-6, 778
34:6, 778
34:9-12, 781
34:10, 779

Joshua 1:5, 567
2:1-15, 39, 41
2:18, 830
5:13-15, 666
6:4, 1182
6:8, 1182
6:13, 1182
8:29, 280
10:12-14, 1183
22:19, 643
24:2, 2
24:15, 512
24:32, 2

Judges
2:11, 676, 832
3:12, 676
3:27, 1182
4:4, 1207
4:4-16, 39
5:4, 840
5:19, 133
6:33, 39
6:34, 1182
10:6, 39
13:1, 39
13:8-23, 44
18:6, 895
18:31, 509
19, 502
19:18, 509
19:20, 897
20:1-3, 1141
21:1-8, 1141

Ruth
3:3, 48
4:9-11, 718
4:11, 838

1 Samuel
1:17, 895
1:19, 639
3:19-20, 39
4:4, 396
7:5-14, 39
7:5-16, 1141
7:15-17, 39
10:1, 48
10:5-6, 1177
10:10, 1177
13:3, 1182
13:14, 825, 830
16:15, 1091
16:17-18, 490
16:34-37, 1091
17:26, 39
17:32, 39
17:34-37, 39
17:45-47, 39

2 Samuel
1:12, 838
1:14, 48
5:2, 1091
5:7, 561
6:2, 939
6:6-10, 988
6:17, 41
7:1-2, 466
7:1-16, 356
7:1-17, 246
7:5-16, 41
7:6-16, 825
7:11, 509
7:14, 418, 537, 632, 845, 854, 1112
12:20, 48
14:2, 48
22:3, 567
22:11, 903
22:16, 903

1 Kings
3:5-14, 1201
3:7, 1091
4:29-34, 980
5:3, 466
8:27, 439, 466, 509, 537
8:46, 485
10:23-24, 1201
16:24, 1075
17:1, 779, 854
18:12, 972
19:10, 42
19:14, 42
19:16, 48
21:8-13, 1125
22:17, 1091
22:19-23, 44
22:20, 46
22:21-22, 1120

2 Kings
1:10-16, 779
2:1-12, 97
2:9-16, 972
5:1-15, 930
9:22, 716, 1211
17, 1075
19:22, 487
23, 1147
23:29-30, 133

1 Chronicles
11:2, 1091
11:5, 561
16:13, 199
16:36, 661
17:13, 162, 1112
21:1, 278
22:6-10, 895
22:10, 1112
28:9, 1169
29:18, 1169

2 Chronicles
1:10, 1201
5:2, 561
9:22-23, 1201
20:7, 837, 838
26:16, 962
29:15-18, 511
35:20-24, 133
36:22-23, 288

Ezra
1:1-4, 288
4, 1075
9—10, 389

Nehemiah
8, 979, 1142
8:6, 661
9:7, 2, 3, 38, 40
9:12, 1091
9:26, 42
10:38-39, 3
13:2, 43

Esther
1:1, 754
3:16, 707
4:7, 968
4:9-17, 42
4:17, 377
15:13, 45

Job
1—2, 44
1:1, 830
1:6, 172
1:6-8, 1077
1:6-12, 1112
1:9-11, 284
1:12, 913, 1077
2:1, 172
2:1-6, 1112
2:1-7, 1077
2:6, 913
3:5, 607
4:1, 381
4:16, 607, 1239
5:11, 837
5:12, 837
5:17, 326, 837
5:17-26, 674
7:11-16, 41
10:18, 41
13:10, 326
14:2, 837
14:4-5, 830
14:12, 440
14:20-21, 838
17—42, 607
19:26, 829
20:22, 838
22:4, 326
23:2, 41
23:10, 832
24:4-12, 838
24:24-25, 837
27:6, 832
27:21, 837
28, 1201
28:28, 1201
30:20-23, 41
32:3, 708
33, 1001
33:19, 326
37:9, 439, 903
37:10, 903
38:1, 903
38:7, 172
38:22, 439
38:37, 439, 1201
41:1-11, 128
42:1-6, 326
42:5, 41
42:7, 949

Psalms
1, 47
1:3, 833
2, 1112
2:1-2, 479, 824
2:2, 162
2:4, 832
2:6, 561
2:7, 153, 162, 418 537, 824, 843, 845, 1112
2:8, 562
2:8-9, 635
2:11, 602, 832
2:12, 832
3:6, 829
3:13, 538
4:3, 827
4:5, 832
7:15, 838
8:4, 418
8:4-6, 361, 537, 1016
9:10, 639
9:11, 561
10:16, 155
11:4-6, 830
14:1, 1169
14:2, 831
14:7, 561
16:3, 196
16:8-11, 96, 479, 1228
16:10, 153, 537, 824, 825

16:11, 601
18:9, 840
18:10, 396
18:20, 991
18:44, 228
21:7-9, 830
21:23, 510
22:3, 485
22:4, 829
22:22, 510
22:27, 562
22:28, 155
23, 119, 509, 680
23:5, 48
24:3-6, 991
24:7-10, 396
26:4-7, 991
27:7, 829
28:9, 1091
29:1, 1112
29:3, 396
30:19, 830
32:9, 832
32:10, 735
33:2, 522
33:3, 522
33:6, 439
33:8, 602
33:12-18, 830
33:13-17, 538
34:9, 196
34:11-12, 228
34:12-14, 481
34:12-16, 538
36:9, 657, 830
36:11, 643
36:35-37, 830
37:2, 837
37:11, 827
37:14, 837
39:1, 838
39:7-9, 480
40:4, 840
41:1, 318
41:10, 824
41:13, 661
41:14, 130
42:2, 737
44:7-8, 843
44:22, 1092
45, 418
45:6, 665
45:7, 48, 694
46:3, 832
46:8-9, 840
48, 1210
48:1-2, 561
48:2, 561
48:8, 3, 39
49, 1001
49:14-15, 830
50:2, 561
50:3-19, 830
50:12, 832
50:18-20, 716
50:19, 830
51, 86
51:1, 735
51:2, 991
51:3, 485
51:6, 991
51:7, 991
51:10, 991
51:11, 489
53:6, 561
54:23, 831
55:17, 572
55:22, 538, 676
56:8, 840
61:5, 830
61:13, 832
63:1, 737
64:2, 782
64:6, 1083
68:17, 445, 840
68:31, 930
68:31-33, 830
69:22-23, 161
69:26, 824
69:28, 563, 624
69:29, 840
69:33, 318
71:20, 460
71:22, 487
72:1-4, 621
72:7, 895
72:8, 562
72:18-19, 130
72:19, 396
73:2, 270
73:12, 837
74:1, 1091
74:2, 561
74:13-14, 128
76:2, 729
76:9, 840
76:11-12, 562
77:20, 1091
77:36-37, 830
78:9, 1083
78:11, 270
78:14, 1091
78:18-20, 837
78:41, 487
78:52, 270, 1091
78:68, 561
78:70-71, 1091
78:70-72, 1091
79:13, 1091
80:1, 1091
82, 44
82:1, 729
82:3-4, 318
82:6-8, 454
82:14-15, 838
85:9, 831
85:10, 895
85:12, 831
86:9, 541
86:12, 541
86:15, 1191
87:1-3, 3, 39
87:2, 561
88:21, 830
88:51-52, 778
89, 246
89:5, 196, 561
89:6, 1112
89:7, 486
89:8, 939
89:12, 561
89:38, 48
89:53, 130
90:4, 342, 538, 739
90:6, 425
94:1, 1083
94:7-11, 850
94:8-11, 845
94:11, 845
95:7-11, 480
96, 621
96:4-5, 389
96:7, 843
96:10, 389
96:11, 603
96:12, 603
96:13, 785, 840
98:3, 562, 838
98:4-5, 522
99:2, 561
99:3, 486, 541
100:3, 1091
101:2, 196
101:5, 962
101:26-28, 843
102:16, 561
102:18, 832
102:25, 419
103:4, 843, 1118
104, 662
104:4, 448, 537, 1122
104:15, 48
104:24, 1201
105:6, 199
106:9, 1091
106:48, 130
109:4, 845
110:1, 43, 96, 174, 360, 416, 479, 537, 824, 1016
110:4, 3, 360, 537, 646, 729, 730, 966, 1204
110:10, 832
111:9, 486
111:10, 1201
113:7-8, 837
115:12, 838
117:18, 830
117:19-20, 830
117:22, 199, 1126, 1127, 1128
118, 524
118:22, 416, 479, 480, 824, 838
118:26, 827
118:27, 658
119:1-3, 196
119:105, 658
119:130, 657
121:5-6, 132
122:1, 832
132:4-5, 41
132:11, 247, 824
132:13, 561
134:6-7, 15
135:19, 838
136:16, 1091
137:1-3, 561
139:4, 838
139:16, 563, 840
141:3, 838
143:6, 737
146:10, 561
147:7, 522
147:12, 561
148:2, 44
148:4, 439
148:5, 832
149:3, 522
150, 662
150:6, 832

Proverbs
1:1, 980
1:7, 828, 832, 1201
1:20-23, 1201
1:23-33, 1203
2:6, 1202
2:21-22, 830
3:4, 832
3:5, 676
3:8, 538
3:9, 832
3:11-12, 326, 419, 480, 695, 850
3:19, 1201
3:34, 420, 481, 537, 538, 540, 832, 837
6, 1203
6:16-19, 1191
6:19, 718
8:1, 163
8:17-20, 541
8:22-31, 957, 1202
8:30, 957
8:32-36, 1201
9, 508
9:1-6, 1201
9:10, 1201
10:12, 837
10:23, 601
11:12, 838
11:13, 782
11:27, 606
11:30, 832
11:31, 481, 1073
14:21, 838
14:27, 827
14:29, 838
14:31, 318
15:10, 326
15:32, 326
15:33, 1201
16:20, 602
16:32, 838
17:3, 832
18:17, 540, 832
20:19, 782
20:27, 674
21:6, 827
23:3, 268
23:6, 268
24:12, 831
24:21, 231
25:9, 782
25:14, 614
26:5, 709
26:11, 538, 819, 839
26:22, 614
27:1, 838
28:21, 838
29:20, 838
29:22, 838
29:23, 837
30:20, 716
31:9, 827

Ecclesiastes
1:1, 980
1:12, 980
3:11, 252
7:6, 601
7:20, 485
12:8-14, 980
12:13, 831

Song of Solomon
6:10, 539

Isaiah
1, 980
1:1-13, 673
1:1-31, 621
1:2, 228, 497, 673, 1112
1:2-3, 639
1:4, 487
1:6, 48
1:9-10, 841
1:10, 228, 497, 673
1:11-17, 838
1:16-20, 674
1:17, 838
1:21, 716
1:23, 827
2:2, 561
2:2-3, 756
2:2-4, 226, 331, 562, 643
2:2-5, 753
2:3, 562, 666, 756
2:6-22, 857, 962
2:10, 1085
2:13, 567
2:19, 1085
2:21, 1085
3, 1019
3:3-4, 830
3:8, 1210
3:9, 841
4, 1019
4:3, 196, 840
4:4, 561
5:6, 833
5:7, 838
5:9, 537
5:20, 657
6, 47, 824, 1120
6:1-8, 486
6:1-9, 485
6:1-12, 956
6:2-3, 441
6:3, 396, 486, 524, 662, 663, 1236
6:9-10, 479, 536, 791, 824
7:14, 313
7:20, 1183
8:2, 718
8:4, 199
8:7, 1183
8:9, 15
8:12-13, 174, 487, 839
8:13, 671
8:14, 480, 838, 1127, 1128
8:17-18, 849
8:18, 1094
8:19-22, 658
9:1, 386
9:6, 1181
9:7, 895
9:12, 326
10:3, 265, 864
10:12, 561
10:12-19, 962
11:1-2, 490
11:1-3, 491
11:1-10, 895
11:2-3, 1120
11:12, 756
12:6, 601
13:6, 264
13:9, 264
13:10, 1030
13:13, 1030
14:5-23, 841
14:13, 133, 561
14:31, 1183
14:32, 3, 39, 561
17:12-14, 561
18:1-6, 561
18:7, 562
19:1, 840
19:19-25, 331
23:1-14, 1211
23:15-16, 1211
23:17, 232
24, 997
24:15, 831
24:21-22, 841
25, 1026
25:6, 226
25:6-8, 502
25:9, 499, 601
26:3, 1169
26:16-18, 716, 1210
26:17, 1210
26:20, 844, 861
27:1, 1033
28:16, 161, 199, 317, 422, 480, 538, 561, 817, 838, 920, 1126, 1127, 1128
29:1-8, 561
29:10, 161
29:11-12, 1085
29:13, 830, 831, 1164
29:19, 838
29:23, 487
29:24, 614
30:19, 561
31:4, 840
31:4-9, 561
31:27, 840
32:15, 195
32:17, 895
33:13, 228
34:2, 863
34:4, 1030
34:8, 264
34:10, 461
35:6, 751
37:32, 561
40, 752, 838, 980
40:3, 228

40:5, 396
40:6, 375, 985
40:6-7, 537, 837
40:6-8, 480, 481, 671, 838
40:9, 756
40:10, 840
40:11, 831, 1091
40:13, 86
40:28-3.., 413
41:4, 337
41:8, 337, 830, 837, 838
41:8-9, 209
41:8-10, 2
41:20, 639
42:1, 491
42:5, 537
42:6, 247
42:6-7, 673, 1003
42:8, 183
42:25, 526
43:3-7, 1001
43:4, 337
43:5-6, 756
43:6, 1112
43:7, 786
43:10, 164, 283
43:20-2.., 199, 538, 838, 917
43:21, 20
44:2, 337
44:6, 283, 337, 413, 1017
44:9-20, 1126
44:28, 817
45:1, 155
45:2-3, 673
45:7, 657
45:14, 537, 481
45:21, 247, 346, 415, 416
45:22, 15, 562
46:3, 858
46:3-4, 1091
46:13, 561
48:2, 486
48:12, 283, 337, 1017
48:20, 15, 1001
48:21, 1091
49:1-6, 753
49:6, 15, 251, 333, 415, 479, 486, 536, 548, 549, 562, 563, 658, 824, 886, 971
49:6-7, 1003
49:6-8, 247
49:10, 132, 1092
49:12, 756
49:21, 1210
49:23, 337, 481
50:1, 485, 1210
51:3, 341, 561
51:11, 551
51:17, 133
51:22, 133
51:22-23, 133
52:1, 561, 1195
52:3, 1091
52:5, 540, 674, 831, 832, 833
52:7, 561, 894
52:13, 1, 271, 606
53, 86, 115, 256, 271, 279, 280, 356, 423, 523, 524, 539, 569, 642, 826, 830, 930, 1055, 1069, 1092, 1181
53:1-12, 180, 830, 962, 1096
53:3-5, 1055
53:4, 839, 1092
53:4-6, 271
53:4-7, 1180
53:4-9, 1181
53:4-12, 174, 275
53:5, 1092, 1181
53:6, 196, 271, 1092, 1181
53:7, 284, 641, 642, 838, 1092
53:7-8, 18, 271, 280, 536, 824, 930
53:9, 481, 838, 1092, 1096, 1181
53:10, 282
53:10-11, 271
53:11, 271, 1055
53:11-12, 839
53:12, 271, 272, 280
54:1, 236, 574, 831, 1210
54:5, 1210
54:6, 1210
54:10, 895
55:1-6, 737
55:3, 479, 537, 824, 825
55:8, 485
55:9, 485
56, 980
56:3-5, 18
56:7, 832
56:11, 1091
57:15, 485, 542
57:17, 196, 326
57:19, 20
58:4-5, 673
58:6, 833, 1143
58:6-10, 673
58:8, 396
58:9, 831
59:1, 485
59:2, 485
60:1-3, 396
60:3-16, 756
60:5, 601
60:14, 337
60:17, 235, 744
61, 490, 826
61:1, 49, 962
61:1-2, 271, 491, 1143
61:2, 1143
61:3, 48
61:8, 246
61:10, 601
62:11, 15
63:1-6, 871
63:10, 42
63:10-11, 489
63:11, 1091, 1092
63:11-14, 1092
63:14, 1091
64:1, 360, 439
64:10, 486
65:9, 199
65:17, 331, 337, 439, 538, 854
65:17-18, 1210
65:17-19, 1210
66:1-2, 414, 509, 824
66:2, 827, 830, 962
66:5, 831
66:7-8, 539
66:7-11, 1210
66:15, 840
66:18, 397
66:19, 755
66:22, 331, 337, 439
66:24, 461, 674, 831

Jeremiah
1:5-7, 971
1:14-15, 1183
2:6, 1091
2:12-13, 828
2:13, 120
2:14, 1032
2:17, 1091
2:20, 1211
2:26, 838
2:30, 326
3:1, 1211
3:1-6, 1211
3:1-14, 716
3:15, 1091
3:20, 1210
3:22, 832, 1112
4:3, 228
4:4, 42, 228, 673
4:29, 1085
4:31, 1210
5:3, 326
5:4, 832
5:15, 838
6:8, 326, 643
6:10, 42
6:15, 265
6:22-26, 1085
7:2, 228
7:11, 511, 674, 831
7:28, 326
9:15, 1183
9:23, 497, 838
9:23-24, 830
9:25-26, 673
9:26, 228, 838
10:12, 15
10:21, 1091
12:3, 863
12:15, 247, 415, 416
13:17, 1091
13:20, 1183
13:21, 1210
14, 779
14:9, 786
14:11-12, 1085
15:1-2, 1085
16:4-5, 1085
16:19, 15
17:13, 120
17:24-25, 735
18:4-6, 831
18:11-21, 1085
21:3, 827
21:3-10, 1085
22:22, 1091
22:30, 840
23, 1092
23:1-2, 1091
23:1-4, 1091
23:1-6, 1091
23:3, 1091
23:14, 841
23:15, 1183
23:18, 782
23:20, 331
23:22, 782
24:7, 832
25:31, 840
25:34, 863
25:34-36, 1091
25:38, 643
26:20-24, 42
28:26, 1127
29, 896
29:7, 896
30:14, 326
30:24, 331
31, 248, 249
31:9, 1112
31:10, 1091
31:31, 207, 246
31:31-33, 247
31:31-34, 240, 269, 331, 334, 537, 543, 564, 645, 670, 793, 844, 849, 969, 1012
31:33, 195, 670
31:33-34, 417, 1204
31:34, 277
32:20-21, 1094
32:40, 246
35:13, 326
38:2, 1085
38:31, 246
38:31-34, 844, 845
40, 1021
43:6-7, 289
44:1, 289
44:11-14, 1085
46:10, 1183
46:14, 289
47:2, 1183
47:48, 331
49:18, 841
49:39, 331
50:5, 246
50:29-32, 962
50:31, 264
50:40, 841
51, 1183
51:8, 48
51:14, 1183
51:25, 1183
51:26, 1127
51:27, 1182

Lamentations
1:12, 264
2:1, 264
2:22, 264
4:20, 677

Ezekiel
1, 396
1:1-26, 956
1:24-28, 177
1:28, 396
2:5, 838
2:8-3:3, 853
3:1, 838
3:12, 972
3:14, 972
4:14, 993
4:16, 1085
5, 1085
5:5, 561
7:7-12, 264
7:14, 1182
7:19, 264
7:25, 896
9:1-11, 1031
9:3-6, 1085
9:4, 1085
9:6, 511, 918
11:19, 490, 673
11:19-20, 793
13:8-16, 133
13:13, 903
14:6, 1012
14:14, 38, 831
14:20, 38, 831
14:21, 1085
16, 112
16:8-14, 1210
16:9, 48
16:15-16, 1211
16:27-28, 326
16:46-59, 841
16:49-50, 962
18:4, 485
18:31, 490
18:32, 829
20:12, 487
20:41, 487
21:15, 863
21:31, 837
23:5, 1211
23:18-20, 326
27:13, 985
28:1-19, 841
28:2, 50
33:1, 497
33:11-27, 829
34, 1092
34:1-10, 1091
34:2, 614
34:11, 1093
34:11-17, 1091
34:11-22, 1091
34:12, 264
34:23, 1091
34:25, 246, 895
36:24-32, 563
36:25-27, 793
36:26, 490, 673
36:27, 195
36:35, 341
37:1-14, 332, 793
37:9-14, 493
37:14, 195
37:17, 854
37:24, 1091
37:26, 246
37:27, 442, 854
37:28, 487
38, 561
38:6, 1183
38:12, 561
38:14-16, 331
38:14-17, 331
38:15, 1183
40, 770, 854, 988
40:2, 561
43:6-9, 988
44:5-9, 1195
44:9, 988
44:10-14, 988
44:15-16, 988
44:19, 988
44:20, 988
44:21, 988
44:22, 988
44:23, 989
46:10, 1091
47:1-12, 561
47:13, 548
47:22, 548

Daniel
1, 60
1:3-17, 1104
1:8, 377
2, 62
2:18, 782
2:19, 782
2:20-23, 1201
2:27, 782
29, 340
2:28, 340, 782
2:28-29, 340
2:28-45, 331
2:29, 782
2:30, 782
2:45, 340, 852
2:47, 782
3, 1240
3:7, 831
3:25, 45, 1112
4:3, 1094
4:9, 782
5:20, 962
6:10-12, 943
6:27, 1094
7, 50, 57, 61, 336, 338, 396, 539, 718, 719, 853, 959, 997, 1033, 1160, 1164, 1180
7:1-8, 853
7:2-7, 128
7:3, 232
7:3-8, 232, 988
7:7, 539, 853
7:7-8, 52, 342
7:9, 47, 853, 1030
7:9-12, 338
7:10, 624, 840, 851
7:13, 338, 396, 481, 853, 869, 1145
7:13-14, 337, 360, 396
7:14, 155, 338, 356
7:18, 718
7:21, 339
7:22, 718
7:23-27, 52
7:24, 342

8:10, 539
9:24-27, 63
9:27, 852
10, 853
10:5-6, 853
10:9, 853
10:10, 853
10:12, 853
10:13, 44, 666, 730
10:14, 331
10:18, 853
10:21, 666, 730
11:35, 342
11:36, 50
11:40-45, 331
12:1, 44, 624, 656, 666, 840
12:1-2, 332
12:1-3, 730
12:1-4, 1084, 1160
12:1-13, 331
12:2, 331, 776
12:2-3, 65, 621
12:10, 336, 342
12:11-12, 1160

Hosea
1:2, 1211
1:6, 538, 735
1:9, 538, 735
1:9-10, 838
1:10, 1112
2:1, 538, 735
2:16, 1208, 1210
2:16-20, 246
2:19-20, 1210
2:19-23, 639
2:23, 318, 538, 542, 735
3:3, 1211
3:4-5, 331
4:15, 1211
6:6, 838
9:7, 265
10:8, 1085
10:12, 831
11:1, 1112
11:3-4, 1091
12:13, 779
14:2, 522
14:2-5, 1012

Joel
1, 1183
1:15, 264
2, 562, 826
2:1, 264, 561, 562, 1182
2:3, 341, 643
2:11, 264
2:12, 832
2:15, 562
2:17-39, 944
2:23, 562
2:28, 332, 562
2:28-29, 490
2:28-32, 21, 113, 195, 536, 824, 1178, 1218
2:29, 1207
2:31, 264, 859
2:32, 160, 163, 416, 561, 562, 643, 1072
3:1, 375
3:1-3, 493
3:1-5, 489, 904
3:4, 858
3:5, 630
3:13, 871
3:16, 561
3:18, 264, 561
3:21, 561

Amos 1, 1030
1:2, 561, 840
2:10, 1091
3:2, 621
3:7, 782
4:6-11, 326
4:11, 841
5, 826
5:18, 658, 857
5:18-20, 264
5:20, 658
5:25-27, 824
5:27, 467
6:1, 561
6:6, 48
6:8, 962
7:4, 1183
8:10, 838
9:11-12, 247, 346, 415, 416, 479, 536, 824
9:11-15, 643, 825

Obadiah
1:1, 962
1:17, 561

Jonah
1:3, 244
1:17, 244
3:2, 244
3:5, 244
4:1, 244
4:2, 1014
4:2-11, 244

Micah
1:3, 840
3:12, 561
4:1, 561
4:1-3, 226, 331
4:1-5, 753
4:2, 562
4:9-10, 1210
5:2-4, 1091
7:14, 1091

Nahum
3:4, 716, 1211

Habakkuk
1:5, 537, 824
2:1-3, 783
2:2-5, 873
2:3-4, 365, 367, 844, 861, 999
2:4, 38, 365
3:3, 840
7:1-8, 480
7:4, 783
7:8, 783
7:13-14, 783

Zephaniah
1:2-6, 1036
1:7, 264
1:7-9, 840
1:12, 840
1:14, 264
1:14-15, 1030
1:15, 658
1:16, 1182
2:3, 962
3:2, 326
3:8, 866
3:9, 1036
3:12-13, 962
3:14, 561

Haggai
2:6, 419, 843
2:17, 326
2:22, 840

Zechariah
1, 62, 1030
1:3, 838
1:6, 326
1:17, 561
2:6, 827
2:10-11, 210
2:12, 643
3, 818
3:1-2, 1077
3:1-5, 278, 778
3:2, 459, 538
3:8, 840
4:4, 1120
4:6, 1120
4:10, 642, 1120
4:11-14, 854
4:14, 998
5:3, 992
5:4, 992
6:14, 838
8:20-23, 753, 756
9, 1026
9:1, 548
9:9, 962, 992
9:14, 840
9:16, 1091
10:3, 1091
11:4-17, 992
11:5, 1091
11:15-17, 1091
12, 264, 997
12:1-9, 561
12:10, 195, 338, 481, 490, 571, 869
13:1, 992
13:6-7, 828
14:3, 561
14:3-5, 857
14:5, 827
14:7, 659
14:8, 833, 992
14:9, 155
14:10, 561
14:12-15, 561
14:16, 992
14:16-19, 562, 992
14:20, 993
14:21, 993

Malachi
1:11, 181, 675, 691, 827, 1072, 1230
1:14, 181, 675, 827, 1230
3:3, 326, 511
3:3-5, 840
3:5, 838
3:12, 602
3:16, 840
3:17, 270, 838
3:19, 831
3:23, 264
4:1, 267, 831
4:1-6, 264
4:5, 779
4:5-6, 816

New Testament

Matthew
1:1, 392, 1229
1:1-17, 725
1:2, 43
1:2-17, 43
1:5, 39, 41
1:6, 43
1:17, 43
1:21, 392, 728
1:25, 639
2:1-12, 392, 725
2:2, 605
2:6, 206
2:10, 602
2:13-19, 35
2:14, 659
2:22-23, 385
2:23, 387, 388
3:2, 944
3:4-6, 1229
3:7-10, 209, 621
3:9, 5, 43
3:11, 113
3:13-17, 331
3:15, 573
4:1, 1166
4:1-11, 728, 1167, 1170
4:3, 1166
4:4, 737
4:10, 528
4:12, 385
4:12-16, 385, 392, 725
4:13, 387
4:15, 386, 387
4:16, 385
4:17, 753, 944
4:19, 752
4:23, 386, 581, 725, 726, 1143
4:24, 388
4:25, 388
5, 634, 725, 997
5:3, 315, 568, 634
5:5, 568, 634, 827, 963
5:7, 735
5:9, 896
5:10, 574
5:10-11, 242, 569
5:11-12, 914
5:12, 569
5:13, 709
5:13-16, 753
5:16, 569, 817, 1136, 1229
5:17, 854
5:17-19, 581
5:17-20, 728, 913
5:17-48, 725, 728
5:21-26, 1229
5:23-24, 691, 946
5:25-26, 572
5:27-28, 995, 1088
5:28, 715
5:31-32, 995
5:32, 713
5:33-37, 992
5:34-35, 568
5:36, 568
5:37, 568
5:39-48, 572
5:42, 710
5:44, 576
5:48, 838
6:1-4, 1229
6:1-18, 725
6:2, 1142
6:4, 896
6:5, 1142
6:5-8, 944
6:6, 896
6:7-13, 1229
6:9, 487, 1229
6:9-10, 634
6:9-13, 181, 572
6:10, 946
6:12, 1229
6:14-15, 1229
6:16-18, 1229
6:18, 896
6:19-21, 1052
6:24, 567, 634, 674
6:29, 41
6:31-34, 567
6:33, 1054
7:1, 623, 734, 735
7:1-2, 574, 674, 1193
7:3, 307
7:6, 572, 675, 690
7:7, 568
7:7-8, 943
7:7-12, 945
7:12, 572
7:15, 615
7:15-20, 224
7:16, 568
7:21, 674, 699
7:24-27, 557
7:29, 581, 726
8, 206
8:1-4, 1144
8:2-4, 990
8:5-13, 209, 390, 392, 725, 753
8:11, 6, 502, 643, 1162
8:11-12, 5, 6, 389, 461, 581, 753
8:12, 209, 658, 1162
9:1-8, 1144
9:9-13, 728
9:13, 574, 733
9:17, 725
9:18-19, 1144
9:20-22, 1144
9:35, 386, 581, 725, 726, 728, 1143
9:35-11:1, 729
10:3, 1005
10:5-6, 392, 581, 725
10:6, 206, 752, 838
10:7, 753
10:9, 992
10:10, 992
10:11-14, 991
10:12, 991
10:13, 991
10:15, 265, 459
10:16, 1092
10:17, 386
13:54, 581
10:17, 725, 726, 913, 1144
10:19, 165
10:23, 206, 467
10:24, 913
10:26, 1021
10:28, 460, 1092
10:32, 571
10:35-36, 1221
10:41, 728
10:42, 1038
11, 685, 900
11:3, 861
11:15, 571
11:16-19, 1202
11:18-19, 990
11:19, 502, 1201
11:20-24, 621, 1144
11:22, 265
11:24, 265, 581
11:25-27, 639, 1021, 1202
11:25-30, 162
11:28, 685
11:29, 962
11:29-30, 675
12:1-8, 728
12:7, 733
12:9, 386, 726
12:9-14, 1144
12:18-21, 577
12:22-32, 331
12:26, 43
12:28, 631, 632
12:33, 573
12:36, 265
12:39, 781
12:42, 41, 1201, 1202
12:45, 570
13:9, 571
13:10-15, 581
13:11, 783
13:16-17, 725
13:17, 224
13:31-32, 392
13:35, 420
13:44-45, 1052
13:52, 581, 586, 913, 1229
13:54, 386, 726, 1144, 1201
13:55, 187, 190, 616, 617,

1004
13:56, 1004
15, 581
15:3-9, 1163
15:8, 831
15:10-11, 990, 1144
15:13, 573
15:13-14, 728
15:17-18, 378
15:21-28, 206, 390, 392, 725
15:24, 163, 206, 581
15:26, 206
16, 205
16:1, 1166
16:4, 781
16:16, 417
16:16-17, 1021
16:17, 1229
16:18, 728, 915, 992
16:18-19, 223, 921
16:19, 188, 915, 992
16:21-27, 752
16:22, 1180
16:23, 915
16:27, 396
17:2, 658
17:3-4, 816
17:5, 317, 538
17:24-27, 725, 728, 1164
18:10, 45
18:15, 224, 568
18:15-16, 305
18:15-17, 305
18:16, 718
18:17, 224, 728
18:17-20, 305
18:18, 224
18:20, 1230
18:21-22, 1229
18:35, 1229
19:3, 1166
19:3-9, 581
19:3-12, 995
19:9, 713
19:17, 1229
19:20, 711
19:22, 711
19:24, 1052
19:26, 1052
19:27, 621
19:28, 643, 725, 792, 913
20:16, 320
20:28, 1002, 1180
21:1-9, 992
21:5, 962
21:9, 663, 827, 1230
21:12, 1162, 1164
21:12-16, 1161
21:13, 831
21:21-22, 945
21:39, 567
21:41, 581
21:42, 838, 1127
21:43, 207, 581, 725, 728
22:3, 581
22:7, 727
22:8, 581
22:13, 658
22:14, 574
22:18, 1166
22:21, 524
22:30, 45
22:32, 43
22:34-40, 634
22:35, 1166
22:37, 1229
23, 161, 386, 575, 725, 726, 728
23:1-7, 728
23:1-12, 1229
23:2, 581
23:6, 1142
23:8-12, 728
23:9, 1229
23:12, 568, 962
23:16, 658
23:24, 658
23:34, 166, 224, 581, 726, 913, 1144
23:34-36, 992, 1202
23:35, 112, 718, 1085
23:37, 718
23:37-39, 1202
23:38, 581
24, 51, 301, 336, 540, 572, 1095, 1180, 1181
24:3, 856
24:5, 51
24:8, 1181
24:9, 719
24:10-12, 570
24:11-12, 615
24:14, 386, 719, 753
24:16, 912
24:21, 1179
24:23-24, 51
24:27, 856
24:30, 338, 396, 571, 1230
24:31, 827
24:36, 266
24:37-39, 839
24:42-23, 571
24:43, 570, 866, 869
24:43-44, 265, 266
24:44, 266, 1200
25:29, 709
25:30, 658
25:31, 396
25:31-46, 505
25:34, 420, 634
25:35, 895
26:6-13, 573
26:14-16, 992
26:26, 1162
26:26-29, 686, 1229
26:28, 245, 1162
26:29, 1230
26:31, 877, 880
26:32, 385
26:36-46, 1167
26:39, 946
26:41, 574
26:42, 946
26:52, 188, 571
26:58, 719
26:60, 718
26:69-75, 719
26:73, 387
27:3-10, 992
27:24, 928
27:25, 160
27:51, 810
27:51-53, 1181
27:52-53, 332
27:54, 392
27:56, 1005
28:1, 680
28:7, 385
28:10, 385
28:15, 581
28:16-20, 385, 390, 392, 399, 725, 771
28:18-20, 77, 97, 904, 1229
28:19, 113, 115, 120, 121, 207, 258, 498, 719, 753, 754, 770
20, 1237
28:19-20, 492, 762, 877
28:20, 719, 1230

Mark
1:1, 892
1:4, 1229
1:8, 1194
1:10, 489
1:12-13, 1167, 1170
1:13, 567, 1166
1:14-15, 753
1:15, 621, 864
1:16-20, 921
1:17, 752, 763
1:21-28, 391, 1144
1:23-28, 922
1:26, 1118
1:29, 1144
1:29-31, 1221
1:32-34, 922
1:39, 1143
1:40-44, 990
1:40-45, 1144
2:1-12, 1082, 1144
2:5, 382
2:7, 162
2:17, 574
3:1-6, 1144
3:4, 77
3:7, 1033
3:8, 545, 1005
3:20-21, 616
3:21, 722
3:28-29, 305
3:31, 616
3:31-33, 722
3:35, 674
4:9, 571
4:11, 783
4:14, 793
4:22, 1021
4:23, 571
5:1-20, 753
5:21-24, 1144
5:21-43, 1206
5:22, 609
5:25-34, 1144
5:34, 895
5:35-43, 1144
6, 49
6:2, 1144
6:5, 187, 190, 616, 617, 1004
6:6, 753
6:8, 992
6:9, 992
6:10, 991
6:12, 1201
6:13, 48, 437
6:32, 710
6:52-53, 1171
6:56, 1118
7, 575, 581, 996
7:1-2, 996
7:5, 996
7:6, 831
7:6-13, 995, 1163, 1164
7:8-9, 1164
7:10-12, 1164
7:11, 1163
7:11-12, 1164
7:13, 1164
7:14-15, 990, 995
7:15, 995, 1144
7:17, 995
7:17-19, 995
7:19, 378, 581
7:20-23, 995
7:22, 963
7:24-30, 753, 1206
7:27, 391
8, 892
8:11, 1166
8:27, 711
8:28, 396
8:31-18, 752
8:34, 921
8:35-37, 986
9:2-8, 175
9:4 816
9:5 816
9:7 317, 779
9:42, 573
9:42-48, 621
9:42-49, 73
9:48, 461, 831
9:50, 898
10:1-12, 1088
10:2, 1166
10:2-12, 995
10:6, 831
10:11, 713
10:13-16, 711, 712
10:13-45, 711
10:17-31, 710
10:21, 711
10:32-34, 709
10:34, 710
10:35, 709
10:41-45, 269
10:45, 269, 282, 1002, 1092, 1180
10:46, 709, 711
10:52, 711
11:1-10, 992
11:9, 663
11:9-10, 711
11:15, 633, 1162, 1164
11:15-18, 1161
11:17, 944
11:22-24, 945
12:8, 567
12:10, 838
12:13, 1166
12:17, 324
12:21, 948
12:26-27, 965
12:30, 831
12:31, 568
12:35-37, 155, 667
12:36, 964
12:39, 1142
12:40, 1220
12:41-44, 1164
13, 51, 58, 301, 336, 1030, 1036, 1164, 1180, 1200
13:6, 51
13:8, 1181
13:9, 165, 913, 1144
13:10, 753, 755, 770
13:14, 585, 901, 912
13:20-23, 73
13:21-22, 51, 152
13:22, 1199
13:26, 338, 396
13:32, 266
13:35, 1200
14:9, 770
14:10, 992
14:11, 992
14:21, 573
14:22, 269, 780, 1162
14:22-25, 686, 793
14:24, 245, 780, 1162
14:27, 921
14:27-31, 73
14:28, 385, 904, 921
14:29, 921
14:36, 945
14:38, 574, 1199
14:50, 921
14:51, 711
14:51-52, 711
14:58, 633
14:62, 338
14:67, 388
14:70, 387
15:39, 391
15:40, 1005
15:46, 711
15:47, 1005
16:1, 1005
16:2, 680
16:5, 711
16:6, 388
16:7, 385, 904
16:9-20, 981
16:15, 770

Luke
1, 13, 644
1:1, 8
1:1-4, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 23, 272, 788, 877, 951, 1227
1:2, 763
1:3, 789, 1206
1:4, 9
1:5, 14, 905
1:5-13, 244
1:5-23, 562
1:6, 465
1:8-56, 243
1:19-22, 749
1:28, 660
1:29, 244
1:32, 43
1:36, 1004
1:38, 467, 723, 1100
1:39, 244
1:41, 244, 905, 972
1:43, 669
1:46-47, 601
1:47, 1083
1:48, 1100
1:51-53, 962
1:54, 207
1:54-55, 209
1:55, 38, 207
1:67, 905, 972
1:68, 780
1:68-79, 20
1:70, 346
1:73, 43, 209
1:75, 581
1:76, 669
1:76-79, 824
1:78, 709
1:79, 894, 1021
2, 894
2:1, 767
2:8, 659
2:11, 19, 175, 669
2:14, 391
2:15-20, 1021
2:19, 426, 723
2:22, 780
2:29, 174
2:29-32, 886
2:29-35, 789
2:30-32, 824
2:32, 13, 391, 563
2:34, 19
2:35, 1021
2:37, 658
2:38, 40, 1002
2:40, 1201
2:51, 723
2:52, 1201
3, 14
3:3, 269
3:3-6, 824
3:4-6, 391
3:8, 5, 209
3:10-14, 243
3:16, 113, 566, 742, 903, 905
3:21, 903
3:21-22, 19, 494, 1123
3:22, 114, 903
3:23-38, 43
3:31, 43
3:34, 43, 209
3:37, 43
3:38, 43
4:1, 19, 489, 1123, 1166
4:1-2, 494
4:1-3, 1170
4:1-13, 1167
4:3, 1166
4:4, 737

4:8, 528
4:13, 1166
4:14, 494
4:14-15, 19, 1123
4:15, 1143
4:16-21, 1143
4:16-30, 903, 1123
4:18, 163, 494, 634, 1123
4:18-19, 19, 271, 642
4:20, 1143
4:22, 791, 1143
4:22-30, 1143
4:26-27, 391
4:27, 930
4:33, 1118
4:38, 1144
4:43, 163, 753
4:44, 14
5:10, 752, 763
5:11, 1051
5:12-14, 990
5:12-16, 1144
5:17, 494
5:17-26, 1144
5:27-32, 378
5:30-32, 687
6, 764
6:4, 576
6:6-11, 1144
6:13, 76, 77
6:14, 929
6:14-16, 752
6:15-16, 1005
6:16, 190, 616
6:17, 211
6:17-18, 1118
6:20, 568, 634, 1052
6:20-49, 634
6:22, 569
6:22-23, 914
6:22-33, 569
6:23, 42, 972
6:24, 1052
6:26, 42, 914
6:27-36, 572
6:27-38, 22
6:28, 130
6:31, 572
6:32, 574
6:35, 22, 574, 1038
6:36-38, 574, 734, 1193
6:39, 658
6:40, 913
7:1-10, 243, 391
7:5, 1144
7:14, 711
7:16, 780
7:19-20, 861
7:31-35, 1202
7:33-35, 990
7:34, 502, 687
7:35, 1201
7:44, 504
7:49, 162
8:1-3, 1216
8:3, 1051
8:8, 571
8:10, 783
8:11, 793
8:14, 930
8:31, 460
8:40-42, 1144
8:43-48, 1144
8:49-56, 1144
9:1-6, 930
9:3, 992
9:4, 991
9:10-17, 930
9:16, 943
9:22, 272
9:22-26, 752
9:23, 20, 273
9:23-24, 1123
9:26, 396
9:30, 816
9:31, 466, 467
9:43, 272
9:50, 576
9:51, 211, 467, 562, 885, 1139
9:52-55, 1033
9:53, 562
9:57-62, 885
9:62, 885
10:3, 641
10:4, 992
10:5, 991
10:6, 991
10:7, 991
10:8, 991
10:9, 753
10:13-15, 1144
10:16, 780
10:17-21, 494
10:18, 577
10:21-22, 1021, 1202
10:29-37, 391
10:30-37, 15
11:4, 1167
11:9, 568
11:13, 19, 357, 930
11:16, 1166
11:20, 631, 632
11:21-22, 162
11:26, 570
11:28, 571
11:31, 41, 1201
11:34-35, 657
11:37-54, 885
11:40-41, 990
11:43, 1142
11:47-48, 42
11:47-51, 1123
11:48-50, 972
11:49, 86, 1201
11:49-51, 992, 1202
11:50, 269
12:8, 571, 1123
12:8-12, 1123
12:11, 165, 757, 1144
12:11-12, 494, 1123
12:12, 317
12:27, 41
12:29-32, 567
12:32-45, 569
12:33, 1051
12:35, 1200
12:39, 570
12:39-40, 265, 266, 571
12:40, 266
13:4-12, 702
13:10-11, 209
13:10-17, 1144
13:14, 609
13:16, 43
13:22, 562, 1139
13:22-30, 687
13:23, 196
13:25, 943
13:28, 6, 209, 1162
13:28-29, 391, 502, 753
13:29, 391, 643, 687, 1162
13:33, 467
13:33-35, 1123
13:34, 972
13:34-35, 466, 1202
14:1-6, 1144
14:1-24, 1104
14:11, 568, 962
14:15-24, 391
14:26, 1221
14:27, 273
14:33, 1051
14:35, 571
15:1-2, 687
16:9, 1051, 1052
16:10, 574
16:10-12, 674
16:11-12, 574
16:13, 674
16:18, 713, 995
16:19-31, 209, 624
16:22-25, 610
17:3, 568
17:11, 1076, 1139
17:11-19, 15, 391
17:26-28, 839
17:28-29, 41
17:28-32, 624
17:29, 624
17:30, 1021
17:33, 270
18:1, 858
18:2-5, 1220
18:7, 658
18:14, 568, 962
18:22, 1051
18:29-30, 1038
18:30, 913
18:31, 272, 1139
18:34, 1180
19:2-10, 391
19:8, 1051, 1052
19:9, 209
19:11, 858, 1139
19:26, 709
19:27-28, 1123
19:28, 12
19:28-40, 992
19:31, 669
19:34, 669
19:38, 663
19:42-44, 1123
19:45, 1164
20, 563
20:9-19, 466, 1123
20:15, 567
20:17, 838, 1127
20:25, 324
20:38, 209
20:46, 1142
21, 51, 336, 1180
21:1-4, 1164
21:5-6, 1123
21:5-36, 1164
21:6, 466
21:8, 51
21:12, 913, 1144
21:12-15, 1123
21:12-19, 1123
21:13-19, 20
21:19, 1123
21:20-22, 900
21:20-24, 1123
21:21, 912
21:24, 467
21:27, 396
22, 943
22:3-6, 930
22:15, 268
22:16, 268
22:17-20, 686
22:19, 269, 271, 680, 686, 1105
22:19-20, 20, 268, 269, 270, 272, 1162
22:20, 245, 268, 269, 631
22:21, 269, 272
22:24-27, 269
22:27, 687
22:28-30, 273, 687
22:29-30, 631, 686
22:30, 76, 631, 742, 1105
22:39-46, 1167
22:54, 1123
22:66, 274, 1123
22:69, 859
23:1-5, 1123
23:13-25, 274
23:28, 467
23:28-31, 1123
23:30, 1085
23:42, 859
23:43, 776
23:46, 775
23:47, 243, 271, 286, 487
23:49, 137, 1216
23:55-56, 1216
24, 97, 101, 301, 826
24:1, 680, 681
24:1-10, 1216
24:6, 904
24:9-10, 76
24:10, 1005
24:13, 680
24:13-35, 680, 931
24:18, 1004
24:19, 780
24:21, 40, 780, 1180
24:25, 137
24:25-27, 114, 271
24:26, 96, 281, 397
24:26-27, 153, 272, 521, 569, 778
24:27-35, 688
24:30, 943, 1105, 1231
24:30-32, 271
24:34, 669
24:35, 686, 1105
24:36-43, 687
24:37, 45
24:39, 573
24:41-43, 1231
24:44, 778
24:44-47, 628, 886
24:44-49, 271
24:45-49, 492
24:46-47, 98
24:47, 115, 269, 391, 562, 719
24:47-48, 391, 903
24:48, 906
24:48-49, 496
24:49, 19, 113, 490, 903, 904, 905, 906, 968, 1199
24:50-51, 63, 858
24:51, 98
24:52, 602

John

1, 157, 577, 597, 1114
1:1, 163, 665, 957, 1023
1:1-2, 665
1:1-3, 957, 960
1:1-14, 639
1:1-18, 176, 356, 590, 652, 933, 957, 958, 1202
1:3, 1224
1:4, 425, 665
1:5, 597
1:5-7, 597
1:8, 597
1:9, 392, 425
1:12-13, 665
1:13, 313, 792, 793
1:14, 163, 575, 590, 591, 639, 665, 959
1:14-17, 665, 933
1:17, 780
1:17-18, 782
1:18, 666
1:19-20, 576
1:21, 816
1:23, 641
1:29, 283, 284, 641, 1164
1:31, 1021
1:32-34, 119
1:35-42, 596
1:35-51, 589
1:43-48, 931
1:51, 582
2, 810
2:1, 723
2:1-11, 722, 1235
2:3, 723
2:3-11, 597
2:4, 723
2:5, 723
2:11, 1021
2:12, 723
2:12-17, 597
2:13-17, 1165
2:14-22, 1161
2:15, 1166
2:17-22, 1165
2:18-27, 597
2:21, 990, 1165
2:28, 597
3:1, 1131
3:1-6, 1236
3:1-8, 593
3:1-21, 1131
3:2, 1131
3:3-5, 576
3:3-7, 118
3:3-8, 792
3:3-21, 793
3:5, 159, 540, 795
3:11-24, 597
3:14, 779
3:16, 595, 1131
3:16-17, 163, 1223
3:16-21, 1035
3:17, 392, 1131
3:19, 658, 659, 1131
3:21, 1021, 1131
3:22—4:3, 596
3:22-36, 589
3:34, 163
4, 1076, 1235
4:1-6, 597
4:1-42, 392, 753
4:4, 1076
4:6, 597
4:7-21, 597
4:9, 208
4:10, 571, 833, 992
4:14, 992
4:20-24, 1235
4:22, 208, 392, 582
4:23-24, 495
4:34, 736, 737
4:38, 164, 931, 1077
4:39, 1076
4:42, 175, 392, 1074
4:46-54, 392
5:1-4, 597
5:2, 188
5:5-12, 597
5:16-18, 164
5:17, 582, 685
5:19, 594
5:21-29, 336
5:28-29, 1016
5:36-38, 163
5:46, 210
6, 233, 589, 737, 1230, 1235
6:1, 710
6:5-7, 931
6:6, 1166
6:14, 861
6:17, 659
6:25-59, 737
6:29, 163
6:52-63, 593
6:57, 163
7:5, 616
7:19, 583
7:22-23, 227
7:23, 685
7:29, 163
7:35-36, 392
7:37-39, 119
7:38, 86, 417, 833
7:39, 1194
7:42, 43
7:49, 583
7:52, 386
8, 161

8:6, 1166
8:12, 657
8:17, 227
8:31, 208
8:31-39, 210
8:33, 43
8:38-47, 794
8:39, 210
8:44, 42, 582, 1079
8:53, 210
8:56, 210, 582
8:58, 164
9, 382, 589, 1091
9:2, 581
9:3, 1021
9:5, 425
9:22, 166
9:34, 913
9:39, 1091
10, 541
10:1-16, 1235
10:1-18, 877, 880
10:3-5, 1235
10:8-10, 1091
10:9, 1091
10:10-16, 1092
10:11-16, 1091
10:30 164, 1083
10:36 163
11, 709, 710
11:16 765
11:25 793
11:27 861
11:42 163
11:45 208
11:52 392, 1083
12:11 208
12:12-19, 992
12:13, 663
12:20-22, 392, 931
12:35, 657
12:41, 210
12:42, 166, 853
12:46, 425, 657
12:47, 1223
13, 1235
13:3, 701
13:14, 504
13:16, 163, 913
13:23, 590
13:25, 588
13:34, 238, 575, 594
13:34-35, 646, 880
14:6, 760
14:7-10, 639
14:8-9 931
14:9, 1021
14:12, 589
14:13-14, 589
14:14, 1237
14:16, 490
14:18, 208
14:22, 616
14:23-24, 593
14:25-26, 392
14:26, 113, 490, 491, 589
14:27, 897
14:28, 101
15, 640
15:1-11, 1235
15:4, 1235
15:5, 1235
15:7, 946
15:10, 238
15:12, 238, 594
15:15, 1021
15:17, 594
15:18-19, 1223
15:18-25, 253
15:20, 913
15:26, 113, 490, 491
15:26-27, 357
16:2, 166, 913
16:7, 589
16:8-11, 392
16:10, 101
16:13, 589, 594
16:21-22, 1210
16:23, 1237
16:28, 101
16:33, 328, 339, 897, 1180
17, 589, 594
17:3, 163
17:4, 163
17:6, 1021, 1224
17:7-8, 639
17:8, 163
17:11, 1224
17:12, 794
17:18, 163, 164, 1224
17:20-23, 594
17:21, 163
17:23, 163
17:24, 420, 595, 1223
17:25, 163
17:25-26, 639
17:26, 1021
18:6, 164
18:20, 1143
18:28, 641
18:31-34, 1171
18:37-38, 1171
19, 1197
19:10-11, 913
19:17-20, 567
19:25, 1006
19:25-27, 723
19:26, 590, 723
19:26-27, 722
19:27, 722, 1006
19:34, 119
19:34-35, 914
19:35, 588
19:36, 641
19, 680
20:1, 681
20:1-10, 224
20:2, 590
20:19, 681, 1231
20:19-23, 392
20:21, 163, 164
20:21-23, 492
20:22, 904
20:23, 589
20:24, 588
20:26, 681
20:28, 957, 1114
20:30-31, 357
20:31, 597, 723, 877, 1113
21, 590, 925, 927, 1235
21:2, 1005
21:7, 590
21:15-17, 915, 921
21:15-19, 877, 912
21:16, 880
21:18, 570
21:20, 590
21:20-25, 590
21:24-25, 16

Acts

1, 14, 82, 97, 170, 171, 173, 363, 389, 562, 644, 767
1:1, 8, 13, 23, 414, 742, 789, 1227
1:1-2, 492
1:1-9, 537
1:1-12, 756
1:2, 76, 77, 97, 98, 222, 317, 630
1:2-3, 106
1:3, 629, 631, 762, 859, 952, 1228
1:3-4, 1231
1:3-11, 332
1:4, 19, 247, 415, 490, 562, 687, 904, 969, 1112
1:4-5, 113, 492, 742
1:5, 79, 360, 390, 493, 494, 630, 742
1:5-20, 1144
1:6, 333, 343, 416, 631, 643, 859, 1188
1:6-7, 629, 791
1:6-8, 21, 332, 333, 344, 766
1:6-11, 196, 858
1:7, 21, 251, 317, 333, 415, 859, 1112, 1199
1:7-8, 333
1:8, 11, 14, 15, 19, 20, 53, 79, 114, 115, 144, 243, 245, 251, 270, 333, 355, 357, 390, 391, 414, 493, 494, 562, 563, 630, 631, 661, 718, 742, 752, 753, 754, 762, 763, 766, 767, 770, 771, 774, 859, 886, 903, 906, 930, 1061, 1076, 1124, 1207
1:9, 102
1:9-11, 63, 96, 97, 98, 746
1:10, 45
1:10-11, 99
1:11, 96, 97, 196, 333, 387, 643, 858, 859, 1199
1:12-26, 1162
1:13, 92, 545, 752, 756, 929, 1066
1:13-14, 356, 743
1:14, 357, 616, 722, 723, 903, 941, 944, 1006, 1207, 1216
1:14-15, 20
1:15, 752, 785
1:15-16, 92
1:15-17, 1086
1:15-26, 77, 106, 467, 756, 944
1:16, 17, 317, 467, 497, 824
1:16-17, 137
1:16-18, 655
1:16-20, 930
1:20, 824
1:21, 17, 416, 668, 669
1:21-22, 76, 742, 762
1:21-26, 1086
1:22, 76, 97, 98, 106, 171, 718, 742, 763, 1204
1:23-25, 1228
1:24, 20, 222, 317, 416, 941, 942
1:24-25, 357
1:24-26, 76
1:25, 137, 459
1:25-26, 756
1:26, 76
2, 14, 21, 113, 247, 332, 391, 437, 493, 627, 752, 764, 906, 1094, 1178
2:1, 754, 758
2:1-3, 492
2:1-4, 222, 244, 390, 391, 722, 742, 903
2:1-13, 746, 906
2:1-21, 1194
2:1-42, 902
2:1-43, 332
2:2, 508, 903
2:4, 79, 113, 114, 357, 493, 494, 742, 971, 972, 1207
2:4-13, 1177
2:5, 20, 137
2:5-31, 260
2:5, 1066
2:5-11, 756, 906
2:5-12, 144
2:7, 196, 387
2:8, 1178
2:9, 754, 1151
2:9-11, 20, 288, 754, 767, 1178
2:10, 35, 149, 150
2:10-11, 1066
2:11, 759, 906, 972, 1178
2:12:12, 508
2:12-14, 755
2:13, 905
2:14, 77, 106, 562, 1066
2:14-36, 543
2:14-40, 10, 77
2:14-41, 944
2:15-17, 332
2:16, 356
2:16-21, 1194
2:16-36, 647, 1022
2:16-40, 825
2:16-41, 793
2:17, 20, 137, 195, 251, 332, 333, 375, 562, 622, 825, 906, 970, 971, 972, 1207
2:17-18, 390, 391, 745, 970, 971, 974
2:17-21, 113, 479, 493, 536, 824, 904, 970
2:18, 906, 1086, 1178
2:18-19, 260
2:19, 19, 906, 1094
2:20, 668, 858, 859, 969
2:21, 13, 20, 160, 270, 318, 416, 562, 630, 632, 786, 825, 860, 906, 942
2:21-22, 20, 1216
2:22, 19, 415, 466, 491, 631, 750, 906, 939, 1094, 1181
2:22-23, 630
2:22-24, 96, 256
2:22-36, 96, 353
2:23, 17, 160, 260, 274, 317, 415, 687, 904, 913, 1188
2:23-24, 113, 655, 1069
2:23-31, 171
2:23-36, 19
2:24, 137, 416, 491, 669, 939, 1181
2:25, 668, 669
2:25-28, 96, 479, 824
2:25-32, 776
2:25-36, 356
2:26, 375, 601, 602, 860
2:27, 375, 487, 825, 903, 1240
2:28, 207, 601, 604, 903
2:29, 41, 43
2:29-31, 96
2:29-36, 20
2:30, 415, 631, 824, 825
2:31, 153, 375, 825, 1240
2:32, 96, 171, 416, 491, 718, 1204
2:32-33, 260, 360, 490, 493
2:32-34, 96
2:32-35, 630
2:32-39, 496
2:33, 19, 96, 97, 113, 247, 273, 357, 391, 430, 490, 492, 630, 631, 825, 903, 904, 905, 969, 1237
2:33-34, 97, 964
2:33-35, 98
2:33-36, 360
2:33-39, 970
2:34, 96, 97, 668, 670, 825, 905
2:34-35, 97, 479, 824
2:36, 97, 98, 106, 113, 153, 158, 171, 256, 360, 416, 508, 521, 543, 630, 661, 669, 762, 825, 860, 906, 1112
2:36-38, 360
2:36-39, 1012
2:37, 21, 76
2:37-38, 1218
2:38, 20, 21, 113, 114, 153, 256, 260, 273, 333, 364, 380, 391, 416, 489, 493, 631, 766, 767, 785, 930, 971, 1227
2:38-39, 271, 274, 493
2:38-40, 382, 622
2:38-42, 1012
2:39, 20, 247, 318, 414, 415, 490, 668, 670, 766, 906, 1116
2:40, 357, 749, 860, 1072
2:41, 21, 92, 113, 144, 195, 196, 354, 364, 757, 758
2:41-42, 114, 687
2:41-46, 687
2:41-47, 948
2:42, 76, 106, 145, 271, 686, 742, 906, 942, 944, 1086, 1104, 1105, 1227, 1228, 1236
2:42-47, 692
2:43, 19, 76, 356, 371, 742, 747, 906, 1094
2:43-45, 1051
2:43-47, 373, 789, 894
2:44, 21, 195, 196, 373, 906, 1051
2:44-45, 20, 22, 356, 382, 476, 687, 997
2:44-46, 378
2:44-47, 503
2:45, 1051
2:46, 92, 115, 165, 197, 222, 271, 356, 508, 580, 601, 660, 683, 687, 944, 1104, 1105, 1154, 1162, 1227, 1228
2:46-47, 521
2:47, 195, 196, 414, 435, 521, 580, 670, 1227
3, 1, 780, 781, 873, 949, 1126
3:1, 20, 165, 580, 681, 755, 941, 944
3:1-8, 357
3:1-9, 356
3:1-10, 78, 209, 647, 747, 751, 1010, 1228
3:1-16, 333
3:1-26, 398, 1162
3:2, 346, 1207
3:3, 580
3:4, 755
3:5:30, 260
3:6, 1, 13, 20, 256, 416, 631, 786
3:7, 207
3:8-9, 521
3:11-26, 77, 153, 647
3:12, 19, 398
3:12-21, 114
3:13, 1, 43, 171, 274, 398, 415, 416, 751
3:13-14, 780
3:13-15, 243
3:13-25, 353
3:13-26, 19, 1022
3:14, 171, 260, 487, 780, 942
3:14-15, 22
3:14-16, 260
3:15, 1, 137, 256, 398, 399, 416, 491, 655, 718, 780, 1069, 1204
3:16, 1, 19, 20, 21, 364, 368, 630, 631, 751
3:17, 171, 274
3:17-21, 1012, 1188

3:17-26, 21, 343, 766, 793
3:18, 153, 171, 272, 332, 356, 415
3:18-19, 260
3:18-21, 171, 273, 542, 824, 860
3:19, 21, 622, 670, 1012
3:19-20, 894
3:19-21, 274, 333, 360, 629, 630, 859
3:19-26, 344
3:20, 251, 317, 398, 858
3:20-21, 333, 440
3:21, 17, 21, 98, 251, 317, 333, 346, 360, 487, 1188
3:22, 40, 171, 247, 356, 415, 537, 668, 670, 779
3:22-23, 2, 479, 779
3:22-26, 332, 333
3:23, 196, 197, 415, 824
3:24, 39, 825
3:25, 1, 38, 130, 210, 246, 247, 251, 415, 479, 906
3:26, 1, 2, 130, 171, 415, 416, 491, 1095
3:32, 414
3:34, 416
4, 581, 951
4:1, 963
4:1-2, 467
4:1-21, 762
4:1-22, 1123
4:1-31, 355, 761
4:1-37, 1162
4:2, 628, 776
4:3, 755, 1138
4:3-21, 145
4:4, 92, 354, 757, 758
4:7, 416
4:8, 79, 107, 231, 357, 494, 742, 761, 767, 906, 972
4:8-12, 160, 972
4:8-13, 19
4:9, 1072
4:10, 19, 20, 153, 171, 256, 399, 416, 491, 542, 751
4:10-12, 172
4:11, 414, 479, 647, 824, 838, 1126, 1128
4:11-12, 416
4:12, 17, 20, 160, 272, 416, 630, 786, 860, 953
4:13, 137, 355, 382, 494, 758, 767, 916, 972
4:16, 562, 1094
4:17, 416, 756
4:18, 172, 416, 907
4:18-20, 756
4:18-31, 972
4:19, 137, 415, 755, 1195
4:21, 414, 1138
4:21-31, 521
4:22, 1094
4:23-28, 273
4:23-31, 22, 273, 356, 521, 942, 1228
4:23-33, 114
4:24, 174, 251, 252, 414, 426, 660
4:24-26, 526
4:24-30, 521, 943
4:24-31, 356
4:25, 41, 43, 171, 479, 497
4:25-26, 479, 824
4:26, 152, 670
4:27, 49, 479, 487, 542, 1185
4:28, 17, 171, 487
4:29, 756, 972, 1086, 1100, 1138
4:29-30, 19
4:29-31, 631
4:30, 19, 20, 416, 630, 631, 1094
4:31, 382, 390, 391, 494, 742, 761, 767, 904, 906, 941, 942, 971, 972, 1178, 1227
4:32, 20, 22, 137, 196, 373, 1051, 1178, 1228
4:32-35, 22, 476
4:32-37, 1051
4:33, 76, 77, 106, 171, 356, 416, 433, 668, 742, 940, 1204
4:33-37, 106
4:34, 356, 508, 680, 953
4:35, 106
4:36, 764, 971
4:36-37, 22, 382
4:37, 106
4:42, 1053
5, 581, 1082
5:1, 1117
5:1-10, 77, 1221
5:1-11, 73, 437, 466, 747, 930, 1051, 1206, 1228
5:2, 414
5:3, 1077, 1079
5:3-4, 1118, 1185
5:5, 73, 416, 655
5:9, 490, 1166
5:10, 73, 655
5:11, 195, 197, 205
5:12, 19, 76, 356, 742, 1094
5:12-16, 747
5:12-33, 762
5:13, 580
5:14, 92, 669, 1216
5:15, 9, 78, 436
5:15-16, 1117
5:15-19, 356
5:16, 21, 333, 382, 414, 562
5:17, 196, 747
5:17-21, 21
5:17-40, 1123
5:17-41, 355, 467
5:17-42, 160, 761
5:19, 18, 45, 659, 668, 1012
5:19-20, 62
5:20, 165, 655
5:21, 18, 231, 357, 542, 580
5:22, 153
5:25, 357, 580
5:27, 1138
5:27-32, 77
5:28, 20, 172, 357, 416, 562, 756
5:28-29, 756
5:29, 17, 231
5:29-31, 357
5:29-32, 77, 1012
5:30, 20, 171, 260, 280, 399, 415, 416
5:30-31, 19, 20, 256, 273, 274, 360, 382, 491, 762, 1069
5:30-33, 231
5:31, 21, 40, 96, 98, 171, 260, 380, 416, 542, 630, 1072, 1082
5:32, 171, 391, 496, 718, 742, 761, 1204
5:33, 357, 655
5:34, 1082
5:37, 73, 1060
5:38-39, 19
5:39, 415, 878
5:40, 20, 416, 907, 910, 1138
5:40-41, 172
5:41, 20, 137, 273, 356, 416, 601, 602, 604, 913
5:41-42, 22
5:42, 92, 165, 171, 197, 256, 353, 356, 357, 431, 580, 628, 629, 1086
6, 273, 464, 580, 742, 1125
6:1, 20, 463, 464, 465, 468, 580, 742, 1123, 1125
6:1-2, 1086
6:1-3, 742, 930, 953
6:1-5, 465
6:1-6, 22, 106, 137, 222, 462, 468, 549, 686, 687, 742, 929, 1051, 1104, 1123, 1124, 1220
6:1-7, 373, 767
6:1-15, 1125
6:2, 106, 196, 414, 930, 1086
6:2-3, 464
6:2-4, 76, 742
6:3, 106, 490, 742, 930, 971, 1123
6:4, 106, 742, 930, 972
6:5, 54, 196, 292, 433, 761, 764, 930, 971, 1123, 1124
6:6, 106, 357, 942
6:7, 20, 92, 93, 197, 364, 414, 562, 789, 963
6:8, 19, 356, 433, 465, 631, 747, 764, 941, 971, 1094, 1123, 1124
6:8-10, 742, 1123
6:8-12, 743
6:8-15, 762, 1124
6:9, 757, 1099, 1142
6:9-14, 1125
6:9-15, 1123
6:10, 107, 357, 494, 742, 1123, 1201
6:10-11, 1123
6:11-14, 466, 647
6:12, 1123, 1138
6:13, 3, 466, 487, 509, 718, 1124, 1204
6:13-14, 2, 580, 1124
6:14, 466, 1124
6:15, 45
6:20-26, 476
6:51, 1123
6:54-60, 743
6:55, 1123
7, 2, 40, 149, 270, 463, 464, 466, 479, 536, 537, 563, 644, 718, 764, 778, 780, 824, 862, 1076, 1077
7:1, 467
7:1-4, 42
7:2, 2, 43, 207, 396, 479, 644
7:2-4, 40
7:2-8, 2, 3, 38, 40, 247, 643
7:2-53, 10, 11, 466, 543, 972
7:2-56, 382
7:3, 250, 415, 479
7:4, 2, 250
7:5, 2, 3, 40, 479, 968
7:5-6, 3, 207
7:5-7, 415, 479
7:6, 2, 3, 250
7:6-7, 40
7:7, 2, 3, 40, 415
7:8, 2, 38, 39, 227, 246, 247
7:8-10, 3
7:9, 39, 40, 42
7:9-10, 42, 644
7:9-16, 40
7:10, 40, 435, 512, 1201
7:11-12, 40
7:13-14, 39
7:15-16, 39, 40
7:16, 2
7:16-17, 2, 40
7:17, 247, 415, 968, 970
7:18, 39, 479
7:20, 39, 40
7:20-43, 644
7:20-44, 39, 40, 781
7:22, 40, 778, 780, 1201
7:23, 40, 778, 780
7:23-25, 781
7:23-42, 467
7:25, 21, 778
7:26, 894
7:26-28, 40
7:26-29, 781
7:27, 42, 780
7:27-28, 479
7:29, 40, 250, 778
7:30, 40
7:31, 21, 670
7:32, 1, 2, 40, 415
7:32-33, 40
7:32-35, 479
7:33, 251
7:34-35, 780
7:35, 42, 778, 780
7:35-36, 40
7:36, 780, 1094
7:37, 247, 356, 415, 416, 467, 479
7:38, 40, 197, 445, 647, 1069, 1124
7:39, 42
7:39-41, 778
7:39-43, 781
7:40, 479
7:40-41, 42
7:41, 467, 529, 602, 604, 1069
7:41-43, 467
7:42, 414, 415, 508, 1069
7:42-43, 479, 778, 824
7:43, 111, 466, 467, 644
7:44, 40, 467, 1070, 1154
7:44-50, 644, 1154
7:45, 415
7:46, 41, 435, 466, 509
7:46-47, 466
7:46-48, 466
7:47, 41, 466, 509
7:47-50, 1124
7:48, 161, 466, 467, 529, 633, 1124
7:48-50, 509, 1124
7:49, 251, 509
7:49-50, 824
7:50, 414
7:51, 247, 781, 1069
7:51-53, 231, 467, 824
7:52, 40, 42, 137, 171, 644, 718, 1054, 1055
7:52-53, 247
7:53, 445, 466, 467, 647, 781, 1124
7:54, 1124, 1125
7:54-56, 494
7:54-60, 762, 859, 1123, 1138
7:55, 273, 396, 416, 495, 742, 761, 904, 971, 972
7:55-56, 62, 332, 360, 440, 1123
7:55-60, 1123
7:56, 356, 630
7:56-60, 1126
7:57, 655
7:57-59, 1124
7:57-60, 718
7:58, 166, 718, 883, 1124, 1125, 1204
7:58-60, 907
7:59, 360, 416, 630, 775, 943, 944, 1237
7:59-60, 416
7:60, 670
8, 137, 162, 357, 364, 402, 493, 562, 743, 752, 929, 931, 1076, 1118
8:1, 54, 76, 106, 197, 205, 222, 327, 387, 463, 467, 562, 580, 718, 755, 756, 907, 912, 1076, 1125, 1138, 1227
8:1-3, 20, 166, 273, 467, 762, 931, 1123, 1124
8:1-4, 22, 764, 914
8:1-25, 114
8:3, 92, 222, 508, 1138, 1216
8:4, 20, 355, 431, 547, 743, 1138
8:4-5, 114
8:4-7, 1010
8:4-8, 433, 742, 747
8:4-13, 743, 1118
8:4-17, 76
8:4-24, 416, 1138
8:4-25, 391, 1124
8:4-40, 763
8:5, 171, 521, 626, 629, 1076
8:5-8, 930, 1076
8:5-13, 764
8:5-19, 631
8:6, 1094, 1118
8:6-7, 356
8:6-12, 631
8:7, 382, 414, 1117, 1118
8:8, 602, 1076
8:9, 114, 192, 702
8:9-11, 529
8:9-12, 930, 1118
8:9-24, 73, 1076
8:9-25, 702, 1148
8:9-40, 537
8:10, 414, 702
8:11, 702, 1124
8:12, 21, 114, 153, 172, 353, 364, 414, 416, 431, 494, 629, 786, 930, 1216, 1227
8:12-15, 971
8:13, 364, 930, 941, 1094, 1118
8:14, 77, 106, 114, 414, 562, 756, 1076, 1124
8:14-17, 76, 494, 742, 757, 767, 1076
8:14-24, 930, 1051
8:14-25, 78, 391, 755, 764, 1163
8:15, 742, 942
8:15-16, 114
8:16, 20, 114, 256, 416, 493, 668, 785
8:17, 114
8:17-19, 1178
8:18, 742, 789
8:18-19, 115
8:18-24, 19, 77
8:19, 939
8:20, 930
8:21, 415
8:22, 380, 942
8:23, 357, 702, 1095
8:24, 942
8:25, 357, 432, 479, 562, 1076
8:26, 44, 496, 766, 930, 972, 1195
8:26-29, 1022
8:26-39, 115, 743, 764, 766
8:26-40, 18, 245, 391, 433, 754, 1124
8:27, 754, 930, 1207
8:27-39, 580, 754
8:28-29, 1061
8:29, 44, 357, 391, 496,

630, 742, 761, 766, 972
8:31, 157
8:32, 284, 641, 642, 1092
8:32-33, 271, 479, 536, 642, 824, 1069, 1092, 1139
8:32-35, 647, 930
8:34, 356
8:35, 353, 629
8:35-38, 661
8:36, 21, 256, 1227
8:36-39, 493, 930
8:37, 115, 354, 1112
8:38, 115, 1061
8:39, 44, 115, 391, 490, 493, 602, 742, 747, 761, 766, 767
8:39-40, 1195
8:40, 432, 758, 930
9, 197, 790, 883, 884
9:1, 197, 754, 1123
9:1-2, 921, 1144
9:1-9, 166, 747
9:1-19, 243, 630, 718, 883, 971, 1124
9:2, 196 197, 291, 907, 1138
9:2-3, 1216
9:3, 658
9:3-6, 78
9:3-7, 1022
9:3-9, 1195
9:3-17, 1195
9:4, 273
9:4-5, 115, 1139
9:4-6, 944
9:5, 668
9:5-6, 416
9:6, 317
9:7-8, 1061
9:10, 972
9:10-16, 107, 360, 440, 943, 944, 1195
9:10-17, 669
9:10-18, 357
9:10-19, 78, 747
9:11, 357, 508, 1228
9:12, 113
9:13, 196, 197, 488
9:14, 20, 196, 197, 416, 786
9:15, 78, 317, 324, 415, 416, 542, 562, 742, 752, 753, 764, 766, 883, 1204
9:15-16, 1139
9:16, 17, 20, 137, 260, 273, 317, 883
9:17, 21, 115, 357, 391, 494, 742, 767, 905, 971, 1123
9:17-18, 115, 631
9:17-19, 373, 493
9:18, 21, 115, 354, 1227
9:18-19, 115
9:19, 904, 1104, 1227
9:20, 115, 171, 256, 626, 629, 639, 1112
9:21, 13, 20, 166, 196, 416, 786
9:22, 171, 256, 357, 521, 941, 1112
9:23-24, 907
9:23-25, 659, 912
9:24, 658
9:25, 197, 373, 758
9:26, 197
9:26-27, 373
9:26-28, 106
9:27, 416, 756
9:28, 668
9:28-29, 1124
9:29, 357, 416, 972
9:30, 197, 758
9:31, 197, 371, 387, 390, 496, 668, 742, 789, 894, 1076, 1077
9:32, 196, 488, 756, 758
9:32-35, 747, 1163
9:32-41, 1010
9:32-42, 1206
9:32-43, 78
9:33-34, 333
9:35, 669, 756, 758
9:36, 16, 368, 758, 1051, 1206
9:36-41, 1216, 1220
9:36-43, 437, 747, 1163, 1228
9:36-44, 743
9:37, 1066
9:37-41, 332
9:39, 1206
9:40-41, 655
9:41, 196, 488
9:43, 244, 373
10, 49, 243, 244, 364, 378, 380, 391, 493, 566, 688, 743, 757, 886, 894, 1104, 1178, 1195, 1227
10:1, 18, 20, 115, 243, 244, 247, 377, 382, 647, 756, 761, 764, 766, 767, 1124
10:1-2, 1060
10:1-4, 244
10:1-6, 1195
10:1-8, 1228
10:1—11:18, 245
10:1-16, 18, 1195
10:1-48, 78, 930, 1144, 1163
10:2, 116, 123, 197, 372, 414, 512, 1051
10:2-4, 944
10:3, 244, 659, 972
10:3-16, 244
10:3-22, 1022
10:4, 244, 368, 415, 670, 1051
10:6, 508
10:9, 244, 357, 659, 944
10:9-16, 943, 993, 1195
10:10-16, 18, 1010
10:10-20, 761
10:13-16, 944
10:14, 137, 244
10:16, 244
10:17, 244, 972
10:19, 79, 107, 390, 391, 495, 630, 742, 972
10:20, 244
10:22, 356, 372, 414, 487, 1057
10:22-33, 63
10:23, 197, 244
10:23-24, 1061
10:24, 116, 123, 354, 1228
10:25, 508
10:27, 354
10:28, 243, 245, 247, 761
10:30, 659, 1061
10:30-33, 972, 1185
10:31, 415
10:33, 415, 670
10:34, 1185
10:34-43, 11, 537, 566, 762
10:34-47, 332
10:35, 371, 372, 831, 1057
10:35-36, 953
10:36, 116, 171, 244, 256, 542, 629, 630, 668, 894
10:36-37, 894
10:36-38, 353, 669
10:36-39, 567
10:36-43, 578
10:37, 14, 626
10:37-39, 627
10:38, 19, 49, 415, 491, 631, 939, 1078
10:39, 20, 274, 280, 562, 1204
10:39-40, 256
10:39-41, 718
10:40-41, 687
10:41-42, 317
10:42, 17, 21, 137, 318, 415, 416, 622, 623, 624, 630, 655, 749, 859, 860
10:42-43, 171, 825
10:43, 20, 21, 116, 244, 260, 272, 380, 382, 416, 622, 630, 766, 786
10:44, 18, 115, 116, 493, 494, 971
10:44-47, 742, 1195
10:44-48, 79, 244, 247, 390, 391, 767, 930, 1178
10:45-47, 19
10:46, 116, 414, 669, 903, 972
10:47, 116, 761
10:47-48, 21, 227, 1227
10:48, 114, 116, 123, 153, 256, 354, 416, 785
11, 162
11:1, 115, 197, 616, 756
11:1-3, 243, 993
11:1-18, 15, 77, 78, 244, 245, 391, 742, 993
11:2, 244, 562
11:2-3, 245, 993
11:2-10, 1195
11:3, 377, 508
11:4, 1217
11:4-10, 373
11:5-17, 11, 767
11:8, 106
11:12, 391, 630
11:12-17, 79
11:14, 123, 197, 512, 860, 1072
11:15-16, 494
11:15-17, 391, 930, 1178
11:15-18, 767, 1195
11:16, 113, 364, 669
11:17, 21, 116, 364, 416, 668, 669
11:17-18, 18, 244
11:18, 106, 116, 227, 244, 414, 415, 622, 688, 886, 1012
11:19, 547, 757, 758, 764, 1138, 1180
11:19-20, 467
11:19-21, 144, 146, 355, 743, 1124
11:19-24, 756
11:19-26, 76
11:19-29, 1227
11:19-30, 54, 391, 1151
11:20, 54, 256, 353, 416, 764
11:21, 630
11:22, 78, 222, 562
11:22-26, 54, 764
11:23, 434, 602
11:24, 79, 391, 971
11:25, 758
11:25-26, 1219
11:26, 196, 197, 387, 1151
11:27, 222, 562
11:27-28, 971
11:27-30, 22, 78, 550, 742, 743, 953
11:28, 251, 357, 391, 495, 630, 932, 972, 1022
11:29, 382, 1086
11:30, 106, 222
12, 757
12:1-2, 77, 145, 718, 1138
12:1-4, 762
12:1-11, 467
12:1-17, 560, 757
12:1-19, 21, 747
12:2, 755
12:2-4, 907
12:3-11, 718
12:4-10, 1060
12:5, 414, 521, 670
12:5-17, 1219
12:6-11, 44, 62, 659
12:7-11, 18
12:9, 1185
12:11, 45, 668, 670, 1185
12:12, 92, 356, 508, 512 521, 743, 765, 1206, 1228
12:12-17, 197, 222
12:13, 1206
12:14, 602
12:15, 45
12:17, 92, 186, 197, 546 670, 757, 764, 1066, 1220
12:18-19, 1060
12:19-24, 747
12:20, 894
12:20-23, 325, 437, 932, 1008
12:23, 18, 45, 395, 416, 655, 668, 1060
12:24, 789
12:25, 562, 1086
13, 2, 93, 378, 496, 647, 764, 767, 825, 883, 1082, 1216
13:1, 54, 146, 197, 205, 222, 495, 496, 764, 971, 972, 973
13:1-2, 1022
13:1-3, 78, 107, 147, 356, 743, 1151, 1227
13:1-4, 19, 79
13:2, 78, 317, 357, 360, 391, 416, 630, 670, 757, 904, 1195
13:2-3, 146
13:2-4, 107
13:3, 54, 78, 137, 357, 496, 942
13:4, 391, 496, 630, 761, 1061
13:4-5, 78
13:4-12, 21
13:5, 291, 758, 944
13:6, 758, 973, 1010
13:6-12, 78, 357, 416, 437, 747, 749, 930
13:7, 1059
13:8, 364, 368, 1010
13:8-12, 78, 742
13:9, 761, 904, 906, 972
13:10, 1078
13:11, 658, 659, 668
13:12, 364, 628
13:13, 1061
13:13-43, 1144
13:13-52, 1143
13:14, 53, 291, 764, 944
13:14-52, 758
13:15, 293, 450, 496, 609, 1042
13:16, 207, 288, 372, 414, 1082, 1144
13:16-23, 536
13:16-41, 10, 11, 450, 565, 647, 825, 972
13:17, 250, 317, 415, 542
13:17-18, 40
13:17-21, 247
13:17-25, 1082
13:18, 415
13:19, 250, 415
13:20, 39
13:22, 41, 479
13:22-25, 2
13:23, 207, 247, 415, 631 1082
13:23-32, 970
13:24, 247
13:24-25, 566
13:25-41, 762
13:26, 2, 207, 372, 414, 537, 860, 1073, 1082, 1144
13:26-41, 537
13:27, 272, 562
13:27-28, 274, 566
13:27-29, 2
13:27-37, 1082
13:27-39, 1012
13:29, 20
13:30, 399
13:30-33, 543
13:31, 562
13:31-32, 718
13:32, 1069
13:32-33, 38, 415
13:32-39, 260, 631
13:32-41, 910
13:33, 247, 794, 1112
13:33-34, 491
13:33-35, 479
13:33-39, 969
13:34, 479, 824, 967
13:34-35, 825
13:34-37, 776
13:35, 479, 487, 824
13:36, 17
13:38, 21, 382
13:38-39, 10, 260, 382, 647, 1056, 1069
13:39, 21, 40, 248, 364
13:40-41, 623
13:41, 364, 479, 824
13:43, 372, 434, 1145
13:44, 357
13:44-49, 20
13:44-52, 1144
13:45, 2, 1082, 1138
13:45-49, 22
13:46, 247, 347, 391, 415, 562, 623, 953
13:46-47, 78
13:46-48, 742
13:47, 15, 23, 251, 271, 333, 479, 536, 562, 658, 824, 886, 1073, 1139
13:48, 137, 318, 347, 364, 602, 604, 1082
13:48-50, 288
13:48-52, 1139
13:50, 288, 372, 907, 1082, 1138, 1145, 1206, 1217
13:50-51, 166
13:50-52, 356
13:52, 494, 496, 602, 1178
14, 751
14:1, 20, 196, 288, 291, 364, 764, 944
14:1-3, 78
14:1-4, 1144
14:1-7, 137, 758
14:1-18, 20
14:2, 288, 355
14:2-6, 166
14:3, 19, 434, 631, 742, 747, 1094, 1204
14:4, 78, 79, 107, 742, 762
14:5, 288, 907
14:5-6, 1139
14:7, 432
14:8-9, 742
14:8-10, 78
14:8-11, 333, 1010
14:8-18, 437, 747
14:8-20, 416, 762, 1148
14:9, 21, 364, 368, 1072
14:11, 759
14:11-12, 414
14:11-15, 760

14:12, 470
14:13, 963
14:14, 78, 79, 107, 742, 762
14:15, 41, 251, 354, 414, 432, 655, 718, 1012, 1148
14:15-17, 153, 356, 627
14:16, 415
14:17, 354, 602, 604, 1022, 1204
14:19, 1138, 1143
14:19-20, 718, 747, 1139
14:20, 769
14:21, 432
14:21-22, 742
14:21-28, 1151
14:22, 17, 20, 196, 197, 273, 317, 332, 368, 414, 629, 630, 860
14:22-23, 373
14:23, 78, 107, 137, 205, 222, 743
14:23-28, 355
14:25, 758
14:26, 434, 1061
14:26-28, 373
14:27, 54, 364, 368, 767
15, 76, 145, 162, 186, 187, 227, 247, 377, 378, 467, 546, 581, 647, 648, 670, 825, 971, 993, 994
15:1, 40, 54, 145, 162, 647, 860, 993, 994, 1072
15:1-12, 993
15:1-29, 247, 503, 647
15:1-35, 54, 391, 467, 742
15:2, 106, 529, 562, 743
15:2-11, 1069
15:3, 602, 767, 1076
15:4, 106, 373, 562, 743, 766
15:5, 40, 162, 196, 581, 586, 647, 764, 994
15:6, 106, 743
15:6-11, 243
15:7, 21, 317, 415, 432
15:7-8, 20
15:7-11, 78
15:8, 415, 1178
15:8-9, 1195
15:9, 21
15:10, 197, 248, 649, 994, 1166
15:10-11, 647
15:11, 145, 247, 416, 434, 647, 668, 860, 994, 1072
15:12, 19, 196, 529, 631, 747, 767, 1094
15:12-18, 196
15:13-21, 106, 244, 546, 645, 647, 757
15:13-29, 993
15:13-35, 1163
15:14, 197, 210
15:14-18, 766
15:15, 196
15:15-17, 479, 824
15:16, 631, 1154
15:16-18, 415, 536, 824
15:17, 13, 318, 631, 825
15:17-18, 546
15:18, 251, 346
15:19, 145, 825, 994, 1163
15:19-21, 1144
15:20, 162, 349, 529, 883, 994, 1088, 1163, 1217
15:21, 40, 626, 994, 1163
15:22, 106, 222, 616, 764, 971
15:22-23, 137, 743
15:22-28, 106
15:22-29, 138, 647, 994, 1163
15:22-32, 971
15:22-35, 1151
15:23, 106, 153, 758, 952
15:23-29, 26, 546
15:26, 137, 153, 416, 668
15:27, 616
15:28, 145, 630, 904, 994, 1163
15:29, 162, 529, 1217
15:30, 196
15:30-32, 743
15:31, 496
15:32, 222, 616, 971, 994, 1163
15:33, 894, 895, 897, 994, 1163
15:35, 628, 629
15:36, 883, 1217
15:39, 758, 764
15:40, 54, 434, 764, 769
15:41, 197, 758, 1219
16, 14, 93, 670
16:1, 137, 227, 764
16:1-3, 227
16:1-18, 930
16:3, 227, 647, 648, 761, 1069
16:4, 106, 529, 562, 743
16:5, 197, 205
16:6, 107, 357, 391, 495, 630, 904
16:6-7, 19, 79, 496, 630
16:6-10, 18, 630, 1022, 1195
16:7, 107, 491, 630, 758, 904, 971
16:7-8, 360, 440
16:8-10, 79
16:9, 659
16:9-10, 44, 1010
16:10, 317, 432, 630
16:10-17, 16, 788
16:11, 1009, 1061
16:11-15, 378
16:11-16, 922
16:12, 961
16:12-15, 1217
16:12-40, 758
16:13, 290, 944, 1143
16:13-16, 1206
16:14, 372, 414, 1145
16:14-15, 123, 630, 670
16:14-17, 493, 494
16:15, 21, 222, 354, 356, 364, 373, 508, 760, 1104, 1206
16:16, 668, 944, 973, 1010
16:16-18, 356, 631, 742, 922, 941, 1206
16:16-24, 416, 747, 886, 1220
16:17, 196, 860, 1073, 1100
16:18, 382, 630
16:19, 668, 764, 1138
16:19-31, 476
16:19-40, 21
16:20-21, 910
16:22-23, 907
16:22-24, 230, 961
16:23, 1138
16:24, 116, 1138
16:25, 356, 414, 521, 526, 943
16:25-34, 378
16:29-32, 357
16:30, 17, 116, 416, 1073
16:30-31, 21, 860
16:31, 364, 508, 512, 668, 669, 1073
16:31-33, 364, 493, 494
16:31-34, 1207
16:32, 356
16:32-34, 356
16:33, 116, 123, 354
16:34, 116, 196, 222, 512, 687, 760, 1104, 1178
16:35-39, 761
16:35-40, 953
16:36, 894, 895
16:37, 230
16:37-38, 1062
16:38, 371
16:40, 356, 508, 512, 1217
17, 192
17:1, 290, 291
17:1-2, 764, 944
17:1-4, 758
17:1-9, 1138, 1144
17:2-3, 153, 256, 357, 628
17:2-4, 628
17:3, 17, 153, 256, 272, 317, 357, 521, 629
17:4, 196, 354, 372, 764, 1112, 1145, 1207, 1216, 1217, 1218
17:5, 1138
17:5-7, 356
17:5-9, 355, 907
17:5-10, 761
17:6, 251, 355
17:6-7, 1062
17:7, 353, 508, 629, 1138
17:10, 291, 659, 764, 944
17:10-12, 758
17:10-14, 1144
17:11-12, 628
17:12, 1207, 1217, 1218
17:13, 907
17:15, 764, 1061
17:16-34, 148, 416, 762
17:16-35, 886
17:17, 291, 357, 372, 944, 1145
17:18, 353
17:18-34, 1144
17:19, 628
17:19-23, 760
17:22, 1010
17:22-31, 153, 627
17:23, 137, 706
17:23-27, 627
17:24, 251, 414, 467, 529, 670, 1154, 1222
17:24-30, 886
17:24-31, 1012
17:26, 17, 43, 251, 317, 415
17:26-27, 1012
17:26-31, 1022
17:28, 655, 1126
17:29, 627, 1126, 1127
17:30, 762
17:30-31, 333, 622, 623, 749, 825
17:31, 17, 251, 318, 356, 360, 415, 416, 491, 627, 766, 859, 860, 1054, 1058
17:32, 776, 1138
17:32-34, 758
17:34, 886, 1206, 1207, 1217, 1218
18, 93, 378, 1217
18:1-2, 449
18:1-3, 743
18:1-4, 764, 1145
18:1-18, 148
18:2, 290, 291, 446, 448, 907, 1207, 1217
18:2-3, 1062, 1066
18:2-6, 20
18:3, 762
18:4, 357, 944
18:4-7, 291
18:5, 256, 357, 521, 1112, 1217
18:5-8, 742
18:5-11, 1145
18:6, 391, 415, 562, 1138
18:7, 222, 356, 372, 414, 508, 1145
18:8, 21, 123, 148, 222, 364, 493, 494, 609
18:9, 630, 659, 669, 766
18:9-10, 972, 1022, 1195
18:9-11, 148
18:9-20, 18
18:10, 197, 210
18:11, 628, 742
18:12, 1060
18:12-16, 907
18:12-17, 148, 761, 1138
18:13, 372, 414
18:15-16, 1062
18:17, 293, 609, 907, 1138
18:18, 93, 512, 581, 758, 761, 883, 1061, 1217
18:18-19, 743, 1217
18:18-28, 1066
18:19, 1145
18:19-26, 291
18:21, 317
18:22, 1061
18:23, 197, 373
18:24, 444, 765
18:24-25, 757, 758
18:24-26, 493
18:25, 196, 668, 758
18:26, 196, 356, 743, 1145, 1207, 1217
18:27, 433, 765
18:28, 256, 357, 940, 1218
19, 147, 749, 883, 1118, 1178
19:1-2, 116
19:1-7, 116, 147, 493, 589, 596, 1178, 1227
19:1-40, 416
19:2-3, 116
19:3, 116
19:4, 116, 269
19:5, 114, 116, 256, 668, 785
19:5-6, 493
19:6, 79, 116, 971
19:8, 291, 414, 629, 944, 1145
19:8-9, 357
19:8-10, 147, 391, 742
19:9, 196
19:10, 146, 355
19:11, 941
19:11-12, 9, 333, 356, 436, 631, 742, 747, 1118
19:11-20, 930, 1010
19:12, 382
19:13, 20, 629, 668, 785, 1010, 1118
19:13-16, 786
19:13-20, 147, 631
19:15, 416, 1010
19:16, 1118
19:17, 416, 668
19:17-20, 1148
19:18, 764
19:18-19, 354, 382, 703
19:19, 1010, 1138
19:20, 940
19:21, 17, 317, 630, 1066
19:21-41, 761
19:22, 764, 1086
19:23, 196
19:23-27, 1138
19:23-41, 21, 147, 907, 1008, 1138
19:24, 1008, 1154
19:24-27, 1008
19:24-41, 528
19:26, 529, 1217
19:27, 372, 414
19:31, 1008
19:32, 197
19:32-41, 205
19:34, 1008
19:35, 1008
19:38, 1008, 1060
19:38-39, 1008
19:39, 197
19:41, 197
20, 644, 1231
20:1, 761
20:4, 765
20:5-12, 758
20:5-15, 16, 788
20:6, 1061
20:7, 271, 378, 680, 681, 1105, 1231
20:7-8, 92
20:7-12, 437, 688, 742, 747, 894, 1231
20:7-36, 684
20:9-12, 332
20:10, 655
20:11, 271, 1104, 1105
20:13-17, 1061
20:16, 562
20:17, 1093
20:17-35, 107, 883, 973
20:18-21, 760, 762
20:18-28, 355
20:18-35, 10, 883
20:19, 669, 907, 962, 1166
20:20, 355
20:20-21, 356
20:21, 153, 354, 364, 669
20:22, 562, 630, 904
20:22-23, 79, 495, 1139
20:22-24, 1124
20:23, 495, 497, 630, 886, 904, 1022, 1180, 1195
20:24, 354, 432, 434, 668, 669, 884, 1086
20:25, 270, 629
20:25-31, 877
20:27, 17, 884
20:28, 20, 107, 197, 222, 260, 269, 270, 317, 495, 518, 880, 973, 1002, 1069, 1092, 1093
20:28-31, 743
20:28-32, 353
20:29, 883, 1124
20:29-30, 25, 73
20:30, 73, 75
20:31, 658, 762, 1199
20:32, 20, 196, 434, 488, 622, 623
20:33, 884
20:33-34, 762
20:35, 17, 131, 137, 566, 567, 575, 668, 669, 884
20:36-38, 894
20:37-38, 1124
21, 546, 883, 1163, 1214
21:1, 15
21:1-6, 1061
21:1-18, 16, 788
21:3-4, 758
21:4, 502, 562, 630, 904, 1139
21:5, 1116, 1207
21:7, 502, 758
21:7-8, 760
21:8, 356, 433, 757, 763, 764, 765, 929, 972
21:8-9, 106, 191, 743, 931, 1219
21:8-14, 931
21:9, 971, 1207
21:10, 495, 971
21:10-11, 743
21:10-14, 1124
21:11, 562, 630, 886, 904, 972, 1022
21:12, 495, 562, 1139
21:13, 20, 562, 668
21:14, 317, 670

21:15, 562, 1154, 1206
21:16-17, 502
21:17, 760
21:17-20, 582
21:17-26, 546, 1163
21:18, 106, 187, 222, 757
21:18-26, 743
21:19, 767
21:20, 414, 581, 757
21:20-26, 761
21:20-36, 1124
21:21, 41, 73, 228, 415, 586, 1124
21:21-26, 647, 648
21:22, 196
21:23, 106, 581
21:23-26, 1069
21:24, 228, 486, 1124
21:25, 529
21:26, 165, 486
21:27, 12, 355
21:27-36, 1124, 1163
21:28, 389, 487
21:30, 211
21:30-32, 907, 1138
21:30-40, 1062
21:31, 1060
21:39, 230, 293
22, 790, 884, 887
22:1, 207
22:1-21 658
22:3, 186, 885
22:3-5, 984
22:3-16 630
22:4, 196, 1216
22:4-5, 166, 907
22:4-16 971
22:4-21 884
22:6, 658
22:6-9, 1022
22:6-11 78, 747
22:7-8, 115
22:9, 658
22:11, 394, 658
22:12-16, 78, 562, 747
22:14, 1054
22:14-15, 78, 885
22:15, 218, 885, 1204
22:16, 21, 115, 196, 256, 364, 380, 416, 630, 766, 785, 796, 942
22:17, 165
22:17-21, 18, 790, 1195
22:18, 885, 1204
22:19, 1138, 1142, 1144
22:20, 269, 718, 1204, 1205
22:21, 78, 718, 885
22:22-23, 1124
22:22-29, 1062
22:23-29, 1061
22:24, 1138
22:25, 230
22:28, 1061
22:29, 371
22:30, 1062, 1124, 1138
23, 1099
23:1, 241, 415
23:5, 251, 824
23:6, 459, 776, 860, 885, 913
23:6-8, 775
23:8, 45
23:9, 45
23:10, 230, 371
23:11, 17, 317, 357, 630, 659, 766, 886, 972, 1010, 1124, 1139, 1195, 1204
23:12-14, 907
23:12-22, 968
23:12-35, 912, 1138
23:16-22, 1061
23:16-24, 21
23:21, 247
23:23, 1060
23:23-24, 1061
23:23-31, 659
23:23-35, 1061
23:24, 1060
23:26, 1061
23:27, 1062
23:29, 1062
23:33, 1061
23:35, 1061
24, 1138
24:1-8, 230
24:2, 894
24:2-9, 907
24:5, 196, 251, 387
24:5-9, 1062
24:10, 1062
24:10-21, 10
24:10-25, 357
24:12, 1062, 1217
24:13-14, 647
24:14, 196, 415, 884, 1069
24:14-16, 647
24:15, 860, 1016, 1058
24:16, 241, 415, 884
24:18, 486, 1069
24:22, 196, 1061, 1062
24:23, 1061
24:24, 153, 368, 1056, 1112, 1221
24:24-25, 622
24:25, 334, 356, 357, 500, 859, 1056
24:27, 16, 435, 1060, 1061
25:3, 16
25:7, 1138
25:8, 647, 1138
25:10-12, 953, 1062
25:11, 883
25:12, 1139
25:13, 184, 932, 1206, 1221
25:19-20, 1062
25:23, 184, 932, 1206, 1221
25:25, 1062, 1139
25:26, 668
25:30, 1206
26, 790, 884
26:1-29, 357
26:2, 131
26:2-23, 10, 115, 658
26:5, 885
26:6, 247, 415, 500, 543, 970
26:6-7, 38, 334, 500
26:6-8, 969
26:7, 542
26:9-18, 630, 884
26:9-19, 971
26:10, 196, 907, 1138
26:12-18, 78, 657
26:13, 273, 658
26:13-16, 1022
26:14-15, 1139
26:15-18, 753
26:16, 718, 763, 885, 1204
26:16-18, 562, 718, 1139
26:16-20, 78
26:17-18, 21, 764
26:18, 20, 21, 115, 137, 196, 368, 382, 486, 488, 657, 658, 939, 1078, 1080
26:19, 317
26:19-20, 622, 790
26:20, 368, 414, 1012, 1221
26:22, 415, 825, 885
26:22-23, 415, 766, 885
26:23, 115, 256, 272, 356, 658
26:25, 1185
26:26, 467
26:28, 196
26:28-29, 884
26:29, 1061, 1138
26:30, 932
26:31-32, 886
26:32, 1062, 1139
27, 15
27:1, 16, 391, 788, 1061, 1139
27:3, 758
27:6, 1062
27:9, 1157
27:9-10, 749
27:10, 961
27:13, 356
27:13-44, 747
27:17, 371
27:20, 197
27:20-24, 1022
27:21, 961
27:21-26, 689, 749
27:22, 1157
27:23, 45, 659
27:23-24, 18, 747, 1195
27:24, 17, 317, 324, 1139
27:26, 17
27:29, 689
27:31, 21, 197
27:33-38, 688
27:34, 689
27:35, 414, 686, 688, 943
27:43, 21
28:1-6, 747
28:1-11, 502
28:5-6, 416
28:4, 414
28:5-6, 887
28:6, 775
28:7-10, 747
28:8-9, 1010
28:11, 1009, 1062
28:13-14, 758
28:14, 760, 1066, 1139
28:14-15, 373
28:15, 414, 943, 1066
28:16, 1061, 1066, 1139
28:16-17, 907
28:17, 647, 1066
28:17-19, 907
28:17-22, 1145
28:17-29, 20
28:17-31, 391, 503
28:18, 1062
28:19, 1062
28:20, 1138
28:21, 197, 1066
28:22, 196, 1066
28:23, 41, 357, 414, 629, 766, 1066, 1069, 1204, 1217
28:23-31, 1204
28:24, 791
28:24-25, 207, 1066
28:25, 497
28:25-28, 42, 247, 274, 479, 824, 904
28:26-27, 536, 824
28:26-28, 562, 791
28:28, 391, 415, 1139
28:28-30, 689
28:30, 907, 1066
28:30-31, 766, 1066
28:31, 15, 353, 629, 668, 790
28:34, 414

Romans

1, 1012
1:1 152, 614, 668
1:3 43, 163, 491, 722
1:3-4, 163, 171, 332, 492, 860, 893, 986, 1017
1:4 398
1:7 163
1:8 1066
1:14, 761
1:14-15, 354
1:14-17, 639
1:16, 706, 708, 752, 761
1:16-17, 562, 802, 1021
1:17, 1054
1:17-18, 1021
1:18, 1021
1:24, 994
1:24-32, 995
1:29-32, 892
2:4, 329, 622, 1073
2:8, 1239
2:12-16, 890
2:15, 242
2:22, 528
2:24, 1015
3, 365
3:1-2, 913
3:5, 1054
3:9-20, 934
3:19, 354
3:20, 889
3:21, 802
3:21-26, 624, 934, 1021
3:22, 4, 551, 1054
3:23, 354, 397
3:25, 487, 1074
3:25-26, 1070
3:28, 892
4, 734, 891
4:1, 43
4:1-12, 354
4:1-25, 1145
4:3, 6, 88, 837
4:9-10, 5
4:9-13, 43
4:11-12, 43
4:16, 43
4:16-22, 2
4:19-21, 3, 39
4:22, 4
4:24, 399
4:25, 273, 762, 891
5:1, 163, 895
5:3, 1180
5:3-5, 351, 1192
5:8, 426
5:9-10, 1226
5:11, 163
5:12, 485
5:12-17, 723
5:12-19, 356
5:12-21, 280
5:15, 1055
5:19, 1188
5:35, 349
6, 112, 121, 1234
6:1-4, 354
6:1-14, 1017, 1226
6:1-23, 115
6:3, 114
6:4-5, 889
6:8, 99
6:19, 624
7, 1121, 1240
7:12-13, 890
7:17-24, 610
7:23, 986
8, 376
8:2-4, 1056
8:9-10, 491
8:11, 889
8:15, 1116
8:15-16, 495
8:17, 99, 892, 914
8:18, 397, 423
8:19-23, 793
8:23, 334, 863, 1116
8:26-37, 495
8:29, 794
8:32, 270
8:34, 96, 99, 172, 360, 398, 891, 964, 1016
8:35-37, 339
8:36, 913, 1092
8:36-37, 339
8:38-39, 44
9, 160, 227, 391, 465, 548, 889, 891
9:1-5, 161, 163, 218
9:1-18, 548
9:3, 396
9:3-5, 913
9:5, 163, 270, 722
9:6, 1145
9:9, 39
9:10, 43
9:13, 39, 42
9:19-21, 831
9:22, 329
9:25-26, 211
9:26, 417
9:29, 420
9:32, 365
9:32-33, 161
9:33, 838, 1127, 1128
10:1-4, 39
10:1-17, 161
10:3, 1054
10:6-8, 1092
10:7, 460
10:8, 626
10:9, 114, 115, 163, 661, 667, 757
10:9-10, 551
10:10-12, 163
10:12, 761
10:13, 114, 115, 160, 163
10:17, 639
10:21, 161
11, 161
11:1, 43
11:1-2, 161
11:8-10, 161
11:13-14, 217
11:13-24, 585
11:25-26, 205
11:26, 1145
11:26-29, 913
11:26-32, 161
11:28, 38, 161
11:32, 1188
11:33, 1201
11:36, 252, 420
12, 504
12:1, 1158
12:1-2, 736, 1071
12:2, 792
12:3-8, 892
12:3-20, 349
12:4-8, 888, 891
12:6-8, 355
12:8, 518
12:9-13, 505
12:9-21, 449
12:13, 502, 504, 759, 1220
12:14, 130, 1191
12:17, 1191
12:19-21, 623
13, 230, 231, 950, 951
13:1, 324, 919
13:1-4, 517
13:1-7, 324, 514, 912, 1062
13:2, 325
13:3-4, 230, 324, 890
13:4, 230, 1059
13:6-7, 517
13:8-10, 239, 383, 449
13:9-10, 568
13:12-13, 715
14, 551, 1178
14:5, 686
14:5-6, 675, 684
14:10-12, 623
14:13-23, 994
14:14, 995
14:14-23, 383

14:17, 115
14:19, 896
14:20-21, 383
15:7-13, 585
15:14-29, 389
15:16, 964
15:18, 762
15:18-19, 356
15:19, 748, 755, 757, 1118
15:19-23, 355
15:20, 757
15:23-24, 1066
15:24, 754, 758
15:26, 313, 315
15:27, 680
15:28, 754, 758
15:31, 913
15:33, 417, 895
16, 355, 503, 512
16:1, 758, 765
16:1-2, 1212
16:3, 762, 763
16:3-4, 551, 1218
16:3-5, 93, 378, 446, 1217, 1220
16:3-15, 446, 447
16:3-16, 1066
16:4, 205, 754, 764
16:5, 93, 220, 223, 376
16:6, 765
16:7, 762, 765
16:9, 763, 765
16:10, 446
16:11, 446
16:12, 765
16:14, 446, 470
16:15, 446
16:17, 305
16:19, 1201
16:20, 417
16:21, 763
16:22, 220, 765
16:23, 148, 223, 765
16:25, 783, 1021
16:25-27, 1201

1 Corinthians
1, 148, 160, 761, 1201
1:1, 152, 762, 1032
1:2, 220, 223, 673
1:5-7, 1211
1:8, 265
1:11, 512, 1021, 1220
1:12, 78
1:13, 114
1:14-15, 354
1:15, 114
1:17, 1201
1:17-18, 723
1:18, 639
1:19, 1201
1:20, 1201
1:20-25, 886
1:21, 1201
1:22, 1201
1:23, 152, 626
1:24, 888
1:26, 355
1:30, 888, 1054, 1201
1:31, 673
2:1, 783, 1201
2:2, 723, 783
2:4, 748, 1201
2:4-5, 1118
2:5, 761, 1201
2:6, 1078
2:6-7, 738
2:6-10, 1201
2:7, 783
2:8, 420, 913, 1078
2:9, 86, 674
2:10-16, 1021
2:11-14, 639
2:13, 1201
2:14, 615
3, 637
3:1-3, 738
3:2, 736, 737, 738
3:5-6, 765
3:9, 763, 765
3:11, 838
3:13-15, 459
3:16, 199, 509, 510
3:16-17, 995, 1164
3:19, 1201
3:22, 78
4:1, 763
4:1-2, 354
4:11-13, 503
4:12, 762
4:14-17, 878
4:17, 764
5:1-13, 305, 623
5:5, 265, 305
5:7, 174, 284, 503, 641
5:10, 528
5:11, 305, 528, 529
6, 591
6:1-6, 551
6:9, 529, 715
6:9-10, 460, 528
6:11, 115
6:17, 1214
6:18-20, 995
6:19, 510, 990, 1164
6:20, 708, 1002
7:1, 713
7:10-11, 1157
7:10-16, 995
7:14, 356
7:15, 713
7:17, 1157
7:21, 1100, 1101, 1208
7:22, 1099
7:23, 1002
7:27-28, 714
7:29, 1213
7:34-37, 1221
7:38-40, 540
8, 379, 530, 994, 1163
8:1, 529
8:1-3, 529
8:4, 528, 529
8:4-6, 529, 994
8:4-13, 383
8:5, 668, 1102
8:6, 270, 420, 665, 888, 889, 957
8:7, 529
8:7-13, 994
8:8, 529
8:9-13, 529
8:10, 529
8:10-12, 529
8:11, 528
8:13, 383, 994
9:1, 667
9:4, 355
9:4-14, 502
9:5, 78, 179, 616, 617, 757, 762, 1005, 1222
9:7, 736
9:16-17, 354
9:19-20, 1069
9:19-23, 648
9:20, 383, 1110
9:25, 327, 397
10:1-2, 118
10:1-14, 450
10:1-22, 529
10:3, 736, 738
10:4, 491, 853
10:7, 528
10:7-8, 211
10:11, 331
10:12-28, 223
10:14, 528
10:14-22, 503
10:16-17, 690
10:16-18, 738
10:17, 1231
10:19, 529
10:21, 528
10:23, 529
10:23-33, 383
10:25-27, 529
10:28-29, 529
10:29, 529
10:32, 220, 223, 354
10:32-33, 383, 761
11:1, 677
11:1-34, 946
11:2-16, 1105
11:3-16, 514
11:17-22, 1228
11:17-34, 503, 627
11:18, 201, 686
11:19, 311
11:20, 179, 679, 681, 686
11:20-34, 378
11:21, 686
11:23-25, 686
11:23-26, 680, 686, 1228
11:24, 269, 681
11:24-25, 780
11:25, 245
11:27-34, 686, 1230
11:30, 437, 656
12, 105, 311, 312, 355, 888, 891, 892, 1178
12:2, 529, 1217
12:3, 114, 179, 491, 667, 978, 1021, 1226
12:4-11, 1194
12:7, 1226
12:8, 1201, 1232
12:8-10, 892
12:9-10, 356
12:12-13, 112, 121
12:13, 354, 515
12:23, 1209
12:28, 220, 762, 1207
13, 839, 892
13:4, 329
14:1, 974
14:2, 1196
14:3, 1226
14:5, 974
14:12, 1226
14:14, 1119
14:14-16, 1196
14:15, 520, 1119
14:17, 1226
14:19, 201
14:22, 1178
14:23, 905
14:23-25, 757
14:24-25, 357
14:25, 1226
14:26, 520, 526, 659, 1226
14:28, 201
14:29, 593
14:31, 973
14:32, 1120
14:33-35, 514
14:33-36, 1105
14:34, 201
14:35, 201
14:40, 236, 1236
15, 157, 892, 905, 1114
15:1, 627, 1021
15:1-5, 892
15:1-8, 627, 628, 680
15:2, 627
15:3, 913
15:3-5, 145, 762
15:3-57, 933
15:6, 752
15:7, 546
15:8, 762, 764
15:9, 166, 220, 884
15:10, 757
15:12-58, 223
15:20, 180, 673, 863, 1017
15:20-28, 803
15:22, 723, 1188
15:23, 856, 863
15:23-28, 739
15:25, 739
15:27-28, 420
15:28, 1226
15:42, 864, 1226
15:42-44, 1017
15:44-50, 893
16:1-4, 356, 680
16:2, 680
16:9, 770
16:10-11, 764
16:12, 765
16:15, 123, 892
16:15-18, 311
16:16, 514, 518
16:19, 93, 376, 378, 754, 1220
16:22, 177, 181, 305, 663, 675, 755, 870, 947, 1230, 1237
16:23, 1230

2 Corinthians
1:1, 223, 1032
1:3, 660
1:4, 1180
1:5, 892
1:12, 1201
1:14, 265
1:19, 626, 764, 915
1:20, 662
1:21-22, 119
2:12, 758
2:20-22, 334
3, 249, 891
3:3, 417, 1021
3:7-18, 38
3:16-17, 35
3:17, 709
3:17-18, 958
3:18, 491, 794
4, 1084
4:5, 626
4:6, 640
4:7-12, 260
4:10-12, 1021
4:16, 792
5, 343, 345
5:1-4, 865
5:9-11, 354
5:10, 156, 624, 832
5:14, 354
5:16, 723
5:17, 331, 792, 959
5:18, 161
5:21, 762, 891, 1054
6:4, 329
6:4-10, 503
6:14, 450
6:14—7:1, 1164, 1166
6:14-18, 343
6:16, 528
6:16-18, 331, 854
6:18, 426
7:6-7, 764
7:13-15, 764
8:1, 754
8:1-4, 355
8:1-5, 356
8:6, 764
8:9, 958
8:13-15, 1052
8:23, 355, 763, 764
9:12, 680
10, 764, 993
10:1, 961
10:17, 673
11, 764
11:2, 1209
11:2-4, 705
11:3, 43
11:13, 762, 763
11:21-33, 503
11:22, 913
11:23-27, 1145
11:24, 79, 913, 1142
11:25, 230
11:25-26, 1061
11:26, 79
11:26-27, 760, 1061
11:28, 877
11:30-33, 749
11:32-33, 756
12:1-6, 58
12:1-10, 892
12:2-4, 439
12:8-9, 943
12:12, 762, 1094, 1118
13:1-2, 305
13:4, 892
13:5, 1166
13:13, 800, 1237
13:14, 498

Galatians
1, 145, 161, 229
1:1, 399, 596, 757, 764, 1032
1:2, 754
1:11, 883, 1021
1:12, 921
1:13, 161, 166
1:16, 562
1:17, 756
1:18, 758
1:19, 187, 616
1:21, 757
1:21-23, 758
1:22, 754
1:23, 166, 613
2, 227, 229, 378, 546, 994, 995
2:1-10, 389, 390, 467, 645, 993
2:1-14, 1163
2:2, 227
2:3, 764
2:4-5, 888
2:6-9, 78
2:7, 227, 551
2:7-9, 78
2:8, 54
2:9, 145, 546, 764
2:9-10, 549
2:10, 546
2:11, 764
2:11-13, 54, 995
2:11-14, 54, 467, 488, 503, 586, 754
2:11-15, 546
2:11-16, 888
2:12, 581, 993
2:12-13, 993
2:13, 227, 884
2:14, 227
2:14-21, 994
2:15, 889
2:15-16, 4
2:15-21, 390
2:21, 684
3, 262, 548, 734, 891
3:1-3, 1055
3:1-4, 748
3:1-5, 888, 1195
3:6, 88
3:6-7, 43, 1145
3:6-9, 4, 390, 994
3:8, 1, 5
3:10-14, 913
3:12, 365
3:13, 272, 280, 1002
3:14, 1145, 1194
3:15, 286

3:17, 2 40
3:21-4:7, 548
3:22, 551
3:23-26, 966
3:23-28, 227
3:27, 114, 119
3:27-28, 112, 1105
3:27-29, 1145
3:28, 356, 390, 515, 516, 888, 1145
4:3, 888
4:4, 331, 722
4:5, 1002, 1116
4:6, 495
4:6-7, 1195
4:8-9, 529
4:8-11, 684
4:9, 640, 888
4:10, 838
4:13, 757
4:19, 1181
4:21-31, 39, 126
4:26, 36, 1209, 1210
4:27, 831, 1181
4:28, 43
5, 376, 591
5:1, 1158
5:2, 329
5:2-6, 227
5:2-12, 993
5:5-6, 496
5:6, 351, 365, 1056
5:11, 626
5:14, 568
5:16, 1169
5:17-24, 47
5:18-23, 986
5:19, 703, 994
5:19-21, 529, 995
5:20-21, 528
5:22-23, 420, 1202, 1203
5:23, 603
6:1, 305
6:2, 877
6:13, 757
6:15, 792, 994
6:16, 548, 913, 994, 1145
6:17, 914
6:40, 365

Ephesians
1, 1027, 1195
1:1, 889, 1032
1:3, 660
1:3-14, 1232
1:4, 202, 420
1:5, 1176
1:6, 1232
1:7, 382
1:7-10, 331
1:8-9, 1201
1:9, 783, 1021, 1022
1:9-10, 783
1:12, 1232
1:13-14, 119, 334, 1121
1:13-18, 982
1:14, 889, 1232
1:15-17, 889
1:17, 1201
1:17-19, 889, 982
1:18, 889
1:19-23, 331
1:20, 96, 331, 399, 964, 1016
1:20-22, 1017
1:20-23, 46, 960
1:22, 831
1:22-23, 890, 1227
2, 206, 218
2:1-3, 334
2:5, 889, 890, 994
2:5-6, 96, 99, 1019
2:6, 741, 1227
2:8, 890
2:8-9, 889, 890
2:10, 792
2:11-22, 354, 889
2:12-13, 354
2:13-18, 889
2:14-16, 54
2:18, 1236
2:19-22, 199, 509
2:20, 311, 838, 890, 1128, 1227
2:20-22, 1129
2:22, 510
3:1, 890
3:1-11, 783
3:1-13, 890
3:2-3, 354
3:3, 783, 1022
3:3-5, 783, 889, 1021
3:4, 783
3:4-5, 639
3:4-11, 1201
3:5, 783, 1022, 1227
3:6, 889
3:7, 783
3:7-8, 354
3:8, 783, 889
3:9, 783, 889
3:10, 1202, 1233
3:14-19, 794, 889
4, 889, 891, 982, 1178
4:1, 890
4:2, 329, 982
4:2-3, 1191
4:2-5, 496
4:4, 1233
4:4-5, 1227
4:4-6, 180, 889, 1232
4:5, 311
4:7-13, 890
4:7-16, 889
4:8-10, 96, 889
4:9-10, 459
4:11, 757, 762, 763, 1093
4:11-13, 355
4:11-16, 1236
4:12, 877
4:15, 890
4:16, 889, 982
4:16-20, 311
4:18, 658
4:19, 994
4:23, 792
4:24, 792
4:25-26, 889
4:25-32, 1191
4:26, 832
4:27, 941
4:30, 119
4:32, 1191
5:1, 535
5:2, 535
5:3, 995
5:3-5, 995, 1191
5:5, 529, 889
5:5-6, 982
5:14, 115, 1027, 1232
5:15, 1201
5:15-21, 1233
5:18, 905
5:19, 520, 521, 526
5:19-20, 1232
5:21, 349, 518, 918, 1158, 1209, 1213
5:21-33, 889, 1210
5:22, 889, 982, 1213
5:22-33, 514
5:23, 1083, 1092
5:23-27, 890
5:25, 534, 714, 982
5:25-27, 1209
5:25-33, 784
5:26, 1232
5:27, 890
5:29-32, 1214
5:31, 831, 889
6:1-4, 358, 1212
6:2-3, 889
6:5, 1092
6:5-8, 1101
6:5-9, 982
6:10-17, 889
6:17, 890
6:18, 946
6:18-20, 357
6:19, 783, 889, 1022, 1023
6:21, 765
6:21-22, 889, 982

Philippians
1, 935
1:1, 224, 301, 355, 743, 758, 1093, 1099
1:2, 676
1:9, 640
1:10, 265
1:12-15, 1066
1:14, 757
1:14-16, 488
1:21, 914
1:29, 356
2:5-11, 181, 962
2:6, 163
2:6-11, 96, 163, 399, 520, 521, 566, 567, 958, 1027, 1234
2:8, 487
2:9, 96, 398
2:9-11, 325, 667
2:10, 1231
2:11, 661
2:16, 265
2:17, 641
2:25, 355
2:25-30, 765
3, 161, 764
3:2, 586, 763, 913
3:2-16, 883
3:5, 990
3:6, 166, 884
3:8, 161
3:9, 1054
3:10, 154, 892, 913
3:10-11, 914
3:17, 1157
3:20, 175, 1083
3:21, 1018
4:2-3, 1206, 1219
4:3, 84, 191, 233, 563, 624, 765
4:8, 1157
4:9, 417, 1157
4:10-18, 761
4:18, 832

Colossians
1:1, 888, 982, 1032
1:2, 888
1:3, 1232
1:3-4, 889
1:4-5, 496
1:6, 639, 754
1:7, 757, 765
1:8, 1021
1:9, 639, 1201
1:9-10, 640, 889
1:10, 639, 1201
1:12, 888
1:12-13, 657
1:12-14, 1227, 1232
1:13, 889
1:14, 382, 888
1:15, 427
1:15-16, 957, 960
1:15-18, 1224
1:15-20, 252, 520, 521, 522, 888, 891, 957, 1027, 1201, 1227, 1232
1:16, 420
1:16-17, 325
1:17-19, 890
1:18, 427, 783, 888, 1017, 1232
1:20, 1232
1:20-22, 888
1:21-22, 1227
1:22, 888
1:24, 914, 1181
1:24-28, 1022, 1023
1:26, 783
1:26-27, 888, 889
1:26-28, 1201
1:27, 783
1:28, 876
2:2, 639, 783, 888
2:3, 783, 1201
2:6-7, 1055
2:6-15, 888
2:8, 888, 1201
2:9, 665, 888
2:10, 888
2:11, 228, 354, 888
2:11-14, 1232
2:12, 889, 1234
2:12-13, 1227
2:13, 888, 889
2:14-17, 888
2:15, 46, 818, 888, 1227
2:16, 685, 888
2:18, 529, 891, 961
2:19, 888, 889, 982
2:20, 888
2:21, 888
2:23, 961, 1201
3:1, 96, 741, 889, 1016, 1234
3:1-4, 873, 1019
3:2-4, 889
3:3, 1227
3:4, 1018, 1021
3:5, 529, 888, 995
3:5-6, 982, 995
3:5-8, 1191
3:5-12, 889
3:9-10, 119
3:10, 639, 640, 792
3:11, 515, 754, 888
3:12, 329, 888, 982
3:12-14, 1191
3:16, 520, 521, 889, 1201
3:16-17, 1232
3:18, 349, 503, 514, 889, 918, 1117
3:18-19, 982
3:22, 982
3:22-23, 1101
3:22-24, 1038
4:2, 357
4:3, 783, 888, 889
4:4, 1022, 1023
4:5, 761, 1201
4:7, 765, 889, 982
4:7-9, 765
4:7-17, 888, 981
4:10-11, 765
4:11, 16, 765
4:12, 757, 765
4:14, 16, 764, 765, 915
4:15, 93, 220, 376, 1220
4:16, 659, 1232
4:18, 888, 947, 981

1 Thessalonians
1:1, 596, 758, 915
1:3, 496
1:4-6, 761
1:5, 748, 1118
1:7, 757
1:8, 757
1:9, 529, 640
1:9-10, 627, 629, 767, 1012
1:10, 399
2:1-12, 760, 761, 762, 834
2:2, 230
2:7, 355
2:9, 762
2:14-16, 168, 467, 900, 913
2:15, 42
2:19, 856
3:1-6, 764
3:2, 763
3:5, 1166
3:13, 856, 1200
4:1, 1157, 1158
4:1-2, 1157
4:3, 349
4:4, 715
4:6, 349, 715
4:7, 349
4:9, 349, 639
4:12, 349, 761, 1200
4:14-16, 160
4:15, 856
4:16, 47, 1200
4:17, 741
5:1-3, 333
5:2, 265, 266, 570, 866, 869
5:3, 235, 1181
5:5, 658, 709
5:8, 496
5:11, 614
5:12-13, 223, 514, 518
5:12-22, 349, 449
5:13, 898
5:16-18, 357
5:17, 947
5:19, 236
5:22, 349
5:23, 417, 856, 895, 933
5:27, 659

2 Thessalonians
1:1, 915
1:7, 397
1:12, 1055
2, 52, 336
2:1, 856
2:1-2, 983
2:1-12, 51
2:2, 265, 978
2:3, 73
2:3-7, 342
2:3-12, 73, 336
2:4, 530
2:7, 1033
2:8, 1021
2:8-9, 856
2:13, 793
3:7, 1157
3:8, 762
3:11, 305
3:14-15, 305
3:15, 305

1 Timothy
1:1, 891, 1083
1:2, 896
1:3, 764, 891
1:3-4, 31, 331
1:4, 707, 982
1:5, 1211
1:6, 331
1:6-7, 31
1:7, 331, 707
1:7-9, 890
1:8-11, 31
1:9-10, 1191
1:11, 534
1:11-16, 105
1:15, 891, 1226, 1232
1:15-16, 890
1:17, 891, 1226
1:19-20, 331
1:20, 305
2:1, 514, 942
2:1-2, 321, 324, 517, 947

2:1-15, 349, 1158
2:3, 891, 1083
2:4, 639, 1015, 1188
2:5, 891
2:5-7, 31, 1226
2:7, 105, 760, 763
2:8, 517
2:8-15, 514, 1105
2:9-10, 517
2:12, 105
2:13, 43
3, 105
3:1, 105, 268, 891
3:1-3, 1233
3:1-7, 105, 355, 891
3:1-13, 223, 311, 518
3:1-15, 105
3:2, 504, 507, 759
3:2-4, 1191
3:2-5, 504
3:7, 761
3:8, 1193
3:8-10, 1191
3:8-13, 105, 891
3:9, 783, 890
3:10, 1166
3:11, 105
3:11-12, 1191
3:15, 311, 504, 1226
3:16, 46, 96, 99, 256, 332, 520, 524, 627, 661, 783, 890, 958, 986, 1017, 1226, 1233
4, 331
4:1-3, 1199
4:1-4, 1106
4:3, 31, 713
4:3-5, 890
4:4-5, 690, 1226
4:6, 105, 661, 891
4:7, 331, 639, 1213
4:7-8, 31
4:10, 891, 1083
4:11, 891
4:11-16, 628, 1233
4:12, 105, 1191
4:14, 105, 223, 311, 891
4:15, 1233
4:16, 105
5:1, 105
5:1-2, 514, 891
5:1-16, 891
5:2, 967
5:3, 1212
5:5, 942, 1193
5:9-10, 504
5:10, 962, 1051
5:11-12, 713
5:13, 1213
5:13-15, 331
5:14, 714, 1211
5:17, 105, 891
5:17-19, 137
5:17-22, 105
5:19, 105, 891
5:19-22, 891
6, 658
6:1-2, 514, 517
6:4-5, 1191
6:10, 1051
6:11, 1191
6:12-14, 534
6:13, 308
6:15-16, 657, 891
6:17, 962
6:17-18, 1051
6:18, 1191
6:20, 31, 105, 311, 400, 628, 707, 982
6:20-21, 331

2 Timothy
1:2, 896
1:3, 38, 241
1:5, 137
1:5-6, 534
1:6, 105, 891
1:9, 461, 890
1:9-11, 1201
1:10, 353, 658, 891, 1021, 1083
1:11, 105, 760
1:12-14, 891
1:13, 661
1:13-14, 105, 311, 534
1:14, 311, 661
1:15, 31, 73, 331
1:16-18, 765
1:18, 1019
2:1-2, 105
2:2, 891, 982
2:3:7, 639
2:4, 397
2:5, 327
2:11, 99, 891
2:11-13, 628, 661, 1226, 1233
2:14-17, 31
2:15, 105, 763
2:16-19, 331
2:17-18, 31, 867
2:19, 43
2:22, 896
2:22-25, 1191
2:23-26, 31
2:24-26, 32, 305
2:25, 639
2:25-26, 331
3:1-9, 31, 331, 1199
3:1-13, 305
3:2, 963, 1051
3:2-4, 1191
3:2-9, 331
3:6, 715
3:10, 329, 1191
3:10-15, 31
3:10-17, 534
3:11, 137
3:12, 910
3:15, 357
4:1-8, 534
4:3, 661
4:5, 355, 433, 757, 763
4:6, 641
4:8, 354
4:9-15, 982
4:10, 757, 758, 765
4:11, 16, 765, 915
4:12, 765
4:17, 105, 890
4:19, 1217
5:3-16, 1221

Titus
1:1, 639
1:3, 105, 891, 1083
1:4, 764
1:5, 105, 223, 757, 764, 765, 891
1:5-7, 1093
1:6-9, 514, 518
1:7, 504, 963, 1051, 1191
1:7-9, 105, 891, 1233
1:8, 504, 759, 1191
1:9, 105, 661
1:10-14, 32
1:11, 32
1:12, 819
1:13, 661
1:14, 32
1:15, 32, 709, 994
2, 519, 520, 1211
2:1, 514
2:1-10, 519, 889
2:1-15, 1158
2:2, 105, 1211
2:3, 1213
2:4-5, 1211
2:4-10, 349
2:5, 1211, 1212
2:6, 1211
2:6-8, 534
2:7, 105
2:7-8, 105
2:8, 1211
2:8-10, 1212
2:9-10, 517
2:10, 891, 1083
3:4, 1021
2:11-14, 515, 517
2:13, 163, 891, 1055, 1083
2:14, 211
3:1, 517
3:1-2, 514
3:3, 1191
3:3-8, 515, 534
3:4, 1083
3:4-7, 1226
3:5, 354, 792, 795, 890
3:5-7, 118
3:5-8, 891
3:6, 891
3:9, 890
3:9-11, 32
3:10-11, 305
3:12, 758
3:13, 759, 765

Philemon
1, 890
2, 93, 376
9, 890
13, 765
22, 503
23, 765
24, 16, 764, 765, 915

Hebrews
1, 45, 88, 98, 102, 172, 173, 363, 449, 480, 537, 738, 948, 952, 965, 998, 1122
1:1, 36, 347, 447, 451, 582, 861, 998
1:1-2, 40, 456, 489, 521, 665, 1022
1:1-3, 939, 957, 1201, 1202
1:1-4, 172, 397, 417, 444, 450, 451, 452, 453, 477, 670, 933, 1043, 1134, 1236
1:1-12, 356
1:1-14, 1043
1:2, 251, 252, 265, 277, 318, 334, 347, 418, 622, 632, 665, 860, 960, 1224
1:2-3, 252, 957
1:3, 96, 98, 99, 172, 252
1:3, 252
1:3, 274, 275, 360, 397, 398, 417, 521, 522, 526, 632, 665, 957, 958, 1070, 1096
1:3-4, 138, 891
1:3-5, 100, 448, 1016
1:3-13, 456, 482
1:4, 452, 785
1:4-7, 360
1:5, 96, 98, 252, 318, 398, 399, 417, 418, 450, 451, 452, 537, 632, 785, 793, 794, 843, 845, 878, 1043, 1134
1:5-6, 45
1:5-8, 953
1:5-9, 399
1:5-12, 843
1:5-13, 334
1:5-14, 36, 172, 417, 453, 480, 845, 849
1:6, 417, 665, 694
1:6-7, 843, 845
1:7, 100, 138, 172, 417, 448, 1118, 1121
1:7-9, 45
1:8, 252, 346, 417, 430, 563, 957, 1237
1:8-9, 360, 632
1:8-12, 843, 845
1:9, 49, 360, 694, 821, 1095
1:10, 251, 252, 419, 670, 957
1:10-12, 45, 252, 276, 440, 665
1:11, 1240
1:13, 98, 100, 138, 277, 360, 418, 632, 843, 1016
1:13-14, 45
1:14, 172, 860, 944, 1073, 1118
2, 172
2:1, 350, 444, 445, 447, 567, 878
2:1-3, 522
2:1-4, 103, 252, 275, 361, 419, 445, 453, 454, 483, 821, 843, 845, 969
2:1-5, 957
2:1-18, 274, 1043
2:2, 45, 66, 103, 418, 445, 861, 998
2:2-3, 261, 845, 878, 1038, 1097
2:2-4, 445
2:3, 73, 417, 445, 447, 567, 670, 767, 860, 1073, 1218, 1236
2:3-4, 444, 447, 632, 633
2:4, 356, 445, 496, 941, 1094, 1204
2:5, 399, 451, 454, 563
2:6, 842
2:6-8, 632
2:6-9, 334, 537
2:7, 98, 418
2:7-9, 399, 958
2:8, 399
2:8-9, 45, 843
2:9, 45, 96, 98, 173, 360, 399, 418, 434, 878
2:10, 45, 198, 277, 334, 361, 397, 418, 419, 499, 567, 860
2:10-12, 361, 1116
2:10-13, 1224, 1233
2:10-18, 399, 849, 1117
2:11, 276, 487, 488
2:11-12, 1233
2:12, 198, 510, 522, 567
2:12-13, 849
2:14, 2, 261, 334, 373, 375, 655, 878, 939, 985, 1078, 1079, 1241
2:14-3:6, 74
2:14-15, 278
2:14-16, 2
2:14-18, 261
2:15, 43, 371, 449, 655, 1079
2:15-16, 2
2:15-18, 1038
2:16, 1, 248, 582
2:17, 198, 274, 275, 276, 282, 418, 452, 453, 1096
2:17-18, 74, 278, 451, 456, 633
2:18, 138, 275, 568, 1139, 1167
3, 36, 198, 334, 335, 475, 509, 511, 685, 900, 998
3:1, 138, 163, 172, 257, 417, 450, 451, 452, 456, 661, 878, 1043
3:1-4:13, 452
3:1-6, 79, 172, 445, 450, 453, 480, 537, 781, 782, 1043, 1092
3:1-19, 567, 878
3:2, 418, 510, 780
3:2-5, 456
3:2-6, 1113
3:3, 394, 1155
3:3-4, 510
3:4, 510
3:5, 39, 456
3:5-6, 510, 632
3:6, 103, 153, 198, 277, 335, 361, 418, 444, 447, 451, 500, 510, 961, 1038
3:7, 172, 445, 447, 453, 497, 685, 821, 895, 1043
3:7-4:11, 1013
3:7-8, 445
3:7-11, 42, 450, 453, 665, 969, 1239
3:7-13, 74
3:7-19, 275, 480, 845, 850
3:8, 985
3:8-11, 36
3:10, 985
3:11, 36, 632, 861, 1239
3:12, 74, 417, 418, 445, 447, 453, 655, 878, 985
3:12-13, 447
3:12-14, 278, 327
3:12-19, 42, 453, 623, 844
3:13, 445, 456
3:13-20, 209
3:14, 153, 335, 361, 447, 451, 461, 1038
3:15, 985
3:17, 1097
3:18, 632, 861
4:1, 66, 335, 419, 440, 445, 447, 500, 632, 861, 969
4:1-2, 844
4:1-6, 1073
4:1-11, 850
4:1-13, 781, 878
4:2, 42, 364, 368, 432
4:2-3, 365
4:3, 251, 335, 419, 420, 632, 861, 1223, 1239
4:3-5, 844
4:3-11, 647
4:4, 417
4:4-5, 419
4:5, 632, 861
4:6, 42, 335, 432
4:7, 317, 417, 419, 985
4:7-8, 844
4:8, 42
4:8-11, 480
4:9, 198, 211, 335, 419, 632, 633, 861, 862
4:9-10, 42
4:10, 335, 861
4:11, 74, 350, 418, 419, 440, 445, 447, 861, 878, 969
4:11-12, 419
4:11-13, 418
4:12, 418, 444, 456, 665, 985
4:12-13, 66, 418, 456, 623, 665, 861
4:13, 265, 418, 444, 623, 665
4:14, 36, 96, 98, 172, 248, 257, 274, 360, 418, 440, 452, 453, 537, 563, 661, 734, 878, 933, 964, 1112, 1134, 1233
4:14-15, 958
4:14-16, 74, 75, 107, 274, 275, 360, 450, 633, 944, 1012
4:15, 274, 277, 567, 568,

734, 878, 964, 1096, 1139, 1167, 1170
4:15-16 986
4:16, 275, 277, 361, 417, 434, 564, 632, 734, 966, 1167, 1233
5, 278, 537, 965, 998
5:1, 450, 966, 1070, 1096
5:1-6, 276
5:1-10, 248, 453, 480, 1043
5:2, 274, 275
5:2-3, 274
5:3, 1070, 1096
5:4, 317
5:4-5, 1070
5:4-10, 738
5:5, 98, 153, 318, 334, 394, 632, 793, 794
5:5-6, 98, 252, 360, 844, 845
5:5-10, 172, 1016
5:6, 172, 346, 360, 417, 456, 482, 537, 632, 730, 966, 1070, 1113
5:7, 74, 375, 418, 568, 655, 942, 944, 945, 958, 985, 1073
5:7-8, 633
5:7-9, 274, 566, 567, 878
5:7-10, 173, 261, 356, 361
5:8, 418, 958, 1112, 1139
5:8-9, 334, 1181
5:8-10, 482
5:9, 277, 461, 624, 821, 860, 914, 1073
5:10, 360, 456, 730
5:11, 117, 277, 350, 445, 447, 451, 454, 738, 1043
5:11-6:2), 849
5:11-12, 878, 1218
5:11-14, 73, 418, 445, 628, 998
5:12, 418, 445, 446, 448, 736, 737
5:12-14, 312, 1115
5:13, 418, 446, 736, 738, 1058, 1115
5:14, 334, 737, 738, 1095
5:16, 274
5:17, 942
6, 98
6:1, 153, 446, 738, 862, 878, 1012
6:1-2, 257, 622, 624, 738, 767
6:1-8, 878
6:1-12, 534
6:2, 66, 228, 335, 346, 624, 1016
6:4, 334, 658, 1022
6:4-5, 342
6:4-6, 354, 350, 381, 447, 823
6:4-8, 66, 277, 361, 419, 447, 1013
6:5, 65, 334, 445, 940
6:6, 74, 117, 381, 792, 860, 958, 1013, 1112
6:6-10, 878
6:7-8, 444, 459, 623
6:9, 74, 451, 860, 1039
6:9-11, 445
6:9-20, 1234
6:10, 107, 361, 419, 622, 696, 1086, 1139
6:10-12, 522
6:11, 445, 447
6:11-12, 335
6:12, 45, 130, 327, 350, 368, 447, 534, 969
6:13, 1, 3, 38
6:13-15, 3, 38, 327, 534, 878, 968
6:13-20, 3, 103
6:14, 130
6:15, 3, 500
6:16-17, 3, 38
6:17, 969
6:17-18, 335
6:17-20, 334
6:18, 456, 1185
6:18-20, 447
6:19, 102, 444, 500, 563, 985
6:19-20, 3, 98, 275, 276, 440, 633
6:20, 96, 98, 346, 361, 456, 567, 730, 966, 1016, 1070
7, 45, 209, 274, 730, 891, 913, 999, 1050
7:1, 1, 130, 417, 731, 738, 850
7:1-2, 456, 731, 964
7:1-3, 632
7:1-10, 3, 843, 849
7:1-25, 1043
7:1-28, 172, 248, 450, 453, 480, 878
7:2, 1, 731, 843, 895
7:2-3, 731
7:3, 655, 730, 843, 964, 965
7:4, 3, 43, 731, 964
7:4-6, 1
7:4-10, 730, 843
7:5, 240
7:6, 730, 968
7:6-7, 130
7:7, 3
7:8, 965, 1204
7:9, 1
7:10, 43
7:11, 277, 646, 862, 1016
7:11-14, 198
7:11-28, 849
7:12, 276, 646
7:13, 1113
7:13-14, 966
7:13-28, 965
7:14, 417, 567, 670
7:15, 964, 965, 966, 1016
7:15-17, 1073, 1113
7:16, 240, 360, 375, 655, 849
7:16-17, 1070
7:17, 36, 360, 482, 537, 730, 1204
7:18, 240, 646
7:18-19, 383
7:18-28, 966
7:19, 277, 500, 646
7:20, 655
7:21, 482, 537, 670
7:21-22, 646, 1070
7:22, 246, 350
7:23-24, 1070
7:23-25, 646, 655, 776
7:23-28, 172, 198, 622
7:24, 965
7:25, 99, 172, 275, 360, 418, 564, 942, 944, 946, 1013, 1016, 1073, 1233, 1236
7:26, 96, 98, 99, 360, 440, 485, 488, 1043, 1158, 1191
7:26-28, 74, 274, 275, 277, 360, 646
7:27, 35, 99, 275, 1070, 1096
7:27-28, 448
7:28, 172, 274, 418, 632, 1070
8, 35, 509, 965, 967, 1155
8:1, 96, 98, 99, 248, 334, 360, 417, 451, 453, 537, 544, 563, 632, 646, 878, 1016
8:1-2, 248, 360
8:1-6, 248, 440, 450
8:1-7, 958
8:1-11, 480
8:1-13, 172
8:2, 248, 360, 440, 563, 633, 670, 1155, 1185, 1233
8:3, 844, 1070
8:3-5, 445, 448
8:4, 248, 1043
8:5, 36, 99, 248, 274, 440, 448, 480, 482, 509, 563, 633, 958, 964, 966, 1070, 1155
8:5-6, 40
8:6, 246, 248, 350, 418
8:6-13, 198, 276, 383, 633
8:7, 138, 350
8:7-12, 277
8:7-13, 248, 450, 543, 646
8:8, 246, 350, 509
8:8-11, 670
8:8-12, 198, 248, 537, 845
8:8-13, 38
8:9, 38, 246
8:10, 198, 350, 985
8:12, 276, 277
8:13, 248, 350, 537, 844, 1070
8:19, 563
8:21-28, 74
9, 99, 243, 382, 1233
9:1, 246, 248, 334, 450, 487
9:1-7, 844
9:1-10, 448, 480
9:1-15, 276
9:1-18, 849
9:2-5, 1165
9:3, 487
9:4, 494
9:5, 396, 451
9:6, 1165
9:6-7, 248
9:7, 248, 966, 1070, 1165
9:8, 334, 497, 858, 1021, 1022, 1155
9:8-10, 844, 1165
9:9, 242, 248, 277, 1155, 1158
9:9-10, 375, 379
9:10, 228, 277, 582, 1070, 1139
9:11, 99, 153, 276, 440, 454, 633, 844, 849, 966, 1155, 1165
9:11-12, 36, 1155
9:11-14, 74, 1003
9:12, 96, 98, 99, 242, 248, 274, 275, 360, 624, 633, 966, 1070, 1165
9:12-14, 849
9:13, 261, 276, 279, 488
9:13-14, 138, 375, 456, 845
9:14, 153, 242, 248, 261, 277, 278, 346, 417, 418, 490, 491, 958, 1070, 1071, 1096, 1211, 1237
9:15, 246, 286, 335, 346
12:24, 350
9:15, 418, 1003, 1070, 1096
9:15-22, 172, 274, 278, 780
9:16, 642
9:16-17, 278, 655
9:18-22, 248
9:19, 240
9:20, 278, 780, 842
9:22, 107, 261, 275, 379
9:23, 172, 248, 274, 334, 1155
9:23-24, 482
9:23-26, 360, 1022
9:23-28, 275, 276, 933
9:24, 96, 98, 99, 153, 248, 360, 418, 440, 480, 633, 844, 1155, 1185, 1233
9:24-28, 74
9:25, 248
9:25-28, 198
9:26, 248, 251, 275, 276, 334, 858, 1070, 1096
9:26-28, 252, 860
9:27, 66, 265, 278, 657
9:27-28, 623
9:28, 153, 248, 275, 276, 335, 361, 858, 861, 944, 1073, 1096
10, 278
10:1, 248, 482, 564, 891, 964, 966
10:1-2, 248, 646
10:1-4, 1022
10:1-18, 453, 480, 850
10:2, 242, 276, 277
10:2-4, 1096
10:3, 242
10:3-4, 646
10:3-10, 537
10:4, 261, 275, 276, 487, 1070
10:5, 252, 274, 1071, 1222
10:5-6, 567
10:5-7, 958
10:5-10, 261, 418, 480, 487, 488, 646
10:5-18, 964
10:8, 1096
10:8-10, 843
10:9-10, 318
10:9-18, 74
10:10, 153, 248, 274, 275, 276, 334, 487, 488, 1070
10:11, 248, 276, 646, 1070, 1096
10:11-13, 1079
10:11-14, 261, 360, 361
10:11-15, 198
10:11-23, 944
10:12, 98, 248, 334, 360, 418, 487, 632, 1016, 1070, 1073
10:12-13, 252, 265
10:12-14, 646
10:13, 277, 360, 418, 633, 734
10:14, 248, 276, 277, 334, 487, 488
10:14-18, 277, 850
10:15, 417, 1204
10:15-18, 277
10:16, 240, 350, 670
10:16-17, 198, 248, 417
10:16-18, 383, 646
10:17, 381, 821
10:18, 275, 276, 379, 1012, 1070
10:18-19, 1013
10:19, 117, 452, 454, 965, 1043, 1134
10:19-20, 36, 456, 567
10:19-21, 450
10:19-22, 360, 361, 1155
10:19-25, 74, 117, 1233
10:19-39, 843, 1042
10:20, 375
10:21, 444, 509
10:22, 117, 242, 261, 275, 279, 419, 564, 966, 985, 1095, 1211
10:23, 117, 335, 419, 451, 500, 661, 969
10:23-25, 447
10:24, 368, 419, 696
10:24-25, 278, 877
10:24-39, 895
10:25, 38, 107, 117, 198, 252, 265, 329, 335, 445, 446, 447, 449, 622, 858, 861, 1231
10:25-27, 66
10:26, 639, 1097, 1185
10:26-27, 459, 622
10:26-29, 334
10:26-30, 278
10:26-31, 350, 381, 419, 447, 623, 878, 1013
10:27, 265, 278, 372, 419
10:27-31, 335
10:28, 40, 718, 734
10:28-29, 845
10:28-31, 1038
10:29, 276, 434, 487, 488, 490, 1013, 1112
10:30, 198, 850
10:30-31, 66, 265
10:31, 278, 372, 418
10:32, 189, 658, 1062
10:32-34, 73, 189, 440, 443, 445, 446, 447, 448, 505, 718, 1012, 1038, 1062, 1067
10:32-35, 878
10:32-39, 75, 327, 718, 781, 1233
10:33-34, 1087
10:34, 356, 361, 440, 602, 604
10:34-35, 335
10:35, 38, 74, 277, 327, 335, 419, 447, 821
10:35-36, 361, 1038
10:35-37, 861
10:35-39, 447, 451, 622
10:36, 419, 969
10:36-38, 335
10:36-39, 449
10:36-41, 74
10:37, 252, 265, 861
10:37-38, 999, 1054, 1056
10:37-39, 1234
10:38, 38, 365
10:38-39, 365
10:39, 368, 459, 624, 661, 985, 1240
11, 36, 38, 327, 354, 364, 368, 480, 512, 534, 537, 538, 718, 843, 850, 891, 1050, 1223
11:1, 3, 39, 74, 105, 365, 447, 453, 878, 891, 1056, 1234
11:1-2, 1042
11:1-40, 365, 453, 969, 1073
11:2, 38
11:3, 252, 420, 958, 1224
11:3-4, 367
11:3-40, 1042
11:4, 38, 718, 719, 1056
11:4-5, 1204
11:5, 38, 138, 276, 456
11:5-7, 456
11:6, 38, 41, 419, 564, 821, 1038
11:7, 38, 512, 624, 1056, 1073, 1222
11:8, 1, 3, 38, 821, 1038
11:8-10, 1040
11:8-12, 3
11:8-16, 103
11:8-19, 968
11:9, 3, 38, 39, 40, 1158
11:9-16, 335
11:10, 39, 420, 537, 563, 632, 633, 821
11:11, 3, 39, 451, 1218
11:11-12, 3, 1038
11:12, 3, 4, 39
11:13, 440, 505, 655, 661,

861
11:13-14, 352, 419
11:13-16, 361, 420, 1233
11:14, 563, 632
11:16, 335, 563, 632
11:17, 1, 3, 4, 138, 1168
11:17-19, 3, 39
11:17-22, 103
11:18, 4, 39, 43
11:19, 1016
11:20, 39
11:20-21, 130
11:21, 39, 40
11:21-22, 40
11:22, 39, 40
11:23, 39, 371, 1218
11:23-26, 821
11:23-28, 778, 780, 781
11:23-31, 103
11:24, 39
11:25, 39, 198, 1012
11:26, 39, 153, 335, 1139
11:27, 39, 327, 371, 1240
11:28, 39, 537, 1241
11:29-30, 39
11:30, 658
11:31, 39, 456, 895, 1218
11:32, 39, 443, 451, 1218
11:32-34, 1139
11:33, 456, 563, 831
11:33-38, 39
11:34, 940, 1139
11:35, 276, 335, 449, 718, 719, 1002, 1016, 1218
11:35-38, 446, 1139
11:36-38, 42
11:37, 138, 448, 456, 718, 719, 1180
11:38, 1222, 1223
11:39, 335, 419
11:40, 277, 1118
12, 486, 563, 895, 899
12:1, 138, 327, 456, 718, 719, 1095, 1204
12:1-2, 74, 419, 540
12:1-3, 103, 328, 361, 453
12:1-4, 172, 719
12:1-13, 277
12:2, 98, 99, 275, 277, 328, 356, 360, 418, 537, 567, 602, 632, 633, 821, 862, 1038, 1073
12:2-3, 446, 878, 913, 962
12:3, 328, 449
12:3-4, 419, 447
12:4, 73, 189, 327, 328, 329, 350, 445, 446, 447, 449, 718, 907, 1012
12:4-6, 450
12:4-11, 277, 895
12:4-13, 850
12:5, 198, 419
12:5-6, 670, 695
12:5-11, 66, 480, 1116
12:5-12, 1139
12:5-13, 172
12:6, 198, 694, 736
12:7, 198, 419
12:7-11, 450
12:7-13, 327
12:9, 375, 417, 418, 419, 459, 845, 985, 1118
12:10, 1118
12:10-11, 419
12:11, 602, 895, 1057
12:12-13, 447, 450, 895
12:12-17, 483
12:13, 445
12:14, 276, 335, 457, 485, 895, 896
12:14-17, 563
12:14-29, 449, 453
12:15, 222, 305, 434, 445
12:15-17, 381
12:15-29, 895
12:16, 39, 42, 1088
12:16-17, 350, 1013
12:17, 130, 445
12:18, 563, 564
12:18-19, 66, 138
12:18-21, 172, 563
12:18-24, 65, 198, 277, 862
12:18-29, 172, 445
12:21, 278, 456, 842
12:22, 36, 198, 334, 420, 537, 561, 563, 564, 632, 655, 1155
12:22-23, 633
12:22-24, 45, 172, 440, 505, 563, 1016, 1118, 1233
12:23, 66, 198, 265, 279, 420, 499, 563, 776, 985, 1016, 1058, 1118
12:24, 38, 563
12:25, 66, 417, 419, 623, 878
12:25-29, 335, 419, 563
12:26, 276, 419, 843, 969
12:26-28, 440
12:27, 1022
12:27-28, 335
12:28, 419, 435, 440, 449, 563, 633, 832, 1071
12:29, 66, 486
13, 350, 444, 449, 715, 861, 1067
13:1, 447, 696
13:1-2, 4
13:1-3, 374, 505
13:1-6, 444
13:1-9, 483
13:1-19, 895
13:1-21, 449, 451, 1043, 1157
13:1-25, 454, 1043
13:2, 449, 502, 504, 505, 895, 897, 1051, 1062, 1071, 1220
13:3, 444, 449, 505, 895, 985, 1071, 1139
13:4, 66, 335, 444, 449, 622, 623, 715, 1088
13:4-5, 356
13:5, 449, 567, 1051
13:5-6, 844
13:6, 371, 670
13:7, 108, 311, 445, 446, 448, 534, 744, 767, 1236
13:7-9, 447
13:8, 153, 242, 346, 449, 767
13:9, 327, 378, 433, 449, 522, 582, 628, 767, 879
13:9-10, 1139
13:10, 449, 1233
13:10-16, 1233
13:11, 449, 985, 1096, 1155
13:11-12, 1070
13:12, 198, 446, 487, 488, 567, 633, 878
13:12-13, 446
13:12-16, 1233
13:13, 449, 895
13:13-14, 327, 361, 447
13:14, 36, 335, 352, 420, 444, 449, 632, 1067
13:15, 449, 522, 525, 526, 943, 1233
13:15-16, 689, 1071
13:16, 374, 449, 1051
13:17, 108, 444, 446, 449, 513, 514, 518, 623, 744, 985, 1233
13:17-18, 447
13:17-19, 447
13:17-23, 1218
13:18, 449, 942
13:19, 447, 451, 454
13:20, 98, 246, 334, 346, 417, 418, 445, 449, 670, 689, 864, 877, 1016, 1092, 1235
13:20-21, 172, 452, 651, 660, 664, 879, 895, 942, 1016, 1038, 1134
13:20-25, 477
13:21, 368, 395, 660, 661
13:22, 103, 350, 444, 447, 450, 451, 453, 475, 651, 821, 860, 1042, 1157, 1233
13:22-25, 447, 450, 451, 452, 1043, 1134
13:23, 189, 444, 447, 449, 451, 651, 1218
13:24, 444, 446, 447, 651, 1066
13:25, 434, 651, 660

James

1, 1240
1:1, 154, 173, 198, 420, 545, 547, 551, 552, 582, 616, 670, 671, 816, 863, 913, 1043, 1086, 1099, 1229
1:1-2, 1044
1:1-12, 1044
1:1-18, 1044
1:1-21, 557
1:2, 4, 549, 602, 815, 908, 1039, 1166
1:2-3, 549, 556, 557, 945
1:2-4, 327, 330, 349, 351, 356, 557, 560, 1043, 1180
1:2-7, 879
1:2-18, 816, 822, 1044
1:2-21, 552
1:2-27, 651
1:3, 368, 421
1:3-4, 816, 1044
1:4, 549, 553, 556, 1039
1:5, 253, 351, 365, 421, 556, 557, 582, 838, 945, 1039, 1167, 1169, 1201
1:5-6, 556
1:5-7, 670, 671
1:5-8, 102, 420, 549, 557, 945, 1202
1:5-11, 1043
1:5-12, 1044
1:6, 367, 368, 945, 1115, 1228
1:6-8, 102, 327, 421, 557, 1170
1:7, 420
1:8, 139, 421, 816, 945, 986, 1168
1:9, 421, 623, 837, 1052
1:9-10, 962
1:9-11, 351, 546, 549, 556, 557, 822, 879, 1051, 1139
1:10-11, 318, 537, 837, 1051
1:11, 655
1:12, 4, 66, 131, 327, 328, 397, 553, 556, 557, 558, 602, 622, 655, 695, 776, 777, 815, 816, 837, 838, 862, 969, 1018, 1039, 1043, 1166, 1167, 1240
1:12-15, 549, 815, 1180
1:12-16, 351, 1202
1:13, 421, 1043, 1095, 1168, 1170
1:13-15, 74, 421, 557, 1079, 1168
1:13-16, 253, 550, 557, 1229
1:13-17, 556
1:14, 1169
1:14-15, 556, 1168, 1169
1:15, 655, 792, 1192
1:16, 74, 75, 556, 1185
1:16-18, 420, 421, 557, 1044
1:16-21, 549
1:17, 139, 252, 253, 420, 421, 553, 556, 568, 658, 816, 945, 1229
1:17-18, 351, 556
1:17-21, 550
1:18, 253, 261, 335, 351, 421, 556, 557, 582, 622, 624, 792, 793, 862, 1039, 1185, 1224
1:19, 551, 552, 556, 816, 838, 1169, 1240
1:19-20, 557
1:19-21, 421
1:19-27, 548, 879, 1044
1:20, 422, 896, 1054, 1240
1:20-25, 103
1:21, 383, 421, 556, 557, 624, 941, 962, 985, 1073, 1158
1:21-25, 645
1:21-27, 354
1:22, 549, 552, 557, 558, 1039, 1051
1:22-24, 549
1:22-25, 421, 551, 557, 558, 604, 815, 822
1:22-27, 556
1:24, 103
1:25, 351, 368, 383, 553, 582, 602, 645, 1039
1:26, 815, 838, 985
1:26-27, 421, 558, 879, 1044, 1071
1:27, 253, 351, 383, 420, 422, 549, 557, 734, 838, 896, 1039, 1051, 1140, 1180, 1220, 1223, 1229
2, 561, 815, 1050
2:1, 154, 173, 362, 368, 398, 420, 422, 547, 551, 556, 558, 582, 670, 671, 837, 953, 1018, 1044
2:1-2, 549
2:1-3, 420
2:1-4, 1139
2:1-5, 548, 556
2:1-7, 546, 549, 816, 879, 1051, 1145, 1169
2:1-8, 734
2:1-9, 356
2:1-13, 421, 422, 550, 651, 822, 879, 895, 896, 1044, 1140
2:1-16, 734
2:1-26, 1044
2:2, 198, 205, 224, 549, 1139, 1145, 1229, 1231
2:2-4, 549, 558, 560
2:2-6, 351
2:2-7, 822
2:2-11, 551
2:3, 734, 1229
2:3-4, 549
2:4, 623, 1095
2:5, 318, 351, 368, 421, 548, 549, 551, 553, 556, 558, 568, 633, 634, 696, 838, 879, 969, 1039, 1223
2:5-8, 327
2:6, 232, 522, 734, 838, 1139
2:6-7, 549, 550, 551, 558, 634
2:7, 114, 173, 318, 362, 676, 786, 1139, 1229
2:8, 240, 480, 537, 557, 558, 568, 582, 634, 645, 697, 734, 953, 1145, 1229
2:8-10, 383
2:8-11, 480
2:8-12, 351, 645
2:8-13, 421, 551, 558, 1145
2:8-26, 556
2:9, 623, 734, 822, 838, 1095
2:10, 351, 480, 645, 816
2:11, 240, 480, 537, 645, 835, 837, 1088
2:12, 383, 582, 645
2:12-13, 550, 551, 556, 558, 623, 624, 862
2:12-26, 548
2:13, 336, 623, 734, 837, 838
2:14, 368, 421, 1073
2:14-16, 557
2:14-17, 4, 41, 549
2:14-26, 88, 351, 354, 551, 558, 560, 582, 586, 624, 651, 816, 822, 1039, 1044, 1056, 1140, 1145
2:15, 421, 734, 1139, 1229
2:15-16, 522, 550, 894, 895
2:15-17, 351, 383
2:16, 421, 896, 897, 985, 1139, 1229
2:17, 103, 365, 368, 421, 558, 655
2:18, 103, 421, 734, 1056
2:18-24, 892
2:19, 257, 421, 1056, 1229
2:20, 421, 558, 1056
2:21, 1, 4, 43, 368, 1056
2:21-22, 1056
2:21-23, 816
2:21-24, 3, 4, 39, 41, 537, 558
2:21-25, 421
2:21-26, 550, 734
2:22, 351, 368, 370, 553
2:22-24, 624
2:23, 1, 41, 480, 537, 837, 838, 1056, 1169
2:24, 365, 368, 1056
2:25, 39, 41, 537, 553, 558, 895, 1056, 1216
2:26, 41, 368, 421, 558, 655, 776, 985, 1056
3, 951, 1229
3:1, 107, 336, 622, 744, 837, 1044, 1229
3:1-2, 558
3:1-8, 551
3:1-12, 651, 815, 822, 1044, 1050, 1229
3:1-18, 549, 552, 557, 558
3:2, 553, 816
3:3-6, 558
3:5-6, 838
3:6, 383, 459, 624, 816, 1079
3:6-10, 139
3:7-8, 558
3:8, 838
3:9, 420, 421, 670
3:9-10, 130, 383, 556, 558
3:10, 816
3:11-12, 558
3:12, 568
3:13, 368, 420, 558, 582, 816, 962, 1044, 1191
3:13-16, 557
3:13-18, 420, 421, 716, 822, 879, 896, 1044, 1202
3:14, 985, 1185
3:14-16, 550, 556, 1191, 1192
3:15, 420, 558, 582, 1079, 1185
3:15-16, 558, 1202
3:16, 558

3:17, 350, 351, 365, 420, 422, 552, 556, 558, 582, 734, 895, 1039, 1191, 1201, 1202
3:17-18, 383, 488, 556, 557, 558, 898, 1191
3:18, 351, 422, 556, 558, 895, 896, 1057
4, 1159
4:1, 552, 558, 601, 986
4:1-2, 350, 716
4:1-3, 879, 945
4:1-4, 945, 946
4:1-5, 549, 551
4:1-10, 421, 557
4:1-12, 896
4:2, 945
4:2-3, 558, 568, 1170
4:3, 556, 601, 716
4:3-4, 551
4:3-5, 550
4:3-6, 549
4:3-10, 1051
4:4, 253, 716, 717, 816, 1088, 1223
4:4-5, 495, 558
4:4-6, 550, 816
4:4-10, 879
4:5, 86 421, 838, 1169
4:5-6, 837
4:6, 365, 421, 434, 480, 537, 546, 559, 832, 961, 962
4:6-10, 351, 548, 556
4:6-12, 550
4:7, 383, 670, 1039, 1078, 1080
4:7-10, 549, 556, 559, 716, 1081
4:8, 132, 421, 488, 986, 1013, 1039, 1080, 1168
4:8-10, 1039
4:9, 601, 604, 838
4:10, 420, 421, 568, 670
4:11, 331, 383, 582, 837, 1229
4:11-12, 422, 556, 559, 623, 716, 862
4:12, 237, 265, 421, 1073, 1241
4:13, 331, 541, 549, 550, 822, 879, 1044, 1139
4:13-15, 838, 1039, 1051
4:13-16 421
4:13-17 318, 556, 559, 879
4:14-17 549
4:15, 173, 420, 670
4:16, 962, 1095
4:17, 1095
5, 815, 837
5:1, 351, 549, 550, 623
5:1-2, 838
5:1-3, 623
5:1-6, 103, 327, 329, 421, 522, 546, 549, 550, 551, 560, 734, 879, 1051
5:1-8, 837
5:1-9, 173, 253, 336, 556
5:1-11, 863
5:3, 335, 374, 459, 622, 985
5:4, 351, 420, 537, 559, 670, 671, 943, 1139
5:4-5, 863
5:4-6, 549
5:5, 421, 838, 1055
5:6, 42, 559
5:7, 420, 857, 1073, 1199
5:7-8, 173, 351, 552, 670, 671, 863
5:7-9, 265, 335, 553, 557, 559, 634, 1139
5:7-11, 421, 623, 879, 1044, 1230
5:7-12, 816, 1180
5:7-20, 559, 1043, 1044
5:8, 420, 857, 864
5:9, 173, 420, 559, 623, 863, 1039
5:9-11, 552
5:10, 173, 671, 816, 863
5:10-11, 327, 355, 420, 534, 816, 863
5:10-12, 559
5:11, 41, 173, 327, 537, 602, 671
5:12, 74, 420, 422, 552, 568, 863
5:12-20, 1044, 1229
5:13, 522, 526, 942, 945
5:13-16, 559, 1228
5:13-18, 437, 439, 552, 556, 945, 1145
5:13-20, 651, 1044
5:14, 48, 107, 198, 205, 224, 420, 786, 942, 1145
5:14-15, 437, 671, 945
5:14-16, 356
5:15, 368, 420, 744, 942, 945, 1016, 1039, 1073
5:15-16, 380, 381, 437
5:16, 139, 421, 437, 816, 942, 945, 1013, 1057, 1229
5:16-18, 437
5:17, 41, 537, 942
5:17-18, 41, 550, 559, 816, 945
5:19, 1185
5:19-20, 305, 551, 552, 557, 559, 568, 622, 762, 1229
5:20, 74, 655, 656, 768, 837, 839, 985, 1013, 1073

1 Peter

1, 876
1:1, 79, 173, 392, 422, 476, 517, 542, 549, 569, 652, 757, 758, 764, 768, 913, 915, 917, 919, 1106, 1135, 1163, 1234
1:1-2, 224, 319, 392, 517, 651, 822, 917
1:1-12, 1044
1:2, 154, 173, 174, 280, 335, 422, 434, 490, 651, 660, 821, 896, 916, 946, 1071, 1163, 1237
1:3, 118, 154, 173, 174, 422, 499, 500, 655, 660, 671, 672, 735, 737, 776, 792, 793, 880, 917, 921, 943, 1016, 1073, 1107, 1112, 1116, 1224, 1234
1:3-4, 329, 946, 1017
1:3-5, 130, 349, 523, 958, 1155
1:3-7, 376, 517
1:3-8, 526
1:3-9, 501, 569, 623, 651, 822, 876, 1017, 1045
1:3-12, 118, 392, 476, 522, 523, 524, 768, 864, 917, 918
1:4, 45, 253, 336, 422, 440, 864, 867, 921
1:4-5, 265
1:4-8, 917
1:5, 75, 253, 336, 368, 422, 864, 917, 921
1:5-4, 921
1:5, 940, 1022, 1073, 1167, 1234
1:5-6, 941
1:5-9, 280, 880
1:6, 230, 281, 366, 423, 441, 601, 602, 768, 879, 1136, 1167, 1234
1:6-7, 189, 199, 349, 351, 908, 919, 920, 1136
1:6-8, 356
1:6-9, 1167
1:7, 154, 281, 368, 395, 422, 602, 858, 864, 908, 921, 1022, 1039, 1166, 1240
1:7-8, 1136
1:7-9, 279, 1136
1:8, 139, 569, 601, 602, 864, 921, 1039, 1167
1:8-9, 695
1:9, 336, 368, 523, 864, 921, 985, 1073
1:9-10, 917
1:10, 768, 864, 1022
1:10-12, 45, 356, 480, 524, 768, 921, 1045
1:11, 100, 154, 174, 279, 361, 397, 423, 481, 491, 523, 569, 864, 916, 958, 1181
1:11-12, 1022
1:12, 353, 432, 768, 769, 817, 880, 1073
1:13, 336, 349, 356, 422, 476, 479, 499, 500, 542, 642, 651, 735, 858, 864, 921, 985, 1022, 1039, 1044, 1045, 1234
1:13-16, 917, 1158
1:13-17, 954
1:13-21, 118
1:13-25, 864, 876
1:14, 279, 328, 423, 737, 768, 821, 822, 917, 1045, 1071, 1073
1:14-15, 500, 986
1:14-16, 1013
1:15, 319, 422, 423, 488, 735, 917, 922, 1073
1:15-16, 199, 349, 486, 488, 940
1:16, 240, 423, 480, 538, 835, 838
1:16-17, 535
1:17, 265, 336, 349, 422, 476, 517, 920, 946, 1039, 1106, 1224
1:17-18, 199
1:17-19, 623, 917
1:18, 42, 280, 281, 328, 392, 655, 917, 1002
1:18-21, 174, 199, 279, 522, 523, 524, 917
1:19, 154, 279, 280, 284, 422, 641, 642, 838, 920, 1070
1:20, 154, 173, 253, 317, 349, 422, 523, 622, 671, 858, 864, 921, 958, 1022, 1023, 1073, 1223, 1224
1:20-21, 335
1:21, 96, 99, 101, 118, 256, 280, 328, 361, 365, 368, 399, 422, 491, 864, 880, 917, 920, 985, 1016, 1234
1:22, 279, 349, 374, 488, 513, 697, 821, 822, 917, 985, 1185
1:22-23, 879, 986
1:22-25, 118
1:23, 118, 417, 424, 655, 671, 737, 792, 793, 794, 864, 1073, 1116
1:23-25, 353
1:24, 375, 394, 480, 481, 793, 985
1:24-25, 480, 838
1:25, 346, 422, 432, 671, 757, 793
2, 511, 633, 738, 838
2:1, 349, 1095, 1158, 1191, 1192
2:1-2, 738
2:1-3, 917
2:1-10, 118, 211, 212, 1234
2:2, 118, 736, 737, 795 864, 921, 1073, 1115, 1158, 1192
2:2-3, 119, 879, 1115, 1117
2:3, 671, 689, 917
2:4, 154, 199, 281, 317 361, 422, 538, 915, 921, 1127, 1155
2:4-5, 173, 1039, 1129
2:4-8, 522, 524, 637, 1127, 1128
2:4-10, 107, 174, 199, 224, 321, 476, 480, 510, 511, 543, 633, 744, 817, 838, 1135, 1155, 1234
2:4-11, 511
2:4-17, 817
2:4-24, 538
2:5, 161, 174, 362, 510 689, 838, 921, 1071, 1106, 1127, 1135
2:6, 199, 317, 422, 480 538, 561, 838, 920, 1126, 1127
2:6-8, 361, 510, 838
2:7, 480, 916, 1127, 1128
2:7-8, 538, 1119
2:8, 319, 480, 915, 920 922, 1126, 1127
2:9, 107, 119, 174, 199 200, 211, 319, 422, 488, 544, 633, 658, 735, 768, 817, 913, 917, 922, 1107
2:9-10, 318, 319, 354, 510, 542, 896, 917, 1039, 1135
2:9-12, 986
2:9-17, 231
2:10, 174, 544, 735, 870
2:11, 111, 118, 199, 253, 328, 349, 350, 352, 376, 383, 392, 422, 476, 479, 517, 915, 917, 918, 985, 986, 1044, 1045, 1106 1135, 1158, 1214
2:11-12, 392, 423, 517, 817, 1136, 1191
2:11-17, 233
2:12, 139, 265, 349, 350, 361, 388, 392, 395, 513, 517, 569, 622, 864, 879, 896, 917, 918, 919, 920, 1039, 1135, 1136, 1234
2:12-13, 231
2:13, 230, 349, 422, 514, 769, 919, 1106
2:13-14, 324, 1062
2:13-15, 1045, 1062
2:13-17, 174, 424, 514, 517, 908, 912, 917, 951, 1066, 1207, 1208
2:14, 230, 919, 1095
2:14-15, 1135, 1136
2:15, 231, 350, 392, 919, 1136
2:16, 231, 328, 383, 1086, 1095, 1100
2:16-17, 879
2:17, 201, 230, 231, 324 350, 371, 697, 917, 920, 1062, 1100, 1181
2:18, 230, 371, 423, 513 652, 889, 1117, 1136
2:18-23, 1100
2:18-24, 962
2:18-25, 350, 423, 517, 535, 838, 918, 950, 1136, 1207
2:19, 242, 281, 879, 1136, 1208, 1234
2:19-20, 423, 435 1136
2:19-21, 1100
2:19-25, 199, 328
2:20, 242, 281, 513, 1045, 1135, 1136
2:21, 154, 174, 256, 278, 280, 281, 319, 422, 423, 534, 735, 921, 1234
2:21-22, 1136
2:21-23, 174, 350, 366, 623
2:21-24, 118, 256, 515, 523, 538, 627, 876
2:21-25, 174, 261, 279, 280, 356, 481, 522, 523, 524, 538, 822, 913, 921, 1092, 1181, 1208, 1209
2:22, 480, 838, 839, 1096, 1181
2:22-23, 918
2:22-24, 423
2:23, 1054, 1136
2:23-24, 1137, 1167
2:23-25, 569
2:24, 174, 256, 280, 281, 329, 655, 719, 839, 891, 1055, 1057, 1070, 1073, 1092
2:24-25, 366, 1136
2:25, 107, 174, 199, 222, 281, 876, 877, 915, 922, 1013, 1092
3, 818, 899
3:1, 154, 230, 424, 517, 768, 769, 922, 1092, 1119, 1207, 1208
3:1-2, 4, 199, 350, 513, 517, 880, 1136
3:1-6, 350, 354, 356, 513, 950, 1208
3:1-7, 199, 517, 518, 946, 1088, 1207
3:2, 371, 488, 1136, 1209
3:3-4, 985
3:4, 424, 896, 898, 963, 985
3:4-5, 4
3:5, 230, 880, 1208, 1234
3:5-6, 879
3:6, 1, 39, 371, 538, 671, 817, 821, 835, 1045, 1136, 1208, 1222, 1234
3:7, 350, 424, 435, 517, 639, 655, 946, 1208, 1209
3:8, 350, 518, 696, 963, 1191
3:8-9, 839, 918, 1136
3:8-12, 1095
3:8-18, 117
3:9, 130, 319, 336, 864, 1136, 1191
3:9-10, 281
3:9-12, 349, 501
3:10, 480, 698
3:10-12, 130, 481, 538, 839
3:11, 896
3:11-12, 199
3:12, 422, 671, 942, 946, 1039, 1095, 1209
3:13, 118, 423, 476, 768, 1044, 1045, 1136
3:13-14, 230, 879, 1057
3:13-17, 74, 75, 361, 383, 912, 919
3:13-22, 199, 423
3:14, 131, 242, 281, 328, 371, 423, 569, 602, 839, 1100, 1136, 1208
3:14-15, 174
3:14-17, 880
3:15, 154, 336, 355, 357, 371, 392, 422, 499, 517, 671, 757, 768, 769, 864, 880, 963, 985, 1016, 1119

3:15-16, 423, 865, 917, 920
3:16, 242, 350, 879, 891, 917, 918, 1136
3:16-17, 918
3:17, 242, 344, 423, 863, 1045, 1062, 1100, 1136
3:17-22, 261
3:18, 48, 96, 118, 154, 158, 174, 279, 280, 281, 329, 335, 361, 376, 422, 423, 491, 498, 523, 524, 719, 836, 919, 922, 986, 987, 1016, 1020, 1055, 1070, 1096, 1118, 1136, 1137
3:18-4:6, 526, 923
3:18-19, 335
3:18-20, 286, 817
3:18-21, 986
3:18-22, 99, 100, 102, 256, 279, 459, 481, 515, 523, 526, 627, 671, 822, 922, 953, 1016, 1136, 1234
3:18-25, 199
3:19, 46, 63, 99, 376, 460, 527, 836, 1119
3:19-20, 286, 863, 1117, 1118
3:19-21, 1016
3:20, 38, 41, 117, 279, 538, 655, 835, 922, 985, 1119
3:20-21, 523
3:21, 41, 354, 376, 538, 795, 836, 879, 1016, 1017, 1073, 1136
3:21-22, 96, 253, 256, 335, 361, 672, 1017, 1224
3:22, 46, 96, 99, 174, 281, 356, 422, 523, 836, 922, 964
4, 1178
4:1, 376, 423, 1062, 1100, 1136, 1168, 1169, 1170
4:1-2, 423
4:1-4, 769
4:1-5, 383
4:1-6, 199, 392, 538, 1234
4:1-19, 117
4:2, 376, 655, 985, 986, 1073
4:2-4, 655
4:3, 388, 424, 529, 542, 715, 917, 1088, 1158, 1191, 1192
4:3-4, 79, 1135
4:4, 230, 361, 818, 822, 879, 1136
4:5, 253, 336, 424, 622, 623, 655, 656, 864, 920, 1073
4:5-6, 265, 623, 918
4:5-7, 66
4:6, 279, 335, 376, 432, 459, 622, 655, 776, 920, 986, 1136
4:7, 118, 253, 336, 349, 376, 622, 864, 880, 918, 946, 1062, 1234
4:7-11, 118, 392, 918
4:8, 622, 696, 699, 839, 1097
4:8-11, 374
4:9, 505, 759, 1051, 1062, 1220
4:9-10, 424
4:10, 434, 918
4:10-11, 355, 744, 891, 1087
4:11, 107, 174, 336, 346, 354, 392, 395, 424, 660, 661, 880, 917, 939, 946
4:11-12, 224
4:12, 189, 423, 879, 908, 917, 918, 919, 1136, 1234
4:12-14, 1023, 1039
4:12-16, 174, 230, 879
4:12-19, 74, 75, 118, 199, 253, 328, 330, 355, 423, 822, 918, 1100, 1181
4:13, 100, 154, 265, 281, 336, 349, 397, 422, 423, 481, 569, 601, 602, 604, 864, 892, 921, 1062, 1192
4:13-14, 361
4:13-16, 383
4:14, 131, 154, 397, 490, 602, 1136
4:14-15, 1135
4:14-16, 281, 769, 785, 919
4:15, 761, 769, 1191, 1192
4:15-16, 917
4:16, 196, 395, 513, 1039, 1136
4:17, 242, 349, 432, 476, 511, 918, 919, 946, 1062, 1066, 1106, 1136
4:17-18, 265, 336
4:17-19, 253, 864, 879, 1234
4:18, 104, 480, 481, 1057, 1058, 1073
4:19, 281, 328, 422, 423, 623, 985, 1062, 1092, 1136
5, 719, 1092
5:1, 100, 265, 349, 397, 422, 423, 569, 718, 719, 760, 858, 880, 914, 915, 918, 1023, 1092, 1181
5:1-2, 107, 1093
5:1-4, 392, 622, 918
5:1-5, 224, 311, 424, 513, 514, 518, 877, 880, 1066
5:1-9, 118
5:1-11, 818
5:1-14, 476
5:2, 199, 222, 880, 915, 1051
5:2-3, 107, 818, 1092
5:2-4, 354, 1092, 1235
5:3, 355, 880
5:4, 107, 265, 336, 397, 513, 655, 858, 862, 864, 880, 915, 1023, 1039, 1092
5:5, 230, 350, 434, 480, 481, 513, 538, 880, 961, 962, 1207, 1211
5:5-6, 962
5:6, 336, 361, 424, 524, 864, 1212
5:6-9, 918, 1081
5:6-11, 253, 424, 1045
5:7, 538, 831, 946
5:8, 74, 75, 253, 962, 1078, 1079, 1080, 1199
5:8-9, 719, 920, 1040, 1062, 1080, 1136
5:8-14, 1044
5:9, 189, 199, 201, 368, 423, 737, 910, 1066, 1222
5:9-10, 199, 230, 879, 1039
5:10, 118, 224, 265, 319, 336, 346, 422, 424, 434, 461, 481, 719, 880, 922, 941, 1017, 1080, 1100
5:10-11, 918
5:11, 118, 174, 336, 346, 660, 661, 939, 946
5:12, 422, 434, 915, 916, 918, 1045, 1185, 1234
5:12-13, 922, 1163
5:12-14, 918
5:13, 111, 186, 765, 908, 915, 919, 1062, 1066, 1135, 1211, 1221
5:13-14, 651
5:14, 651, 660, 697, 896, 946
5:15, 832
5:20, 199, 1234

2 Peter
1, 819, 954, 1194
1:1, 79, 154, 175, 369, 424, 430, 668, 1054, 1055, 1074, 1083, 1086, 1099, 1237
1:1-2, 652, 923, 1045
1:2, 175, 424, 434, 639, 660, 671, 896, 946, 1083
1:3, 312, 319, 397, 424, 639, 940
1:3-4, 656
1:3-11, 652, 896, 923, 924, 926
1:3-15, 1045
1:4, 311, 312, 424, 716, 776, 794, 940, 968, 969, 1074, 1223
1:4-11, 1040
1:5, 369
1:5-6, 639
1:5-7, 311, 366, 926, 1191, 1192
1:5-8, 350, 952
1:5-9, 311, 319, 397, 1013
1:5-11, 822
1:6, 329
1:7, 513, 697
1:8, 366, 424, 639, 640, 672
1:10, 319
1:11, 154, 175, 337, 346, 424, 461, 624, 633, 672, 865, 1018, 1074, 1083, 1192
1:12, 459, 1185
1:12-15, 652, 924, 983
1:12-16, 923
1:12-21, 312, 760
1:13, 475
1:14, 154, 424, 475, 570, 655, 672, 865, 923, 1021, 1023
1:14-15, 719, 776
1:16, 29, 154, 424, 652, 672, 769, 865, 925, 1023, 1045
1:16-17, 335
1:16-18, 311, 362, 866, 915, 921, 926, 983, 1112
1:16-19, 175
1:16-21, 923, 924, 1045
1:17, 318, 396, 424, 570
1:17-18, 865
1:18, 424, 487
1:19, 312, 354, 424, 658, 865, 869, 973
1:19-21, 312, 866, 926
1:20, 983
1:20-21, 424, 923, 925
1:21, 424
1:21-22, 497
2, 305, 353, 354, 356, 538, 689, 819, 822, 896, 952, 1185
2:1, 29, 74, 75, 76, 174, 312, 424, 459, 615, 973, 1002, 1083, 1241
2:1-2, 1159, 1185
2:1-3, 425, 866, 923, 924
2:1-10, 425
2:1-18, 424, 614, 865, 925, 983
2:1-20, 880
2:1-22, 335, 383
2:2, 29, 350, 925, 1149, 1185
2:2-3, 74
2:3, 66, 265, 336, 459, 715, 865, 923, 924, 925, 926, 973, 1149, 1185, 1241
2:3-10, 1045
2:4, 46, 63, 424, 425, 534, 624, 973, 1097, 1119
2:4-9, 253, 715, 822
2:4-10, 839, 866
2:5, 38, 41, 425, 459, 624, 1056, 1097
2:6, 425, 534, 623, 624, 1088, 1097
2:6-10, 459
2:7, 323, 624
2:7-8, 41, 425, 1057
2:8, 821, 985, 1057
2:9, 75, 265, 336, 424, 425, 623, 671, 865, 926, 973, 1013, 1101, 1167
2:9-12, 66
2:9-16, 1097
2:10, 29, 30, 375, 425, 715, 923, 924, 925, 1149
2:10-11, 46
2:10-12, 715
2:10-22, 1045
2:11, 29, 424, 623, 671, 867
2:12, 312, 715, 865, 1240
2:13, 29, 356, 379, 601, 658, 715, 952, 1228
2:13-14, 1149
2:14, 658, 715, 985
2:14-15, 715, 1051
2:14-16, 74
2:15, 43, 74, 312, 698, 819, 836, 1088
2:16, 715
2:17, 459
2:17-22, 74
2:18, 715, 985, 1149
2:19, 30, 350, 383, 925, 968
2:19-20, 312, 383
2:19-22, 715
2:20, 154, 570, 639, 672, 1074, 1083, 1223
2:20-21, 640
2:20-22, 822, 1013, 1015
2:21, 240, 312, 1057
2:22, 538, 570, 839
3, 739, 819, 865, 866, 954
3:1, 139, 312, 914, 923, 983, 985
3:1-3, 614, 925, 983
3:1-4, 923, 1045
3:1-7, 1045
3:1-10, 622, 924
3:1-13, 873, 880
3:2, 79, 80, 87, 240, 312, 487, 672, 744, 760, 1074, 1083
3:3, 335, 868
3:3-4, 29, 254, 350, 1186
3:3-7, 822
3:3-13, 462, 926
3:3-14, 311, 716
3:4, 189, 265, 425, 866, 873, 923, 924, 925, 968, 969, 1023, 1149
3:4-6, 29
3:5, 424, 441
3:5-6, 253, 425
3:5-7, 66, 622, 926
3:5-10, 923
3:5-14, 441, 442
3:6, 1222, 1240
3:7, 253, 265, 336, 354, 441, 459, 866, 908, 926, 1097, 1189, 1240
3:7-13, 336
3:8, 266, 424, 425, 671, 739, 740, 866
3:8-9, 265, 880, 926
3:8-10, 29, 175
3:8-13, 1045
3:9, 265, 329, 354, 424, 671, 866, 925, 968, 969, 1149, 1188, 1240
3:10, 253, 265, 266, 337, 345, 369, 424, 425, 441, 570, 622, 671, 866, 926
3:10-13, 46, 866
3:10-14, 65, 312
3:11, 350, 488, 926
3:11-12, 337, 867, 880
3:11-13, 253
3:11-14, 441
3:11-16, 923, 924
3:11-18, 822
3:12, 253, 265, 350, 424, 459, 671, 866, 867, 908, 1045
3:13, 253, 337, 441, 739, 926, 968, 969, 1018, 1058
3:14, 337, 652, 896, 926
3:14-17, 351, 880
3:14-18, 74, 312, 652
3:15, 30, 329, 424, 425, 1073, 1203
3:15-16, 30, 79, 80, 87, 311, 383, 744, 892, 983
3:16, 312, 459, 924, 925, 1056, 1240
3:16-17, 335
3:17, 74, 762, 1083
3:17-18, 354, 880, 923
3:18, 154, 175, 265, 346, 395, 639, 652, 660, 661, 664, 672, 867, 880, 896, 946, 1074, 1083, 1186

1 John
1:1, 593, 594, 665, 1023
1:1-2:27, 1050
1:1-3, 591
1:1-4, 26, 176, 238, 282, 590, 597, 639, 652, 958, 1046, 1113
1:2, 176, 347, 425, 665, 858, 1023, 1204
1:2-3, 282, 1074
1:3, 154, 155, 199, 373, 425, 591, 665, 959, 1224
1:3-7, 819
1:4, 652
1:5, 425, 426, 488, 597
1:5-13, 652
1:5, 657, 1046, 1148
1:5-10, 946
1:6, 238, 425, 592
1:6-7, 657
1:6-10, 240, 373, 819, 823
1:7, 27, 176, 199, 254, 281, 282, 425, 426, 539, 591, 594, 786, 1097, 1113, 1148
1:8, 27, 282, 426, 592, 822, 1013, 1184
1:8-10, 281, 1097
1:9, 27, 104, 282, 381, 383, 943, 1054
1:10, 27, 592, 1097
1:18, 27
1:19, 380
2, 238
2:1, 172, 176, 282, 351, 425, 823, 868, 881, 1013, 1055, 1097, 1115, 1224
2:1-2, 27, 261, 282, 539, 1074
2:2, 76, 176, 254, 257, 282, 283, 336, 351, 362, 392, 946, 1070, 1074, 1083, 1097
2:3, 239, 351, 645
2:3-4, 238, 239, 646
2:3-5, 640

2:3-6, 239, 646, 823
2:4, 239, 351, 592, 645, 1184
2:5, 239, 283, 426, 479, 646
2:6, 479, 592
2:7, 239, 239, 351, 426, 594, 645, 881, 959
2:7-8, 880, 881, 959
2:7-9, 239
2:7-11, 282, 645
2:8, 239, 336, 351, 426, 645, 659, 823, 1148
2:8-11, 283, 1184
2:9, 426, 592, 657, 1148
2:9-11, 238, 479, 594, 819
2:10, 199, 425, 426, 1148
2:11, 425, 479, 658
2:12, 27, 283, 380, 786, 1115
2:12-13, 881
2:12-14, 336, 513, 594
2:13, 328, 425, 593, 819, 1078, 1095, 1224
2:13-14, 254, 336, 339, 959, 1080
2:14, 283, 328, 425, 594, 940, 941, 1078, 1081, 1095
2:15, 199, 425, 426, 595, 1223
2:15-16, 592
2:15-17, 254, 282, 656
2:16, 375, 425, 962, 985
2:16-17, 1223
2:17, 282, 336, 346
2:18, 51, 74, 254, 335, 351, 589, 590, 868, 881
2:18-19, 26, 75, 80, 199, 744, 880, 1046, 1119
2:18-27, 108, 175, 342, 646, 1046
2:18-29, 868
2:19, 175, 199, 238, 257, 328, 336, 596, 868, 1024
2:19-26, 589
2:20, 49, 108, 119, 282, 312, 487, 490, 593, 973
2:20-21, 495, 589, 744
2:20-23, 592
2:21-22, 881
2:22, 51, 74, 155, 176, 257, 291, 328, 589, 590, 591, 651, 822
2:22-23, 26, 80, 336, 1046
2:22-25, 623
2:22-27, 1113
2:23, 176, 366, 591, 943
2:24, 75, 200, 238, 282, 351, 594, 959, 1116
2:25, 347, 776, 968, 969
2:26, 80, 336
2:26-27, 744, 973
2:27, 49, 119, 200, 282, 312, 490, 495, 593, 597, 1185
2:28, 66, 254, 282, 337, 354, 837, 858, 868, 897, 1024
2:28-29, 1046
2:29, 200, 281, 597, 792, 794, 1055, 1057
2:29-3:3, 624
3:1, 42, 200, 426, 597, 1116, 1224
3:1-18, 1235
3:1-24, 1046
3:2, 176, 282, 337, 499, 776, 881, 1018, 1024, 1038, 1116
3:2-3, 1013
3:3, 283, 337, 488, 500
3:3-6, 592
3:4, 336, 583, 821, 823, 1097
3:4-9, 27
3:4-10, 823, 1013
3:5, 176, 254, 283, 823, 1023, 1070, 1181
3:6, 283, 1097, 1168
3:7, 42, 74, 75, 1055, 1057
3:7-8, 592
3:8, 42, 199, 254, 281, 283, 336, 351, 591, 959, 1023, 1078, 1079, 1113, 1241
3:8-10, 819, 1116
3:9, 27, 200, 282, 283, 592, 792, 793, 794, 1170
3:9-10, 592
3:10, 254, 819, 1057, 1078, 1116
3:10-11, 880
3:11, 199, 238, 426, 513, 594, 597, 959
3:11-12, 282, 592
3:11-17, 699
3:11-18, 103
3:12, 38, 42, 534, 539, 841, 1056, 1057, 1078, 1079, 1095
3:13, 199, 253, 819, 1223
3:14, 254, 282, 283, 351, 426, 437, 594, 656, 776
3:14-15, 592
3:15, 347
3:16, 257, 282, 351, 426, 594, 655, 656
3:16-18, 261, 534
3:16-19, 1184
3:17, 366, 426, 895, 897, 1051
3:17-18, 426, 592
3:19, 897
3:19-21, 985
3:21, 103, 868, 881, 897
3:21-22, 103, 946
3:22, 239, 583, 597, 645, 942
3:22-23, 104
3:22-24, 239, 645
3:23, 176, 199, 238, 239, 351, 369, 426, 591, 594, 645, 785, 1113
3:24, 238, 239, 281, 336, 490, 495, 645, 1235
4:1, 254, 592, 593, 615, 1119, 1120, 1166, 1224
4:1-3, 108, 176, 366, 593, 596, 973, 978, 1119, 1184
4:1-4, 1079
4:1-6, 253, 353, 589, 593, 819, 1185, 1236
4:1-21, 351, 1046
4:2, 140, 155, 199, 257, 281, 328, 366, 375, 490, 495, 591, 661, 949, 959, 985, 1113
4:2-3, 26, 52, 104, 308, 539, 973, 1119
4:3, 26, 51, 74, 176, 199, 366, 822, 973
4:3-5, 1223
4:4, 75, 282, 328, 1078, 1080
4:4-6, 75
4:5, 283, 328, 1223, 1224
4:6, 104, 282, 490, 495, 1184, 1185
4:7, 426, 513, 594, 597, 792, 794
4:7-8, 104
4:7-12, 695, 819, 880
4:7-19, 1083
4:7-21, 1120, 1235
4:8, 351, 426, 594
4:8-10, 592
4:9, 163, 282, 426, 591, 594, 1023, 1116, 1223
4:9-10, 27, 254, 282
4:9-12, 1113
4:10, 176, 257, 261, 282, 283, 426, 591, 594, 694, 1074, 1083, 1097, 1113
4:10-12, 354
4:11, 283, 426
4:11-12, 1083
4:12, 282, 426, 595
4:12-16, 794
4:13, 282, 336, 490, 495
4:13-16, 104
4:14, 354, 392, 1074, 1083, 1204, 1223
4:14-15, 1113
4:15, 176, 257, 366, 591, 593, 661, 1083, 1116
4:16, 351, 426, 593
4:17, 66, 104, 176, 254, 265, 337, 426, 595, 622, 868, 897
4:17-18, 282
4:17-21, 622
4:18, 371, 426, 590, 897
4:19, 239, 354, 426, 594, 1083
4:19-21, 794
4:20, 239, 426, 592, 594, 699, 1184
4:20-21, 104
4:21, 238, 426, 594, 645, 1114
5, 794
5:1, 176, 199, 200, 281, 282, 328, 366, 369, 426, 591, 646, 792, 794, 1083
5:1-12, 794, 1046
5:2, 239, 645
5:2-3, 238, 583, 645, 823
5:3, 239, 240
5:4, 240, 254, 281, 283, 328, 366, 369, 646, 792, 794
5:4-5, 240, 339, 1223
5:5, 257, 328, 369, 1113
5:5-6, 26, 27
5:5-8, 589
5:5-12, 282
5:6, 155, 281, 282, 366, 591, 1114, 1185
5:6-8, 119, 159, 1116
5:7, 666
5:7-11, 1204
5:8, 281, 282
5:9-10, 1185
5:9-12, 1113
5:10, 369
5:10-11, 1184
5:11, 347, 591
5:11-12, 176, 437
5:11-13, 776
5:13, 104, 347, 369, 539, 597, 785
5:13-21, 597, 652, 1046
5:14, 868, 897, 942
5:14-15, 103, 944, 945
5:14-17, 437, 622, 946
5:14-21, 1046
5:15, 942
5:16, 305, 336
5:16-17, 345, 656, 946
5:17, 437
5:18, 383, 592, 792, 793, 794, 1078, 1081, 1095, 1097, 1116
5:18-19, 254
5:18-21, 1113
5:19, 199, 254, 282, 794, 1078, 1095, 1223
5:20, 155, 176, 347, 985, 1116, 1185, 1236, 1237
5:21, 528, 529, 596, 1185

2 John
1, 200, 318, 595, 596, 1088, 1115, 1184, 1211
1-2, 652, 1184
1-3, 598, 652
2, 346, 425
3, 154, 155, 425, 434, 596, 652, 660, 735, 896, 946, 1113
4, 238, 239, 425, 645, 652, 1046, 1184
4-5, 652
4-6, 239, 598, 644, 645 876
4-7, 156
5, 238, 239, 351, 594, 596, 645, 652, 881, 1046, 1088
6, 238, 239, 351, 426, 645
6-11, 652, 1046
7, 27, 51, 52, 140, 155, 199, 254, 257, 308, 375, 426, 539, 589, 591, 744, 822, 880, 959, 985, 1046, 1119, 1184, 1224
7-8, 27
7-9, 596
7-11, 74, 75, 80, 239, 336, 353, 598, 615
8, 591, 593, 652, 868, 1240
8-9, 1046
8-11, 596
9, 27, 224, 257, 425, 426
10, 200, 508, 513, 595, 652
10-11, 140, 199, 305, 505, 506, 769, 1220
11, 140, 373, 652, 1046, 1095
12, 652, 1047
12-13, 598
13, 318, 596, 652, 1047, 1211, 1220

3 John
1, 595, 652, 881, 1047, 1184
1-2, 598
2, 596, 652, 881, 897, 946
2-4, 1047
2-6, 652
3-4, 652, 897, 1184
3-8, 598, 1047
4, 881, 1115, 1211
5, 769, 881
5-6, 506, 652, 1047
5-8, 80, 374, 392, 760, 769, 894, 897, 1051
5-10, 744, 1220
6, 199, 200, 425, 506, 652, 769
6-7, 355
7, 769
7-8, 744
7-12, 652, 1047
8, 596, 652, 1220
9, 199, 200, 505
9-10, 80, 744, 769, 881, 1047
9-11, 305
9-12, 598
10, 199, 200, 513, 595
11, 425, 426, 535, 652, 792, 793, 1095
11-12, 1047
12, 596, 652
13-14, 598, 65, 10472
14, 946
15, 596, 653, 660, 785, 896, 897, 1047

Jude
1, 28, 154, 174, 175, 187, 266, 319, 424, 425, 613, 614, 616, 618, 653, 867, 1099, 1112
1-2, 612, 613, 619, 696, 1045
2, 612, 653, 660, 735, 894, 946
3, 74, 140, 141, 311, 369, 425, 612, 613, 617, 618, 653, 661, 760, 768, 880, 954, 1045, 1228
3-4, 353, 425, 612, 653
3-23, 612, 653
4, 28, 74, 75, 76, 141, 154, 174, 266, 335, 350, 383, 424, 425, 612, 613, 615, 618, 716, 840, 867, 958, 973, 1045, 1097, 1228
4-13, 424, 614, 925, 983, 1045
4-16, 354
4-19, 880
4-23, 356
5, 141, 175, 424, 425, 612, 614, 617, 671, 836, 880, 958, 1074, 1240
5-7, 74, 266, 534, 613, 620, 822, 840, 867
5-10, 613, 1045
5-16, 175, 613, 653, 1046
5-19, 475, 582, 612, 613
5-23, 612
6, 46, 63, 141, 266, 336, 425, 618, 623, 716, 836, 840, 858, 1074, 1089, 1119
6-7, 323, 538
6-8, 615, 1045
7, 346, 375, 425, 459, 461, 618, 620, 624, 836, 1074, 1088
8, 28, 29, 46, 266, 335, 375, 394, 615, 618, 836, 985, 1089, 1228
9, 1078
8-9, 840, 867
8-10, 425, 613, 615, 618, 778, 973
8-16, 74, 141
9, 40, 66, 175, 254, 424, 538, 614, 623, 671, 836, 867, 949, 973, 1078
10, 538, 618, 1045, 1186, 1240
10-13, 335
11, 38, 43, 266, 425, 613, 614, 618, 836, 840, 1088
11-12, 29
11-13, 613, 615, 1045
12, 28, 29, 356, 614, 615, 618, 656, 689, 697, 973, 1228
12-13, 613, 818, 894
12-14, 618
13, 254, 266, 346, 459, 618, 620, 658, 709, 840, 867
14, 38, 43, 141, 159, 424, 425, 487, 618, 619, 620, 671, 867, 874, 958
14-15, 46, 63, 86, 175, 266, 336, 538, 613, 614, 618, 768, 822, 840, 875, 880
14-16, 66, 613, 867, 1045
15, 159, 369, 425, 619, 620, 874, 1097
16, 266, 613, 614, 615, 618, 716, 1045
16-18, 614, 925, 983
17, 80, 154, 174, 312, 570, 613, 617, 671, 744, 760, 880, 958, 1228, 1236
17-18, 190, 266, 335, 425, 613, 618

17-19, 613, 1045
17-21, 175
17-23, 612, 613, 653, 1046
18, 254, 350, 425, 615, 716, 973, 1097
18-19, 28, 305, 495, 946
19, 613, 615, 618, 894, 973, 1186
20, 74, 140, 141, 311, 369, 487, 495, 612, 613, 614, 619, 880, 946
20-21, 716
20-23, 425, 612, 613, 618, 619
21, 74, 154, 174, 175, 337, 347, 424, 425, 618, 619, 671, 695, 735, 776, 822, 867, 880, 958, 1018
22, 66, 735, 768, 867, 1228
22-23, 104, 619, 620, 621, 622, 656, 880
23, 141, 254, 375, 459, 615, 619, 1074
24, 74, 75, 337, 397, 424, 425, 601, 623, 660, 716, 822, 1018, 1040, 1228
24-25, 175, 257, 266, 612, 613, 615, 653, 660, 664, 867, 940, 946, 953, 1046, 1083
25, 154, 174, 175, 346, 395, 424, 660, 661, 671, 939, 958, 1074, 1083, 1228

Revelation
1, 25, 46, 338, 339, 345, 400, 871, 1029, 1030, 1111
1:1, 56, 100, 155, 177, 426, 427, 441, 851, 869, 921, 974, 1024, 1047, 1086
1:1-2, 1026
1:1-3, 46, 653
1:1-8, 1030, 1047
1:2, 155, 177, 769, 770, 1026, 1137, 1205
1:3, 60, 131, 571, 602, 851, 852, 869, 973, 1027, 1047
1:3-8, 348
1:4, 46, 200, 254, 426-28, 434, 490, 653, 660, 662, 869, 1032, 1120
1:4-5, 177, 653, 897, 1026
1:4-7, 947
1:4-20, 539
1:5, 100, 284, 337, 338, 362, 383, 635, 656, 694, 719, 720, 770, 776, 1002, 1009, 1017, 1071, 1096, 1205
1:5-6, 108, 177, 338, 694, 897
1:6, 108, 161, 200, 211, 224, 284, 337, 346, 395, 426, 428, 481, 583, 635, 653, 660, 661, 940, 963, 974, 1009, 1074
1:6-9, 331
1:7, 142, 338, 339, 481, 571, 623, 661, 858, 869
1:8, 177, 232, 254, 257, 426, 427, 662, 672, 703, 869, 959, 1017
1:9, 127, 147, 177, 200, 232, 329, 337, 342, 348, 624, 770, 823, 908, 910, 913, 915, 974, 1009, 1062, 1067, 1137, 1180, 1205
1:9-10, 177, 682, 851
1:9-20, 340, 1030, 1047
1:10, 63, 266, 348, 495, 496, 675, 679, 681, 682, 685, 974, 1145, 1182, 1196, 1231
1:10-20, 177
1:11, 200, 340, 757, 758, 851, 1026, 1030, 1084, 1196
1:12, 770
1:12-16, 46, 427, 667, 1145
1:12-17, 362
1:12-18, 100, 340
1:12-20, 340, 853
1:13, 142, 337, 338, 356, 636, 853, 1145
1:13-15, 853
1:14, 662, 853
1:14-20, 338
1:16, 418, 635, 704, 1009
1:17, 283, 372, 662, 853, 959
1:17-18, 487, 853
1:18, 128, 177, 283, 346, 460, 662, 776, 960, 1016, 1017, 1234
1:19, 339, 340, 344, 366, 851, 852, 869, 959
1:20, 46, 340, 704, 770, 783, 1009, 1120
2, 46, 177, 205, 224, 266, 339, 340, 345, 478, 540, 571, 653, 720, 869, 947, 974, 1030, 1088, 1094
2:1, 636, 661, 851
2:1-7, 147
2:2, 80, 329, 348, 353, 355, 369, 973, 1095
2:3, 329, 348, 356, 786
2:4, 348, 640, 698
2:5, 75, 338, 369, 858, 869, 1014
2:6, 75, 348, 1088
2:7, 177, 328, 339, 481, 496, 571, 623, 776, 823, 852, 959, 1040
2:8, 128, 283, 661, 662, 776, 851, 1016, 1017, 1074
2:9, 75, 127, 200, 205, 228, 288, 348, 355, 583, 908, 913, 973, 1052, 1077, 1080, 1088, 1137, 1145
2:9-10, 213, 908, 1180
2:9-11, 283
2:10, 46, 142, 177, 327, 329, 339, 348, 354, 356, 366, 371, 622, 623, 655, 695, 720, 823, 862, 908, 913, 914, 1017, 1029, 1035, 1040, 1078, 1080, 1137, 1138, 1167
2:10-11, 656, 720
2:11, 177, 328, 496, 571, 776, 823, 1026, 1074
2:12, 418, 635, 661, 851
2:12-17, 1010
2:13, 46, 75, 232, 329, 348, 358, 369, 719, 720, 770, 786, 908, 973, 1017, 1029, 1077, 1078, 1080, 1137
2:14, 348, 379, 383, 529, 542, 715, 716, 851, 1088, 1211, 1219
2:14-15, 75, 1219
2:14-16, 127, 353
2:15, 348, 1088
2:16, 338, 348, 635, 858, 869, 974, 1014
2:17, 177, 328, 338, 496, 571, 823, 851, 1040
2:18, 487, 661, 851, 1112
2:19, 329, 348, 354, 369, 698, 973, 1087
2:19-23, 305
2:20, 75, 305, 338, 348, 383, 400, 529, 851, 973, 974, 1086, 1088, 1149, 1219
2:20-23, 716, 1210
2:20-25, 176
2:20-29, 1149
2:21, 499, 1014
2:22, 342, 1014
2:22-23, 177, 1219
2:23, 623, 908, 1211
2:24, 232, 709, 1077, 1079, 1219
2:25, 338, 869
2:25-28, 362
2:26, 328, 823, 1040
2:26-27, 337
2:26-28, 177, 284
2:27, 481, 897
2:28, 177, 339, 362, 496, 865, 1040
2:29, 571
2:33, 1040
3:1, 487, 490, 636, 661, 851, 973, 1120, 1166
3:2, 1199
3:3, 265, 266, 338, 571, 622, 869, 1014, 1199
3:4, 177, 348, 785, 1088
3:5, 328, 339, 426, 563, 571, 624, 785, 823, 840, 851, 1040
3:6, 496, 571
3:7, 661, 770, 851, 1186
3:8, 770, 973
3:8-9, 166
3:9, 75, 166, 200, 213, 228, 288, 337, 481, 583, 695, 770, 913, 1080, 1088, 1137, 1145, 1186
3:10, 75, 142, 251, 254, 329, 337, 348, 623, 1040, 1167
3:11, 142, 338, 858, 869, 974
3:12, 177, 200, 328, 339, 441, 561, 823, 851, 1040, 1071, 1091, 1156
3:13, 496, 571
3:14, 337, 635, 661, 719, 720, 770, 851, 1186, 1205
3:15, 348, 661, 973
3:17, 348, 1138
3:17-18, 437, 1052
3:18, 1024, 1088
3:19, 695, 1014
3:20, 338, 420, 690, 858, 863, 943, 1235
3:21, 47, 96, 100, 177, 328, 339, 362, 426, 427, 635, 823, 1009, 1040
3:21-22, 284
3:22, 496, 571
4, 46, 63, 177, 201, 339, 340, 341, 441, 539, 634, 635, 853, 1030, 1120, 1196
4:1, 46, 63, 339, 340, 348, 428, 441, 852, 869, 959, 1182
4:1-5, 959
4:1-11, 959, 1145
4:2, 427, 495
4:3, 427, 1127
4:4, 108, 327, 428
4:5, 427, 428, 490, 1120
4:6, 46, 427, 428
4:6-8, 662
4:7, 487
4:8, 254, 257, 426-428, 486, 487, 524, 526, 634, 658, 662, 663, 664, 690, 939, 1031, 1120, 1235, 1236
4:8-10, 775
4:8-11, 953
4:9, 346, 395, 427, 428, 947
4:9-10, 283
4:9-11, 524, 1120
4:10, 108, 346, 427, 428, 943
4:11, 201, 254, 257, 395, 420, 427, 428, 524, 526, 634, 660, 827, 939, 1014, 1074, 1224, 1235
4:18, 869
5, 634, 635, 840, 1164
5:1, 427, 840, 851
5:1-5, 177, 1074
5:1-9, 770
5:1-14, 392, 1236
5:2, 1084
5:2-3, 46, 362
5:5, 43, 356, 499, 635, 642, 851, 913
5:5-6, 261, 339, 897
5:5-12, 1196
5:6, 46, 100, 128, 261, 284, 428, 477, 490, 635, 642, 1034, 1071, 1120, 1122
5:6-10, 362
5:6-14, 871
5:7, 427, 1074
5:7-8, 840
5:7-13, 1074
5:8, 46, 108, 488, 719, 942, 974, 1071
5:8-14, 177, 283
5:9, 46, 428, 477, 660, 770, 1002, 1014, 1071, 1080
5:9-10, 224, 257, 524, 635, 947
5:9-11, 526, 635
5:9-12, 284
5:9-13, 201
5:9-14, 524, 539, 627, 1224, 1235
5:10, 108, 161, 200, 284, 337, 481, 525, 635, 974, 1009
5:11, 428, 660
5:11-12, 362
5:11-13, 100
5:11-14, 46
5:12, 130, 257, 395, 428, 477, 660, 940, 947, 1071, 1203
5:12-13, 399
5:12-14, 362, 524, 1237
5:13, 130, 251, 254, 257, 346, 395, 427, 428, 660, 939, 940, 947, 1074
5:14, 395, 661
5:15, 428
6, 66, 104, 477, 870, 1030, 1179
6:1, 132, 1030, 1179, 1182
6:1-7, 100
6:1-8, 348, 481
6:1-17, 441, 636
6:2, 327, 499
6:3-4, 127
6:4, 897
6:5-6, 1085
6:6, 908
6:8, 460, 656, 1085
6:9, 641, 719, 770, 974, 1137, 1205
6:9-11, 284, 441, 622, 623, 636, 776, 908, 913, 985, 986, 1017, 1018
6:9-17, 100
6:10, 174, 255, 266, 348, 426, 428, 486, 719, 870, 943, 1138, 1186
6:10-11, 104, 337
6:11, 142, 337, 719, 914
6:12-17, 255, 337
6:12-20, 1030
6:15, 1100
6:15-17, 1036
6:16, 477, 871
6:16-17, 284, 622, 869, 1239
6:17, 266, 428, 858
6:19, 358
7, 119, 200, 438, 1031
7:1, 251
7:1-8, 108, 200
7:1-17, 224, 477, 1085
7:2, 417
7:2-4, 46
7:3, 200, 477, 641, 974, 1086
7:4-8, 166, 542, 636, 913, 1210
7:5-8, 851
7:8, 40
7:9, 428, 719, 720, 854
7:9-17, 200, 201, 337, 441, 539, 542
7:10, 177, 428, 947, 1074
7:10-12, 46
7:11, 428
7:11-12, 177
7:12, 130, 257, 395, 428, 660, 661, 939, 947, 1203, 1235
7:13-14, 914
7:13-17, 255, 622
7:14, 75, 131, 177, 284, 337, 342, 636, 672, 720, 1071, 1179
7:15, 177, 428, 658, 1071, 1156
7:15-17, 119, 349, 1138
7:16, 132
7:17, 100, 284, 428, 1092
8, 119
8:1, 636, 1085
8:1-5, 46, 1030, 1031
8:2, 46, 428, 636, 1120, 1179
8:2-4, 719
8:3, 428, 974, 1071
8:3-4, 201, 488
8:3-5, 636
8:4, 974, 1071
8:5, 427, 780, 1030
8:6, 441, 1030
8:6-11, 636
8:7, 780
8:8, 780
8:8-9, 1183
8:9, 1241
8:10-11, 1183
8:10-12, 704
8:12, 658, 1183
9:1, 459, 704
9:1-2, 460
9:1-11, 127
9:2, 459, 658, 1196
9:3, 780
9:6, 656, 954
9:11, 200
9:17-19, 127
9:18, 428
9:19, 1183
9:20, 201, 428, 529, 716, 1010, 1196
9:20-21, 177, 349, 477, 952, 1014, 1138
9:21, 703, 1191, 1192
10, 46, 1031
10:1, 45, 477, 1031
10:1-10, 770
10:2, 1085

10:4, 1084
10:6, 283, 346, 427, 775
10:7, 224, 432, 783, 851, 974, 1100
10:8, 1085
10:8-11, 840, 853
10:9-10, 1085
10:11, 208
11, 1094
11:1, 201, 770
11:1-2, 108, 200, 1027, 1155
11:1-13, 636, 644, 770, 779, 854
11:2, 487, 561, 852
11:3, 108, 200, 358, 719, 720, 785, 852, 1014, 1205
11:3-6, 536
11:3-13, 770
11:4, 426
11:4-6, 854
11:5, 127, 1138
11:6, 358, 428
11:7, 52, 127, 232, 328, 339, 358, 459, 460, 974, 1205
11:7-10, 337, 1035, 1137
11:8, 112, 133, 177, 200, 426, 554, 672, 1182
11:9-10, 720
11:10, 561, 602, 604, 1036, 1138
11:11, 177, 490
11:11-12, 127
11:11-13, 337
11:13, 595, 564, 636
11:14, 770
11:14-19, 636
11:15, 47, 155, 177, 200, 254, 255, 257, 325, 346, 362, 427, 428, 635, 947, 1009, 1074
11:15-17, 337
11:15-18, 201, 362, 1030
11:15-19, 337, 1183
11:16, 108, 127
11:16-17, 177
11:16-19, 622
11:17, 254, 427, 428, 939, 943, 947
11:17-18, 428, 943, 947
11:18, 224, 266, 337, 372, 428, 488, 914, 974, 1086, 1100, 1239, 1240
11:19, 246, 427, 440, 1156
11:21-2, 561
12, 62, 100, 127, 176, 340, 634, 723, 852, 853, 871, 1031, 1033, 1034, 1078, 1080, 1181, 1196, 1209, 1210
12:1, 46, 141, 327, 1094
12:1-2, 1209
12:1-4, 539
12:1-6, 1181
12:1-17, 108
12:2, 1115
12:3, 127, 477, 853, 1078
12:4, 704, 1078
12:4-5, 852
12:5, 96, 337, 362, 428, 1209
12:5-6, 127
12:5-12, 635
12:6, 852
12:7, 339, 778, 1078
12:7-8, 46, 339
12:7-9, 635, 730, 939
12:7-10, 1078
12:7-12, 254
12:8, 939
12:9, 75, 127, 142, 232, 251, 254, 481, 720, 852, 1078
12:9-10, 278
12:10, 155, 177, 200, 284, 362, 427, 939, 940, 1074, 1078, 1080
12:10-12, 108, 201, 284
12:11, 75, 177, 262, 339, 477, 698, 720, 770, 897, 974, 985, 1017, 1071, 1196
12:11-12, 720
12:12, 603, 739, 741, 869, 1078, 1239
12:13, 636, 1078, 1080
12:13-16, 852
12:14, 481, 1078, 1080
12:15, 1078
12:17, 177, 240, 284, 583, 635, 636, 770, 852, 910, 1080, 1137, 1138, 1205
13, 62, 128, 132, 141, 634, 853, 871, 913, 950, 951, 1034, 1078, 1198
13:1, 128, 200, 636, 852, 1009
13:1-2, 232, 720, 853
13:1-8, 909
13:1-10, 52
13:2, 362, 852, 913
13:2-4, 720
13:3, 284, 656, 852, 1028, 1034
13:3-4, 284
13:4, 128, 201, 362, 530, 720, 913
13:4-8, 1009
13:5, 200, 852
13:5-7, 349, 719
13:5-18, 337
13:6, 200
13:7, 339, 488, 974, 1035, 1080
13:7-8, 232, 362
13:8, 201, 251, 254, 477, 530, 563, 780, 851, 1024, 1034, 1071, 1084, 1223
13:9, 571
13:9-10, 329, 974
13:10, 366, 369, 488, 571, 719, 1081
13:11, 913
13:11-15, 1009
13:12, 201, 284, 530, 852, 909
13:13-14, 1094
13:13-15, 530
13:14, 852, 1028, 1078
13:15, 201, 530, 909, 1137
13:16, 232, 477, 1100
13:16-17, 349, 908
13:17, 1137
13:18, 128, 909, 985, 1034, 1201, 1203
14, 432
14:1, 119, 426, 561, 636, 644, 851
14:1-3, 166
14:1-5, 100, 108, 636, 913, 1088
14:1-17, 1137
14:3, 284, 428, 524, 851
14:3-5, 1002, 1074
14:4, 75, 284, 427, 636, 793
14:5, 1186
14:6, 432, 719
14:6-7, 477, 1014
14:6-11, 974
14:7, 201, 266, 395, 427, 428, 869
14:8, 111, 151, 200, 564, 1027, 1067, 1088, 1240
14:8-11, 337
14:9, 530, 1137
14:9-11, 284, 362, 624
14:9-12, 240, 325, 624, 1040
14:10, 428, 487, 1239
14:10-12, 823
14:11, 346, 428, 461, 530, 1137
14:12, 240, 488, 583, 672, 1063
14:12-13, 329, 720
14:13, 131, 602, 672, 851, 897, 914, 954, 1040
14:14, 338, 356, 441
14:14-16, 770
14:14-20, 337
14:15, 870, 1156
14:15-16, 636
14:17, 441, 1156
14:17-20, 636
14:18, 460
14:18-3, 1088
14:19, 428
14:19-2, 1088
14:19, 1239
14:19-20, 871
15, 1030
15:1, 132, 428, 636, 1179, 1239
15:2, 339, 720, 851, 1137
15:2-4, 362, 636
15:3, 200, 426, 427, 428, 672, 780, 851, 939, 1054, 1186
15:3-4, 201, 486, 524, 526, 770, 851, 1036, 1235
15:3-5, 284
15:4, 201, 395, 428, 870, 1024
15:5, 636
15:5-6, 1031
15:5-8, 440
15:6, 428, 1127
15:7, 346, 427, 428, 1239
15:8, 397, 428, 939, 1155
15:9, 428
15:14, 943
16, 1033, 1074
16:1, 132, 428, 441, 1156, 1239
16:2, 362, 530, 1137
16:3, 780
16:4-6, 441
16:5, 254, 427, 428, 486, 1054
16:5-7, 132
16:6, 132, 224, 488, 719, 823, 908, 974
16:6-7, 266
16:7, 427, 428, 1054, 1186
16:8, 427
16:8-9, 132
16:9, 395, 477, 1014, 1138
16:10, 658
16:10-11, 133
16:11, 477, 1014
16:12, 133
16:12-14, 337
16:12-16, 52, 129
16:13, 477, 913, 1078, 1120, 1186
16:14, 266, 427, 858, 1010, 1094, 1117, 1120
16:15, 131, 132, 265, 266, 337, 571, 622, 869, 1199
16:16, 636, 997
16:17, 428, 564, 870, 1031, 1156
16:17-21, 337
16:19, 111, 200, 428, 564, 1027, 1067, 1239
16:21, 337, 428
17, 52, 62, 111, 634, 716, 1031, 1034, 1127, 1183, 1196
17:1, 349, 428, 564, 1031, 1067
17:1-6, 128
17:2, 1067
17:3, 142, 200, 495, 564
17:3-12, 325
17:4, 200, 564, 1127, 1138
17:5, 111, 232, 564, 783, 851, 1027, 1067
17:6, 564, 635, 719, 720, 770, 908, 1017, 1067
17:7, 63, 783
17:7-9, 909
17:7-18, 1034
17:8, 128, 232, 251, 254, 318, 459, 460, 563, 851, 869, 1028, 1034
17:9, 111, 151, 232, 908, 985, 1067, 1211
17:9-10, 111, 128
17:9-11, 1028
17:10, 869
17:11, 232
17:12-13, 128
17:12-14, 1035
17:13-14, 362
17:14, 318, 325, 337, 339, 636, 672, 785, 870, 897, 1009
17:15, 1067
17:15-17, 1035
17:16, 128, 374
17:16-17, 337, 1035
17:18, 112, 151, 564, 1067, 1211
18, 112, 233, 354, 1027 1052, 1067, 1211
18:1, 394, 1138
18:1-24, 428
18:2, 80, 111, 151, 564, 720, 818, 1010, 1027, 1067, 1117
18:2-3, 151
18:3, 232, 349, 1067, 1088, 1138, 1240
18:4, 305, 349, 428, 564, 1052, 1067
18:4-8, 1097
18:5, 564
18:6, 564, 908
18:7, 232, 394, 395, 564 1052, 1138
18:8, 428, 564, 1241
18:9, 232, 460, 1067
18:9-10, 349
18:9-19, 349
18:9-20, 1138
18:10, 111, 151, 266, 564, 870, 1027, 1067
18:11, 112, 1241
18:11-19, 349
18:11-20, 564
18:12, 1127
18:12-13, 112
18:13, 985, 1029, 1032
18:14, 1240
18:16, 1067, 1127
18:17, 564
18:19, 564, 1067
18:20, 224, 488, 603, 719, 974, 1067
18:21, 111, 151, 564, 1027, 1067
18:23, 658, 703
18:24, 112, 224, 488, 719, 908, 974, 1067, 1137, 1182
19, 662
19:1, 284, 337, 349, 395, 428, 564, 662, 664, 939, 1074
19:1-2, 266, 719
19:1-3, 624
19:1-4, 622, 624
19:1-6, 524
19:1-8, 119
19:1-10, 1031
19:2, 112, 151, 428, 870, 974, 1054, 1086, 1088, 1186, 1240
19:3, 346, 349, 461, 662, 664
19:4, 428, 661, 662
19:5, 1086, 1100
19:6, 349, 362, 427, 524, 526, 601, 662, 664, 672
19:6-7, 601
19:6-8, 325
19:7, 131, 395, 601, 602, 604, 1088, 1209, 1210
19:7-9, 337
19:7-21, 338
19:8, 131, 428, 488
19:9, 119, 131, 604, 690, 1088
19:10, 46, 47, 177, 357, 490, 636, 770, 910, 915, 1026, 1036, 1120, 1137, 1205
19:11, 635, 637, 666, 897, 1031, 1037, 1055, 1058, 1186
19:11-13, 667
19:11-15, 1137
19:11-16, 46, 362, 427, 785, 870, 871, 1137
19:11-21, 337, 872, 908, 959, 1179
19:12, 477, 851
19:13, 637, 666, 871
19:14-15, 897
19:15, 427, 635, 1239
19:16, 155, 200, 349, 636, 672, 785, 851, 1009
19:17-21, 636
19:18, 374, 1100
19:19, 636
19:19-20, 1063
19:20, 460, 530, 776, 1009, 1094, 1137, 1186
19:20-21, 52
19:21, 374, 635, 897, 1036
19:21-2, 1088
20, 119, 739, 740, 741, 872, 1020, 1037, 1137
20:1-3, 460
20:1-4, 871
20:1-6, 108, 741, 1138
20:1-10, 636, 644, 871
20:2, 47, 913, 1011, 1078, 1081
20:2-3, 739
20:2-7, 871
20:3, 73, 739, 1081
20:4, 47, 155, 325, 530, 656, 720, 739, 770, 823, 985, 986, 1009, 1017, 1074, 1137
20:4-5, 912, 1016
20:4-6, 362, 739, 740, 741, 1017, 1018, 1031, 1036, 1137
20:5, 739, 1018
20:5-6, 1016
20:6, 108, 131, 155, 161, 200, 564, 604, 656, 739, 776, 940, 963, 1009, 1074
20:7, 739, 818
20:7-9, 337
20:7-10, 872, 1031
20:9, 200, 441, 488
20:9-15, 337
20:10, 128, 346, 461, 1078, 1081, 1186, 1189
20:10-15, 624
20:11, 251, 1030
20:11-15, 354, 1018, 1031
20:12, 318, 428, 563, 624, 656, 739, 840, 851

20:12-13, 656, 908
20:13, 369, 776
20:14, 460, 461, 656, 776, 851, 1018
20:15, 47, 318, 460, 624, 1040, 1084, 1189
21, 36, 65, 682, 810, 951, 1017, 1156, 1196, 1210
21:1, 129, 200, 251, 253, 254, 255, 337, 341, 499, 636, 739, 823, 854, 908, 1137
21:1-2, 959
21:1-5, 349
21:1-8, 854, 1031
21:2, 200, 487, 561, 564, 583, 854, 1088, 1209, 1210
21:3, 200, 564, 1040
21:3-4, 442, 564
21:3-8, 255
21:4, 200, 438, 1138
21:5, 666, 851, 1017
21:6, 426, 427, 571, 672, 959, 1017, 1031
21:7, 104, 328, 854, 1074, 1116
21:8, 337, 349, 460, 528, 703, 770, 776, 1031, 1040, 1191
21:9, 428, 1036
21:9-14, 80
21:10, 487, 495, 561, 564
21:11, 397, 564, 1127
21:11-21, 1138
21:12, 542, 913
21:12-14, 1210
21:14, 108, 141, 744
21:15-16, 564
21:16-18, 1156
21:17, 47
21:18-21, 564
21:19, 1127
21:19-20, 1127
21:22, 200, 442, 672, 854, 1071, 1156, 1164
21:22-26, 564
21:23, 397, 659, 1127
21:24, 394
21:24-27, 1036
21:25, 659
21:26, 394
21:27, 318, 609, 637, 770, 1084, 1186
22:1, 428, 442
22:1-2, 656, 776
22:1-5, 427, 441, 1156
22:2, 438, 564, 776, 852
22:3, 974, 1086
22:3-5, 442, 1071
22:4, 1014
22:5, 337, 346, 564, 659, 1009
22:6, 666, 869, 974, 1086, 1100, 1120
22:6-20, 653
22:6-21, 1027, 1031
22:7, 60, 131, 337, 481, 672, 858, 869, 973, 974
22:7-20, 338
22:8-9, 46, 851
22:9, 47, 177, 915, 974
22:10, 60, 142, 869, 973, 1084
22:11, 487, 488, 1057, 1058
22:11-12, 1047
22:12, 369, 635, 858, 869, 908, 914, 974
22:12-13, 177
22:13, 283, 426, 427
22:14, 131, 852, 940
22:15, 349, 528, 698, 703, 770, 1186, 1191, 1192
22:16, 39, 43, 635, 704, 851, 913, 1205
22:17, 571
22:18, 60, 851, 973, 1205
22:18-19, 311, 852
22:19, 60, 200, 487, 561, 851, 973
22:20, 177, 635, 663, 675, 703, 755, 858, 869, 870, 947, 974, 1205, 1228, 1237
22:20-21, 672
22:21, 155, 488, 653, 660, 661

Subject Index

Abba, 1, 1034
abomination of desolation, 52
Abraham, 1-6, 38-41, 43, 44, 89, 130, 164, 169, 204, 208-210, 212-216, 218, 227, 228, 246-250, 252, 287, 327, 369, 390, 392, 396, 398, 415, 419-421, 457, 480, 481, 500, 502, 505, 507, 509, 533, 534, 536-538, 540, 551, 554, 556, 558, 560, 584, 607, 610, 620, 643, 644, 648, 671, 724, 729-731, 734, 815-817, 819, 821, 829, 830, 835, 837-839, 879, 892, 932, 963-965, 968-970, 993, 994, 999, 1004, 1039, 1056-1058, 1099, 1110, 1139, 1168, 1169, 1185, 1186, 1208, 1234
Abrahamic covenant, 209, 227, 247, 390 abyss, 6, 128, 347, 459, 460, 625, 636, 657, 704, 777, 988, 1034, 1081, 1241
accursed, 167
Achaia, 123, 148, 433, 755, 757, 764, 765, 771, 1059, 1060
Acrocorinth, 148
Acropolis, 148
Acts of Andrew, 6, 71, 766, 771
Acts of John, 6, 71, 308, 771, 1062
Acts of Paul, 70-72, 679, 983, 1106, 1219, 1228
Acts of Paul and Thecla, 1106, 1219, 1228
Acts of Peter, 7, 71, 72, 407, 409, 679, 757, 764, 916
Acts of Peter and the Twelve Apostles, 7, 409
Acts of Thomas, 24, 70, 72, 407, 759, 765, 771, 1005, 1151, 1153
Adam, 33, 43, 91, 124, 209, 223, 251, 264, 273, 280, 313, 332, 334, 341, 396, 402-404, 408-410, 537, 541, 598, 667, 706, 723, 956, 978, 1016, 1214
adoption, 1, 4, 6, 15, 35, 61, 92, 119, 219, 288, 292, 294, 297, 315, 323, 370, 376, 379, 389, 423, 447, 454, 512-513, 515, 517, 522, 615, 648, 657, 661-664, 717, 723, 740, 796, 800, 810, 822, 832, 865, 867, 872, 873, 913, 915-916, 978, 1002, 1013, 1028 1029, 1032, 1033, 1035 1088, 1109, 1112-1114 1116, 1130, 1148, 1149 1190, 1202, 1212
adoptionism, 24, 33, 306, 586, 675, 860, 1114 adultery, 24, 112, 144, 240, 352, 537, 645, 700, 712-717, 837, 882, 1088-1090, 1166, 1168 adversaries, opponents, 24-34, 45, 50, 51, 53, 76, 77, 127, 155, 158, 167, 173, 175, 196, 210, 211, 215, 227, 253, 265, 266, 281, 284, 305, 306, 311, 336, 339, 362, 370, 393, 400, 401, 403, 405, 411, 425, 426, 463, 464, 469, 470, 532, 573, 577-579, 588, 590-593, 596, 598, 612, 613, 615, 617-619, 652, 653, 702, 706, 716, 725, 728, 730, 732, 764, 775, 818, 822, 833, 836, 837, 840, 855, 865-868, 877, 914, 923, 925, 927, 953, 961, 973, 975, 976, 982, 1013, 1037, 1042, 1045, 1046, 1056, 1079, 1081, 1094, 1109, 1110, 1123, 1149, 1150, 1161, 1164, 1168, 1200 advocate, 27, 29, 31-32, 89, 102, 282, 362, 369, 425, 539, 768, 946, 1055, 1097
Aelia, Capitolina, 185 affliction,, 254, 308, 604, 643, 734, 768, 781, 880, 908, 952, 1052, 1067, 1170, 1202
Agabus, 743, 971, 972
agape, 34, 95, 379, 686, 700, 819, 1228, 1229
age to come, 51, 63-65, 117, 226, 264, 265, 276, 277, 320, 336, 339, 341, 556-558, 559, 695, 775, 933, 940, 1038, 1058
Agrippa, 115, 184, 186, 193, 291, 322, 325, 382, 467, 599, 658, 718, 757, 884, 907, 932, 1008, 1060, 1061
Alexander the Great, 34, 170, 533, 611, 760, 1008, 1011, 1075, 1146
Alexandria, 34-37, 53, 90, 126, 135, 138-142, 144-146, 149-152, 167, 185, 186, 188, 190-193, 236, 237, 255, 289, 291-296, 298, 300, 303, 307, 308, 322, 358, 359, 389, 403, 404, 406, 444, 457, 470, 548, 576, 585, 595, 618, 665, 666, 679, 697, 708-710, 712, 723, 757, 758, 765, 766, 773, 779, 781, 783, 860, 907, 912, 916, 931, 932, 934, 966, 967, 1032, 1089, 1099, 1106, 1172, 1191, 1202, 1213, 1218, 1221, 1222, 1225 allegory, 35-37, 72, 84, 125, 126, 214, 294, 296, 298, 480, 536, 540, 646, 706, 740, 815, 829, 830, 842, 929, 932, 933, 967, 987, 1155, 1165, 967 alms, almsgiving, 301, 476, 699, 827, 832, 1052, 1053, 1143, 1162, 1229 altar, 50, 132, 372, 427, 441, 528, 641, 691, 699, 719, 1007, 1008, 1027, 1126, 1137, 1170, 1183, 1221
amen, 37, 163, 427, 660, 663, 690, 691, 960, 1230
amoraim, amoraic period, 37, 608
Ananias, 22, 73, 77, 78, 107, 115, 243, 244, 357, 373, 466, 562, 749-751, 790, 885, 942, 944, 1054, 1118, 1166, 1185, 1195 anathema, 811, 1110, 1162
Anatolia, 146
ancestors, 5, 6, 37-40, 42, 43, 134, 205, 246, 264, 317, 319, 326, 330, 417, 457, 500, 505, 508, 537, 542, 558, 599, 622, 643, 694, 730, 757, 814, 833, 850, 884, 907, 960, 969, 985, 1001, 1110
Andronicus, 762, 765
angels, 5, 17, 18, 29, 35-37, 44-47, 50, 51, 62, 63, 69, 74, 88, 98, 100, 108, 121, 128, 132, 133, 172, 173, 175, 177, 178, 182, 192, 198, 201, 214, 224, 244, 252-254, 266, 314, 317, 320, 339, 352, 360, 361, 381, 398, 413, 417-419, 425, 428, 431, 432, 437, 438-443, 445, 452, 453, 457, 459, 460, 462, 466, 467, 470, 480, 486, 487, 496, 503, 505, 529, 533, 537, 538, 563, 571, 603, 618, 620, 623, 624, 633, 635, 649, 663, 666-669, 671, 672, 675, 698, 701, 704, 713, 714, 716, 723, 729-731, 747, 766, 778, 782, 783, 785, 817-819, 822, 835, 836, 839-841, 843, 845, 853, 869, 870, 878, 900, 915, 922, 928, 939, 947, 948, 956, 960, 961, 965, 972, 985, 997, 998, 1009, 1014, 1022, 1026, 1030, 1031, 1036, 1043, 1078, 1081, 1085, 1089, 1093, 1097, 1100, 1112, 1113, 1117-1120, 1122, 1127, 1138, 1141, 1149, 1170, 1181, 1185, 1193, 1205, 1234, 1238-1241
angel christology, 44, 47, 442, 443, 457, 731, 1081, 1122 angel of the Lord, 18, 62, 620, 666, 667, 675, 961, 972, 1170
angel worship, 998
anger, 275, 329, 421, 428-430, 558, 572, 699, 815, 838, 879, 882, 1035, 1036, 1054, 1105, 1169, 1213, 1238-1240 anoint, anointing, 20, 48, 49, 100, 107, 108, 120-122, 152, 153, 155, 158, 163, 173, 282, 409, 437, 438, 487, 490, 491, 593, 598, 605, 632, 671, 735, 742, 744, 786, 854, 939, 945, 973, 998, 1143, 1194, 1195 anthropology, 24, 27, 66, 124, 307, 379, 462, 477, 501, 777, 800, 1053, 1084, 1104, 1132, 1188, 1222, 1223, 1134
antichrist, 27, 33, 50-53, 69, 74, 76, 128, 129, 254, 261, 335, 343, 529, 539, 740, 920, 959, 973, 1025, 1028, 1029, 1031, 1033-1037, 1046, 1081, 1122
antinomianism, 29, 33, 89, 231, 240, 615, 618, 716, 973, 1228, 1036
Antioch, 2, 10, 11, 15, 25, 32, 34, 53-55, 76-79, 82, 102, 106, 107, 109, 120, 139-142, 144-147, 151, 152, 168, 169, 175, 185, 186, 191, 192, 196, 204, 205, 222, 225, 227, 229, 230, 247, 257, 263, 273, 288, 294, 301, 303, 307, 308, 355, 357, 367, 373, 382, 391, 394, 433, 434, 462-464, 467, 495, 496, 501, 507, 520, 525, 529-533, 546, 566, 585, 602, 616, 627, 630, 657, 658, 667, 672, 676, 678, 685, 686, 691, 693, 720, 721, 725-727, 729, 743, 753, 754, 756-758, 762, 764, 766, 772, 774, 777, 779, 795, 803, 832, 882, 883, 885, 886, 892, 894, 898, 912, 927, 934, 938, 971, 972, 975, 993, 994, 1009, 1048, 1050, 1061, 1067, 1082, 1086, 1100, 1101, 1109, 1111, 1114, 1124, 1125, 1143, 1144, 1150, 1151, 1153, 1157, 1163, 1216, 1217, 1219, 1221, 1227-1231
Antiochus, 50, 51, 53, 64, 288, 533, 1029

Antipas, 720, 762, 764, 1137, 1205
Antonia, 1061, 1099, 1206 anxiety, 397, 457, 538, 550, 566, 761, 773, 782, 876, 1089
Apocalypse of Paul, 408
Apocalypse of Peter, 6, 47, 55, 69, 70, 214, 243, 405, 408, 410, 411, 711
Apocalypse of Thomas, 55, 70 apocalyptic eschatology, 56, 59-62, 64, 65, 68, 865 apocalyptic imagery, 392, 818, 862
apocalypticism, 47, 55, 56, 58-61, 65-68, 255, 267, 343, 424, 442, 443, 551, 617, 619, 659, 721, 741, 784, 854, 873, 1024, 1025, 1037, 1051, 1081, 1085, 1182 apocrypha, 6, 44, 47, 68, 69, 73, 82, 85, 86, 308, 317, 667, 712, 774, 818, 827, 829, 830, 837, 889, 914, 977, 979, 1006, 1177, 1201
apocryphal Pauline literature, 68, 72
Apollonia, 290
Apollos, 23, 149, 444, 493, 743, 758, 765, 940, 1072, 1145, 1207, 1217, 1218
apostasy, 42, 43, 73-76, 104, 117, 167, 168, 261, 306, 321, 330, 331, 336, 350, 368, 381, 382, 447, 453, 466, 469, 505, 532, 538, 734, 819, 821-823, 836, 838, 861, 882, 892, 912, 914, 940, 950, 1003, 1011, 1014, 1015, 1039, 1183, 1198, 1212, 1228
Apostle's Creed, 82
apostleship, 33, 76-79, 82, 110, 190, 742, 746, 892, 1187, 1207 apostolic decree, 26, 647, 648, 892, 904, 996, 1088, 1149
apostolic fathers, 1, 4, 5, 37, 43, 48, 49, 76, 80, 82-91, 96, 100-105, 109, 111, 126, 130, 131, 134, 139-143, 152, 155, 169, 184, 190, 191, 193, 194, 201, 235, 237, 238, 240-242, 246, 256-258, 263, 264, 266, 267, 284, 285, 287, 301, 303, 304, 311, 313, 329, 330, 341, 345-347, 349, 351, 352, 357, 359, 362, 364, 366, 367, 369-374, 379, 380, 384, 394, 396, 397, 399, 413, 429-436, 438, 439, 442, 459-461, 471, 481, 483, 485, 486, 488, 490, 493, 499, 500, 509, 514, 516, 518-520, 532, 533, 536, 539, 541-543, 561, 566, 571-574, 578, 579, 583, 585, 600, 601, 603, 604, 629, 637, 638, 640, 645, 648, 653, 655, 657, 659, 662-664, 668, 672, 673, 702-704, 717, 720, 722, 732, 733, 735-738, 741, 744, 770, 775, 783, 785, 786, 792, 794, 795, 799, 803, 806, 821, 823, 826, 829, 830, 834, 876, 878, 881, 897, 936, 937, 939, 941, 947, 948, 960, 966, 967, 969, 970, 987, 1018, 1036, 1038, 1040, 1041, 1048, 1049, 1053, 1057, 1058, 1067, 1071, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1078, 1082, 1084, 1089, 1093-1098, 1121, 1122, 1128, 1140, 1148, 1154, 1156, 1158, 1169, 1178-1180, 1182, 1184, 1186, 1190-1193, 1198-1200, 1203-1205, 1216, 1222, 1225, 1238-1241
apostolic preaching, 260, 286, 359, 521, 628-630, 799, 874, 1004, 1241
Apostolic Tradition, 10, 91, 113, 118-123, 259, 405, 618, 690, 736, 934, 1045, 1046, 1090, 1211, 1224, 1235 aqedah, 3, 4, 6, 44, 458
Aquila, 93, 291, 313, 378, 444, 446, 448, 449, 706, 743, 757, 762-764, 900, 1066, 1207, 1217, 1218, 1220
Arabia, 758, 759, 764, 765
Aramaic, 60, 114, 133, 165, 166, 177, 179, 289, 313, 315, 462, 465, 468, 570, 580, 581, 585, 600, 605, 606, 608, 609, 663, 667, 675, 678, 687, 710, 759, 782, 790, 820, 870, 905, 947, 971, 974, 997, 1032, 1034, 1124, 1125, 1142, 1143, 1150, 1162, 1163, 1220, 1228, 1237
archangels, 33, 45-47, 439, 441, 667, 730, 778, 818, 835, 839, 840, 949, 965, 1160, 1120
architecture, 91, 92, 95, 298, 358, 377, 399, 444, 446, 507, 508, 511, 551, 1110, 1145, 1159, 1220, 1231
Areopagus, 192, 416, 467, 537, 627, 670, 886, 1025, 1054, 1056, 1126, 1129, 1217
aretalogy, 1147
Aristarchus, 688, 765, 888
Aristobulus, 287, 296, 298, 979
army, 85, 95, 109, 128, 201, 235, 293, 295, 321, 323, 636, 1028, 1060, 1063, 1183
Artemis, 146, 147, 416, 701, 1008, 1021, 1147, 1211
ascension, 11, 12, 19, 20, 44-47, 52, 63, 69, 70, 76, 78, 95-102, 127, 260, 333, 343, 344, 359, 360, 363, 442, 459, 563, 602, 623, 629, 630, 669, 722, 723, 740, 742, 746, 756, 792, 825, 858, 859, 873, 874, 890, 904-906, 921, 922, 944, 1006, 1019, 1020, 1199, 1204, 1216
Ascension of Isaiah, 47, 52, 69, 70, 102, 740, 1006, 1019 asceticism, 30, 31, 33, 72, 192, 215, 303, 402, 405, 409, 410, 546, 585, 615, 706, 707, 713, 714, 717, 781, 987, 1019, 1088-1090, 1111, 1152, 1153, 1197, 1213, 1221
Asia Minor, 32, 71, 126, 136, 139, 142, 144, 146, 147, 150, 151, 187, 189-191, 194, 198, 200, 224, 225, 288, 300, 308, 314, 328, 339, 348, 349, 391, 392, 434, 441, 476, 506, 529, 530, 571, 575, 582, 588, 596, 683, 691, 705, 719, 731, 732, 740, 753, 759, 764, 766, 768, 769, 869, 892, 908, 912, 916, 931, 934, 941, 959, 960, 1008-1011, 1022, 1044, 1045, 1048, 1072, 1080, 1106-1108, 1110, 1135, 1146, 1147, 1150, 1163, 1198, 1210, 1211, 1217, 1219, 1220, 1224, 1231, 1232 assurance, 11, 59, 76, 101-104, 108, 117, 166, 272, 279, 336, 362, 365, 367, 380-382, 443, 499, 501, 517, 524, 556, 637, 719, 859, 860, 863, 864, 867, 873, 876, 881, 882, 897, 918, 946, 972, 996, 1009, 1015, 1038, 1045, 1075, 1080, 1136, 1234
astrology, 104, 701-704, 787, 941, 1006, 1009-1011, 1081, 1147, 1150
Athens, 148, 192, 290, 299, 303, 414, 416, 627, 754, 758, 886, 910, 1009-1011, 1126, 1144, 1190, 1217 athlete, athletic, 85, 235, 327, 328, 721, 768, 1039 atonement, 4, 20, 27, 36, 79, 98, 99, 104, 145, 171, 203, 261, 263, 267-276, 279, 280-287, 297, 523, 547, 592, 594, 610, 624, 633, 642, 646, 671, 694, 697, 762, 828, 861, 862, 875, 939, 966, 996, 1016, 1035, 1052, 1055, 1096, 1165, 1180, 1181, 1230 atoning sacrifice, 79, 145, 261, 269, 281-284, 594, 694, 1016, 1230
Augustus, 53, 148, 291-293, 325, 767, 1028, 1060, 1065, 1076, 1142 authorities, 127, 134, 153, 174, 189, 221, 230-232, 236, 253, 293, 297, 298, 357, 361, 386, 448, 464, 466, 514, 515, 517, 605, 607, 608, 610, 699, 715, 719, 761, 786, 790, 836, 879, 884, 886, 908-911, 919, 922, 947, 953, 1005, 1007, 1008, 1029, 1035, 1062, 1123, 1126, 1128, 1142, 1144, 1163, 1195, 1208, 1233, 1234 autobiography, 470, 600, 778, 885
Babylon, 1, 46, 111, 112, 128, 151, 186, 232, 254, 288, 349, 422, 428, 460, 467, 564, 565, 634, 636, 644, 703, 716, 720, 783, 851, 853, 854, 870, 908, 914, 915, 1001, 1027-1029, 1037, 1047, 1052, 1066, 1067, 1075, 1127, 1135, 1138, 1179, 1182, 1183, 1192, 1209, 1211, 1221, 1239, 1240
banquet, 5, 6, 503, 602, 604, 692, 693, 1210 baptism, 5, 18, 20, 21, 26, 41, 49, 73, 76, 78, 84, 89, 104, 112-125, 149, 153, 173, 176, 179, 181, 191, 192, 216, 228, 229, 233, 242, 245, 247, 251, 256, 258-260, 269, 274, 282, 300, 301, 306, 330, 331, 333, 335, 349, 351, 354, 356, 357, 361, 362, 364, 367, 376, 378, 380-382, 398, 405, 409, 415, 416, 489, 491, 493, 494, 498, 508, 512, 519, 527, 540, 573, 584, 591, 624, 626, 631, 642, 656-658, 661, 664, 665, 673, 675, 676, 687, 690-693, 711, 742, 772, 784-787, 795, 817, 823, 828, 836, 903, 905, 906, 922, 930, 942, 971, 972, 993, 994, 997, 1009, 1011-1013, 1017, 1027, 1073, 1075, 1089, 1108, 1109, 1116, 1117, 1145, 1148, 1153, 1166, 1178, 1220, 1226, 1227, 1229, 1231, 1234-1237 baptismal rites, 104, 112, 367, 382, 693, 787, 795, 1075, 1237
Bar Kokhba, 47, 69, 125, 145, 165, 166, 185, 192, 194, 213-215, 323, 358, 605, 606, 609, 611 barbarians, 666, 759, 761
Basilides, 127, 146, 149, 192, 194, 400, 404
beasts, 50, 52, 62, 127, 128, 177, 182, 191, 232, 241, 254, 309, 325, 329, 348, 349, 362, 426, 699, 715, 720, 736, 853, 854, 909,

914, 989, 1033, 1037, 1078, 1080, 1081, 1086, 1162, 1196
Belial, Beliar, 44, 50, 52, 729, 730, 740 benediction, 121, 129, 131, 165-169, 172, 174, 398, 475, 609, 650-654, 660, 661, 663, 664, 670, 672, 673, 895, 897, 947, 952, 1026, 1083 benefactors, 20, 92, 93, 129, 288, 293, 923, 1013, 1106, 1107, 1196
Berea, 290, 758, 764, 1217 biblical theology, 55, 129, 250, 433, 473, 478, 482, 556, 796-799, 802, 804, 807-814, 876, 882, 948, 1082 binding of Isaac, 3, 837 binitarianism, 177, 178, 258, 416, 665, 1122 birth pangs, 262, 1210 bishops, 28, 32, 35, 37, 46, 55, 76, 80-82, 84, 89, 94, 105, 106-109, 120-122, 129, 135, 146, 147, 150, 151, 166, 185, 190-192, 202, 214, 222-225, 229, 233, 237, 240, 258, 259, 262, 301, 303, 307, 308, 311, 314, 320, 352, 357, 358, 363, 371, 374, 404, 405, 408, 447, 470, 507, 525, 530-532, 539, 575, 588, 654, 674, 677, 691-693, 699, 705-707, 713, 714, 721, 731, 741, 744, 745, 764, 775, 777, 832, 877, 881, 882, 891, 898, 927, 931, 934, 937, 963, 966, 974-976, 1004, 1014, 1032, 1040, 1048, 1049, 1067, 1072, 1075, 1079, 1086, 1087, 1092, 1093, 1100, 1108-1111, 1151, 1197, 1213, 1216, 1231, 1235
blasphemе, blasphemy, 355, 397, 721, 837, 963, 1063, 1097 blessing, blessedness, 1-3, 5, 6, 20, 31, 39, 41, 42, 81, 90, 95, 98, 100, 104, 118, 121, 122, 129-131, 155, 163, 165, 168, 172, 200, 208-210, 226, 246, 264, 265, 276, 281, 304, 319, 326-328, 330, 332, 337-339, 341, 342, 351, 368, 381, 396, 403, 407, 408, 410, 415, 423, 450, 469, 476, 498, 548, 549, 552, 554, 556-558, 562, 565, 566, 576, 596, 601, 609, 610, 631, 637, 648, 654, 663, 677, 680, 686, 695, 698, 720, 724, 729, 731, 733, 736, 753, 791, 816, 817, 828, 830, 839, 864, 869, 875, 889, 896, 897, 899, 943, 946, 948, 964, 968, 969, 971, 999, 1008, 1009, 1012, 1030, 1038-1041, 1055, 1092, 1136, 1138, 1153, 1160, 1163, 1183, 1237, 1240 blessing of Abraham, 130, 731 blind, blindness, 49, 70, 180, 195, 209, 236, 300, 322, 328, 381, 425, 471, 589, 658, 702, 711, 747, 790, 791, 1053, 1091, 1143, 1192, 1235, 1236 blood, 4, 26, 88, 108, 112, 117, 119, 122, 123, 131, 132, 151, 153, 155-157, 174, 176, 177, 180, 182, 199, 242, 248, 257, 258, 261, 262, 268-270, 274, 275, 278-284, 306, 308, 319, 328, 370, 373, 375, 377, 380, 393, 428, 455, 487, 503, 539, 564, 581, 603, 616, 633, 635, 641, 642, 646, 648, 657, 673, 689, 691, 692, 694, 699, 719, 720, 737, 743, 778-780, 788, 793, 830, 832, 849, 854, 870, 871, 897, 908, 928, 940, 966, 988, 989, 991, 1002-1004, 1014, 1016, 1022, 1030, 1046, 1067, 1069-1071, 1074, 1080, 1098, 1105, 1110, 1144, 1155, 1160, 1165, 1169, 1183, 1197, 1204, 1217 blood of Christ, 88, 122, 156, 174, 261, 262, 279, 280, 375, 455, 830, 940, 1002, 1070, 1071, 1080, 1169 boasting, 592, 673, 889, 890, 961, 962, 1040, 1051-52, 1171, 1212, 1228 body, 26, 32, 37, 39, 54, 65, 71, 90, 96, 97, 112, 117, 121-123, 132, 147, 153, 202, 203, 214, 221, 224, 228, 235, 242, 256, 262, 268, 269, 274, 276, 280, 289, 290, 293, 296, 304, 306, 308, 318, 319, 321, 341, 346, 362, 371, 374-376, 401, 402, 409, 462, 487, 491, 498, 500, 503, 543, 546, 552, 553, 558, 581, 586, 593, 601, 610, 612, 621, 628, 629, 650-655, 657, 686, 691, 693, 706, 708, 709, 717, 719, 730, 737, 740, 744, 755, 775-778, 783, 843, 853, 863, 866, 867, 869, 883, 888-891, 893, 899, 928, 933, 935, 946, 949, 958, 960, 970, 985-987, 990, 995, 1006, 1019, 1020, 1030, 1042, 1044, 1048, 1055, 1070, 1071, 1090, 1095, 1096, 1103-1105, 1121, 1122, 1151, 1165, 1167, 1169, 1198, 1203, 1214, 1215, 1226, 1232, 1233, 1235 body of Christ, 112, 121, 123, 783, 891, 960 bondage, 2, 3, 40, 100, 280, 321, 383, 415, 526, 694, 702, 732, 823, 939, 958, 1001, 1002, 1019, 1078-1080 book of life, 168, 254, 609, 642, 656, 851, 1034, 1186, 1189, 1223 born again, 118, 132, 258, 335, 795 boundary markers, 298, 299, 377 bowls, 46, 62, 132, 133, 340, 428, 477, 481, 942, 1030, 1031, 1037, 1179, 1190, 1239, 1241 bread, 81, 114, 123, 131, 157, 181, 201, 268, 269, 271, 285, 314, 377, 476, 502, 503, 589, 680, 681, 683, 686-688, 690-694, 720, 729, 736, 737, 942-944, 992, 993, 1007, 1104, 1105, 1162-1166, 1229, 1232, 1235 brothers of Jesus, 133, 187, 190, 983, 1005 caesar, 231, 293, 324, 325, 348, 349, 381, 478, 721, 883, 936, 948, 954, 1028, 1034, 1062, 1064, 1072, 1076, 1142, 1206
Caesar Augustus, 1076, 1142
Caesarea, 37, 135, 185, 288, 391, 433, 661, 711, 756-758, 763, 764, 790, 930, 931, 971, 1060-1062, 1163, 1206, 1227
Caiaphas, 467, 1162
Cain, 42, 134, 536, 538, 539, 614, 618, 819, 835, 836, 839, 840, 867, 1095, 1204 calendar, 96, 682, 741, 1160
Caligula, 51, 186, 289, 324, 599, 857, 932, 1008 call, calling, 2, 3, 17, 19, 26, 30, 38, 40, 43, 54, 57, 66, 77, 78, 80, 87, 89, 103, 107, 115, 132, 136, 156, 158, 177, 195-197, 201, 203, 205, 211, 213, 230, 238, 242, 255, 258, 259, 266, 273, 277, 281, 296, 307, 311, 313, 314, 318, 319, 319, 329, 349, 354, 364, 365, 368, 369, 373, 380, 383, 391, 396, 418, 422-425, 430, 446, 450, 457, 461, 475, 476, 479, 480, 485, 490-492, 500, 501, 517, 528, 529, 534, 536, 538, 539, 567, 574, 580, 581, 595, 596, 603, 617, 621, 622, 627, 630, 631, 639, 645, 653, 654, 663, 666, 692, 699, 713, 718, 747, 752, 756, 763, 764, 775, 779, 785, 786, 789, 790, 798, 806, 821, 837, 838, 841, 851, 853, 863, 864, 868, 875, 878, 880, 886, 891, 903, 908, 917, 920, 940, 942, 944, 945, 953, 954, 960, 962, 971, 979, 984, 998, 1012-1014, 1018, 1030, 1033, 1035, 1036, 1038, 1040, 1047, 1066, 1067, 1080, 1081, 1094, 1096, 1097, 1101, 1106-1108, 1110, 1120, 1131, 1143, 1167, 1173, 1182, 1204, 1208, 1213, 1217, 1219, 1221, 1223, 1226, 1228, 1230-1234 canon, canonical status, 7, 12, 13, 16, 24, 33, 44, 46, 47, 56, 69, 82, 85-87, 90, 91, 134-144, 146, 151, 156, 158, 169, 179, 184, 185, 189-191, 193, 194, 224, 228, 234, 235, 236, 245, 259, 264, 306, 311, 312, 350, 408, 410, 411, 426, 432, 443, 449, 456, 457, 459, 461, 465, 470, 471, 481, 483, 484, 497, 534, 536, 538, 539, 541, 542, 545, 546, 553-556, 559, 560, 572, 574-578, 582, 585, 613, 614, 618, 638, 655, 659, 663, 668, 673, 675-678, 684, 705-712, 722, 733, 735, 736, 752, 769, 775, 787, 796, 797, 799, 802-808, 810-812, 814, 817, 820, 827, 828, 831, 835, 867, 889, 893, 912, 914, 915, 920-922, 927, 928, 929, 934, 976-981, 983, 984, 1003, 1033, 1090, 1103, 1108, 1156, 1161, 1172-1174, 1176, 1177, 1192, 1199, 1222, 1226, 1230, 1233 canonical criticism, 245, 560 Cappadocia, 79, 757-759, 916 captive, captivity, 49, 132, 532, 759, 934, 949, 1001, 1002, 1079 catechesis, 117, 256, 257, 279, 628, 767, 1058, 1157 catechetical school, 34-36, 144, 577, 1049 celibacy, 31, 144, 315, 713, 714, 1089, 1100, 1106, 1153, 1221, 1221, 1222 Cenchreae, 758, 765
centurion, 109, 115, 209, 243, 271, 391, 392, 566, 580, 688, 928, 993, 1060-1062, 1104, 1144, 1195
Cephas, 467, 497
ceremonial law, 240, 645
Cerinthus, 152, 190, 193, 194, 308, 313, 314, 584, 591 charisma, charismata, 105, 107, 151, 891, 970, 975, 1087, 1194, 1195, 1232 child, children, 3, 5, 6, 13,

14, 20, 39, 42, 75, 79, 100, 113, 123, 124, 127, 128, 152, 192, 198, 200, 204, 208-210, 212, 216, 227, 231, 238, 239, 250, 254, 261, 274, 289, 294, 297, 323, 352, 358, 362, 366, 394, 419, 428, 498, 499, 500, 502-504, 506, 514, 518, 519, 556, 595, 597, 599, 611, 637, 638, 690, 703, 712, 714, 772, 777, 778, 793, 794, 813, 815, 817, 819, 822, 850, 852, 876, 934, 935, 946, 1002, 1004-1006, 1012-1014, 1024, 1025, 1064, 1071, 1089, 1105, 1108, 1115-1118, 1139, 1158, 1168, 1181, 1206, 1209, 1210, 1212, 1213, 1216, 1220

childbearing, 723, 1089 children of Abraham, 5, 210, 556 children of God, 6, 42, 152, 210, 239, 254, 274, 794, 1116, 1117

Chloe, 1220

Christianity and Judaism, 34, 90, 126, 145, 157, 159, 160, 194, 204, 208, 214, 217, 218, 228, 229, 245, 249, 250, 299, 323, 379, 386, 388, 393, 394, 398, 430, 468, 501, 520, 543, 565, 585, 587, 610, 644, 649, 668, 678, 684, 724, 726, 728, 762, 775, 934, 944, 953, 1108-1110, 1141, 1145, 1159, 1165

christological monotheism, 557

chronology, 126, 150, 184, 185, 187, 189, 193, 342, 681, 883, 952, 1063, 1146

church order, government, 28, 54, 55, 75, 80, 82, 89, 105, 106, 110, 113, 118, 122, 129, 146, 181, 191, 198, 204, 219-222, 224, 225, 233, 235, 243, 267, 300, 301, 306, 311, 312, 317, 352, 358, 371, 374, 447, 465, 501, 504, 506, 519, 532, 533, 613, 653, 690, 746, 775, 882, 891, 892, 898, 934, 961, 974, 976, 1036, 1048, 1067, 1075, 1080, 1087, 1093, 1105, 1106, 1108, 1110, 1193, 1197, 1212, 1229, 1238, 1240

church of God, 107, 166, 201, 224, 270, 743, 745, 1087

Cilicia, 755, 757, 758, 764, 1060, 1150

circumcision, 5, 6, 32, 33, 38, 54, 76-79, 124, 125, 127, 145, 161, 168, 169, 189, 203, 208, 213-216, 221, 226-229, 240, 247, 249, 298, 320, 323, 354, 372, 377, 379, 383, 387, 394, 546, 580, 584, 587, 626, 642, 645, 647-649, 743, 753, 761, 764, 806, 824, 825, 828, 888, 891, 993, 1072, 1110, 1144, 1148, 1195, 1207

circumcision, party, 227, 587

citizen, citizenship, 206, 230, 233, 243, 289, 293, 294, 352, 517, 563, 599, 764, 886, 920, 953, 1060-1062, 1064-1066, 1219

civic cult, 230, 1006-1008

civil authority, 110, 127, 174, 230-232, 236, 293, 325, 350, 352, 514, 661, 790, 884, 912, 917, 947, 1035, 1062, 1066, 1110, 1158, 1207

Claudius, 150, 192, 233, 289, 290, 325, 446, 448, 449, 529, 743, 754, 907, 911, 1061, 1062, 1065, 1066, 1100, 1217 clean cleansing, 93, 117, 131, 174, 233, 242-244, 274, 276, 277, 279, 282, 354, 375, 376, 487, 561, 726, 738, 810, 819, 928, 944, 988-992, 1013, 1104, 1144, 1166

Clement of Rome, 6, 41, 75, 83, 85, 86, 88, 91, 100, 109, 110, 138, 156, 179, 184, 190, 191, 201, 204, 216, 224, 230, 233, 234, 237, 238, 243, 246, 258, 262, 285, 291, 352, 367, 381, 435, 442, 444, 446, 448, 460, 470, 481, 485, 512, 518, 519, 532, 534, 572, 579, 658, 672, 698, 732, 795, 823, 829, 834, 899, 975, 984, 1003, 1019, 1024, 1036, 1040, 1048, 1052, 1054, 1058, 1066, 1067, 1071, 1121, 1156, 1159, 1211, 1216, 1223

Colossae, 146, 529, 1150, 1226 commandment, 26, 27, 128, 133, 162, 181, 238-241, 292, 311, 319, 336, 351, 352, 366, 371, 373, 375, 379, 397, 426, 469, 470, 492, 528, 537, 575, 583, 584, 586, 594, 598, 604, 609, 640, 644-646, 649, 652, 673, 674, 675, 683, 684, 698, 715, 815, 823, 827, 830, 831, 837, 852, 897, 991, 994, 1046, 1049, 1054, 1055, 1075, 1088, 1096, 1142, 1145, 1158-1160, 1164, 1166, 1169, 1180, 1193

commandments of God, 128, 238, 240, 604, 1169

communion, 116-119, 121, 277, 339, 373, 374, 498, 532, 590, 686, 689-693, 697, 777, 943, 945 compassion, 4, 74, 173, 253, 274, 426, 429, 455, 671, 733, 734, 736, 745, 781, 882, 990, 1086, 1090, 1101 condemnation, 76, 100, 160, 168, 207, 230, 303, 559, 568, 612, 622, 696, 716, 736, 837, 976, 1002, 1016, 1051, 1090, 1095, 1192, 1231 confess, confession, 26, 27, 51, 74, 79, 104, 114, 117, 118, 121, 123, 153-155, 163, 164, 176, 181, 195, 199, 200, 201, 213, 216, 217, 223, 243, 251, 254-258, 278-281, 283, 314, 344, 355, 361, 366, 368, 375, 380, 381, 382, 392, 396, 398, 399, 420, 421, 426, 437, 443, 447, 453, 454, 455, 500, 509, 522, 534, 541, 555, 571, 584, 593, 657, 661, 667, 669, 684, 689, 691, 699, 704, 739, 816, 819, 830, 833, 841, 843, 878, 889, 912, 932, 942, 943, 945, 946, 959, 973, 1012-1014, 1053-1055, 1097, 1110, 1112, 1150, 1197, 1201, 1227-1229, 1231 confessional forms, 82, 91, 241, 255, 256, 260, 628, 1068, 1225 conflict, 14, 17, 19, 22, 52, 72, 77, 83, 110, 127, 129, 148, 150-152, 162, 169, 175, 188, 206, 211, 215, 216, 218, 234, 236, 237, 241, 252, 255, 256, 290, 295, 309, 310, 348, 368, 386, 388-390, 393, 404, 416, 446, 462, 464-466, 471, 477, 483, 520, 547-551, 589, 590, 592, 635, 678, 702, 706, 726-728, 751, 761, 770, 789, 805, 818, 829, 852, 854, 866, 903, 914, 918, 931, 938, 948, 954, 985, 986, 1013, 1019, 1031, 1037, 1041, 1059, 1081, 1086, 1104, 1125, 1136-1138, 1140, 1163, 1239

conflict motif, 52, 127, 241, 309, 854, 914, 1037, 1081, 1086

conscience, 117, 241-243, 261, 276-278, 322, 352, 375, 376, 529, 646, 684, 714, 884, 920, 946, 964, 985, 987, 994, 1012, 1029, 1031, 1043, 1053, 1058, 1070, 1073, 1095, 1096, 1098, 1185, 1200, 1211

contentment, 844, 1051

conversion, 45, 73, 78, 93, 103, 115, 131, 164, 166, 168, 192, 216, 226, 227, 229, 243-245, 247, 288, 292, 296, 297, 312, 316, 324, 341, 354-356, 359, 364, 376, 378, 380, 389-391, 393, 394, 415, 416, 422, 438, 460, 476, 494, 503, 512, 534, 562, 563, 565, 580, 589, 602, 636, 642, 657, 658, 666, 702, 706, 715, 718, 719, 738, 743, 749, 753, 754, 756-758, 761, 764-767, 769, 771, 773, 774, 789, 790, 792, 803, 822, 860, 879, 883-885, 887, 894, 907, 921, 930, 940, 953, 971, 998, 1011-1013, 1015, 1049, 1057, 1076, 1081, 1103, 1104, 1106-1109, 1111, 1136, 1138, 1140, 1144, 1149, 1152, 1152, 1159, 1194, 1207, 1217-1221 converts, 45, 80, 93, 162, 175, 206, 226, 227, 295, 349, 354, 356, 358, 373, 374, 378, 388, 390, 391, 394, 446, 471, 503, 508, 512, 520, 521, 579, 622, 642, 645, 661, 697, 707, 715, 743, 744, 750, 756, 760, 761, 773, 894, 917, 920, 942, 1060, 1107, 1117, 1152, 1207

Coptic Apocalypse of Peter, 70, 243

Corinth, 84, 89, 90, 93, 94, 144, 147, 148, 151, 152, 193, 201, 202, 210, 220, 222, 224, 233-237, 243, 290, 355, 378, 379, 391, 446, 448, 449, 512, 529, 530, 617, 639, 678, 679, 686, 688, 698, 743, 744, 754, 755, 757, 759, 762, 764, 765, 772, 808, 829, 830, 883, 892, 910, 961, 975, 1005, 1010, 1022, 1048, 1100, 1122, 1145, 1178, 1195, 1203, 1217, 1219, 1226, 1236

Corinthian church, 75, 109, 148, 151, 179, 234, 352, 506, 1100, 1110

Cornelius, 18, 23, 45, 78, 79, 106, 107, 115, 116, 123, 227, 243-245, 332, 364, 368, 377, 378, 380, 391, 493, 494, 503, 508, 512, 566, 567, 580, 647, 688, 761, 859, 886, 903, 930, 944, 972, 993, 1022, 1060, 1104, 1124, 1144, 1178, 1195, 1227

cornerstone, 158, 183, 245, 317, 320, 361, 510, 511, 538, 633, 678, 838, 920, 1126, 1127, 1135

cosmic christology, 96, 890, 1224

cosmic powers, 232, 1234

cosmos, cosmology, 65, 66, 98, 215, 235, 245, 250, 307, 332, 343, 347, 361, 401, 427, 439-443, 499,

591, 622, 636, 638, 644, 741, 783, 956-958, 960, 1020, 1176, 1189, 1198, 1202, 1224, 1231
Council in Jerusalem, 106, 138, 186-187, 883, 1162 covenant, 1, 2, 20, 37, 38, 42, 43, 45, 74, 90, 107, 108, 117, 124-126, 144, 147, 161, 162, 168, 172, 195, 196, 198-200, 203, 207, 209-211, 213, 214, 217, 218, 226-228, 242, 245-250, 259, 262, 263, 268-270, 275, 276-279, 282, 285, 286, 299, 326, 331, 334, 336, 345, 346, 350, 375, 376, 383, 390, 413-415, 418, 443, 444, 447, 448, 453-455, 457, 458, 480, 485, 487, 492, 501, 512, 537, 540, 543, 544, 561, 563, 564, 582, 583, 600, 621, 631, 633, 637, 639, 640, 645-649, 655, 673, 679, 685, 689, 724, 733, 734, 736, 770, 780-782, 793, 795, 802, 811, 814, 821, 827-830, 834, 842, 844, 845, 849, 850, 854, 861, 862, 878, 889, 891, 899, 905, 906, 927, 930, 947, 956, 965-969, 973, 974, 989, 990, 998, 999, 1003, 1012, 1026, 1031, 1043, 1053, 1055, 1058, 1069-1072, 1085, 1096, 1116, 1118, 1135, 1152, 1154-1156, 1160, 1183, 1230, 1233, 1237
covetousness, 715, 888, 1193 creation, 5, 45, 46, 50, 52, 57, 65, 66, 88, 98, 99, 104, 128, 183, 200, 203, 213, 215, 245, 247, 250-255, 258, 259, 266, 272, 276, 313, 318, 331-337, 341-343, 346-349, 359, 360, 363, 372, 396, 401, 405, 406, 414, 420, 421, 425, 427, 429, 440, 442, 486, 490, 499, 500, 521, 539, 540, 552, 556-558, 595, 622, 632, 635-638, 644, 657, 665, 666, 670, 674, 679, 685, 692, 706, 708, 740, 741, 748, 750, 783, 788, 793, 801, 805, 809, 811, 833, 845, 863, 866, 872, 899, 908, 926, 929, 932, 939, 952, 957-960, 974, 1003, 1012, 1017, 1019, 1020, 1022-1024, 1031, 1036, 1042, 1049, 1078, 1089, 1102, 1113, 1114, 1122, 1188, 1189, 1196, 1201, 1204, 1210, 1222-1224, 1226, 1227 creator, 5, 50, 87, 179, 211, 215, 250, 255, 256, 259, 356, 401, 402, 404, 406, 414, 421, 429, 439, 524, 525, 528, 556-558, 609, 621, 634, 655, 657, 668, 706, 776, 777, 807, 886, 939, 943, 962, 1121, 1148, 1202, 1224 creed, creedal, 82, 91, 99, 102, 117, 118, 122, 145, 164, 165, 181, 241, 255-260, 307, 308, 310, 375, 480, 491, 492, 522, 523, 573, 627, 628, 659-661, 800, 844, 887, 893, 953, 959, 973, 1018, 1020, 1027, 1068, 1111, 1114, 1118, 1181, 1224, 1226, 1227, 1230-1238
Crescens, 765
Crete, Cretans, 32, 223, 290, 757-759, 764, 765, 1059
Crispus, 148, 222, 512 cross, 20, 67, 68, 70, 71, 79, 88, 91, 99, 101, 114, 118, 119, 122, 124, 125, 144, 150, 159, 161, 182, 260-263, 267, 268, 270-287, 307, 328, 339, 351, 370, 375, 392, 397, 401, 404, 416, 423, 443, 446, 494, 495, 501, 540, 560, 573, 582, 584, 591, 592, 595, 601, 602, 610, 623, 624, 627, 632, 635, 637, 646, 648, 673, 676, 677, 685, 694, 695, 719, 722, 723, 728, 752, 753, 760, 761, 779, 795, 803, 811, 821, 833, 851, 870, 871, 885-888, 913, 915, 917, 921-923, 928, 929, 938, 950, 951, 962, 983, 985, 1000, 1004, 1016, 1038, 1039, 1047, 1050, 1072, 1077, 1079-1081, 1104, 1139, 1141, 1167, 1175, 1180, 1201, 1210, 1231, 1237, 1241 cross, theology of the, 20, 263, 286, 1175 crown, 327, 336, 622, 695, 721, 776, 777, 816, 818, 838, 862, 969, 1018, 1023, 1033, 1035, 1039, 1040, 1077, 1128, 1167, 1210 crucifixion, 20, 26, 27, 70-72, 153, 174, 177, 186, 193, 260, 272, 273, 281, 282, 306, 308, 317, 416, 446, 543, 562, 566, 567, 573, 591, 672, 687, 752, 913, 916, 928, 1105, 1161, 1162 cup, 111, 119, 121, 130, 131, 133, 157, 181, 268, 269, 428, 564, 686, 689-693, 1229, 1232, 1239 curse, curses, 20, 43, 129, 132, 168, 262, 263, 272, 280, 333, 341, 351, 469, 558, 701-704, 836, 852, 1002, 1010, 1183, 1222, 1138
Cybele, 1148
Cynic, Cynics, 357, 475, 706, 769, 1099, 1102, 1157
Cyprus, 78, 290, 291, 314, 323, 391, 416, 702, 757, 764, 765, 971, 1059, 1124
Dalmatia, 757-759, 765
Damascus, 78, 115, 117, 144, 146, 288, 314, 373, 388, 630, 658, 669, 709, 718, 747, 749, 753, 754, 756, 757, 762, 790, 803, 883, 884, 904, 941, 942, 1061, 1104, 1124, 1139, 1227
Damascus Road, 78, 669, 718, 747, 1139 dark, darkness, 6, 21, 44, 115, 118, 125, 129, 133, 146, 150, 188, 254, 264, 266, 336, 367, 384, 385, 425, 426, 438, 459, 486, 489, 519, 563, 589-592, 597, 637, 646, 657-659, 692, 730, 744, 751, 768, 780, 803, 817, 819, 823, 887, 917, 933, 939, 941, 959, 1003, 1015, 1021, 1031, 1047, 1080, 1109, 1118, 1141, 1148, 1159, 1183, 1193, 1234 daughter, daughters, 106, 191, 209, 322, 743, 765, 778, 854, 931, 932, 971, 1009, 1079, 1080, 1142, 1144, 1152, 1207, 1214, 1215, 1218, 1219, 1221
David, 39, 41, 43, 88, 152, 155, 163, 169, 171, 181, 187, 204, 208, 216, 246, 247, 264, 319, 356, 415, 435, 466, 487, 491, 497, 509, 534, 536, 537, 539, 561, 610, 631, 653, 663, 677, 690, 724, 730, 735, 776, 816, 825, 827-830, 851, 875, 963, 980, 992, 1006, 1025, 1042, 1073, 1082, 1091, 1099, 1230
David's son, 43, 155
Day of Atonement, 99, 274, 279, 297, 861, 966, 1016, 1165 day of the Lord, 63, 90, 253, 264-267, 329, 343, 425, 462, 570, 622, 625, 668, 671, 673, 679, 682, 690, 739, 779, 857-859, 863, 873, 969, 1025, 1030, 1036, 1074, 1081, 1097, 1181, 1182, 1241 day of wrath, 622
deacons, 76, 80, 81, 89, 105, 106, 109, 121, 122, 131, 146, 202, 223-225, 240, 267, 301, 405, 444, 464, 507, 519, 532, 691, 692, 741, 742, 744, 745, 759, 881, 882, 935, 975, 976, 982, 1054, 1067, 1086-1088, 1108, 1110, 1166, 1193, 1213, 1220, 1231, 1233, 1235
Dead Sea Scrolls, 44, 67, 84, 184, 188, 267, 330, 331, 411, 464, 465, 511, 541, 610, 657, 729-731, 834, 956, 997, 1000, 1122, 1160, 1164, 1165, 1170 death of Christ, 5, 27, 35, 36, 45, 74, 75, 88, 96, 98, 99, 104, 112, 114, 119, 153, 171-174, 213, 214, 240, 245, 254, 256, 257, 260, 262, 263, 267-287, 308, 317, 328, 330, 331, 335, 336, 349, 351, 359, 363, 365, 376, 382, 385, 398, 415, 435, 457, 459, 479, 487, 489, 491, 500, 524, 537, 538, 543, 547, 562, 580, 591, 610, 626, 627, 635, 637, 642, 647, 655, 667, 684, 693, 694, 719, 752, 762, 784, 802, 811, 828, 835, 871, 885, 889, 899, 913, 915, 929, 939, 962, 987, 1002, 1003, 1039, 1058, 1069, 1070, 1072, 1075, 1080, 1082, 1092, 1096, 1140, 1180, 1186, 1204, 1241 decalogue, 241, 351, 413, 480, 679, 835, 932 deconstruction, 287, 472, 473 decree, 26, 150, 297, 448, 529, 572, 647, 648, 670, 743, 892, 904, 910, 965, 971, 996, 1088, 1142, 1149, 1163 defilement, 242, 360, 377, 378, 489, 615, 690, 715, 733, 777, 840, 898, 963, 987, 989, 990, 992, 994-996, 1121, 1144, 1223 deities, 146, 417, 520, 528, 591, 655, 701, 702, 750, 965, 1007-1009, 1011, 1082, 1147, 1148 delay of Parousia, 287 deliverer, 47, 65, 415, 644, 780, 857, 1001, 1034, 1082 Demas, 765 demons, demonic, 20, 23, 44, 48, 50, 51, 128, 129, 133, 168, 232, 258, 263, 266, 287, 331, 349, 356, 362, 382, 384, 414, 416, 417, 421, 423, 438, 459, 503, 511, 529, 558, 564, 701-703, 705, 720, 730, 751, 783, 786, 787, 913, 922, 931, 938, 941, 1006, 1010, 1014, 1026, 1033, 1056, 1076, 1077, 1079, 1080, 1082, 1117, 1118, 1138, 1199, 1231-1235 Derbe, 137, 222, 758
desposynoi, 287, 387, 1005 destroy, destruction, 35, 41, 51, 64, 79, 93, 111, 126, 148, 149, 165, 166, 176, 184, 185, 187-189, 191, 192, 200, 213, 214, 216, 240, 254, 263, 267, 283, 287, 322, 332, 341, 343, 358, 362, 365, 386, 387,

441, 459-461, 466, 467, 473, 487, 492, 525, 538, 552, 561, 564, 585, 600, 601, 605, 607, 609, 610, 624, 625, 633, 636, 655, 703, 709, 727, 728, 735, 768, 821, 840, 852, 869, 879, 900-902, 911, 913, 919, 926, 989, 1019, 1023, 1027-1031, 1034-1037, 1040, 1045, 1069, 1074, 1075, 1079, 1109, 1120, 1123, 1124, 1127, 1138, 1142, 1159, 1160, 1162, 1164, 1165, 1189, 1192, 1209, 1238-1241

destruction/fall of Jerusalem, 35, 51, 93, 111, 165, 184, 187, 188, 192, 194, 214, 221, 316, 387, 546, 561, 600, 605, 607, 610, 727, 728, 861, 901, 902, 928, 1027, 1035, 1192

devil, 23, 42, 46-48, 50, 52, 104, 115, 121, 127, 129, 151, 210, 253, 254, 263, 274, 278, 281, 283-285, 287, 334, 336, 341, 351, 359, 368, 371, 460, 461, 491, 582, 592, 655, 702, 704, 705, 716, 719, 720, 732, 739, 751, 778, 794, 818, 819, 845, 852, 867, 869, 909, 931, 939-941, 1011, 1023, 1035, 1039, 1062, 1068, 1077-1082, 1094, 1098, 1116, 1122, 1149, 1166-1168, 1170, 1189, 1199, 1200, 1239, 1241

Diana, 147, 1147, 1214

diaspora, 79, 92, 144, 149, 151, 169, 170, 198, 204, 205, 215, 216, 228, 287-300, 321, 355, 372, 377, 389, 394, 431, 445, 456, 462, 521, 524, 547-550, 559, 560, 582, 585, 606, 610, 643, 651, 652, 661-663, 705, 727, 728, 743, 754, 759, 760, 764, 767, 835, 913, 917, 924, 933, 944, 1005, 1012, 1045, 1082, 1124, 1125, 1143, 1145-1147, 1149, 1150, 1202, 1214

diatribe, 161, 814

dietary laws, 54, 298, 433

Dionysus, 528, 1009, 1147

disciples, 13, 20, 22, 33, 40, 48, 49, 69, 72, 73, 76, 77, 83, 97, 113, 116, 121, 144, 163, 165, 167, 182, 188, 191, 192, 196, 197, 207, 222, 251, 262, 268, 269, 271, 273, 285, 306, 333, 373, 381, 385, 390, 392, 404, 407, 414, 415, 492, 494, 497, 501, 502, 532, 542, 546, 562, 563, 575, 580, 587, 590, 595, 598, 616, 631, 639, 646, 669, 675, 680, 681, 686-688, 692, 710, 712, 721-723, 729, 742, 743, 751, 753, 756, 757, 760, 762, 763, 765, 766, 772, 791, 794, 800, 801, 859, 871, 874, 877, 880, 882, 885, 888, 889, 892, 893, 900, 903-906, 914, 916, 921, 922, 930, 931, 940, 943, 945, 946, 953, 962, 969-971, 982, 991-993, 996, 1019, 1024, 1032, 1033, 1051, 1051, 1112, 1116, 1123-1125, 1144, 1175, 1178, 1199, 1200, 1204, 1205, 1211, 1227, 1235, 1237

discipleship, 20, 22, 118, 231, 262, 273, 281, 363, 370, 442, 443, 446, 457, 535, 560, 565, 593-595, 688, 712, 720, 722, 781, 811, 862, 877, 882, 885, 921, 944, 948, 963, 1106

discipline, 89, 109, 223, 260, 304-306, 326, 327, 330, 350, 363, 418, 419, 477, 478, 480, 519, 531, 572, 602, 623, 695, 714, 736, 797, 801, 802, 805-808, 810, 811, 818, 823, 850, 876, 882, 895, 943, 944, 947, 949, 954, 997, 1000, 1014, 1062, 1088, 1106, 1118, 1132, 1133, 1139, 1233

discourse analysis, 306, 451, 452, 458, 477, 478, 483, 484, 526, 620, 791, 1042, 1049, 1129, 1132-1135

disease 356, 747, 1144, 1160 disobedience, 5, 36, 39, 43, 63, 70, 75, 126, 172, 232, 240, 246, 248, 275, 278, 279, 282, 285, 319, 350, 377, 392, 418, 419, 425, 429, 453, 466, 511, 527, 584, 592, 621-623, 657, 723, 736, 768, 781, 790, 840, 844, 946, 1040, 1055, 1069, 1085, 1095-1097, 1123, 1124, 1136, 1140, 1160, 1193, 1208 divine presence, 211, 274, 276, 306, 336, 395-397, 399, 400, 420, 562, 971, 1055

divine warrior, 481, 870, 871

divorce, 9, 24, 33, 144, 306, 352, 700, 712-717, 882, 1033, 1084, 1088-1090, 1166, 1208, 1215

docetism, 24, 26, 27, 33, 52, 71, 75, 85, 101, 146, 152, 158, 183, 217, 239, 256, 257, 281, 285, 306-308, 401, 411, 469, 590, 591, 598, 639, 678, 929, 1018, 1019, 1049, 1114, 1140, 1150, 1231

dove, 204, 226, 746, 937, 977, 1088 doxology, 118, 125, 175, 177, 180, 256, 257, 309, 346, 395, 400, 428, 475, 498, 524, 527, 572, 612, 619, 651-654, 660, 663, 664, 672, 809, 918, 939, 940, 946, 947, 1030, 1046, 1083, 1227, 1236 dragon, 50, 52, 62, 100, 127-129, 132, 176, 177, 232, 241, 254, 309, 362, 426, 477, 634-636, 704, 720, 852-854, 913, 914, 1014, 1033, 1034, 1037, 1078, 1080, 1081, 1086, 1181, 1196, 1209 dreams, 2, 40, 244, 392, 469, 496, 550, 561, 713, 728, 853, 971, 972, 1010, 1021, 1204, 1210

drunkenness, 79, 133, 564, 686, 716, 720, 903, 905, 908, 917, 1149, 1192, 1217 dualism, 50, 51, 62, 64, 66, 67, 70, 232, 253, 276, 296, 307, 309, 375, 376, 401-403, 405, 462, 482, 590, 591, 593, 610, 615, 657, 665, 706, 707, 777, 815, 817, 880, 920, 925, 933, 939, 957, 984-987, 997, 1017, 1078, 1089, 1090, 1095, 1116, 1148, 1149

eagle, 379, 481, 634, 853, 1080, 1161

early catholicism, 89, 91, 106, 207, 226, 310, 358, 369, 532, 613, 617, 619, 893, 927, 934, 982, 1058, 1191, 1192, 1200

early church tradition, 101, 189, 633, 916 earth, 1, 14, 33, 36, 46, 47, 56, 65, 69, 95, 96, 98, 101, 104, 127-130, 132, 151, 156-158, 163, 164, 177, 196, 198, 200-204, 210, 220, 222-224, 226, 240, 250-255, 272, 276, 306, 310, 317, 329, 331, 332, 335-340, 344, 346, 348, 349, 352, 362, 375, 383, 394, 396, 401, 414, 418-420, 426-428, 438, 440-443, 459, 462, 477, 492, 505, 521, 525, 532, 552, 557, 561-564, 568, 621, 622, 624, 630, 634, 635, 637, 638, 643, 644, 656, 669, 677, 678, 690, 718, 719, 733, 739, 741, 753, 755, 756, 767, 769-771, 776, 779, 780, 811, 817, 823, 836, 840, 841, 843, 845, 851, 854, 857, 866, 870, 871, 878, 881, 897, 898, 906, 908, 922, 928, 943, 957-959, 968, 969, 977, 997, 1002, 1010, 1017, 1019, 1025, 1030, 1031, 1033, 1036, 1040, 1052, 1058, 1081, 1113, 1119, 1127, 1156, 1180, 1181, 1183, 1196, 1199, 1210, 1222, 1233, 1239, 1240 eating, 26, 33, 92, 120, 232, 240, 268, 269, 315, 316, 377-379, 383, 438, 503, 528, 529, 602, 647, 681, 686-688, 690, 693, 737, 744, 776, 853, 895, 989, 990, 991, 993, 994, 1036, 1040, 1104, 1149, 1160, 1219, 1235, 1162

Ebionism, Ebionites, 25, 33, 55, 134, 162, 168, 170, 178, 192, 193, 229, 313-316, 387, 388, 579, 584-587, 645, 648, 711, 900-902, 960, 993, 1165

ecstatic experience, 66, 317, 647, 784, 1037, 1183, 1194, 1196, 1197

Eden, 6, 304, 341, 814, 852

Edessa, 316, 317, 758, 766, 772, 774, 1150-1153

Edict of Claudius, 448

Egypt, 2, 34, 35, 38-40, 42, 48, 111, 132, 133, 144, 149, 152, 167, 175, 185, 237, 254, 280, 289-291, 295, 300, 301, 307, 321, 323, 324, 400, 415, 502, 512, 585, 618, 624, 643, 666, 712, 717, 731, 732, 757-759, 765, 771, 778-781, 822, 841, 854, 912, 916, 927, 931, 932, 1001, 1010, 1030, 1059, 1065, 1074, 1141, 1142, 1147, 1149, 1160, 1174, 1182, 1215, 1241

Egyptian, Egyptians, 34, 37, 39, 40, 60, 85, 132, 133, 147, 149, 180, 226, 236, 237, 289, 295, 298, 324, 386, 403, 407, 408, 410, 412, 415, 477, 481, 528, 621, 674, 710-712, 778, 781, 819, 839, 958, 1009, 1099, 1112, 1146, 1147, 1150, 1209

elders, 10, 27, 28, 46, 76, 78, 80, 89, 105-110, 137, 147, 148, 185, 189, 190, 198, 199, 220-225, 237, 270, 292, 305, 311, 317, 318, 355, 358, 369, 392, 428, 432, 437, 441, 447, 466, 505, 506, 511, 513, 518, 525, 529, 566, 595, 634, 635, 652, 653, 741-744, 786, 806, 818, 853, 877, 880, 883, 892, 897, 915, 918, 928, 942, 947, 973, 975, 980, 982, 1030, 1031, 1036, 1067, 1069, 1092, 1142, 1199, 1206, 1207, 1212, 1213, 1228, 1231 elect, 36, 46, 82, 106, 130, 131, 156, 161, 162, 177, 179, 180, 190, 192, 199-201, 211, 220, 221, 243, 246, 247, 249, 265, 292, 299, 317-321, 366, 400, 402, 413, 422, 423, 478, 509-511, 516, 519, 536,

538, 543, 556, 557, 562, 563, 573, 584, 624, 652, 675, 674, 688, 698, 822, 860, 876, 908, 913, 987, 1040, 1045, 1055, 1059, 1087, 1104, 1126, 1201, 1204, 1221, 1223
Eleusinian mysteries, 1009
Elijah, 41, 97, 127, 436, 437, 480, 534, 537, 539, 541, 551, 554, 559, 571, 721, 770, 779, 815, 816, 826, 830, 835, 854, 942, 945, 998, 1031
Elisha, 436, 437, 537, 539, 541, 826, 830, 930
Elkesaites, 315, 321, 584, 585, 648 emperor, 34, 50-52, 54, 75, 109, 111, 120, 128, 150, 176, 182, 184-186, 192, 193, 229-232, 240, 263, 288, 300, 321-326, 348-350, 362, 371, 438, 441, 448, 483, 526, 528-530, 535, 611, 617, 634, 636, 679, 691, 716, 734, 760, 773, 857, 869, 886, 898, 908-911, 914, 917, 919, 920, 932, 936, 1006, 1008, 1011, 1028, 1029, 1031, 1033, 1035, 1036, 1048, 1059-1065, 1067, 1074, 1075, 1082, 1083, 1099, 1109, 1110, 1112, 1137, 1140, 1196, 1197, 1217, 1219, 1221 emperor cult, 52, 176, 193, 232, 263, 321, 324, 325, 530, 535, 772, 914, 1008, 1029, 1031, 1033, 1035, 1036, 1048, 1063, 1067, 1072, 1110, 1137 end times, 51, 326, 330, 331, 334, 341, 469, 725, 860, 904, 1200 endurance, 2, 3, 25, 33, 38, 41, 45, 74, 76, 80, 98, 104, 172, 235, 240, 251, 253, 254, 262, 277, 278, 281, 296, 299, 321, 326-330, 348, 349, 351, 352, 356, 358, 361, 363, 365-370, 384, 397, 419, 422, 423, 425, 434, 435, 440, 443, 446, 453, 455, 499, 500, 501, 534, 538, 550, 558-560, 603-605, 622, 633, 719, 721, 762, 770, 786, 816, 819, 822, 823, 835, 836, 838, 845, 850, 878, 882, 897, 914, 915, 920, 940, 941, 950, 968, 969, 1013, 1015, 1023, 1038, 1062, 1063, 1067, 1100, 1121, 1136, 1138, 1140, 1167, 1168, 1170, 1180, 1208 enemies, 21, 26, 50, 51, 99, 112, 129, 130, 132, 133, 165, 191, 196, 199, 200, 263, 264, 331, 332, 338, 343, 360, 362, 374, 392, 418, 441, 459, 501, 503, 549, 589, 591, 633, 656, 677, 732, 739, 786, 792, 824, 836, 840, 919, 939, 1002, 1010, 1031, 1034, 1062, 1077, 1085, 1098, 1160, 1182, 1183, 1234, 1239
enthronement, 20, 69, 95, 100, 101, 325, 328, 330, 338, 348, 359, 360, 362, 363, 428, 442, 459, 524, 631, 635, 636, 638, 944, 1020, 1138
Epaphras, 765
Epaphroditus, 763, 765
Ephesus, 25, 71, 73, 75, 93, 116, 144, 146, 147, 151, 187, 188, 191-193, 197, 223, 317, 328-330, 355, 357, 391, 416, 495, 531, 588, 589, 591, 596, 698, 699, 702, 705, 722, 743, 754, 755, 757, 762-765, 769, 771, 772, 869, 883, 886, 903, 907, 940, 941, 1006, 1008, 1010, 1032, 1088, 1145, 1147, 1148, 1217, 1220, 1226
Epicureans, 29, 354, 356, 655, 762, 775, 776, 867, 925, 1149, 1157
Erastus, 148, 765, 1086
Esau, 39, 42, 129, 130, 249, 330, 381, 445, 829, 1013
eschatology, 21, 23, 27, 30-32, 35, 36, 47, 51, 52, 55-62, 64-68, 90, 95, 98, 125, 145, 182, 218, 255, 265-267, 277, 312, 326, 330-334, 337, 341, 343-345, 347, 348, 352, 397, 399, 423, 425, 442, 454, 462, 501, 502, 516, 560, 561, 565, 587, 595, 605, 610, 615, 620, 625, 628, 633, 638, 643, 644, 657, 659, 693, 694, 739, 741, 777, 803, 811, 854, 856-858, 860, 862, 863, 865-869, 872-875, 881, 888, 890, 925-927, 959, 970, 976, 998, 1019, 1020, 1023, 1025, 1026, 1041, 1054, 1057, 1058, 1074, 1075, 1078, 1081, 1086, 1158, 1170, 1176, 1182, 1189, 1200, 1224, 1233, 1241
Essenes, 45, 55, 60, 161, 295, 316, 345, 482, 610, 615, 775, 841, 932, 990, 997, 998, 1000, 1090, 1160, 1161, 1164, 1165, 1170 eternal destruction, 461, 821, 1074, 1240 eternal life, 27, 89, 104, 176, 241, 261, 282, 320, 327, 339, 342, 345-347, 369, 435, 517, 539, 557, 558, 592, 637, 665, 671, 690, 706, 737, 776, 777, 823, 986, 1016, 1018, 1023, 1039, 1040, 1046, 1184, 1204, 1231 eternal punishment, 6, 47, 75, 347, 429, 459, 461, 624, 625, 657, 777, 988, 1081, 1098, 1188, 1241 eternity, 88, 103, 104, 265, 276, 342, 345-347, 420, 460, 461, 673, 871, 926, 1040, 1097 ethics, 22, 25, 27, 28, 66, 67, 80, 85, 89, 90, 110, 117, 125, 144, 173, 175, 180, 181, 183, 202, 214, 232, 239, 241, 243, 261, 266, 281, 283, 300, 336, 337, 345, 347-349, 352, 354, 355, 358, 367, 370, 371, 384, 391, 397, 404, 412, 421, 422, 446, 469, 474-476, 478, 479, 480, 482, 485, 486, 488, 489, 491, 499, 500, 504, 513, 515-520, 523, 529, 533, 535, 538, 540, 541, 551, 552, 557, 558, 568, 569, 572, 576, 590-594, 615, 623, 626, 628, 638-640, 657, 699, 710, 713, 717, 733-738, 767, 775, 803, 811, 817, 819, 822, 834, 835, 837-839, 841, 862, 864, 867, 879-881, 880, 882, 889, 895, 896, 898, 918, 923-926, 940, 954, 963, 984, 987, 996, 1012, 1013, 1046, 1052-1054, 1056-1058, 1072, 1088-1090, 1097, 1103, 1107, 1110, 1116, 1145, 1149, 1157-1159, 1178, 1191-1194, 1212, 1215
Ethiopian eunuch, 18, 45, 115, 137, 271, 353, 364, 391, 493, 496, 580, 743, 767, 930, 931, 972, 1022
Eucharist, 32, 33, 55, 89, 95, 109, 118-120, 123, 130, 131, 157, 181, 201, 202, 213, 225, 262, 305, 308, 338, 352, 353, 363, 405, 409, 487, 528, 529, 572, 659, 662-664, 676, 680, 682-684, 686-694, 703, 731, 738, 745, 777, 898, 943, 973, 1072, 1108, 1224, 1228, 1229, 1231, 1235, 1238
Euodia, 765 evangelism, 23, 117, 160, 353, 355-359, 390, 392, 394, 415, 433, 578, 628, 748, 753, 755, 760, 773, 876, 929, 1118, 1189, 1219 evangelists, 9, 10, 17, 23, 35, 106, 115, 116, 163, 191, 226, 227, 353, 358, 359, 374, 378, 380, 388, 391, 468, 494, 554, 572, 575, 577, 578, 588, 598, 635, 706, 724, 743, 757, 764, 772, 877, 929-931, 944, 953, 1032, 1077, 1123, 1124, 1220, 1229, 1235
Eve, 43, 122, 264, 306, 332, 341, 396, 402, 706, 723, 1066, 1078, 1110, 1169, 1210, 1214 evil, 5, 21, 29, 33, 41, 42, 45, 47, 49-53, 62, 66, 68, 75, 80, 104, 117, 122, 125, 127-129, 151, 199-201, 214, 215, 230, 231, 241-243, 248, 253-255, 266, 267, 282, 284, 300, 317, 320, 325, 328, 336, 338, 351, 353, 357, 359, 369, 371, 373, 383, 396, 401, 402, 404, 411, 421, 426-428, 459, 470, 473, 477, 483, 486, 494, 525, 535, 538, 561, 564, 575, 601, 610, 621, 635-637, 649, 657, 659, 662, 697, 698, 701, 703, 706, 707, 715, 716, 720, 734, 735, 737-741, 752, 770, 783, 785-787, 793, 794, 852, 870, 881, 888, 898, 911, 922, 925, 932, 933, 939-941, 954, 956, 963, 970, 976, 985, 986, 997, 1003, 1010, 1029, 1035, 1036, 1047, 1052, 1074, 1077-1082, 1088, 1089, 1093-1096, 1100, 1109, 1110, 1117-1122, 1138, 1149, 1166, 1168-1170, 1180, 1185, 1190, 1192, 1193, 1200, 1223, 1227, 1234, 1236 evil age, 740, 1078
Evil One, 254, 266, 282, 359, 794, 939-941, 1078-1081, 1095 evil powers, 127, 428, 525, 561, 1227 evil spirit, 359, 701, 786, 922, 940, 985, 1079, 1118-1122, 1193 exaltation, 3, 11, 14, 18-20, 35, 46, 49, 74, 95-102, 106, 108, 158, 162-164, 171-174, 176-181, 224, 228, 239, 252, 272-274, 276, 278, 281, 312, 325, 328, 330, 332, 335, 348, 359-363, 380, 382, 396, 413, 416, 422, 430, 440, 442, 459, 479, 488, 489, 492-494, 497, 510, 521, 523, 524, 538, 539, 567, 568, 584, 626, 630-633, 637, 638, 667-671, 687, 711, 724, 726, 730, 732, 742, 780, 782, 800, 837, 841, 845, 849, 864, 904, 905, 939, 958, 960, 961, 965, 998, 1012, 1016-1018, 1020, 1025, 1035, 1072, 1082, 1096, 1113, 1128, 1191, 1199, 1227, 1236, 1237, 1239 example of Christ, 261, 350, 523, 535, 656, 822, 896 exegesis, 30, 35, 36, 84, 126, 164, 183, 256, 296, 330,

345, 356, 376, 390, 399, 409, 410, 422, 430, 439, 444, 465, 473, 480-482, 484, 510, 511, 520, 535, 542, 554, 620, 665, 682, 732, 751, 752, 802, 805-807, 811, 812, 815, 817, 820, 834, 835, 837, 838, 841, 842, 850, 876, 894, 923, 955, 961, 967, 974, 1000, 1102, 1106, 1111, 1130, 1134, 1135, 1152, 1166, 1170, 1210

Exile, 1, 60, 85, 127, 188, 236, 246, 264, 288, 331, 413, 549, 609, 644, 651, 759, 778, 841, 898, 908, 919, 920, 956, 980, 1001, 1067, 1110, 1205

Exodus, 2, 21, 40, 45, 79, 103, 118, 128, 132, 133, 149, 174, 199, 200, 207, 211, 247, 270, 279, 280, 284, 295, 296, 349, 439, 445, 466, 473, 481, 538, 539, 606, 610, 614, 635, 641, 644, 673, 674, 731, 732, 758, 778, 780, 825, 828, 838, 844, 851, 903, 932, 964, 974, 989, 1014, 1030, 1031, 1091, 1092, 1094, 1095, 1099, 1218 exorcism, 122, 256, 258, 384, 416, 438, 631, 746, 922, 930, 1082, 1100, 1118

expiation, 275, 282, 539, 1074, 1129

5 Ezra, 70, 214, 363

6 Ezra, 70, 363

faith and works, 4, 39, 104, 138, 209, 336, 351, 352, 365, 367, 368, 383, 421, 422, 547, 551, 559, 624, 816, 822, 823, 837, 892, 951, 1003, 1040, 1044, 1056, 1058, 1073, 1222

faith of Jesus Christ, 157, 560 faithfulness, 1-4, 9, 11, 17, 19-22, 38-41, 50, 51, 74, 75, 79, 91, 100, 104, 105, 108, 117, 130, 131, 142, 153, 155, 172, 177, 208, 217, 218, 232, 244, 245, 249, 253-255, 264-266, 274, 282, 284, 291, 294, 299, 318-320, 327, 331, 336, 337, 339, 341, 348, 354, 358, 359, 362, 364-368, 370, 377, 397, 414, 415, 418, 419, 421, 425, 427, 430, 441, 443, 451, 452, 454, 455, 475, 479, 483, 493, 499-501, 510, 534, 538, 539, 551, 552, 554, 556, 557, 563, 564, 574, 584, 586, 602, 621, 632, 635-637, 652, 656, 661, 669, 672, 676, 699, 717-720, 739, 741, 765, 767, 769, 770, 773, 776, 780-782, 785, 786, 814-816, 835, 836, 839, 840, 850, 854, 860, 862, 868, 869, 881, 884, 891, 897, 908, 915, 920-922, 924, 925, 928, 936, 941, 949-953, 955, 956, 960, 968-970, 994, 1015-1018, 1035, 1038, 1043, 1045-1047, 1053, 1054, 1058, 1074, 1094, 1184, 1194, 1196, 1203, 1205, 1233, 1239

falling away, 73, 75, 522, 563

false apostles, 81, 82, 706

false prophet, false prophecy, 33, 51, 52, 81, 129, 133, 254, 306, 366, 370, 425, 460, 461, 477, 505, 507, 593, 597, 636, 658, 744-746, 775, 776, 851, 881, 970, 973, 975-978, 1010, 1037, 1079, 1119-1121, 1181, 1183, 1185, 1198-1200

false teachers, false teaching, 29, 31, 33, 34, 41-43, 49-51, 55, 73-76, 80, 106, 108, 155, 240, 305, 331, 335, 336, 339, 342, 348, 354, 357, 364, 369, 370, 383, 401, 405, 424, 425, 459, 475, 476, 508, 513, 516, 518, 525, 532, 593, 596, 611-615, 618, 619, 652, 654, 697, 705, 707, 715, 716, 744, 768, 769, 783, 822, 874, 876, 879, 880, 896, 908, 923-925, 946, 954, 961, 968, 973, 1013, 1019, 1040, 1045, 1046, 1079, 1080, 1083, 1109, 1200, 1201, 1220, 1224, 1226, 1231

family, 1, 2, 4, 6, 40, 93, 95, 118, 122, 124, 130, 146, 150, 195, 198, 207, 210, 217, 219, 220, 231, 233, 261, 288, 322, 354, 355, 370, 371, 374, 388, 392, 443, 446, 455-457, 466, 474, 476, 507-513, 517-519, 534, 597, 598, 617, 640, 649, 650, 696, 697, 706, 714, 722, 723, 733, 746, 760, 762, 769, 772, 792-794, 806, 811, 836, 849, 882, 919, 920, 932, 1001, 1004-1006, 1008, 1009, 1011, 1034, 1043, 1053, 1064, 1101, 1110, 1115-1117, 1121, 1142, 1158, 1161, 1181, 1207, 1208, 1212, 1214, 1216, 1217, 1221, 1228, 1234, 1235

famine, 40, 550, 643, 743, 757, 908, 972, 1022, 1085

fasting, 74, 120-122, 160, 297, 300, 351, 354, 358, 361, 370, 374, 380, 441, 443, 465, 469, 476, 496, 502, 513, 583, 649, 651, 661, 699, 734, 786, 828, 857, 869, 947, 961, 1038, 1071, 1104, 1108, 1141, 1197, 1229

fate, 41, 59, 66, 69, 127, 129, 186, 214, 255, 278, 320, 356, 357, 369, 374, 459, 461, 468, 525, 530, 538, 564, 590, 610, 618, 698, 701, 702, 752, 781, 790, 818, 836, 837, 840, 841, 874, 902, 920, 935, 972, 989, 1006, 1007, 1009-1011, 1034, 1047, 1085, 1119, 1121, 1136, 1183, 1240

Father (God), 1, 5, 6, 19, 21, 37, 43, 53, 74, 86, 88, 89, 99, 100, 113, 120-122, 131, 144, 153-157, 161, 163-165, 173, 174, 176, 177, 179-183, 192, 203, 209, 210, 214, 239, 251, 252, 255, 258, 259, 270, 273, 277, 282, 284, 293, 322, 333, 362, 368, 390, 397, 401, 402, 404, 405, 418, 419, 426, 428, 430, 431, 480, 486, 487, 492, 493, 495, 498, 499, 525, 539, 557, 567, 570-573, 582, 584, 589, 594, 616, 629-631, 634, 639, 665, 666, 671, 673, 675-677, 687, 689-692, 694-696, 705, 706, 723, 731, 733, 734, 745, 779, 786, 794, 795, 805, 822, 833, 843, 845, 850, 851, 854, 864, 878, 881, 899, 903, 905, 920, 931, 939, 940, 942, 944-946, 958-960, 961, 964, 965, 969, 1004, 1018, 1023, 1026, 1046, 1055, 1074, 1076, 1083, 1091, 1092, 1097, 1110, 1112-1114, 1118, 1119, 1122, 1156, 1223, 1224, 1230, 1231, 1237

fear, 30, 39, 43, 54, 74, 76, 109, 115, 207, 231, 241, 278, 280, 322, 325, 328, 356-358, 364, 370-372, 383, 419, 421, 426, 431, 449, 460, 502, 532, 550, 551, 590, 668, 673-675, 697, 699, 703, 714, 734, 749, 778, 787, 795, 810, 815, 832, 839, 917, 920, 922, 925, 928, 940, 990, 1027, 1033-1035, 1038, 1039, 1047, 1048, 1080, 1092, 1109, 1120, 1121, 1128, 1183, 1198, 1212, 1231, 1239, 1240

feasts, 356, 528, 587, 606, 689, 715, 917, 989, 994, 1079, 1149, 1160

Felix, 435, 559, 859, 884, 894, 1056, 1060, 1099

fellowship, 18, 29, 32, 44, 46, 114, 147, 155, 161, 176, 186, 199, 245, 271, 319, 356, 373, 374, 376-379, 386, 445, 447, 502-505, 508, 530, 587, 589, 590, 594, 595, 640, 648, 649, 657, 687, 691, 693-696, 704, 726, 746, 776, 868, 897, 899, 942-944, 946-948, 959, 984, 990, 993-996, 1013, 1017, 1036, 1038, 1039, 1046, 1081, 1104, 1105, 1110, 1156, 1162, 1163, 1217, 1219, 1220, 1230

feminist hermeneutics, 473, 484

festivals, 228, 297, 529, 589, 633, 888, 905, 906, 910, 1007, 1008, 1028, 1139

final judgment, 30, 56, 90, 103, 104, 255, 264-266, 332, 335, 336, 343, 348, 354, 564, 608, 621, 622, 624, 636, 749, 770, 836, 858, 952, 1018, 1095, 1097 finances, 112, 234, 761, 1059

fire, 50, 52, 83, 113, 150, 184, 187, 194, 253, 254, 302, 322, 328, 419, 427, 428, 439, 441, 449, 459-461, 486, 492, 563, 576, 624, 636, 656, 671, 677, 703, 709, 776, 779, 810, 818, 823, 840, 903, 908, 919, 926, 988, 989, 1033, 1035, 1036, 1040, 1062, 1065, 1079, 1097, 1170, 1177, 1180, 1183, 1189, 1192

firstfruits, 109, 253, 492, 673, 745, 827, 906, 1002

First Jewish Revolt, 387, 585

firstborn, 39, 42, 45, 52, 129, 177, 182, 263, 337, 563, 1017, 1079, 1116, 1241

flesh, 5, 47, 51, 80, 88, 101, 113, 122, 124, 125, 153, 155, 157, 158, 163, 176, 199, 208, 215, 218, 223, 239, 254, 257, 259, 261, 276, 281, 285, 306-308, 320, 351, 352, 366, 373-376, 402, 491, 492, 500, 540, 566, 574, 575, 591, 615, 657, 673, 674, 676, 691, 692, 699, 703, 706, 714, 715, 737, 769, 777, 788, 833, 838, 849, 886, 888, 893, 904, 919, 933, 949, 958-960, 973, 985-987, 991, 1016-1020, 1024, 1046, 1079, 1083, 1089, 1098, 1119, 1121, 1156, 1163, 1169, 1170, 1184, 1191, 1212-1214, 1217, 1230, 1234

flesh and blood, 153, 261, 308, 373, 375, 692, 788, 849 flock, 73, 156, 158, 183, 199, 201, 224, 270, 376, 424, 642, 677, 678, 743, 744, 754, 818, 828, 836, 877, 880, 882, 915, 963, 973, 1023, 1090-1093, 1199, 1220, 1235 food, 25, 26, 29-31, 41, 54,

115, 117, 148, 161, 162, 168, 203, 206, 226, 227, 240, 293, 300, 305, 376, 377, 379, 383, 384, 418, 433, 438, 445, 462, 502, 529, 530, 540, 580, 583, 587, 645, 648, 649, 686-693, 716, 728, 736-738, 745, 753, 761, 828, 881, 882, 888, 930, 981, 991, 994, 996, 1007, 1065, 1087, 1099, 1104, 1110, 1111, 1115, 1117, 1123, 1149, 1156, 1159, 1160, 1228 food laws, 29, 31, 54, 162, 168, 227, 240, 376, 377, 433, 530, 587, 645, 648, 649, 693, 728, 828, 888, 996, 1104, 1110, 1156 food offered to idols, 26, 377, 379, 383, 530, 994, 1149 fool, 229, 557, 816, 839 foolishness, 59, 367, 549, 555-559, 601, 715, 1071, 1193, 1201, 1239, 1240 forbearance, 424, 425, 430, 866, 1073, 1074, 1087
foreknowledge, 5, 80, 104, 317-320, 415, 744, 840, 975
forgiveness, 5, 11, 20, 21, 27, 42, 89, 98, 104, 113-116, 120-122, 124, 161, 171, 173, 236, 246, 247, 260, 261, 267, 269, 271, 273-286, 306, 333, 356, 358, 367, 376, 378-382, 384, 396, 419, 456, 469-471, 486, 572, 574, 589, 603, 622-624, 630, 631, 646, 647, 677, 692, 696, 706, 714, 718, 733-736, 766, 786, 795, 823, 830, 832, 886, 935, 939, 940, 942, 945, 969, 971, 992, 1003, 1012, 1013, 1015, 1038, 1039, 1041, 1054, 1055, 1058, 1069, 1070, 1075, 1080, 1082, 1096-1098, 1143, 1148, 1170, 1193, 1204, 1228, 1229, 1233
form criticism, 565, 748, 800, 981 fornication, 26, 112, 377, 564, 698, 716, 994, 1088-1090, 1163, 1193, 1219 freedom, 19, 30, 54, 71, 88, 116, 136, 165, 230, 231, 278, 311, 321, 352, 356, 358, 382-384, 473, 523, 529, 547, 557, 655, 664, 693, 736, 789, 862, 878, 909, 925, 951, 968, 969, 1001, 1060, 1079, 1090, 1099-1101, 1143, 1160, 1213, 1221, 1227 fruit, 5, 36, 160, 209, 277, 319, 421, 522, 541, 599, 689, 795, 796, 895, 899, 1013, 1015, 1036, 1048, 1071, 1087, 1131, 1185, 1203 fruit of the Spirit, 1121, 1191, 1202 fulfillment, 2, 3, 5, 19, 35, 37-39, 63, 84, 98, 113, 123, 153, 160, 161, 167, 171, 187, 195, 210, 215, 241, 244, 247, 251, 253, 270, 272, 331-334, 336-338, 342, 354, 356, 383, 384, 387, 415, 431, 439, 441, 454, 464, 479-481, 487, 489, 493, 494, 500, 517, 524, 525, 536, 537, 539, 541, 543, 567, 581, 585, 586, 626, 627, 630-632, 637, 647, 648, 663, 679, 685, 719, 727, 728, 738, 751, 753, 759, 767, 770, 779, 793, 799, 824-826, 837, 838, 857-860, 862, 864, 866, 872, 873, 896, 903-906, 944, 962, 966-970, 1008, 1017, 1022, 1031, 1036, 1047, 1048, 1069-1071, 1073, 1075, 1076, 1113, 1143, 1156, 1182, 1183, 1188, 1194, 1221 fullness, 14, 19, 20, 52, 183, 331, 589, 602, 637, 686, 890, 1017, 1070, 1120, 1167, 1201, 1202, 1226 funeral, 325, 329, 841, 988, 1043
Gaius, 28, 80, 83, 186, 289, 296, 324, 456, 505, 652, 769, 897, 932, 937, 1028, 1047
Galatia, 79, 146, 227, 475, 496, 680, 755, 757, 758, 764, 765, 892, 916, 1059, 1195
Galilean Christianity, 151, 385-388, 728, 902
Galilee, 94, 185, 186, 385-388, 392, 546, 570, 599, 600, 608, 611, 617, 643, 728, 752, 756, 775, 894, 900, 902, 904, 916, 922, 931, 990, 992, 1006, 1061, 1076, 1077, 1146, 1150
Gallio, 148, 193, 449, 1060
Gamaliel, 185, 186, 193, 608, 1161 genealogy, 208, 209, 315, 386, 707, 730, 731, 789, 843, 964, 966, 1103, 1172-1173 general resurrection, 636, 1074
genre, 7, 8, 12, 17, 23-24, 56-63, 66-72, 82, 84, 112, 133, 234, 245, 295, 296, 340, 347, 408, 409, 417, 431, 443, 449, 450, 452, 469, 475, 478, 499, 539-541, 551, 555, 583, 612, 651-653, 664, 766, 802, 808, 810, 818, 842, 854, 863, 879, 923, 924, 935, 936, 951, 978-980, 995, 997, 1019, 1024, 1025, 1037, 1042, 1043, 1086, 1132, 1134, 1159, 1184, 1197, 1198, 1214, 1225, 1229, 1232
Gentile Christianity, 83, 85, 136, 145, 468, 579, 580, 587, 712, 1109
Gentile mission, 13, 18, 23, 78, 79, 145, 147, 160, 162, 169, 206, 207, 229, 244, 245, 299, 359, 387-392, 467, 479, 546, 547, 725, 753, 762, 764, 767, 792, 859, 875, 956, 977, 996, 1076, 1189, 1195 geonim, 394, 608 gift of knowledge, 490 gift of the Spirit, 19-21, 119, 124, 281, 489, 492-494, 626, 766, 767, 971 gift of tongues, 1178 glorification, 20, 98, 398, 399, 643, 890, 1181, 1196 glorify, 19, 96-98, 101, 153, 174, 178, 362, 369, 385, 392, 394, 395, 414, 416, 498, 561, 582, 609, 708, 751, 771, 817, 896, 917, 920, 943, 989, 1039, 1136, 1196, 1197 glory, 45, 47, 79, 95, 98-102, 131, 159, 163, 165, 175, 176, 183, 196, 202, 268, 275, 277, 279, 281, 282, 306, 309, 312, 317, 319, 320, 336, 337, 343, 349, 350, 361-363, 394-400, 420, 423, 424, 428, 442, 455, 458, 477, 481, 498, 499, 501, 513, 524, 525, 567, 570, 572, 597, 601, 602, 621, 623, 637, 638, 656, 659, 660, 663, 665, 671, 690, 692, 695, 744, 777, 782, 785, 810, 812, 816-818, 845, 853, 856, 865, 867, 870, 886, 891, 915, 916, 920, 921, 937-941, 956, 957, 967, 970, 1000, 1007, 1014, 1017, 1019-1023, 1025, 1039-1041, 1045, 1055, 1076, 1090, 1137, 1140, 1156, 1202, 1205, 1227, 1232, 1234-1236 glossolalia, 116, 400, 746, 905, 946, 1177-1179 gnosis, 33, 34, 36, 37, 55, 69, 127, 149, 155, 190, 192, 193, 215, 233, 249, 255, 308, 309, 328, 400, 401, 403, 406, 411, 412, 469, 592, 640, 659, 701, 704, 710, 712, 785, 898, 899, 1011, 1025, 1095, 1150, 1176, 1187, 1190
Gnostics, Gnosticism, 25-33, 36, 37, 55, 69-72, 77, 82, 85, 86, 89, 127, 134, 135, 140, 146, 149, 155, 165, 169, 183, 190, 192-194, 203, 214, 215, 236-238, 255, 259, 261, 276, 284, 285, 286, 306, 308, 309, 316, 328, 351, 353, 375, 400-412, 469, 482, 523, 525, 526, 528, 529, 531, 546, 576, 578, 582, 584, 590-592, 610, 611, 615, 617, 626, 638, 639, 640, 657, 659, 665-667, 704, 706, 707, 709, 716, 722, 730, 777, 784, 785, 798, 803, 822, 862, 866, 898-900, 912, 914, 925, 928, 931, 934, 956, 959, 961, 981, 982, 987, 1011, 1016, 1018-1020, 1025, 1036, 1077, 1078, 1089, 1095, 1106, 1112, 1116, 1122, 1146, 1148-1150, 1152, 1176, 1187, 1190, 1212, 1219, 1232
God fearers, 116, 146
God's right hand, 69, 95-101, 162, 335, 360-362, 430, 440, 459, 671, 958, 1016, 1017, 1123
God's will, 62, 173, 231, 276, 350, 363, 368, 442, 487, 549, 558, 559, 644, 663, 695, 716, 737, 766, 785, 791, 824, 950, 958, 962, 985, 986, 1038, 1195, 1223 gods, 147, 165, 192, 298, 304, 355, 358, 413, 414, 416, 430, 436, 501, 502, 528, 529, 602, 668, 701, 734, 761, 772, 773, 775, 785, 886, 910, 911, 919, 920, 961, 990, 994, 1007-1009, 1014, 1029, 1033, 1063, 1082, 1102, 1108, 1126, 1140, 1147, 1148, 1158, 1159, 1196, 1199, 1207 goodness of God, 425
Gospel of Peter, 135, 183, 306-308, 433, 679, 683, 927-929, 977, 979, 981, 983, 1005, 1019, 1234
Gospel of Thomas, 181, 183, 236, 407, 408, 410, 411, 433, 576, 584, 626, 629, 638, 722, 764, 981, 987, 1005, 1019, 1089, 1175-1177, 1200, 1213
Gospels, 7, 13, 15, 16, 22, 35, 68, 69, 86, 87, 91, 113, 119, 122, 124, 134-137, 139, 143, 152, 161, 165, 173, 180, 187, 188, 191, 194, 197, 206, 217, 218, 227, 235, 236, 256, 259, 265, 278, 302, 306, 314, 316, 317, 320, 331-334, 347, 353, 357, 378, 380, 382, 384-388, 392, 408-412, 433, 465, 467-469, 477, 479-481, 502, 503, 535, 536, 540-543, 554-556, 565, 566, 568-572, 574-579, 581, 608, 611, 621, 626, 629, 635, 638, 644, 657, 663, 665, 667, 668, 674, 686, 692, 700,

707, 708, 711, 712, 722, 723, 746, 749, 752, 759, 762, 770, 771, 792, 797, 801-803, 808, 823, 834, 856, 857, 861, 877, 904, 913, 914, 921, 922, 927-929, 937, 948, 952, 968, 970, 977, 981, 996, 1001, 1002, 1006, 1020-1022, 1033, 1036, 1051, 1075, 1088-1090, 1117, 1143, 1144, 1161-1165, 1172, 1173, 1175-1177, 1181, 1199, 1200, 1202, 1229
gossip, 1135, 1221
government, 80, 82, 89, 106, 110, 129, 204, 219, 221, 222, 224, 230, 232, 233, 267, 291, 301, 306, 311, 312, 317, 323, 328, 350, 352, 366, 461, 473, 517, 533, 656, 661, 739, 746, 760, 775, 882, 891, 892, 908, 912, 930, 934, 950, 961, 963, 1009, 1059, 1062, 1063, 1067, 1087, 1093, 1106, 1110, 1135, 1193, 1233 governor, 185, 187, 230, 288, 289, 321, 512, 526, 599, 752, 909, 910, 1099
grace, 5, 45, 74, 89, 91, 107, 116, 120-122, 124, 145, 155, 161, 179, 202, 228, 244, 246, 247, 258, 262, 275, 278, 280, 285, 287, 311, 313, 318, 321, 365, 367, 370, 371, 379, 382, 383, 398, 417, 424, 425, 429-435, 447, 450, 498, 499, 520, 537, 538, 559, 584, 602, 603, 618, 621, 623, 647, 649-651, 660, 663, 666, 673, 688-690, 699, 716, 733-736, 775, 776, 797, 802, 822, 823, 828, 833, 837, 839, 845, 861, 867, 876, 888, 890, 896, 915, 918, 934, 938, 941, 944, 950, 953, 970, 994, 1003, 1013, 1021, 1039-1041, 1055, 1058, 1071, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1080, 1083, 1086, 1110, 1136, 1185, 1186, 1209, 1219, 1224, 1230, 1236, 1239
Greece, 71, 144, 147, 148, 194, 290, 391, 528, 753, 755, 764, 766, 772, 1006, 1007, 1011, 1043, 1215, 1218
Greeks, 34, 78, 126, 146, 147, 169, 185, 250, 289, 290, 295, 304, 320, 344, 386, 439, 475, 502, 580, 588, 611, 639, 704, 716, 721, 777, 795, 956, 961, 996, 1002, 1007, 1010, 1069, 1085, 1098, 1099, 1108, 1144, 1146, 1218 guests, 4, 209, 292, 435, 501, 502, 504, 506, 716, 792, 990, 1208 guilt, 112, 124, 241-243, 267, 270, 272-274, 277, 278, 281, 282, 285, 466, 491, 528, 543, 645, 714, 734, 909, 920, 991, 1043, 1053, 1087, 1123, 1126
Haggadah, 606, 732, 815, 1093
Halakah, 162, 226, 377, 412, 553, 606, 608, 815, 1093
hallelujah, 436, 524, 660, 662
hardness, of heart 42, 972, 1014
Hasmoneans, 290, 599, 1161
hatred, 42, 56, 90, 188, 230, 253, 282, 369, 377, 426, 592, 598, 600, 773, 819, 837, 912, 1035, 1047, 1080, 1123, 1184, 1193, 1135
Haustafel, 349-351, 436, 513, 520, 889, 890, 1117, 1158, 1206, 1212 head, 37, 39, 49, 52, 120, 122, 128, 181, 192, 292, 293, 308, 393, 426, 504, 505, 508, 512, 513, 518, 573, 647, 688, 714, 730, 853, 888, 908, 1005, 1008, 1020, 1021, 1033, 1078, 1092, 1105, 1127, 1206, 1208, 1210, 1227, 1232, 1236 healing, 1, 9, 20, 24, 48, 49, 52, 77, 78, 107, 115, 153, 164, 176, 209, 256, 322, 333, 356, 358, 368, 380, 381, 398, 416, 436-439, 491, 494, 503, 508, 513, 521, 533, 556, 559, 602, 631-633, 671, 689, 702, 746-752, 762, 786, 832, 930, 939, 942, 945, 991, 1006, 1009, 1010, 1013, 1034, 1073, 1076, 1095, 1117, 1118, 1136, 1137, 1140, 1144, 1148, 1152, 1181, 1206, 1220, 1228 heart, 5, 42, 43, 58, 64, 66, 88, 89, 98, 113, 115, 123, 154, 163, 228, 239-242, 246, 247, 259, 261-263, 274, 277, 311, 320, 363, 379, 415, 418, 433, 439, 449, 471, 480, 490, 500, 508, 525, 540, 568, 591, 596, 624, 629, 630, 645, 656, 659, 676, 677, 700, 702, 715, 736, 793-795, 797, 814, 816, 828, 879, 918, 972, 985, 986, 988, 1014, 1063, 1069, 1071, 1079, 1080, 1105, 1155, 1160, 1163-1165, 1185, 1192, 1193 heaven, 33, 36, 42, 44, 45, 47, 48, 56, 61-63, 65, 66, 68-70, 74, 95-101, 108, 112, 113, 119, 121, 123, 127, 128, 130-132, 153, 155, 156, 162-164, 169, 172, 196, 198, 201, 203, 209, 223, 230, 251-255, 258, 259, 274-276, 284, 325, 332, 343, 347, 352, 360, 362, 363, 396, 397, 400, 404, 413, 414, 418, 427, 431, 434, 435, 439-443, 459, 460, 477, 492, 494, 502, 505, 509, 532, 543, 549, 557, 563, 564, 568, 570, 572, 591, 604, 610, 611, 625, 627, 630, 632, 634-638, 643, 644, 655, 656, 658, 666, 667, 669, 674, 677, 733, 739, 740, 756, 768, 776, 777, 779, 780, 796, 811, 817, 823, 841, 843, 851, 853, 854, 866, 870, 876, 898, 899, 903, 918, 921, 922, 940, 955-959, 969, 993, 997, 1002, 1006, 1016-1018, 1020, 1021, 1028, 1030, 1031, 1033, 1037, 1040, 1052, 1082, 1094, 1095, 1097, 1105, 1112, 1113, 1118, 1154-1156, 1166, 1176, 1181, 1183, 1185, 1188, 1224, 1227, 1231, 1234, 1235, 1240 heavenly ascent, 63, 443, 704 heavenly beings, 44, 46, 108, 141, 215, 427, 428, 442, 443, 457, 731, 1081, 1112, 1122 heavenly Jerusalem, 36, 57, 80, 108, 198, 277, 563-565, 633, 862, 1016, 1126, 1127, 1209, 1210 heavenly places, 44, 741, 1227
Hebrew, 5, 32, 33, 35, 39, 60, 67, 114, 128, 132, 138, 152, 163, 166, 167, 186, 196, 204, 246, 252, 286, 313, 315, 316, 318, 335, 346, 347, 374, 382, 387, 401, 402, 406, 439, 440, 445, 462-467, 478, 481, 485, 487, 489, 490, 500, 502, 508, 509, 534, 543, 584, 585, 606, 609, 611, 614, 622, 643, 661-663, 676, 729, 732, 733, 736, 759, 782, 814, 815, 818, 820, 828, 830, 834-836, 838, 840, 842, 851, 852, 854, 894, 909, 932, 953, 971, 974, 980, 988, 990, 991, 997, 1002, 1004, 1032, 1034, 1077, 1082, 1091, 1099, 1110, 1111, 1117, 1118, 1125-1128, 1152, 1160, 1169, 1184, 1195, 1196, 1201, 1207, 1209, 1210, 1217, 1232 heir, 108, 247, 252, 318, 334, 479, 621, 969 hell, 6, 67, 69, 164, 177, 279, 347, 459-462, 610, 623, 625, 657, 777, 988, 1034, 1081, 1092, 1119, 1234, 1241
Hellenistic Christianity, 444, 462, 463, 468, 520, 587, 880, 956, 994, 1148
Hellenistic Judaism, 2, 68, 85, 102, 230, 232, 287, 403, 412, 440, 444, 445, 465, 515, 582, 943, 957, 1012, 1051, 1089, 1148, 1150, 1159
Hellenists, 23, 85, 149, 161, 462-465, 467, 468, 580, 587, 687, 931, 956, 1076, 1077, 1094, 1104, 1125 heresy, 25, 30, 33, 52, 101, 137, 147, 165, 167, 176, 183, 190, 234, 237, 257, 302, 304, 307, 312, 313, 315, 316, 402, 403, 412, 469, 476, 501, 533, 580, 586, 587, 595, 615, 619, 620, 705, 707, 708, 711, 716, 866, 1019, 1052, 1079, 1083, 1146, 1150, 1199, 1200, 1220, 1237, 1238
hermeneutics, 18, 56, 126, 237, 249, 287, 306, 340, 413, 416, 458, 471-474, 477-480, 482-484, 511, 524, 527, 535, 541, 620, 654, 678, 712, 791, 792, 798, 802, 804, 805, 808, 809, 811, 812, 815, 820, 824, 825, 840, 841, 842, 844, 850, 856, 874, 923, 938, 955, 976, 1001, 1042, 1049, 1103, 1111, 1132, 1134
Hermes, 414, 416, 701, 751, 752, 938, 1008, 1011, 1148
Hermogenes, 8, 142
Herods, 45, 50, 53, 77, 185, 186, 193, 273, 325, 467, 510, 599, 718, 747, 749, 750, 757, 762, 764, 894, 907, 928, 932, 1008, 1060, 1061, 1076, 1161
Herodians, 1161, 1221
Hierapolis, 142, 146, 189-191, 575, 758, 765, 916, 931, 1219
high priest, 3, 35, 74, 79, 98-100, 107, 108, 121, 154, 156, 172, 187, 198, 231, 248, 261, 274-278, 317, 319, 359, 361, 363, 417-419, 431, 440, 443, 452, 455, 457, 467, 485, 498, 509, 543, 547, 567, 608, 632, 633, 655, 731, 734, 833, 844, 845, 849, 850, 861, 878, 944, 958, 963, 964, 966, 998, 999, 1016, 1022, 1070, 1072, 1073, 1096, 1110, 1123, 1156, 1160, 1161, 1163, 1165, 1167, 1185, 1191, 1236
Hillel, 186, 607, 608, 844, 990, 1161, 1162
Hippolytus, 52, 104, 113, 118-124, 164, 259, 303, 307, 314, 375, 404, 406, 407, 456, 584, 585, 590,

690, 710, 732, 775, 947, 1037, 1128, 1150, 1175, 1224 historical Jesus, 76, 79, 357, 675, 708, 710-712, 742, 797, 799, 800, 802, 803, 812, 872, 1175, 1177 history of religions, 625, 792, 797-799, 807, 1111, 1130 holiness, 88, 201, 297, 349, 350, 352, 356, 389, 419, 422-425, 430, 441, 442, 446, 457, 478, 485-488, 490, 498, 507, 510, 541, 560, 606, 634, 642, 662, 663, 771, 817, 822, 838, 895, 941, 950, 988, 989, 996, 1013, 1014, 1038, 1044, 1050, 1055, 1090, 1105, 1107, 1118, 1121, 1122, 1141, 1193, 1195 holy city, 108, 112, 151, 218, 229, 457, 467, 489, 537, 561-565, 583, 585, 587, 636, 643, 854, 1037, 1165, 1227, 1242 holy day, 587, 685
Holy Spirit, 11, 13, 14, 17-19, 21, 37, 42, 44, 47, 49, 75, 76, 78, 79, 88, 97, 101, 105-107, 113-117, 120-124, 128, 144-146, 161, 162, 164, 165, 174, 181, 195, 196, 207, 220, 222, 224, 225, 227, 243, 244, 247, 251, 258-260, 272, 303, 317, 330-334, 342, 343, 346, 348, 357, 360, 376, 381, 390, 391, 417, 420, 430, 437, 465, 470, 479, 482, 488-499, 508, 520, 536, 562, 589, 593, 598, 603, 626, 630-632, 634, 636, 637, 639, 647, 659, 669, 722, 741-743, 746, 749, 750, 757, 761, 767, 768, 777, 789, 791, 793, 795, 811, 825, 826, 828, 830, 842, 854, 859, 878, 884, 902-904, 906, 915, 930, 931, 938-942, 944, 946, 948, 950, 951, 953, 960, 968, 970-973, 975-978, 985, 990, 994, 995, 997, 1020, 1021, 1022, 1026, 1051, 1071, 1072, 1076, 1079, 1094, 1095, 1117, 1119-1122, 1125, 1155, 1156, 1166, 1174, 1177-1179, 1185, 1193, 1194, 1198, 1199, 1202, 1204, 1205, 1207, 1218, 1227, 1237, 1239
homily, 72, 81, 84, 104, 119, 124, 180, 191, 237, 256, 285, 302-304, 315, 367, 450-454, 456, 469, 475, 499, 547, 582, 584, 651, 653, 692, 710, 731-733, 764, 825, 845, 861, 876, 905, 924, 975, 1014, 1042, 1043, 1092, 1213, 1230, 1241 homosexuality, 323, 499, 710, 711, 1089, 1090 honor, 14, 28, 48, 49, 53, 68, 82, 95, 98-100, 109, 159, 167, 170, 174, 175, 184, 201, 225, 231, 267, 300, 324, 343, 344, 350, 359, 361-363, 370-372, 397, 412, 428, 438, 442, 458, 468, 501, 504, 506, 518, 529, 535, 540, 570, 608, 616, 620, 649, 678, 695, 697, 714, 721, 744, 745, 751, 782, 785, 799, 817, 826, 873, 874, 893, 917, 919, 920, 952, 970, 984, 990, 994, 1008, 1009, 1011, 1039, 1040, 1049, 1054, 1071, 1076, 1082, 1098-1101, 1104-1106, 1122, 1141, 1158, 1164, 1170, 1196, 1200, 1212 hope, 10, 14, 21, 51 59, 61, 64, 74, 88, 90, 100, 102, 111, 117, 148, 163, 165, 168, 175, 176, 185, 199, 207, 211, 213, 216, 229, 232, 248, 252, 265, 276, 279, 285, 310, 311, 327, 330-332, 334, 335, 337, 343, 345, 354, 358, 360-363, 365, 367, 368, 370, 375, 389, 392, 396, 397, 399, 411, 413, 419, 439, 441, 442, 445, 447, 451, 453, 480, 482, 489, 496, 499-501, 515, 517, 525, 536, 537, 550, 557, 561, 564, 565, 604, 609, 610, 621-623, 651, 656, 662, 663, 671, 699, 725, 741, 751, 768, 775-777, 793, 795, 823-826, 839, 849, 856, 858-860, 862-866, 868, 871, 873-875, 879, 880, 888, 889, 917, 920, 925, 926, 933, 935, 952-954, 969, 970, 992, 1003, 1004, 1009, 1016, 1017, 1020, 1025, 1038, 1039, 1041, 1045, 1058, 1073, 1080, 1084, 1100, 1107, 1109, 1115, 1127, 1135, 1137-1140, 1166, 1182, 1192, 1210, 1223, 1226, 1227, 1234, 1236 hospitality, 4, 6, 28, 41, 80, 81, 93, 109, 245, 301, 350-352, 356, 369, 373. 374, 377, 378, 424, 435. 444, 501-508, 513, 533, 553, 595, 743-745, 759, 769, 816, 829, 895, 918. 931, 990, 1033, 1046, 1047, 1051-1053, 1057, 1058, 1062, 1066, 1067, 1071, 1087, 1089, 1104, 1111, 1129, 1142, 1143, 1156, 1206, 1216-1220, 1222 house churches, 28, 92, 94, 95, 147, 148, 150, 197, 200, 201, 221-223, 222-226, 234, 355, 356, 358, 376, 443, 444, 446, 447, 449, 453, 476, 505, 507, 508, 512, 514, 596, 696, 755, 761, 764, 769, 911, 1066, 1067, 1100-1102, 1206, 1213, 1216, 1217, 1219, 1220 house of God, 507-511 household, 4, 14, 34, 38, 41, 79, 93, 95, 116, 123, 148, 201, 219, 220, 230, 233, 243, 244, 349, 352, 354, 356, 357, 360, 370, 371, 373, 374, 378, 436, 445, 447, 476, 478, 479, 493, 494, 503-509, 511-520, 523, 534, 628, 652, 696, 714, 760, 768, 791, 792, 806, 879, 880, 882, 889, 918-920, 922, 952, 990, 992, 1011, 1038, 1045, 1060, 1064, 1092, 1099-1102, 1105-1108, 1110, 1115-1117, 1124, 1136, 1145, 1158, 1159, 1170, 1181, 1191, 1194, 1195, 1202, 1206-1209, 1211-1215, 1220 household codes, 4, 201, 349, 352, 371, 436, 478, 479, 511, 513-519, 628, 652, 768, 806, 882, 889, 918, 922, 952, 1092, 1100, 1101, 1106, 1107, 1110, 1117, 1136, 1158, 1159, 1181, 1191, 1194, 1202, 1206-1209, 1211-1214
household of God, 34, 507, 513, 880, 1106, 1107, 1215 humility, 18, 20, 39, 43, 107, 262, 269, 278, 285, 361, 372, 421, 424, 481, 513, 518, 520, 534, 535, 735, 781, 830, 837, 880, 920, 961-963, 1014, 1051, 1081, 1191, 1194, 1211-1213 husbands, 4, 350, 356, 371, 378, 435, 504, 514, 517, 518, 534, 538, 639, 640, 699, 714, 715, 730, 743, 762, 764, 765, 768, 772, 896, 918, 946, 1100, 1107, 1108, 1117, 1136, 1158, 1186, 1207-1209, 1211, 1213, 1217, 1218, 1221
Hymenaeus, 31, 305
hymns, 69, 71, 72, 99, 102, 118, 124, 163, 181, 279, 348, 397-399, 406, 407, 409, 414, 417, 428, 478, 518, 520-527, 566, 627, 628, 634, 659-661, 664, 684, 691, 733, 783, 823, 836, 864, 888, 943, 947, 948, 952, 957, 958, 961, 964, 997, 1016, 1027, 1047, 1104, 1115, 1126, 1151, 1152, 1201, 1202, 1224-1228, 1230-1238
Iconium, 137, 222, 273, 758, 1144 idols, 26, 148, 162, 232, 354, 360, 377, 379, 383, 414, 417, 441, 528-530. 627, 634, 648, 693, 716, 778, 781, 990, 994, 1012, 1069, 1128, 1149, 1163, 1185, 1219 idolatry, 26, 40, 42, 43, 70, 126, 133, 167, 168, 232, 349, 360, 377, 379, 389, 441, 528-530, 628. 636, 642, 649, 698, 703, 704, 762, 770, 819, 836, 886, 888, 917, 988, 990, 994, 995, 1011, 1012, 1048, 1078, 1079, 1088, 1119, 1122, 1126, 1147, 1183, 1192, 1194, 1196, 1210, 1217, 1229
Ignatius of Antioch. 25, 32, 34, 55, 102, 120, 169, 204, 263, 462, 520, 525, 530, 533, 657, 667, 676, 678, 685, 686, 691, 693, 721, 777, 795, 882, 938, 1048, 1050, 1100, 1109, 1111, 1114, 1153, 1230 illness, 49, 381, 382, 436-438, 533, 751, 945, 1072, 1095, 1140
Illyricum, 755, 757
image of Christ, 177, 284, 794, 869 image of God, 372, 415, 422, 635, 990, 1091 imitate, imitation, 107, 108, 174, 273, 280, 281, 284, 285, 294, 304, 326, 352, 376, 422, 424, 532-535, 541, 551, 691, 710, 913, 914, 937, 962, 1013, 1049, 1101, 1140, 1209, 1232 imitation of Christ, 533-535, 914 immortality, 49, 70, 102, 181, 341-343, 347, 367, 376, 402, 461, 462, 535, 624, 656-658, 690, 691, 703, 721, 730, 731, 775-777, 986, 987, 1003, 1019, 1020, 1025, 1130, 1189, 1231 imperial cult, 288, 324, 325, 353, 483, 530, 535, 634, 716, 908, 1006, 1008, 1009, 1011, 1028, 1029, 1196, 1209, 1211
impurity, 233, 376, 379, 488, 535, 637, 888, 988, 989, 995, 996, 1014, 1095, 1105, 1160, 1163, 1172, 1188, 1193, 1194 in Christ, 4-6, 18, 21, 37, 38, 42, 115-118, 123, 155, 159, 162, 168, 178, 179, 183, 195, 202, 203, 211, 212, 216, 217, 220, 223, 242, 259, 273, 280, 285, 318, 321, 328, 332, 341, 342, 351, 364, 365, 367, 373, 380, 431-434, 438, 442, 454, 476, 488, 498-500, 503, 508, 513, 517, 518, 521, 526, 527, 543. 555,

579, 584, 585, 594, 597, 619, 623, 626, 637, 642, 684, 687, 694, 697, 733, 735, 738, 776, 778, 792, 793, 825, 867, 873, 874, 878, 880, 899, 920, 933, 934, 950, 951, 971, 1017, 1018, 1022, 1035, 1038, 1046, 1056, 1057, 1071, 1097, 1122, 1124, 1140, 1155, 1166, 1167, 1180, 1204, 1226, 1231, 1236, 1237 in God, 2, 38, 40, 41, 64, 122, 164, 178, 238, 239, 259, 327, 364-366, 368, 370, 399, 421, 495, 499, 500, 552, 557, 558, 592, 593, 600-602, 696, 736, 793, 795, 879, 940, 945, 994, 1001, 1013, 1021, 1038, 1039, 1110, 1167, 1169, 1202 Incarnation, 52, 55, 69, 100, 101, 155, 181, 182, 259, 261-263, 274, 281, 283, 285, 307, 361, 362, 375, 399, 478, 482, 532, 536, 567, 586, 587, 590-592, 594, 637, 639, 665, 667, 677, 691, 707, 777, 784, 803, 845, 849, 864, 933, 939, 954, 958-961, 987, 1023, 1074, 1112-1115, 1152, 1224, 1236 incest, 322, 712, 911 inheritance, 5, 6, 206, 215, 249, 262, 280, 281, 335, 339, 359, 439, 440, 549, 556, 642, 822, 823, 888, 921, 969, 988, 995, 1017, 1022, 1039, 1040, 1096, 1105, 1155, 1198, 1209 injustice, 278, 327, 328, 348, 473, 943, 1044, 1139, 1190 inner being, inner person, 985, 986 inspired utterances, 906, 1119, 1194 institution, institutionalization, 28, 107, 108, 137, 145, 204, 220, 223-226, 230, 234, 268-271, 292, 310, 311, 325, 424, 501, 513, 514, 517, 530, 686, 742, 756, 762, 791, 793, 881, 893, 899, 927, 950, 976, 1014, 1071, 1099, 1141, 1142, 1144, 1145, 1158, 1165, 1235, 1106 intercession, 39, 95, 99, 131, 360, 536, 541, 646, 689, 746, 776, 779, 942-945, 1013, 1053, 1221 intermediate state, 97, 286, 1016-1018 intertextuality, 465, 471, 479, 483, 536, 541, 553, 559, 671, 826, 834, 841, 850, 852, 854, 904, 1187 introspective conscience, 714, 1058 irony, 269, 383, 446, 686, 737, 787, 788, 790, 791, 915, 1015, 1042, 1062, 1139, 1145
Isaac, 1, 3, 4, 6, 38, 39, 41-44, 130, 209, 246, 398, 415, 419, 458, 502, 509, 537, 539, 542, 584, 709, 816, 837, 965, 1056, 1099, 1110, 1208
Isaiah, 1, 15, 18, 47, 49, 52, 69, 70, 102, 115, 133, 155, 174, 180, 183, 199, 204, 209, 210, 232, 236, 251, 256, 269, 271-272, 275, 279-281, 284, 313, 326, 331, 346, 386, 396, 397, 414, 420, 422, 441, 442, 461, 479, 481, 487, 491, 497, 499, 523, 524, 537-539, 562, 567, 569, 574, 606, 641, 642, 662, 663, 666, 671, 673, 674, 737, 740, 751, 753, 755, 791, 817, 824, 827-832, 837-839, 841, 844, 849, 852-854, 861, 864, 886, 894, 904, 930, 936, 962, 979, 980, 997, 1003, 1006, 1017, 1019, 1026, 1033, 1055, 1085, 1092, 1096, 1120, 1126-1128, 1143, 1169, 1180, 1181, 1183, 1211, 1236, 1239
Israel of God, 205, 218, 344, 488
Israelite, 8, 39, 40, 130, 157, 162, 168, 204, 208, 211, 217, 333, 434, 543, 824, 963, 978, 989, 1076, 1090, 1208
Israelites, 36, 39-41, 43, 132, 133, 161, 172, 204, 207, 211, 214, 217, 388, 389, 459, 467, 502, 509, 529, 610, 853, 989, 990, 1002, 1085, 1097, 1099, 1141, 1162, 1239
Jacob, 1, 2, 38-43, 45, 48, 129, 157, 203, 204, 209, 216, 246, 249, 398, 413, 415, 419, 438, 466, 502, 509, 537, 539, 584, 605, 611, 817, 819, 828, 829, 963, 965, 1099, 1110
James the Just, 187, 189, 190, 194, 546-548, 561, 908 jealousy, 42, 43, 168, 234, 327, 421, 557, 714, 829, 837, 898, 1138, 1144, 1212
Jerusalem apostles, 78, 145, 463, 756, 764, 767, 901
Jerusalem council, 10, 106, 145, 377, 383, 432, 434, 467, 529, 546, 581, 616, 903, 971, 1217
Jesus and Paul, 159, 317, 374, 394, 431, 468, 527, 678, 707, 733, 774, 800, 882, 1038, 1123, 1125
Jesus tradition, traditions, 86, 87, 91, 155, 173, 180, 227, 235, 236, 241, 302, 397, 411, 421, 536, 554, 565-578, 579, 588, 633, 643, 644, 674, 781, 981, 1136, 1176, 1177, 1179
Jew, 1, 14, 15, 19-21, 55, 113, 126, 164, 167, 169, 176, 192, 199, 203, 208, 218, 223, 295, 296, 299, 320, 322, 377, 378, 386, 434, 465, 508, 542, 546, 580, 584, 608, 647, 760, 764, 884, 888-890, 924, 928, 994, 1012, 1072, 1076, 1106, 1110, 1122, 1217, 1218
Jew and Gentile/Greek, 14, 15, 19, 20, 55, 113, 218, 299, 434, 542, 546, 888, 889, 1012
Jewish Christianity, 24, 25, 33, 48, 54, 69, 83, 85, 136, 145, 151, 160, 168, 169, 184, 192, 204, 228-230, 299, 315, 316, 321, 344, 378, 379, 385, 386, 388, 430, 454, 457, 462, 465, 468, 504, 529, 532, 546, 555, 559, 565, 579-587, 619, 645, 648, 649, 667, 673, 678, 683, 712, 722, 728, 761, 792, 901, 902, 926, 984, 993, 1000, 1005, 1006, 1058, 1077, 1093, 1148, 1152, 1165, 1195, 1227-1229
Jewish exegesis, interpretation, 272, 339, 356, 607, 834, 835, 838
Jewish mission, 223, 389
Jewish Revolt, Jewish War, 145, 165, 184-186, 188, 189, 194, 213, 228, 229, 288, 290, 323, 387, 585, 587, 599, 600, 706, 900, 902, 1034, 1076, 1077, 1085
Johannine community/school, 26-28, 33, 51, 155, 166, 175, 587, 590, 596, 598, 868, 880, 1037, 1046, 1055, 1079, 1120, 1149
John Mark, 35, 92, 190, 743, 756, 758, 765, 1219
Joseph the Patriarch, 599
Josephus, 1-4, 7, 12, 20, 24, 34, 39, 41, 42, 53, 54, 185-187, 194, 221, 226, 231, 241, 243, 287-295, 297, 298, 321, 324, 389, 432, 445, 448, 467, 492, 528, 533, 599, 600, 605, 609, 611, 614, 641, 715, 731, 775, 778-780, 819, 857, 895, 901-903, 908, 911, 930, 932, 934, 990, 999, 1008, 1060, 1061, 1066, 1091, 1142, 1152, 1160-1164, 1206, 1207, 1214 joy, 48, 70, 174, 240, 328, 349, 351, 356, 423, 440, 477, 494, 496, 497, 549, 563, 600-605, 632, 650, 652-654, 662, 663, 687, 695, 723, 763, 821, 864, 867, 990, 1031, 1039, 1062, 1136, 1139, 1160, 1167, 1178, 1205, 1227, 1228 judaizers, 17, 31, 77, 169, 192, 213, 215, 228, 367, 581, 583-586, 593, 705, 757, 1110 Judea, 11, 14, 114, 166, 193, 194, 231, 251, 290, 294, 297, 321-323, 387, 388, 467, 496, 562, 599, 611, 631, 752, 755, 756, 759, 762, 764, 766, 857, 894, 900, 901, 903, 907, 911, 913, 931, 932, 1059-1061, 1076, 1077, 1123, 1150, 1151, 1183, 1204, 1206 judge, 30, 39, 46, 76, 88, 100, 101, 158, 164, 166, 171, 173, 178, 180, 210, 251, 253, 259, 264, 265, 272, 281, 318, 320, 327, 329, 334, 336-338, 349, 359, 360, 363, 368, 374, 392, 415, 416, 419, 422, 425, 427, 429, 472, 486, 513, 556, 557, 559, 563, 573, 574, 600, 609, 621, 623, 630, 631, 634, 719, 734, 736, 742, 766, 778, 784, 818, 859, 861, 862, 863, 864, 869, 887, 908, 920, 926, 939, 973, 1030, 1054, 1055, 1073, 1097, 1102, 1111, 1137, 1139, 1206, 1207, 1215, 1239, 1241
Junia, 762, 765
Jupiter, 294, 322, 323, 963, 1147 justice, 132, 230, 233, 351, 360, 416, 441, 442, 470, 486, 516, 519, 541, 558, 582, 621, 623, 624, 688, 734, 739, 741, 810, 818, 915, 927, 1014, 1037, 1050, 1107, 1136, 1139-1142, 1158, 1190, 1196, 1198, 1215 justification, 4, 5, 12, 88, 89, 115, 124, 143, 276, 312, 349, 351, 365, 382, 383, 390, 420, 423, 491, 555, 585, 592, 624, 625, 645, 647, 681, 792, 795, 823, 915, 950, 969, 989, 1003, 1036, 1045, 1046, 1053-1058, 1072, 1149
Justus, 93, 378, 765, 1005 kerygma, 11, 96, 98, 99, 101, 118, 160, 258, 259, 301, 302, 311, 312, 357, 359, 420, 433, 523, 527, 536, 547, 560, 620, 626-629, 632, 655, 667, 757, 770, 776, 798, 800-803, 812, 850, 874, 905, 948, 956, 1023, 1084, 1148, 1159 king of kings, 362, 672, 1035 kingdom of Christ, 36, 156,

636, 637, 776, 1030, 1031, 1037 kingdom of God, 6, 47, 50, 104, 114, 163, 197, 207, 232, 251, 273, 284, 331, 332, 339, 343, 348, 353, 432, 460, 461, 476, 502, 574, 575, 621, 629-638, 695, 718, 736, 739, 741, 753, 786, 795, 803, 811, 857, 859, 860, 872, 879, 915, 930, 946, 1004, 1009, 1021, 1025, 1030, 1031, 1035, 1036, 1095, 1118, 1121, 1180, 1189, 1193, 1199, 1204, 1224
knowledge, 31, 33, 36, 37, 39, 57, 58, 74, 85-87, 102, 108, 109, 113, 125, 150, 154, 157, 158, 166, 171, 181, 193, 232, 238, 241, 245, 277, 282, 304, 307, 333, 351, 367, 370, 381, 400-402, 404, 408-411, 425, 426, 441, 442, 444, 454, 471, 472, 484, 490, 495, 507, 521, 531, 546, 554, 565-569, 571, 572, 576, 577, 579, 591, 592, 594, 603, 618, 638-640, 642, 653, 670, 675, 690, 703, 705, 709-711, 726, 727, 748, 758, 760, 777, 782, 789, 808, 809, 819, 831, 850, 882, 890, 893, 896, 901, 914, 916, 932-934, 938, 939, 949, 954, 975, 983, 990, 1006, 1010, 1012, 1015, 1016, 1025, 1026, 1032-1034, 1078, 1080, 1083, 1088, 1098, 1102, 1125, 1131-1133, 1141, 1173, 1185-1187, 1192, 1193, 1201-1203, 1205, 1217-1219, 1221, 1259
koinonia, 22, 155, 374, 498, 640, 1228
lamb, 46, 52, 100, 104, 108, 119, 128, 131, 158, 174, 177, 183, 200, 201, 261, 262, 266, 280, 283, 284, 286, 329, 348, 362, 393, 426-428, 438, 441, 442, 477, 503, 524-526, 539, 635-637, 641, 642, 659, 672, 678, 690, 720, 731, 732, 744, 770, 780, 810, 851, 869-871, 874-876, 897, 920, 942, 947, 954, 955, 962, 991, 1002, 1024, 1030-1032, 1034, 1035, 1037, 1047, 1070-1072, 1074, 1080, 1088, 1092, 1093, 1120, 1122, 1156, 1164, 1186, 1197, 1203, 1223, 1239
Lamb of God, 642, 690, 870, 1032, 1164 lament, 112, 665, 1084, 1138
land, 2, 3, 5, 14, 15, 38-42, 112, 128, 132, 161, 162, 206, 211, 218, 246, 247, 250, 291, 297-300, 321, 335, 341, 355, 385, 387-390, 480, 502, 517, 549, 550, 557, 561, 587, 606, 634, 635, 638, 642-644, 647, 727, 728, 732, 736, 751, 753, 760, 761, 770, 778, 781, 798, 854, 900, 956, 968, 988-990, 1001, 1006, 1038, 1060, 1061, 1063, 1069, 1077, 1129, 1146, 1155, 1160, 1164, 1183, 1227
Laodicea, 49, 136, 142, 146, 329, 695, 765, 960, 1052, 1196
last days, 12, 29, 50, 51, 52, 80, 101, 113, 214, 251, 253, 277, 334, 335, 336, 341, 345, 366, 389, 509, 559, 622, 624, 639, 644, 845, 881, 959, 960, 998, 1031, 1045, 1071, 1200, 1230
Last Supper, 269, 271, 502, 588, 680, 686-688, 694, 780, 793, 794, 1105, 1229 law of Christ, 241 lawlessness, 29, 43, 51, 52, 74, 75, 79, 113, 168, 241, 336, 352, 649, 821, 823, 864, 917, 1003, 1057, 1058, 1078, 1083, 1192, 1194
leaven, 638, 1110
lectionaries, 257, 609, 1143, 1146
legalism, 383, 384, 463
legend, 41, 52, 71, 72, 77, 150, 233, 235, 257, 298, 482, 546, 643, 748, 765, 766, 779, 814, 867, 893, 1004, 1006, 1063, 1146, 1151, 1175, 1208, 1222 letter forms, 330, 474, 475, 483, 612, 649-653, 915, 952, 955, 971, 1049
Letter of Peter to Philip, 72, 408, 409, 649, 931 letter writing, 484, 654, 1159
Levites, 3, 42, 44, 50, 100, 201, 264, 389, 396, 439, 539, 575, 603, 608, 730, 731, 816, 965, 988, 1105, 1191 liberation, 2, 71, 264, 266, 348, 382, 384, 473, 474, 558, 606, 645, 804, 931, 950, 1001, 1089, 1099, 1101 liberty, 352, 382-384, 463, 529, 547, 551, 645, 655, 1101, 1172
light and darkness, 6, 264, 590, 657, 659, 817, 1193
light of the world, 659, 752, 753
Linus, 1216
literary criticism, 484, 787, 788, 792, 929, 1041, 1042, 1132
liturgical elements, 1, 37, 118, 119, 124, 129, 174, 256, 259, 309, 348, 362, 395, 396, 407, 436, 441, 478, 486, 524, 526, 627, 651, 654, 659, 662-664, 672, 678, 690, 693, 705, 917, 947, 948, 952, 1016, 1027, 1037, 1171, 1224, 1225, 1237
liturgical tradition, 181, 666, 689, 1016 liturgy, 46, 85, 118, 119, 124, 125, 132, 143, 167, 179, 183, 191, 204, 226, 228, 256, 259, 301, 370, 372, 374, 379, 388, 399, 430, 440, 456-458, 526, 527, 530, 587, 605, 606, 609, 652, 663-665, 667, 681, 685, 689, 693, 694, 707, 710, 733, 816, 832, 876, 882, 917, 923, 947, 948, 956, 976, 980, 1027, 1037, 1038, 1072, 1143, 1145, 1156, 1165, 1224, 1225, 1228, 1230, 1232, 1236-1238
Logos christology, 158, 183, 665, 666, 678, 933, 934, 960, 961, 1023, 1113, 1203
Lord of lords, 672, 682
Lord's Day, 101, 121, 177, 179, 229, 314, 344, 348, 648, 649, 675, 678, 679, 682-686, 688, 690, 693, 1069, 1110, 1231, 1237
Lord's Supper, 34, 89, 92, 114, 116, 120, 124, 131, 179, 181, 257, 285, 286, 300, 301, 353, 356, 377, 379, 398, 593, 627, 664, 679-681, 685-687, 689, 690, 693, 694, 700, 737, 777, 780, 784, 870, 943, 1072, 1162, 1165, 1178, 1225, 1229, 1235, 1237, 1238
Lot, 41, 425, 459, 502, 505, 507, 533, 538, 589, 624, 694, 771, 804, 819, 830, 835, 839, 1039, 1059, 1065, 1135, 1167, 1236 love command, 535, 540, 700 love feast, 34, 124, 286, 353, 379, 664, 685, 686, 700, 1072, 1165, 1237 lust, 141, 375, 540, 700, 712-716, 838, 917, 962, 1089, 1126, 1129
Lycus valley, 765
Lydia, 93, 123, 146, 288, 378, 503, 512, 770, 1104, 1127, 1206, 1217, 1220
Lystra, 137, 222, 273, 414, 416, 627, 718, 758, 759, 764, 1008, 1143, 1144, 1148
Maccabees, 12, 54, 60, 67, 287, 290, 296, 326, 607, 611, 816, 938, 968, 978, 1002, 1141, 1151, 1191
Macedonia, 79, 148, 290, 630, 755, 757, 759, 764, 771, 1022, 1195, 1217 magic, 23, 45, 48, 49, 104, 114, 147, 167, 192, 275, 356, 358, 382, 416, 417, 436-438, 701-705, 711, 749-752, 786, 787, 793, 806, 910, 930, 931, 941, 945, 953, 1006, 1010, 1011, 1076, 1078, 1081, 1082, 1095, 1118, 1147-1149, 1150, 1192, 1231 magicians, 115, 192, 356, 698, 702, 703, 711, 712, 749, 751, 930, 1010, 1076, 1078, 1109, 1148 male, 37, 39, 113, 203, 226, 323, 362, 428, 429, 473, 504, 518, 930, 989, 991, 1029, 1064, 1089, 1090, 1092, 1101, 1105, 1106, 1145, 1206-1208, 1212-1214, 1218, 1219, 1221
Malta, 416, 502, 759 man of lawlessness, 51
manna, 466, 737, 1040
maranatha, 619, 660, 663, 690, 705, 874, 875, 1034, 1228
Marcion, Marcionism, 5, 6, 34, 91, 137, 143, 193, 194, 214, 215, 255, 307, 308, 313, 405, 411, 431-433, 469, 585, 648, 705-708, 893, 934, 936, 1089 marriage, 24, 31, 33, 131, 144, 203, 306, 315, 322, 350, 352, 421, 444, 514, 517, 518, 528, 538, 690, 700, 706, 712-715, 717, 722, 768, 784, 882, 889, 918, 931, 995, 1004, 1006, 1071, 1088-1090, 1115, 1208, 1212, 1214, 1215, 1221
martyrdom, 32, 37, 47, 52, 54, 69, 70, 72, 81, 83, 84, 87, 89, 119, 130, 147, 156, 182, 187, 189, 191, 192, 201, 214, 225, 231, 237, 262, 263, 269, 281, 284, 285, 308, 320, 327, 329, 330, 339, 358, 359, 430, 446, 449, 460, 483, 498, 525, 532-534, 540, 600, 603, 605, 636, 637, 653, 654, 656, 657, 699, 707, 717-722, 736, 739, 740, 743, 750, 755-757, 764, 770, 777, 787, 832, 859, 871, 881, 882, 892, 893, 897, 904, 908-914, 916, 919, 920, 934, 936-938, 941, 966, 975, 1004, 1005, 1014, 1018, 1024, 1037, 1040, 1041, 1048, 1049, 1063, 1067, 1072, 1080, 1094, 1109, 1110, 1112, 1121, 1123-1125, 1128, 1135, 1138, 1140, 1141, 1151, 1179, 1180, 1197, 1200, 1205, 1216, 1219
Martyrdom of Polycarp, 83, 84, 87, 89, 156, 191, 231, 320,

329, 430, 460, 637, 653, 654, 721, 722, 777, 787, 912, 934, 936, 937, 966, 975, 1014, 1024, 1049, 1112, 1121, 1128, 1179, 1197, 1205, 1216
martyrologies, 721, 912, 962, 1141
Mary, 92, 127, 164, 187, 192, 243, 244, 257, 259, 307, 405, 407, 410, 491, 525, 663, 722-724, 743, 765, 899, 962, 1004-1006, 1206, 1210, 1213, 1214, 1216, 1220, 1230
Matthean community, 146, 151, 206, 218, 223, 378, 386-388, 578, 581, 587, 675, 724-726, 728, 729, 1229 maturity, 52, 107, 131, 277, 327, 330, 356, 383, 407, 418, 421, 445, 446, 476, 595, 738, 793, 801, 864, 890, 1039, 1095, 1111, 1132, 1166-1168, 1170, 1218, 1221 meals, 20, 25, 29, 94, 95, 115, 116, 120, 132, 181, 221, 292, 298, 304, 352, 373, 377-379, 502, 526, 627, 663, 679, 681, 684, 686-691, 693, 697, 716, 744, 976, 989, 990, 993, 995, 996, 1007, 1104, 1105, 1111, 1160, 1162-1164, 1228-1231, 1235 mediator, 108, 172, 181, 210, 217, 246, 248, 249, 272, 275, 277, 360, 362, 396, 418, 469, 563, 665, 891, 925, 1096, 1131, 1226, 1230 mediators, 29, 198, 234, 426, 445, 701, 998, 1058 meekness, 41, 278, 279, 281, 780, 781, 827, 962, 963, 1212
Melchizedek, 3, 36, 44-48, 70, 98, 108, 130, 172, 209, 248, 346, 360, 408, 410, 413, 453, 455, 457, 537, 632, 729-731, 738, 849, 850, 878, 964-967, 997-1000, 1043, 1050, 1070, 1073, 1113, 1204
Melito of Sardis, 91, 190, 679, 731, 733, 876, 1019, 1048
mercy, 47, 75, 103, 104, 155, 173, 175, 209, 211, 243, 244, 246, 274, 275, 320, 334, 337, 361, 396, 413, 425, 429, 430, 434, 435, 470, 488, 503, 550, 556-558, 569, 572, 574, 596, 601, 624, 660, 696, 699, 733-737, 819, 837, 838, 863, 867, 894, 896, 962, 963, 1013-1015, 1107, 1156, 1185, 1193, 1194, 1223
mercy seat, 396
merit, 8, 207, 212, 368, 546, 558, 561, 643, 798, 1096, 1225
merkabah, 63
Messiah, 2, 14, 19, 20, 39, 42, 49-52, 69, 74, 108, 130, 144, 145, 150, 153, 155, 156, 159, 162, 165-167, 170, 171, 178, 181, 185, 192, 196, 215, 217, 218, 223, 239, 255, 256, 260, 261, 271-274, 317, 331-332, 355, 356, 362, 375, 376, 385, 389, 392, 396, 423, 431, 479, 480, 521, 536, 539, 543, 580, 584, 586, 588, 598, 600, 602, 605, 606, 610, 611, 623, 626, 628, 631, 632, 635, 636, 641, 643, 645, 647, 669, 678, 680, 683, 706, 724, 725, 736, 742, 752, 754, 760, 762, 766, 772, 785, 824, 857, 860, 861, 864, 869, 894, 910, 932, 940, 956, 958, 960, 998, 1012, 1014, 1082, 1091, 1112, 1123, 1154, 1179-1182, 1184, 1188, 1221, 1235 messiahs, messianism, 214, 605, 998, 999, 1000, 1179, 1199, 1200 messianic age, 626, 740, 860, 962, 1179 messianic suffering, 423, 1181
Michael, 44-47, 128, 144, 159, 226, 254, 372, 413, 638, 666, 678, 694, 698, 717, 729, 730, 778, 818, 835, 836, 839, 840, 867, 923, 937, 939, 965, 997, 998, 1037, 1078, 1160, 1181
midrash, 167, 398, 402, 419, 475, 480, 481, 510, 523, 547, 553, 559, 560, 582, 606, 608, 612, 613, 653, 670, 729, 736, 814-819, 834, 835, 837, 841-843, 849, 861, 895, 953, 980, 999, 1043, 1092, 1169
Miletus, 270, 566, 1199
military, 53, 65, 235, 288, 289, 298, 323, 348, 354, 385, 561, 635, 636, 760, 761, 897, 968, 970, 1007, 1040, 1059-1061, 1064, 1065, 1082, 1151 milk, 5, 117, 119, 121, 123, 181, 418, 445, 511, 736-738, 793, 882, 1111, 1115, 1117, 1158, 1159, 1192 minister, 19, 114, 120-122, 258, 259, 507, 510, 614, 745, 1087
miracles, 23, 49, 52, 61, 71, 72, 128, 153, 192, 258, 298, 307, 356, 358, 398, 415, 436-438, 498, 530, 589, 630, 631, 643, 704, 710, 746-752, 760, 767, 771, 773, 801, 883, 892, 902, 903, 905, 930, 941, 951, 1008, 1010, 1011, 1076, 1093-1095, 1118, 1122, 1123, 1181, 1183, 1204
Mishnah, 130, 386, 605, 606, 608, 611, 752, 980, 991-992, 996, 1142, 1146, 1161, 1191, 1215 mission, 13-15, 17-24, 31, 53, 54, 72, 78, 79, 82, 93, 95, 98, 100, 106, 107, 114, 115, 145-147, 151, 160, 162, 169, 187, 193, 195, 204, 206, 207, 212, 223, 229, 244, 245, 251, 254, 256, 271, 292, 299, 323, 334, 350, 353, 359, 372, 378, 386-394, 412, 415, 434, 467, 479, 482, 494, 503, 505, 507, 516, 517, 519, 529, 540, 546, 547, 559, 562, 565, 604, 622, 626, 630, 631, 648, 689, 718, 721, 725, 737, 746, 747, 750-757, 759-771, 773-775, 792, 859, 862, 875-877, 885-888, 892, 902, 904-906, 922, 930, 931, 938, 941, 956, 972, 977, 992, 995, 996, 998, 1012, 1015, 1022, 1061, 1076, 1077, 1104, 1124, 1138, 1139, 1151, 1167, 1174, 1178, 1189, 1194-1196, 1233 mission of Jesus, 13, 206, 251, 254, 412, 1139 mission strategy, 754, 756, 771 missionaries, 2, 10, 11, 13, 15, 19, 22, 31, 32, 53, 54, 70-72, 77, 78, 79, 80, 148, 150, 169, 207, 222, 256, 303, 317, 319, 350, 368, 373, 374, 389-391, 392, 393, 394, 415, 416, 433, 463, 482, 503, 504, 516, 544, 547, 562, 563, 617, 628, 629, 647, 738, 742, 743, 748, 749, 752, 753, 754-772, 774, 781, 883, 885, 887, 892, 930, 942, 944, 991, 992, 1005, 1047, 1066, 1082, 1095, 1124, 1136, 1137, 1151-1153, 1207, 1217, 1219, 1220, 1222 missionary journeys, 2, 53, 71, 79, 222, 368, 503, 743, 748, 749, 756, 762, 883, 930, 944, 1082, 1137, 1217
Mithraism, 706, 783, 1009 money, 81, 115, 322, 506, 567, 576, 680, 687, 698, 699, 705, 716, 737, 745, 764, 881, 882, 935, 954, 963, 976, 992, 1001, 1044, 1051-1053, 1142, 1159, 1162, 1164, 1165, 1193 monotheism, 48, 70, 161-163, 183, 184, 355, 395, 412-414, 416, 417, 421, 422, 428-431, 436, 557, 586, 609, 667, 772, 775, 890, 961, 1007, 1058
Montanism, 775, 975, 976, 1089 months, 184, 323, 564, 935 morality, 29, 30, 53, 104, 322, 351, 352, 356, 369, 402, 507, 535, 552, 564, 657, 769, 775, 920, 925, 935, 1007, 1099, 1108, 1109, 1159 mortality, 70, 284, 285, 312, 336, 343, 347, 376, 437, 462, 535, 655, 657, 716, 730, 775-777, 809, 852, 958, 987, 988, 1068, 1130
Moses, 5, 6, 14, 35, 38, 40, 42-44, 46, 50, 51, 73, 86, 127, 141, 153, 162, 171, 172, 178, 183, 186, 210, 214, 239, 246, 247, 249, 272, 295, 296, 298, 327, 350, 356, 381, 396, 410, 413, 415, 419, 445, 453, 457-459, 466, 467, 480, 481, 492, 509, 510, 524, 534, 536, 537, 539, 567, 573, 582, 607-610, 614, 623, 626, 632, 643, 644, 646, 647, 649, 698, 718, 724, 728, 743, 770, 777-782, 816, 818, 819, 821, 829, 830, 833, 836, 838, 839, 842, 844, 845, 850, 851, 854, 867, 878, 894, 923, 930, 932, 933, 949, 956-958, 960, 963, 965, 979, 980, 989, 990, 994, 998, 999, 1031, 1043, 1045, 1091, 1092, 1094, 1099, 1100, 1110, 1113, 1123, 1124, 1144, 1154, 1155, 1163, 1180, 1187, 1201, 1218, 1240 murder, 42, 168, 240, 289, 349, 600, 645, 703, 816, 837, 840, 1012, 1079, 1109, 1192
mystery, 45, 55, 66, 262, 298, 317, 343, 356, 427, 498, 595, 639, 666, 704, 709, 712, 782-784, 792, 817, 851, 888-890, 1009, 1025, 1033, 1102, 1115, 1147, 1148, 1150, 1156, 1173, 1201
mystery cults, 55, 356, 639, 782-784, 792, 1102, 1115, 1147-1148, 1150 mysticism, 63, 67, 260, 406, 593, 665, 666, 711, 818, 1140 myth, 29, 31, 32, 44, 50, 53, 62, 72, 112, 127, 129, 133, 176, 183, 202, 214, 215, 230, 250, 264, 355, 362, 404, 406, 424, 472, 482, 523, 531, 639, 707, 724, 741, 800, 870, 871, 874, 875, 923, 956, 1007, 1009, 1028, 1035, 1037, 1047,

1086, 1115, 1130, 1140, 1148, 1151, 1184, 1209, 1215, 1234
Nag Hammadi, 33, 34, 70, 72, 73, 149, 308, 400, 402-412, 590, 621, 638, 785, 931, 1089, 1175-1177 name of God, 38, 43, 119, 172, 258, 430, 487, 610, 634, 667, 851, 961 narrative criticism, 16, 23, 477, 482, 483, 598, 787-790, 792, 1049, 1134 narrative theology, 8, 556, 805 nations, 5, 38, 44, 46, 62, 81, 113, 129, 132, 162, 177, 207, 208, 210, 211, 214, 216, 264, 272, 317, 338, 354, 371, 385, 386, 390, 392, 394, 396, 415, 428, 438, 485, 486, 493, 502, 503, 524, 536, 561-565, 600, 621, 634-637, 648, 666, 672, 691, 703, 719, 753-756, 766, 770, 771, 775, 792, 824, 825, 853, 903, 971, 992, 1012, 1026, 1033, 1067, 1081, 1163, 1166, 1177, 1178, 1181, 1239, 1240 natural theology, 762, 1022
Nazoreans, 33, 168, 313-316, 584, 585, 792, 900
Nero, 50-52, 128, 149, 150, 184, 185, 189, 288, 321, 324, 328, 393, 449, 478, 599, 668, 875, 908-910, 916, 918, 1027-1029, 1034, 1035, 1062, 1066, 1135, 1137, 1183 new birth, 118, 132, 173, 243, 282, 335, 341, 353, 366, 498, 500, 569, 736, 737, 792-795, 1017, 1022, 1075, 1116, 1236 new commandment, 238
new covenant, 37, 38, 42, 107, 108, 172, 195, 198-200, 207, 211, 217, 218, 242, 245-249, 268-270, 277, 278, 285, 326, 331, 334, 350, 376, 383, 418, 447, 453, 457, 458, 487, 492, 537, 543, 563, 564, 651, 633, 645, 646, 655, 679, 780, 782, 793, 795, 811, 821, 829, 842, 844, 845, 849, 850, 854, 861, 862, 878, 891, 899, 968, 969, 998, 999, 1026, 1043, 1058, 1070-1072, 1096, 1118, 1155, 1156, 1233 new creation, 5, 200, 213, 276, 331, 333-336, 341, 342, 420, 499, 552, 557, 636, 740, 959, 1031, 1224, 1227
New Exodus, 538, 641, 1031, 1092 new heaven(s), 47, 56, 65, 66, 240, 253, 255, 332, 337, 343, 347, 363, 427, 439, 441, 443, 636, 638, 739, 796, 811, 823, 854, 866, 959, 969, 1017, 1018, 1020, 1031, 1037, 1040, 1058, 1224 new humanity, 157, 158, 735 new Israel, 108, 198, 200, 201, 203, 223, 227, 488, 542, 725, 728, 803, 1234 new moon, 330, 701
New Testament theology, 76, 129, 159, 218, 312, 330, 344, 379, 430, 478, 483, 527, 541, 628, 796, 797, 799, 802, 803, 808, 812-814, 874, 893, 961, 967, 1093
Noah, 38, 41, 46, 118, 246, 262, 279, 286, 419, 425, 481, 512, 523, 537, 538, 624, 730, 754, 795, 814, 816, 819, 822, 829, 835, 836, 839, 863, 866, 922, 1056, 1088, 1118
Nympha, 1220
oaths, 3, 38, 415, 526, 552, 568, 646, 684, 691, 710, 721, 845, 849, 863, 1070, 1109, 1126, 1185 obedience, 1, 3, 4, 6, 15, 18, 36, 38-41, 42, 75, 103, 108, 131, 173, 179, 180, 203, 208, 223, 230, 231, 240, 241, 246, 267, 268, 271, 272, 274, 279-281, 285, 286, 310, 311, 319, 320, 324, 336, 339, 350, 352, 357, 359, 361, 363, 365, 369, 370, 373, 377, 392, 432, 445, 453, 466, 467, 479, 487, 514, 518, 523, 534, 535, 558, 566, 566, 568, 584, 592, 594, 597, 603, 606, 621-624, 639, 640, 640, 646, 649, 651, 695, 697, 698, 714, 724, 735, 744, 781, 815, 817, 818, 821-823, 829, 844, 845, 852, 876, 877, 881, 882, 892, 908, 922, 933, 936, 944, 958, 969, 1012, 1015, 1039, 1040, 1047, 1051, 1053, 1055, 1058, 1071-1075, 1095, 1097, 1098, 1108, 1109, 1118, 1139, 1167, 1181, 1194, 1201, 1205, 1208, 1211, 1213 Odes of Solomon, 72, 181-183, 407, 525, 526, 590, 777, 980, 1006, 1152, 1153 offerings, 25, 36, 62, 102, 130, 198, 225, 248, 261, 274-276, 286, 310, 312, 356, 375, 394, 414, 419, 457, 491, 517, 528, 564, 594, 597, 607, 649, 660, 693, 694, 744, 823, 836, 844, 849, 850, 864, 867, 872, 902, 906, 964, 966, 985, 989, 991, 996, 1002, 1008, 1012, 1031, 1056, 1069-1072, 1079, 1096, 1104, 1120, 1129, 1141, 1155, 1156, 1157, 1161, 1162, 1165, 1183, 1197, 1204, 1228, 1230, 1232, 1233, 1236 oil, 48, 49, 119, 122, 437, 439, 490, 528, 632, 786, 908, 945, 990, 991, 1007, 1065, 1121, 1163, 1228 old covenant, 38, 74, 107, 198, 203, 228, 242, 248, 249, 275, 285, 375, 453, 487, 492, 543, 563, 646, 647, 844, 849, 965, 966, 973, 974, 1070, 1118
Old Testament in Acts, 23, 106, 152, 195, 247, 479, 483, 536, 668, 823, 904, 953, 970, 1073
Old Testament in the Apostolic Fathers, 37, 91, 126, 235, 481, 673
Old Testament in the General Epistles, 480, 671, 834, 953
Old Testament in Hebrews, 98, 197, 240, 248, 249, 454, 457, 479, 537, 670, 718, 841, 850, 861, 953, 999, 1156, 1187
Old Testament in Revelation, 128, 132, 481, 536, 539, 571, 672, 850, 855, 974, 1037 olive, olive tree, 48, 208, 217, 327, 854, 1007, 1065
Onesimus, 147, 699, 765, 888
Onesiphorus, 765
oracles, 58, 66, 70, 111, 128, 178, 191, 264, 287, 296, 392, 542, 605, 614, 626, 653, 674, 737, 770, 779, 830, 839, 852, 855, 900, 901, 972, 980, 992, 1006, 1009, 1010, 1030, 1031, 1034, 1069, 1093, 1152, 1180, 1191, 1197, 1211, 1229 ordination, 37, 105, 137, 202, 225, 608 pagans, paganism, 36, 70, 85, 95, 98, 111, 129, 136, 169, 176, 178, 180, 183, 192, 213, 214, 216, 226, 228, 233, 279, 300, 302-304, 326, 340, 349, 354, 356, 358, 369, 377, 378, 389-391, 393, 394, 400, 402, 403, 406, 410, 413, 416, 417, 479, 516, 517, 520, 525, 529, 530, 532, 581, 601, 603, 628, 703, 704, 707, 711, 715, 734, 750, 751, 752, 754, 760, 761, 762, 766, 768, 769, 771-774, 775, 806, 814, 817-819, 829, 834, 835, 839, 879, 880, 886, 895, 898, 925, 926, 963, 965, 973, 975, 1007, 1009-1011, 1019, 1044, 1052, 1069, 1079, 1084, 1088, 1089, 1094, 1095, 1100, 1101, 1108, 1111, 1118, 1119, 1135, 1138, 1147, 1148, 1150-1152, 1154, 1158, 1169, 1192-1194, 1196-1198, 1206, 1208, 1210, 1214, 1215, 1234
Palestine, 33, 35, 69, 92, 146, 166, 169, 170, 184, 185, 187, 194, 211, 216, 221, 258, 287, 288, 291, 297, 298, 301, 317, 371, 377, 387, 465, 468, 521, 548-550, 580, 600, 618, 643, 644, 663, 682, 706, 758, 764, 774, 932, 956, 1005, 1006, 1045, 1066, 1099, 1141, 1142, 1146, 1183, 1215, 1224, 1227, 1229
Palestinian Christians, 114, 585, 956
Palestinian Judaism, 60, 250, 287, 294, 462, 464, 465, 580, 611, 1055, 1058, 1123
Paphos, 78, 355, 758
Papias, 83, 90, 139, 149, 189-191, 194, 341, 342, 575, 638, 644, 740, 765, 916, 931, 934, 937, 1036, 1037, 1078, 1214, 1219 parables, 84, 96, 206, 325, 343, 363, 469, 470, 473, 502, 505, 540, 541, 567, 570, 571, 624, 676, 725, 727, 770, 793, 802, 831, 856, 858, 969, 990, 992, 1026, 1049, 1093, 1129, 1165, 1177, 1197, 1206
Paradise, 69, 344, 442, 471, 636, 730, 956
paraenesis, 30, 89, 98, 99, 110, 204, 235, 319, 350, 366, 444, 445, 449, 450, 453-455, 474, 475, 478-483, 500, 519, 538, 540, 550, 551, 560, 567, 613, 628, 639, 651, 652, 653, 700, 715, 738, 746, 814, 816, 817, 819, 830, 834-836, 839, 841, 856, 878, 879, 882, 891, 899, 935, 936, 981, 1023, 1043, 1044, 1051, 1052, 1095, 1156-1159, 1191, 1192, 1194, 1197, 1229, 1232
Parousia, 5, 15, 21, 29-31, 34, 44, 47, 62, 65, 66, 69, 73, 101, 189, 251, 254, 264-267, 287, 310, 312, 332, 335, 337, 338, 343, 358, 360, 362, 363, 385, 397, 424, 442, 447, 449, 483, 557, 559, 571, 573, 605, 613, 615, 619, 622, 623, 625, 629, 632, 634, 636, 638, 663, 670, 719, 723, 739, 755, 762, 768, 769, 771, 776, 802, 822, 856-875, 883, 904, 921, 923, 925-927, 933, 967, 1016, 1018, 1020, 1023-1025,

1037, 1045, 1051, 1055, 1081, 1149, 1179, 1182, 1189, 1199, 1200, 1226, 1227, 1234 paschal homily, 731, 732, 876, 1092 paschal lamb, 641, 642, 876
passion narrative, 160, 263, 271, 538, 567, 791, 801, 929
Passover, 39, 118, 121, 174, 178, 186, 268-270, 280, 284, 297, 492, 589, 635, 641, 642, 679, 731, 732, 778, 908, 975, 1032, 1160, 1164, 1224
Passover lamb, 174, 280, 635, 641, 642, 731, 1032
Pastoral Letters, 30-32, 86, 87, 89, 105, 137, 224, 242, 305, 310, 311, 475, 504, 507, 628, 639, 706-708, 890-893, 963, 976, 977, 979, 981, 982, 1074, 1083, 1105, 1106, 1171, 1173, 1191, 1235, 1236
pastoral theology, 352, 444, 746, 811, 835, 876, 877, 879-882, 1093, 1159, 1170
patriarchs, 1, 3, 6, 38, 42, 43, 50, 141, 205, 209, 213, 215, 413, 533, 599, 607, 610, 729, 816, 817, 851, 970, 977, 978, 1169, 1191
Pauline legacy, 87, 206, 312, 404, 444, 560, 887, 889, 890, 892, 982, 984, 1224, 1226
Pauline school, 206, 404, 555, 888, 889, 892, 893
paulinisms, 23, 537, 883, 887, 893
peace, 37, 85, 102, 121, 123, 127, 130, 151, 155, 167, 179, 234, 246, 322, 323, 326, 351, 353, 361, 387, 420, 422, 450, 477, 489, 495, 496, 516, 534, 537, 538, 558, 564, 572, 596, 601, 604, 605, 650, 653, 654, 660, 696, 716, 730, 741, 874, 886, 893-900, 918, 939, 991, 1008, 1015, 1048, 1059-1062, 1090, 1106, 1109, 1121, 1196, 1236, 1240
Pella, flight to, 127, 144, 145, 229, 387, 388, 585, 758, 900-902
Pentateuch, 45, 246, 296, 316, 449, 480, 605-607, 778-780, 824, 828, 842, 933, 979, 981, 998
Pentecost, 10, 21, 23, 77, 79, 92, 97, 113, 121, 124, 144, 149, 150, 195, 244, 247, 257, 332, 333, 380, 391, 415, 492, 493, 498, 503, 508, 543, 562, 627, 630, 631, 686, 687, 722, 743, 746, 747, 752, 755, 757, 759, 773, 782, 793, 858, 902-906, 930, 939, 970, 1026, 1066, 1072, 1151, 1177-1179, 1194, 1195, 1218, 1226, 1227
perfect, perfection, 27, 37, 85, 98, 99, 117, 128, 201, 214, 215, 242, 252, 276, 277, 283, 286, 314, 320, 335, 369, 371, 380, 400, 403, 404, 408, 409, 421, 440, 445, 458, 488, 543, 549, 551, 552, 556, 557, 560, 563, 566, 590, 592, 632, 633, 645, 646, 670, 678, 697, 710, 722, 734, 794, 816, 864, 867, 870, 874, 875, 876, 897, 941, 944, 953, 966, 967, 969, 1011, 1020, 1034, 1054, 1072, 1075, 1096, 1097, 1098, 1112, 1122, 1156, 1165, 1168, 1181, 1233
persecution, 20, 25, 34-37, 54, 58, 69, 73-76, 79, 80-82, 92, 95, 99, 100, 104, 112, 131, 134, 136, 143-146, 150, 151, 165, 166, 184-192, 194, 211, 213, 214, 216, 218, 230-232, 234, 236, 240, 256, 261, 263, 273, 279, 281, 286, 322-331, 336, 337, 339, 342, 348, 355, 356, 358, 359, 366, 368-371, 381-384, 388, 390, 392, 415, 416, 423, 433, 446, 447, 449, 460, 463, 467, 475-479, 482, 496, 500, 524, 532, 534, 562, 564, 580, 581, 589, 636, 642, 660, 662, 718-722, 735, 739-741, 743, 755-757, 761, 762, 769, 770, 772, 773, 785, 822, 823, 835, 836, 838, 860, 862-864, 878, 879, 886, 887, 894, 897, 904, 907-914, 916-919, 930, 931, 934, 938, 941, 953, 959, 962, 969, 999, 1016, 1017, 1023, 1027-1029, 1035, 1037-1039, 1044, 1047, 1062, 1063, 1066, 1067, 1076, 1080, 1088, 1107, 1110, 1123-1125, 1135, 1137-1141, 1144, 1151, 1152, 1167, 1180, 1181, 1185, 1186, 1197-1200, 1202, 1204, 1205, 1208, 1216, 1217, 1218, 1219
perseverance, 39, 42, 73-76, 82, 103, 104, 122, 130, 147, 279, 321, 326, 327, 330, 335-337, 361, 364, 365, 367, 370, 384, 419, 440, 442, 443, 455, 475, 476, 479, 480, 482, 483, 500, 501, 510, 534, 538, 563, 605, 621, 633, 655, 716, 720, 721, 776, 816, 823, 835, 836, 843, 878, 881, 882, 914, 940, 950, 952, 969, 970, 1013, 1015, 1023, 1038-1040, 1044, 1062, 1073, 1139, 1140, 1170
Persis, 765
pesher, 480, 482, 562, 904, 999
Pharisees, 45, 63, 160-162, 186, 196, 206, 207, 209, 227, 305, 378, 379, 386, 502, 573, 575, 581, 599, 600, 608, 611, 647, 725-728, 775, 792, 885, 886, 990-992, 996, 1091, 1145, 1146, 1160, 1161, 1162, 1164, 1166
Philemon, 313, 520, 560, 685, 765, 877, 882, 888, 890, 981, 1171, 1238
Philetus, 31
Philip the Evangelist, 23, 191, 353, 468, 743, 929, 931, 1077
Philippi, 116, 223, 290, 355, 373, 378, 416, 512, 521, 531, 661, 711, 759, 764, 765, 771, 832, 886, 910, 934-936, 1143, 1214, 1217, 1220
Philo, 1-4, 6, 34-37, 40, 41, 43, 126, 185, 193, 221, 226, 230, 252, 263, 286-299, 326, 378, 389, 403, 444, 445, 451, 458, 480, 482, 484, 492, 497, 515, 521, 528, 552, 600, 605, 614, 643, 644, 656, 665, 667, 715, 731, 738, 775, 778-782, 815, 816, 819, 836, 842-844, 850, 860, 874, 895, 903, 911, 930-934, 957, 967, 999, 1061, 1091, 1099, 1106, 1112, 1141, 1147, 1149, 1150, 1153, 1169, 1191, 1202, 1212, 1214, 1218
philosophy, 1, 36, 37, 64, 85, 176, 182, 183, 186, 235, 255, 295, 296, 298, 307, 324, 325, 354, 356, 379, 391, 400, 402, 410, 412, 429, 436, 458, 472, 473, 474, 482, 484, 535, 546, 552, 607, 609, 622, 657, 665, 667, 706, 708, 713, 732, 751, 752, 782, 807, 818, 867, 926, 932, 933, 978, 1009, 1010, 1012, 1033, 1042, 1049, 1064, 1105, 1109, 1113, 1114, 1140, 1147, 1149, 1150, 1157, 1190, 1201, 1214, 1217
Phoebe, 765
Phrygia, 146, 288, 758, 759, 770, 975 physical body, 32, 97, 375, 376, 401, 409, 706, 985, 987, 1020, 1104, 1105 piety, 6, 41, 71, 72, 88, 170, 183, 213, 216, 235, 236, 243, 244, 271, 301, 318, 372, 378, 391, 408, 413, 414, 421, 441, 457, 470, 476, 507, 537, 546, 551, 552, 556, 558, 591, 607, 608, 610, 693, 697, 740, 753, 762, 795, 799, 801, 1007, 1008, 1051, 1052, 1128, 1139, 1141, 1159, 1162, 1163, 1192, 1196, 1216
Pilate, 120, 164, 187, 193, 256, 258, 259, 273, 274, 566, 573, 599, 913, 928, 1162, 1234
pillar, 161, 439, 465, 504, 993, 1071, 1156, 1226
Pisidia, 2, 758, 886, 1157, 1216, 1217
Platonism, 37, 263, 276, 296, 325, 375, 400-404, 406, 410, 411, 468, 482, 655, 666, 775, 777, 860, 899, 957, 958, 966, 978, 1090, 1113, 1147, 1149, 1150, 1190
polemic, 4, 28, 29, 31, 34, 70, 85, 90, 157, 160-162, 166-170, 184, 228, 248, 249, 294, 315, 351, 481, 522, 526, 549, 575, 578, 581, 582, 584, 586, 593, 596, 599, 606, 611, 620, 661, 664, 684, 701-704, 710, 727-729, 749, 769, 781, 809, 820, 833, 839, 841, 866, 875, 888, 889, 934, 952, 998, 1019, 1023, 1046, 1126, 1147, 1149, 1150, 1231 politics, 8, 17, 23, 24, 52, 58, 59, 62, 66, 112, 128, 129, 132, 148, 160, 166, 184, 201, 204, 216, 226, 232, 233, 245, 287, 289, 292, 294, 296, 297, 299, 302, 303, 325, 348, 349, 353, 386, 388, 391, 422, 475, 507, 521, 549, 561, 605, 611, 615, 631-633, 661, 717, 749, 751, 754, 756, 773, 812, 894, 897-899, 902, 907, 911, 913, 932, 951, 955, 968, 1005, 1007-1009, 1041, 1047, 1048, 1050, 1059, 1062, 1064, 1065, 1067, 1102, 1103, 1105, 1106, 1107, 1111, 1130, 1137, 1138, 1140-1142, 1146, 1158, 1165, 1196, 1215
Pontus, 79, 193, 526, 705, 706, 752, 757-759, 771, 772, 1217, 1234 poor, poverty, *8, 14, 150, 189, 209, 222, 232, 233, 291, 313-316, 318, 323, 348, 351, 352, 356, 362, 365, 469-471, 473, 476, 480, 486, 502-504, 541, 542, 546, 548-551, 556-559, 560, 568, 574, 584, 586, 634, 687, 692, 695, 698, 699, 711, 733, 734, 743, 759, 761, 786, 816, 838, 879, 882, 905, 930, 938, 962, 991, 992, 1051-

1053, 1062, 1064, 1087, 1099, 1101, 1102, 1104, 1139, 1142, 1143, 1145, 1169, 1180, 1223 possessions, 231, 315, 442, 476, 602, 604, 656, 772, 1051-1053 postal service, 760
postmodernism, 804, 808, 809, 811, 938 poststructuralism, 472, 938, 1132 power of God, 75, 76, 330, 490, 492, 623, 631, 750, 878, 938-940, 1080, 1202 powers, 44-46, 48, 50, 52, 96, 100, 117, 127, 151, 165, 169, 232, 253, 254, 261, 277, 284, 334, 349, 356, 361, 383, 396, 397, 401, 402, 404, 416, 423, 424, 426-429, 431, 444, 525, 526, 561, 565, 589, 611, 667, 749, 777, 778, 818, 870, 879, 888, 913, 922, 941, 975, 1002, 1007, 1017, 1026, 1028, 1031, 1035, 1048, 1052, 1056, 1059, 1081, 1082, 1121, 1193, 1227, 1231, 1234 praetorium, 321, 323, 1061 praise, 46, 53, 108, 125, 129-131, 180, 230, 244, 284, 302, 320, 374, 414, 428, 474, 475, 477, 494, 498, 520-522, 524-527, 563, 627, 635, 650, 660-662, 664, 665, 672, 689, 690, 692, 695, 780, 864, 902, 919, 936, 939, 940, 943, 945-947, 954, 964, 972, 1003, 1013, 1028, 1030, 1031, 1039, 1043, 1047, 1051, 1052, 1071, 1104, 1136, 1147, 1157, 1178, 1224, 1228, 1230, 1232, 1233, 1236, 1239 preaching, 19, 20, 45, 54, 71, 72, 76, 78, 79-82, 93, 100, 101, 109, 115, 116, 118, 124, 148, 150, 171, 188, 199, 203, 222, 241, 245, 256, 258, 260, 279, 286, 290, 328, 351, 353, 355, 356, 357, 359, 380, 381, 391, 392, 397, 414, 415, 416, 423, 445, 447, 448, 450, 451, 454, 456, 459, 465, 483, 484, 491, 493, 495-497, 503, 521, 534, 540, 562, 565, 566, 573, 579, 602, 626-630, 631, 632, 633, 635, 665, 666, 687, 688, 702, 705, 711, 718, 719, 732, 742, 745, 748, 755-757, 760-762, 764, 766-771, 772, 786, 793, 799, 802, 818, 824, 829, 833, 836, 863, 874, 876, 884, 885, 905, 906, 923, 926, 948, 950, 951, 954, 955, 970, 972, 973, 977, 991, 992, 1004, 1017, 1054, 1056, 1073, 1076, 1114, 1119, 1123-1125, 1143, 1144, 1195, 1204, 1241
Preaching of Peter, 72, 199, 203, 573, 665, 666, 711, 955 predestination, 317, 319-321, 415, 587, 803, 876, 1073
preexistence, 88, 153, 154, 158, 174, 181-184, 203, 304, 314, 363, 536, 648, 667, 671, 678, 682, 777, 803, 845, 955-961, 1112-1114, 1149, 1203
presbyters, 81, 82, 89, 109, 118, 120, 121, 146, 202, 224, 225, 233, 259, 374, 487, 532, 705, 707, 744, 745, 759, 881, 935, 961, 1014, 1023, 1048, 1067, 1086, 1087, 1092, 1110, 1163, 1233 pride, 241, 349, 464, 481, 520, 537, 876, 961-963, 1007, 1047, 1172, 1194, 1201, 1212 priest, priesthood, 3, 35, 36, 48, 52, 74, 79, 93, 98-100, 102, 106-108, 118, 121, 130, 152, 154, 155, 156, 172, 174, 177, 187, 198, 199, 200-202, 209, 225, 226, 231, 232, 240, 244, 248, 261, 274-278, 284, 293, 295, 298, 317, 318, 319, 332, 346, 359, 360, 361, 363, 417-419, 428, 431, 440, 443, 444, 452-455, 457, 458, 467, 480, 482, 485, 488, 498, 507, 509, 510, 528, 530, 537, 538, 539, 542, 543, 544, 547, 550, 561, 567, 575, 582, 599, 605, 608, 609, 632, 633, 635, 646, 647, 655, 661, 689, 694, 720, 729-731, 734, 735, 738, 744, 776, 817, 827, 829, 833, 838, 843, 844, 845, 849, 850, 855, 861, 878, 881, 917, 928, 933, 940, 944, 958, 963-967, 974, 988-992, 998, 999, 1002, 1007, 1008, 1016, 1022, 1039, 1043, 1070-1072, 1073, 1074, 1091, 1096, 1105, 1107, 1110, 1113, 1123, 1155, 1156, 1160, 1161, 1163, 1165, 1167, 1185, 1191, 1236 principalities and powers, 44-46, 232, 401, 818
Prisca, 762-764, 975, 976
Priscilla, 93, 291, 378, 443, 444, 446-449, 743, 764, 967, 1066, 1207, 1216-1218, 1220, 1221 prison, imprisonment, 21, 45, 46, 62, 71, 92, 100, 116, 129, 150, 186, 189, 356, 366, 374, 376, 378, 391, 415, 444, 447, 449, 459, 460, 496, 504-506, 512, 521, 535, 602, 624, 692, 721, 746, 747, 749, 750, 757, 761, 765, 808, 818, 823, 863, 883, 886, 894, 907, 982, 1003, 1017, 1067, 1080, 1087, 1100, 1101, 1119, 1123, 1137, 1138, 1139, 1185, 1195, 1219, 1220, 1234 prisoner, 54, 530, 749, 832, 883, 890, 892, 1062, 1066 proclamation, 48, 100, 101, 106, 108, 116, 146, 148, 158, 160, 161, 168, 171, 244, 249, 251, 256, 258, 263, 270, 271, 286, 348, 351, 353, 379, 432, 445, 459, 498, 526, 567, 573, 621-623, 635, 670, 719, 752, 753, 756, 757, 760, 766, 768, 770, 782, 783, 793, 800, 802, 813, 826, 838, 844, 858, 872, 877, 894, 899, 903, 906, 923, 953, 959, 971, 973, 987, 1015, 1020-1023, 1074, 1083, 1115, 1118, 1164, 1201, 1235 proconsul, 78, 147, 148, 191, 193, 323, 364, 702, 909, 910, 936, 1014 procurator, 185, 194, 764, 859, 908, 932, 1060 profane, 205, 211, 373, 377, 486, 490, 558, 639, 644, 795, 989, 1124 prophecy, 2, 17, 19, 31, 33, 40, 46, 47, 50-52, 59, 60, 66, 69, 70, 73, 101, 106, 112, 113, 115, 129, 131, 132, 151, 175, 177, 178, 183, 187, 195, 204, 235, 248, 249, 257, 262, 306, 313, 321, 331-334, 336-338, 340, 342-345, 370, 387, 426, 437, 456, 471, 475, 478, 479, 482, 489, 495, 497, 498, 509, 521, 522, 529, 536, 537, 562, 565, 573, 589, 618, 620, 626, 628, 632, 636, 637, 638, 643, 647, 653, 677, 721, 741, 743, 746, 756, 774, 775, 780, 789, 793, 794, 820, 825, 826, 828, 829, 830, 833, 841, 850-854, 857, 859, 874, 881, 886, 897, 899, 906, 921, 923-926, 953, 959, 970-978, 980, 992, 998, 1003, 1010, 1019, 1020, 1022, 1024-1027, 1037, 1045-1047, 1069, 1073, 1084, 1085, 1094, 1100, 1120, 1178, 1179, 1183, 1198, 1207, 1214, 1216, 1227 prophets, 2, 6, 14, 19, 30, 33, 36, 42, 45, 46, 48, 50-52, 70, 78-82, 87, 106, 109, 112, 119, 120, 126, 127, 132, 133, 154, 157, 166, 173, 174, 181, 195, 196, 202, 203, 220, 222, 224, 225, 246, 247, 252, 254, 258, 264, 272, 273, 279, 281, 301, 306, 313, 317, 332, 346, 347, 366, 370, 379, 392, 393, 396, 397, 414, 415, 417, 424, 425, 434-436, 467, 479, 480, 482, 487, 489, 495-497, 499, 505-507, 510, 534, 537, 540, 542, 548, 572, 573, 576, 584, 593, 597, 607, 615, 621, 637, 643, 644, 653, 670, 683, 691, 718, 728, 741, 743-746, 762, 768, 772, 775, 779, 782-784, 815, 816, 824-828, 830, 832-835, 837, 838, 845, 851, 852, 854, 874, 881, 884, 894, 916, 921, 958, 966, 970-978, 980, 994, 998, 999, 1022, 1024, 1026, 1036, 1037, 1045, 1054, 1067, 1072, 1075, 1085-1088, 1091, 1100, 1108, 1110, 1114, 1119-1121, 1123, 1124, 1129, 1157, 1163, 1170, 1181, 1183, 1185, 1188, 1197-1200, 1219, 1222, 1224, 1228, 1232, 1235 propitiation, 275, 278, 281, 282, 734, 1070, 1074, 1097 proselytes, 1, 54, 115, 160, 162, 165, 184, 215, 226, 227, 288, 292, 297, 316, 372, 389, 670, 742, 754, 906, 977, 1066, 1124, 1178, 1216, 1217 prostitutes, prostitution, 39, 111, 112, 128, 232, 558, 716, 851, 1029, 1067, 1088, 1090, 1209, 1210, 1211
proverbs, 231, 326, 419, 420, 480, 481, 502, 541, 556-558, 570, 572-574, 606, 614, 670, 674, 695, 716, 781, 814, 816, 818, 819, 829, 831, 832, 837, 839, 896, 936, 957, 962, 980, 1073, 1201, 1203, 1208 providence, 39, 326, 390, 415, 422, 423, 429, 430, 773, 783, 805, 806, 886, 945, 954, 977, 1019, 1033, 1173, 1204 pseudepigrapha, 6, 44, 68, 69, 72, 85, 86, 607, 611, 783, 818, 820, 977, 979, 983, 984
pseudepigraphy, 6, 7, 24, 30, 44, 47, 55, 68, 102, 135, 142, 143, 192, 206, 234, 243, 363, 483, 489, 606-608, 610, 616, 617, 649, 654, 766, 816, 817, 818, 823, 867, 888, 924, 927, 955, 977-984, 1086, 1159, 1175 psychology, 132, 243, 376, 439, 741, 951, 984, 985,

1117, 1170
Ptolemais, 290, 758
punishment, 5, 6, 47, 63, 69, 75, 127, 132, 165, 213, 216, 230, 240, 246, 251, 253, 254, 272, 275, 305, 320, 326, 328, 346, 347, 357, 415, 425, 429, 438, 441, 459-461, 530, 564, 600, 621, 623-625, 657, 658, 695, 703, 715, 777, 818, 821, 841, 845, 850, 862, 902, 909, 919, 932, 956, 961, 962, 969, 988, 989, 1003, 1010, 1013, 1033, 1040, 1059, 1060-1062, 1081, 1085, 1089, 1092, 1095, 1097, 1098, 1100, 1121, 1123, 1168, 1180, 1183, 1186, 1188, 1189, 1221, 1241 purity, 29, 32, 42, 74, 160, 233, 236, 241, 243, 261, 304, 305, 374, 376-379, 384, 386, 389, 402, 422, 423, 425, 444, 485, 486, 488, 501, 503, 518, 528, 535, 541, 546, 557, 575, 576, 592, 623, 647, 648, 699, 715, 728, 745, 822, 828, 888, 917, 925, 940, 945, 968, 988-996, 1007, 1013, 1019, 1040, 1044, 1054, 1074, 1080, 1088, 1095, 1104, 1105, 1111, 1142, 1144, 1146, 1160-1164, 1172, 1188, 1194, 1212, 1213, 1220
Quartus, 765
Qumran, 44-47, 60, 61, 65-67, 73, 130, 132, 192, 196, 267, 304, 305, 316, 331, 343, 345, 378, 411, 465, 480, 482, 502, 504, 510, 511, 540, 587, 607, 613, 659, 731, 782-784, 815, 817-820, 827, 834, 838, 841, 843, 864, 956, 963, 965, 980, 991, 997-1000, 1012, 1093, 1102, 1116, 1117, 1119, 1123, 1160, 1166, 1169, 1175, 1180, 1191, 1194, 1201, 1202, 1227
rabbis, 127, 130, 164, 167, 185, 186, 293, 430, 529, 606, 608, 610, 666, 781, 842, 843, 845, 962, 994, 1112, 1142, 1145, 1146, 1161
rabbinic tradition, 169, 608, 1157, 1161, 1191
Rahab, 39, 41, 369, 419, 421, 480, 481, 502, 507, 537, 539, 551, 553, 554, 558, 815, 816, 830, 835, 895, 899, 1001, 1003, 1056, 1212, 1216, 1218 realized eschatology, 27, 30-32, 51, 182, 425, 803, 868, 1233 rebellion, 29, 35, 36, 43, 51, 109, 168, 172, 184, 185, 214, 231, 415, 459, 538, 550, 599, 605, 635, 758, 807, 836, 840, 841, 912, 962, 1012, 1014, 1030, 1047, 1052, 1059, 1060, 1085, 1169, 1231, 1240 reconciliation, 36, 47, 161, 247, 314, 315, 343, 377, 382, 446, 485, 684, 691, 781, 792, 814, 875, 894, 896, 898, 899, 1004, 1012, 1188, 1227, 1229, 1232 redaction, redaction criticism, 9, 468, 477, 573, 574, 614, 713, 726, 727, 800, 877, 1125, 1174
redeem, redemption, 7, 11, 36, 40, 45, 88, 118, 124, 160, 168, 173, 174, 177, 180, 195, 200, 206, 211, 223, 252, 253, 255, 276-280, 283-286, 317, 335, 338, 347, 369, 374, 384, 401, 405, 413, 430, 433-435, 456, 498, 501, 507, 523, 532, 542, 549, 590, 601, 610, 626, 627, 633, 635, 637, 641, 660, 687, 731, 747, 770, 780, 792, 793, 801, 805, 830, 840, 898, 899, 908, 938, 939, 956-958, 1001-1004, 1014, 1035, 1036, 1070, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1080, 1083, 1086, 1098, 1114, 1118, 1148, 1150, 1160, 1165, 1192, 1226, 1232, 1235 redeemer, 27, 172, 192, 193, 215, 306, 401, 404, 407, 410, 525, 723, 780, 888, 956, 1034, 1148, 1223, 1224 reign of God, 232, 351, 551, 630, 1004
relatives of Jesus, 33, 47, 133, 145, 173, 187, 229, 287, 314, 387, 467, 545, 616, 619, 723, 724, 743, 757, 1004-1006, 1098, 1228
religions, 55, 84, 128, 146, 159, 176, 178, 212, 228, 230, 250, 287, 296, 304, 325, 389, 391, 411, 414, 436, 441, 449, 528, 530, 535, 599, 625, 639, 701, 704, 706, 760, 782-784, 792, 797-799, 807, 808, 855, 880, 911, 920, 1006, 1011, 1028, 1036, 1069, 1078, 1103, 1109, 1111, 1115, 1122, 1130, 1147, 1148, 1150, 1166, 1177, 1206-1208, 1217 remarriage, 540, 713, 714, 717, 1089, 1215 repentance, 6, 11, 20, 21, 32, 38, 42, 44, 46, 75, 76, 78, 89, 90, 98, 104, 109, 114, 116, 117, 120, 121, 129, 160, 167, 207, 209, 227, 236, 244, 246, 247, 258, 260, 262, 266, 269, 270, 273, 274, 305, 306, 320, 326, 333, 334, 338, 343, 350-352, 354, 356-358, 360, 364, 367, 368, 380-382, 384, 391, 416, 417, 419, 425, 438, 442, 456, 457, 469-471, 477, 489, 500, 501, 511, 513, 518, 551, 555, 557, 583, 601, 621, 622, 626, 627, 629, 631, 656, 657, 663, 677, 687, 688, 690, 694, 713, 714, 735, 738, 744, 745, 752, 763, 766, 768, 806, 823, 829, 832, 837, 859, 866, 876, 882, 886, 887, 903, 905, 926, 940, 942, 953, 963, 1011-1015, 1040, 1052, 1054, 1055, 1058, 1074, 1075, 1081, 1082, 1086, 1100, 1101, 1118, 1119, 1123, 1138, 1149, 1159, 1168, 1170, 1180, 1188, 1189, 1192, 1197, 1198, 1230 rescue, 21, 42, 100, 197, 415, 425, 459, 463, 624, 766, 836, 880, 987, 1097, 1101, 1167, 1185, 1223, 1224 restoration of Israel, 160, 204, 363, 885, 886, 1182 resurrection appearances, 96, 101, 904, 905 resurrection body, 97, 740
retribution, 40, 129, 462, 558, 623, 625, 1219 reveal, 33, 35, 58, 62, 66, 69, 84, 85, 134, 163, 174, 191, 232, 273, 296, 305, 335, 360, 388, 399, 416, 444, 485, 509, 510, 519, 546, 639, 640, 749, 750, 776, 784, 786, 806, 811, 825, 869, 876, 899, 932, 954, 976, 1019, 1020, 1025, 1036, 1048, 1084, 1088, 1220 reverence, 38, 74, 172, 174, 178, 362, 370-372, 610, 632, 809, 917, 920, 943, 1032, 1038, 1053, 1071, 1090, 1101, 1120, 1193, 1196, 1201, 1212
rewards, 38, 39, 43, 47, 69, 99, 177, 214, 251, 266, 281, 306, 320, 327, 330, 335-338, 342, 343, 352, 361, 368, 370, 419, 429, 430, 439, 507, 575, 604, 621, 623, 625, 676, 720, 735, 739, 781, 821, 821-823, 845, 862, 868, 899, 913, 914, 920, 956, 960, 970, 1018, 1038-1041, 1048, 1052, 1096, 1223, 1239
rhetoric, 85, 179, 228, 229, 234, 302, 395, 400, 418, 427, 444, 450, 451, 457, 475, 476, 483, 529, 531, 553, 561, 599, 612, 615, 620, 650, 651, 654, 655, 707, 732, 733, 787, 788, 791, 918, 919, 932, 955, 992, 995, 996, 1015, 1020, 1041-1050, 1056, 1105, 1132, 1134, 1158, 1159, 1195, 1222, 1223, 1233 rhetorical analysis, criticism, 34, 451, 457, 475, 483, 484, 612-614, 620, 629, 650, 654, 791, 927, 1041, 1042, 1048, 1050, 1051, 1133, 1134, 1159 rich, riches, 14, 34, 76, 103, 153, 156, 157, 163, 173, 175, 179, 181, 189, 209, 232, 250, 291, 315, 318, 347, 349, 351, 352, 362, 365, 385, 395, 417, 444, 469-471, 476, 480, 495, 541, 542, 549-551, 553, 555, 558-560, 564, 565, 568, 606, 617, 624, 634, 654, 692, 695, 698, 709-711, 721, 732, 736, 786, 808, 816, 822, 834, 835, 837, 840, 879, 886, 938, 948, 962, 963, 1022, 1036, 1039, 1044, 1051-1054, 1061, 1064, 1087, 1102, 1104, 1126, 1145, 1202, 1223 right hand of God, 62, 74, 164, 252, 253, 273, 275, 281, 328, 361, 479, 626, 630, 632, 633, 646, 845, 960, 1016, 1140 Righteous One, 149, 280, 365, 956, 1053, 1054, 1058 righteous sufferer, 271, 523, 524, 824, 839
righteousness, 4, 5, 38, 41, 42, 66, 88-91, 117, 161, 241, 251, 253, 266, 277, 286, 310, 320, 335, 351, 360, 366, 368, 382, 413, 421, 423, 435, 442, 446, 499, 500, 537, 539, 573, 581-583, 597, 624, 625, 632, 635, 637, 655, 657, 694, 730, 735, 770, 794, 802, 803, 814, 815, 822, 824, 837, 839, 866, 876, 893, 895-897, 899, 925, 926, 935, 936, 945, 946, 951, 991, 1003, 1014, 1015, 1021, 1053-1059, 1095, 1098, 1169, 1180, 1184, 1186, 1193, 1194, 1197, 1205, 1216, 1240
righteousness of God, 310, 802, 926, 1054, 1055, 1058 rising with Christ, 712 ritual purity, 261, 305, 377, 378, 386, 546, 1007 road, 18, 53, 78, 115, 146-148, 354, 358, 658, 669, 688, 718, 747, 883, 884, 931, 990, 1014, 1061, 1139, 1237
Roman administration, 760, 1059
Roman Christianity, 93, 150, 151, 163, 237, 446, 457, 1059, 1063, 1065, 1225,

1233
Roman citizenship, 230, 233, 243, 599, 764, 886, 953, 1060-1062, 1066
Roman Empire, 50, 52, 55, 59, 62, 64, 93, 95, 111, 112, 145, 184, 185, 193, 217, 222, 231, 232, 235, 240, 255, 300, 323, 325, 349, 354, 355, 359, 366, 381, 388, 389, 393, 394, 431, 483, 521, 528, 530, 550, 599, 629, 634, 636, 637, 661, 705, 707, 732, 752, 754, 757, 759, 774, 822, 898, 908, 912, 916, 918, 919, 936, 938, 1011, 1028, 1029, 1034, 1038, 1059, 1063, 1067, 1085, 1091, 1098, 1099, 1101, 1102, 1110, 1111, 1117, 1150-1152, 1179, 1183, 1196, 1205-1207, 1215, 1222, 1240
Roman religion, 792, 880, 1006, 1007, 1011, 1166
Rufus, 329, 1140 rule of faith, 256, 258, 259, 456, 457, 1068 rule of God, 790, 1009 ruler of the Synagogue, 123, 148, 223, 293 ruler of this age, 1068, 1078, 1079 rulers, 50, 107, 129, 231, 236, 284, 324, 385, 631, 636, 668, 744, 913, 947, 1008, 1012, 1014, 1029, 1033, 1074, 1075, 1082, 1091, 1120, 1158, 1211, 1213, 1221
Sabbath, 33, 35, 36, 48, 125, 130, 161, 162, 164, 203, 213, 221, 222, 226, 229, 240, 257, 292, 293, 297, 298, 314, 335, 342, 344, 455, 486, 540, 576, 580, 583, 584, 632, 633, 645, 647-649, 675, 679, 681-686, 688, 728, 735, 740, 753, 828, 844, 895, 944, 1036, 1069, 1104, 1110, 1141, 1144-1146, 1216, 1231, 1238 sabotaim, 608, 1069 sacred space, 458, 565, 967, 1069
sacrifice, 3, 4, 6, 25, 26, 36, 38, 39, 41, 48, 50, 74, 79, 88, 98, 99, 145, 148, 154, 161, 172, 203, 213, 225, 240, 242, 246, 248, 261, 269, 274-278, 280-284, 286, 315, 325, 327, 334, 350, 360-362, 377, 379, 381, 383, 392, 394, 417-419, 444, 448, 450, 453, 455, 457, 458, 480, 485, 487, 510, 522, 525, 526, 528, 529, 534, 537, 567, 583, 594, 631, 641, 642, 646-649, 689-691, 693, 694, 732, 737, 744, 751, 761, 778, 780, 806, 823, 827, 828, 838, 843, 850, 861, 898, 910-912, 936, 942, 944, 958, 964, 985, 988-993, 996, 998, 1002, 1003, 1007, 1008, 1012, 1013, 1016, 1022, 1028, 1029, 1043, 1052, 1054, 1056, 1069-1073, 1079, 1096, 1097, 1100, 1108, 1140, 1141, 1149, 1155, 1156, 1159-1162, 1164-1166, 1185, 1204, 1224, 1228, 1230, 1233, 1237
Sadducees, 30, 45, 196, 209, 547, 550, 551, 775, 776, 990, 1160, 1166 saints, 45, 46, 78, 80, 95, 102, 108, 112, 126, 129, 131, 177, 196, 218, 220, 237, 238, 278, 302, 316, 330, 331, 334, 337, 339, 341, 342, 366, 468, 470, 471, 483, 488, 502, 504, 533, 540, 564, 579, 604, 619, 633, 636, 644, 658, 717-719, 730, 739, 741, 746, 776, 781, 784, 823, 838, 839, 889, 908, 927, 937, 938, 942, 974, 985, 998, 1009, 1017, 1030, 1067, 1071, 1080, 1085, 1088, 1118, 1122, 1126, 1137, 1138, 1146, 1151, 1156, 1193, 1198, 1210, 1214, 1222, 1237, 1238 Salamis, 142, 314 salvation history, 44, 45, 206, 207, 209, 212, 216, 245, 249, 632, 646, 647, 725, 746, 751, 768, 798, 799, 808, 844, 878, 904, 951, 1043, 1124, 1138, 1227, 1233, 1236
Samaria, 11, 14, 23, 73, 78, 114, 144, 151, 157, 185, 192, 211, 251, 387, 391, 416, 493, 496, 562, 631, 661, 702, 742, 752, 755, 756, 763, 764, 766, 894, 903, 930, 931, 1075-1077, 1138, 1163, 1204, 1227, 1235 sanctify, sanctification, 33, 99, 118, 276, 277, 319, 375, 485-488, 807, 895, 1195 sanctuary, 36, 53, 74, 98, 248, 274, 275, 341, 360, 440, 448, 453, 455, 457, 458, 480, 497, 511, 530, 606, 633, 816, 850, 944, 956, 958, 966, 967, 988, 1007-1010, 1016, 1027, 1072, 1077, 1085, 1141, 1145, 1154-1156, 1158, 1163, 1165, 1219, 1233
Sanhedrin, 45, 77, 185, 187, 231, 431, 743, 755, 756, 762, 767, 994, 1082, 1123-1125, 1162, 1195
Sarah, 4, 39, 419, 480, 502, 517, 538, 671, 817, 835, 879, 896, 1208, 1215, 1218, 1222, 1234
Satan, 3, 21, 26, 42, 46, 47, 50-52, 63, 74, 75, 100, 108, 115, 122, 127, 129, 166, 175, 199, 205, 210, 232, 240, 253, 254, 263, 274, 287, 331, 332, 342, 348, 359, 362, 366, 368, 371, 381, 382, 460, 477, 483, 486, 494, 528, 634-637, 640, 655, 657, 695, 698, 702-704, 718-720, 739, 751, 794, 819, 845, 852, 869, 881, 886, 898, 913, 920, 939, 941, 1011, 1015, 1023, 1028, 1031, 1034, 1035, 1039, 1040, 1047, 1048, 1062, 1068, 1077-1082, 1098, 1118, 1121, 1122, 1138, 1140, 1149, 1166, 1169, 1170, 1181, 1193, 1196, 1199, 1200, 1239
Savior, 19, 20, 23, 40, 70, 76, 79, 120, 154, 157, 159, 160, 163, 174, 175, 180, 247, 254, 282, 306, 308, 314, 330, 359, 392, 408, 411, 413, 415, 460, 521, 556, 584, 630, 633, 639, 660, 672, 677, 686, 691, 692, 706, 707, 733, 773, 813, 891, 896, 946, 961, 969, 979, 987, 1035, 1055, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1082-1084, 1112, 1128, 1186, 1192, 1222, 1223
sayings of Jesus, 87, 91, 173, 179, 180, 181, 235-237, 241, 302, 390, 411, 560, 566-570, 572-581, 584, 674, 675, 691, 693, 709, 830, 901, 948, 990, 1019, 1020, 1176, 1177, 1204, 1213, 1237, 1238 scandal, 323, 807, 887, 915, 1143 school of Tyrannus, 357 scribes, 166, 175, 268, 270, 577, 586, 676, 689, 852, 853, 908, 927, 996, 1172-1174 Scythians, 754
sea, 21, 39, 44, 52, 61, 62, 67, 84, 118, 127-129, 132, 146, 184, 188, 232, 241, 250-252, 254, 267, 296, 309, 329-331, 355, 385, 387, 388, 411, 414, 426, 427, 464, 465, 508, 511, 541, 573, 576, 610, 634, 635, 657, 688, 705, 729-731, 749, 750, 760, 780, 834, 835, 851-854, 900, 914, 927, 956, 997, 1000, 1003, 1033, 1037, 1061, 1063, 1080, 1081, 1086, 1092, 1099, 1122, 1127, 1129, 1157, 1160, 1164, 1165, 1170, 1183 sea travel, 760, 1061
seal of the Spirit, 49, 124, 1238 seals, 104, 132, 340, 441, 477, 642, 704, 851, 869, 870, 928, 1030, 1031, 1037, 1081, 1084-1086, 1162, 1179, 1182
Second Apocalypse of James, 72, 1086 Second Exodus, 200
second repentance, 76, 104, 306, 350, 352, 357, 367, 381, 382, 456, 457, 471, 882, 963, 1011, 1013, 1015, 1075, 1081, 1086 Secret Gospel of Mark, 708-710, 712, 1086 sectarian Judaism, 815, 840 sectarianism, 229, 598 seed, 1, 6, 130, 208-210, 283, 404, 491, 590, 638, 646, 720, 793, 794, 969, 1019, 1080 seed of Abraham, 209, 210
Seleucia, 53, 288, 1004, 1219
Seneca, 325, 326, 715, 718, 734, 1064-1066, 1100, 1157
Septuagint, 1, 2, 18, 34, 40, 45, 48, 49, 87, 114, 149, 164, 166, 167, 174, 196, 197, 204, 211, 221, 232, 234, 246, 251, 252, 254, 264, 268, 270, 275, 280, 283, 287, 298, 336, 337, 377, 399, 416, 439, 440, 444, 466, 479, 480, 508, 510, 521, 522, 536, 538, 540, 542, 546, 600, 601, 614, 643, 662, 677, 680, 698, 706, 708, 715, 725, 733, 754, 768, 778, 782, 786, 792, 815, 824, 826, 829-832, 829, 834, 835, 838, 839, 843-845, 849, 850, 851, 858, 886, 894, 896, 904, 905, 933, 936, 953, 957, 966, 968, 1020, 1021, 1054, 1072, 1073, 1082, 1083, 1086, 1092-1094, 1118-1120, 1126-1129, 1147, 1164, 1168, 1184
Sergius Paulus, 364, 749, 1059 sermonic genre, 450, 1086 servant, 1, 18, 46, 62, 62, 76, 95, 110, 114, 115, 132, 141, 171, 172, 177, 180, 181, 200, 209, 217, 221, 223, 242, 255, 269, 271-273, 275, 279-281, 284, 317, 356, 363, 398, 402, 423, 441, 487, 491, 507, 510, 523, 524, 545, 614, 632, 641, 642, 666, 675, 691, 697, 702, 719, 721, 739, 740, 745, 746, 750, 752, 765, 780-782, 824, 829, 833, 838, 851, 854, 881, 882, 891, 910, 915, 930, 941, 965, 969, 974, 1002, 1003, 1024, 1026, 1033, 1055, 1061, 1080, 1086-1088, 1092, 1095,

1126, 1129, 1136, 1139, 1180, 1181, 1206, 1209
Servant of the Lord/Yahweh, 491, 752 service, 1, 9, 48, 55, 104, 106, 109, 110, 118, 122, 123, 130, 166, 171, 183, 224, 234, 274, 277, 292, 296, 348, 361, 370, 423, 424, 430, 444, 449, 452, 465, 476, 486, 487, 490, 509, 513, 521, 525, 526, 532, 541, 659, 674, 680, 684, 687, 691, 692, 696-699, 731, 744-746, 760, 763, 769, 825, 837, 860, 867, 882, 884, 885, 897, 920, 930, 931, 940, 954, 960, 966, 988, 989, 1012, 1047, 1048, 1060, 1086-1088, 1101, 1165, 1166, 1209, 1216, 1221, 1224, 1225, 1229, 1230, 1233 sexual ethics, 144, 352, 499, 717, 882, 1088, 1090, 1110, 1194 sexual immorality, 43, 383, 528, 703, 715, 716, 925, 1008, 1045, 1088, 1149, 1192 sexuality, 144, 352, 499, 717, 882, 996, 1088, 1089, 1110, 1194
Shalom, 565, 874, 1090
shame, 99, 166, 167, 242, 280, 361, 363, 418, 446, 458, 464, 744, 749, 868, 919, 920, 1062, 1099, 1100, 1104, 1106, 1136, 1208 sheep, 108, 188, 206, 281, 314, 473, 536, 598, 603, 638, 639, 732, 752, 828, 876, 877, 882, 915, 921, 922, 992, 1029, 1039, 1090-1093, 1181, 1235
shekinah, 1090
shema, 167, 412, 413, 421, 586, 889, 1158, 1229 shepherd, 69, 91, 107, 108, 119, 125, 158, 172, 174, 183, 191, 199, 206, 208, 224, 231, 281, 286, 376, 496, 513, 554, 560, 638-639, 642, 662, 678, 694, 705, 743, 818, 828, 834, 856, 864, 876, 877, 880, 882, 915, 921, 922, 973, 1013, 1023, 1027, 1037, 1091-1091, 1095, 1096, 1180, 1199, 1224, 1229, 1235, 1238, 1240
ships, shipping, 148, 373, 688, 689, 705, 747, 765, 972, 1061, 1063, 1183, 1241
Sibylline Oracles, 58, 70, 111, 128, 287, 296, 1034, 1093, 1191, 1211
Sidon, 758, 894
signs and wonders, 19, 23, 50, 51, 76, 356, 415, 437, 438, 496, 498, 630, 702, 704, 742, 750, 751, 906, 938, 941, 1093-1095, 1181
Silas, 54, 116, 123, 356, 521, 616, 687, 743, 756, 764, 883, 886, 894, 907, 910, 971, 994, 1100, 1163, 1217, 1220
Silvanus, 72, 323, 407, 409-411, 444, 764, 915, 916, 922, 1159, 1163
Simon Magus, 71, 72, 146, 192, 357, 380, 381, 402-404, 529, 584, 586, 749, 750, 930, 931, 953, 1076, 1095, 1148
Sinai, 2, 38, 40, 168, 172, 197-199, 246, 249, 396, 448, 467, 485, 561, 563-565, 610, 780, 821, 857, 861, 903, 906, 956, 958 sinners, 4, 14, 42, 44, 49, 69, 76, 117, 160, 209, 267, 275, 378, 429, 485-488, 490, 658, 687, 694, 733, 768, 770, 823, 926, 951, 1002, 1014, 1045, 1073, 1097, 1168, 1191, 1236, 1239
sisters of Jesus, 1004, 1006, 1098
Sitz im Leben, 59, 521, 522, 550, 551, 554, 663, 729, 918, 1225 slander, 241, 242, 369, 558, 634, 716, 761, 778, 918-920, 1066, 1077, 1101, 1107, 1211, 1213
slaves, slavery, 42, 113, 150, 200, 231, 278, 280, 284, 289, 291, 320, 350, 356, 371, 384, 435, 448, 500, 512-514, 517-519, 534, 668, 713, 715, 721, 735, 761, 765, 772, 835, 836, 907, 911, 917, 918, 950, 969, 973, 985, 1001-1003, 1010, 1029, 1031, 1032, 1060, 1064, 1086, 1087, 1092, 1098-1102, 1107, 1108, 1110, 1117, 1135, 1136, 1145, 1158, 1181, 1206-1208, 1212, 1213, 1215, 1217, 1219, 1220 social institutions, 230, 231, 1102 social setting, 58, 59, 66, 67, 129, 151, 204, 226, 237, 374, 379, 444, 445, 471, 476, 478, 483, 507, 513, 519, 533, 697, 746, 773, 882, 919, 995, 1053, 1088, 1101-1105, 1107, 1109, 1111, 1156, 1198, 1200 sociology, 513, 547, 600, 726, 882, 1102, 1111, 1132 soldiers, 109, 243, 291, 332, 531, 759, 913, 928, 1009, 1060, 1061, 1064, 1065 solid food, 117, 418, 445, 736-738, 882, 1111, 1115, 1117, 1159
Son of David, 356, 610, 1082
Son of God, 2, 26, 27, 36, 47, 52, 74, 88, 100, 115, 156, 158, 164, 175, 183, 192, 199, 241, 258, 259, 261, 283, 343, 363, 381, 392, 443, 445, 450, 455, 491, 509, 578, 584, 591, 597, 628, 629, 637, 668, 670, 673, 678, 704, 723, 726, 745, 779, 785, 794, 823, 845, 877, 899, 928, 944, 959-961, 964, 1003, 1023, 1024, 1046, 1057, 1073, 1074, 1079, 1083, 1111-1117, 1122, 1193, 1241
Son of man, 62, 158, 164, 206, 273, 337, 338, 356, 360, 396, 630, 704, 799, 843, 859, 956, 959-961, 1002, 1123, 1164, 1203 songs, 21, 48, 428, 466, 520-522, 524, 525, 539, 540, 604, 662, 723, 780, 823, 851, 962, 1027, 1029, 1030, 1115, 1222, 1237 sons of God, 100, 209
sonship, 42, 45, 75, 108, 152-154, 172, 176, 183, 200, 238, 445, 502, 661, 785, 794, 819, 822, 1016, 1111-1116, 1118, 1139
Sophia, 193, 395, 396, 401, 404, 406-410, 420, 931, 957, 1185, 1201-1203 sorrow, 477, 564, 603, 949, 1121 soul, 33, 71, 72, 122, 123, 168, 203, 239, 259, 296, 325, 367, 375, 402, 409, 410, 418, 462, 482, 610, 624, 655, 657, 706, 737, 740, 775-777, 933, 946, 985-987, 1019, 1073, 1103, 1117, 1121, 1122, 1149, 1213
South Galatia, 146, 755, 757, 764
Spain, 15, 71, 300, 321, 358, 446, 754, 755, 758, 762, 764, 767
speaking in tongues, 1117, 1179 speeches in Acts, 7, 10, 10-12, 24, 97, 269, 271, 382, 415, 450, 542, 566, 626, 627, 767, 826, 887, 905, 906, 1012, 1117, 1126
Spirit of Christ, 154, 174, 279, 491, 499, 905, 1022
Spirit of God, 261, 489-492, 497, 639, 702, 755, 779, 836, 905, 947, 1020, 1119, 1121, 1165
spirits, 46-48, 100, 101, 108, 112, 129, 133, 158, 263, 266, 286, 287, 359, 376, 401, 428, 490, 498, 522, 526, 527, 563, 593, 655, 657, 701, 702, 704, 713, 776, 786, 818, 819, 836, 863, 921-923, 940, 941, 973, 985, 987, 1016, 1017, 1020, 1032, 1079, 1081, 1117-1122, 1166, 1170, 1185, 1193
spiritual body, 96, 97 spiritual food, 690, 738, 981 spiritual house, 107, 507, 510, 511, 513, 519, 689, 921, 1071, 1123, 1155 spiritual rock, 853
spiritual songs, 520
spirituality, 283, 458, 592, 593, 685, 1235
Stephen, 2, 6, 11, 22, 23, 38, 40, 41, 45, 54, 62, 106, 107, 123, 146, 149, 161, 227, 247, 273, 356, 357, 360, 387, 396, 414, 416, 433, 463, 464, 466-468, 508, 509, 543, 559, 580, 586, 630, 631, 644, 647, 718, 742, 748, 750, 755-757, 762, 764, 767, 775, 824, 859, 862, 884, 904, 930, 931, 941, 943, 944, 970, 972, 1054, 1076, 1094, 1123-1126, 1180, 1201, 1204
Stoic, Stoicism, 85, 235, 237, 311, 324, 325, 356, 370, 383, 441, 468, 515, 552, 568, 599, 655, 702, 737, 762, 772, 776, 818, 819, 866, 932, 960, 961, 1012, 1090, 1099, 1157, 1190 stone, 37, 57, 68, 107, 158, 164, 174, 182, 183, 199, 223, 239, 245, 300, 317, 361, 422, 480, 481, 510, 538, 633, 638, 646, 678, 817, 828, 835, 838, 851, 915, 920, 1007, 1071, 1126-1128, 1155, 1162
stone of stumbling, 915
strangers, 4, 219, 231, 250, 253, 343, 352, 374, 388, 501, 502, 504-507, 692, 760, 883, 889, 897, 917, 919, 1129, 1136, 1233, 1234
structuralism, 306, 452, 472, 477, 483, 791, 1049, 1129-1132
stumbling, stumbling block, 90, 262, 319, 320, 390, 538, 644, 838, 886, 915, 920, 965, 1127, 1128, 1192 Suffering Servant, 1, 114, 115, 180, 271, 272, 279-281, 284, 523, 641, 642, 780, 824, 838, 891, 1092, 1136, 1139, 1180, 1181 synagogue, 2, 21, 22, 54, 78, 78, 91-93, 106, 123, 126, 130, 144, 146-148, 150, 153, 160, 165-169, 198, 204, 205, 208, 212, 218, 220-224, 226, 228, 229, 287-293, 297-300, 348, 356, 357, 377, 378, 386, 390, 391, 445, 448, 450, 454, 456, 501, 504, 512, 521, 524, 549, 558, 566, 583, 585-589, 605, 606, 609, 611, 660-662, 695,

705, 728, 742, 743, 761, 762, 770, 774, 825, 845, 882, 885, 905, 940, 944, 947, 980, 1072, 1080, 1082, 1099, 1102, 1106, 1108, 1109, 1123, 1125, 1137, 1138, 1141-1147, 1152, 1157, 1165, 1207, 1214, 1216, 1217, 1229-1231, 1235, 1237, 1238

syncretism, 171, 299, 309, 411, 529, 703, 772, 773, 1007, 1011, 1146-1148, 1150, 1210

Syntyche, 765

Syria, 50, 53, 55, 72, 94, 126, 142, 144-146, 151, 185, 192, 194, 243, 288, 301, 307, 316, 317, 321, 323, 324, 387, 388, 404, 530, 531, 533, 548, 584, 585, 599, 618, 663, 666, 682, 683, 705, 707, 708, 726, 757, 758, 764, 766, 823, 898, 993, 1005, 1009, 1048, 1059-1061, 1089, 1150, 1151, 1175, 1224, 1225, 1227-1229, 1231

Syrian Antioch, 434, 495, 725-727, 764, 1150

Syrian Christianity, 72, 73, 151, 229, 317, 533, 766, 823, 1150-1152, 1175, 1225, 1229

tabernacle, 35, 40, 41, 98, 274, 360, 361, 396, 439, 440, 448, 453, 457, 466, 467, 480, 482, 487, 497, 508-511, 633, 646, 824, 844, 849, 850, 956, 958, 966, 967, 1003, 1016, 1022, 1070, 1072, 1077, 1154, 1155, 1165, 1185, 1218

table fellowship, 161, 186, 376-379, 502, 503, 530, 587, 649, 687, 693, 996, 1104, 1105, 1110, 1156, 1230

Talmud, 167, 507, 605, 606, 608, 609, 611, 820, 1142, 1156, 1191

tannaim, 608, 611, 1156

Tannaitic Period, 608

targums, 133, 167, 600, 605-607, 609, 656, 729, 731, 779, 817, 820, 997, 1142, 1143, 1156

Tarsus, 146, 753, 755, 758, 762, 1099, 1123, 1219

taxes, 201, 288, 289, 291, 293, 294, 297, 322, 323, 378, 385, 387, 502, 517, 549, 725, 728, 1142, 1059, 1064, 1164

teacher, teachers, 25, 28-34, 41-43, 46, 50, 51, 72-76, 78, 79, 81, 106-109, 122, 126, 142, 146, 149, 155, 158, 160, 170, 186, 194, 224, 225, 240, 255, 259, 304, 305, 308, 329, 335, 336, 342, 348, 354, 357, 368-370, 383, 392, 397, 400, 404, 405, 424, 425, 456, 459, 460, 464, 469, 475, 476, 482, 490, 504-506, 508, 513, 518, 525, 532, 549, 558, 568, 575, 589, 591, 593, 596, 603, 608, 610-613, 615, 618, 622, 628, 642, 652, 654, 697, 704, 707, 714-716, 728, 737, 741, 743-745, 752, 768, 769, 771, 772, 784, 822, 825, 833, 844, 874, 876, 879-881, 884, 894, 896, 923-925, 934, 946, 954, 961, 962, 968, 973, 978, 1007, 1013, 1019, 1044-1046, 1067, 1083, 1086, 1087, 1091, 1109, 1114, 1115, 1120, 1129, 1131, 1142, 1144-1146, 1161, 1162, 1185, 1197, 1201, 1202, 1216, 1218, 1220, 1224, 1226, 1228, 1229

teaching of Jesus, 65, 80, 81, 160, 235, 540, 565, 566, 569, 576, 645, 707, 756, 801, 803, 831, 857, 962, 1021, 1026, 1054, 1093, 1112, 1115, 1158, 1163, 1193

Teachings of Silvanus, 72, 407, 409, 411, 1159 temple of God, 51, 108, 1031, 1155

temple tax, 288, 291, 293, 294, 297, 1142

temptation, 74, 75, 253, 351, 422, 491, 604, 695, 696, 698, 703, 793, 815, 837, 879, 881, 944, 958, 986, 992, 1038, 1048, 1053, 1079, 1081, 1096, 1098, 1166-1170, 1199, 1200, 1225, 1233

Ten Commandments, 646, 827, 830, 1096

Ter Sanctus, 524, 660, 662-664, 1171

Tertius, 765

testamentary literature, 977, 1171

testimonia, 127, 479, 481, 523, 1128

testimony, 29, 30, 53, 56, 57, 77, 94, 103, 122, 123, 128, 140, 149, 150, 155, 177, 186, 240, 242, 259, 262, 282, 284, 301, 308, 312, 329, 330, 339, 342, 349, 359, 393, 409, 410, 424, 445, 467, 497, 503, 505, 506, 522, 529, 539, 569, 588, 597, 629, 635, 677, 693, 710, 717-721, 723, 769, 772, 852, 884, 897, 900, 901, 907, 908, 912, 915, 916, 918, 921, 922, 935, 959, 974, 983, 994, 1005, 1026, 1042, 1082, 1089, 1120, 1137, 1138, 1141, 1163, 1184, 1195, 1197, 1204, 1205, 1220, 1227

textual criticism, 9, 268, 483, 620, 1171, 1173

thanks, thanksgiving, 120, 130, 131, 131, 268, 407, 409, 410, 414, 428, 449, 450, 474, 522, 525, 526, 531, 607, 650-652, 671, 688-692, 733, 738, 744, 768, 864, 889, 942, 943, 947, 1030, 1053, 1226, 1232, 1235

theophany, 307, 396, 397, 419, 427, 561, 563, 818, 840, 857, 866, 867, 875, 903, 960, 1120, 1182

Thessalonica, 290, 530, 758, 764, 765, 771, 1144, 1217

thief, 266, 271, 425, 570, 571, 866, 869, 920, 1192

this age, 44, 64, 241, 348, 441, 557, 656, 913, 1013, 1038, 1068, 1078, 1079, 1155, 1198, 1223

Tiberius, 53, 148, 149, 294, 907, 911, 932, 1011, 1028, 1065, 1206

tomb, tombs, 34, 144, 186, 307, 588, 928, 1019, 1032, 1034, 1065, 1135, 1181

tongue, 130, 196, 351, 370, 459, 480, 538, 815, 822, 837, 838, 951, 974, 1054, 1079, 1110, 1178, 1179

tongues, 23, 113, 116, 124, 208, 220, 332, 351, 400, 492, 498, 905, 906, 972, 1095, 1117, 1177-1179, 1207, 1227

Torah, 30-32, 91, 158, 160-162, 218, 227-229, 241, 298, 351, 355, 368, 464, 489, 502, 508, 546, 548, 551, 558, 582, 606, 608, 610, 643, 644, 647, 666, 704, 731, 753, 764, 811, 814, 825, 893, 913, 965, 979, 980, 989, 994, 998, 1058, 1085, 1125, 1141-1143, 1145, 1157, 1160, 1179, 1199, 1201, 1207

Tosefta, 606, 608, 1142

tradition criticism, 607, 711

travel, 8, 18, 21, 70, 211, 222, 354, 393, 415, 444, 507, 528, 562, 588, 670, 688, 754, 759, 760, 762, 769, 862, 883, 986, 1059, 1061, 1063, 1120, 1139, 1179, 1217

trial, 24, 103, 187, 188, 191, 254, 327, 361, 500, 558, 622, 656, 815, 816, 862, 887, 907, 908, 927, 928, 936, 1031, 1040, 1125, 1140, 1166, 1167, 1195 trials, 12, 41, 99, 100, 102, 131, 172, 273, 327, 342, 366, 480, 483, 511, 549, 552, 557, 558, 604, 739, 781, 794, 822, 863, 879, 885, 908, 941, 945, 946, 953, 974, 1039, 1044, 1097, 1139, 1166, 1167, 1200, 1202, 1240

tribulation, 132, 273, 330-332, 335-337, 339, 340, 342-344, 348, 438, 469, 643, 871, 915, 1014, 1031, 1179-1182, 1205, 1241

tribune, 1060, 1065

Trinity, 37, 70, 88, 115, 127, 151, 159, 162, 169, 178, 180, 181, 183, 218, 235, 250, 258, 259, 388, 394, 395, 412, 430, 431, 477, 489, 490, 498, 559, 611, 628, 630, 634, 636, 666, 678, 708, 712, 728, 812, 929, 948, 976, 996, 1093, 1120, 1135, 1150, 1177, 1231, 1232, 1236-1238

triumph, 95, 96, 98-100, 159, 201, 227, 254, 260, 261, 283-285, 321, 348, 359, 362, 372, 442, 468, 480, 523, 525, 526, 539, 553, 556-559, 610, 627, 634, 635, 656, 678, 732, 733, 741, 749, 785, 807, 818, 823, 838, 922, 926, 1030, 1031, 1160, 1164, 1196, 1227, 1233, 1234

Troas, 54, 79, 191, 271, 378, 531, 681, 686, 688, 1104

trumpets, 62, 63, 132, 167, 340, 427, 477, 481, 780, 783, 870, 1030, 1031, 1035, 1037, 1085, 1179, 1182, 1183, 1192

truth, 9, 17, 36, 74, 75, 84, 98, 119, 120, 134, 135, 138, 140, 155, 183, 200, 217, 220, 239, 243, 249, 253, 258, 259, 263, 282, 296, 308, 312, 335, 351, 367, 381, 404, 407-412, 460, 466, 470, 472, 474, 484, 486, 495, 501, 510, 536, 551, 552, 580, 582, 589-591, 593-595, 597, 609, 635, 637, 639, 640, 646, 651, 652, 659, 666, 675, 692, 694, 695, 698, 699, 702, 710, 738, 751, 768-770, 782, 783, 789, 790, 793, 806, 808, 809, 814, 819, 822, 845, 852, 858, 866, 872, 876, 878, 880, 881, 884, 885, 897, 899, 922, 949-951, 954, 960, 963, 973, 987, 1023, 1024, 1028, 1031, 1045-1047, 1049, 1057, 1078, 1095, 1106, 1110, 1113, 1119, 1122, 1140, 1165, 1169, 1184-1187, 1191-1194, 1203, 1223, 1226, 1227, 1232, 1238

Tryphosa, 765

Twelve, the, 7, 38, 42, 50, 72, 73, 76-78, 80-84, 106, 108, 141, 147, 159, 166, 173, 191, 198, 206, 207, 222, 225, 300, 302, 317,

355, 407, 409, 411, 417, 425, 428, 437, 467, 469, 533, 542, 543, 545, 548, 549, 580, 588, 596, 607, 616, 628, 631, 636, 643, 675, 690, 737, 741-744, 752, 754-757, 762-764, 766, 771, 780, 784, 817, 824, 827, 851, 890, 903, 906, 921, 931, 932, 966, 972, 978, 991, 1033, 1077, 1082, 1086, 1106, 1115, 1123-1125, 1127, 1162, 1166, 1169, 1178, 1187, 1191, 1193, 1210, 1216, 1238 twelve tribes, 42, 76, 108, 166, 173, 198, 207, 542, 543, 548, 549, 631, 636, 643, 780, 1187

Two Ways, 47, 48, 129, 181, 232, 241, 300, 301, 347, 351, 352, 369, 460, 519, 572, 656, 657, 672, 823, 827, 897, 898, 963, 1108, 1109, 1157-1159, 1187, 1191, 1193, 1213

Tychicus, 765, 888

typology, 21, 214, 235, 270, 280, 436, 479-482, 479, 536, 537, 541, 631, 670, 706, 732, 737, 780-782, 811, 814, 815, 818, 819, 825, 826, 828, 830, 834-836, 839, 841, 844, 933, 953, 965, 999, 1050, 1070, 1113, 1187

Tyre, 373, 841, 894, 1211

uncircumcised, 42, 226, 227, 229, 467, 764, 993, 1109

unclean, 233, 487, 570, 647, 759, 761, 854, 988-991, 1104, 1122, 1188 unfaithfulness, 26, 112, 264, 343, 377, 712, 713, 716, 780, 798, 1043, 1211

ungodliness, 29, 41, 151, 176, 264-267, 335, 337, 356, 379, 425, 538, 570, 624, 653, 714, 816, 818, 819, 823, 836, 839, 840, 854, 1003, 1045, 1046, 1057, 1094, 1097, 1240

union with Christ, 54, 55, 262, 354, 1140

universalism, 61, 343, 359, 392, 625, 725, 1188, 1189

unleavened bread, 314

unmarried, 714, 743, 931, 1216, 1221

Urbanus, 763, 765

vanity, 279, 394, 610, 673, 972, 1015, 1028, 1031, 1164

Valentinus, 149, 193, 194, 215, 255, 400, 404, 410, 1020, 1190 vengeance, 343, 428, 486, 623, 721, 729, 837, 897, 1034, 1035, 1143, 1193, 1239

vials, 1190

vices, 157, 231, 235, 322, 349, 352, 379, 469, 478, 552, 623, 658, 710, 716, 729, 731, 735, 736, 751, 769, 771, 926, 932, 939, 940, 952, 963, 994-996, 1012, 1013, 1047, 1079, 1097, 1098, 1149, 1158, 1159, 1169, 1186, 1187, 1190-1194, 1201 victory, 39, 46, 50, 54, 96, 100, 104, 128, 133, 181, 200, 209, 240, 261, 263, 267, 283, 284, 322, 328, 336, 339, 348, 349, 353, 362, 366, 389, 423, 459, 483, 486, 499, 524, 538, 565, 627, 635, 636, 646, 662, 682, 698, 702, 720, 753, 768, 775, 776, 779, 780, 794, 823, 836, 851, 852, 863, 870, 881, 897, 899, 902, 918, 921, 922, 936, 940, 1035, 1039, 1059, 1060, 1077, 1080, 1119, 1223, 1224, 1231, 1234-1236 vine, 88, 181, 208, 212, 391, 541, 583, 629, 690, 827, 1025, 1036, 1087, 1235 violence, 127, 284, 415, 912, 1036, 1080 virgin, 33, 106, 164, 182, 187, 258, 259, 314, 315, 322, 322, 387, 573, 581, 586, 648, 663, 705, 713, 723, 724, 960, 1006, 1089, 1090, 1108, 1121, 1186, 1207, 1221, 1221

virtue, 2, 5, 85, 96, 101, 131, 210, 214, 216, 235, 242, 263, 275, 277, 280, 281, 296, 311, 319, 322, 324, 326, 329, 337, 349-352, 363, 366-370, 397, 411, 420, 469, 478, 481, 488, 501, 502, 504-506, 507, 529, 552, 599, 633, 639, 651, 658, 696, 735, 736, 742, 772, 780, 816, 818, 819, 822, 843, 844, 860, 863, 898, 899, 920, 922, 926, 932, 940, 952, 961, 963, 988, 994-996, 1012, 1014, 1017, 1049, 1062, 1073, 1098, 1104, 1121, 1157, 1158, 1159, 1161, 1187, 1190-1194, 1202, 1211-1214, 1216

virtue and vice lists, 1158, 1191, 1192 visions, 17, 18, 47, 58, 62, 66, 68, 70, 81, 84, 86, 104, 112, 132, 133, 141, 151, 155, 177, 203, 244, 317, 320, 337, 340, 344, 347, 348, 352, 415, 427, 441, 456, 469, 470, 483, 524, 525, 541, 625, 639, 659, 704, 713, 714, 719, 720, 747, 784, 790, 796, 799, 831, 851-854, 884, 898, 908, 952, 956, 959, 971, 972, 974-976, 978, 1010, 1021, 1022, 1026, 1027, 1031, 1036, 1037, 1049, 1085, 1086, 1114, 1120, 1129, 1182-1184, 1190, 1194-1198, 1210, 1239

voluntary associations, 204, 1102, 1108, 1198

vow, 383, 419, 581, 647, 648, 942, 1008, 1069, 1163

war, warfare, 3, 44, 46, 50, 51, 54, 59, 66, 67, 127, 128, 145, 165, 166, 184-186, 188, 189, 193, 194, 207, 213, 220, 229, 254, 288, 290, 291, 302, 321, 323, 332, 348, 472, 551, 599, 600, 605, 609, 635, 636, 719, 730, 798, 841, 869, 870, 889, 897, 898, 900-902, 939, 946, 986, 997, 1029, 1034, 1035, 1059, 1063, 1064, 1072, 1077, 1078, 1080, 1085, 1089, 1105, 1106, 1160, 1181, 1182

warrior, 100, 481, 785, 870, 871, 997, 1032, 1082

wash, washing, 115, 116, 118-121, 123, 131, 354, 504, 658, 692, 693, 795, 828, 928, 942, 962, 990, 996

watchfulness, 349, 424, 1170, 1199, 1200, water, 33, 41, 93, 113-123, 132, 155, 242, 253, 258, 282, 283, 354, 494, 571, 575, 591, 637, 656, 665, 691-693, 776, 795, 836, 922, 971, 991, 997, 1046, 1065, 1073, 1148, 1183, 1204, 1232, 1235 weakness, 33, 100, 104, 227, 262, 274, 284, 311, 323, 367, 375, 438, 574, 613, 615, 616, 642, 698, 745, 819, 887, 892, 918, 940, 945, 958, 961, 986, 994, 1053, 1096, 1206, 1209 wealth, 76, 93, 103, 233, 288, 291, 293, 299, 349, 351, 374, 428, 473, 503, 522, 540, 549-551, 559, 560, 564, 600, 692, 705, 711, 745, 773, 778, 879, 1035, 1051-1053, 1064, 1067, 1087, 1101, 1132, 1138, 1139, 1140, 1169, 1171, 1190, 1198, 1206, 1223

weapons, 215, 228, 294

wickedness, 47, 50-52, 63, 66, 69, 77, 90, 130, 216, 251, 253, 255, 320, 331, 337, 352, 375, 376, 382, 459-462, 490, 505, 508, 525, 526, 567, 606, 621, 624, 632, 636, 656, 658, 818, 823, 836, 880, 881, 942, 963, 976, 987, 996, 999, 1015, 1016, 1019, 1046, 1047, 1057, 1091, 1095-1097, 1119, 1122, 1170, 1182, 1188, 1193, 1194, 1198, 1200, 1224

widows, 222, 241, 462, 504, 506, 507, 518, 519, 687, 692, 713, 714, 734, 745, 759, 762, 838, 882, 930, 935, 1039, 1067, 1071, 1087, 1089, 1090, 1100, 1101, 1104, 1123, 1125, 1193, 1200, 1206, 1212, 1213, 1216, 1219, 1220, 1221

wild beasts, 329, 530, 699, 720, 736, 1080, 1199

wilderness, 40, 42, 108, 127, 247, 274, 335, 365, 415, 448, 467, 480, 489, 494, 509, 557, 567, 614, 618, 633, 737, 781, 816, 844, 850, 998, 1013, 1094, 1166, 1167

will of God, 88, 89, 134, 201, 258, 273, 320, 346, 351, 352, 365, 419, 432, 463, 488, 525, 567, 602, 638, 794, 828, 879, 946, 964-967, 986, 1038, 1062, 1166 wisdom/Wisdom, 40, 59, 60, 63, 65-69, 72, 86, 88, 102, 103, 135, 142, 143, 158, 159, 163, 172, 178, 183, 287, 296, 314, 326, 347, 350-352, 356, 365, 390, 399, 401, 409, 413, 420-422, 428, 436, 439, 445, 465, 470, 478, 480, 489, 541, 545, 548, 549, 551, 552, 556-560, 582, 591, 594, 607, 621, 638, 640, 665, 667, 678, 716, 734, 737, 738, 742, 777-779, 783, 815, 816, 819, 822, 827, 830, 832, 839, 854, 856, 876, 879, 887, 888, 891, 895, 896, 899, 932, 933, 942, 945, 952, 953, 956, 957, 960, 961, 972, 980, 995, 1012, 1039, 1044, 1055, 1079, 1123, 1145, 1157, 1158, 1167, 1169, 1176, 1177, 1185, 1187, 1190-1192, 1194, 1200-1204, 1212

Wisdom christology, 888, 891, 957, 1201-1203

witness, 5, 9, 12, 17-19, 21, 22, 24, 37, 54, 76, 79, 96, 97, 101, 106-108, 114, 119, 122, 126, 127, 139, 141, 146, 153-155, 171, 177, 191, 198, 210, 214, 217, 218, 220, 242, 259, 268, 270, 271, 273, 281, 282, 284, 292, 310, 312, 313, 317, 325, 328, 333, 338, 339, 344, 353, 356-358, 392, 411, 427, 432, 433, 439, 441, 442, 456, 457, 469, 496, 498, 503, 506, 541, 545, 546, 548, 551, 554, 555, 557, 562, 593, 622, 627, 631, 635, 636, 666, 676, 694, 717-723,

736, 740, 742, 766, 767, 770, 772, 790, 795, 806-808, 858, 865, 884, 885, 903, 906, 915, 916, 926-928, 930, 938, 959, 960, 981, 992, 1017, 1020, 1022, 1026, 1029, 1031-1033, 1035, 1074, 1082, 1086, 1102, 1103, 1106, 1107, 1110, 1119, 1120, 1124, 1136, 1137, 1140, 1173, 1174, 1196, 1199, 1204, 1205, 1207, 1208, 1216, 1226, 1232 wives, 3, 4, 41, 112, 235, 325, 350, 352, 356, 371, 378, 435, 460, 504, 512-514, 517-519, 534, 599, 639, 699, 714-717, 730, 762, 764, 765, 835, 859, 896, 918, 923, 935, 946, 950, 1004, 1006, 1088, 1089, 1092, 1094, 1100, 1107, 1108, 1110, 1117, 1158, 1159, 1161, 1186, 1206-1215, 1217, 1218, 1221, 1222
women, 129, 343, 564, 573, 575, 614, 836, 840, 1030, 1052, 1170, 1179-1182, 1205, 1213, 1214, 1241 woman, 2, 4, 14, 31, 41, 105, 108, 111, 122, 127, 164, 195, 203, 206, 209, 221, 226, 293, 299, 313, 320, 358, 379, 386, 405, 428, 443, 451, 457, 459, 469, 473, 494, 495, 497, 502-504, 507, 508, 512, 513, 518, 519, 537, 538, 564, 582, 603, 705, 711-717, 721, 723, 724, 743, 746, 765, 768, 772, 773, 817, 852, 853, 882, 908, 922, 935, 942, 967, 971, 975, 1006, 1033, 1034, 1064, 1070, 1076, 1080, 1089, 1090, 1100, 1101, 1104-1106, 1108, 1110, 1111, 1116, 1117, 1140, 1144, 1166, 1176, 1181, 1193, 1200, 1205-1222, 1235 works of the Law, 277, 365, 891 wrath, 111, 132, 133, 151, 264, 266, 267, 275, 278, 282, 284, 287, 337, 343, 371, 428, 477, 538, 564, 621, 622, 625, 627, 704, 733-735, 823, 850, 869, 870, 874, 926, 1015, 1021, 1030, 1031, 1037, 1074, 1156, 1183, 1193, 1238-1240
written code, 350
Yahoel, 44
zeal, 74, 201, 290, 463, 532, 581, 769, 772, 790, 1059, 1066, 1138, 1153, 1185, 1218
Zealot, 51, 185, 463, 551, 902, 1160
Zenas, 765
Zeus, 50, 146, 414, 416, 501, 1008, 1011, 1029, 1078, 1112, 1126, 1147, 1148
Zion, 36, 112, 151, 198, 218, 229, 334, 420, 457, 489, 537, 538, 561-565, 587, 633, 753, 851, 992, 1037, 1138, 1155, 1165, 1210, 1242
Zoroastrianism, 1152

Articles Index

Abraham, 1
Acts of the Apostles, 7
Adversaries, 24
Alexandria, Alexandrian Christianity, 34
Ancestors, 37
Angels, Heavenly Beings, Angel Christology, 44
Anointing, 48
Antichrist, 50
Antioch on the Orontes, 53
Apocalyptic, Apocalypticism, 55
Apocryphal and Pseudepigraphal Writings, 68
Apostasy, 73
Apostle, Apostleship, 76
Apostolic Fathers, 82
Architecture, Early Church, 91
Ascension, 95
Assurance, 102
Authority, 105
Babylon, 111
Baptism, Baptismal Rites, 112
Barnabas, Epistle of, 125
Beasts, Dragon, Sea, Conflict Motif, 127
Blessing, 129
Bowls, 132
Canon, 134
Centers of Christianity, 144
Christ, 152
Christianity and Judaism: Partings of the Ways, 159
Christology, 170
Chronology, 184
Church, 194
Church as Israel, People of God, 204
Church Order, Government, 219
Circumcision, 226
Civil Authority, 230
Clement of Rome, 233
Commandments, 238
Conscience, 241
Cornelius, 243
Covenant, New Covenant, 245
Creation, Cosmology, 250
Creeds, Confessional Forms, 255
Cross, Theology of the, 260
Day of the Lord, 264
Death of Christ, 267
Diaspora Judaism, 287
Didache, The, 300
Diognetus, Epistle to, 302
Discipline, 304
Docetism, 306
Early Catholicism, 310
Ebionites, 313
Election, 317
Emperor, Emperor Cult, 321
Endurance, Perseverance, 326
Eschatology, 330
Eternity, Eternal, 345
Ethics, 347
Evangelism in the Early Church, 353
Exaltation, Enthronement, 359
Faith, Faithfulness, 364
Faith and Works, 367
Fear, 370
Fellowship, 373
Flesh, 374
Food, Food Laws, Table Fellowship, 376
Forgiveness, 379
Freedom, Liberty, 382
Galilean Christianity, 385
Gentiles, Gentile Mission, 388
Glory, 394
Gnosis, Gnosticism, 400
God, 412
Gospel, 431
Grace, 433
Healing, Illness, 436
Heaven, New Heaven, 439
Hebrews, 443
Hell, Abyss, Eternal Punishment, 459
Hellenists, Hellenistic and Hellenistic-Jewish Christianity, 462
Hermas, Shepherd of, 469
Hermeneutics, 471
Holy, Holiness, 485
Holy Spirit, 489
Hope, 499
Hospitality, 501
House, Spiritual House, 507
Household, Family, 511
Household Codes, 513
Hymns, Songs, 520
Idolatry, 528
Ignatius of Antioch, 530
Imitation, 533
Intertextuality in Early Christian Literature, 536
Israel, Twelve Tribes, 542
James, Letter of, 545
Jerusalem, Zion, Holy City, 561
Jesus Traditions, 565
Jewish Christianity, 579
John, Letters of, 587
Josephus, 599
Joy, 600
Judaism, Post-A.D. 70, 605
Jude, 611
Judgment, 621
Kerygma and Didache, 626
Kingdom of God, 629
Knowledge, 638
Lamb, 641
Land in Early Christianity, 642
Law, 644
Letter, Letter Form, 649
Life and Death, 655
Light and Darkness, 657
Liturgical Elements, 659
Logos Christology, 665
Lord, 667
Lord's Day, 679
Lord's Supper, Love Feast, 686
Love, 694
Magic and Astrology, 701
Marcion, 705
Mark, Secret Gospel of, 708
Marriage, Divorce, Adultery, 712
Martyrdom, 717
Mary, 722
Matthean Community, 724
Melchizedek, 729
Melito of Sardis, 731
Mercy, 733
Milk, Solid Food, 736
Millennium, 738
Ministry, 741
Miracles in Acts, 746
Mission, Early Non-Pauline, 752
Mortality and Immortality, 775
Moses, 777
Mystery, 782
Name, 785
Narrative Criticism, 787
New Birth, 792
New Testament Theology, 796
Noncanonical Writings, Citations in the General Epistles, 814
Obedience and Lawlessness, 821
Old Testament in Acts, 823
Old Testament in Apostolic Fathers, 826
Old Testament in General Epistles, 834
Old Testament in Hebrews, 841
Old Testament in Revelation, 850
Parousia, 856
Pastoral Theology, 876
Paul and Paulinisms in Acts, 883
Pauline Legacy and School, 887
Peace, 893
Pella, Flight to, 900
Pentecost, 902
Persecution, 907
1 Peter, 914
2 Peter, 923
Peter, Gospel of, 927
Philip the Evangelist, 929
Philo, 931
Polycarp of Smyrna, 934
Power, 938
Prayer, 941
Preaching from Acts, General Epistles, Revelation, 948

Preexistence, 955
Pride and Humility, 961
Priest, High Priest, 963
Promise, 967
Prophecy, Prophets, False Prophets, 970
Pseudepigraphy, 977
Psychology, 984
Purity and Impurity, 988
Qumran, 997
Redemption, 1001
Relatives of Jesus, 1004
Religions, Greco-Roman, 1006
Repentance, Second Repentance, 1011
Resurrection, 1015
Reveal, Revelation, 1020
Revelation, Book of, 1025
Rewards, 1038
Rhetoric, Rhetorical Criticism, 1041
Riches and Poverty, 1051
Righteousness, 1053
Roman Empire, Christian and the, 1059
Rome and Roman Christianity, 1063
Sacrifice, Offerings, Gifts, 1069
Salvation, 1072
Samaria, 1075
Satan, Devil, 1077
Savior, 1082
Scrolls, Seals, 1084
Servant, Service, 1086
Sexuality, Sexual Ethics, 1088
Shepherd, Flock, 1090
Signs and Wonders, 1093
Sin, Wickedness, 1095
Slave, Slavery, 1098
Social Setting of Early Non-Pauline Christianity, 1102
Son of God, 1111
Sonship, Child, Children, 1115
Spirits, 1117
Stephen, 1123
Stone, Cornerstone, 1126
Structuralism and Discourse Analysis, 1129
Suffering, 1135
Synagogue, 1141
Syncretism, 1146
Syria, Syrian Christianity, 1150
Tabernacle, Sanctuary, 1154
Teaching, Paraenesis, 1156
Temple, 1159
Temptation, 1166
Textual Criticism, 1171
Thomas, Gospel of, 1175
Tongues, 1177
Tribulation, Messianic Woes, 1179
Trumpets, 1182
Truth, 1184
Universalism, 1188
Virtues and Vices, 1190
Visions, Ecstatic Experience, 1194
Watchfulness, 1199
Wisdom, 1200
Witness, 1204
Woman and Man, 1205
Women in the Early Church, 1215
World, 1222
Worship and Liturgy, 1224
Wrath, Destruction, 1238