Satan stood up, Heb. stood, to wit, before the Lord and his tribunal to accuse David and Israel, and to beg God's permission to tempt David to number the people. Standing is the accuser's posture before men's tribunals; and consequently the Holy Scripture (which useth to speak of God, and of the things of God, after the manner of men, to bring them down to our capacities) elsewhere represents Satan in this posture, as 1 Kings xxii. 21; Zech. iii. 1. And so this agrees with 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, where the Lord is said to move David, i. e. to give Satan commission: or permission to move him; for otherwise God tempteth no man, James i. 13. But of this, and of this whole chapter, and of the variations and seeming contradictions between this narrative and that in Samuel, see my notes on 2 Sam. xxiv.

2 And David said to Joab and to the rulers of the people, Go, number Israel from Beer-sheba even to Dan; ^band bring the number of them to me, that I may know it.

3 And Joab answered, The LORD make his people an hundred times so many more as they be: but, my lord the king, are they not all my lord's servants? why then doth my lord require this thing? why will he be a cause of trespass to Israel?

Or, why will he be, or why should this be, a trespass, or a cause of trespass, or an occasion of punishment. (for Hebrew words signifying sin are oft used to note the punishment of sin,) or a desolation, or a cause of desolation or destruction, (for the verb whence this noun proceeds is oft used in that sense,) to or against Israel? Why wilt thou provoke God by this sin to punish Israel? Thus he speaks, because God commonly punisheth the people for the sins of their rulers, because they are for the most part guilty of their sins in one kind or other; or at least God takes this occasion to punish people for all their sins.

4 Nevertheless the king's word prevailed against Joab. Wherefore Joab departed, and went throughout all Israel, and came to Jerusalem.

5 ¶ And Joab gave the sum of the number of the people unto David. And all they of Israel were a thousand thousand and an hundred thousand men that drew sword: and Judah was four hundred threescore and ten thousand men that drew sword.

6 ^cBut Levi and Benjamin counted he ^enot among them: for the king's word was abominable to Joab.

Levi and Benjamin counted he not among them; partly for the following reason, and principally by God's special and gracious providence to these two tribes; to Levi, because they were devoted to his service; and to Benjamin, because they were the least of all the tribes, having been almost extinct, Judg. xxi., and because God foresaw that they would be faithful to the house of David in the division of the tribes, and therefore he would not have them diminished. And Joab presumed to leave these two tribes unnumbered, because he had specious pretences for it; for Levi, because they were no warriors, and the king's command reached only to those that drew sword, as appears from ver. 5; and for Benjamin, because they, being so small a tribe, and bordering upon Jerusalem their chief city, might easily be numbered afterward.

7 †And God was displeased with this ^fthing; therefore he smote Israel.

God was displeased with this thing; because this was done without any colour of necessity, and out of mere curiosity, and ostentation, and carnal confidence, as David's own conscience told him, which therefore smote him, as it is related, 2 Sam. xxiv. 10. Therefore he smote Israel; which is particularly related in the following verses.

8 And David said unto God, ^dI have sinned greatly, because I have done this thing: ^ebut now, I beseech thee, do away the iniquity of thy servant; for I have done very foolishly.

9 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Gad, David's ^fseer, saying,

10 Go and tell David, saying, Thus saith the LORD, I †offer thee three things: choose thee one of them, that I may do it unto thee.

11 So Gad came to David, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, †Choose thee

Lord destroying throughout all the coasts of Israel. Now therefore advise thyself what word I shall bring again to him that sent me.

13 And David said unto Gad, I am in a great strait: let me fall now into the hand of the LORD; for very great are his mercies: but let me not fall into the hand of man.

14 ¶ So the LORD sent pestilence upon Israel: and there fell of Israel seventy thousand men.

15 And God sent an angel unto Jerusalem to destroy it: and as he was destroying, the LORD beheld, and he repented him of the evil, and said to the angel that destroyed, It is enough, stay now thine hand. And the angel of the LORD stood by the threshingfloor of Ornan the Jebusite.

16 And David lifted up his eyes, and saw the angel of the LORD stand between the earth and the heaven, having a drawn sword in his hand stretched out over Jerusalem. Then David and the elders of Israel, who were clothed in sackcloth, fell upon their faces.

In sackcloth, i. e. in mourning garments, humbling themselves before God for their sins, and deprecating his wrath against the people.

17 And David said unto God, Is it not I that commanded the people to be numbered? even I it is that have sinned and done evil indeed; but as for these sheep, what have they done? let thine hand, I pray thee, O LORD my God, be on me, and on my father's house; but not on thy people, that they should be plagued.

18 ¶ Then the angel of the LORD commanded Gad to say to David, that David should go up, and set up an altar unto the LORD in the threshingfloor of Ornan the Jebusite.

19 And David went up at the saying of Gad, which he spake in the name of the LORD.

20 ¶ And Ornan turned back, and saw the angel; and his four sons with him hid themselves. Now Ornan was threshing wheat.

*Or, And Ornan turned back, (i. e. turned his face from the angel,) for, or when, (for the Hebrew vau is frequently used both those ways,) he saw the angel, and (so did) his four sons with him hiding themselves; partly because of the glory and majesty in which the angel appeared, which men's weak and sinful natures are not able to bear; and partly from the fear of God's vengeance, which was at that time riding circuit in the land, and now seemed to be coming to their family.*

21 And as David came to Ornan, Ornan looked and saw David, and went out of the threshingfloor, and bowed himself to David with his face to the ground.

22 Then David said to Ornan, † Grant me the place of this threshingfloor, that I may build an altar therein unto the LORD: thou shalt grant it me for the full price: that the plague may be stayed from the people.

23 And Ornan said unto David, Take it to thee, and let my lord the king do that which is good in his eyes: lo, I give thee the oxen also for burnt offerings, and the threshing instruments for wood, and the wheat for the meat offering; I give it all.

24 And king David said to Ornan, Nay; but I will verily buy it for the full price: for I will not take that which is thine for the LORD, nor offer burnt offerings without cost.

25 So David gave to Ornan for the place six hundred shekels of gold by weight.

26 And David built there an altar unto the LORD, and offered burnt offerings and peace offerings, and called upon the LORD; and he answered him from heaven by fire upon the altar of burnt offering.

From heaven by fire, Heb. by fire sent from heaven; which was the sign of God's acceptance. See Lev. ix. 24; 1 Kings xviii. 24, 38; 2 Chron. vii. 1.

27 And the LORD commanded the angel; and he put up his sword again into the sheath thereof.

28 ¶ At that time when David saw that the LORD had answered him in the threshingfloor of Ornan the Jebusite, then he sacrificed there.

When he perceived that his sacrifice there offered was acceptable to God, he proceeded to offer more sacrifices in that place, and did not go to Gibeon, as otherwise he should have done.

29 ° For the tabernacle of the LORD, which Moses made in the wilderness, and the altar of the burnt offering, were at that season in the high place at Gibeon.

30 But David could not go before it to enquire of God: for he was afraid because of the sword of the angel of the LORD.

David could not, i. e. durst not. Before it, i. e. before the tabernacle, where the altar stood. To inquire of God, Heb. to seek God, i. e. humbly to beg his favour by prayer and sacrifice. Because of the sword of the angel of the Lord, i. e. when he saw the angel stand with his drawn sword over Jerusalem, as is related above, ver. 15, 16, he durst not go away thence to Gibeon, lest the angel in the mean time should destroy Jerusalem; for the prevention whereof he thought it most proper to continue to worship God in that place, which he had consecrated by his special presence and gracious acceptance.

CHAP. XXII.

David prepareth for the building of the temple, 1—5: instructeth Solomon in God's promises and his duty, 6—16. He chargeth the princes to assist his son, 17—19.

THEN David said, *This is the house of the LORD God, and this is the altar of the burnt offering for Israel.

Then David said; partly by his observation of this gracious and glorious appearance of God, and his command to erect an altar, and his acceptance of a sacrifice offered in this place; and partly by the instinct and direction of God's Spirit, by which, as he is said to have had the pattern of the house, porch, altar, &c. 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 12, 19; so doubtless he was also instructed as to the place where the house should be built. This is the house of the Lord God; this is the place appointed by God for the building of his temple and altar.

2 And David commanded to gather together the strangers that were in the land of Israel; and he set masons to hew wrought stones to build the house of God.

work; of which see 1 Kings v. 15, compared with 1 Kings ix. 20, 21. He set masons to hew wrought stones; wherein he could not do much, being prevented by death; but Solomon carried on and perfected what David had begun.

3 And David prepared iron in abundance for the nails for the doors of the gates, and for the joinings; and brass in abundance ^cwithout weight;

For the joinings; to be used, together with melted lead, for the joining of those great and square stones together.

4 Also cedar trees in abundance for the ^dZidonians and they of Tyre brought much cedar wood to David.

5 And David said, ^eSolomon my son is young and tender, and the house that is to be builded for the LORD must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries: I will therefore now make preparation for it. So David prepared abundantly before his death.

David said within himself, or in his own thoughts. Solomon is young and tender; and therefore, through youthful vanity, and folly, and unsettledness, may not use that care, and consideration, and diligence in making such provisions as this great work requires. Of Solomon's age, see 1 Kings iii. 7.

6 ¶ Then he called for Solomon his son, and charged him to build an house for the LORD God of Israel.

7 And David said to Solomon, My son, as for me, ^fit was in my mind to build an house ^gunto the name of the LORD my God:

8 But the word of the LORD came to me, saying, ^hThou hast shed blood abundantly, and hast made great wars: thou shalt not build an house unto my name, because thou hast shed much blood upon the earth in my sight.

Because thou hast shed much blood upon the earth; not that wars either now are or then were simply unlawful, or that David sinned in shedding the blood of war; for it is manifest that David's wars were undertaken by God's command, or with his leave, and were attended with his blessing; but partly because David's military employments did for a good while fill his head and hands, and gave him no leisure for temple work; and principally for mystical signification, to teach us that the church (whereof the temple was a manifest and illustrious type) should be built by Christ, the Prince of peace, Isa. ix. 6; and that it should be gathered and built up, not by might or power, or by force of arms, but by God's Spirit, Zech. iv. 6, and by the preaching the gospel of peace. In my sight; which I have taken particular notice of. And this expression may possibly be added in reference to Uriah and the rest of the Israelites, who were slain at the siege of Rabbah by David's contrivance; which peradventure David had in his eye, Psal. li. 4, where David, confessing this sin, useth this very expression, I have done this evil in thy sight.

9 ⁱBehold, a son shall be born to thee, who shall be a man of rest; and I will give him ^krest from all his enemies round about: for his name shall be ¶Solomon, and I will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days.

10 He shall build an house for my name; and ^mhe shall be my son, and I will be his father; and I will establish the throne of his kingdom over Israel for ever.

Of this see my notes on 2 Sam. vii. 13.

11 Now, my son, ⁿthe LORD be with ^{n ver. 15.} thee; and prosper thou, and build the house of the LORD thy God, as he hath said of thee.

Prosper thou; go on prosperously in carrying on this work; or, the Lord give thee that rest and prosperity which is necessary for it.

12 Only the LORD ^ogive thee wisdom ^{o 1 Kings 3, 9, 12. Ps. 72. 1.} and understanding, and give thee charge concerning Israel, that thou mayest keep the law of the LORD thy God.

Give thee charge concerning Israel, i. e. give thee instructions or direction rightly to manage and rule his people Israel. Or, and set thee over Israel, as the Syriac renders it, whom the Arabic follows. Or, when (as the Hebrew vau is oft used) he shall set thee over Israel, i. e. when thou shalt be king; for then Solomon would need this wisdom, for which therefore he prayeth, 1 Kings iii. 9.

13 ^pThen shalt thou prosper, if thou takest heed to fulfil the statutes and judgments which the LORD charged Moses with concerning Israel: ^qbe strong, and of good courage; dread not, nor be dismayed. ^{q Deut. 31. 7, 8. Josh. 1. 6, 7, 9. ch. 28. 20.}

14 Now, behold, ¶in my trouble I have prepared for the house of the LORD an hundred thousand talents of gold, and a thousand thousand talents of silver; and of brass and iron ^rwithout weight; for it is in abundance: timber also and stone have I prepared; and thou mayest add thereto. ^{r As ver. 3.}

In my trouble: this he allegeth as a reason why he could do no more, because of the many troubles and wars, both foreign and civil, whereby much of his treasures was exhausted. An hundred thousand talents of gold. A talent of gold in the first constitution was three thousand shekels, as may be gathered from Exod. xxxviii. 24-26; and so this amounts to a very vast sum, yet not impossible for David to get, considering how many and great conquests he made, and what vast spoils and presents he got; and that he endeavoured by all just and honourable ways to get as much as he could, not out of covetousness, or for his own ends, but merely out of zeal for God's house. And whereas some object that this quantity of gold and silver was sufficient, though the whole fabric of the temple had consisted of massy gold and silver; it is to be considered that all this treasure was not spent upon the materials of the temple, but a very great part of it upon the workmen, which were nigh two hundred thousand, whereof a great number were officers, which being employed for so long time together, would exhaust a considerable part of it; and what was not employed in the building of the temple, was laid up in the sacred treasures for future occasions, there being mention of the great treasures left by David, even in other authors. But some learned men make these talents far less than those in Moses's time; and they conceive, that as there were two sorts of shekels, both of gold and silver, the common and the sacred shekel, whereof the latter is commonly thought to be double to the former, so also there were talents of divers kinds and values. For the Hebrew word kikkar, which is rendered a talent, properly signifies only a mass, or a piece, as it is used Exod. xxix. 23; 1 Sam. ii. 36; Zech. v. 7. So it may indifferently denote either a greater or a lesser piece. And this is certain, and observed by two ancient and most learned writers, Varro and Pollux, and by others, that a talent among the Greeks and Romans sometimes notes but a small quantity; and that a talent of gold contains only six drams. And Homer in his Iliads, among other things of no great value, which are propounded as rewards to the conqueror at a solemn and public exercise, a bond-woman, a horse, and a pot, mentions two talents of gold; which plainly shows that in his time (which was after the building of this temple) talents of gold were very far inferior in quantity and price to what they had been in former ages. And Josephus a Jew, and therefore the more competent judge of these things, speaking of this very thing, for a hundred thousand talents of gold here mentioned, he puts ten thousand; and for a thousand thousand talents of silver, he puts one hundred thousand; either because the talents in Moses's time were of ten times more bulk and price than in David's and Solomon's time, and therefore these talents reduced to them amounted to no greater sum; or because he read so in his copy of the Hebrew Bible. And certainly it is infinitely more tolerable and reasonable to suppose that there is a mistake here in the generality of the present copies of the Hebrew Bible, through the error of the scribe, (which being only in a numeral and historical passage, might happen without impeachment to the care of God's providence, which hath so miraculously preserved all the most important and substantial parts of Scripture, as hath been formerly said,) than upon such pretences to deny the truth and Divine original and authority of the Holy Scriptures. Add to this, that all the gold then used was not of equal worth and purity; as appears both by the special commendation given to some sorts of gold in divers parts of Scripture, and particularly by the difference observed in this very history between the gold and gold which David gave for this use; whereof one little part being distinctively called pure gold and refined gold, 1 Chron. xxviii. 17, 18, it is sufficiently implied that all the rest of the gold was not refined nor pure, which might greatly diminish the worth of it; for in what degree it was impure or alloyed with other things in those times and places we cannot know at this distance; and therefore we cannot make a true estimate what those talents of gold did amount to in our value. A thousand thousand talents of silver; just as much in silver as in gold; for this is known and agreed, that the proportion of gold to silver is ten to one.

15 Moreover there are workmen with thee in abundance, hewers and workers of stone and timber, and all manner of cunning men for every manner of work.

16 Of the gold, the silver, and the brass, and the iron, there is no number. Arise therefore, and be doing, and the LORD be with thee.

Be doing, to wit, when thou shalt come to the throne in my stead.

17 ¶ David also commanded all the princes of Israel to help Solomon his son, saying,

18 Is not the LORD your God with you? and hath he not given you rest on every side? for he hath given the inhabitants of the land into mine hand; and the land is subdued before the LORD, and before his people.

Either, 1. It is brought under the command of God and of you his people, all the enemies of God and of Israel, in it or near it, being now perfectly subdued. Or, 2. It is really subdued, whereof both God and your own eyes are witnesses.

19 Now "set your heart and your soul to seek the LORD your God; arise therefore, and build ye the sanctuary of the LORD God, to bring the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and the holy vessels of God, into the house that is to be built to the name of the LORD.

CHAP. XXIII.

David maketh Solomon king, 1. The number and distribution of the Levites, according to their families, 2—23. Their office, 24—32.

1015. SO when David was old and full of days, he made Solomon his son king over Israel.

Not that he did resign the kingdom to him, but that he declared his mind concerning his succession into the throne after his death. As David himself is called king, 1 Sam. xvi. 1, because he was appointed and anointed to be king after Saul's death, though till then he was only a subject.

2 ¶ And he gathered together all the princes of Israel, with the priests and the Levites.

Partly to declare God's mind and his own will, that Solomon should be his successor; and so to cut off the claims and pretences which others of his sons might make to the crown; and partly to acquaint them with those directions which he had received from God by the Spirit, as appears from chap. xxviii. 11, &c., concerning the establishment of a new order and method in the ministration of the priests and Levites in the temple.

3 Now the Levites were numbered from the age of thirty years and upward: and their number by their polls, man by man, was thirty and eight thousand.

From the age of thirty years and upward; not only till fifty, as it was appointed, Numb. iv. 2, 3, but even till their death; for that was but a temporary law grounded upon a special reason, because the Levites were employed in carrying the tabernacle and sacred vessels from place to place; and therefore God would have them freed from those burdens when they came to feel the infirmities of age; which reason wholly ceasing upon the building of the temple, and their work being far easier than it had been, and their service being more a privilege than a burden, their time of service is justly and fitly prolonged.

4 Of which, twenty and four thousand were set forward the work of the house of the LORD; and six thousand were officers and judges:

To set forward the work of the house of the LORD, i. e. to take care that all the work of the temple about sacrifices and other parts or means of God's service should be punctually and diligently performed, either by themselves or others; which they were not to do all at once, but by courses, a thousand at a time, as we shall shortly see. Officers and judges; whose work it seems to have been to judge of and determine all difficult causes or differences which might arise, either among the inferior priests or Levites about their sacred administrations, or among the people, which being governed in all their concerns only by the laws of Moses, it was fit and necessary that the priests and Levites should be consulted and concerned in their matters.

5 Moreover four thousand were porters; and four thousand praised the LORD with the instruments which I made, said David, to praise therewith.

Porters; whose office was to take the charge of all the gates of the temple and its courts, that no forbidden or unclean person might enter there, and of the courts themselves, and of several chambers or buildings belonging to the temple and the service thereof: these also were to do their work by turns. Four thousand praised the LORD with instruments; whereof two hundred and eighty-eight were persons of greater skill than their brethren, and did instruct them, and had some authority over them.

6 And David divided them into courses among the sons of Levi, namely, Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.

David divided them into courses; which he did not by his own invention, but as a man of God, and by the command of God, and with the advice and concurrence of Gad and Nathan the prophets, as is manifest from 2 Chron. viii. 14; xxix. 25.

That he should sanctify the most holy things; not positively, for so he could not sanctify them, they being already sanctified by God in the highest degree; but negatively, i. e. that he might keep them from pollution; for these most holy things were polluted when they were touched by any other persons. He and his sons; not only his eldest sons, the high priests successively, but all his posterity, or all the priests; for the works here following were not peculiar to the high priest, but common to all the priests, who might all burn incense, 2 Chron. xxix. 11; Luke i. 9, and to minister in the temple, and to bless the people in God's name, Numb. vi. 23; Deut. x. 8.

14 Now concerning Moses the man of God, ⁿhis sons were named of the tribe of Levi.

i. e. They were accounted only as common Levites, and were not priests; which is mentioned partly to secure the priesthood within the bounds to which God had confined it, lest they should presume to invade it upon a confidence in the nobleness of their extraction; and partly for the honour of Moses, and the demonstration of his eminent piety and self-denial, who willingly left the government to Joshua, and the priesthood to Aaron, and was content to have his posterity reduced to a very private and mean condition.

22 And Eleazar died, and ^uhad no sons, but daughters: and their || brethren the sons of Kish ^vtook them.

23 ^wThe sons of Mushi; Mahli, and Eder, and Jeremoth, three.

24 ¶ These were the sons of ^xLevi after the house of their fathers; even the chief of the fathers, as they were counted by number of names by their polls, that did the work for the service of the house of the LORD, from the age of ^ytwenty years and upward.

As the Levites were anciently numbered from two several times, from the twenty-fifth year of their age, and from the thirtieth, Numb. iv. 3; viii. 24; in like manner and for the same reasons they are here numbered both from their twentieth year, as here, when they were more solemnly prepared for and instructed, and by degrees exercised, in some parts of their work; and from their thirtieth year, above, ver. 3, when they were admitted to the full and complete exercise of all the parts and works of their office. And the reason why they were now sooner admitted to service than they had been formerly by the constitution of Moses, is given in the next verses, because now their work was more easy, they being wholly discharged from that burdensome work of carrying the tabernacle and its utensils, which was too heavy for young and tender shoulders. To which may be added, that the number of the Israelites was greatly increased, and consequently the services which were to be performed by the Levites on their behalf were multiplied, and the work of the temple was much greater than that of the tabernacle, and therefore more of the Levites were to be employed, and consequently they were to be sooner taken into service.

25 For David said, The LORD God of Israel ^bhath given rest unto his people, || that they may dwell in Jerusalem for ever:

26 And also unto the Levites; they shall no ^cmore carry the tabernacle, nor any vessels of it for the service thereof.

Also unto the Levites; or rather, as concerning the Levites, of whom he is here speaking.

27 For by the last words of David the Levites were † numbered from twenty years old and above:

By the last words of David; by his last order and constitution, made by God's direction and by the Spirit, as hath been once and again noted and proved before. This is here added, to signify that this great affair was thus settled by David, not in his younger years, when it might have been thought to be the effect of youthful heat, and confidence, and presumption, and rashness; but when he was come to the greatest maturity, when he was old and near his death, and going to give up his account to his Lord and Maker of all his actions, and particularly of the alterations which he made in the service of God; which he declared was done by the Spirit of God. These were in a manner his dying words, which usually make the deepest impressions.

28 Because † their office was to wait on the sons of Aaron for the service of the house of the LORD, in the courts, and in the chambers, and in the purifying of all holy things, and the work of the service of the house of God;

All holy things, i. e. holy places, and garments, and vessels, and sacrifices, which were to be washed and cleansed from any filthiness which possibly might cleave to them.

29 Both for ^dthe shewbread, and for ^ethe fine flour for meat offering, and for ^fthe unleavened cakes, and for ^gthat which is baked in the || pan, and for that which is fried, and for all manner of ^hmeasure and size;

This is to be understood either, 1. Particularly of the measure or quantity of fine flour, and wine, and oil, which was fixed by God's law. Or 2. Generally of all measures, used either in sacred or civil things, the public standards whereof were kept in the sanctuary or temple; of which see on Exod. xxx. 13; and therefore the care of keeping them inviolable, and producing them upon occasion, must needs belong to the priests, and under them to the Levites, who were to examine other measures and all things by them, as oft as occasion required, that so the priests might be at more leisure for their higher and greater employments.

30 And to stand every morning to thank and praise the LORD, and likewise at even;

The two solemn times of offering sacrifices; which work was attended with public prayer and thanksgiving.

31 And to offer all burnt sacrifices unto the LORD ⁱ in the sabbaths, in the new moons, and on the ^k set feasts, by number, according to the order commanded unto them, continually before the LORD:

Commanded unto them, i. e. unto those persons, the Levites, of whom he speaks. Or, concerning them, i. e. about those things.

32 And that they should ^l keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the holy place, and ^m the charge of the sons of Aaron their brethren, in the service of the house of the LORD.

The charge of the sons of Aaron, i. e. what the priests should commit to their charge, or command them to do.

CHAP. XXIV.

The priests are divided by lot into twenty-four orders, 1—19. Ministers allotted them out of the Levites, out of the tribe of the Kohathites and Merarites, 20—31.

NOW these are the divisions of the sons of Aaron. *The sons of Aaron; Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

The divisions, i. e. the several branches into which that family was divided or distributed.

2 But ^b Nadab and Abihu died before their father, and had no children: therefore Eleazar and Ithamar executed the priest's office.

i. e. Were the only persons to whom and to whose families the execution of that office was committed.

3 And David distributed them, both Zadok of the sons of Eleazar, and Ahimelech of the sons of Ithamar, according to their offices in their service.

According to their offices, or courses, or prefectures, i. e. allotting to each of them several times wherein they or theirs should by turns have the government of holy ministrations in the temple service.

4 And there were more chief men found of the sons of Eleazar than of the sons of Ithamar; and thus were they divided. Among the sons of Eleazar there were sixteen chief men of the house of their fathers, and eight among the sons of Ithamar according to the house of their fathers.

5 Thus were they divided by lot, one sort with another; for the governors of the sanctuary, and governors of the house of God, were of the sons of Eleazar, and of the sons of Ithamar.

Thus were they divided by lot; partly to prevent that envy or emulation which otherwise might arise among them; and partly that all men's minds and consciences might be fully satisfied in the order now established by this Divine way of decision. Governors of the house of God; but that is no other than the sanctuary; and so it may seem to make this division improper and irregular, the several members of it being altogether the same. Or rather, of the things of God, i. e. of all persons ministering in the sanctuary, and of all holy ministrations done in it, and of all other matters of the Lord, as they are called by way of distinction from the king's matters, 2 Chron. xix. 11.

6 And Shemaiah the son of Nethanel the scribe, one of the Levites, wrote them before the king, and the princes, and Zadok the priest, and Ahimelech the son of Abiathar, and before the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites: one [†] principal household being taken for Eleazar, and one taken for Ithamar.

Or, the chief (which word is easily supplied out of the context) of one house of the fathers was taken (to wit, by lot) for Eleazar, (i. e. out of his family,) and that which was taken after it was taken for Ithamar, i. e. out of his family. The meaning is, that the first lot fell to Eleazar, and the second to Ithamar, and the third to Eleazar, and the fourth to Ithamar; and so successively, until all the families of Ithamar had received their lots; and afterwards all the lots came forth to the rest of Eleazar's families, which were double in number to those of Ithamar, as was said, ver. 4.

7 Now the first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the second to Jedaiah,

The first lot came forth, to wit, out of the vessel, in which all the lots were promiscuously put together, and out of which they were severally taken.

8 The third to Harim, the fourth to Seorim,

11 The ninth to Jeshuah, the tenth to Shecaniah,

12 The eleventh to Eliashib, the twelfth to Jakim,

13 The thirteenth to Huppah, the fourteenth to Jeshebeab,

14 The fifteenth to Bilgah, the sixteenth to Immer,

15 The seventeenth to Hezir, the eighteenth to Aphses,

16 The nineteenth to Pethahiah, the twentieth to Jehzekel,

17 The one and twentieth to Jachin, the two and twentieth to Gamul, 18 The three and twentieth to Delaiah, the four and twentieth to Maaziah.

19 These were the orderings of them in their service ^d to come into the house of the LORD, according to their manner, under Aaron their father, as the LORD God of Israel had commanded him,

These were the orderings of them in their service; in this order and method they were to come to perform the offices of the temple. To come into the house of the Lord, according to their manner, i. e. to come into the temple every sabbath day, and to continue there all the week long until the next sabbath, when they were relieved by others, as the manner was: see 2 Kings xi. 5; 1 Chron. ix. 25. Under Aaron their father, i. e. under the inspection and direction of the high priest, whom he calls Aaron, because he represented his person, and executed his office, and also came out of his loins, and their father, because of the authority which by God's appointment he had over them, and that love, reverence, and obedience which they owed to him.

l ch. 23. 23. 30 ^lThe sons also of Mushi; Mahli, and Eder, and Jerimoth. These were the sons of the Levites after the house of their fathers.

31 These likewise cast lots over against their brethren the sons of Aaron in the presence of David the king, and Zadok, and Ahimelech, and the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites, even the principal fathers over against their younger brethren.

Over against their brethren the sons of Aaron, i. e. answerable for number and order to those of the priests, so as there should be a several course of the Levites for each course of the priests. This is expressed concerning the singers, chap. xxv., and the like is implied concerning the porters, chap. xxvi., and is here sufficiently intimated concerning those Levites which were employed in other sacred ministrations. The principal fathers over against their younger brethren; the lots of the elder and younger brethren were promiscuously put together, and the order was settled as the lots came forth, without any regard to the age, or dignity, or number of the persons or families, the youngest family having the first course if they had the first lot, &c.

The captains of the host; both of the civil and sacred host, to wit, all the princes of Israel, with the priests and the Levites, whom David gathered together, chap. xxiii. 2, for this very end, that in their presence, and with their approbation and consent, all these things might be established; who are here fitly called the captains of the host; for the princes were, under David, the chief captains or commanders of the militia or trained bands of the kingdom: and as the Levites are called a host, and the Lord's host, Numb. iv. 3, and elsewhere, because of their number and order in holy ministrations; so these priests and Levites were the captains and governors of the rest. Separated, i. e. distributed them into their several ranks and orders; which, though chiefly done by David as a prophet, and by Divine direction, as hath been oft observed, yet is here imputed in part to the captains of the host, because it was done with their concurrence and approbation. To the service of the sons of Asaph, &c., i. e. to the service of God under the conduct and command of these persons. Who should prophesy, i. e. praise God by singing the Psalms of David, (of which see on chap. xvi. 7,) and other sacred songs made by themselves, who were prophets in some sort, or by other prophets or holy men of God. Or this action of theirs is called prophesying, because it had been formerly performed by the prophets; and the sons of the prophets; of which see 1 Sam. x. 5; xix. 20; 2 Kings iii. 15; 1 Chron. xv. 19. The number of the workmen; of the persons employed in this sacred work.

2 Of the sons of Asaph; Zaccur, and Joseph, and Nethaniah, and ¶ Asarelah, the sons of Asaph under the hands of Asaph, which prophesied † according to the order of the king.

Under the hands of Asaph, i. e. under his oversight and direction. According to the order of the king; in such manner and order as David appointed.

3 Of Jeduthun: the sons of Jeduthun; Gedaliah, and ¶ Zeri, and Jeshaiiah, Hashabiah, and Mattithiah, ¶ six, under the hands of their father Jeduthun, who prophesied with a harp, to give thanks and to praise the LORD.

The sons of Jeduthun, or, his sons, (the construct form being used before the absolute, of which there are examples in Scripture,) Jeduthun, called by his father's name; otherwise they are not six, unless either Jeduthun their father be included in that number, or Shimei, mentioned ver. 17, be one of them, as many learned men think. See the like, 1 Chron. xxiv. 23.

4 Of Heman: the sons of Heman; Bukkiah, Mattaniah, ¶ Uzziel, ¶ Shebuel, and Jerimoth, Hananiah, Hanani, Eliathah, Giddalti, and Romamti-ezer, Joshbekashah, Mallothi, Hothir, and Mahazioth:

5 All these were the sons of Heman the king's seer in the ¶ words of God, to lift up the horn. And God gave to Heman fourteen sons and three daughters.

The king's seer, or prophet, which is the same thing, 1 Sam. ix. 9. Either he was a prophet as well as a singer; or he is thus called because he prophesied in the sense designed, ver. 1. And he is called the king's seer, either because the king took special delight in him, or because he frequently attended upon the king in his palace, executing his sacred office there, while the rest were constantly employed in the tabernacle. In the words of God, i. e. to sing such Divine songs as were inspired by God to the prophets or holy men of God. To lift up the horn; either, 1. Metaphorically, to extol and praise God for exalting the horn (i. e. the power and kingdom) of David; of which phrase see Psal. xcii. 10; cxxxii. 17. Or rather, 2. Properly, to praise God with the sound of a trumpet, (as was usual, as 2 Chron. v. 12; xiii. 12.) or some other musical instrument made of horn, which being a martial kind of music, might be most grateful to David's martial spirit; though he was also skilled in other instruments of music, which he used in the house of God, as is expressed in the next verse.

6 All these were under the hands of their father for song in the house of the LORD, with cymbals, psalteries, and harps, for the service of the house of God, ^b† according to the king's order to Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman.

† Heb. by the hands of the king.

Under the hands, i. e. under his direction, as ver. 2. According to the king's order to Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman, Heb. by the hands of the king, and of Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman, i. e. according to the king's appointment, and under the conduct of Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman.

7 So the number of them, with their brethren that were instructed in the songs of the LORD, even all that were cunning, was two hundred fourscore and eight.

All that were cunning; who were so skilful that they were able to teach others. Two hundred fourscore and eight; which, together with their scholars, make up the four thousand mentioned chap. xxiii. 5.

8 ¶ And they cast lots, ward against ward, as well the small as the great, ^c the teacher as the scholar.

c 2 Chron. 23. 13.

Ward against ward, i. e. a ward, or rank, or course of Levites answerable to one of the priests, upon whom the Levites were to wait in their holy ministrations, chap. xxiii. 28. As well the small as the great, the teacher as the scholar, without any respect to their different ages or abilities.

9 Now the first lot came forth for Asaph to Joseph: the second to Gedaliah, who with his brethren and sons were twelve:

For Asaph to Joseph, i. e. for the family of Asaph, of which Joseph was. Here that clause, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve, is to be understood, as it is expressed in all the following verses, otherwise they do not make up that number of two hundred and eighty-eight mentioned ver. 7. To Gedaliah, who, Heb. he; which word being here expressed, is rightly understood and supplied in the rest.

10 The third to Zaccur, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

11 The fourth to Izri, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

12 The fifth to Nethaniah, he, his sons, and his brethren, were twelve:

CHAP. XXVI.

The division of the porters, 1—12. The gates assigned by lot, 13—19. The Levites have charge of the treasures of the temple, 20—28. Officers and judges, 29—32.

CONCERNING the divisions of the porters: Of the Korhites was ¶ Meshelemiah the son of Kore, of the sons of ¶ Asaph.

¶ Or, Shelemiah, ver. 14.
¶ Or, Ebiasaph, ch. 6. 37. & 9. 19.

Not that famous Asaph the singer, but another Asaph, called also Ebiasaph, chap. vi. 37.

2 And the sons of Meshelemiah were, Zechariah the firstborn, Jediael the second, Zebadiah the third, Jathniel the fourth,

3 Elam the fifth, Jehohanan the sixth, Elioenai the seventh.

4 Moreover the sons of Obed-edom were, She-maiah the firstborn, Jehozabad the second, Joah the third, and Sacar the fourth, and Nethaneel the fifth,

5 Ammiel the sixth, Issachar the seventh, Peulthai the eighth: for God [¶] blessed ¶ him.

¶ That is, Obed-edom, as ch. 13. 14.

To wit, with a numerous posterity and other blessings, for his respect and affection to the ark. See 2 Sam. vi. 11.

6 Also unto Shemaiah his son were sons born, that ruled throughout the house of their father: for they were mighty men of valour.

That ruled throughout the house of their father; that had the command of their brethren and families, being, as some say, captains of hundreds or of thousands; of which see Exod. xviii. 25; 2 Kings xi. 9. They were mighty men of valour: this clause is divers times mentioned, because their office required both strength and courage; for they were to shut the doors of the temple, one whereof was so great and weighty, that in the second temple it required the help of twenty men to open and shut it, as Josephus, an eye-witness, reports. They were also to keep the guard, and to keep out all unclean or forbidden persons, who might sometimes presumptuously attempt to enter into the temple, as Uzziab did, and to prevent or suppress any tumults or disorders which might happen in the temple or in its courts, and to keep the treasures of the temple, ver. 20, 22, 24, 26, and to be officers and judges over Israel, ver. 29, and to manage every matter pertaining to God and the affairs of the king, ver. 32.

7 The sons of Shemaiah ; Othni, and Rephael, and Obed, Elzabad, whose brethren were strong men, Elihu, and Semachiah.

8 All these of the sons of Obed-edom : they and their sons and their brethren, able men for strength for the service, were threescore and two of Obed-edom.

9 And Meshelemiah had sons and brethren, strong men, eighteen.

^{a ch. 16. 38.} 10 Also *Hosah, of the children of Merari, had sons ; Simri the chief, (for though he was not the firstborn, yet his father made him the chief ;)

Taking away the birthright from the first-born, either absolutely for some gross miscarriage, as Gen. xlix. 4 ; or only in this respect, because he wanted either strength or valour, or some other qualification necessary for his office.

11 Hilkiyah the second, Tebaliah the third, Zechariah the fourth : all the sons and brethren of Hosah were thirteen.

12 Among these were the divisions of the porters, even among the chief men, having wards one against another, to minister in the house of the LORD.

Having wards one against another ; Heb. having wards against or answerably to their brethren, to wit, the other Levites, who were divided into twenty-four courses, as the priests also were, and so it seems were the porters.

13 ¶ And they cast lots, ¶ as well the small as the great, according to the house of their fathers, for every gate.

They cast lots, as well the small as the great ; determining the times and places of their service not by age or dignity, but merely by lot. According to the house of their fathers ; a several lot being allowed for each several house. For every gate, that it might be known to whom the care of each gate was more especially committed.

14 And the lot eastward fell to ¶ She-^{¶ Called, Meshelemiah, ver. 1.}lemiah. Then for Zechariah his son, a wise counsellor, they cast lots ; and his lot came out northward.

A wise counsellor ; which is noted as an excellent and useful accomplishment for his office, in which there was need of wisdom as well as courage, as may appear by the description of their work, ver. 20, &c. See the note on ver. 6.

15 To Obed-edom southward ; and to ^{+ Heb. gatherings.}his sons the house of † Asuppim.

Asuppim ; a place so called ; or, of gatherings ; so named either from the assembly of the elders, who met there to consult about the affairs of the temple ; or from the people, who were there gathered together to hear the discourses and debates of the teachers of the law ; or because the gifts of the people towards the house and worship of God were kept there. See 2 Kings xxii. 4 ; 2 Chron. xxv. 24.

16 To Shuppim and Hosah the lot came forth westward, with the gate Shallecheth, by the causeway of the going ^{¶ See 1 Kin. 10. 6. 2 Chr. 9. 4.}¶ up, ward against ward.

Shuppim and Hosah for some reason were joined together in the custody of that gate. The gate Shallecheth ; a gate of the court so called, as some think, because the ashes and filth of the temple were cast out on that side, which was the most convenient gate for that purpose, because that was a private quarter, the great ways to the temple lying on the other sides. By the causeway of the going up ; by which causeway they went up towards the temple. Ward against ward ; which may respect either, 1. The time of their watching, that when one guard went off another came on. Or rather, 2. The place of their guard ; and so this may be understood, either, 1. Of this western quarter, where there was a double guard, either because there were two gates there, as some think, or for some other cause now unknown. Or rather, 2. Of all the quarters compared together ; of all which having spoken he adds this, that as one gate was over against another, the west against the east, and the north against the south, so one ward was over against another.

17 Eastward were six Levites, northward four a day, southward four a day, and toward Asuppim two and two.

Eastward were six Levites ; for that being the chief gate of the temple, required a better guard. Toward Asuppim, i. e. the house of Asuppim, as it is called, ver. 15, where also it is said to be on the south side ; on which there seems to have been a double guard both belonging to Obed-edom, ver. 15, one at the south gate, and the other at Asuppim ; where possibly the sacred treasures, mentioned ver. 20, &c., were laid up, and therefore a particular guard was necessary. See on ver. 15.

At Parbar, or, as concerning Parbar, which was another gate, or some building on the western quarter of the temple. At the causeway, which led to Parbar. At Parbar ; at the gate or house itself ; by which it may seem that this was a place of some importance, either the vessels of the temple, or some part of the treasures of God's house, being kept here.

19 These are the divisions of the porters among the sons of Kore, and among the sons of Merari.

20 ¶ And of the Levites, Ahijah was ^{b ch. 28. 12. Mat. 3. 10.}over the treasures of the house of God, ^{+ Heb. holy things.}and over the treasures of the † dedicated things.

Either these are the same kind of treasures, the latter phrase only explaining the former, the particle and being used for that is ; or rather, they are two different kinds of treasures, the former containing the sacred vessels and other treasures, which by God's command were appropriated to the maintenance of the house, and worship, and ministers of God, as tithes, and first-fruits, and other things ; and the latter only those things which had been freely given or dedicated to God for those ends ; of which see ver. 26, 27.

21 As concerning the sons of ¶ Laadan ; ^{¶ Or, Libni, ch. 6. 17.}the sons of the Gershonite Laadan, chief fathers, even of Laadan the Gershonite, ^{¶ Or, Jehieli, ch. 23. 8. & 29. 8.}were ¶ Jehieli.

The sons of the Gershonite Laadan, chief fathers, i. e. which sons were chief fathers, or heads of the houses of their fathers. Jehieli ; understand here, and his sons, which here follow.

22 The sons of Jehieli ; Zetham, and Joel his brother, which were over the treasures of the house of the LORD.

As Shelomith and his brethren were over the treasures of the dedicated things, ver. 26. But both may seem to have been subject and accountable to Ahijah, who was over both these kinds of treasures, ver. 20. Or Ahijah might have a general oversight into the management of those treasures as an auditor of the accounts, although the others had more dignity and power in the disposal of them.

23 Of the Amramites, and the Izharites, the Hebronites, and the Uzzielites :

Or, as concerning the Amramites, &c. The meaning is, the persons here following were of these, or the most of these, families. Only here is none of the family of the Uzzielites ; either because that family was now extinct ; whence it is that we read no more of them in the Scripture, but only in this place, and Numb. iii. 27 ; or because there was none of them fit to be employed and trusted in these matters.

24 And °Shebuel the son of Gershom, ^{c ch. 23. 16.}the son of Moses, was ruler of the treasures.

The prince or chief over all the treasures, and treasures mentioned either before or afterward, as his very title shows, which is peculiarly given to him, and to none of the rest.

25 And his brethren by Eliezer; Rehabiah his son, and Jeshaiiah his son, and Joram his son, and Zichri his son, and Shelomith his son.

His brethren by Eliezer; another son of Moses, Exod. xviii. 4.

26 Which Shelomith and his brethren were over all the treasures of the dedicated things, which David the king, and the chief fathers, the captains over thousands and hundreds, and the captains of the host, had dedicated.

† Heb. Out of the battles and spoils.

27 † Out of the spoils won in battles did they dedicate to maintain the house of the LORD.

Heb. to strengthen it; either to make that building strong and substantial by these and other charges; or rather, to repair it when it should be built; for which they might the rather take particular care, because it was likely that every one would contribute to the building of the temple, and there would be no want for that use; but few would provide for the repairs of it, when by the injury of men or time it should receive any damage.

e 1 Sam. 9. 9.

28 And all that Samuel *the seer, and Saul the son of Kish, and Abner the son of Ner, and Joab the son of Zeruiiah, had dedicated; and whosoever had dedicated any thing, it was under the hand of Shelomith, and of his brethren.

Shelomith is particularly named here, and ver. 26, because they were chiefly committed to his trust, he being, it seems, a person of eminent wisdom and faithfulness.

29 ¶ Of the Izharites, Chenaniah and his sons were for the outward business over Israel, for officers and judges.

Chenaniah and his sons, who are probably thought to have been one thousand six hundred, for that sum added to the one thousand seven hundred, ver. 30, and the two thousand seven hundred, ver. 32, make up those six thousand Levites which were officers and judges, 1 Chron. xxiii. 4. For the outward business; for that business of the Lord and of the king (as it is explained here, ver. 30, 32) which was to be done without the temple, and without Jerusalem; for what was to be done within them was committed to other hands, as we have seen. Over Israel, synecdochically; i. e. over part of Israel, even over the midland part, and that which lay upon the sea-coast; for the other parts of the land on both sides of Jordan are here committed to others, ver. 30—32. For officers and judges; who shall be officers and judges over the people in the several cities and towns or parts of the land, to determine questions and controversies which might arise among them. And the reason why the Levites were intrusted with these matters was, because the common or municipal law of Israel, by which they had and held all their rights, was no other than the law of God, whereof the priests and Levites being the best and established interpreters, must needs therefore be the most proper judges of things depending thereupon.

30 And of the Hebronites, Hashabiah and his brethren, men of valour, a thousand and seven hundred, were † officers among them of Israel on this side Jordan westward in all the business of the LORD, and in the service of the king.

On this side Jordan westward; in those parts of the land of Canaan which border upon Jordan, or are not very remote from it. In all the business of the Lord, i. e. in all things which did or should concern the house or worship of God; partly to take care that such monies as were either imposed by a tax, or freely given by the people, towards the building or repairing of the temple, or towards the sacrifices and other holy ministrations, should be gathered and received, and faithfully sent up to Jerusalem to be employed in that work; partly to see to the execution of all the laws of God among the people, and to restrain or punish wilful offenders against it. In the service of the king; not that all the king's businesses were managed by them; for it is apparent, both from the nature of the thing, and from Scripture, that the king's military affairs were managed by his captains, and his political or civil affairs were managed by the princes, and judges, and officers of other tribes; but because they served the king in the execution of his decrees, made pursuantly to the laws of God, by which the several rights of king and people were established, and all things both in church and commonwealth were to be ordered. Now as the king was the principal person intrusted with the execution of God's laws, so these Levites chiefly were his eyes by which he saw his people's transgressions, and his hands by which he inflicted due and deserved censures upon them for their miscarriages. And the doing of this was very much for the service of the king, whose throne was established and secured by such righteous administrations. Besides, they were to take care by their counsel and authority to keep the people in obedience to their king; which the Levites were most obliged and best obliged to do.

31 Among the Hebronites was † Jerijah g ch. 23. 19. the chief, even among the Hebronites, according to the generations of his fathers. In the fortieth year of the reign of David they were sought for, and there were found among them mighty men of valour h at Jazer of Gilead.

In the fortieth year; which was his last year, in which he made all the orders and distributions of families and offices recorded in these chapters. Jazer of Gilead is here named, either because they were seated in or near that place, but for what cause it is now unknown; or because they were numbered there by some person sent by David to that purpose.

32 And his brethren, men of valour, were two thousand and seven hundred chief fathers, whom king David made rulers over the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh, for every matter pertaining to God, and † affairs of the king.

Two thousand and seven hundred chief fathers; which is a very great number to be employed about two tribes and a half, when all the rest of the tribes had only one thousand and seven hundred, ver. 30, besides those under Chenaniah; of whom see on ver. 29. But the reason hereof is plain, because the tribes without Jordan being more remote from the king's court, and from the place of public and solemn worship, needed more than ordinary help to instruct and keep them in the practice of the true religion, and the worship of God, and in obedience to their king.

CHAP. XXVII.

The twelve captains for every several month, 1—15. The princes of the twelve tribes, 16—22. The numbering of the people is hindered, 23, 24. The chief keepers of David's treasures, 25—31. His counsellors and friends, 32—34.

NOW the children of Israel after their number, to wit, the chief fathers and captains of thousands and hundreds, and their officers that served the king in any matter of the courses, which came in and went out month by month throughout all the months of the year, of every course were twenty and four thousand.

Their officers; the standing force or militia of Israel as it was settled under their several officers, as it here follows. In any matter of the courses, i. e. in all the business wherein the king had occasion for these persons, who were to attend upon him or his commands by courses or by turns. Or, according to all the order or state of the divisions, or, about the companies or courses into which they were distributed.

Came in and went out, i. e. executed their office; which is commonly signified by this phrase, as Numb. xxvii. 17, and elsewhere. Month by month; who were to be armed and mustered, and to wait upon the king, either at Jerusalem, or in other places, as the king should see fit. By this order near three hundred thousand of his people were instructed and exercised in the use of their arms, and fitted for the defence of their king and kingdom when it should be needful, and in the mean time sufficient provision was made against any sudden tumults or irruptions of enemies. And this monthly course was contrived, that the burden of it might be easy and equally distributed among the people.

2 Over the first course for the first month was ^a Jashobeam the son of Zabdai: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

Jashobeam; of whom see 2 Sam. xxiii. 8; 1 Chron. xi. 11.

3 Of the children of Perez was the chief of all the captains of the host for the first month.

Of Perez; or, of Pharez, of the posterity of Judah, Gen. xvi. 12. This seems to be understood of Jashobeam, and to be mentioned as a reason why he was the chief, &c.; and the verse may be rendered thus, He was (which is easily understood out of the foregoing words) of the children of Perez, (and consequently of the tribe of Judah, to which the pre-eminence belonged, and of which Perez was,) and he was (or, therefore he was) the chief (to wit, in dignity and precedency, though not in power and authority, for these captains were equal in power, and Joab was their general) of all the captains of the host, (whose several names here follow,) and was for the first month; therefore he was first in order, and was captain for the first month.

4 And over the course of the second month was ¹ Dodai an Ahohite, and of his course was Mikloth also the ruler: in his course likewise were twenty and four thousand.

Of his course was Mikloth the ruler; who was either, 1. The captain of this course after the death of this Dodai, as Zebadiah was after Asahel, ver. 7. But the differing phrase there and here sufficiently intimates that the same thing is not meant in both places. Or, 2. His lieutenant or deputy, in case of his necessary absence. But why should such a one be named here, and not in the rest of the courses? Or rather, 3. One of the officers of his course, who seems here particularly to be named as a person then of great note and eminency.

5 The third captain of the host for the third month was Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, a chief priest: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

A chief priest; or, the chief priest; or rather, a chief prince, as this Hebrew word is oft used, as Gen. xli. 45; xlvii. 22; 2 Sam. viii. 18; xx. 26; 1 Kings iv. 5; 2 Kings x. 11, and elsewhere. Probably he was not only a captain of this course, but a great officer in the court and state. For although the priests might take up arms in some special cases; yet it is not likely that such were constant officers in the king's army, especially seeing the rest of the captains here named were of other tribes. Besides, neither Benaiah nor Jehoiada was high priest at that time, but Zadok or Abiathar, and before them Abimelech, in whom the priesthood had been for a long time together, even in the days of Samuel, and Saul, and David, and Solomon.

6 This is that Benaiah, who was mighty among the thirty, and above the thirty: and in his course was Ammizabab his son.

Who seems to have been his father's lieutenant, because his father was captain of the king's guard, 2 Sam. viii. 18, and therefore needed a deputy in the one or in the other place.

7 The fourth captain for the fourth month was ^c Asahel the brother of Joab, and Zebadiah his son after him: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

The fourth captain was Asahel the brother of Joab; by which, it seems, the foundation of this project was laid whilst David was in Hebron, during which time Asahel was slain, and David's forces were then divided into twenty-four courses, under twenty-four chief commanders, whereof Asahel was one; only it is probable that the number of their forces was much less than that which is here mentioned: but when David was fully settled in his whole kingdom, the design was perfected, and the numbers of their soldiers increased to this number. His son after him, i. e. after his death; of which see 2 Sam. ii. 23. In his course; not Asahel's, for in his time they were not so numerous, but Zebadiah his son.

8 The fifth captain for the fifth month was Shammuth the Izrahite: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

Shammuth; supposed to be the same called Shammah, 2 Sam. xxiii. 11, and Shammoth, 1 Chron. xi. 27.

9 The sixth captain for the sixth month was ^d Ira the son of Ikkesh the Tekoite: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

10 The seventh captain for the seventh month was ^e Helez the Pelonite, of the children of Ephraim: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

The Pelonite; so called also 1 Chron. xi. 27, and the Paltite, 2 Sam. xxiii. 26.

11 The eighth captain for the eighth month was ^f Sibbecai the Hushathite, of the Zarahites: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

Of the Zarahites; of the family of the Zarahites.

12 The ninth captain for the ninth month was ^g Abiezer the Anetothite, of the Benjamites: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

13 The tenth captain for the tenth month was ^h Maharai the Netophathite, of the Zarahites: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

14 The eleventh captain for the eleventh month was ⁱ Benaiah the Pirathonite, of the children of Ephraim: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

15 The twelfth captain for the twelfth month was ^j Heldai the Netophathite, of Othniel: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

16 ¶ Furthermore over the tribes of Israel: the ruler of the Reubenites was Eliezer the son of Zichri: of the Simeonites, Shephatiah the son of Maachah:

Over the children of Israel, i. e. these were the princes of the tribes, as they are called below, ver. 22, who were the most ancient and constant rulers of the tribes at all times, whether of war or peace; who seem to have had a superior power to these twenty-four captains, and therefore are named before them, chap. xxviii. 1, being probably the king's chief counsellors and assistants in the great affairs of his kingdom.

17 Of the Levites, ^k Hashabiah the son of Kemuel: of the Aaronites, Zadok:

18 Of Judah, ^l Elihu, one of the brethren of David: of Issachar, Omri the son of Michael:

Elihu, called also Eliab, 1 Sam. xvi. 6.

20 Of the children of Ephraim, Hoshea the son of Azaziah : of the half tribe of Manasseh, Joel the son of Pedaiah :

21 Of the half tribe of Manasseh in Gilead, Iddo the son of Zechariah : of Benjamin, Jaasiel the son of Abner :

22 Of Dan, Azareel the son of Jeroham. These were the princes of the tribes of Israel.

Of the most of the tribes, not of all ; for Gad is omitted, probably because that tribe was joined with the Reubenites under one prince ; and Asher, for some such reason, or for some other causes now unknown, and not worth our inquiry.

23 ¶ But David took not the number of them from twenty years old and under : m Gen. 15. 5. because ^mthe LORD had said he would increase Israel like to the stars of the heavens.

The meaning is, David, when he desired to number the people, he designed to number only those who were from twenty years old and upward, or (which is the same thing) those that drew sword, 1 Chron. xxi. 5, and not those who were from twenty years old and under. He would increase Israel like to the stars of the heavens ; and therefore to number them all both above and under twenty years old, had been both an infinite trouble, and a tempting of God, or a questioning of the truth of his promises. And possibly this circumstance might in part deceive or quiet David's conscience, that his desire of knowing the number of his people did not proceed from distrust of God's promise or providence, but from a prudent care to know the true state and strength of his kingdom.

24 Joab the son of Zeruiah began to number, but he finished not, because ^{n 2 Sam. 24.} ^{15. ch. 21. 7.} there fell wrath for it against Israel ; neither ^{+ Heb. ascended.} † was the number put in the account of the chronicles of king David.

Began to number, to wit, all from twenty years old and upward, as David commanded him. He finished not ; for Levi and Benjamin he counted not, 1 Chron. xxi. 6. Because there fell wrath for it against Israel, whilst he was doing the work ; which was one reason which made him to cease. Heb. And there fell, &c. Though David numbered them with caution and limitation, as was noted before, yet this did not hinder God's wrath from falling upon Israel for this sin. Neither was the number put in the account of the chronicles of king David : the sense is either, 1. That the full number was not registered, because Levi and Benjamin were not counted by Joab. Or rather, 2. That David being sensible of and smarting for his sin, would not have the number brought in by Joab to him put into the public register, though God would have it recorded in Scripture for the instruction of succeeding ages. For he speaks not here of the account given in to the king, which was done, and was Joab's act ; but of the putting of the account into the public records, which was not done, and which could not be done but by David's command or permission.

25 ¶ And over the king's treasures was Azmaveth the son of Adiel : and over the storehouses in the fields, in the cities, and in the villages, and in the castles, was Jehonathan the son of Uzziath :

Over the king's treasures ; of gold or silver, or other things of great price, which for greater security were kept in Jerusalem, and in the king's palace ; and thither the tribute money also was sent and committed to his care. Over the storehouses of the fruits of the earth, or that share of them which belonged to the king, which were laid up in the fields, or cities, or villages, or castles, as there was conveniency and occasion.

26 And over them that did the work of the field for tillage of the ground was Ezri the son of Chelub :

Over the king's husbandry.

27 And over the vineyards was Shimei the Ramathite : † over the increase of the vineyards for the wine cellars was Zabdi the Shiphnite :

Over the vineyards, i. e. over the workmen and labourers in the vineyards ; as the next officer is over the fruit of the vineyards. In like manner, one man was over the labourers in the fields, ver. 26, and another over the fruits of the fields put into stores after the manner, ver. 25.

28 And over the olive trees and the sycomore trees that were in the low plains was Baal-hanan the Gederite : and over the cellars of oil was Joash :

29 And over the herds that fed in Sharon was Shitrai the Sharonite : and over the herds that were in the vallies was Shaphat the son of Adlai : Sharon ; a place famous for its fruitfulness. See Isa. xxxiii. 9 ; xxxv. 2.

30 Over the camels also was Obil the Ishmaelite : and over the asses was Jehdeiah the Merothite :

The Ishmaelite ; so called, either because he was born of that people, or had lived among them ; or from some notable exploit which he did against them.

31 And over the flocks was Jaziz the Hagerite. All these were the rulers of the substance which was king David's.

32 Also Jonathan David's uncle was a counsellor, a wise man, and a ¶ scribe : ^{¶ Or, secretary.} and Jehiel the ¶ son of Hachmoni was with the king's sons : ^{¶ Or, Hachmonite.}

A counsellor, a wise man, and a scribe ; either one learned in the laws of God, which were also the laws of the land, by which all their counsels were to be ruled ; or, the king's secretary. With the king's sons, as their tutor or governor.

33 And ° Ahithophel was the king's counsellor : and ^{q 2 Sam. 15.} ^{12.} ^{p 2 Sam. 15.} ^{37. & 16. 16.} p Hushai the Archite was the king's companion :

The king's counsellor ; the person whose counsel in matters of state the king most prized and followed. The king's companion, or his friend, as he is called, 2 Sam. xv. 37 ; the person whom he most trusted with all his secrets, and whose conversation was most pleasant and acceptable to him.

34 And after Ahithophel was Jehoiada the son of Benaiah, and ° Abiathar : and ^{q 1 Kin. 1. 7.} the general of the king's army was ^{r ch. 11. 6.} † Joab.

After Ahithophel, i. e. after his death, these were his chief counsellors.

CHAP. XXVIII.

David in a solemn assembly declareth God's favour to him, and promise to his son Solomon ; exhorteth them to fear God, and encourageth Solomon to build the temple, 1—10 ; giveth him a pattern for the form, and gold and silver for the materials, 11—21.

AND David assembled all the princes of Israel, ^{a ch. 27. 16.} ^{b ch. 27. 1, 2.} the princes of the tribes, and ^{c ch. 27. 25.} the captains of the companies that ministered to the king by course, and the captains over the thousands, and ^{¶ Or, cattle.} the captains over the hundreds, and ^{¶ Or, and his sons.} the stewards over all the substance and ^{¶ Or, eunuchs.} possession of the king, and ^{d ch. 11. 10.} of his sons, with the officers, and with ^d the mighty men, and with all the valiant men, unto Jerusalem.

This assembly seems to be distinct from that chap. xxiii. 2, and more general, as may be gathered from the persons said to be assembled here and there. Though others think them to be the same, and this to be a return to his former discourse.

2 Then David the king stood up upon his feet, and said, Hear me, my brethren, and my people: As for me, *I had in mine heart to build an house of rest for the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and for the footstool of our God, and had made ready for the building:

David stood up; partly out of reverence to God and his word, which was the matter of the following discourse; and partly out of respect to this great and honourable assembly. My brethren; so he calls the princes and chief rulers, both because they had a share with him, though under him in the government; and in compliance with the Divine command, that the king should not be lifted up above his brethren, Deut. xvii. 20. An house of rest for the ark; a place where it might be fixed, and no more removed from place to place, as it had been. And for the footstool; the word and is here put expositively for by the footstool, &c., he means the ark.

3 But God said unto me, *Thou shalt not build an house for my name, because thou hast been a man of war, and hast shed †blood.

4 Howbeit the LORD God of Israel ^hchose me before all the house of my father to be king over Israel for ever: for he hath chosen ⁱJudah to be the ruler; and of the house of Judah, ^kthe house of my father; and ^lamong the sons of my father he liked me to make me king over all Israel:

5 ^mAnd of all my sons, (for the LORD hath given me many sons,) ⁿhe hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the LORD over Israel.

It is not my fancy or fond affection, but God's express will, that Solomon should be preferred before his elder brethren; and therefore all of you are obliged to submit to him, and accept of him as your king by Divine appointment.

6 And he said unto me, °Solomon thy son, he shall build my house and my courts: for I have chosen him to be my son, and I will be his father.

7 Moreover I will establish his kingdom for ever, †if he be †constant to do my commandments and my judgments, as at this day.

As he hath begun and hitherto continued in some good measure to do.

8 Now therefore in the sight of all Israel the congregation of the LORD, and in the audience of our God, keep and seek for all the commandments of the LORD your God: that ye may possess this good land, and leave it for an inheritance for your children after you for ever.

In the audience of our God, i. e. I do here exhort and charge you every one, calling God who is here present, and this congregation, wherein all Israel are present by their representatives, for witness against you, if you do not follow my counsel. Keep and seek for all the commandments of the Lord; keep those commands which you know, and seek for or search into what you are yet ignorant of, that you may distinctly understand the whole will of God, and all the parts of your duty, and seriously give up yourselves to the practice thereof.

9 ¶ And thou, Solomon my son, °know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind: for the LORD searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts: 'if thou seek him, he will be found of thee; but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off for ever.

Know thou the God; know him, so as to love him and serve him, as it follows; for words of knowledge in Scripture use commonly imply affection and practice: or acknowledge him as thy God, by loving and obeying him; for otherwise Solomon did already know God, having doubtless been very well instructed in the knowledge of God's nature and law. The Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts: if thou dost only put on a profession of religion, to please me and secure thy hopes of the kingdom; or if thy obedience to God be insincere and with grudging; thou mayst indeed deceive me, but thou canst not deceive him, for he searcheth thy inward thoughts, and the motions of thy heart. If thou forsake him; if when I am dead and gone, and thou art perfectly at thy own dispose, thou shalt cast off that religion and fear of God of which thou now makest profession, and shalt continue to do so without true repentance for thine errors. He will cast thee off for ever; notwithstanding all his promises made to me and to my seed, and that great honour and favour which he hath showed to thee, with which possibly thou mayst flatter thyself.

10 Take heed now; °for the LORD hath chosen thee to build an house for the sanctuary: be strong, and do it.

For the sanctuary; or, for a sanctuary, i. e. which is to be a sanctuary for him, to wit, for the ark to dwell in. Be strong; take courage and resolution to break through all difficulties, troubles, discouragements, or oppositions which thou mayst possibly meet with.

11 ¶ Then David gave to Solomon his son °the pattern of the porch, and of the houses thereof, and of the treasures thereof, and of the upper parlours thereof, and of the inner parlours thereof, and of the place of the mercy seat,

The pattern of the porch, to wit, of the temple; which is necessarily to be understood. The houses thereof; either, 1. The houses of the porch, so called because they went through the porch into them. Or rather, 2. The houses of the temple, manifestly understood in the next foregoing clause of this verse, to wit, the holy place, and the holy of holies; which may well pass for two houses, because they were separated by a partition; and because they were of differing dimensions, as appears by 1 Kings vi. 2, 20, especially seeing the holy place is called the greater house, 2 Chron. iii. 5, comparatively to the holy of holies, which was the lesser house, and so you have two houses. The inner parlours thereof; by these he seems to understand all those rooms which were made against the wall of the house round about, as it is said, 1 Kings vi. 5, which are here called by divers names, according to the difference of their situation or use. The place of the mercy-seat, i. e. in what particular part of the holy of holies it was to be placed.

12 And the pattern † of all that he had by the spirit, of the courts of the house of the LORD, and of all the chambers round about, °of the treasures of the house of God, and of the treasures of the dedicated things:

And the pattern of all, for even the pattern of all; for this clause belongs both to the foregoing and the following particulars. By the spirit; by the Spirit of God, as is evident from ver. 19. For seeing all the particulars of the tabernacle built by Moses were suggested to him by God's Spirit, by which even the workmen were inspired, Exod. xxv. 40; xxxi. 3, it is not credible that God would use less care and exactness in the building of this far more glorious and durable work. Of all the chambers, &c.; all which were within the courts, or adjoining to them, as the other chambers, ver. 11, were adjoined to the house.

house of the LORD, and for all the vessels of service in the house of the LORD.

14 He gave of gold by weight for things of gold, for all instruments of all manner of service; silver also for all instruments of silver by weight, for all instruments of every kind of service:

15 Even the weight for the candlesticks of gold, and for their lamps of gold, by weight for every candlestick, and for the lamps thereof: and for the candlesticks of silver by weight, both for the candlestick, and also for the lamps thereof, according to the use of every candlestick.

Whether they were large and fixed in one place, whereof there were ten in the holy place, 1 Kings vii. 49, or such as were less and loose to be carried from place to place, as need required.

16 And by weight he gave gold for the tables of shewbread, for every table; and likewise silver for the tables of silver:

The tables of shew-bread: by this, and 2 Chron. iv. 19, it appears that there were divers tables to be used either successively or together about the shew-bread; but one of them seems to have been of more eminency and use than the rest, and therefore it is most commonly called the table of the shew-bread, in the singular number. But of this and the rest of the utensils here named, see the notes on Exodus.

17 Also pure gold for the fleshhooks, and the bowls, and the cups: and for the golden basons he gave gold by weight for every bason; and likewise silver by weight for every bason of silver:

18 And for the altar of incense refined gold by weight; and gold for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubims, that spread out their wings, and covered the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

Of the chariot of the cherubims, i. e. of the cherubims, which Solomon was to make, of which see 1 Kings vi. 23, (for those which were fastened to the mercy-seat were made by Moses long before,) which he fitly compares to a chariot, because within them God is oft said to sit and to dwell, as 2 Kings xix. 15; Psal. lxxx. 1; xcix. 1; and sometimes he is said to ride upon a cherub, Psal. xviii. 10. And because a chariot is made to carry a person from place to place, this expression may be used to intimate that God was not so fixed to them by the building of his temple, but that he both could and would remove from them if they forsook him. And when they did so, God did make use of the chariot of his cherubims to convey himself away from them, as is noted, Ezek. x. 15, &c. Covered the ark; not above it, for that was done by Moses's cherubims, but before it, to keep it from the eyes of the high priest when he entered into the most holy place, 1 Kings vi. 23.

19 All this, said David, the LORD made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern.

The meaning is either, 1. That God revealed this to Samuel, (see 1 Chron. ix. 22,) or Gad, or Nathan, or some other man of God, who put it into writing, and by them to David. Or, 2. That God did, as it were, by his own hand and finger, (wherewith he wrote the ten commandments, Exod. xxxi. 18,) write these things upon the table of my mind, which now I deliver to thee.

20 And David said to Solomon his son, Be strong and of good courage, and do it: fear not, nor be dismayed: for the LORD God, even my God, will be with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the LORD.

Be strong and of good courage. See the notes on ver. 10.

21 And, behold, the courses of the ^{d ch. 24, & 25, & 26.} priests and the Levites, even they shall be with thee for all the service of the house of God: and there shall be with thee for all manner of workmanship ^{e Ex. 35, 25, 26, & 36. 1, 2.} every willing skilful man, for any manner of service: also the princes and all the people will be wholly at thy commandment.

CHAP. XXIX.

David, by his example and entreaty, 1—5, causes the princes and people to offer willingly, 6—9. David's thanksgiving and prayer, 10—19. The people having blessed God and sacrificed, make Solomon king, 20—25. David's reign and death, 26—30.

FURTHERMORE David the king said ^{1015.} unto all the congregation, Solomon my son, whom God alone hath chosen, is yet ^{a 1 Kin. 3. 7. ch. 22. 5. Prov. 4. 3.} young and tender, and the work is great: for the palace is not for man, but for the LORD God.

Is yet young and tender, comparatively; for he was now married, as appears by comparing 2 Chron. ix. 30; xii. 13.

2 Now I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God the gold for things to be made of gold, and the silver for things of silver, and the brass for things of brass, the iron for things of iron, and wood for things of wood; ^{b See Is. 54. 11, 12. Rev. 21. 18, &c.} onyx stones, and stones to be set, glistering stones, and of divers colours, and all manner of precious stones, and marble stones in abundance.

Stones to be set; diamonds, or emeralds, or rubies, or any of those precious stones which are usually set in rings or such things.

3 Moreover, because I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house,

Of mine own proper good: of that which I have reserved as a peculiar treasure to my own use, after I had separated those things which I had devoted to God.

4 Even three thousand talents of gold, of the gold of ^{c 1 Kings 9. 28.} Ophir, and seven thousand talents of refined silver, to overlay the walls of the houses withal:

The gold of Ophir was accounted the best and purest gold; of which see Job xxii. 24; xxviii. 16; Isa. xlii. 12; by which it appears that those hundred thousand talents mentioned before, chap. xxii. 14, were a coarser and impurer sort of gold. To overlay the walls of the houses withal; the walls of the temple with gold, and of the rooms adjoining to it with silver beaten out into plates, and put upon the other materials here and there as it was thought fit.

5 The gold for things of gold, and the silver for things of silver, and for all manner of work to be made by the hands of artificers. And who then is willing ^{† Heb. to fill his hand.} to consecrate his service this day unto the LORD?

To consecrate his service, Heb. to fill his hand, i. e. to offer an offering, as Exod. xxxii. 29; Lev. viii. 33, as I have done.

8 And they with whom precious stones were found gave them to the treasure of the house of the LORD, by the hand of f ch. 26. 21. Jechiel the Gershonite.

9 Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly, because with perfect heart they offered willingly to the LORD: and David the king also rejoiced with great joy.

The people rejoiced, because this was both an effect of God's grace in them, and an eminent token of God's favour and goodness to be continued to them, and a good pledge that this great and long-desired work of the building of the temple would receive a certain and a speedy accomplishment.

10 ¶ Wherefore David blessed the LORD before all the congregation: and David said, Blessed be thou, LORD God of Israel our father, for ever and ever.

11 ^hThine, O LORD, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine: thine is the kingdom, O LORD, and thou art exalted as head above all.

Thine, O Lord, is the greatness and the power, i. e. thou art great and powerful, &c. As head above all; as the sovereign Lord and Owner of all persons and things.

12 ⁱBoth riches and honour come of thee, and thou reignest over all; and in thine hand is power and might; and in thine hand it is to make great, and to give strength unto all.

Thou reignest over all, i. e. thou disposest of riches and honour as thou pleasest. To give strength unto all; even to the weakest, whom thou canst make strong; and to the strongest, who are weak without thy help.

13 Now therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name.

14 But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? for all things come of thee, and † of thine own have we given thee.

That we should be able to offer so willingly, i. e. that thou shouldst give us both such riches out of which we should be able to make such an offering, and such a willing and free heart to offer them; both which are thy gifts, and the fruits of thy good grace and mercy to us. Of thine own have we given thee; we return only what we have received, and therefore we do only pay a debt to thee, and do not hereby oblige thee, or deserve any thing from thee.

15 For ^kwe are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as mere all our fathers: ^lour days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none † abiding.

These words may contain a reason, either, 1. Of the first clause of ver. 14, Who am I, &c., i. e. what mean and contemptible creatures are we, and how unworthy of so high a favour! for, saith he here, we, I and my people, as it is ver. 14, are strangers, &c., poor pilgrims, who bring nothing into the world, and pass hastily through it, and can carry nothing with us out of it. Or rather, 2. Of the last clause of that 14th verse, of thine own, &c. For the land which we possess is thine, not ours; we are not the proprietors or perpetual possessors of it, but only thy tenants: and as our fathers once were mere strangers in it, even with or before men, Psal. cv. 12; so we at this day are no better with or before thee, having no absolute right and title in it, but only to travel through it, and sojourn in it for that short time that we live in the world. And thus the argument seems to be borrowed from Lev. xxv. 23, where this is given as a reason why the inheritances of the land of Canaan could not be sold for ever, but only till the jubilee; for, saith God, the land is mine, as to dominion and propriety, for ye were (or for, or but you are) only strangers and sojourners with me. There is none abiding: we only give to thee what we must shortly leave, and what we cannot keep to ourselves; and therefore it is a great favour that thou wilt accept such offerings; or, and therefore we are not perpetual possessors of this land, and the fruits of it, but only pilgrims and passengers through it.

16 O LORD our God, all this store that we have prepared to build thee an house for thine holy name cometh of thine hand, and is all thine own.

17 I know also, my God, that thou ^mtriest the heart, and ⁿhast pleasure in uprightness. As for me, in the uprightness of mine heart I have willingly offered all these things: and now have I seen with joy thy people, which are present here, to offer willingly unto thee.

By the largeness of their offering I discern the sincerity, willingness, and generosity of their hearts towards thee; for David judged, as in reason and charity he ought, of the tree by its fruit, and of their hearts by their actions.

18 O LORD God of Abraham, Issac, and of Israel, our fathers, keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and prepare their heart unto thee:

Keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people; since it is from thy grace that thy people have such willing minds to thy service, as was before acknowledged, I beg the continuance of that grace to them, that they may persist in the same generous and pious disposition towards thee and thy worship. Prepare their heart unto thee, or rather, as it is in the margin, stablish or confirm, &c. Thou who hast begun a good work, confirm and carry it on by thy grace, otherwise it will languish, and this very people will prove degenerate.

19 And give unto Solomon my son a perfect heart, to keep thy commandments, thy testimonies, and thy statutes, and to do all these things, and to build the palace, for the which I have made provision.

By purchasing the place, 1 Chron. xxi., and providing for the expenses of the work.

20 ¶ And David said to all the congregation, Now bless the LORD your God. And all the congregation blessed the LORD God of their fathers, and bowed down their heads, and worshipped the LORD, and the king.

The Lord with religious, and the king with civil worship, as it is evident.

21 And they sacrificed sacrifices unto the LORD, and offered burnt offerings unto the LORD, on the morrow after that day, even a thousand bullocks, a thousand rams, and a thousand lambs, with their drink offerings, and sacrifices in abundance for all Israel:

Unto the Lord; before the ark which was there. For all Israel; either, 1. On the behalf of all Israel, to praise God in their names, to procure God's presence and blessing for them all. Or, 2. So many, that the feasts which, after the manner, were made of the remainders of the sacrifices, 22 And did eat and drink before the LORD on that day with great gladness. And they made Solomon the son of David king the second time, and ⁹anointed him unto the LORD to be the chief governor, and Zadok to be priest.

I. 35, 39.

Before the Lord, i. e. before the ark, in courts or places as near to it as they conveniently could. Or, as in God's presence, in a solemn and religious manner, praising God for this great mercy, and begging his blessing upon this great affair. The second time. This is called the second time in reference to the first time, which was either, 1. When he was made king during Adonijah's conspiracy, of which see 1 Kings i. 34, &c. And so this was done after David's death, and not upon that day, when this feasting and solemnity lasted, as the words at first view seem to insinuate, this being related in the same verse, and immediately after the relation of the feast. But there are examples of things done at distant times put together in one verse, as Acts vii. 15, So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers, i. e. first he, and afterwards our fathers. So here, They did eat—on that day with great gladness, and afterward they made Solomon—king the second time. And this opinion seems to be confirmed by the following passages, in which it is related, that at this same time they anointed Zadok to be priest, and that Solomon was king instead of David, and that all Israel, and all David's sons, submitted to him; all which was not done till after David's death, as may be gathered by comparing this with 1 Kings i., ii. Or, 2. In 1 Chron. xxiii. 1, where it is said that David—made Solomon his son king over Israel, i. e. he declared him his successor. And so this second time was during David's life. And what David had more privately declared, chap. xxiii., he now more solemnly owns in this great and general assembly, in which, by David's order, and the consent of all that assembly, Solomon was anointed king, i. e. to be king after his father's death. And this opinion the text seems most to favour. For it is said, And they made Solomon king, &c. : they ; who ? That must be fetched out of the foregoing words and verses, they who did eat and drink before the Lord on that day with great gladness, as it is here said; and then immediately it follows, and that with a copulative conjunction, and they made Solomon king, &c., which without violence cannot be pulled away from the foregoing words. And therefore they must be David and all the congregation, who were then present, ver. 20, of whom it is said, they sacrificed, &c., ver. 21, and they did eat, &c., and they made Solomon, &c. The great objection against this opinion is, that they anointed Zadok to be priest at this time, which was not done till after David's death; for till then Abiathar was not thrust out from being priest, &c., 1 Kings ii. 26, 27. This indeed is a difficulty, but not insoluble. It must be remembered that the high priest had his vicegerent who might officiate in his stead, when he was hindered by sickness or other indispensable occasion; and that there seems to be something more than ordinary in Zadok's case; for although Abiathar was properly the high priest, yet Zadok seems after a sort to be joined in commission with him, as we see 2 Sam. xv. 29; xix. 11; and it is expressly said, Zadok and Abiathar were priests, 2 Sam. xx. 25; 1 Kings iv. 4. And it may be further considered, that this anointing of Zadok might be occasioned by some miscarriage of Abiathar not recorded in Scripture. Possibly he was unsatisfied with this design of translating the crown to Solomon, and did now secretly favour Adonijah's person and right, which afterward he did more openly defend; which being known to David by information, might induce him and the princes who favoured Solomon to take this course; which they might the more willingly do, in consideration of that Divine threatening, 1 Sam. ii. 31, &c., of translating the priesthood from Ithamar's and Eli's house, of which Abiathar was, to Eleazar's line, to which it had been promised to perpetuity, Numb. xxv. 13, of which line Zadok was. And they might judge this a fit season, or might be directed by God at this time, to execute that threatening to the one, and promise to the other family. And yet this action of theirs in anointing Zadok did not, as I suppose, actually constitute him high priest, but only settled the reversion of it upon him and his line after Abiathar's death. Even as David's making Solomon king, chap. xxiii. 1, and their anointing Solomon to be the chief governor here, did not put him into actual possession of the kingdom, but only gave him a right to it in reversion after the present king's death, as Samuel's anointing of David, 1 Sam. xvi., had done to David before him. Hence, notwithstanding this anointing, Abiathar continued to exercise his office till Solomon thrust him out, 1 Kings ii. 27; and even after he was removed from the execution of his office, yet he was reputed the priest till he died, being so called 1 Kings iv. 4. And this I hope may in some sort resolve that difficulty. For the other arguments, they seem not considerable. For as for what follows, ver. 23—25, Then Solomon sat on the throne, &c., that indeed seems to belong to the time after David's death, being sufficiently separated from this ver. 22, and not so knit to the foregoing words as those words, and they made Solomon king, &c., are. And for the particle then, that is confessed by all to be often used at large and indefinitely for about, or after that time. To be the chief governor, i. e. to be king after David's death. Zadok to be priest; of which the last note but one.

23 Then Solomon sat on the throne of the LORD as king instead of David his father, and prospered; and all Israel obeyed him.

On the throne of the Lord, i. e. on the throne of Israel, which is called the throne of the Lord, either more generally, as all thrones are the Lord's, by whom kings reign, Prov. viii. 15, and magistrates are ordained, Rom. xiii. 1, 2; or more specially and peculiarly; either, 1. Because the Lord himself was in a peculiar manner the King and Governor of Israel, not only in the time of the judges, but afterward, Psal. xlv. 4; lxxxix. 18; cxlix. 2; Isa. xxxiii. 22. Or, 2. Because it was the throne of Christ the Lord, whose vicegerents David, and Solomon, and their successors were, for whom this throne was reserved, and by whom it was to be established and enjoyed for ever, Luke ii. 32, 33. Or, 3. The throne of the Lord is put for the throne of the people of the Lord, by a concise and short manner of speech, which is frequent in the Hebrew language; as when the key of David is put for the key of the house of David; and the mountain of the Lord, for the mountain of the Lord's house. Or, 4. Because this throne fell to Solomon not by right of inheritance, for he had elder brethren, but by the special appointment and gift of the Lord. And so this of the Lord is the genitive case of the efficient, as the learned call it, and signifies which the Lord gave him.

24 And all the princes, and the mighty men, and all the sons likewise of king David, [†] submitted themselves unto Solomon the king.

26 ¶ Thus David the son of Jesse reigned over all Israel.

This sacred writer having mentioned the anointing of Solomon to be king, ver. 22, and upon that occasion proceeded to give a further account of Solomon's actual settlement in his kingdom, and of his prosperous and glorious management of it, ver. 23—25, he now returns to his main and proper business, to give an account of the close of David's reign and life. Thus, i. e. in manner hitherto expressed, David—reigned, &c.

^d 1 Chron. 27. 1. 2 Then Solomon spake unto all Israel, to ^d the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and to the judges, and to every governor in all Israel, the chief of the fathers.

Then Solomon spake, to wit, concerning his intention of going to Gibeon, and that they should attend him thither, as the next verse shows.

^e 1 Kin. 3. 4. ¹ Chron. 16. 39. & 21. 29. 3 So Solomon, and all the congregation with him, went to the high place that was at ^e Gibeon; for there was the tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moses the servant of the LORD had made in the wilderness.

To the high place; upon which the tabernacle was placed; whence it is called the great high place, 1 Kings iii. 4.

^f 1 Sam. 6. 2. 17. ¹ Chron. 15. 1. ^{1045.} 4 [†] But the ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-jearim to the place which David had prepared for it: for he had pitched a tent for it at Jerusalem.

He separated the ark from the tabernacle, and brought it to Jerusalem, because there he intended to build a far more noble and lasting habitation for it.

^g Ex. 27. 1. ^h Ex. 38. 1. 2. ^h Ex. 31. 2. ^{††} Or, was there. 5 Moreover ^g the brasen altar, that Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, had made, ^{††} he put before the tabernacle of the LORD: and Solomon and the congregation sought unto it.

He put; either Moses, mentioned ver. 3, or Bezaleel, here last named, by the command and direction of Moses; or David, who may be said to put it there, because he continued it there, and did not remove it, as he did the ark from the tabernacle. Sought unto it, i. e. sought the LORD and his favour by hearty prayers and sacrifices in the place which God had appointed for that work, Lev. xvii. 3, 4.

6 And Solomon went up thither to the brasen altar before the LORD, which was at the tabernacle of the congregation, and ⁱ offered a thousand burnt offerings upon it. ⁱ 1 Kings 3. 4.

i. e. Which altar. But that he had now said, ver. 5, and therefore would not unnecessarily repeat it. Or rather, who; and so these words are emphatical, and contain a reason why Solomon went thither, because the LORD was there graciously present to hear prayers and receive sacrifices.

^k 1 Kings 3. 5, 6. 7 ^{††} In that night did God appear unto Solomon, and said unto him, Ask what I shall give thee.

In that night, after those sacrifices were offered. Did God appear, in a dream, of which see the notes on 1 Kings iii. 5, &c.

8 And Solomon said unto God, Thou hast shewed great mercy unto David my father, and hast made me ^l to reign in his stead. ^l 1 Chr. 28. 5.

9 Now, O LORD God, let thy promise unto David my father be established: ^m for thou hast made me king over a people ⁿ like the dust of the earth in multitude. ^m 1 Kings 3. 7, 8. ⁿ Heb. much as the dust of the earth.

10 ^aGive me now wisdom and knowledge, that I may ^ogo out and come in before this people: for who can judge this thy people, that is so great?

What one man is sufficient to govern so numerous a people?

11 ^pAnd God said to Solomon, Because this was in thine heart, and thou hast not asked riches, or honour, nor the life of thine enemies, neither yet hast asked long life; but hast asked wisdom and knowledge for thyself, that thou mayest judge my people, over whom I have made thee king:

The life of thine enemies, i. e. the taking away of their lives.

12 Wisdom and knowledge is granted unto thee; and I will give thee riches, and wealth, and honour, such as ^qnone of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there any after thee have the like.

13 ¶ Then Solomon came from his journey to the high place that was at Gibeon to Jerusalem, from before the tabernacle of the congregation, and reigned over Israel.

To the high place, or, from the high place; for the Hebrew prefix lamed, which commonly signifies to, is sometimes put for the Latin de, which signifies from.

14 ^rAnd Solomon gathered chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, which he placed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

Of this and the three following verses, see the notes on 1 Kings x. 26, &c.

15 ^sAnd the king † made silver and gold at Jerusalem as plenteous as stones, and cedar trees as he as the sycamore trees that are in the vale for abundance.

16 ^tAnd † Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

17 And they fetched up, and brought forth out of Egypt a chariot for six hundred shekels of silver, and an horse for an hundred and fifty: and so brought they out horses for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, † by their means.

CHAP. II.

Solomon appointeth workmen to build the temple: his embassy to king Hiram for workmen and materials, promising to furnish him with victuals, 1—10. Hiram's kindness, 11—16. Solomon numbereth and divideth the workmen, 17, 18.

1 AND Solomon ^adetermined to build an house for the name of the LORD, and an house for his kingdom.

i. e. A royal palace for himself and his successors. This whole chapter, for the substance of it, is contained in 1 Kings v., and in the notes there it is explained, and the seeming differences reconciled.

2 And ^bSolomon told out threescore and ten thousand men to bear burdens, and fourscore thousand to hew in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred to oversee them.

3 ¶ And Solomon sent to ¶ Hiram the king of Tyre, saying, ^cAs thou didst deal with David my father, and didst send him cedars to build him an house to dwell therein, even so deal with me.

Which words may be commodiously understood from the nature of the thing, and from the following words, such ellipses being frequent in the Hebrew. Or, without any ellipsis, the sense, being here suspended, is completed ver. 7, so send me, &c., the 4th, 5th, and 6th verses being inserted by way of parenthesis, to usher in and enforce his following request.

4 Behold, ^dI build an house to the name of the LORD my God, to dedicate it to him, and ^eto burn before him † sweet incense, and for ^fthe continual shewbread, and for ^gthe burnt offerings morning and evening, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts of the LORD our God. This is an ordinance for ever to Israel.

To dedicate it to him, i. e. to his honour and worship. For the continual shew-bread; so called here and Numb. iv. 7, because it was to be there continually, by a constant succession of new bread when the old was removed; of which see Exod. xxv. 30; Lev. xxiv. 8.

5 And the house which I build is great: for ^hgreat is our God above all gods.

The house which I build is great; for though the temple, strictly so called, was but small, yet the buildings belonging to it, both above and under ground, were large and numerous.

6 But who † is able to build him an house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain him? who am I then, that I should build him an house, save only to burn sacrifice before him?

The heaven of heavens cannot contain him: when I speak of building a great house for our great God, let none be so foolish to think that I mean to include or comprehend God within it, for he is infinite. To burn sacrifice before him, i. e. to worship him there where he is graciously present.

7 Send me now therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in iron, and in purple, and crimson, and blue, and that can skill † to grave with the cunning men that are with me in Judah and in Jerusalem, ⁱwhom David my father did provide.

8 ^jSend me also cedar trees, fir trees, and ¶ algum trees, out of Lebanon: for I know that thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon; and, behold, my servants shall be with thy servants, 9 Even to prepare me timber in abundance: for the house which I am about to build shall be † wonderful great.

See the notes on ver. 5.

10 ^kAnd, behold, I will give to thy servants, the hewers that cut timber, twenty thousand measures of beaten wheat, and twenty thousand measures of barley, and twenty thousand baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil.

Where the Lord appeared unto David; which place the Lord had consecrated by his gracious appearance there, 1 Chron. xxi. 26. Or, which was showed unto David, to wit, to be the place where the temple should be built; which God pointed out to him, partly by his appearance, and principally by his Spirit suggesting this to David at that time. The place that David had prepared, by pulling down the buildings which were upon it, or near it, by levelling the ground, and possibly by marking it out for the temple and courts, the dimensions whereof he very particularly and exactly understood by the Spirit of God. In the threshing-floor, i. e. in the place where that threshing-floor formerly stood.

2 And he began to build in the second day of the second month, in the fourth year of his reign.

3 ¶ Now these are the things ^dwherein Solomon was †instructed for the building of the house of God. The length by cubits after the first measure was threescore cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits.

Solomon was instructed; partly by his father David, and partly by the Spirit of God, which inspired and guided him in the whole work. Or, these were Solomon's foundations, the Hebrew verb being put for the noun, as it is elsewhere. The sense is, These were the measures of the foundations upon which he intended to build the temple. After the first measure, i. e. according to the measure of the first and ancient cubit. By which it is evident that there were cubits of different sorts and sizes; which also appears from Ezek. xl. 5; xliii. 13. But how big those cubits were, and how much larger than the common cubits, and whether this was the cubit used by Moses in the building of the tabernacle, which seems most probable, or some other and yet larger cubit, is not agreed among learned men, and cannot now be exactly known, nor is it of any great moment for us to know.

4 "And the ^eporch that was in the front of ~~the~~ house, the length of it was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the height was an hundred and twenty; and he overlaid it within with pure gold.

The height was an hundred and twenty; this being a kind of turret to the building. The breadth of it here omitted is expressed to be ten cubits, 1 Kings vi. 3.

f 1 Kings 6.
5 And ^fthe greater house he cield with fir tree, which he overlaid with fine gold, and set thereon palm trees and chains.

The greater house, i. e. the holy place, which was thrice as large as the lesser house, or the holy of holies, which is called the most holy house, ver. 8. See the notes on 1 Chron. xxviii. 11.

6 And he †garnished the house with precious stones for beauty: and the gold was gold of Parvaim.

See the notes on 1 Kings ix. 26, &c.

7 He overlaid also the house, the beams, the posts, and the walls thereof, and the doors thereof, with gold; and graved cherubims on the walls.

8 And he made the most holy house, the length whereof was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with fine gold, amounting to six hundred talents.

9 And the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold. And he overlaid the upper chambers with gold.

Of the nails, i. e. of each of the nails or heads of those nails whereby the plates were fastened to the boards. The upper chambers; of which see on 1 Chron. xxviii. 11.

10 ^g And in the most holy house he made two cherubims ^h of image work, and overlaid them with gold.

Of image work; made in the shape of young men or boys, as they commonly are. Or, of movable work; so called because they were not fixed to the mercy-seat, as the Mosaic cherubims were, but stood upon their feet, as it is said here, ver. 13, in a moving posture.

11 ¶ And the wings of the cherubims were twenty cubits long: one wing of the one cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was likewise five cubits, reaching to the wing of the other cherub.

12 And one wing of the other cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was five cubits also, joining to the wing of the other cherub.

13 The wings of these cherubims spread themselves forth twenty cubits: and they stood on their feet, and their faces were ¶ inward.

Heb. Towards the house, or rather, that house; not the holy house, as divers understand it; for then their backs must have been turned towards the ark, which was indecent, and directly contrary to the posture of Moses's cherubims, which looked towards it; but the most holy house, which was last named, ver. 8, and of which he continues yet to speak; this posture being most agreeable to their use, which was with their wings to close in the ark and cover it, as it is expressly affirmed below, chap. v. 8.

14 ¶ And he made the ^hvail of blue, and purple, and crimson, and fine linen, and † wrought cherubims thereon.

The veil, to wit, the inner veil before the most holy place, by comparing this with Exod. xxvi. 31; 1 Kings vi. 21.

15 Also he made before the house ¹two pillars of thirty and five cubits † high, and the chapter that was on the top of each of them was five cubits.

Before the house, i. e. before the holy house, or before the temple, as this is explained, ver. 17, lest it should be understood of the most holy house, of which he had spoken before. Thirty and five cubits high, to wit, both of them; of which see the notes on 1 Kings vii. 15.

16 And he made chains, as in the oracle, and put them on the heads of the pillars; and made ^kan hundred pomegranates, and put them on the chains.

As in the oracle; as he had done, or like unto those which he made, in the oracle; of which see 1 Kings vi. 21. The particle as is oft understood, as Gen. xlix. 9; Deut. xxxiii. 22, &c. An hundred pomegranates in each row, or two hundred in all, as it is said, 1 Kings vii. 20.

17 And he ^lreared up the pillars before the temple, one on the right hand, and the other on the left; and called the name of that on the right hand ¶ Jachin, and the name of that on the left ¶ Boaz.

CHAP. IV.

The altar of brass, 1. The molten sea upon twelve oxen, 2—5. The ten lavers, candlesticks, and tables, 6—8. The courts, and the instruments of brass, 9—18. The instruments of gold, 19—22.

MOREOVER he made ^aan altar of brass, twenty cubits the length thereof, and twenty cubits the breadth thereof, and ten cubits the height thereof.

Quest. How could this be, when God had said, Thou shalt not go up by steps unto mine altar, that thy nakedness be not discovered thereon, Exod. xx. 26, and steps were necessary for so high an altar as this was? Answ. 1. These steps were so made that there was no fear of this inconvenience. 2. That law was useful and fit when it was made; but afterwards, when the priests were commanded to wear linen breeches in their holy ministrations to cover their nakedness, Exod. xxviii. 42, it was not necessary. 3. Howsoever God could undoubtedly dispense with his own law, as here he did; for he it was that gave these dimensions for the altar.

2 ¶ ^bAlso he made a molten sea of ten cubits † from brim to brim, round in compass, and five cubits the height thereof; and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

A molten sea: of this and ver. 3, 4, 5, &c., see the notes on 1 Kings vii. 23, &c.

3 ^c And under it was the similitude of oxen, which did compass it round about: ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about. Two rows of oxen were cast, when it was cast.

4 It stood upon twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

5 And the thickness of it was an handbreadth, and the brim of it like the work of the brim of a cup, ¶ with flowers of lilies; and it received and held ^dthree thousand baths.

6 ¶ He made also ^eten lavers, and put five on the right hand, and five on the left, to wash in them: † such things as they offered for the burnt offering they washed in them; but the sea was for the priests to wash in.

Ten lavers; of which see 1 Kings vii. 38, &c.

7 ^f And he made ten candlesticks of gold ^g according to their form, and set them in the temple, five on the right hand, and five on the left.

According to their form; either, 1. The form which was appointed for them by God, who signified it to David. Or rather, 2. The old form which God prescribed to Moses, Exod. xxv. 31, &c., for so these were made. And this clause seems to be added here, because in many things there was a great variation from the old form, as in the posture of the cherubims, the height of the altar, and divers other things.

8 ^h He made also ten tables, and placed them in the temple, five on the right side, and five on the left. And he made an hundred ¶ basons of gold.

Ten tables; of which see 1 Kings vii. 48.

9 ¶ Furthermore ⁱ he made the court of the priests, and the great court, and doors for the court, and overlaid the doors of them with brass.

His father, i. e. Solomon's father; the relative being put before the antecedent, which is not unusual in the Hebrew tongue. And he is so called here, because Solomon usually called him by that name, out of that great respect which he bore to him for his excellent art and service which he did for him; it being usual to call great artists and inventors of things by this name; of which see Gen. iv. 20, 21. b Lev. 16. 2.

This whole chapter, for the substance, and almost all the words of it, are explained in the notes on 1 Kings viii.

2 But I have built an house of habitation for thee, and a place for thy dwelling for ever.

3 And the king turned his face, and blessed the whole congregation of Israel: and all the congregation of Israel stood.

4 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, who hath with his hands fulfilled that which he spake with his mouth to my father David, saying,

5 Since the day that I brought forth my people out of the land of Egypt I chose no city among all the tribes of Israel to build an house in, that my name might be there; neither chose I any man to be a ruler over my people Israel:

9 Notwithstanding thou shalt not build the house; but thy son which shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house for my name.

10 The LORD therefore hath performed his word that he hath spoken: for I am risen up in the room of David my father, and am set on the throne of Israel, as the LORD promised, and have built the house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

31 That they may fear thee, to walk in thy ways, †so long as they live †in the land which thou gavest unto our fathers.

32 ¶ Moreover concerning the stranger, ^{q John 12. 40. Acts 8. 27.} which is not of thy people Israel, but is come from a far country for thy great name's sake, and thy mighty hand, and thy stretched out arm; if they come and pray in this house;

33 Then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for; that all people of the earth may know thy name, and fear thee, as doth thy people Israel, and may know that †this house which I have built is called by thy name.

34 If thy people go out to war against their enemies by the way that thou shalt send them, and they pray unto thee toward this city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I have built for thy name;

35 Then hear thou from the heavens their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their ¶ cause.

36 If they sin against thee, (for there is ^{r Prov. 29. 9. Jerk's. 7. 20. Jan. 7. 2. 1 John 1. 8.} no man which sinneth not,) and thou be angry with them, and deliver them over before their enemies, and †they carry them away captives unto a land far off or near;

37 Yet if they †bethink themselves in the land whither they are carried captive, and turn and pray unto thee in the land of their captivity, saying, We have sinned, we have done amiss, and have dealt wickedly;

38 If they return to thee with all their heart and with all their soul in the land of their captivity, whither they have carried them captives, and pray toward their land, which thou gavest unto their fathers, and toward the city which thou hast chosen, and toward the house which I have built for thy name:

39 Then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling place, their prayer and their supplications, and maintain their ¶ cause, and forgive thy people which ^{† Or, right.} have sinned against thee.

40 Now, my God, let, I beseech thee, thine eyes be open, and let thine ears be attent †unto the prayer that is made in this place.

For he seems rather to speak of the salvation afforded to the priests, than of that which by God's blessing on the priests' labours is conferred upon the people; this being a prayer for God's blessing upon the whole community, consisting of priests and people. Let thy saints rejoice in goodness, i. e. let them have cause of rejoicing and thanksgiving for the effects of thy goodness imparted unto them.

Compare Exod. xl. 35.

3 And when all the children of Israel saw how the fire came down, and the glory of the LORD upon the house, they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and worshipped, and praised the LORD, ^e saying, For he is good; ^f for his mercy endureth for ever.

The cloud first came down upon the house, and then entered into the house, and was seen both within it by the priests, and without it by the people.

r 1 Kings 8. 62, 63. 4 ¶ Then the king and all the people offered sacrifices before the LORD.

5 And king Solomon offered a sacrifice of twenty and two thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep: so the king and all the people dedicated the house of God.

h 1 Chron. 15. 16. 6 ^h And the priests waited on their offices: the Levites also with instruments of musick of the LORD, which David the king had made to praise the LORD, because his mercy endureth for ever, when David praised [†] by their ministry; and ⁱ the priests sounded trumpets before them, and all Israel stood.

When David praised by their ministry; for David composed the psalms or hymns, 1 Chron. xvi. 7, and appointed them to be sung by the Levites, and instrumental music to be joined to their voices.

k 1 Kings 8. 64. 7 Moreover ^k Solomon hallowed the middle of the court that was before the house of the LORD: for there he offered burnt offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings, because the brasen altar which Solomon had made was not able to receive the burnt offerings, and the meat offerings, and the fat.

Of this and ver. 8—10, see the notes on 1 Kings viii. 64, &c.

l 1 Kings 8. 65. 8 ¶ Also at the same time Solomon kept the feast seven days, and all Israel with him, a very great congregation, from the entering in of Hamath unto ^m the river of Egypt.

n 1 Kings 8. 65. 9 And in the eighth day they made [†] a solemn assembly: for they kept the dedication of the altar seven days, and the feast seven days.

o 1 Kings 9. 1, &c. 10 And ⁿ on the three and twentieth day of the seventh month he sent the people away into their tents, glad and merry in heart for the goodness that the LORD had shewed unto David, and to Solomon, and to Israel his people.

11 Thus ^o Solomon finished the house of the LORD, and the king's house: and all that came into Solomon's heart to make in the house of the LORD, and in his own house, he prosperously effected.
See 011 1 Kings ix. 1, 2.

12 ¶ And the LORD appeared to Solomon by night, and said unto him, I have heard thy prayer, ^p and have chosen this place to myself for an house of sacrifice.

13 ^q If I shut up heaven that there be no rain, or if I command the locusts to devour the land, or if I send pestilence among my people;

If I command the locusts, i. e. use my authority and power over them to cause them to do so. A metaphor elsewhere used in reference to unreasonable creatures, as 1 Kings xvii. 4; Amos ix. 3, who are not properly capable of a command, or of obedience.

14 If my people, [†] which are called by my name, shall ^r humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; ^s then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land.

15 Now ^t mine eyes shall be open, and mine ears attent [†] unto the prayer that is made in this place.

Or, that shall be made in or towards this place; for he speaks of the answers which he will give to the prayers which shall be made here. Heb. of this place.

16 For now have ^u I chosen and sanctified this house, that my name may be there for ever: and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.

Of this verse and the rest of this chapter, see the notes on 1 Kings ix. 3, &c.

17 ^x And as for thee, if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, and do according to all that I have commanded thee, and shalt observe my statutes and my judgments;

18 Then will I stablish the throne of thy kingdom, according as I have covenanted with David thy father, saying, ^y † There shall not fail thee a man to be ruler in Israel.

19 ^z But if ye turn away, and forsake my statutes and my commandments, which I have set before you, and shall go and serve other gods, and worship them;

20 Then will I pluck them up by the roots out of my land which I have given them; and this house, which I have sanctified for my name, will I cast out of my sight, and will make it to be a proverb and a byword among all nations.

21 And this house, which is high, shall be an astonishment to every one that shall see by it; so that he shall say, ^a Why hath the LORD done thus unto this land, and unto this house?

22 And it shall be answered, Because they forsook the LORD God of their fathers, which brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, and laid hold on other gods, and worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath he brought all this evil upon them.

3 And Solomon went to Hamath-zobah, and prevailed against it.

4 ^b And he built Tadmor in the wilderness, and all the store cities, which he built in Hamath.

Of this and the following verses, see on 1 Kings ix. 17, &c.

5 Also he built Beth-horon the upper, and Beth-horon the nether, fenced cities, with walls, gates, and bars;

6 And Baalath, and all the store cities that Solomon had, and all the chariot cities, and the cities of the horsemen, and 7 ^c ¶ All that Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and throughout all the land of his dominion.

8 ¶ As for all the people that were left of the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which were not of Israel, 9 But of their children, who were left after them in the land, whom the children of Israel consumed not, them did Solomon make to pay tribute until this day.

10 But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no servants for his work; but they were men of war, and chief of his captains, and captains of his chariots and horsemen.

11 And these were the chief of king Solomon's officers, even ^d two hundred and fifty, that bare rule over the people.

12 ¶ And Solomon ^e brought up the daughter of Pharaoh out of the city of David unto the house that he had built for her: for he said, My wife shall not dwell in the house of David king of Israel, because the places are ^f holy, whereunto the ark of the LORD hath come.

Not because every place where once the ark came was thereby consecrated to God, and might not after the ark was gone be put to any common use; for then both the house of Obed-edom and all other places where the ark either rested or passed were made holy thereby, and unlawful for men to dwell in; but either, 1. Because she was a woman, and attended by many other women, who besides the common pollutions of all, are subject to many and frequent ceremonial pollutions peculiar to their sex, and either she, or at least many of her followers, might be heathens at this time; and therefore he thought it indecent that such persons should come as it were in God's stead, and succeed him in the place where he had dwelt. Or, 2. He speaks not of the time when the ark was gone, but whilst it was there; and these words contain a reason not of the more remote words, why he now brought her up thither, but of the words immediately preceding, why he built this house for her; because the ark was now in the house of David, which therefore ought to be kept pure and free from the very danger and appearance of pollution.

13 ¶ Then Solomon offered burnt offerings unto the LORD on the altar of the LORD, which he had built before the porch,

14 ¶ Even after a certain rate every day, offering according to the commandment of Moses, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts, ^g three times in the year, even in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles.

15 ¶ And he appointed, according to the order of David his father, the ^h courses of the priests to their service, and ⁱ the Levites to their charges, to praise and minister before the priests, as the duty of every day required: the ^k porters also by their courses at every gate: for ^l so had David the man of God commanded.

The man of God, i. e. a prophet inspired by God in these matters, whose commands therefore are the commands of God.

16 And they departed not from the commandment of the king unto the priests and Levites concerning any matter, or concerning the treasures.

17 Now all the work of Solomon was prepared unto the day of the foundation of the house of the LORD, and until it was finished. So the house of the LORD was perfected.

All the work of Solomon was prepared; all the materials were procured, and in all points squared, and fitted, and completed beforehand.

18 ¶ Then went Solomon to ^m Ezion-geber, and to ⁿ Eloth, at the sea side in the land of Edom.

Of this and the next verse, see the notes on 1 Kings ix. 26, &c.

19 And Hiram sent him by the hands of his servants ships, and servants that had knowledge of the sea; and they went with the servants of Solomon to Ophir, and took thence four hundred and fifty talents of gold, and brought them to king Solomon.

AND ^o when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, she came to prove Solomon with hard questions at Jerusalem, with a very great company, and camels that bare spices, and gold in abundance, and precious stones: and when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart.

10 And the servants also of Huram, and the servants of Solomon, ^b which brought gold from Ophir, brought ^c algum trees and precious stones.

11 And the king made of the algum trees †† terraces to the house of the LORD, and to the king's palace, and harps and psalteries for singers : and there were none such seen before in the land of Judah.

12 And king Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that which she had brought unto the king. So she turned, and went away to her own land, she and her servants.

Besides that which she had brought; besides what he gave her of his royal bounty, as it is expressed, 1 Kings x. 13, which was in compensation for her presents, as is here noted.

13 ¶ Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred and threescore and six talents of gold ;

14 Beside that which chapmen and merchants brought. And all the kings of Arabia and †† governors of the country brought gold and silver to Solomon.

15 ¶ And king Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold : six hundred shekels of beaten gold went to one target.

16 And three hundred shields made he of beaten gold : three hundred shekels of gold went to one shield. And the king put them in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

17 Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with pure gold.

18 And there were six steps to the throne, with a footstool of gold, which were fastened to the throne, and † stays on each side of the sitting place, and two lions standing by the stays :

19 And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps. There was not the like made in any kingdom.

20 ¶ And all the drinking vessels of king Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of † pure gold : †† none were of silver ; it was not any thing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

21 For the king's ships went to Tarshish with the servants of Huram : every three years once came the ships of Tarshish bringing gold, and silver, †† ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

22 And king Solomon passed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom.

23 ¶ And all the kings of the earth sought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, that God had put in his heart.

24 And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and raiment, harness, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year.

25 ¶ And Solomon ^d had four thousand stalls for horses and chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen ; whom he bestowed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

Four thousand stalls, to wit, greater stalls, in each of which were ten stalls, in all forty thousand stalls, as it is 1 Kings iv. 26, where see the notes.

26 ¶ ^e And he reigned over all the kings ^f from the † river even unto the land of the Philistines, and to the border of Egypt.

27 ^g And the king † made silver in Jerusalem as stones, and cedar trees made he as the sycamore trees that are in the low plains in abundance.

28 ^h And they brought unto Solomon horses out of Egypt, and out of all lands.

29 ¶ ⁱ Now the rest of the acts of Solomon, first and last, are they not written in the † book of Nathan the prophet, and in the prophecy of ^k Ahijah the Shilonite, and in the visions of ^l Iddo the seer against Jeroboam the son of Nebat ?

Iddo the seer, mentioned also chap. xii. 15, supposed to be the same who is called Oded, chap. xv. 1. This, and the other prophets mentioned, were also historians, and wrote some annals or histories of their times; out of which these sacred and canonical books were taken, either by these or other prophets.

30 ^m And Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel forty years.

31 And Solomon slept with his fathers, and he was buried in the city of David his father : and Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead.

^a 1 Kings 12. 1, &c. AND ^a Rehoboam went to Shechem : for to Shechem were all Israel come to make him king.

The contents of this chapter are in 1 Kings xii., where see the notes.

^b 1 Kings 11. 40. 2 And it came to pass, when Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was in Egypt, ^b whither he had fled from the presence of Solomon the king, heard it, that Jeroboam returned out of Egypt.

3 And they sent and called him. So Jeroboam and all Israel came and spake to Rehoboam, saying,

And they sent ; or, for (as that particle is oft used, as hath been noted before) they had sent, &c. So this is the reason why he returned, as was said, ver. 2.

4 Thy father made our yoke grievous : now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude of thy father, and his heavy yoke that he put upon us, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, Come again unto me after three days. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And king Rehoboam took counsel with the old men that had stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, saying, What counsel give ye me to return answer to this people ?

7 And they spake unto him, saying, If thou be kind to this people, and please them, and speak good words to them, they will be thy servants for ever.

8 But he forsook the counsel which the old men gave him, and took counsel with the young men that were brought up with him, that stood before him.

9 And he said unto them, What advice give ye that we may return answer to this people, which have spoken to me, saying, Ease somewhat the yoke that thy father did put upon us ?

10 And the young men that were brought up with him spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou answer the people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it somewhat lighter for us ; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

^{† Heb. taded.} 11 For whereas my father † put a heavy yoke upon you, I will put more to your yoke : my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

12 So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam on the third day, as the king bade, saying, Come again to me on the third day.

13 And the king answered them roughly ; and king Rehoboam forsook the counsel of the old men, 14 And answered them after the advice of the young men, saying, My father made your yoke heavy, but I will add thereto : my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

^c 1 Sam. 2. 25. ^d 1 Kings 12. 15, 24. 15 So the king hearkened not unto the people : ^c for the cause was of God, that the LORD might perform his word, which he spake by the ^d hand of Ahijah the Shilonite to Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 ¶ And when all Israel saw that the king would not hearken unto them, the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David ? and we have none inheritance in the son of Jesse : every man to your tents, O Israel : and now, David, see to thine own house. So all Israel went to their tents.

17 But as for the children of Israel that dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam sent Hadoram that was over the tribute ; and the children of Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. But king Rehoboam † made ^{† Heb. strengthened himself.} speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.

19 ^e 1 Kings 12. 19. And Israel rebelled against the house of David unto this day.

CHAP. XI.

Rehoboam raising an army to subdue Israel, is forbidden by Shemaiah, 1—4. He strengtheneth his kingdom with forts and provision, 5—12. The priests and Levites, and such as feared God, forsaken by Jeroboam, who turneth idolater, strengthen the kingdom of Judah, 13—17. The wives and children of Rehoboam, 18—23.

AND ^a when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he gathered of the house of Judah and Benjamin an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against Israel, that he might bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam.

^a 1 Kings 12. 21, &c. Of this verse, and ver. 2—4, see the notes on 1 Kings xii. 21, &c.

2 But the word of the LORD came ^b to ^b Shemaiah the man of God, saying,

3 Speak unto Rehoboam the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and to all Israel in Judah and Benjamin, saying,

4 Thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren : return every man to his house : for this thing is done of me. And they obeyed the words of the LORD, and returned from going against Jeroboam.

5 ¶ And Rehoboam dwelt in Jerusalem, and built cities for defence in Judah.

Built cities, i. e. repaired, and enlarged, and fortified them ; as building is oft used in Scripture, as hath been formerly proved ; for these cities, or divers of them, were built before, as appears from Josh. x. 10 ; xii. 15 ; xv. 24, 33, 35, 58 ; xix. 42.

6 He built even Beth-lehem, and Etam, and Tekoa,

7 And Beth-zur, and Shoco, and Adullam,

8 And Gath, and Mareshah, and Ziph,

9 And Adoraim, and Lachish, and Azekah,

10 And Zorah, and Ajalon, and Hebron, which are in Judah and in Benjamin fenced cities.

11 And he fortified the strong holds, and put captains in them, and store of victual, and of oil and wine.

12 And in every several city he put shields and spears, and made them exceeding strong, having Judah and Benjamin on his side.

In every several city, to wit, so fortified, as he said, ver. 11.

that were in all Israel †resorted to him out of all their coasts.

d ch. 13. 9.

14 For the Levites left ^c their suburbs and their possession, and came to Judah and Jerusalem: for ^d Jeroboam and his sons had cast them off from executing the priest's office unto the LORD :

They would not suffer them to instruct and assist the Israelites in the worship and service of God, nor to go up to Jerusalem to worship in their courses; and these priests would not join with them in the worship of the calves, as they were desired and commanded to do; and therefore they willingly forsook all their patrimonies and possessions for God's sake.

15 ^e And he ordained him priests for the high places, and for ^f the devils, and for ^g the calves which he had made.

Or, for the high places, both for the devils (i. e. the Baals, or false gods, which divers of his people worshipped, whom he permitted and encouraged to do so, giving them liberty to do any thing but to serve God at Jerusalem) and for the calves. So he erected two sorts of high places, some for Baal, and some for the true God, whom he pretended and would be thought to worship in and by the calves.

16 ^h And after them out of all the tribes of Israel such as set their hearts to seek the LORD God of Israel came to Jerusalem, to sacrifice unto the LORD God of their fathers.

Such as set their hearts to seek the Lord God of Israel; such as loved and feared God in truth, and with their whole heart.

17 So they ⁱ strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and made Rehoboam the son of Solomon strong, three years: for three years they walked in the way of David and Solomon.

This honorable mention of Solomon, as a pattern of piety, is a considerable evidence of his true repentance before his death; of which see more on 1 Kings xi. 43.

18 ¶ And Rehoboam took him Mahalath the daughter of Jerimoth the son of David to wife, and Abihail the daughter of Eliab the son of Jesse;

19 Which bare him children; Jeush, and Shamaiah, and Zaham.

20 And after her he took ^k Maachah the daughter of Absalom; which bare him Abijah, and Attai, and Ziza, and Shelomith.

21 And Rehoboam loved Maachah the daughter of Absalom above all his wives and his concubines: (for he took eighteen wives, and threescore concubines; and begat twenty and eight sons, and threescore daughters.)

22 And Rehoboam ^l made Abijah the son of Maachah the chief, to be ruler among his brethren: for he thought to make him king.

To be ruler among his brethren; he declared him his successor, and gave him the dominion over his brethren; wherein (if he was not the first-born, as it seems to be implied, because this is mentioned as an effect of his superlative love to his mother) he transgressed that law, Deut. xxi. 15, 16, unless God was pleased to dispense with it at this time.

23 And he dealt wisely, and dispersed of all his children throughout all the countries of Judah and Benjamin, unto every fenced city: and he gave them victual in abundance. ⁺ And he desired [†] many wives.

Dispersed of all his children: lest his other sons should after his death unite their counsels and forces together against Abijah, he wisely dispersed them into several and distant places, and under pretence of honouring them with the government of them, he made them prisoners in a sort, appointing several persons to observe their motions, and prevent their combinations.

Unto every fenced city, agreeable to their quality, that their restraint might be more easy to them. Desired many wives; either, 1. For his children; or rather, 2. For himself, by comparing this with ver. 21.

CHAP. XII.

Rehoboam, forsaking the Lord, is punished by Shishak, 1—4. Shemaiah reprovoeth him: he with the princes repenteth; is preserved in his kingdom; but is spoiled of the treasures of the temple, and of his royal palace, 5—12. His reign and death, and Abijah his son is made king, 13—16.

AND ^a it came to pass, when Rehoboam had established the kingdom, and had strengthened himself, ^b he forsook the law of the LORD, and all Israel with him.

2 ^c And it came to pass, that in the fifth year of king Rehoboam Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, because they had transgressed against the LORD,

In the fifth year; presently after the apostacy of the king and people, which was in his fourth year, by comparing this with chap. xi. 17.

3 With twelve hundred chariots, and threescore thousand horsemen: and the people were without number that came with him out of Egypt; ^d the Lubims, and the Sukkiims, and the Ethiopians.

The Lubims; a people of Africa bordering upon Egypt; of whom see chap. xvi. 8; Dan. xi. 43; Nah. iii. 9. The Sukkiims; a people living in tents, as the word signifies; and such there were not far from Egypt, both in Africa and in Arabia. The Ethiopians; either those beyond Egypt, or the Arabians.

4 And he took the fenced cities which pertained to Judah, and came to Jerusalem.

5 ¶ Then came ^e Shemaiah the prophet to Rehoboam, and to the princes of Judah, that were gathered together to Jerusalem because of Shishak, and said unto them, Thus saith the LORD, ^f Ye have forsaken me, and therefore have I also left you in the hand of Shishak.

6 Whereupon the princes of Israel and the king ^g humbled themselves; and they said, ^h The LORD is righteous.

7 And when the LORD saw that they humbled themselves, ⁱ the word of the LORD came to Shemaiah, saying, They have humbled themselves; therefore I will not destroy them, but I will grant them ^{||} some deliverance; and my wrath shall not be poured out upon Jerusalem by the hand of Shishak.

They humbled themselves; which though they did but forcedly, yet God was pleased so far to regard it, as to mitigate their calamity. My wrath shall not be poured out; I will give some stop to the course of my wrath, which was ready to be poured forth upon them to their utter destruction.

That they may experimentally know and feel the difference between my yoke and the yoke of a foreign and idolatrous prince, and what mischief they have done to themselves by forsaking me and my service.

^m 1 Kings 14. 25, 26. 9 ^m So Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, and took away the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house; he took all: he carried away also the shields of gold which Solomon had ⁿmade.

Upon which condition, and Rehoboam's submission to him, he delivered up to him the fenced cities of Judah, which he had taken, ver. 4. But of this and the two next verses, see on 1 Kings xiv. 26, &c.

10 Instead of which king Rehoboam made shields of brass, and committed ^o them ^o to the hands of the chief of the guard, that kept the entrance of the king's house.

11 And when the king entered into the house of the LORD, the guard came and fetched them, and brought them again into the guard chamber.

^{Or, and yet in Judah there were good things:} 12 And when he humbled himself, the wrath of the LORD turned from him, that he would not destroy him altogether: || and also in Judah things went well.

^{Heb. There were good things.} The meaning is either, 1. Though there were many corruptions in Judah, yet there were also divers good things there, which were not in Israel, as the word and ordinances, and pure worship of God, prophets and ministers of God's institution, and divers truly religious people. And so this is an additional reason why God would not destroy them. Or, 2. Notwithstanding this loss, they began to recruit themselves, and to regain some degree of their former prosperity; whence it follows, ver. 13. So, there being some respite given, and peace being restored, Rehoboam strengthened himself, &c.

^p 1 Kings 14. 21. 13 ¶ So king Rehoboam strengthened himself in Jerusalem, and reigned: for ^q Rehoboam was one and forty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, ^q the city which the LORD had chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess.

^r Or, freed. 14 And he did evil, because he || prepared not his heart to seek the LORD.

^r Prepared not, or directed not, or settled not, &c., i. e. although he humbled himself, and seemed penitent for a season, and professed the true religion and worship of God; yet he quickly relapsed into his former sins, because he was not sincere nor serious in his actions, and his heart was not right with God.

15 Now the acts of Rehoboam, first and last, are they not written in the ⁺ book of Shemaiah the prophet, ⁺ and of Iddo the seer concerning genealogies? ^s And there were wars between Rehoboam and Jeroboam continually.

^{Concerning genealogies;} in an historical account written by him of the genealogies and actions of the kings of Judah.

16 And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David: and ^t Abijah his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XIII.

Abijah warreth against Jeroboam king of Israel. 1—3; declareth the right of his cause, 4—12; trusteth in God; overcometh Jeroboam, 13—20. His wives and children, 21, 22.

NOW ^a in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam began Abijah to reign over Judah. ^a 1 Kings 15. 1, &c. 2 He reigned three years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was ^b Michaiah the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah. ^b See ch. 11. 20. 957. And there was war between Abijah and Jeroboam.

Michaiah the daughter of Uriel, called Maachah the daughter of Absalom, 1 Kings xv. 2. She might be daughter to one, and granddaughter to the other; or the proper and natural daughter of the one, and the other's by adoption, of which there are instances in Scripture; or the same person might be called Uriel and Absalom: see 1 Kings xv. 2.

3 And Abijah ⁺ set the battle in array with an army of valiant men of war, even four hundred thousand chosen men: Jeroboam also set the battle in array against him with eight hundred thousand chosen men, being mighty men of valour.

Abijah set the battle in array against Jeroboam. We need not scrupulously inquire into the lawfulness of this war, for this Abijah, though here he makes a fair flourish, and maintained the better cause, yet was indeed an ungodly man, 1 Kings xv. 3, and therefore minded not the satisfaction of his conscience, but only the recovery of his parent's ancient dominions.

4 ¶ And Abijah stood up upon mount ^c Zemaraim, which is in mount Ephraim, and said, Hear me, thou Jeroboam, and all Israel; ^c Josh. 18. 22.

Upon Mount Zemaraim; some commodious place whence his voice might be heard by Jeroboam, and some of his host, who possibly were pitched in the valley. Or the two armies being pitched near to one another, Abijah might desire a parley before they fought; whereupon Jeroboam, and some of his commanders and soldiers, might draw near to him, and stand below him at the bottom of the hill, where they might hear his speech; which Jeroboam was the more willing to do, that in the mean time he might cause an ambushment to come behind Abijah and his army, as he did, ver. 13, whilst he was quietly standing before them, and seemed to hearken to any terms of accommodation which might be offered.

5 Ought ye not to know that the LORD God of Israel ^d gave the kingdom over Israel to David for ever, even to him and to his sons ^e by a covenant of salt?

i. e. By a perpetual covenant, which thy usurpation cannot disannul. For the phrase, see on Numb. xviii. 19.

6 Yet Jeroboam the son of Nebat, the servant of Solomon the son of David, is risen up, and hath ^f rebelled against his lord. ^f 1 Kings 11. 26, & 12. 30.

But herein Abijah forgets his duty, both to his father, whom he falsely traduceth; and to God, by whose express command Rehoboam was restrained from the war against Israel, which otherwise he had both courage and resolution to prosecute, as appears from the history, 1 Kings xii. 21.

8 And now ye think to withstand the kingdom of the LORD in the hand of the sons of David; and ye be a great multitude, and there are with you golden calves, which Jeroboam ^hmade you for gods.

Hos. 8. 6.

The kingdom of the Lord in the hand of the sons of David; that kingdom which was not set up by vain men in pursuance of their own ambition and discontent, as yours was, but ordained and established by God himself in the house of David. And ye be a great multitude, or because (that Hebrew particle being oft so used) ye be, &c. This he mentions partly as the ground of their confidence, that they had more tribes and a greater host; and partly as a pre-sentage of their downfall, which trusting to the arm of flesh is. And there are with you golden calves, or, but there are, &c. There is that among you which may damp your courage and confidence: you worship those images which God abhors and severely forbids. For gods, or for God, as that plural word is most commonly used, i. e. instead of God, to give them the name of God, as Exod. xxxii. 4, and that worship which is peculiar to him.

To consecrate himself, i. e. to make himself a priest. See on Lev. vii. 37. That are no gods; that have nothing of the nature or power, though you give them the name of gods.

10 But as for us, the LORD is our God, and we have not forsaken him; and the priests, which minister unto the LORD, are the sons of Aaron, and the Levites wait upon their business:

The Lord, Heb. Jehovah, the only true and great God. We have not forsaken him; we maintain his honour and worship, which you have ungratefully rejected.

11 ^lAnd they burn unto the LORD every morning and every evening burnt sacrifices and sweet incense: the ^mshewbread also set they in order upon the pure table; and the candlestick of gold with the lamps thereof, ⁿto burn every evening: for we keep the charge of the LORD our God; but ye have forsaken him.

Because Shishak had carried away all but one. Or, 2. The singular number is put for the plural, as 1 Kings vii. 48, and oft elsewhere. Or, 3. Because ordinarily there was but one of each used at a time for those uses. To burn every evening; and from evening to morning continually, Lev. xxiv. 2, 3; for which end one candlestick was sufficient, and it is very improbable that all the candlesticks were used every night. We keep the charge of the Lord our God: this he saith, though he was an ungodly king; either because he flattered himself, and fancied that his keeping up the external worship of God would make full satisfaction for the errors of his life; or that he might hereby encourage his own soldiers, and convince or terrify his enemies.

12 And, behold, God himself is with us for our captain, ^oand his priests with sounding trumpets to cry alarm against you. O children of Israel, ^pfight ye not against the LORD God of your fathers; for ye shall not prosper.

With sounding trumpets to cry alarm against you; upon the sounding whereof God hath solemnly promised to assist his people, Numb. x. 9. Fight ye not against the Lord God of your fathers; you have not only us for your enemies, but God, even the God whom your fathers honoured and served, to their own great comfort and benefit.

13 ¶ But Jeroboam caused an ambushment to come about behind them: so they were before Judah, and the ambushment was behind them.

Whilst Abijah was discoursing, Jeroboam takes the advantage of it to lay an ambush.

14 And when Judah looked back, behold, the battle was before and behind: and they cried unto the LORD, and the priests sounded with the trumpets.

15 Then the men of Judah gave a shout: and as the men of Judah shouted, it came to pass, that God ^qsmote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah.

By strengthening the hearts and hands of the men of Judah, and taking away the spirits and power of their enemies; and, it may be, by some extraordinary assistance.

16 And the children of Israel fled before Judah: and God delivered them into their hand.

17 And Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter: so there fell down slain of Israel five hundred thousand chosen men.

A vast number: but it hath been oft observed and recorded by sacred and profane historians, that in those ancient times there were very numerous armies, and oftentimes very great slaughters; and if this slaughter was more than ordinary, there is nothing strange nor incredible, because the Almighty God fought against the Israelites.

18 Thus the children of Israel were brought under at that time, and the children of Judah prevailed, ^rbecause they relied upon the LORD God of their fathers.

Beth-el; which Jeroboam recovered afterwards, as appears by the course of the history, though it be not particularly mentioned, which is the case of many other considerable things. And in the mean time it is very probable, that when Jeroboam's host was discomfited, and he expected that Abijah would pursue his victory, he removed the golden calf from Beth-el, which lay near Abijah's kingdom, to some safer place. Ephraim; a city so called, possibly the same which is mentioned John xi. 54, or that which is called Ophrah, Judg. viii. 27.

The Lord struck him, i. e. Jeroboam, as appears from the contrary condition of Abijah described in the next verse. Him God might strike, either with vexation and horror of mind; or with some painful and lingering, but incurable, disease, like that of Jehoram, which tormented him two years together, and at last killed him, 2 Chron. xxi. 19. He died; not presently, but a year or two after this time.

21 ¶ But Abijah waxed mighty, and married fourteen wives, and begat twenty and two sons, and sixteen daughters.

Not now after this victory, for he died presently after it; but in the whole time of his life, before he was king and afterward.

6 ¶ And he built fenced cities in Judah: for the land had rest, and he had no war in those years; because the LORD had given him rest.

7 Therefore he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities, and make about them walls, and towers, gates, and bars, while the land is yet before us; because we have sought the LORD our God, we have sought him, and he hath given us rest on every side. So they built and prospered.

8 And Asa had an army of men that bare targets and spears, out of Judah three hundred thousand; and out of Benjamin, that bare shields and drew bows, two hundred and fourscore thousand: all these were mighty men of valour.

Asa had an army; which, as it seems, he had now gathered together upon the information of Zerah's design against him.

9 ¶ ^eAnd there came out against them Zerah the Ethiopian with an host of a thousand thousand, and three hundred chariots; and came unto ^fMareshah.

They smote all the cities round about Gerar; partly because they had joined with Zerah in this war, and partly because the Ethiopians had sheltered a great part of the remains of the army in them.

15 They smote also the tents of cattle, and carried away sheep and camels in abundance, and returned to Jerusalem.

The tents of cattle, i. e. the dwellers in tents, which were either a part of Zerah's company, or joined with them, or had come along with them to furnish that great host with necessary provisions, which their custom of dwelling in tents made them more capable of doing.

f Lev. 10. 11. a teaching priest, and without law.

Heb. For many days have been to Israel without the true God, &c., i. e. they have long lived without the sound knowledge and worship of the true God. The prophet confirms his foregoing exhortation, and the threatening annexed to it, that if they forsook God, he would forsake them, from the usual manner of God's dealing with Israel formerly, and therefore in the same case they may expect the same usage. Israel, here mentioned and propounded as an example, is here understood, either, 1. Specially of the ten tribes, distinguished by that name from the kingdom of Judah; whose condition had been, since Jeroboam's revolt, and now was such in some measure, as is here described, they having been, and still being, without God and his true worship, and therefore exposed to many vexations, and wars, and miseries. But these had not as yet turned unto God, or sought him, nor was God yet found of them, as is said of this Israel, ver. 4. Nor had they as yet been exercised with those grievous and continual vexations, and wars, and mutual destructions of which he here speaks, ver. 5, 6, and which in succeeding times they felt; for except that one blow which they had from Abijah, chap. xiii., we read of none other great mischiefs which befell them. Or rather, 2. Generally of the whole nation of Israel in former times, and especially in the times of the judges; to which all that follows suits very well; for then many times they were, though not wholly and universally, yet in a very great measure, and for the generality of them, without God, and his law, and teaching priests, as plainly appears from divers passages in the Book of the Judges; and then indeed they were brought to all the exigences and calamities here following; then they had grievous wars, both foreign and domestic; and then they did sometimes turn to the Lord and sought him, and he was found of them, and did raise up judges and saviours to them; of which see Judg. ii. at large, and Judg. iii. 9, 15; x. 10, &c.

g Deu. 4. 29. 4 But ^gwhen they in their trouble did turn unto the LORD God of Israel, and sought him, he was found of them.

When they did turn, i. e. Israel, mentioned ver. 3.

h Judg. 5. 6. 5 And ^hin those times there was no peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in, but great vexations were upon all the inhabitants of the countries.

In those times; when Israel lived in the gross neglect and contempt of God, and his law and worship. No peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in; men could not go abroad about their private occasions without great danger; as it was in the days of Shamgar, Judg. v. 6, which is a good comment upon this text. Of the countries, Heb. of the countries, i. e. the divers parts of the land of Israel, both within and without Jordan.

i Matt. 24. 7. 6 ⁱAnd nation was [†]destroyed of nation, and city of city: for God did vex them with all adversity.

Nation was destroyed of nation, i. e. one part of the people of Israel destroyed the other by civil wars; of which see instances, Judg. ix. 23, &c.; xii. 1, &c. As all the people of Israel are called a nation, so the several tribes and families of them are sometimes called nations, as Gen. xvii. 4; Ezek. ii. 3; Acts iv. 27, compared with Psal. ii. 1.

7 Be ye strong therefore, and let not your hands be weak: for your work shall be rewarded.

Be ye strong therefore; go on therefore courageously and resolutely to maintain God's worship, and to root out idolatry, as you have begun to do; for this is the only right method of preserving yourselves from such calamities as your predecessors have felt. Let not your hands be weak; be not discouraged with the opposition which you may possibly meet with. Your work shall be rewarded; what you do for God and for his honour and service shall not go unrequited.

8 And when Asa heard these words, and the prophecy of Oded the prophet, he took courage, and put away the [†]abominable idols out of all the land of Judah and Benjamin, and out of the cities [†]which he had taken from mount Ephraim, and renewed the altar of the LORD, that was before the porch of the LORD.

Of Oded the prophet, to wit, of Azariah, ver. 1, who was also called by his father's name Oded. Or Oded may be here put patronymically for the son of Oded; as David is put for Christ the Son of David, Jer. xxx. 9, and elsewhere; and Moses for the sons of Moses, Psal. xc. title. Or here is an ellipsis of the relative word, of which there are many instances both in sacred and profane authors; as 2 Sam. xxi. 19, the brother of Goliath; Matt. iv. 21, James the son of Zebedee; Luke xxiv. 10, Mary the mother of James, by comparing Mark xv. 40; John xix. 25, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and many other places. And so this place may be thus read, When Asa heard these words, even the prophecy of the son of Oded the prophet. And this ellipsis is the more easy and tolerable, because this defect might be well enough understood and supplied out of ver. 1.

Though some understand this to be another prophecy of Oded the father, which is not here expressed, which Azariah his son repeated to them for the confirmation of his own prophecy. He took courage; for it required great courage to put away all the idols, to which so great a number of his people were to this day addicted, and, among others, Maachah the queen, his mother, whom for this reason he deposed, 1 Kings xv. 13. The cities which he had taken, to wit, Abijah his father; which was easily understood from chap. xiii. 19. Or, which had been taken; the active word being oft so used impersonally for the passive, as Hebricians know. Renewed the altar of the Lord; which had been either decayed through age and long use of it, or broken by his idolatrous mother's means. Or, he consecrated or dedicated the altar, &c.; which possibly had been polluted by idolaters, and now needed some purification.

9 And he gathered all Judah and Benjamin, and [†]the strangers with them out of Ephraim and Manasseh, and out of Simeon: for they fell to him out of Israel in abundance, when they saw that the LORD his God was with him.

Out of Simeon; which tribe, though they had their inheritance out of the portion of Judah, did for the generality of them revolt to Jeroboam with the other tribes, as appears from many passages of Scripture; which they might conveniently do, because their portion bordered, as on one side upon that of Judah, so on the other side upon that of Dan; and therefore might indifferently join with the one or other, as they saw fit. They fell to him, to wit, from the king of Israel.

10 So they gathered themselves together at Jerusalem in the third month, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa.

In the third month, to wit, of the sacred year, in which the feast of weeks or of pentecost fell; of which see Exod. xxiii. 16; Deut. xvi. 9. In the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa. Asa had peace but ten years, chap. xiv. 1; after which probably there were some bickerings and skirmishes, which seem to have been composed; and after that Zerah comes against him, and is discomfited. Upon this great success many of the Israelites fall to him, and in his fifteenth year he calls this assembly.

11 ^mAnd they offered unto the LORD ^mthe same time, of ⁿthe spoil which they had brought, seven hundred oxen and seven thousand sheep.

Taken from Zerah and his accomplices, chap. xiv. 13, &c.

12 And they entered into a covenant to seek the LORD God of their fathers with all their heart and with all their soul;

They entered into a covenant; they engaged themselves by a serious and solemn covenant before the Lord and this great assembly.

940. viz. From the rending of the ten tribes from Judah, over which Asa was now king.
17, &c. b ch. 15. 9.

IN the six and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa ^aBaasha king of Israel came up against Judah, and built Ramah, ^bto the intent that he might let none go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

Of the reign of Asa; or, of the kingdom of Asa, i. e. of the kingdom of Judah, which was now Asa's kingdom; or from the time of the division of the two kingdoms. Rehoboam reigned seventeen years, chap. xii. 13; Abijah three years, chap. xiii. 2; Asa had now reigned fifteen years, chap. xv. 10; all which, put together, make up the thirty-five years mentioned chap. xv. 19. And in the next year Baasha wars against him; and the ground of war was the defection of many of his subjects to Asa, chap. xv. 9, whom Asa endeavours to engage, together with his own subjects, by an oath and a covenant, to be true and faithful to God, and consequently to himself; which was done in his fifteenth year, chap. xv. 9, 10; and therefore in his sixteenth year, called here the thirty-sixth year of his kingdom, he commenceth an open war against him. If it be objected, That the reign or kingdom of Asa is otherwise understood of the time of Asa's personal reign, (as I may call it,) chap. xv. 10; the answer is obvious, That there are many instances in Scripture (some of which have been formerly given, and others will be given in their proper places) where the same word or phrase is taken differently, and that in the very same chapter and history. And particularly this variety is elsewhere used, both by sacred and profane writers, in the computation of the years of princes, which are sometimes reckoned from the beginning of their reign, and sometimes from other remarkable times and occurrences. Thus Nebuchadnezzar's years are sometimes computed from the beginning of his reign, as 2 Kings xxv. 8; Jer. lii. 12, 29, 30, and sometimes from his complete conquest of Syria and Egypt, &c., as that passage, Dan. ii. 1, In the second year of Nebuchadnezzar, is by the general stream of interpreters understood. Thus Ahaziah's years, which doubtless were usually computed from the time of his birth, are computed from another head, chap. xxii. 2, where see the notes. And the like differences are observed in computing the years of some of the Syrian monarchs and Roman emperors; and particularly of Augustus, the years of whose reign are variously accounted by the Roman historians; sometimes from his first consulship, sometimes from the time of the triumvirate, and sometimes from that famous victory at Actium, where he utterly overthrew his competitor, and made himself sole and unquestionable emperor. And therefore it is not strange if it be so here. And that it must necessarily be thus understood, appears from hence, that it cannot be the thirty-sixth year of the reign of Asa in his own person, because Baasha began to reign in Asa's third year, 1 Kings xv. 28, and reigned only twenty-four years, and consequently died in Asa's twenty-sixth or twenty-seventh year, as it is said he did, 1 Kings xv. 8. That he might let none go out or come in to Asa king of Judah; that he might keep his subjects from revolting to Asa, as he perceived they began to do, chap. xv. 9, and keep Asa's subjects from coming into his dominions to seduce his people from their obedience to him.

2 Then Asa brought out silver and gold out of the treasures of the house of the LORD and of the king's house, and sent to Ben-hadad king of Syria, that dwelt at [†]Damascus, saying,

In the first ways, which David walked in before he fell into those horrid sins of murder and adultery. Or, in the ways of David, and his father's first ways. For the beginning of Asa's reign was laudable, as we have seen, though he declined at last. For it seems more probable that this passage is a reflection upon Asa, whose last ways were much his worst, and of whose repentance we have no evidence, than upon David, who, though he fell dreadfully in the matter of Uriah, yet did manifestly repent of it, and return to his first and holy course of life, in which also he continued until death; having this character given him by the Holy Ghost after his death, that he did right in all things, saving that of Uriah, 1 Kings xv. 5.

4 But sought to the LORD God of his father, and walked in his commandments, and not after *the doings of Israel.

i. e. Their worship of the calves, or other idols.

5 Therefore the LORD established the kingdom in his hand; and all Judah † brought to Jehoshaphat presents; † and he had riches and honour in abundance.

Judah brought to Jehoshaphat presents; as subjects in those times and places used to do to their kings, as a token of their respect and subjection to them. See 1 Sam. x. 27; 1 Kings x. 25; 2 Chron. xxxii. 23.

6 And his heart || was lifted up in the ways of the LORD: moreover † he took away the high places and groves out of Judah.

His heart was lifted up above all discouragements, and difficulties, and fears, by which men's hearts use to be cast down: he was valiant and resolute for God and his ways. He took away the high places and groves, to wit, such only wherein idols were worshipped, as appears by comparing this with chap. xx. 33. And though Asa had done this before, yet either he did not do it thoroughly, or the Jews (who were many of them mad upon their idols) had secretly made new ones, in the latter part of his reign, when he grew more infirm in body, and more remiss in God's cause.

7 ¶ Also in the third year of his reign he sent to his princes, even to Ben-hail, and to Obadiah, and to Zechariah, and to Nethaneel, and to Michaiah, † to teach in the cities of Judah.

To teach in the cities of Judah; to inform the people of their duty, and of the king's pleasure. As judges or justices of peace teach or instruct the people in the laws of the land, when they deliver their charges upon the bench; so did these princes in the king's name admonish and require the people to observe and obey the laws of God, which were the municipal laws of that land; the particular explication and enforcement whereof they left to the Levites and priests here following, who were sent for this end, and accordingly taught the people, ver. 9.

8 And with them he sent Levites, even She-maiah, and Nethaniah, and Zebadiah, and Asahel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehonathan, and Adonijah, and Tobijah, and Tob-adonijah, Levites; and with them Eli-shama and Jehoram, priests.

9 ^{h ch. 35. 3.} ^{Neh. 8. 7.} And they taught in Judah, and had the book of the law of the LORD with them, and went about throughout all the cities of Judah, and taught the people.

10 ¶ And ^{1 Gen. 35. 5.} ^{† Heb. was.} the fear of the LORD [†] fell upon all the kingdoms of the lands that were round about Judah, so that they made no war against Jehoshaphat.

Justly concluding from this singular piety that God would eminently appear for him, and against all those who had ill will to him, which was their case. For even the heathens could not but observe that the kings of Judah were either prosperous or unhappy, accordingly as they served God or forsook him.

11 Also some of the Philistines ^{h 2 Sam. 8.} ^{2.} brought Jehoshaphat presents, and tribute silver; and the Arabians brought him flocks, seven thousand and seven hundred rams, and seven thousand and seven hundred he goats.

Some of the Philistines; who had been subjects to this kingdom ever since David's time, but, it seems, had neglected this duty in the times of his predecessors, but now were moved by their own fears to perform it. The Arabians brought him flocks; either because he had upon some just occasion waged war against them, and subdued them, though the particulars of it be not described in Scripture; or because they voluntarily put themselves under his protection, in recompence whereof they sent him those presents; or only as a free acknowledgment of their respects to him.

12 ¶ And Jehoshaphat waxed great exceedingly; and he built in Judah ^{1 Or,} ^{palaces.} castles, and cities of store.

13 And he had much business in the cities of Judah: and the men of war, mighty men of valour, were in Jerusalem.

He had much business in the cities of Judah; partly to repair and fortify them, and furnish them with all necessary provisions; and partly to purge out all the relics and seeds of idolatry and injustice, which were more secretly and subtly managed in the cities than in the country, and which were first and most in the cities, and thence spread their infection into the country about them. See Jer. ii. 28.

14 And these are the numbers of them according to the house of their fathers: Of Judah, the captains of thousands; Adnah the chief, and with him mighty men of valour three hundred thousand.

15 And ^{† Heb. at his hand.} next to him was Jehohanan the captain, and with him two hundred and fourscore thousand.

Next to him; either, 1. After his death, as his successor in the same command. And the like is supposed concerning Jehozabad, ver. 18. Or rather, 2. Next to him in place and authority; or, at least, in power and the numbers of his host.

16 And next him was Amasiah the son of Zichri, ^{1 Judg. 5. 2.} ^{3.} who willingly offered himself unto the LORD; and with him two hundred thousand mighty men of valour.

As volunteers and auxiliaries, to be ready upon occasion, as the service of God and the king should require. Possibly these or most of them were the strangers which had come out of Israel into the kingdom of Judah in Asa's days, and probably since that in his time.

17 And of Benjamin; Eliada a mighty man of valour, and with him armed men with bow and shield two hundred thousand.

18 And next him was Jehozabad, and with him an hundred and fourscore thousand ready prepared for the war.

19 These waited on the king, beside ^m those whom the king put in the fenced ^{m ver. 2.} cities throughout all Judah.

These above mentioned were the trained bands or auxiliaries; whose chief officers waited upon the king to receive his commands, and to raise and bring in all or part of their forces to the service of the king and kingdom, as need required.

CHAP. XVIII.

Jehoshaphat, joined in affinity with Ahab, is persuaded to go with him against Ramoth-gilead, 1—3. Ahab, seduced by false prophets, according to the word of Micaiah, is slain there, 4—34.

NOW Jehoshaphat ^{897.} had riches and honour in abundance, and ^{a ch. 17. 5.} ^{b 2 Kings 8. 18.} joined affinity with Ahab.

For Jehoram, his eldest son, married Athaliah, Ahab's daughter, chap. xxi. 6; 2 Kings viii. 18. This chapter is for substance the same with 1 Kings xxii., where it is explained.

2 ° And [†] after certain years he went down to Ahab to Samaria. And Ahab killed sheep and oxen for him in abundance, and for the people that he had with him, and persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-gilead. ^{c 1 Kings 22. 2, &c.} ^{† Heb. at the end of years.}

3 And Ahab king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat king of Judah, Wilt thou go with me to Ramoth-gilead? And he answered him, I am as thou art, and my people as thy people; and we will be with thee in the war.

4 ¶ And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, ^{d 1 Sam. 23. 2, 4, 9.} Enquire, I pray thee, at the word of the LORD to day.

5 Therefore the king of Israel gathered together of prophets four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up; for God will deliver it into the king's hand.

6 But Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD [†] besides, that ^{† Heb. yet, or, more.} we might enquire of him?

7 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man, by whom we may enquire of the LORD: but I hate him; for he never prophesied good unto me, but always evil: the same is Micaiah the son of Imla. And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so.

8 And the king of Israel called for one of his [†] officers, and said, [†] Fetch quickly Micaiah the son of Imla. ^{† Or, enquire.} ^{† Heb. Hasten.}

9 And the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat king of Judah sat either of them on his throne, clothed in their robes, and they sat in a [†] void place at the entering in of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them. ^{† Or, Aoor.}

10 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah had made him horns of iron, and said, Thus saith the LORD, With these thou shalt push Syria until [†] they be consumed. ^{† Heb. thou consume them.}

11 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

12 And the messenger that went to call Micaiah spake to him, saying, Behold, the words of the prophets declare good to the king † with one assent; let thy word therefore, I pray thee, be like one of their's, and speak thou good.

+ Heb. with one mouth.

13 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, *even what my God saith, that will I speak.

14 And when he was come to the king, the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And he said, Go ye up, and prosper, and they shall be delivered into your hand.

15 And the king said to him, How many times shall I adjure thee that thou say nothing but the truth to me in the name of the LORD?

16 Then he said, I did see all Israel scattered upon the mountains, as sheep that have no shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master; let them return therefore every man to his house in peace.

17 And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would not prophesy good unto me, † but evil?

18 Again he said, Therefore hear the word of the LORD; I saw the LORD sitting upon his throne, and all the host of heaven standing on his right hand and on his left.

19 And the LORD said, Who shall entice Ahab king of Israel, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one spake saying after this manner, and another saying after that manner.

20 Then there came out a *spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will entice him. And the LORD said unto him, Wherewith?

21 And he said, I will go out, and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And the LORD said, Thou shalt entice him, and thou shalt also prevail: go out, and do even so.

22 Now therefore, behold, *the LORD hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of these thy prophets, and the LORD hath spoken evil against thee.

23 Then Zedekiah the son of Che-naanah came near, and ^bsmote Micaiah upon the cheek, and said, Which way went the Spirit of the LORD from me to speak unto thee?

24 And Micaiah said, Behold, thou shalt see on that day when thou shalt go † into † an inner chamber to hide thyself.

25 Then the king of Israel said, Take ye Micaiah, and carry him back to Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son;

26 And say, Thus saith the king, † Put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction, until I return in peace.

27 And Micaiah said, If thou certainly return in peace, then hath not the LORD spoken by me. And he said, Harken, all ye people.

28 So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah went up to Ramoth-gilead.

29 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, I will disguise myself, and will go to the battle; but put thou on thy robes. So the king of Israel disguised himself; and they went to the battle.

30 Now the king of Syria had commanded the captains of the chariots that were with him, saying, Fight ye not with small or great, save only with the king of Israel.

31 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, It is the king of Israel. Therefore they compassed about him to fight: but Jehoshaphat cried out, and the LORD helped him; and God moved them to depart from him.

32 For it came to pass, that, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, they turned back again † from pursuing him.

33 And a certain man drew a bow † at a venture, and smote the king of Israel † between the joints of the harness: therefore he said to his chariot man, Turn thine hand, that thou mayest carry me out of the host; for I am † wounded.

34 And the battle increased that day: howbeit the king of Israel stayed himself up in his chariot against the Syrians until the even: and about the time of the sun going down he died.

CHAP. XIX.

Jehoshaphat, reproved by the prophet Jehu, visiteth his kingdom, 1—4. His instructions to the judges, 5—7; to the priests and Levites, 8—11.

AND Jehoshaphat the king of Judah returned to his house in peace to Jerusalem.

Safe, being miraculously delivered from eminent danger, as was related, chap. xviii. 31, 32.

2 And Jehu the son of Hanani ^athe seer went out to meet him, and said to king Jehoshaphat, Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and ^blove them that hate the LORD? therefore is ^cwrath upon thee from before the LORD.

Jehu the son of Hanani the seer; of whom see 1 Kings xvi. 1. Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? was this agreeable to thy duty and love which thou professest to God and godliness, that thou hast entered into so strict an alliance and friendship with wicked Ahab, my sworn enemy, and given such assistance to him? Therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord; therefore God is angry with thee, and will chastise thee for this miscarriage: which he did, partly, by stirring up the Moabites and others to invade him, chap. xx.; partly, by permitting his eldest son Jehoram to kill all his brethren, chap. xxi. 4; and principally, by bringing that sore and almost general destruction upon his grandchildren by Jehu, 2 Kings ix. 27; x. 13, 14, which was the proper fruit of his alliance with Ahab.

3 Nevertheless there are ^dgood things found in thee, in that thou hast taken away the groves out of the land, and hast ^eprepared thine heart to seek God.

There are good things found in thee, i. e. good works proceeding from an honest heart; which God more regards than this particular error; and therefore though he will chasten thee, yet he will not utterly destroy thee. Or, directed or set thy heart, i. e. thou hast sought and served God with all thy heart, and not feignedly, as many others do. And this work of preparing or directing his heart is here ascribed to Jehoshaphat, as elsewhere it is attributed to God, Prov. xvi. 1; Phil. ii. 13, because it is man's action, but performed by God's grace, preventing, enabling, and inclining him to it.

4 And Jehoshaphat dwelt at Jerusalem: and †he went out again through the people from Beer-sheba to mount Ephraim, and brought them back unto the LORD God of their fathers.

+ Heb. he returned and went out.

He went out again; once he went by his officers, chap. xvii. 7, &c., now he went in his own person. From Beer-sheba to Mount Ephraim, i. e. through his whole kingdom, whereof these were the two bounds. Brought them back unto the LORD; such of them as had revolted from God to idols, he reclaimed by his good counsel and example, and by the instructions of the Levites and priests, whom doubtless now he carried with him, as he sent them before with his officers of state.

5 ¶ And he set judges in the land throughout all the fenced cities of Judah, city by city,

In every city, for itself and the country adjacent, that justice might be administered with the most ease and convenience to the people, and they might not all be forced to go up to Jerusalem.

6 And said to the judges, Take heed what ye do: for 'ye judge not for man, but for the LORD, ⁸who is with you in the judgment.

f Deut. 1. 17.
g Ps. 82. 1.
Eccles. 3. 8.
+ Heb. in the matter of judgment.

You represent God's person, to whom judgment belongeth, and you have your commission and power from God, and not from man only; and your administration of justice is not only for man's good, but also for God's honour and service. Who is with you; both to observe your carriage, and to defend you against all those enemies whom the impartial exercise of justice may provoke.

7 Wherefore now let the fear of the LORD be upon you; take heed and do it: for ^hthere is no iniquity with the LORD our God, nor ⁱrespect of persons, nor taking of gifts.

And therefore you who are in God's stead, and do his work, and must give an account to him, must imitate God here. Of respect of persons, see Deut. x. 17; Job xxxiv. 19; Acts x. 34. No taking of gifts; so as to pervert judgment for them, by comparing this with Exod. xxiii. 8; Deut. xvi. 19; Prov. xvii. 23.

8 ¶ Moreover in Jerusalem did Jehoshaphat ^kset of the Levites, and of the priests, and of the chief of the fathers of Israel, for the judgment of the LORD, and for controversies, when they returned to Jerusalem.

The chief of the fathers of Israel; who were not priests and Levites, but such persons of other tribes as were most eminent for their dignity, ability, and integrity. But whether these persons made up one court, called the Sanhedrim, by which all causes ecclesiastical and civil were decided; or there were two distinct courts, the one ecclesiastical, consisting of the priests and Levites; the other civil, consisting of the chief of the fathers of Israel; belongs to another place to determine, and requires more words than the nature of this work can permit. For the judgment of the LORD, i. e. for sacred matters concerning the laws, and worship, and service of God. For controversies; for matters of difference between man and man. When they returned to Jerusalem, i. e. when Jehoshaphat and his company were returned to Jerusalem, then he made this order concerning establishing judges there. But so this last clause may seem superfluous and tautological, being more than implied in the beginning of the verse. Or rather, when they, i. e. the causes and controversies last mentioned, shall return, or be returned, to Jerusalem, i. e. when the causes shall be so difficult that the judges ordained in every city cannot determine them; or, when your brethren that dwell in every city shall come to you, as it is expressed, ver. 10, appealing from their city courts, to the great court or council at Jerusalem; of which see on Exod. xviii. 25; Deut. i. 17; xvii. 8. As for the phrase, not only persons, but things, are said to return, or be returned, as blood, 1 Kings ii. 33, and clouds, Eccles. xii. 2, and reproach, Hos. xii. 14. If it be further objected, that these causes were never brought to Jerusalem before, and therefore cannot be properly said to be returned thither; that may be answered both from the usage of our law, wherein such causes are said to be returned to Westminster, which never were there before; and from the use of Scripture, wherein sinners are commonly said to return to the LORD, though they had never been with the LORD in that sense before, but were estranged from God even from the womb till the time of their conversion. And the dust, i. e. man's body, is said to return to the earth, Eccles. xii. 7, though it was never there before.

9 And he charged them, saying, Thus shall ye do ^lin the fear of the LORD, faithfully, and with a perfect heart.

Passing such sentences with your mouths, as your own minds and consciences, upon the hearing of the parties, shall judge to be just, and not acting against your own consciences for carnal motives, as corrupt judges do.

10 ^mAnd what cause soever shall come to you of your brethren that dwell in their cities, between blood and blood, between law and commandment, statutes and judgments, ye shall even warn them that they trespass not against the LORD, and so ⁿwrath come upon ^oyou, and upon your brethren: this do, and ye shall not trespass.

Between blood and blood; of which see the notes on Deut. xvii. 8. Between law and commandment, statutes and judgments; when any debates or differences shall arise about the meaning of any of God's laws, one party possibly putting this, and the other a quite differing sense upon the same place, or one alleging one place, and the other another place, which may seem to clash with it. Ye shall even warn them that they trespass not against the LORD; ye shall not only give a righteous sentence for what is past, but ye shall admonish the offender, and others, to take heed to themselves and their ways for the future. This do, and ye shall not trespass; so you shall not bring guilt and wrath upon yourselves and others, which otherwise you will certainly do.

11 And, behold, Amariah the chief priest is over you ^pin all matters of the LORD; and Zebadiah the son of Ishmael, the ruler of the house of Judah, for all the king's matters: also the Levites shall be officers before you. †Deal courageously, and the LORD shall be ^qwith the good.

Is over you; shall be your president to direct and assist you. In all matters of the LORD; in spiritual or ecclesiastical matters. The ruler of the house of Judah; either, 1. The prince, or chief ruler, under the king, of the tribe of Judah, which is called the house of Judah, 2 Sam. ii. 4, 7, 10; 1 Kings xii. 21, 23; 1 Chron. xxviii. 4; Jer. xiii. 11; Ezck. iv. 6. Or, 2. The ruler of the king's house, which also seems to be called the house of Judah, 2 Chron. xxii. 10, and more fully the king's house of Judah, Jer. xxii. 6. And who so fit to manage the king's matters as the ruler of the king's house? For all the king's matters; for civil causes or controversies which might arise either between the king and his people, or between subject and subject, which may be called the king's matters, because it was a principal part of his office to see them justly decided. The Levites shall be officers before you; they shall be at your command to see your just sentences executed; which work was fitly committed to the Levites, as persons who might add their instructions to the corrections, and might work the guilty to an acknowledgment of their fault, and a submission to their punishment. And so this is an argument to encourage the judges to proceed courageously and vigorously in their work, because they had the Levites to stand by them and

CHAP. XX.

Several armies come against Judah: Jehoshaphat in his fear proclaimeth a fast, 1—4. His prayer, 5—13. Jehaziel's prophecy, 14—17. The enemies are overthrown, 20—25. The people return in triumph, blessing God, 26—30. His reign: his navy miscarieth, 31—37.

IT came to pass after this also, that the children of Moab, and the children of Ammon, and with them other beside the Ammonites, came against Jehoshaphat to battle.

Other beside the Ammonites, to wit, the people that dwelt in Mount Seir, who were now confederate with them, as appears from ver. 10, 22, 23. Or this is the name of a peculiar people, called either Mehumin, of whom you read 2 Chron. xxvi. 7 (and so there is only a transposition of two letters in the Hebrew word, which is not unusual in that language); or Minacans, as the LXX. interpreters render this word; or Ammonium, or Mehaanmonim, as it is in the Hebrew, (the two first letters being not prefixes, as they are commonly made, but part of the word or proper name of that people,) who, as it may seem, now dwelt in Mount Seir, being either of the old stock of the Edomites, or another nation since come in their stead or mixed with them. Others render the place thus, for (as the Hebrew vau is oft taken) with them (i. e. with the Moabites) were the Ammonites, or children of Ammon; which may be distinctly noted, either to show the largeness of the confederacy, in which not only the Moabites were engaged, who dwelt near Jehoshaphat's kingdom, but the Ammonites also, who lived at a greater distance from him; or to intimate that the Ammonites being possibly instigated by the Syrians, their next neighbours, were the first beginners and chief promoters of the war, and engaged both the Moabites and the inhabitants of Mount Seir in their quarrel.

2 Then there came some that told Jehoshaphat, saying, There cometh a great multitude against thee from beyond the sea on this side Syria; and, behold, they be ^ain Hazazon-tamar, which is ^bEn-gedi.

From beyond the sea, to wit, the Dead Sea, beyond which Mount Seir lay. On this side Syria, or, and from Syria, largely so called, and so it includes the Moabites and Ammonites. And it may be thus expressed, to intimate that they came by the instigation of the Syrians, who thought by this means to revenge themselves of Jehoshaphat for joining with Ahab against them.

3 And Jehoshaphat feared, and set [†]himself to [‡]seek the LORD, and ^dproclaimed a fast throughout all Judah.

Jehoshaphat feared; partly from human frailty, and partly from the remembrance of his own guilt, and the wrath of God denounced against him for it, chap. xix. 2. Set himself to seek the Lord: the phrase notes his settled resolution, seriousness, and earnestness in it, and the preparing and fixing his heart for it. Proclaimed a fast; partly in token of his humiliation and penitence for his sins, and partly to make himself and his people more fervent in their prayers.

4 And Judah gathered themselves together, to ask help of the LORD: even out of all the cities of Judah they came to seek the LORD.

5 ¶ And Jehoshaphat stood in the congregation of Judah and Jerusalem, in the house of the LORD, before the new court,

In the house of the Lord, largely so called, i. e. in one of the courts of the temple, even in the court of the people, and upon that brazen scaffold which Solomon had erected for such a purpose, 2 Chron. vi. 13. Before the new court, i. e. besides and before the priests' court; for there were but two courts belonging to the temple, as is noted 2 Kings

xxi. 5; xxiii. 12. And Jehoshaphat stood in the one, which must be that of the people; and before the other, which therefore can be no other than that of the priests', which is called the new court, because it had been lately renewed when the altar was renewed, chap. xv. 8, as the command of love is called a new command, John xiii. 34; 1 John ii. 8, because it was so solemnly renewed, and revived, and reinforced by Christ.

6 And said, O LORD God of our fathers, art not thou ^eGod in heaven? and ^frulest not thou over all the kingdoms of the heathen? and ^gin thine hand is there not power and might, so that none is able to withstand thee?

7 Art not thou ^hour God, [†]who ⁱdidst drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and gavest it to the seed of Abraham ^kthy friend for ever?

i. e. To whom thou hast engaged thyself by covenant to be his friend, and the friend of his seed for ever, and therefore we trust thou wilt not forsake us his posterity.

8 And they dwelt therein, and have built thee a sanctuary therein for thy name, saying,

9 If, when evil cometh upon us, as the sword, judgment, or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence, (for thy ^mname is in this house,) and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help.

The sword, judgment, or rather, the sword of judgment, or of vengeance, i. e. war, whereby thou judgest and punishest thy people for their sins. Compare Lev. xxvi. 25.

10 And now, behold, the children of Ammon and Moab and mount Seir, whom thou ⁿwouldest not let Israel invade, when they came out of the land of Egypt, but ^othey turned from them, and destroyed them not;

11 Behold, I say, how they reward us, ^pto come to cast us out of thy possession, which thou hast given us to inherit.

12 O our God, wilt thou not ^qjudge them? for we have no might against this great company that cometh against us; neither know we what to do: but ^rour eyes are upon thee.

Thus he speaks, partly though he had great armies to be drawn together in due time upon great occasions, chap. xvii. 14, &c.; yet he seems to have been surprised by these men before his forces were in readiness to oppose them; and partly because he well knew, and piously and wisely considered, that no human forces, though numerous and valiant, were able to defend him without God's assistance, which he feared by his sins he had forfeited, and then he had really been as weak as water. Our eyes are upon thee, looking to thee only for relief and succour.

13 And all Judah stood before the LORD, with their little ones, their wives, and their children.

Whom they used to present before the Lord in times of great distress, partly to stir up themselves to more fervent and faithful prayers, that their eye, being upon their harmless and tender children, might affect their heart with a greater sense of their misery; and partly to move God to compassion, not as if he were capable of passions or changes upon such a sight, but because God hath declared himself that he will be prevailed with by such methods as these.

He was suddenly inspired by God with the following message.

15 And he said, Hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat, Thus saith the LORD unto you, 'Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not your's, but God's.

God will fight for you, and he alone will do the work; you need not strike a stroke.

16 To morrow go ye down against them: behold, they come up by the †cliff of Ziz; and ye shall find them at the end of the ‖brook, before the wilderness of Jeruel.

Go ye down from Jerusalem, where he and his army now were; which stood upon high ground.

17 "Ye shall not need to fight in this battle: set yourselves, stand ye still, and see the salvation of the LORD with you, O Judah and Jerusalem: fear not, nor be dismayed; to morrow go out against them: *for the LORD will be with you.

18 And Jehoshaphat † bowed his head with his face to the ground: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem fell before the LORD, worshipping the LORD.

Bowed his head with his face to the ground, in token of his reverence to God and his message, his belief of the promise, and his thankfulness for so great a favour.

19 And the Levites, of the children of the Kohathites, and of the children of the Korhites, stood up to praise the LORD God of Israel with a loud voice on high.

The Levites stood up, by Jehoshaphat's appointment. With a loud voice on high, i. e. with most loud voice, with heart and voice lifted up; whereby they showed their full assurance of the victory, as if it were already accomplished.

20 ¶ And they rose early in the morning, and went forth into the wilderness of Tekoa: and as they went forth, Jehoshaphat stood and said, Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem; *Believe in the LORD your God, so shall ye be established; believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper.

Believe his prophets, i. e. God's promise delivered to us by this prophet, and consequently all other predictions of the prophets that either have been or shall be. So shall ye prosper: take heed, lest by your unbelief you frustrate God's promise.

21 And when he had consulted with the people, he appointed singers unto the LORD, *and † that should praise the beauty of holiness, as they went out before the army, and to say, † Praise the LORD; * for his mercy endureth for ever.

With the people, i. e. with the elders or chief of the people; partly to take their advice about the expediency of the thing; and partly that they might excite and prepare themselves, and the people under them, to this great work of praising God. He appointed singers unto the LORD; to the honour and service of God. The beauty of holiness, or, the glory, or magnificence, or majesty of holiness, i. e. (by a vulgar Hebraism,) the Holy Majesty; a periphrasis of God. Or, according to the beauty or magnificence of the sanctuary, i. e. in the same comely order and magnificent manner as they used to do it in the temple; where the following song was usually sung, as 2 Chron. v. 13; vii. 3, 6.

22 ¶ † And when they began † to sing and to praise, † the LORD set ambushments against the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, which were come against Judah; and ‖ they were smitten.

When they began to sing and to praise; so acceptable are the fervent prayers of God's people to God, and so terrible to their enemies. Ambushments, or, liers in wait; either, 1. The holy angels, who appeared in the shape of men, and possibly put on the appearances and visages of Moabites or Ammonites, and in that shape slew the rest, who supposing this slaughter to be done by a part of their own army, fell upon them, and so broke forth into mutual slaughters. Or, 2. God raised jealousies and animosities amongst themselves, which by degrees broke forth, first into secret ambushments, which one party laid for another, and then into open hostilities and outrages to their utter destruction. So vain are all men's attempts against God, who needs none to destroy his enemies but themselves, and their own mistakes and passions, which he can when he pleaseth arm against them.

23 For the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the inhabitants of mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them: and when they had made an end of the inhabitants of Seir, every one helped † to destroy another.

24 And when Judah came toward the watch tower in the wilderness, they looked unto the multitude, and, behold, they were dead bodies fallen to the earth, and † none escaped.

Toward the watch-tower; which stood upon the cliff of Ziz, mentioned above, ver. 16, or some other hill which looked toward the wilderness, where their enemies lay encamped, whose numbers, and order, and condition they could descry from thence.

25 And when Jehoshaphat and his people came to take away the spoil of them, they found among them in abundance both riches with the dead bodies, and precious jewels, which they stripped off for themselves, more than they could carry away: and they were three days in gathering of the spoil, it was so much.

Riches and precious jewels; which they brought with them, partly, to corrupt any of Jehoshaphat's officers as they saw occasion; partly, to procure necessaries for their vast army from time to time; and partly, because they came as to a triumph rather than to a fight, being secure and confident of the victory because of their great numbers, and especially because they thought to surprise Jehoshaphat ere he could make any considerable preparations against them; God also permitting them to be puffed up to their own destruction.

26 ¶ And on the fourth day they assembled themselves in the valley of ‖ Berachah; for there they blessed the LORD: therefore the name of the same place was called, The valley of Berachah, unto this day.

The valley of Berachah, Heb. of blessing; so called from their solemn blessings and praises given to God in it upon this occasion.

27 Then they returned, every man of Judah and Jerusalem, and Jehoshaphat in the † forefront of them, to go again to Jerusalem with joy; for the LORD had † made them to rejoice over their enemies.

28 And they came to Jerusalem with psalteries and harps and trumpets unto the house of the LORD.

k ch. 12. 14. & 19. 3.

The high places were not taken away; not fully nor universally; of which see on chap. xvii. 6. The fault was not in Jehoshaphat, but in the people, who, though they did worship the true God, yet would not be confined to the temple, but for their own conveniency, or from their affection to their ancient custom, chose to worship him in the high places; which Jehoshaphat was forced to connive at, lest those people, being debarred from that dearly-beloved practice, should fall into a neglect of God and his worship.

34 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, first and last, behold, they are written in the [†] book of Jehu the son of Hanani, ¹ who [†] is mentioned in the book of the kings of Israel.

806. This is mentioned as an aggravation of his sin, after so great a favour and obligation laid upon him by God, and after he had been so sharply reprov'd and threaten'd by a prophet for the same thing, chap. xix. 2; yet he relapsed into the same sin; which proceeded partly from that near relation which was contracted between the two families, and partly from the sweetness and easiness of Jehoshaphat's temper, which could not resist the solicitations of others in such things as might seem indifferent. For he did not join with him in a war, as he did with Ahab, but in a peaceable way only, in a matter of trade and commerce. And yet God sharply reproveth and punisheth him for it, ver. 37, to show his great dislike and detestation of all friendly and familiar conversation of his servants and people with idolaters and professed enemies of God and of religion, as Ahaziah was, who is therefore thus stigmatized in the next words, who did very wickedly. Who did very wickedly, or, who did industriously, and maliciously, and constantly work wickedness, as the Hebrew phrase implies, giving himself up to idolatry and all wickedness.

† Alone.

2 And he had brethren the sons of Jehoshaphat, Azariah, and Jehiel, and Zechariah, and Azariah, and Michael, and Shephathiah: all these were the sons of Jehoshaphat king of Israel.

Azariah; two sons called by the same name, though doubtless distinguished by some additional title, which is not mentioned here, because it did not concern succeeding ages to know it. Though indeed there is a difference in their Hebrew names, the one being Azariah, the other Azariahhu, hu being the last syllable in his name, as in Elihu and others. Jehoshaphat king of Israel; so he is called, either, 1. Because he was so by right. Or, 2. Because he was king not only of Judah and Benjamin, but of a great number of Israelites, who had come into and settled themselves in his kingdom, in his and in his predecessor's days; who being a considerable, and the purest and best, part of Israel, may well be called Israel, being more truly and properly God's Israel than their apostate brethren, who were no longer worthy of that name. Or, 3. Because all his subjects were Israelites; and therefore he was king of Israel, though not of all Israel. Or, 4. With some reflection upon his memory for making so strict an alliance and friendship with the king of Israel, whose cause he defended with his own and his kingdom's great hazard, as if he had been the king not so much of Judah as of Israel. And this may be the rather noted here, because here speedily follows a sad effect of that wicked and cursed match. Some say Israel was foisted into some copies by the transcriber instead of Judah, as it was first written.

3 And their father gave them great gifts of silver, and of gold, and of precious things, with fenced cities in Judah: but the kingdom gave he to ^c Jehoram; because he was the firstborn.
c Jehoram made Partner of the Kingdom with his father, 2 Kin. 8. 16.

Whom he conceived that he ought to prefer by virtue of that law of God, Deut. xxi. 15, though otherwise he would not have done it, having probably ere this time perceived his perverse and wicked inclinations, and how much he was swayed by his idolatrous wife. Now he saw his error when it was too late.

4 Now when Jehoram was risen up to the kingdom of his father, he strengthened himself, and slew all his brethren with the sword, and divers also of the princes of Israel.

He strengthened himself; he took courage and hardened his heart, as that word sometimes signifies. Slew all his brethren with the sword; partly because they either did, or he knew that they would, oppose him in his wicked designs; and partly for his own security, lest his people, who, as he believed, would be highly exasperated with the execution of his counsels, should advance any of them to the throne, and depose him. Of the princes of Israel; either, 1. Of Judah, here called Israel, of which see the notes on ver. 2. Or, 2. The princes or chief men of Israel, properly so called; not the princes of all Israel, or of the several tribes thereof, but the chief of those Israelites who, out of love to God and to the true religion, had forsaken their estates and worldly advantages in the kingdom of Israel, and were now incorporated with the kingdom of Judah. These he especially struck at, either, 1. Because his wife instigated him thereunto, both to punish them for their revolt from her father, and to deter others from following their example. Or, 2. Because he justly and truly thought these would be most firm and constant to and zealous for that religion which he was resolved to oppose, being both by their conscience and interest obliged to it.

892. 5 ¶^b Jehoram was thirty and two years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

Of this, and ver. 6—10, see the notes on 2 Kings viii. 17, &c.

6 And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, like as did the house of Ahab: for he had the daughter of Ahab to wife: and he wrought that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord.

7 Howbeit the Lord would not destroy the house of David, because of the covenant that he had made with David, and as he promised to give a † light to him and to his ^d sons for ever.

Because of the covenant that he had made with David; for which, in 2 Kings viii. 19, it is for David his servant's sake, i. e. not for David's merits, but for God's free promise and covenant, as it is here explained.

8 ¶^c In his days the Edomites revolted from under the † dominion of Judah, and made themselves a king.

9 Then Jehoram went forth with his princes, and all his chariots with him: and he rose up by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him in, and the captains of the chariots.

10 So the Edomites revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. The same time also did Libnah revolt from under his hand; because he had forsaken the Lord God of his fathers.

To wit, publicly and avowedly, setting him at defiance, as the next verse shows. And this is mentioned, either, 1. As the reason why the priests, whose city Libnah was, forsook him, because he had forsaken God; or rather, 2. As the reason why God raised up so many enemies against him, both from abroad and at home.

11 Moreover he made high places in the mountains of Judah, and caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to † commit fornication, and compelled Judah thereto.

He made high places; not to the Lord, whose sworn enemy he was, but to Baals, or false gods. Caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to commit fornication; not only by his counsel and example, but, as it follows, by force, by threats and penalties.

12 ¶ And there came a ¶ writing to him from Elijah the prophet, saying, Thus saith the Lord God of David thy father, Because thou hast not walked in the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor in the ways of Asa king of Judah,

There came a writing to him from Elijah. Quest. How could this be, when Elijah was rapt up to heaven in Jehoshaphat's time, 2 Kings ii.; iii. 11. Answ. Either, 1. This was Elisha, or some other prophet called Elijah, because he acted in the spirit and power of Elijah, for which cause John the Baptist also is so called. Or rather, 2. This was really written by Elijah, who by the Spirit did clearly foresee and foretell the reign and acts of Jehoram, (as others did of Josiah, 1 Kings xiii. 2, and Isaiah of Cyrus, chap. xlv. 3, long before they were born,) and in consideration thereof left this prophecy with Elisha, to be delivered in due time by him, or some other person in his name, and as from his mouth. The Lord God of David thy father; whose name he mentions either to upbraid him with his degeneration from so worthy a parent; or to take off his presumption and confidence, which was grounded upon his being the son and successor of David, in whose posterity the crown was settled for ever by God's special appointment, and by the approbation of the people. In the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father; whose wise counsel and good example thou hast despised.

13 But hast walked in the way of the kings of Israel, and hast ^a made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to ^b go a whoring, like to the ^c whoredoms of the house of Ahab, and also hast ^d slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thyself:

More innocent, and righteous, and pious.

14 Behold, with † a great plague will the Lord smite thy people, and thy children, and thy wives, and all thy goods:

The Lord will smite thy people. Quest. Why the people for his sin? Answ. 1. Because the generality of them sinned in complying with his wicked and idolatrous commands through fear, ver. 11. 2. Because he suffered in his people's destruction: for as the honour, and safety, and strength of a king lies in the multitude and prosperity of his people, Prov. xiv. 28; so when they are diminished and destroyed, the king is very much weakened and endangered by it. Thy children and thy wives; whose lives shall go for the lives of thy brethren, ver. 4.

15 And thou shalt have great sickness by disease of thy bowels, until thy bowels fall out by reason of the sickness day by day.

i. e. From day to day continually. Or, year upon year, i. e. one year after another, or for the space of two years, as the event shows, ver. 19. Heb. days upon days. Days are oft put for a year, as Exod. xiii. 10; Lev. xxv. 29; Numb. ix. 22; Judg. xvii. 10; 1 Sam. i. 3; xxvii. 7; Amos iv. 4.

16 ¶ Moreover the Lord ^m stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines, and of the Arabians, that were near the Ethiopians:

The Philistines; a people fully subdued and dispirited; but God now raiseth their spirits and courage to do his work. Near the Ethiopians, Heb. near the Cushites, i. e. either the Ethiopians, from whom they were parted only by the Red Sea, each dwelling upon the opposite shores of it; or rather, a people in Arabia, frequently mentioned in Scripture, and so called, either for their likeness in colour and complexion to the Ethiopians properly so called, or because the one of these people were a colony of the other. But the Ethiopians above Egypt were far enough from these other Arabians, being separated from them by the Red Sea.

17 And they came up into Judah, and brake into it, and † carried away all the substance that was found in the king's house, and ⁿ his sons also, and his wives; so that there was never a son left him, save ¶ Jehoahaz, the youngest of his sons.

His sons also and his wives; whom also they slew, chap. xxii. 1, except Ahaziah and Athaliah, who possibly were hidden in some secret and safe place. Jehoahaz; called also Ahaziah, which signifies the very same thing with Jehoahaz; and Azariah, chap. xxii. 6, whose signification is near akin to the other, all signifying God's taking or helping of him.

18 ¶ And after all this the Lord smote him ^o in his bowels with an incurable disease.

19 And it came to pass, that in process of time, after the end of two years, his bowels fell out by reason of his sickness: so he died of sore diseases. And his people made no burning for him, like ^p the burning of his fathers.

Or, went away, to wit, out of this world; as this word is used, Job xiv. 20; Eccles. v. 15; vi. 4; there being many such words and phrases used concerning death in the Old and New Testament, signifying that death is not an annihilation, but only a translation into another place and state. See Gen. xv. 15; Phil. i. 23. Without being desired, Heb. without desire; which may belong either, 1. To himself; he had no desire of living longer, nor any pleasure in life, but was heartily weary of it, through his excessive pains: or rather, 2. To his people, who did not desire that he should live longer, but oft and heartily wished that he had died sooner; which contempt of him they showed both by making no burning for him, as they used to do for good and laudable kings, chap. xvi. 14, and by denying him burial among the kings, as it here follows. Desire is here put for a person or thing whose life or continuance is desirable or desired by others, as Isa. ii. 16; Ezek. xxiv. 16, 18, 21, 25; Dan. ix. 23; x. 11, 19. And this is an emphatical expression, because it is usual with men to desire the deaths of some persons, whom afterward they lament and heartily wish that they were alive again, as they may have cause to do. But for this ungodly and unhappy prince, his people did not only in his lifetime wish his death, but afterwards they did not repent of those desires, nor wish him alive again, but rejoiced that they were delivered from so great a plague as he was to them.

CHAP. XXII.

Ahaziah is made king; reigneth wickedly, 1—4. In his confederacy with Joram the son of Ahab he is slain by Jehu, 5—9. Athaliah destroyeth all the seed royal, save Joash, who was hid, and usurpeth the kingdom, 10—12.

AND the inhabitants of Jerusalem made ^aAhaziah his youngest son king in his stead: for the band of men that came with the Arabians to the camp had slain all the ^beldest. So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned.

Men that came with the Arabians; either, 1. A cruel sort of men who came along with the Arabians, and therefore slew those whom the Arabians had spared, and only carried into captivity. Or, 2. The Philistines, who did accompany the Arabians in this expedition, chap. xxi. 16, who lived near the kingdom of Judah, and therefore thought to make as sure work as they could in destroying all the branches of the royal family, who otherwise, they expected, would recover strength, and revenge themselves upon them.

^c 2 ° Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was ^dAthaliah the daughter of Omri.

^c See 2 Kin. 8. 26.

^d ch. 21. 6.

Forty and two years old was Ahaziah. Object. He was then only twenty-two years old, as is affirmed, 2 Kings viii. 26. Besides, Joram his father died in his fortieth year, as is twice noted, chap. xxi. 5, 20: how then can this be true? Answer. 1. In the Hebrew it is, a son of forty-two years, &c., which is an ambiguous phrase; and though it doth for the most part, yet it doth not always, signify the age of the person, as is manifest from 1 Sam. xiii. 1, where see the notes. And therefore it is not necessary that this should note his age (as it is generally presumed to do, and that is the only ground of the difficulty); but it may note either, 1. The age of his mother Athaliah; who being so great, and infamous, and mischievous a person to the kingdom and royal family of Judah, it is not strange if her age be here described, especially seeing she herself did for a season sway this sceptre. Or rather, 2. Of the reign of that royal race and family from which by his mother he was descended, to wit, of the house of Omri, who reigned six years, 1 Kings xvi. 23; Ahab his son reigned twenty-two years, 1 Kings xvi. 29; Ahaziah his son two years, 1 Kings xxii. 51; Joram his son twelve years, 2 Kings iii. 1; all which, put together, make up exactly these forty-two years; for Ahaziah began his reign in Joram's twelfth year, 2 Kings viii. 25. And such a kind of computation of the years, not of the king's person, but of his reign or kingdom, we had before, chap. xvi. 1, where see the notes. And so we have an account of the person's age in 2 Kings viii. 26, and here of the kingdom to which he belonged. Answer. 2. Some acknowledge an error in the transcribers of the present Hebrew copies, in which language the numeral letters for twenty-two and forty-two are so like, that they might easily be mistaken. For that it was read twenty-two here, as it is in the Book of Kings, in other Hebrew copies, they gather from hence, that it is at this day so read in divers ancient Greek copies, as also in those two ancient translations, the Syriac and the Arabic, and particularly in that famous and most ancient copy of the Syriac, which was used by the church of Antioch in the primitive times, and to this day is kept in the church of Antioch, from which that most reverend, learned, pious, and public-spirited archbishop Usher did at his own great charge get another copy transcribed, in which he hath published to all the world that he found it here written twenty and two years old, &c. Nor doth this overthrow the authority of the sacred text, as infidels would have it, partly because it is only an historical passage, of no importance to the substantial doctrines of faith and a good life; and partly because the question here is not whether this text be true, but which is the true reading of the text, whether that of the generality of present copies, or that which was used in the ancient copies, which the ancient and venerable translators above mentioned did follow; for it seems unreasonable and uncharitable to think that all of them would have conspired to have changed the text, and put in twenty and two, for forty and two, if they had so read it in their Hebrew copies. Nor can this open any great door to those innumerable changes which some have boldly and rashly made in the Hebrew text without any such pretence of authority, as there is for this, which as they are affirmed without reason, or authority, or necessity, so they may as easily be rejected. If all this will not satisfy our present infidels, I desire them only to consider what hath been hinted before upon such occasions, that many difficulties which did seem unanswerable, being now fully cleared by later writers, it is but reasonable to think that this may be so in after-times, either by finding of some Hebrew copies in which it may be twenty and two years, &c., or by some other way. The daughter of Omri, i. e. of Omri's family; or of Ahab, Omri's son. Grandchildren are oft called sons and daughters, as Matt. i. 1; Luke iii. 26.

3 He also walked in the ways of the house of Ahab: for his mother was his counsellor to do wickedly.

Being a crafty and an imperious woman.

4 Wherefore he did evil in the sight of the Lord like the house of Ahab: for they were his counsellors after the death of his father to his destruction.

After the death of his father; who, whilst he lived, seduced his son by his counsel and authority, and made other evil counsellors then unnecessary.

5 ¶ He walked also after their counsel, and ^ewent with Jehoram the son of Ahab king of Israel to war against Hazael king of Syria at Ramoth-gilead: and the Syrians smote Joram.

7 And the † destruction of Ahaziah was of God by coming to Joram: for when he was come, he ^hwent out with Jehoram against Jehu the son of Nimshi, ⁱwhom the LORD had anointed to cut off the house of Ahab.

The destruction of Ahaziah was of God; by his providence so disposing occasions and Ahaziah's inclinations, that he should come at that season to receive his deserved judgment.

8 And it came to pass, that, when Jehu was ^kexecuting judgment upon the house of Ahab, and ^lfound the princes of Judah, and the sons of the brethren of Ahaziah, that ministered to Ahaziah, he slew them.

The sons of the brethren of Ahaziah; either properly so called; or the sons of his cousins or near kinsmen, who are oft called brethren; for his brethren were slain, ver. 1. That ministered to Ahaziah; that came thither to wait upon their king Ahaziah, as is here implied, and withal to visit Joram and his children, as is noted, 2 Kings x. 13.

9 ^mAnd he sought Ahaziah: and they caught him, (for he was hid in Samaria,) and brought him to Jehu: and when they had slain him, they buried him: Because, said they, he ⁿis the son of Jehoshaphat, who ^osought the LORD with all his heart. So the house of Ahaziah had no power to keep still the kingdom.

He sought Ahaziah; who, though wounded, had made an escape, 2 Kings ix. 27. He was hid in Samaria; either, 1. In the kingdom of Samaria, to wit, in Megiddo; or, 2. In the city of Samaria: and so he fled first to Megiddo; and not thinking himself safe there, he fled to Samaria; where he was taken, and sent thence by Jehu's order to Megiddo, where he received the sentence of death. See more of this matter upon 2 Kings ix. 27. They buried him; they gave his servants leave to carry him away to Jerusalem, and bury him there, 2 Kings ix. 28. Both God and men are oft-times said to do what they and others do by their permission, when they could hinder them. The house of Ahaziah, i. e. his posterity, because they were young and feeble, being ground between two millstones, the great and growing power of Jehu, and the craft and tyranny of Athaliah.

10 ¶ ^{884.}But when Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed royal of the house of Judah.

Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah: this, and ver. 11, 12, are explained on 2 Kings xi. 1—3.

11 But ^pJehoshabeath, the daughter of the king, took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons that were slain, and put him and his nurse in a bedchamber. So Jehoshabeath, the daughter of king Jehoram, the wife of Jehoiada the priest, (for she was the sister of Ahaziah,) hid him from Athaliah, so that she slew him not.

12 And he was with them hid in the house of God six years: and Athaliah reigned over the land.

CHAP. XXIII.

Jehoiada maketh Joash king, 1—11. Athaliah is slain, 12—15. The pure worship of God is restored, 16—21.

AND ^{885.}in the seventh year Jehoiada strengthened himself, and took the captains of hundreds, Azariah the son of Jeroham, and Ishmael the son of Jehohanan, and Azariah the son of Obed, and Maaseiah the son of Adaiah, and Elishaphat the son of Zichri, into covenant with him.

Took the captains of hundreds; not all, but those here following, in whom he put most trust. But this chapter is almost all taken out of 2 Kings xi., where it is explained.

2 And they went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah, and the chief of the fathers of Israel, and they came to Jerusalem.

Gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah; partly because they could do this without any suspicion, upon pretence of some solemn feast; which time, it is probable, was chosen for this purpose; and partly because he knew them to be well affected to the cause of God and the king, to which they were obliged by the two firmest ties, conscience and interest. The chief of the fathers of Israel, i. e. both of the two tribes, and of the ten tribes, all which are called Israel; and he useth the name of Israel rather than that of Judah, because there were now great numbers of the other tribes incorporated with Judah; and these he esteemed more faithful than many of Judah, having given better proofs of the truth of their religion than they; and therefore he picked out of the chief men of the other tribes, as well as of Judah and Benjamin.

3 And all the congregation made a covenant with the king in the house of God. And he said unto them, Behold, the king's son shall reign, as the LORD hath ^bsaid of the sons of David.

4 This ^cis the thing that ye shall do; A third part of you ^dentering on the sabbath, of the priests and of the Levites, shall be porters of the † doors;

Both that of Sur, 2 Kings xi. 6, and other doors adjoining or leading to it.

5 And a third part shall be at the king's house; and a third part at the gate of the foundation: and all the people shall be in the courts of the house of the LORD.

At the gate of the foundation; at the east gate, thought to be so called, because it stood lower than the rest of the doors, at the foot of the steps, by which they went up from the king's house to the temple. In the courts; either, 1. In the two courts; and so by the people he understands as well the generality of the Levites, who had no particular stations allotted to them, as their brethren had, ver. 4, 5, which were to be in the priests' court, as the people, who were in the court of the people: or, 2. In the court of the people, which may be called courts, the plural number being put for the singular, in regard of great amplitude, and divers quarters and partitions, into which it was or might be divided; as the temple is called sanctuaries, because of its division into divers parts, Lev. xxvi. 31.

6 But let none come into the house of the LORD, save the priests, and ^ethey that minister of the Levites; they shall go in, for they are holy: but all the people shall keep the watch of the LORD.

Into the house of the Lord; strictly so called, as it is distinguished from the courts, into which others were permitted to come, ver. 5, to wit, into the holy place. The priests, and they that minister of the Levites; they who are to minister in course, or by my present appointment. The watch of the Lord, i. e. of the house of the Lord; as the phrase may be filled up out of this place and 2 Kings xi. 6. The sense is, Let them stand in their court to prevent and oppose any person who shall endeavour violently to break into the house to seize upon the king, or to disturb their

7 And the Levites shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand; and whosoever else cometh into the house, he shall be put to death: but be ye with the king when he cometh in, and when he goeth out.

8 So the Levites and all Judah did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest had commanded, and took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that were to go out on the sabbath: for Jehoiada the priest dismissed not ^ethe courses.

9 Moreover Jehoiada the priest delivered to the captains of hundreds spears, and bucklers, and shields, that had been king David's, which were in the house of God.

10 And he set all the people, every man having his weapon in his hand, from the right †side of the †temple to the left side of the temple, along by the altar and the temple, by the king round about.

11 Then they brought out the king's son, and put upon him the crown, and ^ggave him the testimony, and made him king. And Jehoiada and his sons anointed him, and said, †God save the king.

Jehoiada and his sons; and Zechariah among the rest, whom afterwards he ungratefully slew, chap. xxiv. 21.

12 ¶ Now when Athaliah heard the noise of the people running and praising the king, she came to the people into the house of the LORD:

13 And she looked, and, behold, the king stood at his pillar at the entering in, and the princes and the trumpets by the king: and all the people of the land rejoiced, and sounded with trumpets, also the singers with instruments of musick, and ^gsuch as taught to sing praise. Then Athaliah rent her clothes, and said, †Treason, Treason.

14 Then Jehoiada the priest brought out the captains of hundreds that were set over the host, and said unto them, Have her forth of the ranges: and whoso followeth her, let him be slain with the sword. For the priest said, Slay her not in the house of the LORD.

15 So they laid hands on her; and ^hwhen she was come to the entering ^hof the horse gate by the king's house, they slew her there.

16 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between him, and between all the people, and between the king, that they should be the LORD's people.

Between him, i. e. the Lord, as is sufficiently implied in the end of this verse, and plainly expressed 2 Kings xi. 27. Or, between himself; that the people might see that he brought them under no bond but what he would take upon himself. That they should be the Lord's people, i. e. that every one in his place and station would maintain the law and worship of God, and root out all false worship; which they did in the next verse.

17 Then all the people went to the house of Baal, and brake it down, and brake his altars and his images in pieces, and ⁱslew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars.

18 Also Jehoiada appointed the offices of the house of the LORD by the hand of the priests the Levites, whom David had ^kdistributed in the house of the LORD, to offer the burnt offerings of the LORD, as it is written in the law of Moses, with rejoicing and with singing, as it was ordained †by David.

Appointed the offices of the house of the Lord by the hand; or, as it is in the Hebrew, put the offices of the house of the Lord into the hand, i. e. he restored the priests and Levites, either, 1. To their places and offices, which possibly in the time of the idolatrous kings, and of Athaliah, had been disposed of to persons of other tribes, partly to gratify their wicked friends, and partly to bring God's house and worship into disgrace; or, 2. To the exercise of their offices, from which they had been in a great measure hindered.

19 And he set the ^mporters at the gates of the house of the LORD, that none which was unclean in any thing should enter in.

20 ⁿAnd he took the captains of hundreds, and the nobles, and the governors of the people, and all the people of the land, and brought down the king from the house of the LORD: and they came through the high gate into the king's house, and set the king upon the throne of the kingdom.

Through the high gate, to wit, of the court belonging and leading to the king's palace.

21 And all the people of the land rejoiced: and the city was quiet, after that they had slain Athaliah with the sword.

CHAP. XXIV.

Joash reigneth well all the days of Jehoiada, 1—14. He dieth; is buried honourably; and Joash falleth to idolatry; slayeth Zechariah the son of Jehoiada, 15—22. He is spoiled by the Syrians; slain by Zabad and Jehoabab: Amaziah succeedeth him, 23—27.

JOASH ^awas seven years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Zibiah of Beer-sheba.

A great part of this chapter is explained on 2 Kings xii.

2 And Joash ^bdid that which was right in the sight of the LORD all the days of Jehoiada the priest.

3 And Jehoiada took for him two wives; and he begat sons and daughters.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Joash was minded †to repair the house of the LORD.

5 And he gathered together the priests and the Levites, and said to them, Go out unto the cities of Judah, and ^cgather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year, and see that ye hasten the matter. Howbeit the Levites hastened it not.

Gather of all Israel, i. e. of all the Israelites that were in the kingdom of Judah. See chap. xv. 17; xxi. 2. To repair the house of your God from year to year; either, 1. ^d 2 Kings 12. 7. 6^d And the king called for Jehoiada the chief, and said unto him, Why hast thou not required of the Levites to bring in out of Judah and out of Jerusalem the collection, according to the commandment of ^e Moses the servant of the LORD, and of the congregation of Israel, for the ^f tabernacle of witness?

Jehoiada the chief: it is observable, that he is not called the chief priest, or high priest, but only the chief, or the head, which he might be in many other respects, either by reason of his near relation to the royal family; or because he was the chief of one of the twenty-four families; or because he had been the chief man in the contriving and bringing about of this great change, and the general of the forces employed about it. And the high priest seems to be mentioned as a distinct person from Jehoiada here, 2 Kings xii. 9, 10; all which make it questionable whether Jehoiada was the high priest or no. The collection, according to the commandment of Moses, Heb. the collection of Moses, i. e. such a one as he commanded or made in the like case; of which see on ver. 5. 10 And all the princes and all the people rejoiced, and brought in, and cast into the chest, until they had made an end.

11 Now it came to pass, that at what time the chest was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites, and ⁿ when they saw that there was much money, the king's scribe and the high priest's officer came and emptied the chest, and took it, and carried it to his place again. Thus they did day by day, and gathered money in abundance.

ⁿ 2 Kings 12. 10.

The chest was brought unto the king's office, from the gate of the court into one of the chambers belonging to the temple, which was appointed by the king for this office.

12 And the king and Jehoiada gave it to such as did the work of the service of the house of the LORD, and hired masons and carpenters to repair the house of the LORD, and also such as wrought iron and brass to mend the house of the LORD.

13 So the workmen wrought, and ^o the work was perfected by them, and they set the house of God in his state, and strengthened it.

^o Heb. the building went up upon the work.

14 And when they had finished it, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, ^p whereof were made vessels for the house of the LORD, ^q even vessels to minister, and ^r to offer withal, and spoons, and vessels of gold and silver. See on chap. xxi. 2.

22 Thus Joash the king remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son. And when he died, he said, The LORD look upon it, and require it.

i. e. Make inquisition for my innocent blood; which he did not wish from any desire of private revenge, with which so wise and good a man would never be willing to die; but partly from a zeal to public justice, and the punishment of such gross wickedness; and partly to deter them, if possible, from completing their murderous intentions. But these words may as well be rendered indicatively as optatively, The Lord will look upon it, and require it, i. e. he will examine this action, and require satisfaction from you for it.

23 ¶ And it came to pass † at the end of the year, that ^a the host of Syria came up against him: and they came to Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed all the princes of the people from among the people, and sent all the spoil of them unto the king of † Damascus.

At the end of the year; so soon did God hear the cry of his holy prophet's blood, and revenge it. Destroyed all the princes of the people; that it might appear they were sent and directed by God to single out to destruction the first beginners and chief promoters of this general apostacy. Unto the king of Damascus; to Hazael, the king of that part of Syria called Syria Damascena, from its capital city Damascus.

24 For the army of the Syrians ^a came with a small company of men, and the LORD ^b delivered a very great host into their hand, because they had forsaken the LORD God of their fathers. So they ^c executed judgment against Joash.

25 And when they were departed from him, (for they left him in great diseases,) ^a his own servants conspired against him for the blood of the ^b sons of Jehoiada the priest, and slew him on his bed, and he died: and they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him not in the sepulchres of the kings.

For the blood of the sons of Jehoiada, i. e. of Zechariah his son; the plural number sons put for the singular son, as it is frequently, both in Scripture, as Gen. xlv. 7; Numb. xxvi. 42, and in Cicero and other profane authors. Or he might kill other sons of Jehoiada with him, either because they owned him in what he had said, or lest they should revenge his death.

CHAP. XXV.

Amaziah beginneth to reign well; slayeth his father's murderers, 1—4. Having hired an army of Israelites against the Edomites, at the word of a prophet he dismisseth them, 5—10; and with his own people overthroweth the Edomites: the Israelites in their return home spoil, 11—13. Amaziah serveth the gods of Edom, and despiseth the admonition of the prophet, 14—16. He provoketh Joash to his overthrow, 17—24. His reign; he is slain by conspiracy, 25—28.

AMAZIAH ^a was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoadan of Jerusalem.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, ^b but not with a perfect heart.

3 ¶ ^c Now it came to pass, when the kingdom was † established to him, that he slew his servants that had killed the king his father.

4 But he slew not their children, but did as it is written in the law in the book of Moses, where the LORD commanded, saying, ^d The fathers shall not die for the children, neither shall the children die for the fathers, but every man shall die for his own sin.

5 ¶ Moreover Amaziah gathered Judah together, and made them captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, according to the houses of their fathers, throughout all Judah and Benjamin: and he numbered them ^e from twenty years old and above, and found them three hundred thousand choice men, able to go forth to war, that could handle spear and shield.

6 He hired also an hundred thousand mighty men of valour out of Israel for an hundred talents of silver.

Out of Israel; out of the kingdom of the ten tribes.

7 But there came a man of God to him, saying, O king, let not the army of Israel go with thee; for the LORD is not with Israel, to wit, with all the children of Ephraim.

The Lord is not with Israel; he hath forsaken them, and for their sakes will curse thy forces, if thou joimest thyself with them.

8 But if thou wilt go, do it, be strong for the battle: God shall make thee fall before the enemy: for God hath ^f power to help, and to cast down.

Be strong for the battle; take courage, and strengthen thyself as much as thou canst. It is an ironical concession, like that, Go, and prosper.

9 And Amaziah said to the man of God, But what shall we do for the hundred talents which I have given to the † army of Israel? And the man of God answered, ^g The LORD is able to give thee much more than this.

10 Then Amaziah separated them, to wit, the army that was come to him out of Ephraim, to go † home again: where-

Their anger was greatly kindled against Judah; because they were both disgraced by this rejection, and disappointed of that prey and spoil which they hoped to gain, whereas now they were sent away empty; for the one hundred talents probably were given to their officers only to raise men for this service; that sum being otherwise too small to be distributed into so many hands.

h 2 Kings 14. 7.

13 ¶ But † the soldiers of the army which Amaziah sent back, that they should not go with him to battle, fell upon the cities of Judah, from Samaria even unto Beth-horon, and smote three thousand of them, and took much spoil.

Unto Beth-horon, to wit, Beth-horon the lower, which was in the tribe of Benjamin; and from thence to Samaria; either, 1. To the city of Samaria; for the kings of Judah had taken divers places within the kingdom of Israel. Or, 2. To the kingdom of Samaria; Beth-horon and all other places between that city and their own kingdom. Smote, i. e. killed, as that word is generally understood. Three thousand of them; not three thousand cities, but three thousand persons dwelling in them, who possibly opposed them in taking the spoil, which was the thing they sought.

14 ¶ Now it came to pass, after that Amaziah was come from the slaughter of the Edomites, that ^hhe brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to ^bbe ^khis gods, and bowed down himself before them, and burned incense unto them.

Therefore thou art not only ungrateful and impious, but also ridiculously foolish, in offending that God whose power and goodness thou hast now found, and in worshipping such gods of whose impotency thou hast had late experience.

16 And it came to pass, as he talked with him, that the king said unto him, Art thou made of the king's counsel? forbear; why shouldst thou be smitten? Then the prophet forbore, and said, I know that God hath †^a determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened unto my counsel.

17 ¶ Then ^oAmaziah king of Judah took advice, and sent to Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, king of Amaziah took advice, i. e. about the injury which the Israelites had done to his people, ver. 13, and how he should repair it. But of this and the following verses see on 2 Kings xiv. 8, &c.

18 And Joash king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, The † thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife: and there passed by † a wild beast that was in Lebanon, and trode down the thistle.

CHAP. XXVI.

Uzziah is made king; reigneth well in the days of Zechariah, and prospereth, 1—15. He invadeth the priest's office; is smitten with a leprosy, 16—21. He dieth, and Jotham succeedeth him, 22, 23.

810. THEN all the people of Judah took ^a Uzziah, who was sixteen years old, and made him king in the room of his father Amaziah.

Uzziah; called also Azariah, 2 Kings xiv. 21; both names signifying the same thing, God's strength, or help. See of this, and ver. 2—4, on 2 Kings xiv. 21, 22; xv. 2, 3.

2 He built Eloth, and restored it to Judah, after that the king slept with his fathers.

3 Sixteen years old was Uzziah when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and two years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Jecoliah of Jerusalem.

4 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father Amaziah did.

To wit, for a time, but not perfectly nor constantly, which was Amaziah's case also.

5 And ^b he sought God in the days of Zechariah, who ^c had understanding [†] in the visions of God: and as long as he sought the LORD, God made him to prosper.

He sought God, i. e. he persisted in the true religion and worship of God. In the days of Zechariah; as long as he lived. Compare chap. xxiv. 2. Who had understanding; who was a very knowing and experienced person. Or, who made him understanding; or, who instructed him; who was his tutor and teacher, and had great authority and influence upon him; and so restrained him from those exorbitancies to which he was otherwise inclined. In the visions of God; either, 1. In prophetic visions, which he either received from God himself, or understood and explained the prophetic visions of others, which was a special gift of God; of which see Gen. xli. 15; Dan. i. 17; ii. 19. Or, 2. In the law and word of God, which sometimes cometh under that name, as Prov. xxix. 18; Isa. xxii. 1, 5.

6 And he went forth and ^dwarred against the Philistines, and brake down the wall of Gath, and the wall of Jabneh, and the wall of Ashdod, and built cities ^{||} about Ashdod, and among the Philistines.

Gath had been taken by Hazael in the days of Joash his grandfather, 2 Kings xii. 17, but was either relinquished by him, because it lay so far from his other dominions; or retaken by the Philistines, who had now repaired its fortifications, and kept it.

7 And God helped him against ^ethe Philistines, and against the Arabians that dwelt in Gur-baal, and the Mehunims.

8 And the Ammonites ^fgave gifts to Uzziah: and his name [†]spread abroad even to the entering in of Egypt; for he strengthened himself exceedingly.

9 Moreover Uzziah built towers in Jerusalem at the ^gcorner gate, and at the valley gate, and at the turning of the wall, and ^{||} fortified them.

10 Also he built towers in the desert, and ^{||} digged many wells: for he had much cattle, both in the low country, and in the plains: husbandmen also, and vine dressers in the mountains, and in ^{||} Carmel: for he loved [†] husbandry.

He built towers in the desert; partly to guard his cattle from the inroads and depredations which the Arabians were accustomed to make; and partly to give notice of the approach of any enemy, and to give some stop to their march on that side.

11 Moreover Uzziah had an host of fighting men, that went out to war by bands; according to the number of their account by the hand of Jeiel the scribe and Maaseiah the ruler, under the hand of Hananiah, one of the king's captains.

That went out to war by bands, i. e. some bands at one time, and some at another, as occasion required. See the notes on 1 Chron. xxvii. 1, &c.; 2 Chron. xiii. 14.

12 The whole number of the chief of the fathers of the mighty men of valour were two thousand and six hundred.

13 And under their hand was [†]an army, three hundred thousand and seven thousand and five hundred, that made war with mighty power, to help the king against the enemy.

14 And Uzziah prepared for them throughout all the host shields, and spears, and helmets, and habergeons, and bows, and [†]slings to cast stones.

15 And he made in Jerusalem engines, invented by cunning men, to be on the towers and upon the bulwarks, to shoot arrows and great stones withal. And his name [†]spread far abroad; for he was marvellously helped, till he was strong.

16 [¶] But ^h when he was strong, his heart was ⁱ lifted up to his destruction: for he transgressed against the LORD his God, and ^k went into the temple of the LORD to burn incense upon the altar of incense.

But when he was strong; when he was strengthened in his kingdom, and free from the fear of any enemy. Into the temple of the Lord; into the holy place, where the altar of incense stood, and into which none but the priests might enter, much less offer incense.

17 And ^l Azariah the priest went in after him, and with him fourscore priests of the LORD, that were valiant men:

18 And they withstood Uzziah the king, and said unto him, It ^m appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto the LORD, but to the ⁿ priests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; neither shall it be for thine honour from the LORD God.

They withstood Uzziah; Heb. stood up against Uzziah; not by force, or laying hands upon him to restrain him, for in the next verse you still find the censor in his hand; but only by admonition and reproof, which here follows. Neither shall it be for thine honour from the Lord God; expect that God will punish thee, or put some brand of infamy upon thee, for this presumption. But this they express modestly, and by a figure called meiosis, where more is meant than is expressed, because they considered that he to whom they spake, though an offender, was their lord and sovereign.

19 Then Uzziah was wroth, and had a censor in his hand to burn incense: and while he was wroth with the priests, ^o the leprosy even rose up in his forehead before the priests in the house of the LORD, from beside the incense altar.

Uzziah was wroth with the priests. The leprosy even rose up in his forehead; so as he could not hide his shame;

p As Esth. 6. 12.

They thrust him out; not by force, as was noted on ver. 18, which needed not, for he voluntarily hasted away, as it follows; but by vehement persuasions and denunciations of God's further judgments upon him, if he did not depart. Some suppose that the earthquake, mentioned Amos i. 1; Zech. xiv. 5, happened upon this occasion, as another token of God's displeasure against this unparalleled arrogance.

Unto the day of his death: God would have this leprosy to be incurable, as a lasting monument of his anger against such presumptuous invaders of the priest's office. Dwelt in a several house; as he was obliged to do by law, Lev. xiii. 46, which he durst not now resist, being under the hand and stroke of God, and under the fear of further and worse plagues, if he did so. For he was cut off; so the following words are a reason of the former; he dwelt in a several house, because he might not come into the temple or courts, nor consequently into any public assembly, or the society of others. Or, and therefore, as the Hebrew chi often signifies; and the particle and is oft understood. So it is an inference from the next foregoing words, He was a leper, and therefore he was cut off, &c. He who could not content himself with God's allowance, but usurped the priest's place and office, is now deprived of the privilege of the meanest of his people. A just and most suitable judgment.

b 2 Kings 15. 35.

He entered not into the temple of the Lord, to wit, to offer incense. But seeing this was not commendable, how is this mentioned as an exception from the foregoing character, that he did as his father did in that which was right, &c.? Answe. It is an exception only from the last clause, where also one word may be supplied out of the foregoing words, as is most usual in Scripture; thus, He did according to all that his father Uzziah did; then it fitly follows, howbeit, &c., i. e. except in his miscarriages.

3 He built the high gate of the house of the LORD, and on the wall of ^hOphel he built much.

h Or, the tower, ch. 33. 14. Neh. 3. 26.

He built, i. e. repaired it; for it was built before, chap. xi. 5. The high gate, otherwise called the new gate, Jer. xxxvi. 10. The wall of Ophel; a tower upon or near the wall of Jerusalem, which probably he fortified, as his father had done other towers, chap. xxvi. 9.

4 Moreover he built cities in the mountains of Judah, and in the forests he built castles and towers.

5 ¶ He fought also with the king of the Ammonites, and prevailed against them. he was also delivered into the hand of the king of Israel, who smote him with a great slaughter.

The Lord his God: God was his God, though not by covenant and grace, and special relation, which Ahaz had renounced, yet by his sovereign dominion over him; for God did not forfeit his right by Ahaz's denying it.

6 ¶ For ^h Pekah the son of Remaliah slew in Judah an hundred and twenty thousand in one day, which were all † valiant men; because they had forsaken the LORD God of their fathers.

7 And Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim, slew Maaseiah the king's son, and Azrikam the governor of the house, and Elkanah that was † next to the king.

8 And the children of Israel carried away captive of their brethren two hundred thousand, women, sons, and daughters, and took also away much spoil from them, and brought the spoil to Samaria.

9 But a prophet of the LORD was there, whose name was Oded: and he went out before the host that came to Samaria, and said unto them, Behold, ^k because the LORD God of your fathers was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage that reacheth up unto heaven.

i. e. In a most high and fierce manner. A usual hyperbole, withal signifying that their rage did cry aloud, and was heard to heaven, from whence it would pull down vengeance upon them.

10 And now ye purpose to keep under the children of Judah and Jerusalem for ^m bondmen and bondwomen unto you: but are there not with you, even with you, sins against the LORD your God?

Which, if not repented of, may bring down the like vengeance upon your own heads.

11 Now hear me therefore, and deliver the captives again, which ye have taken captive of your brethren: "for the fierce wrath of the LORD is upon you.

12 Then certain of the heads of the children of Ephraim, Azariah the son of Johanan, Berechiah the son of Meshillemoth, and Jehizkiah the son of Shallum, and Amasa the son of Hadlai, stood up against them that came from the war, 13 And said unto them, Ye shall not bring in the captives hither: for whereas we have offended against the LORD already, ye intend to add more to our sins and to our trespass: for our trespass is great, and there is fierce wrath against Israel.

14 So the armed men left the captives and the spoil before the princes and all the congregation.

15 And the men ^o which were expressed by name rose up, and took the captives, and with the spoil clothed all that were naked among them, and arrayed them, and shod them, and ^p gave them to eat and to drink, and anointed them, and carried all the feeble of them upon asses, and brought them to Jericho, ^q the city of palm trees, to their brethren: then they returned to Samaria.

Which were expressed by name; which were appointed to take care about the management of this business.

16 ¶ At that time did king Ahaz send ^{cir. 741.} unto the kings of Assyria to help him. ^{r 2 Kings 16. 7.}

The kings of Assyria, i. e. the king; the plural number for the singular; either, 1. Because he was a great king and a king of kings; as the elephant, or, as others think, the crocodile, is called behemoth, which signifies beasts, Job xl., because of his vast bulk and eminency above other beasts. Or, 2. Because he wrote to divers of the kings or great princes, who may be called kings in a more general signification of the word, and indeed are so called, Isa. x. 8, Are not my princes altogether kings?

17 For again the Edomites had come and smitten Judah, and carried away † captives.

18 *The Philistines also had invaded the cities of the low country, and of the south of Judah, and had taken Bethshemesh, and Ajalon, and Gederoth, and Shochu with the villages thereof, and Timnah with the villages thereof, Gimzo also and the villages thereof: and they dwelt there.

The low country; that part of Judah which was towards the sea, and towards the Philistines' land. The south of Judah; of which see Josh. xv. 21.

19 For the LORD brought Judah low because of Ahaz king of ^{t ch. 21. 2.} Israel; for he ^{u Ex. 32. 25.} made Judah naked, and transgressed ^{s Ezek. 16. 27, 57.} sore against the LORD.

He made Judah naked; taking away their ornament and their defence and strength, to wit, their treasures, which he sent to the Assyrian to no purpose; their frontier towns, and other strong holds, which by his folly and wickedness were lost; their religion, and the Divine protection, which was their great and only firm security, which by his sins he forfeited. 20 And ^{740.} *Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria came unto him, and distressed him, ^{r 2 Kings 15. 29. & 16. 7, 6, 9.} but strengthened him not.

21 For Ahaz took away a portion out of the house of the LORD, and out of the house of the king, and of the princes, and gave it unto the king of Assyria: but he helped him not.

Distressed him, or, straitened him, by robbing him of his treasures. But he helped him not, but strengthened him not; a most emphatical expression: for though he weakened his present enemy the Syrian, as is related, 2 Kings xvi. 9, yet really, and all things considered, he did not strengthen Ahaz and his kingdom, but rather weaken them; for by the removing the Syrian, who, though a troublesome neighbour, was a kind of bulwark to him, as to many other enemies, he smoothed the way for himself, a far more dangerous and mischievous enemy, as appears by his invasion of Judah in the very next king's reign.

22 ¶ And in the time of his distress did he trespass yet more against the LORD: this is that king Ahaz.

That monster and reproach of mankind, that unteachable and incorrigible prince, whom even grievous afflictions made worse, which commonly make men better. This is he whose name deserves to be remembered and detested for ever. Or, king Ahaz was the same, no changing, not a whit better by all the methods which God used with him.

23 For ^{y See ch. 25. 14.} he sacrificed unto the gods of ^{z Jer. 44. 17, 18.} † Damascus, which smote him: and he said, Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, therefore will I sacrifice to them, that ^{z Heb. Darnesek.} they may help me. But they were the ruin of him, and of all Israel.

Which smote him; or, which had smitten him formerly, i. e. had enabled their worshippers, the Syrians, to smite him, as he fondly imagined; which yet he saw confuted, having now found by experience that they could not save them from the Assyrian power.

24 And Ahaz gathered together the vessels of the house of God, and cut in pieces the vessels of the house of God, and shut up the doors of the house of the LORD, and he made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem.

25 And in every several city of Judah he made high places || to burn incense unto other gods, and provoked to anger the LORD God of his fathers.

26 ¶^b Now the rest of his acts and of all his ways, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

27 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city, even in Jerusalem: but they brought him not into the sepulchres of the kings of Israel: and Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XXIX.

Hezekiah's good reign: he restoreth religion; exhorteth the Levites, 1—11. They sanctify themselves, and cleanse the house of God, 12—19. He offereth solemn sacrifices, with songs of praise, and the congregation add their offerings, 20—36.

726. HEZEKIAH ^abegan to reign when he was five and twenty years old, and he reigned nine and twenty years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Abijah, the daughter ^bof Zechariah.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that David his father had done.

726. 3 ¶ He in the first year of his reign, in the first month, ^copened the doors of the house of the LORD, and repaired them.

Which Ahaz his father had shut up, chap. xxviii. 24.

4 And he brought in the priests and the Levites, and gathered them together into the east street,

Which was before the eastern gate of the temple.

5 And said unto them, Hear me, ye Levites, ^dsanctify now yourselves, and sanctify the house of the LORD God of your fathers, and carry forth the filthiness out of the holy place.

That filthy altar, which Ahaz had put in the place of God's altar, 2 Kings xvi. 11, &c., and the idols or other abominable or polluting things which were there. Out of the holy place; the temple, or the priests' court, which also is called a holy place, Lev. vi. 16; x. 13; Numb. xxviii. 7.

6 For our fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD our God, and have forsaken him, and have ^eturned away their faces from the habitation of the LORD, and ^fturned their backs.

Either, 1. Metaphorically; they have wilfully, and obstinately, and contumeliously forsaken God, and his house and worship; that posture being a signification of contempt. Or, 2. Literally and properly. For Ahaz having removed the altar of God into a by-place, 2 Kings xvi., and directing his worship towards the east, after the manner of the heathens, whom he designed to follow; and not to the west, as the Israelites did by God's command, in which quarter the ark was; he must needs consequently turn his back upon the altar, and house, and ark of God.

7 ^fAlso they have shut up the doors of the porch, and put out the lamps, and have not burned incense nor offered burnt offerings in the holy place unto the God of Israel.

8 Wherefore the ^gwrath of the LORD was upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he hath delivered them to ^htrouble, to astonishment, and to ⁱhissing, as ye see with your eyes.

To astonishment and to hissing, i. e. to such calamities as all that see and hear of shall be astonished at, and hiss at those who by their own sin and folly have brought such miseries upon themselves. See on 1 Kings ix. 8.

9 For, lo, ⁱour fathers have fallen by the sword, and our sons and our daughters and our wives are in captivity for this.

Or were, though they were presently released, chap. xviii. 5, 14, 15.

10 Now it is in mine heart to make ^ka covenant with the LORD God of Israel, that his fierce wrath may turn away from us.

11 My sons, || be not now negligent: for the LORD hath ^lchosen you to stand before him, to serve him, and that ye should minister unto him, and || burn incense.

My sons; so he calls them indifferently, though many of them were elder than himself, because he was by his tender love and affection, as he was by his office obliged to be, a nursing-father to them. See Isa. xlix. 23. Be not now negligent, in sanctifying yourselves and the temple, ver. 5, and in quickening and preparing yourselves and the people to God's service.

12 ¶ Then the Levites arose, Mahath the son of Amasai, and Joel the son of Azariah, of the sons of the Kohathites: and of the sons of Merari, Kish the son of Abdi, and Azariah the son of Jehalelel: and of the Gershonites; Joah the son of Zimmah, and Eden the son of Joah:

13 And of the sons of Elizaphan; Shimri, and Jeiel: and of the sons of Asaph; Zechariah, and Mattaniah:

14 And of the sons of Heman; Jehiel, and Shimei: and of the sons of Jeduthun; Shemaiah, and Uzziel.

15 And they gathered their brethren, and ^msanctified themselves, and came, according to the commandment of the king, || by the words of the LORD, ⁿto cleanse the house of the LORD.

16 And the priests went into the inner part of the house of the LORD, to cleanse it, and brought out all the uncleanness that they found in the temple of the LORD into the court of the house of the LORD. And the Levites took it, to carry it out abroad into the brook Kidron.

The inner part of the house of the Lord; not the holy of holies, into which only the high priest might enter, and that but once in a year; but the holy place. Into the court, to wit, the priests' court, called here the court, by way of eminency.

17 Now they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify, and on the eighth day of the month came they to the porch of the LORD: so they sanctified the house of the LORD in eight days; and in the sixteenth day of the first month they made an end.

In sixteen days purging the house, and porch, and courts, and all the chambers belonging to the temple. This is noted to imply partly the universal abuse and defilement of all the parts of it by Ahaz, which required so much time to remove; and partly the diligence of the priests in this work.

18 Then they went in to Hezekiah the king, and said, We have cleansed all the house of the LORD, and the altar of burnt offering, with all the vessels thereof, and the shewbread table, with all the vessels thereof.

19 Moreover all the vessels, which king ^{o ch. 28. 24.} Ahaz in his reign did ^o cast away in his transgression, have we prepared and sanctified, and, behold, they are before the altar of the LORD.

20 ¶ Then Hezekiah the king rose early, and gathered the rulers of the city, and went up to the house of the LORD.

21 And they brought seven bullocks, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he goats, for a ^p sin offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah. And he commanded the priests the sons of Aaron to offer them on the altar of the LORD.

The number of seven is famous and customary in sacred matters, and is here used in regard of the vast numbers and various kinds of sins, the guilt whereof yet lay upon the kingdom, which was now to be expiated. Indeed, in case of one particular sin of ignorance done by the people, there was but one bullock to be offered, Lev. iv. 13, 14, but here the sins were many and presumptuous, &c. A sin-offering for the kingdom; to make atonement for the sins of the king, and the royal family, and the court. For the sanctuary; for all the idolatry and uncleanness wherewith the temple had been polluted, which, as it had been cleansed naturally by the priests' hands, so now was to be purged morally by sacrifices. For Judah; for the sins of all the people of Judah.

22 So they killed the bullocks, and the ^{q Lev. 8. 14, 15, 19, 24.} priests received the blood, and ^q sprinkled ^{it} on the altar: likewise, when they had killed the rams, they sprinkled the blood upon the altar: they killed also the lambs, and they sprinkled the blood upon the altar.

^{† Heb. near.} 23 And they brought [†] forth the he goats for the sin offering before the king and the congregation; and they laid their ^{r Lev. 4. 15, 24.} hands upon them:

i. e. The king and the elders of the congregation in the name of the whole congregation.

24 And the priests killed them, and they made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, ^{s Lev. 14. 20.} to make an atonement for all Israel: for the king commanded that the burnt offering and the sin offering should be made for all Israel.

For all Israel, i. e. for Judah and Benjamin, and all the rest of the tribes, whereof a considerable number were now in his dominions.

^{t 1 Chro. 16. 4. & 25. 6.} 25 ^t And he set the Levites in the house of the LORD with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, "according to the commandment of David, and of ^{u 1 Chro. 23. 5. & 25. 1. ch. 9. 14. x 2 Sam. 24. 11} Gad the king's seer, and Nathan the prophet:

^{y ch. 30. 12. † Heb. by the hand of the LORD. † Heb. by the hand of.} for so was the commandment [†] of the LORD [†] by his prophets.

26 And the Levites stood with the instruments ^{z 1 Chro. 23. 5. Amos 6. 5. a Num. 10. 8, 10.} of David, and the priests with [†] the trumpets.

27 And Hezekiah commanded to offer the burnt offering upon the altar. And [†] when the burnt offering began, ^b the song of the LORD began also with the trumpets, and with the [†] instruments ordained by David king of Israel.

28 And all the congregation worshipped, and the [†] singers sang, and the trumpeters sounded: and all this continued until the burnt offering was finished.

29 And when they had made an end of offering, ^{c ch. 20. 18.} the king and all that were [†] present with him bowed themselves, and worshipped.

30 Moreover Hezekiah the king and the princes commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the LORD with the words of David, and of Asaph the seer. And they sang praises with gladness, and they bowed their heads and worshipped.

31 Then Hezekiah answered and said, Now ye have [†] consecrated yourselves unto the LORD, [†] come near and bring sacrifices and ^d thank offerings into the house of the LORD. And the congregation brought in sacrifices and thank offerings; and as many as were of a free heart burnt offerings.

Now ye have consecrated yourselves unto the Lord; now that you have reconciled yourselves and the house to God's favour, and that he is willing and ready to accept your sacrifices. Burnt-offerings; wherein there was more generosity than in the other sacrifices, because they were wholly burnt and offered to God, and the people had no share in them as they had in the rest.

32 And the number of the burnt offerings, which the congregation brought, was threescore and ten bullocks, an hundred rams, and two hundred lambs: all these were for a burnt offering to the LORD.

33 And the consecrated things were six hundred oxen and three thousand sheep.

i. e. All the offerings consecrated to God besides the burnt-offerings already mentioned.

34 But the priests were too few, so that they could not flay all the burnt offerings: wherefore ^{e ch. 35. 11.} their brethren the Levites [†] did help them, till the work was ended, and until the other priests had sanctified themselves: [†] for the Levites were more ^{f ch. 30. 3.} upright in heart to sanctify themselves ^{g Ps. 7. 10.} than the priests.

The priests were too few, to wit, such as were sanctified and fit for their work, as the following words show; for otherwise the number of the priests was more than sufficient for this employment. They could not flay all the burnt-offerings; and much less all the other sacrifices, which were more numerous; the flaying whereof was the priest's proper work, Lev. i. 5, 6. The Levites did help them; necessity excusing their deviation from the rule, as it hath excused others in like cases.

35 And also the burnt offerings were in abundance, with ^{h Lev. 3. 16. i Num. 15. 6, 7, 10.} the fat of the peace offerings, and [†] the drink offerings for every burnt offering. So the service of the house of the LORD was set in order.

And also the burnt-offerings were in abundance; or, for the burnt-offerings were to be offered also in abundance. So it is a reason why the priests could not flay all the burnt-offerings, as was said, ver. 34, because there was so much other work for them; and for the burnt-offerings were not only to be flayed, but also to be offered, to wit, wholly, and with them the fat of peace-offerings, &c.

36 And Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people, that God had prepared the people: for the thing was done suddenly.

It was, as a very great, so a sudden change, that the people, who but the other day were so ready to comply with wicked Ahaz in his idolatrous and impious prescriptions, were now so free and forward in God's service; whereby it plainly appeared to be the work of the Almighty God changing their hearts by his Holy Spirit.

CHAP. XXX.

Hezekiah proclaimeth a solemn passover for Judah and Israel, 1—12. They, having destroyed the altars of idolatry, keep the feast fourteen days, 13—26. The priests and Levites bless the people, 27.

AND Hezekiah sent to all Israel and Judah, and wrote letters also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come to the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel.

To all Israel; whereby he understands all the persons of the ten tribes, who were now settled in his kingdom; as appears by their contradistinction to Ephraim and Manasseh here following. To Ephraim and Manasseh, i. e. to all the remainders of the ten tribes, ver. 5, who are here synecdochically expressed by the names of Ephraim and Manasseh, as elsewhere by the name of Ephraim only. But he names these two tribes, because they were nearest to his kingdom, and a great number of them had long since, and from time to time, joined themselves to the kingdom of Judah, 2 Chron. xv. 8, 9, and therefore he had most hopes of success amongst them. That they should come to the house of the Lord at Jerusalem; admonishing them of their duty to God, and persuading them to comply with it.

2 For the king had taken counsel, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem, to keep the passover in the second ^a month.

10, 11.

Which was against the common rule and practice, but was justified by that supreme law of necessity, and by a just impediment, which made the doing of this in its proper time, to wit, the fourteenth day of the first month, impossible, because the temple was not cleansed nor they prepared till that time was past, chap. xxix. 3, 17. Compare Numb. ix. 10, 11.

^b Exod. 12.
^d ch. 29. 34.

3 For they could not keep it ^b at that time, ^c because the priests had not sanctified themselves sufficiently, neither had the people gathered themselves together to Jerusalem.

They could not keep it at that time, which God had appointed for it, Exod. xii. 6; one reason whereof was evident in itself, because the temple was not then purified and prepared; to which he adds two other reasons. The priests had not sanctified themselves sufficiently, to wit, in such manner and degree as was fit, nor in such numbers as were necessary for the flaying and offering of so many thousands of paschal offerings, as appears, because they were not sufficient for those offerings, which were comparatively few, chap. xxix. 32—34. Neither had the people gathered themselves together to Jerusalem; as they used and ought to do at that time from all places; which now they could not do, because neither the thing was agreed upon, nor the people summoned thither, till the proper time was past.

4 And the thing [†] pleased the king and all the congregation. [†] Heb. was right in the eyes of the king.

5 So they established a decree to make proclamation throughout all Israel, from Beer-sheba even to Dan, that they should come to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel at Jerusalem: for they had not done it of a long time in such sort as it was written.

They established a decree; they fixed this resolution. In such sort as it was written, i. e. so as God had commanded them to do it, to wit, that all the males in Israel should do it; which express command of God they ought to have obeyed, rather than the wicked commands or edicts of men to the contrary; which was both the judgment and practice of the priests and Levites, and other godly Israelites, as is manifest from 2 Chron. xv. 8, &c.

6 So the posts went with the letters [†] from the king and his princes throughout all Israel and Judah, and according to the commandment of the king, saying, Ye children of Israel, ^d turn again unto the LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, and he will return to the remnant of you, that are escaped out of the hand of ^e the kings of Assyria. [†] Heb. from the hand. ^d Jer. 4. 1. Joel 2. 13. ^e 2 Kings 15. 19, 29.

To wit, Pul and Tilgath-pilneser, who had carried their brethren away captives, 2 Kings xv. 19, 29; 1 Chron. v. 26; 2 Chron. xxviii: 20.

7 And be not ye ^f like your fathers, and like your brethren, which trespassed against the LORD God of their fathers, ^g who therefore ^g gave them up to desolation, as ye see. ^f Ezek. 20. 15. ^g ch. 29. 8.

8 Now [†] be ye not ^h stiffnecked, as your fathers were, but [†] yield yourselves unto the LORD, and enter into his sanctuary, which he hath sanctified for ever: and serve the LORD your God, ⁱ that the fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you. [†] Heb. harden not your necks. ^h Deut. 10. 16. ⁱ Heb. give the hand: See 1 Chron. 29. 24. Ezra 10. 19. 1 ch. 29. 10.

Yield yourselves unto the Lord, Heb. give the hand to him, i. e. submit yourselves to him by obeying his command, and renew your covenant with him; both which things were done amongst men by this ceremony of giving the hand. See 1 Chron. xxix. 24; Ezra x. 19; Ezek. xvii. 18. Which he hath sanctified for ever; not for a transient and temporary use, but as long as the state and church of Israel had a being, whatsoever alterations should happen therein.

9 For if ye turn again unto the LORD, your brethren and your children shall find ^k compassion before them that lead them captive, so that they shall come again into this land: for the LORD your God is ^l gracious and merciful, and will not turn away his face from you, if ye ^m return unto him. ^k Ps. 106. 46. ^l Ex. 34. 6. ^m Is. 55. 7.

10 So the posts passed from city to city through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh even unto Zebulun: but ⁿ they laughed them to scorn, and mocked them. ⁿ ch. 36. 16.

They laughed, i. e. the generality of the ten tribes; who by long want of meat had now lost all their appetite to God's ordinances, and from a neglect were now fallen into a contempt and derision of them; for which they paid dear. For about six years after their refusal of this offer of grace they were all carried captive, 2 Kings xviii. 1, 10.

11 Nevertheless ^o divers of Asher and Manasseh and of Zebulun humbled themselves, and came to Jerusalem. ^o So ch. 11. 16. ver. 18. 21.

12 Also in Judah ^p the hand of God ^p Phil. 2. 13 was to give them one heart to do the commandment of the king and of the princes, by the word of the LORD.

q ch. 29. 25.

i. e. God by the power of his grace inclined their hearts to a unanimous compliance with God's and the king's will. And this is mentioned as the reason of this wonderful change wrought in these men, who had lately been utterly averse from God's worship, and wholly given up to idolatry; as was noted before on chap. xxix. 36.

13 ¶ And there assembled at Jerusalem much people to keep the feast of unleavened bread in the second month, a very great congregation.

14 And they arose and took away the altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense took they away, and cast them into the brook Kidron.

The altars, to wit, of burnt-offerings; because they are distinguished from the altars of incense here following; both which were removed and destroyed, partly because all the Israelites were confined to the altars of the temple, and partly because these altars were erected to idols.

15 Then they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the second month: and the priests and the Levites were ashamed, and sanctified themselves, and brought in the burnt offerings into the house of the LORD.

The priests and the Levites were ashamed; their negligence and remissness being upbraided by the great and general alacrity and forwardness of the people.

16 And they stood in their place after their manner, according to the law of Moses the man of God: the priests sprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites.

The priests sprinkled the blood of the sacrifices upon the altar, Lev. i. 5. Which they received of the hand of the Levites, who flayed and killed the sacrifices which the priests, if they had been sanctified, should have done, as it was observed before, chap. xxix. 34.

17 For there were many in the congregation that were not sanctified: therefore the Levites had the charge of the killing of the passovers for every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the LORD.

That were not sanctified; that had more desire to come to the passover, than care and diligence to cleanse and prepare themselves for it. Now these persons were either, 1. The priests, who were before taxed with uncleanness and unpreparedness. Or rather, 2. The people, as is implied in the word congregation, and expressed in the next verse, and confirmed by the reason here following. The Levites had the charge of the killing, because many of the people were unclean, and therefore many more sacrifices were to be offered for their purification than the priests could kill. Of the passovers, i. e. either, 1. The paschal lambs; which the Levites here offered, because of the impurity of many of the masters of families, who otherwise, as some think, should have killed the paschal lambs in their own houses, Exod. xii. 3. Or, 2. The other sacrifices which accompanied the passover, which also are called by the same name, as is evident from Deut. xvi. 2, 3, where see my notes; which the Levites here killed for the reason now mentioned. For every one that was not clean; so far as they could make any discovery of their uncleanness, either by their own confession, or otherwise. But there were many whose uncleanness were not known, and therefore did not cleanse themselves, as is said, ver. 18, as they ought to have done.

18 For a multitude of the people, even many of Ephraim, and Manasseh, Issachar, and Zebulun, had not cleansed themselves, yet did they eat the passover otherwise than it was written. But Hezekiah prayed for them, saying, The good LORD pardon every one

Otherwise than it was written: they had so eager a desire to partake of this ordinance, that, rather than neglect it, they would venture upon it with some ceremonial uncleanness upon them.

19 That prepareth his heart to seek God, the LORD God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary.

i. e. With that ceremonial purification which was required of them that came into God's sanctuary. So he calls it, to distinguish from that moral and internal purity which they are here acknowledged to have.

20 And the LORD hearkened to Hezekiah, and healed the people.

From their uncleanness; which itself was a spiritual disease, and which probably produced a disease, or distemper, or trouble in their minds and consciences; which also had formerly brought, and might justly now bring, even outward diseases upon the body, or, at least, guilt, which is a disease upon the soul; from all which the Lord was pleased now to heal them, by pardoning this their sin, and accepting them and their services, as if they had been clean; which it is likely God was pleased to manifest by some outward sign, possibly by fire from heaven consuming the sacrifices; which was the usual token of God's approbation, as hath been formerly noted more than once.

21 And the children of Israel that were present at Jerusalem kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with great gladness: and the Levites and the priests praised the LORD day by day, singing with loud instruments unto the LORD.

22 And Hezekiah spake comfortably unto all the Levites that taught the good knowledge of the LORD: and they did eat throughout the feast seven days, offering peace offerings, and making confession to the LORD God of their fathers.

Spake comfortably unto all the Levites; encouraged them to a cheerful and diligent attendance upon their holy ministrations by the promise of his favour and utmost care for them, which he faithfully performed, chap. xxxi. 4, &c. That taught the good knowledge of the Lord; who by their office were to instruct and build up the people in the knowledge and fear of God; which is mentioned as the cause of his respect and kindness to them, which was for their work's sake, as it is said, 1 Thess. v. 13. Making confession: either, 1. Confessing their sins; which work was to accompany many of their sacrifices; of which see Lev. v. 5; xvi. 21. Or rather, 2. Confessing God's goodness, or praising of God, which oft goes under this name, as 1 Chron. xvi. 8, 24, which also seems to be more proper work for this season of joy.

23 And the whole assembly took counsel to keep other seven days: and they kept other seven days with gladness.

Not in the same manner as they had done the former, with offering new paschal lambs, and eating only unleavened bread, (of which there is not the least intimation in the text,) but only in the solemn worship of God, by sacrifices, and prayers, and praises, and public instruction of that great congregation in the good knowledge of the Lord; which was so dear to Hezekiah, ver. 22, and at this time most seasonable and necessary for the people, after so long and dismal a night of ignorance, superstition, and idolatry, as both Israel and Judah had been involved in.

24 For Hezekiah king of Judah did give to the congregation a thousand bullocks and seven thousand sheep; and the princes gave to the congregation a thousand bullocks and ten thousand sheep:

Hezekiah did give to the congregation; first to God, to whom the parts appointed were offered in way of thanksgiving; and then to the people, who feasted upon the relics, as the offerer used to do in peace-offerings; and Hezekiah, who was the offerer, gave away his right in the remains of the sacrifices to the people. A thousand bullocks and seven thousand sheep; which generosity is the more considerable, because it was in the beginning of his reign, when he found the royal exchequer exhausted and empty; and when he had been at great expense about the cleansing and refitting of the temple, and making preparations for this great feast. A great number of priests sanctified themselves; having now both more time and further need of sanctifying themselves to offer these numerous sacrifices.

25 And all the congregation of Judah, with the priests and the Levites, and all the congregation ^f that came out of Israel, and the strangers that came out of the land of Israel, and that dwelt in Judah, rejoiced.

26 So there was great joy in Jerusalem: for since the time of Solomon the son of David king of Israel there was not the like in Jerusalem.

27 ¶ Then the priests the Levites arose and ^g blessed the people: and their voice was heard, and their prayer came up to ^h his holy dwelling place, even unto heaven.

The priests the Levites; those of the Levites who were priests also; for to them only this work belonged, 1 Chron. xxxiii. 13. Or, the priests and the Levites; for as the Levites did some other part of the priests' work at this time, it is not strange if they did this also. Or the priests might bless by solemn pronouncement of the blessing, and the Levites by their acclamations, or with their musical instruments. Blessed the people; either commended them for their great zeal and diligence in God's service; or rather, solemnly prayed to God to bless them; and their prayer was not in vain, as the following words show.

CHAP. XXXI.

The people forward in destroying idolatry: Hezekiah ordereth the courses of the priests and Levites; and provideth for their work and maintenance, 1—4. The people forward in offerings and tithes, 5—10. Hezekiah appointeth officers to dispose of the tithes, 11—19; his sincerity, 20, 21.

NOW when all this was finished, all Israel that were [†] present went out to the cities of Judah, and [‡] brake the [†] images in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high places and the altars out of all Judah and Benjamin, in Ephraim also and Manasseh, [†] until they had utterly destroyed them all. Then all the children of Israel returned, every man to his possession, into their own cities.

In Ephraim also and Manasseh; either, 1. In those cities belonging to Ephraim and Manasseh, which the kings of Judah had formerly taken from the kings of Israel. Or, 2. In the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh. For although these were a part of Hoshea's kingdom, yet Hezekiah presumed to do this, partly, by virtue of the law of God, to which both Israel and Judah owed subjection, which commanded the extirpation of these things out of the whole land of Canaan; partly, by the special impulse and direction of God's Spirit, which sometimes did put persons upon heroic and extraordinary actions, not to be drawn into imitation; and partly, because he knew that Hoshea contented himself with the worship of the calves, and did not practise that great idolatry which his predecessors had used, and therefore would patiently suffer the breaking of these images of Baal, and the things belonging to them; which is all that was done at this time.

2 ¶ And Hezekiah appointed ^b the courses of the priests and the Levites after their courses, every man according to his service, the priests and Levites ^c for burnt offerings and for peace offerings, to minister, and to give thanks, and to praise in the gates of the tents of the LORD.

i. e. Within the gates of the house of the Lord; which is here called tents, partly because all houses are oft so called, as Judg. xix. 9; xx. 8; Psal. lxix. 25; and partly because the host of the Lord, to wit, the priests and Levites, frequently so called, encamped there, and kept their stations and orders there by course.

3 He appointed also the king's portion of his substance for the burnt offerings, to wit, for the morning and evening burnt offerings, and the burnt offerings for the sabbaths, and for the new moons, and for the set feasts, as it is written in the law of the LORD.

For the burnt-offerings; which had hitherto been, and were to be, taken out of the treasures of the temple which were collected from the people, 1 Chron. xxvi. 20; Neh. x. 32, 33; but that he might ease them in their present poverty, which his predecessor had brought upon them, and engage them to a more cheerful attendance upon God's service, he took the burden upon himself.

4 Moreover he commanded the people that dwelt in Jerusalem to give the ^e portion of the priests and the Levites, that they might be encouraged in ^f the law of the LORD.

i. e. Freed from worldly cares and distractions, and enabled to give up themselves entirely to the serious study of God's law, in which many of them were ignorant, and to the instruction, and direction, and quickening of the people in their several duties.

5 ¶ And as soon as the commandment [†] came abroad, the children of Israel brought in abundance [‡] the firstfruits of corn, wine, and oil, and [¶] honey, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all [¶] things brought they in abundantly.

As soon as the commandment came abroad; either, 1. As soon as the report of this command of the king, ver. 4, was got abroad into other parts. Or, 2. As soon as the king enlarged and extended that command to all the parts of his kingdom, which, ver. 4, was confined to them that dwell in Jerusalem. Honey, or, dates; as the Hebrew writers generally, and many other learned Hebricians, understand this word, which is given to them because of the sweetness of their taste, in some sort resembling honey. For the law requires no tithes but of the fruits of trees, or of the earth, or of beasts.

6 And concerning the children of Israel and Judah, that dwelt in the cities of Judah, they also brought in the tithe of oxen and sheep, and the ^h tithe of holy things which were consecrated unto the LORD their God, and laid [†] them [†] by heaps.

Also the tithe of oxen and sheep; they brought in not only the same tithes which the dwellers in Jerusalem did, to wit, of corn, and wine, and oil, &c., which they had in their own storehouses in that city; but also oxen and sheep, which were more proper to the country; for under the cities of Judah are comprehended the suburbs and territories adjacent and belonging to them, as is evident from the nature of the thing, and the law of God. And the tithe of holy things: this may be taken either, 1. By way of explication, even the tithes of holy things, &c. Or rather, 2. By way of addition, the tithes of all holy things which were consecrated unto the Lord, whether by vow, or voluntary promise, or otherwise; as the tithes of gains by merchandise, or spoils of war, &c.; of which see Gen. xiv. 20; xxviii. 22; Numb. xxxi. 28, 30.

7 In the third month they began to lay the foundation of the heaps, and finished them in the seventh month.

In the third month, to wit, of the sacred year, Exod. xii. 2, in which their harvest began. In the seventh month; in which their harvest ended and the feast of tabernacles was kept, Exod. xxiii. 16; Lev. xxiii. 34.

8 And when Hezekiah and the princes came and saw the heaps, they blessed the LORD, and his people Israel.

They blessed the Lord; both for giving such plentiful provisions to his land in this year, and for giving his people such liberal and pious hearts towards this good work. And his people Israel; they praised them for their forwardness and faithfulness in it.

9 Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps.

How it came to pass that no more of their provision was spent, and that there yet remained such great heaps of it.

10 And Azariah the chief priest of the house of Zadok answered him, and said, ¹Mal. 3. 10. ¹Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the LORD, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty: for the LORD hath blessed his people; and that which is left is this great store.

The chief priest of the house of Zadok; either, 1. The high priest, called also Zadok, 1 Chron. vi. 12, because he was of his line and family. Or, 2. The chief priest, or the head of that family of Zadok, or of Eleazar; as there was another chief priest of the family of Abiathar, or of Ithamar; see 2 Sam. viii. 17; 1 Chron. xxiv. 3; but both subject to the high priest. Since the people began to bring the offerings; which they did from the beginning of the harvest, according to the manner. The Lord hath blessed his people in an extraordinary degree.

11 ¶ Then Hezekiah commanded to prepare ¹Or, storehouses. chambers in the house of the LORD; and they prepared them,

In the house of the Lord; largely so called, to wit, in the courts, or in the chambers adjoining to the house.

12 And brought in the offerings and the tithes and the dedicated things faithfully: ^kNeh. 12. 13. ^kover which Cononiah the Levite was ruler, and Shimei his brother was the next.

13 And Jehiel, and Azaziah, and Nathath, and Asahel, and Jerimoth, and Jozabad, and Eliel, and Ismachiah, and Mahath, and Benaiah, were overseers [†] under the hand of Cononiah and Shimei his brother, at the commandment of Hezekiah the king, and Azariah the ruler of the house of God.

Overseers under the hand of Cononiah and Shimei his brother, i. e. to dispose of those provisions by their direction, and to be accountable to them therein. The ruler of the house of God; either the supreme ruler, to wit, the high priest; or the chief ruler under him, and in his stead, being appointed by him to inspect this work. See above, ver. 10, and 1 Chron. ix. 11; Jer. xx. 1.

14 And Kore the son of Imnah the Levite, the porter toward the east, was over the freewill offerings of God; to distribute the oblations of the LORD, and the most holy things.

Toward the east; at the east gate of the Lord's house; of which see on chap. xxiii. 5. To distribute to the priests and Levites, to whom they were appropriated by God. The most holy things, to wit, the remainders of the free-will-offering, Lev. ii. 3, 10, the sin-offering and trespass-offering, Lev. vi. 18, 22; vii. 1, and the shew-bread, Lev. xxiv. 9.

15 And [†]next him were Eden, and Miniamin, and Jeshua, and Shemaiah, Amariah, and Shecaniah, in ¹Josh. 21. 9. the cities of the priests, in ¹Or, trust. ¹Chro. 9. 22. ¹their ¹set office, to give to their brethren by courses, as well to the great as to the small:

These were intrusted with the receiving and distributing of the several portions belonging to the priests who abode in their several cities, whilst their brethren came up to Jerusalem.

16 Beside their genealogy of males, from three years old and upward, even unto every one that entereth into the house of the LORD, his daily portion for their service in their charges according to their courses;

From three years old and upward; to whom a portion of these things was allotted, as is here implied. Unto every one that entereth into the house of the Lord; that were capable of entering thither and doing service there, which they were at twenty years old, as is expressed here, ver. 17, and 1 Chron. xxiii. 24, through the whole company of the priests and Levites.

17 Both to the genealogy of the priests by the house of their fathers, and the Levites ^m from twenty years old and upward, in their charges by their courses; ^m1 Chron. 23. 24, 27.

18 And to the genealogy of all their little ones, their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, through all the congregation: for in their ¹Or, trust. ¹set office they sanctified themselves in holiness:

This is alleged as a reason why their wives and children were provided for out of the holy things, because they sequestered themselves from worldly affairs, by which they might otherwise have provided for their families, and entirely devoted themselves to holy administrations.

19 Also of the sons of Aaron the priests, which were in ⁿthe fields of the suburbs of their cities, in every several city, the men that were ^oexpressed by name, to give portions to all the males among the priests, and to all that were reckoned by genealogies among the Levites. ⁿLev. 25. 34. ⁿNum. 35. 2. ^over. 12, 13, 14, 15.

20 ¶ And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, and ^pwrought that which ^p2 Kings 20. 3. ^pwas good and right and truth before the LORD his God.

21 And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, he did it with all his heart, and prospered.

AFTER *these things, and the establishment thereof, Sennacherib king of Assyria came, and entered into Judah, and encamped against the fenced cities, and thought † to win them for himself.

After these things, and the establishment thereof; an emphatical preface, signifying, that notwithstanding all his pious care and zeal for God, yet God saw fit to exercise him with a sore trial and calamity; which yet he turned to his great honour and advantage. He designed and bragged that he would win them all, and did actually win many of them, 2 Kings xviii. 13.

2 And when Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib was come, and that † he was purposed to fight against Jerusalem,

3 He took counsel with his princes and his mighty men to stop the waters of the fountains which were without the city: and they did help him.

To stop the waters of the fountains, with earth or other things cast into them; and withal to derive the waters by secret paths and pipes under ground to Jerusalem.

4 So there was gathered much people together, who stopped all the fountains, and the brook that † ran through the midst of the land, saying, Why should the kings of Assyria come, and find much water?

Which was a scarce commodity in this country, and the want of it might much annoy the Assyrian army.

5 Also ^b he strengthened himself, and built up all the wall that was broken, and raised it up to the towers, and another wall without, and repaired ^d Millo in the city of David, and made || darts and shields in abundance.

The wall that was broken by Joash, chap. xxv. 23, and not since repaired. Up to the towers; either, 1. As high as the towers, or the tops of the wall. Or, 2. As far as the two towers, or gates, which were made in the form of towers, and had the use of towers, to wit, that of Ephraim and the corner gate, both mentioned above, chap. xxv. 23. Or, brought up engines or instruments of defence upon the towers. Millo; of which see 1 Kings ix. 24; xi. 27.

6 And he set captains of war over the people, and gathered them together to him in the street of the gate of the city, and † spake comfortably to them, saying,

7 *Be strong and courageous, † be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him: for ^e there be more with us than with him:

8 With him is an ^h arm of flesh; but ⁱ with us is the LORD our God to help us, and to fight our battles. And the people † rested themselves upon the words of Hezekiah king of Judah.

9 ¶ *After this did Sennacherib king of Assyria send his servants to Jerusalem, (but he himself laid siege against Lachish, and all his † power with him,) unto Hezekiah king of Judah, and unto all Judah that were at Jerusalem, saying,

Of this and the following verses, see the notes on 2 Kings xviii. 17, &c.; xix. 10, &c.

¶ Or, in the strong hold.

11 Doth not Hezekiah persuade you to give over yourselves to die by famine and by thirst, saying, ^m The LORD our God shall deliver us out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

12 ⁿ Hath not the same Hezekiah taken away his high places and his altars, and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall worship before one altar, and burn incense upon it?

13 Know ye not what I and my fathers have done unto all the people of ^o other lands? ^o were the gods of the nations of those lands any ways able to deliver their lands out of mine hand?

14 Who ^p was there among all the gods of those nations that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of mine hand, that your God should be able to deliver you out of mine hand?

15 Now therefore ^q let not Hezekiah deceive you, nor persuade you on this manner, neither yet believe him: for no god of any nation or kingdom was able to deliver his people out of mine hand, and out of the hand of my fathers: how much less shall your God deliver you out of mine hand?

Seeing I have destroyed so many nations, and some of them stronger than you, in spite of all their gods, it is not probable that your God should defend you, which none of the rest could do for their people.

16 And his servants spake yet ^r more against the LORD God, and against his servant Hezekiah.

17 ^s He wrote also letters to rail on the LORD God of Israel, and to speak against him, saying, ^t As the gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people out of mine hand, so shall not the God of Hezekiah deliver his people out of mine hand.

18 ^u Then they cried with a loud voice in the Jews' speech unto the people of Jerusalem ^t that were on the wall, to affright them, and to trouble them; that they might take the city.

19 And they spake against the God of Jerusalem, as against the gods of the people of the earth, ^v which were ^u the work of the hands of man.

20 ^w And for this ^v cause Hezekiah the king, and ^w the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, prayed and cried to heaven.

21 ¶ ^x And the LORD sent an angel, which cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria. So he returned with shame of face to his own land. And when he was come into the house of his god, they that came forth of his own bowels † slew him there with the sword.

22 Thus the LORD saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other, and guided them on every side.

Of which see a more particular account 2 Kings xx. 1, &c.

d Pa. 116. 12. 25 But Hezekiah rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him; for his heart was lifted up: therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem.

His heart was lifted up, for that prodigious victory over the Assyrians, above, ver. 21, and for his miraculous restoration from sickness, and the confirmation of that work by a strange and supernatural motion of the sun, and by the honour since done him by an embassy from the great and potent king of Babylon; all which probably raised in him too great an opinion of himself, as if these things were done, if not by his power, yet, at least, for his piety and virtues. And instead of walking humbly with God, and giving the glory of all entirely to him, he took the honour to himself, and vain-gloriously showed his riches and precious treasures to the Babylonish ambassadors, 2 Kings xx. 12, &c. Upon Judah and Jerusalem; who might justly be punished for Hezekiah's sin, because they followed him in it, as they confess in the next verse.

26 Notwithstanding Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart, both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so that the wrath of the LORD came not upon them in the days of Hezekiah.

27 ¶ And Hezekiah had exceeding much riches and honour: and he made himself treasures for silver, and for gold, and for precious stones, and for spices, and for shields, and for all manner of pleasant jewels;

28 Storehouses also for the increase of corn, and wine, and oil; and stalls for all manner of beasts, and cotes for flocks.

29 Moreover he provided him cities, and possessions of flocks and herds in abundance: for God had given him substance very much.

He provided him cities, Heb. he made, &c. Either he purchased them to himself by his gold or silver; or he repaired, and fortified, and beautified them for the honour and safety of his kingdom. But the former sense seems to agree better with the following words.

30 This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourse of Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David. And Hezekiah prospered in all his works.

The upper water-course of Gihon; a rivulet near Jerusalem consisting of two streams, the upper, which was brought into one pool, called the upper pool, Isa. vii. 3; and the lower, which was brought into another, called the lower pool, Isa. xxii. 9. The former he diverted and brought by secret pipes into Jerusalem, which was a work of great art, and labour, and policy, and therefore is here commended. Brought it straight down; whereas before it fetched a compass, and thereby might have been beneficial to the Assyrian host.

712. 31 ¶ Howbeit in the business of the ambassadors of the princes of Babylon, who sent unto him to enquire of the wonder that was done in the land, God left him, to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart.

God left him, to wit, to himself, and his own impotency and corruption. God withdrew from him those supplies and assistances of his Spirit which would certainly and effectually have kept him from that sin, and suffered Satan to tempt him, and him to fall into the sin of pride and ostentation. That he might know; either, 1. That God might know it. So it is spoken of God after the manner of men; whereof we have had many instances. Or, 2. That Hezekiah might know that he had infirmities and sins as well as virtues; and therefore that the great mercies which he had received were not the effects of his own merits, as he might be prone to believe, but of God's free grace.

32 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and his goodness, behold, they are written in the vision of Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, and in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

33 And Hezekiah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem did him honour at his death. And Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XXXIII.

MANASSEH was twelve years old when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem:

This and the following verses, to ver. 11, are taken out of 2 Kings xxi. 1, &c.

2 But did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, like unto the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD had cast out before the children of Israel.

9 So Manasseh made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err, and to do worse than the heathen, whom the LORD had destroyed before the children of Israel.

10 And the LORD spake to Manasseh, and to his people: but they would not hearken.

11 ¶⁶⁷⁷ Wherefore the LORD brought upon them the captains of the host [†] of the king of Assyria, which took Manasseh among the thorns, and ^p bound him with ^{||} fetters, and carried him to Babylon.

Or, with hooks; a metaphorical expression. Or, in his forts, i. e. in one of them. Carried him to Babylon; either therefore Esar-haddon, Sennacherib's successor, had recovered Babylon from Merodach-baladan; or rather, the king of Babylon is here called the king of Assyria, because at this time he had added Assyria to his empire; who having been informed by his ambassadors of the great riches which were in Hezekiah's treasures at Jerusalem, which he was desirous to enjoy; and withal, being assured of Manasseh's degeneracy from the piety and virtue of his father, and from that God whose power alone made Hezekiah formidable, he thought this a fit season to invade Manasseh's kingdom; which he did with success.

12 And when he was in affliction, he besought the LORD his God, and ^a humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, 13 And prayed unto him: and he was ^r intreated of him, and heard his supplication, and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom. Then Manasseh ^knew that the LORD was God.

i. e. He was convinced by his own experience of God's power, justice, and goodness, that Jehovah alone was the true God, and not those idols which he had worshipped, by which he had received great hurt, and no good.

14 Now after this he built a wall without the city of David, on the west side of ^t Gihon, in the valley, even to the entering in at the fish gate, and compassed ^u about ^{||} Ophel, and raised it up a very great height, and put captains of war in all the fenced cities of Judah.

He built a wall; he repaired and strengthened that wall which Hezekiah had built, chap. xxxii. 5, and which possibly the king of Assyria, when he last took Jerusalem, had caused to be thrown down, either wholly or in part. On the west side of Gihon; on the west side of the city of David, to which Hezekiah had brought this water-course down, chap. xxxii. 30, into the great pool which he had made to receive it; and possibly this wall was built to secure the free use of it to the citizens when they should be distressed or besieged by an enemy. Compassed about Ophel with a wall. Of Ophel see before, chap. xxvii. 3.

15 And he took away ^x the strange gods, and the idol out of the house of the LORD, and all the altars that he had built in the mount of the house of the LORD, and in Jerusalem, and cast them out of the city.

16 And he repaired the altar of the LORD, and sacrificed thereon peace offerings and ^y thank offerings, and commanded Judah to serve the LORD God of Israel.

That thereby he might, as far as he could, repair the injuries which he had done to God by his impious commands, ver. 9.

17 ^z Nevertheless the people did sacrifice still in the high places, yet unto the LORD their God only.

18 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and his prayer unto his God, and the words of ^a the seers that spake to him in the name of the LORD God of Israel, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel.

i. e. Of Judah, oft called Israel, as hath been noted before. He speaks not of that part of the canon, called the Book of Kings, for these things are not mentioned there; but of their public records, where all things were particularly mentioned, and whence the most important things were taken by the prophets, and put into those canonical books.

19 His prayer also, and how God was intreated of him, and all his sins, and his trespass, and the places wherein he built high places, and set up groves and graven images, before he was humbled: behold, they are written among the sayings of ^{||} the seers.

1 Or, Hosai.

Or rather, of Hosai, a writer so called; for when the sacred penmen make a reference, they constantly refer us to some particular book or certain author, as to the chronicles of the kings of Israel, or Judah; to the prophecy of Ahijah, or Oded, &c.

20 ¶ ^b So Manasseh slept with his fathers, and they buried him in his own house: and Amon his son reigned in his stead.

In his own house, i. e. in his garden; of which see on 2 Kings xxi. 18.

21 ¶ ^c Amon was two and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned two years in Jerusalem.

22 But he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, as did Manasseh his father: for Amon sacrificed unto all the carved images which Manasseh his father had made, and served them;

23 And humbled not himself before the LORD, ^d as Manasseh his father had humbled himself; but Amon [†] trespassed more and more.

24 ^e And his servants conspired against him, and slew him in his own house.

25 ¶ But the people of the land slew all them that had conspired against king Amon; and the people of the land made Josiah his son king in his stead.

JOSIAH ^a was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem one and thirty years.

n 2 Kings 22. 1, &c.

Of this chapter, see the notes on 2 Kings xxii., xxiii.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right hand, nor to the left.

3 ¶ For in the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, he began to ^bseek after the God of David his father: and in the twelfth year he began ^cto purge Judah and Jerusalem ^dfrom the high places, and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images.

While he was yet young; in the sixteenth year of his age, when he was entering into the age and state of temptations and youthful lusts, and had the administration of his kingdom wholly in his own hand and power, and none to rebuke or restrain him; yet even then he begins to be religious in good earnest.

4 And they brake down the altars of Baalim in his presence; and the \parallel images, that were on high above them, he cut down; and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images, he brake in pieces, and made dust of them, and strowed it upon the \dagger graves of them that had sacrificed unto them.

5 And he ^eburnt the bones of the priests upon their altars, and cleansed Judah and Jerusalem.

6 And so did he in the cities of Manasseh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even unto Naphtali, with their \parallel mattocks round about.

Even unto Naphtali; which was in the utmost and northern borders of the kingdom of Israel. For it must be remembered that the ten tribes were now gone into captivity; and those who were come in their stead were weak and few, and not able to withstand the power of Josiah.

7 And when he had broken down the altars and the groves, and had ^hbeaten the graven images \dagger into powder, and cut down all the idols throughout all the land of Israel, he returned to Jerusalem.

8 ¶ Now ⁱin the eighteenth year of his reign, when he had purged the land, and the house, he sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, and Maaseiah the governor of the city, and Joah the son of Joahaz the recorder, to repair the house of the LORD his God.

The land and the house; the house of God, called the house by way of eminency.

9 And when they came to Hilkiah the high priest, they delivered ^kthe money that was brought into the house of God, which the Levites that kept the doors had gathered of the hand of Manasseh and Ephraim, and of all the remnant of Israel, and of all Judah and Benjamin; and they returned to Jerusalem.

i. e. The Levites, who had gone abroad through all Josiah's kingdom to gather money for this good use, and now came with it to Jerusalem, to lodge it in the treasuries of the Lord's house.

10 And they put it in the hand of the workmen that had the oversight of the house of the LORD, and they gave it to the workmen that wrought in the house of the LORD, to repair and amend the house:

11 Even to the artificers and builders gave they it, to buy hewn stone, and timber for couplings, and \parallel to floor the houses which the kings of Judah had destroyed.

To floor the houses, i. e. the chambers joining on the temple, or within the courts.

12 And the men did the work faithfully: and the overseers of them were Jahath and Obadiah, the Levites, of the sons of Merari; and Zechariah and Meshullam, of the sons of the Kohathites, to set it forward; and other of the Levites, all that could skill of instruments of musick.

Or, all these here named were skilful in instruments of music; which may be here mentioned, either to their commendation, that they were fit for and careful and diligent in this employment, wherewith they were now intrusted, no less than in their own proper work; or to intimate, that as they were skilful, so they were exercised in both their employments, and did successively oversee the work, and praised God with their voices and instruments for his gracious and powerful help in carrying on the work.

13 Also they were over the bearers of burdens, and were overseers of all that wrought the work in any manner of service: and of the Levites there were scribes, and officers, and porters.

14 ¶ And when they brought out the money that was brought into the house of the LORD, Hilkiah the priest ^mfound a book of the law of the LORD given \dagger by Moses.

15 And Hilkiah answered and said to Shaphan the scribe, I have found the book of the law in the house of the LORD. And Hilkiah delivered the book to Shaphan.

16 And Shaphan carried the book to the king, and brought the king word back again, saying, All that was committed \dagger to thy servants, they do it.

17 And they have \dagger gathered together the money that was found in the house of the LORD, and have delivered it into the hand of the overseers, and to the hand of the workmen.

18 Then Shaphan the scribe told the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath given me a book. And Shaphan read \dagger it before the king.

19 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the law, that he rent his clothes.

20 And the king commanded Hilkiah, and Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and \parallel Abdon the son of Micah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asaiah a servant of the king's, saying, 21 Go, enquire of the LORD for me, and for them that are left in Israel and in Judah, concerning the words of the book that is found: for great is the wrath of the LORD that is poured out upon us, because our fathers have not kept the word of the LORD, to do after all that is written in this book.

22 And Hilkiah, and they that the king had appointed, went to Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tikvath, the son of \parallel Hasrah, keeper of

He caused them to engage themselves by an oath or covenant, that they would observe and obey the laws of God, as his godly predecessors had formerly done, and which indeed they were before obliged to do. They complied with God's and the king's command, as to the outward acts of God's worship, though not with an upright heart, as appears by the history.

Josiah keepeth a solemn passover, 1—19. He provoketh Pharaoh-necho, and is slain at Megiddo, 20—24. Lamentations for Josiah, 25—27.

Which were holy; or, and which were holy. In the house; in the temple; or in the holy of holies; whence, it may seem, it had been removed, either, 1. By some of the wicked and idolatrous kings of Judah, possibly by Josiah's father Amon; which peradventure may be implied by that expression, chap. xxxiii. 23, Amon trespassed more and more, i. e. more than he or his father Manasseh had done, which seems to point at some very enormous crime committed by him. Or, 2. By Josiah's order, that the temple might be thoroughly repaired, both in the holy place, and in the most holy place, which some of the idolatrous kings of Judah, it may be, had defaced or defiled; and therefore it was to be searched in order to its reparation; and to that end it might seem fit to remove the ark: and upon this occasion Hilkiah might find the original book of the law, which was written by the hands of Moses, and by God's command was laid beside the ark, and upon the removal of the ark was easily discovered. It shall not be a burden upon your shoulders; or, that it might not be a burden, &c. So these words are to be joined with the former, as the reason why Solomon built this house, that the ark might have a constant and fixed habitation, and not need to be carried from place to place upon their shoulders, as it had been done whilst it was in the tabernacle. And withal, this is mentioned as an argument to quicken them to the more diligent service of God in their present work, because they were freed from that troublesome part of their office which lay upon their forefathers.

4 And prepare yourselves by the † houses of your fathers, after your courses, according to the † writing of David king of Israel, and according to the † writing of Solomon his son. i 1 Chron. 9. 10. k 1 Chron. 23. & 24. & 25. & 26. l ch. 8. 14.

5 And † stand in the holy place according to the divisions of † the families of the fathers of your brethren † the people, and after the division of the families of the Levites. m Ps. 134. 1.

Stand in the place, or, minister, as that word is frequently used, in the court of the priests, which is so called elsewhere, as hath been noted before. After the division of the families of the Levites, i. e. according to the several families both of the people, whom he calls their brethren, lest they should despise them, or grudge to serve them, and of the Levites. For the passover was to be eaten by the several families according to their numbers, Exod. xii. 3. And therefore he commands these persons, that when the paschal lambs were brought to them to be killed, as they were, ver. 7—9, they might so order the matter, that they might te distributed to the several families, whether of the Levitical or other tribes.

o ch. 30. 24.</sup> 7 And Josiah † gave to the people, of the flock, lambs and kids, all for the passover offerings, for all that were present, to the number of thirty thousand, and three thousand bullocks: these were of the king's substance.

Lambs and kids, for either of these might be used for the paschal-offering, Exod. xii. 5. Three thousand bullocks, which were to be offered after the lambs, upon the several days of the feast of unleavened bread.

offered.</sup> 8 And his princes † gave willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites: Hilkiah and Zechariah and Jehiel, rulers of the house of God, gave unto the priests for the passover offerings two thousand and six hundred small cattle, and three hundred oxen.

His princes; not the political, but ecclesiastical princes, or the chief of the priests and Levites, whose names here follow. To the priests and to the Levites, for the use of any of the families of any of them, as need should be; for they supposed the 30,000 which the king had given were not sufficient for all the families. Or, the king gave his cattle to the people only, or principally, for they only are mentioned for that gift, ver. 7. And therefore these persons here named give their cattle not only to the people, but also to the priests and to the Levites, as it is here expressed. And the Levites being not yet sufficiently provided for, some of their brethren, named ver. 9, gave 5000 more peculiarly unto the Levites, as is there said. Rulers of the house of God; for so they were; Hilkiah being the high priest, and the other the two chief priests, of the two lines of Eleazar and Ithamar, who many times were to officiate in the high priest's stead, and were in power and dignity next to him, and were in some sort joint commissioners with him in ruling the affairs of the temple.

9 Conaniah also, and Shemaiah and Nethaneel, his brethren, and Hashabiah and Jeiel and Jozabad, chief of the Levites, † gave unto the Levites for passover offerings five thousand small cattle, and five hundred oxen.

Which they did, though properly it belonged to the priests, because the priests, who were sanctified, were not sufficient for that work, there being so many thousands of the cattle; and they were fully employed in the killing of the sacrifices and the sprinkling of the blood, which was more properly the priests' work than the other.

12 And they removed the burnt offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the families of the people, to offer unto the LORD, as it is written in the book of Moses. And so did they with the oxen.

^{• Lev. 3. 3.} They removed the burnt-offerings, i. e. those cattle which were to be offered for burnt-offerings, to wit, some of the lesser cattle; for these also might be offered as burnt-offerings, Lev. i. 10. And hence it may seem that all these small cattle were not given to the people to be eaten by them for their paschal lambs, but that some of them were to be offered as burnt-offerings for the people. And these they put apart by themselves, partly lest they should be confounded with them which were for another use; and partly that they might not be hindered from that which was their present and more immediate work, as it follows, that they might give, to wit, the paschal lambs or kids. To offer unto the Lord: these words may belong either, 1. To the more remote words, the burnt-offerings, the other words being to be put within a parenthesis, or there being a trajection in the words, which is frequent in Scripture, and which is here observed by some learned interpreters. Or, 2. To the last words, and to the paschal lambs, which they were first to offer to the Lord, by killing them and sprinkling the blood, as was noted before, and then to be given to the people; though the giving be here mentioned before the offering, such transpositions being usual in Scripture and other authors. So did they with the oxen, to wit, as they did with the lesser cattle, of which see the first note on this verse. They removed those oxen which were to be offered as burnt-offerings, from those which were to be offered as peace-offerings.

13 And they <sup>t Ex. 12. 8, 9.

The other holy offerings; those from which the burnt-offerings were removed, ver. 12, to wit, the peace-offerings, part of which fell to the share of the offerer, who was Josiah, and by his gift to the people.

14 And afterward they made ready for themselves, and for the priests: because the priests the sons of Aaron were busied in offering of burnt offerings and the fat until night; therefore the Levites prepared for themselves, and for the priests the sons of Aaron.

Afterward they made ready, to wit, the paschal lambs, and their part of the peace-offerings.

16 So all the service of the LORD was prepared the same day, to keep the passover, and to offer burnt offerings upon the altar of the LORD, according to the commandment of king Josiah.

house.</sup> After all this, when Josiah had prepared the temple, Necho king of Egypt came up to fight against Charchemish by Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him.

When Josiah had prepared the temple; when he and his people hoped that God was reconciled, and the foundation of a solid and lasting happiness was laid, their hopes were quickly blasted. So much are men oft mistaken in their judgments about the designs of God's counsel and providence. Charchemish; which the Assyrian had lately taken from the king of Egypt; of which he boasts, Isa. x. 9.

21 But he sent ambassadors to him, saying, What have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? I come not against thee this day, but against the house wherewith I have war: for God commanded me to make haste: forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not.

+ Heb. the house of my war.

Against the house wherewith I have war, Heb. against the house or family of my war, i. e. against the house of the king of Assyria, between whom and me there is war. God commanded me; either his false god by their lying priests; or the true God, either, 1. By some prophet; for God's prophets used sometimes to deliver or send commands from God to heathen kings. Though it is not probable either that Pharaoh would regard the command of the true God; or that a prophet of the Lord would not acquaint Josiah with this message; or that Josiah would oppose Pharaoh in a war undertaken by God's command. Or rather, 2. By a dream, as God spoke to another heathen king, Abimelech, Gen. xx. 3. Though it is not impossible that he pretended this for his own advantage, that Josiah might not assist his enemies.

22 Nevertheless Josiah would not turn his face from him, but disguised himself, that he might fight with him, and hearkened not unto the words of Necho from the mouth of God, and came to fight in the valley of Megiddo.

d 1 Esd. 1. 28.

Josiah would not turn his face from him; being peradventure encouraged to do so by a misinterpretation of that promise made to him, chap. xxxiv. 28, Thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace: thus God overrules the errors, and miscarriages of men to the accomplishment of his own counsels. Disguised himself; changed his habit, that he might not give his enemies the advantage of aiming at his person, which he wisely thought they would do, that being a likely course to end their trouble, as indeed it proved. Unto the words of Necho from the mouth of God; either, 1. Which Pharaoh sent to him in the name of God, or as coming from God's mouth. Or rather, 2. Which Pharaoh received from the mouth of God, who was pleased some way or other to impart his mind to him; and which Pharaoh acquainted him with by the command of God. And therefore Josiah is here blamed for not hearkening to this message. Although, if he sinned herein, it was only a sin of ignorance, for he did not know that God had spoken this to Pharaoh, and was not bound to believe his testimony, which he had good reason to suspect in this matter. Yet, methinks, he ought so far to have regarded it, as to have inquired the mind of God about it; which he neglected to do, and therefore he cannot be wholly excused, and is here taxed for it.

23 And the archers shot at king Josiah; and the king said to his servants, Have me away; for I am sore wounded.

25 ¶ And Jeremiah lamented for Josiah: and all the singing men and the singing women spake of Josiah in their lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel: and, behold, they are written in the lamentations.

In their lamentations to this day; in all their succeeding lamentations for their public calamities, and for the ruin of their city, and temple, and state, and church, they remembered Josiah's death as their first and most fatal blow, and as that which opened the flood-gates to all their following miseries, and it was ordained that they should do so, as the next words intimate. In the lamentations; either in that canonical book of Jeremiah's Lamentations, or in some other volume of mournful ditties, made by divers persons upon occasion of their following calamities, which is since lost.

26 Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and his goodness, according to that which was written in the law of the LORD, + Heb. kindnesses.

His goodness; either, 1. His piety towards God and his house. Or, 2. His benignity, clemency, and kindness towards all his subjects, being of a most tender disposition and carriage both towards God, chap. xxxiv. 27, and towards men. But the former seems principally intended, because it best agrees both with the history of Josiah, which is wholly taken up with the former, and speaks little or nothing of the latter, and with the following words; and it doth not disagree with the Hebrew word hesed, which though it doth most frequently express kindness to men, yet sometimes it notes a man's piety to God and his house, as is manifest from Neh. xiii. 14.

27 And his deeds, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Jehoahaz succeeding is deposed by Pharaoh, and carried to Egypt, 1—4. Jehoiakim's wicked reign; his captivity into Babylon, 5—8. Jehoiachin likewise, 9, 10. Zedekiah's wicked reign; his contempt of the prophet, and rebellion against Nebuchadnezzar, 11—13. Jerusalem's destruction, 14—21. The proclamation of Cyrus, 22, 23.

THEN the people of the land took Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and made him king in his father's stead in Jerusalem.

a 2 Kings 23. 30, &c. 1 Esd. 1. 34, &c.

The contents of this chapter, for the substance of them, are explained in the notes upon 2 Kings xxiii. 31, &c.; xxiv., xxv.; what is peculiar to it shall be here opened, so far as is necessary.

2 Jehoahaz was twenty and three years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem.

3 And the king of Egypt put him down at Jerusalem, and condemned the land in an hundred talents of silver and a talent of gold.

+ Heb. removed him. b 1 Esd. 1. 30. + Heb. snucted.

4 And the king of Egypt made Eliakim his brother king over Judah and Jerusalem, and turned his name to Jehoiakim. And Necho took Jehoahaz his brother, and carried him to Egypt.

5 ¶ Jehoiakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD his God.

7 Nebuchadnezzar also carried of the vessels of the house of the LORD to Babylon, and put them in his temple at Babylon.

8 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoia-kim, and his abominations which he did, and that which was found in him, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah: and ¶Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

That which was found in him; that crime of rebellion against the king of Babylon, which for a time he kept in his own breast; but when he saw fit, he discovered it, and was convicted of it. See 2 Kings xxiv. 1.

9 ¶ Jehoiachin was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

Jehoiachin was eight years old; of which see the notes upon 2 Kings xxiv. 8, where he is said to be eighteen years old.

10 And †when the year was expired, h king Nebuchadnezzar sent, and brought him to Babylon, i with the †goodly vessels of the house of the LORD, and made ¶Zedekiah his brother king over Judah and Jerusalem.

When the year was expired, Heb. at the return of the year, i. e. at the beginning of the next year, according to the sacred account of the Hebrews, at the spring of the year, the time when kings go forth to battle, as is elsewhere said, when Nebuchadnezzar, among others, went forth to settle and enlarge his conquests. Zedekiah his brother; largely so called, for this was his uncle, or his father's brother, as he is called, 2 Kings xxiv. 17, being the son of Josiah. See 1 Chron. iii. 15; Jer. i. 3.

11 ¶ Zedekiah was one and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned eleven years in Jerusalem.

12 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD his God, and humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet speaking from the mouth of the LORD.

Humbled not himself by repentance for his past errors, and obedience to God's express commands, which he would not yield to through the pride of his heart, as is intimated by this phrase, and expressed Jer. xxxviii. 19.

13 And m he also rebelled against king Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him swear by God: but he n stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart from turning unto the LORD God of Israel.

Who had made him swear by God; who had required and forced him to swear fealty and constant obedience to him by the true God, whom he had served, and whom he called upon to be a witness against him if he broke his oath. So his rebellion was aggravated with perjury, and horrid contempt of God. Compare Ezek. xvii. 18. Hardened his heart, i. e. he added obstinacy and incorrigibility to his sins.

14 ¶ Moreover all the chief of the priests, and the people, transgressed very much after all the abominations of the heathen; and polluted the house of the LORD which he had hallowed in Jerusalem.

The people transgressed very much; they were universally corrupt, and therefore God justly brought upon them a general destruction.

15 ° And the LORD God of their fathers sent to them †by his messengers, rising up ¶betimes, and sending; because he had compassion on his people, and on his dwelling place:

Rising up betimes, and sending, i. e. sending them early and diligently, as a careful householder, who riseth betimes about his business, and pursues it till night come. God sent them many prophets and messages, some at the very beginning of their apostacy, and others afterward, as they proceeded in their impiety, until the very day of their captivity.

16 But ¶they mocked the messengers of God, and °despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the °wrath of the LORD arose against his people, till there was no †remedy.

They mocked the messengers of God; of which see instances, Ezek. xi. 3; xx. 49. Misused his prophets; imprisoning and persecuting them, as they did Jeremiah. Or, seduced themselves by his prophets, i. e. by their prophecies, which they perverted or misconstrued. An eminent instance we have in this, that because Jeremiah prophesied that Zedekiah should be led to Babylon, Jer. xxxii. 5, and Ezekiel, that he should not see Babylon, Ezek. xii. 13, therefore they believed neither, as the Hebrew writers relate. Till there was no remedy; because the people would not repent, and God would not pardon them.

17 ° Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who °slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age: he gave them all into his hand.

In the house of their sanctuary; either in Jerusalem, which was the dwelling-place of God's sanctuary; or, in the house which was their sanctuary; as the river of Euphrates, Gen. xv. 18, is the river which is Euphrates. It is probable they killed them in the very courts and house of God, to which some of them fled for refuge, such places being esteemed sacred and inviolable by the heathens themselves.

18 ° And all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king, and of his princes; all these he brought to Babylon.

19 ° And they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof.

20 And †them that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon; ° where they were servants to him and his sons until the reign of the kingdom of Persia:

21 To fulfil the word of the LORD by the mouth of b Jeremiah, until the land °had enjoyed her sabbaths: for as long as she lay desolate °she kept sabbath, to fulfil threescore and ten years.

Had enjoyed her sabbaths, i. e. had rested from the labour of the husbandmen in ploughing and harrowing it, &c., the people that should have managed it being destroyed. Of the phrase, see the notes on Lev. xxv. 2. To fulfil threescore and ten years; that so the seventy years' captivity prophesied of by Jeremiah might be accomplished.

22 ¶ Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the LORD spoken by the mouth of c Jeremiah might be accomplished, the LORD stirred up the spirit of °Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying,

This and the next verse are repeated in the beginning of the next book, where they will be more fitly explained.

^h Ezra 1.2,3. 23 ^h Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdoms of the earth hath the LORD God of heaven given me; and he hath charged me to build him an house | in Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? The LORD his God be with him, and let him go up.

EZRA.

THE ARGUMENT.

THAT this book of EZRA is part of the canonical Scripture is evident, partly from the testimony of the Jewish church, to which were committed the oracles of God, Rom. iii. 2, who also did carefully keep them, and faithfully transmit them to us, and are not once charged either by Christ or his apostles with breach of that trust; and partly by the unanimous consent of all, both Jews and Christians, at this day. And that Ezra was the writer of this book, is also, and ever was, the opinion of the Jews, who had the best means of knowing this, and is most agreeable to his quality, for he was the son, or grandson, (as the word is elsewhere used,) of Seraiah, Ezra vii. 1, who was the high priest, 2 Kings xxv. 18; 1 Chron. vi. 14; and he was a ready scribe in the law of Moses, Ezra vii. 6, and endowed with a more than ordinary measure of God's Spirit, as is evident from this book; and was himself an eye-witness of these transactions. In his time also there lived divers other holy men of God, as Daniel, and Nehemiah, and Mordecai, and Zerobabel, and Joshua; which makes that probable which the Jews report, that these prophets and other holy and learned men did review the canonical books of the Old Testament, and added here and there some few passages in the historical books, and digested them into that order in which now we have them in our Hebrew Bibles; this being a work most suitable to the prudence, and piety, and sacred function of these persons, and to the present estate of the Jewish nation, who had been long in captivity in Babylon, where it was to be feared that many of them were ignorant or corrupt in the principles of religion, and who were yet in a broken condition, and likely to be exposed to further calamities and dispersions; which also might be signified to some of them; and it was suitable also to that care which the wise and gracious God hath ever used for the guidance of his church, according to their several occasions and necessities.

CHAP. I.

Cyrus's proclamation to Israel for building the Lord's temple at Jerusalem, 1-4. The chief of the people prepare for their return, 5, 6. Cyrus restores the vessels of the temple to Sheshbazzar prince of Judah, 7, 8. Their number, 9-11.

^{B. C.} NOW in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the LORD ^a by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the LORD stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, ^b that he [†] made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying,

In the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, to wit, of his empire or reign in Babylon; for he had now been king of Persia for many years. Stirred up the spirit of Cyrus, i. e. put into him a mind and will to this work.

2 Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The LORD God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath ^c charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah.

All the kingdoms of the earth, to wit, in those parts of the world; all that vast empire formerly under the Assyrians and Babylonians. The gift of which he ascribes to the great God, either by virtue of those common notions which were in the minds of the heathens, who though they worshipped idols, yet many of them did acknowledge a true and supreme God; or by that clear and express prophecy of Isaiah concerning him, Isa. xlv. 28; xlv. 1, 13, so long before he was born; which prophecy the Jews had doubtless showed him, which also carried a great evidence with it, especially to him, who was so highly gratified and encouraged by it; or by a special illumination which God vouchsafed to him, as he did to Nebuchadnezzar and Darius, and some others of the heathen princes. He hath charged me; either by his prophets, Isaiah formerly, or Daniel now; or by an inward suggestion to his mind.

3 Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the LORD God of Israel, (^d he is the God,) which is ^d Dan. 6. 26. in Jerusalem.

Of all his people, to wit, of Israel. A material clause; by virtue of which they justly refused the help of those aliens who pretended to join with them in the building, chap. iv. 2, 3. His God be with him; let his God help him, as I also shall do. Which is in Jerusalem, or only in Jerusalem, as it is in the Hebrew. So it notes the place where he allows and requires them to build it.

4 And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place [†] help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, beside the freewill offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem.

Whosoever remaineth; who, when his brethren were gone up, was desirous to go with them, but forced to tarry there for want of necessaries for his journey. Let the men of his place help him; I require my officers to take care that they may be supplied, either by the voluntary contributions of the people, or by a moderate tax to be laid either only upon those Jews who were resolved to stay, or upon the Gentiles also, which the Persian monarchs, being absolute, had a power to do; and which was the more reasonable, because the king himself submitted to it, and bore a great part of the burden, and because it was for the house of that great God to whom they all owed their present peace and great felicity. With silver and with gold, which upon this occasion I give you leave to transport.

5 ¶ Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the • Phil. 2. 13. Levites, with all them whose spirit * God had raised, to go up to build the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem.

The chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin; and with them some of other tribes, as appears from 1 Chron. ix. 3; but these only are named, because they were most considerable for number and quality. Whose spirit God had raised to go up; to whom God had given that pious disposition, and that fortitude and resolution, which it required to break through their difficulties, which were great and many, such as their present penury, the length, and hazards, and costliness of the journey, their settlements in comfortable habitations, their dispersion in several and distant places, which hindered the conjunction of their counsels and actions, the multitude of their enemies, the actual possession of their country by others, the great backwardness of many of their own brethren to go with them, and many other discouragements.

6 And all they that were about them strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, beside all that was willingly offered.

Strengthened their hands; either because they had embraced, or at least favoured the Jewish religion, concerning which they were instructed by the Israelites that had now for a long time dwelt among them; or rather, that they might hereby gratify the king's humour, and purchase his favour; for they perceived him to be hearty and forward in the work.

f ch. 5. 14. & 6. 5. 7 ¶ Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the LORD, ^g which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods;

Object. These are said to have been cut in pieces, 2 Kings xxiv. 13; how then are they here returned? Ans. That Hebrew word used 2 Kings xxiv. 13, signifies not so properly to cut in pieces as to cut off, as from the use of the word, Deut. xxv. 12; 2 Sam. iv. 12; 2 Kings xviii. 16; Jer. ix. 26. And these vessels, when they were taken away from the temple, might very well be said to be cut off from it, because they had for so long time been so constantly, and as it were inseparably, united to it, and kept in it. In like manner, the meat-offering and drink-offering are said to be cut off from the house of the Lord, Joel i. 9. And it is very improbable that they should deface and cut in pieces these magnificent vessels, which they could so easily transport whole to Babylon. Although, if some of the larger of them had been cut into two or more parts, yet the parts of them might be delivered to the Jews, who could, without great difficulty, restore them to their former unity and form.

8 Even those did Cyrus king of Persia bring forth by the hand of Mithredath the treasurer, and numbered them unto ^h Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah.

Numbered them, i. e. he caused them to be delivered to the Jews by number. Unto Sheshbazzar, i. e. Zorobabel, as appears by comparing chap. iii. 8, with v. 16, to whom the Persians, or rather the Chaldeans, had given this name of Sheshbazzar, as they gave other names to Daniel and his companions, Dan. i. 7. The prince of Judah, and the captain and governor of these returning Jews, chap. ii. 2. So the sceptre is not yet departed from Judah.

9 And this is the number of them: thirty chargers of gold, a thousand chargers of silver, nine and twenty knives, Large knives used in the killing of the sacrifices, which are here mentioned, because the hafts of them were made of or covered with gold or silver.

10 Thirty basons of gold, silver basons of a second sort four hundred and ten, and other vessels a thousand.

Basons of a second sort; the first or chief were of gold, and these of silver are called the second, or next to them of worth and use. Other vessels a thousand: he speaks of vessels of a middle size; for great and small were five thousand four hundred, as it follows here. Or, as some render it, other vessels by thousands: they were not distinctly numbered according to their various forms and uses, but were promiscuously put together by thousands.

11 All the vessels of gold and of silver were five thousand and four hundred. All these did Sheshbazzar bring up with them of † the captivity that were brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem.

† Heb. the transportation.

CHAP. II.

The number of the people that returned, 1—35; and of the priests, 36—39; of the Levites, 40; of the singers, 41; of the porters, 42; of the Nethinims, 43—54; and of Solomon's servants, 55—60. Concerning the priests that could not show their pedigree, 61—63. The whole number of them and their substance, 64—67. Their oblations, 68—70.

NOW ^a these are the children of the province that went up out of the captivity, of those which had been carried away, ^b whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away unto Babylon, and came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city;

b 2 Kin. 24. 14, 15, 16. & 25. 11. 2 Chr. 36. 20.

The children of the province, i. e. the Israelites, called the children of the province, either, 1. Of Babylon, of which province we oft read, as chap. vii. 16; Dan. ii. 48; iii. 1, 12, 30, called the province by way of eminency; or of which they are called children, because of their birth and habitation in it for a long time, it being usual to call the inhabitants of any city or place its children. Or rather, 2. Of Judea, called a province, chap. v. 8. And he calls it thus emphatically, to mind himself and his brethren of that sad change which their sins had made among them, that from an illustrious, independent, and formidable kingdom, were fallen to be an obscure, servile, and contemptible province, first under the Chaldeans, and now under the Persians. Every one unto his city; either unto those cities or towns which belonged to their several ancestors; or rather, to those which were now allotted to them, and from this time possessed by them. For their former cities were either demolished, or possessed by other persons, which they were not now in a capacity of disturbing.

2 Which came with Zerubbabel: Jeshua, Nehemiah, ¶ Seraiah, ¶ Reclaiah, Mordecai, Bilshan, ¶ Mizpar, Bigvai, ¶ Rehum, Baanah. The number of the men of the people of Israel:

1 Or, Azariah, Neh. 7. 7. 1 Or, Raamiah. 1 Or, Misereeth. 1 Or, Nehum.

As for this catalogue, it differs in some names and numbers from that Neh. vii., which might be from divers causes, partly because several names were given to one and the same person; and partly because of the many changes which might happen in the same families between the time of the first making of this catalogue by Ezra, and the making of it anew so many years as that catalogue, Neh. vii., was made after the former.

3 The children of Parosh, two thousand an hundred seventy and two.

i. e. The posterity (as that word is for the most part, if not constantly, taken in this catalogue) that descended either from Parosh, or from that family whereof Parosh was the chief. And so for the rest.

4 The children of Shephatiah, three hundred seventy and two.

5 The children of Arah, seven hundred seventy and five.

c See Neh. 7. 10.

In Neh. vii. 10, they were only six hundred and fifty-two. It seems seven hundred and seventy-five marched out of Babylon, or gave in their names that they would go; but some of them died, others changed their minds, others were hindered by sickness, or other casualties, happening to themselves or near relations; and so there came only six hundred and fifty-two to Jerusalem. And the like is to be said in the like differences; which it suffices to hint once for all.

d Neh. 7. 11. 6 The children of ^d Pahath-moab, of the children of Jeshua and Joab, two thousand eight hundred and twelve.

Of Jeshua and Joab, or of Jeshua-joab, as the former was Pahath-moab.

7 The children of Elam, a thousand two hundred fifty and four.

8 The children of Zattu, nine hundred forty and five.

9 The children of Zaccai, seven hundred and threescore.

10 The children of || Bani, six hundred forty and two.

11 The children of Bebai, six hundred twenty and three.

|| Or, Perida, Neh. 7. 57. The children of Solomon's servants; either of those strangers and proselytes whom Solomon used in the building of the temple, 1 Kings ix. 21, to the service of which, as some add, he devoted them, as there should be occasion hereafter; or others who had lived in Solomon's family, and after his death called themselves and their families by that name, as esteeming it a great honour to them that they had been servants to so great a prince.

58 All the ^mNethinims, and the children of ⁿSolomon's servants, were three hundred ninety and two.

59 And these were they which went up from Tel-melah, Tel-harsa, Cherub, ¶ Addan, and Immer: but they could not shew their father's house, and their ¶ seed, whether they were of Israel:

Tel-melah, Tel-harsa; the names of the places whence they came, and where they had lived in the time of their captivity. Cherub, Addan, and Immer; the names either of the heads of the families living in the places last mentioned, or of other places where the persons here understood had dwelt.

60 The children of Delaiah, the children of Tobiah, the children of Nekoda, six hundred fifty and two.

61 ¶ And of the children of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai; which took a wife of the daughters of °Barzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their name:

To wit, Barzillai; which name he preferred before that of his own family, accounting it, as it seems, a greater honour to be allied to so noble a family, than to be a priest of the Lord. But by this ambition he deprived himself of the honour and advantage of the priesthood, as it is here noted, ver. 62.

62 These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found: ¶ therefore † were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.

The Jews were generally very exact and careful in their genealogies, partly from their own choice and interest, that they might preserve the distinctions of the several tribes and families, which was necessary both to make out their claims or titles to offices or inheritances, which might belong to them by death, or otherwise, as here we see, and to govern themselves thereby in the matter of marriages, and some other things wherein the practice of some laws required the knowledge of these things; and partly by the special providence of God, that so it might be certainly known of what tribe and family the Messiah was born. For as they took care of all their families, so doubtless they took a more punctual and singular care about the royal family, upon which all their hopes depended.

63 And the ¶ Tirshatha said unto them, that they ° should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with ¶ Urim and with Thummim.

The Tirshatha, i. e. the governor, to wit, Zerubbabel; whence Nehemiah also is so called, Neh. viii. 9; x. 1. Till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim; that this point, which could not be found out by any human skill or industry, might be determined by Divine direction. Hereby it appears that the Urim and Thummim were lost in the destruction of the city and temple, though the Jews fed themselves with hopes of recovering them, but in vain. Of the Urim and Thummim, see Exod. xxviii. 30; Num. xxvii. 21; 1 Sam. xxiii. 9.

64 ¶ The whole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore,

The particular sums here recited come only 29,818; unto whom are added in this total sum, 12,542; which either were of the other tribes beside Judah and Benjamin, or were such as were supposed by themselves and others to be Israelites, but could not prove their pedigree by their genealogies, and therefore could not be so punctually and particularly described as the former.

65 Beside their servants and their maids, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven: and there were among them two hundred singing men and singing women.

For women as well as men were devoted to and employed in this exercise in the temple service, as appears from 1 Chron. xxv. 5, 6. And the parents of these persons had taken care to instruct and exercise them as far as they could in this art, both for God's service, and for their own benefit, when Jerusalem and the temple should be rebuilt; which they knew would be done after Jeremiah's seventy years were expired.

66 Their horses were seven hundred thirty and six; their mules, two hundred forty and five:

67 Their camels, four hundred thirty and five; their asses, six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

68 ¶ And some of the chief of the fathers, when they came to the house of the LORD which is at Jerusalem, offered freely for the house of God to set it up in his place:

To the house of the Lord, i. e. to the ruins of the house; or to the place where that house stood.

69 They gave after their ability unto the "treasure of the work threescore and one thousand drams of gold, and five thousand pound of silver, and one hundred priests' garments.

A dram of gold is supposed to be of the weight of the fourth part of a shekel, and of the value of a French crown.

70 *So the priests, and the Levites, and some of the people, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, dwelt in their cities, and all Israel in their cities.

AND when the seventh month was come, and the children of Israel were in the cities, the people gathered themselves together as one man to Jerusalem.

When the seventh month was come, or rather, was coming, or drew near; for the altar was set up after this time, ver. 3, which yet was employed the first day of this month, ver. 6. This was a sacred kind of month, wherein there were divers festivals, as appears from Lev. xxiii., for which the people had been preparing themselves, and now came to Jerusalem to the celebration of them.

2 Then stood up ¶ Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren the priests, and ¶ Zerubbabel the son of °Shealtiel, and his brethren, and builded the altar of the God of Israel, to offer burnt offerings thereon, as it is written in the law of Moses the man of God.

Jeshua the son of Jozadak, the high priest. The son of Shealtiel, i. e. the grandson; for he was the son of Pedaiah, 1 Chron. iii. 17—19. Builded the altar; which was of more present and urgent necessity than the temple, both to make atonement to God for all their sins, and to obtain God's assistance for the building of the temple, and to strengthen their own hearts and hands in that great work, wherein they saw they should have many enemies.

The feast of tabernacles seems to be mentioned synochically for all the solemnities of this month, whereof this was the most eminent and most lasting. Otherwise it is not probable that they would neglect the day of atonement, which was so severely enjoined, Lev. xxiii. 27—29, and was so exceeding suitable to their present condition : see on ver. 6. 12 But many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men, that had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice ; and many shouted aloud for joy :

x See Hag. 2. 3.

Had seen the first house ; which divers of them might very well do, because it was destroyed not quite sixty years ago, as is manifest from 2 Kings xxv. ; 2 Chron. xxxvi. ; Ezek. xl. 1. Wept with a loud voice ; partly, because of the poor and small preparations made for this in comparison of what was made for the other temple ; partly, because this temple was divested and destitute of those things which were the principal glory of the former temple, to wit, the ark, and the Urim and Thummim, &c. ; partly, because these foundation stones were far inferior to the former, both for quantity and price, 1 Kings vii. 9, 10 ; and partly, because these foundations were of a far narrower compass than the former ; for although the foundations of this house of the LORD, strictly so called, were at least of equal largeness with those of the former, by comparing 1 Kings vi. 2, and Ezra vi. 1—3 ; yet the foundations of the whole building belonging to the first temple, and adjoining to it, or in the courts of it, were far larger than these.

13 So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people : for the people shouted with a loud shout, and the noise was heard afar off.

2 Then they came to Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers, and said unto them, Let us build with you : for we seek your God, as ye do ; and we do sacrifice unto him since the days of Esar-haddon king of Assur, which brought us up hither.

d 2 Kings 17. 24, 32, 33, & 19. 37. ver. 10.

Let us build with you : this they spake not sincerely, as appears from their disposition and designs discovered in the following history ; but that by this conjunction with them they might pry into their counsels, and thereby get an opportunity to find some matter or pretences of accusation against them. We seek your God, as ye do ; for so they did, though in a mongrel way : see 2 Kings xvii. 26,

8c. Esar-haddon king of Assur; son of Sennacherib, and after him king of Assyria, 2 Kings xix. 37; who brought or sent these persons hither, either, 1. In the days of Salmancer, who lived and reigned in Assyria but eight years before Esar-haddon's reign; and so Esar-haddon might be one of his most eminent commanders, and the man by whom that colony was sent. Or, 2. In the reign of Esar-haddon, who sent this second colony to supply and strengthen the first.

3 But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest of the chief of the fathers of Israel, said unto them, 'Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God; but we ourselves together will build unto the Lord God of Israel, as king Cyrus the king of Persia hath commanded us.

Ye have nothing to do with us; as being of another nation and religion, and therefore not concerned in Cyrus's grant, which was confined to the Israelites and to the worshippers of the true God. We ourselves together, i. e. who are united together by Cyrus's grant in this work; or, alone, as this word is sometimes used, as Job xxxiv. 29; Psal. xxxiii. 15; Hos. xi. 7.

4 Then 'the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building,

The people of the land, Heb. of that land; the present inhabitants of that province, to wit, the Samaritans. Troubled them in building; by false reports and threats, and other means, described afterwards.

5 And hired counsellors against them, to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus king of Persia, even until the reign of Darius king of Persia.

Hired counsellors against them; who by their artifices and interests in the Persian court should give some stop to their work. All the days of Cyrus king of Persia; for though Cyrus still favoured the Jews, yet he was then diverted by his wars, and his son Cambyses was left his viceroy, who was a very wicked prince, and an enemy to the Jews and their religion. Even until the reign of Darius, Heb. and until, &c., i. e. not only in the reign of Cyrus, but also of Cambyses, and of the magician, after whom was this Darius; of whom see chap. v., vi.

6 And in the reign of †Ahasuerus, in the beginning of his reign, wrote they unto him an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.

In the reign of Ahasuerus; which is supposed by divers learned men to be from this time a common name to divers succeeding kings of Persia. And this makes it seem doubtful who this was. This was either, 1. Xerxes the fourth and rich king of Persia, as he is called, Dan. xi. 2. Or rather, 2. Cambyses the son and successor of Cyrus, as may appear, 1. Because none but he and Smerdis were between Cyrus and this Darius. 2. Because Cambyses was known to be no friend to the Jewish nation nor religion; and therefore it is very improbable that these crafty, and malicious, and industrious enemies of the Jews would omit so great an opportunity when it was put into their hands.

7 ¶ And in the days of Artaxerxes wrote †Bishlam, Mithredath, Tabeal, and the rest of their †companions, unto Artaxerxes king of Persia; and the writing of the letter was written in the Syrian tongue, and interpreted in the Syrian tongue.

In the days of Artaxerxes; either, 1. Artaxerxes the son of Xerxes. Or, 2. Smerdis the magician. Or rather, 3. The same Cambyses, called by his Chaldee name Ahasuerus, ver. 6, and here by his Persian name Artaxerxes; by which name he is here called in the inscription of this letter, because so he was called by himself and others in the letters written either by him or to him. Interpret- ed, or exposed, or declared. The sense is, It was written in the Chaldee or Syrian language, and in the Syrian character; for sometimes the Chaldee or Syrian words are written in the Hebrew character, as Hebrew words are oft written in an English character.

8 Rehum the chancellor and Shimshai the †scribe wrote a letter against Jerusalem to Artaxerxes the king in this sort:

9 Then wrote Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe, and the rest of their †companions; 'the Dinaites, the Apharsathchites, the Tarpelites, the Apharsites, the Archevites, the Babylonians, the Susanchites, the Dehavites, and the Elamites,

Several people thus called from the several places of that vast Assyrian empire, from whence they were fetched, and who were united together into one body, and sent as one colony by the Assyrian monarchs into these parts.

11 ¶ This is the copy of the letter that they sent unto him, even unto Artaxerxes the king; Thy servants the men on this side the river, and at such a time.

12 Be it known unto the king, that the Jews which came up from thee to us are come unto Jerusalem, building the rebellious and the bad city, and have †set up the walls thereof, and †joined the foundations.

Have set up the walls thereof: either, 1. The Jews had begun to build or repair some part of the walls which Nebuchadnezzar had left, which they aggravate in this manner. Or, 2. This is a mere fiction, which, being confidently affirmed, they thought would easily find belief with a king whose heart and ears they possessed by their hired counsellors, and others of their friends, or the enemies of the Jews.

13 Be it known now unto the king, that, if this city be builded, and the walls set up again, then will they not †pay †toll, tribute, and custom, and so thou shalt endamage the †revenue of the kings.

14 Now because †we have maintenance from the king's palace, and it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour, therefore have we sent and certified the king;

Thus they pretend the king's service to their own malicious designs and private interests.

15 That search may be made in the book of the records of thy fathers: so shalt thou find in the book of the records, and know that this city is a rebellious city, and hurtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have †moved sedition †within the same of old time: for which cause was this city destroyed.

16 We certify the king that, if this city be builded again, and the walls thereof set up, by this means thou shalt have no portion on this side the river.

17 ¶ Then sent the king an answer unto Rehum the chancellor, and to Shimshai the scribe, and to the rest of their † companions that dwell in Samaria, and unto the rest beyond the river, Peace, and at such a time.

18 The letter which ye sent unto us hath been plainly read before me.

19 And † I commanded, and search hath been made, and it is found that this city of old time hath † made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein.

20 There have been mighty kings also over Jerusalem, which have ^kruled over all countries ^lbeyond the river; and toll, tribute, and custom, was paid unto them.

21 † Give ye now commandment to cause these men to cease, and that this city be not builded, until another commandment shall be given from me.

22 Take heed now that ye fail not to do this: why should damage grow to the hurt of the kings?

23 ¶ Now when the copy of king Artaxerxes' letter was read before Rehum, and Shimshai the scribe, and their companions, they went up in haste to Jerusalem unto the Jews, and made them to cease † by force and power.

24 Then ceased the work of the house of God which is at Jerusalem. So it ceased unto the second year of the reign of Darius king of Persia.

Then ceased the work of the house of God; for they neither could nor might proceed in that work against their king's prohibition, without a special command from the King of heaven, which they had, chap. v. 1, 2. Darius king of Persia, to wit, Darius the son of Hystaspes, successor of Cambyses; not, as some would have it, Darius Nothus, the son of Artaxerxes Longimanus, who was not emperor till above one hundred years after Cyrus, and consequently from the beginning of the building of the temple to the finishing of it must be about one hundred and thirty years, which is not credible to any one that considers, 1. That the same Zerubbabel did both lay the foundations and finish the work, Zech. iv. 9. 2. That some of the same persons who saw the finishing of this second house, had seen the glory of the first house, Hag. ii. 3.

CHAP. V.

Zerubbabel, being encouraged by Haggai and Zechariah the prophets, setteth forward the work, 1, 2. Their adversaries oppose them again, 3—5. Their letter to Darius concerning this matter, 6—17.

520. THEN ^athe prophets, ^bHaggai the prophet, and ^cZechariah the son of Iddo, prophesied unto the Jews that were in Judah and Jerusalem in the name of the God of Israel, even unto them.

Zechariah the son of Iddo, i. e. Iddo's grandchild; for he was the son of Berechiah. In the name of the God of Israel; commanding them from God to return to the work of building the temple, with promise of his favour and assistance.

2 Then rose up ^dZerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and began to build the house of God which is at Jerusalem: and with them were the prophets of God helping them.

Encouraging the people to work by their presence, and assurance of success.

3 ¶ At the same time came to them ^eTatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and their companions, and said thus unto them, ^f'Who hath commanded you to build this house, and to make up this wall?

Tatnai and Shethar-boznai; not Rehum and Shimshai, &c., who were either dead, or removed from their offices by the new emperor Darius, as is very usual.

4 ^gThen said we unto them after this manner, What are the names of the men ^hthat make this building?

*Then said we; either, 1. We Tatnai and Shethar-boznai. And so this is an additional and more express inquiry concerning the names of the builders. And this sense is favoured by comparing ver. 9, 10, where the same questions here severally made, ver. 3, 4, are in like manner distinguished. And so the sacred writer speaks this in their person; such variation of persons being frequent in the Hebrew language, as the learned know. Or, 2. We Jews; and so the translation must be a little varied, and the words read without an interrogation, thus, Then we told them accordingly (i. e. according to what they asked) what were the names of the men that made this building, i. e. who were the chief undertakers and encouragers of this work; for although the Hebrew particle mah, rendered what, seems always to be used interrogatively, yet the Chaldee particle man, here rendered what, is used otherwise, as is manifest from Dan. iv. 17.*

5 But ⁱthe eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews, that they could not cause them to cease, till the matter came to Darius: and then they returned ^janswer by letter concerning this matter.

They could not cause them to cease; because God overruled their hearts and hands, that they did not hinder them by force, as they could have done.

6 ¶ The copy of the letter that Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, ^kand his companions the Apharsachites, which were on this side the river, sent unto Darius the king:

The Apharsachites; a people so called, sent hither as a colony. As for the other people, mentioned chap. iv. 9, they seem to have had a greater power with Rehum and Shimshai than with these new officers, who made choice of other companions. Which were on this side the river; whereby they are distinguished from those of their brethren, who yet continued in their native country beyond the river, and were not transplanted hither.

7 They sent a letter unto him, † where- in was written thus; Unto Darius the king, all peace.

8 Be it known unto the king, that we went into the province of Judea, to the house of the great God, which is builded with † great stones, and timber is laid in the walls, and this work goeth fast on, and prospereth in their hands.

1 Then asked we those elders, and said unto them thus, 'Who commanded you to build this house, and to make up these walls ?

10 We asked their names also, to certify thee, that we might write the names of the men that were the chief of them.

11 And thus they returned us answer, saying, We are the servants of the God of heaven and earth, and build the house that was builded these many years ago, which a great king of Israel builded and set up.

12 But " after that our fathers had provoked the God of heaven unto wrath, he gave them into the hand of ° Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house, and carried the people away into Babylon.

13 But in the first year of ^p Cyrus the king of Babylon the same king Cyrus made a decree to build this house of God.

14 And ^a the vessels also of gold and silver of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took out of the temple that was in Jerusalem, and brought them into the temple of Babylon, those did Cyrus the king take out of the temple of Babylon, and they were delivered unto one, whose name was Sheshbazzar, whom he had made || governor ;

15 And said unto him, Take these vessels, go, carry them into the temple that is in Jerusalem, and let the house of God be builded in his place.

16 Then came the same Sheshbazzar, and ^a laid the foundation of the house of God which is in Jerusalem : and since that time even until now hath it been in building, and ^t yet it is not finished.

Even until now ; allowing for some interruptions.

17 Now therefore, if it seem good to the king, " let there be search made in the king's treasure house, which is there at Babylon, whether it be so, that a decree was made of Cyrus the king to build this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send his pleasure to us concerning this matter.

CHAP. VI.

Darius answereth the former letter, 1-7 ; and maketh a new decree, 8-12. By the help of the adversaries, and the directions of the prophets, the temple is finished, 13-15. The feasts of the dedication, 16-18, and of the passover, are kept, 19-22.

THEN Darius the king made a decree, and search was made in the house of the † rolls, where the treasures were † laid up in Babylon.

*Darius made a decree ; either, 1. To search the rolls. Or rather, 2. To permit and promote the building of the temple. And so the following words may be rendered, after search was made, &c., the Hebrew particle vau being oft so used, as hath been noted before. In Babylon ; either, 1. In the kingdom or empire of Babylon, which he now possessed ; or rather, 2. In the city of Babylon, where* search was first made, supposing that this edict, which was made presently after Cyrus had taken Babylon, was kept there ; but not finding it there, they searched in Achmetha, and found it there.

2 And there was found at || Achmetha, in the palace that is in the province of the Medes, a roll, and therein was a record thus written :

Here the king's answer may seem to begin, and this following account he sends to them, and after that lays down his commands. Achmetha ; the royal city of the Medes and Persians.

3 In the first year of Cyrus the king the same Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid ; the height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits ;

He did not command them to make it so large, for he left the ordering of the proportions of the building to their skill and choice ; but he restrained them that they should make it no larger, lest they should hereafter make use of it to other purposes against himself ; but those proportions differ much from those of Solomon's temple, which was but thirty cubits high, only the porch was one hundred and twenty cubits high, and but twenty cubits in breadth. Either therefore Solomon's cubits were sacred cubits, which were larger than the other, and these were but common cubits ; or the sixty cubits of height are meant only of the porch, which he would not have to be so high and magnificent as that of Solomon's was, lest they should be puffed up with it, and by degrees arrive at their former height and insolence. And the word rendered breadth, may be, and is by some, rendered more generally, the extension, or amplitude, or the length of it ; it being improbable that the king should give orders about the breadth, and none about the length of it.

4 ^b With three rows of great stones, and a row of new timber : and let the expences be given out of the king's house :

With three rows of great stones, and a row of new timber ; as Solomon's temple was built, 1 Kings vi. 36 ; whereof Darius was informed by some of the Jews, who also desired that it might be done in this manner.

5 And also let ^c the golden and silver vessels of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took forth out of the temple which is at Jerusalem, and brought unto Babylon, be restored, and † brought again unto the temple which is at Jerusalem, every one to his place, and place them in the house of God.

12 And the God that hath caused his ^h name to dwell there destroy all kings and people, that shall put to their hand to alter and to destroy this house of God which is at Jerusalem. I Darius have made a decree ; let it be done with speed.

13 ¶ Then Tatnai, governor on this side the river, Shethar-boznai, and their companions, according to that which Darius the king had sent, so they did speedily.

14 ⁱ And the elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet and Zechariah the son of Iddo. And they builded, and finished it, according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the † commandment of ^k Cyrus, and ^l Darius, and ^m Artaxerxes king of Persia.

They prospered through the prophesying of Haggai : this is a reasonable intimation that this great and unexpected success was not to be ascribed to chance, nor to the kindness or good humour of Darius ; but unto God only, who by his prophets had required and encouraged them to proceed in the work, and by his mighty power disposed Darius's heart to such kind and noble purposes and actions. Artaxerxes ; who is thought to be either, 1. Xerxes, Darius's son and successor, who is called also Artaxerxes, and Ahasuerus, who is here joined with his father Darius, possibly because he favoured the Jews, and promoted their cause with his father, and saw to the execution of his father's decree, and was his father's viceroy, if not made co-emperor with his father in his lifetime, which was not unusual. Or, 2. Artaxerxes Longimanus, the son of Xerxes, who was best known by the name of Artaxerxes ; who is here joined with Cyrus and Darius, because though the temple was finished, as to the substance of the work, in Darius's reign, ver. 15, yet it was afterwards more fully completed and adorned by Artaxerxes, as is evident from chap. vii. 20, 27, by whom Nehemiah was sent to Jerusalem with a large commission and full power to take care about the building of the city, and all other things concerning the Jewish nation and religion.

15 And this house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king.

16 ¶ And the children of Israel, the priests, and the Levites, and the rest of † the children of the captivity, kept ⁿ the dedication of this house of God with joy, 17 And ^o offered at the dedication of this house of God an hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs ; and for a sin offering for all Israel, twelve he goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel.

18 And they set the priests in their ^p divisions, and the Levites in their ^q courses, for the service of God, which is at Jerusalem ; † ^r as it is written in the book of Moses.

19 And the children of the captivity kept the passover ^s upon the fourteenth day of the first month.

20 For the priests and the Levites were ^t purified together, all of them were pure, and ^u killed the passover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the priests, and for themselves.

21 And the children of Israel, which were come again out of captivity, and all such as had separated themselves unto them from the ^v filthiness of the heathen of the land, to seek the Lord God of Israel, did eat,

From the filthiness of the heathen, i. e. such as had forsaken that filthy and idolatrous religion of the heathens, and were proselyted to the Jewish religion ; for such were allowed to eat the passover, Exod. xii. 48 ; Numb. ix. 14.

22 And kept the ^w feast of unleavened bread seven days with joy : for the Lord had made them joyful, and ^x turned the heart ^y of the king of Assyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God of Israel.

The heart of the king of Assyria, i. e. of the king of Persia, which was now king of Assyria also, or emperor of that vast and famous Assyrian empire ; which was first subdued by the king of Babylon, who therefore is some where called the Assyrian ; and for the same reason the Persian monarch is here so called emphatically, to note the great power and goodness of God in turning the hearts of these great monarchs, whose predecessors had been the chief persecutors and oppressors of God's people.

10 For Ezra had prepared his heart to ^kseek the law of the LORD, and to do it, and to ^lteach in Israel statutes and judgments.

Ezra had prepared his heart, or, directed, &c., i. e. he had set his mind and affections upon it, and made it his chief design and business. To seek the law, i. e. to search and find out the true sense and meaning of it, and thence to learn what sins or errors were to be reformed, and what duties were to be performed. And to teach in Israel. The order of things in this verse is very observable ; first he endeavours to understand God's law and word, and that not for curiosity or ostentation, but in order to practice ; next he conscientiously practiseth what he did understand, which made his doctrine much more effectual ; and then he earnestly desires and labours to instruct and edify others, that they also might know and do it.

11 ¶ Now this is the copy of the letter that the king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the LORD, and of his statutes to Israel.

A scribe of the words of the commandments, the phrase seems emphatical, noting that he explained both the words and the things ; for the Jews in the land of their captivity had in a great measure lost both their language, and the knowledge of God's commands, and therefore Ezra and his companions instruct them in both ; of which see more on Neh. viii. 8.

3 Of the sons of Shechaniah, of the sons of ^cPharosh; Zechariah: and with him were reckoned by genealogy of the males an hundred and fifty.

c ch. 2. 3.

Of the sons of Pharosh, i. e. one of the sons of Pharosh; whereby he is differenced from the other Shechaniah, ver. 5. By genealogy of the males: though the males only be expressed here, and in the succeeding verses, yet it is more than probable they carried the women along with them, as they did carry little ones. as it is expressed here, ver. 21.

4 Of the sons of Pahath-moab; Elihoenai the son of Zerachiah, and with him two hundred males.

5 Of the sons of Shechaniah; the son of Jahaziel, and with him three hundred males.

The son of Jahaziel; either his only son, or the most eminent of his sons, and therefore so called here.

6 Of the sons also of Adin; Ebed the son of Jonathan, and with him fifty males.

7 And of the sons of Elam; Jeshaiah the son of Athaliah, and with him seventy males.

8 And of the sons of Shephatiah; Zebadiah the son of Michael, and with him fourscore males.

9 Of the sons of Joab; Obadiah the son of Jehiel, and with him two hundred and eighteen males.

10 And of the sons of Shelomith; the son of Josiphiah, and with him an hundred and three-score males.

11 And of the sons of Bebai; Zechariah the son of Bebai, and with him twenty and eight males.

12 And of the sons of Azgad; Johanan ¶ the son of Hakkatan, and with him an hundred and ten males.

¶ Or, the 13 And of the last sons of Adonikam, whose names are these, Eliphelet, Jeiel, and Shemaiah, and with them threescore males.

14 Of the sons also of Bigvai; Uthai, and ¶ Zabbud, and with them seventy males.

The river that runneth to Ahava; or, the river of Ahava, as it is called, ver. 21, 31. By comparing of these places, it seems that Ahava was the name both of the river, and of the town or place by which it ran. Either this was that river which other writers call Adiabene, which runs to Assyria, which thence is called Adiabene; or some other river running into Euphrates. None of the sons of Levi, to wit, who were simple Levites, and not priests. And therefore the Levites, mentioned chap. vii. 7, by anticipation, were not yet come to him.

16 Then sent I for Eliezer, for Ariel, for She-maiah, and for Elnathan, and for Jarib, and for Elnathan, and for Nathan, and for Zechariah, and for Meshullam, chief men; also for Joiarib, and for Elnathan, men of understanding.

Then sent I for Eliezer to come to me, and go along with me to Jerusalem. Men of understanding; who seem to have had more knowledge than pious zeal for God and his house and solemn worship, which was confined to Jerusalem.

17 And I sent them with commandment unto Iddo the chief at the place Casiphia, and † I told them what they should say unto Iddo, and to his brethren the Nethinims, at the place Casiphia, that they should bring unto us ministers for the house of our God.

I sent them with commandment; which he might do, partly by virtue of that authority which he had over them by his priesthood; and partly by that authority which he either had received or could easily procure from the king to that purpose. Iddo the chief: the head of the rest, either by ecclesiastical order or government, which the Persian kings allowed to the Jews; or by some grant or commission from the king. At the place Casiphia; not a place near the Caspian Lake, as some guess from the likeness of the names; for that was at too great a distance for his present purpose; but some other place not far from Ahava, where he knew that there was a college or considerable company of Levites together.

18 And by the good hand of our God upon us they ^ebrought us a man of understanding, of the sons of Mahli, the son of Levi, the son of Israel; and Sherebiah, with his sons and his brethren, eighteen;

19 And Hashabiah, and with him Jeshaiah of the sons of Merari, his brethren and their sons, twenty;

f See ch. 2. 43.

20 Also of the Nethinims, whom David and the princes had appointed for the service of the Levites, two hundred and twenty Nethinims: all of them were expressed by name.

The Gibeonites, who were devoted to this service by Joshua and the princes of his time, Josh. ix. 21, and are said to be appointed by David and his princes, because they were confirmed by them in their former office, and more particularly applied to the several services of the temple; though this be not distinctly related in 1 Chron. xxiv., xxv., xxvi., because his business there was to give an account only of the new constitutions and alterations made by David in those matters.

22 For I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king, saying, The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him.

25 And weighed unto them silver, and the gold, and the vessels, even the offering of the house of our God, which the king, and his counsellors, and his lords, and all Israel there present, had offered:

26 I even weighed unto their hand six hundred and fifty talents of silver, and silver vessels an hundred talents, and of gold an hundred talents;

+ Heb. yafnaw, or, shining brass.

+ Heb. desirable.

27 Also twenty basons of gold, of a thousand drams; and two vessels of fine copper, † precious as gold.

Heb. desirable as gold; not that it was of equal price and worth with it, but for its incomparable excellency in its kind, and for its great rarity, for which cause there were only two vessels of that sort.

r Lev. 21. 6, 7. & Deut. 33. 8.

s Lev. 22. 2, 3. Num. 4. 4, 15, 19, 20.

28 And I said unto them, Ye are holy unto the LORD; the vessels are holy also; and the silver and the gold are a freewill offering unto the LORD God of your fathers.

29 Watch ye, and keep them, until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, at Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of the LORD.

30 So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, to bring them to Jerusalem unto the house of our God.

31 ¶ Then we departed from the river of Ahava on the twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem: and the hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way.

To wit, in the direct way; whereby it may be conjectured, that God directed them to fetch a little compass, and to go a more uncouth and unsuspected way, as they had begged of God, ver. 21.

32 And we came to Jerusalem, and abode there three days.

33 ¶ Now on the fourth day was the silver and the gold and the vessels weighed in the house of our God by the hand of Meremoth the son of Uriah the priest; and with him was Eleazar the son of Phinehas; and with them was Jozabab the son of Jeshua, and Noadiah the son of Binnui, Levites;

34 By number and by weight of every one: and all the weight was written at that time.

35 Also the children of those that had been carried away, which were come out of the captivity, offered burnt offerings unto the God of Israel, twelve bullocks for all Israel, ninety and six rams, seventy and seven lambs, twelve he goats for a sin offering: all this was a burnt offering unto the LORD.

Which were come out of the captivity, to wit, these new comers, whom God had safely conducted hither.

36 ¶ And they delivered the king's commissions unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors on this side the river: and they furthered the people, and the house of God.

In the adorning and furnishing of it with these vessels and other conveniences; and in promoting God's worship and service therein.

CHAP. IX.

Ezra and others, hearing of the unlawful marriage of the people with strangers, mourn for it, 1—4. He prayeth unto God, and confesseth their sins, and particularly this, 5—15.

NOW when these things were done, the princes came to me, saying, The people of Israel, and the priests, and the Levites, have not separated themselves from the people of the lands, doing according to their abominations, even of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and the Amorites.

The princes; who feared God, and understood that Ezra was come with large commission from the king, and with this design, to reform all disorders, whereof this was not the least. From the people of the lands, i. e. from the heathen nations round about them, which God had expressly commanded them to do, Deut. vii. 2, 3. Doing according to their abominations, to wit, either, 1. Marrying promiscuously whomsoever they liked, as the heathens used to do; or, 2. Imitating them in their idolatrous or other wicked practices, into which they were drawn by their heathenish affinities; although they are not charged with any other crime besides their marriage in the following account of it.

2 For they have ^d taken of their daughters for themselves, and for their sons: so that the ^e holy seed have mingled themselves with the people of those lands: yea, the hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass.

This they had done, either, 1. In the land of their captivity, into which these people were carried as well as others, as appears from Jer. xxv. 9, &c. Or rather, 2. Since their return, as may be gathered from ver. 8, 9, 10, 14. The princes and rulers; who should have restrained the people from this sin by their authority and example; and, by doing otherwise, made the sin more general, and involved themselves and the nation in the guilt of it.

3 And when I heard this thing, ^g I rent my garment and my mantle, and plucked off the hair of my head and of my beard, ^h and sat down ⁱ astonished.

My garment and my mantle; both my inner and my upper garment. Plucked off the hair of my head, and of my beard, in testimony of my great grief and indignation; which was usual among all those eastern and ancient people, wherein he did not transgress that law, Lev. xix. 27; Deut. xiv. 1, because he did not shave off all the hair, but only plucked off some hairs. Sat down astonished; partly for grief and shame at the sin; and partly for fear of some great and dreadful judgment which he expected and feared for it.

4 Then were assembled unto me every one that ⁱ trembled at the words of the God of Israel, because of the transgression of those that had been carried away; and I sat astonished until the ^k evening sacrifice.

Then were assembled unto me; to join with me both in lamenting the sin, and in endeavouring the redress of it. Every one that trembled at the words of the God of Israel, i. e. who stood in awe of God, and of his word, and durst not violate his commands; or who feared his threatenings against those that did so, and trembled for fear of God's judgments upon them, and upon the whole land for their sakes, as the following words imply. Compare Isa. lxvi. 2, 5. Those that had been carried away, to wit, into captivity, and were safely returned from it, and yet were not reformed either by their former affliction, or by their latter deliverance. Until the evening sacrifice, when the people used to assemble together. See Psal. cxli. 2; Acts iii. 1.

5 ¶ And at the evening sacrifice I arose up from my ^l heaving; and having rent my garment and my mantle, I fell upon my knees, and ^m spread out my hands unto the LORD my God,

From my heaviness, i. e. from that mournful posture, ver. 4, and put myself into the posture of a petitioner. Or, by reason of my heaviness, or affliction. Having mourned for the sin, I considered that was not sufficient, and that God expected the confession and amendment of it, and therefore I fell to prayer.

6 And said, O my God, I am ⁿ ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for ^o our iniquities are increased over our head, and our ^p trespass is grown up unto the heavens.

He includes himself in the number of the transgressors, not only by a rhetorical figure called communication, but partly because he himself was guilty of many sins; and partly because the princes and priests, and so many of the people, having done this, the guilt was now become national.

Increased over our head; like deep waters, in which we are as it were drowned, and ready to perish. Compare Psal. xxxviii. 4.

7 Since the days of our fathers ^q have we been in a great trespass unto this day; and for our iniquities ^r have we, our kings, and our priests, been delivered into the hand of the kings of the lands, to the sword, to captivity, and to a spoil, and to ^s confusion of face, as it is this day.

We have been in a great trespass unto this day; we are not purged from the guilt and filth of our fathers' sins, but we are still feeling the sad effects of their sins in the continuing captivity of a great number of our brethren; and we are still repeating the same sins.

8 And now for a ^t little space grace hath been ^u shewed from the LORD our God, to leave us a remnant to escape, and to give us ^v a nail in his holy place, that our God may ^w lighten our eyes, and give us a little reviving in our bondage.

Now for a little space: it is but a little while since God hath delivered and restored us, and yet we are already returned to our former sin and folly. Or thus, We have enjoyed this favour but a little while, and now we are sinning it away, and shortening our own happiness. To leave us a remnant to escape; that by his favour many of us should escape out of captivity; whom he calls but a remnant, because the far greatest part of the Israelitish nation were yet in captivity. To give us a nail, i. e. either, 1. A just and merciful prince of our own nation and religion; such being compared to nails or pins, as Isa. xxii. 23. Or rather, 2. Some kind of settlement; whereas before we were tossed and removed from place to place as our masters pleased. It is a metaphor from tents, which are fastened by cords and nails, or pins. In his holy place, i. e. in this holy land, as the land of Judah is called, Zech. ii. 12. Or, in Jerusalem, which is called the holy city, Neh. xi. 1, 18; Dan. ix. 24; which is peculiarly mentioned, because of the temple, which was the nail which fastened their tents, and gave them some ground of hopes to continue in their land. That our God may lighten our eyes, i. e. that he might revive and comfort our hearts. For as darkness is oft put for a state of sorrow and affliction, so light is put for joy and comfort. Give us a little reviving in our bondage; for we are not quite delivered, but still wear our fetters upon us, being even here in subjection to our former lords.

9 For we ^x were bondmen; yet our God hath not forsaken us in our bondage, but ^y hath extended mercy unto us in the sight of the kings of Persia, to give us a reviving, to set up the house of our God, and ^z to repair the desolations thereof, and to give us ^a a wall in Judah and in Jerusalem.

We were bondmen, i. e. in greater bondage than that in which we now are. Hath extended mercy unto us in the sight of the kings of Persia, i. e. hath given us to find favour in their eyes. To give us a reviving; to recover us from the grave of dreadful calamities, in which we lay like dead men and dry bones, Ezek. xxxvii. 1, &c. To repair the desolations thereof, to wit, of the temple; either, 1. To build the house, where there was only a heap of the ruins of the old temple. Or rather, 2. To frequent and celebrate the worship of God in that place, which hath long lain like a desolate and neglected place. For the building of the house was mentioned in the next foregoing words. To give us a wall, Heb. a hedge, or a fence; either, 1. The wall built about Jerusalem. But it is probable that was not yet built, as we shall see by the following history. Besides, this fence is intimated to be as much a fence to the rest of Judah as to Jerusalem. Or, 2. The favour and protection of the kings of Persia, whose edicts on their behalf were under God their security against all those enemies wherewith they were encompassed. Or, 3. The powerful and gracious providence of God, which had brought them together, and planted them

What apology can we make for ourselves, after thou hast conferred such great and high favours upon us, and we have so grossly abused them?

† Heb. by the hand of thy servants.

11 Which thou hast commanded † by thy servants the prophets, saying, The land, unto which ye go to possess it, is an unclean land with the filthiness of the people of the lands, with their abominations, which have filled it † from one end to another with their uncleanness.

An unclean land with the filthiness of the people: this notes the cause or matter of this uncleanness. The land was not unclean in itself, but only polluted by the filthiness of its inhabitants. Of the lands; or, of these lands, which are round about it. This land is as corrupt as any of the rest of the heathen nations.

† Heb. from mouth to mouth: as 2 Kin. 21. 16.

12 Now therefore * give not your daughters unto their sons, neither take their daughters unto your sons, nor seek their peace or their wealth for ever: that ye may be strong, and eat the good of the land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children for ever.

Nor seek their peace; but root them out, as I have commanded you to do; which also they have abundantly deserved, both of mine and of your hands. See Deut. vii. 2. That ye may be strong: although you may fancy that this way of making leagues and marriages with them is the only way to establish and settle you, yet I assure you it will weaken and ruin you, and the contrary course will make you stronger.

13 And after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great trespass, seeing that thou our God † hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve, and hast given us such deliverance as this;

After all our sore sufferings for our sins, and after all thy favour showed to us in the mitigation of thy judgments. Such deliverance as this; so full, so sudden, and unexpected, and amazing, not only to our enemies, but also to ourselves.

d Ps. 103. 16. † Heb. hast withheld beneath our iniquities.

14 Should we * again break thy commandments, and † join in affinity with the people of these abominations? wouldest not thou be † angry with us till thou hadst consumed us, so that there should be no remnant nor escaping?

Should we again break thy commandments? was this a fit and just requital of all thy kindnesses? or was this thy end and design in these actions? or wilt thou take this well from our hands? There should be no remnant nor escaping: can we reasonably expect any thing from thee less than utter ruin?

e John 5. 14. 2 Pet. 2. 20, 21. f ver. 2. Neh. 13. 29, 27. g Deut. 9. 8.

15 O LORD God of Israel, thou art righteous: for we remain yet escaped, as it is this day: behold, we are † before thee † in our trespasses: for we cannot stand before thee because of this.

Thou art righteous; a just and holy God, who dost hate, and wilt infallibly punish, sin and sinners. Or, thou art merciful, as appears from hence, that notwithstanding all our sins, thou hast not utterly destroyed us, but left a remnant of us. The Hebrew word here rendered righteous, is oft used for merciful; as is well known to all the learned. For we remain yet escaped; or, though we remain, &c., i. e. though thou hast yet spared us in part, yet thou art righteous, and therefore wilt certainly punish and destroy us according to our deserts, if we do not repent us, and reform this great wickedness. We are before thee in our trespasses; we are here in thy presence, and so are all our sins; we are arraigning ourselves before thy tribunal, acknowledging ourselves to be vile offenders, and thee to be just, if thou destroy us. We cannot stand before thee, to wit, in judgment, as that word is oft used, as Psal. cxxx. 3; compare Psal. i. 5; we must needs fall and perish at thy presence, as the phrase is, Psal. ix. 3. Because of this; because of this our great guilt, and the aggravations of it.

CHAP. X.

Shechaniah encourageth Ezra to reform the strange marriages, 1—4. All Israel swear to do accordingly, 5. Ezra, mourning, assembleth the people, 6—8. The people at the exhortation of Ezra repent, and promise amendment, 9—14. Their care to perform it, 15—17. The names of them that married strange wives, 18—44.

NOW * when Ezra had prayed, and when he had confessed, weeping and casting himself down ^b before the house of God, there assembled unto him out of Israel a very great congregation of men and women and children: for the people † wept very sore.

a 1 Esdras 8. 91, &c. Dan. 9. 20. b 2 Chron. 20. 9.

Awakened by the words and example of this holy priest and great potentate. So inexpressible is the good which is done by the good example, and the evil which is done by the bad example, of a great person, or of a minister. The fame of his great passion of grief, and of his many and public expressions thereof in the court before the temple, being in an instant dispersed over all the city, brought a great company together. The people wept very sore, being greatly affected with Ezra's prayer, and with the common sin.

† Heb. wept a great weeping.

2 And Shechaniah the son of Jehiel, one of the sons of Elam, answered and said unto Ezra, We have † trespassed against our God, and have taken strange wives of the people of the land: yet now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing.

c Neh. 13. 27.

He saith we, either, 1. Because he was guilty in this matter. Or rather, 2. In the name of the people, and their several families, and his own amongst the rest. For this man's name is not in the following catalogue, but there we have his father, Jehiel, and his father's brethren, five other sons of his grandfather Elam, ver. 26. It was therefore an evidence of his great courage, and good conscience, that he durst so freely and fully discharge his duty, whereby he showed that he honoured God more than his nearest and dearest relations. There is hope concerning this thing, in case of our repentance and reformation. Therefore let us not sorrow like persons without hope, nor sit down in despair, but let us fall upon action, and amend our errors, and then trust to God's mercy.

3 Now therefore let us make † a covenant with our God † to put away all the wives, and such as are born of them, according to the counsel of my lord, and of those that † tremble at † the commandment of our God; and let it be done according to the law.

d 2 Chron. 34. 21. † Heb. to bring forth

To put away all the wives; which though it may seem harsh, yet is not unjust, if it be considered, 1. That marriages made between some prohibited persons; as suppose, between a father and his daughter, a brother and a sister, are not only unlawful, but void marriages, and ipso facto null, by the political laws of civil nations. And therefore these marriages with idolatrous and heathen women, being expressly and severely forbidden by God, might well be disannulled. And it was one of good Theodosius's laws, that those actions which were done against law, should be accounted not only unlawful, but null. 2. That there were many peculiar laws given to the Jews concerning the marrying and putting away of wives, as hath been observed before in their proper places, and therefore it is not strange if there be something more in this case than is now usual with us. 3. Supposing the matrimonial tie had continued, yet they might be excluded from cohabitation with them, as a just punishment upon them for the wilful breach of a known and positive law of God. And such as are born of them: this may seem harder than the former, but many things may be said. 1. Whatsoever evil befell either them or their children, they had all reason to accept it as the just and deserved fruit of their own sin. 2. That children may and sometimes do suffer, at least temporal evils, for their parents' sins, or upon occasion of them, is most evident, both by the Scripture instances, and by the laws and usages of nations in some cases. 3. This may seem to have been a necessary part of severity, partly, as a proper punishment of the parents' sin herein, and to deter others more effectually from the like practices; partly, to prevent the corruption of their other children by the conversation and society of this ungodly and idolatrous brood; and partly, lest such children, being continually present with them, and stealing into their affections, might at last prevail with them to take their ejected wives again. 4. These children were only cast out of the families and commonwealth of Israel, but were not utterly forsaken and ruined; but due care was probably taken by authority that they should have some provision made for them, and some care taken about their education in the Jewish religion, &c. According to the counsel of my lord; either, 1. As thou counsellest and desirest us to do. Or, 2. Let us do it in such manner as thou shalt think fit and agreeable to the law, as it follows; for it requires great caution, as being a matter of no small difficulty. And of those that tremble at the commandment of our God; and of other serious and religious persons who may with thee consider and regulate the business. Let it be done according to the law: this is meant, either, 1. Of the matter of the business, let that be done which the law requires; let them be put away. Or, 2. Of the manner of it, which must be according to the rules of God's law.

4 Arise; for this matter belongeth unto thee: we also will be with thee: ^gbe of good courage, and do it.

This matter belongeth unto thee; because thou hast both skill to manage it, and authority both from God and from the Persian king to do it.

5 Then arose Ezra, and made the chief priests, the Levites, and all Israel, ^hto swear that they should do according to this word. And they swear.

6 ¶ ⁱThen Ezra rose up from before the house of God, and went into the chamber of Johanan the son of Eliashib: and when he came thither, he ^kdid eat no bread, nor drink water: for he mourned because of the transgression of them that had been carried away.

Went into the chamber, that he with the princes and elders, as it follows, ver. 8, might consult about the execution of their resolution.

7 And they made proclamation throughout Judah and Jerusalem unto all the children of the captivity, that they should gather themselves together unto Jerusalem;

8 And that whosoever would not come within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be ^lforfeited, and himself separated from the congregation of those that had been carried away.

Either by banishment; or rather, by excommunication from the church, and people, and house, and public worship of God.

9 ¶ Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin gathered themselves together unto Jerusalem within three days. It was the ninth month, and the twentieth day of the month; and ¹all the people sat in the street of the house of God, trembling because of this matter, and for [†]the great rain.

All the men of Judah and Benjamin; not only of these two tribes, as appears from the following catalogue, where there are priests and Levites; but all the Israelites, ver. 25, who are thus described, partly because the greatest part of them were of these tribes, though others were mixed with them; and partly because they all now dwell in that land which formerly was appropriated to those tribes. In the street of the house of God; in that street of the city which was next to the temple, and within the view of it, that so they might be as in God's presence, whereby they might be awed to a more faithful and vigorous prosecution of their work. And this place they might choose rather than the court of the people, because they thought it might be polluted by the delinquents, who were all to come thither. For the great rain, which they took for a token of God's displeasure against them.

10 And Ezra the priest stood up, and said unto them, Ye have transgressed, and [†]have taken strange wives, to increase the trespass of Israel.

11 Now therefore ^mmake confession unto the LORD God of your fathers, and do his pleasure: and ⁿseparate yourselves from the people of the land, and from the strange wives.

Do his pleasure; you have sinfully pleased yourselves, now please God by your obedience to his command.

12 Then all the congregation answered and said with a loud voice, As thou hast said, so must we do.

13 But the people are many, and it is a time of much rain, and we are not able to stand without, neither is this a work of one day or two: for ^{||}we are many that have transgressed in this thing.

14 Let now our rulers of all the congregation stand, and let all them which have taken strange wives in our cities come at appointed times, and with them the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until ^othe fierce wrath of our God ^{||}for this matter be turned from us.

Let our rulers of all the congregation stand; let the great council, called the Sanhedrim, be settled, and meet to judge and determine of all particular causes. Them which have taken strange wives, to wit, of those heathen nations, such as were not proselyted to the Jewish religion before their marriage, or since revolted from it. The elders of every city, and the judges thereof; who are best able to inform the great council of the quality of the persons, and of all matters of fact and circumstances. Until the fierce wrath of our God be turned from us, i. e. until the thing be done, and God's wrath thereby removed.

15 ¶ Only Jonathan the son of Asahel and Jahaziah the son of Tikvah [†]were employed about this matter: and Meshullam and Shabbethai the Levite helped them.

To wit, to take due care that the business should be executed in the manner proposed, that the officers and delinquents of every city should come successively in convenient time and order, as these should appoint, and to take and keep an exact account of the whole transaction, and of the names of the cities and persons whose causes were de-

16 And the children of the captivity did so. And Ezra the priest, with certain chief of the fathers, after the house of their fathers, and all of them by their names, were separated, and sat down in the first day of the tenth month to examine the matter.

Were separated, i. e. sequestered themselves from all other business, and gave themselves wholly to this.

17 And they made an end with all the men that had taken strange wives by the first day of the first month.

456. 18 ¶ And among the sons of the priests there were found that had taken strange wives: namely, of the sons of Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren; Maaseiah, and Eliezer, and Jarib, and Gedaliah.

19 And they ^p gave their hands that they would put away their wives; and being ^q guilty, they offered a ram of the flock for their trespass.

They gave their hand, i. e. they covenanted or swore by giving their hand; which was the usual gesture in those cases; of which see Lev. vi. 2; Ezek. xvii. 18.

23 Also of the Levites; Jozabad, and Shimei, and Kelaiah, (the same is Kelita,) Pethahiah, Judah, and Eliezer.

24 Of the singers also; Eliashib: and of the porters; Shallum, and Telem, and Uri.

25 Moreover of Israel: of the sons of Parosh; Ramiah, and Jeziah, and Malchiah, and Miamin, and Eleazar, and Malchijah, and Benaiah.

28 Of the sons also of Bebai; Jehohanan, Hananiah, Zabbai, and Athlai.

29 And of the sons of Bani; Meshullam, Maluch, and Adaiah, Jashub, and Sheal, and Ramoth.

30 And of the sons of Pahath-moab; Adna, and Chelal, Benaiah, Maaseiah, Mattaniah, Bezaleel, and Binnui, and Manasseh.

31 And of the sons of Harim; Eliezer, Ishijah, Malchiah, Shemaiah, Shimeon, 35 Benaiah, Bedeiah, Chelluh,

36 Vaniah, Meremoth, Eliashib,

37 Mattaniah, Mattenai, and Jaasau,

40 ¶ Machnadebai, Shashai, Sharai,

41 Azareel, and Shelemiah, Shemariah,

42 Shallum, Amariah, and Joseph.

43 Of the sons of Nebo; Jeiel, Mattithiah, Zabad, Zebina, Jadau, and Joel, Benaiah.

44 All these had taken strange wives: and some of them had wives by whom they had children.

Whereby he implies that most of their wives were barren; which came to pass by God's special providence, partly to manifest his displeasure against such matches, and partly that the practice of this great and necessary duty might not be encumbered with too many difficulties.

THE BOOK OF NEHEMIAH.

THIS book seems not to have been written by Ezra, because it is written in a quite differing and more plain and easy style, and without that mixture of Chaldee or Syriac words which is in the book of Ezra; but by Nehemiah, chap. i. 1, who writ an account of his own transactions, as Ezra did of his. But whether this be the same Nehemiah who came up with Zerubbabel, Ezra ii. 2; Neh. vii. 7, may be questioned, the same name being oft given to divers persons. And for the name of Tyrshatha, which is used both Ezra ii. 63, and Neh. vii. 65, 70, that seems to be the title of his office, and so belongs to any governor, whether it was Zerubbabel, or Nehemiah, or any other.

CHAP. I.

Nehemiah, understanding by Hanani the affliction of the Jews, and the misery of Jerusalem, 1—3, mourneth, fasteth, and prayeth, 4. His prayer for them, 5—10; and for success in his petition to the king, 11.

THE words of *Nehemiah the son of ^{P. C.} Hachaliah. And it came to pass in the ^{cir. 446.} month Chisleu, in the twentieth year, as ^{ch. 10. 1.} I was in Shushan the palace,
The words of Nehemiah, or rather, the acts, or deeds, as the word oft signifies; of which he here treats. In the month Chisleu; which is the ninth month, containing part of November and part of December. In the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, chap. ii. 1. In Shushan; the chief and royal city of Persia, Esth. iii. 15.

2 That Hanani, one of my brethren, came, he and certain men of Judah; and I asked them concerning the Jews that had escaped, which were left of the captivity, and concerning Jerusalem.

One of my brethren; of my family, or tribe, or nation. That had escaped out of the slavery which they endured in strange lands. Which were left of the captivity; the remnant of those numerous captives.

3 And they said unto me, The remnant that are left of the captivity there in the province are in great affliction and reproach: ^b the wall of Jerusalem also ^c is broken down, and the gates thereof are burned with fire.

In the province, i. e. in Judea, which was now made a province under the Persian monarchs: see the notes on Ezra v. 8. In great affliction and reproach; despised and distressed by the neighbouring nations. The wall is broken down, and the gates thereof are burned, i. e. the walls and gates continue in the same woeful plight in which Nebuchadnezzar left them; the Jews not being yet in a condition to rebuild them, nor having commission from the kings of Persia to do so, but only to build the temple and their own private houses. And this made their enemies scorn them; who also would have ruined them, but for fear of offending the Persian king.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, when I heard these words, that I sat down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted, and prayed before the God of heaven,

5 And said, I beseech thee, ^d O LORD God of heaven, the great and terrible God, ^e that keepeth covenant and mercy for them that love him and observe his commandments:

6 Let thine ear now be attentive, and ^f thine eyes open, that thou mayest hear the prayer of thy servant, which I pray before thee now, day and night, for the children of Israel thy servants, and ^g confess the sins of the children of Israel, which we have sinned against thee: both I and my father's house have sinned.

7 ^h We have dealt very corruptly against thee, and have ⁱ not kept the commandments, nor the statutes, nor the judgments, which thou commandedst thy servant Moses.

We have dealt very corruptly, or we have wholly corrupted, to wit, ourselves, and our ways, and thy worship.

8 Remember, I beseech thee, the word that thou commandedst thy servant Moses, saying, ^k If ye transgress, I will scatter you abroad among the nations:

9 ^l But if ye turn unto me, and keep my commandments, and do them; ^m though there were of you cast out unto the uttermost part of the heaven, yet will I gather them from thence, and will bring them unto the place that I have chosen to set my name there.

10 ⁿ Now these are thy servants and thy people, whom thou hast redeemed by thy great power, and by thy strong hand.

11 O LORD, I beseech thee, ^o let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who ^p desire to fear thy name: and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day, and grant him mercy in the sight of this man. For I was the king's ^q cupbearer.

In the sight of this man, the king; who though a god by office, is but a man by nature, and therefore his heart is wholly at thy disposal. I was the king's cup-bearer; where-by I had opportunity to speak to him, and some favour and freedom with him; which encouraged me to make this prayer, and to hope for some success.

CHAP. II.

Artaxerxes, understanding the cause of Nehemiah's sadness, 1—5, sendeth him with letters to Jerusalem, 6—8. Nehemiah, to the grief of the enemies, cometh to Jerusalem, 9—11, and secretly by night vieweth the ruins of Jerusalem, 12—16. He encourageth the Jews to build, 17, 18. The enemies, deriding, charge them with rebellion against the king, 19. Nehemiah's answer, 20.

AND it came to pass in the month Nisan, in the twentieth year of ^a Artaxerxes the king, that wine was before him: and ^b I took up the wine, and gave it unto the king. Now I had not been beforetime sad in his presence.

In the month Nisan; which was four months after he had heard those sad tidings. The reason of this long silence and delay might be manifold; either because he thought fit that some time should be spent by himself, and possibly others of his brethren, in seeking God by solemn prayer and fasting, for God's blessing and the good success of this great affair; or because he could not take so long and dangerous a journey in the depth of winter; or because his turn of attending upon the king did not come to him till that time; or because till then he wanted a fit opportunity to move it to the king, by reason of the king's indisposition, or occasions, or multitude of attendants, among whom there probably were divers enemies to the Jews, who, he feared, might hinder his design and desire. In the twentieth year of Artaxerxes; Artaxerxes Longimanus, the son of the great Xerxes, who reigned both with his father, and after his death alone: whence the years of his reign are computed two ways, one from the death of Xerxes, and the other from his first entrance upon the administration of the kingdom, which was committed to him in the fifth year of Xerxes, when he began the Grecian war, and left his son king or viceroy in his stead, as the manner of the Persians was. It may seem doubtful, and is not much material, which way of computation is here used. Others understand this of Artaxerxes Mnemon.

2 Wherefore the king said unto me, Why is thy countenance sad, seeing thou art not sick? this is nothing else but ^c sorrow of heart. Then I was very sore afraid,

Why is thy countenance sad? his fasting joined with inward grief had made a sensible change in his very countenance. I was very sore afraid; partly, being daunted by the majesty of the king, and the suddenness and sharpness of his question; partly, fearing lest there was arising some jealousy or ill opinion in the king concerning him; partly, because it was an unusual and ungrateful thing to come into the king of Persia's presence with any badges or tokens of sorrow, Esth. iv. 2; and principally, from his doubts or fears of disappointment, because his request was great and invidious, and odious to the most of the Persian courtiers, and might be represented as dangerous, and might seem improper for a time of feasting and jollity.

3 And said unto the king, ^d Let the king live for ever: why should not my countenance be sad, when ^e the city, the place of my fathers' sepulchres, lieth waste, and the gates thereof are consumed with fire?

Let the king live for ever: my sadness comes not from any discontent with my own condition, or any disaffection to the king, for whom my hearty prayers are that he may live for ever; but from another cause. The place of my fathers' sepulchres, which by all nations are esteemed sacred, and inviolable, and honourable. He saith not a word of the temple, or of religion, for he wisely considered that he spake before a heathen king and court, who cared for none of those things.

4 Then the king said unto me, For what dost thou make request? So I prayed to the God of heaven.

I prayed to the God of heaven, to direct my thoughts and words, and to incline the king's heart to grant my request.

5 And I said unto the king, If it please the king, and if thy servant have found favour in thy sight, that thou wouldest send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it.

If it please the king: my request, whatsoever it is, I humbly and wholly submit it to the king's good pleasure, being resolved to acquiesce in it. If thy servant have found favour in thy sight: I pretend no merit, but am a humble suppliant for thy grace and favour, whereof having received some tokens, I am thereby emboldened to make this further request.

6 And the king said unto me, (the † Heb. wife. † queen also sitting by him,) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? So it pleased the king to send me; and I set him 'a time.

The queen also sitting by him; which is here noted, partly as an unusual thing; for commonly the kings of Persia dined alone, and their queens seldom dined with them, as historians note; and peradventure because the queen expressed some kindness to him, and promoted his request with the king. When wilt thou return? this question showed the king's respect and affection to him, and that he was not willing to want his attendance longer than was necessary. I set him a time; either that twelve years mentioned chap. v. 14; xiii. 6, or rather a far shorter time; for which cause, among others, he built the walls with such despatch, even in fifty-two days, chap. vi. 15; and probably not very long after that returned to the king, by whom he was sent a second time with more ample commission, and for the king's service, and the government of that part of his dominions.

7 Moreover I said unto the king, If it please the king, let letters be given me to the governors beyond the river, that they may convey me over till I come into Judah;

That they may safely conduct me through their several territories.

8 And a letter unto Asaph the keeper of the king's forest, that he may give me timber to make beams for the gates of the palace which appertained to the house, and for the wall of the city, and for the house that I shall enter into. And the king granted me, according to the good hand of my God upon me.

The king's forest; the forest of Libanus, famous for pleasure, and for plenty of choice trees. Which appertained to the house, to wit, of the king's palace, which was adjoining to the house of God. Or, of the tower or fence belonging to the house of God, to wit, for the gates of the courts of the temple; for though the temple was built, the courts and other buildings belonging to the temple might yet be unfinished. The house that I shall enter into; wherewith I may build a house in which I may dwell whilst I am there, and which I may dispose of as I see fit.

9 ¶ Then I came to the governors beyond the river, and gave them the king's letters. Now the king had sent captains of the army and horsemen with me.

10 When Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, heard of it, it grieved them exceedingly that there was come a man to seek the welfare of the children of Israel.

Sanballat the Horonite; so called, either from his family, or from the place of his birth or rule, which is supposed to be Horonaim, an eminent city of Moab, Isa. xv. 5; Jer. xlviii. 3. Tobiah the servant; so called probably from his servile original or condition, from which he was advanced to his present power and dignity; which also may be mentioned as one reason why he now carried himself so insolently and perversely towards the Jews, it being usual for persons suddenly raised from a mean to a high estate so to demean themselves.

11 So I came to Jerusalem, and was there three days.

Resting myself after my long journey, and inquiring into the state of the city.

12 ¶ And I arose in the night, I and some few men with me; neither told I any man what my God had put in my heart to do at Jerusalem: neither was there any beast with me, save the beast that I rode upon.

I arose in the night; concealing both his intentions and actions as far and as long as he could, as knowing that the life of his business lay in secrecy and expedition. Neither was there any beast with me, to prevent noise, and the notice of what I did.

13 And I went out by night by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon well, and to the dung port, and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire.

I went out by night; the footmen which accompanied him directing and leading him in the way. His design was to go round about the city, to observe the compass and condition of the walls and gates, that he might make sufficient provisions for the work. By the gate of the valley; of which see chap. iii. 13. Before the dragon well; a fountain of water so called, either from some figure of a dragon or serpent which was by it; or from some living dragon which abode there when the city was desolate; for dragons delight to be in desolate places, and nigh to springs of water, as divers have observed. To the dung-port; through which they used to carry the dung out of the city.

14 Then I went on to the fountain, and to the king's pool: but there was no place for the beast that was under me to pass.

The gate of the fountain, i. e. which led to the fountain, to wit, of Siloah or Gihon. The king's pool; that which king Hezekiah had made; of which see 2 Chron. xxxii. 3, 30. There was no place for the beast to pass; the way being obstructed with heaps of rubbish.

15 Then went I up in the night by the brook, and viewed the wall, and turned back, and entered by the gate of the valley, and so returned.

By the brook of Kidron; of which see on 2 Sam. xv. 23. And so returned; having gone round about the city.

16 And the rulers knew not whither I went, or what I did; neither had I as yet told it to the Jews, nor to the priests, nor to the nobles, nor to the rulers, nor to the rest that did the work.

Or, were to do, or should do, i. e. whom he intended to employ in the work here following, of building the walls.

17 ¶ Then said I unto them, Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire: come, Geshem the Arabian ; either the king's lieutenant in Arabia, as Tobiah was among the Ammonites, and Sanballat among the Moabites ; or rather, an Arabian by his birth. And it seems probable that both he, and Sanballat, and Tobiah were chief men or governors, among the Samaritans, or in their army. See chap. iv. 1—3. Will ye rebel against the king ? do you design to fortify the city against the king.

20 Then answered I them, and said unto them, The God of heaven, he will prosper us ; therefore we his servants will arise and build : ^t but ye have no portion, nor right, nor memorial, in Jerusalem.

Ye have no portion nor right ; you have no authority over us, nor interest in our church, or state, or city, but are mere aliens from the commonwealth of Israel. THEN ^a Eliashib the high priest rose up with his brethren the priests, ^b and they builded the sheep gate ; they sanctified it, and set up the doors of it ; ^c even unto the tower of Meah they sanctified it, unto the tower of ^d Hananeel.

Eliashib the high priest ; grandchild of Joshua, the first high priest after their return from Babylon. Rose up ; began the work. They builded the sheep-gate ; which was next to the temple ; so called, either from the sheep-market, or the sheep-pool of Bethesda, John v. 2, where the sheep were washed, and then brought to the temple to be sacrificed. They sanctified it ; or, they prepared or repaired it ; for so the word sometimes signifies. But our translation seems best, both because that use of the word is most common, and because this is spoken only of this gate, which being built by the priests, and next to the temple, and with a special eye to the service of the temple, for which both men and things were most commonly brought in this way, and being also the first part of the building, might be in a peculiar manner sanctified by solemn prayer and sacrifice, whereby it was dedicated to God's service ; and this either as it was considered in itself, or with respect to the rest of the building, of which this was the beginning, and in a manner the first-fruits, and therefore in the sanctification of it the whole lump and building was sanctified. And seeing the whole city is oft called the holy city, it is not strange if the walls and gates of it be also holy, and said to be sanctified, and especially this gate. Compare Deut. xx. 5. The tower of Meah, or, of a hundred ; so called, either because it was a hundred cubits high, or so far distant from the sheep-gate.

Did not submit to it, would not further it, either through pride, or sloth and carelessness, or covetousness, or secret compliance with the enemies of the Jews. To the work of their Lord ; either, 1. Of Nehemiah, who was their lord and governor, and had given a general command for the carrying on of this work. Or, 2. Of God, whom they owned for their Lord, whose work this was, partly because it had proceeded thus far by God's singular providence and blessing ; and partly because it was done for the defence of the city, and people, and temple of God. And therefore they are branded to all posterity for the neglect of so great and pious a work.

6 Moreover ⁱ the old gate repaired Jehoiada the son of Paseah, and Meshullam the son of Besodeiah ; they laid the beams thereof, and set up the doors thereof, and the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

i ch. 12. 30

7 And next unto them repaired Melatiah the Gibeonite, and Jadon the Mero-nothite, the men of Gibeon, and of Mizpah, unto the ^k throne of the governor on this side the river.

k ch. 2. 8.

i. e. Unto the place where the governor of the country on this side the river Euphrates, for and under the Persian kings, sometimes had a palace or throne, to which all persons living in the adjacent parts were to resort for judgment.

8 Next unto him repaired Uzziel the son of Harhaiah, of the goldsmiths. Next unto him also repaired Hananiah the son of one of the apothecaries, and they ^{||} fortified Jerusalem unto the ^l broad wall.

It is not said they repaired, as was said of the rest, but they fortified it, either because this part of the wall was less demolished than the other, and therefore they needed not to repair it, but only to make it stronger by some additions ; or to note their extraordinary care and diligence, that they would not only repair it, and restore it to its former state, but make it stronger than ever it was ; which also might be fit to be done in that part of the city. Others render it they left, as this word commonly signifies ; and so the meaning is, They omitted the building of that part of the wall, because it remained standing ; this being that space of four hundred cubits which was pulled down by Joash king of Israel, and rebuilt by Uzziah, who made it so strong, that the Chaldeans could not pull it down without more trouble than they thought fit to employ about it. But this chapter gives us an account of what they did in the building, not of what they did not, but left as they found it.

9 And next unto them repaired Rephaiah the son of Hur, the ruler of the half part of Jerusalem.

As Rome was anciently divided into several quarters or regions, so was Jerusalem, and especially this was divided into two parts, whereof one was in the tribe of Benjamin, and nearest to the temple; the other in the tribe of Judah, and more remote from it; which accordingly had two several rulers, this man and the other, ver. 12, but both under the chief governor of the city.

10 And next unto them repaired Jedaiah the son of Harumaph, even over against his house. And next unto him repaired Hattush the son of Hashabniah.

Over against his house; that part of the wall which was next to him, which his own interest obliged him to do with care.

11 Malchijah the son of Harim, and Hashub the son of Pahath-moab, repaired the [†] other piece, [‡] and the tower of the furnaces.

12 And next unto him repaired Shallum the son of Haloheah, the ruler of the half part of Jerusalem, he and his daughters.

Of the half part of Jerusalem, i. e. of the other half, &c.: see on ver. 9. He and his daughters; who were either heiresses, or rich widows, and caused part to be done at their charges.

13 ⁿ The valley gate repaired Hanun, and the inhabitants of Zanoah; they built it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof, and a thousand cubits on the wall unto ^o the dung gate.

14 But the dung gate repaired Malchiah the son of Rechab, the ruler of part of Beth-haccerem; he built it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

Beth-haccerem; a town or territory, the government whereof was divided between two persons.

15 But ^p the gate of the fountain repaired Shallum the son of Col-hozeh, the ruler of part of Mizpah; he built it, and covered it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof, and the wall of the pool of ^q Siloah by the king's garden, and unto the stairs that go down from the city of David.

The wall of the pool of Siloah; that part of the wall which was directly against that pool.

16 After him repaired Nehemiah the son of Azbuk, the ruler of the half part of Beth-zur, unto the place over against the sepulchres of David, and to the ^r pool that was made, and unto the house of the mighty.

Over against the sepulchres of David, i. e. the place which David appointed for his own sepulchres, and the sepulchres of his successors the kings of Israel and Judah. The pool that was made, to wit, by Hezekiah, 2 Kings xx. 20; whereby it is distinguished from that pool which was natural. The house of the mighty; or, of the valiant; which possibly was formerly appointed for the receipt of those chief captains that should attend upon the king their courses, or of some other valiant commanders who should upon occasion resort to Jerusalem.

17 And after him repaired the Levites, Rehum the son of Bani. Next unto him repaired Hashabiah, the ruler of the half part of Keilah, in his part.

18 After him repaired their brethren, Bavai the son of Henadad, the ruler of the half part of Keilah.

19 And next to him repaired Ezer the son of Jeshua, the ruler of Mizpah, another piece over against the going up to the armoury at the ^s turning of the wall.

To the armoury; either to the house of the forest of Lebanon, which was their armoury from Solomon's days, Isa. xxiii. 8; or to some other place, which either before or since that time had been used as another and less armoury for common occasions. At the turning of the wall; or, at the corner; or, which is in the corner.

20 After him Baruch the son of ^t Zab-^u bai earnestly repaired the other piece, from the turning of the wall unto the door of the house of Eliashib the high priest.

Earnestly repaired; did his work with eminent diligence and fervency; which is here noted to his commendation. From the turning of the wall, or, from the corner, as ver. 19. Unto the door of the house; unto that part of the wall which was over against or next to this door.

21 After him repaired Meremoth the son of Urijah the son of Koz another piece, from the door of the house of Eliashib even to the end of the house of Eliashib.

Therefore the door was not in the middle of the house, as now they commonly are, but at one end of it.

22 And after him repaired the priests, the men of the plain.

Either of the plains of Jordan; or of the plain country round about Jerusalem, as it is called, chap. xii. 28. And they are thus called, because they, or their parents, either were born, or now did or formerly had dwelt, in those parts; whence they came to Jerusalem, when the service of the temple required it.

23 After him repaired Benjamin and Hashub over against their house. After him repaired Azariah the son of Maaseiah the son of Ananiah by his house.

24 After him repaired Binnui the son of Henadad another piece, from the house of Azariah unto ^u the turning of the wall, even unto the corner.

25 Palal the son of Uzai, over against the turning of the wall, and the tower which lieth out from the king's high house, that was by the ^v court of the prison. After him Pedaiah the son of Parosh.

Over against the turning of the wall; in a part of the wall, which jutted out as the tower here following did, and therefore was opposite to or over against that turning. And the tower, or, even the tower. Out from the king's high house; either from the royal palace; or from some other smaller house which the king formerly built there, either for prospect or for defence. By the court of the prison; a place oft mentioned; of which see Jer. xxxii. 2; xxxviii. 6, 13.

26 Moreover ^w the Nethinims ^x dwelt in ^y Ophel, unto the place over against ^z the water gate toward the east, and the tower that lieth out.

Dwelt in Ophel, or, who dwelt in Ophel; for this seems to be only a description of the persons, whose work follows. The water-gate; so called, because by that gate water was brought in, either by the people for the use of that part of the city, or rather by these Nethinims, who were Gibeonites, for the uses of the temple, for which they were drawers of water. Josh. ix. 21.

27 After them the Tekoites repaired another piece, over against the great tower that lieth out, even unto the wall of Ophel.

The Tekoites; the same spoken of before, ver. 5, who having despatched their first share sooner than their brethren had done theirs, freely offered their help to supply the defects of others, who, as it seems, neglected that part of the work which had been committed to them. And this their double diligence is noted, both for the greater shame of their nobles, who would not do any part of it, ver. 5, and for their own greater honour, who were so far from being corrupted by the bad example of their nobles, that they were rather quickened and inflamed to greater zeal and industry in this public and pious work.

28 From above the ^a horse gate repaired the priests, every one over against his house.

The horse gate; not that belonging to the king's palace, 2 Chron. xxiii. 15, but one of the gates of the city so called; either because nigh unto that were many stables for horses, or because the horses commonly went out that way to their watering-place.

29 After them repaired Zadok the son of Immer over against his house. After him repaired also Shemaiah the son of Shechaniah, the keeper of the east gate.

To wit, of the city, or of the temple; which being the chief gate, was committed to his particular care and custody.

30 After him repaired Hananiah the son of Shelemiah, and Hanun the sixth son of Zalaph, another piece. After him repaired Meshullam the son of Berechiah over against his chamber.

Or, chambers; the singular number for the plural.

31 After him repaired Malchiah the goldsmith's son unto the place of the Nethinims, and of the merchants, over against the gate Miphkad, and to the ¹ going up of the corner.

32 And between the going up of the corner unto the sheep gate repaired the goldsmiths and the merchants.

CHAP. IV.

The enemies scoff, and are angry, 1—3. Nehemiah prayeth against them, and continueth the work, 4—6. Understanding the wrath and design of their enemies, he setteth a watch, 7—12. He armeth and encourageth the labourers, 13—18; and giveth military precepts, 19—23.

^a ch. 2, 10, 19. BUT it came to pass, that when Sanballat heard that we builded the wall, he was wroth, and took great indignation, and mocked the Jews.

Pretending contempt in his words when he had grief in his heart.

2 And he spake before his brethren and the army of Samaria, and said, What do these feeble Jews? will they [†] fortify themselves? will they sacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they revive the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish which are burned?

[†] Heb. leave to themselves. Before his brethren; Tobiah, ver. 3, and Gashem, chap. ii. 19, and others, whom he calls his brethren, because of their conjunction with him in office and interest. The army of Samaria; whom he designed hereby to incense against them, or at least to understand their minds herein. Will they make an end in a day? do they intend to begin and finish the work, and keep the feast of dedication by sacrifice, all in one day? for if they spend any long time about it, they cannot think that we, and the rest of their neighbours, will suffer them to do it. Thus he persuaded himself and his companions that their attempt was ridiculous; and this mistake kept him from giving them any disturbance till it was too late. So God infatuated him to his own grief and shame, and to the advantage of his people. Will they revive the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish? will they pick up their broken stones out of the ruins, and patch them together? for other materials they want. Which are burned, i. e. which stones were burned, and broken, or consumed to powder, to wit, by the Chaldeans when they took the city. See on chap. i. 3.

3 Now ^b Tobiah the Ammonite was by ^c him, and he said, Even that which they build, if a fox go up, he shall even break down their stone wall.

He mentions the foxes, because they were very numerous in those parts, and because in the late desolations the foxes did walk in the mount and city of Zion, Lam. v. 18, wherewith he seems to upbraid them. He shall even break down their stone wall: it is so low, that a fox can easily get to the top of it; and so weak, and done so hastily and carelessly, that the least thrust will tumble it down.

4 Hear, O our God; for we are [†] despised: and [†] turn their reproach upon their own head, and give them for a prey in the land of captivity:

Turn their reproach upon their own head; let them be really as contemptible as they represent us to be. This, and the following requests, may seem harsh, but they were both just, as being directed against such malicious, inveterate, and implacable enemies to God and to his people, and necessary for the vindication and defence of God's honour, and worship, and people. Give them for a prey in the land of captivity; let them be removed from our neighbourhood, and carried into captivity; and there let them find no favour, but further severity. Or, give them for a prey to their enemies, and let these carry them into the land of captivity.

5 And ^e cover not their iniquity, and let not their sin be blotted out from before thee: for they have provoked thee to anger before the builders.

Let not their sin be blotted out from before thee; let their wickedness be in thy sight, so as to bring down deserved judgments upon them, that either they may be convinced and reformed, or others may be warned by their example. God is said to cover or hide sin when he forbears to punish it. They have provoked thee to anger before the builders, i. e. they have not only provoked us builders, but thee also. Or, they have provoked or derided the builders to their face, i. e. openly and impudently, in contempt of God, and of this work, which is done by his direction and encouragement.

6 So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof: for the people had a mind to work.

Unto the half thereof; either, 1. In length; or rather, 2. In height; for the whole circumference of the wall was distributed among the builders, who also had carried on the work, beginning at the sheep-gate, and ending there also, as appears from chap. iii. 1, 32; and the walls of Jerusalem are said to be made up, here, ver. 7.

7 ¶ But it came to pass, that ^f when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and the Arabians, and the Ammonites, and the Ashdodites, heard that the walls of Jerusalem [†] were made up, and that the breaches began to be stopped, then they were very wroth,

That the breaches began to be stopped, i. e. that the breaches which the Chaldeans had made and left in the walls were well-nigh stopped up.

8 And ^g conspired all of them together to come and to fight against Jerusalem, and † to hinder it.

† Heb. to make an error to it. h 1's. 50, 15.

9 Nevertheless ^h we made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch against them day and night, because of this.

10 And Judah said, The strength of the bearers of burdens is decayed, and there is much rubbish; so that we are not able to build the wall.

And Judah said, i. e. the Jews now dwelling in Judah, to wit, some of them, being partly terrified by their enemies, and partly wearied with hard and continual labours. There is much rubbish; more than we are able suddenly to remove. We are not able to build the wall; being forced to spend our time in removing the rubbish, and other works imposed upon us; and therefore we must desist. at least for a season.

11 And our adversaries said, They shall not know, neither see, till we come in the midst among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease.

We will come secretly and unexpectedly upon them, so as they shall neither foresee their danger, nor be able to prevent it.

12 And it came to pass, that when the Jews which dwelt by them came, they said unto us ten times, || From all places whence ye shall return unto us they will be upon you.

|| Or, That from all places ye must return to us.

*Which dwell by them, or, among them; whereby they came to the knowledge of their counsels. Ten times, i. e. very often. A certain number for an uncertain. They will be upon you, i. e. they will invade you every way, by which we can come to you, or you to us; and therefore do you keep watches on every side. But these words may be otherwise rendered thus, On all parts where you shall be quiet, or at rest, (i. e. secure; for the Hebrew shub signifies not only to return, but also to be quiet, or at ease, as Hebricians know,) they will be upon us, i. e. upon our people, and city Jerusalem, where you are. And they rather say upon us than upon you, to manifest their affection to them, and conjunction with them, and that they looked upon themselves as members of the same body and church with them, and took what was designed or done against them, as if it were against themselves, and therefore gave them this friendly notice. Or the place may be rendered thus, They told this (to wit, the enemy's intentions) to us ten times, coming from all places where they dwell, or rested, (Heb. you rested; the second person being put for the third, as it is both in the Hebrew language, as Gen. x. 19, 30; xxv. 18, and in the Hebrew text, Psal. xxii. 9, and in other languages and authors; of which see my Latin Synopsis upon Gen. x. 19; and that it is so here we have the consent of the LXX. and Arabic, and of some modern and accurate interpreters, who render it by a verb of the third person,) about us; whence they came purposely to inform and warn us. Or thus, They told this to us ten times from all places whence they did return to us: which phrase of returning to us, i. e. to Jerusalem, suits very well with those persons who came up with their brethren from Babylon to Jerusalem, and went thence into several parts of the country to dwell where they thought meet, and returned now, and at other times, as they had occasion, to their brethren at Jerusalem.*

† Heb. from the lower parts of the place, &c.

13 ¶ Therefore set I † in the lower places behind the wall, and on the higher places, I even set the people after their families with their swords, their spears, and their bows.

In the lower places behind the wall; to stand by and within the walls where they were lowest, and not yet raised to their due height, and therefore most liable to the enemy's assault. On the higher places; upon the tops of the walls where they were finished, and the towers which were built here and there upon the wall; whence they might shoot arrows or throw stones against their enemies, when they made their approaches.

14 And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, ⁱ Be not ye afraid of them: remember the LORD, which is ^h great and terrible, and ⁱ fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses.

15 And it came to pass, when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, ^m and God had brought their counsel to nought, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work.

m Job 5. 12.

Our enemies being frustrated in their hopes, which were wholly built upon the secrecy and suddenness of their attempt, we knowing this, returned to our business.

16 And it came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons; and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah.

From that time forth, lest our enemies should repeat their enterprise. The half of my servants; of my domestic servants, and of my guards, who should have attended upon my own person. The spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons, i. e. all their weapons; they stood in their arms prepared for battle. The rulers were behind all; partly to encourage them in their work, and sometimes to assist with their own hands; and partly to direct and command them in case of an assault. The house of Judah, i. e. the Jews who were upon the wall.

17 They which builded on the wall, and they that bare burdens, with those that laded, every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.

This is not to be taken properly, for they could never have done their work with one hand; and the next verse tells us the sword was not in their hands, but by their sides: but figuratively; this being a proverbial speech, such as is frequent amongst the Latins, as when they say of a man pretending kindness with evil design, He carries bread in one hand, and a stone in another.

18 For the builders, every one had his sword girded † by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet was by me.

† Heb. on his loins.

To call the people together, when and where it was fit and necessary.

19 ¶ And I said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall, one far from another.

20 In what place therefore ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us: ⁿ our God shall fight for us.

n Ex. 14. 14, 25. Deut. 1. 20. & 3. 22. Josh. 23. 10.

21 So we laboured in the work: and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared.

Working very early and very late.

22 Likewise at the same time said I unto the people, Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

Within Jerusalem; not in the suburbs, or adjoining villages, as probably many of them did, returning thence to their work in the morning.

23 So neither I, nor my brethren, nor my servants, nor the men of the guard which followed me, none of us put off our clothes, || saving that every one put them off for washing.

|| Or, every one went with his scourion for water, See Julg. 5. 11.

None of us put off our clothes; neither by day, nor by night, as the manner is when we go to bed; they constantly kept themselves in a readiness for fighting. Saving that every one put them off for washing; when they were to wash and cleanse themselves from some natural or moral impurity, which might befall them or their garments.

CHAP. V.

The people complain of their brethren, by reason of their debts, mortgages, and bondage, 1—5. Nehemiah rebuketh the usurers, and causeth them to make a covenant of restitution, 6—13. He forbearth his own allowance, and keepeth hospitality, 14—17. The quantity of his preparations, and his prayer, 18, 19.

a Is. 5. 7. AND there was a great ^a cry of the people and of their wives against their ^b brethren the Jews.

To wit, the great and rich ones who had oppressed their brethren.

2 For there were that said, We, our sons, and our daughters, are many: therefore we take up corn for them, that we may eat, and live.

We, our sons, and our daughters, are many; which is in itself a blessing, but to us is turned into a curse. We take up corn for them, i. e. we are forced by our and their necessities to take up corn, to wit, upon their own unreasonable terms, as is here implied, and plainly expressed in the following relation. Others, Let us take up, &c., i. e. seeing we do the public work, let provision be made for us and our children out of the public stock. But this is no petition, but a complaint, as will appear.

3 Some also there were that said, We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses, that we might buy corn, because of the dearth.

Which might easily happen, both from the multitude of the people now in and near Jerusalem, and from their building work, which wholly took them up, and kept them from taking care of their own families, and from the expectation and dread of their enemies' invasion, which hindered them from going abroad to fetch in provision, and the people round about from bringing it in to them; or from divers other causes.

4 There were also that said, We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards.

The king's tribute was laid upon them all. See Ezra iv. 13; vii. 24.

c Is. 52. 7. 5 Yet now ^c our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children: and, lo, we ^d bring into bondage our sons and our daughters to be servants, and some of our daughters are brought unto bondage already: neither is it in our power to redeem them; for other men have our lands and vineyards.

Our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren; we are of the same nature, and nation, and religion with them, although they treat us as if we were beasts or heathens, forgetting both humanity and God's law, Deut. xv. 7. We bring into bondage; we are compelled to sell them for our subsistence. Our sons and our daughters; which was an evidence of their great necessity, because their daughters were more tender, and weak, and unfit for bond-service, and more exposed to injuries, than their sons. Neither is it in our power to redeem them; which we are allowed to do, Exod. xxi. 7, but have not wherewith to do it.

6 ¶ And I was very angry when I heard their cry and these words.

+ Heb. my heart consulted in me. e Ex. 22. 25. Lev. 25. 36. Ezek. 22. 12. 7 Then † I consulted with myself, and I rebuked the nobles, and the rulers, and said unto them, ^e Ye exact usury, every one of his brother. And I set a great assembly against them.

Ye exact usury every one of his brother; which was against the plain and positive law of God, Deut. xxiii. 19, 20; especially in this time of public calamity and dearth. I set a great assembly against them; I called a public congregation, both of the rulers and people, the greatest part whereof were free from this guilt, and therefore more impartial judges of the matter, and represented it to them, that the offenders might be convinced, and reform this abuse; if not for fear of God, or love of their brethren, yet at least for the public shame, and the cries of the poor.

8 And I said unto them, We after our ability have ^f redeemed our brethren the Jews, which were sold unto the heathen; and will ye even sell your brethren? or shall they be sold unto us? Then held they their peace, and found nothing to answer.

We after our ability have redeemed our brethren the Jews, which were sold unto the heathen: I, and my brethren, and predecessors, have used our utmost interest and power, both with the kings of Persia, that our brethren might be redeemed from that bondage into which God had sold them for their sins; and with particular persons in Babylon and Persia, and the adjacent parts, whose bond-slaves the Jews were, and who would not part with them without a price, which we paid for them. Will ye even sell your brethren? or shall they be sold unto us? do you expect that we should pay you a price for them, as we did to the Babylonians? or must we use as much importunity to solicit you for their redemption as we did to their enemies?

9 Also I said, It is not good that ye do: ought ye not to walk ^g in the fear of our God ^h because of the reproach of the heathen our enemies?

It is not good, i. e. it is a very bad and wicked thing; as this same phrase is used, Prov. xvi. 29; xvii. 26; xviii. 5; xix. 2. A common figure, called meiosis, where more is understood than is expressed. Because of the reproach of the heathen our enemies; who are round about you, and observe all your actions, and will loathe and reproach both you for such barbarous usage of your brethren, and religion for your sakes; which, if you have any love or respect either to God or to yourselves, you will prevent.

10 I likewise, and my brethren, and my servants, might exact of them money and corn: I pray you, let us leave off this usury.

My brethren, to wit, in office; those who are employed with me in the government of this people. My servants; in my name, and for my use. Might exact of them money and corn, as a just recompence for our pains and care for the public good, to which we wholly devote ourselves, even to the neglect of all our private concerns. But I will not rigorously exact, but do freely remit my own right, which, in those circumstances, it is my duty to do; and therefore you also ought to do so, seeing I lay no burden upon you but what I am willing to bear a part of upon my own shoulders.

11 Restore, I pray you, to them, even this day, their lands, their vineyards, their oliveyards, and their houses, also the hundredth part of the money, and of the corn, the wine, and the oil, that ye exact of them.

Also the hundredth part of the money; also require not; which is to be supplied out of the next verse, where it is expressed in their answer to and grant of this desire. The hundredth part; which they required every month for the use of their monies or goods, according to the custom then used, and afterwards by the Romans.

12 Then said they, We will restore them, and will require nothing of them; so will we do as thou sayest. Then I called the priests, ⁱ and took an oath of them, that they should do according to this promise.

We will restore them, to wit, the lands and houses. Will require nothing of them, for the hundredth part.

g Lev. 25. 36. h 2 Sam. 12. 14. Rom. 2. 24. 1 Pet. 2. 12.

i Ezra 10. 5. Jer. 34. 8. 9.

I called the priests; either, 1. As delinquents in that kind; or rather as witnesses, that the oath being taken before the priests, who acted in God's name and stead, the oath might make the more deep and durable impression upon their consciences. See Numb. v. 19; 1 Kings i. 8, 31, 32. Took an oath of them; not of the priests last mentioned, for it doth not appear that any of them were guilty, and it is absurd to think that they only were guilty of this extortion, as they must be, if this them belongs to them only; but of all the persons who were before charged with this crime, ver. 3, 4, whether priests or others, as is evident from the text, and from the nature of the thing.

13 Also ^k I shook my lap, and said, So God shake out every man from his house, and from his labour, that performeth not this promise, even thus be he shaken out, and [†]emptied. And all the congregation said, Amen, and praised the LORD. ¹ And the people did according to this promise.

I shook my lap, i. e. the lap or extreme parts of my garment, which I first folded together, and then shook it, and scattered it asunder. This was a form of swearing then in use. From his labour, i. e. from enjoying what he hath got by his labour.

14 ¶ Moreover from the time that I was appointed to be their governor in the land of Judah, from the twentieth year ^m even unto the two and thirtieth year of Artaxerxes the king, that is, twelve years, I and my brethren have not ⁿ eaten the bread of the governor.

Twelve years; not that he continued so long together at Jerusalem, of which see chap. ii. 6; but that he so long governed Jerusalem by himself when he was present, and in his absence by a deputy. I and my brethren; either my fellow officers, or they whom I left in my stead, who as they were to do my work, so might have required my rights. The bread of the governor, i. e. that allowance which by the laws of God and nations, and of the king of Persia, the governors might require for the maintenance of their own dignity and office, and of the public service.

15 But the former governors that had been before me were chargeable unto the people, and had taken of them bread and wine, beside forty shekels of silver; yea, even their servants bare rule over the people: but ^o so did not I, because of the ^p fear of God.

The former governors; not Ezra, who was no governor, but only a priest sent to teach them, and to rectify church abuses; nor Zerubbabel; but others between him and Nehemiah, whom he forbears to name, because he designed not to disgrace any person, but only to reform the abuses. Beside forty shekels of silver; which they required of the people for every day to defray their other expenses. Their servants bare rule over the people, i. e. ruled them with rigour and cruelty; which fault of the servants is charged upon their masters, the former governors, because they did not restrain nor punish them. Because of the fear of God; because I feared to break God's commands, or to incur his displeasure, by such immoderate and unseasonable oppressions of the people. This he speaks not to commend himself, but rather to diminish his praise, and to show that this was no heretical action, nor work of supererogation, to be admired rather than imitated; but only his duty in that case, which for his own sake he durst not decline; and consequently that it was their duty also now to relinquish even those rights which in other times and conditions they might lawfully require.

16 Yea, also I continued in the work of this wall, neither bought we any land: and all my servants were gathered thither unto the work.

In the work of this wall; overseeing, directing, and encouraging the workmen, which was my whole business; and this at my own cost. Neither bought we any land of our poor brethren, whose necessities gave me abundant opportunity of enriching myself with good bargains. But I durst not build my house upon other men's ruins.

17 Moreover there were ^q at my table an hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, beside those that came unto us from among the heathen that are about us.

An hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers; not only Jews of the inferior sort, for whom meaner provisions might suffice, but also their rulers, such as there were in many places, for whom better provision was fit; who resorted to him upon all occasions, either to pour out their complaints, as here they did; or to give him notice of the enemy's designs; or to receive his orders and directions.

18 Now that ^r which was prepared for me daily was one ox and six choice sheep; also fowls were prepared for me, and once in ten days store of all sorts of wine: yet for all this ^s required not I the bread of the governor, because the bondage was heavy upon this people.

But bore it out of my own estate; which was very considerable, his office in the Persian court being a place of very great profit as well as honour, and that profit no doubt continued to him in this his absence from the king. From this great and daily expense, it seems more than probable that Nehemiah did not continue here for twelve years together, as some would think, or at least that he did not this all that time, but only during the great and present exigences and distresses of the Jews, which ceased in good part after the walls were built, and the hearts of all the Jews revived, and their enemies dispirited thereby.

19 ^t Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done for this people.

As I have done thy people good for thy sake, so do me good for thine own sake; for thou art pleased, and hast promised graciously to reward us according to our works, and to mete to men the same measure which they mete to others.

Sanballat and Tobiah, sending to Nehemiah to meet them, intend to do him mischief, 1, 2. Nehemiah's answer, 3. They charge him with rebellion, 4—7. His answer to it, 8, 9. Shemaiah's false prophecies to discourage Nehemiah, 10. His reply, 11—14. The work is finished to the terror of the enemies, 15, 16. Secret correspondence between the nobles of Judah and Tobiah, 17, 18.

NOW it came to pass, ^a when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and ^b Geshem the Arabian, and the rest of our enemies, heard that I had builded the wall, and that there was no breach left therein; (^b though at that time I had not set up the doors upon the gates;)

I had not set up the doors; not all of them. See on chap. iii. 1—3.

2 That Sanballat and Geshem ^c sent unto me, saying, Come, let us meet together in some one of the villages in the plain of ^d Ono. But they ^e thought to do me mischief.

Let us meet together; to consult about the common service of our master the king of Persia, or to make a friendly accommodation. Ono; a city in the tribe of Benjamin; of which see chap. xi. 35; 1 Chron. viii. 12.

3 And I sent messengers unto them, saying, I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?

I am doing a great work : he tells them one, but not the only, nor the principal, reason of his refusal, because his coming might cause the work to cease, not only by the neglect of it during his absence, but by his death, which they by this means might compass, though he thought it not fit to express so much to them.

4 Yet they sent unto me four times after this sort ; and I answered them after the same manner.

5 Then sent Sanballat his servant unto me in like manner the fifth time with an open letter in his hand ;

Thereby bidding open defiance to him, as before he had used secret practices ; and intimating that he would do that by manifest force, which he had intended to do by sudden surprise.

6 Wherein was written, It is reported among the heathen, and ¶ Gashmu saith it, that thou and the Jews think to rebel : for which cause thou buildest the wall, that thou mayest be their king, according to these words.

Among the heathen ; the neighbouring people, whom you proudly and disdainfully call heathens or Gentiles. Gashmu, called Geshem, ver. 1 ; who affirmed it and would prove it. According to these words, i. e. according to these reports ; or, that thou mayst justify and verify these rumours. Others, according to these things, i. e. when these things which thou art now doing shall be finished. But the first sense seems most agreeable to the use of the same words in the next verse.

7 And thou hast also appointed prophets to preach of thee at Jerusalem, saying, There is a king in Judah : and now shall it be reported to the king according to these words. Come now therefore, and let us take counsel together.

There is a king in Judah ; we have now a king of our own nation, and are free from the bondage of a foreign yoke. Let us take counsel together, that we may impartially examine the matter, that either thy innocency may be cleared, and false accusations may be prevented ; or if thou art guilty, the king may be informed.

8 Then I sent unto him, saying, There are no such things done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart.

9 For they all made us afraid, saying, Their hands shall be weakened from the work, that it be not done. Now therefore, O God, strengthen my hands.

They all made us afraid, i. e. they endeavoured to do so, and actually did terrify some persons.

10 Afterward I came unto the house of She-maiah the son of Delaiah the son of Mehetabeel, who was shut up ; and he said, Let us meet together in the house of God, within the temple, and let us shut the doors of the temple : for they will come to slay thee ; yea, in the night will they come to slay thee.

Shemaiah the son of Delaiah ; probably one of the chief of the priests, 1 Chron. xxiv. 26. Who was shut up in his chamber adjoining to the temple, upon pretence of singular devotion, sequestration from the world, and special acquaintance and much communion with God in his retirements, after the manner of the prophets ; and withal upon pretence of certain knowledge, which he had by the Spirit of God and of prophecy, concerning their approaching danger, from which they could be safe no where but in the temple, which the very heathens owned for a sanctuary, which they might not violate. Let us meet together in the house of God, within the temple ; for the danger is so near, that we cannot safely tarry here so long as to consult what to do in this juncture. His design herein was, partly, to discourage and disgrace Nehemiah, and thereby to strike a dread into all the people, and give a speedy and full stop to the work ; partly, to prepare the way for the enemies to assault and take the city, whilst Nehemiah was shut up, and unable to give them any opposition ; partly, to justify their accusation of Nehemiah to the king by his flight upon it ; and partly, that there, by the help of other priests, who were conscious of his plot, he might either destroy him, or secure his person, till the city by some of his accomplices were betrayed into the enemy's hands.

11 And I said, Should such a man as I flee ? and who is there, that, being as I am, would go into the temple to save his life ? I will not go in.

Should such a man as I flee ; I the chief governor, upon whose presence, and counsel, and conduct the very life and being of the whole city and nation in a great measure depends ; I who have professed such resolution, and courage, and confidence in God ; I who have had such eminent experience of God's gracious and powerful assistances, of his calling me to this employment, and carrying me through it when our danger was greater than now it is. Shall I now dishonour God and religion, and betray the people and city of God by my cowardice ? God forbid. This is not the counsel of God, nor of a friend ; but a plot of mine enemies, as it here follows. Who is there, that, being as I am, would go into the temple to save his life ? as if I had an evil cause or conscience ; as if I were a malefactor, who fled thither for refuge ; as if I durst not trust God with my preservation except I went into the temple, which it is not lawful for me, being no priest, to do.

12 And, lo, I perceived that God had not sent him ; but that ^g he pronounced ^g his ^g prophecy ^g against me : for Tobiah and Sanballat had hired him. ^g Ezek. 13. 22.

I perceived ; partly, by considering the sinful nature and pernicious consequence of this counsel ; partly, by the suggestion of God's Spirit, whose counsel and help I sought in this matter ; and partly, by the event, which discovered that there was no such danger from the approach of the enemy as was pretended.

13 Therefore was he hired, that I should be afraid, and do so, and sin, and that they might have matter for an evil report, that they might reproach me.

That I should do so, and sin, by going into a place forbidden to me, and that in such a time and manner, and upon such an occasion ; which would have been both sinful and shameful : see on ver. 11. That they might reproach me as a coward, and conscious of my own guilt, that so they might make me contemptible and odious, both to my own people, and to the king of Persia.

14 ^h My God, think thou upon Tobiah ^h and Sanballat according to these their works, and on the ⁱ prophetess Noadiah, ⁱ and the rest of the prophets, that would have put me in fear. ^h ch. 13. 29. ⁱ Ezek. 13. 17.

The prophetess Noadiah ; one that falsely pretended to the Spirit of prophecy, to deceive and destroy Nehemiah. He prays to God to remember and punish these false prophets, because he was not yet in a capacity to do it, having such powerful enemies round about him, and so many rich and potent Jews highly discontented for their great loss by his means, chap. v.

15 ¶ So the wall was finished in the ^{cir.} 445. twenty and fifth day of the month Elul, in fifty and two days.

The month Elul ; answering part to our August and part to September. In fifty and two days ; to be computed, either, 1. From the time of Sanballat's sending this letter to him ; or, 2. As most judge, from the beginning of the work ; which though a great thing, yet it is not at all incredible, considering, 1. That the walls and gates were not wholly pulled down by the Chaldeans ; for to what purpose should they make that waste of time and labour ? 2. That where the walls were thrown down, yet the materials remained, which they now used. 3. That in the building of the walls they minded not curiosity, but only strength and safety. 4. The great numbers of the builders, and the prudent distribution of the work among them, and their admirable zeal and diligence in the work. 5. That there want not parallel instances even in heathen authors; for both Curtius and Arrian report, that Alexander the Great built the walls of new Alexandria, which contained above seven miles in length, within twenty days' space. 6. That there was an eminent hand of God in carrying on this work, which their very enemies here acknowledge.

^{k ch. 2. 10. & 4. 1, 7. & 6. 1.} 16 And it came to pass, that ^k when all our enemies heard thereof, and all the heathen that were about us saw these things, they were much cast down in their own eyes: for ^l they perceived that this work was wrought of our God.

^{l Ps. 120. 2.} In their own eyes, i. e. in their opinion, or themselves being judges; for though ordinarily men are very prone to judge partially, and still to flatter themselves with vain hopes and fancies, yet this case was so clear and remarkable, that they began to despair. Now they saw that all was lost, that their designs were broken, and that their mischief was now likely to fall upon their own heads. They perceived, by that admirable courage, and constancy, and quickness wherewith this work was managed, notwithstanding all their difficulties and discouragements. That this work was wrought of our God; that it was the work of that mighty God of Israel, whom they had great reason to fear; and withal they took it for an ill omen to them, and a sure presage that God would still watch over that city and people, and crush those who should oppose or disturb them.

17 ¶ Moreover in those days the nobles of Judah [†] sent many letters unto Tobiah, and the letters of Tobiah came unto them.

Corresponding with him against Nehemiah, and against their own city and nation.

18 For there were many in Judah sworn unto him, because he was the son in law of Shechaniah the son of Arah; and his son Johanan had taken the daughter of Meshullam the son of Berechiah.

Sworn unto him, to be true to him in the prosecution of his wicked designs. His son had taken the daughter of Meshullam: this is noted to show the mischief of such unequal and forbidden marriages, and how reasonable and necessary Ezra's action was in the dissolution of them.

19 Also they reported his good deeds before me, and uttered my [¶] words to him. And Tobiah sent letters to put me in fear.

CHAP. VII.

Nehemiah committeth the charge of Jerusalem to Hanani and Hananiah, 1, 2. His advice to them, 3, 4. He finds out a register of the genealogy of them that came at first out of Babylon, 5—65. The whole number of them, 66, 67. Their substance, 68, 69. Their offerings, 70—73.

^{a ch. 6. 1.} NOW it came to pass, when the wall was built, and I had ^a set up the doors, and the porters and the singers and the Levites were appointed,

i. e. When I had taken order that the Levites should be summoned from all places to celebrate the dedication of the wall, as it was done, chap. xii. 27.

^{b ch. 2. 8.} 2 That I gave my brother Hanani, and Hananiah the ruler ^b of the palace, charge over Jerusalem: for he was a faithful man, and ^c feared God above many.

Hanani; of whom see chap. i. 2. The ruler of the palace, i. e. of Nehemiah's court; justly so called, because he lived in great splendour, and like a viceroy, though it was wholly at his own charge. Charge over Jerusalem, to preserve its peace and safety, and to take particular care of the shutting the gates of the city. He was a faithful man, to wit, Hananiah last mentioned; for it was needless to say any thing in commendation of Hanani, who had shown his piety and zeal for God and his country, in taking a tedious journey from Jerusalem to Shushan, to inform Nehemiah of the sad estate of Jerusalem, and to implore his helping hand to relieve it, chap. i. A faithful man; he chose not magistrates and officers out of any partial or carnal respects to his own kindred, or acquaintance, or favourites, but from true piety and prudence, such as were fittest for and would be most faithful in their employments. And feared God: this is added as the ground and reason, both why he was faithful, and why Nehemiah put such trust and confidence in him, because he knew that the fear of God would keep him from yielding to those temptations to perfidiousness which he was likely to meet with when Nehemiah was gone, and against which a man destitute of God's fear hath no sufficient fence. Above many; more than most men did; or, above the common pitch of piety.

3 And I said unto them, Let not the gates of Jerusalem be opened until the sun be hot; and while they stand by, let them shut the doors, and bar them: and appoint watches of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, every one in his watch, and every one to be over against his house.

Until the sun be hot, i. e. till it be clear and broad day; when enemies approaching may be discovered, and the people of the city will be ready for the defence in case of an assault. While they stand by, i. e. the watches appointed to that end, as is manifest from the following words. Every one to be over against his house, i. e. every one in his turn keeping watch with others in that watching-place which is next to his house.

4 Now the city was [†] large and great: [†] the people were few therein, and the houses were not builded.

i. e. Not all, nor completely built; but only some slight buildings of boards or stones were made for the present use of the generality of the people.

5 ¶ And my God put into mine heart to gather together the nobles, and the rulers, and the people, that they might be reckoned by genealogy. And I found a register of the genealogy of them which came up at the first, and found written therein,

God put into mine heart: this action, though merely prudential, he doth not ascribe to himself, or his own wit, but to the gift and grace of God directing and inclining him to it. To gather together the nobles, and the rulers, and the people; not only for the particular end here mentioned, but for divers other weighty purposes and matters, of which the following chapters treat. That they might be reckoned by genealogy; that so it might appear to what families each person belonged, and where their ancient habitations lay, which for a great number of them were in the city, the replenishing of which was now his design. Them which came up at the first, to wit, with Zerubbabel, as it follows, ver. 7. But this following catalogue differs in some particulars from that Ezra ii., of which see the notes there.

6 ^d These are the children of the province, that went up out of the captivity, of those that had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away, and came again to Jerusalem and to Judah, every one unto his city;

7 Who came with Zerubbabel, Jeshua, Nehemiah, [¶] Azariah, Raamiah, Nahamani, Mordecai, Bilshan, Mispereth, Bigvai, Nehum, Baanah. The number, I say, of the men of the people of Israel was this;

^{+ Heb. part.} 70 ¶ And [†]some of the chief of the fathers gave unto the work. ¹The Tirshatha gave to the treasure a thousand drams of gold, fifty basons, five hundred and thirty priests' garments.

The Tirshatha, i. e. the governor, to wit, Nehemiah. So it is no wonder that the number of the monies, and other things here contributed, differ from that Ezra ii., because this is another collection; that was made in Zerubbabel's time, and this in Ezra's.

^{m So Ezra 2 69.} 71 And some of the chief of the fathers gave to the treasure of the work ^mtwenty thousand drams of gold, and two thousand and two hundred pound of silver.

^{cir. 445.} AND all ^athe people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was ^bbefore the water gate; and they spake unto Ezra the ^cscribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the LORD had commanded to Israel.

The street that was before the water-gate; of which see Neh. iii. 26.

^{d Deut. 31. 11, 12.} 2 And Ezra the priest brought ^dthe law before the congregation both of men and women, and all [†]that could hear with understanding, ^eupon the first day of the seventh month.

Ezra the priest came twelve or thirteen years before Nehemiah to Jerusalem; and either tarried there, or went back to Babylon, being forced to do so by the king's command, or indispensable occasions, and then returned again with Nehemiah. All that could hear with understanding, i. e. and such children as were come to years of understanding.

^{† Heb. from the light.} 3 And he read therein before the street that was before the water gate [†]from the morning until midday, before the men and the women, and those that could understand; and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law.

4 And Ezra the scribe stood upon a [†]pulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose; and beside him stood Mattithiah, and Shema, and Anaiiah, and Urijah, and Hilkiah, and Maaseiah, on his right hand; and on his left hand, Pedaiiah, and Mishael, and Malchiah, and Hashum, and Hashbadana, Zechariah, and Meshullam.

Partly to declare their consent and concurrence with Ezra in what he said and did; and partly that they, or some of them, might bear a part in the work.

5 And Ezra opened the book in the [†]sight of all the people; (for he was ^{+ Heb. eyes.} above all the people;) and when he opened it, all the people [†]stood up: ^{f Judg. 3. 20.}

Either in reverence to God's word, of which see Numb. xi. 32; Judg. iii. 20; or that they might hear his words the more distinctly: or rather, because they observed that Ezra composed himself to prayer or thanksgiving; which is here generally declared, but doubtless was more particularly and largely expressed in that assembly, as appears by their answering Amen, Amen, to his prayer.

6 And Ezra blessed the LORD, the great God. And all the people ^ganswered, Amen, Amen, with ^hlifting up their hands: and they ⁱbowed their heads, and worshipped the LORD with their faces to the ground.

7 Also Jeshua, and Bani, and Sherebiah, Jamin, Akkub, Shabbethai, Hodijah, Maaseiah, Kelita, Azariah, Jozabad, Hanan, Pelaiah, and the Levites, ^kcaused the people to understand the law: and the people stood in their place.

Caused the people to understand the law; as well the words, which being Hebrew, now needed to be translated into the Chaldee or Syriac language, which was now and henceforth the common language of that people, who together with their religion had also in a great part lost their language; as also the sense and meaning of them; they expounded the mind and will of God in what they read, and applied it to the people's present condition, as they saw fit, as the manner of the prophets generally was. And hence the people were so deeply affected with it. The people stood in their place, i. e. in their several places and stations into which the company seems to have been distributed for convenience of hearing; it not being likely that so vast a congregation could distinctly hear one man's voice. Or, by their stations, i. e. by the several stations of the Levites and persons last named; who seem to have had several scaffolds, by comparing this with chap. ix. 4, upon which they stood, as Ezra did upon his pulpit, ver. 4.

8 So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading.

They read, to wit, Ezra and his companions successively or severally. Gave the sense, i. e. the meaning of the Hebrew words, which they expounded in the common language. Caused them to understand the reading, i. e. that which they read, to wit, the Holy Scripture; the action being put for the object, as vision is oft put for the thing seen, and hearing for the thing heard, and fear for the thing feared. So they gave them both a translation of the Hebrew words into the Chaldee, and an exposition of the things contained in them, and of the duty incumbent upon the people by virtue of them, the declaration whereof was a great part of the priest's work, Mal. ii. 7.

9 ¶ And Nehemiah, which is || the Tirshatha, and Ezra the priest the scribe, ^mand the Levites that taught the people, said unto all the people, ⁿThis day is holy unto the LORD your God; ^omourn not,

14, 15. nor weep. For all the people wept, when Levites. 3. 4. they heard the words of the law.

This day is holy unto the Lord your God, to wit, as a day of feasting and thanksgiving to God, and rejoicing in his mercies; for otherwise even fasting days were holy to God in the general, though not in the sense here meant. All the people wept, out of a deep sense of their great guilt, and of their extreme danger by reason of it.

10 Then he said unto them, Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our Lord: neither be ye sorry; for the joy of the LORD is your strength.

Eat the fat, and drink the sweet; feast before the Lord, as the duty of the day obligeth you to do. Send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared; for the relief of your poor brethren, who else must mourn whilst you rejoice. See of this duty and practice Deut. xvi. 11, 14; Esth. ix. 19. This day is holy unto our Lord; being the feast of trumpets, Lev. xxiii. 24, and the beginning of this joyful month, wherein so many days of feasting and thanksgiving were to be observed. The joy of the Lord is your strength, i. e. rejoicing in God in the manner prescribed in his word, or serving him with cheerfulness and thankfulness, which is your duty always, but now especially, will give you that strength both of mind and body which you greatly need, both to perform all the duties required of you, and to endure and oppose all the crafty counsels and malicious designs of your enemies against you; whereas this dejection of mind, and excessive grief, if you indulge it, will both offend God, and damp your spirits, and weaken your very bodies, and make you unfit for God's service, or for your own necessary occasions, and so an easy prey to your enemies.

11 So the Levites stilled all the people, saying, Hold your peace, for the day is holy; neither be ye grieved.

The Levites stilled all the people; whose passions being once raised, could not suddenly be composed. Hold your peace; cease from weeping and mournful cries, and turn your lamentations into thanksgivings.

12 And all the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth, because they had understood the words that were declared unto them.

Because they now knew God's mind, and their own duty, which they were resolved to practise; which gave them ground of hope and trust in God's mercy, and consequently of great and just joy.

13 ¶ And on the second day were gathered together the chief of the fathers of all the people, the priests, and the Levites, unto Ezra the scribe, even to understand the words of the law.

Choosing rather to confess their ignorance for their edification, than vainly to pretend to more knowledge than they had; wherein they show both true humility and serious godliness, that they were more careful to learn and practise their duty, than to preserve their reputation with the people. Even to understand the words of the law; that they might more exactly understand the meaning of some things which they had heard before, and so instruct the people in them.

14 And they found written in the law which the LORD had commanded by Moses, that the children of Israel should dwell in booths in the feast of the seventh month:

They found, upon Ezra's information, and their discourse with him.

15 And that they should publish and proclaim in all their cities, and in Jerusalem, saying, Go forth unto the mount, and fetch olive branches, and pine branches, and myrtle branches, and palm branches, and branches of thick trees, to make booths, as it is written.

And that they should publish, i. e. and they found this also written, which is to be supplied out of the former verse, that they should, &c., which, though it be not particularly required, so as is expressed in the words here following, yet in the general is required by virtue of that precept, Lev. xxiii. 4; Numb. x. 10. And according to this translation, it must be understood in the close of this verse, that they did accordingly publish and proclaim, &c. But these words may be rendered, which (as this Hebrew word is rendered here, ver. 14, and most commonly) also (so the particle vau is used, Isa. vi. 1; Jer. i. 3) they did publish, &c. For so they did, as is evident and acknowledged; and it seems fit that so much should be expressed; and these words being particular and proper to this special occasion, seem to intimate that this is rather an historical relation of what they now did, than a declaration of that which the law required them to do, which was but in very general terms, and not so exact and particular as this following precept is said to be. Unto the mount; the Mount of Olives, which was next Jerusalem, and stored with olive branches, and probably with the rest here mentioned; for these trees may seem to have been planted hereabouts principally for the use of this capital city in this very feast, which, though long neglected, should have been celebrated once every year. And therefore this place seems to be here designed as the most eminent place, but with a usual synecdoche, this place being put for any place nearest to the several cities of Judah, where these branches were to be procured. Branches of thick trees; of which see on Lev. xxiii. 34; Deut. xvi. 13.

16 ¶ So the people went forth, and brought them, and made themselves booths, every one upon the roof of his house, and in their courts, and in the courts of the house of God, and in the street of the water gate, and in the street of the gate of Ephraim.

Booths upon the roof of his house; for the houses there were made flat; of which see Deut. xxii. 8. In their courts, belonging to their own houses; for these might be any where in the open air. In the street of the gate of Ephraim; that gate of the city which led to the tribe of Ephraim.

17 And all the congregation of them that were come again out of the captivity made booths, and sat under the booths: for since the days of Jeshua the son of Nun unto that day had not the children of Israel done so. And there was very great gladness.

For since the days of Jeshua, or, surely since the days, as the Hebrew chi is oft used, as hath been noted before. For the following words seem not so much to give a reason of what was last said or done concerning their dwelling in booths, as to contain the holy writer's reflection upon the present celebration of this feast. Had not the children of Israel done so; either, 1. So as to the matter or substance of the thing. So it implies that all this while the feast of tabernacles was not observed; which seems altogether improbable, considering how expressly this was commanded to be celebrated, Lev. xxiii., &c., and what excellent kings, and priests, and prophets there had been within that time, such as were persons of great understanding, and most expert and studious in God's word, and therefore could not be ignorant of so plain a duty; and withal so thoroughly pious, and careful, and zealous for God, and the observation of his law and worship, and some of them commended for their universal obedience to all God's commands; and therefore would not be guilty of so gross a neglect. Besides, that this feast was observed is sufficiently implied in 1 Kings viii. 2, 65; 2 Chron. vii. 9, and is particularly expressed Ezra iii. 4. Or rather,

They never kept this feast so joyfully, as the next words declare, having not only the same causes of rejoicing which they formerly had, but some special causes to increase their joy, to wit, the remembrance of their stupendous deliverance, both out of the land of their captivity, and out of the hands of their wicked and malicious neighbours ever since their return, and especially now when they were new building the walls of Jerusalem: they never kept it so solemnly and religiously; for whereas at other times only the first and last day of that feast were celebrated with a holy convocation, Lev. xxiii. 35, 36; John vii. 37, now there was a holy convocation, and the people assembled, and attended upon the reading of the law, every day of this feast, as is noted in the next verse.

CHAP. IX.

The solemn fast and repentance of the people, 1, 2; and the manner of it, 3. The Levites confess and bless God for his goodness to them and their fathers, 4—8, in Egypt, 9, 10; in their journey out of it, 11, 12; upon Mount Sinai, 13, 14; in their journey towards Canaan, 15—18; in the wilderness, 19—21; in driving out the nations before them, 22—26; in hearing their prayer when in trouble, and saving them, 27—31. They confess their sins, 32—37; and seal a covenant, 38.

445. NOW in the twenty and fourth day of ^athis month the children of Israel were assembled with fasting, and with sackclothes, ^band earth upon them.

In the twenty and fourth day of this month; the next day but one after the feast of tabernacles, which begun on the 14th day, and ended on the 22nd day, Lev. xxiii.; for their consciences having then been fully awakened by the law read to them, and their hearts being full of grief for their great sins, which they were not allowed to express in that time of public joy and triumph; now when that was past, they resume their former thoughts and passions, and recalling their sins to mind, set apart a day for solemn fasting and humiliation.

2 And ^athe seed of Israel separated themselves from all [†]strangers, and stood and confessed their sins, and the iniquities of their fathers.

From all strangers; from all familiar and unnecessary society with the heathens, and particularly from those strange women whom some of them had married. For though Ezra had done this formerly, Ezra x., as far as he had knowledge of the persons faulty, and power to redress their faults, yet, it seems, there were some criminals, who were either without his knowledge, or out of his power; or these were some new delinquents, that since that time had fallen into the same error, and showed the truth of their repentance by the forsaking of their beloved sins and dearest relations. See again Neh. xiii. 3. The iniquities of their fathers; which they confess partly as one cause of their present sufferings; and partly because they by their practices had justified their fathers' sins, and made them their own.

3 And they stood up in their place, and ^dread in the book of the law of the LORD their God one fourth part of the day; and another fourth part they confessed, and worshipped the LORD their God.

^d ch. 8. 7, 8.

Read in the book of the law; so as they did before, giving them the sense of what they read; of which see on chap. viii. 7, 8. One fourth part of the day, to wit, for three hours; for there were accounted twelve hours in their day, John xi. 9. Probably they began after the morning sacrifice, at which divers religious people used to be present, but now they were all assembled together upon this great occasion; and they continued their work from that time till the evening sacrifice, with which they closed the work of the day. Another fourth part they confessed, both God's mercies, as appears from the matter of the following prayer, and their own sins, as is expressed ver. 2. this day being chiefly set apart for that work. Worshipped the LORD their God; partly by the acknowledgment and adoration of his wonderful mercy in forgiving their sins, and saving them from the deserved judgments, which they either felt or feared, and giving them his law, and the knowledge thereof; and partly by imploring his further grace and mercy to them.

4 ¶ Then stood up upon the ^{||}stairs, ¹Or, scaffold, of the Levites, Jeshua, and Bani, Kadmiel, Shebaniah, Bunni, Sherebiah, Bani, and Chenani, and cried with a loud voice unto the LORD their God.

Upon the stairs, of the Levites, or, upon the scaffold, &c., i. e. upon such stairs, or rather scaffolds, or pulpits, as the Levites used to stand upon when they taught the people. But you must not think that all the persons here named stood in one place, and uttered the following words together, which would have caused great confusion in their speeches, by which means but few of the people could have distinctly heard or understood them; but that they stood upon several pulpits, each of them either teaching of that part of the congregation which was allotted to him, or praying or blessing God with them. Cried with a loud voice; thereby testifying their deep sense of their sins and miseries, and their fervent and importunate desire of God's mercy.

5 Then the Levites, Jeshua, and Kadmiel, Bani, Hashabniah, Sherebiah, Hodijah, Shebaniah, and Pethahiah, said, Stand up and bless the LORD your God for ever and ever: and blessed be ^{thy} glorious name, which is exalted above all blessing and praise.

^e 1 Chron. 29. 13.

Then the Levites said all the following words. Either therefore they all used the same words, being composed and agreed upon by Ezra and themselves; or they all prayed in the same manner, and to the same purpose, having agreed among themselves concerning the matter of their confessions and prayers. And these are the words which one of them used; and it is implied that the rest of their prayers were of the same nature. For ever and ever; from day to day, as long as you live, and to all eternity.

6 Thou, even thou, art LORD alone; [†]thou hast made heaven, ^hthe heaven of heavens, with ¹all their host, the earth, and all things that are therein, the seas, and all that is therein, and thou ^kpreservest them all; and the host of heaven worshippeth thee.

The host of heaven; either, 1. The stars, which after their manner worship and praise God, as all the creatures do after their manner, of which see Psal. cxlviii.; or rather, 2. The angels, who are so called, as 1 Kings xxii. 19; Luke ii. 13, who do worship God truly and properly. And it is most usual and reasonable to understand all words properly, where there is no need of a figurative interpretation. And if this were understood of metaphorical and objective worshipping of God; there seems to be no reason to appropriate that to the host of heaven, to wit, the stars, seeing the hosts of sea and earth do in that sense worship God no less than the stars do, namely, in giving angels and men matter and occasion of worshipping and praising of God.

7 Thou art the LORD the God, who didst choose ¹Abram, and broughtest him

forth out of Ur of the Chaldees, and gavest him the name of Abraham;

Didst choose Abram out of the midst of all his nation and family. When thou didst pass by and neglect the rest of them, suffering them to walk on in their idolatrous and destructive courses; thou didst choose and single out him to serve and glorify thee, to be father of all the faithful, the progenitor of the Messias, and the person in whom, not we only, but all nations, should be blessed, and to enjoy thee to all eternity.

8 And foundest his heart faithful before thee, and madest a covenant with him to give the land of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Jebusites, and the Girgashites, to give it, I say, to his seed, and hast performed thy words; for thou art righteous:

Foundest his heart faithful before thee; when thou madest that admirable trial of his faith and obedience, in requiring him to offer up his only son Isaac, thou didst find out and discover his faithfulness, which was well known to thee before, and also was wrought in him by thy grace.

9 And didst see the affliction of our fathers in Egypt, and heardest their cry by the Red sea;

10 And shewedst signs and wonders upon Pharaoh, and on all his servants, and on all the people of his land: for thou knewest that they dealt proudly against them. So didst thou get thee a name, as it is this day.

They dealt proudly against them; treating thy people with great scorn and contempt, like slaves and beasts.

11 And thou didst divide the sea before them, so that they went through the midst of the sea on the dry land; and their persecutors thou threwest into the deeps, as a stone into the mighty waters.

Into the mighty waters, i. e. the deep waters, such as these were, into which, when a stone is thrown, there is no hopes of seeing it again.

12 Moreover thou leddest them in the day by a cloudy pillar; and in the night by a pillar of fire, to give them light in the way wherein they should go.

13 Thou camest down also upon mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments:

True laws; not such laws as some of the heathen laws were, which taught them falsehood, superstition, idolatry, and other errors; but such as discover the truth, and the true mind and will of God, and the true and only way to life. Good statutes; both in themselves, and to us also, being useful to teach, and comfort, and save us.

14 And madest known unto them thy holy sabbath, and commandedst them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy servant:

Thy holy sabbath; that holy and blessed sabbath day which thou didst bless and sanctify to Adam in Paradise, Gen. ii. 3, commanding him, and in him all his posterity, to observe it, which yet almost all people and nations have quite forgotten, yea, so far as to mock at them, Lam. i. 7, thou didst graciously reveal unto thy people, reviving that ancient law by another particular law about it given to us in the wilderness.

15 And gavest them bread from heaven for their hunger, and broughtest forth water for them out of the rock for their thirst, and promisedst them that they should go in to possess the land which thou hadst sworn to give them.

16 But they and our fathers dealt proudly, and hardened their necks, and hearkened not to thy commandments,

Notwithstanding all these singular and wonderful mercies; which he hitherto recounted to aggravate their sins, which he now comes to confess, and to lead them to a sincere and ingenuous grief and repentance for their sins, not only for the mischief which they brought upon themselves, but for the injury and indignity which they offered to God. Dealt proudly, i. e. sinned presumptuously, and with contempt of God, as scorning to submit their wills to God's.

17 And refused to obey, neither were mindful of thy wonders that thou didst among them; but hardened their necks, and in their rebellion appointed a captain to return to their bondage: but thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and forsookest them not.

Refused to obey; persisted in their disobedience after many admonitions, and invitations to repentance. Appointed a captain, i. e. designed, purposed, and resolved to do so, Numb. xiv. 4, and therefore they are said to do so, as Abraham is said to have offered up Isaac, Heb. xi. 17, because he intended and attempted to do it.

18 Yea, when they had made them a molten calf, and said, This is thy God that brought thee up out of Egypt, and had wrought great provocations;

19 Yet thou in thy manifold mercies forsookest them not in the wilderness: the pillar of the cloud departed not from them by day, to lead them in the way; neither the pillar of fire by night, to shew them light, and the way wherein they should go.

Thou forsookest them not in the wilderness; where, if thou hadst left them without thy conduct and comfort, they had been utterly lost and undone.

20 Thou gavest also thy good spirit to instruct them, and withheldest not thy manna from their mouth, and gavest them water for their thirst.

Thou gavest also thy good spirit; which thou didst graciously and plentifully impart unto Moses, and then unto the seventy elders, Numb. xi. 17, 25, 26, to the end that they might be able to direct and govern thy people wisely, and in thy fear.

21 Yea, forty years didst thou sustain them in the wilderness, so that they lacked nothing; their clothes waxed not old, and their feet swelled not.

Of which see the notes on Deut. viii. 4.

22 Moreover thou gavest them kingdoms and nations, and didst divide them into corners: so they possessed the land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon, and the land of Og king of Bashan.

Into corners, or, into a corner. But the singular number is very commonly put for the plural. This is understood, either, 1. Of the Israelites, to whom God divided by lot the kingdoms and nations last mentioned, and gave them all the corners, or sides, or quarters (for all these the word signifies) of their land. Or rather, 2. Of the heathen nations, whom God in a great measure destroyed, and the remainders of them he dispersed into corners; that whereas before the

Or, the kings of Babylon, so called, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11.

In that land wherein heretofore, under thee, and by thy favour, we were rightful lords and owners.

37 And * it yieldeth much increase unto the kings whom thou hast set over us because of our sins: also they have ^f dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

Those that sealed, both in their own names, and in the name of all the rest. It may seem strange that Ezra doth not appear among them. But that might be because he was prevented, either by death, or by some sickness, or other extraordinary impediment, for which we have this presumption, that whereas Ezra appears, and preacheth, and prayeth with Jeshua and Bani, &c., before the feast of tabernacles, chap. viii. 4, &c., we have no mention of him chap. ix., but the whole work of that solemn fast day was managed by them alone, without any mention of Ezra, whose name would not have been omitted, if he had been then present. It is true, we meet with Ezra after this, at the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem, chap. xii. 36, and therefore he was then freed from this impediment, whatsoever it was; but thence it appears that he was not dead. Nehemiah, the Tirshatha: this is added to distinguish him from others of that name, whereof we have one, chap. iii. 16.

The rest of the people; those who did not write and seal with their own hands, but only by their deputies above-mentioned.

29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^gand entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^hto walk in God's law, which was given †by Moses the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the Lord our Lord, and his judgments and his statutes;

They clave to their brethren; they owned and ratified what the others had done in their names, declaring their assent to it by their words, or by the lifting up of their hands, as the manner was. Into an oath, i. e. an oath bound with a curse or imprecation upon themselves, in case they violated it.

30 And that we would not give ⁱour daughters unto the people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:

We would not give our daughters, to wit, in marriage. Having sworn obedience to God's laws in the general, they now do so to some particulars, wherein they had lately transgressed, or were most prone to transgress.

31 ^kAnd if the people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath day to sell, that we would not buy it of them on the sabbath, or on the holy day: and that we would leave the ^lseventh year, and the ^mexaction of †every debt.

That we would leave the seventh year, i. e. leave the land at rest from ploughing or tilling it in that year, according to God's command, Exod. xxiii. 10, 11; Lev. xxv. 4. The exaction of every debt, Heb. hand: debts are called hands, because they are commonly contracted or confirmed by a bill under the hand of the debtor.

32 Also we made ordinances for us, to charge ourselves yearly with the third part of a shekel for the service of the house of our God;

To charge ourselves, i. e. every particular head or person among us; which they had warrant to do, both from the nature of the thing, because this was necessary to be done for the upholding of God's worship, and from the warrant of former examples in the like case, 2 Chron. xxiv. 5.

33 For ⁿthe shewbread, and for the ^ocontinual meat offering, and for the continual burnt offering, of the sabbaths, of the new moons, for the set feasts, and for the holy things, and for the sin offerings to make an atonement for Israel, and for all the work of the house of our God.

Formerly the shew-bread, and the continual meat-offering, and the continual burnt-offering, were provided out of the treasures of the temple, 1 Chron. xxvi. 20; and when those failed, out of the king's treasure, 2 Chron. xxxi. 3. But now, both these failing, provision is here made for them another way. For the holy things, i. e. for the sacrifices, all which were holy. The sin-offerings; which are particularly mentioned, as most necessary and suitable to their present state, which was exceeding sinful, and therefore miserable, and calling aloud for atoning sacrifices.

We cast the lots, to determine the time and order in which each of them should take the care of the business. For the wood-offering; for the wood, which was to be spent in great quantity, being used in every sacrifice, and formerly had been supplied out of the temple's treasures, or by the king; which could not now be done. Into the house of our God, i. e. into the place appointed to receive it in the buildings adjoining or belonging to the temple. After the houses of our fathers, i. e. according to our several families, which were to take the charge of it by course.

35 And ^r to bring the firstfruits of our ground, and the firstfruits of all fruit of all trees, year by year, unto the house of the LORD :

The first-fruits of our ground, i. e. of the fruits of our ground. All the particulars of the first-fruits are exactly and distinctly mentioned, that none might pretend ignorance when they withheld any part of the priests' dues; which at that time especially the people were very prone to do, through poverty, or covetousness, or profaneness; and that the priests' rights might be firmly assured to them.

36 Also the firstborn of our sons, and of our cattle, as it is written ^s in the law, and the firstlings of our herds and of our flocks, to bring to the house of our God, unto the priests that minister in the house of our God :

37 ^t And that we should bring the firstfruits of our dough, and our offerings, and the fruit of all manner of trees, of wine and of oil, unto the priests, to the chambers of the house of our God; and ^u the tithes of our ground unto the Levites, that the same Levites might have the tithes in all the cities of our tillage.

i. e. The tithes of all the fruits of the ground belonging to our several cities.

38 And the priest the son of Aaron shall be with the Levites, ^x when the Levites take tithes: and the Levites shall bring up the tithes of the tithes unto the house of our God, to ^y the chambers, into the treasure house.

The priest the son of Aaron, i. e. some priest or priests appointed to this work, that so neither the people might wrong the Levites, nor the Levites defraud the priests of their dues. The Levites shall bring up at their own charges. Into the treasure-house, to wit, of the temple; where it was laid up for the use of the priests.

39 For the children of Israel and the children of Levi ^z shall bring the offering of the corn, of the new wine, and the oil, unto the chambers, where are the vessels of the sanctuary, and the priests that minister, and the porters, and the singers: ^a and we will not forsake the house of our God.

Unto the chambers, where are the vessels of the sanctuary; where other things belonging to the temple are laid up, and therefore these things also shall be put there. And the priests that minister, and the porters, and the singers, i. e. where also are the priests and others that minister in their courses, for whose use these provisions are made. We will not forsake the house of our God, i. e. we do here solemnly declare and engage ourselves that we will take care, from time to time, that the house and service of God be not neglected or forsaken for want of necessary provisions to support it.

CHAP. XI.

The rulers and the tenth man chosen by lot dwell at Jerusalem, 1, 2. A catalogue of their names, numbers, and families, 3—19. The residue of the people dwell in other cities, 20—36.

AND the rulers of the people dwelt at Jerusalem: the rest of the people also cast lots, to bring one of ten to dwell in Jerusalem ^a the holy city, and nine parts ^b to dwell in other cities.

The rulers of the people dwelt at Jerusalem, which their very office in some sort obliged them to do. To bring one of ten to dwell in Jerusalem; that the buildings of the city might be completed, and the honour and safety of it better provided for.

2 And the people blessed all the men, that ^b willingly offered themselves to dwell at Jerusalem.

Because they denied themselves, and their own safety and profit, for the public good; for this city was the butt of all their malicious plots of their enemies; and for the present it was rather chargeable than beneficial to its inhabitants; whereas the country did more easily and certainly afford them supplies.

3 ¶ ^c Now these are the chief of the province that dwelt in Jerusalem: but in the cities of Judah dwelt every one in his possession in their cities, ^d to wit, Israel, the priests, and the Levites, and ^e the Ne-thinims, and ^f the children of Solomon's servants.

The chief of the province, i. e. of Judea, which was now made a province. To wit, Israel, i. e. the generality of the people of Israel, whether of Judah, or Benjamin, or any other tribe; as appears by this general enumeration of all the inhabitants of the land, in which either the people of Judah and Benjamin are included under the title of Israel, or they are not here mentioned; which is absurd to think, because they made up the greatest number of them. And these he calls Israel rather than Judah, partly because there were many of the other tribes now joined and incorporated with them; and partly because none of the tribes of Israel, except Judah and Benjamin, dwelt in Jerusalem, as appears from the sequel.

4 And ^g at Jerusalem dwelt certain of the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin. Of the children of Judah; Athaiah the son of Uzziah, the son of Zechariah, the son of Amariah, the son of Shephatiah, the son of Mahalaleel, of the children of ^h Perez;

The children of Judah and of Benjamin; for to these two tribes this city anciently and most properly belonged, although some also of other tribes dwelt in it; of which, and other things relating to this catalogue, see 1 Chron. ix. 3, &c. Athaiah, and his family and relations with him, and under him as their head, as appears from ver. 6.

5 And Maaseiah the son of Baruch, the son of Col-hozeh, the son of Hazaiah, the son of Adaiah, the son of Joiarib, the son of Zechariah, the son of Shiloni.

6 All the sons of Perez that dwelt at Jerusalem were four hundred threescore and eight valiant men.

Such were most proper for this place and time, because of its many enemies round about it.

7 And these are the sons of Benjamin; Sallu the son of Meshullam, the son of Joed, the son

22 The overseer also of the Levites at Jerusalem was Uzzi the son of Bani, the son of Hashabiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Micha. Of the sons of Asaph, the singers were over the business of the house of God.

^{i. e.} Were to take care at Jerusalem for the supply of such things as were necessary for the temple and the service of God, from time to time, whilst others minded the outward business, ver. 16. And this office was very proper for them, both as they were Levites, to whose care those things belonged; and as they were singers, who were not to come to Jerusalem by turns, as other Levites, and as the priests did, but were constantly to reside there, and therefore were more capable of minding this business. Besides, their employment was not so frequent nor so great as some others were, and therefore they had more leisure for it.

23 For ^{m it} was the king's commandment concerning them, that || a certain portion should be for the singers, due for every day.

For; or, therefore; for the following words contain either a reason why they were set over that business, or a recompence for it, or a provision that they might diligently attend to it. The king's commandment; either, 1. David's, who made this constitution. Or rather, 2. The kings of Persia, who is called simply the king in the next verse also; who took this care at the request and by the direction of Ezra or Nehemiah. Or this might be Nehemiah's command, which is called the king's command, because it was done by the king's deputy, or a commissioner whom the king empowered to do what he saw fit for the house and service of God, commanding all the people to obey him therein; as he had formerly done to Ezra, chap. vii. 18, 20, 23.

24 And Pethabiah the son of Meshezabeel, of the children of Zerach the son of Judah, was ⁿat the king's hand in all matters concerning the people.

At the king's hand, or, on the king's part, to determine civil causes and controversies between man and man by the laws of that kingdom, which peradventure he understood better than Nehemiah, and therefore was appointed for this work, but still under Nehemiah. Or, according to the king's appointment, as the hand is used, as Numb. iv. 49, and elsewhere. In all matters concerning the people; either in civil differences between them, or in things between the king and people; as in matters of tribute, or grievances, &c., wherein this man possibly was chief justiciary under Nehemiah.

CHAP. XII.

The priests, 1—7, and Levites which came up with Zerubbabel, 8, 9. The succession of high priests, 10—21. Certain chief Levites, 22—26. The manner of dedicating the wall, 27—43. The offices of priests and Levites, 44; of singers and porters, 45—47.

^{cir. 536.} NOW these are the ^a priests and the Levites that went up with Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua: ^b Seraiah, Jeremiah, Ezra,

The priests, i. e. the chief of the priests, as they are called here, ver. 7, to wit, the heads of those twenty-four courses which David appointed by Divine direction, 1 Chron. xxiv. And whereas there are twenty-four, and here but twenty-two, and ver. 12, &c. only twenty, the reason of this difference may possibly be this, because two of the twenty-four courses were extinct in Babylon, or at least none of them was then returned; and two of the persons here named, ver. 2, 5, to wit, Hattush and Maadiah, may be omitted in the account of the posterity of these persons, ver. 12, &c., because they had no posterity. Possibly these were not the same courses which David had appointed, but others which Zerubbabel and Joshua had constituted in imitation of that order as far as they could. Ezra: either this was another Ezra, or if it were the same mentioned Ezra vii., he lived to a great age; which may well be supposed, considering his great sobriety, and abstinence from those evil practices which shorten men's lives, and his great piety, to which God promised long life, and withal the special providence of God continuing him so long in such a season, wherein the church of God did greatly need his help and counsel.

^{|| Or, Melicu, ver. 14.} 2 Amariah, || Malluch, Hattush,

These were the chief of the priests and of their brethren in the days of ^d Jeshua.

Of their brethren, i. e. of the priests, who were their brethren.

8 Moreover the Levites: Jeshua, Bin-nui, Kadmiel, Sherebiah, Judah, and Mattaniah, ^e which was over || the thanksgiving, he and his brethren.

9 Also Bakkukiah and Unni, their brethren, were over against them in the watches.

i. e. In the places where they were appointed to stand, and wait, and perform their office, one standing over against another, as it is explained, ver. 24, ward over against ward; for the Hebrew word is the same there and here. Others, according to their turns, or courses, of which see 1 Chron. xxv. 9.

10 ¶ And Jeshua begat Joiakim, Joiakim also begat Eliashib, and Eliashib begat Joiada, Here follows a catalogue of the Jewish high priests; which was the more necessary, because their times were now to be measured, not by the years of their kings, as formerly, but by their high priests. Eliashib; of whom see Neh. iii. 1; xiii. 4, 5.

11 And Joiada begat Jonathan, and Jonathan begat Jaddua.

Generally supposed to be the same man who was high priest in the days of Alexander the Great, as Josephus mentions; whence a great difficulty ariseth, how Nehemiah could mention this man, who seems not to have been high priest till many years after Nehemiah's death. But it seems not necessary that this Jaddua should be the same person, for he might be the father of that Jaddua, both being called by the same name; or, if he were the same, the blessing of a very long life might be given to this great and excellent governor, as it was to Ezra, that famous scribe, as was noted on ver. 1, and that for the very same reason. He might also live to see Jaddua, though not to see him high priest, which might be many years after. Or this passage might be put into this book by some sacred or inspired penman, there being some, though but few, such passages in the foregoing books of Scripture, which were added by succeeding men of God in after-times.

12 And in the days of Joiakim were priests, the chief of the fathers: of Seraiah, Meraiah; of Jeremiah, Hananiah;

As their fathers were priests in the days of Joshua, so in the days of Joiakim, the son of Joshua, the sons of those persons executed the priesthood in their fathers' steads, some of their fathers probably being yet living, and many of them now dead.

13 Of Ezra, Meshullam; of Amariah, Jehohanan;

14 Of Melicu, Jonathan; of Shebaniah, Joseph;

15 Of Harim, Adna; of Meraioth, Helkai;

16 Of Iddo, Zechariah; of Ginnethon, Meshullam;

17 Of Abijah, Zichri; of Miniamin, of Moadiah, Piltai;

18 Of Bilgah, Shammua; of Shemaiah, Jehonathan;

19 And of Joiarib, Mattenai; of Jedaiah, Uzzi;

20 Of Sallai, Kallai; of Amok, Eber;

21 Of Hilkiyah, Hashabiah; of Jedaiah, Nethaneel.

22 ¶ The Levites in the days of Eliashib, Joiada, and Johanan, and Jaddua, were recorded chief of the fathers: also the priests, to the reign of Darius the Persian.

Either Darius Codomanus, and then what was said concerning Jaddua, ver. 11, must be in part repeated and applied here: or Darius Nothus; and so this Jaddua might be father to him who was in the days of Darius Codomanus, and of Alexander the Great.

23 The sons of Levi, the chief of the fathers, were written in the book of the ^{f 1 Chron. 9. 14, &c.} chronicles, even until the days of Johanan the son of Eliashib.

In the book of the chronicles, i. e. in the public annals or registers, in which the genealogies of the several families were set down by the Jews with great exactness, as all persons agree.

24 And the chief of the Levites: Hashabiah, Sherebiah, and Jeshua the son of Kadmiel, with their brethren over against them, to praise and to give thanks, ^{g 1 Chron. 23, & 25, & 26. h Ezra 3. 11.} according to the commandment of David the man of God, ^h ward over against ward.

Of which see on ver. 9.

25 Mattaniah, and Bakkukiah, Obadiah, Meshullam, Talmon, Akkub, were porters keeping the ward at the thresholds of the gates.

To wit, of the temple, their watching-place being close by the thresholds of the gates, as it now is.

26 These were in the days of Joiakim the son of Jeshua, the son of Jozadak, and in the days of Nehemiah the governor, and of Ezra the priest, the scribe.

27 ¶ And at the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem they sought the Levites out of all their places, to bring them to Jerusalem, to keep the dedication with gladness, both with thanksgivings, and with singing, with cymbals, psalteries, and with harps.

At the dedication of the wall; and of the gates, which are mentioned ver. 30; and of the city itself within the gates; which is here dedicated to God, and to his honour and service, not only upon a general account, by which we ought to devote ourselves, and all that is ours, to God; but upon a more special ground, because this was a place which God himself had chosen, and sanctified by his temple and gracious presence, and therefore did of right belong to him; whence it is oft called the holy city, as hath been observed before. And they restored it to God by this dedication, withal imploring the presence, and favour, and blessing of God to this city by solemn prayers, and praises, and sacrifices, wherewith this dedication was accompanied. See Deut. xx. 5; 1 Kings viii. 63; Ezra vi. 17; Psal. xxx. title. Out of all their places, to which they were now retired after that great and general assembly, chap. viii., ix., x.

28 And the sons of the singers gathered themselves together, both out of the plain country round about Jerusalem, and from the villages of Netophathi;

29 Also from the house of Gilgal, and out of the fields of Geba and Azmaveth: for the singers had builded them villages round about Jerusalem.

That they might be near at hand for the service of God, and of his house.

30 And the priests and the Levites purified themselves, and purified the people, and the gates, and the wall.

Partly by sprinkling the water of purification upon them, by which the tabernacle and sacred utensils were purified, Numb. viii.; and partly by solemn prayers and sacrifices.

31 Then I brought up the princes of Judah upon the wall, and appointed two great companies of them that gave thanks, whereof one went on the right hand upon the wall toward the dung gate:

The princes of Judah, and half of the people with them, as it is expressed afterwards, ver. 38. Upon the wall; for the wall was broad and strong, and so ordered that men might conveniently walk upon it, as at this day it is in many cities. On the right hand; towards the south and east.

32 And after them went Hoshaiab, and half of the princes of Judah, 33 And Azariah, Ezra, and Meshullam, Ezra; not the scribe, as is evident from ver. 36, but another Ezra.

34 Judah, and Benjamin, and Shemaiah, and Jeremiah,

35 And certain of the priests' sons with trumpets; namely, Zechariah the son of Jonathan, the son of Shemaiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Michaiah, the son of Zaccur, the son of Asaph:

36 And his brethren, Shemaiah, and Azarael, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethaneel, and Judah, Hanani, with the musical instruments of David the man of God, and Ezra the scribe before them.

37 And at the fountain gate, which was over against them, they went up by the stairs of the city of David, at the going up of the wall, above the house of David, even unto the water gate eastward.

The stairs of the city of David; by which they went up to the hill of Zion, and city of David.

38 And the other company of them that gave thanks went over against them, and I after them, and the half of the people upon the wall, from beyond the tower of the furnaces even unto the broad wall;

Over against them, to wit, on the other side of the city, northward and eastward. The broad wall; which they made thicker and stronger than the rest of the wall, for some special reason.

39 And from above the gate of Ephraim, and above the old gate, and above the fish gate, and the tower of Hananeel, and the tower of Meah, even unto the sheep gate: and they stood still in the prison gate.

Waiting, as also their brethren did, that they might go together in due order into God's house, there to perfect the solemnity.

40 So stood the two companies of them that gave thanks in the house of God, and I, and the half of the rulers with me:

In the house of God, i. e. in the courts of the temple. I, and the half of the rulers with me; and Ezra, and the other half with him, as appears by comparing this with ver. 31, 36.

41 And the priests; Eliakim, Maaseiah, Miniamin, Michaiah, Elioenai, Zechariah, and Hananiah, with trumpets;

42 And Maaseiah, and Shemaiah, and Eleazar, and Uzzi, and Jehohanan, and Malchijah, and Elam, and Ezer. And the singers sang loud, with Jezrahiah their overseer.

43 Also that day they offered great sacrifices, and rejoiced: for God had made them rejoice with great joy: the wives also and the children rejoiced: so that the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off.

Either their loud voices and instruments were heard to a great distance, or the fame of it was spread far and near.

44 ¶ And at that time were some appointed over the chambers for the treasures, for the offerings, for the firstfruits, and for the tithes, to gather into them out of the fields of the cities the portions of the law for the priests and Levites: for Judah rejoiced for the priests and for the Levites that waited.

For the offerings; such as they had lately engaged themselves to give, or other voluntary or prescribed offerings. The portions of the law, i. e. the foresaid first-fruits, and tithes, and other things which God by his law appointed for them. Judah rejoiced for the priests and for the Levites that waited; partly for the eminent gifts and graces which they observed in many of them; and partly for the great benefit which they had now received by their ministry; and therefore for the competent provision which hereby was made for them, that so they might wholly wait upon their office, to the people's edification and comfort.

45 And both the singers and the porters kept the ward of their God, and the ward of the purification, ^g according to the commandment of David, and of Solomon his son.

The ward of their God, i. e. that ward, or charge, or business which God had prescribed to them. And the ward of the purification; and in particular the charge of purification, i. e. of taking care that no unclean person or thing might enter into the house or courts of the Lord; which care did certainly belong to the porters, as is expressed, 2 Chron. xxiii. 19, and at this time, and in some sort, as it seems to the singers, who, besides their proper employment, were also over the business of the house of God, as is affirmed, chap. xi. 22; which being a general expression, may well comprehend, if it doth not principally design this, that they should take care to keep the house of God free from all pollution. And possibly as the porters were to take care that no unclean thing might enter there, so if it should through their inadvertency enter in, the singers were to remove it.

46 For in the days of David ^h and Asaph of old there were chief of the singers, and songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God.

David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun, 1 Chron. xxv. 1; but Asaph only is mentioned here, as the most eminent and useful in that work. There were chief of the singers; there were some overseers, whose office it was to see that the singers were fit for and diligent in their work; and therefore they took care of it at this time.

47 And all Israel in the days of Zerubabel, and in the days of Nehemiah, gave the portions of the singers and the porters, every day his portion: ⁱ and they ^{||} sanctified holy things unto the Levites; ^k and the Levites sanctified them unto the children of Aaron.

They sanctified holy things, i. e. they sequestered or set apart the first-fruits and tithes from their own share, and devoted them to the use of the Levites, to whom they belonged. And so did the Levites by the title of the tithes. Thus they all conscientiously paid their dues to God, or his assigns, and did not profane those things which God had sanctified, nor take them to their own common use, as divers ungodly or covetous persons had formerly used to do when they had opportunity.

CHAP. XIII.

Upon the reading of the law separation is made between Israel and the mixed multitude, 1—3. Nehemiah, at his return to Jerusalem, causeth the chambers to be cleansed, 4—9. He restoreth and reformeth the offices of the priests and Levites in the house of God, 10—14; and seeing the violation of the sabbath, he contendeth with the nobles of Judah, 15—18. He shutteth the gates, and setteth a watch at them, 19—22. The punishment of marrying with strange wives, 23—28. Nehemiah's prayer, 29—31.

ON that day ^a†† they read in the book of Moses in the [†] audience of the people; and therein was found written, ^b that the Ammonite and the Moabite should not come into the congregation of God for ever;

On that day; not now presently after the dedication of the wall, and gates, and city, but upon a certain day, as that phrase is very commonly used in Scripture without any relation to the time or things mentioned next before it, to wit, when Nehemiah was returned again from the Persian court to Jerusalem, from which he had been absent for some considerable time, in which some errors and abuses had crept in, which now he endeavours to remove. In the audience of the people; partly because it was not only the priests', but also the people's, duty to study and understand God's law and their own duty; and partly that the people hearing that this was the express mind and will of the great God, might the more willingly yield to the following duties, some of which were attended with difficulty, and required self-denial. Should not come into the congregation of God, i. e. not be incorporated into the commonwealth of Israel, nor be joined with any Israelite in marriage relation, as appears from ver. 3; that practice being a plain comment upon this law. But of this and the next verse, see the notes on Deut. xxiii. 3, 4.

2 Because they met not the children of Israel with bread and with water, but ^c hired Balaam against them, that he should curse them: ^d howbeit our God turned the curse into a blessing.

3 Now it came to pass, when they had heard the law, ^e that they separated from Israel all the mixed multitude.

i. e. All the heathenish people with whom they had contracted alliances. See chap. ix. 2; Ezra x. 3.

4 ¶ And before this, Eliashib the priest, [†] having the oversight of the chamber of the house of our God, was allied unto Tobiah:

Eliashib the priest; the high priest, chap. iii. 1, or some other priest so called, there being divers Eliashibs in or about this time, Ezra x. 6, 24, 27, 36, though the first seems most probable, by comparing this verse with ver. 28, and with chap. xii. 10, 11. The oversight of the chamber, i. e. of the chambers, as appears from the following verse, and from ver. 9, where it is called chambers, and from the nature of the thing, the high priest having the chief power over the house of God, and all the chambers belonging to it. The singular number for the plural. Allied unto Tobiah, the Ammonite, and a violent enemy to God's people. So this is noted as a great blemish to Eliashib, and as the cause of his other miscarriage, noted ver. 5.

5 And he had prepared for him a great chamber, ^f where aforetime they laid the meat offerings, the frankincense, and the vessels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oil, [†] which was commanded to be given to the Levites, and the singers, and the porters; and the offerings of the priests.

He had prepared for him a great chamber; by removing the things which were in it, and uniting divers small chambers into one, and furnishing it for the use of Tobiah when he came to Jerusalem; whom he seems to have lodged there that he might have more free and secret communication with him, this being in a place where the people might not come.

6 But in all this time was not I at Jerusalem: ^h for in the two and thirtieth year of Artaxerxes king of Babylon came I unto the king, and [†] after certain days ^{||} obtained I leave of the king:

All this time was not I at Jerusalem; and Eliashib took the occasion of my absence to do these things, supposing that I would no more return thither. Came I unto the king, to wit, from Jerusalem; where he had been once and again. After certain days, Heb. in the end of days, or of a year, as that word oft signifies.

7 And I came to Jerusalem, and understood of the evil that Eliashib did for Tobiah, in ⁱ preparing him a chamber in the courts of the house of God.

8 And it grieved me sore: therefore I cast forth all the household stuff of Tobiah out of the chamber.

ⁱ ver. 1, 5.

It grieved me sore, that so sacred a place should be polluted by one who in many respects ought not to have come there, being no priest, a stranger, an Ammonite, and one of the worst of that people; and that all this should be done by the permission and order of the high priest, who by his office should have punished and reformed these things in others.

9 Then I commanded, and they ^{l 2 Chro. 29. 6, 15, 16, 18.} cleansed the chambers: and thither brought I again the vessels of the house of God, with the meat offering and the frankincense.

They cleansed the chambers, by such means and rites as were then usual in such cases. See Numb. xix. 9.

10 ¶ And I perceived that the portions ^{1 Mal. 3. 8.} of the Levites had not been given them: for the Levites and the singers, that did ^{m Num. 35. 2.} the work, were fled every one to ^m his field.

The portions of the Levites had not been given them; which might be either, 1. From this corrupt high priest Eliashib, who took their portions, as he did the sacred chambers, to his own use, or employed them for the entertainment of Tobiah, and his other great allies. Or, 2. From the people, who either out of covetousness reserved them to themselves, contrary to their own solemn agreement and covenant, chap. x. 37; or were so offended at Eliashib's horrid and manifest abuse of sacred things, that they abhorred the offering and service of God, as others did upon a like occasion, 1 Sam. ii. 17, and therefore neglected to bring in their tithes, &c., which they knew would be perverted to bad uses. Were fled every one to his field; to his possession in the country, being forced to do so for a livelihood.

11 Then ^{n ver. 17, 25. 1 Prov. 24. 4. o ch. 10. 39.} contended I with the rulers, and said, ^o Why is the house of God forsaken? And I gathered them together, and set them in their [†] place.

I sharply reproved those priests to whom the management of these things was committed, for neglect of their duty, and breach of their late solemn promise. Why is the house of God forsaken? you have not only injured men in withholding their dues, but you have occasioned the neglect of God's house and service. I gathered them together to Jerusalem, from their several country possessions, in which they were dispersed. Set them in their place; restored them to the exercise of their office.

12 ^{p ch. 10. 38. 39. & 12. 44.} Then brought all Judah the tithe of the corn and the new wine and the oil ^{h Or, storehouses.} unto the || treasuries.

Partly out of the respect which they had to Nehemiah, and to his command; and partly because they saw they would be applied to their proper uses, and not abused, as they had been.

13 ^{q ch. 12. 44. 2 Chr. 31. 12.} And I made treasurers over the treasuries, Shelemiah the priest, and Zadok the scribe, and of the Levites, Pedaiah: and [†] next to them was Hanan the son of Zaccur, the son of Mattaniah: for they were counted [†] faithful, and [†] their office was to distribute unto their brethren.

Zadok the scribe; the ecclesiastical scribe, who was to keep the accounts of the receipts and disbursements. They were counted faithful; by common fame, and the consent of those who knew them. Such he now sought out the more diligently, because he had late experience of the perfidiousness of the former trustees. To distribute unto their brethren, according to their several families, as the law had prescribed.

14 ^{s ver. 22, 31. ch. 5. 19. 4 Heb. It was upon them.} Remember me, O my God, concerning this, and wipe not out my [†] good deeds that I have done for the house of my God, and for the || offices thereof.

Concerning this: what I have done with an upright heart for thy house and service be pleased graciously to accept, and remember for my good, according to thy promise.

15 ¶ In those days saw I in Judah ^{t Ex. 20. 10.} some treading wine presses [†] on the sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, ^{u Jer. 17. 21, 22. ch. 10. 31.} which they brought into Jerusalem on the sabbath day: and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals.

I protested against the action, and admonished them to forbear it.

16 There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem.

Which brought fish, which they might take in the sea near Joppa, or bring from Tyre to Joppa by sea, and thence to Jerusalem, which was but a small journey. In Jerusalem, the holy city, where God's house and presence was, and where the great judicatories of the nation were. So this is added as an aggravation of their sin, that this was done with manifest contempt both to God and men.

17 ^{x ver. 11.} Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath day?

The nobles of Judah, i. e. their chief men and rulers; whom he chargeth with this sin, because though others did it, it was by their countenance or connivance, and they should and might have punished and restrained it.

18 ^{y Jer. 17. 21, 22, 23.} Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the sabbath.

All this evil upon us; which you so well and sadly remember, that I need not tell you the particulars.

19 And it came to pass, that when the gates of Jerusalem ^{z Lev. 23. 32.} began to be dark before the sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the sabbath: ^{a Jer. 17. 21, 22.} and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the sabbath day.

When the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark; which was about sun-setting, by reason of the mountains which were round about and near Jerusalem, Psal. cxxv. 2. Some of my servants set I at the gates, out of a diffidence in those to whom the keeping of the gates was committed.

20 So the merchants and sellers of all kind of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice.

21 Then I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye [†] about the wall? if ye do so again, I will lay hands on you. From that time forth came they no more on the sabbath.

I will lay hands on you; I will punish you, and seize your goods. For this was a temptation to covetous or needy Jews, that lived in or near the city, to steal opportunities of buying their commodities, which then they might do with more advantage.

22 And I commanded the Levites that ^{b ch. 12. 30.} they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates, to sanctify the sabbath day. ^{c ver. 14, 31.} Remember me, O my God, concerning this also, and spare me according to the || greatness of ^{l Or, multitude.} thy mercy.

That they should cleanse themselves; partly because the work they were now set upon, though common in its nature, yet was holy in design of it, and had respect unto the sabbath; and partly because the day in which they were to do this was the sabbath day, for the observation whereof they were obliged to prepare and purify themselves. Keep the gates; either, 1. The gates of the temple. But a particular command was superfluous in that case, because it was their constant work and charge to do this, both sabbath days and every day. Or rather, 2. The gates of the city; for of them he spake last, ver. 19; and not daring to trust the common porters of those gates, not being able always to employ his men in that work, he committeth the charge of them for the present season, and upon the sabbath days, to the Levites, to whom the care of sanctifying the sabbath did properly belong. According to the greatness of thy mercy; whereby he intimates, that though he mentioned his good works as things wherewith God was well pleased, and which he had promised to reward, yet he neither did nor durst trust to their merit, or his own worthiness; but when he had done all, he judged himself an unprofitable servant, and one that needed God's infinite mercy and indulgence to pardon all his sins, and particularly those infirmities and corruptions which adhered to his good deeds.

23 ¶ In those days also saw I Jews that † had married wives of Ashdod, of Ammon, and of Moab;

Ashdod; a city of the Philistines, 1 Sam. v. 1, 2, &c.
24 And their children spake half in the speech of Ashdod, and † could not speak in the Jews' language, but according to the language † of each people.

Which their mothers instilled into them, together with their principles and manners.

25 And I contended with them, and cursed them, and smote certain of them, and plucked off their hair, and made them swear by God, saying, Ye shall not give your daughters unto their sons, nor take their daughters unto your sons, or for yourselves.

Cursed them, i. e. caused them to be excommunicated and cast out of the society and privileges of God's people. This and the following punishments were justly inflicted upon them, because this transgression was contrary both to a very plain and express law of God, and also to their own late solemn covenants and promises, of which see Ezra x.; Neh. x. 30. Smote certain of them, i. e. I caused to be beaten with stripes, according to the law, Deut. xxv. 2, those whose faults were most aggravated by their quality or other circumstances; to whom he added this punishment over and besides the former. Plucked off their hair, or, shaved them. The hair was an ornament and ensign of liberty among the eastern nations; and baldness was a disgrace and token of slavery and sorrow. See Isa. iii. 24; xv. 2; Jer. xlviii. 37; Ezek. xxix. 18.

26 Did not Solomon king of Israel sin by these things? yet among many nations was there no king like him, who was beloved of his God, and God made him king over all Israel: nevertheless even him did outlandish women cause to sin.

27 Shall we then hearken unto you to do all this great evil, to transgress against our God in marrying strange wives?

Shall we then hearken unto you? shall we justify our action by permitting or not punishing it? God forbid.

28 And one of the sons of Joiada, the son of Eliashib the high priest, was son in law to Sanballat the Horonite: therefore I chased him from me.

Joiada; said by Josephus to be that Manasses who by Sanballat's interest procured liberty to build the Samaritan temple in Mount Gerizim; to which those priests who had married strange wives, or been otherwise criminal, betook themselves, and with or after them others of the people in the same or like circumstances. I chased him from me, i. e. from my presence and court, and from the city and temple, and all the privileges of the priesthood, and from the whole congregation and church of Israel, whereof I am a member.

29 Remember them, O my God, † because they have defiled the priesthood, and the covenant of the priesthood, and of the Levites.

That covenant made between me and his progenitors for themselves and their posterity, whereby I promised to give them an everlasting priesthood, Numb. xxv. 12, 13, and they covenanted with me that they would faithfully and holily execute that sacred function according to the rules which I gave them, whereby, among other things, they were enjoined to keep themselves pure from all unlawful marriages, and from all other things which might pollute them or the priesthood.

30 Thus cleansed I them from all strangers, and appointed the wards of the priests and the Levites, every one in his business;

31 And for the wood offering, at times appointed, and for the firstfruits. Remember me, O my God, for good.

For the wood-offering and the first-fruits; and particularly I took care for these things, because they had been lately neglected.

THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

This book was constantly received for a part of the canon of the Scripture by the people of the Jews, whose authority herein is the more considerable, because to them were committed the oracles of God, Rom. iii. 2, to keep them safely, and transmit them carefully to posterity. And it is a very strong presumption that they were true to their trust, that our blessed Lord, and his holy apostles, who taxed the Jews with many faults, both greater and less, never charged them with unfaithfulness herein; which, if the Jews had been guilty, they would certainly have done, and by their office were obliged to do it, for the instruction and caution of the Christian church, whose faith was built no less upon the writings of the prophets than upon the doctrine of the apostles. The penman of it is both by Jewish and Christian interpreters, ancient and modern, thought to be Mordecai; who was both a holy man of God, and a principal actor in this history; and therefore who so fit and proper for it as himself?

NOW it came to pass in the days of ^aAhasuerus, (this is Ahasuerus which reigned, ^bfrom India even unto Ethiopia, ^cover an hundred and seven and twenty provinces:)

Quest. Who was this king? Ans. It is confessed and manifest that this was one of the kings of Persia; but which of them it was is not yet agreed, nor is it of any necessity for us now to know. But it is sufficiently evident that this was either, 1. Darius Hystaspes, as divers both Jewish and Christian writers affirm; for his kingdom was thus vast, and he subdued India, as Herodotus reports; and one of his wives was called Atossa, which differs little from Hadassah, which is Esther's other name, Esth. ii. 7. Or, 2. Xerxes, whose wife, as Herodotus notes, was called Amestris, which is not much differing from Esther; by whom all these things were transacted whilst he was potent and prosperous, before his unhappy expedition against the Grecians. Or, 3. Artaxerxes Longimanus, to whom the characters of Ahasuerus represented in this book do not disagree. And whereas it is objected, that by this account Mordecai must be a man of about a hundred and forty years, and consequently Esther, who is called his uncle's daughter, chap. ii. 7, must be too old to make a wife for the king; as for Mordecai, it may be granted, there being divers instances of persons of greater age than that in sacred and profane historians; and for Esther, it may be said that she was his uncle's granddaughter, nothing being more frequent than for the names of sons or daughters to be given to more remote posterity. An hundred and seven and twenty provinces; so seven new provinces were added to those hundred and twenty mentioned Dan. vi. 1.

2 That in those days, when the king Ahasuerus ^dsat on the throne of his kingdom, which was in ^eShushan the palace,

Sat on the throne of his kingdom, i. e. either was lately advanced to it, or rather was settled in the peaceable possession of it. The palace; or, the castle; or, the chief or royal city, as both Jewish and Christian interpreters render it. Shushan might be the proper name of the palace, which thence was given to the whole city. Here the kings of Persia used to keep their courts chiefly in winter, as ordinarily they were in Ecbatana in summer.

3 In the third year of his reign, he ^fmade a feast unto all his princes and his servants; the power of Persia and Media, the nobles and princes of the provinces, being before him:

The power of Persia, i. e. the mighty men; the chief officers of state, and commanders of all his forces; whom by this splendid entertainment he endeavoured to oblige and assure to himself.

4 When he shewed the riches of his glorious kingdom and the honour of his excellent majesty many days, even an hundred and fourscore days.

Making every day a magnificent feast, either for all his princes, or for some of them, who might come to the feast successively, as the king ordered them to do. The Persian feasts are much celebrated in authors for their length and luxury.

5 And when these days were expired, the king made a feast unto all the people that were ^gpresent in Shushan the palace, both unto great and small, seven days, in the court of the garden of the king's palace;

All the people that were present; both such as constantly resided there, and such as were come thither upon their occasions, of whatsoever condition or quality. In the court of the garden: the Persian gardens were exceeding large and pleasant.

6 Where were white, green, and ^hblue, ⁱhangings, fastened with cords of fine linen and purple to silver rings and pillars of marble: ^jthe beds were of gold and silver, upon a pavement ^kof red, and blue, and white, and black, marble.

The beds; for in those eastern countries and ancient times they did not sit at tables, as we do, but rested or leaned upon beds; of which we have many testimonies, both in Scripture, as Esth. vii. 8; Amos ii. 8; vi. 4; John xiii. 23, and in all other authors.

7 And they gave them drink in vessels of gold, (the vessels being diverse one from another,) and ^lroyal wine in abundance, ^maccording to the state of the king.

8 And the drinking was according to the law; none did compel: for so the king had appointed to all the officers of his house, that they should do according to every man's pleasure.

According to the law, none did compel, i. e. according to this law which the king had now made, that none should compel another to drink more than he pleased; which the Persians and other loose and heathenish nations used to do, though that practice was condemned by the wise and sober heathens, and among others by this great prince. Or, no man did compel another to drink, according to the law, i. e. as by the laws or orders of the Persians prescribed and used in their feasts they might have done, if not restrained by this law.

9 Also Vashti the queen made a feast for the women in the royal house which belonged to king Ahasuerus.

Whilst the king entertained the men; for this was the common custom of the Persians, that men and women did not feast together, but in several places.

10 ¶ On the seventh day, when ⁿthe heart of the king was merry with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, ^oHarbona, Bigtha, and Abagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the seven ^pchamberlains that served in the presence of Ahasuerus the king, Chamberlains, or eunuchs; which were much in use and in favour in the eastern courts, and particularly with the Persian emperors, as ancient histories inform us.

11 To bring Vashti the queen before the king with the crown royal, to shew the people and the princes her beauty: for she was ^qfair to look on.

12 But the queen Vashti refused to come at the king's commandment ^rby his chamberlains: therefore was the king very wroth, and his anger burned in him.

Vashti refused to come; being favoured in this refusal by the laws and customs of Persia, which was to keep men's wives, and especially queens, as much as might be from the view of other men.

13 ¶ Then the king said to the ^swise men, ^twhich knew the times, (for so was the king's manner toward all that knew law and judgment:

Which knew the times; either, 1. The histories of former times, what princes have done in such cases as this was. Or, 2. Things done or to be done in time; what was just and fit to be done, or what was the law and judgment in these cases, as the following words explain it, and how and when things were to be done. See my notes on 1 Chron. xii. 32. Times are oft put in Scripture and other authors for the things done in them, by a common figure called a metonymy of the adjunct. So was the king's manner, to wit, to consult with them in all matters of moment.

14 And the next unto him was Carshe-na, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena, and Memucan, the ^m seven princes of Persia and Media, ⁿ which saw the king's face, and which sat the first in the kingdom;)

Which saw the king's face; which had constant freedom of access to the king, and familiar converse with him; which is thus expressed, because the Persian kings were very seldom seen by their subjects. Which sat the first in the kingdom; which were his chief counsellors and officers, and had the precedence from all others.

15 † What shall we do unto the queen Vashti according to law, because she hath not performed the commandment of the king Ahasuerus by the chamberlains?

16 And Memucan answered before the king and the princes, Vashti the queen hath not done wrong to the king only, but also to all the princes, and to all the people that are in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus.

Memucan, though last named, spake first, either because the king first asked him; or because he was the chief of them all, either in dignity or in reputation; or because it then was, as now it is in many places, the custom for the youngest counsellors or judges to deliver their opinion first.
To all the people; by giving them an example and encouragement to contemn and disobey their husbands. It is a crime of a high nature, and therefore deserves an exemplary punishment.

17 For this deed of the queen shall come abroad unto all women, so that they shall ^o despise their husbands in their eyes, when it shall be reported, The king
Ahasuerus commanded Vashti the queen to be brought in before him, but she came not.

18 Likewise shall the ladies of Persia and Media say this day unto all the king's princes, which have heard of the deed of the queen.
Thus shall there arise too much contempt and wrath.

Contempt in the wives, and thereupon wrath in the husbands; and consequently strife in families; which may produce great and general mischiefs.

19 † If it please the king, let there go a royal commandment † from him, and let it be written among the laws of the Persians and the Medes, † that it be not altered, That Vashti come no more before king Ahasuerus; and let the king give her royal estate † unto another that is better than she.

If it please the king, which this cunning politician knew it would do. That it be not altered; which caution was necessary for his own security; for if the queen should recover her state and the king's favour, he was most likely to fall into his displeasure.

20 And when the king's decree which he shall make shall be published throughout all his empire, (for it is great,) all the wives shall ^p give to their husbands honour, both to great and small.

21 And the saying † pleased the king and the princes; and the king did according to the word of Memucan:

The saying pleased the king and the princes; partly because their own authority and interest was concerned in it; and especially by the singular providence of God, who designed to bring about his own great work by this small occasion.

22 For he sent letters into all the king's provinces, ^q into every province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language, that every man should ^r bear rule in his own house, and † that it should be published according to the language of every people.

That all sorts of persons, not men only, (who by study or travel many times understand divers languages,) but the women also, might understand it, and therefore be inexcusable if they did not comply with it; for which end it was not only written in each language, for that writing might come but to few hands, but moreover it was published in the several cities and towns by such persons as used to publish the king's edicts. Others, that he should speak in the language of his own people, i. e. that men should not, in compliance with their wives, who were oft of other nations and languages, inure themselves to it, and bring their wives' language into the family; but that men should use their own proper language, and cause their wives and children to use it; this being one sign of dominion, and therefore frequent after this time among the Greeks and Romans, who, together with their victorious arms, brought in their language into other countries, and in a great measure imposed it upon them.

CHAP. II.

The virgins of the kingdom being gathered together, a queen is to be chosen, 1—4. Esther, nursed by Mordecai, is chosen to be one of the virgins, 5—8; and preferred before the rest, 9—11. The manner of her purification, 12—14. She pleaseth the king, and is made queen, 15—17. The king makes a feast for his princes and servants, 18—20. Mordecai discovereth a treason against the king, 21, 22; which is recorded in their chronicles, 23.

AFTER these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased, he remembered Vashti, and what she had done, and ^a what was decreed against her.

He remembered Vashti with grief and shame, that in his wine and rage he had so severely punished, and so irrevocably rejected, so beautiful and desirable a person, and that for so small a provocation, to which she was easily led by the modesty of her sex, and by the laws and customs of Persia.

2 Then said the king's servants that ministered unto him, Let there be fair young virgins sought for the king:

The king's servants, for their own interests, were obliged to quiet the king's mind, and procure him another amiable consort.

3 And let the king appoint officers in all the provinces of his kingdom, that they may gather together all the fair young virgins unto Shushan the palace, to the house of the women, † unto the custody of † Hege the king's chamberlain, keeper of the women; and let their things for purification be given them:

Keeper of the women; either, 1. Of the virgins, who are oft called women, as here, ver. 11, 12, and elsewhere. So it is a synecdoche. Or, 2. Of all the women, both virgins and concubines; only the virgins he himself took care of, as requiring more care and caution, and the concubines he committed to Shaashgaz, ver. 14, his deputy. For purification, i. e. to cleanse them from all impurities and indecencies, to anoint, and perfume, and adorn, and every way prepare them for the king's presence and service; for the legal purifications of the Jews he never regarded.

4 And let the maiden which pleaseth the king be queen instead of Vashti. And the thing pleased the king; and he did so.

Who had been carried away: this may be referred either, 1. To Kish, Mordecai's grandfather last mentioned; or, 2. To Mordecai, who was then carried away, either, 1. In the loins of his parents, in which sense Levi is said to be tithed in Abraham, Heb. vii.; and as those persons named Ezra ii. are said to have been carried away by Nebuchadnezzar, Ezra ii. 1, which is not true of the most of them in their own persons, but only as in their fathers' loins. Or, 2. In his own person; and then indeed he was a man of more than ordinary years. But of that see the notes on chap. i. 1.

7 And he † brought up Hadassah, that is, Esther, ^c his uncle's daughter: for she had neither father nor mother, and the maid was † fair and beautiful; whom Mordecai, when her father and mother were dead, took for his own daughter.

That is, Esther; Hadassah was her Hebrew name before her marriage, and she was called Esther by the king after it.

d ver. 3. 8 ¶ So it came to pass, when the king's commandment and his decree was heard, and when many maidens were ^a gathered together unto Shushan the palace, to the custody of Hegai, that Esther was brought also unto the king's house, to the custody of Hegai, keeper of the women.

Esther was brought, or taken, and that by force, as that word oft signifies. So great was the power and tyranny of the Persian kings, that they could and did take what persons they liked to their own use.

e ver. 3, 12. † Heb. her portions.

9 And the maiden pleased him, and she obtained kindness of him; and he speedily gave her her ^e things for purification, with † such things as belonged to her, and seven maidens, which were meet to be given her, out of the king's house: and † he preferred her and her maids unto the best place of the house of the women.

The maiden pleased him; partly because she was very beautiful, and therefore he supposed she would be very acceptable to the king, which would be his advantage; and partly by the Divine Power, which moveth the hearts of men which way he pleaseth.

f ver. 20. 10 ^f Esther had not shewed her people nor her kindred: for Mordecai had charged her that she should not shew it.

Lest the knowledge hereof should either make her contemptible or odious, or bring some inconvenience to the whole nation, as things might happen. But there was also a hand of God in causing this to be concealed, for the better accomplishment of that which he designed, though Mordecai was ignorant of it.

† Heb. to know the peace.
cir. 515.
11 And Mordecai walked every day before the court of the women's house, † to know how Esther did, and what should become of her.

12 ¶ Now when every maid's turn was come to go in to king Ahasuerus, after that she had been twelve months, according to the manner of the women, (for so were the days of their purifications accomplished, to wit, six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and with other things for the purifying of the women;)

According to the manner of the women; who were kept so long, partly, for their better purification, as it here follows; partly, out of state, as that which became so great a king; and partly, that being so long in safe custody, the king might be sure that the child begotten upon any of them was his own. With oil of myrrh; which is useful both for making the skin exactly clean, and smooth, and solid, and for giving strength and vigour to the body. With sweet odours; which was the more necessary, because the bodies of men and women in those hot countries did of themselves yield very ill scents, if not corrected and qualified by art.

13 Then thus came every maiden unto the king; whatsoever she desired was given her to go with her out of the house of the women unto the king's house.

Then thus; thus purified and prepared; and thus as it follows. Whatsoever she desired, for ornament, or by way of attendance.

14 In the evening she went, and on the morrow she returned into the second house of the women, to the custody of Shaashgaz, the king's chamberlain, which kept the concubines: she came in unto the king no more, except the king delighted in her, and that she were called by name.

Darius Nothus is reckoned to have had three hundred and sixty concubines.

15 ¶ Now when the turn of Esther, ^{cir. 515.} the daughter of Abihail the uncle of Mordecai, who had taken her for his daughter, was come to go in unto the king, she required nothing but what Hegai the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed. And Esther obtained favour in the sight of all them that looked upon her.

She required nothing, to show that she was not desirous to please the king, and that she was brought to the king without and against her own inclination and choice. Esther obtained favour in the sight of all them that looked upon her, i. e. was admired by them for her beauty.

16 So Esther was taken unto king Ahasuerus into his house royal in the tenth month, which is the month Tebeth, in the seventh year of his reign.

Into his house royal; and into his bed, as is implied; to which it is not strange if she, though a virtuous person, did in those circumstances yield, considering the infirmity of human nature, and of that sex, and the state of those times, when plurality of wives was permitted, and concubines were owned as wives; and these virgins were by this action made his wives or concubines. Besides, it is not known to us whether Mordecai and Esther had not direction or a dispensation from God in this matter; it being certain that God can dispense with his own positive laws.

17 And the king loved Esther above all the women, and she obtained grace and † favour † in his sight more than all the virgins; so that he set the royal crown upon her head, and made her queen instead of Vashti.

18 Then the king ^h made a great feast ^{cir. 514.} unto all his princes and his servants, even Esther's feast; and he made a † release ^{h ch. 1. 3.} to the provinces, and gave gifts, according to the state of the king. ^{+ Heb. rest.}

He made a release to the provinces, i. e. he took off a good part of those heavy taxes which the Persian kings laid upon their people.

19 And when the virgins were gathered together the second time, then Mordecai sat

The second time; either, 1. When Esther, with others, were brought to the king's house, as it was decreed above, ver. 2, 3, which is called the second time, because they had taken this course once before, when Vashti was chosen queen. But there is no mention of any such former use; and by the manner of proposing it seems to have been a new project. Or, 2. Since Esther was declared queen; for though that point was determined, the king's lust was not yet satisfied; and therefore being pleased with the former experiment, he desired another collection of virgins, whom he might make his concubines. And this seems best to agree with the following words. For it is not probable that Mordecai sat at the king's gate till Esther was queen; for till then he only walked before the court of the women's house, as is expressed, ver. 11. Mordecai sat in the king's gate; either, 1. Voluntarily, to learn the progress of affairs. Or rather, 2. By office, as one of the king's guard or ministers; being advanced to this place by Esther's favour, though without any discovery of her relation to him.

20 ^b Esther had not yet shewed her kindred nor her people; as Mordecai had charged her: for Esther did the commandment of Mordecai, like as when she was brought up with him.

Or, 2. To the book, which was laid up before the king, that he might more easily and frequently peruse it for his own delight or direction.

CHAP. III.

Haman is advanced by the king, 1, 2. Being despised by Mordecai, he seeketh to destroy all the Jews, 2—6. He casteth lots, 7; and accusing the Jews to the king, obtaineth a decree to put them to death, 8—11. Letters issued out to destroy all the Jews, 12—15.

cir. 510.

AFTER these things did king Ahasuerus promote ^a Haman the son of Hammedatha the ^b Agagite, and advanced him, and set his seat above all the princes that were with him.

The Agagite, i. e. an Amalekite of the royal seed of that nation, whose kings were commonly and successively called Agag, as hath been observed before. It is true, he is called a Macedonian in the apocryphal additions to this book; and so he might be by his birth or habitation in that place, though by his original he was of another people. Set his seat above all the princes that were with him; gave him the first place and seat, which was next to the king. Compare 2 Kings xxv. 28.

2 And all the king's servants, that were ^c in the king's gate, bowed, and revered Haman: for the king had so commanded concerning him. But Mordecai ^d bowed not, nor did him reverence.

The reason of which obstinate refusal was, either, 1. The quality of the person; that he was not only an infamously wicked man, and a heathen, but of that nation which God had obliged the Israelites to abhor and oppose from generation to generation; and therefore he durst not show outward respect to a man whom he did and ought inwardly to contemn. Or rather, 2. The nature of the thing; for the worship required was not only civil, but Divine; which as the kings of Persia did undoubtedly arrogate to themselves, and expect and receive from their subjects and others who came into their presence, as is affirmed by divers authors; so they did sometimes impart this honour to some of their chief favourites, that they should be adored in like manner. And that it was so here seems more than probable, because it was wholly superfluous, and almost ridiculous, to give an express and particular command to all the king's servants that were in the king's gate, as here it was, to pay a civil respect to so great a prince, which of course they used and were ever obliged to do; and therefore a Divine honour must be here intended. And that a Jew should deny this honour, or the outward expressions of it, to such a person, is not strange, seeing the wise and sober Grecians did positively refuse to give this honour to the kings of Persia themselves, even when they were to make their addresses to them; and one Timocrates was put to death by the Athenians for worshipping Darius in that manner.

3 Then the king's servants, which were in the king's gate, said unto Mordecai, Why transgressest thou the ^e king's commandment?

4 Now it came to pass, when they spake daily unto him, and he hearkened not unto them, that they told Haman, to see whether Mordecai's matters would stand: for he had told them that he was a Jew.

Whether Mordecai's matters would stand, i. e. whether he would persist in his refusal, and what the event of it would be. He had told them that he was a Jew; and therefore did not deny this reverence to Haman out of pride, or any personal grudge against him, much less out of a rebellious mind and contempt of the king's authority and command; but merely out of conscience, because he was a Jew, who was obliged to give this honour to none but to God only.

5 And when Haman saw that Mordecai ^f bowed not, nor did him reverence, then was Haman ^g full of wrath.

6 And he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone; for they had shewed him the people of Mordecai: wherefore Haman ^h sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai.

He thought scorn; he thought that particular vengeance was unsuitable to his quality, and to the greatness of the injury. Haman sought to destroy all the Jews; which he attempted, partly, from that implacable hatred which, as an Amalekite, he had against them; partly, from his rage against Mordecai; and partly, from Mordecai's reason of this contempt, because he was a Jew, which, as he truly judged, extended itself to all the Jews, and would equally engage them all in the same neglect and hatred of his person.

7 ¶ In the first month, that is, the month Nisan, in the twelfth year of king Ahasuerus, ⁱ they cast Pur, that is, the lot, before Haman from day to day, and from month to month, to the twelfth month, that is, the month Adar.

The diviners cast lots, according to the custom of those ancient and eastern people, what day and what month would be most lucky, not for his success with the king, (of whose compliance with his request he made no doubt,) but for the most effectual and universal extirpation of the Jews; wherein appears both his implacable malice, and unwearied diligence in seeking vengeance of them with so much and so long trouble to himself; and God's singular providence in disposing the lot to that time, that so the Jews might have sufficient space of time to get the decree reversed, as they did.

8 ¶ And Haman said unto king Ahasuerus, There is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the people in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and their laws are diverse from all people; neither keep they the king's laws: therefore it is not † for the king's profit to suffer them.

1 Esdr. 4. 13. Acts 16. 20.

+ Heb. meet, or, equal.

There is a certain people, mean and contemptible, not worthy to be named. Dispersed among the people; who therefore, if tolerated, may poison all thy subjects with their pernicious principles; and whom thou mayst easily crush without any great noise or difficulty. In all the provinces of thy kingdom; for though many of their brethren were returned to their own land, yet great numbers of them staid behind, either because they preferred their ease and worldly commodities before their spiritual advantages, or because they wanted conveniency or opportunity for a remove, which might happen from divers causes. Their laws are diverse from all people; they have peculiar and fantastical rites, and customs, and religion; and therefore are justly offensive to all thy people, and may either infect them with their conceits, or occasion great dissensions and distractions among them. Neither keep they the king's laws; as is manifest by Mordecai's bold contempt of thy late edict concerning me, which being done by him as a Jew, the whole nation are involved in his crime, and are prepared to do so when they have occasion. It is not for the king's profit to suffer them to live in his kingdom. I do not seek herein so much my own revenge as thy service.

9 If it please the king, let it be written † that they may be destroyed; and I will † pay ten thousand talents of silver to the hands of those that have the charge of the business, to bring it into the king's treasuries.

+ Heb. to destroy them. + Heb. soeigh.

Let it be written; let there be a written edict from the king. Ten thousand talents of silver; whether these were Hebrew, or Babylonish, or Grecian talents we cannot certainly know; but whichever they were, it was a vast sum to be paid out of his own estate, which he was willing to sacrifice to his revenge. The charge of the business; either, 1. Of this business, to wit, of destroying the Jews; which as soon as they have procured to be done, I will pay the money into their hands, that by them it may be paid into the king's exchequer. Or rather, 2. Of the king's business, or of the treasures, as is implied in the following words. I will pay it to the king's receivers, that they may put it into the king's treasures.

10 And the king took his ring from his hand, and gave it unto Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, the Jews' enemy.

1 Gen. 41. 42. in ch. 9. 2, 8.

1 Or, oppressor, ch. 7. 6.

Gave it unto Haman; that he might keep it as a badge of his supreme authority under the king, and that he might use it for the sealing of this decree which now he desired, or of any other, as hereafter he should see fit. Compare chap. viii. 2, 8, and Gen. xli. 42. The Jews' enemy; so he was, both by inclination, as he was an Amalekite, and especially by this malicious and destructive design and resolution.

11 And the king said unto Haman, The silver is given to thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee.

The silver is given to thee; keep it to thy own use, I do not desire it, I accept thy offer for the deed.

12 Then were the king's scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month, and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language; in the name of king Ahasuerus was it written, and sealed with the king's ring.

Then were the king's scribes called: this he did so speedily, though it was a year before the intended execution, lest the king should change his mind, either by his own clemency, or by the persuasion of others.

13 And the letters were sent by posts into all the king's provinces, to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish, all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in one day, even upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar, and to take the spoil of them for a prey.

u ch. 8. 13, 14.

15 The posts went out, being hastened by the king's commandment, and the decree was given in Shushan the palace. And the king and Haman sat down to drink; but the city Shushan was perplexed.

x See ch. 6. 15. Prov. 29. 2.

By the king's commandment; either by this decree made in the king's name, or by some particular and succeeding command, which Haman could easily obtain from the king. The city Shushan was perplexed; not only the Jews, but a great number of the citizens, either because they were related to them, or engaged with them in worldly concerns; or out of humanity and compassion towards so vast a number of innocent people, now appointed as sheep for the slaughter; or out of a fear either of some sedition and disturbance which might arise by this means; or of some damage which might accrue to themselves or friends, who haply under this pretence might be exposed to rapine or slaughter; or of a public judgment of God upon them all for so bloody a decree.

CHAP. IV.

The great mourning of Mordecai and the Jews, 1—3. He sheweth Esther the cause of it, and adviseth her to petition the king for her people, 4—9. She, excusing herself, is threatened by Mordecai, 10—14. She appoints a general fast, and resolves to go in to the king, 15—17.

WHEN Mordecai perceived all that was done, Mordecai rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth with ashes, and went out into the midst of the city, and cried with a loud and a bitter cry;

Partly, to express his deep sense of the mischief coming upon his people; partly, to move the pity of others to do what they could to prevent it; and partly, that by this means it might come to the queen's ear.

2 And came even before the king's gate: for none might enter into the king's gate clothed with sackcloth.

None might enter into the king's gate; and therefore he might not sit there, as he had hitherto done. Clothed with sackcloth, lest it should give the king any occasion of grief or trouble.

3 And in every province, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, there was great mourning among the Jews, and fasting, and weeping, and wailing; and † many lay in sackcloth and ashes.

† Heb. anek-cloth and ashes were laid under many, Is. 58, 5. Dan. 9, 3. † Heb. enacks.

4 ¶ So Esther's maids and her † chamberlains came and told it her. Then was the queen exceedingly grieved; and she sent raiment to clothe Mordecai, and to take away his sackcloth from him: but he received it not.

She sent raiment to clothe Mordecai; that so he might be capable of returning to his former place, if not of coming to her to acquaint her with the cause of that unusual sorrow.

5 Then called Esther for Hatach, one of the king's chamberlains, † whom he had appointed to attend upon her, and gave him a commandment to Mordecai, to know what it was, and why it was.

† Heb. ichon he had not before her.

6 So Hatach went forth to Mordecai unto the street of the city, which was before the king's gate.

7 And Mordecai told him of all that had happened unto him, and of ^d the sum of the money that Haman had promised to pay to the king's treasuries for the Jews, to destroy them.

d ch. 3, 9.

8 Also he gave him ^e the copy of the writing of the decree that was given at Shushan to destroy them, to shew it unto Esther, and to declare it unto her, and to charge her that she should go in unto the king, to make supplication unto him, and to make request before him for her people.

e ch. 3, 14, 15.

To charge her; not only in his own name, to whom she manifested a singular respect, though his relation to her was yet unknown, but also in the name of the great God.

9 And Hatach came and told Esther the words of Mordecai.

10 ¶ Again Esther spake unto Hatach, and gave him commandment unto Mordecai;

11 All the king's servants, and the people of the king's provinces, do know, that whosoever, whether man or woman, shall come unto the king into ^f the inner court, who is not called, ^g there is one law of his to put him to death, except such ^h to whom the king shall hold out the golden sceptre, that he may live: but I have not been called to come in unto the king these thirty days.

f ch. 5, 1.

h ch. 5, 2. & 8, 4.

The king's servants and the people do know, by common fame, of this received custom and law. Into the inner court, within which the king's residence and throne was. There is one law of his to put him to death: this was decreed, partly to maintain both the majesty and the safety of the king's person; and partly by the contrivance of the greater officers of state, that few or none might have access to the king but themselves and their friends. And many such severe laws there were in the Persian court, which profane historians relate, as that if any person looked upon one of the king's concubines, or wore any of his own clothes, or drunk of that water which he had appropriated to himself, and other such-like things, he was punished with death. I have not been called to come in unto the king these thirty days; which gives me just cause to suspect and fear that the king's affections are alienated from me, and therefore that neither my person nor petition will be acceptable to him.

12 And they told to Mordecai Esther's words.

13 Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews.

i. e. Being, or because thou art, in the king's house, and an eminent member of his family.

14 For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there † enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

† Heb. respiration. Job 9, 18.

From another place; from another hand, and by another means; which God can, and I am fully persuaded will, raise up. Thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed, by the righteous and dreadful judgment of God, punishing thy cowardice and self-seeking, and thy want of love to God, and to his and thy own people. Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this? It is probable God hath raised thee to this honour for this very season; and therefore go on courageously, and doubt not of the success.

15 ¶ Then Esther bade them return Mordecai this answer,

16 Go, gather together all the Jews that are † present in Shushan, and fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink ⁱ three days, night or day: I also and my maidens will fast likewise; and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law: ^k and if I perish, I perish.

† Heb. found. 1. Sec ch. 5, 1.

k See Gen. 43, 14.

Fast ye, and pray; which was the main business, to which fasting was only a help and a handmaid. Neither eat nor drink, to wit, so as you use to do, either deliciously or plentifully. Leave off your common meals, dinners by day, and suppers at night, and eat and drink no more than mere necessity requires; that so you may give yourselves to constant and fervent prayers, for which your ordinary repasts will unfit you. For it is not likely that she would impose the burden of absolute fasting so long upon all the Jews, which very few of them were able to endure. And so the like phrase is taken Acts xxvii. 33, where he saith, This is the fourteenth day that ye have continued fasting, having taking nothing. I also and my maidens; which she had chosen to attend upon her person, and were doubtless either of the Jewish nation, or proselyted by hers or others' means to that religion. Will fast likewise; which may belong, either, 1. To the thing only, that as they did fast, so she would. Or rather, 2. To the time of three days and three nights; for so she might do, though she went to the king on the third day. For the fast began at evening; and so she might continue her fast three whole nights, and two whole days, and the greatest part of the third; a part of a day being reputed a day in the account of Scripture, and other authors; of which see on Matt. xii. 40. Yea, she might fast all that day too; for it is probable she went not to the king till he had dined, when she supposed she might find him in the most mild and pleasant humour, and then returned to her apartment, where she fasted till the evening. Which is not according to the law; which is against the law now mentioned. If I perish, I perish: although my danger be great and evident, considering the expressness of that law, and the uncertainty of the king's mind, and that severity which he showed to my predecessor Vashti; yet rather than neglect my duty to God, and to his people, I will go to the king, and cast myself cheerfully and resolutely upon God's providence for my safety and success.

17 So Mordecai † went his way, and did according to all that Esther had commanded him.

CHAP. V.

Esther, venturing on the king's favour, hath the golden sceptre held out to her, 1—3. She inviteth the king and Haman to a banquet, 4, 5; and being encouraged by the king in her petition, 6, invites them to another banquet, 7, 8. Haman's joy, but angry with Mordecai for contemning him, 9—13. By the counsel of his wife he builds a gallows for him, 14.

^a See ch. 4. 16. NOW it came to pass ^a on the third day, that Esther put on her royal apparel, and stood in ^b the inner court of the king's house, over against the king's house: and the king sat upon his royal throne in the royal house, over against the gate of the house.

On the third day; of which see the notes on chap. iv. 16. Esther put on her royal apparel; that she might render herself as amiable in the king's eyes as she could, and so obtain her request.

^c See Esth. 15. 7, 8. Prov. 21. 1. d ch. 4. 11. & S. 4. 2 And it was so, when the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, that ^e she obtained favour in his sight: and ^d the king held out to Esther the golden sceptre that was in his hand. So Esther drew near, and touched the top of the sceptre.

The king held out the golden sceptre, in testimony that he pardoned her presumption, and accepted her person, and was ready to grant her petition. Esther touched the top of his sceptre, in token of her thankful acceptance of the king's great favour, and of her reverence and submission to his majesty, whereof that might possibly be a usual token, and it may be, at the king's call and invitation to her to come near to him.

^e So Mark 6. 23. 3 Then said the king unto her, What wilt thou, queen Esther? and what is thy request? ^f it shall be even given thee to the half of the kingdom.

4 And Esther answered, If it seem good unto the king, let the king and Haman come this day unto the banquet that I have prepared for him.

She invited Haman; partly that by showing such respect to the king's great favourite she might insinuate herself into the king's good opinion and affection; and partly that, if she saw fit, she might then present her request to the king.

5 Then the king said, Cause Haman to make haste, that he may do as Esther hath said. So the king and Haman came to the banquet that Esther had prepared.

^f ch. 7. 2. ^g ch. 9. 12. 6 ¶ ^h And the king said unto Esther at the banquet of wine, ⁱ What is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? even to the half of the kingdom it shall be performed.

At the banquet of wine; either, 1. At the latter end of the feast, when they used to drink wine more freely, whereas in the former part most of their drink was water. Or, 2. At her banquet; which is so called, because it consisted not of meats, which probably the king had plentifully eaten before at his own table, but of fruits and wines; which banquets were very frequent among the Persians.

7 Then answered Esther, and said, My petition and my request is :

^h Heb. to do. 8 If I have found favour in the sight of the king, and if it please the king to grant my petition, and ⁱ to perform my request, let the king and Haman come to the banquet that I shall prepare for them, and I will do to morrow as the king hath said.

I will acquaint thee with my humble request. She did not present her petition at this time, but delayed it till the next meeting; either through modesty, or because she was a little daunted with the king's presence, and had not yet good courage to propose her request; or in policy, because she would further engage the king's affection to her by a second entertainment, and would also intimate to him that her petition was of a more than ordinary nature; and principally by direction and disposition of the Divine Providence, which took away her courage or utterance for this time, that she might have a better opportunity for it the next time, by that great accident which happened before it.

9 ¶ Then went Haman forth that day joyful and with a glad heart: but when Haman saw Mordecai in the king's gate, ^h that he stood not up, nor moved for ^h ch. 3. 5. him, he was full of indignation against Mordecai.

Mordecai stood not up, nor moved for him; partly, lest he should seem or be interpreted to give him that adoration which he hitherto had justly denied; partly, because by his bloody and barbarous design and practice he had put off all humanity, and forfeited all respect; and partly, to show how little he feared him, and that he had a firm confidence in his God that he would deliver him and his people in this great exigence; which he was the more encouraged to hope, because God had inclined Esther's heart to that pious and valiant resolution of interceding with the king, which he doubted not would meet with good success.

10 Nevertheless Haman ⁱ refrained himself: and when he came home, he sent and ⁱ So 2 Sam. 13. 22. ⁺ Heb. caused to come. ⁺ called for his friends, and Zeresh his wife.

Haman refrained himself from taking present vengeance upon Mordecai, to which he was strongly inclined, and which he might easily have effected, either by his own or any of his servants' hands, without any expectation or fear of inconvenience to himself, who having obtained licence to destroy a whole nation, could easily get a pardon for having killed one obscure and infamous member of it. Herein therefore God's wise and powerful providence appeared in disposing Haman's heart, contrary to his own inclination and interest, and making him, as it were, to put fetters upon his own hands.

11 And Haman told them of the glory of his riches, and ^k the multitude of his ^k ch. 9. 7. &c. children, and all the things wherein the king had promoted him, and how he had ^l advanced him above the princes and ^l ch. 3. 1. servants of the king.

Haman told them of the glory of his riches; partly to gratify his own vain-glorious humour; and partly to aggravate Mordecai's impudence in denying him civil respect, and to alleviate his own vexation caused by it.

12 Haman said moreover, Yea, Esther the queen did let no man come in with the king unto the banquet that she had prepared but myself; and to morrow am I invited unto her also with the king.

Thus he makes that matter of glorying which was designed for and the occasion of his utter ruin. So ignorant are the wisest men, and subject to fatal mistakes; rejoicing when they have most cause of fear and grief, and sorrowing for those things which tend to joy and comfort.

13 Yet all this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate.

Availeth me nothing, i. e. gives me no content. Such torment did his envy and malice bring upon him. Sitting at the king's gate; enjoying that honour and privilege without disturbance, and denying me the worship due to me by my place, and by the king's command; though this last and the chief cause of his rage he was somewhat ashamed to express. Hither Mordecai was come, having laid by his sackcloth for this time, that he might be in a capacity of coming thither, and so of understanding how matters proceeded. Besides, this was a private fast, and so he was not obliged always to wear his sackcloth in public, during the whole time of the fast, though he did once come abroad with it, that the cause of it might be publicly known, and so come to Esther's ears.

14 ¶ Then said Zeresh his wife and all his friends unto him, Let a † gallows be made of fifty cubits high, and to-morrow speak thou unto the king that Mordecai may be hanged thereon: then go thou in merrily with the king unto the banquet. And the thing pleased Haman; and he caused *the gallows to be made.

Fifty cubits high; that it might be more conspicuous to all, and thereby be more disgraceful to Mordecai, and strike all Haman's enemies with the great dread of despising or opposing him.

CHAP. VI.

Ahasuerus's sleep being taken from him, he commands the chronicles to be read, 1. And reading of Mordecai's discovery of the plot against his life, asks what honour had been done to him, 2, 3. Haman coming to the king to have Mordecai hanged, unavours gives counsel to honour him, 4—11. Haman telling his friends what had befallen him, is foretold of his final ruin, 12, 13. He is called to Esther's banquet, 14.

ON that night † could not the king sleep, and he commanded to bring *the book of records of the chronicles; and they were read before the king.

How vain are all the contrivances and endeavours of this foolish, impotent man-against the wise and omnipotent God, who hath the hearts and hands of kings and all men perfectly at his dispose, and can by such trivial accidents (as they are accounted) change their minds, and produce such momentous and terrible effects! The king's mind being troubled, he knew not how, nor why, he commanded to bring the book of records of the chronicles; he chooseth this for a divertisement, God putting this thought and inclination to him, for otherwise he might have diverted himself, as he used to do at other times, with his wives or concubines, or voices and instruments of music, which was far more agreeable to his temper. And they were read before the king until the morning, when he intended to rise out of his bed.

2 And it was found written, that Mordecai had told of ¶ Bighana and Teresh, two of the king's chamberlains, the keepers of the † door, who sought to lay hand on the king Ahasuerus.

3 And the king said, What honour and dignity hath been done to Mordecai for this? Then said the king's servants that ministered unto him, There is nothing done for him.

He hath had no recompence for this great and good service; which might happen, either through the king's forgetfulness, or through the envy of the courtiers, or because he was a Jew, and therefore odious and contemptible.

4 ¶ And the king said, Who is in the court? Now Haman was come into ^b the outward court of the king's house, ^c to speak unto the king to hang Mordecai on the gallows that he had prepared for him.

Haman was come early in the morning, because his malice probably would not suffer him to sleep; and he was impatient till he had executed his desired revenge; and he was resolved to watch for the very first opportunity of speaking to the king, before he was engaged in other matters. Into the outward court of the king's house; where he waited, because it was dangerous to come into the inner court without special licence, chap. iv. 11.

5 And the king's servants said unto him, Behold, Haman standeth in the court. And the king said, Let him come in.

6 So Haman came in. And the king said unto him, What shall be done unto the man † whom the king delighteth to honour? Now Haman thought in his heart, To whom would the king delight to do honour more than to myself?

The king names none, because he would have the more impartial answer. And probably he knew nothing of the difference between Haman and Mordecai. Haman thought in his heart; as indeed he had great reason to presume, because he had not yet forfeited that favour which the king had showed to him above all others.

7 And Haman answered the king, For the man † whom the king delighteth to honour,

8 † Let the royal apparel be brought † which the king useth to wear, and ^d the horse that the king rideth upon, and the crown royal which is set upon his head:

The royal apparel; his outward garment, which was made of purple, interwoven with gold, as Justin and Curtius relate. The horse that the king rideth upon usually; which was well known, both by his excellency, and especially by his peculiar trappings and ornaments: compare 1 Kings i. 33. Upon his head; either, 1. Upon the king's head; or, 2. Upon the horse's head; which seems best to agree, 1. With that ancient Chaldee interpreter, and other Jews, who take it thus. 2. With the signification and order of the Hebrew words. 3. With the following verses, in which there is no further mention of this crown, but only of the apparel, and of the horse, to which the crown belonged, as one of his ornaments. 4. With the custom of the Persians, which some affirm to have been this, to put the crown upon the head of that horse upon which the king rode.

9 And let this apparel and horse be delivered to the hand of one of the king's most noble princes, that they may array the man withal whom the king delighteth to honour, and † bring him on horse-back through the street of the city, *and proclaim before him, Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

Proclaim before him, i. e. cause this to be proclaimed, to wit, by some public officer appointed for that service. Compare Gen. xli. 43.

10 Then the king said to Haman, Make haste, and take the apparel and the horse, as thou hast said, and do even so to Mordecai the Jew, that sitteth at the king's gate: † let nothing fail of all that thou hast spoken.

11 Then took Haman the apparel and the horse, and arrayed Mordecai, and brought him on horse-back through the street of the city, and proclaimed before him, Thus shall it be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

He proclaimed this either himself, or by the officer.

was not puffed up with all this honour. Besides, he came thither to attend the issue of the main business, and to be at hand to assist or encourage the queen, if need were; which now he was more capable of doing than hitherto he had been. Having his head covered, in token of his shame and grief for his unexpected and great disappointment of his hope and desire, and for the great honour done to his most despised and abhorred adversary, and this by his own hands, and with his own public disgrace; and for such further inconveniences as this unlucky omen seemed to pre-sage to him.

13 And Haman told Zeresh his wife and all his friends every thing that had befallen him. Then said his wise men and Zeresh his wife unto him, If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, before whom thou hast begun to fall, thou shalt not prevail against him, but shalt surely fall before him.

His wise men; the magicians, whom after the Persian manner he had called together to consult with upon this great and strange emergency. If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews; which they were told, and was generally supposed; but they were not infallibly sure of it. Thou shalt not prevail against him, but shalt surely fall before him: this they concluded, either, 1. By rules of policy, because Haman's reputation and interest was hereby sinking, and Mordecai (whom they understood to be a man of great wisdom, and courage, and government of himself) was now got into the king's favour, and thereby was likely to gain an opportunity of making his addresses to the king, who being of a mild disposition, might easily be moved to a dislike (if not revocation) of his own bloody decree, and consequently to a detestation of that person who had procured it. Or, 2. By former experience, and the observation of God's extraordinary actions on the behalf of the Jews, and against their enemies, in this very court and kingdom. Or, 3. By instinct and inspiration to their minds, either from God, who might suggest this to them, as he did other things to other wicked men, Balaam, Caiaphas, &c., for his own greater glory, and the good of his people; or from the devil, who, by God's permission, might know this, and reveal it to them, who sought to him in their superstitious and idolatrous methods.

14 And while they were yet talking with him, came the king's chamberlains, and hasted to bring Haman unto ^hthe banquet that Esther had prepared.

He was now slack to go thither, by reason of the great dejection of his own mind, and the fear of a worse entertainment from the king and queen than he had formerly received.

CHAP. VII.

Esther maketh a petition for her own and her people's life, 1-4. She accuseth Haman, who had determined to destroy the Jews, 5, 6. Haman is afraid, 6. The king in his anger, 7, 8, being informed of the gallows which Haman had built for Mordecai, causeth him to be hanged thereon, 9, 10.

SO the king and Haman came † to banquet with Esther the queen.

2 And the king said again unto Esther on the second day * at the banquet of wine, What is thy petition, queen Esther? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? and it shall be performed, even to the half of the kingdom.

The banquet of wine; so it is called, to note that it was not designed for a feast to fill their bellies, but rather for a banquet to delight and please their palates with wine and other delicacies: see on chap. v. 8.

3 Then Esther the queen answered and said, If I have found favour in thy sight, O king, and if it please the king, let my life be given me at my petition, and my people at my request:

It is my humble and only request, that thou wouldst not give me up to the malice of that man that designs to take away my life, and will certainly do it, if thou dost not prevent it. And my people; and the lives (which is easily supplied out of the foregoing branch) of my people the Jews, of whom I am descended.

4 For we are ^bsold, I and my people, † to be destroyed, to be slain, and to perish. But if we had been sold for bondmen and bondwomen, I had held my tongue, although the enemy could not countervail the king's damage.

We are sold by the craft and cruelty of that man, who offered a great sum of money to purchase our destruction. I and my people; for we are all given up to his malice and rage, without any exception of my own person. To be destroyed, to be slain, and to perish: she useth variety of expressions to make the deeper impression upon the king's mind. I had held my tongue, because that calamity had neither been irrecoverable, nor intolerable, nor yet unprofitable to the king, for whose honour and service I should willingly have submitted myself and people to any kind of bondage. The enemy could not countervail the king's damage; his ten thousand talents, if paid into the king's treasury, would not repair the king's loss in the customs and tributes which the king receives from the Jews within his dominions.

5 ¶ Then the king Ahasuerus answered and said unto Esther the queen, Who is he, and where is he, † that durst presume in his heart to do so?

Who is he? and where is he? The expressions are short and doubled, as proceeding from a discomposed and enraged mind. To do so, i. e. to circumvent me, and by subtlety to procure an irrevocable decree, whereby not only my estate should be so much impaired, and so many of my innocent subjects be destroyed without mercy, but my queen also should be involved in the same danger and destruction.

6 And Esther said, † The adversary and enemy is this wicked Haman. Then Haman was afraid || before the king and the queen.

The adversary and enemy of the king, and of my person and people.

7 ¶ And the king arising from the banquet of wine in his wrath went into the palace garden: and Haman stood up to make request for his life to Esther the queen; for he saw that there was evil determined against him by the king.

Went into the palace garden; partly, as disdaining the company and sight of so ungrateful and audacious a person; partly, to cool and allay his troubled and inflamed spirits; and partly, to consider within himself the heinousness of Haman's crime, and the mischief which himself had done by his own rashness, and what punishment was fit to be inflicted upon so great a delinquent. He saw, by the violent commotion of the king's mind and passions.

8 Then the king returned out of the palace garden into the place of the banquet of wine; and Haman was fallen upon * the bed whereon Esther was. Then said the king, Will he force the queen also † before me in the house? As the word went out of the king's mouth, they ^dcovered Haman's face.

Upon the bed; or, by or beside the bed; on which the queen sat at meat, after the manner; where he was fallen upon his knees, and upon the ground, at her feet, as humble suppliants used to do, and as the queen did at the king's feet, chap. viii. 3. Will he force the queen also? will he now attempt my queen's chastity, as he hath already attempted her life? Harbonah knew this either by his own observation, or by the information of some of his brethren, who were lately sent to Haman's house, chap. vi. 14, where they might easily see it, or at least hear of it. And this he said, either out of a distaste which he had taken against Haman for his great insolency and barbarous cruelty; or in compliance with the king's inclinations, and the queen's desires. Had spoken good for the king, even to the saving of the king's life, chap. ii. 21—23, and therefore deserved a better requital than this even from Haman, if he had not basely preferred the satisfaction of his own revenge before the preservation of the king's life.

CHAP. VIII.

Mordecai is advanced over the house of Haman, 1, 2. Esther maketh a petition to the king to reverse Haman's letters, 3—6. Ahasuerus granteth to Esther and Mordecai, 7, to write to the Jews to defend themselves, 8. Mordecai's letters in the king's name to defend themselves and destroy their assailants, 9—14. Mordecai's honour, and the Jews' joy, 15—17.

ON that day did the king Ahasuerus give the house of Haman the Jews' enemy unto Esther the queen. And Mordecai came before the king; for Esther had told ^awhat he was unto her.

a ch. 2. 7.

The house of Haman, with all his goods and estate, which being justly forfeited to the king, he no less justly bestows it upon the queen, to compensate the danger to which Haman had exposed her. Mordecai came before the king, i. e. was by the queen's desire admitted into the king's presence, and favour, and family, and, as it seems, made one of the seven princes. What he was unto her, i. e. how nearly he was related to her; which till this time she had wisely concealed, this being the fit season to declare it.

2 And the king took off ^bhis ring, which he had taken from Haman, and gave it unto Mordecai. And Esther set Mordecai over the house of Haman.

The king took off his ring; that ring which he had formerly given to Haman for that present or any further use, chap. iii. 10, he now gives to Mordecai, and with it that power and authority whereof this ring was a sign, making him, as Haman had been, the keeper of his signet. Esther set Mordecai over the house of Haman; as her steward, to manage that great estate for her as he thought fittest.

3 ¶ And Esther spake yet again before the king, and fell down at his feet, † and besought him with tears to put away the mischief of Haman the Agagite, and his device that he had devised against the Jews.

She useth various expressions, that she might insinuate herself into the king's favour, by such a full and repeated resignation and submission of herself to the king's good pleasure. To reverse the letters devised by Haman; she prudently takes off all the envy and hatefulness of the action from the king, and lays it upon Haman, who had for his own wicked and selfish ends contrived the whole business, and circumvented the king in it; which she allegeth as a reason why it should be repealed, because it was surreptitiously and craftily procured.

e ver. 1. Prov. 13. 22.

You see how ready I have been to grant your requests, and I do not repent of my favour to you, and am ready to grant your further desires, as far as the law will permit me to do.

8 Write ye also for the Jews, as it liketh you, in the king's name, and seal it with the king's ring: for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, ^fmay no man reverse.

f See ch. 1. 19. Dan. 6. 5, 12, 15.

For the Jews; on their behalf, to the governors and commanders of the king's forces, or to whom you please. Seal it with the king's ring; I offer you my authority and seal to confirm whatsoever you shall think fit to write. For the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, may no man reverse: this reason may belong either, 1. To the writing of these present letters; and so the sense is, These letters will be most effectual, being no less irrevocable than the former, and coming last will repeal the former. Or, 2. To the former letters, as a reason why he could not grant their desires in recalling them, because they were irrevocable by the law of the Medes and Persians. And this sense, though rejected by many, seems to be the truest, because here is no mention of reversing Haman's letters, which Esther had desired, ver. 5, and the king denied for the reason here alleged; and because the following letter doth not contain one word about the reversing of the former, nor doth it take away that power which was given to all rulers to destroy all the Jews, chap. iii. 12, 13, but

g ch. 3. 12. 9 ⁶ Then were the king's scribes called at that time in the third month, that is, the month Sivan, on the three and twentieth day thereof; and it was written according to all that Mordecai commanded unto the Jews, and to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces which are ^b from India unto Ethiopia, an hundred twenty and seven provinces, unto every province ⁱ according to the writing thereof, and unto every people after their language, and to the Jews according to their writing, and according to their language.

In the third month, on the three and twentieth day thereof; which was above two months after the former decree; all which time God suffered the Jews to lie under the terror of this dreadful day, partly, that they might be more thoroughly humbled for and purged from those many and great sins under which they lay; partly, and particularly, that they might be convinced of their great sin and folly in neglecting the many offers and opportunities they had of returning to their native country, and to the free and full exercise of the true religion, which could be had no where but in Jerusalem; by which means they being now dispersed in the several parts of this vast dominion, were like to be a very easy prey to their enemies, whereas their brethren in Judea were in a better capacity to preserve themselves; partly, that their most malicious and inveterate enemies might have an opportunity of discovering themselves to their ruin, as the event showed; and partly, for the greater illustration of God's glorious power, and wisdom, and goodness, in giving his people such an admirable and unexpected deliverance. Yet God so ordered things, that this letter should be sent in due time before it was too late; for there were yet near nine months to come before that appointed day. It was written unto the Jews; that they might understand their liberty, and be encouraged to use it for their own defence. And to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces; that they should publish and disperse them into all parts, that both themselves and others might take notice of the king's pleasure and kindness to the Jews.

k 1 Kings 21. 8. ch. 3. 12, 13. 10 ^k And he wrote in the king Ahasuerus' name, and sealed it with the king's ring, and sent letters by posts on horseback, and riders on mules, camels, and young dromedaries:

Which were not employed in the sending of the former letter; but this coming later required more care and speed, that the Jews might be eased from the torment of their present fears, and have time to furnish themselves with necessaries for their own defence.

11 Wherein the king granted the Jews which were in every city to gather themselves together, and to stand for their life, to destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish, all the power of the people and province that would assault them, both little ones and women, and ^l to take the spoil of them for a prey,

To stand for their life; to stand up and fight for the defence of their lives against all that should seek to destroy them. All the power of the people; either governors or governed, without any exception, either of age, dignity, or sex, as it follows. Both little ones and women; which is here added, because it was put into the former decree; and to strike the greater terror into their enemies; and according to the laws and customs of this kingdom, whereby children were punished for their parents' offences; which also in some cases was allowed and practised in sacred story. Yet we read nothing in the execution of this decree of the slaughter of women or children, nor is it probable that they would kill their innocent children, who were so indulgent to their families, as not to meddle with the spoil.

12 ^m Upon one day in all the provinces of king Ahasuerus, namely, upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar.

13 ⁿ The copy of the writing for a commandment to be given in every province was [†] published unto all people, and that the Jews should be ready against that day to avenge themselves on their enemies.

14 So the posts that rode upon mules and camels went out, being hastened and pressed on by the king's commandment. And the decree was given at Shushan the palace.

By the king's commandment; by his particular and express command to that purpose.

15 ¶ And Mordecai went out from the presence of the king in royal apparel of ^{||} blue and white, and with a great crown of gold, and with a garment of fine linen and purple: and ^o the city of Shushan rejoiced and was glad.

With a great crown of gold; which the chief of the Persian princes were permitted to wear, but with sufficient distinction from the king's crown. The city of Shushan; not only Jews, but the greatest number of the citizens, who, by the law of nature written upon their hearts, had an abhorrence from bloody counsels and designs, and a complacency in acts of benignity and mercy; or for other reasons, of which see on chap. iii. 15.

16 The Jews had ^p light, and gladness, and joy, and honour.

Light is oft put for gladness, as 2 Sam. xxii. 29; Job xviii. 5, 6; Psal. xxvii. 1, because light is pleasant and disposeth a man to joy, whereas darkness inclines a man to sorrow. Gladness and joy: this explains the former metaphor by two words expressing the same thing, to note the greatness of the joy. Honour, instead of that contempt under which they had lain.

17 And in every province, and in every city, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, the Jews had joy and gladness, a feast ^q and a good day. And many of the people of the land ^r became Jews; for ^s the fear of the Jews fell upon them.

A feast and a good day, i. e. a time of feasting, and rejoicing, and thanksgiving. The fear of the Jews; whom possibly they had irritated by their former threatenings, and now gave this evidence of their repentance, that they were willing to submit to that severe precept of circumcision.

2 The Jews ^dgathered themselves together in their cities throughout all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, to lay hand on such as ^esought their hurt: and no man could withstand them; for ^fthe fear of them fell upon all people.

No man could withstand them; their enemies, though they did and were allowed to take up arms against them, yet were easily conquered and destroyed by the Jews. The fear of them; who had such potent friends at court, and so great a God on their side, who by such unusual and prodigious methods (whereof doubtless they had been particularly informed) had brought about such a mighty and unexpected deliverance.

Either because they were desirous it should come into the king's treasury; or because they would leave it to their children, that it might appear that what they did that day was not done out of malice to their persons and families, or covetousness of their estates, but out of mere necessity, and by that great and approved law of self-preservation, and that they were ready to mix mercy with judgment, and would not deal with their enemies so ill as it was apparent that their enemies intended to do against them.

11 On that day the number of those that were slain in Shushan the palace

+ Heb. came.

[†]was brought before the king.

Possibly with evil design to incense the king against the Jews.

12 ¶ And the king said unto Esther the queen, The Jews have slain and destroyed five hundred men in Shushan the palace, and the ten sons of Haman; what have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? now ^kwhat is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: or what is thy request further? and it shall be done.

13 Then said Esther, If it please the king, let it be granted to the Jews which are in Shushan to do to morrow also ^laccording unto this day's decree, and [†]let Haman's ten sons ^mbe hanged upon the gallows.

l ch. 8. 11.

m 2 Sam. 21. 6, 9.

According to this day's decree, i. e. to kill their implacable enemies. For it is not improbable that the greatest and worst of them had politely withdrawn or hidden themselves for that day; after which, the commission granted to the Jews being expired, they confidently returned to their homes, where they were taken and slain by virtue of this private and unexpected decree.

Haman's sons were slain before; now let their bodies be hanged upon their father's gallows, for their greater infamy, and the terror of all others who shall presume to abuse the king in like manner, or to persuade him to execute such cruelties upon his own subjects. This custom of hanging up the bodies of malefactors after their death was frequent among the Jews, and Persians also, as is well known.

14 And the king commanded it so to be done: and the decree was given at Shushan; and they hanged Haman's ten sons.

18 But the Jews that were at Shushan assembled together ^ron the thirteenth day thereof, and on the fourteenth thereof; and on the fifteenth day of the same they rested, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

19 Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwall'd towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar ^sa day of gladness and feasting, ^tand a good day, and of ^usending portions one to another.

Therefore, to wit, because they did their whole work upon the thirteenth day, as was noted ver. 17, to which this manifestly relates, the 18th verse coming in as it were by way of parenthesis. In the un-called towns, Heb. in the cities of the villages, i. e. in the lesser cities and villages, which are here opposed to the great city Shushan, and those who dwelt in it.

20 ¶ And Mordecai wrote these things, and sent letters unto all the Jews that were in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, both nigh and far,

Mordecai wrote these things; either, 1. The letters here following. But that is distinctly mentioned in the next words. Or, 2. The history of these things, which was the ground of the feast; which Mordecai knew very well ought to be had in remembrance, and to be told to their children and posterity, through all ages, according to the many commands of God to that purpose, and the constant practice of the holy men of God in such cases.

21 To establish this among them, that they should keep the fourteenth day of the month Adar, and the fifteenth day of the same, yearly,

Because both these days had been set apart this year, the latter at Shushan, the former in other parts; and because that great work of God, which was the ground of this solemnity, had been done both upon the thirteenth and the fourteenth day.

22 As the days wherein the Jews rested from their enemies, and the month which was turned unto them from sorrow to joy, and from mourning into a good day: that they should make them days of feasting and joy, and of sending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor.

Which they used to give upon days of thanksgiving; of which see Neh. viii. 10.

23 And the Jews undertook to do as they had begun, and as Mordecai had written unto them;

Having by this means opportunity to gather themselves together upon any occasion, the chief of them assembled together, and freely and unanimously consented to Mordecai's desire in this matter, and bound it upon themselves and posterity.

24 Because Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, had devised against the Jews to destroy them, and had cast Pur, that is, the lot, to consume them, and to destroy them;

25 But when Esther came before the king, he commanded by letters that his wicked device, which he devised against the Jews, should return upon his own head, and that he and his sons should be hanged on the gallows.

26 Wherefore they called these days Purim after the name of Pur. Therefore for all the words of this letter, and of that which they had seen concerning this matter, and which had come unto them,

1. e. Both for the respect which they justly bore to Mordecai's letter, and because they themselves had seen and felt this wonderful work of God on their behalf.

27 The Jews ordained, and took upon them, and upon their seed, and upon all such as joined themselves unto them, so as it should not fail, that they would keep these two days according to their writing, and according to their appointed time every year;

All such as joined themselves unto them, i. e. Gentile proselytes; who were obliged to submit to other of the Jewish laws, and therefore to this also; the rather, because they enjoyed the benefit of this day's deliverance; without which the Jewish nation and religion had been in a great measure, if not wholly, extinct in the world. According to their writing, i. e. according to that writing which was drawn up by Mordecai with Esther's consent, ver. 23, 29, and afterwards confirmed by the consent of all the Jews in the several places.

28 And that these days should be remembered and kept throughout every generation, every family, every province, and every city; and that these days of Purim should not fail from among the Jews, nor the memorial of them perish from their seed.

29 Then Esther the queen, the daughter of Abihail, and Mordecai the Jew, wrote with all authority, to confirm this second letter of Purim.

Wrote with all authority: the former letter, ver. 20, did only recommend, but this enjoins the observation of this solemnity; because this was not only Mordecai's act, who yet had by the king's grant a great power and authority over the subjects of that kingdom, and consequently over the Jews, but it was the act of all the Jews, binding themselves and posterity to it, ver. 27. Or, with all might, or efficacy, as that word usually signifies; he pressed it with all earnestness and vehemency.

30 And he sent the letters unto all the Jews, to the hundred twenty and seven provinces of the kingdom of Ahasuerus, with words of peace and truth,

Or, even words of peace and truth; which may respect either, 1. The form of the writing, wherein after the custom he saluted them with hearty wishes of their true peace or prosperity, or of the continuance of those two great blessings of God, truth, i. e. the true religion; and peace, either among themselves, or with all men, that they might peaceably and quietly enjoy and profess the truth. Or, 2. The manner of his writing, which was with peace, i. e. friendship and kindness to his brethren; and truth, i. e. sincerity; which is the more noted and commended in him, because it is so unusual in such great courtiers as he now was; compare chap. x. 3: or the matter of his writing, which was to direct and persuade them to keep both peace and truth, i. e. both to live peaceably and lovingly both one with another, and with all their neighbours, not insulting over them upon their confidence in Mordecai's great power, or upon this late and great success, as men naturally and commonly do, nor giving them any fresh provocations, and yet holding fast the true religion in spite of all the artifices or hostilities of the Gentiles among whom they lived.

31 To confirm these days of Purim in their times appointed, according as Mordecai the Jew and Esther the queen had decreed for themselves and for their seed, the matters of the fastings and their cry.

For or about those great and overwhelming calamities which were decreed to all the Jews, and for the removing of which, not only Esther, and the Jews in Shushan, but all other Jews in all places, as soon as they heard those dismal tidings, did doubtless according to the precepts of Scripture, and the constant practice of their godly predecessors in all ages, fly to that last and only refuge of seeking to God by fasting, and earnest prayers, and strong cries unto God; which God was pleased graciously to hear, and in answer thereunto to give them this amazing deliverance. And this was that which they were now to remember, to wit, the greatness of their danger, and of their rescue from it. And accordingly the Jews use to observe the first of those days with fasting, and crying, and other expressions of vehement grief and fear, and the latter with feasting, and thanksgiving, and all demonstrations of joy and triumph.

32 And the decree of Esther confirmed these

He spoke and acted with great kindness and friendliness to them, when they resorted to him upon any occasion.

THE BOOK OF † J O B.

† Moses is thought to have wrote the Book of Job, whilst among the Madianites, before Christ cir. 1520.

SOME things are to be premised in the general concerning this book before I come to the particulars. 1. That this is no fiction or parable, as some have dreamed, but a real history, which is sufficiently evident, both from the whole contexture of the book, wherein we have an exact and distinct account of the places, persons, and things here mentioned, with their several circumstances; and especially the succeeding penmen of Holy Scripture, who mention him as a real and eminent example of piety and patience, as Ezek. xiv. 14; James v. 11. 2. That this is a canonical book of Scripture, which is manifest both from the style and matter of it, and from the tacit approbation given to it by Ezekiel and James, in the places now cited, and from that quotation taken from it as such, 1 Cor. iii. 19, and from the unanimous consent of the church, both of Jews and Christians, in all ages. 3. The time in which Job lived, and these things were said and done, most probably was before Moses, and in the days of the ancient patriarchs. This may be gathered, 1. From his long life, which, by comparing chap. i. with xlii. 16, could not want much of two hundred years; whereas, after Moses, men's lives were far shorter, as is manifest. 2. From that considerable knowledge of God and of the true religion which then remained among divers Gentiles, which after Moses's time was in a manner quite extinguished. 3. From the sacrifices here commonly used; whereas, after the giving of the law, all sacrifices were confined to the place of the tabernacle or temple, to which even the Gentiles were to repair when they would sacrifice to God. 4. From the way of God's imparting his mind to the Gentiles at this time by dreams and visions, agreeably to God's method in those ancient times; whereas afterward those discoveries were withdrawn from the Gentiles, and appropriated to the people of Israel. 5. Because there is not the least mention in this book of the children of Israel, neither of their grievous afflictions in Egypt, nor of their glorious deliverance out of it, though nothing could have been more seasonable or suitable to the matter which is here discoursed between Job and his friends. 4. The penman of this book is not certainly known, nor is it material for us to know; for it being agreed who is the principal author, it is of no moment by what hand or pen he wrote it. But most probably it was either, 1. Job himself, who was most capable of giving this exact account; who as in his agony he wished that his words and carriage were written in a book, chap. xix. 23, 24, so possibly, when he was delivered from it, he satisfied his own and others' desires therein. Only what concerns his general character, chap. i. 1, and the time of his death, chap. xlii. 16, 17, was added by another hand; the like small additions being made in other books of Scripture. Or, 2. Elihu, which may seem to be favoured by chap. xxxii. 15, 16. Or, 3. Moses, who when he was in the land of Midian, where he had opportunity of coming to the knowledge of this history and discourse, and considering that it might be very useful for the comfort and direction of God's Israel, who was now oppressed in Egypt, did by his own inclination, and the direction of God's Spirit, commit it to writing. And whereas the style seems to be unlike to that of Moses in his other writings, that is not strange, considering the differing nature of the books, this being almost all poetical, and the other merely historical, for the most part, or plain precepts or exhortations. And for the Arabic words here used, it must be remembered that Moses lived forty years in Midian, which was a part of Arabia, in which he must needs learn that language.

CHAP. I.

Job's country, and sincere holiness: his children; their feasts; and his religious care for them, 1—5. Satan's appearance before God: God's character of Job, 6—8. Satan imputeth Job's goodness to his prosperity; and so obtaineth leave to afflict him in his goods, 9—12. Job's oxen, sheep, camels, and servants destroyed, 13—17. His sons and daughters perish, 18, 19. Job, with his mantle rent, head shaved, and upon the ground, worshippeth; blessing God; sinneth not, 20—22.

THERE was a man ^ain the land of Uz, whose name was ^bJob; and that man was ^cperfect and upright, and one that ^dfeared God, and eschewed evil.

The land of Uz was either in Edom, called the land of Uz, Lam. iv. 21, or in some part of Arabia, not far from the Chaldeans and Sabeans, as this chapter witnesseth; so called probably from Uz, one of Esau's posterity, Gen. xxxvi. 28; Jer. xxv. 20. That man was perfect; not legally or exactly, as he confesseth, chap. ix. 20; but comparatively to such as were partial in their obedience to God's commands, and as to his sincere intentions, hearty affections, and constant and diligent endeavours to perform all his duties to God and men. Upright, Heb. right; exact and regular in all his dealings with men; one of an unblamable conversation, doing to others as he would have others to deal with him. One that feared God; one truly pious, and devoted to God's worship and service. Eschewed evil, i. e. carefully avoiding all sin against God or men.

2 And there were born unto him seven sons and three daughters.

1 Or, cattle.

3 His substance also was seven thousand sheep, and three thousand camels, and five hundred yoke of oxen, and five hundred she asses, and a very great household; so that this man was the greatest of all the men of the east.

1 Or, husbandry.
+ Heb. sons of the east.

Camels in these parts were very numerous, as is manifest from Judg. vii. 12; 1 Chron. v. 21, and from the plain testimonies of Aristotle and Pliny, and very useful, and proper both for carrying of burdens in these hot and dry countries, as being able to endure thirst much better than other creatures, and for service in war. She-asses were preferred before he-asses, as serving for the same uses as they did, and for breeding and milk also; but he-asses also may be included in this expression, which is of the feminine gender, because the greatest part of them (from which the denomination is usually taken) were she-asses. The greatest, i. e. one of the richest. Of all the men of the east, to wit, that lived in those parts; such general expressions being commonly understood with such limitations.

4 And his sons went and feasted in their houses, every one his day; and sent and called for their three sisters to eat and to drink with them.

His sons went and feasted, to testify and maintain their brotherly love. Every one his day; not every day of the week and of the year; which would have been burdensome and tedious to them all, and gross luxury and epicurism, which holy Job would not have permitted; but each his appointed day, whether his birthday, or the first day of the month, or any other set time, it matters not.

5 And it was so, when the days of their feasting were gone about, that Job sent and sanctified them, and rose up early in the morning, and offered burnt offerings according to the number of them all: for Job said, It may be that my sons have sinned, and cursed God in their hearts. Thus did Job continually.

ch. 42. 8.

f 1 Kings 21.
10. 13.
+ Heb. all the days.

When the days of their feasting were gone about; when each of them had had his turn, which peradventure came speedily, though not immediately one after another; and there was some considerable interval before their next feasting time. Job sent and sanctified them, i. e. he exhorted and commanded them to sanctify themselves for the following work, to wit, by purifying themselves from all ceremonial and moral pollution, as the manner then was, Exod. xix. 10, and by preparing themselves by true repentance for all their sins, and particularly such as they had committed in their time of feasting and jollity, and by fervent prayers to make their peace with God by sacrifice. Rose up early in the morning; thereby showing his ardent zeal in God's service, and his impatience till God was reconciled to him and to his children. It may be that my sons have sinned: his zeal for God's glory, and his true love to his children, made him jealous; for which he had cause enough from the corruption of man's nature, the frailty and folly of youth, the many temptations which attend upon feasting and jollity, and the easiness of sliding from lawful to forbidden delights. And cursed God; not in the grossest manner and highest degree, which it is not probable either that they should do, now especially when they had no provocation to do it, as being surrounded with blessings and comforts which they were actually enjoying, and not yet exercised with any affliction, or that Job should suspect it concerning them; but despised and dishonoured God; for both Hebrew and Greek words signifying cursing, are sometimes used to note only reviling, or detracting, or speaking evil, or setting light by a person. Thus what is called cursing one's father or mother, Exod. xxii. 17, is elsewhere called setting light by them, as Deut. xxvii. 16; Ezek. xxii. 7. See also 2 Pet. ii. 10; Jude 8, and many other places. In their hearts; by slight and low thoughts of God, by neglecting or forgetting to give God the praise and glory of the mercies which by his favour they enjoyed, by taking more hearty delight in their feasts and jollity than in the service and fruition of God; for these and such-like distempers of heart are most usual in times of prosperity and jollity, as appears by common experience, and by the many Divine cautions we have against them, as Deut. vi. 11, 12; Hos. ii. 8, and elsewhere. And these miscarriages, though inward and secret, Job calls by such a hard name as usually signifies cursing, by way of aggravation of their sin, which peradventure they were too apt to slight as a small and trivial miscarriage. Thus did Job continually, i. e. it was his constant course at the end of every feasting time.

6 ¶ Now there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the LORD, and Satan came also among them.

There was a day, i. e. a certain time appointed by God. The sons of God, i. e. the holy angels, so called Job xxxviii. 7; Dan. iii. 25, 28, because of their creation by God, as Adam also was, Luke iii. 38, and for their great resemblance of him in power, and dignity, and holiness, and for their filial affection and obedience to him. Before the Lord, i. e. before his throne, to receive his commands, and to give him an account of their negotiations. Compare 1 Kings xxii. 19; Zech. iv. 14; Luke i. 19. But you must not think that these things were really done, and that Satan was mixed with the holy angels, or admitted into the presence of God in heaven, to maintain such discourses as this with the blessed God, or that he had formal commission and leave to do what follows; but it is only a parabolical representation of that great truth, that God by his wise and holy providence doth govern all the actions of men and devils to his own ends; it being usual with the great God to condescend to our shallow capacities, and to express himself, as the Jews phrase it, in the language of the sons of men, i. e. in such manner as men use to speak and may understand. Satan came also among them; being forced to come, and give up his account.

7 And the LORD said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

God being here represented as Judge, rightly begins with an inquiry, as the ground of his further proceedings, as he did Gen. iii. 9; iv. 9. From going to and fro in the earth; where by thy permission I range about, observing with great diligence all the dispositions and actions of men, and working in them and among them as far as I have liberty and opportunity.

8 And the LORD said unto Satan, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?

Hast thou taken notice of him, and his spirit and carriage? and what hast thou to say against him?

9 Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, Doth Job fear God for nought?

i. e. Sincerely and freely, and out of pure love and respect to thee? No. It is policy, not piety, that makes him good; he doth not serve thee, but serveth himself of thee, and is a mere mercenary, serving thee for his own ends.

10 Hast not thou made an hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? Hast

The Sabeans; a people of Arabia, who led a wandering life, and lived by robbery and spoiling of others, as Strabo and other heathen writers note. The Chaldeans, who also lived upon the spoil, as Xenophon and others observe. Made out three bands, that they might come upon them several ways, and nothing might be able to escape them.

18 While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, Thy sons and thy daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house:

From the wilderness; whence the fiercest winds came, as having most power in such open places. See Jer. iv. 11; xiii. 24. Smote the four corners; in which the chief strength of the house did consist. It smote thee either all together, or rather successively, one immediately after another, being possibly a whirlwind, which comes violently and suddenly, whirling about in a circle, and being driven about by the power of the devil, which is very great. Then Job arose from his seat, whereon he was sitting in a disconsolate posture. Rent his mantle, to testify his deep sense of and just sorrow for the heavy hand of God upon him, and his humiliation of himself under his hand. See Gen. xxxvii. 34. Shaved his head, i. e. caused the hair of his head to be shaved or cut off, which was then a usual ceremony in mourning, of which see Ezra ix. 3; Isa. xv. 2; xxii. 12; Jer. vii. 29; xli. 5; Micah i. 16. Fell down upon the ground, in way of self-abhorrency, and humiliation, and supplication unto God. Instead of cursing God, which Satan said he would do, he adored him, and gave him the glory of his sovereignty, and of his justice, and of his goodness also, in this most severe dispensation.

I brought none of these things which I have now lost with me, when I came out of my mother's womb into the world, but I received them from the hand and favour of that God who hath now required his own again. I still have all that substance wherewith I was born, and have lost only things without and beside myself. Naked shall I return thither; I shall be as rich when I die as I was when I was born, and therefore have reason to be contented with my condition, which also is the common lot of all men. Thither, i. e. into my mother's womb, which in the former clause is understood properly, but in this figuratively, of the earth, which is our common mother, as it is called by many authors, out of whose belly we were taken, and into which we must return again, Gen. iii. 19; Eccles. xii. 7. And as our mother's womb is called the lower parts of the earth, Psal. cxxxix. 15, so it is not harsh if reciprocally the lower parts of the earth be called our mother's womb. Nor is it strange that the same phrase should be taken both properly and metaphorically in the same verse; for so it is Matt. viii. 22, let the dead spiritually bury the dead corporally. See also Lev. xxvi. 21, 24; Psal. xviii. 26, &c. The Lord hath taken away; he hath taken away nothing but his own, and what he so gave to me that he reserved the supreme dominion and disposal of in his own hand. So I have no cause to murmur or complain of him. Nor have I reason to fret and rage against the Chaldeans, and Sabeans, and other creatures, who were only God's instruments to execute his wise and holy counsel. The name of the Lord, i. e. the Lord; God's name being often put for God himself, as Psal. xlv. 5; xlvi. 10; lxxii. 18, 19; Dan. ii. 19, 20; as names are put for men, Acts i. 15; Rev. iii. 4. The sense is, I have no cause to quarrel with

God, but much cause to bless and praise him that he did give me such blessings, and suffered me to enjoy them more and longer than I deserved; and that he hath vouchsafed to afflict me, which I greatly needed for my soul's good, and which I take as a token of his love and faithfulness to me, and therefore ministering more matter of comfort than grief to me; and that he hath left me the comfort of my wife, and yet is pleased to continue to me the health of my body, and a composed mind, and a heart to submit to his good pleasure; and that he hath reserved and prepared such a felicity for me, whom no Chaldeans or Sabeans, no men nor devils, can take away from me; of which see chap. xix. 25. a ch. 2. 10. 22 ^aIn all this Job sinned not, nor

^b Or, attributed folly to God. || charged God foolishly.

i. e. Under all these pressures; or, in all that he said or did upon these sad occasions; Job sinned not, to wit, in such manner as the devil presaged that he would, and as is expressed in the following words. As Christ saith, John ix. 3, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents, to wit, so as you imagine, in an eminent or extraordinary degree. But both here and there human infirmities are excepted, of which Job oft acknowledgeth himself to be guilty. Nor was the question between God and Satan, whether Job had any sin in him, but whether he was a hypocrite, or would blaspheme God; which is here denied and disproved. Nor charged God foolishly, Heb. nor imputed folly to God, i. e. so far was he from blaspheming God, that he did not entertain any dishonourable thought of God, as if he had done any thing unworthy of his infinite wisdom, or justice, or goodness, but heartily approved of and acquiesced in his good pleasure, and in his righteous, though sharp, proceedings against him.

CHAP. II.

Satan's second appearance before God: Job's character continuing the same, condemneth Satan, 1—3. Satan judgeth him not sufficiently tried, unless his body suffer; and so obtaineth leave to hurt his body, but not touch his life, 4—6. Job, smote with boils, scrapeth himself, and sitteth down in ashes, 7, 8. His wife's folly; he reproveth her, acknowledging God's sovereignty and former mercies, 9, 10. His three friends, and their sorrow, 11—13.

a ch. 1. 6. AGAIN ^athere was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the LORD, and Satan came also among them to present himself before the LORD.

Again there was a day; another set time some convenient space after the former calamities. Of this and the two next verses see the notes on chap. i. 6, 7, 8.

b ch. 1. 7. 2 And the LORD said unto Satan, From whence comest thou? And ^bSatan answered the LORD, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

c ch. 1. 1, 8. 3 And the LORD said unto Satan, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil? and still he ^dholdeth fast his integrity, although thou movest me against him, ^eto destroy him without cause.

Still, notwithstanding all his trials and tribulations, and thy malicious suggestion to the contrary, he holdeth fast his integrity, i. e. he continues to be the same perfect and upright man which he was before. All thy endeavours to pull away his integrity have made him only to hold it the faster. Thou movest me, i. e. didst persuade me, and prevailed with me to do it. But this, as the rest of this representation, is not to be understood properly, as if God could be moved by any of his creatures to alter his purposes, which are all eternal and unchangeable, and especially by Satan, as if God would gratify him by granting his desires; but the design of these words is to signify both the devil's restless malice in promoting man's misery, and God's permission of it for his own wise and holy ends. Without cause, i. e. without any special provocation, whereby he, more than others, deserved such heavy punishments; which also Job himself oft allegeth for his justification, although he doth not deny himself to be a sinner, as is apparent from chap. vii. 20, 21; ix. 2; xiii. 23, 26; nor that sin deserves judgments. Or, without any such cause as thou didst allege, which was his hypocrisy. Or, in vain, as this word is used, Prov. i. 17; Ezck. vi. 10, and elsewhere. So it is not referred to God's destroying him, but to Satan's moving God so to do. And so this place may be thus rendered exactly according to the Hebrew, and thou hast moved me to destroy him in vain, or without effect, or to no purpose, i. e. thou hast lost thy design and expectation therein, which was to take away his integrity, which in spite of all thy art and malice he still holdeth fast.

4 And Satan answered the LORD, and said, Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life.

The design of these words is plain, which is to detract from Job, and to diminish that honour and praise which God gave to Job, by pretending that he had done no more than the meanest men commonly do by the law of self-preservation. And it is as clear that this was a proverbial speech then in use, wherein if there be some difficulty to understand it at this distance of time, it is no more than the common lot of many other proverbs, the sense, and especially the grounds, whereof are frequently unknown to persons of other nations and after-times. Moreover, it is known that in those ancient times, though they had some money, yet the main of their estate lay in cattle, of which the skins were a considerable part, and their chief traffic lay in the exchange of one commodity for another; and, among other things, it cannot be questioned but that they did commonly exchange skins of one kind for skins of another sort, according to their several inclinations or occasions. So the meaning may be this, As men willingly and commonly give one skin in exchange for another skin, and one commodity for another, so (the Hebrew particle van being oft so used as a note of comparison, as it is Prov. xvii. 3; xxv. 3, 23, 25, 27) all that a man hath, his house, cattle, children, will he give, and that most willingly, for his life, i. e. to redeem or save his own life. Or rather thus, Skin for skin, might then be a proverb, like that of ours, Body for body, when one man is so far obliged for another. And we have some such expressions among us; as when we say of a man who doth some dangerous action, His skin, i. e. his body, will pay for it, i. e. it may cost him his life. And this proverb might be taken, 1. From sacrifices, in which there was skin for skin, i. e. the skin of a beast for, or instead of, the skin or body of the man, which deserved to be used as the beast was, and which was saved or preserved by the suffering of the beast, which was accepted by God instead of the man, and by which the man's sins were expiated. Or, 2. From hostages or ransoms, wherein one man was given for or instead of another. So now the sense may be this, Any man will give skin for skin, i. e. the skin, or body, or life of another, whether man or beast, to save his own; yea, all that a man hath, whether goods or persons, such as Job hath lost, will he give for his life. Job is not much hurt nor concerned so long as his own skin is whole and safe. Others thus, Skin upon (for so the Hebrew particle behad is sometimes used, as 2 Kings iv. 5; Amos ix. 10; as also the Greek particle anti, which answers to it, is understood John i. 16, grace for grace, i. e. grace upon grace, or all kinds or degrees of grace) skin, and all that a man hath, (so all these words belong to the price which a man pays; now follows what he hath or expecteth to have for it,) will he give for his life, i. e. in exchange for his life, or to save his life. This also is a plausible interpretation, only it is not very probable that the same Hebrew particle behad should be used in two so differing senses in the same verse, in the former part to signify upon, (which if this sacred writer had meant, he would likely have expressed it rather by that other Hebrew particle al, which is commonly so used, than by this, which is so ambiguous, and seldom so taken, and otherwise used in this very verse,) and in the latter to signify for, or instead of. However the sense is plainly this, This is so far from being an evidence of Job's sincere and generous piety, that it is only an act of deeper hypocrisy and mere self-love; he is well enough contented with the loss of his estate, and children too, so long as he sleeps in a whole skin; and he is well pleased that thou wilt accept of all these as a sacrifice or ransom in his stead; and it is not true patience and humility which makes him seem to bear his crosses so submissively, as depth of policy, that by his feigned carriage he may appease thy wrath against him, and prevent those further plagues which, for his hypocrisy and other sins, of which he is conscious, he fears thou wilt otherwise bring upon his own carcass; as will plainly appear upon further trial.

e ch. 9. 17.

g ch. 19. 20. 5 ^f But put forth thine hand now, and touch his ^g bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face.

Touch, i. e. smite him, not slightly, but to the quick, and to the bones and marrow, so as he may feel pain and anguish indeed, which is oft expressed by reaching to the bones, as Psal. vi. 2; xxxiii. 3; li. 8.

h ch. 1. 12.
i Or, only. 6 ^h And the LORD said unto Satan, Behold, he ⁱ is in thine hand; || but save his life.

Do not attempt to take away his life, which I will not suffer thee to do.

7 ¶ So went Satan forth from the presence of the LORD, and smote Job with sore boils ^f from the sole of his foot unto his crown.

Like those inflicted upon the Egyptians, which are expressed by the same word, and threatened to apostate Israelites, Deut. xxviii. 27, whereby he was made loathsome to himself and to his nearest relations, chap. xix. 13, 19, and a visible monument of Divine displeasure, and filled with tiring and consuming pains in his body, and no less torment and anguish in his mind. From the sole of his foot unto his crown; in all the outward parts of his body. His tongue he spared, that it might be capable of venting those blasphemies against God which he expected and desired.

8 And he took him a potsherd to scrape himself withal; ^k and he sat down among the ashes.

He took him a potsherd; partly to allay the itch which his ulcers caused; and partly to squeeze out or take away that purulent matter which was under them, or flowed from them, and was the great cause of his torment. And this he did not with soft linen cloths, either because he had not now a sufficient quantity of them for so much use, or because therein he must have had the help of others, who abhorred to come near him, chap. xix. 13—15; nor with his own hands or fingers, which were also ulcerous, and so unfit for that use; and besides he loathed to touch himself; but with potsherds, either because they were next at hand, and ready for his present use; or in token of his repentance and deep humiliation under God's heavy hand, which made him decline all things which favoured of tenderness and delicacy. Among the ashes, Heb. in dust or ashes, as mourners used to do; of which see Job xlii. 6; Jonah iii. 6; Matt. xi. 21.

9 ¶ Then said his wife unto him, 1 ^l Dost thou still ^m retain thine integrity? curse God, and die.

The devil spared his wife with cruel intent to be the instrument of his temptations, and the aggravation of Job's misery, by unnatural unkindness to him, which is declared chap. xix. 17, and elsewhere. Dost thou still retain thine integrity? art thou yet so weak to persist in the practice of piety, when it is not only unprofitable to thee, but the chief occasion of all these thy insupportable miseries, and when God himself not only forsakes and leaves thee in this helpless and hopeless condition, but is turned to be thy greatest enemy? Curse God, and die; seeing thy blessing of God availeth thee so little, it is time to change thy note, Curse God, and die, i. e. reproach him to his face, and tell him of his injustice and unkindness to thee, and that he loves his enemies, and hates his friends; and that will provoke him to take away thy life, and so end thy torments. Or, Curse God, though thou die for it. But although this word sometimes signifies cursing , as Job i. 11; 1 Kings xxi. 10, yet most properly and generally it signifies blessing ; and so it may very well be understood here as a sarcastical or ironical expression, such as there are many in Scripture, as Eccles. xi. 9; Lam. iv. 21, and in all authors. And so the sense may be this, Bless God, and die ; i. e. I see thou art set upon blessing of God; thou bleesest God for giving, and thou bleesest God for taking away, and thou art still blessing of God for thy loathsome and tormenting diseases, and he rewards thee accordingly, giving thee more and more of that kind of mercy for which thou bleesest and praisest him. Go on therefore in this thy pious and generous course, and die as a fool dieth, and carry this reputation to thy grave, that thou hadst not common sense in thee to discern between good and evil, between thy friends and thy foes. Or rather, Awake out of this stupidity and lethargy, and give over this absurd and unreasonable practice; and as God gives thee no help nor comfort, let him lose thy praises and service. And this being her sense, it is not strange he reproveh her so sharply for it. And yet it seems hard to think that Job's wife should arrive at that height of impudence and impiety, as in plain terms to bid him curse God .

10 But he said unto her, Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. What? ⁿ shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? ^o In all this did not Job ^p sin with his lips.

As one of the foolish women, i. e. like a rash, and inconsiderate, and weak person, that dost not understand nor mind what thou sayest. Or, like a wicked and most profane person; for such are frequently called fools in Scripture, as Psal. xiv. 1; lxxiv. 18, and every where in the Proverbs.

Shall we poor worms give laws to our supreme Lord and Governor, and oblige him always to bless and favour us, and never to afflict us? And shall not those great, and manifold, and long-continued mercies, which from time to time God hath freely and graciously given us, compensate for these short afflictions? Ought we not to bless God for those mercies which we did not deserve, and contentedly to bear those corrections which we deserve and need, and (if it be not our own fault) may get much good by. In all this did not Job sin with his lips, by any reflections upon God, by any impatient or unbecoming expressions.

11 ¶ Now when Job's three ^q friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, they came every one from his own place; Eliphaz the ^r Temanite, and Bildad the ^s Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite: for they had made an appointment together to come ^t to mourn with him and to comfort him.

They were persons then eminent for birth and quality, for wisdom and knowledge, and for the profession of the true religion, being probably of the posterity of Abraham, and akin to Job, and living in the same country with him.

12 And when they lifted up their eyes afar off, and knew him not, they lifted up their voice, and wept; and they rent every one his mantle, and ^u sprinkled dust upon their heads toward heaven.

Afar off, to wit, at some convenient distance from him; whom they found sitting upon the ground, either in the open air, or within his own house. Knew him not; his countenance being so fearfully changed and disfigured by his boils. Sprinkled dust upon their heads toward heaven; either upon the upper part of their heads, which look towards heaven; or cast it up into the air, so as it should fall upon their heads, as they did Acts xxii. 23. See Josh. vii. 6; Neh. ix. 1; Lam. ii. 10.

13 So they sat down with him upon the ground ^x seven days and seven nights, and none spake a word unto him: for they saw that his grief was very great.

x Gen. 50. 10.

Sat down with him upon the ground, in the posture of mourners condoling with him. Seven days and seven nights was the usual time of mourning for the dead, Gen. i. 10; 1 Sam. xxxi. 13, and therefore proper both for Job's children, who were dead, and for Job himself, who was in a manner dead whilst he lived. But we must not fancy that they continued in this place and posture so long together, which no laws of religion or civility required of them, and the necessities of nature could not bear; but only that they spent a great or the greatest part of that time in sitting with him, and silent mourning over him. And so such general expressions are frequently understood, as Luke ii. 37; xxiv. 53; Acts xx. 31. None spake a word to him; either, 1. About any thing. Or rather, 2. About his afflictions, and the causes of them. The reason of this silence was, partly, the greatness of their grief for him, and their surprise and astonishment at his condition; partly, because they thought it convenient to give him some further time to vent his own sorrows; and partly, because as yet they knew not what to say to him: for though they had ever esteemed him to be a truly wise and godly man, and came with full purpose to comfort him; yet the prodigious greatness of his miseries, and that hand and displeasure of God which they manifestly perceived in them, made them at a stand, and to question Job's sincerity; so that they could not comfort him as they had intended, and yet were loth to grieve him with those convictions and reproofs which they thought he greatly needed. And here they stuck till Job gave them occasion to speak their minds.

CHAP. III.

Job curseth the day and services of his birth, 1—12. The ease and honours of death, 13—19. Life in anguish matter of complaint, 20—24. What he feared is now come upon him, 25, 26.

AFTER this opened Job his mouth, and cursed his day.

He spake freely and boldly, as this phrase is used, Prov. xxxi. 8, 9; Eph. vi. 19, and elsewhere, and cursed his day, to wit, his birthday, as is evident from ver. 3, which is called simply a man's day, Hos. vii. 5; which also some others, through the same infirmity, and in the same circumstances, have cursed, as we see, Jer. xx. 14. In vain do some men endeavour to excuse this and the following speeches of Job, who afterwards is reproved by God and severely accuseth himself for them, chap. xxxviii. 2; xl. 4; xlii. 3, 6. And yet he doth not proceed so far as to curse or blaspheme God, but makes the devil a liar in his prognostics. But although he doth not break forth into direct and downright reproaches of God, yet he makes secret and indirect reflections upon God's providence. His curse was sinful, both because it was vain, being applied to an unreasonable thing, which was not capable of blessing and cursing, and to a day that was past, and so out of the reach of all curses; and because it was applied to one of God's creatures, all which were and are in themselves very good, and pronounced blessed by God; and so they are, if we do not turn them into curses; and because it casts a blame upon God for bringing that day, and for giving him that life which that day brought into the world. He pronounceth that day an unhappy, woeful, and cursed day, not in itself, but with respect to himself.

2 And Job †spake, and said,
3 *Let the day perish wherein I was born, and the night in which it was said, There is a man child conceived.

Let the remembrance of that day be utterly lost; yea, I heartily wish that it had never been. Such wishes are apparently foolish and impatient, and yet have been sometimes forced from wise and good men in grievous distresses, not as if they expected any effect of them, but only to show their abhorrency of life, and to express the intolerableness of their grief, and to give some vent to their passions. In which it was said with joy and triumph, as happy tidings. Compare Jer. xx. 15. Conceived; or rather, brought forth, as this word is used, 1 Chron. iv. 17; for the time of conception is unknown commonly to women themselves, and doth not use to be reported among men, as this day is supposed to be.

4 Let that day be darkness; let not God regard it from above, neither let the light shine upon it.

I wish the sun had never risen upon that day to make it day, or, which is all one, that it had never been; and whatsoever that day returns, I wish it may be black, and gloomy, and uncomfortable, and therefore execrable and odious to all men. From above, i. e. from heaven; either, 1. By causing the light of the sun which is in heaven to shine upon it. So it agrees both with the foregoing and following branches of this verse. Or, 2. By blessing and favouring it, or by giving his blessings to men upon it. Let it be esteemed by all an unlucky and comfortless day. Or, Let not God require it, i. e. bring it again in its course, as other days return. In this sense God is said to require that which is past, Eccles. iii. 15. Compare ver. 3, 6.

5 Let darkness and ^bthe shadow of death ||stain it; let a cloud dwell upon it; ||let the blackness of the day terrify it.

Darkness and the shadow of death, i. e. a black and dark shadow, like that of the place of the dead, which is a land of darkness, and where the light is darkness, as Job explains this very phrase, chap. x. 21, 22; or so gross and palpable darkness, that by its horrors and damps may take away men's spirits and lives. Stain it, i. e. take away its beauty and glory, and make it abominable, as a filthy thing. Or, challenge it, i. e. take and keep the entire possession of it, so as the light may not have the least share in it. Terrify it, to wit, the day, i. e. men in it. Let it be always observed as a frightful and dismal day.

6 As for that night, let darkness seize upon it; ||let it not be joined unto the days of the year, let it not come into the number of the months.

Let darkness seize upon it, i. e. constant and extraordinary darkness, without the least glimmering of light from the moon or stars. Joined unto the days of the year, i. e. reckoned as one, or a part of one, of them. The night is distinguished from the artificial day, but it is a part of the natural day, which consists of twenty-four hours. Or rather, let it not rejoice among the days, &c. Joy here, and terror, ver. 5, are poetically and figuratively ascribed to the day or night with respect to men, who either rejoice or are affrighted in it. Let it be a sad, and as it were a funeral, day. Let it not come into the number of the months, i. e. to be one of those nights which go to the making up of the months.

7 Lo, let that night be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein.

Solitary, i. e. destitute of all society of men meeting and feasting together, which commonly was done at night, suppers being the most solemn meals among divers ancient nations. See Mark vi. 21; Luke xiv. 16; John xii. 2; Rev. xix. 9, 17. Let no joyful voice; neither of the bride and bridegroom, nor any that celebrate their nuptials, or any other merry solemnity.

8 Let them curse it that curse the day, *who are ready to raise up ||their mourning.

That curse the day, i. e. their day, to wit, their birthday; for the pronoun is here omitted for the metre's sake; for this and the following chapters are written in verse, as all grant. So the sense is, when their afflictions move them to curse their own birthday, let them remember mine also, and bestow some curses upon it. Or the day of their distress and trouble, which sometimes is called simply the day, as Obad. 12. Or the day of the birth or death of that person, whose funerals are celebrated by the hired mourners, who in their solemn lamentations used to curse the day that gave them such a person, whom they should so suddenly lose; and therefore it had been better never to have enjoyed him, and to curse the day in which he died as an unlucky and execrable day. Or, the day, i. e. the daylight; which to some persons is a hateful thing, and the object of their curses, namely, to lewd persons and thieves, to whom the morning light is even as the shadow of death, chap. xxiv. 17; as also to persons oppressed with deep melancholy, as it is here implied, ver. 20. So the sense is this, They who use to curse the day only, but generally love and bless the night, yet let this night be as abominable and execrable to them as the day-time generally is.

Who are ready to raise up their mourning; who are brimful of sorrow, and always ready to pour out their cries, and tears, and complaints, and with them curses, as men in great passions frequently do; or, such mourning men, or mourning women, whose common employment it was, and who were hired to mourn, and therefore were always ready to do so upon funeral occasions; of which see 2 Chron. xxxv. 25; Jer. ix. 17, 18, 20; Ezek. xxx. 2; Joel i. 15; Amos v. 16; Matt. ix. 23. And this sense suits with the use of the last word in Hebrew writers, of which a plain and pertinent instance is given by the learned Mercer. But because that word is commonly used in another sense for the leviathan, both in this book and elsewhere in Scripture, as Psal. lxxiv. 14; civ. 26; Isa. xxvii. 1, and because this very phrase of raising the leviathan is used afterward, chap. xli. 25, others render the words thus, who are prepared or ready to raise the leviathan. It is evident that the leviathan was a great and dreadful fish, or sea monster, though there be some disagreement about its kind or quality, and that the raising of or endeavouring to catch the leviathan was a dangerous and terrible work, as is plain from Job xli. And therefore those scamen who have been generally noted for great swearers and cursers, especially when their passions of rage or fear are raised, being now labouring to catch this sea monster, and finding themselves and their vessel in great danger from him, they fall to their old trade of swearing and cursing, and curse the day wherein they were born, and the day in which they ventured upon this most hazardous and terrible work. Others understand this leviathan mystically, as it is used Isa. xxvii. 1, for the great enemy of God's church and people, called there also the dragon, to wit, the devil, whom the magicians both now do, and formerly did, use to raise with fearful curses and imprecations. Not as if Job did justify this practice, but only it is a rash and passionate wish, that they who pour forth so many curses undeservedly, would bestow their deserved curses upon this day.

9 Let the stars of the twilight thereof be dark; let it look for light, but have none; neither let it see † the dawning of the day:

† Heb. the eyelids of the morning, ch. 41. 18.

Let the stars, which are the glory and beauty of the night, to render it amiable and delightful to men, be covered with thick darkness, and that both in the evening twilight, as is here expressed, when the stars begin to arise and shine forth; and also in the further progress of the night, even till the morning begins to dawn, as the following words imply. Let it look for light, but have none; let its darkness be aggravated with the disappointment of its hopes and expectations of light. He ascribes sense or reasoning to the night, by a poetical fiction usual in all writers. The dawning of the day, Heb. the eyelids of the day, i. e. the morning-star, which ushers in the day, and the beginning, and consequently the progress, of the morning light, and the day following. Let this whole natural day, consisting of night and day, be blotted out of the catalogue of days, as he wished before.

10 Because it shut not up the doors of my mother's womb, nor hid sorrow from mine eyes.

Because it shut not up, to wit, the night or the day; to which those things are ascribed which were done by others in them, as is frequent in poetical writings, such as this is. Or, he, i. e. God; whom in modesty and reverence he forbears to name. Yet he doth not curse God for his birth, as the devil presaged, but only wisheth that the day of his birth might have manifest characters of a curse impressed upon it. Shut not up the doors; that it might either never have conceived me, or at least never have brought me forth. Mother's; which word is here fitly supplied, both out of chap. i. 21, and xxxi. 18, where it is expressed; and by comparing other places where it is necessarily to be understood, though the womb only be mentioned, as Job x. 19;

Psal. lviii. 3; Isa. xlvi. 8; Jer. i. 5. Nor hid sorrow from mine eyes, because it did not keep me from entering into this miserable life, and seeing, i. e. feeling, or experiencing, (as that word is oft used,) those bitter sorrows under which I now groan.

11 ^aWhy died I not from the womb? ^{d ch. 10. 1a} why did I not give up the ghost when I came out of the belly?

From the womb, i. e. as soon as ever I was born, or come out of the womb. And the same thing is expressed in other words, which is an elegancy usual both in the Hebrew and in other languages.

12 ^{e Gen. 30. 3. Is. 66. 12.} Why did the knees prevent me? ^e or why the breasts that I should suck?

Why did the knees prevent me? why did the midwife or nurse receive me, and lay me upon her knees, and did not suffer me to fall upon the bare ground, and there to lie, in a neglected and forlorn condition, till merciful death had taken me out of this miserable world, into which the cruel kindness of my mother and midwife hath betrayed me? Why the breasts that I should suck? why did the breasts prevent me, (which may be fitly understood out of the former member,) to wit, from perishing through hunger, or supply me, that I should have what to suck? Seeing my mother had not a miscarrying womb, but did unhappily bring me forth, why had she not dry breasts? or why were there any breasts for me which I might suck? Thus Job most unthankfully and unworthily despiseth and traduceth these wonderful and singular mercies of God towards poor helpless infants, because of the present inconveniencies which he had by means of them.

13 For now should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept: then had I been at rest, Quiet; free from all those torments of my body and mind which now oppress me.

14 With kings and counsellors of the earth, which ^{f ch. 15. 28.} built desolate places for themselves;

With kings; I had then been as happy as the proudest monarchs, who after all their great achievements and enjoyments go down into their graves, where I also should have sweetly reposed. Which built desolate places for themselves; which, to show their great wealth and power, or to leave behind them a glorious name, rebuilt ruined cities, or built new cities and palaces, and other monuments, in places where before there was mere solitude and wasteness.

15 Or with princes that had gold, who filled their houses with silver:

16 Or ^{g Ps. 58. 8.} as an hidden untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light.

Hidden; undiscerned and unregarded. Untimely birth; born before the due time, and therefore extinct. I had not been, to wit, in the land of the living, of which he here speaketh. As infants which never saw light; being stifled and dead before they were born.

17 There the wicked cease from troubling; and there the ^{+ Heb. wearied in strength.} weary be at rest.

There, i. e. in the grave, which though not expressed, yet is clearly implied in the foregoing verses. The wicked cease from troubling; the great oppressors and troublers of the world cease from all those vexations, rapines, and murders which here they procured. There the weary be at rest; those who were here molested and tired out with their tyrannies, now quietly sleep with them, or by them.

18 There the prisoners rest together; ^{h ch. 39. 7.} they hear not the voice of the oppressor.

The prisoners rest together, i. e. one as well as another; they who were kept in the strongest chains and closest prisons, and condemned to the most hard and miserable slavery, rest as well as those who were captives in much better circumstances. Or, in like manner, (as this word oft signifies,) as those oppressors and oppressed do. The oppressor, or, exactor, or taskmaster, who urgeth and forceth them by cruel threatenings and stripes to greater diligence in the works to which they are condemned. See Exod. iii. 7; v. 6, 10, 13. Job meddles not here with their eternal state after death, or the sentence and judgment of God against wicked men, of which he speaks hereafter; but only speaks of their freedom from worldly troubles, which is the only matter of his complaint and present discourse.

19 The small and great are there; and the servant is free from his master.

The small and great, i. e. persons of all qualities and conditions, whether higher or lower. Are there, in the same place and state, all those kinds of distinctions and differences being for ever abolished.

20 <sup>1 Jer. 29. 18.
1 Sam. 1.
10. 2 Kin. 4.
27. Prov. 31.
6.</sup> Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the ² bitter in soul;

Heb. Wherefore (for what cause, or use, or good) doth he (i. e. God, though he forbear to name him, out of that holy fear and reverence which still he retained towards him) give light? either the light of the sun, which the living only behold, Eccles. vi. 5; vii. 11; or the light of life, as may seem both by the next words, and by comparing Psal. lvi. 13, and because death is oft set forth by the name of darkness, as life by the name of light. These are strong expostulations with God, and quarrelling with his providence and with his blessings; but we must consider that Job was but a man, and a man of like passions and infirmities with other men, and now in grievous agonies, being not only under most violent, and yet continual, torments of body, but also under great disquietments of mind, and the deep sense of God's displeasure, and was also left to himself, that he might see what was in his heart, and that all succeeding ages might have in him an illustrious example of man's infirmity, and the necessity of God's grace to help them in time of need. And therefore it is no wonder if his passions boil up and break forth in some indecent and sinful expressions. Unto the bitter in soul; unto such to whom life itself is very bitter and burdensome. Why doth he obtrude his favours upon those who abhor them?

21 Which [†]long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than ^mfor hid treasures;

i. e. Desire and pray for it with as much earnestness as men dig for treasure. But it is observable that Job durst not lay violent hands upon himself, nor do any thing to hasten or procure his death; but notwithstanding all his miseries and complaints, he was contented to wait all the days of his appointed time, till his change came, chap. xiv. 14.

22 Which rejoice exceedingly, and are glad, when they can find the grave?

23 Why is light given to a man whose way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in?

Why is light given? these words are conveniently supplied out of ver. 20, where they are, all the following words hitherto being joined in construction and sense with them. Whose way is hid, to wit, from him; who knows not his way, i. e. which way to turn himself, what course to take to comfort himself in his miseries, or to get out of them; what method to use to please and reconcile that God who is so angry with him, seeing his sincere and exact piety, to which God is witness, doth not satisfy him; or what the end of these calamities will be. Whom God hath hedged in; not with a hedge of defence, like that chap. i. 10, but of offence and restraint, i. e. whom God hath put as it were in prison or pound, or like cattle in grounds enclosed with a high and strong hedge, over or through which they cannot get; so that he can see no way nor possibility to escape, but all refuge fails him.

24 For my sighing cometh [†]before I eat, and my roarings are poured out like the waters.

Before I eat, Heb. before the face of my bread, i. e. either when I am going to eat, or rather, all the time whilst I am eating, (for so this phrase is used Psal. lxxii. 5, before the face of the sun, &c.; that is, as we translate it, as long as the sun endureth.) I fall into bitter passions of sighing and weeping; partly because my necessity and duty obligeth me to eat, and so to support this wretched life, which I long to lose; and principally because of my uninterrupted pains of body, and horrors of my mind, which mix themselves with my very meat, and do not afford me one quiet moment. Compare Psal. cii. 9. My roarings, i. e. my loud outcries, more befitting a lion than a man, which yet extremity of grief forceth from me. Compare Psal. xxii. 1; xxxii. 3. Like the waters, i. e. with great abundance, and irresistible violence, and incessant continuance, as waters flow in a river, or when they break the banks, and overflow the ground.

25 For [†]the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me, and that which I was afraid of is come unto me.

This is another reason why he is weary of his life, and why he repents that ever he was born, because he never enjoyed any solid and secure comfort. The thing which I greatly feared is come upon me, Heb. I feared a fear, (i. e. a danger or mischief in one kind or other, the act being here put for the object, as joy and love are oft put for the things rejoiced in, or loved, and here fear for the thing feared. Or, I feared with fear, i. e. I feared greatly.) and it came. Even in the time of my peace and prosperity I was full of fears, considering the variety of God's providences, the course and changeableness of this vain world, the infirmities and contingencies of human nature and life, God's justice, and the sinfulness of all mankind. And these fears of mine were not vain, but are justified by my present calamities. So that I have never enjoyed any sound tranquility since I was born; and therefore it hath not been worth my while to live, since all my days have been evil, and full of vexation and torment, either by the fear of miseries, or by the sufferance of them.

26 I was not in safety, neither had I rest, neither was I quiet; yet trouble came.

The three expressions note the same thing, which also was signified in the next foregoing verse, to wit, that even in his prosperous days he never was secure or at rest from the torment of fear and anxiety. Others, I did not misbehave myself in prosperity, abusing it by presumption, and security, and voluptuousness, whereby I might have provoked God thus to afflict me; but I lived soberly and circumspectly, walking humbly with God, and working out my salvation with fear and trembling, little expecting that God would be so fierce an enemy against me. Yet trouble came, Heb. and trouble came, as I feared it would. So between fear and calamity my whole life hath been miserable, and I had reason to repent of it.

CHAP. IV.

Eliphaz speaketh, though it will grieve Job, 1, 2. Job had instructed and strengthened others in their sorrows, but now fainteth himself, 3—5. Eliphaz reproacheth him with his confidence in his uprightness, which he now suspecteth; for that God's judgments were not against the righteous, but the wicked, 6—11. His fearful visions, 12—16. The righteousness of God; the angels charged with folly; the vanity of man, 17—21.

THEN Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said, He spake first, because possibly he was the eldest, or of greatest authority or zeal.

2 If we assay [†]to commune with thee, wilt thou be grieved? but [†]who can withhold himself from speaking?

Wilt thou be grieved? or, (without a note of interrogation,) thou wilt be grieved. Our words will undoubtedly vex thee, and not comfort thee, as we intended and desired to do. We must not use words of comfort, but of sharp reproof, which will be irksome to thee; and this makes me desire to be silent, if it were possible. Who can withhold himself from speaking, when he hears such unreasonable and ungodly words coming from such a person as thou art, whereby thou dost accuse thy Maker, and reproach his providence, and contemn his blessings? No man who hath any respect to God, or love to thee, can forbear reproving thee.

3 Behold, thou hast instructed many, and thou ^ahast strengthened the weak hands. ^b ^c

Thou hast instructed many; teaching them those lessons which thou hast not learned, and wilt not practise, to wit, patiently to bear afflictions, and to submit to God's will and providence in all things, which thou most shamefully refusedst to do. Thou hast strengthened the weak hands, by administering supports and comforts and counsels to such as were unable to bear their burdens, or to do their duty.

b Is. 35. 3. 4 Thy words have upholden him that was falling, and thou hast strengthened the feeble knees. † the feeble knees.

Him that was falling; ready to sink under their pressures, or to fall from God, or into sin, (as that word is used, 1 Cor. x. 12; Gal. vi. 2, and elsewhere,) through despondency and distrust of God's providence and promise, or through impatience. The feeble knees; such as were weak-hearted, and fainting under their trials. See Isa. xxxv. 3; Dan. v. 6; Heb. xii. 12.

5 But now it is come upon thee, and thou faintest; it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled.

Now it is come, i. e. the evil which thou didst fear, chap. iii. 25, and which was come upon those whom thou didst so comfort. Thou faintest; thou allowest in thyself what thou wouldst not bear in others. What in them was a vice, in thee, it seems, is become a virtue. Thou art wise for others, but not for thyself; a good physician to cure others, but not thyself; quick-sighted to see the faults of others, but blind to thine own. It toucheth thee; it is now come to be thine own case.

c ch. 1. 1. 6 Is not this thy fear, thy confidence, thy hope, and the uprightness of thy ways?

So the sense is, We now plainly see what was the nature and complexion of thy fear of God, thy confidence in him, the uprightness of thy ways, and thy hope in God's mercy, which thou didst make show and boast of, and for which thou wast become so famous. Thy present carriage discovereth to thyself and others that it was but mere talk and appearance, and there was nothing sound and sincere in it. In thy prosperity it was easy to make a splendid profession of religion; but men are best known by affliction, and this now showeth of what metal thou art made; for now thou dost cast off thy fear of God, and all thy confidence and hope in him, and hast let go that integrity of thy ways which hitherto thou didst seem to hold fast; whereas true piety is uniform, and constant, and stedfast in all varieties of conditions, and under all trials and temptations. But this translation removes the and from its proper place, and changeth the order of the words, which is this in the Hebrew, thy hope, and the uprightness of thy ways, which words may be restored to their own order, and with that variation our translation may stand, and this seems to be the true sense. And so here are four distinct questions, Is not this thy fear? Is not this thy confidence? Is not this thy hope? Is not this the uprightness of thy ways? But others make only two questions, and render the words either thus, Is not (or rather, was not) thy fear (of God) thy confidence? and the uprightness of thy ways thy hope? i. e. Did not thy fear of God, and the integrity of thy life, of which thou didst make such eminent profession, proceed only from the love of thyself, and of this present world? and from thy confidence and hope that God would bless and prosper thee for it? For now when God withdraws his favour and blessings from thee, thy religion is vanished, and thou hast cast off all fear and reverence of God, as thy impious speeches show. Or thus, Would not thy fear be thy confidence, and the uprightness of thy ways thy hope? i. e. If thou hadst indeed that fear and integrity to which thou pretendest, it would give thee good ground of hope and confidence in the midst of all thy distresses, and thou wouldst not so faint and sink under thy calamities, as now thou dost, for want of a solid foundation of true piety. But both these translations, besides other inconveniences, stumble at the same stone, and pervert the order of the words in the Hebrew text, of which see before; which is not to be allowed without some kind of necessity, which is not in this case.

e Ps. 37. 25. 7 Remember, I pray thee, who ever perished, being innocent? or where were the righteous cut off?

Give me one example hereof out of all thy experience or reading. Who ever perished, i. e. was so utterly undone, as thou art, so miserably afflicted by such unparalleled and various judgments from God and men, all conspiring against thee? Being innocent; who had not by his wickedness provoked so merciful a God to do that which is so unusual, and in some sort displeasing to himself. Therefore thou art guilty of some great, though secret, crimes, and thy sin hath now found thee out, and hath brought down these stupendous plagues upon thee. Where were the righteous cut off by the sickle of Divine vengeance before his time, which is like to be thy case? His judgment herein was rash and false, but not without some appearance of truth; for God had made many promises, not only of spiritual and eternal, but also of temporal, blessings, to all that should faithfully serve and obey him, which accordingly he did from time to time confer upon them, as we see by the examples of Noah, Lot, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and doubtless many others which had lived in or before their days. And this was God's usual method under all the times of the Old Testament, as we see by the people of Israel, who were generally either in a happy and flourishing, or in an afflicted and miserable, state, according to their obedience to God, or their apostacy from him. And therefore it is not strange that they fell into this mistake. But allowing for this mistake, and the consequence of it, his uncharitable opinion of Job, the method which he useth with Job is commendable, and to be imitated by others in their dealing with persons in sickness or affliction; for he doth not flatter him in his sins, nor immediately and unseasonably apply comforts to him, but endeavours to convince him of his sins, and to bring him to repentance, as the only regular way to his remedy.

8 Even as I have seen, they that plow iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same.

As thou hast never seen any example of a righteous man cut off, so on the contrary I have seen many examples of wicked men cut off for their wickedness. Or, As far as I have observed; or, But as I have seen or experienced. They that plough iniquity, and sow wickedness; they that designedly and industriously work wickedness, first plotting and preparing themselves for it, and then continuing to pursue and execute it, as husbandmen first plough up and prepare the ground, and then cast in the seed. Compare Prov. xxii. 8; Hos. x. 13. Reap the same, i. e. iniquity, or such trouble or injury (for so also the Hebrew word aven signifies) as they cause to others. Or, the fruit of their iniquity, the just recompence and punishment of it, which is oft called sin or iniquity, as Gen. iv. 7; Numb. xii. 11; xvi. 26; xxxii. 23. Compare Gal. vi. 7, 8.

9 By the blast of God they perish, and by the breath of his nostrils are they consumed.

By the blast of God, to wit, of his nostrils, as it here follows, i. e. by his anger, which in men shows itself in the nostrils, by hot and frequent breathings there, and therefore by an anthropopathy is ascribed to God; by a secret, and oft undiscerned, but mighty and powerful, judgment of God, by which they are blasted and blown away as chaff by the wind, as the phrase is, Psal. i.

10 The roaring of the lion, and the voice of the fierce lion, and the teeth of the young lions, are broken.

The voice of the fierce lion; understand vanisheth, or perisheth, out of ver. 9; or, is restrained, or suppressed, as may be gathered out of the following branch of this verse. The teeth of the young lions are broken; which is true literally; the lions when taken having most commonly their teeth broken, as ancient and modern writers relate. But this is here mystically meant of wicked and powerful tyrants, who are oft and fitly compared to lions, Ezek. xxxii. 2; xxxviii. 13; 2 Tim. iv. 17, who though for a time they persecute and oppress other men, yet in due time they are restrained, and broken, and crushed in pieces by the mighty power of God appearing against them in some eminent judgments. Possibly he may secretly accuse Job, or his children, or both, that being persons of great wealth and power in those parts, they had wickedly abused it to ruin their neighbours, and therefore were justly cut off.

1 Es. 24. 10.

11 ^h The old lion perisheth for lack of prey, and the stout lion's whelps are scattered abroad.

The old lion perisheth for lack of prey; because they cannot go abroad to seek it, and their young ones either cannot find or do not bring it to them. See Psal. lix. 14, 15; cix. 10. Are scattered abroad; gone from their dens several ways to hunt for prey, and can find none.

+ Heb. by stealth.

12 Now a thing was [†]secretly brought to me, and mine ear received a little thereof.

Now, Heb. and, or moreover, I will further convince thee by a vision which I had relating to such matters as these. That here follows a relation of a vision is apparent from the punctual description of all its circumstances. To think as some do, that this was but a fiction and artifice which Eliphaz used, that his words might have more authority with Job, or that this was a diabolical delusion, seems to be both uncharitable and unreasonable, partly because Eliphaz, though under a mistake concerning Job's case, was doubtless a wise and good man, and therefore would not needlessly make himself a liar for Job's conviction; and partly from the matter of this vision, which is no way suitable to the nature or designs of the devil, but holy and agreeable to the Divine majesty and purity, and useful for men's instruction, and humiliation, and reformation. It was therefore a Divine vision, which in that age and state of the church, before the Holy Scriptures were written, was the usual way of God's discovery of his mind to those that sought to him. A thing, Heb. a word, to wit, from God, as Prov. xiii. 13, a doctrine or message. Was secretly brought to me, Heb. was stolen, or brought by stealth into me, i. e. privately and secretly, as the word of God used to come to the prophets, being spoken in their ear, as it was to Samuel, 1 Sam. ix. 15; and the like to Moses, so as Pharaoh, though present, could not hear nor observe it, Exod. xi. 1, with a low and still voice, a secret whisper. This is opposed to the more public delivery of God's word by the prophets to the people, which was done by crying aloud, Isa. lviii. 1. Mine ear received, i. e. I heard. A little thereof, or, a parcel thereof, i. e. of God's word; not of that particular word which God had now delivered to Eliphaz, which doubtless God would so speak, that he to whom he directed his speech might hear it all, and Eliphaz certainly would be as careful not to lose a syllable of it; but a parcel of God's word in general, which this indeed was. And withal, this may be a modest and humble expression, arising from a deep sense of his own infirmity, and the small measure of his knowledge of Divine things, whereof he knew only some little fragments and parcels, as Paul said, We know but in part, 1 Cor. xiii. 9. As if he had said, Many, I doubt not, have more familiar acquaintance with God, and more full revelations from God, than I can pretend to, but a little of that treasure God hath been pleased to impart to me.

1 ch. 33. 15.

13 ⁱ In thoughts from the visions of the night, when deep sleep falleth on men,

In thoughts; in the midst of my thoughts, or by reason of my thoughts, my perplexing thoughts. The word properly signifies a branch, and thence a thought, as 1 Kings xviii. 21, which proceeds from the mind as branches from a tree, and a perplexing thought, which is entangled like the branches of a tree. These thoughts were the occasion of the following fear. From the visions of the night: this may belong either to the thoughts last mentioned, or to the fear following; both which did arise from the visions of the night, i. e. from the great importance and the terrible-ness of such visions, whereof probably he had had former experience, and now had an expectation of another of them, which God had raised and wrought in him, to prepare him the better for the reception of it. Visions differed from dreams herein, that God imparted his mind to a man in dreams when he was asleep but in visions when they were awake. And these visions sometimes happened by day, as Luke i. 22; Acts x. 17; xxvi. 19, but most frequently by night, whence we read of vision or visions of the night, as Gen. xli. 2; Job xx. 8; xxxiii. 15. And such this was, which made it the more terrible. When deep sleep falleth on men; in the dead of the night, when men usually are in a deep sleep; though Eliphaz was not now asleep, as appears from the nature of a vision, and from the following words.

14 Fear [†]came upon me, and ^ktrembling, which made [†]fall my bones to shake.

Fear came upon me; either caused by the apparition following; or sent by God to humble him, and to prepare him for the more diligent attention to, reverent reception of, and ready compliance with, the Divine message.

15 Then a spirit passed before my face; the hair of my flesh stood up:

Then, Heb. and, or for, as this particle is oft used. So this was the reason of the foregoing thoughts and fear. A spirit; an angel in some visible shape, otherwise he could not have discerned it, nor would have been affrighted at it. The hair of my flesh, i. e. of my body, as flesh is taken, Gen. ii. 24; Psal. xvi. 9; cxix. 120. Stood up, through that excessive horror caused by so glorious, unusual, and terrible a presence; which God used to excite in men upon such occasions, to convince them that it was not a vain imagination or illusion, but a real vision and revelation, and that from God.

16 It stood still, but I could not discern the form thereof: an image was before mine eyes, ^{||}there was silence, and I heard a voice, saying,

It stood still; having passed by him to and again he made a stand, as one that had some business with him, and addressed himself to speak to him. I could not discern the form thereof, to wit, exactly and distinctly, so as to know what or who it was. An image was before mine eyes; I saw some corporal or visible resemblance, though in a confused manner. There was silence: the spirit, which possibly had made some noise with his motion, now standing still, made no noise; all other persons and things about me were silent, and I also kept in my voice and breath as much as I could, that I might distinctly hear what I perceived the spirit was speaking to me. In the Hebrew the words run thus, silence and a voice (i. e. a silent, or still, or low voice, by a very common figure, called hendiadys) I heard.

17 ^l Shall mortal man be more just than God? shall a man be more pure than his maker?

The sense is, Thou, O Job, dost presumptuously accuse God for dealing harshly and unrighteously with thee, in sending thee into the world upon such hard terms, and punishing an innocent and righteous man with such unparalleled severity; but consider things calmly within thyself; if God and thou come to a trial before any equal judge, canst thou think that thou wilt go away justified, and the great God shall be condemned? No righteous man will punish another without cause, or more than he deserves; and therefore if God do so with thee, as thy words imply, he is less just than a man; which is blasphemous and absurd to imagine. Shall a man; a great and mighty man, as this word signifies, a man eminent for wisdom, or justice, or power, or any other perfections, such as thou art thought by thyself or others to be; who therefore might expect more favour than a poor miserable and contemptible man, which the word enosch, used in the former branch, signifies. So he anticipates this objection which Job might make. Be more pure than his Maker? an unanswerable argument against Job. He made thee, and that for himself and his own glory, and therefore hath an unquestionable right to deal with thee, and dispose of thee, the work of his hands, as he sees fit. Woe to him that striveth with his Maker! Isa. xlv. 9. Besides, he made man just and pure; if any man have any thing of justice or purity in him, it is derived from God, the undoubted and only fountain of it; and therefore it must necessarily be in God in a far more eminent degree.

18 Behold, he ^mput no trust in his servants; ^{||}and his angels he charged with folly:

m ch. 15. 15.
& 25. 5.
2 Pet. 2. 4.
1 Cor. xiv. 21.
his angels,
in whom he put light.

Behold; this deserves thy serious consideration. These and the following words seem to be the words of Eliphaz, explaining the former vision, and applying it to Job's case, and enforcing it by further arguments. In his servants, i. e. in his angels, as appears both by the next words of this verse, where they are called by way of explication and restriction his angels; and by the next verse, where men are opposed to them. They are called his servants by way of emiency, that general name being here appropriated to the chief of the kind, as is very usual in all authors in like cases; and withal, to intimate that sovereign dominion which the great God hath over the glorious angels, and much more over men, by virtue whereof he hath an unquestionable authority to treat them according to his good pleasure. And these God is said to put no trust in, because he could not be confident that they, if left to themselves, and destitute of the succours of his power and grace, would continue to be loyal, and faithful, and serviceable to him, and would not revolt from him, as some of their brethren had done. And for this cause God was pleased, after some time of trial, to give some special and further grace, either by Christ or otherwise, whereby they should be infallibly confirmed in the state of grace and felicity. His angels he charged with folly, or, with vanity, i. e. he discerned folly and vanity in the angelical natures when he had first made them; which although he saw and pronounced them, no less than the visible creatures, Gen. i., to be very good in themselves, and free from the least degree or tincture of sin; yet, comparing them with himself, and considering them in themselves alone, he saw something of folly and vanity in their very natures, because they were creatures, and therefore subject to manifold changes; and, among others, to fall from God, or into sin, as it appeared by the sad experience of some of them. Seeing therefore the angels, which so far exceed mankind in wisdom, and strength, and purity, and justice, and all other perfections, do fall incomparably short of God in these things, it is most absurd, as well as impious, to think that man is more just or pure than God, as was said, ver. 17, and as thou, O Job, seemest to surmise. Others, nor (Heb. and not); the negative particle being repeated out of the former branch of the verse, as it is Psal. ix. 18; Prov. xvii. 26, and elsewhere) in his angels, in whom (both which particles are frequently understood, as hath been proved before) he put light, or splendour, to wit, singular wisdom and purity, beyond what he put in man.

n ch. 15. 16. 19 ^aHow much less in them that dwell in ^ohouses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust, which are crushed before the moth?

How much less, understand, doth he put trust in them, &c.! Or, How much more, understand, doth he charge folly on them, &c.! Either of these supplements are natural and easy, being fetched out of the former verse, and necessary to make the sense complete. The sense is, What strange presumption then is it, for a foolish and mortal man to pretend to a higher privilege than the angels do, to make himself more just than God, or to exalt himself above or against God, as thou dost! On them, i. e. on men, as it follows, who, though they have immortal spirits, yet those spirits dwell in mortal bodies, which are great debasements, and clogs, and encumbrances, and snares to them; and which are here called houses, (because they are the receptacles of the soul, and the places of its settled and continual abode,) and houses of clay, and earthly houses, 2 Cor. v. 1; partly because they were made of clay, or earth, Gen. ii. 7; 1 Cor. xv. 47; and partly to note their great frailty and mutability; whereas the angels are free spirits, unconfined to such carcasses, and dwell in celestial, and glorious, and everlasting mansions. Whose foundation is in the dust; whose very foundation, no less than the rest of the building, is in the dust; who as they dwell in dust and clay, so they had their foundation or original from it, and they must return to it, Eccles. xii. 7; and, as to their bodies, lie down and sleep in it, Dan. xii. 2, as in his long home, Eccles. xii. 5, and the only continuing city which he hath in this world. Which are crushed, Heb. they crush them, i. e. they are or will be crushed; the active verb used impersonally, as it is chap. vii. 3; xxxiv. 20; Prov. vi. 30; Luke xii. 20. Before the moth, i. e. sooner than a moth is crushed, which is easily done by a gentle touch of the finger. An hyperbolical expression. So the Hebrew word lipine, commonly signifying place, doth here note time, as it is used Gen. xxvii. 7; xxix. 26; xxxvi. 31. Or, at the face, or appearance, of a moth. No creature is so weak and contemptible but one time or other it may have the body of man in its power, as the worms, the moths' cousin-germans, have in the grave. But he instanceth in a moth rather than a worm, because it is the weaker of the two, and because it better agrees with the similitude of a house, in which moths commonly are more frequent, and powerful, and mischievous than worms. How then canst thou think, O Job, to contend with thy Maker, that must become a prey to such small and impotent creatures?

20 ^pThey are † destroyed from morning to evening: they perish for ever without any regarding it.

From morning to evening; either, 1. Speedily, between morning and evening, like the grass; they flourish in the morning, and in the evening are cut off, Psal. xc. 5, 6. Or rather, 2. All the day long, as the phrase is, 2 Cor. xi. 25. There is not a moment wherein man is not sinking and drawing on towards death and corruption. For ever; as to human appearance and the course of nature, as many such like passages are to be understood in this book; or in reference to this present and worldly life, which when once lost is never recovered, Job xvi. 22; Psal. xxxix. 13. Without any regarding it, Heb. without putting the heart to it; the word heart being understood here, as also chap. xxiii. 6; xxxiv. 23; Isa. xli. 20, as may appear by comparing 1 Sam. ix. 20; 2 Sam. xviii. 3; Isa. xli. 22; lvii. 1, where the same phrase is used, and the word heart expressed. The meaning is either, 1. Yet few or no men that survive them lay it to heart as they should do. Or, 2. They perish beside the expectation of all men, when both themselves and others thought their mountain was so strong that it could not be removed. Or rather, 3. This is so common a thing for all men, though never so high and great, to perish in this manner, that no man heeds it, but passeth it by as a general accident not worthy of observation. Otherwise, no man procuring or furthering it, Heb. without any man's putting the hand to it, i. e. they perish of themselves, without any violent hand.

21 ^qDoth not their excellency which is in them go away? ^rthey die, even without wisdom.

Whatsoever is really or by common estimation excellent in men, all their natural, and moral, and civil accomplishments, as high birth, great riches, power, and wisdom, &c.; these are so far from preserving men from perishing, as one would think they should do, that they perish themselves, together with those houses of clay in which they are lodged. Which is in them go away; or, go away (i. e. die and perish, as that phrase is oft used, as Gen. xv. 15; Josh. xxiii. 14; Job x. 21; Psal. lviii. 9; Eccles. xii. 5; Matt. xxvi. 21) with (as beth is oft used) them; it doth not survive them. Without wisdom: either, 1. Like fools. Wise men and fools die alike, Eccles. ii. 16. Or, 2. They never attain to perfect wisdom, to that wisdom which man once had, much less to that wisdom which is in God, which Job conceiveth he hath; otherwise he would not so boldly censure the counsels and works of God as unrighteous or unreasonable, because his human and narrow capacity cannot fully understand them. Moreover, as folly is oft put for unrighteousness and wickedness, so is wisdom for justice and goodness; which is so known, that it is needless to prove it; and so by wisdom here may be meant that perfect justice and purity which Job arrogated to himself, and which Eliphaz here denies to all men, ver. 17, &c.

CHAP. V.

Wrath foolish: the wicked miserable, 1—5. Evil cometh not by chance; it is natural to our condition, 6, 7. This is our motive to prayer and trust in God, 8; whose unsearchable power and wisdom are against the high and crafty, for the relief of the poor, 9—16. Their happiness whom God correcteth, and God's gracious care of such, 17—27.

CALL now, if there be any that will answer thee; and to which of the saints wilt thou || turn ?

1 Or, look.

Call now, i. e. invite, or make proclamation, as this word is oft used, as Deut. xx. 10; Judg. xii. 1; Jer. ii. 2; iii. 12; vii. 2. Call them all as it were by their names; consult the whole catalogue of them all, which thou didst ever know or hear of. If there be any, to wit, of the saints, as it follows. That will answer thee, i. e. comply with thee, answer thy desires or expectations; try if there be any one saint that will defend or allow thee in these bold expostulations with God; or, as it is in the Hebrew, if there be any that doth answer thee, i. e. whose opinion or disposition and carriage is answerable or like to thine. So answering is sometimes used, as Prov. xxvii. 19; Eccles. x. 19. Thou wilt find many fools or wicked men, as it follows, ver. 2, to answer or imitate thee in their speeches and carriages, but not one of the saints like thee; which deserves thy serious consideration, and gives thee just cause to question thine integrity. The saints; either, 1. The angels, who are sometimes called saints, as Job xv. 15; Dan. viii. 13; Zech. xiv. 5, because they are eminently and perfectly holy; or rather, 2. Holy men, as appears both from the word, which most commonly is so used, and from the opposition of the foolish man to these, ver. 2, and because the example of men was more proper and effectual for Job's conviction than of angels. Wilt thou turn, or look? look about thee, view them all, and see if thou canst find one like thee.

2 For wrath killeth the foolish man, and || envy slayeth the silly one.

11 Or, indignation.

Either, 1. The wrath of God; or rather, 2. A man's own wrath, fretting, and impatience, and indignation; which kills men, partly, naturally, as it preys upon a man's spirit, and wasteth him inwardly, and so hastens his death, of which see Prov. xiv. 30; xvii. 22; partly, morally, as it prompts him to those rash, and furious, and wicked actions which may procure his death; and partly, meritoriously, as it provoketh God to cut him off, and to bring upon him those further and severe strokes which he mentions in the following words. The foolish man; either, 1. The rash and inconsiderate man, who doth not ponder things impartially; but, like a man mad, rageth against God, and torments himself and all that hear him. Or, 2. The ungodly man, who is frequently called a fool in Scripture language, and who is here opposed to the saints, ver. 1. Envy: he taxeth Job, who spoke with great envy at those that were never born, or were in their graves, chap. iii. 10, 12, &c. The silly one; properly, the man who, for want of true wisdom, is soon deceived with false opinions, and appearances, and present things; which is thy case, O Job. The sense of the verse may be this, I perceive, O Job, that thou art full of envy at wicked men, who at present are, or seem to be, in a happier condition than thou; and of wrath against God, who denies thee that mercy, and loads thee with afflictions; and this shows thee to be a foolish and weak man. For those men, notwithstanding their present prosperity, are doomed to great and certain misery, as it here follows. And so this verse coheres with the following as well as the foregoing verses.

3 *I have seen the foolish taking root: but suddenly I cursed his habitation.

I have oft observed it in my experience. Having severely rebuked Job for his transports of passion and intemperate speeches against God, he now returns to his former argument, and proves that such dreadful and destructive judgments of God do not befall the righteous, but the wicked, as he observed, chap. iv. 7, 8. Withal, he answers an objection concerning the present and seeming prosperity of the wicked, which he confesseth that he himself had sometimes observed. The foolish, i. e. the wicked man, who is quite destitute of true, i. e. of spiritual and heavenly, wisdom. Taking root; not only prosperous for the present, but, as it seemed, firm and secure for the future, being strongly fortified with power, and riches, and children too, so as there was no appearance nor danger of a change. Suddenly; in a moment, besides and before mine, and his own, and all other men's expectation. I cursed; either, 1. I judged that he was a cursed creature, notwithstanding all his prosperity; and I foresaw and foretold it by the rules of Scripture, or the direction of God's Spirit, that he would certainly sooner or later be stripped of all his blessings, and have God's curse fall heavily upon him. Or rather, 2. I saw and perceived, by the event which followed his prosperity, that he was a man accursed of God. For he speaks not in these words of what his estate constantly was, even in the midst of his happiness, though even then he was really accursed; but of what it was by a sudden change. His habitation; or, as the Hebrew word signifies, his pleasant or commodious habitation; persons or things in it, or belonging to it, being comprehended in that word by a usual metonymy.

4 ^{b Ps. 119.} His children are far from safety, and ^{155. & 127. 5.} they are crushed in the gate, ^{c Ps. 109. 12.} neither is there any to deliver them.

His children; whose greatness and happiness he designed in all his enterprises, supposing that his family was and would be established for ever. Are far from safety, i. e. are exposed to great dangers and calamities in this life, and can neither preserve themselves, nor the great inheritance which their fathers got and left for them. Thus to be far from peace, Lam. iii. 17, is to be involved in desperate troubles. In the gate, i. e. in the place of judicature; to which they are brought for their offences, and where they will find severe judges, and few or no friends; partly because, being wickedly educated, and trusting to their own greatness, they were insolent and injurious to all their neighbours; and partly because those many persons whom their powerful fathers defrauded or oppressed do seek for justice, and the recovery of their rights, which they easily obtain against such persons as plainly declared by their actions that they neither feared God nor revered man, and therefore were hated by all sorts of men. Neither is there any to deliver them; they can find no advocates nor assistants, who are either able or willing to help them; but, like Ishmael, as their hand was formerly against every man, so now every man's hand is against them.

5 Whose harvest the hungry eateth up, and taketh it even out of the thorns, and ^{d ch. 18. 9.} the robber swalloweth up their substance.

Whose harvest, which they now justly and confidently expect to reap, after all their cost and labour for that end, but are sadly and suddenly disappointed; which is a great aggravation of their misery. The hungry, i. e. the poor, whose necessities make them greedy and ravenous to eat it all up; and from whom he can never recover it, nor any thing in recompence of it. Out of the thorns, i. e. out of the fields, notwithstanding the strong thorn hedges where-with it is enclosed and fortified, and all other dangers or difficulties which may be in their way. They will take it, though they be scratched and wounded by the thorns about it. The robbers; so called from their long hair, which such persons nourished, either because of their wild and savage kind of life, which made them neglect the trimming of their hair and body; or that they might look more terribly, and so affright all those who should endeavour to oppose them. Or, the thirsty, as the word may signify from another root. And so it answers well to the hungry, in the former branch. Swalloweth up greedily, and so as there is no hope of recovering it.

6 Although || affliction cometh not forth ^{11 Or, iniquity.} of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground;

Although, or for, or rather, because. So the following words may contain a reason why he should seek unto God, as he exhorts him, ver. 8. Or, surely, as that particle is oft used. And so it is a note of his proceeding to another argument. Affliction, or iniquity, as this word oft signifies; and of this the following sentence is true. And so this first branch speaks of sin, and the next branch of trouble, which is the fruit of sin; and both sin and trouble are said to come from the same spring. But this word signifies also affliction, or misery, or trouble, as Psal. xc. 10; Prov. xii. 21; which seems most proper here, both because it is so explained by the following words, trouble; and again, trouble, ver. 7, the same thing being repeated in several words, as is usual in Holy Scripture; and because the great thing which troubled Job, and the chief matter of these discourses, was Job's afflictions, not his sins. Cometh not forth of the dust;

it springs not up by chance, as herbs which grow of their own accord out of the earth; or, it comes not from men or creatures here below; but it comes from a certain and a higher cause, even from God, and that for man's sins; and therefore thou shouldst seek to him for redress, as it follows, ver. 8.

^{e Gen. 3. 17, 18. 12.} ^{1 Cor. 10. 13.} ^{† Or, labour.} ^{† Heb. the sons of the burning coal lift up to fly.} 7 Yet man is [†] born unto || trouble, as [†] the sparks fly upward.

i. e. He is so commonly exposed to many and various troubles, as if he were born to no other end. Affliction is become in some sort natural and proper to man, and it is, together with sin, transmitted from parents to children, as their most certain and constant inheritance; God having allotted this portion to mankind for their sins. And therefore thou takest a wrong course in complaining so bitterly of that which thou shouldst patiently bear, as the common lot of mankind; and thy right method is to seek unto God, who inflicts it, and who only can remove it. As the sparks fly upward, i. e. as naturally and as generally as the sparks of fire fly upward, which do so universally and constantly. Heb. and the sparks, &c. But the particle and is oft used comparatively for as, as chap. xii. 11; xiv. 11; xxxiv. 3; Prov. xxv. 24; Mark ix. 49.

8 I would seek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cause:

If I were in thy condition; and therefore I would advise thee to the same course. Seek unto God, to wit, by prayer, and humiliation, and submission, imploring his pardon, and favour, and help, and not repine at him, and accuse his providence, as thou dost. Would I commit my cause, i. e. commend my afflicted condition to him by fervent prayer, and resign myself and all my concerns to him, and humbly hope for relief from him. Or, propound my matters, i. e. make known my afflictions and requests to him; or, put or dispose my words, i. e. pray to him, and pour out my complaints before him.

^{fch. 9. 10. & 37. 5. Ps. 40. 6. & 72. 18. & 145. 3.} ^{Rom. 11. 33.} ^{† Heb. and there is no search.} ^{† Heb. still there be no number.} 9 [†] Which doeth great things [†] and unsearchable; marvellous things [†] without number:

Here Eliphaz enters upon a discourse of the infinite perfection and greatness of God's nature and works; which he doth partly as an argument to enforce the exhortation to seek and commit his cause to God, ver. 8, because God was infinitely able, either to punish him yet far worse, if he continued to provoke him, or to raise him from the dust, if he humbly addressed himself to him; and partly that by a true representation of God's excellency and glory, and of that vast disproportion which was between God and Job, he might both convince Job of his great sin in speaking so boldly and irreverently of him, and prevent his relapse into the same miscarriage. Unsearchable; either such things as we may not boldly and curiously search into, Deut. xxix. 29; Rom. xi. 33; Col. ii. 18; or such as by searching we cannot find out, Job xi. 7; such as we cannot thoroughly understand, either the works themselves, or God's way and manner of doing them, or God's designs or ends in doing them. And therefore, O Job, thou art guilty of great impiety and folly to censure the ways and works of God as unreasonable, chap. iii. 11, 20, because thou dost not fully understand the nature and use of them. Marvellous things; which (though common, as the following works are, and therefore neglected and despised, yet) are just matter of wonder even to the wisest men.

^{g ch. 28. 26. Ps. 65. 9, 10. & 147. 8.} ^{Jer. 5. 24. & 10. 13. & 51. 16.} ^{Acts 14. 17.} ^{† Heb. outplaces.} 10 [†] Who giveth rain upon the earth, and sendeth waters upon the [†] fields:

He beginneth with this ordinary and obvious work of God, in which he implies that there is something unsearchable and wonderful, as indeed there is in the rise of it from the earth, in the strange hanging of that heavy body in the air, and in the distribution of it as God sees fit, Amos iv. 7; and how much more in the secret counsels and hidden paths of Divine Providence, which Job took the liberty to censure! Waters; either fountains and rivers, which is another great and wonderful work of God; or rather, rain water, as the following words imply; the same thing being repeated in other words, after the manner. Upon the fields, or, upon all places abroad, i. e. which have no covering to keep out the rain.

11 ^b To set up on high those that be low; that those which mourn may be exalted to safety.

These words contain either, 1. A declaration of God's end in giving rain, which is to enrich those who were poor, or mourning for the drought, by sending rain, and making their lands fruitful; or rather, 2. Another example of God's great and wonderful works. And the infinitive verb is here put for the indicative, he setteth up, &c., which is very frequent in the Hebrew, as Psal. lvi. 13; Zech. iii. 4; xii. 10. He giveth this instance to comfort and encourage Job to seek to God, because he can raise him out of his greatest depths, and useth to raise others in the like condition. That those which mourn may be exalted to safety, notwithstanding all the craft and power of their enemies.

12 [†] He disappointeth the devices of the crafty, so that their hands || cannot perform their enterprise.

Of the crafty; such as are cunning to work evil, and to cover it with fair pretences, as hypocrites use to do, and as Job's friends charged him with doing; God breaks the hopes and designs of such men; as he hath now blasted thy expectation, and taken away thy outward happiness, which was the thing thou didst design in taking up the profession of religion. Their enterprise; or, any thing; or, what is solid or substantial; or, wisdom, i. e. their wise counsel or crafty design. They cannot execute their cunning contrivances.

13 [†] He taketh the wise in their own craftiness: and the counsel of the froward is carried headlong.

The wise in their own craftiness; wicked men, who are wise to do evil, and wise in the opinion of the world, he not only deceiveth in their hopes and counsels, but turns them against themselves; as we see in Ahithophel, Haman, &c. The froward, or perverse, or wrestlers; such as wind and turn every way, as wrestlers do, and will leave no means untried to accomplish their counsels. Is carried headlong, i. e. is tumbled down and broken, and that by their own precipitation and haste. Their malice cannot have the patience to proceed wisely and leisurely against God's church and people, but makes them eager and venturesome, and so to make more haste than good speed in their wicked designs.

14 [†] They || meet with darkness in the daytime, and grope in the noonday as in the night.

i. e. In plain things they run into gross mistakes and errors, and commonly choose those counsels and courses which are worst for themselves. Darkness oft notes misery, but here ignorance or error, as it is also used chap. xii. 25; xxxvii. 19, and elsewhere. Grope, like blind men to find their way, not knowing what to do.

15 [†] But ^m he saveth the poor from the sword, from their mouth, and from the hand of the mighty.

The poor, or helpless; who therefore flee to God for refuge. From their mouth, or, from the sword which cometh out of their mouth, i. e. from all their censures, slanders, threatenings, deceitful insinuations, false swearings of witnesses, unrighteous sentences of corrupt judges, whereby their good names, or estates, or lives may be exposed to the utmost hazards. And this is fitly opposed to the sword of the hand, implied in the next branch of the verse. Or, from the sword by their mouths, i. e. by those wicked men's own words against the godly, which God wonderfully overruleth to the working out of their deliverance.

16 [†] So the poor hath hope, and iniquity stoppeth her mouth.

So this poor man obtaineth what he in some measure hoped or expected from God, to whom he committed his cause; and other poor men will be encouraged by his example to place their hope in God. Iniquity, i. e. wicked men; the abstract for the concrete, as pride, deceit, injustice, are put for proud, deceitful, and unrighteous men, Jer.

xiii. 9; 2 Pet. iii. 13. Stoppeth her mouth, i. e. they are silenced and confounded, being convicted of their own wickedness and folly, and finding that not only the poor are got out of their nets and snares, in which they thought that they had them fast, but also the oppressors themselves are insared in them; and all this by sudden and unexpected means.

17 °Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth: therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty:

Behold; for what I am saying, though most true, will not be believed without serious consideration. Happy is the man whom God correcteth, Heb. blessednesses (i. e. various and great happiness, as the plural number implies) belong to that man whom God rebukes, to wit, with strokes, chap. xxxiii. 16, 19. Those afflictions are so far from making thee miserable, as thou complainest, that they are, and will be, if thou dost thy duty, the means of thy happiness: which, though a paradox to the world, is frequently affirmed in Holy Scripture; and the reason of it is plain, because they are pledges of God's love, which no man can buy too dear; and though bitter, yet necessary physic to purge out that sin which is deeply fixed in all men's natures, and thereby to prevent far greater, even infinite and eternal, miseries; without respect to which this proposition could not be true or tolerable. And therefore it plainly shows that good men in those ancient times of the Old Testament had the prospect, and belief, and hope of everlasting blessedness in heaven after this life. Despise not thou, i. e. do not abhor it as a thing pernicious and intolerable, nor refuse it as a thing useless and unprofitable, nor slight it as a mean and unnecessary thing; but, on the contrary, prize it highly, as a favour and vouchsafement of God; for such negative expressions oft imply the contrary, as 1 Thess. v. 20; 1 Tim. iv. 12. See Prov. x. 2; xvii. 21. Of the Almighty; or, of the all-sufficient God, who is able to support and comfort thee in thy troubles, and to deliver thee out of them, and to add more calamities to them, if thou art obstinate and incorrigible.

Bindeth up, to wit, the wounds, as good surgeons use to do when they have dressed them, in order to their healing. Compare Psal. cxlvii. 3; Ezek. xxxiv. 4. The sense is, Though he hath seen it fit to wound thee, yet he will not always grieve thee, but will in due time release thee from all thy miseries. Therefore despair not.

See also Gen. xxvi. 11, 29; 2 Sam. xiv. 10; Psal. cv. 15; Zech. ii. 8. Thou shalt have a good issue out of all thy troubles, though they are both great and many.

20 °In famine he shall redeem thee from death: and in war † from the power of the sword.

In famine; which Job might be thought to fear, as being so poor that he needed his friends' contributions for his relief. From death; from that terrible kind of death.

These things he utters with more confidence, partly because the rewards or punishments of this life were more constantly distributed to men in the Old Testament according to their good or bad behaviour than now they are; and partly because it was his particular opinion, that great afflictions were the constant fruits and certain evidences of a man's wickedness; and consequently, that great mercies and deliverances should infallibly follow upon true repentance and godliness.

t Ps. 31. 20.
1 Cor. when the tongue sensargeth.

21 °Thou shalt be hid || from the scourge of the tongue: neither shalt thou be afraid of destruction when it cometh.

Hid, i. e. protected, as in some secret and safe place. From the scourge of the tongue, i. e. from false accusations and virulent slanders and reproaches, either by diverting their tongues to other persons or things, or by clearing thy integrity. Neither shalt thou be afraid; thou shalt have no cause to fear it, because God will secure thee in it and from it. When it cometh, to wit, upon others; near thee, or round about thee.

Thou shalt not only be redeemed from famine, ver. 20, and not fear destruction, ver. 21, but thou shalt laugh at them; not with a laughter of scorn and contempt, as this word is used, chap. xxxix. 18; Psal. ii. 4; xxxvii. 13; (for God's judgments are to be entertained with reverence and godly fear;) but with a laughter of joy and triumph, arising from his just security and confidence in God's watchful and gracious providence, which will either keep him from it or in it, or do him much good by it. The beasts, i. e. the wild beasts, which were numerous and mischievous in those parts. x Ps. 91. 12
Hos. 2. 18.

23 °For thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field: and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee.

Thou shalt be free from any annoyance by stones, either in thy walking or other postures, or in thy ploughing, as if they had made an inviolable league with thee. Stones may be, and in these stony countries were, hurtful to men many ways; either by bruising or hurting their feet when they walked barefoot, as the manner then was; or by giving them occasion of stumbling, or slipping, and falling; or by falling upon a man from a rock, or higher ground, as sometimes it hath happened; or filling his grounds, so as to hinder his ploughing, and make his lands unfruitful. Nay, the stones shall not only cease to be hurtful, but they shall be useful and beneficial to thee; they shall, as it were, present themselves to thee when thou hast occasion, either to sling them at thine enemies, as then was usual, Judg. xx. 16; 2 Chron. xxvi. 14, or to make fences to thy ground, or to build a house. This is a bold metaphor, but such are frequent, as in other authors, so also in Scripture, as Isa. xxviii. 15; Hos. ii. 18. The beasts of the field; either, 1. The wild beasts; and then this is an addition to the former privilege; they shall not hurt thee, ver. 22; nay, they shall befriend thee, as being at peace with thee, here, ver. 23. Or, 2. The tame beasts, who otherwise may be refractory and hurtful to a man, many having been killed by them.

|| Or, err.

24 And thou shalt know || that thy tabernacle shall be in peace; and thou shalt visit thy habitation, and shalt not || sin.

Thou shalt know, by certain and constant experience, that thy tabernacle, i. e. thy habitation, as it follows, including also the inhabitants, children, or friends and servants, shall be in peace; shall enjoy great safety from all their enemies, and concord among themselves, and prosperity in all their concerns; all which are comprehended under the sweet name of peace. Visit thy habitation, i. e. manage and order thy family, and all thy domestic affairs and worldly concerns, with care and diligence. Visiting is oft used for regarding or taking care of, as Gen. xxi. 1; Ruth i. 6; Psal. viii. 4; lxxx. 14. Shalt not sin; either by unrighteousness in thy dealings with thy family or others, or by neglecting God and his service in thy family, or by winking at any sin in thy domestics which thou canst hinder. But because he speaks not here of Job's duty, but of his privilege, and that in outward and worldly things, it seems better rendered by others, and thou shalt not err, or miscarry, or miss thy way or mark, as this very word is used below, chap. xxiv. 19; xiv. 16; Judg. xx. 16; thou shalt not be disappointed of thy hopes, or blasted in thy endeavours, but shalt succeed in them. Or, and thou shalt not wander, or be a wanderer, having no house in which to put his head, which Job might have some ground to fear; but thou shalt have a habitation of thy own, which thou shalt visit and manage as thou didst before.

¶ Ps. 112. 2. 25 Thou shalt know also that ^v thy seed shall be ¶ great, and thine offspring ^a as the grass of the earth.

Thou shalt know; partly by assurance from God's promises, and the impressions of his Spirit; and partly by experience in due time. Thy seed shall be great; thy posterity, which God will give thee instead of those which thou hast lost, shall be high, and honourable, and powerful. Or, shall be many. Thine offspring; which shall come out of thy own loins as branches out of a tree, as the word signifies. And this word seems added to the former to restrain and explain it, by showing that he did not speak of his spiritual seed, as Abraham's seed is in part understood, but of the fruit of his own body. As the grass of the earth; both for its plentiful increase, and for its flourishing greenness.

¶ Prov. 9. 11. & 10. 27. + Heb. ascendeth. 26 ^aThou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn † cometh in in his season.

In a full age; in a mature and old, but vigorous, age, as the word implies. Thou shalt not be cut off by a hand of violence before thy time, as thy sons and other wicked men have been; but shalt die in a good old age, as did Abraham, Gen. xxv. 8, and Moses, Deut. xxxiv. 7. As a shock of corn cometh in; as a heap or stack of corn is brought in, to wit, to the barn. Heb. ascendeth, or riseth; which word is very proper and usual in this case; for a stack of corn is said to rise, when by the addition of new heaps and handfuls it is raised to a higher pitch. Or, is cut off, as this same word is used, Psal. cii. 24, Cut me not off, &c., Heb. Make me not to ascend; and thus it is fitly used both of the corn, which when it is cut up ascends, or is lifted up from the earth, on which it lay, and is advanced into stacks and high heaps, either in the barn or in the field; and of man, who when he dies his spirit goeth upward to heaven, as is implied even there where in the person of an epicure it is questioned, Eccles. iii. 21. In his season; in harvest, when the corn is ripe.

¶ Ps. 111. 2. 27 Lo this, we have ^b searched it, so it is; hear it, and know thou it † for thy good.

It is not my single opinion, but my brethren concur with me, as thou wilt hear from their own mouths. This is no rash or hasty conceit, but what we have learned by deep consideration and hard study, long experience and diligent observation, both of God's word, so far as he hath been pleased to reveal himself, and of the course and methods of his providence and dealing with men in the world. Know thou it; for to us thou seemest by thy words and carriage to be wholly, or in a great part, ignorant of these things. For thy good; let the advantage which will come unto thee by following this counsel remove thy prejudice against it.

CHAP. VI.

Job's answer: he wisheth his troubles were duly weighed, for then would his complaints appear just, 1—7: prayeth for death; his hope in it, 8—10. He is unable to bear up under his burden, 11, 12. He vindicateth himself against his friends, and reproveth them, 13—30.

BUT Job answered and said,

2 Oh that my grief were thoroughly weighed, and my calamity † laid in the balances together!

¶ Heb. lifted up. My grief; either, 1. My calamity, as it follows, or the cause or matter of my grief; the act being put for the object, as is usual, fear for the thing feared, &c., and the same thing being here repeated in differing words. Or, 2. My sorrow; or, my wrath, or rage, as thou didst call it, chap. v. 2. So his wish is, that his sorrow or wrath were laid in one scale of the balances, and his calamity in the other, that so it might be known whether his sorrow or wrath was greater than his misery, as was pretended. Were thoroughly weighed; were fully understood and duly considered. Thy harsh rebukes and censures of my impatience, and hypocrisy, and wickedness, proceedeth from thy ignorance or insensibleness of my insupportable calamities. I desire no favour from thee. But oh that I had a just and equal judge, that would understand my case, and consider whether I have not just cause for such bitter complaints; or, at least, whether the greatness of my burden should not procure some allowance to my infirmity, if I should speak something indecently and unadvisedly, and protect me from such severe censures! Laid in the balances together; either, 1. Together with my grief; or rather, 2. Together with any the most heavy thing to be put into the other scale, as with the sand, &c., as is expressed in the next verse; where also the particle it, being of the singular number, sheweth that there was but one thing to be weighed with the sand.

3 For now it would be heavier ^a than the sand of the sea: therefore ¶ my words are swallowed up.

¶ Prov. 27. 3. ¶ That is, I want words to express my grief. Ps. 77. 4. It would be heavier, i. e. my grief or calamity, than the sand of the sea, which is heavier than dry sand. Swallowed up, as this verb is used, Prov. xx. 25; Obad. 16. My voice and spirit faileth me. So far am I from speaking too liberally of it, for which I am now accused, that I cannot find nor utter words sufficient to express my sorrow or misery; but my groanings are such as cannot be uttered, as is said in another case, Rom. viii. 26. When I would express it, the words stick in my throat, and I am forced, as it were, to swallow them up.

4 ^b For the arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poison whereof drinketh up my spirit: ^c the terrors of God do set themselves in array against me.

¶ Ps. 38. 2. c Ps. 68. 15, 16. Arrows; so he fitly calls his afflictions, because, like arrows, they came upon him swiftly and suddenly, one after another, and that from on high, and they wounded him deeply and deadly. Of the Almighty; so he calls them, either generally, because all afflictions come from him; or particularly, because God's hand was in a singular manner eminent and visible in his miseries, chap. i.; or yet more especially, because they were immediately shot by God into his spirit, as it follows. Are within me; besides those evils which are past, chap. i., there are other miseries that are constant and fixed in me, the sharp pains of my body, and dismal horrors of my mind. The poison whereof; implying that these arrows were more keen and pernicious than ordinary, as being dipped in God's wrath, as the barbarous nations then and since used to dip their arrows in poison, that they might not only pierce, but burn up and consume the vital parts. Drinketh up my spirit, i. e. exhausteth and consumeth, either, 1. My vital spirits, together with my blood, the seat of them, and my heart, the spring of them, as poison useth to do. But I doubt the Hebrew word ruach is never used in that sense. Or, 2. My soul, which is commonly the spirit, my mind and conscience. So he tells them, that besides the miseries which they saw, he felt others, and far greater, though invisible, torments in his soul, which if they could see, they would have more pity for him. And in this sense this place is and may very well be otherwise rendered, whose poison my spirit drinketh up, i. e. my soul sucks in the venom of those calamities, by apprehending and applying to itself the wrath of God manifested and conveyed by them. The terrors of God; either, 1. Great terrors; or, 2. God's terrible judgments; or rather, 3. These terrors which God immediately works in my soul, either from the sense of his wrath accompanying my outward troubles, or from the sad expectation of longer and greater torments. Set themselves in array; they are like a numerous and well-ordered army, under the conduct of an irresistible general, who designs and directs them to invade me on every side.

5 Doth the wild ass bray † when he hath grass? or loweth the ox over his fodder?

¶ Heb. at grass. Thou wonderest that my disposition and carriage is so greatly altered from what it was, chap. iv. 3—5, but thou mayst easily learn the reason of it from the brute beasts, the ass and ox, who when they have convenient and common food, are quiet and contented; but when they want that, they will resent it, and complain in their way by braying or lowing: see Jer. xiv. 6. And therefore my carriage is agreeable to those common principles of nature which are both in men and beasts, by which their disposition and deportment is generally suitable to their condition. It is no wonder that you complain not, who live in ease and prosperity; nor did I, when it was so with me; but if you felt what I feel, you would be as full of complaints as I am.

6 Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg?

Can or do men use to eat unsavoury meats with delight, or without complaint? This is either, 1. A reflection upon Eliphaz's discourse, as unsavoury, which could not give him any conviction or satisfaction. But his censure of Eliphaz's speech begins not till ver. 14, and then it proceeds. Or rather, 2. A justification of Job's complaints (of which both the foregoing and following verses treat) by another argument. Men do commonly complain of their meat when it is but unsavoury, how much more when it is so bitter as mine is! which is implied here, and expressed in the next verse; where the sense here begun is completed, and this general proposition is accommodated to Job's condition. In the white of an egg, Heb. in the white of a yolk, i. e. which encompasseth the yolk of an egg.

7 The things that my soul refused to touch are as my sorrowful meat.

Heb. As the sicknesses or sorrows of my meat, i. e. as my sorrowful meat, which I am constrained to eat with grief of heart. The particle as, either, 1. Notes not the similitude, but the truth of the thing, as it is oft used, as hath been formerly noted and proved. So the sense is, that such meat as formerly he should have abhorred to touch, either for the quality of it, or for his tears or ulcerous matter which mixed themselves with it, he was now forced by the necessities of nature, and his own poverty, to eat. Or, 2. Implies that the following words are not to be understood properly, but metaphorically. And so the sense may be this, Those grievous afflictions, which according to the principles and common inclinations of human nature I dreaded the very touch and thought of, they are now my daily, though sorrowful, bread; I am forced constantly to feed upon them; as other persons in great afflictions are said to be fed with bread of tears, Psal. lxxx. 5, and to eat ashes like bread, Psal. cii. 9. Others make this a censure of Eliphaz's words, as ungrateful and loathsome to him. But that sense seems neither to agree with the words of this verse, nor with its scope and coherence with the former, of which see the notes on ver. 6.

8 Oh that I might have my request; and that God would grant me † the thing that I long for!

My request, i. e. the thing which I have so passionately desired, and, notwithstanding all your vain words and weak arguments, do still justly continue to desire, to wit, death, as is expressed ver. 9, and more largely chap. iii.

9 Even † that it would please God to destroy me; that he would let loose his hand, and cut me off!

To destroy me; to end my days and calamities together. That he would let loose his hand; which is now as it were bound up or restrained from giving me that deadly blow which I desire. Oh that he would restrain himself and his hand no longer, but let it fall upon me with all its might, so as to cut me off! as it follows.

10 Then should I yet have comfort; yea, I would harden myself in sorrow: let him not spare; for † I have not concealed the words of 'the Holy One.

The thoughts of my approaching death would comfort me in all my sorrows. This would solace me more than life, with all that worldly safety, and glory, and happiness which thou hast advised me to seek unto God for. I would harden myself in sorrow, i. e. I would bear up myself with more courage and patience under all my torments with the hopes of my death, and that blessedness into which I know I shall after death be admitted, as he more fully speaks, chap. xix. 26, 27, whereas now I pine away in lingering and hopeless miseries. Or, I would burn (i. e. I am content to burn) in sorrow. Or, I would pray (as this word signifies in Hebrew writers; and praying may be here put for praising or worshipping of God, as it is frequently used in Scripture) in, or for, my sorrow or pain; then I would worship God, and say, Blessed be the Lord's name for these afflictions, as I did for the former, chap. i. 20, 21. Let him not spare; but let him use all severity against me, so far as to cut me off, and not suffer me to live any longer; which will seem to me a cruel kind of patience towards me. Of the Holy One, i. e. of God, who is frequently called the Holy One in Scripture, as Isa. xl. 25; lvii. 15; Hab. iii. 3, and is so in a most eminent and peculiar manner. The sense is, Therefore I do not fear death, but desire it; and that not only to be freed from my present troubles, but also and especially to put me into the possession of the happiness of the next life; of which I am assured, because I have in good measure performed the conditions of that covenant upon which he hath promised it; for as for the words of God, i. e. that light of sacred truths and precepts which he hath been pleased to impart to me, I have not concealed them, neither from myself, by shutting mine eyes against them, or suffering my prejudices, or passions, or worldly interests to blind my mind, lest I should see them, as you think I have done; nor from others; but as I myself have stedfastly believed them, and not wilfully and wickedly departed from them, so I have endeavoured to teach and commend them to others, and have not been ashamed nor afraid boldly to profess and preach the true religion in the midst of heathens who are round about me. And therefore I know that if God doth cut me off, it will be in mercy, and I shall be a gainer by it. Some translate and distinguish the verse thus, Yet this is my comfort, (though, or when, I scorch with pain, and he, i. e. God, doth not spare me, but afflicts me most severely,) that I have not concealed the words of God, but have professed and practised them.

11 What is my strength, that I should hope? and what is mine end, that I should prolong my life?

My strength is so small and spent, that although I may linger a while in my torments, yet I cannot live long, and therefore it is vain and absurd for me to hope for such a restitution of my strength and prosperity as thou hast promised to me, chap. v. 22, &c.; and therefore I justly pray that God would take away my life. What is mine end? either, 1. What is the end or period of my miseries? when may I expect it? I see no end of them; I know not how long I may pine and linger in them. Therefore, Lord, take me speedily away. Or, 2. What is the end of my life? or what is death to me? It is not terrible, but comfortable, as he said, ver. 10. I need not those vain consolations which thou givest me of being kept from death, ver. 20, or having life continued and health restored. Death is not the matter of my fear, but of my desire. That I should prolong my life, to wit, by my seeking to God for it, as thou advisest me, chap. v. 8. Why should I desire or endeavour the prolonging of my life? Or, that I should lengthen out my desire, to wit, of life, and those comforts of life which thou hast propounded to me. I desire not to live longer, though in the greatest splendour and prosperity, but to be dissolved, and to be with my God and Redeemer, chap. xix. 25. The Hebrew word nepshesh, here rendered soul or life, oft signifies desire, as Gen. xxiii. 8; Deut. xxiii. 24; Prov. xxiii. 2; Eccles. vi. 9.

12 Is my strength the strength of stones? or is my flesh † of brass?

I am not made of stone or brass, but of flesh and blood, as others are; and therefore I am utterly unable to endure these miseries longer, and can neither hope for nor desire any continuance of my life, or restoration of my former happiness, but only wish for that death which is the common refuge of all miserable persons, as I said, chap. iii. 17, 18.

13 Is not my help in me? and is wisdom driven quite from me?

Though I have no strength in my body, or outward man, yet I have some help and support within me, or in my inward man, even the conscience of my own innocency and piety, notwithstanding all your bitter accusations and censures, as if I had no integrity, chap. iv. 6. Is wisdom driven quite from me? If I have no strength in my body, have I therefore no wisdom or judgment left in my soul? Am I therefore unable to judge of the vanity of thy discourse, and of the truth of my own case? Have I not common sense and discretion? Do not I know my own condition, and the nature and degree of my sufferings, better than thou dost? Am not I a better judge whether I have integrity or no than thou art? But this verse is rendered otherwise, and that very agreeably to the Hebrew words, What if I have no help in me, (i. e. if I cannot help myself, if my outward condition be helpless and hopeless, as I confess it is,) is wisdom driven quite from me? Have I therefore lost my understanding and common reason? Cannot I judge whether it is more desirable for me to live or to die, whether I am a hypocrite or no, whether your words have truth and weight in them or no, whether you take the right method in dealing with me, whether you deal mercifully and sincerely with me, or no? Yet again, (because the construction and sense of these words is judged very difficult,) this verse may be joined with the following, and rendered thus, What if there be no help in me, (or, if I be not able to bear my miseries;) and if counsel be driven from me, so that I know not what to do, or how to help or ease myself? or, and subsistence, or power of subsisting, be driven or taken away from me, so that I can neither help myself out of my troubles, nor subsist under them? yet to the afflicted pity should be showed, &c.

14 †^h To him that is afflicted pity should be shewed from his friend; but he forsaketh the fear of the Almighty.

To him that is afflicted, Heb. to him that is melted or dissolved with afflictions, or in the furnace of afflictions; that is, in extreme miseries; for such persons are said to be melted, as Psal. xxii. 14; cvii. 26; cxix. 28; Nah. ii. 10. From his friend: his friend, such as thou, O Eliphaz, pretendest to be to me, should show kindness, benignity, and compassion in his judgment of him, and carriage towards him, and not pass such unmerciful and heavy censures upon him, nor load him with reproaches. But he forsaketh the fear of the Almighty; but thou hast no love or pity for thy neighbour and friend; which is a plain evidence that thou art guilty of that which thou didst charge me with, even with the want of the fear of God; for didst thou truly fear God, thou couldst not, and durst not, be so unmerciful to thy brother, both because God hath severely forbidden and condemned that disposition and carriage, and because God is able to punish thee for it, and mete unto thee the same hard measure which thou metest to me. But this verse is and may be otherwise rendered, Should a reproach (for so the Hebrew chesed oft signifies) be laid upon him that is afflicted by his friend, even that he forsaketh the fear of the Almighty? Should my friend have fastened such a reproach upon me, than which none is worse, that I am an impious man, and destitute of the fear of God, chap. iv. 6—8. This he mentions, as that which was most grievous and intolerable to him.

15^h My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, and¹ as the stream of brooks they pass away;

My brethren, i. e. my kinsmen or three friends; for though Eliphaz only had spoken, the other two showed their approbation of his discourse, or, at least, of that part of it which contained his censure of Job's person and state. Have dealt deceitfully; under a pretence of friendship and kindness dealing unrighteously and unmercifully with me, and adding to these afflictions which they said they came to remove. As the stream of brooks, which quickly vanish, and deceive the hopes of the thirsty traveller.

16 Which are blackish by reason of the ice, and wherein the snow is hid:

Which in winter, when the traveller neither needs nor desires it, are full of water, then congealed by the frost. Wherein the snow is hid; either, 1. Under which the water, made of snow, which formerly fell, and afterwards was dissolved, lies hid. So he implies that he speaks not of those brooks which are fed by a constant spring, but of them which are filled by accidental and extraordinary falls of water, or snow melted, which run into them. Or, 2. Wherein there is abundance of snow mixed with or covered by the ice; or, in which the snow covers itself, i. e. where is snow upon snow; which gives the traveller hopes, that when he comes that way in summer, he shall find good store of water here for his refreshment.

17 What time they wax warm, † they vanish: † when it is hot, they are † consumed out of their place.

When the weather grows milder, and the frost and snow is dissolved. When it is hot; in the hot season of the year, when waters are most refreshing and necessary. Out of their place; in which the traveller expected to find them to his comfort, but they are gone he knows not whither.

18 The paths of their way are turned aside; they go to nothing, and perish.

i. e. The course of those waters is changed, they are gone out of their channel, flowing hither and thither, till they be quite consumed; as it here follows.

19 The troops of^h Tema looked, the companies of¹ Sheba waited for them.

The troops, as this word is used, Gen. xxxvii. 25; Isa. xxi. 13. Heb. the ways, put for the travellers in the ways, by a usual metonymy. And so it must needs be meant here, and in the next clause, because the following verse, They were confounded, &c., plainly showeth that he here speaks of persons, not of senseless things. Tema: this place and Sheba were both parts of the hot and dry country of Arabia, in which waters were very scarce, and therefore precious and desirable, especially to travellers, who by their motion, and the heat to which they were exposed, were more hot and thirsty than other men. The companies; as before, the troops. And thus he speaks, because men did not there travel singly, as here we do, but in troops and companies, for their greater security against wild beasts and robbers, of which they had great store.

20 They were^m confounded because^m they had hoped; they came thither, and were ashamed.

They were confounded, i. e. the troops and companies. Because they had hoped; they comforted themselves with the expectation of water there to quench their thirst. Were ashamed; as having deceived themselves and others with vain and false hopes.

21 || For nowⁿ ye are † nothing; ye see my casting down, and^o are afraid.

He gives the reason why he charged them with deceitfulness, and compared them to these deceitful brooks. Nothing, or, as nothing; the note of similitude being oft understood. Heb. as not, i. e. you are to me as if you had not been, or as if you had never come to me, for I have no benefit nor comfort from you and your discourse, but only an increase of my misery. Ye see my casting down, and are afraid: when you come near to me, and perceive my great and manifold calamities, you stand as it were at a distance; you are shy of me, and afraid for yourselves, either lest my sores or breath should infect you; or lest some further plagues should come upon me, wherein yourselves for my sake, or because you are in my company, should be involved; or lest I should be burdensome to you, and need and call for your charitable contribution to support myself, and the small remainders of my poor family, or for your helping hand to assist and save me from mine enemies, who may possibly fall upon me in this place, as the Chaldeans and Sabeans did upon my servants and cattle elsewhere; which is implied in the next verses. So far are you from being true friends and comforts to me, as you would seem to be.

22 Did I say, Bring unto me? or, Give a reward for me of your substance?

Did I say? or, Is it because I said? Is this, or what else is the reason why you are afraid of me, or alienated from me? Bring unto me; give me something for my support or relief. Did either my former covetousness or my present necessity make me troublesome or chargeable to you? Give a reward for me; either to the judge before whom I am brought and accused, that he may give a favourable sentence in my behalf; or to the enemy who hath taken me captive. Or, give a gift for me, i. e. for my use or need. Did I send for you to come and visit me for this end? nay, did you not come of your own accord? Why then are you thus unmerciful to me? Methinks you might at least have given me good and comfortable words, which is the easiest and cheapest part of a friend's work, when I desired and expected nothing else from you.

23 Or, Deliver me from the enemy's hand? or, Redeem me from the hand of the mighty?

Deliver me by power and the force of your arms, as Abraham delivered Lot. Redeem me by price, or ransom.

24 Teach me, and I will hold my tongue: and cause me to understand wherein I have erred.

Teach me; instead of censuring and reproaching, instruct and convince me by solid arguments. I will hold my tongue; I will patiently hear and gladly receive your counsels; or, I will be silent; I will neither contradict you, nor complain of my own griefs. Compare Job xl. 4, 5; Prov. xxx. 32. Wherein I have erred, i. e. my mistakes and miscarriages.

25 How forcible are right words! but what doth your arguing reprove?

Right words, i. e. the words of truth or solid arguments, have a marvellous power to convince and persuade a man; and if yours were such, I should readily yield to them. Your arguing reprove; or, your arguing argue. There is no truth in your assertions, nor weight in your arguments, and therefore are they of no account or power with me.

26 Do ye imagine to reprove words, and the speeches of one that is desperate, which are as wind?

Do ye imagine to reprove words? i. e. do you think that all your arguments are solid and unanswerable, and all my answers are but idle and empty words? Or do you think it is sufficient to cavil and quarrel with some of my words and expressions, without considering the merits of the cause, and the truth of my condition, or giving an allowance for human infirmity, or for my extreme misery, which may easily force from me some indecent expressions? Of one that is desperate; of a poor miserable, hopeless, and helpless man; for the words of such persons are commonly neglected and despised, although there be truth and great weight in them. See Eccles. ix. 16. And such are generally thought to speak from deep passions and prejudices, more than from reason and judgment. Which are as wind, i. e. which you esteem to be like the wind, vain and light, without solid substance, making a great noise with little sense, and to little purpose. But this last branch of the verse may be, and by many is, rendered otherwise, and do ye imagine (which is to be repeated out of the former clause, as is very usual in Scripture) the words of one that is desperate to be but wind, i. e. empty and vain? Do you take me for a desperate and distracted man, that knows not or cares not what he saith, but only speaks what comes first into his mind and mouth? The wind is oft used to express vain words, as chap. xv. 2; Jer. v. 13; and vain things, Job vii. 7; Prov. xi. 29. Some render the whole verse thus, Do you in your arguings think, or ought you to think, the discourses of a dejected, or desponding, or sorely afflicted man (such as I am) to be but words and wind, i. e. vain and empty? as indeed the discourses of such persons use to be esteemed by such as are in a higher and more prosperous condition. But you should judge more impartially, and more mercifully. Possibly the verse may be rendered thus, Do you think to reprove the speeches of a desperate, or dejected, or miserable man (such as I am, and you use me accordingly) with (the preposition being very frequently omitted and understood in the Hebrew tongue) words and with (for the Hebrew prefix lamed oft signifies with, as hath been formerly proved) wind? You think any words or arguments will be strong enough against one in my circumstances. So it agrees with the foregoing verse.

+ Heb. ye cause to fall upon. P 176. 57. 6. 27 Yea, † ye overwhelm the fatherless, and ye † dig a pit for your friend.

Yea; your words are not only vain, and useless, and uncomfortable to me, but also grievous and pernicious. Ye overwhelm, Heb. you rush or throw yourselves upon him. For words in hiphil are oft put reciprocally, as Hebrews know. You fall upon him with all your might, and say all that you can devise to charge and grieve him. A metaphor from wild beasts, that fall upon their prey to hold it fast and devour it. You load him with censures and calumnies. The fatherless, or, the desolate, i. e. me, who am deprived of all my dear children, and of all my estate; forsaken by my friends, and by my heavenly Father; which should have procured me your pity rather than your censure. Ye dig a pit for your friend; or, you feed or feast (for so this Hebrew word is oft used, as 2 Sam. iii. 35; 2 Kings vi. 23; Job xl. 15) upon your friend, i. e. you insult and triumph over me, whom sometimes you owned for your friend.

28 Now therefore be content, look upon me; for it is † evident unto you if I lie.

Look upon me; be pleased either, 1. To look upon my countenance, if it betrays any fear or guilt, as if I spoke contrary to my own conscience. Or rather, 2. To consider me and my cause further and better than you have done, that you may give a more true and righteous judgment concerning it. Is evident unto you; you will plainly discover it. A little further consideration and discourse will make it manifest, and I shall readily acknowledge it.

29 † Return, I pray you, let it not be iniquity; yea, return again, my righteousness is † in it.

Turn from your former course of perverse judgment; lay aside passion and prejudice against me; let me beg your second thoughts and a serious review of my case. Let it not be iniquity, to wit, in your thoughts or debates; I beg not your favour, but your justice; judge according to right, and do not conclude me to be wicked, because you see me to be miserable, as you have falsely and unjustly done. Or, there shall be no iniquity, to wit, in my words which I have spoken, and which I am further about to speak; which you will find upon the review. In it, i. e. in this cause or matter between you and me; the relative without the antecedent, which is frequent in the Hebrew language. You will find the right to be on my side.

30 Is there iniquity in my tongue? † cannot † my taste discern perverse things?

Consider again, and more thoroughly examine, if there be any untruth or iniquity in what I have already said, or shall further speak to you. My taste, i. e. my judgment, which discerns and judgeth of words and actions as the taste or palate doth of meats. Perverse things, i. e. false opinions or sinful expressions. I am not so bereft of common understanding, as not to be able to distinguish between good and evil; and therefore if I have uttered, or should utter, any perverse words, I should apprehend them to be so as well as you do.

CHAP. VII.

Our times are like those of hirelings, restless and hopeless. Death desirable. His days are as a weaver's shuttle; his life is as wind; and he was consumed out of this world, and should appear in it no more, 1—10. Therefore he will speak to God, 11, 12: is tired out and weary of life, 13—16. Man unworthy of God's notice, 17—19. He confesseth his sin, and prayeth for forgiveness, 20, 21.

IS there not †*an appointed time to man upon earth? are not his days also like the days of an hireling?

Is there not a certain and short time limited by God wherein man shall live in this sinful, and vain, and miserable world, after which he shall live in a holier and happier place and state? and is it a crime in me to desire that God would give me some ease and respite for the present, and bring me to that blessed and joyful period? Like the days of an hireling; whose time is limited and short, being but for a few years, Isa. vi. 14; xxi. 16, and sometimes but for days, Job xiv. 6; Matt. xx. 1, 2, and whose condition is full of toil and hardship.

2 As a servant † earnestly desireth the shadow, and as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work:

+ Heb. before your face.

|| That is, in this matter.

+ Heb. my palate. ch. 12. 11. & 34. 3.

|| Or, a warfare. a ch. 14. 5, 13, 14. Ps. 39. 4.

+ Heb. jagged after.

The shadow, i. e. the sun-set, or the night, the time allotted for his rest and repose, Psal. civ. 23. And why may not I also desire the time of my rest? The reward of his work, Heb. his work; which is oft put for the reward of it, as Lev. xix. 13; Isa. xl. 10; xlix. 4. Or, the end of his work.

^b See ch. 29. 2. 3 So am I made to possess ^b months of vanity, and wearisome nights are appointed to me.

This so respects not so much the desire and expectation of a hired servant, which is expressed ver. 2, as the ground and reason of it, which is plainly implied there, to wit, his hard toil and service, which makes him thirst after rest. I am made to possess; God, by his sovereign power and providence, hath given me this as my lot and inheritance. Months; so he calls them rather than days, to note either the irksomeness and tediousness of his affliction, whereby every day seemed a month to him; or their length and continuance, which, as some infer from hence, had now been upon him some months. Of vanity; empty and unsatisfying, or false and deceitful, not giving me that ease and rest which they promised me, and I expected. Wearisome nights: he mentions nights, because that is the saddest time for sick and miserable persons; the darkness and solitude of the night being of themselves uncomfortable, and giving them more opportunity for solemn and sorrowful thoughts and reflections upon their own miseries.

^c Deut. 28, 57. ch. 17. 12. ⁺ Heb. the evening be measured. 4 When I lie down, I say, When shall I arise, and †the night be gone? and I am full of tossings to and fro unto the dawning of the day.

When I lie down, to get some rest and sleep. The night, Heb. the evening; the part put for the whole, as it is Gen. i. 5. To and fro; from side to side in the bed, as men in grievous pains of body or anxiety of mind use to be. Unto the dawning of the day; so this Hebrew word is used also 1 Sam. xxx. 17; Psal. cxix. 147.

^d Is. 14. 11. 5 My flesh is ^d clothed with worms and clods of dust; my skin is broken, and become loathsome.

Clothed, i. e. covered all over as with a garment. With worms; which oft breed and break forth in divers parts of living bodies, as history and experience witnesseth, and which were easily bred out of Job's corrupted flesh and sores. Clods of dust; either the dust of the earth upon which he lay, which his sores would quickly lick up; or the scabs of his sores, which by degrees mouldered away into dust. My skin is broken, by ulcers breaking forth in all parts of it.

^e ch. 9. 25. [&] 16. 22. [&] 17. 11. ⁺ Ps. 90. 6. [&] 102. 11. [&] 103. 15. [&] 144. 4. ⁺ Is. 38. 12. [&] 40. 6. ⁺ Jam. 4. 14. 6 My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope.

The time of my life hastens to a period; and therefore vain are those hopes which you give me of a restitution to my former prosperity in this world. A weaver's shuttle, which passeth in a moment from one end of the web to the other. Without hope, to wit, of enjoying any good day here.

^f Ps. 78. 30. [&] 89. 47. ⁺ Heb. shall not return. 7 O remember that 'my life is wind: mine eye †shall no more ‖see good.

To see, that is, to enjoy. He turneth his speech to God, as appears from ver. 8, 12, 14. Wind, i. e. vain, Isa. lvii. 13; Hos. viii. 7; quickly passing away, so as never to come again, as is said, Psal. lxxviii. 39. See good, i. e. enjoy (for so seeing is sometimes used, as Psal. xxxiv. 12; Jer. xvii. 6) good, to wit, in this world, as my friends flatter me. Compare chap. xiv. 12; xix. 26, 27.

^g ch. 20. 9. 8 The eye of him that hath seen me shall see me no more: thine eyes are upon me, and ‖I am not.

Shall see me no more in this mortal state; I shall never return to this life again. Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not: either, 1. If thou dost but cast one angry look upon me, I am not, i. e. I am a dead man. So that phrase is used Gen. v. 24; xlii. 13; xlv. 20; Psal. ciii. 16; Jer. xxxi. 15. Or, 2. When thine eyes shall be upon me (i. e. when thou shalt look for me to do me good, thou wilt find that) I am not, that I am dead and gone, and incapable of that bounty and goodness which thou givest to men in this world. Compare ver. 21; Psal. x. 15; Jer. i. 20.

9 As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away: so ^h he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more.

The cloud is consumed; being dried up or dissolved by the heat of the sun. Vanisheth away; never returneth again. Shall come up no more, to live a natural, mortal life amongst men. For that he doth not deny a future life is manifest from chap. xix. 25, &c.

10 He shall return no more to his house, 'neither shall his place know him any more.

He shall return no more, to enjoy his house and possessions again; he shall no more be seen and known in his former habitation and condition by his friends and neighbours. The place put for the men of the place, as chap. viii. 18; xx. 9; Psal. xxxvii. 10.

11 Therefore I will ^k not refrain my mouth; I will speak in the anguish of my spirit; I will ^l complain in the bitterness of my soul.

Since my life is by the common condition of mankind so vain and short, and, when once lost, without all hopes of recovery, and withal extremely miserable, I will plead with God for pity and relief before I die; knowing that I must now speak, or else for ever hold my peace, as to requests of this nature. I will not smother my bitter anguish within my own breast, which will make it intolerable, but I will give it vent, and ease myself by pouring forth complaints, and expostulating with my God, who, as I hope, will hear and help me one way or other.

12 Am I a sea, or a whale, that thou settest a watch over me?

Am I so great, and powerful, and dangerous a creature, that thou needest to use extraordinary power and violence to rule and subdue me? Am I as fierce and unruly as the sea, which, if thou didst not set a watch over it, and bounds to it, would overwhelm the earth, and destroy mankind upon it? Or am I a vast and ungovernable sea monster, which, if thou didst not restrain it by thy powerful providence, would overturn ships, and destroy men in them, and devour all the lesser fishes? Have I behaved myself towards thee, or towards men, with such rage and violence, as to need such chains to be put upon me? Or is my strength so great as that of the sea, which can endure so many and long storms one after another, and yet can subsist under them and after them? or of a whale, that can laugh at darts and spears? as is said, chap. xli. 29. No, Lord, thou knowest that I am but a poor weak creature, which thou canst crush with the least touch of thy finger, without these violent and unsupportable pains and miseries; and that I have not been so fierce and boisterous in my carriage as to need or deserve these extraordinary calamities. That thou settest a watch over me; that thou shouldst guard and restrain me with such heavy and unexampled miseries, lest I should break into rebellion against thee, or into cruelty towards men.

13 When I say, My bed shall comfort me, my couch shall ease my complaint;

By giving me sweet and quiet sleep, which may take off the sense of my torments for that while.

14 Then thou scarest me with dreams, and terrifiest me through visions:

With sad and dreadful dreams, arising either from that melancholy humour which is now so fixed in me, and predominant over me, or from the devil's malice, who by thy permission disturbs me in this manner; so that I am afraid to go to sleep, and my remedy proves as bad as my disease. Visions are the same thing with dreams; for there were not only day visions, which were offered to men's sight when they were awake; but also night visions, which were presented to men's fancy in their sleep and dreams. See Gen. xxviii. 12; xli. 1, 2; Dan. ii. 1, 31; iv. 5, 10

15 So that my soul chooseth strangling, and death rather † than my life.

^{† Heb. than my bones.} Chooseth; not simply and in itself, but comparatively, rather than such a wretched life. Strangling; the most violent, so it be but a certain and sudden death. Rather than my life, Heb. than my bones, i. e. than my body, formerly the soul's dear and desired companion; or than to be in the body, which commonly consists of skin, and flesh, and bones, but in Job was in a manner nothing but a bundle of bones; for his skin was every where broken, and his flesh was quite consumed, as he oft complains, and his bones also were not free from pain and torment; for as Satan's commission reached to Job's bones, Job ii. 5, so doubtless his malice and wicked design would engage him to execute it to the utmost.

16 ^{n ch. 10. 1.} ^{o ch. 10. 20.} ^{& 14. 6.} ^{Ps. 39. 13.} ^{Ps. 62. 9.} I loathe it; I would not live away: *let me alone; for ^p my days are vanity.

I loathe it, to wit, my life, last mentioned. I would not live away in this world if I might, no, not in prosperity, for even such a life is but vanity, much less in this extremity of misery. Or, let me not live for ever, lingering in this miserable manner, as if thou wouldst not suffer me to die, but hadst a design to perpetuate my torments. Or, let me not live out mine age, or the full time of my life, which by the course of nature I might do; for so the Hebrew word olam is oft used; but cut me off, and that speedily. Let me alone, i. e. withdraw thy hand from me; either, 1. Thy supporting hand, which preserves my life, and suffer me to die; or rather, 2. Thy correcting hand, as this same phrase is used, ver. 19. My days are vanity; either, 1. My life is in itself, and in its best estate, a most vain, unsatisfying, uncertain thing; do not add this evil to it to make it miserable. Or, 2. My life is a vain, decaying, and perishing thing, it will of itself quickly vanish and depart, and doth need to be forced from me by such exquisite torments.

17 ^{q Ps. 8. 4.} ^{& 144. 3.} ^{Heb. 2. 6.} What is man, that thou shouldst magnify him? and that thou shouldst set thine heart upon him?

What is there in that poor, mean, contemptible creature called man, miserable man, as this word signifies, which can induce or incline thee to take any notice of him, to show him such respect, or to make such account of him? Man is not worthy of thy favour, and he is below thy anger. It is too great a condescension to thee, and too great an honour for man, that thou wilt contend with him, and draw forth all thy forces against him, as if he were a fit match for thee; whereas men use to neglect and slight mean adversaries, and will not do them the honour to fight with them. Compare 1 Sam. xxiv. 14. Therefore do not, O Lord, thus dishonour thyself, nor magnify me. I acknowledge that even thy corrections are mercies and honours; but, Lord, let me be no more so honoured. Set thine heart upon him, i. e. have any regard to him, so far as to afflict him, which though it be grievous in itself, especially when it is aggravated as mine is, yet unto thy people it is a great mercy and blessing, as being highly necessary and useful to humble them, and purge them from sin, and prepare them for glory; as, on the contrary, those wicked men whom thou dost despise and hate, and design to destroy, thou dost forbear to punish or afflict them.

18 And that thou shouldst visit him every morning, and try him every moment?

Visit him, to wit, punish or chasten him, as the word to visit, or visitation, is oft used, as Exod. xx. 5; xxxii. 34; xxxiv. 7. Every morning, i. e. every day. But he mentions the morning, either because that is the beginning of the day, and so is put synecdochically for the whole day, as the evening, ver. 4, is put for the whole night; or he speaks of God after the manner of men, who rest and sleep in the night, but in the morning rise and go about their business, and visit or inspect those persons and things which they have a respect for or care of. Try him, i. e. afflict him, which is oft called trying, because it doth indeed try a man's faith, and patience, and perseverance. But this and the former verse may possibly be otherwise understood, not of afflictions, but of mercies. Having declared his loathing of life, and his passionate desire of death, and urged it with this consideration, that the days of his life were mere vanity, he now pursues it with this expostulation. What is man, that vain, foolish creature, that thou shouldst magnify, or regard, or visit him, (to wit, with thy mercy and blessings, of which those words are commonly used, i. e. that thou shouldst so far honour and regard him, as by thy visitation to preserve his spirit, or hold his soul in life,) and try him? which God doth not only by afflictions, but also by prosperity and outward blessings, which commonly detect a man's hypocrisy, and discover that corruption which before lay hid in his heart. Therefore, O Lord, do not thus magnify and visit me with thy mercy, but take away my life.

19 How long wilt thou not depart from me, nor let me alone till I swallow down my spittle?

How long will it be ere thou withdraw thy afflicting hand from me? Till I swallow down my spittle, i. e. for a little time; or that I may have a breathing time: a proverbial expression, like that Spanish proverb, I have not time or liberty to spit out my spittle. Or this expression may have respect to Job's distempered and calamitous condition, wherewith he was so overwhelmed, that he either had not strength, or could not take heed, to spit out his spittle, as he should have done, but swallowed it down, as sick and melancholy persons often do.

20 I have sinned; what shall I do unto thee, O thou preserver of men? why hast thou set me as a mark against thee, so that I am a burden to myself?

I have sinned: although I am innocent and free from those crying sins, for which my friends suppose thou hast sent this uncommon judgment upon me; yet if thou be strict to mark what is amiss, I freely confess that I am a sinner, and therefore obnoxious to thy justice, and I humbly beg thy pardon for it, as it follows, ver. 21; and therefore accept of this confession. What shall I do unto thee, to satisfy thy justice, or regain thy favour? I can do nothing to purchase or deserve it, and therefore implore thy mercy to pardon my sins. O thou preserver of men; O thou who, as thou wast the Creator of man, delighted to be, and to be called, the Preserver and Saviour of men; and that waitest to be kind and gracious to men from day to day, as occasion requires; do not deal with me in a way contrary to thy own nature and name, and to the manner of thy dealing with all the rest of mankind. Otherwise, O thou observer of men; thou who dost exactly know and diligently observe all men's inward motions and outward actions; and therefore if thou shalt be severe to mark mine iniquities, as thou seemest to be, I have not what to say or do unto thee: compare Job ix. 3, 15, 29; xiv. 4. As a mark against thee; into which thou wilt shoot all the arrows of thy indignation. I am a burden to myself, i. e. I am weary of myself, and of my life, being no way able to resist or endure the assaults of so potent an adversary.

21 And why dost thou not pardon my transgression, and take away mine iniquity? for now shall I sleep in the dust; and thou shalt seek me in the morning, but I shall not be.

Seeing thou art so gracious to others, so ready to preserve and pardon them, why may not I hope for the same favour from thee? If thou dost not speedily help me, it will be too late, I shall be dead, and so incapable of those blessings which thou usest to give to men in the land of the living. When thou shalt diligently seek for me, that thou mayst show favour to me, thou wilt find that I am dead and gone, and so wilt lose thy opportunity: help therefore speedily.

CHAP. VIII.

Bildad's reproof: Job's words said to be as wind: God just in all his ways, and in his dealings towards Job's children: if he would pray to God, and was indeed pure and upright, God would arise for him, 1—7. For this he appealeth to the history of ancient times, which declare the bad end of the hypocrite, 8—19, and the hope and joy of the upright, 20—22.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said,
2 How long wilt thou speak these things? and how long shall the words of thy mouth be like a strong wind?

i. e. Boisterous and violent, swelling and furious, opposing all persons and things that stand in thy way, not sparing either God or men.

3 ^{a Gen. 18. 25. Deut. 32. 4. 2 Chr. 19. 7. ch. 34. 12. 17. Dan. 9. 14. Rom. 3. 5.} Doth God pervert judgment? or doth the Almighty pervert justice?

God, Heb. the mighty God, as this word signifies; the almighty or all-sufficient God, as the next name of God here implies. These names are emphatically used, to prove that God cannot deal unjustly or falsely with men, because he hath no need of it, nor temptation to it, being self-sufficient for his own happiness, and being able by his own invincible power to do whatsoever pleaseth him; unless men will impudently say that God doth falsely for mere love to falsehood, without any necessity of it, or advantage to himself by it, than which nothing can be more absurd and ridiculous; for this makes him worse than the vilest of men, who act unjustly and necessarily because they cannot otherwise accomplish their designs. Pervert judgment, i. e. overthrow the course of justice in giving judgment, or judge unrighteously. No, this is inconsistent with God's nature, which is essentially and necessarily just, and with his office of Governor of the world, Gen. xviii. 25.

4 ^{b ch. 1. 5. 18. + Heb. in the hand of their transgression.} If thy children have sinned against him, and he have cast them away † for their transgression;

What though thou wast in a great measure innocent, thy children, upon whom a great part of these calamities fell, might be guilty of great sins; and therefore God is not unrighteous in these proceedings. He hath cast them away, expelled, or cast them out, (to wit, out of the world, or out of his favour; as a man gives his wife a bill of divorce, of which this word is used,) by means (Heb. by the hand, which is oft so used) of their wickedness. Or, hath left them in the hand of their sin, to wit, to be punished by it and for it. Compare Numb. xxxii. 23, Your sin shall find you out.

5 ^{c ch. 5. 8. & 11. 19. & 22. 23. &c.} † If thou wouldst seek unto God betimes, and make thy supplication to the Almighty;

But God hath spared thee, whom he might justly have destroyed with thy children, and thou art yet capable of his favour, if thou seek for it; and therefore cease from these causeless and unthankful complaints. Seek unto God betimes, Heb. rise early to seek him, i. e. if thou wouldst seek him speedily, early, and diligently. See chap. v. 8; vii. 18, 21. But this may be understood of the time past; and this verse being connected with the next, may be thus rendered and understood, If thou hadst sought (for the future tense in the Hebrew is oft put for the past) unto God betimes, (as thou didst seem to do, chap. i. 5.) and made supplication to the Almighty; if withal thou hadst been pure and upright, i. e. if thy prayers had been accompanied with purity and uprightness of heart and life, they should have been heard and answered. But because thou didst regard iniquity in thy heart, therefore God would not hear and did not answer thy prayers, but answered thee with a curse instead of a blessing, as he useth to deal with hypocrites.

6 If thou wert pure and upright; surely now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteousness prosperous.

If thou wert in truth what thou pretendest, and hast been thought by others, to be, pure and upright, i. e. of a sincere heart and blameless life towards God and men. But God's severe dealing with thee is an evident token, that notwithstanding all thy fair shows, thou art but a hypocrite and secret sinner. And this sense may seem to agree both with the same charge brought in against Job by Eliphaz, chap. iv. 6, 7, and with the following discourse, particularly with ver. 13, 20. Or thus, If thou wouldst be pure and upright, i. e. if thou wouldst join reformation to thy supplication. And this sense may seem best to suit with the foregoing verse, according to the common translation. Awake for thee, i. e. bestir himself to help thee, as being his faithful friend and servant, whom he could not in honour or justice forsake; whereas now he shows a deep sleep, and wholly neglects thee, and turneth a deaf ear to all thy prayers; which show-eth what opinion he hath of thee. The habitation, i. e. the concerns of thy house and family; a usual metonymy. Of thy righteousness; either, 1. Which thou hast got and managed with righteousness; so he calls it by way of supposition; if it were so, God would prosper thee accordingly. But because thou dost not prosper, it gives us cause to suspect that thou hast got thy estate by fraud and oppression. Or, 2. Whi h thou shalt now manage with justice, and not wrongfully, as thou hast done.

7 Though thy beginning was small, yet thy latter end should greatly increase.

The sense is either, 1. Though thou hadst possessed but very little at first, yet God would have wonderfully blessed and increased thy estate; whereas now God hath brought thee down from a great estate almost to nothing; which is an evidence of his displeasure, and thy hypocrisy. Or, 2. Though the beginning of thy future fortunes, or though what thou hast left, be now very small, yet if thou dost repent and seek God, it shall vastly increase.

8 ^{d Deu. 4. 32. & 32. 7. ch. 15. 18.} For enquire, I pray thee, of the former age, and prepare thyself to the search of their fathers:

Of the former age, i. e. of our predecessors, who had the advantage of longer life and more experience, besides more frequent revelations from God, than we have; who also will be more impartial judges of this cause than we may be thought to be. Inform thyself from them by the instructions which they left, either in word or writing, what their opinion was about the manner of God's dealings with men. Prepare thyself to the search of their fathers; do not slightly, but seriously and industriously, search the ancient records.

9 ^{e Gen. 47. 9. 1 Chron. 29. 15. ch. 7. 6. Ps. 39. 5. & 102. 11. & 144. 14. + Heb. not.} (For we are but of yesterday, and know † nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow:)

But of yesterday; but lately born, and therefore have but little knowledge and experience, as it follows. Our days upon earth are a shadow: this is meant either, 1. Of their lives in particular, which were far shorter than the lives of their ancestors, the patriarchs, whose long lives gave them opportunity to know and see the course of God's providence towards good and bad men, and the differing ends and issues of their lives. Or, 2. Of men's lives in general; which being very short, men's observation reacheth but to very few events in comparison of those which may be known by the records and testimony of all former ages.

10 Shall not they teach thee, and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart?

Assuredly they will inform thee that it is as we say. Out of their heart; not partially, but sincerely, speaking their inward thoughts; not rashly, but from deep consideration; not by hearsay from others, but their own knowledge and experience.

11 Can the rush grow up without mire? can the flag grow without water?

Without mire, i. e. if it be not in moist and miry ground. This and what follows he mentions as it were in the person of those ancients to whom he had referred him, of whom he saith that they would give him such instructions as these. The flag; or, the grass; or, the meadow, as this word is used, Gen. xli. 2, i. e. the grass of a meadow. But our translation seems the best, because it is compared with other herbs.

12 ^{f Ps. 129. 6. Jer. 17. 6.} Whilst it is yet in his greenness, and not cut down, it withereth before any other herb.

Yet in his greenness; whereby it promiseth long continuance. Not cut down; though no man cut it down, it withereth of itself, and will save a man the labour of cutting or plucking it up. It gives not a man so much warning that he can cut it down in time, as other green herbs do, but suddenly withereth. Before any other herb, i. e. sooner than other herbs, or in their presence, or they surviving; in which sense it seems to be said that Ishmael died in the presence of his brethren, Gen. xxv. 18; the rest of the herbs looking upon it, and admiring this sudden change. For actions of sense and understanding are oft ascribed to lifeless creatures, both in Scripture and other authors.

13 So are the paths of all that forget God; and the ^hhypocrite's hope shall perish:

Of all that forget God, i. e. of wicked men, who are branded with this same character, Psal. ix. 17; l. 22; or hypocrites, as the next words explain it, who are described by their first and fundamental miscarriage, which is, that they forget, i. e. neglect, forsake, and despise, (for so this phrase is commonly understood, as Deut. vi. 12; viii. 11, &c.; xxxii. 18; Jer. ii. 32; xxiii. 27,) God, i. e. his presence, and commands, and worship, and providence; and therefore break forth into manifold sins. But by their paths he doth not understand the course of their actions, or manner of their living; but the events which befall them, called their paths objectively, because they are the paths of God, or the methods of his providence, or manner of his dealing with them. Now this may be accommodated to the foregoing similitude in this manner: Such is the prosperity of wicked men, because it wants the solid foundation of their piety, and of God's promise and blessing consequent thereupon, it quickly vanisheth into nothing. The hypocrite's hope shall perish, i. e. he shall lose what he hoped for (hope being oft put for its object,) even uninterrupted and abiding felicity, and with it all hope of restitution.

14 Whose hope shall be cut off, and whose trust shall be † a spider's web.

i. e. Whose wealth and outward glory, which is the matter of his hope and trust, shall be cut off, i. e. suddenly and violently taken away from him. Whose hope shall be irksome or tedious to him, by the succession of earnest expectation and great disappointment. A spider's web; which though it be formed with great art and industry, and may do much mischief to others, yet is most slender and feeble, and easily swept down or pulled in pieces, and unable to defend the spider that made it. The application is obvious.

15 ^hHe shall lean upon his house, but it shall not stand: he shall hold it fast, but it shall not endure.

He, either the spider, or rather, the wicked man signified by it, shall lean upon his house, i. e. he shall trust to the multitude and strength of his children and servants, and to his wealth, all which come under the name of a man's house in Scripture use. It shall not stand, i. e. not be able to uphold itself, nor him that trusted to it. He shall hold it fast; or, he shall take fast hold of it; not to uphold it, but to strengthen and uphold himself by it, as it is in the former branch.

16 He is green before the sun, and his branch shooteth forth in his garden.

He; either, 1. The perfect man, here understood out of ver. 20, where it is expressed; or rather, 2. The hypocrite, of whom he hath hitherto treated, to whom this and the following verses very well agree; whom he before compared to a rush, and then to a spider's web, and now to a tree, which is of a more solid substance, and more durable; as if he said, As some wicked men are quickly cut off in the very beginnings of their prosperity, so there are others who seem to be more firmly grounded, and yet they also at last come to ruin. Is green, i. e. flourisheth in the world. Before the sun; either, 1. Publicly, and in the view of all men, who observe it with admiration, and applause, and envy; compare 2 Sam. xii. 12. Or rather, 2. Notwithstanding all the scorching heat of the sun, which quickly withers the rushes and herbs, of which he spake before, but doth only cherish and refresh the tree. And so doth many a wicked man secure himself, and thrive and prosper even in times of great danger and trouble, and in spite of all opposition. His branch; or, his branches; the singular number for the plural; either, 1. Properly, and so this belongs to the description of a flourishing tree, by the spreading of its branches here, as by the depth of its root, ver. 17. Or, 2. Metaphorically, to wit, his children, which are here mentioned as additions, not only to his comfort, but also to his strength and safety. In his garden; a place where it is defended from those injuries to which the trees of the field are subject from men and beasts, and where, besides the natural advantages common to all trees, it hath peculiar helps from the art and industry of men, by whom it is watered and assisted as need requires. So he supposeth this man to be placed in the most desirable circumstances.

17 His roots are wrapped about the heap, and seeth the place of stones.

About the heap, to wit, of stones, which word may be here understood out of the latter branch of the verse, as is very usual in Scripture use. This circumstance of the tree is added to signify, either, 1. Its firmness and strength, that it was not in loose and sandy ground, which a violent wind might overthrow, but in solid and hard ground, within which were many stones, which its numerous and spreading roots embrace, folding and interweaving themselves severally about several stones. Or, 2. Its singular and extraordinary growth, in spite of all disadvantages and oppositions; that even stony ground, which is very prejudicial to trees, Matt. xiii. 5, doth not hinder its growth, but only add to its strength. So God and man seem to conspire, and all things concur, to secure and perpetuate this man's happiness. Some render the words, His roots are wrapped, or folded, or spread about, or beside, a spring, as the Hebrew gal sometimes signifies, as Josh. xv. 19; Cant. iv. 12, i. e. a moist ground, which is much to its advantage: see Psal. i. 3; Jer. xvii. 8. Seeth: he, i. e. the tree whose roots he last mentioneth, reacheth thither, spreadeth himself so far, takes the advantage of that place for the strengthening of itself. Seeing is oft put for enjoying, and is frequently attributed to lifeless things, by a known figure, called prosopopeia. The place, Heb. the house, which is oft used for a place; as 2 Sam. vi. 17; 1 Kings viii. 6. Others render the words thus, he looketh upon the house of stones, i. e. made of stones for greater beauty and strength. He standeth proudly, and looketh boldly upon its owner's house, nigh unto which it is placed, even in his garden, as was said before.

18 ⁱIf he destroy him from his place, then it shall deny him, saying, I have not seen thee.

If he; either God, who is the Saviour of good men, and the Destroyer of the wicked; or the owner; or any other man; for this is an indefinite speech, and may be taken passively and impersonally; which is very common in the holy text and language. From his place, in which he was planted. Then it, i. e. the place; to which denying him and seeing him are here ascribed figuratively, as we have oft seen. I have not seen thee, i. e. I do not know nor remember that ever thou wast planted here. He shall be so utterly extirpated and destroyed, that there shall be no footstep, nor name, nor memorial of him left there.

19 Behold, this is the joy of his way, and ^kout of the earth shall others grow.

This is the joyful and happy issue of the flourishing course, state, and condition (which is frequently called a way) of this tree, or of the hypocrite, manifestly represented by it, and expressed ver. 13. It is a sarcasm or irony, and is to be understood contrariwise of his sad and unhappy end. Out of the earth shall others grow, i. e. out of the same earth or place shall another tree grow; which could not be if there had been but a stump of it left, though under ground. So it notes the total extirpation of the tree, and of the hypocrite, that his person and all his children and family shall be utterly extinct, and so a stranger shall come into his place, and enjoy the fruit of his labours. But the words are and may be otherwise rendered very agreeably to the Hebrew text, and out of other ground they (i. e. plants or trees, of which he is here speaking) shall grow, or others shall grow, or plants shall grow; the noun being contained in the verb. So the sense is, This tree shall be rooted up, and the very ground of it so cursed, that nothing shall grow or thrive in it; but other ground shall be fruitful, and other trees that stood round about it shall stand still and flourish in their places. His design in all this is to prove Job to be a hypocrite, because he meets with their lot, which is total destruction.

20 Behold, God will not cast away a perfect man, neither will he † help the evil doers:

Heb. God will not despise or reject, i. e. he will not deny them his help, as appears by the opposite and following branch of the verse; he will not suffer them to be utterly lost. Help, i. e. deliver them out of their troubles. Hence it may seem that thou, O Job, art not a perfect or upright man, but an evil-doer. But this is certain, if for the future thy heart and way be not perfect, and thou dost not cease to do evil, thou wilt be utterly and irrevocably lost; as, on the contrary, if thou dost repent and reform, he will help and deliver thee, and restore thee to thy former glory and happiness; which promise, though it be not here expressed, is sufficiently implied in the contrary threatening, as is evident from the following words, which plainly suppose it, and have a reference to it; such ellipses of contraries being not unusual in Scripture, as we shall see hereafter, especially in the Book of the Proverbs.

^{+ Heb. shouting for joy.} 21 Till he fill thy mouth with laughing, and thy lips with † rejoicing.

And what I have said in general of all perfect men, shall be made good to thee, if thou be such a one; God will not forsake thee, nor desist from doing thee good, till he fill, &c., i. e. God will give thee such abundant matter of rejoicing, that thy heart shall not be able to hold it, but it shall break out at thy mouth and lips.

Having showed what good God would do to the perfect man, he now declares the contrary portion of the wicked; and as he said that God would not help them, ver. 20, so here he adds, that God will bring not only them, but their house, i. e. their family and estate, to nought.

CHAP. IX.

Job's answer: man cannot stand in judgment with God, because of his justice, wisdom, and power, which are unsearchable, 1—11. All help or reason against God is vain; nor can we answer him; but must supplicate to our Judge, 12—15. God's sovereignty, and our vileness before him, 16—21. The godly are punished as well as the wicked by general calamities and wicked oppression, 22—24. His time swift; his sorrows bitter: if wicked, he could not clear himself; nor would God hold him innocent, 25—31; yet wisheth for a daysman, and a removal of Divine terror; then would he before God maintain his innocency, 32—35.

THEN Job answered and said,

^{a Ps. 143. 2. Rom. 3. 20. † Or, before God.} 2 I know it is so of a truth: but how should ^a man be just || with God?

I know it is so, to wit, as you say, that God is just in all his ways, that he doth ordinarily bless the righteous, and punish the wicked. But how should man be just? Heb. and how, &c. ? i. e. and I know that no man is absolutely just, or can defend his righteousness, if God be severe to mark what is amiss in him. With God; either, 1. Being compared with God; or, 2. Before God, as the same phrase is taken, 1 Sam. ii. 26; Psal. cxxx. 3, if he be brought before God's tribunal to debate the matter with him.

3 If he will contend with him, he cannot answer him one of a thousand.

If God be pleased to contend (to wit, in judgment; debate or plead; for so this word is oft used, as Hos. ii. 2; iv. 1; Micah vi. 1; compare Isa. xlv. 9) with man. One of a thousand; either to one accusation or argument among a thousand which God shall produce against him, or one time of a thousand. So far will he be from being able to maintain his own innocency against God, if God set himself against him as his adversary.

^{b ch. 36. 5.} 4 ^b He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength: who hath hardened himself against him, and hath prospered?

Wise in heart; either, 1. Really and profoundly wise; or,

2. Wise in his mind or understanding, which in Hebrew is oft called the heart, as Prov. ii. 10; vi. 32; Hos. iv. 11, because the Hebrews make the heart the seat of the understanding, or of the reasonable soul. The sense is, He is infinitely wise, and so knows all things, and searcheth all men's hearts and ways, and discovers a multitude of sins which men's short-sighted eyes cannot see; and therefore can charge them with innumerable evils where they thought themselves innocent, and sees far more malignity than men could discern in their sins: and men cannot conceal any of their sins from him, nor cheat him, as they may other men, with crafty devices and evasions; so that there is no contending with him. Mighty in strength, i. e. omnipotent; and therefore if men contumaciously persist in contending with him after they are convicted and condemned, he can easily crush them. So that whether men contend with God by wisdom or by strength, (which are the two ways of one man's contending with another,) God will be conqueror. Who hath hardened himself against him, i. e. obstinately contended with him? Or, spoken hard things towards him; quarrelling with him, opposing and reproaching God's providence towards him as hard and unjust. Compare Jude 15. Hath prospered, Heb. hath been at peace, i. e. hath not provoked God to his own destruction. A common figure, called meiosis, whereby more is understood than is expressed.

5 Which removeth the mountains, and they know not: which overturneth them in his anger.

He proceedeth to give particular evidences of the Divine power and wisdom, which he mentioned ver. 4. And they know not, i. e. suddenly and unexpectedly, ere they were aware of it. They, i. e. the mountains, to which he ascribes sense and knowledge figuratively, as hath been oft noted. In his anger; in token of his displeasure with men that lived upon them, or near them.

6 Which ^c shaketh the earth out of her ^c place, and ^d the pillars thereof tremble.

^{e Is. 2. 19, 21. Hag. 2. 6, 21. Heb. 12. 26. d ch. 26. 11.} The earth, i. e. great portions of it, by earthquakes, or by removing islands, which sometimes hath been done. The pillars thereof, i. e. the strength or the strongest parts of it, the mountains, yea, the deep and inward parts of it, which, like pillars, supported those parts which appear to our view, and yet have been discovered and overturned by earthquakes.

7 Which commandeth the sun, and it riseth not; and sealeth up the stars.

He speaks either, 1. Of that which God can do; or rather, (as he doth in the foregoing and following instances,) 2. Of what God actually doth; and that either, 1. Ordinarily; and so he gives laws to the sun that it shall not rise, but at such times, and to such places, and in such manner as he hath appointed; as that it shall rise constantly at its set time, and never disorderly; that it shall not rise for divers months together in some parts of the world, &c. Or rather, 2. Extraordinarily; (for of such works of God he discourseth in this place;) and so it may note either some stop given to the sun for a small season, like that in Joshua's time; which might have been, though it be not recorded; or some extraordinary tempest or dark season, wherein the morning is made darkness, as the phrase is, Amos iv. 13; compare v. 8; wherein the sun doth not at all appear, (as it was for many days together, Acts xxvii. 20,) and consequently is to those places and persons as if he were not risen. For things in Scripture are oft said to be, or not to be, when they appear or disappear; of which some instances have been formerly given, and more we shall have hereafter, in their proper places. Sealeth up the stars, i. e. as it were, covereth and shutteth them up that they may not shine, as in dark and dismal tempests, like that now mentioned, Acts xxvii. 20, when neither sun nor stars appeared for many days.

8 ^e Which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the ^f waves of the sea.

^{e Gen. 1. 6. Ps. 104. 2, 3. † Heb. heights.} Alone, i. e. by his own single power, without any other help. Spreadeth out the heavens: he spread them out like a curtain, Psal. civ. 1, 2; and he in a manner spreads them again every day, i. e. keeps them spread for the comfort and benefit of this lower world, and doth not roll and fold them up, as he will do in due time : see Isa. xxxiv. 4 ; 2 Pet. iii. 10 ; Rev. vi. 14. Or, boweth down the heavens, as the same Hebrew verb is rendered, Psal. xviii. 9. So it is a further description of a black and tempestuous season, wherein the heavens seem to be brought down and nearer to the earth. Treadeth upon the waves of the sea, i. e. represseth and ruleth them when they rage and are tempestuous ; for treading upon any thing signifies in Scripture use power and dominion over it ; as Deut. xxxiii. 29 ; Job xl. 12 ; Psal. lx. 12 ; xci. 13 ; Luke x. 19.

9 ^{f Gen. 1. 16. ch. 38. 31. &c. Amos 5. 8. + Heb. Ash, Cesth, and Cimh.} Which maketh † Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south.

Maketh ; either, 1. Created them ; or rather, 2. Ordereth and disposeth them, as the word making is sometimes used in Scripture ; governeth their rising and setting, and all their influences. Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south : these he names as stars or constellations of greatest note and eminency ; for so they are both in Scripture and other authors, and such as have, or are thought to have, a special influence in raising storms and tempests ; but under them he seems to comprehend all the stars, which as they were created by God, so are under his government. Arcturus is a northern constellation, near that called the Bear, which riseth to us about the beginning of September, and by its rising produceth (as Pliny affirms) horrible storms and tempests. Orion is a more southerly constellation, that ariseth to us in December, and is noted by astronomers for raising fearful winds and tempests, both by sea and land. The Pleiades is a constellation not far from Orion, and near that called the Bull, which we call the Seven Stars : to us it riseth at the beginning of the spring, and by its rising causeth rains and tempests, and therefore is unwelcome to mariners at sea. By the chambers (or inmost and secret chambers, as the word signifies) of the south, he seems to understand those stars and constellations which are towards the southern pole, which are fitly called inward chambers, because they are for the most part hid and shut up (as chambers commonly are) from these parts of the world, and do not rise or appear to us till the beginning of summer, when they also raise southerly winds and tempests, as astronomers observe.

10 ^{g ch. 5. 9. Pa. 71. 16.} Which doeth great things past finding out ; yea, and wonders without number.

Which words were produced by Eliphaz, chap. v. 9, (where they are explained,) and are here repeated by Job, to show his agreement with him therein.

11 ^{h ch. 23. 8. 9. & 35. 14.} Lo, he goeth by me, and I see him not : he passeth on also, but I perceive him not.

He goeth, i. e. he worketh by his providence in ways of mercy or judgment. By me ; or, besides or before me ; in my presence. I see him not ; I see the effects, but I cannot understand the causes or grounds of his actions, for they are incomprehensible by me, or by any other men : for though he speaks only in his own person, yet he means it of all men ; that such is the weakness of men's understandings, that they cannot search out God's counsels and ways : see Acts xvii. 27 ; Rom. xi. 33. He passeth on also ; he goeth from place to place, from one action to another. He speaks of God after the manner of men.

12 ^{i Is. 45. 9. Jer. 18. 6. Rom. 9. 20. + Heb. who can turn him away ? ch. 11. 10.} Behold, he taketh away, † who can hinder him ? who will say unto him, What doest thou ?

If he determine to take away from any man his children, or servants, or estate, as he hath done from me, who is able to restrain him from doing it ? or who dare presume to reprove him for it ? And therefore far be it from me to quarrel with God, whereof you untruly accuse me.

13 ^{k ch. 26. 12. Is. 30. 7. + Heb. helpers of pride, or, strength.} If God will not withdraw his anger, the † proud helpers do stoop under him.

i. e. If God resolve not to withdraw his rod and stroke, the effect of his anger. Or without if, which is not in the Hebrew, God will not withdraw his anger, i. e. not forbear to punish, neither because any man can overpower and restrain him, nor for fear lest he should rebuke him for proceeding to punish, as is implied by comparing this verse with the former. The proud helpers, i. e. those men who shall undertake to uphold and defend him whom God intends to punish and destroy ; who are fitly called proud helpers, because this is a most proud, and insolent, and presumptuous act, to oppose themselves to the Lord God Almighty, and to his counsels and courses : or, (as it is in the Hebrew,) helpers of pride, because they give assistance to that man who carries himself proudly and stoutly towards God under his correcting hand : or, (as some translate it,) the helpers of Egypt, or the Egyptian helpers, i. e. the most potent helpers ; for Egypt was in Job's time a powerful and flourishing kingdom, and not far from Job's country. And the word rahab, here rendered pride, is elsewhere put for Egypt, as Psal. lxxxvii. 4 ; Isa. li. 9 ; and (as some take it) Job xxvi. 12. Do stoop under him, i. e. shall fall and be crushed by him ; and consequently they who are helped by him must fall with them.

14 How much less shall I answer him, and choose out my words to reason with him ?

Since no creature whatsoever can resist his power, and no man living can search out or comprehend his counsels and ways ; how can I, who am a poor, contemptible, dispirited creature, contend with him ? Answer him, i. e. answer his allegations and arguments produced against me. Choose out my words to reason with him, Heb. choose my words with (or before, or against, as this particle is used, Deut. ix. 7 ; Psal. xciv. 16 ; Prov. xxx. 31) him, i. e. shall I try whether God or I can choose fitter words, or stronger arguments ? or shall I contend with him, and expect to get the better of him by using choice, and forcible, and elegant words, as one man doth with another ?

15 ^{l ch. 10. 15.} Whom, though I were righteous, yet would I not answer, but I would make supplication to my judge.

Though I were righteous ; though I had a most just cause, and were not conscious to myself of any sin. Yet would I not answer, i. e. I durst not undertake to plead my cause against him, or maintain my integrity before him, because he knows me better than I know myself, and because I am wholly in his hands, and at his mercy. I would make supplication to my Judge, to wit, that he would hear me meekly, and judge favourably of me and my cause, and not according to the rigours of his justice.

16 If I had called, and he had answered me ; yet would I not believe that he had hearkened unto my voice.

If I had called, i. e. prayed, as this word is commonly used, to wit, unto my Judge, for a favourable sentence, as he now said, and therefore it was needless here to mention the object of his calling or prayer. Yet would I not believe that he had hearkened unto my voice ; I could not believe that God had indeed granted my desire, though he had done it ; because I am so infinitely below him, and obnoxious to him, and still full of the tokens of his displeasure ; and therefore should conclude that it was but a pleasant dream or fancy, and not a real thing : compare Psal. cxxvi. 1.

17 For he breaketh me with a tempest, and multiplieth my wounds ^{m ch. 2. 3. & 34. 6.} without cause.

This is the reason of his foregoing diffidence, that even when God seemed to answer him in words, yet the course of his actions towards him was of a quite contrary nature and tendency. With a tempest ; as with a tempest, i. e. unexpectedly, violently, and irrecoverably. Without cause ; not simply without any desert of his, or as if he had no sin in him, for he oft declares the contrary ; but without any evident or special cause of such singular afflictions, i. e. any peculiar and extraordinary guilt, such as my friends charge me with.

18 He will not suffer me to take my breath, but filleth me with bitterness.

My pains and miseries are continual, and I have not so much as a breathing time free from them. My afflictions are not only long and uninterrupted, but also exceeding sharp and violent, contrary to the common course of God's providence.

19 If I speak of strength, lo, he is strong: and if of judgment, who shall set me a time to plead?

If my cause were to be decided by power, lo, he is strong, i. e. stronger than I. If I would contend with him in a way of right, there is no superior judge that can summon him and me together, and appoint us a time of pleading before him, and oblige us both to stand to his sentence; and therefore I must be contented to sit down with the loss.

20 If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me: if I say, I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse.

If I plead against God mine own righteousness and innocency, God is so infinitely wise and just, that he will find sufficient matter of condemnation from my own words, though spoken with all possible care and circumspection; or he will discover so much wickedness in me of which I was not aware, that I shall be forced to join with him in condemning myself. If I say, I am perfect; if I were perfect in my own opinion; if I thought myself completely righteous and faultless, it, i. e. my own mouth, as he now said, or, he, i. e. God, who is easily understood by comparing this with the former verses, where the same he is oft mentioned, shall also prove me perverse.

21 Though I were perfect, yet would I not know my soul: I would despise my life.

i. e. Though God should acquit me in judgment, and pronounce me perfect or righteous, yet would I not know, i. e. regard or value, (as that word is oft used,) my soul, i. e. my life; as the soul frequently signifies, as Gen. xix. 17; Job ii. 6; John x. 15, 17; and as it is explained in the following branch, where life is put for soul, and despising for not knowing: and so the same thing is repeated in differing words, and the latter clause explains the former, which was more dark and doubtful, according to the usage of sacred Scripture. So the sense is, Though God should give sentence for me, yet I should be so overwhelmed with the dread and terror of the Divine Majesty, that I should be weary of my life. And therefore I abhor the thoughts of contending with my Maker, whereof you accuse me; and yet I have reason to be weary of my life, and to desire death. Or thus, If I say, I am perfect, as the very same Hebrew words are rendered, ver. 20, i. e. if I should think myself perfect, yet I would not know, i. e. not acknowledge, my soul; I could not own nor plead before God the perfection and integrity of my soul, but would only make supplication to my Judge, as he said, ver. 15, and flee to his grace and mercy; I would abhor, or reject, or condemn my life, i. e. my conversation. So the sense is, I would not insist upon nor trust to the integrity, either of my soul and heart, or of my life, so as to justify myself before the pure and piercing eyes of the all-seeing God.

22 This is one thing, therefore I said it, "He destroyeth the perfect and the wicked."

In the other things which you have spoken of God's greatness, justice, &c., I do not contend with you, but this one thing I do and must affirm against you. Therefore I said it; I did not utter it rashly, but upon deep consideration. God sends afflictions promiscuously upon good and bad men. Compare Psal. lxxiii. 2, &c.; Eccles. ix. 2; Jer. xii. 1, &c.

23 If the scourge slay suddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent.

If the scourge slay suddenly; either, 1. If some common and deadly judgment come upon a people, which destroys both good and bad. Or, 2. If God inflicts some grievous and unexpected stroke upon an innocent person, as it follows. He will laugh at the trial of the innocent; as he doth at the destruction of the wicked, Psal. ii. 4. His outward carriage is the same to both; he neglects the innocent, and seems not to answer their prayers, and suffers them to perish with others, as if he took pleasure in their ruin also. But withal, he intimates the matter and cause of his laughter or complacency which God takes in their afflictions, because to them they are but trials of their faith, and patience, and perseverance, which tends to God's honour, and their own eternal advantage.

24 The earth is given into the hand of the wicked: °he covereth the faces of the judges thereof; if not, where, and who is he?

The earth, i. e. the possession and dominion of men and things on earth. Is given, to wit, by God, the great Lord and Disposer of it, by his providence. Into the hand of the wicked; into their power. As good men are scourged, ver. 23, so the wicked are advanced and prospered, in this world. He covereth the faces of the judges thereof, i. e. he blinds their eyes, that they cannot discern between truth and falsehood, justice and unrighteousness. He. Who? Either, 1. The wicked last mentioned, who either by power or by gifts corrupts the officers of justice. Or rather, 2. God, whom the pronoun he designed all along this chapter; who is oft said to blind the minds of men, which he doth not positively, by making them blind, but privatively, by withdrawing his own light, and leaving them to their own mistakes and lusts. Or by judges he may hear mean those who are worthy of that name, and duly administer that office; whose faces God may be said to cover, because he removeth them from their high places into obscurity, and covers them with contempt, and in a manner passeth a sentence of condemnation and destruction upon them; covering of the face being the usual posture of condemned persons, and of men in great misery; of which see Esth. vii. 8; Psal. xlv. 15; Isa. xxii. 17; Jer. xiv. 4. So the sense of this verse is, God commonly advanceth wicked men into power and honour, and casteth down men of true worth and virtue from their seats. If not; if it be not as I say, if God do not these things. Where, and who is he? either, 1. Who will confute me by solid arguments? Or, 2. Who doth these things? Who but God doth dispose of the world in this manner?

25 Now ^pmy days are swifter than a ^pch. 7. 6, 7. post: they flee away, they see no good.

What he had said of the calamities which God usually inflicted upon good men, he now exemplifieth in himself. My days; the days, either of my prosperity; for the time of affliction is commonly described by the night; or rather, of my life, as the last clause showeth; for it were an absurd and contradictory speech to say that his prosperous days saw no good. A post; who runs or rides upon swift horses. They see no good; I enjoy no good in them. Seeing is oft put for experiencing either good or evil, Job vii. 7; Psal. xxxiv. 12; John iii. 36; viii. 51.

26 They are passed away as the † swift ships: °as the eagle that hasteth to the prey.

Swift ships, Heb. ships of desire; which make great haste, as if they longed for their desired haven, as it is called, Psal. cvii. 30. Or, ships of pleasure; which sail more swiftly than ships of great burden. As the eagle; which generally flies most swiftly, Deut. xxviii. 49; Jer. iv. 13; Lam. iv. 19, especially when its own hunger and the sight of its prey quickens its motion.

27 °If I say, I will forget my complaint, I will leave off my heaviness, and comfort myself:

If I say; if I resolve within myself. I will forget my complaints; I will cease complaining. My heaviness, Heb. mine anger; wherewith Job was charged by his friends, chap. xviii. 4; my angry expressions. And comfort myself; I will endeavour to take comfort.

28 °I am afraid of all my sorrows, I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent.

My sorrows; or, my pains and griefs. I find all such endeavours vain; for if my griefs be suspended for a little time, yet my fears continue. I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent; I plainly perceive that my changing my note is to no purpose; for thou, O God, (to whom he makes a sudden apostrophe, as he doth also ver. 31,) wilt not clear my innocency, by removing those afflictions which make them judge me guilty of some great crime. Words proceeding from great impatience and despair of relief.

29 If I be wicked, why then labour I in vain?

Heb. I shall be wicked, or guilty, to wit, before thee. Whether I be holy or wicked, if I dispute with thee, I shall be found guilty. Or thus, I shall be used like a wicked man, and punished as such. So this is opposed to his not being held innocent, ver. 28, i. e. not being acquitted or exempt from punishment. Why then should I not indulge my griefs, but restrain them? Why should I comfort myself with vain hopes of deliverance, as thou advisest me, chap. viii. 6; or seek to God, as I was directed, chap. v. 8, for that ease which I see he is resolved not to give me? Why should I trouble myself with clearing mine innocence, seeing God will still hold me guilty?

u Jer. 2. 22. 30 "If I wash myself with snow water, and make my hands never so clean;

If I wash myself; either, 1. Really, by sanctification, cleansing my heart and life from all filthiness; or rather, 2. Declaratively or judicially, i. e. if I clear myself from all imputations, and fully prove my innocency before men. With snow water, i. e. as men cleanse their bodies, and as under the law they purified themselves, with water, which he here calls water of snow, either because by its purity and brightness it resembled snow; or because in those dry countries, where fresh and pure water was scarce, snow water was much in use; or because that water might be much used among them in some of their ritual purifications, as coming down from heaven.

31 Yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own clothes shall ||abhor me.

|| Or, make me to be abhorred.

In the ditch, i. e. in mire and puddle water, whereby I shall become most filthy. But as Job's washing, so God's plunging him, &c., is not understood really, as if God would make him filthy; but only judicially, that God would prove him to be a most guilty and filthy creature, notwithstanding all the professions and evidences of his purity before men. Mine own clothes shall abhor me, i. e. I shall be so altogether filthy, that my own clothes, if they had any sense in them, would abhor to touch me: a figure called prosopopœia.

x Eccles. 6. 10. Is. 45. 9. Jer. 49. 19. Rom. 9. 20. 32 For he is not a man, as I am, that I should answer him, and we should come together in judgment.

He is not a man, as I am; but one infinitely superior to me in majesty, and power, and wisdom, and justice. That I should answer him; that I should presume to debate my cause with him, or answer his allegations against me. That we should come together, face to face, to plead upon equal terms before a superior and indifferent judge.

y ver. 19. 1 Sam. 2. 25. 33 'Neither is there † any ||daysman betwixt us, that might lay his hand upon us both.

† Heb. one that should argue. || Or, umpire. Daysman; or, a reprover; or, a judge or umpire, whose office was to reprove the guilty person. That might lay his hand upon us both, i. e. use his power and authority to appoint the time and place of our meeting, to order and govern us in pleading, and to oblige us to stand to his decision. The hand is oft put for power, and laying on the hand upon another was oftentimes an act and sign of superiority and dominion.

z ch. 13. 20. 21. 22. & 33. 7. Ps. 39. 10. 34 *Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrify me:

His fear; objectively so called, i. e. the fear and dread of him, of his majesty and justice. Let him not deal with me rigorously, according to his sovereign dominion and perfect justice, but according to his wonted grace and clemency.

† Heb. but am not so with myself. 35 Then would I speak, and not fear him; † but it is not so with me.

i. e. I would speak freely for myself, being freed from the dread of his majesty, which takes away my spirit and courage, and stoppeth my mouth. But it is not so with me, i. e. I am not free from his terror, and therefore cannot and dare not plead my cause boldly with him; and so have nothing else to do but to ease myself by renewing my complaints; as he doth in the next words. Others thus, but I am not so with myself, i. e. I am in a manner beside myself, distracted with the terrors of God upon me. Or rather thus, for I am not so with myself, or in my own conscience, as I perceive I am in your eyes, to wit, a hypocrite and ungodly man. So this is a reason why he could speak to God without slavish fear, because he was conscious to himself of his own integrity: I have a good conscience within myself, and therefore could use boldness in speaking to God, provided he would not deal with me in strict justice, but upon the terms of grace and mercy which he hath proposed to sinners, and with allowance to human infirmities.

CHAP. X.

His life a burden; his complaint that he could not see the cause or end of God's punishment: God delighteth not to oppress; nor was his innocence, though suspected by men, hid from God, 1—7. He urgeth that, being God's work, in his hands, receiving all from him, God would not destroy him, 8—13. His sins expose him to God's wrath, which was terrible upon him, 14—17; curseth his birth: death desirable to him, 18—22.

MY *soul is ||weary of my life; I will leave my complaint upon myself; †I will speak in the bitterness of my soul.

a 1 Kin. 19. 4. ch. 7. 16. Jonah 4. 3, 8. || Or, cut off while I live. b ch. 7. 11.

So the sense is, My soul is weary of dwelling in this rotten and miserable carcass. Or, I am from my heart, or with my very soul, weary of my life; and therefore I may be excused if I complain. Or, My soul is cut off while I live, i. e. I am dead whilst I live; I am in a manner buried alive. I will leave my complaint upon myself: so the sense is, I will complain, and the burden or hazard of so doing I will take upon myself, and be willing to bear it; I must give my sorrows vent, let come on me what will, as he saith, chap. xiii. 13. But the words may be read interrogatively, Shall I then (or how can I then) leave my complaint (i. e. give over complaining) within or concerning (as the Hebrew at oft signifies) myself? Or they may be rendered thus, I will strengthen (as this verb signifies, Neh. iii. 8) my complaint against myself; whereby he implies that he would not complain against God so as to accuse him of injustice, but only against himself, or against his own life; or, concerning myself, i. e. I must renew and increase my complaints, as God renews and increases my sorrows. I will speak in the bitterness of my soul; my extreme misery forceth my complaints from me.

2 I will say unto God, Do not condemn me; shew me wherefore thou contendest with me.

Do not condemn me; or, Pronounce me not to be a wicked man, as my friends do; neither deal with me as such, as I confess thou mightest do by thy sovereign power and in rigorous justice. O discover my integrity by removing this stroke, for which my friends so highly censure and condemn me. Wherefore, i. e. for what ends and reasons, and for what sins? for I am not conscious to myself of any peculiar and eminent sins by which I have deserved to be made the most miserable of all mortals.

3 Is it good unto thee that thou shouldst oppress, that thou shouldst despise † the work of thine hands, and shine upon the counsel of the wicked?

† Heb. the labour of thine hands. 1's. 134. 5. Is. 64. 8.

Dost thou take any pleasure in it? Hast thou any advantage or honour by it? Dost thou think it right and just, and becoming the Ruler of the world? That thou shouldst oppress, by thy absolute and irresistible power, without any regard to that justice, and equity, and clemency by which thou usest to govern mankind. That thou shouldst despise, i. e. show thy contempt of them, either by denying them common favour and protection, or by destroying them. The work of thine hands, which every workman loves and maintains. Shine upon the counsel of the wicked, i. e. by the methods of thy providence seem to favour the courses and practices of wicked men, to whom thou givest prosperity and success, whilst thou frownest upon me and other good men. This may have reference either to Job's friends, whose ungodly censures God seemed to approve, by continuing Job's afflictions upon him; or to the Chaldeans and Sabeans, who had succeeded in their wicked attempts upon Job; but it seems to be more generally meant of wicked men.

^c 1 Sam. 16. 4 Hast thou eyes of flesh? or ^cseest thou as man seeth?

Of flesh, i. e. of a man, who is called flesh, as Gen. vi. 13; Isa. xl. 6. Seest thou as man seeth? Man seeth outsiders only, and judgeth by appearances, and is liable to many mistakes, and cannot search out secret faults without forcing men by cruel usage to accuse themselves: but thou needest none of these arts; thou seest my heart and mine uprightness, which my friends do not see, who therefore are more excusable in charging me with hypocrisy: but thou knowest all things, thou needest not examine me by tortures, as thou now dost, ver. 6. For thou knowest that I am not wicked, as he saith, ver. 7, and therefore do not thou deal with me as if I were wicked.

5 Are thy days as the days of man? are thy years as man's days,

Man's time is short and uncertain, and therefore he must improve his time whilst he hath it, and diligently search out the crimes of malefactors, and punish them whilst he may, lest by death he lose the opportunity of doing justice, and the criminal get out of his power. But it is not so with thee, thou art eternal and unchangeable, and seest at one view all men's hearts, and all their actions present and to come; and therefore thou dost not need to proceed with me in this manner, by making so long and so severe a scrutiny into my heart and life.

6 That thou enquirest after mine iniquity, and searchest after my sin?

Keeping me so long as it were upon the rack to compel me to accuse myself, as men sometimes do.

[†] Heb. It is upon thy knowledge. ^d Ps. 139. 1, 2. 7 [†] Thou knowest that I am not wicked; and there is none that can deliver out of thine hand.

I am not wicked, i. e. a hypocrite, or an ungodly man, as my friends account me; and therefore deal not with me as such. There is none that can deliver out of thine hand: the sense is, either, 1. Thou dost not need to keep me fast in thy prison, lest I should make an escape, or any should rescue me out of thy hands, which none can do; therefore take off thy hand from me. Or, 2. If thou dost not help and deliver me, none else can do it; therefore do not thou fail me; which, considering God's merciful nature, is a good argument. If any man oppress another, he may have relief from thee, who art higher than his oppressor, Eccles. v. 8; but thou art the supreme and uncontrollable Ruler of the world, and therefore thou must needs do right, Gen. xviii. 25; and therefore do not thou oppress me. See above, ver. 3.

^e Ps. 119. 73. [†] Heb. thok yaina about me. 8 [†]Thine hands [†]have made me and fashioned me together round about; yet thou dost destroy me.

Together round about, i. e. all of me; all the faculties of my soul, and all the parts of my body, which are now over-spread with sores and ulcers; I am wholly thy creature and workmanship, made by thee and for thee. Thou dost destroy me, or swallow me up, to wit, without cause, or any eminent provocation of mine; as if thou didst delight in doing and undoing, in making and then destroying thy creatures; which doth not become thy wisdom or goodness.

^f Gen. 2. 7. ^g 3. 19. ^h Ia. 64. 8. 9 Remember, I beseech thee, that 'thou hast made me as the clay; and wilt thou bring me into dust again?

As the clay, i. e. of the clay; the note of similitude here expressing the truth of things, as it doth John i. 14, and elsewhere, as hath been before observed. Or, as a potter maketh a vessel of the clay; and so this may note both the frailty of man's nature, which of itself decays and perisheth, and doth not need such violent shocks and storms to overthrow it; and the excellency of the Divine artifice, commended from the meanness of the materials out of which it was made; which is an argument why God should not destroy it. Wilt thou bring me into dust again? wilt thou now causelessly and violently destroy thy own work?

But the words are and may be read without an interrogation, and thou wilt bring me into dust again, out of which I was made: I must die by the course of nature, and by the sentence of thy law; and therefore whilst I do live give me some ease and comfort.

10 ^g Hast thou not poured me out as ^g ^h ⁱ ^j ^k ^l ^m ⁿ ^o ^p ^q ^r ^s ^t ^u ^v ^w ^x ^y ^z milk, and curdled me like cheese?

Thus he modestly and accurately describes God's admirable work in making man out of a small and liquid, and as it were milky, substance, by degrees congealed and condensed into that exquisite frame of man's body.

11 Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast [†] fenced me with bones [†] and sinews.

Clothed me, i. e. covered my inward and more noble parts; which, as philosophers and physicians observe, are first formed. So he proceeds in describing man's formation gradually. With bones and sinews; which are the stay and strength of the body; and some of them, as the skull and ribs, enclose and defend its vital and most noble parts.

12 Thou hast granted me life and favour, and thy visitation hath preserved my spirit.

Thou didst not only give me a curious body, but also a living and a reasonable soul: thou didst at first give me life, and then maintain it in me; both when I was in the womb, (which is a marvellous work of God,) and afterward, when I was unable to do any thing to preserve my own life. Favour, or benignity, or bounty, or mercy, or kindness; which is here, as oft elsewhere, put for its fruits or effects. Thou didst not give a mere life, but many other favours necessary, or convenient, or belonging to it, such as nourishment by the breast, education, knowledge, and instruction, &c. Thy visitation, i. e. the care of thy providence watching over me for my good, and visiting me in mercy; as God's visiting is understood, Exod. iv. 31; Luke i. 78, though elsewhere it is an act of punishment. My spirit, i. e. my soul or life, which is liable to manifold casualties and dangers, if God did not watch over us and guard us every day and moment. Thou hast hitherto done great things for me, given me life, and the blessings of life, and daily preservations and deliverances; and wilt thou now undo all that thou hast done? and shall I, who have been such an eminent monument of thy mercy, now be made a spectacle of thy vengeance, and that without cause?

13 And these things hast thou hid in thine heart: I know that this is with thee.

This place may be understood either, 1. Of Job's present afflictions. So the sense is this, Yet in the midst of all those manifestations of thy grace and kindness to me, thou didst retain a secret purpose of changing thy course and carriage towards me, and of bringing these dreadful calamities upon me. Or rather, 2. Of his former mercies, these things, to wit, last mentioned; thou hast hid them in thy heart, i. e. thou dost exactly remember them, as this phrase is used, Psal. cxix. 11; Luke ii. 51. So the argument is this, Let the remembrance of thy former great favours vouchsafed to me move thee to give me further blessings, and a speedy deliverance. For this is usual both with God and men, to choose and delight to do more good to those to whom they have done much good already; which is the ground of that known passage, Matt. xiii. 12, To him that hath shall be given. With thee, i. e. in thy mind and heart; thou hast not forgot it: so the same thing is here repeated in other words.

14 If I sin, then ^hthou markest me, ^h ⁱ ^j ^k ^l ^m ⁿ ^o ^p ^q ^r ^s ^t ^u ^v ^w ^x ^y ^z and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity.

If I commit the least sin, (as who is there that liveth, and sinneth not?) thou dost not wink at or pass by my sins, as thou usually dost other men's, but dost severely and diligently observe them all, that thou mayst punish them: compare chap. xiv. 16; xxxi. 4. Thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity; I perceive thou art resolved to punish me with rigour, and that thou wilt not pardon, and pity, and help me: words of great impatience and distrust.

15 If I be wicked, ^hwoe unto me; ^h ⁱ ^j ^k ^l ^m ⁿ ^o ^p ^q ^r ^s ^t ^u ^v ^w ^x ^y ^z and if I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head. I am full of confusion; therefore

1 Ps. 25. 18. ¹see thou mine affliction;

If I be wicked, i. e. an ungodly hypocrite, as my friends esteem me, then I am truly and extremely, and must be eternally, miserable. Righteous, i. e. an upright and good man: so, whether good or bad, all comes to one; I have no relief. Yet will I not lift up my head; or, yet can I not, &c.; the future tense being used potentially; yet I have no comfort, nor confidence, or hopes of any good. Lifting up the head or face is oft mentioned as a sign of comfort and confidence, as Psal. iii. 3; Luke xxi. 28; as, on the contrary, grief and shame are described by its dejection or casting down. Confusion, or reproach, from my friends, and from others, chap. xxx. 1, &c., and from God too, who casts me off, and makes me contemptible. I have abundance of shame in the disappointment of all my hopes, and the continuance and aggravation of my misery, notwithstanding all my prayers to God to remove or mitigate it; and I am confounded within myself, not knowing what to say or do. Let my extremity move thee to pity and help me.

m Is. 38. 13. ¹⁶ For it increaseth. ^m Thou huntest
Lam. 3. 10. me as a fierce lion: and again thou shewest thyself marvellous upon me.

As a fierce lion; which hunteth after his prey with great eagerness, and when he overtakes it, falls upon it with great fury. And again thou shovest thyself marvellous upon me, Heb. and thou returnest and shovest thyself marvellous upon, or in, or against me. The lion tears its prey speedily, and so ends its torments; but thou renewest my calamities again and again, and makest my plagues wonderful, both for kind, and extremity, and continuance.

¶ That is, thy plagues. Ruth 1. 21. ¹⁷ Thou renewest || thy witnesses against me, and increasest thine indignation upon me; changes and war are against me.

Thy witnesses, i. e. thy judgments, which are the witnesses and evidences, both of my sins, and of thy wrath. Thy indignation, i. e. my miseries, the effects of thine anger. These words are added to explain what he meant by renewing witnesses. Changes and war; or, changes and an army; which may be a figure called hendiadis, for the changes of an army, i. e. many miseries succeeding one another, like companies of the soldiers of an army in battle; or changes may note the various kinds, and an army the great numbers, of his afflictions.

¶ ch. 3. 11. ¹⁸ Wherefore then hast thou brought me forth out of the womb? Oh that I had given up the ghost, and no eye had seen me!

To wit, alive, i. e. that I had never been born alive.

¹⁹ I should have been as though I had not been; I should have been carried from the womb to the grave.

I should have been, or, Oh that I had been! and so in the following branch, Oh that I had been carried! For why should not these verbs of the future tense be so rendered here, as that ver. 18 is, the reason being wholly the same?

¶ See ch. 7. 6, 16, & 8. 9. ²⁰ Are not my days few? ^p cease then, and ^q let me alone, that I may take comfort a little,

My life is short, and of itself hastens apace to an end; there is no need that thou shouldst push it forward, or grudge me some ease for so small a moment. Let me alone; or, lay aside, or remove, thy hand or anger from me.

¶ Ps. 86. 12. ²¹ Before I go whence I shall not return, ^s even to the land of darkness ^t and the shadow of death;

To the place whence I shall not return into this world and life: see chap. vii. 9, 10. Darkness and the shadow of death, i. e. a dark and dismal shade: see on chap. iii. 5.

²² A land of darkness, as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness.

A land of darkness; either in things, without any succession of day and night, winter and summer; or among persons, where great and small are in the same condition, chap.

iii. 19. Where the light is as darkness; where there is no difference between light and darkness, where the day is as dark as the night, where there is nothing but perpetual and uninterrupted darkness.

CHAP. XI.

Zophar's reproof: Job's words too many, and false, even to mockery, in justifying himself, 1—4. Should God speak, his wisdom, and justice, and all his perfections would appear infinitely greater than what Job conceived of them, 5—10. God knoweth man; seeth wickedness, and considereth it; but man is ignorant and foolish, and in vain pretendeth to wisdom, 11, 12. If Job would prepare his heart, and pray, and put away his sin, he should again lift up his head, and forget his misery, and his last days be brightest; but the wicked shall perish, 13—20.

THEN answered Zophar the Naamathite, and said,

² Should not the multitude of words be answered? and should † a man full of talk ^{† Heb. a man of lips.} be justified?

Dost thou think to carry thy cause by thy long and tedious discourses, consisting of empty words, without weight or reason? Shall we by our silence seem to approve of thy errors? or shall we think thy cause the better, because thou usest more words than we do?

³ Should thy || lies make men hold their ^{† Or, devices.} peace? and when thou mockest, shall no man make thee ashamed?

Thy lies, i. e. thy false opinions and assertions, both concerning thyself and thy own innocence, and concerning the counsels and ways of God, make men hold their peace; as if thy arguments were unanswerable. When thou mockest, both God, chap. x. 3, and us, and our friendly and faithful counsels, chap. vi. 14, 15, 25, 26, shall no man make thee ashamed, by discovering thy errors and follies?

⁴ For ^a thou hast said, My doctrine is ^{a ch. 6. 10. & 10. 7.} pure, and I am clean in thine eyes.

My doctrine, concerning God and his providence. Pure, i. e. true and certain. I am clean in thine eyes; I am innocent before God; I have not sinned, either by my former actions, or by my present expressions. Thou standest wholly upon thy justification. But Zophar aggravates and perverts Job's words, for he did not deny that he was a sinner in God's sight, chap. vii. 20, 21; ix. 2, 3; x. 14, but only that he was a hypocrite or ungodly man, as they made him.

⁵ But oh that God would speak, and open his lips against thee;

i. e. Plead with thee, according to thy desire, chap. ix. 32, &c. He would soon put thee to silence and shame.

⁶ And that he would shew thee the secrets of wisdom, that they are double to that which is! Know therefore that

^b God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity ^{b Ezra 9. 13.} deserveth.

The secrets of wisdom, i. e. the unknown and unsearchable depths of God's wisdom and counsels in dealing with his creatures. That they are double to that which is, i. e. that they are far more and greater (the word double being used indefinitely for manifold, or plentiful, as Isa. xl. 2; lxi. 7; Jer. xvii. 18; Zech. ix. 12) than that which hath a being or existence, i. e. the secret-wisdom of God is infinitely greater than that which is revealed to us by his word or works. The greatest part of what is known of God, is the least part of those perfections that are in him. And therefore thou dost rashly and foolishly in passing such a bold censure upon God's ways, and judging so harshly of his proceedings with thee, because thou dost not comprehend the reasons of them, and in judging thyself innocent, because thou dost not see thy sins; whereas the all-knowing God sees innumerable sins in thee, for which he may utterly destroy thee, though thou discernest them not. But the words are and must be rendered, either thus, that he hath double, i. e. abundant, wisdom, for so this Hebrew word signifies, chap. vi. 13; xii. 16; Prov. ii. 7; iii. 21; or, that they are double to, or in, that being or essence, to wit, to God, of whom he is here speaking; or, to the being, i. e. to God, who calls himself by the name I am, Exod. iii. 14, which signifies being; and who appropriates being to himself, Isa. xlv. 18, I am, and there is none else besides me; as elsewhere he is said to be the only wise, and only Potentate, and only immortal being, 1 Tim. i. 17; vi. 15, 16. God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity deserveth, Heb. God lends, or gives, or forgives, thee part of thine iniquity, or of thy punishment; so far is he from dealing worse than thou deservest, as thou dost most falsely and wickedly accuse him.

7 Canst thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?

Find out God, i. e. discover all the depths of his wisdom, and the reasons of all his actions.

8 It is †as high as heaven; what canst thou do? deeper than hell; what canst thou know?

Thou canst not measure the heights of the visible heavens, much less of the Divine perfections. What canst thou do, to wit, to find him out? What canst thou know, concerning him and his ways, which are far out of thy sight and reach?

9 The measure thereof is longer than the earth, and broader than the sea.

Longer than the earth, from one end to the other. Broader than the sea; which is called the great and wide sea, Psal. civ. 25.

10 If he †cut off, and shut up, or gather together, then †who can hinder him?

If he cut off, to wit, a person or a family. Shut up in a prison, or in the hands of an enemy. This shutting up is opposed to the opening of the prison doors, and to that enlargement which God is elsewhere said to give to men. Gather together; either, 1. In a way of judgment, as a like word is used, Psal. xxvii. 9, Gather not my soul with sinners. Or rather, 2. In a way of mercy, as this word is generally used in Scripture; this being every where promised by God to his people as an eminent mercy, that he would gather them together. So this is opposed to the former actions, and the sense of the place is, whether it pleaseth God to scatter a family, or to gather them together from their dispersions. Who can hinder him from doing what he pleaseth and designeth with his own creatures? who can restrain him, either by giving law to him, or by force and power? or, who can contradict or answer him, or object against him, or retort or return upon him, i. e. charge him with injustice in such proceedings? which sense may seem to agree best both with the scope of the place and state of the question between him and Job; which was not whether any man could resist God's power, but whether he could question his justice; and with the following verse.

11 For †he knoweth vain men: he seeth wickedness also; will he not then consider it?

He knoweth vain men: though men know but little of God, and therefore are very unfit judges of all his counsels and actions; yet God knows man exactly, and his vanity, or falsehood, or folly, or rashness; for all these this word signifies. He knoweth that every man in the world is guilty of much vanity and folly, and therefore seeth sufficient reason for his severity against the best men, such as thou, O Job, fanciest thyself to be; and if thou wert so, thou hast no reason to wonder at or quarrel with his proceedings; and if thy quarrel be that he shuts thee up, or cuts thee off, when he gathers others under his wing and protection, whom thou thinkest or knowest to be worse than thyself, while thou dost impeach his justice, thou dost but betray thy own vanity and folly; for he knows both whom he chastiseth, and whom he spareth, and why he doth it, though he do not acquaint thee with the reasons of all his actions. He seeth wickedness also; as he knoweth the vanity of all men, so he exactly perceiveth the wickedness of evil men, though it be covered with the veil of religion. He seeth thy evil heart, which discovers itself by such wicked and scandalous speeches against the justice and goodness of his providence, which gives him just cause to continue and increase thy miseries. Though thou art partial, and flatterest thyself with a conceit of thy own integrity, yet he knoweth thy hypocrisy and wickedness. Will he not then consider it? shall he only see it as an idle spectator, and not observe it as a judge, to requite and punish it?

12 For †vain man would be wise, though man be born like a wild ass's colt.

Or, Yet, or But, vain or empty man (that foolish creature, that since the fall is void of all true wisdom and solid knowledge and judgment of the things of God) would be wise, i. e. pretends to be, and would be thought, wise, and able to pass a censure upon all God's ways and works. Or thus, But vain man is foolish, or without heart, i. e. without understanding, unable to judge aright of the ways and things of God. For a verb very like this, and coming from the same root, signifies to have one's heart taken away, Cant. iv. 9. Though man be born; and man is born, i. e. he is by his birth such: this evil is now natural and hereditary, and therefore common to all men; and therefore it is not strange if Job partake of the common distemper. Like a wild ass's colt, i. e. ignorant, and dull, and stupid, as to the knowledge of Divine things, and withal heady and untractable; and therefore very incompetent to judge of these high affairs.

13 If thou †prepare thine heart, and stretch out thine hands toward him;

O Job, thy business is not to quarrel with thy Maker, or his works, but to address thyself to him. Prepare thine heart, to wit, to seek God, as it is expressed, 2 Chron. xix. 3; xxx. 19; Psal. lxxviii. 8. If thou prepare thy heart by sincere repentance for all thy hard speeches of God, and sins against him, and with a pure and upright heart seek unto him; without which thy prayers will be in vain. Or, If thou directest, or rectifiest, thine heart, turning thy bold contentions with God into humble and sincere supplications to him. Stretch out thine hands, i. e. pray, which is here described by its usual gesture, as chap. xv. 25; Psal. lxxxviii. 9. Towards him, i. e. to God, as appears both from the nature of the thing, and from the context.

14 If iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away, and †let not wickedness dwell in thy tabernacles.

Either, 1. If thou hast in thine hand or possession any good, got by injury or oppression, as it seems they supposed that he had. Or, 2. More generally, If thou allowest thyself in any sinful practices. The hand is put for action, whereof it is the instrument. Put it far away; keep thyself at a great distance, not only from such actions, but also from the very occasions and appearances of them. Let not wickedness dwell, let it not have a quiet and settled abode, or allowance, in thy habitation, i. e. either in thyself, or in thy family; whose sins Job was obliged as far as he could to prevent or reform; as he had done, chap. i. 5. He saith tabernacles, because anciently the habitations of great men consisted of several tents or tabernacles, as we see, Gen. xxiv. 67; xxxi. 33.

15 For then shalt thou lift up thy face without spot; yea, thou shalt be stedfast, and shalt not fear:

Then shalt thou lift up thy face; which notes cheerfulness, and holy boldness and confidence; as a dejected countenance notes grief and shame. See Gen. iv. 5, 6; 2 Sam. ii. 22; Job xxii. 26; Luke xxi. 28. Without spot; or, being without spot; so it is only an ellipsis of the verb substantive, which is most frequent. And this fitly follows as the ground of his confidence, because he should in this case have a clear and unspotted conscience, and a sense of his own innocency. Or, without blemish, as the word properly signifies, i. e. without any sense of guilt, or any shame consequent upon it, either from God or men. The ground of the expression is this, that when men's faces are spotted with dirt, they are ashamed to show them. And Job was charged by his friends as having many spots upon him, yea, such as were not the spots of God's children. Stedfast; or, firm, or fixed; either, 1. As to his outward condition, which should be constantly prosperous. Or rather, 2. As to his mind, which should have strong and comfortable assurance of God's favour, and of his own safety and hap-pinness. For this steadfastness is opposed unto that fear which is incident to wicked men; who, even when they are free from actual miseries, yet oftentimes are tormented with the dread of them.

m. ls. 63. 15.

16 Because thou shalt ^m forget thy misery, and remember it as waters that pass away :

Thou shalt be free from fear, because thy great and settled prosperity shall banish out of thy mind all those sad and irksome thoughts of thy former calamities, which naturally engender fears of the continuance or return of them. Persons blessed with eminent deliverances, and a happy settlement, are frequently said in Scripture to forget their former sorrows, as Gen. xli. 51; Isa. liv. 4; John xvi. 21; not that they simply forget them, but because they have no sad or frightful remembrance of them; for remembering and forgetting in Scripture do not simply note acts of the mind, but also affections and practices suitable to them, as is well known. Remember it as waters that pass away; thou shalt remember them no more than men remember either a land-flood, which as it comes, so it goes away, suddenly, and leaves few or no footsteps or memorials behind it; or the waters of a river, which as soon as they are out of sight are out of mind, because of the new waters which immediately come in their stead.

+ Heb. shall arise above the noon-day. n. 18, 37, 6. & 112. 4. Is. 58. 8, 10.

17 And thine age † shall be clearer than the noonday; thou shalt shine forth, thou shalt be as the morning.

Thine age, i. e. the remainder of thy life and time in this world. Shall be clearer, Heb. shall arise. Men are said to fall into troubles, and to arise out of them. Than the noon-day; or, above the noon-day, or above the sun at noon-day, when it is at its highest pitch, as well as in its greatest glory. Thou shalt shine forth: light in Scripture commonly signifies prosperity and glory, as Esth. viii. 16; Job xviii. 5, 6; xxxviii. 15; Prov. iv. 18. Or, if thou art in darkness, as this word properly signifies, Job x. 22; Amos iv. 13, i. e. if thou comest into any distress and trouble. Shalt be as the morning, i. e. that night of trouble shall certainly and speedily be followed with the morning of deliverance and comfort, which, like the morning light, shall shine brighter and brighter until the perfect day.

18 And thou shalt be secure, because there is hope; yea, thou shalt dig about thee, and ° thou shalt take thy rest in safety.

i. e. Thy mind shall be quiet and free from terrors, because thou shalt have a firm and well-grounded hope and confidence in God's merciful and providential care of thee. Or, thou shalt be confident that thou shalt have what thou hopest for, the act, hope, being put for the object, as is very usual, i. e. thou shalt have assurance in and from God, that thy hopes shall not be disappointed, but fulfilled. This is opposed to that fear, ver. 15. Thou shalt dig about thee; either to fix thy tents, which after the manner of the Arabians were removed from place to place for conveniency of pasturage for their cattle; or to find out water for thy cattle, as they did, Gen. xxvi. 1; or to plough the ground, as he had done, chap. i. 14; or to make a fence about thy dwelling; for both the foregoing and following passages express his secure and safe condition. In safety; free from dangers and the fear of them, because of God's fatherly providence watching over thee when thou canst not watch over thyself.

+ Heb. treat thy face, Ps. 45. 12.

Fail; or, be consumed; either with grief and tears for their sore calamities; or with long looking for what they shall never attain, as this phrase is taken, Psal. lxxix. 3; Jer. xiv. 6; Lam. iv. 17. And this shall be thy condition, O Job, if thou persistest in thine impiety. They shall not escape; they shall never obtain deliverance out of their distresses, but shall perish in them. As the giving up of the ghost, i. e. shall be as vain and desperate as the hope of life is in a man, when he is at the very point of death. Or, as a puff of breath, which is gone in a moment without all hopes of recovery.

CHAP. XII.

Job's answer: his friends' self-conceit: the miserable always despised, though upright; the wicked prosper, 1—6. God's power and providence is seen in his works, 7—11. With the ancient is wisdom, but especially in God, and power: judges are fools, princes weak and mean, darkness light, before him, 12—22; and whole nations are overruled by him, 23—25.

AND Job answered and said,

2 No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you.

Ye are the people; you three, and you only, are the people, i. e. people of all people for eminency of wisdom, the only company of reasonable creatures; all others are but fools or beasts: you have engrossed all the reason of mankind; and each of you have as much wisdom as a whole people put together. It is an ironical expression, as the next verse sheweth. Wisdom shall die with you; all the wisdom and knowledge of Divine things which is in the world lives in you, and will die and be utterly lost when you die. This you think of yourselves; and this makes you so confidently and peremptorily deliver your opinions, and give laws to me and all mankind, and even to God himself.

3 But ° I have † understanding as well as you; † I am not inferior to you: yea, † who knoweth not such things as these?

^{a ch. 13. 2. + Heb. an heart. + Heb. not lower than you.}
^{+ Heb. with whom are not such as these?}
An understanding, Heb. a heart; which is oft put for the understanding, as Job xxxiv. 34; Jer. v. 21; Acts viii. 22; i. e. God hath given me also the knowledge and ability to judge of these matters. I am not inferior to you in these things; which he speaketh, not in a way of vain-glorious boasting, but for the just and necessary vindication both of himself, and of that cause of God, which for the matter and substance of it he maintained rightly, as God himself attests, Job xlii. 7. Who knoweth not such things as these? the truth is, neither you nor I have any reason to be puffed up with our knowledge of these things; for the most foolish and barbarous nations know that God is infinite in wisdom, and power, and justice. But this is not the question between you and me.

4 ° I am as one mocked of his neighbour, who ° calleth upon God, and he answereth him: the just upright man is laughed to scorn.

^{b ch. 16. 10. & 17. 2, 6. & 21. 3. & 30. 1. c Ps. 91. 15.}
As one mocked of his neighbour, Heb. I am a derision (the infinitive being put for a noun, as is usual both in the Hebrew and other languages) to my neighbour, i. e. to these three, who have pretended and would be thought to be my friends and neighbours; whom therefore such carriage doth very ill become. Instead of supporting and comforting me, they make a sport and scorn of me. Who calleth upon God, and he answereth him. This who belongs either, 1. To Job, who here declares his own practice in this case: When you mock me, I go to God with my complaints and prayers, and he hears me, though you will not. But this seems not to agree either with the context, or with other passages of Job; in which he constantly complains that God did not hear nor regard his prayers, nor pity and help him. Or, 2. To Job's friends; and so this is either, 1. An aggravation of their crime, that they should mock him who made a great profession of religion, who used duty to call upon God, and to receive answers from him, and therefore should have carried themselves more piously, and charitably, and compassionately towards their miserable brother. Or, 2. As the reason of their mockery of Job, because God, who neglected Job's prayers, heard theirs, and gave them those mercies for which they prayed; and therefore being themselves well and at ease, they were hard-hearted towards their poor afflicted brother, as the manner of men is. This seems to suit well with the following verse. Or, 3. As an argument against their scorning or slighting of him: God hears you when you pray, therefore you should turn your mocks of me into prayers for me; and you should pity me, whom God doth not hear when I pray; and as God hears you, so you should hear and comfort me, when I pour out my complaints to you. But these words may be brought in mimetically, as being some of their scoffing words: They say of me, Let him call upon God, and God will hear him; for so they had suggested to Job, chap. v. 8; viii. 5, &c.; xi. 13. But this, saith Job, I take for a piece of mockery, and insulting over my miseries; for I know by sad experience, and they see the contrary, that though I call and cry again and again, yet God hath no regard to me. The just, upright man is laughed to scorn, i. e. I, who, notwithstanding all their hard censures and reproaches, must and dare still own it, that through God's grace I am a just and upright man, am derided by them. This he repeats again, because it was very grievous and burdensome to him.

d Prov. 14.2. 5 ^d He that is ready to slip with his feet is as a lamp despised in the thought of him that is at ease.

i. e. The just man last mentioned, who is upon the brink of the pit or grave, ready to fall into mischief, so as never to rise again in this world, which is my case, and the occasion of their scorn and contempt. As a lamp despised, i. e. like a lamp or torch, which whilst it shines clearly and in a dark night is very useful and comfortable; but when it draws towards an end, and is nigh extinct, and in the light, is neglected and despised, as that which is unnecessary, and troublesome, and offensive. So the same man, who, when his feet stand fast in a prosperous condition, is magnified and adored by all, when his feet slip or stumble, as the phrase is Psal. xciv. 18; Jer. xiii. 16, when he is in misery, is commonly forsaken and despised. In the thought of him that is at ease, i. e. in the opinion of a man that lives in great ease and outward happiness, which generally makes persons to forget and despise those who are in affliction. But these words are a little otherwise rendered, and that agreeably to the order of the words in the Hebrew text, He (which is easily understood out of ver. 4, the just and upright man) is as a torch despised in the opinion or thought (as this or the like words coming from the same Hebrew root are used, Psal. cxlvi. 4; Dan. vi. 3; Jonah i. 6. Or, because of the splendour; for so this root and its derivatives elsewhere signify, as Cant. v. 14; Jer. v. 28; Ezek. xxvii. 19. And either of these significations agree well with the place. Or, compared with the splendour or greater lustre and glory) of him that lives in tranquillity; he (i. e. the just man) is (or, because he is; for this may be the reason of the contempt) ready to slip with his foot, i. e. ready to perish.

6 ^e The tabernacles of robbers prosper, and they that provoke God are secure; into whose hand God bringeth abundantly.

The tabernacles of robbers prosper: thy opinion, delivered chap. xi. 14, &c., is confuted by daily experience; which shows that the most wicked, and injurious, and impudent oppressors, tyrants, and robbers, are so far from meeting with those disappointments and miseries wherewith thou didst threaten them, that they commonly succeed in their cursed enterprises, and flourish in wealth and glory, and fill their houses with the goods of others which they violently took away; whereof the Chaldeans and Sabeans, chap. i. 15, 17, are a present and pregnant evidence. They that provoke God are secure; they whose common practice it is to despise and provoke God are confident and secure, live without danger or fear. Into whose hand God bringeth abundantly; so far is God from crushing such persons, that he seems to favour them with wonderful success, and by his special and more than common providence puts into their hands the opportunities which they seek, and the persons and goods of other more righteous men, which they lie wait for.

7 But ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee; and the fowls of the air, and they shall tell thee:

They shall teach thee, to wit, objectively, i. e. if thou observest the beasts, and their properties, aid actions, and events, from them thou mayst learn this lesson. What lesson? I answer, either, 1. That which was last mentioned, ver. 5. God's providence doth order things in the like manner among the very beasts, and fowls, and fishes; of which the most ravenous and mischievous fare the best, whilst those which are more harmless, and serviceable, and beneficial to men meet with the hardest usage. Or, 2. That which Zophar had uttered with so much pomp and gravity, chap. xi. 7—9, concerning God's infinite wisdom; which, saith Job, thou needest not go into heaven or hell to know, but thou mayst learn it even from the beasts, &c.

8 Or speak to the earth, and it shall teach thee: and the fishes of the sea shall declare unto thee.

9 Who knoweth not in all these that the hand of the LORD hath wrought this?

In all these, or, by all these, brute creatures, that God by his power and wisdom hath created and ordered all this which is in them, or is done by and among them.

10 ^f In whose hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath of ^g all mankind.

In whose hand, i. e. at whose absolute disposal, it is to give it, or take it away, when and how it seemeth good to him. The soul; the life, or the soul the principle of life. Of every living thing, i. e. of all unreasonable creatures, of which he spoke ver. 7, opposed to man in the last words. The breath, or, the spirit, as that word is commonly used, i. e. the immortal soul; which is no less a creature, and in God's power to dispose of it, than the animal soul of unreasonable creatures.

11 ^g Doth not the ear try words? and the ^h mouth taste his meat?

As the mouth tasteth and receiveth judgeth of meats, and as it liketh or disliketh, so it receiveth or rejecteth, what is put into it; so it is the office of the ear, or rather of the mind, which hears and receives the opinions and discourses of others by the ear, not rashly to approve or condemn every thing which it hears, but diligently and thoroughly to search and try whether it be true, and so to be embraced, or false, and to be rejected. Interpreters are much puzzled about the connexion and design of these words; but they seem to be either, 1. An apology for himself, why he did not comply with their opinion and arguments, because they did not suit with his ear or mind; and though he had considered and tried them, he could not discern any weight in them. Or rather, 2. A reproof to his friends, that they did so hastily condemn his person and his doctrine without a strict and serious inquiry. Or, 3. A preface to his following discourse; whereby he invites them to hear and judge of his words and arguments more candidly and impartially; and not to scorn all that he said because of his present poverty and misery, as men at ease used to do; nor to cast away the good for any mixture of bad with it; but calmly to weigh and debate things, both within and among themselves, and with him, that they and he too might all agree in disallowing whatsoever should appear to be false, and owning of every truth.

12 ^h With the ancient is wisdom; and in length of days understanding.

These words contain a concession of what Bildad had said chap. viii. 8, 9, and a joining with him in that appeal; but withal, an intimation that this wisdom was but finite, and imperfect, and liable to many mistakes; and indeed mere ignorance and folly, if compared with the Divine wisdom, of which he speaks in the next and following verses. And therefore that antiquity which they pretended for their opinion ought not to be received against the oracles or truths of the eternal and most wise God.

13 ⁱ With him is wisdom and strength, he hath counsel and understanding.

With him, i. e. with God; the relative being put for the antecedent, which is easily and necessarily understood out of the scope of the place, and all the following verses. Wisdom; perfect wisdom is only in him, and all wisdom in the world cometh from him, who giveth to old or young as it pleaseth him. The ancient are not wise without his gift and grace, and with that a younger man may be wiser than the ancients, as David was, Psal. cxix. 100. Counsel and understanding; counsel, i. e. practical wisdom to guide all the affairs of the world; and understanding, or a speculative knowledge of all persons and things.

^o ver. 13. 16 ^o With him is strength and wisdom: the deceived and the deceiver are his.

He doth the things here mentioned in the foregoing and succeeding verses, and that both powerfully, so as no creature can resist and hinder him, and wisely, so as none can prevent and overreach him. The same thing he had said before, ver. 13, but he repeats it here to prepare the way for the following events, which are eminent instances both of his power and wisdom. Are his, i. e. from or by him, and wholly subject to his disposal. That one man deceiveth another, and that the other is deceived by him, either in Divine or civil and worldly things, (which seem to be principally intended here, by comparing the following verses,) this is from God, and by the conduct of his wise and powerful providence. God giveth to the deceiver more wit, and knowledge, and art, and withal opportunity, and all favourable circumstances for his deceit. He also gives less understanding to the deceived, and withdraws from him, either wholly or in part, that common light of discretion which is his free gift; and he may justly give, or take away, as he pleaseth, and leaves him to his own ignorance and error, pride and self-conceit, and to all those prejudices, passions, and lusts which commonly corrupt men's minds, and to the power and crafts of Satan, that grand deceiver. He governs the deceiver, and sets bounds to his deceits, to whom, and when, and how far they shall extend; as is manifest from Deut. xiii. 1; 1 Kings xxii. 20; Isa. xix. 14; Ezek. xiv. 9; Matt. xxiv. 24; 2 Thess. ii. 11; Rev. xx. 3, 8. He also overrules all this to his own glory, and the accomplishment of his righteous designs of trying the good, and punishing wicked men, by giving them up to believe lies. Yet God is not the cause or author of any error or sin, but only the wise and holy governor and disposer of it.

^p 2 Sam. 15. 31. & 17. 14. ^q Ps. 19. 12. & 29. 14. ^r 1 Cor. 1. 19. 17 He leadeth counsellors away spoiled, and ^p maketh the judges fools.

The wise counsellors or statesmen, by whom the affairs of kings and kingdoms are ordered, he leadeth away as captives in triumph, being spoiled either of that wisdom which they had, or seemed or pretended to have; or of that power and dignity which they had enjoyed. Maketh the judges fools; partly by discovering their folly, and partly by infatuating their minds, and turning their own counsels to their ruin; of which see 2 Sam. xv. 31; xvii. 14, 23; Isa. xix. 11; 1 Cor. i. 19.

18 He looseth the bond of kings, and girdeth their loins with a girdle.

He looseth the bond of kings; either, 1. Passively, whereby they are bound. He freeth them from prison or restraint. Or rather, 2. Actively, that wherewith they bind their subjects to obedience, to wit, their power and authority, and that majesty which God stamps upon kings to keep their people in awe; all which God can, and oft doth, take away from them, and freeth the people from their bonds, when it pleaseth him; of which all histories give instances. See Dan. ii. 21.

With a girdle; either, 1. With a girdle of dignity and glory, which was put upon the loins of men in great honour and authority, as Isa. xi. 5; xxii. 21; Jer. xiii. 1, 2. So this member of the verse is opposite to the former, and the sense of the whole is, he either casteth down kings, or raiseth them up, as he pleaseth. But the Scripture no where mentions this girdle as one of the ornaments of kings. Or rather, 2. With a servile girdle; for seeing all, both the foregoing and succeeding passages, do evidently note acts of judgment or punishments inflicted upon them, it seems improper to understand this alone of an act of God's favour to them. So the sense is, he reduceth them into a mean and servile condition; which is thus expressed, because servants did use to gird up their garments, (which after the manner of those parts and time were loose and long,) that they might be fitter for attendance upon their masters; of which see Luke xii. 37; xvii. 8. And so this is an amplification of the former sentence. He not only deposeth them from their thrones, but brings them into bondage and slavery.

19 He leadeth princes away spoiled, and overthroweth the mighty.

Princes; so this word, which usually signifies priests, is oft used, as Gen. xli. 45; xvii. 22, 26; Exod. ii. 16; 2 Sam. viii. 18, compared with 1 Chron. xviii. 17.

20 ^q ch. 32. 9. ^r Is. 3. 1, 2, 3. ^s Heb. the lip of the faithful. He removeth away [†] the speech of the trusty, and taketh away the understanding of the aged.

Removeth away the speech; either, 1. By taking away or restraining the gift of utterance from them, that they should not be able to express their thoughts with such clearness and power as they used to do; which God oft doth to wise and eloquent men. Or, 2. By bringing them into such straits and troubles that they know not what to say or advise. Or, 3. By taking away their understanding, which should suggest and direct their speech, as it here follows. Or, 4. By permitting them to betray their trust, and either not to speak when they should, or to speak otherwise than they should, and to use their wit and rhetoric not to direct, but to deceive, and so destroy a prince. Of the trusty, i. e. of those wise and eloquent counsellors that were, and for their great abilities might be, trusted by the greatest princes with all their affairs.

21 ^r Ps. 107. 40. ^s Dan. 2. 21. ^t Or, looseth the girdle of the strong. He poureth contempt upon princes, and [†] weakeneth the strength of the mighty.

He poureth contempt upon princes, i. e. he makes them contemptible to their subjects and others. Weakeneth, Heb. he looseth the girdle; which phrase signifies weakness, as Isa. v. 27; as the girding of the girdle notes strength and power, as Isa. xxii. 21; xlv. 5; both these phrases being taken from the quality of their garments, which being loose and long, did disenable a man for travel or work.

22 ^u Dan. 2. 22. ^v Matt. 10. 26. ^w 1 Cor. 4. 5. He discovereth deep things out of darkness, and bringeth out to light the shadow of death.

Deep things out of darkness, i. e. the most secret and crafty counsels of princes, which are contrived and carried on in the dark.

23 ^t Ps. 107. 38. ^u Is. 9. 3. & 26. 15. ^v Heb. leadeth in. He increaseth the nations, and destroyeth them: he enlargeth the nations, and [†] straiteneth them again.

What hitherto he said of princes, he now applies to nations and people, whom God doth either increase or diminish as he pleaseth. He enlargeth the nations; he multiplies them, so that they are forced to send forth colonies into other lands. Straiteneth them again; or, leadeth them in, or bringeth them back, into their own land, and confineth them there.

24 He taketh away the heart of the chief of the people of the earth, and ^u Ps. 107. 40. ^v causeth them to wander in a wilderness where there is no way.

The heart; which signifies either, 1. Their courage, as Psal. lxxvi. 12; or rather, 2. Their wisdom and counsel, as Job v. 13; Isa. iii. 4, as the following words show. The chief; either for place and power, or for wisdom and conduct. Causeth them to wander in a wilderness, i. e. f them with confusion, and uncertainty, and perplexity of mind, so that they know not how to govern themselves or their people.

^{x Deut. 29.} ^{29. ch. 5. 14.} ^{† Heb.} ^{wander.} ^{7 Ps. 107. 27.} 25 ^aThey grope in the dark without light, and he maketh them to † stagger like a drunken man.

They grope, like men that cannot see their way. In the dark without light; two phrases expressing the same thing, emphatically to express their profound darkness. Like a drunken man, who reels hither and thither without any certainty. So they sometimes take one course, and sometimes another, as resolving to try all experiments, and indeed not knowing what to do.

CHAP. XIII.

Job's friends not wiser than he: he would reason with God; but they were liars, and talked deceitfully for God, who would search and reprove them for accepting persons, 1—

10. God's excellency, and they as ashes and clay, 11, 12. He is resolute, being in extreme misery, and having confidence in God, before whom he would speak, and God should save him; not so with a hypocrite, 13—16. He ordereth his cause to plead with God; only desireth a removal of God's hand upon him, 17—22. His request to know his sins and God's purpose, since God delighteth not in our misery, 23—28.

LO, mine eye hath seen all this, mine ear hath heard and understood it.

All this which either you or I have discoursed concerning the infinite power and wisdom of God, I know, both by seeing it, i. e. by my own observation and experience, and by hearing it from my ancestors; so that I did not need your tedious and impertinent discourses concerning those matters.

^{a ch. 12. 3.} 2 ^aWhat ye know, the same do I know also: I am not inferior unto you.

^{h ch. 23. 3.} ^{& 31. 32.} 3 ^bSurely I would speak to the Almighty, and I desire to reason with God.

According to thy wish, chap. xi. 5, I had rather debate the matter with God than with you. I am not afraid of presenting my person and cause before him, who is a witness of my integrity, and would not deal so unmercifully with me as you do.

^{c ch. 6. 21.} ^{& 16. 2.} 4 But ye are forgers of lies, ^cye are all physicians of no value.

Forgers of lies, i. e. authors of false doctrine, to wit, that great afflictions are peculiar to hypocrites and wicked men. Physicians of no value; unfaithful and unskilful; prescribing bad remedies, and misapplying good ones.

^{d Prov. 17.} 5 O that ye would altogether hold your peace! and ^dit should be your wisdom.

For then your ignorance and folly had been concealed, which is now manifest. Compare Prov. xvii. 28.

6 Hear now my reasoning, and hearken to the pleadings of my lips.

i. e. Attend to it, and consider it more seriously than you have done. The pleadings of my lips, i. e. the arguments which I shall produce.

^{e ch. 17. 5.} ^{& 32. 21. &} ^{36. 4.} 7 ^eWill ye speak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for him?

Will you utter falsehoods upon pretence of pleasing God, or of maintaining God's honour or justice? Doth he need such defences?

8 Will ye accept his person? will ye contend for God?

Will ye accept his person? not judging according to the right of the cause, but the quality of the person, as corrupt judges do. Will ye contend, i. e. wrangle and quarrel with me, and cavil at my speeches, and pervert my meaning? For God, i. e. that you may gratify him, or defend his rights.

9 Is it good that he should search you out? as one man mocketh another, do ye so mock?

Is it good? will it be to your credit and comfort? Search you out, i. e. narrowly examine your hearts and discourses, whether you have uttered truth or falsehood, and whether your speeches proceed from true zeal for God, or from your own prejudices and passions, and from a desire to curry favour with him. Do ye so mock him, to wit, by covering your uncharitableness and corrupt affections with pretences of piety, as if God could not discern your artifices; or by pleading his cause with weak and foolish arguments, which is a kind of mockery to him, and an injury to his cause; or by seeking to flatter him with false praises, as if he did distribute the things of this world with exact justice, prospering only the good, and severely afflicting none but wicked men?

10 He will surely reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons.

i. e. Punish you; as this word is oft used, as hath been once and again observed. Secretly; though it be concealed in your own breasts, and no eye see it; yea, though it be so close that your own minds and consciences, through ignorance, or inadvertency, or slothfulness, do not perceive it; yet He, who is greater than your consciences, sees and knows it.

11 Shall not his excellency make you afraid? and his dread fall upon you?

His excellency; his infinite wisdom, which sees your secret falsehoods; and his justice and power, which can and will punish you for it. Make you afraid of speaking rashly or falsely of his ways and counsels.

12 Your remembrances are like unto ashes, your bodies to bodies of clay.

Your remembrances; either, 1. Actively, i. e. your memorials, or your discourses and arguments, by which you design to bring things to my remembrance. So he might possibly allude to that passage, chap. iv. 7, Remember, I pray thee, &c. That and all your other mementos are like unto ashes, i. e. contemptible and unprofitable, Heb. are parables, or speeches, of dust, or ashes. Or, 2. Passively; all that which is most excellent and memorable in you, your wealth, and dignity, and wit, and reputation, or whatsoever it is for which you expect or desire to be remembered, it is all but poor despicable dust and ashes. And therefore you have just reason to abhor yourselves, and to dread the Divine Majesty, as I now advised you. Your bodies; though they be not full of sores and boils as mine is, yet they are but dust, and to dust they shall return as well as mine. Heb. your backs, which, being the strongest part of the body, is put for the whole body. Or, your eminencies, or excellencies, as this word most properly signifies, as Hebricians observe; so it answers to their memorables. All those things wherein you do, or think that you do, excel others, are but like eminencies, or lumps, or heaps of clay, vain and useless things, if compared with the excellencies of God. Or, your heights, i. e. your lofty discourses, are like clay, i. e. without solidity and strength.

13 † Hold your peace, let me alone, ^{† Heb.} ^{Be silent} ^{from me.} that I may speak, and let come on me what will.

Do not now interrupt me in my discourse; which peradventure he observed by their gestures some of them were now attempting. That I may speak; that I may freely utter my whole mind. Let come on me what will: for the event of my discourse with God, wherewith you threaten me, I am willing to submit myself to him, to do with me as he pleaseth; for I know he will not judge so severely and partially of me, or my words, as you do, but will accept what is good, and pass by any circumstantial defects in my person or speech, as knowing that I speak from an upright heart.

14 Wherefore † do I take my flesh in ^{† ch. 18. 4.} ^{g. 1 Sam. 28.} my teeth, and † put my life in mine hand? ^{21. Ps. 119.} ^{102.}

According to this translation the sense seems to be this, If you speak truth, and God punisheth none but wicked men, why doth he bring me (whom he knows to be no hypocrite, as you slander me) to that extremity of pain and misery, that I am almost constrained to tear and eat my own flesh, (which is mentioned as the character of men in great anguish, Isa. ix. 20; xlix. 26.) and am ready to lay violent hands upon myself? Is it so great a crime to complain in this case, or at least to inquire into the cause of this unwonted severity? But this sense seems not well to suit either with the foregoing or following verses, but to come in abruptly. Others therefore render the words thus, Why should I take my flesh in my teeth, &c.? And so this may be either, 1. A reason of his ardent desire of liberty of speech, because he could hold his tongue no longer, but must needs tear himself to pieces, if he had not some vent for his grief. So this agrees well both with ver. 13, where he desired this freedom; and with ver. 19, where the same sense is expressed in plainer words. Or, 2. An antidote against despair. I perceive, O my friends, by your discourses, that you intend to drive me to utter despair, if I do not turn to God in another manner than yet I have done; which if it were true, I should certainly tear my flesh, and violently take away my own life; but I see no reason why I should give way to any such despair or desperate actions? And this also hath a good dependence upon the foregoing words, let come on me what will; (q. d. But I have no reason to fear such consequences as you suggest, nor to despair of a merciful audience and relief from God;) and a good connexion with those which follow, ver. 15, where he declares his hope and confidence in God. The phrase of having one's life in his hand notes a condition extremely dangerous, and almost desperate, as Judg. xii. 3; 1 Sam. xix. 5; xxviii. 21; Psal. cxix. 109.

h Ps. 23. 4.
i Prov. 14. 32.
i ch. 27. 5.
+ Heb. prose, or, argue.

15^h Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him: ⁱ but I will † maintain mine own ways before him.

Though God should yet more and more increase my torments, so that I could bear them no longer, but should perceive myself to be at the point of death, and without all hopes of recovery in this world. Yet will I trust in him; or, shall I not trust in him? Should I despair? No, I will not. I know he is a just, and a faithful, and merciful God, and he knows that my heart is upright before him, and that I am no hypocrite. But though I will trust in him, yet I will humbly expostulate the matter with him; I will argue, or prove, or demonstrate my ways, i. e. I will make a full free confession of the whole course of my life, and I will boldly, though submissively, assert mine own integrity, which he also will, I doubt not, acknowledge. And what I have done amiss I will as freely confess, and make supplication to my Judge for the pardon of it. Before him; before his tribunal; for I desire no other judge but him.

16 He also shall be my salvation: for an hypocrite shall not come before him.

I rest assured that he will save me out of these miseries sooner or later, one way or other, if not with a temporal, yet with an eternal salvation after death; of which he speaks chap. xix. 25, &c. For; or but, as this particle commonly signifies; for this clause is put by way of opposition to the former, and the sense is, But if I were a hypocrite, as you allege, I durst not present myself before him to plead my cause with him, as now I desire to do, nor could I hope for any salvation from or with him in heaven.

17 Hear diligently my speech, and my declaration with your ears.

This he desired before, ver. 6, and now repeateth, either because they manifested some neglect or dislike of his speech, and some desire to interrupt him; or because he now comes more closely to his business, the foregoing verses being mostly in way of preface to it. My declaration, i. e. the words whereby I declare my mind.

18 Behold now, I have ordered my cause; I know that I shall be justified.

I have ordered my cause, to wit, within myself. I have seriously and sincerely considered the state of my case, and what can be said either for me or against me, and am ready to plead my cause. Justified, i. e. acquitted by God from that hypocrisy and wickedness wherewith you charge me, and declared a righteous and innocent person, human infirmities excepted.

k ch. 33. 6.

19^k Who is he that will plead with me? for now, if I hold my tongue, I shall give up the ghost.

Who is he that will plead with me? where is the man that will do it? nay, oh that God would do it! which here he implies, and presently expresseth. I shall give up the ghost; my grief for God's heavy hand and for your bitter reproaches would break my heart, if I should not give it vent.

20^l Only do not two things unto me: <sup>i ch. 9. 34.
& 33. 7.</sup> then will I not hide myself from thee.

Which two he expresseth ver. 21. Then shall I boldly present myself and cause before thee.

21^m Withdraw thine hand far from ^{m Ps. 39. 10.} me: and let not thy dread make me afraid.

i. e. Suspend my torments during the time of my pleading with thee, that my mind may be at liberty; and do not present thyself to me in terrible majesty, neither deal with me in rigorous justice; but hear me meekly, as one man heareth another, and plead with me upon those gracious terms wherewith thou usest to deal with mankind.

22 Then call thou, and I will answer: or let me speak, and answer thou me.

Then choose thy own method. Either do thou charge me with hypocrisy, or more than common guilt, and I will defend myself; or I will argue with thee concerning thy extraordinary severity towards me; and do thou show me the reasons of it. This proposal savoured of too great self-confidence, and of irreverence towards God; for which and such-like speeches he is reproved by God, chap. xxxviii. 2, 3; xl. 2.

23 How many are mine iniquities and sins? make me to know my transgression and my sin.

That I am a sinner I confess; but that I am guilty of so many or such heinous crimes as my friends suppose I utterly deny; and if it be so, do thou, O Lord, discover it to my shame. Make me to know my transgression and my sin, if peradventure my heart deceive me therein; for I am not conscious to myself of any enormous crime.

24ⁿ Wherefore hidest thou thy face, <sup>n Deut. 32.
20. Ps. 13. 1.
& 44. 24. & 68.
14. Is. 8. 17.</sup> and holdest me for thine enemy?

o Deut. 32. 42. Ruth 1. 21. ch. 16. 9. & 19. 11. & 33. 10. Lam. 2. 5.

Hidest thou thy face, i. e. withdrawest thy favour and help which thou didst use to afford me; as this phrase is commonly used, as Deut. xxxi. 17; Psal. xlii. 1; cii. 2, &c. Holdest me for thine enemy, i. e. dealest as sharply with me as if I were thy professed enemy.

25^p Wilt thou break a leaf driven to ^{p Is. 42. 3.} and fro? and wilt thou pursue the dry stubble?

Doth it become thy infinite and excellent majesty to use all thy might to crush such a poor, impotent, frail creature as I am, that can no more resist thy power than a leaf, or a little loose and dry straw can resist the fury of the wind or fire.

26 For thou writest bitter things against me, and <sup>q ch. 20. 11.
Ps. 25. 7.</sup> makest me to possess the iniquities of my youth.

Thou writest, i. e. thou appointest or inflictest. A metaphor from princes or judges, who anciently used to write their sentence or decrees concerning persons or causes brought before them. See Psal. cxlix. 9; Jer. xxii. 30; John xix. 22. Bitter things, i. e. a terrible sentence, or most grievous punishments. Makest me to possess the iniquities of my youth; thou dost now at once bring upon me the punishment of all my sins, not excepting those of my youth, which because of the folly and weakness of that age are usually excused or winked at, or at least but gently punished.

27^r Thou puttest my feet also in the <sup>r ch. 33. 11.
+ Heb. roots.</sup> stocks, and † lookest narrowly unto all my paths; thou settest a print upon the † heels of my feet.

Thou encompassed me with thy judgments, that I may have no way or possibility to escape. When thou hast me fast in prison, thou makest a strict and diligent search into all the actions of my life, that thou mayst find matter condemn me. Thou followest me close at the heels, e' to observe my actions, or to pursue me with thy judgments, so that thou dost oft tread upon my heels, and leave the prints of thy footsteps upon them.

28 And he, as a rotten thing, consumeth, as a garment that is moth eaten.

He; either, 1. Man, or Job, supposed to be God's adversary in this contest. So he speaks of himself in the third person, as is usual in this and other sacred books. So the sense is, he, i. e. this poor frail creature, this carcass or body of mine, which possibly he pointed at with his finger, consumeth or pineth away, &c. So he mentions here the effect of God's severe proceedings against him, to wit, his consumption and utter destruction, which was making haste towards him. Or, 2. God, of whom he hitherto spoke in the second person, and now in the third person; such changes of persons being very frequent in poetical writings, such as this is. So he continueth the former discourse; and as before he mentioned God's severe inquiry into his ways, and sentence against him, so here he describes the consequence and dreadful execution of it upon him; he, i. e. God, consumeth (for the verb is active) me as rottenness consumeth that in which it is, or as a rotten thing is consumed, and as a moth which eateth a garment.

CHAP. XIV.

Man's natural misery, sin, and short life, our plea with God not to disturb us by his power, but suffer us to accomplish our appointed time, 1-6. The other creatures decay and revive; but man, once dead, returneth not till the end of all things, 7-12. He wisheth to be hid in the grave, in hopes of the resurrection, 13-15; for that here God was strict in marking his iniquity, and prevailed against him, 16-20. Man's misery with respect to his children, 21, 22.

^{† Heb. short of days.} ^{a ch. 5. 7.} ^{Eccles. 2. 23.} MAN that is born of a woman is † of few days, and *full of trouble.

That is born of a woman. This expression is here used, either, 1. To intimate the cause of man's misery, that he was born of a woman, a weak creature, 1 Pet. iii. 7, and withal corrupt and sinful, and of that sex by which sin and calamity was brought into the world. See chap. xv. 14; Gen. iii. 17; 1 Tim. ii. 13, 14. Or, 2. To note the universality of the thing; every man, every mother's son, as we use to speak. Men's fathers are oftentimes unknown and uncertain, but their mothers are always definite and certain. One man was then to be born, and afterwards was born, without an earthly father, to wit, our Lord and Saviour Christ; but no man was ever born without a mother. Of few days; a short-lived creature in himself, and therefore needs no violent hand to cut him off, because he withereth so soon of his own accord. Full of trouble; and therefore a fitter object for Divine compassion, than for his fury or severity. He chiefly intendeth himself; but he expresseth it thus generally, partly to relieve himself with the thoughts of the common calamities of mankind; and partly to move God with the consideration of the frailty and misery of human nature, and consequently of his condition.

^{b ch. 8. 9.} ^{Ps. 90. 5, 6.} ^{9. & 102. 11.} ^{9. & 103. 15. &} ^{144. 4. Is. 40.} ^{6. Jam. 1.} ^{10, 11. & 14. 1 Pet. 1. 24.} 2 ^b He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not.

He cometh forth out of his mother's womb, chap. i. 21. Like a flower; which quickly groweth up and maketh a fair show, but soon withereth, or is cut down. As a shadow; which being made by the sun, follows its motions, and is in perpetual variation, until at last it quite vanish and disappear.

^{c Ps. 143. 2.} 3 And *dost thou open thine eyes upon such an one, and † bringest me into judgment with thee?

Dost thou open thine eyes upon such an one; either, 1. To take thought or care about him. Or rather, 2. To observe all his ways, that thou mayst find cause of punishment. He is not a fit match for thee. It is below thee to contend with him, and to use thy infinite wisdom and power to crush him. This seems best to suit with the scope and context. Bringest me into judgment with thee, i. e. pleadst with me by thy judgments, and thereby, in a manner, forcest me to plead with thee, without granting me those two necessary and favourable conditions, expressed chap. xiii. 20, 21.

4 † Who *can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one.

^{† Heb. Who will give?} ^{c Gen. 4. 3.} ^{Ps. 51. 5.} ^{John 3. 6. Rom. 5. 12. Ephes. 2. 3.} I do not say, I am clean, as Zophar pretendeth, chap. xi. 4; but confess that I am a very unclean creature, and therefore liable to thy justice, if thou wilt deal rigorously with me; but remember that this is not my peculiar case, but the common lot of every man, who, coming from sinful parents, and being infected with original corruption, must unavoidably be unclean. Why then dost thou inflict such peculiar and extraordinary judgments upon me for that which is common to all men? And although my original corruption do not excuse my actual sins, yet I hope it may procure some mitigation to my punishments, and move thy Divine pity, which oft showeth itself upon such occasions. See Gen. viii. 21. Not one, i. e. no man can cleanse himself or any other from all sin. See 1 Kings viii. 46; Psal. xiv. 3; Eccles. vii. 21. This is the prerogative of thy grace, which therefore I humbly implore of thee.

5 † Seeing his days are determined, the number of his months are with thee, thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass;

His days; the days or (as it follows) months of his life. Are determined; are by thy sentence and decree limited to a certain period. With thee, i. e. exactly known to thee, or in thy power and disposal. Thou hast appointed a certain end of his days, beyond which he cannot prolong his life; and therefore let this short life and unavoidable death suffice for man's punishment, and do not add further and sorer calamities.

6 † Turn from him, that he may † rest, till he shall accomplish, as an hireling, his day.

^{g ch. 7. 16.} ^{Is. & 10. 20.} ^{Ps. 39. 13.} ^{† Heb. cease.} ^{h ch. 7. 1.} Turn from him; withdraw thine afflicting hand from him. That he may rest; that he may have some present comfort and ease. Or, and let it cease, to wit, the affliction, which is sufficiently implied. Others, and let him cease, to wit, to live, i. e. take away my life. But that seems not to agree with the following clause of this verse, nor with the succeeding verses. Till he shall accomplish, as an hireling, his day; give him some respite till he finish his course, and come to the period of his life which thou hast allotted to him, as a man appoints a set time to a mercenary servant.

7 For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease.

But man, though a far nobler creature, is in a much worse condition, and when once he loseth this present and worldly life, he never recovers it; therefore show some pity to him, and give him some comfort whilst he lives.

8 Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground;

Wax old; begin to wither and decay. And the stock die, to wit, in outward appearance.

9 Yet through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant.

Through the scent of water, i. e. by means of water. Scent or smell is figuratively ascribed to a tree. Like a plant; like a tree newly planted.

10 But man dieth, and † wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?

^{† Heb. is weakened, or, cut off.} Dieth, and wasteth away; his body by degrees rotting away; or, and is cut off, as this word is used, Exod. xvii. 13; Isa. xiv. 12. Where is he? i. e. he is no where; or, he is not, to wit, in this world, as that phrase is commonly used. See Job iii. 16; vii. 8, 21.

11 As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up:

This may be understood either, 1. By way of opposition, the waters go or flow out of the sea, and return thither again, Eccles. i. 7; and a lake or river sometimes decayeth, and drieth up, but afterwards is recruited and replenished. But man lieth, &c., as it follows. Or, 2. By way of resemblance; As waters, i. e. some portion of waters, fail from the sea, being either exhaled or drawn up by the sun, or received and sunk into the dry and thirsty earth, or overflowing its banks; and as the flood, or a river, or a pond (for the word signifies any considerable confluence of waters) in a great drought decayeth, and is dried up; in both which cases the selfsame waters never return to their former places; so it is with man. Or thus, As when the waters fail from the sea, i. e. when the sea forsakes the place into which it used to flow, the river, which was fed by it, Eccles. i. 7, decayeth and drieth up, without all hopes of recovery; so man, when once the fountain of his radical moisture is dried up, dies, and never revives again.

12 So man lieth down, and riseth not: ^ktill the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep.

Man lieth down, to wit, in his bed, the grave, or to sleep the sleep of death, as this phrase is used, Gen. xli. 30; Deut. xxxi. 16; 2 Sam. vii. 12; 1 Kings i. 21. Riseth not to wit, to this life; for he speaks not here of the life to come, nor of the resurrection of the body after death by the Divine power; of his belief whereof he giveth sufficient evidences in divers places. Till the heavens be no more, i. e. either, 1. Never; because the heavens, though they shall be changed in their qualities, yet shall never cease to be, as to the substance of them. And therefore everlasting and unchangeable things are expressed by the duration of the heavens; of which see Psal. lxxii. 5, 7, 17; lxxxix. 29, 36, 37; Matt. v. 18; xxiv. 35. Or, 2. Not until the time of the general resurrection, and the restitution of things, when these visible heavens shall pass away, and be no more, at least in the same form and manner as now they are; of which see Psal. cii. 26; Luke xxi. 33; 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10; Rev. xxi. 1.

13 O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave, that thou wouldst keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldst appoint me a set time, and remember me!

In the grave; either, 1. In some dark vault underground, such as good men hide themselves in times of persecution, Heb. xi. 38. Lord, hide me in some hiding-place from thy wrath, and all the intolerable effects of it, which are upon me; for I cannot be hid from thee, but by thee. Or, 2. In the grave, properly so called. Though I know life once lost is irrecoverable, yet I heartily desire death, rather than to continue in these torments. And if the next words and wish seem to suppose the continuance of his life, that is not strange; for he speaks like one almost distracted with his miseries, sometimes wishing one thing, sometimes another and the quite contrary, as such persons use to do. And these wishes may be understood disjunctively, I wish either that I were dead, or that God would give me life free from these torments. Or the place may be understood thus, I could wish, if it were possible, that I might lie in the grave for a time till these storms be blown over, and then be restored to a comfortable life. That thou wouldst keep me secret; in some secret and safe place, under the shadow of thy wings and favour, that I may have some support and comfort from thee. Until thy wrath be past; whilst I am oppressed with such grievous and various calamities; which he calls God's wrath, because they were, or seemed to be, the effects of his wrath. A set time, to wit, to my sufferings, as thou hast done to my life, ver. 5. Remember me, i. e. wherein thou wilt remember me, to wit, in mercy, or so as to deliver me; for it is well known that God is frequently said to forget those whom he suffers to continue in misery, and to remember those whom he delivers out of it.

14 If a man die, shall he live again? ^lall the days of my appointed time ^mwill I wait, ⁿtill my change come.

Shall he live again? i. e. he shall not, namely, in this world, as was said before. The affirmative question is equivalent to an absolute denial, as Gen. xviii. 17; Psal. lvi. 7; Jer. v. 9, and every where.

Seeing death puts an end to all men's hopes of any comfortable being here, because man once dead never returns to life, I will therefore wait on God, and hope for his favour whilst I live, and it is possible to enjoy it, and will continue waiting from time to time until my change come, i. e. either, 1. Death, the great and last change; which is expressed by the root of this word, Job x. 17. Or, 2. The change of my condition for the better, which you upon your terms encourage me to expect, and which I yet trust in God I shall enjoy; for this word properly signifies vicissitudes or changes in one's condition; and this seems to suit best with the following verse. And this change, or a comfortable life here, Job so heartily wisheth, not only from that love of life and comfort which is naturally implanted in all men, good and bad, and is not forbidden by God, which also was stronger in those Old Testament saints, when the discoveries of God's grace to sinners, and of eternal life, were much darker than now they are; but also because this would be an effectual vindication of his own integrity and good name, and of the honour of religion, both which did suffer some eclipse from Job's extreme calamities, as is evident from the discourses of his friends.

15 ⁿThou shalt call, and I will answer ⁿch. 13. 22. thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands.

I trust there is a time coming when thou wilt grant me the mercy which now thou deniest me, to wit, a favourable hearing, when thou wilt call to me to speak for myself, and I shall answer thee; which I know will be to thy satisfaction and my comfort. Compare this with chap. xiii. 22, where the same words are used in this same sense. Or, Thou shalt call me out of the grave of my calamities, and I shall answer thee, and say, Here I am, raised out of the pit in which I was buried by thy powerful and gracious command. To the work of thine hands, i. e. to me, who am thy workmanship in divers respects, from whom thou now seemest to have an aversion and abhorrency; but I doubt not thou wilt have a desire, i. e. show thy affection or good will to me; or a desire to look upon me, and to deliver me. Nor is it strange that Job, who lately was upon the brink of despair, doth now breathe out words of hope; such ebbings and flowings being usual, both with Job elsewhere, as chap. xiii. 15, 16, and with David frequently in the Psalms, and with others of God's people.

16 ^oFor now thou numberest my steps: ^odost thou not watch over my sin?

For now; so this is a reason of his desire of death, ver. 13. Or rather, But now; for this seems to be added by way of opposition. I believe thou wilt pity and help me, but for the present it is far otherwise with me. Thou numberest my steps; thou makest a strict inquiry into all my actions, that thou mayst find out all mine errors, and punish them. Compare Job xiii. 27; xxxi. 4; xxxiv. 21; Psal. lvi. 6. Dost thou not watch over my sin, i. e. dost thou not watch for my haltings, or miscarriages, as if thou wast glad of an occasion to punish me? Or, thou dost not delay the punishment of my sin; for the same Hebrew word signifies both sin and its punishments.

17 ^pMy transgression is sealed up in ^pa bag, and thou sewest up mine iniquity.

Sealed up in a bag; as writings or other choice things, that they may be safely kept, and all of them brought forth upon occasion, and not one of them forgotten or lost. Compare Deut. xxxii. 34; Job xxxvii. 7; Hos. xiii. 12. Thou sewest up mine iniquity, i. e. thou keepest all my sins in thy memory, and fastenest the guilt of them upon my conscience. Or, thou addest to my sin, one sin to another; the follies of my youth, Job xiii. 26, to those of my riper years. Or, thou addest to my punishment, i. e. thou punishest me more than mine iniquities deserve, all things considered. For this sinful thought seems sometimes to have risen in Job's mind, as may be gathered from divers parts of this book; which therefore Zophar derides and disproves, Job xi. 6.

18 And surely the mountain falling † cometh to nought, and the rock is removed out of his place.

As when a great mountain falls, either by an earthquake or inundation of waters, or from any other cause, it moulders away like a fading leaf, (as the Hebrew word signifies,) and never recovers its former height and stability; and as the rock, when by the violence of winds or earthquake, &c. it is removed out of its place, and thrown down, is never re-advanced; and as the waters by continual droppings, or violent and frequent assaults, wear away, or break the stones to pieces, so as they can never be made whole again; and as thou wastest away, to wit, by a great and violent inundation which thou sendest, the things which grow out of the dust of the earth, to wit, herbs, and fruits, and plants, which once washed away are irrecoverably lost, and, or so, (as this particle is oft used, i. e. in like manner, to wit, irrecoverably,) thou destroyest the hope of man; i. e. so when man dies, all hope of living again in this world is utterly lost: and this seems to be the plain meaning of these two verses. And as before he declared the hopelessness of man's restoration from death to this animal life, by way of opposition to such things as did rise in a manner from death to life, ver. 7, &c.; so now he declares it by way of similitude or resemblance to such things, as being once lost and gone are past all hopes of recovery.

19 The waters wear the stones: thou † wastest away the things which grow out of the dust of the earth; and thou destroyest the hope of man.

† Heb. over-flawest.

20 Thou prevailest for ever against him, and he passeth: thou changest his countenance, and sendest him away.

When once thou takest away this life, it is gone for ever; for he speaks not here of man's future and eternal life in another world. He passeth, i. e. he dieth, or is about to die. Man's death is oft called a passage, or a going, to intimate that it is not an annihilation, but only a translation of him into another place and state. His countenance; either, 1. His visage, which by death and its harbingers is quite transformed in colour and shape, as we see by daily experience. Or, 2. The face and state of his affairs, as to worldly riches, and pleasures, and honours, all which he leaves behind him. Sendest him away to his long home by death.

21 His sons come to honour, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them.

He knoweth it not; either, 1. Is ignorant of all such events; or, 2. Is not concerned nor affected with them. A dead or dying man minds not these things.

22 But his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn.

This is man's condition; he is miserable both when he dies, because he dies without hope of returning to life, as he had discoursed before; and (as he now adds) whilst he lives, whilst his flesh is upon him, and his soul within him; whilst the soul is clothed with or united to the body, he feels sharp pain in his body, and bitter grief in his soul. Seeing therefore the state of man upon earth is so vain and unhappy every way, Lord, give me some comfort to sweeten my life, or take away my life from me.

CHAP. XV.

Eliphaz's reproof: Job's knowledge and talk vain; he feareth not God, nor prayeth to him; but his own mouth uttered his iniquity, and should condemn him, 1—6. Job not the wisest of men, 7, 8; nor wiser than they, who were elder than he, 9, 10. He despised the consolations of God, and turned away his spirit against him, 11—13. The angels not clean in God's sight, much less man, 14—16. A description of the ancients; their wisdom, and reports concerning destruction, and terrors on the wicked, and the causes of it, 17—35.

THEN answered Eliphaz the Temanite, and said,

2 Should a wise man utter † vain knowledge, and fill his belly with the east wind?

† Heb. knowledge of wind.

A wise man; such as thou seemest and pretendest to be. Vain knowledge, i. e. empty words, without any sense or solidity in them. Fill his belly, i. e. satisfy his own mind and conscience, which being secret is compared to the inwards of the belly; as chap. xxxii. 19; Prov. xx. 27; xxii. 18. With the east wind, i. e. with discourses which are not only flashy and unprofitable, and without any weight, but also boisterous and pernicious, both to himself and others; as the east wind was in those parts, Gen. xli. 6; Exod. x. 13; Hos. xii. 1.

3 Should he reason with unprofitable talk? or with speeches wherewith he can do no good?

Either to himself or others, but much hurt; which is implied by the contrary, as is usual.

4 Yea, † thou castest off fear, and re- strainest prayer before God.

† Heb. thou makest void.
Or, speech.

Heb. Thou makest void fear, i. e. the fear of God, as the word is oft used for the word of God; or piety and religion, which oft cometh under the name of fear. This may be understood either, 1. Of Job himself; that he cast off all reverence to God, by uttering such bold and reproachful expressions concerning God and his providence. Or, 2. with respect to others; that by his insolent and unworthy speeches of and carriage towards God, and by those false and pernicious principles which he had laid down; as that God dealt with men in way of absolute sovereignty, not of justice; and that he made no difference between good and bad in the course of his providence, but did equally prosper or afflict both of them; he did that which tended to the subversion of the fear and worship of God. Restrainest prayer; as this Hebrew word signifies also, Psal. cii. 1. Or, meditation or speech; which well agrees to prayer, which is accompanied with serious thoughts and expressions. The sense is, either, 1. Instead of humble and fervent prayer to God, which thy condition calleth for, thou breathest forth false and blasphemous speeches against him. Or, 2. Thou dost by thy words, and examples, and principles, as far as in thee lies, banish prayer out of the world, by making it useless and unprofitable to men.

5 For thy mouth † uttereth thine iniquity, and thou choicest the tongue of the crafty.

i. e. Thy words discover the naughtiness of thy heart, and justify my charge against thee, that thou castest off fear, &c. Thou speakest wickedly, but craftily; thou coverest thy impious principles and passions with fair pretences of piety and respect to God, wherewith thou endeavourest to mock God, and deceive men.

6^a Thine own mouth condemneth thee, and not I: yea, thine own lips testify against thee.

^a Luke 19. 22.

My condemnation of thee is grounded upon thine own words.

7 Art thou the first man that was born? or wast thou made before the hills?

^b Ps. 90. 2.
Prov. 8. 25.

Hast thou lived ever since the creation of the world, and treasured up the experiences of all ages in thy own breast, that thou speakest so arrogantly and magisterially, and with such contempt of other men? Art thou the most ancient and the wisest of all mortal men? Whom dost thou make thyself? Before the hills; before the earth was made and distinguished into mountains and valleys.

8 Hast thou heard the secret of God? and dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself?

^c Rom. 11. 34. 1 Cor. 2. 11.

Hath God acquainted thee with all his secret counsels, whereby he governs the world, that thou dost pass so bold a censure upon all his designs and actions? Art thou the only wise man in the world, and we and all others but fools?

9^d What knowest thou, that we know not? what understandest thou, which is not in us?

^d ch. 13. 2.

He retorts upon Job his own expressions, chap. xii. 3; xiii. 2.

e ch. 32, 6, 7.

10 °With us are both the grayheaded and very aged men, much elder than thy father.

With us, i. e. among us; either, 1. Some of us, who seem to have been very ancient from chap. xxxii. 7. Or, 2. Some others with whom we have conversed, and who are of our opinion in this matter. And this they oppose to that passage of Job's, chap. xii. 12.

11 Are the consolations of God small with thee? is there any secret thing with thee?

Are those comforts, which we in the name, and according to the mind, and by the direction, of God have propounded to thee, upon condition of thy true repentance, chap. xi. 13, 14, &c., small and contemptible in thine eyes? Hast thou any secret and peculiar ground or way of comfort which is unknown to us, and to all other men, except thyself; for which, or in comparison of which, thou despisest our consolations as mean and trivial? To pretend to this is vanity and impudence; and if thou hast not this, to despise and reject our comforts is horrible pride and stubbornness.

12 Why doth thine heart carry thee away? and what do thy eyes wink at,

Why dost thou suffer thyself to be transported by the pride and lusts of thy heart to use such unworthy and unbecoming expressions, both concerning us, and concerning God and his providence. What do thine eyes wink at, i. e. what dost thou aim at? What benefit dost thou expect from such words and carriages? So it is a metaphor from archers, who wink when they take their aim at a mark. Or, why do thine eyes wink, i. e. why dost thou look with such an angry, supercilious, and disdainful look, expressing both thy contempt of us, and thy rage against God? The eye is observed both by God and men, as the great discoverer of the heart; and winking with the eye is a note of a malicious mind, Psal. xxxv. 19; Prov. vi. 13; x. 10.

13 That thou turnest thy spirit against God, and lettest such words go out of thy mouth?

That, or for, or surely. Thy spirit, i. e. either thy breath, or thy rage, or thy soul; for all these the spirit signifies. Heb. Thou makest thy spirit to return to, or to return again against, that God from whom thou didst receive it.

36. ch. 14. 4.

Fe. 14. 3.

Prov. 20. 9.

Eccles. 7. 20.

1 John 1. 8, 10.

14 'What is man, that he should be clean? and he which is born of a woman, that he should be righteous?

What is man, Heb. frail, or sick, or wretched man? his mean original and corrupt nature sheweth him to be unclean. Which is born of a woman; from whom he derives infirmity, and corruption, and guilt, and the curse consequent upon it. Righteous, to wit, in his own eyes, as thou, O Job, art.

15 °Behold, he putteth no trust in his saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight.

In his saints, i. e. in his angels, as appears by comparing chap. iv. 18, who are called his saints or holy ones, Deut. xxxiii. 2; Psal. ciii. 20; Dan. iv. 13, 23; Matt. xviii. 10; xxiv. 36; who though they were created holy, yet he could not be confident in them, nor they be confident in themselves that they would continue in their integrity if they were left to themselves, and not upheld by God's special grace and assistance. See the notes on Job iv. 18. °The heavens, Heb. and the heavens, i. e. either, 1. The heavens properly so called; which though they be free from those gross mixtures which are and appear in heavenly bodies, yet are not absolutely pure, but have some spots and blemishes in them; as philosophers have discovered, and the all-seeing God knoweth. Compare chap. xxv. 5, where the stars are said not to be pure; unless the stars also there be metaphorically put for the angels, as they are Job xxxviii. 7, and for other holy ministers of God, as Dan. viii. 10; Rev. i. 16, 20; xii. 1, 4. 2. The angels that dwell in heaven; heaven being oft put for its inhabitants; either for God, as Psal. lxxiii. 9; Dan. iv. 26; Luke xv. 18, 21; or for the angels that dwell in heaven, as Psal. lxxxix. 5; xlvi. 1, 2. So this is a repetition of the same thing in other words. And these are not pure, to wit, simply and perfectly, and comparatively to God; in which and such-like respects God only is said to be good, and wise, and immortal. The angels are pure from corruption, but not from imperfection, nor from a possibility of sinning, if God should withdraw his help from them.

16 °How much more abominable and filthy is man, which drinketh iniquity like water?

h ch. 4. 19.
Ps. 14. 3. &
53. 3.
i ch. 34. 7.
Prov. 19. 28.

Who, besides his natural proneness to sin, hath contracted habits and customs of sinning, and sinneth as freely and easily, as greedily and delightfully, as frequently and abundantly, as men, especially in those hot countries, used to drink up water. But this did not Job; and therefore though the things delivered by him and the rest be true in the general, yet they commit a great error in misapplying them to Job, for which therefore they are afterwards reprov'd.

17 I will shew thee, hear me; and that which I have seen I will declare;

I will prove what I have affirmed, that such strokes as thine are peculiar to hypocrites and wicked men. I speak not by hearsay only, but from my own experience.

18 Which wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid it:

k ch. 8. 8.

Wise men; who are most able to be witnesses and judges in these matters. From their fathers, or ancestors; who diligently observed this, and carefully transmitted their own judgment and experience successively to their posterity. Have not hid it; they judged it to be so certain and important a truth, that they would not conceal it in their own breasts, but made conscience of publishing it for the instruction and comfort of succeeding ages.

19 Unto whom alone the earth was given, and no stranger passed among them.

l Joel 3. 17.

Unto whom alone the earth was given; either, 1. By the special and gracious gift of God; whereas wicked men invaded their parts of the earth, and took them away by force. Or, 2. By the choice and consent of the people, who for their great and known wisdom and virtue conferred this power and trust upon them. This he allegeth, partly to make their testimony more considerable, because these were not obscure, and mean, and foolish men, whose words are commonly despised, but the most worthy and famous men in their places and ages; and partly to contradict and confute what Job had said, chap. ix. 24, that the earth was given into the hand of the wicked. By the earth he means either the dominion of the earth, to wit, of that part of the earth in or nigh which Job and his friends lived; or rather, the possession of the earth, i. e. of a great portion of worldly goods; or particularly, the land, or that land, (as the word properly signifies,) to wit, the land of Canaan, which was given by special gift unto Abraham, (from whom it seems most probable that both Job and his friends were descended,) and to Isaac, and to Jacob; who, though they met with some common and ordinary afflictions, yet enjoyed a great measure of comfort, and wealth, and honour, and power in the world, as the fruits of God's blessing, and of his covenant made with good men, whilst wicked men were exposed to manifold distresses and grievous calamities; all which those holy patriarchs diligently observed, and industriously imparted to their children, to encourage them to continue and proceed in the ways of true piety. But how was the earth or land given to them alone, as is here said? Answo. Either, 1. Because Noah and his sons (of whom some understand these words) had the sole possession and dominion of the earth. Or, 2. Because Canaan was given to Abraham and to his seed alone; and some of Abraham's children had the dominion of, or an ample possession in, those parts where Job and his friends lived, who also seem to be in the number of them. Or, 3. Because they only had it either by God's special and gracious providence, or by the choice and approbation of the people; whereas wicked men took it by rapine and violence, without asking leave either from God or men

No stranger, i. e. the enemy; for such are called strangers, both in Scripture, as Prov. v. 10; Isa. i. 7; Ezek. xi. 9; xxviii. 10, and in other authors. No person of a strange nation and disposition or religion. Among them, i. e. through their land, as this phrase is used, Numb. xx. 18, to wit, so as to molest, or disturb, or spoil them, as the Sabeans and Chaldeans did thee. God watched over those wise and holy men so carefully, that no enemy should invade them; and so he would have done over thee, if thou hadst been such a one.

20 The wicked man travaileth with pain all his days, and the number of years is hidden to the oppressor.

Travaileth with pain, i. e. lives a life of care, and fear, and grief, by reason of God's wrath, and the torments of his own mind, and his manifold and dreadful outward calamities. The number of his years is hidden, i. e. he knows not how short the time of his tyranny and life is, and therefore lives in continual fear of losing them. The number of a good man's years are also hid from him as well as they are from the wicked men; but to those this is a great torment and mischief; whereas it is not so to him. Or, and a few years (Heb. a number of years, put by a common hypallage for years of number; as few years are called, Job xvi. 22, because they are soon numbered; as men of number, is put for a few men, Gen. xxxiv. 30; Deut. iv. 27; xxxiii. 6) are laid or treasured up, i. e. are allotted to him by God's secret counsel; for God cuts off such men in the midst of their days, Psal. lv. 23; whereas long life is promised, and commonly given, to righteous men. To the oppressor, i. e. to the wicked man; but he names this one sort of them, the oppressors, partly, because he supposed Job to be guilty of this sin, chap. xxii. 6; partly, in opposition to what Job had affirmed of the safety and happiness of such persons, chap. xii. 6; and partly, because such are most apt to expect and promise to themselves a longer and happier life than other men, because of their singular preservatives and advantages of life above other men.

21 † A dreadful sound is in his ears: in prosperity the destroyer shall come upon him.

Even when he feels no evil, he is tormented with perpetual fears and expectations of it from the sense of his own guilt, and of God's all-seeing eye and righteous judgment. See Lev. xxvi. 36; Deut. xxviii. 65. Shall come upon him; or, shall invade and destroy him suddenly and unexpectedly; which is a great aggravation of it.

22 He believeth not that he shall return out of darkness, and he is waited for of the sword.

i. e. When he falls into trouble, he despairs of God's mercy, and of deliverance, by reason of his guilty conscience; which he speaks with particular reflection upon Job, who would receive no comfort nor matter of hope. He is waited for of the sword, i. e. besides the calamity which is upon him, he is in constant expectation of further and greater miseries; for the sword is oft used for any grievous affliction, as Luke ii. 35.

23 He wandereth abroad for bread, saying, Where is it? he knoweth that the day of darkness is ready at his hand.

His poverty is so great, that he is forced to wander hither and thither to seek for bread, and cannot find it. A just punishment for him that took away the bread and substance of others by violence. He knoweth; he is assured of it from his own guilty conscience. The day of darkness, i. e. the time of his total, and irrecoverable, and everlasting destruction. Is ready at his hand, i. e. ready to seize upon him, or take him by the hand or shoulder like a serjeant to arrest him. The words may well be rendered, was prepared by his hand, i. e. by his works or actions; which being most commonly done with the hand, are oft called by that name, as Exod. xiv. 31; Judg. ix. 16; Prov. x. 4; xii. 24. So the sense is, He is conscious to himself that by his wicked life he hath prepared and stored up calamities and destruction for himself, and therefore he expected nothing less.

24 Trouble and anguish shall make him afraid; they shall prevail against him, as a king ready to the battle.

i. e. When trouble comes, instead of trusting, and hoping, and comforting himself in God, as good men do in such cases, as 1 Sam. xxx. 6, he is full of torment and dread of the issue of it, and concludes it will end in his utter ruin, as he hath great reason to do. Ready to the battle; or, prepared or furnished; or, disposed with his army round about him, as this word seems to signify.

25 For he stretcheth out his hand against God, and strengtheneth himself against the Almighty.

Now he gives the reason of all the forementioned calamities which befell him, which was his great wickedness in the time of his peace and prosperity. He stretcheth out his hand against God, i. e. he commonly and customarily sinned against God with a high and out-stretched hand, i. e. boldly and presumptuously, as one that neither desired his favour, nor feared his anger. Strengtheneth himself, i. e. he putteth his forces in array, as if he would fight with him. Against the Almighty; which aggravates the madness of this poor contemptible worm that durst fight against the omnipotent God.

26 He runneth upon him, even on his neck, upon the thick bosses of his bucklers:

Runneth upon him, i. e. assaults him, or rusheth upon him with great swiftness and fury, as this phrase signifies, Dan. viii. 6. This he is either, 1. God, who was expressed twice in the last verse, and who is here produced as entering the lists and fighting with his daring adversary. Or rather, 2. The wicked man, of whom and whose sin and misery he speaks in the whole context, both before and after this; who in the last verse was introduced as preparing for the battle, and here as actually and impudently fighting with him. Even on his neck; as a stout warrior, who cometh close to his adversary and grapples with him, and taketh him by the neck to throw him down. Compare 2 Sam. ii. 16; Job xvi. 12. Or, with his neck. So it is a metaphor from a mad and raging bull, which runs upon his enemy with a hard and stiff neck. Upon the thick bosses of his bucklers, i. e. even where his enemy is strongest; he is not discouraged with the enemies' thick, and strong, and eminent shields, but boldly ventures in upon them, and amongst them. Or, with the thick bosses (Heb. the thickness and eminency) of his shields, wherewith he invaded the enemy, that so he might both defend himself and offend his enemy; for the ancient shields were useful both ways, because they had a sharp iron or steel in the midst of them.

27 Because he covereth his face with his fatness, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks.

With his fatness: this is mentioned as the reason of his insolent carriage towards God, because he was fat, i. e. rich, and potent, and successful, as that expression signifies, Deut. xxxii. 15; Psal. lxxviii. 31; Jer. xlv. 21. His great prosperity made him proud and secure, and regardless of God and men. Maketh collops of fat on his flanks; his only care and study is to pamper and please himself, and obey his own mind and lusts, and in defence and pursuance of them he contends with God.

28 And he dwelleth in desolate cities, and in houses which no man inhabiteth, which are ready to become heaps.

He dwelleth in desolate cities: these words may note either, 1. His tyranny and cruelty, whereby he makes the places of his abode and dominion desolate by his frequent murders, spoils, and oppressions, wherewith he destroyeth great numbers of his people, and forceth others to flee out of his reach. Or, 2. His pride, and power, and wealth; which enabled and engaged him to build desolate houses and cities for his own glory, and safety, and convenience; of which see the notes on chap. iii. 14. Or, 3. His punishment and misery; that for his impiety towards God, and oppression of men, he was driven out of his dominions and possessions, and forced to flee into desolate places for safety and a habitation. This seems best to agree with the Hebrew words, which run thus, But (for so the particle and is commonly used, as hath been oft said) he shall dwell, &c. And so this is fitly opposed to this last-mentioned prosperity, and is the beginning of the description of his misery, which is continued in the following verses. Which are ready to become heaps; which were ready to fall, and to be turned into a heap of stones.

29 He shall not be rich, neither shall his substance continue, neither shall he prolong the perfection thereof upon the earth.

He shall not be rich, i. e. not abide rich, but shall become poor. Neither shall his substance continue; what he had gotten shall be taken from him. The perfection thereof, i. e. the perfection of his substance, or that complete estate and glory which he hath attained, shall not be continued to him and to his posterity. Or, neither shall their perfection (i. e. that prosperity, and wealth, and power wherein they placed their perfection or happiness) spread itself, or be propagated or spread abroad, but shall be diminished and taken away. It is a metaphor from a tree. Compare Job viii. 16.

30 He shall not depart out of darkness; the flame shall dry up his branches, and by the breath of his mouth shall he go away.

He shall not depart out of darkness; his misery shall have no end. The flame; God's anger and judgment upon him. His branches; either, 1. His children; or, 2. Wealth, and power, and glory, wherewith he was encompassed, and adorned, and secured, as trees are with their branches. Of his mouth, i. e. of God's mouth, as appears both by comparing this with ver. 25, where God is expressed as the adversary with whom this wicked wretch contendeth; and by the nature of the thing, and the whole context, all this man's calamities being manifestly the effects of God's anger; and by other places of Scripture, where the breath of God's mouth or lips are mentioned as that whereby he destroyeth wicked men; as Job iv. 9; Isa. xi. 4; 2 Thess. ii. 8. And this expression intimates to us with how much facility God subdueth his enemies; he needs no arms or instruments; his word, his blast, one act of his will, is more than sufficient to do it. Shall he go away, Heb. go back, i. e. retreat and run away from God faster than he did run towards and upon him, ver. 26. So it is a continuation of the former metaphor of a battle or conflict between two persons.

31 Let not him that is deceived in trust in vanity: for vanity shall be his recompence.

In vanity, i. e. in the vain and deceitful things of this world, such as power, riches, honour, &c., of which, and of the loss of them, he had been largely discoursing; and now he subjoins a general caution to all men to take heed of running into the same error and mischief with the fore-mentioned persons; and withal he secretly intimates Job's great sin, which was the cause of his ruin, to wit, his carnal confidence in those vain things, the wealth, and glory, and children which God had given him; from which crime he therefore vindicates himself hereafter. For vanity, i. e. disappointment and dissatisfaction, and the vanishing or loss of all their imaginary felicity; the same word vanity being elegantly repeated in another sense, as is usual in Scripture and all authors. His recompence, Heb. his exchange; he shall exchange one vanity for another, a pleasing vanity for a vexatious vanity. But this verse is and may be rendered otherwise; the Hebrew particle al being here, as it is elsewhere, taken for a simple negation. Thus, He that is deceived with vanity, (i. e. with the vain things of this world, wherewith most men are deceived and bewitched,) will not believe that vanity (i. e. emptiness, and disappointment, and misery) shall be his recompence. And so this is an aggravation of his calamity, that it surprised him when he was confident and secure from all fears of such an event.

32 It shall be accomplished before his time, and his branch shall not be green.

It shall be accomplished, to wit, that which was last mentioned, that vanity should be his recompence. Or, it, i. e. his branch, mentioned in the next clause of the verse, from which it is understood in this former clause, as is very usual in the Holy Scripture, shall be consumed, or cut off. Before his time, i. e. when by the course of nature and common providence it might have continued and flourished much longer. His branch; either, 1. His glory and prosperity. Or rather, 2. His children, by comparing ver. 34, where the desolation is said to fall upon all the congregation and tabernacles of these men; and so he reflects upon Job, who lost his children. Shall not be green, i. e. shall not continue to flourish, as it had done.

33 He shall shake off his unripe grape as the vine, and shall cast off his flower as the olive.

He; either, 1. The wicked man, who by his sins is the author of his own ruin. Or, 2. God, who is easily understood, both from the matter and context. Shall shake off, Heb. shall take away by violence. His unripe grape, i. e. his fruit, his children, or other comforts, before their time. As the vine, i. e. as the vine either itself droppeth, or rather loseth, its tender grapes, which are plucked off by a violent hand. As the olive; which flourisheth much about the same time with the vine, and is commonly handled in the same manner.

34 For the congregation of hypocrites shall be desolate, and fire shall consume the tabernacles of bribery.

The congregation, i. e. their children, and servants, and friends, and dependants. Desolate, i. e. utterly destroyed. Fire, i. e. some eminent and terrible judgment of God, which is oft expressed by fire; as Isa. ix. 19; xxvi. 11. The tabernacles of bribery, i. e. which were either built or maintained by extortion and bribery, and such-like unrighteous courses, whereof they thought Job guilty, chap. xxii. 8.

35 They conceive mischief, and bring forth vanity, and their belly prepareth deceit.

They conceive mischief, i. e. they devise and contrive injurious and pernicious enterprises against others. Vanity, or iniquity, or injury, or trouble; either, 1. To others; they execute what they had contrived. Or, 2. To themselves; the mischief they designed for others falleth upon their own heads, and they reap what they sowed. And their belly, i. e. their inward parts, their hearts and minds. See above, on ver. 2. Prepareth deceit; either, 1. For others, whom they design to cheat; or, 2. For themselves, who whilst they seek to deceive others, shall find that they themselves are most deceived, as being deprived of all their desires and hopes wherewith they fed themselves, and cast into all those calamities which they thought to prevent by these artifices.

CHAP. XVI.

Job's answer: his friends increase his misery, 1—8. His insulting enemies, 9—11. God's power against him, 12—16. His innocence should cry to heaven, where it was known: he wisheth to plead with God, 17—21: pleaseth himself with the prospect of death, 22.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 I have heard many such things: miserable comforters are ye all.

I have heard many such things; both from you, who do so odiously repeat the same things, and from divers others; for these things, though you pride and please yourselves in them, as if you had made some great and strange discoveries, are but vulgar and trivial. Miserable comforters; instead of giving me those comforts which you pretend to do, chap. xv. 11, and which my condition loudly calls for, you feed me with terrors, and censures, and scoffs.

3 Shall vain words have an end? or what emboldeneth thee that thou answerest?

When wilt thou put an end to these idle and impertinent discourses? He retorts upon him his charge against Job, chap. xv. 2, 3. That thou answerest, to wit, so or in such manner, so censoriously, and opprobriously, and peremptorily. What secret grounds hast thou for thy confidence? Thy arguments are flashy and weak; if thou hast any stronger, produce them.

4 I also could speak as ye do: if your soul were in my soul's stead, I could heap up words

^b Ps. 22. 7. against you, and ^b shake mine head at ^a Lam. 2. 15. you.

If your soul, i. e. your person, as Gen. xii. 5. I could heap up words against you, i. e. I could multiply accusations and reproaches against you, as you do against me. Shake mine head at you; in way of derision, as this phrase is most commonly used; as 2 Kings xix. 21; Psal. xxii. 7; Isa. xxxvii. 22; Matt. xxvii. 39.

5 But I would strengthen you with my mouth, and the moving of my lips should assuage your grief.

Strengthen you, i. e. direct, and support, and comfort you. My discourse should comfort you. The words your grief are here understood, either out of the foregoing clause, where they are implied; or out of the next verse, where they are expressed. Possibly the words may be thus rendered without any ellipsis, which is most natural, if the translation be true and suitable: compassion (for the Hebrew word nid comes from nud, which signifies to conclude) should restrain or govern my lips, that they should avoid all speeches which may vex you, and speak only what may be to your comfort and benefit; whereas you let your tongues loose to speak whatsoever pleaseth you, or tormenteth me.

6 Though I speak, my grief is not asswaged: and though I forbear, † what am I eased?

Though I speak to God by prayer, or to you in way of discourse, I find no relief. Job having reproved his friends for their unkind carriage towards him, and aggravated it by his resolutions to have dealt more friendly with them, if they had been in his case; now he returns to his main business, to describe and aggravate his miseries, if by any means he could move his friends to pity and help him. What am I eased? or, what part or grain of my grief or misery departeth from me? I receive not one jot of ease. Neither speech nor silence do me any good.

7 But now he hath made me weary: thou hast made desolate all my company.

But; or, surely, as this Hebrew particle most commonly signifies. He, i. e. God, as appears by the following words and verses. Hath made me weary; either of complaining, or of my life. Thou; he speaks in the second person to God, as in the former clause in the third person of God. Such change of persons are very usual in Scripture, and elsewhere. Hast made desolate all my company; hast turned my society into desolation, by destroying my children and servants.

8 And thou hast filled me with wrinkles, which is a witness against me: and my leanness rising up in me beareth witness to my face.

Thou hast filled me with wrinkles, by consuming all my fat and flesh. Which is a witness against me; Heb. which is a witness of the reality, and greatness, and just cause of my sorrows. Or, which is become or made a witness, i. e. is produced by my friends as a witness of God's wrath, and of my hypocrisy and impiety. Rising up in me, i. e. which is in me. Or, rising up against me, as witnesses use to rise and stand up against a guilty person to accuse him. Beareth witness to my face; as witnesses are to accuse a person to his face, openly and evidently, so as any that look on my face may plainly discern it. But this clause may be rendered thus, my leanness in my face (i. e. which appears in my face, and causeth the wrinkles which are visible there) riseth up against me, and beareth witness, as before.

^c ch. 10. 16. 17. 9 He teareth me in his wrath, who hateth me: he gnasheth upon me with his teeth; ^d mine enemy sharpeneth his eyes upon me.

He teareth me in his wrath, Heb. his wrath teareth me in pieces, as a lion doth his prey. Who hateth me, Heb. and he hateth me, i. e. he pursueth me with a deadly hatred and rage. Or, and he is become mine enemy; or, he sets himself against me with all his might; or, he treats me like an implacable enemy. He gnasheth upon me with his teeth; which is a gesture and sign of extreme anger and fury, as Psal. xxxv. 16; xxxvii. 12; Lam. ii. 16; as elsewhere of grievous pain, as Luke xiii. 28. Mine enemy; either, 1.

God, who of a friend is now become my implacable enemy. Or, 2. Eliphaz, who deals with me more like an enemy than a friend. Sharpeneth his eyes upon me, i. e. looks upon me with a fierce and sparkling eye, as enraged persons use to do.

10 They have ^e gaped upon me with their mouth; they ^f have smitten me upon the cheek reproachfully; they have

^g gathered themselves together against me. ^h ch. 1. 15, 17. ⁱ Heb. hath shut me up. They; the instruments of God's anger, my friends, as they are falsely called. Gaped upon me with their mouth; opened their mouths wide against me; either, 1. To devour and destroy me; as a lion which falls upon his prey with open mouth, as this phrase is used, Psal. xxii. 13, 14. And this they did aggravating and increasing his sorrows, whereby he was well-nigh overwhelmed. Or, 2. To scoff and deride me, as it follows, and as this phrase is most commonly used, as Psal. xxii. 8; xxxv. 21. Reproachfully; or, by reproach; or in way of scorn and contempt; whereof such smiting was a sign, as 1 Kings xxii. 24; Lam. iii. 30; Micah v. 1. The sign is here put for the thing signified; they despised and derided me. They have gathered themselves together against me, i. e. they are come from several places, and met together here, not for me, or to comfort me, as they pretended, but really against me, or to torment and grieve me. Heb. they have filled themselves, &c. Either, 1. They have filled up their numbers, they are all come against me. Or, 2. They have filled their minds with evil opinions of me, and their hearts with courage and resolution to assault me, and their mouths with words and arguments against me. Compare Eccles. viii. 11; Acts v. 3.

11 God ^h† hath delivered me to the ungodly, and turned me over into the hands of the wicked.

To the ungodly; either, 1. To my friends, who act the part of the wicked, in censuring and condemning the righteous, whom God approveth, and in pleading for a false and wicked cause. Or rather, 2. To the Chaldeans and Sabeans, who were a most wicked people, living in gross contempt of God, and injuriousness to all sorts of men. For this best suits both with the first clause of the next verse, which showeth that he speaketh of Job's first afflictions, which befell him when he was at ease; and with Job's principal scope, which was to prove that both eminent prosperity and affliction did indifferently happen to good and bad men; and this was evident from this example, because holy Job was ruined, when these wicked people were most victorious and successful.

12 I was at ease, but he hath broken me asunder: he hath also taken me by my neck, and shaken me to pieces, and ⁱ set me up for his mark.

I lived in great peace and prosperity, which makes my present miseries more grievous to me; and therefore my complaints are excusable, and I deserve pity rather than reproach from my friends. Broken me asunder; broken my spirit with the sense of his anger, and my body with loathsome ulcers, as also by destroying my children, a part of my own flesh or body. Taken me by my neck, and shaken me to pieces; as a mighty man doth with some young stripping, when he wrestleth with him. Set me up for his mark; that he may shoot all his arrows into me, and that with delight, which archers have in that exercise.

13 His archers compass me round about, he cleaveth my reins asunder, and doth not spare; he poureth out my gall upon the ground.

His archers, i. e. his plagues or judgments, elsewhere compared to arrows, and here to archers. He cleaveth my reins asunder with his arrows, i. e. he wounds me inwardly, and mortally, and incurably; which also is noted by pouring out the gall; such wounds being deadly.

14 He breaketh me with breach upon breach, he runneth upon me like a giant.

My calamities have no interruption, but one immediately succeeds another, as it did chap. i. Like a giant, who falls upon his enemy with all his might, that he may overthrow and kill him.

15 I have sewed sackcloth upon my skin, and ^k defiled my horn in the dust.

i. e. I put on sackcloth sewed together, not upon my other garments, but next to my skin, as was done in great calamities; as 2 Kings vi. 30. So far am I from stretching out my hands against God, whereof I am accused, chap. xv. 25, that I have humbled myself deeply under his hand. I have willingly parted with all my wealth, and power, and glory, (as the horn oft signifies in Scripture, as Psal. lxxv. 5; cxxxii. 17; Luke i. 69,) and been contented to lie in the dust, and to endure the contempt which God hath brought upon me.

16 My face is foul with weeping, and on my eyelids is the shadow of death;

i. e. A gross and terrible darkness. My sight is very dim and dark, as is usual in case of sore diseases, or excessive grief and weeping, Lam. ii. 11; and especially in the approach of death: compare Psal. vi. 7; xxxviii. 10; Lam. v. 17.

17 Not for any injustice in mine hands: also my prayer is pure.

And all this is not come upon me for any injurious dealing with others by oppression, or deceit, or bribery, where-with I am implicitly charged, chap. xv. 16, 20, 34; but for other reasons known to God only, for I cannot discover them. Also my prayer is pure; I do not cast off God's fear and service, as I am accused to do, chap. xv. 4. I do still pray and worship God, and my prayer is accompanied with a sincere heart and undefiled conscience: see Psal. cix. 7; Prov. xxviii. 9; 1 Tim. ii. 8. So that I have lived inoffensively towards God and towards men; and therefore your assertion is both uncharitable and false, that eminent afflictions are peculiar to ungodly men.

18 O earth, cover not thou my blood, ^l and ¹ let my cry have no place.

My blood, so called not actively, to wit, his own blood; but passively or objectively, i. e. the blood of others shed by him, and lying upon his conscience. The earth is said to cover that blood which lies undiscovered and unrevealed; of which see on Gen. iv. 10, 11; Isa. xxvi. 21. But, saith Job, if I be guilty of destroying any one man by murder or oppression, as I am traduced, O Lord, let the earth disclose it; let it be brought to light, that I may suffer condign punishment for it. My cry; either, 1. Passively, to wit, the cries and groans which I have forced from others by my oppressions; let those cries have no place to hide them. Or rather, 2. Actively, the cry of my complaints to men, or prayers to God; let them find no place in the ears or hearts of God or men, if this be true: or, no place, i. e. no regard, or no power or success; in which sense God's word is said not to have place in evil men, John viii. 37; and Esau not to find place of repentance, Heb. xii. 17, i. e. all his entreaties and tears could not prevail with his father to repent and retract the blessing given from him to Jacob.

19 Also now, behold, ^m my witness is in heaven, and my record is [†] on high.

Besides the witness of men and of my own conscience, God is witness of my integrity.

20 My friends [†] scorn me: but mine eye poureth out tears unto God.

My friends, who should defend me from the scorns and injuries of others, scorn me; so this word is used Psal. cxix. 51; Prov. iii. 34; xix. 28. I pour forth my prayers and tears to God, that he would judge me according to my innocency, and plead my righteous cause against you.

21 ⁿ O that one might plead for a man with God, as a man pleadeth for his neighbour!

Oh that either I or some faithful advocate might be admitted to plead my cause, either with God, or rather with you, before God's tribunal, God being witness and judge between us! But this verse is, and that very agreeably to the Hebrew text, otherwise translated and interpreted; either, 1. With respect to Christ, And he (i. e. God, last mentioned, to wit, God the Son, Christ Jesus) will plead for a man (i. e. for me, against whom you plead. He modestly speaketh of himself in the third person, as is usual) with God (to wit, with God the Father); and the Son of man (as Christ is oft called) will plead for his friend, or companion, or neighbour, i. e. for a man whom he hath taken into that relation to himself. It is plain that the mystery of man's redemption by Christ was known to the ancient patriarchs, as hath been oft noted before; and to Job among others, chap. xix. 25. Or, 2. As the matter for which he prayed and cried to God, That (so the Hebrew vau is frequently used) he (i. e. God) would plead, or judge, or give sentence for a man (i. e. for me, or in my cause) with God, (i. e. with himself, the noun being put for the pronoun, as Gen. ii. 20; iv. 15; Lev. xiv. 15, 16, and elsewhere; or at his own tribunal, to which I have appealed,) as a man pleadeth for his friend or neighbour with or before an earthly judge and tribunal. This seems most agreeable to the scope of the place, which was to maintain his own integrity against his friends before God.

22 When [†] a few years are come, then I shall ^o go the way whence I shall not return.

i. e. To the state and place of the dead, whence men do not and cannot return to this life. The meaning is, My death hastens, and therefore I earnestly desire that the cause depending before God between me and my friends may be searched out and determined, that if I be guilty of these things whereof they accuse me, I may bear the shame and blame of it before all men; and if I be innocent, that I may live to see my own integrity and the credit of religion (which suffers upon this occasion) vindicated, that so I may die in peace with God, and may leave the savour of a good name behind me.

CHAP. XVII.

His miserable life; false friends; their punishment, 1—5. His contempt, and sorrow, 6, 7. The righteous should be established, 8, 9; but he was given over to death, 11—16.

MY ^{||} breath is corrupt, my days are extinct, ^a the graves are ready for me.

My breath is corrupt, i. e. it stinks, as it doth in dying persons. Or, my spirit is corrupted, or spent, or lost, i. e. my vital spirits and natural powers are wasted; my soul is ready to leave the body. My days are extinct; the lamp of my life is wasted, and upon the point of going out, and that in a snuff. The graves, i. e. the grave; the plural number being put for the singular, as sepulchres, 2 Chron. xxi. 20, cities, Judg. xii. 7, asses, Zech. ix. 9, are put for one of each of these. Are ready for me; open their mouths as ready to receive me. The sense and scope of this verse is the same with the former.

2 Are there not mockers with me? and doth not mine eye [†] continue in their provocation?

Do not my friends, instead of comforting, mock and abuse me, as if I had made use of religion only as a cloak to my wickedness? Heb. If there be not mockers with me, understand, let God do so or so to me. It is a form of an oath, which is defectively expressed, after the manner of the Hebrews. Assuredly I am in the midst of cruel mockers, which is a sore aggravation of my affliction. Thus he returns to what he had said chap. xvi. 20, and intimates the necessity and justice of his following appeal, which otherwise might be thought too bold. Mine eye; either, 1. The eyes of my body. Do they not continue to provoke me to my face? Or rather, 2. The eye of my mind. Their provoking scoffs and reproaches do not only molest me in the day-time, when they are with me, but lodge with me in the night, and are continually in my thoughts, and break my sleep, and disturb me in dreams. And therefore if I be a little disordered, I may be excused.

3 Lay down now, put me in a surety with thee; who is he that will strike hands with me?

He turneth his speech either to Eliphaz, who spoke last; or rather to God, as is evident from the matter and scope of the words, and from the next verse. These words contain, either, 1. A humble desire to God that he would appoint him a surety, who should undertake for his friends; that they should refer the cause in difference between them to God, or to some other person, who should determine the matter in God's name, and according to God's will; or that God would be his Surety, or appoint him a surety who should maintain his righteous cause against his opposers; for so this phrase is oft used, as Psal. cxix. 121, 122; Isa. xxxviii. 14. And some expound this, as they did chap. xvi. 21, of Christ Jesus, who was called our Surety, Heb. vii. 22; appoint, I pray thee, my Surety (i. e. Christ, who is now) with thee, to plead my cause. Or rather, 2. An appeal from God unto God, or a kind of challenge or desire of debating his cause with God; which, though it savoureth of too much boldness and irreverence to God, yet seeing Job expresseth the same desire almost in the same manner, chap. ix. 33, 34, and is sharply reprov'd by God for contending with him, chap. xl. 2, I know no inconvenience of ascribing the same thing to him here. So the sense is, Because I am not able to deal with thee immediately, considering the dread of thy majesty, my only desire is, that thou wouldst deal with me upon fair and equal terms, as if thou wert a man like myself, and appoint some man who shall in thy name and stead determine the time and place for the trial of my cause with thee. And this suits well enough with the two following verses, because his friends were without understanding, ver. 4, and partial, ver. 5; therefore he desires to cease discoursing with them, and to debate his cause with God, who was just and impartial, and also would be favourable to him. Strike hands with me, i. e. agree and promise, or be surety to me; whereof that was the usual gesture, Prov. vi. 1, 2; xvii. 18; xxii. 26.

4 For thou hast hid their heart from understanding: therefore shalt thou not exalt them.

Thou hast blinded the minds of my friends, that they cannot see those truths which are most plain and evident to all men of sense and experience; therefore I desire a more wise and able judge. Therefore shalt thou not exalt them, i. e. thou wilt not give them the victory over me in this contest, but wilt give sentence for me, and disparage them, and make them ashamed of their confidence in affirming falsehoods of thee, and punish them severely for their miscarriage. It is a usual figure, whereby much more is understood than is expressed.

5 He that speaketh flattery to his friends, even the eyes of his children shall fail.

Hereby Job chargeth them, either, 1. With flattering him with vain hopes, and promises of the return of his former prosperity, when he knew that his case was desperate. Or, 2. With flattering and befriending God, and giving a partial sentence out of respect to him; for which he reprov'd and condemn'd them before, chap. xiii. 7-9, where see the notes. Some render the words thus, He that uttereth or declareth his mind or thoughts (as this word signifies, Psal. cxxxix. 2, 17) with flattery, or to flatter or deceive another. The eyes of his children shall fail; he shall be severely punished, not only in his person, but even in his children, whose eyes shall fail with vain expectations of relief and deliverance out of those calamities which shall come upon them for this sin of their parents.

6 He hath made me also ^d a byword of the people; and ||aforetime I was as a tabret.

He, i. e. God, who is oft designed by this pronoun in this book. A by-word, or proverb, or common talk. My calamities are so great and prodigious, that they fill all people with discourse, and are become proverbial to express extreme miseries. Compare Numb. xxi. 27, 28; Deut. xxviii. 37. And, or but, or although, as this particle is oft used. Aforetime; so he aggravateth his present misery by the mention of his former prosperity. Or, to their faces, or openly. They do not only reproach me behind my back, but revile and mock me, and make a sport of my calamities, even to my face. I was as a tabret, i. e. I was the people's delight and darling, and matter of their praise, and entertained by them with applauses, and as it were with instruments of music. Or, I am as a tabret, i. e. matter of sport and merriment to them.

7 Mine eye also is dim by reason of sorrow, and all || my members are as a shadow.

By reason of sorrow; through excessive weeping and decay of spirits, which cause a dimness in the sight. All my members are as a shadow; my body is so consumed, and my colour so wan and ghastly, that I look more like a ghost, or a shadow, than like a man.

8 Upright men shall be astonied at this, and the innocent shall stir up himself against the hypocrite.

Wise and good men, when they shall see and consider my calamities, will not be so forward to censure and condemn me as you are, but will rather stand and wonder at the depth and mysteriousness of God's counsels and judgments, which fall so heavily upon innocent men, while the worst of men prosper. And the innocent shall stir up himself against the hypocrite: but, or yet, (notwithstanding all these sufferings of good men, and the astonishment which they cause,) innocent (or religious persons shall be so far from joining their opinions, and counsels, and interests, with hypocrites, or profane men, who thence take occasion to censure the afflicted person, and to reproach, and condemn, and desert the profession and practice of godliness, that they) will stir up themselves against them in holy indignation, and will oppose their wicked courses, and will prefer afflicted piety before prosperous iniquity.

9 The righteous also shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands [†] shall be stronger and stronger.

Shall hold on his way, i. e. shall persist in that good way into which he hath entered, and not be turned from it by any afflictions which may befall himself or any other good men, nor by any contempt or reproach cast upon them by the ungodly by reason thereof. He that hath clean hands, i. e. whose life and the course of his actions is holy and righteous; which is a sign that his heart also is pure and perfect. Shall be stronger and stronger; shall not be shaken and discouraged by the grievous afflictions of the godly, nor by the bitter censures and reproaches of hypocrites or wicked men, cast upon them for that cause; but will be confirmed thereby, and made more constant and resolute in cleaving to God, and his ways and people, in spite of all difficulties and miseries.

10 But as for you all, ^g do ye return, ^h ch. 6. 29. and come now: for I cannot find one wise man among you.

Return, and come now, i. e. come now again, (as this phrase is oft used,) and renew the debate, as I see you are prepared and resolved to do, and I am ready to receive you. Or, return into yourselves, and consider my cause again; peradventure your second thoughts may be wiser. One wise man, to wit, in this matter. None of you speak like wise or good men, but like rash and heady persons; you censure me as a rotten hypocrite, and misjudge of God's ways, and condemn the generation of God's children upon frivolous grounds.

11 ^b My days are past, my purposes are broken off, even [†] the thoughts of my heart.

My days; the days of my life. I am a lost and dying man, and therefore the hopes you give me of the bettering of my condition are vain and groundless. My purposes; or, my designs, or thoughts, to wit, which I had in my prosperous days, concerning myself and children, and the continuance of my happiness. The thoughts of my heart, Heb. the possessions of my heart, i. e. those thoughts which in a great measure possessed my heart, which were most natural, and familiar, and delightful to me. All my thoughts, and designs, and hopes are disappointed, and come to nothing.

12 They change the night into day: the light is [†] short because of darkness.

They; either, 1. My friends. Or, 2. My sorrows, of which he is here speaking. Or, 3. My thoughts, last mentioned. Possibly these words may be joined with them thus, The thoughts of my heart change the night into day. Change the night into day; they do so incessantly pursue and disturb me, that I can no more rest and sleep in the dark and silent nights, than in the midst of the light and tumults of the day. Or, they change the day into night,

^d ch. 30. 9.

|| Or, before them.

^e Ps. 6. 7. & 31. 2.

|| Or, my thoughts.

[†] Ps. 24. 4. & Heb. shall add strength.

^h ch. 7. e. & 9. 24. & Heb. the possessions.

[†] Heb. near.

Heb. they put the night for or instead of (as the Hebrew lamed is elsewhere used) the day, i. e. they make the day as sad and dark as the night to me. So it seems best to agree with the following branch of the verse. The light is short, i. e. the day-light, which oftentimes gives some little comfort and refreshment to men in misery, seems to be gone and fled as soon as it is begun. Because of darkness, i. e. because of my grievous pains and torments, which follow me by day as well as by night.

13 If I wait, the grave is mine house: I have made my bed in the darkness.

If I wait; if I should give way to those hopes of my deliverance and restoration which you suggest to me. The grave is mine house: I should be sadly disappointed; for I am upon the borders of the grave, which is the only house appointed for me, instead of that goodly house which you promise to me here upon condition of my repentance. I have made my bed in darkness; I expect no other rest but in the dark grave, for which therefore I prepare myself.

† Heb. cried, or, called. 14 I have † said to corruption, Thou art my father: to the worm, Thou art my mother, and my sister.

To corruption, Heb. to the pit of corruption, the grave. Thou art my father; I am near akin to thee, as being taken out of thee; and thou wilt receive and embrace me, and keep me in thy house, as parents do their children. Thou art my mother, and my sister; because of the same original, and the most strict and intimate union and conjunction between me and the worms.

15 And where is now my hope? as for my hope, who shall see it?

Where is now my hope? and what then is become of that hope which you advised me to entertain? My hope, i. e. the fulfilling of my hope, or the happiness which you would have me expect; hope being put for the thing hoped for, as Prov. xiii. 12; 1 Cor. ix. 10. Who shall see it? no man shall see it; it shall never be.

16 They shall go down to the bars of the pit, when our rest together is in the dust.

They; either, 1. They that would see my hope, they must go into the grave to behold it. Or rather, 2. My hopes; of which he spoke in the singular number, ver. 15, which he here changeth into the plural, as is very usual in these poetical books. To the bars of the pit, i. e. into the closest and innermost parts of the pit: my hopes are dying, and will be buried in my grave. When our rest together is in the dust: so the sense is, when those spectators, together with myself, shall be in our graves. Heb. seeing that (as this Hebrew particle in oft signifies; or, certainly, as it is used Numb. xvii. 13; Job vi. 13, and elsewhere) our rest shall be together in the dust, i. e. I and my hopes shall be buried together.

CHAP. XVIII.

Bildad's reproof: Job's words many: he despised his friends; he vexed himself; but in vain, 1—4. The calamity of the wicked, 5—21.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said,

2 How long will it be ere ye make an end of words? mark, and afterwards we will speak.

Ere ye; either, 1. You my brethren. Why do you not give over discoursing with Job, who is wholly transported with rage, and not fit to be discoursed with, at least until both you and he have better considered what to say? Or rather, 2. Thou, O Job, of whom he speaks here, as also ver. 3, in the plural number; either because there were some other person or persons present at this debate, who by their words or gestures showed themselves favourers of Job's cause; or because it was a common idiom of the Eastern language to speak thus of one person, especially where he was one of eminency or authority. Job's speeches were generally longer than his friends', and they seemed very tedious to them. Mark; consider the matter and our words better. Or, inform us, Heb. make us to understand. Seeing thou lookest upon us as ignorant and brutish men, as it follows, do thou instruct and inform us. Cease cavilling and railing, and produce thy strong reasons, that we may consider and answer them, or yield to them.

3 Wherefore are we counted as beasts, and reputed vile in your sight?

As beasts, i. e. ignorant, blockish, and stupid men, chap. xvii. 4, 10. Vile, Heb. polluted, or unclean, i. e. not fit to be conversed or discoursed with; or contemptible, as such things are. In your sight; either, 1. To your faces, or in your own hearing. Or, 2. In thy sight or judgment, O Job; so he speaks of Job in the plural number, as he did ver. 2.

4 He teareth † himself in his anger: shall the earth be forsaken for thee? and shall the rock be removed out of his place?

He teareth himself, i. e. Job, of whom he speaks in the third person for the second, as chap. xii. 4; xvi. 7; Obad. 3. Or, O thou that tearest thyself! Thou complainest of us for vexing thee with our speeches, when in truth thou art thy own greatest tormenter by thy own impatience and rage. Shall the earth be forsaken, to wit, by God? Shall God give over the government of the earth, and men, and things in it, and suffer all things to fall out by chance, and promiscuously to good and bad men, without any regard to his truth, or wisdom, or justice? Shall God forbear to rule the world righteously, as he hath hitherto done, in favouring good men, and destroying the wicked? For thee, i. e. for thy sake; or to prevent thy complaints and clamours. Shall the rock be removed out of his place? shall the counsels of God, which are more firm and unmovable than rocks, and the whole course of his providence, be altered to comply with thy fancies or humours?

5 Yea, the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine.

Yea; the thing is true and certain, notwithstanding thy dissatisfaction and opposition against it. The light of the wicked shall be put out; all their glory and felicity shall perish. The spark of his fire, i. e. their highest and brightest glory, which he calleth the spark, &c., because, like a spark, it shines briskly for a moment, but is quickly extinct.

6 The light shall be dark in his tabernacle, and his candle shall be put out with him.

In his tabernacle, i. e. in his family. Instead of his former splendour, both he and his shall fall into extremity of misery. His candle shall be put out with him, i. e. his glory shall die with him, and not descend to his posterity, as he hoped and designed. Or, his candle, which was with him, or shone upon him, shall be put out.

7 The steps of his strength shall be straitened, and his own counsel shall cast him down.

The steps of his strength, i. e. his strong steps, by a vulgar Hebraism. By steps he means his counsels, as the next branch explains it, his attempts and actions; and by steps of strength, such of them as seem to be most firm and settled, contrived with greatest strength of understanding, and carried on with great resolution and might. Shall be straitened, i. e. shall be hindered and entangled. He shall be cast into great difficulties, and troubles, and perplexities, so that he shall not be able to proceed and to accomplish his enterprises, but shall find himself insnared by his own devices, as the next words declare it. This phrase is used also Prov. iv. 11, 12, and it is opposed to the enlarging of a man's way or steps, which signifies success and prosperity, as Psal. iv. 1; xxxi. 8. His own counsel shall cast him down; he shall be undone by his own contrivances; either because God will give him up to dangerous and destructive mistakes of his way, or because God will oppose him, and turn his own devices against him, which he can easily do by throwing in unexpected accidents.

8 For he is cast into a net by his own feet, and he walketh upon a snare.

By his own feet; by his own choice, and design, and actions. He walketh upon a snare; and therefore must needs be entangled and destroyed.

9 The gin shall take him by the heel, g ch. 5. 5. and ⁶ the robber shall prevail against him.

Shall take him by the heel, i. e. take fast hold of him, so as to keep him in those distresses; and when he is insured the robber shall come upon him, and take, and spoil, or kill him. Or, the horrible or terrible man; the huntsman, that laid the snare for him. A metaphor from those who hunt for wild beasts, who first lay snares for them, and then seize upon them in the snares.

10 The snare is † laid for him in the ground, and a trap for him in the way.

In the ground; where he doth not expect nor discern it. The former snare he laid for himself, but this was laid for him by another.

11 ^h Terrors shall make him afraid on every side, and shall † drive him to his feet.

Terrors; both from men, and from God, and from his own unquiet mind and guilty conscience. Shall drive him to his feet; shall force him to flee hither and thither, and he knows not whither, being secure and safe no where, but pursued by terrors from place to place.

12 His strength shall be hungerbitten, i ch. 15. 23. and ^h destruction shall be ready at his side.

His strength; either, 1. His children, which are, and are called, a man's strength, as Gen. xlix. 3; Psal. cxxvii. 4, 5. Or rather, 2. His wealth, and power, and prosperity. Hungerbitten, or famished, i. e. utterly consumed. Shall be ready at his side, i. e. shall follow him at the heels, as a most diligent servant, or constant companion.

13 It shall devour the † strength of his skin: even the firstborn of death shall devour his strength.

The strength of his skin, Heb. the bars, or rather, the branches of the skin, i. e. either the veins and sinews, which branch out themselves through the skin as well as elsewhere; or the fat and flesh, which like bars support the skin, and adorn and beautify it, as branches do a tree; without which the skin is shrivelled up and deformed. The first-born of death, i. e. a most remarkable and terrible kind of death. The first-born was the chief of his brethren, and therefore this title is given to things eminent in their kind, as Isa. xiv. 30; Col. i. 18; Heb. xii. 23; Rev. i. 5.

14 ^a His confidence shall be rooted out of his tabernacle, and it shall bring him to the king of terrors.

His confidence, i. e. all the matter of his confidence, his riches, children, &c. Out of his tabernacle, i. e. out of his habitation. It shall bring him, to wit, the loss of his confidence. To the king of terrors; either, 1. Into extreme fears and horrors of mind. Or, 2. To death, which even Aristotle called the most terrible of all terrors. And this it will do, either because it will expose him to his enemies, who will kill him; or because the sense of his disappointments, and losses, and dangers will oppress his spirits, and break his heart.

15 It shall dwell in his tabernacle, because it is none of his: brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation.

It, i. e. destruction, expressed ver. 12, and designed by this particle it, ver. 13, shall not come upon him and his for a season, for then there might be some hopes of recovery; but it shall fix his abode with him. It is none of his: this may be added, either, 1. By way of correction, Did I say his tabernacle? I must retract the expression; for in truth, it is none of his, it is become another man's. Or, 2. As a reason of the ruin of his tabernacle, because it is none of his own, but got from others by deceit or violence. But these words are and may be joined with the former, and both thus rendered, A stranger (Heb. one that is not his, that is not descended from him, and hath no relation to him) shall dwell in his tabernacle, i. e. shall possess his house and goods.

Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation; it shall be utterly and prodigiously destroyed, as it were by fire and brimstone. He seems to allude both to the destruction of Sodom, upon which God did scatter brimstone and fire, which happened not long before these times, and could not be unknown to them, who lived near that place, and were diligent observers of God's works; and to the judgment which befell Job, chap. i. 16: when the stranger hath taken and rifled his dwelling, he shall forsake it as an accursed place, and shall burn it with fire and brimstone, that there may be no monument of so vile a person left upon the earth.

16 ^h His roots shall be dried up beneath, and above shall his branch be cut off.

i. e. He shall be destroyed, both root and branch, i. e. both himself and his posterity. Compare Mal. iv. 1.

17 ^m His remembrance shall perish from the earth, and he shall have no name in the street.

Instead of that honour and renown which he designed to have, both whilst he lived, and after his death, he is not so much as remembered, unless it be with contempt and reproach.

18 † He shall be driven from light into darkness, and chased out of the world.

He shall be driven, Heb. they shall drive him, i. e. his enemies, or those whom he hath oppressed; or they whom God shall appoint to do it, whether angels or men. Or it is an impersonal speech, and to be rendered passively, as it is also Job vii. 3; Luke xii. 20; xvi. 9. From light into darkness; from a splendid and prosperous life to disgrace and misery, and to the grave, the land of darkness and forgetfulness, as the following words explain it.

19 ⁿ He shall neither have son nor nephew among his people, nor any remaining in his dwellings.

But if any such survive, they shall be in the hands and power of strangers, or rather of their enemies.

20 They that come after him shall be astonished at ^o his day, as they that † went before † were affrighted.

At his day, i. e. at the day of his destruction, as the word day is used, Psal. xxxvii. 13; cxxxvii. 7; Ezek. xxi. 25; Obad. 12. They shall be amazed at the suddenness, and dreadfulness, and prodigiousness of it, as Job's friends were at his calamities, chap. ii. 12, 13. They that went before, i. e. before the persons last mentioned; those who lived in the time and place where this judgment was inflicted. Affrighted; or, filled with horror; partly through humanity and compassion, and partly for fear, lest the judgment should overtake them also.

21 Surely such are the dwellings of the wicked, and this is the place of him that ^p knoweth not God.

i. e. Who doth not acknowledge, nor fear, nor serve God, as this phrase is used, 1 Sam. ii. 12; Psal. lxxix. 6; 2 Thess. i. 8.

CHAP. XIX.

Job's answer: his friends' strangeness and reproaches vex him, 1—3. He layeth before them his great misery to provoke their pity, 6—22; wisheth his words might be recorded, 23, 24. His hope in his Redeemer and the resurrection, 25—27. His friends should not reproach his integrity, for fear of like judgment, 28, 29.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 How long will ye vex my soul, and break me in pieces with words?

With mere empty words, void of sense or argument; with your impertinent and unedifying discourses, and bitter reproaches, as it followeth.

3 These ^a ten times have ye reproached me: ye are not ashamed that ye † make yourselves strange to me.

1 Or, harden yourselves against me.

These ten times, i. e. many times. A certain number for an uncertain. So this phrase is oft used, as Gen. xxxi. 7; Numb. xiv. 22, &c. That ye make yourselves strange to me; that you carry yourselves like strangers to me, and are not concerned nor affected with my calamities, and condemn me as if you had never known my former piety and integrity.

4 And be it indeed that I have erred, mine error remaineth with myself.

If my opinion in this point be faulty and erroneous, as you pretend it is. Or, if I have sinned, (for sin is oft called error in Scripture,) and am therefore punished. Mine error remaineth with myself; either, 1. It is likely to continue, I see no cause from your reasons to change my judgment. Or, 2. I suffer deeply for my sins, and therefore deserve your pity and help, rather than your reproaches, whereby you add affliction to the afflicted.

b Pa. 38. 16. 5 If indeed ye will ^bmagnify yourselves against me, and plead against me my reproach:

Magnify yourselves against me, i. e. use lofty, and impetuous, and contemptuous speeches against me; or seek praise and honour from others, by your conquering or out-reasoning of me. My reproach; either, 1. Your reproaches of me; if your reproachful and censorious speeches must pass for solid arguments. Or, 2. My wickedness, which, if true, were just matter of reproach, and the cause of all my miseries. Or, 3. My contemptible and calamitous condition, for which you reproach and condemn me as a hypocrite and wicked man.

6 Know now that God hath overthrown me, and hath compassed me with his net.

Know now; consider what I am now saying. Hath overthrown me; hath grievously afflicted me in all kinds; therefore it ill becomes you to aggravate my miseries; and if my passions, hereby raised, have broken forth into some extravagant and unmeet expressions, I might expect your pity and favourable construction, and not such severe censures and reproaches. Heb. God hath perverted me, i. e. either my state or condition, as was now said, or my right and cause. He oppreseth me with power, and will not give me a fair hearing, as it follows, ver. 7. He giveth me very hard measure, and dealeth worse with me than I might in reason and justice expect from so wise and good a God. This is a harsh reflection upon God; but such passages have sometimes come from good men, when under sore afflictions and temptations, which was Job's case. With his net, i. e. with afflictions on every side, so that I cannot escape, nor get any freedom to come to him and plead with him, as I desire.

|| Or, violence. 7 Behold, I cry out of || wrong, but I am not heard: I cry aloud, but there is no judgment.

I cry out, to wit, unto God by prayer or appeal. Of wrong; that I am oppressed, either, 1. By my friends; or rather, 2. By God, who deals with me according to his sovereign power and exact and rigorous justice, and not with that equity and benignity which he showeth to the generality of men, and hath promised to good men, such as he knoweth me to be. There is no judgment: God will not hear my cause, nor pass sentence; which I might reasonably expect from him; but he quite neglects me, and hath utterly forsaken me, and left me in the hands of the devil and wicked men. See the like complaints of other good men in the like case of desertion, Psal. xiii. 2; xxii. 2; lxxxviii. 15; Lam. iii. 8; Hab. i. 2.

c ch. 3. 23. Pe. 88. 8. 8 ^cHe hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and he hath set darkness in my paths.

That I cannot pass, i. e. so that I know not what to say or do, and can see no means nor possibility of getting out of my troubles. He hath set darkness in my paths; so that I cannot discern my way, or what course I should take.

d Ps. 69. 44. 9 ^dHe hath stripped me of my glory, and taken the crown from my head.

Of my glory, i. e. of my estate, and children, and authority, and all my comforts. The crown, i. e. all my ornaments.

10 He hath destroyed me on every side, and I am gone: and mine hope hath he removed like a tree.

On every side, i. e. in all respects, and to all intents and purposes; my person, and family, and estate. I am gone, i. e. I am a lost and dead man. Going is oft put for dying, as Gen. xv. 2; Psal. xxxix. 13. Mine hope, i. e. all my hopes of the present life, as he oft expreseth it; but not of the life to come, as appears from Job xiii. 15, 16; xix. 25, &c. Like a tree; which being once plucked up by the roots, never groweth again.

11 He hath also kindled his wrath against me, and ^ehe counteth me unto him as one of his enemies. e ch. 13. 24. Lam. 2. 5.

He hath stirred up his wrath against me of his own accord, without any provocation of mine, human infirmity excepted. He counteth me unto him as one of his enemies, i. e. he useth me as sharply as if I were an inveterate enemy of God and of all goodness, though he knoweth I am and have ever been a hearty lover and servant of him.

12 His troops come together, and ^fraise up their way against me, and encamp round about my tabernacle. f ch. 30. 12.

His troops, i. e. my afflictions, which are but God's instruments and soldiers marching under his conduct. Raise up their way; either, 1. Cast a bank or trench round about me, as an army doth when they go to besiege a place. Or rather, 2. Make a causeway or raised path, as pioneers usually do in low and waterish grounds for the march of an army. God removes all impediments out of the way, and lays me open to all manner of mischief.

13 ^gHe hath put my brethren far from me, and mine acquaintance are verily estranged from me. g Ps. 31. 11. Ps. 38. 11. & 69. 8. & 88. 9, 18.

My brethren, i. e. my kindred and friends, who might and should have supported and comforted me in my distress. Far from me; either, 1. In place; because they feared or disdained, or at least neglected, to visit or succour me. Or, 2. In their affections, which are far from me, when their bodies are present with me, as I find in you. But this also I ascribe to God; he hath alienated your hearts from me.

14 My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends have forgotten me.

My kinsfolk have failed, to wit, to perform the offices of humanity and friendship which they owe to me. Have forgotten me, i. e. neglect and disregard me as much as if they had quite forgotten me.

15 They that dwell in mine house, and my maids, count me for a stranger: I am an alien in their sight.

They that dwell in mine house, Heb. the sojourners of my house, i. e. such as had formerly sojourned with me, whether strangers, widows, and fatherless, whom by the law of charity and hospitality he entertained; or hired servants, who had for a good while their habitation and subsistence in his family. My maids; who, by reason of their sex, commonly have and should have more tender and compassionate hearts than men. And therefore this is God's doing, who hath hardened their hearts against me. Count me for a stranger; regard my commands and concerns no more than a stranger. I am an alien in their sight; the same thing repeated, through vehemency of passion, because this lay very heavy upon him.

16 I called my servant, and he gave me no answer; I intreated him with my mouth.

I called my servant, to do some servile office about me, for my case or relief, and he passed by as if he had been deaf, because he loathed and feared to come near to me; although to my commands I added humble and earnest desires. With my mouth: either, 1. With gentle and moving speeches; or rather, 2. With my own mouth, and not by a proxy.

17 My breath is strange to my wife, though I intreated for the children's sake of ^hmine own body. h Heb. my belly.

To my wife; who by reason of the stink of my breath and sores denied me her company. For the children's sake of mine own body; by these pledges of our mutual and matrimonial tie and affection, the children which came out of my loins, and were begotten by me upon her body. But divers render the words thus, and I entreated the children of my own body, i. e. either some of Job's younger children, who by reason of their tender years were kept at home with their father, when their elder brethren and sisters were gone abroad to the feast; or some of his grandchildren by those grown sons and daughters; for such also oft come under the name of children. But this sense seems not so proper, partly because according to that translation here is mention only of Job's entreating them, but not a word of their denying his request; which is the only matter of his present complaint; and partly because according to the former translation it is a great and just aggravation of his wife's unkindness, and exactly answers to the foregoing verse, where the servant's perverseness is aggravated in the same manner, and by part of the same words.

^h Or, the wicked.
h 2 Kings

18 Yea, ^h young children despised me; I arose, and they spake against me.

Young children; or, fools; the most contemptible persons. I arose, to wit, from my seat, to show my respect to them, though they were my inferiors; to show my readiness to comply with that mean and low condition, into which God had now brought me. Or, I stood up; for so this word sometimes signifies. I did not disoblige or provoke them by any uncivil and uncemely carriage towards them, but was very courteous to them; and yet they make it their business to rail against me, as you also do.

My inward friends, Heb. the men of my secret; my intimates and confidants, to whom I imparted all my thoughts, and counsels, and concerns. Whom I loved sincerely and fervently, which they so ill requite. He saith not, they who loved me; for their love, had it been true, would have continued in his affliction as well as in his prosperity.

^m Lam. 4. 8.
ⁿ Or, as.
20 ^h My bone cleaveth to my skin ^{||} and to my flesh, and I am escaped with the skin of my teeth.

My bone, i. e. my bones; the singular collectively put for the plural, as chap. ii. 5; Prov. xv. 30. Cleaveth to my skin, to wit, immediately, the fat and flesh next to the skin being consumed. The sense is, I am worn to skin and bone: see the same phrase Psal. cii. 5. And to my flesh; or, as (the particle and being often so used, as hath been observed before) to my flesh, i. e. either as formerly it clave to my flesh, or as near and as closely as it doth to these remainders of flesh which are left in my inward parts. I am escaped with the skin of my teeth; I am scarce sound and whole and free from sores in any part of my skin, except that of my jaws, which holdeth and covereth the roots of my teeth. This being, as divers observe, the devil's policy, to leave his mouth untouched, that he might more freely express his mind, and vent his blasphemies against God, which he supposed sharp pain would force him to do, and which he knew would be of pernicious consequence not only to Job, but to others also.

21 Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends; ¹ for the hand of God hath touched me.

O ye my friends; for such you have been, and still pretend to be; and therefore fulfil that relation; and if you will not help me, yet at least pity me. Hath touched me, i. e. smitten or afflicted me sorely, as this word is oft used; as chap. i. 11; Psal. civ. 32.

^m Ps. 69. 28.
22 Why do ye ^m persecute me as God, and are not satisfied with my flesh?

As God; either, 1. As God doth; or rather, 2. As if you were gods, and not men; as if you had the same infinite knowledge which God hath, whereby you can search my heart, and know my hypocrisy; and the same sovereign and absolute authority, to say and do what you please with me, without giving any reason or account of it, which is indeed the prerogative of the great God; but it belongs not to you, who are men, and therefore liable to mistake and misjudging, and such as must give an account to God of all their words and carriages towards their brethren, and particularly towards persons in affliction, and withal subject to the same diseases and calamities under which I groan; and therefore may need the pity which I expect from you. With my flesh, i. e. with the consumption and torment of my whole body, but add to it the vexation of my spirit, by grievous reproaches and censures; but are like wolves or lions, that are not contented with devouring the flesh of their prey, but also break their bones.

23 [†] Oh that my words were now written! ⁺ Heb. Who will give,
[†] Oh that they were printed in a book!

My words; either, 1. The following and famous confession of his faith, ver. 25, &c. Or rather, 2. All his foregoing discourses with his friends, which he was so far from disowning or being ashamed of, that he was desirous that all ages should know, that they might judge between him and them, whose cause was better, and whose arguments were stronger.

24 That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!

An iron pen; of which also there is mention Jer. xvii. 1. And lead; or, or lead; or, with lead; the particle and being oft so used, as Gen. iv. 20; Exod. i. 6; Jer. xxii. 7. For this lead may be either, 1. The writing pen, which might be either of iron or of lead; for though lead be of itself too soft, yet there was an art of tempering lead with other metals to such a degree of hardness that it could pierce into a rock; as they did also temper brass, so that they could make bows and swords of it. Or, 2. The writing table; for the ancients did use to write divers things in lead, as is well known. Or, 3. The writing ink, as I may call it; for they used to grave the letters in a stone with an iron tool, and then to fill up the cuts or furrows made in the stone with lead, that the words might be more plainly seen and read.

25 For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth:

This is the reason of his great confidence in the goodness of his cause, and his willingness to have the matter depending between him and his friends published and submitted to any trial, because he had a living and powerful Redeemer to plead his cause, and vindicate his person from all their severe censures, and to give sentence for him. I know: I have no knowledge, nor confidence, nor hope of restitution to the prosperities of this life; yet this one thing I know, which is more comfortable and considerable, and therein I rejoice, though I be now a dying man, and in a desperate condition for this life. My redeemer; in whom I have a particular interest, and he hath a particular care of me. Quest. What redeemer and what deliverance doth Job speak of in this and the two following verses? Ans. Some late interpreters understand this place metaphorically, of God's delivering Job out of his doleful and desperate condition, and restoring him to his former splendour and happiness in the world; it being a very usual thing in Scripture to call eminent dangers or calamities by the name of death, as Psal. xxii. 15; lxxxviii. 4, 5; Ezek. xxxvii. 11, 12; 2 Cor. xi. 23; and great and glorious deliverances by the name of quickening and resurrection, as Psal. lxxi. 20; Isa. xxvi. 19; Rom. xi. 15. But the most interpreters, both ancient and modern, understand it of Christ, and of his resurrection, and of Job's resurrection to life by his power and favour; which seems most probable for many reasons. 1. From that known rule, that a proper and literal interpretation of Scripture is always to be preferred before the metaphorical, where it suits with the text and with other scriptures. 2. From the Hebrew word goel, here used; which although sometimes it be used of God absolutely, or essentially considered, yet it most properly agrees to Jesus Christ; for this word, as all Hebricians know, is primarily used of the next kinsman, whose office it was to redeem by a price paid the sold or mortgaged estate of his deceased kinsman, Lev. xxv. 25; and to revenge his death, Numb. xxxv. 12; and to maintain his name and honour, by raising up seed to him, Deut. xxv. 5: all which most fitly agrees to Christ, who is our nearest Kinsman and Brother, Heb. ii. 11, as having taken our nature upon him by incarnation; who also hath redeemed that everlasting inheritance which our first parents had utterly lost and sold by the price of his own blood; and hath revenged the death of mankind upon the great contriver of it, the devil, by destroying him and his kingdom; and hath taken a course to preserve our name, and honour, and persons to eternity. And if the places where God is called Goel in the Old Testament be examined, it will be found that either all or most of them may be, and some of them must be, understood of God the Son, or of Christ, as Gen. xlviii. 16; Isa. lix. 20. See also Psal. lxxiv. 2; Isa. xli. 14; xlv. 6; xlix. 7; lii. 3; lxxiii. 16. 3. Because Job was so far from such a firm confidence as he here professeth, that he had not the least degree of hope of any such glorious temporal restoration as his friends promised to him, as we have oft seen and observed in the former discourses, as chap. xvi. 22; xvii. 12, 13, &c. And therefore that hope which every righteous man hath in his death, Prov. xiv. 32, and which Job oft professeth that he had, must necessarily be fixed upon his happiness in the future life. 4. Because some of the following expressions cannot without wresting and violence be applied to a metaphorical resurrection, as we shall see in the sequel. 5. Because this is a more lofty and spiritual strain than any in Job's former discourses, and quite contrary to them. And as they generally savour of dejection and diffidence, and do either declare or increase his grief; so this puts him into another and much better temper. And therefore it is well observed, that after this time and these expressions we meet not with any such impatient or despairing passages as we had before; which shows that they had inspired him with new life and comfort. 6. Because this well agrees with other passages in this book; wherein Job declareth, that although he had no hope as to this life, and the comforts thereof, yet he had a hope beyond death, which made him profess, Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him, Job xiii. 15. Trust in him; for what? Surely for comfort and happiness. Where? Not in this life, for that he supposeth to be lost; therefore it must be in the next life. And this was one reason why he so vehemently desired death, because he knew it would bring him unto God and unto true felicity. And this his hope and confidence in God, and in his favour to him, Job opposeth to those foul and false aspersions which his friends had cast upon him, as if he had forsaken God, and cast off all fear of him, and hope in him. Object. 1. If this place had spoken of the resurrection of the body, some of the Hebrew writers or commentators upon this place, who did believe that doctrine, would have understood it so, and have urged it against the Sadducees, which they did not. Answer. 1. All the Jewish writers which are now extant lived and wrote since Christ's time, when the doctors of that people were very ignorant of many great truths, and of the plain meaning of many scriptures, and very corrupt in their principles as well as in their practices. 2. There was a manifest reason why they could not understand this text thus, because they believed that Job in his agonies did deny God's providence, and consequently the resurrection and the future judgment, which though it was a most uncharitable and false opinion, yet forced them to interpret this text another way. Object. 2. How is it credible that Job, in those ancient times, and in that dark state of the church, should know these great mysteries of Christ's incarnation, and of the resurrection and life to come? Answer. 1. The mystery of Christ's incarnation was revealed to Adam by that first and famous promise, that the seed of the woman should break the serpent's head, Gen. iii. 15; which being the only foundation of all his hopes for the recovery and salvation of himself, and of all his posterity, he would doubtless carefully and diligently teach and explain it, as need required, to those that descended from him. 2. That the ancient patriarchs and prophets were generally acquainted with these doctrines is undeniably evident from Heb. xi.; 1 Pet. i. 9—12. 3. Particularly Abraham, from whom Job is supposed to have descended, had the promise made to him, that Christ should come out of his loins, Gen. xii. 3; and is said to have seen Christ's day, and rejoiced to see it, John viii. 56, and had his hopes and desires fixed upon a divine and heavenly city and country, Heb. xi. 10, 16. And as Abraham knew and believed these things himself, so it is manifest that he taught them to his children and servants, Gen. xviii. 19, and to his kindred and others, as he had occasion. And therefore it cannot seem strange that Job professeth his faith and hope in these things.

My redeemer liveth: I am a dying man, and my hopes are dying, but he liveth, and that for ever; and therefore though I die, yet he both can and will make me live again in due time, though not in this world, yet in the other, which is much better; and though I am now highly censured and condemned by my friends and others as a great dissembler and a secret sinner, whom God's hand hath found out; yet there is a day coming wherein my cause shall be pleaded, and my name and honour vindicated from all these reproaches, and my integrity brought to light. He shall stand: I am falling and dying, but he shall stand firm, and unmovable, and victorious, in full power and authority; all which this word stand signifies; and therefore he is able to make me stand in judgment, and to maintain my cause against all opposers. Or, he shall arise, as this verb most commonly signifies, i. e. either, 1. He shall exist, or be born, as this word is oft used; as Numb. xxxii. 14; Deut. xxix. 22; Judg. ii. 10; 1 Kings iii. 12; Matt. xi. 11. And it notes Christ's incarnation, that although as he was God he was now and from all eternity in being, yet he should in due time be made man, and be born of a woman. Or, 2. He shall arise out of the dust; which had been more probable, if it had been in the text from, or out of, as now it is upon, the earth or dust; for Christ's resurrection from the dead might be fitly mentioned here as the cause of Job's resurrection, which followeth. At the latter day; either, 1. In the days of the Messiah, or of the gospel, which are oft called the latter or last days or times; as Isa. ii. 2; Hos. iii. 5; Joel ii. 28, compared with Acts ii. 17; 1 Tim. iv. 1; 2 Tim. iii. 1; Heb. i. 1. Or rather, 2. At the day of the general resurrection and judgment, which, as those holy patriarchs well knew and firmly believed, was to be at the end of the world, and which is called the last day, John vi. 39, 40, 44, 54; xi. 24; xii. 48; 1 Pet. i. 5; for this was the time when Job's resurrection, of which he speaketh here, was to be. Heb. at the last; by which word he plainly intimates that his hope was not of things present, and of worldly felicities, of which his friends had discoursed so much; but of another kind of, and a far greater, blessedness, which should accrue to him in after-times, long after he was dead and rotten. Or, the last; who is both the first and the last, Isa. xlv. 6; Rev. i. 11, who shall subdue and survive all his and his people's enemies, and after others the last enemy, death, 1 Cor. xv. 26, and then shall raise up his people and plead their cause, and vindicate them from all the calumnies and injuries which are put upon them, and conduct them to life and glory. Upon the earth; the place upon which Christ shall appear and stand at the last day. Heb. upon the dust; in which his saints and members lie or sleep, whom he will raise out of it. And therefore he is fitly said to stand upon the dust, or the grave, or death, because then he will put that among other enemies under his feet; as it is expressed, 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26. Some render the words thus, and that very agreeably to the Hebrew, the last, or at the last, he shall arise or stand up against (for so this very phrase is used, Gen. iv. 8; Judg. ix. 18; Psal. liv. 3) the dust, and fight with it, and rescue the bodies of the saints, which are held in it as prisoners, from its dominion and territories. Some understand this of God, that he should stand last in the field, as Conqueror of all his enemies. But this neither agrees with the words, the Hebrew aphar signifying dust, and being never used of the field or place of battle; nor with Job's scope, which was to defend himself against his friends' accusations, and to comfort himself with his hopes and assurance of God's favour to be exhibited to him in due time; which end the words in that sense would by no means serve, because God might and would be Conqueror of all his enemies, though Job himself had been one of them, and though his cause had been bad, and his friends should with God have triumphed over him.

26 || And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God:

Flesh shall I see God. n Ps. 17. 15. 1 Cor. 13. 12. 1 John 3. 2.

The style of this and other poetical books is concise and

For, After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed, yet out of my short, and therefore many words are to be understood in some places to complete the sense. The meaning of the place is this, Though my skin is now in a great measure consumed by sores, and the rest of it, together with this body, shall be devoured by the worms, which may seem to make my case quite desperate. Heb. And though (which particle, as it is oft elsewhere, is here to be understood, as the opposition of the next branch showeth) after my skin (which either now is, or suddenly will be, consumed by sores or worms) they (i. e. the destroyers, or devourers, as is implied in the verb; such impersonal speeches being usual in the Scripture; as Gen. i. 26; Luke xii. 20; xvi. 9, where the actions are expressed, but the persons or things acting are understood. And by the destroyers he most probably designs the worms, which do this work in the grave) destroy, or cut off, or devour this, i. e. all this which you see left of me, this which I now point to, all this which is contained within my skin, all my flesh and bones, this which I know not what to call, whether a living body, or a dead carcass, because it is between both; and therefore he did not say this body, because it did scarce deserve that name. Yet; for the particle and is oft used adversatively; or then, as it is oft rendered. In my flesh, Heb. out of my flesh, or with (as the particle mem is used, Cant. i. 2; iii. 9; Isa. lvii. 8) my flesh, i. e. with eyes of flesh, as Job himself calls them, chap. x. 4; or with bodily eyes; my flesh or body being raised from the grave, and restored and reunited to my soul. And this is very fitly added, to show that he did not speak of a mental or spiritual, but of a corporeal vision, and that after his death. Shall I see God; the same whom he called his redeemer, ver. 25, i. e. Christ; of which see the note there; who being God-man, and having taken flesh, and appearing in his flesh or body with and for Job upon the earth, as was said ver. 25, might very well be seen with his bodily eyes. Nor is this understood of a simple seeing of him; for so even they that pierced him shall see him, Rev. i. 7; but of seeing him with delight and comfort, as that word is oft understood, as Gen. xviii. 11; Job xiii. 16; Psal. cxxviii. 5; Isa. liii. 11; of that glorious and beatifying vision of God which is promised to all God's people, Psal. xvi. 11; xvii. 15; Matt. v. 8; 1 Cor. xiii. 12; 1 John iii. 2.

+ Heb. a stranger.
 † Or, my reins within me are consumed with earnest desire [for that day.] + Heb. in my bosom.

27 Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not † another; || though my reins be consumed † within me.

Whom I shall see, in manner before and after expressed. No wonder that he repeats it again, because the meditation of it was most sweet to him. For myself, i. e. for my own comfort and benefit, as that phrase is oft used. Or, which is much of the same importance, on my behalf; to plead my cause, and vindicate me from all your reproaches. Not another, to wit, for me, or in my stead. I shall not see God by another's eyes, but by my own, and by these self-same eyes in this same body which now I have. Heb. not a stranger, i. e. this privilege shall be granted to me and to all other sincere servants of God, but not to strangers, i. e. to wicked men, who are oft called strangers, as Psal. xvii. 44, 45; liv. 3; Prov. xxi. 8, because they are estranged or alienated from God, and from his service and people. And if I were such a one, as you suppose me to be, I could never hope to enjoy that happiness. Though my reins be consumed within me: this I do confidently expect and hope for, though at present my case seems desperate, my very inward parts being even consumed with grief; and though, as I have said, the grave and the worms will consume my whole body, not excepting the reins, which seem to be safest and furthest out of their reach. Or without though, which is not in the Hebrew, my reins are consumed within me. So this may be a sudden and passionate ejaculation or exclamation, (such as we find Gen. xlix. 18, and oft in the Book of Psalms,) arising from the contemplation and confident expectation of this his unspeakable happiness, wherein he expresseth his vehement desire and longing for that blessed time and state. The reins are oft put for earnest desires or affections, whereof they are supposed to be the seat; as Job xxxviii. 36; Prov. xxiii. 16. And men are oft in Scripture said to be consumed or eaten up, or the like, by ardent affections; as Psal. lxxix. 9; lxxxiv. 2; cxix. 81, 82; John ii. 17.

28 But ye should say, °Why persecute we him, || seeing the root of the matter is found in me?

o ver. 22.
 † Or, and what root of matter is found in me?

But; or, therefore; because this is my case, and my faith and hope in God. Ye should say: so the future is used potentially, as it is Obad. 12; and the sense is, it would become you; or, it is your duty upon this account to say. Or, you will say, i. e. either, 1. I hope you will say so, and that you will be more moderate in your censures and expressions concerning me, as being convinced and sweetened by this sincere and solemn profession of my faith and hope. Or, 2. Peradventure you will say, to wit, by way of excuse for yourselves. Why persecute we him? so it is a correction of themselves. Seeing things are thus with him, we are blameworthy, that we have persecuted him with such bitter invectives, and we will do so no more. Or, wherein or how (for so that particle is sometimes used, as the learned observe) do we persecute him, as he chargeth us, ver. 22. He accuseth us falsely, and without cause given on our parts. So it is an apology for their hard speeches against him, which Job puts into their mouths as their exception to his charge, which he mentioned ver. 22. and upon that occasion falls into a most serious and pathetic exclamation, ver. 23, 24, and into a most solemn declaration of his faith in God his Redeemer, ver. 25—27; and after that digression he resumes the former matter, and here propounds an objection, to which he gives a severe answer, which may seem to suit much better with this than with the former exposition.

Seeing the root of the matter is found in me. These words contain either, 1. A motive or reason why they should correct themselves for persecuting him, and desist from it; because, saith Job, the root of the matter, or word, is in me. The root notes the occasion, or the foundation, or the truth and substance of a thing. And by this matter or word may be meant either, 1. That famous profession of his faith and confidence in God, ver. 25—27, which, saith he, I have not uttered vain-gloriously or hypocritically, but from my very heart, wherewith I believe what I have spoken with my mouth, as is said upon another occasion, Rom. x. 9, 10. This word or faith is rooted in mine heart, as it should be, Matt. xiii. 21; Col. ii. 7. I am no hypocrite, as you asperse me, but an upright person, having a root of true religion in me; which therefore should allay your censures, and make you willing to bear with some circumstantial defects or mistakes in my discourses, or miscarriages, into which my passion and pain might transport me, and make you repent of your cruel usage of a truly good man. But although Job had this root in his heart, yet this was doubted of, and not discernible by Job's friends, and therefore could be no argument to them. Possibly it might be better to understand by this root of the word, to wit, of God's word, which is oft called the word, by way of eminency, the foundations or fundamental truths of Divine doctrine which Job held; as appeared by this glorious confession, howsoever he might err in the matter of controversy with them; which being a difference in lesser things, they should mildly have borne with it, and not aggravated it and traduced him, as if thereby he had renounced God, and the very principles of religion, as they did. Or, 2. The word or thing under debate among them. So the sense may be this, the root or truth of the thing debated by us is with me, i. e. is on my side. Your discourses and arguments have no truth nor solidity in them as mine have. You speak whatever cometh into your minds and mouths; but my discourses are rooted and grounded upon sound knowledge and deep consideration. But this was no convincing answer; for they could easily retort the same thing upon him again, and their affirmation might seem as good as his; for it was only a begging of the thing in question. Or rather, 2. A defence of themselves, and of their former sharp and severe discourses, which Job called persecution, ver. 22. And having made a short, but vehement and important, digression, ver. 23, &c., he returns to the main question between them here; and the sense of this verse (with submission to better judgments) seems to me to be plainly this, But ye will say, i. e. I know will object against my charge, How, or wherein, or why do we persecute him? Why doth he charge us with so black a crime; seeing, or for, (as vau is oft used,) the root, i. e. the foundation, or cause, or occasion of the word, i. e. of those words or passages of ours which are so ill taken, or of the matter, i. e. of the thing now debated among us, is in me; i. e. Job gives the occasion to it by his boisterous passions and wicked expressions against God, which we neither can nor ought to endure, but are to be sharply reproved. And so this verse contains their objection or apology, which Job puts into their mouths, to which he makes a sharp and suitable reply in the following verse.

29 Be ye afraid of the sword: for wrath bringeth the punishments of the sword, ^{p. Pa. 58. 10.} that ye may know there is a judgment.

Of the sword, i. e. of some considerable judgment to be inflicted on you, which is called the sword; as Deut. xxxii. 41, and oft elsewhere. Do not please yourselves with such pretences and crafty evasions, as if the blame were wholly in me, not in you: God will not be mocked by you; he sees and will punish your most unrighteous and uncharitable judgment of me, and dealing with me. Wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword: for that wrath or fury which is in your hearts, and breaks out of your lips against me, doth deserve, and will certainly bring upon you, the punishment (Heb. punishments or iniquities; but iniquity is oft put for punishment) of the sword, i. e. a dreadful judgment from God. Or without any supplement, except that which is generally understood, for wrath (that sin of wrath or rage against a man, especially against one in affliction) is an iniquity (Heb. iniquities, the plural number being used by way of aggravation; as Psal. lxxiii. 22, and elsewhere: or, of the iniquities; the Hebrew prefix mem being here understood, as it is in many other places) of the sword, i. e. one of those iniquities which use to be, or are fit to be, punished by the sword, i. e. by some eminent judgment; as Job xxxi. 11, an iniquity of the judges, is an iniquity to be punished by the judges, as our translation hath it. That ye may know: the sense is either, 1. This admonition I now give you, that you may know it in time, and for your good, that you may seriously consider and prevent it. Or, 2. This judgment will come upon you, that you may be taught by your own sad and costly experience what you would not learn without it. That there is a judgment, i. e. that there will be a time of judgment, when God will call men to an account for all their rash speeches and miscarriages, and particularly for their rash and uncharitable censures of their brethren, Matt. vii. 1; Rom. xiv. 4; James iv. 11, either in this life, or at that last and dreadful day of the general resurrection (of which he spoke ver. 25, &c.) and judgment. God sees, and observes, and will judge all your words and actions, and therefore do not flatter yourselves with vain hopes of impunity.

CHAP. XX.

Zophar's answer: the state and portion of the wicked, notwithstanding for a time he may prosper and flourish.

THEN answered Zophar the Naamathite, and said,

2 Therefore do my thoughts cause me to answer, and for this † I make haste.

Therefore; for this thy severe sentence and denunciation of God's judgments against us, chap. xix. 29, which much more justly belongs to thyself, and is actually executed upon thee; and because of thy reproaches, as it followeth, ver. 3. My thoughts cause me to answer: I thought to have troubled myself and thee with no further discourses, considering how exceptions and incorrigible thou art; but my thoughts or consideration of thy reproachful words force me to break silence, and to answer thee as the matter requires. For this I make haste; I speak sooner than I intended, because I am not able to contain myself longer, and fear lest I should forget what is in my mind. Possibly he interrupted Job when he was proceeding further in his discourse; or he prevented some of his brethren who made an offer to speak.

3 I have heard the check of my reproach, and the spirit of my understanding causeth me to answer.

I have heard from thy mouth. Or, Shall I hear, to wit, with patience, and without a reply? Who can endure it? The check of my reproach, i. e. thy shameful and opprobrious reproofs of us, as if we and all thy friends were void of all humanity and natural affection towards thee, and were haters, and cruel persecutors, and even devourers, of thee, chap. xix. 19, 22; and as if we were guilty of most heinous crimes, and might expect God's vengeance upon us. The spirit, i. e. my soul or mind. Of my understanding, or, because of (for so the Hebrew mem oft signifies) my understanding, i. e. out of, or because of, that certain knowledge which I have of this matter from study and experience; I have not spoken, and I shall not speak, out of ignorance, or prejudice, or passion and rage against Job, as he asperseth us, but only what I evidently know, and yet hope that I can and shall convince thee of. Causeth me to answer, i. e. forceth me to speak. Or, answereth for me, i. e. either vindicates me against thy calumnies, or suggesteth an answer to me.

4 Knowest thou not this of old, since man was placed upon earth,

i. e. This which I am now about to say. How canst thou, thou, I say, who pretendest to such an exact and universal knowledge of men and things, be ignorant of so notorious a thing, which wicked men sensibly feel, and good men diligently observe, and all men are forced to acknowledge, one time or other? Of old, i. e. from the experience of all former ages. Since man was placed upon earth, i. e. since the world was made, and there were any men to observe God's government of it.

5 † That the triumphing of the wicked is † short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment?

Is short, Heb. is from near, i. e. from or for a little time; they have not long enjoyed it, and it will shortly vanish. The joy of the hypocrite: this he adds by way of reflection upon Job, who though he did clear himself from gross wickedness, yet might be guilty of deep hypocrisy.

Though he be advanced to great dignity and authority in the world.

Like his own dung; which men cast away with contempt and abhorreny. Compare 1 Kings xiv. 10; 2 Kings ix. 37. They which have seen him, with admiration at his felicity. Where is he? i. e. he is no where to be found; he is utterly lost and gone.

8 He shall fly away † as a dream, and shall not be found: yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night.

As a dream; which for the present makes a great show and noise, and highly affects the fancy, but hath nothing solid nor permanent in it; for as soon as the man awakes all vanisheth, and the remembrance of it is quickly lost. Shall not be found; the man will be utterly lost and gone, together with all his riches and glory. As a vision of the night; which appears to a man in the night and in his sleep.

9 † The eye also which saw him shall see him no more; neither shall his place any more behold him.

i. e. It shall not acknowledge nor contain him. A figure called prosopopæia, as Job vii. 10. Or, neither shall it (i. e. the eye last mentioned) behold him any more in his place.

Ps. 25. 7.
h ch. 21. 26. 11 His bones are full of ^sthe sin of his youth, ^hwhich shall lie down with him in the dust.

His bones, i. e. his whole body, even the strongest parts of it, which may seem most remote from danger. Of the sin of his youth, Heb. of his youth, i. e. of his youthful pleasures and lusts, by a metonymy of the subject. And this may be understood either, 1. Of the sins themselves, that he shall persevere in his youthful lusts even in old age, and shall die without repentance. Or rather, 2. Of the punishment of his sins, of which he is speaking both in the foregoing and following verses. He shall feel the sad effects of those sins in his riper years, as riotous sinners commonly do; and, as it follows, attended him to his grave. Or, with his secret ways or sins, as others render it; whereby he possibly intimates that Job, though he appeared righteous before others, yet was guilty of some secret wickedness, for which God was now reckoning with him.

12 Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue;

In his mouth, i. e. to his taste, though it greatly please him for the present. Though he hide it under his tongue; as an epicure doth a sweet morsel, which he is loth to swallow, and therefore keeps and rolls it about his mouth that he may longer enjoy the pleasure of it: though he be highly pleased with his lusts, and cleave to them in hearty love, and resolve to hold them fast, and improve them to the greatest delight and advantage.

+ Heb. in the midst of his palate. 13 Though he spare it, and forsake it not; but keep it still †within his mouth:

Though he spare it, i. e. will not part with it; or gratify and obey it, instead of subduing and mortifying it. Keep it still within his mouth, to suck out all the sweetness or benefit of it, though it be very delightful to him.

14 Yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of asps within him.

Turned into another nature or quality, from sweet to bitter. The gall of asps, i. e. exceeding bitter and pernicious. Gall is most bitter; the gall of serpents is full of poison, which from thence is conveyed to their mouths by veins, as Pliny observes; and the poison of asps is most dangerous, and within a few hours kills without remedy.

15 He hath swallowed down riches, and he shall vomit them up again: God shall cast them out of his belly.

He shall vomit them up again, i. e. be forced to restore them with great shame and torment, as gluttons sometimes do loathe, and with grief and pain cast up, that meat which they have eaten and swallowed down with much greediness and delight. If no man's hand can reach him, God shall find him out, and punish him severely.

16 He shall suck the poison of asps: the viper's tongue shall slay him.

That which he hath greedily and industriously sucked in as pleasant and wholesome nourishment, shall in the issue be as ungrateful and destructive to him as the poison or head (for the Hebrew word signifies both, and the poison lies in the head) of asps would be to one that sucketh it. The viper's tongue, together with its teeth, in which the poison lurks, which it conveys by biting a man.

j Ps. 36. 9.
Jer. 17. 6.
† Or, streaming brooks. 17 He shall not see ⁱthe rivers, ‖the floods, the brooks of honey and butter.

Not see, i. e. not enjoy, as that word is oft used; as Psal. cvi. 5; Eccles. ii. 1. The brooks of honey and butter; that abundant satisfaction and comfort, (oft signified by these or such-like metaphors; as Psal. xxxvi. 8; xli. 4; Isa. vii. 15, 22; xli. 18.) either which he promised to himself from that great estate which he had got by deceit and oppression, or which good men through God's blessing may and commonly do enjoy.

18 That which he laboured for ^kshall ^{k ver. 10, 15.} restore, and shall not swallow it down: †according to his substance shall the restitution be, and he shall not rejoice ^{+ Heb. according to the substance of his exchange.} therein.

That which he laboured for, Heb. labour, i. e. the goods which were gotten with labour; either, 1. By the labour of others; or rather, 2. By his own labour; which may relate as well to the goods of others, which he got not without pains and difficulty; or to his own goods honestly gotten by the sweat of his brows. And this is an aggravation of his misery, that he was forced to restore not only other men's goods which were in his hands, but his own also, to make reparation for their damages. Shall not swallow it down, to wit, so as to hold it; for otherwise he did swallow it, but withal did speedily vomit it up again, ver. 15, which was as if he had not swallowed it. He shall not possess it long, nor to any considerable purpose. According to his substance shall the restitution be, i. e. he shall be forced to part with all his estate to make compensation for his wrongs done to others. He shall not rejoice therein, i. e. he shall not enjoy what he hath gotten, because it shall be taken from him.

19 Because he hath †oppressed ^{+ Heb. crushed.} and hath forsaken the poor; because he hath violently taken away an house which he builded not;

By his oppression he brought men to utter poverty, and then forsook or left them in that forlorn estate, affording no mercy nor help to them. Or, some he made poor by his oppression, and others that were poor he suffered to perish for want of that relief which he should and might have afforded them; which is a crying sin in God's sight, and one of those sins for which God destroyed Sodom, Ezek. xvi. 49, and therefore fitly mentioned here as one of the sins for which God punished this wicked man. Or, he oppresseth and leaveth poor, as Broughton renders it. An house which he builded not, i. e. which was none of his. Heb. he hath violently taken away an house, and (or but) did not build (or repair, as building is oft used) it, to wit, that house for his own use, i. e. he did not build or possess that house, as he intended to do, but was cut off by God's hand before he could enjoy the fruit of his oppressions.

20 Surely he shall not †feel quietness ^{1 Eccles. 5. 13, 14.} in his belly, he shall not save of that ^{+ Heb. know.} which he desired.

He shall not feel quietness in his belly, i. e. he shall have no peace nor satisfaction in his mind in all his gains, partly because of his perpetual fears and expectations of the wrath of God and man, which his guilty conscience knoweth that he deserves; and partly because they shall be speedily taken away from him. He still continueth the metaphor of a glutton, whose belly is not quiet until it hath vomited up that wherewith he had oppressed it. Of that which he desired, i. e. any part of his good and desirable things, but he shall forfeit and lose them all.

21 ‖ There shall none of his meat be ^{1 Or, There shall be none left for his meat.} left; therefore shall no man look for his goods.

None of his meat be left for his own future use; but he shall be stripped of all. Therefore shall no man look for his goods; it being publicly known and observed that he was totally ruined, none of his kindred or friends shall trouble themselves to seek for any relics of his estate, as is usually done after men's deaths. But this verse is and may be rendered otherwise, There shall none be left for his meat, (i. e. he shall leave no heir who shall possess or enjoy his goods,) because, (for so the Hebrew particle al-chen is oft used; as Gen. xxxviii. 26; Numb. xiv. 43; Psal. xlii. 7; Jer. xlvi. 36) none of his goods shall remain, either for his heir or any other; all shall be utterly lost.

22 In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits: every hand of the ^{1 Or, troublesome.} ‖ wicked shall come upon him.

In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits; in the height of prosperity and abundance he shall be distressed and tormented, either by the horrors of an unquiet mind and guilty conscience, which makes him every moment expect Divine vengeance to fall upon his head; or rather, because of the sudden and unexpected assault of other men combining against him, and spoiling all his goods, as it follows. Every hand of the wicked, who lives by injury and the spoiling of others, and by God's providence are directed to fall upon him. Or, of the labourer, whose wages possibly he hath detained; or, of such as are in trouble or misery, as this word signifies, Job iii. 20, who may jointly invade him, either because their necessity tempts and drives them to spoil others; or rather, because they were such as had been brought into their calamity by his oppressions, and therefore now take reparations from him.

23 When he is about to fill his belly, God shall cast the fury of his wrath upon him, and shall rain it upon him while he is eating.

^m Num. 11.
^{33.} P. 76.
^{30.} 31.

When he is about to fill his belly, i. e. when he hath enough and abundance to satisfy all his appetites, and shall design to take the pleasure of all his gains, and to spend his days in epicurism and sensuality. God; who is oft understood in this book where he is not expressed; and so he is here, as appears from the following words, because there is no other person here expressed who was to inflict these evils upon him, and because they are said to be rained down upon him; which implies their coming from Heaven, or from God. The fury of his wrath; some dreadful and destructive judgment. Shall rain it upon him. This phrase notes both the author of his plagues, God, and the nature and quality of them, that they shall come upon him like rain, i. e. with great vehemency, and so as he cannot prevent or avoid it. While he is eating; as it fell upon thy sons, chap. i. 18, 19. Compare Psal. lxxviii. 30, 31.

ⁿ Is. 24. 18.
^{Jer.} 48. 43.
^{Amos} 5. 19.

24 He shall flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of steel shall strike him through.

From the iron weapon, i. e. from the sword or spear; and so shall think himself out of danger. The bow; an arrow shot out of a bow. A distant place and unknown hand shall unexpectedly fall upon him; so that he shall only go from one danger to another. Of steel; which is of great strength, and therefore sendeth forth the arrow with greater force. Compare Psal. xviii. 34. Or, of brass, as the word properly signifies; which the ancients did so temper and harden, that their bows were commonly made of it. Shall strike him through, i. e. mortally wound him.

25 It is drawn, and cometh out of the body; yea, the glittering sword cometh out of his gall: terrors are upon him.

It is drawn; either, 1. A sword, which may be understood out of this Hebrew verb, which is for the most part used of that weapon, as Numb. xxii. 23, 31; Judg. viii. 20, &c., and out of the following branch of the verse. Or, 2. The arrow last mentioned, which had entered into his body, and now was drawn out of it either by himself, or by some other person, as is frequent in that case, if peradventure he might be cured. Out of the body; or, out of his body, i. e. the body of the wounded man; as appears both by the next clause of the verse, which is added to explain the former; where it is out of his gall; and from the use of this Hebrew word, which signifies a man's body or carcass, as Judg. xiv. 8; 1 Sam. xxxi. 12; Isa. v. 25; Nah. iii. 3. The glittering sword: the word properly signifies lightning, and thence a glittering weapon, the bright sword or spear, as Deut. xxxii. 41; Ezek. xxi. 10, 15; Nah. iii. 3; Hab. iii. 11; whereby it is implied that he was doubly wounded; first, by the arrow, and then, to make more sure work, with the sword or spear thrust into him. But the word may as well signify the bright and sharp point of an arrow, of which he spoke hitherto; and having in the general said that it came out of his body, now he determines the part of the body, the gall; which sheweth that the wound was both deep and deadly, as they are in that part. It is probable he mentions this in reference to the like expression of Job, chap. xvi. 13. Cometh out of his gall; into which it had entered, and wherewith it was coloured. Terrors are upon him, to wit, the terrors of death, because he perceived by the tincture of his gall upon the weapon that his wound was incurable; or horrors of conscience, because he cannot live, and dare not die.

26 All darkness shall be hid in his secret places: a fire not blown shall consume him; it shall go ill with him that is left in his tabernacle.

All darkness, i. e. all sorts of miseries, both of soul, and body, and estate. Shall be hid, or, is hid, or laid up, to wit, by God for him. This phrase may note, that though it be not actually upon him, yet it is reserved and treasured up for him, and is kept as in a sure place, and shall infallibly overtake him. In his secret places; either, 1. In his hid treasures, as this very word signifies, Psal. xvii. 14. He treasures up wealth, and with God's wrath and curse. Or, 2. In those places where he confidently hopes to hide and secure himself from all evils and enemies; yet even there God shall find him out. Or, for, or instead of, (or with, for both ways the prefix tamed is oft used,) his hid treasures. A fire not blown, to wit, by man, but kindled by God himself, as that was, chap. i. 16. It thinks by his might and violence to secure himself from men, but God by his own immediate hand, or in some unknown and unexpected manner, will find him out. Some understand it of hell-fire; of which see Isa. xxx. 33. With him that is left in his tabernacle, i. e. with his posterity or family, who shall inherit his curse as well as his estate.

27 The heaven shall reveal his iniquity; and the earth shall rise up against him.

The heaven shall reveal his iniquity, i. e. God shall be a swift witness against him by some extraordinary judgments: still he reflects upon Job's case, and the fire from heaven, chap. i. The earth, i. e. all creatures upon earth, shall conspire with God to destroy him.

28 The increase of his house shall depart, and his goods shall flow away in the day of his wrath.

The increase of his house; either, 1. His posterity; or rather, 2. His estate, got by the labour, and employed for the use, of his family. Shall depart; shall be lost or taken away from him. See 2 Kings xx. 17. His goods shall flow away like waters, to wit, swiftly and strongly, and so as to return no more. The day of his wrath, i. e. of God's wrath, when God shall come to execute judgment upon him.

29 This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed unto him by God.

From God; who like a wise master of a feast gives to every man his proper portion, and as a just judge distributes to him according to his deserts. The heritage appointed unto him by God, Heb. the heritage (i. e. the portion, as before; called here a heritage; partly to note the stability and assurance of it, that it is as firm as an inheritance to the right heir; and partly in opposition to that inheritance which he had gotten by fraud and violence) of his word; either, 1. Of God's word, i. e. which is allotted to him by the word or sentence of God. Or, 2. Of the wicked man's word, the reward of his speeches; which, like his actions, are and may well be presumed to be wicked and blasphemous, and many ways offensive to God: and he instanceth in his speeches rather than his actions, to meet with Job, who, though he had made some colourable excuses for his actions, yet was manifestly guilty of hard and sinful speeches against God, which he would hereby intimate that they were not such harmless and excusable things as Job pretended, as appeared by these severe judgments which they brought upon wicked men.

CHAP. XXI.

Job's reply: he complaineth not to man, in whose judgment he hath most reason to grieve; but exciteth their attention to convincing and amazing truths, 1-6. The wicked prosper till in their pride they fear not God, 7-15. Yet he purgeth himself from their counsel, and acknowledgeth that often their destruction from God is manifest, at least in their children, 16—21. God is righteous in both cases, and both are alike in their death, 22—26. The wicked are indeed reserved for destruction, but who dareth now withstand them? and in the grave they are at rest, whither all others follow them, 27—34.

BUT Job answered and said,
2 Hear diligently my speech, and let this be your consolations.

Or, this shall be your consolations, i. e. I shall accept of your patient and diligent attention to me, instead of all those consolations which you owed to me in this condition, and which I expected from you.

3 Suffer me that I may speak; and after that I have spoken, *mock on.

Suffer me that I may speak without such interruption as you have given me, chap. xx. 2; and if I do not defend my cause with solid and convincing arguments, go on in your scoffs if you please.

4 As for me, is my complaint to man? and if it were so, why should not my spirit be †troubled?

To man; or, of man; for the prefix lamed commonly signifieth both to and of. And this question implies a denial, or that his complaint is not to or of man, to wit, only, but to or of God; as is here sufficiently implied, and oft elsewhere expressed by Job in this book. So the sense seems to be either, 1. This, I do not make my moan or complaint unto, or expect relief from, you, or from any men, but from God only; and therefore you have reason patiently to hear me when I am pouring forth my complaints to God. Or rather, 2. This, Do I only complain, or have I reason to complain, only of you and your unmerciful carriage to me; or of men who have dealt barbarously with me? chap. i.; xxx. 1, 9, &c. Surely no; but my complaint is of God, and of his hard and severe dealing with me. It is he who hath alienated my friends' affections from me, and stirred up mine enemies against me. And though it hath been my chief care and business to please and serve him, yet he hath also set himself against me, and shot all his arrows into me. And therefore my expostulation with him (which here follows, ver. 7) is the more reasonable; and if you will hear me calmly and patiently, you will find that I have cause of complaining. If it were so, i. e. if my complaint were only of man, I have cause to be troubled. Or, if it be so, i. e. if I do not complain of man, but of God, it is no wonder if my spirit be greatly oppressed; and you ought to allow me the liberty of easing my troubled mind, and modestly pleading my cause before God. Be troubled, Heb. be shortened, or straitened, i. e. either grieved or vexed, as this word signifies, Exod. vi. 9; Numb. xxi. 4; Judg. x. 16; xvi. 16. The heart is enlarged by joy, and contracted by sorrow; as appears by philosophy and experience.

5 †Mark me, and be astonished, †and lay your hand upon your mouth.

Consider what I am about to say concerning the wonderful prosperity of the worst of men, and the intolerable pressures of some good men, such as I have manifested and shall prove that I am, and it is able to fill you that are but spectators with astonishment and horror at the strange and mysterious course of Divine Providence herein; and therefore it is no wonder if I, who suffer such things from that God whom I have so faithfully served, am overwhelmed with the sense of it. Lay your hand upon your mouth, i. e. be silent, as this phrase is oft used, as chap. xl. 4; Prov. x. 32; Micah vii. 16; for shame forbear to vex me with your words: or, you will lay, &c.; the imperative being put for the future, as is usual. I am persuaded you will be silenced and convinced by what I shall say.

6 Even when I remember I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my flesh.

When I remember what I have partly observed and partly felt of these things. The very remembrance of what is past fills me with dread and horror.

7 †Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power?

He expostulates this matter partly with his friends, if things be as you say, how comes this to pass, &c.? partly with God himself, Wherefore doth the righteous God distribute things so unequally? The wicked live, to wit, long and happily; as living is oft taken, as Lev. xviii. 5; 1 Sam. x. 24; xxv. 6; Psal. xxxviii. 19; a painful and afflicted life being a kind of death, and oft so called, as Deut. xxx. 15, 19; Prov. xv. 10; xix. 16; 1 Cor. iii. 22; xv. 31. Become old, to wit, in their prosperous estate.

8 Their seed is established in their sight with them, and their offspring before their eyes.

Their seed; either, 1. The fruits of their ground; or rather, 2. Their children; as it is explained in the next branch of the verse, the words both here and there used being commonly so understood. Their seed is established, i. e. they multiply and prosper greatly. In their sight; which is a great addition to their happiness.

9 Their houses †are safe from fear, †neither is the rod of God upon them.

They neither fear nor feel any disturbance.

10 Their bull gendereth, and faileth not; their cow calveth, and †casteth not †her calf.

11 They send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance.

Like a flock of sheep or goats, as the word signifies; in great numbers, and with sweet concord; which is a singular delight to them and to their parents.

12 They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ.

13 They †spend their days †in wealth, †and in a moment go down to the grave.

In wealth; in good, i. e. in the enjoyment of all the good things of this life, without any mixture of evil. They do not die of a lingering and tormenting disease, as I now and many other good men die, but suddenly and sweetly, like lambs; as is usually said in such cases.

14 †Therefore they say unto God, De- part from us; for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways.

Therefore; because of their constant prosperity. Heb. and, or yet. Though God be so gracious to them, yet they say and do thus to him. They say; sometimes in words, but commonly in their thoughts and affections, and the language of their lives: see Psal. xiv. 1; xxxvi. 1, 2; Mal. iii. 14, 15; Tit. i. 16. We desire not the knowledge of thy laws, much less the practice.

15 †What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and †what profit should we have, if we pray unto him?

What excellency is there in him? and what advantage have we or can we expect from him?

16 Lo, their good is not in their hand: †the counsel of the wicked is far from me.

Their good is not in their hand: this seems to be an answer to the foregoing question, and a confutation of that ungodly opinion and practice, ver. 14, 15. Wicked men (saith he) have no reason to neglect and reject God because of their prosperity, for their good, i. e. all their wealth and felicity, is not in their hand, i. e. it neither was obtained nor can be kept by their own might, but only by God's power and favour, upon whom they wholly depend for it. Or the sense is, Though they have riches, and power, and glory in their hands, yet their true and proper good is not in their hand, i. e. they are destitute of that in which their true happiness lies, to wit, in God's love and favour; and all the comforts which they enjoy are attended with God's wrath and curse, and therefore not to be envied by any man in his wits. They say to God, Depart from us, when indeed their true and only felicity consists in the enjoyment of him: compare Psal. iv. 6, 7. The counsel of the wicked is far from me; therefore I am far from approving their opinion, or following their course, or enjoying their prosperity, or desiring to partake of their delicacies upon such terms.

17 ¹How oft is the || candle of the wicked put out? and how oft cometh their destruction upon them? God ^mdistributeth sorrows in his anger.

How oft! this phrase notes either, 1. The rarity and seldomness of it. This I confess, sometimes happens, but not oft. Or rather, 2. The frequency of it. I grant that this happens oft, though not constantly, as you affirm. And this seems best to agree both with the use of this phrase in Scripture, where it notes frequency, as Psal. lxxviii. 40; Matt. xviii. 21; Luke xiii. 34, and never seldomness; and with the foregoing words, as a reason why the counsel of the wicked was far from him, because they oftentimes pay dear for it in this life, and always in the next life; and with the following verses, wherein he discourseth largely, not of the prosperity of the wicked, (as he should have done, if the sense of these words were this, that such were but seldom afflicted,) but of their calamities. The candle, or lamp, i. e. their glory and outward happiness; as chap. xviii. 6; 2 Sam. xxi. 17; Psal. cxxxii. 17. God distributeth: God is manifestly understood out of the following words, this being God's work, and proceeding from God's anger.

18 ⁿThey are as stubble before the wind, and as chaff that the storm [†] carrieth away.

1. e. Their destruction shall be speedy, and certain, and irrecoverable.

19 God layeth up || his iniquity ^o for his children: he rewardeth him, and he shall know it.

God layeth up, to wit, in his treasures, Rom. ii. 5. His iniquity, or rather, the punishment of his iniquity, i. e. he will punish him both in his person and in his posterity. He shall know it, i. e. he shall live to see the destruction of his children.

20 His eyes shall see his destruction, and ^phe shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

His eyes shall see his destruction, i. e. he shall be destroyed; as to see death, is to die, Psal. lxxxix. 48; Heb. xi. 5; and to see affliction, or any kind of evil, is to feel it, Psal. xc. 15; Lam. iii. 1; and to see good, is to enjoy it, chap. vii. 7; ix. 25; Psal. xxxiv. 12. Or this phrase may be emphatical, he shall foresee his ruin hastening towards him, and not be able to prevent or avoid it; he shall sensibly feel himself sinking and perishing; which aggravates his misery. He shall drink; not sip or taste, but drink; which word commonly notes the abundance of the thing spoken of.

21 For what pleasure hath he in his house after him, when the number of his months is cut off in the midst?

What pleasure hath he in his house after him? or, for what desire, or care, or study hath he for or concerning (as both is oft used) his house, i. e. his children? When he is dead and gone, he cares not what becomes of his children, as irreligion commonly makes men unnatural; he is not concerned nor affected with their felicity or misery. See chap. xiv. 21. And therefore God doth punish both him and his children whilst he lives, ver. 19, 20. Or thus, What delight can he take in the thoughts of the glory and happiness of his posterity, when he finds that he is dying a violent and untimely death? So this is a further proof that this man is neither happy in himself, nor with reference to his posterity. When the number of his months is cut off in the midst; when that number of months, which by his constitution and the course of nature he might have lived, is diminished and cut off by the hand of violence.

22 ^qShall any teach God knowledge? seeing he judgeth those that are high.

Knowledge, i. e. discretion, or how to govern the world. For so you do, whilst you tell him that he must not sorely afflict the godly, nor give the wicked much and long prosperity here. He judgeth those that are high; either, 1. The highest persons, whether in earth, as the greatest kings; or in heaven, as the angels: he judgeth them, i. e. he exactly knows them, and accordingly gives sentence concerning them, as he sees fit; and therefore it is great folly and presumption in us to direct or correct his judgments. Or, 2. Those things that are high, and deep, and far out of our reach, as God's secret counsels and judgments are.

23 One dieth [†] in his full strength, being wholly at ease and quiet.

One, to wit, either, 1. One of these wicked men, of whose condition he is here speaking. Or, 2. Any one man, whether good or bad. In his full strength; in a state of perfect health, and strength, and prosperity; all which this phrase implies.

24 His || breasts are full of milk, and [†] his bones are moistened with marrow.

His breasts: the Hebrew word is not elsewhere used, and therefore it is diversely translated; either, 1. Breasts. But that seems very improper here, because men's breasts do not use to be filled with milk. Or, 2. Milk-pails. But their fulness is common, and no sign of eminent plenty, which is here designed. Besides, the following branch, which in Job and elsewhere frequently explains the former, implies that it signifies some part of man's body, as all the ancient interpreters render it; either the sides, as some of them have it; or the bowels, as others. But for the following milk they read fat; the Hebrew letters being exactly the same in both words; and the Hebrews by the name of milk do oft understand fat. His bones are moistened with marrow; which is opposed to the dryness of the bones, Job xxx. 30; Psal. cii. 3, which is caused by old age, or grievous distempers or calamities.

25 And another dieth in the bitterness of his soul, and never eateth with pleasure.

Another; either, 1. Another wicked man. Or, 2. Any other man promiscuously considered, either good or bad. So hereby he shows how indifferently and alike God deals the concerns of this life to one and another, to good and bad. So he shows that there is a great variety in God's dispensations; that he distributes great prosperity to one, and great afflictions to another no worse than he, according to his wise but secret counsel. In the bitterness of his soul, i. e. with heart-breaking pains and sorrows. Never eateth with pleasure, i. e. hath no pleasure in his life, no, not so much as at meal-time, when men usually are most free and pleasant.

26 They shall ^rlie down alike in the dust, and the worms shall cover them.

All these worldly differences are ended by death, and they lie in the grave without any distinction, till the time of general resurrection and judgment comes. So that no man can tell who is good, and who is bad, by any events which befall them in this life.

27 Behold, I know your thoughts, and the devices which ye wrongfully imagine against me.

I know your thoughts; I perceive what you think, and will object, and say for your own defence. The devices, or, evil thoughts; for so this word is oft used, as Prov. xii. 2; xiv. 17; xxiv. 8; Isa. xxxii. 7. Wrongfully imagine, or wrest, or violently force. For they strained both Job's words, and their own thoughts, which were biased by their prejudice and passion against Job. Against me; for I know very well that your discourses, though they be of wicked men in the general, yet are particularly levelled at me.

28 For ye say, ^sWhere is the house of the prince? and where [†]are the dwelling places of the wicked?

Ye say, to wit, in your minds. Where is the house of the prince? i. e. it is no where, it is lost and gone. This is spoken either, 1. Of Job, or his eldest son, whose house God had lately overthrown. Or rather, 2. In general of wicked princes or potentates, as the following answer sheweth. So the meaning of the question is, that it was apparent from common observation, that eminent judgments, even in this life, were sooner or later the portion of all ungodly men. Where are the dwelling-places of the wicked? which is added to limit the former expression, and to show that he spoke only of wicked princes.

29 Have ye not asked them that go by the way? and do ye not know their tokens,

These are the words, either, 1. Of Job's friends, who thus continue their former discourse by a second inquiry; or rather, 2. Of Job himself, who answers one question with another. You may learn this, which is the matter of our debate, to wit, that good men are oft afflicted, and that wicked men do commonly live and die in great prosperity, and are not punished in this world, even from them that go by the way, i. e. either from travellers, who having seen and observed many persons, and places, and events, are more capable judges of this matter; or from any person that passeth along the high-way, from every one that you meet with. It is so vulgar and trivial a thing, that no man of common sense is ignorant of it. Their tokens, i. e. the examples, or evidences, or signs of this truth, which they that go by the way can produce. They will show here and there in divers places the goodly houses, and castles, and other monuments of power and dignity which wicked potentates have erected, and to this day do possess, and in which divers of them live and die. He alludes here to those tokens which are set up in high-ways for the direction of those who travel in them.

30 That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction? they shall be brought forth to † the day of wrath.

That the wicked, &c.: this is the thing which they might learn of passengers. Reserved; or, withheld, or kept back, to wit, from falling into common calamities, though in truth he be not so much kept from evil as kept for evil; he is reserved from a less, that he may be swallowed up in a greater misery; as Pharaoh was kept from the other plagues, that he might be drowned in the sea. They shall be brought: he speaketh of the same person; only the singular number is changed into the plural, possibly to intimate, that although for the present only some wicked men were punished, yet then all of them should suffer. Shall be brought forth, to wit, by the conduct of God's providence and justice, as malefactors are brought forth from prison to judgment and execution, though they be brought to it slowly, and by degrees, and with some kind of pomp and state, as this word signifies. To the day of wrath; Heb. to the day of wrath, i. e. of special and extraordinary wrath; either to some terrible and desolating judgments, which God sometimes sends upon wicked princes or people; or to the day of the last and general judgment, which is called in Scripture the day of wrath; for the day of the general resurrection and judgment was not unknown to Job and his friends, as appears from chap. xix. 25, &c., and other passages of this book.

u Cal. 2. 11. 31 Who shall declare his way to his face? and who shall repay him what he hath done?

His way, i. e. his wicked course and actions, and whither they lead him. His power and splendour is so great, that scarce any man dare reprove him for his sin, or show him his danger. To his face, i. e. plainly, and whilst he lives, as the same phrase is used, Deut. vii. 10. Who shall repay him what he hath done? no man can bring him to an account or punishment.

+ Heb. graves.

32 Yet shall he be brought to the † grave, and shall † remain in the tomb.

Yet, Heb. and. The pomp of his death shall be suitable to the glory of his life. Shall he be brought, with pomp and state, as the word signifies. To the grave, Heb. to the graves, i. e. to an honourable and eminent grave; the plural number being oft used emphatically to note eminency, as Job xl. 10; Prov. i. 20; Lam. iii. 22. He shall not die a violent, but a natural death, and shall lie in the bed of honour. Shall remain in the tomb, Heb. shall watch (i. e. have a constant and fixed abode, as watchmen have in the watching-place) in the heap, i. e. in his grave, which is called a heap, either because the earth is there heaped up, or because it was adorned with some pyramid or other monument raised up to his honour. His body shall quietly rest in his grave or monument, where he shall be embalmed and preserved so entire and uncorrupted, that he might rather seem to be a living watchman, set there to guard the body, than to be a dead corpse.

33 The clods of the valley shall be sweet unto him, and every man shall † draw after him, as there are innumerable before him.

Of the valley, i. e. of the grave, which is low and deep like a valley. Shall be sweet unto him; he shall sweetly rest in his grave, free from all cares, and fears, and troubles, chap. iii. 17, 18. Every man shall draw after him, Heb. he shall draw every man after him, to wit, into the grave; i. e. all that live after him, whether good or bad, shall follow him into the grave, i. e. shall die as he did. So he fares no worse herein than all mankind. He is figuratively said to draw them, because they come after him, as if they were drawn by his example.

34 How then comfort ye me in vain, seeing in your answers there remaineth † falsehood?

+ Heb. transgression.

Why then do you seek to comfort me with vain hopes of recovering my prosperity if I repent, seeing your grounds are manifestly false, and common experience showeth that good men are very oft in great tribulation, while the vilest of men thrive and prosper in the world?

CHAP. XXII.

Eliphaz's answer: man's righteousness profiteth not God; nor can God fear man, 1—4. He chargeth Job's misery on his sins, 5—11; which God beheld, and knew, nor could they be hid from him, 12—14. The wicked, and their misery, 15—17. If they prospered, he would not hold with them; but their destruction the righteous should laugh at, 18—20. He exhorteth Job to know God and his law, and return to him: he should grow rich: God shall be his defence, his joy and confidence, 21—26. If he would pray, God would hear; and his desire and purpose should stand, 27—30.

THEN Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said,

a ch. 35. 7.
Ps. 16. 2.
|| Luke 17. 10.
|| Or, if he may be profitable, doth his good success depend thereon?

2 Can a man be profitable unto God, || as he that is wise may be profitable unto himself?

Be profitable unto God, i. e. add any thing to his perfection or felicity, to wit, by his righteousness, as the next verse shows. Why then dost thou insist so much upon thy own righteousness, as if thou didst oblige God by it, or as if he could not without injury afflict thee? who supposeth thyself to be a righteous person, though indeed thou art not so, as he saith, ver. 5, 6, &c.; but if thou wert really so, God is not thy debtor for it. As; or, because; or, but; or, yea rather: so this latter clause is to be read without an interrogation, and the former with it. He that is wise may be profitable to himself: a wise or good man (for these in Scripture use are one and the same) doth much good to himself; he promotes his own peace, and honour, and happiness by his goodness; and having so great a reward for his virtue, God is not indebted to him, but he is indebted to God for it.

3 Is it any pleasure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous? or is it gain to him, that thou makest thy ways perfect?

Any pleasure, i. e. such a pleasure as he needs for his own ease and contentment, without which he could not be happy, as appears by the foregoing and following words; for otherwise God is oft said to delight in the good actions of his people, to wit, so far as to approve and accept them. That thou makest thy ways perfect; that thy life is free from blemish, as thou pretendest, but falsely, as I shall show.

4 Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? will he enter with thee into judgment?

Will, or doth, or would he reprove thee, i. e. punish thee? For this word is frequently used of real rebukes or chastisements, as hath been oft noted. For fear of thee; because he is afraid, lest if he should let thee alone, thou wouldst grow too great and powerful for him, as princes oftimes crush those subjects of whom they are afraid. Surely no. As thy righteousness cannot profit him, so thy wickedness can do him no hurt. Or, for thy piety or religion, which is commonly called by the name of fear. Doth he punish thee because thou fearest and servest him, as thou dost insinuate? No surely, but for thy sins, as it follows. Will he enter with thee into judgment, and condemn thee? to wit, for the reason last mentioned, as appears from the Hebrew text, where the words lie thus, Will he for fear of thee reprove thee, or enter with thee into judgment?

5 Is not thy wickedness great? and thine iniquities infinite?

Thy great sins are the true and only causes of thy misery. The words may very well be rendered thus, Is not thy evil (i. e. thy punishment or affliction, which is frequently expressed by this very word) great, because (the particle and being oft used causally, as it is Gen. xviii. 13; xxii. 12; xxiv. 56; Isa. xxxix. 1; lxiv. 5) thine iniquities are infinite? Are not thy calamities procured by and proportionable to thy sins? Thy own conscience tells thee they are so. And therefore thou hast no reason to accuse God, nor any person but thyself.

6 For thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and stripped the naked of their clothing.

For thou hast taken, or, surely thou hast taken. He speaks thus by way of conjecture, or strong presumption. When I consider thy grievous and unusual calamities, I justly conclude thou art guilty of all or some of these following crimes; and do thou search thine own conscience, whether it be not so with thee. From thy brother, i. e. either of thy neighbour, or of thy kinsman; which are both called by the name of brother. This is added to aggravate the offence. For nought, i. e. without sufficient and justifiable cause; which he might do many ways; either by taking what he ought not to take, Deut. xxiv. 6; or from whom he ought not, to wit, the poor, to whom he should give, Prov. iii. 27; or when and in such manner as he ought not, of which see on Deut. xxiv. 10, 11; or by keeping it longer than he should, as when the poor man's necessity requires it, or when the debt is satisfied, Ezek. xviii. 16. Stripped the naked of their clothing; either by taking their garment for a pledge, against the law, Exod. xxii. 26; or otherwise by robbing them of their rights, all other injuries being synecdochically comprehended under this. Quest. How could he strip the naked? Ans. He calls them naked, either, 1. Because they had but very few and mean clothes, such being oft called naked, as Deut. xxviii. 48; 1 Cor. iv. 11; James ii. 15. Or, 2. From the effect, because though he did not find them naked, yet he made them so. The like phrases we have Isa. xlvii. 2, grind meal, i. e. by grinding corn make it meal; Amos viii. 5, falsifying the deceitful balances, i. e. by falsifying making true balances deceitful. And so here, to strip the naked, is by stripping them to make them naked.

7 Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withheld bread from the hungry.

Surely thou hast been so hard-hearted as to deny a cup of cold water to those that needed and desired it. Water was oftimes scarce and precious in those hot countries, and was appropriated to particular persons, without whose leave other persons might not take it. To the weary, i. e. to him who by reason of hard labour or travel is weary and thirsty. So this word is used Prov. xxv. 25. From the hungry, to whom it was due by God's law, Prov. iii. 27, which also was known to Job by the light of nature. Hereby he intimates the greatness of this sin of uncharitableness, by ranking it with heinous crimes; whereas Job (as he thought) esteemed it but a small fault, if any.

8 But as for the mighty man, he had the earth; and the honourable man dwelt in it.

Heb. And, or but, the man of arm, or strength, or power, to him was the earth, or the land, i. e. he had the firm possession or free enjoyment of it; which is meant either, 1.

Of Job, of whom he speaks invidiously in the third person. The mighty man Job possessed, and enlarged, and enjoyed his estate without any compassion to the poor. Or rather, 2. Of other rich and potent men, who had the earth or land, either, 1. By Job's judicial sentence, which was generally given in favour of the rich, and against the poor; or, 2. By Job's kindness and courtesy. The rich were always welcome to him, his house was open to them, his land was before them, when the poor were driven away from his house and territories. The honourable man dwelt in it; either by thy sentence or permission he had a peaceable and sure possession of it. He repeateth the same thing in other words.

9 Thou hast sent widows away empty, and the arms of the fatherless have been broken.

Widows, whose helpless estate called for thy pity, Exod. xxii. 22; Deut. xxiv. 17, 19. Away empty; either by denying them that relief which their poverty required, or that right which their cause deserved; or by spoiling them of their goods, because thou knewest them to be unable to oppose thee, or to right themselves. The arms, i. e. all their supports, and comforts, and rights. A heinous sin, but falsely charged upon Job.

10 Therefore snares are round about thee, and sudden fear troubleth thee;

For these and the like crimes. The cause of thy ruin is not secret from God's sovereign power, and unsearchable judgments, (as thou pretendest,) but plain and manifest, even thy own crying sins. Snares are round about thee; thou art encompassed with dangers and calamities. Sudden fear: beside thy present miseries, thou art tormented with the dread and expectation of further and sorer judgments.

11 Or darkness, that thou canst not see; and abundance of waters cover thee.

Darkness; either, 1. A darkness and confusion of mind so great that thou canst not discern the true cause and use of all thy sufferings. Or, 2. Grievous calamities, which are oft called darkness, which are such that thou canst see no way nor possibility of escaping. Either thou art troubled with fear of further evils, as it is said, ver. 10, or with the gross darkness of thy present state of misery. Abundance of waters, i. e. plenty and variety of sore afflictions, which are frequently compared to waters, as Psal. xviii. 16; lxvi. 12; Isa. xliii. 2.

12 Is not God in the height of heaven? and behold the height of the stars, how high they are!

Is not God in the height of heaven? Surely he is; and from that high tower he looketh down upon men, Psal. xiv. 2, to behold, and govern, and recompense all their actions, whether good or bad. And therefore, O Job, thou art grossly mistaken, in thinking that all things in this lower world are managed by chance, and without any regard to justice, or to just men, and not by the wise and holy providence of God; for this is the genuine consequence of thy great principle, that good men suffer as deeply as any others, whilst the vilest of men are exalted and flourish. Behold the height of the stars, how high they are; yet God is far higher than they, and from thence can easily spy all men and things here below; as the highest places afford the best prospects.

13 And thou sayest, How doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud?

And, or, therefore; from this true and certain principle thou drawest this false and wicked conclusion. Or, yet, notwithstanding this undeniable argument. Thou sayest; thou reasonest thus within thyself, as it may seem by thy discourses. How doth God know? i. e. God cannot discern, and therefore doth not mind things so far below him and distant from him. Can he judge through the dark cloud, i. e. through those immense and innumerable clouds which lie between the heaven and the earth, although our eyes see but few of them?

14 Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he seeth not; and he walketh in the circuit of heaven.

His conversation and business and delight is in the higher and heavenly world, which is worthy of his care, but he will not disparage nor burden himself with the care of this contemptible spot of earth; which was the opinion of many heathen philosophers, and, as they fancied, was Job's opinion also.

15 Hast thou marked the old way which wicked men have trodden?

Heb. the way of antiquity, i. e. of men living in ancient times, or former ages. By this way is here meant, either, 1. Their course or common practice; or, 2. Their end or success; as the way is taken, 1 Sam. ix. 6, 8; and as death, which is, and is called, the end of all men, Eccles. vii. 2, is also called the way of all the earth, Josh. xxiii. 14; 1 Kings ii. 2.

16 Which were cut down out of time, † whose foundation was overflowed with a flood:

a flood was poured upon their foundation. Gen. 7. 11. 2 Pet. 2. 5. Out of time, i. e. before their time; who died a violent and untimely death. Whose foundation was overflowed with a flood; who, together with their foundation, to wit, the earth, and all their supports and enjoyments in it, were destroyed by the general deluge; which doubtless was very well known to them, because they lived not long after it; and which was most proper for this argument. Or, whose foundation, i. e. all their power, and riches, and policy, upon which they build all their hopes and happiness, was like a flood poured forth; which made a great show and noise for a time, but speedily vanished and came to nothing.

17 Which said unto God, Depart from us: and what can the Almighty do || for them?

He reports Job's words, chap. xxi. 14, 15, (where they are explained,) but to a contrary purpose. Job alleged them to show that they prospered notwithstanding their professed wickedness, and Eliphaz produceth them to show that they were cut off for it.

18 Yet he filled their houses with good things: but the counsel of the wicked is far from me.

Yet it is true that for a time God did prosper them, as he did thee; which also was the aggravation of their sin, and that which hastened their ruin: but at last, and in due time, God cut them off in a tremendous and exemplary manner; as he will also do thee, if thou dost not repent. But the counsel of the wicked is far from me; he repeats Job's words, chap. xxi. 16, not without reflection and some kind of derision. Thou didst say so, but without sufficient reason, and against thy own principle, that God carries himself indifferently towards good and bad; but I, who have observed God's terrible judgments upon wicked men, have much more reason to abhor their counsels which had so sad an issue.

19 The righteous see it, and are glad: and the innocent laugh them to scorn.

The righteous see it; whom God oft spares in common calamities, and makes them to survive and see the destruction of the wicked; as Noah, Lot, &c. Are glad; not that they insult over or rejoice in the ruin of any men, but because they delight in the vindication of God's honour, and justice, and holiness, which is conjoined with the destruction of his enemies, and which is and ought to be dearer to them than all the interests of men. The innocent laugh them to scorn; they justly deride them, for their vain and yet strong confidences, which are now destroyed; and for their profane contempt of God and of his judgments, which now they feel; and for their deep and crafty counsels, which are now frustrated and turned against themselves.

20 Whereas our substance is not cut down, but the remnant of them the fire consumeth.

Whereas; or, when; or, seeing that; or, because; for this Hebrew particle im is oft used for chi. And so the following words may contain the reason of the joy and laughter of the innocent, mentioned ver. 19, because when wicked men are destroyed, they are preserved; because our substance, i. e. our souls, and bodies, and subsistence, was now cut down. He should have said their substance, i. e. the substance of the righteous; but he changeth the person, and saith, our substance; either as including himself in the number of righteous persons, and thereby intimating that he pleaded the common cause of all such, whilst Job pleaded the cause of the wicked, as is elsewhere observed; or because he would hereby thankfully acknowledge some eminent and particular preservation given to him amongst other righteous men; or because he and his brethren were of the same substance with, and descended from the loins of, them whom God had miraculously preserved, when others round about them were cut off; as God had done for Abraham and his posterity, of which race these are conceived to have been. And a like change both of person and number we find Hos. xii. 4, He found him (i. e. Jacob) in Beth-el, and there he spake with us, i. e. with him, as representing us, and for all our good. The remnant; all that was left undestroyed in the general calamity. Or, their excellency; all their desirable and delectable things. Of them, i. e. of those who are opposed to the righteous, and in whose destruction the righteous rejoiced. The fire, to wit, of God's wrath: some dreadful judgment, either proper fire, possibly that which destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, which such knowing and inquisitive persons could not be ignorant of, as a thing done near their times and places; or some other sore calamity; for such oft come under the name of fire. But this whole verse is and may be otherwise rendered, and that interrogatively. Is not (or rather, was not, the Hebrew prefix he being here understood, after the manner of the language, from ver. 15, where it is expressed) our substance (i. e. almost all our nature and kind) cut off, (almost all destroyed in the flood,) and did not the fire consume a remnant of them, i. e. of mankind, and of ungodly men, in Sodom and Gomorrah?

21 Acquaint now thyself || with him, and be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee.

With him, i. e. with God, as appears both from ver. 23, where he is expressed, and from the nature of the thing, there being no other way to happiness. Renew thy acquaintance and converse with God by prayer, which thou hast restrained, chap. xv. 4, and repentance for all thy sins, and true humiliation under his hand, and hearty compliance with all his commands, and diligent care to serve and enjoy him; and be no longer estranged from God, as thou now art. Be at peace: this is either, 1. A promise, the imperative being put for the future of the indicative mood, and so thou shalt have peace, i. e. prosperity and happiness. Or rather, 2. A counsel or command; If God be an enemy to thee, as thou sayest he is, reconcile thyself to him by true repentance, and earnestly seek his favour and friendship, and do not provoke him further by thy false and wicked speeches of him, or by thy froward carriage to him: and whereas thou art full of unquietness and rage against God, learn to possess thy soul in patience, give over murmuring against him, and get a composed, and quiet, and submissive mind and heart; which is called peace, Judg. vi. 23; xix. 20; Isa. lvii. 21. Thus far is the command or exhortation; now followeth the promise. Thereby, i. e. by following these counsels. Good shall come unto thee; thou shalt be freed from all thy calamities, and enjoy all the happiness which thy heart can desire.

22 Receive, I pray thee, the law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart.

Take the law and rule whereby thou governest thy thoughts, and words, and whole life, not from profane heathens, whose opinion concerning God's providence thou hast embraced, nor from thy own vain imaginations or violent passions, which have led thee into thy present errors and miscarriages, but from God, and from his word, and from his law, which is written in thy own mind, and from the doctrines and instructions of the holy men of God, who are all of our mind in this matter. Lay up his words in thine heart, i. e. do not only hear them with thine ears, but let them sink into thy heart, being received there by hearty 23 ^g If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up, thou shalt put away iniquity far from thy tabernacles.

To the Almighty; or, home to the Almighty; or, so as to reach to the Almighty, and be joined to him. The Hebrew phrase is extraordinary, and emphatical, and implies a thorough and effectual turning not only from sin, (which a hypocrite may do in great part, at least for a time, upon carnal motives, and without any respect or love to God,) but also unto God, so as to love him, and cleave to him, and sincerely devote a man's self to his fear and service. And he expresseth it in this manner, because he thought Job to be a hypocrite, and therefore counselled him to turn to God in another and better manner than he had done, to wit, with all his heart, and not feignedly. Thou shalt be built up; God, who hath pulled thee down in thy estate, and honour, and children, will repair thy ruins, and give thee more children, which is oft called building; as Gen. xvi. 2; Exod. i. 21; Ruth iv. 11; and bless thee with prosperity and happiness, as building signifies, Jer. xlii. 10; xxxi. 4. Thou shalt put away iniquity far from thy tabernacles: this may be either, 1. A condition, upon which God makes the following promises, If (which particle may be repeated out of the former part of the verse) thou shalt put away, &c., i. e. if thou shalt effectually purge thyself and family from all sin, and keep thyself and them, as far as thou canst, from all appearances and occasions of sin, which is the duty of all, and the practice of true penitents; whereby he seems to reflect upon Job, as if he had been faulty and negligent in the government of himself or children, notwithstanding his sacrificing for them, chap. i. Or rather, 2. A promise, because the conditions required had been expressed together, ver. 21, 22, and in the beginning of this verse, after which he comes to the promises, and begins with this, thou shalt be built up, and so proceeds to other promises; and therefore it seems not probable that he should return to the conditions again, and mix the conditions and promises together, which he hath so carefully separated in these verses. And so it is either, 1. A spiritual promise, If thou dost sincerely repent, God will give thee more grace effectually to reform thyself and family, according to that rule, To him that hath shall be given. Or, 2. A temporal promise, Thou shalt put away iniquity, or injury, or perverseness, (i. e. either perverse and injurious men; or God's judgments, or the punishments of thy sins; as iniquity is very oft used,) far from thy tabernacles, i. e. from all thy dwellings, and tents, and possessions; no hand of violence shall come near them, no evil plague shall come upon thy own habitation, or upon the habitations of thy children, as lately it did for thine and their sins.

16.
† Or, on the dust.

24 Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust, and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brooks.

Gold; solid or choice gold, as the word signifies. As dust, i. e. in great abundance. Or, upon the dust, or ground; it shall be so plentiful, and therefore vile, that thou shalt not lock it up in chests and treasuries, but scatter it any where, and let it lie even upon the ground. As the stones of the brook; as plentifully as if the places of gold were but so many pebble stones, which are to be found in and near every brook. Or, for the stones, i. e. instead of them. Or, in the rock, or among the rocks: gold shall be so abundant, that thou mayst lay it any where, even upon or among the rocks.

25 Yea, the Almighty shall be thy defence, and thou shalt have plenty of silver.

God by his special and watchful providence shall protect thee from all dangers and calamities. Heb. thy defences, or munitions. One God shall keep thee as safely as many munitions. Plenty of silver, Heb. silver of strength, i. e. which by God's blessing shall be thy defence, Eccles. vii. 12. Or, silver of heights, i. e. high and heaped up like a mountain.

† Or, gold.
† Heb. silver of strength.

26 For then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty, and shalt lift up thy face unto God.

For;—so this verse contains a reason why he might confidently expect all those former outward blessings, because he should have God's favour, which is the spring and foundation of them. Or, surely, or, yea, moreover; for this particle chi is sometimes used by way of aggravation, or amplification, as Gen. xlv. 26; 1 Sam. xiv. 41; Isa. vii. 9; xxxii. 13. And this suits very well here; yea, God will do greater things than these for thee. Thou shalt have thy delight in the Almighty; thou shalt find delight not only in these outward comforts, but also and especially in God, whose face shall shine upon thee; who shall give thee these things not in anger and wrath, as he doth to wicked men, but as pledges of his love and favour to thee, and of those greater and eternal blessings which he hath in store for thee; and accordingly thou shalt delight thyself in worshipping, enjoying, obeying, and serving God in and with all his mercies. Shalt lift up thy face unto God, i. e. look up to him by meditation and prayer, not as now thou dost, with horror and grief, which is signified by a dejected countenance, 2 Sam. ii. 22; Luke xviii. 13; but with cheerfulness and confidence, as this phrase oft notes, as Luke xxi. 28. See on Job xi. 15.

27 Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him, and he shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy vows.

Hear thee, i. e. answer thy prayers, and not disregard them, and hide himself from thee, as now he doth. Thou shalt pay thy vows, i. e. thou shalt obtain those blessings for which thou didst make vows to God, and therefore, according to thy obligation, shalt pay thy vows to him. The antecedent is here supposed and understood out of the consequent.

28 Thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee: and the light shall shine upon thy ways.

Thy purposes and designs shall not be disappointed, but effected and ratified by God; which is a great satisfaction. In all thy counsels, and courses, and actions, God shall give thee the light of his direction and governance, and of comfort and success; and thou shalt not be in such a dark, and doubtful, and perplexed condition as now thou art.

29 When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, There is lifting up; and thou shalt save the humble person.

When men are cast down, Heb. When they (i. e. they who do this work. It is an indefinite and impersonal speech, which is very common in the Hebrew language) shall cast down or overthrow; either, 1. Proud and wicked men, as may be guessed by the opposition of the humble and innocent, who should be saved, whilst these were destroyed. So the sense is, When there shall come a general calamity, which shall sweep away all the wicked round about them. Or, 2. Thee, or thine; which pronoun is oft understood. So the sense is, When through God's permission thou shalt be brought into some trouble, which God sees fit for thee. Thou shalt say within thyself, with good assurance and confidence. There is lifting up; or, There shall be lifting up, either, 1. For them; if they repent and humble themselves, they shall be preserved or restored. And this thou wilt assure them of from thy own experience. Or, 2. For thee and thine; God will deliver thee, when others are crushed and destroyed. And; or, for; this particle being oft put causally, as hath been formerly noted. So the following words contain a reason why he might confidently say, that there would be such a lifting up for a person so humbled. He, i. e. God, unto whom only salvation belongeth, Psal. iii. 8. Shall save; either, 1. Eternally; or, 2. Temporally, to wit, from the evils here mentioned. The humble person, Heb. him that hath low or cast-down eyes; which phrase may here note, either, 1. Humility and lowliness of mind and disposition, as pride is oft expressed by high or lofty looks, as Psal. xviii. 27; ci. 5; cxxxi. 1; Prov. vi. 17. And so this is a tacit admonition and reproof for Job, whom for his confident justification of himself, and his contemptuous expressions and censures concerning them, they judged to be guilty of intolerable pride of heart.

† Heb. him that hath low eyes.

Or. 2. Lowness of estate or condition, as James i. 10. So it notes him whose eyes and countenance are dejected by reason of his great troubles and miseries; as, on the contrary, prosperity makes persons lift up their eyes and faces.

30 || He shall deliver the island of the innocent: and it is delivered by the pureness of thine hands.

He, i. e. God, as ver. 29, whose prerogative it is to give deliverances. Shall deliver, to wit, upon thy request, as the following clause showeth: God will hear thy prayers even for others, which is a great honour and comfort; and much more for thyself. The island of the innocent; not only thyself, when thou shalt become innocent and pure, but for thy sake he will deliver the whole island (or country, that word being oft used not only for such lands or countries as were separated from Canaan by the sea, as is commonly observed, but also for such as were upon the same continent with it, as appears from Gen. x. 5, &c.; Psal. lxxii. 10; xvii. 1; Isa. xli. 5) in which thou dwellest. Or, the guilty, or him that is not innocent; for the word here rendered island is sometimes used for not, in Scripture, as 1 Sam. iv. 21; Prov. xxxi. 4. So the sense is, God will have so great a respect to thy innocency and purity, that for thy sake he will deliver those that belong to thee, or live with thee, or near thee, though in themselves they be sinful creatures, and ripe for destruction. See Gen. xviii. 32. It is delivered, to wit, the island; or, he, i. e. the guilty person. By the pureness of thine hands, i. e. by thy prayers proceeding from a pure heart and conscience. When thou shalt lift up pure hands to God in prayer, as it is expressed, 1 Tim. ii. 8; whereby as he asserts the prevalency of the righteous man's prayers with God for mercy, both for himself and others; and by this argument he persuadeth Job to repentance; so withal he allegeth this as an argument or evidence that Job did not stretch out pure hands to God in prayer, as he pretended, because his prayers could not prevail for the preservation of himself or his children, and much less for others at a greater distance.

CHAP. XXIII.

Job's reply: his desire to plead with God, 1—5; who should not confound, but strengthen him, 6, 7. He cannot behold God's way; but he walked in the way of his law, 8—12. God in his providences bringeth about what he had decreed: Job's trouble herein, 13—17.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 Even to day is my complaint bitter: ^{+ Heb. my hand.} † my stroke is heavier than my groaning.

i. e. Even at this time, notwithstanding all your promises and pretended consolations, I find no ease or satisfaction in all your discourses; and therefore in this and the following chapters Job seldom applies his discourse to his friends, but only addresseth his speech to God, or bewaileth himself. Is my complaint bitter, i. e. I do bitterly complain, and have just cause to do so. But this clause is and may be otherwise rendered, Even still (Heb. at this day) is my complaint called or accounted by you rebellion or bitterness, or the rage of an exasperated mind? Do you still pass such harsh censures upon me after all my declarations and solemn protestations of my innocency? My stroke, Heb. my hand, passively, i. e. the hand or stroke of God upon me, as the same phrase is used, Psal. lxxvii. 2; and mine arrow, Job xxxiv. 6. Is heavier than my groaning, i. e. doth exceed all my complaints and expressions; so far are you mistaken, that think I complain more than I have cause. Some render the words thus, my hands are heavy (i. e. feeble and hanging down, as the phrase is, Heb. xii. 12. My strength and spirit faileth) because of my groaning.

3 ^{a ch. 13. 3. & 16. 21.} Oh that I knew where I might find him! that I might come even to his seat!

Where I might find him, to wit, God, as his friends well knew, and the thing itself showeth. Thou biddest me acquaint myself with him, chap. xxii. 21. I desire nothing more than his acquaintance and presence; but, alas, he hides his face from me that I cannot see him, nor come near him. To his seat, i. e. to his throne or judgment-seat, to plead my cause before him, as it here follows, ver. 4, not upon terms of strict justice, but upon those terms of grace and mercy upon which God is pleased to deal with his sinful creatures: see before, chap. ix. 34, 35; xvi. 21; xvii. 3. And this my confidence may be some evidence that I am not such a gross hypocrite as you imagine me to be.

4 I would order my cause before him, and fill my mouth with arguments.

I would orderly declare the things which concern and prove the right of my cause; not only debating the controversy between my friends and me, concerning my sincerity or hypocrisy before God, as a witness or judge; but also pleading with God as a party, and modestly inquiring whether he doth not deal more rigorously with me than I might reasonably expect, wherein I desire no other judge but himself. Fill my mouth with arguments, to prove my innocency and sincerity towards God, and consequently that I am severely used.

5 I would know the words which he would answer me, and understand what he would say unto me.

I long to know what he would say, either to prove me a hypocrite, or to justify his harsh proceedings against me; and if he should discover to me any secret and unknown sins, for which he contendeth with me, I should humble myself before him, and accept of the punishment of mine iniquity.

6 ^{b 15. 27. 4. 8. & 27. 16.} Will he plead against me with his great power? No; but he would put strength in me.

Will he oppress me with his sovereign and absolute power, as men do those whom they cannot fairly and justly conquer? He would put strength in me; the word strength, or power, being fitly supplied out of the former branch of the verse, as is very usual in Scripture. He would not use his power against me, but for me; by enabling me to plead my cause, and giving sentence according to that clemency and benignity, which according to his gracious covenant he useth towards his children. Or, he would put or set his heart (this very verb of putting or setting being elsewhere used in this defective manner for putting or setting the heart, as Job vii. 17; Isa. xli. 10, as it is fully expressed, Isa. lvii. 1; Ezek. xl. 4; xlii. 5.) upon (the preposition beth, in, being sometimes used for al, upon, as Neh. ii. 12; Isa. xxi. 13) me, to wit, to hear me and all my reasons meekly, and to judge favourably, and to help and deliver me, as that and the like phrases commonly signify in Scripture use.

7 There the righteous might dispute with him; so should I be delivered for ever from my judge.

There; at that throne of grace, as it is called, Heb. iv. 16, where God lays aside his majesty and power, and judgeth according to his wonted grace and clemency. The righteous; such as I do and dare avow myself to be, to wit, in sincerity, though not in perfection. Might dispute with him; humbly and modestly propounding the grounds of their confidence, and the evidences of their righteousness. So; upon such a fair and equal hearing. From my judge; either, 1. From the severe censures of all corrupt and partial judges, such as you my friends are. Or rather, 2. From the damnatory sentence of God; for he is not only pleading before him, but also with him. He would give sentence for me, and against himself. This and some such expressions of Job cannot be excused from reverence towards God, and do too great a confidence in himself; for which therefore God sharply reproves him hereafter, and Job abhorreth himself.

8 ^{c ch. 9. 11.} Behold, I go forward, but he is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive him:

I go forward, i. e. towards the east, which in Scripture is accounted the forepart of the world, as the Hebrew name of it signifies, because of the light of the sun, which riseth there, and draweth the eye of men towards it. He is not there, to wit, so as I would have him, as a judge to hear and determine my cause, of which he is here speaking; for otherwise he knew and believed that God was essentially present in all places. Backward, i. e. towards the west; so also the north is called the left hand, and the south the right hand, ver. 9, because so they all are to a man who looks towards the east. He names all the several parts of the world, to show his eager desire and restless endeavours to find out God, and to present himself before him.

9 On the left hand, where he doth work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see him :

Where he doth work, to wit, in a special and peculiar manner, more than in other parts of the world; for so indeed God did work in those parts which were northward from Job, because there mankind (among whom God delights to be and to work) were most numerous, and most ingenious to discern God's works. There also was the seat of the Assyrian empire, which was eminent in Job's time, and afterwards of the other successive empires; in and by all which God did many great and glorious works. But this Hebrew word is by others, and that very properly and fitly, rendered when, or whilst, he worketh, to wit, in an eminent manner. So this is added to aggravate Job's unhappiness. We may certainly find any man when and where he is working; but I, saith he, search for God even when and where he is working, and yet cannot find him out. He hideth himself, to wit, from me; he withdraweth his favour, and will not afford me his presence and audience. I cannot see him; either, 1. I cannot discern his counsels and ways, and the reasons of his severe dealings with me. Or rather, 2. He doth not appear to me as a judge, to examine my cause and arguments, but condemns me without hearing me.

† Heb. the way that is with me.
e Ps. 17. 3.
& 66. 10. Jam. 1. 12.

10 But he ^dknoweth † the way that I take : when ^ehe hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold.

But, though I cannot see him, yet my comfort is, that he seeth me and my heart, and all my actions. Or, for, as this particle commonly signifies. So this verse contains a reason why he so vehemently desired that he might plead his cause with or before God. He knoweth the way that I take; he cannot be deceived nor blinded, either by the artifices of bold accusers or advocates, or by his own misapprehensions or passions, but he exactly knows the way that is with me, i. e. the disposition of my heart, and the whole course or manner of my life. When he hath tried me; if he would examine me thoroughly, which above all things I desire. I shall come forth as gold; which cometh out of the furnace pure from all dross. It would appear upon a fair hearing that I am free, though not from all sin, as he had confessed before, yet from that hypocrisy and those gross enormities wherewith my friends charge me.

f Ps. 44. 18.

11 My foot hath held his steps, his way have I kept, and not declined.

My foot hath held, i. e. made a free and fixed choice, and taken fast hold of them; been firmly and strongly settled, and resolved to continue in them, as the word signifies. His steps; either, 1. Actively, the steps or ways in which God himself walks; the paths of holiness, justice, mercy, &c., wherein he walked with or after God, as the phrase is, Gen. v. 24; 2 Kings xxiii. 3, following his example. Or, 2. Passively, the steps or paths which God hath appointed men to walk in, as chap. xxi. 14. His way have I kept, and not declined; the same thing with that in the former part of the verse, in different expressions.

† Heb. I have hid, or, laid up.
g John 4. 32, 34.
h Or, my appointed portion.

12 Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lips; † I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than || my necessary food.

Neither have I gone back, i. e. not turned aside to any crooked or sinful path or course of life, human infirmity excepted. I have esteemed, Heb. I have hid, or laid it up, as men do their best treasures, or what they most love and value. The phrase notes a high estimation of it, a hearty affection to it, and a diligent care to preserve it. My necessary food, or my appointed food, or my daily portion, i. e. that food or provision which is necessary for the support of my life, as this word is used, Gen. xlvii. 22; Prov. xxx. 8; xxxi. 15, which is more prized and desired than all the riches in the world.

h ch. 9. 12.
i3. & 12. 14.
Rom. 9. 19.
i Ps. 115. 3.

13 But he is in one mind, and ^bwho can turn him? and what ^ahis soul desireth, even that he doeth.

He is in one mind, i. e. notwithstanding all these evidences of my sincere piety, and all my prayers to him, he still continues in the same mind and course of afflicting me. Or, but he is, i. e. if he be, against one, or against any man, as that word is oft used, as he now setteth himself against me. Or, but he is one, the Hebrew prefix both being here the note of a nominative case, as it is Job xviii. 8; Psal. lxxviii. 5; Hos. xiii. 9, and elsewhere. So the sense is, But why do I waste words to no purpose? All my former constant integrity, and my present profession of it, gives me no case, he is still one and the same, constant, unchangeable in his purposes and counsels of proceeding against me. Or, he is alone, and there is none besides him who can either restrain, or advise, or move him. Who can turn him? no man can change his counsels or course, or incline him to show favour to me. He is most absolute and free to do what he pleaseth, and he dealth with me accordingly, and not by those milder methods which he useth towards other men. What his soul desireth, even that he doeth; he will not do what I please or desire, but only what pleaseth himself.

14 For he performeth the thing that is ^kappointed for me: and many such ^lthings are with him.

Or, he will perfect or finish my appointed portion, i. e. those calamities which he hath allotted to me for my portion, which as he hath begun to lay on me, so he is resolved to make a full end of them. And many such things are with him; there are many such examples of God's proceeding with men in way of absolute sovereignty and severity, and his counsels and providences, though always just, yet are oft secret, and we cannot discern the reasonableness or equity of them, which is my case.

15 Therefore am I troubled at his presence: when I consider, I am afraid of him.

Therefore; in consideration of his glorious majesty, and sovereign and irresistible power, by which he can do whatsoever pleaseth him, without giving any account of his matters. At his presence; when I present him to my thoughts. Or, when he appears or manifesteth himself to me. Or, for fear or dread of him; or, by reason of him.

16 For God ^mmaketh my heart soft, ⁿand the Almighty troubleth me:

Soft, or tender. He hath bruised, and broken, or melted it, so that I have no spirit, nor courage, nor strength in me, as this or the like phrase is used, Deut. xx. 3; Psal. xxxix. 11; Isa. vii. 4; Jer. li. 46.

17 Because I was not cut off before the darkness, neither hath he covered the darkness from my face.

Because I was not cut off; because God did not cut me off by death. Before the darkness, i. e. before these dark and dismal miseries came upon me. Or, before the face, or by reason of the darkness, i. e. that God hath not yet cut me off by these calamities, but prolonged my days under them, that he might increase my torment. Neither hath he covered the darkness from my face; so that I might no longer see or feel my miseries, but might be taken out of them by my long-desired death. Seeing (and consequently having before one's face) is oft put for experiencing, for enjoying good, or feeling evil, as Job xx. 17; Psal. xvi. 10, &c. Or, but he hath covered darkness, to wit, death, which is so called Job x. 21, 22, and elsewhere, from my face, i. e. he will not allow me the favour to see death.

CHAP. XXIV.

The practice and prosperity of the wicked, 1—16. Their punishment and curse in the end, 17—25.

WHY, seeing ^atimes are not hidden from ^bthe Almighty, do they that know him not see his days?

The sense of the words according to this translation is this, Why, (how comes it to pass,) seeing times (i. e. the several times of every man's life, how long he shall live, or the fittest seasons and opportunities (which are oft called times, as Gen. xxiv. 11; Psal. xxxi. 15, cxix. 126; Acts i. 6, 7) for every action, and particularly for the punishment of wicked men, about which the present controversy was are not hidden from or unknown to the almighty God, (i. e. seeing all times, and men that live, and things that are done, or to be done, in their times and seasons, are exactly known to God,) do they that know him (i. e. who love and obey him, as that word is oft used, as Psal. ix. 10; xxxvi. 10; xci. 14, or they who observe and regard his ways and works done in the world) not see (whence is it that they cannot discern) his (i. e. God's) days, i. e. his times and seasons which he takes for the punishment of ungodly men? which if they were constant and fixed in this life, as you pretend they are, they would not be unknown to good men, to whom God useth to reveal his secrets, and they could not be unobserved by so many good men, who make it their business to mind and study the works of God, and especially the course and methods of his providence towards good and bad men. The times or days of God's executing judgments upon sinners are frequently called the days of the Lord, as Isa. ii. 12; xiii. 6; Jer. xlvi. 10; compare Job xx. 28; Prov. vi. 34; Acts ii. 20; as the time of man's judging is called man's day, 1 Cor. iv. 3. But this verse is in part, and may very agreeably to the Hebrew text be rendered and interpreted thus, Why or how are not times (i. e. the times and seasons appointed for the punishment of evil-doers, about which the dispute was) hidden or reserved by or with God, (i. e. kept as a secret in his own breast, and concealed from the knowledge of mankind. How can you say or think with any colour that these times are fixed and manifest to all men, and that sinners are constantly punished in this life, and that so notoriously that all good men see it, as was said, chap. xxii. 15—19,) seeing (as the particle vau is rendered, chap. xix. 28; or for, as it is frequently used) they that know him (that give themselves to understand and consider his doings in the world, who of all men are most likely to know this, if it were true and certain) do not see his days, to wit, of punishing the wicked in this life? as was said before. And this he mentions as a fit preface to usher in the following discourse concerning the manifold wickedness of men, and withal their present impunity.

2 Some remove the landmarks; they violently take away flocks, and feed thereof.

Some remove the landmarks; or, they (i. e. the wicked, of whom he here treats) touch (to wit, in an unlawful manner, and with evil design, as this word is oft used, as Gen. xxvi. 11, 29; Ruth ii. 9, so as to invade, or possess, or remove) the landmarks, by which men's lands are discerned, and their properties secured; that so they may enlarge their own border by diminishing their neighbour; which is so horrid an act of injustice, that it hath not only been severely forbidden by God, Deut. xix. 14; xxvii. 17; Prov. xxii. 28; xxiii. 10, but also declared execrable by the heathens, among whom it was permitted to any man to kill him that did it. Feed thereof; or, feed them. They do not hide or kill them, but openly feed them, either in their oppressed neighbour's ground, which, by taking away the landmarks, they have made their own, or in their own pastures, without any remorse, or shame, or fear of punishment, either from God or men.

3 They drive away the ass of the fatherless, they take the widow's ox for a pledge.

The ass, either the asses, the singular number being used collectively. Or he saith the ass, to aggravate their sin, that they robbed him who had but one ass. Compare 1 Sam. xii. 2—4. The fatherless; whose helpless condition required their pity and mercy. The widow's ox; thereby depriving her not only of the ox itself, but of all the benefit of its labours, by which she sustained her life. For a pledge; contrary to God's law, first written in men's hearts, and afterwards in Holy Scripture, Exod. xxii. 26, 27; Deut. xxiv. 6, 10, &c.

4 They turn the needy out of the way: the poor of the earth hide themselves together.

Out of the way; either, 1. Out of the way of piety and justice. They engage them to take evil courses by their examples, or promises, or threatenings. Or, 2. Out of their right. Or, 3. Out of their course and way of living. Or rather, (as the word properly signifies, and as the next clause explains it,) out of the high-way; out of the path or place in which these wicked oppressors walk and range. They labour to keep out of their way and sight for fear of their further injuries and oppressions. Hide themselves, for fear of these wicked tyrants and persecutors. Together, for their mutual comfort and defence against those who should invade or disturb them there. Or, alike. Though some of the poor are more nearly related, or have been more serviceable to these oppressors, yet none of them can escape their rage and violence.

5 Behold, as wild asses in the desert, go they forth to their work; rising betimes for a prey: the wilderness yieldeth food for them and for their children.

As wild asses; which are wild, and lawless, and unteachable, and fierce, and greedy of prey, or food, which they snatch out of the goods or labours of the husbandman; in all which they are fit emblems of these men. Or, these wild men; for so this word signifies, Gen. xvi. 12, as elsewhere wild asses. The particle as is not in the Hebrew. In the desert, which is the proper habitation of wild asses, Jer. ii. 24. If this be understood of the wild men, he placeth them in the desert and wilderness, either because they by their spoils and violences have destroyed or driven away the people, as is intimated, ver. 4, and thereby turned populous places into deserts; or because such places as have but few houses and inhabitants (which are oft so called, as Gen. xxi. 20, 21; Josh. xv. 61, 62; 1 Kings ii. 34; ix. 18; Isa. xlii. 11; Matt. iii. 1) are most fit for their robberies. Go they; either, 1. The poor, whom they spoiled and drove away from their own former habitations into deserts, where they hid themselves, and wrought hard for a subsistence. Or rather, 2. The oppressors, who are more fitly compared to wild asses, and more truly said to seek for prey, than those poor oppressed persons mentioned ver. 4, and of whom he speaks both in the foregoing and following verses. To their work, i. e. to spoil and rob, which is their constant work and trade. The wilderness yieldeth food for them; they are so diligent and industrious in that work, that they will fetch food for them and theirs even out of desert places, in which the owners can very hardly subsist. For their children, or servants; for the word signifies both children and servants, even the whole family.

6 They reap every one his corn in the field: and they gather the vintage of the wicked.

They; either, 1. The poor, who are forced to gather in the corn and grapes of their wicked oppressors; or rather, 2. The oppressors, of whom he speaks ver. 4, 5, 7. His corn, i. e. the corn of the wicked, as it is in the next clause. Or, that which is not their own; as the LXX., and Chaldee, and Vulgar Latin translate it, reading the Hebrew as two distinct words: they reap other men's labours. In the field, i. e. in the field of the right owner, from whom they take it. He notes their great power and boldness, that they did not come suddenly, and carry away their corn when it was laid up in the barns, or in heaps; but they proceeded leisurely, and staid to reap the corn, and by degrees carried it away, as it were in triumph, not fearing any interruption or hindrance either from God or man. The vintage of the wicked; of such as themselves: so they promiscuously robbed all, even their own brethren in iniquity; whereby also he may intimate the righteous judgment of God in punishing one wicked man by another, and in depriving men of those goods which they had wickedly gotten. Or, the wicked (the singular number being used collectively for the plural, as is frequent; the oppressors) gather the vintage, to wit, belonging to other men.

whom they stripped of their garments and coverings; so far were they from exercising justice or charity towards them. To lodge; to sleep in the night, which is the coldest season. Without clothing; without bed-clothes to cover them; compare Deut. xxiv. 13. In the cold of the night of the winter season. This verse is and may fitly be rendered thus, They cause men to lodge naked, because they have no clothing, (i. e. because they leave them nothing wherewith they can clothe themselves,) and no covering in the cold; they leave them neither raiment to wear in the day, nor a covering for the night.

8 They are wet with the showers of the f Lam. 4. 5. mountains, and 'embrace the rock for want of a shelter.

They, i. e. the poor, being stripped of their raiment, and forced away from their houses. With the showers of the mountains; with the rain water, which in great showers run down from the rocks or mountains into the caves or holes in the sides of them, to which they fled for shelter. Embrace the rock. i. e. are glad when they can find a cavern or cleft of a rock in which they may have some protection against the injuries of the weather, and a hiding-place from the fury of their oppressors. Compare Lam. iv. 5.

9 They pluck the fatherless from the breast, and take a pledge of the poor.

They; the wicked oppressors, as is manifest from the following words. From the breast; either out of cruelty, not sparing poor infants, but killing them; or out of covetousness, and with design either to sell the mother, or to employ her in their work, to which they so strictly confine her, that they will not allow any of her time or strength for the suckling of her infant. Take a pledge of the poor; of which see the notes on chap. xxii. 6.

10 They cause him to go naked without clothing, and they take away the sheaf from the hungry;

They cause him, the poor oppressed person, to go naked without clothing; leaving him nothing, or next to nothing, to cover him in the day-time, when he should go abroad to his labour to get his living, but cannot for want of clothes to cover his nakedness. The sheaf from the hungry; that single sheaf which the poor man had got with the sweat of his brows to satisfy his hunger, they inhumanly take away, and add it to their own stores and full barns. Or, they are hungry; or they sent them away hungry; those words being repeated out of the former clause of the verse (as is most usual); which took or carried the sheaf, or their sheaves, i. e. which reaped and gathered in the rich man's corn, for which they received injuries instead of a just recompence for their labour; and that when God's liberality, and the bounty of the earth to them, invited and obliged them to kind and generous actions to others.

11 Which make oil within their walls, and tread their winepresses, and suffer thirst.

To wit, the poor man last mentioned. Within their walls; either, 1. Within their own walls, i. e. in private and secret places, for fear of the oppressors. Or rather, 2. Within the walls of the rich oppressors, for their use and benefit; for the poor, alas! had no walls, nor houses, nor oliveyards, nor vineyards left to them, but they were violently spoiled of and driven away from all those things, as was said in the foregoing verses. Their wine-presses, i. e. the grapes in their wine-presses, by a metonymy of the thing containing for the thing contained. Suffer thirst; because they are not permitted to quench their thirst out of the wine which they make, though their labours both need and deserve refreshment.

12 Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out: yet God layeth not folly to them.

Men groan under the burden of injuries and grievous oppressions. From out of the city; not only in deserts or less inhabited places, where these tyrants have the greater opportunity and advantage to practise their villainies; but even in cities, where there is a face of order and government, and courts of justice, and a multitude of people to observe and restrain such actions; whereby they plainly declare that they neither fear God nor reverence man. The soul of the wounded; either, 1. Properly, their soul sympathizing with the body, and being grieved for its insupportable miseries, crieth to God and men for help. Or rather, 2. The life or blood (which oft cometh under that name) of those who are there wounded unto death, as this word properly signifies, Ezek. xxx. 24, crieth aloud unto God for vengeance, Gen. iv. 10; Rev. vi. 9, 10, whereby God might seem in some sort obliged to punish them, and yet he did not, as the next words declare. Yet God layeth not folly to them: so the sense is, yet God doth not impute or lay to their charge this folly or wickedness, which in Scripture is commonly called folly; i. e. he takes no notice of these horrid oppressions, nor hears the cries of the oppressed, nor punishes the oppressors. Or, yet God (who seeth and permitteth all this) disposeth, or ordereth, or doth, (for all these things this Hebrew verb signifies,) nothing which is absurd, or foolish, or unsavoury, i. e. doth nothing in this permission and connivance unworthy of himself, or which a wise and considerate man cannot relish or approve, or which is not in itself righteous and reasonable, though we do not always discern the reasonableness of it.

13 They are of those that rebel against the light; they know not the ways thereof, nor abide in the paths thereof.

This is added as the general character of the persons before mentioned, and as a great aggravation of their wickedness, that they were not modest sinners, which were ashamed of their evil ways, and therefore sinned in the dark, and in secret, as some who here follow; but sinned impudently in the face of the sun, and in spite of all their light, as well the light of reason and conscience, which abhors and condemns their wicked actions, as the light of Divine revelation, which was then in good measure imparted to the church and people of God in this time, and shortly after was committed to writing; all which they set at defiance, sinning with manifest contempt of God, and of men, and of their own consciences. They know not; either, 1. They do not desire or care to know them; they are willingly ignorant of them. Or, 2. They do not approve, nor love, nor choose them; as knowing frequently signifies in the Scripture use. The ways thereof, i. e. of the light, or in such ways and courses as are agreeable to the light. Or, in his ways, i. e. in the ways of God, who is oft understood in this book where he is not expressed. Nor abide in the paths thereof; if they do some good actions, yet they do not persevere in well-doing, they are not constant and fixed in a good course of life.

14 The murderer rising with the light g Ps. 10. 8. killeth the poor and needy, and in the night is as a thief.

With the light; as soon as the light appears, using no less diligence in his wicked practices, than labourers do in their honest and daily employments. Killeth the poor and needy; where he finds nothing to satisfy his covetousness, he exerciseth his cruelty. As a thief, i. e. he is really a thief; the particle as being oft used to express, not the resemblance, but the truth of the thing, as Num. xi. 1; Deut. ix. 10; Hos. iv. 4; v. 10; John i. 14. In the night they rob men secretly and cunningly, as in the day-time they do it more openly and avowedly.

15 The eye also of the adulterer h Prov. 7. 9. waiteth for the twilight, saying, No eye i Ps. 10. 11. shall see me: and † disguiseth his face. † Heb. setteth his face in secret.

The eye of the adulterer, i. e. the adulterer; but he mentions his eye, because the eye discerns the difference between light and darkness. The twilight, to wit, for the evening twilight, which is his opportunity. Saying in his heart, comforting himself with the thoughts of secretness and impunity. Disguiseth his face, Heb. putteth his face in secret; covers it with a vizard or cloak, that he may be undiscovered.

16 In the dark they dig through houses, which they had marked for themselves in the daytime: k they know not the light. k John 3. 20.

They dig; either, 1. The adulterer last mentioned; although such persons do not use nor need these violent courses to get into the house of the adulteress, but are commonly admitted upon milder and easier terms. Or, 2. The thief or robber, whose common practice this is, of whom he spoke ver. 14; and having on that occasion inserted the mention of the adulterer as one who acted his sin in the same manner as the night-thief did, he now returns to him again. Which they had marked for themselves; the thief and his accomplices, designing by some secret mark the house of some rich man which they intended to rob, and the part of the house where they resolved to enter into it. They know not the light, i. e. do not love nor like it, as ver. 13; but abhor it, as it follows.

17 For the morning is to them even as the shadow of death: if one know them, they are in the terrors of the shadow of death.

As the shadow of death, i. e. terrible and hateful, because it both discovers them and hinders their practices. If they are brought to light or discovered, they are overwhelmed with deadly horrors and terrors. Or, as the words are, and may very agreeably to the Hebrew be rendered thus: but (as the Hebrew particle commonly signifies) they know (Heb. he knoweth, every one of them knoweth, i. e. approveth and loveth) the terrors of the shadow of death, i. e. the grossest darkness of the night, which to other men is as terrible as the shadow of death, but to these men is most acceptable: so this clause is fitly opposed to the former; he hates the light, and he likes darkness.

18 He is swift as the waters; their portion is cursed in the earth: he beholdeth not the way of the vineyards.

In these words he describes either, 1. The wicked man's disposition and deportment, that such persons are light and frothy in their spirits, or swift or hasty to do evil, or unstable in their ways as the waters, or upon the face of the waters, i. e. like the foam, or froth, or any other light thing which swims upon the top of the waters. Or rather, 2. His miserable condition, of which he manifestly speaks in the next words, and in the two next verses. For though Job constantly affirms and maintains it against his friends, that many ungodly men do prosper and escape punishment in this life; yet withal he observes and asserts that God will certainly sooner or later punish them, and that he sometimes doth it here, cutting them off by cruel and untimely deaths, or otherwise inflicting some notable judgment upon them; of which he also speaks chap. xxi. 17, &c. So the sense is, He is swift, i. e. he quickly passeth away with all his glory, as the waters, which never stay in one place, but are always hasting and running away; or like a ship, or any other thing which swimmeth upon the face of the waters: though he seems to stand as firm and unmovable as a rock, and to have taken deep rooting in the earth, yet he is suddenly and unexpectedly removed and pulled up by the roots. Their; or, his; for he still speaks of the same person, though with a change of the number, which is most familiar in this book, and elsewhere in Scripture. Portion, or part, i. e. his habitation and estate which he left behind him. Is cursed in the earth; is really accursed by God, and is by all men who live near it, or observe it, pronounced accursed, because of the remarkable judgments of God upon it, and upon his posterity or family to which he left it, and from whom it is strangely and suddenly alienated. He beholdeth not the way of the vineyard, i. e. he shall never more see or enjoy his vineyards, or other pleasant places and things, which seem to be comprehended under this particular.

+ Heb. violently take. 19 Drought and heat † consume the snow waters: so doth the grave those which have sinned.

As the snow, though it doth for a time lie upon the ground, yet at last is dissolved into water by the heat of the season, and that water quickly swallowed up by the earth when it is dry and thirsty; so ungodly sinners, though they live and prosper for a season, yet at last they shall go into the grave, which will consume them, together with all their hopes and comforts; their jolly life is attended with a sad, and ofttimes sudden and violent, death; not with such a death as the godly die, which perfects them and brings them to happiness, but with a consuming and never-dying death.

20 The womb shall forget him; the worm shall feed sweetly on him; ¹ he shall be no more remembered; and wickedness shall be broken as a tree.

His mother that bare him in her womb, and much more the rest of his friends, shall seldom or never remember or mention him, to wit, with honour and comfort, but shall rather be afraid and ashamed to own their relation to one that lived such a vile and wretched life, and died such an accursed death. This he shall have instead of all that honour and renown which he thirsted and laboured for, and expected should perfume his name and memory. This proud and insolent tyrant that preyed upon all his neighbours, ver. 2, 3, &c., shall himself become a prey and a sweet morsel to the contemptible worms. He shall be no more remembered, to wit, with honour, or so as he desired and hoped; but his name shall rot, and scarce ever be mentioned but with infamy and execration. Wickedness, i. e. the wicked man, of whom he is here treating; the abstract being put for the concrete, of which many instances have been formerly given; shall be broken to pieces, or violently broken down, as the word signifies. He shall be utterly and irrecoverably destroyed. And this expression plainly showeth that the former clauses are not to be understood of the sinner's happiness in an easy and comfortable death, but of his cursed and miserable end. As a tree; which being once broken, either by its own weight, or by some violent wind, or by the hand of man, never groweth again.

21 He evil entreateth the barren that beareth not: and doeth not good to the widow.

He; either, 1. God, who is oft understood, who having cut off his person, and brought him to his grave, continues his judgments upon his wife or widow, and family. Or rather, 2. The oppressor, who is the principal subject of almost all that is said in this chapter; whose great and manifold wickedness Job described from ver. 2—18, where he proceeds to relate the judgments of God upon him for his sins; which having done, ver. 18—20, he here returns to the declaration of his further wickednesses, the cause of these judgments. Evil entreateth; or feedeth upon, or devoureth, or breaketh in pieces; for all these the word signifieth, and all come to one and the same thing. The barren that beareth not: barrenness was esteemed a curse and reproach; and so he added affliction to the afflicted, whom he should have pitied and helped; but because such had no children, and the widows no husbands, to defend or avenge their cause, he exercised cruelty upon them. Doeth not good: either, 1. He did her much wrong and harm, it being usual in Scripture under such negative expressions to contain the affirmation of the contrary; as Exod. xx. 7; Prov. xvii. 21; xxviii. 21. And so this branch answers to the former, of evil entreating. Or, 2. He afforded her no help, or advice, or comfort in her distresses; and so he intimateth the greatness of omission sins, and that the common neglect or contempt of plain and positive duties, whether of piety to God, or of charity to men, is to be reckoned among high and heinous crimes.

22 He draweth also the mighty with his power: he riseth up, † and no man is sure of life.

He draweth, either into his net, as Psal. x. 9, or to his party, to assist and serve him in his enterprises. The mighty; who are mighty in place, or wealth, or power; he practiseth upon these as well as upon the poor. With his power; which being greater than theirs, he soon forceth them to comply with his desires and demands. He riseth up, to wit, against any man, as this phrase is used, Psal. xviii. 38; xlv. 5; when he sets himself against a man, and resolves to destroy him. No man is sure of life, i. e. none of them whom he so opposeth can be secure or confident of holding his life, but all such give up themselves for lost men, as knowing they cannot resist his greater might: compare Deut. xxviii. 26.

23 Though it be given him to be in safety, whereon he resteth; yet ^m his eyes ⁿ are upon their ways; he

† Or, he trusteth not his own life. ^m Ps. 11. 4. ⁿ Prov. 13. 3. He. He giveth to him to be in safety, or all things necessary for his safety, &c. This verse is understood either, 1. Of the oppressor; if the oppressor give a man his hand or promise that he shall live in safety by him, or if the oppressed give gifts to the oppressor to purchase his quiet and safety, and, as it follows, he resteth upon that assurance given him; yet his, i. e. the oppressor's, eyes are upon their ways; he watcheth for their halting, and seeks for all occasions to quarrel with them, and to destroy them. Or rather, 2. Of God; and so the words are fitly rendered thus, He, i. e. God, giveth or granteth to him, i. e. to the oppressor, to be in safety, i. e. to live a quiet and comfortable life, and he resteth secure, or he resteth or leaneth upon him, i. e. upon God; his former experience of God's favour makes him confident of the continuance of it: so he is not only happy in his present enjoyments, but also in his freedom from distracting fears of future miseries; and his, i. e. God's, eyes are upon their ways, i. e. God blesseth and prospereth him in all his undertakings, as this phrase most commonly signifies, as Deut. xi. 12; Ezra v. 5; Psal. xxxiii. 18. Or, yet his eyes are upon their ways, i. e. although God giveth them such strange successes, this doth not proceed from his ignorance or regardlessness of their wicked actions; for he sees and observes them all, and will in due time punish them, though not always in this life, nor as soon as their sins are committed, but in such time and way as he in deep wisdom seeth most fit.

24 They are exalted for a little while, but † are gone and brought low; they are † taken out of the way as all other, and cut off as the tops of the ears of corn.

+ Heb. are not.
† Heb. closed up.

They live in honour and happiness, but not for ever, but only at best during this short and mortal life, which lasteth but for a very little time, and therefore their present happiness is not to be envied; nor is it any reproach to God's providence, which hath time enough to reckon with them hereafter. *Are gone, Heb. are not, to wit, in this world; they die. Brought low; as low as their graves. Or, after (as the particle vau is elsewhere used, as hath been observed before) they have been brought low, to wit, by pining sickness, or other grievous judgments. Out of the way, i. e. out of this world and way of living, by death. Or, are restrained, or shut up, to wit, in the grave, the place of silence and impotency. As all other; they can no more prevent or delay their death than the meanest men in the world. Cut off by death's sickle, or by a violent hand. As the tops of the ears of corn, to wit, in his greatest height and maturity, when he is arrived at his perfect stature of worldly power and glory, then God cuts him off, and that suddenly and violently.*

25 And if it be not so now, who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth?

If it be not so now, to wit, as I have discoursed; if God doth not suffer wicked men to live long and prosperously in the world before he punisheth them; and if good men be not sometimes sorely afflicted here, if all things do not fall alike to all men in these matters.

CHAP. XXV.

Bildad's answer: God's majesty and purity is such as that man cannot be justified before God: before him the heavenly lights lose their lustre and purity.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said,

Bildad answered, not to that which Job spoke last, but to that which stuck most in Bildad's mind, and which seemed most reprobable in all his discourses, to wit, his bold censure of God's proceedings with him, and his avowed and oft-repeated desire of disputing the matter with him.

2 Dominion and fear are with him, he maketh peace in his high places.

Dominion, i. e. absolute and sovereign power over all persons and things, with whom to contend is both rebellion and madness. Fear, actively understood, or terror, i. e. that which justly makes him dreadful to all men, and especially to all that shall undertake to dispute with him; awful majesty, infinite knowledge, whereby he knows men's hearts and ways far better than they know themselves, and sees much sin in them which themselves do not discover, and exact purity and justice, which renders him formidable to sinners. Are with him; emphatically spoken; with him whom thou challengest; with him who is not lightly and irreverently to be named, much less to be contended with. And therefore it is thy duty to humble thyself for thy prosumptuous words and carriage towards him, and quietly and modestly to submit thyself and thy cause to his pleasure.

He maketh peace in his high places. This clause, as well as the following verse, seems to be added to prove what he last said of God's dominion and dreadfulness; he keepeth and ruleth all persons and things in heaven in peace and harmony; and the order which he hath established among them. The angels, though they be very numerous, and differing in orders and ministeries, do all own his sovereignty, and acquiesce in his pleasure, without any disputing and murmuring. The stars and heavenly bodies, though vast in their bulk, and various in their motions, yet exactly keep their courses and the order which God hath appointed them; and therefore it is great folly and impudence to exempt thyself from God's jurisdiction, or to quarrel with the methods of God's dealings with thee.

3 Is there any number of his armies? and upon whom doth not ^a his light arise? a Jam. 1.17.

Of his armies; of the angels, and stars, and other creatures, all which are his hosts, wholly submitting themselves to his will, to be and do what God would have them; and therefore how insolent and unreasonable a thing is it for thee to quarrel with him! He spoke before of God's making peace, and here he mentions the armies by which he keeps it. Upon whom doth not his light arise? either, 1. Properly, his sun, which riseth upon all, Matt. v. 45. Or rather, 2. Metaphorically, all that is in men, which is or may be called light; the light of life, by which men subsist, and are kept out of the state of the dead, called a land of darkness, Job x. 22; the light of reason and understanding, called God's candle, Prov. xx. 27, by which thou, O Job, art capable of arguing with God and with us; and all that peace, and prosperity, and comfort which thou ever didst enjoy, which oft comes under the name of light, as Esth. viii. 15, 16; Psal. cxvii. 11; cxii. 4; which being here called light, is, to continue the metaphor, most fitly said to arise upon men: all this is from God, and therefore is wholly at his disposal; he freely gave it all, and he may justly take it away, as thou thyself didst truly observe and confess, Job i. 21, and consequently thou hast no reason to reproach God for disposing of his own as he pleaseth. Thou hast lost nothing which was thine own, and having no property, there is no foundation for any judicial contest with God.

4 ^b How then can man be justified with b ch. 4. 17, Ec. 6. 13. 14, Sc. 1^a. 130. 3. & 143. 2. God? or how can he be clean that is born of a woman?

Man: the word signifies man that is miserable, which supposeth him to be sinful; and that such a creature should quarrel with that dominion of God, to which the sinless, and happy, and glorious angels willingly submit, is most absurd and impious. With God, i. e. before God's tribunal, to which thou dost so boldly appeal. Thou mayst plead thy cause with thy fellow worms, as we are, and expect to be justified; but voe to thee if the great God undertake to plead his cause against thee! how severely and certainly wouldst thou then be condemned! That is born of a woman, to wit, after the ordinary course; for otherwise Christ was born of a woman, but in a singular manner. This birth is alleged as an evidence of man's filthiness, Job xiv. 4; xv. 14; Psal. li. 5, and of his liahleness to God's curse and wrath, Gen. iii. 16; Eph. ii. 2, and consequently of his condemnation, opposite to the justification here mentioned, and confidently expected by Job in this contest.

5 Behold even to the moon, and it shineth not; yea, the stars are not pure in his sight.

The moon, though a bright and glorious creature, Job xxxi. 26; Cant. vi. 10, if compared with the splendour of the Divine majesty, is but as a dark and earthy lump, without any lustre or glory. He names the moon and the stars rather than the sun, because they many times are eclipsed or disappear even to our eyes, which is a plain evidence of their utter obscurity in respect of God's light; whereas the sun, though that also be obscure, if compared with God, yet it casts a constant and most clear light. Or by naming the moon, and thence proceeding to the stars, the sun is included between them. The stars are not pure in his sight; he can discern many spots and blemishes in them which we cannot see; and in like manner he can discover those corruptions or sins in us which are unknown to our own conc Pa. 2. 6. 6 How much less man, that is 'a worm? and the son of man, which is a worm?

A worm, to wit, mean, and vile, and impotent; proceeding from corruption, and returning to it; and withal filthy and loathsome, and so every way a very unfit person to appear before the high and holy God, and much more to contend with him. The same thing is repeated in other words; only for miserable man in the last branch he here puts the son of any man, of what degree or quality soever, to show that this is true even of the greatest and best of men.

CHAP. XXVI.

Job's reply: this toucheth not Job, 1—4; who acknowledgeth God's power and providence to be infinite and unsearchable, of which we have but small knowledge, 5—14.

BUT Job answered and said,

2 How hast thou helped him that is without power? how savest thou the arm that hath no strength?

How hast thou helped? thou hast helped egregiously. It is an ironical expression, implying the quite contrary, that he had not at all helped. See the like, Gen. iii. 22; 1 Kings xviii. 27; 1 Cor. iv. 8, 10. Him that is without power; either, 1. God, who it seems is weak and unwise, and needed so powerful and eloquent an advocate as thou art to maintain his rights and plead his cause. Or, rather, 2. Job himself: I am a poor helpless creature, my strength and spirits quite broken with the pains of my body and perplexities of my mind, whom nature, and humanity, and religion should have taught thee to support and comfort with a representation of the gracious nature and promises of God, and not to terrify and overwhelm me with displaying his sovereign majesty, the thoughts whereof are already so distractive and dreadful to me.

3 How hast thou counselled him that hath no wisdom? and how hast thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?

Him that hath no wisdom; either, 1. God: thou hast in effect undertaken to teach God how to govern the world. Or rather, 2. Me, whom you take to be a man void of understanding, chap. xi. 2, 3, whom therefore you should have instructed with wholesome counsels, instead of these impertinent discourses; and who indeed do want wisdom, being perfectly at a loss, and not knowing what to say or do. The thing as it is, Heb. essence, the truth and substance of the thing in question between us; thou hast spoken the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and all that can be said in the matter. Or, wisdom, as this word is used, Prov. iii. 21. A most wise and profound discourse thou hast made, and much to the purpose: an ironical expression, as before.

4 To whom hast thou uttered words? and whose spirit came from thee?

For whose instruction hast thou uttered these things? For mine? Dost thou think me to be so ignorant, that I do not know that which the meanest persons are not unacquainted with, to wit, that God is incomparably greater and better than his creatures? Whose spirit came from thee? so the sense is, Whom hast thou revived or comforted by this discourse? Not me surely. The spirit or breath of a man is in a manner suppressed and intercepted in deep sorrows and consternations, such as Job's were; and when he is cheered or refreshed, it finds vent and breathes out freely, as it did before. But I do not remember that ever this phrase is used in this sense; but, on the contrary, the giving or restoring of life is expressed by the coming in, and not by the going out, of spirit or breath, as appears from Gen. ii. 7; Ezek. xxxvii. 5, 6, 10. The words therefore are and may be otherwise understood; either thus, Whose spirit or inspiration (as this word signifies, Job xxxii. 8) came from thee? Who inspired thee with this profound discourse of thine? Was it by Divine inspiration, as thou wouldst have us to believe? or was it not a rash suggestion of thy own vain and foolish mind? Or thus, Whose spirit went out (to wit, of his body, by an ecstasy of admiration) for thee, by reason of thy discourse? I may be thought partial in my censure of it, but thou mayst perceive none of our friends here present admire it, except thyself. Or, To or for whom (the particle eth being here understood out of the former branch, as is usual among the Hebrews) did breath go out from thee, i. e. didst thou speak? For whose good, or to what end, didst thou speak this? God needed it not; I receive no edification or benefit by it.

5 Dead things are formed from under ^{1 Or, with the inhabitants.} the waters, || and the inhabitants thereof.

Job having censured Bildad's discourse concerning God's dominion and power, as insignificant and impertinent to their question, he here proceedeth to show how little he needed his information in that point, and that he was able to instruct him in that doctrine, of which accordingly he gives divers proofs or instances. Here he showeth that the power and providence of God reacheth not only to the things which we see, but also to the invisible parts of the world; not only to the heavens above, and their inhabitants, and to men upon earth, of which Bildad discoursed chap. xxv. 2, 3, but also to such persons or things as are under the earth, or under the waters, which are under the earth; which are out of our sight and reach, and might be thought to be out of the ken or care of Divine Providence. This Hebrew word sometimes signifies giants, as Deut. ii. 11, 20; iii. 13; 1 Chron. xx. 8; whence it may be translated to other great and, as it were, gigantic creatures, and more commonly dead men, as Psal. lxxxviii. 11; Prov. ii. 18; ix. 18; xxi. 16; Isa. xiv. 9; xxvi. 14, 19; whence it is supposed metaphorically to signify also dead or lifeless things; though there be no example of that use of the word elsewhere; and it may seem improper to call those things dead, which never had nor were capable of life. The next Hebrew word, or the verb, is primarily used of women with child, and signifies their bringing forth their young ones with travail or grievous pains, as Job xxxix. 3; Psal. xxix. 9; Isa. xxiii. 4; xlv. 10; and thence it signifies either to form or bring forth, as below, ver. 13; Prov. xxvi. 10; or to grieve or mourn, or to be in pain. Accordingly these words are diversely understood; either, 1. Of dead or lifeless things, such as amber, pearl, coral, metals, or other minerals, which are formed or brought forth, to wit, by the almighty power of God, from under the waters, i. e. either in the bottom of the sea, or within the earth, which is the lowest element, and in the Scripture and other authors spoken of as under the waters; this being observed as a remarkable work of God's providence, that the waters of the sea, which are higher than the earth, do not overwhelm it; and from under (which may be repeated out of the former clause of the verse, after the manner of the Hebrews) the inhabitants thereof, i. e. either of the waters, which are fishes; or of the earth, which are men. Or rather, 2. Of the giants of the old world, which were men of great renown whilst they lived, Gen. vi. 4, and the remembrance of them and of their exemplary destruction was now in some sort fresh and famous; who once carried themselves insolently towards God and men, but were quickly subdued by the Divine power, and drowned with a deluge, and now mourn or groan from under the waters, where they were buried, and from under the present inhabitants thereof, as before. Or, 3. Of vast and gigantic fishes, or monsters of the sea, who by God's infinite power were formed or brought forth under the waters with the other inhabitants thereof, to wit, of the waters, the lesser fishes. Or, 4. Of dead men, and of the worst sort of them, such as died in their sins, and after death were condemned to further miseries; for of such this very word seems to be used, Prov. ii. 18; ix. 18, who are here said to mourn or groan from under the waters, i. e. from the lower parts of the earth, or from under those subterranean seas of waters which are by Scripture and by philosophers supposed to be within and under the earth; of which see Deut. viii. 7; Job xxviii. 4, 10; Psal. xxxiii. 7; and from under the inhabitants thereof, i. e. either of the waters, or of the earth, under which these waters are, or with the other inhabitants thereof, i. e. of that place under the waters, to wit, the apostate spirits. So the sense is, that God's dominion is over all men, yea, even the dead, and the worst of them, who though they would not own God nor his providence whilst they lived, yet now are forced to acknowledge and feel that power which they despised, and bitterly mourn under the sad effects of it in their subterranean and infernal habitations, of which the next verse speaks more plainly. And this sense seems to be favoured by the context and scope of the place, wherein Job begins his discourse of God's power and providence at the lowermost and hidden parts of the world, and thence proceeds to those parts which are higher and visible. Nor is it strange that Job speaks of these matters, seeing it is evident that Job, and others of the holy patriarchs and prophets of old, did know and believe the doctrine of the future life, and of its several recompences to good and bad men. Others understand this of the resurrection of the dead; The dead shall be born (as this word is used, Psal. ii. 7; Prov. viii. 24, 25, i. e. shall be raised, which is a kind of regeneration, or second birth, and is so called, Matt. xix. 28; Acts xiii. 33) from under the waters, (i. e. even those of them that lie in the waters, Rev. xx. 13, that were drowned and buried in the sea, and devoured by fishes, &c., whose case may seem to be most desperate, and therefore they only are here mentioned,) and (or even, this particle being oft used expositively) the inhabitants thereof, i. e. those dead corpses which lie or have long lain there.

6 Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering.

Hell, as this word is frequently used, as Job xi. 8; Isa. lvii. 9, &c. And so it seems to be explained by the following word, destruction, i. e. the place of destruction, which interpreters generally understand of hell, or the place of the damned. Others, the grave, the most secret and obscure places and things. Is naked before him, i. e. it is in his presence, and under his providence. So far am I from imagining that God cannot see through a dark cloud, as you traduced me, chap. xxii. 13, that I very well know that even hell itself, that place of utter darkness, is not hid from his sight. Destruction, i. e. the place of destruction, as it is also used, Prov. xv. 11, by a metonymy of the adjunct. Hath no covering, to wit, such as to keep it out of his sight.

7 He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing.

The north, i. e. the northern pole, or part of the heavens, which he particularly mentions, and puts for the whole visible heaven, because Job and his friends lived in a northern climate, and were acquainted only with that part of the heavens, the southern pole and parts near it being wholly unknown to them. The heavens are oft and fitly said to be spread or stretched out like a curtain or tent, to which they are resembled. The empty place, to wit, the air, so called, not philosophically, as if it were wholly empty; but popularly, because it seems to be so, and is generally void of solid and visible bodies. Upon nothing; upon its own centre, which is but an imaginary thing, and in truth nothing; or upon no props or pillars, but his own power and providence; which is justly celebrated as a wonderful work of God, both in Scripture and in heathen authors.

8 He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds; and the cloud is not rent under them.

This also is a miraculous work of God, considering the nature of these waters, which are fluid and heavy, and pressing downward, especially being oftentimes there in great abundance; and withal, the quality of the clouds, which are thin and loose bodies of the same nature with fogs and mists upon the face of the earth, and therefore of themselves utterly unable to bear that weight, and to keep up those waters from falling suddenly and violently upon the earth.

9 He holdeth back the face of his throne, and spreadeth his cloud upon it.

He holdeth back, i. e. to wit, from our view, that its lustre and glory should not reach us, and so dazzle our sight; he covereth it with a cloud, as the next words explain it. Or, he holdeth fast, or binds together, or strengthens it, that it may be able to bear that burden. The face of his throne; either, 1. This lower air, which is as the face or open part of the heavens, which is often called God's throne, as Psal.

xi. 4; Isa. lxvi. 1; Amos ix. 6. Or, 2. The appearance or manifestation of the heaven of heavens, where he dwelleth, whose light and glory is too great for mortal eyes, which therefore by clouds and other ways he hides from us.

10 He hath compassed the waters with bounds, †until the day and night come to an end.

The waters, to wit, of the sea; for of the upper waters coming out of the clouds he spoke before. With bounds; which are partly the rocks and shores, and principally God's appointment, made at the first creation, and renewed after the deluge, Gen. ix. 11, 15, that the waters should not overwhelm the earth: see Job xxxviii. 8, 10, 11; Psal. civ. 3; Jer. v. 22. Until the day and night come to an end, i. e. unto the end of the world, for so long these vicissitudes of day and night are to continue, Gen. viii. 22; ix. 9, &c.; Jer. v. 22; xxxi. 35, 36.

11 The pillars of heaven tremble and are astonished at his reproof.

The pillars of heaven; either, 1. Those mountains which by their height and strength may seem to reach and support the heavens, as the poets said of Atlas; for this is a poetical book, and there are many poetical expressions in it. These tremble sometimes by force of earthquakes, or by God's glorious appearance in them, as Sinai did. Or, 2. Holy angels; but they are not subject either to trembling, or to God's rebuke. Or, 3. The heavenly bodies, as the sun, and moon, and stars, which as they may seem in some sort to support, so they do certainly adorn the heavens; and we know pillars are oft made, not to support, but only for ornament; as the two famous pillars of the temple, Jachin and Boaz, 1 Kings vii. 21. And these oftentimes seem to tremble and be astonished, as in eclipses or tempests, and terrible works of God in the air, by which they are frequently said to be affected and changed, because they seem so to us; and many things are spoken in Scripture according to appearance: see Isa. xiii. 10; xxiv. 23; Joel ii. 10, 31; Matt. xxiv. 29, &c. At his reproof; either, 1. When God rebuketh them: for God is sometimes said in Scripture to rebuke the lifeless creatures; which is to be understood figuratively of the tokens of God's anger in them. Or, 2. When God reproveth not them, but men by them, manifesting his displeasure against sinful men by thunders, or earthquakes, or prodigious works.

12 He divideth the sea with his power, and by his understanding he smiteth through †the proud.

He speaks either, 1. Of God's dividing the Red Sea for the Israelites to pass over; and consequently the Hebrew word rahab, which here follows, and is translated pride, or the proud, is meant of Egypt, which is oft called Rahab, as Psal. lxxxvii. 4; lxxxix. 10; Isa. li. 9. But it seems most probable that that work was not yet done, and that Job lived long before Israel's coming out of Egypt. Or rather, 2. Of the common work of nature and providence in raising tempests, by which he breaketh or divideth the waves of the sea, by making deep furrows in it, and casting up part of the waters into the air, and splitting part of them upon the rocks and shores of the sea. By his understanding, i. e. by his wise counsel and administration of things, so as may obtain his own glorious ends. The proud; either, 1. The whale, which is called king over all the children of pride, Job xii. 34, and which is sometimes by force of tempests cast upon the shore. Or rather, 2. The sea, which is fitly called proud, as its waves are called, Job xxxviii. 11, because it is lofty, and fierce, and swelling, and unruly; which God is said to smite when he subdues and restrains its rage, and turns the storm into a calm.

13 By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens; his hand hath formed †the crooked serpent.

By his spirit; either, 1. By his Divine virtue or power, which is sometimes called his spirit, as Zech. iv. 6; Matt. xii. 28. Or, 2. By his Holy Spirit, to which the creation of the world is ascribed, Gen. i. 2; Job xxxiii. 4; Psal. xxxiii. 6. He hath garnished the heavens; adorned or beautified them with those glorious lights, the sun, and moon, and stars. The crooked serpent; by which he understands either, 1. All the kinds of serpents, or fishes, or monsters of the sea. Or, 2. The most eminent of their kinds, particularly the whale, which may be here not unfrequently mentioned (as it is afterwards more largely described) amongst the glorious works of God in this lower world; as the garnishing of the heavens was his noblest work in the superior visible parts of the world. Or, 3. A heavenly constellation, called the great dragon and serpent, which being most eminent, as taking up a considerable part of the northern hemisphere, may well be put for all the rest of the constellations or stars wherewith the heavens are garnished. Thus he persisteth still in the same kind of God's works, and the latter branch explains the former. And this sense is the more probable, because Job was well acquainted with the doctrine of astronomy, and knew the nature and names of the stars and constellations, as appears also from chap. ix. 9; xxxviii. 31.

14 Lo, these are parts of his ways: but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can understand?

*These are parts, or, the extremities, but small parcels, the outside and visible work. How glorious then are his visible and more inward perfections and operations! Of his ways, i. e. of his works. Of him, i. e. of his power, and wisdom, and providence, and actions. The greatest part of what we see or know of him, is the least part of what we do not know, and of what is in him, or is done by him. The thunder of his power; either, 1. Of his mighty and terrible thunder, which is oft mentioned as an eminent work of God; as Job xxxviii. 26; xl. 9; Psal. xxix. 3; lxxvii. 18. Or, 2. Of his mighty power, which is aptly compared to thunder, in regard of its irresistible force, and the terror which it causeth to wicked men; this metaphor being used by others in like cases; as among the Grecians, who used to say of their vehement and powerful orators, that they did thunder and lighten; and in Mark iii. 17, where powerful preachers are called sons of thunder.*

CHAP. XXVII.

He will not renounce his integrity, 1—6. The character of a hypocrite, and his misery, 7—10. The portion and heritage of the wicked, 11—23.

^{+ Heb. added to take up.} MOREOVER Job † continued his parable, and said,

When he had waited a while to hear what his friends would reply, and perceived them to be silent. His parable; his grave and weighty, but withal dark and difficult, discourse, such as are oft called parables, as Numb. xxiii. 7; xxiv. 3—15; Psal. xlix. 4; lxxviii. 2; Prov. xxvi. 7.

^{a ch. 24. 5} 2 As God liveth, ^{+ Heb. made my soul bitter,} who hath taken away my judgment; and the Almighty, who hath † vexed my soul;

He confirms the truth and sincerity of his expressions by an oath, because he found them very hard to believe all his professions. My judgment, or my right, or my cause. i. e. who, though he knows my integrity and piety towards him, yet doth not plead my cause against my friends, nor will admit me to plead my cause with him before them, as I have so oft and earnestly desired, nor doth deal with me according to those terms of grace and mercy wherewith he treateth other men and saints; but useth me with great rigour, and by his sovereign power punisheth me sorely, without discovering to me what singular cause I have given him to do so.

^{† That is, the breath which God gave him, Gen. 2. 7.} 3 All the while my breath is in me, and † the spirit of God is in my nostrils;

My breath; which is the constant companion and certain sign of life, both coming in with it, Gen. ii. 7, and going out with it, 1 Kings xvii. 17; Psal. cxlvi. 4. Or, my soul, or life. The spirit of God; that spirit or soul which God breathed into me, Gen. ii. 7, and preserveth in me. Or rather, the breath of God, i. e. which God breathed into me, which eminently appears in a man's nostrils.

4 My lips shall not speak wickedness, nor my tongue utter deceit.

I will speak nothing but the truth with all plainness and impartiality, neither defending myself and cause by vain and false professions of those virtues or graces which I know I have not; nor yet, in compliance with your desire and design, falsely accusing myself of those crimes wherewith you charge me, whereof I know myself to be innocent.

5 God forbid that I should justify you: till I die ^b I will not remove mine integrity ^{b ch. 2. 9. & 13. 15.}

That I should justify you, i. e. your opinion and censure concerning me, as one convicted to be impious or hypocritical, by God's unusual and severe dealing with me. I will not remove, to wit, declaratively, as real words are frequently understood; or by renouncing or denying my integrity, of which God and my own conscience bear me witness. I will not, to gratify you, say that I am a hypocrite, which I know to be false.

6 My righteousness I ^c hold fast, and will not let it go: ^{d Acts 24. 16. + Heb. from my days.} reproach me † so long as I live.

I hold fast, Heb. I have held fast, i. e. I have not only begun well, but continued in well-doing; which is a plain evidence that I am no hypocrite. Or the past tense is put for the future, as is usual, I will hold fast, declaratively, as before, I will maintain it, that howsoever you calumniate me, I am a righteous person. My heart, i. e. my conscience, as the heart is oft used, as 1 Sam. xxiv. 5; xxv. 31; Ezek. xiv. 5; 1 John iii. 20, 21. Shall not reproach me; either, 1. With betraying my own cause and innocency, and speaking what I know to be false, to wit, that I am a hypocrite. Or, 2. For my former impiety or hypocrisy, wherewith you charge me. So long as I live, Heb. from, or for, or concerning my days, i. e. the time of my life, whether past or to come. Or the course of my life; days or times being put here, as it is elsewhere, for actions done in them by a metonymy.

7 Let mine enemy be as the wicked, and he that riseth up against me as the unrighteous.

I am so far from loving and practising wickedness, whereof you accuse me, that I abhor the thoughts of it; and if I might and would wish to be revenged of mine enemy, I could wish him no greater mischief than to be a wicked man. He that riseth up against me; either, 1. You my friends, who, instead of comforting me, are risen up to torment me. Or rather, 2. My worst enemies.

8 For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul? ^{e Matt. 16. 26. Luke 12. 20.}

There is no reason why I should envy or desire the portion of wicked men; for though they oftentimes prosper in the world, as I have said, and seem to be great gainers, yet death, which hasteneth to all men, and to me especially, will show that they are far greater losers, and die in a most wretched and desperate condition; having no hope either of continuing in this life, which they chiefly desire, or of enjoying a better life, which they never regarded. But I have a firm and well-grounded hope, not of that temporal restitution which you promised me, but of a blessed immortality after death, and therefore am none of these hopeless hypocrites, as you account me. Taketh away; or, expelleth, or plucketh up; which notes violence, and that he died unwillingly; compare Luke xii. 20; when good men are said freely and cheerfully to give themselves or their souls unto God.

9 Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him? ^{f ch. 35. 12. Ps. 18. 41. & 109. 7. Prov. 1. 28. & 28. 9. Is. 1. 15. Jer. 14. 12. Ezek. 8. 18. Mic. 9. 4. John 9. 31. James 4. 3.}

A hypocrite doth not pray to God with comfort, or any solid hope that God will hear him, as I know he will hear me, though not in the way which you think. When trouble cometh upon him; when his guilty conscience will fly in his face, so as he dare not pray; and accuse him to God, so as God will not hear him.

10 Will he delight himself in the Almighty? will he always call upon God?

Will he be able to delight and satisfy himself with God alone, and with his love and favour, when he hath no other matter of delight? This I now do, and this a hypocrite cannot do, because his heart is chiefly set upon the world; and when that fails him, his heart sinks, and the thoughts of God are unsavoury and troublesome to him. He may by his afflictions be driven to prayer; but if God doth not speedily answer him, he falls into despair, and neglect of God and of prayer; whereas I constantly continue in prayer, notwithstanding the grievousness and the long continuance of my calamities.

¹ Or, being in the hand, &c.

11 I will teach you || by the hand of God: that which is with the Almighty will I not conceal.

By the hand of God, i. e. by God's help and inspiration; as God is said to speak to the prophet with or by a strong hand, Isa. viii. 11. I will not teach you my own vain conceits, but what God himself hath taught me. Or, concerning (as the prefix beth is oft used, as Exod. xii. 43, 44; Psal. lxxiii. 6; lxxviii. 3; Prov. iv. 11) the hand of God, i. e. his counsel and providence in governing the world, or the manner of his dealing with men, and especially with wicked men, of whose portion he discourseth ver. 13, 14, &c., showing how far the hand of God is either for them, or upon them, and against them. That which is with the Almighty, i. e. what is in his breast or counsel, and how he executes his secret purposes concerning them; or the truth of God, the doctrine which he hath taught his church about these matters.

12 Behold, all ye yourselves have seen it; why then are ye thus altogether vain?

I speak no false or strange things, but what is known and confirmed by your own as well as others' experiences. Why then are ye thus altogether vain, in maintaining such a foolish and false opinion against your own knowledge and experience? Why do you obstinately defend your opinion, and not comply with mine, for the truth of which I appeal to your own consciences?

^h ch. 20. 29.

13 ^b This is the portion of a wicked man with God, and the heritage of oppressors, which they shall receive of the Almighty.

This is the portion of a wicked man; that which is mentioned in the following verses; in which Job delivers either, 1. The opinion of his friends, in whose person he utters them, and afterwards declares his dissent from them. Or rather, 2. His own opinion, and how far he agreeth with them; for his sense differs but little from what Zophar said, chap. xx. 29. With God; either laid up with God, or in his counsel and appointment; or which he shall have from God, as the next words explain it. Of oppressors; who are mighty, and fierce, and terrible, and mischievous to mankind, as this word implies, whom therefore men cannot destroy, but God will.

15 Those that remain of him shall be buried in death: and ^h his widows shall not weep.

Those that remain of him; who survive and escape that sword and famine. Shall be buried in death; either, 1. Shall die, and so be buried. Or, 2. Shall be buried as soon as ever they are dead, either because their relations or dependants feared lest they should come to themselves again, and trouble them and others longer; or because they were not able to bestow any funeral pomp upon them, or thought them unworthy of it. Or, 3. Shall be in a manner utterly extinct in or by death; all their hope, and glory, and name, and memory (which they designed to perpetuate to all ages) shall be buried with them, and they shall never rise again to a blessed life; whereas a good man hath hope in his death, and leaves his good name alive and flourishing in the world, and rests in his grave in assurance of redemption from it, and of a glorious resurrection to a happy and eternal life. His widows; for they had many wives, either to gratify their lust, or to increase and strengthen their family and interest. Shall not weep; either because they durst not lament their death, which was entertained with public joy; or because they were overwhelmed and astonished with the greatness and strangeness of the calamity, and therefore could not weep; or because they also, as well as other persons, groaned under their tyranny and cruelty, and rejoiced in their deliverance from it.

16 Though he heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay;
i. e. In great abundance.

17 He may prepare it, but ¹ the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver.

The just shall put it on; either because it shall be given to him by the judge to recompense those injuries which he received from that tyrant; or because the right of it is otherwise transferred upon him by Divine Providence. The innocent shall divide the silver; either, 1. To the poor; he shall distribute that which the oppressor hoarded up and kept as wickedly as he got it. So this suits with Prov. xxviii. 8; Eccles. ii. 26. Or, 2. With others, or to himself; he shall have a share of it, when by the judge's sentence those ill-gotten goods shall be restored to the right owners.

See Isa. i. 8; Lam. ii. 6.

19 The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered: he openeth his eyes, and he is not.

Shall lie down; either, 1. To sleep; as this word is used, Gen. xix. 35; Deut. vi. 7, &c. Or, 2. In death, of which it is used, 2 Sam. vii. 12. He shall not be gathered, to wit, in burial, of which this word is used, 2 Kings xxii. 20; Jer. viii. 2; xxv. 33. Instead of that honourable interment and burial with his fathers which he expected, he shall be buried with the burial of an ass; his carcass shall lie like dung upon the earth. He openeth his eyes; so the sense is either, 1. He awaketh in the morning, promising to himself a happy day. Or, 2. He looks about him for help and relief in his extremity. But the words are and may be rendered thus, one openeth his eyes, i. e. whilst a man can open his eyes, in a moment, or in the twinkling of an eye. He is not; he is as if he had never been, dead and gone, and his family and name extinct with him.

20 ⁿ Terrors take hold on him as waters, ⁿ ch. 18. 11.
a tempest stealeth him away in the night.

Terrors take hold on him, from the sense of his approaching death or judgment. As waters; either, 1. In abundance, one terror after another. Or, 2. Violently and irresistibly, as a river breaking its banks, or a deluge of waters bears down and overwhelms all that is before it. A tempest stealeth him away in the night; God's wrath and judgment cometh upon him forcibly like a tempest, and withal secretly and unexpectedly, like a thief in the night.

21 The east wind carrieth him away, and he departeth: and as a storm hurleth him out of his place.

The east wind, i. e. some violent and terrible judgment, fitly compared to the east wind, which in those parts was most vehement and furious, and withal pestilent and pernicious; of which see Exod. x. 13; xiv. 21; Psal. xlvi. 7; lxxviii. 26; Hos. xiii. 15; Jonah iv. 8. Carrieth him away, out of his place, as it follows, out of his stately palace, wherein he expected to dwell for ever; whence he shall be carried either by an enemy, that shall take him and carry him into captivity, or by death.

22 For God shall cast upon him, and not spare: † he would fain flee out of his hand.

to him, when he crieth to God for it. He would fain flee out of his hand; he earnestly desires and endeavours by all ways possible to escape the judgments of God, but all in vain.

23 Men shall clap their hands at him, and shall hiss him out of his place.

Men, who shall see and observe these things, shall clap their hands; partly, in token of their joy at the removal of such a public pest and tyrant; and partly, by way of astonishment; and partly, in contempt, and scorn, or derision; all which this gesture signifies in Scripture use; of which see Lam. ii. 15; Ezek. xxv. 6; Nah. iii. 19. Shall hiss him, in token of their amazement, detestation, and derision. See 1 Kings ix. 8; 2 Chron. xxix. 8; Jer. xxv. 9; Micah vi. 16. Out of his place; now that he is out of his place and power, which they durst not do whilst he was in his place. Or, the men of his place, that lived with him or near him, and daily felt the effects of his tyranny.

CHAP. XXVIII.

The power and wisdom of God in his works of nature, 1—11.

A knowledge and wisdom answering this is not found in man, nor to be bought or acquired, 12—21. Death and destruction make their report of it, 22. It is only in God, 23—27. Man's wisdom is to fear God, 28.

Or, a mine. SURELY there is || a vein for the silver, and a place for gold where they fine it.

There is a vein for the silver; where it is hid by God, and found and fetched out by the art and industry of man. The connexion of this chapter with the former is difficult, and diversly apprehended; but this may seem to be the fairest account of it: Job having in the last chapter discoursed of God's various providences and carriages towards wicked men, and showed that God doth sometimes for a season give them wealth and prosperity, but afterwards calls them to a sad account, and punisheth them severely for their abuse of his mercies; and having formerly showed that God doth sometimes prosper the wicked all their days, so as they live and die without any visible token of God's displeasure against them, when, on the contrary, good men are exercised with many and grievous calamities; and perceiving that his friends were, as men in all ages have been, scandalized at these methods of Divine Providence, and denied the thing, because they could not understand the reason of such unequal dispensations: in this chapter he declares that this is one of the depths and secrets of Divine Wisdom, not discoverable by any mortal man in this world; and that although men had some degree of wisdom whereby they could dig deep, and search out many hidden things, as the veins of silver, gold, &c., yet this was a wisdom of a higher nature, and out of man's reach. And hereby he secretly checks the arrogance and confidence of his friends, who, because they had some parts of wisdom, the knowledge of natural things, such as are here contained, and of human affairs, and of some Divine matters, therefore presumed to fathom the depths of God's wisdom and providence, and to judge of all God's ways and works by the scantling of their own narrow understandings. Possibly it may be connected thus: Job having been discoursing of the wonderful ways of God, both in the works of nature, chap. xxvi., from ver. 5 to the end, and in his providential dispensations towards wicked men, chap. xxvii., from ver. 13 to the end, he here returns to the first branch of his discourse, and discovers more of God's wisdom and power in natural things. And this he doth partly, that by this manifestation of his singular skill in the ways and actions of God, he might vindicate himself from that contempt which they seemed to have of him, and oblige them to hear what he had further to say with more attention and consideration; and partly that by this representation of the manifold wisdom and power of God, they might be wrought to a greater reverence for God and for his works, and not presume to judge so rashly and boldly of them, and to condemn what they did not understand in them.

Where they fine it; or rather, as it is in the margin of our Bibles, which they, to wit, the refiners, do fine. For he speaks not here of the works of men and of art, but of God and of nature, as is manifest from the foregoing and following words.

2 Iron is taken out of the || earth, and ^{Or, dust.} brass is molten out of the stone.

Iron is taken out of the earth; being made of earth, concocted by the heat of the sun into that hardness, and by miners digged out of the earth. Brass; or, copper. Is molten out of the stone, wherewith it is mixed and incorporated in the earth, and by fire and the art of the metallist it is separated from it, and taken out of it, as Pliny observes, 34. 1, 10, and 36. 27.

3 He setteth an end to darkness, and searcheth out all perfection: the stones of darkness, and the shadow of death.

He; either, 1. Man, the miner; or, 2. God, of whose works of nature he here speaks; or, 3. God as the chief author and director, and man as God's instrument in the work. An end; or, a bound, how far the darkness shall reach, and how far the dark and hidden parts and treasures of the earth shall be searched, and discovered, and brought to light. All perfection, i. e. metals and minerals, which are nothing else but earth concocted, and hardened, and brought to maturity and perfection. Or, unto all perfection, i. e. he perfectly and exactly searcheth them out; although the Hebrew lamed may be here only a note of the accusative case, as our translation takes it. The stones; either gems and precious stones, which are called by this word, Prov. xxvi. 8; or those stones out of which the metals forementioned are taken. Of darkness, and the shadow of death; which lie hid in the dark and deadly shades and bowels of the earth.

4 The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant; even the waters forgotten of the foot: they are dried up, they are gone away from men.

This verse speaks either, 1. Of another great and remarkable work of God, whereby in some places either new rivers break forth, or old rivers break in upon the inhabitants, and drive them away; and in other places rivers or other waters are dried up, or derived into other channels or grounds, by which means these lands are rendered more useful and fruitful. Or rather, 2. Of an accident which commonly happens in mines, where, whilst men are digging, a flood of waters breaks in suddenly and violently upon them, and disturbs them in their work. From the inhabitant, Heb. from with the inhabitant, i. e. out of that part of the earth which the miners in a manner inhabit, or where they have their fixed abode, and for the most part dwell. Or, so that there is no inhabitant or abider, i. e. so that the miners dare continue there no longer, but are forced to come away. Even the waters; which word is easily and fitly understood out of the foregoing word flood. Or without this supplement, the flood may be said to be forgotten, &c., that singular word being collectively taken, and so conveniently joined with this word of the plural number. Forgotten of the foot, i. e. untroubled by the foot of man, such waters as men either never did pass over, or, by reason of their depth, cannot pass over; or such as though the miners at first for a while did pass over, yet now cannot, or dare not, do so any more. Forgetfulness is here ascribed to the foot, as it is to the hand, Psal. cxxxvii. 5; and it is put for ignorance or unacquaintedness; as all sinners are said to forget God, though many of them never remembered nor minded him. They are dried up, they are gone away from men; Heb. they are dried up (or drawn up, to wit, by engines made for that purpose) from men, (i. e. from the miners, that they may not be hindered in their work. Or, with or by men, the prefix mem being oft put for beth, i. e. by the labour of men,) they remove, or vanish, or pass away, and so the miners return to their work.

5 As for the earth, out of it cometh bread: and under it is turned up as it were fire.

Out of it; out of the upper parts of the earth. Bread; bread-corn, or other food for man's use. Under it; either, 1. Under the same earth, which either at the same time yields bread out of its upper, and fire out of its lower parts; or at several times; that earth which once was fruitful becoming, by the disposition of Divine Providence, barren and sulphureous, &c. Or, 2. Under other parts of the earth. Is turned up, i. e. is digged out and fetched up. As it were fire; either gold and precious stones, which glitter and sparkle like fire; or coals, and brimstone, and other materials of fire.

6 The stones of it are the place of sapphires: and it hath || dust of gold.

The place of sapphires, i. e. of precious stones; the sapphire, as one of the most eminent, being put for all the rest. In some parts of the earth the sapphires are mixed with stones, and cut out of them and polished. Of this stone, see Exod. xxiv. 10; Cant. v. 14; Lam. iv. 7; Ezek. i. 26. It hath, i. e. the earth containeth in or under it. Dust of gold; which is a distinct thing from that gold which is found in the mass or lump, of which ver. 2; both sorts of gold being found in the earth.

7 There is a path which no fowl knoweth, and which the vulture's eye hath not seen:

A path, to wit, in the dark depths and bowels of the earth. The vulture; whose eye is very quick and strong, and which searcheth all places for its prey, but cannot reach to these places, which yet the wisdom of man by the direction of God's providence findeth out.

8 The lion's whelps have not trodden it, nor the fierce lion passed by it.

The lion's whelps, Heb. the sons of pride; a fit name for lions, which are lofty and stately creatures, despising both men and all other beasts that oppose them. The fierce lion; which rangeth all places for prey, and findeth out the deepest dens and caves of the earth. The birds and beasts have oftentimes led men to such places as otherwise they should never have found out; but they could not lead men to these mines; but the finding out of them is a special gift of God, and an act of that wisdom which he hath put into man.

9 He putteth forth his hand upon the || rock; he overturneth the mountains by the roots.

This and the two next verses are meant either, 1. Of other eminent and considerable works of God, who sometimes overturneth rocks, and produceth new rivers in unlikely places. Or rather, 2. Of the same work of mining and digging for gold, or other precious things of the earth, and of other effects of man's art and wisdom in that work. The miners resolve to break through all opposition, and by iron tools, or fire, or other ways, dig through the hardest rocks. He undermineth the very mountains to find out the metals lying at the bottom of them.

10 He cutteth out rivers among the rocks; and his eye seeth every precious thing.

He maketh channels among the rocks to convey away that water which was breaking in upon him, and if not thus diverted, would have spoiled his work; of which see on ver. 4. Having with great art and indefatigable industry broke through all difficulties, he at last arriveth at his end, and finds out those precious treasures which he sought for.

11 He bindeth the floods † from overflowing; and the thing that is hid bringeth he forth to light.

He restraineth the floods, and as it were bindeth them to their good behaviour, that they may not overflow the mine; and those metals which did lie hid in the secret parts of the earth, he discovers to himself and others.

12 But where shall wisdom be found? and where is the place of understanding?*

Wisdom, Heb. that wisdom; for here is an article which seems to be emphatical. The sense is, I confess that man hath one kind of wisdom in a great measure, to wit, to discover the works of nature, and to perform the operations of art; but as for that sublime and eminent wisdom, which consists in the exact knowledge of all God's counsels and ways, and of the several manners and reasons of his governing the world, and dealing with good and bad men, this is far above man's reach, and is the prerogative of God alone. Where is the place of understanding? there is no vein for that upon the earth, as there is for gold or silver.

13 Man knoweth not the † price thereof; neither is it found in the land of the living.

Man knoweth neither where to purchase it, nor how much it is worth, nor what to offer in exchange for it. In the land of the living; amongst mortal men that live upon earth, but only amongst those blessed spirits that dwell above.

14 The depth* saith, It is not in me: || and the sea saith, It is not with me.

The depth, to wit, of the earth, because the sea here follows as a differing place. This is a very common figure, whereby speech is ascribed to dumb and senseless creatures. The meaning is, This is not to be found in any part of the land or sea, yea, though a man should dig or dive never so deep to find it, nor to be learned from any creatures; for though these discover the being, and power, and in part the wisdom of God, yet they do not instruct us in the methods and grounds of God's providential dispensations to good and evil men: these are secrets of wisdom reserved for God himself.

15 *†*It cannot be gotten for gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof.

For gold; the choicest gold laid up in treasures, as the word signifies. Weighed, to wit, in the balance; for in those times money was paid by weight, not by tale. See Gen. xxiii. 16; Jer. xxxii. 9, 10.

16 It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx, or the sapphire.

The gold of Ophir was the best sort of gold. See on 1 Kings ix. 28; Job xxii. 24. Onyx, or sardonyx. See on Exod. xxviii. 20.

17 The gold and the crystal cannot equal it: and the exchange of it shall not be for || jewels of fine gold.

The crystal; or, amber, which in those parts was of very great price; or, the diamond. The Hebrew word is not elsewhere used, and it hath in it the signification of purity, or clearness, or brightness. Jewels; or, vessels; wherein there is not only the excellency of the materials, but the curiosity of art, which renders the other much more valuable.

18 No mention shall be made of || coral, or of pearls: for the price of wisdom is above rubies.

No mention shall be made; they are of no value, nor worthy to be named the same day with this, nor fit to be mentioned as a price or recompence wherewith to purchase this. The price; or, the attraction, or acquisition; or rather, the extraction, or drawing forth. For Job useth the word of art which was proper in the taking of pearls, as the following word, rendered by our translators rubies, is understood by divers, both Hebrew and Christian interpreters, and amongst others by the late eminent learned Bochart, who proveth it by divers arguments. Now these pearls are and were taken by men that dived to the bottom of the sea, and drew them out thence, which is the very word which both Arabic and Latin authors use in the case; as indeed the same word is used of all fishermen, who are said to draw forth with their hook, or net, or otherwise, fishes, or any other thing for which they are fishing. Moreover this diving, as it produced great profit, so it was not without some danger and difficulty; for if they heedlessly put their fingers into the gaping shell, within which the pearl was, it speedily closed upon them, and put them to exquisite pain, to the loss of their finger, and sometimes of their life; which is a fit representation of the state of those persons who search after the knowledge of God's counsels and ways, and the grounds of them, who as when they modestly inquire into them, and truly discover them, they have infinite advantage and satisfaction therein; so if they pry into them too boldly, searching into those things which God hath concealed, and rashly judging of them above what they know, which Job judged to be his friends' case, they expose themselves to manifold snares and dangers. And this extraction, or drawing forth, is aptly used concerning this wisdom, which lying very deep and remote from the reach of ordinary men, is not to be obtained without diligent search and consideration. And so the place may be thus translated, the extraction or drawing forth of wisdom is above that (to wit, the extraction) of pearls.

19 The topaz of Ethiopia shall not equal it, neither shall it be valued with pure gold.

The topaz; of which see Exod. xxviii. 17; xxxix. 10. Of Ethiopia, or, of Arabia; for Cush signifies both Ethiopia and Arabia; and the topaz was found in the Red Sea, which lay between both, and so might be ascribed to either.

c ver. 12. 20 * Whence then cometh wisdom? and where is the place of understanding?

Where this precious treasure lies, and whence a man may fetch it.

21 Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, and kept close from the fowls of the || air.

|| Or, heaven. Of all living; of all men that live upon the earth. From the fowls of the air: though they fly high, and can see far and well, yet they cannot discern this: men of the most raised understandings cannot discover it. It is to be found no where in this visible world, neither in the upper nor lower parts of it.

f ver. 14. 22 ' Destruction and death say, We have heard the fame thereof with our ears.

Destruction and death; either, 1. Men that are dead, and thereby freed from the encumbrance of their bodies, which depress their minds, and have more raised thoughts than men that live here. Or, 2. The grave, the place of the dead, to which these things are here ascribed, as they are to the depths, and to the sea, ver. 14, by a figure called prosopopoeia. If a man should search for this wisdom, either amongst living men, or amongst the dead, he could not find it; yea, though he should and might inquire of all men that formerly lived in the world, some of whom were persons of prodigious wit and learning, and of vast experience, as having lived nigh a thousand years, and made it their great business in that time to search out the depths of this Divine wisdom in the administration of the world. We have heard the fame thereof; we know it only by slight and uncertain rumours, but not fully and perfectly.

23 God understandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof.

God, i. e. God alone; as appears by the denial of it to all other things. The way thereof; either the way how it is to be obtained; or rather, the methods or courses which it takes in the management of all affairs in the world, together with its grounds and ends in them. The place thereof; where it dwells, which is only in his own breast and mind, and in the best of men but in part, and only as far as it pleaseth him to afford it.

g Prov. 15. 3. 24 For he looketh to the ends of the earth, and ^e seeth under the whole heaven;

He, and he only, knows it, because his providence, and that only, is infinite and universal, reaching to all places, and times, and things, past, present, and to come; whereas the most acute and knowing men have narrow understandings, and see but very few things and small parcels of the works of God, and therefore are very unfit to pass a judgment upon them, because the wisdom, and justice, and beauty of God's works is not clearly nor fully seen till all the parts of them be laid together.

h Ps. 135. 7. 25 ^h To make the weight for the winds; and he weigheth the waters by measure.

To make the weight for the winds; which of themselves are most light, and without any weight, and inconstant, and such as no creature can order or govern them: but God manageth them all by weight, appointing to every wind that blows its season, its proportion, its bounds and limits, when, and where, and how much, and how long each wind shall blow, and for what ends; whether for mercy, as to refresh men in hot seasons with its gentle gales, to cherish the fruits of the earth, to waft ships on the sea to their desired havens, &c.; or whether for judgment, as to corrupt the air, and thereby the bodies of men, and fruits of the earth, to blow down houses upon their inhabitants, as he was pleased to deal with my poor unhappy children. He only doth all these things, and he only knows why he doth them. He instanceth but in some few of God's works, and those which seem to be most trivial, and casual, and uncertain, that thereby he might more strongly imply and prove that God doth the same in other things which are more considerable, and are managed by more constant causes and certain methods; that he doth all things in the most exact order, and weight, and measure. He weigheth: but it seems a very improper speech, to weigh things by measure; and therefore this word may more fitly be otherwise rendered, he examineth, or disposeth, or fitteth, or directeth, for so this verb is elsewhere used, as 1 Sam. ii. 3: Psal. lxxv. 3; Prov. xvi. 2; xxi. 2. The waters, to wit, the rain waters, as appears from the next verse, which God layeth up in his store-houses, or bottles, the clouds, and thence draws them forth, and sends them down upon the earth in such times and proportions as he thinks fit, and as may serve his several designs and ends. By measure; for liquid things are examined by measure, as other things are by weight; and here is both weight and measure, to signify with what exact and perfect wisdom God doth govern the world.

26 When he ⁱ made a decree for the ¹ ch. 28. 25. rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder:

When he made; which was either from eternity, or at the first creation, when he settled that course and order which should afterwards be continued. Or, when he maketh: but our translation seems best to suit with the then in the next verse, where the sense is completed. Decree for the rain; an appointment, and as it were a statute law, that it should fall upon the earth, and that in such times, and places, and proportions, and manner as he should think fit, either for correction or for mercy, as Elihu speaks, Job xxxvii. 13. A way, or path, how it should get out of the thick cloud, in which it was shut up, and as it were imprisoned; or, a course, which should for the future be observed, as to the time, and measure, and ends, and other circumstances belonging to it.

27 Then did he see it, and || declare it; ¹ Or, ^{number} it. he prepared it, yea, and searched it out.

Then; either from eternity, when he decreed what he would do, or when he first created them. Did he see it, i. e. wisdom, which is the subject matter of the present discourse. This God saw not abroad, but within himself; he looked or reflected upon it in his own mind, as the rule by which he would proceed in the creation and government of all things, managing them in such ways and methods as were most agreeable to his own most wise and unsearchable counsels, which no human or created wit can reach or pierce into. Or, he saw it, so as to declare it, as it follows; so as to make it visible and manifest in some measure to his creatures. Or, he saw it, i. e. he enjoyed it, seeing being oft put for enjoying, as Psal. xxvii. 13; xxxiv. 12; Eccles. ii. 1; iii. 13. Compare Prov. viii. 22. Declare it, i. e. he made it evident, he discovered his deep wisdom, which lay hid before in his own breast; or he laid the foundation of that discovery of it, which then was, or afterward should be, made to angels and men, as the heavens did in themselves declare the glory of God, Psal. xix. 1, before there was such a creature as man to take notice of it, because the object was visible in itself, and not made so by the eye which afterwards beheld it. Or, did number it, i. e. showed it as it were by number; not only in gross, but as it were by retail, in all the several works which he made. He prepared it, i. e. he had it in readiness for the doing of all his works, as if he had been for a long time preparing materials for them. So it is a speech of God after the manner of men. Or, he disposed it, i. e. used or employed it in his works. Or, he settled or established it, i. e. he firmly purposed to do such and such things in such manner as he thought meet, and he established the order which he first made in the world, that it should continue in after-ages. Or, he directed it, and directed and ordered all things by it. Searched it out; not properly; for so searching implies ignorance, and that a man is at a loss, and requires time and industry, all which is repugnant to the Divine perfections; but figuratively, as such expressions are oft used concerning God, i. e. he did and doth all things with that absolute and perfect wisdom, and he knoweth all his own counsels and actions, and the reasons of them, so exactly and perfectly, as if he had bestowed a long time in searching and judging to find them out. And this and the other acts mentioned in this verse are to be understood of God solely and exclusively, it being here, as it is oft elsewhere in this book, sufficiently implied, that this kind of Divine wisdom, which consists in the accurate knowledge of all God's counsels and works, is far above, out of man's reach. Man doth not see this wisdom but only so far as God is pleased to reveal it to him, and therefore he cannot declare it to others; man did not prepare, nor order, nor contrive it, and therefore no wonder if he cannot search it out. And so this is most fitly connected with the following verse; for as here he tells us what wisdom is denied to man, so there he informeth us what is granted to him.

^k Deut. 4. 6. ^p Ps. 111. 10. ^f Prov. 1. 7. & ^e 9. 10. Eccles. 12. 13. 28 And unto man he said, Behold, ^k the fear of the LORD, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding.

And; or rather, but; for this is added by way of opposition, to show that man's wisdom doth not lie in a curious inquiry into, or in an exact knowledge of, the secret paths of God's counsel and providence, but in things of another and of a lower nature. Unto man; unto Adam at first, and in and with him to all his race and posterity. He said, i. e. God spoke it, partly, and at first inwardly, to the mind of man, in which God wrote this with his own finger, and engraved it as a first principle for his direction; and partly afterwards by the holy patriarchs, and prophets, and other teachers of his church, whom God sent into the world to teach men true wisdom; which accordingly they did, not by acquainting the people with the secrets and intricacies of God's counsel and providence, but by declaring the revealed will of God, and instructing them in their duty towards God and men, making this their great, if not only, business, to make men wise unto salvation. See Deut. iv. 6; xxix. 29. Behold; which expression notes the great importance of this doctrine, and withal man's dullness and backwardness to apprehend and consider it, and man's proneness to place his wisdom in vain and curious speculations. The fear of the Lord, i. e. true religion, and the right worship of God, both inward and outward, all which cometh under this name. That is wisdom; in that only consists man's true wisdom, because that, and that only, is his duty, and his safety, and happiness, both for this life and for the next; and withal this is attainable, whereas the depths of God's ways are unknown and unsearchable to human or created capacities. To depart from evil, i. e. from sin, which is called evil eminently, as being the chief, if not the only, evil, and the cause of all other evils, and that which is constantly and immutably evil, whereas afflictions are frequently made good and highly beneficial. Religion consists of two branches, doing good and forsaking evil; the former is expressed in the former clause of this verse, and the latter in these words. Is understanding; is the best kind of knowledge or wisdom to which man can attain in this life. The same thing is here twice expressed in several phrases. And the design of Job in this close of his discourse, is not only to show the mistake, and reprove the arrogance and boldness, of his friends, in prying into God's secrets, and passing such a rash censure upon him, and upon God's ways and carriage towards him; but also to vindicate himself from the imputation of hypocrisy and profaneness, which they fastened upon him, by showing that he had ever esteemed it to be his best wisdom and true interest to fear God, and to depart from evil.

CHAP. XXIX.

Job's former prosperity in God's favour, 1—5. His honour and repute, 6—11, for his charity, 12—16, and punishing the wicked, 17. His hope herein, 18. His glory and honour repeated, 19—25.

⁺ Heb. added to take up. MOREOVER Job † continued his parable, and said,

^a See ch. 7. 3. 2 Oh that I were ^a as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me;

To wit, from all those miseries which now I feel. This he desires, not only for his own ease and comfort, but also for the vindication of his reputation, and of the honour of religion, which suffered by his means: for as his calamities were the only ground of all their hard speeches and censures of him, as a man forsaken and hated by God; so he rightly judged that this ground being removed, and his posterity restored, his friends would take it for a token of God's favour to him, and beget in them a milder and better opinion of him.

3 ^b When his † candle shined upon my ^b ch. 18. 6. head, and when by his light I walked [†] Or, lamp, [†] Ps. 18. 28. through darkness;

His candle, i. e. his favour and blessing, oft signified by the name light; as his displeasure and a state of affliction is frequently called darkness. Upon my head, or, over my head, to comfort and direct me. The ground of the expression is this, that lights used to be carried and set on high, that men may make the better use of them, as the sun for that end was placed above us. I walked through darkness; I passed safely through many difficulties, and dangers, and common calamities, which befell others who lived round about me, and overcame those troubles which fell upon myself.

4 As I was in the days of my youth, when ^c the secret of God was upon my ^c Ps. 25. 14. tabernacle;

In the days of my youth, i. e. in my former and flourishing days, which he calls the days of youth, because those are commonly the times of mirth and comfort, as old age is called evil days, Eccles. xii. 1; when there was a secret blessing of God upon me and my family, protecting, directing, and succeeding us in all our affairs, which the devil observed, chap. i. 10; whereas now there is a visible curse of God upon me and mine.

5 When the Almighty was yet with me, when my children were about me;

With me, i. e. on my side; whereas now he is against me, and hath forsaken me. My children, or servants, or both; and therefore he useth this word, which comprehends both.

6 When ^d I washed my steps with but- ^d Gen. 49. 11. ter, and ^e the rock poured † me out rivers ^e Deut. 32. 13. & 33. 24. of oil; ^e Ps. 17. 6. [†] Heb. with me.

i. e. When I abounded in all sorts of blessings; which is oft signified by this or the like phrases, as Gen. xlix. 11; Deut. xxxiii. 24; Job xx. 17; Psal. lxxxi. 16; when I had such numerous herds of cattle, and consequently such plenty of butter, that if I had needed it, or been pleased so to use it, I might have washed my feet with it; when not only fruitful fields, but even barren and rocky places, (such as that part of Arabia was where Job lived,) yielded me olive trees and oil in great plenty. See on Deut. xxxii. 13.

7 When I went out to the gate through the city, when I prepared my seat in the street!

When I went out from my dwelling to the gate, to wit, of the city, as the following words show; to the place of judicature, which was in the gates, as hath been oft observed. Through the city; through that part of the city which was between my house and the gate. Or, to the city, i. e. the gate belonging to the city. So Job might live in the country adjoining to it. When I prepared my seat; when I caused the seat of justice to be set for me. By this and divers other expressions it appears that Job was a magistrate or judge in his country. In the street, i. e. in that void and open place within or near the gate, where the people assembled for the administration of justice among them.

8 The young men saw me, and hid themselves: and the aged arose, and stood up.

Hid themselves; either out of a profound reverence to my person and dignity, or out of a conscience of their own guilt or folly, which they supposed I might either understand by information from others, or discover by their countenances or carriages in my presence, for which they knew I would reprove them, and bring them to shame, or other punishment. Stood up, whilst I either passed by them, or was present with them. See Lev. xix. 32; 1 Kings ii. 19. So great a veneration they had for my person, in regard of that wisdom, and justice, and faithfulness which they discerned in me, and in all my proceedings. And therefore they judged quite otherwise of me than you now do.

9 The princes refrained talking, and ^f laid their hand on their mouth.

Refrained talking; either fearing that I should discern their weakness by their words; or desiring to hear my words and sentence, which they readily approved of, and fully assented to. Such an opinion had they of my wisdom, and did not think me such a foolish, erroneous, and impertinent person as you fancy or represent me to be. Laid their hand on their mouth, in token both of their wonder at Job's wise speeches and sentences, and of their resolution to be silent. See Job xxi. 5; Prov. xxx. 32.

10 † The nobles held their peace, and their ^g tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth.

It lay as still as if it had done so, and they could not have spoken.

11 When the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me:

It blessed me, i. e. pronounced me to be a man blessed of God with eminent gifts and graces; or heartily prayed for God's blessing upon me, because of that wisdom and integrity which they saw in all my actions, and of the satisfaction which I gave to all, and the relief which I gave to the oppressed, by my righteous and equitable decrees in all causes which were brought before me. When the eye saw me, it gave witness to me; when my appearance gave them occasion to speak of me, they gave testimony to my pious, and just, and blameless conversation. So far was I from being, or being thought to be, guilty of those crimes wherewith you charge me; of which see chap. xxii. 9.

12 Because ^h I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him.

I delivered from his potent oppressor. They did not honour me for my great wealth or power, but for my impartial justice and pity to the afflicted, and courage in maintaining their cause and right against their mighty adversaries. None to help him; none that would own or help them, partly because they were poor, and unable to recompense them for it; and partly because their enemies were great, and likely to crush both them and their helpers; which made Job's virtue more glorious.

13 The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me: and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy.

The blessing, wherewith both he and others for his sake blessed me, and begged that God would bless me. To perish; to lose his life or estate by the malice and tyranny of wicked men. The widow's heart; who are the common objects of injuries and oppressions, because for the most part they are unable, either to offend those who molest them, or to defend themselves from their violence. To sing for joy, for her great and unexpected deliverance.

14 ⁱ I put on righteousness, and it clothed me: my judgment was as a robe and a diadem.

It clothed me: as a garment covers the whole body, and is worn continually all the day long; so I was constantly just in the whole course of all my administrations, public and private, and never put off this garment out of a partial respect to myself, or to the persons of other men, as the manner of many judges is. My judgment was as a robe and diadem; my judgments or decrees were so equal and righteous, that they never brought shame and reproach upon me, but always honour and great reputation.

15 I was ^k eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame.

Eyes, i. e. instead of eyes, to instruct, and direct, and assist. To the blind; either, 1. Corporally. Or rather, 2. Spiritually; such as through ignorance or weakness were apt to mistake, and to be seduced or cheated by the craft and artifices of evil-minded men. These I cautioned, and advised, and led into the right way. Feet was I to the lame, i. e. ready to help him who was unable to help himself.

16 I was a father to the poor: and ^l the ^m cause which I knew not I searched out.

A father, i. e. had the care and bowels of a father to them. The cause which I knew not; either, 1. Those which were not brought to my knowledge or tribunal, either through neglect, or because the injured persons durst not complain, I diligently inquired after. Or, 2. Those which were hard and difficult, and possibly were made so by the frauds or arts of the oppressors, or their advocates, which the poor injured person could not find out, I took pains to discover.

17 And I brake ⁿ † the jaws of the wicked, and † plucked the spoil out of ^o his teeth.

The jaws; or, the jaw-bones; or, the grinders, the sharpest and strongest teeth in the jaw, i. e. their power and violence wherewith they used to oppress others. It is a metaphor from wild beasts, which break their prey with their teeth. Compare Psal. iii. 7; lvii. 4; lviii. 6. Plucked the spoil out of his teeth, i. e. forced them to restore what they had violently and unjustly taken away.

18 ^p Then I said, "I shall die in my nest, and I shall multiply my days as the sand."

Then I said, i. e. I persuaded myself, being thus strongly fortified with the conscience of my own universal integrity, and with the singular favour of God, and of all men. But although this was sometimes Job's opinion, yet at other times he was subject to fears, and expectation of changes, as appears from chap. iii. 25, 26. I shall die in my nest; not a violent or untimely, but a natural, and peaceable, and seasonable death, sweetly expiring in my own bed and habitation, in the midst of my children and friends, leaving the precious perfume of a good name behind me, and a plentiful inheritance to all my posterity. As the sand; which is innumerable. See Gen. xxii. 17; xii. 49.

19 ^q My root was † spread out ^r by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon my branch.

I was continually watered by Divine favour and blessing, as a tree which is constantly supplied with moisture, both in its root and branches, and consequently must needs be fruitful and flourishing.

20 My glory was † fresh in me, and ^s my bow was † renewed in my hand.

My glory was fresh; the reputation which I had gained by my just and virtuous life was not decaying, but growing, and every day augmented with the accession of new honours. In me, Heb. with me. My bow, i. e. my strength, which is signified by a bow, Gen. xlix. 24; 1 Sam. ii. 4, because in ancient times the bow and arrows were principal instruments of war. Was renewed, Heb. changed itself, i. e. grew as it were a new bow, when other bows by much use grow weak and useless. Or, changed its strength, which word may be here understood, as it is expressed, Isa. xl. 31, i. e. hath got new strength.

21 Unto me men gave ear, and waited, and kept silence at my counsel.

Expecting till I spoke, and silently listening to my counsel, which they were confident would be like the oracle of God, wise, and just, and good, and preferring it before their own judgment.

22 After my words they spake not again; and my speech dropped upon them.

After my words they spake not again; either to confute them as false, or to add to them as lame and imperfect. Dropped upon them, to wit, as the rain, as the next verse explains it, which when it comes down gently and droppingly upon the earth, is most acceptable and beneficial to it; not so when it comes in great and violent showers.

23 And they waited for me as for the rain; and they opened their mouth wide as for ^t the latter rain.

As for the rain; as the earth or the husbandman waiteth for the rain, to wit, the former rain, of which see Deut. xi. 14, because the latter rain is here opposed to it: see James v. 7. They opened their mouth to receive my words, and therewith to satisfy their thirst, as the dry and parched earth gapes or opens its mouth to receive the rain.

24 If I laughed on them, they believed it not; and the light of my countenance they cast not down.

If I laughed on them, or sported or jested with them, i. e. carried myself familiarly and pleasantly with them. They believed it not; it was so acceptable to them to see me well-pleased with them, that they could scarce believe their eyes and ears that it was so: compare Gen. xlv. 26; Psal. cxxvi. 1. The light of my countenance they cast not down; my familiarity did not breed contempt or presumption in them to say or do any thing that might grieve me, or make my countenance to fall, as it doth in case of shame or sorrow, Gen. iv. 5. They were very cautious not to abuse my smiles, nor to give me any occasion to change my countenance or carriage towards them.

25 I chose out their way, and sat chief, and dwelt as a king in the army, as one that comforteth the mourners.

I chose out their way; they sought to me for my advice in all doubtful and difficult cases, and I chalked out their path, and directed them what methods they should take to accomplish their desires. Sat, as a prince or judge, whilst they stood waiting for my counsel. Chief, or head; as their head or ruler, and my mind and word was as a law or oracle to them. As a king in the army, whose presence puts life, and courage, and joy into the whole army. And no less acceptable was my presence to them. As one that comforteth the mourners; as I was able and ready to comfort any afflicted or sorrowful persons, so my consolations were always grateful and welcome to them. Or, when he, to wit, the king, comforteth the mourners, i. e. his army, when they are under some great consternation or dejection, by reason of some great loss or danger, but are revived by the presence and speech of a wise and valiant king or general.

CHAP. XXX.

Job's honour is turned into contempt, 1—14; his prosperity into calamity, fears, pains, despicableness, 15—19; notwithstanding his prayer now, and his former charity, and hope, 20—26. His great sorrow, 27—31.

+ Heb. of fewer dogs than I. BUT now they that are † younger than I have me in derision, whose fathers I would have disdained to have set with the dogs of my flock.

But now my condition is sadly changed for the worse. They that are younger than I; whom both universal custom and the light of nature taught to reverence their elders and betters. Have me in derision; make me the object of their contempt and scoffs: thus my glory is turned into shame. I would have disdained; or rather, I might have disdained, i. e. whose condition was so mean and vile, that in the opinion and according to the custom of the world they were unworthy of such an employment. To have set with the dogs of my flock; to be my shepherds, and the companions of my dogs which watch my flocks. Dogs are every where mentioned with contempt, as filthy, unprofitable, and accursed creatures; as 2 Sam. xvi. 9; 2 Kings viii. 13; Phil. iii. 2; Rev. xxii. 15.

2 Yea, whereto might the strength of their hands profit me, in whom old age was perished?

Nor was it strange that I did, or would, or might refuse to take them into any of my meanest services, because they were utterly impotent, and therefore unserviceable. In whom old age was perished; or, lost; either, 1. Because they never attain to it, but are consumed by their lusts or cut off for their wickedness by the just hand of God, or men, in the midst of their days. Or, 2. Because they had so wasted their strength and spirits by their evil courses, that when they came to old age, they were feeble and decrepit, and useless for any labour. Or, 3. Because they had not that prudence and experience which is proper and usual in that age, by which they might have been useful, if not for work, yet to oversee and direct others in their work. But the words may be thus rendered, in whom vigorous age was perished, i. e. who were grown impotent for service. For the word here rendered old age, is used only here and Job v. 26, where also it may be so rendered, Thou shalt come to thy grave in a vigorous or mature age, having the vigour of youth even in thine old age, and until thy death, as Moses had. And if this word do signify old age, yet it signifies not every, but only a flourishing and vigorous, old age; as the Hebrews note, and the word may seem to imply; whence the LXX. interpreters also render it perfection, to wit, of age, and of the endowments belonging to age.

3 For want and famine they were † so-litrary; fleeing into the wilderness † in former time desolate and waste.

Want and famine, brought upon them either by their own sloth or wickedness, or by God's just judgment. Heb. In want and famine, which aggravates their following solitude. Although want commonly drives persons to places of resort and company for relief, yet they were so conscious of their own guilt, and contemptibleness, and hatefulness to all persons, that they shunned all company, and for fear or shame fled into and lived in desolate places.

4 Who cut up mallows by the bushes, and juniper roots for their meat.

Mallows; or, purslain, or salt or bitter herbs, as the word seems to import, which shows their extreme necessity. By the bushes; or, by the shrubs, nigh unto which they grew; or, with the barks of trees, as the Vulgar Latin renders it. Juniper roots; possibly the word may signify some other plant, for the Hebrews themselves are at a loss for the signification of the names of plants.

5 They were driven forth from among men, (they cried after them as after a thief;)

Giving one another warning of their danger from them.

6 To dwell in the cliffs of the valleys, in † caves of the earth, and in the rocks. + Heb. holes.

As unworthy of human society, and for their beggary and dishonesty suspected and avoided of all men.

7 Among the bushes they brayed; under the nettles they were gathered together.

They brayed, like the wild asses, Job vi. 5, for hunger or thirst. Under the nettles, which seem not proper for that use. This Hebrew word is used but twice in Scripture, and it is acknowledged both by Jewish and Christian writers, that the signification of the Hebrew words which express plants, or beasts, or stones, &c. is very uncertain; and therefore this is by others, and may well be, understood of some kind of thorns; and so this is the same thing with the bushes in the former branch of the verse, under which they hid themselves, that they might not be discovered when they were sought out for justice.

8 They were children of fools, yea, children of † base men: they were viler + Heb. men of no name. than the earth.

Children of fools; either, 1. The genuine children of foolish parents; their children not only by birth, but by imitation; as they only are esteemed the children of Abraham who do the works of Abraham, John viii. 39. Or, 2. Fools, by a common Hebraism, as the sons of men are put for men, and the children of wisdom for wise men, &c. Children of base men, Heb. men without name, i. e. without any degree of credit or reputation; as men of name is put for renowned persons, Gen. vi. 4. Viler than the earth, which we tread and spit upon, and are not willing to touch.

9 And now am I their song, yea, I am their byword.

The matter of their song and derision. They now rejoice in my calamities, because formerly I used my authority to punish such vagrants and miscreants.

10 They abhor me, they flee far from me, † and spare not to spit in my face.

They flee far from me, in contempt of my person, and loathing of my sores. Spare not to spit in my face; not literally, for they kept far from him, as he now said; but figuratively, i. e. they use all manner of contemptuous and reproachful expressions and carriages towards me, not only behind my back, but even to my face.

c See ch. 12.
18. 11 Because he ^c hath loosed my cord, and afflicted me, they have also let loose the bridle before me.

Because he, to wit, God, for it follows, he afflicted me, which was God's work. Hath loosed my cord; either, 1. He hath slackened the string (as this word sometimes signifies) of my bow, and so rendered my bow and arrows useless, either to offend others, or to defend myself, i. e. he hath deprived me of my strength or defence: so this is opposed to that expression, chap. xxix. 20. Or, 2. He hath taken away from me that power and authority wherewith, as with a cord, I bound them to the good behaviour, and kept them within their bounds. The like expression is used in the same sense Job xii. 18. Afflicted me: when they perceived that God, who had been my faithful friend, and constant defender, had forsaken me, and was become mine enemy, they presently took this advantage of showing their malice against me. They have also let loose the bridle; they cast off all former restraints of law, or humanity, or modesty, and gave themselves full liberty to speak or act what they pleased against me. Before me; they durst now do those things before mine eyes, which formerly they trembled lest they should come to my ears.

4 ch. 12. 12 Upon my right hand rise the youth; they push away my feet, and ^d they raise up against me the ways of their destruction.

Upon my right hand. This circumstance is noted, either because this was the place of adversaries or accusers in courts of justice, Psal. cix. 6; Zech. iii. 1; or to show their boldness and contempt of him, that they durst oppose him even on that side where his chief strength lay. Rise, to wit, in way of contempt and opposition, or to accuse and reproach me, as my friends now do; as one who by my great, but secret, wickedness have brought these miseries upon myself. The youth, Heb. young striplings, who formerly hid themselves from my presence, chap. xxix. 8. They push away my feet; either, 1. Properly, they trip up my heels Or rather, 2. Metaphorically, they endeavour utterly to overwhelm my goings, and to cast me down to the ground. The ways, i. e. causeways, or banks; so it is a metaphor from soldiers, who raise or cast up banks against the city which they besiege. Or, they raise up a level, or smooth the path by continual treading it; they prepare, and contrive, and use several methods to destroy me. Of their destruction; either, 1. Passively; so the sense is, they raise or heap upon me, i. e. impute to me, the ways, i. e. the causes, of their ruin; they charge me to be the author of their ruin. Or rather, 2. Actively, of that destruction which they design and carry on against me; which best suits with the whole context, wherein Job is constantly represented as the patient, and wicked men as the agents.

13 They mar my path, they set forward my calamity, they have no helper.

As I am in great misery, so they endeavour to stop all my ways out of it, and to frustrate all my counsels and courses of obtaining relief or comfort. And although Job had no hopes of a temporal deliverance or restitution, yet he could not but observe and resent the malice of those who did their utmost to hinder it. Or the sense is, They pervert all my ways, putting perverse and false constructions upon them, censuring all my conscientious discharges of my duty to God and men, as nothing but craft and hypocrisy. They set forward my calamity; increasing it by their bitter taunts, and invectives, and censures. Or, they profit by, or are pleased and satisfied with, my calamity. It doth them good at the heart to see me in misery. They have no helper: this is added as an aggravation of their malice; they impudently persisted in their malicious designs against me, though none encouraged or assisted them therein. Or, even they who had no helper, who were themselves in a forlorn and miserable condition; and yet they could so far forget or overlook their own calamities as to take pleasure in mine.

14 They came upon me as a wide breaking in of waters: in the desolation they rolled themselves upon me.

As a wide breaking in of waters; as fiercely and violently as a river doth when a great breach is made in the bank which kept it in. Heb. as at a wide breach; as a besieging army, having made a breach in the walls of the city, do suddenly and forcibly rush into it. In the desolation; or, for or instead of a desolation, i. e. that they might utterly destroy me, and make me desolate. Or, in the waste place, i. e. in that part of the bank or wall which was wasted or broken down. They rolled themselves upon me; as the waters or soldiers come rolling or tumbling in at the breach.

15 Terrors are turned upon me: they pursue † my soul as the wind: and my [†] my principal welfare passeth away as a cloud.

Terrors, to wit, from God, who sets himself against me, and in some sort joins his forces with these miscreants. Are turned upon me; are directed against me, to whom they seem not to belong, as being the portion of wicked men. My soul, Heb. my principal or excellent one, i. e. my soul, which is fitly so called, as being the chief part of man; as it is called a man's glory, Gen. xlix. 6, and his only one, Psal. xxii. 20, and which is the proper seat and object of Divine terrors, as his body was of his outward pains and ulcers. As the wind, i. e. speedily, vehemently, and irresistibly. My welfare; all the happiness and comfort of my life. As a cloud; which is quickly dissolved into rain, or dissipated by the sun, or driven away with the wind.

16 ^e And now my soul is poured out ^e Ps. 42. 4 upon me; the days of affliction have taken hold upon me.

My soul is poured out; all the strength and powers of my soul are melted, and fainting, and dying away, through my continued and insupportable sorrows and calamities. Upon me; or, within me, as this Hebrew particle is elsewhere used, as Psal. xliii. 5, 6; Isa. xxvii. 9; Hos. xi. 8.

17 My bones are pierced in me in the night season: and my sinews take no rest.

My bones are pierced: Heb. It, to wit, the terror or affliction last mentioned; or, He, i. e. God, hath pierced my bones. This is no slight and superficial, but a most deep wound, that reacheth to my very heart, and bones, and marrow. Nothing in me is so secret but it reacheth it, nothing so hard and solid but it feels the weight and burden of it. In me, Heb. from above me, by an arrow shot from Heaven, whence my calamities come, and that in a singular and eminent manner. Or, by that which is upon me: the sores which are upon my skin, or outward flesh, do pierce and pain me even to the bones. For now he is come from describing the terrors of his mind, to express the torments of his body. In the night season; when others do, and I should, receive some rest and refreshment. My sinews; and the flesh of my body which covereth the sinews, and is mixed with them, and may seem to be synecdochically expressed by the sinews, which are the strength and support of the flesh. So he signifies that neither his bones nor his flesh resteth. Or, and my veins or arteries, which rest or move slowly when the mind and body are well composed; but in Job did move vehemently and restlessly, by reason of his great heat, and pain, and passion.

18 By the great force of my disease is my garment changed: it bindeth me about as the collar of my coat.

My disease is so strong and prevalent, that it breaks forth every where in my body, in such plenty of purulent and filthy matter, that it infects and discolours my very garments. Others, By the great power of God my garment is changed. In both these translations the words, of my disease, and of God, are not in the Hebrew text, but are supplied by the translators. But the words are by some not untruly nor unfitly rendered thus, without any supplement, With great force my garment is changed; for so this verb is used, 1 Kings xxii. 30. So the sense is, I cannot shift or put off my garment without great strength and difficulty; the reason whereof is rendered in the following words. It bindeth me about; it cleaveth fast to me, being glued by that filthy matter issuing from my sores. As the collar of my coat; as my collar girdeth in and cleaveth to my neck. He alludes to the fashion of the Eastern outward garments, which were seamless, and all of a piece, and had a straight mouth at the top, which was brought over the head, and contracted and fastened close about the neck.

19 He hath cast me into the mire, and I am become like dust and ashes.

He hath made me contemptible, and filthy, and loathsome for my sores, my whole body being a kind of quagmire, in regard of the filth breaking forth in all its parts; and I am become like dust and ashes, like one dead and turned to dust; more like a rotten carcass than a living man.

20 I cry unto thee, and thou dost not hear me: I stand up, and thou regardest me not.

Thou dost not hear me, to wit, so as to answer or help me. I stand up, or, I stand, to wit, before thee, i. e. I pray, as this phrase signifies, Jer. xv. 1; xviii. 20, this being a gesture of prayer, Matt. vi. 5. And so the same thing is here repeated in other words, after the manner. Or, I persist or persevere in praying; I pray importunately and continually, as thou requirest. Thou regardest me not; so the particle not is supplied out of the former clause. Or without the negation, thou knowest or observest me, and all my griefs and cries, and yet dost not pity nor help me, but rather takest pleasure in the contemplation of my calamities, as the following words imply. Or it may be taken interrogatively, Dost thou regard me? i. e. thou dost not.

21 Thou art † become cruel to me: with † thy strong hand thou opposeth thyself against me.

Become cruel, Heb. turned to be cruel; as if thou hadst changed thy very nature, which is kind, and merciful, and gracious; and such thou hast been formerly in thy carriage to me; but now thou art grown severe, and rigorous, and inexorable. Thou opposeth thyself against me; thy power wherewith I hoped and expected that thou wouldst have supported me under my troubles thou usest against me.

22 Thou liftest me up to the wind; thou causeth me to ride upon it, and dissolveth my † substance.

Thou liftest me up to the wind; thou dost not suffer me to rest or lie still for a moment, but disquietest me, and exposit me to all sorts of storms and calamities; so that I am like chaff or stubble lifted up to the wind, and violently tossed hither and thither in the air, without the least stop or hinderance. To ride upon it, i. e. to be carried and hurried about by it. By this restlessness, and the vehemency of these winds, my body is almost consumed and wasted, and my heart is melted within me.

23 For I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the house appointed for all living.

I see nothing will satisfy thee but my death, which thou art bringing upon me in a lingering and dismal manner. To the house appointed for all living; to the grave, to which all living men are coming and hastening.

24 Howbeit he will not stretch out his hand to the † grave, though they cry in his destruction.

There is great variety and difficulty in the sense and connection of these words. They may be joined either, 1. With the following verse, as describing Job's compassion to others in affliction, which by the principles of reason and religion should have procured him some pity from God and men in his affliction. And to that purpose the words are or may be translated thus: But was not my prayers for them (which words may be understood out of the following clause) when he stretched out his hand? (to wit, against them to destroy them;) in his destruction or oppression (understand it actively, i. e. when God was about to destroy any other man or men) was not (the negation being understood out of the former branch of the verse, as is usual) my cry for them? the feminine gender being put for the masculine, as it is elsewhere; or for these things, the feminine being put for the neuter; that is, for those destructive calamities which were upon them. Or, 2. With the foregoing verse. And so these words contain either, 1. A consolation against the evil last mentioned; so the sense is, Though God will undoubtedly bring me to the grave by these torments, yet this comforts me, that surely he will not stretch out his hand (to wit, to afflict or punish me further, as this phrase is used, Exod. iii. 20; Isa. ix. 12, 13) in the grave, though they, i. e. the perishing persons, cry or roar (i. e. be sorely pained and tormented) in his destruction, i. e. whilst God is destroying them. Or this last clause may be read interrogatively, Is there any cry in his destruction? When a man is cut off or destroyed by death, doth he then cry and complain? No, there is an end of all these miseries. Or rather, 2. A confirmation of what he last said. For the whole context shows that Job is not taking any comfort to himself, but rather aggravating his sufferings. I know, saith he, that I am a dead man, and my condition is desperate, for surely he, i. e. God, will not stretch out his hand (to wit, to save or rescue me, as this phrase is used, Psal. xviii. 17; cxliv. 7, compared with Acts iv. 30,) to or in the grave, (i. e. to a dead man, such as I am in effect, having not only one foot, but in a manner both feet, in the grave, as being upon the very brink of the pit,) though they cry (to wit, unto God, i. e. though there be a great and a general cry and lamentation for him among his friends, or others, and an earnest desire of him, if possibly he might be restored to life again) in his destruction, i. e. when he is destroyed or dead; yet all these cries would be in vain.

25 † Did not I weep † for him that was in trouble? was not my soul grieved for the poor?

Whence is it that neither God nor man show any compassion to me, but both conspire to afflict me, and increase my torments? Doth God now mete out to me the same measure which I meted out to others? Have I now judgment without mercy, because I afforded no mercy nor pity to others in misery? No, my conscience acquits me from this inhumanity. I did not slightly resent, but bitterly mourn and weep over others in their miseries; and therefore I had reason to expect more compassion than I find. Was not my soul grieved for the poor, even for him who was not capable of requiting my kindness in case of his recovery? which shows that my sympathy was real, and not feigned, as it is in some who pretend great sorrow for the rich in their troubles, hoping thereby to insinuate themselves into their favour and friendship, and thereby to procure some advantage to themselves.

26 † When I looked for good, then evil came unto me: and when I waited for light, there came darkness.

Instead of the return of the like pity to me, which I might justly challenge and expect whensoever I should stand in need of it, I meet with a sad disappointment, and my pity is recompensed with others' cruelty to me.

27 My bowels boiled, and rested not: the days of affliction prevented me.

My inward parts boiled without ceasing. The bowels are the seat of passion and of compassion; and therefore this may be understood, either, 1. Of his compassionate and deep sense of others' miseries; which is oft expressed by bowels, as Isa. xvi. 11; Col. iii. 12, and elsewhere, of which he spoke ver. 25, to which he subjoins the contrary usage which he met with, ver. 26. And then, in this first part of ver. 27, he renews the mention of his compassion to others, and in the latter part he adds, by way of antithesis or opposition, that his mercy was requited with cruel afflictions. Or, 2. Of the grievousness of his troubles, which is sometimes expressed by the troubling or boiling of the bowels, or inward parts; as Lam. i. 20. Prevented me, i. e. came upon me suddenly and unexpectedly, when I promised to myself peace and prosperity, as the usual recompence which God promiseth and giveth to such as fear and please him, as I have done.

sun; spending my days in mourning, without any sun-light or comfort; or so oppressed with sadness, that I did not care nor desire to see the light of the sun. Heb. black not by the sun. My very countenance is changed and become black, but not by the sun, which makes many other persons black, Cant. i. 5, 6; but by the force of my disease and deep melancholy, which oftentimes makes a man's visage black and dismal. See Psal. cxix. 83; Lam. v. 10. And this he repeats in plainer terms, ver. 30, as an eminent token of his excessive grief and misery. I stood up; either because my disease and pain made me weary of other postures; or that others might take notice of me, and be moved with pity towards me. I cried with a loud and direful clamour, through great and sudden anguish. In the congregation; where prudence and modesty taught me to forbear it, if extreme necessity and misery had not forced me to it.

29 ¹ I am a brother to dragons, and a companion to || owls.

A brother, to wit, by imitation of their cries: persons of like qualities are oft called brethren, as Gen. xlix. 5; Prov. xviii. 9. To dragons; which howl and wail mournfully in the deserts, Micah i. 8, either through hunger or thirst, or when he fights with and is beaten by the elephant. To owls; whose sad and mournful noises are known. Or, ostriches; which also is noted to make lamentable outcries.

30 ¹ My skin is black upon me, and ^m my bones are burned with heat.

My skin is black upon me; either by his dark-coloured scabs, wherewith his body was in a manner wholly over-spread; or by grief, as before. My bones are burned with heat; the effect of his fever and sorrow, which dried up all his moisture, and caused great inflammations and burning heats within him.

31 My harp also is turned to mourning, and my organ into the voice of them that weep.

Either, 1. I have now nothing but bitter lamentations instead of my former expressions of joy. Or, 2. Those very things which formerly were occasions and instruments of my delight, do now renew and aggravate my sorrows.

CHAP. XXXI.

He protesteth his continency and chastity; God's providence, presence, and judgments; his motives, 1—4. His just dealings, 5—8. Free from adultery, which ought to be punished by the magistrate, 9—12. His just carriage to his servants, and the reason, 13—15. His bounty to the poor, for fear of God, and his highness, 16—23. Not covetous, nor idolatrous, which ought to be punished by the magistrate, 24—28. Not revengeful, 29, 30. Hospitable to strangers, 31, 32. His repentance, 33. He wisheth God would answer, and his words might be recorded, 35—37. His imprecation against himself, if he spoke not the truth, 38—40.

1 ^a Matt. 5.28. I MADE a covenant with mine ^a eyes; why then should I think upon a maid?

So far have I been from wallowing in the mire of uncleanness, or any gross wickedness, wherewith you charge me, that I have abstained even from the least occasions and appearances of evil, having made a solemn resolution within myself, and a solemn covenant and promise to God, that I would not wantonly or lustfully fix mine eyes or gaze upon a maid, lest mine eyes should affect my heart, and stir me up to further filthiness. Hereby we plainly see that that command of Christ, Matt. v. 29, was no new command peculiar to the gospel, as some would have it, but the very same which the law of God revealed in his word, and written in men's hearts by nature, imposed upon men in the times of the Old Testament. See also 2 Pet. ii. 14; 1 John ii. 16. Should I think upon, i. e. indulge myself in filthy and lustful thoughts? Seeing I was obliged, and accordingly took care, to guard mine eyes, I was upon the same reason obliged to restrain my imagination. Or, why then should I consider, or contemplate, or look curiously, or thoughtfully, or diligently? Since I had made such a covenant, why should I not keep it? A maid; which is emphatically added, to show that that circumstance which provokes the lust of others had no such power over him, and that he restrained himself from the very thoughts and desires of filthiness with such persons, wherewith the generality of men allowed themselves to commit gross fornication, as deeming it to be either none, or but a very little sin. Withal he insinuates with how much more caution he kept himself from uncleanness with any married person.

2 For what ^b portion of God is there ^b ch. 20. 29. from above? and what inheritance of the ^{& 27. 13.} Almighty from on high?

The reason of my continency and chastity was, the consideration of God's presence, and providence, and judgments. What portion of God; what fruit or recompence might be expected from God for those who do such things? Nothing but destruction, as it follows, ver. 3. I considered, that though these practices might at first please me, yet they would be bitterness in the latter end. From above; an emphatical phrase, to note, that how secretly and slyly soever unchaste persons carry the matter, so as men cannot reprove or reproach them; yet there is one who stands upon a higher place, whence he hath the better prospect, who seeth both when, and in what manner, and with what design they do these things.

3 Is not destruction to the wicked? and a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity?

Destruction is their portion, and a strange punishment, some extraordinary and dreadful judgment, which of right and course belongs to them, and only to such as they are, although it hath pleased God out of his sovereign power to inflict it upon me, who have lived in all good conscience before him. Heb. an alienation or estrangement, to wit, from God and from his favour. Had I been such a one, I neither could nor should have expected any kindness or mercy from God, as now I do.

4 ^c Doth not he see my ways, and count ^c 2 Chron. 16. all my steps? ^{3. ch. 34. 21.} ^{Prov. 5. 21.} ^{& 15. 3. Jer. 32. 19.}

i. e. All my counsels and courses. This is another reason why he was so circumspect and exact in restraining his thoughts, and senses, and whole man from sinful practices, because he knew that God would discern them, and therefore punish them, as he said, ver. 3.

5 If I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath hastened to deceit;

Walked, i. e. conversed in the world, dealt with men. With vanity, i. e. with lying, or falsehood, or hypocrisy, as this word is oft used, as Psal. iv. 2; xii. 3; xxxvi. 3; Prov. xxx. 8, and as the next words explain it. If my foot hath hastened to deceit; if when I have had any temptation or opportunity of enriching myself, by defrauding or wronging others, I have readily and greedily complied with it, as hypocrites (such as you account me) use to do, and have not rejected and abhorred it; for more is here understood than is expressed. The sense is imperfect, and supposeth an imprecation, which is either understood, after the manner of the Hebrews, or expressed in the next verse.

6 † Let me be weighed in an even [†] Let him weigh me in balance of justice. balance, that God may know mine integrity.

This is either, 1. An imprecation; or rather, 2. A submission to trial, as the following words show. The sense is, I am so far from being conscious to myself of any hypocrisy or secret wickedness, whereby I have brought these unusual judgments upon myself, as you traduce me, that I desire nothing more than to have my heart and life weighed in just balances, and searched out by the all-seeing God. That God may know, Heb. and let him know (i. e. let him acknowledge and show that he knoweth and approveth; or let him make known to my friends and others, who censure or condemn me. Or, and he will know, (i. e. upon search he will find out; which is spoken of God after the manner of men) mine integrity. So this is an appeal to God to be witness of his sincerity, and to vindicate him from the imputation of hypocrisy.

7 If my step hath turned out of the way, and ^d mine heart walked after mine ^d See Num. 15. 39.

Eccles. 11. 9. eyes, and if any blot hath cleaved to Ezek. 6. 9. mine hands ;
Matt. 5. 29.

If I have wittingly, and willingly, and customarily (as you accuse me) swerved from the way of truth and justice which God hath prescribed to me ; for otherwise no man here is so just, but he sometimes takes a wrong step, Eccles. vii. 20. If I have let my heart loose to covet and seek after forbidden things, which mine eyes have seen ; which may design either, 1. The lust of uncleanness ; but of that he had spoken ver. 1, and reneweth the discourse ver. 9. Or rather, 2. The lust of covetousness, which is called the lust of the eyes, 1 John ii. 16, partly because it is oft caused by sight, as Josh. vii. 21, and partly because oftentimes all the satisfaction it gives is to please the sight, Eccles. v. 11. And this sin is most legible in the following punishment, ver. 8, where his loss answers to this evil gain. The phrase notes the common method and progress of sin, which is to enter by the eye to the heart, Gen. iii. 6 ; Numb. xv. 39 ; Eccles. ii. 10 ; xi. 9. Any blot, or blemish, to wit, any unjust gain. If I have in my hands or possession any goods gotten from others by fraud or violence, which would be a great scandal and a blot to my reputation.

8 Then let me sow, and let another eat ; yea, let my offspring be rooted out.

Let strangers enjoy the fruit of my labours, according to God's curse, Lev. xxvi. 16 ; Deut. xxviii. 30. My offspring ; as this word is used, Job v. 25 ; xxvii. 14. Or rather, my increase, or growths, or sprouts, i. e. all my plants, and fruits, and improvements. For, 1. So the word properly signifies. 2. So this latter branch of the verse explains the former, as is most frequent in this and some other books of Scripture. 3. He had not now any children to be rooted out.

9 If mine heart have been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid wait at my neighbour's door ;

By a woman, to wit, by a strange woman, or rather by my neighbour's wife, as the next words limit it ; for of a maid he spoke before, ver. 1, and this cannot be meant of his own wife. He saith, by a woman, i. e. either by gazing upon her beauty, so as to be enamoured with it, and to lust after her ; or by her persuasions or allurements. Or, concerning a woman, i. e. concerning impure conversation with a forbidden woman. The phrase is very emphatical, taking from himself and others the vain excuses wherewith men use to palliate their sins, by pretending that they did not design the wickedness, but were merely drawn in and seduced by the strong enticements and provocations of others ; all which Job supposeth, and yet nevertheless owns the great guilt of such practices even in that case, as well knowing that temptation to sin is no justification of it. Laid wait at my neighbour's door ; watching for a fit opportunity to defile his wife. Compare Prov. vii., ix.

10 Then let my wife grind unto another, and let others bow down upon her.

Let my wife grind unto another ; either, 1. Let her be taken captive, and made a slave to grind in other men's mills ; which was a sore and vile servitude, Exod. xi. 5 ; Judg. xvi. 21 ; Isa. xlvi. 2 ; Matt. xxiv. 41. Or rather, 2. Let her be defiled by another man, as the next words expound it, and as the Hebrews understand it, and as this very phrase is used by very ancient, both Greek and Latin, authors [of which see my Latin Synopsis on this place]. And this is to be cautiously understood, not as if Job desired or would permit a requital in the same kind, but only, that if in that case God should give up his wife to such a wickedness, he should acknowledge his justice in it, and (though with abhorrence of the sin) accept of that punishment of it. Let others bow down upon her ; another modest expression of a filthy action ; whereby the Holy Ghost gives us a pattern and a precept to avoid not only unclean actions, but also all immodest expressions.

11 For this is an heinous crime ; yea, it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges.

To wit, adultery, whether committed by choice and design, or by the solicitation of the woman, ver. 9. Heb. an iniquity of the judges, i. e. which belongs to them to take cognizance of, and to punish, and that with death ; and that not only by the law of Moses, Deut. xxii. 22, but even by the law of nature, as appears from the known laws and customs of heathen nations in that case. See also Gen. xxxviii. 24. This is opposed to those secret and lesser sins, which are only known to and punished by God.

12 For it is a fire that consumeth to destruction, and would root out all mine increase.

For this sin would be as a secret but consuming fire, wasting my estate and reputation, and body and soul too, provoking God, and enraging the husband, and bringing down some extraordinary vengeance upon me ; and therefore the fear of God kept me from this and such-like wickedness. All mine increase, i. e. all my estate : compare Prov. vi. 27.

13 If I did despise the cause of my manservant or of my maidservant, when they contended with me ;

If I did despise the cause of my man-servant ; if I used my power over him to overthrow him or his just rights. And seeing it is known that I was so just and kind to them, over whom I had such unlimited power, it is not probable that I should be guilty of such cruelty to others, as you impute to me. When they contended with me ; either for imposing heavier burdens than they could bear ; or for not providing for them those supports which their nature and necessity required, or for any other plausible cause. I heard them patiently and indifferently, and did them right even against myself, if by any misinformation or passion I had done them any injury.

14 What then shall I do when God riseth up ? and when he visiteth, what shall I answer him ?

When God riseth up, to wit, to plead the cause of the oppressed against the oppressor, and to execute judgment, as this phrase is used, Psal. lxxviii. 1 ; Zech. ii. 13, and elsewhere. I used my servant like one who was also myself a servant, and had a Master in heaven, Col. iv. 1, to whom I was to give an account of my carriage to my servant and to all men. When he visiteth, i. e. when he shall call me to his tribunal, and severely examine all my actions, and particularly the cause between me and my servant, what apology shall I make for myself ?

15 Did not he that made me in the womb make him ? and did not one fashion us in the womb ?

I considered that he was, though my servant, yet my fellow creature, made by the same God, and therefore one of God's subjects, whom I could not abuse without the injury of his supreme Lord. Did not one fashion us in the womb, Heb. did he not form us in one womb ? not in one individual womb, but in a womb of the same kind, in a human womb, with a body and soul of the same nature and quality, a reasonable and immortal creature, and made after God's image, no less than myself, to whom therefore I owed some respect for God's sake.

16 If I have withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail ;

Withheld the poor from their desire, i. e. denied them what they desired of me, either in justice or from necessity ; for he was not obliged to grant their vain or inordinate desires. Caused the eyes of the widow to fail, to wit, with tedious expectation of my justice or charity. I durst neither deny nor delay my help when they required and needed it.

17 Or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof ;

Eaten my morsel myself alone ; without communicating part of my provisions or estate to the poor, as it follows. The fatherless : this one kind of necessitous persons is put for all the rest.

18 (For from my youth he was brought up with me, as with a father, and I have guided her from my mother's womb ;)

protection. As with a father, i. e. with all the diligence and tenderness of a father. I have guided her, i. e. the widow, mentioned ver. 16, and commonly joined with the fatherless. From my mother's womb, i. e. from my tender years; ever since I was capable of discerning good and evil, I have made conscience of this duty; and this my continuance in well-doing is a good evidence of my sincerity therein.

19 If I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering;

When it was in my power to clothe and arm them against cold and nakedness.

20 If his loins have not ^h blessed me, and ^h if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep;

Blessed me, i. e. given him occasion to bless and praise me, and to pray to God to bless me for covering them; the loins being put synecdochically for the whole body: see the like expression Deut. xxiv. 13, and compare Gen. iv. 10; Luke xvi. 9. With the fleece of my sheep; with clothing made of my wool.

21 If I have lifted up my hand ^l against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate:

To smite him with the fist of wickedness, as the phrase is, Isa. lviii. 4; to bring him to the judgment-seat, that under colour of justice I might take away his right, as powerful oppressors use to do, or any ways to threaten, injure, or crush him. When I saw my help in the gate; when I understood my advantage against him, and that I could influence the judges to do what I pleased.

22 Then let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade, and mine arm be broken from || the bone.

I am contented that that arm which hath been so wickedly employed may either rot off, or fall out of joint, and so be useless and burdensome to me.

23 For ^m destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure.

I was so far from denying or questioning God's providence, wherewith you seem to charge me, that I always revered it; and when by reason of my great wealth, and power, and interest I had little reason to fear man, I stood in awe of God and of his judgments, and made it my care and business to please God. His highness, or excellency, or majesty, which is most glorious and terrible. I could not endure; I found myself utterly unable either to oppose his power, or to bear his wrath, and therefore I durst not provoke him by any impiety or injustice.

24 ^a If I have made gold my hope, or have said to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence;

My hope, i. e. the matter of my hope and trust, placing my chief joy and satisfaction in worldly wealth, expecting safety and happiness from it. Compare Psal. lxxii. 10.

25 ^o If I rejoiced because my wealth was great, and because mine hand had ^h gotten much;

If I rejoiced, to wit, carnally and excessively, esteeming myself happy therein without God's love and favour; for otherwise it is not only lawful, but a duty and gift of God, moderately and thankfully to rejoice in the good things of this life; of which see Deut. xii. 7; Eccles. ii. 24-26; iii. 12, 13; v. 18, 19. Because mine hand had gotten much; ascribing my wealth to my own wit or industry, rather than to God's goodness and mercy. And these sins he the rather mentions, partly for his own vindication, lest it should be thought that God took away his estate because he had abused it to pride, or carnal confidence, or luxury, or the oppression of others, &c.; and partly for the instruction of mankind in succeeding generations, that they might take notice of the malignity and odiousness of these practices, which by most men are reputed either laudable or harmless, or at worst but light and trivial miscarriages.

26 ^p If I beheld † the sun when it shined, or the moon walking † in brightness;

If I beheld; not simply, nor only with admiration; (for it is a glorious work of God, which we ought to contemplate and admire;) but for the end here following, or so as to ascribe to it the honour peculiar to God. The sun, Heb. the light, to wit, the sun, as appears by the opposition of the moon following, which is called the light here, and Gen. i. 16; Psal. cxxxvi. 7, 8, by way of eminency, because it is the great light, and the fountain of light to this visible world.

And this is understood either, 1. Of Job's worldly glory or prosperity, which is oft compared to light in Scripture, as the contrary is to darkness. And so the sense of these and the following words is, If I reflected upon my wealth and glory with pride, and admiration, and satisfaction. But this he had now mentioned in plain and proper terms, ver. 25, and therefore it is not likely that he should now repeat the same thing in dark and metaphorical expressions. And although this be a great sin before God, yet this is not one of those sins which fall under the cognizance of human judges, as it here follows, ver. 28. Or rather, 2. Of the sun in the firmament; and so this place speaks of the idolatrous worship of the host of heaven, and especially of the sun and moon, the most eminent and glorious of that number, which was the most ancient kind of idolatry, and was most frequent in the Eastern countries, in one of which Job lived. When it shined, i. e. in its full strength and glory; for then it did most affect men's eyes and hearts with admiration at its beauty and benefits, and so move them to adore it. Or, when it began to shine, (the complete verb being used of the beginning of it, as he reigned is oft put for he began to reign.) i. e. at its first rising, which was a special and the chief time for its adoration. Walking in brightness; when it shines most clearly; or when it is at the full, for then especially did the idolaters worship it.

27 And my heart hath been secretly enticed, or † my mouth hath kissed my hand:

Secretly; in my inward thoughts or affections, whilst I made open profession of my adherence to God and to the true religion. Enticed, or seduced, or deceived, by its plausible and glorious appearance, which might easily cheat a credulous and inconsiderate person to believe that there was something of a divinity in it, and so induce him to worship it. This emphatical expression seems to be used with design to teach the world this necessary and useful truth, that no mistake or error of mind would excuse the practice of idolatry. Or my mouth, Heb. and my mouth, which seems more proper here, because the secret error of the mind, without some such visible action and evidence as here follows, had not been punishable by the judges. Kissed my hand, in token of worship; whereof this was a sign, whether given to men, as Gen. xli. 40; Psal. ii. 12, or to idols, 1 Kings xix. 18; Hos. xiii. 2. And when the idols were out of the reach of idolaters, that they could not kiss them, they used to kiss their hands, and, as it were, to throw kisses at them; of which we have many examples in heathen writers; of which see my Latin Synopsis on this place.

28 This also ^q were ^q an iniquity to be ^q punished by the judge: for I should have denied the God that is above.

This also, no less than the other forementioned sins, adultery, oppression, &c. By the judge, i. e. by the civil magistrate; who being advanced and protected by God, is obliged to maintain and vindicate his honour, and consequently to punish idolatry. And this did not cease to be his duty, although the magistrates of the world in Job's time were so far from this, that they themselves also were idolaters. Yet considering that both Job and his friends, who lived in his time and neighbourhood, were most probably the posterity or kindred of Abraham and his family, and by him or his instructed in the knowledge of the true God, and were also men of great power and authority in their places; it seems most likely that they did restrain and punish idolatry in their several jurisdictions, or at least in their own large and numerous families, where the masters anciently had power of life and death without control. I should have denied God; not directly, (for nothing is more evident than this, that divers of the wiser heathens, who did worship the sun and moon, did yet acknowledge and adore the sovereign and supreme God over and above all,) but by consequence and construction, because this was to rob God of his prerogative, by giving to the creature that religious honour or worship which is peculiar to God. That is above; who is above the sun and moon, not only in place, his glorious mansion and palace being far above all visible heavens, but also in power and dignity, or adorable excellency.

29 'If I rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated me, or lifted up myself when evil found him :

I was so far from malice and revenging myself of mine enemy, which is the common and allowed practice of ungodly men, that I did not so much as desire or delight in his ruin, when it was brought upon him by other hands. Compare Exod. xxiii. 4; Prov. xxiv. 17, 18. Whence we may judge whether the great duty of loving and forgiving our enemies be a peculiar precept of Christianity, or whether it be a natural and moral duty, and a part and act of that charity which now is, and ever was, the duty of one man to another in all ages. Lifted up myself, Heb. stirred up myself; to rejoice and insult over his misery.

30 'Neither have I suffered † my mouth to sin by wishing a curse to his soul.

My mouth, Heb. my palate, which being one of the instruments of speech, is put for another, or for all the rest. The sense is, if any secret passion or desire of his hurt did arise in me, I forthwith suppressed it, and did not suffer it to grow and break forth into an imprecation of hurt to him.

31 If the men of my tabernacle said not, Oh that we had of his flesh! we cannot be satisfied.

The men of my tabernacle, i. e. my domestics and familiar friends, who were much conversant with me in my house, and were witnesses of my carriage to others, and of their carriages to me, and therefore best able to judge in the case. Of his flesh; either, 1. Of Job's flesh, which is thought to be an expression either, 1. Of their fervent love to him, caused by his great tenderness and kindness to them. But his meek and gentle carriage to his servants he had expressed before in plain terms, ver. 13; and therefore it is not likely he would repeat it, at least in such an obscure and ambiguous phrase, as is no where used in this sense, and is used in a contrary sense, chap. xix. 22. Or, 2. Of their hatred and rage against him, for the excessive trouble he put upon them in the entertainment of strangers, which follows, ver. 32. But it is very improbable, either that so just and merciful a man as Job would put intolerable burdens upon his servants; or that some extraordinary trouble brought upon them by hospitality would inflame them to such a height of rage as this phrase implies, against so excellent and amiable a master. Or, 2. Of the flesh and other provisions made by Job for strangers: He feeds them liberally, but scarce alloweth us time to satisfy ourselves therewith; which also is very unlikely. Or rather, 3. Of the flesh of Job's enemy, of whom he last spoke, ver. 29, 30. And so this is an amplification and further confirmation of Job's charitable disposition and carriage to his enemy, although his cause was so just, and the malice of his enemies was so notorious and unreasonable, that all who were daily conversant with him, and were witnesses of his and their mutual carriages, did condemn and abhor them for it, and were so concerned and zealous in Job's quarrel, that they protested they could eat their very flesh, and could not be satisfied without it. And yet notwithstanding all these provocations of others, he restrained both them and himself from executing vengeance upon them, as David afterwards did in a like case, 1 Sam. xxiv. 4; 2 Sam. xvi. 9, 10. We cannot be satisfied, to wit, without eating his flesh.

32 'The stranger did not lodge in the street: but I opened my doors || to the traveller.

The stranger; or, traveller, as it follows. Did not lodge in the street; but in my house, according to the laws of hospitality, and the usage of those times, when there were no public inns provided for the conveniency of such persons: see Gen. xviii. 3; xix. 2; Judg. xix. 15, 21.

33 If I covered my transgressions || as Adam, by hiding mine iniquity in my bosom :

This he adds to prevent or answer an objection. So the sense is, either, 1. And whereas amongst these and other virtues it may well be presumed that I had divers failings, as I do not now deny them, so I never covered them, but was forward to confess them to God or to men, as I had occasion. Or, (which I propose with submission to better judgments,) 2. If I used all this care and caution in my carriage towards strangers, and enemies, and others only as a cloak to any secret and subtle way of wickedness, such as you accuse me of, and did not seek to purge out all sin as in God's sight, but only to hide my sins from men, and to have the better opportunity for oppressing others, or indulging myself in any other close sin, under a colour, and with a reputation of justice and holiness. As Adam; either, 1. As Adam did in Paradise; which history is recorded by Moses, Gen. iii. 7, &c., and was doubtless imparted by the godly patriarchs to their children before Moses's time. Or, 2. Like a man, or after the manner of men in their corrupt estate. Compare Hos. vi. 7. In my bosom; in my own breast, and from the sight of all men.

34 Did I fear a great *multitude, or † x Ex. 23. 2 did the contempt of families terrify me, that I kept silence, and went not out of the door ?

This verse either, 1. Contains new matter, and another argument or evidence of his integrity, taken from his courage and faithfulness in the discharge of his duty as a magistrate. The interrogation implies a denial; and so the sense is either, 1. This, I did not fear for fear of a great multitude, or for any contempt, or reproach, or other inconvenience which might befall me from great and numerous families, or combinations of people, who were engaged for him who had an unrighteous cause, forbear to speak for the poor oppressed and injured person whom they all opposed, or deny to go out of the door of my house to plead his cause, as a timorous and man-pleasing judge would have done. Or, 2. This, Though I could have terrified or violently oppressed a great multitude, because of my great power and interest, yet did the most contemptible persons or families terrify me, i. e. I was afraid to do them any injury, not for fear of them, as appears from the former clause, but for fear of God; therefore I kept silence, and went not out of the door, i. e. I durst neither move tongue, nor hand, nor foot against them. Or, 2. It contains an amplification or confirmation of what he said, ver. 33; either thus, Did I cover or conceal my transgressions, because I was afraid of the rage of the multitude, or of the contempt of families, which would be brought upon me by the confession of my wickedness? Did I therefore keep silence, i. e. forbore to confess my sin, and not go out of my door; but keep at home as one in that case ashamed or afraid to be seen abroad? No, the fear of shame or contempt from men did not hinder me from giving glory to God by confessing my faults. Or rather thus, Did I therefore cover all my oppressions, and frauds, and other wickednesses (wherewith you tax me) with the mask of virtue and piety, and use all possible caution and cunning in my evil courses, because I feared the great multitude, (who were my friends and admirers, but in case of the discovery of my wickedness would have hated and persecuted me,) or because the contempt of so many families (whose favour and good opinion I needed or desired) terrified me? Then (as the particle vau is oft used, i. e. if that were really my case) I should be silent, (I should silently and patiently bear all the strokes of God, and all the reproaches of my friends,) and not go out of the door of my house, as one ashamed to show his face before men. But my condition being through God's mercy far otherwise, and my conscience bearing me witness of my integrity in these and many other things, I dare now lift up my head, and open my mouth to plead my cause, and I desire nothing more than a fair hearing; Oh that one would hear me! as it follows in the next verse.

2 ch. 13. 22.

35 'Oh that one would hear me! || be- hold, my desire is, ^athat the Almighty would answer me, and ^bthat mine ad- versary had written a book.

Oh that one would hear me! oh that I might have my cause heard by any just and impartial judge! That the Almighty would answer me, i. e. answer my desire herein; either by hearing me himself, or by appointing some indif- ferent person to judge whether I be such a hypocrite as my friends make me, or an upright person, and whether I have not cause to complain. Mine adversary; whosoever he be that shall contend with me, or accuse me, God him- self not excepted, nay, possibly being chiefly intended, though for reverence to him he forbore to express it. So this is another of Job's irreverent and presumptuous ex- pressions, for which he is so sharply reprov'd afterwards. Had written a book, i. e. had given me his charge written in a book or paper, as the manner was in judicial proceed- ings, that I might put in my answer into the court, which I am ready to do.

36 Surely I would take it upon my shoulder, and bind it as a crown to me.

I would take it, i. e. that book containing my charge or accusation. Upon my shoulder; as a trophy or badge of honour. I should not fear nor smother it, but glory in it, and make open show of it, as that which gave me the happy and long-desired occasion of vindicating myself, which I doubt not fully to do.

37 I would declare unto him the number of my steps; as a prince would I go near unto him.

Unto him, i. e. to my judge, or adversary. The number of my steps, i. e. the whole course of my life and actions, which I would exactly number to him, step by step, so far as I can remember. I would not answer his allegations against me, but furnish him with further matter of the same kind, and then answer all together. As a prince, i. e. with undaunted courage, and confidence, and assurance of suc- cess, as being clearly conscious of my own sincerity; not like a self-condemned malefactor, as my friends sup- pose me to be. Would I go near unto him, and not run away, or hide myself from my judge, as guilty persons desire to do.

38 If my land cry against me, or that the furrows likewise thereof ^acomplain;

To wit, to God for revenge, as the like phrase is used, Gen. iv. 10; Hab. ii. 11, because I have gotten it from the right owners by fraud or violence, as my friends charge me, and as is implied in the next verse.

39 If ^aI have eaten ^bthe fruits there- of without money, or ^chave ^dcaused the owners thereof to lose their life:

Without money; either without paying the price required by the right owner for the land, or by defrauding my work- men of the wages of their labours. To lose their life; kill- ing them, that so I might have undisturbed possession of it, as Ahab did Naboth.

40 Let ^athistles grow instead of wheat, and ^bcockle instead of barley. The words of Job are ended.

To wit, in answer to his friends; for he speaks but little afterwards, and that is to God.

CHAP. XXXII.

Elihu, Job's fourth friend, speaketh: he is angry with Job for justifying himself, and with his three friends for not satis- fying, and yet condemning him, 1—5. He excuseth his youth; but wisdom is from God, and not from age, 6—9; therefore he speaketh, being full of matter, and his spirit constraining him, without accepting any man's person, 10—22.

SO these three men ceased ^ato answer Job, because he ^bwas ^c'righteous in his own eyes.

^a Heb. from answering.
^b c. ch. 33. 9.

i. e. Was self-conceited, and obstinately resolved to justify himself both against God and men; therefore they give him over as incorrigible.

2 Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu the son of Barachel ^bthe Buzite, of the kindred of Ram: against Job was his wrath kindled, because he justified ^chim- self rather than God.

The Buzite; of the posterity of Buz, Nahor's son, Gen. xxii. 21. Of the kindred of Ram, or of Aram; for Ram and Aram are used promiscuously; compare 2 Kings viii. 28, with 2 Chron. xxii. 5; and Ruth iv. 19, with Matt. i. 3. Others, of Abraham, who as he was called Abram, possibly was at first called only Ram. His pedigree is thus particu- larly described, partly for his honour, because his speech de- clares him to be both a wise and a good man; and princi- pally to evidence the truth of this history, which otherwise might seem to be but a poetical fiction. He justified himself rather than God; he justified himself, not without reflection upon God, as dealing too severely with him, and denying him that hearing which he so passionately desired. He took more care to maintain his own innocence than God's glory.

3 Also against his three friends was his wrath kindled, because they had found no answer, and yet had condemned Job.

They had found no answer to Job's allegations and argu- ments, as to the main cause. Had condemned Job as a hypocrite or ungodly man.

4 Now Elihu had ^awaited till Job had spoken, because they ^bwere ^celder than he.

Elihu had waited with patience, as the word notes. Till Job; add, and his three friends, as appears from the follow- ing words. It is a synecdoche, whereof instances have been given before. They were elder than he; and therefore he expected more satisfaction from them, and gave them the precedence in the discourse; wherein he showed his pru- dence and modesty.

5 When Elihu saw that ^athere was no answer in the mouth of ^bthese three men, then his wrath was kindled.

6 And Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite answered and said, I ^aam ^byoung, and ye ^care very old; wherefore I was afraid, and ^d†durst not shew you mine opinion.

To wit, of discovering my weakness and folly, and of being thought forward and presumptuous.

7 I said, Days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom.

Days, i. e. multitude of days, by comparing the next clause of the verse. Or men of days, i. e. of many days or years, old men. Should speak, to wit, wisely and perti- nently, as the next words limit it. Should teach wisdom; should instruct us that are younger in the paths of wisdom, and concerning the wise counsels and ways of God, about which the present controversy lay.

8 But ^athere is a spirit in man: and ^bthe inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.

But; or, surely; it must be confessed. A spirit, to wit, which gives him understanding, as is easily and fitly gathered out of the last words of the verse. And this is to be understood either, 1. Of the human spirit, or reasonable soul, which is in every man. So the sense of the place is, Every man, as a man, whether old or young, hath a reason- able soul, by which he is able in some measure to discern between good and evil, and to judge of men's opinions and discourses; and therefore I also may venture to deliver my opinion. Or, 2. Of the Spirit of God; the latter clause being explicatory of the former, according to the manner. So the sense is, I expected a true and full discovery of the truth in this controversy from persons of your years, wis- dom, and experience. But upon second thoughts I con- sider that the knowledge of these deep and Divine mysteries is not to be had or expected from any man as such, though never so aged or wise; but only from God's Spirit, which alone knoweth the deep things of God. And this Spirit he saith is in man; not in every man, for the words are not universal, but indefinite, and man in this branch is no larger than them who receive Divine inspiration in the next branch. And so the sense is, God is pleased to give his Spirit unto mankind, unto men of all ages and qualities, as he pleaseth; and having given it in some measure to me, I may take the boldness to utter my thoughts. The inspiration of the Almighty, i. e. God's Spirit, or the gracious gifts thereof breathed or infused into man's soul by God. Understanding, to wit, in divine and spiritual matters, which are the matter of this debate and book.

e 1 Cor. 1. 26. 9 °Great men are not always wise: neither do the aged understand judgment.

Great men, i. e. men of eminency for age or learning, or dignity and power, such as Job's three friends seem to have been. Judgment; what is just and right; or the judgment of God, and the methods and reasons of his administrations.

10 Therefore I said, Hearken to me; I also will shew mine opinion.

I said within myself, and now I say it with my mouth. Hearken to me; thou, Job, especially, who art more nearly concerned, (to whom therefore he speaketh in the singular number,) and thy friends with thee.

+ Heb. understandings. + Heb. words. 11 Behold, I waited for your words; I gave ear to your † reasons, whilst ye searched out † what to say.

I waited with silence, and patience, and diligent attention; which therefore I now expect from you. Your reasons; or, reasonings, Heb. understandings; or minds; the depth and strength of your discourses, your most intelligent and forcible arguments against Job; I searched and examined them to the bottom. Whilst ye searched out what to say; whilst you put your inventions upon the rack, and studied to find out all that could be said against him, and to furnish yourselves with the most convincing words and reasons.

12 Yea, I attended unto you, and, behold, there was none of you that convinced Job, or that answered his words:

By solid and satisfactory answers to his assertions and allegations.

f Jer. 9. 23. 1 Cor. 1. 26. 13 'Lest ye should say, We have found out wisdom: God thrusteth him down, not man.

Lest ye should say; it is a defective speech, and may be thus supplied: Thus it was, or God thus left you to your own weakness, and mistakes, and impertinent discourses, lest ye should say, &c., i. e. lest you should ascribe the conquering or silencing of Job to your own wisdom, age, and experience; or lest you should boastingly say, We have discovered and said all that can or need be said in the cause, the sum and substance of the thing, that which may fully and finally end the controversy, which is contained in the following words. God thrusteth him down, not man: these are alleged by Elihu, in the person of Job's three friends, or as their words. The sense is, The stupendous judgments which are upon Job have not been brought upon him by man solely and originally, for then there might have been some ground for Job's complaints, there might have been injustice or cruelty in them; but immediately by the hand of God, of that God, who being omniscient, and just, and true, and merciful, would never have dealt thus hardly with Job if he were not a hypocrite, and guilty of some very gross, though secret, sins; which is the ground-work of our discourses. But, saith Elihu, this argument doth not satisfy me, and therefore bear with me if I seek for better.

† Or, ordered his words. 14 Now he hath not † directed his words against me: neither will I answer him with your speeches.

I am not engaged in this discourse by any provoking words of Job, as you have been, which hath drawn forth your passions and biased your judgments; but merely from zeal for the vindication of God's honour, and love to truth and justice, and a sincere desire to administer to Job matter both of conviction and of comfort. With your words, i. e. with such words or arguments as yours, either weak and impertinent, or fierce and opprobrious.

15 They were amazed, they answered + Heb. they removed speeches from themselves. no more: † they left off speaking.

They, i. e. Job's three friends, of whom he speaks sometimes in the second, and here in the third person, directing his speech to Job and the auditors of this disputation. Were amazed; they stood mute, like persons amazed, not knowing what to reply to Job's arguments, and wondering at his bold and confident assertions of his integrity, and of his interest in God, under such sad and manifest tokens of God's just displeasure against him. They answered no more, although Job gave them just occasion to reprove and confute him for his intemperate speeches and presumptuous and irreverent expressions concerning God.

16 When I had waited, (for they spake not, but stood still, and answered no more;)

Which he repeats as a strange and unreasonable thing, that they should be silent when they had such obligations to speak for the vindication both of God's justice, and of their own truth and reputation.

17 I said, I will answer also my part, I also will shew mine opinion.

I will take my turn, and speak what they have omitted.

18 For I am full of † matter, † the spirit + Heb. words. within me constraineth me. + Heb. the spirit of my belly.

I am full of matter, i. e. I have many things to say in this cause. The spirit within me; either my own spirit or soul, which is wholly dissatisfied with what hath been hitherto spoken, and clearly apprehends what may silence Job, and end the dispute; or God's Spirit, which he hath put in me; the Spirit of understanding, which hath discovered the truth of the matter to me; and the Spirit of zeal, which urgeth me to plead God's cause against Job. Constraineth me; forceth me to speak. It is a metaphor from a man or woman whose belly is full with wind, or with a child, and is never at rest till it be emptied and eased of its burden.

19 Behold, my belly is as wine which † hath no vent; it is ready to burst like + Heb. it not opened. new bottles.

My belly, i. e. my mind or heart, which is oft called a man's belly, as Job xv. 35; Psal. xl. 8; Hab. iii. 16; John vii. 38. As wine; as new wine pent up close in a bottle, as the following words explain it and determine it. The wine is here put for the bottle in which it is, by a common metonymy. New bottles, i. e. bottles of new wine, by the same general figure; for otherwise old bottles are most apt to burst, Matt. ix. 17.

20 I will speak, † that I may be re- + Heb. that I may breathe. freshed: I will open my lips and answer.

That I may be refreshed; that I may ease my mind of those thoughts which now oppress it. I will open my lips and answer; I will not utter impertinent words, but solid answers, to Job's arguments.

21 Let me not, I pray you, † accept g Lev. 19. 15. Dent. 1. 17. & 16. 19. Prov. 24. 23. Matt. 22. 16. any man's person, neither let me give flattering titles unto man.

Do not expect that I should out of fear or respect to any of you speak partially, but bear with my free and plain dealing with you all. As I shall not censure and reproach Job as a hypocrite or profane person, which you have done; so neither shall I flatter him, but faithfully reprove him for his exorbitant speeches of God.

22 For I know not to give flattering titles; in so doing my maker would soon take me away.

I have neither skill nor will to flatter Job or any man so as to debauch my conscience, or corrupt the truth, or speak falsely for his sake. If I should be guilty of that sin, God would quickly and sorely punish me for it. Or without this supplement, my Maker will quickly take me away, to wit, out of this world. I dare not flatter any man, because I consider I must shortly die and go to judgment, to give an account of all my words and actions.

CHAP. XXXIII.

He offereth himself in God's stead to reason with Job, 1—7, who had too hard thoughts of God, who by his greatness giveth no account of his ways, 8—13. God instructeth man by visions, 14—18; by afflictions, 19—22; by his ministry, 23—25. When man prayeth and confesseth, God will be gracious, 26—28. These are God's methods of instructing men, 29, 30.

WHEREFORE, Job, I pray thee, hear my speeches, and hearken to all my words.

Perceiving the error of Job's friends, and that by their violent and opprobrious speeches they had exasperated Job's mind, and thereby hindered the success of their discourses, he applies himself to him in milder ways, and treats him kindly, thereby to gain his attention and affection, that his words might have more acceptance with him. Hearken to all my words; not only to what may please thee, but also to what may convince and reprove thee.

2 Behold, now I have opened my mouth, my tongue hath spoken † in my mouth.

† Heb. in my palate.

Now I have begun to speak, and intend with thy good leave to proceed in my discourse with thee. In my mouth, Heb. in or with my palate; for both tongue and palate are instruments of speech; and, that a man should speak plainly and distinctly, (which he designed to do,) it is necessary that his tongue should oftentimes touch the palate or roof of the mouth.

3 My words shall be of the uprightness of my heart: and my lips shall utter knowledge clearly.

I shall not speak passionately or partially, as one resolved to defend what I have once said, whether true or false; but from an honest mind, or what I verily believe to be true, and from a sincere desire to do thee good. I shall not speak my own fancies or devices, but only that which by diligent study and Divine inspiration I know to be true, and this I shall do plainly and clearly.

9 ^dI am clean without transgression, I am innocent; neither is there iniquity in me.

Not simply and absolutely none, for he oft confesseth himself to be a sinner, as chap. ix. 1, 2, &c.; xiv. 4; but no such transgression or iniquity as might give God just occasion to punish him so severely, as is implied in the next verse, where he blameth God for finding occasions against him, implying that he had given him none by his sins. And thus far Elihu's charge was just and true, and herein it differs from the charge of Job's three friends, who oft accuse him, and that in words much like these, for asserting his own righteousness and innocency; although they did it because they thought him a secret sinner and a hypocrite, whereas Elihu doth it upon other grounds, even because Job's justification of himself was accompanied with reflections upon God, as hath been said.

10 Behold, he findeth occasions against me, *he counteth me for his enemy, e ch. 13. 24. & 16. 9. & 19. 11.

He picketh quarrels with me, and watcheth over and searcheth after all my errors and frailties, as Job said, chap. x. 6; xiv. 16. 17; severely marking what is amiss in me, that thence he may take occasion to punish me worse than mine iniquities deserve. Though I have endeavoured to be his friend and faithful servant all my days, yet he treats me like an enemy. This Job said chap. xiii. 24; xix. 11.

11 'He putteth my feet in the stocks, he marketh all my paths.

f ch. 13. 27. & 14. 19. & 31. 4.

He narrowly pries into all my actions, that he may find matter for further severities against me.

12 Behold, in this thou art not just: I will answer thee, that God is greater than man.

I do not accuse thee of hypocrisy, nor rip up the former errors of thy life; but in this thou art unjust and much to blame, that thou boastest so much of thine own integrity, and chargest God with rigorous dealing, and callest him to an account before thy tribunal, and offerest to dispute the matter with him. That God is greater than man; not only in power and majesty, which thou acknowledgedst, but also in justice, and wisdom, and goodness; and therefore thou dost very foolishly, and presumptuously, and wickedly in contending with him, and censuring his judgments: thou forgettest thy distance from him, and castest off that awe and reverence which thou shouldst constantly maintain towards thy sovereign Lord.

13 Why dost thou *strive against him? g Is. 45. 9.

for †he giveth not account of any of his matters.

† Heb. he answereth not.

Why? upon what grounds and for what ends? What advantage dost thou expect from it? Dost thou strive against him, to wit, in a judicial way? See chap. xiii. 6. He giveth not account of any of his matters; he neither useth, nor is by any law obliged, to give an account to any of his creatures of the grounds and reasons of his judgments or dispensations, as being the supreme and absolute Governor of all persons and things, in whose will and pleasure it becometh all men to acquiesce. And therefore, O Job, thou exceedest all bounds of modesty, and humility, and reverence, and submission, which thou owest to thy Maker, in that thou presumest to demand a reason for his dealings with thee, and to quarrel with him for not giving it to thee at thy desire. Or, he answereth not all his words, i. e. he doth not say, or hath not said, all that he can to justify his actions, which he can do many more ways than we can imagine; but hath revealed so much of his will and ways to mankind as he hath thought meet, and as their narrow capacity can comprehend; as he declareth in the following verses.

14 ^hFor God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not.

h ch. 40. 5. Ps. 62. 11.

For; or, nevertheless, as this particle is sometimes used. Although God doth not give men an account of his matters, yet he doth that for them which is much better, and which is sufficient for them. God speaketh, to wit, unto men by way of instruction or admonition, as appears from the following verses. Once, yea twice, i. e. again and again, or oftentimes, this number being sometimes put indefinitely, as below, ver. 29; 2 Kings vi. 10; Psal. lxii. 11. When one speaking doth not awaken men, God is graciously pleased to give them another admonition. So God, though he will not gratify men's curiosity in inquiring into his hidden judgments, yet he will supply their necessity, and acquaint them with their duty and interest so far as is fit, and they are concerned to know. Yet man; which is easily and fitly understood here from the former branch of this verse, as being the person to whom God speaketh, as appears from the next verse. And such supplements are not unusual in the Hebrew language, and especially in these poetical books, where the style is very concise and short, and many things to be understood. Perceiveth it not; through his inadvertency, or negligence, or dulness. Man therefore hath no reason to charge God as if he were deficient in his notices and manifestations of his will, but to accuse himself for not improving revealed things to his own advantage, but desiring rather to pry into God's secret counsels, which was Job's error.

^{1 Num. 12. 6.} ^{ch. 4. 13.} 15 ¹In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed;

In a dream: this he mentions, as the usual way of God's revealing his mind and will to men in those days, before God's word was committed to writing, as Gen. xx. 6; xli. 1, 28. In a vision of the night: this is added by way of explication and limitation, to show that he speaks not of every dream, but of those Divine dreams in which God was pleased to vouchsafe some vision or representation of his will to the mind of a man. When deep sleep falleth upon men; when men's senses are bound up, and their minds free from all distracting cares and business of the world, and wholly at leisure to receive Divine impressions. In slumberings: this is added, because in this case the man is like one that slumbereth, or between sleeping and waking, or uncertain in which state he is, as Paul could not tell whether he was in the body, or out of the body, when he was in his ecstasy, 2 Cor. xii. 1, 2.

^{k ch. 36. 10,} ^{15.} ^{† Heb. he revealeth, or, unsealeth.} 16 ^kThen †he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction,

i. e. He revealeth his will to the ears and hearts of men, as this phrase is used, Job xxxvi. 10; Psal. xl. 6; Isa. l. 4; and he imprinteth those instructions which he hath revealed to their ears upon their minds, that after they have heard and received them they do not let them slip, as men commonly do most things which they hear, whether from God or men, but do retain and hold them fast, and are fully satisfied and assured of the truth and importance of them. Or, he sealeth their chastening, or correction, for so this word signifies as well as instruction, i. e. he gives them assurance of his purpose of correcting them for their sins, if they do not prevent it by a speedy repentance. Or, he sealeth it (i. e. his word conveyed to their ears and minds) with chastening them, i. e. he gives them assurance of the truth and reality of his revelation by striking them with a sacred dread and horror, as was usual in such dreams or night visions, as we see Job iv. 13, 15; which he did that they might remember it the better, and distinguish this from such vain dreams as are only the productions of man's fancy.

17 That he may withdraw man from † Heb. work. his † purpose, and hide pride from man,

That he, i. e. God, who was expressed ver. 14, and designed by this pronoun he both in the foregoing and following verses. From his purpose, i. e. from the execution of his purpose. Heb. from his work, i. e. from his evil work, as the Chaldee and LXX. understand it; from sin, which is truly and fitly called man's work, because it hath its rise in and from him, and is his own proper work, and very agreeable to his nature in his present corrupt estate; as, on the contrary, all the good that is in man is God's proper and peculiar work, and is generally ascribed to him in Scripture. So this is noted as the design of God's giving man this warning, to keep him from executing that evil work which possibly he had designed to do; of which see examples, Gen. xx. 5, 6; xxxi. 24. Hide pride, i. e. either, 1. To take it away, as God is said to hide sin, when he quite removes and forgives it, Psal. xxxii. 1; and sorrow is said to be hid, Job iii. 10, when it never is nor was; and understanding is said to be hid when it perisheth, Isa. xxix. 14. And pride is here mentioned as the root of those evil purposes or works last mentioned; which for the most part proceed from haughtiness of spirit, whereby men scorn to submit themselves and their wills and actions to God's authority, and presume to advance themselves above God, and resolve to follow their own wills and lusts in spite of God, and with contempt of him. Or pride may be here put for all matter or occasion of pride. And God by this means is said to hide pride from man, because by these glorious and terrible representations of his Divine majesty to a man, he takes him off from the contemplation and admiration of his own excellency, which men are generally very prone to reflect upon, and brings him to a sight of his own nothingness and weakness, and to a sense of his dependence upon God, and to a humble and ready submission to his will and pleasure.

18 He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life † from perishing by the sword.

^{+ Heb. from passing by the sword.} He keepeth back, to wit, by these gracious admonitions, whereby he leads them to repentance, his soul; either the man, who is oft expressed by this part; or his life, as the next branch explains it. From the pit, i. e. from the grave, from death or destruction. From perishing by the sword, i. e. by some dreadful judgment of God which was ready to fall upon him.

19 He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with strong pain:

With pain, or grief; with some painful and dangerous diseases, or bodily distempers, which is the second way whereby God instructs men and excites them to repentance; which also was Job's case. The multitude of his bones with strong pain; the pain pierceth his very bones, even all of them. Or, even the strong multitude of his bones, i. e. his bones, which are both many and strong. Or, according to another reading, the contention of his bones (i. e. the pain of his bones, whereby God contends with him) is strong. This also was Job's case, chap. xxx. 17.

20 ^{1 Ps. 107. 18.} ^{† Heb. meat of desire.} So that his life abhorreth bread, and his soul † dainty meat.

His life, i. e. his soul, as the next clause explains it; or his appetite, which is a sign and an act of life. Bread, i. e. common and necessary food. Dainty meat; such as others do, and he formerly did, much desire and prize.

21 His flesh is consumed away, that it cannot be seen; and his bones that were not seen stick out.

His flesh is consumed away, through pain and pining sickness. That it cannot be seen; because there is none left to be seen; but he who before was fat and flourishing, is now become a mere skeleton. That were not seen, formerly, because they were covered with flesh and fat. But this clause is and may be rendered thus, and his bones are broken, and are not seen; which is to be metaphorically understood.

22 Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave, and his life to the destroyers.

He seems to himself and others to be lost, and past all hopes of recovery; which he adds for Job's comfort in his desperate condition. To the destroyers; to the instruments of death or destruction, whether it be angels, whom God sometimes useth in those cases; or devils, who have the power of death. Heb. ii. 14; or diseases, which by God's appointment are ready to give the fatal blow.

23 If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thousand, to shew unto man his uprightness:

A messenger; either, 1. An angel sent to him from heaven upon this errand; for the angels are ministering spirits, Psal. ciii. 20; Heb. l. 14, and are, and especially in that time and state of the church were, frequently employed by God upon messages to men. But why then should he say one of a thousand angels, seeing any the meanest angel was very competent for this work? Or rather, 2. A prophet or teacher, for such are oft called by this name; as Judg. ii. 1; Mal. ii. 7; iii. 1; Rev. i. 20, and such persons are appointed by God for, and are most commonly employed in, this work. With him; either, 1. With God to plead man's cause, and to pray to God for man. Or rather, 2. With man, who is expressed in the last clause of this verse, and of whom this same pronoun him is twice used in the next verse. Nor is it strange that the pronoun relative is put before the noun to which it belongs, but usual in the Hebrew language, as Exod. ii. 6; Prov. v. 22; xiv. 33, and elsewhere. An interpreter; one whose office and work it is to declare the mind of God unto the sick man, and wherefore God contends with him, and what God would have him to do. One among a thousand; a person rightly qualified for this great and hard work, such as there are but very few, scarce one of a thousand; which expression is used to denote the rarity and fewness of persons, Eccles. vii. 28. By which words he doth covertly reflect upon Job's three friends, and imply that they were not such persons, though they had undertaken to perform this office or work to Job; and withal, modestly intimates, that although he was in himself mean and inferior to all of them, (as he acknowledged,) yet he was selected by God for this work; which he saith not out of a desire of vain boasting of himself, but to dispose Job to a more diligent attention unto, and a more ready entertainment of, his present discourses. His uprightness, or rectitude, or righteousness. His, i. e. either, 1. God's; to convince a man that God is just and right in all his dealings with him, though never so severe; of which Job was not yet convinced. Or rather, 2. Man's; to teach man his duty, or to direct him to the right way and method how he may please God, and procure that mercy and deliverance which he thirsts after; which is not by quarrelling with God, as Job did, but by a humble confession and hearty detestation and forsaking of his sins, and supplication to God for mercy in and through Christ the Redeemer, of whom Job spoke before. Or thus, to discover to man, that although he be afflicted, yet he is an upright and righteous person, and consequently in God's favour; about which good men oft doubt, and need the help of a skilful minister to satisfy them therein. But this seems not so well to suit Job's case, who was sufficiently and more than enough persuaded of his own integrity, and needed no minister to preach that doctrine to him.

24 Then he is gracious unto him, and saith, Deliver him from going down to the pit: I have found \parallel a ransom.

† Or, an atonement.

Then; in that case, or upon the sick man's knowledge and practice of his duty. He; either, 1. The messenger or interpreter last mentioned, who is pitiful unto the sick man, and in compassion to him doth all that he can for him, counselling and comforting him, and praying to God for his recovery in the following words, Deliver him, &c., for the sake of that ransom which thou hast revealed and I have discovered to him. Or rather, 2. God, who is oft in this book designed by this particle he, or him; whose property and prerogative it is to be gracious unto man, and who alone can speak the following words with power and authority. Is gracious unto him; pardoning his sins, and delivering him from his dangerous disease, and from death, and from the hell which attends upon it. And saith to the angel or messenger. Deliver him, to wit, ministerially and declaratively; in which sense the acts of forgiving sins, and reconciling sinners, and saving souls, are ascribed to God's ministers; as John xx. 23; 2 Cor. v. 19, 20; 1 Tim. iv. 16. Declare to him that I have pardoned and will heal him. I have found a ransom: although I might justly destroy him, and should do it, if I were severe to mark what is amiss in him; yet I will spare him, for I have found out an expedient and a way of ransoming and redeeming sinners from death, both temporal and eternal, which they by their sins have deserved, which is by the death of my Son, the Redeemer of the world, which shall be in the fulness of time, and with respect to which I will pardon this sick man, and others that shall repent and sue to me for mercy, as he hath done.

† Heb. than child-hood.

25 His flesh shall be fresher † than a child's: he shall return to the days of his youth:

Fresher than a child's, i. e. more sound and tender. These joyful tidings delivered to him by God's messenger shall revive his spirit, and by degrees restore his former health and vigour. To the days of his youth, i. e. to the same healthful and strong constitution of body which he had in his youth.

26 He shall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him: and he shall see his face with joy: for he will render unto man his righteousness.

He; either, 1. The messenger; or rather, 2. The sick man. Shall pray unto God; being engaged and encouraged to do so, either by the aforesaid gracious message, or by his miraculous recovery through God's goodness. He will be favourable unto him, in hearing and answering his prayers, which before he seemed to neglect. He shall see his face with joy; either, 1. God will look upon the man with a smiling or well-pleased countenance; whereas before he either hid his face from him, or frowned upon him. Or, 2. The man shall then be emboldened and encouraged to look God in the face with comfort and joy; which before he was, not without cause, afraid to do; but now he shall find that God is reconciled to him by the blessed effects of it, both in his body and in his conscience. His righteousness, i. e. according to his righteousness, or the fruit of his righteousness; as on the contrary, iniquity is oft put for the punishment of iniquity. The sense is, he will deal with him as with one reconciled to him through the Mediator, and sincerely repenting of and turning from his former sins unto the serious practice of righteousness and true holiness, and therefore must needs be favourable to him, as he hath declared and engaged himself to be in such cases.

27 \parallel He looketh upon men, and if any ^{† Or, He shall look upon men, and say, I have sinned, and say, I have sinned, &c.} say, I have sinned, and perverted that which was right, and it ^{m 2 Sam. 12. 13. Prov. 28. 13. Luke 15. 21. 1 John 1. 9. a Rom. 6. 21.} profited me not;

He looketh upon men; either, 1. The sick man shall look upon and converse with mankind, his friends, or others, as he did before, and shall say, (as the following word is and may be rendered,) I have sinned, &c., i. e. he shall confess to them that God was not to be blamed, but that he, by his own sin and folly, did bring that evil upon himself. And then he shall acknowledge God's great goodness to him, and shall add what follows in the next verse, He hath delivered my soul, &c., and my life, &c., as they render it. Or rather, 2. God diligently observes all mankind, and their several carriages, especially in sickness and distress. If any say, I have sinned; if there be any man that sincerely saith thus, God hears it, and will pardon and heal him, as it follows. Perverted that which was right; either, 1. I have judged perversely of the just and right ways of God, censuring his proceedings against me as too severe and rigorous, whereas in truth I only was to be blamed. Or, 2. I have perverted God's righteous law by bending it, and making it comply with my crooked ways; or, I have swerved from the right and good way of God's commands; or, I have made crooked paths. So he repeats in other words what he said in the former branch of the verse, I have sinned. It profited me not; I got no good by so doing, as I vainly promised myself; but I got much hurt by it, even diseases, and griefs, and extreme dangers. This was the just fruit of my sins. It is a meiosis, whereby less is said, and more is understood, of which we have seen many examples before.

28 \parallel He will * deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light.

† Or, He hath delivered of my soul, &c. and my life. o. la. 3a. 17.

He, i. e. God, whose work alone this is. His soul; himself; or, as it follows, his life. His life: see on ver. 18. Shall see the light, i. e. shall enjoy, either, 1. Prosperity, which is oft called light, as darkness is put for affliction; or, 2. The light of the living, as it follows, ver. 30; the light of this world, i. e. his life, which was endangered, shall be restored and continued. This is opposed to his going down into the pit, in the former branch.

29 Lo, all these things worketh God † oftentimes with man, † Heb. twice and thrice.

All these ways and methods doth God use to awaken, and convince, and save sinners. Oftentimes with man; either severally, one way with one, and another way with another; or with the same man, trying several means one after another to bring him to repentance, and prepare him for deliverance.

p ver. 28
Pa. 56. 13.

30 ^PTo bring back his soul from the pit, to be enlightened with the light of the living.

i. e. That he may enjoy the light of life, and continue in the land of the living, out of which he was going.

31 Mark well, O Job, hearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I will speak.

Hold thy peace; attend to what I have further to say to thee with patience and silence.

32 If thou hast any thing to say, answer me: speak, for I desire to justify thee.

If thou hast any thing to say for thy own justification, or in answer to the charge that I have already brought against thee. I desire to justify thee, to wit, as far as may consist with truth and justice. I do not speak with evil design, or a bitter mind, or as one resolved to condemn thee whatsoever thou sayest, and I shall be glad to hear any thing from thee which may make for thy just vindication.

q Pa. 34. 11. 33 If not, ^hhearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I shall teach thee wisdom.

i. e. What thy wisdom and duty is in thy circumstances.

CHAP. XXXIV.

He accuseth Job for charging God with injustice, 1—9. God, the almighty Disposer, Governor, and Judge of the world, cannot be unjust, 10—17. It is not fit to say of kings and princes they are unjust, much less of God: his power over and observance of man, who cannot hide from God, 18—22. He exerciseth his power and justice over them, 23—30. Man's duty under God's afflictions, 31, 32. He reprovet Job's words against God, 33—37.

FURTHERMORE Elihu answered and said,

2 Hear my words, O ye wise men; and give ear unto me, ye that have knowledge.

O ye wise men, who are here present, do you judge of the truth and reason of what I have said, and am further to say; for I am willing to submit all to the judgment of the truly wise.

a ch. 6. 30.
& 12. 11.
† Heb. palate. 3 ^{*}For the ear trieth words, as the † mouth tasteth meat.

i. e. Man's mind judgeth of things spoken and heard. The ear, the sense of discipline, is put for the mind, to which things are conveyed by it. See the note on Job xii. 11.

4 Let us choose to us judgment: let us know among ourselves what is good.

Judgment, i. e. justice and equity; judgment being oft synecdochically used for just judgment, as Job viii. 3; xix. 7; xxxii. 9; Psal. xxxvii. 28. Let us not contend for victory, but only for truth and justice. This shall be my only care and business. Let us lay aside all prejudices and animosities, which I perceive have had too great an influence upon thee and thy friends, and impartially consider the naked truth and right of the cause. Let us know, i. e. let us discover or make it known one to another. What is good; who hath the best cause.

b ch. 33. 9. 5 For Job hath said, ^bI am righteous:
c ch. 27. 2. and ^cGod hath taken away my judgment.

I am righteous; either, 1. I am perfectly righteous. But this Job did not say, but the contrary, Job ix. 2, 3; xiv. 4. Or, 2. I am a sincere person, no hypocrite, as my friends made me. But this Elihu doth not deny. Or, 3. I am so far righteous, and have been so holy and blameless in my life, that I have not deserved, nor had any reason to expect, such hard usage from God. And this Job had oft intimated, and Elihu doth justly blame him for it, that he blazoned his own righteousness with tacit reflections upon God for dealing so severely with him. God hath taken away my judgment; for so Job had said, chap. xxvii. 2; i. e. he denies me that which is but just and equal, to give me a fair hearing, to suffer me to plead my cause with or before him, to show me the reasons of his contending with me, and what sins besides common infirmities I have been guilty of, whereby I have deserved such extraordinary judgments; which Elihu justly taxeth him with as a very irreverent and presumptuous expression.

6 ^dShould I lie against my right? [†]my wound is incurable without transgression.

Should I lie against my right? so Job had said in effect, chap. xxvii. 4—6. Should I falsely accuse myself of such sins of which I am no way conscious to myself? Should I betray mine own cause, and deny my integrity, and say that I deserved worse than I have done? Without transgression, i. e. without any great, or heinous, or crying sin, as this word commonly signifies, which might reasonably bring down such terrible judgments upon my head.

7 What man is like Job, ^ewho drink-eth up scorning like water?

i. e. Abundantly and greedily; who doth so oft and so easily break forth into scornful and contemptuous expressions, not only against his friends, but in some sort even against God himself, whom he foolishly and insolently chargeth with dealing rigorously with him. The words may be thus read, What man, being like Job, would drink up, &c.? That a wicked or foolish man should do thus is not strange; but that a man of such piety, gravity, wisdom, and authority as Job should be guilty of such a sin, this is wonderful.

8 Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.

Although I dare not say, as his three friends do, that he is a wicked man, yet in this matter he speaks and acts like one of them.

9 For ^hhe hath said, It profiteth a man nothing that he should delight himself with God.

He hath said; not absolutely and in express terms, but by unforced consequence, and as concerning this life, and with reference to himself; because he said that good men were no less, nay, sometimes more, miserable here than the wicked, chap. ix. 22, &c.; xxx. 26, and that for his part he was no gainer as to this life by his piety, but a loser, and that God showed him no more kindness and compassion than he usually did to the vilest of men; which was a very unthankful and ungodly opinion and expression, seeing godliness hath the promise of this life as well as of that to come, and Job had such supports, and such assurances of his own uprightness, and of his future happiness, as he confesseth, as were and should have been accounted even for the present a greater comfort and profit than all which this world can afford. That he should delight himself with God; that he should choose and delight to walk with God, and make it his chief care and business to please him, and to do his commandments; which is the true and proper character of a godly man.

10 Therefore hearken unto me, ye
† men of understanding: ^gfar be it from God, that he should do wickedness; and from the Almighty, that he should commit iniquity.

Ye men of understanding; you who are present, and understand these things, do you judge between Job and me. Far be it from God that he should do wickedness: this I must lay down as a principle, that the righteous and holy God neither doth nor can deal unjustly with Job, or with any man, as Job insinuates that God had dealt with him.

11 ^hFor the work of a man shall he render unto him, and cause every man to find according to his ways.

The work, i. e. the reward of his work, or according to his work. Job's afflictions, though great and sharp, are not undeserved, but justly inflicted upon him, both for his original corruption, and for many actual transgressions, which are manifest to God, though Job, through his partiality, may not see them. And Job's piety shall be recompensed, it may be, in this life, but undoubtedly in the next. And therefore piety is not unprofitable, as Job saith.

12 Yea, surely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty ¹pervert judgment.

As Job hath wickedly affirmed. For the phrase, see on chap. viii. 3.

13 Who hath given him a charge over the earth? or who hath disposed †the whole world?

Over the earth, i. e. over the inhabitants of the earth, to rule them according to his laws, and to give an account to him of it. Who or where is his superior that made the world, and then delivered the government of it to God? There is no such person. God himself is the sole Creator, the absolute and supreme Lord and Governor, of all the world, and therefore cannot do unjustly. The reason is, partly, because all unrighteousness is a transgression of some law, and God hath no law to bound him but his own nature and will; partly, because the Creator and Lord of the world must needs have all possible perfections in himself, and, amongst others, perfect justice, and must needs be free from all imperfections and obliquities, and therefore from injustice; and partly, because he is of himself all-sufficient, and independent upon all other persons, and able to do and procure whatsoever pleaseth him; and therefore as he hath no inclination, so he hath no temptation, to any unrighteous actions; this being generally the reason of all unrighteous actions in the world, because the persons who do them either are obliged to do it, to gratify some superior authority who commands them to do it, or else do want or desire something which they cannot justly obtain; for he is a monster, and not a man, who will take away any thing by injustice or violence which he may have by right. Who hath disposed, or committed, to wit, to him, to be governed by him, in the name and for the use and service of his superior Lord, to whom he must give an account.

14 If he set his heart †upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath;

Upon man, Heb. upon him, i. e. man, as may seem probable from ver. 11, 15, where man is expressed; and from the next clause of this verse, where he speaks of that spirit and breath which is in man. If his eye and heart be upon man, if he diligently and exactly observe him, and all his ways, and whatsoever is amiss in him, and, which follows upon it of course, resolve to punish him. Or, if he set his heart against (as this particle el is used, Amos vii. 15, and elsewhere, as hath been noted before) him, to wit, to cut him off. If he gather unto himself; if it please him to gather to himself, to wit, by death, whereby God is said to take away men's breath, Psal. civ. 29, and to gather men's souls, Psal. xxvi. 9, and the spirit is said to return unto God, Eccles. xii. 7. His spirit and his breath, i. e. that spirit and breath, or that living soul, that God breathed into man, Gen. ii. 7, and gives to every man that cometh into the world.

15 ¹All flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust.

All flesh, i. e. every man, who is called flesh, Gen. vi. 3, 17; Isa. xl. 6. Together, or, alike, without any exception, be they great or mean, wise or foolish, good or bad; if God design to destroy them, they cannot withstand his power, but must needs perish by his stroke. The design of this and the foregoing verse is the same with that of ver. 13, (where see the notes,) namely, to declare God's absolute and uncontrollable sovereignty over all men, to dispose of them either to life or to death, as it pleaseth him, and consequently to show that Job had cause to be thankful to God, who had continued his life so long to him, which he might have taken away as soon as ever he had given it, and had no cause to complain of him, or to tax him with injustice for afflicting him, as he did.

16 If now thou hast understanding, hear this: hearken to the voice of my words.

As thou art a man of understanding, hear and consider what I say.

17 ^mShall even he that hateth right

† govern? and wilt thou condemn him † that is most just?

He that hateth right, i. e. that is unrighteous. But this he expresseth in a most emphatical manner, the reason and weight whereof seems to me to be this: If God be unjust, he is not so from fear of any superior, (as inferior magistrates do many unrighteous things against their consciences to please their prince or chief ruler, or to avoid his displeasure,) but merely from an intrinsic hatred of justice, or love of unrighteousness; which being most absurd to imagine concerning God, therefore he cannot possibly be unjust, or do any unjust action. Govern; so this word, which properly signifies to bind, is fitly rendered by most interpreters; and so it is used Isa. iii. 7, because governors have a power to bind their subjects by laws and penalties, and they are as it were the ligaments by which societies are bound and kept together, which without them would be dissolved and broken to pieces. Elihu's argument here is the same with that of Abraham's, Gen. xviii. 25, and that of St. Paul's, Rom. iii. 5, 6, If God be unrighteous, how shall he judge or govern the world? And the argument is undeniable, If God were unjust, there would be nothing but injustice, and confusion, and mischief in the world; whereas we see there is a great deal of justice administered by rulers in the world, and all this must proceed from him who is the fountain and author of all justice, and rule, and authority. And as the psalmist saith, Psal. xciv. 9, He that formed the eye, shall not he see? so say I, He that makes men just, shall he be unjust? Him that is most just, i. e. God, who hath given so many clear and unquestionable evidences of his justice, in giving just and holy laws, in encouraging and rewarding very many righteous persons in this life, and inflicting dreadful and remarkable judgments upon tyrants and oppressors. Or, him that is just and mighty; for the next verse speaks of such, who were generally in those times more considerable for their power and authority than for their justice. So here is a double argument against Job's censures of God's justice. He is just, and therefore giveth thee no cause to condemn him; and withal potent, and therefore can punish thee yet far worse for so doing.

18 ⁿIs it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? and to princes, Ye are ungodly?

Thou art wicked; or, Thou art Belial, or a son of Belial. Though a king may really be unjust and wicked, yet their subjects neither may nor dare presume to call them so, Exod. xxii. 28. And therefore if some evil thought did arise in thee, yet how wast thou not afraid to utter such unworthy and almost blasphemous expressions against God?

19 How much less to him that accepteth not the persons of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor? for they all are the work of his hands.

To him that accepteth not the persons of princes, i. e. to God, who respecteth not the greatest princes, so as to do any unjust thing to gain their favour, or to avoid their anger, to whom princes and peasants are equally subject, and infinitely inferior; who therefore is free from all temptation to injustice, which commonly proceeds from respect of persons, Lev. xix. 15, and to whom therefore thou didst owe more reverence than thy words have expressed. They all are the work of his hands; and therefore of equal worth and price with him, and equally subject to his power and pleasure.

20 In a moment shall they die, and the people shall be troubled at midnight, and pass away: and †the mighty shall be taken away without hand.

In a moment; whensoever God doth but give the word, and send his summons for them. Shall they, i. e. the rich and the prince, no less than the poor, must submit to the law of death, which God hath imposed upon all men, without exception, and they cannot charge God with injury therein. The people; whole nations or people are no less subject to God's power than any particular persons; their numbers cannot secure them from God's hand. Troubled, i. e. disturbed and terrified with those calamities which God shall bring upon them. At midnight; suddenly, and when they are most secure. Pass away; either, 1. Go into captivity, or run or flee away they know not whither for their lives. Or, 2. Perish or die, as he said before, and as this word is oft used, as Job xiv. 20; Psal. xxxvii. 36; Eccles. i. 4. So the same thing is said of the people, which in the first branch of the verse was said of the princes. Taken away; either from their place or power, or out of this life. Without hand; without any hand or help of man, by some secret and stupendous work and judgment of God; which he oft inflicts upon those who are out of the reach of men.

21 ^{r. 2 Chro. 16. 9. ch. 31. 4. Ps. 34. 15. Prov. 5. 21. & 15. 3. Jer. 16. 17. & 32. 19.} For his eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings.

This is added as the reason of the judgments mentioned in the foregoing verse, God doth not afflict nor destroy either princes or people unjustly, no, nor out of his mere pleasure and absolute sovereignty, (to which Job seemed to impute his calamities,) but for their sins, which God sees exactly, although they use all possible arts and tricks to hide them from him. Therefore no man hath cause to complain of God, but of himself, for all that he may suffer in the world.

22 ^{s. Ps. 139. 12. Amos 9. 2, 3. Heb. 4. 13.} There is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves.

They may flatter themselves, or cheat others, by covering their wicked actions with plausible pretences and professions; but they cannot deceive God, nor keep their hearts and ways from his sight.

23 ^{+ Heb. go.} For he will not lay upon man more than right; that he should † enter into judgment with God.

More than right; more or heavier punishments than they deserve, or than are proportionable to their sins, which he accurately observes, as was now said, and therefore can suit punishments to them. That he should enter into judgment with God; thereby to give him any pretence or occasion of entering into judgment with him, or condemning his proceedings; for which there might seem to be some colour, if God did lay upon man more than right. And therefore thou, O Job, hadst no cause for thy complaints against God.

24 ^{+ Heb. with- out search- ing out.} He shall break in pieces mighty men † without number, and set others in their stead.

Mighty men without number; neither their greatness nor their numbers can secure them from the stroke of God's justice. Set others in their stead, i. e. give away their power and dignity to others who shall come in their place.

25 Therefore he knoweth their works, and he overturneth them in the night, so that they are † destroyed.

^{+ Heb. crushed.} i. e. Hence it appears that he knows all their evil works, because he judgeth them for them. God or men are oftentimes said in Scripture to know or do a thing, when they only manifest their knowing and doing of it. Or, because, &c., as this participle is used, Isa. xxvi. 14; lxi. 7. So this is subjoined as the ground or reason why he punisheth them, as is related both in the foregoing and in the following words, because he sees all their wicked designs and actions. He overturneth them in the night, i. e. when they are at rest and secure; at midnight, as it is ver. 20. Or, he turneth or bringeth upon them the night, to wit, of calamity and tribulation, as the next words explain it, and as the words night and darkness are oft used. Or, he turneth the night, to wit, into day, i. e. he knoweth all their deeds of darkness, and bringeth them to light. See above, ver. 22. So that they are destroyed, Heb. and (or then, or therefore; for both these ways this participle is sometimes used) they shall be destroyed, or broken to pieces.

26 ^{+ Heb. in the place of beholders.} He striketh them as wicked men † in the open sight of others;

As wicked men, i. e. as he useth to smite wicked men, with a grievous and terrible stroke. Compare Isa. xxvii. 7. Or, for wicked men; or, because they are wicked men, therefore he destroys them without any regard to their quality.

In the open sight of others; in public view, for their greater shame, and for the greater glory of God's justice, and for the greater terror of other oppressors, and comfort of the oppressed.

27 Because they ^{u 1 Sam. 15. 11. + Heb. from after him. xlv. 28. 5. 1s. 6. 12.} turned back † from him, and ^{† Heb. from after him. xlv. 28. 5. 1s. 6. 12.} would not consider any of his ways:

From him; from the God, whom they or their progenitors had owned; and his laws, which God hath written in the minds of all men, Rom. ii. 14, 15; and, it may be, from the practice of the true religion, which sometimes they professed. Would not consider, or understand. They did not desire nor endeavour to know them, at least practically, or to any good purpose. His ways; either, 1. God's providential ways. They did not lay to heart any of God's judgments inflicted upon such oppressors as themselves, which should have given them warning, but boldly persisted in the same wicked courses. Or, 2. His precepts; oft called his ways, because he hath appointed them for us to walk in. For these ways they were in a special manner obliged to consider and practise; and the next verse giveth us an instance of their backsliding from these ways.

28 So that they ^{y ch. 35. 9. Jam. 5. 4. Es. 22. 23.} cause the cry of the poor to come unto him, and he ^{† Heb. from after him. xlv. 28. 5. 1s. 6. 12.} heareth the cry of the afflicted.

So that they cause, Heb. to bring, &c., which is ambiguous, and may be read, either, 1. That he, i. e. God, might bring, &c. So this is a reason why God smote them, &c., as is said, ver. 26. Or, 2. That they, i. e. those wicked men, might bring, &c.; and so these words contain either, 1. A reason of what was last mentioned, to wit, why they would not consider nor walk in God's ways, because they were resolved to oppress the poor, and give them cause to cry unto God; which they neither could nor would have done, if they had thoroughly understood and considered God's ways. Or, 2. An evidence or instance of it, wherein it did appear that they had turned back from God, &c. Unto him, i. e. unto God, as the following words imply, it being God's work to hear the cry and plead the cause of the afflicted or oppressed. Others, upon him, or upon them, or upon each of them, to wit, of the oppressors; upon whom the cry of the oppressed is said to come, because the vengeance of God is by that cry brought down upon them. He heareth the cry of the afflicted; he delivereth the oppressed by taking the oppressor away.

29 When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? and when he hideth his face, who then can behold him? whether it be done against a nation, or against a man only:

When he giveth quietness; either to the poor and oppressed persons last mentioned, or to any other person or people, as it follows. Who then can make trouble? no man or creature can hinder God's design and work. When he hideth his face, i. e. withdraws his favour and help from them, and thereby exposeth them to all oppressions or calamities. Who then can behold him? i. e. who can look up to God with cheerfulness or confidence, to desire or expect his help? Or rather, who then will look upon him, or regard him, to wit, so as to pity or succour him? If God be against him, what man will or dare be for him? all men will forsake and oppose him, and so he will be utterly lost. For this [who] answers to the [who] in the former branch of the verse, and both of them speak of man and his act as opposed unto God and to his act. The case is the same in both: God can carry on his work, either of mercy or justice, as easily and as irresistibly upon a whole nation or people as upon one particular person.

30 That the hypocrite reign not, lest ^{a 1 Kings 12. 28, 30. 2 Kin. 21. 9.} the people be ensnared.

Having said that God could and would carry on his own work and design effectually, whether against one man, or against a whole people, he now proceeds to give a further instance of God's mighty power above and against the greatest monarchs, in whom their own and the people's strength seem to be united, yet all together cannot oppose God in his work. God when he pleaseth can and doth so order affairs, that the hypocrite (i. e. the profane wicked prince, as one of the kings of Judah is called, Ezek. xxi.

25; bad princes being called hypocrites, because they do commonly cover all their oppressions, and injuries, and impieties too, with the specious pretence of justice and the public good, and the discharge of their trust and duty) may not reign, (i. e. may not continue his reign and tyranny, that he may and shall by his sovereign power and omnipotent providence be deprived of his kingdom,) lest the people be ensnared, i. e. lest the people should be longer and more and more kept and held in the snares or fetters of tyranny and oppression, i. e. God doth this to free poor oppressed people from the snares which ungodly and unrighteous princes lay for them. Or, that the people be not ensnared any longer, Heb. that there be no snares of or for the people. Or, for the snares, or scandals, or sins (which are oft so called) of the people. So the sense is, that such a wicked prince may not continue to reign over that people, although by their sins they had provoked God, to give them such a prince, and to continue his power over them.

31 Surely it is meet to be said unto God, ^{b Dan. 2} I have borne chastisement, I will not offend any more:

Certainly it is but fit and reasonable that man should say thus to his Maker and supreme Lord, and that instead of contending with God, he should submit to him. Or, (which comes to the same thing,) But hath he said? so the sense is, I have showed the absolute power which God hath over all his creatures, and that he may justly, and doth oftentimes severely, punish all sorts of men as he sees fit. And this Job should have applied to his own case. But, I appeal to all of you, hath he, i. e. Job, (who is the principal subject of this whole discourse, and to whom he now begins to direct his discourse,) said, that which here follows? which is a kind of form of confession or humiliation, which Elihu puts into Job's mouth, as fit to have been used by him. Nay, hath not his speech and carriage been of a directly contrary nature and tendency? Instead of humbling himself under God's hand, which was his duty, hath he not been full of murmurings and complaints against God? Unto God; unto one so much thy superior, so mighty and so righteous in all his ways; with such a one a weak and sinful creature (as thou art) should not presume to contest. I have borne chastisement; or, I do or shall bear it, to wit, quietly and contentedly; I will bear the Lord's indignation, and accept of the punishment of my own iniquity, and not accuse God falsely and foolishly, as I have done. I will not offend any more, Heb. I will not corrupt, to wit, myself or my ways; which is oft understood in like cases. Or, I will take or demand no pledge; for so this verb is oft used. So the sense may possibly be, I confess I have been too bold with God, in desiring that he would come with me into judgment, and that I could have a pledge or surty that he would do so; but I will no longer desire it, but submit myself wholly to him.

32 That which I see not teach thou me: if I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

I will no longer maintain mine innocence, but from thy judgments I will conclude and have reason to believe that there are some secret sins in me, for which thou dost chastise me, and which I through mine ignorance or partiality cannot yet discover, and therefore do beg that thou wouldst by thy Spirit manifest them to me. If I have done iniquity, I will amend my former errors.

33 † Should it be according to thy mind? he will recompense it, whether thou refuse, or whether thou choose; and not I: therefore speak what thou knowest.

Having advised and directed Job how to behave himself, and what to say to God in his case, he now proceedeth to enforce his advice by solid arguments. Should it (to wit, God's chastening of thee, about which the great controversy was) be according to thy mind? Heb. from with thee, as thou wouldst have it? Shall thy opinion or affection give laws and measures to God that he shall afflict only such persons, and in such a manner and measure, and so long, as thou wouldst have him. Doth God need, or should he seek for, thy advice how to govern the world, and whom and when to reward or punish? Dost thou quarrel with God, because he punisheth thee worse and longer than thou expectest or desirest? He will recompense it, to wit, thy iniquity, expressed ver. 32. Whether thou art satisfied or offended with his proceedings, he regards not, as not being obliged to give thee an account of his matters, whether thou wouldst refuse his punishments or accept of them. It is not I, nor thou, that must prescribe to God, but he will do what he pleaseth. Or, but not I, i. e. do thou refuse or choose as thou pleasest, and contend with God for doing with thee otherwise than according to thy opinion or good will; but so would not I do, if it were my case; and I can say nothing for this course which thou takest, and therefore do thou speak what thou knowest, or what thou canst say for it, as it here follows. If thou canst say any thing for this practice, here I am ready to hear thy defence, and to justify thee as far as I can truly and righteously do. But this verse is and may well be otherwise rendered, and that very agreeably to the Hebrew, though still the sense will be the same, Shall he, i. e. God, render or recompense it (to wit, thy iniquity) according to thy mind, (i. e. no further than thou dost like and consent,) because thou refusest? (to wit, his chastisement. Is he obliged to forbear punishing thee because thou art not pleased with it? Shall not he dispense either favours or afflictions as he sees fit without thy consent?) shalt thou choose, and not I? (so Elihu speaks this in the name and person of God; such sudden changes of persons being not unusual in this book. Shalt thou, O Job, choose for me, and not I for myself?) therefore speak what thou knowest. If this be thy opinion, speak what thou canst in defence of it; and here am I ready to plead for God against thee. So here Elihu returns to speak in his own person.

34 Let men † of understanding tell me, ^{† Heb. of heart.} and let a wise man hearken unto me.

I am content that any wise man should judge of my words, and let such consider what I say. Or, as others translate the place, Men of understanding will speak for or with (as the prefix lamed is sometimes used, as Gen. xvi. 26; Numb. xviii. 11; Job xvii. 5) me, and wise men will hearken or assent unto me.

35 ° Job hath spoken without knowledge, ^{c ch 35 16.} and his words were without wisdom.

Without knowledge; foolishly and inconsiderately.

36 || My desire is that Job may be tried unto the end because of his answers for wicked men. ^{|| Or, My father, let Job be tried.}

Either, 1. That he may be further tried by God, or exercised with afflictions, till he be thoroughly convinced or humbled. But it seems harsh that he should pray for the continuance or increase of Job's afflictions. Or rather, 2. That his words and cause which I am now debating may be examined and sifted, that you that are here present, or any other wise men, may consider and judge thereof, as he desired above, ver. 2, 10, 34. Unto the end, i. e. thoroughly and exactly, till the cause be brought to an issue. Or, unto victory, i. e. till judgment be brought forth unto victory. Because of his answers; or, concerning his answers, or replies, or discourses; for answering is oft used in Scripture, both in the Old and New Testament, for speaking. So he limits and changeth the state of the controversy: I do not meddle with Job's former life, nor charge him with hypocrisy, as his three friends have done; but I justly reprove him for his hard speeches against God, whereby he hath reproached his justice and goodness. For wicked men, i. e. on their behalf, or for their use. He hath put arguments into their mouths against God and his providence. Or, with or among wicked men; as if he were one of them; or such answers as they use to make, which therefore are very unbecoming such a man as Job is, or pretends to be.

37 For he addeth rebellion unto his sin, he clappeth his hands among us, and multiplieth his words against God.

He sinned before, as other ways, so by impatience under his afflictions, which may be ascribed to human infirmity; but now he is grown obstinate and incorrigible, and instead of repenting and humbling himself for his sins, he excuseth them, and justifieth himself, and accuseth the blessed God.

Or thus, For otherwise, unless he be thoroughly tried and rebuked, he will add rebellion unto his sin; he will break forth into open rebellion against God, and (as it follows) he will clap, &c. For the Hebrew words are of the future tense, although such are oft rendered by the past tense. He clappeth his hands, in token of joy and victory, as this phrase is used, Psal. xlvii. 1; xcvi. 8; insulting and triumphing, not only over us, as if none of us were able to answer him, but in a sort over God himself, inasmuch as he hath again and again desired leave of God to debate his cause with or before him, and in that case did not doubt to maintain it, but could not obtain the favour or justice of a fair hearing. Multiplieth his words against God: whereas the reverence which he oweth to God, and his infinite distance from him, should teach him to be very modest and sparing in his speeches of God, Job on the contrary poureth forth whole floods of bold and presumptuous expostulations with God, and reflections upon God's proceedings with him.

CHAP. XXXV.

Our good or evil extendeth not to God, 1—7, but to men on earth, who are hereby oppressed, and cry out, but not unto God, nor are delivered, 8—12. He exhorteth to hope in God, though for the present he be angry, 13—16.

ELIHU spake moreover, and said,

2 Thinkest thou this to be right, that thou saidst, My righteousness is more than God's?

Canst thou in thy conscience, upon second thoughts, approve of what thou hast said? Not that Job said this in express terms, but he said those things from which this might seem to follow, as that God punished him more than he deserved or expected, all things considered; and that if he might be admitted to debate his cause with or before God, he did not doubt to carry it, and to obtain that ease and favour from God, which otherwise God would not afford him. But this charge against Job he proves in the next verse.

3 For ^a thou saidst, What advantage will it be unto thee? and, What profit shall I have, if I be cleansed from my sin?

This verse contains the proof of the foregoing charges. Job had oft affirmed that he was, and still continued to be, righteous, though he had no present benefit by it, but much bitterness with it; and God was not kind to Job, notwithstanding all his former and present piety, but dealt with him as if he had been a most wicked man; which was in effect to say, that he was more righteous than God. What advantage will it, to wit, his righteousness last mentioned, be unto thee, i. e. unto me; such changes of persons being very frequent in the Hebrew language. If I be cleansed from my sin; or, by the expiation of my sin; for the same Hebrew word signifies both to sin and to purge out or expiate sin. Or, by it (to wit, by my righteousness) more than by my sin. So the sense is, I have no more present benefit by all my care to please and serve God, than wicked men have by their sins against him. God regards my cries no more than theirs, and shows no more kindness or pity to me than he doth to the most profligate wretches. But still remember Job speaks not here of the future life, wherein he knew he should have much advantage, as he professed before, but only of this present state.

4 † I will answer thee, and ^b thy companions with thee.

Thy companions, i. e. those who are of thy opinion, or with whom thou dost associate thyself in those speeches and carriages; which seems to be meant not of Job's three friends, (as many understand it, for their opinions were contrary to Job's in this point,) but of wicked men, with whom Job is said to walk and go in company for this same opinion or assertion, chap. xxxiv. 8, 9. And these men he here calls Job's companions, partly because they are very forward to harp upon the same string, and to accuse God and justify themselves upon all occasions; and partly that he might awaken Job to a more serious review of his former assertions, by representing to him whose cause he pleaded, and who were his confederates and colleagues in this opinion.

5 °Look unto the heavens, and see; ^c and behold the clouds which are higher than thou.

How much more is God, who is far above all heavens, higher than thou! And therefore God is out of the reach of all profit or loss by thy actions. If thy goodness do not profit thee, it is certain it doth not profit him; and therefore doth not lay any obligation upon him to indulge or recompense thee for it, save only so far as he hath graciously obliged himself; and therefore thou canst not accuse him of injustice for afflicting thee, nor pretend that thou hast deserved better usage from him. And this infinite distance between God and thee should cause thee to think and speak more modestly and reverently of that glorious majesty.

6 If thou sinnest, what doest thou ^d against him? or if thy transgressions be multiplied, what doest thou unto him?

Thy sins do him no hurt, and therefore thy righteousness brings him no benefit, as it follows.

7 °If thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand?

He gaineth nothing by it, nor can indeed receive any good from thee, because all thy good comes from him. And therefore thou hast no reason to boast of nor to upbraid God with thy piety, which is much to thy advantage, but nothing to his.

8 Thy wickedness may hurt a man as thou art; and thy righteousness may profit the son of man.

If God were such a one as thou art, he might have benefit or hurt by thine actions; but being an infinite, independent, and self-sufficient Being, he is far exalted above all thy good or evil.

9 °By reason of the multitude of ^e oppressions they make the oppressed to cry: they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty.

The multitude, or greatness. This verse is supposed to contain an argument to prove what he said ver. 8, that one man's wickedness may hurt another. But he rather seems to begin a new matter, and having answered one of Job's objections, to proceed to another, which may be either, 1. That which Job had oft complained of, that he cried to God, and God did not hear his cry; which Elihu answers by a parallel case of men crying out for oppression; whom yet God doth not hear nor help, and that for just reasons, which he leaves to Job to apply to himself. Or, 2. That which Job had alleged, chap. xxiv. 12, and which might seem to reflect upon God's providence. This therefore Elihu repeats in this verse, and answereth in the following. To cry; not only to murmur and complain, but to cry out by reason of sore oppression, and to cry to the oppressors or others for pity and help. By reason of the arm of the mighty; because their oppressors are too strong for them.

10 But none saith, ^f Where is God my maker, ^g who giveth songs in the night;

None, i. e. few or none (for few are oft called and accounted as none, both in Scripture and other authors) of the great numbers of oppressed persons. None saith, to wit, seriously or sincerely, and it may be not so much as in word and profession. Where is God? they howl and cry out of men, and to men, but they seek not after God; they do not acknowledge him in all their ways; they praise him not for that ease, and liberty, and estate, and other mercies which God gave them; and by this unthankfulness they forfeit their mercies; and therefore if God suffer oppressors to take them away, they have no cause to complain of God, but only of themselves: they will not vouchsafe to pray to God seriously and fervently, either to continue or to restore their lost mercies; and therefore if God do not hear nor regard their brutish cries, arising only from a natural sense of their misery, it is not strange nor unjust. My Maker; who alone made me, and whose power and providence pre-

Heb. my Makers, in the plural number; which being used not only here, but also Eccles. xii. 1; Isa. liv. 5, and that without any necessity, when it might as well have been put in the singular number, yea, though Elohim be plural, as it is Gen. i. 1, plainly implies a plurality of persons in the Divine essence, of which see on Gen. i. 26. Songs, i. e. matter of songs; great occasion to rejoice and praise God. In the night; either, 1. Metaphorically taken; i. e. in the night of affliction; implying that they want not cause to bless God even in their afflictions. Or rather, 2. Properly, as this word is always used in Job, one place excepted, which is doubtful, to wit, chap. xxxvi. 20; which he may mention rather than the day, either because oppressed persons, who in the day time are cruelly used by their oppressors, are permitted to rest in the night; or because the hand and mercy of God is more manifest in the preservation, and rest, and sleep of the night, than in the blessings of the day, which are procured by man's industry; or because the day is the time of action, the night of contemplation, when we do and ought to remember God's mercies with thanksgiving: compare Psal. xlii. 8; cxix. 62.

11 Who teacheth us more than the beasts of the earth, and maketh us wiser than the fowls of heaven?

This is mentioned as a further aggravation of men's neglect of God in their misery. God hath given to men those gifts which he hath denied to beasts, reason and religion, wisdom to know God and themselves, and their obligations to God, and their dependence upon him. And therefore it ill becometh them to lie like brute creatures, roaring and crying out in their miseries, without taking any notice of God in way of prayer or praise; and if they do so, it is no wonder if God takes no notice of them.

12 There they cry, but none giveth answer, because of the pride of evil men.

There, or then, as this particle is used, Psal. xiv. 5; Eccles. iii. 17; Zeph. i. 14; in that time or condition. The pride of evil men; either 1. Of the oppressors. So this is the reason not of the last clause, why none answereth, but of the former, why they cry; the latter clause being therefore shut up within a parenthesis, and the words thus are to be transposed, as some place them, There they cry, because of the pride of evil men, but none giveth answer; the reason whereof followeth in the next verse. Or rather, 2. Of the oppressed persons. And so there is no need of any parenthesis or transposition. And so these words contain one reason of the words immediately foregoing, which is most natural, and easy, and usual, to wit, why none giveth answer, i. e. why God doth not answer nor regard their cries, because of their pride, &c., because they are both evil, wicked and impenitent, and prov'd, unhumbled for those sins for which God brought these miseries upon them, and unsubdued to the obedience of God.

13 Surely God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it.

Either, 1. Vain and light persons, that have no true wisdom or solid piety in them, but are wholly addicted to vain and worldly things, rejoicing immoderately when they have them, and crying out for want of them, as here they do. Or, 2. Vain cries, which proceed not from faith or piety, but only from self-love and a natural sense of their misery; which is common to them with brute beasts. The abstract is here put for the concrete, as wickedness is oft put for wicked men, and pride for proud persons, and the like. Neither will the Almighty regard it: though God be able to help them, as this title of God implies, and though he be the Judge of the world, as the former name of God signifies, to whom therefore it belongs to right the oppressed against the oppressor, yet in this case he justly refuseth to help them.

14 Although thou sayest thou shalt not see him, yet judgment is before him; therefore trust thou in him.

Thou shalt not see him; or, thou canst not see him; the future tense of the indicative mood being oft put potentially;

i. e. thou canst not have thy desire in appearing and pleading thy cause before him. So this is a new matter, and Elihu answers another objection of Job's, of which see chap. xxiii. 8, 9, and tells him that he is not to judge of God by present appearance; because though God may for a season hide his face, and delay to give him an answer, yet he will certainly do him right. Before him, i. e. before God, or in his presence, or at his tribunal, or in all his ways and administrations. And judgment is put for justice or just judgment, as it is Job viii. 3; Psal. xxxvii. 28; xcix. 4, and oft elsewhere. So the sense is, God is and will show himself to be just in all his ways, and therefore thou dost wickedly in reflecting upon God's justice. Or, yet judge thyself before him; instead of accusing God, condemn thyself, acknowledge thy sins, and then thou mayst hope for mercy. Compare 1 Cor. xi. 31. Trust thou in him; instead of murmuring against him, put thy trust in him. Repent of what is past, and humble thyself under God's hand, and do not despond for the future, but wait upon God patiently in his way till deliverance come to thee; for it will certainly come if thou dost not hinder it.

15 But now, because it is not so, || he hath visited in his anger; yet || he knoweth it not in great extremity:

Because it is not so, i. e. because Job doth not acknowledge God's justice and his own sins, and wait upon God in his way for mercy, according to the last advice given to him, ver. 14. He, to wit, God, to whom this great work of visiting is ascribed every where in Scripture. Hath visited in his anger, i. e. hath laid grievous afflictions upon him; all which is too little to bring Job to compliance with God. He knoweth it not; Job is not sufficiently sensible of it, so as to be humbled under God's hand. In great extremity; or, though (which particle is sometimes understood, of which examples have been before) in great extremity, or abundance, to wit, of afflictions. Though Job hath hitherto been and still is exercised with very sore calamities, yet they have not brought Job to the knowledge of God and of himself. But this verse is and may be rendered thus, And now know that his (i. e. God's) anger hath visited thee little or nothing, (to wit, in comparison of what thou hast deserved and mightest reasonably expect,) *neither hath he known (i. e. judged or punished, as this word is used, Prov. x. 9, and elsewhere) thee in or according to (as the prefix eth is sometimes used) the great abundance, to wit, of thy sins*. And therefore thy complaints against God are very unrighteous and unreasonable.

16 Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain; he multiplieth words without knowledge.

Therefore; hence it is manifest. Open his mouth in vain, i. e. pour forth his complaints without any success, and gets no ease by them. He multiplieth words without knowledge, thereby discovering his ignorance of God and of himself.

CHAP. XXXVI.

God is just in all his ways; towards the wicked, 1—6, the godly, 7—11, the hypocrite, 12—14, the poor, 15. Job's sins hindered God's salvation to him: he admonisheth him, 16—21. God's power, and sovereignty, and all his perfections to be magnified, 22—33.

ELIHU also proceeded, and said, 2 Suffer me a little, and I will shew thee that I have yet to speak on God's behalf.

Suffer me a little; give me thy patient attention but a little longer; and I will show thee that I have not said all that can be said to justify God's proceedings against thee.

3 I will fetch my knowledge from afar, and will ascribe righteousness to my Maker.

From afar, i. e. from remote times, and places, and things. I will not confine my discourse to thy particular case, but will justify God by declaring his great and glorious works of creation and providence, both in the heaven and earth, and the manner of his dealing with men in other parts and ages of the world; for these are the chief heads of the following discourse, and therefore the best comment upon this general expression.

Heb. that there are yet words for God.

I will acknowledge that which is true, that God is righteous. He adds the words, my Maker, either, 1. As an argument or evidence of God's righteousness; partly, because it is not likely that God should be unjust to his own creatures, since even men are not only just, but kind, to their own works and relations; and partly, because the work of creation gave unto God an absolute right and power to dispose of Job as he saw fit, as the potter hath power over the clay. Rom. ix. 21, and therefore there was no foundation for unrighteousness, nor any temptation upon God to do it; and partly, because man's Maker must needs be a being of all possible perfection, and therefore one of perfect righteousness. Or, 2. As a motive or obligation upon him to plead God's cause. I do not engage myself in this controversy out of a pragmatical or contentious humour, nor out of any prejudice or ill-will to thee, but merely from the sense of my duty to my blessed Creator. Withal he reflects upon Job as guilty of great folly and ingratitude in contending with him, in or by whom he lived, and moved, and had his being.

4 For truly my words shall not be false: he that is perfect in knowledge is with thee.

I will not speak any thing against my own conscience, nor against truth, either to flatter God, or to vex thee, as thou supposest thy other friends have done, chap. xiii. 7, and elsewhere. He that is perfect in knowledge is with thee. This is meant either, 1. Of God. Thou hast to do with a God of perfect knowledge, by whom all thy words and actions are weighed; and therefore hast need to be more wary and circumspect in thy expressions and behaviour. Or rather, 2. Of himself, as the former part of the verse is. And he speaketh of himself in the third person, for modesty's sake. He speaks not of absolute, but of comparative perfection. And whatsoever perfection of knowledge he had, he doth not ascribe it to himself, but to God's Spirit, chap. xxxii. 8. And the meaning may be this, Thou hast not to do with a novice, but with one who hath accurately considered, and through God's grace doth fully understand, these matters; therefore hearken to me. But the word rendered perfect signifieth also sincere, or upright, or right. And this may seem best to agree with the former clause, wherein he saith that he would not speak what he knew to be false; and now he adds, that he was and would be upright in the use of his knowledge, or in the delivery of his opinion in this matter, and not be biassed by any passion or prejudice, either to speak otherwise than he thought, or to judge otherwise than he should.

5 Behold, God is mighty, and despiseth not any: he is mighty in strength and wisdom.

His greatness doth not make him (as it doth men) to scorn, or despise, or oppress the meanest. Though he may do what he pleaseth, and none can hinder him, yet he will not use it to do any man wrong, as Job seemed to insinuate, chap. x. 3; xix. 7; xxiii. 13. His strength is guided by wisdom, and therefore cannot be employed to do any thing unbecoming God, or unjust to his creatures; for either of these is folly. Or, in strength, or virtue of heart; for the and is not in the Hebrew. So the sense is, He is truly magnanimous, of a great and generous mind or heart, and therefore not unrighteous; for all injustice proceeds from littleness or weakness of heart. Truly great souls scorn unjust actions.

6 He preserveth not the life of the wicked: but giveth right to the poor.

He preserveth not the life of the wicked, to wit, for ever; but will in his due time forsake them, and give them up to the destroyer. Or, he doth not or will not preserve, is put for he will certainly and dreadfully destroy, by the figure called meiosis, used Prov. xvii. 21, and oft elsewhere. Giveth right to the poor; he doth uphold, and he certainly will in his time deliver, his poor oppressed ones from all their oppressors.

7^b He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous: but with kings are they on the throne; yea, he doth establish them for ever, and they are exalted.

He never ceaseth to care for and watch over the righteous, no, not when they are afflicted or persecuted, when he may seem to neglect them. Though they may be oppressed for a time, yet oftentimes he not only delivers them, but also raiseth them to the highest honour and happiness in this life; compare 1 Sam. ii. 8; Psal. cxiii. 7, 8; and their felicity is more stable and permanent than that of the wicked. Having mentioned the cause, that God did establish them; he now mentions the effect, that they are or continue to be exalted; they are not cast down from their dignity, as the wicked commonly are.

8 And if they be bound in fetters, and ^{d Ps. 107. 10.} be holden in cords of affliction;

If through the vicissitude of worldly affairs, and the righteous judgment of God upon them for their sins, they be brought from their throne into a prison, as sometimes hath been done.

9 Then he sheweth them their work, and their transgressions that they have exceeded.

Their work, i. e. their evil works, as the next clause explains and limits it. By these afflictions he brings them to a sight of their sins and to repentance, which is the way and means of their recovery. That they have exceeded; that they have greatly sinned by abusing their power and prosperity; which even good men are too prone to do.

10^a He openeth also their ear to discipline, and commandeth that they return ^{e ch. 33. 16.} from iniquity. ^{23.}

i. e. He enableth and inclineth them to hearken to what God speaks by the rod, who would not hear in the time of their prosperity; like them Jer. xxii. 21. To discipline; or, to instruction, i. e. to receive instruction; or, to chastening, i. e. to hear the rod, and who hath appointed it, as is said, Micah vi. 9. Commandeth, either by his word or Spirit accompanying the affliction, and discovering the mind and will of God in this dispensation. That they return from iniquity, which is the chief cause of their calamity.

11 If they obey and serve him, they shall 'spend their days in prosperity, and ^{f ch. 21. 13.} their years in pleasures. ^{Is. 1. 19, 20.}

If they obey God's admonition and command. They shall spend their days in prosperity; they shall be restored to their former prosperity, and shall live and die in it. This he speaks according to the tenor of God's promises, especially in the Old Testament state of the church, and according to the common course and method of God's providence, which Elihu and other good men had observed. Their years in pleasures; abounding in worldly comforts, and being enabled by God to rejoice in them, which is God's gift, Eccles. iii. 13, and delighting themselves in God's love and favour to them.

12 But if they obey not, † they shall ^{† Heb. they shall pass away by the sword.} perish by the sword, and they shall die without knowledge.

If they; the righteous, spoken of ver. 7, opposed to the hypocrites here following, ver. 13; for even good men may sometimes be disobedient to Divine admonitions, and may suffer deeply, yea, even death itself, for their folly: see 1 Cor. xi. 30. Without knowledge; in or for their ignorance, or inadvertency, or folly. Or, because they are without knowledge; because they are foolish, or brutish, and will not learn the lessons which God so plainly teacheth them.

13 But the hypocrites in heart ^{g Rom. 2. 5.} heap up wrath: they cry not when he bindeth them.

The hypocrites in heart; such as are truly void of that piety which they profess; whereby he either secretly insinuates that Job was such a one; or gives him this occasion to search himself whether he were not so; or rather, admonisheth him not to carry himself like such a one, as he had hitherto done, and for which he reproved him, chap. xxxiv. 8. Heap up wrath, i. e. by their impious and obstinate carriage in all conditions, they treasure up God's wrath against themselves. They cry not unto God for help. They live in the gross neglect of God and of prayer. When he bindeth them, to wit, with the cords of affliction, expressed ver. 8, which is mentioned as an aggravation of their wickedness; because even wicked men, if not profligately bad, will seek God in time of affliction, Hos. v. 15. They die in youth; they provoke God to cut them off before their time. Heb. Their soul (i. e. they themselves) shall die in youth. Their life is; or, their life shall die or be extinct; which verb is understood out of the former clause, after the manner of the Hebrews. The unclean; or, the filthy, or whoremongers, or sodomites; to whose destruction (which happened not long before this time) he may seem to allude. The sense is, they shall die by some dreadful and exemplary stroke of Divine vengeance.

† Or, afflicted.

15 He delivereth the || poor in his affliction, and openeth their ears in oppression.

i. e. Causeth them to hear, and understand, and do the will of God; hearing being oft put for obeying. And this latter clause seems to be added, to intimate that he will not deliver all afflicted persons, but only those whose ears he openeth to receive his counsels. In oppression, i. e. in the time of their oppression. Or, by oppression or tribulation, as the means of opening their ears and hearts.

16 Even so would he have removed thee out of the strait into a broad place, where there is no straitness; and †^a that which should be set on thy table should be full of fatness.

Even so, if thou hadst opened thine ear to God's counsels, and humbled thyself under his correcting hand, and sued to God for mercy, would he have removed thee; as this verb is used, 2 Chron. xviii. 31. Or, allured, or enticed, or persuaded thee, as the word properly signifies; which possibly may here be emphatical, and may imply, as that Job had by his sins brought himself into these straits, so that God would have brought him out of them by the usual and regular way, to wit, by persuading him to turn from his sins, and humbly and earnestly to cry to God for mercy, which if he had complied with, God would have delivered him. Out of the strait, Heb. out of the mouth or jaws of tribulation; which like a wild beast was read to swallow him up. Into a broad place, i. e. into a state of ease and freedom. Thy table; thy dishes, or the food in them.

† Or, judgment and justice should uphold thee.

17 But thou hast fulfilled the judgment of the wicked: || judgment and justice take hold on thee.

The judgment; or, the cause, or sentence, as the word most properly signifyeth. Thou hast fully pleaded their cause, and justified the hard and reproachful speeches which wicked men in their rage utter against God, condemning God and justifying themselves. Judgment and justice take hold on thee; or, therefore (which is oft understood) the sentence and judgment (or, the judicial sentence, to wit, of the wicked now mentioned) shall take hold on thee. Thou hast maintained their cause against God, and God shall pass against thee their sentence, or the sentence of condemnation due to such wicked men.

18 Because there is wrath, beware lest he take thee away with his stroke: then ^a a great ransom cannot † deliver thee.

Because there is wrath, to wit, conceived by God against thee. Because by thy pleading the cause of the wicked, thou hast deserved that God should give sentence against thee, as was now said, and hast provoked God's wrath against thee; therefore look to thyself, and reconcile thyself to God by true repentance whilst thou mayst, and before sentence be executed upon thee. Beware: this is not in the Hebrew, but is necessarily to be understood to make up the sense, and is oft understood in the like cases, and that before this Hebrew particle pen, as Gen. iii. 22; xi. 4; xlii. 4; Isa. xxxvi. 18. See the like also Matt. xxv. 9; Acts v. 39. With his stroke; properly, with the stroke of his hand or foot. It is an allusion to men, who oft express their anger by clapping their hands, or stamping with their feet. Then a great ransom cannot deliver thee; for if once God's wrath take hold of thee, and sentence be executed upon thee before thou dost repent and humble thyself to thy judge, neither riches, nor friends, no, nor any person or thing in heaven and earth, can redeem thee; no ransom or price will be accepted for thee.

19 Will he esteem thy riches? no, a Prov. 11. 4 not gold, nor all the forces of strength.

If thou couldst recover thy lost wealth or strength, or thy friends would employ theirs on thy behalf, neither could the one ransom thee, nor the other rescue thee.

20 Desire not the night, when people are cut off in their place.

Desire not the night; either, 1. Properly, that in it thou mayst find some ease or rest, as men usually do. But this Job did not much desire, for he complains that his nights were as restless as his days. Or rather, 2. Metaphorically, the night of death, which is called the night both in Scripture, as John ix. 4, and in other writers; and which Job had oft and earnestly desired, and even thirsted after, as this verb notes. See chap. vii. 15. And this seems best to agree with the foregoing counsel, ver. 18, beware lest he take thee away with his stroke; for then, saith he, thou art irrecoverably lost and gone; and therefore take heed of thy foolish and oft-repeated desire of death, lest God inflict it upon thee in great anger. When; or, by which; which words are oft understood in divers texts of Scripture. People; even whole nations and bodies of people, which are all God's creatures as well as thou, and yet are not spared by him, but cut off in wrath, and many of them sent from one death to another; take heed therefore thou be not added to the number. Are cut off, Heb. are made to ascend, i. e. to vanish, or perish, or die, as this verb is oft used, as Job xviii. 16; Psal. cii. 24. In their place; in their several places where they are; or suddenly, before they can remove out of the place where the hand and stroke of God finds them; or in the place where they are settled and surrounded with all manner of comforts, and supports, and friends, all which could not prevent their being cut off. Possibly this phrase may allude to that expression of Job's, chap. xxix. 18, I shall die in my nest.

21 Take heed, regard not iniquity: o Pa. 66. 18. for ^pthis hast thou chosen rather than ^pSee Heb. 11. 25. affliction.

Regard not iniquity, or, look not to it, to wit, with an approving or coveting eye, as this word is used, Prov. xxiii. 31. Thou hast chosen rather to quarrel with God, and censure his judgments, than humbly and quietly to submit to them, and to wait upon God by faith and prayer for deliverance in his time and way.

22 Behold, God exalteth by his power: q Is. 40. 13, 14. Rom. 11. 34. 1 Cor. 2. 16. who teacheth like him?

God exalteth; or, is high, or exalted; the active verb being taken intransitively; which is not unusual in the Hebrew tongue. This is a proper argument to force the foregoing counsels. God is omnipotent; and therefore can with great facility either punish thee far worse, if thou be obstinate and refractory; or deliver thee, if thou dost repent and return to him. Who teacheth like him? he is also infinitely wise as well as powerful; and as none can work like him, so none can teach like him. Therefore do not presume to teach him how to govern the world, or to order thy affairs; but know that whatsoever he doth with thee, or with any other men, is best to be done. And therefore be willing to learn from him. Learn obedience by the things which thou sufferest from him; and do not follow thy own fancies or affections, but use the methods which God hath taught thee to get out of thy troubles, by submission, and prayer, and repentance. The words may be rendered, what lord is like him? For the word moreb in the Chaldee dialect signifies a lord. This translation suits with the former clause of this verse; but ours agrees well enough with that, and is confirmed by the following verse.

23 Who hath enjoined him his way? r ch. 34. 13. or who can say, Thou hast wrought ini- s ch. 34. 10. quity?

His way, wherein he would walk, i. e. what courses and methods he should use in the administration of human affairs. If he had a superior Lord who gave him laws for his actions, he might be accountable to him, and questionable for what he did; but he is supreme, absolute, and uncontrollable, who hath no law to regulate him but his own holy nature and blessed will. And therefore how rash, and impudent, and absurd a thing is it for any man to censure his proceedings! Thou hast wrought iniquity; thou hast swerved from the law and rule given to thee.

† Ps. 92. 5.
Rev. 15. 3.

24 Remember that thou 'magnify his work, which men behold.

Remember; call to mind this thy duty, and take this matter into thy more serious thoughts, and it will prevent thy horrible mistakes and miscarriages. That; so this Hebrew particle is used here, vcr. 10; Job iii. 12. His work; or, his works, the singular number being put for the plural, every work which he doth; do not condemn any of his providential works towards thee or others, but adore and glorify them, as done with admirable wisdom, and justice, and faithfulness. Which men behold, to wit, with admiration and astonishment; which by their greatness and glory draw the eyes and minds of all men towards them; which deserve to be entertained with adoration and reverence of all men, not with censure and reproach.

25 Every man may see it; man may behold it afar off.

May see it, to wit, his work, last mentioned. The power, and wisdom, and greatness of God is so manifest in all his works, that all who are not blind or stupid must needs see and acknowledge it. Man may behold it afar off; the works of God are so great and conspicuous, that they may be seen at a great distance; whereas little things cannot be seen, unless we be near them. This translation and interpretation seems better to agree with the context than that which is more common, man doth behold it (i. e. God's work or works) afar off, i. e. they see them darkly and imperfectly, as things at a great distance, but not clearly and plainly, as things near at hand; and therefore they are so apt to mistake them, and misjudge of them.

u 1 Cor. 13.

26 Behold, God is great, and we 'know him not, 'neither can the number of his years be searched out.

God is great; infinite in majesty, and power, and wisdom, and all perfections, and therefore just in all his ways. We know him not, to wit, perfectly. Though we see something of him in his works, as was now said, yet we see and know but little of him in comparison of that which is in him. He is incomprehensibly great in his essence and in his works, and therefore be not so rash, O Job, as to censure those ways of God which thou canst not fully understand. He is from everlasting to everlasting, eternal, as in his being, so in all his counsels; which therefore must be infinitely wise, and above the comprehension of short-lived men.

† Ps. 147. 8.

27 For he 'maketh small the drops of water: they pour down rain according to the vapour thereof:

Having affirmed that God's works are incomprehensibly great and glorious, he now enters upon the proof of it; and he proveth it from the most common and visible works of nature and providence, which if thoroughly considered, are full of wonder, and past the reach of the greatest philosophers, who indeed speak of them only by guess, and by their innumerable disputations about them discover their ignorance in them. And hence he leaves it to Job to consider how incomparably more deep and unconceivable the secret counsels and judgments of God must needs be, and therefore how foolish and presumptuous a thing it was for him to judge and censure them. He maketh small the drops of water, i. e. he orders matters so wisely and graciously, that the waters which are in the clouds do not fall down at once in spouts, or rivers, or seas; which would be both unprofitable and pernicious to the earth, and to mankind; but by degrees, and in drops; which is best for men's safety and comfort, and for the refreshment of the earth. And this he observes as a wonderful work of God, without whose providence herein those waters might constantly or commonly fall in spouts, as sometimes part of them hath done. They; either the waters, last mentioned; or the clouds, as it is expressed in the next verse; or the active verb is used impersonally, which is frequent in the Hebrew language, they pour down rain, for the rain is poured down. Pour down; or, melt or dissolve; which word is borrowed from metallists, who dissolve metals with fire, and then pour them forth by degrees and in parcels; as the clouds are dissolved, and then poured forth in drops, as was now expressed. According to the vapour thereof, i. e. according to the proportion of vapours which the heat of the sun hath drawn up from the earth or sea into the clouds. Or, into the vapour thereof. So it notes that great work of God, by which the rain is first made of vapours, and afterwards resolved into vapours, or into the matter of succeeding vapours, by a constant rotation and reciprocation.

28 *Which the clouds do drop and *Prov. 3. 20. distil upon man abundantly.

In such plenty as the necessities of the earth require; which also is a wonderful work of God.

29 Also can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle?

Of the clouds; or rather, of a cloud, as it is in the Hebrew; whence it comes to pass that a small cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, doth suddenly spread over the whole heavens: how the clouds come to be suddenly gathered together, and so condensed as to bring forth thunder and lightning, which here follows. The noise of his tabernacle, i. e. the thunder produced in the clouds, which are oft called God's tent or tabernacle, as Psal. xviii. 11; civ. 3, because there he oft-times seems to dwell, and gives forth tokens of his powerful and glorious presence in those mighty works of thundering and lightning, wherewith men are frequently astonished and affrighted.

30 Behold, he *spreadeth his light upon a ch. 37. 3. it, and covereth † the bottom of the sea. † Heb. the roots.

His light, i. e. the lightning; of which the whole context speaks, which is fitly called God's light, as it is called God's lightning, Psal. cxliv. 6, because God only can light it. Upon it, i. e. upon the cloud, which is in a manner the candlestick in which God sets up this light. Covereth the bottom of the sea; the lightning spreads far and wide over all the parts of the sea, and pierceth deep, reaching even to the bottom of it, and spreading itself upon it, and so covering it like a gay and glorious garment, suddenly cast over and covering the body of a man or woman; or as God is said to cover himself with light as with a garment, Psal. civ. 2.

31 For ^bby them judgeth he the people; b ch. 37. 13. & 38. 23. he 'giveth meat in abundance. c Ps. 136. 25. Acts 14. 17.

By thunder and lightning he manifests his displeasure and executes his judgments against ungodly people or countries. He giveth meat in abundance; or, and (which conjunction is oft understood) he giveth meat, &c., i. e. by the selfsame clouds he punisheth wicked men by thunder and lightning, and provideth for others by those plentiful showers which accompany them.

32 ^dWith clouds he covereth the light; d Ps. 147. 8. and commandeth it not to shine by the cloud that cometh betwixt.

With clouds; with thick and black clouds spread over the whole heavens, as it is in times of great thunders and lightnings. Heb. With hands; either the clouds are so called for their resemblance to hands, 1 Kings xviii. 44, as being hollow and spread abroad; or the meaning is, that God covereth the light as it were by the hollow of his hand, as a man sometimes covers the light of a candle. The light; either the lightning, or rather the sun, which is fitly called light, Job xxxi. 26; Psal. cxxxvi. 7, as being the fountain of light. Commandeth it not to shine; or, giveth a charge concerning it, to wit, that it shall be covered; or, forbiddeth it, as this Hebrew word, joined with this proposition, usually signifies, as Gen. ii. 17; xxviii. 6; 1 Kings ii. 43; xi. 11, and elsewhere, i. e. hindereth it, as it were by an express command or prohibition, from its usual and proper work, to wit, from shining. That cometh betwixt; which God interposeth as a veil between the sun and earth; by which he doth, as it were, deliver his command or prohibition to the sun, that he should not shine.

33 The noise thereof sheweth concerning it, the cattle also concerning † the vapour.

The noise thereof, to wit, of or within the black or thick cloud, spoken of ver. 32. Or, his, i. e. God's, noise, to wit, the thunder, which is called God's voice, Psal. xxix. 4, 5. Showeth concerning it, to wit, the rain, which is the principal subject of these verses, of which he speaketh expressly ver. 27, 28; and of its companions, the clouds, and thunder and lightning, in all the following verses. The sense is, The thunder gives notice of the approaching rain. And as the thunder, so also the cattle, showeth (which verb is understood out of the foregoing clause, after the manner) concerning the vapour, i. e. concerning the coming of the rain; but he puts vapour for the rain, because divers cattle are very sagacious in this matter, and do not only perceive the rain when it is ready to fall, but foresee it at some distance by the vapours, which are drawn up by the sun in great abundance, and by divers motions and actions, give men timely notice of it, as hath been observed not only by husbandmen, but also by learned authors.

CHAP. XXXVII.

God's great works, lightning, thunder, snow, rain, winds, frosts, clouds, and his providences towards nations, whether for correction or mercy, call for reverence and fear, 1—14; as also his unsearchable wisdom in them, 15—18. We are ignorant, and cannot speak to God; but must fear him, who respecteth none, 19—24.

AT this also my heart trembleth, and is moved out of his place.

At this also, of which I have already spoken, and am now to speak further, to wit, the thunder, which hath oftentimes made even atheists and other wicked men to tremble with a fear of horror, and good men to tremble with a fear of reverence, and a due dread of God's judgments. It moved out of his place; leaps and beats excessively, as if it would leap out of my body.

2 † Hear attentively the noise of his voice, and the sound that goeth out of his mouth.

It seems not improbable, that whilst Elihu was speaking it thundered greatly, and that tempest was begun where-with God ushered in his speech, as it here follows, chap. xxxviii. 1, and that this occasioned his return to that subject of which he had discoursed before, and his exhortation to them to mind it with deeper attention. The noise of his voice; or, his voice (to wit, the thunder, which is called a voice, Exod. xx. 18, and God's voice, Psal. xxix. 4) with trembling; because the thunder is an effect or evidence of God's mighty power, and oftentimes of his anger also. The sound that goeth out of his mouth; as the voice (and thunder is God's voice) goeth out of man's mouth. Or, that is produced by God's word or command, which is oft signified by his mouth.

3 He directeth it under the whole heaven, and his † lightning unto the † ends of the earth.

He directeth it, to wit, his voice; which he shooteth or guideth like an arrow to the mark, so disposing it that it may do that work for which he sends it. Under the whole heaven; far and wide through all the parts of this lower world. Unto the ends of the earth; from one end of the heaven to the opposite end or part of the earth, as from east to west, Matt. xxiv. 27.

4 After it *a voice roareth: he thundereth with the voice of his excellency; and he will not stay them when his voice is heard.

After it a voice, i. e. after the lightning. For though the thunder be in order of nature before the lightning, yet the lightning is seen before the thunder is heard. With the voice of his excellency, or, with his excellent, or high, or lofty voice, both loud and full of majesty and awfulness. He will not stay; or, delay. Heb. take them by the heel, as Jacob did Esau in the womb, to delay or stop him from entering into the world before him. Them; either, 1. The lightnings spoken of in the beginning of the verse. But these do not stay till his voice be heard, but come before it. Or rather, 2. The rains and storms, of which he spoke before, and will speak again, ver. 6.

5 God thundereth marvellously with his voice; † great things doeth he, which we cannot comprehend.

Marvellously; with a wonderful and terrible noise, and so as to produce many wonderful effects, as the breaking down of great and strong trees or buildings, the killing of men in a stupendous manner, &c. Great things doeth he, even in the course of nature, and in visible things; which all men see, but scarce any can give the true and satisfactory reasons of them; for the greatest philosophers speak only by guess, and are greatly divided among themselves about them. And therefore it is not strange if the secret and deep counsels of Divine Providence be out of our reach; and it is great arrogancy in thee, O Job, to censure them, because thou dost not fully understand them.

6 For † he saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth; † likewise to the small rain, and to the great rain of his strength.

By his powerful word and will the snow is made in the air, and falls upon the earth where and when he seeth fit. The great rain of his strength, i. e. those great storms or showers of rain which come with great force and irresistible violence.

7 He sealeth up the hand of every man; † that all men may know his work.

By these great snows and rains he drives men out of the fields, and seals or binds up their hands from all that work, and drives them home to their houses, and in a manner shuts them up there. See Gen. vii. 16; Exod. ix. 19. Or, by his hand or power (i. e. by those powerful works of his hand here mentioned) he sealeth, or shutteth up, or keepeth close every man, to wit, in his house, as the beasts in their dens, ver. 8. That all men may know his work; that men being hindered from action and their own work, and so being idle and at perfect leisure, may fall to a serious contemplation of these and other great and glorious works of God. Or, that he (i. e. every man, as was now expressed) may know (or inquire into, or take an account of) all his workmen; for which the proper season is when they are all hindered from their work, and brought together into the house.

8 Then the beasts † go into dens, and remain in their places.

Then, in great rains or deep snows, the beasts go into dens for shelter and comfort.

9 † Out of the south cometh the whirlwind: and cold out of the † north.

Out of the south, Heb. out of the inner chamber; as the southern part of the world is called, because in a great part it was and is hid and unknown to those who live in the northern hemisphere, in which Job's habitation lay. Or, out of the chambers of the south, as it is more largely expressed, Job ix. 9; for this is opposed to the north in the following clause. The whirlwind; violent and stormy winds; which in those parts most frequently came out of the south, whence they are called whirlwinds of the south, Zech ix. 14. So also Isa. xxi. 1. Cold, i. e. cold and freezing winds, which generally come from that quarter.

10 † By the breath of God frost is given: and the breadth of the waters is † straitened.

By the breath of God, i. e. by the word of God, as this very phrase is explained, Psal. xxxiii. 6; by his will or appointment, to which as the principal cause all these works are ascribed. The breadth of the waters is straitened; the frost dries up the waters in great measure, and bringeth the remainder into a narrower compass, as we see.

11 Also by watering he wearieth the thick cloud: he scattereth † his bright cloud:

† Heb. the cloud of his light.

By watering, to wit, the earth; by causing them first to receive and return, and then to pour forth abundance of water. He wearieth the thick cloud, by filling and burdening them with much water, and making them to go long journeys to water remote parts, and at last to spend and empty themselves there; all which things make men weary; and therefore are here said to make the clouds weary by a common figure called prosopopœia. He scattereth his bright cloud: as for the white and lightsome clouds, (which are opposed to the thick and black clouds in the former clause,) he scattereth and dissolveth them by the wind or sun. Or, he scattereth other clouds by his light, i. e. by the beams of the sun. So he gathereth some, and scattereth others, as he pleaseth, causing either clear, or dark and rainy weather.

12 And it is turned round about by his counsels: that they may do whatsoever he commandeth them upon the face of the world in the earth.

It is turned round about; the clouds (now mentioned) are carried about to this or that place. By his counsels; not by chance, (though nothing seems to be more casual and uncertain than the motions of the clouds,) but by his order and governance. That they may do whatsoever he commandeth them; either be dispersed and pass away without effect, to the disappointment of the husbandmen's hopes, or be dissolved in sweet and fruitful showers.

13 He causeth it to come, whether for † correction, or for his land, or for mercy.

† Heb. a rod.

He causeth it to come, Heb. he maketh it (to wit, the cloud, or clouds, and the rain which is in it) to find, to wit, a path, or to find out the persons or place to which God intends either good or hurt by it. For correction, Heb. for a rod, to scourge or correct men by immoderate showers. Or, for a tribe, or certain portion of land, which God intends particularly to punish in that kind. For his land, i. e. for God's land, whereby he understands either, 1. The land which he favourerth, and where his servants live, such as Canaan was, which for that reason God blessed with rain, as is noted, Deut. xi. 12; Psal. lxxviii. 9, 10. But in Job's time God's people were not in Canaan, but in Egypt, where little or no rain fell. Or, 2. The uninhabited or desert parts of the world, which may be called God's land peculiarly, because it is immediately and only under God's care, as being not regarded nor possessed by any man. For it is noted as a special act of God's providence, that he causeth rain to fall upon such places, Job xxxviii. 26, 27. Or, 3. His earth, as it may be re-terred, to wit, the whole earth, which is said to be the Lord's, Psal. xxiv. 1; 1. 12, and which may be here opposed to a tribe, or little part of the earth. And so this may note a general judgment by excessive rains inflicted upon the whole earth, and all its inhabitants, even the universal deluge, which then was in a manner of fresh memory, which came in a great measure out of the clouds. And thus these two first members speak of correction, and the last of mercy. For mercy; for the comfort and benefit of mankind, by cooling and cleansing the air, and refreshing and improving all the fruits of the earth, and other ways.

14 Hearken unto this, O Job: stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God.

If there be so much matter of wonder and adoration in the most obvious and sensible works of God, how wonderful must his deep and secret counsels and judgments be! And therefore it would better become thee humbly to admire, and quietly to submit to them, than to murmur or quarrel with them.

15 Dost thou know when God disposed them, and caused the light of his cloud to shine?

When God disposed them, to wit, the things before mentioned, the clouds, rain, snow, thunder and lightning, and other meteors. Did God ask counsel from thee to acquaint thee with his counsels in the producing and ordering of them, when, and where, and in what manner he should dispose them? God ordereth all these things not as it pleaseth thee, but as he thinks meet; and in like manner he disposeth of all human affairs, and of thine among the rest. Caused the light of his cloud to shine; which may be understood either, 1. Of the light of the sun breaking through the clouds, when it is most glorious and comfortable. But though this light break through the clouds, yet it is very improper to call it the light of the clouds. Or, 2. The lightning, which is properly so called, as being produced by and in a cloud. Or, 3. The rainbow, which is a lightsome and glorious work of God, and therefore not likely to be omitted in this place, and which is seated in a cloud, which also may well be called God's cloud, because therein God puts his bow, as the rainbow is called, Gen. ix. 13.

16 Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds, the wondrous works of which is perfect in knowledge?

The balancings; how God doth as it were weigh and suspend the clouds in balances; so that although they are ponderous and full of water, yet they are by his power kept up in the thin air from falling down upon us in spouts and floods, as sometimes they have done, and generally would do, if not overruled by a higher Providence. Which is perfect in knowledge; who exactly knows the weight. These are effects and evidences of his infinite power and knowledge.

17 How thy garments are warm, when he quieteth the earth by the south wind?

How and why thy garments keep thee warm; of which as there are some natural causes, so it is certain that they are not sufficient to do it without God's blessing, as experience shows, Hag. i. 6. The earth, i. e. the air about the earth. By the south wind; which though sometimes it brings tempests, ver. 9, yet commonly it ushereth in hot weather, Luke xii. 55, as the north wind brings cold, ver. 9. Or, from the south wind, i. e. from the tempest, which was noted to come out of the south, ver. 9. Heb. from or by the south, i. e. by the sun's coming into the southern parts, which makes the air quiet and warm.

18 Hast thou with him spread out the sky, which is strong, and as a molten looking glass?

Wast thou his co-worker or assistant in spreading out the sky like a tent or canopy over the earth? or canst thou spread out such another sky? Then indeed thou mayst with some colour pretend to be privy to his counsels, and to judge of his works. Which is strong; which though it be very thin and transparent, yet is also firm, and compact, and stedfast, and of great force when it is pent up. As a molten looking-glass, made of brass or steel, as the manner then was.

19 Teach us what we shall say unto him; for we cannot order our speech by reason of darkness.

Unto him, i. e. unto God, either by way of apology for thee; or rather, by way of debate and disputation with him about his counsels and ways; about which we know not what to say, and therefore are willing to be taught by thee, who pretendest to such exquisite knowledge of these matters. So it is a reproof of his presumption and arrogance. We cannot order our speech; we know neither with what words or matter, nor in what method and manner, to maintain discourse with him, or plead against him. The words our speech are easily understood out of the former clause of the verse. By reason of darkness; both because of the darkness of the matter, God's counsels and ways being a great depth, and far out of our reach; and because of the darkness or blindness of our minds.

20 Shall it be told him that I speak? if a man speak, surely he shall be swallowed up.

That I speak, Heb. that I will speak. Shall I send, or who dare carry, a challenge from me to God, or a message that I am ready and desirous to debate with him concerning his proceedings? This indeed thou hast done in effect, but far be such presumption from me. If a man speak; if a man should be so bold and venturesome to enter the lists with God. He shall be swallowed up with the sense of God's infinite majesty and spotless purity.

21 And now men see not the bright light which is in the clouds: but the wind passeth, and cleanseth them.

And; or, for, as this particle is oft rendered; the following words containing a reason of those which go before. Now: this particle is either, 1. A note of time, and so it intimates a sudden change which then was in the weather, which having been very dark, began now to clear up; or rather, 2. A note of inference to usher in the argument. Men see not; either, 1. Do not observe (as seeing is oft used) nor consider these glorious works of God; or, 2. Cannot behold, or at least not gaze upon it. In the clouds; or, in the skies; for the Hebrew word signifies both clouds and skies. This is to be understood, either, 1. Of bright and lightsome clouds; or rather, 2. Of the sun, which is oft and emphatically called light, as was noted before, and here the bright light; which men oftentimes cannot behold, either when it is covered with a black and thick cloud; or when, as it follows, the sky is very clear, and consequently the sunshine is very bright. And therefore it is not strange if we cannot see God, who dwelleth in darkness, 1 Kings viii. 12, nor discern his counsels and ways, which are covered with great obscurity; and if we dare not approach to him, with whom is, as it here follows, terrible majesty; and if we presume to do so, we must needs be swallowed up, as was said, ver. 20. But the wind passeth; or rather, when (as this particle is used) the wind passeth. Cleanseth them; either the clouds, i. e. cleanseth the air from them; or the skies, by driving away those clouds which darkened it.

+ Heb. Gold. 22 † Fair weather cometh out of the north: with God is terrible majesty.

Fair weather; or, when (which particle may well be understood out of the foregoing verse; and so this may be a further description of the time when men cannot see or gaze upon the sun, namely, when) fair weather, &c. Heb. gold; either, 1. Properly. And so this may be noted as another wonderful work of God, that the choicest of metals, to wit, gold, should be found in and fetched out of the bowels of cold northern countries. Or, 2. Metaphorically, as this word is oft used of bright and shining things; as we read of golden oil, Zech. iv. 12, and we call happy times golden days. And so bright and fair weather may well be called golden, because then the sun gilds the air and earth with its beams, which also are called by poets golden beams. Out of the north, i. e. from the northern winds, which scatter the clouds, and clear the sky, Prov. xxv. 23. With God is terrible majesty; and therefore we neither can nor may approach too near to him, nor speak presumptuously or irreverently to him, or of him. And so this is the application of what he had now said, that we could not see the sun, &c., much less God; and withal it is an epiphonema or conclusion of the whole foregoing discourse. Those glorious works of his which I have described, are testimonies of that great and terrible majesty which is in him; which should cause us to fear and reverence him, and not to behave ourselves so insolently towards him, as Job hath done.

p 1 Tim. 6. 16. 23 Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out: he is excellent in power, and in judgment, and in plenty of justice: he will not afflict.

We cannot find him out, to wit, to perfection, as it is expressed, Job xi. 7. We cannot comprehend him; his being, power, wisdom, justice, and his counsels proceeding from them, are past our finding out; and therefore it is most absurd and intolerable that thou, O Job, presumest to censure what thou dost not understand. He is excellent in power; and therefore as he doth not need any unrighteous action to advance himself, so he cannot do it, because all such things are acts and evidences of impotency or weakness. In judgment, i. e. in the just and righteous administration of judgment, as this word is oft used, and as the thing itself and the following words plainly evince. And this he adds, to intimate that although God had indeed a power to crush Job, or any other man, yet he never did nor can exercise that power unjustly or tyrannically, as Job seemed to insinuate. In plenty of justice; in great and perfect justice, such as no man can justly reproach. He will not afflict, to wit, without just cause, and above measure; as it may and must be limited, both from the foregoing words, and from Job's complaint, which was of that very thing; and from the nature of the thing, because otherwise this proposition, that God will not afflict, is not simply and universally true. Or these last words may be joined with the former; and so some render the place, he is excellent in power, and, or but, or yet, he will not afflict any man with judgment and much (i. e. too much) justice, i. e. with extremity or rigour of justice.

24 Men do therefore fear him: he respecteth not any that are wise of heart.

Men do therefore fear him; for this cause, to wit, because of God's infinite and excellent perfections, and especially those mentioned in the foregoing verse, men do or should (for the future tense is oft used potentially, as Hebricians know) fear or reverence him, and humbly submit to him, and not presume to quarrel or dispute with him, as thou, O Job, hast done. He respecteth not, Heb. he doth not, or will not, behold, to wit, with respect or approbation; he beholdeth them afar off with scorn and contempt. Any that are wise of heart, i. e. such as are wise in their own eyes, that lean to their own understandings, and despise all other men in comparison of themselves, and scorn all their counsels; that are so puffed up with the opinion of their own wisdom, that they dare contend with their Maker, and presume to censure his counsels and actions; which he hereby intimates to be Job's fault, and to be the true reason why God did not respect nor regard him, nor his prayers and tears, as Job complained. And so this is also a tacit advice and exhortation to Job to be humble and little in his own eyes, if ever he expected or desired any favour from God.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

The Lord answers Job, 1—3: declareth his works of creation; the foundation and the measures of the earth, 4—6; the stars; the sea, and its bounds, 7—11; the morning, and its light, 12—15; the depth of the sea; the gates and shadow of death; the breadth of the earth, 16—18; the place of light and darkness; the treasures of snow and hail for battle, 19—23; the east wind, springs, and rain for the earth, 24—30; the planets, ordinances of heaven, and their dominion on the earth; clouds and lightning, 31—35. Wisdom and understanding in the heart of man, and in his works more than we can understand: he feedeth the lion and the raven, 36—41.

THEN the LORD answered Job out of the whirlwind, and said,

Answered Job, i. e. began to debate the matter with him, as Job had desired. Out of the whirlwind, i. e. out of a dark and thick cloud, from which he sent a terrible and tempestuous wind, as the harbinger of his presence. In this manner God appears and speaks to him, partly, because this was his usual method in those times, as we see, Exod. xix. 18; Numb. ix. 15, 16; see also 1 Kings xix. 11; Ezek. i. 4; partly, to awaken Job and his friends to the more serious and reverent attention to his words; partly, to testify his displeasure, both against Job, and against his three friends; and partly, that all of them might be more deeply and thoroughly humbled and abased within themselves, and prepared the better to receive, and longer to retain, the instructions which God was about to give them.

2 Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?

Who is this? it is a question of admiration and reprehension, What and where is he that presumeth to talk at this rate? this language becomes not a creature, much less a professor of religion. The person here designed is not Elihu, who spoke last; but Job, who had spoken most, as is apparent from ver. 1, and from chap. xlii. 3, where Job takes the following reproof to himself, and from the following discourse, wherein God convinceth Job by divers of the same kind of arguments which Elihu had used against him. That darkeneth counsel; either, 1. His own counsel, i. e. that expresseth his own mind darkly and doubtfully. But that was not Job's fault. He spake his mind too plainly and freely. Or rather, 2. God's counsel, which is called simply counsel by way of eminency, as the word and the commandment are oft put for the word and command of God. For the great matter of the dispute between Job and his friends was concerning God's counsel, and purpose, and providence in afflicting Job; which being a wise, and just, and glorious action of God, Job had endeavoured to obscure, and misrepresent, and censure. And God's decrees and judgments are frequently called his counsels, as Psal. xxxiii. 11; Prov. xix. 21; Isa. xxviii. 29; Acts ii. 23. By words; God doth not charge Job, as his three friends had done, with hypocrisy and wickedness in the course of life, nor with atheistical opinions of God or his providence, as some of the Hebrew writers do, but confines his reproof to his hard speeches. Without knowledge; proceeding from ignorance, and mistake, and inconsiderateness; not from malice or rage against God, as his friends accused him.

d ch. 40. 7.

3 ^d Gird up now thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and † answer thee me.

Gird up now thy loins; as warriors then did for the battle. Prepare thyself for the combat with me, which thou hast oft desired. I accept of thy challenge, chap. xiii. 22, and elsewhere. I will demand of thee; or, I will ask thee questions; which he doth in the following verses.

word, are called, Dan. viii. 10; xii. 3; Rev. i. 16, 20; and morning stars, because of their excellent lustre and glory, for which they are called angels of light, 2 Cor. xi. 14, and Christ for the same reason is called the Morning Star, Rev. xxii. 16. The sons of God; the blessed angels; for man not being yet made, God had then no other sons; and these are called the sons of God, partly because they had their whole being from him, and partly because they were made partakers of his Divine and glorious image. And all these are said to join in this work of praising God, probably because none of the angels were as yet fallen from their first estate, though they did fall within a very little time after. Shouted for joy; rejoiced in and blessed God for his works; whereby he intimates that they neither did advise or any way assist him in his works, nor dislike or censure any of his works, as Job had presumed to do with the works of his providence, which are not inferior to those of creation.

8 ^e Or who shut up the sea with doors, when it brake forth, as if it had issued out of the womb?

Who was it, thou or I, that did set bounds to the vast and raging ocean, and shut it up as it were with doors within its proper place and storehouse, that it might not overflow the earth; which without God's powerful restraint it would do? See Psal. xxxiii. 7; civ. 9. This sense seems most proper, and to be confirmed by the following verses. When it brake forth, or, after it had broken forth, to wit, from the womb or bowels of the earth, within which the waters were for the most part contained, Gen. i. 2; compare 2 Pet. iii. 5; and out of which they were by God's command brought forth into the proper place or channel which God had appointed for them.

9 When I made the cloud the garment thereof, and thick darkness a swaddlingband for it,

When I covered it with vapours and clouds which arise out of the sea, and by God's appointment hover above it, and cover it like a garment. Thick darkness, i. e. black and dark clouds, called darkness by a usual metonymy of the adjunct. So the same thing is repeated in other words, after the manner. Having compared the sea to a new-born infant, he continues in the same metaphor, and makes the clouds as swaddling-bands to keep the sea within its bounds; though indeed neither clouds, nor air, nor sands and shores can bound the sea, but it is God alone who doth it in and with these things.

10 And ^h brake up for it my decreed place, and set bars and doors,

Brake up for it my decreed place, i. e. made those valleys, or channels, and hollow places in the earth, which might serve for a cradle to receive and hold this great and goodly infant when it came out of the womb. See Gen. i. 9, 10; Psal. xxxiii. 7. Or, ordained or established my decree upon or concerning it. Set bars and doors, i. e. fixed its bounds as strongly as if they were fortified with bars and doors.

11 And said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further: and here shall † thy proud waves ¹ be stayed?

To wit, at the sand and shore of the sea, Jer. v. 22. Thy proud waves; which rage and swell as if they would overwhelm all the earth.

12 Hast thou ¹ commanded the morning since thy days; and caused the day-spring to know his place;

The morning, i. e. the morning light, or the sun, which is the cause of it. Didst thou create the sun, and appoint the order and succession of day and night? Since thy days; since thou wast born. This work was not done by thee, but by me, and that long before thou wast born. To know his place; to observe the punctual time when, and the point of the heavens where, it should arise; which varies every day. Was this thy contrivance or mine?

13 That it might take hold of the † ends of the earth, that ¹ the wicked might be shaken out of it?

That this morning light should in a moment spread itself

f ch. 1. 6.

7 When the morning stars sang together, and all ¹ the sons of God shouted for joy?

The morning stars; either, 1. The stars properly so called, who are said to sing and praise God, objectively, because they give men ample occasion to do it in regard of their glorious light and stupendous motions, &c. Compare Psal. xix. 1; cxlviii. 1, &c. But, 1. These stars are not here the objects or matter, but the authors or instruments, of God's praises for the founding of the earth. 2. The stars were not created when the earth was founded, but upon the fourth day. 3. There is no satisfactory reason given why all the stars should be called morning stars, especially when there is but one star known by that name. Or rather, 2. The sons of God, as it here follows, the latter clause of the verse being explicatory of the former, as is most frequent in this and some other books of Scripture, to wit, the angels, who may well be called stars, as even men of eminent note, and particularly ministers of God's over the face of the whole earth, from one end of the hemisphere to the other. Shaken out of it, from the face of the earth. And this effect the morning light hath upon the wicked, partly because it discovers them, and drives them into their lurking holes; whereas the darkness hides them, and draws them forth, and gives them opportunity to execute their villainies without observation, Job xxiv. 15—17; and partly because it brings them to condign punishment, the morning being the most fit and the most usual time for executing judgment; of which see Psal. ci. 8; Jer. xxi. 12.

14 It is turned as clay to the seal; and they stand as a garment.

It, to wit, the earth, mentioned in the next foregoing verse. Is turned; is transformed and changed in its shape and appearance. To the seal, or, by the seal, which makes a beautiful or valuable impression upon that clay, which in itself hath no form, nor worth, nor comeliness in it. So the earth, which in the darkness of the night lies like a confused heap, without either form or beauty, when the light ariseth and shineth upon it, appears in excellent order and great glory. They; either, 1. The inhabitants of the earth, and particularly the wicked, mentioned both in the foregoing and following verses. Or, 2. More generally, the men and things of the earth, whether natural, as living creatures, herbs, and trees, &c.; or artificial, as houses or other buildings. Stand, i. e. present themselves to our view, for which that posture of standing is most convenient. Or, consist, or abide, or are constituted. As a garment; wherewith the earth is in a manner clothed and adorned as with a garment; as the blessed God himself is said to cover himself with light as with a garment, Psal. civ. 2.

m ch. 18. 5.

15 And from the wicked their ^m light is withholden, and ⁿ the high arm shall be broken.

And, or but; for the following words seem to be added by way of opposition to what went before. The earth, and the men, and the things in it have the comfort and benefit of the light, but so have not the wicked. Their light, i. e. their portion of light. That light which is enjoyed by others is withholden from them, either by their own choice, because they love and choose darkness rather than light; or by the judgment of God, or the magistrate, by whom they are cut off from the light of the living, as it is called, Job xxxiii. 30, or at least deprived of their peace, and comfort, and prosperity, which frequently goes under the name of light in Scripture, and may be so called here by an elegant allusion to the natural light of the sun mentioned before. The high arms; their great strength, which they used tyrannically, to the oppression and crushing of others.

o Ps. 77. 19.

16 Hast thou ^o entered into the springs of the sea? or hast thou walked in the search of the depth?

The springs, Heb. the tears, i. e. the several springs out of which the waters of the sea flow as tears do from the eyes. Hast thou found out the utmost depth and bottom of the sea, which in divers places could never be reached by the wisest mariner, or the longest cables? And how then canst thou fathom the depths of my counsels?

p Ps. 9. 13.

17 Have ^p the gates of death been opened unto thee? or hast thou seen the doors of the shadow of death?

Hast thou seen, or dost thou perfectly know, the place and state of the dead, the depths and bowels of that earth in which the generality of dead men are buried, or the several ways and methods of death, or the various states and conditions of men after death? And the same thing is repeated.

18 Hast thou perceived the breadth of the earth? declare if thou knowest it all.

Dost thou exactly know the whole compass and all the parts of the earth, and the state and quality of all countries, and of the men and things in them? Give me an answer to these questions, which is far more easy to do, than to answer me to many other questions which I could put to thee about my secret counsels and providences, and the reasons of my dealing with thee as I do.

19 Where is the way where light dwelleth? and as for darkness, where is the place thereof,

The way; or rather, the place, as the next clause explains it, and the Hebrew phrase will bear. Where light dwelleth, i. e. hath its constant and settled abode; for in the place where Job lived, and in most other parts of the inhabited world, it is like a traveller, that cometh and goeth continually every day. This may be referred either, 1. To the place under the two poles, where first the light, and then the darkness, continues for six months together. Or rather, 2. To the sun, the fountain of light. And as this is a poetical book, so this may be a poetical expression and question, Whither goes the sun, when it departs from this hemisphere? Where is the tabernacle and the chamber in which both sacred, as Psal. xix. 4, 5, and profane poets suppose, the sun to rest? Dost thou know the place where the sun when it sets may be found, and whence thou canst fetch it back again. For it is to be carefully observed, that he speaks not here of a bare and simple knowledge of this matter, which was plain and easy to Job, and many others, who were not ignorant that the sun was the fountain of light, from whose approach light comes, and by whose departure darkness is caused; but of an operative knowledge, even such as could and did enable him to take it to the bound thereof, as it follows, ver. 20. And withal, he seems here to speak not only of the daily course and motion of the sun, and the vicissitude of day and night, but also and especially of the first production of the light, which was before Job was born, as is evident from ver. 21. And this makes the question more difficult and more considerable, the sense whereof may be this: Seeing there was a time when there was nothing but gross and comfortless darkness upon the face of the earth, what way came light into the world? which was the place where light dwelt at that time, and whence it was fetched? and whence came that orderly constitution and constant succession of light and darkness? Was this thy work? or wast thou privy to it, or a counsellor or assistant in it? or was it not done by me alone long before thou hadst a being?

20 That thou shouldst take it || to the ^{or, &c.} bound thereof, and that thou shouldst know the paths to the house thereof?

That thou shouldst take it, i. e. taking, bring or lead it, as this verb is oft used, as Exod. xxv. 2; Psal. lxxviii. 29, compared with Eph. iv. 11; 1 Kings iii. 24; xvii. 10; Hos. xiv. 2. And many other such pregnant verbs there are in the Hebrew language, having the signification of two verbs included in one. And this it refers principally to the light, and secondarily to darkness, as the consequent of the other. To the bound thereof, i. e. its whole course, from the place of its abode whence it is supposed to come, to the end of its journey which it is to go. Didst thou direct or guide the light or the sun, that he should at first take, and afterward constantly continue, in that course which now it holds; that it should go from east to west, and rise sometimes in one point or part of the heaven, and sometimes in another, and that its day's journey should be longer in one season of the year, and shorter in another? This regular and excellent course must needs be the effect of great wisdom. And whose wisdom was it? thine or mine? That thou shouldst know, to wit, practically, so as to direct or lead it in the manner now expressed. The paths to the house thereof; where thou mayst find it, and whence thou mayst fetch it.

21 Knowest thou it, because thou wast then born? or because the number of thy days is great?

An ironical question: If thou pretendest that thou knowest these things, and canst readily answer these questions, how comest thou by this knowledge? Was it from hence, because thou wast born when I made the world, and that first constitution of the light and darkness in that order and succession which continues to this day, and thereby hadst the opportunity of inspecting my works, and seeing whence the light came, and because thou hast gained this knowledge by long experience, as having lived ever since the creation of the world until this time? whereas in truth thou art but of yesterday, and knowest nothing, as was said, chap. viii. 9. But the words are and may be otherwise rendered, Dost or didst thou know, either by thy own remembrance, or by the information of others, that thou wast then born? (to wit, when I made the world. Or, Didst thou know that thou shouldst then be born? then, to wit, when thou wast born. Or, Didst thou then know, the two Hebrew particles being transplac'd, as is not unusual in that language, that thou shouldst be born?) How couldst thou know this, when thou hadst no being?) and that the number of thy days should be great? that thou shouldst live so long as thou hast lived? Thou couldst neither foreknow the time of thy birth, nor the length of thy life. Or, and is the number of thy days great, i. e. so great that it reacheth to the time of the world's creation?

¶ Ps. 135. 7. 22 Hast thou entered into ⁹ the treasures of the snow? or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail,

Dost thou know where I have laid up those vast quantities of snow and hail which I draw forth when I see fit? Dost thou know the causes of them, and the way to produce them? But if thou art unacquainted with these treasures, it is intolerable presumption in thee to pretend that thou knowest those treasures of wisdom which lie hid in my own breast.

23 ⁷ Which I have reserved against the time of trouble, against the day of battle and war?

Which, i. e. which snow, and especially hail. Against the time of trouble, i. e. when I intend to bring trouble or calamity upon any country or people for their sins, or for their trial. Or, against the time of the enemy, i. e. when I intend to punish mine or my people's enemies, and to fight against them with these weapons; of which see instances Exod. ix. 14; Josh. x. 11. Compare 1 Sam. vii. 10; Job xxxvi. 31; Isa. xxx. 30.

24 By what way is the light parted, which scattereth the east wind upon the earth?

By what way; dost thou know all the causes, means, methods, and circumstances of this work of God? Is the light parted, or dispersed, or distributed, to wit, in the air, or upon the face of the earth? By light he understands either, 1. The lightning, which breaks forth suddenly out of a cloud, and with strange swiftness disperseth itself, and fleeth from east to west, as is noted, Matt. xxiv. 27. But this word light put by itself, and being understood properly, is constantly used in this book for the light of the sun, and never for the lightning; and where it is meant of the lightning, there is some other word added to it, as chap. xxxvii. 15, where it is called the light of his cloud. And besides, he speaks of the lightning in the next verse; which were superfluous, if it were here mentioned. Or rather, 2. Of the light of the sun, which is commonly called light without any other word added to it, as Job iii. 4, 9, 16; xxiv. 14; xxv. 3, &c. And this light of the sun is variously parted or distributed in the world, shining in one place and time, when it doth not shine in another; or for a longer time, or with greater brightness, and power, and virtue, than it doth in another; all which are the effects of God's infinite wisdom and power, and such as were out of Job's reach to understand, or at least to effect. Which scattereth the east wind upon the earth, i. e. which light scattereth, &c., i. e. raiseth, the east wind, and causeth it to blow hither and thither upon the earth. For as the sun is justly called by the poets and others the father of the winds, because he draws up those exhalations which give matter to the winds, and for other reasons; so in particular the east wind is oft observed to rise together with the sun, from which also it hath both its Latin and Greek name. But some make this a distinct question from the former, and render the words thus; and (repeat, by which way) the east wind (under which all the other winds may be comprehended) scattereth itself upon the earth, i. e. whence the winds come, and whither they go, which is mentioned as a secret in nature, John iii. 8, and how it comes to pass that they blow in such several manners, and with such various and even contrary effects. Or thus, and by which way the east wind scattereth (to wit, the clouds, or other light things; for this is noted in Scripture to be a most vehement wind, and to scatter the clouds, Exod. xiv. 21; Jonah iv. 8) upon the earth, i. e. whence it comes to pass that the east wind was so violent and furious. But the words may be rendered thus, which (i. e. which light of the sun, or when it, to wit, this light) scattereth itself (as divers here render this word, that conjugation being often used reciprocally, as is confessed) from (the prefix mem being understood, as it is very frequently in the Hebrew text) the east (for this Hebrew word doth not only signify the eastern wind, but also the east, or the eastern part of the heavens or earth, as Ezek. xl. 19; xlii. 16; Hab. i. 9, and in many other places; and kedem, the root of this word, is constantly so used) upon or over the earth, all over the earth. And this is justly mentioned as a wonderful work of God, that as soon as ever the sun ariseth, it parteth or scattereth its light in an instant from one end of the hemisphere to another. But this I propose with submission.

25 Who ⁸ hath divided a watercourse ⁸ ch. 28. 22. for the overflowing of waters, or a way for the lightning of thunder;

For the overflowing of waters; for the showers of rain which come down out of the clouds, orderly, moderately, and gradually, as if they were conveyed in pipes or channels; which, without the care of God's providence, would fall confusedly, and all together; and, instead of refreshing, would overwhelm the earth. For the lightning of thunder, i. e. for that lightning which, breaking out of the cloud with violence, causeth thunder. Or, for lightning and thunder. Who opened a passage for them out of the cloud in which they were imprisoned? And these are here joined with the rain, because they are commonly accompanied with great showers of rain; which is here noted as a wonderful work of God, that fire and water should come out of the same cloud.

26 To cause it to rain on the earth, where no man is; on the wilderness, wherein there is no man;

To cause it to rain; that the clouds being broken by lightning and thunder might pour down rain. Wherein there is no man, to wit, to water those parts by art and industry, as is usual in cultivated and inhabited places; which makes this work of Divine Providence more necessary and more remarkable, in providing for the relief of the wild beasts, and plants, and other fruits of these forsaken lands, which otherwise would perish with drought.

27 ⁹ To satisfy the desolate and waste ⁹ ch. 107. 35. ground; and to cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth?

To satisfy, by raining, not sparingly, but liberally and abundantly upon it. To cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth; there being many excellent and useful herbs found in desert places, which otherwise would be utterly neglected and despised.

28 ¹⁰ Hath the rain a father? or who ¹⁰ ch. 14. 22. hath begotten the drops of dew? ¹⁰ Ps. 147. 8.

To wit, besides me. Is there any man upon earth that can beget or produce rain at his pleasure? No, this is my peculiar work. And therefore seeing thou knowest and canst do nothing as to the government of these ordinary effects of nature, how great presumption is it to arrogate to thyself the knowledge and management of the secret and mysterious affairs of my providence in the disposal of men!

29 Out of whose womb came the ice? and the ¹¹ hoary frost of heaven, who hath ¹¹ ch. 147. 16. gendered it?

What man either can produce them, or doth fully understand where or how they are engendered? For philosophers speak of these things only by guess, and the reasons which some assign for them are confuted by others; and so they will confute one another to the end of the world, and prove nothing solidly but their own ignorance and the reasonableness of these questions.

30 The waters are hid as with a stone, ¹² and the face of the deep ¹² † is † frozen. ¹² † Heb. in taken. y ch. 37. 10.

As with a stone, i. e. with ice as hard as a stone. The face of the deep, i. e. the great sea, which is oft called the deep, as Gen. vii. 11; Psal. cvii. 24; Isa. li. 10; lxxiii. 13; 2 Cor. xi. 25, which in some parts is frozen, which is a wonderful work of God.

^{s ch. 9. 9.} ^{Amos 5. 8.} ^{10r. the seven stars.} ^{† Heb. Cimak.} ^{† Heb. Ceitil.} 31 Canst thou bind the sweet influences of *† Pleiades, or loose the bands of † Orion?

Bind, i. e. restrain or hinder them. Canst thou bind or shut up the earth when they open it? The sweet influences; or, the delights; because this constellation by its benign and opening influences brings in the spring, the herbs and flowers, and other delights of the earth. Pleiades, called also the Seven Stars. Of this and the following constellation, see Job ix. 9. The bands; by which it binds up the air and earth, by bringing storms of rain or hail, or frost and snow; and withal binds or seals the hands of workmen, as is noted, Job xxxvii. 7. Orion: this is another constellation, which riseth in November, and brings in winter. So the sense of the verse is, Thou canst not bind the earth when the one looseth or openeth it, nor loose or open it when the other binds or shutteth it up.

^{1 Or, the twelve signs.} ^{† Heb. guide them.} 32 Canst thou bring forth † Mazzaroth in his season? or canst thou † guide Arcturus with his sons?

Canst thou bring forth, to wit, into view? canst thou make him to arise and appear in thy hemisphere? Mazzaroth; by which he designs either, 1. All the constellations, and especially the twelve signs of the zodiac; or rather, 2. Some particular constellation, as all the rest here mentioned are understood. But whether this be that which is called the chambers of the south, chap. ix. 9, or the Dog Star, or some other visible in Job's country, but not in ours, we may be safely and contentedly ignorant, seeing even the Hebrew doctors are not agreed therein. Arcturus; a northern constellation, of which see on Job ix. 9. With his sons, to wit, the lesser stars which belong to it, and are placed round about it, and attend upon it, as children upon their parents.

^{a Jer. 31. 35.} 33 Knowest thou *the ordinances of heaven? canst thou set the dominion thereof in the earth?

Knowest thou? either, 1. Simply, and by speculation, dost thou understand them? Or, 2. Practically, or operatively, so as to establish or rule them, as the next clause implies. The ordinances of heaven; the laws, which are firmly established concerning their order, motion, or rest, and their powerful influences upon this lower world. Didst thou give these laws? or dost thou perfectly know them? Canst thou set the dominion thereof in the earth? canst thou manage and overrule their influences, that they shall bring such seasons and such weather as thou wouldst have?

34 Canst thou lift up thy voice to the clouds, that abundance of waters may cover thee?

Canst thou lift up thy voice to the clouds; either thundering in them, or calling to them with a loud voice, commanding them to rain? May cover thee, i. e. thy land, when it needs and requires rain.

^{† Heb. Behold us.} 35 Canst thou send lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, † Here we are?

Canst thou send at thy pleasure, and upon thy errand? Here we are; an expression of servants, declaring their readiness to obey their masters' commands; of which see Gen. xxii. 1; Isa. vi. 8.

^{b ch. 32. 9.} ^{† Ps. 51. 6.} ^{Eccles. 2. 26.} 36 ^b Who hath put wisdom in the inward parts? or who hath given understanding to the heart?

In the inward parts, to wit, of a man. Compare Job xix. 27; Psal. li. 6. Who gave thee that wit and understanding which thou hast, and which thou now usest so arrogantly and wickedly, to contend with me, and to censure my actions? Who hath given understanding to the heart; so he limits the former general expression of the inward parts. The heart is made by the Hebrews the seat of the understanding, and is commonly put for it in Scripture.

37 Who can number the clouds in wisdom? or † who can stay the bottles of heaven,

^{† Heb. who can cause to lie down.} Who can wisely search out and exactly find the number of the clouds? They are numberless, and filled with water, as the next clause implies. Who can stay the bottles of heaven, to wit, the clouds? in which the rain is kept as in bottles, out of which God poureth it when he sees fit.

38 † When the dust † groweth into hardness, and the clods cleave fast together?

^{1 Or, When the dust is turned into mire.} ^{† Heb. is poured.} This verse containeth a description, either, 1. Of a great drought, when the earth grows very hard, and close, and compact; or, 2. Of the condition of the earth presently after the fall of rain, when the earth, which in time of drought was much of it dissolved into dust, is now by the rain cemented or united together. In either of these cases it is the work of God alone to keep the clouds from pouring down more rain upon the earth.

39 ^{c Ps. 104. 21.} ^{& 145. 15.} ^{† Heb. the life.} Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion? or fill † the appetite of the young lions,

Is it by thy care and providence that the lions, who live in desert places, are furnished with necessary provisions? This is justly mentioned as another wonderful work of God.

40 When they couch in their dens, and abide in the covert to lie in wait?

When through age and infirmity they cannot range abroad for prey, as the young lions do; but lie still in their dens, as it were expecting their food from God, from whom also they receive it. To lie in wait; watching till some beast comes that way upon which they may prey.

41 ^{d Ps. 147. 9.} ^{Matt. 6. 26.} Who provideth for the raven his food? when his young ones cry unto God, they wander for lack of meat.

Having mentioned the noblest of brute creatures, he now mentions one of the most contemptible and loathsome, to show the care of God's providence over all creatures, both great and small; which is more remarkable in ravens, because, 1. They devour flesh, which it is not easy for them to find. 2. They are greedy, and eat very much. 3. They are generally neglected and forsaken by mankind. 4. Their young ones are so soon forsaken by their dams, that if God did not provide for them in a more than ordinary manner, they would be starved to death.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Of the wild goats and hinds, 1—4; the wild ass, 5—8; the unicorn, 9—12; the peacock, stork, and ostrich, 13—18; the horse, 19—25; the hawk; the eagle, 26—30. These creatures, not fully known to Job, nor governed by him, are sufficient to convince him that he is no fit judge of the counsels of God.

KNOWEST thou the time when the wild goats of the rock bring forth? or canst thou mark when *the hinds do calve? ^{a Ps. 29. 9.}

Knowest thou the time, that thou mayst then go to them, and afford them thy help in their hard work? The wild goats of the rock; which dwell in high and steep rocks, where no man can come. See 1 Sam. xxiv. 2; Psal. civ. 18. Bring forth; which they do with great difficulty, as is implied, Psal. xxix. 9, and noted by philosophers, wherein they have no assistance from men, but only from God. When the hinds do calve; when God by his secret instinct directs them to a certain herb called seseli, which, as naturalists report, doth hasten and help forward their birth.

2 Canst thou number the months that they fulfil? or knowest thou the time when they bring forth?

Dost thou exactly know when they did conceive, and when they will bring forth? which is more uncertain in these than in other creatures, because there fall out many accidents which cause them to bring forth before their time, as thunder, Psal. xxix. 9, and other like causes of sudden fear, which may be many and various in those desert places where they live.

3 They bow themselves, they bring forth their young ones, they cast out their sorrows.

They bow themselves; being taught by a Divine instinct to dispose themselves in such a posture as may be fittest for their safe and easy bringing forth. They bring forth their young ones, to wit, with great pain, being almost torn or rent asunder with the birth, as the word signifies; or, without any of that help which tame beasts oft have. Their sorrows, i. e. their young ones, and their sorrows together. Or, though (which particle is oft understood) they remit or put away their sorrows, i. e. though instead of cherishing and furthering their sorrows, which for their own ease and safety they should do, they foolishly hinder them, and so increase their own danger; yet by God's good providence to them they are enabled to bring forth, as was now said.

4 Their young ones are in good liking, they grow up with corn; they go forth, and return not unto them.

Are in good liking; or, grow strong, or fat; notwithstanding their great weakness caused by their hard entrance into the world. With corn; which they find and feed upon in the fields. Or, as with corn, i. e. as if they were fed with corn; the particle as being oft deficient, and to be supplied. Or, in the field, as this word in the Chaldee or Syriac dialect signifies. Return not unto them; finding sufficient provisions abroad by the care and conduct of God's providence.

5 Who hath sent out the wild ass free? or who hath loosed the bands of the wild ass?

Who hath sent out the wild ass free? who hath given him this disposition, that he loves freedom, and avoids and hates that subjection which other creatures quietly and contentedly endure? Who hath loosed the bands of the wild ass? which is not to be understood privatively, as if God took off the bands which men had put upon him; but negatively, that he keeps him from receiving the bands and submitting to the service of man. Who hath made him so untractable and unmanageable? Which is the more strange, because home-bred asses are so tame and tractable.

6^b Whose house I have made the wilderness, and the † barren land his dwellings.

Who useth and loveth to dwell in desert lands, Jer. ii. 24; Hos. viii. 3, 9. The barren land; called barren, not simply, for then he must be starved there; but comparatively, unmanaged, and therefore in a great measure unfruitful land.

7 He scorneth the multitude of the city, neither regardeth he the crying † of the driver.

He scorneth; either, 1. He feareth them not when they pursue him, because he is swift, and can easily escape them. Or, 2. He values them not, nor any provisions or advantages which he may have from them, but prefers a vagrant and solitary life in the wilderness before them. Or, 3. He disdains to submit himself to them, and resolutely maintains his own freedom. The multitude of the city: he mentions the city rather than the country, partly because there is the greatest multitude of people to pursue, and overtake, and subject him; and partly because there is the greatest plenty of all things to invite him; the fruits of the country being laid up in cities in greatest abundance. Neither regardeth, Heb. heareth, i. e. obeyeth. Of the driver, Heb. of the taskmaster, or exactor of labour, i. e. he will not be brought to receive his yoke, nor to do his drudgery, nor to answer to his cries or commands, as tame asses are forced to do.

8 The range of the mountains is his pasture, and he searcheth after every green thing.

The range of the mountains; that which he searcheth out or findeth in the mountains. He prefers that mean provision and hardship with his freedom, before the fattest pastures with servitude. Why so weak and harmless a creature as the wild ass should be untamable, when the most savage lions and tigers have been tamed, and how there comes to be so vast a difference between the tame and the wild ass, thou canst give no reason, but must refer it wholly to my good pleasure; to which also thou shouldst upon the same grounds refer all the various methods of my providence and dealings with thee, and with other men, and not so boldly censure what thou dost not understand.

9 Will the unicorn be willing to serve thee, or abide by thy crib?

It is much disputed among the learned, but is not needful to be known by others, whether there be or ever was such a creature as we call the unicorn; or whether this reem, which is the Hebrew name of it, be the rhinoceros, as some would have it; or a certain kind of wild goat, called oryx, which is very tall, and strong, and untractable; or one of that kind of wild oxen or bulls called uri; which may seem most probable, both from the description of this creature here and elsewhere in Scripture, which exactly agrees with its description given by other authors; and from the description of his work in this place, which must in all reason be agreeable to creatures of that general kind; and from the conjunction of this creature with bullocks in Scripture, Deut. xxxiii. 17; and especially Isa. xxxiv. 6, 7, where having put lambs, and goats, and rams together, ver. 6, as creatures of the same or very like sort, he mentions bullocks, and bulls, and reems, ver. 7, as belonging to the same general sort of creatures. But this I shall not positively determine here. He that would know more, may see what the reverend and learned Mr. Caryl hath upon this text out of Boetius and others, and my Latin Synopsis on Numb. xxiii. 22. Be willing to serve thee; canst thou tame him, and bring him into subjection to thy command? Abide by thy crib; will he suffer himself to be tied or confined there all night, and to be reserved to the work of the next day, as the oxen do? Surely no. And if thou canst not rule such a creature as this, much less art thou able to govern the world, or to teach me how to govern it, which thou presumest to do.

10 Canst thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the vallies after thee?

In the furrow, i. e. in thy furrowed field, by a metonymy. Or, to or for (as the prefix beth is oft used, as Gen. xi. 4; Lev. xvi. 22; Job xxiv. 5) the furrow, i. e. to make furrows, or to plough; for which work cattle use to be bound together, that they may be directed by the husbandman, and may make right furrows. The valleys, to wit, the low grounds, which are most proper for and most employed in the work of ploughing. After thee; under thy conduct, following thee step by step.

11 Wilt thou trust him, because his strength is great? or wilt thou leave thy labour to him?

Wilt thou trust him, to wit, for the doing of these works, because he is very able for thy work? And wilt thou by thy power make him willing, or force him, to put forth and spend his strength in thy service? Thy labour; either, 1. Thy work of ploughing and harrowing. Or rather, 2. The fruit of thy labour, or the goods gotten by thy labour, as this word is oft used, as Deut. xviii. 33; Job xx. 18; Psal. lxxviii. 46; cxxviii. 2; John iv. 38, to wit, the fruits of the earth procured by God's blessing upon thy industry. To him; to be brought home by him into thy barns, as the next verse explains it.

12 Wilt thou believe him, that he will bring home thy seed, and gather it into thy barn?

Will bring home thy seed, Heb. will return thy seed; either, 1. By ploughing and harrowing thy land so well that it shall make a good return to thee for thy seed. Or rather, 2. By bringing into thy barn, as it follows, thy seed, i. e. the product of thy seed, or thy sheaves of corn, as this word is used, Hag. ii. 19.

13 Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacocks? or || wings and feathers unto the ostrich?

Gavest thou: the style of this book is very concise, and some verb is manifestly wanting to supply the sense; and this seems to be fitly understood out of ver. 19, where it is expressed. The goodly; or, triumphant; that wherein it triumpheth or prideth itself. Wings, or feathers; Heb. wing or feather. The peacock's beauty lies in its tail; which may well enough be comprehended under this name, as it is confessed that the Latin word ala, which properly signifies a wing, is used by Martial and Claudian to express the peacock's tail. The peacocks; or, as some render it, to the ostrich, whose wings are much more great and goodly than those of the peacock. And for the other word in the next clause, which is rendered ostrich, they translate it another way; for that the Hebrew word hasidah doth not signify an ostrich, seems plain from the mention and description of that bird, Psal. civ. 17; Jer. viii. 7; Lam. iv. 3; Zech. v. 9, which doth not at all agree to the ostrich. And forasmuch as the following verses do evidently speak of the ostrich, and it is absurd to discourse of a bird which had not been so much as named, and consequently the name of it must be found in this verse, and there is no other word in this verse which bids so fair for it, it may seem probable that this word is not to be rendered the peacock, (though it be so taken by most,) but the ostrich. Nor is it likely that both the peacock and the ostrich should be crowded together into one verse, especially when all the following characters belong only to the latter of them. Add to this, that it is confessed, even by the Hebrew writers themselves, that there is a great uncertainty in the signification of the names of birds and beasts; and therefore it is not strange if many interpreters were mistaken in the signification of this word. Or wings and feathers unto the ostrich; or, the wings or feathers of the stork (or, or) the ostrich. Or, didst thou give (which may be repeated out of the former branch) the wings and feathers to the stork? Or, verity (the particle im being oft used as a note of confirmation, as Psal. lix. 16; lxiii. 7; Prov. iii. 34; xxiii. 18) it hath wings and feathers like those of a stork; for so indeed they are, black and white like them. And this may be noted as a great and a remarkable work of God, that it should really have wings and feathers as other birds have, and particularly the stork, who comes nearest to it in bulk and colour, although otherwise, by its vast bulk, it might seem to be a beast rather than a bird, as it is also called by Aristotle, and Pliny, and others.

|| Or, the feathers of the stork and ostrich.

14 Which leaveth her eggs in the earth, and warmeth them in dust,

Which, i. e. which ostrich; for whose property this is noted to be by naturalists. Or, but; for this unnatural quality is opposed to the goodness of her wings or feathers. In the earth; in the place where she lays them; where she leaves them, either, 1. From care, lest she should crush and break them, if her vast body should sit upon them; or rather, 2. From forgetfulness, or carelessness, or unnaturalness, or folly; to which it is manifestly ascribed in the following verses. Warmeth them in the dust; either, 1. Covering them with sand, that they may be warmed and hatched by that, together with the heat of the sun. But this is judged a fabulous report; for the Arabians, amongst whom this bird is most frequent and best known, affirm that such eggs do quickly perish and putrefy. Or rather, 2. Exposing them to the heat of the sun, which being excessive in those hot countries, doth and must needs quickly destroy or spoil them. And the ostrich is said to warm them, because her leaving them there is not only the occasion, but in some sort the cause, of the sun's warming them.

15 And forgetteth that the foot may crush them, or that the wild beast may break them.

The foot, to wit, of wild beasts (as it follows) passing that way.

Lam. 4. 3.

16 She is ^dhardened against her young ones, as though they were not her's: her labour is in vain without fear;

She is hardened; or, he, i. e. God, hardens her; or, she hardeneth herself. Against her young ones, i. e. against her eggs, which he calls her young ones emphatically, to aggravate her fault and folly in destroying those eggs, which, if not neglected, would have been young ones. As though they were not her's; as if they were laid by some other bird. Or, that they may not be to her, i. e. that they may be utterly lost and destroyed; or as if it were her design to destroy their very being. Her labour, to wit, in laying her eggs, is wholly lost. In vain without fear: this may be added as a further aggravation. She doth this, not because she is compelled to forsake her eggs for fear of men or beasts, but merely out of an unnatural carelessness. Or, she is without fear, or for want of fear, to wit, of a provident fear and care about them.

17 Because God hath deprived her of wisdom, neither hath he imparted to her understanding.

Because God hath not implanted in her that natural instinct, and providence, and affection, which he hath put into other birds and beasts towards their young. And yet no man presumes to reproach me for making this difference in my creatures. And as little reason hast thou to blame me for afflicting thee, when others not so bad as thou for the present go unpunished; because I have no less authority over thee than over them, and can dispose of all my creatures according to my good pleasure. The great folly of this bird is noted by Arabic writers, who best know her, and that not only for this property of forsaking her own eggs, but also for other things, as that she eats any thing which is offered to her, as iron, stones, glass, hot coals, &c., whereas other birds and beasts have so much sagacity, as to reject improper and unwholesome things; that being pursued by the hunter, she thinks herself safe and unseen by hiding her head in the sand; for which, and other such qualities, it is a proverb among the Arabians, More foolish than an ostrich.

18 What time she lifteth up herself on high, she scorneth the horse and his rider.

She lifteth up herself on high, to flee from her pursuer; to which end she lifteth up her head and body, and spreads her wings. She scorneth the horse and his rider; she despiseth them in regard of her greater swiftness; for though she cannot fly because of her great bulk, being said to be as big as a new-born camel, yet by the aid of her wings she runs so fast that horsemen cannot reach her, as both Greek and other authors have noted.

19 Hast thou given the horse strength? hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?

Strength; either strength of body; or rather, courage and generous confidence, for which the horse is highly commended. With thunder, i. e. with snorting and neighing; in the making of which sound the neck, in regard of the throat, which is within it, and a part of it, is a principal instrument; which noise may not unfitly be called thunder, because of the great vehemency and rage wherewith it is attended, and the great terror which it causeth, especially in war and battle, of which see Jer. vii. 16; and compare 1 Sam. xii. 17, 18, where this very term of thundering is ascribed to a far lower and less terrible noise. Nor is this, as some allege, an improper speech, because this thunder or neighing is rather clothed with the neck, as being within it, than the neck with it; for nothing is more common in Scripture than to say that men are clothed with righteousness, humility, and other graces, which yet are in strictness of speech within the man, and not he within them. But because this word in this form is not elsewhere extant, some render it otherwise, with a mane, with a thick, and full, and deep mane, as the phrase of being clothed with it implies; for this is mentioned by all writers of horses as a notable mark of a generous horse; which therefore they conceive would not be omitted here, where so many several properties and excellencies are described. And the verb raam, whence this comes, in the Syriac language signifies not only to thunder, but also to be high or lofty; which fitly agrees to the mane, which is in the highest part of the horse.

20 Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper? the glory of his nostrils † is + Heb. ^{terrors.}

As a grasshopper; which is easily affrighted, and chased away by the least noise of a man. Or, as divers others render the place, Didst thou make him to move like a grasshopper, skipping and leaping as he goes? So he describes the posture of a gallant and generous horse, who curvets, and pranceth, and as it were danceth as he walks. The glory of his nostrils; that snorting, or sound, and smoke which cometh out of his nostrils, especially when he is enraged and engaged in battle, which is another note of a generous horse, and strikes a terror into his adversary. Or, the vehemency, or majesty, or magnificence of his snorting, or snoring, as this word is rendered, Jer. viii. 16.

21 || He paweth in the valley, and re- ^{|| Or, His} _{feet dig.}

^{1 Jer. 8. 6.} ^{2 Heb. the} ^{armor.} joiceth in his strength: he goeth on to meet the armed men.

He paweth; or, he diggeth. Through courage and wantonness he cannot stand still, but is beating, as it were digging, up the earth with his feet. In the valley: this he adds, partly because the ground being there more plain and smooth, he hath the better conveniency for his prancing and pawing with his feet, which in hilly and uneven ground he cannot so well do; and partly because battles use to be pitched in valleys, or low grounds, especially horse battles. Rejoiceth in his strength; making semblance of great pride and complacency in it. He goeth on to meet the armed men, with great readiness and undaunted courage.

22 He mocketh at fear, and is not affrighted; neither turneth he back from the sword.

At fear, i. e. at all instruments and objects of terror, as fear is oft used, as Prov. i. 26; x. 21. He despiseth what other creatures dread. From the sword; or, because of the sword; or, for fear of the sword, as this phrase is used, Isa. xxi. 15; xxxi. 8; Jer. xiv. 16; 1. 16.

23 The quiver rattleth against him, the glittering spear and the shield.

The quiver; or, although the quiver, &c. So this comes in as an aggravation of his courage, notwithstanding the just causes of fear which are mentioned in this verse. And the quiver is here put for the arrows contained in it, by a metonymy, very usual in this very case, and in all sorts of authors, which being shot against the horse and rider, make this rattling noise here mentioned. The glittering spear and the shield; or rather, the lance or javelin. For that this was not a defensive, but an offensive weapon, seems plain, both from this place, where it is mentioned among such, and as an object of fear, which the shield is not, and from Josh. viii. 18; 1 Sam. xvii. 45, where it is so used.

24 He swalloweth the ground with fierceness and rage: neither believeth he that it is the sound of the trumpet.

The sense is either, 1. He is so earnest and eager upon the battle, that he rusheth into it with all speed; and runs over the ground so swiftly, that he might seem to have swallowed it up. Or, 2. He is so full of war-like rage and fury, that he not only champs his bridle, but is ready to tear and devour the very ground on which he goes. And the phrase here used is not unusual, both in Arabic and in other authors; of which see my Latin Synopsis on this place.

He is so pleased with the approach of the battle, and the sound of the trumpet calling to it, that he could scarce believe his ears for gladness: compare Gen. xiv. 26; Luke xxiv. 41. Or thus, he cannot stand still, or firm, (as this verb and the derivative from it is used, not only in the Chaldee and Syriac dialect, but also in the Hebrew, as Deut. xxviii. 59; 1 Sam. ii. 35,) when the trumpet soundeth; his rider can hardly keep him still, but he strives and longs to run to the fight.

25 He saith among the trumpets, Ha, ha; and he smelleth the battle afar off, the thunder of the captains, and the shouting.

Ha, ha; an expression of joy and alacrity, declared by his proud neighings; whereby he doth in some sort answer the sound of the trumpets, in way of scorn and challenge. He smelleth, i. e. he perceiveth, as this phrase is used, Judg. xvi. 9. Afar off; at some distance, either of place, or rather of time, as the word is most frequently used. He perceives by the motion of the soldiers, and the clattering of the arms, that the battle is at hand, which is very welcome to him. The thunder of the captains; by which he understands, either the military orations which the captains make and deliver with a loud voice to animate their soldiers to the battle; or rather the loud and joyful clamour begun by the commanders, and followed by the soldiers, when they are ready to join battle, that thereby they may both daunt their enemies, and encourage themselves.

26 Doth the hawk fly by thy wisdom, and stretch her wings toward the south?

Doth the hawk fly in so singular a manner, so strongly and steadily, so constantly and unweariedly, so swiftly and speedily, so regularly and cunningly, to catch her prey, by thy wisdom; didst thou inspire her with that wisdom? Stretch her wings toward the south; which she doth, either, 1. When she casts her old feathers, and gets new ones, which is furthered either by the warmth of southerly winds, or by the heat of the sun, which was southward from Job's country, as it is from ours; whence it is, that as wild hawks do this by natural instinct, so the places which men build for the keeping of tame hawks are built towards the south. Or, 2. In or towards winter, when wild hawks fly into warmer countries, as being impatient of cold weather.

27 Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high?

Mount up; fly directly upward, till she be out of thy sight; which no other bird can do. On high; in the highest and inaccessible rocks. Compare Jer. xlix. 16; Obad. 4.

28 She dwelleth and abideth on the rock, upon the crag of the rock, and the strong place.

Which she doth partly for the security of herself and her young; and partly that she may thence have the better prospect to discern her prey, as it followeth.

29 From thence she seeketh the prey, and her eyes behold afar off.

Her sight is exceeding sharp and strong, so that she is able to look upon the sun with open eyes, and to behold the smallest prey upon the earth or sea, when she is mounted out of our sight; which when she spies, she flies to it with incredible swiftness, even like an arrow out of a bow.

30 Her young ones also suck up blood: and where the slain are, there is she.

Blood; either of the prey which the eagle hath brought to her nest for them, or of that which themselves catch and kill, being sometimes inured to this work by their dams. Naturalists note of the eagle, that she drinketh no water, but blood only. Where the slain are; where any dead carcasses are, yea, or are like to be; for natural historians write of the eagles, that they can presage or smell a battle some days before it be fought. And although some writers affirm that there are divers eagles who do not feed upon carcasses, and will not meddle with them, yet that many eagles do feed on them is sufficiently evident, by the testimony both of Scripture, as Matt. xxiv. 28, and of divers both ancient and later writers. There is she, to wit, in an instant, flying thither with admirable celerity.

CHAP. XL.

God's reproof of Job, 1, 2. He humbleth himself, 3—5. God again declareth his righteousness, majesty, and the power of his wrath to abase the proud, 6—14. A description of behemoth, 15—21.

MOREOVER the LORD answered Job, and said, Having made a little pause to try what Job could answer to his questions, and Job being it seems astonished with God's rebukes, or expecting what God would further say, continued silent.

2 Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty instruct him? he that reproveth God, let him answer it.

Shall Job, who presumeth to contend with me in judgment, and to dispute the reasonableness and equity of my proceedings, give me instructions or directions how to manage my own affairs, and govern my creatures? He justly mentions his almightiness, as a convincing argument of his justice. For how can he be unjust to his creatures, who hath no obligation to them, and never did nor can receive any thing from them; and who hath an absolute, sovereign, and uncontrollable dominion over them; and who being infinitely and necessarily perfect, and all-sufficient within himself, can neither have any inclination to unrighteousness, which is an imperfection, nor any temptation to it from any need he hath of it to accomplish his designs, which he can do by his own omnipotence, or from any advantage accruing to him by it. That reproveth God; that boldly censurcth his ways or works; which thou hast done.

Let him answer it; let him answer my former and further questions at his peril.

3 ¶ Then Job answered the Lord, and said,
 4 ^b Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? ^c I will lay mine hand upon my mouth.

I am vile: what am I, a mean and contemptible creature, that I should presume to contend with my Maker and Judge? I confess my fault and folly. What shall I answer thee? I neither desire nor am able to dispute with thee. I will for the future bridle my tongue, and instead of contesting with thee, do here humbly and willingly submit myself to thee.

5 Once have I spoken; but I will not answer: yea, twice; but I will proceed no further.

I will not answer, or speak again; answering being oft put for speaking. I will contend no more with thee. Yea, twice, i. e. oftentimes, or again and again, the definite number being used indefinitely. I will proceed no further in such bold and presumptuous expressions and accusations of thy providence towards me. Vain therefore are the excuses which some interpreters make for Job, as if he were faultless in his foregoing discourses, when both God chargeth him with faultiness therein, and Job himself confesseth it.

6 ¶ Then answered the Lord unto Job out of the whirlwind, and said,

The whirlwind was renewed when God renewed his charge upon Job, whom he intended to humble more thoroughly than yet he had done. Both this and the next verse are repeated out of chap. xxxviii. 1, 3, where they are explained.

7 ^c Gird up thy loins now like a man: ^f I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

8 ^g Wilt thou also disannul my judgment? wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayest be righteous?

Every word is emphatical. Wilt (art thou resolved upon it) thou (thou, Job, whom I took to be one of a better mind and temper; had it been a stranger or my enemy who had spoken thus of me, I could have borne it, but I cannot bear it from thee) also (not only vindicate thyself, and thy own integrity, but also accuse me) disannul (not only question and dispute, but even condemn, repeal, and make void, as if it were ungrounded and unjust) my judgment, i. e. my sentence against thee, and my government and administration of human affairs? Wilt thou make me unrighteous, that thou mayest seem to be righteous?

9 Hast thou an arm like God? or canst thou thunder with ^h a voice like him?

Thou art infinitely short of God in power, and therefore in justice; for all his perfections are equal and infinite. Injustice is much more likely to be in thee, an impotent creature, than in the Almighty God; of which see the notes on ver. 2. Canst thou thunder with a voice like him? therefore do not presume to contend with him.

10 ⁱ Deck thyself now with majesty and excellency; and array thyself with glory and beauty.

Seeing thou makest thyself equal, yea, superior to me in justice, and consequently in power and majesty, take to thyself thy great power, come and sit in my throne, and display thy divine perfections in the sight of the world. These and the following are ironical expressions, to make Job more sensible of his distance from and subjection to God.

11 Cast abroad the rage of thy wrath: and behold every one that is proud, and abase him.

Inflict heavy judgments upon thine enemies, the Chaldeans and Sabaeans, and others who have injured or provoked thee. Destroy him with an angry look, as I can do and delight to do with such persons.

12 Look on every one that is ^k proud, and bring him low; and tread down the wicked in their place.

Either, 1. Wheresoever they are. Or, 2. Where they are in their greatest strength and glory, and therefore are most secure and confident. Or, 3. Forthwith, upon the spot, that the quickness and immediateness of the stroke may discover that it comes from a Divine hand.

13 Hide them in the dust together; and bind their faces in secret.

Kill every one of them (as he said, ver. 12) at one blow, as I can do, and bring them all to their graves, that they may sleep in the dust, and never offend thee nor trouble others more. Bind their faces, i. e. condemn or destroy them. He alludes to the manner of covering the faces of condemned persons, Esth. vii. 8, and of dead men, John xi. 44; xx. 7. See on Job ix. 24. In secret; either in a secret place, bury them in their graves; or secretly, with a secret and invisible stroke, that it may appear it comes from the hand of a God.

14 Then will I also confess unto thee that thine own right hand can save thee.

i. e. That thou art mine equal, and mayst venture to contend with me. But since thou canst do none of these things, it behoves thee to submit to me, and to acquiesce in my dealings with thee.

15 ¶ Behold now || behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox.

That some particular beast is designed by this word is evident from ver. 15, and from the peculiar characters given to him, which are not common to all great beasts. But what it is is matter of some dispute amongst the learned. The generality of them are agreed that this is the elephant, and the following leviathan the whale; which being two of the goodliest and vastest creatures which God made, the one of the land, the other of the sea, and withal such to whom the description here given for the most part manifestly agrees, and the like is presumed concerning the rest, may seem to be here intended. And the difficulty of reconciling some few passages to them, may arise either from our ignorance of them, or from the different nature and qualities of creatures of the same general kind in divers parts. But some late and very learned men take the leviathan to be the crocodile, and the behemoth to be a creature called the hippopotamus, which may seem fitly to be joined with the crocodile, both being very well known to Job and his friends, as being frequent in the adjacent parts, both amphibious, living and preying both in the water and upon the land, and both being creatures of great bulk and strength. I shall not undertake to determine the controversy, but shall show how each part of the following description is or may be applied to them severally. And this being no point concerning faith or a good life, every one may take the more liberty to understand the place of one or other of them.

Which I made with thee; either, 1. Upon the earth, where thou art, whereas the leviathan is in the sea. Or, 2. As I made thee, for this Hebrew particle is oft used as a note of comparison, as Job ix. 26; Psal. cxliii. 7, and elsewhere; in the same manner, and upon the same day. Whereby he may intimate, that being equally the Creator and sovereign Lord, both of Job, and of this behemoth, he had equal right to dispose of them in such manner as he thought meet. Or, (nigh, as the particle oft signifies,) unto thee, i. e. in a place not far from thee, to wit, in the river Nile, where the hippopotamus, as well as the crocodile, doth principally abide. But although those creatures were now in that river, yet they were made elsewhere, even where the first man was made. He eateth grass as an ox: this is mentioned as a thing strange and remarkable, as indeed it is; either, 1. Of the elephant, in which God hath wisely and mercifully planted this disposition, that he should not prey upon other creatures, which if he had, being so strong and vast a creature, he must needs have been very pernicious to them, but feed upon grass as an ox doth. Or, 2. Of the hippopotamus; of whom historians relate that he comes out of the river upon the land to feed upon corn, and hay, or grass, as an ox doth, to whom also he is not unlike in the form of his head and feet, and in the bigness of his body, whence the Italians call him the sea ox.

16 Lo now, his strength is in his loins, and his force is in the navel of his belly.

He hath strength answerable to his bulk, but this strength by God's wise and merciful providence is not an offensive strength, consisting in or put forth by horns or claws, as it is in ravenous creatures; but only defensive, and seated in his loins, as it is in other creatures, whereby he is rendered more serviceable to men by the carrying of vast burdens. His force is in the navel of his belly; which though in the elephant it be weaker than his loins, whence the rhinoceros fighting with him aims at that part; yet hath a more than ordinary strength in it, as appears by the binding of the heaviest burdens under and about it. This also agrees to the hippopotamus in an eminent degree, whose whole skin is noted by ancient writers to be harder than any other creature's, and almost impenetrable.

17 || He moveth his tail like a cedar :
the sinews of his stones are wrapped together.

He moveth his tail; which though it be but short, both in the elephant and in the hippopotamus, yet when it is erected is exceeding stiff and strong. But this may be understood, either, 1. Of his generative part, which is oft called by that or the like name, which the following close of the verse may seem to favour. Or, 2. Of the elephant's trunk, which being so eminent and remarkable a part, would not probably be omitted in this description, to which these words very fitly agree, because of its admirable motion and strength. Nor is it strange that this is called his tail, because that word is oft used improperly for any end of a thing, as Isa. vii. 4. See also Deut. xxv. 18; xxviii. 13, 44. The sinews of his stones: this may be noted, because the elephant's testicles do not hang down below the belly, as they do in other beasts, but are contained within his belly, where they are fastened by ligaments of extraordinary strength. Or, the sinews of the terror thereof, to wit, of the trunk last mentioned, under the name of the tail, i. e. its terrible sinews are strongly and strangely wrapped together, that he can move it as he listeth with wonderful dexterity and strength. Or, the sinews of his thighs, as the latter word oft signifies in the Arabic tongue, which is very near akin to the Hebrew. The thighs and feet of the hippopotamus are noted to be so sinewy and strong, that one of them is able to break or overturn a large boat.

18 His bones are as strong pieces of brass; his bones are like bars of iron.

His bones; under which title are comprehended his ribs (as the LXX. here render it) and his teeth. As strong pieces of brass, exceeding hard and strong, as they are in both these creatures.

19 He is the chief of the ways of God: he that made him can make his sword to approach unto him.

Of the ways of God, i. e. of God's works, to wit, of that sort, or among living and brute creatures. This is eminently and unquestionably true of the elephant, in regard of his vast bulk and strength, joined with great activity, and especially of his admirable sagacity and aptness to learn, and of his singular usefulness to mankind, his lord and master, and God's vicergerent in the world, and many other commendable qualities. And the hippopotamus also is in some sort, as others note, the chief, or one of the chief, of God's works, in regard of its great bulk, and strength, and sagacity, and the manner of his living, both in the water and upon the land. But it must be granted that the elephant doth exceed the hippopotamus in many things.

Though he be so strong and terrible, yet God can easily subdue and destroy him, either immediately, or by arming other creatures, as the rhinoceros, or dragon, or tiger, against him. Or, he that made him hath applied or given to him his sword, or arms, to wit, his trunk, which may not unfitly be called his sword, because thereby he doth both defend himself and offend his enemies. And this trunk of his being a thing very observable and admirable in him, and therefore not likely to be neglected in his description, if it were not intended by his tail, ver. 17, may seem to be designed in these words.

1 Ps. 104. 14.

20 Surely the mountains bring him forth food, where all the beasts of the field play.

Though this creature be vastly great, and require much food, and no man careth for it; yet God provides for it out of his own stores, and makes even desert mountains to afford him sufficient sustenance. The hippopotamus also, though he live most in the water, fetched his food from the land, and from the mountains or hills, which are nigh unto the river Nile. Where all the beasts of the field play; they not only feed securely, but sport themselves by him or with him, being taught by experience that he is gentle and harmless, and never preys upon them.

21 He lieth under the shady trees, in the covert of the reed, and fens.

The elephant lies down to rest himself; and it is but fabulous which some writers affirm, that they have no joints in their legs, and so cannot lie down, but sleep or rest themselves standing or leaning against a tree; which is denied and confuted by Aristotle in his History of Living Creatures, 2, 4. and by later writers. For the elephant, being a creature naturally hot, and living generally in hot countries, diligently seeks for and delights in shady and waterish places, as is noted by Aristotle, and after him by Pliny and Ælian.

22 The shady trees cover him with their shadow; the willows of the brook compass him about.

Of the brook; or, of Nilus, of which this word is oft used in Scripture. And this seems to be the chief argument by which the learned Bochart proves this to be meant of the hippopotamus, whose constant residence is in or near the river of Nilus, or the willows that grow by it. But it is well alleged by our learned and judicious Caryl, that this word Naal is never used to express Nilus when it is put by itself, as here it is, but only where the word Egypt is added to it, as it is in all the places which Bochart produceth. And this very phrase, the willows of the brook, is used of other brooks or rivers besides Nilus, as Lev. xxiii. 40: compare Isa. xv. 7.

23 Behold, †he drinketh up a river, † Heb. he and hasteth not: he trusteth that he can oppresseth.
draw up Jordan into his mouth.

He drinketh up; or, he snatcheth, or draweth, or drinketh up as it were with force and violence, as the word signifies. A river, i. e. a great quantity of water, hyperbolically called a river, as it is also Psal. lxxviii. 16; cv. 41. This may be fitly applied to the elephant, which because of its great bulk and vehement thirst drinks a great deal of water at one draught, as naturalists and historians have observed. Hasteth not; he drinks not with fear and caution, and sparingly, as the dogs do at Nilus, for fear of the crocodile; but such is his courage and self-confidence, that he fears no enemy, either by water or by land, but drinketh securely and liberally. He trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth; he drinks as if he designed, or hoped, or desired to drink up the whole river. He mentions Jordan, either as a river well known in and nigh unto Job's land; or because possibly there were many elephants which used to drink at it; or as a river in some parts of it but small, which therefore might give more colour to the hyperbole, and to the elephant's fancy or expectation, than a vaster river, such as Euphrates, would have done. Bochart expounds this also of the hippopotamus, which though he cannot swim, and may be drowned, as naturalists report, yet will continue securely under water at the bottom of Nilus for some days together; and he renders the verse thus, Behold, if a river oppress or cover him, he fears not; he is confident or secure, though Jordan (which is here put for any river) should break forth or overflow above his mouth, i. e. should overwhelm him. But the judgment of this I leave to the reader.

24 || He taketh it with his eyes: his nose pierceth through snares.

According to this translation the sense is this, He taketh, or snatcheth, or draweth up (as was now said, ver. 23) it (to wit, the river Jordan) with his eyes, i. e. when he sees it, he trusteth that he can drink it all up; as we use to say, The eye is bigger than the belly: his nose or snout pierceth, &c., i. e. he securely thrusteth his snout into the river, even to the bottom of it, to stir up the mud, because he delights

1 Or, Will any take him in his sight, or, bore his nose with a gin
F ch. 41. 1, 2.

to drink muddy water; and if there be any snares laid for other creatures, he breaks them to pieces. But this verse is otherwise translated by others, Will or can any man take him in his eyes, (i. e. openly, and by manifest force? Surely no. His force and strength is too great for man to resist or overcome; and therefore men are forced to use many wiles and engines to catch him; which is true both of the elephant and of the hippopotamus,) or pierce his nose with snares or gins? No. He may be taken by art and cunning, but not by violence.

CHAP. XLI.

God's kingly power and authority above all the children of pride seen in the leviathan.

† That is, a whale, or, a whirlpool.

Is. 27. 1.
† Heb.
which thou drownest.

CANST thou draw out || ^aleviathan with an hook? or his tongue with a cord † which thou lettest down?

Canst thou take him with a hook and a line, as anglers take ordinary fishes? Surely no. Quest. What is this leviathan? Ans. This is granted on all hands, that it is a great and terrible monster, living in the sea or rivers, as behemoth is a land monster. It is the general and received opinion that it is the whale, which is unquestionably called the leviathan, Psal. civ. 25, 26; which having been discovered in the seas next bordering upon Arabia, probably was not unknown to Job, who was a very inquisitive person, and well studied in the works of God, as this book manifests. But some later and very learned interpreters conceive that it is the crocodile; which was very well known in Egypt, and all the parts adjacent to it. And this is evident, that the Hebrew thannin (which is parallel to this word leviathan, these two words being synonymous, and the one promiscuously used for the other, as appears from Psal. lxxiv. 13, 14; Isa. xxvii. 1; Ezek. xxxii. 2) is used of the crocodile, Ezek. xxix. 3, 4; xxxii. 2, 3. But I shall not positively determine this controversy, but only show how far the text may be understood of both of them, and then submit it to the reader's judgment; this being a matter of no great moment, wherein Christians may vary without any hazard. Only this I will say, that whatever becomes of the behemoth of the former chapter, whether that be the elephant, or the hippopotamus, that doth not at all determine the sense of this leviathan; but leaves it indifferent to the whale or the crocodile, as the context shall determine, which I confess seems to me to favour the latter more than the former. To which may be added, that it seems more probable that God would speak of such creatures as were very well known to Job and his friends, as the crocodile was, than of such as it is very uncertain whether they were known in those parts, and in Job's time. This verse, noting either the impossibility, or rather the great and terrible difficulty, of taking this monster with his hook or line, or such-like instruments, may agree to either of them. For the whale there is no doubt; nor much doubt as to the crocodile; the taking whereof was generally esteemed by the ancients to be very difficult and perilous, whatsoever peculiar virtue or power from nature or art the Tentyritæ had against them, as the Psylli were said to have against serpents. Some indeed object, that the last clause cannot agree to the crocodile, because that hath no tongue, as is affirmed by Aristotle, Pliny, and other ancient authors. But that is a mistake, and the ground of it is plain, because their tongues are but small in proportion to their vast bodies, and withal fastened to their under jaws, as the selfsame authors note. And that the crocodile hath a tongue is positively affirmed by the said ancient authors, and by the Hebrew writers, and by the Arabians, to whom this creature was best known, and by later authors.

b. l. c. 27. 26. 2 Canst thou ^bput an hook into his nose? or bore his jaw through with a thorn?

An hook, Heb. a bulrush, i. e. a hook like a bulrush, with its head hanging down, as is expressed, Isa. lviii. 5. Into his nose, to hang him up by it for sale, or to carry him home for use, after thou hast drawn him out of the sea or river, of which he spake in the former verse. With a thorn; or, with an iron hook or instrument as sharp as a thorn, wherewith thou usest to carry little fishes.

3 Will he make many supplications unto thee? will he speak soft words unto thee?

Doth he dread thine anger or power? or will he humbly and earnestly beg thy favour, that thou wouldst spare him, and not pursue him, or release him out of prison? It is a metaphor from men in distress and misery, who use these means to them to whose power they are subject.

4 Will he make a covenant with thee? wilt thou take him for a servant for ever?

A covenant, to wit, to do thee faithful service, as the next words explain it. Canst thou bring him into bondage, and force him to serve thee?

5 Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?

As with a bird; as children play with little birds kept in cages, or tied with strings, which they do at their pleasure, and without any fear? For thy maidens; for thy little daughters; which he mentions rather than little sons, because such are most subject to fear.

6 Shall thy companions make a banquet of him? shall they part him among the merchants?

Thy companions; thy friends or assistants in the taking of him. Make a banquet of him, i. e. feed upon him. Or, for him, i. e. for joy that thou hast taken him. Shall they part him among the merchants? as is usual in such cases, that all who are partners in the labour and hazard may partake of the profit also, and divide the spoil.

7 Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons? or his head with fish spears?

This may be understood, either, 1. Of the whale. And whereas it is objected that the whales at this day are taken in this manner, and therefore this cannot be understood of them; it may be replied, both that this art and way of taking whales is a late invention, and was not known in Job's time; and that he doth not speak of the absolute impossibility, but of the great difficulty of taking them. Or, 2. Of the crocodile, whose skin is so hard that an iron or spear will not pierce it, as we shall see hereafter.

8 Lay thine hand upon him, remember the battle, do no more.

Lay thine hand upon him; either, 1. In a familiar and friendly manner, that thou mayst catch him by deceit, when thou canst not do it by force. Or rather, 2. In way of hostility, seize upon him and take him by a strong hand, if thou darest do so. Remember the battle; but ere thou do attempt that, consider what thou art doing, and how hazardous thy enterprise is, and with whom and with what disadvantage thou art going to fight, and, as it follows, do no more, proceed no further, draw back thy hand, and be thankful for so great a deliverance. Or the verse may be rendered thus, If (which particle is oft understood) thou offerest or attemptest to lay violent hands on him, thou wilt have cause to remember (the imperative being put for the future, which is frequent in the Hebrew language) the battle, and thou wilt do so no more; if thou dost escape, thou wilt never forget thy danger, nor attempt any thing of like nature for the time to come.

9 Behold, the hope of him is in vain: shall not one be cast down even at the sight of him?

The hope of him; either, 1. Of the fish, i. e. the hope of taking or conquering him. Or rather, 2. Of the man who laid hands upon him, as hoping to take him by force, but in vain. Shall not; the prefix he being put for hale, as it is oft times in the Hebrew text, as Gen. xxvii. 36; 1 Sam. ii. 28; Jer. iii. 6; xxxi. 20; Ezek. xx. 30. Even at the sight of him; not only the fight, but the very sight of him is most frightful. Such is the sight of the whale to mariners, who fear the overturning of their vessel. And such is the sight of the crocodile, by which alone some have been affrighted out of their wits.

10 None is so fierce that dare stir him up: who then is able to stand before me?

That dare stir him up, when he sleepeth or is quiet.

None dare provoke him to the battle. To stand before me; to contend with me his Creator, as thou, Job, dost, when one of my creatures is too hard for him.

11 ^c Who hath prevented me, that I should repay him? ^d Whatsoever is under the whole heaven is mine.

Who hath prevented me, to wit, with offices or service done for me, by which he hath laid the first obligation upon me, for which I am indebted to him? Who can be beforehand with me in kindnesses, since not only the leviathan, but all men, and, as it follows, all things under heaven, are mine, made by my hand, and enriched with all their endowments by my favour, without which, O Job, thou wouldst not have had either reason or speech to use so perversely to reproach my providence. Having now said and largely proved that man could not contend with God in power, he now adds, that he cannot do it in justice, because God oweth him nothing, nor is any way obliged to him; which having briefly hinted to prevent an objection, he returns to his former argument, the description of the leviathan. That I should repay him; that I should be engaged to requite his favours. Whatsoever is under the whole heaven is mine; created by my power and favour, and wholly in my possession, and at my dispose, and therefore cannot possibly prevent me, as was now said.

12 I will not conceal his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion.

i. e. I will particularly speak of them. Here is a meiosis, as there is chap. xiv. 11; xv. 18, and oft elsewhere. His parts, Heb. his bars, i. e. the members of his body, which are strong, like bars of iron. His comely proportion, which is more amiable and admirable in so vast a bulk.

13 Who can discover the face of his garment? or who can come to him || with his double bridle?

Discover, or, uncover, or take off from him. The face of his garment; the upper or outward part of his garment, or the garment itself; the word face being oft redundant, as Gen. i. 2; xxiii. 3, and oft elsewhere. And by the garment is meant the skin, which covers the whole body, and may be taken off from the body like a garment. Who dare attempt to touch his very outward skin? much less dare any venture to approach him, to give him a deep or deadly wound. With his double bridle; to put it into his mouth, and lead him by it to thy stable and service, as thou dost by a horse. Or rather, (because he plainly seems to persist in describing the several parts of his body; of which he speaks both in the foregoing and following words,) who can come within his double bridle, to wit, his vast jaws, which have some resemblance to a double bridle; whence the Greeks call those parts of the face which reach to the jaws on both sides the bridles.

14 Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about.

The doors of his face, to wit, his mouth. If it be open, none dare enter within it, as he now said; and here he adds, that if it be shut, none dare open it. His teeth are terrible round about: this is true of some kinds of whales, though others are said to have either none, or no terrible teeth; but it is more eminently and unquestionably true of the crocodile, of which this very thing is observed by all authors who write of it.

15 His † scales are his pride, shut up together as with a close seal.

He prides and pleaseth himself in his strong and mighty scales. Heb. His strong shields (i. e. scales) are his pride. Or, (as other, both ancient and modern, interpreters render it,) his body (or his back, as this word is used, Isa. xxxviii. 17; which, if meant of the crocodile, is emphatical, because his scales and strength is in his back, whereas his belly is very soft, and easily pierced) is the strength of shields, i. e. fortified with scales strong as shields. This is meant either, 1. Of the whale, whose skin, though it be smooth and entire, and without scales, may be said to be as (which particle is oft understood) strong shields, because it is, as Galen reports, exceeding hard and strong, and almost impenetrable, and like a shield, especially then, when shields were made of leather; and so it is not only on the back, as in the crocodile, but also in the belly all over. Or, 2. Of the crocodile, which hath scales properly so called, and those most truly such as are here described, as all authors and eye-witnesses consent. Shut up together as with a close seal; closely compacted together, as things that are fastened together by a seal.

16 One is so near to another, that no air can come between them.

Which plainly shows that the shields or scales are several; which agrees better to the crocodile than to the whale, whose skin is all one entire piece, unless there were a sort of whales having thick and strong scales, which some have affirmed, but is not yet known and proved.

17 They are joined one to another, they stick together, that they cannot be sundered.

It is exceeding difficult, and almost impossible by any power of art, to sever them one from another.

18 By his needings a light doth shine, and his eyes are like the eyelids of the morning.

By his needings; which may be understood either, 1. Of any commotion or agitation of the body, like that which is in neezing, as when the whale stirreth himself, and casteth or shooteth up great spouts of water into the air by the pipes which God hath planted in his head for this use; which water being thin, and transparent, and illuminated by the sun-beams, casts forth a shining light. Or, 2. Of neezing properly so called, which the crocodile is said frequently to do, because it commonly turneth its eyes to the sun, as Strabo and others note; which when a man doth, he is apt to neeze. Like the eyelids of the morning; to which they seem very fitly compared, because the eyes both of the whale and crocodile are dull and dark under the water; but as soon as they appear above water, they cast forth immediately a bright and clear light, though not like that of the sun at noon-day, which had been too great an hyperbole, yet like the morning light, suddenly breaking forth after the dark night.

19 Out of his mouth go burning tamps, and sparks of fire leap out.

i. e. His breathings and blowings are very hot, or flaming, as the following verses explain this. This also may seem better to agree to the crocodile, which breathes (as Aristotle affirms) like the hippopotamus, of which ancient authors affirm, that his nostrils are very large, and he breathes forth a fiery smoke like that of a furnace, than to the whale, which rather casts forth streams of water, as was noted before, than flames of fire, there being no such great heat observed in whales, nor, as far as I know, in any other fishes.

20 Out of his nostrils goeth smoke, as out of a seething pot or caldron.

Heb. pool. So a great caldron is called, because it sends forth a great smoke, as a pool doth vapours; as in like manner the great brazen laver in the temple is called a sea, for the great quantity of water which it held.

21 His breath kindleth coals, and a flame goeth out of his mouth.

An hyperbolic expression, noting only extraordinary heat.

22 In his neck remaineth strength, and † sorrow is turned into joy before him.

His neck is exceeding strong. This is meant either, 1. Of the whale, who though he hath no neck no more than other fishes have, yet he hath a part in some sort answerable to it, where the head and body are joined together. Or, 2. Of the crocodile, whom Aristotle, (who made it his business to search out the several natures and parts of all living creatures, and had all the helps and advantages which he desired to find them out,) and Scaliger, and others affirm to have a neck, though some deny it. Sorrow is turned into joy before him, i. e. the approach of any enemy, which usually causeth fear and sorrow in others, fills him with joy, as being desirous of nothing more than fighting. Or, sorrow rejoiceth, or danceth, or triumpheth, &c., i. e. is prevalent and victorious, and quickly invades and conquers all those men, or other creatures, which are in his way. Sorrow is his companion or harbinger, which attends upon him wheresoever he goes. This may be a poetical expression, like that of the poets, when they bring in anger and fear going along with or before Mars into the battle.

^{† Heb. The fallings.} 23 †The flakes of his flesh are joined together: they are firm in themselves; they cannot be moved.

The flakes, or parts, which stick out, or hang loose, and are ready to fall from other fishes or creatures. Of his flesh: the word flesh is used of fishes also, as Lev. xi. 11; 1 Cor. xv. 39. They cannot, without difficulty, be moved, to wit, out of their place, or from the other members of the body.

24 His heart is as firm as a stone; yea, as hard as a piece of the nether millstone.

His heart; either, 1. That part of the body is most firm, and hard, and strong. Or, 2. His courage is invincible; he is void of fear for himself, and of compassion to others, which is oft called hardness of heart. Hard as a piece of the nether millstone; which being to bear the weight of the upper, ought to be the harder and stronger of the two.

25 When he raiseth up himself, the mighty are afraid: by reason of breakings they purify themselves.

When he raiseth up himself; showing himself upon the top of the waters. Or, because of his height, or greatness, or majesty; for he is represented as a king, ver. 34. The mighty; even the stout-hearted mariners or passengers, who use to be above fear. By reason of breakings; either, 1. Of the sea, caused by his motion, which dasheth the waves in pieces one against another. Or rather, 2. Of their mind and state; by reason of their great danger and distress; which is expressed by this very word, Psal. lx. 2; Jonah ii. 4. They purify themselves; either, 1. Naturally; that being the usual effect of great terror. See Ezek. vii. 17. Or rather, 2. Morally, as this word is generally used. Those mariners who ordinarily live in a gross and general neglect of God, and of religion, are so affrighted with this imminent danger, that they cry unto God in their trouble, as is said in like case, Psal. cvii. 28, and endeavour to purge their consciences from the guilt of their sins, by confessing and seemingly forsaking of them, and to make their peace with God, and obtain his favour and help, by their vows, and promises, and prayers.

26 The sword of him that layeth at him cannot hold: the spear, the dart, nor ^{|| Or, breastplate.} the habergeon.

That layeth at him; that approacheth to him, and dare strike at him. Cannot hold, Heb. cannot stand, i. e. either, 1. Cannot endure the stroke, but will be broken by it. Or rather, 2. Cannot abide or take hold of him, or be fixed in him; but is instantly beaten back by the excessive hardness of the skin, which cannot be pierced by it, as may be gathered from this and other passages before and after it. This also seems better to agree to the crocodile, whose skin no sword, nor dart, nor musket bullet (as others add) can pierce, than to the whale, whose skin is easily pierced, as experience showeth in our whales; except the whale here spoken of were of another kind, which is not impossible. Nor the habergeon; or, breastplate. As offensive weapons cannot hurt him, so defensive weapons cannot secure a man from him. But men that go upon the design of taking either whales or crocodiles do not use to fortify themselves in that manner. Some therefore take this to be another offensive weapon, a kind of dart, as this word signifies in the Arabic language; which is but a dialect of the Hebrew, and from which the true signification of many Hebrew words must be gathered.

27 He esteemeth iron as straw, and brass as rotten wood.

He neither fears nor feels the blows of the one more than of the other.

28 The arrow cannot make him flee: sling-stones are turned with him into stubble.

The arrow, Heb. the son of the bow; as it is elsewhere called the son of the quiver, Lam. iii. 13; the quiver being as it were the mother or womb that bears it, and the bow as the father that begets it, or sendeth it forth. Sling-stones; great stones cast out of slings, which have a great force and efficacy; of which see on 2 Chron. xxvi. 14. Are turned with him into stubble; hurt him no more than a blow with a little stubble.

29 Darts are counted as stubble: he laugheth at the shaking of a spear.

So far is he from fearing it, and fleeing from it, that he scorns and defies it.

30 †Sharp stones are under him: he spreadeth sharp pointed things upon the mire.

According to this translation the sense is, his skin is so hard and impenetrable, that the sharpest stones are as easy to him as the mire, and make no more impression upon him. But the words are and may be otherwise rendered, as continuing the former sense, They (to wit, the arrows, darts, or stones cast at him) are or fall under him, like (which particle is oft understood) sharp shreds, or fragments of stones; he spreadeth sharp pointed things (to wit, the pieces of swords or darts which were flung at him, and broken upon him) upon the mire. The fragments of broken weapons lie as thick at the bottom of the water in the place of the fight as little stones do in the mire, or as they do in a field after some fierce and furious battle. Or thus, With him (or for him, i. e. for his defence) are sharp stones; he spreadeth himself like an arrow or threshing instrument (which is filled and fortified with iron) in the mire or mud in the bottom of the water: so he doth not describe his resting-place, but rather his back, which he not unfitly compares to sharp stones or threshing instruments, because the darts or stones cast at him pierce no more into him than they would do into them if they were thrown at them.

31 He maketh the deep to boil like a pot: he maketh the sea like a pot of ointment.

The deep; the deep waters, or the sea, which is called the deep, Psal. cvii. 24; Jonah ii. 3, as it is explained in the next clause. To boil like a pot; to swell, and foam, and froth by his strong and vehement motion, as any liquor doth when it is boiled in a pot. The sea; either the great sea, the proper place of the whale, Psal. civ. 25; or the great river Nilus, which is called a sea, both in Scripture, as Isa. xi. 15, and in other authors, (of which see my Latin Synopsis,) as Euphrates is called the sea of Babylon, Isa. xxi. 1; Jer. li. 36; or lakes or pools, which are most frequently called seas, both in the Old and New Testament, as every one knows. And in such lakes the crocodiles are no less than in Nilus, as it is attested by Herodotus, and Strabo, and others. Like a pot of ointment: this clause seems to be added very emphatically, to intimate that this Leviathan causeth not only a vehement commotion, but also a great fragrant in the sea or waters where it is; which, though it was not observed by the ancients, yet is unanimously affirmed by later authors upon their own knowledge and experience, that it casts a perfume like musk; of which see the names and words of the authors in my Latin Synopsis.

32 He maketh a path to shine after him; one would think the deep to be hoary.

When he raiseth himself to the top of the waters, he doth as it were plough it up, and make large furrows, and causeth a white froth or foam upon the waters.

33 Upon earth there is not his like, || who is made without fear.

Upon earth; either, 1. Strictly so called, as it is distinguished from the sea or rivers. There is no land creature comparable to him for strength and courage. Or, 2. Largely taken. No creature equals him in all points. Or, upon the dust, as the word properly signifies, i. e. among all things that creep in the dust, among which this may in some sort be numbered for the shortness of its feet. But this were no great honour to it, to be the chief of creeping things; and therefore the former translation seems more proper for the present design of magnifying this creature above all others. Who is made without fear; fears no enemy, as being full of courage, and sensible of his own invincible strength. Or, so as he cannot be bruised or broken, by reason of his prodigious hardness, of which I have spoken before.

34 He beholdeth all high things: he is a king over all the children of pride.

He doth not turn his back upon nor hide his face from the highest and proudest creatures, but looks upon them with a bold and undaunted countenance, as being without any fear of them, as was now said. He carries himself with princely majesty and courage towards the stoutest and loftiest creatures; which, though of far higher stature than himself, he striketh down with one stroke of his tail, as he commonly doth cows, and horses, and sometimes elephants.

CHAP. XLII.

Job's humiliation and repentance, 1—6. God preferring Job's cause, reprovereth his friends, for whom Job must intercede, and God will accept him, 7—9. God magnifieth and blesseth Job, 10—15. His age and death, 16, 17.

|| Or, no thought of thine can be kindered. THEN Job answered the LORD, and said, 2 I know that thou ^acanst do every thing, and that || no thought can be with-holden from thee.

Thou canst do; not only by power, (for that he always thought,) but also by right; about which he had in some sort doubted and disputed. It is a maxim in law, that a man can only do that which he hath a right to do. Every thing; whatsoever it pleaseth thee to do with thy creatures. No thought can be withholden from thee; he speaks either, 1. Of Job's thoughts. Thou knowest me and all my sinful and unworthy thoughts of thy providential dealings with me, though I was not able to see the evil of them. Or, 2. Of God's thoughts. Whatsoever thou thinkest or proposest to do thou canst or mayst do it; and neither I nor any of thy creatures can either restrain thee from it, or condemn thee for it, as I have boldly and wickedly presumed to do. So this last clause of the verse explains the former.

b ch. 38. 2. 3 ^bWho is he that hideth counsel without knowledge? therefore have I uttered that I understood not; ^cthings too wonderful for me, which I knew not.

c Ps. 40. 6.
& 131. 1.
139. 6. Who is he? i. e. what am I, that I should dare to do so? Ah silly audacious wretch that I am, that I should be guilty of such madness! That hideth counsel without knowledge; which words are repeated out of chap. xxxviii. 2, where they are explained. Therefore; because my mind was without knowledge, therefore my speech was ignorant and foolish. Or, being sensible of my ignorance and rashness, I think fit to make this humble and ingenuous confession. Things too wonderful for me, which I knew not; I have spoken foolishly and unadvisedly of things far above my reach, even of God's infinite and sovereign majesty, and of his deep and unsearchable counsels and providence.

& 40. 7. 4 Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak: ^dI will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

Hear and accept my humble and penitent confession and recantation. I will demand of thee; or, and inquire, to wit, counsel or instruction, as a scholar doth of his master, as the following words note. I will no more saucily dispute the matter with thee, but beg information from thee. The words which God had uttered to Job by way of challenge, chap. xxxviii. 3; xl. 7, Job returns to him again in way of submission.

5 I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye seeth thee.

The knowledge which I had of thy Divine nature, and perfections, and counsels, was hitherto dark, and doubtful, and conjectural, being grounded chiefly, if not only, upon the instructions and reports of other men; but now it is clear and certain, as being immediately inspired into my mind by this thy glorious apparition and revelation, and by the operation of thy Holy Spirit; which makes these things as certain and evident to me, as if I saw them with my bodily eyes.

e Ezra 9. 6.
ch. 40. 4. 6 Wherefore I ^eabhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

I abhor, i. e. dislike, and detest, and loathe myself, or my former words and carriage. One of these or some like supplement is necessary to complete the sense, and is clearly gathered from the following words. In dust and ashes; sitting in dust and ashes; which hitherto I have done in token of my grief for my affliction; but now I desire and resolve to do in testimony of my penitence for my sins.

7 ¶ And it was so, that after the LORD had spoken these words unto Job, the LORD said to Eliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends: for ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath.

To Eliphaz the Temanite; as the eldest of the three, and because he spoke first, and by his evil example led the rest into the same mistakes and miscarriages. Thy two friends, to wit, Bildad and Zophar, who are not excused, but severely reproved, although they were drawn into the sin by Eliphaz's authority and influence. Elihu is not here reproved, because he dealt more justly and mercifully with Job, and did not condemn his person, but only rebuke his sinful expressions. As my servant Job hath; either, 1. As Job hath now spoken: you have not acknowledged your errors as he hath done. Or rather, 2. As Job did in his discourses with you; which is not to be understood simply and absolutely, (as is manifest from God's censure upon Job for his hard and evil speeches of him,) but comparatively, because Job was not so much to be blamed as they; partly, because his opinion concerning the methods of God's providence, and the indifference and promiscuousness of its dispensations towards good and bad men, was truer than theirs, which was that God did generally reward good men and punish sinners in this life; partly, because their misbelief of God's counsels and dealings with men was attended with horrid uncharitableness and cruelty towards Job, whom they wounded with bitter and injurious speeches, and condemned as a hypocrite, not only without sufficient evidence, as not being able to search his heart, but upon false and frivolous grounds, to wit, his sore afflictions, and against many evidences of piety which Job had given; and partly, because Job's heavy pressures might easily cloud and darken his mind, and draw forth his impatience and passionate speeches; which although it did not wholly excuse Job, yet did certainly much extenuate his offences; whereas they were under no such temptations or provocations, either from God or from Job, but voluntarily broke forth into their hard, and severe, and untrue expressions concerning God's counsels and Job's conditions, thereby adding affliction to him whom God did sorely afflict, which was most unfriendly and inhuman.

8 Therefore take unto you now ^fseven bullocks and seven rams, and ^ggo to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt offering; and my servant Job shall ^hpray for you: for ⁱhim will I accept: lest I deal with you after your folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job.

9 So Eliphaz the Temanite and Bildad the Shuhite and Zophar the Naamathite went, and did according as the LORD commanded them: the LORD also accepted ⁺† Job.

+ Heb. the face of Job. Did according as the Lord commanded them; showing their repentance by their submission to God, and to Job for God's sake, and by taking shame to themselves. The Lord also accepted Job, both for his friends and for himself, as the next verse explains it.

10 ⁱAnd the LORD turned the captivity

i Ps. 14. 7
& 125. 1.

^{† Heb. added all that had been to Job unto the double.} of Job, when he prayed for his friends : also the LORD † gave Job ^k twice as much as he had before.

Turned the captivity of Job, i. e. brought him out of that state of bondage in which he had been so long held by Satan and by his own Spirit, and out of all his distresses and miseries. Or, returned Job's captivity, i. e. the persons and things which had been taken from him; not the same which he had lost, but other equivalent to them, and that with advantage. When he prayed for his friends; whereby he manifesteth his obedience to God, and his true love and charity to them, in being so ready to forgive them, and heartily to pray for them; for which God would not let him lose his reward. Also; an emphatical particle. He not only gave him as much as he lost, but double to it.

^{1 See ch. 13. 13.}

11 Then came there unto him ^l all his brethren, and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house : and they bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the LORD had brought upon him : every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an earring of gold.

Then, when Job had humbled himself, and God was reconciled to Job, he quickly turned the hearts of his friends to favour him, according to Prov. xvi. 7; as during his impenitency, and for his trial and humiliation, he had alienated their hearts from him, of which Job so sadly complains. His brethren and his sisters; largely so called, according to the Scripture use of these titles, to wit, his kindred distinguished from his other acquaintance. Did eat bread with him, i. e. feasted with him, as that phrase is commonly used in Scripture, to congratulate with him for God's great and glorious favour already vouchsafed to him in so eminent a vision and revelation. They bemoaned him; they declared the sense which they had of his calamities whilst they were upon him, although they had hitherto wanted opportunity to express it. Over all the evil; or, concerning all the evil; which though it was bitter to endure when it was present, yet the remembrance of it revived in him by the discourses of his friends was very delightful, as is usual in such cases. Every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an earring of gold; partly to make up his former losses, and partly as a testimony of their honourable respect to him.

12 So the LORD blessed ^m the latter end ^{m ch. 8. 7. Jam. 5. 11.} of Job more than his beginning: for he had ^a fourteen thousand sheep, and six ^a thousand camels, and a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she asses.

The Lord blessed Job, not only with spiritual, but also with temporal and earthly blessings.

13 ^o He had also seven sons and three ^{o ch. 1. 2.} daughters.

14 And he called the name of the first, Jemima; and the name of the second, Kezia; and the name of the third, Keren-happuch.

Giving them such names as signify their excellent beauty, of which see my Latin Synopsis.

15 And in all the land were no women found so fair as the daughters of Job: and their father gave them inheritance among their brethren.

Gave his daughters a share, and possibly an equal share, with his sons in his inheritance; which in so plentiful an estate he might easily do, especially to such amiable sisters, without the envy of their brethren; and which peradventure he did to oblige them to settle themselves amongst their brethren, and to marry into their own religious kindred, not to strangers, who in those times were generally swallowed up in the gulf of idolatry.

16 After this ^p lived Job an hundred ^{p ch. 5. 26. Prov. 3. 16.} and forty years, and saw his sons, and his sons' sons, even four generations.

17 So Job died, being old and ^q full of ^{q Gen. 25. 8.} days.

After God had turned his captivity, as is said ver. 10. Old and full of days; by which length of his days it seems most probable that he lived before the times of Moses, when the days of human life were much shortened, as he complains.
