The shoulder, to wit, the left shoulder, for the right shoulder was the priest's, Lev. vii. 32, 33. This he gives him, either, first, As the best and noblest part of the remainders of the sacrifice; the best parts being usually given by the master of the feast to such guests as were most honourable, or best beloved, as Gen. xliii. 34. Or, secondly, As a secret symbol or sign of that burden which was to be laid upon Saul, and of that strength which was necessary for the bearing of it; the shoulder being both the seat of burdens, and the subject of strength. That which was upon it; something which the cook by Samuel's order was to put upon it when it was drest, either for ornament, or in the nature of a sauce. That which is left, to wit, left of the sacrifice; but so all or most of the rest of their provisions were left: or rather, reserved, or laid by, by my order, for thy eating, when the rest of the meat was sent up and disposed of as the cook pleased. Unto this time; till thou shouldst come hither, and sit down here; whereby thou mayst know that thy coming hither was not unknown to me, and was designed by God for a higher purpose. Since I said, to wit, to the cook, who was before mentioned, as the person to whose care this was committed. I have invited the people, i. e. I have invited or designed some persons, for whom I reserve this part. For since the word people is not here taken properly, but for some particular persons of the people, which were not in all above thirty, ver. 22, why may not the same word be understood of two or three persons whom Samuel specially invited, to wit, Saul and his servant? So some learned men understand this word people of three men, 2 Kings xviii. 36. And they further note, that in the Arabic, and Ethiopic, and Persian languages, (all which are near akin, both to themselves and to the Hebrew, and do oftentimes communicate their signification each to other,) the word that signifies people, is oft used for some few particular persons. Or if the word people be meant of the chief of the people, mentioned above, ver. 22, then Samuel was the principal author of this sacrifice and feast, and it was not a sacrifice of the people, as it is rendered, ver. 12, but a sacrifice and feast made by Samuel for the people, as it should be rendered there; and the sense is, When I first spake or sent to the cook, that I had invited the people, first to join with me in my sacrifice, and then to partake with me of the feast, I then bade him reserve this part for thy use.

25 ¶ And when they were come down from the high place into the city, Samuel communed with Saul upon [†] the top of the house.

Samuel communed with Saul, concerning the kingdom designed to him by God, and his duty to expect it patiently, till God actually called him to it; and to administer it piously, and justly, and valiantly. The top of the house was flat, after the manner, Deut. xxii. 8; and so fit for walking, and for secret prayers, Dan. vi. 10; Acts x. 9, or any private and familiar discourses among friends.

26 And they arose early: and it came to pass about the spring of the day, that Samuel called Saul to the top of the house, saying, Up, that I may send thee away. And Saul arose, and they went out both of them, he and Samuel, abroad.

Samuel called Saul to the top of the house a second time, to impart something more to him. That I may send thee away; prepare thyself for thy departure and journey. He and Samuel, abroad; Samuel accompanying Saul part of his way.

27 And as they were going down to the end of the city, Samuel said to Saul, Bid the servant pass on before us, (and he passed on,) but stand thou still † a while, that I may shew thee the word of God.

Bid the servant pass on before us, that thou and I may speak privately of the matter of the kingdom; which Samuel hitherto endeavoured to conceal, lest he should be thought now to impose a king upon them, as before he denied one to them; and that it might appear by the lot mentioned in the next chapter, that the kingdom was given to Saul by God's destination, and not by Samuel's contrivance. The word of God, i. e. a message delivered to me from God, which now I shall impart to thee.

CHAP. X.

Samuel anointeth Saul, 1; confirms him by prediction of three signs, 2—8. Saul prophesies, 9—13. He cometh to his uncle; telleth him what Samuel had said concerning the asses, but concealeth the matter of the kingdom, 14—16. Samuel assembleth the people at Mizpeh, 17—20. Saul is chosen king by lot; but hideth himself; is discovered by God. His stature, 21—23. Samuel presents him to the people, who receive him with shouting, 24. Samuel writeth the manner of the kingdom in a book, 25. God inspires the people with reverence towards Saul; but the children of Bethai despise him, 26, 27.

THEN ^aSamuel took a vial of oil, and poured ^bit upon his head, and kissed him, and said, Is it not because ^cthe LORD hath anointed thee to be captain over ^dhis inheritance?

This was the usual rite in the designation, as of priests and prophets, so also of kings, as 1 Sam. xvi. 1, 13; 1 Kings i. 39; 2 Kings ix. 1, 3, 6; whereby was signified the pouring forth of the gifts of God's Spirit upon him, to enable him for the administration of his office, which he might expect, and should receive upon the discharge of his duty. And kissed him; partly in token of that reverence which he did owe, and that subjection which he and all the people were shortly to perform to him, whereof kissing was a sign, as Gen. xli. 40; 1 Kings xix. 18; and partly as a testimony of his sincere friendship and affection to him, and how far he was from envying his successor in the supreme dignity. Over his inheritance, i. e. over his own peculiar people; whereby he admonisheth Saul that this people were not so much his as God's; and that he was not to rule and manage them according to his own will and pleasure, but according to the will and mind of God.

2 When thou art departed from me to day, then thou shalt find two men by ^eRachel's sepulchre in the border of Benjamin ^f'at Zelzah; and they will say unto thee, The asses which thou wentest to seek are found: and, lo, thy father hath left [†] the care of the asses, and sorroweth for you, saying, What shall I do for my son?

In the borders of Benjamin; in the way to Bethlehem, Gen. xxxv. 19, which city was in Judah; and her sepulchre might be either in Judah or in Benjamin; for the possessions of those two tribes were bordering upon one another, and oft intermixed together: see Josh. xviii. 11.

3 Then shalt thou go on forward from thence, and thou shalt come to the plain of Tabor, and there shall meet thee three men going up ^gto God to Beth-el, one carrying three kids, and another carrying three loaves of bread, and another carrying a bottle of wine:

To the plain of Tabor; not that at the foot of Mount Tabor, which was far from these parts; but another belonging to some other place, or man, called Tabor. Beth-el; properly so called, which was in Ephraim, where there was a noted high place, famous for Jacob's vision there, Gen. xxviii. 19, where it is probable they offered sacrifices in this confused state of things, when the ark was in one place, and the tabernacle, if not destroyed, in another. Or, to the house of God, i. e. to Kirjath-jearim, where the ark, the habitation of God, now was, 1 Sam. vii. 1, 2, 16. Loaves of bread might be offered, either by themselves, as Lev. ii. 4, or with other sacrifices. A bottle of wine; which ^{+ Heb. ask thee of peace: as Judg. 18. 15.} 4 And they will †salute thee, and give thee two loaves of bread; which thou shalt receive of their hands.

Two loaves of bread; two of those three designed for sacrifice, supposing they could easily procure a supply of other loaves at Beth-el. But the more strange the present was, the more fit it was for a sign of God's extraordinary providence in Saul's affairs.

^{h ver. 10.} 5 After that thou shalt come to ^{i ch. 13. 3.} the hill of God, where is the garrison of the Philistines: and it shall come to pass, when thou art come thither to the city, that thou shalt meet a company of prophets coming down ^{k ch. 9. 12.} from the high place with a psaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp, before them; and they shall prophesy:

To the hill of God; a hill near Geba, or Gibeah of Benjamin, where a garrison of Philistines was, 1 Sam. xiii. 3, called here the hill of God, because it was a place devoted to the service of God; either for sacrifice, this being a high place, as it here follows; or for a school or college of prophets. To the city, adjoining to that hill. A company of prophets: by prophets here, and in such-like places, he understands persons that did wholly devote themselves to religious studies and exercises, such as preaching, praying, praising of God, &c. For the term of prophesying is not only given to the most eminent act of it, viz. foretelling things to come; but also to preaching, as Rom. xii. 6; 1 Cor. xiv. 31, 32; 1 Thess. v. 20, and to the making or singing of psalms or songs of praise to God, as 1 Chron. xxv. 1—3. And they that wholly attended upon these things are oft called sons of the prophets, which were commonly combined into companies or colleges, as 2 Kings ii. 3, 5, that they might more conveniently edify and assist one another in God's work; which institution God was pleased so far to honour and bless, that sometimes he communicated unto those persons the knowledge of future things, as 2 Kings ii. 3, 5. From the high place; where either their habitation was, or they had now been offering sacrifice. And although they used to perform this following exercise, either in their college, or in the place of their sacrifices; yet now they did it in the descent of the hill, which probably was beside their custom, and therefore more proper for a sign to Saul of a more than ordinary hand of God towards him. A psaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp, before them; such instruments of music being then used by prophets and other persons, for the exhilaration and excitation of their spirits in God's service. See 2 Kings iii. 15. They shall prophesy; either sing God's praises, or speak of the things of God.

^{m Num. 11. 25. ch. 16. 13. n ver. 10. ch. 19. 23. 24.} 6 And ^mthe Spirit of the LORD will come upon thee, and ⁿthou shalt prophesy with them, and shalt be turned into another man.

Will come upon thee, Heb. will leap or rush upon thee, to wit, for a season. So it may be opposed to the Spirit's resting upon a man, as Numb. xi. 25; Isa. xi. 2. Shalt be turned into another man, i. e. thou shalt be suddenly endowed and acted with another spirit, filled with skill of Divine things, with courage, and wisdom, and magnanimity, and other qualifications befitting thy dignity.

^{+ Heb. if shall come to pass, that when these signs, &c. o Ex. 4. 8. Luke 2. 12. † Heb. do for thee as time hand shall find. Judg. 9. 33. p Judg. 6. 12.} 7 And †let it be, when these ^osigns are come unto thee, †that thou do as occasion serve thee; for ^pGod is with thee.

These signs were certain evidences of God's calling of him to the kingdom, because they were all future contingencies, which none but God could infallibly know or foretell. Do as occasion shall serve thee, Heb. do what thy hand findeth to do, i. e. as thou shalt have a call and opportunity. He doth not intend that he should take the kingly government upon him, before his call to it was known to and owned by the people, which had been preposterous and dangerous; but that he should dispose his mind to a readiness of undertaking any public service when necessity required it, and he should be called to his office.

8 And thou shalt go down before me ^{q ch. 11. 14. 15. & 13. 4.} unto Gilgal; and, behold, I will come down unto thee, to offer burnt offerings, and to sacrifice sacrifices of peace offerings: ^{r ch. 13. 8.} seven days shalt thou tarry, till I come to thee, and shew thee what thou shalt do.

Seven days shalt thou tarry till I come to thee: this, though now mentioned and commanded, yet was not immediately to be performed; as is evident, partly from the whole course of the story, which shows that Saul, and Samuel, and the people first met at Mizpeh, ver. 17, &c., where Saul was chosen by God and accepted by the people as king; and afterwards went to Gilgal, once before the time here spoken of, chap. xi. 14, 15; and partly by comparing this place with chap. xiii. 8, &c., where we find Saul charged with the violation of this command two years after the giving of it, as appears from chap. xiii. 1, 2. Quest. How then is this to be understood? Answ. 1. This may be given as a standing rule for Saul to observe while Samuel and he lived; that in case of any great future difficulties, as the invasion of enemies, Saul should resort to Gilgal, and call the people thither, and tarry there seven days, which was but a reasonable and necessary time for the gathering of the people, and for the coming of Samuel thither. For though this be related as but once done, chap. xiii., yet Josephus affirms that it was to be constantly practised upon all such occasions. And Gilgal was chosen for this purpose as a very fit place; partly because that place was famous for the solemn renewing of the covenant between God and Israel, Josh. iv., and for other eminent instances of God's favour to them, the remembrance whereof was a notable confirmation of their faith; and partly because it was a very convenient place for the tribes within and without Jordan to assemble, and consult, and unite their forces together upon such occasions. If you ask, Why then Saul did not practise this precept upon the first invasion of the Ammonites? it may be answered, that this was a rule for Saul when he and Samuel were asunder, whereas they were together in that expedition, chap. xi. 7. And further, that necessity did excuse the violation of this precept then, because Saul could not wait for Samuel, nor forbear his action for seven days, as is evident from chap. xi. 3, 9, 10. Or, 2. (which I propose with submission to the learned and judicious) This may be here added as another sign to confirm his faith, which having strengthened by three foregoing signs, he now fortifies it by another sign which was to follow afterwards; it being very usual for God to give men signs to confirm their faith from future events; as Exod. iii. 12; 2 Kings xix. 29; Isa. vii. 13, 14. So the meaning may be this, Another sign will I add to strengthen thy faith: Thou shalt in due time, and upon a great occasion which shall then happen, go down before me to Gilgal, and there I will come down unto thee to offer—sacrifices, &c. But when thou comest thither, be sure thou tarry there seven days, and then I will come, as I have said, and give thee necessary instructions and assistance, as the matter shall require.

9 ¶ And it was so, that when he had turned his †back to go from Samuel, God †gave him another heart: and all those ^{+ Heb. shoulder. + Heb. turned.} signs came to pass that day.

10 And ^{s ver. 5.} when they came thither to the hill, behold, ^{t ch. 19. 20.} a company of prophets met him; and ^{u ver. 6.} the Spirit of God came upon him, and he prophesied among them.

Then the accomplishment of the two former signs is supposed, and this only of the third is expressed, because this was more eminent and public than the former: the other were only transient acts, which passed in private between two or three persons meeting together, and passing by one another; but this was a more permanent and more notorious sign, done in a more solemn manner, and before many and very considerable witnesses.

11 And it came to pass, when all that knew him beforetime saw that, behold, he prophesied

What is this that is come unto the son of Kish? what means this strange and prodigious event? Saul; a man never instructed nor exercised in nor inclined to these matters; a man ever thought fitter to look to his father's asses, than to bear a part in the sacred exercises of the prophets.

12 And one † of the same place answered and said, But [†]who is their father? Therefore it became a proverb, Is Saul also among the prophets?

One of the same place, Heb. one from thence, i. e. one of the company there present, or one of the prophets there prophesying. Who is their father? who is the father of all these prophets of whom you speak, and among whom Saul now is one? who is it that instructs and inspires them with this holy art, but God? They have it not from their natural parents, nor from their civil education, but by inspiration from God, who, when he pleaseth, can inspire Saul, or any other man, with the same skill. And therefore wonder not at this matter, but give God the glory of it. Father is here put for teacher, or instructor, as it is used; as Gen. iv. 20, 21; Matt. xxiii. 9; 1 Cor. iv. 15. And hence the scholars are called sons of the prophets. It became a proverb, used when any strange, unlikely, or unexpected thing happened.

13 And when he had made an end of prophesying, he came to the high place.

Returning thither with the prophets, there to praise God for these wonderful favours, and to beg counsel and help from God in this high business.

14 ¶ And Saul's uncle said unto him and to his servant, Whither went ye? And he said, To seek the asses: and when we saw that they were no where, we came to Samuel.

Saul's uncle, being there present, and observing this great alteration in his nephew.

15 And Saul's uncle said, Tell me, I pray thee, what Samuel said unto you.

16 And Saul said unto his uncle, He told us plainly that the asses were found. But of the matter of the kingdom, whereof Samuel spake, he told him not.

Partly, in obedience to Samuel, who obliged him to secrecy; partly, from a humble modesty which appeared in him, ver. 22; and partly, in prudence, lest by an unseasonable publishing of it he should raise envy in some, disbelief and contempt in others, &c.

Because God is present in all the assemblies of his people, whereof this was an eminent one: see 2 Chron. xix. 6; Psal. lxxxii. 1. Or, 3. Because they did in a manner erect a tribunal for God; and entreated, and consequently obtained, his presence there to supervise and direct the whole business by his sentence, which also he did, ver. 19, &c. 8, 9.

18 And said unto the children of Israel, ^bThus saith the LORD God of Israel, I brought up Israel out of Egypt, and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all kingdoms, and of them that oppressed you:

Of all kingdoms, to wit, the neighbouring kingdoms, which molested you from time to time.

19 ^cAnd ye have this day rejected your God, who himself saved you out of all your adversities and your tribulations; and ye have said unto him, Nay, but set a king over us. Now therefore present yourselves before the LORD by your tribes, and by your thousands.

Ye have this day rejected your God; you this day declare that you persist in your former act of rejecting God's government: see on chap. viii. 7. Who himself saved you; who by his own special providence took care to raise up judges and saviours for you, and to deliver you at all times, when you needed his help, and did not by your sins obstruct it. Ye have said unto him, i. e. unto me his prophet and ambassador; and consequently unto the Lord, whom I represented, and in whose name I spake and acted. By your tribes, and by your thousands; for each tribe was divided into thousands, Numb. x. 36; Deut. xxxiii. 17; Josh. xxii 14, 21; Micah v. 2, as in England counties are into hundreds.

20 And when Samuel had ^dcaused all the tribes of Israel to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was taken.

To come near unto the place appointed for the casting of lots. This tribe was now preferred before Judah, because the kingdom was freely promised by God to Judah, and was to be given to him in love; but now the kingdom was in a manner forced from God, and given to them in anger, Hos. xiii. 11, and therefore conferred upon an obscure tribe.

21 When he had caused the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the son of Kish was taken: and when they sought him, he could not be found.

22 Therefore they ^eenquired of the LORD further, if the man should yet come thither. And the LORD answered, Behold, he hath hid himself among the stuff.

They inquired of the Lord; either by Urim or Thummim, which was the usual way of inquiry, Numb. xxvii. 21; 1 Sam. xxiii. 9; xxviii. 6; or by Samuel, who by his prayer procured an answer. Among the stuff; among the carriages or baggage of the people there assembled. This he might do, because he either had, or at least would be thought to have, a modest sense of his own unworthiness, which was a likely way to commend him to the people.

23 And they ran and fetched him thence: and when he stood among the people, ^fhe was higher than any of the people from his shoulders and upward.

24 And Samuel said to all the people, See ye him ^gwhom the LORD hath chosen, that there is none like him among all the people? And all the people shouted, and said, ^h† God save the king.

There is none like him among all the people; as to the height of his bodily stature, which was in itself commendable in a king, and some kind of indication of great endowments of mind. God save the king, Heb. Let the king live, to wit, long and prosperously; for an afflicted life is reputed a kind of death, and is oft so called. Hereby they accept and own him for their king, and promise subjection to him.

25 Then Samuel told the people ⁱthe manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the LORD. And Samuel sent all the people away, every man to his house.

^k Judg. 20. ^l ch. 11. 4. 26 ¶ And Saul also went home ^k to Gibeah; and there went with him a band of men, whose hearts God had touched.

To Gibeah: not being actually inaugurated into his kingdom, he thought fit to retire to his former habitation, and to live privately till he had an occasion to show himself in a more public and illustrious manner, which he speedily obtained. And there went with him a band of men, to give him safe and honourable conduct to his house, though not to abide with him there, which did not suit with his present circumstances. Whose hearts God had touched, i. e. either, 1. Disposed or inclined to this work; or, 2. Affected or renewed by his grace and good Spirit working upon their hearts; those that feared God and made conscience of their duty; for they are opposed to the children of Belial in the next verse. These, though they did not desire a king, as the generality of the people did, yet when God had given them a king, they were most forward to pay him that reverence and obedience which they owed him; both which proceeded from the same principle, that they were in both cases guided by God's will; which was, that they should not desire a king in their circumstances; and yet they should obey him, when God had set a king over them.

This man; so mean a person, and of the weakest of all the tribes. Brought him no presents; as subjects in those times and places used to do to their kings; see 1 Kings x. 25; 2 Chron. xvii. 5; Matt. ii. 11; and as Saul's mean condition, wherewith they upbraided him, required. He held his peace; thereby manifesting his prudence and clemency, which was of great use in the beginning of his government.

CHAP. XI.

Nahash besiegeth them of Jabesh-gilead; offereth them a reproachful condition; they have seven days granted them to consult and seek relief; they send messengers to Saul, 1—5. He is provoked; sends messengers to all the Israelites to come in to their help; they come to the number of three hundred and thirty thousand men, 6—8. He sends word to the besieged, who deceive Nahash; who with his army is slain, 9—11. The people are ready to slay Saul's enemies; in which he opposeth them: he is invested in the kingdom at Gilgal, 12—15.

^a ch. 12. 12. ^b Judg. 21. ^c Gen. 26. 28. ^d Ex. 23. 32. ^e 1 Kings 20. ^f Job 41. 4. ^g Ezek. 17. 13. THEN ^a Nahash the Ammonite came up, and encamped against ^b Jabesh-gilead; and all the men of Jabesh said unto Nahash, ^c Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee.

Then, i. e. about that time; this particle being used in some latitude, as is frequent; for that this happened before, and was the occasion of their desire of a king, may seem from chap. xii. 12; although it is possible that Nahash's preparation, and declared intention of warring against them, might cause that desire, and that Nahash did not actually come against them (which is here related) till their king was chosen. Nahash the Ammonite; either the same with him, 2 Sam. x. 2, or his father and predecessor. Came up to war, probably to revenge and to recover their former great loss by Jephthah, Judg. xi. 33. Jabesh-gilead was beyond Jordan, and near the Ammonites, who dwelt in part of Arabia. Make a covenant with us, to wit, upon good conditions, so as we shall enjoy our religion and properties. We will serve thee; in other things we will be thy subjects and tributaries. The occasion of this offer was, that they saw no likelihood of relief from their brethren the Israelites in Canaan, who were remote from them, and then weak and divided, and scarce able to defend themselves from the Philistines.

2 And Nahash the Ammonite answered them, On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thrust out all your right eyes, and lay it for ^d a reproach upon all Israel.

That I may thrust out all your right eyes; partly for a reproach, as it here follows; and partly to disable them from managing offensive weapons in battle; for their left eye served only or chiefly for defence, being covered by those large shields which then they used, and held in their left hand. He leaves them one eye, that they might be fit to serve him in any mean and base office.

3 And the elders of Jabesh said unto him, † Give us seven days' respite, that we may send messengers unto all the coasts of Israel: and then, if there be no man to save us, we will come out to thee.

Give us seven days' respite; which it is very probable, and Josephus and others affirm, that Nahash granted, out of a foolish self-confidence, and contempt of the broken condition of the Israelites, which he thought utterly unable to give them any relief; at least, in so short a time.

4 ¶ Then came the messengers ^e to Gibeah of Saul, and told the tidings in the ears of the people: and ^f all the people lifted up their voices, and wept.

Then came the messengers to Gibeah of Saul; partly, because it was not far from them; and partly, because it belonged to the Benjamites, who had a special obligation to take more care of that place, from whence they had their wives, Judg. xxi. 10, &c.; and partly, because Saul, their new-chosen king, was there. The people lifted up their voices, and wept, both in compassion towards them, and for fear of themselves, lest it should shortly be their own lot.

5 And, behold, Saul came after the herd out of the field; and Saul said, What aileth the people that they weep? And they told him the tidings of the men of Jabesh.

Saul came after the herd out of the field; for being only anointed king, and not publicly inaugurated, nor owned, nor presented by the generality of the people, nor having yet had opportunity of doing any thing worthy of his place, he thought fit to forgo all royal state, and to retire to his former private and country life, which, howsoever despised in these latter, vain, ambitious, and slothful ages of the world, was anciently in great esteem among the Greeks and Romans, whose princes and generals did frequently exercise themselves in it; though some conceive that he now lived in some state, and that he had been in the fields only to recreate himself, and that his coming after the herd was but accidental, and is mentioned only to usher in what follows of the yoke of oxen.

6 ^g And the Spirit of God came upon Saul when he heard those tidings, and his anger was kindled greatly.

The Spirit of God came upon Saul, inspiring him suddenly with more than ordinary courage, and zeal, and resolution, to engage himself and the people for their rescue. Compare Judg. iii. 10; vi. 34; xi. 29. His anger was kindled greatly against Nahash, for so insolent and barbarous a proposition.

7 And he took a yoke of oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the coasts of Israel by the hands of messengers, saying, ⁱ Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen. And the fear of the LORD fell on the people, and they came out † with one consent.

Sent them throughout all the coasts of Israel; wisely considering, that the sight of men's eyes do much more affect their hearts than what they only hear with their ears. He joins Samuel with himself, both because he was present with him, as appears from ver. 12, and that hereby he might gain the more authority to his command, and strike the greater terror into all despisers of it. The fear of the Lord; either, 1. A great fear; great things being oft thus expressed; as cedars of God, mountains of God, &c. Or, 2. A fear sent upon them by God, as Gen. xxxv. 5, that they should not dare to deny their help.

8 And when he numbered them in ^kBezek, the children ^lof Israel were three hundred thousand, and the men of Judah thirty thousand.

This great terror drew so many forth; which is not so strange to him that knows what none deny, that the land of Canaan contained vast numbers of people in a little compass. The men of Judah are numbered apart to their honour, to show how readily they, to whom the kingdom was promised, Gen. xlix. 10, submitted to their king, though of another and far meaner tribe; and how willing they were to hazard themselves for their brethren's rescue, although they might have excused themselves from the necessity of defending their own country from their dangerous neighbours the Philistines.

9 And they said unto the messengers that came, Thus shall ye say unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, To-morrow, by that time the sun be hot, ye shall have ^{||}help. And the messengers came and shewed it to the men of Jabesh; and they were glad.

To-morrow, to wit, the day after your departure hence, or return home; for it seems probable that some few days had been spent in the gathering and disposing of the forces, and bringing them towards those parts.

10 Therefore the men of Jabesh said, ^mTo-morrow ⁿwe will come out unto you, and ye shall do with us all that seemeth good unto you.

They did and might reasonably and justly understand their own condition before proposed, ver. 3, if none came to save them; which they were not now obliged to repeat, although they conjectured that their enemies would understand it absolutely, whose error therein they were no more obliged to correct, than to prevent their destruction. Nor did they tell any lie herein, but only concealed part of their intentions, to render their enemy more secure and fit for ruin; which kind of stratagems are usual, and allowed by all persons.

11 And it was so on the morrow, that ⁿSaul put the people ^oin three companies; and they came into the midst of the host in the morning watch, and slew the Ammonites until the heat of the day: and it came to pass, that they which remained were scattered, so that two of them were not left together.

Into three companies; that so invading them on several sides with a great force, he might both strike them with the greater terror, and prevent their escape. In the morning watch; having marched all the day and night before it.

12 ¶ And the people said unto Samuel, ^pWho is he that said, Shall Saul reign over us? ^qbring the men, that we may put them to death.

Shall Saul reign over us? they did not say so in terms, as we may see, chap. x. 27, but this was the design and consequence of their speech, as they rightly construe it. That we may put them to death; which till this time they were not able to do, because that infection was then almost universal.

13 And Saul said, There shall not a man be put to death this day: for to day ^rthe LORD hath wrought salvation in ^sIsrael. ^{Ex. 14. 18, 30. ch. 19. 5.}

I will not destroy any of those whom God hath so graciously preserved; nor sully the mirth of this glorious and comfortable day with the slaughter of any of my subjects; and therefore I freely forgive them. Wherein Saul showed his policy as well as his clemency, this being the most likely way to gain his enemies, and secure his friends, and establish his throne in the hearts of his people.

14 Then said Samuel to the people, ^{1095.} Come, and let us go ^tto Gilgal, and re- [†]new the kingdom there. ^{† ch. 10. 8.}

Then; whilst the people were together by Jabesh-gilead, wherein Samuel's great prudence and fidelity to Saul is evident. He suspended the confirmation to Saul at first, whilst the generality of the people were disaffected and discontented at the meanness of his person; and now when he had given such eminent proof of his princely virtues, and when the people's hearts were unanimously and eagerly set upon him, he takes this as the fittest season for that work. Let us go to Gilgal: this place he chose, both because it was near, and, to most of them, in the way to their homes; and because thither the Israelites on this side, and beyond Jordan, might more easily resort; and because it was famous for public conventions there kept, and particularly for the covenant there renewed by Joshua between God and the people. Renew the kingdom there, i. e. confirm our former choice, to prevent all such seditious expressions and actions as we had experience of at the former election.

15 And all the people went to Gilgal; and there they made Saul king ^ubefore ^vthe LORD in Gilgal; and ^wthere they sacrificed sacrifices of peace offerings before the LORD; and there Saul and all the men of Israel rejoiced greatly. ^{u ch. 10. 17. x ch. 10. 8.}

They made Saul king, i. e. they recognised him, or owned and accepted him for their king by consent; for, to speak properly, Saul was not made or constituted king by the people, but by the Lord's immediate act: see chap. viii. 9; x. 1. Before the Lord; who was there present in a special manner; both because the people of the Lord were there assembled, and because there was an altar, as the following sacrifices show. The same phrase is used chap. x. 17; xiv. 18. They sacrificed sacrifices of peace-offerings; partly to praise God for so glorious a victory, and for the firm settlement of the distracted kingdom; and partly to implore the presence and assistance of God to the king and kingdom, in all their affairs and exigences.

CHAP. XII.

Samuel having appointed a king unto the people, testifieth his own integrity, to which they witness, 1—5. He setteth before them the sins of their ancestors, and their own sin in asking a king, 6—13; comforts them if they will obey the Lord; threateneth the disobedient; terrifies them by thunder in harvest: they confess their sin, and desire to be reconciled to the Lord, 14—19. He comforts and exhorts them to fear and serve the Lord; promising also to pray for them, 20—25.

AND Samuel said unto all Israel, Behold, I have hearkened unto ^ayour voice in all that ye said unto me, and ^bhave made a king over you. ^{a ch. 8. 5, 19, 20. b ch. 10. 24. & 11. 14, 15.}

Samuel said this unto all Israel, whilst they were assembled together in Gilgal. And this is another instance of Samuel's great wisdom and integrity. He would not reprove the people for their sin, in desiring a king, whilst Saul was raw, and weak, and unsettled in his kingdom, and in the people's hearts, lest through their accustomed levity they should as hastily cast off their king as they had passionately desired him, and so add one sin to another; and therefore he chooseth this season for it; partly because Saul's kingdom was now confirmed and illustrated by an eminent victory, and so the danger of rejecting him was out of doors; which circumstance was also considerable for Samuel's vindication, that it might appear that his following reproof did not proceed from any selfish respects or desires, which he might be supposed to have of retaining the power in his own hands, but merely from the conscience of his duty, and a sincere desire of all their good: and partly because the people rejoiced greatly, as is said in the next foregoing verse; and upon this occasion applauded themselves for their desires of a king; and interpreted the success which God had now given them, as a Divine approbation of those desires; whereby they were like to be hardened in their impenitency, and might be drawn to many other inconveniencies. Samuel therefore thinks fit to temper their excessive joys, and to excite them to that repentance and holy fear which he saw wanting in them, and which he knew to be absolutely necessary, to prevent the curse of God upon their new king, and the whole kingdom.

^c Num. 27. 17, ch. 8. 20. d ch. 8. 1, 5. 2 And now, behold, the king ^e walketh before you: ^d and I am old and gray-headed; and, behold, my sons are with you: and I have walked before you from my childhood unto this day.

Walketh before you; goeth out and cometh in before you, i. e. ruleth over you, as that phrase signifies, Numb. xxvii. 17; Deut. xxxi. 2; 2 Chron. i. 10. To him I have fully resigned all my power and authority, and do hereby renounce it, and own myself for a private person, and one of his subjects. I am old and gray-headed; and therefore unable to bear the burden of government, and feel myself greatly at ease to see it cast upon other shoulders; and therefore do not speak what I am about to say from envy of Saul's advancement, or from discontent at the diminution of my own power. My sons are with you, or among you, in the same state and place, private persons, as you are; if they have injured any of you in their government, as you once complained, the law is now open against them; any of you may accuse them, your king can punish them; I do not intercede for them, I have neither power nor will to keep them from receiving the just fruits of their misdemeanours. I have walked before you, i. e. been your guide and governor, partly as a prophet, and partly as a judge.

^e Ecclus. 46. 19. f ver. 5. ch. 10. 1. & 24. 6. 2 Sam. 1. 14. 16. g Num. 16. 15. Acts 0. 33. 1 Thess. 2. 5. + Heb. ranoon. i Or, that I should hide mine eyes of him. l Deut. 16. 19. 3 Behold, ^e here I am: witness against me before the LORD, and before ^f his anointed: ^g whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received any ^h bribe || to ⁱ blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it you.

Witness against me; I here present myself before the Lord, and before your king, being ready to give an account of all my administrations, and to make satisfaction for any injuries that I have done. And this protestation Samuel makes of his integrity, not out of ostentation or vain-glory; but partly, for his own just vindication, that the people might not hereafter, for the defence of their own irregularities, reproach his government; partly, that being publicly acquitted from all faults in his government, he might more freely and boldly reprove the sins of the people, and particularly that sin of theirs in desiring a king, when they had so little reason for it, and they had so just a governor, from whom they might have promised themselves an effectual redress of his sons' mal-administrations, if they had acquainted him therewith; and partly, that by his example he might tacitly admonish Saul of his duty, and prevent his misunderstanding of what he had formerly said, chap. viii. 11, &c., and mistake that for the rule of his just power, which was only a prediction of his evil practices. Whom have I oppressed? whom have I wronged, either by fraud and false accusation, or by might and violence? Any bribe, Heb. price of redemption, given to redeem an unjust and lost cause or person from that righteous sentence which they deserved. To blind mine eyes therewith; that I should not discern what was right and just, or dissemble it, as if I did not see it. Or, that I should hide or cover mine eyes (i. e. willfully wink at the plain truth) for it, i. e. for the bribe; or, for him, i. e. for his sake. I will restore it you, or, and I will cover mine eyes for him, i. e. I will take shame to myself, and cover my face as one ashamed to look upon him.

4 And they said, Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken ought of any man's hand.

5 And he said unto them, The LORD is witness against you, and his anointed is witness this day, ⁱ that ye have not found ought ^j in my hand. And they answered, He is witness.

The Lord is witness against you, to wit, if you shall at any time hereafter reproach my government or memory. Or rather, against you, that I gave you no cause to be weary of God's government of you by judges, or to desire a change of the government; and thereby the blame of it wholly rests upon yourselves. But this was only insinuated, and therefore the people did not fully understand his drift in it. Ye have not found ought, i. e. any thing which I have gotten by bribery or oppression. They answered, Heb. he answered, i. e. the whole people, who are here spoken of as one person, because they answered thus with one consent.

6 ¶ And Samuel said unto the people, ^k It is the LORD that ^l advanced Moses and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt.

That for your sakes raised, constituted, and exalted Moses and Aaron to that great power and reputation which they had, and used, to deliver you.

7 Now therefore stand still, that I may ^m reason with you before the LORD of all the ⁿ righteous acts of the LORD, which he did ^o to you and to your fathers.

That I may reason with you: since God hath laid so great obligations upon you, let us a little consider whether you have answered them. The righteous acts, Heb. the righteousnesses, i. e. mercies or benefits; for so that word is oft used, as Psal. xxiv. 5; xxxvi. 10; Prov. x. 2; xi. 4; and that is the chief subject of the following discourse; some of their calamities being but briefly named, and that for the illustration of God's mercy in their deliverances.

8 ^p When Jacob was come into Egypt, and your fathers ^q cried unto the LORD, then the LORD ^r sent Moses and Aaron, which brought forth your fathers out of Egypt, and made them dwell in this place.

In this land; in which Moses and Aaron are said to settle them; partly, because they brought them into and seated them in part of it, to wit, that without Jordan; partly, because they were, under God, the principal authors of their entering into the land of Canaan; inasmuch as they brought them out of Egypt, conducted them through the wilderness, and there by their prayers to God, and counsel to them, preserved them from utter ruin, and gave command and direction from God for the distribution of the land among them, and encouraged them to enter into it by promises and assurances of success; and lastly, Moses substituted Joshua in his stead, and commanded him to carry them thither, and seat them there, which also he did.

9 And when they ^s forgot the LORD their God, ^t he sold them into the hand of Sisera, captain of the host of Hazor, and into the hand of ^u the Philistines, and into the hand of the king ^v of Moab, and they fought against them.

They forgot the Lord, i. e. they revolted from him, as it is explained, ver. 10, and carried themselves as ungratefully and unworthily towards God, as if they had wholly forgotten his great and innumerable favours, and their infinite obligations to him. Forgetting of God is oft put for all manner of wickedness, whereof indeed that is the true cause. See Isa. xvii. 10; Jer. iii. 21; Ezek. xxii. 12. This he saith, partly to answer an objection, That the reason why they desired a king was, because in the time of the judges they were at great uncertainties, and oftentimes exercised with sharp afflictions: to which he answereth by concession that they were so; but adds, by way of refection, that they themselves were the cause of it, by their forgetting of God; so that it was not the fault of that kind of government, but their transgressing the rules of it; and partly to mind them that this their ungrateful carriage towards God was no new or strange thing, but an hereditary and inveterate disease, that so they might more easily believe their own guilt herein, and be more deeply humbled, both for their own and for their parents' sins. They fought against them, to wit, with success, and subdued them.

10 And they cried unto the LORD, and said, "We have sinned, because we have forsaken the LORD, and have served Baalim and Ashtaroth: but now deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we will serve thee.

11 And the LORD sent Jerubbaal, and Bedan, and Jephthah, and Samuel, and delivered you out of the hand of your enemies on every side, and ye dwelled safe.

Bedan is certainly one of the judges; and because there is no judge so called in the Book of Judges, it is reasonably concluded that this was one of the judges there mentioned having two names, as was very frequent. And this was either, first, Samson, as most interpreters believe, who is called Bedan, i. e. in Dan, or of Dan, or the son of Dan, one of that tribe, to signify that they had no reason to distrust that God, who could, and did, raise so eminent a saviour out of so obscure a tribe. Or, secondly, Jair the Gileadite, of whom Judg. x. 3; which may seem best to agree, first, With the time and order of the judges; for Jair was before Jephthah, but Samson was after him. Secondly, With other scriptures; for among the sons of a more ancient and a famous Jair, of whom see Numb. xxxii. 41, we meet with one called Bedan, 1 Chron. vii. 17, which name seems here given to Jair the judge, to distinguish him from that first Jair. Thirdly, With the following words, which show that this Bedan was one of those judges who delivered them out of the hand of their enemies on every side, and made them to dwell safely; which seems not so properly to agree to Samson, who did only begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines, as was foretold of him, Judg. xiii. 5, as to Jair, who kept them in peace and safety, in the midst of all their enemies, as may be gathered from Judg. x. 3-6; and so did all the rest of the judges here mentioned. And Samuel; he speaks of himself in the third person, which is frequent in the Hebrew tongue, as Gen. iv. 23; Psal. cxxxii. 1, 10, 11; Dan. i. 6; Isa. i. 1. And he mentions himself not through vain ostentation, but for his own just and necessary vindication, and for the justification and enforcement of his following reproof, to show that he had not degenerated from his predecessors, nor had been so inconsiderable and unprofitable to them, as to give them any occasion to contrive or desire this change of government in his days. Ye dwelled safe; so that it was no necessity, but mere wantonness, that made you desire a change.

12 And when ye saw that Nahash the king of the children of Ammon came against you, ye said unto me, Nay; but a king shall reign over us: when the LORD your God was your king.

A king shall reign over us: see the notes on chap. xi. 1. When the Lord your God was your King, i. e. when God was your immediate King and Governor, who was both able and willing to deliver you, if you had cried to him, whereof you and your ancestors have had plentiful experience; so that you did not at all need any other king; and your desire of another was a manifest reproach against God, as if he were either grown impotent, or unfaithful, or unmerciful to you.

13 Now therefore behold the king whom ye have chosen, and whom ye have desired! and, behold, the LORD hath set a king over you.

Whom ye have chosen: though God chose him by lot, yet the people are said to choose him; either generally, because they chose that form of government, or particularly, because they approved of God's choice, chap. x. 24, and confirmed it, chap. xi. 15. The Lord hath set a king over you; he hath yielded to your inordinate desire.

14 If ye will fear the LORD, and serve him, and obey his voice, and not rebel against the commandment of the LORD, then shall both ye and also the king that reigneth over you continue following the LORD your God:

Heb. Then shall—ye—be (i. e. walk, or go) after the Lord, i. e. God shall still go before you, as he hath hitherto done, as your Leader or Governor, to direct, protect, and deliver you; and he will not forsake you, as you have given him just cause to do. Sometimes this phrase of going after the Lord signifies a man's obedience to God; but here it is otherwise to be understood; (as it is no new thing for the same phrase in several places to be understood in quite different senses;) and it notes not a duty to be performed, but a promise of a privilege to be received upon the performance of their duty, because it is opposed to a threatening denounced in case of disobedience in the next verse.

15 But if ye will not obey the voice of the LORD, but rebel against the commandment of the LORD, then shall the hand of the LORD be against you, as it was against your fathers.

Who lived under the judges; and you shall have no advantage in that point by the change of government, nor shall your kings be able to protect you against God's displeasure.

¶ Now therefore stand and see this great thing, which the LORD will do before your eyes.

By standing he intends not the posture of their bodies, but the consistency of their minds, by serious and fixed consideration.

17 Is it not wheat harvest to day? I will call unto the LORD, and he shall send thunder and rain; that ye may perceive and see that your wickedness is great, which ye have done in the sight of the LORD, in asking you a king.

At wheat harvest it was a rare thing in those parts to have thunder or rain, as the Scripture oft implies; and St. Jerome affirms, who was an eye-witness of it; the weather being more constant and certain in its seasons there, and in divers other parts, than it is with us who live in islands, as all travellers inform us. He shall send thunder and rain; that by this unseasonable and pernicious storm you may understand that God is displeased with you; and also how foolishly and wickedly you have done in rejecting the government of that God, at whose command are all things, both in heaven and in earth.

18 So Samuel called unto the LORD; and the LORD sent thunder and rain that day: and all the people greatly feared the LORD and Samuel.

Who had such great power and favour with God.

19 And all the people said unto Samuel, Pray for thy servants unto the LORD thy God, that we die not: for we have added unto all our sins this evil, to ask us a king.

Pray for thy servants; for so we shall still own ourselves to be, though we have got another master. Unto the Lord thy God, whom thou hast so great an interest in, and canst so easily prevail with for any mercy, whilst we are ashamed and afraid to call him our God, because we have so highly offended him. That we die not; that this terrible storm may be taken away, lest our persons and the fruits of the earth be all destroyed. To ask us a king: so horribly were they biassed with their prejudices and passions, that nothing but a miracle could convince them of this particular sin.

20 ¶ And Samuel said unto the people, Fear not: ye have done all this wickedness: yet turn not aside from following the LORD, but serve the LORD with all your heart;

Fear not, to wit, with a servile and desponding fear, as if there were no hope left for you.

21 And turn ye not aside: for then should ye go after vain things, which cannot profit nor deliver; for they are vain.

Turn ye not aside, to wit, after idols; as they had often done before; and, notwithstanding this warning, did afterwards. Should ye go, or, should ye turn aside; which words are easily to be understood out of the foregoing branch, such ellipses being most frequent in Scripture, as Deut. i. 4; 1 Kings xiv. 14; 2 Kings ix. 27. Vain things; so idols are called, Deut. xxxii. 21; Jer. ii. 5, and so they are, being mere nothings, 1 Cor. viii. 4, having no divinity nor power in them; no influence upon us, nor use or benefit to us. Which cannot profit nor deliver, i. e. which will not only be unprofitable, but highly pernicious to you; the contrary affirmative being understood under the negative, as Exod. xx. 7; Numb. xxi. 23; Deut. ii. 30.

22 For the LORD will not forsake his people for his great name's sake: because it hath pleased the LORD to make you his people.

For his great name's sake, i. e. for his own honour, which would seem to suffer much among men, if he should not preserve and deliver people in eminent dangers; as if he were grown feeble, or forgetful, or inconstant, or unfaithful, or regardless of human affairs, or unkind to those who own and worship him, when all the rest of the world forsake him. Hence this argument hath been oft pleaded with God, not without good success, as Exod. xxxii. 12; Numb. xiv. 13, &c. And this reason God here allegeth to take them off from all conceit of their own merit; and to assure them, that if they did truly repent of all their sins, and served God with all their heart, which is here supposed, yet even in that case their salvation would not be due to their merits, but only the effect of God's free mercy. It hath pleased the Lord, to wit, out of his own free grace, without any desert of yours, as he saith, Deut. vii. 7; ix. 5; and therefore he will not easily forsake you, except you thrust him away.

23 Moreover as for me, God forbid that I should sin against the LORD in ceasing to pray for you: but I will teach you the way and the right way:

Think not that because you have so highly disobliged and rejected me, that I will revenge myself by neglecting to pray for you, or by praying against you, as I have now done for your conviction and humiliation, and so for your preservation; I am sensible it is my duty, as I am a man, an Israelite, a minister, a prophet, to pray for you. But I will teach you, Heb. and I will, &c., i. e. I will not only pray for you, which is one branch of my duty; but will also teach and instruct you, which is the other branch of it. And though you have cast me off from being your judge and ruler, yet I will not cease to be your instructor and monitor, to keep you from sin and destruction.

24 Only fear the LORD, and serve him in truth with all your heart: for consider how great things he hath done for you.

Fear the Lord, and serve him; otherwise neither my prayer nor counsels will stand you in any stead. He hath done for you, or, among you, both at this time and formerly.

25 But if ye shall still do wickedly, ye shall be consumed, both ye and your king.

Saul and Jonathan's select band. Jonathan smiteth the garrison of the Philistines at Gibeah: the people are called together at Gilgal, 1—4. The Philistines' great host: the Israelites run into caves; and tremble, 5—7. Saul offereth before Samuel cometh to him; he reproves him for it; foretelleth him that his kingdom should not last long, 8—14. Three companies of the Philistines invade the land; they had no smith to make them swords, &c.; nor had any of the Israelites, save Saul and Jonathan, sword or spear, 15—23.

SAUL †reigned one year; and when he had reigned two years over Israel, + Heb. the son of one year in his reigning.

Reigned one year, i. e. had now reigned one year, from his first election at Mizpeh, in which time these things were done, which are recorded chap. xi., xii., to wit, peaceably, or righteously. Compare 2 Sam. ii. 10.

2 Saul chose him three thousand men of Israel; whereof two thousand were with Saul in Michmash and in mount Beth-el, and a thousand were with Jonathan in Gibeah of Benjamin: and the rest of the people he sent every man to his tent.

Saul chose, Heb. and (i. e. then, as that adverb is oft used, as Gen. iii. 5; xviii. 10, &c.) Saul chose. Three thousand men of Israel; which he thought sufficient for constant attendance and service, intending to summon the rest when need should be. Michmash; a tract of ground near Ramah and Beth-el, in the border of Benjamin, and near to the Philistines.

3 And Jonathan smote the garrison of the Philistines that was in Geba, and the Philistines heard of it. And Saul blew the trumpet throughout all the land, saying, Let the Hebrews hear.

† Or, the hill.

The first design of Saul and Jonathan was to free their land from the garrisons which the Philistines had in it; and they first begin to clear their own country of Benjamin. Geba; not the same place called Gibeah, ver. 2, (for if the place were the same, why should he vary the name of it in the same story, and in the next verse? nor is it likely that Jonathan would choose that place for his camp where the Philistines had a garrison,) but another place in the same tribe, in which there were two distinct places, Geba and Gibeah, Josh. xviii. 24, 28. Let the Hebrews hear, i. e. he sent messengers to tell them all what Jonathan had done, and how the Philistines were enraged at it, and made great preparations for war; and therefore what necessity there was of gathering themselves together, and coming to him, for his and their own defence.

4 And all Israel heard say that Saul had smitten a garrison of the Philistines, and that Israel also † was had in abomination with the Philistines. And the people were called together after Saul to Gilgal.

+ Heb. did stink. Gen. 34. 30. Exod. 5. 21.

Saul had smitten, i. e. Jonathan by Saul's direction and encouragement. The actions of an army are commonly ascribed to their general. Gilgal; the place before appointed by Samuel, chap. x. 8.

5 ¶ And the Philistines gathered themselves together to fight with Israel, thirty thousand chariots, and six thousand horsemen, and people as the sand which is on the sea shore in multitude:

and they came up, and pitched in Michmash, eastward from Beth-aven.

Thirty thousand chariots: this number seems incredible to infidels; to whom it may be sufficient to reply, that it is far more rational to acknowledge a mistake in him that copied out the sacred text in such numeral or historical passages, wherein the doctrine of faith and good life is not directly concerned, than upon such a pretence to question the truth and divinity of the Holy Scriptures, which are so fully attested, and evidently demonstrated. And the mistake is not great in the Hebrew, shalosh for schelishim; and so indeed those two ancient translators, the Syriac and Arabic, translate it, and are supposed to have read in their Hebrew copies, three thousand. Nor is it necessary that all these should be military chariots, but many of them might be put for carriage of things belonging to so great an army; for such a distinction of chariots we find Exod. xiv. 7. But there is no need of this reply. Chariots here may very well be put for the men that rode upon them, and fought out of them, by a figure called a metonymy of the subject for the adjunct, or the thing containing for the thing contained in it, than which none more frequent. In the very same manner, and by the very same figure, the basket is put for the meat in it, Deut. xxviii. 5, 17; the wilderness, for the wild beasts of the wilderness, Psal. xxix. 8; the nest, for the birds in it, Deut. xxxii. 11; the cup, for the drink in it, Jer. xlix. 12; 1 Cor. x. 21. And, to come more closely to the point, a horse is put for a horse-load of wares laid upon it, 1 Kings x. 28; and an ass of bread is put for an ass-load of bread, both in the Hebrew text of 1 Sam. xvi. 20, and in an ancient Greek poet. And, yet nearer, the word chariots is manifestly put either for the horses belonging to them, or rather for the men that fought out of them; as 2 Sam. x. 18, where it is said in the Hebrew that David slew seven hundred chariots; that is, seven thousand men which fought in chariots, as it is explained, 1 Chron. xix. 18; and 1 Kings xx. 21, where Ahab is said to smite horses and chariots; and 1 Chron. xviii. 4; Psal. lxxvi. 6, where the chariot and horse (i. e. the men that ride and fight in chariots, or upon horses) are said to be cast into a dead sleep; and Ezek. xxxix. 20, where it is said, Ye shall be filled at my table with horses and chariots. (i. e. with men belonging to the chariots; for surely the chariots of iron had been very improper food,) with mighty men, &c. And let any caviling infidel produce a wise reason why it may not, and ought not, to be so understood here also. Add to all this, that the Philistines were not alone in this expedition, but had the help of the Canaanites and the Tyrians, as is very credible, both from Eccles. xl. 20, and from the nature of the thing. If it be further inquired, Why the Philistines should raise so great an army at this time? the answer is obvious, That not only their old and formidable enemy Samuel was yet alive, but a new enemy was risen, even king Saul, who was lately confirmed in his kingdom, and had been flushed with his good success against the Ammonites, and was likely to grow more and more potent, if not timely prevented; and they thought that now the Israelitish affairs were come to some consistency, being put into the hands of a king; and therefore they thought fit, once for all, to put forth all their strength to suppress the Israelites, and to prevent that ruin which otherwise threatened them.

6 When the men of Israel saw that they were in a strait, (for the people were distressed,) then the people did hide themselves in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in high places, and in pits.

They were in a strait, notwithstanding their former presumption, that if they had a king they should be free from all such straits. And hereby God intended to teach them the vanity of all carnal confidence in men; and that they did not one jot less need the help and favour of God now than they did before, when they had no king. The people were distressed; they were not mistaken in their apprehensions of danger, as men oft are, for they were really in great danger, their enemy's host far exceeding theirs, both in number, and order, and courage, and arms. The people did hide themselves in caves; whereof there were divers in those parts for this very use, as we read in Josephus, and in the Holy Scripture.

7 And some of the Hebrews went over Jordan to the land of Gad and Gilead.

As for Saul, he was yet in Gilgal, and all the people † followed him trembling.

All the people, to wit, his whole army, opposed to the common people, ver. 6.

8 ¶ And he tarried seven days, according to the set time that Samuel had appointed: but Samuel came not to Gilgal; and the people were scattered from him.

Seven days; not seven complete days; for that the last day was not finished plainly appears from Samuel's reproof, which had then been groundless and absurd, and he had falsely charged Saul with breaking God's command therein, ver. 13. And as Samuel came on the seventh day, and that with intent to sacrifice; so doubtless he came in due time for that work, which was to be done before sun-setting, Exod. xxix. 38, 39. So Saul waited only six complete days, and part of the seventh, which is here called seven days; for the word day is oft used for a part of the day, as among lawyers, so also in sacred Scripture; as Matt. xii. 40, where Christ is said to be in the heart of the earth three days and three nights, i. e. one whole day, and part of the other two days. Moreover this place may be thus rendered: He tarried until the seventh day, (as this same phrase is used, Gen. vii. 10, Heb. until the seventh of the days;) (as the Hebrew lamed is oft taken,) the set time that Samuel had appointed.

9 And Saul said, Bring hither a burnt offering to me, and peace offerings. And he offered the burnt offering.

Either himself; or rather by the priest, as Solomon is said to offer, 1 Kings iii. 4. Compare 1 Sam. i. 3.

10 And it came to pass, that as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt offering, behold, Samuel came; and Saul went out to meet him, that he might † salute him.

Behold, Samuel came, i. e. it was told Saul, Behold, Samuel is coming. Salute him, i. e. congratulate his coming. This he did, partly out of custom; and partly, that by this testimony of his affection and respect to Samuel, he might prevent that rebuke which his guilty conscience made him expect.

11 ¶ And Samuel said, What hast thou done? And Saul said, Because I saw that the people were scattered from me, and that thou camest not within the days appointed, and that the Philistines gathered themselves together at Michmash;

What hast thou done? he suspected that Saul had transgressed, either by his dejected countenance, or some words uttered by him, though not here expressed; but he asks him, that he might be more fully and certainly informed, and that Saul might be brought to an ingenuous confession of his sin, and true repentance for it. Within the days appointed, i. e. when the seventh day was come, and a good part of it past; whence I concluded thou wouldst not come that day, and that thou hadst forgotten thy appointment, or been hindered by some extraordinary occasion.

12 Therefore said I, The Philistines will come down now upon me to Gilgal, and I have not † made supplication unto the LORD: I forced myself therefore, and offered a burnt offering.

I have not made supplication unto the Lord; hence it appears that sacrifices were accompanied with solemn prayers. I forced myself; I did it against my own mind and inclination. My conscience told me I should forbear it, and punctually obey God's command delivered to me by Samuel, but my necessity urged me to make haste.

13 And Samuel said to Saul, Thou hast done foolishly: 'thou hast not kept the commandment of the LORD thy God, † Heb. trembled after him.

† Heb. bless him.

which he commanded thee: for now would the LORD have established thy kingdom upon Israel for ever.

Thou hast done foolishly in that very thing wherein thou thinkest thou hast done wisely and politically, in disobeying my express command upon a pretended necessity, or reason of state. The Lord thy God; not only upon common grounds, as thou art his creature, and one of his people; but in a special manner, who hath conferred peculiar favours and honours upon thee; which is an aggravation of thy sin. Now would the Lord have established thy kingdom upon Israel for ever. Quest. How could this be true, when the kingdom was promised to Judah, Gen. xlix. 10, and consequently must necessarily be taken away from Saul, and from his tribe? Ans. First, The phrase for ever, in Scripture use, oftentimes signifies only a long time, as Gen. xliii. 9; Exod. xxi. 6; 1 Sam. xxviii. 2. So this had been abundantly verified, if the kingdom had been enjoyed by Saul, and by his son, and by his son's son; after whom the kingdom might have come to Judah. Secondly, Though the kingdom had been promised to Saul and to his posterity for ever in a larger sense, yet that was upon condition of his obedience. And therefore God might well promise the kingdom to Judah, because at that time, and before, he foresaw that Saul would by his disobedience forfeit that promise, and that he would take the forfeiture, and transfer the kingdom to Judah.

g ch. 15. 28. 14 ^h But now thy kingdom shall not continue: ^h the LORD hath sought him a man after his own heart, and the LORD hath commanded him to be captain over his people, because thou hast not kept that which the LORD commanded thee.

Hath sought, i. e. hath found or discovered, as men do by seeking; and anthropopathy. A man after his own heart, i. e. such a man as he desires, one who will fulfil all the desires of his heart, and not oppose them, as thou dost. Hath commanded, i. e. hath appointed or decreed, as the word command is sometimes used; for it was not yet actually done.

Because thou hast not kept that which the Lord commanded thee. Quest. First, What was Saul's sin? Ans. Either, first, That Saul invaded the priest's office, and offered the sacrifice himself; which is not probable, both because he had priests with him, and among others an eminent one, Ahiah, chap. xiv. 3, and therefore had no occasion nor pretence for that presumption. Or rather, secondly, That Saul did not wait the full time for Samuel's coming; for that is the thing which God commanded, chap. x. 8, and the breach of this command is the only thing for which Saul makes an apology, ver. 11, 12. Quest. Secondly, Why did God so severely punish Saul for so small an offence, and that occasioned by great necessity, and done with an honest intention? Ans. First, Men are very incompetent judges of God's judgments, because they see but very little, either of the majesty of the offended God, or of the heinous nature and aggravations of the offence. For instance, men see nothing but Saul's outward act, which seems small; but God saw with how wicked a mind and heart he did this; with what rebellion against the light of his own conscience, as his own words imply; with what gross infidelity and distrust of God's providence; with what contempt of God's authority, and justice, and many other wicked principles and motions of his heart, unknown to men. Besides, God clearly saw all that wickedness that yet lay hid in his heart, and foresaw all his other crimes; and therefore had far more grounds for his sentence against him than we can imagine. Secondly, God doth sometimes punish small sins severely, and that for divers weighty reasons, as that all men may see what the least sin deserves, and how much they owe to God's free and rich mercy for passing by their great offences; and what need they have not to indulge themselves in any small sin, as men are very prone to do, upon vain presumptions of God's mercy, whereby they are easily and commonly drawn on to heinous crimes; and for many other reasons: so that some such instances of God's severity are necessary discipline and caution to all mankind in the present and future ages; and therefore there is far more of mercy and kindness in such actions, than of rigour and harshness, since this is but particular to one person, and the other is a universal good. Thirdly, It must be remembered that the kingdom of Saul and of Israel was now in its infancy, and that this was the first command which he received from God. And it hath been ever held a piece of wisdom in all lawgivers, severely to punish the first violations of their laws, to secure their honour and obedience, and to affright and caution offenders for the future. And accordingly God dealt with Cain the first murderer; with Israel, for their first idolatry with the calf; with the first miscarriage of the priests, Lev. x. 1; with the first profaner of the sabbath, Numb. xv. 35; with the first gross hypocrites in the Christian church, Acts v. 5, 10. And therefore it is neither strange nor unjust if he deal with Saul after the same manner, and upon the same grounds. Fourthly, Though God threaten Saul with the loss of his kingdom for this sin, yet it is not improbable that there was a tacit condition implied, as is usual in such cases, as Jonah iii. 4, to wit, if he did not heartily repent of this and of all his sins; for the full, and final, and peremptory sentence of Saul's rejection is plainly ascribed to another cause, chap. xv. 11, 23, 26, 28, 29; and till that second offence neither the Spirit of the Lord departed from him, nor was David anointed in his stead, chap. xvi. 13, 14.

15 And Samuel arose, and gat him up from Gilgal unto Gibeah of Benjamin. And Saul numbered the people that were † present with him, 'about six hundred men. Unto Gibeah of Benjamin; whither Saul also followed him, as appears from the next verse; either because it was better fortified than Gilgal; or because he expected a greater increase of his army there, it being in his own tribe, and nearer the heart of his kingdom; or because he hoped for Samuel's assistance there.

16 And Saul, and Jonathan his son, and the people that were present with them, abode in † Gibeah of Benjamin: but the Philistines encamped in Mich-

Beth-horon; a city of Ephraim, Josh. xvi. 3, north-west from Michmash. The wilderness, i. e. the wilderness of Jordan, eastward.

19 ¶ Now ⁿ there was no smith found throughout all the land of Israel: for the Philistines said, Lest the Hebrews make them swords or spears:

n See 2 Kin. 24. 14. Jer. 24. 1.

This was a politic course of the Philistines, which also other nations have used. So the Chaldeans took away their smiths, 2 Kings xxiv. 14; Jer. xxiv. 1; xxix. 2; and Porsenna obliged the Romans by covenant, that they should use no iron but in the tillage of their lands.

20 But all the Israelites went down to the Philistines, to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his ax, and his mattock.

To the Philistines; not to the land of the Philistines, for it is not said so, and that was too remote; but to the stations and garrisons which the Philistines yet retained in several parts of Israel's land, though Samuel's authority had so far overawed them, that they durst not give the Israelites much disturbance. In these, therefore, the Philistines kept all the smiths, and here they allowed them the exercise of their art for the uses here following.

21 Yet they had † a file for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks, and for the axes, and † to sharpen the goads.

So the sense is, They allowed them some small helps to make their mattocks, and in some sort to serve their present use. But these words may be otherwise translated, and are so by some learned, both ancient and modern, translators: thus, Therefore the mouths or edges of the mattocks and coulters, &c. were dull or blunt. Or rather thus, When (Heb. And put for when, as the particle and is sometimes rendered, as Mark xv. 25) the mouths or edges of the mattocks, &c. were blunt. So this passage very well agrees both with the foregoing and following words; and the whole sense of the place is entirely thus, They went to the Philistines to sharpen their shares, and mattocks, and coulters, and axes, when they were blunt, and (which was more strange, they were forced to go to them even) to sharpen their goads.

22 So it came to pass in the day of battle, that ° there was neither sword nor spear found in the hand of any of the people that were with Saul and Jonathan: but with Saul and with Jonathan his son was there found.

Quest. How could the Israelites smite either the garrison of the Philistines, above, ver. 3, or the host of the Ammonites, chap. xi. 11, without arms? And when they had conquered them, why did they not take away their arms, and reserve them to their own use? Ans. 1. This want of swords and spears is not affirmed concerning all Israel, but is restrained unto those six hundred who were with Saul and Jonathan, whom God by his providence might suffer to be without those arms, that the glory of the following victory might be wholly ascribed to God; as for the very same reason God would have but three hundred men left with Gideon, and those armed only with trumpets, and pitchers, and lamps, Judg. vii. There were no doubt a considerable number of swords and spears among the Israelites, but they generally hid them, as now they did their persons, from the Philistines. And the Philistines had not yet attained to so great a power over them, as wholly to disarm them, but thought it sufficient to prevent the making of new arms, knowing that the old ones would shortly be decayed and useless. 2. There were other arms more common in those times and places than swords and spears, to wit, bows and arrows, and slings and stones; as appears from Judg. xx. 16; 2 Sam. i. 18, 22; 2 Kings iii. 25; 1 Chron. xii. 1, 2; besides clubs, and instruments of agriculture, which might easily be turned into weapons of war. 3. God so governed the affairs of the Israelites, that they had no great number of swords or spears, Judg. v. 8, that so they might be kept in more dependence upon and subjection unto God, wherein their safety and happiness consisted. And therefore that famous victory obtained against the Philistines in Samuel's days, was not got by the sword of men, but only by thunder from heaven, chap. vii. 10.

23 ^p And the || garrison of the Philistines went out to the passage of Michmash.

A place so called, because it was near to Michmash, and led towards Gibeah, which, it seems, they designed to besiege, and in the mean time to waste the adjoining country.

CHAP. XIV.

Jonathan and his armour-bearer secretly smite the Philistines' army; they slay one another, 1—15; which being perceived, 16, 17, Saul pursueth the Philistines, the captivated and hidden Israelites joining in the pursuit, 18—23. Saul adjureth the people not to eat any thing till evening: Jonathan eateth honey: the Philistines are smitten, 24—31. The people eat flesh with the blood: Saul restraineth them, and buildeth an altar, 32—35. Designing to pursue the Philistines by night, he consults God, who answers not:

he casts a lot to find out the cause: Jonathan is taken: Saul dooms him to die: the people rescue him, 36—45. Saul's wars, sons, daughters, wife, &c., 46—52.

NOW || it came to pass upon a day, that Jonathan the son of Saul said unto the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over to the Philistines' garrison, that is on the other side. But he told not his father.

This was a rash and foolish attempt, if it be examined by common rules; but not so, if we consider the singular promises made to the Israelites, that one should chase a thousand, &c., and especially the heroic and extraordinary motions which were then frequently put into the minds of gallant men by God's Spirit, whereby they undertook and accomplished noble and wonderful things; as did Samson, and David, and his worthies. On the other side; beyond that rocky passage described below, ver. 4, 13, which he pointed at with his hand. He told not his father, lest he should hinder him in so improbable an enterprise. Nor was it necessary he should inform him of it, because he had a commission from his father to fight when he saw occasion, as he had done without his father's privity, chap. xiii. 3.

2 And Saul tarried in the uttermost part of Gibeah under a pomegranate tree which is in Migron: and the people that were with him were ^a about six hundred men;

In the uttermost part of Gibeah; in the outworks of the city, where he had intrenched himself to observe the motion of the Philistines. In Migron, or towards (as the Hebrew beth is oft used) Migron, which was another place, but near Gibeah. See Isa. x. 28.

3 And ^b Ahiah, the son of Ahitub, ^c I-chabod's brother, the son of Phinehas, the son of Eli, the LORD's priest in Shiloh, ^d wearing an ephod. And the people knew not that Jonathan was gone.

Ahiah; the same who is called Ahimelech, 1 Sam. xxii. 9, 11, 20, the high priest, who was here to attend upon the ark, which was brought hither, ver. 18. An ephod, to wit, the high priest's ephod, wherein the Urim and Thummim was.

4 ¶ And between the passages, by which Jonathan sought to go over ^e unto the Philistines' garrison, there was a sharp rock on the one side, and a sharp rock on the other side: and the name of the one was Bozez, and the name of the other Seneh.

The passages; so these might be two known and common passages, both which Jonathan must cross, or pass over, to go to the Philistines, between which the following rocks lay. But the words may be rendered thus, In the middle (for so the Hebrew particle ben signifies, as Isa. xlv. 4; and beth, in, is understood by a very frequent ellipsis) of the passage; the plural number being put for the singular, as is frequent. A sharp rock on the one side, and on the other side; which is not so to be understood, as if in this passage one rock was on the right hand, and the other on the left; for so he should have gone between both; and there was no need of climbing up to them, which is mentioned below, ver. 13. But the meaning is, that the tooth (or prominence) of the one rock (as it is in the Hebrew) was on the one side, i. e. northward, looking towards Michmash, (the garrison of the Philistines,) and the tooth of the other rock was on the other side, i. e. southward, looking towards Gibeah, (where Saul's camp lay,) as the next verse informs us; and Jonathan was forced to climb over these two rocks, because the other and common ways from one town to the other might now be obstructed, or were not so fit for his present design.

northward over against Michmash, and the other southward over against Gibeah.

6 And Jonathan said to the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over unto the garrison of these uncircumcised: it may be that the LORD will work for us: for there is no restraint to the LORD ^r to save by many or by few.

^{11.} 1 Mac.
3. 18.

These uncircumcised; so he calls them, partly in contempt, and principally to strengthen his faith by this consideration, that his enemies were enemies to God, and without any hope in God, or help from him; whereas he was circumcised, and therefore in covenant with God, who was both able and engaged to assist his people. It may be; he speaks doubtfully; for though he found and felt himself stirred up by God to this exploit, and was assured that God would deliver his people, yet he was not certain that he would do it at this time, and in this way. The Lord will work, to wit, great and wonderful things. There is no restraint to the Lord; there is no person nor thing which can hinder God from thus doing.

7 And his armourbearer said unto him, Do all that is in thine heart: turn thee; behold, I am with thee according to thy heart.

Turn thee; march on to the enemies.

8 Then said Jonathan, Behold, we will pass over unto these men, and we will discover ourselves unto them.

9 If they say thus unto us, [†] Tarry until we come to you; then we will stand still in our place, and will not go up unto them.

10 But if they say thus, Come up unto us; then we will go up: for ^s the LORD hath delivered them into our hand: and ^h this shall be a sign unto us.

Jonathan not being assured of the success of this present exploit, desires a sign; and by the instinct of God's Spirit, as the success shows, pitched upon this. Divers such heretical motions and extraordinary impulses there were among great and good men in ancient times; as Gen. xxiv. 13; Judg. vi. 37; which are not precedents to us.

11 And both of them discovered themselves unto the garrison of the Philistines: and the Philistines said, Behold, the Hebrews come forth out of the holes where they had hid themselves.

Therefore Jonathan chose that rocky and unusual way, that the Philistines might suppose they did not come from Saul's camp to fight with them, but rather out of the caves and holes of the rocks, from which their necessity had now driven them.

12 And the men of the garrison answered Jonathan and his armourbearer, and said, Come up to us, and we will shew you a thing. And Jonathan said unto his armourbearer, Come up after me: for the LORD hath delivered them into the hand of Israel.

We will show you a thing; we having something of importance to communicate to you. A speech of contempt and derision. The Lord hath delivered them; he piously and modestly ascribes the success which he now foresees to God only.

13 And Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet, and his armourbearer after him: and they fell before Jonathan; and his armourbearer slew after him.

The Philistines could easily have hindered their ascent, but thought scorn to do it, not questioning but they could cut them off in a moment when they were come up to them according to their invitation.

Jonathan and his armourbearer being endowed with extraordinary strength and courage, and having with incredible boldness killed the first they met with, and so proceeding with success, it is not strange if the Philistines were both astonished and intimidated; God also struck them with a panic terror; and withal, infatuated their minds, and possibly put an evil spirit among them, which in this universal confusion made them conceive that there was treachery amongst themselves, and therefore caused them to sheath their swords in one another's bowels, as appears from ver. 16, 20.

14 And that first slaughter, which Jonathan and his armourbearer made, was about twenty men, within as it were ^{||} an half acre of land, which a yoke of ^{||} oxen might plow.

15 And ¹ there was trembling in the host, in the field, and among all the people: the garrison, and ^k the spoilers, they also trembled, and the earth quaked: so it was [†] a very great trembling.

Trembling; a great consternation; partly from this unexpected and prodigious slaughter, which made them suspect there was more than man in the case, and that the Lord (of whose infinite power they had had former experience) was come forth to fight against them; and partly from the Lord, who took away their spirits and strength, and struck them with fear and amazement. In the field, i. e. in the whole host, which was there in the field. Among all the people, i. e. among all the rest of their forces, as well those in the garrison (as it is here explained in the following words) at Michmash, as the spoilers, mentioned chap. xiii. 17; the report of this prodigy, and with it the terror of God, speedily passing from one to another. The earth quaked; either, 1. Metaphorically and hyperbolically, the whole land, i. e. the inhabitants of the land, to wit, of the Philistines, trembled. Or rather, 2. Properly, God sent an earthquake among them, which probably overthrew their tents and chariots, and destroyed many of their persons, and scattered the whole host, making them to flee away for their lives.

16 And the watchmen of Saul in Gibeah of Benjamin looked; and, behold, the multitude melted away, and they ^m went on beating down one another.

In Gibeah, or, in the hill, as the very same word is rendered, chap. xiii. 16, and that was the fittest place for watchmen. The multitude, to wit, of that numerous host of the Philistines. Melted away, i. e. were strangely and suddenly dispersed, and put to flight. Beating down one another; either, 1. Accidentally, through hasty flight; or, 2. With design to destroy one another, as the authors or abettors of the present calamity. Possibly God blinded their eyes or their minds, that they could not distinguish friends from foes. Compare Judg. vii. 22; 2 Kings vi. 18, &c.; 2 Chron. xx. 23.

17 Then said Saul unto the people that were with him, Number now, and see who is gone from us. And when they had numbered, behold, Jonathan and his armourbearer were not there.

Saul probably supposed that not only Jonathan, but also some considerable number of his army, was gone, and that by them that slaughter was made.

18 And Saul said unto Ahiah, Bring hither the ark of God. For the ark of God was at that time with the children of Israel.

That the priest may put on the ephod, and may inquire of the Lord before the ark what the occasion of this tumult among our enemies is, and what we shall do. With the children of Israel, to wit, in the camp, whither sometimes it was brought; as 1 Sam. iv. 5; and now the rather, partly because it was now in an unsettled condition, and without the tabernacle, and therefore easily removed from place to place; and partly because Saul thought to compensate Samuel's absence with the presence of the ark.

19 ¶ And it came to pass, while Saul ^{n Num. 27. 21. † Chr. tamall.} talked unto the priest, that the || noise that was in the host of the Philistines went on and increased: and Saul said unto the priest, Withdraw thine hand.

Trouble not thyself in putting on the breastplate, with the ephod, to inquire of God; for I now plainly discern the matter; the business calls not for prayer, but for action. But if it did so, there was the more need of God's direction and blessing, that they might act with more success. Herein therefore he shows his impatience in waiting upon God; his hypocrisy, in pretending to religion; and yet his profaneness, in neglecting and despising it.

20 And Saul and all the people that ^{+ Heb. were cried together.} were with him † assembled themselves, and they came to the battle: and, behold, ^{o Julg. 7. 22. 2 Chr. 20. 23.} every man's sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture.

The Philistines slew one another; which might come, either from mistake, of which see on ver. 16; or from mutual jealousies and passions, to which God could easily dispose them.

21 Moreover the Hebrews that were with the Philistines before that time, which went up with them into the camp from the country round about, even they also turned to be with the Israelites that were with Saul and Jonathan.

Which went up with them into the camp; either by constraint, as servants; or in policy, to gain their favour and protection.

22 Likewise all the men of Israel ^{p ch. 13. 6.} which ^p had hid themselves in mount Ephraim, when they heard that the Philistines fled, even they also followed hard after them in the battle.

23 ^{q Ex. 14. 30. Ps. 44. 6, 7. Hos. 1. 7. r ch. 13. 5.} So the LORD saved Israel that day: and the battle passed over ^r unto Bethaven.

The battle, i. e. the warriors who were engaged in the battle, and were pursuing and fighting with the Philistines.

24 ¶ And the men of Israel were distressed that day: for Saul had ^{s Josh. 6. 26.} ^a adjured the people, saying, Cursed be the man that eateth any food until evening, that I may be avenged on mine enemies. So none of the people tasted any food.

Were distressed, with hunger, and weakness, and faintness, thence arising; and all by reason of the following oath. As Saul's intention was good, namely, to execute vengeance upon God's and his enemies; so the matter of the obligation was not simply and in itself unlawful, if it had not been so rigorous in excluding all food, without any exception of cases of necessity; and in obliging the people to it under pain of a curse, and an accursed death, ver. 38, 39, 44, which was a punishment far exceeding the fault. None of the people tasted any food; partly in obedience to the king's command; and partly for fear of the curse.

25 ^{t Dent. 9. 28. Matt. 3. 5. u Ex. 3. 8. Num. 13. 27. Matt. 3. 4.} And all they of the land came to a wood; and there was ^u honey upon the ground.

All they of the land, Heb. all the land, i. e. the people of the land; as it is explained below, ver. 29; and so the word is taken Gen. xli. 57. All the Israelites who were with Saul.

26 And when the people were come into the wood, behold, the honey dropped; but no man put his hand to his mouth: for the people feared the oath.

The honey dropped. It hath been observed by many travellers and writers, that bees do oftentimes settle themselves, and make their hives and honey, in the trunks of trees, or clefts of rocks, or holes of the earth; and this in divers countries, but eminently in this of Canaan; as may be gathered from Deut. xxxii. 13; Psal. lxxxii. 16; whence it was called a land flowing with milk and honey.

27 But Jonathan heard not when his father charged the people with the oath: wherefore he put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipped it in an honeycomb, and put his hand to his mouth; and his eyes were enlightened.

Jonathan heard not, being then absent, and in pursuit of the Philistines, divers of the Israelites having joined themselves with him, ver. 21. His eyes were enlightened; he was refreshed, and recovered his lost spirits, whereof part went into his optic nerves, and so cleared his sight, which was much darkened by famine, as is usual.

28 Then answered one of the people, and said, Thy father straitly charged the people with an oath, saying, Cursed be the man that eateth any food this day. And the people were || faint.

One of the people, who came along with Saul, whose forces were now united with Jonathan's. ^{ii Or, weary.}

29 Then said Jonathan, My father hath troubled the land: see, I pray you, how mine eyes have been enlightened, because I tasted a little of this honey.

The land, i. e. the people of the land, the whole army, whom by this rash oath he hath greatly injured. The zeal of defending himself makes him run into the other extreme of accusing his father, and that before the people, whom by this means he might have stirred up to a sedition.

30 How much more, if haply the people had eaten freely to day of the spoil of their enemies which they found? for had there not been now a much greater slaughter among the Philistines?

31 And they smote the Philistines that day from Michmash to Ajjalon: and the people were very faint.

Ajjalon; either that in Dan, Josh. xix. 42; or rather, that in Judah, 2 Chron. xi. 10.

32 And the people flew upon the spoil, and took sheep, and oxen, and calves, and slew them on the ground: and the people did eat them ^{x Lev. 3. 17. & 7. 22. & 17. 10. & 19. 26. Deut. 12. 16. 23. 24.} with the blood.

The people flew upon the spoil, to wit, at evening, when the time prefixed by Saul was expired. With the blood; not having patience to tarry till the blood was perfectly gone out of them, as they should have done. See Gen. ix. 4; Lev. xvii. 14; Deut. xii. 16. So they who seemed to make conscience of the king's commandment for fear of the curse, make no scruple of transgressing God's command.

33 ¶ Then they told Saul, saying, Behold, the people sin against the LORD, in that they eat with the blood. And he said, Ye have || transgressed: roll a great stone unto me this day. ^{§ Or, dealt treacherously.}

He sees their fault, but not his own, in giving the occasion to it. Roll a great stone unto me; that the cattle might be all killed in one place, under the inspection of Saul, or some other appointed by him for that work; and upon the stone, that the blood may sooner and better flow out.

34 And Saul said, Disperse yourselves among the people, and say unto them, Bring me hither every man his ox, and every man his sheep, and slay them here, and eat; and sin not against the LORD in eating with the blood. And all the people brought every man his ox † with him that night, and slew them there. ^{+ Heb. in his hand.}

And his sheep, which is to be understood out of the foregoing words.

35 And Saul ^{y ch. 7. 17.} built an altar unto the ^{+ Heb.} LORD : † the same was the first altar that he built unto the LORD.

Either for a monument of the victory; or rather, for sacrifice, as the next words imply. The same was the first altar, though he had occasion to do so oft ere this time. So this is noted as another evidence of his neglect of God and his worship. It is true, Saul sacrificed before this, as at Gilgal; but that was upon an old altar, erected by others.

36 ¶ And Saul said, Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light, and let us not leave a man of them. And they said, Do whatsoever seemeth good unto thee. Then said the priest, Let us draw near hither unto God.

Remembering Saul's contempt of God's ordinance the last time, and the ill consequence of it; and perceiving Saul ready to run into the same error again, even though he had not now the same pretence of the necessity of haste as before, and that the people were forward to comply with the motion; he gives them this pious and prudent advice. Hither unto God, to wit, to the ark, as above, ver. 18.

37 And Saul asked counsel of God, Shall I go down after the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into the hand of Israel? But ²he answered him not that day.

Either, 1. Because he was displeased with Saul for his former neglect, ver. 18, 19, where he began to ask advice of God, but was so rude and impious as not to tarry for an answer; and therefore it was but a just retaliation, if when Saul did ask, God would not vouchsafe him an answer. Or, 2. To manifest his dislike of the violation of oaths. For although Jonathan might have a fair excuse from his invincible ignorance and urgent necessity; and though Saul had done foolishly in making this oath (which also God would this way discover); yet when once it was made, God would hereby teach them that it should be observed, and that they should abstain even from all appearance of the breach of it.

38 And Saul said, ^aDraw ye near hither, all the † chief of the people: and know and see wherein this sin hath been this day.

All the chief of the people; in the name of all the people, that you may be witnesses, and may see where the fault lies.

39 For, ^bas the LORD liveth, which saveth Israel, though it be in Jonathan my son, he shall surely die. But there was not a man among all the people that answered him.

None of those who either saw Jonathan eating, or heard of it, informed against him; partly because they were satisfied that his ignorance excused him, and that there was some other reason of God's not answering; and partly from their great love to Jonathan, whom they would not expose to death for so small an offence.

40 Then said he unto all Israel, Be ye on one side, and I and Jonathan my son will be on the other side. And the people said unto Saul, Do what seemeth good unto thee.

41 Therefore Saul said unto the LORD God of Israel, ¶ Give a perfect lot. ^dAnd Saul and Jonathan were taken: but the people † escaped.

Give a perfect lot, or declare (for giving is oft put for declaring or pronouncing, as Deut. xi. 29; xiii. 1, 2; Prov. ix. 9,) the perfect or guiltless person; i. e. O Lord, so guide the lot, that it may discover who is guilty in this matter, and that it may clear the innocent. The people escaped, to wit, the danger; they were pronounced guiltless.

42 And Saul said, Cast lots between me and Jonathan my son. And Jonathan was taken.

God so ordered the lot; not that he approved Saul's execution, ver. 24, or his oath that the transgressor should die, ver. 39, nor that he would expose Jonathan to death; (for he designed so to rule the hearts of the people, and of Saul also, that Jonathan should not die;) but because he would have the whole matter brought to light; partly, that Saul's folly might be chastised, when he saw what danger it had brought upon his eldest and excellent son; partly, that Jonathan's innocency might be cleared; and partly, to stablish the authority of kings and rulers, and the obedience which subjects owe to all their lawful commands.

43 Then Saul said to Jonathan, ^eTell me what thou hast done. And Jonathan told him, and said, 'I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in mine hand, and, lo, I must die.

I am sentenced to death for it; which is hard measure. He had another answer, that he knew not of his father's command; but that being said before, ver. 27, it was needless here to repeat it.

44 And Saul answered, ^gGod do so and more also: ^hfor thou shalt surely die, Jonathan.

From this and other like expressions of Saul's, some gather that he was exceeding prone to the vice of swearing and cursing. Thou shalt surely die: strange perverseness! He who was so indulgent as to spare wicked Agag, chap. xv., is now so severe as to destroy his own worthy son: he that could easily dispense with God's righteous and reasonable command, will not bear the violation of his own rash and foolish command; because his own authority and power is concerned in this, and only God's in the other.

45 And the people said unto Saul, Shall Jonathan die, who hath wrought this great salvation in Israel? God forbid: ⁱas the LORD liveth, there shall not one hair of his head fall to the ground; for he hath wrought with God this day. So the people rescued Jonathan, that he died not.

With God, i. e. in concurrence with God, or by God's help he had wrought this salvation. God is so far from being offended with Jonathan, as thou apprehendest, that he hath graciously owned and assisted him in the great service of this day.

46 Then Saul went up from following the Philistines: and the Philistines went to their own place.

Saul went up from following the Philistines; partly because he was discouraged by God's refusing to answer him; and partly because his delays had given them occasion to secure themselves.

47 ¶ So Saul took the kingdom over Israel, and fought against all his enemies on every side, against Moab, and against the children of ^kAmmon, and against Edom, and against the kings of ^lZobah, and against the Philistines: and whithersoever he turned himself, he vexed them.

Took the kingdom, i. e. recovered it, and resumed the administration of it, after he had in a manner lost it, partly by Samuel's sentence, chap. xiii. 14, and partly by the Philistines, who had almost turned him out of it. But now, being encouraged by this success, he returns to the exercise of his kingly office. Zobah lay not far from Damascus. See 2 Sam. viii. 5. He vexed them, Heb. he condemned them, he treated them like wicked people, and enemies to God and his people; or, he punished them.

48 And he gathered an host, and smote the Amalekites, and delivered Israel out of the hands of them that spoiled them.

^{+ Heb.} that altar he began to build unto the LORD.

CHAP. XV.

Samuel sendeth Saul to destroy the Amalekites: his army, 1—5. He favoureth the Kenites; spareth Agag, and the best of the spoil: God rejects Saul from being king, 6—11. This Samuel declares to Saul; he commendeth, excuseth, at last humbleth himself, 12—25. Samuel is unmoved herewith; his mantle rent is a sign to Saul of his ruin: God cannot lie, 26—29. Samuel killeth Agag; goeth from Saul, and mourneth for him, 30—35.

SAMUEL also said unto Saul, ^aThe LORD sent me to anoint thee to be king over his people, over Israel: now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the LORD.

The Lord made thee king, and therefore thou art highly obliged to serve and obey him. Thou hast committed one error already, for which God hath severely rebuked and threatened; now therefore make amends for thy former error, and regain God's favour by thy exact obedience to what he now commands.

I seem to have forgotten, but now I will show that I remember, and now will revenge, those old injuries done four hundred years ago, which now I will punish in their children; which was the more just, because they continued in their parents' cruel practices, below, ver. 33. In the way when he came up from Egypt; when he was newly come out of cruel and long bondage, and was now weak, and weary, and faint, and hungry, Deut. xxv. 18; and therefore it was barbarous and inhuman, instead of that pity which even nature prompted them to afford, to add affliction to the afflicted; it was also horrid impiety to fight against God himself, and to lift up their hand in a manner against the Lord's throne, as some translate these words, Exod. xvii. 16, whilst they struck at that people which God had brought forth in so stupendous and miraculous a way.

3 Now go and smite Amalek, and ^cutterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass.

The same thing repeated to prevent mistake, and oblige Saul to the exact performance hereof; or, to leave him without excuse, in case of neglect. Infant and suckling; for their parents' crime and punishment; which was not unjust, because God is the supreme Lord and giver of life, and can require his own when he pleaseth; infants also are born in sin, Psal. li. 5, and therefore liable to God's wrath, Eph. ii. 3, and to death, Rom. v. 12, 14. Their death also was rather a mercy than a curse to them, as being the occasion of preventing the vast increase of their sin and punishment. Ox and sheep, camel and ass; which being all made for man's benefit, it is not strange nor unjust if they suffer with him, and for him, and for the instruction of mankind.

4 And Saul gathered the people together, and numbered them in Telaim, two hundred thousand footmen, and ten thousand men of Judah.

Who are particularly noted here, as also chap. xi. 8, either as select persons of extraordinary strength and courage; or to commend that tribe, which, though the kingdom had been promised to their own tribe, yet were forward in serving and obeying a king of another, and that a far meaner tribe.

5 And Saul came to a city of Amalek, and ^{||}laid wait in the valley.

A city of Amalek; their chief city, where their king was, as is probable from ver. 8. Laid wait, intending to draw them forth of their city by some pretence, like that of Joshua, Josh. vii., and then to intercept them, and so surprise their city: which haply they did, though it be not here recorded, it being not worth while to mention all the minute circumstances of such matters.

6 ¶ And Saul said unto ^dthe Kenites, ^eGo, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, lest I destroy you with them: for ^fye shewed kindness to all the children of Israel, when they came up out of Egypt. So the Kenites departed from among the Amalekites.

the oxen, and || of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them: but every thing that was vile and refuse, that they destroyed utterly.

Saul and the people; the one proposed to do so, and the other consented to it, and so both were guilty. All that was good; which it is more than probable they reserved for their own use, rather than for sacrifice, because they knew God would not accept a sacrifice contrary to his own command. Thus they obey God only so far as they could without inconvenience to themselves; they destroyed only what was not worth keeping, nor fit for their use.

10 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Samuel, saying,

11 ¶ It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king: for he is turned back from following me, and hath not performed my commandments. And it grieved Samuel; and he cried unto the LORD all night.

It repenteth me: repentance properly notes grief of heart, and change of counsels, and therefore cannot be in God, who is unchangeable, most wise, and most blessed; but it is ascribed to God in such cases, when men give God cause to repent, and when God alters his course and method of dealing, and treats a person as if he did indeed repent of all the kindness he had showed to him. He cried unto the LORD all night, to implore his pardoning mercy for Saul, and for the people; so far was he from rejoicing in their calamities, as an envious and self-seeking person would have done.

12 And when Samuel rose early to meet Saul in the morning, it was told Samuel, saying, Saul came to Carmel, and, behold, he set him up a place, and is gone about, and passed on, and gone down to Gilgal.

Carmel; not Mount Carmel, of which Josh. xii. 22, but another mountain or town in the tribe of Judah, of which see Josh. xv. 55. A place, i. e. a monument or trophy of his victory, as the same Hebrew word is used, 2 Sam. xviii. 18. And this may be here noted by way of censure, that he set it up not to God's honour, but to himself, i. e. to his own praise; which he minded in the first place, and afterwards went to Gilgal, as it here follows, to offer sacrifice to God.

13 And Samuel came to Saul: and Saul said unto him, Blessed be thou of the LORD: I have performed the commandment of the LORD.

Blessed be thou of the LORD; I thank thee, and I beg that God would bless thee, for sending me upon this employment, and giving me this opportunity of manifesting my obedience to God. I have performed the commandment of the LORD, to wit, for the main and substance of it, to wit, the extirpation of that wicked people; for he thought the sparing of Agag and the cattle very inconsiderable in the case, though indeed it was expressly contrary to God's command; but self-interest made him exceeding partial in his own cause: or else, like a bold hypocrite, he pretends that for his part he had obeyed God; resolving, it seems, to cast the blame upon the people, as he did.

14 And Samuel said, What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?

How can this evidence of guilt consist with the profession of thy innocency?

15 And Saul said, They have brought them from the Amalekites: for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed.

They, i. e. the people. Thus, after the manner of all hypocrites, he excuseth himself, and lays the blame upon the people; whereas they could not do it without his privy and consent; and he should have used his power and authority to overrule them for God's sake, as he had done formerly for his own sake. But the truth is, he was zealous for his own honour and interest, but lukewarm where God only was concerned. To sacrifice unto the LORD: it is not likely that this was his and the people's design; but this he now pretends, and ascribes that to his piety, which was indeed the effect of his impiety and avarice. Thy God, whom thou lovest and servest, and therefore must needs be pleased with our pious respect to him and his service.

16 Then Samuel said unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what the LORD hath said to me this night. And he said unto him, Say on.

17 And Samuel said, When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the LORD anointed thee king over Israel?

Little in thine own sight, i. e. modest, humble, and submissive, as 1 Sam. ix. 21; x. 22; whereby he implies that now he was grown proud, and stubborn, and impudent, both to commit sin and justify it.

18 And the LORD sent thee on a journey, and said, Go and utterly destroy the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until they be consumed.

The sinners; so called by way of eminency, as that word is used, Gen. xiii. 13; Matt. ix. 10; John ix. 24, 31.

19 Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the LORD, but didst fly upon the spoil, and didst evil in the sight of the LORD?

Who cannot be deceived by thy fair professions of religion, but knows very well that thou didst not seek sacrifices for God, but prey for thyself.

20 And Saul said unto Samuel, Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the LORD, and have gone the way which the LORD sent me, and have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites.

He addeth obstinacy and impenitency to his crime, and justifies his fact, though he hath nothing of any moment to say but what he said before. So he gives Samuel the lie, and reflects upon him as one that had falsely accused him. Have brought Agag, to be dealt with as God pleaseth, and as thou thinkest fit.

21 But the people took of the spoil, which should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the LORD thy God in Gilgal.

Heb. the chief of the devoted things; which being devoted to destruction, I thought it most proper to destroy them by way of sacrifice to God. But God had commanded Saul himself to smite and slay all upon the place, above, ver. 3.

22 And Samuel said, Hath the LORD as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the LORD? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams.

To obey is better than sacrifice, because obedience to God is a moral duty, constantly and indispensably necessary; but sacrifice is but a ceremonial institution, sometimes unnecessary, as it was in the wilderness; and sometimes sinful, when it is offered by a polluted hand, or in an irregular manner; therefore thy gross disobedience to God's express command is not to be compensated with sacrifice. To hearken, i. e. to obey, as hearing is oft used in Scripture. Than the fat of rams; than the choicest part of all the sacrifice, to wit, the fat, which was appropriated to God, Lev. iii. 16; whereas the offerer might partake of other parts of it.

[†] Heb. dimination. Deut. 18. 10. 23 For rebellion is as the sin of [†]witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, ^bhe hath also rejected thee from being king.

Rebellion, i. e. disobedience to God's express precept, which was Saul's case. Is as the sin of witchcraft; is, though not so great, yet as inexcusable and impudent a sin as witchcraft; as plainly condemned, and as certainly destructive and damnable. Stubbornness; either wilful and presumptuous sin, whereby a man violently breaks loose from God's command, and resists his authority; or rather, perseverance or contumacy in sin, justifying it, and pleading for it, which was Saul's present crime. Is as iniquity and idolatry, or, the iniquity of idolatry; this being an hendiadis; as judgment and justice, Deut. xvi. 18, is put for the judgment of justice, or just judgment. Or, idolatry, (for so the Hebrew word aven signifies, as Jer. x. 15; Hos. iv. 15; x. 5, compared with 1 Kings xii. 29,) even the teraphim, which is here mentioned as one of the worst kinds of idolatry. Hath also rejected thee from being king, i. e. hath pronounced the sentence of rejection; for that he was not actually rejected or deposed by God plainly appears, because not only the people, but even David, after this, owned him as king; and Samuel, at Saul's desire, did honour him, i. e. own him as king, before the people, ver. 30.

^c See 2 Sam. 12. 13. 24 ¶ ^e And Saul said unto Samuel, I have sinned: for I have transgressed the commandment of the LORD, and thy words: because I ^dfeared the people, and obeyed their voice.

^d Ex. 23. 2. Prov. 29. 25. Is. 51. 12, 13. I have sinned; which confession proceeded not from true repentance, but from the sense of his great danger, and from a desire of recalling that dreadful sentence denounced against him. The commandment of the Lord, and thy words, i. e. the commandment of the Lord delivered to me by thy words; another hendiadis. I feared the people; who, as thou knowest, are set upon mischief, and would probably have broken forth into a mutiny or rebellion, had I done otherwise. But how little he feared the people, may be seen by 1 Sam. xi. 7; xiv. 24. But this was a false cause; nor doth he acknowledge the true cause, which was his covetousness, and because he did not fear God.

25 Now therefore, I pray thee, pardon my sin, and turn again with me, that I may worship the LORD.

Pardon my sin; use thy great interest with God to obtain the pardon of my sin. Or, do thou pardon my sin against thee; for he had sinned not only against God, but against Samuel also, as God's prophet; and therefore needed a pardon both from God and man. And turn again with me, to Gilgal, whence Saul was gone forth to meet Samuel; and Samuel is here said to turn again to Gilgal, not properly, for he had not now been there; but by way of concomitancy, because he accompanied Saul, who was come thence, and returned thither: see the like expression Ruth i. 10, 22; ii. 6. That I may worship the Lord; that I may offer further sacrifices to God; partly to praise him for the past victory; and partly to implore his mercy, and the taking off of my sin and punishment. This was a politic device of Saul's, that Samuel might at least seem to countenance his design, in reserving the cattle for sacrifice; which Samuel seeing, refused to do it. Heb. and I will worship the Lord, i. e. I will seek his pardon and favour.

^e See ch. 2. 30. 26 And Samuel said unto Saul, I will not return with thee: ^efor thou hast rejected the word of the LORD, and the LORD hath rejected thee from being king over Israel.

I will not return with thee: this was no lie, though he afterwards returned, because he spoke what he meant; his words and intentions agreed together, though afterwards he saw reason to change his intentions: compare Gen. xix. 2, 3: which may relieve many perplexed consciences, who think themselves obliged to do what they have said they would do, though they see just cause to change their minds.

27 And as Samuel turned about to go away, 'he laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent.

28 And Samuel said unto him, ^eThe LORD hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbour of thine, that is better than thou.

Samuel makes use of the emergent occasion, as a sign, to signify and confirm his former prediction. A neighbour of thine; either another man, or another Israelite; for the word neighbour is used both ways; or rather, one of the neighbouring tribe, even Judah, whose inheritance did not only join to that of Benjamin, but was partly mixed with it.

29 And also the Strength of Israel ^fwill not lie nor repent: for he is not a man, that he should repent.

He calls God the Strength of Israel; partly, to show the reason why God neither will nor can lie; because lying is a weakness, and proceeds from the sense of a man's weakness, because he cannot many times accomplish his design without lying and dissimulation; which therefore many princes have used for this very reason. But, saith he, God needs no such artifices; he can do whatsoever he pleaseth by his absolute power, and hath no need to use lies to accomplish his will. Partly, to show that Israel should be no loser by Saul's loss, as he might vainly imagine, because he had saved them from their enemies on every side, chap. xiv. 47. For not Saul, but God, was the Strength and Protector of Israel, and he would continue to save them when Saul was lost and gone. And partly, to assure Saul that God would execute this threatening, because he wanted not strength to do it, and none could hinder him in it. Nor repent, i. e. nor change his counsel; which also is an effect of weakness and imperfection, either of wisdom or power.

30 Then he said, I have sinned: yet ⁱhonour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel, and turn again with me, that I may worship the LORD thy God.

Here he plainly discovers his hypocrisy, and the true motive of this and his former confession; he was not solicitous for the favour of God, but for his honour and power with Israel.

31 So Samuel turned again after Saul; and Saul worshipped the LORD.

Samuel turned again after Saul; not to worship the Lord with him, for that he did not; and therefore it is here mentioned that Saul only worshipped the Lord; but for two other reasons: first, That people might not upon pretence of this sentence of rejection immediately withdraw all respect and obedience to their sovereign; whereby they would both have sinned against God, and have been as sheep without a shepherd. Secondly, That he might rectify Saul's error, and execute God's judgment upon Agag.

32 ¶ Then said Samuel, Bring ye hither to me Agag the king of the Amalekites. And Agag came unto him delicately. And Agag said, Surely the bitterness of death is past.

Delicately, or in delights, or in his ornaments, i. e. he came not like an offender, expecting the sentence of death, but in that garb and gesture which became his quality. And Agag said, or, for Agag said; this being the reason why he came so. The bitterness of death is past: I who have escaped death from the hands of a warlike prince in the fury of battle, shall certainly never suffer death from an old prophet in time of peace.

33 And Samuel said, ^kAs thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the LORD in Gilgal.

Thy sword hath made women childless; whereby it appears that he was a cruel tyrant, and guilty of many bloody actions, and that towards God's people, though it be not related elsewhere. And this seems to be added for the fuller vindication of God's justice, and to show, that although God did at this time remember and revenge a crime committed by this man's ancestors four hundred years ago, yet he did not punish an innocent son for his father's crimes, but one that allowed and persisted in the same evil courses. Samuel hewed Agag in pieces by Divine instinct, and in pursuance of God's express and particular command, above, ver. 3, which being sinfully neglected by Saul, is now executed by Samuel. See the like example 1 Kings xviii. 40. But these are no precedents for private persons to take the sword of justice into their hands; for we must live by the laws of God, and not by extraordinary examples. Before the Lord; either before the ark, which, it seems, Saul carried with him in this, as he did in his former expedition, chap. xiv. 18; or before God's altar; or in the public assembly.

34 ¶ Then Samuel went to Ramah; and Saul went up to his house to ¹Gibeah of Saul.

35 And ^mSamuel came no more to see Saul until the day of his death: nevertheless Samuel ⁿmourned for Saul: and the LORD ^orepented that he had made Saul king over Israel.

To see Saul, i. e. to visit him, either in token of respect or friendship; or to seek counsel from God for him, or to give counsel to him. Seeing is put for visiting here, and 2 Kings viii. 29. Otherwise he did see him afterwards, chap. xix. 24. Though indeed it was not Samuel that came thither with design to see Saul, which is implied in the phrase here; but Saul went thither to see Samuel, and that accidentally. Samuel mourned for Saul; partly for Saul's sake, whose sad condition he lamented; and partly for Israel's sake, whose estate he feared might by this means be doubtful and dangerous.

CHAP. XVI.

Samuel is sent by God; who, under pretence of a sacrifice for fear of Saul, cometh to Bethlehem; sanctifieth Jesse and his sons, 1—5. His human judgment in choosing Eliab the eldest son is reproved, 6, 7. God had chosen David the youngest to be king in Saul's place, 8—12. Samuel anointeth him, and the Spirit of God cometh upon him; but departeth from Saul, and an evil spirit cometh upon him, 13, 14. He sends for David to quiet it: his praise: Saul loveth him, and maketh him his armour-bearer: he playeth before Saul when the evil spirit disquieted him, 15—23.

AND the LORD said unto Samuel, ^aHow long wilt thou mourn for Saul, seeing ^bI have rejected him from reigning over Israel? ^cfill thine horn with oil, and go, I will send thee to Jesse the Beth-lehemite: for ^dI have provided me a king among his sons.

How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, and pray for his restitution? which the following words imply that he did. I have rejected him from reigning over Israel: the manifestation of my peremptory will should make thee submit to my pleasure. Fill thine horn with oil; which was used in the inauguration of kings, as chap. x. 1; 1 Kings i. 39. But here it is used in the designation of a king, though David was not actually made king by it, but still remained a subject, as is evident from chap. xxiv. 6. And the reason of this anticipation was, partly the comfort of Samuel, and other good men, against their great fears in case of Saul's death, of which they expected every day to hear; and partly the assurance of David's title, which otherwise would have been very doubtful. For the prevention of which doubts, it was very meet that the same person and prophet who had anointed Saul, might now, upon God's rejection of Saul, anoint David to succeed him upon his death; and because Samuel was now not far from his death, and was to die before Saul, it was fit that David's anointing should be hastened and done before its proper time. I have provided me a king: this phrase is very emphatical, and implies the difference between this and the former king. Saul was a king of the people's providing, he was the product of their inordinate and sinful desires; they desired him for themselves, and for their own glory and safety, as they supposed; but this is a king of my own providing, one that I have spied out, one of that tribe to which I have allotted the kingdom, Gen. xlix. 10. A king for me; not one to gratify the people's desires, but to fulfil all my will, as is said, Acts xiii. 22, and to serve my glory. Or, my king; the Hebrew phrase, to me, or for me, being commonly used for the word mine.

2 And Samuel said, How can I go? if Saul hear it, he will kill me. And the LORD said, Take an heifer [†]with thee, and say, ^eI am come to sacrifice to the LORD.

How can I go, to wit, safely? a question which seems to savour of human frailty; for he should have strongly believed that God, who had set him upon the work, would carry him through it. I am come to sacrifice to the Lord; which he used oft to do, sometimes in one place, and sometimes in another, that so he might encourage and keep up the worship of God in all of them. This was one cause, though not the only cause, of his coming; nor was he obliged to declare all the causes of it.

3 And call Jesse to the sacrifice, and ^fI will shew thee what thou shalt do: and ^gthou shalt anoint unto me him whom I name unto thee.

Call Jesse to the sacrifice, i. e. invite him to the feast, which, after the manner, was made of the flesh of the sacrifice; and it belonged to Samuel, as the offerer of the sacrifice, to invite whom he pleased. Whom I name, i. e. whom I shall describe, as it were, by name.

4 And Samuel did that which the LORD spake, and came to Beth-lehem. And the elders of the town ^htrembled at his [†]coming, and said, ⁱComest thou peaceably?

The elders of the town trembled at his coming; partly because it was strange and unexpected to them, this being but an obscure town, Micah v. 2, and remote from Samuel, and therefore they justly thought there was some extraordinary reason for it; and their guilty consciences made them fear that he came to denounce some dreadful and particular judgment of God upon them; and partly lest Saul, whose heart was estranged from and incensed against Samuel, should upon this occasion conceive a jealousy of them, and a displeasure against them. Peaceably, Heb. in or with peace; either, first, To thyself. Comest thou voluntarily, or to flee from the rage of Saul? Or, secondly, To us. Comest thou with no evil tidings to us, either from God or from Saul? The Hebrew phrase, Comest thou in peace? being as much as to say, (in our phrase,) Is all well?

5 And he said, Peaceably: I am come to sacrifice unto the LORD: ^ksanctify yourselves, and come with me to the sacrifice. And he sanctified Jesse and his sons, and called them to the sacrifice.

Sanctify yourselves; prepare yourselves in the manner expressed, Exod. xix. 14, 15. To the sacrifice, Heb. in the sacrifice, i. e. join with me in this act of worshipping God, and offering this sacrifice, thereby to give thanks for the blessings you have received from him, and to pray for what you want. It seems evident that there was something peculiar in Jesse's invitation. For, first, Both he and his sons were invited, whereas the others are only invited for their own persons. Secondly, The different phrase here used, that he sanctified these, when he only bade the other sanctify themselves, argues a singular care and agency of Samuel in their sanctification; (unless we should say, He sanctified them, is no more but that he caused them to be sanctified; that is, these in particular amongst others;) which makes it probable that the rest were only to join with him in the act of sacrificing; but these, and only these, were invited to feast upon the remainders of the sacrifice; and which feast is here called a sacrifice, as it is above, ver. 3. And the only inconvenience of this interpretation is, that the word sacrifice is taken in different senses in the same verse, which is no unusual thing. See Matt. viii. 22. And this difference may possibly be intimated by the differing prepositions prefixed to the same word, the first being bazzabach, and the latter lazzabach. Howsoever, that only Jesse and his sons were present at the feast may seem probable, from Samuel's design of privacy, and from the following relation.

6 ¶ And it came to pass, when they were come, that he looked on ¹ Eliab, and ^m said, Surely the LORD's anointed is before him.

When they were come; when the most of Jesse's sons were come, either to the place of the feast, or to some other place near it, appointed for this private discourse, whither they were to come before they went to the feast. It must also be understood that Samuel had acquainted Jesse with his design, which is easily gathered out of the context, and needed not be expressed. Is before him, i. e. is in this place where God is now present. For it is observable, that not only the sacrifice is said to be offered, but even the feast upon the remainders of it is said to be eaten, before the Lord, Deut. xii. 7, i. e. before or near his altar, where God was present in a special manner. And the ground of this expression seems to be this, that Jesse brought not all his sons together, but made one after another to come to the place, and to pass before Samuel, who stood before the Lord, in some place near the altar, that this great business might be managed with more solemnity. And Eliab being the person now before Samuel, is said to be now before the Lord. But whatsoever the ground of this phrase is, this is certain and confessed, that this is his meaning, This I take to be the person whom I am sent to anoint; wherein yet he was greatly mistaken, as other prophets sometimes were, when they hastily spake their own thoughts, before they had consulted God in the case, as 2 Sam. vii. 3.

7 But the LORD said unto Samuel, Look not on ⁿ his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because I have refused him: ^o for the LORD seeth not as man seeth; for man ^p looketh on the ^q outward appearance, but the LORD looketh on the ^r heart.

The Lord spake by secret inspiration. The height of his stature; whereby thou wast once deceived in Saul, chap. x. 23, 24, and therefore shouldst not now be deceived a second time. Man looketh on the outward appearance; men value men by their outsides. The Lord looketh on the heart; God esteems of men by the goodness of their hearts, and hath now proceeded by that rule in the choice of a king, and would have done so before, if the people's sinful desires had not provoked him to give them a bad king.

8 Then Jesse called ^s Abinadab, and made him pass before Samuel. And he said, Neither hath the LORD chosen this.

9 Then Jesse made ^t Shammah to pass by. And he said, Neither hath the LORD chosen this.

Shammah, called also Shimeah, 2 Sam. xiii. 3, and Shimma, 1 Chron. ii. 13.

10 Again, Jesse made seven of his sons to pass before Samuel. And Samuel said unto Jesse, The LORD hath not chosen these.

Seven of his sons, i. e. the rest of his sons, which were seven, besides David; for in all he had eight, 1 Sam. xvii. 12. It is true, there are but seven of them named 1 Chron.

ii. 13—15, but that may be because one of them was either born of a concubine, or an obscure person; or one that died immediately after this time.

11 And Samuel said unto Jesse, Are here all thy children? And he said, There remaineth yet the youngest, and, behold, he keepeth the sheep. And Samuel said unto Jesse, Send and fetch him: for we will not sit ^u down till he come hither.

He keepeth the sheep; and consequently is the most unfit of all my sons for that high employment. Either therefore he did not thoroughly understand David's great wisdom and valour, or he judgeth him unfit, by reason of his mean education. And God so ordered it by his providence, that David's choice might plainly appear to be God's work, and not Samuel's or Jesse's design. We will not sit down, to wit, to the feast. Quest. How could David be admitted to this feast, being, as it seems, not sanctified with the rest of his brethren? Ans. 1. It is not strange if the prophet, by God's direction, dispensed with the ordinary rule, in a person so extraordinary, both for his piety and the dignity to which he was chosen. 2. It is not affirmed that David did sit down with them to the feast, but only that they would not do so till he came. And when he was come, and Samuel had done what he intended with him, David, for aught we know, might depart, and the rest sit down to the feast; for David was not now actually raised to any higher degree, but returned to his former employment; as we read below, ver. 19.

12 And he sent, and brought him in. Now he was ^v ruddy, and withal ^w of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to. And the LORD said, Arise, anoint him: for this is he.

He was ruddy; which may be referred either to the colour of his hair; or rather, to the complexion of his face. Goodly to look to; of a comely but masculine and majestic aspect.

13 Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and ^x anointed him in the midst of his brethren; and ^y the Spirit of the LORD came upon David from that day forward. So Samuel rose up, and went to Ramah.

In the midst of his brethren: according to this translation, his brethren were present at this act, and knew that David was anointed king. But this seems, to some, neither consistent with Samuel's design of secrecy, nor with Eliab's scornful words concerning him after this, chap. xvii. 28. But to this others reply, that David's brethren saw David's unction, but did not particularly understand that he was anointed to the kingdom; but were only told by Samuel that he was anointed to some great service, which hereafter they should know, but at present it was fit to be concealed. Thus Jesse only and David understood the whole business, and his brethren were able to attest to that act of Samuel's anointing him, which, with other collateral evidences, was abundantly sufficient to prove David's right to the kingdom, if need should be. And this seems fairly to accord and explain the matter. But the words may be otherwise translated out of the Hebrew, that he anointed him out of the midst of his brethren, i. e. he selected him from amongst the rest of his brethren to be king; as Christ is said to be raised from the midst of his brethren. And whereas the Hebrew word is bekereb, in the midst, not mikkereb, out of the midst; it is confessed that the preposition bet, in, is oft used for min, of, or out of, as hath been formerly showed by many instances; and so it may be here. And further, the place may be thus rendered, that Samuel anointed him, being taken out of the midst of his brethren; and so these words may be added, to signify that Samuel took him out from the rest of the company, and privately anointed him; Jesse only being present at the action. And thus there is an ellipsis of a verb or particle, which is frequent; as Gen. xii. 15. The woman was taken (i. e. was taken and carried) into Pharaoh's house; and many such places.

The Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward, i. e. he was immediately endowed with extraordinary gifts of God's Spirit, as strength, and courage, and wisdom, and magnanimity, and other excellent qualities, which fitted him for and put him upon noble attempts; for which he presently grew famous, even whilst he lived a private life. See below, ver. 18; xvii. 34, &c.

14 ¶^b But the Spirit of the LORD departed from Saul, and ^can evil spirit from the LORD ¶ troubled him.

God took away that prudence, and courage, and alacrity, and other gifts and assistances of God's Spirit, wherewith he had qualified him for the management of his public employment. An evil spirit; properly so called; for what need is there of forsaking the proper signification of the word? It is evident, both from Scripture and experience, that God hath permitted some men to be really acted and disquieted by the devil; and why not Saul as well as others? From the Lord, i. e. by God's permission or judgment, delivering him up to Satan. Troubled him; stirred up in him unruly and tormenting passions; as envy, rage, fear, despair, and the like.

15 And Saul's servants said unto him, Behold now, an evil spirit from God troubleth thee.

16 Let our lord now command thy servants, which are ^dbefore thee, to seek out a man, who is a cunning player on an harp: and it shall come to pass, when the evil spirit from God is upon thee, that he shall ^eplay with his hand, and thou shalt be well.

And the success confirms their opinion. For although music cannot directly have any influence upon an evil spirit to drive him away; yet because the devil, as it seems, had not possession of him, but only made use of the passions of his mind and ill humours of his body to molest him; and because it is manifest that music hath a mighty power to qualify and sweeten these, and to make a man sedate and cheerful, as is evident by the unanimous consent of learned writers, and by common experience; it is not strange if the devil had not that power over him when his mind was more composed, which he had when it was disordered; as the devil had less power over lunatics in the decrease than in the increase of the moon, Matt. xvii. 15. 18. And seeing music prepared the Lord's prophets for the entertainment of the good Spirit, as 2 Kings iii. 15, why might it not dispose Saul to the resistance of the evil spirit? and why might not the cheering of his heart, in some measure, strengthen him against those temptations of the devil which were fed by his melancholic humour?

17 And Saul said unto his servants, Provide me now a man that can play well, and bring him to me.

18 Then answered one of the servants, and said, Behold, I have seen a son of Jesse the Beth-lehemite, that is cunning in playing, and ^fa mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in ^gmatters, and a comely person, and ^hthe LORD is with him.

Wonder not that David was so suddenly advanced, from a poor contemptible shepherd, to so great reputation; for these were the effects of that Spirit of the Lord, which he received when he was anointed; though some would hence infer, that the things related in this chapter happened after the history of chapter xvii., though it be placed before, such transpositions being not unusual in historical relations. The Lord is with him, i. e. directs and prospers all his undertakings.

19 ¶ Wherefore Saul sent messengers unto Jesse, and said, Send me David thy son, ⁱwhich is with the sheep.

20 And Jesse ^jtook an ass laden with bread, and a bottle of wine, and a kid, and sent them by David his son unto Saul.

This present, though in our times it would seem contemptible, yet was very agreeable to the usage of those times, and to the condition of Jesse, which was but mean in the world. And it seems to have been the custom of those times, as it is yet in the eastern countries (when they made their appearance before princes or great persons, to bring a present: see Gen. xxxii. 20; xliii. 25, 26, and elsewhere); to which civil custom that religious precept seems consonant, Exod. xxiii. 15; Deut. xvi. 16, None shall appear before me empty. And he might send it, partly as a testimony of his respect to his sovereign, and partly to gain David favour and acceptance with him, being sensible that he was going into a place and state of hazard; but knowing Saul's furious temper, he durst not refuse to send him; and he sent him the more willingly, because this seemed a most likely means to accomplish God's promise of the kingdom, and to prepare him for it.

21 And David came to Saul, and ^kstood before him: and he loved him greatly; and he became his armourbearer.

Stood before him, i. e. ministered unto him; or (as we use to speak) waited upon him, as that phrase oft signifies; as Deut. i. 38; x. 8. He became his armour-bearer; he had that place conferred upon him, though we do not read that he ever exercised it; for it seems he was gone back to his father upon some occasion not related, and had abode with him some considerable time before the war described, chap. xvii., happened.

22 And Saul sent to Jesse, saying, Let David, I pray thee, stand before me; for he hath found favour in my sight.

23 And it came to pass, when ^lthe evil spirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand: so Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him.

To wit, for a season. And the reason of this success may be partly natural and common; of which see on ver. 16; and partly supernatural and special, respecting David, whom God designed by this means to bring into favour with the king and his court, and so to smooth the way for his advancement.

CHAP. XVII.

The armies of the Israelites and Philistines ready for battle: Goliath terrifieth the Israelites with his stature, armour, and challenge, 1—11. David sent by his father to visit his brethren; is willing to encounter with him, 12—27; for which Eliab chideth him: he is brought to Saul, and sheweth the reason of his confidence, 28—37. He taketh a staff, and sling, with five stones, 38—40. Goliath curseth and threateneth him, 41—44. David's faith: he slayeth him, 45—50. The Philistines flee; are smitten and plundered, 51—54. Saul taketh notice of David, 55—58.

NOW the Philistines ^agathered together their armies to battle, and were gathered together at ^bShochoh, which belongeth to Judah, and pitched between Shochoh and Azekah, in ^cEphes-dammim.

To revenge their former great and shameful defeat, chap. xiv.

2 And Saul and the men of Israel were gathered together, and pitched by the valley of Elah, and ^dset the battle in array against the Philistines.

3 And the Philistines stood on a mountain on the one side, and Israel stood on a mountain on the other side: and there was a valley between them.

On a mountain on the other side, where they had disposed and fortified their camps, that if the one should assault the other, the assailant should have the disadvantage, and be obliged to fight from a lower place.

4 ¶ And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philistines, named ° Goliath, of ^d Gath, whose height was six cubits and a span.

A champion, Heb. a man between two, either because he used to come forth, and stand between the two armies; or because he moved that the business should be decided between two, whereof he would be one. Whose height was six cubits and a span; which is not strange, for besides the giants mentioned in Scripture, Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and Pliny, and others, make mention of persons seven cubits high, which is near double to an ordinary man's height.

5 And he had an helmet of brass upon his head, and he was † armed with a coat of mail; and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass.

The common shekel contained only a fourth part of an ounce; and so 5000 shekels made 1250 ounces, which make exactly 78 pounds; which weight is not unsuitable to a man of such vast greatness and strength, as his height speaks him to be.

6 And he had greaves of brass upon his legs, and a † target of brass between his shoulders.

7 And the ° staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam; and his spear's head weighed six hundred shekels of iron: and one bearing a shield went before him.

A weaver's beam, on which the weavers fasten their web. It was like this for thickness; and for length, that he omits, as easy to be collected by proportion to the rest. And though the whole weight of Goliath's armour may seem prodigious, yet it is not so much by far as one Athanasius did manage; of whom Pliny relates, that he saw him come into the theatre with arms weighing 12,000 ounces.

8 And he stood and cried unto the armies of Israel, and said unto them, Why are ye come out to set your battle in array? am not I a Philistine, and ye ^f servants to Saul? choose you a man for you, and let him come down to me.

That the battle may be decided by us two alone. Such offers were frequent in those times. And possibly he thought the valiant Jonathan, who had assaulted a whole army, would never have refused this challenge. But God so ordered the matter, that none should accept it, because he would reserve this honour for David, as a step to his kingdom.

9 If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and ^g serve us.

10 And the Philistine said, I ^h defy the armies of Israel this day; give me a man, that we may fight together.

11 When Saul and all Israel heard those words of the Philistine, they were dismayed, and greatly afraid.

Which may seem strange, considering the glorious promises, and their late experiences of Divine assistance. But the truth is, all men do so entirely depend upon God in all things, that when he withdraws his help, the most valiant and resolute persons cannot find their hearts nor hands, as daily experience shows.

12 ¶ Now David was ⁱ the son of that ^k Ephrathite of Beth-lehem-judah, whose name was Jesse; and he had ^l eight sons:

and the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul.

The son of that Ephrathite, i. e. of the man of Ephratah, or Beth-lehem, Gen. xxxv. 19. He had eight sons: see on chap. xvi. 10.

13 And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle: and the ^m names of his three sons that went to the battle were Eliab the firstborn, and next unto him Abinadab, and the third Shammah.

14 And David was the youngest: and the three eldest followed Saul.

15 But David went and returned from Saul ⁿ to feed his father's sheep at Beth-lehem.

From Saul; either, 1. From Saul's court; where having been entertained by Saul, to relieve him in his melancholy fits, he was permitted to go to his father's house, to be sent for again upon occasion. Or, 2. From Saul's camp, whither he used to come to visit his brethren; as appears from ver. 17.

16 And the Philistine drew near morning and evening, and presented himself forty days.

17 And Jesse said unto David his son, Take now for thy brethren an ephah of this parched corn, and these ten loaves, and run to the camp to thy brethren;

Parched corn; a food then much in use, which they used to mix with water, or milk, or oil, &c.

18 And carry these ten † cheeses unto the † captain of their thousand, and ° look how thy brethren fare, and take their pledge.

Unto the captain of their thousand; in whose power it was in a great measure, either to preserve them, or to expose them to utmost hazards. Take their pledge, i. e. bring me some token of their welfare from them.

19 Now Saul, and they, and all the men of Israel, were in the valley of Elah, fighting with the Philistines.

i. e. in a posture and readiness to fight with them; as it is explained, ver. 20, 21. Men are oft said in Scripture to do what they intend and are prepared to do, as hath been showed formerly by instances.

20 ¶ And David rose up early in the morning, and left the sheep with a keeper, and took, and went, as Jesse had commanded him; and he came to the † trench, as the host was going forth to the † fight, and shouted for the battle.

To the trench, i. e. to the camp or army which was there intrenched. Shouted for the battle; as the manner was, both to animate themselves, and to terrify their enemies.

21 For Israel and the Philistines had put the battle in array, army against army.

22 And David left † his carriage in the hand of the keeper of the carriage, and ran into the army, and came and † saluted his brethren.

His carriage; the provisions which he had brought to his brethren.

23 And as he talked with them, behold, there came up the champion, the Philistine of Gath, Goliath by name, out of the armies of the Philistines, and spake ^p according to the same words: and David heard them.

24 And all the men of Israel, when q Josh. 15. 16.

It is observable, that Saul in his great distress doth not encourage himself in God, nor seek his counsel or favour by prayers and sacrifices, but expects relief from men only. This was one effect and sign of the departure of God's Spirit from him. Make his father's house free; free from all those tributes and charges which either the court or the camp required.

26 And David spake to the men that stood by him, saying, What shall be done to the man that killeth this Philistine, and taketh away ^r the reproach from Israel? for who is this ^s uncircumcised Philistine, that he should ^t defy the armies of ^u the living God?

27 And the people answered him after this manner, saying, ^x So shall it be done to the man that killeth him.

28 ¶ And Eliab his eldest brother heard when he spake unto the men; and Eliab's ^y anger was kindled against David, and he said, Why camest thou down hither? and with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness? I know thy pride, and the naughtiness of thine heart; for thou art come down that thou mightest see the battle.

y Gen. 37. 4. 8, 11. Matt. 10. 36.

Eliab's anger was kindled, either because he thought him guilty of intolerable folly, and pride, and presumption, in pretending to such an attempt; or because he feared and concluded he would be certainly ruined in the enterprise; or rather, because he envied him the glory of so great an undertaking; and took this proffer of David's to be, what indeed it was, a reproach to himself, and to all the rest, that having the great God on their side, had not the faith or courage to fight with him. With whom hast thou left those few sheep? thou art much fitter to tend sheep, than to appear in an army, or to fight with a giant. Thy pride, and the naughtiness of thine heart; thy self-confidence, and vain-glory, and curiosity.

29 And David said, What have I now ^z done? ^z Is there not a cause?

Either, 1. Of my coming; my father sent me on an errand. Or rather, 2. Of my thus speaking: is there not reason in what I say? Is this giant invincible? is our God unable to oppose him, and subdue him?

30 ¶ And he turned from him toward another, and ^a spake after the same [†] manner: and the people answered him again after the former manner.

For being secretly moved by God's Spirit to undertake the combat, he speaks with divers persons about it, that so it might come to the king's ear.

31 And when the words were heard which David spake, they rehearsed them before Saul: and he ^b sent for him.

b Heb. took him. b Deut. 20. 1, 3. c ch. 16. 18.

32 ¶ And David said to Saul, ^b Let no man's heart fail because of him; ^c thy servant will go and fight with this Philistine.

33 And Saul said to David, ^d Thou art not able to go against this Philistine to fight with him: for thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth.

d See Num. 13. 31. Deu. 9. 2.

But a youth; either, 1. For age, to wit, comparatively to Goliath, being now not much above twenty years old, as is supposed. Or rather, 2. For military skill, as the words following explain it; as if he should say, Thou art but a novice, a raw and unexperienced soldier, and therefore unable to fight with him.

34 And David said unto Saul, Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion, and a bear, and took a lamb ^{||} Or, kid out of the flock:

There came a lion, and a bear; not both together, but one after another, at several times.

35 And I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him.

Smote him, to wit, the lion, as appears by his beard; which having particularly mentioned, it was easily understood, and believed, that he did the same to the bear; which therefore it was needless to express.

36 Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear: and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing he hath defied the armies of the living God.

Slew both the lion and the bear: this he is probably thought to have done after he was anointed; when he was endowed with singular gifts of God's Spirit; and, among others, with extraordinary courage of heart and strength of body.

37 David said moreover, ^e The LORD that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. And Saul said unto David, ^f Go, and ^f the LORD be with thee.

e Ps. 18. 16. 17. & 63. 7. & 77. 11. 2 Cor. 1. 10. 2 Tim. 4. 17, 18.

f ch. 20. 13. 1 Chron. 22. 11, 16.

He will deliver me; his good will is the same to me that it then was, and his power is not diminished. It is not strange that Saul consents to the combat, considering David's pious and convincing discourse, grounded upon sensible experience; and withal, the dangerous condition of the Israelitish affairs, and the absolute refusal of all other persons.

38 ¶ And Saul [†] armed David with his armour, and he put an helmet of brass upon his head; also he armed him with a coat of mail.

With his armour; either, 1. With Saul's own armour which he used to wear in battle; which seems not to agree with the extraordinary height of Saul's stature, 1 Sam. x. 23; nor is it like that Saul would disarm himself, when he was going forth to the battle, ver. 20, 21. Or, 2. With armour taken out of his armory. Not that the whole armory of Saul was brought into the field; but that some chosen arms were taken out thence, and brought for any emergent occasion. Or rather, 3. With his vestments, or garments. For, 1. So the Hebrew word properly and usually signifies; and so this same word is translated, 1 Sam. xviii. 4. 2. His armour is distinguished from this, and is particularly described in the following words. He seems therefore to speak of some military vestments which were then used in war, and were contrived for defence; such as buff-coats now are.

39 And David girded his sword upon his armour, and he assayed to go; for he had not proved it. And David said unto Saul, I cannot go with these; for I have not proved them. And David put them off him.

I have not proved them; I have no skill nor experience in the management of this kind of arms.

40 And he took his staff in his hand, and chose him five smooth stones out of the ¹brook, and put them in a shepherd's ²bag which he had, even in a scrip; and his sling ³was in his hand: and he drew near to the Philistine.

His staff; his shepherd's staff. These arms were in themselves contemptible, yet chosen by David; partly, because he had no skill to use other arms; partly, because he had inward assurance of the victory, even by these weapons; and partly, because such a conquest would be most honourable to God, and most shameful and discouraging to the Philistines. Chose him five smooth stones, that if one should fail him, he might make use of another. Smooth stones, because such stones would go most freely out of the sling; and consequently, with more force and certainty, directly to the mark which he aimed at. The sling was a sort of weapon not unusual in the fights of ancient times, and many arrived at great dexterity of slinging stones with great certainty; of which we have instances both in Scripture, as Judg. xx. 16, and in Diodorus Siculus, and Livy, and other authors.

41 And the Philistine came on and drew near unto David; and the man that bare the shield went before him.

42 And when the Philistine looked about, and saw David, he ¹disdained him: for he was but a youth, and ²ruddy, and of a fair countenance.

Not having so much as the countenance of a martial person.

43 And the Philistine said unto David, ¹Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves? And the Philistine cursed David by his gods.

With staves, i. e. with a staff; the plural number for the singular; as Gen. xxi. 7; xlvi. 7. The Philistine cursed David; he prayed that his god Dagon, and Ash-taroth, &c., would destroy him.

44 And the Philistine ¹said to David, Come to me, and I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field.

45 Then ¹said David to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: ²but I come to thee in the name of the LORD of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast ³defied.

In the name of the Lord of hosts, i. e. by a commission from him, with confidence in him, and assurance of his help, and for the vindication of his honour. Whom thou hast defied, in defying that army and people whereof he is the Lord and Protector.

46 This day will the LORD ¹deliver thee into mine hand; and I will smite thee, and take thine head from thee; and I will give ²the carcasses of the host of the Philistines this day unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beasts of the earth; ³that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel.

Heb. that God, the only true God, is for Israel; or on Israel's side, and against you. Or, that Israel hath a God, a God indeed, one who is able to help them, and not such an impotent idol as you serve.

47 And all this assembly shall know that the LORD ¹saveth not with sword and spear: for ²the battle is the LORD's, and he will give you into our hands.

That the Lord saveth not with sword and spear, i. e. that he can save without these arms, and with the most contemptible weapons, such as mine seem to thee. The battle is the Lord's, i. e. the events of war are wholly in his power, to give success to whom and by what means he pleaseth. He will give you into our hands: David speaks thus confidently, because he was assured of it by a particular inspiration from God.

48 And it came to pass, when the Philistine arose, and came and drew nigh to meet David, that David hasted, and ran toward the army to meet the Philistine.

49 And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and slang it, and smote the Philistine in his forehead, that the stone sunk into his forehead; and he fell upon his face to the earth.

Either, 1. The stone pierced through his helmet; which such stones being slung would not seldom do; as even Diodorus Siculus relates. Or, 2. The stone might get in through one of those holes which are left in helmets, that he that wears it may see his way, and how to direct his blows. Or rather, 3. The proud giant had lift up that part of his helmet which covered his forehead; and that in contempt of David and his weapons, and by the singular direction of God's providence.

50 So ¹David prevailed over the Philistine with a sling and with a stone, and smote the Philistine, and slew him; but there was no sword in the hand of David.

51 Therefore David ran, and stood upon the Philistine, and took his sword, and drew it out of the sheath thereof, and slew him, and cut off his head therewith. And when the Philistines saw their champion was dead, ²they fled.

David took his sword; hence it appears that David was not a little man, as many fancy; but a man of considerable bulk and strength, because he was able to manage a giant's sword; which also he did, both here and below, chap. xxi. 9. Slew him. Quest. How could this be, when he slew him before with the stone? ver. 50. Ans. There he gives a general account of the event of the battle, and of the giant's death; but here he gives a particular relation of the manner and instrument of his death. The stone threw him down to the earth, and bereaved him of the use of his sense and motion; but there remained some life in him, (as frequently doth in such cases,) which the sword took away, and so completed the work.

52 And the men of Israel and of Judah arose, and shouted, and pursued the Philistines, until thou come to the valley, and to the gates of Ekron. And the wounded of the Philistines fell down by the way to 'Shaaraim, even unto Gath, and unto Ekron.

53 And the children of Israel returned from chasing after the Philistines, and they spoiled their tents.

Heb. their camps, i. e. their camp; but he speaks of it in the plural number, because of the great extent and various quarters of their camp.

54 And David took the head of the Philistine, and brought it to Jerusalem; but he put his armour in his tent.

Brought it to Jerusalem; either to terrify the Jebusites, who yet held the fort of Zion, 2 Sam. v. 7; or for some other reason not recorded, nor now known. In his tent, i. e. in the tent which was erected for him in the camp, upon this occasion. There it was kept for the present, though afterwards it seems to have been translated to the tabernacle, where we find his sword, chap. xxi., and it is not unlikely the rest of his armour was there also.

55 ¶ And when Saul saw David go forth against the Philistine, he said unto Abner, the captain u See ch. 16. of the host, Abner, ^awhose son is this youth? And Abner said, As thy soul liveth, O king, I cannot tell.

Whose son is this youth? Quest. How could David be unknown to Saul, with whom he had lived? chap. xvi. 21. Ans. That might well be, for divers reasons, because David was not constantly with him, nor, as it seems, used by him, but upon extraordinary occasions, and desperate fits of melancholy; from which possibly he had been free for a good while, by God's special providence and care for his people Israel, that so he might be capable of governing and protecting them against the Philistines, who watched all opportunities against them, and at last broke forth into an open war. Thus David had been for some considerable time dismissed from Saul's court, and was returned home; and therefore it is not strange, if Saul had for the present forgotten David; for kings, because of the encumbrance of public business, and the multitude of persons who come to them on several occasions, may easily forget some persons; yea, such as have frequently been with them, especially their servants, whom they do not use to observe with so much attention and care as they do others. Add to this, that the distemper of Saul's mind might make him forgetful; and that David might now be much changed, both in his countenance and in his habit, from what he had before; and it is apparent, that the change of habits makes so great a difference, that it oft keeps us from the knowledge of those persons whom in other habits we very well know. Some give this answer, That this was the first time that Saul had seen David; and that David's exploit here recorded was performed before that which is recorded ver. 15, though it be placed after it; but that is confuted by comparing chap. xviii. 1—3. I cannot tell; which is not strange, because Abner's conversation and employment was generally in the camp, when David was at the court; and when Abner was there, he took little notice of a person so much inferior to him as David was.

56 And the king said, Enquire thou whose son the stripling is.

57 And as David returned from the slaughter of the Philistine, Abner took him, and brought him before Saul ^xwith the head of the Philistine in his hand.

58 And Saul said to him, Whose son art thou, thou young man? And David answered, ^y*I am* the son of thy servant Jesse the Beth-lehemite.

CHAP. XVIII.

Jonathan loveth David; they covenant together, 1—4. Saul envieth David's praise; in his fury seeketh to kill him, 5—11: is afraid of him; and removeth him: he is loved by the people, 12—16. Saul offereth David his daughters; first Merab, who is given to Adriel; then Michal, who loveth David, 17—20. Saul demandeth one hundred fore-skins of the Philistines for a dowry: David promiseth; delivereth double the number; obtaineth Michal, 21—27. Saul's fear and hatred, and David's glory, increaseth, 28—30.

AND it came to pass, when he had made an end of speaking unto Saul, that ^athe soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, ^band Jonathan loved him as his own soul.

Partly, for his excellent virtues and endowments, which shone forth both in his speeches and actions; partly, for the great and good service which he had done to God and to his people; and partly, for the similitude of their age and qualities.

2 And Saul took him that day, ^cand would let him go no more home to his father's house.

By which it appears, that beforetime David had not his constant residence at court, but did return to his father's house, and thence again to the court, as occasion required.

3 Then Jonathan and David made a covenant, because he loved him as his own soul.

A covenant, i. e. an agreement of sincere and perpetual friendship between them.

4 And Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle.

Partly as a pledge of his great respect and affection to him; and partly to vindicate David from that contempt which might cleave to him for his former pastoral habit and condition, and to put him into a habit suitable to his present greatness and glory.

5 ¶ And David went out whithersoever Saul sent him, and ¶ behaved himself wisely: and Saul set him over the men of war, and he was accepted in the sight of all the people, and also in the sight of Saul's servants.

David went out, upon military expeditions, of which that word is oft used. Set him over the men of war; gave him some considerable command in his army, though not the supreme.

6 And it came to pass as they came, when David was returned from the slaughter of the ¶ Philistine, that ^dthe women came out of all cities of Israel, singing and dancing, to meet king Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with ¶ instruments of musick.

When David was returned from the slaughter of the Philistine; either, first, From some eminent victory obtained by him against the Philistines, though not particularly related, wherein also Saul might be present and concerned. Or rather, secondly, From the slaughter of Goliath, and the other Philistines with him. Against this it is objected, that this song was sung either after David was advanced and employed, as is related ver. 5, and therefore not immediately after that great victory; or, before he was so advanced; and then it would have raised Saul's jealousy and envy, and consequently hindered David's advancement. But it may be replied, that this song, though placed afterwards, was sung before David's advancement, related ver. 5. And that this did not hinder David's preferment, must be ascribed partly to Saul's policy, who, though he had an eye upon David, and designed to crush him upon a fit occasion; yet saw it necessary for his own reputation, and the encouragement of other men's valour, and for the satisfaction of Jonathan's passionate desire, and the just and general expectation of the whole army and people, to give him some considerable preferment for the present; and principally to God's providence overruling Saul, against his own inclination, and his mistaken interest. Out of all cities of Israel, i. e. out of all the neighbouring cities, by or through which the victorious army marched. Singing and dancing, according to the custom of those times and places; of which see Exod xv. 20; Judg. xi. 34.

7 And the women ^eanswered one another as they played, and said, ^f'Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands.

Answered one another; singing by parts alternately. David his ten thousands; so they said, because David killed Goliath, which was the principal cause of all the following slaughter of the Philistines.

8 And Saul was very wroth, and the saying ^g¶ displeased him; and he said, They have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me they have ascribed but thousands: and what can he have more but ^hthe kingdom?

What greater honour can they give him but that of the kingdom? Or thus, And moreover, this will not rest here, they will certainly give him the kingdom; they will translate the crown from me to him. Or thus, And moreover, the kingdom certainly belongs to him, i. e. I now perceive that this is the favourite of God, and of the people; this is that man after God's own heart, to whom Samuel told me that God would transfer my kingdom.

9 And Saul eyed David from that day and forward.

i. e. Narrowly observed all his counsels and actions, that he might understand whether he had any design upon the kingdom or no, and that he might find some colourable pretence of putting him to death.

10 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that the evil spirit from God came upon Saul, and he prophesied in the midst of the house: and David played with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand.

Saul's envy, and jealousy, and discontent revived his melancholic distemper, which the devil, according to his wont, struck in with. He prophesied, or, he feigned himself to be a prophet, for so the Hebrew verbs in Hithpahel oft signify, i. e. he used uncouth gestures, and signs, and speeches, as the prophets, or sons of the prophets, used to do; for which they were by the ignorant and ungodly sort reputed madmen, 2 Kings ix. 11. And it may seem probable that Saul did now speak of Divine things politically, that thereby he might lull David asleep, and kill him before he suspected any danger. There was a javelin in Saul's hand, which he kept there for the following purpose.

11 And Saul cast the javelin; for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it. And David avoided out of his presence twice.

Once at this time, and another time upon a like occasion, chap. xix. 10.

12 ¶ And Saul was afraid of David, because the LORD was with him, and was departed from Saul.

Saul was afraid of David, lest as he had gotten the favour of God and of all the people, he should also take away his kingdom.

13 Therefore Saul removed him from him, and made him his captain over a thousand; and he went out and came in before the people.

From him; from his presence and court; which he did, partly, because he feared lest David should watch and find an opportunity to kill him, as he had designed to kill David; partly, because he was a great eyesore, and his presence now made him more sad than ever his music had made him cheerful; and principally, that hereby he might expose him to the greatest hazards, and in some sort betray him into the hands of the Philistines. He went out and came in; he led his soldiers forth to battle, and brought them back again with safety. Compare 2 Sam. v. 2. Or else the phrase of coming in and going out may be understood (as elsewhere) for conversing; or (as we use to say) going to and fro about business, as chap. xxix. 6.

14 And David behaved himself wisely in all his ways; and the LORD was with him.

So that he had great prudence in his conduct, and prosperous success following his designs; which are two principal qualifications of a general and of a prince. Thus God turned all Saul's devices upon himself, and to David's advantage.

15 Wherefore when Saul saw that he behaved himself very wisely, he was afraid of him.

16 But all Israel and Judah loved David, because he went out and came in before them.

17 ¶ And Saul said to David, Behold my elder daughter Merab, her will I give thee to wife: only be thou valiant for me, and fight the LORD's battles. For Saul said, Let not mine hand be upon him, but let the hand of the Philistines be upon him.

Her will I give thee to wife: this was no more than Saul was obliged to do by his former promise, chap. xvii. 25, which here he renews and pretends to perform, though he intended nothing less, as the sequel shows; whereby he makes himself guilty of ingratitude, injustice, and breach of trust, and withal of gross hypocrisy. Let the hand of the Philistines be upon him; he thought so great an offer would oblige him, who was of himself valiant enough to give proofs of more than common valour, and to venture upon the most dangerous enterprises.

18 And David said unto Saul, Who am I? and what is my life, or my father's family in Israel, that I should be son in law to the king?

My life, i. e. my manner of living. How obscure is that condition in which I was born, and have been bred! Or rather thus, How little is my life worth, that by the exposing of that to some hazard (which Saul required of him) I should purchase a king's daughter! In these expressions David showeth not only his humility, but also his wisdom, in discovering so deep a sense of his own meanness, that Saul might see how far he was from aspiring at the kingdom, and might have no occasion to suspect that he was already anointed thereto.

19 But it came to pass at the time when Merab Saul's daughter should have been given to David, that she was given unto Adriel the Meholathite wife.

When Merab should have been given to David; when the marriage was even ready to be solemnized. Adriel the Meholathite, the son of Barzille, as he is called, 2 Sam. xxi. 8. This was an act of great injustice and perfidiousness; and accordingly this marriage was accursed by God, and the children begotten in it were by God's appointment cut off, 2 Sam. xxi.

20 And Michal Saul's daughter loved David: and they told Saul, and the thing pleased him.

Not for any respect he had to David, but for his own malicious and wicked ends, that he might make use of her love to David, to insnare and ruin him, which he thought might be done many ways, whereof one is here expressed.

21 And Saul said, I will give him her, that she may be a snare to him, and that the hand of the Philistines may be against him. Wherefore Saul said to David, Thou shalt this day be my son in law the one of the twain.

This day, i. e. suddenly, within a time which probably Saul prefixed. In the one of the twain: whereas I have only two daughters, and thou wast disappointed of thy expectation in the one by an unexpected accident, thou shalt certainly have the other, which is the same thing. Heb. in the twain. Thus the cities of Gilead is put for one of them, Judg. xii. 7; and the sides of the ship for one of the sides, Jonah i. 5. Or he saith in the twain, or in both, because he was in effect betrothed to the one, and should be married to the other, and so was his son-in-law upon a double account.

22 ¶ And Saul commanded his servants, saying, Commune with David secretly, and say, Behold, the king hath delight in thee, and all his servants love thee: now therefore be the king's son in law.

Commune with David, whom having so lately and grossly deceived, he found backward to embrace his motion, and therefore sets others on work to persuade him.

23 And Saul's servants spake those words in the ears of David. And David said, Seemeth it to you a light thing to be a king's son in law, seeing that I am a poor man, and lightly esteemed?

And therefore neither have estate nor credit to give (according to the manner, Gen. xxxiv. 12; Exod. xxii. 16, 17) a dowry suitable to her quality.

24 And the servants of Saul told him, saying, † On this manner spake David.

25 And Saul said, Thus shall ye say to David, The king desireth not any dowry, but an hundred foreskins of the Philistines, to be avenged of the king's enemies. But Saul thought to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines.

An hundred foreskins: these he desires rather than their heads; partly, for the greater convenience of bringing them, and presenting them before him; partly, to cover his malice against David with a pretence of zeal for God, and for his people, and for the covenant of circumcision; and partly, that the Philistines might be the more enraged against David for this reproachful and barbarous usage of them, and might therefore watch all opportunities to destroy him.

26 And when his servants told David these words, it pleased David well to be the king's son in law: and the days were not † expired.

It pleased David; as for other reasons, so especially because this opened the door to the kingdom which God had promised him. The days, i. e. the time allowed by Saul to David for the execution of this exploit.

27 Wherefore David arose and went, he and his men, and slew of the Philistines two hundred men; and David brought their foreskins, and they gave them in full tale to the king, that he might be the king's son in law. And Saul gave him Michal his daughter to wife.

He doubled the number required; partly to oblige Saul the more to the performance of his promise; and partly to show his great respect and affection to Saul's daughter.

28 ¶ And Saul saw and knew that the LORD was with David, and that Michal Saul's daughter loved him.

29 And Saul was yet the more afraid of David; and Saul became David's enemy continually.

Because he both lost his design against David's life, and had now paved a way for him to the throne.

30 Then the princes of the Philistines went forth: and it came to pass, after they went forth, that David behaved himself more wisely than all the servants of Saul; so that his name was much † set by.

Went forth, to wit, to war against the Israelites, being provoked both by their former losses, and especially by that act of David's, related above, ver. 27.

CHAP. XIX.

Saul purposeth to kill David; Jonathan discloseth it; speaketh in his behalf to Saul, who sweareth not to kill him; he returneth to court, 1—7. By reason of his success in a new war, Saul again seeketh to kill him; Michal acquainteth him with it; he flieth; she deceiveth her father, 8—17. David cometh to Samuel at Ramah; Saul sendeth messengers twice to apprehend him; they both prophesy, 18—21. He goeth himself thither, and prophesieth likewise, 22—24.

AND Saul spake to Jonathan his son, and to all his servants, that they should kill David.

Saul spake to Jonathan; whom, though lately engaged in a league of friendship with David, he thought to oblige to it by sense of his own interest, as being the next heir of the crown, and likely to suffer most by David's advancement. And to all his servants: what before he secretly designed, now he openly and impudently avowed.

2 But Jonathan Saul's son delighted much in David: and Jonathan told David, saying, Saul my father seeketh to kill thee: now therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyself until the morning, and abide in a secret place, and hide thyself:

Lest he kill thee before I discourse with him, and endeavour to reconcile him to thee; which I think not fit to attempt as yet, whilst he is in the fit of rage against thee; but I intend to do in the morning, when I may hope to find him in a better temper.

3 And I will go out and stand beside my father in the field where thou art, and I will commune with my father of thee; and what I see, that I will tell thee.

In the field where thou art; in the field where my father useth to walk, where also I would have thee to hide thyself, that I may know where to find thee at hand, to acquaint thee with the success of my endeavours, that thou mayst accordingly either return to court, or speedily depart.

4 ¶ And Jonathan spake good of David unto Saul his father, and said unto him, Let not the king sin against his servant, against David; because he hath not sinned against thee, and because his works have been to thee-ward very good:

Jonathan spake good of David, which he could not do without hazard to himself. Herein therefore he performed the duty of a true friend, and of a valiant man.

5 For he did put his life in his hand, and slew the Philistine, and the LORD wrought a great salvation for all Israel: thou sawest it, and didst rejoice: wherefore then wilt thou sin against innocent blood, to slay David without a cause?

He did put his life in his hand, i. e. he exposed his life to eminent hazard. See the notes on Judg. xii. 3.

6 And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan: and Saul sware, As the LORD liveth, he shall not be slain.

This great change is not to be ascribed to any true repentance for his sin against David, or any better affection which he now had to him; but merely to his own worldly interest, because he was convinced by Jonathan's discourse that he could not kill him without great inconvenience and shame to himself.

7 And Jonathan called David, and Jonathan shewed him all those things. And Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he was in his presence, as † in times past.

8 ¶ And there was war again: and David went out, and fought with the Philistines, and slew them with a great slaughter; and they fled from † him.

9 And the evil spirit from the LORD was upon Saul, as he sat in his house with his javelin in his hand: and David played with his hand.

David's successes against the Philistines, which should have cheered his heart, made him sad, and the devil watched 11 ¹Saul also sent messengers unto David's house, to watch him, and to slay him in the morning: and Michal David's wife told him, saying, If thou save not thy life to night, to morrow thou shalt be slain.

To slay him in the morning: why not in the night? Ans. Partly, because it would have been barbarous, and most dishonourable to Saul, to break into David's house by night, and kill him in his own house and bed; and it seemed more expedient to kill him as he came out of his house in the morning; partly, because the night might give David some opportunity of escaping, which the day-light would prevent; and principally, by God's singular providence, infatuating Saul's mind to take the worst course, that David might be delivered from him. To-morrow thou shalt be slain; which she might learn, either by information from Jonathan, or some other courtier that was privy to the design; or from her own observation of some suspicious or dangerous persons hovering about the house.

13 And Michal took an [†]image, and laid it in the bed, and put a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster, and covered it with a cloth.

An image, Heb. teraphim, which was an image made in human shape; which she might keep secretly, either out of a superstitious regard to it, or out of mere curiosity. This stratagem she used, because knowing her father's unquiet, and jealous, and furious temper, she suspected he might come or send to see whether David was there or no. Put a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster, or, put great goats' hair upon his bolster, i. e. upon the head and face of the image, which lay upon his bolster, that it might have some kind of resemblance of David's head and hair, at least in a sick man's bed, where there useth to be but a glimmering light. Goats is here put for goats' hair, as it manifestly is Exod. xxv. 4; xxvi. 7; xxxv. 26. It is acknowledged by learned writers, that in those eastern countries goats had much longer hair than ours have, and were shorn like sheep, and that their hair was not unlike to a man's or woman's hair; as may also be gathered from Cant. iv. 1, Thy hair is as a flock of goats, i. e. as the hair of a flock of goats. And as there was goats' hair of several colours, (as the wool of sheep in divers parts is of very differing colours, as white, or black, or yellow, &c.) so it is most probable she took that colour which was likest the colour of David's hair. And she took this rather than the hair of another man, because the procuring and ordering of that would have taken up some time; whereas she had goats' hair of all sorts at hand, as being used in spinning or weaving, &c. Or the sense may be this, according to our translation, that she put a pillow of the softest part of goats' hair under the head of the image, as they used to put under the heads of sick men; whereby also the head of the image sinking into the pillow might be less discerned, especially when it was either wholly or in part covered with a cloth. And all this art was used, that David being supposed, and, by some persons who were sent to inquire, perceived, as they thought, to be in the bed, Saul might be hindered from pursuing and overtaking him before he had got into some secure place. Covered it with a cloth, upon pretence of his being sick, and needing some such covering, but really in design to prevent the discovery of her deceit.

14 And when Saul sent messengers to take David, she said, He is sick.

Messengers, to wit, other messengers in the morning, supposing the former to be either slow or perfidious.

15 And Saul sent the messengers again to see David, saying, Bring him up to me in the bed, that I may slay him.

Again to see David, or only, to see David, which they did not before, but went away satisfied (as it was fit they should) with her report and testimony of his sickness.

16 And when the messengers were come in, behold, there was an image in the bed, with a pillow of goats' hair for his bolster.

17 And Saul said unto Michal, Why hast thou deceived me so, and sent away mine enemy, that he is escaped? And Michal answered Saul, He said unto me, Let me go; "why should I kill thee?" ^{n 2 Sam. 2. 22.}

If thou dost not permit me to escape without discovery, I shall be forced for my own defence to kill thee. Though it is most likely this was a lie and a fiction of her own.

18 ¶ So David fled, and escaped, and came to Samuel to Ramah, and told him all that Saul had done to him. And he and Samuel went and dwelt in Naioth.

Came to Samuel to Ramah; partly for comfort and direction in his great distress; and partly for safety, supposing that Saul would be ashamed to execute his bloody designs in the presence of so venerable a person as Samuel, who had laid so great obligations upon Saul, and had such great and just reputation with the people.

19 And it was told Saul, saying, Behold, David is at Naioth in Ramah.

Or, near Ramah; the Hebrew preposition beth, in, being oft put for near, as it is apparently used, Numb. xxxiii. 37, 38; Josh. v. 13; Jer. xx. 2; xxxii. 7. Naioth was either a house or college in the town of Ramah, or a village in the territory of Ramah, or near to the town of Ramah; in which there was a college of the prophets, amongst whom Samuel thought David might be secure.

20 And ^oSaul sent messengers to take David: ^pand when they saw the company of the prophets prophesying, and Samuel standing as appointed over them, the Spirit of God was upon the messengers of Saul, and they also ^qprophesied.

ch. 10. 5, 6.

Saul sent messengers to take David: thus Saul's wickedness and fury increased; and he that at first used only secret practices against David, now breaks forth into open and impudent hostilities; plainly declaring that he neither feared God nor revered man. He would have punished Samuel, as afterwards he did Abimelech, for giving David entertainment, but that he feared the people, who had so great and unanimous a veneration for him. Prophesying, i. e. speaking of God, or of the things of God, by Divine inspiration; either praising God, or instructing men. Compare Numb. xi. 25; 1 Sam. x. 5. Appointed over them, to instruct, moderate, and direct them in those holy exercises. For though they prophesied by Divine inspiration, which Samuel could not govern; yet they were both to prepare and dispose themselves for it beforehand, and to make good improvement of it afterwards, in both which they needed Samuel's counsel and assistance. And whereas some might falsely pretend to those raptures, or the devil might transform himself into an angel of light, and convey some evil or false suggestions into some of their minds, Samuel's presence and judgment was necessary to prevent and to detect such impostures. Besides, Samuel would by his present conjunction with them in those holy exercises encourage them, and stir up others to the coveting of those gifts, and the performance of such religious duties. They also prophesied; being inspired by God to do so, as wicked Balaam also was; that, being rapt up into such an ecstasy, their minds might be wholly taken up with those matters, and quite taken off from their design of seizing David.

23. Joel 2. 28.

21 And when it was told Saul, he sent other messengers, and they prophesied likewise. And Saul sent messengers again the third time, and they prophesied also.

22 Then went he also to Ramah, and came to a great well that is in Sechu: and he asked and said, Where are Samuel and David? And one said, Behold, they be at Naioth in Ramah.

Where are Samuel and David? for, his messengers not returning, he knew not exactly where they were.

23 And he went thither to Naioth in Ramah: and ^{ch. 10. 10.} the Spirit of God was upon him also, and he went on, and prophesied, until he came to Naioth in Ramah.

The Spirit of God was upon him also; it came upon him in the way; whereas it came not upon his messengers till they came to the place; whereby God would convince Saul of the vanity of all his designs against David, and that in them he fought against God himself.

24 ^{Is. 20. 2.} And he stripped off his clothes also, and prophesied before Samuel in like manner, and ^{† Heb. fell.} lay down ^{Numb. 24. 4.} naked all that day and all that night. Wherefore they say, ^{† Mic. 1. 8.} Is Saul also among the prophets?

His clothes, to wit, his military or royal garments; which he did, either that he might suit himself and his habit to the rest of the company; or because his mind being altogether taken up with Divine things, he did not understand or heed what he did. Also: this implies that the messengers which he sent, who probably were military persons, had done so before him. Prophesied before Samuel: this doth not contradict 1 Sam. xv. 35, where it is said that Samuel came no more to see Saul; for here Saul goes to Samuel, and that not with design to see him, but to surprise David. In like manner; as the rest of the prophets there did. Lay down, Heb. fell, to wit, down upon the earth; for his mind being in an ecstasy, he had not the use of his senses or motion, as he Numb. xxiv. 4; God so ordering it, that David might have an opportunity to escape. Naked, i. e. stripped of his upper garments, as was said before, and as the word naked is oft used, as Isa. xx. 2; Micah i. 8. See also 2 Sam. vi. 20; John xxi. 7. And it is here repeated to signify how long he lay in that posture. All that day and all that night; so God kept him as it were in chains, till David was got out of his reach. Is Saul also among the prophets? The same proverb which was taken up upon a like occasion, 1 Sam. x. 12, is here remembered and revived upon this new occasion, as an evidence of God's wonderful care over David; he made Saul in some sort a prophet, that he might make David a king.

CHAP. XX.

David complaineth to Jonathan of Saul: he comforteth him; can hardly believe what David saith of his father; promiseth to give him notice how his absence was taken: they renew a covenant of friendship, and swear to each other, 1—17. Their sign, 18—23. Saul asketh for David at the feast of the new moon, 24—27. Jonathan excuseth David: Saul incensed hereat, reveleth Jonathan, and seeketh to kill him, 28—34. Jonathan adviseth David, 35—40. They part with tears, 41, 42.

AND David fled from Naioth in Ramah, and came and said before Jonathan, What have I done? what is mine iniquity? and what is my sin before thy father, that he seeketh my life?

David fled, whilst Saul lay in an ecstasy, from Naioth in Ramah to Gibeah, where Jonathan was, taking the opportunity of Saul's absence. What is my sin before thy father? what is it which thus incenseth thy father against me? what crime doth he charge me with? That he seeketh my life, to wit, to destroy it, as this phrase is oft used, as chap. xxii. 23; Psal. xxxviii. 12; liv. 3; lxiii. 9.

2 And he said unto him, God forbid; thou shalt not die: behold, my father will do nothing either great or small, but that he will ^{† Heb. shew} shew it me: and why should my father hide this thing from me? ^{† Heb. enter into} it ^{car. ver. 12.} is not so. ^{ch. 9. 15.}

Thou shalt not die; I will secure thee by my interest with my father; nor doth he design to destroy thee; for what he doth in his frantic fits is not to be imputed to him; and when he comes to himself, I doubt not to reconcile thee to him. For Jonathan gave credit to his father's oath, chap. xix. 6; and the worthiest minds are least suspicious and most charitable in their opinions of others.

3 And David sware moreover, and said, Thy father certainly knoweth that I have found grace in thine eyes; and he saith, Let not Jonathan know this, lest he be grieved: but truly as the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death.

The matter being of great moment, and Jonathan doubting the truth of it, David confirms his word with an oath, which follows in the end of the verse; only he interposes a reason why Saul concealed it from Jonathan.

4 Then said Jonathan unto David, ^{† Heb. what is thy mind, and I will do, &c.} || Whatsoever thy soul ^{† Heb. speaketh, or, thinketh.} desireth, I will even do it for thee.

To wit, for the discovery of the truth, and for the preservation of thy life.

5 And David said unto Jonathan, Behold, to morrow is the ^{a Num. 10. 10. & 28. 11.} new moon, and I should not fail to sit with the king at meat: but let me go, that I may ^{b ch. 19. 2.} hide myself in the field unto the third day at even.

The new moon was a solemn and festival time, as among the Romans and other heathens, so also with the Hebrews, who solemnized it with offering peace-offerings to God, and feasting together upon the remainders of it, after the manner. See Numb. x. 10; xxviii. 11; Psal. lxxxi. 3. I should not fail to sit with the king at meat; then he useth to expect my company above other times. Unto the third day, i. e. unto the next day but one after the new moon; as appears by comparing ver. 19, 27, 35. His meaning is not that he should hide himself in any certain place all the three days, but that he should secure himself, either at Beth-lehem with his friends, or in any other place, till the third day.

6 If thy father at all miss me, then say, David earnestly asked leave of me that he might run ^{c ch. 16. 4.} to Beth-lehem his city: for there is a yearly ^{† Heb. feast.} sacrifice there ^{ch. 9. 12.} for all the family.

Quest. How could David imagine that Saul would expect his company, whom he had once and again endeavoured to kill? Ans. First, He might suppose that David would ascribe all that to his madness and frantic fits, which being over, he would promise himself safety in the king's presence. Secondly, David might not think that Saul would indeed expect him to feast with him, considering his late and great danger from Saul; but that Saul would make use of this pretence, and require his presence, that he might lay hold upon him; and therefore he desired to try the experiment. Asked leave of me, who being the king's son and deputy, used to give licence to military men to depart for a season upon just occasions. His city, i. e. the place of his birth and education, John vii. 42. A yearly sacrifice; a sacrifice which was offered up in some high place there yearly, upon some special occasion not mentioned in Scripture, which was accompanied with a feast; or, a yearly feast, as the Hebrew word is sometimes used. For all the family; wherein all the members of our family used to meet together, when they will earnestly expect me above others, and will charge me with pride and unnaturalness, if I neglect their invitation.

7 ^aIf he say thus, It is well; thy servant shall have peace: but if he be very wroth, then be sure that ^eevil is determined by him.

Then be sure, Heb. know thou; for indeed David knew well enough that Saul designed to kill him; but he useth this course for Jonathan's information and satisfaction, and for his own greater vindication, if he did wholly withdraw himself from Saul, and from his wife; which he foresaw he should be forced to do.

f Josh. 2. 14. 8 Therefore thou shalt ^fdeal kindly with thy servant; for ^gthou hast brought thy servant into a covenant of the LORD with thee: notwithstanding, ^hif there be in me iniquity, slay me thyself; for why shouldst thou bring me to thy father?

Thou shalt deal kindly with thy servant, in giving me timely notice, and a true account of Saul's disposition and intention towards me. A covenant of the Lord, i. e. a solemn covenant, not lightly undertaken, but seriously entered into, in the name and fear of God, and in his presence, calling him to be the witness of our sincerity therein, and the avenger of perfidiousness in him that breaks it. Slay me thyself; I am contented thou shouldst kill me. Why shouldst thou bring me to thy father? why shouldst thou betray me to thy father, by concealing his evil intentions from me?

9 And Jonathan said, Far be it from thee: for if I knew certainly that evil were determined by my father to come upon thee, then would not I tell it thee?

Far be it from thee; I abhor the thoughts of either killing thee myself, or giving thee up to my father to slay thee.

10 Then said David to Jonathan, Who shall tell me? or what if thy father answer thee roughly?

By what means or messenger shall I understand this? for peradventure thou wilt not be able to come to me thyself.

11 ¶ And Jonathan said unto David, Come, and let us go out into the field. And they went out both of them into the field.

Lest they should be overheard.

12 And Jonathan said unto David, O LORD God of Israel, when I have [†]sound-ed my father about to morrow any time, or the third day, and, behold, if there be good toward David, and I then send not unto thee, and [†]shew it thee;

O Lord God of Israel, do thou hear and judge between us. It is an abrupt speech, which is usual in great passions.

i Ruth 1. 17. 13 ⁱThe LORD do so and much more to Jonathan: but if it please my father to do thee evil, then I will shew it thee, and send thee away, that thou mayest go in peace: and ^kthe LORD be with thee, as he hath been with my father.

The Lord give thee that honour and success in all thy affairs which he hath given to my father. Jonathan undoubtedly knew of Samuel's final and irrevocable sentence of Saul's rejection from the kingdom, and of the substitution of some other person after God's own heart in his stead; and that David was this person he might strongly suspect, (that which even Saul suspected,) both from his eminent piety, and wisdom, and valour, and universal worth, and from the great things which God had done, both by him and for him, in preserving and advancing him by such unusual methods; and it is most likely that Jonathan did ask David about it, and that David did faithfully inform him of the whole truth, as may be gathered both from the words here following, and from chap. xxiii. 17. And that the knowledge hereof did not raise jealousy, and envy, and rage in him, who was the next heir of the crown, as it did in his father, must be ascribed to Jonathan's piety towards God, to whose disposal he cheerfully submitted himself, and to his sincere friendship to David, in whose happiness he rejoiced as in his own.

14 And thou shalt not only while yet I live shew me the kindness of the LORD, that I die not:

Or, And wilt thou not, if I shall then be alive, (to wit, when the Lord shall be with thee, as he hath been with my father, as he now said, i. e. when God shall have advanced thee to the kingdom, as he did him,) yea, wilt thou not (the same particle twice repeated for asseveration, i. e. I am well assured that thou wilt) show me the kindness of the Lord; i. e. either such kindness as the Lord hath showed to thee in preserving thy life in the midst of so many and such great dangers; or that kindness to which thou hast engaged thyself, in the covenant sworn between thee and me in God's presence. That I die not; that thou do not kill me or mine, as princes of another line use to kill the nearest relations of the former line, from whom the kingdom was translated to them; which they do either by way of revenge, or in policy, and reason of state, to secure the kingdom to themselves.

15 But also ^lthou shalt not cut off thy kindness from my house for ever: no, not when the LORD hath cut off the enemies of David every one from the face of the earth.

Thy kindness; he saith not, the kindness of the Lord, as before, because the covenant between them seem to have been only personal, and not comprehending their posterity. And therefore as Jonathan speaks confidently of his own preservation by virtue of that covenant; so he here lays this additional obligation upon David, that he would extend his kindness to all his progeny. When the Lord hath cut off the enemies of David; which he will certainly do without exception of Saul my father, and those of his children who have joined, or shall join, with him in his hostilities and cruelties against David. And by this word enemies he implies the reasonableness of his request, because Jonathan was none of that number, and therefore not to be treated as such.

16 So Jonathan [†]made a covenant with the house of David, saying, ^mLet the LORD even require it at the hand of David's enemies.

The covenant which before was personal, he now extends to the whole house of David, expecting a reciprocal enlargement of it on David's side, which doubtless he obtained. Let the Lord even require it at the hand of David's enemies; if either I or any of my house shall break this covenant, and shall prove enemies to David, or to his house, let the Lord, the witness of this covenant, severely punish the violators of it, whoever they are. Others thus, Let the Lord require and punish the breach of this covenant in David, if he break it. But because it was ominous and reproachful to suppose such a thing of David, by a figure called euphemismus, he names David's enemies for David; as they also expound 1 Sam. xxv. 22. But the former sense seems more probable, because this verse contains only Jonathan's stipulation or covenant with David and his house, which being expressed in the former part of it, is in this latter part confirmed by the usual form of imprecation; and the restipulation or covenant of David to Jonathan and his house is mentioned in the next verse. Yet may that other sense stand well enough; taking these words for Jonathan's adjuration of David to be kind to him, confirmed with an imprecation in case he do otherwise; as if he should say, I adjure thee, as thou hopest to escape such a mischief, (which I had rather might befall thine enemies than thee,) that thou deal not so ungratefully with me or my house: which adjuration of Jonathan David seconds by an oath in the next verse, at the request of Jonathan.

17 And Jonathan caused David to swear again, ⁿbecause he loved him: ⁿfor he loved him as he loved his own soul.

swear, i. e. having himself sworn to David, or adjured David, in the foregoing verse, he here requires David's oath to him, by way of restitution or confirmation. Because he loved him; because he had a true friendship for David, he desired that the covenant might be inviolably observed through all their generations.

When thou hast stayed three days; either at Beth-lehem with thy friends, ver. 5, or elsewhere, as thou shalt see fit. When the business was in hand, Heb. in the day of business; or, of the business. And these words are to be joined, either, 1. With the words next foregoing; and so they note the time when David hid himself there; which was, when this same business which now they were treating about was in agitation formerly, to wit, to discover Saul's mind and purpose towards him, chap. xix. 2, 3. Or, 2. With the more remote words; and so they note the time when David should come to the place appointed, and formerly used to hide himself in, upon a like occasion, to wit, in the day when the business here spoken of was to be done, i. e. when the discovery of Saul's mind was to be made. By the stone Ezel, or, by the stone of going, or travelling, i. e. by that stone which directs travellers in the way, to wit, in some cave, or convenient place, which was near that stone.

20 And I will shoot three arrows on the side thereof, as though I shot at a mark.

He chose this way to avoid Saul's suspicion, because bows and arrows were the principal arms of those times; and Jonathan, as well as others, did oft go forth to exercise himself with them, both for recreation, and improvement of his skill in that art. Besides, he knew not that he should have any opportunity of private converse with David, by reason of passengers, though the event proved better than he expected.

21 And, behold, I will send a lad, saying, Go, find out the arrows. If I expressly say unto the lad, Behold, the arrows are on this side of thee, take them; then come thou: for there is peace to thee, and † no hurt; ° as the LORD liveth.

† Heb. not any thing, q Jer. 4. 2.

22 But if I say thus unto the young man, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee; go thy way: for the LORD hath sent thee away.

Take this for an intimation of God's providence, that thou shouldst keep away from the court.

r ver. 14, 15. See ver. 42. 23 And as touching ° the matter which thou and I have spoken of, behold, the LORD be between thee and me for ever.

24 ¶ So David hid himself in the field: and when the new moon was come, the king sat him down to eat meat.

David hid himself, to wit, at the time appointed; for it seems probable that he went first to Beth-lehem, as he bade Jonathan tell his father, ver. 6, and thence returned to the field, when the occasion required; else we must charge him with a downright lie, which ought not to be imagined (without any apparent cause) concerning so good a man, especially in so distressed and dangerous a condition. And why should he hide himself there so long before the time when Jonathan was to come thither to inform him? Nor were there any need of appointing a certain time to meet, if David were there all the while.

25 And the king sat upon his seat, as at other times, even upon a seat by the wall: and Jonathan arose, and Abner sat by Saul's side, and David's place was empty.

Jonathan arose, to wit, from his seat where he was sat next to the king, whence he arose, and stood up at Abner's coming, to do honour to him, who was his father's cousin, and the general of the army. David's place seems to have been next to Abner, on the same side with him.

26 Nevertheless Saul spake not any thing that day: for he thought, Something hath befallen him, he is ° not clean; † surely he is not clean.

Something hath befallen; some accident which hath rendered him unclean, and so unfit to partake of this feast, which consisted in part of the remainders of these peace-offerings, according to the law, Lev. vii. 20; unfit also to come into any company, much more into the king's company, lest he should pollute them also. See above, on ver. 5. See also Lev. xi., xv.

27 And it came to pass on the morrow, which was the second day of the month, that David's place was empty: and Saul said unto Jonathan his son, Wherefore cometh not the son of Jesse to meat, neither yesterday, nor to day?

Which was the second day of the month, or, on the morrow of the new moon, being the second day; either, 1. Of the three days appointed, ver. 5, 19. Or, 2. Of the feast. Or, 3. Of the month. Saul said unto Jonathan, who was David's friend, and best knew his mind and his ways. He calls him the son of Jesse, in scorn and contempt, to note the meanness of his original; and as not deigning to call him by his proper name: see below, chap. xxii. 9; xxv. 10. Neither yesterday, nor to-day; for the uncleanness which came by some chance usually lasted but for one day. See Lev. xi.

29 And he said, Let me go, I pray thee; for our family hath a sacrifice in the city; and my brother, he hath commanded me to be there: and now, if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and see my brethren. Therefore he cometh not unto the king's table.

He hath commanded me to be there; either in his father's name, or in the right of the first-born; one branch of which was authority over his brethren in all the concerns of the family; whereof this was one.

30 Then Saul's anger was kindled against Jonathan, and he said unto him, || † Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman, do not I know that thou hast chosen the son of Jesse to thine own confusion, and unto the confusion of thy mother's nakedness?

† Or, Thou perverse rebel. † Heb. Son of perverse rebellion.

Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman; this base temper of thine thou hadst not from me, but from thy mother; of whose perverseness I have had so much experience. Or, thou son of perverse rebellion, i. e. thou perverse and rebellious son. Or, thou most perverse rebel; for in the Hebrew language, the word son, thus used, is an aggravation of a man's crime, and notes one who is extraordinarily addicted to it. Thus he calls him, because he hid and preserved that man whom the king had commanded to be brought forth, that he might be slain. To thine own confusion; for it will be a horrible shame and reproach unto thee, that David by his crafty insinuations, and fair pretences, should cheat thee of thy kingdom. To the confusion of thy mother's nakedness; men will conclude, that thy mother was a whore, and thou a bastard; and that thou hast no royal blood in thy veins, that canst so tamely give up thy crown to so contemptible a person.

31 For as long as the son of Jesse liveth upon the ground, thou shalt not be established, nor thy kingdom. Wherefore now send and fetch him unto me, for he

Thus he grossly mistakes the cause of Jonathan's loss of the kingdom, which was not David's art, but Saul's sin; and vainly endeavours to prevent God's irrevocable sentence.

32 And Jonathan answered Saul his father, and said unto him, "Wherefore shall he be slain? what hath he done?"

To smite him, i. e. to wound him, though not to smite him even to the wall, as he designed to do to David, chap. xix. 10.

34 So Jonathan arose from the table in fierce anger, and did eat no meat the second day of the month: for he was grieved for David, because his father had done him shame.

Or, and because; for this is a second cause of his grief. The conjunction and is oftentimes omitted, and to be supplied; as Psal. xxxiii. 2; cxliv. 9; Josh. lxiii. 11; Hab. iii. 11.

35 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him.

37 And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and said, Is not the arrow beyond thee?

To the place, i. e. near to the place. Or, and the lad went, or was going on to the place; for the words following show that he was not yet come thither. The Hebrew verb bo, which properly signifies to come, sometimes signifies to go; as here, and Ruth iii. 7; Jonah i. 3.

38 And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make speed, haste, stay not. And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his master.

Haste, stay not; so he bids him, because finding the coast clear, he made haste to take the opportunity to speak with his dearly beloved David.

Toward the south; in respect of the stone where David by appointment hid himself. Until David exceeded; as well he might, because he was driven away, not only from his dear friend Jonathan, but also from his wife, and all his relations, and from the commonwealth of Israel, and from the service of God; as he complains below, chap. xxvi. 19.

|| Or, the LORD be witness of that which, &c. See ver. 23.

We have sworn both of us; therefore doubt not but I will ever love thee, and faithfully serve thee; and the like I assure myself from thee; and this must be our comfort in our state of separation.

David cometh to Nob to Ahimelech the priest; pretendeth secret business from Saul; asketh bread: Ahimelech giveth him the shew-bread, 1—6. Doeg seeth this, 7. David asketh arms: Ahimelech giveth him Goliath's sword, 8, 9. David cometh to Achish; is known; and afraid; feigneth himself mad, 10—13. Achish is angry with his servants for bringing him, 14, 15.

THEN came David to Nob to ^{*}Ahimelech the priest: and Ahimelech was [†]afraid at the meeting of David, and said unto him, Why art thou alone, and no man with thee?

a ch. 14. 3. called Ahiah. Called also Ahiahar, Mark 2. 26. b ch. 16. 4.

Nob; a city of priests, as it is called chap. xxii. 19; either, 1. Because it was assigned to the priests. For though it be not expressed by this name among their cities, Josh. xxi., yet it might be one of those cities there named by some other name, which name might be changed; or another new name added to the old for some reason now unknown, as was very usual among the Hebrews: compare 1 Chron. vi. Or, 2. Because it was now inhabited by the priests for the service of the tabernacle, which now was here; as appears from ver. 7, 9; for as the kings of Israel were to consult with God's oracle in all their weighty affairs, so they endeavoured to have it in or near their own habitations. Hence it was first carried by Joshua to Shiloh in his tribe of Ephraim; and afterwards by David into his tribe and city; and now, as it seems, had been by Saul carried to Nob, a city in the tribe of Benjamin, Neh. xi. 32, near to Anathoth, 1 Kings ii. 26. Hither David resorted, partly for a supply of his necessities, which he supposed he might receive here, without danger of being betrayed into Saul's hands; and principally, that in this great distress, and his resolution of going out of the kingdom, he might seek and receive comfort and counsel from the Lord. Ahimelech the priest, to wit, the chief priest, brother to that Ahiah, chap. xiv. 3; and he being now dead, his successor in the priesthood, for they were both sons of Ahitub, 1 Sam. xiv. 3; xxii. 11. Ahimelech was afraid; suspecting some extraordinary cause of his coming in such a manner, and fearing the worst, as men usually do in such cases. Why art thou alone? for though David had some servants and companions, as is manifest from ver. 4, 5, and from Matt. xii. 3, 4, whom Jonathan probably had sent to a place appointed to serve and guard him; yet they were left at another place, as David himself affirmeth, ver. 2. And David was now alone, as also he was when he fled to Achish, ver. 10.

2 And David said unto Ahimelech the priest, The king hath commanded me a business, and hath said unto me, Let no man know any thing of the business whereabout I send thee, and what I have commanded thee: and I have appointed my servants to such and such a place.

The king hath commanded me a business: this seems to be a plain lie, extorted from him by fear and necessity. But as it was officious for himself, so it was pernicious to all the priests there. Whence David afterwards declares his repentance for this sin of lying, Psal. cxix. 29. To such and such a place; to a certain place which is not material nor convenient now to mention, because the whole business requires concealment.

3 Now therefore what is under thine hand?

give me five loaves of bread in mine hand, or what there is † present.

Under thine hand, to wit, in thy power, and ready for thee to give, and for me to take, and eat.

4 And the priest answered David, and said, There is no common bread under mine hand, but there is c hallowed bread; d if the young men have kept themselves at least from women.

Under mine hand, to wit, here in the tabernacle; though doubtless he had enough of that and of other provisions in his house; but David was in great haste, and in fear of Doeg, whom he saw and knew there, chap. xxii. 22, and therefore would not stay till any thing could be fetched thence. Hallowed bread; the shew-bread, which was appropriated to the priests; of which see Exod. xxv. 30; Lev. xxiv. 5. At least from women; either from uncleanness by women, which might be divers ways contracted; or from conjugal converse with their wives; which though it did not defile them, yet he thought might debar them from the participation of such very sacred things; which he gathered by the analogy of that precept, Exod. xix. 15. There was a double impediment to the giving of this bread to them: 1. Its sacredness in itself; which the priest implies, and David answers, ver. 5, and the priest was satisfied therein by David's extraordinary occasions and great necessities. 2. The purity and abstinence from all women, which he supposeth should be in those that use it; concerning which he now inquires. And though he mention this only concerning David's young men, and out of modesty and reverence to David forbears to name him; yet he is also included in the number, as David's answer shows.

5 And David answered the priest, and said unto him, Of a truth women have been kept from us about these three days, since I came out, and the e vessels of the young men are holy, and the bread is in a manner common, ¶ yea, though it were sanctified this day f in the vessel.

¶ 1 Thess. 4. 4. Or, especially when this day there is other sanctified in the vessel. f Lev. 2. 26.

¶ About these three days; as long as the law required, Exod. xix. 15. And so long David and his men had, it seems, hid themselves for fear of Saul in some of those caves, whereof there were many in those parts; whereby they were kept both from all converse with any other persons besides themselves, and consequently from women; and withal, from food convenient for them. Since I came out from the place where Jonathan and David met. The vessels, i. e. either, 1. Their garments, or other utensils for their journey. Or, 2. Their bodies, for of them the question was, ver. 4; and having now said that women had been kept from them, he infers that therefore their bodies were holy, their members were undefiled. Thus the word vessel is used 1 Thess. iv. 4, and in other authors, both Greek and Latin. The bread is in a manner common, Heb. and this (to wit, the bread; which is easily supplied out of the former verse, because that was the thing about which the present discourse was, and against the giving whereof the priest started an objection, ver. 4, to which David here giveth an answer) is in a manner, or, after a sort, common, i. e. considering the time, and our necessity, this may be asked in a manner like common bread, and so is used by others. For though for a season, whilst it is to stand before the Lord, it be so holy, that the priest himself might not eat it; yet afterwards it is eaten by the priest, and by his whole family, as their common food; and so it may be by us, in our circumstances. Though it were sanctified this day in the vessel; if it were but newly put into the vessel, it must give place to the great law of necessity and charity, because God will have mercy preferred before sacrifice. Or thus, especially, when, or, the rather because this day there is other (i. e. new bread) sanctified in the vessel, i. e. put into the vessel which was made to receive this bread, Exod. xxv. 29, and thereby sanctified, or consecrated to God; and therefore the former shew-bread is now to be removed, and employed for the common use of the priest and his family.

6 So the priest e gave him hallowed bread: for there was no bread there but the shewbread, h that was taken from before the LORD, to put hot bread in the day when it was taken away.

There was no bread there, to wit, in the tabernacle, where David and the priest now were. In the day when it was taken away, which was done upon the sabbath day, Lev. xxiv. 8; for though they might not then kindle a fire to heat the bread in, yet they might and did keep it hot in an oven that had been heated before the sabbath.

7 Now a certain man of the servants of Saul was there that day, detained before the LORD; and his name was i Doeg, an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen that belonged to Saul.

Doeg; not by force from others, but by his own choice; he fixed his abode there for that day; either because it was the sabbath day, on which he might not proceed in his journey, or other business; or for the discharge of some vow; or to beg direction and help from God in some great business. Before the Lord, i. e. at the tabernacle. An Edomite; either, 1. By his habitation and conversation among those people for some considerable time, as for the same reason Uriah is called the Hittite, and Obed-edom the Gittite; or rather, 2. By his birth and nation; but he was proselyted to the Jewish religion, or took it up for sinister ends, being advanced, as here we read, to a place of trust and preferment, possibly upon this occasion.

8 ¶ And David said unto Ahimelech, And is there not here under thine hand spear or sword? for I have neither brought my sword nor my weapons with me, because the king's business required haste.

He left his weapons behind him, that he might with less suspicion remove from place to place, and hide himself from Saul and his spies. The king's business required haste; the message came to me when I was unarmed, and the business required so great expedition that I could not go home to fetch my weapons.

9 And the priest said, The sword of Goliath the Philistine, whom thou slewest in k the valley of Elah, l behold, it is here wrapped in a cloth behind the ephod: if thou wilt take that, take it: for there is no other save that here. And David said, There is none like that; give it me.

Behind the ephod, i. e. behind that holy place allotted for the keeping of the sacred or priestly garments; all which are here comprehended under the ephod; which, as the chief of the kind, is put for all the rest. Here it was laid up as a sacred monument of God's power and goodness, and that famous victory, related chap. xvii. There is none like that; because it not only served him for his use, for he was a strong and tall man, and one that could wield that sword, as we saw, chap. xvii., but was also a pledge of God's favour to him, and a great encouragement to his faith.

10 ¶ And David arose, and fled that day for fear of Saul, and went to ¶ Achish the king of Gath.

A strange action; but it must be considered, 1. That Saul's rage was so great and implacable, his power also and diligence in hunting after him so great, that he despair'd of escaping him any other way; and it is not strange if a desperate disease produceth a desperate remedy. 2. David might reasonably think, that being persecuted and banished by Saul, and the Israelites under his command, he should be welcome to the Philistines; who would be glad, not only to be freed from all those evils which he had from time to time done, and was likely further to do to them, but also to make him their friend, and oblige him by their kindness, and to make him the more odious and irreconcilable to Saul and the Israelites. Quest. But why did he go to these, and not rather to some other neighbour nation? Answ. Because they were all at peace with Saul; and therefore would certainly have delivered him up, upon Saul's demands.

11 And ^m the servants of Achish said unto him, Is not this David the king of the land? did they not sing one to another of him in dances, saying, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands?"

The king of the land, or, of this land, i. e. of the land of Canaan. They call him king, either more generally for the governor, as that word is used Deut. xxxiii. 5, for the most eminent captain and commander, and, as it were, the king of the Israelitish armies; or rather, more specially, the king, to wit, the king elect, the person designed to be king; for by this time the fame of Saul's rejection, and David's destination to the kingdom, was got abroad among the Israelites, and from them probably to the Philistines' ears. Did they not sing one to another of him in dances, saying, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands? and therefore consider what to do; and now thine and our great enemy is in thy hand, be sure thou never let him go alive.

12 And David ^o laid up these words in his heart, and was sore afraid of Achish the king of Gath.

Lest either their revenge or policy should prompt them to kill him.

13 And ^p he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands, and ^q scrabbled on the doors of the gate, and let his spittle fall down upon his beard.

His behaviour; his speech and gesture; and, it may be, his habit also. Feigned himself mad; which they might the more easily believe, partly because of the disappointment of his great hopes, and his extreme danger and trouble from Saul, which might well make him mad; and partly because he had put himself into their hands, which they supposed none but a fool or a madman would have done. And David counterfeited this madness, that he might procure both their pity and their contempt; that they being freed from jealousies and fears of future mischief from David, and from his wise conduct, of which they had sad experience, might be secure of him, and so spare him. In their hands, i. e. whilst he was in their power, and before them.

14 Then said Achish unto his servants, Lo, ye see the man ^r is mad: wherefore ^r then have ye brought him to me?

Ye see the man is mad; and so were Achish and his men too, to be so soon cheated. But this must be ascribed to the wise and powerful providence of God, who, in answer to David's prayer now made, which is recorded Psal. xxxiv. and lvi., did infatuate them, as he hath done many others in like cases. Wherefore then have ye brought him to me? what service can I expect from him? or what cause have I to fear him?

15 Have I need of mad men, that ye have brought this fellow to play the mad man in my presence? shall this fellow come into my house?

I need wise men, not such fools or madmen as this is. I will not have my court disgraced with entertaining such fellows.

CHAP. XXII.

David cometh to Adullam, where companies resort to him, 1, 2. He goeth to Mizpeh, and commendeth his parents to the king of Moab, 3, 4. Admonished by Gad, he returneth to Judah: Saul pursueth him; complaineth of his servants' unfaithfulness, 5—8. Doeg accuseth Ahimelech: Saul sentenceth him, the high priest, and the rest of the priests, to die: Doeg slayeth eighty-five priests: the city Nob and all in it is laid waste; only Abiathar the priest remained alive fleeing to David, 9—21. David acknowledgeth himself to be the cause hereof, 22, 23.

DAVID therefore departed thence, and ^a escaped ^b to the cave Adullam: and when his brethren and all his father's house heard it, they went down thither to him.

The cave Adullam; a place of considerable strength, 2 Sam. xxiii. 13; 1 Chron. xi. 15, in the land of Judah, Josh. xv. 21, 35, which being his own tribe, and the tribe to which God had first promised the kingdom, Gen. xlix. 10, he hoped for some protection and assistance there. They went down thither to him; partly, to comfort and assist him; partly, to secure themselves at the present from Saul's rage, which they knew to be fierce and cruel, and thought he might extend it to David's friends; especially, because they had so lately entertained him, chap. xx. 6, 29; and partly, that they might share with David in his honour and advancement; which they now concluded certain and near, though it was interrupted with some difficulties.

2 ^c And every one that was in distress, and every one that ^d was in debt, and every one that ^e was discontented, gathered themselves unto him; and he became a captain over them: and there were with him about four hundred men.

Every one that was in distress, through want, or oppression, or otherwise. Every one that was in debt. How could David receive and countenance such persons to the wrong of their creditors? Answ. 1. David might be ignorant of their debts; and it is most likely they concealed that, and pretended other causes of their coming to him, as the protection of the innocent, and the defence of his just rights, &c. 2. They might be, and probably were, poor debtors, whom their creditors were obliged to spare and favour, Exod. xxii. 25. And though their persons were with David, yet their land and goods were liable to their creditors. Every one that was discontented, or, bitter in soul, i. e. in an afflicted and calamitous condition. He became a captain over them; he did not justify nor maintain any injustice or wickedness, which some of them possibly might be guilty of; but, on the contrary, he instructed and obliged them to the practice of all justice and honesty; as appears from chap. xxv. 15; and he only used them for his just defence.

3 ¶ And David went thence to Mizpeh of Moab: and he said unto the king of Moab, Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, come forth, and be with you, till I know what God will do for me.

Mizpeh of Moab; so called, to distinguish it from that Mizpeh, 1 Sam. vii. 5. He said unto the king of Moab; partly because he was related to and descended from one of his people, Ruth iv. 10; and partly because he was Saul's enemy, 1 Sam. xiv. 47, and therefore more likely to be David's friend. My father and my mother, who being very aged, were not able to endure those journeys and hardships which David foresaw that he was likely to be exposed to. Till I know what God will do for me; till I see the accomplishment of God's promise made to me.

4 And he brought them before the king of Moab: and they dwelt with him all the while that David was in the hold.

Before the king of Moab; into his presence, that he might see them, and give them leave to dwell in his dominion. In the hold; either, 1. In Mizpeh of Moab, which was a very strong hold. But it is apparent he speaks of some hold where his father and mother were exposed to fear and danger from Saul, which they were not in the king of Moab's royal city. Or, 2. In the cave of Adullam, mentioned above, ver. 1. Or, 3. In holes; the singular number being put for the plural, as is frequent; i. e. as long as David was forced to go from place to place, and from hold to hold, to secure himself; for it concerned David to secure his father, and he did doubtless secure him for all that time; and not only whilst he was in the hold of Mizpeh, or of Adullam, which was but a little while.

5 ¶ And the prophet ^dGad said unto David, Abide not in the hold; depart, and get thee into the land of Judah. Then David departed, and came into the forest of Hareth.

Abide not in the hold; do not shut up thyself in holes and holds. Get thee into the land of Judah; go and show thyself in the land of Judah, that thou mayst publicly put in thy claim to the kingdom after Saul's death, and that thy friends may be invited and encouraged to appear on thy behalf. Hereby also God would exercise David's faith, and wisdom, and courage; and so prepare him for the kingdom, and uphold and increase his reputation among the people. In the forest of Hareth there were many caves and lurking-places.

6 ¶ When Saul heard that David was discovered, and the men that were with him, (now Saul abode in Gibeah under a ¶ tree in Ramah, having his spear in his hand, and all his servants were standing about him;)

¶ Or, grove in a high place.

In Ramah, i. e. in the territory of Gibeah, in or near (for so the Hebrew particle is oft used, as hath been showed) Ramah. Or, in the town of Gibeah—in a high place; for so the word Ramah unquestionably signifies; and so it is here rendered by some, both ancient and modern, interpreters. Having his spear in his hand; either as an ensign of majesty, for in old times kings carried a spear instead of a sceptre, as Justin and others note; or as an instrument of self-defence or cruelty, as occasion required.

7 Then Saul said unto his servants that stood about him, Hear now, ye Benjamites; will the son of Jesse ^agive every one of you fields and vineyards, and make you all captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds;

• ch. 8. 14.

Ye Benjamites; you that are of my own tribe and kindred, from whom David designs to translate the kingdom to another tribe, will he distribute profits and preferments amongst you Benjamites as I have done, and intend still to do? will he not rather prefer those of his own tribe before you?

8 That all of you have conspired against me, and there is none that †sheweth me that 'my son hath made a league with the son of Jesse, and there is none of you that is sorry for me, or sheweth unto me that my son hath stirred up my servant against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

† Heb. unconceal wine ear. ch. 20. 2. f ch. 18. 3. & 20. 30.

My son hath made a league with the son of Jesse: this he suspected, partly from Jonathan's passionate love for David, which he had formerly and constantly declared; and from his late discontent and departure from his father, mentioned chap. xx. 34; and partly from David's confidence, in invading the land with four hundred men, which he thought he would never presume to do, without some encouragement or promise of assistance from Jonathan. To lie in wait, i. e. to design against my crown and life (which will appear to be a most groundless suspicion and false accusation).

9 ¶ Then answered ^eDoeg the Edomite, which was set over the servants of Saul, and said, I saw the son of Jesse coming to Nob, to ^hAhimelech the son of ⁱAhitub.

not improbable that he told other lies also, not here expressed; and withal, he was guilty of concealing part of the truth, which in this case he was also obliged to declare for Ahimelech's just defence, to wit, the cunning pretence and artifice whereby David circumvented Ahimelech. Others think this was true, because Ahimelech seems to confess it, ver. 15, though that may be spoken by way of concession. If it were so as Doeg declares, this was no new thing. Then he might add that it was not so, though this be not here mentioned; for it is evident that all his answer or apology is not here expressed; for here is not a word of the victuals or sword which he gave him.

11 Then the king sent to call Ahimelech the priest, the son of Ahitub, and all his father's house, the priests that were in Nob: and they came all of them to the king.

All his father's house; of the house of Eli, which God had threatened to cut off, chap. ii. 31.

12 And Saul said, Hear now, thou son of Ahitub. And he answered, † Here I ^{† Heb. Behold me.}

Thou son of Ahitub; he shows his contempt and anger, that he would not vouchsafe to name him: see before on chap. xx. 27.

13 And Saul said unto him, Why have ye conspired against me, thou and the son of Jesse, in that thou hast given him bread, and a sword, and hast enquired of God for him, that he should rise against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

14 Then Ahimelech answered the king, and said, And who is so faithful among all thy servants as David, which is the king's son in law, and goeth at thy bidding, and is honourable in thine house?

He doth not determine the differences between Saul and David, nor affirm what David now was; but only declared what David had formerly been, both really, and in public fame and opinion.

15 Did I then begin to enquire of God for him? be it far from me: let not the king impute any thing unto his servant, nor to all the house of my father: for thy servant knew nothing of all this, † less or ^{† Heb. little or great.} more.

Any thing, or, this thing, to wit, which thou now chargest me with, that I should assist David in any evil design against thee. Thy servant knew nothing of all this; or, of thy suspicion concerning him. For as for Saul's attempts upon David, well might Ahimelech impute them wholly to the violence of Saul's passion and disease, seeing even Jonathan did so, as may be gathered from 1 Sam. xx. 2.

16 And the king said, Thou shalt surely die, Ahimelech, thou, and all thy father's house.

17 ¶ And the king said unto the ¶ foot- ^{¶ Or, guard. † Heb. runners.} men that stood about him, Turn, and slay the priests of the LORD; because their hand also is with David, and because they knew when he fled, and did not shew it to me. But the servants of the king ^mwould not put forth their hand to fall ^{m See Ex. 1. 17.} upon the priests of the LORD.

Choosing rather to offend the king, by disobeying his wicked and bloody command, than to offend God, by shedding the blood of such innocent and sacred persons.

18 And the king said to Doeg, Turn thou, and fall upon the priests. And Doeg the Edomite turned, and he fell upon the priests, and ⁿslew on that day ^{n See ch. 2. 31.} fourscore and five persons that did wear a linen ephod.

Turn thou; or, go about, to wit, from man to man, till thou hast killed all. The Edomite; which is noted to wipe off the stain of this butchery from the Israelitish nation, and to show why he was so ready to do it, because he was one of that nation which had an implacable hatred against all Israelites, and against the priests of the Lord. Slew on that day fourscore and five persons, with his own hand; which was not difficult, when no resistance was made. That did wear a linen ephod; not at that time, as some fancy, but usually; such as used to minister to the Lord in a linen ephod, which priests and Levites used to do. See Exod. xxviii. 40, &c.; 1 Sam. ii. 18.

o ver. 9, 11. 19 °And Nob, the city of the priests, smote he with the edge of the sword, both men and women, children and sucklings, and oxen, and asses, and sheep, with the edge of the sword.

22 And David said unto Abiathar, I knew it that day, when Doeg the Edomite was there, that he would surely tell Saul: I have occasioned the death of all the persons of thy father's house.

I knew it; his malice and ambition made me suspect that he would do it.

CHAP. XXIII.

David, inquiring of the Lord by Abiathar, rescueth Keilah, and goeth into it, 1—6. God showing him the coming of Saul, and treachery of the Keilites, 7—12, he flieth thence to the wilderness of Ziph, with his six hundred men, 13—15. Here Jonathan cometh to him, and reneweth the covenant of friendship with him, 16—18. The Ziphites discover him to Saul, 19—23; who pursueth him into the wilderness of Maon, 24—26. He is called away by a message that the Philistines had invaded the land, 27, 28. David dwelleth at En-gedi, 29.

a Josh. 15. 44. THEN they told David, saying, Behold, the Philistines fight against °Keilah, and they rob the threshingfloors.

Then they told David; or, Now they had told David, to wit, before he heard of the slaughter of the priests. Keilah; a city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 44, not far from the forest of Hareth, where David now was, chap. xxii. 5. The threshing-floors usually were without the cities, in places open to the wind. See Judg. vi. 11; Ruth iii. 2, &c.

b ver. 4, 6, 9. ch. 30. 6. 2 Sam. 5. 19, 22. 2 Therefore David °enquired of the LORD, saying, Shall I go and smite these Philistines? And the LORD said unto David, Go and smite the Philistines, and save Keilah.

David inquired of the Lord; either by Abiathar; or rather, by Gad, who was a prophet, 2 Sam. xxiv. 11, and David's seer, 1 Chron. xxi. 9, and was now with David, chap. xxii. 5; for Abiathar was not yet come to him, ver. 6. Shall I go and smite these Philistines? for the case was both doubtful and new, he having not yet made any attempt upon the Philistines, but by Saul's commission; and dangerous, because of the small number of his forces.

3 And David's men said unto him, Behold, we be afraid here in Judah: how much more then if we come to Keilah against the armies of the Philistines?

Here in Judah, i. e. in this part of Judah, whereas yet we have no army to oppose us; for else Keilah also was in Judah. If we come to Keilah; when we shall have a potent enemy before us, the Philistines, and, it may be, another behind us, even Saul, who probably will come forth, either to resist the Philistines, or to intercept us.

4 Then David enquired of the LORD yet again. And the LORD answered him and said, Arise, go down to Keilah; for I will deliver the Philistines into thine hand.

David inquired of the Lord yet again; not for his own, but for his soldiers' satisfaction and encouragement, as Gideon did, Judg. vii.

5 So David and his men went to Keilah, and fought with the Philistines, and brought away their cattle, and smote them with a great slaughter. So David saved the inhabitants of Keilah.

The Philistines had either brought their cattle out of their land, or had taken from the Israelites in their march, for the sustenance of their army.

6 And it came to pass, when Abiathar the son of Ahimelech °fled to David to Keilah, that he came down with an ephod in his hand. c ch. 22. 20.

Or, with the ephod, to wit, the high priest's ephod, in which were the Urim and Thummim, Exod. xxviii. 30, which when Ahimelech and the rest of the priests went to Saul, were probably left in his hand, and to his care; which gave him the opportunity both of escaping, whilst Doeg the butcher was killing his brethren, and of bringing away the ephod, which Saul had oft grossly neglected, and now was justly deprived of it.

7 ¶ And it was told Saul that David was come to Keilah. And Saul said, God hath delivered him into mine hand; for he is shut in, by entering into a town that hath gates and bars. cir. 1061.

He easily believed what he greedily desired, though his own experience had oft showed him how strangely God had delivered him out of his hands, and what a singular care God had over him. For he is shut in, by entering into a town that hath gates and bars; so that which he chose for his safety will be his certain ruin.

8 And Saul called all the people together to war, to go down to Keilah, to besiege David and his men.

9 ¶ And David knew that Saul secretly practised mischief against him; and °he said to Abiathar the priest, Bring hither the ephod. d Num. 27. 21. ch. 30. 7.

Saul secretly practised mischief against him; whereby it may seem he pretended that he raised his army to defend Keilah and his country from the Philistines, and kept his intention against David in his own breast. Or, designed or devised; for so the word signifies; and so it is here translated by many; and it seems both from ver. 8, and from his publicly avowed jealousy of and rage against David, that he declared his design to be against him, as a traitor to his crown and dignity. Bring hither the ephod, and put it upon thee, that thou mayst ask counsel of God for me.

10 Then said David, O LORD God of Israel, thy servant hath certainly heard that Saul seeketh to come to Keilah, °to destroy the city for my sake. e ch. 22. 13.

David said this by the priest, for he was to make the inquiry of God, Numb. xxvii. 21, and David puts the words into his mouth.

11 Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? will Saul come down, as thy servant hath heard? O LORD God of Israel, I beseech thee, tell thy servant. And the LORD said, He will come down.

Will the men of Keilah deliver me up, to wit, if I continue in their city, and if Saul come down? The Lord said. From this place it may appear that God's answer by Urim and Thummim was not by any change in the colour or situation of the precious stones in the breastplate of the ephod, but by a voice or suggestion from God to the high priest. He will come down, i. e. he purposeth to come, if thou continuest here; for still, as David's question, so God's answer, is upon supposition, as is here sufficiently implied.

12 Then said David, Will the men of Keilah † deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? And the LORD said, They will deliver thee up.

To wit, if thou abidest there; for God saw their hearts, their purposes and passions, their aversion from David, and their affections to Saul, and knew better than themselves what they would do in that case.

13 ¶ Then David and his men, ^f which were about six hundred, arose and departed out of Keilah, and went whithersoever they could go. And it was told Saul that David was escaped from Keilah; and he forbore to go forth.

Which were about six hundred; two hundred being added to his former number, chap. xxii. 2, upon his last and great success against the Philistines. Whithersoever they could go; hither or thither, where they could find refuge, or a hiding-place.

14 And David abode in the wilderness in strong holds, and remained in ^s a mountain in the wilderness of ^h Ziph. And Saul ⁱ sought him every day, but God delivered him not into his hand.

As Saul fondly persuaded himself he intended, ver. 7.

15 And David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life: and David was in the wilderness of Ziph in a wood.

David saw; either by information from his spies, or by prospect from the top of the mountain where he was.

16 ¶ And Jonathan Saul's son arose, and went to David into the wood, and strengthened his hand in God.

Jonathan went where David had appointed to meet him at that time, and strengthened his hand in God; he comforted and supported him against all his fears, by minding him of God's infallible promises made to him, and his singular providence which hitherto had and still would be with him.

17 And he said unto him, Fear not: for the hand of Saul my father shall not find thee; and thou shalt be king over Israel, and I shall be next unto thee; and ^k that also Saul my father knoweth.

I shall be next unto thee; which he gathered either from David's generosity, ingenuousness, and true friendship to him; or from some promise made to him by David concerning it. Or the meaning of the words, next unto thee, may be as much as to say, I shall be under thee, after thee, or inferior to thee, as the phrase tibi secundus oft signifies. So that the whole imports thus much: I do not look to be king myself, (as by my birth I might expect,) but that thou shalt be king, (God having so appointed,) and I but in a secondary place inferior to thee. That also Saul my father knoweth, by strong and well-grounded conjectures, as hath been noted.

18 And they two ^l made a covenant before the LORD: and David abode in the wood, and Jonathan went to his house.

They two made a covenant, i. e. renewed their former covenant before the Lord; setting themselves as in God's presence, and calling upon him to be witness between them.

19 ¶ Then ^m came up the Ziphites to Saul to Gibeah, saying, Doth not David hide himself with us in strong holds in the wood, in the hill of Hachilah, which is † on the south of ‖ Jeshimon?

The Ziphites were of David's own tribe, though for this their unnatural and strange carriage to him he calls them strangers, Psal. liv. 3.

20 Now therefore, O king, come down according to all the desire of thy soul to come down; and ⁿ our part shall be to deliver him into the king's hand.

It shall be our care and business to the utmost of our power. Or, we will undertake to deliver him, or betray him to thee.

21 And Saul said, Blessed be ye of the LORD; for ye have compassion on me.

Whilst others harden their hearts against me, and join with David in his treasonable conspiracy, you show your pity to me by your readiness to help me.

22 Go, I pray you, prepare yet, and know and see his place where his † haunt is, and who hath seen him there: for it is told me that he dealth very subtly.

Prepare yet, to wit, the matter; inform yourselves certainly of things, and dispose them so that we may not be frustrated in our attempt. Where his haunt is; in what cave, or wood, or mountain he is most frequently.

23 See therefore, and take knowledge of all the lurking places where he hideth himself, and come ye again to me with the certainty, and I will go with you: and it shall come to pass, if he be in the land, that I will search him out throughout all the thousands of Judah.

i. e. Through all the parts of that tribe. Every tribe was divided into thousands, as counties are now with us into hundreds. See Judg. vi. 15. Or, with all the thousands of Judah, i. e. I will raise against him all the forces of that tribe in which he trusteth and hideth himself. This he saith to animate them to the more vigorous prosecution of him.

24 And they arose, and went to Ziph before Saul: but David and his men were in the wilderness ° of Maon, in the plain on the south of Jeshimon.

Before Saul, to prepare things for Saul, who marched after them. In the wilderness of Maon, whither he went from the wilderness of Ziph, upon suspicion or information that Saul was coming thither.

25 Saul also and his men went to seek him. And they told David: wherefore he came down ‖ into a rock, and abode in the wilderness of Maon. And when Saul heard that, he pursued after David in the wilderness of Maon.

Into a rock, i. e. into a cave which was in the rock; or which might be called a rock, not for the height, but the strength of its situation; where at first he might think to hide himself, but upon further intelligence or consideration he removed from thence upon Saul's approach. Or, he came down from the rock, i. e. either, first, From the mountain mentioned in the next verse, whence he came down, that so he might get out of Saul's sight and reach. Or, secondly, From the hill of Hachilah, where David hid himself, which is said to be on the south of Jeshimon, ver. 19, as this place where he now was is also described, ver. 24, only that speaks of the plain, and this of the rock or hill adjoining to it, or in the midst of it. Or, he came down to Selah, as the Syriac and Arabic translate it; a place so called from the many rocks or stones which were in it, or near it.

26 And Saul went on this side of the mountain, and David and his men on that side of the mountain: ^{p Ps. 31. 22.} and David made haste to get away for fear of Saul; ^{q Ps. 17. 9.} for Saul and his men compassed David and his men round about to take them.

Dividing themselves into several parties, each marching a several way after him.

^{r See 2 Kings 19. 9.} 27 ¶ But there came a messenger unto Saul, saying, Haste thee, and come; for the Philistines have † invaded the land.

God stirring them up by his all-disposing providence to do it at this time for David's rescue. Compare 2 Kings xix. 9.

28 Wherefore Saul returned from pursuing after David, and went against the Philistines: therefore they called that place || Sela-hammahlekoth.

^{i. e. The rock of divisions,} because there Saul was separated, and in a manner pulled asunder from David, who was now almost within his reach.

29 ¶ And David went up from thence, and dwelt in strong holds at *En-gedi.

CHAP. XXIV.

Saul pursueth David to En-gedi; cometh into a cave in which was David with his men; who cutteth off the skirt of Saul's mantle, but will not kill him, 1—7. He communeth with Saul, and hereby evidenceth his innocency towards him, 8—15. Saul acknowledgeth his fault, taketh an oath of David, and departeth, 16—22.

^{a ch. 23. 28.} AND it came to pass, ^{† Heb. after.} when Saul was returned from † following the Philistines, that it was told him, saying, Behold, David is in the wilderness of En-gedi.

^{b Ps. 38. 12.} 2 Then Saul took three thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and ^bwent to seek David and his men upon the rocks of the wild goats.

Which the wild goats use to delight and climb into. These very rocks are exceeding steep, and full of precipices, and dangerous to travellers, as an eye-witness hath left upon record. And yet Saul was so transported with rage, as to venture himself and his army here, that he might take David, who, as he thought, would judge himself safe, and therefore be secure in such inaccessible places.

^{c Ps. 141. 6.} 3 And he came to the shepcotes by the way, where was a cave; and ^{d Judg. 3. 24.} Saul went in to ^{e Ps. 57. title, & 142. title.} cover his feet: and ^eDavid and his men remained in the sides of the cave.

Some think the sheep-cotes to have been caves into which they used to drive their sheep for shelter in tempestuous weather. To cover his feet, i. e. to ease his belly, as this phrase is thought to be used, Judg. iii. 24. The reason whereof is, because the eastern and some other nations of old wore no breeches, but loose and long coats or gowns, like those which women with us wear; but shorter, whence their feet and legs were in a great part uncovered; and sometimes other parts, which also in Scripture are designed by the name of the feet, (of which see on Gen. xlix. 10; Deut. xxviii. 57; 2 Kings xviii. 27; Isa. vii. 20.) were exposed to view. But when they went to perform this office of nature, which obliged them first to lift up their garments, they afterwards disposed them so decently, that all those parts might be covered and kept out of the sight of others. But possibly the words may have another meaning, and it is not to be despised that those ancient and venerable interpreters, the Syriac and Arabic, interpret this place and phrase quite otherwise, that Saul went in to sleep there; which was no uncouth thing to Saul, who being a military man, used to sleep with his soldiers upon the bare ground, as he did chap. xxvi. 7. And it is not improbable that Saul, being exceeding weary with his eager and almost incessant pursuit, first of David, then of the Philistines, and now of David again, both needed and desired some sleep; God also disposing him thereunto, that David might have this eminent occasion to demonstrate his integrity to Saul, and to all Israel; and, the season possibly being hot, he might choose to sleep in the cave, for the benefit of the shade. But all the question is, how it may appear that this is the meaning of this phrase, and what is the reason and ground of it? To which many things may be said. First, That this phrase is but twice used in Scripture, as far as I remember, here, and Judg. iii. 24, and this sense may conveniently enough agree to both of them; nay, this sense may seem better to agree with that place, Judg. iii., for that summer parlour or summer chamber (for both seem to be the same place, and were apparently for the same use, ver. 24, 25) seems to be a place far more convenient for sleeping than for easing of nature. And the servants' long stay and waiting for their lord seems to imply that they judged him gone to sleep, (which might take up a considerable time,) rather than to that other work, which requires but a little time. See my notes on Judg. iii. 24. Secondly, That there are many Hebrew phrases which do confessedly signify several things, albeit the reason of such significations be now utterly unknown to us, though it was doubtless known to the ancient Hebrews. Nor need I instance in particulars, seeing it is so in all languages, and particularly in the English tongue at this day, in which the use of many proverbs and phrases is well understood, though the reason of them be now lost; which if our modern infidels, who scoff at some passages of Scripture, which they either do not or will not understand, would consider, they would lose much of their sport. Thirdly, Although there be not that clear and full proof of this sense which some may require, (though indeed it cannot be reasonably expected in a thing so ancient, and in a phrase of so concise and narrow a language as the Hebrew is, and in an expression so rarely used in Scripture,) yet there are some intimations in Scripture which may seem to favour this interpretation. For persons composing themselves to sleep in this manner, are not only noted in the general to have been covered with a mantle, as is said of Sisera, Judg. iv. 18, 19; but particularly they are said to have their feet covered, as is expressly observed concerning Boaz, when he lay down to sleep in the threshing-floor, Ruth iii. 4, 7. The reason whereof may possibly be this, that when they lay down to sleep in their garments, they were secured as to the other parts of their body, only their feet were open and visible; and therefore it was convenient to cover their feet, partly to prevent the inconveniences of cold, (for which reason we here take special care to cover our feet in such cases,) and partly for decency sake, lest their garments being loose and large below, should be disordered, and so their nakedness should appear, as it happened to Noah, Gen. ix. 21. Compare Exod. xx. 26. And therefore it cannot seem strange or forced, if in this place Saul's covering of his feet design his composing himself to his rest. And if this be so, then the following difficulties of this history will appear to be plain and easy. For if Saul were fast asleep, which might easily be perceived by David and his men within; then it is not strange that Saul neither heard David and his men talking of him, nor felt David when he came to cut off his lap. David and his men remained in the sides of the cave; for that there were vast caves in those parts is affirmed not only by Josephus, but also by heathen authors; and Strabo, in his 16th book, writes of one which could receive four thousand men.

4 ¶ And the men of David said unto ^{f ch. 26. 8.} him, Behold the day of which the LORD said unto thee, Behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, that thou mayest do to him as it shall seem good unto thee. Then David arose, and cut off the skirt of † Saul's robe privily.

^{† Heb. the robe which was Saul's.} Quest. How came it to pass that Saul did not hear the debates of David and his men? Ans. First, The greater noise of Saul's men and horses, just by the cave's mouth, might easily drown the lesser. Secondly, There were in these large and capacious caves several cells or parts, whereof some were more inward and remote from the cave's mouth, in which they might freely converse and discourse, and yet neither be heard nor seen by Saul, though they could easily see him, and observe all his postures and actions, because he was in the mouth of the cave. Thirdly, Saul might be asleep, as hath been discoursed. Behold the day of which the Lord said unto thee; not that either God said these words, or made any such particular promise, as some apprehend; but they put this construction upon those confessed and known promises which God had made to him, of delivering him from all his enemies, and carrying him through all hinderances and difficulties to the throne and kingdom; which promise they conceived put him under an obligation of watching and taking all opportunities which God by his providence should put into his hand for their accomplishment, whereof this was an eminent instance. David arose, and cut off the skirt of Saul's robe privily. Quest. How could David do thus, and Saul not perceive it? Ans. First, This might be some loose and upper garment, which Saul might then lay at some distance from him, as we oft do on the same occasion. Secondly, In those vast caves there were divers particular cells and rooms, which were distinct one from another, yet so as there were secret passages from one to another, as may be gathered from the relations of historians and travellers. At the mouth of one of these, Saul might lay his upper garment; which David perceiving, and very well knowing all the cells and passages of that cave, might go some secret way to it, and cut off a little part of it. Thirdly, The noise which David's motion might be supposed to make was but small, and that he well knew would be perfectly drowned with the far greater noise of Saul's army, which lay at the mouth of the cave. Fourthly, The heroic actions of great men in Scripture are not to be measured by common rules. And as divers of the prophets and saints of old were in some of their actions, so David might be in this, moved to it by a secret and Divine impulse, which also gave him confidence of God's assistance therein, and of the success of his enterprise. Fifthly, This difficulty doth perfectly vanish, if Saul was now asleep. And as no man can prove that he was not, so that he was may seem probable from what is said on ver. 3.

5 And it came to pass afterward, that ^{2 Sam. 24.} David's heart smote him, because he had cut off Saul's skirt.

Not only because it was injurious, and reproachful, and dangerous to the king; but possibly because he had some secret thought of doing more to him, though he suppressed and overcame it; for he attempted this in pursuance of his soldiers' suggestion, ver. 4, which if followed would have carried him to further action.

6 And he said unto his men, ^h The LORD forbid that I should do this thing unto my master, the LORD's anointed, to stretch forth mine hand against him, seeing he is the anointed of the LORD.

He said unto his men; either, first, Before he cut off Saul's lap. Or rather, secondly, Afterwards, when he returned with Saul's lap in his hand, and his soldiers were enraged that he had not killed him. This thing, which you persuade me to do, even cut off Saul. Unto my master, whom I must still own for my sovereign lord and king, to whom I owe allegiance whilst he lives, although after his death the right of the kingdom be mine. To stretch forth mine hand against him, to wit, to kill him. A synecdochical expression. See Gen. xxxvii. 22. The anointed of the Lord, i. e. anointed by God to the kingdom; by which unction his person was made sacred and inviolable, and is so to be accounted by me, and you, and all his subjects. And as God only exalted him, and God only could pronounce a sentence of deprivation of his kingdom against him; so it belongs to God only to execute his own sentence, and actually to depose him.

7 So David [†] stayed his servants with these words, and suffered them not to rise against Saul. But Saul rose up out of the cave, and went on his way.

Stayed his servants, Heb. cut, or clave, or divided, or cut them off. The word notes both the eagerness and violence of David's men in prosecuting their desire, and David's resoluteness in opposing them, as it were, by force; wherein he shows great piety, and generosity, and loyalty to Saul.

8 David also arose afterward, and went out of the cave, and cried after Saul, saying, My lord the king. And when Saul looked behind him, David stooped with his face to the earth, and bowed himself.

9 ¶ And David said to Saul, ^{k Ps. 141. 6. Prov. 16. 28. & 17. 9.} Wherefore hearest thou men's words, saying, Behold, David seeketh thy hurt?

He prudently and modestly translates the fault from Saul to his followers and evil counsellors.

10 Behold, this day thine eyes have seen how that the LORD had delivered thee to day into mine hand in the cave: and some bade me kill thee: but mine eye spared thee; and I said, I will not put forth mine hand against my lord; for he is the LORD's anointed.

Mine eye; which words are easily understood both from the nature of the thing, and from the use of this phrase in other scriptures, as Deut. vii. 16; xiii. 8. The eye is said to spare, because it affects the heart with pity, and moves a man to spare.

11 Moreover, my father, see, yea, see the skirt of thy robe in my hand: for in that I cut off the skirt of thy robe, and killed thee not, know thou and see that there is ¹ neither evil nor transgression in mine hand, and I have not sinned against thee; yet thou ^m huntest my soul to ^{ch. 26. 20.} take it.

My father; so he calls him; partly, because he was his father-in-law; partly, in testimony of his respect and subjection to him as to a father; and partly, that by so amiable a compellation he might both insinuate himself into his favour, and mind him of that duty which as a father he owed to David. There is neither evil nor transgression in mine hand; I neither design mischief against thee with my heart, nor will I execute it with my hand, which my false accusers told thee I would do, if thou didst at any time fall into my hand.

12 ⁿ The LORD judge between me and thee, and the LORD ^o avenge me of thee: but mine hand shall not be upon thee. ^{n Gen. 16. 5. Judg. 11. 27. ch. 26. 10. Job 5. 8.}

Avenge me of thee, or, will avenge me of thee, to wit, if thou dost persist in thy injurious and cruel designs against me. Mine hand shall not be upon thee; I will not execute vengeance on thee, but will leave it wholly to God.

13 As saith the proverb of the ancients, Wickedness proceedeth from the wicked: but mine hand shall not be upon thee.

i. e. Wicked men will do wicked actions, among which this is one, to kill their sovereign lord and king; as David implied above, ver. 6, and more fully expresseth, chap. xxvi. 9. And therefore if I were so wicked and vile a person as thy courtiers represent me to thee, I should make no conscience of laying wicked and violent hands upon thee, but should assassinate thee when I had opportunity; which because I have now neglected and refused to do, though moved to it by some of my wicked soldiers, know therefore that I am not guilty of any wicked designs against thee, but am just and innocent towards thee. Or thus, Wicked actions (such as that would have been if I had killed thee) proceed only from the wicked, of which number I am none, and therefore my hand shall not be upon thee.

14 After whom is the king of Israel come out? after whom dost thou pursue? ^o after a dead dog, after ^p a flea. ^{o ch. 17. 43. 2 Sam. 9. 5. p ch. 26. 20.}

After a worthless, contemptible, and impotent person, such as I am. Thou disparageth thyself in contending with such a person; and even thy conquest of me will be inglorious and shameful.

15 ^a The LORD therefore be judge, and judge between me and thee, and ^r see, and ^s plead my cause, and ^t deliver me out of thine hand.

16 ¶ And it came to pass, when David had made an end of speaking these words unto Saul, that Saul said, ^u Is this thy voice, my son David? And Saul lifted up his voice, and wept.

Is this thy voice, my son David? he knew his voice, though being at a great distance from him, he could not discern his face. And wept; partly from the sense of his sin against God, and of his wicked and base carriage to David; (for there are some such temporary passions oft-times in hypocrites and ungodly men;) and principally from the remembrance of so great and so late a danger as he had now escaped; which commonly produceth grief and tears; as 2 Sam. xiii. 36. Yet these may be tears of affection or tenderness (upon the sense of David's kindness) rather than of grief.

17 ^a And he said to David, Thou art ^b more righteous than I: for ^c thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil.

Thou hast rewarded me good for the evil that I have designed and done to thee. I have rewarded thee evil for thy good will to me.

18 And thou hast shewed this day how that thou hast dealt well with me: forasmuch as when ^d the LORD had ^e delivered me into thine hand, thou killedst me not.

19 For if a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away? wherefore the LORD reward thee good for that thou hast done unto me this day.

Will he let him go well away? i. e. he will certainly destroy him. And therefore thou hast not dealt with me after the manner of men, but hast imitated the clemency of God in this act.

20 And now, behold, ^f I know well that thou shalt surely be king, and that the kingdom of Israel shall be established in thine hand.

I know well, or, am convinced, not only by the fame of Samuel's anointing thee, but by God's singular providence watching over thee, and by that good Spirit and those great and princely virtues wherewith God hath endowed thee.

b Gen. 21. 23.

21 ^b Swear now therefore unto me by the LORD, ^c that thou wilt not cut off my seed after me, and that thou wilt not destroy my name out of my father's house.

Thou wilt not cut off my seed after me; as princes use to destroy their competitors, and those that have any hopes of or pretence to their crown; and Saul had endeavoured to destroy David for the same reason, and therefore he feared a retaliation. Thou wilt not destroy my name, to wit, by cutting off my seed. So it is the same thing repeated in other words, as is usual in Scripture.

22 And David sware unto Saul. And Saul went home; and David and his men gat them up unto ^d the hold.

David sware unto Saul. Quest. How then could David destroy so many of Saul's sons, 2 Sam. xxi. 8, 9? Answe. David could bind himself by his oaths, but he could not bind God, to whose good pleasure all promises, vows, and oaths must in all reason be submitted; and that was done by God's command, and God was well pleased with it, 2

Sam. xxi. 14. Nor is it to be supposed that David sware not to destroy any of them in case God should specially command it, or that should by miscarriage render themselves obnoxious to the sword of justice; but only that he would not do it barely on his own private account, nor seek occasions of so doing. Unto the hold, to wit, of En-gedi, ver. 1; for having had so great and frequent experience of Saul's inconstancy, and malice, and perfidiousness, he would trust him no more.

CHAP. XXV.

Samuel dieth: David goeth to the wilderness of Paran, 1. Nabal's riches, 2. His and his wife Abigail's nature and condition, 3. David requesteth of Nabal some relief for his camp: he entreateth David's messengers scornfully. David is provoked, and mindeth to destroy him, 4—13. Abigail understands it, 14—17; taketh a present, 18—22; and by her wisdom, 23—31, pacifieth David, 32—35. Nabal hearing of this, dieth, 36—38. David taketh Abigail and Ahinoam to be his wives, 39—43; Saul having given Michal to Phalti, 44.

AND ^a Samuel died; and all the Israelites were gathered together, and ^b lamented him, and buried him in his house at Ramah. And David arose, and went down ^c to the wilderness of Paran.

Buried him in his house, according to the manner of those times. See Gen. xxiii. 9; 1. 5; Matt. xxvii. 60. The wilderness of Paran, in the southern borders of the land of Judah, that so when occasion served, he might retire out of Saul's dominions.

2 And there was a man ^d in Maon, whose ^e possessions were in ^f Carmel; and the man was very great, and he had three thousand sheep, and a thousand goats: and he was shearing his sheep in Carmel.

Maon; a place in or near to the wilderness of Paran. See chap. xxiii. 24. Carmel; not that Carmel in Issachar, of which see chap. xv. 12; 1 Kings xviii. 19; but another in the tribe of Judah, near unto Maon, as appears from Josh. xv. 55.

3 Now the name of the man was Nabal; and the name of his wife Abigail: and she was a woman of good understanding, and of a beautiful countenance: but the man was churlish and evil in his doings; and he was of the house of Caleb.

This is added to aggravate his crime, that he was a degenerate branch of that noble stock of Caleb, and consequently of the tribe of Judah, as David was.

4 ¶ And David heard in the wilderness that Nabal did ^a shear his sheep.

Which times were celebrated with feasting and jollity. See 2 Sam. xiii. 23, 24.

5 And David sent out ten young men, and David said unto the young men, Get you up to Carmel, and go to Nabal, and greet him in my name:

6 And thus shall ye say to him that liveth in prosperity, ^b Peace be both to thee, and peace be to thine house, and peace be unto all that thou hast.

To him that liveth in prosperity, Heb. to him that liveth. Life is oft put for a prosperous and happy life, as in that prayer, Let the king live, 1 Sam. x. 24; 1 Kings i. 25, and in other passages of Scripture, and other authors; for an afflicted and calamitous life is unworthy of the name of life, and is esteemed a kind of death, and oft so called, as 2 Cor. i. 10; xi. 23. By this expression David both congratulates Nabal's felicity, and tacitly minds him of the penury and distress in which David and his men now were. To thine house, i. e. to all thy family. Unto all that thou hast; to all thy goods. So David's prayer is very comprehensive, reaching to his soul, and body, and wife, and children, and servants, and all his estate.

7 And now I have heard that thou hast shearers: now thy shepherds which were with us, we †hurt them not, ^hneither was there ought missing unto them, all the while they were in Carmel.

Which, considering the licentiousness of soldiers, and the necessities which David and his men were oft exposed to, was no small favour and privilege, which Nabal was bound both in justice, and gratitude, and prudence to requite.

8 Ask thy young men, and they will shew thee. Wherefore let the young men find favour in thine eyes: for we come in ^a good day: give, I pray thee, whatsoever cometh to thine hand unto thy servants, and to thy son David.

In a good day, i. e. in a day of feasting and rejoicing; when men are most cheerful and liberal; when thou mayst relieve us out of thy abundance without damage to thyself; when thou art receiving the mercies of God, and therefore obliged to pity and relieve distressed and indigent persons, Deut. xii. 12; xiv. 26, 29; xv. 7. Unto thy servants; to us who have been and still are ready to serve and guard thee and thine. Or the word servants may be only used as a word of respect, frequently used in Scripture, where inferiors speak to superiors, especially when they be suppliants, and beg some favour. To thy son; so he calls himself, to show that respect and affection which he bore to Nabal, as being elder and wealthier than himself, and of the same tribe with himself, and a branch of so worthy a family as Nabal's was.

9 And when David's young men came, they spake to Nabal according to all those words in the name of David, and †ceased.

10 ¶ And Nabal answered David's servants, and said, ^hWho is David? and who is the son of Jesse? there be many servants now a days that break away every man from his master.

Who is David? what relation or obligation have I to David? There be many servants now a days that break away; hereby he taxeth both David, as one revolted from and risen up against Saul his lord and master; and his soldiers as runagates from their masters and creditors, &c. See chap. xxii. 2.

11 ^hShall I then take my bread, and my water, and my †flesh that I have killed for my shearers, and give it unto men, whom I know not whence they be?

My water; he speaketh thus, either because in those hot and dry parts water was scarce and precious; or water is here put for any kind of drink, as bread is oft taken for all sorts of meat.

12 So David's young men turned their way, and went again, and came and told him all those sayings.

13 And David said unto his men, Gird ye on every man his sword. And they girded on every man his sword; and David also girded on his sword: and there went up after David about four hundred men; and two hundred ^mabode by the stuff.

Gird ye on every man his sword; having resolved and sworn to revenge himself of Nabal, as is expressed, ver. 21, 22. By the stuff. See chap. xvii. 22; xxx. 24.

14 ¶ But one of the young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, saying, Behold, David sent messengers out of the wilderness to salute our master; and he †railed on them.

One of the young men told Abigail; wisely considering the mischievous effects likely to follow so churlish a message.

15 But the men were very good unto us, and ^awe were not †hurt, neither missed we any thing, as long as we were conversant with them, when we were in the fields:

16 They were ^aa wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep.

A wall, i. e. a defence against wild beasts, and robbers, and enemies.

17 Now therefore know and consider what thou wilt do; for ^pevil is determined against our master, and against all his household: for he is such a son of ^qBelial, that a man cannot speak to him.

Evil is determined against our master; which it was easy to guess; either from some threatening expressions which David's men used; or from the consideration of David's great power, and that rage which so high a provocation was likely to produce in military persons. A man cannot speak to him, to wit, without hazard to himself, and therefore I acquaint thee rather than him with this matter.

18 ¶ Then Abigail made haste, and ^rtook two hundred loaves, and two bottles of wine, and five sheep ready dressed, and five measures of parched corn, and an hundred ^{||}clusters of raisins, and two hundred cakes of figs, and laid them on asses.

Abigail took two hundred loaves; which she did without his leave, and against his mind, because it was a case of apparent necessity, for the preservation of herself, and husband, and all the family from imminent ruin. And surely that real and urgent necessity which dispenseth with God's positive commands, might well dispense with the husband's right in this case.

19 And she said unto her servants, ^sGo on before me; behold, I come after you. But she told not her husband Nabal.

I come after you; for she knew she could quickly overtake them.

20 And it was so, as she rode on the ass, that she came down by the covert of the hill, and, behold, David and his men came down against her; and she met them.

By the covert of the hill; in the lower part and under the shadow of the hill, or of the trees that grew upon it; so that David did not see her till she met him. David and his men came down, to wit, from another opposite hill.

21 Now David had said, ^tSurely in vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was missed of all that pertained unto him: and he hath ^urequited me evil for good.

David had said; either in his journey, or as soon as he heard that reproachful answer. This fellow; whom he thought unworthy to be named, for his barbarous ingratitude and churlishness.

22 ^vSo and more also do God unto the enemies of David, if I ^vleave of all that pertain to him by the morning light ^wany that pisseth against the wall.

Unto the enemies of David, i. e. unto David himself. But because it might seem ominous and unnatural to curse himself, therefore by a figure called euphemismus, instead of David, he mentions David's enemies. See 1 Sam. xx. 16. The words may be thus rendered: So and more also let God do for (the Hebrew lamed being very oft so used) the enemies of David, i. e. let God work for them, and give them as much prosperity and success as Nabal hath hitherto had. Or, let God utterly destroy their enemies; and especially myself, the chief of them, if I do not destroy this man. Any that pisseth against the wall, i. e. any of the males, for they only do so; and of them this phrase is manifestly understood, 1 Kings xiv. 10; xxi. 21; 2 Kings ix. 8; and men not wholly barbarous have generally spared women in such cases. Quest. Why then was Abigail so much concerned and afraid? Ans. Partly from humanity, and the horror of so general and dreadful a slaughter of her family and nearest relations; and partly because when the sword was once drawn, she knew not where it would rest, nor whether she should escape; for she knew nothing of this limitation of David's threatening till she came to him.

23 And when Abigail saw David, she ^ahasted, and ^alighted off the ass, and fell before David on her face, and bowed herself to the ground,

Not only in token of deep reverence, but as a most humble suppliant, as 2 Kings iv. 27.

24 And fell at his feet, and said, Upon me, my lord, upon me let this iniquity be: and let thine handmaid, I pray thee, speak in thine † audience, and hear the words of thine handmaid.

Upon me let this iniquity be; impute Nabal's sin to me, and, if thou pleasest, punish it in me, who here offer myself as a sacrifice to thy just indignation. This whole speech of Abigail is done with great artifice; and she doth here, by an absolute submitting to mercy, without any pretence of justification of what was done, (but rather with aggravation of it,) endeavour to work upon David's generosity and good nature to pardon it; and, with great art, first would divert the punishment from her husband to herself, because she had then much more to say why David should spare her than why he should spare Nabal. And there was hardly any head of argument, whence the greatest orator might argue in this case, which she doth not manage to the best advantage, and most plausible insinuations for such an exigent.

25 Let not my lord, I pray thee, † regard this man of Belial, even Nabal: for as his name is, so is he; || Nabal is his name, and folly is with him: but I thine handmaid saw not the young men of my lord, whom thou didst send.

Let not my lord regard this man; his person and words deserve thy contempt, but not thy regard. Man of Belial; for such he hath showed himself to be by this wicked and abominable carriage towards thee. Folly is with him; his noted folly and stupidity is a more proper object for thy pity than anger. His sordid answer to thy servants did not proceed from any ill design, or deep malice, but from brutish sottishness, and want of the understanding of a man in him. It may be thought a great crime, that she traduceth her husband in this manner; but this may be said for her, that she told them nothing but what they all knew concerning him, and that she only seemed to take away that which he never had indeed, to wit, his good name, that she might preserve that which he had, and which was more dear and important to him, even his life and soul. Thine handmaid saw not the young men of my lord; though I freely submit myself to the punishment in my husband's stead, yet I was innocent of the crime.

26 Now therefore, my lord, ^bas the LORD liveth, and ^aas thy soul liveth, seeing the LORD hath ^cwithholden thee from coming to shed blood, and from ^d† avenging thyself with thine own hand, now ^elet thine enemies, and they that seek evil to my lord, be as Nabal.

Seeing the Lord hath withholden thee from coming to shed blood; seeing God hath so ordered this business by his wise and wonderful providence, that I should accidentally and unexpectedly come to the knowledge of my husband's vile and sordid carriage; and that I should come to meet thee, and find thee so gracious, as to give a favourable audience; and all this, that hereby he might withhold thee from the sin of blood-guiltiness. Be as Nabal; let them be as contemptible and hateful as Nabal is and will be for this odious action; let them be as unable to do thee any hurt as he is; let them be forced to yield to thee, and implore thy pardon and favour, as Nabal now doth by my mouth; let the vengeance thou didst design upon Nabal and his family fall upon their heads, who, by their constant and inveterate malice against thee, do more deserve it than this silly fool for this one miscarriage; and much more than all the rest of our family, who, as they are none of thine enemies, nor such as seek thee evil, so they were no way guilty of this wicked action. And therefore spare these, and execute thy vengeance upon more proper objects.

27 And now ^fthis || blessing which thine handmaid hath brought unto my lord, let it even be given unto the young men that † follow my lord.

This blessing; so a gift or present is called here, and Gen. xxxiii. 11, and elsewhere; not only because the matter of it comes from God's blessing, but also because it is given with a blessing, or with a good will. Let it even be given unto the young men, as being unworthy of thine acceptance or use.

28 I pray thee, forgive the trespass of thine handmaid: for ^gthe LORD will certainly make my lord a sure house; because my lord ^hfighteth the battles of the LORD, and ⁱevil hath not been found in thee all thy days.

The trespass of thine handmaid, i. e. which I have taken upon myself, ver. 24, and which, if it be not pardoned, but punished, the punishment will reach to me. Will certainly make my lord a sure house, i. e. will give the kingdom to thee, and to thy house for ever, as he hath promised thee. And therefore let God's great kindness to thee make thee gentle and merciful to others; do not sully thy approaching glory with the stain of innocent blood; but consider that it is the glory of a king (which thou art by God's appointment, and shall ere long actually be) to pass by offences, and that it will be thy loss to cut off such as will shortly be thy subjects. The battles of the Lord, i. e. for the Lord, and for the people of the Lord, against their enemies, especially the Philistines. And as that this is thy proper work, and therein thou mayst expect God's blessing and help; so it is not thy work to draw thy sword in thy own private quarrel against any of the people of the Lord, and God will not bless thee in it. Evil hath not been found in thee all thy days; though thou hast been oft aspersed, and charged with many crimes, by Saul and others; yet thy innocency hath been and is evident to all men: do not therefore now by this cruel act of vengeance justify thine enemies' reproaches, nor blemish thy great and just reputation.

29 Yet a man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy soul: but the soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life with the LORD thy God; and the souls of ^kthine enemies, them shall he ^lsling out, ^m† as out of the middle of a sling.

A man, to wit, Saul, though no way injured nor justly provoked by thee. To seek thy soul, i. e. to take away thy life. In the bundle of life, or, in the bundle, i. e. in the society or congregation of the living; out of which men are taken and cut off by death. The phrase is taken from the common usage of men, who bind those things in bundles which they are afraid to lose, because things that are solitary and unbound are soon lost. The meaning of the place is, God will preserve thy life; and therefore it becomes not thee unjustly and unnecessarily to take away the lives of any, especially the people of thy God and Saviour. With the Lord thy God, i. e. in the hand and custody of God, who, by his watchful providence, preserves this bundle, and all that are in it; and thee in a particular and singular manner, as being thy God in a peculiar way and special covenant. God himself will hide and keep thee in the secret of his presence, Psal. xxxi. 20, where no hand of violence can reach thee. And therefore all the attempts of Saul or others against thee are vain and ridiculous. For who can destroy whom God will keep? Them shall he sling out, as out of the middle of a sling; God himself will cut them off suddenly, violently, and irresistibly; and cast them far away, both from his presence, and from thy neighbourhood, and from all capacity of doing thee any hurt.

30 And it shall come to pass, when the LORD shall have done to my lord according to all the good that he hath spoken concerning thee, and shall have appointed thee ruler over Israel;

31 That this shall be † no grief unto thee, nor offence of heart unto my lord, either that thou hast shed blood causeless, or that my lord hath avenged himself: but when the LORD shall have dealt well with my lord, then remember thine handmaid.

Nor offence of heart unto my lord; thy mind and conscience will be free from all the torment which the guilt and shame of such an action would cause in thee. By which, she cunningly insinuates what a blemish this would be to his glory, what a disturbance to his peace and felicity, if he proceeded to execute his purpose; and withal implies how sweet and comfortable it would be to him to remember, that he had for conscience to God denied himself, and restrained his passions. That thou hast shed blood causeless; which she signifies would be done if he should go on. For though Nabal had been guilty of abominable rudeness, uncharitableness, and ingratitude; yet he had done nothing worthy of death, by the laws of God or of man. And whatsoever he had done, the rest of his family were innocent. That my lord hath avenged himself; which is directly contrary to God's law, Lev. xix. 18; Deut. xxxii. 35, compared with Rom. xii. 19. When the Lord shall have dealt well with my lord, then remember thine handmaid; when God shall make thee king, and I shall have occasion to apply myself to thee for justice or relief, let me find grace in thy sight, and so let me do at this time. Or, and the Lord will bless my lord, and recompense thee for this mortification of thy passion, and thou wilt remember thine hand-maid, i. e. thou wilt remember my counsel with satisfaction to thyself, and thankfulness to me.

32 ¶ And David said to Abigail, ¹ Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, which sent thee this day to meet me:

Which by his gracious and singular providence so disposed matters that thou shouldst come to me. He rightly begins at the fountain of this deliverance, which was God; and then proceeds to the instruments.

33 And blessed be thy advice, and blessed be thou, which hast ^m kept me this day from coming to shed blood, and from avenging myself with mine own hand.

Blessed be thy advice, and blessed be thou, i. e. the Lord bless and recompense thee for this thy good advice. From coming to shed blood, which I had sworn to do. Hereby it plainly appears that oaths whereby men bind themselves to any sin are null and void; and as it was a sin to make them, so it is adding sin to sin to perform them.

34 For in very deed, as the LORD God of Israel liveth, which hath ⁿ kept me back from hurting thee, except thou hadst hastened and come to meet me, surely there had ^o not been left unto Nabal by the morning light any that pisseth against the wall.

Hath kept me back from hurting thee; not that he intended to kill her, but the males only; as was noted on ver. 22. But their destruction was a dreadful affliction and damage to her.

35 So David received of her hand that which she had brought him, and said unto her, ^p Go up in peace to thine house; see, I have hearkened to thy voice, and have ^q accepted thy person.

i. e. Showed my acceptance of thy person, by my grant of thy request: see Gen. xix. 21.

36 ¶ And Abigail came to Nabal; and, behold, ^r he held a feast in his house, like the feast of a king; and Nabal's heart was merry within him, for he was very drunken: wherefore she told him nothing, less or more, until the morning light.

Like the feast of a king; as the manner was upon those solemn occasions. Sordid covetousness and vain prodigality were met together in him. She told him nothing; he being then incapable of admonition, his reason and conscience being both asleep.

37 But it came to pass in the morning, when the wine was gone out of Nabal, and his wife had told him these things, that his heart died within him, and he became as a stone.

He was oppressed with grief, and fainted away through the fear and horror of so great a mischief, though it was past. As one who, having in the night galloped over a narrow plank, laid upon a broken bridge, over a deep river, when in the morning he came to review it, was struck dead with the horror of the danger he was in.

38 And it came to pass about ten days after, that the LORD smote Nabal, that he died.

God either inflicted some other stroke or disease upon him, or increased his grief and fear to such a height as killed him.

39 ¶ And when David heard that Nabal was dead, he said, ^s Blessed be the LORD, that hath ^t pleaded the cause of my reproach from the hand of Nabal, and hath ^u kept his servant from evil: for the LORD hath ^x returned the wickedness of Nabal upon his own head. And David sent and communed with Abigail, to take her to him to wife.

How could David rejoice at the death of his enemy? Ans. Although it may be said that he rejoiced not in Nabal's death as such, but only in the declaration of God's justice in punishing so great a wickedness; which was an honour to God, and a document, and therefore a benefit to mankind, and so a public good, and cause of joy; yet the matter is not weighty, if we confess that this was another instance of human infirmity in David, and that it is not proposed for our imitation, but for our caution. Yet it may be further said, that this was not purely an act of private revenge, because David was a public person, and anointed king; and therefore Nabal's reproach cast upon David above, ver. 10, 11, was a contempt of God, and of his ordinance and appointment; which was vindicated by this remarkable judgment. Hath kept his servant from evil, i. e. from the sin of bloodshed and self-revenge, ver. 33. David sent, to wit, messengers; which he thought fitter than to go himself; partly because if he had met with a repulse, it had been less ignominious; and partly because he would leave her to her freedom and choice, and would not so much as seem to take her by violence. But this doubtless was not done immediately after Nabal's death, but in some convenient space of time after it; though such circumstances be commonly omitted in the sacred history, which gives only the heads and most important passages of things.

40 And when the servants of David were come to Abigail to Carmel, they spake unto her, saying, David sent us unto thee, to take thee to him to wife.

41 And she arose, and bowed herself on her face to the earth, and said, Behold, let ² thine handmaid be a servant to wash the feet of the servants of my lord.

She showed this reverence, and spake thus to them, as representing David's person.

42 And Abigail hasted, and arose, and rode upon an ass, with five damsels of her's that went [†] after her; and she went after the messengers of David, and became his wife.

She went after the messengers; not immediately, but some competent time after they were gone. She considered not David's present straits and penury, which she thought her plentiful estate might supply; nor his danger from Saul; but by a true and strong faith rested upon God's promise made to David, not doubting but God would perform it.

43 David also took Ahinoam ² of Jezreel; and they were also both of them his wives.

44 ¶ But Saul had given ^b Michal his daughter, David's wife, to ^{||} Phalti the son of Laish, which was of ^c Gallim.

But, or for, as the Hebrew vau is oftentimes used. For this seems to be added as a reason why David took other wives, because Saul had given his former wife to another man, that he might as far as he could extinguish all relation and kindred to him, whom he hated; and withal, cut off his hopes and pretence to the crown upon that account.

CHAP. XXVI.

Saul, by the discovery of the Ziphites, cometh to Hachilah against David, 1—3; who cometh with Abishai to Saul's camp; stayeth him from killing Saul, but taketh his spear and cruse, 4—12. He upbraideth Abner, 13—16; exhorteth Saul, 17—20, who acknowledgeth his sin, 21—25.

AND the Ziphites came unto Saul to Gibeah, saying, ^aDoth not David hide himself in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeshimon?

Having once betrayed him before, they thought their case desperate with David; and therefore did more strenuously assist Saul in discovering him, in order to his ruin. Doth not David hide himself? he is returned to his former haunt; of which see chap. xxiii. 19. This place might be convenient for him, either for its nearness to Abigail's estate; or because he might think that Saul was mollified, and the Ziphites cautioned by the unsuccessfulness of their former attempt; or because he could from thence make good his retreat into other places, if need were.

2 Then Saul arose, and went down to the wilderness of Ziph, having three thousand chosen men of Israel with him, to seek David in the wilderness of Ziph.

3 And Saul pitched in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeshimon, by the way. But David abode in the wilderness, and he saw that Saul came after him into the wilderness.

i. e. He understood by information, probably from his dear friend Jonathan.

4 David therefore sent out spies, and understood that Saul was come in very deed.

5 ¶ And David arose, and came to the place where Saul had pitched: and David beheld the place where Saul lay, and ^b Abner the son of Ner, the captain of his host: and Saul lay in the ^{||} trench, and the people pitched round about him.

Came to the place where Saul had pitched; came near to the skirts of Saul's camp; which he might easily discover from some neighbouring hill or wood, and yet not be discerned himself. And it is probable he came thither disguised, and towards night. Saul lay in the trench, encompassed with his carriages for better security. Compare 1 Sam. xvii. 20.

6 Then answered David and said to Ahimelech the Hittite, and to Abishai ^c the son of Zeruah, brother to Joab, saying, Who will ^d go down with me to Saul to the camp? And Abishai said, I will go down with thee.

Ahimelech the Hittite; so called, either because he was one of that nation, but converted to the Jewish religion; compare 2 Sam. xi. 3; xv. 18; or from his habitation amongst, or some relation, to some of that people. Zeruah; David's sister: see 1 Chron. ii. 16. His father is not named, either because he was now dead, or because he was an obscure person.

7 So David and Abishai came to the people by night: and, behold, Saul lay sleeping within the trench, and his spear stuck in the ground at his bolster: but Abner and the people lay round about him.

To the people, i. e. to Saul's host and camp. It might seem a bold and strange attempt; but many things are to be considered: 1. That heroic persons have oft attempted things of no less difficulty and danger than this was; as many credible historians relate. 2. That David did and might easily perceive that they were all fast asleep. 3. That David had a particular assurance that God would preserve him to the kingdom. 4. That he had a special instinct from God to this work; and possibly God might inform him that he had cast them into a dead sleep, that he might have this second opportunity of manifesting his innocency towards Saul, and the justice of his cause.

8 Then said Abishai to David, God hath [†] delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day: now therefore let me smite him, I pray thee, with the spear even to the earth at once, and I will not smite him the second time.

I will nail him to the ground at one blow, that I shall not need a second stroke.

9 And David said to Abishai, Destroy him not: ^e for who can stretch forth his hand against the LORD's anointed, and be guiltless?

Though Saul be a cruel tyrant, and rejected by God, yet he is our sovereign lord and king; and I, though designed king, as yet am but a private person, and his subject; and therefore cannot kill him without sin, nor will I consent that thou shouldst do it.

10 David said furthermore, As the LORD liveth, ^f the LORD shall smite him; or ^g his day shall come to die; or he shall ^h descend into battle, and perish.

The LORD shall smite him, by some sudden and mortal stroke. Or his day shall come to die, according to the course of nature.

11 'The LORD forbid that I should stretch forth mine hand against the LORD's anointed: but, I pray thee, take thou now the spear that is at his bolster, and the cruse of water, and let us go.

Take thou now the spear, which will show where we have been, and what we could have done. The cruse of water might be put there, either to wash himself, in case of any accidental pollution, which oft happened in the night; or to refresh him, and quench his thirst in that hot climate and season; or for divers other uses.

12 So David took the spear and the cruse of water from Saul's bolster: and they gat them away, and no man saw it, nor knew it, neither awaked: for they were all asleep; because ¹ a deep sleep from the LORD was fallen upon them.

Sent upon them by the Lord, for David's advantage.

13 ¶ Then David went over to the other side, and stood on the top of an hill afar off; a great space being between them:

That his person might be out of their reach, and yet his voice might be heard; which in a clear air, and in the silence of the night, might be heard at a great distance.

14 And David cried to the people, and to Abner the son of Ner, saying, Answerest thou not, Abner? Then Abner answered and said, Who art thou that criest to the king?

Or, with or beside the king, i. e. so near to him, so as to disturb the king.

15 And David said to Abner, Art not thou a valiant man? and who is like to thee in Israel? wherefore then hast thou not kept thy lord the king? for there came one of the people in to destroy the king thy lord.

Who is like to thee, for courage and conduct? and therefore thy fault herein is the greater.

16 This thing is not good that thou hast done. As the LORD liveth, ye are † worthy to die, because ye have not kept your master, the LORD's anointed. And now see where the king's spear is, and the cruse of water that was at his bolster.

This thing is not good, i. e. it is very bad, a great crime. A figure called meiosis, as Prov. xviii. 5; xix. 2.

17 And Saul knew David's voice, and said, ¹ Is this thy voice, my son David? And David said, It is my voice, my lord, O king.

My son David; as thou wast my son by marriage, so thou hast expressed the care and affection of a son to me now a second time.

18 And he said, ^m Wherefore doth my lord thus pursue after his servant? for what have I done? or what evil is in mine hand?

19 Now therefore, I pray thee, let my lord the king hear the words of his servant. If the LORD have ⁿ stirred thee up against me, let him † accept an offering: but if they be the children of men, cursed be they before the LORD; ^o for they have driven me out this day from † abiding in the ^p inheritance of the LORD, saying, Go, serve other gods.

If the Lord have stirred thee up against me; if the Lord have by the evil spirit which he hath sent, or by his secret providence, directed thy rage against me for the punishment of thine or my sins. Let him accept an offering; let us offer up a sacrifice to God to appease his wrath against us. If they be the children of men; who by their crafty insinuations and calumnies have incensed thee against me. He showeth his prudence, and reverence, and meekness; that he accuseth not the king, but translateth the fault wholly upon his evil ministers; as the Israelites do in the like case, Exod. v. 16. From abiding in the inheritance of the Lord; from the land which God hath given to his people for their inheritance, and where he hath established his presence and worship. Saying, Go, serve other gods: this was the language of their actions; for by driving him from God's land, and the place of his worship, into foreign and idolatrous lands, they exposed him to the peril of being either insnared by their counsels or examples, or forced by their threats and power to worship idols.

20 Now therefore, let not my blood fall to the earth before the face of the LORD: for the king of Israel is come out to seek ^a a flea, as when one doth hunt a ^q partridge in the mountains.

Let not my blood fall to the earth; do not attempt to spill my innocent blood like water upon the ground. Before the face of the Lord; remember, if thou dost it, God the Judge of all men seeth it, and will avenge it of thee, though I will not avenge myself. A flea; hard to be taken, and not worth catching; a mean and contemptible person. In the mountains, where his advantage doth no way compensate his labour.

21 ¶ Then said Saul, ^r I have sinned: ^s return, my son David: for I will no more do thee harm, because my soul was ^t precious in thine eyes this day: ^u behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.

He not only confesseth, but aggravateth his fault, because his conscience was fully convinced, though his heart was not changed.

22 And David answered and said, Behold the king's spear! and let one of the young men come over and fetch it.

23 ^v The LORD render to every man ^w his righteousness and his faithfulness: for the LORD delivered thee into my hand to day, but I would not stretch forth mine hand against the LORD's anointed.

I desire that God would deal no otherwise with me than I have dealt with thee.

24 And, behold, as thy life was much set by this day in mine eyes, so let my life be much set by in the eyes of the LORD, and let him deliver me out of all tribulation.

25 Then Saul said to David, Blessed be thou, my son David: thou shalt both do great things, and also shalt still ^x prevail. So David went on his way, and Saul returned to his place.

David went on his way; knowing Saul's unstable and deceitful heart, he would not trust to any of his professions or promises, but kept out of his reach.

CHAP. XXVII.

David with his six hundred men, and all his family, goeth to king Achish, and abideth there a while; Saul pursueth no more after him, 1—4. He obtaineth Ziklag of Achish to dwell in, 5—7. He invadeth neighbour nations; leaves no man alive to complain; persuadeth Achish he fought against Judah, 8—12.

AND David said in his heart, I shall now ^z † perish one day by the hand of Saul: ^{aa} there is nothing better for me than that I should speedily escape into the land of the Philistines; and Saul shall despair of me, to seek me any more in any coast of Israel: so shall I escape out of his hand.

I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul; I see by this late experience his restless and implacable hatred against me, and how little heed is to be given to all his pretences of repentance or friendship. There is nothing better for me than that I should speedily escape into the land of the Philistines: but this was certainly a very great mistake and fault in David; for, 1. This proceeded from gross distrust of God's promise and providence; and that after such repeated demonstrations of God's peculiar care over him, which gave him cause to conclude quite contrary to what is here said. 2. He forsakes the place where God had settled him, chap. xxii. 5, and given him both assurance and experience of his protection there. 3. He voluntarily runs upon that rock which he cursed his enemies for throwing him upon, chap. xxvi. 19, and upon many other snares and dangers, as the following history will show; and withal, deprives the people of the Lord of those succours which he might have given them, in case of a battle. But it pleased God to leave David to himself in this, as well as in other particulars, that these might be sensible demonstrations of the infirmities of the best men; and of the necessity of God's grace, and daily direction and assistance; and of the freeness and riches of God's mercy, in passing by such great offences. And besides, God hereby designed to accomplish his own counsel, to withdraw David from the Israelites, that Saul and they might fall by the hand of the Philistines, without any approach or inconvenience to David, whom God had put into a safe place.

a ch. 25. 13. 2 And David arose, *and he passed over with the six hundred men that were b ch. 21. 10. with him^b unto Achish, the son of Maoch, king of Gath.

It might seem a bold adventure; but, 1. He thought himself forced to it by Saul's inveterate rage, and continued resolutions to persecute him. 2. It is probable he had sent some persons to treat with him, and had agreed upon conditions, and received assurance of his safe and peaceable abode with him. 3. David reasonably thought that Achish would gladly receive him, as indeed he did; partly, because he saw Saul's implacable enmity against him; partly, because by this means he should be freed from the most formidable enemy which he had in all Israel, who might do him most mischief in the battle; which it seems at this time he designed; and partly, because he came not now alone, as he did before, but brought with him sufficient pledges of his fidelity to Achish; namely, all his soldiers, and his and their wives, ver. 3.

c ch. 25. 43. 3 And David dwelt with Achish at Gath, he and his men, every man with his household, even David^c with his two wives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail the Carmelitess, Nabal's wife.

4 And it was told Saul that David was fled to Gath: and he sought no more again for him.

By which it is implied that he would have gone on in persecuting David, if he had continued in his dominions.

5 ¶ And David said unto Achish, If I have now found grace in thine eyes, let them give me a place in some town in the country, that I may dwell there: for why should thy servant dwell in the royal city with thee?

A prudent desire. Hereby David designed, 1. To preserve his people, both from the idolatry and other vices which conversation with the Philistines would have exposed them to; and from that envy, and malice, and mischief, which diversity of religion, or other prejudices, might have caused. 2. That he might have opportunity of enterprising something against God's enemies, without the knowledge or observation of the Philistines. Why should thy servant dwell in the royal city with thee? which is too great an honour for me, and too burdensome to thee, and may be an occasion of suspicion and offence to thy people, and of many other inconveniences.

d See Josh. 15. 31. & 19. 6. 6 Then Achish gave him Ziklag that day: wherefore^d Ziklag pertaineth unto the kings of Judah unto this day.

Gave him Ziklag; not only to inhabit, but to possess it as his own; which he did, to lay the greater obligations upon David, whom he knew so able to serve him. Pertaineth unto the kings of Judah: it was given to the tribe of Judah before, Josh. xv. 31, and afterwards to the tribe of Simeon, Josh. xix. 5, whose inheritance was given them within the inheritance of the children of Judah, chap. xix. 1. But the Philistines kept the possession of it till this time, and were hitherto permitted to do so. And being now given by them to David, it now belonged not to the people of the tribe of Judah, to whom it was allotted before; but to the king of Judah, David and his heirs for ever. Unto this day: this and some such clauses seem to have been added by some sacred writers after the main substance of the several books was written.

7 And † the time that David dwelt in † the country of the Philistines was † a full year and four months.

Heb. days and four months; days being put for a year; as Lev. xxv. 29. Or, some days and four months, i. e. some days above four months. Or, some days and (for even, or that is, the conjunction and being off so used, as hath been proved above) four months.

8 ¶ And David and his men went up, and invaded^e the Geshurites, and the † Gezrites, and the † Amalekites: for those nations were of old the inhabitants of the land, ^has thou goest to Shur, even unto the land of Egypt.

The Gezrites were anciently seated in other places, Josh. xii. 12; xvi. 3, but for some reasons not now known they changed their seats, as was then very usual, and seated themselves, and had for some considerable time lived, near the Amalekites. The Amalekites; the remnant of those whom Saul destroyed, 1 Sam. xv., who fled from his sword, and retired into remote and desert places.

9 And David smote the land, and left neither man nor woman alive, and took away the sheep, and the oxen, and the asses, and the camels, and the apparel, and returned, and came to Achish.

Left neither man nor woman alive, to wit, in that part where he came; but there were more of the Amalekites yet left in another part of that land, chap. xxx. 1.

10 And Achish said, ¶ Whither have ye made a road to day? And David said, Against the south of Judah, and against the south ofⁱ the Jerahmeelites, and against the south of^k the Kenites.

Against the south of Judah: these and the following words are ambiguous; for they may be understood, either of the southern parts from Judah, &c., which he would have Achish understand; or of another country lying southward from Judah, &c., which David meant, and which was the truth. So though it was not a downright lie; yet it was an equivocation, with an intention to deceive, which is the formality of a lie, and was contrary to that simplicity which became David, both as a prince, and as an eminent professor of the true religion. And against, for that is against; for in the following words he particularly expresseth what part of the south of Judah he went against, even that which was inhabited by the Jerahmeelites, and by the Kenites. The Jerahmeelites; the posterity of Hezron, a family of Judah, 1 Chron. ii. 9, 25. The Kenites; the posterity of Jethro, which chose to dwell in the south of Judah, Judg. i. 16. See Numb. xxiv. 21.

11 And David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, Lest they should tell on us, saying, So did David, and so will be his manner all the while he dwelleth in the country of the Philistines.

Lest they should tell on us; that the tidings of this action against this people (who were, it seems, either tributaries to or confederates with Achish) might neither come quickly nor certainly to Achish's court; which he might the rather promise himself, because Achish and all his men were now busily employed in their warlike preparations against the Israelites; and if any flying rumour came thither, he thought by his interest and artifices he could easily discredit and dash it. Besides, the consideration of God's curse denounced against the people whom he had now destroyed, and of God's particular promises made to him, and of his special providence which he constantly experienced watching over him, made him more secure and confident in this and in many other hazardous attempts.

12 And Achish believed David, saying, He hath made his people Israel † utterly to abhor him; therefore he shall be my servant for ever.

Achish believed David; partly, because of his confidence in David's authority and fidelity; partly, because most men easily believe what they heartily wish to be true; and partly, from God's providence, which blinded him in this and in divers other particulars relating to David's coming hither, and abiding here.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Achish intending war against Israel, relieth on David, 1, 2. Saul having destroyed the witches, yet, Samuel being dead, in his fear, forsaken of God, seeketh to a witch, 3—8. She, encouraged by Saul, raiseth Samuel; of whom hearing his approaching ruin, he fainteth, 9—20. The woman, with his servants, refresh him with meat, 21—25.

a ch. 29. 1. AND ²it came to pass in those days, that the Philistines gathered their armies together for warfare, to fight with Israel. And Achish said unto David, Know thou assuredly, that thou shalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men.

The Philistines were encouraged by Samuel's death, and Saul's degeneration, and David's presence with Achish. Thou shalt go out with me to battle: this he saith, partly to try his sincerity; and partly in confidence of David's fidelity.

2 And David said to Achish, Surely thou shalt know what thy servant can do. And Achish said to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever.

David speaks ambiguously, as he did before, that Achish might understand him, as he did, of his acting for him against the Israelites; whereas he meant it of his acting for the Israelites against the Philistines, to which he was obliged both by God's express command, and by his indelible and manifold obligations to God, and to God's people, and by his own manifest interest. Though it is likely he would have managed his affairs with all possible regard and care of Achish's person, to whom alone, upon the matter, David stood obliged, and not to the rest of the Philistines, who had an ill opinion of him, as we shall see. Therefore; for that valour which I doubt not thou wilt show on my behalf. Of mine head, i. e. of my body and life, the captain of my life-guard.

b ch. 25. 1. 3 ¶ Now ¹Samuel was dead, and all Israel had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city. And Saul had put away ²those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land.

Samuel was dead: this is mentioned here as the reason why Saul did not inquire of Samuel; which, if he had now been alive, he would have done. In his own city, where he had his birth and education, and most settled habitation, 1 Sam. xix. 18. Saul had put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards; according to God's command, Lev. xix. 31; xx. 6, 27; Deut. xviii. 11. This he did, either by Samuel's instigation; or from a conceit that the evil spirit came upon him by some of their means; or that he might gain the repute of a religious prince, which was very useful to him; or that he might quiet his troubled conscience, and please God as far as his interest would give him leave. And this is here related, partly to show that a hypocrite and wicked man may obey some of God's commands, and principally to bring in the following history. Out of the land of Israel.

4 And the Philistines gathered themselves together, and came and pitched in ¹Shunem: and Saul gathered all Israel together, and they pitched in ²Gilboa.

Shunem; a town in the tribe of Issachar, Josh. xix. 18. Gilboa; a mountain not far from the valley of Jezreel, where the battle was fought, chap. xxxi. 1; 2 Sam. i. 21. So the two armies seem to be placed in the same manner as they were chap. xvii., each upon a hill, and a valley between them.

5 And when Saul saw the host of the Philistines, he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled.

Saul saw the host from Mount Gilboa, chap. xxxi. 1. His heart greatly trembled; partly, from the greatness and resoluteness of the host of the Philistines, who were the aggressors; partly, from the loss of David, who might have been of great use to him at this time; partly, from the conscience of his own manifest guilt, and just expectation of Divine vengeance oft threatened, and now in all likelihood to be inflicted upon him.

6 And when Saul enquired of the LORD, ¹the LORD answered him not, neither by ²dreams, nor ³by Urim, nor by prophets.

Saul inquired of the Lord, in his slight and perfunctory way, as chap. xiv. 19, as appears from hence, that when God did not speedily answer him, he goes to the devil for an answer, ver. 7; for which reason he is said, not to have inquired of the Lord, 1 Chron. x. 14, i. e. not seriously, and after the right order. Possibly he inquired by some prophet then with him, or by the priest before the ark. The Lord answered him not, because he sought him not in due order; not by the Urim and Thummim which were in the ephod, which he by his cruelty to the priests had lost, chap. xxiii. 6; and because he did not truly repent of nor put away his sins, which provoked God, and kept him from answering, as Saul well knew by his own conscience and experience, chap. xiv. 37—39. Neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets, i. e. neither by ordinary means, nor extraordinary.

7 ¶ Then said Saul unto his servants, Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and enquire of her. And his servants said to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at En-dor.

Seek me a woman, rather than a man; for he thought that sex most likely to be given to those wicked arts, as being the weaker sex, and so aptest to be deceived, and most prone to superstition, and oftentimes most malicious and revengeful. That hath a familiar spirit; one that converseth with the devil, and dead men's ghosts, and by them can discover future things. See Isa. viii. 19. His servants said to him; instead of dissuading him from this wicked and destructive practice, which they should and would have done, if they had either loved God or their king, they further him in it. En-dor; a place in the tribe of Manasseh, within Jordan, not very far from the place where the armies were encamped.

8 And Saul disguised himself, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night: and ¹he said, I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up, whom I shall name unto thee.

Saul disguised himself; both because he was ashamed to be known, or thought guilty of this practice; and because he suspected that the woman, had she known him, would not practise her art before him.

9 And the woman said unto him, Behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done, how he hath ¹cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land: wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die?

Woman said, Behold, thou knowest; for his speech and garb discovered him to be an Israelite, and therefore acquainted with these matters. To cause me to die, by accusing me to Saul as guilty of a capital crime.

10 And Saul swore to her by the Lord, saying,

1 ver. 3.

As the LORD liveth there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing.

11 Then said the woman, Whom shall I bring up unto thee? And he said, Bring me up Samuel.

Whose kindness and compassion to him, as he had formerly experienced, so now he expected it in his deep distress. This practice of divination by the dead, or by the ghosts or souls of dead persons, called up by magical art, was very usual among all nations, and from them Saul learned it.

12 And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice: and the woman spake to Saul, saying, Why hast thou deceived me? for thou art Saul.

She cried with a loud voice, for fear of her life, Saul himself being witness of her crime. Thou art Saul: this she knew, either by some gesture of reverence which this supposed Samuel might show to Saul, as to the king; or by information from this ghost; or from the spirit by whose help she had raised him.

13 And the king said unto her, Be not afraid: for what sawest thou? And the woman said unto Saul, I saw gods ascending out of the earth.

i. e. A god, a divine person, glorious, and full of majesty and splendour, exceeding not only mortal men, but common ghosts. She useth the plural number, gods, either after the manner of the Hebrew language, which commonly useth that word of one person; or after the language and custom of the heathens. But the whole coherence shows that it was but one. For Saul desired but one, ver. 11, and he inquires and the woman answers only of one, ver. 14. Ascending out of the earth, as if it came from the place of the dead.

14 And he said unto her, † What form is he of? And she said, An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself.

He is covered with a mantle; the usual habit of prophets, 2 Kings ii. 8, 13; Zech. xiii. 4, and particularly of Samuel, 1 Sam. xv. 27. Saul perceived that it was Samuel; the woman pretended, and Saul upon her suggestion believed, that it was Samuel indeed; and so many popish and some other writers conceived. But that it was not Samuel, but the devil representing Samuel, is sufficiently evident. For, first, it is most incredible that God, who had just now refused to answer Saul by the means which himself appointed and used in that case, would answer him, or suffer Samuel to answer him, in that way, and upon the use of those means which God detested and contemned; which would have given great countenance and encouragement to Saul and the witch, and all professors and consulters of those devilish arts. Secondly, There are divers passages in this relation which plainly discover that this was no good, but an evil spirit; as first, That he receives that worship from Saul, ver. 14, which good spirits would not suffer, Rev. xix. 10; xxii. 8, 9. Secondly, That amongst his other sins for which he condemneth him, he omitteth this of asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it; for which transgression, with others, he is expressly said to have died, 1 Chron. x. 13, which the true Samuel, who was so zealous for God's honour, and so faithful a re-prover, would never have neglected, especially now, when he takes Saul in the very fact. Thirdly, That he pretends himself to be disquieted and brought up, ver. 15, by Saul's instigation, and the witch's art; which is most false, and impious, and absurd to imagine, concerning those blessed souls who are returned to their God, Eccles. xii. 7, and entered into peace and rest, Isa. lvii. 2, and lodged in Abraham's bosom, Luke xvi. 22, and rest from their labours, Rev. xiv. 13. The only argument of any colour to the contrary is only this, that the devil could not so particularly and punctually discover Saul's future events as this Samuel doth, ver. 19. But this also hath little weight in it; it being confessed and notoriously known, that evil spirits, both in the oracles of the heathen, and otherwise, have oft-times foretold future contingencies; God being pleased to reveal such things to them, and to permit them to be the instruments of revealing them to men, for the trial of some, and for the terror and punishment of others. Besides, the devil might foresee this by strong conjectures, as by the numerousness, strength, courage, and resoluteness of the Philistine host, and the quite contrary condition of the Israelites, and by divers other symptoms far above the reach of mortal men, but such as he by his great sagacity could easily discern. And for that express determination of the time, tomorrow, ver. 19, that word may be understood not of the very next day, but indefinitely of some short time after this, as it is taken, Exod. xiii. 14; Deut. vi. 20; Josh. iv. 6, 21. And then it was easy to gather from the present posture of the two armies, that the fight and the ruin of the Israelites was very near. And that it was not the very next day, but some days after this, is evident from the course of the story, and hath been proved by a late learned writer. See my Latin Synopsis on this place.

15 ¶ And Samuel said to Saul, Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up? And Saul answered, I am sore distressed; for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more, neither † by prophets, nor by dreams: therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do.

Samuel said to Saul; as the devil appeared in Samuel's shape and garb, so also he speaketh in his person, that he might insnare Saul, and encourage others to seek to him in this wicked way. And God permits him to do so for Saul's greater condemnation and punishment. Neither by prophets, nor by dreams; he omitteth the Urim here, because he neither did nor could inquire by that, because Abiathar had carried it away to David, and so he expected no answer that way.

16 Then said Samuel, Wherefore then dost thou ask of me, seeing the LORD is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy?

17 And the LORD hath done to him, as he spake by † me: for the LORD hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to thy neighbour, even to David:

The Lord hath done to him, i. e. to David, as it is explained in the following words; the pronoun relative put before the noun to which it belongs, as is usual in the Hebrew text, as Psal. lxxxvii. 1; cv. 19; Prov. vii. 7, 8; Jer. xl. 5. Otherwise, to him is put for to thee; such changes of persons being frequent among the Hebrews. Otherwise, for himself, i. e. for the accomplishment of his counsel, and prediction, and oath, and for the glory of his justice and holiness. As he spake by me: still he nourisheth this persuasion in Saul, that it was the true Samuel that spake to him.

18 Because thou obeyedst not the voice of the LORD, nor executedst his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore hath the LORD done this thing unto thee this day.

Nor executedst his fierce wrath upon Amalek; he mentions this as an eminent instance of his disobedience.

19 Moreover the LORD will also deliver Israel with thee into the hand of the Philistines: and to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me: the LORD also shall deliver the host of Israel into the hand of the Philistines.

With me, i. e. in the state of the dead; and so it was true both of Saul and Jonathan. Or, in the state of rest; for though thou shalt suffer here for thy sin, yet after death thou shalt be happy, as dying in the Lord's quarrel: so the devil's design might be to flatter Saul into an opinion of his own future happiness, and to take him off from all serious thoughts and cares about it. And it is here observable, that as it was the manner of the heathen oracles to answer ambiguously, the better to save his credit in case of mistake; (the devil himself not being certain of future events, but only conjecturing at what was most likely;) so doth this counterfeit Samuel here. For, as concerning the time, he says to-morrow; which he understood indifferently for the very next day, or for some short time after. And, as concerning the condition, thou shalt be with me; which may be understood either of a good condition, if understood as spoken in the person of Samuel; or of a bad condition, if understood as spoken by an evil spirit; or at least indefinitely of a dead condition, be it good or evil; which last he foresaw by circumstances to be very likely.

20 Then Saul † fell straightway all along on the earth, and was sore afraid, because of the words of Samuel: and there was no strength in him; for he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night.

Saul fell along on the earth, being quite dispirited with these sad and surprising tidings, and so unable to stand.

21 ¶ And the woman came unto Saul, and saw that he was sore troubled, and said unto him, Behold, thine handmaid hath obeyed thy voice, and I have *put my life in my hand, and have hearkened unto thy words which thou spakest unto me.

The woman came unto Saul; from whom she departed, when she had brought him and Samuel together, that they might more freely converse together, as being alone.

22 Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou also unto the voice of thine handmaid, and let me set a morsel of bread before thee; and eat, that thou mayest have strength, when thou goest on thy way.

This earnestness did not come merely from her humanity and respect to Saul, but from a prudent and necessary care of herself, because if Saul had died in her house, his blood would have been charged upon her.

23 But he refused, and said, I will not eat. But his servants, together with the woman, compelled him; and he hearkened unto their voice. So he arose from the earth, and sat upon the bed.

Compelled him, i. e. did over-persuade him, by importunate entreaties, as the next words show.

24 And the woman had a fat calf in the house; and she hastened, and killed it, and took flour, and kneaded it, and did bake unleavened bread thereof:

Not having time to leaven it.

25 And she brought it before Saul, and before his servants; and they did eat. Then they rose up, and went away that night.

i. e. Before morning; for he came by night, ver. 8, and went away before day; not willing to have it discovered that he had consulted with a witch.

CHAP. XXIX.

David marching with the Philistines, is disallowed by their princes: Achish pleadeth for him, and against his will dismisseth him, 1-7. He expostulateth with Achish, 8. His answer, 9, 10. David departeth, 11.

a ch. 28. 1. NOW * the Philistines gathered together all their armies ^b to Aphek: and the Israelites pitched by a fountain which is in Jezreel.

Aphek; either, that in the tribe of Asher, Josh. xix. 30, or rather another town of that name in Issachar, though not mentioned elsewhere in Scripture; this being the case of many places, to be but once named.

2 And the lords of the Philistines passed on by hundreds, and by thousands: but David and his men passed on in the reneward ^c with Achish.

c ch. 28. 1, 2.

i. e. As the life-guard of Achish, as he had promised, chap. xxviii. 2, Achish being, as it seems, the general of the army.

3 Then said the princes of the Philistines, What do these Hebrews here? And Achish said unto the princes of the Philistines, Is not this David, the servant of Saul the king of Israel, which hath been with me ^d these days, or these years, and I have ^e found no fault in him since he fell unto me unto this day?

e Dan. 6. 5.

The princes of the Philistines; the lords of the other eminent cities and territories, who were confederate with him in this expedition. These days, or these years: q. d. Did I say days? I might have said years; either because he hath now been with me a full year and four months, chap. xxvii. 7, or because he was with me some years ago, chap. xxi. 10, and since that time hath been known to me. And it is not improbable but David, after his escape from thence, might hold some correspondence with Achish, as finding him to be a man of more generous temper than the rest of the Philistines, and supposing that he might have need of him for a refuge in case Saul continued to seek his life. Since he fell unto me, i. e. since he revolted or left his own king to turn to me; for that sense Achish put upon this escape of David, (as it is called chap. xxvii. 1,) and so is the phrase of falling to a party elsewhere used, Jer. xxxvii. 13, 14.

4 And the princes of the Philistines were wroth with him; and the princes of the Philistines said unto him, ^f Make this fellow return, that he may go again to his place which thou hast appointed him, and let him not go down with us to battle, lest ^g in the battle he be an adversary to us: for wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his master? should it not be with the heads of these men?

Were wroth with him; were unsatisfied and offended with Achish for this intention and declaration. Make this fellow return: herein the wise and gracious providence of God appeared, both in helping him out of those snares and difficulties, out of which no human wit could have extricated him, but he must either have been, or have been thought, to be a traitor, and an ungrateful, unworthy person either to the one or to the other side; and moreover in giving him the happy opportunity of recovering his own and his all from the Amalekites, which had been irrecoverably lost if he had gone into this battle. And the kindness of God to David was the greater, because it had been most just for God to have left David in all those distresses into which his own sinful counsel and course had brought him. Of these men, i. e. of these our soldiers: they speak according to the rules of reason and true policy, for by this very course great enemies have sometimes been reconciled together.

5 Is not this David, of whom they sang one to another in dances, saying, ^h Saul slew his thousands, and David his ten thousands?

As the Lord liveth; he swears by Jehovah; either because he did acknowledge their Jehovah to be a God, being, it may be, convinced and instructed therein by David, though he did worship Dagon with him, and above him: or because this was David's God, and therefore he swore by him; partly out of complaisance with David, that he might receive his unwelcome message to him with less offence; and partly that this oath might gain more credit to his words with David. Thy going out and thy coming in with me, i. e. thy whole conversation with me. See chap. xviii. 13, and many other places where that phrase is used. Since the day of thy coming unto me; though before that time there was evil in thee towards me and my people.

7 Wherefore now return, and go in peace, that thou † displease not the lords of the Philistines.

† Heb. do not evil in the eyes of the lords.

8 ¶ And David said unto Achish, But what have I done? and what hast thou found in thy servant so long as I have been † with thee unto this day, that I may not go fight against the enemies of my lord the king?

This was deep dissimulation and flattery; but he apprehended it necessary, lest he should tacitly confess himself guilty of that whereof they accused him, and thereby expose himself to the utmost hazards. These perplexities he brought himself into by his irregular course, in forsaking the land of Judah, where God had placed him, chap. xxii. 5, and promised him protection, and putting himself into the hands of the Philistines.

9 And Achish answered and said to David, I know that thou art good in my sight, ¹as an angel of God: notwithstanding ^mthe princes of the Philistines have said, He shall not go up with us to the battle.

1 2 Sam. 14. 17, 20. & 18. 27. m ver. 4.

As an angel of God, in whom nothing is blameworthy. Or it may be used to express David's great wisdom (as well as integrity); as 2 Sam. xiv. 17; xix. 27. The heathens acknowledged good spirits, which also they worshipped as an inferior sort of deities, who were messengers and ministers to the supreme God; only Achish had learned the title of angels from the Israelites his neighbours, and especially from David's conversation.

10 Wherefore now rise up early in the morning with thy master's servants that are come with thee: and as soon as ye be up early in the morning, and have light, depart.

With thy master's servants; he intimates the ground of the Philistines' jealousy concerning David and his men, that they were all servants of Saul, and therefore had an obligation, and were suspected to have an affection, to their old lord and master, against whom even David himself could not make them fight, especially with and for the Philistines. As soon as ye have light, depart; before the battle begin, lest, if you delay, the lords of the Philistines fall upon you, and destroy you.

11 So David and his men rose up early to depart in the morning, to return into the land of the Philistines. ⁿAnd the Philistines went up to Jezreel.

CHAP. XXX.

The Amalekites in David's absence spoil Ziklag, and carry away the people and his two wives captives, 1—6. David asking counsel is encouraged by God to pursue them, 7—10. By the means of an Egyptian, who was left behind, he is brought to the enemies, and recovereth all the spoil, and spoileth them, 11—20; makes an order for the dividing the prey, 21—25; sendeth presents to his friends, 26—31.

AND it came to pass, when David and his men were come to Ziklag on the third day, that the

* Amalekites had invaded the south, and Ziklag, and smitten Ziklag, and burned it with fire;

* See ch. 13. 7. & 27. 8.

On the third day, to wit, after David's departure from Achish; for Ziklag was at a great distance from the camp and place of fight, as appears from 2 Sam. i. 2; and David's men being all footmen, could make but slow marches. The Amalekites; the remainders of that people who lived near those parts where David had destroyed their brethren, chap. xxvii. 8, 9. The south, to wit, the southern part of Judah, and the adjacent parts. See below, ver. 14. Smitten Ziklag, i. e. sacked and spoiled it.

2 And had taken the women captives, that were therein: they slew not any, either great or small, but carried them away, and went on their way.

They slew not any; which was strange, considering how David dealt with them, chap. xxvii. 9. But this must be ascribed partly to their selfish or fleshly interest; for they might reserve them, either to make sale of them for their profit, or to abuse them for their lust; or, it may be, to revenge themselves upon David and his men, by reserving them to extraordinary, and lingering, and repeated punishments; but principally to God's overruling and wonderful providence, who set these bounds to their rage; and though he designed to chastise David's sin and folly, yet would not deliver him nor his up to death.

3 ¶ So David and his men came to the city, and, behold, it was burned with fire; and their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, were taken captives.

4 Then David and the people that were with him lifted up their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep.

Till either the humour was wholly spent, or the consideration of their calamity had made them stupid.

5 And David's ^btwo wives were taken captives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite.

b ch. 23. 42. 43. 2 Sam. 2. 2.

6 And David was greatly distressed; ^cfor the people spake of stoning him, because the soul of all the people was †grieved, every man for his sons and for his daughters: ^dbut David encouraged himself in the Lord his God.

c Ex. 17. 4. † Heb. bitter.

The people spake of stoning him, as the author of their miseries, by coming to Ziklag at first, by provoking the Amalekites to this cruelty, by his forwardness in marching away with Achish, and leaving their wives and children unguarded. In the Lord his God, i. e. in this, that the all-wise and all-powerful Lord was his God by covenant relation, and special promise, and true and fatherly affection, as he had showed himself to be in the whole course of his providence towards him.

7 ^eAnd David said to Abiathar the priest, Ahimelech's son, I pray thee, bring me hither the ephod. And Abiathar brought thither the ephod to David.

e ch. 23. 6, 9

Bring me hither the ephod, and put it upon thyself, that thou mayst inquire of God according to his ordinance, Numb. xxvii. 21. See above, chap. xxiii. 9. David was sensible of his former error in neglecting to ask counsel of God by the ephod when he came to Achish, and when he went out with Achish to the battle; and his necessity now brings him to his duty, and his duty meets with success.

8 ^fAnd David enquired at the Lord, saying, Shall I pursue after this troop? shall I overtake them? And he answered him, Pursue: for thou shalt surely overtake them, and without fail recover all.

Before God answered more slowly and gradually, chap. xxiii. 11, 12, but now he answers speedily and fully at once, because the business here required more haste. So gracious is our God, that he considers even the degree of our necessities, and accommodates himself to them.

9 So David went, he and the six hundred men that were with him, and came to the brook Besor, where those that were left behind stayed.

10 But David pursued, he and four hundred men: ^g for two hundred abode behind, which were so faint that they could not go over the brook Besor.

Four hundred men; a small number for such an attempt; but David was strong in faith, giving God the glory of his power and faithfulness.

11 ¶ And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David, and gave him bread, and he did eat; and they made him drink water;

They found an Egyptian, whom by his habit they guessed to be a soldier that had been engaged in that expedition. They made him drink water; partly out of humanity and compassion to a perishing creature; and partly in prudence, that by him they might learn the true state of their enemies.

12 And they gave him a piece of a cake of figs, and two clusters of raisins: and ^h when he had eaten, his spirit came again to him: for he had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water, three days and three nights.

Which is to be understood synecdochically of one whole day, and part of two others, as the same phrase is taken Matt. xii. 40, as appears from the next verse, where he saith, three days ago I fell sick, but in the Hebrew it is, this is the third day since I fell sick.

13 And David said unto him, To whom belongest thou? and whence art thou? And he said, I am a young man of Egypt, servant to an Amalekite; and my master left me, because three days ago I fell sick.

I am a young man of Egypt; God by his providence so ordering it, that he was not one of that cursed race of the Amalekites, who were to be utterly destroyed, but an Egyptian, who might be spared. My master left me, in this place and condition; which was barbarous inhumanity; for he ought, and easily might have carried him away with the prey which they had taken. But he paid dearly for this cruelty, for this was the occasion of the ruin of him and of all their company. And God by his secret providence ordered the matter thus for that very end. So that there is no fighting against God, who can make the smallest accidents serviceable to the production of the greatest effects.

14 We made an invasion upon the south of ⁱ the Cherethites, and upon the coast which belongeth to Judah, and upon the south of ^k Caleb; and we burned Ziklag with fire.

The Cherethites, i. e. the Philistines, as is manifest from ver. 16, who are so called Zeph. ii. 5. And upon the coast which belongeth to Judah, and upon the south of Caleb: this is added by way of explication: q. d. that part of the south of Judah which belongs to Caleb's posterity, Josh. xiv. 13.

15 And David said to him, Canst thou bring me down to this company? And he said, Swear unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my master, and I will bring thee down to this company.

For his master had told him whither they intended to go, that he might come after them as soon as he could.

16 ¶ And when he had brought him down, behold, they were spread abroad upon all the earth, ^l eating and drinking, and dancing, because of all the great spoil that they had taken out of the land of the Philistines, and out of the land of Judah.

Spread abroad upon all the earth; secure and careless, because they were now come almost to the borders of their own country, and the Philistines and Israelites both were otherwise engaged, and David, as they believed, with them. So they had no visible cause of danger; and yet then they were nearest to their destruction.

17 And David smote them from the twilight even unto the evening of [†] the next day: and there escaped not a man of them, save four hundred young men, which rode upon camels, and fled.

From the twilight: the word signifies both the morning and evening twilight. But the latter seems here intended, partly because their eating, and drinking, and dancing was more customary and proper work for the evening than for the morning; and partly because the evening was more convenient for David, that the fewness of his forces might not be discovered by the day-light. Object. It is not likely that David would fall upon the Amalekites before his men, who had been tired with a long and hasty march, were refreshed. Answr. Nor is it said that he did. It is probable that when he came near them, he reposed himself and his army in some secret place, whereof there were many in those parts, for a convenient season; and then marched on so as to come to them at the evening time.

18 And David recovered all that the Amalekites had carried away: and David rescued his two wives.

19 And there was nothing lacking to them, neither small nor great, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil, nor any thing that they had taken to them:

^m David recovered all.

20 And David took all the flocks and the herds, which they drave before those other cattle, and said, This is David's spoil.

All the flocks and the herds, to wit, which the Amalekites had taken from the Philistines, or others. Before those other cattle; before those which belonged to Ziklag. This is David's spoil, i. e. the soldiers, who lately were so incensed against David, that they spake of stoning him; now upon this success magnify him, and triumphantly celebrate his praise; and say concerning this spoil, David purchased it by his valour and conduct, and he may dispose of it as he pleaseth.

21 ¶ And David came to the ⁿ two hundred men, which were so faint that they could not follow David, whom they had made also to abide at the brook Besor: and they went forth to meet David, and to meet the people that were with him: and when David came near to the people, he ^{||} saluted them.

They went forth to meet David, to congratulate the victory; which, it is probable, David had sent a messenger to acquaint them with. He saluted them; he spoke kindly to them, and did not blame them because they went no further with them.

22 Then answered all the wicked men and men ° of Belial, of [†] those that went with David, and said, Because they went not with us, we will not give them ought of the spoil that we have recovered, save to every man his wife and his children, that they may lead them away, and depart.

Then answered all the wicked men; when those two hundred men required or expected a part of the spoil; and they gathered from David's words and carriage that he intended to give it to them. Wicked men and men of Belial; so he calls them, for their covetousness, and injustice, and churlishness to their brethren; by which expressions we may judge how heinous and odious those sins are in God's sight. Because they went not with us; which was from their impotency; not by choice or design. Herein therefore was their iniquity and unreasonableness, they would punish them for no fault.

23 Then said David, Ye shall not do so, my brethren, with that which the LORD hath given us, who hath preserved us, and delivered the company that came against us into our hand.

Ye shall not do so, my brethren: he useth his power and authority to overrule them; but manageth it with all sweetness, calling them brethren; not only as of the same nation and religion with him, but as his fellow soldiers. With that which the Lord hath given us; what he hath freely imparted to us, we should not unkindly and injuriously withhold from our brethren.

24 For who will hearken unto you in this matter? but as his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff: they shall part alike.

Who will hearken unto you? what wise or just man will be of your opinion in this matter? They shall part alike; a prudent and equitable constitution, and therefore practised by the Romans, as Polybius and others note. The reason of it is manifest, because they were exposed to hazards as well as their brethren, and were a reserve to whom they might retreat in case of a defeat; and they were now in actual service, and in the station in which their general had placed them.

25 And it was so from that day forward, that he made it a statute and an ordinance for Israel unto this day.

26 ¶ And when David came to Ziklag, he sent of the spoil unto the elders of Judah, even to his friends, saying, Behold a present for you of the spoil of the enemies of the LORD;

Partly in gratitude for their former favour to him; and partly in policy, to engage their affections to him now when he apprehended Saul's death near. The enemies of the Lord; he intimates, that though he was fled to the Philistines, yet he employed not his forces against the Israelites, as, no doubt, Saul's courtiers and soldiers reported that he designed; but only against God's enemies.

27 To them which were in Beth-el, and to them which were in south Ramoth, and to them which were in Jattir, Beth-el, in Kirjath-jearim, where the ark was, 1 Sam. x. 3. South Ramoth; a city in the tribe of Simeon, Josh. xix. 8; so called by way of distinction from Ramoth in Gilead, which was more northward, 1 Kings xxii. 12. Jattir; of which see Josh. xv. 48.

28 And to them which were in Aroer, and to them which were in Siphmoth, and to them which were in Eshtemoa, Aroer; not that beyond Jordan, Numb. xxxii. 34, as many think, which was too remote from David; but another place of that name in Judah, where the rest of the places here named were; this being one of those places where David and his men were wont to haunt, as is expressed, ver. 31.

29 And to them which were in Rachal, and to them which were in the cities of the Jerahmeelites, and to them which were in the cities of the Kenites,

30 And to them which were in Hormah, and to them which were in Chorasban, and to them which were in Athach, 31 And to them which were in Hebron, and to all the places where David himself and his men were wont to haunt.

Or, to go; whither they used to resort in the time of Saul's persecution, either to hide themselves in some of their territories, or to get provision from thence

CHAP. XXXI.

The Israelites are smitten by the Philistines: Saul's sons are slain: Saul is wounded: he falleth on his own sword; as doth his armour-bearer, 1—6. The rest flee; and the Philistines possess their towns, and triumph over the dead carcasses, 7—10. They of Jabesh-gilead by night take down the bodies of Saul and of his sons, and burn them; and mournfully bury their bones, 11—13.

NOW the Philistines fought against Israel: and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and fell down slain in mount Gilboa.

The Philistines fought against Israel, whilst David was engaged against the Amalekites. So he returns to the history, which had been interrupted to give an account of David's concerns.

2 And the Philistines followed hard upon Saul and upon his sons; and the Philistines slew Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Melchi-shua, Saul's sons.

The Philistines slew Jonathan, David's dear friend; God so ordering it for the further exercise of David's faith and patience; and that David might depend upon God alone for his crown, and receive it solely from him, and not from Jonathan; who doubtless, had he lived, would have speedily settled the crown upon David's head, which would have in some sort eclipsed the glory of God's grace and power in this work. There was also a special providence of God in taking away Jonathan, (who of all Saul's sons seems to have been the fairest for the crown,) for the preventing divisions, which have happened amongst the people concerning the successor; David's way to the crown being by this means made the more clear. Abinadab, called also Ishui, 1 Sam. xiv. 49. Ish-bosheth was not here, being possibly at home, for the management of public affairs there.

3 And the battle went sore against Saul, and the archers hit him; and he was sore wounded of the archers.

4 Then said Saul unto his armour-bearer, Draw thy sword, and thrust me through therewith; lest these uncircumcised come and thrust me through, and abuse me. But his armourbearer would not; for he was sore afraid. Therefore Saul took a sword, and fell upon it.

Thrust me through, and abuse me; lest they take me, and put me to some shameful and cruel death. Saul took a sword, and fell upon it, and died of the wound, as it follows.

5 And when his armourbearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell likewise upon his sword, and died with him.

6 So Saul died, and his three sons, and his armourbearer, and all his men, that same day together.

7 ¶ And when the men of Israel that were on the other side of the valley, and they that were on the other side Jordan, saw that the men of Israel fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, they forsook the cities, and fled; and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

Of the valley, to wit, the valley of Jezreel, where the battle was fought. On the other side Jordan; or rather, on this side Jordan; for these were in the most danger; and the Hebrew preposition is indifferently used for on this side, or for beyond.

8 And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his three sons fallen in mount Gilboa.

THE SECOND BOOK OF SAMUEL,

OTHERWISE CALLED,

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE KINGS.

CHAP. I.

David being at Ziklag receiveth tidings by an Amalekite of Saul and Jonathan's death: the messenger pretendeth himself to have killed Saul, 1—12. David causeth him to be put to death, 13—16; lamenteth Saul and Jonathan with a song, 17—27.

B. C. 1056. NOW it came to pass after the death of Saul, when David was returned from ^athe slaughter of the Amalekites, and David had abode two days in Ziklag;

Which though burnt, yet was not so consumed by the fire, that David and his men could not lodge in it.

2 It came even to pass on the third day, that, behold, ^ba man came out of the camp from Saul ^cwith his clothes rent, and earth upon his head: and so it was, when he came to David, that he fell to the earth, and did obeisance.

On the third day; from David's return to Ziklag, as the foregoing words manifest. With his clothes rent, and earth upon his head; pretending sorrow for the loss of God's people, in compliance with David's humour.

3 And David said unto him, From whence comest thou? And he said unto him, Out of the camp of Israel am I escaped.

4 And David said unto him, †How went the matter? I pray thee, tell me. And he answered, That the people are fled from the battle, and many of the people also are fallen and dead; and Saul and Jonathan his son are dead also.

He mentions only these two, as those who seemed most to obstruct David's coming to the crown.

5 And David said unto the young man that told him, How knowest thou that Saul and Jonathan his son be dead?

For the knowledge of this did most concern both David and the whole commonwealth of Israel.

6 And the young man that told him said, As I happened by chance upon ^dmount Gilboa, behold, ^eSaul leaned upon his spear; and, lo, the chariots and horsemen followed hard after him.

7 And when he looked behind him, he saw me, and called unto me. And I answered, †Here am I.

8 And he said unto me, Who art thou? And I answered him, I am an Amalekite.

9 He said unto me again, Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and slay me: for ^fanguish is come upon me, because my life is yet whole in me.

Stand upon me, i. e. lean upon me by thy weight and force, that the spear may come through me; or, stay by me, i. e. stop thy flight, and tarry so long with me till thou hast killed me. Anguish is come upon me, i. e. I am in great pain of body, and anguish of mind. Or thus, my coat of mail, or embroidered coat, hath hindered me, that the spear could not pierce into me. Thus divers both Hebrew and other learned expositors understand it. My life is yet whole in me; I am heart-whole, and not likely to die, as well as not willing to live.

10 So I stood upon him, and ^gslew him, because I was sure that he could not live after that he was fallen: and I took the crown that ^hwas upon his head, and the bracelet that ⁱwas on his arm, and have brought them hither unto my lord.

I stood upon him, and slew him: it is most probable this was a lie, devised to gain David's favour, as he supposed. For, 1. Saul was not killed by a spear, as he pretends, but by his sword, 1 Sam. xxxi. 4. 2. It is expressly said that Saul's armour-bearer, being yet living, saw that Saul was dead, 1 Sam. xxxi. 5; which doubtless he would very thoroughly examine and know, before he would kill himself upon that account, as he did. 3. Saul's death is manifestly ascribed to his own action, even to his falling upon his sword, 1 Sam. xxxi. 4, 5. I was sure that he could not live after that he was fallen: this he addeth by way of caution and excuse, that it might be thought an act of necessity and kindness, and not of choice or ill will, that he killed Saul. But here also he betrays himself; for how could this be true, when Saul's life was whole within him, as he had now said, ver. 9? The crown that was upon his head; not that he then wore it; which would have exposed him too much, and that unnecessarily, to the rage of the Philistines; but that he used to wear it. It is not likely that he found it now actually upon Saul's head, but that he met with it in some part of the camp, whither Saul had brought it to wear it when he saw fit. Unto my lord; unto thee, whom, now Saul is dead, I own for my lord and king.

11 Then David took hold on his clothes, and rent them; and likewise all the men that were with him:

12 And they mourned, and wept, and fasted until even, for Saul, and for Jonathan his son, and for the people of the LORD, and for the house of Israel; because they were fallen by the sword.

13 ¶ And David said unto the young man that told him, Whence art thou? And he answered, I am the son of a stranger, an Amalekite.

Whence art thou? David heard and knew before what he was, but he asked it again judiciously, in order to his trial and punishment.

14 And David said unto him, How wast thou not afraid to stretch forth thine hand to destroy the LORD's anointed?

Why didst not thou refuse to kill him, as his armour-bearer had done? For notwithstanding his great danger, something might have fallen out through God's all-disposing providence, whereby his life might have been preserved.

15 And David called one of the young men, and said, Go near, and fall upon him. And he smote him that he died.

16 And David said unto him, Thy blood be upon thy head; for thy mouth hath testified against thee, saying, I have slain the LORD's anointed.

Thy blood be upon thy head; the guilt of thy bloodshed or death lies upon thyself, not upon me, for thy free and voluntary confession is sufficient proof of thy guilt in killing the king.

17 ¶ And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul and over Jonathan his son:

18 (Also he bade them teach the children of Judah the use of the bow: behold, it is written in the book of Jasher.)

Also: having mentioned David's lamentation in general, before he comes to the particular description of it, he interposeth this verse by way of parenthesis; to signify, that David did not so give up himself to lamentation as to neglect his great business, the care of the commonwealth, which now lay upon him; but took particular care to fortify them against such further losses and calamities as he bewails in the following song; and by his example, and this counsel, to instruct the people, that they should not give up themselves to sorrow and despondency for their great and general loss; but should raise up their spirits, and betake themselves to action. He bade them: David being now actually king upon Saul's death, takes his power upon him, and gives forth his commands. The children of Judah: these he more particularly teacheth, because they were the chief, and now the royal tribe, and likely to be the great bulwark to all Israel against the Philistines, upon whose land they bordered; and withal, to be the most friendly and true to him, and to his interest. The use of the bow, i. e. the use of their arms, which are all synecdochically expressed under the name of the bow, which then was one of the chief weapons; and for the dexterous use whereof Jonathan is commended in the following song: which may be one reason why he now gives forth this order, that so they might strive to imitate Jonathan in the military skill, and to excel in it, as he did. It is written; not the following song, as many think, for that is written here, and therefore it was needless to refer us to another book for it; but this foregoing counsel and course which David took to repair the last loss, which is here mentioned but briefly, and in general terms; but, as it seems, more largely and particularly described in the book of Jasher; of which see on Josh. x. 13.

19 The beauty of Israel is slain upon thy high places: how are the mighty fallen!

The beauty of Israel; their flower and glory, Saul and Jonathan, and their army, consisting of young and valiant men. Upon thy high places, i. e. those which belong to thee, O land of Israel. How are the mighty fallen! how strangely! how suddenly! how dreadfully and universally!

20 Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon; lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph.

Tell it not in Gath: this is not a precept, but a poetical wish; whereby he doth not so much desire that this might not be done, which he knew to be vain and impossible; as express his great sorrow because it was and would be done, to the great dishonour of God and of his people. He mentions the daughters of the Philistines, because it was the custom of women in those times and places to celebrate those victories which their men obtained, with triumphant songs and dances; as Exod. xv.; Judg. xi. 34; 1 Sam. xviii. 6.

21 Ye mountains of Gilboa, let there be no dew, neither let there be rain, upon you, nor fields of offerings: for there the shield of the mighty is vilely cast away, the shield of Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil.

Let there be no dew, neither let there be rain, upon you: this is no proper imprecation; which he had no reason to inflict upon those harmless mountains; but only a passionate representation of the horror which he conceived at this public loss; which was such, as if he thought every person or thing which contributed to it were fit to bear the tokens of Divine displeasure, such as this is, when the earth wants the blessed and necessary influences of dew and rain. Nor fields of offerings, i. e. fruitful fields, which may produce fair and goodly fruits fit to be offered unto God. The shield of the mighty; the shields of the valiant men of Israel. Vilely; dishonourably; for it was a great reproach to any soldier to cast away or lose his shield. Cast away, to wit, by themselves, that they might flee more swiftly away, as the Israelites did, and Saul with the rest; as is said, 1 Sam. xxxi. 1, 2. As though he had not been anointed with oil; as if he had been no more nor better than a common soldier: he was exposed to the same kind of death and reproach as they were.

22 From the blood of the slain, from the fat of the mighty, the bow of Jonathan turned not back, and the sword of Saul returned not empty.

Turned not back, to wit, without effect: compare Isa. xlv. 23; lv. 11. Their arrows shot from their bows, and their swords, did seldom miss, and commonly pierced fat, and flesh, and blood, and reached even to the heart and bowels. Empty, i. e. not filled and glutted with blood: for the sword is metaphorically said to have a mouth, which we translate an edge; and to devour, 2 Sam. ii. 26; xi. 25; Jer. ii. 30; xlv. 10. And this their former successfulness is here mentioned as an aggravation of their last infelicity.

23 Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided: they were swifter than eagles, they were stronger than lions.

Pleasant; amiable and obliging in their carriage and conversation, both towards one another, and towards their people; for as for Saul's fierce behaviour towards Jonathan, 1 Sam. xx. 30, 33, it was only a sudden passion, by which his ordinary temper was not to be measured; and for his carriage towards David, that was from that jealousy and reason of state which usually engageth even good-natured and well-nurtured princes to the same hostilities in like cases. But it is observable, that David speaks not a word here of his piety and other virtues; but only commends him for those things which were truly in him; a fit pattern for all preachers in their funeral commendations. In their lives; Jonathan was not false to his father, as was reported; but stuck close to him. In their death they were not divided; and as he lived, so he died with him, at the same time, and in the same common and good cause. Swifter than eagles; expeditious and nimble in pursuing their enemies, and executing their designs; which is a great commendation in a prince and in a soldier. Stronger than lions, in regard of their bodily strength and the courage of their minds.

24 Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul, who clothed you in scarlet, with other delights, who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel.

Ye daughters of Israel: these he mentions, partly because the women then used to make songs, both of triumph and of lamentation, as occasion required; and partly because they usually are most delighted with the ornaments of the body here following. Who clothed you in scarlet: this he did, partly because he procured them so much peace as gave them opportunity of enriching themselves; and partly because he took these things as spoils from the enemies, and clothed his own people with them. Compare Psal. lxxviii. 12.

25 How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle! O Jonathan, thou wast slain in thine high places.

Which were in thy country, and (had not thy father diminished thee by his sins) in thy dominions.

26 I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan: very pleasant hast thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women.

For thee, i. e. for the loss of thee. For besides the loss of a true friend, and all the comfort of friendship, which is inestimable, he lost him who both could, and undoubtedly would, have given him a speedy, and quiet, and sure possession of the kingdom; whereas now he met with long and troublesome interruptions. The love of women, i. e. that love wherewith they love their husbands or children; for their affections are usually more vehement and ardent than men's.

27 How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war perished!

Either, 1. Metaphorically so called, to wit, Saul and Jonathan, and the brave commanders and soldiers of Israel; who might have been called the chariots of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. Or rather, 2. Properly; for, together with the men, their arms were lost, which was a very great aggravation of their loss, and that loss seems to be at this time more irrecoverable and dangerous than the loss of their men.

CHAP. II.

David, by God's direction, with his company goeth up to Hebron, where he is made king of Judah, 1—4. He commendeth them of Jabesh-gilead for burying Saul, 5—7.

Abner maketh Ish-bosheth king of Israel, 8—11. A mortal fight between twelve of Abner's and twelve of Joab's men, 12—17. Asahel pursueth Abner, and is slain by him, 18—24. At Abner's motion Joab soundeth a retreat, 25—31. Asahel's burial, 32.

AND it came to pass after this, that David enquired of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up into any of the cities of Judah? And the LORD said unto him, Go up. And David said, Whither shall I go up? And he said, Unto Hebron.

David inquired of the Lord, by Urim, as 1 Sam. xxiii. 6, 9; xxx. 7, 8. Thus David begins at the right end, and lays his foundation in God's counsel and assistance, which now he seeks. He asketh not whether he should take the kingdom, for that was appointed and known before; and he would not offend God, nor dishonour his ordinance, with frivolous and unnecessary inquiries; but only where he should enter upon it; whether in Judah, as he supposed, because of his relation to that tribe, and his interest in it; or whether in some other tribe; for he doth not limit God, but resolves exactly to follow his counsels. Unto Hebron; which was next to Jerusalem, (part whereof the Jebusites now possessed,) the chief city of that tribe, and a city of the priests, Josh. xxi. 10, &c., and in the very centre or middle of that tribe, to which the whole tribe might speedily resort, when need required.

2 So David went up thither, and his two wives also, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail Nabal's wife the Carmelite.

3 And his men that were with him did David bring up, every man with his household: and they dwelt in the cities of Hebron.

i. e. The cities or towns belonging and subject to Hebron, which was the metropolis, Josh. xxi. 11, 12; for in Hebron itself there was not space for them all, because it was filled with priests, and with David's court.

4 And the men of Judah came, and there they anointed David king over the house of Judah. And they told David, saying, That the men of Jabesh-gilead were they that buried Saul.

They anointed David king over the house of Judah: this they did upon just grounds, because not only the kingdom was promised to that tribe, Gen. xlix. 10, but David was designed and anointed by God, whose will both they and all Israel were obliged to observe and obey. And they piously resolved not to neglect their duty, though they saw the other tribes would. Yet their prudent caution and modesty is observable, that they make him king of Judah only, and not of all Israel. And therefore there was need of a third anointing to the kingdom over all Israel, which he had chap. v. 3. But as for that first anointing, 1 Sam. xvi. 13, it was only a designation of the person who should be king, but not an actual inauguration of him to the kingdom.

5 ¶ And David sent messengers unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, and said unto them, Blessed be ye of the LORD, that ye have shewed this kindness unto your lord, even unto Saul, and have buried him.

This kindness; this respect and affection to procure him burial. For as it is and ever was esteemed an act of inhumanity to deny burial to the dead; so it is an act of mercy and kindness to bury them.

6 And now the LORD shew kindness and truth unto you: and I also will requite you this kindness, because ye have done this thing.

Kindness and truth, i. e. true and real kindness; not in words only, but also in actions, as you have now done to

Be ye valiant; be not afraid lest the Philistines should punish you for this fact, but take good courage, I will defend you. For your master Saul is dead, or though your master Saul be dead, and so your hearts may faint within you, as if you were now sheep without a shepherd.

8 ¶ But 'Abner the son of Ner, captain of † Saul's host, took ‖ Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and brought him over to Mahanaim;

Partly out of envy and malice against David; and partly out of his own ambition and desire of rule, because he knew that Ish-bosheth would have only the name of king, whilst he had the power. Ish-bosheth, called also Esh-baal, 1 Chron. viii. 33; ix. 39; it being usual with the Hebrews, instead of Baal, the name of false gods, to put Bosheth, which signifies shame, or confusion, or a shameful thing; as appeareth by comparing Judg. ix. 53, with 2 Sam. xi. 21; and 2 Sam. iv. 4, with 1 Chron. viii. 34; and from Jer. iii. 24; Hos. ix. 10. Mahanaim; a place beyond Jordan, whither he carried him; partly to secure those brave and valiant men of Jabesh-gilead to himself; and principally because this place was most remote from David, and from the Philistines too; and therefore here he might recruit his forces with less disturbance than in other places.

9 And made him king over Gilead, and over the Ashurites, and over Jezreel, and over Ephraim, and over Benjamin, and over all Israel.

Gilead; largely so taken for all the land of Israel beyond Jordan, as it is Josh. xxii. 9; Judg. x. 8. The Ashurites, i. e. the tribe of Asher, as the Chaldee Paraphrast and others understand it. Jezreel; a large and rich valley situate in the borders of the tribes of Zebulun, Issachar, and Naphtali, and so put synecdochically for them all. All Israel; except Judah, as it follows.

10 Ish-bosheth Saul's son was forty years old when he began to reign over Israel, and reigned two years. But the house of Judah followed David.

Reigned two years, to wit, before the following war broke forth; compare 1 Sam. xiii. 1; for that he reigned longer, may appear both from the following verse, and from chap. iii. 1, and from the following history; though some think he reigned only two years, and that the rest of David's seven years the Israelites by Abner's instigation stuck to the house of Saul, but were in suspense whether they should confer the crown upon Mephibosheth the right heir, but a child; or upon Ish-bosheth, a grown man, whom with some difficulty, and after long debates amongst themselves, they preferred.

11 And *the † time that David was king in Hebron over the house of Judah was seven years and six months.

12 ¶ And Abner the son of Ner, and the servants of Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, went out from Mahanaim to 'Gibeon.

The servants of Ish-bosheth, i. e. his officers and commanders, and their army. To Gibeon, in the country of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 25, near Judah, to fight with David's army, and to bring back the rest of the kingdom to Saul's house.

13 And Joab the son of Zeruah, and the servants of David, went out, and met † together by ^m the pool of Gibeon: and they sat down, the one on the one side of the pool, and the other on the other side of the pool.

Went out, to battle. Quest. How could or durst this one tribe oppose all the rest? Ans. First, This tribe was very numerous and valiant of themselves, and they had a king of extraordinary courage, and conduct, and success. Secondly, There were great numbers of the other tribes which favoured them, as appears from 1 Chron. xii. Thirdly, They had the encouragement of special promises of God, made both to their tribe and to David. Met together, i. e. met the opposite army, and put themselves into a posture for battle.

14 And Abner said to Joab, Let the young men now arise, and play before us. And Joab said, Let them arise.

Abner trusting to his greater numbers, offers battle. Play before us, i. e. show their prowess and dexterity in managing their weapons, and fighting together. He speaks like a vain-glorious and cruel man, and a soldier of fortune, that esteemed it a sport to see men wounding and killing one another. So this he designed, partly for their mutual recreation, and trial of skill and valour; and partly that by this occasion they might be engaged in a battle.

15 Then there arose and went over by number twelve of Benjamin, which pertained to Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and twelve of the servants of David.

Abner selected all his combatants out of Benjamin, both because that was a warlike and valiant tribe, and that he might give the more honour to his own tribe.

16 And they caught every one his fellow by the head, and thrust his sword in his fellow's side; so they fell down together: wherefore that place was called ‖ Helkath-hazzurim, which is in Gibeon.

By the head; by the hair of the head, which after their manner was of a considerable length, and therefore gave their enemy advantage; which every one of them endeavoured to get, and to improve against the other. Helkath-hazzurim, or the field of rocks, i. e. of men who stood like rocks, unmovable, each one dying upon the spot where he fought.

17 And there was a very sore battle that day; and Abner was beaten, and the men of Israel, before the servants of David.

18 ¶ And there were ⁿ three sons of Zeruah there, Joab, and Abishai, and Asahel: and Asahel was ^o as light † of foot † ^p as a wild roe.

19 And Asahel pursued after Abner; and in going he turned not to the right hand nor to the left † from following Abner.

20 Then Abner looked behind him, and said, Art thou Asahel? And he answered, I am.

21 And Abner said to him, Turn thee aside to thy right hand or to thy left, and lay thee hold on one of the young men, and take thee his ‖ armour. But Asahel would not turn aside from following of him.

Take thee his armour: if thou art ambitious to get a trophy or mark of thy valour, desist from me, who am an old and experienced captain, and go to some young and raw soldier; try thy skill upon him, and take away his arms from him.

22 And Abner said again to Asahel, Turn thee aside from following me: wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? how then should I hold up my face to Joab thy brother?

He was loth to enrage Joab too much against him, because his guilty conscience told him that his cause was bad, and herefore he presaged ill success, and that he might need such a friend as Joab to make his peace with David.

23 Howbeit he refused to turn aside : wherefore Abner with the hinder end of the spear smote him ^q under the fifth rib, that the spear came out behind him ; and he fell down there, and died in the same place : and it came to pass, that as many as came to the place where Asahel fell down and died stood still.

The hinder end of the spear was sharp-pointed, after the manner. Under the fifth rib; the seat of the liver and bowels, where wounds are mortal. In the same place; upon the spot, not being able to go one step further.

24 Joab also and Abishai pursued after Abner : and the sun went down when they were come to the hill of Ammah, that lieth before Giah by the way of the wilderness of Gibeon.

25 ¶ And the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together after Abner, and became one troop, and stood on the top of an hill.

Where, being upon the upper ground, they might better defend themselves.

26 Then Abner called to Joab, and said, Shall the sword devour for ever ? knowest thou not that it will be bitterness in the latter end ? how long shall it be then, ere thou bid the people return from following their brethren ?

It will be bitterness in the latter end; it will produce dreadful effects, and many bloody slaughters, if by a further prosecution thou makest them desperate; which is against all the rules of policy. Their brethren, by nation and religion; whom therefore they should not pursue with so fierce a rage, as if they were pursuing the Philistines.

27 And Joab said, As God liveth, unless ^r thou hadst spoken, surely then [†] in the morning the people had [‡] gone up every one from following his brother.

Unless thou hadst spoken; unless thou hadst made the motion that they might fight, ver. 14. It was thou, not I, that gave the first occasion of this fight. Withal, he intimates that Abner was the sole cause of this war; and that if he had not given commission and command, the war had never been undertaken, but all things had been ended by an amicable agreement; which might have been made that very morning, if he had so pleased.

28 So Joab blew a trumpet, and all the people stood still, and pursued after Israel no more, neither fought they any more.

Either, first, at that time; or rather, secondly, in any pitched battle.

29 And Abner and his men walked all that night through the plain, and passed over Jordan, and went through all Bithron, and they came to Mahanaim.

Bithron; otherwise called the mountains of Bether, Cant. ii. 17, which were beyond Jordan; or some other country now not known by that name, which is the case of hundreds of places.

30 And Joab returned from following Abner : and when he had gathered all the people together, there lacked of David's servants nineteen men and Asahel.

31 But the servants of David had smitten of Benjamin, and of Abner's men, so that three hundred and threescore men died.

32 ¶ And they took up Asahel, and buried him in the sepulchre of his father, which was in Beth-lehem. And Joab and his men went all night, and they came to Hebron at break of day.

CHAP. III.

The war between the house of David and the house of Saul. Six sons born to David in Hebron, 1—5. Abner, displeased with Ish-bosheth, 6—11, revolteth to David, who requir-eth of him that he bring with him Michal, which he does, and communes with the elders of Israel; is feasted by David and dismissed, 12—21. Joab returning from battle is displeased with the king, and treacherously murder-eth Abner, 22—27. David curseth Joab, 28—30. Mourne-eth over Abner, 31—39.

NOW there was long war between the house of Saul and the house of David : but David waxed stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker.

Long war; for five years longer; for it is probable that Ish-bosheth was made king presently upon Saul's death, to give them countenance for their rebellion against David; and the other tribes did not submit to David before seven years were expired.

2 ¶ And ^a unto David were sons born in Hebron : and his firstborn was Am- ^b non, ^c of Abinoam the Jezreelitess ;

3 And his second, ¶ Chileab, of Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite ; and the third, Absalom the son of Maacah the daughter of Talmai king ^c of Geshur ;

Chileab, called also Daniel, 1 Chron. iii. 1. Geshur; a part of Syria, northward from the land of Israel, Deut. iii. 14; Josh. xii. 5. See 2 Sam. xiii. 37; xiv. 23; xv. 8. Her he married, as it may seem, in policy, that he might have a powerful friend and ally to assist him against Ish-bosheth's party in the north, whilst himself opposed him in the southern parts. But he paid dear for making piety give place to policy herein, as the history of Absalom showeth. There were other Geshurites southward from Canaan, whom David invaded, 1 Sam. xxvii. 8, and it is not impossible but they were a colony of those in the north.

4 And the fourth, ^d Adonijah the son of Haggith ; and the fifth, Shephatiah the son of Abital ;

5 And the sixth, Ithream, by Eglah David's wife. These were born to David in Hebron.

David's wife: this is added, either because she was of obscure parentage, and was known by no other title but her relation to David; or to distinguish her from some other person of that name, who possibly might be of no good fame; or because this was his first and most proper wife, best known by her other name of Michal, who, though she had no child by David after she scoffed at him for dancing before the ark, chap. vi. 23, yet might have one before that time. And she might be named the last of these here, because she was given away from David, and married to another man, when David took the other wives; and therefore though she had been first, yet now she was become the last of them. Or this title, being put in the last place, may belong to all the rest of the women above mentioned, by a figure called zeugma, to distinguish them from his concubines, 2 Sam. v. 13; 1 Chron. iii. 9.

6 ¶ And it came to pass, while there was war between the house of Saul and the house of David, that Abner made himself strong for the house of Saul.

He used all his endeavours to support Saul's house; which is mentioned, to show the reason of his deep resentment of the following aspersion. Or, he strengthened himself in the house of Saul, i. e. he so managed all affairs, as to get all the riches and power into his own hands; which made Ish-bosheth suspect that he aimed at the kingdom, and sought to marry the king's concubine in order to it, as the manner was. See 2 Sam. xii. 8; xvi. 21; 1 Kings i. 17.

7 And Saul had a concubine, whose name was ^e Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah :

and Ish-bosheth said to Abner, Wherefore hast thou 'gone in unto my father's concubine ?

Either, first, To satisfy thy own lust. Or rather, secondly, By that pretence to take away my crown first; for this was that which stirred up his jealousy and rage, and caused him to speak that to Abner which otherwise he neither would nor durst. But whether Abner were guilty or no, it is not evident from the following words; for if it were true, great men cannot endure to be told of their faults, though they be true and great.

8 Then was Abner very wroth for the words of Ish-bosheth, and said, Am I ^g a dog's head, which against Judah do shew kindness this day unto the house of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hand of David, that thou chargest me to day with a fault concerning this woman ?

A dog's head, i. e. a vile and contemptible creature, as a dog was. See Deut. xxiii. 18; 1 Sam. xxiv. 14; 2 Sam. ix. 8; xvi. 9; Job xxx. 1; Eccles. ix. 4. And a dog's head is put for a dog by a synecdoche, usual both in the Hebrew and in other languages, as the head is oft put for the whole man in the Latin tongue. Which against Judah; so the participle lamed is well rendered, as el, which among the Hebrews is confessedly of the same nature and use, is used Eccles. ix. 14; Jer. xxxiv. 7; Ezek. xiii. 9, 20; Amos vii. 15. Have not delivered thee into the hand of David, which I could oft and easily have done. That thou chargest me to-day with a fault concerning this woman; either, that thou accusest me falsely concerning this matter; or, that thou canst not wink at so small a fault (for so he esteemed it) as conversation with this woman, who, whatsoever she formerly was, is now so impotent and inconsiderable, that she can do thee no service, as I have done.

9 ^h So do God to Abner, and more also, except, ⁱ as the LORD hath sworn to David, even so I do to him;

Whence it appears that this wicked wretch did all this while fight against his own knowledge and conscience, and against God himself.

10 To translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and to set up the throne of David over Israel and over Judah, ^k from Dan even to Beer-sheba.

11 And he could not answer Abner a word again, because he feared him.

He could not answer Abner, because he durst not provoke Abner further, lest he should really execute what he supposed as yet he only threatened. Because he feared him, as having a greater interest in, and power with, both the army and the rest of the people, than himself had.

12 ¶ And Abner sent messengers to David on his behalf, saying, Whose is the land? saying also, Make thy league with me, and, behold, my hand shall be with thee, to bring about all Israel unto thee.

Messengers on his behalf; who in his name and stead might treat with David concerning his reconciliation with him. Thus God overrules the lusts and passions of wicked men, to accomplish his own wise and holy purposes. And who then dare contend with that God who makes even his enemies to do his work, and destroy themselves? Whose is the land? to whom doth this whole land belong, but to thee? Is it not thine by Divine right? Saul's son is but a usurper, thou only art the rightful owner. Make thy league with me, that thou wilt pardon all past offences to me, and to all Israel, and thou wilt receive me into thy grace and favour.

13 ¶ And he said, Well; I will make a league with thee: but one thing I require of thee,

† that is, 'Thou shalt not see my face, except thou first bring ^m Michal Saul's daughter, when thou comest to see my face.

I will make a league with thee, to wit, upon thy terms; which, all circumstances considered, seems to be lawful, to prevent the great effusion of Israelitish blood, which otherwise would certainly have been spilt. And although the principle of this action of Abner's was base and wicked, yet the action itself was lawful and commendable, and no more than his duty to God and David obliged him to; and therefore David might well persuade and induce him to it.

14 And David sent messengers to Ish-bosheth Saul's son, saying, Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me ⁿ for an hundred foreskins of the Philistines.

Ish-bosheth's consent was necessary, both to take her away from her present husband, and to persuade her to return to David. Hereby David opened to him also a door of hope for his reconciliation, lest being desperate he should hinder Abner in his present design. My wife Michal; who, though she was taken from me by force, and constrained to marry another, 1 Sam. xxv. 44, yet is indeed my rightful wife. Her David demands, partly, for the affection he formerly had and still retained to her; partly, to deliver her from the sin and reproach of adultery with another man, who was not in truth and justice her husband, though he was so called and accounted; and partly, upon a politic consideration, that she might strengthen his right and title to the kingdom.

15 And Ish-bosheth sent, and took her from her husband, even from ^o Phaltiel the son of Laish.

For, being forsaken by Abner, he durst not deny David, into whose power he saw he must unavoidably come; and besides he supposed that she might be an effectual instrument to make his peace with David.

16 And her husband went with her † along weeping behind her to ^p Bahurim. Then said Abner unto him, Go, return. And he returned.

Bahurim; a city of Benjamin, upon the borders of Judah. See 2 Sam. xix. 16; 1 Kings ii. 8.

17 ¶ And Abner had communication with the elders of Israel, saying, Ye sought for David † in times past to be king over you:

Even in Saul's time you highly honoured him, and prized his conduct, and wished that the power were in his hands; and great numbers of you went to him when he was in the hold, 1 Chron. xii. And after Saul's death you would gladly have advanced him to the crown, if your respect to Saul's family, together with my authority and influence, had not diverted you.

18 Now then do it: ^q for the LORD hath spoken of David, saying, By the hand of my servant David I will save my people Israel out of the hand of the Philistines, and out of the hand of all their enemies.

Now then do it; you shall have my free consent and utmost assistance in procuring it. The Lord hath spoken of David; he wickedly pretends religion, when he intended nothing but the satisfaction of his own pride, and malice, and fury against Ish-bosheth. It is very probable God spake these words, but undoubtedly he spake the same sense by Samuel, though it be not expressed before.

19 And Abner also spake in the ears of ^r Benjamin: and Abner went also to speak in the ears of David in Hebron all that seemed good to Israel, and that seemed good to the whole house of Benjamin.

r 1 Chron. 12. 29.

In the ears of Benjamin; to these he particularly applies himself, because they might be thought most kind to Saul and his house, and most loth to let the kingdom go out of their own tribe; and therefore it was necessary that he should use all his art and power with them, to persuade them to a compliance with his design; and besides, they were a valiant tribe, and bordering upon Judah, and situate between them and the other tribes; and therefore the winning of them would be of mighty concernment to bring in all the rest.

20 So Abner came to David to Hebron, and twenty men with him, And David made Abner and the men that were with him a feast.

Which in those times was customary when persons entered into covenant. See Gen. xxvi. 30; xxxi. 44, 46.

21 And Abner said unto David, I will arise and go, and ^awill gather all Israel unto my lord the king, that they may make a league with thee, and that thou mayest ^treign over all that thine heart desireth. And David sent Abner away; and he went in peace.

All Israel, i. e. the elders and chieftains of all Israel, representing and ruling all the rest.

22 ¶ And, behold, the servants of David and Joab came from pursuing a troop, and brought in a great spoil with them: but Abner was not with David in Hebron; for he had sent him away, and he was gone in peace.

A troop of robbers, either Philistines, or Edomites, or some others, who taking advantage of the discord between the houses of Saul and David, made inroads into Judah, as they had occasion.

23 When Joab and all the host that was with him were come, they told Joab, saying, Abner the son of Ner came to the king, and he hath sent him away, and he is gone in peace.

24 Then Joab came to the king, and said, What hast thou done? behold, Abner came unto thee; why is it that thou hast sent him away, and he is quite gone?

What hast thou done? thou hast committed a great oversight, to dismiss so dangerous and mischievous a person when he was in thy hands.

25 Thou knowest Abner the son of Ner, that he came to deceive thee, and to know ^uthy going out and thy coming in, and to know all that thou doest.

To search out thy counsels and secret designs, and to make use of them against thee.

26 And when Joab was come out from David, he sent messengers after Abner, which brought him again from the well of Sirah: but David knew it not.

He sent messengers after Abner, in the king's name, and upon pretence of some further communication with him.

27 And when Abner was returned to Hebron, Joab ^stook him aside in the gate to speak with him ^{||}quietly, and smote him there ^vunder the fifth rib, that he died, for the blood of ^aAsahel his brother.

In the gate; in the entrance into the city before he came to the king; and in the place where conferences used to be. Quietly; with appearance of great civility and kindness. Or, secretly, as having some matter of great importance to utter, which none but himself must hear. Smote him there under the fifth rib; as he did Asahel, chap. ii. 23. For the blood of Asahel his brother; to revenge the death of Asahel; and withal (though that be not here mentioned) to secure his own standing, and rid his hands of so great and powerful a competitor. And this was Joab's design; but God had other designs in it, both to punish Abner's manifold wickedness, and particularly his rebellion against David, and against God and his own conscience therein; and that David might not owe his kingdom to Abner, and to his revenge and treachery, but wholly to God's wise and powerful providence.

28 ¶ And afterward when David heard it, he said, I and my kingdom are guiltless before the Lord for ever from the blood of Abner the son of Ner:

David said publicly, before his courtiers and people; and seriously, as in God's presence; I call the Lord to witness, that this was not done by my instigation or authority, or by any public counsel, but only by Joab's malice; and therefore I trust that God will not punish me nor my kingdom, but Joab only.

29 ^aLet it rest on the head of Joab, and on all his father's house; and let there not [†]fail from the house of Joab one ^bthat hath an issue, or that is a leper, or that leaneth on a staff, or that falleth on the sword, or that lacketh bread.

Let it rest, i. e. this blood, the guilt and punishment of it. And on all his father's house. But children were not to suffer for their parents' sin, Deut. xxiv. 16; and therefore either this was only a prediction; or, if it were an imprecation, David may seem to have transgressed his bounds, and mingled his passion with his zeal, that so he might express his utter detestation of this horrid murder, and how far he was from having any hand in it. An issue was not only a troublesome and shameful disease, but also infectious, both to him that had it, and to all that touched him; so that whilst it was upon a man, he was cut off in a great part from converse either with God or men. That leaneth on a staff, through craziness, or feebleness, or lameness, whereby he is rendered unfit for action and public service.

30 So Joab and Abishai his brother slew Abner, because he had slain their brother ^cAsahel at Gibeon in the battle.

Joab and Abishai; for though Joab only committed the murder, yet Abishai was guilty of it, because it was done with his consent, and counsel, and help, and approbation; for by these and such-like actions men are involved in the guilt of other men's sins, at least in God's judgment. Abner slew Asahel in the fury of battle, and for his own necessary defence; and therefore it was no justification of this unnecessary and treacherous murder in a time of peace.

31 ¶ And David said to Joab, and to all the people that were with him, ^dRend your clothes, and ^egird you with sackcloth, and mourn before Abner. And king David himself followed the [†]bier.

David said to Joab; him he especially obliged to it; partly to bring him to repentance for his sin; partly to expose him to public shame, and to the contempt and hatred of all the people, with whom he had too great an interest, which hereby David designed to diminish. Mourn before Abner, i. e. attending upon his corpse, and paying him that respect and honour which was due to his quality. King David himself followed the bier; which was against the usage of kings, and might seem below David's dignity; but it was now expedient, to vindicate himself from all suspicion and contrivance or concurrence in this action.

32 And they buried Abner in Hebron: and the king lifted up his voice, and wept at the grave of Abner; and all the people wept.

33 And the king lamented over Abner, and said, Died Abner as a ^ffool dieth?

i. e. As a wicked man; for such are oft called fools in Scripture. Was he cut off by the hands of justice for his crimes? Nothing less; but by Joab's malice and treachery. Or did he die by his own folly, because he had not wisdom or courage to defend himself? Ah, no. The words may be thus rendered: Shall or should Abner die like a fool, or a vile contemptible person? i. e. unregarded, unpitied, unrevenged; as fools or vile persons die, for whose death none are concerned. Or, How is Abner dead like a fool! pitying his mischance. It being honourable for a great man and a soldier to fight, if met with by an enemy, and not (having his arms at liberty) stand still like a fool to be killed, without making any resistance or defence; which, by this treachery of Joab, happened to be his case.

34 Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters: as a man falleth before † wicked men, so fellest thou. And all the people wept again over him.

+ Heb. children of iniquity.

Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters; thou didst not tamely yield up thyself to Joab, as his prisoner, to be bound hand and foot at his pleasure. Joab did not overcome thee generously and honourably in an equal combat, nor durst he attempt thee in that way, as a general or soldier of any worth would have done. Before wicked men; or, before, i. e. in the presence or by the hands of forward, or perverse, or crooked men, by hypocrisy and perfidiousness, whereby the vilest coward may kill the most valiant person. Thus he reproached Joab to his very face, before all the people; which was a great evidence of his own innocence herein; because otherwise Joab, being so powerful, and proud, and petulant to his sovereign, would never have taken the shame and blame of it wholly to himself, as he did.

35 And when all the people came to cause David to eat meat while it was yet day, David sware, saying, So do God to me, and more also, if I taste bread, or ought else, till the sun be down.

To eat meat; to refresh and cheer up his depressed spirits, as they used to do at funerals. See Jer. xvi. 5; Ezck. xxiv. 17. Till the sun be down, i. e. till evening; for then fasting days ended of course.

36 And all the people took notice of it, and it † pleased them: as whatsoever the king did pleased all the people.

+ Heb. was good in their eyes.

Took notice of it; observed what the king said and did. It pleased them; they were satisfied concerning David's integrity, and the method he used here for his own just vindication. Whatsoever the king did; either in this matter; or rather, in all things following this action. The meaning is, by his carriage herein he gained so great an interest in the hearts of his people, that they judged most favourably of, and put the best construction upon, all his words and actions; as, on the contrary, when people have a prejudice against or an ill will towards their prince, they are apt to judge most harshly of all his counsels and doings.

37 For all the people and all Israel understood that day that it was not of the king to slay Abner the son of Ner.

Not done by his design or good will.

38 And the king said unto his servants, Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?

A great man, both for his illustrious quality, and for his high courage and wise conduct; and especially now for his great usefulness and serviceableness to me in giving me the entire and peaceable possession of all Israel. But still observe David's prudence and piety, that he doth not commend him for his virtues and graces, as men of vendible consciences and tongues use to do upon funeral occasions; but only for that kind of worth which was really in him. Compare 2 Sam. i. 23.

39 And I am this day † weak, though anointed king; and these men the sons of Zeruiah be too hard for me: the LORD shall reward the doer of evil according to his wickedness.

Weak, or tender, in the infancy of my kingdom, not well rooted and settled in it. The metaphor is taken from a young and tender child or plant. The sons of Zeruiah; Joab and Abishai, the sons of my sister Zeruiah. Too hard for me, i. e. too powerful. They have so great a command over all the soldiers, and so great favour with the people, that I cannot punish them without apparent hazard to my person and kingdom; especially now when all the tribes, except Judah, are yet in a state of opposition against me. But this, although it might give some colour to the delay of their punishment for a season, yet it may seem to have been one of David's infirmities, that he did not do it within some reasonable time, both because this indulgence proceeded from a distrust of God's power and faithfulness; as if God could not, or would not, make good his promise of the kingdom to him, without and against Joab and all his confederates; and because it was contrary to God's law, which severely requires the punishment of wilful murderers, Gen. ix. 6; Exod. xxi. 14; Numb. xxxv. 21, which David had no power to dispense with. And David might and should have remembered how dear Saul paid for this very thing, that he dispensed with God's command, and spared those whom God commanded him to slay, 1 Sam. xv. And it seems David's conscience oft smote him for this; which made him watch for a fit opportunity to remove, and then punish him, and having neglected it till death, he declareth his sorrow for that neglect, by giving Solomon a charge to execute it after his death, 1 Kings ii. 5, 6, 34.

CHAP. IV.

Ish-bosheth and his party are astonished at Abner's death, 1. Two captains murder Ish-bosheth, and bring his head to David, 2—8; who caused them to be put to death, and hanged up; and Ish-bosheth's head to be buried, 9—12.

AND when Saul's son heard that Abner was dead in Hebron, his hands were feeble, and all the Israelites were troubled.

a Ezra 4. 4. Is. 13. 7. b Matt. 2. 3.

His hands were feeble; his spirit, and courage, and strength failed him. This phrase is used in the same sense Ezra iv. 4; Neh. vi. 9; Isa. xiii. 7; xxxv. 3. The Israelites were troubled, because now they were unable to oppose David, and doubtful of obtaining his favour, now Abner their peace-maker was dead.

2 And Saul's son had two men that were captains of bands: the name of the one was Baanah, and the name of the † other Rechab, the sons of Rimmon a Beerothite, of the children of Benjamin: (for Beeroth also was reckoned to Benjamin:

+ Heb. Beeroth. c Josh. 18. 25.

of the children of Benjamin; of Ish-bosheth's own tribe, whom therefore he trusted the more; and this gave them opportunity to execute their wicked design. Beeroth also was reckoned to Benjamin: this is added as the reason why he called them Beerothites, because though Beeroth was now in the hands and possession of the Philistines, 1 Sam. xxxi. 7, yet of right it belonged to the Benjamites, Josh. xviii. 25.

3 And the Beerothites fled to Gittaim, and were sojourners there until this day.)

d Neh. 11. 33.

And, or, yet, or but; for this comes in to anticipate an objection against what he had now said. It is true, saith he, the Beerothites fled, as others did, upon the overthrow of Saul and his army, 1 Sam. xxxi. 7, to a place called Gittaim, 2 Sam. iv. 3; not that in Benjamin, Neh. xi. 33, but some other place of that name more remote from the Philistines; and so they were Gittaimites by their present habitation, but Beerothites by their original, and place of their birth.

4 And Jonathan, Saul's son, had a son that was lame of his feet. He was five years old when the tidings came of Saul and Jonathan out of Jezreel, and his nurse took him up, and fled: and it came to pass, as she made haste to flee, that he fell, and became lame. And his name was Mephibosheth.

f 1 Sam. 29. 1, 11.

g Or, Mephibosheth. 1 Chr. 8. 34. & 9. 4.

This history is inserted as that which encouraged these men to this wicked murder, because Saul's family was now reduced to a low ebb; and if Ish-bosheth was despatched, there would be none left but a lame child, who was altogether unfit to manage the kingdom, especially in so troublesome a time as this was; and therefore the crown must necessarily come to David by their act and deed, for which they promised themselves no small recompence. Jezreel; the place of that last and fatal fight, 1 Sam. xxix. 11. Mephibosheth; called also Merib-baal, 1 Chron. viii. 34. See the notes on chap. ii. 8.

5 And the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, Rechab and Baanah, went, and came about the heat of the day to the house of Ish-bosheth, who lay on a bed at noon.

Either from discontent of mind, as Ahab did, 1 Kings xxi. 4; or from sloth and sensuality, as David seems to have done, chap. xi. 2.

6 And they came thither into the midst of the house, as though they would have fetched wheat; and they smote him under the fifth rib: and Rechab and Baanah his brother escaped.

Into the midst of the house, or, into the house; for the midst is not always taken exactly, and mathematically, but for any part within, as Gen. xviii. 16; Exod. viii. 22; Josh. iii. 17. As though they would have fetched wheat; which was laid up in public granaries in the king's house, and was fetched thence by the captains and commanders of the army for the pay of their soldiers, who in those ancient times were not paid in money, but in corn, as is well known. Upon this pretence they were admitted into the house, and so went from room to room, to the place where the king lay. Rechab and Baanah escaped; which was not difficult to do, when the king was left alone; either because he desired to compose himself to rest or sleep; or because his guards, if he had any, were very small and negligent, now, at least, in his declining and forlorn condition.

7 For when they came into the house, he lay on his bed in his bedchamber, and they smote him, and slew him, and beheaded him, and took his head, and gat them away through the plain all night.

Through the plain, i. e. in the way from Mahanaim to Hebron; which for the most part was a plain country.

8 And they brought the head of Ish-bosheth unto David to Hebron, and said to the king, Behold the head of Ish-bosheth the son of Saul thine enemy, which sought thy life; and the LORD hath avenged my lord the king this day of Saul, and of his seed.

Which sought thy life, i. e. to destroy it, or take it away; as this phrase is used, 1 Sam. xx. 1; xxiii. 15, and elsewhere. They thought their action not only blameless, but meritorious; because they had but executed justice upon Saul's house, and David's enemies, and made way for David's obtaining of his rights. It may seem strange they were not discouraged by David's punishing of the Amalekite for killing Saul, 2 Sam. i., and by his sharp reproof of Joab for murdering Abner; but they thought the first case much differing from theirs, because Saul was anointed king by God; whereas Ish-bosheth was not, but was a mere usurper: and for the latter, they thought that David's sharp words proceeded rather from art and policy, than from any real dislike of the thing; which they judged, because David contented himself with words, and Joab did not only go unpunished, but continued in his former place and power.

9 ¶ And David answered Rechab and Baanah his brother, the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, and said unto them, As the LORD liveth, who hath redeemed my soul out of all adversity,

Who hath hitherto delivered and will deliver me from all mine enemies. So that I needed not your wicked help in this way.

10 When one told me, saying, Behold, Saul is dead, thinking to have brought good tidings, I took hold of him, and slew him in Ziklag, who thought that I would have given him a reward for his tidings:

11 How much more, when wicked men have slain a righteous person in his own house upon his bed? shall I not therefore now require his blood of your hand, and take you away from the earth?

A righteous person; for so he was comparatively, and in respect of these men, having not deserved death at their hands.

12 And David commanded his young men, and they slew them, and cut off their hands and their feet, and hanged them up over the pool in Hebron. But they took the head of Ish-bosheth, and buried it in the sepulchre of Abner in Hebron.

His young men; those of his guard, who used to execute justice upon malefactors at the king's command. Their hands and their feet; which had been most instrumental in this villany; their hands to cut off his head, and their feet to carry them away, and his head with them. Hanged them up over the pool in Hebron; as monuments of their villany, and of David's abhorrence of it.

CHAP. V.

The tribes come to Hebron to anoint David king over all Israel: the years of his reign at Hebron and Jerusalem: his age, 1—5. He taketh the strong hold of Zion from the Jebusites, and dwelleth there, 6—10. Hiram maketh a league with David, and sendeth wood and workmen to build a house, 11, 12. He taketh more wives, and eleven sons are born to him at Jerusalem, 13—16. David, directed by God, smiteth the Philistines at Baal-perazim, 17—21; and again at the mulberry trees, 22—25.

THEN came all the tribes of Israel to David unto Hebron, and spake, saying, Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh.

To wit, by their ambassadors, Ish-bosheth and Abner being now dead, and that without David's concurrence. Thy bone and thy flesh, i. e. thy brethren, or kinsmen, of the same nation and parentage, though not of the same tribe; and therefore, as God's law, Deut. xvii. 15, permits us, so our own relation and affection incline us, to choose thee for our king; and we doubt not thou wilt receive us for thy subjects and people, and pardon our offences against thee.

2 Also in time past, when Saul was king over us, thou wast he that leddest us out and broughtest in Israel: and the LORD said to thee, Thou shalt feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be a captain over Israel.

Thou wast our chief commander in our expeditions against the Philistines, and therefore art most fit to be king over us. The Lord said to thee, to wit, by Samuel, 1 Sam. xvi. 11—13; for though the words vary, yet the sense is the same. Thou shalt feed my people Israel, i. e. rule them, and take care of them, as a shepherd doth of his sheep, Psal. lxxviii. 70, 71. This expression he useth to admonish David, that he was not made a king to advance his own glory and interest, but for the good and benefit of his people; and that he ought to rule them with all tenderness, and to watch over them with all diligence.

3 So all the elders of Israel came to the king to Hebron; and king David made a league with them in Hebron ^g before the LORD: and they anointed David king over Israel.

King David made a league with them; whereby he obliged himself to rule them according to God's laws; and the people promised fidelity and obedience to him. Before the Lord; either, 1. Before the ark, which might be here, though that be not mentioned in this place. Or, 2. Before the priest clothed with the ephod; whereby he was in a manner put into God's presence. Or rather, 3. In the congregation of the mighty, or magistrates, where God used to be present, Psal. lxxxiii. 1; in the public assembly now met together in God's name and fear, and as in his presence, to call upon him, to appeal to him as the witness and judge of their transactions. 6 ¶ And the king and his men went ^k to Jerusalem unto ^l the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land: which spake unto David, saying, Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither: ¶ thinking, David cannot come in hither.

l Or, saying,
David shall not, &c.

Having the advantage of so great a confluence of his people to make him king, he thought fit to begin his reign with some eminent action, and to lead them forth in this expedition; wherein doubtless he asked advice from God, and the consent of the elders now present. To Jerusalem; as the place which God had designed for his worship; and in the centre and heart of his kingdom, and therefore fittest for his royal city. The Jebusites continued to dwell there in spite of the Benjamites, to whose lot it fell. See Josh. xv. 63; Judg. i. 21; xix. 10, 11. Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither; or, Thou shalt not come in hither, but the blind and the lame shall remove or hinder thee. By the blind and the lame they understand, either, 1. Their own people; and so they imply that the place was so impregnable, that a few blind and lame men were able to defend it against all David's assaults. And these may be called and were the hated of David's soul, ver. 8, not because they were blind and lame, but because they were Jebusites, a people hated and accursed by God: and the Jebusites of this place were more hateful to him than the rest of that nation; partly because they possessed this place, which David knew was designed for the one and only place of God's solemn worship; and partly because they did so wickedly and insolently defy the armies of Israel, and consequently, the God of Israel. Or, 2. Their gods or images; which, after the manner of the heathens, they worshipped as their tutelary gods, and placed in their gates or walls. These they call blind and lame sarcastically, and with respect to David's opinion; as if they said, These gods of ours, whom you Israelites reproach, as blind and lame, Psal. cxv. 5, 6, and so unable to direct and protect us, they will defend us against you; and you will find they are neither blind nor lame, but have eyes to watch for us, and hands to fight against you; and you must conquer them before you can take our city. And these may well be called the hated of David's soul. But I prefer the former sense, as being most easy, and natural, and proper; whereas the latter is metaphorical, and seems doubtful and forced. David cannot come in hither; concluding their fort to be impregnable.

1 Kin. 2. 10.
& c. 1.

7 Nevertheless David took the strong hold of Zion: ^m the same is the city of David.

The strong hold of Zion; either, 1. A very strong fort which they had built upon Mount Zion; which being taken, the city quickly yielded. Or, 2. The city of Zion, which was very strongly fortified.

8 And David said on that day, Who-soever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's soul, ⁿ he shall be chief and captain. ¶ Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house.

n 1 Chro. 11.
6. Or, Because they had said, even the blind and the lame, He shall not come into the house.

Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, i. e. whosoever scaleth the fort, or getteth up to the top of it, where the gutter was. And the lame and the blind, or even, or especially (for the Hebrew particle vau signifies both ways) the lame and the blind; i. e. those of them who are set to defend that place; who, as they pretend, should be only the lame and the blind. Others understand it of their idols or images. But they could not properly be said to be smitten, i. e. killed; as that word is used here, and elsewhere. That are hated of David's soul: this belongs to the Jebusite, and the lame and the blind; and it is explained in ver. 6. He shall be chief and captain: these words are fitly supplied out of 1 Chron. xi. 6, where they are expressed; and they must needs be understood to make the sense complete. And such ellipses or defects of a part of the sentence are usual in promises, and oaths, and conditional offers, such as this was. Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house, i. e. whence it became a proverb, or a common saying, used by David and others upon this occasion. Or otherwise, The blind and the lame Jebusites were set to keep the house, i. e. the fort of Zion; and to keep others from coming into it; but now they are shut out of it, and none of them, to wit, either, 1. Of the Jebusites; or, 2. Of blind and lame persons, shall be admitted to come into it again; which David might resolve, and ordain, to keep up the memory of this great exploit, and of the insolent carriage of the Jebusites, and their unhappy success. Or, The blind and the lame shall not come into my house, to wit, into the king's palace. And although this might be a general rule and decree of David's, yet he might dispense with it in some special cases, as in that of Mephibosheth. But it is not necessary that this should be a proverb; for the words may be thus rendered, as it is in the margin of our Bible, Because they had said, even the blind and the lame, He (i. e. David) shall not come into the house; or, Because they (i. e. the Jebusites) had said, The blind and the lame shall hinder him; (which words are easily supplied out of ver. 6, where having spoken of this more largely, it was sufficient here to mention the most emphatical words, as is usual in such cases;) he shall not come into the house, or hither, as they say, ver. 6. i. e. into the fort; for the word house is used very largely and generally in the Hebrew language, for any place, as Judg. xvi. 21.

9 So David dwelt in the fort, and called it ^o the city of David. And David ^{o ver. 7.} built round about from Millo and inward.

Millo seems to have been some large and well fortified building, Judg. ix. 6; 2 Chron. xxxii. 5, adjoining or near to the wall of the city of Zion.

The use of it seems to have been his policy, that hereby he might enlarge his family, and strengthen his interest by alliances with so many considerable families. And the number of wives being not limited, Deut. xvii., he might conceive this was no transgression of that law.

Whilst the civil war lasted between the houses of Saul and David, they wisely forbore all hostilities, and left them to tear out one another's bowels, that afterwards they might make a more easy conquest of both; but that being ended, and all united under David, they bestir themselves. To seek David; to find him out, and fight against him, and cut him off now in the infancy of his kingdom; whereby they give David a just occasion to fight against them for his own necessary defence, and acquit him from any note of ingratitude, in opposing them who had formerly exercised kindness and hospitality to him; though indeed David's obligations were in a manner wholly to Achish, who seems to be dead at this time, there being no mention of him. To the hold; to some fortified place to which his people might conveniently resort from all places, and where he might intrench his army, and which lay towards the Philistines.

The Philistines came up again, doubtless with greater force, as those that saw their all lay at stake.

23 And when ^bDavid enquired of the LORD, he said, Thou shalt not go up; but fetch a compass behind them, and come upon them over against the mulberry trees.

Thou shalt not go up, to wit, directly against them, as the following words explain it. Over against the mulberry trees, where they least expect thee. God's purposes and promises do not exclude men's just endeavours, but require them.

24 And let it be, when thou ^chearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt bestir thyself: for then ^dshall the LORD go out before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines.

The sound of a going; a noise as it were of persons walking upon the tops of them, which I shall cause; and by this sign, both thou shalt be assured that I am coming to help thee, and the Philistines shall be affrighted and amused, and not perceive the noise of thy army until thou art upon them. Then thou shalt bestir thyself; do thou fall upon them.

25 And David did so, as the LORD had commanded him; and smote the Philistines from ^eGeba until thou come to ^fGazer.

They followed their victory, and pursued them to their own borders, in which Gazer was, as Josephus relates.

CHAP. VI.

David fetcheth the ark with much people and great joy out of the house of Abinadab, 1—5. Uzzah laying hold of the ark is slain of God: David is grieved; carries the ark into the house of Obed-edom, whom God blesseth for its sake, 6—11. David bringeth the ark into Zion with sacrifices; danceth before it; for which Michal despiseth him, 12—16. They place it in a tabernacle: he offereth to God; blesseth the people; giveth them presents, 17—19. Michal reproving David, he answereth her: she is childless to her death, 20—23.

AGAIN, David gathered together all ^{1042.} chosen men of Israel, thirty thousand.

See 1 Chron. xiii. 1, 2. From Baale of Judah. Quest. How from it, when they went to it; as is evident, both from 1 Chron. xiii. 6, and because the ark was there, and to be fetched thence? Answe. Some affirm that the Hebrew preposition mem sometimes signifies to, as Gen. xiii. 11. But there is no need of that; for 1 Chron. xiii. 6 mentions their going to Baalah, and this place mentions their going from it; and the one of these doth manifestly suppose the other; for they went thither, that they might return thence. So the sense is plain, They went from Baale of Judah, to bring (or rather to carry, for the word signifies either) up from thence the ark; whereby it is supposed that they first went thither, which is related 1 Chron. xiii. 6. Moreover, this place is commonly called Kirjath-jearim, 1 Sam. vii. 1; 1 Chron. xiii. 5; and formerly Kirjath-baal, Josh. xv. 60.

and Baalath, Josh. xv. 9, and here Baale of Judah; so called because it was in the tribe of Judah, as is evident from Josh. xv. 1, &c. To bring up from thence the ark of God unto Jerusalem, which, in many respects, was fitter for it than Baalath; because this was a more public place, where it would be more observed and regarded; and in the centre of the kingdom, to which they might more easily come from all parts; and the royal city, where it might be always at hand for David to inquire at, as occasion required; and the place which God had allotted for it. Whose name is called by the name of the Lord of hosts: thus whose belongs not to the ark, but to God; for what follows is not the name of the ark, but of God. The place may well be, and is by some, rendered thus, Upon (or at, or beside, or before) which (ark) the name, even the name of the Lord of hosts, that dwelleth between the cherubims, is called upon; i. e. by or before which they were to present their prayers to God for counsel and succour upon all occasions. And this is mentioned here as the reason why David put himself and his people to so great trouble and charge, because it was to fetch up the choicest treasure which they had, and so the benefit would abundantly recompense the inconvenience.

3 And they † set the ark of God ^e upon a new cart, and brought it out of the house of Abinadab that was in || Gibeath: and Uzzah and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab, drave the new cart.

They set the ark upon a new cart; being taught and encouraged to do so by the example of the Philistines, who did so without any token of God's displeasure upon them for so doing. But they did not sufficiently consider that God might wink at the Philistines, because they were ignorant of God's laws; and yet be angry with them for the same thing, because they knew, or might and should have known, the law of God, which commanded the priests to bear it upon their shoulders, Numb. iv. 14, 15; vii. 9. But their present transports of joy at the happy change of their affairs, and their greedy desire of having the ark removed, made them hasty and inconsiderate. In Gibeath; or, on the hill, as 1 Sam. vii. 1. Uzzah and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab; for Abinadab himself seems now to have been dead, or at least detained at home through infirmity or indispensable occasions.

7 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Uzzah; and ^g God smote him there for his || error; and there he died by the ark of God.

God smote him with some deadly disease or stroke, as it follows. For his error; either, 1. For his touching the ark, when he was no Levite, as Josephus reports; nor indeed was Kirjath-jearim a Levitical city; or, that being but a Levite, he touched the bare ark, which only the priests might do, Numb. iv. 15; xviii. 3. And though the ark was ordinarily covered, yet it is not impossible but the covering might be either loose, and so blown aside by the wind; or worn out, and so he might touch the ark itself. Or, 2. Because he put the ark into a cart, and thereby exposed it to the danger of falling, which would have been a great discouragement to the Israelites, and a reproach to the ark.

And though Ahio also might have a hand in putting it into the cart, yet Uzzah only is smitten; either because he was the elder brother, and the person to whose care the ark was more especially committed; or because he was the chief author of this counsel of putting it into a cart; or because he added a new fault of touching the ark, and that out of distrust of God's care over it. There he died: this may seem very severe, considering that his intention was pious, and his transgression not great. But, besides that men are very improper judges of the actions of God, and that God's judgments are always just, though sometimes obscure, there are many things to be said of this and such-like cases. 1. That it is fit and reasonable that God should make some persons examples of his just and high displeasure against sins seemingly small; partly for the demonstration of his own exact and impartial holiness; partly for the establishment of discipline, (for which very reason even earthly princes have oftentimes inflicted great punishments for small offences,) and for the greater terror and caution of mankind, who are very prone to have slight thoughts of sin, and to give way to small sins, and thereby to be led on to greater; all which is or may be prevented by such instances of severity; and consequently, there is more of God's mercy than of his justice in such actions, because the justice is confined to one particular person, but the mercy and benefit of it public and common to mankind of that and all future ages. 2. That God is justly most severe in those things which immediately concern his worship and service; and against those persons who have the nearest relation to him, and the greatest opportunities of knowing, and the highest obligation of careful practising, those duties which they neglect: see Lev. x. 3. 3. That this punishment possibly was not so great as it may seem to be; for as for his body, the disease, though dangerous, might not be exceedingly painful; and for his soul, the stroke probably was not so sudden as not to give him space of repentance.

8 And David was displeased, because the LORD had † made a breach upon Uzzah: and he called the name of the place || Perez-uzzah to this day.

David was displeased, or, grieved, both for the sin, which he acknowledgeth, 1 Chron. xv. 2, 13, and for God's heavy judgment; whereby their hopes were dashed, and their joys interrupted, and a good subject struck dead for the circumstantial error of a pious mind, which he might possibly think harsh and very severe, and therefore be displeased or offended at this sharp providence.

9 And ^h David was afraid of the LORD that day, and said, How shall the ark of the LORD come to me?

Afraid of the Lord; either that God was displeased with him for removing the ark, and bringing it to his city; or lest God should proceed further in the way of his judgments upon him and his people; or lest the ark being brought to his house, might be the occasion of inconveniencies and great calamities, for some neglects or errors which they might easily and frequently commit. How shall the ark of the Lord come unto me? how may I presume, or how shall I dare do it, when God hath showed his displeasure for my attempting it? I will therefore wait further upon God for his direction in the case, and at present forbear. But why did not David consult God presently by the Urim, as he used to do? This therefore seems to have been his infirmity and neglect.

10 So David would not remove the ark of the LORD unto him into the city of David: but David carried it aside into the house of Obed-edom ⁱ the Gittite.

Which doubtless was done by the consent and desire of the owner of it, who for the enjoyment of so great a privilege, was willing to expose himself to some hazard; and wisely considered that the late judgment was not to be imputed to the ark, but to Uzzah's carelessness in managing it. The Gittite: he was certainly a Levite, 1 Chron. xv. 18, 21, 24; xvi. 5; xxvi. 4, and here called a Gittite, either, first, from Gath of the Philistines, where he or his father might be born or have sojourned, which might be upon divers occasions; or, secondly, from Gath-rimmon, which was a Levitical city, Josh. xxi. 24, 25.

11 ^k And the ark of the LORD continued in the house of Obed-edom the Gittite three months: and the LORD ^l blessed Obed-edom, and all his household.

With happy success in all their affairs and actions.

12 ¶ And it was told king David, saying, The LORD hath blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, because of the ark of God. ^m So David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness.

David brought up the ark of God; understanding that the ark was entertained without danger or inconvenience, and with great advantage, he apprehended his former mistake, and brought it to himself. From the house of Obed-edom, which is thought to have been either in Jerusalem, or very near it.

13 And it was so, that when ⁿ they that bare the ark of the LORD had gone six paces, he sacrificed ^o oxen and fatlings.

Had gone six paces with safety and comfort. He sacrificed oxen and fatlings, upon an altar suddenly erected, as was usual in such cases. See Exod. xx. 24. This he did either to appease God for the former miscarriage; or to praise him for his present mercy, that he had not made another breach upon them; or to implore his favour and gracious presence with them in this great affair.

14 And David ^p danced before the LORD with all his might; and David was girded ^q with a linen ephod.

David danced before the Lord, to express his inward joy and thankfulness to God by his outward carriage, according to the manner of those times. See Exod. xv. 20; Judg. xi. 34; xxi. 21; 1 Sam. xviii. 6; Psal. cxlix. 3; cl. 4. A linen ephod; the usual habit of the priests and Levites in their sacred ministrations, yet sometimes worn by others, as it was by the young child Samuel, 1 Sam. ii. 18, before he was come to those years in which the Levites were allowed to minister; and so hereby David, who laid by his royal robes, and put on this robe, to signify and declare, that although he was king of Israel, yet he willingly owned himself to be the Lord's minister and servant.

15 ^r So David and all the house of Israel brought up the ark of the LORD with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet.

16 ^s And ^t as the ark of the LORD came into the city of David, Michal Saul's daughter looked through a window, and saw king David leaping and dancing before the LORD; and she despised him in her heart.

As one of a base and mean spirit, that knew not how to carry himself with that majesty which became his place, but behaved himself like one of the fools or vain persons in Israel.

17 ¶ And ^u they brought in the ark of the LORD, and set it in ^v his place, in the midst of the tabernacle that David had ^w pitched for it: and David ^x offered burnt offerings and peace offerings before the LORD.

In the tabernacle that David had pitched for it; for Moses's tabernacle was still at Gibeon, 1 Chron. xvi. 39; xxi. 29; 2 Chron. i. 3, which David left there, because he designed to build a temple at Jerusalem with all speed, though he was countermanded therein by God himself.

18 And as soon as David had made an end of offering burnt offerings and peace offerings, ^y he blessed the people in the name of the LORD of hosts.

He blessed the people, i. e. he heartily and solemnly prayed to God for his blessing upon them; which he did both as prophet and as their king, to whom by office it belongs, by all means, to seek his people's welfare.

19 ^z And he dealt among all the people, ^a even among the whole multitude of Israel, as well to the women as men, to every one a cake of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine. So all the people departed every one to his house.

20 ¶ ^b Then David returned to bless his household. And Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David, and said, How glorious was the king of Israel to day, who ^c uncovered himself to day in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants, as one of the ^d vain fellows ^e || shamelessly uncovereth himself!

Who uncovered himself; either, first, by stripping himself of his royal robes, that he might put on a Levitical ephod; or by discovering some part of his thighs or legs, as might possibly happen whilst he danced with all his might, as is said above, ver. 14, considering that the men did then wear loose garments; or she speaks thus, not that he did so, but only by way of aggravation of his fault, and to vilify him the more, as is usual with persons in such cases. The handmaids of his servants; who either bore a part in the solemnity, as women sometimes did, Exod. xv. 20; or at least were spectators of it, and of David's carriage in it. As one of the vain fellows; as idle and light persons use to do.

21 And David said unto Michal, It was before the LORD, ^f which chose me before thy father, and before all his house, to appoint me ruler over the people of the LORD, over Israel: therefore will I play before the LORD.

It was before the Lord; in his presence and service, which though contemptible to thee, is, and ever shall be, honourable in mine eyes. Which chose me before thy father, and before all his house; which took away the honour from him and his, and transferred it upon me, whereby he hath obliged me to love and serve him with all my might.

22 And I will yet be more vile than thus, and will be base in mine own sight: and ^g || of the maid-servants which thou hast spoken of, of them shall I be had in honour.

Will be base in mine own sight; I will always be ready to humble and abase myself before God. Of them shall I be had in honour; I shall rather choose to get honour from the meanest of my people, in serving and praising God, than to gain esteem from thee by my lukewarmness in God's service.

23 Therefore Michal the daughter of Saul had no child ^h unto the day of her death.

Therefore; not because of David's words to her, which have nothing in them to this purpose; but because of her proud, and petulant, and ungodly speech and carriage to David, which God justly punished with sterility. Michal had no child, to wit, by David, and after this time, which these words evidently respect; which was true, although those five children ascribed to Michal, 2 Sam. xxi. 8, were hers by birth, and not by adoption only. Unto the day of her death, i. e. never; for if she ever had any, it must be before her death. Compare 1 Sam. xv. 35; Matt. i. 25.

CHAP. VII.

David being at rest desires to build God a house; which Nathan at first approves of; afterwards, in obedience to the word of God, forbiddeth him, 1—11. He promiseth him benefits and blessings in his seed, Solomon and the Messiah, who should build the house of God, 12—17. David's prayer and thanksgiving, 18—29.

a 1 Chron. 17. 1, &c. AND it came to pass, ^awhen the king sat in his house, and the LORD had given him rest round about from all his enemies;

When the king sat in his house, i. e. was settled and warm in the house which Hiram's men built for him, chap. v. 11; then he reflected upon the unhandsome and unsettled state of the ark. From all his enemies, Philistines, Moabites, and others; so that they durst not invade his land, as they had formerly done; for though you read of David's wars with them, chap. viii., yet in them David was the aggressor, and entered their lands.

2 That the king said unto Nathan the prophet, See now, I dwell in ^ban house of cedar, ^cbut the ark of God dwelleth within ^dcurtains.

i. e. In a tent or tabernacle, ver. 6, composed of several curtains, Exod. xxvi. 1, &c.

3 And Nathan said to the king, Go, do all that is ^ein thine heart; for the LORD is with thee.

Pursue thy intentions, and build a house for the ark. The design being pious, and the thing not forbidden by God, Nathan hastily approves it, before he had either seriously considered it in his own mind, or consulted God about it, as both he and David certainly ought to have done in a matter of so great moment. And therefore Nathan meets with this rebuke, that he is forced to acknowledge his error, and recant it. For the holy prophets did not speak all things by prophetic inspiration, but some things by a human spirit, and prudent conjecture; and therefore they were ignorant and mistaken in some matters, as 1 Sam. xvi. 6; 2 Kings iv. 27.

4 ¶ And it came to pass that night, that the word of the LORD came unto Nathan, saying,

It came to pass that night: because David's mistake was pious, and from an honest mind, God would not suffer him to lie long in his mistake, nor to disquiet his mind, or run himself into inconveniences, in order to the work, before he gave a stop to it. The word of the Lord came unto Nathan; that the same person who had confirmed David in his mistake, might now rectify it.

5 Go and tell ^fmy servant David, Thus saith the LORD, ^gShalt thou build me an house for me to dwell in?

i. e. Thou shalt not. Or, Wilt thou build, &c.? Dost thou purpose it?

6 Whereas I have not dwelt in any house ^hsince the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in ^a a tent and in a tabernacle.

These two seem thus to be distinguished; the one may note the curtains and hangings within, the other the frame of boards, and coverings upon it.

7 In all the places wherein I have ⁱwalked with all the children of Israel spake I a word with ^{||}any of the tribes of Israel, whom I commanded ^kto feed my people Israel, saying, Why build ye not me an house of cedar?

Spake I a word? did I ever give any command about it? without which neither they did, nor thou shouldst attempt it. With any of the tribes: in 1 Chron. xvii. 6, it is of the judges; and to them, not to the tribes, the following words agree, whom I commanded to feed my people Israel. Either therefore the tribes are here put synecdochically for the rulers of the tribes, as the word church is sometimes used for the governors of it; or the word here rendered tribes may be rendered sceptres, as it is used Gen. xlix. 10, and sceptres put for sceptre-bearers or rulers, as is very frequent.

8 Now therefore so shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, ^lI took thee from the sheeppcote, ^m†from following the sheep, to be ruler over my people, over Israel:

So shalt thou say unto my servant David: lest David should be too much discouraged, or judge himself neglected and forsaken of God, as one thought unworthy of so great an honour, God here gives him the honourable title of his servant, thereby signifying that he accepted of his service, and of his good intentions, which also was expressed at this time, as it may seem from 1 Kings viii. 18, though not in this place. I took thee from the sheeppcote, to be ruler over my people; I advanced thee, and I do not repent of it.

9 And ⁿI was with thee whithersoever thou wentest, ^oand have cut off all thine enemies ^p†out of thy sight, and have made thee ^qa great name, like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth.

10 Moreover I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will ^rplant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; ^sneither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as beforetime,

I will appoint a place, i. e. I will make room for them; whereas hitherto they have been much constrained and distressed by their enemies. Or, I will establish (for so that verb sometimes signifies) a place for them, i. e. I will establish them in their place or land. Some learned men render the verse thus, and the Hebrew words will bear it: And I have appointed (or assigned, or given) a place for my people Israel, (to wit, the land of Canaan,) and have planted them in it, that they may dwell in their own place, and be no more driven to and fro; or rather, and they shall dwell in their own place, &c.; i. e. as I did long ago appoint it to them, and afterwards planted them, or put them into actual possession; so now they shall continue or dwell in it, in spite of all their enemies. For my people Israel. Among the favours which God had vouchsafed, and would vouchsafe to David, he reckons his blessings to the people of Israel, because they were great blessings to David; partly because the strength and happiness of a king consists in great part in the multitude and happiness of his people; and partly because David was a man of a pious and public spirit, and therefore no less affected with Israel's felicity than with his own. In a place of their own, i. e. in their own land, not in strange lands, nor mixed with other people. As before-time; either, first, As in the land of Egypt; and so he goes downward to the judges. Or, secondly, As in Saul's time; and so he ascends to the judges.

11 And as ^tsince the time that I commanded judges ^uto be over my people Israel, and have ^vcaused thee to rest from all thine enemies. Also the LORD telleth thee ^wthat he will make thee an house.

Nor as they did under the judges, neither so oft nor so long. But all this is to be understood with a condition, except they should notoriously forsake God, or rebel against him; which being so oft declared by God in other places, it was needless to mention it here. Or this may relate to the latter ages of the world, when the people of Israel shall be converted to Christ, and recalled out of captivity, and planted in their own place; when they shall enjoy a far greater degree of tranquility than ever they did before. And this agrees best with the future tense, I will appoint — and will plant them, &c.; otherwise the work was already done, God had already appointed this land for them, and actually planted them in it. And have caused thee to rest from all thine enemies, i. c. and until this time in which I have given thee rest. But these words, though according to our translation they be enclosed in the same parenthesis with the foregoing clauses, may seem to be better put without it, and to be taken by themselves. For the foregoing words in this verse, and in ver. 10, do all concern the people of Israel; but these words seem to concern David alone, to whom the speech returns after a short digression concerning the people of Israel. And they may be rendered either thus, and I have caused thee to rest, &c., or, and I will cause thee to rest, &c., to wit, more fully and perfectly than yet thou dost. He will make thee an house; for thy good intentions to make him an house, he will make thee an house, to wit, a sure house, as is expressed, 1 Kings xi. 38. i. e. he will increase and uphold thy posterity, and continue thy kingdom in thy family.

u 1 Kin. 2. 1. 12 ¶ And ^uwhen thy days be fulfilled, and thou ^ushalt sleep with thy fathers, ^uI will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom.

When thy days be fulfilled; when the time of thy life shall expire. This phrase implies that his days shall be completed and prolonged to the usual course and stint of nature, and not cut off in the midst, by any violent or untimely death. I will set up thy seed after thee; I will set up in thy stead and throne thy posterity, first Solomon, and then others successively, and at last the Messias. So the following words may be understood diversely, part of his posterity in general or indefinitely taken, part of Solomon, and part of Christ only, according to the differing nature of the several passages. Out of thy bowels; out of thy inward parts, or from thy loins; who shall be begotten by thee.

z 1 Kings 5. 5. & 6. 12. & 8. 19. 1 Chron. 22. 10. & 28. 6. a ver. 16. Ps. 59. 4, 29, 36, 37. 13 ^zHe shall build an house for my name, and I will ^zestablish the throne of his kingdom for ever.

He shall build an house: this is meant literally and immediately of Solomon, who alone did build the material house or temple; but mystically and ultimately of Christ, who is the builder of God's spiritual house or temple, Heb. iii. 3, 6; 1 Pet. ii. 5. For my name, i. e. for my service, and worship, and glory. I will establish the throne of his kingdom: this is not meant of Solomon, for his kingdom was not for ever. And though the phrase for ever is sometimes used of the time of a man's life, yet it cannot be so understood here, because the mercy here promised to David's son is of another nature, and of far longer continuance, than that which was given to Saul, ver. 15, who yet enjoyed the kingdom as long as he lived. But it is to be understood of David's posterity in general, but with special respect to Christ, in whose person the kingdom was to be lodged for ever, Isa. ix. 7; Dan. ii. 44; Luke i. 32, 33.

b Ps. 59. 26. 27. Heb. 1. 5. c 1 S. 89. 34. 31, 32, 33. 14 ^bI will be his father, and he shall be my son. ^cIf he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men:

I will carry myself towards him as becomes a father, with all affection and tenderness, and I will own him as my son. This is intended both of Solomon, as a type of Christ; and of Christ himself, as is evident from Heb. i. 5. If he commit iniquity: this agrees only to Solomon; and some others of David's posterity; but not to Christ, who never committed iniquity, as Solomon did, who therein was no type of Christ, and therefore this branch is terminated in Solomon; whereas in those things wherein Solomon was a type of Christ, the sense passeth through Solomon unto Christ. With the rod of men; either, first, With such rods as men use to correct their sons, or to beat other men; which are here opposed to the rods or strokes which an angry God inflicts. See Job xxiii. 6; Psal. xxxix. 11; Isa. xlviii. 3; Rom. ix. 22; Heb. x. 31; xii. 29. Or, secondly, With such rods as are gentle and moderate, and suited to man's weakness; as a tolerable and resistible temptation is called human, or common to men, 1 Cor. x. 13.

d 1 Sam. 15. 25, 28. & 16. 14. 1 Kings 11. 13, 34. 15 But my mercy shall not depart away from him, ^das I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee.

My mercy, or my kindness, i. e. the kingdom which I have mercifully and kindly promised to thee and thine. As I took it from Saul; in regard of his posterity, for the kingdom was continued to his person during life.

e ver. 13. Ps. 51. 26, 27. John 12. 34. 16 And ^ethine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee: thy throne shall be established for ever.

Before thee; thine eyes in some sort beholding it; for he lived to see his wise and godly son Solomon actually placed in the throne, with great reputation and general applause, 1 Kings i. 39, 40, which was in itself a good presage of the continuance of the kingdom in his family; and being considered, together with the infallible certainty of God's promise to him and his for ever, of the accomplishment whereof this was an earnest, gave him good assurance thereof; especially considering that he had his eyes and thoughts upon the Messias, Psal. cx. 1, &c., whose day he saw by faith, as Abraham did, John viii. 56, and whom he knew that God would raise out of the fruit of his loins to sit on his throne, as is affirmed, Acts ii. 30, and that for ever; and so the eternity of his kingdom is rightly said to be before him. The LXX. and Syriac read before me, which is a usual phrase, which makes no great variation in the Hebrew text.

17 According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

Although it was contrary to his own opinion, and an evidence of his rashness and folly. This therefore is here mentioned as an evidence of his fidelity and impartiality, in relating the whole mind of God herein, and of his modesty in taking shame to himself.

18 ¶ Then went king David in, and sat before the LORD, and he said, ^fWho am I, O Lord God? and what is my house, that thou hast brought me hitherto?

Sat: this word may note either, first, His bodily posture; for there is no certain gesture to which prayer is limited; and we have examples of saints praying in that posture, Exod. xvii. 12; 1 Kings xix. 4; or he might sit for a season whilst he was meditating upon these things, and then alter his posture, (though it be not here expressed,) and betake himself to prayer. Or rather, secondly, His continuance there, as this Hebrew word is oft used, as Gen. xxvii. 44; Lev. xiv. 8; 1 Sam. i. 22; xx. 19, that he did not barely present himself before God but abode there for some competent time, that he might with God's leave pour out his soul freely before him. For howsoever one may in some cases pray sitting, yet it is most probable that David would in this holy place, and upon this occasion, use a more humble and reverent gesture, such as kneeling is, which therefore David prescribeth or adviseth, Psal. xcv. 6, and Solomon accordingly practiseth, 1 Kings viii. 54; 2 Chron. vi. 13. Who am I, and what is my house, that thou hast brought me hitherto? how infinitely unworthy am I and my family of this great honour and happiness!

19 And this was yet a small thing in thy sight, O Lord God; ^gbut thou hast spoken also of thy servant's house for a great while to come. ^hAnd is this the manner of man, O Lord God?

This, to wit, which thou hast already done for me, as he now said, that thou hast brought me hitherto. i. e. to that pitch of honour, and peace, and prosperity, in which through thy favour I now stand. This was yet a small thing in thy sight; though it was more than I deserved, or could expect, yet thou didst not think it enough for thee to give to me. For a great while to come; for many future ages, and indeed to all eternity. Is this the manner of man, O Lord God? do men use to deal so freely and kindly with their inferiors, as thou hast done with me? No: this is the prerogative of Divine grace, to give such promises and largesses as this. So these are words of admiration; which very well suit with the foregoing and following words. Or, And is this the manner, or law, or custom of mean or obscure men, &c.? as the Hebrew adam is confessed sometimes to signify, as Psal. xlix. 2; lxii. 9; Isa. ii. 9; i. e. Is this the manner of men's dealing with mean and obscure persons, such as I am? So the Hebrew haadam is the genitive case of the object, which is frequent in the Hebrew and other languages. And this seems more probable, because it exactly agrees with the parallel place, 1 Chron. xvii. 17, where the words are, thou hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree, i. e. thou hast dealt with me as if I had been not a poor mean shepherd, but the son of some great monarch, to whom such honours best agree.

What can David say more unto thee? either, first, In way of gratitude and praise to thee; words cannot express my obligations to thee, nor my sense of these obligations. Or rather, secondly, In way of prayer, as appears by the parallel place, 1 Chron. xvii. 18. What can I ask or desire of thee more than thou hast freely done? Thou knowest thy servant; thou knowest, either, first, my deep sense of thy favours, and my obligations to thee; or rather, secondly, my condition and necessities, what I do or may need hereafter; and as thou knowest this, so I doubt not thou wilt be ready to supply me accordingly. Compare Matt. vi. 8, 32.

21 For thy word's sake, and according to thine own heart, hast thou done all these great things, to make thy servant know them.

For thy word's sake; that thou mightest fulfil thy promises made to me by Samuel and Nathan, and thereby demonstrate thy faithfulness. According to thine own heart, i. e. of thine own mere liberality and good pleasure, without any desert of mine. So far was David, though now a very gracious man, from thinking his actions meritorious. To make thy servant know them, i. e. that thy gracious and wonderful purposes of mercy towards me, which lay hid in thine own heart, might be manifested unto me and others by thy most kind words and actions. So it agrees with 1 Chron. xvii. 19.

22 Wherefore thou art great, O Lord God: for there is none like thee, neither is there any God beside thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

Thou art great, both in power and in goodness, as appears by the great and good things which thou hast done for me. All that we have heard with our ears; what we have heard from our parents, or out of thy word, concerning the incomparable excellency of thy majesty, and of thy works; of that I have this day eminent experience.

23 And what one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Israel, whom God went to redeem for a people to himself, and to make him a name, and to do for you great things and terrible, for thy land, before thy people, which thou redeemedst to thee from Egypt, from the nations and their gods?

God went, to wit, into Egypt; an expression of God after the manner of men. To make him a name; to advance the glory of his power and goodness, and other perfections. Compare Exod. ix. 16.

24 For thou hast confirmed to thyself thy people Israel to be a people unto thee for ever: and thou, Lord, art become their God.

Thou hast confirmed to thyself; partly by thy promises, and that sure covenant which thou hast made with them; and partly by thy glorious works wrought on their behalf, as it appears this day. Thou art become their God, in a peculiar manner, and by special relation and covenant; for otherwise he is the God and Father of all things, 1 Cor. viii. 6.

25 And now, O Lord God, the word that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant, and concerning his house, establish it for ever, and do as thou hast said.

26 And let thy name be magnified for ever, saying, The Lord of hosts is the God over Israel: and let the house of thy servant David be established before thee.

The Lord of hosts is the God over Israel, i. e. do thou never cease to manifest thyself to be the God and Governor of Israel.

27 For thou, O Lord of hosts, God of Israel, hast revealed to thy servant, saying, I will build thee an house: therefore hath thy servant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee.

Because thy promise hath given me encouragement to pray, and assurance of answer. Found in his heart, or, found his heart, i. e. taken courage; as a man is said to lose his heart when he wants courage.

28 And now, O Lord God, thou art that God, and thy words be true, and thou hast promised this goodness unto thy servant:

That God who hast declared thyself to be Israel's God, and in particular my God.

29 Therefore now let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may continue for ever before thee: for thou, O Lord God, hast spoken it: and with thy blessing let the house of thy servant be blessed for ever.

Thou, O Lord God, hast spoken it, and therefore wilt certainly do it, for thy words never fail.

CHAP. VIII.

David subdueth the Philistines and the Moabites; smiteth the king of Zobah, and the Syrians; placeth a garrison in Damascus, 1—8. Toi sendeth Joram with presents to bless him; which with the spoil he dedicateth to God, 9—13: smiteth the Edomites, and placeth a garrison in their land, 14. David's government and officers, 15—18.

AND after this it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them: and David took Metheg-ammah out of the hand of the Philistines.

Metheg-ammah, i. e. Gath and her towns, as it is expressed in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xviii. 1, which are called Metheg-ammeh, or the bridle of Ammah, because Gath was situate in the mountain of Ammah; and because this being the chief city of the Philistines, and having a king, which none of the rest had, was the bridle which had hitherto kept the Israelites in subjection, but now was taken out of their mouths.

2 And he smote Moab, and measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground; even with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive. And so the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

He smote Moab; for although the king of Moab, out of hatred to Saul, pretended some kindness to David, and gave protection to his parents, 1 Sam. xxii. 3, 4; yet the Moabites were perpetual and sworn enemies to the Israelites, who therefore were forbidden to admit them into the congregation of the Lord, and to seek their peace and prosperity, Deut. xxiii. 6. And though God commanded them in their march to Canaan to spare the Moabites, Deut. ii. 9, 19, yet afterwards they proved unthankful, and insolent, and fierce enemies to God and his people, Numb. xxii. 2, &c.; xxiv. 17; xxv. 17, 18; Judg. iii. 14, &c.; 1 Sam. xiv. 47, &c., and thereby provoked God to alter his course and carriage towards them. With a line, i. e. as with line, the particle as being oft understood, as Psal. xi. 1; xxii. 6; xlv. 1. The sense is, having conquered the land, he made an estimate of it, and, as it follows, distributed the towns and people into three parts. Casting them down to the ground, i. e. overthrowing their towns, and utterly destroying their people in, manner following. With two lines measured he to put to death; which severity was necessary for his own and his people's security, because they were numerous and potent, and bordering upon Canaan, and very vexatious and mischievous to the Israelites. And now that prophecy, Numb. xxiv. 17, was accomplished.

3 ¶ David smote also ¶ Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of ^eZobah, as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates.

Hadadezer, called Hadarezer, 1 Chron. xviii. 3, the Hebrew letters daleth and resch being alike, and so oft interchanged. Zobah; a part of Syria, lying north-east from Canaan, towards Hamath, 1 Chron. xviii. 3. See 1 Sam. xiv. 47. As he went. Quest. Who? Ans. Either, first, Hadarezer; who, being already very potent, and going to enlarge his dominion further, David thought fit to oppose him. Or, secondly, David, who remembering the grant which God had made to his people of all the land as far as Euphrates, and having subdued his neighbouring enemies, went to recover his rights, and establish his dominion as far as Euphrates.

Chariots; which word is fitly supplied out of 1 Chron. xviii. 4, such substantives being oft understood in the Hebrew language, as Gen. xxvi. 30; 2 Sam. xxi. 16. Seven hundred horsemen, or seven hundred companies of horsemen, i. e. in all seven thousand; as it is 1 Chron. xviii. 4; there being ten in each company, and each ten having a ruler or captain, Exod. xviii. 21; Deut. i. 15. Or these seven hundred were the chief and the rulers of the rest, and the remaining six thousand three hundred were the common horsemen, subject to their commanders. Houghed, i. e. cut the sinews of their legs, that they might be useless for war. Compare Josh. xi. 6. All the chariot horses, except the following reserve. Chariots are here put for chariot horses, as they are 1 Sam. xiii. 5; 2 Sam. x. 13; Psal. lxxvi. 6. David did this because he could not keep them for his own use, Deut. xvii. 16.

5 ^h And when the Syrians of Damascus came to succour Hadadezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

The Syrians of Damascus, i. e. who were subject to Damascus, the chief city of Syria.

6 Then David put garrisons in Syria of Damascus: and the Syrians ⁱ became servants to David, and brought gifts. ^k And the Lord preserved David whithersoever he went.

Brought gifts, to purchase their peace, and acknowledge their subjection to him.

7 And David took ^l the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadadezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

That were on the servants, or rather, which were with the servants, i. e. committed to their custody, as being kept in the king's army; for it is not probable they carried them into the field.

8 And from ¶ Bethah, and from ¶ Berothai, cities of Hadadezer, king David took exceeding much brass.

In 1 Chron. xviii. 8, it is from Tibhath and from Chun. Either therefore the same cities were called by several names, as is usual, the one by the Hebrews, the other by the Syrians; or those were two other cities, and so the brass was taken out of these four cities.

9 ¶ When ¶ Toi king of Hamath heard that David had smitten all the host of Hadadezer, Hamath; another eminent city of Syria.

10 Then Toi sent ^m Joram his son unto king David, to ¶ salute him, and to bless him, because he had fought against Hadadezer, and smitten him: for Hadadezer ¶ had wars with Toi. And Joram ¶ brought with him vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and vessels of brass:

Toi sent Joram: here also the names differ from 1 Chron. xviii. 9, 10, where it is Tou and Hadoram. Had wars, Heb. was a man of wars, i. e. was exercised with continual wars. Compare Gen. ix. 20, &c.

11 Which also king David ⁿ did dedicate unto the Lord, with the silver and gold that he had dedicated of all nations which he subdued;

Unto the Lord; to the building of God's temple. So he showed his affection to God and his house, in preparing for it when he was not permitted to build it.

12 Of Syria, and of Moab, and of the children of Ammon, and of the Philistines, and of Amalek, and of the spoil of Hadadezer, son of Rehob, king of Zobah.

13 And David gat him a name when he returned from ¶ smiting of the Syrians in ^o the valley of salt, ^p ¶ being eighteen thousand men.

Gat him a name, i. e. much increased his reputation. The Syrians, or Edomites, as they are said to be, 1 Chron. xviii. 12. It is likely these two people were confederates, and that divers of the Syrians whom David had defeated in Syria fled to Edom, and there joined with them against their common enemy, and made up together a very great army, (as the number of the men slain in it showeth,) consisting of the veteran soldiers of both countries; although the slaughter here following may seem not to have been of the Syrians, as the words at first reading seem to intimate, but of the Edomites; (it not being probable that the Syrians would come so far from their own country, as to the valley of salt, to fight;) and this verse may be read thus, and that very agreeably to the Hebrew: And David gat him a name when he returned from smiting of the Syrians, in smiting (which is easily repeated out of the last clause, according to the common usage of Scripture) in the valley of salt eighteen thousand men, who were Edomites, as is sufficiently implied here in the next verse, and expressed 1 Chron. xviii. 12. The valley of salt; a place in Edom so called, either from its neighbourhood to the Salt Sea, or for some other cause now unknown. Being eighteen thousand men; as it is also 1 Chron. xviii. 12, where also they are said to be smitten by Abishai, because he was then a chief commander of the army under David, and, it may be, began the fight; as, for the like reason, they are said to be smitten by Joab, Psal. lx., title, where also there are only 12,000 mentioned; which place, if it speak of this battle, the state of it was this: Abishai begins the combat, and kills 6000; after him comes in Joab, and kills 12,000 more, which makes up this 18,000. But why may not that be another history and battle? So the Edomites and Syrians together did first fight with Abishai, and lost 18,000 men, and afterwards recruited their forces and fought with Joab, and lost other 12,000 men. Nor is it strange if two battles were fought in one place; of which there are divers instances in historians.

14 ¶ And he put garrisons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garrisons, and ^q all they of Edom became David's servants. ^r And the Lord preserved David whithersoever he went.

Judgment and justice, i. e. just judgment, as Deut. xvi. 18. A figure called hendiadis, as in Gen. iii. 16; Matt. iv. 16.

16 * And Joab the son of Zeruiah was over the host; and † Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud was || recorder;

Joab having doubtless declared his repentance for his former crimes, and having done eminent service for his country, and having received the chief command by virtue of David's promise and contract, 2 Sam. v. 8, was still continued in his place. Recorder; either, first, The writer of chronicles. But it is not likely he would have been put among the great officers of state and church. Or, secondly, The treasurer, who examined all the accounts, and kept records of them. Or, thirdly, The king's counsellor, as Ahithophel is called, 2 Sam. xv. 12; 1 Chron. xxvii. 33, who was to bring things of moment to the king's mind and remembrance, and to admonish him from time to time of things fit to be done. See 1 Kings iv. 3; 2 Kings xviii. 18.

17 And † Zadok the son of Ahitub, and Ahimelech the son of Abiathar, were the chief priests; and Seraiah was the || scribe;

The son of Ahitub; not of that Ahitub, 1 Sam. xxii.; for that was of Ithamar's race, but this of Eleazar. Ahimelech the son of Abiathar; so Abiathar called his son by the name of his father, 1 Sam. xxii. 20. The priests, i. e. the chief priest next under Abiathar, who fled to David, 1 Sam. xxii. 20, and now was high priest, as may be gathered from 2 Sam. xv. 35; 1 Kings ii. 27, 35: under him these two were the next chief priests, or the second priests, each one being chief of the house of his father, Zadok of Eleazar, and Ahimelech of Ithamar. See Numb. iii. 32; 1 Chron. xxiv. 3, 4. Or these two are here mentioned, because they constantly attended upon the king, that he might consult with them in the matters of the Lord, as need required.

18 * And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over both the † Cherethites and the Pelethites; and David's sons were || chief rulers.

Was over: these words are supplied out of the parallel place, 1 Chron. xviii. 17, and out of 2 Sam. xx. 23, where they are expressed.

The Cherethites and Pelethites were undoubtedly soldiers, and such as were eminent for their valour and fidelity to the king, as is evident from 2 Sam. xv. 18; xx. 7; 1 Kings i. 38, 44; and most probably they were the king's guards, which consisted of these two bands, who might be distinguished either by their several weapons, or by the differing time or manner of their service. They are supposed to be thus called, either, first, from their office, which was upon the king's command to cut off or punish offenders, and to preserve the king's person, as their names in the Hebrew tongue may seem to imply; or, secondly, from some country or place to which they had relation. As for the Cherethites, it is certain they were either a branch of the Philistines, or a people neighbouring to them, and confederate with them, as is manifest from 1 Sam. xxx. 14; Ezek. xxv. 16; Zeph. ii. 4, 5. And so might the Pelethites be too, though that be not related in Scripture. And these Israelites and soldiers of David might be so called, either because they went and lived with David when he dwelt in those parts; or from some notable exploit against or victory over these people; as among the Romans the names of Asiaticus, Africanus, &c. were given for the same reason. One of their exploits against the Cherethites is in part related 1 Sam. xxx. 14. And it is likely they did many other against them, and against other people, amongst which the Pelethites might be one. Were chief rulers; had the places of greatest authority and dignity conferred upon them.

CHAP. IX.

David, for Jonathan's sake, sendeth for his son Mephibosheth, 1—6; entertaineth him at his table; and restoreth him all that was Saul's; appointing Ziba to be his servant, 7—13.

AND David said, Is there yet any that is left of the house of Saul, that I may ^a shew him kindness for Jonathan's sake?

David's wars being ended, he set himself to the administration of justice to all his people, chap. viii. 15; and, amongst others, he minds his just debt and obligation to Jonathan and his family. Of the house of Saul; he saith not of the house of Jonathan, for he knew not of any son which he had left, and therefore thought his kindness and obligation was to pass to the next of his kindred. As for Mephibosheth, he was very young and obscure, and possibly concealed by his friends, lest David should cut him off from jealousy of state, as hath been usual among princes in like cases, and therefore was unknown to David, as well he might be, especially when David's head and hands were full of war with divers and potent enemies, as they had hitherto been.

2 And there was of the house of Saul a servant whose name was ^b Ziba. And when they had called him unto David, the king said unto him, Art thou Ziba? And he said, Thy servant is he.

A servant; one who had been a servant, and, as it may seem, a steward to Saul. See below, ver. 10.

3 And the king said, Is there not yet any of the house of Saul, that I may shew the kindness of God unto him? And Ziba said unto the king, Jonathan hath yet a son, which is ^d lame on his feet.

The kindness of God; either, first, That kindness which I owe him for God's sake, and by virtue of my oath given to him about it, 1 Sam. xx. 14, 15. But that oath seems only to oblige him to Jonathan's posterity, and not to any other of Saul's house. Or, secondly, Great and eminent kindness.

4 And the king said unto him, Where is he? And Ziba said unto the king, Behold, he is in the house of ^e Machir, the son of Ammiel, in Lo-debar.

In a place beyond Jordan, chap. xvii. 27, where his friends thought he might be kept out of David's sight.

5 ¶ Then king David sent, and fetched him out of the house of Machir, the son of Ammiel, from Lo-debar.

6 Now when || Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, was come unto David, he fell on his face, and did reverence. And David said, Mephibosheth. And he answered, Behold thy servant!

7 ¶ And David said unto him, Fear not: for I will surely shew thee kindness for Jonathan thy father's sake, and will restore thee all the land of Saul thy father; and thou shalt eat bread at my table continually.

All the land of Saul is now seized and possessed by David, as due to him, either in right of his wife, to whom the inheritance was devolved, Saul's sons by his wives being all dead; see Numb. xxvii. 8; or by Divine donation, as belonging to the crown which God had now given him; or by forfeiture, because of Ish-bosheth's rebellion against his lord and king.

8 And he bowed himself, and said, What is thy servant, that thou shouldst look upon such ^g a dead dog as I am?

9 ¶ Then the king called to Ziba, Saul's servant, and said unto him, ^h I have given unto thy master's son all that pertained to Saul and to all his house.

1 ver. 7, 11,
13. ch. 19.

k ch. 19. 17.

That thy master's son may have food to eat, i. e. that he may have wherewith to buy food for all his family, and all manner of provisions (which oft come under the title of food and bread) necessary for himself and them.

It is probable he had been the chief steward to manage Saul's lands; whereby he had great opportunities to enrich himself, which also he was very intent and resolved upon, either directly or indirectly, as the following history of him shows; and therefore it is not strange that he was so rich.

11 Then said Ziba unto the king, According to all that my lord the king hath commanded his servant, so shall thy servant do. As for Mephibosheth, said the king, he shall eat at my table, as one of the king's sons.

These are the words, either, first, Of David; the words said he, or said the king, being supplied out of the former and following verses. Or, secondly, Of Ziba, being thus rendered and understood, Also Mephibosheth, if the king so please, shall eat at my table, and shall be treated there according to his quality, as one of thy sons, as thou desirest; for the estate will suffice for that also.

12 And Mephibosheth had a young son, ¹whose name was Micha. And all that dwelt in the house of Ziba were servants unto Mephibosheth.

Mephibosheth had a young son; either, first, Before he was discovered and brought to the king; and then David seems guilty of a great error in forgetting his dear Jonathan so long; although his long and continued wars, both civil and foreign, might afford him some excuse, as filling his mind and time with business of another nature. Or, secondly, After that time; for there is nothing here which determines when this son was born. Whose name was Micha; who also had other children and grandchildren, to keep up the name and memory of worthy and famous Jonathan. See 1 Chron. viii. 34, 35; ix. 40, 41.

13 So Mephibosheth dwelt in Jerusalem: ^mfor he did eat continually at the king's table; and ⁿwas lame on both his feet.

19. 1, &c.

The king of the children of Ammon; Nahash, ver. 2; probably the same whose army Saul defeated and destroyed, 1 Sam. xi., who out of enmity to Saul showed kindness to David, as it follows; hoping also by fomenting the differences between Saul and David, to make way for his future conquests.

2 Then said David, I will shew kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, as his father shewed kindness unto me. And David sent to comfort him by the hand of his servants for his father. And David's servants came into the land of the children of Ammon.

Therefore there had hitherto been peace and friendship between David and him; and therefore the spoils of the children of Ammon are mentioned chap. viii. 12, by way of anticipation, and with respect to the story here following. As his father showed kindness unto me; which he might do either by offering him his help, if he needed it; or by supplying him with military or other provisions upon occasion, or many other ways.

3 And the princes of the children of Ammon said unto Hanun their lord, [†]Thinkest thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? hath not David rather sent his servants unto thee, to search the city, and to spy it out, and to overthrow it?

† Heb. In
doth David?

To observe where the city is weakest, and may soonest be taken. The ground of this suspicion was, partly, the conscience of their ill deserts and carriage towards the Israelites, whose quarrel David had espoused; partly, the opinion they had of David's policy; and partly, the severity of God's law, particularly against them, Deut. xxiii. 6, which might easily come to their ears. And they knew David was a zealous asserter of God's laws.

4 Wherefore Hanun took David's servants, and shaved off the one half of their beards, and cut off their garments in the middle, ^beven to their buttocks, and sent them away.

& 47. 2.

Shaved off the one half of their beards; partly that he might compel them to bear a part in their mourning, and that in such a way as was usual with them, but forbidden to the Israelites, Lev. xix. 27; Deut. xiv. 1; which probably was not unknown to them; and partly to fasten this as a reproach upon them, and to make them ridiculous and contemptible. Compare Isa. xx. 4; xlvii. 2; 1. 6. Even to their buttocks: this was worse than the former, because the Israelites wore no breeches, and so their nakedness was hereby uncovered. Compare Isa. xx. 4.

5 When they told it unto David, he sent to meet them, because the men were greatly ashamed: and the king said, Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.

He sent to meet them; he sent them clothes and other necessaries. Tarry at Jericho; both because this was one of the first places which they came to in Canaan; and because it was now a very obscure village, and therefore fittest for them in their circumstances; for it was not built as a city till after this time, 1 Kings xvi. 34. Until your beards be grown; for the want or loss of beards was esteemed a reproach among the Israelites.

6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they ^cstank before David, the children of Ammon sent and hired ^dthe Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba, twenty thousand footmen, and of king Maacah a thousand men, and of ^eIsh-tob twelve thousand men.

Beth-rehob, near Hamath, Numb. xiii. 21. Zoba; of which see 1 Sam. xiv. 47; 2 Sam. viii. 3. Of king Maacah, i. e. of that part of Syria which was under king Maacah; for Syria was a large country, and there were divers kings in the several parts of it. This part was near Gilead. See Deut. iii. 14. Of Ish-tob; or, of the men of Tob, the country where Jephthah dwelt, Judg. xi. 3. Besides these, they hired others out of Aram-naharaim, or Mesopotamia, as appears from 1 Chron. xix. 6; Psal. lx., title. And all these were forward enough to combine against David, both to revenge their former losses and reproaches, and to give check to his growing greatness.

7 And when David heard of it, he sent Joab, and all the host of ^ethe mighty men.

e ch. 23. 8.

Choosing wisely to carry the war into their country, rather than to expect it in his own.

8 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array at the entering in of the gate: and ^fthe Syrians of f ver. 6.

Zoba, and of Rehob, and Ish-tob, and Maacah, were by themselves in the field.

Of the gate, to wit, of Medeba, as it is expressed, 1 Chron. xix. 7, which was a frontier city. See Numb. xxi. 30. This place they chose for the fight, that they might both defend that city and their country, whereof that was the entrance, and, if need were, might retreat into it. The Syrians were by themselves in the field; that by their numerous forces they might fall upon the Israelites on the other side.

9 When Joab saw that the front of the battle was against him before and behind, he chose of all the choice men of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians:

Which were the most valiant and expert soldiers.

10 And the rest of the people he delivered into the hand of Abishai his brother, that he might put them in array against the children of Ammon.

11 And he said, If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will come and help thee.

12 ¶ Be of good courage, and let us play the men for our people, and for the cities of our God: and the LORD do that which seemeth him good.

For our people; for the preservation of ourselves and all our brethren from that utter ruin which our enemies design for us. Our war is not vainly undertaken to enlarge our empire or glory, but for our own just and necessary defence; and therefore we may hope for God's blessing and assistance in it. For the cities of our God; which are devoted to his worship and service, and therefore he will plead their cause against his enemies. The Lord do that which seemeth him good; let us do our parts, and quietly refer ourselves and the event to God's good pleasure, which we have no reason to distrust.

13 And Joab drew nigh, and the people that were with him, unto the battle against the Syrians: and they fled before him.

He prudently falls upon them first, because they were but mercenaries, and not concerned so much in the success as the Ammonites were, all whose interest lay at stake; and therefore not likely to venture too far in their defence.

14 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, then fled they also before Abishai, and entered into the city. So Joab returned from the children of Ammon, and came to Jerusalem.

That the Syrians were fled; in whose numbers and prowess they had the most confidence. Joab returned from the children of Ammon; not judging it convenient or safe to pursue them, because the forces were not utterly ruined, but only dispersed and put to flight, and so might easily rally together.

15 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were smitten before Israel, they gathered themselves together.

Partly, to wipe out the stain of cowardice which they had now contracted; partly, to prevent that vengeance which they supposed David would execute upon them for their last attempt; and partly, to shake off the yoke that David had lately put upon them.

16 And Hadarezer sent, and brought out the Syrians that were beyond the river: and they came to Helam; and Shobach the captain of the host of Hadarezer went before them.

Hadarezer; the same with Hadadezer, chap. viii. 3. The Syrians that were beyond the river; who having engaged themselves in the former expedition, as was noted before, were now obliged to proceed in their own defence, being also persuaded and hired to this second expedition, ver. 19. Shobach, or Shophach, 1 Chron. xix. 16.

17 And when it was told David, he gathered all Israel together, and passed over Jordan, and came to Helam. And the Syrians set themselves in array against David, and fought with him.

All Israel, i. e. the chosen and valiant men picked out of all Israel.

18 And the Syrians fled before Israel; and David slew the men of seven hundred chariots of the Syrians, and forty thousand horsemen, and smote Shobach the captain of their host, who died there.

The men of seven hundred chariots; Heb. seven hundred chariots, i. e. the men belonging to them, that fought in or with them; as plainly appears, 1. Because the men only, and not the chariots, were capable of being killed, as these are said to have been. 2. Because it is thus explained in the Book of Chronicles, which was written after this book, for this end, to explain what was dark or doubtful, and to supply what was omitted here; where, instead of these words, are seven thousand men which fought in chariots, 1 Chron. xix. 18. And this is a very common metonymy; of which see above, chap. viii. 4, and the notes on 1 Sam. xiii. 5. Although there might be seven thousand chariots in all, whereof seven hundred were chosen ones; according to the distinction made Exod. xiv. 7. Forty thousand horsemen; for which in 1 Chron. xix. 18, is forty thousand footmen; which may be reconciled divers ways. 1. Both these may be true, that he slew forty thousand horsemen, which being the most considerable part and strength of the army, it might seem sufficient to name them, and every one could easily understand that the footmen in that case were certainly cut off; and that he slew also forty thousand footmen, as is said 1 Chron., where he mentions them only, because they were omitted in 2 Sam., and the horsemen being expressed here, it was needless to repeat them in 1 Chron. 2. The horsemen may be here called footmen, in opposition to those that fought in chariots; because they sometimes fought on horseback, and sometimes came down from their horses, and fought on foot, when the place of the battle was more commodious for footmen than for horsemen; which it is not improbable was their case here; for David being a soldier of great prudence and experience, and understanding the great numbers of the Syrian horsemen, whereas the Israelites had but very few, Deut. xvii. 16, would doubtless endeavour to choose a place as inconvenient for their horsemen as he could. 3. Peradventure the Syrians designed to bring the war into David's country, and therefore hastened their march, and for that end put their footmen on horseback, (as hath been frequently done in like cases,) who, when they came to the place of battle, came down from their horses, and fought on foot. So there is no need of acknowledging an error of the scribe in the sacred text; which yet if it were granted in such historical passages of no moment to the doctrine of faith and good life, it would not shake the foundation of our faith in matters of great importance, which it might reasonably be presumed the providence of God would more watchfully preserve from all deprivation or corruption.

19 And when all the kings that were servants to Hadarezer saw that they were smitten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and served them. So the Syrians feared to help the children of Ammon any more.

The kings that were servants to Hadarezer, to wit, for that time, or in that expedition to which he hired them.

Whilst Joab besieged Rabbah David committeth adultery with Bath-sheba, 1—4. And hearing that she was with child, he sendeth for Uriah her husband out of the camp, to cover his shame. He will not go to his own house, neither sober nor drunk, 5—13. David sendeth him again into the camp with a letter to Joab to expose him to death,

AND it came to pass, †after the year was expired, at the time when kings go forth to battle, that *David sent Joab, and his servants with him, and all Israel; and they destroyed the children of Ammon, and besieged Rabbah. But David tarried still at Jerusalem.

After the year was expired; when that year ended, and the next begun, which was in the spring time, Exod. xii. 2. When kings go forth; which is when the ground is fit for the march of soldiers, and brings forth provision for man and beast. To battle: these words are to be understood here, as Gen. x. 11; xiv. 8. Rabbah; the chief and royal city of the Ammonites, Deut. iii. 11.

2 ¶ And it came to pass in an eveningtide, that David arose from off his bed, ^band walked upon the roof of the king's house: and from the roof he ^csaw a woman washing herself; and the woman was very beautiful to look upon.

b Deut. 22. 8.

c Gen. 24. 2. Job 31. 1. Matt. 5. 28.

From off his bed; where he had lain and slept for some time; being possibly disposed to sleep after dinner, by reason of some excess committed in eating or drinking; and indulging himself in his lazy humour, which may seem very improper for so great a prince and captain, who had so many and great burdens upon his shoulders, especially in a time of war; and therefore such practices have been condemned by heathens; and Homer will not allow a general and great counsellor to sleep all the night, much less to take any part of the day for it. And therefore this is thought to be David's first error, and the occasion of his following fall. Walked upon the roof; which was plain, after the manner; Deut. xxii. 8. Washing herself, to wit, in a bath, which possibly was in her garden, or in some room near to the king's palace, where she might wash herself divers ways, and for different ends; either for health, or coolness, or to cleanse herself from some kind of legal impurity; where also, the windows being open, and she careless, David might espy her.

3 And David sent and enquired after the woman. And one said, Is not this ¶ Bath-sheba, the daughter of ¶ Eliam, the wife ^d of Uriah the Hittite?

¶ Or, Ammiel, d ch. 23. 29.

Instead of suppressing that lust which the sight of his eyes had kindled, he seeks rather to feed it; and first inquires who she was; that, if she were unmarried, he might make her either his wife or his concubine. Bath-sheba, called also Bath-shuah, 1 Chron. iii. 5, where also Eliam is called Ammiel. The Hittite; so called, either, 1. By his original, being born either of that race, but become a zealous proselyte; or, at least, among that people. Or, 2. By his habitation among them. Or, 3. For some notable exploit of his against that people: see 1 Sam. xxvi. 6, and the notes on 2 Sam. viii. 18.

4 And David sent messengers, and took her; and she came in unto him, and * he lay with her; ¶ for she was ^r purified from her uncleanness: and she returned unto her house.

e Ps. 51. title. Jan. 1. 14.

¶ Or, and when she had purified herself, &c. she returned.

f Lev. 15. 19, 28. & 18. 19.

David sent and took her from her own house into his palace, not by force, but by persuasion, as desiring to speak with her. She came in unto him; into his palace and chamber, as he desired. For she was purified, to wit, from her menstruous pollution, according to the law, Lev. xviii. 19; which is here noted as the reason, either why David pursued his lustful desire, or why she so easily yielded to it, because she was not under that pollution which might alienate her from it; or rather, why she so readily conceived, that time being observed by Aristotle and others to be the most likely time for conception.

5 And the woman conceived, and sent and told David, and said, I am with child.

Consider therefore what to do for thy own honour, and for my safety, whom thou hast brought into a most shameful and dangerous condition.

6 ¶ And David sent to Joab, saying, Send me Uriah the Hittite. And Joab sent Uriah to David.

7 And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him † how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered.

+ Heb. of the peace of, &c.

Frivolous questions, which any common messenger could have answered; which probably made Uriah suspect that there was some other secret cause why he was sent for. And he might understand something, either by David's messengers, ver. 4, or by some of his own family, concerning her being sent for to the court; which, together with other circumstances, might give him cause of further suspicion. Yet such might be the questions (though not here particularly mentioned) concerning those heads, as every private person might not be acquainted with, nor able to resolve, but such only as were acquainted with the counsel of war.

8 And David said to Uriah, Go down to thy house, and ^g wash thy feet. And Uriah departed out of the king's house, and there † followed him a mess of meat from the king.

g Gen. 18. 4. & 19. 2.

+ Heb. went out after him.

Go down to thy house; not doubting but he would there converse with his wife, and so cover their sin and shame. Wash thy feet; as travellers there used to do. There followed him a mess of meat; seemingly as a testimony of David's respect and affection to him; but really to cheer up his spirits, and dispose him to desire his wife's company.

9 But Uriah slept at the door of the king's house with all the servants of his lord, and went not down to his house.

With all the servants of his lord; with the king's guard. This he did, either upon some suspicion of the matter; see ver. 7; or by the secret direction of God's wise and irresistible providence, who would bring David's sin to light.

10 And when they had told David, saying, Uriah went not down unto his house, David said unto Uriah, Camest thou not from thy journey? why then didst thou not go down unto thine house?

When they had told David; whether of their own accord, or being first asked by David, it doth not appear. Camest thou not from thy journey, wearied with hard service and travel, and therefore didst need refreshment? nor did I expect or desire that thou shouldst now attend upon my person, or keep the watch.

11 And Uriah said unto David, ^h The ark, and I, rael, and Judah, abide in tents; and ⁱ my lord Joab, and the servants of my lord, are encamped in the open fields; shall I then go into mine house, to eat and to drink, and to lie with my wife? as thou livest, and as thy soul liveth, I will not do this thing.

i ch. 20. 6.

The ark, it seems, was now carried with them for their encouragement and direction, as was usual: see Numb. x. 35; 1 Sam. iv. 4. In the open fields, to wit, in tents which are in the fields. And to lie with my wife: he might possibly add these words, to insinuate his apprehension of the king's design, and to awaken his conscience to the consideration of his sin, and of the injury which he had done him. His meaning is, Now when God's people are in a doubtful and dangerous condition, it becomes me to sympathize with them, and to abstain even from lawful delights. Whereby he might possibly intimate how unworthy it was for David in such a season to indulge himself in sinful and injurious pleasures. But David's ear was now deaf, his heart being hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

12 And David said to Uriah, Tarry here to day also, and to morrow I will let thee depart. So Uriah abode in Jerusalem that day, and the morrow.

13 And when David had called him, he did eat and drink before him; and he made him ¹ drunk: and at even he went out to lie on his bed ¹ with the servants of his lord, but went not down to his house.

When David had called him, i. e. being invited by David. He made him drunk, or, he made him merry, as the word oft signifies. He caused him to drink more than was convenient. He went out to lie on his bed; which it doth not appear that he did the night before; but now his excess in eating and drinking might make it more necessary for him. With the servants of his lord, i. e. in some chamber in the king's court, where the king's servants used to take their repose.

14 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that David ^m wrote a letter to Joab, and sent it by the hand of Uriah.

15 And he wrote in the letter, saying, Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the [†] hottest battle, and retire ye [†] from him, that he may ^a be smitten, and die.

So far is David from repenting upon these just and great occasions, that he seeks to cover one sin with another; and to hide his adultery with murder, even the murder of a most excellent person, and that in a most malicious and perfidious manner.

16 And it came to pass, when Joab observed the city, that he assigned Uriah unto a place where he knew that valiant men were.

Placed there to defend it, because that part of the city was supposed either the weakest, or the place designed for the assault. Joab having formerly committed a base murder upon Abner, was ready to execute this wicked command of the king; that so he being involved in the same guilt with him, might the more willingly receive him into favour.

17 And the men of the city went out, and fought with Joab: and there fell some of the people of the servants of David; and Uriah the Hittite died also.

18 ¶ Then Joab sent and told David all the things concerning the war;

19 And charged the messenger, saying, When thou hast made an end of telling the matters of the war unto the king, 20 And if so be that the king's wrath arise, and he say unto thee, Wherefore approached ye so nigh unto the city when ye did fight? knew ye not that they would shoot from the wall?

21 Who smote ^a Abimelech the son of Jerubbesheth? did not a woman cast a piece of a millstone upon him from the wall, that he died in Thebez? why went ye nigh the wall? then say thou, Thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also.

Jerubbesheth, called also Jerubbaal, Judg. ix. 1. See the note on 2 Sam. ii. 8. Thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also; which he knew would be acceptable news to the king, and therefore allay his wrath. This indeed might make the messenger suspect that David had a hand in Uriah's death; and possibly Joab might say so for that very reason, that these matters by degrees being known, David might be hardened in sin, and so Joab might have the greater interest in him.

22 ¶ So the messenger went, and came and shewed David all that Joab had sent him for.

23 And the messenger said unto David, Surely the men prevailed against us, and came out unto us into the field, and we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate.

We beat them back, and pursued them even to the gate.

24 And the shooters shot from off the wall upon thy servants; and some of the king's servants be dead, and thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also.

25 Then David said unto the messenger, Thus shalt thou say unto Joab, Let not this thing [†] displease thee, for the sword devoureth [†] one as well as another: make thy battle more strong against the city, and overthrow it: and encourage thou him.

Let not this thing displease thee; be not dejected or discouraged by this sad occasion. Encourage thou him, i. e. Joab, to proceed in the siege.

26 ¶ And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her husband was dead, she mourned for her husband.

27 And when the mourning was past, David sent and fetched her to his house, and she ^a became his wife, and bare him a son. But the thing that David had done [†] displeased the LORD.

When the mourning was past; which was seven days, Gen. 1. 10; 1 Sam. xxxi. 13. Nor could the nature of the thing admit of longer delay lest the too early birth of the child might discover David's sin. David sent and fetched her to his house, and she became his wife; by which it appears that David continued in the state of impenitency for divers months together, and this notwithstanding his frequent attendance upon God's ordinances; which is an eminent instance of the corruption of man's nature, which is even in the best; and, without Divine assistance, is too strong for them; of the deceitfulness of sin, and of the tremendous judgment of God in punishing one sin, by delivering a man up to another. The thing that David had done, i. e. his adultery and murder, as is evident from the next chapter.

CHAP. XII.

Nathan by a parable reproveth and threateneth David, 1—12. He confesseth his sin, and is pardoned, but the child must die, 13, 14: David mourneth and prayeth for it whilst life was in it; after is satisfied and cheered: the reason, 15—23. He goeth in to Bath-sheba: Solomon is born of her, and is called Jedidiah, 24, 25. David taketh Rahab, and tortureth the people thereof, 26—31.

AND the LORD sent Nathan unto David. And ^a he came unto him, and ^b said unto him, There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor.

Nathan, the prophet, chap. vii. 2; 1 Kings i. 8. When the ordinary means did not awaken David to repentance, God useth an extraordinary course. Thus the merciful God pities and prevents him who had so horribly forsaken and forgotten God.

Nathan prudently ushereth in his reproof with a parable, after the manner of the eastern nations and ancient times, that so he might surprise David, and cause him unawares to give sentence against himself. He manageth his relation as if it had been a real thing; and demands the king's justice in the case. Though the application of this parable to David be easy and obvious, yet it matters not if some circumstances be not so applicable; because it was fit to put in some such clauses, either for the decency of the parable, or that David might not too early discover his design.

3 But the poor man had nothing, save one little ewe lamb, which he had bought and nourished up: and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it did eat of his own meat, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was unto him as a daughter.

+ Heb. morsel.

The poor man had nothing, save one little ewe lamb; designing Uriah, with his own and only wife. Which he had bought; as men then used to buy their wives; or, had procured. Lay in his bosom; which David might take for hyperbolical expressions of his tender care of and affection to it; although there want not instances of some who have treated such brute creatures in this manner.

4 And there came a traveller unto the rich man, and he spared to take of his own flock and of his own herd, to dress for the wayfaring man that was come unto him; but took the poor man's lamb, and dressed it for the man that was come to him.

A traveller: this some make to be the devil, whom David gratified by his sin; but it rather seems added for the decency of the parable.

5 And David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, As the LORD liveth, the man that hath done this thing || shall surely die:

|| Or, is worthy to die, or, is a son of death. 1 Sam. 26. 16.

This seems to be more than the fact deserved, or than he had commission to inflict for it, Exod. xxii. 1. But it is observable, that David now, when he was most indulgent to himself, and to his own sin, was most severe to others; as appears by this passage and the following relation, ver. 31, which was done in the time of David's impenitent continuance in his sin.

6 And he shall restore the lamb ° fourfold, because he did this thing, and because he had no pity.

c Ex. 22. 1. Luke 19. 8.

7 ¶ And Nathan said to David, Thou art the man. Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, I ° anointed thee king over Israel, and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul;

d 1 Sam. 16. 13.

Thou art the man; thou hast committed this crime with great aggravations; and out of thine own mouth thy sentence hath proceeded, and thou art worthy of death.

8 And I gave thee thy master's house, and thy master's wives into thy bosom, and gave thee the house of Israel and of Judah; and if that had been too little, I would moreover have given unto thee such and such things.

Thy master's wives, or, women, as that word is elsewhere used; as Numb. xxxi. 18. And though we read not a word of God's giving, or of David's taking, any of Saul's wives into his bosom; or, which is all one, into his bed; yet (which I think to be aimed at here) it might be according to the manner of that time, that the wives and concubines of the precedent king belonged to the successor, to be at least at his dispose. And to pretend to them, was interpreted little less than pretending to the crown; which made it fatal to Adonijah to ask Abishag, 1 Kings ii. 23; and to Abner to be suspected for Rizpah, 2 Sam. iii. 8. And Absalom, usurping the crown, usurped the concubines also; which is looked on as a crime unpardonable, 2 Sam. xvi. 21. Nor would this have been reckoned amongst the mercies and blessings which God here is said to give him, and which are opposed to that which he sinfully took. But we do read, that Merab, Saul's daughter, was given to him for his wife by Saul's promise, and consequently by God's grant; though afterwards Saul perfidiously gave her to another man; and that Michal, the other daughter, was actually given to him, 1 Sam. xviii. And it is very possible that some other of David's wives were nearly related to the house of Saul; whereby David might design to enlarge and strengthen his interest in the kingdom; although there is no absolute necessity of restraining this to Saul, seeing the word is plural, masters, and may belong to others also, who sometimes were owned by David as his masters, lords, or superiors, such as Nabal was, and some others not elsewhere named might be, whose houses and wives, or, at least, women, God might give to David. Such and such things; such other things as thou hadst wanted, or in reason desired;

9 ° Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of the LORD, to do evil in his sight? ° thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword, and hast taken his wife to be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon.

e See 1 Sam. 15. 19. f Num. 15. 31. g ch. 11. 15. 16, 17. 27.

The commandment of the Lord, i. e. those laws of God which forbade thee to do this thing, by not giving them that respect and observance which they deserved. Uriah the Hittite; that valiant, and generous, and noble person. Hast taken his wife to be thy wife: this he mentions amongst his other sins; partly because he had rewarded her, who by God's law should have been severely punished; partly because he compassed this marriage by wicked practices, even by Uriah's murder, and for sinful ends, even for the gratification of his inordinate and sensual lusts, and for the concealment of that sin which he was obliged to confess and lament. Hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon; those cursed enemies of God, and of his people, whom thou hast encouraged and hardened in their idolatry, by giving up him and others of God's people into their hands. And note here, that although David did not kill Uriah himself, nor command any to do it; but only that he should be put upon dangerous service (which a general of an army oft doth to soldiers under him, on justifiable accounts, without being therefore legally chargeable with murder, though the person so employed die in the service); yet in God's account, who judged of David's design therein, it is justly so reputed. And therefore, though the Ammonites slew Uriah, yet David is said to have killed him with their sword.

h Amos 7. 9.

Shall never depart from thine house, during the residue of thy life; as appears from the following history.

11 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, and I will ° take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbour, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun.

i Deut. 29. 30. ch. 16. 22.

I will raise up evil, to wit, the evil of punishment. Out of thine own house; from thy own children and family. Before thine eyes, i. e. openly, so as thou shalt know it as certainly as if thou didst see it, and yet not be able to hinder it. Give them, i. e. I shall by my providence give him power over them, which I know he will abuse; and I shall not restrain him from so doing, either by my grace or providence. Unto thy neighbour; to one who is very near to thee, even thy beloved son Absalom. But God expresseth this here darkly and doubtfully, that the accomplishment of it might not be hindered. In the sight of the sun; in the open day, and in a public place. The accomplishment hereof, see chap. xvi. 22.

12 For thou didst it secretly: ° but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the sun.

k ch. 16. 22.

I will do this thing, i. e. I will execute this judgment. This God did by inclining David's heart to leave his concubines to keep his house, and so to come into Absalom's power; by giving up Ahithophel to his own carnal policy, which readily suggested to him that wicked and desperate counsel; and by exposing Absalom to these temptations, and leaving him to his own vicious inclinations, which God certainly knew would in such circumstances produce that effect. So the sin was wholly from men, but the ordering and overruling their mistakes and miscarriages to this end was from God.

13 ¹And David said unto Nathan, "I have sinned against the LORD. And Nathan said unto David, "The LORD also hath ^oput away thy sin; thou shalt not die.

I have sinned against the Lord; I now freely confess that sin which I have hitherto so wickedly smothered; and I have deserved all these and far heavier judgments for it; and I am more troubled for my sin against my sovereign Lord and gracious God, than for the shame and punishment that follow it. How serious and pathetic this confession was, we may see, Psal. li. The Lord also hath put away thy sin, i. e. so far as concerns thy own life and eternal salvation; both which were forfeited by this sin. Thou shalt not die, as by thy own sentence, ver. 5, thou didst deserve, and as thou mightest expect to do by my immediate stroke; though possibly thou mightest elude the law before a human judicature, or there be no superior to execute the law upon thee.

14 Howbeit, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the LORD ^oto blaspheme, the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die.

p. 1e. 52. 5. Ezek. 36. 20, 23. Rom. 2. 24.

To blaspheme, i. e. to reproach both God and his people, and the true religion. For though these were not concerned in David's sin, the blame and shame of which should have been appropriated to him; yet heathens and wicked men would, according to their own evil minds and malicious hearts, fasten the reproach of this upon God and religion; as if God were unholy, because the man after God's own heart was so; and partial, in conniving at so great a crime, when Saul was cast off for a far less sin; and negligent in the government of the world, and of his church, in suffering such a wickedness as even heathens have abhorred to go unpunished; and as if all religion were but hypocrisy and imposture, and a pretence for villainies. Besides, the Ammonites, upon their success against Uriah and his party, did doubtless magnify and praise their idols, and blaspheme the God of Israel. The child shall surely die; which, considering his affection to it, and the punishment threatened to the poor innocent infant for his sake, must needs be grievous to him.

15 ¶ And Nathan departed unto his house. And the LORD struck the child that Uriah's wife bare unto David, and it was very sick.

The Lord struck the child with some sudden and dangerous distemper.

16 David therefore besought God for the child; and David ^ffasted, and went ⁱⁿ, and ^olay all night upon the earth.

David besought God for the child; supposing the threatening might be conditional, and so the execution of it prevented by prayer. Went in, to wit, into his closet, as Matt. vi. 6, to pray solitarily and earnestly, as he had done with others. Or this word may only note his progress and continuance in the actions here expressed.

17 And the elders of his house arose, and went to him, to raise him up from the earth: but he would not, neither did he eat bread with them.

The elders of his house; the chief officers of his kingdom and household who were there present.

This excessive mourning did not proceed simply from the fear of the loss of the child; but from a deep sense of his sin, and from the Divine displeasure manifested herein; and particularly from a just apprehension of the injury which he had done to the child by his sin, which justice obliged him to do his utmost to repair by prayer or other means.

18 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that the child died. And the servants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead: for they said, Behold, while the child was yet alive, we spake unto him, and he would not hearken unto our voice: how will he then [†]vex himself, if we tell him that the child is dead?

On the seventh day; either, 1. From the beginning of the distemper. Or rather, 2. From the day of his birth, which is the most usual way of computation of men's days or years; for it is apparent that this happened during the time of David's fasting and lying upon the earth, ver. 20, which it is not probable that it lasted for seven days. They said, whispering among themselves, ver. 19.

19 But when David saw that his servants whispered, David perceived that the child was dead: therefore David said unto his servants, Is the child dead? And they said, He is dead.

20 Then David arose from the earth, and washed, and ^oanointed himself, and ^ochanged his apparel, and came into the house of the LORD, and ^oworshipped: then he came to his own house; and when he required, they set bread before him, and he did eat.

Into the house of the Lord, i. e. to the tabernacle, to confess his sin before the Lord, and to own his justice in this stroke and the other threatenings, and to deprecate his great and just displeasure, and to acknowledge God's rich mercy in sparing his own life, and to offer such sacrifices as were proper and required in such cases. Nor did David transgress that law, Numb. xix. 14, in going thither before the seven days were expired. For neither is there the same reason of a tent, and of a dwelling-house, where the several rooms of the house are as distinct as several tents; nor is it here said, that David was in the same room, or in the same house, where the child died.

21 Then said his servants unto him, What thing is this that thou hast done? thou didst fast and weep for the child, while it was alive; but when the child was dead, thou didst rise and eat bread.

22 And he said, While the child was yet alive, I fasted and wept: [†]for I said, Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live?

For God's threatening of the child's death might be conditional, as that was of Nineveh's destruction, Jonah iii. 4.

23 But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but ^ohe shall not return to me.

Wherefore should I fast, seeing fasting and prayer cannot now prevail with God for his life? I shall go to him; into the state of the dead, in which he is, and into heaven, where I doubt not I shall find him.

24 ¶ And David comforted Bath-sheba his wife, and went in unto her, and lay with her: and ^oshe bare a son, and ^ohe called his name Solomon: and the LORD loved him.

David comforted Bathsheba; who was now much dejected, both for her former sin, which she truly repented of, as may be gathered from Prov. xxxi. 1-3, &c., and for the loss of that child which was very dear to her, and which might seem to be the only tie of David's affection to her; which being now dead, she might think that David would utterly cast her off, and leave her to that shame and punishment which she had deserved. Went in unto her, to wit, into her chamber or bed. The Lord loved him, i. e. the Lord declared to David that he loved his son, notwithstanding the just cause which David had given to God to alienate his affections from him.

25 And he sent by the hand of Nathan the prophet; and he called his name ^oJehoidiah, because of the LORD.

26 ¶ And ^aJoab fought against ^bRabbah of the children of Ammon, and took the royal city.

i. e. That part of the city where was the king's palace, where he ordinarily resided; though now it seems he was retired to a strong fort.

27 And Joab sent messengers to David, and said, I have fought against Rabbah, and have taken the city of waters.

The same royal city so called, because it either stood beside the river, or was encompassed with water, both for defence and delight. Although the words are by some learned men rendered thus, I have taken, or intercepted, or cut off water from the city; which well agrees, both with the words, eth being here put for meeth, which is frequent; as Gen. iv. 1; xlv. 4; Exod. ix. 29, &c.; and with the relation of Josephus the Jew, who saith, The conduits of water were cut off, and so the city was taken; and with a relation of Polybius concerning the same city, which was taken afterwards by Antiochus in the same manner, by cutting off water from the city.

28 Now therefore gather the rest of the people together, and encamp against the city, and take it: lest I take the city, and † it be called after my name.

Take it; for having taken one part of the city, he concluded the remaining part of it could not long stand out. Lest it be called after my name; lest I have the honour of taking it. Thus he seeks to ingratiate himself with the king, by pretending great care for his honour and interest.

29 And David gathered all the people together, and went to Rabbah, and fought against it, and took it.

David gathered all the people together; either because Joab needed more help for the storming of the city; or, at least, for the prosecution of the victory, and execution of justice upon the whole land; or because he would have them all to partake of the spoil of the city, which was there in great abundance, ver. 30; the rather because they were all exposed to the hazard of utter ruin, in case the Ammonites had prevailed against them.

30 ^b And he took their king's crown from off his head, the weight whereof was a talent of gold with the precious stones: and it was set on David's head. And he brought forth the spoil of the city † in great abundance.

The weight whereof was a talent of gold, or rather, the price whereof, &c. For as the Hebrew shekel signifies both a weight, and a piece of money of a certain price; so also may mishkal, as proceeding from the same root. And, in general, the same words both in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin are promiscuously used, to signify either weight or price, as is well known to the learned. And the addition of precious stones, which are never valued by the weight of gold, makes this signification here most proper and probable. Moreover, the weight might seem too great, either for the king of Ammon or for David, to wear it upon his head. Although, if this were meant of the weight, it might be said that this was not a crown to be worn ordinarily, but merely to be put on upon the king's head at his coronation, or upon solemn occasions, as here where this was done, in token of the translation of this kingdom to David; and, it may be, it was held up or supported by two officers of state, that it might not be too burdensome to him, and after a little while taken off.

31 And he brought forth the people that were therein, and put them under saws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them pass through the brickkiln: and thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon. So David and all the people returned unto Jerusalem.

The people that were therein: the words are indefinite, and therefore not necessarily to be understood of all the people; for it had been barbarous to use women and children thus; but of the men of war, and especially of those who had been the chief actors or abettors of that villainous action against David's ambassadors, (which was contrary to the law of nature, and of nations, and of all humanity,) and of the dreadful war ensuing upon it; for which they might seem to deserve the severest punishments. Although indeed there seems to have been too much rigour used; especially, because these dreadful deaths were inflicted not only upon those great counsellors, who were the only authors of that vile usage of the ambassadors; but upon a great number of the people, who were innocent from that crime. And therefore it is probably conceived that David exercised this cruelty whilst his heart was hardened and impenitent, and when he was bereaved of that free and good Spirit of God which would have taught him more mercy and moderation. Put them under saws: he sawed them to death; of which punishment we have examples, both in Scripture, Heb. xi. 37, and in other authors. Under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron: he caused them to be laid down upon the ground, and torn by sharp iron harrows drawn over them, and hewed in pieces by keen axes. Made them pass through the brick-kiln, i. e. to be burnt in brick-kilns. Or, made them to pass through the furnace of Moloch, i. e. of Moloch, called also Milchom, and here Malchen; punishing them with their own sin, and with the same kind of punishment which they inflicted upon their own children: see 2 Kings xvi. 3; xxiii. 10; Lev. xviii. 21; xx. 2; Deut. xviii. 10.

CHAP. XIII.

Amnon loveth his sister Tamar; ravisheth her; then hateth and driveth her away, 1—19. Absalom entertaineth and revengeth her with Amnon's death, 20—29. David is grieved: Absalom fleeth to Geshur, 30—39.

AND it came to pass after this, ^athat cir. 1052. Absalom the son of David had a fair a ch. 3. 2. 3. sister, whose name was ^bTamar; and b 1 Chr. 3. 9. Amnon the son of David loved her.

A fair sister; his sister by father and mother: see 2 Sam. iii. 3.

2 And Amnon was so vexed, that he fell sick for his sister Tamar; for she was a virgin; and † Amnon thought it hard for him to do any thing to her.

He fell sick; the passion of his mind disturbed his body, as is usual. She was a virgin, and therefore diligently kept, so as he could not get private converse with her; and withal modest, and abhorring any compliance with his lustful desires, both from her inclination and interest.

3 But Amnon had a friend, whose name was Jonadab, ^cthe son of Shimeah c See 1 Sam. 16. 9. David's brother: and Jonadab was a very subtil man.

Shimeah, called also Shammah, 1 Sam. xvi. 9.

4 And he said unto him, Why art thou, being the king's son, †lean †from day to day? wilt thou not tell me? And Amnon said unto him, I love Tamar, my brother Absalom's sister.

From day to day, Heb. from morning to morning; for whereas in the day he had many diversions and refreshments, in the night he was pestered with tormenting thoughts and passions; the effects whereof appeared in his countenance in the morning. Wilt thou not tell me, thy sure friend and faithful servant, who am ready to advise and assist thee?

5 And Jonadab said unto him, Lay thee down on thy bed, and make thyself sick: and when thy father cometh to see thee, say unto him, I pray thee, let my sister Tamar come, and give me meat, and dress the meat in my sight, that I may see it, and eat it at her hand.

Let my sister Tamar come; so he calls her, to prevent the suspicion of any dishonest design upon so near a relation, whom neither nature nor respect and affection would permit him to vitiate. Eat it at her hand; pretending that his stomach was so nice that he could eat nothing but what he saw dressed, and that by a person whom he much affected.

6 ¶ So Amnon lay down, and made himself sick: and when the king was come to see him, Amnon said unto the king, I pray thee, let Tamar my sister come, and make me a couple of cakes in my sight, that I may eat at her hand.

7 Then David sent home to Tamar, saying, Go now to thy brother Amnon's house, and dress him meat.

It is strange that so wise and sagacious a person as David did not see through so vain a pretence; but that must be ascribed partly to the instincts of nature, which generally preserve near relations from such monstrous actions; and partly to God's providence, which blinded David's mind, that he might bring upon him the designed and threatened judgments.

8 So Tamar went to her brother Amnon's house; and he was laid down. And she took flour, and kneaded it, and made cakes in his sight, and did bake the cakes.

He was laid down upon his bed, or rather his couch.

9 And she took a pan, and poured them out before him; but he refused to eat. And Amnon said, Have out all men from me. And they went out every man from him.

Poured them out; out of the frying-pan into the dish.

10 And Amnon said unto Tamar, Bring the meat into the chamber, that I may eat of thine hand. And Tamar took the cakes which she had made, and brought them into the chamber to Amnon her brother.

Into the chamber; an inner chamber; either, 1. That where-in he lay sick upon his bed, where also Tamar made the cakes in his sight, who then carried them out into the next room, to bring them in again when he called for them. Or rather, 2. Another chamber; Amnon lying upon his couch in one chamber where the company were with him, where also she made the cakes before him, first sendeth all out of that room, and then riseth from his couch, and, upon some pretence, goes into another secret chamber, where he might have the better opportunity for his intended wickedness.

11 And when she had brought them unto him to eat, he took hold of her, and said unto her, Come lie with me, my sister.

12 And she answered him, Nay, my brother, do not force me; for no such thing ought to be done in Israel: do not thou this folly.

Nay, my brother, whom nature both teacheth to abhor such thoughts, and obligeth to defend me from such a mischief with thy utmost hazard if another should attempt it. Do not force me: thou shouldst abhor it, if I were willing; but to add violence to thy filthiness is abominable. In Israel; among God's people, who are taught better things; who also will be infinitely reproached for such a base action.

13 And I, whither shall I cause my shame to go? and as for thee, thou shalt be as one of the fools in Israel. Now therefore, I pray thee, speak unto the king; for he will not withhold me from thee.

Whither shall I cause my shame to go? how can I either endure or avoid the shame and reproach of it? As one of the fools in Israel, i. e. loathsome and contemptible to all the people, whereas now thou art in great reputation, and heir apparent of the crown. He will not withhold me from thee: this she spake, either because she did not understand or not remember that the law of God prohibited such marriages between a brother and his half-sister; or because she thought her royal father could or would dispense with it, upon this extraordinary occasion, to save his first-born son's life; or that by this pretence she might free herself from her present and most urgent danger, knowing she should have opportunity enough to prevent other mischiefs.

14 Howbeit he would not hearken unto her voice: but, being stronger than she, forced her, and lay with her.

15 ¶ Then Amnon hated her exceedingly; so that the hatred wherewith he hated her was greater than the love wherewith he had loved her. And Amnon said unto her, Arise, be gone.

Then Amnon hated her exceedingly; partly because, his lust being now satisfied, his mind and conscience had a true and clear prospect and deep sense of the natural turpitude and baseness of the action, and of that shame, and contempt, and loss, and mischief which was likely to follow it, and consequently an utter aversion from her who had been the instrument and occasion of his sin; and principally by the just judgment of God, both upon Amnon and David, that so the sin might be made public, and way made for the succeeding tragedies; for otherwise it would probably produce love and kindness to her, as it did in another, Gen. xxxiv. 2, 3; especially in him, whom both nature, and interest, and even lust itself, obliged to allay her grief and shame by all possible demonstrations of kindness.

16 And she said unto him, There is no cause: this evil in sending me away is greater than the other that thou didst unto me. But he would not hearken unto her.

There is no cause, to wit, given thee by me. This evil is greater than the other: this she might truly say, because though the other was in itself a greater sin, yet this was an act of greater inhumanity and barbarous cruelty, and a greater wrong and calamity to her, (which she means by evil,) because it exposed her to public infamy and contempt, as if she had been an impudent strumpet, and had either enticed him to the sin, or at least consented to it; and besides, it turned a private offence into a public scandal, to the great dishonour of God and of his people Israel, and especially of all the royal family, and was likely to cause direful passions, and breaches, and mischiefs among them.

17 Then he called his servant that ministered unto him, and said, Put now this woman out from me, and bolt the door after her.

18 And she had a garment of divers colours upon her: for with such robes were the king's daughters that were virgins apparelled. Then his servant brought her out, and bolted the door after her.

Of divers colours; of embroidered work. Compare Gen. xxxvii. 3.

19 ¶ And Tamar put ashes on her head, and rent her garment of divers colours that was on her, and laid her hand on her head, and went on crying.

Put ashes on her head, and rent her garment; to signify her grief for some calamity which had befallen her, and what that was concurring circumstances did easily discover. Laid her hand on her head, in token of grief and shame, as if she were unable and ashamed to show her face. See Jer. ii. 37. Went on crying, to manifest her abhorrency of the fact, and that it was not done by her consent.

† Heb. Amnon.

† Heb. set not thine heart. † Heb. and desolate.

Been with thee, i. e. lain with thee. Behold, and imitate the modesty of Scripture expressions. He is thy brother; therefore thou must forgive and forget the injury; therefore thy disgracing of him will be a blot to us all; therefore thou wilt not get right from David against him, because he is as near and dear to him as thou; therefore thy dishonour is the less, because thou wast not abused by any mean person, but by a king's son; therefore this evil must be borne, because it cannot be revenged. And thus he covers his design of taking vengeance upon him at the first opportunity. Regard not this thing, so as to torment thyself. Desolate; neglected and forsaken by others, none now seeking her in marriage; and through shame and dejection of mind, giving herself up to solitude and retirement.

21 ¶ But when king David heard of all these things, he was very wroth.

To wit, with Amnon; whom yet he did not punish, at least so severely as he should; either from the conscience of his own guilt in the like kind; or from that foolish indulgence which he oft showed to his children; or because the case was perplexed; for if he had been put to death for the fact, by virtue of that law, Deut. xxii. 23, 24, she also, who was innocent, must have died with him, because she did not cry out; although indeed that law did not reach the present case, Tamar not being betrothed to a husband: and for the following law concerning a virgin not betrothed, that could have no place here: he could not force Amnon to marry Tamar, because that marriage had been incestuous.

22 And Absalom spake unto his brother Amnon neither good nor bad: for Absalom hated Amnon, because he had forced his sister Tamar.

Absalom spake unto his brother Amnon neither good nor bad, i. e. he said nothing at all to him, to wit, about that business. It is a synecdochical expression, used in like manner, Gen. xxxi. 24. He neither debated it with him, nor threatened him for it; but seemed willing to cover it, and pass it by with brotherly kindness. For if he had wholly forborne all discourse and converse with him, it would have raised great jealousies in Amnon and David, and hindered him in his intended and desired revenge. For Absalom hated Amnon; or rather, but, or though Absalom, as the Hebrew particle chi commonly signifies; for the following clause is not added as a reason of the former, but by way of exception or opposition. Though he outwardly expressed no dislike of the fact, yet he inwardly hated him.

1030. 23 ¶ And it came to pass after two full years, that Absalom had sheepshearers in Baal-hazor, which is beside Ephraim: and Absalom invited all the king's sons.

After two full years: this circumstance of time is noted, partly as an aggravation of Absalom's malice, which was so inveterate and implacable; and partly as an act of Absalom's policy, that both Amnon and David might more securely comply with his desires, as being now free from all suspicion of revenge. Absalom had sheep-shearers, according to the manner of those ancient times, when princes did not give themselves up to sloth and luxury, but spent their time and pains in some honest employment. Ephraim; either, first, The city called Ephraim, or Ephrem, John xi. 54. Or, secondly, The tribe of Ephraim, towards or nigh unto which this place was situate.

24 And Absalom came to the king, and said, Behold now, thy servant hath sheepshearers; let the king, I beseech thee, and his servants go with thy servant.

To the feast, which was usual upon those occasions. See Gen. xxxviii. 12; 1 Sam. xxv. 7, 11.

25 And the king said to Absalom, Nay, my son, let us not all now go, lest we be chargeable unto thee. And he pressed him: howbeit he would not go, but blessed him.

He pressed him; pretending great desire of his presence there, to prevent any jealousies, which otherwise he thought would arise in the breast of a king so wise and experienced, and under the expectation of God's dreadful judgments to be inflicted upon his family. Blessed him; dismissed him with thanks for his kindness, and with his fatherly blessing.

26 Then said Absalom, If not, I pray thee, let my brother Amnon go with us. And the king said unto him, Why should he go with thee?

Let my brother Amnon go with us; for the king designed (as the following words show) to keep him at home with him, as being his eldest son, and heir of his kingdom; otherwise Absalom would never have made particular mention of him, which now he was forced to do. Nor did this desire of Amnon's presence want specious pretences, as that seeing the king would not, he who was next to him might, honour him with his company; and that this might be a manifest and public token of that love and friendship which was between him and his brother, notwithstanding the former occasion of difference.

27 But Absalom pressed him, that he let Amnon and all the king's sons go with him.

It is strange that his urgent desire of Amnon's company raised no suspicion in so wise a king; but God blinded his mind, that he might execute his judgments upon David, and bring upon Amnon the just punishment of his lewdness.

28 ¶ Now Absalom had commanded his servants, saying, Mark ye now when Amnon's heart is merry with wine, and when I say unto you, Smite Amnon; then kill him, fear not: I have not I commanded you? be courageous, and be † valiant.

r Judg. 19, 6, 8, 22. Ruth 3, 7. 1 Sam. 25, 36. Esth. 1, 10. Ps. 104, 15. ¶ Or, will you not, since I have commanded you? † Heb. sons of valour.

When Amnon's heart is merry with wine; when he least suspects, and will be most unable to prevent the evil. Have not I commanded you; I who am the king's son, and, when Amnon is gone, his heir; who therefore shall easily obtain pardon for you, and will liberally reward you?

29 And the servants of Absalom did unto Amnon as Absalom had commanded. Then all the king's sons arose, and every man † gat him up upon his mule, and fled.

Mules were in use amongst the Israelites. See 1 Kings i. 33. For though they might not promote such mixed kinds of procreation, Lev. xix. 19, yet they might use creatures so engendered.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, while they were in the way, that tidings came to David, saying, Absalom hath slain all the king's sons, and there is not one of them left.

Which was not improbable, when the sword was once drawn among them, and one of them killed, which might provoke the rest to draw their swords, both to defend themselves, and to revenge their brother's death, and thereby occasion the death of all. And God suffered this false report to be spread for David's greater terror and humiliation, that he who had formerly rejoiced in the tidings of Uriah's death, might now be tormented with the report of the death of all his sons.

31 Then the king arose, and tare his garments, and lay on the earth; and all his servants stood by with their clothes rent.

32 And Jonadab, the son of Shimeah David's brother, answered and said, Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the young men the king's sons; for Amnon only is dead: for by the appointment of Absalom this hath been † Heb. mouth.

1 Or, settled. || determined from the day that he forced his sister Tamar.

Jonadab was a man of great craft and subtlety, and one that had exact knowledge of Amnon's fact, and of Absalom's temper. By the appointment, or, by the command; Heb. mouth, put for command, Numb. iii. 16. From the day; it was resolved from that time in his breast; but the word of command was not then given to others, for that would probably have hindered his design. But all this he seems to have spoken from a probable conjecture, rather than of certain knowledge, as appears by the sequel.

x ch. 19. 19. 33 Now therefore ² let not my lord the king take the thing to his heart, to think that all the king's sons are dead: for Amnon only is dead.

y ver. 32. 34 ¹ But Absalom fled. And the young man that kept the watch lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came much people by the way of the hill side behind him.

Absalom fled; he who had undertaken to defend his servants flees or his own life. Behind him; behind the watchman; for it seems they did not come in the direct road, where the watchman looked for them, but (for some reason or fancy they had) fetched a compass, and came that way which he least expected them.

35 And Jonadab said unto the king, Behold, the king's sons come: † as thy servant said, so it is.

36 And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of speaking, that, behold, the king's sons came, and lifted up their voice and wept: and the king also and all his servants wept † very sore.

37 ¶ But Absalom fled, and went to ² Talmai, the son of † Ammihud, king of Geshur. And David mourned for his son every day.

Talmai, the son of Ammihud; his mother's father, 2 Sam. iii. 3; that he might have present protection and sustenance from him; and that by his mediation he might obtain his father's pardon and favour.

38 So Absalom fled, and went to ² Geshur, and was there three years.

39 And the soul of king David † longed to go forth unto Absalom: for he was ^b comforted concerning Amnon, seeing he was dead.

To go forth unto Absalom, to wit, to visit him, or to send for him. And thus this word the soul is here understood, partly from the Hebrew verb, which being of the feminine gender, agrees not with David, but with David's soul; and partly by comparing this with other places, where the same verb is used, and the soul expressed, as Psal. lxxxiv. 2; cxix. 81. But as this supplement may seem too bold, so this version seems not so well to agree with that phrase of going out to Absalom; for David neither desired nor intended to go out to Absalom, but that Absalom should come home to him. And these words may be and are otherwise rendered, by the most ancient and remarkable interpreters, to this purpose; And king David made an end of going out (to wit, in an hostile manner, as that verb is oft used, Gen. xiv. 18; 2 Sam. xi. 1) against (for so the Hebrew particle el is oft used, as Jer. xxxiv. 7; Ezek. xiii. 9, 20; Amos vii. 15) Absalom; i. e. having used some, though it is probable but cold and remiss, endeavours to pursue after Absalom, and to fetch him from his grandfather's to receive condign punishment, he now gave over thoughts of it. Thus the same verb, and that in the same conjugation, is used in the same manner, 1 Kings iii. 1, he made an end of building. It is to be objected, That the Hebrew verb is of the feminine gender, and therefore doth not agree with king David, which is masculine. It may be answered, That enalage of genders is a most frequent figure; and as the masculine gender is sometimes applied to women when they do some manly and gallant action, Exod. i. 21, so the feminine gender is sometimes used of men when they show an effeminate tenderness in their disposition; which is the case here, as some learned Hebricians have noted.

CHAP. XIV.

Joab enberning a widow of Tekoah by a parable to incline the king's heart to fetch home Absalom, bringeth him to Jerusalem, but not into David's sight, 1—24. Absalom's beauty, hair, and children, 25—27. After two years Joab bringeth him into the king's presence, 28—33.

NOW Joab the son of Zeruiah perceived ^{1027.} that the king's heart was ^a toward Absalom. ^{a ch. 13. 39.}

He desired to see him, but was ashamed to show kindness to one whom God's law and his own conscience obliged him to punish; and wanted a fair pretence, which therefore Joab gave him.

2 And Joab sent to ^b Tekoah, and ^{b 2 Chron. 11. 6.} fetched thence a wise woman, and said unto her, I pray thee, feign thyself to be a mourner, ^c and put on now mourning apparel, and anoint not thyself with oil, but be as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead: ^{c See Ruth 3. 3.}

Tekoah; a city of Judah, 2 Chron. xi. 5, 6. One of Jerusalem was not convenient, lest the king might know the person, or search out the business. And besides, this woman seems to be of great eminency for her wisdom, as the following discourse manifests. A wise woman, rather than a man, because women can more easily express their passions, and do sooner procure pity in their miseries, and an answer to their requests. Anoint not thyself with oil; as they used to do when they were out of a mourning state. See Ruth iii. 3; Matt. vi. 17.

There was none to part them; and therefore there is no witness, either that he killed him, or how he killed him, whether from some sudden passion and great provocation, or in his own necessary defence, or otherwise. Slew him; as the avengers of blood report.

7 And, behold, ^h the whole family is risen against thine handmaid, and they said, Deliver him that smote his brother, that we may kill him, for the life of his brother whom he slew; and we will destroy the heir also: and so they shall quench my coal which is left, and shall not leave to my husband neither name nor remainder † upon the earth. ^{h Num. 35. 19. much from love of justice, as from a covetous desire to deprive him of the inheritance, and to transfer it to themselves; which self-interest might justly render their testimony suspected. Or perhaps these words are not spoken as the express words of the prosecutors, (who can hardly be thought so directly to express a sinister design,) but as the woman's inference or comment upon what they were doing, (for this would be indeed the result of it, though they did not say so in express words,) thereby to represent her case as the more deserving pity. My coal which is left; the poor remainder of my light and comfort, by whom alone my hopes may be revived and repaired. To my husband; she names him rather than herself, because children bear the names of their fathers, not of their mothers.

8 And the king said unto the woman, Go to thine house, and I will give charge concerning thee.

That thy cause may be justly and truly examined, and thy son preserved from their unjust and malicious proceedings.

9 And the woman of Tekoah said unto the king, My lord, O king, ¹the iniquity be on me, and on my father's house: ²and the king and his throne be guiltless.

The sense is, either, first, this, If I do not inform thee aright, and thou thereby be drawn to give an unrighteous sentence on my behalf, I am willing to bear the whole blame of it before God, and men; I acknowledge thou art wholly innocent in the case. Compare Gen. xxvii. 13. Or, secondly, this, If through thy forgetfulness or neglect of this my just cause, my adversaries prevail and destroy my son, my desire is, that God would not lay it to the king's charge, but rather to me and mine, so the king may be exempted thereby. Whereby she both insinuates her great esteem of and affection for the king, thereby winning upon him to compass her design; and withal implies that such an omission of the king's will bring guilt upon him; and yet most prudently and decently orders her phrase so as not to seem to blame or threaten the king. Compare Exod. v. 16; 2 Sam. xx. 16. This sense seems best to agree with David's answer, which shows that she desired some further assurance of the king's care and justice in her concern.

10 And the king said, Whosoever saith ought unto thee, bring him to me, and he shall not touch thee any more.

i. e. So as to hurt or molest thee, by pursuing thy son.

11 Then said she, I pray thee, let the king remember the Lord thy God, [†]that thou wouldest not suffer ¹the revengers of blood to destroy any more, lest they destroy my son. And he said, ^mAs the Lord liveth, there shall not one hair of thy son fall to the earth.

Let the king remember the Lord thy God: the sense is, either, first, Make mention (as this Hebrew verb is oft rendered) of the name of the Lord thy God, to wit, in an oath, i. e. swear to me by God, that thou wilt protect me and my son against the revenger of blood; for so David did in compliance with this desire of hers. Only she was forced to express her mind in more general and ambiguous terms, because it had been presumption and rudeness for her in plain terms to desire the king's oath, as if she durst not trust his word; yet withal she insinuates her meaning so plainly that the king understood it; and yet so handsomely and elegantly, that the king was much pleased with her wisdom, and thereby inclined to grant her request. Or, secondly, this, Remember the gracious nature of thy God, who is not too severe and rigorous to mark at all that is amiss, nor doth cut off every man-slayer, as appears from Numb. xxxv., and from the example of Cain, and from thyself, O king; though this she expresseth not, but only useth such words which she knew would give so wise and good a king occasion to reflect upon himself, and upon the goodness of God in sparing him, though a wilful murderer, that thereby he might be obliged to imitate God, in sparing the person whom she designed. Or, thirdly, this, Remember the Lord in whose presence thou hast made me this promise, and who will be a witness against thee, if thou breakest it. That thou wouldest not suffer the revengers of blood to destroy any more, Heb. lest the avenger of blood multiply to destroy, i. e. lest they cause one destruction to another, and add my surviving son to him who is slain already. Or, lest thou dost multiply avengers of blood to destroy, i. e. lest by thy connivance at their cruel and malicious proceedings against my son, thou dost encourage avengers of blood to the like furious practices, and thereby increase the number of that sort of men, and upon that pretence occasion multitudes of murders. Lest they destroy my son; or, and let them not destroy my son; the future tense being put for the imperative mood, as is frequent. There shall not one hair of thy son fall to the earth, i. e. he shall not suffer the least damage. We have the same phrase used 1 Sam. xiv. 45; 1 Kings i. 52; Acts xxvii. 34: compare Matt. x. 30.

12 Then the woman said, Let thine handmaid, I pray thee, speak one word unto my lord the king. And he said, Say on.

Having obliged the king by his oath in her supposed case, she now throws off the veil, and begins to apply this parable to the king's and kingdom's present case.

13 And the woman said, Wherefore then hast thou thought such a thing against ⁿthe people of God? for the king ^odoth speak this thing as one which is faulty, in that the king doth not fetch home again ^phis banished.

If thou wouldest not permit the avengers of blood to molest me, or to destroy my son, who are but two persons; how unreasonable is it that thou shouldst proceed in thy endeavours to avenge Amnon's blood upon Absalom, whose death would be highly injurious and grievous to the whole commonwealth of Israel, all whose eyes are upon him as the heir of the crown, and a wise, and valiant, and amiable person, unhappy only in this one act of killing Amnon, which was done upon a high and heinous provocation, and whereof thou thyself didst give the occasion, by permitting Amnon to go unpunished! The king doth speak this thing as one which is faulty; by thy word, and promise, and oath given to me for thy son, thou condemnest thyself for not allowing the same equity towards thy own son. His banished, to wit, Absalom, from that heathenish country, where he is in evident danger of being infected with their idolatry and other vices; which is likely to be a great and public mischief to all thy people, if he come to reign in thy stead, which he is very likely to do. It is true, there was a considerable disparity between her son's and Absalom's case, the one being a rash and sudden action, the other a deliberate and premeditated murder; but that may seem to be balanced in some measure, partly by Amnon's great and lasting provocation, and principally by the vast difference between a private injury, which was her case, and a public calamity and grievance, which she affirmed, and the king easily believed, was Absalom's case: and what David said in the case of Joab's murder of Abner, that he could not revenge it, because the sons of Zeruiah were too hard for him, 2 Sam. iii. 39; the like peradventure might have been said in this case, where the people's hearts may seem to have been universally and vehemently set upon Absalom, and the rather, because his long banishment moved their pity, and his absence made him more desirable, as it frequently happens among people; and therefore it might really be out of the king's power to punish him; and so he might seem to be obliged to spare him for the common safety of his whole kingdom.

14 For we ^qmust needs die, and are as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again; ^rneither doth God respect any person: yet doth he ^sdevise means, that his banished be not expelled from him.

We must needs die, Heb. in dying we shall die, i. e. we shall certainly and suddenly die all of us; both thou, O king, who therefore art obliged to take due care of thy successor, who is Absalom; and Absalom, who, if he do not die by the hand of justice, must shortly die by the necessity of nature; and Amnon too must have died in the common way of all flesh, if Absalom had not cut him off. Therefore, O king, be not implacable towards Absalom for nipping a flower a little before its time of fading, and restore him to us all before he die in a strange land. Spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again; which is quickly drunk up and buried in the earth, and cannot be recovered. Neither doth God respect any person, to wit, so far as to exempt him from this common law of dying. But this version seems not to agree with the Scripture phrase; for the accepting of a person is never to my knowledge expressed in Hebrew by nasa nephesh, which is the phrase here, but by nasa panim, every where. The words therefore may be rendered either thus, yet God will not take away, or doth not use to take away, (the future tense of noting a continued act, as Hebricians observe,) the soul, or souls, or lives of men, to wit, by violence. God doth not severely and instantly cut off offenders, but suffers them to live till they die by the course of nature; and therefore so shouldst thou do too. Or rather thus yet God hath not taken away his soul or life; the pronoun his being understood here as it is in many other places, and as being easily supplied out of the context. So the sense is, God hath hitherto spared him, and did not suffer his brethren to kill him, as in reason might have been expected; nor hath God himself yet cut him off for his murder, as he oft doth with persons who are out of the magistrate's reach; but hath hitherto preserved him even in a heathenish land; all which are intimations that God would have him spared. Yet doth he devise means, that his banished be not expelled from him; or, but hath devised means, &c., i. e. hath given laws to this purpose, that the man-slayer who is banished should not always continue in banishment, but upon the high priest's death return to his own city; whereby he hath showed his pleasure that the avenger of blood should not implacably persist in seeking revenge, and that the man-slayer should be spared. Or rather thus, but thinketh thoughts, or, but hath designed, or, therefore he intendeth that he who is banished (to wit, Absalom) be not (always) expelled or banished from him, i. e. from God and from his people, and from the place of his worship, but that he should return home to him. So the sense is, that God, by sparing Absalom's life in the midst of dangers, did sufficiently intimate that he would in due time bring him back to his land and people.

15 Now therefore that I am come to speak of this thing unto my lord the king, it is because the people have made me afraid: and thy handmaid said, I will now speak unto the king; it may be that the king will perform the request of his handmaid.

It is because the people have made me afraid; the truth is, I was even forced to this bold address to thee by the disposition and condition of thy people, who are discontented at Absalom's perpetual banishment, and full of fears; either lest, upon thy death, which none knoweth how soon it may happen, they should be involved in a civil war about thy successor; or lest, in the mean time, if Absalom by his father-in-law's assistance invade the land, and endeavour by force to regain and secure his right to the succession, the people, who have a great opinion of him, and kindness for him, and think he is very hardly used, should take up arms for him; or lest he who is thy heir and successor should by continual and familiar conversation with heathens be insnared in their errors, or alienated from the true religion, and from God's worship, from which he is now utterly excluded. And thy handmaid said, or, therefore thy handmaid said; either within myself, i. e. I intended; or to the people, to quiet them.

16 For the king will hear, to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of the man that would destroy me and my son together out of the inheritance of God.

For I know the king is so wise and just, that I assure myself of audience and acceptance; which expectation of hers is cunningly insinuated here, that the king might conceive himself obliged to answer it, and not to disappoint her hope, nor to forfeit that good opinion which his subjects now had of him. To deliver his handmaid out of the hand of the man; to grant my request concerning my son, and consequently the people's petition concerning Absalom. Me and my son; implying that her life was bound up in the life of her son, and that she could not outlive his death; (and supposing, it is like, that it might be David's case also, and would therefore touch him in a tender part, though it were not proper to say it expressly;) and thereby suggesting that the tranquillity, safety, and comfort of the people of Israel depended upon Absalom's restitution, and the settlement of the succession in him. Out of the inheritance of God, i. e. out of that inheritance which God hath given to me and mine; or out of that land which God gave to his people to be their inheritance and possession, and in which alone God hath settled the place of his presence and worship; whereby she intimates the danger of Absalom's living in a state of separation from God and his house, and amongst idolaters.

17 Then thine handmaid said, The word of my lord the king shall now be †comfortable: for †as an angel of God, so is my lord the king †to discern good and bad: therefore the LORD thy God will be with thee.

The word of my lord the king shall now be comfortable; I doubt not the king will give a gracious and satisfactory answer to my petition. As an angel of God, to wit, in wisdom, and justice, and goodness. To discern good and bad; to hear and judge of causes and requests, whether they be just, and good, and fit to be granted, as mine is; or unrighteous, and unreasonable, and fit to be rejected. So she intimates her confidence in the justice of her cause, and thereby confirms the king in his purpose and promise to grant her request, and withal arms the king against the suggestions of them who should advise him to a rigorous execution of God's law against Absalom, and be ready to censure him for restoring Absalom, and this for want of that angelical wisdom which the king had, who wisely considered many things far above their reach. Therefore; because thou art so wise, and just, and pitiful, and gracious to those who in strict justice deserve punishment. The LORD thy God will be with thee; God will own and stand by thee in this thy act of grace; or, God will prosper thee in thy enterprises; or, at least, not be offended with thee.

18 Then the king answered and said unto the woman, Hide not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I shall ask thee. And the woman said, Let my lord the king now speak.

19 And the king said, Is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this? And the woman answered and said, As thy soul liveth, my lord the king, none can turn to the right hand or to the left from ought that my lord the king hath spoken: for thy servant Joab, he bade me, and †he put all these words in the mouth of †ver. 3. thine handmaid:

Is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this? hast thou not said and done this by Joab's direction and contrivance? None can turn to the right hand or to the left from ought that my lord the king hath spoken: as the king is so wise that no man can deceive him by any turnings or windings to the right or left hand, but he quickly searcheth out the truth in every thing; so, (it is a folly to dissemble, or go about to conceal it,) it is even so, thou hast now discovered the truth of this business. He put all these words in the mouth of thine handmaid, to wit, for the scope and substance of them, but not as to all the expressions which she used, for these were to be varied as the king's answer gave occasion, which also she did with singular prudence.

20 To fetch about this form of speech hath thy servant Joab done this thing: and my lord is wise, †according to the †ver. 17. ch. 19. 27.

wisdom of an angel of God, to know all things that are in the earth.

To fetch about this form of speech, i. e. to propose mine, and his, and the people's desire of Absalom's restitution in this parabolical manner, in mine and my son's person. In the earth, or, in this land, in all thy kingdom; all the counsels and devices of thy subjects which have any relation to thee or thy affairs.

21 ¶ And the king said unto Joab, Behold now, I have done this thing: go therefore, bring the young man Absalom again.

I have done this thing, in compliance with thy desire; although in truth it was according to his own desire. He overlooks the woman in this grant, because she was but Joab's instrument in it. The young man; by which expression he mitigates his crime, as being an act of youthful heat, and folly, and rashness.

22 And Joab fell to the ground on his face, and bowed himself, and † thanked the king: and Joab said, To day thy servant knoweth that I have found grace in thy sight, my lord, O king, in that the king hath fulfilled the request of ¶ his servant.

i. e. Restored Absalom at my request; whereby Joab thought to establish himself for ever, and that he should be both the father's and the son's favourite. Quest. Whether David did well in granting this request? Answ. Although there be some circumstances which in part extenuate David's fault herein, as Amnon's high provocation of Absalom; Absalom's being out of the reach of David's justice, where also he could and would have kept himself, if David had not promised him impunity; the extreme danger of Absalom's infection by heathenish principles and practices; the safety of David's kingdom, which seemed to depend upon the establishment of the succession, and that upon Absalom, to whom the hearts of the people were so universally and vehemently inclined, if the matter was really so, and not pretended or magnified by the art of this subtle woman: yet it seems most probable that David was faulty herein, because this action was directly contrary to the express laws of God, which strictly command the supreme magistrate to execute justice upon all wilful murderers, without any reservation, Gen. ix. 6; Numb. xxxv. 30, 31. And David had no power to dispense with God's laws, nor to spare any whom God commanded him to destroy; for the laws of God did bind the kings and rulers as well as the people of Israel to observe and obey them, as is most evident from Deut. xvii. 18, 19, and from Josh. i. 8, and many other places. And indeed we may read David's sin in the glass of those tremendous judgments of God which befell him, by means of his indulgence to Absalom. For although God's providences be in themselves no rule to judge of the good or evil of men's actions; yet where they comply with God's word, and accomplish his threatenings, as here they did, they are to be taken for the tokens of God's displeasure.

u ch. 13. 37. 23 So Joab arose and went to Geshur, and brought Absalom to Jerusalem.

24 And the king said, Let him turn to his own house, and let him *not see my face. So Absalom returned to his own house, and saw not the king's face.

Let him not see my face; lest whilst he showed some mercy to Absalom, he should seem to approve of his sin, and thereby wound his own conscience, and lose his honour, and encourage him and others to such-like attempts; and that by this means Absalom might be drawn to a more thorough humiliation and true repentance.

25 ¶ † But in all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty: † from the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head there was no blemish in him.

This is here noted as the occasion of his pride and insolency, and of the people's affections to him, and consequently of the following rebellion.

26 And when he polled his head, (for it was at every year's end that he polled it: because the hair was heavy on him, therefore he polled it:) he weighed the hair of his head at two hundred shekels after the king's weight.

Whereas ordinarily the hair of a man's head which grows in a year's space comes not to half so much. But some men's hair grows much faster, and is much heavier, than others. But others understand this not of the weight, but of the price of his hair, which was sold by him that polled it at that rate.

27 And † unto Absalom there were born ^{See ch. 18. 18.} three sons, and one daughter, whose name was Tamar: she was a woman of a fair countenance.

Three sons; all which died not long after they were born, as may be gathered from chap. xviii. 18, where it is said that Absalom had no son. Tamar; so called from her aunt, chap. xiii. 1.

28 ¶ So Absalom dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, and saw not the king's ^{a ver. 24.} face.

29 Therefore Absalom sent for Joab, to have sent him to the king; but he would not come to him: and when he sent again the second time, he would not come.

To have sent him to the king; that by his mediation he might be admitted into the king's favour and presence. He would not come; partly, because perceiving David's affections to be cold to Absalom, he would not venture his own interest for him, especially in desiring that which he feared he should be denied; partly, lest by interceding further for Absalom, he should revive the remembrance of his former murder, and meet with the reproach of one murderer's interceding for another; and partly, because by converse with Absalom he observed his temper to be such, that if once he were fully restored to the king's favour, he would not only eclipse and oppose Joab's interest and power with the king, but also attempt high things, not without danger to the king and kingdom, as it happened.

30 Therefore he said unto his servants, See, Joab's field is † near mine, and he ^{+ Heb. near my place.} hath barley there; go and set it on fire. And Absalom's servants set the field on fire.

Go and set it on fire, that Joab may be forced to come to me to complain of, and demand reparations for, this injury.

31 Then Joab arose, and came to Absalom unto his house, and said unto him, Wherefore have thy servants set my field on fire?

32 And Absalom answered Joab, Behold, I sent unto thee, saying, Come hither, that I may send thee to the king, to say, Wherefore am I come from Geshur? it had been good for me to have been there still: now therefore let me see the king's face; and if there be any iniquity in me, let him kill me.

It had been good for me to have been there still, rather than here, because my estrangement from him now when I am so near to him is both more grievous and more shameful to me. But the truth of the business was this, Absalom saw that his father had accomplished his design in bringing him thither, having satisfied both his own natural affection, and his people's desire of Absalom's return from banishment; but that he could not without restitution into the king's presence and favour compass his design, i. e. confirm and improve that interest which he saw he had in the people's hearts. Let him kill me; for it is better for me to die, than to want the sight and favour of my dear father. Thus he insinuates himself into his father's affections, by pretending such respect and love to him. It seems that by this time Absalom having so far recovered his father's fa-

33 So Joab came to the king, and told him : and when he had called for Absalom, he came to the king, and bowed himself on his face to the ground before the king : and the king ^bkissed Absalom.

In testimony of his thorough reconciliation to him; which Absalom did very ill requite, as the next chapter manifesteth.

CHAP. XV.

Absalom stealeth the hearts of Israel, 1—6. Under pretence of a vow obtaineth leave to go to Hebron: there with Ahithophel's aid he conspires to be king, 7—12. David fleeth from Jerusalem with all his men; leaveth ten of his concubines, 13—37.

a ch. 12. 11. b 1 Kin. 1. 5.
AND *it came to pass after this, that Absalom ^bprepared him chariots and horses, and fifty men to run before him.

As being the king's eldest son, now Amnon was dead; for Chileab, who was his eldest brother, 2 Sam. iii. 3, was either dead, or manifestly incapable of the government. And this course he knew would draw the eyes and minds of people to him, and make them conclude that David intended him for his successor.

2 And Absalom rose up early, and stood beside the way of the gate : and it was so, that when any man that had a controversy † came to the king for judgment, then Absalom called unto him, and said, Of what city art thou? And he said, Thy servant is of one of the tribes of Israel.

† Heb. to come.
Rose up early; thereby making a show of self-denial, and diligence, and solicitude for the good of the public, and of every private person, as he had opportunity. Beside the way of the gate; either, first, Of the king's palace. Or rather, secondly, Of the city; for that was the place of judicature or judgment, for which these men came. Absalom called unto him, preventing him with the offers of his assistance. Of what city art thou? as if he were ready to make particular inquiry into the state of his cause. Of one of the tribes of Israel; or rather, of one city (which word is easily understood out of the foregoing question) of the tribes of Israel, i. e. of an Israelitish city, either this or that; of such or such a city.

3 And Absalom said unto him, See, thy matters are good and right; but || there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee.

|| Or, none will hear thee from the king downward.
They matters are good and right: upon some very slight hearing of their case he approved it, that he might oblige all. No man deputed of the king to hear thee, to wit, none such as will do thee justice. The other sons and relations of the king, and the rest of the judges and rulers under him and them, are wholly corrupted, and swayed by favour or bribes; or, at least, not careful and diligent, as they should be; and my father being grown in years, is negligent of public affairs, leaving them wholly to their conduct.

c Judg. 9. 29.
4 Absalom said moreover, ° Oh that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any suit or cause might come unto me, and I would do him justice!

Oh that I were made judge in the land! for the king had only restored Absalom to favour, but thought not fit to put him into any place of power and trust. I would do him justice; I should refuse no man, and decline no pains to do any man good. So he pretends to a very public spirit.

5 And it was so, that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeisance, he put forth his hand, and took him, and kissed him.

Putting on the garb of singular humanity and good will to all men; for that seems to have been a ceremony in frequent use in those times of showing respect, as pulling off the hat, and bowing, or embracing, is at this day with us.

6 And on this manner did Absalom to all Israel that came to the king for judgment: ^dso Absalom stole the hearts of ^{d Rom. 16. 18.} the men of Israel.

i. e. He secretly and subtly undermined his father, and robbed his father of the good opinions and affections of his people, that he might gain them to himself, by such insinuations into their affections, by his plausible and over-civil carriage.

7 ¶ And it came to pass ^eafter forty ^{1023.} years, that Absalom said unto the king, ^{e 1 Sam. 16. 1.} I pray thee, let me go and pay my vow, which I have vowed unto the LORD, in Hebron.

After forty years. Quest. Whence are these to be computed? Answ. Not from Absalom's birth; for he was born in Hebron some considerable time after David had begun his reign, 2 Sam. iii. 3, much less from the time of his vow made, or of his return from banishment; but either, first, From the time of David's election or designation to the kingdom, 1 Sam. xvi. 13. Or, secondly, From the beginning of Saul's reign; which being a solemn time, and observable for the change of the government in Israel, might very fitly be made an epocha, from which the computation or account of times begin; as the Greeks and Romans began their accounts in the same manner, and upon the same ground. Or rather, thirdly, From the beginning of David's reign, who reigned forty years; and so the words may be rendered, about or towards the end of forty years, i. e. in the beginning of the fortieth year. And so this very phrase is used Deut. xv. 1, At the end of every seven years, i. e. in the seventh year, even from the beginning of it, as is manifested and confessed. So in a like expression, After three days will I rise again, Mark viii. 31, i. e. on the beginning of the third day, when Christ did rise; the number of three days being then completed when the third day is begun. And the forty years are here expressed as one motive or inducement to Absalom to rebel, because now his father's end grew near; and one of the Hebrew doctors affirms, that there was a tradition, or rumour, or prediction, that David should reign but forty years. And Absalom might easily understand that David intended to decline him, and to make Solomon his successor, as well by the conscience of his own wickedness and unfitness for so great a trust, as by that eminent wisdom and piety which appeared in Solomon in his tender years, and that great respect and affection which his father must needs have and manifest to him upon this account, and by that promise and oath given to Bathsheba concerning his succession mentioned 1 Kings i. 30, but made before that time, which also might come to Absalom's ear. Against this opinion two things are objected: first, That David was in the time of this rebellion a strong man, for he marched on foot, ver. 30, whereas in his last year he was very infirm and bedrid. Secondly, That after this rebellion was ended divers other things happened, as the three years' famine, 2 Sam. xxi. 1, and other things following in the history. But it may be answered to the first, that David might in the beginning of his last year have so much strength and vigour left as to march on foot, especially when he did so humble and afflict himself, as it is apparent he did, ver. 30; and yet through his tedious marches, and the tormenting cares, fears, and griefs of his soul for Absalom, might be so strangely and suddenly impaired, as in the end of the same year to be very feeble and bedrid, it being a very common accident, especially in old men, and upon extraordinary occasions, to languish and decline exceedingly, and to fall from some competent degree of health and vigour, to be very infirm and bedrid, and that in the space of a few months. And to the second objection, That those histories related chap. xxi. &c., though they be placed after this rebellion, yet indeed were done before it; the proof of which see on chap. xxi. 1. For it is so confessed and evident, that things are not always placed in the same order in which they were done, that it is a rule of the Hebrews, and approved by other learned men, Non datur prius et posterius in Sacris literis; that is, There is no first and last in the order of Scripture relations. And here is a plain reason for this transplacing of this history, which is allowed in other like cases, that when once the history of Tamar's rape had been mentioned, it was very fit to subjoin the relation of all the mischiefs which followed upon that occasion. If any infidel will yet cavil with this text and number of years, let him know, that instead of forty, the Syriac, and Arabic, and Josephus the Jew read four years; and that it is much more rational to acknowledge an error of the scribe, who copied out the sacred text, than upon so frivolous a ground to question the Divine authority of the Holy Scriptures. And that some men choose the latter way rather than the former, is an evidence that they are infidels by the choice of their wills, more than by the strength of their reasons. Let me go and pay my vow: he pretends piety, which he knew would please his father, and easily procure his consent. Hebron is mentioned as the place, not where the vow was made, for that was at Geshur, ver. 8, but where he intended to perform it. The pretence for which was, that he was born in this place, 2 Sam. iii. 3, and that here was a famous high place; and, till the temple was built, it was permitted to sacrifice upon the high places.

^f 1 Sam. 16. ² g Gen. 28. ^{20, 21.} h ch. 13. 38. 8 For thy servant ^evowed a vow ^h while I abode at Geshur in Syria, saying, If the Lord shall bring me again indeed to Jerusalem, then I will serve the Lord.

i. e. Worship him by the offering of sacrifices of thanksgiving to God, for restoring me to the place of his presence and service, and to my father's favour. But why should not this service have been performed at Zion, or at Gibeon? Here was some ground of suspicion; but God blinded David's eyes, that he might bring upon David and upon Absalom the judgments which they deserved, and he designed.

9 And the king said unto him, Go in peace. So he arose, and went to Hebron.

This place he chose, as being an eminent city, and next to Jerusalem, the chief of the tribe of Judah, and the place of his birth, and the place where his father began his kingdom, which he took for a good omen, and where it is probable that he had secured many friends, and which was at some convenient distance from Jerusalem, that his father could not suddenly reach him.

10 ¶ But Absalom sent spies throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, As soon as ye hear the sound of the trumpet, then ye shall say, Absalom reigneth in Hebron.

Absalom sent from Hebron; or, had sent from Jerusalem; that when he went to Hebron, they should go into the several tribes to sift the people, and to dispose them to Absalom's party, and acquaint them with his success. As soon as ye hear the sound of the trumpet; which I shall take care to have sounded in several parts by other persons; and when that is done, you shall inform them of the reason of it. Or, as soon as you understand that the trumpet was sounded at Hebron; partly to call the people together for my assistance; and partly to celebrate my inauguration to the kingdom, which you shall speedily know by messengers whom I shall send to you to that end.

11 And with Absalom went two hundred men out of Jerusalem, that were called; and they went ^hin their simplicity, and they knew not any thing.

That were called; such as Absalom had picked out as fit for his purpose; such as were of some quality and reputation with the king and people, which would give a great countenance to his undertaking, and give occasion to people at first to think that this was done by his father's consent or connivance, as being now aged, and infirm, and willing to resign the kingdom to him, as his eldest son, and the noblest too, as being descended from a king by both parents; and such as by their wisdom and interest in the people might have done David much service in this needful time; yet such as were not very martial men, nor likely with violence to oppose his proceedings. They knew not any thing concerning Absalom's design.

12 And Absalom sent for Ahithophel the Gilonite, David's counsellor, from his city, even from Giloh, while he offered sacrifices. And the conspiracy was strong; for the people increased continually with Absalom.

Ahithophel is thought to have been the author, or, at least, the fomentor of this rebellion; either because he was discontented with David, for which there might be many reasons; or because he saw the father was old and nigh his end, and he thought it best policy to worship the rising sun, and to follow the young prince, whom he observed to have so great an interest in the hearts of the people, and whom he supposed he could easily manage as he pleased, which he could not do with David. While he offered sacrifices; which he did not in devotion to God, for he neither feared God, nor reverence a man; nor to implore God's favour and assistance against his father, which he knew was a vain thing to expect; but merely that upon this pretence he might call great numbers of the people together, whereof many would come to join with him in the worship of God, and most to partake of the feasts which were made of the remainders of the sacrifices, according to the manner.

13 ¶ And there came a messenger to David, saying, The hearts of the men of Israel are after Absalom.

The generality of the people are for him; which is not strange, considering either, first, David, whose many mischiefs had greatly lost him in the hearts of his people. Or, secondly, The people, whose temper is generally unstable, weary of old things, and desirous of changes, and apt to expect great benefits thereby. Or, thirdly, Absalom, whose noble birth, and singular beauty, and most obliging carriage, and ample promises, had won the people's hearts; considering also that he was David's first-born, to whom the kingdom of right belonged, and yet that David intended to give away his right to Solomon, which the people thought might prove the occasion of a civil and dreadful war, which they designed to prevent. Or, fourthly, The just and holy God, who ordered and overruled all these things for David's chastisement, and the instruction and terror of sinners in all future ages.

14 And David said unto all his servants that were with him at Jerusalem, Arise, and let us flee; for we shall not else escape from Absalom: make speed to depart, lest he overtake us suddenly, and bring evil upon us, and smite the city with the edge of the sword.

Arise, and let us flee; for though the fort of Zion was strong and impregnable, and he might have defended himself there; yet he had not laid in provisions for a long siege; and, if he had been once besieged there, Absalom would have got speedy and quiet possession of his whole kingdom; whereas if he marched abroad, he might raise a considerable army for his defence, and the suppression of the rebels. Besides, the greatest part of Jerusalem could not be well defended against him. And he suspected that a great number of the citizens might take part with Absalom, and possibly deliver him up into Absalom's hands. Besides, if he had made that the seat of the war, he feared the destruction of that city, which he vehemently desired to preserve, because it was the chief and royal city, and the place in which God had appointed to put his name and worship. Moreover, when David considered that God's hand was now against him, and that he was now bringing evil upon him out of his own house, as he had threatened, chap. xii. 11, it is no wonder if he was intimidated and disposed to flee.

15 And the king's servants said unto the king, Behold, thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the king shall appoint.

After him, or, on foot, by comparing ver. 30, which the king chose to do rather than to ride; partly, to humble himself under the hand of God; partly, to encourage his companions in this hard and comfortless march; and partly, to move compassion in his people towards him. The king left ten women; for he supposed that their sex would protect them even among barbarians, and their relation to David would gain them some respect, and, at least, safety from his son. But it seems he did not now actually consider that clause of the threatening concerning his wives, (God diverting his mind to other things,) or he thought that would be accomplished some other way, conceiving that Absalom would abhor the thoughts of such incestuous converse, especially with persons which were now grown in years.

17 And the king went forth, and all the people after him, and tarried in a place that was far off.

Either to rest and refresh themselves a little; or rather, in expectation of others who should or would come after him, that they might march away in a considerable body, which might both defend the king, and invite others to come in to their assistance. A place that was far off; at some convenient distance, but not very far.

18 And all his servants passed on beside him; ^{• ch. 8. 18.} and all the Cherethites, and all the Pelethites, and all the Gittites, six hundred men which came after him from Gath, passed on before the king.

Of the Cherethites and the Pelethites see the notes on chap. viii. 18. The Gittites were either, first, Israelites by birth, called Gittites because they went with him to Gath, and abode with him in that country. Or rather, secondly, Strangers, as Ittai their head is called, ver. 19, and they are called his brethren, ver. 20; and probably they were Philistines by birth, born in the city or territory of Gath, as the following words imply, who by David's counsel, and example, and the success of his arms, were won to embrace and profess the true religion, and had given good proof of their military skill, and valour, and fidelity to the king.

t ch. 18. 2. 19 ¶ Then said the king to 'Ittai the Gittite, Wherefore goest thou also with us? return to thy place, and abide with the king: for thou art a stranger, and also an exile.

Return to thy place; either, first, To thy native country of Gath, where thou wilt be remote from our broils. Or, secondly, To Jerusalem, where thy settled abode now is. And abide, or, or abide; for he could not both go to Gath, and tarry in Jerusalem with Absalom. Although this part of the verse lies otherwise in the Hebrew text, and may be rendered thus, Return (to wit, to Jerusalem) and abide with the king (there); for thou art a stranger and exile from thy own place; or, in respect of thy own place, or, as concerning thy place, i. e. in regard of the place of thy birth and former habitation. With the king; with Absalom, who is now made king by the choice of the people, and therefore is able to give thee that protection and encouragement which thou deservest; whereas I am in a manner deposed, and unable to do for thee what I desired and intended. A stranger, and also an exile; not much concerned in our affairs, and therefore not fit to be involved in our troubles.

20 Whereas thou camest but yesterday, should I this day † make thee go up and down with us? seeing I go "whither I may, return thou, and take back thy brethren: mercy and truth be with thee.

† Heb. make thee wander in going. u 1 Sam. 23. 13.
Thou camest but yesterday; by which it may be gathered that these were not the Israelitish soldiers which went with David to Gath, and came up with him from thence to Hebron, which was above thirty years before this time, but some proselytes which came from thence more lately. For though this word yesterday be sometimes used of a time long before past, as 2 Kings ix. 26; Job viii. 9; Isa.

xxx. 33; yet it seems to be here restrained to a shorter compass by the following words, and by the argument here used. Go whither I may; I know not whither; having now no certain dwelling-place. Thy brethren; thy countrymen and soldiers the Gittites, ver. 18. Mercy and truth be with thee; since I am now unable to recompense thy kindness and fidelity to me, my hearty prayer to God is, that he would show to thee his mercy, in blessing thee with all sorts of blessings, and his faithfulness, in making good all those promises which he hath made, not to Israelites only, but in and with them to all true-hearted proselytes, such as thou art.

21 And Ittai answered the king, and said, ^{x Ruth 1. 16, 17. Prov. 17. 17. & 18. 24.} As the LORD liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be.

22 And David said to Ittai, Go and pass over. And Ittai the Gittite passed over, and all his men, and all the little ones that were with him.

For being so deeply engaged for David, he durst not leave his little ones to Absalom's mercy.

23 And all the country wept with a loud voice, and all the people passed over: the king also himself passed over the brook || Kidron, and all the people passed over, toward the way of the wilderness. ^{† Called, John 12. 1, Cedron. y ch. 16. 2.}

All the country, i. e. the generality of the people by whom they passed; for it must be considered that Absalom's friends and partizans were gone to him to Hebron, and the rest of the people thereabouts were either well-willers to David, or at least moved with compassion at the sad and sudden change of so great and good a king, which was able to affect a heart of stone. The brook Kidron was near Jerusalem. See Matt. xxvi. 36; John xviii. 1. Toward the way of the wilderness; which was between Jerusalem and Jericho.

24 ¶ And lo Zadok also, and all the Levites were with him, ^{z Num. 4. 15.} bearing the ark of the covenant of God: and they set down the ark of God; and Abiathar went up, until all the people had done passing out of the city.

Bearing the ark of the covenant of God; as a pledge of God's presence and assistance, and that David might inquire at it upon occasion. They set down the ark of God; either in expectation of drawing forth more people to David's party, if not from their loyalty to their lawful king, yet from their piety and reverence to the ark; or that all the people might pass along, and the ark might come in the rear of them for their safeguard and encouragement. Abiathar went up; either, 1. From the ark, which now was in the low ground, being near the brook Cedron, to the top of the Mount of Olives, whence he had the prospect of the city and temple, as appears from Mark xiii. 3, where he could discern when the people ceased to come out of the city after David; which when they did, he gave notice to David that he should wait no longer, but march away and carry the ark with him. Or, 2. From the ark to the city, which was in a higher ground, that so he being high priest, might use his authority and interest with the people to persuade them to do their duty, in going forth to defend and help their king against his rebellious son; and there he staid until all those whom he could persuade were gone forth.

25 And the king said unto Zadok, Carry back the ark of God into the city: if I shall find favour in the eyes of the LORD, he will bring me again, and shew me both it, and his habitation: ^{a Pa. 43. 2.}

Carry back the ark of God into the city; partly, out of care and reverence to the ark, which though sometimes it was and might be carried out to a certain place; yet he might justly think unfit to carry it from place to place he knew not whither, and to expose it to all the hazards and inconveniences to which he himself was likely to be exposed; partly, out of respect to the priests, whom, by this means, he thought he should expose to the rage of Absalom, as he had before exposed them to Saul's fury on another occasion, 1 Sam. xxii.; and partly, that by this means he might have the better opportunity to search out and to counterwork Absalom's plots; which was so necessary, not only for himself, but for the defence and maintenance of the ark, and all God's ordinances, and of the true religion. His habitation, i. e. the tabernacle which David had lately built for it, chap. vi. 17, in which the ark, and God, by means thereof, ordinarily dwelt. And hereby he insinuates another reason of his returning the ark to Jerusalem, because there was the tabernacle made for the receipt of it.

^{b Num. 14. 6.} ^{2 Sam. 22. 20.} ^{1 Kin. 10. 9.} ^{2 Chro. 9. 8.} ^{Is. 62. 4.} ^{c 1 Sam. 3. 18.} 26 But if he thus say, I have no ^b delight in thee; behold, here am I, ^c let him do to me as seemeth good unto him.

I have no delight in thee; I will not receive thee into my favour, nor restore thee to thy throne and city, and to the enjoyment of my ark and ordinances. Here am I, ready to obey him, and to submit to his will and pleasure concerning me.

^{d 1 Sam. 9. 9.} ^{e See ch. 17. 17.} 27 The king said also unto Zadok the priest, Art not thou a ^d seer? return into the city in peace, and ^e your two sons with you, Ahimaz thy son, and Jonathan the son of Abiathar.

The king said also unto Zadok; either because Abiathar was gone from him, ver. 24, and not yet returned; or because David put more confidence in Zadok. A seer, i. e. either, 1. A prophet, for such were called seers, 1 Sam. ix. 9; 2 Sam. xxiv. 11; Amos vii. 12. And such he may be called, either because he really had the gift of prophecy; or because as the name of prophets is sometimes given to those who had not prophetic gifts, but were only officers and ministers devoted to and employed in God's worship and service, as 1 Sam. x. 5, &c.; 1 Kings xviii. 4, 13; compare 1 Chron. xxv. 1—3; so it is reasonable that the name of seers be extended to the same latitude; and therefore he may properly and fitly be called a seer, as he was with and under Abiathar the chief governor of the house and worship of God; who, by his office, was to instruct and direct the people in those matters, whereby he had many opportunities both of sifting out Absalom's counsels, and of minding the people of their duty to David, as he saw opportunity: which sense suits well with David's scope and design. Or, 2. A seeing, or discerning, or observing man; for so the Hebrew verb raah is oft used. And this suits well with David's mind: Thou art a wise man, and therefore fit to manage this great business, which requires prudence and secrecy. In peace; as men of peace, giving over all thoughts of war, and devoting yourselves entirely to God's service.

^{f ch. 17. 16.} 28 See, ^f I will tarry in the plain of the wilderness, until there come word from you to certify me.

29 Zadok therefore and Abiathar carried the ark of God again to Jerusalem: and they tarried there.

He went barefoot, in testimony of his deep sorrow, and humiliation and shame for his sins, whereby he had procured, this evil to himself; for these were the habits of mourners, 2 Sam. xix. 4; Esth. vi. 12; Isa. xx. 3, 4; Jer. xiv. 3, 4; and to take a holy revenge upon himself for his former delicacy and luxury.

One told David, or, David told, i. e. David being hereof informed, acquaints his friends and followers with it, to stir them up to join with him in the following prayer against him. Turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness; either infatuate him, that he may give foolish counsel; or let his counsel be rejected as foolish, or spoiled by the foolish execution of it.

32 ¶ And it came to pass, that when David was come to the top of the mount, where he worshipped God, behold, Hushai the ⁿ Archite came to meet him ^o with his coat rent, and earth upon his head: ^{n Josh. 16. 2.} ^{o ch. 1. 2.}

i. e. I will be as faithful to thee as I have been to thy father; which he neither was nor ought to be; and therefore the profession of this was great dissimulation. And David's suggesting this crafty counsel may be reckoned amongst his errors; which, proceeding from a violent temptation, and his present and pressing straits, God was pleased mercifully to pardon, and to direct this evil advice to a good end.

35 And hast thou not there with thee Zadok and Abiathar the priests? therefore it shall be, that what thing soever thou shalt hear out of the king's house, ^r thou shalt tell it to Zadok and Abiathar the priests. ^{r ch. 17. 15.} ^{16.}

CHAP. XVI.

Ziba, by presents and false suggestions, obtaineth of David his master's inheritance, 1—4. Shimei revileth and curseth David, who restraineth Abishai from revenging it, 5—14. Absalom cometh with Ahithophel to Jerusalem; lieth with his father's concubines in the sight of all Israel, according to the counsel of Ahithophel, who was esteemed as an oracle, 15—23.

AND ^a when David was a little past the top of the hill, behold, ^b Ziba the servant of Mephibosheth met him, with a couple of asses saddled, and upon them two hundred loaves of bread, and an hundred ^{a ch. 15. 30.} ^{32.} ^{b ch. 9. 2.}

bunches of raisins, and an hundred of summer fruits, and a bottle of wine.

Ziba; a crafty man, who, being persuaded that God would in due time appear for the righteous cause of so good a king, and scatter the cloud which was now upon him, takes this occasion to make way for his future advancement. A bottle; a large bottle or vessel proportionable to the other provisions.

2 And the king said unto Ziba, What meanest thou by these? And Ziba said, The asses be for the king's household to ride on; and the bread and summer fruit for the young men to eat; and the wine, ° that such as be faint in the wilderness may drink.

For the king's household to ride on; for the king and his wives and children were all on foot; not that he had not or could not procure asses for them at Jerusalem, but because he chose it as best becoming that state of penitence and humiliation in which they were.

3 And the king said, And where is thy master's son? ° And Ziba said unto the king, Behold, he abideth at Jerusalem: for he said, To day shall the house of Israel restore me the kingdom of my father.

Which though it might seem a very unlikely thing, yet such vain expectations do often get into the minds of men; nor was it impossible, that when David's family was thus divided, and one part engaged against another, they might destroy themselves by mutual wounds; and the people being tired out with civil wars, might restore the kingdom to the family of Saul their old master, whereof this was the top branch. And this was a time of general defection of many whom the king had greatly obliged, witness Ahithophel. And Mephibosheth's absence made the calumny more probable.

4 ° Then said the king to Ziba, Behold, thine are all that pertained unto Mephibosheth. And Ziba said, † I humbly beseech thee that I may find grace in thy sight, my lord, O king.

Thine are all that pertained unto Mephibosheth; a rash sentence, and unrighteous, to condemn a man unheard, upon the single testimony of his accuser and servant. But David's mind was both clouded by the deep sense of his calamity, and biased by Ziba's great and seasonable kindness. And he might think that Ziba would not dare to accuse his master of so great a crime, which, if false, might so easily be disproved. I humbly beseech thee that I may find grace in thy sight: thy favour is more to me than this gift; which, as a token of thy favour, I accept with all thankfulness.

5 ¶ And when king David came to Bahurim, behold, thence came out a man of the family of the house of Saul, whose name was 'Shimei, the son of Gera: ¶ he came forth, and cursed still as he came.

Bahurim; a city in Benjamin, chap. iii. 16; xix. 16; i. e. to the territory of it, for to the city he came not till ver. 14.

6 And he cast stones at David, and at all the servants of king David: and all the people and all the mighty men were on his right hand and on his left.

He cast stones; not so much to hurt them, as to show his contempt of them. All the people were on his right hand and on his left; which is noted to show the prodigious madness of the man; and though rage (which is truly said to be a short madness) and the height of malice hath oft transported men to the most hazardous and desperate speeches and actions.

7 And thus said Shimei when he cursed, Come out, come out, thou † bloody man, and thou ° man of Belial:

Or rather, go out, as the word properly signifies. Be gone out of thy kingdom, as thou deservest.

8 The LORD hath^h returned upon thee all 'the blood of the house of Saul, in whose stead thou hast reigned; and the LORD hath delivered the kingdom into the hand of Absalom thy son: and, † behold, thou art taken in thy mischief, because thou art a bloody man.

All the blood of the house of Saul; either, 1. The blood of Abner and Ish-bosheth; which he maliciously imputes to David, as if they had been killed by David's contrivance; especially the former, because David did only give Joab hard words, as in policy he was obliged to do; but instead of punishing him, did reward and prefer him. Or, 2. The death of Saul's seven sons, chap. xxi. 8, which, though related after this, seems to have been done before; of which see the notes on chap. xv. 7. In thy mischief: the same mischief thou didst bring upon others, is now returned upon thy own head. Or, thy sin hath found thee out, and thou art now receiving the just punishment of it.

9 ¶ Then said Abishai the son of Zeruiah unto the king, Why should this ° dead dog 'curse my lord the king? let me go over, I pray thee, and take off his head.

10 And the king said, ° What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah? so let him curse, because ° the LORD hath said unto him, Curse David. ° Who shall then say, Wherefore hast thou done so?

What have I to do with you? to wit, in this matter I ask not your advice, nor will I follow it; nor do I desire you should at all concern yourselves in it, but wholly leave it to me, to do what I think fit. Because the Lord hath said unto him; not that God commanded it by his word, for that severely forbids it, Exod. xxii. 28; or moved him to it by his Spirit, for neither was that necessary nor possible, because God tempteth no man, James i. 13; but that the secret providence of God did order and overrule him in it. God did not put any wickedness into Shimei's heart, for he had of himself a heart full of malignity and venom against David; but only left him to his own wickedness; took away that common prudence which would have kept him from so foolish and dangerous an action; directed his malice that it should be exercised against David, rather than another man, as when God gives up one traveller into the hands of a robber rather than another; inclined him to be at home, and then to come out of his doors at that time when David passed by him; and brought David into so distressed a condition, that he might seem a proper object of his scorn and contempt. And this is ground enough for this expression, the Lord said, not by the word of his precept, but by the word of his providence, in respect whereof he is said to command the ravens, 1 Kings xvii. 4, and to send forth his word and commandment to senseless creatures, Psal. cxlvii. 15, 18. Who shall then say? not unto Shimei, for it was justly said so to him afterwards, 1 Kings ii. 9, but unto the Lord; who shall reproach God's providence for permitting this? Or, who shall by words or actions restrain him from executing God's just judgment against me?

11 And David said to Abishai, and to all his servants, Behold, ° my son, which ° came forth of my bowels, seeketh my life: how much more now may this Benjamite do it? let him alone, and let him curse; for the LORD hath bidden him.

My son seeketh my life; which is a greater mischief than to reproach me with words. This Benjamite; of that tribe and family from which God hath taken away the kingdom, and given it to me, which was likely to stir up his rage and hatred against me. Let him curse; do not now hinder him violently from it, nor punish him for it. It is meet I should bear the indignation of the Lord manifested herein, and submit to his pleasure, and possess my soul with patience; and by bearing these lesser evils, prepare myself for greater, which are coming towards me.

12 It may be that the LORD will look on mine \parallel † affliction, and that the LORD will † requite me good for his cursing this day.

It may be; he speaks doubtfully, because he was conscious that by his sins he had forfeited all his claim to God's promises. The Lord will look on mine affliction with an eye of commiseration.

13 And as David and his men went by the way, Shimei went along on the hill's side over against him, and cursed as he went, and threw stones at him, and † cast dust.

Not that he could reach or hurt him with it; but only as an expression of contempt. And the like is to be thought concerning the stones, wherewith he could not think to reach David, when he was encamped with his men on every side.

14 And the king, and all the people that were with him, came weary, and refreshed themselves there.

Came to the city of Bahurim, ver. 5.
15 ¶ And * Absalom, and all the people the men of Israel, came to Jerusalem, and Ahithophel with him.

16 And it came to pass, when Hushai the Archite, 'David's friend, was come unto Absalom, that Hushai said unto Absalom, † God save the king, God save the king.

To wit, Absalom, whom he pretends to own for his king and liege lord.

17 And Absalom said to Hushai, Is this thy kindness to thy friend? "why wentest thou not with thy friend?"

Is this thy kindness to thy friend? doth this action answer that profession of greatest friendship which thou hast hitherto made to him? Dost thou thus requite his favour and true friendship to thee? He speaks thus only to try him. And he saith, thy friend, by way of reflection upon David; as one who was a friend to Hushai, and to strangers, but not to his own son, whom, by his severity and design to give away his right to Solomon, he provoked to this course; and therefore he doth not vouchsafe to call him his father.

18 And Hushai said unto Absalom, Nay; but whom the LORD, and this people, and all the men of Israel, choose, his will I be, and with him will I abide.

Though as a private person I owed and paid friendship to David whilst he was king; yet I must make all my obligations give place to the authority of God, who putteth down and setteth up kings at his pleasure; and to the common sense and decree of the whole body of the nation. But Hushai expresseth himself very cautiously; for though he would be thought to understand Absalom, yet in truth this character did not agree to him, whom neither God nor all the people had chosen, but only a part, and that the worst part of them.

19 And again, * whom should I serve? should I not serve in the presence of his son? as I have served in thy father's presence, so will I be in thy presence.

Thou art his son, and heir, and successor, and now in his place and stead; whereby my friendship which was due to him is devolved upon thee by right of inheritance; and I reckon that my friendship is not wholly alienated from him, when it is transferred upon one that came out of his bowels.

20 ¶ Then said Absalom to Ahithophel, Give counsel among you what we shall do.

21 And Ahithophel said unto Absalom, Go in unto thy father's † concubines, which he hath left to keep the house; and all Israel shall hear that thou † art abhorred of thy father: then shall * the hands of all that are with thee be strong.

This counsel he gave, partly to revenge the injury done to Bath-sheba, who was the daughter of Eliam, 2 Sam. xi. 3, who was the son of Ahithophel, chap. xxiii. 34; and principally for his own and the people's safety, that the breach between David and Absalom might be made wide and irreparable by so vile an action, which must needs provoke David in the highest degree, both for the sin and shame of it; as the like action had done Jacob, Gen. xlix. 3, 4; and cut off all hopes of reconciliation, which otherwise might have been expected by some treaty between Absalom and his tender-hearted father; in which case his followers, and especially Ahithophel himself, had been left to David's mercy. Israel shall hear that thou art abhorred of thy father; and therefore obliged by thy own interest to prosecute the war with all possible vigour, and to abandon all thoughts of peace; as knowing that his father, though he might dissemble, yet would never forgive so foul and scandalous a crime. Then shall the hands of all that are with thee be strong; they will fight with greater courage and resolution when they are freed from the fear of thy reconciliation, which otherwise would make their hearts faint and hands slack in thy cause. But by this we may see the character of Absalom's party, and how abominably wicked they were, whom such a loathsome and scandalous action tied the faster to him, whom for that very reason they should have deserted and abhorred. And we may further learn how corrupt and filthy the body of the people was, and how ripe for that severe judgment which is now hastening to them.

22 So they spread Absalom a tent upon the top of the house; and Absalom went in unto his father's concubines ^b in ^c the sight of all Israel.

Upon the top of the house, to wit, of the king's palace, the very place from whence David had spied and gazed upon Bath-sheba, chap. xi. 2. So that his sin was legible in the very place of his punishment. Unto his father's concubines, i. e. to one or some of them; and by so doing did further make claim to the kingdom as his own; and, as it were, take possession of it; it being usual in the eastern countries to account the wives and concubines of the late king to belong of right to the successor: see the note on chap. xii. 8. In the sight of all Israel; who saw him go into the tent, and thence concluded that he lay with them, as he had designed to do.

23 And the counsel of Ahithophel, which he counselled in those days, was as if a man had enquired at the † oracle of God: † was all the counsel of Ahithophel † both with David and with Absalom.

Was as if a man had inquired at the oracle of God; it was received by the people with equal authority and veneration, and was usually attended with as certain success; which is mentioned as the reason why a counsel which had so ill a face, should meet with such general approbation. With David; to whose pious disposition he accommodated himself, as policy obliged him; but being weary of it, he takes this first occasion to discover himself, and execute that wickedness which before lay in his heart.

CHAP. XVII.

dan, making Amasa the captain of his host, 24—26. David is there furnished with provisions by his friends, 27—29.

MOREOVER Ahithophel said unto Absalom, Let me now choose out twelve thousand men, and I will arise and pursue after David this night :

I am so well assured of the goodness of this counsel, that I will venture my own person and life in the execution of it.

2 And I will come upon him while he is ^a weary and weak handed, and will make him afraid : and all the people that are with him shall flee ; and I will ^b smite the king only :

Weary and weak-handed ; tired with a tedious march on foot, and destitute of men and military provisions ; and disheartened by his own small numbers, and by the general defection of his subjects.

3 And I will bring back all the people unto thee : the man whom thou seekest is as if all returned : so all the people shall be in peace.

The man whom thou seekest is as if all returned, i. e. the death of that man whom thou seekest to destroy is no less considerable to thee, than if all the people that follow him should desert him and return unto thee.

4 And the saying [†] pleased Absalom well, and all the elders of Israel.

5 Then said Absalom, Call now Hushai the Archite also, and let us hear likewise [†] what he saith.

A wonderful effect of Divine Providence, blinding his mind, and influencing his heart, that he could not rest in Ahithophel's counsel, though it was so evidently wise, and good, and approved by the general consent of his whole party ; and that he should desire Hushai's advice, though neither his reputation for wisdom was equal to Ahithophel's, nor had he yet given any one proof of his fidelity to Absalom, as Ahithophel had done ; nor was he so fixed by his interest to him as Ahithophel was ; and though there wanted not just cause to suspect him and his counsel too. But there is no contending with that God who can arm a man against himself, and destroy him by his own mistakes and passions, without any other help.

6 And when Hushai was come to Absalom, Absalom spake unto him, saying, Ahithophel hath spoken after this manner : shall we do after his [†] saying ? if not ; speak thou.

7 And Hushai said unto Absalom, The counsel that Ahithophel hath [†] given is not good at this time.

Though at other times he generally gives most wise and admirable counsel ; yet, as he is a man, he seems now to be under a mistake, and not sufficiently to consider all the present circumstances of this business.

8 For, said Hushai, thou knowest thy father and his men, that they be mighty men, and they be [†] chafed in their minds, as ^a a bear robbed of her whelps in the field : and thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people.

Mighty men ; of approved courage and strength, therefore not so soon vanquished as Ahithophel supposeth. Chafed in their minds, Heb. bitter of soul, inflamed with rage ; desperate, and therefore resolved to sell their lives at a dear rate. A man of war ; a wise prince and general ; who knowing of what importance it is to secure his own person, and that your great design is against his life, will doubtless use extraordinary care to keep out of your reach, which he may easily do.

9 Behold, he is hid now in some pit, or in some other place : and it will come to pass, when some of them be [†] overthrown at the first, that whosoever hear-eth it will say, There is a slaughter among the people that follow Absalom.

He is hid now in some pit, or in some other place ; having been oft accustomed to that course, and well acquainted with all hiding-places from Saul's time. In one of them, unknown to us, he will lurk with some of his chosen men, and lie in ambush for us ; and when they see a fit opportunity, they will suddenly come forth and surprise some of our men when they least expect it, and fall upon them with great fury, and probably will at first put them to flight. Some of them, to wit, of Absalom's men sent against David. Overthrown at the first ; implying that their good success at first would mightily animate David's men to proceed vigorously in the fight, and intimidate Absalom's army, and consequently would be both a presage and an occasion of their total defeat. Whosoever heareth it will say ; they who first hear these ill tidings will propagate it, and strike terror with it into the rest of the army.

10 And he also that is valiant, whose heart is as the heart of a lion, shall utterly ^d melt : for all Israel knoweth that thy father is a mighty man, and they which be with him are valiant men.

The known fame of the prodigious valour of David and his followers will easily gain credit to that report, and strike the stoutest of our men with dread, even Ahithophel himself, if he should go with them.

11 Therefore I counsel that all Israel be generally gathered unto thee, ^e from Dan even to Beer-sheba, ^f as the sand that is by the sea for multitude ; and [†] that thou go to battle in thine own person.

His pretence was, that they might have a far greater army, and make sure though slow work ; his design was to gain David more time, that he might increase his army, and make better provisions for the battle ; and that the present heat of the people might be cooled, and they might at last bethink themselves of their duty to David, and return to their former allegiance. That thou go to battle in thine own person ; for thy presence will put more life and courage into all thy soldiers, who will be ambitious to show their utmost skill and courage in defending thy person and cause, when they know that all their actions are observed by him who hath the distribution of rewards and punishments in his hands. So mayst thou also give counsel as occasion offers, and encourage thy men to kill David, which otherwise they may possibly be afraid to do. Besides, the glory of the victory will be wholly thine, which now Ahithophel seeks to speak to himself.

12 So shall we come upon him in some place where he shall be found, and we will light upon him as the dew falleth on the ground : and of him and of all the men that are with him there shall not be left so much as one.

As the dew falleth on the ground, i. e. pteously, suddenly, irresistibly, and on all sides ; for so the dew falls.

13 Moreover, if he be gotten into a city, then shall all Israel bring ropes to that city, and we will draw it into the river, until there be not one small stone found there.

Then shall all Israel bring ropes to that city ; not that they should do so, or that it was the custom to do so ; but it is an hyperbolical and thraconical expression, suited to the vain-glorious temper of this insolent young man ; and therefore most likely to prevail with him ; implying that they would do so if they could not discover and destroy him another way ; or that they should be enough to do so, if there were occasion. We will draw it into the river, adjoining to the city ; it being usual to build cities near some river, both for defence, and for other accommodations.

14 And Absalom and all the men of Israel said, The counsel of Hushai the Archite is better than the counsel of Ahithophel. For ^g the LORD had ^h appointed to defeat the good counsel of Ahithophel, to the intent that the LORD might bring evil upon Absalom.

Absalom and all the men of Israel were infatuated by a Divine power, and given up to believe lies and mistakes. The Lord had appointed to defeat the good counsel; so it was, politically considered; being the wisest and most effectual course to accomplish Absalom's end.

And besides, they relied upon God's good providence, which they knew watched over David, and them for his sake.

Over the brook of water, i. e. over Jordan. This was a manifest lie; but because it was spoken for no hurt, but good only, many persons in those times conceived such lies to be lawful. Compare Exod. i. 19; Josh. ii. 4, 5. But although God was pleased to overlook and pardon the sin, and graciously to reward the good intention which accompanied them; yet it is certain that all kinds of lies are moral evils, and condemned by plain scriptures, and that we must not do evil that good may come, nor tell a lie for God's glory, Rom. iii. 7, 8.

21 And it came to pass, after they were departed, that they came up out of the well, and went and told king David, and said unto David, ^{q ver. 15, 16.} Arise, and pass quickly over the water: for thus hath Ahithophel counselled against you.

22 Then David arose, and all the people that were with him, and they passed over Jordan: by the morning light there lacked not one of them that was not gone over Jordan.

They passed over Jordan; either at the ford, or in boats.

23 ¶ And when Ahithophel saw that his counsel was not followed, he saddled ^{+ Heb. done.} his ass, and arose, and gat him home to his house, to his city, and ^{r ch. 15. 12.} ^{† Heb. gave charge concerning his house.} ^{2 Kin. 20. 1.} ^{† Matt. 27. 5.} put himself in order, and hanged himself, and died, and was buried in the sepulchre of his father.

Put his household in order; disposed of his estate by will. Compare Isa. xxxviii. 1. Hanged himself; partly because he could not endure to outlive his disgrace, and the rejection of his counsel; and partly because he foresaw by this means David would gain time and strength, and in all probability be victorious, and then the storm would fall most heavily upon his head, as the main author and pillar of the rebellion, and the contriver of those two pernicious counsels above mentioned.

24 Then David came to Mahanaim. And Absalom passed over Jordan, he and all the men of Israel with him. ^{t Gen. 32. 2.} ^{Josh. 13. 26.} ^{ch. 2. 8.}

Mahanaim; a place in the country of Gilead, bordering upon the land of the Ammonites, ver. 27. See Gen. xxxii. 2; 2 Sam. ii. 8. Absalom passed over Jordan; not speedily, but when all the men of Israel were gathered together according to Hushai's counsel, who are said to be with him here, as it follows.

25 ¶ And Absalom made Amasa captain of the host instead of Joab: which Amasa was a man's son, whose name was Ithra an Israelite, that went in to Abigail the daughter of Nahash, sister to Zeruiah Joab's mother. ^{† Or, Jether an Ishmaelite.} ^{u 1 Chron. 2. 16, 17.} ^{† Heb. Abigail.} ^{† Or, Jesse.} ^{See 1 Chron. 2. 13, 16.}

Ithra an Israelite. Object. He was an Ishmaelite, 1 Chron. ii. 17. Ans. Not Amasa; but Ithra, or Jether, Amasa's father, is there so called, because he was such, either by his birth from such parents, or by his long habitation among them, or for some other reason now unknown. Compare 2 Sam. xv. 18. And Amasa is here called an Israelite, either because he was a proselyte; or in opposition to Joab, who was of the tribe of Judah, as Amasa was of one of the ten tribes; or rather, to intimate, that although he or his parents were called Ishmaelites for some reason, yet as to their extraction they were indeed Israelites; which if Amasa had not been, it is not probable that he could have had so powerful an influence upon the tribe of Judah as he had, chap. xix. 14. That went in to Abigail, i. e. lay with her, whether being first married to her, or not, is uncertain. The daughter of Nahash. Nahash is either another name of Jesse; or rather, the name of Jesse's wife; by whom he had this Abigail, as he had Zeruiah by another wife; so they were sisters by the father, but not by the mother; and Nahash is here named to signify so much.

26 So Israel and Absalom pitched in the land of Gilead.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, when David was come to Mahanaim, that Shobi the son of Nahash of Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and Machir the son of Ammiel of Lo-debar, and Barzillai the Gileadite of Rogelim, ^{x See ch. 10. 1. & 12. 30.} ^{y ch. 9. 4.} ^{z ch. 19. 31, 32.} ^{1 Kings 2. 7.}

Shobi, as it may seem, disliked and disowned that barbarous action to the ambassadors; and therefore, when the rest were destroyed, was left king or governor of the residue of the Ammonites. Machir the son of Ammiel of Lo-debar. See above, chap. ix. 4.

28 Brought beds, and basons, and earthen vessels, and wheat, and barley, and flour, and parched corn, and beans, and lentiles, and parched pulse,

Beds and basons, i. e. all sorts of household stuff, as well as other provisions, all which David now wanted.

29 And honey, and butter, and sheep, and cheese of kine, for David, and for the people that were with him, to eat: for they said, The people is hungry, and weary, and thirsty, in the wilderness.

i. e. Having been in the wilderness; which is an easy and common ellipsis. Or, because of (so the Hebrew particle beth is oft used) the wilderness, which they have passed through, in which provisions are very scarce.

CHAP. XVIII.

David viewing the armies in their march, giveth them charge of Absalom, 1—5; whose men are smitten: he hanging by his hair on an oak, is slain by Joab, and cast into a pit: his pillar and monument, 6—18. David hearing hereof, 19—32, mourneth for Absalom, 33.

AND David numbered the people that were with him, and set captains of thousands and captains of hundreds over them.

The people that were with him; which flocked to him thither, so as to make up a small army.

2 And David sent forth a third part of the people under the hand of Joab, and a third part under the hand of Abishai the son of Zeruiah, Joab's brother, and a third part under the hand of Ittai the Gittite. And the king said unto the people, I will surely go forth with you myself also.

Under the hand of Joab, to wit, for his especial conduct and management in the battle: otherwise Joab was the general of all the forces; nor had David yet taken away that power from him, nor was this a time to do it. But such distributions of forces are usual in battles. I will surely go forth with you myself also, that by my presence I may put life and courage into my soldiers; and because it is fit I should run the same hazards with you, which you do for my sake.

3 But the people answered, Thou shalt not go forth: for if we flee away, they will not care for us; neither if half of us die, will they care for us: but now thou art worth ten thousand of us: therefore now it is better that thou succour us out of the city.

Thou shalt not go forth; for this was Absalom's great error, into which he was drawn by a Divine infatuation, and by Hushai's craft, to go to battle in his own person, which was the utter ruin of him and of his cause. Thou art worth ten thousand of us; not only for the dignity of thy person, but also for the importance of our common cause and concern, which, if thou art slain, is irrecoverably lost. That thou succour us out of the city, by sending us supplies of men, and provisions of all sorts, as we have occasion; and by securing our retreat, if we be defeated. Or thus, Not go along to the battle with us, but only go out with us, or accompany us out of the city, (to encourage the company,) and then retire for thy own safety. And so it seems by the next verse.

4 And the king said unto them, What seemeth you best I will do. And the king stood by the gate side, and all the people came out by hundreds and by thousands.

By the gate side, i. e. between the two gates of the city, as it is expressed below, ver. 24.

5 And the king commanded Joab and Abishai and Ittai, saying, Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even with Absalom. And all the people heard when the king gave all the captains charge concerning Absalom.

Deal gently with Absalom; if you conquer, (which he presaged they would by God's gracious answer to his prayer for the turning of Ahithophel's counsel into foolishness,) take him prisoner, but do not kill him. Which desire proceeded, partly, from his great indulgence towards his children; partly, from David's consciousness that he himself was the meritorious and procuring cause of this rebellion, Absalom being given up to it for the punishment of David's sins, and therefore did indeed deserve some pity from him; partly, from the consideration of his youth, which commonly makes men foolish, and heady, and violent, and subject to ill counsels; and partly, from his piety, being loth that he should be cut off in the act of his sin without any space or means for repentance, whereby both his soul and body would be in danger to perish for ever. All the people, to wit, the citizens and others who stood with the king in the gate when the army marched forth.

6 ¶ So the people went out into the field against Israel: and the battle was in the wood of Ephraim;

So called, not from his situation in the tribe of Ephraim, which was on the other side Jordan, as is evident; but from some memorable action or occurrence of the Ephraimites beyond Jordan; whether it was their killing of Oreb and Zeeb there, Judg. vii. 25; viii. 3, or their slaughter by Jephthah, Judg. xii. 5, 6, or some other not mentioned in sacred Scripture.

7 Where the people of Israel were slain before the servants of David, and there was there a great slaughter that day of twenty thousand men.

The people of Israel, i. e. the soldiers of Absalom; so called, partly to note that all Israel (some few excepted) were engaged in this rebellion, which made David's deliverance more glorious and remarkable; and partly in opposition to David's men, who, as to the main body, or most considerable part, were of the tribe of Judah, or had followed him from Judah.

8 For the battle was there scattered over the face of all the country: and the wood devoured more people that day than the sword devoured.

The battle was there scattered, i. e. the warriors being beaten in the fight, fled, and were dispersed; the abstract being put for the concrete, as poverty is put for poor men, 2 Kings xxiv. 14, and deceit for the deceiver, and dreams for dreamers, Prov. xii. 24; xiii. 6. The wood devoured more people, i. e. more people died in the wood, either through hunger, and thirst, and weariness; or by the wild beasts, whereof great numbers were there, which, though they were driven away by noise and clamour from the place of the main battle, yet might easily meet with them when they fled several ways, which also might be directed and sent to them by God's providence and just judgment to punish them for their rebellion; or by falling into ditches and pits, which were in that place, ver. 17, and probably were covered with grass or wood, so as they could not see them till they fell into them; or by being hanged in trees, as Absalom was, ver. 9; and especially by David's men, who pursued them, and killed them in the wood: and the wood is rightly said to have devoured them, because it gave the occasion to their destruction, inasmuch as the trees, and ditches, and pits entangled them, and stopped their flight, and made them an easy prey to David's men, who followed them, and slew them in the pursuit, being therein directed and assisted by the people of that country, who, after the manner, fell in with the victorious side. Than the sword devoured, to wit, in the main battle; the sword being put for the battle, by a common metonymy.

9 ¶ And Absalom met the servants of David. And Absalom rode upon a mule, and the mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his head caught hold of the oak, and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth; and the mule that was under him went away.

Absalom met the servants of David, who, according to David's command, spared him, and gave him an opportunity to escape. His head caught hold of the oak; in which probably he was entangled by the hair of the head, which being very long and thick, might easily catch hold of a bough, especially when the great God directed it. Either he wore no helmet, or his helmet was such as left much of his hair visible; or he had thrown away his helmet as well as his other arms, to hasten his flight, or because of the heat of the season. Thus the matter of his pride was the instrument of his ruin, as also Asahel's swiftness, chap. ii. 18, and Ahithophel's policy, chap. xvii. 23, were the occasions of their destruction. The mule that was under him went away; which might easily happen, because being in flight the mule passed along very swiftly.

10 And a certain man saw it, and told Joab, and said, Behold, I saw Absalom hanged in an oak.

11 And Joab said unto the man that told him, And, behold, thou sawest him, and why didst thou not smite him there to the ground? and I would have given thee ten shekels of silver, and a girdle.

Why didst thou not smite him down from the oak, and with thy spear nail him to the ground? A girdle; a military belt of more than ordinary price, as a testimony of thy valour and good service. See on 1 Sam. xviii. 4.

12 And the man said unto Joab, Though I should † receive a thousand shekels of silver in mine hand, yet would I not put forth mine hand against the king's son: * for in our hearing the king charged thee and Abishai and Ittai, saying, † Beware that none touch the young man Absalom.

Or, take heed what (for so the Hebrew pronoun mi is sometimes used, as Judg. xiii. 17) ye do with the young man. He expresseth David's sense, though not his words.

13 Otherwise I should have wrought falshood against mine own life: for there is no matter hid from the king, and thou thyself wouldst have set thyself against me.

Either, first, I should have been guilty of false and perfidious dealing against the king's express injunction, and that with the manifest hazard of my own life. Or, secondly I should have betrayed my own life. I should not only have deceived myself with false hopes, either of concealing my fact from the king, or of obtaining a reward, yea, or a pardon, from him or thee for it; but also have destroyed myself thereby, and laid a plot against my own life. There is no matter hid from the king; this, as all other things, would certainly come to the king's ear. Thou thyself wouldst have set thyself against me; thou wouldst have been my adversary and accuser; partly because it was thy duty to be so; and partly to vindicate thyself by casting the blame upon another. Or, thou wouldst have stood afar off, as this phrase is used, Psal. xxxviii. 11. Thou wouldst not have stood to me to intercede for my life or reward, but wouldst keep at a distance from me.

14 Then said Joab, I may not tarry thus † with thee. And he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom, while he was yet † alive in the † midst of the oak.

I may not tarry thus with thee; I must not lose time in contending with thee till I let the occasion slip. Through the heart of Absalom; not properly so called, for he was yet alive after these wounds, and was slain, ver. 15; but through his middle, as the word heart is oft used, as Psal. xlv. 2, and that too not exactly, but more largely understood, as Deut. iv. 11; Ezek. xxvii. 4; Matt. xii. 40; or through his body; which might be, and yet the wounds not mortal. While he was yet alive, or, yet he continued alive,

i. e. the darts did not despatch him, and therefore they smite him again, and kill him, ver. 15.

15 And ten young men that bare Joab's armour compassed about and smote Absalom, and slew him.

Judging that there could be no safety to the king, nor peace to the kingdom, nor security to himself, and all David's friends and loyal subjects, and good men, if Absalom had lived, as may seem probable from chap. xix. 10, and yet perceiving that the king's heart was reconcilable to Absalom, notwithstanding his abominable crimes of lying with his father's concubines, and of horrid and unnatural rebellion; both which were capital crimes by the law of God; he adventured to save David's life against his will. But whether Joab did well in this, all things considered, I shall not here determine.

16 And Joab blew the trumpet, and the people returned from pursuing after Israel: for Joab held back the people.

Who otherwise were highly incensed against the rebels, and hotly pursued them. But the head of the rebellion being cut off, and the danger thereby past, he puts a stop to the effusion of Israelitish blood.

17 And they took Absalom, and cast him into a great pit in the wood, and † laid a very great heap c. stones upon him: and all Israel fled every one to his tent.

Laid a very great heap of stones upon him, as a lasting monument of Absalom's sin and shame, and of the righteous judgment of God upon him. Compare Josh. vii. 26; viii. 29; x. 27. He was first hanged, after a sort, which was an accursed death, Deut. xxi. 23; and then thrust through with darts and swords; and, after all, in a manner stoned, which was the proper punishment of a rebellious son, Deut. xxi. 21. Every one to his tent; to their houses and dwellings, to avoid the shame and punishment of their rebellion.

18 ¶ Now Absalom in his lifetime had taken and reared up for himself a pillar, which is in * the king's dale: for he said, ^{g Gen. 14. 17} I have no son to keep my name in remembrance: and he called the pillar after his own name: and it is called unto this day, Absalom's place.

A pillar, to preserve his name in memory; whereas it had been more for his honour if his name had been buried in perpetual oblivion. But this was the effect of his pride and vain-glory. The king's dale; a place near Jerusalem so called. Gen. xiv. 17. He said, I have no son. Object. He had three sons, chap. xiv. 27. Ans. Either they were all now dead; or if one of them was left alive, he thought him unfit and unworthy to keep up his name and honour; or he erected this pillar before his sons were born. But the first opinion seems most probable; and it was a remarkable judgment of God, that he who struck at his father's life, should be punished with the death of all his sons. Absalom's place, Heb. Absalom's hand, i. e. his work, made though not by his hand, yet for him and his glory, and by his procurement.

19 ¶ Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok, Let me now run, and bear the king tidings, how that the LORD hath † avenged him of his enemies.

20 And Joab said unto him, Thou shalt not † bear tidings this day, but thou shalt bear tidings another day: but this day thou shalt bear no tidings, because the king's son is dead.

And thou shalt not be a messenger of evil tidings, which will be unwelcome to him, and prejudicial to thee.

21 Then said Joab to Cush, Go tell the king what thou hast seen. And Cush bowed himself unto Joab, and ran.

To Cushi, or, to an Ethiopian; so he might be by birth, and yet by profession an Israelite.

22 Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok yet again to Joab, But † howsoever, let me, I pray thee, also run after Cushi. And Joab said, Wherefore wilt thou run, my son, seeing that thou hast no tidings || ready?

My son; so he calls him with respect both to his younger years, and to that true and tender affection which he had for him.

23 But howsoever, said he, let me run. And he said unto him, Run. Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and overran Cushi.

The way of the plain was the smoother and easier, though the longer way.

24 And David sat between the two gates: and the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a man running alone.

Between the two gates; for the gates of the cities then were, as now they are, large and thick; and, for the greater security, had two gates, one more outward, the other inward. Here he sat, that he might hear tidings when any came into the city. Unto the wall; unto the top of the wall or tower upon the gate, where watchmen used to watch. Compare 2 Kings ix. 17; Ezek. xxxiii. 2.

25 And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king said, If he be alone, there is tidings in his mouth. And he came apace, and drew near.

There is tidings in his mouth; he is sent with some special message; which was a very probable conjecture; for if he had run or fled from the enemy, many others would have followed him.

26 And the watchman saw another man running: and the watchman called unto the porter, and said, Behold another man running alone. And the king said, He also bringeth tidings.

27 And the watchman said, † Me thinketh the running of the foremost is like the running of Ahimaaz the son of Zadok. And the king said, He is a good man, and cometh with good tidings.

He loves me well, and therefore would not afflict me with evil tidings.

28 And Ahimaaz called, and said unto the king, || † All is well. And he fell down to the earth upon his face before the king, and said, Blessed be the Lord thy God, which hath † delivered up the men that lifted up their hand against my lord the king.

Into thy hand and power; or, to destruction. Compare 1 Sam. xxiv. 18; xxvi. 8.

29 And the king said, † Is the young man Absalom safe? And Ahimaaz answered, When Joab sent the king's servant, and me thy servant, I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was.

The king's servant, Cushi. I knew not what it was; he seems to tell an untruth, as is evident from ver. 20, because he now plainly perceived what Joab foretold him, that such tidings would be very unwelcome to David: But he made a bad choice, to offend God with a lie, rather than to displease the king with a truth. Yet thus far it might be true, that though he had reason to think Absalom was dead, yet was not able to give account of the particulars which concerned it, wherewith Cushi was intrusted.

30 And the king said unto him, Turn aside, and stand here. And he turned aside, and stood still.

31 And, behold, Cushi came; and Cushi said, † Tidings, my lord the king: for the Lord hath avenged thee this day of all them that rose up against thee.

32 And the king said unto Cushi, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Cushi answered, The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is.

May they perish and be cut off, as he is.

33 ¶ And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept: and as he went, thus he said, O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!

Went up to the chamber over the gate; retiring himself from all men and business, that he might wholly give up himself to lamentation.

David might speak thus from a deep sense of his eternal state, because he died in his sins, without the least testimony of repentance, and because David himself had by his own sins been the unhappy instrument and occasion of his son's death.

CHAP. XIX.

Joab by hard words moveth the king to cease his mourning, and show himself to the people, 1—8. The king is brought back by the men of Judah, and Amasa put in Joab's place, 9—15. Shimei sueth for mercy, and obtaineth it, 16—23. Mephibosheth meeting the king, recovers half his estate, 24—30. Barzillai is dismissed; Chimham his son is taken into the king's family, 31—40. The Israelites expostulate with Judah for bringing home the king without them, 41—43.

AND it was told Joab, Behold, the king weepeth and mourneth for Absalom.

It was told Joab, by his messengers, upon their return.

2 And the † victory that day was turned into mourning unto all the people: for the people heard say that day how the king was grieved for his son.

3 And the people gat them by stealth that day ^{a ver. 32.} into the city, as people being ashamed steal away when they flee in battle.

Not openly, and orderly, and triumphantly, as conquerors use to do; but secretly, and disorderly, and asunder, as if they were afraid and ashamed, lest David should see them, and look upon them with an evil eye, as those that had a hand in the killing of his dearly beloved son.

4 But the king ^{b ch. 15. 30.} covered his face, and the king cried with a loud voice, ^{c ch. 18. 33.} O my son Absalom, O Absalom, my son, my son!

The king covered his face, as a deep mourner, as one that desired neither to see, nor to be seen by any others.

5 And Joab came into the house to the king, and said, Thou hast shamed this day the faces of all thy servants, which this day have saved thy life, and the lives of thy sons and of thy daughters, and the lives of thy wives, and the lives of thy concubines;

Joab came into the house; either the gate-house, or his now dwelling-house in the city, to which he was retired, that he might more freely indulge himself in the expressions of his grief. Thou hast shamed the faces of all thy servants, by disappointing their just hopes of praises and rewards, and by requiring them with contempt and tacit rebukes.

Thy life, and the lives of thy sons, and of thy daughters, and of thy wives, and of thy concubines; all which Absalom struck at, and had sooner or later actually taken away, if he had not been cut off in such a manner, without expecting thy knowledge or consent; and therefore thy carriage towards them that have saved the lives of thee and thine, with the utmost hazard of their own, is highly unjust and ungrateful.

+ Heb. By loving, &c.

+ Heb. that princes or servants are not to thee.

6 † In that thou lovest thine enemies, and hatest thy friends. For thou hast declared this day, † that thou regardest neither princes nor servants: for this day I perceive, that if Absalom had lived, and all we had died this day, then it had pleased thee well.

This is not to be understood as exactly true in the rigour of it, but only comparatively and hyperbolically spoken; for David desired their preservation and Absalom's too: but it must be considered that Joab was now in a high transport of passion, which might easily hurry him into indecent expressions; and that David's carriage gave too much colour to such a suggestion; and that such sharpness of speech was in a manner necessary to awaken the king out of his lethargy, and to preserve him from the impending mischiefs.

7 Now therefore arise, go forth, and speak † comfortably unto thy servants: for I swear by the LORD, if thou go not forth, there will not tarry one with thee this night: and that will be worse unto thee than all the evil that befell thee from thy youth until now.

+ Heb. to the heart of thy servants.
Gen. 34. 3.

I swear by the Lord: this oath was either assertory of what he believed might in reason be expected, as likely in great measure to come to pass; or else promissory; or rather, minatory of what he by his influence could and would effect; and if so, it was much more than became him to say to his sovereign, and could only be excused by the circumstances, which at this time might make it seem necessary: for David was indeed to blame in taking no more notice of their good service (however Joab might be faulty also in disobeying the king's express command as to Absalom's person); and great reason there was that David, as Joab did now advise, should show himself less displeased to the people, who had exposed their lives to preserve him and his. If thou go not forth to the gate, to show thyself to thy people, and kindly and thankfully to acknowledge the good service that they have now done thee. There will not tarry one with thee this night; the hearts of all thy people will forthwith be irrecoverably alienated from thee, and they will look out for some other person on whom they may set the crown.

8 Then the king arose, and sat in the gate. And they told unto all the people, saying, Behold, the king doth sit in the gate. And all the people came before the king: for Israel had fled every man to his tent.

The king arose, and sat in the gate; he was come forth out of his retirement, and appeared in public on the seat of judgment, at the gate of the city, to receive the addresses of his people, and mind the affairs of the kingdom. All the people came before the king, to congratulate him for the victory, and to profess their subjection to him. So Joab's speech, though very severe and presumptuous, was it seems a word in season, and had that good effect which he designed.

9 ¶ And all the people were at strife throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, The king saved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand of the Philistines; and now he is † fled out of the land for Absalom.

All the people were at strife; quarrelling one with another, as the authors or abettors of this shameful and cursed rebellion, discoursing privately and publicly of David's high merits, which God, being now reconciled to David, brings afresh to their memories, and reneweth the sense of their obligations to their king, which they had lately shaken off. Thus the crowns of kings sit faster or looser upon their heads, as God is pleased to dispose of the thoughts and hearts of their people, which he can turn in an instant which way he will. Now he is fled out of the land for Absalom: now we come to reflect upon our own actions, we are sensible of our folly and unworthiness in adhering to Absalom, and thereby forcing David to flee out of the land of Canaan to the parts beyond Jordan for his security.

10 And Absalom, whom we anointed over us, is dead in battle. Now therefore why † speak ye not a word of bringing the king back?

+ Heb. are ye silent?

Whom we anointed, i. e. caused to be anointed by Zadok or Abiathar, or some other of the priests, whom they persuaded or constrained to do this office: for this being a sacred ceremony, of a great reputation, and a likely means to gain the more authority and veneration from the people to Absalom, as one whom God by his vicegerent had constituted and set up; and this rite being usual upon all translations of the government from one person to another in an extraordinary way, as this confessedly was; it is not likely that they would now omit it; though otherwise anointing is frequently put for designing or constituting. Is dead in battle; and therefore we have no obligation to him, and no hope of any thing from him. Why speak ye not a word? the people of Israel speak thus to the elders of Israel, as appears by comparing this verse with the next. Seeing their designs for Absalom disappointed, they now repented of that undertaking, and were willing to testify so much by their forwardness to bring back David, and re-establish him.

11 ¶ And king David sent to Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, saying, Speak unto the elders of Judah, saying, Why are ye the last to bring the king back to his house? seeing the speech of all Israel is come to the king, even to his house.

Speak unto the elders of Judah; who being the first and chief abettors of Absalom's rebellion, despaired of ever obtaining the king's grace and pardon, and therefore were backward to promote the king's restoration. To his house; to his royal palace at Jerusalem. To the king, even to his house, i. e. even to Mahanaim, where now the king's house and family is. Thus sometimes one word is taken in divers senses in the same verse, as Matt. viii. 22. Or rather thus, About bringing the king back to his house: for, first, Those words are very fitly and easily understood here out of the foregoing member of the verse; such defects being usual in the Hebrew, which is a very concise or short language. So it is Exod. xxii. 15; Deut. i. 4, &c. Secondly, It seems most reasonable to understand the same phrase, to his house, being twice here used in the same sense in both places, to wit, of his house in Jerusalem; and this is most agreeable to rule and to Scripture usage. Thirdly, Thus the words have more emphasis than the other way; for if the speech came to the king at Mahanaim, it matters not whether it found him in his house there, or in the gate-house, or in the field. Fourthly, David had no house in Mahanaim which could properly be called his house, as he had in Jerusalem. And then the parenthesis should close before those last words, even to his house, or even to his own house, to wit, that at Jerusalem.

12 Ye are my brethren, ye are ^e my bones and my flesh: wherefore then are ye the last to bring back the king?

My bones and my flesh; of the same tribe, and some of you of the same family, with myself; and therefore if I should revenge myself of you, which perhaps you may fear I will do when I have fully regained my power, I should but tear my own flesh in pieces, and hate my own body, which nature and interest obligeth every man to preserve. Wherefore then are ye the last to bring back the king? this delay doth not suit with the relation you have, and the affection you owe to me.

^{ch. 17. 28.} 13 'And say ye to Amasa, Art thou ^{g Bath. 1. 17.} not of my bone, and of my flesh? "God do so to me, and more also, if thou be not captain of the host before me continually in the room of Joab.

Amasa, Absalom's late general; who judging his case, above all others, desperate, might be ready to use all his interest with that tribe to delay or hinder the king's return. Of my bone, and of my flesh, i. e. my near kinsman, my nephew. See 1 Chron. ii. 16, 17. Before me, i. e. in my presence, or now whilst I live; lest he should think he promised him only the reversion of it. In the room of Joab; who, besides his other crimes, had lately exasperated the king by his wilful murder of Absalom, contrary to David's express command; and by his insolent carriage towards him. And therefore the king having now the opportunity of another person, who had a greater interest both in Judah and Israel than Joab, he gladly complies with it, that so he might both chastise Joab for his faults, and rescue himself from the bondage in which Joab had hitherto held him. Yet it is not necessary, from those words in the room of Joab, to conclude that Joab was to be displaced to make room for Amasa, but that he might be in like condition with Joab; but what follows in the next chapter makes it very probable that he was indeed displaced, and Amasa put in his place.

^{h Judg. 20. 1.} 14 And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah, ^h even as the heart of one man; so that they sent this word unto the king, Return thou, and all thy servants.

He; either, first, Amasa, by his great influence upon them. Or rather, secondly, David, by his prudent and kind message, and his free offer of pardon and favour to them, as if they had never offended.

^{i Josh. 5. 9.} 15 So the king returned, and came to Jordan. And Judah came to ⁱ Gilgal, to go to meet the king, to conduct the king over Jordan.

To attend upon the king in his passage over Jordan, and to furnish him with conveniencies for his passage and journey. See below, ver. 41, 42.

^{k ch. 16. 5.} ^{l Kings 2. 8.} 16 ¶ And ^k Shimei the son of Gera, a Benjamite, which was of Bahurim, hasted and came down with the men of Judah to meet king David.

^{l ch. 9. 2, 10.} ^{& 15. 1, 2.} 17 And there were a thousand men of Benjamin with him, and ^l Ziba the servant of the house of Saul, and his fifteen sons and his twenty servants with him; and they went over Jordan before the king.

A thousand men of Benjamin with him; whom he brought, partly to show his power and interest in the people, whereby he was able to do David either great service or great disservice; and partly as intercessors on his behalf, and as witnesses of David's clemency or severity, that in him they might see what the rest of them might expect. And Ziba; who, being conscious of his former abuse of David, and of his master Mephibosheth, which he knew the king would understand, designed to sweeten David's spirit towards him, by his great officiousness and forwardness in meeting him, and congratulating his return. They went over Jordan before the king; they did not tarry on this side Jordan, waiting till the king came over, as the most of the men of Judah did; but went over Jordan to pay their respects and duty to the king there, to express their eager and impatient desire to see the king.

18 And there went over a ferry boat to carry over the king's household, and to do [†] what he thought good. And Shimei the son of Gera fell down before the king, as he was come over Jordan;

A ferry boat, made by the men of Judah for the king's proper use; besides which there were doubtless many boats ready for the use of others. As he was come over Jordan, or rather, as he was passing, or about to pass, over Jordan; but this was beyond Jordan; for as he went over Jordan to the king, ver. 17, so doubtless he fell down before him at his first coming into his presence there.

19 And said unto the king, ^m Let not ^m 1 Sam. 22. 15. my lord impute iniquity unto me, neither do thou remember ⁿ that which thy servant did perversely the day that my lord the king went out of Jerusalem, that the king should ^o take it to his heart.

^{n ch. 16. 5, 6, &c.} 20 For thy servant doth know that I have sinned: therefore, behold, I am come the first this day of all ^p the house ^p See ch. 16. 5. of Joseph to go down to meet my lord the king.

Thy servant doth know that I have sinned; I do not excuse my sin, but with grief and shame confess it; in which case the Lord thy God is ready to pardon offenders, and so I trust wilt thou be. I am come the first; the sense of my former sin now hath, and whilst I live will, make me the first and most forward in all acts of duty and service to thy majesty. Of all the house of Joseph. Object. He was a Benjamite, chap. xvi. 5. How then doth he make himself one of the house of Joseph? Ans. The house of Joseph is here put, either, 1. For the ten tribes, which are oft distinguished from Judah, and then they are called the house of Joseph, as Zech. x. 6. But this distinction was not made before the division of the people into two kingdoms; and even after that division Benjamin was constantly reckoned with Judah, and not with Joseph or Ephraim. Or, 2. For all the tribes of Israel, who are called the children of Joseph, Psal. lxxvii. 15; compare Psal. lxxx. 1; lxxxii. 5; as well they might, not only because of Joseph's eminency, (the most eminent persons and things being oft put for the rest of the kind,) and because the rights of primogeniture were in a great part devolved upon him, 1 Chron. v. 1; but also because Joseph had been as a father to them, and had nourished them all like children, as is expressed in the Hebrew text, Gen. xlvii. 12. But in this sense this was not true, for the house of Judah came before him, ver. 15. Or rather, 3. For all the tribes except Judah, which are conveniently called the house of Joseph for the reasons now mentioned, and are fitly distinguished from Judah, because the rights of the first-born were divided between Judah and Joseph, 1 Chron. v. 2. And though Benjamin, after the division of the kingdoms, was fitly joined with Judah, because then they adhered to that tribe; yet before that time it was more conveniently joined with Joseph, because they marched under the standard of the house of Joseph, or of Ephraim, Numb. x. 22—24; whence it is that Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh are put together, Psal. lxxx. 2.

21 But Abishai the son of Zeruiah answered and said, Shall not Shimei be put to death for this, because he ^q cursed ^q Ex. 22. 28. the LORD's anointed?

^{i. e.} The king. By this expression he minds David of his former zeal against those who offered any injury to Saul, because he was the Lord's anointed, 1 Sam. xxiv. 6; xxvi. 9; and therefore demands the same justice against Shimei for his cursing of the king, which was so expressly forbidden, Exod. xxii. 28, and by the analogy of that law, Exod. xxi. 17, might seem punishable with death.

22 And David said, ^r What have I to ^r ch. 16. 10. do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be adversaries unto me? ^s shall there any man be put to death this ^s 1 Sam. 11. 13. day in Israel? for do not I know that I am this day king over Israel?

What have I to do with you? I do not ask, neither will I take, your advice in this matter. Ye sons of Zeruiah; implying that Joab's hand was in this contrivance, or that he suspected it. That ye should this day be adversaries unto me, i. e. that you put me upon things unfit for me to do, and contrary to my present interest; for it was David's interest at this time to appease the people, and reconcile them to him, and not now to give them any new distaste by acts of severity; for this would make others jealous, that David will not forgive them neither, but would watch an opportunity to be revenged on them. You pretend friendship herein, and would have me take it for an effect of your zeal for my service; but in truth you give me such counsel as my enemies would wish me to follow, that thereby I might awaken the fears and jealousies of my people which are now asleep, and cast them into a second rebellion: which either Joab and Abishai really designed by this advice, that so Joab might recover his place again, and be made necessary for the king's service; or David suspected that they did so. Do not I know that I am this day king over Israel? is not my kingdom, which for my sins was in a manner wholly lost, just now restored and assured to me? And when God hath been so merciful to me in forgiving my sin, shall I now show myself revengeful to Shimei? Shall I sully the public joy and glory of this day with an act of such severity? or shall I alienate the hearts of my people from me, now when they are returning to me?

† 1 Kin. 2. 8, 9, 37, 46. 23 Therefore 'the king said unto Shimei, Thou shalt not die. And the king swore unto him.

Thou shalt not die, to wit, this day, as Abishai desireth; nor whilst I live, nor by my hands, as it is repeated and explained, 1 Kings ii. 8; nor for this cause alone. For though David gave order to Solomon for his punishment after his death; nor was it fit for the public good that such a horrid crime should go unpunished; yet he would not have him punished for this fault alone, but for some other capital crime, which he presumed Shimei's temper would easily betray him to, and Solomon's deep wisdom would easily find out, 1 Kings ii. 9. The king swore unto him, that he would not put him to death with the sword, as it is expressed, 1 Kings ii. 8.

‡ 1 Kin. 2. 8, 9, 37, 46. 24 ¶ And "Mephibosheth the son of Saul came down to meet the king, and had neither dressed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, nor washed his clothes, from the day the king departed until the day he came again in peace.

The son of Saul, i. e. the grandson, 2 Sam. ix. 3, 6. Had neither dressed his feet; by cutting his nails, and by washing his feet, which was usual in those hot climates, and very refreshing; and therefore now neglected, as becoming a mourner. Nor trimmed his beard; but suffered it to grow very long and disorderly, as was usual with many persons in a forlorn or mournful state. Nor washed his clothes; his linen clothes. This and the former were signs that he was a true and obstinate mourner, that laid aside his usual refreshments; and they are here mentioned as evidences of the falsehood of Ziba's former relation concerning him, chap. xvi. 3.

25 And it came to pass, when he was come to Jerusalem to meet the king, that the king said unto him, "Wherefore wentest not thou with me, Mephibosheth?"

‡ ch. 16. 17. When he was come to Jerusalem; so it is supposed, that Mephibosheth, though he went to meet the king, wanted either courage or fit opportunity to speak to the king till he came to Jerusalem, because of the great multitudes that addressed themselves to the king by the way. Though it might more reasonably be thought that he could not go from Jerusalem to meet the king, as others did, because he wanted conveniences for his journey; for Ziba had gotten all his lands and goods, chap. xvi. 4, and it is not likely that he, who would not provide him an ass to ride on, or to accompany the king at his departure, would now be hasty to furnish him with one to meet the king, to whom he knew he would complain of him. But the words may seem to be better rendered thus, when he went (for so the Hebrew verb signifies, Ruth iii. 7; Jonah i. 3) from (which preposition is oft understood) Jerusalem; for there he was, chap. xvi. 3; and having continued there, as probably he did, (because he wanted an ass to convey him elsewhere, and knew not where to be with more safety,) he could not properly nor truly be said to have come thither to meet the king. Wherefore wentest not thou with me, as justice and gratitude obliged thee to do?

26 And he answered, My lord, O king, my servant deceived me: for thy servant said, I will saddle me an ass, that I may ride thereon, and go to the king; because thy servant is lame.

My servant deceived me, by carrying away the ass which I bid him saddle for me.

27 And 'he hath slandered thy servant unto my lord the king; *but my lord the king is as an angel of God: do therefore what is good in thine eyes.

‡ ch. 16. 3. 2^o ch. 14. 17, 20. As an angel of God, to distinguish between true reports and calumnies: see on chap. xiv. 20.

28 For all of my father's house were but † dead men before my lord the king: *yet didst thou set thy servant among them that did eat at thine own table.

‡ ch. 14. 17, 20. † Heb. men of death, 1 Sam. 26. 16, a ch. 9. 7, 10, 13. What right therefore have I yet to cry any more unto the king?

Before my lord the king, i. e. before thy tribunal: we were all at thy mercy; not my estate only, (which thou hast now granted to Ziba,) but my life also was in thy power, if thou hadst dealt with rigour, and as earthly Kings use to do with their predecessors' and enemies' children. For otherwise by the law of God Saul himself had not deserved to die by David's hands, as David himself confessed; much less his children, who were not to die for their father's sins, Deut. xxiv. 16. But Mephibosheth speaks like a courtier, and like an orator, aggravating matters against himself, that he might seem to justify the king's sentence, and to submit to it; and so insinuate himself into the king's favour. To cry any more unto the king, to wit, for the vindication of mine honour, and the restitution of my estate.

29 And the king said unto him, Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? I have said, Thou and Ziba divide the land.

Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? For as Ziba was present, so doubtless he was not silent, but said and did what he could to make good his former charge; which must needs occasion many words before the king. And the king was not now at leisure for long debates, and therefore makes an end of the matter. I have said, to wit, within myself; I have considered the matter as far as now I can, and upon the whole am come to this resolution, wherein I expect that thou and he do both acquiesce. Or, I do now say; I pronounce this sentence in the cause. Thou and Ziba divide the land: the meaning is either, 1. The land shall be divided between thee and him, as it was by my first order, chap. ix. 10; he and his sons managing it, and supporting themselves out of it, as they did before, and giving the rest of the profits thereof to thee. And to this the following words may well enough be accommodated, Yea, let him take all, to wit, to his own sole use. Or, 2. The right and profits of the land shall be equally divided between you. It seems a very rash and harsh sentence, and very unbecoming David's wisdom, and justice, and gratitude to Jonathan; and Ziba seems to have deserved death for falsely accusing his master of treason, rather than a recompence. But the whole transaction of the matter is not here set down. Possibly Ziba might bring plausible pretences to justify his accusation; and it might be pretended that Mephibosheth neglected the trimming and dressing himself only in policy, and that for a season, till David and his family had destroyed one another by their civil wars, and given him a fit opportunity to take the crown. So that David might really be at a loss what to determine. And Ziba had given proof of his affections to David by an act of kindness which could not be without hazard to himself, chap. xvi. 1, 2, which Mephibosheth had not done. And possibly this was only a present sentence, and David resolved to examine things more thoroughly when he had more leisure, and then to make a more full and final determination of the business; which also he might do, though it be not here recorded; for we must not think that nothing was done and said about such things but what is mentioned in Scripture. Besides, Ziba being a powerful man, and the crown not yet firmly fixed upon the king's head, David might think fit to suspend his final sentence till a more convenient season, and not now to provoke him too much by taking away all his estate from him at once, but to proceed against him by degrees. However, this is certain, we cannot pass a right judgment upon this action of David's, unless we understood all the circumstances of it, which we cannot pretend to do.

30 And Mephibosheth said unto the king, Yea, let him take all, forasmuch as my lord the king is come again in peace unto his own house.

I am contented to lose all, being fully satisfied with the happiness of seeing my dear and dread sovereign restored to his crown, and truth and peace returned to his kingdom.

b 1 Kin. 2. 7. 31 ¶ And ^b Barzillai the Gileadite came down from Rogelim, and went over Jordan with the king, to conduct him over Jordan.

And then to cross Jordan again, and so return to his native land.

c ch. 17. 27. 32 Now Barzillai was a very aged man, even fourscore years old: and ^c he had provided the king of sustenance while he lay at Mahanaim; for he was a very great man.

33 And the king said unto Barzillai, Come thou over with me, and I will feed thee with me in Jerusalem.

+ Heb. How many days are the years of my life? 34 And Barzillai said unto the king, † How long have I to live, that I should go up with the king unto Jerusalem?

Seeing my time of continuance in this world is but short, it is not advisable to change my habitation, or to give thee or myself any further trouble.

d Ps. 90. 10. 35 I am this day ^d fourscore years old: and can I discern between good and evil? can thy servant taste what I eat or what I drink? can I hear any more the voice of singing men and singing women? wherefore then should thy servant be yet a burden unto my lord the king?

My senses are grown dull, and incapable of relishing the delights of the court. I am past taking pleasure in delicious tastes, or sweet music, and other such delights of the court. I am through age both useless and burdensome to others, and therefore most improper for a court life.

36 Thy servant will go a little way over Jordan with the king: and why should the king recompense it me with such a reward?

A little way over Jordan; a little onward in thy way to Jerusalem, and then return. Recompense it me, or, recompense me, to wit, for my small kindness to thee at Mahanaim, which was but a part of my duty to thee.

37 Let thy servant, I pray thee, turn back again, that I may die in mine own city, and be buried by the grave of my father and of my mother. But behold thy servant ^e Chimham; let him go over with my lord the king; and do to him what shall seem good unto thee.

Chimham, Barzillai's son, 1 Kings ii. 7.

38 And the king answered, Chimham shall go over with me, and I will do to him that which shall seem good unto thee: and whatsoever thou shalt † require of me, that will I do for thee.

39 And all the people went over Jordan. And when the king was come over, the king ^f kissed Barzillai, and blessed him; and he returned unto his own place.

40 Then the king went on to Gilgal, and † Chimham went on with him: and all the people of Judah conducted the king, and also half the people of Israel.

Conducted the king; attended upon him on his journey towards Jerusalem. And also half the people of Israel; whereas the men of Judah came entirely and unanimously to the king, as is noted here, and above, ver. 14, the Israelites of the other tribes came in but slowly, and by halves, as being no less guilty of the rebellion than the tribe of Judah; but not encouraged and invited to come in by such a particular and gracious message as they were. And this is here mentioned as the occasion both of the contention here following, and of the sedition, chap. xx.

41 ¶ And, behold, all the men of Israel came to the king, and said unto the king, Why have our brethren the men of Judah stolen thee away, and ^g have brought the king, and his household, and all David's men with him, over Jordan? ^{g ver. 15.}

All the men of Israel, to wit, such as were present. Stolen thee away, i. e. conveyed thee over Jordan hastily and privily, not expecting nor desiring our consent and concurrence in the business, which we were no less ready to afford than they. It is also a secret reflection upon the king, for permitting this precipitation. All David's men, i. e. all thy men; such changes of persons being most frequent in the Hebrew language; thy officers, and guards, and soldiers. This is mentioned as an aggravation of their fault, that they did not only carry the king over Jordan, but all his men too, without asking their advice.

42 And all the men of Judah answered the men of Israel, Because the king is ^h near of kin to us: wherefore then be ye angry for this matter? have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift? ^{h ver. 12.}

Near of kin to us; of the same tribe with us, and therefore both oweth the more respect to us, and might expect and challenge more respect from us. Hath he given us any gift? we have neither sought nor gained any advantage to ourselves hereby, but only discharged our duty to the king, and used all expedition in bringing him back, which you also should have done, and not have come in by halves, and so coldly as you have done. See ver. 40.

43 And the men of Israel answered the men of Judah, and said, We have ten parts in the king, and we have also more right in David than ye: why then did ye † despise us, that our advice should not be first had in bringing back our king? And ⁱ the words of the men of Judah were fiercer than the words of the men of Israel. ^{i See Judg. 8. 1. & 12. 1.}

We have ten parts; they say but ten, though strictly there were eleven; either because they accounted Joseph (which comprehends both Ephraim and Manasseh under it) for one tribe, as it is sometimes reckoned; or because Simeon, whose lot lay within the tribe of Judah, were joined with them in this action. In the king, i. e. in the kingdom, and the management of the affairs of it; the word king being put for kingdom, as it is 2 Chron. xxiii. 20; Isa. xxiii. 15; Dan. vii. 17; Hos. x. 15. Or, in the king's person, and the disposal thereof. We have also more right in David than ye; as in the general we have more right in the king and kingdom, so particularly we have more right in David, than you, because you were the first beginners and the most zealous promoters of this rebellion; and as David is nearest of kin to you, so he hath been most injured by you; howsoever, as he is king, we justly claim a greater interest in him than you, inasmuch as we are the far greatest part of his subjects. That our advice should not be first had in bringing back our king; that we being the far greater number, should not have the first and chiefest vote in this action. But the words are by some, and may well be, rendered interrogatively, And was not my word first about bringing the king back? Did not we make the first mention of it, before you could be drawn to it? For so indeed they did, ver. 11; and therefore the neglect of their advice herein might seem more inexcusable. The words of the men of Judah were fiercer; instead of mollifying them with gentle words, they answered them with greater fierceness and insolency; so that David durst not interpose himself in the matter.

CHAP. XX.

By occasion of this quarrel Sheba stirreth up Israel to sedition, 1, 2. David's ten concubines are shut up in perpetual prison, 3. Amasa is slain by Joab, 4—10. He and Abishai pursue Sheba unto Abel, 11—15. The citizens, by the advice of a wise woman, cut off his head, and cast it over the wall to Joab, 16—22. David's officers, 23—26.

cir. 1022.

AND there happened to be there a man of Belial, whose name was Sheba, the son of Bichri, a Benjamite: and he blew a trumpet, and said, ^a We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: ^b every man to his tents, O Israel.

There happened to be there; his presence was casual in itself, though certain, and ordered by God's providence. Man of Belial; a lawless person, one that attempted to shake off the yoke of civil authority. See Deut. xiii. 13. Benjamite; aggrieved at the translation of the kingdom from Saul and that tribe to David. We have no part in David: the tribe of Judah have monopolized the king to themselves, and will not allow us any share in him; let them therefore enjoy him alone, and let us seek out a new king. The son of Jesse; an expression of contempt, implying their rejection of him, that he was no more to be owned as their king, but as a private person, as the son of Jesse. Every man to his tents; let us all desist from this unthankful office of bringing the king back, and go each to our homes, that we may consider, and then meet together to choose a new king.

2 So every man of Israel went up from after David, and followed Sheba the son of Bichri: but the men of Judah clave unto their king, from Jordan even to Jerusalem.

Every man of Israel, i. e. the generality of those Israelites who were present.

3 ¶ And David came to his house at Jerusalem; and the king took the ten women his ^c concubines, whom he had left to keep the house, and put them in ^d ward, and fed them, but went not in unto them. So they were ^e shut up unto the day of their death, ^f living in widowhood.

Put them in ward; partly, because they had not vigorously opposed Absalom's lustful desire, as they should have done, even with the hazard of their lives; and partly, lest the sight of them should renew the memory of Absalom's filthiness, and of their own and David's reproach, which it was fit to bury in perpetual oblivion; and partly, because it might appear incestuous to have to do with those who had been defiled by his own son; and partly, because as David would not, so it was not now convenient that any other man should have any conjugal conversation with them.

4 ¶ Then said the king to Amasa, ^d † Assemble me the men of Judah within three days, and be thou here present.

Assemble me the men of Judah, and march in the head of them as their general, as I have promised thee, chap.

xix. 13. Within three days; which he supposed Amasa, having been their late general, could easily do; and the business required haste. Be thou here present within that time to receive orders and instructions from me.

5 So Amasa went to assemble the men of Judah: but he tarried longer than the set time which he had appointed him.

Either because the people, being wearied out by the late civil war, were not forward to engage in another; or because the soldiers had more affection to Joab than to their new general, to whose ill conduct possibly they might impute their unsuccessfulness in the last battle; or because Amasa for his own interest might seek delays, to render himself more necessary and useful to the king, and to keep up his honourable and profitable employment, which is the common policy of such men.

6 And David said to Abishai, Now shall Sheba the son of Bichri do us more harm than did Absalom: take thou ^e thy lord's servants, and pursue after him, lest he get him fenced cities, and † escape us.

David said to Abishai; not to Joab, lest by this means he should recover his place, and Amasa be discontented, and David's fidelity in making good his promise to Amasa be questioned. Thy lord's servants, i. e. my guards that attend upon my person, and the other soldiers who are now present with me. He speaks of himself in the third person, as is very frequent. For it is not probable he would now call Joab his lord, whom he had lately deposed; nor Amasa, who had not yet taken actual possession of his place, nor had the command over the king's guards.

7 And there went out after him Joab's men, and the ^f Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and all the mighty men: and they went out of Jerusalem, to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

Joab's men; the remainders of Joab's army who were there present, with whom also Joab might go as a reformer, watching an opportunity to do what he designed. Of the Cherethites and the Pelethites, see on chap. viii. 18.

8 When they were at the great stone which is in Gibeon, Amasa went before them. And Joab's garment that he had put on was girded unto him, and upon it a girdle with a sword fastened upon his loins in the sheath thereof; and as he went forth it fell out.

Amasa went before them; having gathered some forces, and given due orders for the rest to follow him, he returned to Jerusalem, and by the king's command went after those mentioned ver. 7; and being come up to them at the place where they waited for him, he put himself into the head of Joab's men, and the Cherethites and the Pelethites, and such as he had brought along with him, and marched before them as their chief and general. Girded unto him, after the manner of travellers and soldiers. As he went forth to meet and salute Amasa, who was coming towards him to do him honour. It fell out; things having (it is likely) been so contrived by Joab, that upon the least motion of his body his sword should drop out, and he might take it up without raising Amasa's suspicion.

9 And Joab said to Amasa, Art thou in health, my brother? ^g And Joab took Amasa by the beard with the right hand to kiss him.

As the manner of ancient times was, when they kissed and saluted one another.

10 But Amasa took no heed to the sword that was in Joab's hand: so ^h he smote him therewith ⁱ in the fifth rib, and shed out his bowels to the ground, and † struck him not again; and he died. So Joab and Abishai his brother pursued after Sheba the son of Bichri.

it seemed, casually, he supposed that Joab intended only to put it into its scabbard, and therefore took no care to defend himself against the stroke. In the fifth rib: see on chap. ii. 23. Struck him not again; he despatched him at one stroke, or gave him his death's wound at the first blow, and needed not to smite him again. Joab now boldly resumed his former place, and marched in the head of the army. It is not strange that Amasa's soldiers did not fight to revenge his death; partly because not many of them were yet come up, but came by degrees, as the following verses show; and partly because Joab's interest and authority with the military men was very great, especially with David's guards, who were here present, and who had no kindness for Amasa, as having been the general of the rebellious army; and, as they might think, was not fit to be put into a place of so great power and trust.

¶ And one of Joab's men stood by him, and said, He that favoureth Joab, and he that is for David, let him go after Joab.

One of Joab's men, left there on purpose to deliver the following message. He that favoureth Joab; he that would have Joab to be general, rather than such a perfidious rebel and traitor as Amasa. He that is for David; he that wisheth David good success against Sheba, and against all rebels; whereby he implies that though this fact of his was done against the king's command, yet it was for his interest and defence.

12 And Amasa wallowed in blood in the midst of the highway. And when the man saw that all the people stood still, he removed Amasa out of the highway into the field, and cast a cloth upon him, when he saw that every one that came by him stood still.

Wallowed, Heb. rolled himself, being in the pangs of death; yet having so much life left as to move himself a little, though not to raise himself up from his place. In blood; in his own blood, which was shed there. All the people, to wit, the soldiers which were upon their march. Stood still; wondering at the spectacle, and inquiring into the author and occasion of it. He removed Amasa out of the highway into the field; perceiving that it both incensed them against Joab, and hindered the king's present service.

13 When he was removed out of the highway, all the people went on after Joab, to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

¶ And he went through all the tribes of Israel unto ^kAbel, and to Beth-maachah, and all the Berites: and they were gathered together, and went also after him.

He went; either, 1. Joab, who pursued Sheba through all the tribes as far as Abel. Or rather, 2. Sheba, who was last mentioned, who marched from tribe to tribe to stir them up to sedition; and to him the following words seem best to agree. Unto Abel, and to Beth-maachah, or rather, unto Abel, even to Beth-maachah, i. e. unto Abel-beth-maachah, as this place is called here in the Hebrew text, ver. 15; 1 Kings xv. 20; 2 Kings xv. 29, to distinguish it from other Abels; and to signify that this was that Abel which was in the tribe of Naphtali in the northern border of Canaan, towards that part of Syria called Maachah, 2 Sam. x. 8. The Berites; such as lived in the city or territory of Beeroth of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 25, who being of the same tribe, if not city, with Sheba, and his greatest acquaintance and friends, or being most implacable against David, adhered to Sheba, and followed him through all the tribes of Israel. They were gathered together, to wit, the tribes of Israel, i. e. a considerable number of them; as might well be expected, when the discontents were so high and general. After him, i. e. after Sheba.

15 And they came and besieged him in Abel of Beth-maachah, and they ^lcast up a bank against the city, and [¶]it stood in the trench: and all the people that were with Joab [†]battered the wall, to throw it down.

They came, i. e. Joab and his army, which is easily understood, both from the foregoing and following verses. They cast up a bank; from whence they might either batter the wall, or shoot at those who defended it against them who should assault it. See 2 Kings xix. 32; Jer. xxxii. 24; xxxiii. 4. Otherwise, they threw down the bank of the city, which they had raised up to defend the city on the weakest side. It stood in the trench, i. e. the bank stood in or near to the trench, or wall of the city; so that the city was in great danger of being taken. Otherwise, the city stood within the trench, or wall, being defended only by a single trench, or a weak wall; the bank which was raised up there to defend it being thrown down.

16 ¶ Then cried a wise woman out of the city, Hear, hear; say, I pray you, unto Joab, Come near hither, that I may speak with thee.

17 And when he was come near unto her, the woman said, Art thou Joab? And he answered, I am he. Then she said unto him, Hear the words of thine handmaid. And he answered, I do hear.

18 Then she spake, saying, ¶ They were wont to speak in old time, saying, They shall surely ask counsel at Abel: and so they ended the matter.

According to this translation the sense is, This city which thou art about to destroy is no mean and contemptible one, but so honourable and considerable for its wisdom, and the wise people in it, that when any differences did arise among any of the neighbours, they used proverbially to say, We will ask the opinion and advice of the men of Abel about it, and we will stand to their arbitration; and so all parties were satisfied, and disputes ended. But there is another translation in the margin, embraced also by some others, which seems to be the best: They (i. e. the citizens of this city) plainly (or, commonly) spake (among themselves) in the beginning, (to wit, when Sheba and his men first came into the city, and they were informed, that Joab was pursuing him,) saying, Surely they will ask of Abel, and so make an end. They will peaceably expostulate the business with us, and inquire why we received Sheba into our city; and whether we would deliver him up into their hands, and would inform us of the reason of their hostile attempt upon us, and offer to us conditions of peace, which by God's law, Deut. xx. 10, they were to do even to strange, and much more to Israelitish cities. So she doth both modestly reprove Joab for the neglect of this duty, and oblige him to the performance of it.

19 I am one of them that are peaceable and faithful in Israel: thou seekest to destroy a city and a mother in Israel: why wilt thou swallow up ^mthe inheritance of the Lord?

Or, I (to wit, the city of Abel, in whose name and person she speaks this) am one of the peaceable and faithful cities of Israel. Whatsoever Sheba may design, whom we have innocently received into our city before we well understood the matter, we of this city abhor the thoughts of warring and rebelling against the king, as having had no hand in Absalom's late rebellion: which is probable enough, considering both their situation in the utmost borders of the land, very remote from the seat of that civil war; and their open profession of their peaceableness and fidelity or loyalty to the king; which had been impudent if they had been so lately involved in the last war and rebellion. A city and a mother, i. e. a mother; for great cities are commonly called mothers; as lesser towns or villages subject to them, and depending upon them for direction and defence, are called their daughters, as Ezek. xvi. 27, 46. The inheritance of the Lord, i. e. a considerable part of that land which God hath chosen for his peculiar possession. The destruction which thou art about to bring upon us is an injury also to Israel, and to the God of Israel.

20 And Joab answered and said, Far be it, far be it from me, that I should swallow up or destroy.

21 The matter is not so : but a man of mount Ephraim, Sheba the son of Bichri † by name, hath lifted up his hand against the king, even against David : deliver him only, and I will depart from the city. And the woman said unto Joab, Behold, his head shall be thrown to thee over the wall.

† Heb. by his name.

A man of Mount Ephraim. Quest. How can this be so, when he is called a Benjamite, ver. 1? Ans. Either he was a Benjamite by birth, but dwelt in the tribe of Ephraim, as many did upon several occasions dwell out of their own tribes; or Mount Ephraim was a place in Benjamin, which might be so called, either because it was upon the borders of Ephraim, and looked towards it; or from some notable action or event of the Ephraimites in that place. Compare chap. xviii. 6. Hath lift up his hand, i. e. taken up arms, or raised rebellion. His head shall be thrown to thee over the wall; which she undertook, because she knew the present temper and great fears of the citizens, and soldiers too; and that considering their evident and extreme danger, they were generally desirous of peace, from which they were restrained only by Sheba's authority and interest; and therefore did not doubt by God's blessing upon her wise counsel to effect it, as indeed she did. And it is not unlikely that this woman might be a governess in that city; for though this office was commonly performed by men, yet were not the women wholly excluded, but sometimes employed in the government; as we see in Deborah, who judged Israel, Judg. iv. 4; and queen Athaliah, 2 Kings xi.

22 Then the woman went unto all the people in her wisdom. And they cut off the head of Sheba the son of Bichri, and cast it out to Joab. And he blew a trumpet, and they † retired from the city, every man to his tent. And Joab returned to Jerusalem unto the king.

In her wisdom prudently treated with them about it, either severally or jointly, as she saw fit; representing to them the certainty and nearness of all their ruin, if they did not speedily comply with her desires, and certain deliverance if they did. They retired; Joab and his army which besieged them.

23 ¶ Now Joab was over all the host of Israel: and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites and over the Pelethites:

Joab was over all the host of Israel: the good success of this and of the former expedition, under the conduct of Joab, had so fixed his interest in the army, and others of David's fastest friends, that the king could not without danger to the public weal displace him.

24 And Adoram was over the tribute: and Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud was recorder:

Over the tribute; and the receiver and manager of the king's public revenue. See on 1 Kings iv. 6. Jehoshaphat was recorder: see 2 Sam. viii. 16.

25 And Sheva was scribe: and Zadok and Abiathar were the priests:

See 2 Sam. viii. 17; xv. 35.

26 And Ira also the Jairite was a chief ruler about David.

The Jairite; so called from his birth or dwelling in the country of Jair in Gilead, Numb. xxxii. 41; Judg. x. 4. A chief ruler; either the president of the king's council; or his chief minister (as the Hebrew word cohen signifies) of state, instead of Ahithophel; or in some other very high place near the king's person. Compare 2 Sam. viii. 18, where this title is given to David's sons, the chief of which were now cut off. And these things are here repeated with some alteration to show that David was now fully re-established in his former estate.

CHAP. XXI.

A three years' famine, declared by God to be for the Gibeonites' sake, ceaseth by their hanging seven of Saul's sons, 1—9. Rizpah preserveth the dead bodies, 10, 11. David burieth the bones of Saul and Jonathan, as also of them that were hung up, in his father's sepulchre, 12—14. Four battles against the Philistines, wherein four valiants of David slay four giants, 15—22.

THEN there was a famine in the days of David three years, year after year; and David † enquired of the LORD. And the LORD answered, It is for Saul, and for his bloody house, because he slew the Gibeonites.

Then there was a famine: when? Either, first, after Absalom's and Sheba's rebellion, as it is here related; or rather, secondly, in some other time before. It is well known and confessed that the particle then doth not always note that the thing was done in that order in which it is mentioned, but is oft of an indefinite signification; as also that the Scripture in its histories and relations doth not always observe the order of time, but the order of things, putting that after which was done before, as occasion requires. And so it seems to be here. The things related here and chap. xxiv. are by the most and best interpreters conceived to have been done long before Absalom's rebellion. And this opinion is not without sufficient grounds. First, This particle then is here explained, in the days, i. e. during the life and reign of David; which general and indefinite words seem to be added as an intimation that these things were not done after the next foregoing passages, for then the sacred writer would rather have added, after these things, or some such expression, as it is 2 Chron. xxxii. 1, and in many other places. Secondly, Here are divers passages which it seems very improbable to ascribe to the last years of David's reign: such as these, first, That Saul's sin against the Gibeonites should so long remain unpunished. And indeed that this was done, and Saul's seven sons hanged by David's order before that time, seems plainly to be intimated by that passage, 2 Sam. xvi. 8, where he is charged with the blood of the house of Saul; for which there was not the least colour till this time. Secondly, That David should not remove the bones of Saul and Jonathan to their proper place, here, ver. 12—14, till that time. Thirdly, That the Philistines should wage war with David again and again, ver. 15, &c., so long after he had fully subdued them, chap. viii. 1; and that David in his old age should attempt to fight with a Philistine giant, or that his people should suffer him to do so. Fourthly, That David should then have so vehement a desire to number his people, chap. xxiv. 1, &c., which being an act of youthful heat and vanity, seems not at all to agree with his old age, nor with that state of deep humiliation and great affliction in which he then was. And the reason why these matters are put here out of their proper order is plainly this, because David's sin being once related, it was very convenient that David's punishments inflicted for it should immediately succeed; this being very frequent in Scripture story, to put those things together which belong to one matter, though they happened at several times. And this is the more considerable, because it tends to the clearing of that great difficulty, 2 Sam. xv. 7. David inquired of the Lord concerning the reason of his displeasure, and this judgment. Because he slew the Gibeonites; which was not only an act of cruelty, but also of perfidiousness and perjury, because it was a direct and public violation of that solemn oath given to them for their security by Joshua and the princes, in the name of all the Israelites, of that and of succeeding generations, and consequently a great scandal to the true religion, and the professors of it, and a mean to discourage others from embracing it, as the Gibeonites had done. Quest. Why did not God punish Saul whilst he was alive for this fault, but his innocent children, and David, and the Israelites of this age? Ans. First, God did severely punish Saul for this and his other sins. Secondly, As God may justly inflict temporal punishments upon any offender, either in his person or in his posterity, when he pleaseth; so it is meet he should take his own time for it; and it is folly and wickedness in us to quarrel with God for so doing. Thirdly, The Israelites might sundry ways make themselves guilty of Saul's sin, though it be not particularly mentioned in Scripture; advising or encouraging him to it; or by assisting him in the execution of it; or by conniving at it; or by rejoicing in it for some worldly advantage which they received or expected from it; or by not repairing the injuries which Saul had done them as far as they might. And some of these ways David himself might be involved in the guilt, although indeed this evil fell principally upon the people. And whereas many of the people probably were innocent of that crime, yet they also were guilty of many other sins, for which God might punish them, though he took this occasion for it. And it may be further observed, that God is pleased many times severely to punish lesser delinquents, and to suffer the greater for the present to go unpunished; and that not only to manifest his own sovereign power and liberty, but also to give the world thereby assurance of a future judgment, and punishments reserved for the next life.

2 And the king called the Gibeonites, and said unto them; (now the Gibeonites were not of the children of Israel, but of the remnant of the Amorites; and the children of Israel had sworn unto them: and Saul sought to slay them in his zeal to the children of Israel and Judah.)

Saul sought to slay them, i. e. he sought occasions and pretences how he might cut them off with some colour of law or justice, diligently searching out and aggravating their faults, and punishing them worse than they deserved; oppressing them with excessive labours, and openly killing some of them, and intending by degrees to wear them out. In his zeal to the children of Israel and Judah; conceiving, or rather pretending, that it was not for the honour, nor comfort, nor advantage of God's people, to nourish any of that viperous brood in their bosoms; and that howsoever Joshua and the princes which then were, had by their fraud been drawn into an oath to preserve them, Josh. ix. 15, yet in truth that oath was contrary to God's command, Exod. xxiii. 32; Deut. vii. 2, and therefore (as he thought) not to be observed. This was his pretence. But how little zeal he had for God, or for the public good of his people, is evident by the whole course of his life; and therefore it is more than probable he had some particular motive or design in the case; either because some of them had highly provoked him, for whose sake he would be revenged of the whole race; or because, they being cut off, their estates might be forfeited to the crown; or for some other reason now unknown.

3 Wherefore David said unto the Gibeonites, What shall I do for you? and wherewith shall I make the atonement, that ye may bless the inheritance of the LORD?

Unto the Gibeonites; to some of the chief of them, who were to impart it to the rest. What shall I do for you? what satisfaction do you expect or require for the injuries formerly done to you? That ye may bless the inheritance of the Lord; that by your acknowledgment of satisfaction received, the guilt and curse may be removed from the land and people of God, and by this means, as also by your prayers, God may be reconciled, and may restore his blessing of plenty to us, which hitherto he hath denied us.

|| Or, It is not silver nor gold that we have to do with Saul or his house, neither pertaining to us to kill, &c.

4 And the Gibeonites said unto him, We will have no silver nor gold of Saul, nor of his house; neither for us shalt thou kill any man in Israel. And he said, What ye shall say, that will I do for you.

Any man in Israel; except Saul's family, as it here follows. What you shall say, to wit, in any reason, and as far as God's law will permit.

|| Or, cut us off

5 And they answered the king, The man that consumed us, and that || devised against us that we should be destroyed from remaining in any of the coasts of Israel,

That we should be either killed, or banished from the land of Israel; which is as bad as death to us, because here, and here only, God is truly worshipped and enjoyed. Whereby it seems divers of them were hearty proselytes, and godly persons; and therefore God is more severe in punishing the injuries done to them. Compare 1 Sam. xxvi. 19.

6 Let seven men of his sons be delivered unto us, and we will hang them up unto the LORD in Gibeah of Saul, whom the LORD did choose. And the king said, I will give them.

c 1 Sam. 10. 26. & 11. & d 1 Sam. 10. 24. 1 Or, chosen of the LORD.

Unto the Lord; to vindicate his honour, which was injured by Saul's violation of the oath and covenant of God, and to appease his wrath. In Gibeah of Saul; Saul's country, 1 Sam. x. 26; xi. 4, for their greater shame. Whom the Lord did choose; this is added to aggravate Saul's offence, that it was committed not only against them, but also against the Lord, who had chosen and advanced him, and therefore did little deserve this from Saul's hand, to have his laws broken, and his name dishonoured by perjury. I will give them; having doubtless consulted God in the matter, who as he had before declared Saul's bloody house to be the causes of this judgment, so now commanded that justice should be done upon it, and that the remaining branches of it should be cut off; as sufficiently appears from hence, that God was satisfied and well pleased with the action; which he would not have been, if David had done it without his command; for then it had been a sinful action of David's, and contrary to a double law of God, Deut. xxi. 23; xxiv. 16, which none but God himself could dispense with.

7 But the king spared Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan the son of Saul, because of the LORD's oath that was between them, between David and Jonathan the son of Saul.

e 1 Sam. 18. 3. & 20. 8, 15. & 23. 18.

The king spared Mephibosheth; for the Gibeonites desiring only such a number, without designing the persons, it was at David's choice whom to spare. Or, he prevailed with the Gibeonites that they did not demand him; and with the Lord, that he might not be one of those who were devoted to destruction. The son of Jonathan: this is expressly added, to distinguish him from the other Mephibosheth, ver. 8.

8 But the king took the two sons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bare unto Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth; and the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom she brought up for Adriel the son of Barzillai the Meholathite:

f ch. 3. 7.

|| Or, Michal's sister. + Heb. bare to Adriel. 1 Sam. 18. 19.

Rizpah; Saul's concubine, ver. 11; chap. iii. 7. The five sons of Michal, or, of Michal's sister, to wit, Merab; for Michal had no children, 2 Sam. vi. 23, nor was she married to this Adriel, but to Phalti, or Phaltiel, the son of Laish, 1 Sam. xxv. 44; 2 Sam. iii. 15; and Merab her sister was married to this very Adriel the Meholathite, 1 Sam. xviii. 19. And it must be remembered, that the Hebrew language is very short, and full of ellipses or defects of words, which yet may be easily understood from the sense. Particularly relative words are oft lacking, and to be supplied; as Goliath is put for Goliath's brother, here, ver. 19, and uncle for uncle's son, Jer. xxxii. 7, 12. Or, the sons of Merab are called the sons of Michal, to wit, by adoption; or, the near kindred and next heirs of Michal, and brought up by her; for upon that and such-like accounts the title of son is oft given in Scripture, as Gen. xlviii. 5; Exod. ii. 10; Deut. xxv. 5, 6; Ruth i. 11, 12; iv. 17. Quest. But why then are not these called the sons of Merab? Ans. Because they were better known by their relation to Michal, who was David's wife, and, it may be, alive at this time, and having no children of her own, took these, and bred them up as her own; when Merab was now a more obscure person, and possibly dead many years before this. Whom she brought up; for so this Hebrew verb, which primarily and properly signifies to bear, is sometimes used, as Gen. i. 23; Ruth iv. 17, because the education of children is a kind of bearing of them, as requiring frequently no less care and pains than the bearing doth; whence it is that nurses are reputed as mothers, and sometimes go under that name both in sacred and profane writers. See Ruth iv. 16, 17; and compare Gen. xvi. 2; xxx. 3; Numb. xi. 12; Gal. iv. 19. The Meholathite; of Abel-meholah in the tribe of Benjamin, Judg. vii. 22; so he is here called by way of distinction from Barzillai the Gileadite, chap. xix. 31.

9 And he delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them in the hill ^g before the Lord: and they fell all seven together, and were put to death in the days of harvest, in the first days, in the beginning of barley harvest.

He delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites. Quest. How could David do this, when he had sworn that he would not cut off Saul's seed, 1 Sam. xxiv. 21, 22? Ans. Because he had special warrant and direction from God about it, who, as all confess, can dispense with men's oaths and with his own laws when he sees fit. And that he did so here is manifest, because God was pleased with it, and removed the judgment upon it; whereas otherwise David had been guilty of the same sin with Saul, to wit, of the breach of his oath and covenant, for which this famine was inflicted. See the note on 1 Sam. xxiv. 22. In the hill, or, in a hill, in or near Gibeah; in a conspicuous place, for their greater infamy, and for the caution and terror of others who should make any attempt upon the Gibeonites for the future. Before the Lord; as a sacrifice offered up to God to appease his wrath; or, unto the Lord, as was said, ver. 6. They fell, i. e. died; for so the word to fall is oft used, as Exod. xix. 21; 1 Chron. xxi. 14; Psal. xci. 7; Jer. xxxix. 18; Hos. v. 5; or were executed. The barley harvest was before the wheat harvest.

10 ¶ And ^h Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, ⁱ from the beginning of harvest until water dropped upon them out of heaven, and suffered neither the birds of the air to rest on them by day, nor the beasts of the field by night.

Spread it for her, as a tent to dwell in; being informed that their bodies were not to be taken away speedily, as the course of the law was in other and ordinary cases, Deut. xxi. 23, but were to continue there until God was entreated, and did remove the present judgment. And God was herein pleased to dispense with his own law, that it might plainly appear that these were not put to death by David for politic reasons, as that he and his sons might be freed from competitors, which doubtless David's enemies were ready to suggest; but by God's special command, who was pleased to execute this judgment upon them, as partly and principally for the punishment of Saul's sin, so secondarily for the establishing of David's throne to himself and to his seed for ever, as he had promised. Upon the rock; in some convenient place in a rock, near adjoining. Until water dropped upon them out of heaven, i. e. until they were taken down; which was not to be done till God had given rain as a sign of his favour, and a mean to remove the famine, which was caused by the want of it. To rest on them, i. e. on their carcasses. Nor the beasts of the field; from which she might preserve herself and them by divers methods.

11 And it was told David what Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, the concubine of Saul, had done.

It was told David; who heard it with so much approbation, that he thought fit to imitate her piety, being by her example provoked to do what hitherto he had neglected, to bestow an honourable interment upon the remains of Saul and Jonathan, and, with them, upon those that were now put to death, that the honour done to them herein might be some comfort to this dejected and disconsolate widow.

12 ¶ And David went and took the bones of Saul and the bones of Jonathan his son from the men of ^k Jabesh-gilead, which had stolen them from the street of Beth-shan, where the ^l Philistines had hanged them, when the Philistines had slain Saul in Gilboa:

k 1 Sam. 31.

13 And he brought up from thence the bones of Saul and the bones of Jonathan his son; and they gathered the bones of them that were hanged.

Having first burnt off the flesh which remained upon them when they were taken down. Compare 1 Sam. xxxi. 10, &c.

14 And the bones of Saul and Jonathan his son buried they in the country of Benjamin in ^m Zelah, in the sepulchre of Kish his father: and they performed all that the king commanded. And after that ⁿ God was intreated for the land.

Zelah; a place in Benjamin, mentioned Josh. xviii. 28. After that; after those things were done which were before related, i. e. after they were hanged up; for by that God was pacified, and not by their burial. So the relative belongs to the remoter antecedent. Or if this relate to what was last mentioned, the meaning is, that God was pleased to restore the blessing of plenty to the land.

15 ¶ Moreover the Philistines had yet war again with Israel; and David went down, and his servants with him, and fought against the Philistines: and David waxed faint.

cir. 1018

These wars, though here related, were transacted long before this time: of which see the notes on ver. 1. For it is no way probable, either that the Philistines, being so fully and perfectly subdued by David, chap. viii. 1, should in his days be in a capacity of waging war with the Israelites; or that David in his old age would undertake to fight with a giant, or that his people would permit him to do so.

16 And Ishbi-benob, which was of the sons of ^o the giant, the weight of whose ^p spear weighed three hundred shekels of brass in weight, he being girded with a new sword, thought to have slain David.

o Or, Rapha.

The giant; so called by way of eminency. Or, of Rapha, a giant so called. The weight of whose spear weighed three hundred shekels: see 1 Sam. xvii. 5. With a new sword, or rather, with a new girdle or belt; for, first, This was the usual habit of soldiers, 1 Sam. xviii. 4; 2 Sam. xviii. 11; xx. 8; 1 Kings ii. 5; Isa. v. 27, and when it was of an extraordinary fashion and price, an ensign of dignity and command in the army, Ezek. xxiii. 15. So this may be mentioned to note that this was the first time either of his going out to fight, or of his advancement to some eminent place in the army; which made him desirous to signalize himself with some great action. Secondly, This supplement is more natural and usual, the word girdle being easily supplied from the word being girded; such ellipses of conjugate words being frequent in the Hebrew tongue, as Numb. xi. 14; Psal. lxxvi. 12; Matt. xx. 12. Thirdly, The newness of the sword seems to have no emphasis nor significance for the present purpose, seeing an old and tried sword would seem more considerable for his encouragement than one new and unproved.

17 But Abishai the son of Zeruiah succoured him, and smote the Philistine, and killed him. Then the men of David swore unto him, saying, "Thou shalt go no more out with us to battle, that thou quench not the ^q light of Israel.

Lest thou be slain, and thereby thy people be ruined.

Good kings are in Scripture justly called the light of their people, as 1 Kings xi. 36; xv. 4; Psal. cxxxii. 17, because the beauty and glory, the conduct and direction, the comfort, and safety, and welfare of a people depend upon them, and come from them.

18 ^g And it came to pass after this, that there was again a battle with the Philistines at Gob: then ^r Sibbechai the Hushathite slew ^h Saph, which was of the sons of ^h the giant.

After this; after the battle last mentioned. At Gob, or, in Gezer, as it is 1 Chron. xx. 4; whereby it seems Gob and Gezer were neighbouring places, and the battle fought in the confines of both. Sibbechai the Hushathite; one of David's worthies, 1 Chron. xi. 29.

19 And there was again a battle in Gob with the Philistines, where Elhanan the son of ^h Jaare-oregim, a Beth-lehemite, slew ^h the brother of Goliath the Gittite, the staff of whose spear was like a weaver's beam.

Elhanan; another of David's worthy and valiant commanders. The brother of Goliath the Gittite: the relative word brother is not in the Hebrew text, but is fitly supplied out of the parallel place, 1 Chron. xx. 5, where it is expressed. And such defects of relatives are not unusual in Scripture. Thus the word wife is understood, Matt. i. 6; John xix. 25; and father or mother, Mark xv. 40, 47, compared with Mark xvi. 1; Luke xxiv. 10; and son, Matt. iv. 21; Mark ii. 14; John xxi. 15; and brother, Luke vi. 16, compared with Jude 1. And such ellipses do also frequently occur in profane authors. Although the place may be and is otherwise rendered, Elhanan, the son of Jaare-oregim, slew Beth-halachmi, or Lahmi, (as he is called by way of abbreviation, 1 Chron. xx. 5, which is very frequent in the Hebrew tongue,) who was (which words are frequently understood in the Hebrew text) with (so eth is oft rendered, as hath been noted before) Goliath the Gittite, i. e. in his company, bred up with him to the war, and related to him as his brother. Or, he slew Beth-halachmi, a Goliath (or another Goliath) of Gath, or the Gittite. So the name of the giant was Beth-halachmi, who may be here called Goliath, not only for his near relation to him, being his brother, but for his exact resemblance of him in feature, or in stature and strength, or in courage and military skill; as John the Baptist was called Elias for the like reason. Peradventure also, after the death of the first and famous Goliath the Gittite, 1 Sam. xvii., that name was either given to him by others, or taken by himself. Like a weaver's beam, in thickness. See 1 Sam. xvii. 7.

20 And ^h there was yet a battle in Gath, where was a man of great stature, that had on every hand six fingers, and on every foot six toes, four and twenty in number; and he also was born to ^h the giant.

In Gath, i. e. in the territory of the city of Gath; which circumstance intimates that this, and consequently the other battles here described, were fought before David had taken Gath out of the hands of the Philistines, which he did 2 Sam. viii. 1, compared with 1 Chron. xviii. 1, and therefore not in the last days of David, as some conceive from their mention in this place. A man of great stature, or, a man of Middin or Madon, as the LXX. render it; so called from the place of his birth, as Goliath is said to be of Gath for the same reason.

21 And when he ^h defied Israel, Jonathan the son of ^h Shimeah the brother of David slew him.

22 ^h These four were born to the giant in Gath, and fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

Fell by the hand of David; either because they were slain by his conduct, and counsel, or concurrence; for he contributed by his hand to the death of one of them, whilst maintaining a fight with him, he gave Abishai the easier opportunity of killing him, ver. 16, 17; or because what is done by the inferior commanders is commonly ascribed to the general, both in sacred and profane writers.

CHAP. XXII.

A Psalm of thanksgiving for God's powerful deliverance and manifold blessings.

This chapter is in a manner wholly the same with Psalm xviii., and therefore I shall adjourn the exposition of it to that place.

AND David ^h spake unto the LORD the words of this song in the day that the LORD had ^b delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul:

2 And he said, ^h The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer;

3 The God of my rock; ^h in him will I trust: he is my ^h shield, and the ^h horn of my salvation, my high ^h tower, and my ^h refuge, my saviour; thou savest me from violence.

4 I will call on the LORD, who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies.

5 When the ^h waves of death compassed me, the floods of ^h ungodly men made me afraid;

6 The ^h sorrows of hell compassed me about; the snares of death prevented me;

7 In my distress ^h I called upon the LORD, and cried to my God: and he did ^h hear my voice out of his temple, and my cry did enter into his ears.

8 Then ^h the earth shook and trembled; ^h the foundations of heaven moved and shook, because he was wrath.

9 There went up a smoke ^h out of his nostrils, and ^h fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

10 He ^h bowed the heavens also, and came down; and ^h darkness was under his feet.

11 And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly: and he was seen ^h upon the wings of the wind.

12 And he made ^h darkness pavilions round about him, ^h dark waters, and thick clouds of the skies.

13 Through the brightness before him were ^h coals of fire kindled.

14 The LORD ^h thundered from heaven, and the most High uttered his voice.

15 And he sent out ^h arrows; and scattered them; lightning, and discomfited them.

16 And the channels of the sea appeared, the foundations of the world were discovered, at the ^h rebuking of the LORD, at the blast of the breath of his ^h nostrils.

17 ^h He sent from above, he took me; he drew me out of ^h many waters;

18 ^h He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them that hated me: for they were too strong for me.

19 They prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the LORD was my stay.

20 ^bHe brought me forth also into a large place: he delivered me, because he ^cdelighted in me.

21 ^aThe LORD rewarded me according to my righteousness: according to the ^ccleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

22 For I have ^fkept the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

23 For all his ^gjudgments were before me: and as for his statutes, I did not depart from them.

24 I was also ^hupright [†]before him, and have kept myself from mine iniquity.

25 Therefore ⁱthe LORD hath recompensed me according to my righteousness; according to my cleanness [†]in his eye sight.

26 With ^kthe merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful, and with the upright man thou wilt shew thyself upright.

27 With the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure; and ^lwith the froward thou wilt ^{||}shew thyself unsavoury.

28 And the ^mafflicted people thou wilt save: but thine eyes are upon ⁿthe haughty, that thou mayest bring them down.

29 For thou art my ^{||}lamp, O LORD: and the LORD will lighten my darkness.

30 For by thee I have ^{||}run through a troop: by my God have I leaped over a wall.

31 As for God, ^ohis way is perfect; ^pthe word of the LORD is ^{||}tried: he is a buckler to all them that trust in him.

32 For ^qwho is God, save the LORD? and who is a rock, save our God?

33 God is my ^rstrength and power: and he [†]maketh my way ^tperfect.

34 He [†]maketh my feet ^ulike hinds' feet: and ^vsetteth me upon my high places.

35 ^wHe teacheth my hands [†]to war; so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms.

36 Thou hast also given me the shield of thy salvation: and thy gentleness hath [†]made me great.

37 Thou hast ^xenlarged my steps under me; so that my [†]feet did not slip.

38 I have pursued mine enemies, and destroyed them; and turned not again until I had consumed them.

39 And I have consumed them, and wounded them, that they could not arise: yea, they are fallen ^yunder my feet.

40 For thou hast ^zbirdged me with strength to battle: [†]them that rose up against me hast thou [†]subdued under me.

41 Thou hast also given me the ^{aa}necks of mine enemies, that I might destroy them that hate me.

42 They looked, but there was none to save; even ^{aa}unto the LORD, but he answered them not.

43 Then did I beat them as small ^{ab}as the dust of the earth, I did stamp them ^{ac}as the mire of the street, and did spread them abroad.

44 ^{ad}Thou also hast delivered me from the strivings of my people, thou hast kept me to be ^{ae}head of the heathen: ^{af}a people which I knew not shall serve me.

45 ^{ag}Strangers shall ^{ah}submit themselves unto me: as soon as they hear, they shall be obedient unto me.

46 Strangers shall fade away, and they shall be afraid ^{ai}out of their close places.

47 The LORD liveth; and blessed be my rock; and exalted be the God of the ^{aj}rock of my salvation.

48 It is God that ^{ak}avengeth me, and that ^{al}bringeth down the people under me, 49 And that bringeth me forth from mine enemies: thou also hast lifted me up on high above them that rose up against me: thou hast delivered me from the ^{am}violent man.

50 Therefore I will give thanks unto thee, O LORD, among ^{an}the heathen, and I will sing praises unto thy name.

51 ^{ao}He is the tower of salvation for his king: and sheweth mercy to his ^{ap}anointed, unto David, and ^{aq}to his seed for evermore.

CHAP. XXIII.

David's last words: a character of himself; of a good ruler, and his usefulness, 1—4. His faith on God's covenant with him, 5. Destruction to the wicked, 6, 7. David's worthies, and their valiant acts, 8—39.

NOW these be the last words of David.

David the son of Jesse said, ^{ab}and the man who was raised up on high, ^{ac}the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel, said,

The last words of David; not simply the last that he spoke, but some of the last uttered in his last days upon the approach of his death; or the last which he spoke by the Spirit of God, assisting and directing him in an extraordinary manner. Raised up on high; advanced from an obscure family and estate to the kingdom. The anointed of the God of Jacob; whom, though despised by men, and rejected by his own brethren, God himself singled out from all his father's house, and out of all the families and tribes of Israel, and anointed to be king. The sweet psalmist of Israel; or, sweet, or delightful, or amiable in the songs of Israel: either, first, As the object of them; he whom the people of Israel mentioned in their songs with joy and praise, as when they sung, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands; and many others which doubtless they made and sung concerning him, upon the occasion of his eminent victories, and the blessings of his wise and righteous government; some whereof we have in the Book of Psalms. Or, secondly, As the author of them, he who was eminent and famous among the people of God for the composing of sweet and holy songs to the praise of God, and for the use of his church in after-ages; for he did not only indite most of the Book of Psalms, by the direction of God's Spirit; but also invented the tunes, or appointed tunes to which they were to be sung, and the instruments of music which were used in and with those holy songs, 1 Chron.

xxv. 1, 6; Amos vi. 5. If the expressions here used seem arrogant, and not fit to be said by David in his own praise, let it be considered, first, That holy men spake by inspiration from God; and therefore must follow his suggestions impartially, as indeed they do sometimes in the publishing their own praises; which yet is never done unnecessarily, and always moderately; and sometimes in the publishing of their own infirmities and shame, as they are moved thereunto, and as the edification of the church requires. Secondly, That these seem not to be the words of David, but of the sacred penman of this book, to make for and gain the greater attention and respect unto David's following words.

c 3 Pet. 1. 21. 2 ° The Spirit of the LORD spake by me, and his word was in my tongue.

The following words, and consequently the other words and Psalms composed and uttered by me upon the like solemn occasions, are not to be looked upon as my private fancies or human inventions, but both the matter and the words of them are suggested and governed by God's Spirit, which is the great Teacher of the church.

3 The God of Israel said, ^d the Rock of Israel spake to me, || He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling ^e in the fear of God.

The Rock of Israel; he who is the strength, and defence, and protector of his people; which he here manifests by obliging and directing kings and rulers so to manage their power and authority, as may most conduce to their comfort and benefit. Spake to me, by way of command; or, of me, by way of prediction and promise concerning me and my house, and the Messiah who is to come out of my loins. He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God: thus it is a precept or declaration of the duty of kings, and particularly of Solomon his son, (to whom as a dying man he gives this advice,) and of his successors the kings of God's Israel, for whose instruction he gives this rule. And so here are the two principal parts of a king's duty, answerable to the two tables of God's law, justice towards men, and piety towards God, both which he is to maintain and promote among his people; to which if you add benignity and clemency, whereby a king renders his government not frightful and burdensome, but acceptable and amiable to his people, which possibly may be meant by the following similitudes, here is a complete character of an excellent prince or governor. Others make it a prophecy of Christ; and then the words are or may be thus rendered, There shall be a Ruler over men, (or rather, among men, as the Hebrew word properly signifies, to wit, the Messiah, who, though he be the eternal and invisible God, yet shall visibly appear and rule among men,) a just or righteous one, (a title oft given to Christ, as Isa. liii. 11; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; xxxiii. 15; Zech. ix. 9,) ruling in the fear of the Lord, making it his great business to advance the service, and worship, and glory of the Lord; or, as it is in the Hebrew, ruling the fear of the Lord, i. e. governing and ordering the worship of God, which is oft called the fear of God. And so this clause is added to prevent or remove scandals and offences which might be taken at the Messiah when he should come, because of his changing and abrogating the ceremonial law; and to insinuate that he should have no less power in the governing of God's house and worship than Moses had, and that he might make such laws as he thought meet. And if this be the meaning of the place, then as Jacob, being greatly afflicted with the troubles which he by the Spirit of prophecy foresaw were coming upon his posterity, comforts himself with the thoughts of that great and glorious salvation of God, which he also foresaw and waited for, Gen. xlix. 18; so David, reflecting upon the great disorders, and miscarriages, and calamities which had already arisen in his house, and either wisely presaging or foreseeing by the Spirit of the Lord, ver. 2, that the same sins and miseries should befall his posterity and successors, he supports and comforts himself with this consideration, that one of them should be a most excellent person, just, and pious, and merciful, and an unspeakable blessing to David himself, and to all his family and people, and to the whole world, even the great Messiah, who was undoubtedly revealed to and expected by David, as appears by many passages of the Psalms, and by other scriptures.

4 And 'he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain.

These words are either, 1. A further description of the king's duty, which is not only to rule with exact justice and piety, but also with sweetness, and gentleness, and condescension to the infirmities of his people; to render his government as pleasant and acceptable to them as is the sunshine in a clear morning, or the tender grass which springs out of the earth by the warm and refreshing beams of the sun after the rain, which hath a peculiar kind of sweetness and fragrant in it. Or rather, 2. A prediction or declaration of the sweet and blessed effects of such a government, both to the governor himself, in that peace, and prosperity, and glory, and happiness which it brings to him, and to his people; to whom it is no less grateful, and comfortable, and beneficial, than those great and public blessings of sunshine and rain, and the fruits which they produce; which is true of every good king or governor, but most eminently of the Messias.

5 Although my house be not so with God; ^g yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, and sure: for this is all my salvation, and all my desire, although he make it not to grow.

Ps. 89. 29.

Although my house be not so with God; although God knows that neither I nor my children have lived and ruled as we should have done, so justly, and in the fear of the Lord; and therefore have not enjoyed that uninterrupted prosperity which we might have enjoyed; but our morning light, or the beginning of that kingdom promised to me and mine for ever, hath been overcast with many black and dismal clouds, and my children have not hitherto been like the tender grass springing out of the earth, and thriving by the influences of the sun and rain; but rather like the grass that withereth away, or is cut off before its due time. Yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant: notwithstanding all our transgressions whereby we have broken covenant with God, and the confusions and civil wars which have threatened our dissipation and utter destruction; yet I comfort myself with this, that God, to whom all my sins were foreknown before I committed them, was graciously pleased to make a sure covenant, to give and continue the kingdom to me and to my seed for ever, chap. vii. 16, until the coming of the Messiah, who is to be my Son and successor, and whose kingdom shall have no end. Ordered in all things; ordained in all points by God's eternal and unchangeable counsel; and disposed by his wise and powerful providence, which doth and will overrule all things, even the sins and sufferings of my house, so far, that although he would punish them for their sins, yet he will not utterly root them out, nor break his covenant made with me and mine; as is said, Psal. lxxxix. 31—34. Sure, or preserved, or observed, or kept, to wit, on God's part, or by God's power and faithfulness, in the midst of all the oppositions and uncertainties to which it seems to be exposed on our part. Compare Rom. iii. 3; 2 Tim. ii. 13. For, or therefore, as the Hebrew particle chi oft signifies; therefore, i. e. because God hath made such a covenant. This is, or, he is, he who hath made this covenant; or, in this is, i. e. it consists in and depends upon this covenant. All my salvation; both my own eternal salvation, and the temporal salvation, or the preservation of the kingdom to me and mine. All my desire, or, every desirable thing; the word desire being oft put for desired, or a desirable thing; as Psal. xxi. 2; lxxviii. 29, 30; Ezek. xxiv. 16. David being deeply sensible, and having had large experience, of the vanity and uncertainty of all earthly things, here declares that the covenant made by God with him and his in the Messiah, is the only happiness which he prizeth and desireth, in which he doth fully acquiesce. Although he make it not to grow, i. e. my house, mentioned before. So the sense is, Although God as yet hath not made my house or family to grow, i. e. to increase, or to flourish with worldly glory and prosperity, as I expected; but hath for my sins cut off divers of my most eminent branches, and sorely afflicted my person and family; and although he may for the future deal in like manner with my sons and successors for the like miscarriages, which it is probable they may commit: yet this is my great support and comfort, that God will constantly and inviolably keep this covenant; and therefore, in the midst of all the shakings, and confusions, and interruptions which may happen in my house and kingdom, will preserve my line and family until the coming of the Messiah out of my loins, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom; who, as he is the desire of all nations, Hag. ii. 7, so in a special manner is my desire, and the author of all my salvation.

6 ¶ But the sons of Belial shall be all of them as thorns thrust away, because they cannot be taken with hands:

The sons of Belial, or, the men of Belial, as it is expressed 2 Sam. xvi. 7, and elsewhere. Having in the foregoing verses described the nature, and felicity, and stability of that kingdom which God himself had by a sure and everlasting covenant settled upon him and his seed; and especially, upon the Messiah, who was to be one of his posterity; he now describes the quality, the mischievous nature, the hazardous and miserable condition, of all the enemies of this holy and blessed kingdom, whom he justly calleth sons of Belial, because they rebelled against God's appointment, and against that king whom God had set over them; for which reason others are so called, 1 Sam. x. 27; 2 Chron. xiii. 7. As thorns thrust away; which men do not use to handle, as they do other trees, but thrust them away from themselves, by some instrument chosen for that purpose. And so will God remove or thrust away from himself, and from his people and kingdom, all those who shall either secretly or openly set themselves against it. And this may be here added, either, 1. By way of prescription to rulers, whom, as before he admonished to be just and kind to their people, ver. 3, 4; so here he requires them to be severe in punishing and purging away wicked and incorrigible men from about his throne, and from among his people; the encouraging of the good, and the punishing of the bad, being the two chief works of every good magistrate, and the two pillars of all government. Or, 2. By way of caution; to show, that notwithstanding the holiness, and happiness, and sureness of this kingdom, yet there would be sons of Belial in it, who would endeavour to disturb and overthrow it, but to no purpose; for all their projects against it should be vain, and fall upon their own heads.

7 But the man that shall touch them ^{+ Heb. filled.} must be fenced with iron and the staff of a spear; and they shall be utterly burned with fire in the same place.

The staff of a spear; so the meaning is, he must fill his hand, or arm himself with some iron weapon, whereby he may cut them down; or, with the staff of a spear, or some such like thing, whereby he may thrust them away from himself, that they do him no hurt. Or thus, he will be filled, or will fill himself, i. e. his hand, wherewith he attempted to touch and take them, with thorns, as with iron and the staff of a spear; i. e. he will be as surely and sorely wounded, as if one should run the iron head and part of the wood of a spear into his hand. And they shall be utterly burned, or, therefore; because men cannot safely touch them, therefore they will burn them up. Or, or, i. e. if they do not cut them down with iron, or thrust them away with the staff of a spear, they will burn and consume them. In the same place, or, in their place, where they grow or stand; and they will not trouble nor hazard themselves to remove them. Withal, it may imply that they shall be destroyed when and where they thought themselves most secure, even in their own place. And it may possibly intimate, that those children of Belial, the wicked and unbelieving Jews, who rejected and rebelled against the Messiah, David's successor, and their lawful King, should be destroyed in their great, and strong, and holy city Jerusalem, where the greatest part of that people were gathered together as fuel for the fire, and were destroyed together by the Romans under Titus, where also their wicked predecessors had been destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar in former times.

8 ¶ These be the names of the mighty men whom David had: ¶ The Tachmonite that sat in the seat, chief among the captains; the same was Adino the Eznite: ¶ he lift up his spear against eight hundred, † whom he slew at one time.

¶ Or, Joshebbassebet the Tachmonite, head of the three. ¶ See 1 Chron. 11. 11. & 27. 2. ¶ Heb. slain.

Of the mighty men whom David had, i. e. of his chief and most valiant commanders. And as it was noted upon chap. xxi. 1, that the things related in that chapter were done before Absalom's and Sheba's rebellion, though they be mentioned after them; so that opinion is confirmed by this catalogue, which, though placed here, was taken long before, as is manifest from hence, that Asahel and Uriah are named here. And whereas there are some differences between this list and that 1 Chron. xi., most of them are easily reconciled by these two considerations: 1. That nothing is more common than for one person to have divers names. 2. That as some of the worthies died, and others came in their steads; so this must needs cause some alteration in the latter catalogue, 1 Chron. xi., from this, which was the former. The Tachmonite, or, Hachmonite, called Jashobeam, 1 Chron. xi. 11, from his place; or, as here, Joshebbassebet, i. e. as we render it, that sat in the seat, i. e. was, under Joab, chief or president of the council of war, or lieutenant (locum tenens). The same was Adino: this was his proper name. The Eznite; so called, either from his family, or from the place of his birth or education. He lift up his spear; which words are fitly supplied out of 1 Chron. xi. 11, where they are expressed. Or thus, he was above eight hundred, i. e. he conquered them. So there is only an ellipsis of the verb substantive, which is most frequent. At one time; in one battle, which though it be strange, yet cannot seem incredible, supposing him to be a person of extraordinary strength and activity, and his enemies to be weak, or discouraged, and fleeing away; and especially, God's singular blessing and assistance; all which may very reasonably be supposed. Object. But this man is said to have slain only three hundred in 1 Chron. xi. 11. Ans. 1. Possibly he slew eight hundred at one time, and three hundred at another; whereof the former is related here, as being most considerable; and the latter in the Book of Chronicles, which supplies many passages omitted in the former writings. 2. He slew three hundred with his own hands; and the other five hundred, though killed by his men, are said to be slain by him, because he was the chief cause of all their deaths; for he, by his undaunted courage, killing three hundred, put the rest to flight, who were easily slain by his soldiers in the pursuit. 3. Some of the Hebrew writers affirm that these were two distinct persons, being called by differing names; the one the father, and the other the son, who succeeded his father, as in strength and valour, so also in his place of honour and trust.

9 And after him was ^h Eleazar the son of Dodo the Ahohite, ^h one of the three mighty men with David, when they defied the Philistines that were there gathered together to battle, and the men of Israel were gone away: ^h 1 Chron. 11. 12. & 27. 4.

The Ahohite; of the children of Ahoah, 1 Chron. viii. 4. One of the three, i. e. one of the first three, ver. 19. Mighty men with David; who were with David at this time, or who usually attended upon David. When they defied the Philistines; when he either in the name of all the Israelites, or with the countenance and help of some of them, challenged the Philistines to fight. Or, when some of, or among, the Philistines defied them, i. e. the Israelites, according to their manner, and the example of their great Goliath, 1 Sam. xvii. 25, 36. Or, in Horpam (for some make it a proper name of a place) among the Philistines. Gone away, i. e. fled away, 1 Chron. xi. 13, being dismayed at the approach of their enemies. Heb. ascended, i. e. vanished away like smoke, which ascends, and so disappears, as that verb is oft used.

10 He arose, and smote the Philistines until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto the sword: and the LORD wrought a great victory that day; and the people returned after him only to spoil.

He arose, i. e. he undertook the work, as that word sometimes is used. Or, he stood (as it sometimes signifies) when the rest fled. His hand clave unto the sword; either through sweat or blood, or by a contraction of the sinews. Or thus, yet did his hand cleave to his sword, i. e. though he was weary, he did not desist, but continued fighting. Only to spoil i. e. to pursue the enemy, whom he had discomfited, and to take their spoil.

11 And after him was ¹Shammah the son of Agee the Hararite. * And the Philistines were gathered together || into a troop, where was a piece of ground full of lentiles: and the people fled from the Philistines.

Full of lentiles, or barley, as it is 1 Chron. xi. 13; for both might very well grow in the same field, in divers parts of it. And this fact is ascribed to Eleazar, 1 Chron. xi. 12, but so as it is implied that he had some partner or partners in it: for it is there said, ver. 14, They set themselves, &c. So Eleazar might stand and fight in that part where the barley was, and Shammah there where the lentiles were.

12 But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it, and slew the Philistines: and the LORD wrought a great victory.

Defended it; that the Philistines could neither burn, nor tread it down; and spoil it, nor carry it away.

13 And ¹|| three of the thirty chief went down, and came to David in the harvest time unto ^mthe cave of Adullam: and the troop of the Philistines pitched in ⁿthe valley of Rephaim.

Three of the thirty; either, 1. The three already named, as is generally supposed, because it is said of them, in the close of this history, 1 Chron. xi. 19, These things did these three mightiest. But in the Hebrew it is only these three mighty men, as the same words are rendered here, ver. 17. Or rather, 2. The following three; for it is expressly said, both here, ver. 18, and 1 Chron. xi. 20, that Abishai was chief, and therefore one of the three; and this three are plainly distinguished from the first three, ver. 19; 1 Chron. xi. 25. Unto the cave of Adullam; which was a strong place, where David had been before, 1 Sam. xxii. 1, &c., and where he had now again fortified himself in the beginning of his reign, when the Philistines were too strong for him. In the valley of Rephaim; of which see above, chap. v. 18.

14 And David was then in ^oan hold, and the garrison of the Philistines was then in Beth-lehem.

15 And David longed, and said, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, which is by the gate!

Being hot and thirsty, he expresseth how acceptable a draught of that water would be to him, as is usual with men to do in such cases; but was far from desiring or expecting that any of his men should hazard their lives to procure it, as appears from ver. 17.

16 And the three mighty men brake through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: nevertheless he would not drink thereof, but poured it out unto the LORD.

The host of the Philistines was in the valley of Rephaim, ver. 13, and in the way to Beth-lehem. He would not drink thereof; lest by gratifying himself upon such terms, he should seem either to set too high a price upon the satisfaction of his appetite, or too low a price upon the lives of his soldiers, or should encourage others to the like vain-glorious and foolish attempts. Poured it out unto the Lord, as a kind of drink-offering, and acknowledgment of God's goodness in preserving the lives of his captains in so dangerous an enterprise; and to show that he esteemed it as a sacred thing, which, considering all things, it was not fit for him to drink it.

17 And he said, Be it far from me, O LORD, that I should do this: is not this ^pthe blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives? therefore he would not drink it. These things did these three mighty men.

Is not this the blood of the men, i. e. the price of their blood or lives, which they rashly exposed to manifest hazard? These things did these three mighty men; either one of these three are here omitted, as one of the first three is not named, 1 Chron. xi.; or Abishai, who follows next, was one of these three.

18 And ^qAbishai, the brother of Joab, ^rthe son of Zeruiah, was chief among three. And he lifted up his spear against three hundred, [†]and slew them, and had the name among three.

He fought with and killed three hundred men in one battle. Had the name among the three, i. e. was the most famous and eminent among them.

19 Was he not most honourable of three? therefore he was their captain: howbeit he attained not unto the first three.

He fell short of them in strength and valour.

20 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man, of ^sKabzeel, ^t† who had done many acts, ^uhe slew two ^v† lionlike men of Moab: he went down also and slew a lion in the midst of a pit in time of snow:

Of Kabzeel; a place in Judah, Josh. xv. 21. Who had done many acts: this may belong either to Benaiah, or to his father, to note that Benaiah was a son becoming such a father. Two lion-like men, for courage and strength. Or, lions of God, i. e. great and strong lions. Or, two gigantic persons; and therefore both so called, as being either equal in might, or brethren by birth. In the midst of a pit; where he put himself under a necessity, either of killing, or being killed. In time of snow; when lions are most fierce, both from the sharpness of their appetite in cold seasons, and from want of provisions, cattle being then shut up, and fed at home.

21 And he slew an Egyptian, [†]a goodly man: and the Egyptian had a spear in his hand; but he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear.

A goodly man; for stature, as it is expressed, 1 Chron. xi. 23. With a staff; without a sword, or any warlike weapon.

22 These things did Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and had the name among three mighty men.

23 He was ^{||} more honourable than the thirty, but he attained not to the first three. And David set him [†]over his ^{||}guard.

Heb. over (for el is sometimes put for al) the men (which is oft understood, as hath been noted before) of his command. So his guard is called, because they were always at the king's hand, ready to hear and receive the king's commands, and to put them in execution. Over the Cherethites and Pelethites, as appears by comparing 2 Sam. viii. 18; xx. 23, who were faithful and obedient to him, when others revolted from him, chap. xv. 18.

24 Asahel the brother of Joab was ^uch. 2. 18.

one of the thirty; Elhanan the son of Dodo of Beth-lehem,

One of the thirty, Heb. with or among the thirty; not only as one, but as the chief of them.

See 1 Chron. 11. 27. 25 *Shammah the Harodite, Elika the Harodite,

In 1 Chron. xi. 27, Shammoth the Harorite; concerning which and such-like alterations, and other changes of the names, which will be observed by comparing this catalogue with that, it will be sufficient to suggest, 1. That the same names of persons or places are differently pronounced, according to the different dialects used by men of divers places or ages. 2. That one man had oft two names. 3. That David had more worthies than those here mentioned; and as some of these were slain in the former part of David's reign, as Asahel was; so others came up in their steads; and some were added to this number, as appears from 1 Chron. xi., where they are named, but not numbered, as they were here; and where there is a greater number than is here expressed.

26 Helez the Paltite, Ira the son of Ikkesh the Tekoite, 27 Abiezer the Anethothite, Mebunnai the Hushathite,

28 Zalmon the Ahohite, Maharai the Netophathite,

29 Heleb the son of Baanah, a Netophathite, Ittai the son of Ribai out of Gibeah of the children of Benjamin,

30 Benaiah the Pirathonite, Hiddai of ^{1 Or, vallies.} ^{Deut. 1. 24.} the || brooks of Gaash, ^{7 Judg. 5. 9.}

31 Abi-albon the Arbathite, Azmaveth the Barhumite,

32 Eliahba the Shaalbonite, of the sons of Jashen, Jonathan,

33 Shammah the Hararite, Ahiam the son of Sharar the Hararite,

34 Eliphelet the son of Ahasbai, the son of the Maachathite, Eliam the son of Ahithophel the Gilonite, 35 Hezrai the Carmelite, Paarai the Arbite,

36 Igal the son of Nathan of Zobah, Bani the Gadite,

37 Zelek the Ammonite, Nahari the Beerothite, armourbearer to Joab the son of Zeruiah, 38 *Ira an Ithrite, Gareb an Ithrite,

39 *Uriah the Hittite: thirty and seven in all.

Here are but thirty-six named; either therefore one must be supplied whose name is not expressed among the three second worthies, or Joab is comprehended in the number, as being the lord-general of all.

CHAP. XXIV.

David, tempted by Satan, forceth Joab to number the people; who are thirteen hundred thousand fighting men, 1—9. David acknowledgeth his sin in it: having three judgments propounded by God, he is in great distress, and chooseth the pestilence; of which seventy thousand men die, 10—15. David by his humiliation preventeth the destruction of Jerusalem, 16, 17. He by Gad's direction and order from God purchaseth Araunah's threshing-floor to build an altar there; on which having sacrificed, the plague stayeth, 18—25.

1017. AND *again the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and || he moved David against them to say, ^b Go, number Israel and Judah.

Again, to wit, after the former tokens of his anger, such as the three years' famine, chap. xxi. He moved David.

he: who? Either, 1. Satan, as is expressed, 1 Chron. xxi. 1. Or, 2. God; who is said, in like manner, to stir up Saul against David, 1 Sam. xxvi. 19, and to turn the hearts of the Egyptians to hate his people, Psal. cv. 25, and to make men to err from his ways, Isa. lxiii. 17, and to send strong delusions, &c., and to harden their hearts. All which expressions are not so to be understood, as if God did work these sinful dispositions; which neither was necessary, because they are naturally in every man's heart, nor possible for the holy God to do; but because he permits them, and withdraws his grace and all restraints and hinderances from them, and giveth occasions and advantages to them; and directs their thoughts to such objects as may indeed be innocently thought of, which yet he knows they will wickedly abuse; and give them up to Satan, who he knows will deceive and entice them to such and such sins; which, being tempted to do by Satan, and being effected by their own wicked hearts, he so orders and overrules, that they shall be punishments for their former sins. Against them, i. e. for Israel's punishment. To say, or, saying. For this may be referred, either, 1. To God, of whom the same expression is used 2 Sam. xvi. 10, The Lord said to Shimei, Curse David; which in both places is not to be understood of any command or impulse of God, but of his secret providence disposing things in manner here above expressed. Or, 2. To David; he moved David to say, to wit, to Joab, as he did, ver. 2.

2 For the king said to Joab the captain of the host, which was with him, || Go ^{1 Or,} ^{Compass.} now through all the tribes of Israel, ^c from Dan even to Beer-sheba, and ^c Judg. 20. 1. number ye the people, that ^d I may know ^d Jer. 17. 5. the number of the people.

Which expression points at David's sin in this matter, that he numbered them, not by direction from God, nor for any important business of the church or kingdom; but out of mere curiosity, and pride, and vain-glory; accompanied either with a secret distrust of God's promise; or rather, with a carnal confidence in the numbers of his people; all which were great sins, and were so manifest, that not only God saw them, and all the degrees and aggravations of them, in David; but even Joab and the captains of the host were very sensible of them, ver. 3, 4.

3 And Joab said unto the king, Now the LORD thy God add unto the people, how many soever they be, an hundredfold, and that the eyes of my lord the king may see it: but why doth my lord the king delight in this thing?

What reason or necessity is there for this action? It is to no purpose, and will be burdensome to thy people, and may offend God, and produce ill effects.

4 Notwithstanding the king's word prevailed against Joab, and against the captains of the host. And Joab and the captains of the host went out from the presence of the king, to number the people of Israel.

Joab perceiving the king bent upon it, would not hazard the king's favour by further disputing or disobeying his command.

5 ¶ And they passed over Jordan, and pitched in *Aroer, on the right side of ^e Deu. 2. 36. ^{Josh. 13. 9,} the city that lieth in the midst of the ^{16.} || river of Gad, and toward *Jazer: ^f Or, valley. ^g Num. 32. 1, 3.

They passed over Jordan; they began their computation in the eastern part of David's dominions, which were beyond Jordan. Pitched, or encamped. For Joab carried with them divers of his commanders, and others; partly, for his honour, and the credit of the work; partly, to assist him in that troublesome work; and partly, to overcome the people, in case they should oppose it as sinful or burdensome, or savouring of some evil design which David might have upon them. Of the river of Gad, i. e. of the river which lay in the tribe of Gad, or upon the borders of Gad and Reuben, which was called Arnon, Deut. ii. 36. Toward Jazer, or, near Jazer, which also was upon the river Arnon.

6 Then they came to Gilead, and to the land of Tahtim-hodshi; and they came to Dan-jaan, and about to Zidon,

To Gilead; to Mount Gilead, which lay northward from Arnon. Tahtim-hodshi; a place so called. Or, the lowland lately gained, i. e. not given by Joshua, but taken lately from the Hagarites by Saul; which was near Gilead, 1 Chron. v. 10. Dan-jaan, i. e. probably the famous city of Dan, as it is called, Josh. xix. 47; Judg. xviii. 7; for this was in the northern border of the land, and in the way from Gilead to Zidon. About to Zidon, i. e. to the city and territory of Zidon; but not into it, because it was not in the power and possession of the Israelites: and the like is to be thought concerning Tyre, and the cities which the Hivites and Canaanites yet possessed in the neighbourhood of Tyre and Sidon.

7 And came to the strong hold of Tyre, and to all the cities of the Hivites, and of the Canaanites: and they went out to the south of Judah, even to Beer-sheba.

8 So when they had gone through all the land, they came to Jerusalem at the end of nine months and twenty days.

9 And Joab gave up the sum of the number of the people unto the king: and there were in Israel eight hundred thousand valiant men that drew the sword; and the men of Judah were five hundred thousand men.

Eight hundred thousand. Object. In 1 Chron. xxi. 5, they are numbered 1,100,000. Answer. The sum here expressed is only of such as were not in the ordinary and settled militia waiting upon the king, which being 24,000 for every month, as is largely related, 1 Chron. xxvii., amounts to 288,000, which either with their several commanders, or with the soldiers placed in several garrisons, might very well make up 300,000. Or 288,000 may pass in such accounts for 300,000; it being frequent in such great sums to neglect a smaller number. But in the Book of the Chronicles, which was to gather up the fragments omitted in the former books, both sorts are put together, and so they amount to 1,100,000. Five hundred thousand. In 1 Chron. xxi. 5, but 470,000. Answer. Either, 1. They were exactly no more, but are called 500,000 in a round sum, as is usual in Scripture and other authors. Or, 2. The garrison soldiers, and such as were employed in other services about the king, are here included, which are there excluded. Or, 3. They were 500,000 when Joab gave up the number to the king, though presently after that they were but 470,000; 30,000 being slain by the plague in the tribe of Judah; which being David's own tribe, it was but just and fit it should suffer more than the rest for this sin. And though it be true that Joab gave up the sum before the plague begun, yet the sacred penman of the Book of Chronicles thought fit to make a defalcation of them who had been swept away by the plague, that the judgment of God therein might be observed. Or, 4. There are included here the 30,000 which belonged to the thirty colonels mentioned chap. xxxiii., who are excluded 1 Chron. xxi., although it be questionable whether those were all of the tribe of Judah.

10 ¶ And David's heart smote him after that he had numbered the people.

And David said unto the LORD, 'I have sinned greatly in that I have done: and now, I beseech thee, O LORD, take away the iniquity of thy servant; for I have done very foolishly.'

^m 1 Sam. 13. 13.

David's heart smote him; his conscience discerned his sin, and he was heartily sorry for it. And the occasion of his repentance was God's message by the prophet Gad, as it here follows, ver. 11, For when, &c.; as formerly God's message by Nathan had the same effect, 2 Sam. xii.; both which passages are noted, to show how necessary the further and repeated supplies of God's grace are, even to the best of men, to raise them when they fall into sin. For I have done very foolishly, because I am sensible of my sin and folly, as it is more fully expressed, Psal. li. 5, 6. Or, although, as this particle is oft used.

11 For when David was up in the morning, the word of the LORD came unto the prophet Gad, David's seer, saying, David's seer; so called, because he was a prophet, (for such were called seers, 1 Sam. ix. 9,) now and at other times employed by God to reveal his mind and will to David. See 1 Sam. xxii. 5; 1 Chron. xxix. 29.

12 Go and say unto David, Thus saith the LORD, I offer thee three things: choose thee one of them, that I may do it unto thee.

13 So Gad came to David, and told him, and said unto him, Shall seven years of famine come unto thee in thy land? or wilt thou flee three months before thine enemies, while they pursue thee? or that there be three days' pestilence in thy land? now advise, and see what answer I shall return to him that sent me.

^q See 1 Chr. 21. 12.

Seven years of famine. Object. In 1 Chron. xxi. 12, it is only three years of famine. Answer. 1. Some conceive that here was an error in the transcriber, and that the true reading is three years, as the LXX. read it in this place, being supposed to have found it so in their copies, and that otherwise they durst never have presumed to make so great a change in the text. 2. In Chron. he speaks exactly of those years of famine only which came for David's sin; but here he speaks more confusedly and comprehensively, including those three years of famine sent for Saul's sin, chap. xxi. And this sin of David's was committed in the year next after them, which was in a manner a year of famine; either because it was the sabbatical year, wherein they might not sow nor reap; or rather, because not being able to sow in the third year, because of the excessive drought, they were not capable of reaping this fourth year. And three years more being added to these four, make up the seven here mentioned. So the meaning of the words is this, As thou hast already had four years of famine, shall three years more come? And that it is said of these seven years, that they shall come, it is a synecdochical expression frequent in Scripture, because part of the years were yet to come; even as it is said of the Israelites, that they should wander in the wilderness forty years, Numb. xiv. 33, when part of that time was already spent.

14 And David said unto Gad, I am in a great strait: let us fall now into the hand of the LORD; for his mercies are great: and let me not fall into the hand of man.

Into the hand of the Lord, to wit, his immediate stroke, which is chiefly in the pestilence; for though the sword and famine be also God's hand, yet there is also the hand of man or other creatures in them. The reason of this choice was partly his experience in and confidence of God's great goodness; partly, because the other judgments, especially the sword, had been more dishonourable, not only to David, but also to God, and to his people, and to the true religion; and partly, because he having sinned himself, thought it just and reasonable to choose such a plague to which he was as obnoxious as his people; whereas he had better fences for himself against sword and famine than they had. For his mercies are great; and therefore will not exceed measure in his strokes, as men will do.

15 ¶ So the LORD sent a pestilence upon Israel from the morning even to the time appointed: and there died of the people from Dan even to Beer-sheba seventy thousand men.

To the time appointed; either, 1. From morning to evening, which is here called the time appointed; or, the time of the convention, or, public meeting, as this Hebrew word oft signifies, i. e. till the time of the evening prayer and sacrifice, when the people used more solemnly to meet together. See Psal. cxli. 2; Acts iii. 1. Thus God mitigated his sentence, and turned three days into one; it being a thing not unusual with God to qualify his threatenings, and to take off the evil threatened sometimes wholly, as in Nineveh's case, and sometimes in part. And this God might do here upon the speedy and serious repentance of David, and of his people. Or rather, 2. From the morning, (or rather, from that morning; for the article seems to be emphatical, and to denote that very morning in which Gad came to David, ver. 11, and that the plague did immediately ensue after Gad's offer, and David's choice,) even to the time appointed, to wit, by God, i. e. for three days, as God had set the time, ver. 13. Object. If it continued three days, how is it said that God repented him of the evil, and stopped the angel in his course? ver. 16. Answer. This he did in the beginning of the third day, whereas otherwise it should have gone on to the end of the day. Or it may signify no more but this, At the end of the third day God gave over smiting; for then is God said (after the manner of men) to repent, when he ceaseth to proceed as before he had done. Seventy thousand men; so the number of his people, which was the matter of his pride and glorying, was diminished.

16 ¶ And when the angel stretched out his hand upon Jerusalem to destroy it, the LORD repented him of the evil, and said to the angel that destroyed the people, It is enough: stay now thine hand. And the angel of the LORD was by the threshingplace of Araunah the Jebusite.

The angel appeared in the shape of a man with a sword in his hand, 1 Chron. xxi. 16, to convince them more fully that this was no natural nor common plague, but inflicted immediately by the hand of God. Upon Jerusalem; which he had begun to smite, and was proceeding to make a far greater slaughter. The Lord repented him of the evil, i. e. he moderated, and in part recalled, his sentence of the plague's continuance for three whole days, and this he did upon David's prayers and sacrifices, as appears from ver. 25, though these be mentioned afterward. Araunah, called also Araniah in the Hebrew of ver. 18, and Ornan, 1 Chron. xxi. 22; such changes in the pronunciation of the names being usual in Scripture.

17 And David spake unto the LORD when he saw the angel that smote the people, and said, Lo, I have sinned, and I have done wickedly: but these sheep, what have they done? let thine hand, I pray thee, be against me, and against my father's house.

Let thine hand be against me; wherein David shows his justice, and piety, and fatherly care of his people, and that he was a type of Christ. Against my father's house; against my nearest relations, who probably either put David upon, or encouraged him in, this action, because they were no less vain-glorious than David; and the honour which they thought would come to David thereby, would also redound to them; or, at least, they did not use their utmost endeavours to dissuade David from it, as they should have done, and therefore were involved in David's guilt. Howsoever, it was but fit and reasonable that his family, which did partake of his honour and happiness, should also partake in his suffering, rather than those who were less related to him. Nor doth David absolutely desire that they may suffer, but only speaks comparatively, and by way of supposition, and with reference to God's good pleasure.

18 ¶ And Gad came that day to David, and said unto him, Go up, rear an altar unto the LORD in the threshingfloor of Araunah the Jebusite.

Gad came that day to David, by command from God, ver. 19; 1 Chron. xxi. 18. Go up to Mount Moriah. In the threshing-floor of Araunah the Jebusite; which place God appointed for this work, partly, in gracious condescension to and compliance with David's fear of going to Gibeon, which is expressed 1 Chron. xxi. 29, 30; partly, because this was the place where God by his angel appeared in a threatening posture, where therefore it was meet he should be appeased; and partly, because God would hereby signify the translation of the tabernacle from Gibeon hither, and the erection of the temple here, 2 Chron. iii. 1.

19 And David, according to the saying of Gad, went up as the LORD commanded.

20 And Araunah looked, and saw the king and his servants coming on toward him: and Araunah went out, and bowed himself before the king on his face upon the ground.

21 And Araunah said, Wherefore is my lord the king come to his servant? And David said, To buy the threshingfloor of thee, to build an altar unto the LORD, that the plague may be stayed from the people.

Wherefore is my lord the king come to his servant? wherefore doth the king do me this honour, and give himself the trouble of coming to me?

22 And Araunah said unto David, Let my lord the king take and offer up what seemeth good unto him: behold, here be oxen for burnt sacrifice, and threshing instruments and other instruments of the oxen for wood.

Here be oxen; which were employed by him in his present work, which was threshing, 1 Chron. xxi. 20. See the notes on Deut. xxv. 4.

23 All these things did Araunah, as a king, give unto the king. And Araunah said unto the king, The LORD thy God accept thee.

As a king; the particle as being understood, as it oft is in the Hebrew, i. e. with a royal bounty. Or, Araunah the king, as he might be called, either because he was king of the Jebusites before David took their city, or because he was the son and heir of that king. These things did Araunah give; he not only offered, but actually gave them, i. e. he actually resigned his right and property in them unto David; for so he did; and David by his refusal returned it to Araunah again. The Lord thy God accept thee; he was a Jebusite by nation, but a hearty proselyte; which made him so liberal in his offers to God's service, and the common good of God's people.

24 And the king said unto Araunah, Nay; but I will surely buy it of thee at a price: neither will I offer burnt offerings unto the LORD my God of that which doth cost me nothing. So David bought the threshingfloor and the oxen for fifty shekels of silver.

Of that which doth cost me nothing; for this would be both dishonourable to God, as if I thought him not worthy of a costly sacrifice; and a disparagement to myself, as if I were unable and unwilling to offer a sacrifice of my own goods; and unsatisfactory to the command of God, which obligeth all offenders, and me in a particular manner, to offer sacrifice of their own estate. For fifty shekels of silver. Object. In 1 Chron. xxi. 25, he is said to give for the place six hundred shekels of gold by weight. Answer. These two places may be fairly reconciled divers ways. First, Here he speaks of the price paid for the threshing-floor, and oxen, and instruments; and there for the whole place adjoining, on which the temple and its courts were built, which certainly was very much larger than this threshing-floor, and probably had Araunah's house, if not some others, now built upon it. Secondly, The shekels here may be of gold, and in 1 Chron. xxi. of silver; and so the proportion of gold to silver being that of twelve to one, fifty shekels of gold make six hundred shekels of silver. And whereas it may be objected, that on the contrary these fifty shekels are said to be of silver, and the six hundred of gold, this they answer by another translation of the words. For they render this place thus, agreeably enough to the words and the order of the Hebrew text, he bought them for silver, (or, for money, as the Hebrew word cheseph oft signifies, and particularly in this very history in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xxi. 24, where David desires to buy it for the full price, or for full money, where in the Hebrew it is for full silver,) even for fifty shekels, to wit, of gold, as it is expressed 1 Chron. xxi. 25; which place they render thus, and that consonantly to the Hebrew, he gave shekels of gold of the value (for the Hebrew word mishkal signifies value as well as weight, as was before noted on 2 Sam. xii. 30) of six hundred shekels, to wit, of silver. And this may seem added in the Book of the Chronicles, lest it should be thought that the fifty shekels here mentioned were but common and silver shekels. Thirdly, There is a considerable difference in the phrase in these two places: here he mentions for what David bought it, or what he was obliged to give for it; and in Chronicles what he actually gave for it, to wit, of his royal bounty, over and besides the full price of it; which was decent and convenient for so great a king, and especially upon so great an occasion, and to him who had given him such a noble example.

25 And David built there an altar unto the LORD, and offered burnt offerings and peace offerings. ^{f ch. 21. 14} So the LORD was intreated for the land, and ^{g ver. 21.} the plague was stayed from Israel.

David built there an altar unto the Lord; which he might well do, having God's command for it, and the place being sanctified by God's special presence in and by the angel. Offered burnt-offerings, to make atonement for his sins. And peace-offerings, to praise God for his gracious manifestation of himself. The Lord was entreated for the land, as appears both by fire from heaven, which consumed the sacrifice, as was usual in such cases; and by the speedy cessation of the plague.

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE KINGS,

COMMONLY CALLED,

THE THIRD BOOK OF THE KINGS.

THE ARGUMENT.

THESE TWO Books called Of the Kings, because they treat of the kings of Judah and Israel, were written by the prophets, or holy men of God, living in or near their several times, and by some one of them digested into this order. But whoever was the penman, that these are a part of those Holy Scriptures which were Divinely inspired is sufficiently evident, first, From the concurring testimony of the whole Jewish church in all ages, to whom were committed the oracles of God, Rom. iii. 2, who also did faithfully discharge their duty in preserving and delivering them entirely and truly to their posterity from time to time, as plainly appears, because Christ and his apostles, who reproved them freely for their several sins, never taxed them with this fault, of depraving the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament. Secondly, Because this is manifest concerning divers parcels of them which were taken out of the records of the prophets Nathan, Ahijah, and Iddo, 2 Chron. ix. 29, and out of the prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah; and the rest doubtless were of the same nature. Thirdly, From the approbation of these books by the New Testament, both generally, as 2 Tim. iii. 16, All Scripture is given by inspiration from God, &c., which is affirmed concerning all those Holy Scriptures which Timothy had known from a child, ver. 15, and therefore must necessarily be meant of all the books of the Old Testament, which the Jews owned for canonical Scripture; and particularly Rom. xi. 2, 3, &c., where a passage out of these books is quoted and owned as a part of the Holy Scripture, called the Scripture by way of eminency.

CHAP. I.

Abishag cherisheth David in his extreme age, 1—4. Adonijah usurpeth the kingdom, 5—10. By the counsel of Nathan to Bath-sheba, and their petition to David, he reneweth his oath of making Solomon king after him, 11—31. He, by David's appointment, is anointed king; the people triumph, 32—40. Adonijah hearing this, his guests flee, and himself fleeth to the horns of the altar; is pardoned by Solomon, and sent to his own house, 41—53.

B. C. 1015. NOW king David was old and † stricken in years; and they covered him with clothes, but he gat no heat.

Stricken in years; being in the end of his seventieth year. He gat no heat; which is not strange in a person not only of so great an age, but also who had been exercised with so many hardships in war, and with such tormenting cares, and fears, and sorrows, for his own sins, (as divers of his Psalms witness,) and for the sins and miseries of his children and people. See Prov. xvii. 22. Besides, this might be from the nature of his disease, or bodily distemper.

2 Wherefore his servants said unto him, † Let there be sought for my lord the king † a young virgin: and let her stand before the king, and let her † cherish him, and let her lie in thy bosom, that my lord the king may get heat.

His servants; his physicians. A young virgin; whose natural heat is fresh and wholesome, and not impaired with bearing or breeding of children. The same counsel doth Galen give for the cure of some cold and dry distempers. Let her stand before the king, i. e. minister unto him, or wait upon him, (as this phrase is oft used,) in his sickness, as occasion requires. Let her lie in thy bosom, as his wife or concubine; for that she was so may appear by divers arguments. First, Otherwise this had been a wicked counsel and course; which therefore neither his servants durst have prescribed, nor would David have used, especially being now in a dying condition. And seeing this was easily prevented by his taking her for his concubine, which then was esteemed allowable, it is absurd to think that he would not choose the safer way. Secondly, That passage, ver. 4, but the king knew her not, implies that the king might have had carnal knowledge of her without sin or scandal. Thirdly, It appears from this phrase of lying in his bosom, which is every where in Scripture mentioned as the privilege of a wife and concubine, as Gen. xvi. 5; Deut. xiii. 6; 2 Sam. xii. 8; Mic. vii. 5. Fourthly, This made Adonijah's crime, in desiring her to wife, so heinous in Solomon's account, because he wisely saw, that by marrying the king's wife he designed to revive his pretence to the kingdom, at least in case of Solomon's death; which pretence had been ridiculous, if she had been only the king's handmaid.

3 So they sought for a fair damsel throughout all the coasts of Israel, and found Abishag a ^a Shunammite, and brought her to the king.

^a Josh. 19. 18. A fair damsel; whose beauty might engage his affections, and refresh his spirits, and invite him to those embraces which might communicate some of her natural heat to him, as was designed. A Shunammite, of the city of Shunem in Issachar, Josh. xix. 18. See 2 Kings iv. 8.

4 And the damsel was very fair, and cherished the king, and ministered to him: but the king knew her not.

Which is mentioned to note the continuance and progress of the king's malady, and the ground of Adonijah's rebellion, and of his following request, chap. ii. 17.

b 2 Sam. 3. 4. 5 ¶ Then ^b Adonijah the son of Haggith exalted himself, saying, I will [†] be king: and ^c he prepared him chariots and horsemen, and fifty men to run before him.

[†] Heb. reign. c 2 Sam. 15. 1. Then, upon notice of the desperateness of the king's disease, and the approach of his death, Adonijah the son of Haggith (see 2 Sam. iii. 4) exalted himself; entertained high thoughts and designs. I will be king; as the right of the kingdom is mine, ver. 6, so I will now take possession of it, lest Solomon attempt to deprive me of it. He prepared him chariots and horsemen, and fifty men to run before him, as Absalom had done upon the like occasion, 2 Sam. xv. 1; such ill use did he make of that example, that he committed the same wickedness which he had done, and yet feared not the same disappointment and destruction which he brought upon himself.

6 And his father had not displeased him [†] at any time in saying, Why hast thou done so? and he also was a very goodly man; ^d and his mother bare him after Absalom.

[†] Heb. from his days. d 2 Sam. 3. 3, 4. 1 Chr. 3. 2. His father had not displeased him at any time: this is noted as David's great error, and the occasion of Adonijah's presumption. Why hast thou done so? he neither restrained him from, nor reproved him for his miscarriages; which was a great sin against that plain law, Lev. xix. 17, and severely punished in Eli, which David was not ignorant of, except Adonijah's errors were small, or concealed from David. He also: this particle relates, either, first, To Absalom here following, who also was a goodly man. Or rather, secondly, To what goes before, to signify that this was a second ground of his confidence, because his great comeliness made him amiable in the people's eyes, as his father's indulgence was the first. After Absalom, i. e. next after Absalom was born of his mother: see 2 Sam. iii. 3, 4.

[†] Heb. his words were with Joab. e 2 Sam. 20. 25. f ch. 2. 22, 28. g Heb. helped after Adonijah. 7 And [†] he conferred with Joab the son of Zeruiah, and with ^a Abiathar the priest: and [†] they [†] following Adonijah helped him.

Either because they thought the right of the crown was his; or rather, from secret grudges, because they perceived themselves neglected by David, and possibly by Solomon too; and from carnal policy, that they might secure and advance their own interest, which they saw to be in manifest danger.

8 But Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and Nathan the prophet, and ^g Shimei, and Rei, and ^h the mighty men which belonged to David, were not with Adonijah.

His great and famous commanders, and the guards and soldiers under them.

9 And Adonijah slew sheep and oxen and fat cattle by the stone of Zoheloth, which is by [†] En-rogel, and called all his brethren the king's sons, and all the men of Judah the king's servants:

[†] Or, the well Rogel. 2 Sam. 17. 17. Adonijah slew sheep and oxen and fat cattle; partly for a sacrifice; and partly for feasts, that he might engage God to be on his side, and draw a multitude of people after him. By En-rogel, or, the fountain of Rogel, or, of the fuller; a place nigh to Jerusalem: see Josh. xv. 7; xviii. 16; 2 Sam. xvii. 17. Called all his brethren the king's sons; either because he knew they envied and were discontented with Solomon, and therefore would favour him; or that he might engage them so to do. All the men of Judah the king's servants; except these here excepted, ver. 10.

10 But Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, and the mighty men, and Solomon his brother, he called not.

Because he knew they favoured Solomon his competitor.

11 ¶ Wherefore Nathan spake unto Bath-sheba the mother of Solomon, saying, Hast thou not heard that Adonijah the son of ⁱ Haggith doth reign, and David our lord knoweth it not?

ⁱ 2 Sam. 3. 4. Nathan was prompted to this both by his piety in fulfilling the will of God declared to him, and by him to David, concerning Solomon's succession, 2 Sam. vii. 13; 1 Chron. xxii. 8, 9; and by his prudence, as knowing that Adonijah hated him for being the principal instrument of Solomon's advancement. Bath-sheba being retired and private in her apartment, was yet ignorant of what was done abroad; and she was likely to be most zealous in the cause, and most prevalent with David. David our lord knoweth it not; so far is he from consenting to it, as thou mayst fear or others think, that they have not yet acquainted him with it.

12 Now therefore come, let me, I pray thee, give thee counsel, that thou mayest save thine own life, and the life of thy son Solomon.

For he will never reckon himself safe till his competitor and his friends be taken out of the way.

13 Go and get thee in unto king David, and say unto him, Didst not thou, my lord, O king, swear unto thine handmaid, saying, ^k Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne? why then doth Adonijah reign?

^k 1 Chro. 22. 9. Didst not thou swear, i. e. Thou didst swear; which David himself owneth, ver. 30, which probably he did to satisfy Bath-sheba's doubts and fears about it, and to oblige himself to a compliance with the Divine will declared about it. See chap. ii. 15; 1 Chron. xxviii. 5. Thine handmaid; so she calleth herself, to testify her reverence and subjection to him, not only as her husband, but as her king. He shall sit upon my throne; another expression of the same thing, to signify David's sincerity and fervency in his swearing, which adds to his obligation. Why then doth Adonijah reign? how comes this to pass? or why dost thou suffer it?

14 Behold, while thou yet talkest there with the king, I also will come in after thee, and [†] confirm thy words.

[†] Heb. fill up. 15 ¶ And Bath-sheba went in unto the king into the chamber: and the king was very old; and Abishag the Shunammite ministered unto the king.

16 And Bath-sheba bowed, and did obeisance unto the king. And the king said, † What wouldest thou?

17 And she said unto him, My lord, † thou swarest by the LORD thy God unto thine handmaid, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne.

Thou swarest by the Lord thy God; to whom thou art highly obliged, whose name thou justly fearest and honour-est; and therefore thou wilt not pollute it by perjury, but make conscience of thy oath.

18 And now, behold, Adonijah reigneth; and now, my lord the king, thou knowest it not:

This she adds, partly lest she should seem to accuse the king of inconstancy and perfidiousness; and partly to aggravate Adonijah's crime, from that gross neglect and contempt of the king which did accompany it.

19 ^m And he hath slain oxen and fat cattle and sheep in abundance, and hath called all the sons of the king, and Abiathar the priest, and Joab the captain of the host: but Solomon thy servant hath he not called.

Who is not so presumptuous as Adonijah, usurping the throne before his time; but carries himself modestly and submissively, as thy son, and servant, and subject.

20 And thou, my lord, O king, the eyes of all Israel are upon thee, that thou shouldst tell them who shall sit on the throne of my lord the king after him.

The eyes of all Israel are upon thee; the generality of the people are in suspense, whether Adonijah's practices be with thy consent or no, and wait for thy sentence, which they will readily embrace. Who shall sit upon the throne of my lord the king; she speaks only in general, as owning the king's prerogative to give the crown to which of his sons he pleased, if he had not restrained himself by his oath to Solomon. After him, i. e. after thy death; whereby she taxeth Adonijah's ambition, who usurped the crown whilst his father lived.

21 Otherwise it shall come to pass, when my lord the king shall ⁿ sleep with his fathers, that I and my son Solomon shall be counted † offenders.

Shall sleep with his fathers, i. e. die as his fathers did. See Gen. xvii. 30. I and my son Solomon shall be counted offenders; we shall be punished with death as malefactors, as guilty of practising against the right heir of the crown, and transferring the kingdom to Solomon, and covering our ambitious designs with a pretence of religion.

22 ¶ And, lo, while she yet talked with the king, Nathan the prophet also came in.

To discourse with the king; which made it fit for her to withdraw, as she did, ver. 28.

23 And they told the king, saying, Behold Nathan the prophet. And when he was come in before the king, he bowed himself before the king with his face to the ground.

24 And Nathan said, My lord, O king, hast thou said, Adonijah shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne?

Is this done by thy consent? without which it seems strange that he durst attempt it.

25 ^o For he is gone down this day, and hath slain oxen and fat cattle and sheep in abundance, and hath called all the king's sons, and the captains of the host, and Abiathar the priest; and, behold, they eat and drink before him, and say, † God save king Adonijah.

26 But me, even me thy servant, and Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and thy servant Solomon, hath he not called.

Even me thy servant, whom he knew to be acquainted with thy mind, and with the mind of God in this matter; and therefore his neglect of me herein gives me cause to suspect that this is done without thy privity; which now I come to know.

27 Is this thing done by my lord the king, and thou hast not shewed it unto thy servant, who should sit on the throne of my lord the king after him?

Thou hast not showed it unto thy servant; who, having been an instrument in delivering God's message to thee concerning thy successor, might reasonably expect that if the king had changed his mind, or God had since made some revelation contrary to the former, thou wouldest have acquainted me with it, as being both a prophet of the Lord, and one whom thou hast always found faithful to thee, and to whom thou hast used to communicate thy secret counsels.

28 ¶ Then king David answered and said, Call me Bath-sheba. And she came † into the king's presence, and stood before the king.

Call me Bath-sheba; who, upon Nathan's approach to the king, had modestly withdrawn herself, either in another room, or into another part of this room, more remote from the bed upon which David lay.

29 And the king sware, and said, ^q As the LORD liveth, that hath redeemed my soul out of all distress, 30 ^r Even as I sware unto thee by the LORD God of Israel, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne in my stead; even so will I certainly do this day.

31 Then Bath-sheba bowed with her face to the earth, and did reverence to the king, and said, ^s Let my lord king David live for ever.

i. e. For a long time, as that word is oft used, as chap. ii. 33; Dan. ii. 4. Though I desire thy oath may be kept, and the right of succession confirmed to my son; yet I am far from thirsting after thy death for his advancement, and should rather rejoice, if it were possible for thee to live and enjoy thy crown for ever.

32 ¶ And king David said, Call me Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada. And they came before the king.

33 The king also said unto them, ^t Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon my son to ride upon † mine own mule, and bring him down to ^u Gihon:

The servants of your Lord, i. e. my public officers, and my guards. To ride upon mine own mule; as a token that the royal dignity is transferred upon Solomon, and that by my consent. Compare Gen. xli. 43; Esth. vi. 8. To Gihon; a river near Jerusalem, on the west side, as may be gathered from 2 Chron. xxxii. 30, as En-rogel, where Adonijah was inaugurated, was on the east side. This place David chose, either as remote from Adonijah and his company, that so the people might go thither, and be there without fear of tumults or bloodshed; or to show that Solomon was chosen king in opposition to Adonijah; or because this was a place of great resort, and fit to receive and display that numerous company which he knew would follow Solomon thither; or that he might from thence return and make the more magnificent entrance into the city.

34 And let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet ^aanoint him there king over Israel: and ^bblow ye with the trumpet, and say, God save king Solomon.

Anoint him there king; as they used to do where there was any thing new, or doubtful, or extraordinary in the succession, as 1 Sam. x. 1; xvi. 12, 13; 1 Kings xix. 15, 16; 2 Kings ix. 3. And this unction signified both the designation of the persons to the office, and the gifts and graces which were necessary for their office, and which they, seeking them sincerely from God, might expect to receive. Blow ye with the trumpet; to make the action more solemn, and glorious, and public.

35 Then ye shall come up after him, that he may come and sit upon my throne; for he shall be king in my stead: and I have appointed him to be ruler over Israel and over Judah.

King in my stead; my deputy and vice-king whilst I live, and absolutely king when I die. Or if David and Solomon were joint kings, it is no more than was afterwards frequent at Rome, where the father and son, or two other persons, were not seldom joint emperors. I have appointed, and that by Divine direction. And over Judah: this is added, partly as being the most eminent and royal tribe; it being frequent, together with the general distinction, to mention one of the most eminent particulars, as 1 Kings xi. 1; Psal. xviii. title; Mark xvi. 7; and partly lest the men of Judah, who were in a special manner invited by Adonijah, ver. 9, might think themselves exempted from his jurisdiction.

36 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada answered the king, and said, Amen: the LORD God of my lord the king say so too.

Amen; which was both an approbation of the king's fact, and a profession of his allegiance to the new king, and a petition to God to ratify and confirm it. The Lord God of my lord the king say so too; the Lord stablish Solomon's throne in spite of Adonijah, and all his other enemies.

37 ^aAs the LORD hath been with my lord the king, even so be he with Solomon, and ^bmake his throne greater than the throne of my lord king David.

Which petition, albeit it might have offended an unworthy, vain-glorious, and envious father, he knew would be welcome to so pious and generous a man as David was, and to one so kind and indulgent to his children.

38 So Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, ^band Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, went down, and caused Solomon to ride upon king David's mule, and brought him to Gihon.

39 And Zadok the priest took an horn of ^coil out of the tabernacle, and ^danointed Solomon. And they blew the trumpet; ^eand all the people said, God save king Solomon.

Zadok the priest; for though he was not the high priest, he might do this office, especially having the direction of the prophet Nathan, ver. 34. Out of the tabernacle; that which David had erected for the ark, 2 Sam. vi. 17, in which oil was kept for divers sacred uses; for Moses's tabernacle was at Gibeon, 1 Chron. xvi. 39; xxi. 29, which was too remote for the present occasion, which required all possible expedition.

40 And all the people came up after him, and the people piped with ^{||} pipes, and rejoiced with great joy, so that the earth rent with the sound of them.

All the people came up after him; which flocked thither in abundance; some out of curiosity to see so solemn an action; others to do their duty; and others in expectation of some advantage by their cheerful attendance upon the new king. Rejoiced with great joy; partly because this would certainly prevent civil wars, under which they had so lately and so sorely groaned, and which they had reason to fear from Adonijah's pretence to the crown, and the assistance he might have from the great and famous lord-general Joab, and from Abiathar the high priest, and from others who were or might easily be engaged for him, if David had not ended the controversy in his lifetime; and partly because of the singular wisdom and virtue for which Solomon was even then famous. See chap. ii. 6, 9. The earth rent; an hyperbolic expression; yet even solid bodies have been oft broken and rent by great sounds.

41 ¶ And Adonijah and all the guests that were with him heard it as they had made an end of eating. And when Joab heard the sound of the trumpet, he said, Wherefore is this noise of the city being in an uproar?

As they had made an end of eating; for Nathan having given wise counsel, took all due care to expedite the execution of it, that it might not be spoiled by delays, as frequently happens.

42 And while he yet spake, behold, Jonathan the son of Abiathar the priest came: and Adonijah said unto him, Come in; for ^fthou art a valiant man, and bringest good tidings.

Jonathan it seems was left at Jerusalem for a spy, as he had formerly been under Absalom. Thou art a valiant man; or, a man of virtue or worth, as this Hebrew word is used, Prov. xii. 4; and therefore a happy man, and hast good news for thyself and us. Compare 2 Sam. xviii. 27.

43 And Jonathan answered and said to Adonijah, Verily our lord king David hath made Solomon king.

Verily, or, but, or, nay but, i. e. the matter is not as thou expectest, but quite contrary.

44 And the king hath sent with him Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and they have caused him to ride upon the king's mule:

45 And Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet have anointed him king in Gihon: and they are come up from thence rejoicing, so that the city rang again. This is the noise that ye have heard.

46 And also Solomon ^gsitteth on the throne of the kingdom.

i. e. Is put into actual possession of the kingdom.

47 And moreover the king's servants came to bless our lord king David, saying, ^hGod make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne. ⁱAnd the king bowed himself upon the bed.

To bless our lord king David; to praise and thank him for his great and good care, in leaving them in the hands of so excellent a successor, under whom they might expect peace and all prosperity; and to congratulate with him for God's great mercy to him, in giving him such a son and successor, and that his eyes had now seen the actual accomplishment of God's promise made to him concerning this thing. The king bowed himself upon the bed; adoring God for this great mercy, and thereby declaring his hearty approbation and consent to this action. Compare Gen. xvii. 31.

48 And also thus said the king, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, which hath ^kgiven one to sit on my throne this day, mine eyes even seeing it.

49 And all the guests that were with Adonijah were afraid, and rose up, and went every man his way.

1 ch. 2. 28. Either that which was at Gibeon, as appears from 1 Chron. xvi. 39; 2 Chron. i. 3; and was made with four horns, Exod. xxxviii. 2; to which the sacrifices were bound, Psal. cxviii. 27. Or rather, that which David had lately set up in the threshing-floor of Araunah, which doubtless was made after the same form as that at Gibeon; for, first, This was next at hand. Secondly, The altar only is mentioned here, whereas in Joab's case there is mention of the tabernacle and altar both, chap. ii. 28, 29, which seems to be noted to distinguish the two altars; for Adonijah being the king's son, he might safely go to Araunah's altar, and the people would not be forward to seize upon him, or bring him to justice: but Joab truly thought it was not safe for him to venture himself there, and therefore he fled to Gibeon, as a place more remote from Jerusalem. Hither he fled, either to implore God's mercy; or rather, to avoid Solomon's rage; supposing that his reverence to that sacred place would not permit him to pollute it with his brother's blood; or that the consideration of God's grace and mercy, which himself needed and begged of God, in pardoning his offences, and accepting the sacrifices which he should offer there, would engage and dispose him to show mercy to his offending and now penitent brother; or that his piety would not allow him violently to pluck him as it were out of the arms of God, into which he had put himself. And for these or such-like reasons the altar was esteemed a kind of sanctuary or place of refuge, not only among the Gentiles, but also among the Hebrews, though it be not called by that name, as may be gathered from Exod. xxi. 14; 1 Kings ii. 28.

51 And it was told Solomon, saying, Behold, Adonijah feareth king Solomon: for, lo, he hath caught hold on the horns of the altar, saying, Let king Solomon swear unto me to day that he will not slay his servant with the sword.

He owns Solomon as his king, and himself as his servant and subject; and being sensible of his great guilt, and of the jealousy which kings have of their competitors, could not be satisfied without Solomon's oath.

52 And Solomon said, If he will shew himself a worthy man, ^mthere shall not an hair of him fall to the earth: but if wickedness shall be found in him, he shall die.

A worthy man, Heb. a man of strength or courage; for it requires great strength of mind and resolution to resist all temptations of vice, and to do virtuously. There shall not an hair of him fall to the earth: herein Solomon manifests his clemency and brotherly affection, and withal his prudence in sparing him, whom, being his brother, and his eldest brother too, it would have been invidious to have slain. If wickedness shall be found in him; not only if he shall be guilty of some capital crime, but of any great wickedness or evil design; for as this pardon was Solomon's free act, so he might justly qualify it as he pleased.

53 So king Solomon sent, and they brought him down from the altar. And he came and bowed himself to king Solomon: and Solomon said unto him, Go to thine house.

Lead a private or retired and quiet life, without noise and numerous attendants, and meddle not with the affairs of the court and kingdom.

CHAP. II.

David lying on his death-bed, giveth charge to Solomon of a religious life, 1—4. Of Joab, Barzillai, and Shimei, 5—9. He dieth: Solomon succeedeth, 10—12. Adonijah suing for Abishag, is put to death, 13—25. Abiathar is deprived of the priesthood, 26, 27. Joab fleeing to the horns of the altar is slain there, 28—34. Benaiah is put in Joab's room, and Zadok in Abiathar's, 35. Shimei confined to Jerusalem; going thence to Gath is put to death, 36—46.

NOW *the days of David drew nigh that he should die; and he charged Solomon his son, saying,

2 ^bI go the way of all the earth: ^cbe thou strong therefore, and shew thyself a man;

Of all the earth, i. e. of all men upon the earth. Compare Josh. xxiii. 14; Heb. ix. 27. Be thou strong; for to govern his people according to the law of God, as it here follows, requires great fortitude or strength of mind; to arm himself against the subtle devices and evasions of some; against the flatteries and importunities of others; against terrors and dangers from revengeful men, and especially against himself and his own weakness, partiality, through fear or favour; and against all those evil thoughts and passions to which the temptations of their great wealth, and glory, and uncontrollable power naturally expose them. See Prov. xvi. 32. Show thyself a man, in manly wisdom, and courage, and constancy, though thou art but young in years, 1 Chron. xxii. 5.

3 And keep the charge of the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and his testimonies, as it is written in the law of Moses, that thou mayest ^d¶ prosper in all that thou doest, and whithersoever thou turnest thyself:

The charge of the Lord thy God, i. e. what God hath charged or commanded thee to do; the act being put for the object, as is usual. In the law of Moses; which the prince was enjoined to transcribe and read, Deut. xvii. 18, that he might govern his own and his people's actions by it. That thou mayest prosper; or, behave thyself prudently; for the word signifies both. Hereby he intimates that religion is the truest reason of state, and that all true wisdom and good success depends upon piety.

4 That the LORD may ^econtinue his word which he spake concerning me, saying, 'If thy children take heed to their way, to ^fwalk before me in truth with all their heart and with all their soul, ^hthere shall not ^gfail thee (said he) a man on the throne of Israel.

Confirm his word, i. e. fulfil his promise, the condition upon which it was suspended being performed. Take heed to their ways, i. e. diligently observe all their actions, to order them according to God's word. To walk before me; to live as those that have God before their eyes, and endeavour to approve themselves to him. In truth; not only in pretence and show, but truly and sincerely. With all their heart, and with all their soul, i. e. universally, freely, and fervently. There shall not fail thee a man on the throne of Israel; the succession shall be continued in thy line without any interruption.

5 Moreover thou knowest also what Joab the son of Zeruiah ⁱdid to me, and what he did to the two captains of the hosts of Israel, unto ^kAbner the son of Ner, and unto ^lAmasa the son of Jether, whom he slew, and ^mshed the blood of war in peace, and put the blood of war upon his girdle that ⁿwas about his loins, and in his shoes that ^owere on his feet.

Did to me, i. e. against me; either, first, Directly and immediately; how insolently and imperiously he hath carried himself towards me from time to time, trampling upon my authority and commands when they thwarted his humour or interest, provoking my spirit by his words and actions. See 2 Sam. iii. 39; xix. 7. Or, secondly, Indirectly, in what he did against Abner and Amasa; whose death was a great injury to David, as it was a breach of his laws and peace; a contempt of his person and government; a pernicious example to others of his subjects upon the like occasions; a great scandal and dishonour to him, as if Joab had been only David's instrument, to effect what he secretly desired and designed; whereby the hearts of his people either were or might have been alienated from him, and inflamed against him, and the wounds which were well nigh healed might have been widened again, and made to bleed afresh. And what he did, or, even; the following branches being added as an explication of the foregoing, to show what and how he acted towards or against David. Or, and particularly; as his other miscarriages, so these especially. Shed the blood of war in peace; he slew them as if they had been in the state and act of war, when there was not only a cessation of arms, but also a treaty and agreement of peace, of which also they were the great procurers and promoters. Upon his girdle that was about his loins, and in his shoes that were on his feet: this is added to note his impudence and impitenency, that although by his perfidious manner of killing them, when he pretended to embrace them, he stained his own garments with their blood, yet he was not ashamed of it, but gloried in it, and marched boldly along with the army with the same girdle and shoes which were sprinkled with their blood. See 2 Sam. xx. 10.

Prov. 20. 26. 6 Do therefore ^m according to thy wisdom, and let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace.

According to thy wisdom, i. e. what in reason and justice thou seest fit. For though I was forced to forbear him when it was in a manner out of my power to punish him, yet I never forgave him; and therefore do thou wisely and severely examine all his actions, and particularly this last rebellion, and punish him according to his demerits. Let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace; though he be old, having been the general of the army forty years, yet do not suffer him to die a natural death, but cut him off by the sword of justice.

7 But shew kindness unto the sons of ⁿ Barzillai the Gileadite, and let them be of those that ^o eat at thy table: for so ^p they came to me when I fled because of Absalom thy brother.

Quest. Why doth he not require the like kindness to Mephibosheth the son of his dear Jonathan? Ans. Either he and his were now extinct, or by their after-miscarriages had forfeited his favour. For so, i. e. with such kindness either as I cannot express, (as the particle so is elsewhere used,) or as I command thee to show to them. They, i. e. Barzillai and his sons; for though Barzillai only be mentioned, 2 Sam. xvii. 27, yet his sons doubtless were instrumental in the business, especially Chimham, 2 Sam. xix. 37, 38.

8 And, behold, thou hast with thee ^q Shimei the son of Gera, a Benjamite of Bahurim, which cursed me with a ^r grievous curse in the day when I went to Mahanaim: but ^s he came down to meet me at Jordan, and ^t I swore to him by the Lord, saying, I will not put thee to death with the sword.

With thee, i. e. in thy power, as that phrase is oft used. Cursed me with a grievous curse; or, reproached me with bitter reproaches, 2 Sam. xvi. 7, 8; which David could not but deeply resent from him, though, as it was an affliction sent from God, he patiently submitted to it. I will not put thee to death with the sword. Quest. How then could David lawfully engage Solomon to punish him for it? And did David upon his death-bed bear malice against Shimei? Ans. First, David was not a private person, which might remit such offences without any inconvenience; but a public magistrate, who for the honour and maintenance of government was obliged to punish such insolent and opprobrious speeches, if the necessity of his affairs had not then engaged him to pass it by. Otherwise it appears from divers passages of the Psalms, and of this history, how free David was from a rancorous and revengeful spirit, even towards his enemies. Secondly, The following advice is not contrary to David's oath, both because that was only personal, that David would not kill him either at that time, as Abishai desired him, or whilst he lived, and did not oblige his successors; and especially, because it was not David's mind that Shimei should be put to death for that fault, (as is evident; for then there was no need of Solomon's wisdom to find out an occasion, but only of his justice to punish him for the old crime,) but for some other competent crime, which Solomon's wisdom, narrowly prying into all his actions, would easily find out. And if the condition which Solomon imposed upon Shimei, ver. 36, 37, seem hard, it must be remembered that David only swore that he would pardon him as to life, but not that he would exempt him from all punishment or confinement.

9 Now therefore ^u hold him not guiltless: for thou art a wise man, and knowest what thou oughtest to do unto him; but his hoar head ^v bring thou down to the grave with blood.

Hold him not guiltless; though I have spared his life, do not treat him as an innocent person, neither let him go wholly unpunished. Thou art a wise man, and therefore wilt easily find out just occasions to chastise him, especially considering his perverse and wicked disposition. What thou oughtest to do unto him; how to punish him, not without just cause, and yet without any violation of my oath, or reflection upon me, or upon religion for my or thy sake. With blood, i. e. with the effusion of his blood; with a bloody or violent death.

10 So ^w David slept with his fathers, and was buried in ^x the city of David.

Slept with his fathers: see of this phrase Deut. xxxi. 16; 1 Kings i. 21. In the city of David, i. e. in that part of Jerusalem which was called by his name, because he took it from the Jebusites. See 2 Sam. v. 7; 1 Chron. xi. 5; 2 Chron. v. 2.

11 And the days that David ^y reigned over Israel were forty years: seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jerusalem.

Seven years; more precisely, seven years and six months, 2 Sam. v. 5; but smaller sums are oft neglected in Scripture computations.

12 ¶ Then sat Solomon upon the throne of David his father: and his kingdom was established greatly.

Being settled upon him with universal consent and approbation, and with the hearty affections of his people, which all wise men know to be a prince's best and surest establishment.

13 ¶ And Adonijah the son of Haggith came to Bath-sheba the mother of Solomon. And she said, ^b Comest thou peaceably? And he said, Peaceably.

Comest thou peaceably, or with some evil design upon me or my son? which she might well surmise, knowing his ambition and envy at Solomon, and his hatred against her, as the chief occasion of his dejection.

14 He said moreover, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And she said, Say on.

15 And he said, Thou knowest that the kingdom was ^c mine, and that all Israel set their faces on me, that I should reign: howbeit the kingdom is turned about, and is become my brother's: for ^d it was his from the Lord.

The kingdom was mine, both by birthright and by actual inauguration. It seems he could not yet forget his presence to the crown, nor his ambition for it, but continues his claim; which, it seems, Solomon did apprehend and resent, though Bath-sheba did not; the wives and concubines of the late king being reputed to appertain to the successor. See 2 Sam. xii. 8. All Israel set their faces on me; they looked upon me as their king, and David's successor, expecting that David should confirm my election. The kingdom is turned about; translated from me to him, by the vicissitude of human affairs, and the changeable humour of the people. It was his from the Lord; either, first, By God's providence so disposing David's mind, and the people's hearts. Or rather, secondly, By God's appointment and particular designation, wherein he would seem to acquiesce; which he mentions, not that he made any conscience of it, or had any regard to it; but only that by this pretence he might deceive both her and Solomon, as if he were far from any design of usurping the kingdom.

16 And now I ask one petition of thee, [†]deny me not. And she said unto him, Say on.

Deny me not, Heb. do not turn away my face, i. e. do not send me out of thy presence sad or ashamed. Compare 2 Chron. vi. 42; Psal. cxxxii. 10.

17 And he said, Speak, I pray thee, unto Solomon the king, (for he will not say thee nay,) that he give me ^eAbishag the Shunammite to wife.

Which though it was against a positive law of God, Lev. xviii. 7, yet either Adonijah might be ignorant of it, being a man more studied in the affairs of the court than in the book of God; or might think her not concerned in it, because David knew her not, chap. i. 4.

18 And Bath-sheba said, Well; I will speak for thee unto the king.

19 ¶ Bath-sheba therefore went unto king Solomon, to speak unto him for Adonijah. And the king rose up to meet her, and ^fbowed himself unto her, and sat down on his throne, and caused a seat to be set for the king's mother; ^gand she sat on his right hand.

The most honourable place next to the king's. See 2 Chron. xviii. 18; Neh. viii. 4; Psal. xlv. 9; Matt. xx. 21.

20 Then she said, I desire one small petition of thee; I pray thee, say me not nay. And the king said unto her, Ask on, my mother: for I will not say thee nay.

One small petition; so she esteemed it, because she did not perceive his design in it; and as for that law, Lev. xviii. 7, she might apprehend, that because David knew her not, it was only a contract for marriage, and therefore no impediment of her marriage to any other after his death; which also is the opinion of some of the late learned Hebrew doctors. I will not say thee nay; supposing thy request be but small, as thou sayest it is, and not unlawful, nor injurious to myself or others.

21 And she said, Let Abishag the Shunammite be given to Adonijah thy brother to wife.

Thy brother, by the father's side, whom brotherly affection and relation obligeth thee to gratify, at least, in small things.

22 And king Solomon answered and said unto his mothe^f, And why dost thou ask Abishag the Shunammite for Adonijah? ask for him the kingdom also; for he is mine elder brother; even for him, and for ^hAbiathar the priest, and for Joab the son of Zeruiah.

Ask for him the kingdom also: his design is not upon Abishag, but upon the kingdom; which, by this means, he thinks to recover; partly because she was the last king's wife, or concubine, which might strengthen his pretence to the crown; see 2 Sam. iii. 7; xii. 8; xvi. 21; and partly because by her eminent beauty, and near relation to David, she had a powerful interest in the court. Quest. Was not this too harsh a censure, and the following punishment of it too severe? Ans. 1. That Adonijah had such a design is very probable, both from his temper, for he was an aspiring and designing man, and highly discontented with Solomon's government, and desirous of a change; and from the nature of the thing, because he would not have made so daring and presumptuous a request, if he had not some great design in it. 2. It is very likely from the following words, though not expressed, that he, and Joab, and Abiathar were engaged in some design against Solomon, and that Solomon had got information of it; and therefore he did and might reasonably take this for an indication, and the first overt act of his treason. 3. Solomon did not pardon Adonijah's treason simply and absolutely, but upon condition that he carried himself worthily, chap. i. 52; and this being confessedly a bold and unworthy action, and arguing more confidence and presumption than became him, and carrying in it the appearance and intention of an incestuous marriage, he might justly revive his guilt, and take this occasion to execute the sentence which he formerly deserved. If it be said, That it is very improbable that Adonijah should expect to get the kingdom from Solomon, who was so firmly established in it with universal applause; it may be answered, That Adonijah was not the only man that hath fed himself with vain hopes, and engaged himself in high and treasonable designs, where to other wise men there was but little likelihood of success; and that he might now be only laying the foundation of what he further intended, when he saw a fit time, and getting a pretence for his future attempts upon the crown; either when Solomon should lose the people's affections, as David had done; or when Solomon should die, which also Adonijah might secretly procure and hasten; and he had only Solomon's young and tender son to contest with. All which, and many other things, Solomon in his great wisdom might easily discern; yea, or have some secret intelligence of, though it be not recorded. He is mine elder brother; he looks upon the kingdom as his by nature and birthright, and the law of nations; and therefore he may seek to recover his own, and to cast me out as a usurper. And for Abiathar and for Joab; who have all a hand in the plot, though he alone appear in it; which appears the more likely, because of Solomon proceeding against them all at the same time, as appears in the following verses.

23 Then king Solomon sware by the LORD, saying, ⁱGod do so to me, and ⁱmore also, if Adonijah have not spoken this word against his own life.

Sware by the Lord; once here, and again, ver. 24; which he did to oblige himself irrevocably to it, and to prevent all intercessions for his life, it being of so great importance to him.

24 Now therefore, as the LORD liveth, which hath established me, and set me on the throne of David my father, and who hath made me an house, as he ^kpromised, Adonijah shall be put to death ^kthis day.

Though Adonijah be my elder brother, yet I have an undoubted right and title to the crown, and that from the promise and appointment of that God who disposeth of all kingdoms, and especially this of Israel, to whom he pleaseth; and therefore Adonijah in this and his former attempt is guilty of treason against me, and of rebellion against God. Who hath made me an house; either, 1. Who hath given me posterity, as that phrase is used, Exod. i. 21, and elsewhere; for Rehoboam most probably was born before this time, by comparing 1 Kings xiv. 21. Or rather, 2. Who hath established me in the house and throne of David; which he thus expresseth, to signify, that God hath fulfilled in and to him that promise which he made to David, in 2 Sam. vii. 11, where the same phrase is used, and where it doth not so much signify the giving of David posterity, which he had sufficiently before that time, as the settlement of the crown in him and his seed. Adonijah shall be put to death this day; for he knew delays were dangerous in matters of that nature.

25 And king Solomon sent by the hand ^lof Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; and he fell upon him that he died.

For the execution of justice was not then committed to obscure persons, as now it is; but to persons of great honour and authority. See Judg. viii. 21; 1 Sam. xxii. 18; 2 Sam. i. 15; iv. 12. He fell upon him with a sword, or other instrument of death; as below, ver. 32, 34, 46.

26 ¶ And unto Abiathar the priest said the king, Get thee to ¹Anathoth, unto thine own fields; for thou art † worthy of death: but I will not at this time put thee to death, ^m because thou barest the ark of the Lord God before David my father, and because ⁿ thou hast been afflicted in all wherein my father was afflicted.

To Anathoth, a city of the priests, Josh. xxi. 18, to lead a private life there. Unto thine own fields; either that part of the suburbs which fell to his share, or other land which he had purchased there. See Jer. xxxii. 7. At this time: he doth not fully pardon him, but only forbears him, and reserves to himself a liberty of punishing him afterwards, if he saw occasion; which he doth to keep him in awe, that he might not dare to raise or foment discontents or tumults among the people, which otherwise he might be prone to do. Because thou barest the ark of the Lord God before David my father, when he thought fit to carry it out with him; as 2 Sam. xv. 24, 29; 1 Chron. xv. 11, 12; when he as high priest was to attend upon it. Thus Solomon showeth his respect to his sacred function. Thou hast been afflicted in all wherein my father was afflicted: here he mixeth mercy with justice, and requites Abiathar's former kindness to David; hereby teaching princes that they should not write injuries in marble, and benefits in sand or water, as they have been too oft observed to do.

27 So Solomon thrust out Abiathar from being priest unto the LORD; that he might ^o fulfil the word of the LORD, which he spake concerning the house of Eli in Shiloh.

From being priest unto the Lord; either from his office, or, at least, from the execution of his office. For some think that he was thrust from his office before David's death, when Zadok was formerly made priest, i. e. high priest, in his stead, 1 Chron. xxix. 22. But that seems to be a mistake; for although that passage immediately follows the history of what was done in the time of David's life and health, when he was in a capacity of going into the public congregation; yet it manifestly belongs to another time, and was done after it; for he there speaks of Solomon's being made king the second time, and he was made king but twice; once undoubtedly before this, 1 Chron. xxiii. 1; and again 1 Kings i. 39; when David was bedrid, and Adonijah's usurpation made a second unction necessary. And therefore what is said 1 Chron. xxix. 22, of Zadok's being made priest, was done after Abiathar's deposition, and upon that occasion. That he might fulfil the word of the Lord; for what hinders but Solomon might intend this not only as a punishment for his treason, but also as a means to accomplish God's word? Concerning the house of Eli, i. e. concerning the translation of the priesthood from the house of Eli, and of Ithamar, unto that of Eleazar; which being threatened eighty years ago, is now executed. So Divine vengeance, though sometimes it be slow, is always sure.

28 ¶ Then tidings came to Joab: for Joab ^p had turned after Adonijah, though he turned not after Absalom. And Joab fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD, and ^q caught hold on the horns of the altar.

Tidings came to Joab, concerning Adonijah's death, and Abiathar's deposition. The tabernacle of the Lord then was at Gibeon, 1 Kings iii. 4, compared with 2 Chron. i. 3, 5. Caught hold on the horns of the altar; of which see before, chap. i. 50.

29 And it was told king Solomon that Joab was fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD; and, behold, he is by the altar. Then Solomon sent Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, saying, Go, fall upon him.

To wit, if he will not come thence, as I foresee he will not. 30 And Benaiah came to the tabernacle of the LORD, and said unto him, Thus saith the king, Come forth. And he said, Nay; but I will die here. And Benaiah brought the king word again, saying, Thus said Joab, and thus he answered me.

Thus saith the king, Come forth: that the king gave him this command, though it be not mentioned before, is evident, both from the nature of the thing; for Solomon would not pollute the altar without necessity; and from Benaiah's affirmation of it; for why should he tell a lie without a cause? and from his return to the king for new orders upon Joab's resolution not to come thence. I will die here; for he supposed either that Solomon would not defile that place with his blood; or that he would spare him for his respect to it, as he had done Adonijah; or he had a superstitious conceit that his dying there might give his guilty and miserable soul some advantage.

31 And the king said unto him, ^r Do as he hath said, and fall upon him, and bury him; ^s that thou mayest take away the innocent blood, which Joab shed, from me, and from the house of my father.

Do as he hath said; either, 1. Kill him in that place; and for so doing Solomon might seem to have warrant from God, Exod. xxi. 14, and might further design by this just severity to deter future offenders, by showing that no place nor person should protect them from the stroke of justice. Or rather, 2. Let him die as he is resolved; kill him, though he be there; take him by violence from that place, and then kill him; for Exod. xxi. 14 doth not command the ruler to kill the murderer there, but to remove him thence, to take him from the altar, that he may die. And seeing this might be done, why should Solomon unnecessarily stain the altar with his blood? The innocent blood, i. e. both the guilt of it, which would rest upon my father and my family if it went unpunished; and the scandal and reproach of it, that neither this nor following ages may imagine that it was done by David's secret instigation, or with his consent.

32 And the LORD ^t shall return his blood upon his own head, who fell upon two men more righteous ^u and better than he, and slew them with the sword, my father David not knowing thereof, ^v to wit, ^w Abner the son of Ner, captain of the host of Israel, and ^x Amasa the son of Jether, captain of the host of Judah.

His blood, i. e. the guilt of the blood which he shed. More righteous and better than he; of more ingenuous and generous tempers, abhorring from all such treacherous practices; and both of them then devoted to and employed in my service.

33 Their blood shall therefore return upon the head of Joab, and ^y upon the head of his seed for ever: ^z but upon David, and upon his seed, and upon his house, and upon his throne, shall there be peace for ever from the LORD.

Upon the head of his seed for ever; either as long as he shall have a posterity, or for a long time, as that phrase is commonly used; but in and by this execution of justice upon him, and such malefactors, my throne shall be established, and God will bless me and mine with peace and prosperity.

34 So Benaiah the son of Jehoiada went up, and fell upon him, and slew him: and he was buried in his own house in the wilderness.

oft so called in Scripture, as Isa. xlii. 11; Jer. xxv. 24; Ezek. xxxiv. 25.

35 ¶ And the king put Benaiah the son of Jehoiada in his room over the host: and ^bZadok the priest did the king put in the room of ^aAbiathar.

He now put him in the execution of that office to which he may seem to have been anointed before, 1 Chron. xxix. 22; but of that, see my notes here on ver. 27.

36 ¶ And the king sent and called for ^dShimei, and said unto him, Build thee an house in Jerusalem, and dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither.

This Solomon ordered, partly, for his own security, that being removed from that place where his kindred, and estate, and interest lay, to a place where he was but a stranger, and sufficiently odious for his former and never-to-be-forgotten insolency towards his lord and king, he might be incapable of raising any tumults and seditions; partly, as a penalty for his former wickedness, wherein yet there was more mercy than justice, and from which David had not promised him any security, but only given him his life; and partly, that being in this public theatre, all his words and actions might be narrowly observed; which, considering his busy, and covetous, and wicked temper, was likely to give Solomon the advantage which he sought for; and this very prohibition would probably inflame his desire of transgressing it, as the manner of men is.

37 For it shall be, that on the day thou goest out, and passest over ^ethe brook Kidron, thou shalt know for certain that thou shalt surely die: ^fthy blood shall be upon thine own head.

The brook Kidron; a brook nigh unto Jerusalem, of which see 2 Sam. xv. 23; 2 Kings xxiii. 4; which he particularly names, because that was the way to Bahurim, his former and settled habitation: but this is not to be understood exclusively to other ways and places; for the restraint was general, that he should not go forth thence any whither, ver. 36, to wit, as far any other way as Cedron was: which also appears from the following history; for when he went to Gath, he went not over Cedron, (which lay eastward from the city,) but westward, as Gath lay. Thy blood shall be upon thine own head; the blame and guilt of thy blood shall lie upon thyself only.

38 And Shimei said unto the king, The saying is good: as my lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do. And Shimei dwelt in Jerusalem many days.

The saying is good; thy sentence is much more merciful than I expected or deserved. So will thy servant do; and Shimei did not only promise it, but also swore to it; being required by Solomon to do so, as is manifest from ver. 42, 43.

39 And it came to pass at the end of three years, that two of the servants of Shimei ran away unto ^gAchish son of Maachah king of Gath. And they told Shimei, saying, Behold, thy servants be in Gath.

Achish son of Maachah king of Gath; a king, but subject and tributary, first to David, and then to Solomon. This might be either that Achish who showed so much kindness to David, 1 Sam. xxvii., xxviii., or his son; who, in requital of this kindness, was still permitted to enjoy the title and honour of a king, but not the full power; whence it was that Achish could not, or durst not, keep these servants, though they had fled to him for protection, but suffered Shimei to take them away from his royal city.

40 And Shimei arose, and saddled his ass, and went to Gath to Achish to seek his servants: and Shimei went, and brought his servants from Gath.

Went to Gath; which, though highly dangerous, he attempted, partly, because he was blinded with covetousness and rage against his servants, which two lusts have done, and daily do, engage men to such courses and actions as are no less dangerous to their lives than this is; partly, because he thought length of time had worn this out of Solomon's mind, and other men's thoughts; and that this being done secretly and speedily, would never have come to Solomon's ears; or that Solomon would not be severe in this case, where it was not wantonness nor contempt of his authority, but the necessity of his household concerns, which put him upon it; and partly, because God withdrew from him the light of common prudence, and wholly left him to his own mistakes, and folly, and lusts; and withal, to the instigation of the devil, whose cunning and powerful artifices and insinuations he could not resist without Divine help.

41 And it was told Solomon that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath, and was come again.

It was told Solomon, who doubtless had his spies appointed to observe him in all his motions.

42 And the king sent and called for Shimei, and said unto him, Did I not make thee to swear by the LORD, and protested unto thee, saying, Know for a certain, on the day thou goest out, and walkest abroad any whither, that thou shalt surely die? and thou saidst unto me, The word that I have heard is good.

43 Why then hast thou not kept the oath of the LORD, and the commandment that I have charged thee with?

He was guilty both of rebellion against the express, and just, and (as himself called it) good command of the king, and of perjury against God; which were two high and heinous crimes. His oath he calls the oath of the Lord, because it was taken in God's presence, and he was called upon as a witness of it, and as the avenger of all violations of it, and because the law of God obliged him to the performance of it.

44 The king said moreover to Shimei, Thou knowest ^hall the wickedness which thine heart is privy to, that thou didst to David my father: therefore the LORD shall ⁱreturn, thy wickedness upon thine own head;

Thou knowest all the wickedness which thine heart is privy to; for which thy own conscience accuseth thee, and there is no need of other witnesses. Shall return, Heb. hath returned, which seems most proper. God hath punished thee for thy former wickedness, by suffering thee to fall into further crimes, and expose thyself to thy deserved death.

45 And king Solomon shall be blessed, and ^kthe throne of David shall be established before the LORD for ever.

The throne of David; that royal power and dignity conferred upon David to him and his heirs for ever. Shall be established by the execution of such righteous judgments as this is. Before the Lord; in the presence of that God who is both an observer and rewarder of all such righteous actions; or under God's inspection, and by his blessing.

46 So the king commanded Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; which went out, and fell upon him, that he died. And the ^lkingdom was established in the hand of Solomon.

Which went out; carrying Shimei along with him to the place of execution, which was not fit to be in the king's presence. The kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon; his secret and worst enemies being taken out of the way.

AND *Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter, and brought her into the ^bcity of David, until he had made an end of building his ^cown house, and ^dthe house of the LORD, and ^ethe wall of Jerusalem round about.

Made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, as being a powerful neighbour. Took Pharaoh's daughter; upon what conditions is not here expressed; but it is probable she was first instructed in and proselyted to the Jewish religion; as may be gathered, 1. Because he was not yet fallen from God, but loved the Lord, and walked in the statutes of David, ver. 3; and therefore would never have married a gross idolater, which was so contrary to God's law, and so pernicious in its consequences. 2. Because he is no where reproved for this fact, as he is for loving many other strange women, 1 Kings xi. 1. 3. By comparing Psal. xiv. and the Book of Canticles; whereby it plainly appears that this action had something extraordinary in it, and was designed by God to be a type of Christ, calling his church to himself, and to the true religion, not only out of the Jews, but even out of the Gentile world. The city of David; of which see chap. ii. 10; into David's palace there. The house of the Lord, i. e. the temple appropriated to the worship and honour of God. The wall of Jerusalem round about; which though in some sort built by David, 2 Sam. v. 9, yet Solomon is here said to build, either because he made it higher, and stronger, and more beautiful and glorious; in which or the like sense Nebuchadnezzar is said to have built Babylon, Dan. iv. 30; or because he built another wall besides the former, for greater security; for after this time Jerusalem was encompassed with more walls than one.

2 Only the people sacrificed in high places, because there was no house built unto the name of the LORD, until those days.

Only: this particle is used here and ver. 3, as an exception to Solomon's integrity and glory, and as his infirmity, and a blemish to his government, that he himself both permitted and practised this which was expressly forbidden, Lev. xvii. 3, 4; Deut. xii. 13, 14, except in some extraordinary cases. Possibly he permitted it because he thought it better to allow an error in a circumstance, than to occasion a neglect of the substance of God's worship, which he apprehended would follow upon a severe prohibition of that practice, because the people's hearts were generally and constantly set upon these high places, as appears from all the following history; and they were not willing to submit to so much trouble and charge as the bringing of all their sacrifices to one place would cause; nor would yield to it until the temple was built, which he knew would easily incline and oblige them to it; and that being speedily to be done, he might think it more advisable rather to delay the execution of that law of God for an approaching season, wherein he doubted not they would be sweetly and freely drawn to it, than at present to drive them to it by force; although these and all other prudential considerations should have given place to the will and wisdom of God. In high places; which were groves, or other convenient places upon hills, in which the patriarchs used to offer up their worship and sacrifices to God; and from them this custom was derived both to the Gentiles and the Jews; and in them the Gentiles sacrificed to idols, Jer. vii. 31; Ezek. vi. 3, 4; Hos. x. 8, the Hebrews to the true God. Because there was no house; which reason was not sufficient, for there was a tabernacle, to which they were as much confined as to the temple, Deut. xii. &c. Unto the name of the Lord; either, 1. To the Lord; the name of the Lord being oft put for the Lord himself, as Deut. xxviii. 58; Job i. 21; Psal. vii. 17; cxvi. 13; cxxxv. 1. Or, 2. To the honour, and praise, and service of God; to the glory of his name, i. e. of his majesty, and all his perfections, which shall be adored and manifested there.

In the statutes of David, i. e. according to the statutes or commands of God, which are here called the statutes of David, not only because they were so freely chosen, and heartily loved, and diligently practised by David, but also because the observation of them was so earnestly pressed upon Solomon, and fortified; with David's authority and command: see 1 Kings ii. 2—4; 1 Chron. xxviii. 8, 9.

A thousand burnt-offerings did Solomon offer upon that altar; thereby showing his special respect to this above all other places, and by his example teaching and inviting all his people to do so.

Quest. How could Solomon pray in his dream, or that prayer be acceptable to God, as this was, ver. 10? Ans. The dreams of men are not such insignificant things as many imagine. That good dreams are oftentimes praiseworthy, and evil dreams blameworthy, is not only the opinion of the Jews and Christians, but of divers of the wiser and better heathens; and the reason hereof is evident, because men's dreams are commonly the images of their minds and tempers, and do only reflect and represent, though but faintly and imperfectly, those very things which are most imprinted upon their hearts by their waking meditations and daily conversation; and therefore it is not unreasonable, that either the sinful dreams of evil-minded men should be imputed to them, and punished in them, or the virtuous dreams of good men be imputed to and rewarded in them: which was Solomon's case; for his heart having been daily and constantly employed in passionate longings and prayers for the wisdom which here he begs, it was a natural and likely thing that his heart should, as it did, work that way even in his dreams. Although, to speak truly and strictly, Solomon's prayer made in his dream would have been no way pleasing to God, nor profitable to himself, if it had not been the result of his daily and most serious practice; and though God signified his mind in a dream, yet it was Solomon's waking prayers (which were shadowed by this dark representation) which God accepted and required; and this acceptance of God was signified to him in an extraordinary manner, and by a Divine dream, which was one of those ways whereby God oft used to communicate his will to his prophets and people. So the whole business lies thus: Solomon dreamed that God bid him ask what he would, 1 Kings iii. 5, and that he did ask wisdom, ver. 6, &c., and that God accepted his desire, ver. 10, and gave him that gracious answer, ver. 11. &c. And all this was done in a dream, but with this difference; Solomon's prayer was but imaginary, but God's answer was real, though conveyed in a dream. And when he awoke, he knew by Divine inspiration that this was a dream sent from God to assure him that he would give him wisdom, and riches, and honour, and this with respect unto his frequent, constant, and fervent waking desires, which his dream of his prayers did sufficiently intimate. See more on ver. 6. God said, i. e. he dreamed that God said so.

thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with thee; and thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou ^p hast given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day.

Solomon said, i. e. he dreamed that he said. See on ver. 5. Or, he really said. For although the use of reason is ordinarily so dark and imperfect in dreams, that such actings are not human actions; yet in extraordinary and Divine dreams it is but reasonable to allow something extraordinary. For who can doubt but God may so clear up and assist a man's reason in his dream, that he may have a true and strong apprehension of some things, which also may make a suitable impression upon the will or affections; and consequently such acts of the soul may be moral acts, and regardable by God and men? And this might be a kind of ecstatical rapture, whereby his soul might be as it were carried out of his body, as St. Paul's was, 2 Cor. xii. 3, for a season; in which case both his reason might clearly and distinctly apprehend God's mind, and his gracious offer; and his will might make a free choice of wisdom; which therefore might be accepted and rewarded by God. In truth; either, first, Sincerely, and without dissimulation. But that is more fully expressed in the following words, in uprightness of heart. Or rather, secondly, In the true worship and service of God, in the profession, belief, practice, and defence of the truth, or of the true religion, or of God's will or word, which is called truth, Prov. xxiii. 23; John xvii. 17; Gal. iii. 1. So truth here contains all his duties to God, as righteousness doth his duties to men, and uprightness the right manner of performing both sorts of duties. Uprightness of heart with thee, i. e. in thy judgment, to whom alone his heart was known; and to whom he oft appealed as the witness of his integrity; and with respect to whom he performed all his duties, even to men. Thou hast kept, or, reserved, that which thou didst not reserve for Saul, whose posterity thou didst cut off from the kingdom.

I am but a little child; so he was in years; not as if he were now but twelve years old, as many gather from this name of child; for that name is given to Ishmael when eighteen years old, Gen. xxi. 14, 15, and to Rehoboam when forty-one years old, 2 Chron. xiii. 7, where the word is the same in the Hebrew; and before this time David calls him a wise man, chap. ii. 9: but he was now not above twenty years old; and withal, (which he principally intends,) he was raw and unexperienced, as a child, in state affairs, and altogether unfit for so hard a task. To go out or come in, i. e. to govern my people, and manage affairs, as that phrase signifies, Numb. xxvii. 17; Deut. xxxi. 2; Josh. xiv. 11.

An understanding heart; whereby I may both clearly discern, and faithfully perform, all the parts of my duty; for both these are spoken of in Scripture as the effects of a good understanding; and he that lives in the neglect of his duties, or the practice of wickedness, is called a fool, and one void of understanding. Judge, or, govern, as that word is used, Judg. iii. 10; iv. 4; Psal. vii. 8; lxvii. 4; Isa. ii. 4; xvi. 5. That I may discern between good and bad, to wit, in causes and controversies among my people; that I may not through mistakes, or prejudices, or passions, give wrong sentences, and call evil good, or good evil. Who is able of himself, or without thy gracious assistance.

10 And the speech pleased the LORD, that Solomon had asked this thing.

How such a dreaming prayer could please God, see in the notes on ver. 5, 6.

11 And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast ^z not asked for thyself [†] long life; neither hast [†] asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies; but hast asked for thyself understanding [†] to discern judgment;

I have done according to thy words; I have granted, and do at this present grant, unto thee thy desire. And accordingly at this time God did infuse into him a far higher degree and greater measure of wisdom than he naturally had. A wise and an understanding heart, i. e. wisdom to govern thy people, to know and do thy several duties; which was the thing that Solomon desired, ver. 7, 9, and the effects whereof here follow, ver. 16, &c.; and withal, all Divine and human wisdom, the knowledge of all things, of all the arts and sciences, as may be gathered from 1 Kings iv. 29, &c., and that in a far greater proportion than by his years, and the time he could get for his study, could possibly produce. So that there was none; either no king, or rather, no man; for he is herein preferred, not only before all kings, but before all men, chap. iv. 31; no mere man since the fall equalled him, to wit, in universal knowledge, and especially in the art of well-governing his people. Neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee. Quest. Did not the apostles excel him? Ans. They did not in natural and political knowledge, but only in the knowledge of the mysteries of faith, which were more freely and more fully imparted in those times; the ignorance whereof was no disparagement to Solomon's wisdom, because they were not discoverable by any creature without Divine revelation, which God saw fit not to afford in Solomon's time. I know no inconvenience in affirming that Solomon's natural capacities were higher than any of the apostles; and Solomon had a more comprehensive knowledge of all things known in that age, than the apostles had in all the discoveries of their age.

13 And I have also ^c given thee that which thou hast not asked, both ^d riches, and honour: so that there ^e shall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days.

g Or, hath not been.

I have also given; either, first, I have granted and decreed to give; for words signifying action are oft put only for the purpose of the action. Or rather, secondly, I will give, as it is expressed in the parallel place, 2 Chron. i. 12; I will as certainly give them, as if I had actually done it; for future certain things are oft expressed in Scripture in the past time, as is well known to all. There shall not be; so it is true of all the succeeding kings of Israel, of whom he speaks. Or, hath not been, as it is in the Hebrew; and so it may be true of all the kings that then were or had been in the world, whereof none was like to him, to wit, in all the things here mentioned, and wherein he is compared with them, which is not only in riches, but also in wisdom, and in honour or renown. All thy days, to wit of thy life; whereby he signifies, that these gifts of God were not temporary and transient, as they were in Saul, but such as should abide with him whilst he lived.

14 And if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, ^eas thy father David did walk, then I will ^flengthen thy days.

If thou wilt walk in my ways: this caution God gives him, lest his great wisdom should make him proud, or careless, or presumptuous, as if he were out of all danger; and to oblige him to more care and circumspection to avoid the snares and mischiefs to which so much prosperity and glory would probably expose him; and withal, to justify himself in case he should afterwards alter the course of his providence towards Solomon; and that when men are surprised with Solomon's dreadful fall, they might know it was no surprisal to God, but that he did foresee it, and would overrule it to his own glory one way or other.

15 And Solomon ^aawoke; and, behold, it was a dream. And he came to Jerusalem, and stood before the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and offered up burnt offerings, and offered peace offerings, and ^bmade a feast to all his servants.

It was a dream, i. e. he perceived that it was a dream; not a vain dream, wherewith men are commonly deluded; but a Divine dream, assuring him of the thing; which he knew, partly by a Divine impression and inspiration thereof in his mind after he was awakened; and partly by the vast alteration which he presently found within himself in point of wisdom and knowledge. The ark of the covenant of the Lord was there in the city of David, 2 Sam. vi. 17, before which he presented himself in the way of holy ministration and adoration, which may be noted by the word stood. Or that word may note his abode there for some considerable time, as the offering of so many sacrifices required. Offered up burnt-offerings, chiefly for the expiation of his and his people's sins, through the blood of Christ, manifestly signified in these sacrifices. And offered peace-offerings, solemnly to praise God for all his mercies, and especially for giving him a quiet and fixed possession of the kingdom, and for his glorious appearance to him in a dream, and for the great promise therein made to him, and the actual accomplishment of it since wrought in him.

16 ¶ Then came there two women, that were harlots, unto the king, and ⁱstood before him.

Harlots, or, victuallers; for the Hebrew word signifies both. See on Josh. ii. 1. And possibly they might be both; this by their open profession, and the other by their secret practice: not that they were common harlots; for neither would Solomon have tolerated such; nor durst such have presented themselves before so wise and just a ruler; nor did such use either to bring forth children, or to have such a tender care of and affection to them as these express. Yet that they were unmarried persons, and so guilty of fornication, seems most probable, both because there is no mention of any husbands, whose office it was, if there were any such, to contest for their wives; and because they lived a solitary life in one house. Unto the king: haply they had presented their cause to the inferior courts, who could not determine; and therefore now they bring it to the king, as the supreme magistrate, and famous for his wisdom. Stood there before him, desiring and expecting his sentence in the case.

17 And the one woman said, O my lord, I and this woman dwell in one house; and I was delivered of a child with her in the house.

18 And it came to pass the third day after that I was delivered, that this woman was delivered also: and we were together; there was no stranger with us in the house, save we two in the house.

The third day; so they could not be distinguished by their age. There was no stranger with us in the house;

therefore no witness on either side; and although there might be some sensible difference to an exact observer between the features of the two children, yet it is not probable that was much minded by the neighbours; for though civil women might assist them both in their child-births, yet it is not likely they would afterwards converse much with them, as being persons of suspected fame, and the features of the children, especially for so few days, might easily be so like, that it was difficult to discern the one from the other. And the testimonies of the women were of equal credit, i. e. of none at all.

19 And this woman's child died in the night; because she overlaid it.

And so smothered it; which she justly conjectures, because there were evidences of that kind of death, but no appearance of any other cause thereof.

20 And she arose at midnight, and took my son from beside me, while thine handmaid slept, and laid it in her bosom, and laid her dead child in my bosom.

She arose at midnight, when I was asleep, as she reasonably and truly concluded. Took my son from beside me; either because she really desired the comfort of a child, to be educated by her, and owned as hers; or because she would not be thought guilty of the child's death, for which she knew not how severely Solomon would punish her. While thine handmaid slept; as she might well know, because had she been awake, she had discovered and prevented her design.

21 And when I rose in the morning to give my child suck, behold, it was dead: but when I had considered it in the morning, behold, it was not my son, which I did bear.

22 And the other woman said, Nay; but the living is my son, and the dead is thy son. And this said, No; but the dead is thy son, and the living is my son. Thus they spake before the king.

Both peremptorily and vehemently affirmed the same thing, oft repeating the same words.

23 Then said the king, The one saith, This is my son that liveth, and thy son is the dead: and the other saith, Nay; but thy son is the dead, and my son is the living.

24 And the king said, Bring me a sword. And they brought a sword before the king.

25 And the king said, Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other.

He said this with seeming sincerity and earnestly, though with a design far above the reach of the two women, or of the people present, who probably with admiration and horror expected the execution of it.

26 Then spake the woman whose the living child was unto the king, for ^kher bowels [†]yearned upon her son, and she said, O my lord, give her the living child, and in no wise slay it. But the other said, Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it.

27 Then the king answered and said, Give her the living child, and in no wise slay it: she is the mother thereof.

As is evident from her natural and motherly affection to the child, which she had rather have alienated and given away from her than destroyed.

28 And all Israel heard of the judgment which the king had judged; and they feared the king: for they saw that the ^lwisdom of God was [†]in him, to do judgment.

Solomon's chief princes, 1—6; and officers for provision 7—19. The peace and largeness of his kingdom, 20, 21. His daily provision for his court, 22—25. The stables for his horses, 26—28. His wisdom, 29—34.

SO king Solomon was king over all Israel.

This is spoken with respect to his successors, who were kings only over a part, and that the smallest part of it. Or in reference to the times of division and rebellion under David; when part went after David, and part after Ish-bosheth; or part after Absalom, or Sheba, or Adonijah. But now all Israel were united under Solomon, and adhered to him, not only a part of them; especially since the death of Adonijah and Joab, (who may be suspected to have watched an opportunity of revolting,) and the confinement of Abiathar and of Shimei, (if not his death also,) who could now have little or no interest or opportunity of setting up a party against Solomon, (their principals being taken away, to whom they were but accessaries,) nor in probability any design to attempt it.

2 And these were the princes which he had; Azariah the son of Zadok the

¹ Or, the chief officer. || priest,

The princes which he had, i. e. the chief rulers or officers belonging to him. The son, or, the grandson, by comparing this with 1 Chron. vi. 8, 9. Of Zadok; either Zadok the priest, 1 Chron. vi. 8, 9, or some other of that name. The priest; so he was the second priest, or the priest that attended upon Solomon's person in holy offices and administrations. But when this sacred writer professeth to give an account of Solomon's princes, why should he put the second priest, or Solomon's domestic priest, in the first place? or why should he be mentioned distinctly from his father, who was generally present with Solomon, and could easily, either by himself, or some other fit person or persons appointed by him, manage all the king's sacred concerns? or why is he named before his father? Others therefore render this Hebrew word prince, as it is used Gen. xli. 45; xlvii. 22, 26; Exod. ii. 16; 2 Sam. viii. 18. So he was either the chief in dignity, the first prince, and the highest officer in the state next to the king; or the chief minister of state, by whom the great affairs of state were managed and prepared for the king's consideration, &c.

¹ Or, secretaries. 3 Elihoreph and Ahiah, the sons of Shisha, || scribes; *Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud, the || recorder.

Scribes, i. e. secretaries of state. He chose two, whereas David had but one; either because he observed some inconveniences in trusting all those matters in one hand; or because he had now much more employment than David had, this being a time of great peace and prosperity, and his empire enlarged, and his correspondencies with foreign princes more frequent. The recorder; of which see on 2 Sam. viii. 16.

^b ch. 2. 35. 4 And ^bBenaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the host; and Zadok and ^cAbiathar were the priests:

i. e. The high priests, to wit, successively, first Abiathar, and then Zadok. Quest. Why is Abiathar named when he was deposed? Ans. First, Because it is ordinary for persons to retain the names and titles of those places which in reality they have lost. Secondly, Because though he was deposed from the high priesthood, yet he was a priest, and the chief of one of the priestly families: and as Zadok was jointly named with Abiathar, when Abiathar alone was the high priest, as 2 Sam. viii. 17; xx. 25; so now Zadok and Abiathar are joined, although the high priesthood was rested in Zadok alone. Thirdly, Possibly Abiathar, though he was deposed from the supreme priesthood, yet upon his serious repentance, and by the intercession of his friends, was restored to the execution of the priestly office, and put into that place which Zadok enjoyed when Abiathar was high priest. Fourthly, Some say that here is mention made of all Solomon's chief officers, both such as now were, and such as had been, and such as were afterwards, as they gather from ver. 11 and 15, where two persons are named who married two of Solomon's daughters, which could not be till many years after this time.

5 And Azariah the son of Nathan was over ^dthe officers: and Zabud the son of Nathan was ^eprincipal officer, and ^fthe king's friend:

Over the officers, or overseers, or surveyors, to wit, over those twelve officers named ver. 7, &c., where this Hebrew word is used, who were all subject, and to give up their accounts to him; though the word signifies any governors or commanders of the higher sort, as 1 Kings v. 16; 2 Chron. viii. 10. Son of Nathan, the prophet, who had been so highly instrumental in Solomon's establishment in the throne. Principal officer; possibly president of the king's council. The Hebrew word is cohen, which, ver. 2, is rendered priest; whence some read this place thus: Zabud the son of Nathan the priest, or the minister, (as the word properly signifies, and that title well enough agrees to a prophet; or the prince, for the prophet Nathan was a man considerable both for his quality, and for his honour and esteem with the king,) was the king's friend. The king's friend; either his special favourite, both for his father's sake and for his own, having, it seems, been brought up with him; or his confidant, with whom he used to communicate his most secret counsels.

6 And Abishar was over the household: and ^gAdoniram the son of Abda was over ^hthe || tribute.

Over the household; steward of the king's household. Over the tribute, to wit, the personal tribute, or the levy of men, as appears by comparing this with chap. v. 13, 14, it being very fit that there should be some one person to whom the chief conduct or inspection of that great business was committed.

7 ¶ And Solomon had twelve officers over all Israel, which provided victuals for the king and his household: each man his month in a year made provision.

8 And these are their names: || The ⁱOr, Ben-hur. son of Hur, in mount Ephraim:

10 || The son of Hese, in Aruboth; to ^kOr, Ben-hese. him pertained Sochoh, and all the land of Hopher:

There were two Sochohs, but both near together. See Josh. xv. 35, 48. The land of Hopher, in Judah. See 1 Chron. iv. 6.

In Ramoth-gilead; Ramoth in the land of Gilead, Deut. iv. 43; Josh. xx. 8; 1 Kings xxii. 3; so called to difference it from Ramoth in Issachar, 1 Chron. vi. 73. Jair; in Manasseh beyond Jordan. See Numb. xxxii. 41; Deut. iii. 14. Great cities with walls and brasen bars: this is added by way of distinction from those towns of Jair; for being without Jordan, they were liable to the attempts of their enemies.

^l Or, to Mahanaim.

14 Ahinadab the son of Iddo had || Manahaim:

The city and territory of Mahanaim; of which see Gen. xxxii. 2; Josh. xiii. 26. But this seems too narrow a compass for one of these great officers, and unequal to the rest; although these portions seem not to be distributed into equal portions of land, but into larger or lesser parts, according to their fertility or barrenness. And this seems to have been a very fruitful place. See 2 Sam. xvii. 27. Or, to Mahanaim. So he may understand all the space from the parts last mentioned to Mahanaim, which was in the tribe of Gad.

15 Ahimaaz was in Naphtali; he also took Basmath the daughter of Solomon to wife:

16 Baanah the son of Hushai was in Asher and in Alloth:

17 Jehoshaphat the son of Paruah, in Issachar:

18 Shimei the son of Elah, in Benjamin:

The son of Elah; which he adds to distinguish him from that cursed and cursing Shimei, 2 Sam. xvi. 5.

^k Deut. 3. 8. 19 Geber the son of Uri was in the country of Gilead, in ^k the country of Sihon king of the Amorites, and of Og king of Bashan; and he was the only officer which was in the land.

In the country of Gilead, i. e. in the remaining part of that land of Gilead, which was mentioned above, ver. 13. In the land, or rather, in that land; for the Hebrew points intimate that the emphatical article is there understood, to wit, in all Gilead, excepting the parcels mentioned before, in all the territories of Sihon and Og; which because they were of large extent, and yet all committed to this one man, it is here noted concerning him as his privilege above the rest, whose jurisdictions were of a narrower extent.

21 And ⁿ Solomon reigned over all kingdoms from ^o the river unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt: ^p they brought presents, and served Solomon all the days of his life.

From the river Euphrates; for so far David, having conquered the Syrians, extended his empire, which Solomon also maintained in that extent. And so God's promise concerning the giving of the whole land, as far as Euphrates, to the Israelites, was fulfilled. And if the Israelites had multiplied so much that the land of Canaan would not suffice them, having God's grant of all the land as far as Euphrates, they might have seized upon it whensoever occasion required. Unto the land of the Philistines; which is to be understood inclusively; for it is unreasonable to think that the Philistines were not within Solomon's dominion. Unto the border of Egypt; unto the river Sihon, which was the border between Egypt and Canaan, Josh. xiii. 3. Compare Gen. xv. 18. Served Solomon, by tribute, or other ways, as he needed and required.

^r Heb. corn.

22 ¶ And Solomon's ^q provision for one day was thirty ^r measures of fine flour, and threescore measures of meal,

Thirty measures, Heb. cors; each of which contained ten ephahs, Exod. xvi. 36. So this provision was sufficient for near three thousand persons. Meal, of a coarser sort, for common use, and for the inferior sort.

23 Ten fat oxen, and twenty oxen out of the pastures, and an hundred sheep, beside harts, and roebucks, and fallowdeer, and fatted fowl.

Ten fat oxen, fatted in stalls. Out of the pastures; well fleshed, tender, and good, though not so fat as the former.

24 For he had dominion over all the region on this side the river, from Tiph-sah even to Azzah, over ^q all the kings on ^q this side the river: and ^r he had peace on ^r all sides round about him.

Tiph-sah; either that Tiph-sah, 2 Kings xv. 16, which was in the kingdom of Israel within Jordan; or rather, another place of that name upon the river now mentioned, to wit, Euphrates, even that eminent city which is mentioned by Ptolemy, and Strabo, and Pliny, called Thapsarim. And this best agrees with the following Azzah, which was the border of Canaan in the south and west, Gen. x. 19; Deut. ii. 23, as Tiph-sah was in the north and east. And so his dominion is described by both its borders. All the kings on this side the river; who owned subjection and paid tribute to him.

25 And Judah and Israel ^s dwelt ^s safely, ^s every man under his vine and under his fig tree, ^t from Dan even to Beer-sheba, all the days of Solomon.

Under his vine and under his fig tree; enjoying the fruit of his own labours with safety and comfort. Under these two trees, which were most used and cultivated by the Israelites, he understands all other fruit-bearing trees, and all other comforts, by a synecdoche. And they are brought in as sitting or dwelling under these trees, partly, for recreation or delight in the shade; and partly, for the comfort or advantage of the fruit; and withal, to note their great security, not only in their strong cities, but even in the country, where the vines and fig trees grew, which were most open to the incursions of their enemies.

26 ¶ And ^x Solomon had forty thousand stalls of ^x horses for his chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen.

Forty thousand stalls of horses. In 2 Chron. ix. 25, it is but four thousand. Answe. First, Some acknowledge an error of the transcriber, writing arbahim, forty, for arbah, four, which was an easy mistake. And such mistakes in some copies, in these lesser matters, God might permit, for the trial and exercise of our faith, without any prejudice to the authority of the sacred Scriptures in the great doctrines of faith and good life. Secondly, It is not exactly the same Hebrew word which is here and there, though we translate both stalls; and therefore there may well be allowed some difference in the signification, the one signifying properly stables, of which there were 4000, the other stalls or partitions for each horse, which were 40,000; which great number seems directly forbidden, Deut. xvii. 16, except Solomon had some particular dispensation from God, which might be, though it be not recorded. For his chariots; both for his military chariots, which seem to be those 1400, 1 Kings x. 26, and for divers other uses, as about his great and various buildings, and merchandises, and other occasions, which might require some thousands of other chariots. Twelve thousand horsemen; appointed partly for the defence and preservation of his people in peace; and partly for attendance upon his person, and for the splendour of his government. Compare chap. x. 26. But the words may be otherwise rendered, and twelve thousand horses, for parash manifestly signifies both a horse and horsemen. And these might be a better sort of horses than most of those which were designed for the chariots. Or thus, and for (which particle is easily understood and borrowed from the foregoing clause) twelve thousand horsemen; and so he means that the 40,000 horses were in part appointed for his chariots, and in part for his 12,000 horsemen.

27 And ^s those officers provided vic- ^s tual for king Solomon, and for all that came unto king Solomon's table, every man in his month: they lacked nothing.

Those officers; named above, ver. 7, &c. They lacked nothing; or rather, they suffered nothing to be lacking to any man that came thither, but plentifully provided all things necessary.

28 Barley also and straw for the horses and || dromedaries brought they unto the place where the officers were, every man according to his charge.

Dromedaries, or mules, by comparing this with 2 Chron. ix. 24; or post horses, which are particularly mentioned and distinguished from the other horses, because they took a more exact and particular care about them. Howsoever, it is agreed that these were swift beasts, which is evident from Esth. viii. 10, 14; Micah i. 13.

29 ¶ And *God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the sea shore.

Largeness of heart, i. e. either, first, Magnanimity, or generosity, and greatness of spirit, whereby he was disposed and emboldened to undertake great things. But this seems not so well to suit with the following resemblance. Or rather, secondly, Vastness of understanding; a most comprehensive knowledge of all things, both Divine and human; for this wisdom is the thing for which he is here commended, both in the foregoing and following words. Even as the sand that is on the sea-shore; which cannot be numbered or measured; and which, though it be so vast and comprehensive, yet consists of the smallest parts: and so it may note that Solomon's wisdom was both vast, reaching to all things; and most accurate, searching and discerning every small thing.

30 And Solomon's wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children ^bof the east country, and all ^cthe wisdom of Egypt.

The children of the east country; the Chaldeans, Persians, and Arabians, who all lay eastward from Canaan, and who were famous in ancient times for their wisdom and learning, as appears both from sacred and profane writers. The wisdom of Egypt, i. e. the Egyptians, whose fame was then great for their skill in the arts and sciences, which made them despise the Grecians as children in knowledge. See Acts vii. 22.

31 For he was ^dwiser than all men; ^ethan Ethan the Ezrahite, ^fand Heman, ^gand Chalcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol: and his fame was in all nations ^hround about.

Wiser than all men; either of his nation, or of his time, or of all times and nations, whether of the east or any other country, excepting only the first and Second Adam. Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman; Israelites of eminent wisdom, probably the same mentioned 1 Chron. ii. 6; xv. 19; xxv. 4; Psal. lxxxviii. title; lxxxix. title. Chalcol and Darda; of whom see 1 Chron. ii. 6. The sons of Mahol. Object. All these four were the sons of Zerah, 1 Chron. ii. 6, or of Ezerah, as others call him. Answer. Either the same man had two names, Zerah and Mahol, which was common amongst the Jews; and he might be called Mahol from his office or employment; for that signifies a dance, or a pipe; and he was expert in musical instruments, and so were his sons, 1 Chron. xv. 17—19, who possibly may here be called, by a vulgar Hebraism, sons of the musical instrument, from their dexterity in handling it, as upon another account we read of the daughters of music, Eccles. xii. 4.

32 And ⁱhe spake three thousand proverbs: and his ^jsongs were a thousand and five.

Proverbs, i. e. short, and deep, and useful sentences, whereof a great and the best part are contained in the Books of Proverbs and Ecclesiastes. Of his songs the chief and most divine are in the Canticles.

33 And he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts; and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes.

Of trees, i. e. of all plants, of their nature and qualities; all which discourses are lost, without any impeachment of the perfection of the Holy Scriptures; which were not inspired and written to teach men philosophy or physic, but only to make men wise to salvation. See John xx. 31; 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. From the cedar tree unto the hyssop, i. e. from the greatest to the least.

34 And ^kthere came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all ^lkings of the earth, which had heard of his wisdom.

From all kings of the earth, to wit, from all the neighbouring kings; universal particles being frequently understood in a restrained sense; and such restriction is grounded upon the following words, where this is limited to such as heard of Solomon's wisdom.

CHAP. V.

Hiram sendeth to congratulate Solomon; who desireth of Hiram timber to build the temple, 1—6. Hiram blesseth God for Solomon; and, for food for his family, sendeth him trees, 7—12. The number of labourers and workmen employed about the temple, 13—18.

AND ^mHiram king of Tyre sent his servants unto Solomon; for he had heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father: ⁿfor Hiram was ever a lover of David.

Hiram sent his servants unto Solomon, to wit, as soon as he heard of his succession in the throne, as the following words show, he sent to congratulate with him, as the manner of princes is.

2 And ^oSolomon sent to Hiram, saying,

3 Thou knowest how that David my father could not build an house unto the name of the LORD his God ^pfor the wars which were about him on every side, until the LORD put them under the soles of his feet.

Thou knowest, by common fame, and by particular information. Could not build an house unto the name of the Lord his God, i. e. either, first, For the worship and service of God, 1 Kings iii. 2. Or, secondly, For the Lord himself, as that phrase is used, Deut. xxviii. 58; Psal. xx. 1; lii. 9. Which were about him on every side; which diverted his cares and thoughts to other things, and withal occasioned God's denial of the honour of that work to him. Put them under the soles of his feet, i. e. made them subject to him, that he might trample upon them at his pleasure. Compare Psal. viii. 6; 1 Cor. xv. 27.

4 But now the LORD my God hath given me ^qrest on every side, so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurrent.

5 ^rAnd, behold, I ^spurpose to build an house unto the name of the LORD my God, ^tas the LORD spake unto David my father, saying, Thy son, whom I will set upon thy throne in thy room, he shall build an house unto my name.

6 Now therefore command thou that they hew me ^ucedar trees out of Lebanon; and my servants shall be with thy servants: and unto thee will I give hire for thy servants according to all that thou shalt ^vappoint: for thou knowest that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the Sidonians.

Command thou that they, i. e. thy servants, as appears both from the foregoing words, command, &c., and from the following opposition of my servants. And this assistance which these Gentiles gave to the building of Solomon's temple was a type of the calling of the Gentiles, and that they should be very instrumental in the building and constituting of Christ's spiritual temple, to wit, his church. Hew me cedar trees; which, for their soundness, and strength, and fragrancy, and durableness, were most excellent and proper for his design. Of these David had procured some, but not a sufficient number. Lebanon was either wholly or in part in Solomon's jurisdiction; and therefore he doth not desire that Hiram would give him the cedars, because they were his own already; but only that his servants might hew them for him; which required art and skill in the time and manner of doing of it; all which the ingenious Tyrians well understood. My servants shall be with thy servants; either to be employed therein as they shall direct; or to receive the cedars, being cut down and hewed, from their hands, and to transmit them to me; although Hiram in his return eased him of that trouble. Unto thee will I give hire for thy servants, i. e. pay them for their labour and art. The Sidonians, or Tyrians; for these places and people being near, and subject to Hiram, are promiscuously used one for another.

7 ¶ And it came to pass, when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, that he rejoiced greatly, and said, Blessed be the LORD this day, which hath given unto David a wise son over this great people.

He rejoiced greatly; being an ingenuous prince, a lover of excellency, and a faithful friend to David and to his house. Blessed be the Lord; for though it be not probable that he was a sincere proselyte, because he did not endeavour the instruction of his people, and the extirpation of their gross idolatry, which by God's blessing and Solomon's help he might easily have effected; yet he had sufficient information concerning the nature and excellency of the God of Israel, and had honourable thoughts of him, as also divers other heathens had, 1 Sam. iv. 8; Dan. vi. 16; 2 Mac. iii. 3.

8 And Hiram sent to Solomon, saying, I have †considered the things which thou sentest to me for: and I will do all thy desire concerning timber of cedar, and concerning timber of fir.

Hiram sent a letter, 2 Chron. ii. 11. Concerning timber of fir; which formerly was, and still is, very useful in most buildings. Others render the Hebrew word, pitch trees, or ash trees, or pine trees. To others it was a particular sort of cedars, and therefore comes under the general name of cedars, in Solomon's message before related.

9 My servants shall bring them down from Lebanon unto the sea: and I will convey them by sea in floats unto the place that thou shalt †appoint me, and will cause them to be discharged there, and thou shalt receive them: and thou shalt accomplish my desire, †in giving food for my household.

Unto the sea; the midland sea. In floats, or ships, or rafts. It is thought the timbers were tied together in the water, as now it is usual, and so by the help of boats or ships conveyed to the appointed place, which was at no great distance. Unto the place that thou shalt appoint me; which was Joppa, 2 Chron. ii. 16, a town upon the sea, Josh. xix. 46; Acts ix. 43. Discharged, Heb. dispersed, or dissolved; which implies that they were tied together. Food for my household, i. e. either, first, My kingdom or people; for the word house or family is sometimes used for a nation or people, as Judg. xiii. 2; xviii. 11; Zech. xii. 13; xiv. 18. The reason of this desire is, because the country belonging to Tyre and Sidon was very barren, and the people there being very numerous, depended upon Solomon's country for relief, as is manifest from Acts xii. 20: compare Ezra iii. 7; Ezek. xxvii. 17. And this relief or provisions Hiram doth not desire to be freely given to him, but to be sold to him and his people at a reasonable rate, as Josephus reports it. Or, secondly, My servants employed in the work, as it is expressed, 2 Chron. ii. 15; though divers, both Jewish and Christian, interpreters conceive that this and that are differing accounts; and that here he speaks of the recompence which was given to Hiram himself, and to his house, for the materials which were taken out of his territories; and in 2 Chron. ii. of what was given to his servants for their labour. Or, thirdly, My royal family and court, which most properly is called his house.

10 So Hiram gave Solomon cedar trees and fir trees according to all his desire.

11 †And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand †measures of wheat for food to his household, and twenty measures of pure oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year.

Twenty measures of pure oil, Heb. twenty cors of pure oil; but in 2 Chron. ii. 10, it is twenty thousand baths of oil; to which is there added twenty thousand measures of barley, and twenty thousand baths of wine. Either therefore, first, He speaks of several things, as was now said on ver. 9. Or, secondly, He speaks there of what Solomon offered; for it runs thus, I will give; and here of what Hiram accepted; and accordingly Solomon gave, for it is here said Solomon gave Hiram. Or, thirdly, The barley, and wine, and twenty thousand baths of common oil, mentioned 2 Chron. ii., must be added to the twenty thousand measures of wheat, and the twenty measures of pure oil, here expressed, and the whole sum is to be made up from both places; that Book of Chronicles being written to supply and complete the histories of the Books of Samuel and of the Kings. Thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year; either, first, For sustenance to the workmen, during the years wherein they were employed in the cutting down and hewing of the timber. Or, secondly, For the yearly support of the king's house during the said time. And these words being left out in 2 Chron. ii., may seem to favour their opinion, that these places speak of divers passages, and several recompences, the one given to the king's house, the other to the labourers, although the argument is not cogent; and this might be omitted there, either because it was sufficiently implied in the nature of the thing, or because it had been plainly expressed here.

12 And the LORD gave Solomon wisdom, ^{as he promised him:} and there ^{was} peace between Hiram and Solomon; and they two made a league together.

The Lord gave Solomon wisdom, i. e. he increased in wisdom more and more; which is here mentioned, because he showed his wisdom in all his transactions with Hiram.

13 ¶ And king Solomon raised a †levy ^{of} out of all Israel; and the levy was thirty thousand men.

Which were to be employed in the most honourable and easy parts of the work relating to the temple, in manner expressed, ver. 14. And these were Israelites; but those 150,000, mentioned ver. 15, were strangers, by comparing this with chap. ix. 21, 22. If it seem strange to any man that so many thousands should be employed about so small a building as the temple was, it must be considered, 1. That the temple, all its parts being considered, was far larger than men imagine, of which more hereafter. 2. That it is probable, that they were employed by turns, as the 30,000 were, ver. 14, else they had been oppressed with hard and uninterrupted labours. 3. That the timber and stone hewed and carried by them was designed, not only (though principally) for the temple, but also for Solomon's own houses and buildings; because we read of no other levy of men, nor of any great care and pains taken, after the building of the temple, for the procurement or preparation of materials for his own houses, or his other buildings; which implies, that that work was done before; nay, that this very levy of men was made and employed for the building of the Lord's house, and Solomon's house, and Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer, is expressed 1 Kings ix. 15, which may fully satisfy that scruple.

15 And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens, and fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains;

Either of timber, or rather of stones; for Hiram had taken care for the timber.

16 Beside the chief of Solomon's officers which were over the work, three thousand and three hundred, which ruled over the people that wrought in the work.

Whereof 3000 were set over the 150,000, expressed ver. 15, each of these over 50 of them, and the odd 300 were set over these 3000, each of these to have the oversight of ten of them, to take an account of the work from them. But in 2 Chron. ii. 18, these overseers are said to be 3600. Answ. The 300 added in 2 Chron. ii. might be a reserve, to supply the places of the other 3000; yea, or of the 3300; as any of them should be taken off from the work by death, or sickness, or weakness, or necessary occasions; which was a prudent provision, and not unusual in such-like cases. And so there were 3600 commissioned for the work, but only 3300 employed at one time; and therefore both computations may fairly stand together. Some learned men add, that those 3600 were strangers, which indeed is manifest from 2 Chron. ii. 17; and that those 3500 were a distinct number of men, and Israelites, which were set over all the rest, both strangers and Israelites; who therefore are here called the chief of Solomon's officers, and are said to rule over the workmen; whereas all that is said of those 3600, 2 Chron. ii. 18, is, that they were overseers to set the people a work; which may deserve further consideration. Others say, that the 300 added in 2 Chron. were overseers of the Tyrian workmen in Mount Lebanon, and the rest in all other places; or that they were set over some particular and more curious and considerable parts of the work.

17 And the king commanded, and they brought great stones, costly stones, and hewed stones, to lay the foundation of the house.

Costly stones; marble and porphyry, or other stones of great size and value. To lay the foundation of the house; where they could not afterward be seen; and therefore that this was done, is mentioned only as a point of magnificence, except it was intended for a type or mystical signification of the preciousness of Christ, who is the foundation of the true temple, the church of God, as he is called, Isa. xxviii. 16; 1 Cor. iii. 11.

18 And Solomon's builders and Hiram's builders did hew them, and the stonesquarers: so they prepared timber and stones to build the house.

l Or Giblites; as Ezek. 27. 9.

The stone-squarers, Heb. the Giblites; the inhabitants of Gebel, a place near Zidon, named Psal. lxxxiii. 7; Ezek. xxvii. 9, famous for artificers and architects, Josh. xiii. 5. These are here mentioned apart, as distinct from the rest of Hiram's builders, as the most eminent of them.

AND *it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel, in the month Zif, which is the second month, that he began to build the house of the LORD.

b Acts 7. 47.
† Heb. built.

This chronological difficulty is too vast and comprehensive to be fully discussed here, or to be determined by unlearned readers; and for the learned, I refer them to what is largely digested in my Latin Synopsis upon this place. It may suffice at present to suggest these particulars: 1. That Israel's coming out of Egypt is variously understood in Scripture, and with some latitude, so as not only to note the time when first they came out of Egypt, but the time of their being in or coming out of the wilderness; as is manifest from Deut. iv. 45, where the words in the Hebrew are not after, &c., as we translate it, but in their coming forth out of Egypt; and Psal. cxiv. 1—3, When Israel came forth, &c., Heb. in their coming forth, &c. And it is not impossible it may be so understood here, after they were come out, &c., to wit, completely, i. e. towards the end of their expedition out of Egypt into Canaan. Nor doth the difference between the Hebrew prepositions lamed and beth, which a learned man objects, hinder this sense; for as beth signifies (as he saith) after, so also doth lamed, Gen. vii. 4, 10; Numb. xxxiii. 38. 2. That whereas the times of the judges do chiefly cause this difficulty, there are many things which will relieve us therein; as, 1. That divers of the years there mentioned belong to one and the same time, as is evident from Jair's twenty-two years, within which fell out, as divers learned chronologers agree, the eighteen years of the oppression of the Ammonites, and several years of the Philistine tyranny, who oppressed Israel in the west, whilst the Ammonites vexed them in the east; and the like might be observed in other cases. 2. That the years of rest are not necessarily to be understood of so many distinct years, besides those of war and servitude; and those words which are generally rendered the land had rest forty or eighty years, or the like, may be thus rendered, and that very agreeable to the Hebrew, The land had rest, or began to rest, or recovered its rest, in the fortieth or in the eightieth (the cardinal numbers being frequently put for the ordinal, especially where the number exceeds ten) year, to be computed from some remarkable time; and so that phrase doth not note how long time, or till what time, the rest continued, but at what time it began. As for instance, in Judg. iii. 11, the land had rest, not forty years, as it is in our translation, but in the fortieth year, to wit, from and after their first rest in, or quiet possession of, the land of Canaan, which Joshua gave them; which time may very probably be made up of the days of Joshua, after he had settled them in a state of rest; and of the elders that outlived him, Judg. ii. 7, and the time of their corruption after the death of those elders; and the eight years of servitude under the king of Mesopotamia. So Judg. iii. 30, The land had rest in the eightieth year, to wit, from and after that rest which Othniel obtained for them, ver. 11. And Judg. v. 31, It rested in the fortieth year, to wit, after that rest got by Ehud, Judg. iii. 30. And Judg. viii. 28, It rested in the fortieth year, to wit, from the last rest got by Deborah. And thus the computation of years is more plain and certain, being thus made from rest to rest, than theirs that proceed the other way. And this is the more considerable, because it was the opinion of that famously learned and pious bishop of Armagh. All which considered, it will be very easy to contain all the parts and passages of sacred story, from the coming out of Egypt to this time, within the compass of four hundred and eighty years; of the several parcels whereof, see my Latin Synopsis. And as for other scriptures, which some conceit to be contradictory to this, I shall by God's help vindicate them in their several places. In the fourth year of Solomon's reign; his three first years being spent partly in settling the affairs of his kingdom, without which neither civil nor ecclesiastical concerns could have any consistency; and partly in making necessary preparations for the work. He began to build; for so it is expressed 2 Chron. iii. 1; and so it is explained here below, ver. 37, The foundation of the house was laid; though in the Hebrew it be only he built. Thus active words are oft understood of the beginning of the action, as Gen. v. 32; xi. 26.

^a See Ezek. 41. 1, &c.

2 And ^athe house which king Solomon built for the Lord, the length thereof was threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits.

The house; properly so called, as distinct from all the walls and buildings which were adjoining to it, to wit, the holy and most holy place. The length thereof; from east and to west. And this and the other measures may seem to belong to the inside from wall to wall. Threescore cubits; cubits of the sanctuary; of which see on Gen. vi. 15. The height thereof, to wit, of the house; for the porch was 120 cubits high, 2 Chron. iii. 4. So that all the measures compared each with other were harmonious. For 60 to 20 (the length to the breadth) is triple, or as 3 to 1; and 60 to 30 (the length to the height) is double, or as 2 to 1; and 30 to 20 (the height to the breadth) is sesquialter, or one and a half, as 3 to 2; which are the proportions answering to the three great concords in music, commonly called a twelfth, an eighth, and a fifth; which therefore must needs be a graceful proportion to the eye, as that in music is graceful to the ear.

3 And the porch before the temple of the house, twenty cubits was the length thereof, according to the breadth of the house; and ten cubits was the breadth thereof before the house.

Before the temple of the house; in the front of or entrance into the house, 2 Chron. iii. 4; being a peristitium or portico, a walk or gallery, at one end of the building (from side to side). And the measures of this were harmonious also. For 20 to 10 (the length of the portico to the breadth of it) is double, or as 2 to 1. And if the height within be the same with that of the house, that is, 30; it will be to the length of it as 3 to 2, and to its breadth as 3 to 1. Or if we take in the whole height mentioned 2 Chron. iii. 4, which is 120; there is in this no disproportion, being to its length as 6 to 1, and to its breadth, as 12 to 1; especially when this height was conveniently divided into several galleries, one over another, each of which had their due proportions.

4 And for the house he made ^d || windows of narrow lights.

Narrow outward, to prevent the inconveniencies of the weather; widening by degrees inward, that so the house might better receive and more disperse the light. Or, for prospect, i. e. to give light; yet shut, i. e. so far closed as to keep out weather, and let in light.

5 ¶ And || against the wall of the house he built ^e † chambers round about, against the walls of the house round about, both of the temple ^f and of the oracle: and he made † chambers round about:

Against the wall; or, upon it; or, joining to it; for the beams of the chambers were not fastened into the wall, but leaned upon the buttresses of the wall. He built chambers, for the laying the priests' garments and other utensils belonging to the temple, or to the worship of God, therein: see 2 Kings xi. 2; 1 Chron. xxviii. 12; Ezek. xlii. 13, 14. Round about; not simply, for there were none on the east side; and it may seem that there were some spaces left for the windows, which being narrow outwardly, little spaces would suffice; but in a manner, i. e. on all the sides except the east, where the porch was, and except some very small passages for the light. And yet these lights might be in the five uppermost cubits of the wall, which were above all these chambers; for these were only fifteen cubits high, and the wall was twenty cubits high. He made chambers, Heb. ribs, i. e. either other chambers above and besides the former; or rather, long galleries, which encompassed all the chambers, as the ribs do man's body; and which were necessary for passage to all the several chambers.

6 The nethermost chamber was five cubits broad, and the middle was six cubits broad, and the third was seven cubits broad: for without in the wall of the house he made † narrowed rests round about, that the beams should not be fastened in the walls of the house.

Five cubits broad, to wit, on the inside, and besides the galleries mentioned above. Narrowed rests, or, narrowings; as in our buildings the walls of a house are thicker or broader at the bottom, and narrower towards the top; only these narrowings were in the outside of the wall, which at each of the three stories was a cubit narrower than that beneath it. And this is mentioned as the reason of the differing breadth of the chambers, because the wall being narrower, allowed more space for the upper chambers. That the beams should not be fastened in the walls of the house; that there might be no holes made in the wall for the fastening of them; and that the chambers might be removed, if occasion were, without any inconvenience to the house.

7 And ^g the house, when it was in building, was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither: so that there was neither hammer nor ax nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was in building.

Made ready; hewed, and squared, and fitted exactly according to the direction of the architect. No tool heard in the house, while it was in building: so it was ordered, partly, for the ease and conveniency of carriage; partly, for the magnificence of the work, and commendation of the workmen's skill and diligence; and partly, for mystical signification. And as this temple was a manifest type, both of Christ's church upon earth, and of the heavenly Jerusalem; so this circumstance signified as to the former, that it is the duty of the builders and members of the church, as far as in them lies, to take care that all things be transacted there with perfect peace and quietness; and that no noise of contention, or division, or violence be heard in that sacred building; and for the latter, that no spiritual stone, no person, shall bear a part in that heavenly temple, unless he be first hewed, and squared, and made meet for it in this life.

8 The door for the middle chamber was in the right † side of the house: and they went up with winding stairs into the middle chamber, and out of the middle into the third.

The door for the middle chamber, i. e. by which they entered to go up to the middle chamber or chambers, to wit, such as were in the middle story. In the right side, i. e. in the south side, called the right side here, and in the Hebrew text, Psal. lxxxix. 12, and in other authors; because when a man looks towards the east, or sun-rising, which is esteemed the most glorious part of the heavens, and to which men most frequently look for divers reasons, the south is on his right hand; whereby it is implied that there was another door on the left, or the north side, leading to the chambers on that side, though for brevity sake it be not mentioned here. With winding stairs; which were either, 1. Within the thickness of the temple wall, as many think; which is not probable, as tending to the great weakening of the wall; especially in the upper parts, where the wall was much narrower. And if such care was taken to preserve the walls entire and unbroken, that there might not be small holes made into it for the fastening of the beams of the chambers, ver. 6, it seems very absurd and incredible that there should be made such great breaches within them, as the stairs would require. Or rather, 2. Without the wall, and without the chambers too, as leading up to the gallery out of which they went into the several chambers. Into the middle chamber, or rather, into the middle story, or row of chambers, and so in the following words, out of the middle story; for these stairs could not lead up into each of the chambers, nor was it needful or convenient it should do so, but only into the story, which was sufficient for the use of all the chambers.

9 ^h So he built the house, and finished it; and covered the house || with beams and boards of cedar.

^h ver. 14, 30.
ⁱ Or, the vault-beams and the ceilings with cedar.

He built the house, and finished it, to wit, the bulk and the body of the house. Covered the house, or, the house, i. e. the top of the house, for the like is said of the sides and bottom, ver. 15, even the beams and boards, (or, the vault-beams and the ceilings; the arched beams and boards wherewith the top of the house was covered, which was made of other wood, which was more pliable than cedar, and would better endure bowing and bending,) with cedars.

10 And then he built chambers against all the house, five cubits high: and they rested on the house with timber of cedar.

Against all the house: which interpreters understand of those chambers described ver. 5, 6. But why should that be repeated again, and that so darkly and confusedly, after he had particularly and exactly treated of them (unless to give an account of the height of each chamber, or story, which before was not done)? And the Hebrew words may be truly and properly rendered thus. He built a roof (to wit, a flat and plain roof, called yatziah, because of the exact resemblance it hath with the floor of a house) over all the house, according to the manner of all the Israelitish buildings, which were flat at the top; of which see Deut. xxii. 8; Josh. ii. 6; 2 Sam. xi. 2. The inner roof was arched, ver. 9, that it might be more beautiful and glorious to behold; but the outward roof was flat. Five cubits high, above the walls of the temple; which was necessary, that it might be a little higher than the arched roof, which it was designed to cover and secure. They rested, Heb. it rested, to wit, the roof; for the Hebrew verb is of the singular number. With timber of cedar; which rested upon the top of the wall, as the chambers, ver. 5, rested upon the sides of the wall. But all this I submit to the learned and judicious.

11 ¶ And the word of the LORD came to Solomon, saying,

Either by some prophet, or rather in a vision or dream, as it did before.

12 Concerning this house which thou art in building, ⁱ if thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments to walk in them; then will I perform my word with thee, ^k which I spake unto David thy father:

God speaks thus, partly to encourage him to proceed in his work, and partly to purge out that pride and vain-glory, (which God, the searcher of hearts, saw either then did or would arise in Solomon's mind, as being the author and builder of so glorious a work,) and that presumption and security, which was very likely to grow, and God foresaw would grow, both in Solomon and in the people; as if God was now in a manner engaged to continue his presence with them, and in his own temple; and that they had now no great reason to fear God's departure from them, though they should provoke him. Therefore he expresseth the condition upon which his promise and favour is suspended; and by assuring him thereof in case of obedience, he plainly intimates the contrary upon his disobedience.

13 And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will not forsake my people Israel.

14 So Solomon built the house, and finished it.

15 And he built the walls of the house within with boards of cedar, || both the floor of the house, and the walls of the ceiling: and he covered them on the inside with wood, and covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.

Both the floor, or rather, from the floor, as it is in the Hebrew; for the floor itself was not covered with cedar, but with fir, as it here follows. And the walls of the ceiling, or rather, as it is in the Hebrew, unto the walls of the ceiling, or of the roof, i. e. unto the top of the wall, which was even with the roof; for the roof itself was not of stone, but wood.

Or, unto the walls of the ceiling, i. e. unto the ceiling itself; which performing the office of a wall, may well be called by that name. For the name of a wall is not appropriated to stone or brick, because we read of a brassen wall, Jer. xv. 20, and a wall of iron, Ezek. iv. 3. And that wall into which Saul smote his javelin, 1 Sam. xix. 10, seems more probably to be understood of wood than of stone; especially, considering that it was the room where the king used to dine. So by this periphrasis, from the floor of the house unto the walls of the ceiling, he designs all the side walls of the house. He covered them, to wit, the side walls of the house, now mentioned. With wood, i. e. with other kind of wood, even with fir, as appears from 2 Chron. iii. 5, wherewith the floor is here said to be covered. The floor of the house: this is here spoken only concerning the floor, because there was nothing but planks of fir; whereas there was both cedar and fir in the sides of the house, the fir being either put above or upon the cedar, or intermixed with or put between the boards or ribs of cedar, as may be gathered from the said parallel place, 2 Chron. iii. 5.

16 And he built twenty cubits on the sides of the house, both the floor and the walls with boards of cedar: he even built them for it within, even for the oracle, even for the most holy place.

Twenty cubits on the sides of the house, i. e. the most holy place, which contained in the length of the house twenty cubits, by comparing this with ver. 2, and ver. 17, which may be said to be on the sides of the house, because this part took off twenty cubits in length from each side of the house, and was also twenty cubits from side to side; so it was twenty cubits every way. Or, on the sides (i. e. on all the sides, as indeed it was) of the house, or of that house, to wit, the most holy place, as it here follows. Or, from the sides of the house, i. e. from one side to the other. And so this is meant only of the partition-wall, which was between the holy and the most holy place. Both the floor and the walls, or rather, as ver. 15, from the floor to the wall, or ceiling, or roof. So it is not necessary, at least by virtue of these words, to understand this, as they generally do, that the floor itself was built with cedar; but only all the sides of it from the bottom twenty cubits upward. If it be said that the whole house, and consequently the most holy place, was thirty cubits high, ver. 2, it may be replied, either that that is true only of the greater house, or the holy place, which is called the house, ver. 17, and that the lesser, or the most holy place, was but twenty cubits high, as divers think; or that the ten cubits at the top were covered with some other wood or thing, or were left open, that it might thereby receive both light from the candlesticks, and smoke from the altar of incense. For the oracle, even for the most holy place, i. e. that it might be the oracle, or the most holy place. Or, on the inner side (wherely he might imply that the outside of the partition-wall which looked towards the holy place was not so covered) of (for the Hebrew lamed is very oft a note of the genitive case) the oracle, even of the most holy place; which last words are added to explain what he means by the word oracle, which he had not used before.

17 And the house, that is, the temple before it, was forty cubits long.

The house, i. e. the holy place. That is, the temple: this is added to restrain the signification of the word house, which otherwise notes the whole building. Before it, i. e. before the oracle. Or, as it is in the Hebrew, before my face, i. e. before the place of my presence. Or it may be said to be before God, because he being pleased to describe himself as sitting upon the cherubim, hath his face towards this house, where he beholds the services of his people. So this part of the house, distinct from the most holy, hath its harmonious proportions also. The length 40, to the height 30, is sesquiterian, or 4 to 3 (which is that of a fourth in music); the length to the breadth, 40 to 20, as 2 to 1; the height to the breadth, 30 to 20, as 3 to 2.

18 And the cedar of the house within was carved with || knops and † open flowers: all was cedar; there was no stone seen.

All was cedar, i. e. all the house was covered with cedar. Quest. How was this true, when it was covered with fir, 2 Chron. iii. 5? Ans. 1. It was done with cedar and fir; of which see on ver. 15. 2. It may be said to be all cedar, because the greatest part was so, universal particles being oft so used. 3. Cedar is here named, not to exclude all other wood, but stone only, as the following words show. 4. Or, all was of cedar; that is, all the carving was of cedar.

19 And the oracle he prepared in the house within, to set there the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

He prepared, i. e. adorned and fitted it for the receipt of the ark. In the house, Heb. in the middle of the house, or building; not the middle mathematically or exactly, but in general within the house, as that phrase, in the middle, oft signifies; as Deut. iv. 11; Josh. vii. 21; Dan. iii. 26. Within, or, in the uttermost part of the house; for so this was, the entrance into the house being at the other end.

20 And the oracle in the forepart was twenty cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof: and he overlaid it with pure gold; and so covered the altar which was of cedar.

In the forepart, or rather, which was in the inner part, to wit, of the house; called here in Hebrew, the forepart, not because a man first enters there, but because when a man is entering, or newly entered, into the house, it is still before him. Thus the same, or the like word proceeding from the same root, is oft used, as Lev. x. 18; 1 Kings vi. 19, 29, 30, 36; 1 Chron. xxviii. 11. Twenty cubits in the height thereof. Object. The great house was thirty cubits high, above, ver. 2. Ans. It is probably affirmed by divers, that the most holy place was not so high as the holy place by ten cubits; which was no way inconvenient, nor against the rules of proportion observed in buildings. And as the second part of the building was far lower than the first, which was the porch; so the third part might be considerably lower than the second. And it might be lower either, 1. Outwardly, or in respect of the walls of it, which might be only twenty cubits high, and at that height covered with a flat roof; it being but decent that that eminently holy place should be distinguished from the less holy, even by its outward and visible shape. Or, 2. Inwardly, or within the walls of that part. For although this part might be vaulted at the top, as the holy place was, which vaulted roof some think was ten cubits high; yet here might be the difference, that the vaulted roof of the holy place lay open to view, whereas that of the most holy was covered with a flat roof from wall to wall, at the height of twenty cubits. So covered, i. e. with gold, chap. vii. 48; 1 Chron. xxviii. 18. The altar, to wit, the altar of incense, which was put next to the most high place, ver. 22. Which was of cedar. Object. This altar was made of shittim wood, Exod. xxx. 1. Ans. Either that was covered with cedar, that it might be agreeable to the rest; all being cedar, as was said, ver. 18. Or this was a new altar which Solomon made by Divine command and direction, delivered to him, either immediately, or by his father; of which see 1 Chron. xxviii. 12, &c. But this place may seem to be better translated thus, and he covered the altar with cedar; either to make it like the rest; or because this was a new altar made of stone, and therefore fit to be covered with cedar, that it might better receive and retain the gold wherewith this cedar was overlaid, ver. 22.

21 So Solomon overlaid the house within with pure gold: and he made a partition by the chains of gold before the oracle; and he overlaid it with gold.

The house, or, that house, to wit, the oracle. With pure gold: compare 2 Chron. iii. 8. He made a partition by the chains of gold, i. e. he made a veil, which was upon or before the partition; or which was a further partition between the holy and the most holy; which veil did hang upon these golden chains. Others render it thus, he closed or shut (as the word signifies in the Chaldee dialect, from which divers Hebrew words borrow their signification) it

(i. e. the house now mentioned, to wit, the door of it) with chains or bars of gold. Before the oracle, i. e. in the outward part of the wall, or partition, which was erected between the oracle and the holy place; which is properly said to be before the oracle, which was the space within, and beyond that partition; for there the veil was hung, and there the chains or bars, or whatsoever it was which fastened the doors of the oracle, were placed. He overlaid it, to wit, the partition; which he here distinguisheth from the house, or the main walls of the house, which he had in the former part of this verse told us were overlaid with gold; and now he affirms as much of the partition.

22 And the whole house he overlaid with gold, until he had finished all the house: also the whole altar that was by the oracle he overlaid with gold.

The whole house; not only the oracle, but all the holy place; and, as some add, even the chambers belonging to it. The whole altar that was by the oracle, i. e. the altar of incense, which was set in the holy place close by the doors of the oracle. He overlaid with gold, as before he overlaid it with cedar; of which see the notes on ver. 20.

23 ¶ And within the oracle he made two cherubims of olive tree, each ten cubits high.

Besides those two made by Moses, Exod. xxv. 18, which were of gold, and far less than these, and fixed in another place and posture. Of olive tree, or, of oily trees, which sometimes are distinguished from the olive trees, as Isa. xli. 19.

24 And five cubits was the one wing of the cherub, and five cubits the other wing of the cherub: from the uttermost part of the one wing unto the uttermost part of the other were ten cubits.

25 And the other cherub was ten cubits: both the cherubims were of one measure and one size.

26 The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and so was it of the other cherub.

27 And he set the cherubims within the inner house: and they stretched forth the wings of the cherubims, so that the wing of the one touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall; and their wings touched one another in the midst of the house.

28 And he overlaid the cherubims with gold.

29 And he carved all the walls of the house round about with carved figures of cherubims and palm trees and open flowers, within and without.

Carved figures of cherubims, as signs of the presence and protection of the angels vouchsafed by God to that place. Palm trees; emblems of that peace and victory over their enemies which the Israelites duly serving God in that place might expect. Within and without; within the oracle and without it, in the holy place.

30 And the floor of the house he overlaid with gold, within and without.

31 ¶ And for the entering of the oracle he made doors of olive tree: the lintel and side posts were a fifth part of the wall.

i. e. Four cubits in height or breadth, whereas the wall was twenty cubits. Or, a fifth part of the door now mentioned. Or rather, five-square, having five sides and five angles, which is not incongruous nor unusual in buildings.

32 The two doors also were of olive tree; and he carved upon them carvings of cherubims and palm trees and open flowers, and overlaid them with gold, and spread gold upon the cherubims, and upon the palm trees.

35 And he carved thereon cherubims and palm trees and open flowers: and covered them with gold fitted upon the carved work.

36 ¶ And he built the inner court with three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams.

The inner court, i. e. the priests' court, 2 Chron. iv. 9; so called, because it was next to the temple, which it did encompass. With three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams; which is understood either, 1. Of the thickness of the wall, the three rows of stones being one within another, and the cedar innermost, as a lining to the wall. Or, 2. Of the height of the wall, which was only three cubits high, that the people might see the priests sacrificing upon the altar, which was in their court; each row of stones being about a cubit, and possibly of a differing colour from the rest, and all covered with cedar. Or rather, 3. Of so many galleries, one on each side of the temple, whereof the three first were of stone, and the fourth of cedar, all supported with rows of pillars; upon which there were many chambers for the uses of the temple, and of the priests; for it is hard to think that only the making of a low wall about the court would be called a building of the court. And that a great number of buildings and rooms were necessary for the various offices and works which were to be done, and the treasures of all sorts which were to be laid up in the temple, largely so called, is sufficiently evident from the nature of the things, and divers passages in Scripture: see, among others, 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 12.

t ver. 1. 37 ¶ In the fourth year was the foundation of the house of the LORD laid, in the month Zif:

38 And in the eleventh year, in the month Bul, which is the eighth month, was the house finished || throughout all the parts thereof, and according to all the fashion of it. So was he "seven years in building it.

Seven years complete, and six months, as appears by computation. But smaller sums are usually neglected, and swallowed up in the greater, both in Scripture, as Judg. xx. 46; 2 Sam. v. 4; 1 Kings ii. 11, and in other authors. It is not strange that this work took up so much time; for, 1. The temple properly so called was for quantity the least part of it, there being very many and great buildings both above ground in the several courts, (for though only the court of the priests be mentioned, yet it is thereby implied that the same thing was proportionably done in the others,) and under ground. 2. The great curiosity of art which was used here, and the fewness of exquisite artists, required the longer time for the doing of it. And if the building of Diana's temple did employ all Asia for two hundred years, and the building of one pyramid employed three hundred and sixty thousand men for twenty years together, both which Pliny affirms; no reasonable man can wonder that this temple was seven years in building.

CHAP. VII.

The building of Solomon's house: the house of Lebanon, 1—5. The porch of pillars, and of judgment: the house of Pharaoh's daughter, 6—12. Hiram's work of the two pillars of brass, 13—22. Of the molten sea, 23—26. Of the ten bases of brass, 27—31. The ten brasen lavers: all the vessels of brass and gold, 38—50. The dedicated things are brought into the temple, 51.

BUT Solomon was building his own house *thirteen years, and he finished all his house.

His own house; the royal palace for himself, and for his successors. Or, his houses, the singular number being put for the plural. Thirteen years; almost double time to that in which the temple was built; because neither were the materials so far provided and prepared for this as they were for the temple; nor did either he or his people use the same alacrity and diligence in this as in the other work; nor had they the same obligations to this work as they had to that, to which they were quickened by God's express command, and by the necessity of setting up God's worship there, as the foundation of all the hopes and happiness both of king and people, whereas his building was only for Solomon's greater conveniency, and he had already a palace of David's building.

2 ¶ He built also the house of the forest of Lebanon; the length thereof was an hundred cubits, and the breadth thereof fifty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits, upon four rows of cedar pillars, with cedar beams upon the pillars.

The house of the forest of Lebanon; a house so called, either, first, Because it was built in the mountain and forest of Lebanon, for his recreation there in summer time. But it is generally and more probably held, that it was in or near Jerusalem, both because there was the throne of judgment, ver. 7, which was fittest to be in the place of his constant and usual residence; and because there was the chief magazine of arms, Isa. xxii. 8, and Solomon's golden shields were put there, as is manifest from 1 Kings x. 17; xiv. 25, 26, 28, which no wise prince would do in a place so remote from his royal city, and in the utmost borders of his kingdom, as this was. Or rather, secondly, From some resemblance it might have with that place, for the pleasant shades and groves which were about it; nothing being more frequent, both in sacred and other writers, than to transfer the names of Carmel, or Tempe, or the like, to other places of the same nature and quality with them. The length thereof, to wit, of the principal mansion; to which doubtless other buildings were adjoined. Upon four rows of cedar pillars; upon which the house was built, and between which there were four stately walks. With cedar beams upon the pillars; which were laid for the floor of the second story.

3 And it was covered with cedar above upon the † beams, that lay on forty five + Heb. ribs. pillars, fifteen in a row.

So in this second story were only three rows of pillars, which was sufficient for the ornament of the second, and for the support of the third story.

4 And there were windows in three rows, and † light was against light in + Heb. eight against sight. three ranks.

Light was against light; one directly opposite or answering to the other, as is usual in well-contrived buildings. In three ranks; one exactly under another.

5 And all the || doors and posts were square, with the windows: and light was against light in three ranks.

He speaks either, first, of the same lights mentioned ver. 4, it being the manner of the Hebrews to repeat the same things; or rather, of the smaller windows or lights, which were over the several doors, as the manner of many buildings is.

6 ¶ And he made a porch of pillars; the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth thereof thirty cubits: and the porch was || before them: and the other pillars and the thick beam were || before them.

A porch of pillars, i. e. supported by divers pillars, for the more magnificent entrance into the house; upon which also it is thought there were other rooms built, as in the house. The porch, now mentioned, which is said to be before them, i. e. before the pillars on which the house of Lebanon stood, or before the doors and posts mentioned ver. 5; or, a porch, i. e. another and a lesser porch, which was before them, i. e. before the pillars of the greater porch now mentioned. And the other pillars, or, and pillars, i. e. fewer and lesser pillars for the support of the lesser porch. The thick beam; which was laid upon these pillars, as the others were, ver. 2.

7 ¶ Then he made a porch for the throne where he might judge, even the porch of judgment: and it was covered with cedar † from one side of the floor to the other.

† Heb. from floor to floor.

He made a porch; another porch or distinct room without the house. For the throne, described chap. x. 18. Where he might judge the people that brought their causes before him. From one side of the floor to the other, i. e. the whole floor; or, from floor to floor, i. e. from the lower floor on the ground, to the upper floor which covered it.

8 ¶ And his house where he dwelt had another court within the porch, which was of the like work. Solomon made also an house for Pharaoh's daughter, † whom he had taken to wife, like unto this porch.

2 Chr. 8. 11.

Within the porch, i. e. between the porch and the house, called therefore the middle court, 2 Kings xx. 4. A house for Pharaoh's daughter; of which see 1 Kings iii. 1; 2 Chron. viii. 11. Like unto this porch; not for form or quantity, but for the materials and workmanship, the rooms being covered with cedar, and furnished with like ornaments.

9 All these were of costly stones, according to the measures of hewed stones, sawed with saws, within and without, even from the foundation unto the coping, and so on the outside toward the great court.

All these buildings described here and in the former chapter. According to the measures of hewed stones; either, first, which were hewed in such measure and proportion, as exact workmen used to hew ordinary stones; or, secondly, as large as common hewed stones, which are oft very great. Within and without; both on the inside of the buildings which were covered with cedar, and on the outside also. From the foundation unto the coping; from the bottom to the top of the building. On the outside toward the great court; not only on the outside of the front of the house, which being most visible, men are more careful to adorn; but also of the other side of the house, which looked towards the great court belonging to the king's house.

10 And the foundation was of costly stones, even great stones, stones of ten cubits, and stones of eight cubits.

Stones of ten cubits; not square, which would have been both unnecessary, and unportable, and unmanageable; but of solid measure, by which stones and timber are usually measured; and so they were only two cubits square, but there were twenty solid cubits contained in them. And so also the following eight cubits are to be understood.

11 And above were costly stones, after the measures of hewed stones, and cedars.

Above, i. e. in the roof or upper part; for this is opposed to the foundation. Costly stones and cedars, intermixed here the one, and there the other.

12 And the great court round about was with three rows of hewed stones, and a row of cedar beams, both for the inner court of the house of the LORD, and for the porch of the house.

c John 10. 23.
Acts 3. 11.

The great court, to wit, of Solomon's dwelling-house, mentioned ver. 8. A row of cedar beams; of which see the note on 1 Kings vi. 36. Both for the inner court of the house of the Lord, or, as (Heb. and, which is oft used in that sense for a particle of comparison or similitude, as Prov. xi. 25; xvii. 3; xxv. 23.) for the inner court, &c., i. e. as it was in that inner court, of which the very same thing is said 1 Kings vi. 36. Otherwise it might seem very improper and impertinent to speak of the court of the Lord's house here, where he is treating only of Solomon's house. For the porch of the house, or, of this house, to wit, of which I am here speaking, i. e. of the king's house, the porch whereof had pillars, ver. 6, and these both of stone and cedar, as may seem most probable, because the other pillars were such. And whereas the number and quality of the pillars of the porch was omitted, ver. 6, that defect is here supplied, and we are implicitly acquainted with both of them. But this I speak with submission.

A widow's son of the tribe of Naphtali. Object. She was one of the daughters of Dan, 2 Chron. ii. 14. Answ. So indeed Hiram king of Tyre there affirms; but he might easily mistake or be misinformed, especially being no Israelite, nor a careful observer of the distinction of tribes. Or she might be of Dan by her father, and of Naphtali by her mother, or by her husband, who was of that tribe, and therefore she was truly a widow of Naphtali. His father was a man of Tyre; either by his descent, being a Tyrian by birth; or by education and habitation, he or his father being given to the study of these arts, and having planted themselves at Tyre for their improvement therein. However that was, it was a singular providence of God, that there was at that time so excellent a workman fit for so great and glorious works. All works in brass, and of gold, and stone, and purple, and blue, &c., as is affirmed, 2 Chron. ii. 14. But only his skill in brass is here mentioned, because he speaks only of the brazen things which he made.

15 For he † cast † two pillars of brass, of eighteen cubits high apiece: and a line of twelve cubits did compass either of them about.

Jer. 52. 21.

He cast two pillars of brass; of which see 2 Kings xxv. 16, 17; Jer. lii. 21. Of eighteen cubits high apiece. Object. They are said to be thirty-five cubits high, 2 Chron. iii. 15. Answ. That place manifestly speaks of both the pillars; and this of each, or one pillar, as it is in the Hebrew. Object. But then it should have been thirty-six cubits. Answ. Either the odd half cubit is swallowed up either in the top of the chapter, or in the bottom of the basis of each pillar; or it is neglected in the account, as commonly small measures or numbers are. Line of twelve cubits did compass either of them about; so the diameter was four cubits, which, considering the chapter of five cubits added to the height of each pillar, 2 Chron. iii. 14, was not unproportionable to the height.

16 And he made two chapters of molten brass, to set upon the tops of the pillars: the height of the one chapter was five cubits, and the height of the other chapter was five cubits:

The height of the one chapter was five cubits. Object. It is but three cubits in 2 Kings xxv. 17. Answ. The word chapter is taken diversely, as hundreds of other words are; either more largely for the whole, so it is five cubits; or more strictly, either for the pommels, as they are called, 2 Chron. iv. 12, or for the cornice or crown; and so it was but three cubits, to which the pomegranates being added make it four cubits, as it is below, ver. 19; and the other work upon it took up one cubit more, which in all made five cubits.

17 And nets of checker work, and wreaths of chain work, for the chapters which were upon the top of the pillars; seven for the one chapter, and seven for the other chapter.

For the chapters, which those nets and wreaths did encompass, either covering, and as it were receiving and holding, the pomegranates, or being mixed with them.

18 And he made the pillars, and two rows round about upon the one network, to cover the chapters that were upon the top, with pomegranates: and so did he for the other chapter.

And he made; or, so he made, or framed, or perfected. Two rows; either of pomegranates, by comparing this with ver. 20, or of some other curious work.

19 And the chapters that were upon the top of the pillars were of lily work in the porch, four cubits.

Of lily work; made like the leaves of lilies, or such flowers. In the porch; or, as in the porch, i. e. such work as there was in the porch of the temple, in which these pillars were set, ver. 21, that so the work of the tops of these pillars might agree with that in the top of the porch. So there is only an ellipsis or defect of the particle as, which is frequent, as Gen. xlix. 9; Deut. xxxiii. 22; Psal. xi. 1; Isa. xxi. 8. Four cubits; of which see on ver. 16.

20 And the chapters upon the two pillars had pomegranates also above, over against the belly which was by the network: and the pomegranates were two hundred in rows round about upon the other chapter.

ⁱ See 2 Chron. 3. 16, & 4. 13. Jer. 52. 23.

Over against the belly; so he calls the middle part of the chapter, and that which jetted furthest out. The pomegranates were two hundred: these pomegranates are variously accounted in Scriptures. They are said to be ninety and six on a side of a pillar, i. e. in one row, and in all an hundred, Jer. lii. 23; four great pomegranates between the several checker-works being added to the first ninety-six. And it must needs be granted that there were as many on the other side of the pillar, or in the other row, which makes them two hundred upon a pillar, as is here said, and four hundred upon both pillars, as they are numbered 2 Chron. iv. 13.

21 ^k And he set up the pillars in ^l the porch of the temple: and he ^{set} up the right pillar, and called the name thereof ^{||} Jachin: and he set up the left pillar, and called the name thereof ^{||} Boaz.

In the porch of the temple; where they were placed for mere ornament and magnificence, for they supported nothing.

Jachin signifies he, i. e. God, shall establish, to wit, his temple, and church, and people; and Boaz signifies in it, or rather, in him, (to answer the he in the former name,) is strength. So these pillars being eminently strong and stable, were in a manner types or documents of that strength which was in God, and would be put forth by God for the defending and establishing of his temple and people, if they were careful to keep the conditions required by God on their parts.

22 And upon the top of the pillars was lily work: so was the work of the pillars finished.

23 ¶ And he made ^m a molten sea, ten cubits [†] from the one brim to the other: it was round all about, and his height was five cubits: and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

He made a molten sea; he melted the brass, and cast it into the form of a great vessel, for its vastness called a sea, which name is given by the Hebrews to all great collections of waters. The use of it was for the priests to wash their hands and feet, or other things as occasion required, with the water which they drew out of it. See 2 Chron. iv. 2. Compare Exod. xxx. 19, 20.

24 And under the brim of it round about there were knops compassing it, ten in a cubit, ⁿ compassing the sea round about: the knops were cast in two rows, when it was cast.

ⁿ 2 Chr. 4. 3.

Knops; or, carved or molten figures; for learned Hebricians note, that this word signifies the figures or pictures of all sorts, as flowers, beasts, &c. This general word is particularly explained of ozen, 2 Chron. iv. 3, unless there were so many figures, or sculptures of gourds, or other flowers; and in each of these a little ox's head. Ten in a cubit; so there were three hundred in all. The knops were cast together with the sea, not carved. In two rows: it seems doubtful whether the second row had ten in each cubit, and so there were three hundred more; or whether the ten were distributed into five in each row.

25 It stood upon ^o twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

It stood upon twelve oxen, of solid brass, which was necessary to bear so great a weight. It is probably conceived that the water was by cocks drawn out of the mouths of these oxen. Three of these looked each way; partly for the more equal and convenient support of the vessel; and partly that divers persons might draw water out of it at the same time, which was frequently necessary, especially in great solemnities.

26 And it was an hand breadth thick, and the brim thereof was wrought like the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies: it contained ^p two thousand baths.

Which amounts to five hundred barrels, each bath containing about eight gallons; the bath being a measure of the same bigness with an ephah, Ezek. xiv. 11. Object. This sea is said to contain three thousand baths, 2 Chron. iv. 5. Answ. Either there were two sorts of baths, as of cubits, the one common, the other sacred, and the sacred held half as much more as the common; or rather, he here speaks of what it did actually and usually contain, to wit, two thousand baths, which was sufficient for use; and in 2 Chron. iv. 5, he speaks of what it could contain if it were filled to the brim, as it is implied in the Hebrew words, which differ from these, and properly sound thus, strengthening itself, (to wit, to receive and hold as much as it could, or being filled to its utmost capacity,) it contained, or could contain, three thousand baths.

27 ¶ And he made ten bases of brass; four cubits was the length of one base, and four cubits the breadth thereof, and three cubits the height of it.

He made ten bases; upon which stood the ten lavers mentioned below, ver. 38, in which they washed the parts of the sacrifices, 2 Chron. iv. 6.

28 And the work of the bases was on this manner: they had borders, and the borders were between the ledges:

They had borders; broad brims, possibly for the more secure holding of the lavers.

29 And on the borders that were between the ledges were lions, oxen, and cherubims: and upon the ledges there was a base above: and beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions made of thin work.

A base; so he calls the uppermost part of the base; for though it was above, yet it was a base to the laver, which stood upon it. Certain additions; either as bases for the feet of the said lions and oxen, or only as further ornaments.

30 And every base had four brazen wheels, and plates of brass: and the four corners thereof had undersetters: under the laver were undersetters molten, at the side of every addition.

Four brazen wheels; whereby the bases and lavers might be carried from place to place, as need required. Undersetters, Heb. shoulders; fitly so called, because they strongly supported the lavers, that they should not fall from their bases when the bases were removed together with the lavers.

31 And the mouth of it within the chapter and above was a cubit: but the mouth thereof was round after the work of the base, a cubit and an half: and also upon the mouth of it were gravings with their borders, foursquare, not round.

The mouth of it; so he calls that part in the top of the base which was left hollow, that the foot of the laver might be let into it, and fastened in it. Within the chapter, i. e. within the little base, which he calls the chapter, because it rose up from and stood above the great base, as the head doth above the rest of the body. And above; above the chapter; for the mouth went up and grew wider, like a funnel. Was a cubit; either in breadth; or rather in height, ver. 35; whereof half a cubit was above the chapter or little base, as is said, ver. 35, and the other half is here implied to be within it, and below it. A cubit and a half, to wit, in compass. Four-square, not round; so the innermost part, called the mouth, was round, but the outward part was square, as when a circle is made within a quadrangle.

32 And under the borders were four wheels; and the axletrees of the wheels were †joined to the base: and the height of a wheel was a cubit and half a cubit.

33 And the work of the wheels was like the work of a chariot wheel: their axletrees, and their navies, and their fellows, and their spokes, were all molten.

And cast together with the bases.

34 And there were four undersettors to the four corners of one base: and the undersettors were of the very base itself.

Not only of the same matter, but of the same piece, being cast with it.

35 And in the top of the base was there a round compass of half a cubit high: and on the top of the base the ledges thereof and the borders thereof were of the same.

36 For on the plates of the ledges thereof, and on the borders thereof, he graved cherubims, lions, and palm trees, according to the †proportion of every one, and additions round about.

According to the proportion, or, empty place, i. e. according to the bigness of the spaces which were left empty for them, implying that they were smaller than those above mentioned.

37 After this manner he made the ten bases: all of them had one casting, one measure, and one size.

38 ¶ Then †made he ten lavers of brass: one laver contained forty baths: and every laver was four cubits: and upon every one of the ten bases one laver.

Forty baths; ten barrels; of which see above, on ver. 26.

39 And he put five bases on the right †side of the house, and five on the left side of the house: and he set the sea on the right side of the house eastward over against the south.

On the right side, i. e. in the south side, as is expressed in the end of the verse, and as the right side is used above, 1 Kings vi. 8; Psa. lxxxix. 12. On the right side of the house; not within the house, but in the priests' court, where they washed either their hands or feet, or the parts of the sacrifices. On the left side of the house, i. e. on the north side; for this is here opposed to the right or south side. Over against the south, i. e. in the south-east part, where the offerings were prepared.

40 ¶ And †Hiram made the lavers, and the shovels, and the basons. So Hiram made an end of doing all the work that he made king Solomon for the house of the LORD:

41 The two pillars, and the two bowls of the chapters that were on the top of the two pillars; and the two networks, to cover the two bowls of the chapters which were upon the top of the pillars;

42 And four hundred pomegranates for the two networks, even two rows of pomegranates for one network, to cover the two bowls of the chapters that were †upon the pillars;

43 And the ten bases, and ten lavers on the bases;

44 And one sea, and twelve oxen under the sea;

45 * And the pots, and the shovels, and the basons: and all these vessels, which Hiram made to king Solomon for the house of the LORD, were of †bright brass.

The pots, to see the those parts of the sacrifices which the priests or officers were to eat. To these flesh-hooks are added, 2 Chron. iv. 16.

46 †In the plain of Jordan did the king cast them, †in the clay ground between Succoth and Zarthan.

In the clay ground, or, in thick clay; fat, and tough, and tenacious, and therefore fittest to make moulds of all sorts, into which the melted brass was to be poured.

47 And Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, †because they were exceeding many: neither was the weight of the brass †found out.

Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, because the weighing of them was very troublesome, and to no purpose.

48 And Solomon made all the vessels that pertained unto the house of the LORD: †the altar of gold, and †the table of gold, whereupon †the shewbread was,

All the vessels that pertained unto the house of the Lord; such as God by the mouth of Moses had commanded to be made for his house and service, and such as Moses had made; only these were larger, and richer, and more, according to the difference of the temple and tabernacle, and Solomon's vast riches, and the poverty of Moses and the Israelites at that time. The altar of gold, to wit, of incense, as appears from 1 Chron. xxviii. 18, where this is mentioned amongst the things for which David left gold, and Solomon is here said to build it; and therefore this cannot be that altar made by Moses, Exod. xxv. 23, 24; xxx. 1, 3, which also was of shittim wood, whereas this was made of cedar, and covered with gold, 1 Kings vi. 20. The table of gold, whereupon the shewbread was; under which, by a synecdoche, are comprehended both all the utensils belonging to it, and the other ten tables which he made together with it, 2 Chron. iv. 7, 8.

49 And the candlesticks of pure gold, five on the right side, and five on the left, before the oracle, with the flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs of gold,

The candlesticks; which were ten, according to the number of the tables; whereas Moses made but one; whereby might be signified the progress of the light of sacred truth, which was now grown clearer than it was in Moses's time, and should shine brighter and brighter until the perfect day of gospel light. Of pure gold; of massy and fine gold. Before the oracle, in the holy place. The flowers wrought

51 So was ended all the work that king Solomon made for the house of the LORD. And Solomon brought in the † things ^b which David his father had dedicated; even the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, did he put among the treasures of the house of the LORD.

The silver and the gold; either, first, all of it; and so Solomon built it wholly at his own charge; or, secondly, so much of it as was left. The vessels; those which David had dedicated, and with them the altar of Moses, and some other of the old utensils which were now laid aside, far better being put in the room of them.

CHAP. VIII.

The feast of the dedication of the temple; the ark of the covenant with the holy instruments are brought into it; the Lord giveth a token of his presence, 1—11. Solomon's blessing and thanksgiving, 12—21. His prayer, 22—61. His sacrifice of peace-offerings, 62—66.

THEN ^a Solomon assembled the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, the † chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, unto king Solomon in Jerusalem, ^b that they might bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD ^c out of the city of David, which is Zion.

The elders of Israel; the senators, and judges, and rulers. The heads of the tribes; for each tribe had a peculiar head or governor. The chief of the fathers; the chief persons of every great family in each tribe. Unto king Solomon; unto himself; the antecedent noun being put for the relative and reciprocal pronoun, as is frequent with the Hebrews. In Jerusalem, where the temple was built, and now finished. That they might bring up the ark to the top of this hill of Moriah, upon which it was built; whither they were now to carry the ark in a solemn pomp, that by this their attendance they might make a public profession of that service, and respect, and obedience which they owed unto that God who was graciously and gloriously present in the ark. Out of the city of David, where David had placed the ark, 2 Sam. vi. 12, 17. See on 1 Kings ii. 10; iii. 1. Which is Zion; which is called Zion, because it was built upon that hill.

2 And all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto king Solomon at the ^d feast in the month Ethanim, which is the seventh month.

All the men of Israel; not only the chief men who were particularly invited, but a vast number of the common people, as being forward to see and to join in this great and glorious solemnity. At the feast: understand either, first, The feast of tabernacles. Or rather, secondly, The feast of the dedication, to which Solomon had invited them, which was before that feast; for that began on the 15th day of the 7th month, Lev. xxiii. 34, but this began at the least seven days before that feast; for Solomon and the people kept the feast for fourteen days, here, ver. 65, i. e. seven days for the dedication of the temple, and seven other days for that of tabernacles; and after both these were finished, he sent all the people to their homes on the twenty-third day of the month. See 2 Chron. vii. 9, 10. Which is the seventh month; which time he chose with common respect to his people's convenience, because now they had gathered in all their fruits, and now they were come up to Jerusalem to celebrate the feast of tabernacles. Quest. The temple was not finished till the eighth month, 1 Kings vi. 38, how then could he invite them in the seventh month? Ans. This was the seventh month of the next year; for although the house in all its parts was finished the year before, yet the utensils of it, described chap. vii., were not then fully finished, but took up a considerable time afterward; and many preparations were to be made for this great and extraordinary occasion.

3 And all the elders of Israel came, ^e and the priests took up the ark.

For although the Levites might do this, Numb. iv. 15, yet the priests did it at this time, partly for the greater honour of the solemnity, and partly because the Levites might not enter into the holy place, much less into the holy of holies, where it was to be placed, into which the priests themselves might not have entered, if the high priest alone could have done it. Object. The Levites are said to have done this, 2 Chron. v. 4. Ans. That is most true, because all the priests were Levites, though all the Levites were not priests.

4 And they brought up the ark of the LORD, ^f and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, even those did the priests and the Levites bring up.

The tabernacle of the congregation; that made by Moses, which doubtless before this time had been translated from Gibeon to Zion, and now, together with other things, was put into the treasuries of the Lord's house, to prevent all the superstitious use and profane abuse of it, and to oblige the people to come up to Jerusalem, as the only place where God would now be worshipped. The priests and Levites; the priests carrying some, and the Levites others.

5 And king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel, that were assembled unto him, were with him before the ark, ^g sacrificing sheep and oxen, that could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

Sacrificing sheep and oxen; either, first, In the way, as David did upon the like occasion, 2 Sam. vi. 13. Or, secondly, When the ark was come into the priests' court, where the altar stood, whence it was speedily to be conveyed to that place where the people could never behold it more. Or rather, thirdly, When the ark was seated in its place; for although they might in the way or passage offer some sacrifices, as David did; yet that was not a proper season to offer so many sacrifices as could not be told nor numbered, as these are here said to be; which far better agrees with what is more particularly related below, ver. 62—64, which is here signified in the general by way of anticipation, as is frequently done in the Scripture in like cases.

6 And the priests ^h brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto ⁱ his place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even ^k under the wings of the cherubims.

Into the oracle of the house, i. e. to that part of the house which is called the oracle, 1 Kings vi. 5, 16, 19, 23; or, as it here follows, the most holy place. Under the wings of the cherubims, to wit, of Solomon's new-made cherubims, 1 Kings vi. 23, 24, 27; not of the Mosaical cherubims, which were far less, and unmovably fixed to the ark, Exod. xxxvii. 7, 8; and therefore, together with the ark, were put under the wings of these cherubims.

7 For the cherubims spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and the staves thereof above.

8 And they ^l drew out the staves, that the † ends of the staves were seen out in the ^m holy place before the oracle, and they were not seen without: and there they are unto this day.

They drew out the staves; not wholly, which was expressly forbidden, Exod. xxv. 15; Numb. iv. 6; but in part. In the holy place; either, first, Properly so called; which place was indeed before the oracle. But how then could it be said that they were not seen without, to wit, in the holy place? For that they should be seen without, to wit, in the court, was so ridiculous a conceit, that it had been absurd to suppose it, or to say any thing to prevent it. Nor is it much better what others say, that these ends of the staves did discover themselves through the veil, which they thrust forward, though they did not pierce through it; for neither in that case had they been seen; and besides, there was a wall as well as a veil in that place. Or rather, secondly, In the most holy place, which is oft called by way of eminency the holy place, as Exod. xxix. 30; xxxix. 1; Lev. vi. 30; x. 18; xvi. 2, 16, 17, 20. And the Hebrew words rendered before the oracle, may be as well rendered within the oracle, the phrase at pene being so used, Gen. i. 2, the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, i. e. in the waters, or in that confused heap of earth and water in which God was now working, that he might bring it into order and use; and Gen. i. 20, where it is well rendered in the open firmament of heaven, i. e. of the air. And thus the whole is most true; they were seen out, to wit, without the ark, and the cherubims which covered all the other parts, but they were not seen without the oracle, to wit, in the holy place, strictly so called; for how could they be seen there, when there was both a wall and a thick veil between that place and the oracle? And these staves were left in this posture, that the high priest might hereby be certainly guided to that very particular place where he was one day in a year to sprinkle blood, and to offer incense before the ark, which otherwise he might mistake in that dark place, where the ark was wholly covered with the wings of the great cherubims, which stood between him and the ark when he entered thither. Some conceive that the door of the oracle stood always open, (which yet seems very improbable,) and that they who were near the door might see the ends of the staves, though by reason of the darkness of the place they could see nothing else there.

9^m There was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone, which Moses^o put there at Horeb, ||^o when the LORD made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt.

Nothing in the ark; strictly and properly: for in a more large sense, as in is oft taken for by or near, as is confessed, and hath been proved before; so the pot of manna and Aaron's rod were also in it, Heb. ix. 4, i. e. by it, to wit, in the most holy place, before the ark of the testimony, where God commanded Moses to put them, as it is expressed, Exod. xvi. 33, 34; Numb. xvii. 10, and not strictly in it. But of this more, God assisting, on Heb. ix. 4.

10 And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the LORD,

Out of the holy place; either, first, The most holy place, into which the priests had now entered to carry in the ark. Or rather, secondly, The holy place, where they might have stood to minister, if the cloud had not hindered them, as may be gathered from the next verse. The cloud; the usual token of God's glorious presence. See Exod. xvi. 10; xxiv. 15, 16; Numb. ix. 15. Filled the house of the Lord; partly in testimony of his gracious acceptance of this work, and their service; and partly to beget an awe and reverence in them, and in all others, when they approach to God.

11 So that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the LORD had filled the house of the LORD.

Because of the cloud; because the cloud was either so bright that it dazzled their eyes; or rather so dark, that it struck them with horror and amazement, as is implied in the next verse.

12 ¶ Then spake Solomon, The LORD said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

Perceiving both priests and people struck with horror and wonder at this darkness, he minds them that this was no sign of God's dislike or disfavour, as some of them might possibly imagine; but a token of his approbation, and grace, and special presence among them. The Lord said; not in express words, but by plain consequence, because he hath declared, both by his words and actions, that he would manifest his presence with and dwelling among his people by a dark cloud, in which he would appear. See Exod. xiii. 21, 22; xxiv. 16; xl. 35; Numb. ix. 15; Deut. iv. 11; v. 22; Psal. xviii. 12; xcvi. 2.

13 I have surely built thee an house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in for ever.

I have surely built thee an house to dwell in; I perceive by this thick darkness that thou art coming among us, and therefore make haste and come, O thou blessed Guest, into the dwelling-place which I have built by thy command, and for thy service. A settled place for thee to abide in for ever; not a tabernacle, which was made to be carried from place to place; but a durable, and, I hope, perpetual habitation.

14 And the king turned his face about, and blessed all the congregation of Israel: (and all the congregation of Israel stood;)

The king turned his face about, from the temple, towards which he was looking to observe that thick and extraordinary darkness, to the body of the congregation. Blessed all the congregation of Israel, or, blessed (to wit, the Lord, which is easily understood from the following words; in which he only blesseth or praiseth God, but doth not bless the people at all) with (so the Hebrew eth is oft used, as hath been showed before) all the congregation. Although he might do both, first bless the congregation, which possibly he might do in that solemn and appointed form, Numb. vi.; which therefore it was needless to repeat here; and then blessed God. And indeed he doth both here below, where these same words are used, ver. 55, 56, &c. The congregation of Israel stood; partly in way of devotion to God, whom they adored; and partly out of respect to the king.

15 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, which spake with his mouth unto David my father, and hath with his hand fulfilled it, saying, Praised be God, both for his grace in making such a promise, and for his goodness and truth in fulfilling it.

16 Since the day that I brought forth my people Israel out of Egypt, I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel to build an house, that my name might be therein; but I chose David to be over my people Israel.

Since the day that I brought forth my people Israel out of Egypt, until David's time; for then he did choose Jerusalem. I chose no city, i. e. I did not declare my choice of it; for so choosing is used for declaring or executing one's choice, as Deut. xii. 1; 2 Chron. vi. 5; Zech. ii. 12, and things are oft said to be done when they are only manifested or declared to be such; in which sense God is said to be justified, Psal. li. 4, and men to be guilty, Hos. v. 15. Otherwise, to speak properly, whatsoever God chooseth, he chooseth from eternity. That my name might be therein; that my presence, and grace, and worship, and glory might be there. I chose David, and in and with him the tribe of Judah, of which he was, and Jerusalem, where he dwelt; which is here implied by the opposition of this to the former part of the verse.

17 And it was in the heart of David my father to build an house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

Reflecting upon God's performance of his promise concerning the building of the temple, he breaks forth into admiration, Is it possible that the great, and high, and lofty God should stoop so low, as to take up his dwelling here amongst men? O astonishing condescension! The heaven; all this vast space of the visible heaven. And heaven of heavens; the third and highest, and therefore the largest heaven, called the heaven of heavens here, as also Deut. x.

14; Psal. cxlviii. 4, for its eminency and comprehensive-ness. Cannot contain thee; for thy essence reacheth far beyond them, being omnipresent. How much less this house that I have builded? this house therefore was not built as if it were proportionable to thy greatness, or could contain thee, but only that therein we might serve and glorify thee.

28 Yet have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O LORD my God, to hearken unto the cry and to the prayer, which thy servant prayeth before thee to day:

Though thou art not comprehended within this place, yet show thyself to be graciously present here, by accepting and granting my present requests here tendered unto thee.

29 That thine eyes may be open toward this house night and day, even toward the place of which thou hast said, ^{t Deu. 12. 11.} †My name shall be there: that thou mayest hearken unto the prayer which thy servant shall make ^u|| toward this place.

That thine eyes may be open to behold, to wit, with an eye of favour and compassion. So it is a synecdochical expression: compare Psal. xxxiii. 18; xxxiv. 15; Zech. xii. 4. My name; my presence, and glory, and grace. See above, ver. 16. Towards this place; this temple, to which Solomon did now look, and, it may be, point; and towards which the godly Israelites directed their looks in their prayers. See Dan. vi. 10.

30 ^{x 2 Chr. 20. 9. Neh. 1. 6.} *And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, when they shall pray || toward this place: and hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place: and when thou hearest, forgive.

Thy dwelling-place; which he adds, that the people might not idolize the temple, nor presume upon it, as if God were now fast tied to them, as having no other dwelling-place; and to direct them in all their addresses to God in his temple, to lift up their eyes above it, even to heaven, where God's most true and most glorious dwelling-place is. And when thou hearest, forgive, to wit, the sins of thy people praying, and even of their prayers; which, if not pardoned, will certainly hinder the success of all their prayers, and the course of all thy blessings upon them.

31 ¶ If any man trespass against his neighbour, ^y† and ^zan oath be laid upon him to cause him to swear, and the oath come before thine altar in this house:

If any man trespass, i. e. if he be accused of a trespass. An oath be laid upon him; either by the judge, or by the party accusing him, or by the accused person himself; which was usual, when there were no witnesses. See Exod. xxii. 8, 11; Numb. v. 12, 15, &c. And the oath come before thine altar in this house; for here God, who was appealed to as witness, was especially present. Hence the heathens used to swear at their altars.

32 Then hear thou in heaven, and do, and judge thy servants, ^{z Deut. 25. 1.} *condemning the wicked, to bring his way upon his head; and justifying the righteous, to give him according to his righteousness.

33 ¶ ^{a Lev. 26. 17. Deut. 28. 25.} *When thy people Israel be smitten down before the enemy, because they have sinned against thee, and ^{b Lev. 26. 38, 40. Neh. 1. 9.} †shall turn again to thee, and confess thy name, and pray, and make supplication unto thee || in this house:

And confess thy name; give glory to thy name, by acknowledging their sins, and thy justice; and by accepting the punishment of their iniquity; and by trusting to thy power and goodness alone for their deliverance.

34 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them again unto the land which thou gavest unto their fathers.

Bring them again, from the land into which they are supposed to be carried by their enemies, into Canaan.

Quest. If they were banished into a strange land, how could they pray in this house, as they are said to do, ver. 33?

Ans. 1. That may be rendered to or towards this house, as it is expressed, ver. 29, 30. The Hebrew preposition beth, in, being oft put for el, to, or towards. 2. This may be understood of divers persons; and so the sense is this: When the people of Israel be defeated in battle, and many of their brethren be taken prisoners, and carried into captivity; if then their brethren remaining in the land, shall heartily pray for their captive brethren, they shall be delivered.

c Lev. 26. 19.
Deut. 28. 23.

35 ¶ When heaven is shut up, and there is no rain, because they have sinned against thee; if they pray toward this place, and confess thy name, and turn from their sin, when thou afflictest them:

Heaven; the lower heaven, in which the clouds are; as Deut. xi. 17; Psal. cxlvii. 8. Is shut up; the heaven is compared to a great store-house in God's keeping, out of which nothing can be had so long as it is close shut up. If they turn from their sin, when thou afflictest them; do not reject their prayers, because they are forced from them by their afflictions, as thou mayst justly do.

36 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants, and of thy people Israel, that thou^d teach them^e the good way wherein they should walk, and give rain upon thy land, which thou hast given to thy people for an inheritance.

That thou teach them; that their sin being pardoned, and thou being reconciled unto them, mayst vouchsafe to teach them. Or rather, as our translators render the very same words, 2 Chron. vi. 27, when thou shalt teach, or hast taught them; not only by thy word, for that was done before; but by their afflictions, which is one of God's schools; and especially, by thy Spirit, enlightening their minds, and inclining their hearts, that they may learn and profit both by the word and by their afflictions. And this is here fitly added, to show that he could not expect, and did not desire, from God the pardon of their sins, but upon God's terms, to wit, upon their true repentance. The good way, i. e. the way or will of God; or the way of their duty, as the following words explain it, which is most rightly called the good way here, and 1 Sam. xii. 23, because it is both just and holy, and therefore good in itself; and good, that is, both delightful and profitable to those that walk in it. The meaning is, When thou hast effectually taught them, and they have thoroughly learned how to please and serve thee acceptably, and to walk before thee in the way which thou hast prescribed them. Give rain. The order of Solomon's prayer is very observable: first and chiefly he prays for their repentance and forgiveness, which is the chief blessing, and the only solid foundation of all other mercies; and then he prays for the temporal mercy; thereby teaching us what to mind and desire principally in our prayers; which also Christ hath taught us in his perfect pattern and form of prayer; wherein there is but one petition for outward, and all the rest are for spiritual blessings.

42; Psal. cv. 34, 35. Whatsoever plague; that chiefly signifies an extraordinary judgment sent from God.

38 What prayer and supplication soever be made by any man, or by all thy people Israel, which shall know every man the plague of his own heart, and spread forth his hands toward this house:

The plague of his own heart, i. e. either, 1. His sin, which may be called the plague of his heart, in opposition to the other plagues here mentioned, which afflict only the body, or outward man; so the sense is, Who by their afflictions are brought to a true and serious sense of their worse and inward plague of their sins, which are most fitly called the plague of the heart, because that is both the principal seat of sin, and the fountain from whence all actual sins flow, Matt. xv. 19. Or rather, 2. His affliction; for so this is explained in the parallel place, 2 Chron. vi. 29, (which is the more considerable, because that book was written after this, to explain what was dark or doubtful, and to supply what was lacking in this,) when every one shall know his own sore, and his own grief; which is not unfitly called the plague of his heart, because it was that plague which his heart was most afflicted with, which pained him at the very heart, as the phrase is, Jer. iv. 19; compare Psal. lv. 4; which caused him most vexation or grief, which is a passion of the heart: and so the sense is, Who shall know, i. e. be duly and deeply sensible of his affliction, and the hand of God in it; and his sin as the cause of it; for words of knowledge in Scripture do very frequently note such a kind of knowledge as affects and changeth the heart, and reforms the whole course of a man's life; for which cause, men of ungodly lives are frequently said in Scripture not to know God, or Christ, or his word, &c. And therefore no man knows his sore in a Scripture sense but he who bears the rod, who turneth unto him that smiteth him, and sincerely seeketh to the Lord for relief.

Do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for, to wit, agreeable to thy will and word; for he would not have them heard, if they had prayed for any thing dishonourable to God, or destructive to his people. It is observable, that his prayer for the strangers is more large and comprehensive than for the Israelites, that thereby he might both show his public spiritedness, and encourage strangers to the worship of the true God. That all people may know thy name, to fear thee, as do thy people Israel; whereby we see how sincerely and heartily the ancient and godly Jews desired the conversion of the Gentiles; whereas the latter and degenerate Jews, in the days of Christ and of the apostles, did envy, oppose it, and fret at it. Is called by thy name, i. e. is owned, not only by us, but by thyself, as thy house; the only place in the world to which thou wilt vouchsafe thy presence and protection, and wherein thou wilt be publicly and solemnly served.

64 ^gThe same day did the king hallow the middle of the court that ^hwas before the house of the LORD: for there he offered burnt offerings, and meat offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings: because ^hthe brasen altar that ^hwas before the LORD ^hwas too little to receive the burnt offerings, and meat offerings, and the fat of the peace offerings.

n 4. cor. 4. 1.

The middle of the court, to wit, of the priests' court, in which the great altar was. This he consecrated as he did the great altar, to wit, by sacrifices; but with this difference, that he consecrated that for lasting and perpetual use, but this only for the present time and occasion, being warranted to do so both by the necessity of it for God's service, and for the present solemn work, for which the brazen altar was not sufficient, as it here follows; and by the direction of God's Spirit, wherewith Solomon was endowed, as being a prophet as well as a king. Here therefore he suddenly reared up divers altars, which after this solemnity were demolished.

65 And at that time Solomon held ⁱa feast, and all Israel with him, a great congregation, from ^kthe entering in of Hamath unto ^lthe river of Egypt, before the LORD our God, ^mseven days and seven days, even fourteen days.

Held a feast, i. e. kept the solemnity. From the entering in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt; the usual and known bounds of the land, in the utmost length of it; of which see Numb. xxxiv. 8; Josh. xiii. 5; Judg. iii. 3. Before the Lord, i. e. before the temple, and as in God's presence. Seven days and seven days; seven for the dedication of the temple or altar, and the other seven for the feast of tabernacles, as may be gathered from 2 Chron. vii. 9. And it seems to be expressed in this manner, to intimate that these fourteen days of rejoicing were not all together, but that there was some interval between them, which indeed was necessary, because the day of atonement was on the tenth day of this month, Lev. xxiii. 27. And because these fourteen days ended on the twenty-second day, 2 Chron. vii. 10, it may seem most probable that the feast of the dedication was kept before the tenth day, and the feast of tabernacles some days after it.

66 ⁿOn the eighth day he sent the people away: and they ^o|| blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart for all the goodness that the LORD had done for David his servant, and for Israel his people.

Solomon having joined with the people in the solemn assembly, which was kept on the eighth day, in the close of that day and service he took his solemn farewell, and dismissed them with his blessing; and the next morning when the heads and elders who came to Solomon upon this special summons, above, ver. 3, and with them divers of the people came to take their leave of the king, he sent them away. And so this place agrees very well with 2 Chron. vii. 9, 10. They blessed the king, i. e. they prayed to God to bless him, according to their duty and custom. Or, they praised him, for his great care and pains in building of the temple, and setting up God's worship among them. The goodness that the Lord had done for David, in giving him a sure house, and a wise and religious son, by whom he had now fulfilled the promise made to David about the building of the temple.

CHAP. IX.

God's covenant, in a second vision, with Solomon, 1—9. The mutual presents of Solomon and Hiram, 10—14. Strong holds built by Solomon, 15—19. The Gentiles are bondmen: the Israelites not so, 20—23. Pharaoh's daughter removeth to her house, 24. Solomon's yearly solemn sacrifices, 25. His navy fetcheth gold from Ophir, 26—28.

AND ^ait came to pass, when Solomon had finished the building of the house of the LORD, ^band the king's house, and ^call Solomon's desire which he was pleased to do,

2 That the LORD appeared to Solomon the second time, ^das he had appeared unto him at Gibeon.

To wit, in a dream or vision; for that which is mentioned chap. vi. 11, seems to have been imparted unto him by some prophet or messenger sent from God with that errand. The time of this revelation was either, 1. After all Solomon's buildings, as the words thus rendered plainly imply. And if it seem strange that God should not reveal this purpose and sentence of his concerning the temple till so many years after the finishing of it, it must be considered, 1. That as it is an act of God's singular grace when he doth thus reveal himself to any person, so it is but meet he should choose his own time for it. 2. That God had presently after the finishing of the temple, at the feast of the dedication of it, sufficiently showed his acceptance and approbation of it by that glorious cloud, chap. viii. 10, 11, and therefore this revelation was not then necessary. 3. That God might choose this as the fittest time for giving Solomon the following admonition, when he perceived that his heart began to be lifted up in pride for his sumptuous and magnificent buildings, &c., and that he was grown vain, and careless, and secure; and therefore most needed such an awakening oracle. Or, 2. Presently after the building of the temple, as may be thought from the matter of this revelation, which seems best to suit with that time when it was newly built, and when Solomon's prayer here mentioned was newly made; for seeing the following words contain God's answer to that prayer, it seems improbable, that the answer should come so many years after it. But then this second verse, and the rest, even to ver. 11, are to be enclosed with a parenthesis; and the place must be thus rendered, ver. 2, For (so the Hebrew vau is oft rendered) the Lord appeared, or had appeared, to Solomon, &c.; ver. 3, And the Lord had said unto him, &c. And this parenthesis may seem to have a foundation in ver. 10, where the first verse (in substance, though not in the very same words) is repeated, as is usual after long digressions; and then he completes the sentence, ver. 11, &c., which till then had been suspended. Nor are such long parentheses without example in Scripture. See my Latin Synopsis on Rom. v. 12, &c.; Eph. iii. 1, &c.; Rev. xxii. 7.

10 ¶ And 'it came to pass at the end of twenty years, when Solomon had built the two houses, the house of the LORD, and the king's house,

11 '(Now Hiram the king of Tyre had furnished Solomon with cedar trees and fir trees, and with gold, according to all his desire,) that then king Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee.

Or, near (as beth oft signifies, as hath been proved before) the land of Galilee, bordering upon it; in those parts which were near and adjoining to Hiram's dominions: with the cities understand the lands and territories belonging to them. Quest. How could Solomon give away any part of that land wherein the people had a right by a Divine lot, and God had a right, as being the only proprietary of it; upon which ground the total alienation of it, or any part of it, was forbidden, Lev. xxv. 23? Ans. 1. It is not said that he gave them away wholly, and for ever; but he might assign them to him only for a time, until he was fully satisfied for his debt. 2. If these cities were possessed by Israelites, Solomon did not give him their particular possessions, but only his own royalties over them, and all the profits he received from them, which were very considerable, as may be gathered from that passage, chap. xii. 4. 3. These cities, though they were within those large bounds which God fixed to the Land of Promise, Gen. xv. 18; Josh. i. 4, yet were not within those parts which were distributed by Lot in Joshua's time, nor belonging to the tribe of Asher, (as some suppose,) as may be gathered both from Josh. xix. 27, where their border is said to go out only to the land of Cabul, to wit, exclusively; and ver. 30, where all their cities are said to be but twenty and two; and from 2 Chron. viii. 2, where it is said of those cities, when Hiram restored them, that Solomon built them, and caused the children of Israel to dwell there; which makes it more than probable that these cities were not inhabited by Israelites, but by Canaanites, or other heathens; who being subdued and extirpated by David, or Solomon, those cities became a part of their dominions, and at their disposal; and afterwards were reckoned a part of Galilee, as Josephus notes; and may be one reason why he gave these rather than other cities, because they were in his power to give, when others were not.

12 And Hiram came out from Tyre to see the

+ Heb. were not right in his eyes. cities which Solomon had given him ; and they † pleased him not.

He did not accept them for satisfaction, because the cities were out of repair, as appears from ver. 13, and the soil not good in his eyes, and therefore he refused them, 2 Chron. viii. 2, and expected, and doubtless had, satisfaction some other way, as may be gathered from the following story.

13 And he said, What cities are these which thou hast given me, my brother ? † And he called them the land of ¶ Cabul unto this day.

The land of Cabul, i. e. of dirt, as most interpret it. Not that it was a barren soil, as some imagine ; for they who describe those parts commend them as fruitful ; nor would Solomon have made him so unworthy a return : but because it was not pleasant, nor agreeable to his nor to his people's humour ; because, though the land was very good, yet being a thick and stiff clay, and therefore requiring great pains to manure and improve it, it was very unsuitable to the disposition of the Tyrians, who were delicate, and lazy, and luxurious, and wholly given to merchandise.

14 And Hiram sent to the king sixscore talents of gold.

Or rather, for Hiram had sent. And this seems to be here added, both to declare the quantity of the gold sent, which had been only named before, ver. 11, and as the reason why he resented Solomon's action so ill, because so great a sum required a better recompence.

u ch. 5. 13. 15 ¶ And this is the reason of the levy which king Solomon raised ; for to build the house of the LORD, and his own house, and * Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and † Hazor, and † Megiddo, and * Gezer.

The levy which king Solomon raised ; both the levy of men, of which chap. v. 13, and the levy of money upon his people and subjects, which is sufficiently evident from many scriptures. And this sentence may look both backward and forward. He raised this levy, both to pay what he owed to Hiram, which is mentioned before ; and to build the works here following. Millo seems to have been an eminent, and large, and strong fort or castle in Jerusalem, as may be gathered from 1 Kings xi. 27 ; 2 Chron. xxxii. 5. Hazor, in Naphtali. See Josh. xi. 10 ; xix. 36. Megiddo, in that part of the tribe of Manasseh within Jordan, of which see Josh. xvii. 11. Gezer, in Ephraim, Josh. xxi. 21. It now was, and long had been, in the possession of the Canaanites, Josh. xvi. 10 ; Judg. i. 29, and permitted so to be by David and Solomon, either by neglect, or because they were busied in greater and more necessary employments.

16 For Pharaoh king of Egypt had gone up, and taken Gezer, and burnt it with fire, and slain the Canaanites that dwelt in the city, and given it for a present unto his daughter, Solomon's wife.

Not now, but long before this time, and presently after the marriage of his daughter, as is most probable ; and it is here mentioned only as the occasion of Solomon's building it. Possibly the Canaanites of this place had been guilty of some heinous crime ; and because Solomon thought not fit to destroy them himself, he desired Pharaoh to do it for him, or Pharaoh might offer his service herein for his daughter's advantage.

cir. 1014. c Josh. 15. 3. & 21. 22. 2 Chro. 8. 5. 17 And Solomon built Gezer, and Beth-horon the nether,

In Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 13, 14 ; and Beth-horon the upper, which is added 2 Chron. viii. 5, a city in the tribe of Ephraim, Josh. xvi. 5, possibly bordering upon Benjamin, and nigh unto the lower Beth-horon ; which alone may be here mentioned, either because it was the more famous place, or because it needed more reparations.

d Josh. 10. 44. 2 Chron. 8. 5. & 6, &c. 18 And Baalath, and Tadmor in the wilderness, in the land, Baalath, in the tribe of Dan, Josh. xix. 40, 44. Tadmor ; supposed to be called Tamar, Ezek. xlvi. 19. In the land : this clause may belong either, first, To all the places above mentioned, which are here declared to be in the land of Canaan. But so that clause may seem superfluous ; for none would easily think that he would build much out of his own land. Or rather, secondly, To Tadmor, which otherwise being in that wilderness which was the border of the land, might have been presumed to have been out of the land.

19 And all the cities of store that Solomon had, and cities for his chariots, and cities for his horsemen, and † that which Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and in all the land of his dominion.

The cities of store ; to lay up arms and ammunition for war, and corn or other provisions against a time of scarcity. See Exod. i. 11. In Lebanon ; either in the mountain of Lebanon, which being the border of his land, he might build some forts or a frontier city in it ; or in the house of the forest of Lebanon ; of which see chap. vii. 2.

20 And all the people that were left of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites, which were not of the children of Israel, 21 Their children that were left after them in the land, whom the children of Israel also were not able utterly to destroy, upon those did Solomon levy a tribute of bondservice unto this day.

He used them as bond-men, and imposed burdens and bodily labours upon them. See 2 Chron. ii. 18. Hence some think they are called Solomon's servants, Ezra ii. 55, 58. Quest. Why did not Solomon destroy them, as God had commanded, when now it was fully in his power to do so ? Answ. First, The command of destroying them, Deut. vii. 2, did chiefly, if not only, concern that generation of Canaanites who lived in or near the time of the Israelites' entering into Canaan. Secondly, That command seems not to be absolute and universal, but conditional, and with some exception for those who should submit to them, and embrace the true religion, as may be gathered both from Josh. xi. 19, and from the history of the Gibeonites, Josh. ix., whom Joshua did not sin in sparing, when he had sworn to do so ; and Saul did sin in endeavouring to destroy them. But if God's command had been absolute, the oaths of Joshua, and of the princes, could not have obliged them, nor dispensed with such a command.

22 But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondmen : but they were men of war, and his servants, and his princes, and his captains, and rulers of his chariots, and his horsemen.

23 These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's work, five hundred and fifty, which bare rule over the people that wrought in the work.

Object. They were only two hundred and fifty in 2 Chron. viii. 10. Answ. First, Those might be officers of another sort ; for they are not said to be over the work, as these are, but only over the people. Secondly, The two hundred and fifty were Israelites, who are therefore distinctly mentioned in that book, where many things are more exactly noted than in the former ; and the other three hundred were strangers, who therefore are neglected in that more accurate account. Or, thirdly, There was but two hundred and fifty at one time, which is noted there, and two hundred and fifty at another time, (for it is apparent they did their work by turns,) and the other fifty either were superior to all the rest, or rather were a reserve to supply the place of any of the five hundred when there was occasion, which might frequently happen. And so this was an act not unbecoming Solomon's wisdom, to make provision for emergencies.

24 ¶ But Pharaoh's daughter came up

 So he finished the house.

Three times in a year, i. e. at the three solemn feasts, which is not said exclusively, as is evident both from 2 Chron. viii. 13, and from the express and oft-repeated commands of God to offer at other times, which it is absurd to think that Solomon, not yet fallen into sin, should so wickedly and scandalously neglect; but because then he did it more solemnly, and more costily, and more publicly; whereby it might be presumed that he did so at all other appointed times. So he finished the house, or, so he perfected the house, to wit, by applying it to the use for which it was made, in which the perfection of such things consists. Or the house may be put metonymically for the work or service of the house, as it is elsewhere commonly used for the things or persons in the house. Or the words may be and are rendered thus, After that (for so the Hebrew vau oft signifies, as Isa. xxxvii. 9, 36; Hos. i. 11; Zech. xii. 2) he finished the house, i. e. from the time of the finishing of the house, until this time, he continued to do so.

 t Num. 33. Eloth, on the † shore of the Red sea, in 35. Dent. 2. 8. the land of Edom.
 ch. 22. 48. † Heb. lip.

Solomon made a navy of ships; not now in the order in which it is placed in the history, but in the beginning of his reign; as appears, because the almug trees which he used in this work were brought in this navy from Ophir, chap. x. 11, 12; 2 Chron. ix. 10, 11, which was a three years' voyage there, chap. x. 22; for Ophir and Tharshish were either the same place, or one near to another. Eloth, or Elath, as it is called, 2 Kings xiv. 22. See Deut. ii. 8.
 It is thought to be that famous port on the Red Sea which Ptolemy and Strabo call Elana. In the land of Edom; which David brought under his dominion, and Solomon kept it.

u ch. 10. 11. 27 ^u And Hiram sent in the navy his servants, shipmen that had knowledge of the sea, with the servants of Solomon.

The Tyrians were famous for knowledge of the sea. He sent also ships to join with Solomon's, 2 Chron. viii. 18; not from Tyre, the famous city of Phœnicia, which was in the midland sea, from whence he could not sail to the Red Sea without fetching a vast compass; but from an island in the Red Sea, called Tyre, because it was a colony of the Tyrians, as Strabo notes.

x Job 22. 24. 28 And they came to ^x Ophir, and fetched from thence gold, four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to king Solomon.

Ophir; a place famous for the plenty and fineness of the gold there; of which see Gen. ii. 11, 12; Job xxii. 24; xxviii.
 16; Psal. xlv. 9; Isa. xiii. 12. It is manifest and agreed that it was a part of the East Indies, which though very remote from us, yet was far nearer to the Red Sea, from whence they might easily sail to it in these ancient times, because they needed not to go far from the coast to come to it, because they might (according to the manner of these first ages) sail all along near the coast, though the voyage was thereby more tedious, which was the reason why three years were spent in it. And here, and here only, were to be had all the commodities which Solomon fetched from Ophir, 1 Kings x. 22. Four hundred and twenty talents :
 in all there came to the king four hundred and fifty talents, whereof it seems thirty talents were allowed by Solomon to Hiram and his men for the voyage, and so there were only four hundred and twenty that came clearly into the king's treasury.

AND when the ^a queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the LORD, she came ^b to prove him with hard questions.

The queen of Sheba; either, first, Of Ethiopia, as that people by constant tradition from their ancestors affirm, which also was truly in the ends of the earth, whence she came, Matt. xii. 42. Or rather, secondly, Of that part of Arabia called Sabæa, which was at a great distance from Jerusalem, and really in the ends of the earth, and bordering upon the southern sea; for there, much more than in Ethiopia, were the commodities which she brought, ver. 2, 10.
 Howsoever, this is here said for her commendation, that being a woman, and a queen, and living at great ease, and in such remote parts, she was willing to take so long and chargeable a journey to improve herself in knowledge, and that of Divine things, as is here implied. Concerning the name of the Lord, i. e. concerning the great work which he had done for the name, i. e. the honour, and service, and worship, of the Lord, as it is expressed chap. viii. 17, and elsewhere. Or, concerning God; the name of God being oft put for God, as hath been noted before; concerning his deep knowledge in the things of God. For it is very probable that she had, as also had divers other heathens, some knowledge of the true God, and an earnest desire to know more of the being, and nature, and worship of God, wherein the heathens were generally at a great loss, and which many of them desired and endeavoured to understand.
 Or, concerning the great things which God had done for him, especially in giving him such incomparable wisdom, and that in an extraordinary manner. With hard questions; concerning natural, and civil, and especially concerning Divine things, about which there are, and ever where, the hardest questions.

2 And she came to Jerusalem with a very great

The sitting of his servants, i. e. the order and manner in which his courtiers or other subjects (who all were his servants in a general sense) sat down at meals, at several tables in his court. The attendance of his ministers, to wit, upon the king, both at his table, and elsewhere in his court;
 and when he went abroad to the temple or other places, Their apparel; both the costliness of it, and especially the conveniency of it to their several places and offices. His ascent by which he went up unto the house of the Lord from his own palace. See 2 Kings xvi. 18. But the ancients, and some others, translate the words thus, and the burnt-offerings which he offered up in the house of the Lord; under which, as the chief, all other sacrifices are understood: when she saw the manner of his offering sacrifices to the Lord, which doubtless she would not neglect to see; and in the ordering of which she might discern many characters of excellent wisdom, especially when she had so excellent an interpreter as Solomon was to inform her of the reasons of all the circumstances of that service. There was no more spirit in her; she was astonished, and rapt up in a kind of ecstasy, and could scarce determine whether she did really see these things, or whether it was not only a pleasant dream.

6 And she said to the king, It was a true †report that I heard in mine own land of thy ‖acts and of thy wisdom.

7 Howbeit I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, the half was not told me: †thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard.

I believed not the words which the reporters used concerning thee; or, the things reported; they seemed incredible, and above the perfection of human nature. Prosperity; or, happiness; or, virtue; Heb. goodness.

8 ^dHappy are thy men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom.

9 ^eBlessed be the LORD thy God, which delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel: because the LORD loved Israel for ever, therefore made he thee king, †to do judgment and justice.

Blessed be the Lord thy God; he deserves all blessing and praise, for delighting to honour and advance so worthy a person. To set thee on the throne of Israel; for it was God's special act to make him king rather than his elder brother. To do judgment and justice, i. e. to execute just judgment among them, to govern them with right and equity. She tacitly admonisheth Solomon, that he was not made king that he might live in ease, and pleasure, and splendour, but for the good of his people.

10 And she ^egave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices very great store, and precious stones: there came no more such abundance of spices as these which the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon.

11 ^hAnd the navy also of Hiram, that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of ‖almug trees, and precious stones.

12 ⁱAnd the king made of the almug trees ‖†pillars for the house of the LORD, and for the king's house, harps also and psalteries for singers: there came no such †almug trees, nor were seen unto this day.

Almug trees, called also (by an inversion of the letters, which is usual among the Hebrews) alqum trees, 2 Chron. ii. 8; ix. 10; whereof there were some in Lebanon, 2 Chron. ii. 8, but the best sort came from Ophir, as is here said. Pillars, or supporters, either for the ascent or stairs, by which they went from the king's house to the temple; see 1 Chron. xxvi. 16; 2 Chron. ix. 11; or for divers parts both of the Lord's and of the king's house.

13 And king Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that which Solomon gave her †of his royal bounty. So she turned and went to her own country, she and her servants.

14 ¶ Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred threescore and six talents of gold,

Which amounts to about two millions of our money. And this gold did not come from Ophir in India, or Tarsish; but from Arabia and Ethiopia, and other parts, which then were well replenished with gold, though since exhausted by the insatiable avarice of succeeding ages.

15 Beside that he had of the merchantmen, and of the traffick of the spice merchants, and ¹of all the kings of Arabia, and of the ‖governors of the country.

Of the merchantmen, Heb. of the searchers, or spies, i. e. either merchants, who use to inquire and search out commodities, and all advantages of trade; or rather, the publicans or gatherers of the king's revenues, who used to search narrowly into all wares and dealings, that the king might not be defrauded of his rights. Of the spice merchants, or rather, of the merchants in general, as that word is oft used in Ezek. xxvii., and elsewhere. So this and the former particular contain both the branches of the king's revenue, what he had from the land and fruits thereof, and what he had from the merchants and traders in other commodities. Of all the kings of Arabia, to wit, of those parts of Arabia which were next to Canaan, which were either conquered by David, or submitted to pay tribute to Solomon. But we must not think all these to be kings of large dominions, but many of them only governors of cities, and the territories belonging to them, such as were formerly in Canaan, and were anciently called kings. Of the country, or, of the land, or, of that land, for there is an article in the Hebrew; i. e. either of the land of Canaan; or rather, of the land of Arabia; whereof some parts were so far conquered, that he had governors of his own over them, who were each of them to take care of the king's revenue in his jurisdiction; and part only so far that they still had kings of their own, but such as were tributaries to him.

16 ¶ And king Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold: six hundred shekels of gold went to one target.

For pomp and magnificence, and (as may be thought from the use of the brazen shields, chap. xiv. 27, 28) to be carried before him by his guard when he went abroad.

17 And he made ^mthree hundred shields of beaten gold; three pound of gold went to one shield: and the king put them in the ⁿhouse of the forest of Lebanon.

Three pound, or, three hundred shekels, as it is expressed 2 Chron. ix. 16.

18 ¶ Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with the best gold.

Overlaid it; not wholly, but in part, here and there, which made it more beautiful to the eye. Probably the main substance of it was ivory, but some cavities were left in it which were filled with gold.

19 The throne had six steps, and the top of the throne was round †behind: and there were †stays on either side on the place of the seat, and two lions stood beside the stays.

Round behind; made like the half of a circle. Two lions: these and the following lions seem added, to express either the tribe from which Solomon sprung, compared to a lion, Gen. xlix. 9; or rather, that majesty and power wherewith a prince is adorned and armed, which his subjects cannot resist; or the duty of a prince in the execution of judgment, which ought to be done with great courage and magnanimity.

20 And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps: there was not †the like made in any kingdom.

21 ¶ And all king Solomon's drinking vessels were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold; || none were of silver: it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

Comparatively; such hyperbolic expressions being frequent, both in Scripture and other authors.

22 For the king had at sea a navy of Tharshish with the navy of Hiram: once in three years came the navy of Tharshish, bringing gold, and silver, || ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

A navy of Tharshish; either, first, the ships of the sea, which may seem to be called Tarshish, as Psal. xlviii. 7; Isa. lx. 9, from an eminent part of the sea near Judea, so called. Or rather, the ships that went to Tarshish; for Tarshish was the name of a certain place upon the sea, famous for its traffic with merchants, as it is manifest from Isa. xxiii. 6, 10; lxvi. 19; Jer. x. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 12; and it was a place very remote from Judea, as appears from the three years usually spent in that voyage. But whether it was Spain, where in those times there was abundance of gold and silver, as Strabo and others affirm, or some place in the Indies, it is needless to determine.

23 So king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom.

24 ¶ And all the earth †sought to Solomon, to hear his wisdom, which God had put in his heart.

All the earth, i. e. all the kings of the earth, (as it is expressed, 2 Chron. ix. 23,) to wit, of those parts of the earth; which synecdoche is very frequent.

25 And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and garments, and armour, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year.

26 ¶ And Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he bestowed in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jerusalem.

Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen; like a wise prince, in deep peace providing for war. A thousand and four hundred chariots: see the notes on 1 Kings iv. 26.

27 And the king †made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones, and cedars made he to be as the sycamore trees that are in the vale, for abundance.

Sycamore trees were vile and common. See Isa. ix. 10.

28 ¶ And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

Horses and linen yarn; the two chief commodities of Egypt. See Prov. vii. 16; Cant. i. 9; Isa. iii. 23; Ezek. xxvii. 7. The king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price; Solomon received them from Pharaoh at a certain price agreed between them, and gave this privilege to his merchants, for a tribute to be paid to him out of it.

29 And a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, and an horse for an hundred and fifty: and so for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did they bring them out †by their means.

A chariot: this is not to be understood of the chariots and horses themselves, (for then all horses had been set at an equal price, which is most absurd,) but by a metonymy, for the lading of chariots and horses, which consisting of fine linen and silk, &c., were of great value; and the king's custom, together with the charges of the journey, amounted to these sums. The Hittites; a people dwelling principally in the northern and eastern parts of Canaan, Josh. i. 4, whom the Israelites, contrary to their duty, spared, and suffered to live among them, Judg. iii. 5, who afterwards, it seems, grew numerous and potent, and, it may be, they sent out colonies (after the manner of the ancient times) into some parts of Syria and Arabia; and possibly these kings of the Hittites may be some of those kings of Arabia, 1 Kings x. 15.

CHAP. XI.

Solomon's wives and concubines, which in his old age seduce him to idolatry, 1—8. God threateneth him, 9—13. His adversaries are, Hadad, who fleeth into Egypt, and is entertained there, 14—22; Rezon, who reigned in Damascus, 23—25; Jeroboam, to whom Ahijah foretelleth that he shall be king: Solomon seeketh his life, 26—40. His acts, reign, and death. Rehoboam succeedeth him, 41—43.

BUT king Solomon loved many strange women, || together with the daughter of Pharaoh, women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites;

He loved them inordinately and lustfully, and he sinned against God's known law, both in their number, Deut. xvii. 17, and in their quality.

2 Of the nations concerning which the LORD said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall not go in to them, neither shall they come in unto you: for surely they will turn away your heart after their gods: Solomon clave unto these in love.

Ye shall not go in to them, i. e. marry them. See on Gen. vi. 4. They will turn away your heart after their gods: possibly Solomon might think himself too wise to be drawn to idolatry by his wives, and therefore to be unconcerned in the reason of the law; and consequently free in some measure from the obligation of the law; and so, like our first parents, trusting his own fancy more than God's word, he fell dreadfully.

3 And he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines: and his wives turned away his heart.

Seven hundred wives, and three hundred concubines; partly for his lust, which being indulged, becomes infinite and unsatiable; and partly from his pride, accounting this a point of honour and magnificence.

4 For it came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods: and his heart was not perfect with the LORD his God, as was the heart of David his father.

When Solomon was old; as having now reigned thirty years, when it might have been expected that age should have cooled his lust, and experience have made him wiser and better, and when probably he was secure as to any such miscarriages; then God permitted him to fall so shamefully, that he might be to all succeeding generations an example of God's severity, and of the folly, and weakness, and wickedness of the wisest and best men, when left to themselves. Turned away his heart after other gods, not that they changed his mind or opinion about the true God and idols, which is not credible; but that they cooled his zeal against them, obtained from him a public indulgence for their worship, and money for the making of idols, and the support of the charges of their priests and sacrifices, and possibly persuaded him sometimes in complaisance to join with them in the outward act of idol worship, or, at least, in their feasts upon their sacrifices, which was a participation of their idolatry. In the hill that is before Jerusalem, i. e. in the Mount of Olives, which was high unto Jerusalem, 2 Sam. xv. 30, and from this act was called the mount of corruption, 2 Kings xxiii. 13; idolatry being often called and esteemed a corruption.

for Jerusalem's sake ^rwhich I have chosen. How but one tribe, when he had both Judah and Benjamin, 2 Chron. xi. 12? Ans. Either Benjamin is swallowed up in Judah, because it was comparatively very small, and their habitation much intermixed with that of Judah; or one, to wit, of that kingdom which he here threatens to rend away from him, i. e. of the kingdom of Israel, and that was Benjamin; one beside Judah, which was his own tribe: or but one, because Benjamin was not entirely his, but part of it adhered to Jeroboam, as Beth-el, 1 Kings xii. 29, and Ephraim, 2 Chron. xiii. 19, both which were towns of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 22. Or if God promised to give one, and gave him two, I suppose that was no great injury to him. For Jerusalem's sake; not, surely, for its merits; but because he had chosen it, as it follows, to be the seat of his temple and worship; it being God's usual method to give to him that hath, and to continue and multiply favours to them whom he hath begun to favour.

14 ¶ And the LORD ^sstirred up an adversary unto Solomon, Hadad the Edomite: he was of the king's seed in Edom.

15 ^tFor it came to pass, when David was in Edom, and Joab the captain of the host was gone up to bury the slain, ^uafter he had smitten every male in Edom;

t 2 Sam. 8. 14. 1 Chron. 18. 12, 13.
u Num. 24. 19. Deut. 20. 13.

When David was in Edom, to wit, by his army, to war against it. See 1 Chron. xviii. 12, 13. To bury the slain, to wit, the Israelites which were slain in the battle, 2 Sam. viii. 13, 14, whom he honourably interred in some certain place, to which he is said to go up for that end. And this may be mentioned as that which gave Hadad the opportunity of making his escape, whilst Joab and his men were employed in that solemnity. After he had smitten every male in Edom; or, and he smote, &c., as it is in the Hebrew; which is here noted as the cause of Hadad's flight, he smote, &c. He understood what Joab had done in part, and intended further to do, even to kill all the males, and therefore fled for his life.

16 (For six months did Joab remain there with all Israel, until he had cut off every male in Edom:)

17 That Hadad fled, he and certain Edomites of his father's servants with him, to go into Egypt; Hadad being yet a little child.

18 And they arose out of Midian, and came to Paran: and they took men with them out of Paran, and they came to Egypt, unto Pharaoh king of Egypt; which gave him an house, and appointed him victuals, and gave him land.

They arose out of Midian; he fled at first with an intent to go into Egypt, as is said, ver. 17, but took Midian, a neighbouring country, in his way, and staid there a while, possibly till he had by some of his servants tried Pharaoh's mind, and prepared the way for his reception. Paran; another country in the road from Edom to Egypt, where he hired men to attend him, that making his entrance there something like a prince, he might find more favour and respect from that king and people. Appointed him victuals, and gave him land, to support himself and his train out of the profits of it.

19 And Hadad found great favour in the sight of Pharaoh, so that he gave him to wife the sister of his own wife, the sister of Tahpenes the queen.

God so disposing his heart, that Hadad might be a scourge to Solomon for his impieties, which God foresaw long before they were done.

20 And the sister of Tahpenes bare him Genubath his son, whom Tahpenes weaned in Pharaoh's house: and Genubath was in Pharaoh's household among the sons of Pharaoh.

+ Heb. Send me away.

21 ^xAnd when Hadad heard in Egypt that David slept with his fathers, and that Joab the captain of the host was dead, Hadad said to Pharaoh, †Let me depart, that I may go to mine own country.

Joab the captain of the host, whom he feared as much as David himself. That I may go to mine own country; whither accordingly he came, and was there even from the beginning of Solomon's reign; where he either lived as a private person, yet secretly working for the recovery of his crown when an opportunity was offered; or rather, by the near relation which was between his wife and Solomon's; and by Pharaoh's intercession he obtained his kingdom, with condition of subjection and tribute to be paid by him to Solomon; which condition he kept till Solomon fell from God, and then it seems he began to be troublesome to him, and dangerous to his house and kingdom.

22 Then Pharaoh said unto him, But what hast thou lacked with me, that, behold, thou seekest to go to thine own country? And he answered, † Nothing: howbeit let me go in any wise.

† Heb. Not.

23 ¶ And God stirred him up another adversary, Rezon the son of Eliadah, which fled from his lord ʒ Hadadezer king of Zobah:

ʒ 2 Sam. 8. 3.

When David had defeated him: see 2 Sam. x. 10, &c. Zobah; a part of Syria between Damascus and Euphrates; of which see 1 Sam. xiv. 47; 2 Chron. viii. 3; Psal. lx. title.

24 And he gathered men unto him, and became captain over a band, * when David slew them of Zobah: and they went to Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.

* 2 Sam. 8. 3. & 10. 8, 18.

Over a band, to wit, of soldiers, who fled and dispersed themselves upon that defeat, 2 Sam. x., and others who readily joined themselves with them, and lived by robbery, as many Arabians did. They went to Damascus, when they were increased in number and strength, and took it, whilst Solomon was wallowing in luxury, and grown effeminate.

25 And he was an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon, beside the mischief that Hadad did: and he abhorred Israel, and reigned over Syria.

He was a secret enemy, watching all occasions to do them mischief cunningly and privately all that time; and when Solomon had forsaken God, and was forsaken by God, he showed himself more openly and maliciously. Beside the mischief that Hadad did; so the sense is, this infelicity was added to the former concerning Hadad, mentioned above, ver. 14, &c. Whilst Hadad molested him in the south, Rezon threatened him in the north. But some understand this of Hadadezer, who is here called Hadad, by way of abbreviation, (which is not unusual in proper Hebrew names, as is well known,) and that for, or because of, (for the Hebrew particle eth is sometimes put for el, which oft signifies for, or because of, as Hebricians know,) the evil which befell Hadad, or Hadadezer, i. e. he bore a grudge against the Israelites from and ever since the slaughter that Joab made in Hadadezer's army, whereof he was a member, although he also took that occasion of making a defection from his master. Reigned over Syria; over all that part of Syria, enlarging his empire more and more, and thereby laying a foundation for much misery to Solomon's house and kingdom.

A mighty man of valour, or, a man of great strength of body, or courage of mind, or both. Industrious; ingenious, and diligent, and active, and every way fit for business and for command. Of the house of Joseph; either of Ephraim and Manasseh, who were jointly comprehended under this name, Josh. xvii. 17; or of Ephraim only, who elsewhere comes under that name, as 1 Chron. v. 1; Psal. lxxviii. 67; Ezek. xxxvii. 16. And it seems most probable that each tribe had a several ruler.

29 And it came to pass at that time when Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, that the prophet ʒ Ahijah the Shilonite found him in the way; and he had clad himself with a new garment; and they two were alone in the field:

cir. 980.

d ch. 14. 2.

When Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem; upon some occasion, possibly to execute his charge. They two were alone in the field; having gone aside thither for some private conference; for otherwise it is most likely that he had servants attending upon him, who, though they heard not the words, yet might see the action, and the rending of Jeroboam's coat; and thus it came to Solomon's ears, who being so acute and wise, could easily understand the thing by what he heard of the action, especially when a prophet did it.

30 And Ahijah caught the new garment that was on him, and *rent it in twelve pieces:

f ver. 11, 13.

Take thee ten pieces; whence the kingdom of Israel is oft called the kingdom of the ten tribes; by which expression it may seem that David's posterity should have one tribe reserved out of the kingdom of Israel besides that of Judah, which because of its greatness and eminency, is commonly distinguished from Israel, and that not only after the division of the two kingdoms, but even before it, as 1 Sam. xi. 8; 2 Sam. v. 5.

g ver. 5, 6, 7.

They have forsaken me, i. e. the king, and his concubines, and people, who easily followed his example, but were not at all excused by it.

34 Howbeit I will not take the whole kingdom out of his hand: but I will make him prince all the days of his life for David my servant's sake, whom I chose, because he kept my commandments and my statutes:

*The whole kingdom, to wit, of Israel, that which I have designed for thee. Or rather, I will not take any thing, or part of the kingdom. For the Hebrew phrase lo col, which* properly signifies not all, or not the whole, doth usually signify not any thing, as Deut. viii. 9, thou shalt not want every thing, i. e. not anything. So also Gen. iv. 15; xxiii. 6; xxxix. 23; Psal. xlix. 17; cxliii. 2, &c. The whole kingdom out of his hand; he shall possess it whilst he lives, as it follows; and therefore thou shalt not yet attempt to invade it. Because he kept my commandments and my statutes; whereby he showeth that he doth not judge of men by some particular acts, but by their general purpose and course of life. h ch. 12. 16, 17.

35 But ^bI will take the kingdom out of his son's hand, and will give it unto thee, even ten tribes.

36 And unto his son will I give one tribe, that ^dDavid my servant may have a [†]flight alway before me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen me to put my name there.

A light, i. e. a son and successor, to preserve his name and memory, and to give light to the people in his stead. Kings are oft called lights, partly from their great splendour, and partly for the counsel and comfort which their people have or should have from them. Compare 2 Sam. xxi. 17; 1 Kings xv. 4; Psal. cxxxii. 17. Alway before me; in my presence, which is in Jerusalem, and under my favour and protection.

37 And I will take thee, and thou shalt reign according to all that thy soul desireth, and shalt be king over Israel.

I will take thee, and place thee in the throne, as it follows. According to all that thy soul desireth; he secretly taxeth him for his ambitious and aspiring mind.

38 And it shall be, if thou wilt hearken unto all that I command thee, and wilt walk in my ways, and do that is right in my sight, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as David my servant did; that ^aI will be with thee, and ^bbuild thee a sure house, as I built for David, and will give Israel unto thee.

Build thee a sure house, i. e. firmly settle thee and thy posterity in the throne, as this or the like phrase is used, 2 Sam. vii. 16, 27; but he doth not say he would do this for ever, as is there said of David's house, ver. 16.

39 And I will for this afflict the seed of David, but not for ever.

For this; for this cause, which I mentioned ver. 33. But not for ever; there shall a time come when the seed of David shall not be thus molested by the kingdom of Israel, but that kingdom shall be destroyed, and the kings of the house of David shall be uppermost, as it was in the days of Asa, Hezekiah, and Josiah. And at last the Messiah shall come, who shall unite together the broken sticks of Judah and Joseph, and rule over all the Jews and Gentiles too.

cir. 980.

40 Solomon sought therefore to kill Jeroboam. And Jeroboam arose, and fled into Egypt, unto Shishak king of Egypt, and was in Egypt until the death of Solomon.

This might come to the ears of Solomon, either, 1. By Jeroboam himself, who might speak of this, either out of vain-glory and ostentation, or with design to prepare the people for his purpose. Or, 2. By the servants. See above on ver. 29. Shishak king of Egypt; who was either, 1. Solomon's brother-in-law, who yet might be jealous of him, or alienated from him, because he had taken so many other wives to his sister, as is here noted, ver. 1; or might cast a greedy eye upon the great riches and glorious things which Solomon had amassed together, and upon which, presently after Solomon's death, he laid violent hands, 2 Chron. xii. 9. All this was known to Jeroboam, who therefore durst put himself into Shishak's protection; especially, considering how little such relations commonly signify in the affairs of princes; and withal, being made confident by God's promise of the kingdom. Or, 2. One of another line or house, to whom that crown might descend for want of issue.

41 ¶ And ^mthe rest of the ⁿacts of Solomon, and all that he did, and his wisdom, are they not written in the book of the acts of Solomon?

In the public records, where the lives and actions of kings were registered from time to time. So this was only a political, but not a sacred book.

42 ⁿAnd the [†]time that Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel was forty years.

43 ^oAnd Solomon slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father: and ^pRehoboam his son reigned in his stead.

Slept with his fathers: this expression is promiscuously used concerning good and bad, and signifies only that they died as their fathers did. But hence interpreters question, whether Solomon was saved, or damned? That he was damned, some believe upon this only argument, that he died without repentance; which they gather, 1. Because his repentance is not mentioned in his history. 2. Because if he had repented, he would have abolished the monuments of idolatry which he had erected; which that he did not they gather from 2 Kings xxiii. 13, of which (God assisting) I shall speak upon that place. But to the former many things may be said: 1. We read nothing of the repentance of Adam, Noah, after his drunkenness, Lot, Samson, Asa, &c.; shall we therefore conclude they were all damned? The silence of the Scripture is a very weak argument in matters of history. 2. If he did repent, yet the silence of the Scripture about it in this history was not without wise reasons; as, among others, that his eternal condition being thus far left doubtful, his example might have the greater influence for the terror and caution of future offenders. 3. His repentance is sufficiently implied in this, (to omit divers other passages,) that after Solomon's death the way of Solomon is mentioned with honour, and joined with the way of David, 2 Chron. xi. 17. But it seems to be put out of dispute by the Book of Ecclesiastes, which (by the general consent both of Jewish and Christian interpreters) was written by Solomon, and that after his fall, as is evident, not only from the unanimous testimony of the Hebrew writers, who thence conclude that he did repent, and was saved; but also from the whole strain of that book, which was written long after he had finished all his works, and after he had liberally drunk of all sorts of sensual pleasures, and sadly experienced the bitter effects of his love of women, Eccles. vii. 27, &c.; which makes it more than probable, that as David wrote Psalm li., so Solomon wrote this book, as a public testimony and profession of his repentance. And this argument is so cogent, that those interpreters who are of the other opinion confess it, if Solomon did write this book after his fall, which they pretend he wrote before it; but they offer not any argument to prove it. And therefore we have reason to conclude that Solomon did repent, and was saved.

CHAP. XII.

The Israelites seek to Rehoboam for relaxation, 1—5. He refusing the old men's counsel, by the advice of the young men answereth them roughly, 6—15; for which ten tribes revolt; kill Adoram; and make Rehoboam to flee, 16—20. He raising an army is forbidden by Shemariah, 21—24. Jeroboam, king of Israel, strengtheneth himself by cities, and by the idolatry of the two calves, 25—33.

AND ^aRehoboam went to Shechem: for all Israel were come to Shechem to make him king.

Rehoboam did not call them thither, but went thither, because the Israelites prevented him, and had generally pitched upon that place rather than upon Jerusalem; partly, because it was most convenient for all, as being in the centre of the whole kingdom; partly, because that being in the potent tribe of Ephraim, they supposed there they might use that freedom of speech which they resolved to use to get their grievances redressed; and partly, by the secret direction of Jeroboam, or his friends, who would not trust themselves in Jerusalem, and thought Shechem a fitter place to execute their design. To make him king; to confirm him in the kingdom, which they generally intended to do; he being the undoubted heir of the crown, and the only son which Solomon had from so vast a number of wives.

^b ch. 11. 26. 2 And it came to pass, when ^b Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was yet in ^c Egypt, heard of it, (for he was fled from the presence of king Solomon, and Jeroboam dwelt in Egypt;)

Heard of it; in the Hebrew it is only heard, and may relate either to Solomon's death, or to the meeting which all the tribes had appointed at Shechem.

3 That they sent and called him. And Jeroboam and all the congregation of Israel came, and spake unto Rehoboam, saying,

They sent and called him: when the people sent him word of Solomon's death, they also sent a summons for him to come to Shechem. Or as soon as he had heard the tidings of Solomon's death from others, or from common fame; presently there came a solemn message to him from the people, who desired his presence and assistance, as it seems probable, from divers motives; some, that they might translate the kingdom from Rehoboam to him; and others only for this reason, that the presence and countenance of a man of so great interest and reputation, and one that had some claim or pretence upon the kingdom, might lay the greater obligation upon Rehoboam to grant their desires of ease and relief.

^d 1 Sam. 8. 11, — 18. ^e ch. 4. 7. 4 Thy father made our ^d yoke grievous: now therefore make thou the grievous service of thy father, and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will serve thee.

Thy father made our yoke grievous by heavy taxes and impositions, not only for the temple and his magnificent buildings, but for the expenses of his numerous court, and of so many wives and concubines, whose luxury and idolatry must needs be very costly. And Solomon having so grossly forsaken God, it is no wonder if he oppressed the people, and made their yoke most grievous, as they speak. But here the people's perverseness is very observable, both in this, that they mention and aggravate only the grievances of the government, but take no notice of the vast benefits which they received from it; and in that, that they mind nothing but their outward pressures, and have no regard unto that abominable idolatry which he set up among them; being, it seemed, either leavened with it by his pernicious example, or grown careless and negligent of all the concerns of religion; by which, see how ripe they were for all those dreadful judgments of God which are now hastening upon them.

5 And he said unto them, Depart yet for three days, then come again to me. And the people departed.

Give me that time for deliberation and advice.

6 ¶ And king Rehoboam consulted with the old men, that stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, and said, How do ye advise that I may answer this people?

With the old men that stood before Solomon; with Solomon's old counsellors, whom age, and experience of men and things, and converse with such a king, had made wise.

7 And they spake unto him, saying, ^e If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day, and wilt serve them, and answer them, and speak good words to them, then they will be thy servants for ever.

If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day, by complying with their desires, and condescending to them for a season, till the troubled humours be quieted, and the opportunity they now have, and that some of them seek, for sedition be gone, and thou be better established in thy throne. They use this expression, as foreseeing that some would dissuade him from this course, as servile or slavish, and below the majesty of a prince. And answer them, for that is, answer them. Thy service, say they, is not hard; it is only a few good words, which it is as easy to give as bad ones.

8 But he forsook the counsel of the old men, which they had given him, and consulted with the young men that were grown up with him, and which stood before him:

He forsook the counsel of the old men; judging it unworthy of his majesty and authority, and likely to encourage and increase the people in their insolent demands. The young men; so called comparatively to the old men; otherwise they were near forty years old, as the following words imply. That were grown up with him; which is added as the reason of his inclination to their counsels, because his daily converse with them, and the likeness of their age and humour to his, had engaged his affections to them, and that bribed his judgment, as it commonly doth.

9 And he said unto them, What counsel give ye that we may answer this people, who have spoken to me, saying, Make the yoke which thy father did put upon us lighter?

10 And the young men that were grown up with him spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou speak unto this people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it lighter unto us; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

Or rather, is thicker, and therefore stronger, and more able to crush you, if you proceed in these mutinous demands, than his loins, in which is the principal seat of strength. My father was young and weak, and had many enemies, when he first took the kingdom; but I am the undoubted heir; and I find the kingdom by his wise care far better settled and fortified against all enemies, foreign or domestic, than he did.

11 And now whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke: my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

I will add to your yoke, i. e. make it heavier and stronger, both to punish your petulance, and to curb and restrain you from seditious attempts. With scorpions, i. e. with such whips as will sting you like scorpions: if you proceed in these courses, I will most severely punish you for it.

12 ¶ So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam the third day, as the king had appointed, saying, Come to me again the third day.

13 And the king answered the people [†] roughly, and forsook the old men's counsel that they gave him; ^{† Heb. hardly.}

14 And spake to them after the counsel of the young men, saying, My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke: my father also chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people; for the cause was from the LORD, that he might perform his saying, which the LORD spake by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat. ^f ver. 24. ^g Judg. 14. 4. ^h 2 Chron. 10. 15. & 22. 7. & 25. 20. ⁱ ch. 11. 11, 31.

The cause was from the Lord; who gave up Rehoboam to so foolish and fatal a mistake, and alienated the people's affections from him, and ordered all circumstances by his wise providence to that end.

16 ¶ So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not unto them, the people answered the king, saying, ^h What portion ^h 2 Sam. 20. 1.

have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: to your tents, O Israel: now see to thine own house, David. So Israel departed unto their tents.

What portion have we in David, i. e. in David's family and son? we can expect no benefit or relief from him, and therefore we renounce all commerce with him, and subjection to him. See 2 Sam. xx. 1. They named David rather than Rehoboam, to signify, that they did renounce, not Rehoboam only, but all David's family. The son of Jesse; so they call David in contempt: q. d. Rehoboam hath no reason to carry himself with such pride and contempt toward his people, for if we trace his original, it was as mean and obscure as many of ours. And since he abuseth his power, let us reduce him to his former obscurity. To your tents, O Israel, i. e. let us all forsake him, and go to our own homes, there to consider, and then to meet and conclude how to provide otherwise for ourselves. Now see to thine own house, David, i. e. govern thy own family; for thou shalt no longer rule over us. Thus they brake out into actual rebellion against him, whom God had made their lawful sovereign; wherein, though they fulfilled God's counsel, yet they violated his authority and command. And they do again make an opprobrious mention of David, whom they should not have named without honour.

17 But as for the children of Israel which dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

Which dwell in the cities of Judah; by which phrase he principally understands the tribe of Judah; but withal, those parts and parcels of the tribes of Levi, and Simeon, and Benjamin, whose dwellings were within the confines of Judah, or intermixed with them.

18 Then king Rehoboam ^ksent Adoram, who was over the tribute; and all Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. Therefore king Rehoboam †made speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.

He sent Adoram, either, 1. To pacify the people, and promise them relief, now when it was too late. But then he would not have sent a person so ungrateful to the people, as that sort of men use to be. Or rather, 2. To pursue the counsel which he had resolved upon, and to execute his office, and exact their tribute with rigour and violence, if need were. To flee to Jerusalem, from Shechem, where it seems he yet staid, and his guards and friends with him; that being there in the midst of his kingdom, and among the seditious tribes, he might overawe them by his presence, and repress any tumults in their first rise.

19 So ^lIsrael ††rebelled against the house of David unto this day.

Their revolt is called rebellion, and therefore was sinful, because it was contrary to God's authority, and command of subjection to David, and his seed for ever; from which the people were not freed by God's promise and grant made to Jeroboam, which was but a secret transaction, not yet sufficiently revealed to them, and was not a grant of present and actual possession; but only a promise that God would give it to him in his own time and way, which might have been done, though neither Jeroboam nor the people had used these indirect and evil courses to bring it about, as it befell David upon the same occasion. Besides, the people did not this in compliance with God's counsel, but to gratify their own passions, and get themselves a little ease.

20 And it came to pass, when all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again, that they sent and called him unto the congregation, and made him king over all Israel: there was none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah ^monly.

That Jeroboam was come again, to wit, from Egypt, which was known before to the chief of the tribes, and to them who met at Shechem, and now was more universally known by all the people. They sent to his tent or habitation, to which he had retired himself, as others also generally did: see above, ver. 16. Called him unto the congregation; which was summoned by the elders of the several tribes, to take advice how to settle their affairs, which they easily agreed to do, by conferring the crown upon Jeroboam, according to God's promise made to him. There was none, i. e. no entire tribe. See on chap. xi. 13, 31, 32.

21 ¶ And when ⁿRehoboam was come ^{n 2 Chr. 11. 1.} to Jerusalem, he assembled all the house of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against the house of Israel, to bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam the son of Solomon.

With the tribe of Benjamin, i. e. that part of it which was next to Judah, and joined with them. See on chap. xi. 13. Against the house of Israel, i. e. the families or tribes (for these words are promiscuously used one for the other) of Israel.

22 But ^othe word of God came unto ^{o 2 Chr. 11. 2.} Shemaiah the man of God, saying,

The man of God, i. e. the prophet, so called, partly to distinguish him from others of that name; see Neh. vi. 10; Jer. xxix. 31; and partly to add the more weight to his words.

23 Speak unto Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and unto all the house of Judah and Benjamin, and to the remnant of the people, saying,

24 Thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel: return every man to his house; ^pfor this thing is from me. ^{p ver. 15.} They hearkened therefore to the word of the LORD, and returned to depart, according to the word of the LORD.

This thing is from me; this event is from my counsel and providence, to punish Solomon's apostacy, though they procured it by sinful means; and therefore, if you proceed, you must fight with me as well as them. They hearkened therefore to the word of the Lord; either from conscience of their duty, or because they durst not oppose so potent an adversary.

25 ¶ Then Jeroboam ^qbuilt Shechem ^{q See Judg. 9. 45.} in mount Ephraim, and dwelt therein; and went out from thence, and built ^rPenuel. ^{r Judg. 8. 17.}

Jeroboam built Shechem, i. e. he repaired, and enlarged, and fortified it; for it had been ruined long since, Judg. ix. 45. He might choose it as a place both auspicious, because here the foundation of his monarchy was laid; and commodious, as being near the frontiers of his kingdom. Penuel; a place beyond Jordan; of which see Gen. xxxii. 30; Judg. viii. 17; to secure that part of his dominions.

26 And Jeroboam said in his heart, Now shall the kingdom return to the house of David:

Said in his heart, i. e. reasoned within himself. The phrase discovers the fountain of his error, that he did not consult with God, who had given him the kingdom; as in all reason, and justice, and gratitude he should have done; nor believed God's promise, chap. xi. 38; but his own imaginations and carnal policies.

27 If this people ^sgo up to do sacrifice ^{s Deut. 12. 5, 6.} in the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, then shall the heart of this people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah, and they shall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah.

This in itself might seem a prudent conjecture; for this would give Rehoboam, and the priests and Levites, the sure and faithful friends of David's house, many opportunities of alienating their minds from him, and of reducing them to their former allegiance. But considering God's providence, by which the hearts of all men, and the affairs of all kings and kingdoms, are governed, and of which he had lately seen so eminent an instance, it was a foolish as well as wicked course.

28 Whereupon the king took counsel, and ^{t 2 Kin. 10. 29. & 17. 16.} made two calves of gold, and said unto them, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: "behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

Made two calves of gold, in imitation of Aaron's golden calf, and of the Egyptians, from whom he was lately come. And this he the rather presumed to do, because he knew the people of Israel were generally very prone to superstition and idolatry, as their whole history showeth; and that Solomon's example and countenance given to false worship had exceedingly strengthened those inclinations; and therefore they were in a great measure prepared for such an attempt; especially when his proposition tended to their own ease, and safety, and profit, which he knew was much dearer to them, as well as to himself, than their religion.

It is too much for you; too great a trouble and charge, and neither necessary nor safe for them, as things now stood. Behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt; not as if he did himself believe, or thought to persuade the people to believe, that these calves were properly and truly that very God of Israel who brought them out of Egypt; (which was so monstrously absurd and ridiculous, who no Israelite in his right wits could believe it;) and had been so far from attaining his end, and satisfying his people, that this would have made him both hateful and contemptible to them: but his meaning was, that these images were visible representations, in and by which he designed to worship the true God of Israel; as appears, partly, from that parallel place, Exod. xxxii. 4, where see my notes; partly, because the priests and worshippers of the calves are said to worship Jehovah, and, upon that account, are distinguished from those belonging to Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 21; xxii. 6, 7; and partly, from Jeroboam's design in this work, which was to quiet the people's minds, and remove their scruples about going to Jerusalem to worship their God in that place, as they were commanded; which he doth, by signifying to them that he did not intend any alteration in the substance of their religion, nor to draw them from the worship of the true God to the worship of Ashtoreth, or Milcom, or any of those Baals which were set up by Solomon; but to worship that selfsame God whom they worshipped in Jerusalem, even the true God, and the God of their fathers, who brought them out of Egypt, but only to vary a circumstance; and that as they worshipped God at Jerusalem by and before one visible sign, even the ark, and the sacred cherubims there; so his subjects should worship God by another visible sign, even that of the calves, in other places: and as for the change of the place, he might suggest to them that God was present in all places where men with honest minds did call upon him; that before the temple was built, the best of kings, and prophets, and people did pray and sacrifice to God in divers high places, without any scruple, notwithstanding that restraint of God to one place, Deut. xii. 5, &c.; that God would dispense with them also in that matter, because going to Jerusalem was very dangerous to them at this time, and God would have mercy rather than sacrifice; and God had been pleased to dispense with his own ordinances in cases of necessity or great inconvenience, as he did with circumcision for forty years in the wilderness.

29 And he set the one in ^{x Gen. 23. 19. Hos. 4. 15. 7 Judg. 18. 29.} Beth-el, and the other put he in ⁷ Dan.

Which two places he chose for his people's conveniency; Beth-el being in the southern, and Dan in the northern parts of his kingdom.

30 And this thing became ^{■ ch. 13. 34. 2 Kin. 17. 21.} a sin: for the people went to worship before the one, even unto Dan.

A sin, i. e. a cause or occasion of great wickedness among that people; not only of idolatry, which is called sin by way of eminency; nor only of the worship of the calves, wherein they pretended to worship the true God; but also of the worship of Baal, and of the utter desertion of the true God, and of all sorts of impiety and abominable sins, as is manifest from the history of that kingdom; in which there was not one good king, and very few of the people who were not guilty of heinous crimes, as the prophets witness. The people went to worship: the king's counsel and example seduced them, though it did not excuse their sin; and they willingly walked after this his wicked commandment, Hos. v. 11. Unto Dan; which is not here mentioned exclusively, for that they went also to Beth-el is evident from ver. 32, 33, but for other reasons; either because that of Dan was first made, or best frequented, the people in those parts having been long leavened with idolatry; see Judg. xviii. 30; or to show the people's readiness to comply with the king's command, and their zeal for idols; that those who lived in or near Beth-el had not patience to stay till that calf was finished, but all of them were forward to go as far as Dan, which was in the utmost borders of the land, to worship an idol there, when it was thought too much for them to go to Jerusalem to worship God.

31 And he made an ^{a ch. 13. 32. b Num. 3. 10. ch. 13. 33. 2 Kin. 17. 32. 2 Chron. 11. 14, 15. Ezek. 44. 7, 8.} house of high places, ^b and made priests of the lowest of the people, which were not of the sons of Levi.

An house of high places, or, an house (i. e. houses, or chapels) in the high places. Besides the famous houses, or temples, which he built at Dan and Beth-el, he built also, for his people's better accommodation, lesser temples upon divers high places, which were esteemed sacred and venerable, because their pious ancestors had served God in them; and thereby Jeroboam might not seem to bring in a new religion, but only to revive the old. Made priests of the lowest of the people; which he might do, either, 1. Because the better sort refused it, as an office below their quality. Or, 2. Because such would be satisfied with mean allowances; and so he could put into his own purse a great part of the rich possessions and revenues of the Levites, which doubtless he seized upon when they forsook him, and went to Jerusalem, 2 Chron. xi. 13, 14, which also was very necessary for his present and pressing occasions; the rather, because he durst not yet lay grievous taxes upon that people, who had newly cast off Rehoboam for that very reason. Or, 3. Because mean persons would depend upon his favour, and therefore be very pliable to his humour, and firm to his interest, and zealous to promote the worship of the calves. But the words in the Hebrew properly signify from the ends of the people; which is and may be translated thus, out of all the people; promiscuously out of every tribe; which exposition seems to be confirmed by the following words, which are added to explain these, which were not of the sons of Levi; though they were not of the tribe of Levi. And that indeed was Jeroboam's sin; not that he chose mean persons, for some of the Levites were such; and his sin had not been less, if he had chosen the noblest and greatest persons, as we see in the example of Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 18, 19; but that he chose men of other tribes, contrary to God's appointment, which restrained that office to that tribe. Not of the sons of Levi; to whom that office was confined by God's express command; but he gave the priesthood promiscuously to any person of any other tribe.

32 And Jeroboam ordained a feast in the eighth month, on the fifteenth day of the month, like unto ^{c Lev. 23. 33, 34. Num. 29. 12. ch. 8. 2, 5.} the feast that is in Judah, and he [†] offered upon the altar. So did he in Beth-el, [†] sacrificing unto the calves that he had made: [†] and he placed in Beth-el the priests of the high places which he had made.

Either, 1. A feast of dedication, like that which was in Judah, at the dedication of the temple. Or rather, 2. The feast of tabernacles, as may be thought, 1. Because that began on the fifteenth day of the month, Lev. xxiii. 34. 2. Because he is not blamed for devising the feast, (which thereby seems to have been of God's appointment,) but only for devising the month, ver. 33; for keeping God's feast, not in God's time, which was the fifteenth day of the seventh month, and so onward, Lev. xxiii. 34; but on the fifteenth day of the eighth month. And this alteration he made, either, 1. To keep up the difference between his subjects and those of Judah, as by the differing manners, so by the distinct times of their worship. Or, 2. Lest he should seem directly to oppose the God of Israel, (who had in a special manner obliged all the people to go up to Jerusalem at that time, Deut. xvi. 16,) by requiring their attendance to celebrate the feast elsewhere at the same time. Or, 3. To engage as many persons as possibly he could to come to his feast; which they would more willingly do, when the feast at Jerusalem was past, and all the fruits of the earth were most perfectly gathered in. On the fifteenth day of the month; and so onward till the seven days ended. He took his pattern thence, to show that he worshipped the same God, and professed the same religion for substance, which they did; howsoever he differed in circumstances, as here he did in the time. He offered; either, 1. By his priests. Or rather, 2. By his own hands; as appears from chap. xiii. 1, 4; which he did, to give the more countenance to his new-devised solemnity. Nor is this strange; for he might plausibly think, that he who by his own authority had made others priests, might much more exercise a part of that office; at least, upon an extraordinary occasion; in which case he knew David himself had done some things, which otherwise he might not do. So did he in Beth-el, i. e. he himself did offer there in like manner, as he now had done at Dan. Unto the calves; for they were two, ver. 29. He placed in Beth-el the priests; as he had done at Dan, ver. 31.

33 So he || offered upon the altar which he had made in Beth-el the fifteenth day of the eighth month, even in the month which he had ^edevised of his own heart; and ordained a feast unto the children of Israel: and he offered upon the altar, † and † burnt incense.

Which he had devised of his own heart; which he appointed without any warrant from God, which was superstition. Compare Jer. vii. 31.

CHAP. XIII.

A prophet of Judah prophesieth against the altar at Beth-el: Jeroboam offering him violence, his hand withereth; and, at the prayer of the prophet, is restored, 1—6. He refusing the king's entertainment, departeth from Beth-el, 7—10. An old prophet seducing him, bringeth him back, 11—19. He is for it reproved of God by the old prophet; and is slain by a lion; and buried by the old prophet; who confirmeth his prophecy, 20—32. Jeroboam's obstinacy, 33, 34.

AND, behold, there ^acame a man of God out of Judah by the word of the LORD unto Beth-el: ^band Jeroboam stood by the altar || to burn incense.

A man of God; a holy prophet. By the word of the Lord; by Divine inspiration and command.

2 And he cried against the altar in the word of the LORD, and said, O altar, altar, thus saith the LORD; Behold, a child shall be born unto the house of David, ^cJosiah by name; and upon thee shall he offer the priests of the high places that burn incense upon thee, and men's bones shall be burnt upon thee.

He cried against the altar; and consequently, against all that worship, which is oft signified by the name of the altar. See Isa. xix. 19; 1 Cor. ix. 13; Heb. vii. 13; xiii. 10. O altar, altar; he directs his speech to the altar, partly because the following signs were wrought upon it, and partly to signify that Jeroboam would no more regard his words than the altar did, and yet they should take effect. A child shall be born unto the house of David, Josiah by name; which being done above three hundred years after this prophecy, plainly shows the absolute certainty of God's providence and foreknowledge, even in the most contingent things. For this was in itself uncertain, and wholly depended upon man's will, both as to the having of a child, and as to the giving it this name. Therefore God can certainly and effectually overrule man's will which way he pleaseth; or else it was possible that this prediction should have been false, which is blasphemous to imagine. Upon thee shall he offer the priests; synecdochically, the bones of the priests, 2 Kings xxiii. 15, 16, whereby the altar should be defiled.

3 And he gave ^da sign the same day, ^esaying, This is the sign which the LORD hath spoken; Behold, the altar shall be rent, and the ashes that are upon it shall be poured out.

He gave a sign the same day, i. e. he then wrought a miracle, to assure them of the truth of his prophecy.

4 And it came to pass, when king Jeroboam heard the saying of the man of God, which had cried against the altar in Beth-el, that he put forth his hand from the altar, saying, Lay hold on him. And his hand, which he put forth against him, dried up, so that he could not pull it in again to him.

He put forth his hand, to point out the man whom he would have the people lay hands on, and to stir them up to do so. From the altar; where it was employed in offering something upon it. Dried up, or withered; the muscles and sinews, the instruments of motion, were shrunk up. This God did, partly, to chastise Jeroboam for offering violence to the Lord's prophet; partly, to secure the prophet against further violence; and partly, that in this example God might show how highly he resents the injuries done to his ministers in and for the faithful discharge of their office.

5 The altar also was rent, and the ashes poured out from the altar, according to the sign which the man of God had given by the word of the LORD.

6 And the king answered and said unto the man of God, ^eIntreat now the face of the LORD thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may be restored me again. And the man of God besought † the LORD, and the king's hand was restored him again, and became as it was before.

The king answered, i. e. spoke, as that word is oft used in both Testaments. Entreat now the face of the Lord thy God, who by his zeal for thee hath manifested himself to be thy God and Friend in a singular manner; and therefore will hear thy prayers for me, though he will not regard mine, because I have forsaken him and his worship. The man of God besought the Lord, to assure Jeroboam that what he had said was not from ill-will to him, and that he heartily desired his reformation, not his ruin. The king's hand was restored again; partly, to assure him that the stroke was from God; partly, because he repented of that violence which he intended against the prophet, for which God inflicted it; and partly, that the goodness of God to him might have led him to repentance; or if he continued impenitent, leave him without all excuse.

7 And the king said unto the man of God, Come home with me, and refresh thyself, and ^fI will give thee a reward.

Horrid stupidity! He desires to requite the instrument, but takes no notice of the chief cause and author of this great and wonderful mercy, which was God.

8 And the man of God said unto the king, ^gIf thou wilt give me half thine house, I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread nor drink water in this place:

9 For so was it charged me by the word of the LORD, saying, ^h Eat no bread, nor drink water, nor turn again by the same way that thou camest.

My refusal of thy favour is not from any contempt or hatred of thy person, but in obedience to the just command of my God, who hath forbidden me all further converse or communication with thee. Eat no bread, nor drink water, to wit, in that place, or with that people; whereby God declares how detestable they were in God's eyes; not because their idolatry was so bad as that of the heathens, but because they were vile apostates from the true God, and embraced this idol-worship against the light of their own consciences, merely to comply with the king's humour and command; and because their vicinity and relation to the tribe of Judah made this more dangerous, as to their infection by it. Nor turn again by the same way that thou camest; that by thy avoiding the way that led thee to Beth-el as execrable, although thou wentest by my special command, thou mightest teach all others how much they should abhor that way, and all thoughts of going to that place, or to such people, upon any trivial and unnecessary occasion.

10 So he went another way, and returned not by the way that he came to Beth-el.

11 ¶ Now there dwelt an old prophet in Beth-el; and his sons came and told him all the works that the man of God had done that day in Beth-el: the words which he had spoken unto the king, them they told also to their father.

An old prophet; a prophet of the Lord; one to whom and by whom God did sometimes impart his mind, as is manifest from ver. 20, 21, and one that had a respect to the Lord's holy prophets, and gave credit to their predictions; all which the following relation shows: but whether he was a holy and good man may justly be doubted, seeing all those qualifications might meet in a vicious man, to and by whom he may reveal some part of his mind, as he did to Balaam, Numb. xxiii. &c., and in such his other qualities are sometimes found; and we find him in a downright and premeditated lie, and that without any great temptation to it, ver. 18. And albeit a holy prophet might possibly have continued in the kingdom of Israel, he would never have gone from his own habitation to dwell at Beth-el, the chief seat of idolatry, unless with design to preach against it; which it is evident he did not; his sons seem to have been present at, and to have joined with others in that idolatrous worship, ver. 11, and that not without their father's connivance. In Beth-el; for thither he came to dwell, probably expecting some great advantages from Jeroboam; but he came out of Samaria, 2 Kings xxiii. 18, where he either was born, and had lived before; or his usual dwelling was at Beth-el, but had lately been at Samaria, and was now returned to Beth-el. His sons came; who probably were eye and ear witnesses of what had passed.

12 And their father said unto them, What way went he? For his sons had seen what way the man of God went, which came from Judah.

13 And he said unto his sons, Saddle me the ass. So they saddled him the ass: and he rode thereon, 14 And went after the man of God, and found him sitting under an oak: and he said unto him, Art thou the man of God that camest from Judah? And he said, I am.

Sitting under an oak; being faint and weary with his journey, and possibly with the heat, which makes him choose this shady place; and especially with hunger and thirst, ver. 9. And he might easily guess that this was the old prophet, by his age and carriage, and, it may be, by his prophetic mantle, and by the character which his sons had given him.

15 Then he said unto him, Come home with me, and eat bread.

16 And he said, ⁱ I may not return with thee, nor go in with thee: neither will I eat bread nor drink water with thee in this place:

i. e. In Beth-el, where thou desirest me to do it.

17 For [†] it was said to me [‡] by the word of the LORD, Thou shalt eat no bread nor drink water there, nor turn again to go by the way that thou camest.

[†] Heb. a word was.
[‡] ch. 20. 35.

18 He said unto him, I am a prophet also as thou art; and an angel spake unto me by the word of the LORD, saying, Bring him back with thee into thine house, that he may eat bread and drink water. But he lied unto him.

Not with evil design against him, but out of curiosity to know all the truth and circumstances from his own mouth, and to express his kindness to him, and to relieve his pressing hunger; whereby possibly he thought to please God, and to compensate for his miscarriages. But his sin was great; for he did not only tell a premeditated lie, but also made God a liar, and to contradict himself, and all this without any pretence of necessity, or benefit to himself.

19 So he went back with him, and did eat bread in his house, and drank water.

20 ¶ And it came to pass, as they sat at the table, that the word of the LORD came unto the prophet that brought him back:

As they sat at the table; there the prophet meets with a severe judgment, where he was pleasing himself with this seasonable refreshment. The word of the Lord came by secret instinct into his mind, as sometimes God spake to Moses and other prophets when they were in company with others. Unto the prophet that brought him back; so he makes this prophet publicly to call himself liar, and to pronounce a terrible sentence against him, to whom he professed so much kindness. Indeed the Hebrew words are ambiguous, and by others rendered thus, to the prophet whom he had brought back; which agrees very well with the Hebrew phrase, and may seem to be the best translation, by comparing ver. 23, where the very same phrase is so rendered; and ver. 26, where this message is said to be spoken to him. But these arguments are not cogent; not that from ver. 23, because it is a common thing for the same phrase in divers verses, and sometimes in one and the same verse, to be diversely used; nor that from ver. 27, for that may be rendered concerning him. And therefore our translation is better, as is manifest from ver. 21.

21 And he cried unto the man of God that came from Judah, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Forasmuch as thou hast disobeyed the mouth of the LORD, and hast not kept the commandment which the LORD thy God commanded thee,

He cried with a loud voice, the effect of his passion, both for his own guilt and shame, and for the prophet's approaching misery, and his unhappy influence both in procuring and in denouncing of it. The mouth, i. e. the word of command coming out of his mouth; a metonymy of the cause for the effect.

22 But camest back, and hast eaten bread and drunk water in the ¹ place, of ¹ ver. 9. the which the LORD did say to thee, Eat no bread, and drink no water; thy carcase shall not come unto the sepulchre of thy fathers.

i. e. Thou shalt not die a natural, but a violent death; and that in this journey, before thou returnest to thy native habitation; and thy carcase shall not be buried in the proper sepulchre; which was esteemed a kind of curse, and a note of infamy; as the contrary was reckoned an honour and blessing. See chap. xiv. 13; Isa. xiv. 19, 20; Jer. xxii. 19; xxvi. 23.

23 ¶ And it came to pass, after he had eaten bread, and after he had drunk, that he saddled for him the ass, to wit, for the prophet whom he had brought back.

That he might sooner come to his home, and, if possible, escape the judgment threatened. But it is observable, he doth not accompany him; his guilty conscience making him to expect and fear to be involved in the same judgment with him.

m ch. 20. 36.

24 And when he was gone, ^m a lion met him by the way, and slew him: and his carcase was cast in the way, and the ass stood by it, the lion also stood by the carcase.

A lion met him; for there were many lions in Judea, and this was brought hither by God's special providence.

Why doth God punish a good man so severely for so small an offence? Answo. First, His sin was not small, for it was a gross disobedience to a positive command. Object. But he supposed, and was told by another prophet, that God had repealed his command, and so was deceived. Answo. First, He had no sufficient discharge from the former command; for he neither was assured that the old man was a prophet, nor that the message he delivered was from God; but had reason to suspect the contrary, or at least to inquire the mind of God in this doubtful point, which he grossly neglected to do, and willingly believed the message, because it suited with his own inclination and necessity. Add to this, that he being a prophet was obliged to the greater exactness in obedience to all God's precepts; and therefore this sin was much greater in him than in another, because hereby God was dishonoured, and the authority and success of his message blasted, and Jeroboam and the idolatrous Israelites hardened in their wicked courses, for the prevention whereof it was necessary that God should exercise severity towards him. Answo. Secondly, As his sin was not so small, so his punishment was not so great, as may be imagined. For as to his outward man, his bodily death (which was a debt that he owed to God and nature) in this way was not so painful and terrible as many other kinds of death; and as to his soul, God, by giving him a gracious admonition both of his sin and danger, ver. 21, 22, awakened him to true repentance, which doubtless he practised, and so was prepared for his death, and by this sudden death freed from all the miseries of an evil time and world, and speedily let into eternal glory. Answo. Thirdly, As the world and all men in it were made for God's glory, and all their lives and deaths ought to be laid out in his service; so it cannot seem strange nor harsh if God should bring his deserved death upon him in this manner, for the accomplishment of his own glorious designs, as to vindicate his own honour and justice from the imputation of partiality; to assure the truth of his predictions, and thereby provoke Jeroboam and his idolatrous followers to repentance; to justify himself in all his dreadful judgments which he intended to inflict upon Jeroboam's house, and the whole kingdom of Israel, for their cursed apostacy; and to warn all succeeding sinners not rashly to venture upon small sins, and especially to take heed of greater sins, for which they might expect far sorer punishments. His carcase was cast in the way; his life and soul being gone, his dead body falls to the ground, and lies there. The lion also stood by the carcase: see on ver. 28.

25 And, behold, men passed by, and saw the carcase cast in the way, and the lion standing by the carcase: and they came and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt.

26 And when the prophet that brought him back from the way heard thereof, he said, It is the man of God, who was disobedient unto the word of the LORD: therefore the LORD hath delivered him unto the lion, which hath † torn him, and slain him, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake unto him.

Or rather, concerning him; for so the particle lamed is oft used, as Gen. xx. 13; Psa. iii. 2; xci. 11, compared with Matt. iv. 6. See the notes on ver. 20.

27 And he spake to his sons, saying, Saddle me the ass. And they saddled him.

Being secure as to himself, because so many others had been there without any harm; and because he perceived the prophet's death was a judgment of God, and that for special reasons.

28 And he went and found his carcase cast in the way, and the ass and the lion standing by the carcase: the lion had not eaten the carcase, nor † torn the ass.

† Heb. broken.

Here was a concurrence of miracles: That the ass did not run away from the lion, according to his nature and custom, but boldly stood still, as reserving himself for the carrying of the prophet to his burial; that the lion did not devour its prey, as the manner is; nor yet go away when he had done his work which he was sent for, but stood still; partly, to preserve the carcass of the prophet from other wild beasts or fowls, which would quickly have eaten it; partly, as an evidence that the prophet's death was not casual, nor the effect of a lion's hungry and ravenous disposition, but of God's singular and just judgment; and consequently, that this prediction was Divine, and should be infallibly accomplished in its proper time; and partly, as a token of God's favour to the deceased prophet, of whose very carcase he took such special care; † thereby signifying, that although for wise and just reasons he thought fit to take away his life, yet his remains were precious to him, and his soul did live in his sight.

29 And the prophet took up the carcase of the man of God, and laid it upon the ass, and brought it back: and the old prophet came to the city, to mourn and to bury him.

30 And he laid his carcase in his own grave; and they mourned over him, saying, n Jer. 22. 18.

So that threatening, ver. 22, was fulfilled; and withal, the memory of his prophecy was revived and preserved among them, and his very carcase resting there might be a witness of their madness and desperate wickedness, in continuing their abominable idolatry after such an assurance of the dreadful effects of it. They mourned over him; the old prophet, and his sons, and others, whom common humanity taught to lament the untimely death of so worthy a person. Alas, my brother! was a usual form of expression in funeral lamentations. See Jer. xxii. 18.

31 And it came to pass, after he had buried him, that he spake to his sons, saying, When I am dead, then bury me in the sepulchre wherein the man of God is buried; ^o lay my bones beside his bones:

o 2 Kings 23. 17, 18.

That I may be secured from that judgment threatened ver. 2.

Of Samaria, i. e. of the kingdom of Samaria, as it was called, though not when this fact was done, yet before these books were written. Samaria was properly the name of one city, 1 Kings xx. 1; but from hence the whole kingdom of Israel was so called, Jer. xxxi. 5; Hos. vii. 1; viii. 5; Amos iii. 9; and the king of Israel is called the king of Samaria, 2 Kings i. 3; Hos. x. 7; and (as here) we read of the cities of Samaria, Ezra iv. 10.

After this thing, i. e. after all these things; the singular number put for the plural; after so many, and evident, and successive miracles; which is noted to aggravate his infidelity and apostacy. Made again of the lowest of the people priests; he abated not so much as a circumstance in his idolatrous worship. Whosoever would; without any respect to tribe or family, or integrity of body, or mind, or life; all which were to be regarded in the priesthood. t ch. 14. 10. the house of Jeroboam, even to cut it off, and to destroy it from off the face of the earth.

This thing became sin; either an occasion of sin, and means of hardening all his posterity in their idolatry; or, a punishment, for so the word sin is oft used. This his obstinate continuance in his idolatry after such warnings was the utter ruin of all his family.

CHAP. XIV.

Jeroboam sendeth his wife disguised, and with presents, to the prophet Ahijah at Shiloh, to inquire concerning his son, who was sick, 1—4. He, forewarned by God, denounceth his ruin because of idolatry; and the death of his child; and the destruction of Israel, 5—16. His son dieth, and is buried; and he likewise: Nadab his son succeedeth, 17—20. Rehoboam and Judah sin against the Lord, 21—24. Shishak king of Egypt spoileth Jerusalem, 25—28. He dieth, and Abijah his son succeedeth, 29—31.

956. AT that time Abijah the son of Jeroboam fell sick.

Either, first, Presently after the things described in the former chapter; which though related in the beginning of his reign, yet might be done a good while after it, and so Ahijah the prophet might be very old, as he is described to be, ver. 4. Or, secondly, Many years after it, i. e. whilst Jeroboam persisted in his former course; for this phrase is oft used indefinitely, and without respect to the time last mentioned before it, as Dan. xii. 1; Matt. iv. 1. Abijah fell sick, by the stroke of God, to punish Jeroboam's rebellion against God.

2 And Jeroboam said to his wife, Arise, I pray thee, and disguise thyself, that thou be not known to be the wife of Jeroboam; and get thee to Shiloh: behold, there is Ahijah the prophet, which told me that *I should be king over this people.

Jeroboam said to his wife; partly, because he would trust none else with this secret; partly, because she might, without suspicion, inquire concerning her own child; and partly, because she would inquire most exactly and diligently, and faithfully acquaint him with the whole truth. Disguise thyself; change thy habit and voice, and go like a private and obscure person. That thou be not known to be the wife of Jeroboam: this caution proceeded, first, From the pride of his heart, which made him loth to confess his folly in worshipping such ignorant and helpless idols, and to give glory to the God whom he had forsaken. Secondly, From jealousy and suspicion, lest the prophet knowing this, should either give her no answer, or make it worse than indeed it was. Thirdly, From policy, lest his people should by his example be drawn to forsake the senseless calves, and to return to the God of Judah, whom they had rashly forsaken.

b See 1 Sam. 9. 7, 8. c Heb. in thine hand. d Or, cakes. e Or, bottle. 3 ^b And take † with thee ten loaves, and † cracknels, and a † cruse of honey, and go to him: he shall tell thee what shall become of the child.

A cruse of honey; a present, after the manner, Judg. xiii. 17; 1 Sam. ix. 7, 8; 2 Kings v. 15; viii. 8; but mean, as became an ordinary country woman, which she personated. And go to him, to inquire the event of this sickness, as the following words imply.

4 And Jeroboam's wife did so, and arose, and went to Shiloh, and came to the house of Ahijah. But Ahijah could not see; for his eyes † were set by reason of his age.

Or, stood still, or were grown stiff; the nerves, by which the eyes and eye-lids are moved, being contracted and withered.

5 ¶ And the LORD said unto Ahijah, Behold, the wife of Jeroboam cometh to ask a thing of thee for her son; for he is sick: thus and thus shalt thou say unto her: for it shall be, when she cometh in, that she shall feign herself to be another woman.

6 And it was so, when Ahijah heard the sound of her feet, as she came in at the door, that he said, Come in, thou wife of Jeroboam; why feignest thou thyself to be another? for I am sent to thee with † heavy tidings.

By this discovery he both reproves their folly, who thought to conceal themselves or their designs from that God from whom they expected and desired the discovery of the most secret things; and withal gives her assurance of the truth and certainty of that message which he was to deliver.

7 Go, tell Jeroboam, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Forasmuch as I exalted thee from among the people, and made thee prince over my people Israel,

They were God's people when Jeroboam was first set over them.

8 And I rent the kingdom away from the house of David, and gave it thee: and yet thou hast not been as my servant David, who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes;

As my servant David; who though he fell into some sins, yet, first, he constantly persevered in the true worship of God, from which thou art revolted; secondly, he heartily repented of and turned from all his sins, whereas thou art obstinate and incorrigible.

9 But hast done evil above all that were before thee: for thou hast gone and made thee other gods, and molten images, to provoke me to anger, and hast cast me behind thy back:

Above all that were before thee; above all the former kings of my people, as Saul, and Solomon, and Rehoboam. Other gods, and molten images, or other gods, to wit, (for so and oft signifies among the Hebrews, as hath been formerly noted,) molten images, namely, the golden calves; which he calls others gods, not as if the Israelites esteemed the calves made of their own gold to be gods indeed, which it is incredible should find belief with any man in his wits, especially with the whole body of the Israelites, who knew that the ark and cherubims, though made by God's special direction, were not gods, but only pledges of God's presence, &c.; nor as if they thought them to be other gods in a strict and proper sense; for it is apparent that they still pretended to worship the God of their fathers, as the Jews at Jerusalem did, though in a differing manner: but only because God rejected their whole worship; and howsoever they called or accounted it, he reckoned it a manifest defection from him, and a betaking of themselves to other gods, or devils, as they are called, 2 Chron. xi. 15, by whose instigation they were led to such idolatrous practices, and whom alone they served and worshipped therein, whatsoever pretences they had to the contrary. To provoke me to anger, i. e. whereby thou didst provoke me; for otherwise this was not Jeroboam's design in it, but only to establish himself in the throne. Cast me behind thy back; despised, and disregarded, and forsaken me, and my commands, and my worship, as we do things which we cast behind our backs.

10 Therefore, behold, ¹I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam, and ¹will cut off from Jeroboam him that pisseth against the wall, ¹and him that is shut up and left in Israel, and will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone.

See the notes on 1 Sam. xxv. 22. Him that is shut up and left; those who had escaped the fury of their enemies invading them, either because they were shut up in caves, or castles, or strong towns; or because they were left, overlooked or neglected by them, or spared as poor, impotent, helpless creatures. But now, saith he, they shall be all searched out, and brought to destruction. See more on Deut. xxxii. 26. As a man taketh away dung; which they remove as a loathsome thing out of their houses, and that thoroughly and universally.

11 ^mHim that dieth of Jeroboam in the city shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat: for the LORD hath spoken it.

So both sorts shall die unburied.

12 Arise thou therefore, get thee to thine own house: and ⁿwhen thy feet enter into the city, the child shall die.

Presently upon thy entrance into the city; when thou art gone but a little way in it, even as far as to the threshold of the king's door, ver. 17, which possibly was near the gates of the city. And by the event of this branch judge of the truth of the rest of my prophecy.

13 And all Israel shall mourn for him, and bury him: for he only of Jeroboam shall come to the grave, because in him ^othere is found some good thing toward the LORD God of Israel in the house of Jeroboam.

All Israel shall mourn for him; either, first, for the loss of so worthy and hopeful a person; or, secondly, for the sad calamities which should follow his death, which possibly his moderation, and wisdom, and virtue might have prevented, whereof his death was a certain presage and evidence. So they should mourn, not simply for him, but for their own loss in him. Shall come to the grave; shall have the honour of burial, denied to the rest, ver. 11. Some good thing toward the Lord God of Israel; some pious inclinations and intentions of taking away the calves, or of permitting or obliging his people to go up to Jerusalem to worship, if God gave him life and authority to do it, and of trusting God with his kingdom in that case. In the house of Jeroboam; which is added for his greater commendation; he was good in the midst of so many temptations and wicked examples; a good branch of a bad stock.

14 ^pMoreover the LORD shall raise him up a king over Israel, who shall cut off the house of Jeroboam that day: but what? even now.

Baasha, chap. xv. 28. Who shall cut off the house of Jeroboam that day; when he is so raised; in the very beginning of his reign, chap. xv. 29. But what? but what do I say, he shall raise, as it were a thing to be done at a great distance of time? he hath already raised him in some sort; the man is now in being, if not in power, who shall do this; this judgment shall be shortly executed.

15 For the LORD shall smite Israel, as a reed is shaken in the water, and he shall ^qroot up Israel out of this ^rgood land, which he gave to their fathers, and shall scatter them ^sbeyond the river, ^tbecause they have made their groves, provoking the LORD to anger.

The Lord shall smite Israel, because they obeyed Jeroboam's wicked command of worshipping the calves, and that willingly, Hos. v. 11. As a reed is shaken in the water; easily and variously, hither and thither, with every wind; so shall the kingdom and people of Israel be always in an unquiet and unsettled posture, tossed to and fro by foreign invasions and civil wars, by opposite kings and factions, and by the dissensions of the people. See 2 Kings xvii. 18. Beyond the river, to wit, Euphrates, oft so called by way of eminency, as Gen. xv. 18; xxxi. 21; 1 Kings iv. 21, 24. This was accomplished in part, 2 Kings xv. 29, and more fully 2 Kings xvii. 6. Because they have made their groves, for the worship of their idols, Exod. xxxiv. 13; Deut. xvi. 21. God having before condemned the making and worshipping of the calves, by which they designed or pretended to worship the true God; he now takes notice that they were not contented with the calves, but (as it is the nature of idolatry, and all sin, to proceed from evil to worse) were many of them fallen into another and a worse kind of idolatry, even their worship of the heathenish Baals, which they commonly exercised in groves. See on 1 Kings xviii. 19.

16 And he shall give Israel up because of the sins of Jeroboam, ^uwho did sin, and ^vwho made Israel to sin.

To wit, by his invention, and making of the occasion of their sin, the calves; by his example, by encouraging those, and only those, that worshipped the calves; and by his authority, requiring and compelling them to do it. This is mentioned as a monstrous aggravation of his wickedness, that he was not content with his own sin, but was the great author and chief cause of drawing others into sin, and of corrupting and undoing the whole kingdom; which therefore God would never forgive him, nor forget him, but upon all occasions mentions him with this eternal brand of infamy upon him.

17 ^wAnd Jeroboam's wife arose, and departed, and came to ^xTirzah: and ^ywhen she came to the threshold of the door, the child died;

Tirzah; an ancient and royal city, Josh. xii. 24, in a pleasant place, Cant. vi. 4, where the kings of Israel had a palace, chap. xv. 33; xvi. 6, 8, 15, 23; whither Jeroboam was removed from Shechem, either for his pleasure, or for his son's recovery, by the healthfulness of the place. To the threshold of the door, to wit, of the king's house, which probably was upon or by the wall of the city, and near the gate, which was the place of judicature. See ver. 12.

18 And they buried him; and all Israel mourned for him, ^zaccording to the word of the LORD, which he spake by the hand of his servant Ahijah the prophet.

19 And the rest of the acts of Jeroboam, how he ^awarred, and how he reigned, behold, they ^bare written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

Heb. in the book of the words or things of the days, &c. By which you are not to understand that canonical book of the Chronicles, for that was written long after this book; but a book of civil records, the annals, wherein all remarkable passages were recorded by the king's command from day to day; out of which the sacred penman, by the direction of God's Spirit, took those passages which were most considerable and useful for God's honour, and men's edification.

20 And the days which Jeroboam reigned were two and twenty years: and he ^cslept with his fathers, and Nadab his son reigned in his stead.

So he lived till Asa's second year, chap. xv. 25. He slept with his fathers; either, first, He was buried with his ancestors. But their sepulchre seems to be too mean and improper for a great king; and kings used to be buried in peculiar sepulchres. Or, secondly, He died, as his fathers did.

21 ¶ And Rehoboam the son of Solomon reigned in Judah. ^b Rehoboam was forty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city ^c which the LORD did choose out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. ^d And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess.

Rehoboam was forty and one years old; therefore he was born a year before Solomon was king, as appears from 1 Kings xi. 42. This is noted as an aggravation of Rehoboam's folly, that he was old enough to have been wiser. An Ammonitess; a people cursed by God, and shut out of the congregation of his people for ever, Deut. xxiii. 3; Neh. xiii. 1. This is observed as one cause both of God's displeasure in punishing Solomon with such a son, and of Rehoboam's apostasy after his three first years, 2 Chron. xi. 17.

22 ° And Judah did evil in the sight of the LORD, and they provoked him to jealousy with their sins which they had committed, above all that their fathers had done.

Judah did evil, after a little time, 2 Chron. xi. 17.

23 For they also built them ^a high places, and ^b images, ^c and groves, on every high hill, and ^d under every green tree.

They also built them high places; they followed the example of the Israelites, although they were better instructed, and had the temple in their kingdom, and liberty of access to it, which was denied to the Israelites; and the privilege of worshipping God in his own way, and the counsels, and sermons, and examples of the priests and Levites to teach and establish them, and the dreadful example of Israel's horrid apostasy to caution and terrify them. The building of high places was unlawful, and now especially when the temple was built, and ready to receive them; unnecessary, and therefore expressed a greater contempt of God and his express command to the contrary. Images and groves; not only after the manner of the heathens and Israelites, but against a direct and particular prohibition. Under every green tree: the people were universally corrupted; which is a prodigious sin, all things considered, and is a clear evidence of the greatness and depth of the original corruption of man's nature, which without God's grace is ready to break forth into all sorts of wickedness.

24 ^k And there were also sodomites in the land: ^l and they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

Sodomites, i. e. males, who prostituted their bodies to the filthy lusts of others; of whom see on Deut. xxiii. 17; who also did this in the worship and to the honour of their idols, as also the women did, Numb. xxv. 1, 2. And this might be one occasion of so great a spreading of idolatry among the lustful Israelites. And on the other side, God doth frequently punish idolatry with corporeal uncleanness, Rom. i. 21, 28. See 1 Kings xv. 12; xxii. 46; 2 Kings xxiii. 7.

25 ¶ And it came to pass in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, that Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem:

In the fifth year of king Rehoboam; presently after his and his people's apostasy, which was not till his fourth year; when the apostatical Israelites enjoyed peace and some kind of prosperity, at first, for many years together; of which difference two reasons may be given: first, That Judah's sins were committed against clearer light, and more powerful means and remedies of all sorts, and therefore deserved more severe and speedy judgments. Secondly, That God discovered more love to Judah in chastising them speedily, that so they might be humbled, and reformed, and so graciously preserved, as it happened; and more anger against Israel, that he spared them, and by their impunity hardened and ripened them to that total destruction which he intended to bring upon them. Shishak king of Egypt; of whom see 1 Kings xi. 40; 2 Chron. xii. 2, &c., where this history is more fully described. He is thought by many to be Solomon's brother-in-law. But how little such relations signify among princes, when their interest is concerned, all histories witness. Besides, Rehoboam was not Solomon's son by Pharaoh's daughter, and so the relation was in a manner extinct. Came up against Jerusalem; either from ambition, and a desire to enlarge his empire; or from jealousy of Rehoboam's growing greatness; of which see 2 Chron. xi.; or by Jeroboam's instigation; or from a covetous desire of possessing these great treasures which David and Solomon had left; and, above all, by God's providence, disposing his heart to this expedition for Rehoboam's punishment.

26 ^m And he took away the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house; he even took away all: and he took away all the shields of gold ⁿ which Solomon had made.

He took away the treasures; it is implied, that first he took the city; which may seem strange, considering the great strength of that city, and how much time it took Nebuchadnezzar and Titus to take it. But, first, It might cost Shishak also some time and a long siege ere he took it, though that be not here related. Secondly, It is probable that David and Solomon, in their building and altering of this city, had more respect to state and magnificence than to its defence, as having no great cause to fear the invasion of any enemies, and being too secure in reference to their posterity, because of God's promise of the kingdom to be continued to them and to their seed for ever. And it is probable and certain, that after the division between Judah and Israel, the kings of Judah did add very much to the fortifications of this city.

27 And king Rehoboam made in their stead brasen shields, and committed them unto the hands of the chief of the guard, which kept the door of the king's house.

Whereas the golden shields, as being more precious, were kept in a certain place.

28 And it was so, when the king went into the house of the LORD, that the guard bare them, and brought them back into the guard chamber.

When the king went into the house of the Lord; by which it seems the affliction had done him some good, and brought him back to the worship of God, which he had forsaken.

29 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Rehoboam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

Such a book of chronicles as that mentioned above, ver. 19.

30 And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all their days.

Not an invasive war with potent armies, which was forbidden, chap. xii. 24, and not revived till Abijam's reign, 2 Chron. xiii.; but a defensive war from those hostilities which by small parties and skirmishes they did to one another.

31 ° And Rehoboam slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David. ^o And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess. And ^p Abijam his son reigned in his stead.

His mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess: this is repeated as a thing very observable. See above, ver. 21.

958. NOW ^ain the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam the son of Nebat reigned Abijam over Judah.

Object. How can this be, when he reigned three years, ver. 2, and Asa his successor began his reign in the twentieth year of Jeroboam, ver. 9? Answ. Parts of years are commonly called and accounted years, both in the Old and New Testament, and in profane writers. So his reign began with Jeroboam's eighteenth year, and continued his whole nineteenth year, and ended within his twentieth year, in which also Asa's reign began. And thus one and the same year may well be, as it frequently is, attributed to two several persons.

^b 2 Chron. 11. 20, 21, 22. ^c 2 Chron. 13. 2. ^d Michaiah the daughter of Uriel. ^e 2 Chron. 11. 21, Absalom. 2 Three years reigned he in Jerusalem. ^b And his mother's name was ^cMaachah, the daughter of ^dAbishalom.

Three years: see the last note, on ver. 1. Of Abishalom, or, of Absalom, as he is called, 2 Chron. xi. 21. And because he is here mentioned as a known person, without any addition of his kindred or quality, some conceive that this was Absalom's daughter, called properly Tamar, 2 Sam. xiv. 27, and from her royal grandmother, 2 Sam. iii. 3, Maachah; and that she is called Michaiah (which differs not much from Maachah) the daughter of Uriel, 2 Chron. xiii. 2, because she was first married to Uriel, as Josephus affirms, Antiq. viii. 3, and afterwards to Rehoboam. Others think this was another person, and that both she and her father had each of them several names, which was not unusual among the Hebrews.

3 And he walked in all the sins of his father, which he had done before him: and ^ahis heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as the heart of David his father.

In all the sins of his father; which his father lived in; either, first, Before his humiliation. Or rather, secondly, After his deliverance from Shishak, when, though he did not openly renounce the worship of God, he seems to have relapsed into his former sins; which otherwise would not have been remembered against him; as David's name and memory is never loaded with the shame of his sins, because he truly repented of them.

^f ch. 11. 32. ^g 2 Chr. 21. 7. ^h Or, candle. ch. 11. 36. 4 Nevertheless ^ffor David's sake did the LORD his God give him a ^hlamp in Jerusalem, to set up his son after him, and to establish Jerusalem:

A lamp, i. e. a son and successor to perpetuate his name and memory, which otherwise had gone into obscurity. The same phrase is used above, chap. xi. 36; 2 Kings viii. 19; 2 Chron. xxi. 7. To establish Jerusalem, i. e. that he might maintain that city, and temple, and worship, as a witness for God in the world against the Israelites and heathen world, who should have inquired after it, and embraced the true religion there established and set up, as a beacon upon a high hill, that all men might take notice of it.

^g ch. 14. 8. 5 Because David ^gdid that which was right in the eyes of the LORD, and turned not aside from any thing that he commanded him all the days of his life, ^hsave only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite.

Quest. How is this true, seeing David sinned in the matter of Nabal, 1 Sam. xxv., and Achish, chap. xxvii., and Mephibosheth, and his indulgence to his children, Adonijah, Amnon, and Absalom, and in the numbering of the people? Answ. This and the like phrases are not to be understood as exclusive of every sinful action, but only of a sinful course or state, or of an habitual and continued apostasy from God, or from his ways, as the very phrase of turning aside from God, or from his commands, doth constantly imply, as appears from Exod. xxxii. 8; Deut. ix. 12, 16;

1 Sam. viii. 3; Psal. lxxviii. 57; Isa. xlv. 20; 1 Tim. i. 6; v. 15, &c. And thus it is most true. For David's other sins were either sudden and transient acts, proceeding from human infirmity, and extraordinary temptations, and soon repented of and blotted out, as in the cases of Nabal and Achish; or mistakes of his judgment, which was not fully convinced of the sinfulness of such actions, as in the other cases alleged; whereas that which concerned Uriah's wife was a designed and studied sin, long continued in, defended with a succession of other sins, presumptuous, and scandalous to his government and to the true religion, which he so eminently professed.

6 ⁱAnd there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all the days of his life.

Which was said chap. xiv. 30, and may be here repeated, to signify the cause and original of the war between Abijam and Jeroboam, which is implied here, and particularly described 2 Chron. xiii. Abijam continued the war which Rehoboam had begun, and pushed it on to a decisive battle. But the place may be thus rendered, Yet there was war, &c., i. e. although God was pleased to show so much respect to David, as for his sake to continue the succession to the kingdom in his posterity, yet he thought fit to manifest his displeasure against David's successors for their sins, and to mix their honour and happiness with wars and troubles.

7 ^kNow the rest of the acts of Abijam, and all that he did, ^lare they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? And there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam.

The chronicles of the kings of Judah; in their annals; whence they were long after this time translated into the sacred Book of Chronicles. See above on chap. xiv. 19.

8 ^mAnd Abijam slept with his fathers; and they buried him in the city of David: and Asa his son reigned in his stead.

9 ¶ And in the twentieth year of Jeroboam king of Israel reigned Asa over Judah.

In or towards the end of the year. See above, ver. 1.

10 And forty and one years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his ⁿmother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abishalom.

That is, grandmother's ver. 2. i. e. His grandmother's, as appears from ver. 2, who is called his mother, as David is called Abijam's father, ver. 3, and this Asa's father, ver. 11. And so the names of father, and mother, and sons, and daughters are oft taken, both in sacred and profane authors, for grandparents and grandchildren. And his grandmother's name may be here mentioned rather than his mother's, because his mother was either an obscure person, or was long since dead, or indisposed or unwilling to take care of the education of her son, and so he was educated by the grandmother, who, though she did poison his father Abijam with her idolatrous principles, ver. 12, yet could not infect Asa, nor withhold him from prosecuting his good purposes of reforming religion; which is here remembered to his praise.

11 ^oAnd Asa did that which was right in the eyes of the LORD, as ^pdid David his father.

That which was right in the eyes of the Lord; as to the government of his kingdom and life, and the reformation and establishment of God's worship.

12 ^qAnd he took away the sodomites out of the land, and removed all the idols that his fathers had made.

The Sodomites; of whom see chap. xiv. 24; not all of them, but those whom he could find out; but some escaped his observation and censure, as appears from chap. xxii. 46.

13 And also ^rMaachah his mother, even he removed from ^sbeing queen, because she had made an idol in a grove; and Asa ^tdestroyed her idol, and ^uburnt it by the brook Kidron.

Her he removed from being queen, i. e. he took from her either the name and authority of queen-regent, which she, having been Rehoboam's wife, and Abijam's mother, took to herself during Asa's minority, and abused to the patronage of idolatry; or the dignity of the queen-mother, and those guards, or other ensigns of honour, or instruments of power, which, as such, she had enjoyed and misemployed. Otherwise, he removed her from the queen, i. e. from his wife, that she might not be infected by her, and afterwards infect his children; which was a prudent and necessary care, for the prevention of so great and public a mischief. An idol, Heb. a terror, or horror, i. e. a horrible idol; which it may be so called, either because all idols, though for a season they please, yet in the end will bring dreadful effects upon their worshippers; or because this was an idol of a more horrible or terrible shape, more abominable than ordinary, and not to be seen without horror; whether it was that filthy idol, called Priapus, which was commonly placed in groves or gardens; or Pan, or some other heathen god, to whose service she in a special manner devoted herself. Burnt it by the brook Kidron; that when it was burnt to powder, it might be thrown into the water, and be unfit for any use. See Exod. xxxii. 20; Deut. xii. 3.

g ch. 22. 43.
2 Chron. 15.
17, 18.
r See ver. 3.

14 ^aBut the high places were not removed: nevertheless Asa's heart was perfect with the LORD all his days.

The high places were not removed. Object. He did take these away, 2 Chron. xiv. 3. Ans. He took away those which were devoted to the worship of idols, as is there said, he took away the altars of the strange gods, and the high places, to wit, where they were worshipped: but as for those high places where the true God was worshipped, he did not take them away; partly, because he thought there was no great evil in them, because they had been used by David and Solomon, and other good and wise men; and because the true God was there worshipped, and that in the manner, though not in the place, which God had appointed; and partly, because he thought the removal of them might do much more hurt than their continuance, to wit, by occasioning the total neglect of God's worship by many of the people, who either could not, or through want of competent faith and zeal would not, go up to Jerusalem to worship, now especially, when the Israelites, their near neighbours, formerly their friends, were become their enemies, and watched all opportunities to invade or molest them, which they concluded they would do when all their males were gone up to Jerusalem; and partly, because the people were so obstinately bent towards them, that it was, or at least seemed to him, impossible to remove them without great offence, or such commotions as were highly dangerous to that church and state. Asa's heart was perfect with the Lord, i. e. he did sincerely and constantly adhere to the worship and service of God. Though he could not hinder the people from using the high places, yet he did entirely devote himself to the worship of God in the manner and place prescribed by God.

+ Heb. holy.

15 And he brought in the † things which his father had dedicated, and the things which himself had dedicated, into the house of the LORD, silver, and gold, and vessels.

Which his father had dedicated, Abijam, to wit, when he was in distress, and going to fight with Jeroboam, 2 Chron. xiii. though afterwards he did not perform his vows, nor bring in what he had devoted; whether because he was prevented by death, or because he afterwards relapsed to idolatry, as may seem probable from the 12th verse of this chapter.

16 ¶ And there was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

So long as they two lived and reigned together; which is not so to be understood, as if there were a solemn and declared war continuing all that time, (for Asa was quiet in a great measure for his first ten years, 2 Chron. xiv. 1, till the Israelites had recovered themselves from that dreadful blow given them by Abijah, 2 Chron. xiii., and Baasha began to reign in Asa's third year,) but so that there were many private and particular hostilities practised among them; in which sense the same phrase is used chap. xiv. 30.

17 And ^aBaasha king of Israel went up against Judah, and built ^bRamah, that he might not suffer any to go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

Baasha went up against Judah; perceiving Asa's great success, of which see 2 Chron. xiv., xv., and the defection of many of his own subjects to him upon that occasion, 2 Chron. xv. 9, he began to bestir himself, and commenced a war against him. Built, i. e. repaired and fortified, Ramah, a city of Benjamin; which either belonged to the kingdom of Israel, from the division, (as some other places of that tribe are supposed to have done; of which see on 1 Kings xi. 13,) or belonged to Judah, but was now invaded and taken by Baasha, and fortified. That he might not suffer any to go out or come in to Asa king of Judah; therefore he chose this place, because it was in the way from his kingdom to Jerusalem, and, as some add, in or near the straits of the mountains, where they could easily discover and hinder all passengers that way.

18 Then Asa took all the silver and the gold that were left in the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house, and delivered them into the hand of his servants: and king Asa sent them to ^aBen-hadad, the son of ^bTabrimon, the son of Hezion, king of ^cSyria, that dwelt at ^dDamascus, saying,

All the silver and the gold that were left; these poor remainders, which either Shishak had left at that time, chap. xiv. 26, or Abijam, or Asa, or others, both of Israel and Judah, had dedicated; which probably was not inconsiderable, because Asa had got great spoils from Zerah, 2 Chron. xiv., and he and his numerous and prosperous people did at this time express a great zeal for the house and worship of God. Asa sent them to Ben-hadad; wherein he committed three great faults, amongst many others. First, He alienated things consecrated to God without necessity. Secondly, He did this out of carnal fear and distrust of that God whose power and goodness he had lately experienced. Thirdly, He did this for an ill intent, to hire him to the breach of his league and covenant with Baasha, ver. 19, and to take away part of that land which by right, and the special gift of God, belonged to the Israelites.

19 There is a league between me and thee, and between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent unto thee a present of silver and gold; come and break thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may † depart from me.

There is a league between me and thee, and between my father and thy father; whereby it appears, that albeit he was an adversary to Israel all Solomon's days, chap. xi. 25, yet after the division of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah he was in league with both of them; either because his designs lay upon the enlargement of his empire other ways; or rather, because he thought it his wisdom and interest to leave them to themselves, to undo one another by their intestine wars, and so to prepare the way to his conquest of both; whereas his invading of either of them might have made up the breach, and forced them to unite against their common enemy. And therefore as soon as he was free from this fear, and one of them needed and earnestly desired his help against the other, he gladly embraced the opportunity. That he may depart from me; that being called to defend himself, he may be forced to depart from my territories.

20 So Ben-hadad hearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of the hosts which he had against the cities of Israel, and smote ^aIjon, and ^bDan, and ^cAbel-beth-maachah, and all Cinneroth, with all the land of Naphtali.

nearest to his own kingdom of Damascus, and most remote from those parts where Baasha was now employed, which were in the most southern parts of his dominions.

21 And it came to pass, when Baasha heard thereof, that he left off building of Ramah, and dwelt in Tirzah.

Now the royal city of Israel. See chap. xiv. 17. There he abode to defend his own kingdoms, and durst not return to oppose Asa, lest the Syrian king should make a second and worse invasion. So Asa met with success in his ungodly course, as on the other side good men sometimes meet with disappointment in a good cause and course. So there is no judging of causes by events.

22 Then king Asa made a proclamation throughout all Judah; none was *†*exempted: and they took away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha had builded; and king Asa built with them ^dGeba of Benjamin, and ^eMizpah.

None was exempted; all sorts of persons were obliged to come, except those who were disenabled by age, or infirmity, or absence, or by the public service of the king and kingdom in other places. Asa built with them Geba of Benjamin, and Mizpah, i. e. repaired and strengthened them, for they were built before. See Jer. xli. 9. Quest. Why did he not rather perfect the fortifications of Ramah which Baasha had begun? Ans. Because Baasha might have returned and recovered it afterwards; and he thought it most convenient that there should be no city nor fort in that place.

23 The rest of all the acts of Asa, and all his might, and all that he did, and the cities which he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? Nevertheless ^fin the time of his old age he was diseased in his feet.

Nevertheless; notwithstanding the great things which he had done, and the glory and prosperity which he enjoyed, he felt the effects of human infirmity, and of his own sins; of which see 2 Chron. xvi. 12, 13.

24 And Asa slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: ^gand ^hJehoshaphat his son reigned in his stead.

25 ¶ And Nadab the son of Jeroboam *†*began to reign over Israel in the second year of Asa king of Judah, and reigned over Israel two years.

Not complete, as appears from ver. 28, 33.

26 And he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the way of his father, and in ⁱhis sin wherewith he made Israel to sin.

i. e. In the worship of the calves which his father had made.

27 ¶ ^kAnd Baasha the son of Ahijah, of the house of Issachar, conspired against him; and Baasha smote him at ^lGibbethon, which belonged to the Philistines; for Nadab and all Israel laid siege to Gibbethon.

Of the house of Issachar, i. e. of the tribe, which is oft called a house, as Judg. x. 9; Psal. cxxxv. 20; Hos. i. 7. Which belonged to the Philistines; who, taking advantage of the division between Israel and Judah, had retaken this town, which belonged to the tribe of Dan, Josh. xix. 44, and belonged to the Levites, Josh. xxi. 23; upon whose departure to Judah, 2 Chron. xi. 14, the kings of Israel seized their towns and lands to their own use, as was noted before; which made them so much concerned for this town, to besiege it both now and many years after this time, chap. xvi. 15.

28 Even in the third year of Asa king of Judah did Baasha slay him, and reigned in his stead.

In the third year of Asa: how this agrees with 2 Chron. xvi. 1, see in the notes there. Did Baasha slay him; which he did, not to fulfil God's threatening, but only to advance himself; and therefore this is called murder, chap. xvi. 7.

29 And it came to pass, when he reigned, that he smote all the house of Jeroboam; he left not to Jeroboam any that breathed, until he had destroyed him, according unto ^mthe saying of the LORD, ⁿwhich he spake by his servant Ahijah the Shilonite:

Any that breathed, i. e. any of the males of that family. See Deut. xx. 16; Josh. x. 40. According unto the saying of the Lord: so God overruled Baasha's ambition and cruelty, to fulfil his own counsel and prediction.

30 ^oBecause of the sins of Jeroboam ^pwhich he sinned, and which he made Israel sin, by his provocation wherewith he provoked the LORD God of Israel to anger.

Which he made Israel sin; so that same wicked policy which he used to establish the kingdom in his family proved his and their ruin; which is very frequently the event of ungodly counsels.

31 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Nadab, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

32 ^qAnd there was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

33 In the third year of Asa king of Judah began Baasha the son of Ahijah to reign over all Israel in Tirzah, twenty and four years.

34 And he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and walked in ^rthe way of Jeroboam, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin.

CHAP. XVI.

Jehu prophesieth against Baasha, 1—7. Elah succeedeth him: him Zimri slayeth and succeedeth: he, besieged by Omri, burneth himself, 8—20. Omri prevaileth against Tibni, and is king; buildeth Samaria; followeth the sins of Jeroboam, and dieth, 21—28. Ahab his son succeedeth him: he is more wicked than his predecessors, 29—33. Hiel buildeth Jericho; and Joshua's curse is fulfilled in him, 34.

THEN the word of the LORD came to ^uJehu the son of Hanani against Baasha, ^vsaying, Jehu, a prophet, of whom see more 2 Chron. xix. 2; xx. 34. Hanani also was a prophet, 2 Chron. xvi. 7.

2 ^wForasmuch as I exalted thee out of the dust, and made thee prince over my people Israel; and ^xthou hast walked in the way of Jeroboam, and hast made my people Israel to sin, to provoke me to anger with their sins;

Out of the dust; out of a low and mean estate. See 1 Sam. ii. 8; Psal. cxlii. 7. Quest. How is Baasha's exaltation to the kingdom ascribed to God, when he got it by treachery and cruelty? Ans. Though that way or manner of invading the kingdom was from himself, and his own wicked heart; yet the translation of the kingdom from Nadab to Baasha, simply considered, was from God, who by his decree and providence ordered it, and disposed of all occasions, and of the hearts of all the soldiers and people, so that Baasha should have opportunity of executing God's judgment upon Nadab; and such success thereupon, that he should get a present and quiet possession of the kingdom. Nay, the very act of Baasha, to wit, the killing of his master Nadab, was an act of Divine justice, foretold and appointed by God, chap. xiv. 10. And if Baasha had done this in obedience to God's command, and with a single design to execute God's vengeance threatened against him, it had been no more a sin than Jehu's act in killing his master king Jehoram, upon the same account, 2 Kings ix. But that Baasha did this merely to gratify his own pride, or covetousness, or malice, this was not from God, but from himself, and therefore is charged upon him as murder here, ver. 7. To provoke me to anger: see on 1 Kings xiv. 9.

d ver. 11.

3 Behold, I will ^dtake away the posterity of Baasha, and the posterity of his house; and will make thy house like ^ethe house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

6 So Baasha slept with his fathers, and was buried in ^hTirzah: and Elah his son reigned in his stead.

i ver. 1.

7 And also by the hand of the prophet ⁱJehu the son of Hanani came the word of the LORD against Baasha, and against his house, even for all the evil that he did in the sight of the LORD, in provoking him to anger with the work of his hands, in being like the house of Jeroboam; and because ^khe killed him.

k ch. 15. 27. 29.

See Hos. 1. 4.

By the hand of the prophet Jehu came the word of the Lord: the meaning is, the message which came from the Lord to Jehu, ver. 1, &c., was here delivered by the hand, i. e. the ministry, of Jehu, unto Baasha. Jehu did what God commanded him in this matter, though it was not without apparent hazard to himself. And because he killed him, i. e. Nadab; who, though he be not expressed, yet is sufficiently understood: 1. By the manifest reference which these words have to the murder committed by Baasha, which was done upon Nadab only, chap. xv. 28. 2. By the foregoing words, the house of Jeroboam, i. e. his posterity, which was Nadab. Quest. Why doth God punish him for doing God's work? Answ. 1. Though God appointed that Jeroboam's family should be cut off, yet he did not give Baasha commission to do it, nor had declared how or by whom he would do it. 2. Baasha did this not to fulfil God's will, but his own lusts. See on ver. 2.

8 ¶ In the twenty and sixth year of Asa king of Judah began Elah the son of Baasha to reign over Israel in Tirzah, two years.

One complete, and part of the other, ver. 10, which in Scripture account is reckoned for a year. See above, chap. xv. 25.

12 Kin. 9.31.

9 ^lAnd his servant Zimri, captain of half his chariots, conspired against him, as he was in Tirzah, drinking himself drunk in the house of Arza [†]steward of his house in Tirzah.

† Heb. shich was over.

Captain of half his chariots, i. e. of all his military chariots, and the men belonging to them; the chariots for carriage of necessary things being put into other and meaner hands. As he was in Tirzah; whilst his forces were elsewhere employed, ver. 15, which gave Zimri advantage to execute his design.

10 And Zimri went in and smote him, and killed him, in the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah, and reigned in his stead.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, when he began to reign, as soon as he sat on his throne, that he slew all the house of Baasha: he left him ^mnot one that pisseth against a wall, ⁿneither of his kinsfolks, nor of his friends.

m 1 Sam. 25. 22. n Or, both his kinsmen and his friends.

Kinsfolks, Heb. avengers; to whom it belonged to revenge his death: see Numb. xxxv. 12. Nor of his friends; his confidants and familiar acquaintance, such as were most likely to hinder his settlement in the throne, and to avenge their friend's quarrel.

12 Thus did Zimri destroy all the house of Baasha, ^oaccording to the word of the LORD, which he spake against Baasha [†]by Jehu the prophet,

i. e. Thus fulfilling God's threatening, but either without his knowledge, or merely for his own ends.

13 For all the sins of Baasha, and the sins of Elah his son, by which they sinned, and by which they made Israel to sin, in provoking the LORD God of Israel to anger ^pwith their vanities.

14 Now the rest of the acts of Elah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

15 ¶ In the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah did Zimri reign seven days in Tirzah. And the people were encamped ^qagainst Gibbethon, which belonged to the Philistines.

q ch. 15. 27.

Which had been besieged before, chap. xv. 27, but, it seems, was then relieved, or afterwards recovered by the Philistines, taking the advantage of the disorders and contentions which were among their enemies.

16 And the people that were encamped heard say, Zimri hath conspired, and hath also slain the king: wherefore all Israel made Omri, the captain of the host, king over Israel that day in the camp.

17 And Omri went up from Gibbethon, and all Israel with him, and they besieged Tirzah.

18 And it came to pass, when Zimri saw that the city was taken, that he went into the palace of the king's house, and burnt the king's house over him with fire, and died, 929.

Burnt the king's house over him; or, and he burnt, &c. Either, 1. Omri burnt it over Zimri; for pronouns sometimes respect more remote nouns. Or rather, 2. Zimri, (to whom both the foregoing and following words apparently belong,) who burnt it upon himself, that neither himself nor the royal palace and treasures might come into the hands of his insulting adversary.

19 For his sins which he sinned in doing evil in the sight of the LORD, ^rin walking in the way of Jeroboam, and in his sin which he did, to make Israel to sin.

r ch. 12. 28. & 15. 25, 34.

For his sins, i. e. this befell him for his sins. Walking in the way of Jeroboam; which he might do, either before his reign, in the whole course of his life, which is justly charged upon him, because of his impenitency; or in the seven days of his reign; in which he had time enough to publish his intentions or decrees about the continuance of the worship of the calves; or to sacrifice to them for his good success, either already obtained, or further desired.

20 Now the rest of the acts of Zimri, and his treason that he wrought, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

21 ¶ Then were the people of Israel divided into two parts: half of the people followed Tibni the son of Ginath, to make him king; and half followed Omri.

The people of Israel fell into a civil war; yet neither this nor any other of God's dreadful judgments could win them to repentance; which is an evidence of their prodigious impiety and incorrigibility, and how ripe they were for ruin. Half of the people followed Tibni, disdaining that the soldiers should usurp such a power over the whole kingdom. Half followed Omri, because they approved the person, though not the manner of his election.

925. 22 But the people that followed Omri prevailed against the people that followed Tibni the son of Ginath: so Tibni died, and Omri reigned.

The people that followed Omri prevailed; partly because they had the army on their side; and principally by the appointment and judgment of God, giving up the Israelites to him who was much the worst, ver. 25, 26. Tibni died a violent death in the battle.

23 ¶ In the thirty and first year of Asa king of Judah began Omri to reign over Israel, twelve years: six years reigned he in Tirzah.

Began Omri to reign over Israel twelve years, i. e. and he reigned twelve years, not from this thirty-first year of Asa, for he died in his thirty-eighth year, ver. 29; but from the beginning of his reign, which was in Asa's twenty-seventh year, ver. 15, 16. So he reigned four years in a state of war with Tibni, and eight years peaceably.

24 And he bought the hill Samaria of Shemer for two talents of silver, and built on the hill, and called the name of the city which he built, after the name of Shemer, owner of the hill, † Samaria.

Built on the hill, to wit, the city; and especially, a royal palace, because that at Tirzah was burnt, ver. 18.

25 ¶ But Omri wrought evil in the eyes of the LORD, and did worse than all that were before him.

u ver. 19. 26 For he walked in all the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin, to provoke the LORD God of Israel to anger with their vanities.

x ver. 13. He walked in all the way of Jeroboam, i. e. did not only promote the worship of the calves, as Jeroboam and all his successors hitherto had done; but did also imitate all Jeroboam's other sins, which doubtless were many and great; and peradventure he added this to the rest, that together with the calves he worshipped devils, i. e. other idols of the heathens, as may be thought from 1 Cor. x. 20, where his worship of the devils and of the calves is distinguished. Besides, though he did no more for the substance of the action than his predecessors did, yet he might justly and truly be said to do worse than they, because he did it with greater aggravations, after so many terrible examples of Divine vengeance upon the kings and people of Israel for that sin; or because he made severer laws concerning the calf-worship, whence we read of the statutes of Omri, Micah vi. 16; or did more industriously and violently execute them, with greater despite against God, and malice against his servants.

27 Now the rest of the acts of Omri which he did, and his might that he shewed, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

28 So Omri slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria: and Ahab his son reigned in his stead.

29 ¶ And in the thirty and eighth year of Asa king of Judah began Ahab the son of Omri to reign over Israel: and Ahab the son of Omri reigned over Israel in Samaria twenty and two years. 918.

30 And Ahab the son of Omri did evil in the sight of the LORD above all that were before him.

31 And it came to pass, † as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, † that he took to wife Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal king of the Zidonians, † and went and served Baal, and worshipped him.

As if it had been a light thing for him; as if that sin were not big enough to express his contempt of God; as if he thought it below his wit and dignity to content himself with such a vulgar fault. But the Hebrew runs thus, Was it a light thing, &c. i. e. was this but a small sin, that therefore he needed to add more abominations? where the question, as is usual among the Hebrews, implies a strong denial; and intimates that this was no small sin, but a great crime, and might have satisfied his wicked mind without any additions. Jezebel; a woman infamous for her idolatry, and cruelty, and sorcery, and filthiness. See chap. xviii. 4; xxi. 8; 2 Kings ix. 22; Rev. ii. 20. Ethbaal, called Ithobalus, or Itobalus, in heathen writers. King of the Zidonians; so she was of a heathenish and idolatrous race, and such whom the kings and people of Israel were expressly forbidden to marry. Baal, i. e. the idol which the Zidonians worshipped, which is thought to be Hercules, or false gods, for this name is common to all such. And this idolatry was much worse than that of the calves; because in the calves they worshipped the true God, but in these, false gods or devils, as is evident from chap. xviii. 21.

32 And he reared up an altar for Baal in the house of Baal, which he had built in Samaria. b 2 Kin. 10. 21, 25, 27.

33 ° And Ahab made a grove; and Ahab did more to provoke the LORD God of Israel to anger than all the kings of Israel that were before him. c 2 Kings 13. 6. & 17. 10. & 21. 3. Jer. 17. 2. d ver. 20. ch. 21. 25.

Ahab made a grove, against God's express prohibition, Deut. vii. 5.

34 ¶ In his days did Hiel the Bethelite build Jericho: he laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his firstborn, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son Segub, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake by Joshua the son of Nun. e Josh. 6. 26.

In his days: this is here added, 1. As a character of the time, and an instance of the truth and certainty of Divine predictions and comminations, this being fulfilled eight hundred years after it was threatened; and withal, as a warning to the Israelites, not to think themselves innocent or safe, because the judgment threatened against them by Ahijah, chap. xiv. 15, was not yet executed, though they continued in that calf-worship which he condemned; but to expect the certain accomplishment of it in due time, if they persisted in their impenitency. Or, 2. As an evidence of the horrible corruption of his times, and of that high contempt of God which then reigned. Hiel the Bethelite; who lived in Beth-el, the seat and sink of idolatry, wherewith he was thoroughly leavened. Built Jericho; a place seated in the tribe of Benjamin, but belonging to the kingdom of Israel; which place he seems to have chosen for his buildings; not so much for his own advantage, as out of a contempt of the true God, and of his threatenings, which he designed to convince of falsehood by his own experience; and out of an ambitious desire to advance his own reputation and interest thereby, by attempting that which he knew his king and queen too would be highly pleased with. He laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his first-born, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son Segub; i. e. in the beginning of his building God took away his first-born, and others successively in the progress of the work, and the youngest when he finished it. And so he found by his own sad experience the truth of God's word, and how vain it was to contend with him. Quest. Why did not God rather punish Hiel himself? Ans. This was a terrible punishment, to see his children cut off by Divine vengeance before their time, one after another; and all this for his own folly and rashness. Compare Jer. lii. 10. And as for Hiel himself, possibly after he had been spared so long, that he might be an eye-witness of his sons' untimely deaths, he also might be cut off, though it be not recorded, as not belonging to the prophecy here mentioned; or if not, his present impunity was his greatest misery; either as it continued his torment in the sad and lasting remembrance of his loss and misery; or as it was a mean to harden his heart so for greater judgments, to which he was reserved. According to the word of the Lord, which he spake by Joshua; of which see on Josh. vi. 26.

CHAP. XVII.

Elijah foretelleth Ahab that there shall be a great drought; is sent to Cherith, where the ravens feed him, 1—7. He is sent to Zarephath to a widow, who feedeth him with meal and oil, which wasted not, 8—16. Her son dieth, and he raiseth him, 17—23. She acknowledgeth him to be a prophet, 24.

Ans. 1. This must be ascribed to God's overruling providence, who hath the hearts of all men in his hands, and hath oft protected his prophets and servants in such cases. 2. He might say this not by word of mouth, but by letter and message sent to him; as that word is sometimes used, as Exod. xviii. 6.

Ans. 1. This must be ascribed to God's overruling providence, who hath the hearts of all men in his hands, and hath oft protected his prophets and servants in such cases. 2. He might say this not by word of mouth, but by letter and message sent to him; as that word is sometimes used, as Exod. xviii. 6.

edness, and the vanity of their calves and other idols, and their dependence upon God, and the necessity of returning to the true religion. These years, i. e. these following years, which were three and a half, Luke iv. 25; James v. 17. But according to my word, i. e. until I shall declare that this judgment shall cease, and shall pray to God for the removal of it.

2 And the word of the LORD came unto him, saying,

3 Get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and hide thyself by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

Thus God rescues him from the fury of Ahab and Jezebel, who he knew would seek to destroy him. Quest. Why did not Ahab seize upon him immediately upon these words? Ans. 1. This must be ascribed to God's overruling providence, who hath the hearts of all men in his hands, and hath oft protected his prophets and servants in such cases. 2. He might say this not by word of mouth, but by letter and message sent to him; as that word is sometimes used, as Exod. xviii. 6.

4 And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.

i. e. I have decreed or appointed. Or, I shall command, i. e. effectually move them, by instincts and inclinations which I shall put into them, which shall be as forcible with them as a law or command is to men. God is said to command both brute creatures, as Amos ix. 3; Jonah ii. 10, and senseless things, as Job xxxviii. 11, 12; Psal. lxxviii. 23; Isa. v. 6; xlv. 12, when he causeth them to do the things which he intends to effect by them. I have commanded the ravens; which he names, and chooseth for this work; partly to succour the prophet's faith against human infirmity, by the credibility of the thing; there being many ravens in those parts, and those delighting to reside near brooks of water; and that sort of creatures being apt and accustomed to seek provisions, and to carry them away to the places of their abode; and partly to show his care and power in providing for the prophet by those creatures, which are noted for their greediness in monopolizing provision to themselves, and for their malignity and unnaturalness towards their own young; that by this strange and noble experiment he might be taught to trust God in those many and great difficulties to which he was likely to be exposed. Object. The ravens were unclean, Lev. xi. 15. Ans. They were unclean for meat, but not for the touch. But howsoever, that ceremonial law was overruled by necessity, and by the Lawgiver's dispensation.

5 So he went and did according unto the word of the LORD: for he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

6 And the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank of the brook.

Bread and flesh; not raw, but boiled by the ministry of some angel or man, and left in some place or places till the ravens came for it, in all which there is nothing incredible, considering the power and providence of God. In the morning and in the evening, i. e. for dinner and supper, according to the custom. See Gen. xliii. 25; Ruth ii. 14; Luke xiv. 12; Acts x. 9, 10.

7 And it came to pass after a while, that the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land.

After a while, Heb. at the end of days, i. e. of a year; for so the word days is oft used, as in Exod. xiii. 10; Lev. xxv. 29; Numb. ix. 22; Judg. xvii. 10; 1 Sam. i. 3; xxvii. 7. And this seems to be a convenient time for the drying up of the brook, which was gradually dried up; and so this agrees well with chap. xviii. 1, in the third year; of which see the notes there. The brook dried up; God so ordering it, partly, for the punishment of those Israelites who lived near it, and had hitherto been refreshed by it; partly, for the trial and exercise of Elijah's faith, and to teach him to depend upon God alone, not on any creature, for his sup-d Luke 4. 25.

AND †Elijah the Tishbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, said unto Ahab, *As the LORD God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, ° there shall not be dew nor rain ° these years, but according to my word.

Elijah was the most eminent of the prophets, Matt. xvii. 3, who is here brought in, like Melchisedek, Gen. xiv. 18; Heb. vii. 3, without any mention of his father, or mother, or beginning of his days; like a man dropped out of the clouds, and raised by God's special providence as a witness for himself in this most degenerate time and state of things; that by his zeal, and courage, and power of miracles, he might give some check to their various and abominable idolatries, and some reviving to that small number of the Lord's prophets and people who yet remained in Israel, as we shall see. The Tishbite; so called, either from the place of his birth or habitation, or for some other reason not now known. Of the inhabitants of Gilead; which was the land beyond Jordan. See Gen. xxxi. 21. Said unto Ahab; having doubtless admonished him of his sin and danger before this; and now, upon his obstinacy in his wicked courses, he proceeds to declare and execute the judgment of God upon him. As the Lord God of Israel liveth: I swear by the God of Israel, who is the only true and living God; when the gods whom thou hast joined with him, or preferred before him, are dead and senseless idols. Before whom I stand; either, 1. Whose minister I am, (as this phrase is oft used, as Numb. iii. 6; Deut. x. 8; xvii. 12; xviii. 5,) not only in general, but especially in this threatening, which I now deliver in his name and authority, and not from my own imagination or passion. Or, 2. Who is now present with me, and a witness of what I say; and let him punish me severely, if I speak not the truth. There shall not be dew nor rain: this was a prediction, but was seconded with his prayer, that God would verify it, as it is recorded, James v. 17. And this prayer of his was not voluntary and malicious, but necessary, and (all things considered) truly charitable; that by this sharp and long affliction God's honour, and the truth of his word and threatenings, (which was now so horribly and universally condemned,) might be vindicated, and the Israelites (whom their present impunity and prosperity had hardened in their idolatry) might hereby be awakened to see their own wick-port; and partly, to show his own all-sufficiency in providing for his people.

8 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto him, saying,

9 Arise, get thee to ^e Zarephath, which ^e belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there: behold, I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee.

Zarephath; a city between Tyrus and Sidon, called Sarepta by St. Luke, chap. iv. 26, by Pliny, and others. To Zidon; to the jurisdiction of that city, which therefore was inhabited by Gentiles. See Luke iv. 25. And God's providing for his prophet, first by an unclean bird, and then by a Gentile, whom the Jews esteemed unclean, was a notable presage of the calling of the Gentiles, and of the rejection of the Jews. I have commanded, i. e. appointed or provided, as before, ver. 4; for that she had as yet no revelation or command of God about it, appears from ver. 12.

10 So he arose and went to Zarephath. And when he came to the gate of the city, behold, the widow woman was there gathering of sticks: and he called to her, and said, Fetch me, I pray thee, a little water in a vessel, that I may drink.

He called to her; knowing by Divine suggestion that this was the woman designed.

11 And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thine hand.

Which he said only to try her, and to make way for what follows.

12 And she said, As the LORD thy God liveth, I have not a cake, but an handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse: and, behold, I am gathering two sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, that we may eat it, and die.

As the Lord thy God liveth; by which she discovers, that though she was a Gentile, yet she owned the God of Israel as the true God. Two sticks, i. e. a few sticks, that number being oft used indefinitely for any small number, both in Scripture, as Hos. vi. 2, and by other authors. That we may eat it, and die; for having no more provision, we must needs perish with hunger. For though the famine was only in the land of Israel, yet the effects of it were in Tyre and Zidon, which were fed by the corn of that land. See Acts xii. 20. Or the same famine might be in those parts also; the chief cause of the famine, to wit, the worship of Baal, being common to both places.

13 And Elijah said unto her, Fear not; go and do as thou hast said: but make me thereof a little cake first, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy son.

Make me thereof a little cake first; which he requires as a trial and exercise of her faith, and charity, and obedience, which he knew God would graciously and plentifully reward; and so this would be a great example to encourage others to the practice of the same graces upon like occasions.

14 For thus saith the LORD God of Israel, The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the LORD [†]sendeth rain upon the earth.

Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, in whom I perceive thou trustest. The barrel of meal, i. e. the meal of the barrel; an hyppallage or metonymy. So the cruse of oil, for the oil of the cruse.

15 And she went and did according to the saying of Elijah: and she, and he, and her house, did eat || many days.

She did according to the saying of Elijah; giving glory to the God of Israel, by believing his prophet. Many days, i. e. a long time, even above two years: see chap. xviii. 1. Heb. days, i. e. a full year; as ver. 7; namely, before the following event about her son happened, and the rest of the time of the famine after it.

16 And the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake [†] by Elijah.

God still creating new, as fast as the old was spent.

17 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that the son of the woman, the mistress of the house, fell sick; and his sickness was so sore, that there was no breath left in him.

Or, no soul, or life, as this Hebrew word oft signifies, i. e. he died, as is manifest from the following verses. See also Heb. xi. 35.

18 And she said unto Elijah, 'What have I to do with thee, O thou man of God? art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?'

What have I to do with thee? wherein have I injured or provoked thee? or, why didst thou come to sojourn in my house, (as the following words seem to explain these,) if this be the fruit of it? They are words of a troubled mind, savouring of some rashness and impatience. Art thou come unto me? didst thou come for this end, that thou mightest severely observe my sins, and by thy prayers bring down God's just judgment upon me for them, as thou hast for the like cause brought down this famine upon the nation? To remembrance; either, 1. To my remembrance; that I should by this dreadful judgment be brought to the knowledge and remembrance of my sins, which have procured it. Or rather, 2. To God's remembrance; for God is oft said in Scripture to remember sins, when he punisheth them; and to forget them, when he spares the sinner. See 2 Sam. xvi. 10. Have I, instead of the blessing which I expected from thy presence, met with a curse?

19 And he said unto her, Give me thy son. And he took him out of her bosom, and carried him up into a loft, where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed.

Give me thy son into mine arms. Into a loft; a private place, where he might more freely and fully pour out his soul to God, and use such gestures or methods as he thought most proper, without any offence or observation.

20 And he cried unto the LORD, and said, O LORD my God, hast thou also brought evil upon the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son?

A prayer full of powerful arguments. Thou art the Lord, that canst revive the child; and my God, and therefore wilt not, do not, deny me. She is a widow; add not affliction to the afflicted; deprive her not of the great support and staff of her age. She hath given me kind entertainment; let her not fare the worse for her kindness to a prophet, whereby wicked men will take occasion to reproach both her and religion.

21 ¶ And he [†]stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the LORD, and said, O LORD my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come [†]into him again.

He stretched himself upon the child; not as if he thought this could contribute any warmth or life to the child; but partly to express, and withal to increase, his grief for the child's death, and his desire of its reviving; that thereby his prayers might be more fervent, and consequently more prevalent with God; and partly that it might appear that this miracle, though wrought by God alone, yet was done for the sake of Elijah, and in answer to his prayers. Compare 2 Kings iv. 34; John ix. 6; Acts xx. 10. And cried unto the Lord: first he stretched himself, then he prayed, and that for three times successively. Let this child's soul come into him again; by which it is evident that the soul was gone out of his body, and therefore doth subsist without it after death. Compare Gen. xxxv. 18. This was a great request; but Elijah was encouraged to make it; partly, by his zeal for God's honour, which he thought was concerned in it, and would be eclipsed by it; partly, by the experience which he had of his prevailing power with God in prayer; and partly, by a Divine impulse moving him to desire it.

22 And the LORD heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came ^h Heb. 11.35. into him again, and he ^h revived.

23 And Elijah took the child, and brought him down out of the chamber into the house, and delivered him unto his mother: and Elijah said, See, thy son liveth.

24 ¶ And the woman said to Elijah, ⁱ John 3. 2. & 16. 30. Now by this ⁱ I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the LORD in thy mouth is truth.

Now by this I know; now I am assured of that concerning which I began upon this sad occasion to doubt. That the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth; that the God whom thou professest is the true God, and the doctrine and religion which thou teachest is the only true religion; and therefore henceforth I wholly renounce the worship of idols.

CHAP. XVIII.

Elijah in the extremity of famine is sent to Ahab; meeteth good Obadiah, 1—7; chargeth him to certify the king of his coming: he bringeth Ahab to him, 8—16. He reproveth Ahab and the congregation: by fire from heaven convinceth Baal's prophets: they are slain, 17—40. Elijah by prayer obtaineth rain; runs before Ahab to Jezreel, 41—46.

AND it came to pass after many days, that the word of the LORD came to Elijah in the third year, saying, Go, shew thyself unto Ahab; and ^b I will send rain upon the earth.

In the third year; either, 1. From the time when he went to hide himself by the brook Cherith; six months before which time the famine might begin, though it was not yet come to extremity. And so this being in or towards the end of the third year, it makes up these three years and six months, James v. 17. Or, 2. From the time of his going to Sarepta, which probably was a year after the famine begun; see on chap. xvii. 7; and so this might be in the middle of the third year, which also makes up the three years and six months. Show thyself unto Ahab; to acquaint him with the cause of this judgment, ver. 18, and to advise him to remove it, and upon that condition to promise him rain. I will send rain upon the earth, according to thy word and prayer, which thou shalt make for it. Thus God takes care to maintain the honour and authority of his prophet, and in judgment remembers mercy to Israel for the sake of the holy seed yet left among them, who suffered in this common calamity.

2 And Elijah went to shew himself unto Ahab. And there was a sore famine in Samaria.

Elijah went to show himself unto Ahab; wherein he shows a strong faith, and resolute obedience, and invincible courage, that he durst at God's command run into the mouth of this raging lion; which was a degree of martyrdom.

3 And Ahab called [†] Obadiah, which was [†] the governor of his house. (Now Obadiah feared the LORD greatly:

Which was the governor of his house; being valued by Ahab for his great prudence and fidelity, and therefore indulged as to the worship of the calves and Baal. Obadiah feared the Lord greatly. Quest. How could he and some other Israelites be said to fear the Lord, when they did not go up to Jerusalem to worship, as God had commanded? Answ. Although they seem not to be wholly excusable in this neglect, because they should have preferred God's service before their worldly commodity, according to the good example of the priests and Levites, and the generality of the godly people who did so, 2 Chron. xi. 13, 16; yet because they worshipped God in spirit and truth, and performed all moral duties to God and their brethren, and abstained from idolatry, and being kept from Jerusalem by violence, they thought necessity and the apparent hazard of their lives would excuse them from ceremonial services; and God bare with their infirmity herein.

4 For it was so, when [†] Jezebel cut off [†] Heb. Isabel. the prophets of the LORD, that Obadiah took an hundred prophets, and hid them by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water.)

Prophets: this name is not only given to such as are endowed with an extraordinary spirit of prophecy, but to such ministers as devoted themselves to the service of God in preaching, praying, praising God, and the like, as 1 Sam. x. 10—12; and in this place compared with ver. 22, where Elijah saith, I only remain a prophet of the Lord, to wit, strictly so called; and Matt. x. 41; 1 Cor. xii. 28, 29; xiv. 29. Fed them, with the hazard of his own life, and against the king's command; as wisely considering that no command of an earthly prince could overrule the command of the supreme Lord, the King of kings, or discharge him from those acts of piety to God, and charity to men, which God's law indispensably required. With bread and water; either properly, which was a great kindness in those circumstances; or figuratively, i. e. with meat and drink.

5 And Ahab said unto Obadiah, Go into the land, unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks: peradventure we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive, [†] that we lose not all the beasts.

Unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks; about which grass was most probably to be found in that great drought.

6 So they divided the land between them to pass throughout it: Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

Ahab went one way by himself; not daring to trust any other, Obadiah excepted, lest being bribed by such as had grass for their own use, they should not give him a true account.

7 ¶ And as Obadiah was in the way, behold, Elijah met him: and he knew him, and fell on his face, and said, Art thou that my lord Elijah?

By this profound reverence showing his great respect and love to him.

8 And he answered him, I am: go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

Tell thy lord, Ahab; whom, though a very wicked man, he owns for Obadiah's lord and king; thereby instructing him that he did well in owning him as such, and that the wickedness of kings doth not exempt their subjects from obedience to their lawful commands.

9 And he said, What have I sinned, that thou wouldest deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab, to slay me?

What have I sinned? wherein have I so offended God and thee, that thou shouldst inflict this punishment upon me, and expose me to certain ruin by this means?

10 As the LORD thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom, whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee: and when they said, He is not there; he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that they found thee not.

There is no nation or kingdom, to wit, near to his own, where he could in reason think that Elijah had hid himself. Nothing is more frequent than to understand general expressions with such limitations. He took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that they found thee not; not that he could force other kingdoms to take an oath, but that by his persuasions he prevailed with the chief persons in several kingdoms for his satisfaction to swear that they did not know of Elijah's being among them; which was not hard for him to obtain. For Ahab was a great prince, and had a great interest among the neighbouring kings: the king of Tyre was his father-in-law: the king of Moab tributary to him; Jehoshaphat his friend and relation, to whom the king of Edom was tributary. We read also of all the kings of Arabia, and of all the kings of the Hittites, and of Syria, 1 Kings x. 15, 29; which as they corresponded with Solomon, so how far they might be allied to or confederate with Ahab we know not; nor what articles or agreements were between him and them, among which this might be one, that they should deliver up to one another all their fugitive or banished subjects upon demand; which might give sufficient ground for his desire or expectation of this oath. Quest. How then could Elijah lie hid in the house of the widow of Sarepta? Ans. That might easily be, either because she herself, or at least others, did not know particularly who he was; or because she used all possible care to conceal him, her conscience and interest both obliging her so to do; or because God secured him there.

11 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

12 And it shall come to pass, as soon as I am gone from thee, that the Spirit of the LORD shall carry thee whither I know not; and so when I come and tell Ahab, and he cannot find thee, he shall slay me: but I thy servant fear the LORD from my youth.

The Spirit of the Lord; the Holy Ghost, to whom the inspiration and conduct of the prophets is commonly ascribed in Holy Scripture, as Isa. xlviii. 16; lxi. 1; Matt. iv. 1; Acts xvi. 6, 7, who might do this either immediately by his own power, or by an angel, or by a strong wind. Shall carry thee whither I know not; such transportations of the prophets having doubtless been usual before this time, as they were after it. See 2 Kings ii. 16; Ezek. iii. 12, 14; Matt. iv. 1; Acts viii. 39. He will slay me; either as a cursed impostor that hath deluded him with vain hopes; or rather, because I did not forthwith seize upon thee, and bring thee to him to receive punishment. I thy servant fear the Lord from my youth: he speaks not these nor the following words in way of vain boasting, but only for his own necessary vindication and preservation, that he might move the prophet to pity and spare him, and not put him upon that hazardous action; which yet he was resolved to do, if the prophet peremptorily required it.

13 Was it not told my lord what I did when Jezebel slew the prophets of the LORD, how I hid an hundred men of the LORD's prophets by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water?

14 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here: and he shall slay me.

15 And Elijah said, As the LORD of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, I will surely shew myself unto him to day.

As the Lord of hosts liveth; the Lord of all the creatures, which are called God's hosts, Gen. ii. 1; Deut. iv. 19; Psal. ciii. 21; cxlviii. 2, and are all subject to his command. He mentions this title as his shield, under the protection whereof he did and durst venture to come into Ahab's presence.

16 So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him: and Ahab went to meet Elijah.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, when Ahab saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel?

Have I at last met with thee, O thou great disturber of my kingdom, the author of this famine, and of all our disquiet and calamities?

18 And he answered, I have not troubled Israel; but thou, and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the LORD, and thou hast followed Baalim.

These calamities are not to be imputed to my passions, but thine and thy father's wickedness, which God punisheth by this means. He answered him thus boldly, because he spoke and acted in God's name, and for his honour and service, whose vassal Ahab was.

19 Now therefore send, and gather to me all Israel unto mount Carmel, and the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves four hundred, which eat at Jezebel's table.

Now therefore send, to wit, messengers, that this controversy between thee and me may be decided, the true cause of these heavy judgments discovered and removed, that so this plague may be removed. Gather to me all Israel, by their deputies, or heads, or representatives, that they may be witnesses of all our transactions. Unto Mount Carmel; not that Carmel in Judah, 1 Sam. xv. 12, but another in Issachar by the midland sea, Josh. xix. 26; Jer. xlv. 18; which he chose as a very convenient place, being not far from the centre of his kingdom, to which all the tribes might conveniently resort; and at some good distance from Samaria, that Jezebel might not hinder his design; and a very high mountain, Amos ix. 3, and that upon the sea, whence he might have the opportunity to discover the rain at its first approach, which he did, ver. 42, &c. And the prophets of Baal; which were dispersed in all the parts of the kingdom. The prophets of the groves; which attended upon those Baals or idols which were worshipped in the groves, which were near the royal city, and much valued and frequented by the king and the queen, 1 Kings xv. 13; xvi. 33; 2 Kings xiii. 6, and therefore were maintained at the queen's charges.

20 So Ahab sent unto all the children of Israel, and gathered the prophets together unto mount Carmel.

He complied with Elijah's motion; partly, because it was so fair and reasonable, that he could not refuse it with honour, nor without the discontent of all his people, this being proposed in order to their deliverance from this terrible famine; partly, because the urgency of the present distress made him willing to try all means to remove it; partly, from a curiosity of seeing some extraordinary events; and principally, because God inclined his heart to close with it.

21 And Elijah came unto all the people, and said, How long halt ye between two opinions? if the LORD be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word.

How long halt ye between two opinions? why do you not make straight paths with your feet? as the phrase is, Heb. xii. 13; why do you walk so lamely and unevenly, being so unsteady in your opinions and practices, and doubting whether it is better to worship God or Baal? If the Lord be God; whom you pretend to worship in the calves, 2 Kings x. 16, 31; compare Exod. xxxii. 4. Follow him; worship him, and him only, and that in such place and manner as he hath commanded you, and not by the calves. But if Baal; if Baal can prove himself to be the true God. The people answered him not a word, being convinced of the reasonableness of his proposition; taught by experience that Jehovah had sent this judgment, and that Baal could not remove it, which had staggered them in their opinion about Baal; yet not daring to disown Baal, for fear of the displeasure of the king, then present.

22 Then said Elijah unto the people, I, even I only, remain a prophet of the LORD; but Baal's prophets are four hundred and fifty men.

I only remain, to wit, here present, publicly to own and plead the cause of God; for he opposeth himself only to Baal's four hundred and fifty prophets, because they only were present; the prophets of the groves being, it seems, not permitted by Jezebel (through her pride, or obstinacy, or care and kindness to them) to go thither. xxii. 6. As for the other prophets of the Lord, many of them were slain by Ahab or Jezebel, others banished, or hid in caves.

23 Let them therefore give us two bullocks; and let them choose one bullock for themselves, and cut it in pieces, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under: and I will dress the other bullock, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under.

He attempts the decision of this controversy, not by God's word, which was either rejected, or despised, or grossly neglected by the generality of that people; but by a miracle, to which all that had common sense must needs submit. Let them choose one bullock for themselves, which they judge best and fittest for their purpose.

24 And call ye on the name of your gods, and I will call on the name of the LORD: and the God that answereth by fire, let him be God. And all the people answered and said, † It is well spoken.

That answereth by fire, i. e. that shall consume the sacrifice by fire sent from heaven; which the people knew the true God used to do, as Gen. iv. 4; Judg. vi. 21; xiii. 20. All the people; even the Baalites themselves; partly because they could not without great reproach to themselves and Baal refuse so equal a motion; and partly because they were confident of Baal's power and divinity, having probably had some experiments of supernatural and prodigious events done in the worship of Baal by God's just and wise permission, for the hardening of that apostatical and wicked people in their idolatry; as God hath in several ages for the like reason suffered lying wonders to be wrought by the devil, whom they worshipped in and by their idols.

25 And Elijah said unto the prophets of Baal, Choose you one bullock for yourselves, and dress it first; for ye are many; and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.

Ye are many, and I am willing to give you the precedence. This he did, partly because if he had first offered, and God had answered by fire, as he knew that he would do, Baal's priests would have been discouraged, and upon some excuse (which would easily be accepted in regard of the king's authority, and the favour which they had with the people) would have desisted from making the trial on their part; and partly because the disappointment of the priests of Baal, of which he was well assured, would notably prepare the way for the people's more diligent attention unto his words and actions, and cause them to entertain the prophet's good success with more admiration and affection; and this coming last, would leave the greater impression and relish upon their hearts. And this they accepted, because they might think, that if Baal did answer them first, which they presumed he would, the people would be so confirmed and heightened in their opinion of Baal, that they by the king's assistance might murder Elijah before he came to his experiment.

26 And they took the bullock which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, † hear us. But there was no voice, nor any that † answered. And they † leaped upon the altar which was made.

They took the bullock which was given them; which being chosen by them, ver. 25, was now put into their hands by those who had the beasts in their custody, till they were taken away for sacrifice. They dressed it; cut it in pieces, and laid the parts in or upon the wood. From morning; from the time of the morning sacrifice; which advantage Elijah suffered them to take for their sacrifice. Upon the altar; or, over the altar; which might easily be done, the altar being low, and suddenly made for the present use. Or rather, beside (as the Hebrew (al) oft signifies) the altar; or, before it. They used some superstitious, unusual, and disorderly gestures, either pretending to be acted by the spirit of their god, and to be in a kind of holy rage, and religious ecstasy; or in way of devotion to their god; which they might borrow from the practice of their progenitors, who, amongst other things, used dancing in God's service and presence, as Exod. xv. 20; xxxiii. 19; Judg. xxi. 21; 2 Sam. vi. 14. Which was made, Heb. which he made; either, first, Elijah; which some think was already made, though the making of it be not mentioned till afterwards, ver. 31, and that it was their design, by leaping upon his altar, to overthrow it. Or rather, secondly, Ahab on their behalf; or any other person; that being only a Hebraism, the third person active being put for the passive verb, as our translators well render it.

27 And it came to pass at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry † aloud: for he is a god; either † he is talking, or he † is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked.

At noon; when they had long tried all means in vain. Elijah mocked them; derided them and their gods, which were indeed, and had now proved themselves to be, ridiculous and contemptible things. By this example we see that all jesting is not unlawful, but only that which in-trencheth upon piety and good manners. See on Eph. v. 4. Either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey; he is employed about some other business, and hath not leisure to mind you; for being a god of a small and narrow understanding, he cannot mind two things at once, and you are immodest and unreasonable to expect it from him.

28 And they cried aloud, and cut themselves after their manner with knives and lancets, till † the blood gushed out upon them.

They cried aloud; as if Elijah had spoken the truth, and their god needed rousing. Cut themselves; mingling their own blood with their sacrifices; as knowing by experience, that nothing was more acceptable to their Baal (which was indeed the devil) than human blood, and hoping hereby to move their god to pity and help them. And this indeed was the practice of divers heathens in the worship of their false gods, as is manifest both from Scripture, as Lev. xix. 28; Deut. xiv. 1; 1 Kings xviii. 28, and from the express testimonies of Plutarch, Lucian, Apuleius, and many others.

29 And it came to pass, when midday was past, and they prophesied until the time of the † offering of the evening sacrifice, that there was neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any † that regarded.

They prophesied, i. e. praised, and prayed unto, and worshipped their god; for so the word prophesying is used, 1 Sam. x. 10; xix. 20, &c.; 1 Chron. xxv. 2, 3; Matt. vii. 22; 1 Cor. xi. 4; xiv. 5, 6, &c. Of the evening sacrifice, Heb. of the sacrifice; which being here opposed to the time of their offering, which was the morning, ver. 26, must needs be meant of the evening sacrifice; of which see Exod. xxix. 39, &c.; which is called the sacrifice, by way of eminency, because it was more solemn, and public, and frequented than the morning sacrifice; of which divers reasons may be given. See Exod. xii. 6; Psal. cxli. 2; Acts iii. 1. Nor any that regarded, Heb. there was no attention; either, first, Of their god, who was so far from answering, that he did not mind any of their words and actions. Or, secondly, Of the people, who were now tired out with so long attention and expectation; and therefore more readily deserted them, and approached to Elijah and his altar, at his call, ver. 30.

30 And Elijah said unto all the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him. And he repaired the altar of the LORD that was broken down.

Come near unto me; come away from these impudent deceivers to me, and expect from me what satisfaction you desire. He repaired the altar, which by the people's help was quickly done; the materials being all ready, and very slightly put together, only for the present occasion. The altar of the Lord; which had been built there by some of their ancestors for the offering of sacrifice to the God of Israel, which was frequently done in high places, of which this was none of the least eminent ones; but being for some time neglected, it needed reparations. That was broken down; either, first, By the priests of Baal at this time, who leaped upon it to that end; of which see on ver. 26. Or rather, secondly, By some of the Baalites, out of their enmity to the true God, whose temple, because they could not reach, they showed their malignity in destroying his altars, chap. xix. 14.

31 And Elijah took twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, unto whom the word of the LORD came, saying, "Israel shall be thy name :

This he did, partly, to renew the covenant between God and all the tribes, as Moses did, Exod. xxiv. 4; partly, to show that he prayed and acted in the name and for the service of the God of all the patriarchs, and of all the tribes of Israel, and for their good; and partly, to teach the people, that though the tribes were divided as to their civil government, they ought all to be united in the worship of the same God, and in the same religion. Unto whom the word of the Lord came; which Jacob was graciously answered by God when he prayed to him, and was honoured with the glorious title of Israel, which noted his prevalency with God and men. And I, calling upon the same God, doubt not of a like gracious answer; and if ever you mean to have your prayers granted, you must not seek to Baal for it, who, as you now see, neither hears nor regards his most devout worshippers; but unto the God of Jacob; and if you would recover the honour which was once conferred upon Jacob, and continued a long time to his posterity, you must return to that God from whom you are revolted.

32 And with the stones he built an altar *in the name of the LORD: and he made a trench about the altar, as great as would contain two measures of seed.

With the assistance of the people, who readily yielded their helping hand, he built an altar; which, though generally forbidden, he might do, because he did it by the command and suggestion of God, who can dispense with his own laws, and upon apparent and urgent necessity, and for a work of great mercy, (to which even by God's command the ceremonial laws must give place, Hos. vi. 6; Mark ii. 27.) even for the conversion of the Israelites, whom it was impossible to bring to the altar of Jerusalem at this time. In the name of the Lord; by the authority of God, and for his worship. Two measures, i. e. two third parts of an ephah; which shows that the trench was of a competent largeness.

33 And he †put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid him on the wood, and said, Fill four barrels with water, and †pour it on the burnt sacrifice, and on the wood.

Fill four barrels with water; which they could quickly fetch, either from the river Kishon; or if that was dried up, from the sea; both which were at the foot of the mountain. See Jer. xli. 18. Pour it on the burnt-sacrifice, and on the wood: this he did, to make the miracle more glorious, and more unquestionable, and so more successful.

34 And he said, Do it the second time. And they did it the second time. And he said, Do it the third time. And they did it the third time.

35 And the water †ran round about the altar; and he filled * the trench also with water.

36 And it came to pass at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near, and said, LORD † God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, † let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that † I have done all these things at thy word.

At the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice; which time he chose, that he might unite his prayers with the prayers of the godly Jews at Jerusalem, who at that time assembled together to pray, Acts iii. 1. That I have done all these things; brought this famine, gathered the people hither, and done what I have done, or am doing here. At thy word; not in compliance with my own passions, but in obedience to thy command, as thy agent and minister. For that action of shutting up heaven, and that of killing the priests of Baal, must needs expose him to great envy and reproach; which made this public vindication necessary, as it was also effectual, being witnessed from heaven.

37 Hear me, O LORD, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the LORD God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again.

That thou hast turned their heart; that they may feel so powerful and sudden a change in their hearts, that they may know it is thy work, and the effect of thy grace to them, and in them. Or, when thou hast turned, &c., or, because thou, &c. So the particle van is oft used; and the sense is, That they may know thee to be the true God, by the effects of thy Divine power, in converting their hearts, and that in so miraculous a way, and in answer to my prayers. Back again unto thee, from whom they have revolted.

38 Then † the fire of the LORD fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench.

39 And when all the people saw it, they fell on their faces: and they said, The LORD, he is the God; the LORD, he is the God.

They fell on their faces, in way of acknowledgment and adoration of the true God. He is the God; he alone; and Baal is a dull and senseless idol. And they double the words, to note their abundant satisfaction and assurance of the truth of their assertion.

40 And Elijah said unto them, † Take the prophets of Baal; let not one of them escape. And they took them: and Elijah brought them down to the brook Kishon, and † slew them there.

Elijah said unto them; he takes the opportunity, whilst the people's hearts were warm with the fresh sense of this great miracle: Elijah brought them down to the brook Kishon, that their blood might be poured into that river, and thence conveyed into the sea, and might not defile the holy land. Slew them there. Quest. How could Elijah do this, seeing he was but a private person? Answer. First, He had no doubt the consent of all the heads of the people, who were here assembled; and of the king too, who durst not resist the universal torrent, and could not deny that they were impostors, and worthy of death; and probably was by the prophet assured of rain when this was done. Answer. Secondly, As these idolatrous priests were manifestly under a sentence of death, passed upon such by the sovereign Lord of life and death, Deut. xiii., xvii.; so Elijah had sufficient authority to execute it, as being a prophet, and an extraordinary minister of God's vengeance against sinners, now especially when the magistrate so grossly neglected his duty therein.

41 ¶ And Elijah said unto Ahab, Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is † a sound of abundance of rain.

Get thee up from the river, where the king and he had been present at the slaughter of Baal's priests, to thy tent; which probably was pitched on the side of Carmel. Eat and drink; take comfort, and refresh thyself; for neither the king nor any of the people could have any leisure to eat, being wholly intent upon the decision of the great controversy. There is a sound of abundance of rain; the rain is as certainly and speedily coming, as if I did actually see it, or hear the noise which it makes. God's wrath is now appeased, and thou shalt have no cause to repent of this day's work.

42 So Ahab went up to eat and to drink. And Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; ¹ and he cast himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees.

1 James 5. 17, 18.

Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; where he might secretly and ardently pour out his prayers unto God; and whence he might look towards the sea, and discern when the rain was coming. Put his face between his knees; he either sat, or rather kneeled upon his knees, and then cast down his face to the ground between his knees; either in token of profound reverence and humility, or out of fervency of spirit, which oft disposeth men to uncouth gestures, which at other times, or in other men, would be ridiculous; but in them, and in that case, are usual and allowed: or, that turning away his eyes from all outward objects, he might be more intent and earnest upon his work, or pray to God without distraction.

43 And said to his servant, Go up now, look toward the sea. And he went up, and looked, and said, There is nothing. And he said, Go again seven times.

Go up now, whilst I continue praying. Look toward the sea; whence clouds and vapours usually arise. Elijah desired to have timely notice of the very first appearance and signification of rain, not out of vanity or ambition, but that Ahab and the people might know that it was obtained from Jehovah by the prophet's prayers, and thereby be confirmed in the true religion. Go again seven times; let us not be dejected for some disappointments, but continue to wait upon God, who will answer me, and that speedily.

44 And it came to pass at the seventh time, that he said, Behold, there ariseth a little cloud out of the sea, like a man's hand. And he said, Go up, say unto Ahab, † Prepare thy chariot, and get thee down, that the rain stop thee not.

45 And it came to pass in the mean while, that the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. And Ahab rode, and went to Jezreel.

The hand of the Lord was on Elijah: God gave him more than natural and ordinary strength, whereby he was enabled to outrun Ahab's chariot, and that for so many miles together. He girded up his loins, that his garments, which were then long, might not hinder him. See 2 Kings iv. 29; ix. 1. Ran before Ahab; partly, to show how ready he was to honour and serve the king, if he did not exalt himself above or against God; partly, that by this humble and self-denying carriage it might appear that what he had done was not from envy, or ambition, or human passion, but only from a just zeal for God's glory; partly, that by his presence with the king, and his courtiers who attended upon him, he might animate and oblige them to proceed in the well-begun reformation of religion; and partly, to demonstrate that he was neither ashamed of, nor afraid for, what he had done, though he knew how Jezebel would resent it, but durst venture himself in the midst of his enemies, as being confident of the Divine power and protection.

CHAP. XIX.

Elijah, threatened by Jezebel, fleeth to Beer-sheba; is comforted by an angel, 1—8. At Mount Horeb, complaining to God, he is strengthened by a special revelation, 9—14; is sent to anoint Hazael, Jehu, and Elisha, 15—18. Elisha followeth Elijah, 19—21.

AND Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, and withal how he had ^{a ch. 18. 40.} slain all the prophets with the sword.

Ahab told Jezebel this for his vindication, and her satisfaction. All the prophets, to wit, of Baal; not of the groves, who were not present, as may be gathered from chap. xviii. 19, 22; xxii. 6.

2 Then Jezebel sent a messenger unto Elijah, saying, ^{b Ruth 1. 17. ch. 20. 10. 2 Kin. 6. 31.} So let the gods do to me, and more also, if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by to morrow about this time.

Jezebel sent a messenger unto Elijah; she gives him notice of it beforehand; partly, out of the height of her spirit, as scorning to kill him secretly and surreptitiously, and resolving to make him a public sacrifice; partly, out of her impatience, till she had breathed out her rage, which she could do speedily, when it required some time and preparation to seize him, who was now so much esteemed and favoured by all the people; partly, because she supposed that he who had the confidence to come thither, (where, it seems, she was at this time,) would still have the same confidence to stay there, and be obliged in honour to maintain his ground; and principally, from God's all-disposing providence, that so he might have an opportunity of escaping. So let the gods do to me, and more also: so far was she from being changed by that most evident miracle, that she persists in her former idolatry, and adds to it a mad and monstrous confidence, that in spite of God she would destroy his prophet.

3 And when he saw that, he arose, and went for his life, and came to Beer-sheba, which belongeth to Judah, and left his servant there.

Went for his life, i. e. to save his life; or, according to his soul, or mind; whereby it may be intimated, that he did not flee from Jezebel by the hand or direction of the Lord, by which he came thither, chap. xviii. 46, but because of his own fear and apprehension of danger; for this may seem to be an act of human frailty. For God had brought him hither, and his presence might seem very necessary here to encourage and engage the king and people to go on to destroy the priests of the groves, and to purge out idolatry; and his withdrawing, as we see, did discourage all the rest, and occasioned their return to idolatry again; and having had such a late and ample experience of God's all-sufficiency in protecting him against the king and four hundred and fifty of Baal's priests, and the current of the people incensed against him for the famine, he had little reason to fear the threats of an impatient woman, whom God could cut off in a moment. But Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, James v. 17, which probably is said with respect to his fear and discontent, manifested here and ver. 4. And lest he should be exalted above measure (which was also Paul's case, 2 Cor. xii. 7) for his eminent gifts, and graces, and miraculous works, God saw fit to withdraw his grace, and to leave him to himself, that he might be sensible of his own impotency and sinfulness, and might not dare to take any part of God's honour to himself. Which belonged to Judah; either, first, To the tribe of Judah, according to the first division; for Simeon's part, in which Beer-sheba was, was afterwards taken out of it. Or, secondly, To the kingdom of Judah. Left his servant there; partly, that he might abide there in safety; and partly, that he should wait there till his return: partly, because he would not expose him to those perils and hardships which he expected; and partly, because he desired solitude, that he might more freely converse with God.

4 ¶ But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness, and came and sat down under a juniper tree: and he ^{c Num. 11. 15. Jonah 4. 3. 8.} requested † for himself that he might die; and said, It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life ; for I am not better than my fathers.

Into the wilderness ; the vast wilderness of Arabia. He durst not stay in Judah, though good Jehoshaphat reigned there, because he was allied to Ahab, and was a man of an easy temper, whom Ahab might circumvent, and either by force or art seize upon Elijah. For himself, Heb. for his life, or his soul, that it might be taken away from his body. Or, with his soul, as it is Isa. xxvi. 9, i. e. he desired it heartily or fervently. Which he did, not only for his own sake, that he might be freed from his great fears and troubles ; but especially from his zeal for God's glory, which he saw and would be dreadfully eclipsed by the relapse of the Israelites into idolatry, and by Elijah's death, if it should be procured by the hands of Jezebel, or of the worshippers of Baal ; and therefore he wished to die in peace, and by the hand of God. It is enough ; I have lived long enough for thy service, and am not like to do thee any more service ; neither my words nor works are like to do any good upon these unstable and incorrigible people. I am not better than my fathers, that I should continue in life, when other prophets who have gone before me have lost their lives by Jezebel, or other persecutors.

5 And as he lay and slept under a juniper tree, behold, then an angel touched him, and said unto him, Arise and eat.

6 And he looked, and, behold, there was a cake baked on the coals, and a cruse of water at his †head. And he did eat and drink, and laid him down again.

7 And the angel of the LORD came again the second time, and touched him, and said, Arise and eat ; because the journey is too great for thee.

i. e. Above thy strength, now especially when thou art faint, and weary, and fasting.

8 And he arose, and did eat and drink, and went in the strength of that meat †forty days and forty nights unto †Horeb the mount of God.

In the strength of that meat ; God giving that food a far greater and more durable virtue than ordinary. Unto Horeb : he wandered hither and thither for forty days, till at last he came to Horeb, which in the direct road was not above three or four days' journey.

9 ¶ And he came thither unto a cave, and lodged there ; and, behold, the word of the LORD came to him, and he said unto him, What doest thou here, Elijah ?

A tacit reproof. This is not thy proper place, nor the station in which I set thee, which was in Israel, to turn that backsliding people, to which end I gave thee my help, and would have proceeded to assist thee further, if thou hadst continued there. Nor did I give thee those excellent gifts to lie idle in this wilderness, but to employ them for thy people's good, whom now thou hast deserted, and art come hither, not by my command, but through thy own fear and cowardice.

10 And he said, † I have been very † jealous for the LORD God of hosts : for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and † slain thy prophets with the sword ; and † I, even I only, am left ; and they seek my life, to take it away.

I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts ; I have not been wholly wanting to my vocation, but have executed my office with zeal for God's honour and service, and with the hazard of my own life ; and am fled hither, not being able to endure to see the dishonour done to thy name by their obstinate idolatry and wickedness. Thrown down thine altars ; those which were erected for thy worship in high places, which they did not destroy because they were to be abolished by thy command, Deut. xii., but out of mere contempt and opposition against thee, and therefore they suffered the altars of Baal to stand. I only am left, to wit, of all thy prophets, I mean, which do boldly and publicly plead thy cause ; for the rest of thy prophets who are not slain hide themselves, and dare not appear to do thee any service. They seek my life to take it away : I despair of doing them any good ; for instead of receiving my testimony, they hunt for my life.

11 And he said, Go forth, and stand † upon the mount before the LORD. And, † behold, the LORD passed by, and † a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the LORD ; but the LORD was not in the wind : and after the wind an earthquake ; but the LORD was not in the earthquake :

The Lord passed by ; either, first, by his harbingers ; for, as it follows, the Lord was not yet there ; or, secondly, himself. And so this is a brief and general description of the thing, after which the manner of it is particularly explained. Rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks ; whereby he both prepares Elijah to receive this discovery of God with greatest humility, reverence, and godly fear ; and signifies his almighty and irresistible power to break the hardest hearts of the Israelites, and to bear down all opposition that was or should be made against him in the discharge of his office. The Lord was not in the wind ; the Lord did not vouchsafe his special and gracious presence to Elijah in that wind, where he confidently expected him ; which possibly was, either, first, To qualify the excessive fervour and passion of Elijah, which mixed itself with his zeal for God, and to make him more mild in his censures, and more meek and patient in waiting for the conversion of Israel ; wherein he might sooner expect God's presence and blessed success, than in the storm of anger or impatience. Or, secondly, To teach him not to wonder if God did not accompany his terrible administration at Mount Carmel with the presence of his grace, to turn the hearts of the Israelites to himself, as he desired, but God for wise and just reasons saw fit to deny.

12 And after the earthquake a fire ; but the LORD was not in the fire : and after the fire a still small voice.

Wherein it is implied that God was present ; which peradventure was to insinuate, that God would do his work in and for Israel in his own time, not by might or power, but by his own Spirit, Zech. iv. 6, which moves with a powerful, but yet with a sweet and gentle gale.

13 And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that † he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entering in of the cave. † And, behold, there came a voice unto him, and said, What doest thou here, Elijah ?

*He wrapped his face in his mantle, through horror and dread of God's presence, being sensible that he was neither worthy nor able to endure the sight of God with open face. Compare Gen. xvi. 13, with Exod. iii. 6. Stood in the entering in of the cave ; which God commanded him to do ; and as he was going towards the mouth of the cave, he was affrighted and stopped in his course, by the dreadful wind, and earthquake, and fire ; and when these were past, he prosecutes his journey, and goeth on to the mouth of the cave, and there stands still. Or the words may be rendered, after (as vau is elsewhere used) he was gone out, and standing in the mouth of the cave ; which may be mentioned as the reason why he covered his face, because now he wanted the shelter of the cave. What doest thou here, Elijah ? what before he spake by an angel, he now speaks to him again immediately.*

14 † And he said, I have been very † jealous for the LORD God of hosts : because the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword ; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away.

15 And the LORD said unto him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderness of ^{p 2 Kings 8.} Damascus: ²and when thou comest, anoint Hazael to be king over Syria:

Return on thy way, by which thou camest; for so in part lay the way from Horeb to Damascus. Anoint Hazael to be king over Syria: anoint; either, first, Figuratively, i. e. appoint or declare him king; which was done, 2 Kings viii. 12; for this word is oft used of them who were never anointed with oil, Psal. xlv. 7; Isa. xlv. 1; lxi. 1; Zech. iv. 14; Dan. ix. 24. Or, secondly, Properly; which might be done, though it be not related. Again, anoint, either by thyself, or by another; for so he anointed Jehu by Elisha, 2 Kings ix. 1, 6.

16 And ^{q 2 Kings 9.} Jehu the son of Nimshi shalt thou anoint to be king over Israel: and ^{r Luke 4, 27.} Elisha the son of Shaphat of Abel-meholah shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.

The son of Nimshi, i. e. his grandson, for he was the son of Jehoshaphat, 2 Kings ix. 2; he constituted Elisha prophet, by casting his mantle over him, here, ver. 19.

17 And ^{s 2 Kings 9.} it shall come to pass, ^{12. & 9. 14.} that him that escapeth the sword of Hazael ^{&c. & 10. 6.} shall Jehu slay: and him that escapeth ^{&c. & 13. 3.} from the sword of Jehu shall Elisha slay.

Here the order of times seems to be perverted; for Elisha was prophet before Jehu or Hazael were kings, and Hazael was king before Jehu. But that is of no moment as to the substance of the thing threatened, which is only this, that one or other of these should infallibly execute God's judgments upon the apostatical Israelites. Elisha is said to slay them, either because he slew those forty-two children, 2 Kings ii. 24, besides others whom upon like occasions he might destroy; or because he by God's appointment inflicted the famine, 2 Kings vi. 31; or rather, by the sword which came out of his mouth, as Isa. xlix. 2; Rev. i. 16; xix. 15, 21, by his cutting prophecies and threatenings of God's judgments; the prophets being said to pull down and to destroy what they only declare and foretell shall be pulled down, &c. Hazael began to slay them before Jehu was king, 2 Kings viii. 28, though his cruelty was much increased afterward, 2 Kings x. 32; xiii. 1—3; and Jehu destroyed those whom Hazael did not, as king Joram himself, and Ahaziah, and his forty-two brethren, 2 Kings ix. 24, 27; x. 14, all the near relations of wicked Ahab.

18 ^{u Rom. 11. 4.} Yet ^{v Or, I will} I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, ^{x See Hos.} and every mouth ^{13. 2.} which hath not kissed him.

I have left, or, I have reserved to myself; I have by my grace kept from the common contagion; therefore thou art mistaken to think that thou art left alone, or that the people are universally corrupted. Or, I will reserve, from the slaughters last mentioned, and from Jezebel's rage. Seven thousand; either definitely so many; or rather, indefinitely, for many thousands; the number of seven being oft used for a great number, as Lev. xxvi. 18; Psal. xiii. 6; Micah v. 5; Zech. iii. 9; Luke xvii. 4. For it is altogether improbable that all the Israelites except seven thousand did worship Baal; except Baal be here synecdochically put for all their idols, and the calves among others. All the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him, i. e. all those who have not worshipped Baal, nor professed reverence or subjection to him; which idolaters did to their idols, by bowing the knee, Rom. xi. 4; compare Rom. xiv. 11; Phil. ii. 10, and by kissing them, or by kissing their hand with their mouth before them, and in respect to them; of which mention is made both in Scripture, as Job xxxi. 26, 27; Hos. xiii. 2; compare Psal. ii. 12, and in Pliny, Apuleius, and other profane authors. And God chooseth these expressions here, to teach men that it is not sufficient to deny inward reverence of mind and heart to idols, unless they do also forbear all outward significations of worship or reverence to them; and that he will own none for his people that do otherwise.

19 ¶ So he departed thence, and found Elisha the son of Shaphat, who was plowing with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth: and Elijah passed by him, and cast his mantle upon him.

He with the twelfth; who had twelve ploughs going, whereof eleven were managed by his servants, and the last by himself; according to the simplicity and humility of those ancient times, in which men of good worth and estate submitted themselves to the meanest employments. Cast his mantle upon him; by that ceremony conferring upon him the office of a prophet, which God was pleased to accompany with the gifts and graces of his Spirit, wherewith he endowed and qualified him for it. The mantle was the usual habit of the prophets. See 2 Kings i. 8; Zech. xiii. 4. But whether he did also anoint him is uncertain. See the note on ver. 16.

20 And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, ^{y Matt. 8.} Let me, I pray thee, ^{z Luke 9. 61,} kiss my father and my mother, and ^{62.} then I will follow thee. And he said unto him, ^{+ Heb. Go} Go back again: for what have I ^{return.} done to thee?

He ran after Elijah; being powerfully moved by God's Spirit to follow Elijah, and wholly to give up himself to his function. And said; or, but he said; or, yet he said. Let me kiss my father and my mother, i. e. bid them farewell, by the usual ceremony. See Gen. xxix. 11; xxxi. 28; Acts xx. 37. Go back again, and take thy leave of them, as thou desirest, and then return to me again. What have I done to thee? either, first, To hinder thee from performing that office. That employment to which I have called thee doth not require an alienation of thy heart from thy parents, nor the total neglect of them. Or, secondly, To make such a change in thee, that thou shouldst be willing to forsake thy parents, and lands, and all, and desire only this liberty to go and bid them farewell, that thou mayst follow me. Whence comes this marvellous change? It is not from me, who did only throw my mantle over thee; but from a higher power, even from God's Spirit, which hath changed thy heart, and consecrated thee to thy prophetic office; which therefore it concerns thee vigorously to execute, and wholly to devote thyself to it.

21 And he returned back from him, and took a yoke of oxen, and slew them, and ^{z 2 Sam. 24.} boiled their flesh with the instruments of the oxen, and gave unto the people, and they did eat. Then he arose, and went after Elijah, and ministered unto him.

He returned back from him; from Elijah to his parents, whom when he had seen and kissed, he returned to the field where Elijah was. With the instruments of the oxen, i. e. with the wood belonging to the plough, &c., to which more was added, as occasion required; but that he burned, to show his total relinquishing of his former employment. Gave unto the people, i. e. he made thereof a feast for his servants who had been ploughing with him, and for him, and his other friends and neighbours who came to take their leave of him. Hereby he showed how willingly and joyfully he forsook all his friends, that he might serve God in that high and honourable employment.

CHAP. XX.

Ben-hadad, not content with Ahab's homage, besiegeth Samaria, 1—12. By the direction of a prophet the Syrians are twice beaten, and Ben-hadad hides himself, 13—30. The Syrians submit themselves, and Ahab maketh a covenant with Ben-hadad, 31—34. The prophet by a parable reproveth Ahab, and denounceth judgments against him, 35—43.

901. AND Ben-hadad the king of Syria gathered all his host together: and there were thirty and two kings with him, and horses, and chariots: and he went up and besieged Samaria, and warred against it.

Ben-hadad; called Adad by Josephus, and Ader by the LXX., and Adores by Justin; such changes of names being usual in their translations into other languages, and by other authors. Gathered all his host together, to war against Israel; wherein his design was to amplify the conquests which his father had made, chap. xv. 20, but God's design was to punish Israel for their apostacy and idolatry. Thirty and two kings; petty kings, such as were in Canaan in Joshua's time, who indeed were no more than governors of cities or small territories. These were either subject or tributary to Ben-hadad, or hired by him.

2 And he sent messengers to Ahab king of Israel into the city, and said unto him, Thus saith Ben-hadad,

3 Thy silver and thy gold is mine; thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest, are mine.

I challenge them as my own, and accordingly expect to have them forthwith delivered into my possession, if thou expectest peace with me.

4 And the king of Israel answered and said, My lord, O king, according to thy saying, I am thine, and all that I have.

I do so far comply with thy demand, that I will own thee for my lord, and myself for thy vassal and tributary; and will hold my wives, and children, and estate as by thy favour, and with an acknowledgment. But it is not likely that he would deliver up his wives and children into the barbarian's hand, or that his proud and imperious wife Jezebel would permit him to do so.

5 And the messengers came again, and said, Thus speaketh Ben-hadad, saying, Although I have sent unto thee, saying, Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children;

Although I did before demand not only the dominion of thy treasures, and wives, and children, as thou mayst seem to understand me, but also the propriety and actual possession of them, wherewith I would then have been contented;

6 Yet I will send my servants unto thee to-morrow about this time, and they shall search thine house, and the houses of thy servants; and it shall be, that whatsoever is †pleasant in thine eyes, they shall put it in their hand, and take it away.

Yet now I will not accept of those terms, but, together with thy royal treasures, I expect all the treasures of thy servants or subjects; nor will I wait till thou deliver them to me, but I will send my servants into the city, and they shall have free liberty and power to search out and take away all which they desire, and this to prevent fraud and delay; and then I will grant thee a peace.

7 Then the king of Israel called all the elders of the land, and said, Mark, I pray you, and see how this man seeketh mischief: for he sent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold; and †I denied him not.

The elders of the land; whose counsel and concurrence he now desires in his distress. See how this man seeketh mischief; though he pretended peace, and a friendly agreement upon these terms propounded, it is apparent by those additional demands that he intends nothing less than our utter ruin. I denied him not; I granted his demands in the sense before mentioned.

8 And all the elders and all the people saw unto him, Hearken not unto him, nor consent.

9 Wherefore he said unto the messengers of Ben-hadad, Tell my lord the king, All that thou didst send for to thy servant at the first I will do: but this thing I may not do. And the messengers departed, and brought him word again.

This thing I may not do; if I would do it, I cannot, because my people will not suffer it.

10 And Ben-hadad sent unto him, and said, ^aThe gods do so unto me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that †follow me.

If I do not assault thy city with so potent and numerous an army, that shall turn all thy city into a heap of dust, and shall be sufficient to carry it all away, though every soldier take but one handful of it: see the like boast 2 Sam. xvii. 13.

11 And the king of Israel answered and said, Tell him, Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.

Do not triumph before the fight and victory, for the events of war are uncertain.

12 And it came to pass, when Ben-hadad heard this †message, as he was ^bdrinking, he and the kings in the †pavilions, that he said unto his servants, †Set yourselves in array. And they set themselves in array against the city.

Set yourselves in array; put yourselves and engines in order to make the assault.

13 ¶ And, behold, there †came a prophet unto Ahab king of Israel, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Hast thou seen all this great multitude? behold, ^cI will deliver it into thine hand this day; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

There came a prophet; who having hid himself before, now ventures to come to Ahab, having this welcome message in his mouth. Thus saith the Lord: God, though forsaken and neglected by Ahab, prevents him with his gracious promise of help; partly, that Ahab and the idolatrous Israelites might hereby be fully convinced, and won to God, or left without all excuse; and partly, that Ben-hadad's intolerable pride, and contempt of God, and of his people, might be repressed and punished; and partly, that the remnant of his prophets and people who were involved in the same calamity with the rest of the Israelites might be preserved and delivered. Thou shalt know that I am the Lord, and not Baal, because I will deliver thee, which he cannot do.

14 And Ahab said, By whom? And he said, Thus saith the LORD, Even by the †young men of the princes of the provinces. Then he said, Who shall †order the battle? And he answered, Thou.

By the young men of the princes of the provinces; not by old and experienced soldiers, but by those young men; either the sons of the princes and great men of the land, who were generally fled thither for safety; or their pages or servants that used to attend upon them, who are bred up delicately, and seem unfit for the business. He answered, Thou, partly to encourage the young men to fight courageously, as being in the presence of their prince; and partly that it might appear that the victory was wholly due to God's gracious and powerful providence, and not to the valour or worthiness of the instruments.

15 Then he numbered the young men of the princes of the provinces, and they were two hundred and thirty two: and after them he numbered all the people, even all the children of Israel, being seven thousand.

All the children of Israel; either, 1. All the men; for they only went out to battle; and the rest of the men might be consumed with the sword or famine, or other judgments. Or rather, 2. All the men of war, or all that were fit to go out to war; all except those whom their age, or infirmity, or other sufficient causes excused. Being seven thousand; which number may possibly be noted with respect unto those seven thousand, commended chap. xix. 18, for whose sakes principally God gave this deliverance.

16 And they went out at noon. But

d ver. 11.
ch. 18. 2. Ben-hadad was ^ddrinking himself drunk in the pavilions, he and the kings, the thirty and two kings that helped him.

They went out at noon; when they were eating, and drinking, and secure from all fear and expectation of an assault.

17 And the young men of the princes of the provinces went out first; and Ben-hadad sent out, and they told him, saying, There are men come out of Samaria.

18 And he said, Whether they be come out for peace, take them alive; or whether they be come out for war, take them alive.

He bids them not fight; for he thought they needed not to strike one stroke, and that the Israelites could not stand the first brunt.

19 So these young men of the princes of the provinces came out of the city, and the army which followed them.

20 And they slew every one his man: and the Syrians fled; and Israel pursued them: and Ben-hadad the king of Syria escaped on an horse with the horsemen.

They slew every one his man, i. e. him who came to fight with him, or to seize upon him, as Ben-hadad had commanded. The Syrians fled; being amazed at the unexpected and undaunted courage of the Israelites, and being struck with a Divine terror.

21 And the king of Israel went out, and smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Syrians with a great slaughter.

Went out, i. e. proceeded further in his march, and fought against them. The horses and chariots, i. e. the men that fought from them, or belonged to them; for so horses and chariots are sometimes taken. See on 1 Sam. xiii. 5.

22 ¶ And the prophet came to the king of Israel, and said unto him, Go, strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou doest: ^efor at the return of the year the king of Syria will come up against thee.

e 2 Sam. 11.

Mark, and see what thou doest; consider what is fit and necessary for thee to do by way of preparation, or prevention. At the return of the year; next year about this time, when the season comes of going forth to battle; of which see 2 Sam. xi. 1; 1 Chron. xx. 1; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10.

23 And the servants of the king of Syria said unto him, Their gods are gods of the hills; therefore they were stronger than we; but let us fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they.

The servants of the king of Syria suppose that their gods were no better than the Syrian gods, (which the idolatry of the Israelites had given them too great cause to imagine,) and that there were many gods who had each his particular charge and jurisdiction; which was the opinion of all heathen nations, that some were gods of the woods, others of the rivers, and others of the mountains; and they fancied these to be the latter, because the land of Canaan was a mountainous land, Deut. xii. 2; and the great temple of their god at Jerusalem stood upon a hill, and so did Samaria, where they had received their last blow: or because the Israelites did generally chose high places for the worship of their gods. It is observable that they do not impute their ill success to their negligence, and drunkenness, and bad conduct, or cowardice, of which they were really guilty; nor to the valour of the Israelites; but to a Divine power, which indeed was visible in it. Let us fight against them in the plain; wherein there was not only superstition, but policy, because the Syrians most excelled the Israelites in horses, which are most serviceable in plain ground.

24 And do this thing, Take the kings away, every man out of his place, and put captains in their rooms:

The kings being of softer education, and less experienced in military matters, were less fit for his service; and being many of them but mercenaries, and therefore less concerned in his good success, would be more negligent and cautious in venturing themselves for his good. Captains, i. e. experienced soldiers of his own subjects, who will faithfully obey the commands of the general, (to which the kings would not so readily yield,) and use their utmost skill and valour for their own interest and advancement.

25 And number thee an army, like the army † that thou hast lost, horse for horse, and chariot for chariot: and we will fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they. And he hearkened unto their voice, and did so.

† Heb. that was fallen.

26 And it came to pass at the return of the year, that Ben-hadad numbered the Syrians, and went up to 'Aphék, † to fight against Israel.

900.

Not that Aphék in Judah, of which Josh. xiii. 4; xv. 53; but that in Asher, of which Josh. xix. 30; Judg. i. 31, nigh unto which was the great plain of Galilee. And this seems to be one of those cities which Ben-hadad's father had taken from Israel, ver. 34. Here also the Syrians might retreat, if they should be worsted.

† Josh. 13. 4.
† Heb. to the war with Israel.

27 And the children of Israel were numbered, and ‖ were all present, and went against them: and the children of Israel pitched before them like two little flocks of kids; but the Syrians filled the country.

‖ Or, were victualled.

Were all present, i. e. all the forces of the Israelites were here gathered together to oppose the Syrians; so if those had been conquered, all had been lost. Went against them; being persuaded and encouraged so to do; partly to prevent the mischiefs of a siege in Samaria, and the waste of all the rest of their country; and partly by the remembrance of their former success, and an expectation of the same assistance from God again. Pitched before them; probably upon some hilly ground, where they might secure themselves, and watch for advantage against their enemies; which may be the reason why the Syrians durst not assault them before the seventh day, ver. 29. Like two little flocks of kids, i. e. few, and weak, and heartless; being also for conveniency of fighting, and that they might seem to be more than they were, divided into two bodies.

28 ¶ And there came a man of God, and spake unto the king of Israel, and said, Thus saith the LORD, Because the Syrians have said, The LORD is God of the hills, but he is not God of the vallies, therefore ^gwill I deliver all this great multitude into thine hand, and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

g ver. 12.

Because the Syrians have said; which he knew, either by common report, strengthened by their present choice of a plain ground for the battle; or rather, by revelation from God, who discovered their secret counsels, 2 Kings vi. 12. I am the Lord, to wit, the universal Lord of all places, and persons, and things.

29 And they pitched one over against the other seven days. And so it was, that in the seventh day the battle was joined: and the children of Israel slew of the Syrians an hundred thousand footmen in one day.

30 But the rest fled to Aphek, into the city; and there a wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand of the men that were left. And Ben-hadad fled, and came into the city, || into an inner chamber.

The wall, or, the walls, (the singular number for the plural, than which nothing more frequent,) of the city; or of some great castle or fort in or near the city, in which they were now fortifying themselves; or of some part of the city where they lay. Which might possibly happen through natural causes; but most probably was effected by the mighty power of God, then sending some sudden earthquake, or violent storm of wind, which threw down the wall, or walls, upon them; or doing this by the ministry of angels; which cannot be incredible to any man, except to him that denies the truth of all the miracles recorded in the Old and New Testament; which being attested, many of them, by Jews and heathens, it is the height of folly and impudence to deny. For if ever miracle was to be wrought, now seems to have been the proper time and season for it: when the blasphemous Syrians denied the sovereign and infinite power of God, and thereby in some sort obliged him, for his own honour, to give a proof of it; and to show that he was the God of the plains as well as of the mountains, and that he could as effectually destroy them in their strongest holds as in the open fields, and make the very walls, to whose strength they trusted for their defence, to be the instruments of their ruin. But it may be further observed, that it is not said that all these were killed by the fall of this wall; but only that the wall fell upon them, killing some, and wounding others, as is usual in those cases. Nor is it necessary that the wall should fall upon every individual person; but it is sufficient to justify this phrase, if it fell upon the main body of them; for the words in the Hebrew run thus, the wall fell upon twenty-seven thousand (not of the men that are left, as we render it, but) which were left of that great army. Into the city; either, 1. Out of the fields, as the rest of his army did; which is distinctly and particularly noted of him, because he was the most eminent person in it, and the head of it. Compare the title of Psal. xviii. Or, 2. At and from the noise and report of that terrible fall of the wall, or walls; which possibly might be in the outside or suburbs of the city; from whence he fled further into the city. Into an inner chamber; or, a chamber within a chamber; where he supposed he might lie hid, till he had an opportunity of making an escape, or of obtaining mercy.

31 ¶ And his servants said unto him, Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel are merciful kings: let us, I pray thee, ^hput sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads, and go out to the king of Israel: peradventure he will save thy life.

Merciful kings; more merciful than others, because that religion which they had professed taught them humanity, and obliged them to show mercy. Sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads; as a testimony of our sorrow for undertaking this war; and that we have justly forfeited our lives for it, which we submit to their mercy.

32 So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and put ropes on their heads, and came to the king of Israel, and said, Thy servant Ben-hadad saith, I pray thee, let me live. And he said, Is he yet alive? he is my brother.

I do not only freely pardon him, but honour and love him as my brother.

33 Now the men did diligently observe whether any thing would come from him, and did hastily catch it: and they said, Thy brother Ben-hadad. Then he said, Go ye, bring him. Then Ben-hadad came forth to him; and he caused him to come up into the chariot.

Did hastily catch it; or, they took that word for a good token, and made haste and snatched it (i. e. that word) from him, i. e. from his mouth; they repeated the word again, to try whether the king would own it, or it only dropped casually from him: or made haste to know whether it was from him, i. e. whether he spoke this from his heart, or only in dissimulation or design; for it seemed too good news to be true. Thy brother Ben-hadad; understand, liveth; for that he inquired after, ver. 32.

34 And Ben-hadad said unto him, ⁱThe cities, which my father took from thy father, I will restore; and thou shalt make streets for thee in Damascus, as my father made in Samaria. Then said Ahab, I will send thee away with this covenant. So he made a covenant with him, and sent him away.

The cities which my father took from thy father; either, 1. From Baasha, chap. xv. 20, whom he calls Ahab's father, because he was his legal father, i. e. his predecessor. Or, 2. From Omri; in whose time, it seems, he made a successful invasion into the land of Israel, and took some more of the cities, and Aphek amongst the rest, though it be not elsewhere recorded in Scripture. Thou shalt make streets, or markets, &c., places where thou mayst either receive the tribute which I promise to pay thee, or exercise judicature upon my subjects in case of their refusal; or outlets (as the LXX. render it) in or into Damascus, i. e. some strong fort near Damascus, which might curb the kings of Damascus, and keep them from attempting any other invasion into the land of Israel. With this covenant: he takes no notice of his blasphemy against God, nor of the vast injuries which his people had suffered from him; but only minds his own grandeur, and the advancement of his power.

35 ¶ And a certain man of ^hthe sons of the prophets said unto his neighbour ^kin the word of the LORD, ^lSmite me, I pray thee. And the man refused to smite him.

Unto his neighbour, or brother; another son of the prophets. In the word of the Lord; in the name and by the command of God, whereof doubtless he had informed him. Smite me, so as to wound me, ver. 37. He speaks what God commanded him, though it was to his own hurt; by which obedience to God he secretly reproacheth Ahab's disobedience in a far easier matter. And this the prophet by God's appointment desires, that looking like a wounded soldier, he might have the more free access to the king, and discourse with him; which it was very hard for a prophet to obtain, that sort of men being hateful to Ahab, chap. xxii. 8, and to his courtiers. The man refused to smite him; not out of contempt of God's command, but most probably in tenderness and compassion to his brother.

36 Then said he unto him, Because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the LORD, behold, as soon as thou art departed from me, a lion shall slay thee. And as soon as he was departed from him, ^ma lion found him, and slew him.

If the punishment seem too severe for so small a fault, let it be considered, 1. That disobedience to God's express command, especially when it is delivered by a prophet, is a great sin, and no less than capital, Deut. xviii. 19. 2. This fault was much worse in a prophet, who very well knew the authority of God's commands, and this way or manner of publishing them. 3. We cannot judge of the case, because this man might be guilty of many other heinous sins unknown to us, but known to God; for which God might justly cut him off; which God chose to do upon this occasion, that by the severity of this punishment of a prophet's disobedience, proceeding from pity to his brother, he might teach Ahab the greatness of his sin, in sparing him through foolish pity, whom by the laws of religion, and justice, and prudence, and common safety, he should have cut off, and what punishment he might expect for it.

37 Then he found another man, and said, Smite me, I pray thee. And the man smote him, †so that in smiting he wounded him.

38 So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, and disguised himself with ashes upon his face.

That he might sooner gain access to the king, and audience from him. See on ver. 35. With ashes; whereby he changed the colour of it. Or, with a veil, or cloth, or band, (as the Hebrew doctors understand the word,) whereby he might seem to have bound up his wound, which probably was in his face; for it was to be made in a very conspicuous place, that it might be visible to Ahab and others.

39 And ⁿas the king passed by, he cried unto the king: and he said, Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle; and, behold, a man turned aside, and brought a man unto me, and said, Keep this man: if by any means he be missing, then ^oshall thy life be for his life, or else thou shalt †pay a talent of silver.

Thy servant went out: this following relation is not an untruth, but a parable; a usual way of instruction in the eastern parts, and ancient times, and most fit for this occasion, wherein an obscure prophet was to speak to a great king; whose ears were tender, and impatient of a downright reproof, and exceeding partial in his own cause; who by this artifice is made to condemn himself before he was aware of it, and so forced to receive the prophet's just sentence with more patience and moderation: compare 1 Sam. xii., xiv. A man turned aside; my commander or superior, as the manner of his expression here following showeth. Then shall thy life be for his life; thou shalt die in his stead; as below, ver. 42: compare Exod. xxi. 23.

40 And as thy servant was busy here and there, †he was gone. And the king of Israel said unto him, So shall thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it.

i. e. Thy sentence; or the sentence against thee: thou must perform the condition to which thou didst submit; either suffer the one, or do the other.

41 And he hastened, and took the ashes away from his face; and the king of Israel discerned him that he was of the prophets.

Either, 1. By his face, which was known either to the king, or to some of his courtiers there present. Or, 2. By the change of the manner of his address to him, which now was such as the prophets used.

42 And he said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, ^pBecause thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I appointed to utter destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thy people for his people.

Quest. What was the great sin of Ahab in this action for which God so severely punisheth him? Ans. The great dishonour hereby done to God in suffering so horrid a blasphemer, ver. 23, to go unpunished, which was contrary to an express law, Lev. xxiv. 16. Object. What is this to Ben-hadad, seeing that law concerned Israelites only? Ans. It reached both to them that were born in the land, and (as is there expressed) unto strangers that were among them, and in their power, which was Ben-hadad's case; for God had delivered him into Ahab's hand for his blasphemy, as he promised to do, ver. 28, by which act of his providence, especially compared with that law, it was most evident that this man was appointed by God to destruction, as is here said. But Ahab was so far from punishing this blasphemer, that he doth not so much as rebuke him, but treats him like a friend and a brother; dismisseth him upon easy terms, and takes his word for the performance, and takes not the least care for the reparation of God's honour, but only for the amplification of his own power. Thy people for his people. Quest. Why were the people punished for Ahab's sin? Ans. 1. Because Ahab was punished in the loss of his people. 2. The people were punished for their own sins, which were many and great; though God took this occasion to inflict it. 3. The great injury and mischief was hereby done to his own people, who by this most foolish and wicked act were exposed to all those rapines and slaughters which Ben-hadad either did commit, or might have committed, against them afterwards; of which consequently Ahab was guilty. And it must be considered that all the Israelites were the Lord's peculiar people; nor did their apostasy from God deprive God of his right; and the kings of Israel and Judah had these committed to them, in way of trust, to be governed and protected by them. And therefore Ahab for this gross breach of his trust was justly liable, though not to the censures of his people, yet to the hand of God, who was his King and Governor.

43 And the king of Israel ^qwent to his ^qch. 21. 4. house heavy and displeased, and came to Samaria.

Heavy and displeased; not for his sin, but for the sad effects of it upon himself and people; which he might confidently expect, having had many experiences that God did not suffer the words of his prophets to fall to the ground.

CHAP. XXI.

Ahab coveteth to buy Naboth's vineyard; which is denied him, and he is grieved, 1—4. Jezebel writeth letters against Naboth; he is condemned of blasphemy, and stoned, 5—14. Ahab possesseth the vineyard, 15, 16. Elijah denounceth judgment against Ahab and Jezebel, 17—26. He repenting, God deferrereth the judgment, 27—29.

AND it came to pass after these things, that Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel, hard by the palace of Ahab king of Samaria.

In Jezreel; where one of Ahab's palaces was, as the other was in Samaria.

2 And Ahab spake unto Naboth, saying, Give me thy ^avineyard, that I may have it for a garden of herbs, because it ^ais near unto my house: and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it; or, if it †seem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money.

3 And Naboth said to Ahab, The LORD forbid it me, ^bthat I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.

For God hath expressly, and for divers weighty reasons, forbidden the alienation of lands from the tribes and families to which they were allotted, Lev. xxv. 15, 23, 25; Numb. xxxvi. 7; Ezek. xlvi. 18. And although these might have been alienated till the jubilee, yet he durst not sell it to the king for that time; because he supposed that if once it came into the king's hand, especially to be made a garden of pleasure, and affixed to his palace, neither he nor his posterity could ever recover it again; and so he should both offend God, and wrong his posterity; which being, as it seems, a pious man, he durst not do.

4 And Ahab came into his house heavy and displeased because of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had spoken to him: for he had said, I will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers. And he laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread.

Turned away his face from the light, and company which either then were with him, or might come to him to the wall, as Hezekiah did under a like dejection of spirit, Isa. xxxviii. 2. Would eat no bread; refused to eat meat in his usual time.

5 ¶ But Jezebel his wife came to him, and said unto him, Why is thy spirit so sad, that thou eatest no bread?

6 And he said unto her, Because I spake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and said unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money; or else, if it please thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it: and he answered, I will not give thee my vineyard.

7 And Jezebel his wife said unto him, Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel? arise, and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry: I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite.

Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel? art thou fit to be king, that canst put up such affronts from thy subjects, and hast not the courage to use thy absolute power to dispose of them and theirs as seemeth good unto thee?

8 So she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal, and sent the letters unto the elders and to the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth.

Whom she very well knew to be fit for her purpose. In his city, i. e. in Jezreel. So she seeks to destroy him with a pretence of justice, and with as little reflection upon Ahab as might be.

9 And she wrote in the letters, saying, Proclaim a fast, and set Naboth † on high among the people:

Proclaim a fast, to remove all suspicion of hatred or evil design in Ahab, and to beget a good opinion of him amongst his people, as if his afflictions had done him good, and as if he were grown zealous for God's honour, and careful of his people's welfare, and therefore desirous to prevent the further displeasure of God against his city and kingdom; and in order thereunto, to inquire into all those sins which provoked God against them, and effectually to purge them out. Set Naboth on high; in a scaffold, or some other high place, where malefactors were usually and fitly placed, that they might be seen, and their defence heard by all the people.

10 And set two men, sons of Belial, before him, to bear witness against him, saying, Thou didst ^eblaspheme God and the king. And then carry him out, and ^dstone him, that he may die.

Thou didst blaspheme, Heb. bless. Blessing is put for cursing and blaspheming, as Job i. 5; ii. 9, so also here, as is apparent, because his blessing God and the king had been no crime. It is a figure called euphemismus. God would have blasphemy so much abhorred, that it should not easily and unnecessarily be named by its proper name. Compare Psal. xvi. 4. Carry him out, to the place where malefactors were punished, which was out of the city, Lev. xxiv. 23; Josh. vii. 24; Mark xv. 20; Heb. xiii. 12, partly to show that they were unworthy of all human society, and abhorred by all the people; and partly because the place where they were killed was thereby ceremonially polluted. Stone him; the proper punishment of blasphemers, Lev. xxiv. 15, 16. That he may die; as one that cursed his God, and his political father, his king. See Exod. xxi. 17; xxii. 28.

11 And the men of his city, even the elders and the nobles who were the inhabitants in his city, did as Jezebel had sent unto them, and as it was written in the letters which she had sent unto them.

The elders and the nobles did as Jezebel had sent unto them; which is not at all strange in them who had for a long time cast off the fear and sense of God, and prostituted their consciences and religion to please their king, and sold themselves to all manner of wickedness, and could not now make a safe and honourable retreat, and durst not disobey Jezebel's command, by whom they knew the king was wholly governed, and who could easily have taken away their lives in the same manner, if they had refused to kill Naboth.

12 *They proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people. e 1s. 53. 4.

13 And there came in two men, children of Belial, and sat before him: and the men of Belial witnessed against him, even against Naboth, in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did blaspheme God and the king. ¹Then they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him with stones, that he died. f See 2Kings 9. 26.

And his sons with him, as may be thought from 2 Kings ix. 26, that so the king might have an undisturbed possession; for which they might pretend those examples, Numb. xvi. 32; Josh. vii. 24. But these were examples of extraordinary vengeance, and by special warrant from God; and the law of God was positively contrary to it, Deut. xxiv. 16.

14 Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, Naboth is stoned, and is dead. 899.

They sent to Jezebel; by whom they knew the affairs of the kingdom were managed, and this design contrived.

15 ¶ And it came to pass, when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, that Jezebel said to Ahab, Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money: for Naboth is not alive, but dead.

Take possession of the vineyard of Naboth; either, first, By right of confiscation, to repair the injury which he did to the king by blaspheming him. Or, secondly, By tyrannical usurpation. Or, thirdly, By right of inheritance; for some say that Ahab was his next kinsman, his sons being dead; which they judge more likely, because his land was next to the king's.

16 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take possession of it.

17 ¶ ^gAnd the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying, g Ps. 9. 12.

18 Arise, go down to meet Ahab king of Israel, ^hwhich is in Samaria: behold, ^hhe is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he is gone down to possess it. h ch. 13. 32. 2 Chro. 22. 9.

Which is in Samaria; either who now is there, and about to depart thence to Jezreel; or who commonly dwells there. He is in the vineyard, or rather, he will be; by that time that thou comest thither thou shalt find him there.

19 And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, ⁱIn the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine. i ch. 22. 38.

Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? Thou hast murdered an innocent and righteous man; and instead of repenting for it, thou hast added another piece of injustice and violence to it, and art going confidently and cheerfully to reap the fruit of thy wickedness. He ascribes Jezebel's fact to Ahab, because Jezebel did it by his connivance, and consent, and authority, and for the satisfaction of his inordinate appetite.

Quest. How was this prophecy fulfilled, when Ahab's blood was not licked in Jezreel, which was in the tribe of Issachar, but in the pool of Samaria, chap. xxii. 38, which was in the tribe of Ephraim? Answ. First, This was done, though not in the same individual place, yet in the same general place, i. e. in the territory of Samaria, within which Jezreel was; and in a place of the same nature, a public and common place; for such was both the place of Naboth's execution, and the pool of Samaria. Secondly, This was particularly accomplished in his son Joram, as is affirmed, 2 Kings ix. 25, 26; whose blood is not improperly called Ahab's blood, because children are said to be born of their parents' blood. See John i. 13; Acts xvii. 26. Object. These words, thy blood, even thine, show that it is meant of Ahab's person. Ans. True, the threatening was so directed and designed at first; but afterwards, upon his humiliation, the punishment was transferred from him to his son, as is expressed, ver. 29. Object. This is said to be fulfilled in Ahab's person, chap. xxii. 38. Ans. Either that may be referred to some other prediction or commination not elsewhere mentioned; or rather, it intimates that it was in part and in some sort fulfilled in him, though not so severely and opprobriously, nor with such characters of the curse, as it was in his son; whence he there mentions only the thing, without any regard unto the place here designed. But it may further be observed, that although upon Ahab's humiliation the curse here threatened might seem to be wholly translated from his person to his posterity; yet upon Ahab's return to sin, in the next chapter, he brings back the curse upon himself, and so it is no wonder if it be in some sort fulfilled in him also. Thirdly, The Hebrew word, rendered in the place where, may be, and is by some learned men, otherwise rendered; either thus, instead of this that; that being frequently said to be done in another's place which was only done in his stead; or, like as; or, because that. So it doth not design the place, but the cause and reason of this judgment. And in this sense the same word is used Zech. ii. 1.

Ahab said to Elijah; upon and after his delivery of the message last mentioned, which it was needless to repeat. Hast thou found me? Dost thou pursue me from place to place? Wilt thou never let me rest? Art thou come after me hither with thy unwelcome messages? O mine enemy; that art always disturbing, threatening, and opposing me, and expressing not so much God's mind as thy own hatred and enmity against me. Compare chap. xxii. 8. I have found thee; the hand of God hath found and overtaken thee in the very act of thy sin. Thou hast sold thyself; thou hast wilfully and wholly resigned up thyself to be the bond-slave of the devil, or Baal, and of wicked Jezebel, to do whatsoever they persuade thee to do; as a man that sells himself to another is totally in his master's power, and must employ all his time and strength for his service. Compare 2 Kings xvii. 17: see on Rom. vii. 14. In the sight, i. e. impudently and contemptuously. Withal he minds him, that although his sin was in a great measure hid from the eyes of men by Jezebel's cunning contrivance, yet it was evident and known to God, who would require it at his hands.

Before me, i. e. in my presence, and upon my threatening. But this humiliation or repentance of Ahab's was only external and superficial, arising from the terror of God's judgments; and not sincere and serious, proceeding from the love of God, or a true sense of his sin, or a solemn purpose of amendment of his life, as appears, because all the particulars of his repentance here, ver. 27, are external and ritual only; nor is there the least intimation of any one sign or fruit of his true repentance, as that he restored Naboth's land, or reproved his infamous wife; but in the very next chapter you find him returning to his former vomit, hating and threatening the Lord's prophets, &c. The evil, i. e. the judgment threatened, both that ver. 19, which was not inflicted upon Ahab with so much ignominy, and with that particular signature of God's vengeance, that it was to be done in the same place, as it was upon his son Joram; and especially that ver. 21, 22, which was wholly suspended until his son's days.

CHAP. XXII.

Ahab, intending war against the Syrians, is advised by Jehoshaphat first to ask counsel of God: Ahab's prophets advise him to it, especially Zedekiah, 1—12. Micaiah, a prophet of the Lord, dissuadeth him from it; and is put in prison by Ahab, 13—28. Ahab goeth to the battle; is slain; the dogs lick his blood; and Ahaziah succeedeth him, 29—40. Jehoshaphat's good reign over Judah: his acts and death: Jehoram succeedeth him, 41—50. Ahaziah's evil reign, 51—53.

AND they continued three years without ^{807.} war between Syria and Israel.

They continued; the Syrians and Israelites, designed in the following words. Three years; computed from the last war and league wherewith it was concluded; because both Ahab and Benhadad were so weakened and broken by the late wars, that they needed and desired peace to recruit themselves, and repair their former losses.

2 And it came to pass in the third year, that ^aJehoshaphat the king of Judah ^acame down to the king of Israel.

4 And he said unto Jehoshaphat, Wilt thou go with me to battle to Ramoth-gilead? And Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horses as thy horses.

^c 2 Kin. 3. 7.

^d ch. 18. 19.

6 Then the king of Israel ^dgathered the prophets together, about four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall I go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up; for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

The prophets doubtless were his own false prophets, or the priests of Baal; probably those very four hundred men whom Jezebel preserved from that great slaughter, chap. xviii., who yet gave in their answer in the name of Jehovah, not of Baal; either in compliance with Jehoshaphat; or rather, by Ahab's direction, that good Jehoshaphat might be deceived by them into a good opinion of the war.

^e 2 Kin. 3. 11.

7 And ^eJehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD besides, that we might enquire of him?

Besides these, who may seem to be such by your opinion, and their own profession; but I desire further satisfaction from some other prophet.

8 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man, Micaiah the son of Imlah, by whom we may enquire of the LORD: but I hate him; for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil. And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so.

There is yet one, to wit, in this place, for whom I can speedily send; for there were also other prophets elsewhere in the kingdom, as Elijah, Elisha, and others; but these were not at hand for the present occasion. Micaiah; not one of the twelve prophets, who lived about one hundred and fifty years after this time, but another of that name. He doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil; he is always a messenger of evil tidings; which was true, but no sufficient reason why he should hate him, because Micaiah was purely God's instrument in all his messages; and whatsoever evil he threatened, Ahab himself was the cause and procurer of it. Let not the king say so; do not pre-empt evil to our enterprise: let us neither hate his person, nor despise his message; but first hear it, and then do as we see cause.

† Or, currucho.

9 Then the king of Israel called an officer, and said, Hasten hither Micaiah the son of Imlah.

† Heb. floor.

10 And the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah sat each on his throne, having put on their robes, in a void place in the entrance of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them.

Their robes; their royal robes, and ensigns of majesty. In a void place; in the place of judicature, which was in or nigh the gate of the city, and in the front of some void place, where either people stood to hear and see justice administered, or soldiers were placed for the defence of the city in time of war.

11 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah made him horns of iron: and he said, Thus saith the LORD, With these shalt thou push the Syrians, until thou have consumed them.

Horns of iron; fit emblems of the power and victory of these two kings. The devil is God's ape, and the false prophets sometimes imitating the true, who when they declared God's mind by words, did also oftentimes confirm it by sensible signs. See Isa. xx. 2; Jer. xxvii. 2. Thus saith the Lord, Heb. Jehovah; whose name he pretends, to gain the more credit and countenance to his words. See on ver. 7.

12 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the king's hand.

13 And the messenger that was gone to call Micaiah spake unto him, saying, Behold now, the words of the prophets declare good unto the king with one mouth: let thy word, I pray thee, be like the word of one of them, and speak that which is good.

This he designs, not out of any love to Micaiah, (whom he persuades to debase his conscience,) but merely out of a desire to gratify his king's humour.

14 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, what the LORD saith unto me, that will I speak.

† Nam. 22. 38.

What answer God shall put into my mind and mouth; which, it seems, was not yet done.

15 ¶ So he came to the king. And the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall we forbear? And he answered him, Go, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

He answered him; not seriously, but ironically, using the very words of the false prophets, in way of derision; as appears, first, From his omission of that solemn preface, Thus saith the Lord, or, This is the word of the Lord, which the prophets generally used, and which himself useth when he comes to his serious answer, ver. 19. Secondly, From Ahab's reply, ver. 16, which shows that he suspected Micaiah's sincerity in that answer, and gathered by his gesture or manner of speaking that he spake only mimically, as representing and traducing the false prophets for their answer. See the like ironical passages Gen. iii. 22; Judg. x. 14; 1 Kings xviii. 27; Eccles. xi. 9; Ezek. xx. 39; Amos iv. 4, 5; all which expressions are not used to lead men into mistakes, but to bring them to the sight of their sin and duty, which may be done sometimes most efficaciously in this way. So Micaiah's meaning is plainly this, Because thou dost not seek to know the truth, but only to please thyself, go to the battle, as all thy prophets advise thee, and expect the success which they promise thee, and try the truth of their prediction by thy own costly experience.

16 And the king said unto him, How many times shall I adjure thee that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the LORD?

How many times shall I adjure thee? I adjure thee again and again, that thou give over this mockery, and seriously tell me the mind of God in this matter.

17 And he said, I saw all Israel ^gscattered upon the hills, as sheep that have not a shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master: let them return every man to his house in peace.

g Matt. 9. 36.

I saw; in the spirit, or in a vision. Upon the hills; upon the mountains of Gilead, nigh Ramoth; either where they lay encamped by Ahab's order, or to which they fled from the enemy, esteeming that the safest place. See Matt. xxiv. 16. As sheep that have not a shepherd; as people who have lost their king. See Numb. xxvii. 17; Isa. xl. 11; xlv. 28; Ezek. xxxiv. 23. Every man to his house in peace; discharged from the war; which was fulfilled, ver. 36.

18 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil?

Now thou seest my words verified, and this man showing his hatred by this malignant and treasonable prophecy, and how little heed is to be given to his words; which crafty insinuation seems to have had too great an influence upon good Jehoshaphat; otherwise he would never have gone to the battle.

19 And he said, Hear thou therefore the word of the LORD: ¹I saw the LORD sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left.

Because thou givest credit to thy false prophets, and distrustest my words, as if they were but the suggestions of my own fancy, and hatred of thy person, I will give thee a distinct and true account of the whole matter, in God's name and presence. I saw the Lord, by the eyes of my mind; for he could not see the Lord with bodily eyes. The host of heaven, i. e. the angels, who are oft called God's host or hosts, because of their great number, excellent order, and constant readiness to attend upon God, and to execute his commands. See Gen. ii. 1; Psal. ciii. 21; cxlviii. 2. These angels were both good and bad; the one possibly on his right, the other on his left hand. Nor is it strange that the devils are called host of heaven, if you consider, first, That their original seat was in heaven, and men in Scripture are oft called by the name of the place from whence they came. Secondly, That the name of heaven is oft given to all that part of the world which is above the earth, and among the rest to the air, as Gen. i. 20; vii. 11; viii. 2; xxvii. 28; Deut. iv. 11; xi. 11, where the devil's residence and dominion lies, Eph. ii. 2; and that both Michael and his angels, and the dragon and his angels, are said to be and to wage war in heaven, Rev. xii. 7, i. e. either the air, or the church. And this place is not to be understood as if Micaiah had seen with his bodily eyes the Lord and his angels sitting in the third heaven; but that he saw a representation of the Divine presence in the air, attended with good and bad angels. Standing by him, in the posture of ministers, to receive and execute his commands.

¹ Or, deceive. 20 And the LORD said, Who shall persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one said on this manner, and another said on that manner.

This is not to be grossly understood, as if God did ask and take counsel from his creatures, or were at a loss to find out an expedient to accomplish his own will; did consider several ways, and then chose with that which upon debate appeared to be best; all which it is ridiculous to imagine concerning a God of perfect and infinite knowledge; but only to bring down Divine things to our shallow capacities, and to express the various means which God hath to execute his own designs.

21 And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will persuade him.

An evil spirit came out of the knot or company of them, standing possibly on the left hand, and presented himself before the throne, as having something to say to the Lord.

22 And the LORD said unto him, Where-with? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also: go forth, and do so.

I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets; I will inspire a lie into the minds and mouths of his prophets. Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also: I will give them up into thy hands, and blind their minds, and leave them to their own ignorance and wickedness, which will certainly lead them into dreadful mistakes. Go forth, and do so: this is not a command, but only a permission; which is oft expressed in the imperative mood; as 1 Sam. xvi. 10; Matt. viii. 22; John xiii. 27. I will not hinder thee from tempting them, nor give them grace to withstand their temptation; whereby thou mayst be assured of success.

23 ¹Now therefore, behold, the LORD ¹Ezek. 14. 9. hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and the LORD hath spoken evil concerning thee.

24 But Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah went near, and smote Micaiah on the cheek, and said, ^mWhich way went the Spirit of the LORD from me to speak unto thee? ^m2 Chron. 18. 23.

Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah; the chief of the false prophets, who was much in the king's favour, upon which he now presumed. Smote Micaiah on the cheek, in way of contempt and scorn, Job xvi. 10; Jer. xx. 2; Lam. iii. 30; Mark xiv. 65. Which way went the Spirit of the Lord, i. e. in what manner went it? Forasmuch as I and my brethren have consulted the Lord, and answered in his name, and have the same Spirit which thou pretendest to have, and not a lying spirit, as thou dost falsely and maliciously affirm, how is it possible that the same Spirit should tell us one thing, and thee the quite contrary?

25 And Micaiah said, Behold, thou shalt see in that day, when thou shalt go ^{||}into ^{||}an inner chamber to hide thyself. ^{||}Or, from chamber to chamber. ^{||}Heb. a chamber in a chamber. ch. 20. 30.

Out of a just fear and expectation of the deserved punishment of a false prophet, and of the great author and abettor of this pernicious war, and of Ahab's destruction.

26 And the king of Israel said, Take Micaiah, and carry him back unto Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son;

Carry him back, to wit, into prison; where it seems he was before shut up; for so the Lord's prophets were used by Ahab. And some think he was the deliverer of that unwelcome message, chap. xx. 41, 42.

27 And say, Thus saith the king, Put this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction and with water of affliction, until I come in peace.

i. e. With a very coarse and sparing diet, whereby he may be only supported to endure his torment. See Deut. xvi. 3; 2 Chron. xviii. 26; Isa. xxx. 20. Until I come in peace; until I return in triumph, which I doubt not I shall do in spite of all his malicious suggestions to the contrary, and then I shall call him to an account for all his lies and impudence.

28 And Micaiah said, If thou return at all in peace, ⁿthe LORD hath not spoken ⁿNum. 16. 29. Deut. 18. 20, 21, 22. by me. And he said, Hearken, O people, every one of you.

The Lord hath not spoken by me; I acknowledge myself to be an impostor, and to deserve death. He said, i. e. Micaiah, the person last named, being assured of the truth of his prophecy, calls all the people to be witnesses of it.

29 So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah went up to Ramoth-gilead.

Jehoshaphat, though a good man, yet was easily deceived in this matter; partly because Micaiah was a person unknown to him, and both he and the other prophets pretending to give their answer in the name of the Lord, it seemed hard to him to determine the controversy, which only the event could decide; and therefore it is no wonder if he was overcome by the vast disproportion of four hundred prophets to one, and by his relation, and obligation, and affection to Ahab: and partly because the war was just and lawful, to recover his own rights, which the Syrian king unjustly detained from him.

30 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, ¶ I will disguise myself, and enter into the battle; but put thou on thy robes. And the king of Israel °disguised himself, and went into the battle.

I will disguise myself, i. e. put off my imperial habit, that the Syrians may not know me, and direct their main force against me; which they will assuredly endeavour, as knowing that this war proceedeth from me, and is likely to die with me; and then thou shalt see that this man is a false prophet, and I shall have the success which I desire and expect, notwithstanding all his presages. Thy robes; thy royal robes; which thou mayst do without any danger, because thou art not the object either of the Syrians' rage, or of this false prophecy.

31 But the king of Syria commanded his thirty and two captains that had rule over his chariots, saying, Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king of Israel.

His thirty and two captains that had rule over his chariots; and the men that fought from them, or with them, i. e. his whole army. Possibly the chariots and the whole army were distributed into thirty-two several parts, and each captain ruled those chariots and soldiers attending upon them, which fell to his share. Save only with the king of Israel: this he ordered either in policy, truly supposing this to be the best way to put an end to the war; or with design to take him prisoner, that thereby he might wipe out the stain of his own captivity, and recover the honour and advantage which then he lost; or rather by the power and providence of God, which disposeth the hearts of kings as he pleaseth, and inclined them to this course, that they might, though ignorantly, accomplish his word and counsel.

32 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, Surely it is the king of Israel. And they turned aside to fight against him: and Jehoshaphat °cried out.

They turned aside; they drew their forces from their several quarters towards Jehoshaphat. Jehoshaphat cried out to the Lord for help, 2 Chron. xviii. 31.

33 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, that they turned back from pursuing him.

When the captains perceived that it was not the king of Israel; which they easily perceived, either by the words uttered to God or them, or by the difference of his shape and countenance from that of Ahab, which probably many of them very well knew.

34 And a certain man drew a bow †at a venture, and smote the king of Israel between the †joints of the harness: wherefore he said unto the driver of his chariot, Turn thine hand, and carry me out of the host; for I am †wounded.

At a venture, Heb. in his simplicity, i. e. ignorantly, without care, or choice, or any design, or thought of reaching Ahab. Or, according to his perfection, i. e. with his perfect or utmost strength; which is mentioned as the reason why it pierced through the joints of his armour. Between the joints of the harness; where the several parts of his armour are joined together; which possibly were not then joined with so much art and closeness as now they are. Out of the host; out of the midst of the host, where the heat of the battle was, into a safer part of the army. See the next verse.

35 And the battle †increased that day: and the king was stayed up in his chariot against the Syrians, and died at even: and the blood ran out of the wound into the †midst of the chariot.

The battle increased, i. e. grew hot and violent. Was stayed up; was supported by cordials, or by his servants, that by his presence he might encourage his soldiers to fight more courageously, and that he might see the event of the battle.

36 And there went a proclamation throughout the host about the going down of the sun, saying, Every man to his city, and every man to his own country.

There went a proclamation; probably by Jehoshaphat's order, with the consent of the chief captains of Israel; and possibly with the permission of the king of Syria, upon notice of Ahab's death, which was the only thing at which he aimed, ver. 31. Every man to his own country: the king is dead, and the battle ended; and therefore every man hath liberty to return to his own house and private occasions.

37 ¶ So the king died, and †was †brought to Samaria; and they buried the king in Samaria.

38 And one washed the chariot in the pool of Samaria; and the dogs licked up his blood; and they washed his armour; according †unto the word of the LORD q ch. 21. 19. which he spake.

The dogs licked up his blood, together with the water wherewith it was mixed. According unto the word of the Lord; of which see the note on chap. xxi. 19.

39 Now the rest of the acts of Ahab, and all that he did, and †the ivory house which he made, and all the cities that he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

The ivory house, Heb. the house of the tooth or teeth, to wit, of elephants: see chap. x. 18. Not that it was made wholly of solid ivory, but because the other materials were covered, or intermixed, or adorned with ivory. Compare Amos iii. 15.

40 So Ahab slept with his fathers; and Ahaziah his son reigned in his stead.

41 ¶ And †Jehoshaphat the son of Asa began to reign over Judah in the fourth year of Ahab king of Israel.

Who reigned twenty-two years; therefore he reigned about eighteen years with Ahab.

42 Jehoshaphat was thirty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Azubah the daughter of Shilhi.

He reigned twenty and five years; part by himself, and partly with his sons, whom he took into the fellowship of his kingdom; of which see more on 2 Kings i. 17.

43 And †he walked in all the ways of Asa his father; he turned not aside from it, doing †that which was right in the eyes of the LORD: nevertheless †the high places were not taken away; for the people offered and burnt incense yet in the high places.

He walked in all the ways of Asa his father; he took the same care for the government of his kingdom, and especially for the reformation of religion, that Asa did; of whom see chap. xv. 11. The high places were not taken away. Object. It is said he did take them away, 2 Chron. xvii. 6. Answ. He took away those which were erected to idols; of which he seems to speak there, because the high places are there joined with groves, which were generally erected to idols, and not to the true God, as will appear to any one that shall compare all the scriptures where groves are mentioned; but he could not take away those which were erected to the true God, of which this place manifestly speaks; as also that parallel place 1 Kings xv. 14, where see the notes. Or he took them away, but not fully; or not in the very beginning of his reign.

See 2 Chron. xx. 36. Or, there were to Jehoshaphat ten ships; the ellipsis of the verb substantive, and of the prefix lamed, being frequent in the Hebrew language. Some render the words, he made ten ships; so joining both texts together, and out of both completing the sense. Of Tharshish; either, 1. Of the sea, as this word is thought sometimes to be used. Or rather, 2. To go to Tharshish, (as it is expressed, 2 Chron. xx. 36,) and thence to Ophir, as it here follows. See more on 1 Kings x. 22. To Ophir; of which see 1 Kings ix. 28. Ezion-geber was in Edom, and consequently in Jehoshaphat's territories.

49 Then said Ahaziah the son of Ahab unto Jehoshaphat, Let my servants go with thy servants in the ships. But Jehoshaphat would not.

Object. It is said that he did join with Ahaziah herein, 2 Chron. xx. 35, 36. Ans. That was before this time, and before the ships were broken; for the breaking of the ships, mentioned here, ver. 48, is noted to be the effect of his sin, in joining with Ahaziah, and of the prophecy consequent upon it, 2 Chron. xx. 37. And good Jehoshaphat being warned and chastised by God for this sin, would not be persuaded to repeat it; whereby he showed the sincerity of his repentance.

50 ¶ And ^e Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Jehoram his son reigned in his stead. ^e 2 Chr. 21. 1. ^{889.} Now he begins to reign alone.

51 ¶ ^f Ahaziah the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned two years over Israel. ^f ver. 40. ^{898.}

By comparing this verse with ver. 41, it appears that Ahaziah was made king by his father, and reigned in conjunction with him, a year or two before Ahab's death, and as long after it; even as Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat was made king by his father in his lifetime, as we shall see hereafter; which possibly was done in compliance with Ahab's desire upon marriage of his daughter to Jehoshaphat's son; and it may be Ahab, to induce and encourage him to do so, gave him an example of it, and made his son his partner in the kingdom. Reigned two years; either after his father's death; or one before it, and another after it.

52 And he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and ^gwalked in the way of his father, and in the way of his mother, and in the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin: ^g ch. 15. 26.

Which clause seems here added, to show how little the authority and example of parents or ancestors is to be valued where it is opposed to the will and word of God.

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE KINGS,

COMMONLY CALLED,

THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE KINGS

CHAP. I.

Moab rebelleth against Israel. 1. Ahaziah being sick sendeth to Baal-zebul; Elijah foretelleth his death, 2—4. Ahaziah hearing it, sendeth twice captains of fifty, to bring Elijah to him; upon whom he bringeth fire from heaven, 5—12. The third captain entreateth Elijah; who, encouraged by an angel, goeth and telleth the king of his death, 13—16. Jehoram succeedeth him, 17, 18.

^{B. C.} ^{cir.} 806. ^a 2 Sam. 8. 2. ^b ch. 3. 5. THEN Moab ^arebelled against Israel after the death of Ahab.

Moab; which had been subdued by David, 2 Sam. viii. 2, as Edom was; and upon the division of this kingdom into two Moab was adjoined to that of Israel, and Edom to that of Judah, each to that kingdom upon which it bordered. And when the kingdoms of Israel and Judah were weak and forsaken by God, they took that opportunity to revolt from them; Moab here, and Edom a little after it.

2 And Ahaziah fell down through a lattice in his upper chamber that was in Samaria, and was sick: and he sent messengers, and said unto them, Go, enquire of Baal-zebul the god of ^eEkron whether I shall recover of this disease. ^e 1 Sam. 5. 10.

In his upper chamber; in which the lattice might be left to convey light into the lower room; which if it now seem to be absurd in a king's palace, we must not think it was so then, when the world was not arrived to that height of curiosity and art in which now it is. But the words may be, and are by some, rendered, through the battlements (or through the lattice in the battlements) of the roof of the house; where being first walking, after the manner, and then standing and looking through, and leaning upon this lattice, which was grown infirm, it broke, and he fell down into the court or garden belonging to the house. Baal-zebub; properly, the god of flies; an idol so called, because it was falsely supposed to deliver those people from flies, which were both vexatious and hurtful to them; as Jupiter and Hercules were called by a like name among the Grecians for the same reason. And it is evident, both from sacred and profane histories, that the idol gods, being consulted by the heathens, did sometimes through God's permission and just judgment give them answers, though they were generally observed, even by the heathens themselves, to be dark and doubtful.

3 But the angel of the LORD said to Elijah the Tishbite, Arise, go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say unto them, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that ye go to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron?

Is it not because there is not a God in Israel? Dost thou not by this action cast contempt upon the God of Israel, as if he were either ignorant of the event of thy disease, or unable to give thee any relief, and as if Baal-zebub had more skill and power than he?

4 Now therefore thus saith the LORD, †Thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die. And Elijah departed.

Now therefore; for this was a very heinous crime, to deny the perfections of God, and to transfer them to an idol. See Lev. xix. 31; xx. 6, 27; Deut. xviii. 10. Elijah departed; the messengers not daring to apprehend him, as suspecting him to be more than man, because he knew the secret message which the king delivered to them in his bedchamber.

5 ¶ And when the messengers turned back unto him, he said unto them, Why are ye now turned back?

Before you have been at Ekron; which he easily knew by their quick return.

6 And they said unto him, There came a man up to meet us, and said unto us, Go, turn again unto the king that sent you, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that thou sendest to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron? therefore thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

7 And he said unto them, †What manner of man was he which came up to meet you, and told you these words?

8 And they answered him, He was ^dan hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. And he said, It is Elijah the Tishbite.

An hairy man; either, 1. As to his body; the hair of his head and beard being through neglect grown long, and spread over much of his face. Or rather, 2. As to his outward garment, which was rough and hairy, such as were sometimes worn by eminent persons in Greece in ancient times, and were the proper habit of the prophets. See Isa. xx. 2; Zech. xiii. 4; Matt. iii. 4; Heb. xi. 37. With a girdle of leather about his loins; as John the Baptist also had, Matt. iii. 4, that by his very outward habit he might represent Elias, in whose spirit and power he came.

9 Then the king sent unto him a captain of fifty with his fifty. And he went up to him: and, behold, he sat on the top of an hill. And he spake unto him, Thou man of God, the king hath said, Come down.

Thou man of God; so he calls him in way of scorn and contempt: q. d. Thou that vauntest as if thou wast more than a mere man. The king hath said, Come down; the king commands thee to come to him; which if thou refusest, I am here to carry thee to him by force

10 And Elijah answered and said to the captain of fifty, If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And there came down fire from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty. e Luke 9. 54.

Elijah's desire did not proceed from a carnal and malicious passion; but from a pure zeal to vindicate God's name and honour, which was so horribly abused; and from the motion of God's Spirit, as is evident from God's miraculous answer to his desire. And therefore Christ doth not condemn this fact of Elias, but only reproves his disciples for their perverse imitation of it from another spirit and principle, and in a more unseasonable time, Luke ix. 54, 55.

11 Again also he sent unto him another captain of fifty with his fifty. And he answered and said unto him, O man of God, thus hath the king said, Come down quickly.

Wherein he discovers more petulancy and impudence than the former, and shows how little he was moved or affrighted by the former example.

12 And Elijah answered and said unto them, If I be a man of God, let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And the fire of God came down from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.

13 ¶ And he sent again a captain of the third fifty with his fifty. And the third captain of fifty went up, and came and †fell on his knees before Elijah, and besought him, and said unto him, O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of these fifty thy servants, be precious in thy sight. † Heb. bowed.

Fell on his knees, and besought him; expressing both reverence to his person, and a belief of his power, and a dread of God's judgments.

14 Behold, there came fire down from heaven, and burnt up the two captains of the former fifties with their fifties: therefore let my life now be precious in thy sight.

15 And the angel of the LORD said unto Elijah, Go down with him: be not afraid of him. And he arose, and went down with him unto the king.

Nor fearing the rage of the king, nor of Jezebel, nor of all their forces; wherein he gives an eminent example of his faith and obedience; and withal, of his growth in grace since that time that he fled for fear of Jezebel, 1 Kings xix. 3.

16 And he said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Forasmuch as thou hast sent messengers to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron, is it not because there is no God in Israel to enquire of his word? therefore thou shalt not come down off that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

And he said unto him; to his very face. Nor durst the king lay hands upon him, being daunted with the prophet's presence, and great courage, and confidence; and affrighted by the late dreadful evidence of his power with God and over men; and withal, struck with a Divine and extraordinary terror.

17 ¶ So he died according to the word of the LORD which Elijah had spoken. And ¶ Jehoram reigned in his stead in the second year of Jehoram the son of Je- 896.

the eighteenth of Jehoshaphat, ch. 2. 1. hoshaphat king of Judah; because he had no son.

Jehoram; Ahaziah's brother, chap. iii. 1, for he had no son to succeed him, as it here follows. In the second year of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat: other passages of Scripture seem to clash with this, as that Ahaziah, who reigned but two years, begun his reign in Jehoshaphat's seventeenth year, 1 Kings xxii. 51; and therefore this Jehoram must begin his reign in Jehoshaphat's nineteenth year; and therefore before the reign of Jehoram, Jehoshaphat's son; and that Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat began to reign in the fifth year of Joram, Ahab's son, 2 Kings viii. 16. Answ. These difficulties are easily resolved by this consideration, that it was a usual practice among kings in former ages, to make their sons sometimes their viceroys and deputies in the administration of the kingdom; and sometimes formally kings in conjunction with themselves, and whilst they lived; whereof there are instances, both in profane history, among the Persians, Greeks, and Romans, and in the sacred Scripture, as in David, 1 Chron. xxiii. 1; xxix. 22, in Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 21, and (to come close to the point) in Jehoshaphat, 2 Kings viii. 16; who in his seventeenth year, when he went to Ahab, and with him to Ramoth-gilead, appointed his son Jehoram his viceroy, and (in case of his death) his successor. In the second year from that time, when Jehoram was thus made vice-king in his father's stead and absence, this Jehoram, Ahab's son, began to reign; and in the fifth year of the reign of this Joram, son of Ahab, which was about the twenty-fourth year of Jehoshaphat's reign, Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat was formally made king of Judah, together with his father; or whilst Jehoshaphat lived, and was king of Judah also. And so all the places agree. To which some add, that this verse, or this part of it, wherein the difficulty consists, is wanting in some ancient copies, and is omitted by the LXX. interpreters; which is far more prudent and pious to grant, than upon such chronological difficulties to question the truth and divinity of the Holy Scriptures.

18 Now the rest of the acts of Ahaziah which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

CHAP. II.

Elijah, taking his leave of Elisha, with his mantle divideth Jordan, 1—8; and granting Elisha his request on condition, is taken up by a fiery chariot into heaven, 9—11. Elisha, dividing Jordan with Elijah's mantle, is acknowledged his successor, 12—18. He with salt healeth the waters at Jericho, 19—22. Children mock him; he curseth them, and they are devoured by two bears, 23—25.

AND it came to pass, when the LORD would take up Elijah into heaven by a whirlwind, that Elijah went with Elisha from Gilgal.

2 And Elijah said unto Elisha, Tarry here, I pray thee; for the LORD hath sent me to Beth-el. And Elisha said unto him, As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they went down to Beth-el.

Elijah said unto Elisha: this he desires, either, 1. That he, being left alone, might better prepare himself for his great change. Or, 2. Out of his humility and modesty; he desired no witnesses of his glorious removal, and no fame and glory from it. Or, 3. Out of indulgence to Elisha, that he might not be overwhelmed with grief at so sad a sight. Or, 4. That he might try his love, and whet his desire to accompany him; it being highly convenient for God's honour, and the church's good, (which Elijah sought above all things,) that there should be witnesses of so glorious a translation. The Lord hath sent me to Beth-el; which was truth, but not the whole truth; for he was to go a far longer journey. But he was first to go to Beth-el, as also to Jericho, to the schools of the prophets there, that he might comfort and strengthen their hearts in God's work, and give them his last and dying counsels.

3 And the sons of the prophets that were at Beth-el came forth to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the LORD will take away thy master from thy head to day? And he said, Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.

The Lord will take away thy master: this was revealed to some of the sons of the prophets, and by them to the whole college. From thy head, Heb. from above thy head; which phrase may respect, either, 1. The manner of sitting in schools, where the scholar sat at his master's feet, Deut. xxxiii. 3; Acts xxii. 3. Or, 2. The manner of Elijah's translation, which was to be by a power sent from heaven, to take him up thither. Hold ye your peace; do not aggravate my grief, nor divert me with any unseasonable discourses; that I may digest my sorrow, and prepare myself for so great a stroke, and diligently attend all my master's steps, lest he be snatched away from me whilst I am talking with you; and that I may beg and obtain some great blessing from him before his departure.

4 And Elijah said unto him, Elisha, tarry here, I pray thee; for the LORD hath sent me to Jericho. And he said, As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they came to Jericho.

5 And the sons of the prophets that were at Jericho came to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the LORD will take away thy master from thy head to day? And he answered, Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.

6 And Elijah said unto him, Tarry, I pray thee, here; for the LORD hath sent me to Jordan. And he said, As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And they two went on.

7 And fifty men of the sons of the prophets went, and stood to view afar off: and they two stood by Jordan.

Stood to view; to observe this great event, Elijah's translation to heaven, which they expected every moment, now when he had taken his last farewell of all the prophets; and whereof they desired to be spectators, not so much to satisfy their own curiosity, as that they might be witnesses of it to others.

8 And Elijah took his mantle, and wrapped it together, and smote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither, so that they two went over on dry ground.

9 ¶ And it came to pass, when they were gone over, that Elijah said unto Elisha, Ask what I shall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee. And Elisha said, I pray thee, let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me.

Either, 1. Double to what is in thee; which it seems not probable that he had confidence either to ask, or to expect. Or rather, 2. Double to what the rest of the sons of the prophets may receive at thy request upon this occasion. He alludes to the double portion of the first-born, Deut. xxi. 17. But though Elisha desired no more, yet God gave him more than he desired or expected; and he seems to have had a greater portion of the prophetic and miraculous gifts of God's Spirit than Elijah had.

10 And he said, Thou hast asked a hard thing; nevertheless, if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so.

A hard thing, i. e. a rare and singular blessing, which I cannot promise thee, which only God can give; and he gives it only when and to whom he pleaseth. If not, it shall not be so: this sign he proposed not without the instinct and direction of God's Spirit, that hereby he might engage him more earnestly to wait, and more fervently to pray, for this mercy.

+ Heb. Thou hast done hard in asking.

11 And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that, behold, there appeared ^g a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and ^h Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.

A chariot of fire, and horses of fire; a bright cloud formed into such a likeness, managed by holy and blessed angels sent from heaven to conduct him thither. Into heaven; into the third heaven, being in the way so transformed and changed, as might make him meet to be admitted into those blessed mansions.

12 ¶ And Elisha saw it, and he cried, ⁱ My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. And he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces.

My father, my father; so he calls him for his fatherly affection to him, and for his fatherly authority which by his office he had over him, in which respect the scholars of the prophets are called their sons, as 1 Kings xx. 35. The chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof; who by thy example, and counsels, and prayers, and power with God, didst more for the defence and preservation of Israel, than all their chariots and horses, or other warlike provisions. The expression alludes to the form of chariots and horses which he had seen.

13 He took up also the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and went back, and stood by the [†] bank of Jordan;

God so ordering it for Elisha's comfort, and the strengthening of his faith, as a pledge that, together with Elijah's mantle, his office and spirit should rest upon him.

14 And he took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and smote the waters, and said, Where is the LORD God of Elijah? and when he also had smitten the waters, ^k they parted hither and thither: and Elisha went over.

Where is the Lord God of Elijah? who at Elijah's request divided these waters, and is as able to do it again; and hath given me his spirit and office; and therefore I humbly beg, and confidently expect, his assistance in this matter. They parted; but these words after [Where is the God of Elijah?] are by many rendered otherwise, and that agreeably to the Hebrew, even himself? or, even the same? (which words they join with the former, as an emphatical addition, or repetition, which is usual in fervent prayers. But they may be rendered without an interrogation, thus, Surely he is, to wit, here present, and ready to help me. Or, Surely he is the same, to wit, to me, that he was to Elijah, as able and willing to work for me as for Elijah. Then the following words they render, as they are in the Hebrew,) and he smote the water, and it was divided. By which repetition it may seem that he smote it twice, and that at the first smiting the success did not answer his desire and expectation; which God so ordered, partly to keep him in a modest and humble sense of his own insufficiency, that he might not be puffed up with the great gifts which he had now received; compare 2 Cor. xii. 7; and partly to stir him up to a more lively exercise of faith and prayer, which followed God's denial or suspension of his help, as it is here expressed; which also was attended with desired success.

15 And when the sons of the prophets which were ^l to view at Jericho saw him, they said, The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha. And they came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him.

Or, as it is in the Hebrew, And the sons of the prophets who lived in Jericho saw him over against them, from some hill where they stood at a convenient distance to observe the event, ver. 7. They said, Heb. and they said, either by revelation; or rather, by the visible effects of it which they saw. They bowed themselves to the ground; thereby testifying their reverence and subjection to him as Elijah's successor, and their master and teacher.

16 ¶ And they said unto him, Behold now, there be with thy servants fifty [†] strong men; let them go, we pray thee, and seek thy master: [†] lest peradventure the Spirit of the LORD hath taken him up, and cast him upon [†] some mountain, or into some valley. And he said, Ye shall not send.

Strong men; able to take such a journey. They thought, either, 1. That God had not finally taken him away from them, but only for a time; compare 1 Kings xviii. 12; which they heartily desired, and therefore easily believed; or that God had only taken away his soul, and that his body was cast down into some place, which they desired to seek, that they might give it an honourable burial.

17 And when they urged him till he was ashamed, he said, Send. They sent therefore fifty men; and they sought three days, but found him not.

Till he was ashamed, i. e. to wit, to deny them any longer, lest they should think his denial proceeded from a neglect of his master, or a contempt of the sons of the prophets, or a secret content he took in his master's loss, that he might have his honour and power. Or, till they were ashamed, because he did so oft and so obstinately deny their request.

18 And when they came again to him, (for he tarried at Jericho,) he said unto them, Did I not say unto you, Go not?

19 ¶ And the men of the city said unto Elisha, Behold, I pray thee, the situation of this city is pleasant, as my lord seeth: but the water is naught, and the ground [†] barren.

Either it was so originally, at least as to that part of the city where the college of the prophets was, for it is not necessary to understand this of the whole territory; or it became so from the curse of God inflicted upon it, either when Joshua first took it, or afterwards when Hiel rebuilt it. Howsoever, upon the prophet's care, it grew exceedingly fruitful, and therefore is commended for its fertility by later writers.

20 And he said, Bring me a new cruse, and put salt therein. And they brought it to him.

A new cruse; partly that there might be no ground of suspicion that the cure was wrought by any natural virtue of any thing which was or had been in the cruse before, but only by God's power; and partly that there might be no legal pollution in it which might offend God, and hinder his miraculous operation by it. Put salt therein; a most improper remedy; for salt naturally makes waters brackish, and lands barren. Hereby therefore he would show that this was effected solely by the Divine power, which could work either without means, or against them.

21 And he went forth unto the spring of the waters, and [†] cast the salt in there, and said, Thus saith the LORD, I have healed these waters; there shall not be from thence any more death or barren land.

Cast the salt in there; which was in itself idle and ineffectual, considering both the quality of salt, and the small quantity of it, and the place where it was put, the fountain, which quickly works out any thing which is put into it; see Lev. xi. 36; but was only used as a sign of God's presence and power, which did the thing: compare Exod.

22 So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the saying of Elisha which he spake.

23 ¶ And he went up from thence unto Beth-el: and as he was going up by the way, there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and said unto him, Go up, thou bald head; go up, thou bald head.

He went up from thence unto Beth-el, to the other school or college of prophets, to inform them of Elijah's translation, and his succession into the same office; and to direct, and comfort, and establish them, as he saw occasion. Little children; or, children, or young men; as this Hebrew word oft signifies, as Gen. xxii. 5, 12; xli. 12; 2 Chron. xiii. 7; Isa. xi. 6. It is more than probable they were old enough to discern between good and evil, as their expression showeth. Out of the city; Beth-el, which was the mother city of idolatry, 1 Kings xii. 28, 29; Hos. iv. 15; v. 8, where the prophets planted themselves, that they might bear witness against it, and dissuade the people from it; though, it seems, they had but small success there. Mocked him, with great petulance and vehemency, as the conjugation of the Hebrew verb signifies; deriding both his person and ministry, and that from a profane contempt of the true religion, and a passionate love to that idolatry which they knew he opposed. Go up; go up into heaven, whither thou pretendest that Elijah is gone. Why didst not thou accompany thy friend and master to heaven? Oh that the same Spirit would take thee up also, that thou mightest not trouble us nor our Israel, as Elijah did! Thou bald-head; so they mock his natural infirmity, which is a great sin. Go up, thou bald-head: the repetition shows their heartiness and earnestness, that it was no sudden nor rash slip of their tongue, but a scoff proceeding from a rooted impiety and hatred of God and his prophets.

24 And he turned back, and looked on them, and cursed them in the name of the LORD. And there came forth two she bears out of the wood, and tare forty and two children of them.

Cursed them; nor was this punishment too great for the offence, if it be considered that these children were grown up to some maturity; (see on ver. 23;) that their mocking proceeded from a great malignity of mind against God; that they mocked not only a man, and an ancient man, whose very age commanded reverence, and a prophet; but even God himself, and that most admirable and glorious work of God, the assumption of Elijah into heaven, which makes it in some degree resemble the sin against the Holy Ghost; that they might be guilty of many other heinous crimes, which God and the prophet knew; and were guilty of idolatry, which by God's law deserved death; that the idolatrous parents were punished in their children; and that if any of these children were more innocent and ignorant of what they said, God might have mercy upon their souls, and then this death was not a misery, but a real blessing to them, that they were taken away from that wicked and idolatrous education, which was most likely to expose them not only to temporal, but to an eternal destruction. In the name of the Lord; not from any carnal or revengeful passion, but by the motion of God's Spirit, and by God's command and commission, as appears by God's concurrence with him; which God did, partly for the terror and caution of all other idolaters and profane persons, who abounded in that place; partly to vindicate the honour and maintain the authority of his prophets, and particularly of Elisha, now especially in the beginning of his sacred ministry. And this did beget such a confidence in Elisha, that he durst venture to go into Beth-el after this was done; and such a terror in the Beth-elites, that they durst not avenge themselves of him. Two she-bears; possibly robbed of their whelps, and therefore more fierce, Prov. xvii. 12; Hos. xiii. 8; but certainly acted by an extraordinary fury, which God raised in them for this purpose. Forty and two children: this Hebrew word signifies not only young children, but those also who are grown up to maturity, as Gen. xxxii. 22; xxxiv. 4; xxxvii. 30; Ruth i. 5.

25 And he went from thence to mount Carmel, and from thence he returned to Samaria.

He went from thence; partly, to decline the fury of the people of Beth-el; partly, that he might retire himself from men, and converse more freely with God, and so fit himself more for the discharge of his employment; and partly, that he might visit the sons of the prophets who lived in that place, or near it. He returned to Samaria, by the direction of God's Spirit, for the service which he did, chap. iii. 11, &c.

CHAP. III.

Jehoram followeth the sin of Jeroboam; he, with Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom, goeth to battle against Moab, 1—8. They, in distress for water, obtain it by Elisha, and a promise of victory, 9—20. The Moabites, deceived by the colour of the water, coming to spoil, are overcome, 21—25. The king of Moab, by sacrificing his eldest son, raiseth the siege, 26, 27.

NOW ^{a ch. 1. 17.} Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned twelve years. ^{896.}

The eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat. Quest. How can this be true, when Ahaziah, Jehoram's predecessor, who reigned two years, began his reign in Jehoshaphat's seventeenth year, 1 Kings xxii. 51? Ans. Either Ahaziah reigned the greatest part of two years, to wit, of the seventeenth and eighteenth years of Jehoshaphat, (parts of years being oft called years in the computation of times, both in Scripture and other authors,) and Jehoram began his reign towards the end of his eighteenth year; or Ahaziah reigned part of this two years with his father, and the rest after him.

2 And he wrought evil in the sight of the LORD; but not like his father, and like his mother: for he put away the ^{+ Heb. statue.} image of Baal ^{b 1 Kings 16. 31, 32.} that his father had made.

He put away the image of Baal; not from any principle of conscience (for that would have reached the calves also); but either because he was startled at the dreadful judgments of God inflicted upon his father and brother for Baal worship; or because he needed God's help to subdue the Moabites, which he knew Baal could not do; or to gratify Jehoshaphat, whose help he meant to crave, which he knew he should never obtain without this; and for this reason, it seems, Jezebel was willing to connive at it, as a trick of state.

3 Nevertheless he cleaved unto ^{c 1 Kin. 12. 26, 31, 32.} the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which made Israel to sin; he departed not therefrom.

The sins of Jeroboam, i. e. the worship of the calves; which all the kings of Israel kept up as a wall of partition between their subjects and those of Judah. Thus he shows that his religion was overruled by his interest and policy.

4 ¶ And Mesha king of Moab was a sheepmaster, and rendered unto the king of Israel an hundred thousand ^{d See Isaiah 16. 1.} lambs, and an hundred thousand rams, with the wool.

A sheep-master; a man of great wealth, (which in those times and places consisted much in cattle,) which enabled and emboldened him to rebel against his sovereign lord.

5 But it came to pass, when ^{e ch. 1. 1.} Ahab was dead, that the king of Moab rebelled against the king of Israel.

See of this chap. i. 1. It is here repeated to make way for the following story. Ahaziah did not attempt the recovery of Moab, either because he was a man of a low spirit and courage; or because his sickness, or the shortness of his reign, gave not opportunity for it.

6 ¶ And king Jehoram went out of Samaria the same time, and numbered all Israel.

Out of Samaria, to some place appointed for the rendezvous of his people. All Israel, to wit, such as were fit for war.

895. 7 And he went and sent to Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, saying, The king of Moab hath rebelled against me: wilt thou go with me against Moab to battle? And he said, I will go up: 'I am as thou art, my people as thy people, and my horses as thy horses.

f 1 Kings
22. 4.

Of which see on 1 Kings xxii. 4. He joins with him in this war, partly because the war was very just in itself, and convenient for Jehoshaphat, both in the general, that rebels and revolvers should be chastised and suppressed, lest the example should pass into his dominions, and the Edomites should be hereby encouraged to revolt from him, as they did from his son; and in particular, that the Moabites should be humbled, who had with others invaded his land before this time, 2 Chron. xx. 1, and might do so again if they were not brought low, for which a fair opportunity was now offered to him; and partly because Jehoram had reformed some things, and Jehoshaphat hoped by this means to engage him to proceed further in that work.

8 And he said, Which way shall we go up? And he answered, The way through the wilderness of Edom.

He said; either Jehoshaphat; or rather, Jehoram; for the following answer may seem to be Jehoshaphat's. Through the wilderness of Edom; which though it was much the longer way, yet they thought it best; partly to secure the king or viceroy of Edom, of whom they might have some suspicion, from that passage, 2 Chron. xx. 22, and to carry both him and his soldiers along with them into the war, both to get their assistance, and to prevent them from making a war of diversion against Judah, whilst Jehoshaphat was engaged against Moab; and partly that they might invade Moab on their weakest side, and where they least expected them. God also thus disposed their hearts to make way for the following miracle.

9 So the king of Israel went, and the king of Judah, and the king of Edom: and they fetched a compass of seven days' journey: and there was no water for the host, and for the cattle † that followed them.

+ Heb. at their feet.
See Ex. 11. 8.

The king of Edom, i. e. the viceroy under Jehoshaphat, 1 Kings xxii. 47, here called king; either because he was so called and accounted by his own people, or because that word is sometimes used for any prince or chief ruler. See Dent. xxxiii. 5; Judg. xviii. 1; xxi. 25; 1 Kings xx. 1. They fetched a compass, because they made a great army, which could move but slowly; and they fetched a greater compass than was usual, for some advantage which they expected by it. There was no water; a frequent want in those hot and desert parts; and now, as it seems, increased by the extraordinary heat and dryness of the season.

10 And the king of Israel said, Alas! that the LORD hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab!

So he chargeth his calamity upon God; and not upon himself, whose sins were the true and proper causes of it.

g 1 Kings
22. 7. 11 But ^gJehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD, that we may enquire of the LORD by him? And one of the king of Israel's servants answered and said, Here is Elisha the son of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah.

Is there not here a prophet? this he should have asked before, when they first undertook the expedition, as he did in a like case, 1 Kings xxii. 5, and for that neglect he now suffers; but better late than never. His affliction brings him to the remembrance of his former sin and present duty. Which poured water on the hands of Elijah, i. e. who was his servant; this being one office of a servant; and this office was the more necessary among the Israelites, because of the frequent washings which their law required.

12 And Jehoshaphat said, The word of the LORD is with him. So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom ^hwent down to him.

h ch. 2. 25.

The word of the LORD is with him; we may inquire the mind of God by him, for he is a true prophet; which Jehoshaphat might easily understand, because being a good man, and a great favourer of the LORD's prophets, he would diligently inquire, and many persons would be ready to inform him, of all things of that nature, and, amongst others, of Elijah's calling of Elisha by casting his prophetic mantle over him, 1 Kings xix. 19, and of Elijah's translation, and Elisha's substitution in his place, and of the proof of it, 2 Kings ii. 8, 14. Down to him; to his tent; which was either in the camp, or not far from it; for he went along with the army by the impulse of God's Spirit for this very occasion. They did not send for him, but went to him, that by giving him this honour they might more effectually engage him to give them his utmost assistance; and because they had heard that he was a man of a rugged temper and carriage, who therefore was to be sweetened, and so disposed to pity and relieve them.

13 And Elisha said unto the king of Israel, 'What have I to do with thee?' ⁱget thee to ^jthe prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother. And the king of Israel said unto him, Nay: for the LORD hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab.

What have I to do with thee? Let these idols whom thou worshippeth in thy prosperity now help thee in thy distress. Nay, I renounce those false prophets and Baals, and will seek to none but God for help. These three kings: if thou hast no respect for me, yet pity this innocent king of Edom, and good Jehoshaphat, who are involved in the same danger with myself.

14 And Elisha said, ^mAs the LORD of ⁿhosts liveth, before whom I stand, surely, were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor see thee.

15 But now bring me ^oa minstrel. And it came to pass, when the minstrel played, that ^pthe hand of the LORD came upon him.

o See 1 Sam.
10. 5.

A minstrel; one that can sing and play upon a musical instrument. This he requires, that his mind, which had been disturbed and inflamed with holy anger at the sight of wicked Jehoram, might be composed, and cheered, and united within itself, and that he might be excited to the more fervent prayer to God, and joyfully praising him; whereby he was prepared to receive the prophetic inspiration. For although prophecy be the gift of God, yet men might do something either to hinder or further the reception of it; for which cause Paul bids Christians study to get the gift of prophecy, 1 Cor. xiv. 1. And for this very end the colleges of the prophets were erected, wherein the sons of the prophets did use divers means to procure this gift, which also they did sometimes receive, as we see 2 Kings ii. 3, 5; and, amongst other means, they used instruments of music to exhilarate their spirits, &c., 1 Sam. x. 5. Of the great power of music upon the affections, see the notes on 1 Sam. xvi. 16. The hand of the LORD, i. e. the Spirit of prophecy; so called, to note that it was not from Elisha's temper of body or mind; that it was no natural nor acquired virtue inherent in him; but a singular gift of God, given to whom and when he pleased. This phrase is used also Ezek. i. 3; iii. 14, 22; viii. 1.

16 And he said, Thus saith the LORD, ^{p ch. 4. 3.} Make this valley full of ditches.

Which may receive the water, and hold it for the use of men and beasts.

17 For thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not see wind, neither shall ye see rain; yet that valley shall be filled with water, that ye may drink, both ye, and your cattle, and your beasts.

Ye shall not see wind; any of those winds which commonly produce rain. And seeing is here put for perceiving or feeling, one sense for another, or for all, as Gen. xlii. 1: compare Acts vii. 12; Exod. xx. 18, and elsewhere.

18 And this is but a light thing in the sight of the LORD: he will deliver the Moabites also into your hand.

This is but a small favour in comparison of what he intends to you for Jehoshaphat's sake. He will give you more than you ask or expect. For they were so weakened and discouraged with the great drought, that they had no hopes of proceeding in the offensive war, and thought it sufficient, if it were possible, to defend themselves from the Moabites, ver. 13.

19 And ye shall smite every fenced city, and every choice city, and shall fell every good tree, and stop all wells of water, and † mar every good piece of land with stones.

^{† Heb. griece.}

This is either, first, A command; and then the last clause is an exception from that law, Deut. xx. 19, which being delivered by a prophet, might be obeyed. And if this command seem severe, it must be considered that the Moabites were a very wicked people, perfidious, cruel, implacable enemies to God's people upon all occasions, and now in a state of rebellion. Or rather, secondly, A prediction of their success, that they should have so full and complete a victory, that they should be able to do all which is here expressed.

20 And it came to pass in the morning, when ^{q Exod. 29. 39, 40.} the meat offering was offered, that, behold, there came water by the way of Edom, and the country was filled with water.

When the meat-offering was offered, i. e. the morning sacrifice; of which Exod. xxix. 39, 40, which doubtless was attended with the solemn prayers of God's people, as the evening sacrifice unquestionably was, Acts iii. 1, there being the same reason for substance for both times. At this time Elisha joined his prayers with the prayers of God's people, especially those at Jerusalem, as Elijah had done at a like time, 1 Kings xviii. 29; and this time God chose to answer his and their prayers, and to work this miracle, that thereby he might determine the controversy between the Israelites and the Jews, about the place and manner of worship, and give a public testimony from heaven for the Jews, and against the Israelites. There came water; miraculously produced out of some rock or vein of the earth. By the way of Edom; from those parts which were towards Edom.

21 ¶ And when all the Moabites heard that the kings were come up to fight against them, they † gathered all that were able to † put on armour, and upward, and stood in the border.

^{† Heb. were cried together.}
^{† Heb. gird himself with a girdle.}

To put on armour, Heb. to gird on a girdle, i. e. a military girdle, to which the sword was fastened, 2 Sam. xx. 8; 1 Kings ii. 5. In the border, or, in that border, to wit, of their country, which was towards Edom, which way they understood the kings came. Here they stood probably to defend the passages into their country.

22 And they rose up early in the morning, and the sun shone upon the water, and the Moabites saw the water on the other side as red as blood:

Because of the morning sun, which meeting with the vapours that arose from the earth, and shining through them upon the water, gave it a reddish tincture. God also so ordered things, that their senses and fancies were disturbed, or the air so disposed, that it might seem of this colour. And they might more easily mistake this for blood, because they knew that that ground was generally dry, and without any trenches or streams of water, now especially in this dry season, there being no noise of wind and rain, ver. 17. And they might justly think that the three kings being divided in their religion and interests, and discontented for want of water, might fall into dissensions, and heats, and mutual slaughters, of which they had a late example, 2 Chron. xx. 22, 23.

23 And they said, This is blood: the kings are surely † slain, and they have smitten one another: now therefore, Moab, to the spoil.

^{† Heb. destroyed.}

They were so highly confident, that they send no scouts, but march thither with their whole army, and that in great disorder; wherein there was also a Divine hand, strengthening them in their mistakes, and hardening them to their destruction.

24 And when they came to the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose up and smote the Moabites, so that they fled before them: but ¶ they went forward smiting the Moabites, even in their country.

^{¶ Or, they smote in it even smiting.}

They pursued them to their own country, and entered it with and after them; the passes, which before the Moabites defended, being now open for them.

25 And they beat down the cities, and on every good piece of land cast every man his stone, and filled it; and they stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees: † only in Kir-haraseth left they the stones thereof; howbeit the slingers went about it, and smote it.

^{† Heb. until he left the stones thereof in Kir-haraseth. 7 Isaiah 16. 7, 11.}

Cast every man his stone: the stones which haply had been with great care and pains picked out of the land, and laid in heaps after the manner, they dispersed again, and slew the people, who should have cleansed them again. Kir-haraseth was the royal and strongest city of the Moabites, Isa. xvi. 7, 11, into which the remnant of the Moabites were gathered, where also their king was with them. The stones thereof: the walls and buildings of this city only were left; other cities, and in a manner their whole country, being utterly destroyed. The slingers; either, first, such as slung small stones against those that stood upon the wall to defend it; or rather, secondly, Such as slung great stones against the walls to break them down, according to the manner of those times. Smote it, i. e. made breaches in the walls, by which they might enter into the city, and take it.

26 ¶ And when the king of Moab saw that the battle was too sore for him, he took with him seven hundred men that drew swords, to break through even unto the king of Edom: but they could not.

That being unable to defend the city longer, he might make an escape; which he chose to do on the king of Edom's quarter, because he thought either that his was the weakest side, or that he would more willingly suffer him to escape, because he was not so hearty in the war as the rest, but only forced to it, and he might hereafter have some occasion of the king of Moab to join with him, as before he had, 2 Chron. xx. 22.

27 Then ^{■ Amos 2. 1.} he took his eldest son that should have reigned in his stead, and offered him for a burnt offering upon the wall. And there was great indignation against Israel: and they departed from him, and returned to their own land.

His eldest son; either, first, The king of Edom's son; whom in this eruption he took, and then sacrificed. Compare Amos ii. 1. But, first, That place speaks of the king, not of the king's son; and of the burning of his bones, not of the offering of a living man for a burnt-offering. Secondly, This would not have made the besiegers to raise their siege, but to have followed it more warmly to revenge so barbarous an action. Thirdly, The following clause, that should have reigned in his stead, agrees not so well to the Edomites, whose king was only Jehoshaphat's viceroi, and therefore his son had no right to succeed him; as it doth to the Moabites, whose king was revolted from Israel, and intended to keep that kingdom to himself and children. Or rather, secondly, His own son; whom he sacrificed, partly to obtain the favour of his god, according to the manner of the Phœnicians and other people in grievous and public calamities; whereof we have manifest testimonies, both in Scripture, as Psal. cvi. 37; Ezek. xx. 31, and in heathen authors, as Porphyrius, Plutarch, and others; and partly to oblige the Israelites to quit the siege out of compassion, or as despairing to conquer (at least without greater loss of men than it was worth) him who was resolved to defend himself and city to the utmost extremity. Offered him for a burnt-offering upon the wall, that the besiegers might see it, and be moved by it. Great indignation against Israel, or, great trouble or repentance upon Israel; i. e. the Israelitish king and people (who was the first cause of the war, and had brought the rest into confederacy with him) were greatly afflicted and grieved for this barbarous action, and resolved to prosecute the war no further, and so withdrew their forces, as also did their allies, and returned to their several homes; which they were the more willing to do, because the kingdom and country of Moab were so ruined, both as to their men, and cities or villages, and lands, that they were all secure of any great annoyance from him.

CHAP. IV.

Elisha multiplieth the widow's oil, 1—7. He is lodged by a Shunammite woman, who is barren: he promiseth her a son; which is born, 8—17; dieth, and is raised by Elisha, 18—37. At Gilgal he healeth the deadly pottage, 38—41; and feedeth one hundred men with twenty loaves and ears of corn, 42—44.

a 1 Kings
20. 35.

NOW there cried a certain woman of the wives of ^athe sons of the prophets unto Elisha, saying, Thy servant my husband is dead; and thou knowest that thy servant did fear the LORD: and the creditor is come ^bto take unto him my two sons to be bondmen.

b See Lev.
25. 39.
Matt. 18. 25.

The sons of the prophets, though they were wholly devoted to sacred employment, were not excluded from marriage, no more than the priests and Levites. Thy servant did fear the Lord; his poverty therefore was not procured by his idleness, or prodigality, or rather, wickedness; but by his piety, because he would not comply with the king's way of worship, and therefore lost all worldly advantages. To be bond-men; either to use them as his slaves, or to sell them to others, according to the law; of which see Exod. xxi. 2; Lev. xxv. 39; Isa. i. 1; Matt. xviii. 25.

2 And Elisha said unto her, What shall I do for thee? tell me, what hast thou in the house? And she said, Thine handmaid hath not any thing in the house, save a pot of oil.

What shall I do for thee? how shall I relieve thee, who am myself poor? What hast thou in the house, which may contribute to the payment of thy debts, or, at least, to the satisfaction of thy creditors, who may perchance deal favourably with thee through my persuasion? Save a pot of oil; which was useful for divers things about the service of God, and health, or delight, or ornament, and other uses of men. See Judg. ix. 9.

3 Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours, even empty vessels; ^c|| borrow not a few.

4 And when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.

Shut the door upon thee; partly, that none may hinder thee from minding thy work of filling and removing the vessels, which will require attention and diligence; partly, that thou alone mayst enjoy the benefit of it; partly, lest any of thy creditors should break in upon thee, and seize upon thy borrowed vessels before they are filled; partly, that thy mind being freed from distraction, may be wholly employed in prayer and praising of God; and partly, that it may be manifest that this is the work of God alone. Pour out; out of the pot, in which God multiplied the oil from time to time.

5 So she went from him, and shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the vessels to her; and she poured out.

6 And it came to pass, when the vessels were full, that she said unto her son, Bring me yet a vessel. And he said unto her, There is not a vessel more. And the oil stayed.

Unto her son; to one of them, for she had two, ver. 1. The oil stayed, to teach us, that we should not waste any of God's good creatures, and that God would not work miracles unnecessarily.

7 Then she came and told the man of God. And he said, Go, sell the oil, and pay thy || debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest.

First do justice to others, and then take care of thyself and children.

8 ¶ And † it fell on a day, that Elisha passed to ⁺Shunem, where was a great woman; and she † constrained him to eat bread. And so it was, that as oft as he passed by, he turned in thither to eat bread.

+ Heb. there

d Josh. 19. 18.
† Heb. laid hold on him.

To Shunem; a city in Issachar, near Mount Carmel, Josh. xix. 17, 18, whither the prophet frequently went. Was a great woman; for estate, or birth and quality. See Gen. xxiv. 35; 1 Sam. xxv. 2. She constrained him, by her importunate desire. To eat bread; to take his repast there.

9 And she said unto her husband, Behold now, I perceive that this is an holy man of God, which passeth by us continually.

An holy man of God; a prophet, as Judg. xiii. 6, and that of eminent holiness, by our kindness to whom we shall procure a blessing to ourselves.

10 Let us ⁺make a little chamber, I pray thee, on the wall; and let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a stool, and a candlestick: and it shall be, when he cometh to us, that he shall turn in thither.

Let us make a little chamber on the wall, that he may be free from the noise of family business, and enjoy that privacy which, I perceive, he desireth for his prayers and meditations. He will not be troublesome or chargeable to us; he cares not for rich furniture or costly entertainment, and is content with bare necessities.

11 And it fell on a day, that he came thither, and he turned into the chamber, and lay there.

12 And he said to Gehazi his servant, Call this Shunammite. And when he had called her, she stood before him.

i. e. Before the prophet, in the door of his chamber, as it is said, ver. 15. The relation seems to be a little perplexed, but may be thus conceived. It is in this verse recorded, in the general, that the prophet sent Gehazi to call her, and that she came to him upon that call; then follows a particular description of the whole business, with all the circumstances, first, of the message with which Gehazi was sent when he went to call her, and of her answer to that message, ver. 13, and of Gehazi's conjecture thereupon, ver. 14, and then of her coming to the prophet at his call ; which is there repeated to make way for the following passages.

13 And he said unto him, Say now unto her, Behold, thou hast been careful for us with all this care ; what is to be done for thee ? wouldest thou be spoken for to the king, or to the captain of the host ? And she answered, I dwell among mine own people.

What is to be done for thee ? wherewith shall I recompense all thy care and kindness to me and my servant ? To the king, or to the captain of the host ; with whom he justly had great power for his eminent service, chap. iii. I dwell among mine own people ; I live in love and peace among my kindred and friends ; nor have I any cause to complain of them, or to seek relief from higher powers.

14 And he said, What then is to be done for her ? And Gehazi answered, Verily she hath no child, and her husband is old.

What then is to be done for her ? hast thou observed any thing which she wants or desires ? For the prophet kept himself much in his chamber, whilst Gehazi went more freely about the house, as his occasions led him.

15 And he said, Call her. And when he had called her, she stood in the door.

Out of reverence, humility, and modesty, waiting till he came to her, or called her further in to him.

16 And he said, ^{e Gen. 18. 10, 14.} About this † season, according to the time of life, thou shalt embrace a son. And she said, Nay, my lord, thou man of God, † do not lie unto thine handmaid.

According to the time of life ; of which phrase see on Gen. xviii. 10. Do not lie unto thine handmaid ; do not delude me with vain hopes. She could not believe it for joy, and supposed the prophet might say thus either for her trial, or from his own private judgment and affection, and not by warrant from God.

17 And the woman conceived, and bare a son at that season that Elisha had said unto her, according to the time of life.

18 ¶ And when the child was grown, it fell on a day, that he went out to his father to the reapers.

19 And he said unto his father, My head, my head. And he said to a lad, Carry him to his mother.

His head was grievously pained ; which possibly came from the heat of the harvest season, to which he was exposed in the field.

20 And when he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, he sat on her knees till noon, and then died.

21 And she went up, and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and shut the door upon him, and went out.

Shut the door upon him ; partly in hopes that this might contribute something to the child's restitution to life, she having in all probability had an account of the like miracle done by Elijah, 1 Kings xvii. 21 ; and partly that she might for the present conceal the death of the child ; which if it had been known, would have filled her husband with grief, and hindered her journey, and opened the mouths of the enemies of God and his prophets to blaspheme ; whereas she had a confidence put into her by God, that the prophet could and would restore her son.

22 And she called unto her husband, and said, Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the asses, that I may run to the man of God, and come again.

23 And he said, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to day ? it is neither new moon, nor sabbath. And she said, It shall be † Heb. peace † well.

New moon and sabbath were the chief and usual times in which they resorted to the prophets for instruction, for which he supposed she now went, not suspecting but that the child was well by this time. It shall be well ; my going will not be troublesome to him, nor prejudicial to thee or me. Heb. peace, i. e. peace be to thee, farewell ; or, be contented, let me go.

24 Then she saddled an ass, and said to her servant, Drive, and go forward ; † slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee.

† Heb. restrain not for me to ride.

25 So she went and came unto the man of God ^{g ch. 2. 25.} to mount Carmel. And it came to pass, when the man of God saw her afar off, that he said to Gehazi his servant, Behold, yonder is that Shunammite :

26 Run now, I pray thee, to meet her, and say unto her, Is it well with thee ? is it well with thy husband ? is it well with the child ? And she answered, It is well.

So it was in some respects, because it was the will of a wise and good God, and therefore best for her. Or, it shall be well : though the child be dead, I doubt not by God's blessing upon thy endeavours it shall live again, and do well. But she answers ambiguously, and briefly too, that she might sooner come to the prophet, and more fully open her mind to him.

27 And when she came to the man of God to the hill, she caught † him by the feet : but Gehazi came near to thrust her away. And the man of God said, Let her alone ; for her soul is † vexed within her : and the LORD hath hid it from me, and hath not told me.

† Heb. by his feet. Matt. 28. 9.

She caught him by the feet ; she fell at his feet, and touched them, as a most humble and earnest suppliant. Compare 1 Sam. xxv. 24 ; Matt. xxviii. 9. Withal, she intimated, what she durst not presume to express in words, that she desired him to go along with her. Gehazi came near to thrust her away ; judging this posture indecent for her, and offensive to his master. Let her alone, for her soul is vexed within her ; disturb her not, for this uncouth gesture is a sign of some extraordinary grief. The Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me ; whereby he signifies that what he knew or did was not by any virtue inherent and abiding in himself, but only from God, who revealed to him only what and when he pleased. Compare 2 Sam. vii. 3.

† Heb. bitter. 1 Sam. 1. 10.

28 Then she said, Did I desire a son of my lord ? ^{h ver. 16.} did I not say, Do not deceive me ?

This child was not given to me upon my immoderate desire, for which I might have justly been thus chastised, as Rachel was, Gen. xxx. 1, compared with xxxv. 18 ; but was freely promised to me by thee in God's name, and from his special grace and favour ; and therefore I trust both thou didst pray for it, and God design it as a blessing, and not as an affliction, as now it proves, unless thou dost obtain the child for me a second time, which I know thou canst do, and I humbly beg thee to do. Do not deceive me, with vain hopes of a comfort that I should never have ? And I had been much happier if I had never had it, than to lose it so quickly. Therefore thou art in some measure concerned to revive my dead hopes, and to continue to me the great blessing which thou hast procured.

29 Then he said to Gehazi, ^{i 1 Kings 18. 46. ch. 9. 1.} Gird up thy loins, and take my staff in thine hand, and go thy way : if thou meet any man, ^{k Luke 10. 4. 1 See Ex. 7. 15. & 14. 16. ch. 2. 6. 14. Acts 19. 12.} salute him not ; and if any salute thee, answer him not again : and ^l lay my staff upon the face of the child.

Gird up thy loins ; tie up thy long garments about thy loins for expedition. See 1 Kings xviii. 46. Make no delays nor stops by the way, neither by words nor actions, but go with all possible speed. Compare Luke x. 4. He requires this haste, that the miracle might be done secretly and speedily, before the child's death was divulged, which might cause many inconveniencies. See on ver. 21. Lay my staff upon the face of the child; for God can work a miracle by the most unlikely and contemptible means, as he did by a rod, Exod. xiv. 16, and a mantle, 2 Kings ii. 8.

30 And the mother of the child said, m As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And he arose, and followed her.

I will not leave thee, until thou goest home with me. For she had no great confidence in Gehazi, nor was her faith so strong as to think that the prophet could work so great a miracle at this distance, and by his staff; which possibly was one reason why this did no good. Compare Matt. ix. 18; xiii. 58; xvii. 20.

31 And Gehazi passed on before them, and laid the staff upon the face of the child; but there was neither voice, nor † hearing. Wherefore he went again to meet him, and told him, saying, The child is "not awaked.

Neither voice, nor hearing, i. e. neither speech nor sense, nor any sign of life, to wit, in the child; which disappointment might proceed from hence, that Elisha having changed his mind, and yielded to her importunity to go with her, did alter his course, and not join his fervent prayers with Gehazi's action, but reserved them till he came thither. Not awaked, i. e. not revived; death being oft and fitly compared to a sleep, as Psal. lxxvi. 5; Dan. xii. 2, because of the resurrection which will in due time follow it, and here followed speedily, which makes the expression most proper in this place.

32 And when Elisha was come into the house, behold, the child was dead, and laid upon his bed.

33 He ° went in therefore, and shut the door upon them twain, ° and prayed unto the LORD.

Upon them twain; upon himself and the dead child, that he might pray to God without distraction, and might more freely use all those gestures and means which he thought fit.

34 And he went up, and lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands: and ° he stretched himself upon the child; and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

He went up, and lay upon the child; and although some ceremonial uncleanness might seem to be contracted by the touch of this dead body, yet that was justly to give place to a moral duty, and to an action of so great piety and charity as this was, especially when done by a prophet, and by the instinct of God's Spirit, who can dispense with his own laws. His mouth upon his mouth, &c.; one part upon another successively; for the disproportion of the bodies would not permit it to be done together. Compare 1 Kings xvii. 21; Acts xx. 10. The flesh of the child waxed warm; not by any external heat, which could not be transmitted to the child's body by such slight touches of the prophet's body; but by a natural heat, proceeding from a principle of life, which was already infused into the child, and by degrees enlivened all the parts of his body.

35 Then he returned, and walked in the house † to and fro; and went up, ° and stretched himself upon him: and ° the child sneezed seven times, and the child opened his eyes.

Walked in the house to and fro: he changeth his postures for his own necessary refreshment, and walked to and fro, exercising his mind in prayer to God, and faith, for the accomplishment of this work. Went up, and stretched himself upon him; repeating his former actions, to teach us not to be discouraged in our prayers, if we be not speedily answered, but to wait with patience, and continue, and be instant in prayer, till we obtain what we seek for. The child opened his eyes; so the work begun in the former verse is here perfected. Although miracles were for the most part done in an instant, yet sometimes they were done by degrees, as here, and 1 Kings xviii. 44, 45; Mark viii. 24, 25.

36 And he called Gehazi, and said, Call this Shunammite. So he called her. And when she was come in unto him, he said, Take up thy son.

Come in unto him, Heb. come to him, to wit, to the door of his chamber; where probably he met her with this joyful message.

37 Then she went in, and fell at his feet, and bowed herself to the ground, and ° took up her son, and went out.

She went in; into his chamber, and, after she had done him honour, to the bed where the child lay, whence she took him, and went her way.

38 ¶ And Elisha came again to "Gilgal: and there was a ° death in the land; and the sons of the prophets were ° sitting before him: and he said unto his servant, Set on the great pot, and see the pottage for the sons of the prophets.

Elisha came again to Gilgal; where he came with Elijah, chap. ii. 1; where was a school of the prophets, whom he designed to comfort concerning the present dearth and their other discouragements, and to confirm in the profession and practice of religion, and to instruct in the duties of the present season. Sitting before him; at his feet, as scholars to be taught by him. See chap. ii. 3; Acts xxii. 3. See the pottage: he provides no delicious meats, but mere necessaries, to teach them the contempt of worldly delights.

39 And one went out into the field to gather herbs, and found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap full, and came and shred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew them not.

A wild vine; a plant called coloquintida, whose gourds or leaves resemble the leaves of a vine, and are very bitter and pernicious to the eater.

40 So they poured out for the men to eat. And it came to pass, as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and said, O thou man of God, there is ° death in the pot. And they could not eat thereof.

There is death in the pot, i. e. some deadly thing; which they gathered from its excessive bitterness, by which possibly some of them might discern what it was.

41 But he said, Then bring meal. And ° he cast it into the pot; and he said, Pour out for the people, that they may eat. And there was no † harm in the pot.

He cast it into the pot, together with the pottage which they had taken out of it. There was no harm in the pot: the meal took away that hurtful quality, not by its natural power, which could do little in so short a time, but by the supernatural blessing of God upon it.

42 ¶ And there came a man from ° Baal-shalisha, ° and brought the man of God bread of the firstfruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full ears of corn || in the husk thereof. And he said, Give unto the people, that they may eat.

Bread of the first-fruits, which were the priest's due, Numb. xviii. 12; but these, and probably the rest of the priest's dues, were usually brought by the pious Israelites, according to their ability and opportunity, to the Lord's prophets; partly because they did a great part of the priest's office, and partly because they were not permitted to carry them to Jerusalem; and they might reasonably think that their circumstances, being extraordinary, would warrant their giving of them to extraordinary persons; and that those ceremonial institutions ought to give place to the greater laws of necessity and mercy to the Lord's prophets. And this passage seems to be noted here, not only on occasion of the following miracle; but also that by this one instance we might understand how so many schools of the prophets were supported. Twenty loaves; small loaves, as appears, both because one man brought them all so far, and because otherwise there had been no miracle here. Give unto the people, to wit, the sons of the prophets, who were then present with him, ver. 38.

CHAP. V.

Naaman, by his captive maid's report, goeth to Elisha to be cured of his leprosy, 1-9. Elisha sends to him a command to wash in Jordan: he is angry, and disdaineth it: his servants' advice: he doth it, and is healed, 10-14. He returneth with gifts to Elisha, who refuseth them: he departs, 15-19. Gehazi, Elisha's servant, abusing his master's name unto Naaman, taketh gifts from him: is smitten with leprosy, 20-27.

cir. 894. NOW ^a Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was ^b a great man [†] with his master, and [‡] honourable, because by him the LORD had given ^{||} deliverance unto Syria: he was also a mighty man in valour, but he was a leper.

a Luke 4. 27. b Ex. 11. 3. † Heb. before. ‡ Or, gracious. † Heb. lifted up, or, accepted in countenance. || Or, victory.

A great man with his master; in great power and favour with the king of Syria. Honourable; highly esteemed, both for his quality and success. By him the Lord had given deliverance unto Syria; which expression he useth, partly to mind the Israelites that all the hurt they had from the Tyrians was from the Lord, who used them as his rod, and gave them the successes against Israel, which are recorded; and partly to check that proud conceit which then was working, and afterwards more fully discovered itself, in the Israelitish nation, as if the care, and providence, and goodness of God were wholly confined to themselves, and not imparted to any other people.

2 And the Syrians had gone out by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid; and she [†] waited on Naaman's wife.

† Heb. was before.

Gone out by companies; making inroads into the land of Israel to rob and plunder, after the manner of those times. See 1 Sam. xxx. 8; 2 Kings xiii. 21; xxiv. 2. She waited on, Heb. was before, i. e. stood before her, or ministered to her. Compare Deut. i. 38.

3 And she said unto her mistress, Would God my lord were [†] with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would [†] recover him of his leprosy.

† Heb. before.

In Samaria; either, first, in the kingdom of Samaria. Or, secondly, in the city of Samaria; where he was when she was taken; or where he commonly resided, though he went to other places, as need required. He would recover him of his leprosy; or, take him away (as this Hebrew verb is used, Gen. xxx. 23; Zeph. i. 2) from his leprosy, i. e. take away his leprosy from him.

4 And one went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel.

One of Naaman's servants hearing this, went in and told it to Naaman, and he to the king of Syria, which is implied. Or, And he went in, &c., i. e. Naaman, mentioned ver. 1, hearing this from his wife, told it to the king of Syria, as the next words intimate.

5 And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. And he departed, and ^e took [†] with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment.

e 1 Sam. 9. 8. ch. 8. 8, 9. † Heb. in his hand.

The king of Israel; Jehoram the son of Ahab, chap. iii. 1. I will send a letter unto the king of Israel, desiring him to obtain this favour from the prophet. Ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold; partly for the charges of his journey; and partly for presents to the prophet, or others, as he saw fit.

6 And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith sent Naaman my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy.

i. e. Procure his recovery by the means of Elisha, ver. 3, 4, whom thou mayst command to use his utmost skill and power herein.

7 And it came to pass, when the king of Israel had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and said, Am I ^d God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me.

d Gen. 30. 2. Deut. 32. 39. 1 Sam. 2. 8.

He rent his clothes; either in detestation of his blasphemy, in giving God's perfections to him; or rather, for grief arising from a suspicion and fear that the Syrian made this only a pretence for the war which he designed against him. Am I God, to kill and to make alive? he expresseth it thus, because leprosy is a kind or degree of death, Numb. xii. 12, and he thought it as impossible to cure it as to raise the dead. See how he seeketh a quarrel against me, for not doing what he requires, which he knows impossible for me to do.

8 ¶ And it was so, when Elisha the man of God had heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.

Jehoram had not advised with Elisha, either because the sudden surprisal made him forget it, or because he hated him, and scorned to beg any thing from him. Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? there was no just occasion for thee to do so.

9 So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha.

Waiting for Elisha's coming to him.

10 And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and ^e wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean.

e See ch. 4. † John 9. 7.

Elisha sent a messenger; partly, to try and exercise Naaman's faith and obedience; partly, for the honour of his religion and ministry, that it might appear he sought not his own glory and profit in his miraculous performances, but only God's honour, and the good of men; and partly, for the discovery of the almighty power of God, that could by such slight means cure so desperate a disease. Thy flesh shall come again; which was in great part consumed by the leprosy. See Numb. xii. 12.

11 But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said, Behold, [†] I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the LORD his † Heb. I said. † Or, I said with myself, He will surely come out, &c.

† Heb: move up and down. God, and † strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper.

Naaman was wroth; supposing himself despised and mocked by the prophet. Herein he gives an example of the perverseness of mankind, who are apt to prefer their own fancies before God's appointments. Over the place; over or upon the affected part where the leprosy is, without which it seemed to him ridiculous to expect a cure.

¶ Or, Ammon. 12 Are not ¶ Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage.

Is there not as great a virtue in them to this purpose? But he should have considered that the cure was not to be wrought by the water, but by the power of God, who might use what means and methods of cure he pleased.

13 And his servants came near, and spake unto him, and said, My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean?

My father; or, our father; so they call him, both to show their reverence and affection to him, and to mitigate his exasperated mind.

14 Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God: and † his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and † he was clean.

Like unto the flesh of a little child, i. e. fresh and pure, free from the least mixture or mark of the disease.

15 ¶ And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came, and stood before him: and he said, Behold, now I know that there is † no God in all the earth, but in Israel: now therefore, I pray thee, take † a blessing of thy servant.

He returned to the man of God, to give him thanks, and a recompence for his great kindness. I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel; by this wonderful work I am fully convinced that the God of Israel is the only true God, and that other gods are but impotent idols. A blessing; a thankful acknowledgment. See on Gen. xxxiii. 11.

16 But he said, As the LORD liveth, before whom I stand, † I will receive none. And he urged him to take it; but he refused.

Not that he thought it simply unlawful to receive gifts or presents, which he did receive from others, chap. iv. 42, but because of the special circumstances of the present case; this being much for the honour of the true God and religion, that the Syrians should see the generous piety, and charity, and kindness of his ministers and servants, and how much they despised all that worldly wealth and glory which the priests or prophets of the Gentiles so greedily sought after; and that hereby Naaman might be much confirmed in that good religion which he had embraced, and others might be brought to a love and liking of it.

17 And Naaman said, Shall there not then, I pray thee, be given to thy servant two mules' burden of earth? for thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the LORD.

Two mules' burden of earth; wherewith I may make an altar of earth, as was usual, Exod. xx. 24. He desires the earth of this land, because he thought it more holy and acceptable to God, and proper for his service; or because he would by this token profess and declare his conjunction with the Israelites in the worship of God, and constantly put himself in mind of his great obligations to that God from whose land this was taken. And though he might freely have taken this earth without asking any leave, yet he rather desires it from the prophet's gift, as believing that he who had put so great a virtue into the waters of Israel, could put as much into the earth of Israel, and make it as useful and beneficial to him in a better way. And these thoughts, though extravagant and groundless, yet were excusable in a heathen and a novice, who was not yet thoroughly instructed in the true religion.

18 In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and † he leaneth on my hand, and I bow † myself in the house of Rimmon: when I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon, the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing.

Rimmon; a Syrian idol, called here by the LXX. Remman, and Acts vii. 43, Remphan. On my hand; or, arm, as that word sometimes signifies, both in Scripture and other authors; or, shoulder; upon which the king leaned, either for state or for support. Compare chap. vii. 2. When I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon; not in honour to the idol, which I do here, and shall there, openly renounce; but only in compliance with the king's infirmity and conveniency, who cannot well bow if I stand upright. The LORD pardon thy servant in this thing: because there seemed to be an appearance of evil in this action, though done with an honest mind, he desires the prophet's prayers that God would not charge it upon him as idolatry, nor be displeased with him for that practice.

19 And he said unto him, Go in † peace. So he departed from him † a little way.

Go in peace: these words may contain an answer, either, first, To his last petition, ver. 18; and so the sense may be this, Be not too solicitous about this matter; go, and the peace or blessing of God go along with thee. So the prophet both prays to God to bless and direct him in this and all other things, and intimates that God would do so. Or, secondly, To the former, ver. 17; Trouble not thyself about any of our earth, but go to thy own land, and I wish thee from God, and doubt not but God will give thee, peace, i. e. his favour and other blessings, which are oft contained in this word, if thou dost persist in this religion which thou hast now received. Or rather, this is only a farewell salutation, wherewith the prophet dismisseth him without any further answer to his requests, or instruction about his doubt; which he forbore by the motion of God's Spirit, which sometimes gives and sometimes denies instructions to persons or people, as he thinks fit. See Acts xvi. 6, 7. And the prophet by the Spirit's direction might forbear to give him particular answers, partly because these matters were not of such importance as to concern the essence or foundation of religion; and partly because he was yet but a novice, and not able to bear all truths, which was for a time the condition of the apostles, John xvi. 12, nor fit to be pressed to the practice of the hardest duties, which Christ himself thought not convenient for his disciples, Matt. ix. 14—17. And therefore he at present accepts of his profession of the true, and his renunciation of the false religion; and of this declaration, that what he did in the temple of Rimmon should not now be (as he had formerly intended and practised it) a religious action towards the idol, but only a civil respect to his master. And what was necessary for him to know further about the lawfulness or sinfulness of that action, the prophet might take another and a more convenient time to inform him.

20 ¶ But Gehazi, the servant of Elisha the man of God, said, Behold, my master hath spared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought: but, as the LORD liveth, I will run after him, and take somewhat of him.

Naaman this Syrian; a stranger, and one of that nation who are the implacable enemies of God's people; whom therefore my master should not have had so much regard to as to the Lord's prophets, who better deserved and more needed the money which he offered than Naaman himself did. As the Lord liveth; he swears, that he might have some pretence for the action to which he had bound himself by his oath, not considering that to swear to do any wicked action is so far from excusing it, that it makes it much worse.

21 So Gehazi followed after Naaman.

And when Naaman saw him running after him, he lighted down from the chariot to meet him, and said, † Is all well?

^{† Heb. Is there peace?}

He lighted down from the chariot to meet him; thereby testifying his great respect to the prophet his master.

22 And he said, All is well. My master hath sent me, saying, Behold, even now there be come to me from mount Ephraim two young men of the sons of the prophets: give them, I pray thee, a talent of silver, and two changes of garments.

This was a very unlikely story; but Naaman was not willing to question it, but glad of the opportunity of showing his gratitude to the prophet.

23 And Naaman said, Be content, take two talents. And he urged him, and bound two talents of silver in two bags, with two changes of garments, and laid them upon two of his servants; and they bare them before him.

He urged him, who at first refused it upon a pretence of modesty and obedience to his master's command.

24 And when he came to the || tower, he took them from their hand, and bestowed them in the house: and he let the men go, and they departed.

The tower; a safe and private place which he chose for that purpose, and where possibly he hid and kept other things which he had got by such-like frauds and artifices. He let the men go before they came within sight of his master.

25 But he went in, and stood before his master. And Elisha said unto him, Whence comest thou, Gehazi? And he said, Thy servant went † no whither.

^{† Heb. not hither or thither.}

26 And he said unto him, Went not mine heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee? Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and oliveyards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and menservants, and maidservants?

Went not mine heart with thee? did not my mind, being enlightened by God's Spirit, discern what thou saidst and didst? Is it a time? was this a fit season for this action? I had but newly and obstinately refused his gifts, for great reasons; of which see on ver. 16; and now thou hast given him cause to think that I was a cursed and wicked impostor, who vain-gloriously refused in public what I inwardly and greedily desired, and sought only a fitter place and opportunity to take; and that all our religion is but an imposture; and that the God who owns such a vile wretch for his prophet, as thou hast represented me to him, is not so holy and righteous as we pretend. Garments, and oliveyards, &c.; which Gehazi intended to purchase with this money; and therefore the prophet names them, to inform him that he exactly knew by Divine inspiration, not only Gehazi's outward actions, but even his most secret intentions.

27 The leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed for ever. And he went out from his presence ^a a leper as white as snow.

ⁿ 1 Tim. 6. 10. ^o Exod. 4. 6. Num. 12. 10. ch. 15. 5.

And unto thy seed for ever, i. e. for some generations; or for a long time, as that word is oft used, and as may be thought by comparing this with Exod. xx. 5; xxxiv. 7. He went out from his presence; being confounded with the sense of his guilt, and shame, and misery, and banished from the company of others by God's law, Lev. xiii. and xiv. A leper as white as snow; which is the worst kind of leprosy, and noted by physicians to be incurable. See Exod. iv. 6; Numb. xii. 10; 2 Chron. xxvi. 19, 20. Nor was this punishment too severe for Gehazi's wickedness, which was great and various; horrid covetousness, which is idolatry; the profanation of God's name by a wicked oath; downright theft; deliberate and impudent lying, and that to a prophet, which was in a manner a lying to the Holy Ghost, like theirs, Acts v. 3; a desperate contempt of God's omniscience, justice, and holiness; a horrible reproach fastened upon the prophet, and his religion; and a mischievous scandal given to Naaman and all other Syrians that might hear of it.

CHAP. VI.

Elisha, giving leave to the young prophets to enlarge their dwellings, causeth iron to swim, 1—7. He discovereth the king of Syria's counsel, 8—12; who sendeth Syrians to apprehend him: he is preserved by angels: they are smitten with blindness; are brought into Samaria, and dismissed in peace, 13—23. Samaria is besieged, and brought to such extreme want and famine, that women eat their own children, 24—29. The king sendeth to slay Elisha, 30—33.

AND ^{the} sons of the prophets said unto Elisha, Behold now, the place where we dwell with thee is too strait for us. ^{cir. 850.}
^{a ch. 4. 38.}

The sons of the prophets; either at Beth-el, or Jericho; or rather, at Gilgal; as may seem from its nearness to the river of Jordan, ver. 2. With thee, or, before thy face, i. e. under thy inspection and direction; where thou dost frequently dwell with us. Or, to thy face; which may be joined with the following words; and so the sense may be this, It is apparent to thy view that this place is too strait for us. Is too strait for us; the number of the prophets increasing by the gracious providence of God, and by the ministry and miracles of Elijah and Elisha.

2 Let us go, we pray thee, unto Jordan, and take thence every man a beam, and let us make us a place there, where we may dwell. And he answered, Go ye.

Unto Jordan, i. e. to the woods near Jordan, which were near to them. See on ver. 1. A beam, i. e. a piece of timber for the building. Hence it may be gathered, that although the sons of the prophets principally devoted themselves to religious exercises, such as prayer, and praising of God, and the studying of God's word, and instructing of others, and waiting for Divine revelations; yet they did sometimes employ themselves about manual arts; which now they might be forced to, through the iniquity of the times.

3 And one said, Be content, I pray thee, and go with thy servants. And he answered, I will go.

4 So he went with them. And when they came to Jordan, they cut down wood.

5 But as one was felling a beam, the † ax head fell into the water: and he ^{† Heb. iron.} cried, and said, Alas, master! for it was borrowed.

The ax head fell into the water; the iron fell from the wood. Alas, master! for it was borrowed: he was the more concerned, partly because he was now forced to be idle and useless to them in the common work; and partly because it was his friend's loss, who now was likely to suffer for his kindness; and as justice obliged him to restore it, so his poverty disenabled him from it.

6 And the man of God said, Where fell it? And he shewed him the place. And ^{he} cut down a stick, and cast it in ^{to} thither; and the iron did swim. ^{b ch. 2. 21.}

7 Therefore said he, Take it up to thee. And he put out his hand, and took it.

8 ¶ Then the king of Syria warred against Israel, and took counsel with his servants, saying, In such and such a place

^{1 Or,} ^{encamping.} shall be my ¶ camp.

Thither I will send my forces, to surprise some place; or to lie in ambush where the king or his people were to pass, ver. 9.

9 And the man of God sent unto the king of Israel, saying, Beware that thou pass not such a place; for thither the Syrians are come down.

10 And the king of Israel sent to the place which the man of God told him and warned him of, and saved himself there, not once nor twice.

Sent to the place, either spies, to try whether the prophet spake truth; or rather, soldiers, to secure the place and passage designed. Saved himself; either his person when he was to pass that way; or his people, or places of importance. Not once nor twice, but much more frequently.

11 Therefore the heart of the king of Syria was sore troubled for this thing; and he called his servants, and said unto them, Will ye not shew me which of us is for the king of Israel?

^{+ Heb. No.} 12 And one of his servants said, † None, my lord, O king: but Elisha, the prophet that is in Israel, telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bed-chamber.

13 ¶ And he said, Go and spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him. And it was told him, saying, Behold, he is in °Dothan.

^{c Gen. 37.17.} That I may send and fetch him; for though I cannot conceal my designs from him, yet I may possibly take him by force; his power being, I doubt not, much inferior to his knowledge. Dothan; a city near Shechem, Gen. xxxvii. 17, and not far from Samaria.

^{+ Heb.}

The servant having been with him but a little time, even since Gehazi's dismission, had not yet seen any experiments of his great power; or if he had, his faith might easily be shaken upon so great and sudden a danger. Gone forth; either out of the gates of the city, where he might see them; or out of his house into the streets of the city, where he might learn this by the common fame and tumult of the people.

16 And he answered, Fear not: for ^{d 2 Chro. 32.} they that be with us are more than they that be with them.

17 And Elisha prayed, and said, LORD, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the LORD opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of °horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha.

Chariots of fire; which is useful, both for defence to those that are surrounded by it, and offence to the enemies who shall attempt to break through it. Round about Elisha: either the mountains were round about the city, and therefore round about Elisha, who was within it; or he saw in a vision Elisha upon the mountain encompassed with fiery horses and chariots.

18 And when they came down to him, Elisha prayed unto the LORD, and said, Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindness. And he smote them with blindness according to the word of Elisha.

When they came down to him; either in the city, into which they easily got admission, when they declared that the only end of their coming was to take Elisha; or in the field without the city, whither he went to meet them. He smote them with blindness; not with a total blindness, that they could see nothing, for then they would not have followed him; but with a partial blindness, that they could not distinctly discern the man they sought; which might be by some alteration made by God in their brain, or in the air. See the notes on Gen. xix. 11.

19 ¶ And Elisha said unto them, This is not the way, neither is this the city: † follow me, and I will bring you to the man whom ye seek. But he led them to Samaria.

^{+ Heb. come}
^{ye after me.} This is not the way, neither is this the city, to wit, where you will find the man for whom you seek; which was very true, because he was now come out of the city; and if they had gone on in that way into the city, they had found that Elisha was gone thence. There is indeed some ambiguity in his speech, and an intention to deceive them, which hath ever been esteemed lawful in the state of war, as appears from the use of stratagems. I will bring you to the man whom ye seek; and so he did, though not in such manner as they expected and desired. He led them to Samaria; which seemed to them to be some small and ordinary city; their senses being still deluded by a Divine operation.

20 And it came to pass, when they were come into Samaria, that Elisha said, LORD, open the eyes of these men, that they may see. And the LORD opened their eyes, and they saw; and, behold, they were in the midst of Samaria.

21 And the king of Israel said unto Elisha, when he saw them, My father, shall I smite them? shall I smite them?

Elisha had doubtless sent notice of his intentions to the king of Israel, that he might accordingly prepare himself. My father: now he gives him this title of reverence and affection, because of a great and present benefit he received from him; though otherwise he hated him, and would not hearken to his counsel. Shall I smite them? the repetition of the question shows his great desire to smite them, and that with utter destruction.

22 And he answered, Thou shalt not smite them: wouldest thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword and with thy bow? ^{g Rom. 12.} set bread and ²⁰ water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their master.

It is against the laws of humanity, and custom of war, to kill captives, though thou thyself hast taken them with thy own sword and bow, which may seem to give thee some colour of right to destroy them; but much more unworthy will it be in cold blood to kill these, whom not thy arms, but God's miraculous providence, hath put into thy hands. Set bread and water before them, i. e. give them meat and drink, which may refresh and strengthen them for their journey; which was an action of singular piety and charity, in doing good to their enemies, which was much to the honour of the true religion; and of no less prudence, that hereby the hearts of the Syrians might be both mollified towards the Israelites, and afraid to oppose that people who had such an invincible Protector.

23 And he prepared great provision for them: and when they had eaten and drunk, he sent them away, and they went to their master. So

^{h ch. 5. 2.} ^{ver. 5, 9.} ^b the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel.

He sent them away, refreshed, but disarmed, as is most probable. The bands of Syria came no more; either, 1. In such a manner, to wit, in small bands, or companies, which might be entrapped, as these had been; but their next attempt was by an open and solemn war, and a conjunction of all their forces, which they still ridiculously conceited would be too hard for the king, and prophet, and God of Israel, notwithstanding their multiplied experiences to the contrary. Or, 2. For some considerable time, until the terror of these examples was got out of their minds.

cir. 852. 24 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Ben-hadad king of Syria gathered all his host, and went up, and besieged Samaria.

He whom Ahab wickedly and foolishly spared, 1 Kings xx. 42, who now comes to requite Ahab's kindness, and to fulfil that Divine prediction. Ben-hadad was a name very frequent among the kings of Syria, 1 Kings xv. 18, &c.; 2 Kings xiii. 3, 24. [†] If not common to them all. See Jer. xlix. 27; Amos i. 4.

25 And there was a great famine in Samaria: and, behold, they besieged it, until an ass's head was sold for fourscore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of dove's dung for five pieces of silver.

Pieces of silver, supposed to be shekels; and the common shekel being valued at fifteen pence of English money, this amounts to five pounds; a vast price, especially for that which had on it so little meat, and that unwholesome, and unclean by law, Lev. xi. 3; though necessity might seem to excuse their violation of that law. A cab; a measure containing twenty-four eggs. Dove's dung; which they used not for fire, (for he is speaking here only of the scarcity of food,) but for food; which, if it seem incredible, it must be considered, first, That famine hath constrained people to eat things as improper and unfit for nourishment as this, as dry leather, and man's dung, as is implied Isa. xxxvi. 12, and affirmed by grave historians. Secondly, That some creatures do usually eat the dung of others. Thirdly, That doves' dung, though it be hotter than ordinary, might in other respects be fitter for nourishment than other, as being made of the best and purest grains, and having some moisture in it, &c. Fourthly, That this Hebrew word being of an obscure and doubtful signification, and no where else used, may be, and is by learned men, otherwise rendered and understood; either, first, of the corn which is found in the crops of doves; or, secondly, of the guts and other inwards of doves; or rather, thirdly, of a sort of cicer or pease, which in the Arabic language (which is near akin to the Hebrew, and from which many words are explained) is called dove's dung; for this was a food much in use amongst the poorer Israelites, and was by all esteemed a very coarse food, and therefore fit to be joined with an ass's head; and a cab was the usual measure of all sorts of grains and fruits of that sort.

26 And as the king of Israel was passing by upon the wall, there cried a woman unto him, saying, Help, my lord, O king.

Passing by upon the wall, to give necessary order for the defence of the city against assaults, and to see if the several guards were watchful and diligent, and if his directions were executed, and to observe the motions of the enemy.

¶ Or, ^{Let not the LORD save thee.} 27 And he said, ¶ If the LORD do not help thee, whence shall I help thee? out of the barnfloor, or out of the winepress?

If the Lord do not help thee, or, let not God help thee, as some both ancient and late interpreters render the words. So they are words of impatience, and rage, and a formal curse, wishing that God would not help her, as he could not, as Josephus, amongst others, understand it; which agrees too well with the character of the man, an infidel, and an idolater, and a wicked man, and at this time in a great rage, as appears from ver. 31. Or they may be rendered thus, No; (as this Hebrew particle is sometimes used, as Job xx. 17; Psal. xxxiv. 5; xli. 2; 1. 3; Prov. iii. 3, 25; xxxi. 4;) let the Lord help thee. So it may be taken, either, first, As a direction: No; do not cry to me, but to God, for help: God help thee, for I cannot. Or rather, secondly, As a profane scoff: No; come not to me, but go to him to whom Elisha directs you; pray to the Lord: you see how ready he is to help you, by his suffering you to come to this extremity; wait upon God for relief, as Elisha adviseth me; but I will wait no longer for him, ver. 33, and I will take a course with Elisha for thus abusing both me and my people with vain hopes. Or thus, The Lord (on whom forsooth thou and I are commanded to wait for help) will not help thee, as he could easily do, and would do, if he were so good as Elisha pretends; whence then shall I help thee? Out of the barn-floor, or out of the winepress? Dost thou ask of me corn or wine, which I want for myself?

28 And the king said unto her, What aileth thee? And she answered, This woman said unto me, Give thy son, that we may eat him to day, and we will eat my son to morrow.

29 So ^{1 Lev. 26. 29.} we boiled my son, and did eat ^{Deut. 28. 53.} him: and I said unto her on the ^{57.} next ^{† Heb. other.} day, Give thy son, that we may eat him: and she hath hid her son.

We boiled my son, and did eat him; a dreadful judgment, threatened to them in case of their apostacy, Deut. xxviii. 56, 57, in which they were now deeply plunged. Compare Ezek. v. 10. She hath hid her son; either that she might eat him alone; or rather, that she might save him from death; her bowels yearning towards him, and her hunger being in great measure satisfied.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, when the king heard the words of the woman, that he ^k rent his clothes; and he passed by ^{1 Kings 21. 27.} upon the wall, and the people looked, and, behold, he had sackcloth within upon his flesh.

He rent his clothes; partly in grief for such a horrid fact, and partly through indignation at the prophet, ver. 31. The people were in great numbers upon the wall, either to defend the city, or rather to seek relief from the soldiers, for whose provisions the king doubtless took special care, as it was necessary, for the preservation of the place. Within upon his flesh; under his inner garments, in token of his sorrow, and with a pretence of humiliation, which he would show by outward signs, as his father Ahab had done, not without some advantage to himself, 1 Kings xxi. 27—29.

31 Then he said, ^{1 Ruth 1. 17.} God do so and more ^{1 Kin. 19. 2.} also to me, if the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat shall stand on him this day.

If I do not this day take his head and life. This wretched and partial prince overlooks his own great and various sins, and, amongst others, his obstinate cleaving to the idolatry of the calves, and the whoredoms and witchcrafts of his mother Jezebel, 2 Kings ix. 22, and the wickedness of his people, which was the true and proper cause of this and all their calamities; and lays the blame of all upon Elisha; either supposing that he who had the spirit of Elijah resting upon him, had brought this famine by his prayers, as Elijah had formerly done, 1 Kings xvii. 1; or because he had encouraged them to withstand the Syrians, by promising them help from God in due time; or because he would not, by his intercession to God and the working of a miracle, deliver them from these calamities, as he easily could have done. But he did not consider that the prophets could not work what miracles and when they pleased, but only as far as God saw fit, whose time was not yet come; otherwise it was Elisha's interest as well as theirs to be freed from this distress.

32 But Elisha sat in his house, and ^{m Ezek. 8. 1. & 20. 1.} the elders sat with him; and the king sent a man from before him: but ere the messenger came to him, he said to the elders, ^{n Luke 13. 32.} See ye how this son of ^{o 1 Kin. 18. 4.} a murderer hath sent to take away mine head?

look, when the messenger cometh, shut the door, and hold him fast at the door: is not the sound of his master's feet behind him?

In his house; in the house where he lodged; for he had no house of his own, having forsaken all when he followed Elijah, 1 Kings xix. 20, 21. The elders; so they might be called, either, first, from their age; or rather, secondly, from their office, which was either ecclesiastical or civil: so they were either the sons of the prophets; or rather, some godly men who were then in some power and office, either in the court, or army, or city, as may seem probable from what he requires of them. And though Jehoram was a wicked king, and most of his officers probably like himself; yet there were some of them, whom Elisha's holy life, and powerful ministry, and glorious miracles, and the great and public benefits procured by him, had won to God, and to the true religion, at least to the profession of it, among which Jehu might be one: and these were here sitting with him, either to receive comfort and counsel from him in this distressed time, or rather to solicit him to use his power with God for their relief; which accordingly he doth, and in compliance with them, not out of any fear of the king, (from which he very well knew by frequent experience, and certain assurance, that God both could and would deliver him,) he gives the following answer, chap. vii. 1. A man from before him, or, one of them who stood before his face, one of his guard, or some other officer, to take away his head, as it follows. He said to the elders; being admonished by God of his danger. This son of a murderer; the genuine son of that wicked Ahab the murderer of the Lord's prophets, 1 Kings xviii. 4; xxi. 9; whose son he is not by birth only, but also by his manners and bloody disposition. Compare John viii. 44. This expression may seem very harsh and unfit; nor is it to be drawn into imitation by others; but it must be considered that he was an extraordinary prophet, intrusted with a power in some sort superior to that of Jehoram, and had authority to control and rebuke him in the name of the King of kings. To take away mine head; to kill me, before he hear what I have to say. Hold him fast; not the king, but the messenger, who was last mentioned; that he may not break in upon me, and take away my life, before the king comes. Is not the sound of his master's feet behind him? you shall not need to hold him long, for the king is just at his heels, coming, as is probable, either to recall his rash and furious sentence, or at least to debate the matter with the prophet, and to procure relief.

33 And while he yet talked with them, behold, the messenger came down unto him: and he said, Behold, this evil is of the LORD; ^p what should I wait for the LORD any longer?

Unto him, to wit, to the door, where also we are to understand that he was held fast, that he could not come at the prophet till the king came, as the prophet had commanded them to do. He said; either, first, The messenger, in the king's name and words. Or, secondly, The king himself, who, though not here named, may be presumed to be present, both by the prophet's prediction of his speedy coming, and by the presence of the lord on whose hand the king leaned, chap. vii. 2. This evil; this dreadful famine, which is now so extreme that women are forced to eat their own children. Is of the Lord; he hath inflicted it, and (for aught that I see) he will not remove it. Thus he lays all the blame upon God, not, as he ought, upon his own and his mother's wickedness, which provoked God, who doth not willingly afflict, to send this heavy judgment upon him. What should I wait for the Lord any longer? thou biddest me wait upon God for help; but I perceive I may wait long enough before deliverance comes; I am weary with waiting, I can wait no longer.

CHAP. VII.

Elisha prophesieth incredible plenty in Samaria; and the death of a great lord, who would not believe the prophecy, 1, 2. Four lepers visit the camp of the Syrians, and bring tidings of their flight, being hasted away by God, 3—11

The king sendeth spies, who confirm this report; and he spoileth their tents. Great plenty. The lord on whose hand the king leaned is trodden upon by the people, and dieth, 12—20.

THEN Elisha said, Hear ye the word of the LORD; Thus saith the LORD, ^aTo morrow about this time shall a measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, in the gate of Samaria.

Elisha said; either to the messenger, to be reported to the king; or rather, to the king, being then come to him, as it is expressed, ver. 18; and to his courtiers, who were come with him, ver. 2. Thus saith the Lord; the Lord, whom you have so highly offended, and at present despise and refuse to wait upon, of his own mere grace and bounty hath sent you the glad tidings of your deliverance. A measure, Heb. seah; a measure containing 6 eabs, or 144 egg-shells, or about a peck and a pottle of our measure. Be sold for a shekel: compare this with chap. vi. 25.

2 ^bThen † a lord on whose hand the king leaned answered the man of God, and said, Behold, ^cif the LORD would make windows in heaven, might this thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

On whose hand the king leaned, when he walked. See chap. v. 18. If the Lord would make windows, through which he could rain down corn, as once he did manna. Shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof; a just punishment for such peremptory unbelief, whereby he made not only the prophet, but even God himself, (in whose name it was evident Elisha said and did this and other things,) a liar.

3 ¶ And there were four leprous men ^dat the entering in of the gate: and they said one to another, Why sit we here until we die?

At the entering in of the gate, to wit, of the city, out of which they were shut by virtue of God's law, Lev. xiii. 46; xiv. 3: either the dwelling-place of the lepers was near the gate, or they were come very near the gate, for fear of the Syrians.

4 If we say, we will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there: and if we sit still here, we die also. Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians: if they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, we shall but die.

5 And they rose up in the twilight, to go unto the camp of the Syrians: and when they were come to the uttermost part of the camp of Syria, behold, there was no man there.

In the twilight; in the evening twilight, as appears from ver. 9, 12.

6 For the LORD had made the host of the Syrians ^eto hear a noise of chariots, and a noise of horses, even the noise of a great host: and they said one to another, Lo, the king of Israel hath hired against us ^fthe kings of the Hittites, and the kings of the Egyptians, to come upon us.

To hear a noise; either in the air; or rather, in their ears; otherwise the Samaritans had heard it. The Hittites; under which name (as elsewhere under the name of the Amorites) he seems to understand all or any of the people of Canaan. For though the greatest number of that people were destroyed, yet very many of them were spared, and many of them upon Joshua's coming fled away, some to more remote parts, (which that famous and ancient inscription upon a pillar in Africa testifies,) and others to the lands bordering upon Canaan, where by reason of the scarcity of inhabitants there was in that age room enough for them; and there they seated themselves, and grew numerous and powerful, and had (after their ancient and constant manner) kings over them. The kings also of Tyrus or Sidon may be here included. The kings of the Egyptians; by which they may understand either the king of Egypt, the plural number being put for the singular, as it is elsewhere; or the princes and governors of the several nomi or provinces in Egypt, such being oft called kings in Scripture.

g Ps. 48. 4.
5, 6. Prov.
26. 1.
7 Wherefore they ^sarose and fled in the twilight, and left their tents, and their horses, and their asses, even the camp as it was, and fled for their life.

To save their lives; which they fancied to be in such present and extreme danger, that they durst not stay to take away any of their goods, but every man fled the next way before him.

8 And when these lepers came to the uttermost part of the camp, they went into one tent, and did eat and drink, and carried thence silver, and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it; and came again, and entered into another tent, and carried thence also, and went and hid it.

9 Then they said one to another, We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry till the morning light, † some mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's household.

We do not well; not well for our brethren, whom we should pity and help; nor well for ourselves; for we may suffer for this neglect; either from the Syrians, who may lie lurking hereabouts; or from our king and people; or from God's immediate hand.

10 So they came and called unto the porter of the city: and they told them, saying, We came to the camp of the Syrians, and, behold, there was no man there, neither voice of man, but horses tied, and asses tied, and the tents as they were.

They told them, to wit, the porter and his companies.

11 And he called the porters; and they told it to the king's house within.

The porters; either his fellow porters of the city; or rather, the porters or guards of the gate of the king's house.

12 ¶ And the king arose in the night, and said unto his servants, I will now shew you what the Syrians have done to us. They know that we be hungry; therefore are they gone out of the camp to hide themselves in the field, saying, When they come out of the city, we shall catch them alive, and get into the city.

13 And one of his servants answered and said, Let some take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left † in the city, (behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel that are left in it: behold, I say, they are even as all the multitude of the Israelites that are consumed:) and let us send and see.

So the sense is, We may well venture these horses, though we have no more, because both they and we are ready to perish through hunger; and therefore let us use them whilst we may for our common good, or to make the discovery. But the repetition of the phrase seems to imply something more emphatical and significant than the saving of four or five horses, for which it is not probable they would be so much concerned in their circumstances. The words therefore may be rendered otherwise, Behold, they are of a truth (the Hebrew prefix caph being not here a note of similitude, as the other translations make it, and as it is commonly used; but an affirmation of the truth and certainty of the things, as it is taken Numb. xi. 1; Deut. ix. 10; Hos. iv. 4; v. 10; John i. 14) all the multitude of the horses of Israel that are left in it (to wit, in the city); behold, I say, they are even all the multitude of the horses of the Israelites which (i. e. which multitude) are consumed, i. e. reduced to this small number, all consumed except these five. And thus the vulgar Latin, and some others, understand it. And this was indeed a memorable passage, and worthy of a double behold, to show what mischief the famine had done both upon men and beasts, and to what a low ebb the king of Israel was come, that all his troops of horses, to which he had trusted, were shrunk to so small a number.

14 They took therefore two chariot horses; and the king sent after the host of the Syrians, saying, Go and see.

Two chariot horses, or, two chariots of horses; or rather, two chariot horses, as divers render the words, i. e. horses which belonged to the king's chariots. For single horses seem much more proper for this service than chariots and horses. And whereas it was moved by the king's servant, that all the five horses should be sent, it seems it was thought by the king and others that two were sufficient for that purpose.

15 And they went after them unto Jordan: and, lo, all the way was full of garments and vessels, which the Syrians had cast away in their haste. And the messengers returned, and told the king.

In their haste, or, in their fear, or consternation, where-with God struck them.

16 And the people went out, and spoiled the tents of the Syrians. So a measure of fine flour was sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, ^h according to the word of the LORD.

17 ¶ And the king appointed the lord on whose hand he leaned to have the charge of the gate: and the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died, ^{i ch. 6. 32. ver. 2.} as the man of God had said, who spake when the king came down to him.

To have the charge of the gate; partly to prevent tumults and disorders and mischiefs amongst the people; and partly to take order about the shutting of the gates, if need were, and if the Syrians should happen to return upon them.

18 And it came to pass as the man of God had spoken to the king, saying, ^{k ver. 1.} Two measures of barley for a shekel, and a measure of fine flour for a shekel, shall be to morrow about this time in the gate of Samaria:

19 And that lord answered the man of God, and said, Now, behold, if the LORD should make windows in heaven, might such a thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

20 And so it fell out unto him: for the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died.

CHAP. VIII.

The Shunammite having, by Elisha's advice, left the land because of the famine, returneth home; and hath her whole estate restored to her for Elisha's sake, 1—6. He cometh to Damascus. Ben-hadad is sick, and sendeth Hazael to him with presents. Elisha foretelleth Ben-hadad's violent death, and Hazael's cruel reign, with tears. Hazael's answer: he killeth his master, and succeedeth him, 7—15. Jehoram's wicked reign in Judah: Edom and Libnah revolt, 16—23. He dieth, and Ahaziah his son succeedeth him: his wicked reign: he entertaineth friendship with Joram king of Israel, 24—29.

cir. 891. THEN spake Elisha unto the woman, a ch. 4. 35. whose son he had restored to life, saying, Arise, and go thou and thine houshold, and sojourn wheresoever thou canst sojourn: for the LORD^b hath called for a famine; and it shall also come upon the land seven years.

Then: this particle of time may be understood either particularly and definitely of the time next following the former history, or more generally and indefinitely (as it is frequently used) of the time in which Elisha and this Shuammith woman lived. Possibly this might happen before the history of Naaman, chap. v., or at least before the siege of Samaria, chap. vi.; but this is not certain. Unto the woman; expressing his gratitude for her former kindnesses, by taking special care for her preservation. Wheresoever thou canst sojourn; in any convenient place out of the land of Israel. Hath called for a famine, i. e. hath appointed to bring a famine, or a great scarcity of provisions. This expression intimates that all afflictions are sent by God, and come at his call or command. Seven years; a double time to the former famine under Elijah, James v. 17, which is but just and reasonable, because they were still obstinate and incorrigible under all the severe and succeeding judgments of God, and under the powerful ministry of Elisha, who confirmed his doctrine by glorious miracles. See Lev. xxvi. 21, 24, 28.

2 And the woman arose, and did after the saying of the man of God: and she went with her household, and sojourned in the land of the Philistines seven years.

Either because that was near her lands and dwelling, which she thought she might have an eye to, when occasion required; or because there was more plenty than in Judah; or because she knew that her going to dwell in Judah would be very displeasing to the king of Israel, whose favour she was like to need hereafter. Nor was there now that danger of idolatry from the Philistines as there had been formerly, because their power and influence was now grown inconsiderable, and probably many of the Jews and Israelites lived among them. And this land, though bordering upon Israel, was free from this famine, that it might appear that this was a special hand and judgment of God upon the Israelites for their idolatry, and for their unprofitableness under all the means of grace which now they plentifully enjoyed by Elisha and many other prophets; which the Philistines not enjoying, their sin was much less, and therefore their present condition was better.

cir. 885. 3 And it came to pass at the seven years' end, that the woman returned out of the land of the Philistines: and she went forth to cry unto the king for her house and for her land.

Which having been forsaken by her, were possessed by her kindred, or others, who had obtained them from the king, and now intended to keep the possession of them.

c ch. 5. 27. 4 And the king talked with^c Gehazi the servant of the man of God, saying, Tell me, I pray thee, all the great things that Elisha hath done.

Quest. How could the king speak with Gehazi, who was a leper? Ans. Either the king might speak with him at a convenient distance, it being usual for others to discourse with lepers, as 2 Kings vii. 8; Matt. viii. 2; Luke xvii. 12; or his leprosy might be of that sort which was not infectious; or, if his leprosy was such as made him yet to be unclean, the king's great curiosity might easily prevail with him to break a ceremonial law, who made no scruple of violating God's moral law.

d ch. 4. 35. 5 And it came to pass, as he was telling the king how he had^d restored a dead body to life, that, behold, the woman, whose son he had restored to life, cried to the king for her house and for her land. And Gehazi said, My lord, O king, this is the woman, and this is her son, whom Elisha restored to life.

The woman was by God's wonderful and gracious providence brought thither in the most advantageous season.

6 And when the king asked the woman, she told him. So the king appointed unto her a certain officer, saying, Restore all that was her's, and all the fruits of the field since the day that she left the land, even until now.

The king asked the woman concerning the truth of Gehazi's relation.

7 ¶ And Elisha came to Damascus; and Ben-hadad the king of Syria was sick; and it was told him, saying, The man of God is come hither. 885.

To Damascus; either to the city, or rather to the kingdom, of Damascus, by comparing ver. 9; as Samaria, which properly was the name of the city, is sometimes the name of the kingdom; of which see on 1 Kings xiii. 32. Hither he came by the special direction of the Spirit, and under God's protection, upon the errand here following.

8 And the king said unto^e Hazael, 'Take a present in thine hand, and go, meet the man of God, and^f enquire of the LORD^g by him, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?'
^e 1 Kings 19. 15.
^f 1 Sam. 9. 7.
^g 1 Kin. 14. 3. ch. 5. 5. g ch. 1. 2.

Take a present in thine hand; by which he thought to purchase his favour, and the healing of his disease.

9 So Hazael went to meet him, and took a present^h with him, even of every good thing of Damascus, forty camels' burden, and came and stood before him, and said, Thy son Ben-hadad king of Syria hath sent me to thee, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?
^h Heb. in his hand.

Forty camels' burden. Hazael carried the more noble present, hoping, as his master did, to get some interest in the prophet and advantage to himself by it. Whether the prophet received it or not, is not here mentioned; but it is most probable he did not, from his former practice, chap. v., and because the reasons which then swayed him were still of the same force. Son Ben-hadad: he who before persecuted him as an enemy, chap. vi. 13, 14, now in his extremity honours him like a father.

10 And Elisha said unto him, Go, say unto him, Thou mayest certainly recover: howbeit the LORD hath shewed me that^h he shall surely die.

Here is no contradiction; for the first words contain an answer to Ben-hadad's question, ver. 8, Shall I recover of this disease? To which the answer is, Thou mayest or shalt recover, i. e. notwithstanding thy disease, which is not mortal, and shall not take away thy life. The latter words contain the prophet's explication of or addition to that answer, which is, that he should die, not by the power of his disease, but by some other cause. But it is observable, that in the Hebrew text it is lo, the adverb, which signifies not; which though most affirm to be put for lo, the pronoun, signifying to him; yet others take it as it lies, and translate the words thus, Say, Thou shalt not recover; for the Lord hath showed me that he shall surely die. Or, according to the former reading, the first words may be taken interrogatively, Say unto him, Shalt thou indeed recover? (as thou dost flatter thyself:) no; (which negation is implied in the very question, and gathered from the following words;) for the Lord hath showed me that he shall surely die.

11 And he settled his countenance^h stedfastly, until he was ashamed: and the man of Godⁱ wept.

He settled his countenance stedfastly; the prophet fixed his eyes upon Hazael. Until he was ashamed; either till ^h Heb. and set it. Luke 19. 41.

the prophet was ashamed to look any longer upon him ; or till Hazael was ashamed, as apprehending that the prophet suspected or discerned something extraordinary and of an evil and shameful nature in him. The Hebrew words are ambiguous, and may indifferently be referred to either of them ; but they seem more properly to belong to Hazael, because it follows, by way of distinction, the man of God wept.

12 And Hazael said, Why weepeth my lord ? And he answered, Because I know ^kthe evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Israel : their strong holds wilt thou set on fire, and their young men wilt thou slay with the sword, and wilt dash their children, and rip up their women with child.

So here was a double cause of his grief and tears, the evil of sin in Hazael, and the evil of suffering upon Israel.

13 And Hazael said, But what, ^mis thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing ? And Elisha answered, ⁿThe LORD hath shewed me that thou shalt be king over Syria.

Is thy servant a dog ? either so vile and unworthy, as this expression is used, 2 Sam. iii. 8 ; ix. 8 ; or so impudent, for which dogs are noted ; or so fierce, and barbarous, and inhuman. Compare Psal. xxii. 16, 20 ; lix. 6. Thou shalt be king over Syria ; and when thou shalt have power in thy hand, thou wilt discover that bloody disposition, and that hatred against God's people, which now lies hid from others, and possibly from thyself ; and therefore with the kingdom thou wilt inherit their cruel dispositions.

14 So he departed from Elisha, and came to his master ; who said to him, What said Elisha to thee ? And he answered, He told me that thou shouldst surely recover.

He represents the prophet's answer by halves, that by his master's security he might have the fitter opportunity to execute his treasonable design.

15 And it came to pass on the morrow, that he took a thick cloth, and dipped it in water, and spread it on his face, so that he died : and Hazael reigned in his stead.

Spread it on his face ; pretending, it may be, to cool his immoderate heat with it ; but applying it so closely, that he choked him therewith ; by which artifice his death seemed to be natural, there being no signs of a violent death upon his body. And this he the more boldly attempted, because the prophet's prediction made him confident of the success. Hazael reigned in his stead ; having the favour of the people, and of the men of war.

16 ¶ And in the fifth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel, Jehoshaphat being then king of Judah, Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah began to reign.

Jehoram was first made king or viceroy by his father divers years before this time, to wit, at his expedition to Ramoth-gilead, as was noted before ; which dominion of his ended at his father's return. But now Jehoshaphat, being not far from his death, and having divers sons, and fearing some competition and dissension among them, makes Jehoram king the second time, as David did Solomon upon the like occasion, 1 Chron. xxix. 22, which is the thing here related. But of this see more in the notes on 2 Kings i. 17 ; iii. 1.

17 ¶ Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign ; and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

Part with his father, and part by himself alone.

18 And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, as did the house of Ahab : for ^qthe daughter of Ahab was his wife : and he did evil in the sight of the LORD.

He walked in the way of the kings of Israel, after his father's death. The daughter of Ahab ; Athaliah, ver. 26. This unequal marriage, though Jehoshaphat possibly designed it as a mean of uniting the two kingdoms under one head, and in the true religion, is here and elsewhere noted as the cause both of the great wickedness of his posterity, and of those sore calamities which befell them.

19 Yet the LORD would not destroy Judah for David his servant's sake, 'as he promised him to give him always a light, and to his children.

Ahoay, Heb. all days, until the coming of the Messiah, as it is elsewhere limited and explained ; for so long, and not longer, this succession might seem necessary for the making good of God's promise and covenant made with David. But when the Messiah was once come, there was no more need of any succession, and the sceptre might and did without any inconvenience depart from Judah, and from all the succeeding branches of David's family, because the Messiah was to hold the kingdom for ever in his own person, though not in so gross a way as the carnal Jews imagined, but in a spiritual manner. A light, i. e. a son and successor. Of this phrase, see on 1 Kings xi. 36.

20 ¶ In his days Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah, and made a king over themselves.

From under the hand of Judah ; under which they had been under David's time, 2 Sam. viii. 14. Compare 1 Kings xxii. 47.

21 So Joram went over to Zair, and all the chariots with him : and he rose by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him about, and the captains of the chariots : and the people fled into their tents.

i. e. The common soldiers of the Edomites, herein following the example of their captains.

22 ¶ Yet Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. Then Libnah revolted at the same time.

Edom revolted ; for though Joram had given them a defeat, yet it may seem to have been no great slaughter, but only a putting them to flight ; and therefore they might easily rally again. And Joram could not pursue the victory, because he was recalled by the revolt of his own subjects, which had taken the occasion of his absence, and probably feared that others would follow their example, if they had the like occasion. Libnah ; a considerable city in Judah, belonging to the priests, Josh. xv. 42 ; xxi. 13. Why Libnah revolted, see 2 Chron. xxi. 10, 11. It is probable they returned to their obedience, because those words, unto this day, which are added to the former clause, are omitted here.

23 And the rest of the acts of Joram, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah ?

Of which see on 1 Kings xiv. 19.

24 And Joram slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David : and Ahaziah his son reigned in his stead.

25 ¶ In the twelfth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel did Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah begin to reign.

In the twelfth year of Joram. Object. It was in the eleventh year of Joram, chap. ix. 29. Answ. Either, first, He began to reign in the confines of Joram's eleventh and twelfth year, in the very end of his eleventh year, or towards the beginning of the twelfth, whence it is indifferently ascribed to the one or the other. Or, secondly, The one year of Ahaziah did concur with the latter half of Joram's eleventh year, and the former half of his twelfth year : and if he could not be said to begin to reign in both these years, yet he might unquestionably be said to reign in both of them ; and the Hebrew word, both here and chap. ix. 29, properly signifies he reigned, and not he began to reign, as it is translated. Or, thirdly, Ahaziah began to reign with his father, and during his life, according to the late examples both in Judah and Israel, there being also special occasion for it, by reason of Joram's cruel and long sickness, 2 Chron. xxi. 18, &c.; and this was in Joram's eleventh year, and then his father died, and he began his single reign in Joram's twelfth year. Ahaziah, called also Jehoahaz, 2 Chron. xxi. 17, and Azariah, 2 Chron. xxii. 6.

26 ^vTwo and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign; and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Athaliah, the ^{||} daughter of Omri king of Israel.

How this agrees with 2 Chron. xxii. 2, see on that place. The daughter of Omri, i. e. his granddaughter. See above on ver. 18.

27 ^{*}And he walked in the way of the house of Ahab, and did evil in the sight of the LORD, as did the house of Ahab: for he was the son in law of the house of Ahab.

[†]He was the proper son of Athaliah, daughter of Ahab, and the grandson-in-law of Ahab, because his father was Ahab's son-in-law, ver. 18.

28 [¶]And he went ^awith Joram the son of Ahab to the war against Hazael king of Syria in Ramoth-gilead; and the Syrians wounded Joram.

29 And ^bking Joram went back to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds [†]which the Syrians had given him at ^{||}Ramah, when he fought against Hazael king of Syria. ^cAnd Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah went down to see Joram the son of Ahab in Jezreel, because he was [†]sick.

The same place with Ramoth, or Ramoth-gilead.

CHAP. IX.

Elisha sendeth a young prophet with instructions to anoint Jehu king over Israel; whom he chargeth to destroy the house of Ahab, and fleeth, 1—10. Jehu is made king by the soldiers; killeth Joram in the field of Naboth, 11—26; killeth also Ahaziah king of Judah, 27—29; causeth Jezebel to be thrown out of a window; who is devoured by dogs, 30—37.

884. AND Elisha the prophet called one of ^athe children of the prophets, and said unto him, ^bGird up thy loins, and take this box of oil in thine hand, ^cand go to Ramoth-gilead:

Gird up thy loins; for haste, to take this opportunity when the kings of Israel and Judah were both absent, chap. viii. 29, and Jehu, as it seems, was left in chief command.

2 And when thou comest thither, look out there Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat the son of Nimshi, and go in, and make him arise up from among ^dhis brethren, and carry him to an [†]inner chamber;

Partly that the work may not be hindered, and partly for the security of thy own person. See ver. 3.

3 Then ^etake the box of oil, and pour it on his head, and say, Thus saith the LORD, I have anointed thee king over Israel. Then open the door, and flee, and tarry not.

I have anointed thee king over Israel: this was not his whole message; but the rest of it is particularly declared ver. 7—10, and is to be understood here.

4 [¶]So the young man, even the young man the prophet, went to Ramoth-gilead.

Which is here noted as an eminent act of obedience, whereby he run into a manifest hazard of his life.

5 And when he came, behold, the captains of the host were sitting; and he said, I have an errand to thee, O captain. And Jehu said, Unto which of all us? And he said, To thee, O captain.

6 And he arose, and went into the house; and he poured the oil on his head, and said unto him, ^fThus saith the LORD God of Israel, I have anointed thee king over the people of the LORD, even over Israel.

Into the house, i. e. into an inner chamber in the house, ver. 2. He poured the oil on his head; thereby in God's name letting him into the actual possession of the kingdom. For if Elijah did before this time anoint him, as some think, from 1 Kings xix. 16, that unction did only confer a remote right to the kingdom, as Samuel's unction did to David, 1 Sam. xvi. 13. Though others think Elijah did perform that command by Elisha, to whom he left it in charge, and Elisha waited God's time and command for the actual execution of it, which he received at this time.

7 And thou shalt smite the house of Ahab thy master, that I may avenge the blood of my servants the prophets, and the blood of all the servants of the LORD, ^gat the hand of Jezebel.

Smite, i. e. kill and destroy, as that word is used, Gen. viii. 21, and elsewhere. Thy master; thy former lord and king.

8 For the whole house of Ahab shall perish: and ^hI will cut off from Ahab ⁱhim that pisseth against the wall, and ^khim that is shut up and left in Israel:

9 And I will make the house of Ahab like the house of ^lJeroboam the son of Nebat, and like the house of ^mBaasha the son of Ahijah:

10 ⁿAnd the dogs shall eat Jezebel in the portion of Jezreel, and there shall be none to bury her. And he opened the door, and fled.

In the portion of Jezreel; in that part of land in or near the city, which belonged to Naboth.

11 [¶]Then Jehu came forth to the servants of his lord: and one said unto him, Is all well? wherefore came ^othis mad fellow to thee? And he said unto them, Ye know the man, and his communication.

To the servants of his lord; to the rest of the commanders and officers there present. Is all well? is not this unlucky messenger come with some ill tidings? Wherefore came this mad fellow? they perceived him to be a prophet by his habit, and gestures, and manner of speech. And these profane soldiers esteemed the Lord's prophets madmen; partly, because of their neglect of themselves, and contempt of all worldly wealth and honour, which the wise men of this world so greedily seek, and of their strange and uncouth manner of living; partly, because of their holy exercises to which they devoted themselves, which they esteemed nothing but a religious frenzy; and partly, because of those unusual and seemingly ridiculous gestures and actions which the prophets sometimes used in raptures of spirit, or in the fervours of devotion. Compare Jer. xxix. 26; John x. 20; Acts xxvi. 24. Ye know the man, and his communication; you rightly guess that he was a madman, and so it appears by his discourse with me, which was, after the manner of that sort of men, vain and impertinent, to tell me of my sins, or of my duty, or such things as are not worth my speaking, or your hearing.

12 And they said, It is false; tell us now.

And he said, Thus and thus spake he to me, saying, Thus saith the Lord, I have anointed thee king over Israel.

It is false: there is something extraordinary and of great importance in his message, as we plainly perceive by his calling thee into an inner chamber, by his great expedition, and by his gesture and carriage. Tell us now: his concealment of the thing made them more greedy to know it.

p Matt. 21. 7.

13 Then they hasted, and took every man his garment, and put it under him on the top of the stairs, and blew with trumpets, saying, Jehu is king.

+ Heb. reigneth.

Then they hasted; being well-pleased with the thing; partly, from the advantage which hereby they expected; partly, from that desire of change which is in most men's natures; and principally, by God's providence inclining their hearts to Jehu. Took every man his garment, and put it under him; a ceremony used in the eastern parts towards superiors, in token of great reverence to his person, that they would not have his feet to touch the ground, and that they put themselves and their concerns under his feet, and into his disposal. See on Matt. xxi. 7. On the top of the stairs; in some high and eminent place, whence he might be seen and owned by all the soldiers, who were called together upon this great occasion.

14 So Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat the son of Nimshi conspired against Joram. (Now Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Israel, because of Hazael king of Syria.

Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead; which interpreters conclude to have been taken by Joram before this time, though the taking of it be not mentioned. This they gather, first, from the mention of the inner chamber, ver. 2, and of the top of the stairs here; secondly, from ver. 15, Let none go forth out of the city. But these arguments seem not to be cogent. Not the former, because there might be some suburbs or outbuildings belonging to the city, or not far from it, which the Israelites might have in their possession. Nor the latter, as we shall there see. And if it was taken, why should all Israel be there to keep it, for which a strong garrison was sufficient? The words therefore may be otherwise rendered, exactly according to the Hebrew, Joram had kept, or did keep, (to wit, by his army left there,) or put guards, or laid siege at, or to, (for so the particle beth is oft used,) Ramoth-gilead. And therefore he had all Israel, i. e. all the military force of Israel, with him, that he might both maintain the siege, and withal oppose Hazael, who sought to relieve it.

15 But king †Joram was returned to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds which the Syrians †had given him, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria.) And Jehu said, If it be your minds, then †let none go forth nor escape out of the city to go to tell it in Jezreel.

+ Heb. let no escaper go, &c.

When he fought with Hazael; when he came with an army, either to retake the city taken by Joram, or to raise the siege. Out of the city; or, from the city; either from within the city, or from before it, from the siege or army. To go to tell it in Jezreel; that we may surprise him, and so more easily subdue him.

r ch. 8. 29.

16 So Jehu rode in a chariot, and went to Jezreel; for Joram lay there. †And Ahaziah king of Judah was come down to see Joram.

Went to Jezreel, accompanied with the horsemen of his army.

17 And there stood a watchman on the tower in Jezreel, and he spied the company of Jehu as he came, and said, I see a company. And Joram said, Take an horseman, and send to meet them, and let him say, Is it peace?

Inquire who it is comes, and if he come upon peaceable terms. For he feared, lest either the Syrians had prevailed there, or some sedition or rebellion was raised against him; which the example of Libnah, and his own guilty conscience, made him fear.

18 So there went one on horseback to meet him, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu said, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me. And the watchman told, saying, The messenger came to them, but he cometh not again.

What hast thou to do with peace? what right hast thou, or thy master that sent thee, to peace?

19 Then he sent out a second on horseback, which came to them, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu answered, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me.

20 And the watchman told, saying, He came even unto them, and cometh not again: and the driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth † furiously.

Against Jehu, or, to meet Jehu, to know his intentions, and by his presence to repress any seditious inclinations which might be in Jehu or his followers. In the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite; in that field which formerly belonged to Naboth, part whereof was enclosed by Ahab, and made a garden.

22 And it came to pass, when Joram saw Jehu, that he said, Is it peace, Jehu? And he answered, What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many?

Is it peace? dost thou come to me with a peaceable mind, or in a way of hostility? For now, when it was too late, he began to suspect some treachery; which God hid from him before, to prepare him for destruction. What peace? what cause hast thou to expect peace, when thou hast so long abetted, and dost still abet, and allow thy mother in her abominable practices? The whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel, and her witchcrafts; which are to be understood, either, literally; spiritual whoredom, which is idolatry, being oft punished with corporal; see ver. 30; and witchcraft there was oft practised by idolaters. Or rather, mystically and spiritually of her idolatry, which is oft called whoredom, because it is a departing from God, to whom we are all tied by many obligations; and witchcraft, either because it doth so powerfully bewitch and deceive men's minds, or because it is a manifest entering into covenant with the devil. For idolatry being her chief sin, and the cause of all the rest, it seems improbable that Jehu would omit that in the indictment which he drew against her. He mentions not Joram's, but his mother's sins; partly, because they were more notorious and infamous; partly, because they were the principal cause why God inflicted, and he was come to execute, these judgments; partly, because by his connivance he had made them his own; and partly, because he could find no gross and odious matter where-with to charge him, except about the worship of the calves; which he forbore to mention, both lest it should lose his interest amongst his officers and soldiers, who were devoted to that worship; and because he himself intended to keep it up.

23 And Joram turned his hands, and fled, and said to Ahaziah, There is treachery, O Ahaziah.

Joram turned his hands; either that therewith he might turn the reins of the chariot, or that by this motion he might direct his charioteer to turn it from Jehu.

† Heb. filled his hand with a bow. 24 And Jehu †drew a bow with his full strength, and smote Jehoram between his arms, and the arrow went out at his heart, and he †sunk down in his chariot.

25 Then said Jehu to Bidkar his captain, Take up, and cast him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite: for remember how that, when I and thou rode together after Ahab his father, †the LORD laid this burden upon him;

† 1 Kings 21. 29. When I and thou rode together after Ahab his father; which might be when Ahab went in his chariot, attended with his nobles or chief officers, (of which these were two,) to take a formal and solemn possession of Naboth's land; for then the prophet Elijah met him, and denounced this judgment against him, 1 Kings xxi. 17, &c. This burden, i. e. this grievous prophecy; for such are oft and truly called burdens, as Isa. xlii. 1; xv. 1; Jer. xxiii. 33, 34; Nah. i. 1.

26 Surely I have seen yesterday the †blood of Naboth, and the blood of his sons, saith the LORD; and †I will requite thee in this †plat, saith the LORD. Now therefore take and cast him into the plat of ground, according to the word of the LORD.

† Heb. blood. † 1 Kings 21. 19. † Or, portion. The blood of his sons; who, as it seems, were killed with their father by Jezebel's advice, to make the possession of the vineyard more sure to Ahab, though it be not mentioned in its proper place, 1 Kings xxi. 13; for it is not unusual to bring in such fragments of history in succeeding writings which were neglected in the history of those matters. Thus we read of the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, Amos i. 1, which was not recorded in his history, in the Books of the Kings or Chronicles. Although he might well be charged with taking away the lives of his sons, because he took away the necessary supports of their lives. I will requite thee in this plat; of which see the notes on 1 Kings xxi. 19. Cast him into the plat of ground; where he shall lie unburied, and be a prey to the dogs or fowls, according to the prediction, 1 Kings xxi. 24.

27 ¶ But when Ahaziah the king of Judah saw this, he fled by the way of the garden house. And Jehu followed after him, and said, Smite him also in the chariot. And they did so at the going up to Gur, which is by Ibleam. And he fled to †Megiddo, and died there.

x In the kingdom of Samaria, 2 Chr. 22. 9. By the way of the garden-house; by some secret way, hoping to escape whilst they were busy about Joram. Smite him also, as you have done Joram; for he also is of the house of Ahab, chap. viii. 18. They did so; they smote or wounded him, but not mortally; either supposing that the wound was mortal; or being more remiss in executing Jehu's sentence against him, because they were not so much concerned in his as in Joram's death; or because they had some kindness for him, either for his own or for Jehoshaphat's sake. He fled to Megiddo, and died there. Quest. How doth this agree with 2 Chron. xxii. 9, He sought Ahaziah: and they caught him, for he was hid in Samaria, and brought him to Jehu: and when they had slain him, &c. Ans. Either, first, Samaria is there to be understood, not of the city, but of the kingdom or territory so called, 1 Kings xlii. 32, and elsewhere, in which Megiddo was; and so that may be noted to show that he could not flee into his own kingdom, where he might have been safe; but was forced to take up in another part of the kingdom of Israel, in the territory of Samaria, and there to hide himself. Or, secondly, If Samaria be the city, then the history is briefly and imperfectly described here, and the defects supplied there; (the Book of Chronicles being in great part written for that end, to supply things omitted in the Book of Kings;) and out of both the history may be thus completed: He fled first to Megiddo, and thence to Samaria, where he was caught, and thence brought to Jehu, and by his sentence was put to death at Megiddo, either because Jehu was there at that time upon some occasion, or for some other reason, which at this distance of time we cannot understand.

28 And his servants carried him in a chariot to Jerusalem, and buried him in his sepulchre with his fathers in the city of David.

Which they did by Jehu's permission for Jehoshaphat's sake, 2 Chron. xxii. 9.

29 And in the eleventh year of Joram the son of Ahab began Ahaziah to reign over Judah.

cir. 886. Then he began to reign as Viceroy to his Father in his sickness, 2 Chron. 21. 18, 19. But in Joram's 12th Year he began to reign alone, ch. 8. 25.

Of this see the note on chap. viii. 25.

30 ¶ And when Jehu was come to Jezreel, Jezebel heard of it; and she †painted her face, and tired her head, and looked out at a window.

cir. 884. y Ezek. 23. † Heb. put her eyes in painting. Either hoping that by her majestic dress and carriage she might strike Jehu or his followers with such an awe, that they should not offer any injury to her person; or rather, because perceiving her case to be desperate, and that she could not live, was resolved to die with honour and gallantry.

31 And as Jehu entered in at the gate, she said, †Had Zimri peace, who slew his master?

z 1 Kings 16. 9.—20. At the gate of the king's palace. Had Zimri peace, who slew his master? remember that thy brother traitor Zimri had but a very short enjoyment of the benefit of his treason, and was speedily and severely punished for it by my grandfather, Omri, 1 Kings xvi. 9, 16, and do thou expect the same from some of my posterity.

32 And he lifted up his face to the window, and said, Who is on my side? who? And there looked out to him two or three †eunuchs.

¶ Or, chamberlains. For such used to attend upon queens in their chambers.

33 And he said, Throw her down. So they threw her down: and some of her blood was sprinkled on the wall, and on the horses: and he trode her under foot.

They threw her down; being mercenary creatures, they quickly comply with Jehu's command, sacrificing her life to save their own.

34 And when he was come in, he did eat and drink, and said, Go, see now this cursed woman, and bury her: for †she is a king's daughter.

a 1 Kings 16. 31. This he suddenly commanded, either because he had forgot the charge given him above, ver. 10, or because having done his own business, he was careless about God's work, and the fulfilling of his threatening. For she is a king's daughter: see 1 Kings xvi. 31. He doth not say, because she was a king's wife, lest he should seem to show any respect to that wicked and cursed house of Ahab, which God had devoted to ignominy and utter destruction.

35 And they went to bury her: but they found no more of her than the scull, and the feet, and the palms of her hands.

36 Wherefore they came again, and told him. And he said, This is the word of the LORD, which he spake †by his servant Elijah the Tishbite, saying, In the portion of Jezreel shall dogs eat the flesh of Jezebel:

† Heb. by the hand of. b 1 Kings 21. 23. This is the word of the Lord: this strange providence brings that to his mind which he had forgotten, or did not regard.

37 And the carcase of Jezebel shall be ^cas dung upon the face of the field in the portion of Jezreel; so that they shall not say, This is Jezebel.

These words are not extant in the place where this prophecy is first mentioned, 1 Kings xxi. 23, but are here added, either by Jehu, by way of explication and amplification; or rather, because Elijah spoke them, though they be not there recorded, as being for the substance of them contained in the former words; it being usual to insert some passages in following writings which had been omitted in the former.

CHAP. X.

Jehu by his letters causeth seventy of Ahab's sons to be slain: the fact is excused by Elijah's prophecy, 1—11. Also forty-two of king Ahaziah's brethren, 12—14. By subtlety he slayeth all the priests and prophets of Ahab; breaketh down his images and temple, 18—28. He followeth the sin of Jeroboam, 29—31. Hazael oppresseth Israel: Jehoahaz succeedeth Jehu, 32—36.

884. AND Ahab had seventy sons in Samaria. And Jehu wrote letters, and sent to Samaria, unto the rulers of Jezreel, to the elders, and to †them that brought up Ahab's children, saying, ^{† Heb. נושקיהם.} Ahab had seventy sons; either, first, properly sons by several wives; or rather, secondly, grandsons are comprehended, who are oft called sons, and grandfathers fathers, in Scripture. In Samaria; either because they were bred up there, that being the chief city of the kingdom; or because upon the tidings of Joram's slaughter they fled thither, or were by their friends conveyed from several parts thither, as to the strongest place; in which it may seem by Jehu's message they intended to defend themselves and Ahab's children, and to set up one as king in Joram's stead; or rather, because they were left there by Joram when he went to Ramoth-gilead, that if the Syrians had prevailed against him, they might have safety in that very strong and great city, and he by their means succour from it. Unto the rulers of Jezreel, Heb. the princes of Jezreel, i. e. the great persons and officers of the court, which then was and had been for some time at Jezreel, who either had fled thither with Ahab's sons, upon the news of Jehu's actions and successes; or rather, had been sent by Joram with his sons to Samaria, to take care of them there. To the elders; either by age, or rather by office; the rulers or senators of Samaria. To them that brought up Ahab's children; that had a more particular care of the several children under the inspection of the princes or rulers here mentioned.

2 Now as soon as this letter cometh to you, seeing your master's sons are with you, and there are with you chariots and horses, a fenced city also, and armour;

3 Look even out the best and meetest of your master's sons, and set him on his father's throne, and fight for your master's house.

Thus he speaks, either because he had some notice of their intentions thus to do; or to make trial of them, whether they would do so, or would be true to him and his designs; or to signify to them his intentions of fighting against them, if they did so, that by the terror hereof he might bring them to a compliance with him.

4 But they were exceedingly afraid, and said, Behold, two kings stood not before him: how then shall we stand?

All their power and interest, either in Jezreel, or in the army before or in Ramoth-gilead, could not hinder him from executing his design from killing the two kings, and from invading one of their kingdoms. It is true, he surprised the kings, which a little weakens their argument; but fear and self love made them easily yield to it.

5 And he that was over the house, and he that was over the city, the elders also, and the bringers up of the children, sent to Jehu, saying, We are thy servants, and will do all that thou shalt bid us; we will not make any king: do thou that which is good in thine eyes.

He that was over the house; the chief governor of the king's palace or castle there. He that was over the city; the chief magistrate or military governor. We will do all that thou shalt bid us; they make no delays or conditions, but submit all to his mercy.

6 Then he wrote a letter the second time to them, saying, If ye be †mine, and if ye will hearken unto my voice, take ye the heads of the men your master's sons, and come to me to Jezreel by to morrow this time. Now the king's sons, being seventy persons, were with the great men of the city, which brought them up.

Then he wrote a letter: thus Jezebel is required for her letter directed in like manner to the elders of Naboth's city, whereby his life was wickedly taken away, 1 Kings xxi. 8. And it is probable that some of these elders were concerned in that very business, which makes the judgment of God more remarkable. Take ye the heads of the men; which word seems to imply that some of them were grown up, who doubtless trod in their parents' steps; and those that were younger were justly cut off for their parents' sin; of which see on Exod. xx. 5; Deut. v. 9.

7 And it came to pass, when the letter came to them, that they took the king's sons, and slew seventy persons, and put their heads in baskets, and sent them to Jezreel.

Slew seventy persons: Jehu justly required this, because the sovereign and most righteous Lord of all men's lives commanded it; but the Samaritans wickedly obeyed it, because they destroyed persons in a great measure innocent, merely out of slavish fear, and without any knowledge of or regard to God's command.

8 ¶ And there came a messenger, and told him, saying, They have brought the heads of the king's sons. And he said, Lay ye them in two heaps at the entering in of the gate until the morning.

At the entering in of the gate; the place of judicature, to signify that this was an act of justice, and of God's righteous judgment; and the place of greatest concourse, where people went out of the city, and came into it, and whither they resorted for judgment and other occasions; that all men might behold this dreadful spectacle of Divine vengeance upon Ahab's family, and thereby might justify Jehu's cause and proceedings.

9 And it came to pass in the morning, that he went out, and stood, and said to all the people, Ye be righteous: behold, I conspired against my master, and slew him: but who slew all these?

To all the people; either, first, To the promiscuous multitude met there to gaze upon this sad and strange spectacle. So the sense is, Be not ye troubled nor affrighted with these unusual and dismal occurrences: if any thing be amiss in these actions, I do here publicly and solemnly acquit you as righteous and innocent; do not you therefore fear any vengeance from God or men for it: if there be any guilt, it is in me, and in those who cut off these heads. Or, secondly, To those who cut off and brought the heads; for the same persons did both, and were here present, as Jehu commanded them, ver. 6: to them he speaks in the audience of all the people; or by all the people may be meant all those who brought the heads, and were there waiting for Jehu, according to his order. So the speech is in part ironical, to this purpose, You are righteous in your own eyes, and you look upon me as a traitor, and rebel, and murderer, because I have risen against and slain my master, which I acknowledge I have done. But if I am guilty, you are not innocent, and therefore cannot accuse me; for I have killed one, but you a great number. This explication seems probable; only the Hebrew word ham being generally used of the common people, may seem not so fitly to agree to these rulers and great men, who had brought the heads; and that expression, to all the people, implies that Jehu did not direct his speech to some particular persons, but to the whole body of the people then present, whom he clears from all blame, and to whom he appeals as witnesses between him and these persons.

But the truth is, neither I nor they are to be blamed; nor you that assisted and encouraged me herein; for this is not man's work, but God's, and done by his command. He mentions Elijah rather than Elisha; partly because Elijah was now dead, and therefore his name and memory was more sacred than Elisha's, who was yet alive; this being the common humour and folly of mankind, to value and honour those that are dead, whom they contemned whilst they lived; and partly because Elijah's prophecy was known, and public, and famous; when Elisha's was delivered in a corner, and that not from his own mouth, but by one of the sons of the prophets.

11 So Jehu slew all that remained of the house of Ahab in Jezreel, and all his great men, and his kinsfolks, and his priests, until he left him none remaining.

¶ Cr. acquittance. All his great men; whom he had advanced and made great in wealth, or honour, and quality; who had been partners with him in his sins, and who were likely to be avenged of his death. His priests; his domestic priests, which had waited upon Ahab and Jezebel in their idolatrous services, and were fed at the king's table. Compare 1 Kings xviii. 19. Or, his chief officers of state, as that word is sometimes used; of which see 2 Sam. viii. 18, compared with 1 Chron. xviii. 17. Object. These were included in his great men mentioned before. Ans. Yet may they well be mentioned apart, as a distinct and the most eminent sort of them. He left him none remaining, to wit, in that place and kingdom; for he did leave some of the royal seed of Judah, chap. xi. 1, 2.

The brethren; not strictly so, for they were killed before this, 2 Chron. xxi. 17; but his brethren's sons, as they are called, 2 Chron. xxii. 8, or others of his near kinsmen, such being oft called brethren in Scripture; as Gen. xiii. 8.

14 And he said, Take them alive. And they took them alive, and slew them at the pit of the shearing house, even two and forty men; neither left he any of them.

They took them alive, and slew them; partly in compliance with God's command, chap. ix. 8, for these were of the house of Ahab by the mother's side, chap. viii. 18; and partly that they might neither claim the kingdom of Israel in right of their grandmother; as they might well have done, if God had not given it to Jehu; nor revenge the deaths of their near relations. At the pit of the shearing-house, where he intended to bury them.

15 ¶ And when he was departed thence, he † lighted on Jehonadab the son of °Rechab coming to meet him: and he † saluted him, and said to him, Is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? h Heb. found. Jer. 35. 6, &c. g 1 Chr. 2. 55. + Heb. blessed. h Ezra 10. 19. Jehonadab the son of Rechab; a Kenite, 1 Chron. ii. 55, and a man of singular prudence and piety; as appears from this history, and from Jer. xxxv. 6. Coming to meet him, to congratulate with him for the destruction of that wicked family, and to encourage and advise him to proceed in fulfilling the will of God revealed to him. He saluted him; Jehu saluted Jehonadab. Is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? dost thou heartily approve of and affect me, and my present proceedings, as my heart doth as sincerely cleave to thee as thine own heart doth? Give me thine hand, as a sign of friendship and consent. See Gal. ii. 9. These may be the words, either, 1. Of Jehu; and so here is an ellipsis, If it be, for And Jehu said, If it be. Compare 1 Kings xx. 34. Or, 2. Of Jehonadab, who having said, It is, adds, If it be, i. e. if thine heart be with mine, as thou sayest it is, give me thine hand. But this the ellipsis is larger than the former. And it seems not so decent and proper for Jehonadab, a stranger and subject, to speak thus to the king, as for the king to say so to him.

16 And he said, Come with me, and see my ⁱzeal for the LORD. So they made him ride in his chariot.

i 1 Kings 19. 10. My zeal for the Lord, i. e. for the vindication of his honour and quarrel, and for the execution of his commands. Do not believe my words, but mine actions, which thine eyes shall behold. They, i. e. Jehu's servants, opened the door of his chariot, and lifted up Jehonadab into it.

17 And when he came to Samaria, ^khe slew all that remained unto Ahab in Samaria, till he had destroyed him, according to the saying of the LORD, ^lwhich he spake to Elijah.

k ch. 9. a. 2 Chr. 22. 8. l 1 Kings 21. 21. All that remained unto Ahab; either all his household; or rather, all his kindred and relations, though more remote from him.

18 ¶ And Jehu gathered all the people together, and said unto them, ^mAhab served Baal a little; but Jehu shall serve him much.

m 1 Kings 16. 31, 32. Jehu gathered all the people together; by their representatives, their elders or rulers, as was usual; to whom he imparts his mind; and they being generally corrupt, and time-servers, and such as had no sense of religion in them, durst not oppose his resolution, but seemed to comply with it. Jehu shall serve him much: as if he had said, My quarrel is only with Ahab's family, and not with Baal; which my actions shall manifest; which words being manifestly false, and spoken with a design to deceive, cannot be excused from sin, though they were uttered with a pious intention; this being an unmovable principle, that we must not do the least evil of sin, that the greatest good may come, Rom. iii. 8. And if Jehonadab did concur with Jehu herein, it was a human infirmity.

19 Now therefore call unto me all the prophets of Baal, all his servants, and all his priests; let none be wanting: for I have a great sacrifice to do to Baal; whosoever shall be wanting, he shall not live. But Jehu did it in subtilty, to the intent that he might destroy the worshippers of Baal.

n 1 Kings 22. 6. All his servants; either, 1. All his ministers; of whom there may seem to have been several sorts, whereof two are here distinctly mentioned, his prophets and priests; and the rest of the inferior sort may be comprehended under this general title of servants, because they were to attend upon the others in their sacred ministrations. And these being once destroyed, Jehu rightly concluded that the rest would fall of course. And this sense may seem to be favoured by ver. 22, wherein vestments were brought forth for all these worshippers of Baal; which were not commonly used by the people in the worship either of God or of Baal, but only by the priests or ministers. Or, 2. All his worshippers, as the same word is translated in the close of this verse. Quest. How could all these be contained in one house of Baal? Ans. Well enough, for the number of Baal's worshippers had been vastly diminished by the ministry of Elijah and Elisha, and the rest of the prophets, and by Joram's neglect and disuse of that worship. For the generality of the Israelites had too much knowledge to have any real and religious respect to such senseless idols; only they practised it in compliance with the humour of their king and queen, and for worldly or wicked ends; and therefore when the king deserted it, they generally forsook it, some few silly and besotted persons excepted, who are here gathered together. Besides, this house or temple of Baal might be very large and capacious, and probably was so, because it was the chief of that sort, as being in the king's city, and nigh his palace, and for the use of the king and queen, and the whole court, and for great and high solemnities. Moreover, as the name of the house or temple of God at Jerusalem oft signifies not only the principal building, but all the other buildings and courts belonging to it, in which all the worshippers stood when they worshipped; so it might be here; and so there was space sufficient for all the worshippers of Baal which can reasonably be thought to have been at this time in all Israel. I have a great sacrifice to do to Baal; I will offer to him a noble and acceptable sacrifice; not of sheep, or oxen, &c., as they understood it, but of his own beloved priests, and prophets, and servants, as he meant it. In subtlety; with another design, that he might both certainly discover and utterly destroy them all, without any further trouble, or danger of sedition or tumult in his kingdom.

† Heb. sanctify. 20 And Jehu said, † Proclaim a solemn assembly for Baal. And they proclaimed it.

Proclaim, Heb. sanctify. Prepare yourselves and all things necessary for this solemn day, and sacrifice, and feast, which I intend to keep.

21 And Jehu sent through all Israel: and all the worshippers of Baal came, so that there was not a man left that came not. And they came into the house of Baal; and the house of Baal was || full from one end to another.

There was not a man left that came not; either, 1. Because they thought Jehu was serious and sincere in his professions; it being natural and usual for men too easily to believe what they wish to be true. And for the priests which Jehu destroyed before, ver. 11, they might think that was done only because of their nearness and relation to Ahab and his family. Or, 2. For fear of their lives; for certain death was threatened to all that did not come, ver. 19, which considering Jehu's fierce and bloody temper, they knew would be executed; whereas, if they did come, there was more than a possibility of the sparing of their lives; for Jehu was known to be indifferent and unconcerned in matters of religion, one that had served Baal when his prince Ahab lived and did so, and forsook it when the next prince Joram did; and therefore it was doubtful whether Jehu had not in good earnest returned to his first love, to that religion which he had formerly embraced, and only deserted in complacency to others. Or, 3. By God's just providence, deceiving their minds and inclining their hearts to come to their own destruction. Into the house, i. e. the temple.

22 And he said unto him that was over the vestry, Bring forth vestments for all the worshippers of Baal. And he brought them forth vestments.

Vestments; sacred garments; such as were used by the priests and others of the Lord's ministry in God's worship; and from thence the devil borrowed this custom in his worship.

23 And Jehu went, and Jehonadab the son of Rechab, into the house of Baal, and said unto the worshippers of Baal, Search, and look that there be here with you none of the servants of the LORD, but the worshippers of Baal only.

The Baalites possibly did not know Jehonadab, and therefore suspected nothing; or if any of the more crafty sort suspected any thing, it was now too late to amend their error. Look that there be here with you none of the servants of the Lord; because their presence will offend Baal, and deride or pollute his worship; whence profane persons have been oft excluded from solemn acts of worship, both by Jews and heathens. So this did not raise their suspicion.

24 And when they went in to offer sacrifices and burnt offerings, Jehu appointed fourscore men without, and said, If any of the men whom I have brought into your hands escape, he that letteth him go, his life shall be for the life of him.

When they went in; when some in the name of the rest went to the altar to offer sacrifice. Jehu appointed fourscore men; far greater numbers being doubtless in readiness to assist them, in case of any opposition.

25 And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt offering, that Jehu said to the guard and to the captains, Go in, and slay them; let none come forth. And they smote them with † the edge of the sword; and the guard and the captains cast them out, and went to the city of the house of Baal.

As soon as he, i. e. the chief priest of Baal: see 2 Chron. xxiii. 17. Made an end of offering the burnt-offerings; so far he suffered them to proceed; either because till then they were not all come into the house; or because having been taken in the very act of gross idolatry, their destruction was more just and reasonable. To the guard, and to the captains, i. e. to the fourscore men and their officers. Cast them out, i. e. cast their carcasses out of the city. But that was not proper work for the guard; nor could they so soon have done it; nor would they stay to do it, when they were going in haste to other work; nor indeed was it necessary to be done, because they intended to pull down the house, and bury them in its ruins, and turn it into a draught house, as it follows. This word therefore is and may be joined with the next, and both rendered, they went hastily and eagerly; properly, they flung themselves out, (hiphil for hithpahal, which is not unusual in the Hebrew language,) and went. The like expression is used Esth. vi. 12, hasted, Heb. pushed himself on, or flung himself, i. e. went with great haste; and in the Greek text, Mark xiv. 72. To the city of the house of Baal; either, 1. To some city near to Samaria, where another eminent temple of Baal was erected. But this seems not to agree with the context, there being but one house or temple of Baal mentioned, both in the foregoing and following verses. Or rather, 2. To some buildings belonging to this house of Baal, which may be here called the city, either for some particular reason now unknown, or because they were very numerous and capacious. For as there were divers chambers and rooms built without the temple, belonging to it, for the use of the priests and Levites, &c.; so it may properly be conceived that this famous temple of Baal had many such buildings, in some of which the priests of Baal, or of the groves, (whereof there were great numbers belonging to the king's court, 1 Kings xviii. 19,) peradventure might dwell; and others of them might be for divers uses belonging to the house and service of Baal. And into these buildings the guard might go, and that hastily, to surprise and kill those inferior ministers of Baal, who were there employed in preparing things for the sacrifices which were to be offered, Heb. it, i. e. the collection of the images, or each of them.

27 And they brake down the image of Baal, and brake down the house of Baal, and made it a draught house unto this day.

The image of Baal; the chief image, which they worshipped more than the rest. Brake down the house of Baal; and the like they did with the rest of the houses of Baal in Israel; as may be gathered both from the nature and reason of the thing, and from ver. 28.

28 Thus Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel.

29 ¶ Howbeit from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, Jehu departed not from after them, to wit, the golden calves that were in Beth-el, and that were in Dan.

Jehu departed not from after them: herein he discovers his hypocrisy, that he follows God as far as his interest would permit; namely, in destroying the house of Ahab, and the worship of Baal, but no further; for he still resolves to keep up the worship of the calves; partly lest he should disoblige and irritate his own nobles and subjects, who had been long injured, and were heartily affected to it; and partly lest he should open a door for his people to return to their obedience to the house of David. And his sin and folly is the more inexcusable, both because he durst not trust that God with the keeping of his kingdom, of whose power, and faithfulness, and kindness to him he had such ample experience in his giving him the kingdom; and because he had so great and uncontrollable a power in the matters of religion; having first pretended, and seemed to set up, the worship of Baal with all his might, and then destroying it with no less vehemency, none daring to mutter against him in either case; and because the house of David, and kingdom of Judah, his competitor, now was, and was likely to be, in a feeble and declining condition, and much more likely to fall into his hands, than that his kingdom should come into theirs.

30 And the LORD said unto Jehu, Because thou hast done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes, and hast done unto the house of Ahab according to all that was in mine heart, thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel.

The Lord said unto Jehu; by some prophet, as above, chap. ix. 7. Executing that which is right in mine eyes, i. e. in part, and so far as is here expressed, these actions were good and right, though his heart was not so. Thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel; and so they did; namely, Jehoahaz, below, ver. 35; Joash, chap. xiii. 10; Jeroboam, chap. xiv. 24; and Zachariah, chap. xv. 8.

31 But Jehu † took no heed to walk in the law of the LORD God of Israel with all his heart: for he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam, which made Israel to sin.

With all his heart: his obedience wanted three necessary properties, care or heedfulness, universality, and sincerity. He departed not from the sins of Jeroboam: his resolved continuance in one single course is justly alleged as an argument of his false-heartedness in all his other actions.

either to diminish the number of the people, by cutting them off; or to straiten their borders. In all the coasts of Israel, i. e. in their borders, or the uttermost part of their land beyond Jordan, as it is explained, ver. 33. This she did, partly, out of rage at the extirpation of her family, resolving that David's family should not outlive hers; partly, from ambition and desire of rule, for which many persons have destroyed their nearest relations; partly, from the zeal which she had for idolatry, and the worship of Baal, which she intended to establish, to which she knew the house of David were implacable enemies; and partly, in her own defence, that she might secure herself from Jehu's fury, who was commanded by God, and resolved in himself, utterly to destroy all the branches of Ahab's family, whereof she was one, chap. viii. 18, 26; for had she not done this, she suspected that either the king or people of Judah would have delivered her up to Jehu upon his demand. Possibly those whom she slew were Joram's children by another wife; of which see on the next verse. And this was the fruit of Jehoshaphat's marrying his son to a daughter of that idolatrous and wicked house of Ahab, even the extirpation of all his posterity but one. And this dreadful judgment God permitted, and inflicted upon him and his, to show how much he abhors all such sinful and unequal affinities.

Nathan's family, as many think ; such persons being sometimes called the sons of their predecessors, as we shall see hereafter. Or rather, 2. His proper and natural son ; for not only he, but the rest who were slain, are here called the king's (i. e. Joram's) sons. From among the king's sons which were slain ; either, 1. From amidst of the carcases, where this infant was laid, and supposed by her to be killed, though it was not quite dead, either through the compassion or connivance of the instruments of this execution, or by some other artifice which his nurse used. Or, 2. Out of that apartment of the palace which was allotted for the king's children. They hid him ; Jehosheba and her husband Jehoiada. In the bed-chamber ; which was in the house of the Lord, as is affirmed in the next verse. So that it was one of those chambers adjoining or near to the temple, which were for the uses of the priests and Levites, and for them only ; which made it more proper for this purpose.

3 And he was with her hid in the house of the LORD six years. And Athaliah did reign over the land.

Either Athaliah thought they were all dead ; or if she suspected that Joash was preserved, she thought an infant could do her no great harm ; and that she could so well assure the kingdom to herself within a few years, that she need not fear any such weak competitor : or she was willing to smother up the business, lest if she had made a strict and diligent search for it, the people should thereby learn that there was yet a son of David's family left, and so be unquiet under her government, and desirous of a change. Athaliah did reign over the land ; which she had an opportunity to do, because she was not only the late king's wife, but also was probably made queen-regent upon Joram's going to Ramoth-gilead.

4 ¶ And ° the seventh year Jehoiada sent and fetched the rulers over hundreds, with the captains and the guard, and brought them to him into the house of the LORD, and made a covenant with them, and took an oath of them in the house of the LORD, and shewed them the king's son.

If this action of Jehoiada's seem strange and irregular, this was no ordinary case, but there were divers peculiar things in it, as, that Athaliah was a mere usurper, having no pretence of right to the crown, and one of that wicked house which God had particularly, and by name, devoted to destruction : that Jehoiada's wife was nearer allied, and had more right to the crown, than Athaliah : that the crown of Judah was by Divine appointment appropriated to the sons of David ; and therefore the right of the crown was inherently in him whom Jehoiada set up, which right her usurpation could not exclude : that Jehoiada was not a mere private person, but the husband of the king's aunt ; and probably the high priest, to whom it belonged in great part to see the laws of God executed : that Jehoiada did not act alone in the business, but had the consent and concurrence of the chief rulers, both civil and ecclesiastical : and besides all this, that it is conceived that he had a special motion of God's Spirit, or the direction and encouragement of the prophets of that time. So that this action cannot be drawn into a precedent for succeeding times, and for other kingdoms. The rulers over hundreds ; of whom see Exod. xviii. 25. Of these there were five which are named, 2 Chron. xxiii. 1. And these were either, 1. Civil or military officers. But then such small officers could not have stood him in much stead. And why did he not rather engage captains of thousands, or greater persons, whom doubtless he might easily have brought into this confederacy ? Or rather, 2. Priests or Levites of eminency, as their work showeth, ver. 5-7 ; 2 Chron. xxiii. 1, 2, and their distinction from the captains and guard. The captains, or princes, or nobles, or commanders ; such as he knew were weary of her idolatrous and tyrannical government, and faithful to their king. The guard ; possibly those who had been the former king's guard, who had been displaced by Athaliah, as persons whose fidelity she suspected. Into the house of the Lord, i. e. into the courts of that house, which oft come under the name of the house, or temple of the Lord ; for into the house none but the priests or Levites might enter.

Made a covenant with them, to restore the king to his kingdom, and religion to its purity. Took an oath of them, for their secrecy and fidelity in the present design.

5 And he commanded them, saying, This is the thing that ye shall do ; A third part of you that enter in ^d on the sabbath shall even be keepers of the watch of the king's house ;

A third part of you ; either, 1. A third part of you, (i. e. of the whole number, including those that come in and those that go out on the sabbath,) even they that enter in on the sabbath ; and so the two other third parts were to consist of those that went out on the sabbath, as some gather from ver. 6, 7. Or rather, 2. A third part only of those that enter in on the sabbath, who seem to be plainly divided into three thirds here, and ver. 6, as those that went forth on the sabbath are expressly distributed into two parts, ver. 7. That enter in on the sabbath, i. e. that come into the temple on the sabbath day. For the understanding of this matter, you must know that the Levites were, in and from David's time, distributed into twenty-four courses, which were to do the work of the temple successively, and by turns ; each course consisting of about a thousand men for his week ; of which see 1 Chron. xxiii., xxiv. The watch of the king's house ; either, 1. Of that bed-chamber where the king now was. But it is unlikely, and without example, either that one bed-chamber, or the temple, or any part of it, should be called the king's house. And besides, the king's person is secured by other persons, ver. 7. Or rather, 2. Of that part which leadeth to the king's palace, which Athaliah now possessed, and whence they might expect opposition.

6 And a third part shall be at the gate of Sur ; and a third part at the gate behind the guard : so shall ye keep the watch of the house, ¶ that it be not broken down.

At the gate of Sur ; the chief gate of the temple, called the high gate, 2 Kings xv. 35, and the foundation gate, 2 Chron. xxiii. 5, and the east gate, Jer. xix. 2, and the middle gate, Jer. xxxix. 3, and the gate of the entrance, Ezek. xl. 15. Behind the guard ; either, 1. The king's guard ; or, 2. The guard of the temple ; for such a guard there was, and a captain of the guard, called the captain of the temple, Acts iv. 1 ; v. 24. This gate was in the south side ; and, as some think, is that which is called sippim, or the threshold gate, 2 Chron. xxiii. 4. So shall ye keep the watch of the house, that it be not broken down, i. e. so you shall guard all the gates or entrances into the house or temple of God, that neither Athaliah nor any of her soldiers may break into the temple, and defile it, or destroy it ; as she will doubtless endeavour to do. Or, and ye shall keep the watch of the house Massach, as the LXX. and other interpreters render it ; who think this was the name of a house not far from the temple ; in which, or against which, they were to keep a guard.

7 And two ¶ parts of all you that go forth on the sabbath, even they shall keep the watch of the house of the LORD about the king.

You that go forth on the sabbath, i. e. who having finished their course and week, should have gone home, but were detained, 2 Chron. xxiii. 8. They shall keep the watch of the house of the Lord about the king ; whilst the rest guard the doors and entrances into the temple, these shall have a special care of the king's person, part on his right, and part on his left hand.

8 And ye shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand : and he that cometh within the ranges, let him be slain : and be ye with the king as he goeth out and as he cometh in.

When you have set your watches and guards, all the rest of you shall draw near to the king to preserve his royal person from all assaults and dangers. The ranges, or fences, i. e. the walls wherewith the courts of the temple were environed ; see ver. 15. Or, your ranks, or order. If any of Athaliah's guards shall attempt to break in upon you, or within your bounds. Be ye with the king as he goeth out and as he cometh in; whether the king shall go out of the temple, to offend or subdue his enemies, or retire hither to defend himself, do you always accompany him.

9 ° And the captains over the hundreds did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest commanded: and they took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that should go out on the sabbath, and came to Jehoiada the priest.

10 And to the captains over hundreds did the priest give king David's spears and shields, that were in the temple of the LORD.

Spears and shields; offensive and defensive weapons, which he gave to the captains, both for themselves, and for all their soldiers; for they all came into the temple unarmed, to prevent suspicion. These are called David's, either because they were such as he had taken from his enemies, which he had dedicated to God, and laid up in the temple as monuments of God's goodness to him; see 1 Sam. xxi. 9; 2 Sam. viii. 7, 11; 1 Kings vii. 51; or because David had made a sacred armory in the temple, whence arms might be taken upon extraordinary occasions, for the defence of the temple or city of God.

11 And the guard stood, every man with his weapons in his hand, round about the king, from the right † corner of the temple to the left corner of the temple, along by the altar and the temple.

† Heb. shoulder.
From the right corner of the temple to the left corner of the temple; from the south-east to the north-east side. By the altar; the altar of burnt-offerings, which was by the great and eastern gate of the temple. And the temple, i. e. by and towards the other parts of the temple, which they defended on all sides.

12 And he brought forth the king's son, and put the crown upon him, and gave him the testimony; and they made him king, and anointed him; and they clapped their hands, and said, † God save the king.

† Heb. Let the king live.
† 1 Sam. 10. 24.
The testimony, i. e. the book of the law, which he put into the king's hand, to mind him of his duty at his entrance upon his kingdom, which was to read and write out that holy book, Deut. xvii. 18, and to govern himself and his kingdom by it; the law of God being frequently and most properly called a testimony, as Psal. lxxviii. 5; cxxxii. 12; Isa. viii. 16, 20; see also Deut. vi. 17, 20; 2 Kings xxiii. 3. because it is a witness of God's will, and man's duty. Anointed him; as they used to do in doubtful cases, when there was any competition or question about the crown, as now there was.

g 2 Chron. 23.

13 ¶ ° And when Athaliah heard the noise of the guard and of the people, she came to the people into the temple of the LORD.

The noise of the people, who came thither upon the hearing of the noise and tidings of what was done. She came to the people, to inquire into the cause of this great noise; being hitherto kept in deep ignorance; partly because it was managed with so much secrecy, and in the temple; and partly because the people universally hated her, and wished her downfall. Into the temple of the Lord, i. e. into the courts; whither by Jehoiada's direction she was permitted to enter, though contrary to his general order, ver. 8, that so he might draw her into his net.

h ch. 23. 3.
2 Chr. 34. 31.
14 And when she looked, behold, the king stood by ^ha pillar, as the manner was, and the princes and the trumpeters by the king, and all the people of the land rejoiced, and blew with trumpets: and Athaliah rent her clothes, and cried, Treason, Treason.

By a pillar; possibly by one of the two famous pillars of the temple; of which see 1 Kings vii. 21; nigh unto which the throne was erected. If it be said, that none but priests might come thither; I answer, ordinarily they might not; but the king being a sacred person, especially upon such extraordinary occasions, might be there. Or, upon a scaffold; possibly that brazen scaffold which Solomon erected, 2 Chron. vi. 13, and left there for such purposes. See 2 Kings xxiii. 3.

15 But Jehoiada the priest commanded the captains of the hundreds, the officers of the host, and said unto them, Have her forth without the ranges; and him that followeth her kill with the sword. For the priest had said, Let her not be slain in the house of the LORD.

The officers of the host; of these companies of Levites, who are elsewhere called the Lord's host, and now were the king's host. Without the ranges; of which see above, ver. 8. If she will not go out of them of her own accord, force her out of them. Him that followeth her; if any of the people, come hither upon this occasion, shall stand up for her help. In the house of the Lord, i. e. in the court of the temple, lest it be polluted with her blood.

16 And they laid hands on her; and she went by the way by the which the horses came into the king's house: and there was she slain.

They laid hands on her, or, they gave her space or room, to wit, to go out of the court of the temple, and did not keep her within it, as they could have done. Or, they appointed bands for her; they ordered two bands of the Levites to follow her, and kill her. By the way by the which the horses came into the king's house; by the great and public road in which horses and chariots went to the palace. There was she slain; in an ignominious place and manner, as her mother Jezebel had been.

17 ¶ ° And Jehoiada made a covenant ^{i 2 Chron. 23. 16.} between the LORD and the king and the people, that they should be the LORD's people; ^{k 2 Sam. 5.3.} between the king also and the people.

Between the Lord and the king and the people; a sacred covenant, whereby he solemnly engaged both the king and people, as it here follows, that they should be the Lord's people, i. e. that they should renounce and root out all idolatry, and set up and maintain God's true worship. Compare 2 Kings xxiii. 10. Between the king also and the people: this was a civil covenant, whereby the king engaged himself to rule them justly, and in the fear of God; and the people obliged themselves to defend and obey him. Compare 2 Sam. v. 3.

18 And all the people of the land went into the house of Baal, and brake it ^{l ch. 10. 26.} down; his altars and his images ^{m Deut. 12. 3. 2 Chron. 12. 17.} brake they in pieces thoroughly, and slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars. And ^{n 2 Chron. 23. 14, &c. † Heb. officia.} the priest appointed † officers over the house of the LORD.

Before the altar; to which possibly he fled for refuge; or rather, he was brought thither as a fit sacrifice to his God. Officers over the house of the Lord; of which see more particularly, 2 Chron. xxiii. 18, 19.

19 And he took the rulers over hundreds, and the captains, and the guard, and all the people of the land; and they brought down the king from the house of the LORD, and came by the way of the gate of the guard to the king's house. And he sat on the throne of the kings.

By the way of the gate of the guard, i. e. by the gate of the royal palace, where the king's guard stood.

20 And all the people of the land rejoiced, and the city was in quiet: and they slew Athaliah with the sword beside the king's house.

^o 2 Chron. 24. 1. 21 °Seven years old was Jehoash when he began to reign.

CHAP. XII.

Jehoash reigneth well all the days of Jehoiada: he giveth order for the repair of the temple, 1—16. He diverteth Hazael from Jerusalem by a present of the hallowed treasures: he is slain by his servants: Amaziah succeedeth him, 17—21.

^a 2 Chron. 24. 1. IN the seventh year of Jehu °Jehoash began to reign; and forty years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-sheba.

2 And Jehoash did that which was right in the sight of the LORD all his days wherein Jehoiada the priest instructed him.

To wit, for the matter of it, though not with an honest and sincere mind, but only by the influence of his good tutor and restorer, as the words here following plainly imply.

^b 1 Kin. 15. 14. & 22. 43. ^c 14. 4. 3 But ^b the high places were not taken away: the people still sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places.

The people were so fondly and strangely addicted to the high places, that the foregoing kings, though men of riper years, and great power and courage, and finally settled in their thrones, could not take them away; and therefore it is not strange if Jehoiada could not now remove them, when the king was very young and tender, and not well settled in his kingdom, and when the people were more corrupt and disorderly through Athaliah's maladministration. Sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places to God.

4 ¶ And Jehoash said to the priests, °All the money of the || † dedicated things that is brought into the house of the LORD, even ^d the money of every one that passeth the account, † the money that every man is set at, and all the money that † cometh into any man's heart to bring into the house of the LORD,

Remembering that he owed his preservation and restoration to the temple, and that he was made by God the guardian of his temple and worship, and that he had covenanted to be so, Jehoash now takes care to repair it. All the money of the dedicated things: this may be, either, first, The general designation of the money, the particulars whereof here follow. Or rather, secondly, A special branch of it, the money which had been either formerly or lately vowed or dedicated to the use and service of God and of his house, either by the former kings; of which see below, ver. 18, and compare 1 Kings vii. 51; xv. 15; 2 Kings xii. 18; 2 Chron. xv. 18; or by this king or his people. That is brought, or rather, that shall be brought; for though the people might vow to bring it thither in convenient time, yet it is not likely they would bring much money thither in the tyrannical and idolatrous reign of Athaliah; or if they did, that Athaliah would not seize it for her own use. The money of every one that passeth the account, i. e. the half shekel, which was paid for every one that was numbered from twenty years old and upward; of which the very same phrase is used Exod. xxx. 13; compare 2 Chron. xxiv. 5, 6, 9. The money that every man is set at, Heb. the money of souls, or persons, according to his taxing, i. e. the money which every man that had vowed his person to God paid according to the rate which the priest put upon him; of which see Lev. xxvii. 2, &c. All the money that cometh into any man's heart; all that shall be freely offered. See Exod. xxv. 2; xxxv. 5.

5 Let the priests take it to them, every man of his acquaintance: and let them repair the breaches of the house, wheresoever any breach shall be found.

Let the priests take it to them; let them go abroad through all the parts of the land, as they have acquaintance and interest, and gather up the money, and bring it to Jerusalem. Wheresoever any breach shall be found; either through decay, or by ill accidents, or by the malice of Athaliah or her relations; of which see 2 Chron. xxiv. 7.

6 But it was so, that † in the three and twentieth year of king Jehoash °the priests had not repaired the breaches of the house.

Either because the people were generally corrupt and backward to the worship of God, especially where it cost them any thing; or because the persons employed in making the collections were negligent, or unfaithful, perverting the money received to their own uses, as may seem probable from the contrary character of other persons, of whom it is noted that they dealt faithfully, below, ver. 15; or because the people did not like this way of collection, and had no good opinion of the collectors' faithfulness.

7 °Then king Jehoash called for Jehoiada the priest, and the other priests, and said unto them, Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the house.

i. e. The money which you have already received. 8 And the priests consented to receive no more money of the people, neither to repair the breaches of the house.

Nor to take the charge of that work which the king had committed unto them, but freely to resign it to whom the king should appoint.

9 But Jehoiada the priest took ^h a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the LORD: and the priests that kept the † door put therein all the money that was brought into the house of the LORD.

Jehoiada the priest, by the king's consent, 2 Chron. xxiv. 8. Beside the altar, in the priests' court. Object. It was placed without at the gate of the house of the Lord, 2 Chron. xxiv. 8. Answer. Either, first, It was first placed by the altar, and afterwards thence removed to the gate of the court, for the people's greater satisfaction, that they might come thither, and put in their money with their own hands. Or, secondly, That place 2 Chron. speaks of the gate of the temple strictly so called, nigh unto which the altar of burnt-offerings was. Or, thirdly, It was placed near the entrance into the priests' court, which was over against the altar, and not far from it; so as the people standing in their own court might either put their money into it, or see when the priests put it in. The priests that kept the door; the door of the priests' court, which, together with the temple and all its utensils, was committed to the charge of the priests and Levites, Numb. xviii. 4; 1 Chron. ix. 26, &c.

10 And it was so, when they saw that there was much money in the chest, that the king's || scribe and the high priest came up, and they † put up in bags, and told the money that was found in the house of the LORD.

The king's scribe, who kept an exact account hereof in writing. See 2 Kings xix. 2; xxii. 3.

11 And they gave the money, being told, into the hands of them that did the work, that had the oversight of the house of the LORD: and they † laid it out to the carpenters and builders, that wrought upon the house of the LORD, without a reflection upon the priests for their neglect or unfaithfulness.

12 And to masons, and hewers of stone, and to buy timber and hewed stone to repair the breaches of the house of the LORD, and for all that † was laid out for the house to repair it.

And for all other things which were necessary for the reparation of the house.

13 Howbeit there were not made for the house of the LORD bowls of silver, snuffers, basons, trumpets, any vessels of gold, or vessels of silver, of the money that was brought into the house of the LORD:

There were not made, to wit, until all the breaches of the house were repaired; but when that was done, they laid it out for these things, as is noted, 2 Chron. xxiv. 14.

14 But they gave that to the workmen, and repaired therewith the house of the LORD.

15 Moreover they reckoned not with the men, into whose hand they delivered the money to be bestowed on workmen: for they dealt faithfully.

For they perceived by many experiments that they were faithful.

16 The trespass money and sin money was not brought into the house of the LORD: † it was the priests'.

i. e. It was not employed towards the reparation of the house, because, as it follows, it was the priests'; it was given to them for their private use and maintenance. Quest. If this reason was weighty, how could the money of them that passed the account, or the money that every man was set at, be thus employed, as they were, ver. 4, for these also may seem to have been the priests'? Answ. They were not appropriated to the priests, but for the service of the tabernacle of the congregation, as is said of the former, Exod. xxx. 16; or, for the Lord, Lev. xxvii. 2, 9, 14, 23.

17 ¶ Then Hazael king of Syria went up, and fought against Gath, and took it: and Hazael set his face to go up to Jerusalem.

Then, i. e. in this king's days, when Jehoiada was dead, and Joash revolted from God; of which see 2 Chron. xxiv. 17, &c. Gath; once a city of the Philistines, but taken by David, 1 Chron. xviii. 1, and now a part of the kingdom of Judah. Set his face, i. e. directed his march, and led his forces. Or, undertook in good earnest. So the same phrase is used 2 Chron. xx. 3; Jer. xxi. 10; Ezek. xxxv. 2.

18 And Jehoash king of Judah took all the hallowed things that Jehoshaphat, and Jehoram, and Ahaziah, his fathers, kings of Judah, had dedicated, and his own hallowed things, and all the gold that was found in the treasures of the house of the LORD, and in the king's house, and sent it to Hazael king of Syria: and he † went away from Jerusalem.

Took all the hallowed things: that necessity of saving his kingdom and people by this means, which otherwise might seem to excuse the fact, was brought upon himself by his apostasy from God. See on 1 Kings xv. 18.

19 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Joash, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

20 And his servants arose, and made a conspiracy, and slew Joash in the house of Millo, which goeth down to Silla.

Made a conspiracy; of which see 2 Chron. xxiv. 25. In the house of Millo; either in that strong and famous place in Jerusalem called Millo; of which see 2 Sam. v. 9; 1 Kings ix. 15, 24; xi. 27; into which he possibly retired for his security, being afraid even of his own subjects and servants; or in some other place called by the same name, for some resemblance it had with it. Which goeth down to Silla, i. e. which standeth upon the descent to Silla, or upon that descending causeway which leadeth from Millo to the king's house. Some refer this to Joash, and render the place thus, they slew him at or near the house of Millo, descending, or as he was going down to Silla, to escape their hands.

21 For Jozachar the son of Shimeath, and Jehozabad the son of Shomer, his servants, smote him, and he died; and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David: and Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.

Jozachar, called also Zabad, 2 Chron. xxiv. 26. Shomer, called Shimrith, 2 Chron. xxiv. 26; except Shomer be the father's name, and Shimrith the mother's. With his fathers, i. e. in the same city, but not in the same royal sepulchre, 2 Chron. xxiv. 25.

CHAP. XIII

Jehoahaz king of Israel followeth the sin of Jeroboam; is oppressed by Hazael; and relieved by prayer, 1—9. Joash his son succeedeth him in the kingdom, and in his idolatry, 10—13. Elisha prophesieth to Joash three victories over the Syrians, and dieth: Joash's lamentation, 14—19. A year after the Moabites invading the land, a dead man being cast into Elisha's sepulchre, is restored to life, 20, 21. Hazael dieth, and Joash recovereth the cities which had been taken from his father, 22—25.

IN † the three and twentieth year of Joash the son of Ahaziah king of Judah Jehoahaz the son of Jehu began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned seventeen years.

Began to reign, Heb. reigned; which is put for began to reign, 2 Kings iii. 1; viii. 16, 25; xii. 1.

2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, and † followed the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which made Israel to sin; he departed not therefrom.

3 ¶ And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and he delivered them into the hand of Hazael king of Syria, and into the hand of Ben-hadad the son of Hazael, all their days.

Or rather, all his days, as it is explained, ver. 22. 4 And Jehoahaz besought the LORD, and the LORD hearkened unto him: for he saw the oppression of Israel, because the king of Syria oppressed them.

The Lord hearkened unto him; not for his sake, for God regards not the prayers of the wicked and impenitent, Psal. lxxvi. 18; Prov. i. 28; xv. 8; but for other reasons, expressed below, ver. 23. He saw, i. e. he observed it with care and compassion. The oppression of Israel; his chosen and once beloved people. He now helps them, because of his former and ancient kindness to them. The king of Syria oppressed them, to wit, very grievously, as it is expressed, ver. 7. So that he helped them not for their own sakes, but because of the rage of their enemies, and their blasphemies, which doubtless accompanied it. See Deut. xxxii. 27; Psal. xii. 4.

A saviour; either Elisha, below, ver. 14; or rather, Jehoash, the son of this Jehoahaz, below, ver. 25, and Jeroboam his son, 2 Kings xiv. 25. In their tents, as before-time; in peace and security, not only in their strong cities, but even in their tents in the fields.

6 Nevertheless they departed not from the sins of the house of Jeroboam, who made Israel sin, but † walked therein: and there † remained the grove also in Samaria.)

Which Ahab had planted for the worship of Baal, 1 Kings xvi. 32, and which should have been destroyed, Deut. vii. 5.

7 Neither did he leave of the people to Jehoahaz but fifty horsemen, and ten chariots, and ten thousand footmen; for the king of Syria had destroyed them, and had made them like the dust by threshing.

Neither did he, i. e. the king of Syria, ver. 4, with which this verse is to be joined; ver. 5 and 6 being put within a parenthesis, as it is in our translation. But this verse may be translated otherwise, Although he (either the king of Syria, ver. 4, or the Lord, ver. 5, to whom judgments are oft ascribed, even when wicked men are the instruments of executing it) had not left, &c. And so it may be joined with the next foregoing verse, as a great aggravation of their impenitency, and obstinate continuance in their idolatry, notwithstanding such terrible judgments, which in all reason should have driven them from it. Leave of the people, i. e. of his army, or men of war, as the following words evince. Had made them like the dust by threshing, i. e. had broken and ground them to dust, or powder, as the corn is many times broken by threshing.

8 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jehoahaz, and all that he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

His might; for though his success was not good, he showed much personal valour and courage; which is noted to intimate that the Israelites were not conquered, because of the baseness and cowardice of their king, but merely from the righteous and dreadful judgment of God, who was now resolved to reckon with them for their filthy apostasy.

9 And Jehoahaz slept with his fathers; and they buried him in Samaria: and || Joash his son reigned in his stead*.

10 ¶ In the thirty and seventh year of Joash king of Judah began || Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned sixteen years.

By which, compared with ver. 1, it may be gathered that Jehoahaz had two or three years before his death made his son Jehoash king with him; which is very probable, because he was perpetually in the state of war, and consequently in danger of an untimely death, and because he was a man of valour, as is implied here, ver. 12, and declared 2 Chron. xxv.

11 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD; he departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel sin: but he walked therein.

12 ^h And the rest of the acts of Joash, and ⁱ all that he did, and ^k his might where-with he fought against Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

13 And Joash slept with his fathers; and Jeroboam sat upon his throne: and Joash was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel.

4 ¶ Now Elisha was fallen sick of his sickness whereof he died. And Joash the king of Israel came down unto him, and wept over his face, and said, O my father, my father, ^l the chariot of Israel, and ^m the horsemen thereof.

Wept over his face; not for any true love and respect to him, for then he would have followed his counsel, in forsaking the calves, and returning to the Lord; but for his own and the kingdom's incalculable loss in him. The chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof: see 2 Kings ii. 12.

15 And Elisha said unto him, Take bow and arrows. And he took unto him bow and arrows.

16 And he said to the king of Israel, † Put thine hand upon the bow. And he put his hand upon it: and Elisha put his hands upon the king's hands.

17 And he said, Open the window eastward. And he opened it. Then Elisha said, Shoot. And he shot. ⁿ And he said, The arrow of the LORD's deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria: for thou shalt smite the Syrians in ^o Aphek, till thou have consumed them.

Eastward; either towards Syria, which lay north-eastward from the land of Israel; or towards the Israelites' land beyond Jordan, which lay eastward from Canaan, and which was now possessed by the Syrians. Either way this arrow is shot against the Syrians, as a token what God intended to do against them. In Aphek; not in the city, but in the territory of it, where it seems there was a great battle to be fought between the Israelites and Syrians. Of Aphek, see 1 Sam. iv. 1; xxix. 1; 1 Kings xx. 30, though it is possible there might be several cities of that name. Or, as in Aphek, i. e. thou shalt smite them as they were smitten in the city and territory of Aphek, i. e. utterly destroy them; see 1 Kings xx. 26, 29, 30; the particle as being of understood, as hath been formerly and frequently proved. Till thou have consumed them, i. e. the Syrians; not all that people, but their armies, or at least that which was to be at Aphek, where a dreadful battle was to be fought. Or if this be meant of all the Syrian armies, this is to be understood conditionally, if he did not hinder it by his unbelief or neglect, signified in the following verses.

18 And he said, Take the arrows. And he took them. And he said unto the king of Israel, Smite upon the ground. And he smote thrice, and stayed.

Smite upon the ground: the former sign portended victory, and this was to declare the number of the victories.

19 And the man of God was wroth with him, and said, Thou shouldst have smitten five or six times; then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it: ^o whereas now thou shalt smite Syria but thrice.

Quest. Wherein was Jehoash's fault, or why was the prophet angry with him? Answe. The prophet himself did not yet know how many victories Jehoash should obtain against the Syrians, but God had signified to him that he should learn that by the number of the king's strokes. And he was angry with him, not simply because he smote only thrice, but because by his unbelief and idolatry he provoked God so to overrule his heart and hand that he should smite but thrice, which was a token that God would assist him no further; although his smiting but thrice might proceed either from his unbelief or negligence. For by the former sign, and the prophet's comment upon it, he might clearly perceive that this also was intended as a sign of his success against the Syrians, and therefore he ought to have done it frequently and vehemently.

They buried him, in or near Samaria. At the coming in of the year; in the spring, when the fruits of the earth grew ripe.

21 And it came to pass, as they were burying a man, that, behold, they spied a band of men; and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha: and when the man † was let down, and touched the bones of Elisha, ^bhe revived, and stood up on his feet.

As they were burying, or, were about to bury, as that particle is oft used in the Hebrew tongue. They spied a band of men coming towards them, but at some distance. They cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha; not daring to carry the dead corpse further to the place appointed for his burial, they made use of the next burying-place, where Elisha was buried, and there they removed some stone, or opened some door, and hastily flung down their dead corpse there. The man, i. e. the man's dead body, or the coffin in which he was put. Touched the bones of Elisha; which might easily be, the coffin and linen in which Elisha's body was put, and the flesh of his body, being now consumed; for this was some considerable time after his death. He revived, and stood up on his feet; which miracle God wrought there, partly, to do honour to that great prophet, and that by this seal he might confirm his doctrine, and thereby confute the false doctrine and worship of the Israelites; partly, to strengthen the faith of Joash, and of the Israelites, in his promise of their success against the Syrians; and partly, in the midst of all their calamities, to comfort such Israelites as were Elisha's followers with the hopes of that eternal life whereof this was a manifest pledge, and to awaken the rest of that people to a due care and preparation for it.

22 ¶ But ^aHazael king of Syria oppressed Israel all the days of Jehoahaz.

23 ^rAnd the LORD was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them, and ^ghad respect unto them, ^hbecause of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and would not destroy them, neither cast he them from his † presence as yet.

From his presence, i. e. from the land of Canaan, to which the presence and public and solemn worship of God was confined.

24 So Hazael king of Syria died; and Ben-hadad his son reigned in his stead.

25 And Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz † took again out of the hand of Ben-hadad the son of Hazael the cities, which he had taken out of the hand of Jehoahaz his father by war. ^uThree times did Joash beat him, and recovered the cities of Israel.

According to the prediction above, ver. 19.

CHAP. XIV.

Amaziah's good reign: his justice on the murderers of his father: his victory over Edom: warreth against Jehoash king of Israel; is overcome by him, and slain by his own people: Azariah succeedeth him, 1—22. Jehoash dieth; and Jeroboam his son is king over Israel; his acts and death: Zachariah his son succeedeth him, 23—29.

IN ^athe second year of Joash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel reigned ^bAmaziah the son of Joash king of Judah.

In the second year of Joash, i. e. after he began to reign alone; for he reigned two or three years with his father; of which see on chap. xiii. 10.

2 He was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

Reigned twenty and nine years, to wit, fourteen years with Joash king of Israel, who reigned only sixteen years, chap. xiii. 10; and fifteen years after the death of Joash, or with Jeroboam the son of Joash, as is affirmed here, ver. 17; 2 Chron. xxv. 25.

3 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, yet not like David his father: he did according to all things as Joash his father did.

Right in the sight of the Lord; that which was in some sort agreeable to God's will. Not like David his father; not sincerely, 2 Chron. xxv. 2. He did according to all things as Joash his father did, i. e. for a time served God aright, but afterwards fell to idolatry, 2 Chron. xxv. 14, as Joash had done, 2 Kings xii. 3.

4 ^cHowbeit the high places were not taken away: as yet the people did sacrifice and burnt incense on the high places.

Howbeit; though he did right, &c., for this particle is to be joined with those words, the rest being to be closed with a parenthesis.

5 ¶ And it came to pass, as soon as the kingdom was confirmed in his hand, that he slew his servants ^dwhich had slain the king his father.

Whereby it is implied that his father's murderers had powerful friends and abettors, and that their fact was in some sort approved by the generality of the people, to whom Joash had made himself hateful by his apostasy to idolatry, and by his ingratitude to the house of Jehoiaida.

6 But the children of the murderers he slew not: according unto that which is written in the book of the law of Moses; wherein the LORD commanded, saying, ^eThe fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children be put to death for the fathers; but every man shall be put to death for his own sin.

The children of the murderer he slew not; wherein he showed some faith and courage, that he would obey this command of God, though it was very hazardous to himself, such persons being likely to seek revenge for their father's death.

7 ^fHe slew of Edom in ^gthe valley of salt ten thousand, and took ^h||Selah by war, ⁱand called the name of it Joktheel unto this day.

Of Edom, i. e. of the Edomites, or the children of Seir, as they are called, 2 Chron. xxv. 11; either because they dwelt in Seir; see Gen. xxxvi. 8; or because these people were confederates. And he invaded these people because they were subjects to his kingdom, from which they had revolted in Joram's days, 2 Kings viii. 20. The valley of salt; which was the land of Edom; of which see 2 Sam. viii. 13; Psal. lx. title. Selah, or, the rock; the chief city of that part of Arabia, called by other authors Petra, which signifies a rock, because it was built upon a rock, 2 Chron. xxv. 12. Joktheel, which signifies the obedience of God, i. e. given him by God as a reward of his obedience to God's message by the prophet, 2 Chron. xxv. 8, 9.

8 ¶ ^jThen Amaziah sent messengers to Jehoash, the son of Jehoahaz son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, Come, let us look one another in the face.

Let us fight personally, and with our armies. This challenge he sent, partly upon the late and great injuries done by the Israelites to his people, 2 Chron. xxv. 10, 13, and partly from self-confidence, and a desire of advancing his glory and empire by his arms.

9 And Jehoash the king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, ^kThe

By the thistle, a low and contemptible, yet troublesome shrub, he understands Amaziah; and by the cedar, himself, whom he intimates to be far stronger than he, and out of his reach. Give thy daughter to my son to wife; let us make a match, i. e. let us fight; only he expresseth this bloody work in a civil manner, as Amaziah had done, ver. 8, and as Abner did, 2 Sam. ii. 14. Or, let thy kingdom and mine be united under one king, as formerly they were: and let us decide it by a pitched battle, whether thou or I shall be that king. Or, as some expound it, by affirming that it was great arrogancy and presumption for him to desire a friendly league or affinity with him, he leaves him to guess how intolerable it was that he should undertake to wage war against him. Trod down the thistle; and with no less ease shall my soldiers tread down thee and thy forces.

10 Thou hast indeed smitten Edom, and ^mthine heart hath lifted thee up: glory of this, and tarry † at home: for why shouldst thou meddle to thy hurt, that thou shouldst fall, even thou, and Judah with thee?

Glory of this; content thyself with that glory and success, and let not thine ambition betray thee to ruin.

11 But Amaziah would not hear. Therefore Jehoash king of Israel went up; and he and Amaziah king of Judah looked one another in the face at ⁿBeth-shemesh, which belongeth to Judah.

Amaziah would not hear, because God blinded and hardened him to his destruction, for his abominable and ridiculous idolatry, 2 Chron. xxv. 20. Jehoash went up, to wit, into the kingdom of Judah, carrying the war into his enemy's country. Which belongeth to Judah; which is added to distinguish it from that Beth-shemesh in Issachar, and another in Naphtali, Josh. xix. 22, 38.

12 And Judah † was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled every man to their tents.

Being unsatisfied in the ground and manner of the quarrel, and discouraged by their king's idolatry, and smitten by God with a spirit of fear.

13 And Jehoash king of Israel took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Jehoash the son of Ahaziah, at Beth-shemesh, and came to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem from ^othe gate of Ephraim unto ^pthe corner gate, four hundred cubits.

Came to Jerusalem; commanding entrance in Amaziah's name, and with his consent, which he durst not deny. The gate of Ephraim; which led to Ephraim. Four hundred cubits; which was done, partly in scorn and contempt, and partly that he might re-enter and retake it, if they should attempt to renew the war.

14 And he took all ^qthe gold and silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house, and hostages, and returned to Samaria.

Hostages; to assure their peaceable carriage towards him. Returned to Samaria: he did not keep Jerusalem, nor seek to gain the possession and dominion of that kingdom; partly because he thought he could not keep it, considering the difficulty he found in keeping his own from such potent and near enemies as the Syrians were, and the great affection which all Judah bare to David's house; and partly because God so inclined his heart, that he might make good his promise to David and his family.

15 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jehoash which he did, and his might, and how he fought with Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

16 And Jehoash slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel; and Jeroboam his son reigned in his stead.

17 ¶ And Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah lived after the death of Jehoash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel fifteen years.

18 And the rest of the acts of Amaziah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

19 Now they made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem: and he fled to Lachish; but they sent after him to Lachish, and slew him there.

They, i. e. the people, or the princes and chief men among them, possibly those whose sons he had delivered up as hostages to Jehoash, with the connivance, if not approbation, of the people; as appears, because the design was carried on openly, and steadily, and irresistibly, as the following words show. Lachish; a strong city in Judah, towards the Philistines; of which see Josh. x. 31; xv. 39; 2 Kings xix. 8. They sent after him; either secret murderers; or rather, bands of soldiers; for this rebellion was carried on by strong hand and open force. Compare 2 Kings xii. 20; xv. 10, 15.

20 And they brought him on horses: and he was buried at Jerusalem with his fathers in the city of David.

On horses, or, with horses, to wit, in a chariot.

21 ¶ And all the people of Judah took Azariah, which was sixteen years old, and made him king instead of his father Amaziah.

Which they did, either in opposition to the conspirators, or to show their affection to the house of David, and that their quarrel was only personal against Amaziah, whom they looked upon as the author of all their late calamities. This Azariah is called Uziah, 2 Kings xv. 30; 2 Chron. xxvi. 1, both names signifying the same thing for substance; that God's help, and this God's strength.

22 He built Elath, and restored it to Judah, after that the king slept with his fathers.

He built Elath, i. e. repaired and fortified it; for it was built before, Deut. ii. 8. Restored it to Judah; from whom it had revolted with the rest of Edom, in which land this place was upon the Red Sea. The king, i. e. his father Amaziah; who did not perfect his conquest of Edom, but left some work for his son.

23 ¶ In the fifteenth year of Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel began to reign in Samaria, and reigned forty and one years.

24 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

25 He restored the coast of Israel from the entering of Hamath unto the sea of the plain, according to the word of the LORD God of Israel, which he spake by the hand of his servant Jonah, the son of Amittai, the prophet, which was of Gath-hepher.

Damascus and Hamath were cities of Syria, but were taken from the Syrians by David and Solomon, 2 Sam. viii. 6; 2 Chron. viii. 3, and probably by them incorporated with and added to the possessions of their own tribe, to which from that time they belonged; but afterwards they were retaken by the Syrians, and were now recovered by this Jeroboam.

Quest. How can this be true, seeing Amaziah, the father of this Azariah, lived only till the fifteenth year of Jeroboam's reign, chap. xiv. 2, 23? Ans. This might be either, first, Because Jeroboam was made king by and reigned with his father eleven or twelve years, and afterwards reigned alone; and so there is a twofold beginning of his kingdom; by the former this was his twenty-seventh year, and by the latter his fifteenth year. Or, secondly, Because there was an interregnum for eleven or twelve years in the kingdom of Judah; either through the prevalency of that faction which cut off Amaziah the father, and kept the son out of his kingdom; or because Azariah was very young when his father was slain, and the people were not agreed to restore him to his right till his sixteenth year, chap. xiv. 21; 2 Chron. xxvii. 1. And yet these eleven or twelve years of interregnum, in which he was excluded from the exercise of his regal office, some think to be included in those fifty-two years which are here ascribed to Azariah's reign, ver. 2, which may well be doubted. Azariah, called also Uzziah here, ver. 13, 30. Began Azariah to reign; solely and fully to exercise his regal power.

2 Sixteen years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned two and fifty years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jecholiah of Jerusalem.

Besides the sixteen years of his minority last mentioned.

3 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father Amaziah had done;

i. e. In the same manner, insincerely, and but for a time.

4 ^eSave that the high places were not removed: the people sacrificed and burnt incense still on the high places.

Save that; understand this as howbeit, chap. xiv. 4.

5 ¶ And the LORD ^dsmote the king, so that he was a leper unto the day of his death, and ^edwelt in a several house. And Jotham the king's son was over the house, judging the people of the land.

He was a leper; the cause whereof see 2 Chron. xxvi. 16. Dwelt in a several house; separated from conversation with others by virtue of that law, Lev. xiii. 46, which being the law of the King of kings, bound kings no less than subjects. Over the house, judging the people of the land, i. e. he governed the king's court and whole kingdom, in his name, and as his vicegerent.

6 And the rest of the acts of Azariah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

7 So Azariah slept with his fathers; and ^fthey buried him with his fathers in the city of David: and Jotham his son reigned in his stead.

8 ¶ In the thirty and eighth year of Azariah king of Judah did Zachariah the son of Jeroboam reign over Israel in Samaria six months.

The thirty and eighth year of Azariah; of which see the note on ver. 2.

9 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, as his fathers had done: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

10 And Shallum the son of Jabesh conspired against him, and ^gsmote him before the people, and slew him, and reigned in his stead.

Shallum the son of Jabesh; one of his chief captains. Before the people; openly and impudently; which he presumed to do, either because he remembered that the promise of the kingdom made to Jehu was confined to the fourth generation, chap. x. 30, which he observed to be now expired; or because he perceived that the people were generally affected to their king, and favourable to his attempt.

11 And the rest of the acts of Zachariah, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

12 This was ^hthe word of the LORD which he spake unto Jehu, saying, Thy sons shall sit on the throne of Israel unto the fourth generation. And so it came to pass.

16 ¶ Then Menahem smote ^l Tiphshah, and all that were therein, and the coasts thereof from Tirzah: because they opened not to him, therefore he smote it; and all ^m the women therein that were with child he ripped up.

Tiphshah; either that Tiphshah mentioned 1 Kings iv. 24, or another city of that name. The coasts thereof from Tirzah, i. e. all the people dwelling between Tirzah and Tiphshah. Because they opened not to him; because they refused to open the gates of their city to him, and to submit to him as conqueror. The women he ripped up; that by this example of severity he might affright all the rest of the people into obedience.

17 In the nine and thirtieth year of Azariah king of Judah began Menahem the son of Gadi to reign over Israel, and reigned ten years in Samaria.

18 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not all his days from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

19 And ⁿ Pul the king of Assyria came against the land: and Menahem gave Pul a thousand talents of silver, that his hand might be with him to ^o confirm the kingdom in his hand.

Pul the king of Assyria; called by heathen authors Pulbelochus, who by the help of Arbaces the Mede vanquished Sardanapalus the last monarch of Assyria, and translated the kingdom to Chaldea, and was the first king of Babylon and Assyria; Arbaces being made king of the Medes and Persians. Against the land, to wit, of Israel, as the context shows. Menahem gave, i. e. agreed or promised to give, as the next verse explains it. That his hand might be with him, to confirm the kingdom in his hand; that he might assist him against all that did or should oppose him. By which it appears that his cruelty to Tiphshah was so far from establishing him, as he expected, that it weakened and endangered him so far, that he was forced to call in a foreign prince to his aid.

20 And Menahem † exacted the money of Israel, even of all the mighty men of wealth, of each man fifty shekels of silver, to give to the king of Assyria. So the king of Assyria turned back, and stayed not there in the land.

Of each man, i. e. of each of those wealthy Israelites. But as each of these were not equally wealthy, so it is not probable that he taxed them equally. Others therefore render it to or for each man, i. e. for every Assyrian soldier; which interpretation is favoured by the placing of the words in the Hebrew text, which differs from that in our translation.

21 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Menahem, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

22 And Menahem slept with his fathers; and Pekahiah his son reigned in his stead.

27 ¶ In the two and fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah ^p Pekah the son of Remaliah began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned twenty years.

28 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

29 In the days of Pekah king of Israel ^q came Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and took ^r Ijon, and Abel-beth-maachah, and Janoah, and Kedesh, and Hazor, and Gilead, and Galilee, all the land of Naphtali, and carried them captive to Assyria.

Tiglath-pileser, or, Tilgath-pilneser, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20, called in heathen authors Phulassar, or Phul-assur, the son of that Pul or Phul above, ver. 19. Abel-beth-maachah; of which see 1 Kings xv. 20. Janoah; a city of Ephraim, Josh. xvi. 6. Kedesh and Hazor; two cities of Naphtali, Josh. xii. 22; xix. 36. Gilead; all the land beyond Jordan, which was nigher to the Assyrian than the rest. Galilee, to wit, the Upper Galilee, as may be gathered from the following words, all (or, even all) the land of Naphtali; which seem to be added by way of explication or restriction, to show what Galilee he meant, even the Upper, in which Naphtali's lot fell. See the notes on Isa. ix. 1.

30 And Hoshea the son of Elah made a conspiracy against Pekah the son of Remaliah, and smote him, and slew him, and reigned in his stead, ^t in the twentieth year of Jotham the son of Uzziah.

Smote him, and slew him; which he did more easily effect, because the people were enraged against Pekah, as the man who by his murder of king Pekahiah the son of Menahem, whom the Assyrian monarch set up and favoured, and by his unnecessary war with Ahaz, had brought the Assyrian upon them, and caused the loss of one half of that kingdom. In the twentieth year of Jotham the son of Uzziah. Quest. How could this be, when Jotham reigned only sixteen years, below, ver. 33? Answo. The meaning is, that he began his reign in the twentieth year after the beginning of Jotham's reign; or, which is the same thing, in the fourth year of Ahaz, son of Jotham, as appears from chap. xvi. 2. But the sacred writer, having not yet made mention of Ahaz, thought it more proper to number Hoshea's years by Jotham, of whom he had spoken, than by Ahaz. Besides, as Jotham did reign divers years in his father's life, so might Ahaz in Jotham's life, and Jotham might for divers reasons (which it is needless here to inquire) resign up the administration of the kingdom wholly into Ahaz's hands some years before his death, and therefore might be said to reign but sixteen years, though he lived longer.

31 And the rest of the acts of Pekah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

u 2 Chron. 27. 1. ^aJotham the son of Uzziah king of Judah to reign.

33 Five and twenty years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jerusha, the daughter of Zadok.

When he began to reign, to wit, properly and alone; for he had reigned before this, as his father's deputy and viceroy.

x ver. 3. 34 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD: he did ^aaccording to all that his father Uzziah had done.

y ver. 4. 35 ¶ Howbeit the high places were not removed: the people sacrificed and burned incense still in the high places. ^aHe built the higher gate of the house of the LORD.

z 2 Chron. 27. 3, &c. Not of the temple, properly so called; but of one of the courts of the temple, probably that which led to the king's palace, 2 Chron. xxiii. 20; called also the new gate, Jer. xxvi. 10; xxxvi. 10.

36 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jotham, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

37 In those days the LORD began to send against Judah ^aRezin the king of Syria, and ^bPekah the son of Remaliah.

In those days i. e. towards the end of Jotham's reign. The LORD began to send, i. e. disposed their hearts to unite their forces together, and to make preparation for a war against Judah; which yet they did not execute till Ahaz's reign.

38 And Jotham slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Ahaz his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XVI.

Ahaz's idolatry, 1—4. Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah king of Israel, war against him: he hireth Tiglath-pileser against them, 5—9. Ahaz goeth to Damascus to meet the king of Assyria; seeth an altar; the pattern whereof he sends to Urijah, who maketh one like it at Jerusalem: Ahaz sacrificeth on it, 10—16. He spoileth the temple: Hezekiah succeedeth him, 17—20.

cir. 742. IN the seventeenth year of Pekah the son of Remaliah ^aAhaz the son of Jotham king of Judah began to reign.

In the seventeenth year of Pekah; of which see on chap. xv. 30.

2 Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem, and did not that which was right in the sight of the LORD his God, like David his father.

Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign: of the difficulty hence arising, see the notes on chap. xviii. 2, to which it more properly belongs.

3 But he walked in the way of the kings of Israel, yea, ^band made his son to pass through the fire, according to the ^cabominations of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out from before the children of Israel.

Made his son to pass through the fire; either, 1. By way of lustration, to pass hastily through it, so as to be scorched, and, as it were, baptized with it. Or, 2. By way of oblation, so as to be utterly consumed, and offered for a burnt-offering, which was the practice of heathens, and of some Israelites, in imitation of them; of which see 2 Kings xxi. 6; Psal. cv. 36; Jer. vii. 31; which seems best to agree with 2 Chron. xxviii. 3, where it is said he burnt his children,

i. e. some of them; first one, as is here noted; and afterwards others of them, as is there observed. Of these practices, see more on Lev. xviii. 21; Deut. xviii. 10.

4 And he sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places, and ^don the hills, and under every green tree.

After the manner of the heathens: see on Deut. xii. 2; Jer. ii. 20; Hos. iv. 13.

5 ¶ Then Rezin king of Syria and Pekah son of Remaliah king of Israel came up to Jerusalem to war: and they besieged Ahaz, but could not overcome him.

Because God of his own mere grace undertook their protection, as he promised to do, and disappointed the hopes and design of their enemies; of which see on Isa. vii.

6 At that time Rezin king of Syria recovered Elath to Syria, and drove the Jews from [†]Elath: and the Syrians came to Elath, and dwelt there unto this day.

Recovered Elath, i. e. took it from the Jews, who had not long since taken it, chap. xiv. 22. It lay in the land of Edom, upon the Red Sea, very conveniently for navigation; of which see on 1 Kings ix. 26.

7 So Ahaz sent messengers ^eto [†]Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, saying, I am thy servant and thy son: come up, and save me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Israel, which rise up against me.

I am thy servant and thy son; I yield myself to thee, as thy vassal, to serve and obey thee, and pay thee tribute, upon condition thou dost assist me against my enemies. Out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Israel; for though they were now gone from Jerusalem, yet he justly concluded they would return again, and from time to time molest and vex him.

8 And Ahaz ^htook the silver and gold that was found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house, and sent it for a present to the king of Assyria.

9 And the king of Assyria hearkened unto him: for the king of Assyria went up against [†]Damascus, and ⁱtook it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Rezin.

Against Damascus, the metropolis of the Syrians, and the head of that kingdom, Isa. vii. 8; as was prophesied, Amos i. 5. Kir; not Kir of Moab, Isa. xv. 1, but a part of Media, which then was subject to the king of Assyria.

10 ¶ And king Ahaz went to Damascus to meet Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and saw an altar that was at Damascus: and king Ahaz sent to Urijah the priest the fashion of the altar, and the pattern of it, according to all the workmanship thereof.

To meet Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria; to congratulate his victory, and acknowledge his favour and help, and to beg the continuance of it. Saw an altar of an excellent structure, upon which the Syrians used to offer to their idols: see 2 Chron. xxviii. 23.

11 And Urijah the priest built an altar according to all that king Ahaz had sent from Damascus: so Urijah the priest made it against king Ahaz came from Damascus.

So he complied with the king's command against his own conscience, and against the express command of that great God, to whom the king and he both were subject. He made haste, and delayed not to do it, to please the king, and advance himself.

To wit, a sacrifice, and that not unto God, but unto the Syrian idols, as appears from 2 Chron. xxviii. 23, 24, to whom that altar was appropriated. Whether he offered this by himself, or by a priest, is not certain.

13 And he burnt his burnt offering and his meat offering, and poured his drink offering, and sprinkled the blood of [†]his peace offerings, upon the altar.

[†] Heb. which were his.

For the heathens, and Ahaz, in imitation of them, offered the same sorts of offerings to their false gods which the Israelites did to the true, the devil being noted to be God's ape in his worship.

14 And he brought also ^lthe brazen altar, which ^{was} before the LORD, from the forefront of the house, from between the altar and the house of the LORD, and put it on the north side of the altar.

The brazen altar of burnt-offerings, made by Solomon, and placed there by God's appointment. Which was before the Lord, i. e. from before the Lord's house: see on Lev. i. 3. From between the altar and the house of the Lord; or rather, from between his altar, &c., or, that altar, &c. His new altar was at first set below the brazen altar, and at a further distance from the temple. This he took for a disparagement to his altar; and therefore most impiously and audaciously takes that away, and puts his in its place. On the north side of the altar; or, of that altar; or, of his altar; as before. So he put God's altar out of its place and use.

15 And king Ahaz commanded Urijah the priest, saying, Upon the great altar burn ^mthe morning burnt offering, and the evening meat offering, and the king's burnt sacrifice, and his meat offering, with the burnt offering of all the people of the land, and their meat offering, and their drink offerings; and sprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt offering, and all the blood of the sacrifice: and the brazen altar shall be for me to enquire ^{by}.

^m Ex. 29. 39, 40, 41.

Upon the great altar, i. e. this new altar; which was greater than Solomon's, either in quantity, or in his estimation. Whatsoever is offered to the true God, either in my name, (for possibly he did not yet utterly forsake God, but worshipped idols with him,) or on the behalf of the people, shall be offered upon this new altar; which he seems to prescribe not only to gratify his own humour, but also in design to discourage, and by degrees to extinguish, the worship of the true God; for he concluded that the worshippers of God would never be willing to offer their sacrifices upon his altar. The brazen altar shall be for me to inquire by; that shall be reserved for my proper use, to inquire by, i. e. at which I may seek God, or his favour, or inquire of his will, to wit, by sacrifices joined with prayer, when I shall see fit. He saith only to seek, or to inquire; not seek the Lord, or to inquire of the Lord, as the phrase is more largely expressed elsewhere; but he would not vouchsafe to mention the name of the Lord, whom he had so grossly forsaken and despised.

16 Thus did Urijah the priest, according to all that king Ahaz commanded.

Having once began to debauch his conscience, he could not now make an honourable retreat; and therefore proceeds to execute all the king's commands.

17 ¶ ⁿand king Ahaz cut off ^othe borders of the bases, and removed the laver from off them; and took down ^pthe sea from off the brazen oxen that ^{were} under it, and put it upon a pavement of stones.

Which he did, either to express his contempt of them, or to render them inconvenient for the uses to which they had been designed; or to dispose of them, or of the brass of them, in some other place and way, as best suited with his fancy; or for the king of Assyria, as it follows in the next verse.

18 And the covert for the sabbath that they had built in the house, and the king's entry without, turned he from the house of the LORD for the king of Assyria.

The covert for the sabbath; the form and use whereof is now unknown. It is generally understood of some building or covert; either that where the priests, after their weekly course was ended, abode until the next course came and relieved them, which was done upon the sabbath day; see 2 Kings xi. 5, 7; or that in which the guard or watchmen of the temple kept their station; or that under which the king used to sit to hear God's word, and see the sacrifices; which is called the covert of the sabbath, because the chief times in which the king used it for those ends was the weekly sabbath, and other solemn days of feasting, or fasting, (which all come under the name of sabbaths in the Old Testament,) upon which the king used more certainly and solemnly to present himself before the Lord than at other times. The king's entry without; by which the king used to go from his palace to the temple: see on 1 Kings x. 5, 12. For the king of Assyria, i. e. that he might ingratiate himself with the king of Assyria, by his public contempt and rejection of that religion which had been the only partition-wall between the kings of Judah and other kings; and which possibly the present king of Assyria did vehemently dislike and hate, and therefore required these things from Ahaz.

19 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Ahaz which he did, ^{are} they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

20 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, ^{736.} and ^qwas buried with his fathers in the city of David: and Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead. ^q 2 Chron. 28. 27.

CHAP. XVII.

Hoshea king of Israel; his wicked reign: being subdued by Shalmaneser king of Assyria, he conspireth against him with So king of Egypt: he is besieged; taken prisoner; and with all the people carried captive to Assyria for their sins, 1—23. The strange nations transplanted into Samaria are plagued with lions: an Israelitish priest is sent to them; whence followeth a mixture of religions, 24—41.

IN the twelfth year of Ahaz king of Judah began ^aHoshea the son of Elah to reign in Samaria over Israel nine years. ^{730.} ^a After an Interregnum, ch. 15. 30.

Quest. How can this be true, seeing it is said that he reigned, or began to reign, in Israel in the twentieth year of Jotham, chap. xv. 30, which was the fourth year of Ahaz, as was there noted? Answ. He usurped the kingdom in Ahaz's fourth year; but either was not owned as king by the generality of the people, or was not accepted and established in his kingdom by the Assyrian, till Ahaz's twelfth year; or in his eight first years he was only a tributary prince, and the king of Assyria's viceroy; and after that time he set up for himself, which drew the Assyrian upon him. Nine years, to wit, after his confirmation and peaceable possession of his kingdom; for in all he reigned seventeen or eighteen years, to wit, twelve with Ahaz, who reigned sixteen years, and six with Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 10.

2 And he did ^zthat which ^{was} evil in the sight of the LORD, but not as the kings of Israel that were before him.

For he neither worshipped Baal, as many of his predecessors did; nor compelled the people to worship the calves; one of them, that of Dan, being destroyed, or carried away before, as the Hebrew writers affirm; nor, as some add, hindered those by force who were minded to go to Jerusalem to worship; and yet, the measure of the Israelites' sins being now full, vengeance comes upon them without remedy: compare 2 Kings xxiii. 26.

b ch. 18. 9. 3 ¶ Against him came up ^bShalmaneser king of Assyria; and Hoshea became ^chis servant, and ^dgave him ^e presents.

Shalmaneser; the son or successor of Tiglath-pileser. The ancient Hebrew writers make him the same with Sennacherib, who eight years after this time invaded the kingdom of Judah; see chap. xviii. 10, 13; it being very frequent in the eastern parts for one man to be called by several names, especially by the people of several countries. Josephus affirms that he met with his name in the Annals of the Tyrians, which were extant in his days. He came against him, either because he denied the tribute which he had promised to pay, or that he might make him tributary. Gave him presents; swore fealty to him, and engaged to pay him a tribute.

4 And the king of Assyria found conspiracy in Hoshea: for he had sent messengers to So king of Egypt, and brought no present to the king of Assyria, as he had done year by year: therefore the king of Assyria shut him up, and bound him in prison.

So king of Egypt; by heathen writers called Sua or Sabachus; that by his assistance he might shake off the yoke of the king of Assyria; who now was, and for many years had been, the king of Egypt's rival: see 2 Kings xviii. 21; Jer. xxxvii. 5. Shut him up, and bound him in prison, to wit, after he had come up against him, and taken him, with Samaria; the particular relation whereof here follows.

5 ¶ Then ^ethe king of Assyria came up throughout all the land, and went up to Samaria, and besieged it three years.

6 ¶ ^fIn the ninth year of Hoshea the king of Assyria took Samaria, and ^gcarried Israel away into Assyria, ^hand placed them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes.

This is added to distinguish this place from the former, which was either in Assyria, or in the mountainous and less inhabited parts of Media. Hither he carried them, partly to replenish his own country; and partly because these places were at so great a distance from Canaan, that this would cut off all hopes and thoughts of returning to their own country.

7 For so it was, that the children of Israel had sinned against the LORD their God, which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and had feared other gods,

8 And ⁱwalked in the statutes of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out from before the children of Israel, and of the kings of Israel, which they had made.

In the statutes of the heathen, i. e. according to the laws and customs of the heathen, in the worship of their Baals, and other of their sins. Which they had made, i. e. which the kings of Israel had ordained concerning the worship of the calves, and against their going up to Jerusalem to worship.

9 And the children of Israel did secretly those things that were not right against the LORD their God, and they built them high places in all their cities, ^jfrom the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.

Things that were not right against the Lord: this belongs, either, 1. To their gross idolatries, and other abominable practices, which they were ashamed to own before others: compare Ezek. viii. 12. Or, 2. To the worship of calves; and so the words are otherwise rendered, and that agreeably to the Hebrew text, they cloaked, or disguised, or covered things that were not right against, or before, or towards the Lord, i. e. they covered their idolatrous worship of the calves with fair pretences of necessity, the two kingdoms being now divided, and at enmity; and of their honest intention of serving the true God, and retaining the substance of the Jewish religion, from which they alleged that they differed only in circumstances of worship. From the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city; in all parts and places, both in cities and in the country; yea, in the most uninhabited and neglected parts, where few or none dwell beside the watchmen, who are left there in towers, to preserve the cattle and fruits of the earth, or to give notice of the approach of enemies.

10 ^kAnd they set them up ^limages and ^mgroves ⁿin every high hill, and under every green tree:

11 And there they burnt incense in all the high places, as did the heathen whom the LORD carried away before them; and wrought wicked things to provoke the LORD to anger:

As did the heathen; not only to the Lord, which was practised and tolerated sometimes in the kingdom of Judah; but also to the idols or Baals of the heathen. Whom the Lord carried away before them for the same sins; by whose example they should have taken warning. To provoke the Lord to anger, i. e. in despite and contempt of God, and his authority and command, as the next verse shows.

12 For they served idols, ^owhercof the LORD had said unto them, ^pYe shall not do this thing.

13 Yet the LORD testified against Israel, and against Judah, ^qby all the prophets, and ^rby all ^sthe seers, saying, ^tTurn ye from your evil ways, and keep my commandments and my statutes, according to all the law which I commanded your fathers, and which I sent to you by my servants the prophets.

Testified against Israel; disowned, and gave testimony against their false worship, which they would fasten upon him, and against all their impieties. By all the prophets, and by all the seers; to whom he declared his mind by extraordinary revelations and visions, and by whom he published it to you, bearing witness from heaven to their doctrine by eminent and glorious miracles. According to all the law which I commanded your fathers; whereby he accuseth them of partiality, that they observed only those laws of God which they might safely keep, and lived in the constant breach of others, which their kings forbade them to observe.

14 Notwithstanding they would not hear, but ^uhardened their necks, like to the neck of their fathers, that did not believe in the LORD their God.

Hardened their necks, i. e. refused to submit their neck to the yoke of God's precepts; a metaphor from stubborn oxen, that make their necks hard, or stiff, and will not bow to the yoke: see on Deut. xxxi. 27.

15 And they rejected his statutes, ^vand his covenant that he made with their fathers, and his testimonies which he testified against them; and they followed ^wvanity, and ^xbecame vain, and went after the heathen that were round about them, concerning whom the LORD had charged them, that they should ^ynot do like them.

They followed vanity, i. e. idols; oft so called, because of their nothingness, impotency, and unprofitableness; and to show the folly and madness of idolaters. Became vain: by the long worship of idols, they were made like them, vain, sottish, and senseless creatures.

16 And they left all the commandments of the LORD their God, and ^amade them molten images, even two calves, ^band made a grove, and worshipped all the host of heaven, ^cand served Baal.

They left all the commandments of the Lord; they grew worse and worse; from a partial disobedience to some of God's laws, they fell by degrees to a total apostacy from all of them. The host of heaven; the stars, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, &c. See Deut. iv. 19.

17 ^aAnd they caused their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire, and ^bused divination and enchantments, and ^csold themselves to do evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

Sold themselves to do evil; of which phrase see on 1 Kings xxi. 20.

18 Therefore the LORD was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight: there was none left ^dbut the tribe of Judah only.

Out of his sight, i. e. out of Canaan, the only place of God's solemn worship and gracious presence; or, out of his church. The tribe of Judah only; and the greatest part of the tribe of Benjamin, and those of the tribes of Simeon and Levi, who adhered to them, and were incorporated with them; and therefore very fitly denominated from them: see of this phrase on 1 Kings xi. 13.

19 Also ^eJudah kept not the commandments of the LORD their God, but walked in the statutes of Israel which they made.

Judah's idolatry and wickedness is here remembered, as an aggravation of the sin of the Israelites, which was not only evil in itself, but scandalous and mischievous to their neighbour, who by their examples were instructed in their wicked arts, and provoked to an imitation of them: see Hos. iv. 15, and compare Matt. xviii. 7.

20 And the LORD rejected all the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and ^fdelivered them into the hand of spoilers, until he had cast them out of his sight.

All the seed of Israel, i. e. all the kingdom or tribes of Israel; first one part of them, chap. xv. 29, and now the rest. But this extends not to every individual person of these tribes; for many of them removed into the kingdom of Judah, and were associated with them, as appears from 2 Chron. xi. 16, and many other places.

21 For ^ghe rent Israel from the house of David; and ^hthey made Jeroboam the son of Nebat king: and Jeroboam drave Israel from following the LORD, and made them sin a great sin.

They made Jeroboam king; which action is here ascribed to the people, because they would not tarry till God, by his providence, had invested Jeroboam with the kingdom which he had promised him; but rashly, and unthankfully, and rebelliously rose up against the house of David, to which they had such great obligations, and set him upon the throne without God's leave or advice. Jeroboam drave Israel from following the Lord; he not only dissuaded, but kept them by force from God's worship at Jerusalem, the only place appointed for it. A great sin; so the worship of the calves is called, to meet with that idle conceit of the Israelites, who esteemed it a small sin, especially when they were forced to it by severe penalties; which yet he shows did not excuse it from being a sin, and a great sin: too.

22 For the children of Israel walked in all the sins of Jeroboam which he did; they departed not from them;

But willingly and resolutely followed the wicked examples and commands of their kings, though contrary to God's express commands.

23 Until the LORD removed Israel out of his sight, ⁱas he had said by all his servants the prophets. ^kSo was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria unto this day.

The Lord removed Israel out of his sight: they continued to the last obstinate and incorrigible under all the instructions and corrections which God sent to them; and therefore were most justly given up by God into this dreadful captivity; which all this foregoing discourse was designed to prove.

24 ¶ ^lAnd the king of Assyria brought ^mmen ⁿfrom Babylon, and from Cuthah, and from ^oAva, and from Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed ^pthem in the cities of Samaria instead of the children of Israel: and they possessed Samaria, and dwelt in the cities thereof.

The king of Assyria; either Shalmaneser, or rather his son and successor, Esar-haddon, Ezra iv. 2, because this was a work of some time; and as his father had projected, and possibly begun this, so he executed or finished it; whence it is ascribed to him, rather than to his father. Babylon then was subject to the Assyrian monarch; but a few years after revolted from him, and set up another king; as appears both from sacred and profane histories. Cuthah, Ava, Hamath, and Sepharvaim; several places then in his dominion.

25 And ^qso it was at the beginning of their dwelling there, ^rthat they feared not the LORD: therefore the LORD sent lions among them, ^swhich slew ^tsome of them.

They feared not the Lord; they did not acknowledge nor worship God in any sort. Therefore; for this gross neglect and contempt of God, which was contrary to the principles and practices of the heathens, who used to worship the gods of the nations where they lived, and gave that honour to their false gods which here they denied to the true. Hereby also God asserted his own right and sovereignty over that land, and made them to understand that neither the Israelites were cast out nor they brought into that land by their valour or strength, but by God's providence, who as he had cast the Israelites out for their neglect of God's service, so both could and would in his due time turn them out also, if they were guilty of the same sins.

26 Wherefore they spake to the king of Assyria, saying, The nations which thou hast removed, and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of the God of the land: therefore he hath sent lions among them, and, behold, they slay ^uthem, because they know not the manner of the God of the land.

They spake, i. e. they wrote, or sent messengers to him for relief. Know not the manner of the God of the land; they supposed the true God to be like one of their topical deities, who had their particular countries and provinces allotted to them.

27 Then the king of Assyria commanded, saying, Carry ^vthither one of the priests whom ye brought from thence; and let them go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of the God of the land.

One of the priests, i. e. one of the chief of the priests, with others, to be under his inspection and direction, as may be gathered from the following words; where it is said of the same person, or persons, let them go, &c., and then, let him teach, &c. Nor is it probable that one priest could suffice for the instruction of the inhabitants of so many and distant parts.

28 Then one of the priests whom they had carried away from Samaria came and dwelt in Beth-el, and taught them how they should fear the LORD.

i. e. The manner of God's worship, as it was practised in Israel; as may be gathered both from the quality of this person, who was an Israelitish priest; and from the place of his residence, Beth-el, a place infamous for the worship of the calves, and from the manner of their making priests by this man's direction, ver. 32.

29 Howbeit every nation made gods of their own, and put them in the houses of the high places which the Samaritans had made, every nation in their cities wherein they dwelt.

Made gods of their own, or, worshipped, (as that verb is sometimes used; of which see Exod. xxxii. 35.) i. e. those whom they worshipped in the places from whence they came, whose names here follow. The Samaritans, i. e. the former people, or inhabitants, not of the city, but of the kingdom of Samaria.

Of the lowest of them priests of the high places: see the notes on 1 Kings [xii. 31. Which sacrificed for them, to wit, unto the true God; for as to the worship of their own gods, they needed no instruction, and would not permit a person of another religion to minister therein.

* Zeph. 1. 5. 33 ^a They feared the LORD, and served their own gods, after the manner of the nations ^{||} whom they carried away from thence.

|| Or, who carried them away from thence. They feared the Lord; they worshipped God externally in that way which the Israelites used. Served their own gods, after the manner of the nations whom they carried away from thence: these words belong, either, 1. To both the foregoing branches, and to the Israelites; and then the sense is, they trod in the steps of their predecessors, the Israelites, (who, in regard of their several tribes, are both here and elsewhere called nations,) who did, many of them, worship both God in their calves, and Baal too. Or, 2. To the last branch only; but then the words must be otherwise rendered, they served their own gods, after the manner of the nations from which they brought, or carried them, or from whence they (these new inhabitants) were brought, i. e. each of them served the god of the country or place whence he was brought, as is related above, ver. 30, 31. But these nations could not so properly be said to be carried away, or to be carried away captive, (as this Hebrew word signifies,) as the Israelites; and therefore the former interpretation seems more proper.

34 Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the LORD, neither do they after their statutes, or after their ordinances, or after the law and commandment which the LORD commanded the children of Jacob, ^a whom he named Israel;

† Gen. 32. 28. * 35. 10. † Kin. 11. 31. Unto this day they do; either, 1. The Samaritans, whose religion he hath hitherto been describing, and to the description whereof he returns, ver. 41. So the following verses are a digression, wherein he designs only to take an occasion to compare them with the Israelites, and to aggravate the sins of the Israelites above theirs, which he doth, ver. 35, &c., and then returns to the former description, ver. 41. Or rather, 2. The Israelites, who are the principal subjects of this whole discourse; and of whom he unquestionably speaks, ver. 35, and thence to ver. 41, of whom also the last words of ver. 33 are to be understood; and from thence he takes an occasion to return to his main business, to relate and aggravate the sins of Israel, and thereby to justify his severe proceedings against them to all the world. So the sense of the place is this, As the Israelites before their captivity gave these nations an ill example, in serving the Lord and Baal together; so, or after their former manner, they do unto this day, in the land of their captivity. They fear not the Lord; though they pretended to fear and serve both the Lord and idols, yet in truth they did not, and do not fear or worship the Lord, but their own calves, or other vain inventions; and God will not accept that mongrel and false worship, which they pretend to give to the true God. Or this may intimate that the Israelites were worse than their successors, because these feared the Lord and idols too; but they did quite cast off the fear and worship of God in their captivity, and wholly degenerate into heathenish idolatry. Their statutes, i. e. God's law delivered to their fathers, and to them, as their inheritance, Psal. cxix. 111. This is alleged as an evidence that they did not fear the Lord, whatsoever they pretended, because they lived in the constant breach of his statutes. The children of Jacob, i. e. themselves; the noun put for the pronoun; which is usual among the Hebrews. Israel; a name signifying his special interest in God, and power with him, which was given to him, not only for himself, but for his posterity also, whom God frequently honours with that name. And by this great favour he aggravates their sin.

35 With whom the LORD had made a covenant, and charged them, saying, ^u Ye shall not fear other gods, nor ^v bow yourselves to them, nor serve them, nor sacrifice to them: ^u Judg. 6. 10. ^x Ex. 20. 5.

A covenant, containing many precious promises, upon the condition here following: see Gen. xvii. 7; Exod. xix. 5; xxiv. 7.

36 But the LORD, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt with great power and ^a stretched out arm, ^y him shall ye fear, and him shall ye worship, and to him shall ye do sacrifice. ^y Exod. 6. 6. ^z Deu. 10. 20.

37 And the statutes, and the ordinances, and the law, and the commandment, which he wrote for you, ^a ye shall observe to do for evermore; and ye shall not fear other gods. ^a Deu. 5. 23.

38 And the covenant that I have made with you ^b ye shall not forget; neither shall ye fear other gods. ^b Deu. 4. 23.

39 But the LORD your God ye shall fear; and he shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies.

The Lord your God, i. e. God alone, as the whole context shows. He shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies; and therefore you have no pretence of need to go to other gods for relief.

40 Howbeit they did not hearken, but they did after their former manner.

41 ^c So these nations feared the LORD, and served their graven images, both their children, and their children's children: as did their fathers, so do they unto this day. ^c ver. 32, 33.

Hezekiah king over Judah, his good reign: he is not afraid of the king of Assyria, and overcometh the Philistines, 1—8. Samaria is carried away captive by Salmanser king of Assyria for their sins, 9—12. Sennacherib invadeth Judah; and Hezekiah payeth him tribute, 13—16. Rabshekeh sent by Sennacherib, revileth Hezekiah; blasphemeth God; and stirreth up the people to mutiny; which is told the king, 17—37.

cir. 726.

NOW it came to pass in the third year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that Hezekiah the son of Ahaz king of Judah began to reign.

2 Chro. 28. 27. & 29. 1. He is called Hezekias, Matt. 1. 9.

In the third year; in the third of those nine years mentioned chap. xvii. 1, of which see there. See below, ver. 10.

2 Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Abi, the daughter of Zachariah.

b 2 Chro. 29. 1, Abijah.

Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign. How is this credible? For then Ahaz, who lived but six and thirty years, chap. xvi. 2, must beget Hezekiah at the eleventh year of his age. Answe. 1. There are some like instances mentioned by credible authors; which these very men will not deny, who are so ready to quarrel with the Holy Scriptures for such matters. 2. This being the confessed custom of sacred and other writers, in the numbering of years, sometimes to omit, and sometimes to add, those which are imperfect or unfinished; and so Ahaz might be near one and twenty years old when he began to reign, and near seventeen years older when he died. And on the other side, Hezekiah, when he began to reign, might be only four and twenty years old complete, and but entered into his five and twentieth year.—And thus Ahaz might be between thirteen and fourteen years old when he got Hezekiah; which is not at all strange, especially in that nation, to which God had promised a singular degree of fruitfulness, and in that house of David, to which God had made so many and such great promises. 3. It is not certain that Ahaz lived only thirty-six years; for those sixteen years which he reigned, chap. xvi. 2, may be computed, not from the first beginning of his reign, when he reigned with his father, (of which see the notes on chap. xv. 30.) which was at the twentieth year of his age, but from the beginning of his reign alone. 4. Some affirm that Hezekiah was not the natural, but only the legal son and successor of Ahaz; for the name of son is given in Scripture to such persons; as 1 Chron. iii. 16, compared with 2 Kings xxiv. 17; Matt. i. 12, compared with Jer. xxii. 30; and to adopted sons, Acts vii. 21; Heb. xi. 24; and to sons-in-law, 1 Sam. xxiv. 16; xxvi. 17; Luke iii. 23. Any of these solutions are far more credible to any man of common prudence, than that these sacred books, whose Divine original hath been so fully evidenced both by God and men, are but the fictions and contrivances of a base impostor. And if none of these solutions were sufficient, it is absurd to conclude that a true resolution cannot be found because it is not yet found; because it is manifest, that many difficulties, both in Scripture and in the arts, which were formerly judged insoluble, have been cleared in later times; and therefore we may justly expect the resolution of other difficulties, which may be thought not yet fully explained. Abi, or Abijah, 2 Chron. xxix. 1.

3 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that David his father did.

4 ¶ He removed the high places, and brake the images, and cut down the groves, and brake in pieces the brasen serpent that Moses had made: for unto those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it: and he called it Nehushtan.

He removed the high places, i. e. the most of them, or such as the people most frequented; for all were not taken away, chap. xxiii. 13, 14. And this he attempted to do, notwithstanding the people's great and constant affection to them; partly because he had more zeal and courage than his predecessors; and partly because the dreadful judgments of God upon the kingdom of Israel for their superstition and idolatry had made the people of Judah more pliable to the commands of God, and of their good king. The brasen serpent that Moses had made, by God's command, to be an ordinance or mean for the conveyance of God's blessing to the people; which therefore had been hitherto kept as a memorial of God's mercy; but being now commonly abused to superstition, was destroyed. The children of Israel did burn incense to it; not doubtless as to a god, but only as to an instrument and token of God's mercy, by and through which their adoration was directed to God, and given to that only for God's sake. He called it Nehushtan, i. e. he said, This serpent, howsoever formerly honoured, and used by God as a sign of his grace, yet now it is nothing but a piece of brass, which can do you neither good nor hurt; and therefore is no fit object for your worship.

5 He trusted in the LORD God of Israel; so that after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor any that were before him.

He trusted in the Lord God of Israel, without calling in foreign and heathenish succours to establish or help him; which his father Ahaz did, chap. xvi. 7; Isa. vii.; and before him Asa, 1 Kings xv. 18, 19, with reflection upon whom this seems to be noted. Nor any that were before him, to wit, of the kings of Judah only; for David and Solomon were kings of all Israel. Object. The like is said of Josiah, chap. xxiii. 25. Answe. Each of them excelled the other in several qualities or actions: Hezekiah in this, that he fell upon this work with great expedition, even in the beginning of his reign, which Josiah did not, chap. xxii. 1, 3; and with no less resolution, undertaking to do that which none of his predecessors durst do, even to remove the high places, wherein Josiah did only follow his example, chap. xxiii.

6 For he clave to the LORD, and departed not from following him, but kept his commandments, which the LORD commanded Moses.

Departed not from following him, in the general course of his life, and especially in the matters of God's worship.

7 And the LORD was with him; and he prospered whithersoever he went forth: and he rebelled against the king of Assyria, and served him not.

He shook off that yoke of subjection and tribute to which his father had wickedly submitted, chap. xvi. 7, and reassumed that full and independent sovereignty which God had settled in the house of David, which Ahaz could not alienate further than for his own time. And Hezekiah's case differs much from that of Zedekiah, who is blamed for rebellion against the king of Babylon, both because he had engaged himself to him by a solemn oath and covenant, which we do not read of Ahaz; and because he broke the covenant which he himself had made; and because God had actually given the dominion of his own land and people to the king of Babylon, and commanded both Zedekiah and his people to submit to him. And whereas Hezekiah is here said to rebel, that word implies only a defection from that subjection which had been professed and performed to another; which sometimes may be justly done, and sometimes may not; and therefore that word doth not necessarily prove this action to be a sin. And these words, he rebelled, &c., are explained by the next following words, and he served him not. And that it was not a sin in him seems most probable, because God did own and assist him therein; and did not at all reprove him for it in that message which he sent to him by Isaiah about this matter, chap. xix. 20, &c., nor afterwards, though he did particularly reprove him for that which might seem a less fault, for his vain-glory and ostentation, 2 Chron. xxxii. 25, 26. For what he saith, I have offended, see on ver. 14.

13 ¶ Now ^s in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah did † Sennacherib king of Assyria come up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them.

Sennacherib, the son or successor of Salmanser. Come up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them, i. e. against many of them; universal particles being frequently so used, both in Scripture and other authors; for that all were not taken appears from chap. xix. 8. And this success God gave him, partly, to lift him up to his own greater and more shameful destruction; partly, to humble and chastise his own people for their manifold sins, and afterwards to raise them up with more comfort and glory; and partly, to gain an eminent opportunity to advance his own honour and service by that miraculous deliverance which he designed for his people.

14 And Hezekiah king of Judah sent to the king of Assyria to Lachish, saying, I have offended; return from me: that which thou puttest on me will I bear. And the king of Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah king of Judah three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold.

I have offended, to wit, against thee, i. e. I have given thee occasion of warring against me, wherof I now repent. Or his ill success might make him think that he had sinned against God in this action, and might make him willing to submit to him, though God graciously prevented it. Of a talent of gold see on Exod. xxv. 39.

15 And Hezekiah ^t gave him all the silver that was found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house.

Which Hezekiah king of Judah had overlaid; so repairing the injury which his father had done to them, and putting them into the same condition in which Solomon left them, 1 Kings vi. 32.

17 ¶ And the king of Assyria sent ^u cir. 710.

Tartan and Rabsaris and Rab-shakeh from Lachish to king Hezekiah with a † great host against Jerusalem. And they went up and came to Jerusalem. And when they were come up, they came and stood by the conduit of the upper pool, "which is in the highway of the fuller's field.

The king of Assyria sent; having received the money, upon which he agreed to depart from Hezekiah and his land, ver. 16. He breaks his faith with Hezekiah, thereby justifying Hezekiah's rebellion, and preparing the way for his own approaching destruction.

18 And when they had called to the king, there came out to them Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the ^v scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph the recorder.

When they had called the king, i. e. sent a message to him to come or send to treat with them. Eliakim the son of Hilkiah; of whom see Isa. xxii. 20, &c. Over the household, Heb. over the house; either of God; or rather, of the king here mentioned; as appears from Isa. xxii. Shebna the scribe; so called to distinguish him from another Shebna who was over the house, Isa. xxii. 15.

19 And Rab-shakeh said unto them, Speak ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, ^x What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

20 Thou ^y sayest, (but they are but † vain words,) ^z I have counsel and strength for the war. Now on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

Thou sayest; either to thy people, to encourage them; or rather, within thyself. But they are but vain words, or, surely, or, only, words of the lips, i. e. vain, unprofitable, idle talk, without any effect; or they come not from thy heart; thou speakest this against thy own knowledge. Counsel and strength for the war; counsel to contrive, strength or courage to execute; which two things are of greatest necessity and use for war. But the words are and may be rendered otherwise; either thus, Thou speakest surely words of the lips, i. e. thou encouragest thyself and thy people with talk and words; but counsel and strength are for war, are necessary for thy defence; neither of which thou hast within thyself, but must seek them from others; and where wilt thou find them? on whom (as it follows) dost thou trust? Or thus, Thou sayest, I have the word of my lips, (either, 1. Words wherewith to pray to God for help; or, 2. Eloquence to encourage my soldiers and people,) counsel and strength for war, i. e. I am furnished with all things necessary for my defence. On whom dost thou trust? seeing it is apparent thou hast not strength of thy own, from whom dost thou expect succours?

21 ^y Now, behold, thou † trustest upon the staff of this bruised reed, even upon Egypt, on which if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt unto all that trust on him.

This bruised reed; he calls Egypt a reed, with allusion to the reeds wherewith the banks of Nilus were full; and bruised, to note their weakness and insufficiency to support him. Compare Ezek. xxix. 6, 7. It will go into his hand, and pierce it, by some of the fragments into which it will be broken. Unto all that trust on him; doing them no good, but much hurt.

22 But if ye say unto me, We trust in the LORD our God: is not that he, whose high places and whose altars He-z ver. 4.

zekiah hath taken away, and hath said to Judah and Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar in Jerusalem?

Whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away; thereby robbing him of that worship and service which he had in those places. Thus boldly he speaks of these things which he understood not, judging of the great God by their false and petty gods; and judging of God's worship according to the vain fancies of the heathens, who measured piety by the multitude of altars.

23 Now therefore, I pray thee, give ^{1 Or, hostages.} I pledge to my lord the king of Assyria, and I will deliver thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

Give pledges to my lord, i. e. give him hostages to secure him from thy future rebellion, and he will depart from thee. Or rather, contend with my lord in battle; seeing thou hast counsel and strength for war, do not lie lurking in thy strong hold, but come out into the open field, and let us try for mastery; and whereas thou mayst pretend thou wantest horses to fight with me, if thou wilt accept of my challenge, I will furnish thee with two thousand horses, if thou hast riders for them; as it here follows.

24 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

How wilt thou force him to turn his back to thee, and flee away from thee?

25 Am I now come up without the LORD against this place to destroy it? The LORD said to me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

Without the Lord; without his consent and commission. The Lord said unto me, to wit, by secret inspiration, or by his providence. But indeed he neither owned God's word, nor regarded his providence; but he forged this, to strike a terror into Hezekiah and the people.

26 Then said Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rab-shakeh, Speak, I pray thee, to thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and talk not with us in the Jews' language in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

Upon which these officers stood; not being willing to put themselves into the power of such a barbarous and perfidious enemy, by going out of the city.

27 But Rab-shakeh said unto them, Hath my master sent me to thy master, and to thee, to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men which sit on the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink † their own piss with you?

^{+ Heb. the center of their feet.}

To tell them to what extremities and miseries he will force them.

28 Then Rab-shakeh stood and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and spake, saying, Hear the word of the great king, the king of Assyria:

In the Jews' language, that he might affright the people into a compliance with him, which he perceived Eliakim and his brethren endeavour to prevent.

29 Thus saith the king, ^a Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you out of his hand:

30 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us, and this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

^{1 Or, Seek me favour. † Heb. Make with me a blessing. C. vi. 32. 20. & 33. 11. 1 Cor. 13. 16.}

Make an agreement with me by a present, to redeem yourselves from all the calamities of a close siege, and that death which certainly will follow on them. Or, procure, or purchase a blessing from me, i. e. a blessed peace; whereby you may be delivered out of your distressed and cursed condition, and receive from me the blessings of protection and provision, which your king cannot give you. Then eat ye every man of his own vine; upon these terms I will give you no disturbance, but quietly suffer each of you to enjoy his own possessions.

32 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, ^b a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards, a land of oil olive and of honey, that ye may live, and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah, when he † persuadeth you, saying, The LORD will deliver us.

Hamath and Arpad; of which see Jer. xlix. 23. Sepharvaim; of which see chap. xvii. 24. Hena and Ivah; the names, either, 1. Of idol gods. But why should only these two be named, and not the gods of the other places here mentioned? Or rather, 2. Of cities or countries, as is manifest from chap. xix. 13, where those words are repeated among other places, whose kings are there mentioned, and where they are rendered, of Hena and Ivah, as they should be here also, the words in the Hebrew being the very same. Have they delivered Samaria? i. e. 1. Either the gods here mentioned, which, together with other idols, were worshipped in Samaria. Or, 2. Their gods; which is easily understood from the foregoing words.

35 Who are they among all the gods of the countries, that have delivered their country out of mine hand, † that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of mine hand?

^{f Dan. 3. 15.}

36 But the people held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

The people, i. e. either these three men, this word being sometimes used of a very few men, as 1 Sam. ix. 24. Or rather, the people that were with them upon the wall, ver. 26, to whom he spake, and from whom he expected an answer. Answer him not; which was wisely ordered, partly lest by their words they should either betray their fears, or provoke their enemies to greater injuries or blasphemies, or give them some advantage or direction for their further proceedings; and partly that by this instance of obedience and calmness he might see the resolution of the people to cleave unto their king, and the vanity of his attempts to seduce them to a defection from him.

their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rab-shakeh.

CHAP. XIX.

Hezekiah acquainteth Isaiah the prophet with the blasphemies of Rab-shakeh: he promiseth deliverance from the Lord, 1—7. Sennacherib is forced to march against the Moors; sendeth blasphemous letters to Hezekiah, 8—13. His prayer, 14—19. Isaiah prophesieth the destruction of Sennacherib, and good of Zion, 20—34. The same night an angel slayeth the Assyrians: Sennacherib is murdered at Nineveh by his own sons, 35—37.

^a Is. 37. 1, &c.

AND ^ait came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the LORD.

^b Luke 2. 4, called Esauus.

2 And he sent Eliakim, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests, covered with sackcloth, to ^bIsaiah the prophet the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and || blasphemy: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.

A day of trouble and of rebuke; either, 1. From God, wherein God rebukes and chastens us sorely. Or rather, 2. From the Assyrian, who reviles and reproacheth us; for his business here is to complain, not of God, but of the Assyrian. We are like a poor travailing woman in great extremity, and having no strength left to help herself, and to bring forth her infant into the world. We have attempted to deliver ourselves from the Assyrian yoke; and had carried on that work to some maturity, and, as we thought, brought it to the birth; but now we have no might to finish, unless thou assist us. We have begun a happy reformation, and are hindered by this insolent Assyrian from bringing it to perfection. See 2 Chron. xxxii. 1.

^c 2 Sam. 16. ^d ch. 18. 35.

4 ^cIt may be the LORD thy God will hear all the words of Rab-shakeh, ^dwhom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God; and will ^ereprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that are ^fleft.

⁺ Heb. found.

It may be; he speaks doubtfully, because he knew not whether God would not deliver them all up into the Assyrian's hand, as he and his people deserved. But sometimes this is not a word of doubt, but of good hope; as Numb. xxii. 33; Josh. xiv. 12. The Lord thy God, to whom thou art dear and precious. He saith not our God, because he seemed to have forsaken and rejected them; and they by their designs had forfeited all their interest in him. Will hear, i. e. will show by his actions that he hath heard them with just indignation. Will reprove the words, or rather, will reprove him (an ellipsis of the pronoun, which is frequent in the Hebrew tongue) for the words, as the Syriac, and Arabic, and Chaldee render it. Lift up thy prayer for the remnant: this he mentions as an argument to stir up Isaiah to pray, and to move God's compassion towards them; that they were but a small remnant, either of God's people, of whom ten tribes were now lost; or of the kingdom of Judah, which had been greatly wasted and depopulated in the days of Ahaz, and now lately by this Assyrian, ver. 13.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

^f Is. 37. 6, &c.

6 ¶ And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say to your master, Thus saith the LORD, Be not afraid of the words which thou hast heard, with which the ^gservants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

^g ch. 18. 17

7 Behold, I will send ^ha blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

^h ver. 35, 36, 37. Jer. 51. 1.

I will send a blast upon him, Heb. a wind, a storm or tempest, by which name God's judgments are oft called, i. e. a violent, and sudden, and terrible stroke; namely, that miraculous destruction of his army, of which ver. 35. Although the place may be rendered thus, I will put a spirit within him, so that he shall hear a rumour, and return, &c. For by spirit is many times understood an imagination, or inclination, or affection; in which sense we read of the spirit of fear, 2 Tim. i. 7; of the spirit of jealousy, Numb. v. 14; of the spirit of slumber, Rom. xi. 8. Or, a spirit against (for so the Hebrew preposition beth is oft used, as hath been noted before) him; of whom this word is elsewhere used, as Judg. ix. 23; 1 Sam. xvi. 14, 23; 1 Kings xxii. 23; as it is also given to man's soul, Job xii. 10; Eccles. xii. 7, which is a spiritual substance, as the angels are. And this interpretation seems most agreeable to the design of this verse, which is in brief to represent all the judgments of God which were to befall him, and which are related in the following history; and therefore all the other particulars being contained in the following branches of this verse; the tidings of Tirhakah, ver. 9, in these words, he shall hear a rumour; his returning to his own land, and being slain there, ver. 36, 37, in the next words; it seems most probable that the chiefest of all the judgments, to wit, the destruction of 185,000 soldiers in one night, ver. 35, is not omitted here, but expressed in the first branch of the verse; and the spirit here is the same thing which is there called an angel; this latter word being there used to limit and explain the former, which otherwise was of a doubtful signification.

8 ¶ So Rab-shakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed ⁱfrom Lachish.

ⁱ ch. 18. 14.

Rab-shakeh returned to the king, to give him an account of the treaty, and to advise with him what was further to be done; leaving behind him the army under the other commanders, mentioned chap. xviii. 17, as is most probable from the other threatening message here following; which would have been very unsuitable, if his siege had been raised. He was departed from Lachish; not being able to take it.

9 And ^kwhen he heard say of Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, Behold, he is ^lcome out to fight against thee: he sent messengers again unto Hezekiah, saying,

King of Ethiopia, Heb. of Cush, i. e. either, 1. Of Arabia, as that word is most commonly meant; of which see the notes, and especially my Latin Synopsis, upon Numb. xii. 1. Or rather, 2. Of Ethiopia beyond Egypt. Nor was there any need that he should force his passage through Egypt, which is objected against this opinion by a very learned man; because the Egyptians (against whom this Sennacherib warred, as heathen historians, Herodotus and Berosus, relate) and the Ethiopians were confederates in this expedition, as Josephus expressly affirms; who lived above 1600 years nearer the time when this was done than we, and therefore was more likely to understand it.

o ch. 18. 34. 13 ^o Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arpad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, of Hena, and Ivah?

Where is the king of Hamath? either, 1. Their god, whom he here calls their king, because they looked upon him as their protector and governor, which kings are or should be to their people. Or rather, 2. Their king properly so called. And as before he compared their gods with the God of Hezekiah; and by both intends to persuade them, that neither their God nor their king was able to save them out of his hand. z Is. 37. 21, &c. 20 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent to Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, ^z That which thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria ^a I have heard.

i. e. Accepted it, and will answer it; a common synecdoche.

21 This is the word that the LORD hath spoken concerning him; The virgin ^b the daughter of Zion hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem ^c hath shaken her head at thee.

The virgin; so he calls Zion, or Jerusalem; partly, because she was pure in good measure from that gross idolatry wherewith other people were defiled, which is called spiritual whoredom; partly, to signify that God would defend her from that rape which Sennacherib intended to commit upon her, with no less care and zeal than parents do their virgin daughters from those who seek to force and deflower them; and partly, to intimate, that as she had not yet been forced and taken by her barbarous enemies, so she should still retain her virginity, in spite of his attempts against her. The daughter of Zion, i. e. the people of Zion, i. e. as it follows, of Jerusalem; so called synecdochically from the mountain and city of Zion, which was an eminent part of it. Cities and countries are oft called mothers, as 2 Sam. xx. 19; and their inhabitants daughters, as Numb. xxi. 25; Josh. xvii. 16; Judg. i. 27; P'sal. xlv. 13; cxxxvii. 8. Hath shaken her head at thee; laughed at all thy proud and impotent threatenings. This is a gesture of contempt and derision; of which see P'sal. xxii. 7; xlv. 14; Jer. xviii. 16; Matt. xxvii. 39.

22 Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against ^d the Holy One of Israel.

Exalted thy voice; by Rab-shakeh, who cried with a loud voice, chap. xviii. 23. Lifted up thine eyes on high; a gesture of pride and scornfulness, Prov. xxi. 4. Against the Holy One of Israel: not against man, but against the holy God, who will not suffer thy impious blasphemies to go unpunished; and against the Holy One of Israel, who hath a special relation and kindness to Israel, having as it were set himself apart for them, and set them apart for himself, as being at this time the God of the Jews only, and not the God of the Gentiles; whom, as yet, he suffered to walk in their own evil ways, Acts xiv. 16. And therefore he will plead their cause against thee.

23 [†] By thy messengers thou hast reproached the LORD, and hast said, [†] With the multitude of my chariots I am come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon, and will cut down [†] the tall cedar trees thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof: and I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into [†] the forest of his Carmel.

By thy messengers; so thou hast advanced thy very servants above me. I am come up to the height of the mountains; I have brought up my very chariots to those mountains which were thought inaccessible by my army. Lebanon; a high hill, famous for cedars and fir trees, here following. Will cut down the tall cedars thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof: this may be understood, either, 1. Mystically, I will destroy the princes and nobles of Judah, (which are sometimes compared to cedars, &c.,) or their strongest cities. Or rather, 2. Literally, I will cut down the trees that hinder my march, and plain and prepare the way for all my numerous army and chariots. And by this one instance he intimates that nothing should stand in his way; no, not the highest and strongest places. The lodgings of his borders, i. e. those towns and cities (which he calls lodgings in way of contempt) which are in his utmost borders, and most remote from me. I am come into the land of Canaan at one border, Lebanon, and I resolve to march on to the other extreme border, and so to destroy the whole country, from one border to another; the borders of a land being oft put for the whole land within its borders; as Exod. viii. 2; P'sal. lxxiv. 17; cxlvii. 14; Isa. liv. 12. Or, as it is in the Hebrew, into the lodging of his border; for which, in the parallel place, Isa. xxxvii. 24, it is into the height of his border. And so this may be understood of Jerusalem; which it is not probable that in all his brags he would omit; and against which his chief design now lay; which he here calleth a lodging for its contemptible smallness, if compared with his great and vast city of Nineveh: or, as it is in Isa. xxxvii., the height, for its two famous mountains, Zion and Moriah; or for the mountains which were round about Jerusalem, P'sal. cxxv. 2; and he adds, of his border, because this city was in the border of Judah; as being part of it in the tribe of Benjamin, and near the kingdom of the ten tribes, which was now in the Assyrians' hands. The forest of his Carmel, i. e. the forest of Mount Carmel, which may seem to be another inaccessible place, like Lebanon. Or, into his forest, and his fruitful field; for Carmel, though properly it was a pleasant and fruitful mountain in the tribe of Issachar, of which see Josh. xii. 22; yet it is oft used to signify any fruitful place, as is manifest from Isa. x. 18; xvi. 10; Jer. ii. 7. And thus all the parts of the land are here enumerated; the mountains, the cities, the woods, and the fruitful fields. Or, his fruitful forest, to wit, Jerusalem; which is thought by many interpreters to be called a forest, Jer. xxi. 14; Ezek. xx. 46, a name which agrees well enough to cities, where buildings are very numerous, and close, and high, like trees in a forest. And if Jerusalem might be called a forest, it might well be called Hezekiah's Carmel, or fruitful place, because his chief strength, and treasure, and fruit was now in it; and this last word may seem to be added here, to intimate that this was not like other forests, unfruitful and barren. And so both this and the foregoing words are understood of the same place, even of Jerusalem; the last branch being joined to the former by way of apposition; into the lodging of his border, the forest of his Carmel, or his fruitful forest; there being no more words in the Hebrew text.

24 I have digged and drunk strange waters, and with the sole of my feet have
Or, fenced. I dried up all the rivers of || besieged places.

Strange waters; such as were never discovered nor used by others. And therefore all thy endeavours to deprive me of water for my army, 2 Chron. xxxii. 3, are idle and fruitless. With the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of besieged places; and as I can furnish my army with water digged out of the earth, by their labour, and my art; so I can deprive my enemies of their water, and can dry up their rivers, and that with the sole of my feet, i. e. with the march of my vast and numerous army, who will easily do this, either by marching through them, and each carrying part away with them; or by drinking every one a little of them; or by their pains making many new channels, and driving the waters of the river into them, as Cyrus dried up Euphrates, and thereby took Babylon.

Or, Hast thou not heard how I have made it long ago, and formed it of ancient times? should I now bring it to be laid waste, and fenced cities to be ruinous heaps? g Is. 45. 7. h Is. 10. 8.
 25 || Hast thou not heard long ago how ^s I have done it, and of ancient times that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that ^h thou shouldst be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps.

Hast thou not long since learned that which some of thy philosophers could and did teach thee, that there is a supreme and powerful God, by whose decree and providence all these wars and calamities were sent and ordered, whose mere instrument thou art, so that thou hast no cause for these vain boastings? This work is mine, more than thine. Or, as it is in the margin of our Bibles, Hast thou not heard that (a particle oft understood) I have made (i. e. constituted, or purchased, or adorned, for all these ways is this Hebrew verb used) it (either Jerusalem, which he now threatened; or rather, the Jewish nation, which he endeavoured to root out; the relative pronoun being put without the antecedent, which is to be gathered out of the context; of which I have formerly given instances) long ago, and formed it of ancient times? i. e. didst thou not hear what I did for this people many ages since, that I carried them out of Egypt in spite of Pharaoh and all his host; and through the Red Sea, where I overthrew the Egyptians; and through the vast howling wilderness; and then brought them into this land by a strong hand, by which I destroyed all their enemies, and planted them in their stead? By which thou mayst understand how dear this people are to me, and how easily I could destroy thee before them, if I saw it fit; and that the places which thou hast taken, and the conquest which thou hast made here, are not to be imputed to thy valour or numbers, but unto my providence, who for wise and just reasons have given them up into thy hands, as it here follows. This may seem to be the truest sense, because that barbarous prince and people were much more likely to hear the tidings of what God did for the Israelites in Egypt, and at the Red Sea, and in Canaan, the fame of which was spread in all those parts, than to hear of or be instructed in the doctrine of God's particular providence in the government of several nations, and all their counsels and actions of state and war. For though the Assyrian was indeed the rod in God's hand, &c., Isa. x. 5, yet he did not so understand it, nor was God in all his thoughts; but he minded only the enlargement of his own empire by the destruction of other kingdoms, as it there follows, ver. 7, 13—15.

Now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldst be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps: this translation seems better to agree both with the foregoing branch of this verse, and with the following verse, than the other interrogative translation in the margin; and the plain sense seems to be this: Great things I have done for this people, which thou canst not be ignorant of; but now I have changed my course towards them, resolved to punish them severely for their sins; and therefore now I have brought it to pass, i. e. I have so disposed of things by my providence, that thou shouldst be a great and victorious prince, and that thou shouldst employ thy forces against them to do my work upon them, that thou shouldst be (to wit, a person raised up and fitted and strengthened for this very purpose) to lay waste fenced cities (and to turn them) into ruinous heaps, i. e. that thou shouldst be so successful as thou hast hitherto been, first against the kingdom of Israel, and now against Judah.

26 Therefore their inhabitants were † of small power, they were dismayed and confounded; they were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, [†] the grass on the house tops, and as [†] corn blasted before it be grown up.

Therefore; because I had armed thee with my commission and strength, and taken away their spirit and courage, and withdrew my help from them to give it to thee. Their inhabitants; the people of Israel, and Judah, and other places which thou hast conquered. As the grass of the field; which is weak and quickly fading, and unable to resist any hand or instrument which offers violence to it. As corn blasted before it be grown up, i. e. all their designs and hopes were disappointed before they could come to any perfection or success.

27 But [†] I know thy || abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

Though thou dost not know me, yet I thoroughly know thee, and all thy designs and actions, all thy secret and subtle contrivances in the place of thy abode, in thy own kingdom and court, and the execution of thy designs abroad, what thou intendest in thy going out, and with what successes or further thoughts thou comest in, or returnest to thy own land. For the phrase, compare Deut. xxxi. 2; Psal. cxxxix. 2, 3. And thy rage against me, i. e. against my servant Hezekiah, and my people, against whom he was engaged, because they would not deliver up Jerusalem to him, which he demanded. Things are frequently said to be done against God, which are only done against his people, because of that near union and relation which is between them. See Zech. ii. 8; Acts ix. 4, 5. But the words may well be rendered, and thy rage is with me, or before me, as the Syriac hath it; or, is manifest to me, as the Chaldee renders it. And so this branch of the verse answers to the former, I know, &c., and it is before me.

28 Because thy rage against me and thy tumult is come-up into mine ears, therefore [†] I will put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back ^m by the way by which thou camest.

Thy tumult, i. e. thy tumultuous noise, thy clamours and blasphemies which Rab-shakeh in thy name belched forth against me with a loud voice, chap. xviii. 28. My hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips; a metaphor from wild and furious beasts, that must be thus managed. I will turn 29 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves, and in the second year that which springeth of the same; and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruits thereof.

A sign unto thee, to wit, of the certain accomplishment of the promises here made to thee; that Zion should triumph over this insulting enemy, ver. 21; that God would not only preserve the city from his present fury, ver. 34, but also that God would bless his people with a durable prosperity, and a happy increase, ver. 30, 31. And thus it is not only a sign of a short deliverance, which would be past before this sign was fulfilled, (though there are instances of such signs as followed the thing done; as Exod. iii. 12; Isa. vii. 14.) but of a future mercy, which was to continue long after that sign. And this sign was the more necessary, because otherwise Hezekiah and his people had cause to fear that the Assyrians would be greatly enraged for their shameful repulse, and the destruction of their army, and would quickly recruit their army, and return against them with far greater force and violence. But some affirm that Sennacherib, when he heard of Tirhakah's march against him, of which ver. 9, went with his army to meet him, and overthrew him, and the Egyptian who was joined with him, as was noted before; and prosecuted his victory by following them into Egypt and Ethiopia; in the conquest of which he spent two years, in which space the people did eat such things as grew of themselves; and in the third year returned to Jerusalem, intending to besiege it. It is true, it is said, and so the sign went before the thing, (which may be objected against the truth of this relation,) ver. 9, that when he heard of Tirhakah, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, pretending as if he would forthwith come against him; but it is not said that he did so, nor is it set down what he did with Tirhakah, because the design of the sacred writer was only to write the history of the Jewish nation; not of others, but only with respect to them. In the third year: this was an excellent sign, for it was miraculous; especially considering the waste and havoc which the Assyrians had made in the land; and that the Jews had been forced to retire into their strong hold, and consequently to neglect their tilling, and sowing, and reaping; and yet this year they should have sufficient provision from those fruits of the earth which the Assyrian left; and the second year, which probably was the year of release, in which they might neither sow, nor reap from such fruits as the earth brought forth of its own accord; and so in the third year. Sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruits thereof; you shall not sow, and another reap, as lately you did; but you shall enjoy the fruit of your own labours.

† Heb. the escaping of the house of Judah that remaineth.

30 And † the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall yet again take root downward, and bear fruit upward.

i. c. Shall increase and multiply greatly; a metaphor from plants. Compare Job xxix. 19.

‡ Heb. the escaping.

31 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and ‡ they that escape out of mount Zion: P the zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.

A remnant; that handful of Jews who now were gathered together, and shut up in Jerusalem, shall go out to their several habitations, and by my singular blessing increase exceedingly. They that escape out of Mount Zion; the same thing expressed in other words, which is usual in the Hebrew language. The zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do this: although when you reflect upon yourselves, and consider either your present fewness and weakness, or your great unworthiness, this may seem too great a blessing for you to expect or believe; yet God will do it from the zeal which he hath, both for his own name, to vindicate it from the blasphemous reproaches of the Assyrians, and for the good of his undeserving people.

32 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shield, nor cast a bank against it.

Which was true, though he sent Rab-shakeh and others with a great host against Jerusalem, chap. xviii. 17; either because that host went away with Rab-shakeh to Libnah, above, ver. 8; or rather, because that army did not form a close siege against it, but only marched towards it, and disposed themselves so as to block it up at some distance; possibly waiting till the king of Assyria had taken Libnah and Lachish, (which they presumed he would speedily do,) and should come up with the rest of his forces, when they intended to fall more vigorously to their work.

33 By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the LORD.

Whereas he expected to devour the kingdom of Judah at one morsel, and then to proceed further, and to conquer Egypt or other neighbouring countries; and as it is said of him, and concerning this very time and design, Isa. x. 7, to cut off nations not a few, he shall meet with so sad a disappointment and rebuke here, that he shall make haste to return with shame to his own country.

34 For I will defend this city, to save it, for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

For my promise and covenant's sake, made with David concerning the stability and eternity of his kingdom. See 1 Kings xi. 12, 13.

35 ¶ And it came to pass that night, that the angel of the LORD went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred fourscore and five thousand: and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

That night; either, 1. In the night following this message of the prophet to Hezekiah; or, 2. In that famous night when God destroyed the Assyrians, it was done in this manner. For such expressions are oft used of an indefinite and uncertain time, as that day is frequently taken, as Isa. iv. 1; xxv. 1; xxvii. 1, &c. Smote in the camp, with pestilence, or some other sudden and mortal stroke. The camp of the Assyrians; either before Libnah, or in some other place near Jerusalem, where they were encamped.

36 So Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

God spared Sennacherib, not in mercy, but in wrath, reserving him to a more dreadful and shameful death by the hands of his own children.

37 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword: and they escaped into the land of Armenia. And Esarhaddon his son reigned in his stead.

The land of Armenia was a place most fit for their purpose, because it was near to that part of Assyria, and was very mountainous and inaccessible by armies, and the people more stout and warlike, and constant enemies to the Assyrians. Esarhaddon; who sent great supplies to his new colony in Samaria, Ezra iv. 2, fearing, it seems, lest Hezekiah should improve the last great advantage to disturb his new conquests there.

CHAP. XX.

Hezekiah receiving a message of death, by prayer hath his life lengthened; for a sign the sun goeth backward, 1—11. The king of Babylon's ambassadors come to Hezekiah with letters and a present; he showeth them all his treasures, 12—15; whereupon Isaiah foretelleth him the Babylonish captivity: he dieth; and Manasseh is king, 16—21.

+ Heb. Gire charge concerning thine house.
2 Sam. 17. 23.

IN ^athose days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz came to him, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, †Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live.

In those days, i. e. in that year of the Assyrian invasion, as is manifest from hence, that that was in Hezekiah's fourteenth year, chap. xviii. 13, and God now added fifteen years more to him, chap. xx. 6; and yet Hezekiah reigned only twenty-nine years in all, chap. xviii. 2. And this happened either, first, After the destruction of Sennacherib's army. Or, secondly, Before it, as may be thought from ver. 6, where he speaks of his deliverance from the king of Assyria as a future thing. It is true, that when Hezekiah received that insolent message from the Assyrian, he was in health, and went into the temple to pray, chap. xix. 14; but there might be time more than enough for this sickness and recovery between that threatening and this destruction of the Assyrian. Set thine house in order; take care to make thy will, and to settle the affairs of thy family and kingdom; which he the rather presseth upon him, because the state of his kingdom required it; for it is plain that Hezekiah had not as yet any son, Manasseh his heir and successor not being born till three years after this time, by comparing this chap. xx. 6, with chap. xxi. 1. For thou shalt die, and not live; according to the course of nature, and of thy disease, which is mortal in its kind, and will be so in effect, if God doth not miraculously prevent it. Such threatenings, though absolutely expressed, have oftentimes secret conditions, which God reserves in his own breast: see Jonah iii. 4.

2 Then he turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the LORD, saying,

He turned his face to the wall; either because the temple lay that way; or rather, that by turning his face from the company he might intimate his desire of privacy, and so might with more freedom and fervency pour out his soul to God.

+ Heb. with a great weeping.

3 I beseech thee, O LORD, ^bremember now how I have ^cwalked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept †sore.

In truth, i. e. sincerely, with an honest mind, as the following words explain it. I have in some measure (human frailty excepted) kept the condition which thou didst require, 1 Kings viii. 25, and therefore do humbly beg of thee that the promise made to David and to his posterity upon that condition may not fail in my person, for as yet thou hast not given me a son. See on ver. 1. I am not conscious to myself of any gross exorbitances in the course of my life, for which thou usest to shorten men's days, and cut off my life in thy displeasure, which by this sharp message thou threatenest to do. Hezekiah wept sore; partly for that horror of death which is and was common to men, especially in the times of the Old Testament, when the grace of God in Christ was not so fully manifested as now it is; and principally for the distracted and miserable condition in which the church and state were then likely to be left, through the uncertainty of the succession to the crown, and the great proneness of the people to backslide to their false worship and evil practices; which he easily perceived, and which he knew would bring far worse calamities upon them if he were removed, as afterwards it came to pass.

4 And it came to pass, afore Isaiah was gone out into the middle || court, that the word of the LORD came to him, saying,

Into the middle court, to wit, of the king's palace; of which see on 1 Kings vii. 8. Or, into the middle city, as it is in the Hebrew. For some observe that there were three cities, or three parts of this city; one called the city of David in Zion; another called Jebus, or Salem; and a third, which was betwixt these two parts, and united them all into one city, called Jerusalem. This is noted to show God's great readiness to hear the sincere and fervent prayers of his children.

5 Turn again, and tell Hezekiah ^dthe captain of my people, Thus saith the LORD, the God of David thy father, ^eI have heard thy prayer, I have seen ^fthy tears: behold, I will heal thee: on the third day thou shalt go up unto the house of the LORD.

The God of David thy father; I am mindful of my promise made to David and his house, and will make it good in thy person. On the third day; which shows that the cure was miraculous. Thou shalt go up unto the house of the Lord, to give me solemn praise for this mercy; which proves the perfection of the cure.

6 And I will add unto thy days fifteen years; and I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria; and ^gI will defend this city for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

g ch. 19. 34.

Fifteen years beyond what thou dost expect, and beyond what thou wouldst do if I should leave thee to the force of thy disease. Out of the hand of the king of Assyria; this is added, either, first, Because he might otherwise fear the Assyrian's return to this city, from which he was so shamefully repulsed. Or, secondly, Because this sickness happened before that great slaughter, chap. xix. 35; of which see the notes on ver. 1. For mine own sake; to vindicate my glory against that insolent blasphemous.

7 And ^hIsaiah said, Take a lump of ⁱfigs. And they took and laid it on the boil, and he recovered.

h Is. 38. 21.

Take a lump of figs: though the deliverance was certainly promised, yet means must be used, and those suitable; for this hath naturally a power of ripening and softening boils or sores, though that power was altogether insufficient to produce so sudden and so complete a cure. The boil seems to have been a plague-sore.

8 ¶ And Hezekiah said unto Isaiah, ^jWhat shall be the sign that the LORD will heal me, and that I shall go up into the house of the LORD the third day?

i See Judg.
6. 17, 37, 39.
Is. 7. 11, 14.
& 38. 22.

Isaiah said; or rather, had said; for it is evident this was said before his recovery, though his recovery be mentioned before it; such transpositions being frequent in Scripture. What shall be the sign? he asketh a sign, not because he distrusted it, but for the strengthening of his faith, which otherwise might be shaken by the greatness of his danger, and by the contradiction between this and his former message. Compare Judg. vi. 17, 37, 39; Isa. vii. 11.

9 And Isaiah said, ^kThis sign shalt thou have of the LORD, that the LORD will do the thing that he hath spoken: shall the shadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees?

k See Is. 38.
7. 8.

10 And Hezekiah answered, It is a light thing for the shadow to go down ten degrees: nay, but let the shadow return backward ten degrees.

To go down ten degrees, to wit, in an instant; for that course or motion of the sun is natural for the kind of it, though miraculous for the swiftness of it; but the other would be both ways miraculous.

11 And Isaiah the prophet cried unto the LORD: and ^lhe brought the shadow ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the † dial of Ahaz.

† Heb. degrees.

Isaiah cried unto the Lord; being moved by God's Spirit first to offer him this sign, and then to pray for it. Ten degrees backward. Quest. 1. What were these degrees? Answo. Lines in the dial; but whether each of these lines or degrees noted an hour, or half an hour, or a quarter of an hour, is uncertain, and not very considerable in this case. Quest. 2. What was it that went down? Answo. Either, first, The shadow alone went back without the sun; for God could so dispose of the light of the sun, by interposing clouds, or other things, so that the shadow should fall only upon those lines, and in that manner as God directed it. And whereas the sun is said to have gone down, that may be spoken according to appearance, as other passages of Scripture are understood; as when the moon is called one of the great lights, Gen. i., though it be less than some of the stars; and when the sun is said to go down, Jer. xv. 9, and to be turned into darkness, Joel ii. 31. Or, secondly, The sun itself went back, and the shadow with it. This may seem most probable, first, By comparing this with Josh. x. 13, where the sun itself stood still. Secondly, Because it is said the sun itself returned, Isa. xxxviii. 8; for which he here mentions the shadow only, because the miracle was not so easily discovered in the sun as in the shadow of a dial. And though the sun may be elsewhere taken improperly, yet where the improper signification is unnecessary, the proper is and ought to be preferred before it. Thirdly, Because this miracle was noted by the Babylonians, who, having understood that it was done for Hezekiah's sake, sent to inquire into the truth and manner of it, 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. Object. If this had been done, the heathen historians and astronomers would have taken notice of it, which we do not find that they did. Answ. So it is most probable they did, although those books be not now extant; which is not strange; this being confessed and bewailed, that so very few of the first and ancient writers are now left; Herodotus himself, the first, and father of the ancient historians, being long after this time. And yet it is observed, that there are some intimations of these things left, though mixed with fables, as many true histories were; as what the poets fabled of Jupiter's making the night twice as long as it should have been, that he might enjoy Alcmena longer. Whether the sun or shadow went backward suddenly, or leisurely, and in the same time in which it had gone down, is a question of no great moment, the miracle being evident either way. In the dial of Ahaz; which Ahaz had made in the king's palace. This dial he mentions, because the truth of the miracle might be best and soonest discovered there; this dial possibly being visible out of the king's chamber, or at least being near to it, and the degrees being most distinct and conspicuous in this dial; but the same thing was discerned by all other dials.

712. 12 ¶ At that time ¶ Berodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present unto Hezekiah: for he had heard that Hezekiah had been sick.

Berodach-baladan, called Merodach-baladan, Isa. xxxix. 1, whose name Josephus found in that famous Chaldean historian, Berosus. He seems to have been the king of Assyria's viceroy in Babylon; and upon that terrible slaughter of one hundred and eighty-five thousand in the Assyrian host, and the death of Sennacherib, and the differences among his sons, to have usurped an absolute sovereignty over Babylon; and either himself or his son destroyed the Assyrian monarchy, and translated the empire to Babylon. Sent letters and a present unto Hezekiah; partly for the reasons mentioned 2 Chron. xxxii. 31; and partly to assure himself of the friendship and assistance of Hezekiah against the Assyrians, their common, and as yet powerful, enemy.

13 And Hezekiah hearkened unto them, and shewed them all the house of his precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah shewed them not.

Hearkened unto them, i. e. granted their desires of a league and amity with them. The silver and the gold, &c.; for though his country had lately been harassed by the Assyrians, yet he had reserved all his treasures and precious things which he and his fathers had gathered in Jerusalem. Besides, he had considerable spoils out of the Assyrian camp. Also he had many presents sent to him, 2 Chron. xxxii. 23, which doubtless were things of considerable worth. Nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah showed them not; which he did through vain ostentation and pride of heart, 2 Chron. xxxii. 25, 26, being lifted up by the great honour which God had done him, in working such glorious miracles for his sake, and by the great respects and presents rendered to him from divers princes and people, and now by this great Babylonian monarch. So hard a matter is it even for a good man to be high and humble.

14 ¶ Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from a far country, even from Babylon.

They are come from a far country; a vain-glorious expression, intimating the great honour which he had from all parts, both far and near. Even from Babylon, that great and potent monarchy; which he speaks to magnify his own honour and happiness.

15 And he said, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All the things that are in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

What have they seen in thine house? he asketh, not that he was ignorant of it, but that from his answer he might take the occasion of delivering God's message to him.

16 And Isaiah said unto Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD.

17 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store unto this day, shall be carried into Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

This judgment is denounced against him for his pride, which God exceedingly abhors; and for his ingratitude, whereby he took that honour to himself which he should have given entirely to God, and abused God's gifts and favours to the gratification of his own lusts; of both which see 2 Chron. xxxii. 25, 26; and for his carnal confidence in that league which he had now made with the king of Babylon, by which, it is probable, he thought his mountain to be so strong, that it could not be removed.

18 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

Which thou shalt beget, i. e. of thy grandchildren, who are oft called sons. They shall be servants to that heathen monarch, whereby both their bodies will be subject to slavery, and the lusts of their lords, and their souls exposed to the peril of idolatry, and all sorts of wickedness; which must needs be very grievous to so good a man as Hezekiah, and was indeed a very sore judgment; whereby God would teach the world the great evil of sin, yea, even of those sins which are generally esteemed but small and venial; for such were those sins of Hezekiah, noted upon ver. 17.

19 Then said Hezekiah unto Isaiah, Good is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken. And he said, Is it not good, if peace and truth be in my days?

Good is the word of the Lord: I heartily submit to this sentence, as being both just, because deserved and procured by mine and my people's sins; and merciful, because the punishment is less than I have deserved. Is it not good, if peace and truth be in my days? which speaks not as if he were careless and unconcerned for his posterity, (which neither the common inclinations and affections of nature in all men, nor that singular piety and charity which was eminent and manifest in Hezekiah, can suffer us to believe,) or for the church and people of God, for whose welfare he was so solicitous and industrious in the whole course of his life; but because it was a singular favour that this judg 21 And Hezekiah slept with his fathers: and Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XXI.

Manasseh's idolatry, 1—9. Judgments prophesied against Judah, 10—15. Manasseh shed innocent blood; dieth, 16—18. Amon his son succeedeth him; and is slain by his servants; who are slain by the people: Josiah his son is made king, 19—26.

MANASSEH was twelve years old when he began to reign, and reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hephzi-bah.

Reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem; in which time the years of his imprisonment are comprehended, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11.

2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, after the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

Did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD; partly by the instigation of the wicked princes of Judah, who in Hezekiah's time were secret enemies to his reformation, and now, when their fetters were knocked off by Hezekiah's death, break forth into open hostility against it, and corrupt the king's tender years with their wicked counsel; and principally by his own vicious inclination.

3 For he built up again the high places which Hezekiah his father had destroyed; and he reared up altars for Baal, and made a grove, as did Ahab king of Israel; and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served them.

The host of heaven; the stars, which the Gentiles had transformed into gods. See on Deut. iv. 19.

4 And he built altars in the house of the LORD, of which the LORD said, In Jerusalem will I put my name.

In the house of the LORD, i. e. in the temple itself, in the holy place, because this is distinguished from the courts of the house, ver. 5. In Jerusalem will I put my name; that place I have peculiarly consecrated to my worship and honour; which made it the greater injustice, and impiety, and sacrilege to alienate it from God, and to dedicate it, or any part of it, especially the temple, to the service of idols, whom God abhorreth.

5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven in the two courts of the house of the LORD.

The one of the priests, the other of the people, 1 Kings vi. 36.

6 And he made his son pass through the fire, and observed times, and used enchantments, and dealt with familiar spirits and wizards: he wrought much wickedness in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

Made his son pass through the fire; of which see the notes on Lev. xviii. 21, and 2 Kings xvi. 3. Observed times, i. e. lucky or unlucky days or seasons for the despatch of businesses, according to the superstitious practice of the heathens. See Esth. iii. 7: see also Lev. xix. 26; Deut. xviii. 10, 11.

7 And he set a graven image of the grove that he had made in the house, of which the LORD said to David, and to Solomon his son, In this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen out of all tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever:

He set a graven image of the grove; either, first, The image of that Baal which was worshipped in the grove. Or, secondly, A representation of the grove, as may seem by comparing chap. xxiii. 6. Or, thirdly, The graven image of Asherah, a god or goddess so called, possibly the same called elsewhere Ashteroth. See Judg. vi. 25, 28; 2 Kings xxiii. 6; 2 Chron. xv. 16.

8 Neither will I make the feet of Israel move any more out of the land which I gave their fathers; only if they will observe to do according to all that I have commanded them, and according to all the law that my servant Moses commanded them.

Move any more out of the land; they shall no more be carried captives into a strange land, as it had happened before.

9 But they hearkened not: and Manasseh seduced them to do more evil than did the nations whom the LORD destroyed before the children of Israel.

Partly because they were not contented with those idols which the Canaanites worshipped, but either themselves invented, or they borrowed from other nations, many new idols and kinds of idolatry; and partly because as their light was far more clear, their obligations to God infinitely higher, and their helps and antidotes against idolatry much stronger than the Canaanites had; so their sins, though the same in kind, were unspeakably worse in respect of these dreadful aggravations.

10 ¶ And the LORD spake by his servants the prophets, saying,

11 Because Manasseh king of Judah hath done these abominations, and hath done wickedly above all that the Amorites did, which were before him, and hath made Judah also to sin with his idols:

Above all that the Amorites did, i. e. the Canaanitish nations, all so called from one eminent part of them. See on Gen. xv. 16. Hath made Judah also to sin with his idols; by his example, encouragement, counsel, authority, and command.

12 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Behold, I am bringing such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that whosoever heareth of it, both his ears shall tingle.

By the great commotion which such terrible reports shall cause in the hearts and heads of the hearers. See on 1 Sam. iii. 11; Jer. xix. 3.

13 And I will stretch over Jerusalem the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the house of Ahab: and I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish, wiping it, and turning it upside down.

Jerusalem shall have the same measure and lot, i. e. the same judgments, which Samaria had. The line is oft put for one's lot or portion, as Psal. xvi. 6; 2 Cor. x. 16, because men's portions or possessions used to be measured by lines, Psal. lxxviii. 55; Amos vii. 17. Or it is a metaphor from workmen who mark out by lines what part of the building they would have thrown down, and what they would have stand. See Isa. xxxiv. 11; Lam. ii. 8; Amos vii. 7, 8; Zech. i. 16. Or it is an allusion to that fact of David, who destroyed the Moabites by a measuring line, 2 Sam. viii. 2. Wiping it, and turning it upside down, as men do with a dish that hath been used; first wholly empty it of all that is in it, then thoroughly cleanse and wipe it, and lastly turn it upside down, that nothing may remain in it: so will I deal with Jerusalem, thoroughly empty and purge it from all its wicked inhabitants, and that so as to cut off all hopes of restitution.

14 And I will forsake the remnant of mine inheritance, and deliver them into the hand of their enemies; and they shall become a prey and a spoil to all their enemies;

The remnant of mine inheritance, i. e. the kingdom of Judah, the only remainder of all the tribes of Israel, which I did once choose for my inheritance, but now, notwithstanding that privilege, will utterly reject and forsake them.

15 Because they have done that which was evil in my sight, and have provoked me to anger, since the day their fathers came forth out of Egypt, even unto this day.

This sore judgment, though it was chiefly inflicted for the sins of Manasseh and his generation, yet had a respect unto all their former sins, the guilt whereof was upon this occasion revived. See Exod. xxxii. 34.

16 * Moreover Manasseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem † from one end to another; beside his sin wherewith he made Judah to sin, in doing that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

* Heb. from mouth to mouth.

Innocent blood; the blood of those prophets and righteous men who either reproved his sinful practices, or refused to comply with his wicked commands and worship. Beside his sin, i. e. his idolatry, which is elsewhere called evil, and corruption, and here sin, by way of eminency; which is the more considerable, because it is here compared with horrid cruelty, and implied to be worse than that, and more abominable in God's sight, because it doth more directly and immediately strike at the glory and purity of the Divine Majesty, by respect unto which all sins are to be measured. And this expression God here useth in opposition to the gross error of most men, who look upon idolatry as a small sin, as a mere mistake of the mind, as the fruit of a good intention, and as an excess proceeding from zeal in religion.

17 ¶ Now † the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and all that he did, and his sin that he sinned, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

18 And † Manasseh slept with his fathers, and was buried in the garden of his own house, in the garden of Uzza: and Amon his son reigned in his stead.

In the garden of his own house, not in the sepulchre of the kings; either by the people's designation, who judged him unworthy of that honour; or rather, by his own choice and command, as a lasting testimony of his sincere repentance and abhorrence of himself for his former crimes. In the garden of Uzza, or, of king Uziah, who possibly planted or enlarged it.

19 ¶ Amon was twenty and two years old when he began to reign, and he reigned two years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Meshullemeth, the daughter of Haruz of Jotbah.

20 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, † as his father Manasseh did.

21 And he walked in all the way that his father walked in, and served the idols that his father served, and worshipped them:

22 And he † forsook the LORD God of his fathers, and walked not in the way of the LORD.

CHAP. XXII.

Josiah's good reign; his care for the repair of the temple, 1—7. Hilkiah found a book of the law; the king by it understandeth God's threatenings against backsliders, and by Hulda the prophetess inquireth of the Lord, 8—14. She prophesieth the destruction of Jerusalem, but not in Josiah's time, 15—20.

JOSIAH * was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty and one years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jedidah, the daughter of Adaiah of † Boscath.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, and walked in all the way of David his father, and † turned not aside to the right hand or to the left.

3 ¶ † And it came to pass in the eighteenth year of king Josiah, that the king sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, the son of Meshullam, the scribe, to the house of the LORD, saying,

In the eighteenth year, not of his life, but of his reign, as it is expressed, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3, 8. What he did before this time, see 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3, &c. The scribe; the king's secretary.

4 Go up to Hilkiah the high priest, that he may sum the silver which is † brought into the house of the LORD, which † the keepers of the † door have gathered of the people:

That he may sum the silver, i. e. take an exact account how much it is, and then dispose it in manner following. The keepers of the door were priests or Levites, as appears from chap. xii. 9; 2 Chron. viii. 14; xxiii. 4; xxxiv. 9.

5 And let them † deliver it into the hand of the doers of the work, that have the oversight of the house of the LORD: and let them give it to the doers of the work which is in the house of the LORD, to repair the breaches of the house,

The oversight of the house of the Lord, i. e. the care and oversight of the workmen; which also were Levites, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12.

6 Unto carpenters, and builders, and masons, and to buy timber and hewn stone to repair the house.

Either hewed or cut out of the quarries, or to be hewed and fitted to the building.

faithfully. Verbs signifying the being of a thing are oft put for the manifestation of it.

8 ¶ And Hilkiah the high priest said unto Shaphan the scribe, ¹I have found the book of the law in the house of the LORD. And Hilkiah gave the book to Shaphan, and he read it.

The book of the law; that original book of the law of the Lord, given or written by the hand of Moses, as it is expressed, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 14, which by God's command was put beside the ark, Deut. xxxi. 26, and probably taken from thence and hid, by the care of some godly priest, when some of the idolatrous kings of Judah persecuted the true religion, and defaced the temple, and (which the Jewish writers affirm) burnt all the copies of God's law which they could find, and now found among the rubbish, or in some secret place.

9 And Shaphan the scribe came to the king, and brought the king word again, and said, Thy servants have †gathered the money that was found in the house, and have delivered it into the hand of them that do the work, that have the oversight of the house of the LORD.

10 And Shaphan the scribe shewed the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath delivered me a book. And Shaphan read it before the king.

11 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, that he rent his clothes.

The words of the book of the law, i. e. the dreadful comminations against them for the sins still reigning among the people. Quest. Did Josiah never see and read a copy of this book before this time? If he did not, how could he do so much towards the reformation of religion, as he did before? if he did, why was he not sooner convinced and humbled by it? Answ. If Josiah had not yet seen a copy of this book, (which is not impossible), yet there was so much of the law left in the minds and memories of many of the people, as might easily persuade and direct him to all that he did till this time; or if Josiah had seen and read it before, which seems more probable, yet the great reverence which he justly bore to the original book, and the strange, and remarkable, and seasonable finding of it, had very much awakened and quickened him to a more serious and diligent reading, and attentive consideration, of all the passages contained in it, than he used before.

12 And the king commanded Hilkiah the priest, and Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and ^kAchbor the son of †Michaiah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asahiah a servant of the king's, saying,

A servant of the king's, who most constantly waited upon the king's person; otherwise all of them were the king's servants.

13 Go ye, enquire of the LORD for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found: for great is ^lthe wrath of the LORD that is kindled against us, because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us.

Inquire of the Lord; either what he intends to do with us, or what we shall do to him, to appease his wrath. Concerning the words of this book; whether the curses here threatened must come upon us without remedy, or whether there be hope in Israel concerning the prevention of them.

14 So Hilkiah the priest, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Asahiah, went unto Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of ^mTikvah, the son of †Harhas, keeper of the †wardrobe; (now she dwelt in Jerusalem †in the college;) and they communed with her.

Unto Huldah the prophetess; for we read of women prophetesses, both in the Old and New Testament; as Miriam, Exod. xv. 20, Deborah, Judg. iv. 4, Hannah, 1 Sam. ii., Elisabeth, and the blessed Virgin, Luke i., and Philip's daughters, Acts xxi. 9. Quest. But why did he send to this woman, and not rather to Zephaniah, or Jeremiah, who were prophets in Josiah's days? Answ. Either, first, Because the king's earnest affection in this business required great haste; and she was in Jerusalem, which is therefore noted in the following part of the verse, when Jeremiah might at this time be at Anathoth, or in some more remote part of the kingdom; and the like may be said of Zephaniah, who also might not be a prophet at this time, though he was afterward, in the days of Josiah, which is all that is affirmed of him, Zeph. i. 1. Or, 2. Because the king or his courtiers had longer and greater experience of the eminency of her prophetic gifts than of Jeremiah's, who began not to prophesy till the thirteenth year of Josiah, Jer. i. 2; and being well assured of her fidelity in delivering the mind and counsel of God to those that inquired of her, they rightly concluded that it was much more considerable what message God sent, than by whom it was conveyed to them. In the college; where the sons of the prophets, or others who devoted themselves to the study of God's word, used to meet and discourse of the things of God, and receive the instructions of their teachers. Others both ancient and modern render it, in another or the second part, to wit, of the city, i. e. in the suburbs, which also were fortified and walled about by Hezekiah, 2 Chron. xxxii. 5.

15 ¶ And she said unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Tell the man that sent you to me,

16 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, ⁿI will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the words of the book which the king of Judah hath read:

17 ^oBecause they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be kindled against this place, and shall not be quenched.

The works of their hands; gods made with hands. This she adds to aggravate their folly and contempt of God, in preferring such vain and idle things before him.

18 But to ^pthe king of Judah which sent you to enquire of the LORD, thus shall ye say to him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, As touching the words which thou hast heard;

19 Because thine ^qheart was tender, and thou hast ^rhumbled thyself before the LORD, when thou heardest what I spake against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, that they should become ^sa desolation and ^ta curse, and hast rent thy clothes, and wept before me; I also have heard thee, saith the LORD.

20 Behold therefore, I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou ^ushalt be gathered into thy grave in peace; and thine eyes shall not see all the evil which I will bring upon this place. And they brought the king word again.

In peace, i. e. in a time of public peace, and the tranquillity of thy kingdom; or so as thou shalt not see all the evil which I will bring upon this place, as the following + Heb. from small were made great. b ch. 22. 3.

The prophets; either Jeremiah, Zephaniah, Urijah; or the sons or disciples of the prophets. He read; he caused to be read.

c ch. 11. 14, 17.

3 ¶ And the king ^c stood by a pillar, and made a covenant before the LORD, to walk after the LORD, and to keep his commandments and his testimonies and his statutes with all their heart and all their soul, to perform the words of this covenant that were written in this book. And all the people stood to the covenant.

By the pillar; of which see on chap. xi. 14; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 31. To the covenant, to wit, as to the taking of it; they declared their consent to it, and their concurrence with the king in that act, which possibly they did by standing upright, as the king himself stood when he took it.

4 And the king commanded Hilkiah the high priest, and the priests of the second order, and the keepers of the door, to bring forth out of the temple of the LORD all the vessels that were made for Baal, and for ^d the grove, and for all the host of heaven: and he burned them without Jerusalem in the fields of Kidron, and carried the ashes of them unto Beth-el.

d ch. 21. 3, 7.

The priests of the second order; either those two who were next in degree to the high priest, and in case of his sickness were to manage his work; of whom see 2 Sam. viii. 17; or the heads of the twenty-four courses which David had appointed, 1 Chron. xxiv. The keepers of the door: see above on chap. xxii. 4. To bring forth, i. e. to take care that they should be brought forth. For the grove, i. e. the image of the grove; of which see on chap. xxi. 7; it being most frequent to call images by the names of the persons or things which they represent. In the fields of Kidron, i. e. adjoining to the brook of Kidron. Carried the ashes of them unto Beth-el; partly to show his abhorrence of them, and that he would not give the ashes of them a place in his kingdom; and partly to pollute and disgrace that place which had been the chief seat and throne of idolatry.

5 And he † put down † the idolatrous priests, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incense in the high places in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem; them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the † planets, and to ^e all the host of heaven.

† Or, twelve signs, or constellations. e ch. 21. 3.

The idolatrous priests, Heb: the chemarim; which were ministers of idols, Hos. x. 5, distinct from the priests, Zeph. i. 4. Possibly they were the highest rank of priests, because they are here employed in the highest work, which was to burn incense. Baal; a particular god, of greatest esteem with them, so called; though elsewhere the name of Baal is common to all false gods.

6 And he brought out the ^f grove from the house of the LORD, without Jerusalem, unto the brook Kidron, and burned it small to powder, and cast the powder thereof upon ^g the graves of the children of the people.

f ch. 21. 7.

g 2 Chron. 34. 4.

The grove: see on ver. 4. Of the children of the people, i. e. of the common people, whose graves were made together in some common place, which was generally accounted very impure and contemptible, and therefore a fit place for this filth to be thrown into. Or, of bastards, who are oft called the children of the people; who as they had this brand of infamy laid upon them, that they might not enter into the congregation of the Lord, Deut. xxiii. 2; so possibly they were exposed to this further ignominy, to be buried in a peculiar, and in the most infamous place. Or rather, as it is in the Hebrew, of that people, i. e. those idolatrous people, as it is explained, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4, and here sufficiently implied in this and the foregoing verse.

7 And he brake down the houses ^h of the sodomites, that were by the house of the LORD, ⁱ where the women wove † hangings for the grove.

h 1 Kings 14. 24. & 15. 12.

i Ezek. 16. 16. † Heb. houses.

The houses of the sodomites; wherein some males prostituted their bodies to the lusts of others; which abominable practice was both a punishment of idolatry, Rom. i. 23, 24, 27, and a part of idol worship, this being done to the honour of some of their idols, and by the appointment and instigation of those impure and diabolical spirits which were worshipped in their idols. See 1 Kings xiv. 24; xv. 12; xxii. 46. Hangings, or curtains, either to draw before the idol or idols which were worshipped in the grove, to preserve them from defilement, or to gain more reverence for them; or which were set up in the grove, that the abominable filthiness last mentioned might be committed within them. Or, garments for the service of the grove, for the idols or the priests belonging to them. Heb. houses, i. e. either little chapels made of woven work, like those which were made of silver, Acts xix. 24; within which there were some representations of their grove idols; or rather, tents made of those curtains for the use above mentioned. For the grove, or, for Asherah, an idol so called, as was noted before.

8 And he brought all the priests out of the cities of Judah, and defiled the high places where the priests had burned incense, from ^k Geba to Beer-sheba, and brake down the high places of the gates that were in the entering in of the gate of Joshua the governor of the city, which were on a man's left hand at the gate of the city.

k 1 Kings 15. 22.

All the priests, to wit, belonging to the high places here following, whether such as worshipped idols, or rather, such as worshipped God in those forbidden places, Deut. xii. 11, as may be gathered from the following verse. Defiled the high places, by burning dead men's bones upon them, as ver. 14, 16, 20, or by putting them to some other unclean or filthy use. From Geba; the northern border of the kingdom of Judah; of which see Josh. xviii. 24; 1 Kings xv. 22. To Beer-sheba, which was the southern border; see Gen. xxi. 31; Judg. xx. 1; i. e. from one end to the other. The high places of the gates; which were erected by the gates of the city here mentioned, unto the honour of their tutelary gods, which after the manner of the heathen they owned for the protectors of their city and habitations. In the entering in of the gate of Joshua the governor of the city: this circumstance is noted to show Josiah's great zeal and impartiality, in rooting out all monuments of idolatry, without any respect unto those great persons who were concerned in them, or affected to them.

1 See Ezek. 44. 10.—14.

m 1 Sam. 2. 36.

9 ¹Nevertheless the priests of the high places came not up to the altar of the LORD in Jerusalem, ^mbut they did eat of the unleavened bread among their brethren.

The priests of the high places, which worshipped the true God there. Came not up to the altar of the Lord in Jerusalem, i. e. were not suffered to come thither to the exercise of their priestly function; as a just punishment for the corruption of God's worship, and the transgression of so plain and positive a law of God, Deut. xii. 11, which was much worse in them, who had more knowledge to discern God's mind therein, and more obligations to observe it, and to engage others to the observation of it. Compare Ezek. xlv. 10. Of the unleavened bread, i. e. of the meat-offerings allotted to the priests, wherein there was to be no leaven, Lev. ii. 4, 5, 10, 11; and consequently of other provisions belonging to the priests, which by a synecdoche are contained under this one kind. Thus their spiritual blemish puts them into the very same state which corporal blemishes brought them, Lev. xxi. 17, &c. And thus he mitigates their punishment; he shuts them out from spiritual services, but allows them natural and necessary provisions.

11 And he took away the horses that the kings of Judah had given to the sun, at the entering in of the house of the LORD, by the chamber of Nathan-melech the ^lchamberlain, which was in the suburbs, and burned the chariots of the sun with fire.

The horses; either, 1. The carved or graven horses, to which were adjoined a graven chariot, in which there might be the picture of the sun, which the heathens used to represent in this manner. Or rather, 2. Living horses; for, 1. Such the eastern nations used to consecrate to the sun, to signify the swiftness of his motion. 2. These horses are mentioned apart from the chariots, and are said to be given to the sun, which is not said of the chariots; and to be taken away, when the chariots were burnt, &c.; and a certain place is here allotted to the horses, not to the chariots. To the sun; either to be sacrificed to the sun; or to draw those chariots in which the kings, or some other in their stead, and by their appointment, went forth every morning to worship the rising sun; for both these were the customs of the Armenians and Persians, as Xenophon testifies. At the entering in of the house of the Lord, i. e. by the gate of the outward court of the temple; for the courts are oft contained under the name of the house or temple. The chamberlain, or officer, to whom the care of these horses was committed. In the suburbs; either, 1. Of the city of David; or rather, of the temple; in certain outward buildings belonging to the temple, and the uses thereof. See Ezek. xlv. 2. Heb. in Parvarim; a place near the temple, called also Parbar, 1 Chron. xxvi. 18, though it be not now known either where it was, or why it was so called. The chariots of the sun; which were made for the honour and worship of the sun, as was before expressed.

On the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz, i. e. upon the roof of the king's house. They were so mad upon their idols, that they were not content with all their public high places and altars, but made others upon their house-tops, for the worship of the heavenly bodies. See Jer. xix. 13; Zeph. i. 5. Which Manasseh had made. Quest. How could this be, when Manasseh had taken them away before, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 15? Answe. Either these altars were not so fully destroyed as they should have been, the foundations of them being left through the neglect of the officers appointed to do that work, upon which Amon built his new altars; or if they were wholly rooted out, Amon's new altars are called by his father's name, because they were built by his example, and in the very same place where his father's altars were; as the wells which Isaac digged in the same place where Abraham had digged them before, were therefor called by their ancient names, Gen. xxvi. 18. See more on the next verse. In the two courts; the priests' and the people's. See chap. xxi. 5. Cast the dust of them into the brook Kidron; partly to show his detestation of them, and partly to abolish the very remembrance of them as far as he could.

13 And the high places that were before Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of ^tthe mount of corruption, which ^uSolomon the king of Israel had builded for Ashtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile.

t That is, the mount of Olives. s 1 Kings 11. 7.

The mount of corruption, i. e. the Mount of Olives, 1 Kings xi. 7, here called the mount of corruption, for the gross idolatry there practised, which is oft expressed by the name of corruption. See Exod. xxxii. 7; Deut. xxxii. 5. In the Hebrew is an elegant allusion between miscah, anointing, and masceith, corruption, as there is between Beth-el and Beth-aven, Hos. iv. 15. Which Solomon had builded; not the same individual altars; which doubtless either Solomon upon his repentance, or some other of Josiah's godly predecessors, had taken away long before this time; but other altars built by Manasseh or Amon, which because erected by Solomon's example, and for the same use, and in the same place, are called by his name; this brand being left by the Holy Ghost upon his name and memory, as a just punishment of that abominable practice, and a mean to deter others from the like. For Ashtoreth; of which and the rest see on 1 Kings xi. 5—7. The abomination, i. e. the idol, so called, because it was abominable, and made them abominable to God.

14 And he ^vbrake in pieces the ^wimages, and cut down the groves, and filled their places with the bones of men.

15 ¶ Moreover the altar that was at Beth-el, and the high place ^xwhich Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, had made, both that altar and the high place he brake down, and burned the high place, and stamped it small to powder, and burned the grove.

x 1 Kings 12. 29, 33.

The altar that was at Beth-el. Quest. How could he rightly do this, seeing Beth-el was a part of the kingdom of Israel, not of Judah? Answe. Either, first, This city was now under the kingdom of Judah, to which it was added by Abijah long since, 2 Chron. xiii. 19. Or, secondly, He did this by virtue of that ancient right which David and his posterity had to the kingdom of Israel, which though suspended for a time by God's grant of the ten tribes to Jeroboam, and the succeeding kings of Israel; yet these being all extinct, it might seem to return to him, at least so far as to pluck up idolatry out of the land of Israel, as he had opportunity, and especially out of those parts of it which bordered upon Judah. Or, thirdly, The king of Babylon having engaged in a war with the Assyrian, Hezekiah's great enemy, and having thereupon occasion for Hezekiah's friendship, did (as some suppose) enlarge his dominion, and give him some power over the kingdom of Israel, at least as to matters of religion; which may seem not improbable from 2 Chron. xxx. 1—6. And the same power seems to have been continued, and some kind of league made, between the king of Babylon and Manasseh, (who thereupon was restored to his kingdom, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 13,) and after him Josiah, who therefore was so zealous in his quarrel against the king of Egypt, 2 Chron. xxxv. 20, &c. Or, fourthly, He did it in pursuance of God's prediction concerning this action, 1 Kings xiii. 2, which (in a matter so good, and so agreeable to God's will and word, as the extirpation of idolatry unquestionably was) had the force of a warrant or command upon him to do it, as God's prediction of the conversion of the Gentiles by the Messias was a command to his apostles to preach to them, Acts xiii. 47. The high place; which seems to have been some little temple or house erected for that worship, or for the priests attending upon it.

16 And as Josiah turned himself, he spied the sepulchres that were there in the mount, and sent, and took the bones out of the sepulchres, and burned them upon the altar, and polluted it, according to the word of the LORD which the man of God proclaimed, who proclaimed these words.

As Josiah turned himself: Josiah's care and zeal was so great, that he would not trust his officers with these things, but would see them done with his own eyes. Which the man of God proclaimed three hundred years before it was done.

17 Then he said, What title is that that I see? And the men of the city told him, It is the sepulchre of the man of God, which came from Judah, and proclaimed these things that thou hast done against the altar of Beth-el.

What title is that that I see? It was the manner then, as now it is, to set up little pillars or stones by or upon the graves of the higher sort of men, upon which the name of the person, and some remarkable passages relating to him, were engraven.

18 And he said, Let him alone; let no man move his bones. So they let his bones alone, with the bones of the prophet that came out of Samaria.

Which were now mixed together. Samaria; the place of his birth or former abode, though now he were in Beth-el, 1 Kings xiii. 11.

19 And all the houses also of the high places that were in the cities of Samaria, which the kings of Israel had made to provoke the LORD to anger, Josiah took away, and did to them according to all the acts that he had done in Beth-el.

By what authority he did this, see on ver. 15.

20 And he slew all the priests of the high places that were there upon the altars, and burned men's bones upon them, and returned to Jerusalem.

The priests of the high places; either, 1. The priests which Jeroboam had made of the meanest of the people, whom he slew, both for their presumptuous usurpation of that sacred office, which of itself was punishable with death by God's law, Numb. iii. 10, and for their idolatry. Or rather, 2. The priests of Baalim; by comparing this verse with the former, where speaking of the same high places, he doth not say, which Jeroboam made, as is usual when he speaks of the high places of the calves; but, which the other kings of Israel made, who were divers of them worshippers of Baal; and by considering the parallel place, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4, where it is said, they brake down the altars of Baalim, &c. By this relation it appears, and from the nature of the thing, and common practice in like cases, it is more than probable, that after the departure of the king of Assyria, divers of the Israelites who had retired to other parts, and kept themselves out of the conqueror's hands, returned together with their priests to their own land, and to their old trade of worshipping idols; to whom, peradventure, they ascribed this their deliverance from that judgment which Jehovah had brought upon them. That were there upon the altars; according to that famous prophecy, 1 Kings xiii. 1, 2.

21 ¶ And the king commanded all the people, saying, Keep the passover unto the LORD your God, as it is written in the book of this covenant.

Keep the passover: having abolished false worship, he now endeavours to set up the true worship of the true God. In this book of the covenant; in this book which I have found; wherein is contained the covenant made between God and Israel, and the terms of it.

22 Surely there was not holden such a passover from the days of the judges that judged Israel, nor in all the days of the kings of Israel, nor of the kings of Judah;

Such a passover, i. e. celebrated with such solemn care, and great preparation, and numerous sacrifices. 2 Chron. xxxv. 7—9, and universal joy of all good men; which was much the greater, because of their remembrance of the former wicked and miserable times under Manasseh and Amon; and the good hopes they now had of the happy establishment of their nation, and the true religion; and of the prevention of God's judgments denounced against them. From the days of the judges, or, from the days of Samuel, the last of the judges, as it is expressed, 2 Chron. xxxv. 18. None of the kings had taken such care to prepare themselves, the priests, and people, and accurately to observe all the rites, and diligently to purge out all uncleanness, and to renew their covenant with God, so solemnly as Josiah now did.

23 But in the eighteenth year of king Josiah, wherein this passover was holden to the LORD in Jerusalem.

24 ¶ Moreover the workers with familiar spirits, and the wizards, and the images, and the idols, and all the abominations that were spied in the land of Judah and in Jerusalem, did Josiah put away, that he might perform the words of the law which were written in the book that Hilkiah the priest found in the house of the LORD.

The wizards; of which see on Lev. xix. 31; xx. 27; Numb. xxii. 5; Deut. xviii. 11. The images, and the idols, and all the abominations; three words noting the same thing, to show that all the instruments and monuments of idolatry were destroyed, as God had commanded. That were spied, i. e. all that were discovered; not only such as were in the place and state of worship, but such as their priests or zealots had removed, and endeavoured to hide and secure.

25 And like unto him was there no king before him, that turned to the LORD with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses; neither after him arose there any like him.

Like unto him there was no king before him, to wit, for his diligent study in God's law, and his exact care, and unwearied industry, and fervent zeal, in rooting out of idolaters, and all kinds and appearances of idolatry, not only in Judah, but in Israel also; and in the establishment of the true religion in all his dominions, and in the conforming of his own life, and his people's too, (as far as he could,) to the holy law of God; though Hezekiah might excel him in some other particulars; of whom therefore the like is said above, chap. xviii. 5.

26 ¶ Notwithstanding the LORD turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled against Judah, because of all the provocations that Manasseh had provoked him withal.

The Lord turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath; because though the king was most hearty in his repentance, and acceptable to God, as we said before, and therefore the judgment was delayed for his time; yet the people were generally corrupt, and secretly averse from Josiah's pious and excellent reformation, and inclined to their old lusts and idols; as appears from the complaints of the prophets, especially Jeremiah and Zephaniah, against them; and by the following history, wherein we see that as soon as ever Josiah was gone, his children, and the princes, and the people suddenly and greedily returned to their former abominations. Because of all the provocations that Manasseh had provoked him withal: the sins of Manasseh, and of the men of his generation, who complied and concurred with him in his idolatrous and cruel practices, chap. xxiv. 3, 4, are justly punished in this generation; partly, because of God's sovereign right of punishing sinners (such as these unquestionably were) when and upon what occasion he sees fit; partly, because of that public warning and declaration of God, that he would visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children; and principally, because these men had never sincerely repented of their own nor of their fathers' sins, but their hearts still hankered after them; which, though not yet seen by men, was manifest to God, who therefore pronounced this terrible sentence against them.

27 And the LORD said, I will remove Judah also out of my sight, as I have removed Israel, and will cast off this city Jerusalem which I have chosen, and the house of which I said, My name shall be there.

To wit, upon the conditions in sundry places expressed, which they broke, and therefore God justly made them to know his breach of promise, as he threatens, Numb. xiv. 34.

28 Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

29 ¶ In his days Pharaoh-nechoh king of Egypt went up against the king of Assyria to the river Euphrates: and king Josiah went against him; and he slew him at Megiddo, when he had seen him.

Pharaoh-nechoh, called Necos by Herodotus, who makes mention of this fight; wherein, as he saith, Necos conquered the Syrians in Magdalo. The king of Assyria, i. e. the king of Babylon, who having formerly rebelled against the Assyrian his lord, had now conquered him; as appears by the course of the sacred, and the concurrence of profane history; and therefore is here and elsewhere called the Assyrian, and the king of Assyria, because now he was the head of that empire. To the river Euphrates, i. e. against Carchemish by Euphrates, as it is expressed, 2 Chron. xxxv. 20, which the Assyrian had taken from the Syrians, Isa. x. 9, Pharaoh's confederates, who therefore sendeth forces against the Assyrian, that he might both help them, and secure himself. Josiah went against him; either to defend his own country from Pharaoh's incursions; or to assist the king of Babylon, with whom he seems to have been in league, as was noted before. He slew him, i. e. gave him his death's wound there, though he died not till he came to Jerusalem, 2 Chron. xxxv. 23, 24. When he had seen him, i. e. when he fought with him, or in the first onset. Thus fighting is called a looking in the face, 2 Kings xiv. 8.

30 ¶ And his servants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo, and brought him to Jerusalem, and buried him in his own sepulchre. And the people of the land took Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his father's stead.

Dead, i. e. mortally wounded, as in the former verse; and as we commonly say of a sick man past hopes of recovery, that he is a dead man; compare Gen. xx. 3. Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, who was younger than Jehoikim, by comparing ver. 31 with 36, yet preferred by the people before the elder brother; either because Jehoikim refused the kingdom for fear of Pharaoh, whom he knew he should hereby provoke; or because Jehoahaz was the more stout and warlike prince; whence he is called a lion, Ezek. xix. 3, though indeed he showed his courage more against his people than his enemies; but they judged that he was most able and willing to defend them against the conquering army. Anointed him; as they used to do in such extraordinary cases, because this was a troublesome time, and he was not the right heir to the crown, and therefore needed this solemn rite of confirmation, which Solomon had in the same circumstances.

31 ¶ Jehoahaz was twenty and three years old when he began to reign; and he reigned three months in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

32 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his fathers had done.

i. e. His grandparents, Manasseh and Amon. He restored that idolatry which his father had destroyed, partly to gratify the generality of the people, who had made him king, and who were inclined to their old superstitions even in Josiah's time, as was observed before, though restrained from the outward acts by fear; and partly to sweeten the king of Egypt, who possibly was a zealous idolater, by his compliance with him in the worship of idols.

33 And Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bands at Riblah in the land of Hamath, that he might not reign in Jerusalem; and put the land to a tribute of an hundred talents of silver, and a talent of gold.

Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bands; either because he presumed to take the kingdom without his leave and consent; or because he renewed the war against Pharaoh, as some affirm, and by him was conquered and taken prisoner. Riblah; an eminent city in Syria; of which see Numb. xxxiv. 11; 2 Kings xxv. 6; where Pharaoh now was to finish or make good his conquests, whither Jehoahaz was carried to receive his sentence. That he might not reign; or, because he had reigned, i. e. taken the kingdom without right, and without his leave. Or, according to the other reading, in the beginning of his reign; the word reigning being commonly used for beginning to reign; when he was scarce warm in his throne. A tribute, to wit, a yearly tribute, whereby they should acknowledge him to be their superior; and for which he would be their protector when they needed his help.

34 And Pharaoh-nechoh made Eliakim the son of Josiah king in the room of Josiah his father, and turned his name to Jehoikim, and took Jehoahaz away: and he came to Egypt, and died there.

Eliakim the son of Josiah; whom he perceived to be of a more mild and peaceable disposition. Turned his name to Jehoiakim; because the giving of names was accounted an act and sign of dominion; which therefore parents did to their children, and conquerors to their vassals or tributaries. Compare chap. xxiv. 17; Dan. i. 7. Took Jehoahaz away; partly as a punishment for him, and partly that he might give no disturbance to his brother.

^{b ver. 33.} 35 And Jehoiakim gave ^bthe silver and the gold to Pharaoh; but he taxed the land to give the money according to the commandment of Pharaoh: he exacted the silver and the gold of the people of the land, of every one according to his taxation, to give it unto Pharaoh-nechoh.

^{610.} 36 ¶ ^cJehoiakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah.

When he began to reign; either, 1. When he began to reign alone, and with full power, or after Jehoahaz's death; till which the people would not disown him whom they had anointed king, which was esteemed a great tie, 2 Sam. xix. 10; nor own or accept Jehoiakim as their king, but only as his brother's viceroy, though Pharaoh had by violence forced him upon them. And so Jehoahaz might be his elder brother, and the same who is called Johanan, and is first mentioned, as the eldest son, 1 Chron. iii. 15, though he may be placed first not in regard of his birth, but of his dignity, the crown being first put upon his head. Or, 2. When he was first set up by Pharaoh; and so this was the elder brother, though by popular violence put by his right: see on ver. 30.

37 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his fathers had done.

By idolatry, the oppression of his people, and the persecution of the prophets, and other good men, Jer. xxvi. 21; Ezek. xix. 5-7.

CHAP. XXIV.

Jehoiakim, first subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, rebelleth against him to his own ruin: Jehoiachin his son is king in his stead, 1-6. His evil reign: Jerusalem spoiled and made captive by the king of Babylon, 8-16. He maketh Zedekiah king: he reigneth ill, unto the utter destruction of Judah, 17-20.

^{607.} IN ^ahis days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up, and Jehoiakim became his servant three years: then he turned and rebelled against him.

In his days, i. e. in Jehoiakim's reign, in the end of his third year, Dan. i. 1, or the beginning of his fourth, Jer. xxv. 1. Nebuchadnezzar; the son of Nabopolassar, who quite subdued the Assyrian, first his lord, and then his competitor, and made himself absolute monarch of all those parts of the world. Came up, to wit, against Jehoiakim, as the friend and confederate of Pharaoh, whose forces he had lately conquered, Jer. xlvi. 2. He turned and rebelled against him, by the instigation of the Egyptian, who threatened him if he did not rebel, and promised him his most assistance if he did.

^{b Ezek. 19. 9.} 2 ^bAnd the LORD sent against him bands of the Chaldees, and bands of the Syrians, and bands of the Moabites, and bands of the children of Ammon, and sent them against Judah to destroy it, ^caccording to the word of the LORD, which he spake [†]by his servants the prophets.

Nebuchadnezzar's army was made up of several nations, who were willing to fight under the banner of such a puissant and victorious emperor.

3 Surely at the commandment of the LORD came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his sight, ^dfor the sins of Manasseh, according to all that he did;

For the sins of Manasseh; properly and directly for their own sins, and occasionally for the sins of Manasseh, which had never been charged upon them, if they had not made them their own by their impenitency for them, and repetition of them.

4 ^eAnd also for the innocent blood that he shed: for he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood; which the LORD would not pardon.

For the innocent blood, to wit, of those prophets and saints who either reproved or would not comply with his idolatrous worship.

5 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

6 ^fSo Jehoiakim slept with his fathers: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

Jehoiachin, called also Jeconiah, 1 Chron. iii. 16, (as Jehoiakim also was, by comparing this with Matt. i. 11,) and, in way of contempt, Coniah, Jer. xxii. 24.

7 And ^gthe king of Egypt came not again any more out of his land: for ^hthe king of Babylon had taken from the river of Egypt unto the river Euphrates all that pertained to the king of Egypt.

The king of Egypt came not again, to wit, in this king's days; nor until Zedekiah's time, Jer. xxxvii. 6, 7; nor to any purpose. He could not now come out to protect the king of Judah, being scarce able to defend his own kingdom.

8 ¶ ⁱJehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem three months. And his mother's name was Nehushta, the daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem.

Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign. Object. He was then but eight years old, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. Ans. 1. Both are true; in his eighth year he began to reign with his father, who made him king with him, as divers other kings of Israel and Judah had done in the like times of trouble; and in his eighteenth year he reigned alone. 2. He is called a son of eight years when he began to reign, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, because this was the eighth year, not of his age, but of the Babylonish captivity, or bondage; under which both he and his father had been just so long; for it began in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, as it is affirmed Jer. xxv. 1, and continued all his reign, which lasted eleven years, chap. xxxiii. 36; and so the first year of Jehoiachin was precisely the eighth year of that captivity. And this is certain, that the years of kings mentioned in Scripture are not always accounted from the beginning of their age, but from some other remarkable time or thing: thus Saul, when at man's estate, is called the son of one year, 1 Sam. xiii. 1. of which see my notes there; and Ahaziah (whose father lived only forty years, 2 Chron. xxi. 20) is called a son of forty and two years when he began to reign, 2 Chron. xxii. 2, because that was the forty and second year of the reign of Omri's family, as most think. And therefore it cannot seem strange if the years of this king be computed, not from his birth, but from the beginning of so great and famous a change of the Jewish affairs, as this captivity made; this being the usual way of the Romans and Greeks, and other more ancient and eastern nations, to compute the times from the great changes and revolutions happening among them. And that this was the practice of the Jews in the computation of these very times, is evident from the use of it in the Prophecy of Ezekiel, chap. i. 2, which was the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity; and chap. xxxiii. 21, in the twelfth year of our captivity; and chap. xl. 1, in the twenty-fifth year of our captivity. 3. To all this might be added, that some here acknowledge an error of the scribe, and affirm, that in the first and best copies, in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, it was not eight, but eighteen; which they gather from hence, because those two ancient and venerable translators, the Syriac and Arabic, read there, as it is here, was eighteen years old; which, they say, they would never have presumed to do, if they had not so read it in those Hebrew copies, out of which they drew their translation, or in some of them.

He reigned in Jerusalem three months, and ten days, which are added, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. But such small sums are frequently omitted in great numbers. See on Gen. xv. 13; 1 Kings xvi. 8.

9 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father had done.

10 ¶ At that time the servants of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up against Jerusalem, and the city † was besieged.

Either, 1. Because the people had made Jehoiachin king without his consent. Or, 2. Because he had some notice, or at least a suspicion, of his intentions to rebel against him, and to join with Egypt against him, as Zedekiah his successor did. But whatsoever was the second and immediate cause of it, the chief cause was God's commandment, or the direction of his providence, as it was said, ver. 3.

11 And Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came against the city, and his servants did besiege it.

12 † And Jehoiachin the king of Judah went out to the king of Babylon, he, and his mother, and his servants, and his princes, and his † officers: ^m and the king of Babylon ⁿ took him ^o in the eighth year of his reign.

Went out to the king of Babylon, i. e. yielded up himself and the city into his hands; and this by the counsel of Jeremiah, and to his own good. Of his reign, i. e. of Nebuchadnezzar's reign; as appears by comparing this with chap. xxv. 8, and because Jehoiachin reigned not half a year.

13 † And he carried out thence all the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house, and ^a cut in pieces all the vessels of gold which Solomon king of Israel had made in the temple of the LORD, ^r as the LORD had said.

Cut in pieces; or rather, took away, as this word elsewhere signifies; or cut off, to wit, from the temple. For why should they cut in pieces those vessels which might conveniently be carried away? And that they were not cut in pieces, but reserved whole, is manifest from Ezra i. 7; Dan. v. 2, 3. All the vessels of gold, i. e. the most and choicest of them, by comparing this with chap. xxv. 14, 15. Which Solomon king of Israel had made; so he expresseth it, either, first, Because these vessels were made by the godly kings of Judah, instead of those which Solomon made, and so they go by his name; as the ship of the Argonauts was still reputed the same ship, though it was from time to time recruited with new materials, until nothing of the old was left. Or, secondly, Because though the city and temple had been rifled more than once, both by the kings of Egypt and Israel, and by the wicked kings of Judah, yet these golden vessels were preserved from them, either by the care of the priests, who hid them out of the way; or by the clemency of the conquerors, and the reverence which they bore to such sacred instruments; or by the special providence of God disposing their hearts to leave them. Or if they had been taken away by any of these kings, they might afterwards be recovered by the entreaty or at the cost of the godly kings of Judah.

14 And ^s he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, ^t even ten thousand captives, and ^u all the craftsmen and smiths:

none remained, save ^x the poorest sort of the people of the land.

All Jerusalem, i. e. the inhabitants of Jerusalem; not simply all, but the best and most considerable part, as the following words explain and restrain it. Ten thousand captives; which are more particularly reckoned up, ver. 16, where there are seven thousand mighty men, and a thousand smiths; and those mentioned ver. 15 make up the other two thousand. All the craftsmen and smiths; which might furnish them with new arms, and thereby give him fresh trouble.

15 And ^y he carried away Jehoiachin to Babylon, and the king's mother, and the king's wives, and his † officers, and the mighty of the land, those carried he into captivity from Jerusalem to Babylon.

16 And ^z all the men of might, even seven thousand, and craftsmen and smiths a thousand, all that were strong and apt for war, even them the king of Babylon brought captive to Babylon.

17 ¶ And ^a the king of Babylon made Mattaniah ^b his father's brother king in his stead, and ^c changed his name to Zedekiah.

That he might admonish him of (what this name signifies) the justice of God, which had so severely punished Jehoiachin for his rebellion; and would no less certainly overtake him, if he should be guilty of the same rebellion and perfidiousness of which his predecessor was guilty.

18 ^d Zedekiah was twenty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was ^e Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

19 † And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

20 For through the anger of the LORD it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, until he had cast them out from his presence, ^f that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

Thus the people's sins were the true cause why God gave them wicked kings, whom he suffered to do wickedly, that they might bring the long deserved and threatened punishments upon themselves and their people.

CHAP. XXV.

Jerusalem is besieged: Zedekiah taken; his sons slain; and his eyes put out, 1—7. Nebuzar-adan burneth Jerusalem and the temple; breaketh down the wall of the city; carrieth the remnant, except a few poor labourers, into captivity, and much treasure, 8—17; slayeth the nobles at Riblah, 18—21. Gedaliah is made governor of Judah: he is slain: the rest flee into Egypt, 22—26. Evil-merodach advanceth Jehoiachin in his court, 27—30.

AND it came to pass ^g in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came, he, and all his host, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it; and they built forts against it round about.

To chastise Zedekiah for his rebellion and perjury, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13. They built forts against it round about; partly to keep all supplies of men or provisions from entering into the city; and partly that from thence they might shoot darts, or arrows, or stones into the city. See Jer. lii. 4; Ezek. iv. 2; xvii. 17.

2 And the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

3 And on the ninth ^{day} of the ^{fourth} month the famine prevailed in the city, and there was no bread for the people of the land.

The fourth month; which word is easily understood, by comparing this and the first verse, and Jer. xxxix. 2; lii. 6, where it is expressed. For the people of the land, i. e. for the common sort of people, who flocked thither from all parts, upon the approach of the Babylonian army; but only for the great men and soldiers. See of the grievousness of this famine, Lam. iv. 10; Ezek. v. 10, 12.

4 ¶ And the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled by night by the way of the gate between two walls, which is by the king's garden: (now the Chaldees were against the city round about:) and the king went the way toward the plain.

The city was broken up by the Chaldeans, who broke and entered the gate, Jer. xxxix. 3. The men of war fled; which word is fitly supplied out of the parallel place, Jer. xxxix. 4, or out of the following verb, went away. Between two walls; between the outward and inward wall of the city, by a private way, having the advantage of the darkness of the night, and possibly of some vault under the ground. The king: this word also is necessarily to be understood; partly by its singular, which agrees not with the men of war; and partly out of the next verse, where it is expressed. Toward the plain of Jericho, as it follows.

5 And the army of the Chaldees pursued after the king, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho: and all his army were scattered from him.

6 So they took the king, and brought him up to the king of Babylon to Riblah; and they gave judgment upon him.

To Riblah; of which see above, chap. xxiii. 33, and below, ver. 21, where Nebuchadnezzar staid, that he might both supply the besiegers with more men, and military provisions, as their occasions required; and have an eye to Chaldea, to prevent or suppress any commotions which might happen there in the time of his absence. They gave judgment upon him; the king's officers appointed thereunto examined his cause, and passed the following sentence against him.

7 And they slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon.

Thus two prophecies were fulfilled, which seemed contrary one to the other, that he should go to Babylon, Jer. xxxii. 5; xxxiv. 3, and that he should never see Babylon; which seeming contradiction, because Zedekiah the false prophet could not reconcile, he concluded both were false, and that Jeremiah was a false prophet; and it seems Zedekiah the king might stumble at this difficulty.

8 ¶ And in the fifth month, on the seventh day of the month, which is the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard, a servant of the king of Babylon, unto Jerusalem:

On the seventh day of the month. Quest. How doth this agree with Jer. lii. 12, where he is said to come thither on the tenth day? Ans. Either he came to Jerusalem on the seventh day, and burnt the temple on the tenth day; or this sacred writer speaks of the day of his departure from Riblah towards Jerusalem, and Jeremiah speaks of his coming to Jerusalem, which was about three days' journey from Riblah.

9 And he burnt the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all the houses of Jerusalem, and every great man's house burnt he with fire.

He burnt the house of the Lord, which had now stood about four hundred and fifty years.

10 And all the army of the Chaldees, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down the walls of Jerusalem round about.

11 Now the rest of the people that were left in the city, and the fugitives that fell away to the king of Babylon, with the remnant of the multitude, did Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carry away.

The people that were left in the city, whom neither the sword nor famine had destroyed, who were eight hundred and thirty-two persons, Jer. lii. 29, being members and traders of that city; for it is likely that there were very many more of the country people who were fled thither, who were left with others of their brethren to manure the land, as it here follows. The remnant of the multitude, to wit, of the inhabitants of the country.

12 But the captain of the guard left of the poor of the land to be vinedressers and husbandmen.

13 And the pillars of brass that were in the house of the Lord, and the bases, and the brasen sea that was in the house of the Lord, did the Chaldees break in pieces, and carried the brass of them to Babylon.

The pillars of brass; the carriage whereof to Babylon was foretold, Jer. xxvii. 19, 22.

14 And the pots, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

The shovels; of these and the following words, see on Exod. xxvii.; 1 Kings vi., vii.

15 And the firepans, and the bowls, and such things as were of gold, in gold, and of silver, in silver, the captain of the guard took away.

16 The two pillars, one sea, and the bases which Solomon had made for the house of the Lord; the brass of all these vessels was without weight.

17 The height of the one pillar was eighteen cubits, and the chapter upon it was brass: and the height of the chapter three cubits; and the wreathen work, and pomegranates upon the chapter round about, all of brass: and like unto these had the second pillar with wreathen work.

18 ¶ And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door:

Seraiah the chief priest; the high priest, grandson of that Hilkiah, of whom chap. xxii. 4, and father of Jehozadak, who, as it seems, was taken with his father; and when his father was slain, ver. 21, he was carried away to Babylon, as it is noted, 1 Chron. vi. 14, 15. Zephaniah the second priest; who was the high priest's deputy, when he was hindered from the execution of his office: see on Numb. iii. 32; 2 Sam. viii. 17; 2 Kings xxiii. 4.

19 And out of the city he took an officer that was set over the men of war, and five men of them that were in the king's presence, which were found in the city, and the principal scribe of the host, which mustered the people of the land,

20 And Nebuzar-adan captain of the guard took these, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah :

23 And when all the captains of the armies, they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah governor, there came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan the son of Careah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth the Ne-tophathite, and Jaazaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

The captains of the armies, which escaped away when Zedekiah was taken. See above, ver. 4, 5.

24 And Gedaliah sware to them, and to their men, and said unto them, Fear not to be the servants of the Chaldees : dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon ; and it shall be well with you.

Sware to them, and to their men ; assured them by his promise and oath, that they, doing what he required, should be kept from the evils which they feared. This he might safely swear, because he had not only the king of Babylon's promise and interest too, but also God's promise, for their indemnity, delivered by Jeremiah.

25 But 'it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, came, and ten men with him, and smote Gedaliah, that he died, and the Jews and the Chaldees that were with him at Mizpah.

The seed royal ; and therefore moved with envy, to see so mean a person advanced into their place. See this history more fully described, Jer. xli. Ten men, to wit, ten captains or officers, and under each of them many soldiers ; otherwise the attempt was ridiculous.

26 And all the people, both small and great, and the captains of the armies, arose, and came to Egypt : for they were afraid of the Chaldees.

27 ¶^h And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon in the year that he began to reign did lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of prison ;

On the seven and twentieth day ; or, on the twenty-fifth day, as it is Jer. lii. 31 ; for then the decree was made, which was executed upon the twenty-seventh day.

28 And he spake kindly to him, and set his throne above the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon ;

ⁱ Heb. good things with him.

It seems, though the power of these kings was taken away, yet some honour and respect was given to them, even in the place of their captivity, and to Jehoiachin more than to any of the rest.

29 And changed his prison garments : and he did eat bread continually before him all the days of his life.

30 And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king, a daily rate for every day, all the days of his life.

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES.

THE ARGUMENT.

THESE Books of the CHRONICLES are not the same which are so called, 1 Kings xiv. 19, and elsewhere, (because some passages said to be there mentioned are not found here,) but other books, and written by other persons, and for other ends. Yet this same writer took out of those books such historical passages as were most useful or necessary. They were written after the Babylonish captivity, as appears from 2 Chron. xxxvi. 20, &c., by Ezra ; as may be gathered not only from the same words used in the place now quoted, and in the beginning of that book which goeth under the name of Ezra, but also from some other passages, which we may observe hereafter, and from the exactness and diligence here used in making catalogues of persons and families, which also is used in the Book of Ezra. If one or two passages seem to be of a later date, those were added by some other prophets ; there being some few such additional passages in the Books of Moses. The chief design of these books is, to complete the history of the kings of Judah, and to gather up the fragments of sacred history which were omitted in the Books of Samuel and Kings, and to explain some passages there mentioned, and to give an exact account of the genealogies ; which (though ignorant or inconsiderate persons may think trivial and useless) was a work of great necessity, to preserve the distinction of the tribes and families, that so it might appear that Christ came of that nation, and tribe, and family, of which he was to be born. And this account having been hitherto neglected, is most seasonably mentioned in these books, because this was to be in a manner the last part of the sacred and canonical history of the Old Testament, and therefore the fittest place to record those genealogies, upon which the truth and authority of the New Testament in some sort depends. And whereas many things in these genealogies to us are obscure and doubtful, they were not so to the Hebrews; and all the persons here named were known to them by those very particular and exact genealogies, which they kept in their several families and in public registers; from whence this sacred penman, by the direction of God's Spirit, took those things which were of most importance.

CHAP. I.

Adam's line to Noah, 1—4. Noah's posterity, by Japheth, 5—7; by Ham, 8—16; by Shem to Abraham, 17—27. His posterity, by Ishmael, 28—31; by Keturah, and Isaac, 32—34. His posterity by Esau: the kings and dukes of Edom, 35—54.

^{B. C.} ^{4094, &c.} ADAM, *Sheth, Enosh,
^{a Gen. 4. 25, 26. & 5. 3, 9.}
i. e. Adam begat Sheth; and so in the following particulars. For brevity sake he only mentions their names; but the rest is easily understood out of the former books, and from the nature of the thing; and from some following passages where the sense is completed.

- 2 Kenan, Mahalaleel, Jered,
- 3 Henoch, Methuselah, Lamech,
- 4 Noah, Shem, Ham, and Japheth.

Formerly he mentions only one son, but here he names and treats of Noah's three sons, partly because they were all the founders of the new world, and partly because the accomplishment of Noah's famous prophecy, Gen. ix. 25—27, could not otherwise appear, but by the account of their several posterities.

^{b Gen. 10. 2, &c.} 5 ¶^b The sons of Japheth; Gomer, and Magog, and Madai, and Javan, and Tubal, and Meshech, and Tiras.

^{f Or, Diphath, as it is in some copies.} 6 And the sons of Gomer; Ashchenaz, and ¶ Riphath, and Togarmah.

Riphath, or Diphath; for those two Hebrew letters which answer to our D and R, being very like, are oft confounded and exchanged, as ver. 7, 41, 46, 50.

7 And the sons of Javan; Elishah, and Tarshish, Kittim, and ¶ Dodanim.

^{f Or, Radanim, according to some copies.} 8 ¶^c The sons of Ham; Cush, and Mizraim, Put, and Canaan.

9 And the sons of Cush; Seba, and Havilah, and Sabta, and Raamah, and Sabtecha. And the sons of Raamah; Sheba, and Dedan.

^{d Gen. 10. 8, 13, &c.} 10 And Cush^d begat Nimrod: he began to be mighty upon the earth.

11 And Mizraim begat Ludim, and Anamim, and Lehabim, and Naphtuhim, ^{e Deu. 2. 23.} 12 And Pathrusim, and Casluhim, (of whom came the Philistines,) and *Caphthorim.

Of whom came the Philistines; of which see the notes on Gen. x. 14.

^{f Gen. 10. 15, &c.} 13 And *Canaan begat Zidon his first-born, and Heth, 14 The Jebusite also, and the Amorite, and the Gergashite,

The Jebusite; the people so called. So the names which follow until ver. 17, are not the names of particular persons, but of people or nations. And all these descended from Canaan, though some of them were afterwards extinct or confounded with others of their brethren by cohabitation or mutual marriages, whereby they lost their names; which is the reason why they are no more mentioned, at least under these names.

15 And the Hivite, and the Arkite, and the Sinite,

16 And the Arvadite, and the Zemarite, and the Hamathite.

17 ¶ The sons of *Shem; Elam, and ^{g Gen. 10. 22. & 11. 10.} Asshur, and Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram, and Uz, and Hul, and Gether, and ¶ Meshech. ^{¶ Or, Mash, Gen. 10. 23.}

The sons of Shem; either the name of sons is so taken here as to include grandsons, who are called sons, Gen. xxix. 5; 2 Sam. xix. 21; or, these words, the children of Aram, are understood and inserted before Uz, out of Gen. x. 23, where they are expressed.

18 And Arphaxad begat Shelah, and Shelah begat Eber.

Arphaxad begat Shelah; either immediately, or mediately by his son Cainan, who is expressed, Luke iii. 35, of which, God assisting, I shall speak in its proper place.

19 And unto Eber were born two sons: the name of the one was ¶ Peleg; because ^{¶ That is, Division. Gen. 10. 25.} in his days the earth was divided: and his brother's name was Joktan.

The earth was divided in their languages and habitations; of which see Gen. xi. 7.

20 And ^{h Gen. 10. 26.} ¶ Joktan begat Almodad, and Sheleph, and Hazarmaveth, and Jerah, 21 Hadoram also, and Uzal, and Diklah,

22 And Ebal, and Abimael, and Sheba,

Ebal, or Obal, as it is Gen. x. 28; such proper names being oft differently written, according to the difference of times, and people, and writers.

23 And Ophir, and Havilah, and Jobab.

All these were the sons of Joktan.

24 ¶ⁱ Shem, Arphaxad, Shelah, ^{i Gen. 11. 10, &c. Luke 3. 34, &c.}

Arphaxad: having given a brief and general account of the original of the world, and the people in it, he now returns to a more large and particular account of the genealogy of Shem, from whom the Jews were descended.

25 ^{k Gen. 11. 15.} ¶ Eber, Peleg, Reu,

26 Serug, Nahor, Terah,

27 ¶ Abram; the same is Abraham. ^{l Gen. 17. 5.}

28 The sons of Abraham; ^{m Gen. 21. 2, 3.} ¶ Isaac, and ^{n Gen. 16. 11, 15.} ¶ Ishmael.

29 ¶ These are their generations: The ^{o Gen. 25. 13,—16.} firstborn of Ishmael, Nebaioth; then Kedar, and Adbeel, and Mibsam,

30 Mishma, and Dumah, Massa, ¶ Hadad, and Tema, ^{¶ Or, Hadar, Gen. 25. 15.}

31 Jetur, Naphish, and Kedemah. These are the sons of Ishmael.

32 ¶ Now ^{p Gen. 25. 1, 2.} ¶ the sons of Keturah, Abraham's concubine: she bare Zimran, and Jokshan, and Medan, and Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah. And the sons of Jokshan; Sheba, and Dedan.

33 And the sons of Midian; Ephah, and Epher, and Henoah, and Abida, and Eldaah. All these are the sons of Keturah.

34 And ^{q Gen. 21. 2, 3.} ¶ Abraham begat Isaac. ^{r Gen. 25. 25, 26.} ¶ The sons of Isaac; Esau and Israel.

35 ¶ The sons of *Esau; Eliphaz, Reuel, and Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah. ^{s Gen. 36. 9, 10.}

36 The sons of Eliphaz; Teman, and Omar, ¶ Zephi, and Gatam, Kenaz, and Timna, and Amalek. ^{¶ Or, Zepha Gen. 36. 11.}

Timna: there is another Timna, the concubine of Eli-phaz, Gen. xxxvi. 12, but this was one of his sons, though called by the same name; there being some names common both to men and women in the Hebrew and in other languages.

37 The sons of Reuel; Nahath, Zerah, Shammah, and Mizzah.

† Gen. 36.20. 38 And † the sons of Seir; Lotan, and Shobal, and Zibeon, and Anah, and Dishon, and Esau, and Dishan.

The sons of Seir; one of another nation, prince of the Horims; whose genealogy is here described, because of that affinity which was contracted between his and Esau's posterity; and those who were not united and incorporated with them were destroyed by them. See Deut. ii. 12.

39 And the sons of Lotan; Hori, and † Homan: and Timna was Lotan's sister.

40 The sons of Shobal; † Alian, and Manahath, and Ebal, † Shephi, and Onam. And the sons of Zibeon; Aiah, and Anah.

42 The sons of Ezer; Bilhan, and Zavan, and † Jakan. The sons of Dishan; Uz, and Aran.

43 ¶ Now these are the † kings that reigned in the land of Edom before any king reigned over the children of Israel; Bela the son of Beor: and the name of his city was Dinhabah.

Of this and the following verses, see on Gen. xxxvi. 31, &c., whence this whole relation is taken.

44 And when Bela was dead, Jobab the son of Zerah of Bozrah reigned in his stead.

45 And when Jobab was dead, Husham of the land of the Temanites reigned in his stead.

46 And when Husham was dead, Hadad the son of Bedad, which smote Midian in the field of Moab, reigned in his stead: and the name of his city was Avith.

47 And when Hadad was dead, Samlah of Masrekah reigned in his stead.

The sons of Israel; of Judah by Tamar: the children of Jesse, 1—17. Of Caleb the son of Hezron; of him by the daughter of Machir, 18—24. Of Jerahmeel, 25—33. Of Sheshan, 34—41. Another branch of Caleb's posterity, 42—49. Of Caleb the son of Hur, 50—55.

THESE are the sons of † Israel; † Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun, 2 Dan, Joseph, and Benjamin, Naph-tali, Gad, and Asher.

3 ¶ The sons of † Judah; Er, and Onan, and Shelah: which three were born unto him of the daughter of † Shua the Canaanitess. And † Er, the firstborn of Judah, was evil in the sight of the LORD; and he slew him.

He puts Judah first, because the best part of the right of the first-born, to wit, the dominion, was conferred upon him, Gen. xlix. 8, and because the Messiah was to come out of his loins.

4 And † Tamar his daughter in law bare him Pharez and Zerah. All the sons of Judah were five.

5 The sons of † Pharez; Hezron, and Hamul.

6 And the sons of Zerah; † Zimri, and Ethan, and Heman, and Calcol, and † Dara: five of them in all.

If these be the same who are mentioned as the sons of Mahol, 1 Kings iv. 31, either the same man had two names, Zerah and Mahol, as was usual among the Hebrews; or one of these was their immediate father, and the other their grandfather.

7 And the sons of † Carmi; † Achar, the troubler of Israel, who transgressed in the thing † accursed.

Carmi is here mentioned, because he was the son of Zimri, who is also called Zabdi, Josh. vii. 1. Achar; called Achan, Josh. vii. 1, and here Achar, with a little variation for greater significancy; for Achar signifies a troubler.

8 And the sons of Ethan; Azariah.

9 The sons also of Hezron, that were born unto him; Jerahmeel, and † Ram, and † Chelubai.

10 And Ram † begat Amminadab; and Amminadab † begat Nahshon, † prince of the children of Judah;

11 And Nahshon † begat † Salma, and Salma † begat Boaz, 12 And Boaz † begat Obed, and Obed † begat Jesse,

13 ¶ † Jesse † begat his firstborn Eliab, and Abinadab the second, and † Shimma the third,

Eliab, called also Elihu, 1 Chron. xxvii. 18, unless that was another person, and the word brother be taken more largely for a kinsman, as it is frequently used.

14 Nethaneel the fourth, Raddai the fifth,

15 Ozem the sixth, David the seventh:

For though he had eight sons, 1 Sam. xvi. 10, one of them either died presently after that time, or is neglected for some reason now unknown, as others are. See the notes on Matt. i. 8, 9.

16 Whose sisters were Zeruiah, and Abigail. † And the sons of Zeruiah; Abishai, and Joab, and Asahel, three.

17 And † Abigail bare Amasa: and the father of Amasa was † Jether the Ish-meelite.

The Ishmeelite, by birth or habitation, but by profession an Israelite, 2 Sam. xvii. 25, where see my notes.

18 ¶ And Caleb the son of Hezron † begat children of Azubah his wife, and of Jerioth: her sons are these; Jesher, and Shobab, and Ardon.

Not that Caleb, Numb. xiii. 6, for he was the son of Jephunneh, of whom he speaks, chap. iv. 15; but another Caleb. Her sons, i. e. the sons, either, 1. Of Jeriath, she being last mentioned; or rather, 2. Of Azubah, who is by way of distinction called his wife, when Jeriath probably was only his concubine, and, as it may seem, barren; and therefore upon Azubah's death he married another wife, ver. 19. And those other sons of this Caleb, mentioned below, ver. 42, are his sons by some other wife distinct from all these.

19 And when Azubah was dead, Caleb took unto him ^p Ephrath, which bare him Hur.

20 And Hur begat Uri, and Uri begat ^q Bezaleel.

21 ¶ And afterward Hezron went in to the daughter of ^r Machir the father of Gilead, whom he [†] married when he was threescore years old; and she bare him Segub.

Went in, i. e. lay with her, as that phrase is commonly used, as Gen. iv. 1; vi. 4. The father of Gilead; of a man so called. Or if Gilead be the name of that known country, father is put for head or governor, as it is used 1 Sam. xxiv. 11; 2 Kings v. 13; xvi. 7; Isa. xxii. 21; or for protector or curator, as father is used Job xxix. 16; Jer. ii. 27; Lam. v. 3; this man being a man of noted valour, and the great champion in those parts. Whom he married, Heb. and he took her, to wit, to wife. Or, after he had taken her; for so the particle vau is used, as hath been formerly noted. When he was threescore years old, Heb. and he was, to wit, when he went in unto her, or when he married her.

22 And Segub begat Jair, who had three and twenty cities in the land of Gilead.

Which he had, though he was of the tribe of Judah, as here we see, because he married a daughter of Manasseh, Numb. xxvi. 29, whence he is called a son of Manasseh, Numb. xxxii. 41; Deut. iii. 14; and because, being a man of great courage, he joined himself with that half tribe in subduing Gilead, wherein he acted so valiantly and successfully, that he had twenty-three cities or great towns given to him to possess or dispose of; or rather, to rule over them, and have some advantage from them; as a king is said to have his kingdom, although he hath not the propriety of all the lands and houses in it.

23 * And he took Geshur, and Aram, with the towns of Jair, from them, with Kenath, and the towns thereof, even threescore cities. All these belonged to the sons of Machir the father of Gilead.

And he took, or, for he had taken. So this is the reason why he had so great a territory and jurisdiction given to him. Geshur and Aram; two cities or great towns so called. With the towns of Jair, i. e. with those twenty-three cities which he is said to have, ver. 22. From them, i. e. from the former inhabitants, which is easily understood. With Kenath; which was taken by Nobah, one of Jair's commanders, sent by him to take it, as may be gathered from Numb. xxxii. 41, 42. To the sons of Machir; partly to his own sons, and partly to his son-in-law Jair, who by reason of that dear affection which was betwixt them, and his forsaking his own tribe and kindred to fight for them, and to dwell with them, is here reckoned as his own son.

24 And after that Hezron was dead in Caleb-ephratah, then Abiah Hezron's wife bare him ^t Ashur the father of Tekoa.

Caleb-ephratah; a place then so called by a conjunction of the names of the man and his wife; afterwards supposed to be called Beth-lehem Ephratah. Others translate the words thus, When Caleb took Ephratah. So it is an ellipsis of the verb, which is here to be understood out of ver. 19, where it is expressed. Abiah bare him Ashur, after the father's death. The father of Tekoa; a known place, 2 Sam. xiv. 2, 4; Jer. vi. 1; Amos i. 1; whose father he is called, because he was either the progenitor of the people inhabiting there, or their prince and ruler, or the builder of the city.

25 ¶ And the sons of Jerahmeel the firstborn of Hezron were, Ram the firstborn, and Bunah, and Oren, and Ozem, and Ahijah.

Or, of (the prefix, mem being oft understood) Ahijah; his wife so called, as may seem probable from the next verse, where he mentions another wife.

26 Jerahmeel had also another wife, whose name was Atarah; she was the mother of Onam.

27 And the sons of Ram the firstborn of Jerahmeel were, Maaz, and Jamin, and Eker.

28 And the sons of Onam were, Shammai, and Jada. And the sons of Shammai; Nadab, and Abishur.

29 And the name of the wife of Abishur was Abihail, and she bare him Ahban, and Molid.

30 And the sons of Nadab; Seled, and Appaim: but Seled died without children.

31 And the sons of Appaim; Ishi.

And the sons of Ishi; Sheshan. And ^u the children of Sheshan; Ahlai.

^u See ver. 34, 35.

The sons of Appaim; an expression oft used, both afterwards in this verse, and elsewhere, and in profane authors too, where there is but one son. It is an enallage of the number, which is frequent in the Hebrew.

32 And the sons of Jada the brother of Shammai; Jether, and Jonathan: and Jether died without children.

33 And the sons of Jonathan; Peleth, and Zaza. These were the sons of Jerahmeel.

34 ¶ Now Sheshan had no sons, but daughters. And Sheshan had a servant, an Egyptian, whose name was Jarha.

Sheshan had no sons, to wit, living when he died, his son Ahlai, ver. 31, dying before him; unless Ahlai was the name of a daughter.

35 And Sheshan gave his daughter to Jarha his servant to wife; and she bare him Attai.

36 And Attai begat Nathan, and Nathan begat ^x Zabad, ^x ch. 11. 41.

37 And Zabad begat Ephlal, and Ephlal begat Obed,

38 And Obed begat Jehu, and Jehu begat Azariah,

39 And Azariah begat Helez, and Helez begat Eleasah,

40 And Eleasah begat Sisamai, and Sisamai begat Shallum, 41 And Shallum begat Jekamiah, and Jekamiah begat Elishama.

42 ¶ Now the sons of Caleb the brother of Jerahmeel were, Mesha his firstborn, which was the father of Ziph; and the sons of Mareshah the father of Hebron.

cir. 1471, &c.

The sons of Caleb, to wit, of that Caleb mentioned ver. 18, as appears by comparing that verse with ver. 24. And these are his sons by another and his third wife. See on ver. 18. Ziph; the name either of a man, or of a place, of which see Josh. xv. 24, 55; and then father is to be understood here, as ver. 23, 24. The father of Hebron; not the place so called, but a man, as is evident, because his sons here follow.

43 And the sons of Hebron; Korah, and Tapuah, and Rekem, and Shema.

44 And Shema begat Raham, the father of Jorkoam: and Rekem begat Shammai.

45 And the son of Shammai was Maon: and Maon was the father of Beth-zur.

A place in Judah, Josh. xv. 58. See on ver. 23.

46 And Ephah, Caleb's concubine, bare Haran, and Moza, and Gazez: and Haran begat Gazez.

47 And the sons of Jahdai; Regem, and Jotham, and Gesham, and Pelet, and Ephah, and Shaaph.

The sons of Jahdai, the son of Gazez last mentioned; which is implied, because he follows next after him in the genealogy. Or, the sons of Moza; whose name might be changed into Jahdai for some reason now unknown.

48 Maachah, Caleb's concubine, bare Sheber, and Tirhanah.

49 She bare also Shaaph the father of Madmannah, Sheva the father of Machbenah, and the father of Gibeaz: and the daughter of Caleb was Achsa.

Madmannah: this and divers other following names are the names of places in Judah, and father is meant as ver. 23, 24.

50 ¶ These were the sons of Caleb the son of Hur, the firstborn of Ephratah; Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim, 51 Salma the father of Beth-lehem, Hareph the father of Beth-gader.

Salma the father of Beth-lehem, to wit, in part; for Boaz descended from another Salmon, who was the son of Nahshon, ver. 11. Hareph the father of Beth-gader, called also Penuel the father of Gedor, chap. iv. 4.

52 And Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim had sons; Haroeh, and half of the Manahethites.

Haroeh; which may signify an overseer, a prophet, or teacher, or ruler; but here is a proper name, as appears from chap. iv. 2, where he is called Reaiah, with no great variation in the Hebrew.

53 And the families of Kirjath-jearim; the Ithrites, and the Puhites, and the Shumathites, and the Mishraites; of them came the Zareathites, and the Eshtaulites.

The families of Kirjath-jearim; or, in Kirjath-jearim; all which descended from Shobal, ver. 50. Of them, i. e. of the family of the Mishraites, last mentioned. The Eshtaulites; the inhabitants of two places called Zoreah and Eshtaul, Josh. xv. 33.

54 The sons of Salma; Beth-lehem, and the Netophathites, Ataroth, the house of Joab, and half of the Manahethites, the Zorites.

The sons of Salma; of that Salma mentioned ver. 51. Beth-lehem, i. e. the inhabitants of Beth-lehem. Ataroth, the name of a person or people. The house of Joab; the progenitors of Joab's family. Half of the Manahethites; the other half being mentioned ver. 52. Zorites, for, to wit, the Zorites.

55 And the families of the scribes which dwelt at Jabez; the Tirathites, the Shimeathites, and Suchathites. These are the Kenites that came of Hemath, the father of the house of Rechab.

The scribes; either civil, who were public notaries, who wrote and signed legal instruments; or ecclesiastical. And these were either Levites, or Simeonites, or rather Kenites, and are here mentioned not as if they were of the tribe of Judah, but because they dwelt among them, and probably were allied to them by marriages, and so in a manner incorporated with them. Which dwelt, or rather, dwelt; Heb. were dwellers. For the other translation, which dwelt, may seem to insinuate that these were descendants of Judah, which they were not; but this translation only signifies their cohabitation with them, for which cause they are here named with them. At Jabez; a place in Judah, so named probably from that famous Jabez of that tribe, chap. iv. 9.

The Kenites that came of Hemath; who dwelt in Judah, Judg. i. 16. Thus they are distinguished from the other branch of the Kenites, who dwelt in the tribe of Manasseh, Judg. iv. 11.

CHAP. III.

The sons of David, 1—9. His line to Zedekiah, 10—16. The successors of Jeconiah, 17—24.

NOW these were the sons of David, which were born unto him in Hebron; the first-born Amnon, of Ahinoam the Jezreelitess; the second Daniel, of Abigail the Carmelitess:

The Jezreelitess; of that Jezreel in Judah, Josh. xv. 56, not of that in Manasseh, Josh. xvii. 16. The Carmelitess; so called, because she was the wife of Nabal, who dwelt in Carmel, 1 Sam. xxv. 2, which was in Judah, Josh. xv. 55.

2 The third, Absalom the son of Maachah the daughter of Talmai king of Geshur: the fourth, Adonijah the son of Haggith:

3 The fifth, Shephatiah of Abital: the sixth, Ithream by Eglah his wife.

Which title belongs either to all the foregoing women; or rather, as the singular number showeth, to Eglah only, last mentioned; who possibly may be so called, because she was his first, and therefore most proper, wife, though her son was born after all the rest before mentioned, and therefore both she and her son are put in the sixth place; the wives being here named only for the sons' sakes. See more on 2 Sam. iii. 5.

4 These six were born unto him in Hebron; and there he reigned seven years and six months: and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years.

5 And these were born unto him in Jerusalem; Shimea, and Shobab, and Nathan, and Solomon, four, of Bathshua the daughter of Ammiel:

Four; all David's children by her, as the text positively affirms; and therefore Solomon is called her only son, Prov. iv. 3, because she loved him as if he had been so. Ammiel, called also Eliam, 2 Sam. xi. 3. See on 2 Sam. xi. 3.

6 Ithar also, and Elishama, and Eliphelet,

And he had two other sons called by the same names, ver. 8, but they were by differing wives; and probably they were then distinguished by some additional clause or title, which is here omitted, because it was now needless for us to know it; or the two first were dead before the two second were born, and therefore the names of the deceased were given to these to preserve their memory.

7 And Nogah, and Nepheg, and Japhia,
8 And Elishama, and Eliada, and Elipelet, nine.

Object. There are but seven mentioned 2 Sam. v. 14, &c. Ans. Two of them are omitted there, because they died very early, or were inglorious, or died without issue; and here we have all the sons of David, as it here follows, ver. 9, which clause is not added, 2 Sam. v.

9 These were all the sons of David, beside the sons of the concubines, and Tamar their sister.

10 ¶ And Solomon's son was Rehoboam, Abia his son, Asa his son, Jehoshaphat his son, 11 Joram his son, Ahaziah his son,

Joash his son,

12 Amaziah his son, Azariah his son,
Jotham his son,

13 Ahaz his son, Hezekiah his son, Manasseh his son,

14 Amon his son, Josiah his son.
 15 And the sons of Josiah were, the first-born || Johanan, the second || Jehoia- kim, the third || Zedekiah, the fourth || Shallum.

Of whom, at least under that name, there is no mention in the history of the reign of Josiah's sons, 2 Kings xxiii., xxiv. But in Jer. xxii. 11, there is mention of Shallum the son of Josiah king of Judah, which reigned instead of Josiah his father; which most conceive to be the same who is otherwise called Jehoahaz, 2 Kings xxiii. And this seems most probable, 1. From that phrase, he reigned instead of Josiah; which implies that he immediately succeeded his father; or otherwise he would have been said to have reigned instead of his brother, as Zedekiah is said to reign instead of Jehoiachim, 2 Kings xxiv. 17, because he was his next successor. 2. From the order of that sermon or discourse of Jeremiah, which was directed to Zedekiah, and his servants, and people, as appears by Jer. xxi. 1, 2, 11; xxii. 1, 2, whom he admonisheth by the examples of the kings his predecessors, and of the sentence of God concerning each of them, and that in order as they reigned: 1. Of Shallum, ver. 11, &c. 2. Of Jehoiachim, ver. 18, &c. 3. Of Jeconiah, ver. 24, &c. Therefore Shallum is the same with Jehoahaz, who was the first king after Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 30. 3. From the nature of that prophecy, Jer. xxii. 11, 12, which best agrees to Jehoahaz, who was carried captive not so far as Babylon, but only to Egypt, a very near country, whence the people hoped that he would speedily and easily return, or be re-established in his throne by the king of Egypt, in opposition to the king of Babylon. 4. Because Jehoahaz was one of Josiah's younger sons, as appears by comparing 2 Kings xxiii. 31, 36. And this Shallum is here called his fourth son.

16 And the sons of ¹Jehoiakim: || Je- coniah his son, Zedekiah ^m his son.

Not his natural son, for he was his uncle, 2 Kings xxiv. 17; but his legal son, or his successor, upon whom the son's right was devolved by virtue of that law, Numb. xxvii. 8—10, and therefore it is not strange if he have the name of son with it. See the notes on Luke iii. Or this was another Zedekiah; because it is improbable, and without example, that one and the same man should be twice mentioned in the same genealogy as the son of two several parents.

17 ¶ And the sons of Jeconiah; Assir, [†]Salathiel ⁿ his son,

Of Jeconiah; Assir, or, of Jeconiah the captive, or prisoner; which is added to show that he begat his son when he was captive in Babylon, as it is noted, Matt. i. 12, whither he was carried captive, 2 Kings xxiv. 15. Object. It is said of this Jeconiah, Jer. xxii. 30, Write this man childless. Answ. So he is called, because he was an unhappy prince, and had no son that succeeded him in the throne, as the next words explain it. See more on that place. Salathiel his son; either his legal or his natural son; of which see the notes on Jer. xxii. 30; Matt. i. 12; Luke iii. 27.

18 Malchiram also, and Pedaiah, and Shenazar, Jecamiah, Hoshama, and Nedabiah.

Malchiram also, and Pedaiah: the sentence seems to be short and imperfect, as is frequent in the Hebrew language, and something is here understood, as, the sons also of Salathiel were Malchiram and Pedaiah, &c., as they gather from hence, that the same Zerubbabel is called the son of Pedaiah, ver. 19, and the son (i. e. the grandson) of Salathiel, Matt. i. 12. Or Malchiram and the rest here named were the sons of Jeconiah; and they are differing Zerubbabels, which are mentioned here, ver. 19; Matt. i. 12; Luke iii. 27; of which see the notes on those places.

19 And the sons of Pedaiah were, Zerubbabel, and Shimei: and the sons of Zerubbabel; Meshullam, and Hananiah, and Shelomith their sister:

i. e. Sister to the two last named sons of Zerubbabel, to wit, by both parents; and therefore named before the other five, ver. 20, who were her brethren by the father, but not by the mother.

20 And Hashubah, and Ohel, and Berechiah, and Hasadiah, Jushabhesed, five.

Either of Zerubbabel; or of Meshullam, as is gathered from hence, that the sons of Hananiah (brother to Meshullam, ver. 19) are named ver. 21, and therefore those ver. 20 are presumed to be the sons of Meshullam. But that is no necessary inference, for Meshullam possibly had no sons, and therefore he passeth from him to Hananiah, ver. 21.

21 And the sons of Hananiah; Pelatiah, and Jesaiah: the sons of Rephaiah, the sons of Arnan, the sons of Obadiah, the sons of Shechaniah.

All these men, both parents and their sons here blended together, are mentioned as the sons of Hananiah, and branches of the royal stock.

22 And the sons of Shechaniah; She- maiah: and the sons of Shemaiah; ^oHat- tush, and Igeal, and Bariah, and Neariah, and Shaphat, six.

To wit, including the father. But the Hebrew word shisha, which is rendered six, may be the proper name of one of the sons of Shemaiah, who may be so called, because he was the sixth son.

23 And the sons of Neariah; [†]Elioenai, and [†]Hezekiah, and Azrikam, three.

The sons of Neariah; who alone is here mentioned, because his elder brethren probably died without issue.

24 And the sons of Elioenai were, Hodaiah, and Eliashib, and Pelaiah, and Akkub, and Johanan, and Dalaiah, and Anani, seven.

CHAP. IV.

The posterity of Judah by Caleb the son of Hur, 1—4. By Ashur, 5—8. By Jabez: his prayer, 9—20. The posterity of Shelah, 21—23. The posterity and cities of Simeon: their conquest of Gedor; and of the Amalekites in Mount Seir, 24—43.

THE sons of Judah; ^aPharez, Hezron, ^{1300, &c.} and || Carmi, and Hur, and Shobal.

The sons of Judah, i. e. the posterity; for only Pharez was his immediate son. But they are all mentioned here only to show Shobal's descent from Judah, of whom he intended to speak more particularly.

2 And || Reaiah the son of Shobal begat [†]Jahath, and Jahath begat Ahumai, and Lahad. These are the families of the Zorathites.

Reaiah; called Haroeah, chap. ii. 52; of whom see there. The families of the Zorathites; of whom see on chap. ii. 53.

3 And these were of the father of Etam; Jezreel, and Ishma, and Idbash: and the name of their sister was Hazeleponi:

Etam is the name either of a man, or of a place; of which see below, ver. 32; 2 Chron. xi. 6; whose inhabitants descended from him. The name of his father is not here expressed.

4 And Penuel the father of Gedor, and Ezer the father of Hushah. These are the sons of ^bHur, the firstborn of ^bch. 2. 50. Ephrathah, the father of Beth-lehem.

Either they are other sons besides those mentioned chap. ii., or there is some variation in their names, which is most frequent among the Hebrews, as hath been oft proved. The father of Beth-lehem: this title is here given to the father, and chap. ii. 51, to Salma, his son, who had it either with or after his father. See the notes on chap. ii. 51, 52.

5 ¶ And ^cAshur the father of Tekoa ^cch. 2. 24. had two wives, Helah and Naarah.

6 And Naarah bare him Ahuzam, and Hepher, and Temeni, and Haahashtari. These were the sons of Naarah.

7 And the sons of Helah were, Zereth, and Jezoar, and Ethnan.

Understand here, and Coz, out of the beginning of the following verse. The like ellipses we have in the end of ver. 13, and of chap. vii. 18.

8 And Coz begat Anub, and Zobebah, and the families of Aharhel the son of Harum.

d Gen. 34. 19. 9 ¶ And Jabez was ^dmore honourable than his brethren : and his mother called his name ¶ Jabez, saying, Because I bare him with sorrow.

Jabez ; one of the fathers of the families of Aharhel last mentioned. More honourable than his brethren, for courage, and especially for true and fervent piety, expressed in the following petition.

10 And Jabez called on the God of Israel, saying, †Oh that thou wouldst bless me indeed, and enlarge my coast, and that thine hand might be with me, and that thou wouldst †keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me ! And God granted him that which he requested.

Jabez called on the God of Israel, when he was undertaking some great and dangerous service. Oh that thou wouldst bless me indeed ! I trust not to my own or people's valour, but only to thy blessing and help. Enlarge my coast ; drive out these wicked and cursed Canaanites, whom thou hast commanded us to root out, and therefore I justly beg and expect thy blessing in the execution of thy command. That thine hand might be with me, to protect and strengthen me against my adversaries. That thou wouldst keep me from evil, or work with (for so the Hebrew prefix mem is sometimes used, as Cant. i. 2 ; iii. 9 ; Isa. v. 7, 8) evil, i. e. so restrain and govern it. That it may not grieve me ; that it may not oppress and overcome me, which will be very grievous to me. The consequent put for the antecedent ; and more is understood than is expressed. He useth this expression in allusion to his name, which signifies grief : q. d. Lord, let me not have that grief which my name implies, and which my sin deserves.

11 ¶ And Chelub the brother of Shuah begat Mehir, which was the father of Eshton.

12 And Eshton begat Beth-rapha, and Paseah, and Tehinnah the father of ¶ Ir-nabash. These are the men of Rechah.

From these are sprung the present inhabitants of Rechah, a town not elsewhere mentioned.

13 And the sons of Kenaz ; *Othniel, and Seraiah : and the sons of Othniel ; ¶ Hathath.

Kenaz ; the son either of Chelub, ver. 11, or of his son Eshton, ver. 12, and the father of Jephunneh, and consequently Caleb's grandfather, ver. 15 ; whence Caleb is called a Kenezite, Numb. xxxii. 12. Hathath ; understand, and Meonothai, out of ver. 14. See above on ver. 7.

14 And Meonothai begat Ophrah : and Seraiah begat Joab, the father of 'the ¶ valley of ¶ Charashim ; for they were craftsmen.

The father of the valley, i. e. of the inhabitants of the valley.

15 And the sons of Caleb the son of Jephunneh ; Iru, Elah, and Naam : and the sons of Elah, ¶ even Kenaz.

Another Kenaz, differing from that Kenaz ver. 13. Or his name might be Uknaz.

16 And the sons of Jehaleleel ; Ziph, and Ziphah, Tiria, and Asareel.

Jehaleleel ; the son of Kenaz, or Uknaz, last mentioned.

17 And the sons of Ezra were, Jether, and Mered, and Ephraim, and Jalon : and she bare Miriam, and Shammai, and Ishbah the father of Eshtemoa.

Ezra ; the son of Asareel last named. She bare ; she, i. e. Bithiah, bare unto Mered, as may seem by comparing this with ver. 18.

18 And his wife ¶ Jehudijah bare Jered ¶ Or, the Jewess. the father of Gedor, and Heber the father of Socho, and Jekuthiel the father of Zanoah. And these are the sons of Bithiah the daughter of Pharaoh, which Mered took.

His wife ; either Ezra's wife, or rather, another wife of Mered. Jekudijah ; or, the Jewess ; so called to distinguish her from his Egyptian wife here following. These are the sons, to wit, Miriam, and the rest following, ver. 17. The daughter of Pharaoh ; either, 1. Of Pharaoh king of Egypt ; for Mered might be a person of great estate and quality ; or this might be only Pharaoh's illegitimate daughter. Or, 2. Of some other Egyptian or Israelite called by that name ; which might easily happen upon divers occasions.

19 And the sons of his wife ¶ Hodiah the sister of Naham, the father of Keilah the Garmite, and Eshtemoa the Maachathite.

Hodiah, his third wife.

20 And the sons of Shimon were, Amnon, and Rinnah, Ben-hanan, and Tilon. And the sons of Ishi were, Zoheth, and Ben-zoheth.

Shimon ; another son of the father of Keilah, mentioned ver. 19. Ishi ; son of Tilon last mentioned.

21 ¶ The sons of Shelah ^ethe son of Judah were, Er the father of Lecah, and Laadah the father of Marashah, and the families of the house of them that wrought fine linen, of the house of Ashbea, Having treated of the posterity of Judah by Pharez, and by Zerah, he now comes to his progeny by Shelah, of whom see Gen. xxxviii.

22 And Jokim, and the men of Chozeba, and Joash, and Saraph, who had the dominion in Moab, and Jashubilehem. And these are ancient things.

Who had the dominion in Moab ; which they ruled in the name and for the use and service of the kings of Judah, to whom Moab was subject from David's time. Or, who had possessions in Moab ; or, who married wives in Moab. These are ancient things : the sense is either, 1. These persons and things were in ancient times, and therefore it is not strange if now they be so little known. But that might have been with equal truth said of divers other parts of this account. Or rather, 2. But those blessed times and things are long since past and gone. Our ancestors then had the dominion over the heathen, but their degenerate posterity are now slaves to them in Chaldea, Persia, &c., where they are employed as potters or gardeners, or in other servile works.

23 These were the potters, and those that dwelt among plants and hedges : there they dwelt with the king for his work.

These were the potters ; or rather, these are ; for he seems to oppose their present servitude to their former glory, and to show their low and mean spirits, that had rather tarry among the heathen to do their drudgery, than return to Jerusalem to serve God and enjoy their freedom. There they dwelt, or tarried, or now dwell, when their brethren are returned. With the king of Babylon or Persia ; esteeming it a greater honour and happiness to serve that earthly monarch in the meanest employments, than to serve the King of kings in his temple, and in his most noble and heavenly work.

24 ¶ The sons of Simeon were, ¶ Nemuel, and Jamin, ¶ Jarib, Zerah, and Shaul :

because their possession was taken out of Judah's portion, Josh. xix. 1. This account seems to differ from that Gen. xvi., both in the number and names of the persons, which is not strange, considering how customary it was amongst the Hebrews for one person to have two or three names given to him upon several occasions. And for Ohad, Gen. xvi. 10, he may be omitted here, because he left no posterity or family after him, as the rest did.

25 Shallum his son, Mibsam his son, Mishma his son.

Shallum his son, i. e. son of Saul last mentioned.

26 And the sons of Mishma; Hamuel his son, Zacchur his son, Shimei his son.

27 And Shimei had sixteen sons and six daughters; but his brethren had not many children, neither did all their family

+ Heb. unto. multiply, † like to the children of Judah. The tribe of Simeon did not increase proportionably to the tribe of Judah, in which they dwelt; as appears by those two catalogues, Numb. i. 22; xxvi. 14; which is to be ascribed to God's curse upon them delivered by the mouth of holy Jacob, Gen. xlix., and signified by Moses's neglect of them, when he blessed all the other tribes.

‡ Josh. 19.2. 28 And they dwelt at ^b Beer-sheba, and Moladah, and Hazar-shual, Either, 1. Of David's posterity, i. e. as long as the kingdom of Judah lasted, or until the captivity of Babylon. But this seems not to be true, for Simeon was gone into captivity with the rest of the ten tribes long before that time. Or rather, 2. Of David himself. And this may seem to be added, because some of these cities, though given to Simeon by Joshua, yet through the sloth or cowardice of that tribe were not taken from the Philistines until David's time, who took some of them, and, the Simeonites having justly forfeited their right to them by their neglect, gave them to his own tribe. For it is evident concerning Ziklag, one of them, that it was in the Philistines' hands in David's time, and by them given to him, and by him annexed to the tribe of Judah, 1 Sam. xxvii. 6.

36 And Elioenai, and Jaakobah, and Jeshohaiah, and Asaiah, and Adiel, and Jesimiel, and Benaiah, 37 And Ziza the son of Shiphi, the son of Allon, the son of Jedaiah, the son of Shimri, the son of Shemaiah;

+ Heb. coming. 38 These † mentioned by their names were princes in their families: and the house of their fathers increased greatly.

These named ver. 34—37. The house of their fathers increased greatly, which forced them to seek for new and larger habitations.

39 ¶ And they went to the entrance of ^{cir. 715.} Gedor, even unto the east side of the valley, to seek pasture for their flocks.

To the entrance of Gedor, to that country that belongs to Gedor, or borders upon it; either that Gedor, Josh. xv. 58, or that called Gederah, Josh. xv. 36. Unto the east side of the valley; of which see on 1 Sam. xvii. 2, 52.

40 And they found fat pasture and good, and the land was wide, and quiet, and peaceable; for they of Ham had dwelt there of old.

They of Ham, i. e. the posterity of that cursed Ham; either the Arabians; or the Canaanites or Philistines, who descended from Ham, Gen. x. 6. And accordingly these words contain a reason, either, 1. To prove that the land was good; because the Arabians, who, being wholly given to pasturage, used to find out the choicest grounds, had formerly pitched their tents there. Or, 2. Why they went and possessed this place, because it was not in the hands of their brethren of Judah, but in the possession of that people which they had authority and command to expel. Had dwelt there of old, i. e. had possessed it of old and hitherto. Or, dwelt there before, i. e. before they came and cast them out of their possessions.

41 And these written by name came in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and smote their tents, and the habitations that were found there, and destroyed them utterly unto this day, and dwelt in their rooms: because there was pasture there for their flocks.

In the days of Hezekiah king of Judah; but a little before their captivity, which was in the sixth year of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xvii. So their joy in their new, and pleasant, and fruitful possessions lasted but for a very little while. Smote their tents, i. e. the people dwelling in tents; for so it seems these still did for the conveniency of pasturage. Destroyed them utterly unto this day, i. e. so as they could never after recover themselves.

42 And some of them, even of the sons of Simeon, five hundred men, went to mount Seir, having for their captains Pelatiah, and Neariah, and Rephaiah, and Uzziel, the sons of Ishi.

Some went to Mount Seir; probably about the same time.

43 And they smote ^k the rest of the Amalekites that were escaped, and dwelt there unto this day.

The rest of the Amalekites; not destroyed by Saul, or David, or his successors. Unto this day; either, 1. Until the captivity of the ten tribes. But that happening so speedily after this time, this expression may seem to be very improper and insignificant here. Or rather, 2. Until the Babylonish captivity, or the time next after it, when these books were written. For although the main body of that tribe dwelling in Canaan were carried into captivity, yet this small remnant of them having removed their dwellings, and being planted in Mount Seir, which lay southward from Judah, might possibly be continued and preserved in those parts, when their brethren were gone into captivity.

forasmuch as he ^bdefiled his father's bed, ^ehis birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph the son of Israel: and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright.

For he was the first-born: these and the following words to ver. 3, which are enclosed within a parenthesis, seem to be inserted here as an answer to a secret objection, or as a reason why Reuben's genealogy was not set down first, but Judah's was put before it, which is double; the first follows immediately, the other is in the last clause of this verse. His birthright, i. e. the right of the first-born, which, although it contain in it something of dominion, Gen. xxvii. 1, 32, which Joseph had in his own person, Gen. xlix.; yet principally consisted in having a double portion, as appears from Deut. xxi. 17, which Joseph enjoyed both in his person and in his posterity, which had two parts of twelve in Canaan. And it is Joseph's posterity which is here considered. Unto the sons of Joseph; Ephraim and Manasseh, each having a distinct portion. The sons of Israel: this is added emphatically, because they were reputed and treated as if they had been the immediate sons of Jacob; of which see Gen. xlviii. 5. The genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright: this is the second reason, which sheweth both why Reuben's genealogy was not first mentioned; and if another tribe was to be ranked before it, why that was Judah, and not Joseph, as it might seem most fit for the former reason; because, saith he, the order of their genealogy was not to be ruled by the birthright, but by a higher privilege, which was given to Judah, and which here follows.

Judah; not the person, (for so Joseph prevailed,) but the tribe of Judah. Prevailed above his brethren; excelled the other tribes in number and power, and especially in the following privilege. And of him, or for of him, as the Hebrew vau is oft used; this being a reason of the foregoing assertion, or a declaration wherein he did prevail. Came the chief ruler; the government was by God's promise and appointment to be seated chiefly and most durably in that tribe, first in David and his successors, and then in the Messiah, who sprung out of Judah, Heb. vii. 14, which was a far greater privilege than the birthright. Or, as to the ruler, (i. e. as to the point of dominion,) he was more than he, or preferred before him, i. e. before Joseph, who is named in the very next clause, the pronoun being referred unto the following noun, which is frequent among the Hebrews, as Psal. lxxxvii. 1; cv. 19. But the birthright; or, although, as vau is oft used; so this prevents or removes an objection against Judah's precedence taken from his birthright.

Who dwelt, to wit, the Reubenites, all these here before mentioned, as appears both by the following verses, which relate to the whole tribe; and by the agreement of this description of their inheritance with that, Josh. xiii. 15, 16.

9 And eastward he inhabited unto the entering in of the wilderness from the river Euphrates: because their cattle were multiplied ⁱin the land of Gilead.

i Josh. 22. 9.

He inhabited, i. e. the tribe of Reuben. From the river Euphrates; from Jordan and the wilderness beyond it unto Euphrates. Or, of the wilderness, which lies towards or reacheth to the river Euphrates, namely, the great wilderness of Kedemoth, Deut. ii. 26, which was extended far and wide towards Euphrates; for that was the eastern border of Reuben's possession, and not Euphrates, to which their habitation never reached. Their cattle were multiplied; which forced them to enlarge their habitation as far as they could eastward towards Euphrates.

The chief; the prince of the tribe, or at least of his family, when they were numbered, to wit, in the days of Jotham, ver. 17. Shaphat in Bashan, i. e. who dwelt in the city of Bashan. Others thus, Who abode in Bashan to defend the city and country, when their brethren went out to war against the Hagarites, ver. 18, 19.

13 And their brethren of the house of their fathers were, Michael, and Meshullam, and Sheba, and Jorai, and Jachan, and Zia, and Heber, seven.

14 These are the children of Abihail the son of Huri, the son of Jaroah, the son of Gilead, the son of Michael, the son of Jeshishai, the son of Jahdo, the son of Buz;

These are the children; these seven last named.

15 Ahi the son of Abdiel, the son of Guni, chief of the house of their fathers.

This Ahi was the head or chief of the houses or families, either, 1. Of those seven named ver. 13; or, 2. Of Abdiel and Guni last named, and of their fathers.

16 And they dwell in Gilead in Bashan, and in her towns, and in all the suburbs ⁿof ^oSharon, upon ^ptheir borders.

n ch. 27. 29.
o Heb. their goingsforth.

They dwell, i. e. the children or tribe of Gad. In Gilead, i. e. in part of Gilead; for the Reubenites and Manassites dwelt in other parts of it, Deut. iii. 12, 13, 16. In Bashan; in the land of Bashan, as it is said, ver. 11. Quest. How come the Gadites to dwell in Bashan, when all Bashan is expressly said to be given to the half tribe of Manasseh, Deut. iii. 13; Josh. xiii. 29, 30? Ans. All Bashan is put for the greatest part of it by a synecdoche, very frequent in Scripture and all authors; and so the Gadites might possess a part of it. And thus both Bashan and Gilead are used for parts of them, Josh. xvii. 1, where it is said of Machir a Manassite, that he had Gilead and Bashan. And as it is unquestionably true that Gilead is taken sometimes more largely for all the land of the Israelites beyond Jordan, sometimes more strictly for that part of it which borders upon Mount Gilcad; of which see my notes on Josh. xvii. 1; the like may be presumed concerning Bashan; and so in its strictest sense it might be all given to the Manassites, and yet in its largest sense might comprehend a part of the land belonging to the Gadites. In her towns,

i. e. in some of her cities and towns. In all the suburbs, i. e. in its fields and pasture grounds, 1 Chron. xxvii. 29. Of Sharon; not that within Jordan, Isa. xxxv. 2, but another without Jordan. Upon their borders, to wit, of Gilead and Bashan; for Gilead properly so called, or the greatest part of it, belonged to the Reubenites; and Bashan, or the greatest part of it, to the Manassites; and so the Gadites (whose habitation was between the Reubenites and Manassites) had those parts of both their countries which were towards their borders. Or, unto their borders, i. e. as far as the suburbs or fields of Sharon, which were last mentioned, were extended.

17 All these were reckoned by genealogies in the days of ⁿJotham king of Judah, and in the days of ^oJeroboam king of Israel.

In the days of Jotham king of Judah; who reigning long, partly in his father's days, and partly by himself, 2 Kings xv., and being at leisure as to wars or troubles, thought this a fit season to examine the state of his people. In the days of Jeroboam; either the second of that name, of whom see 2 Kings xiii. 13. Or rather the first Jeroboam; partly because he is called simply Jeroboam, without any addition; which shows that he speaks of the most famous of the two; and partly because this work of taking an account of the people doth far better agree to the times of Jeroboam the First, when the kingdom of Israel was first erected and established, and broken off from that of Judah, when it was necessary for Jeroboam to know his own strength, and the numbers of his people, than to the times of Jeroboam the Second, when the kingdom of Israel was broken, and near to its ruin.

18 ¶ The sons of Reuben, and the Gadites, and half the tribe of Manasseh, † of valiant men, men able to bear buckler and sword, and to shoot with bow, and skilful in war, were four and forty thousand seven hundred and threescore, that went out to the war.

19 And they made war with the Hagarites, with ^pJetur, and Nephish, and Nodab.

i. e. With the posterity of Jetur, &c., who were Ishmeelites, as appears from Gen. xxv. 15.

20 And ^qthey were helped against them, and the Hagarites were delivered into their hand, and all that were with them: for they cried to God in the battle, and he was intreated of them; because they ^rput their trust in him.

They were helped against them, to wit, by God, ver. 22, who gave them extraordinary courage and success. All that were with them; their friends and allies in this war.

21 And they † took away their cattle; of their camels fifty thousand, and of sheep two hundred and fifty thousand, and of asses two thousand, and of † men an hundred thousand.

Of their camels fifty thousand; for camels were very numerous in Arabia, being used in war, and for burdens, &c., and being very patient of thirst, and therefore most fit for those hot and dry countries. Of men an hundred thousand; whom they took prisoners, and either used as slaves, or sold them for such.

22 For there fell down many slain, because the war was of God. And they dwelt in their steads until ^sthe captivity.

The war was of God; God put them upon it, and mightily assisted them in it. They dwelt, i. e. that party of these tribes which went out to this war, being 44,760 men; or part of them by the consent of the rest. Until the captivity; of which 2 Kings xv. 29; xvii. 6.

23 ¶ And the children of the half tribe of Manasseh dwelt in the land: they increased from Bashan unto Baal-hermon and Senir, and unto mount Hermon.

Having discoursed of the Reubenites, ver. 3, &c., and next of the Gadites, ver. 11, &c., he now comes to the Manassites. In the land, i. e. in their land, to wit, in the northern part of the land beyond Jordan.

24 And these were the heads of the house of their fathers, even Ephraim, and Ishi, and Eliel, and Azriel, and Jeremiah, and Hodaviah, and Jahdiel, mighty men of valour, † famous men, and heads of the house of their fathers.

25 ¶ And they transgressed against the God of their fathers, and went a ^twhoring after the gods of the people of the land, whom God destroyed before them.

26 And the God of Israel stirred up the spirit of ^uPul king of Assyria, and the spirit of ^vTilgath-pilneser king of Assyria, and he carried them away, even the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh, and brought them unto ^yHalah, and Habor, and Hara, and to the river Gozan, unto this day.

Stirred up the spirit; he so governed his counsels and affections, that he should bring his forces against this people rather than others. Of Halah, Habor, &c., see 2 Kings xvii. 6; xviii. 11.

i Or,
Gershom,
ver. 1.

16 ¶ The sons of Levi; ¹ || Gershom, Kohath, and Merari.

This he repeats, as the foundation of the following genealogy of those Levites who were not priests.

17 And these be the names of the sons of Gershom; Libni, and Shimei.

18 And the sons of Kohath were, Amram, and Izhar, and Hebron, and Uzziel.

19 The sons of Merari; Mahli, and Mushi. And these are the families of the Levites according to their fathers.

Who are distinguished and named from their fathers. And the following catalogue is thought to contain the successive heads or chiefs of their several families until the times of David, by whom they were distributed into several ranks or courses.

20 Of Gershom; Libni his son, Jahath ^m ver. 42. his son, ^m Zimnah his son,

i. e. His grandson, by his son Shimei, as appears from ver. 42, 43, the names of father and son being oft used in Scripture of more remote progenitors or successors.

21 || Joah his son, || Iddo his son, Zerah his son, || Jeaterai his son.

22 The sons of Kohath; || Amminadab his son, Korah his son, Assir his son,

23 Elkanah his son, and Ebiasaph his son, and Assir his son,

24 Tahath his son, || Uriel his son, Uz-ziah his son, and Shaul his son.

Uriel, called also Zephaniah, ver. 36, where also Uzziah here following is called Azariah.

25 And the sons of Elkanah; ⁿ Amasai, and Ahimoth.

Elkanah; the son of that Korah mentioned above, ver. 22, as is manifest by ver. 35—37, and by Exod. vi. 23, 24.

26 As for Elkanah: the sons of Elkanah; || Zophai his son, and ^o Nahath his son, Elkanah; this was another Elkanah, son or grandson of the former Elkanah. and either the son or brother of Ahimoth last mentioned, and of Amasai. Nahath, called also Toah, ver. 34, and Tohu, 1 Sam. i. 1.

27 ^p Eliab his son, Jeroham his son, Elkanah his son.

Elkanah; the father of the prophet Samuel, 1 Sam. i. 1, who therefore follows here.

28 And the sons of Samuel; the first-born || Vashni, and Abiah.

29 The sons of Merari; Mahli, Libni his son, Shimei his son, Uzza his son, l Called also Joel,

ver. 31. &
1 Sam. 8. 2.

30 Shimei his son, Haggiah his son, Asaiah his son.

31 And these are they whom David set over the service of song in the house of the LORD, after that the ^a ark had rest.

These are they, whose names here follow. The service, Heb. the hands. Hand put for ministry or service, which is commonly performed by the hand. Thus God is frequently said to speak or command things by the hand (i. e. the ministry) of Moses. Compare 2 Chron. xxix. 27. After that the ark had rest; which was in David's time, 2 Sam. vi. 17.

32 And they ministered before the dwelling place of the tabernacle of the congregation with singing, until Solomon had built the house of the LORD in Jerusalem: and then they waited on their office according to their order.

The dwelling-place of the tabernacle, or, the tabernacle of the tent, as the same Hebrew words are translated, Exod. xxxix. 32; xl. 2. 6. According to their order; which David had appointed by the Spirit, as it follows in this book.

33 And these are they that [†] waited with their children. Of the sons of the Kohathites: Heman a singer, the son of Joel, the son of Shemuel,

These, to wit, Heman here mentioned; and Asaph, ver. 39; and Ethan, ver. 44. Shemuel, or, Samuel the prophet.

34 The son of Elkanah, the son of Gershom, the son of Eliel, the son of || Toah,

35 The son of || Zuph, the son of Elkanah, the son of Mahath, the son of Amasai,

36 The son of Elkanah, the son of || Joel, the son of Azariah, the son of Zephaniah,

37 The son of Tahath, the son of Assir, the son of ^r Ebiasaph, the son of Korah, 38 The son of Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi, the son of Israel.

39 And his brother Asaph, who stood on his right hand, even Asaph the son of Berachiah, the son of Shimeai, Asaph is here called Heman's brother, both by birth, being of the same tribe and father, Levi; and by his office and employment, which was the same with his.

40 The son of Michael, the son of Baaseiah, the son of Malchiah, 41 The son of ^s Ethni, the son of Zerah, the son of Adaiah,

42 The son of Ethan, the son of Zimnah, the son of Shimei, 43 The son of Jahath, the son of Gershom, the son of Levi.

44 And their brethren the sons of Merari stood on the left hand: || Ethan the son of || Kishi, the son of Abdi, the son of Malluch, Ethan, called also Jeduthun, 1 Chron. ix. 16; 2 Chron. xxxv. 15, and in the titles of divers psalms.

45 The son of Hashabiah, the son of Amaziah, the son of Hilkiah, 46 The son of Amzi, the son of Bani, the son of Shamer, 47 The son of Mahli, the son of Mushi, the son of Merari, the son of Levi.

48 Their brethren also the Levites were appointed unto all manner of service of the tabernacle of the house of God.

The Levites; such of them as had no skill in singing were otherwise employed.

Which were left, over and above the priests who were of the same family of Kohath and tribe of Levi. By lot, ten cities, or, by lot. (with a full point, for there the sense ends).
 All their cities were ten cities, as it is expressly said, Josh. xxi.
 26. These words, all their cities were, are to be understood out of the former verse; which is not unusual in the Holy Scripture. And so this sacred writer explains himself, ver.
 66, &c., where eight of these cities are named, whereof only two are taken out of this half tribe of Manasseh, ver. 70, the other two being named, Josh. xxi. 21, &c., where these things are more plainly and fully declared.

 vites these cities with their suburbs.

 priests and other Levites. These cities, which are numbered or named in this chapter.

65 And they gave by lot out of the tribe of the children of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, and out of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, these cities, which are called by their names.

They gave, to wit, to those Levites of the family of Kohath who were priests, as appears both by ver. 57, &c., where the cities given to the Aaronites are said to be taken out of the tribes here named, even out of Judah (under which Simeon is comprehended, because his lot lay within that of Judah) and Benjamin; and by the next verse, where the other Kohathites who were not priests are called the residue of the families of the sons of Kohath, by way of distinction from those of them to whom this ver. 65 relates.
 Which are called by their names; which are expressed by hath been noted before.

They gave; either the Ephraimites; or rather, the children of Israel, as it is expressed, ver. 64, who gave part out of Ephraim, and part out of the half tribe of Manasseh, as it here follows. But the Ephraimites could not give away any cities belonging to the Manassites. Unto them, i. e. to the residue of the Kohathites last mentioned. Of the cities of refuge, or, the cities (i. e. the city, the plural number used of one; of which frequent examples have been given before: see chap. vii. 3, 12, 14) of refuge. Or, cities, (the construct form being put for the absolute, of which there want not examples in the Hebrew language.)
 the city of refuge. As to the names of these cities, divers of them are differing from those names which were given to them, Josh. xxi. 13. Nor is it at all strange that the names of places should be changed in so many hundreds of years as were between Joshua and this time. And to the cities themselves, this is further to be observed, that they are dispersed among all the tribes, partly that Jacob's prophecy might be fulfilled concerning the scattering of Levi, Gen. xlix. 7; and partly that every tribe might have teachers among them, by whom they might be directed in and quickened to the observation of God's laws, upon which their safety and happiness wholly depended.

CHAP. VII.

The sons of Issachar, 1—5. Of Benjamin, 6—12. Of Naphtali, 13. Of Manasseh, 14—19. Of Ephraim; their calamity; and habitations, 20—29. Of Asher, 30—40.

1400, &c. NOW the sons of Issachar were, ^aTola, and ^b||Puah, Jashub, and Shimrom, four.

^a Gen. 46:13. ^b Num. 26:23. ^c Pharez, Job.

Jashub, called, by way of contraction, Job, Gen. xlii. 13.

2 And the sons of Tola; Uzzi, and Rephaiah, and Jeriel, and Jahmai, and Jibsam, and Shemuel, heads of their father's house, to wit, of Tola: they were valiant men of might in their generations; ^bwhose number was in the days of David two and twenty thousand and six hundred.

In the days of David, when he numbered the people, 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, &c.

3 And the sons of Uzzi; Izrahiah: and the sons of Izrahiah; Michael, and Obadiah, and Joel, Ishiah, five: all of them chief men.

The sons, for the son; for he names but one son. Michael, and Obadiah, and Joel, Ishiah, five, including their father Izrahiah.

4 And with them, by their generations, after the house of their fathers, were bands of soldiers for war, six and thirty thousand men: for they had many wives and sons.

Six and thirty thousand men, to wit, of the posterity of Uzzi, as the other twenty-two thousand six hundred, ver. 2, were the posterity of Tola.

5 And their brethren among all the families of Issachar were valiant men of might, reckoned in all by their genealogies fourscore and seven thousand.

6 ¶ The sons of ^cBenjamin; Bela, and Becher, and Jediel, three.

There were ten, Gen. xli. 21, and five of them are named, chap. viii. 1, but here only three are mentioned, either because these were most eminent for courage or fruitfulness, or because the other families were now extinct.

7 And the sons of Bela; Ezbon, and Uzzi, and Uzziel, and Jerimoth, and Iri, five; heads of the house of their fathers, mighty men of valour; and were reckoned by their genealogies twenty and two thousand and thirty and four.

Heads of the house of their fathers; each of them head, or chief, or commander of that house or family from which he was descended, or to which he belonged. For it may seem, by comparing this with chap. viii. 3, &c. that these were not the immediate sons of Bela, but his grandchildren descended each from a several father; and their fathers are here omitted, peradventure because they were obscure persons, as their sons are mentioned for their eminency.

8 And the sons of Becher; Zemira, and Joash, and Eliezer, and Elieoenai, and Omri, and Jerimoth, and Abiah, and Anathoth, and Alameth. All these are the sons of Becher.

9 And the number of them, after their genealogy by their generations, heads of the house of their fathers, mighty men of valour, was twenty thousand and two hundred.

10 The sons also of Jediel; Bilhan: and the sons of Bilhan; Jeush, and Benjamin, and Ehud, and Chenaanah, and Zethan, and Tharshish, and Abishahar.

11 All these the sons of Jediel, by the heads of their fathers, mighty men of valour, were seventeen thousand and two hundred soldiers, fit to go out for war and battle.

12 ^dShuphim also, and Huphim, the children of ^e||Ir, and Hushim, the sons of ^f||Aher.

Shuphim also, and Huphim, called Muphim and Huphim, Gen. xlii. 21, also Hupham and Shupham, Numb. xxvi. 39. The sons of Aher; but divers take the Hebrew word aher for a common, not proper name, and render the words thus, another son, or the son of another family or tribe, to wit, of Dan, as may be gathered, 1. From Gen. xlii. 23, where Hushim is mentioned as the only son of Dan, where also the word sons is used of that one man, as it is here. 2. From the clause of the next verse, the sons of Bilhah, who was mother both to Dan and Naphtali. 3. Because otherwise the genealogy of Dan is quite left out. 4. From the word another, which is used in the Hebrew writers to design an abominable thing which the writer disdained to mention; whence they call a swine, which to them was a very unclean and loathsome creature, another thing. And it must be remembered that the tribe of Dan had made themselves and their memory infamous and detestable by that gross idolatry, which began first and continued longest in that tribe, Judg. xviii.; for which reason many interpreters conceive this tribe is omitted in the numbering of the sealed persons, Rev. vii.

13 ¶ The sons of Naphtali; Jahziel, and Guni, and Jezer, and ^gShallum, the sons of Bilhah.

The sons of Bilhah, i. e. the grandchildren; for Bilhah was Jacob's concubine, and mother both to Naphtali, the father of these last named persons, and to Dan. See on ver. 12.

14 ¶ The sons of Manasseh; Ashriel, whom she bare: (but his concubine the Aramitess bare Machir the father of Gilead:

The sons of Manasseh, i. e. grandchildren, as ver. 13. For both Ashriel and Zelophehad were the grandchildren of Machir son of Manasseh, Numb. xxvi. 29, &c.; xxvii. 1. Whom she bare, to wit, his wife, as may be thought, because his concubine is here opposed to her. Or, whom he got; for the Hebrew word yalad is sometimes used of men's begetting, as Gen. v. 18, &c. Compare Psal. ii. 7. But these and the following words may be otherwise rendered according to the Hebrew text, whom his concubine the Aramitess bare, who bare him (which ellipses are very frequent in the Hebrew) for meeth, of, or by Machir: so this was a differing Ashriel from him named Numb. xxvi. 31; for that was Gilead's son, and this his brother. The father of Gilead; a person so called, as is manifest from ver. 17; Numb. xxvi. 29.

15 And Machir took to wife the sister of Huppim and Shuppim, whose sister's name was Maachah; and the name of the second was Zelophehad: and Zelophehad had daughters.

The sister; which word is here fitly understood out of the following clause, where it is expressed, and she is called Maachah, who also is called the wife of Machir, ver. 16. The name of the second; of the second son or grandson of Machir; for so Zelophehad was, Numb. xxvi. 29, &c. Or Zelophehad is here called the second, because he was the younger brother of Ashriel, who was the eldest son of Hephher, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir. Had daughters, i. e. only daughters, and no sons.

16 And Maachah the wife of Machir bare a son, and she called his name Peresh; and the name of his brother was Sheresh; and his sons were Ulam and Rakem.

17 And the sons of Ulam; ^f Bedan.

¹¹ These were the sons of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh.

These, to wit, Ashriel and Zelophehad, named ver. 14, 15; the relative being here referred to the remoter antecedent, as is frequent in the Hebrew.

18 And his sister Hammoleketh bare Ishod, and ^g Abiezer, and Mahalah.

^{30, Jerer.} His sister, i. e. Gilead's sister. Ishod, and Abiezer, and Mahalah; understand, and Shemidah, out of the next verse.

19 And the sons of Shemidah were, Ahian, and Shechem, and Likhhi, and Aniam.

20 ¶ And ^h the sons of Ephraim; Shuthelah, and Bered his son, and Tahath his son, and Eladah his son, and Tahath his son, Bered his son; either, 1. The son of Shuthelah; and so Tahath the son of Bered; and so the rest, which make up seven succeeding generations. Or, 2. The son of Ephraim; and so Tahath is the son not of Bered, but of Ephraim, and so forward. And thus all these were brethren, and sons or grandchildren of Ephraim, living together at one time with their father. Object. This cannot be, because then Ephraim had two sons called Shuthelah, and two called Tahath. Answo. That might easily happen, either because the first Shuthelah and Tahath were dead before the other two of those names were born; or because two of them were Ephraim's sons, and two of them his grandchildren, called after their uncle's names. For this is certain, the name of sons is promiscuously used concerning immediate children, and grandchildren, and great-grandchildren.

21 ¶ And Zabad his son, and Shuthelah his son, and Ezer, and Elead, whom the men of Gath that were born in that land slew, because they came down to take away their cattle.

This history is not recorded elsewhere in Scripture, but it is in the ancient Hebrew writers, though mixed with many fables. The Philistines (one of whose cities this Gath was) and the Egyptians were next neighbours; and in those ancient times it was usual for such to make inroads one into another's country, and to carry thence what prey they could take, as we find both in Scripture and in profane writers. And as the Philistines had probably made such inroads formerly into Egypt, and particularly into the land of Goshen, which was the utmost part of Egypt bordering upon the Philistines' land; so the Israelites might requite them in the like kind; and particularly the children of Ephraim, either presuming upon their numbers and strength, or having possibly received the greatest injury from the Philistines in their last invasion, might make an attempt upon the Philistines to their own great loss, as is here related. And this seems to have happened a little before the Egyptian persecution, and before the reign of that new king mentioned Exod. i. 8. The Philistines are here called the men of Gath, either because they were subject to the king of Gath, as afterwards that people were, or because they lived about Gath. And this clause, that were born in that land, may be added emphatically, as the motive which made them more resolute and furious in their fight with the Ephraimites, because they fought in and for their own land, wherein all their wealth and concerns lay, and against those that unjustly endeavoured to turn them out of their native country.

22 And Ephraim their father mourned many days, and his brethren came to comfort him.

Ephraim their father; either, 1. That Ephraim of whom he speaks, ver. 20, whose sons are here named. But that to many seems hard, especially if these several sons, named ver. 20, 21, be understood successively, so as each man be the son of him who is named next and immediately before him, which seems most probable; for so here are seven successive generations of Ephraim, which it is not likely that Ephraim lived to see; for then he must have been near two hundred years old. Although it is not necessary that the persons here said to be slain should be that generation which was last mentioned; but the particle whom may belong to the other sons of Ephraim of the fourth, or fifth, or sixth generation. Nor is the word whom in the Hebrew text, which runs thus, and the men of Gath—slew them, i. e. the sons of Ephraim in the general, as they are expressed in the beginning of ver. 20, without respect to this or that particular generation. And the relative particle them may be referred not unto the persons last named, but unto some of the other and more remote persons; this being a common observation of Hebricians, that the relative oft belongs to the remoter antecedent. Or, 2. Zabad the father of the three persons and families last named, who might possibly have two names, and be called both Zabad and Ephraim. Or rather, the name of Ephraim may be put patronymically (as the learned speak) for the son and successor of Ephraim; who being now in Ephraim's stead the head of the tribe, as old Ephraim was in his time, might well be called by the same name. Thus Isaac is put for his son Jacob or Israel, Amos vii. 9, and Moses for the sons of Moses, Psal. xc. title, and David for his son Rehoboam, 1 Kings xii. 16, and for Christ, Jer. xxx. 9; Ezek. xxxiv. 23, and (as many think) Abraham for Jacob, Abraham's grandchild, Acts vii. 16. And these words, their father, seem to be added by way of distinction, to show that he meant not this of the old Ephraim, but of another, who was father to the three persons said to be slain, ver. 21. For if he had understood this of the first Ephraim, having called these the sons of Ephraim, it might seem superfluous and tautological to tell us that Ephraim was their father. His brethren, i. e. his kinsmen, as that word is frequently used.

23 ¶ And when he went in to his wife, she conceived, and bare a son, and he called his name Beriah, because it went evil with his house.

24 (And his daughter was Sherah, who built Beth-horon the nether, and the upper, and Uzzensherah.)

His daughter, i. e. his grandchild, or great-grandchild, for such are oft called sons or daughters in Scripture. Who built Beth-horon, i. e. rebuilt or repaired, which possibly she did in Joshua's time. And this work may be ascribed to her, because these works were done either by her design or contrivance, or by her instigation and influence upon her husband and brethren who did it.

25 And Rephah was his son, also Resheph, and Telah his son, and Tahan his son, 26 Laadan his son, Ammihud his son, Elishama his son, Elishama; the head of the tribe of Ephraim in the wilderness, Numb. i. 10.

27 ¶ Non his son, Jehoshuah his son.

28 ¶ And their possessions and habitations were, Beth-el and the towns thereof, and eastward ⁱ Naaran, and westward ^j Gezer, with the ^k towns thereof; Shechem ⁱ Josh. 16. 7. ^j Naarath. ^k Heb. daughters.

^f Or, Naa, Numb. 15. 8, 16.

¹ Or, Adasa, also and the towns thereof, unto \parallel Gaza and the towns thereof:

Their possessions, i. e. the portion allotted to the tribe of Ephraim. Beth-el; which stood in the border of Benjamin, but belonged to Ephraim. Unto Gaza, not that of the Philistines, which belonged to another tribe, and was remote from Ephraim; but another of the same name. Or rather Adasa, as it is in the margin of our Bible; the particle ad, here rendered unto, being a part of the name; for why should unto be put to this town, which is not put to any of the other?

29 And by the borders of the children of ^k Manassch, Beth-shean and her towns, ^l Taanach and her towns, ¹ Megiddo and her towns, Dor and her towns. In these dwelt the children of Joseph the son of Israel.

The children of Joseph, i. e. of Ephraim, Joseph's eldest son, who is sometimes called Joseph, as hath been noted before.

30 ¶ ^m The sons of Asher; Imnah, and Isuah, and Ishuai, and Beriah, and Serah their sister.

31 And the sons of Beriah; Heber, and Malchiel, who is the father of Birzavith.

32 And Heber begat Japhlet, and ⁿ Shomer, and Hotham, and Shua their sister.

33 And the sons of Japhlet; Pasach, and Bimhal, and Ashvath. These are the children of Japhlet.

34 And the sons of ^o Shamer; Ahi, and Rohgah, Jehubbah, and Aram.

35 And the sons of his brother Helem; Zophah, and Imna, and Shelesh, and Amal.

His brother; brother either of Shamer the eldest, namely, Hotham; or of Aram last mentioned.

36 The sons of Zophah; Suah, and Harnepher, and Shual, and Beri, and Imrah, 37 Bezer, and Hod, and Shamma, and Shilshah, and Ithran, and Beera.

38 And the sons of Jether; Jephunneh, and Pispah, and Ara.

39 And the sons of Ulla; Arah, and Haniel, and Rezia.

Ulla; another son of Jether, as may be gathered by the course of the genealogy, though he be not expressed with his brethren, ver. 38. See the like defect ver. 18, and 34.

40 All these were the children of Asher, heads of their father's house, choice and mighty men of valour, chief of the princes. And the number throughout the genealogy of them that were apt to the war and to battle was twenty and six thousand men.

CHAP. VIII.

The sons and chief men of Benjamin, 1—32. The stock of Saul and Jonathan, 33—40.

1400, &c. NOW Benjamin begat ^a Bela his first-born, Ashbel the second, and Aharah the third,

He had spoken something of the tribe of Benjamin before, chap. vii. 6, but now he treats of it again, and that more fully and exactly; partly for Saul's sake, who was of this tribe; and partly because this tribe adhered to David and the kingdom of Judah, and went with Judah into Babylon; and now were returned from thence in greater numbers than the other tribes, except Judah. Bela; so called by Moses; but the names of the rest vary from those in Moses; either because the same person had two several names, as hath been often noted; or because these were not the immediate sons of Benjamin, but his grandchildren, here mentioned in their parents' stead, possibly because they were more eminent than their parents.

2 Nohah the fourth, and Rapha the fifth.

3 And the sons of Bela were, \parallel Addar, ¹ Or, Arad, and Gera, and Abihud, ^{Gen. 43. 21.}

4 And Abishua, and Naaman, and Ahoah,

5 And Gera, and \parallel Shephuphan, and Huram. ¹ Or, Shupham, ^{Numb. 26. 39.} ^{See ch. 7. 12.}

6 And these are the sons of Ehud: these are the heads of the fathers of the inhabitants of Geba, and they removed them to ^b Manahath:

These are the sons; either those three last mentioned; or rather these following, ver. 7, because he here speaks of them who were removed, and they are said to be removed, ver. 7. ^b ch. 2. 52.

He describes the sons of Benjamin by the places of their habitation, without an exact account of their parents, because their genealogies were broken by that almost total extirpation of this tribe, Judg. xx. They removed them; either their fathers, or their heads and superiors, removed them; or they removed themselves; either because they were too numerous for that place, or because they desired to change their habitation, and hoped it would be for the better, and judged Manahath a more convenient place.

7 And Naaman, and Ahiah, and Gera, he removed them, and begat Uzza, and Abihud.

He removed them; either, 1. Their father; or, 2. Gera last mentioned, who, it seems, was the chief counsellor or promoter of this work. Begat Uzza and Abihud, when he was seated in Manahath.

8 And Shabaraim begat children in the country of Moab, after he had sent them away; Hushim and Baara were his wives.

In the country of Moab; whither he had removed himself, either at the same time when Elimelech did, Ruth i. 1, &c., or upon the same or like occasion. After he had sent them away; Ehud or Gera last mentioned. Hushim and Baara were his wives: others join these words with the former, and render the place thus, after he had sent them (to wit, his sons) away, with Hushim and Baara his wives, i. e. as he also sent his wives away from him; which may be here mentioned as a brand upon him, to show that he was without natural affection to his wives and children. And it seems the more probable that he divorced them, because we find him married to another wife, ver. 9.

9 And he begat of Hodesh his wife, Jobab, and Zibia, and Mesha, and Malcham, 10 And Jeuz, and Shachia, and Mirma. These were his sons, heads of the fathers.

11 And of Hushim he begat Abitub, and Elpaal.

12 The sons of Elpaal; Eber, and Misham, and Shamed, who built Ono, and Lod, with the towns thereof:

Of which see Ezra ii. 33; Neh. vii. 37; xi. 35.

13 Beriah also, and ^c Shema, who were heads of the fathers of the inhabitants of Aijalon, who drove away the inhabitants of Gath:

Aijalon; a place formerly belonging to the tribe of Dan, Josh. xix. 42; but after the return from Babylon possessed by the Benjamites, because both Dan and the rest of the ten tribes were yet for the generality of them in captivity, and but few of them returned. Who drove away the inhabitants of Gath; either, 1. At that time when they made such a slaughter among Ephraim's children, chap. vii. 21, and were possibly pursuing their victory, till they were driven back by these Benjamites, who came to the succour of their brethren. Or, 2. Now when they were returned from the captivity, and found the men of Gath possessed of Aijalon. Or, 3. At some other time not mentioned in Scripture.

- 14 And Ahio, Shashak, and Jeremoth,
 15 And Zebadiah, and Arad, and Ader, 16 And Michael, and Ispah, and Joha, the sons of Beriah ;
 17 And Zebadiah, and Meshullam, and Hezeki, and Heber,
 18 Ishmerai also, and Jezliah, and Jobab, the sons of Elpaal ;
 19 And Jakim, and Zichri, and Zabdi,
 20 And Elienai, and Zilthai, and Eliel,
 21 And Adaiah, and Beraiah, and
 Shimrath, the sons of || Shimhi ;
 22 And Ishpan, and Heber, and Eliel,
 23 And Abdon, and Zichri, and Hanan,
 24 And Hananiah, and Elam, and Antothijah, 25 And Iphedeiah, and Penuel, the sons of Shashak ;
 26 And Shamsherai, and Shehariah, and Atha-liah,
 27 And Jaresiah, and Eliah, and Zichri, the sons of Jeroham.
 28 These were heads of the fathers, by their generations, chief men. These dwelt in Jerusalem.

All these named from ver. 14, to this place.

- 29 And at Gibeon dwelt the father of Gibeon; whose ^dwife's name was Maachah :

The father of Gibeon, i. e. the chief or ruler of the Benjamites dwelling there.

- 30 And his firstborn son Abdon, and Zur, and Kish, and Baal, and Nadab,
 31 And Gedor, and Ahio, and || Zacher.
 32 And Mikloth begat || Shimeah. And these also dwelt with their brethren in Jerusalem, over against them.

With their brethren, i. e. with those other Lenjamites spoken of ver. 28. Over against them; in some street or part of Jerusalem, which was over against that where their brethren dwelt.

- 33 ¶ And ^eNer begat Kish, and Kish begat Saul, and Saul begat Jonathan, and Malchi-shua, and ^fAbinadab, and || Esh-baal.

- 34 And the son of Jonathan was || Mc-rib-baal; and Merib-baal begat ^gMicah.
 35 And the sons of Micah were, Pithon, and Melech, and || Tarea, and Ahaz.

- 36 And Ahaz begat ^hJehoadah; and Jehoadah begat Alemeth, and Azmaveth, and Zimri; and Zimri begat Moza,
 37 And Moza begat Binea: ⁱRapha was his son, Elcasah his son, Azel his son :

- 38 And Azel had six sons, whose names are these, Azrikam, Bocheru, and Ishmael, and Sheariah, and Obadiah, and Hanan. All these were the sons of Azel.

- 39 And the sons of Eshek his brother were,
 Ulam his firstborn, Jehush the second, and Eliphelet the third.

- 40 And the sons of Ulam were mighty men of valour, archers, and had many sons, and sons' sons, an hundred and fifty. All these are of the sons of Benjamin.

Archers, Heb. that tread the bow; for the bows of steel, which these used, required great strength to bend them; which therefore they did by treading the bow with their feet, and pulling the string with both their hands.

CHAP. IX.

*The chief of the tribe of Judah, Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manasseh, who returned from captivity, and dwelt at Jerusalem, 1—9. Also the priests and Levites, and how they executed their office in the temple at Jerusalem, 10—34.
 The family of Saul, 35—44.*

SO ^aall Israel were reckoned by genealogies; and, behold, they were written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah, who were carried away to Babylon for their transgression.

In the book of the kings of Israel and Judah; not in that sacred and canonical book so called, but (as hath been oft observed before) in the public records, wherein there was an account of that kingdom, and of the several families in it, according to their genealogies. Who were carried away,
 i. e. which tribe or people of Judah last mentioned.

- 2 ¶ ^bNow the first inhabitants that dwelt in their possessions in their cities were, the Israelites, the priests, Levites, and ^cthe Nethinims.

The first inhabitants; the first after the return from Babylon. That dwelt in their possessions in their cities, i. e. that took possession of their own lands and cities, which had been formerly allotted to them; but of late years had been taken from them for their sins, and possessed by other people. The Israelites, i. e. the common people of Judah and Israel, called here by the general name of Israelites, which was given to them before that unhappy division of the two kingdoms, and now is restored to them when the Israelites are united with the Jews in one and the same commonwealth, that so all the names and signs of their former division might be blotted out. And although the generality of the ten tribes were yet in captivity, yet divers of them were now returned; either such as had long before the captivity fled to Jerusalem to worship God, and joined themselves with Judah, as those 2 Chron. xi. 16, and others; or such as, upon Cyrus's general proclamation, associated themselves, and returned with those of Judah and Benjamin. The priests, Levites; these took possession of the cities or places belonging to them, as they had need and opportunity. The Nethinims; a certain order of men, either Gibeonites, or others joined with them, devoted to the service of God, and of his house, and of the priests and Levites; who, that they might attend upon their work without distraction, had certain places and possessions given to them; which they are now said to repossess.

- 3 And in ^dJerusalem dwelt of the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin, and of the children of Ephraim, and Manasseh ;

i. e. Some of each of these tribes; either such as offered themselves, or such as were chosen by lot: see Neh. xi.
 1, 2.

- 4 Uthai the son of Ammihud, the son of Omri, the son of Imri, the son of Bani, of the children of Pharez the son of Judah.

That there is so great a diversity of names between this catalogue and that Neh. xi., may be ascribed to two causes:
 1. To the custom of the Hebrews, who used very frequently to give two or three several names to one person; and, 2.
 To the change of times; for here they are named who came up at the first return; but many of those in Nehemiah might be such as returned afterward, and came and dwelt either instead of the persons here named, who might be then dead, or gone from Jerusalem, or with them.

- 5 And of the Shilonites; Asaiah the firstborn, and his sons.

Or, Shelanites, as they are called from Shelah, Numb.
 xxvi. 20. Asaiah, called also Maaseiah, Neh. xi. 5.

of Meshullam, the son of Hodaviah, the son of Hasenuah, Sallu the son of Meshullam, who is mentioned, but described by other parents, Neh. xi. 7, or at least by persons under other names. Possibly these were his more immediate, and those his more remote parents; or he might be born of one, and adopted by another. For this is certain, men are sometimes in Scripture called the sons of those who adopted them, or whose right of inheritance fell to them.

8 And Ibneiah the son of Jeroham, and Elah the son of Uzzi, the son of Michri, and Meshullam the son of Shephathiah, the son of Reuel, the son of Ibnijah;

9 And their brethren, according to their generations, nine hundred and fifty and six. All these men were chief of the fathers in the house of their fathers.

Nine hundred and fifty and six: they are reckoned but nine hundred and twenty-eight in Neh. xi. 8, either because there he mentions only those that were by lot determined to dwell at Jerusalem, to whom he here adds those who freely offered themselves to it; see Neh. xi. 1, 2; or because some of the persons and families first placed there were dead or extinguished, or else removed from Jerusalem upon some emergent occasion.

^e Neh. 11. 10, &c. 10 ¶ And of the priests; Jedaiah, and Jehoiarib, and Jachin, ^f Neh. 11. 11, Seraiah. 11 And ¶ Azariah the son of Hilkiah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Zadok, the son of Meraioth, the son of Ahitub, the ruler of the house of God;

Azariah; the same called Seraiah, Neh. xi. 11. Hilkiah; either of him in Josiah's time, 2 Kings xxii. 8, or rather another of the same name. The ruler of the house of God; or, a ruler in the house of God; not the high priest, who was Ezra, Ezra iii. 8, but a chief ruler under him; either the second priest, as such are called, Numb. iii. 32; or the head of one of the twenty-four families or courses of the priests.

12 And Adaiah the son of Jeroham, the son of Pashur, the son of Malchijah, and Maasai the son of Adiel, the son of Jahzerah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Meshillemith, the son of Immer;

The son of Pashur, i. e. his great-grandson, as appears from Neh. xi. 12, 13.

13 And their brethren, heads of the house of their fathers, a thousand and seven hundred and threescore; † very able men for the work of the service of the house of God.

⁺ Heb. mighty men of valour. Very able men, Heb. mighty men of valour; which is here noted as an excellent qualification for their place; because the priests might meet with great opposition and difficulty in the faithful discharge of their office, in the execution of the censures upon all impure persons without exception, and in preserving sacred things from violation by the touch of forbidden hands; of which see an eminent instance in Azariah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 17, &c.

14 And of the Levites; Shemaiah the son of Hasshub, the son of Azrikam, the son of Hashabiah, of the sons of Merari;

15 And Bakbakkar, Heresh, and Galal, and Mattaniah the son of Micah, the son of Zichri, the son of Asaph;

16 And Obadiah the son of Shemaiah, the son of Galal, the son of Jeduthun, and Berechiah the son of Asa, the son of Elkannah, that dwelt in the villages of the Netophathites.

The Netophathites were in Judah, chap. ii. 54. Here they now dwelt, either because their proper cities were not yet built, or because they were not yet numerous enough to replenish them.

17 And the porters were, Shallum, and Akkub, and Talmon, and Ahiman, and their brethren: Shallum was the chief;

Porters; whose office it was to keep all the gates of the temple, that no unclean person or thing might enter into it.

18 Who hitherto waited in the king's gate eastward: they were porters in the companies of the children of Levi.

In the king's gate eastward; in the east gate of the temple, which was so called, either because it was the chief and most magnificent of all the gates, or because the kings of Judah used to go to the temple through that gate, 2 Kings xvi. 18; compare Ezek. xlv. 1, 2. Under this gate he comprehends all the rest, which also were guarded by these porters. In the companies, or, according to the companies, or orders, or courses, i. e. they kept the gates successively, according to that method into which themselves and the rest of their brethren the Levites were distributed, for the more convenient management of their several offices; among which this of the porters was one.

19 And Shallum the son of Kore, the son of Ebiasaph, the son of Korah, and his brethren, of the house of his father, the Korahites, were over the work of the service, keepers of the † gates of the tabernacle: and their fathers, being over the host of the LORD, were keepers of the entry.

⁺ Heb. thresholds. Keepers of the gates of the tabernacle; or, who were, to wit, in time past, which is expressed in a like case, ver. 20, when the tabernacle was standing, before the temple was built. Their fathers; the Kohathites, of whom see on Numb. iv. 4. Over the host of the Lord, or, with (as this Hebrew particle is oft used) the host, &c., i. e. when the Israelites were in the wilderness, encamped in a military manner round about the tabernacle, with or among whom these were then placed. Keepers of the entry, i. e. of the veil by which they entered into the tabernacle; which he calls the entry distinctively, because then there were no gates. The meaning is, that all things were now restored to their primitive order and institution; and the several persons took those places and offices upon them, which their ancestors had before them.

20 And † Phinehas the son of Eleazar ^f Num. 31. 6. was the ruler over them in time past, and the LORD was with him.

Over them, i. e. over all the porters, and other Levites and priests before mentioned. The Lord was with him, to direct, and assist, and bless him in the discharge of his place; which seems here related to encourage his successor, and consequently all the priests and Levites of this time, to go on courageously and resolutely in their work, not doubting but God will stand by them as he had done by their fathers.

21 And Zechariah the son of Meshelemiah was porter of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

To wit, in the time of David, as the following verse showeth. See chap. xxvi. 1, 2; xxvii. 2. Porter, i. e. chief porter. Of the door of the tabernacle, i. e. of the door which led out of the priests' court into the tabernacle, in which the ark was placed, 2 Sam. vi. 17.

22 All these which were chosen to be porters in the gates were two hundred and twelve. These were reckoned by their genealogy in their villages, whom ^g David and Samuel ^h the seer † did ordain in their † set office.

^g ch. 26. 1, 2. ^h 1 Sam. 9. 9. ⁺ Heb. founder. [†] Or, trust. In their villages; where their usual residence was, and whence they came to Jerusalem in their courses. Did ordain: in the times of the judges there was much disorder and confusion, both in the Jewish state and church, and the Levites came to the tabernacle promiscuously, and as their inclinations or occasions brought them. But Samuel, the best of judges, having some prospect and good hopes of deliverance from their enemies, and of a happy settlement of the Israelitish church and nation, and observing that the Levites were greatly increased, he began to think of establishing some order among the Levites in their ministrations about the tabernacle. And these intentions of his probably were communicated by him to David, who after Samuel's death, and his own peaceable settlement in his throne, revived and perfected Samuel's design, and took care to put it in execution. In their set office, Heb. in their faith, or faithfulness, i. e. either, 1. In their office, which is called faithfulness, because this is required in that office. Or, 2. In the faithful discharge of their duty, and in obedience to the will of God, signified to them by revelation, or by the Spirit, as it is said of David, 1 Chron. xxviii. 12, which they received by faith, and accordingly designed, and David executed it. And so this is added to show that this was no human invention, as some might conceive, but a Divine appointment, to which all ought to submit.

23 So they and their children had the oversight of the gates of the house of the LORD, namely, the house of the tabernacle, by wards.

To wit, in David's time. The house of the tabernacle: this is added to explain what he means by the house of the LORD; not that tabernacle which David had set up for the ark, but that more solemn tabernacle, which Moses had made by God's express command and most particular direction; which in David's time was at Gibeon; in which God was and would be worshipped until the temple was built. See 1 Kings iii. 2, &c.; 2 Chron. i. 3, 5, &c. By wards, i. e. by turns or courses, each of them at his gate, and in his appointed time.

24 In four quarters were the porters, toward the east, west, north, and south.

The porters, i. e. the chief porters, as this is explained, ver. 26.

25 And their brethren, which were in their villages, were to come after seven days from time to time with them.

From their several villages to the place of worship. After seven days: every sabbath or seventh day the courses were changed, and the new comers were to tarry till the next sabbath day. See 2 Kings xi. 5, 7, 9. With them, i. e. to be with them, i. e. with the chief porters, who always abode in the place of God's worship, and to minister to them.

26 For these Levites, the four chief porters, were in their set office, and were over the chambers and treasuries of the house of God.

Were in their set office, i. e. these were constantly upon the place, and in the execution of their office, that so they might oversee and direct the inferior porters in their work. Or, as others render the words, agreeably to the Hebrew text, For these (i. e. their brethren, ver. 25) were under the charge, or committed to the trust of the four chief porters, who also were Levites, as their brethren were; whereas the chief of all of them was a priest. Either way these words contain a reason of what was said, ver. 25, why the rest were to come to these, and to be with them. Treasuries; in which the sacred utensils, and other treasures belonging to the temple, were kept.

27 ¶ And they lodged round about the house of God, because the charge was upon them, and the opening thereof every morning pertained to them.

They lodged round about the house of God; therefore they were obliged to constant residence in the place; and were not permitted to dwell in the villages, as their brethren were.

28 And certain of them had the charge of the ministering vessels, that they should bring them in and out by tale.

29 Some of them also were appointed to oversee the vessels, and all the instruments of the sanctuary, and the fine flour, and the wine, and the oil, and the frankincense, and the spices.

30 And some of the sons of the priests made the ointment of the spices.

This is added to prevent a mistake, and to show that although the Levites were intrusted with the keeping of this ointment, yet none but the priests could make it. See Exod. xxx. 22, &c.

31 And Mattithiah, one of the Levites, who was the firstborn of Shallum the Kohathite, had the set office over the things that were made in the pans.

i. e. Was to take care that fine flour might be provided and kept safely and well, that when occasion required they might make cakes in pans to be offered to the Lord; of which see on Lev. ii. 5.

32 And other of their brethren, of the sons of the Kohathites, were over the shewbread, to prepare it every sabbath.

Of which see Exod. xxxv. 13.

33 And these are the singers, chief of the fathers of the Levites, who remaining in the chambers were free: for they were employed in that work day and night.

These, i. e. others of the Levites; of whose several offices he had spoken before. Are the singers; or rather, were, which is understood, and all along in the foregoing and following verses, and again in this very verse. In the chambers; where they waited, that they might be ready to come whensoever they were called to the service of God in the tabernacle. Were free from all trouble and employment, that they might wholly attend upon the proper work. Employed in that work; either composing or ordering sacred songs; or actually singing; or teaching others to sing them. Day and night, i. e. continually, and particularly in the morning and evening, the two times appointed for solemn service and offerings.

34 These chief fathers of the Levites were chief throughout their generations; these dwelt at Jerusalem.

Upon their return from Babylon they were not suffered to choose their habitations in the country, as others were, but were obliged to settle themselves at Jerusalem, that they might constantly attend upon God's service there, and be ready to instruct the younger Levites in their office, as they needed or desired it.

35 ¶ And in Gibeon dwelt the father of Gibeon, Jehiel, whose wife's name was Maachah:

In this and the following verses to the end of this chapter he repeats what he said before, chap. viii. 29, &c., concerning Saul's genealogy, that he might make way for the following history; which is a figure called epanalepsis, which is frequent both in sacred and profane writers.

36 And his firstborn son Abdon, then Zur, and Kish, and Baal, and Ner, and Nadab, 37 And Gedor, and Ahio, and Zechariah, and Mikloth.

38 And Mikloth begat Shimeam. And they also dwelt with their brethren at Jerusalem, over against their brethren.

39 ¶ And Ner begat Kish; and Kish begat Saul; and Saul begat Jonathan, and Malchi-shua, and Abinadab, and Esh-baal.

40 And the son of Jonathan was Merib-baal: and Merib-baal begat Micah.

CHAP. X.

Saul's overthrow and death, 1—7. The Philistines triumph over Saul, 8—10. The kindness of Jabesh-gilead towards Saul and his sons: his sin, 11—14.

1056. NOW ^a the Philistines fought against Israel; and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and fell down || slain in mount Gilboa.

Of this and the following verses till ver. 13, see my notes on 1 Sam. xxxi., where we have the same thing expressed almost in the same words.

2 And the Philistines followed hard after Saul, and after his sons; and the Philistines slew Jonathan, and || Abinadab, and Malchi-shua, the sons of Saul.

3 And the battle went sore against Saul, and the † archers † hit him, and he was wounded of the archers.

4 Then said Saul to his armourbearer, Draw thy sword, and thrust me through therewith; lest these uncircumcised come and || abuse me. But his armourbearer would not; for he was sore afraid. So Saul took a sword, and fell upon it.

5 And when his armourbearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell likewise on the sword, and died.

6 So Saul died, and his three sons, and all his house died together.

All his house, i. e. all his children, to wit, then present with him, namely, his three sons, as it is expressed, 1 Sam. xxxi. 6. For it is evident that Ish-bosheth and Mephibosheth were not slain. But nothing is more common in Scripture and all authors, than to understand all of a great and most considerable part.

7 And when all the men of Israel that were in the valley saw that they fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, then they forsook their cities, and fled: and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

In the valley; which was beneath Mount Gilboa, where the fight was, ver. 1.

8 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his sons fallen in mount Gilboa.

9 And when they had stripped him, they took his head, and his armour, and sent into the land of the Philistines round about, to carry tidings unto their idols, and to the people.

10 ^b And they put his armour in the house of their gods, and fastened his head in the temple of Dagon.

And his body severed from his head to the wall of Bethshan, 1 Sam. xxxi. 10.

11 ¶ And when all Jabesh-gilead heard all that the Philistines had done to Saul,

12 They arose, all the valiant men, and took away the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, and brought them to Jabesh, and buried their bones under the oak in Jabesh, and fasted seven days.

To wit, every day till evening, after the manner of the Jewish fasts.

13 ¶ So Saul died for his transgression which he † committed against the LORD, ^{† Heb. transgressed.} even against the word of the LORD, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, ^d to enquire of it; ^{d 1 Sam. 28. 7.}

Saul died for his transgression: the sense is, Wonder not that Saul fell by the hands of the Philistines, who were armed against him by his own sin and by God's vengeance for it. Against the word of the Lord; against God's express, and plain, and positive command; which is a great aggravation of any sin. For asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit; which also was contrary to a manifest command, Lev. xix. 31, and moreover, contrary to his own conscience, which was so fully convinced hereof, that he had endeavoured the utter extirpation of all such persons, in pursuance of God's law. See 1 Sam. xxviii. 9. To inquire of it, concerning the event of the approaching battle.

14 And enquired not of the LORD: therefore he slew him, and ^e turned the kingdom unto David the son of † Jesse. ^{e 1 Sam. 15. 28. 2 Sam. 3. 9. 10. & 5. 3. † Heb. Iai.}

Inquired not of the Lord. Object. Saul inquired of the Lord, 1 Sam. xxviii. 6. Answ. He did so, but not in a right manner, not humbly and penitently, not diligently and importunately, not patiently and perseveringly; but when God would not answer him speedily, he gives it over, and goes from God to the devil. Compare 1 Sam. xiv. 18, 19. Such an inconsiderable and trifling inquiry as Saul made, is justly accounted to be no inquiry at all; as they are said not to eat the Lord's supper, 1 Cor. xi. 20, who did eat it in a sinful and irregular manner.

CHAP. XI.

David made king at Hebron; by Joab's valour winneth the castle of Zion from the Jebusites; repaireth the city of Jerusalem, 1—9. A catalogue of his mighty men, 10—47.

THEN ^a all Israel gathered themselves to David unto Hebron, saying, Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh. ^{1048. a 2 Sam. 5. 1.}

All Israel, i. e. all the tribes of Israel, as it is expressed, 2 Sam. v. 1, i. e. their elders, as it is here said, ver. 3, and officers, and a great multitude of the soldiers and people.

2 And moreover † in time past, even when Saul was king, thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel: and the LORD thy God said unto thee, Thou shalt ^b feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be ruler over my people Israel. ^{† Heb. both yesterday and the third day. † Or, rule. b Ps. 78. 71.}

God said unto thee, or, concerning thee; for it is apparent that they knew of it; and therefore many of them opposed David hitherto against their own consciences.

3 Therefore came all the elders of Israel to the king to Hebron; and David made a covenant with them in Hebron before the LORD; and ^c they anointed David king over Israel, according to the word of the LORD † by ^d Samuel. ^{c 2 Sam. 5. 3. † Heb. by the hand of. d 1 Sam. 16. 1, 12, 13. e 2 Sam. 5. 6. f Judg. 1. 21. & 19. 10.}

4 ¶ And David and all Israel ^e went to Jerusalem, which is Jebus; ^e where the Jebusites were, the inhabitants of the land.

Of this and the three following verses see the notes on 2 Sam. v. 6, &c.

5 And the inhabitants of Jebus said to David, Thou shalt not come hither. Nevertheless David took the castle of Zion, which is the city of David.

6 And David said, Whosoever smiteth the Jebusites first shall be † chief and captain. So Joab the son of Zeruiah went first up, and was chief.

Before this he was one of David's chief captains. 2 Sam. iii. 22, 23, and general of the forces of Judah; but now he is made captain-general of all the forces of Israel and Judah.

7 And David dwelt in the castle; therefore they called || it the city of David.

8 And he built the city round about, even from Millo round about: and Joab † repaired the rest of the city.

9 So David † waxed greater and greater: for the LORD of hosts was with him.

10 ¶ These also are the chief of the mighty men whom David had, who || strengthened themselves with him in his kingdom, and with all Israel, to make him king, according to ^b the word of the LORD concerning Israel.

Who strengthened themselves with him in his kingdom; who helped him with all their might to settle him in his kingdom. With all Israel; in conjunction with all those loyal Israelites who joined with David; of whom see the next chapter.

11 And this is the number of the mighty men whom David had; Jashobeam, || an Hachmonite, the chief of the captains: he lifted up his spear against three hundred slain by him at one time.

An Hachmonite; called the Tachmonite, and Adino the Ezrite, 2 Sam. xxiii. 8. Slain by him, to wit, by his own hand, five hundred more being slain by others then joining with him, who pursued the victory that he alone got, and in the pursuit slew five hundred, both which sums make up the eight hundred numbered 2 Sam. xxiii. 8, the slaughter of all which is justly ascribed to him, because it was the effect of his valour. But concerning that and other differences about these persons or things, see my notes on 2 Sam. xxiii.

12 And after him was Eleazar the son of Dodo, the Ahohite, who was one of the three mighties.

13 He was with David at || Pas-dammim, and there the Philistines were gathered together to battle, where was a parcel of ground full of barley; and the people fled from before the Philistines.

14 And they || set themselves in the midst of that parcel, and delivered it, and slew the Philistines; and the LORD saved them by a great || deliverance.

15 ¶ Now || three of the thirty captains ⁱ went down to the rock to David, into the cave of Adullam; and the host of the Philistines encamped ^k in the valley of Rephaim.

16 And David was then in the hold, and the Philistines' garrison was then at Beth-lehem.

17 And David longed, and said, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, that is at the gate!

18 And the three brake through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: but David would not drink of it, but poured it out to the LORD,

19 And said, My God forbid it me, that I should do this thing: shall I drink the blood of these men † that have put their lives in jeopardy? for with the jeopardy of their lives they brought it. Therefore he would not drink it. These things did these three mightiest.

Heb. these three mighties, to wit, last mentioned, whereof one was Abishai, ver. 20; for the acts of two of the first three are here passed over, being recorded 2 Sam. xxiii.

20 ¶ And Abishai the brother of Joab, he was chief of the three: for lifting up his spear against three hundred, he slew them, and had a name among the three.

He slew them; he vanquished them all, and slew a great number of them; though it be not said that he slew them all at one time, as it is said of Jashobeam, above, ver. 11.

21 ^m Of the three, he was more honourable than the two; for he was their captain: howbeit he attained not to the first three.

He did not equal them in valiant exploits. 22 Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man of Kabzeel, † who had done many acts; ⁿ he slew two lion-like men of Moab: also he went down and slew a lion in a pit in a snowy day.

23 And he slew an Egyptian, † a man of great stature, five cubits high; and in the Egyptian's hand was a spear like a weaver's beam; and he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear.

24 These things did Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and had a name among the three mighties.

Had a name, i. e. was greatly reputed; for though he did not equal Abishai, one of these three, as appears by ver. 20, 21, yet he did excel the third of them, and all the thirty here following.

25 Behold, he was honourable among the thirty, but attained not to the first three: and David set him over his guard.

Heb. his hearing, or obedience, i. e. those that were always ready to hear and obey or execute his commands, to wit, the guards of his body.

26 ¶ Also the valiant men of the armies were, ° Asahel the brother of Joab, Elhanan the son of Dodo of Beth-lehem,

27 || Shammoth the || Harorite, Helez the || Pelonite,

Uriah the Hittite; the last of that catalogue in 2 Sam. xxiii. 39. But here some others are added to the number, because though they were not of the thirty, yet they were men of great valour and renown amongst David's commanders.

42 Adina the son of Shiza the Reubenite, a captain of the Reubenites, and thirty with him, Thirty captains, who were under him as their colonel.

43 Hanan the son of Maachah, and Joshaphat the Mithnite,

44 Uzzia the Ashterathite, Shama and Jehiel the sons of Hothan the Aroerite,

The Aroerite; so called possibly because his station and quarters were upon the river Aroer beyond Jordan, being placed there for the defence of those parts.

45 Jediael the || son of Shimri, and Joha his brother, the Tizite,

46 Eliel the Mahavite, and Jeribai, and Joshaviah, the sons of Elnaam, and Ithmah the Moabite,

So called, either because he was by birth a Moabite, though now proselyted to the true religion, or from some eminent service done by him against the Moabites, as among the Romans Scipio was called Asiatic and African, because of his great achievements and victories over those parts and people.

47 Eliel, and Obed, and Jasiel the Mesobaite.

Could use both the right hand and the left, with like nimbleness and certainty. Compare Judg. iii. 15; xx. 16. Of 8 And of the Gadites there separated themselves unto David into the hold to the wilderness men of might, and men † of war fit for the battle, that could handle shield and buckler, whose faces were like the faces of lions, and were † as swift as the roes upon the mountains;

+ Heb. of the host. d 2 Sam. 2. 18.

+ Heb. as the roes upon the mountains to make haste.

Separated themselves from Saul, to whom they had hitherto adhered; and from their brethren of their own tribe, who yet maintained Saul's cause; and from their families, and the places where they lived, from whom they went to David. Into the hold to the wilderness, or, into the hold of the wilderness, i. e. either to the cave of Adullam or Engedi; or rather to Ziklag, as appears from ver. 11, which was in the wilderness of Judah, which is here called the hold, or the fortress, which name is also given to the city of David, 1 Chron. xi. 7, the Hebrew word being the same both here and there. Whose faces were like the faces of lions; who were full of courage, and by the majesty and fierceness of their countenances terrified their adversaries. As swift as the roes upon the mountains: as their very looks daunted their enemies, and put them to flight, so they could easily pursue and overtake and destroy them in their flight.

9 Ezer the first, Obadiah the second, Eliab the third,

10 Mishmannah the fourth, Jeremiah the fifth,

11 Attai the sixth, Eliel the seventh,

12 Johanan the eighth, Elzabad the ninth,

13 Jeremiah the tenth, Machbanai the eleventh.

14 These were of the sons of Gad, captains of the host: || one of the least was over an hundred, and the greatest over a thousand.

1 Or, one that was least could resist an hundred, and the greatest a thousand.

Not that they brought now so many men with them; but either, 1. They had hitherto been captains or colonels under Saul, or in the established militia or bands of their tribe. Or, 2. They were so afterwards under David, who for their valour and fidelity thus advanced them.

15 These are they that went over Jordan in the first month, when it had † overflown all his ° banks; and they put to flight all them of the vallies, both toward the east, and toward the west.

† Heb. filled over. e Josh. 3. 15.

They that went over Jordan, to wit, in Saul's time, when, it seems, the enemies of the Israelites had made an inroad, and done some mischiefs to the Israelites beyond Jordan, to whose help these then came. When it had overflown all his banks; as it commonly did about that time. See Josh. iii. 15; iv. 18; Jer. xlix. 19. This is noted either as a description of the time when this was done, it being usual with historians to note the circumstances of great actions; or as an aggravation of the fact. And possibly these, being men of great nimbleness and dexterity, did swim over Jordan, through their ardent desire to help their brethren, and to fight with their enemies. All them of the valleys, i. e. the people that lived in the valleys or deserts beyond Jordan, who, as it seems, when Saul was engaged against the Philistines, took that advantage to fall upon the Israelites beyond Jordan. Toward the east, and toward the west; either, 1. The people that lived more eastward, and remote from Jordan, and those who lived more westward, or nearer to it. Or, 2. Them made they fly several ways, some eastward, some westward, as they saw the way open for them. See Deut. xxviii. 7, 25.

And answered, i. e. spake, as that word is oft used in Scripture, even of him that speaketh first. Mine heart shall be knit unto you; I shall ever esteem and love you, and show this by my actions to you hereafter. If ye be come to betray me to mine enemies; which your number, and quality, and near relation to Saul gives me some cause to suspect. There is no wrong in mine hands; I have done no injury to Saul, nor to you; but have spared him and you when it was in my power to have destroyed you. The God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it, to wit, by his hand and power manifested for me and against you for your perfiduousness.

The Spirit came upon Amasai; not only saving graces, but other heroic and generous motions, are ascribed to God's Spirit, which here stirred up in him a more than ordinary greatness and presentness of mind and resolution. They God helpeth thee; we have observed God's singular and gracious care of thee, and kindness to thee, and if we should oppose thee, we should be fighters against God and his word and providence. Captains of the band, i. e. of those forces which they brought with them. 19 And there fell some of Manasseh to David, when he came with the Philistines against Saul to battle: but they helped them not: for the lords of the Philistines upon advisement sent him away, saying, He will fall to his master Saul † to the jeopardy of our heads.

They helped them not, i. e. the Manassites here named, and the rest of David's forces, to whom they had now joined themselves, did not help the Philistines in battle, as David had pretended to do.

20 As he went to Ziklag, there fell to him of Manasseh, Adnah, and Jozabad, and Jediael, and Michael, and Jozabad, and Elihu, and Zilthai, captains of the thousands that were of Manasseh.

Or, with a band or troop of soldiers, which they brought along with them to David's assistance. They were all mighty men of valour; therefore they readily came to David's help. Were captains in the host; therefore they brought others along with them.

22 For at that time day by day there came to David to help him, until it was a great host, like the host of God.

At that time, i. e. while he was at Ziklag, and in his march to Hebron, and principally at Hebron, as the next verse explains it. Like the host of God, i. e. innumerable, like the stars or angels, both which are called God's hosts. Otherwise, the host of God, i. e. a very great host, great things being so called, as cedars, mountains, &c. of God. But the particle of likeness here added excludes this sense, for it had been very improper to say, a great host like a great host, i. e. like itself.

24 The children of Judah that bare shield and spear were six thousand and eight hundred, ready † armed to the war.

|| Or, prepared.

Who came hither in the name of all their brethren; for that whole tribe stuck to David at his very first coming to Hebron.

25 Of the children of Simeon, mighty men of valour for the war, seven thousand and one hundred.

26 Of the children of Levi four thousand and six hundred.

27 And Jehoiada was the leader of the Aaronites, and with him were three thousand and seven hundred;

The leader of the Aaronites; not the high priest, for that was Abiathar, 1 Sam. xxiii. 6; but one of eminent place under him, and who had a great power and interest among his brethren.

28 And Zadok, a young man mighty of valour, and of his father's house twenty and two captains.

Zadok; thought to be the same who was made high priest in Solomon's time, 1 Kings ii. 35; which if true, he was very young at this time. Twenty and two captains, whom he brought along with him.

29 And of the children of Benjamin, the † kindred of Saul, three thousand: for hitherto † the greatest part of them had kept the ward of the house of Saul.

+ Heb. a multitude of them.

o 2 Sam. 2.

i. e. Endeavoured to keep the crown in their own tribe, and in Saul's family.

30 And of the children of Ephraim twenty thousand and eight hundred, mighty men of valour, † famous throughout the house of their fathers.

+ Heb. men of names.

31 And of the half tribe of Manasseh eighteen thousand, which were expressed by name, to come and make David king.

Of the half tribe of Manasseh, which was within Jordan; for of the other half beyond Jordan he speaks ver. 37. Which were expressed by name; which were not ashamed nor afraid publicly to own David, first by putting their names to some paper presented to them for that purpose, and then by marching to him to Hebron.

32 And of the children of Issachar, ^{p Esth. 1.13.} which were men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do; the heads of them were two hundred; and all their brethren were at their commandment.

Understanding of the times; either, 1. Skill in the stars, and several seasons and changes of the air; which might be of good use in husbandry, to which this tribe was addicted, Gen. xlix. 14; Deut. xxxiii. 18. Or rather, 2. Political prudence to discern and embrace the fit seasons for all actions; as appears, 1. From the following words, to know what, not only their own tribe, but all Israel ought to do. 2. By the great authority and command which they had over all their brethren upon this account, as it here follows. 3. Because this is so considerable a circumstance in all human, and especially in public, affairs, that the success or disappointment of them depends very much upon the right or wrong timing of them, and therefore this is a very fit expression to signify their great prudence. And particularly they showed this point of their wisdom at this time; for as they had adhered to Saul whilst he lived, as knowing the time was not yet come for David to take possession of the kingdom; and as they could not join themselves to David whilst Abner lived, and was potent, and had the command of the other tribes, wherewith they were encompassed; so as soon as he was dead, and they had opportunity to declare themselves, they owned David for their king. 4. By the like use of this phrase, Esth. i. 13.

33 Of Zebulun, such as went forth to battle, ^{¶ Or, rangers of battle, or, ranged in battle.} expert in war, with all instruments of war, fifty thousand, which could ^{¶ Or, set the battle in array.} keep rank: they were ^{† Heb. without a heart and a heart. Ps. 12. 3.} not of double heart.

Of Zebulun fifty thousand; for this tribe being next to that of Issachar, which was generally well affected to David, were probably very much swayed by their opinion and advice. Which could keep rank, or, which were disposed, or prepared, or ordered for battle, or to fight for David, if occasion so required. Not of double heart, Heb. without a heart and a heart; which may relate either, 1. To the whole body of them; they were all of one heart and one mind towards David, not some for him, and others secretly against him, but all with one soul and one consent adhered to him. Or, 2. To the same particular persons; they were each of them sincerely loyal to David, and did not dissemble with David, pretending to be for him, whilst in their hearts they favoured Saul's family; which possibly some of those who came to Hebron did. Or this is particularly noted of this tribe, because they lay under some suspicion in this matter, as also some of the other tribes did; and therefore the like testimony is given to all of them, ver. 38.

34 And of Naphtali a thousand captains, and with them with shield and spear thirty and seven thousand.

35 And of the Danites expert in war twenty and eight thousand and six hundred.

36 And of Asher, such as went forth to battle, ^{¶ Or, keeping their rank.} expert in war, forty thousand.

37 And on the other side of Jordan, of the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and of the half tribe of Manasseh, with all manner of instruments of war for the battle, an hundred and twenty thousand.

38 All these men of war, that could keep rank, came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king over all Israel: and all the rest also of Israel were of one heart to make David king.

To wit, after the death of Abner and Ish-bosheth.

39 And there they were with David three days, eating and drinking: for their brethren had prepared for them.

40 Moreover they that were nigh them, even unto Issachar and Zebulun and Naphtali, brought bread on asses, and on camels, and on mules, and on oxen, and ^{¶ Or, victual of meat.} meat, meal, cakes of figs, and bunches of raisins, and wine, and oil, and oxen, and sheep abundantly: for there was joy in Israel.

They that were nigh them; that lived not far from Hebron, the place where they now were. Unto Issachar and Zebulun and Naphtali: this is added by way of amplification and explication, to show that he did not understand this of those Israelites only who lived in the neighbourhood of Hebron, but of those that lived at some distance, yet were nearer to Hebron than some of the other tribes here named. On oxen; which though not commonly used in this manner, nor fit for such purposes, now they so used, because the quantity of provisions which they brought was very great, as the numbers of the people at Hebron were, and horses they had few in Israel, and most of their asses, and camels, and mules here mentioned probably were used to carry divers men, or women and children, to this great, and public, and happy solemnity. There was joy in Israel; partly because their civil wars were wholly ended, and they were all united under one king; and partly because they had now a king of eminent valour, and piety, and felicity, and therefore expected to be saved from all their enemies and calamities, as they were.

CHAP. XIII.

David fetcheth the ark from Kirjath-jearim with great solemnity, 1—8. Uzza being smitten, the ark is left at the house of Obed-edom, 9—14.

AND David consulted with the captains of thousands and hundreds, and with every leader. ^{1045.}

Or, governor or elder of the people.

2 And David said unto all the congregation of Israel, if it seem good unto you, and that it be of the LORD our God, † let us send abroad unto our brethren every where, that are left in all the land of Israel, and with them also to the priests and Levites which are † in their cities and suburbs, that they may gather themselves unto us: ^{† Heb. let us break forth and send. a 1 Sam. 31. 1. Is. 37. 4. † Heb. in the cities of their suburbs.}

Unto all the congregation of Israel, i. e. unto all the people then assembled with him at Hebron. This story is mentioned in another place, in 2 Sam. v., vi., even after the taking of Jerusalem and the two first fights with the Philistines, whereas here it is placed before the latter, and there is no mention here of the former. The matter may be thus conceived. There being now a great and general concourse of all Israel, and David being now established in his throne with universal consent and applause, he begins with God, and his first thoughts and cares are about religion and the ark, then the great instrument and ornament of it, and takes the opportunity of this assembly to desire their advice and concurrence with him in it, that the ark might be brought either to Hebron, which then was the royal city; or to Jerusalem, which, as probably he told them, he was resolved to besiege, and doubted not, by God's help, to take. After this was proposed by the king, and accepted by the people, this great assembly was dismissed, only some of them David reserved to go with him against Jerusalem, which accordingly he did, and succeeded in his enterprise, as is related, 1 Sam. v. But before this resolution could be executed, the Philistines came and fought twice with David, as is related, 1 Sam. v. 17, &c., and here, chap. xiv. 8, &c.

And after they were repulsed with great loss and shame. David sets upon the execution of that which before he had resolved, and, in order to it, calls another general assembly of the people. And that it be of the Lord our God, i. e. if this translation of the ark be pleasing to God, which I purpose to inquire by the Urim, after the manner, and to act accordingly. Let us send abroad, Heb. let us break out and send, i. e. let us send messengers speedily and universally to the several tribes. We are now in some sort pent up in a corner of the land in Hebron, but let us break up the assembly, and disperse ourselves, and send far and near about this work. It is a metaphor from the sea or rivers, which, when the banks are broken, do suddenly overflow the whole adjoining country. That are left; by which word he minds them of the great desolations and destructions which God for their sins had hitherto made among them; and therefore adviseth that remnant whom God had so graciously saved in and from those dreadful ruins, that they would more seriously set themselves to seek God than they had formerly done.

3 And let us † bring again the ark of our God to us: ^b for we enquired not at it in the days of Saul.

The ark was then neglected; and the generality of the people either lived in the gross neglect of the solemn worship of God, or contented themselves with going to Gibeon, and offering sacrifices there, not caring, though the ark, the soul of the tabernacle, was in another place. In the days of Saul: so it was in the days of Samuel; but it is rather charged upon Saul than him; partly, because Samuel was exercised with continual wars, or expectation of wars, with the Philistines all the time of his regency, and therefore wanted the opportunity to bring back the ark, which Saul had and neglected; partly, because Samuel took care to stir up and maintain religion among them by other means, and in an extraordinary manner; whereas this was but one branch of Saul's impiety, and was joined with a contempt of all religion, as the history of his life shows; and partly, because it was more proper to accuse himself and the present generation, who were guilty of this neglect, than to rake into the ashes of their deceased progenitors, and lay his charge against those who were dead and gone some good while since.

4 And all the congregation said that they would do so: for the thing was right in the eyes of all the people.

Their consciences smiting them for their former negligence, and being fully convinced of the piety and reasonableness of this proposition.

5 So † David gathered all Israel together, from † Shihor of Egypt even unto the entering of Hemath, to bring the ark of God † from Kirjath-jearim.

All Israel, i. e. all the chosen men of Israel, as it is phrased, 2 Sam. vi. 1, their elders and representatives. Shihor of Egypt; of which see Numb. xxxiv. 5; Josh. xiii. 3; Jer. ii. 18.

6 And David went up, and all Israel, to † Baalah, that is, to Kirjath-jearim, which belonged to Judah, to bring up thence the ark of God the LORD, † that dwelleth between the cherubims, whose name is called on it.

That is, to Kirjath-jearim; which explication is justified by Josh. xv. 9, 60, where the same city is called by both names. Object. They are said to go from this Baale, 2 Sam. vi. 2. Answ. 1. Some learned men render that place also to Baale, the particle mem being sometimes used for to amongst the Hebrews, and especially amongst the Arabians. 2. Both were true; they first went to Baale for the ark, as is here said, and then went from Baale to bring, or to carry, (for the word signifies either,) or carrying, from thence the ark of God, as is there related. But of this and other difficulties or differences between these two relations, see the notes on 2 Sam. vi.

7 And they † carried the ark of God in a new cart † out of the house of Abinadab: and Uzza and Ahio drove the cart.

8 † And David and all Israel played before God with all their might, and with † singing, and with harps, and with psalteries, and with timbrels, and with cymbals, and with trumpets.

9 ¶ And when they came unto the threshingfloor of † Chidon, Uzza put forth his hand to hold the ark; for the oxen † stumbled.

10 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Uzza, and he smote him, † because he put his hand to the ark: and there he † died before God.

11 And David was displeased, because the LORD had made a breach upon Uzza: wherefore that place is called † Perez-uzza to this day.

12 And David was afraid of God that day, saying, How shall I bring the ark of God home to me?

13 So David † brought not the ark home to himself to the city of David, but carried it aside into the house of Obed-edom the Gittite.

14 † And the ark of God remained with the family of Obed-edom in his house three months. And the LORD blessed † the house of Obed-edom, and all that he had.

NOW † Hiram king of Tyre sent messengers to David, and timber of cedars, with masons and carpenters, to build him an house.

2 And David perceived that the LORD had confirmed him king over Israel, for his kingdom was lifted up on high, because of his people Israel.

David perceived, by the remembrance of God's promise, and his providence complying with it, &c. But of this and the following verses, see the notes on 2 Sam. v. 12, &c., where the same history is related.

3 ¶ And David took † more wives at Jerusalem: and David begat more sons and daughters.

7 And Elishama, and † Beeliada, and Eliphalet.

8 ¶ And when the Philistines heard that † David was anointed king over all Israel, all the Philistines went up to seek David. And David heard of it, and went out against them.

10 And David enquired of God, saying, Shall I go up against the Philistines? and wilt thou deliver them into mine hand? And the LORD said unto him, Go up; for I will deliver them into thine hand.

11 So they came up to Baal-perazim; and David smote them there. Then David said, God hath broken in upon mine enemies by mine hand like the breaking forth of waters: therefore they called the name of that place || Baal-perazim.

12 And when they had left their gods there, David gave a commandment, and they were burned with fire.

13 ^e And the Philistines yet again spread themselves abroad in the valley.

14 Therefore David enquired again of God; and God said unto him, Go not up after them; turn away from them, ^f and come upon them over against the mulberry trees.

15 And it shall be, when thou shalt hear a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt go out to battle: for God is gone forth before thee to smite the host of the Philistines.

16 David therefore did as God commanded him: and they smote the host of the Philistines from ^g Gibeon even to Gazer.

CHAP. XV.

David, having prepared a place for the ark, ordereth the priests and Levites to bring it from Obed-edom, 1—24. He performeth the solemnity thereof with great joy, 25—28. Michal despiseth him, 29.

1042. AND David made him houses in the city of David, and prepared a place for the ark of God, ^a and pitched for it a tent.

Houses; a palace consisting of many houses or apartments for his several wives and children. Pitched for it a tent. Quest. Why did he not first fetch the tabernacle of Moses from Gibeon, where it now was, that so he might put the ark into its proper place? Ans. Partly because he had no motion or direction from God concerning the tabernacle, as he had concerning the ark; and partly because he thought the tabernacle was not so necessary for that end as formerly, seeing he intended forthwith to set upon the building of the temple, as appears from chap. xvii.

2 Then David said, † None ought to carry the ^b ark of God but the Levites: for them hath the LORD chosen to carry the ark of God, and to minister unto him for ever.

But the Levites, and that upon their shoulders; of which see Numb. iv. 15; vii. 9; and not in a cart, as it was before, to our great grief and loss. For ever, i^e e. so long as the ark is to be removed, and as that worship continues.

3 And David ^c gathered all Israel together to Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the LORD unto his place, which he had prepared for it.

4 And David assembled the children of Aaron, and the Levites:

5 Of the sons of Kohath; Uriel the chief, and his || brethren an hundred and ^h Or, ⁱ kinsmen. twenty:

Of the sons of Kohath, to wit, of Amram or Izhar, Kohath's sons, Numb. iii. 27. Otherwise Elizaphan, ver. 8, and Hebron, ver. 9, and Uzziel, ver. 10, were Kohath's children; of which see Exod. vi. 17, 18, 22.

6 Of the sons of Merari; Asaiah the chief, and his brethren two hundred and twenty:

7 Of the sons of Gershom; Joel the chief, and his brethren an hundred and thirty:

8 Of the sons of ^d Elizaphan; Shemaiah ^d Ex. 6. 22. the chief, and his brethren two hundred:

9 Of the sons of ^e Hebron; Eliel the ^e Ex. 6. 18. chief, and his brethren fourscore:

10 Of the sons of Uzziel; Amminadab the chief, and his brethren an hundred and twelve.

11 And David called for Zadok and Abiathar the priests, and for the Levites, for Uriel, Asaiah, and Joel, Shemaiah, and Eliel, and Amminadab, Zadok and Abiathar the priests, i. e. the chief priests, Abiathar the high priest, and Zadok the second priest: see Numb. iii. 32.

12 And said unto them, Ye are the chief of the fathers of the Levites: sanctify yourselves, both ye and your brethren, that ye may bring up the ark of the LORD God of Israel unto the place that I have prepared for it.

Sanctify yourselves, by solemn purification and preparation of yourselves, both in soul and body. See on Exod. xix. 10, 15.

13 For ^f because ye did it not at the first, ^g the LORD our God made a breach ^g ch. 13. 7, upon us, for that we sought him not after ^g ch. 13. 10, the due order.

Because ye did it not at the first; because you did not sanctify and prepare yourselves by solemn prayer, and seeking counsel from God, and by a serious consideration of God's will as to the manner of carrying it; which it was your duty more than others to observe and see it executed. We sought him not: he takes a part of the guilt to himself, because it was his duty, as well as theirs, diligently to read the law and word of God, and to see it executed, and their oversight did not excuse his. After the due order; according to the rules which he appointed.

14 So the priests and the Levites sanctified themselves to bring up the ark of the LORD God of Israel.

15 And the children of the Levites bare the ark of God upon their shoulders with the staves thereon, as ^h Moses commanded ^h Ex. 25. 14, according to the word of the LORD. ^h Numb. 4. 15, & 7. 9.

The children of the Levites, to wit, the Kohathites, Numb. iv. 4.

16 And David spake to the chief of the Levites to appoint their brethren to be the singers with instruments of musick, psalteries and harps and cymbals, sounding, by lifting up the voice with joy.

17 So the Levites appointed ⁱ Heman ⁱ ch. 6. 33. the son of Joel; and of his brethren, ^k Asaph the son of Berechiah; and of the ^k ch. 6. 39. sons of Merari their brethren, ^l Ethan the ^l ch. 6. 44. son of Kushaiah;

Their brethren of the second degree; the first rank or degree of sacred musicians being those three famous persons named ver. 17, next unto whom were these here named. The porters; who were to keep the doors of the tabernacle and courts, but withal were instructed in music and singing, that when they were free from attendance upon their proper office, they might not be idle nor unprofitable persons in God's house.

19 So the singers, Heman, Asaph, and Ethan, were appointed to sound with cymbals of brass;

20 And Zechariah, and ¶ Aziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, and Eliab, and Maaseiah, and Benaiah, with psalteries^m on Alamoth;

^m Ps. 46, title.
In this catalogue Ben is omitted, who was mentioned ver. 18. Yet others think him to be the same who is called Azaziah, ver. 21. But Ben might be some other person, who was indeed appointed for this work, as is related, ver. 17, 18; and yet he might be taken off by death or sickness, or some sudden and extraordinary accident which hindered his execution of the place and work allotted for him, which might force the chief of the Levites to appoint some other in his stead, when they came to put their institution in practice, as here they did. On Alamoth, or, with (as that particle is elsewhere used) Alamoth, which is thought to be the name of an instrument of music; or of a certain tune, or note, or part in music. The certain signification of it is not now known, nor is it necessary for us to know it. And the like may be said of Sheminitih, ver. 21.

21 And Mattithiah, and Elipheleh, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, and Azaziah, with harps ¶ on the Sheminitih to excel.

¶ Or, on the eighth to oversee, Ps. 6, title.
See on ver. 20. To excel: the word may be here added to note the excellency of that instrument, or note, or part of music; or that there was a greater extension or elevation of the voice than in the former.

¶ Or, was for the carriage: he instructed about the carriage.
† Heb. lifting up.
22 And Chenaniah, chief of the Levites, ¶ was for † song: he instructed about the song, because he was skilful.

Was for song, Heb. was for lifting up; either, 1. Of the ark; he was for carriage of the ark, being appointed to instruct or direct the time and manner of carrying the ark, and when they should make a stand or a change in the bearers. Or rather, 2. Of the voice; he was the moderator of the music, instructing them when and how to lift up their voices, or change their notes, or make their stops, which best agrees with the following reason, because he was skilful; for this required far more skill than the carriage of the ark, which any man of common discretion could easily govern; and with ver. 27, where this same Chenaniah is joined with the singers.

23 And Berechiah and Elkanah were doorkeepers for the ark.

They were appointed to keep the door of the tent, in which the ark was to be put and kept, that no unallowed person might press in and touch it; and in like manner they were to attend upon the ark in the way, and to guard it from the press and touch of profane hands; for which end these two went before the ark, as their other two brethren, mentioned in the close of ver. 24, came after it, that so it might be guarded on all sides; which, how necessary it was to be done, sufficiently appears from the danger of coming too near the ark, or to look into it, which was exemplified in the Bethshemites, 1 Sam. vi. 19.

24 And Shebaniah, and Jehoshaphat, and Nethaneel, and Amasai, and Zechariah, and Benaiah, and Eliezer, the priests, ⁿ did blow with the trumpets before the ark of God: and Obed-edom and Jehiah were doorkeepers for the ark.

a Num. 10.8, Ps. xl. 3.

25 ¶ So °David, and the elders of Israel, and the captains over thousands, went to bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of the house of Obed-edom with joy.

o 2 Sam. 6, 12, 13, &c. 1 Kings 8. 1.

26 And it came to pass, when God helped the Levites that bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, that they offered seven bullocks and seven rams.

When God helped the Levites; either, 1. By giving them strength to carry their burden; or rather, 2. By encouraging them in their work with some comfortable sign of his presence with them, and approbation of their work and manner of carrying the ark: when they saw that he did not cut off any of the persons employed, as he had done before, but spared and favoured them; which they perceived when they had gone six paces, as appears by 2 Sam. vi. 13.

27 And David was clothed with a robe of fine linen, and all the Levites that bare the ark, and the singers, and Chenaniah the master of the ¶ song with the singers: 1 Or, carriage. David also had upon him an ephod of linen.

With a robe of fine linen, i. e. with a linen ephod, as it is explained in the close of this verse, where this circumstance is repeated, because it was a notable and unusual thing for David, who was no Levite, to wear a Levitical garment. See of this and the following verses the notes on 2 Sam. vi. 14—16.

28 ^p Thus all Israel brought up the ark of the covenant of the LORD with shouting, and with sound of the cornet, and with trumpets, and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and harps.

p ch. 13. 8.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, ^q as the ark of the covenant of the LORD came to the city of David, that Michal the daughter of Saul looking out at a window saw king David dancing and playing: and she despised him in her heart.

CHAP. XVI.

David's festival sacrifice and abns. The psalm of thanksgiving sung by a choir, and the people said, Amen, 1—36. Ministers, porters, priests, and musicians appointed to attend the ark continually, 37—43.

SO ^a they brought the ark of God, and set it in the midst of the tent that David had pitched for it: and they offered burnt sacrifices and peace offerings before God.

cir. 1042. a 2 Sam. 6, 17,—19.

Of these three first verses, see on 2 Sam. vi. 17—19.

2 And when David had made an end of offering the burnt offerings and the peace offerings, he blessed the people in the name of the LORD.

3 And he dealt to every one of Israel, both man and woman, to every one a loaf of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine.

4 ¶ And he appointed certain of the Levites to minister before the ark of the LORD, and to ^b record, and to thank and praise the LORD God of Israel:

b Ps. 88, & 70, title.

5 Asaph the chief, and next to him Zechariah, Jeiel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Mattithiah, and Eliab, and Benaiah, and Obed-edom: and Jeiel † with psalteries and with harps; but Asaph made a sound with cymbals;

† Heb. with instruments of psalteries and harps.

6 Benaiah also and Jahaziel the priests with trumpets continually before the ark of the covenant of God.

7 ¶ Then on that day David delivered ^{c Sec 2 Sam. 23. 1.} first this psalm to thank the LORD into the hand of Asaph and his brethren.

David delivered first this psalm; whereby it is implied, that after this he delivered many other psalms successively into their hands, to be sung by them to the praise of God in his public service. See 2 Sam. xxiii. 1; 2 Chron. xxix. 30. As for the matter of this psalm, I shall defer the explication of it till I come to the Book of Psalms, where we shall find it in the same words, in Psal. xcvi. and cv.

8 ^{d Ps. 105. 1, -15.} Give thanks unto the LORD, call upon his name, make known his deeds among the people.

9 Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him, talk ye of all his wondrous works.

10 Glory ye in his holy name: let the heart of them rejoice that seek the LORD.

11 Seek the LORD and his strength, seek his face continually.

12 Remember his marvellous works that he hath done, his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth;

13 O ye seed of Israel his servant, ye children of Jacob, his chosen ones.

14 He is the LORD our God; his judgments are in all the earth.

15 Be ye mindful always of his covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations;

16 Even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac;

17 And hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant,

18 Saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, † the lot of your inheritance;

19 When ye were but † few, † even a few, and strangers in it.

20 And when they went from nation to nation, and from one kingdom to another people;

21 He suffered no man to do them wrong: yea, he ^{reproved} kings for their sakes, 22 Saying, ^h Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

23 ^{i Ps. 96. 1, &c.} Sing unto the LORD, all the earth; shew forth from day to day his salvation.

24 Declare his glory among the heathen; his marvellous works among all nations.

25 For great is the LORD, and greatly to be praised: he also is to be feared above all gods.

26 For all the gods ^{of} the people are idols: but the LORD made the heavens.

27 Glory and honour are in his presence; strength and gladness are in his place.

28 Give unto the LORD, ye kindreds of the people, give unto the LORD glory and strength.

29 Give unto the LORD the glory due unto his name: bring an offering, and come before him: worship the LORD in the beauty of holiness.

30 Fear before him, all the earth: the world also shall be stable, that it be not moved.

31 Let the heavens be glad, and let the earth rejoice: and let men say among the nations, The LORD reigneth.

32 Let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof: let the fields rejoice, and all that is therein.

33 Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the LORD, because he cometh to judge the earth.

34 ^{i Ps. 106. 1. & 107. 1. & 118. 1. & 136. 1.} O give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.

35 ^{m Ps. 106. 47, 48.} And say ye, Save us, O God of our salvation, and gather us together, and deliver us from the heathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name, and glory in thy praise.

Deliver us from the heathen: this might seem an improper and unseasonable prayer for David's time, when the Israelites were not yet scattered amongst the heathen, but indeed it was not so; partly because they had already been sadly divided by a civil war among themselves; and though they were now externally and visibly united under David, yet he might justly think that there were some who yet retained in their hearts their old leaven, their hatred of him, and their affection to Saul, which might hereafter break forth when occasion was offered, as it did, 2 Sam. xvi. 8; and therefore he justly prays that they may be gathered and united together in hearty love, as well as in outward show: and partly because this psalm or prayer was made by David for the use of the church, not only in that present time, but in future ages, in which David foresaw by the Spirit of prophecy, or by consideration of those ancient and sacred predictions, Deut. xxxi., xxxii., that the Israelites would one time or other forsake God, and for their apostacy be dispersed among the heathens, when they should have great and particular need of this prayer.

36 ^{n 1 Kings 8. 15. o Deut. 27. 15.} Blessed be the LORD God of Israel for ever and ever. And all ^{the} people said, Amen, and praised the LORD.

37 ¶ So he left there before the ark of the covenant of the LORD Asaph and his brethren, to minister before the ark continually, as every day's work required:

Or, door-keepers, as the same Hebrew word is rendered, chap. xv. 23, 24; of which see the note on ver. 23.

39 And Zadok the priest, and his brethren the priests, ^{p ch. 21. 29. 2 Chron. 1. 3. q 1 Kings 3. 4.} before the tabernacle of the LORD ⁱⁿ the high place that was at Gibeon, Zadok the priest; not the high priest, but the second and the chief priest at Gibeon, where the famous tabernacle and altar made by Moses still were, 1 Chron. xxi. 29; 2 Chron. i. 3; where also the ordinary sacrifices were offered, and the stated and public worship of God was performed, as it here follows, for which the priests were placed there; as the extraordinary worship was before the ark upon great occasions, as when God was consulted, which was to be done before the ark and by the high priest, Exod. xxviii. 12, 20, 21, who now was Abiathar; who therefore abode here with the ark, when Zadok was left at Gibeon.

CHAP. XVII.

David, designing to build God a house, Nathan at first approveth of it ; after, by the word of God, forbiddeth him, 1—10 ; promising him blessings and benefits in his seed, 11—15. David's prayer and thanksgiving, 16—27.

† 2 Sam. 7. 1, &c.

NOW *it came to pass, as David sat in his house, that David said to Nathan the prophet, Lo, I dwell in an house of cedars, but the ark of the covenant of the LORD remaineth under curtains.

This whole chapter is explained, 2 Sam. vii., where the same things are recorded with very little variation of the words ; which also hath been considered in my notes upon that chapter ; to which I refer the reader, taking notice here but of some very few things.

2 Then Nathan said unto David, Do all that is in thine heart ; for God is with thee.

3 ¶ And it came to pass the same night, that the word of God came to Nathan, saying,

4 Go and tell David my servant, Thus saith the LORD, Thou shalt not build me an house to dwell in :

5 For I have not dwelt in an house since the day that I brought up Israel unto this day ; but †have gone from tent to tent, and from one tabernacle to another.

† Heb. have been.

6 Wheresoever I have walked with all Israel, spake I a word to any of the judges of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people, saying, Why have ye not built me an house of cedars ?

7 Now therefore thus shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, I took thee from the sheepcote, even †from following the sheep, that thou shouldst be ruler over my people Israel :

† Heb. from after.

8 And I have been with thee whithersoever thou hast walked, and have cut off all thine enemies from before thee, and have made thee a name like the name of the great men that are in the earth.

9 Also I will ordain a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, and they shall dwell in their place, and shall be moved no more ; neither shall the children of wickedness waste them any more, as at the beginning,

The children of wickedness ; such as are devoted and wholly given up to wickedness ; elsewhere called children of Belial.

10 And since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel. Moreover I will subdue all thine enemies. Furthermore I tell thee that the LORD will build thee an house.

11 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when thy days be expired that thou must go to be with thy fathers, that I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons ; and I will establish his kingdom.

12 He shall build me an house, and I will establish his throne for ever.

13 ^bI will be his father, and he shall be my son : and I will not take my mercy away from him, as I took it from him that was before thee :

^b 2 Sam. 7. 14, 15.

14 But ^cI will settle him in mine house and in my kingdom for ever : and his throne shall be established for evermore.

In mine house ; in my dwelling-place ; either, 1. In Jerusalem, the place where God had put his name for ever, 2 Kings xxi. 4, 7 ; 2 Chron. vi. 5, 6 : compare 1 Kings xi. 36 ; xv. 4. Or, 2. In the temple, which is more properly and constantly called God's house ; and so this expression agrees but very imperfectly with Solomon, or his successors, who might be said to be settled in God's house, because they were settled near it, and in some sort set over it, because they were to take care that the priests and others should perform their offices and God's service in it ; but strictly and properly agrees only to Christ, to whom alone that promise also of an everlasting establishment in this kingdom belongs, as was noted on 2 Sam. vii. And this expression seems to be most emphatically added, to signify that that person in whom all those promises should be fully and perfectly accomplished, to wit, the Messias, should be settled not only in the king's throne, as others of David's successors were, but also in God's house or temple ; and consequently, that he should be a Priest as well as a King ; which mystery was more clearly revealed to David, Psal. cx. 1, 2, 4, and may be intimated, though obscurely, (as was fit and usual in that state of the church,) in these words.

In my kingdom ; either, 1. In the kingdom of Israel, which God calls his kingdom, because he was in a special manner their King and Governor, having raised them up and formed them into a kingdom, and given them that protection and assistance which kings owe to their kingdoms ; and because he expected and required from them what kings do from their people, that they should be wholly governed by his laws, and devoted to his service. Or, 2. In God's kingdom in a more large and general sense. And this, as well as the former phrase, may seem singularly to belong to the Messias, who was not only to be the King of Israel, but also of all nations, as was foretold even in the Old Testament, as Psal. ii. 6—12 ; xxii. 27, 28 ; lxxii. 11 ; Isa. ii. 4 ; Hag. ii. 7 ; and so this may be an intimation of that great mystery which is more fully revealed in the New Testament, to wit, that Christ is the Head, or King, or Governor of all God's church, consisting of Jews and Gentiles, and of all nations, and indeed of all creatures, the angels not excepted ; all which is God's kingdom, and by him given to his Son, our blessed Lord Christ. And for the signification of these great things, there is so great and remarkable an alteration of the phrase here from what it is in 2 Sam. vii., where, speaking to David, he constantly calls it his (i. e. David's) kingdom, and his house, ver. 12, 13, 16, 19, 25, 27, for which he here saith my house, and my kingdom, which also he distinguisheth from his throne, which is mentioned in the next clause of this verse, and in ver. 11, 12. But these things I submit to the judicious reader.

15 According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

16 ¶ ^dAnd David the king came and sat before the LORD, and said, Who am

^d 2 Sam. 7. 18.

I, O LORD God, and what is mine house, that thou hast brought me hitherto?

Sat before the Lord; which may note either his gesture, or his continuance there till he had finished this following prayer.

17 And yet this was a small thing in thine eyes, O God; for thou hast also spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come, and hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree, O LORD God.

i. e. Thou hast treated me as if I had been born the son of a great monarch, and not a poor shephér, as indeed I was, O Lord God. Otherwise thus, Thou hast regarded or respected me as the type or figure, or according to the rank or order of that excellent man, or man of high degree, who is also the Lord God, i. e. of the Messiah, who is God-man, i. e. Thou hast given to me and my house an everlasting kingdom, which is the peculiar privilege of that great person the Messiah, Dan. ii. 44; vii. 13, 14.

18 What can David speak more to thee for the honour of thy servant? for thou knowest thy servant.

19 O LORD, for thy servant's sake, and according to thine own heart, hast thou done all this greatness, in making known all these † great things.

† Heb. greatnesses.
For thy servant's sake; in 2 Sam. vii. 21, it is, for thy word's sake, i. e. for the sake of thy word and promise made to thy servant; as that phrase, for David's sake, is oft thus understood, for God's covenant's sake made with David.

20 O LORD, there is none like thee, neither is there any God beside thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

21 And what one nation in the earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem to be his own people, to make thee a name of greatness and terribleness, by driving out nations from before thy people, whom thou hast redeemed out of Egypt?

22 For thy people Israel didst thou make thine own people for ever; and thou, LORD, becamest their God.

23 Therefore now, LORD, let the thing that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant and concerning his house be established for ever, and do as thou hast said.

24 Let it even be established, that thy name may be magnified for ever, saying, The LORD of hosts is the God of Israel, even a God to Israel: and let the house of David thy servant be established before thee.

Or, The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, is a God to Israel, i. e. he is really to his people that which he hath styled himself, their God, having taken such care of them, and showed such mercy and truth to them, as did fully answer that title.

† Heb. hast revealed the ear of thy servant.
25 For thou, O my God, † hast told thy servant that thou wilt build him an house: therefore thy servant hath found in his heart to pray before thee.

26 And now, LORD, thou art God, and hast promised this goodness unto thy servant:

† Or, it hath pleased thee.
27 Now therefore † let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may be before thee for ever: for thou blessest, O LORD, and it shall be blessed for ever.

CHAP. XVIII.

David subdueth the Philistines and the Moabites; smiteth Hadarezer and the Syrians, 1—8. Thou sendeth Hadoram with presents to bless David: the presents and spoil David dedicated to God, 9—11. He putteth garrisons in Edom, 12, 13. David's officers, 14—17.

NOW after this * it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them, and took Gath and her towns out of the hand of the Philistines.

All this chapter is explained on 2 Sam. viii.

2 And he smote Moab; and the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

3 ¶ And David smote † Hadarezer king of Zobah unto Hamath, as he went to establish his dominion by the river Euphrates.

4 And David took from him a thousand chariots, and ^b seven thousand horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: David also houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them an hundred chariots.

5 And when the Syrians of † Damascus came to help Hadarezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

6 Then David put garrisons in Syria-damascus; and the Syrians became David's servants, and brought gifts. Thus the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

7 And David took the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadarezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

8 Likewise from † Tibhath, and from Chun, cities of Hadarezer, brought David very much brass, wherewith ^c Solomon made the brasen sea, and the pillars, and the vessels of brass.

Tibhath and Chun; for which, 2 Sam. viii. 8, Betah and Berothai are mentioned. Either therefore they were the same places called by several names, as is usual; or they were four neighbouring places, out of all which the brass was taken, whereof two places having been named there are omitted here, and the other two places there omitted are here remembered.

9 ¶ Now when † Tou king of Hamath heard how David had smitten all the host of Hadarezer king of Zobah;

10 He sent † Hadoram his son to king David, † to enquire of his welfare, and † to congratulate him, because he had fought against Hadarezer, and smitten him; (for Hadarezer † had war with Tou;) and with him all manner of vessels of gold and silver and brass.

11 ¶ Them also king David dedicated unto the LORD, with the silver and the gold that he brought from all these nations; from Edom, and from Moab, and from the children of Ammon, and from the Philistines, and from Amalek.

12 Moreover † Abishai the son of Zeruiah slew of the Edomites in the valley of salt ^d eighteen thousand.

13 ¶ ^e And he put garrisons in Edom; and all the Edomites became David's servants. Thus the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

CHAP. XIX.

David's messengers to Hanun are villanously entreated, 1—5. The Ammonites and Syrians are overcome by Joab and Abishai, 6—15; by David himself, 16—19.

cir. 1037. NOW *it came to pass after this, that Nahash the king of the children of Ammon died, and his son reigned in his stead.

¶ 2 Sam. 10. 1, &c. Of all the contents of this chapter, see the notes on 2 Sam. x., where we have the same things, and almost the very same words.

2 And David said, I will shew kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, because his father shewed kindness to me. And David sent messengers to comfort him concerning his father. So the servants of David came into the land of the children of Ammon to Hanun, to comfort him.

3 But the princes of the children of Ammon said to Hanun, ¶ Thinkest thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? are not his servants come unto thee for to search, and to overthrow, and to spy out the land?

4 Wherefore Hanun took David's servants, and shaved them, and cut off their garments in the midst hard by their buttocks, and sent them away.

5 Then there went certain, and told David how the men were served. And he sent to meet them: for the men were greatly ashamed. And the king said, Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.

6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they had made themselves ¶ odious to David, Hanun and the children of Ammon sent a thousand talents of silver to hire them chariots and horsemen out of Mesopotamia, and out of Syria-maachah, and out of Zobah.

7 So they hired thirty and two thousand chariots, and the king of Maachah and his people; who came and pitched before Medeba. And the children of Ammon gathered themselves together from their cities, and came to battle.

Thirty and two thousand chariots, i. e. thirty-two thousand men fighting from or with chariots, as that word is elsewhere used; of which see my notes on 1 Sam. xiii. 5. And this interpretation seems the more probable by comparing this place with 2 Sam. x. 6, where this army is said to consist of twenty thousand footmen, and twelve thousand men of Ish-tob; which make up these thirty-two thousand men, who fought partly from chariots, and partly on foot with chariots, or attending upon the chariots, as the ancient manner of fighting was. And here, ver. 6, this army is made up of chariots and horsemen; where, except the chariots be understood of footmen, there were no footmen in the army, which is unusual and incredible.

8 And when David heard of it, he sent Joab, and all the host of the mighty men. cir. 1037.

9 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array before the gate of the city: and the kings that were come were by themselves in the field.

10 Now when Joab saw that ¶ the battle was set against him before and behind, he chose out of all the ¶ choice of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians.

¶ Heb. the face of the battle was. ¶ Or, young men.

11 And the rest of the people he delivered unto the hand of ¶ Abishai his brother, and they set themselves in array against the children of Ammon.

¶ Heb. Abshai.

12 And he said, If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will help thee.

13 Be of good courage, and let us behave ourselves valiantly for our people, and for the cities of our God: and let the LORD do that which is good in his sight.

14 So Joab and the people that were with him drew nigh before the Syrians unto the battle; and they fled before him.

15 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, they likewise fled before Abishai his brother, and entered into the city. Then Joab came to Jerusalem.

16 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they sent messengers, and drew forth the Syrians that were beyond the ¶ river: and ¶ Shophach the captain of the host of Hadarezer went before them. cir. 1036.

¶ That is, Euphrates. ¶ Or, Shobach. 2 Sam. 10. 16.

17 And it was told David; and he gathered all Israel, and passed over Jordan, and came upon them, and set the battle in array against them. So when David had put the battle in array against the Syrians, they fought with him.

18 But the Syrians fled before Israel; and David slew of the Syrians seven thousand men which fought in chariots, and forty thousand footmen, and killed Shophach the captain of the host.

How this agrees with 2 Sam. x. 18, see in the notes on that place.

19 And when the servants of Hadarezer saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they made peace with David, and became his servants: neither would the Syrians help the children of Ammon any more.

CHAP. XX.

Rabbah besieged, spoiled, and tortured by David, 1—3. Three giants slain, 4—8.

AND *it came to pass, that ¶ after the year was expired, at the time that kings go out to battle, Joab led forth the power of the army, and wasted the country of the children of Ammon, and came and besieged Rabbah. But David tarried at

Of this first verse, see my notes on 2 Sam. xi. 1; and of ver. 2, 3, on 2 Sam. xii. 30, 31; and of the rest of this chapter, on 2 Sam. xxi. 15, &c., where also an account is given of the seeming differences between this and that relation.

2 And David ^ctook the crown of their king from off his head, and found it †to weigh a talent of gold, and there were precious stones in it; and it was set upon David's head: and he brought also exceeding much spoil out of the city.

3 And he brought out the people that were in it, and cut them with saws, and with harrows of iron, and with axes. Even so dealt David with all the cities of the children of Ammon. And David and all the people returned to Jerusalem.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, ^dthat there †arose war at †Gezer with the Philistines; at which time ^eSibbechai the Hushathite slew †Sippai, that was of the children of †the giant: and they were subdued.

5 And there was war again with the Philistines; and Elhanan the son of †Jair slew Lahmi the brother of Goliath the Gittite, whose spear staff was like a weaver's beam.

6 And yet again ^fthere was war at Gath, where was †a man of great stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand, and six on each foot: and he also was †the son of the giant.

7 But when he †defied Israel, Jonathan the son of †Shimea David's brother slew him.

8 These were born unto the giant in Gath; and they fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

CHAP. XXI.

David numbereth the people, 1—6. He repenteth: of three judgments propounded, he chooseth the pestilence; and why, 7—13. David, by God's direction, buildeth an altar, and sacrificeth: the plague is stayed, 14—30.

1017. AND ^aSatan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel.
