The soul; which is the principal cause and director of all men's actions. Without knowledge; without wisdom or prudence to discern his way, and what and how he ought to act in his several cases and concernments. It is not good; it is very evil and pernicious. That hasteth with his feet; that rashly and headily rusheth into actions without serious consideration. So two vices are here censured, the want of knowledge, and the neglect or disuse of knowledge in a man's actions.

3 The foolishness of man perverteth his way: [b]and his heart fretteth against the LORD.

b Ps. 37. 7.

Perverteth his way; either. 1. Enticeth him to sin. Or rather, 2. Crosseth and blasteth his designs and enterprises, and brings losses and miseries upon him. His heart fretteth against the Lord; he ascribes his unhappiness not to his own sin and folly, which is the true cause of it, but to God and his providence, against which he unjustly murmurs.

4 [c]Wealth maketh many friends; but the poor is separated from his neighbour.

5 [d]A false witness shall not be †unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall not escape.

Shall not be unpunished; though he escape the observation and punishment of men, yet he shall not avoid the judgment of God. That speaketh lies; that accustometh himself to lying, either in judgment or in common conversation.

6 [e]Many will intreat the favour of the prince: and [f]every man is a friend to †him that giveth gifts.

Of the prince; or, as others, of the liberal or bountiful man; which comes to the same thing, for kings were anciently called benefactors, Luke xxii. 25. A friend; not sincerely, as daily experience shows, but in show or profession, or in the outward expressions of it, whereby they may oblige him.

g ch. 14. 20. h Ps 38. 11.

7 [g]All the brethren of the poor do hate him: how much more do his friends go [h]far from him? he pursueth them with words, yet they are wanting to him.

Brethren; his nearest and dearest relations, who are oft called brethren in Scripture, by a common synecdoche. Hate him, i. e. despise and shun him, as men do any thing which they hate, and as the following words explain it. His friends; his former companions, who in his prosperity professed friendship to him. He pursueth them with words, earnestly imploring their pity; or, he urgeth (Heb. pursueth) their words, i. e. allegeth their former promises and professions of friendship. Or, without any supplement, he seeketh words, as the preacher sought to find out acceptable words, Eccles. xii. 10, wherewith he might prevail or move them to pity. They are wanting to him, Heb. they are not; either, 1. His friends are not, to wit, what they pretended to be, friends to him. Or, 2. Their words are vain, and without effect; there is no reality in them.

8 He that getteth †wisdom loveth his own soul: he that keepeth understanding [i]shall find good.

Loveth his own soul, or loveth himself, because he procures great good to his soul, or to himself, as it follows; as sinners, on the contrary, are said to hate their souls, Prov. xxix. 24, because they bring mischief upon them. That keepeth understanding; that observeth and carefully practiseth its precepts, as that phrase is commonly used. Shall find good; shall have great benefit by it, both for his conduct in this life, and for his happiness in the next.

9 [k]A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall perish.

This was said before, ver. 5, and seems to be here repeated, either for its great use and weight in human society, and to show how much God abhors such practices; or to show the pernicious effects of this sin, and consequently of all other sins, one eminent kind being put for all the rest, and this in opposition to the good effects of wisdom or piety, which he declared in the foregoing verse.

10 Delight is not seemly for a fool; much less [l]for a servant to have rule over princes.

Delight, to live in pleasure, and plenty, and outward glory, is not seemly for a fool; it doth not become him, nor suit with him; partly because prosperity corrupts even wise men, and makes fools mad; and partly because it gives him more opportunity to discover his folly, and to do mischief both to himself and others. He implies that a rod or punishment is fitter for him than pleasure, as is noted, Prov. x. 13; xxvi. 3. A servant; who is of a servile condition and disposition, not much differing from a fool; who is a servant to his lusts, and wholly unfit to rule other men. Over princes, i. e. over men of better quality than himself; for servants are commonly ignorant, and when they are advanced, they grow insolent, and presumptuous, and intolerable.

16 [y]He that keepeth the commandment keepeth his own soul; but he that despiseth his ways shall die.

The commandment; the commands of God, called by way of eminence the commandment, as the word is oft used emphatically for the word of God, as hath been noted before. His ways; either, 1. His own ways, by not taking heed to his ways, so as to order his conversation aright. Or, 2. The ways of God, who is understood in the former clause.

a ch. 13. 24. & 23. 13. & 29. 17. ‖ Or, to his destruction: or, to cause him to die.

18 [a]Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare ‖for his crying.

While there is hope; before custom in sin, and thy indulgence, hath made him hard-hearted and incorrigible. Let not thy soul spare, forbear not to give him due and necessary correction, for his crying, which oft stirs up a foolish and pernicious pity in parents towards them. This word, with some small difference in the points, is used in this sense Isa. xxiv. 11. Or, as it is in the margin, to his destruction, intimating that this is a cruel pity, and a likely way to expose him to that death threatened to stubborn sons, Deut. xxi. 18, 21. But this clause is, and may be, rendered otherwise, yet or but do not lift up thy soul (which signifies a vehement desire, Deut. xxiv. 15; Psal. xxv. 1; Jer. xliv. 14; let not thy passion or eager desire of chastening him transport thee so far as) to cause him to die, i. e. use moderation in this work.

19 A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment: for if thou deliver him, yet thou must †do it again.

A man of great wrath; or, he who is of great wrath, of strong passions; which may be understood either, 1. More particularly, of a son of such a temper, who is very impatient of correction, and breaks forth into violent passions upon that occasion; and then the following words contain the parent's duty, which is to take care to punish him, because if he spare him that time for his passion, he must do so again and again, the same cause returning upon him, and so must wholly forbear to chasten him. Or, 2. More generally, of any man of a fierce and furious temper and carriage; and then the next words declare only the event, by his great and repeated provocations he will bring punishment upon himself, either from God or men. If thou deliver him; if either a parent, or another person provoked by him, forbear to punish him. He turneth his speech to the party, as is usual in Scripture and in other authors. Thou must do it again, Heb. thou must add, to wit, to deliver him again and again, as oft as he shall offend; or, thou wilt add or increase, to wit, his wrath, which thou shouldst subdue.

[b] Ps. 37. 37. tion, that thou mayest be wise [b] in the latter end.

Before thy death come; which he adds not exclusively, as if he ought not to be wise before, but emphatically, to show that how foolishly soever he had spent his former and younger years, it highly concerned him to be wise before it was too late, or before death came.

21 [c] There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the LORD, that shall stand.

There are many devices in a man's heart; understand out of the opposite clause, which shall not stand, but be disappointed. The counsel of the Lord; his eternal, and unchangeable, and most wise decree, which ofttimes contradicts, and always overrules, the designs and purposes of men. Shall stand, i. e. be certainly fulfilled, as this phrase is used, Jer. xliv. 28, 29, and elsewhere.

22 The desire of a man is his kindness: and a poor man is better than a liar.

The desire of a man; either, 1. Of any or every man. All men desire, and it is desirable, to be in a capacity of being kind and bountiful to others, whereby they gain love and honour, and many other great advantages. Or, 2. Of the poor man, expressed in the next clause. The hearty will or desire of being kind or liberal to others in necessity is all the kindness which a poor man can show, and is accepted by God, and should be owned by men as a real kindness. Compare 2 Cor. viii. 12. Or, 3. Of the rich man, as may be gathered from the opposition of this man to the poor man in the following clause; such ellipses being very common in this book, as hath been noted again and again. So the sense may be this, There be a sort of rich men all whose kindness and charity consists in good desires and well wishes to persons in misery, saying to them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, but not giving them those things which are needful, as it is expressed, James ii. 16. And this sense seems to agree very well with the following clause. But being singular in this exposition, I submit it to the judicious reader. A poor man, who is not able to give what he desires to do, is better than a liar; than a rich man, who feeds the poor with good words and fair promises, but doth not perform what he pretends and is able to do.

Hideth his hand in his bosom; either to keep it warm in cold weather; or to give it rest, being loth to oppress it with the labour of any action. It is a sarcastical hyperbole. Will not so much as bring it to his mouth again, to wit, to feed himself; he expects that the meat should drop into his mouth.

Smite a scorner; an obstinate and impudent transgressor, who rejects and scorns all admonitions, and therefore is to be taught with blows. The simple; who sin through ignorance, and imprudence, and infirmity, being possibly drawn to sin by the scorner's evil counsel or example. He will understand knowledge; a verbal reproof will be more effectual for his reformation than the severest punishments will be to a scorner.

26 He that wasteth his father, and causeth shame, and bringeth reproach.

Wasteth his father, i. e. his father's estate, by unjust or riotous courses. Chaseth away his mother; causeth her to avoid and abhor his presence and society, and to go from the house where he is. Bringeth reproach; both to himself, and to his parents and family. But this verse may very well be rendered otherwise, the last words being made the subjects of the proposition, as is usual in Scripture; A son that causeth shame, and bringeth reproach, (upon himself and his friends by wicked ways,) wasteth his father's (estate, and health, and comfort) and chaseth or driveth away his mother. These are the effects of his wickedness.

27 Cease, my son, to hear the instruction that causeth to err from the words of knowledge.

If thou hast formerly, yet do not now any longer hearken to those false doctrines or evil counsels which tend to withdraw thee from the belief or practice of God's holy word.

To cease from strife; either to prevent it, or, if it be begun, to put an end to it; which, although proud and profane persons esteem dishonourable to them, is indeed their glory, because it is an evidence of their great wisdom and power over their passions, and of their respect and obedience to their sovereign Lord, in which their honour and happiness consists. Will be meddling, to wit, with mat-

He names the eye and ear, because these are the two senses by which instructions are conveyed to the mind; but under them he seems to comprehend all other senses and powers of soul or body, by a synecdoche.

16 [t]Take his garment that is surety for a stranger: and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.

Take his garment, to wit, as a pledge, without which he ought not to be trusted, because by this action he showeth himself to be a fool, and he taketh the ready way to beggary. Object. This precept contradicts that law which forbade the taking of a garment for a pledge, Exod. xxii. 26. Answ. It doth not contradict it, for the cases vastly differ; for that law concerned only the poor, who were forced to borrow for their own necessity, and therefore deserve pity; whereas this reacheth only those who are or would be thought rich and sufficient security for others, and who borrow not for their own need, but for a mere stranger, for which folly they deserve to be severely punished. Besides, this may be only a prediction, though it be delivered in the form of a precept, as many predictions are; and so shows what may be expected by him that is guilty of such folly, even that he shall be stripped of his garments and other necessaries. For a stranger; for a foreigner, or a person unknown to him. Take a pledge of him that is surety; which words are to be understood out of the foregoing clause. For a strange woman; for a harlot, who is so called, Prov. ii. 16, and elsewhere.

21 [d]An inheritance may be gotten hastily at the beginning; [e]but the end thereof shall not be blessed.

An inheritance may be gotten hastily at the beginning; an estate sometimes is got suddenly, in the very beginning of a man's labours for it; in which case it may be presumed that some indirect and unrighteous courses were used for the getting of it, because riches are very seldom given by God, or gotten by men, without men's diligence. But this, as well as many other proverbs, are to be understood of the common course, although it admit of some exceptions. For sometimes merchants or others get great estates speedily by one happy voyage, or by some other prosperous event. This translation follows the Hebrew marginal reading, but according to the textual reading it may be thus rendered and understood; An inheritance gotten in the beginning (to wit, of a man's endeavours) is abominable, to wit, unto God, being supposed to be unjustly gotten, as was now said. The end thereof shall not be blessed; at last it shall be cursed and wither by God's just judgment.

f Deu. 32. 35. ch. 17. 13. & 24. 29. Rom. 12. 17, 19. 1 Thess. 5. 15. 1 Pet. 3. 9. g 2 Sam. 16. 12.

22 [f]Say not thou, I will recompense evil; but [g]wait on the LORD, and he shall save thee.

Say not thou in thy heart; give not way to any such evil thoughts or purposes. Wait on the Lord, to whom it belongs to execute vengeance, and to deliver his people from all their enemies.

h ver. 10. † Heb. balances of deceit.

23 [h]Divers weights are an abomination unto the LORD; and † a false balance is not good.

Divers weights are an abomination unto the Lord; of which see above on ver. 10. Is not good; is very wicked and hateful to God and men.

i Ps. 37. 23. ch. 16. 9 Jer. 10. 23.

24 [i]Man's goings are of the LORD; how can a man then understand his own way?

Man's goings, all men's purposes and actions, are of the Lord; are ordered and overruled by God's wise and powerful providence to accomplish his own counsel and good pleasure, and not what men list or intend. His own way; either, 1. What course he ought to take; which he cannot know without God's direction and assistance: compare Prov. xvi. 9; Jer. x. 23. Or, 2. What the issue of his designs will be, whether they shall succeed or be disappointed; the way being taken for the end or event to which it leads, as it is in many other places. The scope of the proverb is to show that all the events of human life are neither ordered nor foreseen by man's, but only by God's providence, and therefore men should only mind the doing of their duty, and then quietly depend upon God for a good issue to their endeavours.

25 It is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy, and [k]after vows to make enquiry.

It is a snare; it brings guilt and God's curse and vengeance upon him. That which is holy, i. e. those meats or drinks which were devoted or consecrated to God; under which one kind he comprehends and forbids all alienation of sacred or dedicated things from God to a man's private use or benefit; of which see Lev. xxvii. 9; Deut. xxiii. 21; Mal. iii. 8, 9; Acts v. 1, &c. After vows to make inquiry; after a man hath made vows to consider whether he can possibly or may lawfully keep them, and to invent or inquire of others all ways possible to break his vow, and to satisfy or deceive his conscience in so doing; which inquiry is justly censured as a sin and snare, because it is an evidence of a covetous or irreligious mind, and is the ready way and first step towards the open violation of it.

26 [l]A wise king scattereth the wicked, and bringeth the wheel over them.

A wise king, who seriously minds his duty and his true interest, scattereth the wicked; breaks their companies and confederacies, and forceth them to flee several ways for their own safety; driveth them from his presence, and from the society of honest men, as the chaff is by the husbandman separated from the corn, and driven away by the wind, of which this Hebrew word is commonly used, and to which the next clause hath some reference. Bringeth the wheel over them, as the cart-wheel was anciently turned over the sheaves to beat the corn out of them, Isa. xxviii. 27, 28. He punisheth them severely, as their offences deserve. This or such-like punishments were not unusual among the Eastern nations, as we may gather from 2 Sam. viii. 2; xii. 31; Amos i. 3.

27 [m]The spirit of man is the ‖candle of the LORD, searching all the inward parts of the belly.

The spirit, i. e. the reasonable soul. Is the candle; is a clear and glorious light set up in man for his information and direction. Of the Lord; so called, partly because it comes from God in a more immediate and peculiar manner than the body doth, Eccles. xii. 7; and partly because it is in God's stead to observe and judge all a man's actions. Searching all the inward parts of the belly; discerning not only his outward actions, which are visible to others, but his most inward and secret thoughts and affections, which no other man can see, 1 Cor. ii. 11. The belly is here put for the heart, as it is frequently. The soul can reflect upon and judge of its own dispositions and actions; which plainly showeth that the heart is not so deceitful, but that a man by diligent study of it, and the use of the means appointed by God, may arrive at a certain knowledge of its state and condition, in reference to God and to salvation.

28 [n]Mercy and truth preserve the king: and his throne is upholden by mercy.

Mercy; clemency to offenders, and bounty to worthy and to indigent persons; and truth; faithfulness in keeping his word and promises inviolably; preserve the king, because they engage God to guard him, and gain him the reverence and affections of his people, which is a king's greatest safety and happiness. Mercy is again mentioned, to show that although it be an act of grace, and therefore in some sort free, yet princes are obliged to it, both by their duty and by their interest, because it is a singular means of their preservation.

29 The glory of young men is their strength: and [o]the beauty of old men is the grey head.

The glory of young men; that wherein they glory as their privilege above old men. The beauty of old men is the grey head, i. e. their old age, expressed by the outward sign of it, wherein they glory as their peculiar privilege, as a testimony of their piety and God's blessing, and as a token of their great experience and wisdom. The design of this proverb is to declare the several advantages of several ages, and the mutual need they have one of another, and thereby to engage them to mutual love and assistance, and to friendly converse, and to make every one contented with his own age and condition, and not to envy nor yet despise his brother, or the difference of their ages, as is very usual among men.

30 The blueness of a wound †cleanseth away evil: so do stripes the inward parts of the belly.

The blueness of a wound, grievous wounds, which make men black and blue, or severe punishments, cleanseth away evil; are the most effectual means to reclaim a wicked man, and to purge out his corruption. So do stripes, Heb. and stripes, which answer to the wounds in the former clause, the inward parts of the belly; either, 1. Which pierce even to the inward parts of the belly; and so we are to understand out of the former branch, cleanse away evil. Or, 2. They cleanse the inward parts of the belly, i. e. of the heart. So this is an addition to the former clause, and the sense of the whole is, Grievous wounds or stripes do cleanse not only the outward man, by keeping it from evil actions, but even the inward man, by expelling or subduing vile affections; which is mentioned as a great and blessed benefit of afflictions.

CHAP. XXI.

THE king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water: he turneth it whithersoever he will.

The king's heart; his very inward purposes and inclinations, which seem to be most in a man's own power, and out of the reach of all others, and much more his tongue and hand, and all his outward actions. He names kings not to exclude other men, but because they are more arbitrary and uncontrollable than other men. As the rivers of water; which husbandmen or gardeners can draw by little channels into the adjacent grounds as they please, and as their occasions require. He turneth it; directeth and boweth, partly by suggesting those things to their minds which have a commanding influence upon their wills; and partly by a direct and immediate motion of their wills and affections, which being God's creatures must needs be as subject to his power and pleasure as either men's minds or bodies are, and which he moves sweetly and suitably to their own nature, though strongly and effectually. Whithersoever he will; so as they shall fulfil his counsels and designs, either of mercy or of correction to themselves, or to their people.

own eyes: [b]but the LORD pondereth the hearts.

This was said chap. xvi. 2, where it is explained, and is here repeated, either for the great importance and usefulness of it, or because he perceived that the Israelites were very prone to self-deceit.

c 1 Sam. 15. 22. Ps. 50. 8. ch. 15. 8. Is. 1. 11, &c. Hos. 6. 6. Mic. 6. 7, 8.

3 [c]To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the LORD than sacrifice.

Justice and judgment; the conscientious performance of all our duties to men. Than sacrifice; than the most costly outward services offered to God, joined with the neglect of our moral duties to God or men. The same thing is affirmed 1 Sam. xv. 22; Hos. vi. 6; Micah vi. 7, 8, &c.

d ch. 6. 17. † Heb. Haughtiness of eyes. ‖ Or, the light of the wicked.

4 [d]† An high look, and a proud heart, and ‖ the plowing of the wicked, is sin.

An high look; one gesture or sign of pride put for all the rest, Prov. vi. 17. A proud heart; pride lurking and reigning in the heart, though it do not discover itself to men by outward actions, but be disguised with a show of humility, as it is frequently. The ploughing; either, 1. Strictly and properly so called: even their civil or natural actions, which in themselves are lawful and good, are made sinful, as they are managed by ungodly men, without any regard to the service and glory of God, which ought to be the great end of all our actions, 1 Cor. x. 31, and with a design of serving their own wicked lusts by it. Or, 2. Metaphorically, their designs and endeavours, which are said to be sin, because they are wholly and fully set upon sin, and they make sin their trade or business, which is called ploughing wickedness, Job iv. 8. But all the ancient interpreters, and divers others, render the word the lamp or light, as this Hebrew word, even thus pointed, is rendered, 1 Kings xi. 36; xv. 4; 2 Kings viii. 19; 2 Chron. xxi. 7; and the lamp of the wicked is a phrase used in this book, chap. xiii. 9; xxiv. 20, as also Job xxi. 17; whereas the ploughing of the wicked is a phrase not elsewhere used. And this seems best to agree with the context, for by their lamp he seems to understand all their pomp and glory, that worldly greatness and prosperity, which is the fuel of their pride, and therefore is most fitly joined with it. Is sin; it is by them turned into sin, and made the occasion of much wickedness. The whole verse may be thus rendered, An high look and a proud heart, which is the light or glory of the wicked, (i. e. wherein they glory, esteeming it magnanimity or gallantry of spirit,) is sin, i. e. is a great and grievous sin. And in this manner the learned Mercer renders the verse, save only that he translates the Hebrew word nir, the ploughing.

5 [e]The thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteousness; but of every one that is hasty only to want.

The diligent, who carefully and industriously prosecutes what he hath wisely contrived and resolved. That is hasty; who manageth his affairs rashly, without due consideration. Only to want; is likely to bring himself to poverty.

f ch. 10. 2. & 13. 11. & 20. 21. 2 Pet. 2. 3.

6 [f]The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death.

By a lying tongue; by false witness-bearing, or by any other false or deceitful words or actions, whereby many men get riches. Is a vanity tossed to and fro; is like the chaff or smoke driven away by the wind; it is neither satisfactory nor durable, but quickly vanisheth away, as hath been frequently observed of estates ill gotten. That seek death; not designedly, but eventually, that take those courses which will bring death or destruction upon them or theirs.

7 The robbery of the wicked shall †destroy them; because they refuse to do judgment.

The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them; the injury which they do to others shall either by God or men be returned upon their own heads. They refuse to do judgment; they wilfully and obstinately give up themselves to unrighteous practices.

8 The way of man is froward and strange: but as for the pure, his work is right.

The way of man; the course of his life. Of man; of every man; of man by nature and in his corrupt estate; of a wicked or impure man, to whom the pure is opposed in the next clause. Strange; estranged from God and from man's primitive integrity, and from the rule of his actions, reason and Scripture; in which respects wicked men are called strangers, Psal. liv. 3; Ezek. xliv. 7, and elsewhere. But as for the pure, his work is right; but he whose heart is pure and upright, his conversation is agreeable to it.

g ver. 19. ch. 19. 13. & 25. 24. & 27. 15. † Heb. a woman of contentions. † Heb. an house of society.

9 [g]It is better to dwell in a corner of the housetop, than with †a brawling woman in †a wide house.

To dwell, to wit, alone in quietness, as appears from the opposite clause. Of the house-top; of the roof of the house, which in those countries was flat and plain, and habitable, but was exposed to all the injuries of the weather. In a wide house; or, in a common house; or, a house of society, where husband and wife live together, or which is capable of many friends or companies.

10 [h]The soul of the wicked desireth

† Heb. is not favoured. evil: his neighbour † findeth no favour in his eyes.

The soul of the wicked desireth evil; his heart is fully and earnestly set in him, as it is expressed, Eccles. viii. 11, to do evil, to work wickedness, to do mischief to others, to satisfy his own lusts, though it be with injury of others. His neighbour findeth no favour in his eyes, if he either dissuade him from his wickedness, or stand in the way of his lusts. He spares neither friend nor foe.

i ch. 19. 25. 11 [i]When the scorner is punished, the simple is made wise: and when the wise is instructed, he receiveth knowledge.

The simple; the honest or plain-hearted man, as chap. xix. 25, where this whole verse for the substance of it is contained and explained. Instructed; or, prospers, as this word is used, Prov. xvii. 8, and elsewhere. So the sense of the verse is, The simple learn wisdom, both from the punishment of wicked men, and from the prosperity of good men.

12 The righteous man wisely considereth the house of the wicked: but God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness.

Wisely considereth the house of the wicked; he looketh through its present power and glory (which dazzleth the eyes of others) unto that ruin to which it is designed. But, or now, or that, this being the thing which he wisely considereth, God overthroweth, or will overthrow in his due time, though for a season he bear with them.

k Matt. 7. 2. & 18. 30, &c. Jam. 2. 13. 13 [k]Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard.

Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, when they cry out by reason of oppression or want, and beg relief from him, he also shall cry himself unto God or men, in his straits which God will bring upon him.

l ch. 17. 8, 23. & 18. 16. 14 [l]A gift in secret pacifieth anger: and a reward in the bosom strong wrath.

A gift, to a person offended and angry with us, as the following words show. In secret; which makes it more acceptable; for gifts openly given savour of ostentation in the giver, and cause some shame or contempt to the receiver. In the bosom; secretly conveyed into his bosom. See on Prov. xvii. 8; xviii. 16.

15 It is joy to the just to do judgment:

m ch. 10. 29. [m]but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.

It is joy to the just: the sense is either, 1. He is highly pleased and delighted with it. Or, 2. He reapeth much comfort and benefit by it, which is opposed to the following destruction: joy is put for matter or cause of joy. To do judgment; to do what is just or good, for this is opposed to working of iniquity. Destruction; or, as others render it, terror or horror, opposite to joy.

16 The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead.

The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding; that forsaketh the rule of God's word, and walketh after his own lusts; shall remain in the congregation of the dead; shall, without repentance, be condemned to eternal death or damnation.

‖ Or, sport. 17 He that loveth ‖pleasure shall be a poor man: he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich.

He that loveth pleasure, that gives up himself to the pursuit and enjoyment of sensual and immoderate pleasures, shall be a poor man; takes the ready course to poverty. Wine and oil are put for all delicious fare and luxurious feasting; for wine and oil were much used in feasts in those parts.

n ch. 11. 8. Is. 43. 3, 4. 18 [n]The wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright.

The wicked shall be brought into those troubles which were either threatened by God or designed by wicked men against the righteous, and by that means, as by a ransom, the righteous shall be delivered. Thus Achan was a ransom for Israel, Josh. vii. 26, and Haman for Mordecai.

o ver. 9. † Heb. in the land of the desert. 19 [o]It is better to dwell † in the wilderness, than with a contentious and an angry woman.

Than, understand, in a wide house, as it is expressed above, ver. 9, and as the opposition here requires.

p Ps. 112. 3. Matt. 25. 3, 4. 20 [p]There is treasure to be desired and oil in the dwelling of the wise; but a foolish man spendeth it up.

Wise men lay up all necessary and desirable treasures for their own use, and for their children and families. Oil is particularly mentioned, partly because that was a considerable part of their wealth and treasures in those countries, of which see Deut. vii. 13; xxviii. 40, 51; Judg. ix. 9; Micah vi. 15, &c.; and partly to show that his providence reached not only to necessaries, but even to matters of just and lawful delight.

q ch. 15. 9. Matt. 5. 6. 21 [q]He that followeth after righteousness and mercy findeth life, righteousness, and honour.

That followeth after; that fervently desires, and diligently and constantly endeavours, to attain to them, for such shall and will certainly obtain them. Righteousness and mercy; living in the constant exercise of these virtues. Findeth; shall obtain from God what is right and due to him; either from God, by virtue of his gracious promise; or from men, whose hearts God will dispose to deal justly and kindly with him.

r Eccles. 9. 14, &c. 22 [r]A wise man scaleth the city of the mighty, and casteth down the strength of the confidence thereof.

A wise man scaleth the city of the mighty; wisdom and policy is ofttimes more considerable and powerful than strength. The strength of the confidence thereof; the strongest forts, to which the citizens trust most for their defence.

s ch. 12. 13. & 13. 3. & 18. 21. Jam. 3. 2. 23 [s]Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles.

Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue from offensive and provoking speeches, keepeth his soul, his person, from troubles; which a licentious and abusive tongue frequently brings upon a man.

† Heb. in the wrath of pride. 24 Proud and haughty scorner is his name, who dealeth † in proud wrath.

Proud and haughty scorner is his name; instead of that respect and glory which he seeks by such courses, he shall be branded with the title and imputation of an arrogant and scornful person, which is most contemptible and hateful to mankind. Who dealeth in proud wrath; who in the conduct of his affairs and dealings in the world is not governed by reason and justice, but by his own pride and passions.

t ch. 13. 4. 25 [t]The desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour.

Killeth him; either, 1. Tormenteth him almost to death, whilst he passionately desires that which he sees he shall not enjoy, and will not take pains to procure. Or, 2. Exposeth him to extreme want, and so to death, or to such wicked courses, for the supply of his wants, as bring him to an untimely death.

u Ps. 37. 26. & 112. 9. 26 He coveteth greedily all the day long: but the [u]righteous giveth and spareth not.

He coveteth; the slothful man, mentioned in the last verse. But because the verses in this book are for the most part independent one upon another, this clause is and may be otherwise rendered, There is that coveteth, &c.; or, the wicked (which may be understood from the opposition of the righteous in the next clause) coveteth, &c. All the day long; spends his whole time in vain and lazy desires, but will not labour to get any thing, either to use himself, or to give to others. The righteous giveth and spareth not; by God's blessing upon his industry he procures enough, not only for his own support, but also for the liberal relief of others.

x Ps. 50. 9. ch. 15. 8. Is. 66. 3. Jer. 6. 20. Amos 5. 22. † Heb. in wickedness?

27 x The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination: how much more, when he bringeth it †with a wicked mind?

The sacrifice; all the most glorious and costly services which they offer to God. Is abomination; God rejects and abhors them, because they are offered by such men and in such manner as God justly abhors. When; or, because, as all the ancient translators render it, the Hebrew particle aph being expletive; or, even because; so the following clause gives the reason of the former proposition. With a wicked mind; with a hypocritical and impenitent heart, or with a bad design, not in obedience to God's command, and with respect to his honour and service; but either to cover, or countenance, or promote some wicked intention or course, which notwithstanding all his professions of religion he is resolved to prosecute.

28 y † A false witness shall perish: but the man that heareth speaketh constantly.

A false witness, Heb. a witness of lies; one who is forward to swear or speak false things, or such things as he hath not heard nor learned from others, nor seen, but devised in his own heart. Shall perish; shall be severely punished, either by God or men, and shall be confounded and silenced, because none will for the future regard or credit his testimony. The man that heareth; he who hears before he speaks, and witnesseth nothing but what he hath heard or seen, and knows to be true. Speaketh constantly; doth not contradict himself, but always affirmeth the same thing. Or, as most other interpreters render the words, speaketh (or, may speak, dare speak freely and boldly) for ever; when liars are cut off, he lives, and is in a capacity of speaking and bearing witness again and again, as occasion requires, as long as he lives, and his testimony will be received.

29 A wicked man hardeneth his face: but as for the upright, he ‖directeth his way.

Hardeneth his face; continueth in evil courses with obstinacy and impudence, in spite of all the commands of God, or counsels of men. He directeth his way; he ordereth his steps aright; and if at any time he goeth awry, he doth not add rebellion to his sin, nor persist in his error, but considereth his ways, and turneth his feet to God's testimonies, as David did, Psal. cxix. 59. Or, considereth his way, remembering with grief and shame what he hath done, and taking better heed to himself for the future.

z Is. 8. 9, 10. Jer. 9. 23. Acts 5. 39.

30 z There is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the LORD.

Which can prevail against the counsel and will of God.

a Ps. 20. 7. & 33. 17. Is. 31. 1. b Ps. 3. 8. ‖ Or, victory.

31 a The horse is prepared against the day of battle: but b ‖safety is of the LORD.

The horse; under which particular all warlike provisions are comprehended. Safety is of the Lord; the success of the battle depends not upon any human strength or art, but merely upon God's providence, who gives the victory when and to whom he pleaseth, and ofttimes to those that have least reason to expect it. Compare Eccles. ix. 11.

CHAP. XXII.

a Eccles. 7. 1. ‖ Or, favour is better than, &c.

A a GOOD name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and ‖loving favour rather than silver and gold.

A good name, Heb. name put for good name, as Eccles. vii. 1, the word good being easily understood out of the next clause, in which it is expressed in the Hebrew text. A good reputation amongst wise and good men. Is rather to be chosen than great riches; partly, because it is a most special blessing from God, being appropriated to worthy persons, whereas God commonly throws away riches upon the basest of men; partly, because it gives a man that tranquillity and satisfaction of mind, and that content and comfort in his condition, which no riches can purchase; and partly, because as it is commonly an evidence of a man's virtue and piety, so it is accompanied with God's love and favour, whereas riches are oft given by God in wrath, and to the hurt of the owner. Loving favour; or, good grace or favour; a good report among men, especially among good men, and that hearty love and kindness which attends upon it.

2 b The rich and poor meet together: c the LORD is the maker of them all.

The rich and poor meet together; either, 1. In a way of hostility or opposition, as this word is sometimes used; the rich contemning and oppressing the poor, and the poor envying and purloining from the rich; and so the following words are a reason why that hostility should cease. Or, 2. In the way of mutual converse; they live together, and need one another. The Lord is the Maker of them all; not only as they are men, but also as they are poor or rich, which difference comes wholly from God's providence; they have one common Creator, and Lord, and Judge, and the one cannot despise nor grudge at the other without a reflection upon God.

3 d A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself: but the simple pass on, and are punished.

The evil; the calamity or judgment of God threatened and approaching. Hideth himself; retireth to his strong tower, mentioned Prov. xviii. 10; by prayer and repentance putteth himself under the protection of the Almighty. Compare Isa. xxvi. 20. Pass on in their former road and course of sin, carelessly and securely, as travellers do in a road where they apprehend no danger.

4 e ‖By humility and the fear of the LORD are riches, honour, and life.

By humility; or, because of humility; or, as many others render it, the reward of humility; that reward which God hath graciously promised and will give to humility; which is a grace of great price in God's eyes. See Isa. lvii. 15; James iv. 6. The fear of the Lord; by which he distinguisheth true and Christian humility from counterfeit and moral humility, because that ariseth from a deep sense of God's greatness, and purity, and perfection, compared with our meanness, and filthiness, and manifold imperfections, whereas this is quite of another nature, and from other grounds. Life; the comforts of this life, and the happiness of the next, both which are promised to godliness, 1 Tim. iv. 8.

5 f Thorns and snares are in the way of the froward: g he that doth keep his soul shall be far from them.

Thorns and snares are in the way of the froward; the wicked by their evil courses expose themselves to many dangers and occasions both of sin and mischief. He that doth keep his soul, that taketh heed to himself, and to his actions, and to the saving of his life and soul, shall be far from them; either, 1. Will avoid the society of such froward persons. Or, 2. Shall by that circumspection preserve himself from those thorns, &c., with which the pronoun them agrees in number.

h Eph. 6. 4. 2 Tim. 3. 15. ‖ Or, Catechise. † Heb. in his way.

6 h ‖Train up a child †in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it.

Train up, or, initiate or instruct, a child in the way he should go, Heb. in or according to his way, i. e. either, 1. According to his capacity. Or rather, 2. In that course or manner of life which thou wouldst have him choose and follow. Or, as one learned man renders it, in the beginning of his way, i. e. in his tender years, as soon as he is capable of instruction. Heb. in the mouth, &c. The mouth is oft put for the beginning or entrance of any place, as Gen. xxix. 2; Josh. x. 18; Prov. viii. 3; Dan. vi. 17. Will not depart from it, to wit, not easily and ordinarily. The impressions made in childish years will remain, as hath been observed by all sorts of learned writers. But this, as many proverbs of like nature, are not to be understood as if this were universally and necessarily true, which experience confutes, but because it is so for the most part, except some extraordinary cause hinder it.

i Jam. 2. 6. † Heb. to the man that lendeth.

7 i The rich ruleth over the poor, and the borrower is servant †to the lender.

Ruleth over the poor, to wit, with rigour and tyranny, taking advantage of his necessities. Is servant to the lender; is at his mercy, and therefore forced to comply with his pleasure. The design of the proverb is partly to correct this miscarriage of the rich, and partly to oblige all men to diligence, whereby they may deliver themselves from this servitude.

k Job 4. 8. Hos. 10. 13. ‖ Or, and with the rod of his anger he shall be consumed.

8 [k]He that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity: ‖and the rod of his anger shall fail.

He that soweth iniquity, or unrighteousness, whose common practice it is to wrong or oppress others, shall reap vanity; or, trouble or misery, as this word is commonly used, and as divers here render it The mischief which he hath done to others shall be returned to him by God's righteous sentence. The rod of his anger shall fail; that power which he used with fury and cruelty shall be taken away from him.

9 [l]†He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed; for he giveth of his bread to the poor.

He that hath a bountiful eye, Heb. a good eye. He who looks upon the wants and miseries of others with compassion and kindness, as this phrase is used, Matt. xx. 15; as an evil eye is put for one that beholds others with envy and unmercifulness, Deut. xv. 9; Prov. xxiii. 6; xxviii. 22. Shall be blessed, both by God and men.

m Gen. 21. 9, 10. Ps. 101. 5.

10 [m]Cast out the scorner, and contention shall go out; yea, strife and reproach shall cease.

Cast out of your society, avoid conversation with, the scorner; who neither fears God, nor reverences man, but scorns all admonitions, and minds only the pleasing of himself, and the gratifying of his own lusts, which is the chief cause of most contentions. Strife and reproach; wherewith he loads those that either oppose or admonish him.

11 [n]He that loveth pureness of heart, ‖for the grace of his lips the king shall be his friend.

That loveth pureness of heart; who is plain-hearted or sincere, and abhors dissimulation. For the grace of his lips; for those gracious speeches which naturally and commonly flow from a pure heart. Or, and (understand, loveth, out of the former clause) grace of his lips; whose discourse is gracious and sincere. The king shall be his friend; the greatest men will, or should, desire and highly prize the acquaintance and advice of such persons, rather than of dissemblers and flatterers, wherewith they are most commonly pestered.

12 The eyes of the LORD preserve knowledge, and he overthroweth ‖the words of the transgressor.

‖ Or, the matters.

The eyes of the Lord preserve, God by the watchful eye of his providence maintains and defends, knowledge, to wit, men of knowledge; the abstract being put for the concrete, as pride is put for a proud man, Psal. xxxvi. 11, deceit for the deceitful, as Prov. xii. 17: so here knowledge for knowing and good men, such as the last verse spoke of, whose hearts are pure, and speeches gracious; not only the king shall be their friend, as he said there, but God also, which he adds here. The words; their false and flattering speeches, whereby they designed and expected to gain the favour and friendship of great men, which are opposed to the sincere and gracious speeches of good men, implied in the first cause of this verse, and expressed in the foregoing verse; or, as others render it, and the word is very commonly used, the matters; all his counsels, hopes, enterprises, and concerns.

13 [o]The slothful man saith, There is a lion without, I shall be slain in the streets.

Saith, allegeth as his excuse to them who upbraid him with idleness, or persuade him to diligence, There is a lion without; there are extreme dangers and invincible difficulties in my way. I shall be slain by that lion, or some other way. In the streets; which is added to show the ridiculousness of his excuse; for lions abide in the woods or fields, not in the streets of towns or cities.

p ch. 2. 16. & 5. 3. & 7. 5. & 23. 27. q Eccles. 7. 26.

14 [p]The mouth of strange women is a deep pit: [q]he that is abhorred of the LORD shall fall therein.

The mouth; her fair and flattering speeches, wherewith she enticeth him to gross filthiness, as it is noted, Prov. vii. 21. A deep pit; into which it is easy to fall, but hard, if not impossible, to get out of it. It is a rare thing for any person, once entered into the course of whoredom, sincerely to repent of it, and turn from it. See Prov. ii. 19. That is abhorred of the Lord, to wit, in a high and singular manner; who by his former impieties, and contempt of God and of his grace, hath provoked God to leave and loathe him, and to punish one sin with another; for otherwise all sinners, as such, are abhorred by God.

15 Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child; but [r]the rod of correction shall drive it far from him.

Is bound; is fixed and settled there, as being born with him, and rooted in his very nature, and not plucked up without great difficulty and diligence. The rod of correction shall drive it far from him; the smart of punishment makes him weary of his sin, and watchful against it.

16 He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want.

That giveth to the rich; that vainly and prodigally casts away his estate upon those who do not need it, or gives it to them with evil design, as that they may assist him in oppressing the poor, or at least not hinder him in it.

17 Bow down thine ear, and hear the words of the wise, and apply thine heart unto my knowledge.

Of the wise; of wise and holy men of God. Apply thine heart; thirst after it, and give up thyself to the diligent study of it. My knowledge; the knowledge of God, and of thy several duties, which I am here delivering to thee.

18 For it is a pleasant thing if thou keep them †within thee; they shall withal be fitted in thy lips.

If thou keep them, the words of the wise, within thee, Heb. in thy belly, i. e. in thine heart, which implies receiving them in love, and retaining them in mind and memory. Be fitted; be fitly expressed; or, be disposed or ordered. The sense is, When thou hast got them into thine heart, thou wilt be able and ready to discourse pertinently and profitably of them.

19 That thy trust may be in the LORD, I have made known to thee this day, ‖even to thee.

That knowing God, and his word and promises, thou mayst cheerfully and confidently trust in him, which is the only way to thy safety and happiness.

20 Have not I written to thee [s]excellent things in counsels and knowledge,

Excellent things; or, princely things, as they are called, Prov. viii. 6, the great things of God's law, as Hos. viii. 12. In counsels and knowledge; consisting of counsels to direct thy practice, and knowledge to inform and enrich thy mind. Or by that known figure hendiadis, in counsels of knowledge, i. e. in good counsels, which proceed from sound knowledge, and make a man knowing and wise, which are opposed to the counsels of the wicked, Prov. xii. 5, which are without knowledge.

t Luke 1. 3, 4. u 1 Pet. 3. 15. ‖ Or, to those that send thee.

21 [t]That I might make thee know the certainty of the words of truth; [u]that thou mightest answer the words of truth ‖to them that send unto thee?

That I may make thee know the certainty of the words of truth; that I may teach thee, not false, or vain, or uncertain things, as the teachers of the heathen nations do, but the true and infallible oracles of God. That thou mightest answer the words of truth; that being instructed by me, thou mayst be able to give true, and solid, and satisfactory answers. To them that send unto thee, to wit, for thine advice in great and difficult matters. Or, to those that send thee, i. e. that employ thee in any business of moment, whereof they expect an account from thee.

22 [x] Rob not the poor, because he is poor: [y] neither oppress the afflicted in the gate:

x Ex. 23. 6. Job 31. 16, 21.
y Zech. 7. 10. Mal. 3. 5.

Because he is poor: this may be mentioned, either, 1. As a motive to this robbery, because he was unable to resist him, or to revenge himself upon him. Do not take advantage of his poverty. Or, 2. As an argument against it, because he is a fitter object for thy pity and charity, than for thy injustice or cruelty. It is base and inhuman to crush such a person. In the gate; in the place of judgment, or under pretence of justice, and much less in other ways, where there is no colour of justice.

23 [z] For the LORD will plead their cause, and spoil the soul of those that spoiled them.

z 1 Sam. 24. 12. & 25. 39. Ps. 12. 5. & 35. 1, 10. & 68. 5. & 140. 12. ch. 23. 11. Jer. 51. 36.

Will plead their cause; which he hath in a peculiar manner undertaken to do. Spoil the soul; take away not only their goods, but their lives too; so fully will he recompense their wickedness to them.

24 Make no friendship with an angry man; and with a furious man thou shalt not go:

Into his company; not converse frequently and familiarly with him, as friends use to do.

25 Lest thou learn his ways, and get a snare to thy soul.

Lest thou learn his ways; lest thou be infected by his example, or provoked by his passion to return the like to him. A snare; either, 1. A mischief, which is oft the effect of unbridled rage. Or, 2. An occasion of sin; either by drawing thee to an imitation or requital of his rage; or by tempting thee to unfaithfulness in performing the great office of a friend, to wit, admonition or reproof, which, by reason of his furious temper, thou either canst not or wilt not do.

26 [a] Be not thou one of them that strike hands, or of them that are sureties for debts.

a ch. 6. 1. & 11. 15.

To wit, rashly, or unnecessarily.

27 If thou hast nothing to pay, why should he [b] take away thy bed from under thee?

b ch. 20. 16.

Why wilt thou put thyself into the hands of such a man, who will exact the debt from thee without any compassion? For though God did not allow this practice, covetous creditors would frequently do it.

28 [c] Remove not the ancient ‖ landmark, which thy fathers have set.

c Deut. 19. 14. & 27. 17. ch. 23. 10.

Landmark, whereby the lands of several possessors were distinguished and divided. Do not enrich thyself with the injury of other men; do not invade the rights of others.

29 Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before † mean men.

Diligent; or, expeditious, as the word properly signifies; one of quick despatch, vigorous and speedy in executing what hath been well and wisely contrived. He shall stand before kings; he is fit to be employed in the affairs of the greatest princes.

CHAP. XXIII.

WHEN thou sittest to eat with a ruler, consider diligently what is before thee:

When thou sittest to eat with a ruler, when thou art invited to a feast with a great man, consider diligently what is before thee; either 1. What person or persons. Or rather, 2. What things; what plenty and variety of meats and drinks, by which thou mayst easily be tempted to excess, and by that means induced to use such speeches or carriages as may be unfit for thee, or many ways hurtful to thee.

2 And put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite.

Put a knife to thy throat; restrain and moderate thine appetite, as if a knife or some other thing stuck in thy throat, and hindered thee from swallowing what thou didst desire; or as if a man stood with a knife at thy throat ready to kill thee, if thou didst transgress; or though it be as irksome to thee to do so as if thou hadst a knife put to thy throat. So this is to be understood metaphorically, as that phrase of cutting off the right hand, &c., Matt. v. 29, 30. Or, For thou dost (or, lest thou shouldst, as the Syriac interpreter renders it; or, otherwise thou wilt or shouldst) put a knife to thy throat. So the sense is, When thou goest to their feasts, thou dost expose thyself to great and manifest hazards, to thy own intemperance, and to all its dangerous consequences, and to the ill effects of other men's intemperance. Given to appetite; prone to excess in eating and drinking.

3 Be not desirous of his dainties: for they are deceitful meat.

Either because they do not yield thee that satisfaction which thou didst expect from them, but rather load thee with ill humours, and the seeds of divers diseases; or because they are not provided for thee with sincerity and good will, but with some evil design upon thee, either to discover and betray thee, or to enslave thee. See below, ver. 6, 7.

4 [a] Labour not to be rich: [b] cease from thine own wisdom.

a ch. 28. 20. 1 Tim. 6. 9, 10.
b ch. 3. 5. Rom. 12. 16.

Labour not, Heb. Do not weary thyself with immoderate cares and labours, as many covetous men do. From thine own wisdom; from that carnal wisdom which is natural to man in his corrupt estate, which persuades men to believe that it is their interest to use all possible means to get riches, and that the happiness of their lives consists in the abundance of their possessions, directly contrary to the assertion of our blessed Lord, Luke xii. 15.

5 † Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not? for riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle toward heaven.

Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that, i. e. look upon it with earnestness and greedy desire, employing the eyes of thy mind and body about it. Which is not; which hath no solid and settled being; which is ours to have, but not to hold; which is always upon the wing, and ofttimes gone in the twinkling of an eye, so that the owner is frequently at a loss, and cannot tell whether he hath his estate, or whether he hath lost it. They fly away as an eagle, swiftly, strongly, and irrevocably. We quickly lose the sight and possession of them. Their flying away from us is elegantly opposed to our eyes being set, or, as it is in the Hebrew, flying upon them, in the beginning of the verse.

6 [c] Eat thou not the bread of him that hath [d] an evil eye, neither desire thou his dainty meats:

d Deut. 15. 9.

Of him that hath an evil eye; of the envious or covetous man, who secretly grudgeth thee the meat which he sets before thee, as this phrase is used, Prov. xxviii. 22; Matt. xx. 15; as, on the contrary, a liberal man is said to have a good eye, Prov. xxii. 9.

7 For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he: Eat and drink, [e] saith he to thee; but his heart is not with thee.

e Ps. 12. 2.

As he thinketh in his heart, so is he: you are not to judge of him by his words, for so he professeth kindness, as it follows; but by the constant temper of his mind, which he hath fully discovered to all that know him by the course of his life. His heart is not with thee; he hath no sincere kindness to thee, but inwardly grudgeth thee that which he outwardly offers to thee.

8 The morsel which thou hast eaten shalt thou vomit up, and lose thy sweet words.

When thou perceivest his churlish disposition and carriage, his meat will be loathsome to thee, and thou wilt wish either that thou hadst never eaten it, or that thou couldst vomit it up again. Thy sweet words; thy pleasant discourse, wherewith thou didst adorn his table, and design both to delight and profit him, is lost, and of no effect to him, and thou wilt be ready to repent of it.

f ch. 9. 8. Matt. 7. 6. 9 [f]Speak not in the ears of a fool: for he will despise the wisdom of thy words.

Speak not in the ears of a fool; cast not away good counsels upon obstinate and incorrigible sinners. We have the same advice given Matt. vii. 6. He will despise the wisdom of thy words; he will scornfully reject thy wise and good admonitions.

g Deut. 19. 14. & 27. 17. ch. 22. 28. ‖ Or, bound. 10 [g]Remove not the old ‖landmark; and enter not into the fields of the fatherless:

Either to take away their goods; or rather, to possess their lands, as this phrase is used, 2 Sam. v. 6.

h Job 31. 21. ch. 22. 23. 11 [h]For their redeemer is mighty; he shall plead their cause with thee.

Their redeemer, Heb. their near kinsman, to whom it belongs to avenge their wrongs, and to recover and maintain their rights, of which see Lev. xxv. 25; Numb. xxxv. 12. Thus God is pleased to call himself, to show how much he concerns himself for the relief of oppressed and helpless persons.

12 Apply thine heart unto instruction, and thine ears to the words of knowledge.

Apply thine heart unto instruction; content not thyself with outward hearing or reading of it, but affectionately receive it into thine heart, and lay it up there as choice treasure.

i ch. 13. 24. & 19. 18. & 22. 15. & 29. 15, 17. 13 [i]Withhold not correction from the child: for if thou beatest him with the rod, he shall not die.

It is a likely mean to prevent their corruption, and the destruction which commonly follows it, as the next verse explains this.

14 Thou shalt beat him with the rod, and [k]shalt deliver his soul from hell.

k 1 Cor. 5. 5.

l ver. 24, 25. ch. 29. 3. ‖ Or, even I will rejoice. 15 My son, [l]if thine heart be wise, my heart shall rejoice, ‖even mine.

In the good success of my counsels, and in thy piety and happiness, which is as truly desirable and pleasant to me as my own.

16 Yea, my reins shall rejoice, when thy lips speak right things.

I shall rejoice not only in show and profession, but inwardly, and with all my soul.

m Ps. 37. 1. & 73. 3. ch. 3. 31. & 24. 1. n ch. 28. 14. 17 [m]Let not thine heart envy sinners: but [n]be thou in the fear of the LORD all the day long.

Let not thine heart envy sinners; let not the consideration of their present impunity and prosperity stir thee up, either to envy them, or to approve and imitate their evil courses. Be thou in the fear of the Lord; reverence the presence of the Divine Majesty, and dread his power and justice, and those judgments which he hath prepared for sinners, and thou wilt see no cause to envy, but rather to pity them. All the day long; not only when thou art in trouble, but in all times and conditions.

o Ps. 37. 37. ch. 24. 14. Luke 16. 25. ‖ Or, reward. 18 [o]For surely there is an ‖end; and thine expectation shall not be cut off.

An end; an expected and happy end for such as fear God, which was required, ver. 17. Or, a reward, as this Hebrew word is rendered, Prov. xxiv. 20. Thine expectation shall not be cut off; thou shalt certainly enjoy that good which thou expectest, as the wicked shall lose that happiness which they enjoy.

19 Hear thou, my son, and be wise, and [p]guide thine heart in the way.

Be wise; rest not in hearing, but see that thou growest wiser and better by it. Guide thine heart; order the whole course of thine affections and actions. In the way; in God's way, oft called the way, as hath been observed before.

20 [q]Be not among winebibbers; among riotous eaters †of flesh:

q Is. 5. 22. Matt. 24. 49. Luke 21. 34. Rom. 13. 13. Eph. 5. 18. † Heb. of their flesh.

Avoid their conversation and company, lest thou be either infected or injured by them.

21 For the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty: and [r]drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags.

r ch. 19. 15.

Drowsiness; immoderate sleep and idleness, which is as ready a way to poverty as gluttony or drunkenness is.

22 [s]Hearken unto thy father that begat thee, and despise not thy mother when she is old.

s ch. 1. 8. & 30. 17. Eph. 6. 1, 2.

That begat thee; and therefore desires and seeks thy good in all his counsels. When she is old; when the infirmity of age is added to that of her sex, which is apt to breed contempt.

23 [t]Buy the truth, and sell it not; also wisdom, and instruction, and understanding.

t ch. 4. 5, 7. Matt. 13. 44

Buy the truth; purchase it upon any terms, spare no pains nor cost to get it. The truth; the true and saving knowledge of God's mind and will concerning your salvation, and the way that leads to it. Sell it not; do not forget it nor forsake it for any worldly advantages, as ungodly men frequently do. Understanding; whereby you may love and practise the truth known and received.

24 [u]The father of the righteous shall greatly rejoice: and he that begetteth a wise child shall have joy of him.

u ch. 10. 1. & 15. 20. ver. 15.

25 Thy father and thy mother shall be glad, and she that bare thee shall rejoice.

Thy father and thy mother shall be glad; he repeateth this again, as a powerful argument to prevail with all children that are not void of natural affection, to labour to be wise and good, that so they may glad the hearts of their parents, to whom they have such high and indelible obligations. She that bare thee with so great pain and hazard, and brought thee up with such tender care, whom thou canst not better requite.

26 My son, give me thine heart, and let thine eyes observe my ways.

Give me thine heart; receive my counsels with thy whole heart. Solomon speaking in God's name and cause, requires the heart to be given to him. Let thine eyes observe, let thy mind seriously and practically consider, my ways; either, 1. The ways in which I have walked, my evil practices; take warning by my sad example. Or, 2. The ways which I prescribe to you; as the apostles called the gospel which they preached their gospel, 1 Thess. i. 5; 2 Tim. ii. 8.

27 [x]For a whore is a deep ditch; and a strange woman is a narrow pit.

x ch. 22. 14.

A deep ditch; in which a man is in evident danger of perdition, and out of which it is exceeding difficult to escape.

28 [y]She also lieth in wait ‖as for a prey, and increaseth the transgressors among men.

y ch. 7. 12. Eccles. 7. 26. ‖ Or, as a robber.

Lieth in wait as for a prey; watching all opportunities of insnaring young men to their destruction. Increaseth the transgressors among men; she is the cause of innumerable sins against God, and against the marriage-bed, against the soul and body too, and by her wicked example and arts involveth many persons in the guilt of her sins.

29 [z]Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who [a]hath redness of eyes?

z Is. 5. 11, 22. a Gen. 49. 12.

From the sin of lust he proceeds to that of drunkenness, which doth frequently accompany it. Babbling the sin of much and impertinent talking; or, tumultuous noise or clamour, which is usual among drunkards. See Prov. xx. 1. Without cause; upon every slight occasion, which men inflamed with wine are very apt to take.

b ch. 20. 1. Eph. 5. 18. c Ps. 75. 8. ch. 9. 2.

30 [b]They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek [c]mixed wine.

Either mixed with water, or with other ingredients, to make it strong and delicious. Heb. mixture; mixed drinks of several sorts suited to their palates.

31 Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup, when it moveth itself aright.

Look not thou upon the wine earnestly, so as to inflame thine appetite towards it; in which sense men are forbidden to look upon a woman, Job xxxi. 1; Matt. v. 28. When it is red; which was the colour of the best wines in that country, which therefore are called blood, Gen. xlix. 11; Deut. xxxii. 14; and such were used by them in the passover. When it moveth itself aright; when it sparkleth and frisketh, and seems to smile upon a man.

It hurts the body in many respects, impairs the vigour of the mind, wastes the estate and reputation, wounds the conscience, and, without repentance, will destroy the soul.

33 Thine eyes shall behold strange women, and thine heart shall utter perverse things.

Behold, with evil intent, or lustfully, which is the effect of drinking much wine, as is noted in Scripture, Gen. xix. 31, 35; Hos. iv. 18, and other authors. Thine heart shall utter perverse things; thine heart, which, when thou hadst the use of thy wit, concealed, will then discover its wickedness by filthy and perverse speeches.

34 Yea, thou shalt be as he that lieth down † in the midst of the sea, or as he that lieth upon the top of a mast.

That lieth down to sleep, of which that word is frequently used, in the midst of the sea; in a ship in the midst of the sea. This phrase notes the temper and condition of the drunkard, the giddiness of his brain, the unquietness of his mind, and especially his extreme danger joined with great security. The top of a mast; the worst part of the ship, both for its perpetual tossings, and for the hazard of him that sleeps on it.

d Jer. 5. 3. ch. 27. 22. ‖ Heb. I knew it not. e Eph. 4. 19. f See Deut. 29. 19. Is. 56. 12.

35 [d]They have stricken me, shalt thou say, and I was not sick; they have beaten me, and † [e]I felt it not: [f]when shall I awake? I will seek it yet again.

They have stricken me; I cannot deny that I exposed myself by my drunkenness to manifold abuses and injuries. I was not sick; I was not then sensible of it, neither do I now find any great hurt by it; it was but the effect of a present frolic, at which I have no cause to be much troubled. When shall I awake? I will seek it yet again; at present I find some inconvenience, and my condition requires sleep to settle myself, and when I am composed and refreshed, I purpose to return to my former course. But that which Solomon here expresseth, seems rather to be the language of their hearts or lives than of their tongues. Compare Prov. i. 11.

CHAP. XXIV.

a Ps. 37. 1, &c. & 73. 3. ch. 3. 31. & 23. 17. ver. 19. b Prov. 1. 15.

BE not thou [a]envious against evil men, [b]neither desire to be with them.

Their company or manner of life.

c Ps. 10. 7.

2 [c]For their heart studieth destruction, and their lips talk of mischief.

Studieth destruction; how they may oppress and destroy others, which yet at last falls upon their own heads.

3 Through wisdom is an house builded; and by understanding it is established:

There is no need that thou shouldst raise thyself and family by ruining others, as the manner of wicked men is, which thou mayst more easily and effectually do by wisdom, and the fear of God.

4 And by knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches.

Knowledge; which in Scripture phrase includes the love and practice of that which we know.

d ch. 21. 22. Eccles. 9. 16. † Heb. is in strength. † Heb. strengtheneth might.

5 [d]A wise man † is strong; yea, a man of knowledge † increaseth strength.

Is strong; is courageous and resolute, and able by wisdom to do greater things than others can accomplish by their own strength.

e ch. 11. 14. & 15. 22. & 20. 18. Luke 14. 31.

6 [e]For by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war: and in multitude of counsellors there is safety.

War is better managed by wisdom than by strength. So this proves what he said in the last verse.

f Ps. 10. 5. ch. 14. 6.

7 [f]Wisdom is too high for a fool: he openeth not his mouth in the gate.

Wisdom is too high for a fool; either, 1. Really, it is above his reach or capacity. Or, 2. In his opinion; he judgeth it too hard for him, he despairs of attaining it, he pretends the impossibility of it, because he will not put himself to the charge or trouble of getting it; as, on the contrary, wisdom is said to be easy to him that understandeth, Prov. xiv. 6, because he seriously giveth his mind to it, and therefore easily and certainly attains to it. For a fool; for a wilful fool, or a wicked man, whose lusts enfeeble and darken his mind, and make it uncapable of wisdom. He openeth not his mouth in the gate; either, 1. He can say nothing for himself when he is accused before the magistrate, for which he gives frequent occasion. Or, 2. He knows not how to speak acceptably and profitably in the public assembly among wise men.

g Rom. 1. 30.

8 He that [g]deviseth to do evil shall be called a mischievous person.

Heb. a master of mischief. The sense is, Though he cover his wicked devices with fair pretences, and would be better esteemed, yet he shall be noted and branded with that infamy which is due to him.

9 The thought of foolishness is sin: and the scorner is an abomination to men.

The thought of foolishness is sin; the very inward thought or contrivance of evil, of which he spake ver. 8, even before it break forth into action, it is a sin in God's sight, and it is hateful to God. Or foolishness is put for foolish or wicked men, by comparing this with the next clause where the scorner is opposed to it. So the sense is, All the thoughts of wicked men are only evil, and that continually, as is said of man in his corrupt estate, Gen. vi. 5, and therefore abominable to God. The scorner; he who not only deviseth and practiseth wickedness, but obstinately persists in it, and rejects all admonitions against it. Is an abomination to men; is abominable not only to God, as all sinners are, but to all sober men.

10 If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is † small.

If thou faint; if thou art impatient, and unable to bear sufferings; if thy resolution flag, and thou givest way to despondency or dejection of mind. Is small, Heb. is narrow; it lives in a little compass; it is as strait as thy condition is; for there is an elegant allusion in the Hebrew words. The sense is, This is a sign that thou hast but little Christian strength or courage, for that is best known by adversity.

h Ps. 82. 4. Is. 58. 6, 7. 1 John 3. 16.

11 [h]If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain;

To deliver them, when it is in thy power to do it lawfully. Drawn unto death, to wit, unjustly, or by the violence of lawless men. That are ready to be slain; that are in present danger of death or destruction.

i ch. 21. 2. k Job 34. 11. Ps. 62. 12. Jer. 32. 19. Rom. 2. 6. Rev. 2. 23. & 22. 12.

12 If thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not [i]he that pondereth the heart consider it? and he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? and shall not he render to every man [k]according to his works?

We knew it not; I was ignorant either of his innocency, or of his extreme danger, or of my power to relieve him.

Consider it; that this is only a frivolous excuse, and that the true reason of thy neglect was thy want of true love to thy brother, whose life thou wast by the law of God and of nature obliged to preserve, and thy sinful self-love, and a carnal fear of some mischief or trouble which might befall thee in the discharge of thy duty. He that keepeth thy soul; God, who is the preserver of men, Job vii. 20, who daily doth, and who only can, keep thee both in and from the greatest dangers. And this favour of God may be here mentioned, partly, as a strong obligation upon him to preserve him who is made after God's image, and whom God hath commanded him to love and preserve; partly, as an encouragement to the performance of his duty herein from the consideration of God's special care and watchfulness over those that do their duty; and partly, to intimate to them the danger of the neglect of this duty, whereby they will forfeit God's protection over themselves, and expose themselves to manifold dangers and calamities. Or, as others render it, and as the Hebrew verb is frequently used, he that observeth thy soul, that seeth all the secret thoughts and inward motions of the heart; which exposition is favoured both by the following words, doth not he know it? which agrees better to God's observing than to his preserving a man's soul; and by the former clause, to which this translation doth more exactly answer, the same thing being here repeated in other words, after the manner of these sacred writers. Shall not he render to every man according to his works? God will certainly deal with thee as thou hast dealt with him, either rewarding thy performance of this duty, or punishing thy neglect of it.

[1] Cant. 5. 1. 13 My son, [1]eat thou honey, because it is good; and the honeycomb, which is sweet † to thy taste:

This is not a command, but a concession, and is here expressed only to illustrate the following verse. Honey in those parts was excellent, and a usual and an acceptable food. See Deut. viii. 8; Judg. xiv. 18; 1 Sam. xiv. 25.

[m] Ps. 19. 10. & 119. 103. 14 [m]So shall the knowledge of wisdom be unto thy soul: when thou hast found

[n] ch. 23. 18. it, [n]then there shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off.

When thou hast found it; whereby he implies that there is indeed some difficulty and trouble in the pursuit of wisdom, but that it is abundantly compensated with the sweetness and advantage of it when a man arrives at it. Then there shall be a reward, Heb. and or also there is a reward. It is not only as good as honey, sweet for the present, but it is infinitely better, bringing a sure and everlasting reward with it.

[o] Ps. 10. 9, 10. 15 [o]Lay not wait, O wicked man, against the dwelling of the righteous; spoil not his resting place:

Lay not wait; do him no injury, either by subtle and secret devices, or, as it follows, by manifest violence. Against the dwelling of the righteous; against his person, or family, or possession.

[p] Job 5. 19. Ps. 34. 19. & 37. 24. Mic. 7. 8. [q] Esth. 7. 10. Amos 5. 2. & 8. 14. Rev. 18. 21. 16 [p]For a just man falleth seven times, and riseth up again: [q]but the wicked shall fall into mischief.

Falleth; either, 1. Into sin. Or, rather, 2. Into calamities, of which he evidently speaks, both in the foregoing verse, and in the opposite and following branch of this verse, and so this word is used in the next verse, and Psal. xxxvii. 24; Isa. xxiv. 20; Jer. xxv. 27; Amos viii. 14; Micah vii. 8, &c. And so this is fitly alleged as a just reason to dissuade wicked men from their unjust attempts against righteous men, because they should not succeed in them; and although they might by God's permission bring them into some distress for a time, yet God would deliver them out of their hands, and they should be disappointed of their hopes. Seven times, i. e. frequently. Into mischief; into unavoidable and irrecoverable destruction, ofttimes in this life, and infallibly in the next.

[r] Job 31. 29. Ps. 35. 15, 19. ch. 17. 5. Obad. 12. 17 [r]Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth:

Falleth, to wit, into mischief, as in the former verse. Please not thyself in his destruction; which plainly shows that the love of our enemies is a precept of the old law as well as of the gospel. See Exod. xxiii. 4, 5.

† Heb. it be evil in his eyes. 18 Lest the LORD see it, and †it displease him, and he turn away his wrath from him.

Understand, upon thee, which is implied in the Hebrew phrase, such defects being usual in that concise language, Psal. lxxxiv. 11; Prov. xix. 1, and oft elsewhere. This consideration strikes at the root of that sinful and inhuman disposition, which is an expectation of safety or advantage to himself by his enemy's downfal, which, saith he, by this very mean thou shalt lose, for thine enemy shall be raised, and thy danger greatly increased, by thy provoking both God and him against thee.

[s] Ps. 37. 1. & 73. 3. ch. 23. 17. ver. 1. † Or, Keep not company with the wicked. 19 [s]‖Fret not thyself because of evil men, neither be thou envious at the wicked;

Fret not thyself; which translation of the word is confirmed by the parallel word in the following clause. Because of evil men; for their present impunity and good success.

[t] Ps. 11. 6. [u] Job 18. 5, 6. & 21. 17. ch. 13. 9. & 20. 20. ‖ Or, lamp. 20 For [t]there shall be no reward to the evil man: [u]the ‖candle of the wicked shall be put out.

There shall be no reward to the evil man; all his hopes and happiness shall quickly and eternally perish, and he shall have no share in those solid felicities and blessed recompences of a better life which thou shalt enjoy; therefore thou hast no reason to envy him. The candle of the wicked shall be put out; all their comfort and glory shall cease.

[x] Rom. 13. 7. 1 Pet. 2. 17. † Heb. changers. 21 My son, [x]fear thou the LORD and the king: and meddle not with †them that are given to change:

Fear thou the Lord and the king; honour and obey both God and the king, and all in authority. He puts God before the king, because God is to be served in the first place, and our obedience is to be given to kings only in subordination to God, and not in those things which are contrary to the will and command of God, as is manifest both from plain Scripture, as Acts v. 29, and from the judgment and practice of wise and sober heathens. Meddle not with them, Heb. mix not thyself with them, either in their counsels and practices, or in familiar conversation, that are given to change; that love or use changes; that are unstable in their obedience to God or to the king, and are prone to rebellion against either of them. Those men that wickedly forsake God, and break his laws, are said to change their God, Jer. ii. 11, and to change God's judgments and ordinances, Isa. xxiv. 5; Ezek. v. 6.

Who knoweth? who can conceive how sore and sudden it will be? The ruin of them both; of them that fear not God, and of them that fear not the king, for they have two potent and terrible enemies; and therefore if they will not obey them out of conscience, as their duty binds them, yet they should do it at least for their own sakes, and for fear of those severe punishments which they will certainly inflict upon rebels.

[y] Lev. 19. 15. Deut. 1. 17. & 16. 19. ch. 18. 5. & 28. 21. John 7. 24. 23 These things also belong to the wise. [y]It is not good to have respect of persons in judgment.

These things also, these proverbs or counsels here following to the end of the chapter, no less than those hitherto mentioned, belong to the wise; are worthy of the consideration, and fit for the use, of them who are or would be wise; for only such are capable of understanding and improving these proverbs, as was noted, chap. i. 5—7, and elsewhere. To have respect of persons in judgment; for judges to determine controversies partially, according to the quality of the persons, and not according to the merits of the cause.

Thou art righteous; him shall the people curse, nations shall abhor him:

He that saith, to wit, publicly, and in judgment, as he now said, and as appears by the publiceness of the curse following upon it, for people or nations do neither observe nor hate every man who saith thus privately. Thou art righteous, that justify wicked men in their unrighteous courses. Nations shall abhor him, partly for the grossness and odiousness of the crime, and partly for the great and general mischief which such practices bring to civil societies.

25 But to them that rebuke him shall be delight, and †a good blessing shall come upon them.

That rebuke him; that publicly and judicially rebuke and condemn the wicked. Delight; the peace of a good conscience, and the comfort of a good name. A good blessing; which the people shall wish, and by their prayers obtain, from God for them; which is fitly opposed to the people's curse in the last verse.

26 Every man shall kiss his lips †that giveth a right answer.

Every man shall kiss his lips, shall highly respect and love him, of which kissing was a sign, that giveth a right answer; who being called to speak, either as a judge, or witness, or otherwise, in weighty matters, speaks pertinently, and plainly, and truly, to the conviction and satisfaction of the hearers.

27 [a]Prepare thy work without, and make it fit for thyself in the field; and afterwards build thine house.

This is a domestical precept, requiring both industry and prudence in the management of a man's concerns, that he take care in the first place to furnish himself with cattle and the fruits of the field, which are necessary for his subsistence, and after that he may procure such things as are for ornament and comfort, such as the building of a convenient house is.

28 [b]Be not a witness against thy neighbour without cause; and deceive not with thy lips.

Be not a witness against thy neighbour, either in judgment or in private conversation, without cause; rashly or falsely, without just and sufficient cause. Deceive not, neither thy neighbour, to whom thou hast made a show of friendship, nor the judge, nor any other hearers, with false information. Or this clause forbids flattering him to his face, as the former forbids slandering him behind his back.

c ch. 20. 22. Matt. 5. 39, 44. Rom. 12. 17, 19.

29 [c]Say not, I will do so to him as he hath done to me: I will render to the man according to his work.

Say not within thyself; give not way to any such thoughts or passions. I will render to the man according to his work; I will repay him all his calumnies and injuries.

30 I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding;

Observations about kings, 1—7. A caution against contentions, 8; against revealing of secrets, 9. The reason of this caution, 10; with divers other rules, 11—28.

cir. 700. a 1 Kings 4. 32.

[a]THESE are also proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied out.

These, which are contained in this and the following chapters. The men of Hezekiah; certain persons appointed by Hezekiah for that work, whether prophets, as Isaiah, Hosea, or Micah, who lived in his days, or some others, it is neither evident nor material. Most of them are political precepts, and such as in a special manner concerned Hezekiah and other princes to know, for the conduct of their house and kingdom. Copied out; either out of other books or writings of Solomon, concerning natural or civil things, of which we read 1 Kings iv. 32; or out of the historical records which were then extant concerning Solomon's speeches and actions in the history of the kings of Judah, which is oft mentioned in Holy Scripture.

2 [b]It is the glory of God to conceal a thing: but the honour of kings is [c]to search out a matter.

It is the glory of God; it is agreeable to the nature and highly conducing to the honour of God, because it is a testimony of his infinite wisdom and knowledge, of his absolute power and sovereignty, and of his other incomprehensible perfections. To conceal a thing; to keep his counsels and the reasons of his actions in his own breast, that he needs not to impart them to any other for their advice and assistance, as being self-sufficient both for the contrivance and execution of whatsoever pleaseth him, and accountable to none for any of his matters. But the honour of kings is; but kings must not affect to be like God in this respect, because they are creatures, and therefore ignorant and insufficient, and accountable to a higher authority; to search out a matter; in the conduct of their great affairs, not to lean to their own understandings, nor to be wedded to their own wills, but to communicate their counsels to others, that so they may search and find out the true and right way, and to be ready to give a satisfactory account of the justice and reasonableness of them, as occasion shall require.

3 The heaven for height, and the earth for depth, and the heart of kings †is unsearchable.

† Heb. there is no searching.

The heaven for height, and the earth for depth; as no man upon earth can exactly discover the height of heaven, or the depth of earth, or discern what is contained in them. The heart of kings is unsearchable; though wise kings will search out other men and things, yet their inward thoughts and purposes are hardly discoverable, partly because every man's heart lies out of the sight of others, and partly because it is the practice of kings industriously to conceal their intentions.

5 [e]Take away the wicked from before the king, and [f]his throne shall be established in righteousness.

From before the king; from his court and councils. Shall be established, by removing them who by their wicked counsels and practices provoked God's displeasure against the king, and blasted his reputation, and alienated the hearts of his people from him. Established in righteousness, by such impartial execution of justice.

6 †Put not forth thyself in the presence of the king, and stand not in the place of great men:

Put not forth thyself, Heb. Do not magnify or glorify thyself, by vaunting speech or carriage, but, which is implied, carry thyself humbly and modestly, which is most pleasing to kings, and most becoming and safe for thee.

Stand not in the place of great men; do not affect nor use frequent and familiar society with greater persons than thyself, whereby thou mayst easily involve thyself in much guilt, and expose thyself to envy or contempt, and to many other inconveniences.

g Luke 14. 8, 9, 10.

7 [g]For better it is that it be said unto thee, Come up hither; than that thou shouldest be put lower in the presence of the prince whom thine eyes have seen.

For better it is, it is more for thy credit and comfort, that it be said unto thee, by some public officer, or by the king himself. Whom thine eyes have seen; into whose presence and acquaintance thou hast so boldly intruded thyself, who as before he observed thy impudence, so now he sees and suffers this public disgrace to be cast upon thee.

h ch. 17. 14. Matt. 5. 25.

8 [h]Go not forth hastily to strive, lest thou know not what to do in the end thereof, when thy neighbour hath put thee to shame.

Go not forth hastily, without necessary cause and due consideration, to strive, either judicially or otherwise. Put thee to shame, for thy folly in undertaking what thou wast not able to accomplish, and for thy injustice in charging him wrongfully.

i Matt. 5. 25. & 18. 15. ‖ Or, discover not the secret of another.

9 [i]Debate thy cause with thy neighbour himself; and ‖discover not a secret to another:

Debate thy cause with thy neighbour himself; if thou hast any quarrel with him, first try to compose it by private discourse with him. Compare Matt. v. 25; xviii. 15; Luke xii. 58. Discover not a secret; any secret. Let no heat of contention provoke thee to divulge any of his secret counsels committed to thy trust, or to reproach him with any of his secret faults, as is usual in lawsuits and other contentions. Or, the secret; any secret difference between thee and him, which therefore is fittest to be ended secretly between you, and not to be imparted to any other.

10 Lest he that heareth it put thee to shame, and thine infamy turn not away.

Put thee to shame; reproach thee for thy gross violation of the laws of prudence, and justice, and charity, and friendship therein. And thine infamy turn not away; and that disgrace which thou didst design against another fall and be fastened upon thyself.

11 [k]A word †fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver.

A word fitly spoken, for the matter, and season, and other circumstances of it, is like apples of gold in pictures of silver, which it seems was usual in those times, and was grateful to the eye for the beauty and variety both of the colours and figures, the golden apples appearing through net-work of silver, or being engraven or portrayed upon tablets of silver.

12 As an earring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold, so is a wise reprover upon an obedient ear.

As an earring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold; highly acceptable, and a great ornament, and not an offence and dishonour, as fools esteem it; so is a wise reprover, that reproves an offender faithfully; yet prudently, in the fittest manner and season. Upon an obedient ear; to a man that hearkens to it, and is instructed and reformed by it.

13 [l]As the cold of snow in the time of harvest, so is a faithful messenger to them that send him: for he refresheth the soul of his masters.

As the cold of snow; either, 1. As drink cooled with ice or snow, as was and is usual in hot countries. Or, 2. As a cool air, such as is in snowy seasons. Or, 3. As drink which is as cold as snow. He refresheth the soul of his masters, with a true account and speedy despatch of those important affairs which were committed to him.

Whoso boasteth himself of a false gift, pretending that he hath given, or promising that he will give, a man those gifts, which he neither hath given, nor intendeth to give him, is like clouds and wind without rain; like empty clouds carried about with wind, and not affording that rain which by their appearance they promise.

By long forbearing, by patient submission and expectation, is a prince persuaded, or pacified, whereas his rage is increased by opposition. Compare Eccles. x. 4. A soft tongue, a mild and humble answer, breaketh the bone; softeneth a heart which is as hard as bone or stone. He alludes to those oils which sink through the flesh to the very bone. See Psal. cix. 18.

16 [p]Hast thou found honey? eat so much as is sufficient for thee, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it.

Honey in those parts was oft found in woods or fields, as Judg. xiv. 8, &c.; 1 Sam. xiv. 25. By honey he understands, not only all delicious meats, but all present and worldly delights, which we are here taught to use with moderation. Honey excessively taken disposeth a man to vomiting.

17 ‖Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbour's house; lest he be †weary of thee, and so hate thee.

Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbour's house, visit him not too frequently nor unseasonably, lest he be weary of thee, and so hate thee, as men are apt to loathe those meats of which they surfeit, as was now observed, ver. 16.

18 [q]A man that beareth false witness against his neighbour is a maul, and a sword, and a sharp arrow.

Is as cruel and pernicious to him as any instrument of death. The design of the proverb is to show the wickedness of slander, and that a false witness is in some respect as bad as a murderer.

19 Confidence in an unfaithful man in time of trouble is like a broken tooth, and a foot out of joint.

It is not only deceitful, but hurtful, as a broken tooth, though it make show of helping, yet is not only unhelpful to a man for chewing his meat, but also troublesome and painful; and as a foot out of joint doth not help, but hinder and pain, him that attempts to walk upon it.

22 For thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, [t]and the LORD shall reward thee.

For, understand, in so doing, which words are expressed Rom. xii. 20, where this text is quoted, thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head; either, 1. In a bad sense, thou shalt hereby aggravate his sin, and occasion a more speedy and grievous vengeance from God, which, like fire from heaven, shall fall upon his head and consume him. Not that he persuades him to do a kindness with an evil intent, with an expectation, or desire, or design of bringing God's wrath upon him; but only he foretells what would happen, and dissuades him from taking vengeance, and provokes him to kindness instead of it, because vengeance is God's peculiar work, which he will certainly inflict upon such persons; which argument is used to that very purpose by St. Paul, Rom. xii. 19. Or, 2. In a good sense, thou shalt melt him into repentance, and inflame him with love and kindness to thee for so unexpected and undeserved a favour; he shall be as heartily grieved and tormented with the thoughts of his vile and wicked carriage to thee, as a man would be that had burning coals of fire heaped upon his head. But if these coals of fire do not melt him, but still he hardens his heart against thee, they will consume him. Thus either by the one or by the other way thou shalt be secured and delivered from him. The metaphor may seem to be taken from founders, who melt the hardest metals by heaping coals of fire upon them. And the head may be here mentioned rather than any other part, because in Scripture phrase both blessings and curses are said to fall upon men's heads, i. e. upon them, heads being frequently put for persons. The Lord shall reward thee; thy charity to him shall be fully recompensed to thee, if not by him, yet by God, which is far better.

u Job 37. 22. ‖ Or, The north wind bringeth forth rain: so doth a backbiting tongue an angry countenance. x Ps. 101. 5.

23 u ‖ The north wind driveth away rain: so doth an angry countenance x a backbiting tongue.

An angry countenance in the hearer, who by his countenance showeth his dislike of such persons and practices. A backbiting tongue, Heb. a secret tongue, which privily slandereth his neighbour, as it is expressed, Psal. ci. 5, and as the manner of backbiters is. But this verse is otherwise rendered in the margin, and by divers others, the north wind bringeth forth (as this verb properly and most frequently signifies, and as it is rendered by all the ancient interpreters, and by many others) rain (which it doth in Judea, because the sea lies northward as well as westward from it, as also in Africa, as Aristotle observes, though it drive away rain in countries of another situation): so doth a backbiting tongue (cause) an angry countenance; it causeth much anger and mischief, both to the person slandered, and to the slanderer, and to other persons who may be concerned with or for either of them, as is manifest from common experience.

26 A righteous man falling down before the wicked is as a troubled fountain, and a corrupt spring.

Falling down; either, 1. Into sin. So the sense is, When a just man is either allured or terrified into any sinful practice before wicked men, or into any base and servile compliance with their lusts, he who by his excellent counsels was like a fountain or well of life, as his mouth is called, Prov. x. 11, sending forth refreshing streams for the benefit of many, is now corrupted and rendered unserviceable. Or rather, 2. Into misery, of which kind of falling this word is constantly used, and never to my remembrance of falling into sin. And so the sense is this, When righteous men are oppressed and devoured by the wicked, the state of that commonwealth is as deplorable, as if the public fountains, from whence all the people fetch their water, were corrupted, and it is a sign that the fountains of justice are poisoned.

27 x It is not good to eat much honey: so for men a to search their own glory is not glory.

Not good, to wit, for the health of the body. For men; which words are easily understood, both out of the foregoing clause, where the honey is supposed to be eaten by men, and out of the following words, which are evidently meant of them. To search their own glory; industriously to seek for honour and applause from men. Is not glory; is not only sinful, but shameful also, and a sign of a vain and mean spirit. The negative particle not is here understood out of the former part of the verse, as it is Psal. i. 5; ix. 18.

28 b He that hath no rule over his own spirit is like a city that is broken down, and without walls.

Over his own spirit; over his passions, and especially his anger, which is signified by this word, Prov. xvi. 2; Eccles. x. 4. Is like a city that is broken down, and without walls; exposeth himself to manifold dangers and mischiefs.

CHAP. XXVI.

Rules how to carry it towards fools, 1—12. The slothful man described, 13—16. The character of a contentious man, and of a busybody, and tale-bearer, 17—23. The evil of hypocrisy and lying, 24—28.

a 1 Sam. 12. 17.

AS snow in summer, a and as rain in harvest, so honour is not seemly for a fool.

As snow in summer, and as rain in harvest; unbecoming and unseasonable. So honour is not seemly for a fool, because he neither deserves it, nor knows how to use it, but his folly is both increased and publicly manifested by it.

b Num. 23. 8. Deut. 23. 5.

2 As the bird by wandering, as the swallow by flying, so b the curse causeless shall not come.

By wandering from place to place; by its perpetual restlessness it secures itself from the fowler, that he cannot shoot at it, nor spread his net over it. Shall not come, to wit, upon the innocent person, but he shall escape from it like a bird, &c.

c Ps. 32. 9. ch. 10. 13.

3 c A whip for the horse, a bridle for the ass, and a rod for the fool's back.

A bridle was very proper and usual for an ass, when they rode upon it, (as the Jews most commonly did,) though not to restrain him from running away, which is the principal use of it in horses, yet that the rider might rule and guide him, which was very necessary for that stupid creature. Although the ancient interpreters render it a goad, or spur, or something of the like nature and use. A rod for the fool's back; which is most proper and necessary for him. Not words, but blows, must make him better.

4 Answer not a fool according to his folly, lest thou also be like unto him.

How can these contrary rules be reconciled, answer him not, and answer him? Answ. Easily, by considering the difference of persons, and times, and places, and other circumstances, and of the manner of answering. And such seemingly contradictory precepts are not only used by, but are esteemed elegant in, other authors. Answer him not, when he is incorrigible, or when he is inflamed with passion or wine, &c., or when it is not necessary, nor likely to do him good. Answer him, when he is capable of receiving good by it, or when it is necessary for the glory of God, or for the discharge of a man's duty, or for the good of others. According to his folly; so as to imitate his folly, by such passionate, or reproachful, or foolish speeches as he useth to thee. Be like unto him; show thyself to be as great a fool as he.

5 d Answer a fool according to his folly, lest he be wise in †his own conceit.

According to his folly; so as his folly needs and requires, convincing him strongly, reproving him sharply, exposing him to just shame, and correcting him with a rod, when he deserves it, and thou hast a just power to use it. Lest he be wise in his own conceit; lest thy silence make him arrogant and presumptuous, as if his words were unanswerable.

6 He that sendeth a message by the hand of a fool cutteth off the feet, and drinketh ‖ damage.

He that sendeth a message by the hand of a fool, he that employeth a fool upon any important errand or business which is too hard for him, cutteth off the feet, to wit, of his messenger; he bids one go that wants legs; he sends one who wants that discretion, which is as necessary for that employment as legs are for going. Drinketh damage; he bringeth upon himself abundance of loss and mischief, not only spoiling that business about which he sends him, but making himself contemptible to the person to whom he sends him, and to others with him, as if he had not common prudence to choose a fit messenger, and giving occasion, by the folly of his messenger, to further misunderstandings, and jealousies, and inconveniences. For the phrase, we may observe that drinking in Scripture frequently notes the plentiful doing or receiving of any thing, as they who multiply sins are said to drink iniquity like water, Job xv. 16; xxxiv. 7; and they who are greatly afflicted are commonly said to drink the cup.

7 The legs of the lame †are not equal: so is a parable in the mouth of fools.

The legs of the lame are not equal, Heb. As (which note of similitude is plainly understood from the particle so in the following clause) the legs of the lame are lifted up, to wit, in going, or rather in dancing, which is done with great inequality and uncomeliness. So is a parable in the mouth of fools; no less absurd and indecent are wise and pious speeches from a foolish and ungodly man, whose actions grossly contradict them, whereby he makes them contemptible, and himself ridiculous.

8 ‖As he that bindeth a stone in a sling, so is he that giveth honour to a fool.

As he that bindeth a stone in a sling; whereby he hinders his own design of throwing the stone out of it; or, who fastens it there only for a season, that he may speedily and violently throw it away. Or, as it is rendered in our margin, and by many others, As he that putteth a precious stone (Heb. a stone, which is oft emphatically used for a precious stone, both in Scripture, as Exod. xxxix. 10; 1 Chron. xxix. 8, and elsewhere, and also in other authors) in an heap of stones, where it is obscured and lost. So is he that giveth honour to a fool; no less absurd is he that giveth to a fool that honour and praise which he is not capable either of receiving, or retaining, or using aright, but it is quite wasted upon him, and doth him more hurt than good.

9 As a thorn goeth up into the hand of a drunkard, so is a parable in the mouth of fools.

As a thorn is in a drunkard's hand, which he cannot hold and manage cautiously, but employeth to his own and others' hurt, so is a parable in the mouth of fools; as improper and unprofitable, and, by accident, hurtful to himself and others. See on ver. 7.

10 ‖The great God that formed all things both rewardeth the fool, and rewardeth transgressors.

God, who is oft called great, as Psal. lxxxvi. 10; cxxxv. 5, &c., and is described by the name of the Most High, as Psal. ix. 2; xxi. 7, &c., who created all things, and therefore observeth and governeth all men and things, will certainly give that recompence which is meet for and deserved by fools and transgressors, i. e. by such as sin either through ignorance and heedlessness, or wilfully and wickedly. Or, as it is the margin, A great man (a prince or potentate, who are called by this title, Esth. i. 8; Dan. i. 3, &c.) grieveth (as this word is used, Isa. li. 9; liii. 5, and elsewhere) all, (to wit, all that are subject to him, or all that stand in his way) he hireth (as this word most commonly signifies) the fools, he hireth also transgressors. So the sense is, It is the manner of many princes to vex and oppress their subjects, which because they cannot do by themselves alone, they hire others, both fools, who do not know or consider what they do, and transgressors, who are ready to execute all their commands, right or wrong, that they may be their instruments in that work.

11 [e]As a dog returneth to his vomit, [f]so a fool †returneth to his folly.

As a dog returneth to his vomit, to lick up that which he had lately vomited, forgetting how burdensome and vexatious it was to him, so a fool returneth to his folly; such like is the impudence and madness of sinners, who having smarted for their sins, and been forced to forsake them for a time, do afterwards return to the commission of them.

g ch. 28. 20. Luke 18. 11. Rom. 12. 16. Rev. 3. 17.

12 [g]Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? there is more hope of a fool than of him.

A man wise in his own conceit; who, being a fool, thinks himself wise, and therefore scorneth the counsels of others. There is more hope of a fool; of doing good to one who is a fool, and sensible of his folly, and ready to receive instruction.

13 [h]The slothful man saith, There is a lion in the way; a lion is in the streets.

To excuse his idleness, and keeping himself at home. See on chap. xxii. 13.

14 As the door turneth upon his hinges, so doth the slothful upon his bed.

Turneth upon his hinges; moving hither and thither upon them, but not removing one jot from its place.

15 [i]The slothful hideth his hand in his bosom; ‖it grieveth him to bring it again to his mouth.

‖ Or, he is weary.

He will not take the least pains for the most necessary things.

16 The sluggard is wiser in his own conceit than seven men that can render a reason.

Is wiser in his own conceit, because by his idleness he avoids those troubles and dangers to which other men by their activity expose themselves, forgetting in the mean time what reproach and loss, and how much greater mischiefs, both here and hereafter, are brought upon him by his slothfulness. That can render a reason, to wit, a satisfactory reason, of all their actions, i. e. who are truly wise men.

17 He that passeth by, and ‖meddleth with strife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears.

He that passeth by; who is going upon the way, and about his business. But this word is by some referred to the last clause, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears as he is passing by him, without any thought of doing him harm; which agrees very well both with the order of the words in the Hebrew text, and with the matter of the other clause, to which this similitude is referred. Belonging not to him; in which he is not concerned, nor any way obliged to meddle. Is like one that taketh a dog by the ears; exposeth himself to great and needless hazards, as a man that causelessly provoketh a mastiff dog against himself.

18 As a mad man who casteth †firebrands, arrows, and death,

As a madman, as one that feigneth himself mad, that under that pretence he may do mischief with impunity, who casteth fire-brands, to hurt his neighbour's person, or to consume his house or goods. Death; any instruments of death.

k Eph. 5. 4.

19 So is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and saith, [k]Am not I in sport?

That wrongs him under a false pretence of kindness and familiarity.

20 †Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out: so [l]where there is no ‖talebearer, the strife †ceaseth.

l ch. 22. 10.

Tale-bearer, to carry such reports from one to another as may provoke them to mutual rage and strife.

21 [m]As coals are to burning coals, and wood to fire; so is a contentious man to kindle strife.

Heb. A man of contentions, that loveth and giveth him self up to contentions.

n ch. 18. 8. † Heb. chambers.

22 [n]The words of a talebearer are as wounds, and they go down into the †innermost parts of the belly.

This was delivered before, chap. xviii. 8, and is here repeated, as being a point of great concernment to the peace and welfare of all societies, and fit to be oft and earnestly pressed upon the consciences of men, because of their great and general proneness to this sin.

23 Burning lips and a wicked heart are like a potsherd covered with silver dross.

Burning; either, 1. With love. Words delivered with show of true and fervent affection. Or rather, 2. With malice or hatred. A slanderous or evil tongue; for this word is constantly used in a bad sense, and notes the heat of rage and persecution. Like a potsherd covered with silver dross; such a tongue and heart are of no real worth, although sometimes they make a show of it, as dross doth of silver.

24 He that hateth ‖dissembleth with his lips, and layeth up deceit within him;

Dissembleth, or, carrieth himself like another man; pretends love and kindness; which sense seems to agree best both with the next clause of this verse, and with the two following verses.

o Ps. 28. 3. Jer. 9. 8. † Heb. maketh his voice gracious.

25 °When he †speaketh fair, believe him not: for there are seven abominations in his heart.

26 ‖Whose hatred is covered by deceit, his wickedness shall be shewed before the whole congregation.

Covered by deceit; with false professions of love. Showed before the whole congregation; instead of that secrecy and impunity, which by this art he designed and promised to himself, he shall be brought to public shame and punishment.

p Ps. 7. 15, 16. & 9. 15. & 10. 2. & 57. 6. ch. 28. 10. Eccles. 10. 8.

27 PWhoso diggeth a pit shall fall therein: and he that rolleth a stone, it will return upon him.

Whoso diggeth a pit, that another may fall into it. It is a metaphor from hunters, who used to dig deep pits, and then to cover them slightly with earth, that wild beasts passing that way might fall into them, and sometimes in the heat of pursuit fell into them themselves. That rolleth a stone, to wit, up the hill, with design to do mischief to some person or thing with it.

28 A lying tongue hateth those that are afflicted by it; and a flattering mouth worketh ruin.

Hateth those that are afflicted by it, because by his calumnies he hath made them his enemies. A flattering mouth; which, though it be more smooth and plausible than a slandering mouth, yet is in truth no less pernicious, betraying others either to sin, or to danger and mischief.

CHAP. XXVII.

Counsel against self-conceitedness, 1, 2. The evil effects of envy, 4. The praises of a faithful friend, 5—10. The different fruits of prudence and folly, 11, 12. Sundry rules and cautions, 13—27.

a Luke 12. 19, 20. Jam. 4. 13, &c. † Heb. to morrow day.

BOAST anot thyself of †to morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.

Of to-morrow; of any good thing which thou purposest to do or hopest to receive to-morrow, or hereafter; the time being here put metonymically for things done or had in the time, as Deut. iv. 32; Eccles. ii. 23. The same caution is given James iv. 13, &c. What a day may bring forth; what may happen in the space of one day, which may hinder thy designs or expectations. The day is said to bring forth what God by his almighty power and providence doth either cause or suffer to be brought forth or done in it.

2 bLet another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth; a stranger, and not thine own lips.

Except it be really necessary, either for thy own just vindication, or for the honour of God, or for the edification of others, in which cases this hath been allowed and practised by wise and virtuous men, as particularly by St. Paul, 2 Cor. xi. 12.

3 A stone is †heavy, and the sand weighty; but a fool's wrath is heavier than them both.

Heavier; more grievous and intolerable, as being without cause, without measure, and without end.

c 1 John 3. 12. ‖ Or, jealousy. ch. 6. 34.

Envy is worse than both of them, partly, because it is more unjust and unreasonable, as not caused by any provocation, as wrath and anger are, but only proceeding from a malignity of mind, whereby a man is grieved for another man's happiness, in which he should rejoice; partly, because it is more deeply rooted and implacable, whereas the other passions are commonly allayed; and partly, because it is more secret and undiscernible, and therefore the mischievous effects of it are hardly avoidable; whereas wrath and anger discover themselves, and so forewarn and forearm a man against the danger.

5 dOpen rebuke is better than secret love.

Open rebuke, Heb. which is manifested or discovered, either, 1. Publicly and before others, when it is needful; in which case, though it put a man to some shame, yet it doth him good. Or, 2. Privately, and to the offender's face, a plain and downright reproof. Better; more desirable and beneficial. Secret love; which lies hid in the heart, and doth not show itself by friendly actions, and particularly by free and faithful reproof, which is a principal end and benefit of friendship.

6 eFaithful are the wounds of a friend; but the kisses of an enemy are ‖deceitful.

Faithful are the wounds; they proceed from an upright, and truly loving, and faithful soul, and really promote the good of the person reproved. The wounds; the sharpest reproofs, which for the present wound his spirit and reputation. The kisses; all the fair speeches and outward professions of friendship. Are deceitful; or, are to be deprecated; are perfidious and pernicious, and such things as one may pray to God to be delivered from them. Or, are forced, like things which are procured with great difficulty, and many entreaties.

7 The full soul †loatheth an honeycomb; but fto the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet.

The full soul, a man whose appetite or desire (which is oft expressed in Scripture by the name of soul) is fully satisfied, loatheth an honey-comb, the most delicious meats. The design of this proverb is to show the inconvenience that ofttimes attends upon plenty, and the advantage of poverty, that the rich might learn moderation, and the poor content.

8 As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place.

That wandereth from her nest; that flies very much abroad from place to place, whereby she is exposed to all the arts of fowlers, and to birds of prey, from which she is safe whilst she keeps her nest. That wandereth from his place; that through vanity or lightness changeth the place of his abode, or his calling and course of life, the ill effects whereof have been frequently observed and noted, even in vulgar proverbs, as when we say, A rolling stone gathers no moss.

9 Ointment and perfume rejoice the heart: so doth the sweetness of a man's friend †by hearty counsel.

Rejoice the heart, by increasing and comforting the spirits. No less grateful and pleasant is the company and conversation of a true friend, in respect of his good and faithful counsel, which comes from his very heart and soul, and contains his most inward and serious thoughts, whereas deceitful persons give such counsels, not as they think to be best, but as most serve their lusts or designs.

g ch. 17. 17. & 18. 24. See ch. 19. 7.

10 Thine own friend, and thy father's friend, forsake not; neither go into thy brother's house in the day of thy calamity: for gbetter is a neighbour that is near than a brother far off.

Thy father's friend, of whose friendship thou hast had long experience. Neither go into thy brother's house, to wit, for comfort and relief, and so as to forsake or neglect thy friend for him. Better is a neighbour; the friend mentioned in the beginning of the verse, who hath showed himself to be a true and a good neighbour. That is near; either, 1. In place by cohabitation. Or rather, 2. In affection, in which respect God is oft said to be near to the righteous, and far from the wicked.

h ch. 10. 1. & 23. 15, 24. i Ps. 127. 5.

11 [h] My son, be wise, and make my heart glad, [i] that I may answer him that reproacheth me.

For being the father of a wicked son, as if I had either deserved him as a curse from God, or made him so by my example, or by the neglect of his education. See Ezek. xvi. 44; 1 Tim. iii. 4.

12 [k] A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself; but the simple pass on, and are punished.

This was delivered chap. xxii. 3, and is here repeated to enforce the foregoing exhortation, by representing the great advantage of wisdom.

13 [l] Take his garment that is surety for a stranger, and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.

Possibly this is here repeated as a part of the father's counsel to his son, begun ver. 11, to avoid rash suretiship, to which young men are most prone, and by which they are exposed in the beginning of their days to many sins and miseries, which they carry with them to their graves.

14 He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted a curse to him.

He that blesseth his friend, that saluteth, or praiseth, and applaudeth him to his face, as the manner of flatterers is, with a loud voice, that both he and others may be sure to take notice of it; rising early in the morning to perform this office, to show his great forwardness, and diligence, and zeal in his service, which was the custom of the Romans afterward, and possibly of some of the Jews at this time; it shall be counted a curse to him his friend will value this kind of blessing no more than a curse, because it plainly discovers a base design, and is a high reflection upon him, as if he either did not understand such gross and palpable flattery, or were so ridiculously vain-glorious as to be pleased with it.

15 [m] A continual dropping in a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike.

Are equally troublesome, the first not suffering a man to go abroad with comfort, the latter not permitting him to stay at home with quietness.

16 Whosoever hideth her hideth the wind, and the ointment of his right hand, which bewrayeth itself.

Whosoever hideth her, i. e. attempts to smother or bridle her passion, that it may not break forth to her shame, and to his own discomfort and reproach, hideth the wind; undertakes that which is impossible. The ointment of his right hand; which being the great instrument of action, by its much stirring diffuseth the savour of it.

17 Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.

Iron cutting tools are made bright, and sharp, and fit for use by rubbing them against the file, or some other iron. So a man, who being alone is sad, and dull, and unactive, by the company and conversation of his friend is greatly refreshed, his very wits are sharpened, and his spirit revived, and he is both fitted for and provoked to action. The countenance is here put for the mind or spirit, whose temper or disposition is commonly visible in men's countenances.

18 [n] Whoso keepeth the fig tree shall eat the fruit thereof: so he that waiteth on his master shall be honoured.

He mentions the fig tree, because they abounded in Canaan, and were more valued and regarded than other trees. He that waiteth on his master, that serves him faithfully, prudently, and diligently, shall be honoured; shall receive that respect and recompence which he deserves.

19 As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man.

The sense is either, 1. As the image of a man's face in the water answers to his natural face who looks into it; or, as in water one man's face is like another's, the difference of men's faces being not there visible: so one man resembles another, either in the temper of his mind or body, in which many men are alike one to another; or in the corruption of his nature, in which all are alike. Or, 2. As a man may see his own face if he look into the water, which is nature's looking-glass, or into any other looking-glass; so a man may discern his own heart, if he look into those glasses whereby it discovers itself; if he examine his thoughts and inclinations, together with the general course of his actions. Or, 3. As the face of a man standing by the waters is visible not only to himself, but to others, by the shadow or image of it in the waters; so the heart of a man is in some measure discernible, not only to himself, but to others also, who observe his disposition and carriage.

o ch. 30. 16. Hab. 2. 5. † Heb. not. p Eccles. 1. 8. & 6. 7.

20 [o] Hell and destruction are † never full; so [p] the eyes of man are never satisfied.

Hell and destruction are never full; the grave devours all the bodies which are put into it, and is always ready to receive and devour more and more without end. The eyes, i. e. the desires, which work and discover themselves by the eyes, 1 John ii. 16, and other senses; for otherwise the eyes in themselves are neither capable of satisfaction nor of dissatisfaction.

21 [q] As the fining pot for silver, and the furnace for gold; so is a man to his praise.

As the fining pot for silver; is appointed and used for the trial of silver, and the detection and separation of the dross from it. So is a man to his praise; or, according to his praise. The sense is, So a man is known by his praises; either, 1. By the quality of those who praise and applaud him; and as they are good or bad, so is he thought to be. Or, 2. By his carriage under praises; as he carries himself either humbly and modestly with thankfulness to God, and a due sense of his own infirmities, which is the case and temper of a good man; or ambitiously and vain-gloriously, taking to himself the honour which he should give to God, as ungodly men generally do in that case.

22 [r] Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him.

Not a natural, but a moral and wilful fool, who by long continuance in sin is hardened and stupified, and so incorrigible under all the means of amendment.

23 Be thou diligent to know the state of thy flocks, and † look well to thy herds.

To know the state of thy flocks; that thou mayst preserve and improve what thou hast, and take care that thine expenses may not exceed thine incomes. Flocks and herds are here put for all riches and possessions, because anciently they were the chief part of a man's riches. Look well, Heb. set thine heart. Trust not wholly to thy servants, as many do, that they may give up themselves wholly to ease and pleasure; but make use of thine own eyes and reason for the conduct of thine affairs, lest thou come to ruin, as many have done by this very means.

24 For † riches are not for ever: and doth the crown endure † to every generation?

Riches; or, treasure. The sense is, What thou dost now possess, or hast laid up, will not last always, but will soon be spent, if thou dost not take care to preserve and improve it. The crown; by which he understands a condition of the greatest honour and plenty. If a man had the wealth of a kingdom, without provident care and due diligence it would quickly be brought to nothing. Hence the greatest kings have minded husbandry, as Solomon, Uzziah, and others.

a Ps. 104. 14. 25 a The hay appeareth, and the tender grass sheweth itself, and herbs of the mountains are gathered.

The hay appeareth, and the tender grass showeth itself, in their proper seasons. These things may be here mentioned, either, 1. As the matter of his diligence. Take care that thy hay and grass may be well managed, and seasonably gathered, for the use of thy cattle. Or rather, 2. As another argument and encouragement to diligence, because God invites thee to it by the plentiful provisions wherewith he hath enriched the earth for thy sake. Thou needest not compass sea and land for them, for God puts them into thy hand, if thou wilt but receive them. Herbs of the mountains, even the most barren parts afford thee their help, are gathered; or, are to be gathered, as such passive verbs are oft used; they are ripe and ready for the gathering. So this clause suits best with the former.

26 The lambs are for thy clothing, and the goats are the price of the field.

The lambs are for thy clothing; by their wool and skins, either used to clothe thyself with, or sold to purchase all manner of clothing for thyself and family. The goats are the price of the field; by the sale whereof thou mayst either pay the rent of the field which thou hirest, or purchase fields or lands for thyself. Either goats are put for all cattle, or he mentions goats, because these might better be spared and sold than sheep, which brought a more certain and constant profit to the owner.

27 And thou shalt have goats' milk enough for thy food, for the food of thy † Heb. life. houshold, and for the † maintenance for thy maidens.

Goats' milk enough for thy food; or, if thou choosest rather to keep than to sell thy goats, the milk of them will serve thee for food to thyself, and to thy family. In ancient times men used a plain and simple diet, and neither knew nor used that curiosity and luxury in it which after-ages invented. For thy maidens; who are named, because this nourishment was more proper for the weaker sex, whereas men required a stronger diet.

CHAP. XXVIII.

The character of the righteous and of the wicked, with the blessed fruits of integrity, and evil effects of sin, 1—12. The evil of concealing and blessedness of confessing sin, 13. The evil of oppression and violence, the benefit of industry and faithfulness, with sundry other observations, 15—28.

a Lev. 26. 17, 36. Ps. 53. 5. THE a wicked flee when no man pursueth: but the righteous are bold as a lion.

The wicked flee when no man pursueth, because the conscience of their own guilt puts them into a continual expectation and dread of God's judgments. The righteous are bold; are courageous and resolute, having the witness of a good conscience, and the assurance of Divine favour and protection, and the supports and consolations of the Holy Ghost.

‖ Or, by men of understanding and wisdom shall they likewise be prolonged. 2 For the transgression of a land many are the princes thereof: but ‖ by a man of understanding and knowledge the state thereof shall be prolonged.

Many are the princes thereof; either, 1. Together, contending for supremacy. Or rather, 2. Successively, as appears from the following clause. Their princes are soon cut off, and other persons, and oftimes persons of other families, come in their stead, which is justly threatened as a curse, because such frequent changes are seldom for the better, and commonly for the worse, and are frequently attended with blood and slaughter, with the change and subversion of laws, with heavy taxes and charges, with the ruin of many families, and with many other mischiefs. By a man of understanding and knowledge; by a wise and good man; which may be understood either, 1. Collectively, for men of understanding, &c., as it is rendered in the margin. i. e. when the men or people of a land are wise and good. Or rather, 2. Singularly; and that either, 1. Of a wise and righteous prince, who by the good government of himself, and his family, and kingdom, by punishing and preventing the transgressions of the people, turns away God's wrath, and saves himself and people. Or, 2. Of any other man of eminent wisdom or piety, who prevents this judgment, either by his good counsels given to the prince and people, and entertained by them, or by his intercession to God; for God hath sometimes spared a people for the sake of one man, as he did Zoar for Lot, Gen. xix. 20, 21. and the Israelites for Moses, Psal. cvi. 23. The state thereof shall be prolonged; the land shall enjoy its former state and tranquillity, and the life of their good prince shall be prolonged.

When a poor man, being advanced into a place of authority, abuseth it to oppress those that are poor and unable to resist him, he is like a violent rain or flood, which washeth away the very seeds which are in the earth, and spoileth the corn and fruits which are upon it. He is the worst of all oppressors, because as he is of a base mind, which also is made much worse by a sudden change and elevation into a high condition; so his own necessities inflame his desires, and make him greedy to take all, yea, even the small, advantages of enriching himself; which the ancients expressed by the similitude of an empty horseleech, which sucketh much more strongly than that which is already filled; and of a dry sponge, which licks up far more water than that which was wet before.

4 c They that forsake the law praise the wicked: d but such as keep the law contend with them. c Ps. 10. 3. & 49. 18. Rom. 1. 32. d 1 Kings 18. 18, 21. Matt. 3. 7. & 14. 4. Eph. 5. 11.

They that forsake the law, that live in the contempt of and disobedience to God's law, praise the wicked; honour their persons, contrary to Psal. xv. 4; freely and familiarly associate themselves with them, and approve of their sinful courses; all which proceeds from their great likeness to them. Contend with them; are so far from praising or applauding them, that they severely rebuke them, and to the utmost of their power oppose them in their wicked enterprises.

5 e Evil men understand not judgment: but f they that seek the LORD understand all things. e Ps. 92. 6. f John 7. 17. 1 Cor. 2. 15. 1 John 2. 20, 27.

Understand not, because their minds are naturally blind, and are further blinded by their own prejudices and passions, and by the god of this world, who rules in and over them. Judgment, i. e. what is just and right; what is their duty in all cases and conditions, as judgment is frequently understood. That seek the Lord, by diligent study of his word, and by fervent prayers to him for advice. All things which are necessary to be known by them, either for the discharge of all their present duties to God and men, or for their everlasting happiness.

6 g Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich. g ch. 19. 1. ver. 18.

Better; in a much safer and happier condition. In his ways, Heb. in two ways; halting between two ways, pretending to virtue, but practising vice; or covering his wicked designs with good pretences; or sometimes erring on one hand, and sometimes on the other, as wicked men commonly do.

7 h Whoso keepeth the law is a wise son: but he that ‖ is a companion of riotous men shameth his father. h ch. 29. 3. ‖ Or, feedeth gluttons.

Is a wise son; and consequently a credit and comfort to his father, as hath been oft noted before. Is a companion of riotous men; which is both a manifest violation of God's law, which forbids this society, and is the ready way to a total and final apostacy from God, and from his law Shameth his father, because he is a foolish son.

8 [l]He that by usury and †unjust gain increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.

By usury and unjust gain, Heb. by usury and (or, or) increase, i. e. by any kind of usury, whereby the poor are oppressed, as is implied from the opposite clause; or by any unrighteous practices. See more of these words and of this thing on Exod. xxii. 25; Lev. xxv. 35, 36; Psal. xv. 5; Ezek. xviii. 8. Shall gather it for him that will pity the poor; it shall not long continue with him or his, but shall by God's righteous and powerful providence be disposed into more just and merciful hands.

9 [k]He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, [l]even his prayer shall be abomination.

[l] Ps. 66. 18. & 109. 7. ch. 15. 8.

He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, that obstinately refuseth to yield audience or obedience to God's commands, even his prayer shall be abomination to God, whose law he despised. God will abhor and reject his person, and all his services.

10 [m]Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way, he shall fall himself into his own pit: [n]but the upright shall have good things in possession.

[n] Matt. 6. 33.

Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way; that by evil counsel, or example, or artifice draws them into such practices as expose them to great danger and mischief. The upright shall have good things in possession; shall by God's good providence towards him, both keep the good of which the wicked seeks to deprive him, and escape that mischief which he plotteth against him.

11 The rich man is wise †in his own conceit; but the poor that hath understanding searcheth him out.

† Heb. in his eyes.

Is wise in his own conceit; thinks himself to be wise when he is not, being puffed up with the opinion of his riches, which also he imputes to his own wisdom, and with the admirations and applauses of flatterers, which commonly attend upon them. Searcheth him out; knoweth him better than he knoweth himself; and, looking through all his pomp and vain show, he sees him to be what indeed he is, a foolish and miserable man, notwithstanding all his riches, and discovers the folly of his words and actions.

12 [o]When righteous men do rejoice, there is great glory: but when the wicked rise, a man is ‖hidden.

[o] ver. 28. ch. 11. 10. & 29. 2. Eccles. 10. 6.

When righteous men do rejoice, are encouraged and promoted to places of trust and power, there is great glory in that commonwealth. The state of that kingdom is honourable, and comfortable, and safe, so as good men can show their faces with courage and confidence. When the wicked rise, are advanced to honour and authority, a man is hidden; the state of that nation is so shameful and dangerous, that wise and good men, who only are worthy of the name of men, withdraw themselves, or run into corners and obscure places; partly out of grief and shame to behold the wickedness which is publicly and impudently committed; and partly to avoid the rage and injuries of wicked oppressors, and the judgments of God, which commonly follow such persons and their confederates in sin. Or, as others, both ancient and later interpreters, render it, a man is sought out. Sober and good men, who had retired themselves, are searched for, and brought forth like sheep to the slaughter, as being most suspected, and hated, and feared by bloody tyrants.

13 [p]He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.

[p] Ps. 32. 3, 5. 1 John 1. 8, 9, 10.

That covereth his sins; that doth not confess them (as appears by the opposite clause) to God, and to men too, when occasion requires it; that being convinced or admonished of his sins, either justifieth, or denieth, or excuseth them. Shall not prosper; shall not succeed in his design of avoiding punishment by the concealment of his sins; shall not find mercy, as is implied from the next clause. Whoso confesseth and forsaketh them, by hearty dislike and hatred of all his sins, and by a resolved cessation from a sinful course of life. This is added, to show, that although the dissembling or hiding one's sins is sufficient for his damnation, yet mere confession without forsaking of sin is not sufficient for salvation. Shall have mercy, both from God, who hath promised, and from men, who are ready to grant pardon and favour to such persons.

14 Happy is the man [q]that feareth alway: [r]but he that hardeneth his heart shall fall into mischief.

[r] Rom. 2. 5. & 11. 20.

Happy is the man, because he shall thereby avoid that mischief which befalls fearless sinners, which is expressed in the next clause, and procure that eternal salvation which they lose. That feareth, to wit, the offence and judgments of God; who having confessed and forsaken his sins, as was now said, is afraid to return to them again, and careful to avoid them, and all occasions of them. Alway; in all times, companies, and conditions; not only in the time of great trouble, when even hypocrites will in some sort be afraid of sinning, but in times of outward peace and prosperity. That hardeneth his heart; that goeth on obstinately and securely in sinful courses, casting off due reverence to God, and just fear of his threatenings and judgments.

15 [s]As a roaring lion, and a ranging bear; [t]so is a wicked ruler over the poor people.

[t] Ex. 1. 14, 16, 22. Matt. 2. 16.

The lion and bear are always cruel and greedy in their natures, and especially when they are hungry and want prey, in which case the lions roar, Psal. civ. 21; Isa. xxxi. 4, and bears range about for it. So is a wicked ruler; instead of being a nursing father, and a faithful and tender shepherd, as he ought to be, he is a cruel and insatiable oppressor and devourer of them. Over the poor people; whom he particularly mentions, either to note his policy in oppressing them only who were unable to withstand him, or to revenge themselves of him; or to aggravate his sin in devouring them, whom the laws of God and common humanity bound him to relieve and protect; or to express the effect of his ill government, in making his people poor by his frauds and rapines.

16 The prince that wanteth understanding is also a great oppressor: but he that hateth covetousness shall prolong his days.

The tyranny or oppression of a prince, though by some accounted wisdom, is in truth a manifest act and sign of great folly, because it alienateth from him the hearts of his people, in which his honour, and safety, and riches consist, and ofttimes causeth the shortening of his days, either from God, who cuts him off by some sudden judgment, or from men, who are injured by him, and exasperated against him. Covetousness is the chief cause of all oppressions and unjust practices. Shall prolong his days, by God's favour, the peace and satisfaction of his own mind, and the hearty love of his people, which makes them careful to preserve his life by their fervent prayers to God for him, by willingly hazarding their own estates and lives for him, when occasion requires it, and by all other possible means.

17 [u]A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit; let no man stay him.

[u] Gen. 9. 6. Ex. 21. 14.

A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person, that sheddeth any man's blood, or taketh away his life unjustly, shall flee to the pit; shall speedily be destroyed, being pursued by Divine vengeance, and the horrors of a guilty conscience, and the avengers of blood. Let no man stay him: so it is a prohibition that no man should endeavour to save the life of a wilful murderer, either by intercession, or by offering satisfaction, or any other way; of which see Gen. ix. 6; Exod. xxi. 14; Numb. xxxv. 31. Or, as the ancient and many other interpreters render it, no man shall stay him; none shall desire or endeavour to save him from his deserved punishment; he shall die without pity, being an object of public hatred.

18 [x]Whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved: but [y]he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once.

Shall be saved, to wit, from destruction, because God hath undertaken and promised to protect him. In his ways, Heb. in two ways, of which phrase see above on ver. 6. Shall fall at once; once for all, so as he shall not need a second thrust, 1 Sam. xxvi. 8, and so as he shall never rise more. Or, in one, to wit, of his ways. Though he hath various ways and arts to secure himself, yet none of them shall save him, but he shall perish in one or other of them, and shall be given up by God to the mistake of his way, that he shall choose that course which will be most pernicious to him.

z ch. 12. 11. 19 [z]He that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread: but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough.

That followeth after vain persons; choosing their company, and imitating their example; who gives up himself to vanity and idleness, and so is fitly opposed to the diligent man in the former clause.

a ch. 13. 11. & 20. 21. & 23. 4. ver. 22. 1 Tim. 6. 9. ‖ Or, unpunished. 20 A faithful man shall abound with blessings: [a]but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be ‖innocent.

A faithful man, Heb. a man of truth, or truths, who deals truly and justly in all his bargains and transactions with men. That maketh haste; more than God alloweth him; that taketh the nearest and readiest way to riches, whether it be right or wrong; that is unfaithful and unjust in his dealings. Shall not be innocent; shall not obtain the blessings which he seeks, but shall bring curses and miseries upon him instead of them.

b ch. 18. 5. & 24. 23. c Ezek. 13. 19. 21 [b]To have respect of persons is not good: for [c]for a piece of bread that man will transgress.

When a man hath once vitiated his conscience, and accustomed himself to take bribes, a very small advantage will make him sell justice, and his own soul into the bargain. The design of the proverb is to warn men to take heed of the beginnings of that sin, and consequently of other sins.

‖ Or, He that hath an evil eye hasteth to be rich. d ver. 20. 22 ‖[d]He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him.

Hath an evil eye; is uncharitable to persons in want, envious towards those who get any thing besides him, and covetous or greedy of getting riches by all ways possible, whether just or unjust. Thus an evil eye is taken, Prov. xxiii. 6; Matt. xx. 15, as a good eye notes the contrary disposition, Prov. xxii. 9. That poverty shall come upon him; and consequently that he shall need the pity and help of others, which he cannot expect either from God or men, who hath so hardened himself against others in misery.

e ch. 27. 5,6. 23 [e]He that rebuketh a man afterwards shall find more favour than he that flattereth with the tongue.

Afterwards; when he comes calmly to consider the fidelity of the reprover, and the benefit coming to himself by the reproof, and withal the baseness and mischief of flattery.

f ch. 18. 9. † Heb. a man destroying. 24 Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression; the same [f]is the companion of †a destroyer.

Saith in his heart, supposing that he hath a right to his father's goods. Is the companion of a destroyer; either, 1. He hereby showeth that he is fallen into such wicked society, from whom he hath such counsel or example. Or, 2. He is no less guilty than a thief who robs and destroys men upon the highway; he is a thief and robber, because he hath no right to the actual possession of his father's goods before his death, or without his consent.

g ch. 13. 10. h 1 Tim. 6. 6. 25 [g]He that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife: [h]but he that putteth his trust in the LORD shall be made fat.

He that is of a proud heart, whose property it is to overvalue himself, and to trust to himself and his own wit, or wealth, or strength, stirreth up strife, because he makes it his great business to advance and please himself, and hateth and opposeth all that stand in his way, and despiseth other men, and is very jealous of his honour, and impatient of the least slighting, or affront, or injury, and indulgeth his own passions; and therefore shall not be fat, but lean and miserable, as is implied from the opposite clause. That putteth his trust in the Lord; which is mentioned as a plain and certain evidence of a humble man, who is mean and vile in his own eyes, and therefore trusts not to himself, but to God only, making God's will, and not his own will, and passion, and interest, the rule of all his actions, and can easily deny himself, and yield to others, all which are excellent preventives of strife. Shall be made fat; shall live happily and comfortably, because he avoids that strife which make men's lives miserable.

26 He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool: but whoso walketh wisely, he shall be delivered.

He that trusteth in his own heart; who trusts to his own wit, neglecting or slighting the advice of others, and the counsel of God himself. Is a fool; and shall receive the fruit of his folly, to wit, destruction. Whoso walketh wisely, distrusting his own judgment, and seeking the advice of others, and especially of God, as all truly wise men do, he shall be delivered from those dangers and mischiefs which fools bring upon themselves; whereby he showeth himself to be a wise man.

Shall not lack; shall not impoverish himself by it, as covetous men imagine or pretend; but shall be enriched, which is implied. That hideth his eyes, lest he should see poor and miserable men, and thereby be moved to pity or obliged to relieve them. So he cunningly avoids the beginnings, and occasions, and provocations to charity, teaching us to use the same caution against sin. Shall have many a curse; partly from the poor, whose curses, being not causeless, shall come upon him, and partly from God, who will curse his very blessings, and bring him to extreme want and misery.

k ver. 12. ch. 29. 2. l Job 24. 4. 28 [k]When the wicked rise, [l]men hide themselves: but when they perish, the righteous increase.

Men hide themselves; men, i. e. righteous men, as appears from the following clause, are ashamed and afraid to appear publicly; of which see on ver. 12. The righteous increase; they who were righteous do now again appear in public, and being advanced to that power which the wicked rulers have lost, they use their authority to encourage and promote righteousness, and to punish unrighteousness, whereby the number of wicked men is diminished, and the righteous are multiplied.

CHAP. XXIX.

The excellency of wisdom, with rules for government, 1—14. The parents' duty to correct their children, 15—17. The misery of them that know not God's law, 18. Of anger, pride, thieving, cowardice, and corruption, 19—26. The godly and wicked an abomination to each other, 27.

†Heb. A man of reproofs. a 1 Sam. 2. 25. 2 Chron. 36. 16. ch. 1. 24,—27. †[a]HE, that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

Hardeneth his neck; is incorrigible, and obstinately persists in those sins for which he is reproved. Without remedy, utterly and irrecoverably.

b Esth. 8. 15. ch. 11. 10. & 28. 12. 28. ‖ Or, increased. c Esth. 3. 15. 2 [b]When the righteous are ‖in authority, the people rejoice: but when the wicked beareth rule, [c]the people mourn.

In authority; which interpretation is confirmed from the opposite clause. The Hebrew word signifies to increase either in number, or in dignity and power. The people rejoice, for the blessed effects of their good government. The people mourn, both for the oppressions and mischiefs which they feel, and for the dreadful judgments of God which they justly fear.

d ch. 10. 1. & 15. 20. & 27. 11. e ch. 5. 9, 10. & 6. 26. & 28. 7. Luke 15. 13, 30.

3 [d] Whoso loveth wisdom rejoiceth his father: [e] but he that keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance.

Loveth wisdom; and therefore hateth and escheweth all folly and wickedness. Keepeth company with harlots; whereby he plainly discovers himself to want wisdom; of which see Prov. vii. 7, &c. Spendeth his substance; whereby he not only ruineth himself, but also grieveth his father, as is implied from the opposite clause.

4 The king by judgment establisheth the land: but †he that receiveth gifts overthroweth it.

By judgment; by the free and impartial exercise of justice. He that receiveth gifts, Heb. a man (for he would not vouchsafe to call him a king, as being unworthy of that name and office) of oblations or gifts, i. e. whose delight and common practice it is to take bribes, and sell justice.

5 A man that flattereth his neighbour spreadeth a net for his feet.

A man that flattereth his neighbour, that praiseth or applaudeth another in a sinful state or course, spreadeth a net for his feet; kills him under a pretence of kindness; is an occasion of his sin, and consequently of destruction, which possibly he may design to accomplish by that means.

6 In the transgression of an evil man there is a snare: but the righteous doth sing and rejoice.

There is a snare; his sin will bring him to dreadful horrors and certain ruin. Doth sing and rejoice, because he hath sweet peace in his own conscience, and assurance of present safety and eternal happiness.

7 [f] The righteous considereth the cause of the poor: but the wicked regardeth not to know it.

The righteous, whether magistrate, or any private person concerned to know it, and capable of helping him in it, considereth the cause of the poor; his poverty neither hinders him from taking pains to examine it, nor from a righteous determination of it. Regardeth not to know it; will not put himself to the trouble of searching it out, either because it yields him no profit, or because he resolves to give away his right.

g ch. 11. 11. ‖ Or, set a city on fire. h Ezek. 22. 30.

8 [g] Scornful men ‖ bring a city into a snare: but wise men [h] turn away wrath.

Bring a city into a snare; expose it to God's wrath and to destruction by their self-conceit and wilfulness, by their wicked counsels and courses, whereby they seduce and infect the generality of the people, by their contempt of God, of his just laws and righteous judgments, and of the opinions and advices of wise men. Wise men, who do not scorn, but hearken to the counsels of God and of prudent men, turn away wrath; the wrath of God or of men, who were enraged against it.

9 If a wise man contendeth with a foolish man, [i] whether he rage or laugh, there is no rest.

i Matt. 11. 17.

If a wise man contendeth with a foolish man; either judicially or otherwise debating any matter with him, endeavouring to convince him of any error; whether he, the wise man, rageth (or is angry) or laugheth, i. e. whether he deal sharply and severely with him, rebuking him for his folly, or mildly and pleasantly smiling at it, there is no rest, no end or fruit of the debate, the fool will not be satisfied nor convinced. Or, as it is in the Hebrew, he (to wit, the fool last named, to whom the following carriages may seem more fitly to agree) both rageth and laugheth, (he will not yield nor be convinced, but persists in his folly, which he discovers sometimes by his furious and unbridled passions, and sometimes by foolish laughter and scorning,) and there is no rest; he will never be quieted.

†Heb. Men of blood. k Gen. 4. 5, 8. 1 John 3. 12.

10 †[k] The bloodthirsty hate the upright: but the just seek his soul.

Hate the upright, and consequently seek their ruin, as is implied from the following clause. Seek his soul; either, 1. To require his soul or life at the hands of those who have taken it away. Or, 2. To preserve it from those who attempt to take it away, as this phrase is taken, Psal. cxlii. 4, though commonly it signify to seek to destroy it.

11 A [l] fool uttereth all his mind: but a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards.

l Judg. 16. 17. ch. 12. 16. & 14. 33.

All his mind; all at once, unnecessarily and unseasonably, without reservation or caution. Till afterwards; till he have fit occasion to express it.

12 If a ruler hearken to lies, all his servants are wicked.

If a ruler hearken to lies, delight in flatteries or calumnies, or any lying words or deceitful and wicked practices, all his servants are wicked; partly because he chooseth only such for his service; and partly because they are either corrupted by his example, or engaged by their place and interest to please him, and comply with his base lusts.

13 The poor and ‖ the deceitful man [m] meet together: [n] the LORD lighteneth both their eyes.

The deceitful man, Heb. the man of deceits, or of usuries, i. e. who hath enriched himself by such practices, meet together; converse together, and one needeth the other, as chap. xxii. 2. The Lord lighteneth both their eyes; either their bodily eyes with the light of the sun, which promiscuously shines upon both; or the eyes of their minds with the light of reason and grace, which he indifferently gives to them; and therefore the one should not envy nor despise the other, but be ready to do good one to another, as God doth good to both.

14 [o] The king that [p] faithfully judgeth the poor, his throne shall be established for ever.

Judgeth the poor, and the rich too; but he names the poor, because these are most oppressed and injured by others, and least regarded by princes, and yet committed to their more special care by the King of kings.

15 [q] The rod and reproof give wisdom: but [r] a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame.

The rod and reproof; correction and instruction going together. Left to himself; suffered to follow his own will or lusts without restraint and chastening. His mother, and father too; but he names only the mother, either because her indulgence oft spoils the child, or because children commonly stand in least awe of their mothers, and abuse the weakness of their sex, and tenderness of their natures.

16 When the wicked are multiplied, transgression increaseth: [s] but the righteous shall see their fall.

s Ps. 37. 36. & 58. 10. & 91. 8. & 92. 11.

Are multiplied; or rather, are advanced, because this is opposed to their falling in the next clause; and so this Hebrew word is taken above, ver. 2. Transgression increaseth; sin and sinners abound and grow impudent by impunity, and the example and encouragement of such rulers. Their fall; the destruction of such transgressors in due time.

t ch. 13. 24. & 19. 18. & 22. 15. & 23. 13, 14. ver. 15.

17 [t] Correct thy son, and he shall give thee rest; yea, he shall give delight unto thy soul.

Rest; satisfaction to thy mind, and comfort in his amendment.

u 1 Sam. 3. 1. Amos 8. 11, 12. ‖ Or, is made naked. x John 13. 17. Jam. 1. 25.

18 [u] Where there is no vision, the people ‖ perish: but [x] he that keepeth the law, happy is he.

No vision, i. e. no prophecy, for the prophets were anciently called seers, 1 Sam. ix. 9, i. e. no public preaching of God's law or word, (as appears by the opposite clause,) which is called prophecy, Rom. xii. 6; 1 Cor. xiv. 1, &c., where the people are destitute of the means of instruction. The people perish, because they want the only means of salvation. Or, is made naked; stripped of their best ornaments, God's favour and protection, as this word is taken, Exod. xxxii. 25. He that keepeth the law: this he saith rather than he that hath vision, which the laws of opposition might seem to require, to teach us that, although the want of God's word be sufficient for men's destruction, yet the having, and hearing, or reading of it is not sufficient for their salvation, except they also keep or obey it.

19 A servant will not be corrected by words: for though he understand he will not answer.

A servant, who is so not only in condition, but also in the temper of his mind, disingenuous, perverse, and stubborn, will not be corrected by words; by mere words without blows. Compare Prov. xix. 29. Though he understand, though he know thy mind and words, and his own duty, he will not answer; either by words, expressing his readiness; or by deeds, speedily and cheerfully performing thy commands; but will neglect his duty, pretending that he did not hear or understand thee.

20 Seest thou a man that is hasty ‖ in his words? [y]there is more hope of a fool than of him.

In his words; or rather, in his business, who is rash and heady in the management of his affairs. There is more hope of a fool, who is sensible of his folly, and willing to hearken to the advice of others, as this word is used, chap. xxvi. 12, though commonly it be meant of a wilful and wicked fool; than of him, because he is self-confident, and neither considers things seriously within himself, nor seeks counsel from the wise.

21 He that delicately bringeth up his servant from a child shall have him become his son at the length.

He that delicately bringeth up his servant, allowing him too much freedom, and familiarity, and delicious fare, shall have him become his son; will find him at last grow insolent and presumptuous, and forgetful of his servile condition.

22 [z]An angry man stirreth up strife, and a furious man aboundeth in transgression.

Is by his passion easily transported into grievous and manifold sins against God, and others, and himself, as swearing, and cursing, and violence, yea, sometimes even to murder.

a Job 22. 29. ch. 15. 33. & 18. 12. Is. 66. 2. Dan. 4. 30, 31, &c. Matt. 23. 12. Luke 14. 11. & 18. 14. Acts 12. 23. Jam. 4. 6, 10. 1 Pet. 5. 5.

23 [a]A man's pride shall bring him low: but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit.

Shall bring him low, because both God and man conspire against him, and abhor him. Honour shall uphold the humble in spirit; or, as others render it, without any difference in the sense, the humble in spirit shall hold their honour, shall be honoured by God and men. Thus honour, like a shadow, flees from them that pursue it, and follows them who flee from it.

24 Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul: [b]he heareth cursing, and bewrayeth it not.

Whoso is partner with a thief, by receiving a share of the stolen goods upon condition of his concealment of the theft, hateth his own soul; he carrieth himself towards it as if he hated it; he woundeth and destroyeth it. He heareth cursing; he heareth the voice of swearing, as is said, Lev. v. 1; the oath given to him by a judge adjuring him and other suspected persons to give information concerning it; and bewrayeth it not; which he is bound to do, both by virtue of his oath, and for the public good, which ought to be preferred before all private contracts or friendships.

c Gen. 12. 12. & 20. 2, 11. + Heb. shall be set on high.

25 [c]The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the LORD †shall be safe.

The fear of man, inordinate fear of harm or mischief from men, which is fitly opposed to trust in God, because it comes from a distrust of God's promise and providence, bringeth a snare; is an occasion of many sins, and of great danger, both of injuries from men, and of sore punishments from God. Putteth his trust in the Lord; keeping God's way, and securely relying upon God to protect him from the designs and rage of wicked men.

d See Ps. 20. 9. ch. 19. 6. + Heb. the face of a ruler.

26 [d]Many seek †the ruler's favour; but every man's judgment cometh from the LORD.

Seek the ruler's favour: men study to please and engage their rulers by their obliging carriage, and humble petitions, and all other means, supposing that to be the only way to procure either right or favour from them, as they need or desire it. Every man's judgment, the decision of his cause, and the success of all his endeavours, cometh from the Lord; dependeth wholly upon God, who ruleth and inclineth their minds and hearts as it pleaseth him, Prov. xxi. 1.

27 An unjust man is an abomination to the just: and he that is upright in the way is abomination to the wicked.

Is an abomination to the just, because such men, as such, are hated by God, and haters of and enemies unto God and all goodness, and public plagues to the church and state in which they live; and therefore he who loves these must needs hate them, as true friends hate those who are enemies to their friends. Is abomination to the wicked; of which see above on ver. 10.

CHAP. XXX.

Agur's prophecy, 1; wherein he acknowledgeth his own ignorance, 2, 3. The purity of God's word, with the happiness of them that trust in him, 5. He dehorts from adding to the Scriptures, by the danger of it, 6. The two points of his prayer, with their reason, 7—9. Four wicked generations, 10—14. Four things insatiable, 15, 16. Parents not to be despised, 17. Four things hard to be known, 18, 19. The way of an adulterous woman, 20. Four things intolerable, 21—23. Four things little, but wise, 24—28. Four things stately, 29—31.

THE words of Agur the son of Jakeh, even [a]the prophecy: the man spake unto Ithiel, even unto Ithiel and Ucal,

Agur the son of Jakeh; a person so called, as appears from the designation of his own and his father's name, who lived either in Solomon's time, or rather afterwards, and was famous in his generation for wisdom, and piety, and prophecy; and therefore his proverbs were thought fit to be added to those of Solomon, either by those men of Hezekiah, mentioned chap. xxv. 1, or by some other. But that this should be meant of Solomon may easily be supposed, but cannot be proved; nor is it probable, as being contrary both to the style of the whole chapter, and to the matter of some part of it, as ver. 7—9, which agrees not to Solomon; and to the laws of good interpretation, one of which is, that all words should be taken in their most natural and proper sense, when there is no evidence nor necessity of understanding them improperly and figuratively, which is the present case. The prophecy; the prophetical instruction; for as the prophets were public preachers as well as foretellers of things to come, so their sermons, no less than their predictions, are commonly called their prophecies. Unto Ithiel and Ucal; two friends, or disciples, and contemporaries of Agur, called by those names, who having a great and just opinion of his wisdom, desired his instructions. Others, concerning Ithiel and Ucal; which they understand of Christ, called Ithiel, which signifies God with me, and answers to Immanuel, which is God with us; and Ucal, which signifies power or prevalency. But if he had meant this of Christ, why should he design him by such obscure and ambiguous names, as if he would not be understood? Why did he not call him by the name of Shiloh or Messiah, or some other Scripture title belonging and ascribed to him? Besides, this interpretation agrees not with the contents of this chapter, wherein there is only a short and occasional mention of Christ, but the chapter consists in a manner wholly of counsels and sentences of a quite other kind.

b Ps. 73. 22.

2 [b]Surely I am more brutish than any man, and have not the understanding of a man.

You come to me with a great opinion of my wisdom, and you expect that I should inform and instruct you in all things, yea, even in the greatest mysteries: but you are much mistaken in me; I am as ignorant and foolish as other men generally are, yea, more than many others; which he utters either, 1. From a deep sense of the common corruption of human nature, and of the blindness of men's minds in things concerning God and their own duty, and of the necessity of instruction from God's word, and of illumination from his Spirit, without which they can never understand these matters. Or, 2. From a modest and humble apprehension of his own ignorance, which hath extorted such-like expressions even from heathen philosophers; whence Pythagoras rejected the title of a wise man when it was ascribed to him; and Socrates, though reputed the wisest man of his age, professed that he knew nothing but this, that he knew nothing.

3 I neither learned wisdom, nor †have the knowledge of the holy.

I neither learned wisdom; I have not been taught in the schools of wisdom, as the sons of prophets were, but must own myself to be an unlearned man, as the prophet Amos was, Amos vii. 14, 15. Or, I have not learned it, neither by my own understanding and study, nor by the help of other men. Of the holy; either, 1. Of the holy angels, who are called holy by way of eminency, as Deut. xxxiii. 2; Job xv. 15; Dan. iv. 13, 17, 23; viii. 13. But it was vain to deny that angelical knowledge to be in him, which no man imagined to be in him, and which was not in Adam in the state of innocency. Or, 2. Of the holy prophets. So the sense is, I have not such Divine inspirations as prophets strictly so called have received, whereby I should be enabled to know or explain those great mysteries wherein you desire information from me. Or, 3. Of holy things, of the mind and will of God concerning man's salvation, and the way which leads to it; not that he denieth that he had any knowledge of these things, but only a full, and comprehensive, and perfect knowledge, which they falsely supposed to be in him.

d Job 38. 4, &c. Ps. 104. 3, &c. Is. 40. 12, &c.

4 [c]Who hath ascended up into heaven, or descended? [d]who hath gathered the wind in his fists? who hath bound the waters in a garment? who hath established all the ends of the earth? what is his name, and what is his son's name, if thou canst tell?

Who? what mere man? None at all; and therefore I may truly say, that I have not that which no mortal man ever yet had. Hath ascended up into heaven; there to learn the mind of God who dwells there, and that wisdom which is from above. Or descended; or rather, and descended, to teach men below what he had learned above. The meaning of the place is, No man can fully know and teach us these things unless he hath been in heaven, and sent down from thence to the earth to that end; whence our Saviour Christ justly applies these words to himself, John iii. 13, and appropriates this work of declaring God's nature and will to men to himself, upon this account, that he alone was in his Father's bosom, John i. 18. Hath gathered the wind in his fists, to hold them in, or let them out, and rule them at his pleasure. Where is there a man that can do this? And none but he who made and governs all the creatures can know and teach these things. The waters; those above in the clouds, and those below, the sea, which God keeps as it were within doors, and in a garment and swaddling-band, as it is expressed, Job xxxviii. 8, 9; and the waters which he shuts up in the bowels of the earth. All the ends of the earth; the whole earth, from one end to another, which God upholdeth in the air by the word of his power, and secureth from the rage of the sea, by the banks and shores wherewith he hath begirt it for that purpose. What is his name, and what is his son's name, if thou canst tell? The sense is either, 1. Seeing it is apparent that no man hath this power, and consequently this knowledge, but that this is the prerogative of the great God, declare, if thou art able, his name, i. e. his nature and perfections, and the eternal generation and the perfections of his Son. Or rather, 2. If thou thinkest there be any such man who can do these things, I challenge thee to produce his name; or if he be long since dead, and gone out of the world, the name of any of his posterity that can assure us that their progenitor was such a person; which because thou canst not do, I must conclude that none can thoroughly understand this matter but the blessed God, and his Son Christ, and they to whom God shall reveal it by Christ.

5 [e]Every word of God is †pure: [f]he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him.

e Ps. 12. 6. & 18. 30. & 19. 8. & 119. 140.
f Ps. 18. 30. & 84. 11. & 115. 9, 10, 11.

Every word of God is pure; and therefore you, Ithiel and Ucal, must not expect the full knowledge of Divine mysteries from me, nor from any man, but from the word of God, which is a certain rule, both of your belief and practice, because every part and parcel of it is holy, and true, and good, and there is not the least mixture of falsehood and folly in it, as there is in all the words and writings of men. That put their trust in him; which supposeth their knowledge of him by his word, Psal. ix. 10; and contains their reliance upon his promises, joined with obedience to his commands.

6 [g]Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar.

g Deut. 4. 2. & 12. 32. Rev. 22. 18, 19.

And as the word of God is pure, do not thou corrupt or abuse it, by adding to it thine own or other men's inventions and opinions, and delivering or receiving of them in the name and as the words of God. He here forbids only adding to it, not diminishing from it, which yet is equally forbidden, Deut. iv. 2; xii. 32, because the Israelites then and always were, and others are, more prone to add than to diminish, because it is more easy to add under colour of interpreting, and because it is more agreeable to the humour of mankind, which is much delighted with its own inventions, as the experience of all ages showeth. Lest he reprove thee by words or deeds; by discovering thy folly, and bringing thee to deserved shame and punishment.

7 Two things have I required of thee; †deny me them not before I die:

† Heb. withhold not from me.

Have I required; I do earnestly and especially desire Deny me them not before I die, Heb. withhold them not from me before I die, i. e. whilst I live, as things of great and continual necessity for thy honour and service, and my own good.

8 Remove far from me vanity and lies: give me neither poverty nor riches; [h]feed me with food †convenient for me:

h Matt. 6. 11.

Remove far from me; from my heart, and from the course of my life. This is the first of Agur's petitions. Vanity; either, 1. All vain and false opinions concerning God, or the things of God; all unbelief, idolatry, or misbelief. Or, 2. All vanity of heart and life; a vain conversation, an affectation of the vain things of this world, as riches, pleasures, or honours, the bewitching power and sad effects whereof he had observed in others, and feared in himself, as the following request implies. Lies; all falsehood and deceit in my words and carriage towards God or men. Give me neither poverty nor riches: this is his second request, which may seem to have some reference to the former, poverty being commonly the occasion and temptation to the sin of lying, and riches being the great occasions and enticements to vanity. Thus, as his first petition was against the sins themselves, so this latter is against the occasions of them. Food convenient for me; moderate, and suitable both to my natural necessities, and to that estate and condition of life in which thou hast put me, and to that work and service which thou hast for me to do. And this mediocrity of estate is so amiable, that it hath been oft desired by wise heathens, as more eligible than a state of the greatest plenty and glory.

9 [i]Lest I be full, and †deny thee, and say, Who is the LORD? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain.

i Deut. 8. 12, 14, 17. & 31. 20. & 32. 15. Neh. 9. 25, 26. Job 31. 24, 25, 28. Hos. 13. 6.

Deny thee, by trusting to riches, which is a denial of God, Job xxxi. 24—28, by unthankfulness for and abuse of his mercies, and by rebellion against him, and divers other courses and common practices of rich men, whereby God is denied in truth and in works, even when he is owned in words and in show. Who is the Lord, that I should obey or serve him? I do not need him, I can live of my own without him. Lest by degrees I should arrive at downright atheism or infidelity, which is most incident to rich and great men, as is manifest from experience. Take the name of my God in vain; use false oaths, either to vindicate myself when I am suspected or accused of theft, and my oath is required according to the law, Exod. xxii. 8—11, or to gratify others for filthy lucre, as poor men frequently do.

10 †Accuse not a servant unto his master, lest he curse thee, and thou be found guilty.

Accuse not a servant, to wit, maliciously, rashly, or without just and sufficient cause; for otherwise, in some cases, this may be not only lawful, but a duty, as when a servant lives wickedly, or robs his master, or the like. A servant; whose condition is in itself mean and miserable, and therefore thou shouldst not make it worse without great and apparent necessity. Curse thee; desire God to curse and punish thee, which though it may be sinful in him, yet being deserved by thee, thou hast reason to fear and expect. Be found guilty by God, who is ready to plead the cause of the afflicted, and upon strict search shall find thee guilty, and punish thee accordingly.

11 There is a generation that curseth their father, and doth not bless their mother.

A generation; a sort of men, abominable both to God and men; which is implied concerning these and the following kinds of sinners, ver. 12—14. Their father, and mother too, as it follows; ungrateful and unnatural monsters.

k Luke 18. 11.

12 There is a generation k that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness.

Who not only pretend to others, but conceit within themselves, that they are truly religious persons, when they live in the course of wickedness.

j Ps. 131. 1. ch. 6. 17.

13 There is a generation, O how j lofty are their eyes! and their eyelids are lifted up.

Who are proud and insolent, advancing themselves, and despising all others in comparison of themselves, and showing the pride of their hearts in their countenances and carriages.

m Job 29. 17. Ps. 52. 2. & 57. 4. ch. 12. 18. n Ps. 14. 4. Amos 8. 4.

14 m There is a generation, whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, n to devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men.

Extortioners, and cruel oppressors, who grind the faces of the poor.

15 The horseleach hath two daughters, crying, Give, give. There are three things that are never satisfied, yea, four things say not, †It is enough:

The horseleech, an insatiable creature, sucking blood till it be ready to burst, hath two daughters; which are either, 1. The two forks into which her tongue is divided, and wherewith she sucks: but those who have more accurately observed and described the frame of that creature tell us that they have no tongue, and that they suck either by three little teeth, or several parts of the mouth gathered and compressed together. Or rather, 2. The following things, which resemble the horse leech in its insatiableness; nothing being more ordinary than to call those persons or things the sons or daughters of those whose examples they imitate. And whereas it is objected, that they are not only two, but three, yea, four, as is said in the next clause, the answer is easy, that though he begin with two, yet he proceeds from thence to three, and four, all which are said to be the daughters of the horseleech, if the words be rendered commodiously, and as they are in the Hebrew, as we shall presently see. Crying, Give, give; never filled, and always craving, and ready to receive more and more. There are three things; or, yea, (which may be understood in this, as it is in our translation of the next clause,) they (to wit, the daughters of the horseleech) are three; that are never satisfied; which is added partly to explain the former clause, Give, give, and to show the cause of that excessive desire of more, because they were not contented with what they had; and partly to give the reason why he calls them the daughters of the horseleech. Yea, four things say not; or, yea, they (the daughters forementioned) are four, which say not.

16 °The grave; and the barren womb; the earth that is not filled with water; and the fire that saith not, It is enough.

o ch. 27. 20. Hab. 2. 5.

The barren womb; for as the Israelitish women did generally and vehemently desire many children, for divers reasons elsewhere mentioned; so those who were barren amongst them were most eager in those desires, as we see in Rachel, Gen. xxx. 1, and as in all other cases persons most prize and thirst after those good things which they want. The earth; which when it is dry thirsts for rain, and in a little time sucks up great quantities of water, and gapes for more. The fire; which continually burns as long as there is any combustible matter left for it.

p Gen. 9. 22. Lev. 20. 9. ch. 20. 20. & 23. 22. ‖ Or, the brook.

17 pThe eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of ‖the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it.

The eye that mocketh at his father; he that scorneth or derideth his parents, though it be but with a look or gesture, and much more when he breaks out into opprobrious words and actions. The ravens of the valley shall pick it out; he shall die an unnatural, and untimely, and ignominious death, and after death shall lie unburied, and so be exposed to the birds and beasts of prey, and, amongst others, to the crows or ravens, who use to feed upon dead carcasses, and particularly to pick out their eyes, as is noted by all sorts of writers; of which see my Latin Synopsis. He saith, the ravens of the valley, either because they most delight in valleys, or with a particular respect unto that valley near Jerusalem, which was called the valley of dead bodies, Jer. xxxi. 40, from the carcasses cast out there, to which therefore the ravens resorted in great numbers, according to their manner: or, as others render, the ravens of the brooks, because they are of a hot and dry temper, and therefore delight in places adjacent to the brooks of water. The young eagle; which also preyeth upon dead carcasses, and especially upon their eyes, as the ravens do, the reason being the same in both, whether it be the softness of that part which makes it more easy to them to take, or from the pleasant taste of it.

18 There be three things which are too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not:

The way whereof I cannot trace or find out.

19 The way of an eagle in the air; the way of a serpent upon a rock; the way of a ship in the †midst of the sea; and the way of a man with a maid.

The way of an eagle in the air; either, 1. The manner of her flight, which is exceeding high, and swift, and strong. Or rather, 2. The way or part of the air through which she passeth, without leaving any print or sign in it, which though it be true of all birds, yet is here attributed to the eagle, of whom this is more true, because she flies out of sight, where neither her body nor any sign of it can be discerned. The way of a serpent upon a rock; where she leaves no impression, nor slime, nor token where she was, as she doth in softer bodies, and as birds leave their feathers there. The way of a ship in the midst of the sea; which though at present it make a furrow, yet is speedily closed again. The way of a man with a maid; either, 1. The various methods and artifices which young men use to entice or persuade young virgins, either to honest love and marriage, or to unlawful lust and uncleanness. Or rather, 2. The impure conversation of a man with one who goeth under the name of a maid, but is not so in truth, which is managed with so much secrecy and cunning that it can very hardly be discovered; which exposition agrees best with the foregoing similitudes referred to it, and with the following verse.

20 Such is the way of an adulterous woman; she eateth, and wipeth her mouth, and saith, I have done no wickedness.

Such, so secret and undiscernible, is the way of an adulterous woman; of her who, though she be called and accounted a maid, yet in truth is an adulteress; not a common strumpet, for of such the following words are not true, but one that secretly lives in the sin of adultery or fornication. She eateth, to wit, the bread of deceit in secret, by which is understood the act of filthiness, Prov. ix. 17; xx. 17, which such persons do as greedily desire, and as delightfully feed upon, as hungry persons do upon bread. Thus chastely doth the Holy Ghost express the most filthy actions, to teach us to avoid all immodest and obscene speeches as well as actions. Wipeth her mouth, as a child doth when it hath eaten some forbidden food, and would not be discovered. Saith, I have done no wickedness; denies the fact, and avoweth her innocency.

21 For three things the earth is disquieted, and for four which it cannot bear:

The earth is disquieted; either, 1. The earth itself trembleth and is moved; so it is an hyperbole. Or rather, 2. The inhabitants of the earth. They do by their insolence and impudence cause great and dreadful disturbances in the places where they live. Which it cannot bear; which are intolerable in human societies.

q ch. 19. 10. Eccles. 10. 7.

22 [q]For a servant when he reigneth; and a fool when he is filled with meat;

When he reigneth; when he is advanced to great power and dignity; for such a one is ignorant and unfit for his place, and therefore commits many errors; he is poor, and therefore an insatiable oppressor, according to Prov. xxviii. 3; he is proud and imperious, and being maligned and hated by others, he is provoked to hate them, and to be injurious and cruel to them. A fool, a conceited and wilful fool, or an obstinately wicked man, when he is filled with meat; either, 1. When he is glutted with meat or drink, which dulls men's reason, and heats their blood, and stirs them up to many insolencies. Or rather, 2. When he abounds in wealth, which in that case is like a sword in a madman's hand, being an instrument and occasion of innumerable wickednesses and mischiefs, as appears from common experience.

23 For an odious woman when she is married; and an handmaid that is heir to her mistress.

Odious; proud, and perverse, and full of hateful and offensive qualities. When she is married; for then she displayeth and exerciseth all those ill humours, which before for her own ends she concealed; then she is puffed up, and imperious, and becomes intolerable to her own family, and to her relations and neighbours. That is heir to her mistress; that possesseth her estate, either by the gift of her mistress, into whose favour she had insinuated herself by her cunning and officious carriage; or rather by the marriage of her master, which great and sudden change transports her beside herself, and makes her insufferably proud, and scornful, and injurious to all that converse with her.

24 There be four things which are little upon the earth, but they are †exceeding wise:

Comparatively to other brute creatures. They act very wisely and providently, not from any reason which they have, but by the direction of Divine Providence, which secretly guides them to do those things for their own preservation which are most agreeable to the rules of wisdom. The design of this observation is either, 1. To commend wisdom to us, and to teach us to imitate the providence of these creatures, as we are provoked to imitate their diligence, Prov. vi. 6. Or, 2. To keep us from being proudly conceited of our own wisdom, because we are either equalled or exceeded therein by the unreasonable creatures in the wise conduct of their affairs. Or, 3. To direct us to whom to resort for wisdom when we want and desire it, even to that God who is able to inspire wisdom even into the brute creatures.

25 [r]The ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in the summer;

People; which title is oft given to the unreasonable creatures, both in Scripture, as Joel i. 6; ii. 2, and in Homer, and Virgil, and divers other authors. They prepare their meat in the summer; of which see on Prov. vi. 6—8.

s Ps. 104. 18.

26 [s]The conies are but a feeble folk, yet make they their houses in the rocks;

In rocky ground, or in the holes of rocks, for their safety against their too potent enemies.

27 The locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them †by bands;

Have no king to rule and order them. By bands; in great numbers, and in several companies, and in exact order, as is observed in Scripture, as Judg. vi. 5; vii. 12; Joel i. 6; ii. 7, and by other writers.

28 The spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces.

The spider taketh hold of the thread which she spins out of her own bowels with her hands; with her legs, which he calls hands, because they serve her for the same purpose, to do her work, to weave her web, and to catch gnats or flies, &c. Is in kings' palaces; is not only in poor cottages, but many times in palaces also, where she makes a shift to keep her abode, notwithstanding all the care and pains which is taken to sweep and cleanse it.

29 There be three things which go well, yea, four are comely in going:

That walk decently, and with great alacrity and courage; which are here commended to us to imitate in the management of our affairs.

30 A lion which is strongest among beasts, and turneth not away for any;

He doth not flee from his pursuers, whether men or beasts, but walketh away with a slow and majestic pace, as is observed by Aristotle, and many others.

31 A ‖†greyhound; an he goat also; and a king, against whom there is no rising up.

‖ Or, horse. † Heb. girt in the loins.

A greyhound, called in Hebrew, girt in the lions; either because its loins are slender, and as it were girt up into a little compass, and tight or well trussed up: or because of its great agility and swiftness; for the girding of the loins was used for expedition in going or working. Or, as it is rendered by others, a horse, to wit, a war-horse, having his armour girt about him, and marching to the battle, which he doth with great majesty and courage, as God himself observes at large, Job xxxix. 19, &c. An he-goat; which marcheth in the head of the flock in grave and stately manner, conducting them with great courage and resolution, and being ready to fight for them, either with beasts or men that oppose him; whence great captains are oft compared to he-goats, as Isa. xiv. 9; Jer. l. 8; Dan. viii. 5, 21; Zech. x. 3. A king, against whom there is no rising up; a mighty and victorious king, whose power none can withstand, who therefore goeth hither and thither, and proceedeth in his affairs with invincible courage and majesty. But this place, with the variation of one Hebrew point, reading ammo for immo, may be rendered, as a very learned man observes, a king, and his people with him; a king when he hath the hearts and hands of his people going along with him in his undertakings.

32 If thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thyself, or if thou hast thought evil, [t]lay thine hand upon thy mouth.

t Job 21. 5. & 40. 4. Eccles. 8. 3. Mic. 7. 16.

In lifting up thyself; either, 1. By rebellion or sedition against the king last mentioned. Or, 2. By anger or wrath, of which he speaks in the next verse. But this verse hath no necessary dependence either upon the foregoing or following verse. Or, 3. Through thy pride, which makes men carry themselves very foolishly, and scornfully, and injuriously, and is the root of contention, as was observed, Prov. xiii. 10. Thought evil, i. e. designed any mischief or injury against thy neighbour. Lay thine hand upon thy mouth, to wit, to shut it. Be silent, as this phrase is used, Job xxi. 5; xxix. 9. Restrain thyself, do not speak one word, much less do any thing tending to the accomplishment of it; do not open thy mouth to justify or excuse it, but silently and seriously consider the evil of it, and repent of it, and do so no more.

33 Surely the churning of milk bringeth forth butter, and the wringing of the nose bringeth forth blood: so the forcing of wrath bringeth forth strife.

The forcing of wrath; the stirring up of wrath, either, 1. In a man's self towards others, by giving way to passion, or by fixing his thoughts upon those things which may inflame it. Or, 2. In others by reproaches, injuries, or any other provocations. Bringeth forth strife; is the cause of many quarrels, and much mischief among men.

CHAP. XXXI.

Lemuel's lesson concerning chastity and temperance, 1—5. The proper use of wine, 6, 7. An exhortation to righteous judgment, 8, 9. A description of a virtuous wife, 10, with her husband's confidence in her, 11. Her work and careful provision for her household, 12—20. Their furniture and clothing, 21, 22. The properties and praise of a good wife, 23—29. The vanity of beauty; the good are to be praised, 30, 31.

cir. 1015. a ch. 30. 1. THE words of king Lemuel, [a]the prophecy that his mother taught him.

Of king Lemuel, i. e. of Solomon, by the general consent both of Jewish and Christian writers; to whom this name doth very fitly agree, for it signifies one of or from God, or belonging to God; and such a one was Solomon eminently, being given by God to David and Bathsheba, as a pledge of his reconciliation to them after their repentance; of whom it is expressly said that the Lord loved him, 2 Sam. xii. 24, and who was by God himself appointed to succeed David in the kingdom. Possibly his mother gave this name to mind him of his great obligations to God, and of the justice and necessity of his devoting himself unto God's service and glory. The prophecy; so called, either, 1. More especially, because she did either by natural sagacity, or by Divine inspiration, foresee Solomon's danger, and what sins he was most likely to be either inclined or tempted to commit; and therefore thought fit to give him these precautions. Or, 2. More generally, as all godly discourses or counsels are called prophecies; of which see on Prov. xxx. 1, and elsewhere. His mother, Bathsheba, who having truly repented of her adultery, did not only avoid it in herself for the future, but seriously endeavoured to prevent that and such-like sins in others, and especially in Solomon, whom the remembrance of her sin might possibly provoke to an imitation of her example. But when she gave him these instructions is but matter of conjecture. Probably it was either, 1. When she first discerned his inclinations to those sins of which she here warns him, to which she saw he was like to have many and strong provocations. Or, 2. After he was made king, and had more plainly discovered his proneness to these excesses, although he had not yet broken forth into those scandalous enormities into which he afterwards fell.

b Is. 49. 15. 2 What, my son? and what, [b]the son of my womb? and what, the son of my vows?

What? a short speech, arguing her great passion for him; what dost thou do? or, what words shall I take? what counsels shall I give thee? My heart is full, I must give it vent; but where shall I begin? The son of my womb; my son, not by adoption, but whom I bare in my womb, and brought forth with great pain, and brought up with tender care; and therefore it is my duty to give thee admonitions, and thine to receive them; and what I speak is from sincere and fervent affection to thee, which I trust thou wilt not despise. The son of my vows; on whose behalf I have made many prayers, and sacrifices, and solemn vows to God; whom I have, as far as in me lay, devoted to the work, and service, and glory of God.

c ch. 5. 9. d Deut. 17. 17. Neh. 13. 26. ch. 7. 26. Hos. 4. 11. 3 [c]Give not thy strength unto women, nor thy ways [d]to that which destroyeth kings.

Thy strength; the vigour of thy mind and body, which is greatly impaired by inordinate lusts, as all physicians agree, and frequent experience showeth. Thy ways; thy conversation or course of life. To that which destroyeth kings; the same thing repeated in other words, as is very usual in these books; to the immoderate love of women, which is most destructive to kings and kingdoms, as was well known to Solomon by the example of his father David, and by many other sad instances left upon record in all histories.

e Eccles. 10. 17. 4 [e]It is not for kings, O Lemuel, it is not for kings to drink wine; nor for princes strong drink:

To drink wine, to wit, to drunkenness or excess, as the next verse explains it.

f Hos. 4. 11. + Heb. alter. + Heb. of all the sons of affliction. 5 [f]Lest they drink, and forget the law, and †pervert the judgment †of any of the afflicted.

Forget the law; the laws of God, by which they are to govern themselves and their kingdoms. Pervert the judgment of any of the afflicted; which may easily be done by a drunken judge, because drunkenness deprives a man of the use of reason; by which alone men can distinguish between right and wrong, and withal stirs up those passions which incline him both to precipitation and partiality.

g Ps. 104. 15. + Heb. bitter of soul. 1 Sam. 1. 10. 6 [g]Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be †of heavy hearts.

Unto him; which is to be understood comparatively, to him rather than to kings, partly because he needs a liberal draught of it more than kings do; and principally because if it proceed to excess, in him it is only a private inconvenience, but in kings it is a public mischief and grievance. Ready to perish; sorely afflicted and overwhelmed with sorrow, as it is explained in the following words; for such need a cordial.

7 Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more.

h See Job 29. 15, 16. i 1 Sam. 19. 4. Esth. 4. 16. + Heb. the sons of destruction. 8 [h]Open thy mouth for the dumb [i]in the cause of all †such as are appointed to destruction.

Open thy mouth, speak freely and impartially, as becomes a king and judge to do, for the dumb; for such as cannot speak in their own cause, either through ignorance and infirmity, or because of the dread of their more potent adversaries, or of the majesty of the king sitting in judgment. Such as are appointed to destruction; who without such succour from the judge are like to be utterly ruined, whom therefore both justice and charity oblige thee to preserve.

k Lev. 19. 15. Deut. 1. 16. l Job 29. 12. Is. 1. 17. Jer. 22. 16. 9 Open thy mouth, [k]judge righteously, and [l]plead the cause of the poor and needy.

m ch. 12. 4. & 18. 22. & 19. 14. 10 ¶ [m]Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.

A virtuous woman, whom he may take to wife. Such a person is hardly to be found. Compare Eccles. vii. 28. And here he lays down several characters or qualifications of an excellent wife, which are here delivered in alphabetical order, each verse beginning with a several and the succeeding letter of the Hebrew alphabet; which method is used in some, and but in a few places of Scripture, to oblige us to the more diligent consideration and careful remembrance of them, as things of more than ordinary importance. And such this matter is, partly because the good or bad education even of private families, which depends much upon the mother's qualifications, hath a mighty influence upon the welfare or misery of commonwealths; and partly because the right education of royal families is in itself a very public blessing, and therefore it is the interest and happiness of whole kingdoms that their kings should have virtuous and pious wives.

11 The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil.

Doth safely trust in her, for the prudent and faithful management of all his domestic affairs, which are committed to her care. So that he shall have no need of spoil; the sense is either, 1. He shall want no necessary provisions for his family, which are sometimes called spoil, or prey, as below, ver. 15; Psal. cxi. 5; Luke xi. 22. Or, 2. He shall not need to use indirect and unlawful courses to get wealth, by cheating or oppressing his subjects or others, as princes have oft done to maintain the luxury of their wives, and as Solomon himself afterwards did, of which see on 1 Kings xii. 4, 10, 11, because all shall be abundantly supplied to him by her providence.

12 She will do him good and not evil all the days of her life.

She will improve, and not waste his estate.

13 She seeketh wool, and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands.

She seeketh wool and flax, that she may find employment for her servants, and not suffer them to spend all their time unprofitably in ease and idleness. Worketh willingly with her hands; she encourageth them to work by her example; which was a common practice among princesses in those first and purest ages of the world. Not that it is the duty of kings and queens to use manual or mechanical operations, but that it is the duty of all persons, the greatest not excepted, to improve all their talents, and particularly their time, which is one of the noblest of them, one way or other to the service of that God to whom they must give an account, and to the good of that community to which they are related and obliged.

14 She is like the merchants' ships; she bringeth her food from afar.

By the sale of her homespun commodities she purchaseth the choicest goods which come from far countries.

n Rom. 12. 11. o Luke 12. 42.

15 [n]She riseth also while it is yet night, and [o]giveth meat to her houshold, and a portion to her maidens.

While it is yet night; early in the morning, to redeem time. Giveth meat; distributeth all her necessary provisions. A portion; either, 1. Of work, which she allots to them. Or rather, 2. Of provisions for them; for so this word is used, Gen. xlvii. 22; Lev. x. 13, 14; Prov. xxx. 8, and no where, to my remembrance, of an allotment of work. And so this clause agrees best with the former, expressing the same thing in other words, according to the manner.

16 She considereth a field, and †buyeth it: with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

She considereth a field; whether it be fit for her use, and of a reasonable price, and how she may purchase it. This excludes the rashness, as her proceeding to buy it excludes the inconstancy, which is oft incident to that sex. With the fruit of her hands, with the effects of her diligence, she planteth a vineyard; she improveth the land to the best advantage.

17 She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms.

She girdeth her loins with strength; she useth great diligence and expedition in her employment; for which end men in those times used to gird up their long and loose garments about their loins. Strengtheneth her arms; putteth forth her utmost strength in her business.

18 †She perceiveth that her merchandise is good: her candle goeth not out by night.

She perceiveth that her merchandise is good; she finds great comfort and good success in her labours. Her candle goeth not out by night; which is not to be taken strictly, but only signifies her unwearied care and industry, which is oft expressed by labouring day and night, or continually.

19 She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

By her own example she provoketh her servants to labour. And although in these later and more delicate and luxurious times, such mean employments are grown out of fashion among great persons, yet they were not so in former ages, neither in other countries, nor in this land; whence all women unmarried are to this day called in the language of our law spinsters.

20 †[p]She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

To relieve their necessities. Her designs are generous and noble; for she labours not only to supply her own and her household necessities, or to support her own state, much less to feed her pride and luxury, but that she may have wherewith to supply the wants of others who crave or need her assistance; which also procures God's blessing upon her husband, and children, and whole family, to whom, by this means, she brings both honour and advantage.

21 She is not afraid of the snow for her houshold: for all her houshold are clothed with ‖scarlet.

She is not afraid of the snow, or of any injuries of the weather. All her household are clothed with scarlet; she hath provided enough, not only for their necessity and defence against cold and other inconveniences, which is here supposed, but also for their delight and ornament; so that not only herself, and husband, and children, but some of the better rank of her servants, wear scarlet; which was more cheap and familiar in those times and countries than now it is with us. Or, as it is rendered in our margin, and by divers others, are clothed with double garments, which is necessary and customary in cold seasons.

22 She maketh herself coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple.

Coverings of tapestry, for the furniture of her house. Silk and purple, which was very agreeable to her high quality, though it doth not justify that luxury in attire which is now usual among persons of far lower ranks, both for wealth and dignity.

23 [q]Her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

Known; observed and respected, not only for his own worth, but for his wife's sake; not only for those rich ornaments which by her care and diligence she provides for him, which others of his brethren, by reason of their wives' sloth or luxury, are not able to procure, but also for his wisdom in choosing, and his happiness in enjoying, so excellent a wife, by whose prudent care, in the management of his domestic concerns, he hath perfect freedom wholly to attend upon public affairs. Sitteth among the elders of the land, in counsel or judgment.

24 She maketh fine linen, and selleth it; and delivereth girdles unto the merchant.

Curiously wrought of linen, and gold, or other precious materials, Jer. xiii. 1: Dan. x. 5, which in those parts were used both by men, 2 Sam. xx. 8, and by women, Isa. iii. 24; Cant. vii. 1.

25 Strength and honour are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come.

Strength; not strength of body, which is no ornament of that sex, save only as she preserves her health and strength by sobriety and exercise, which other men waste by intemperance and idleness; but strength of mind, magnanimity, courage, resolution, activity. Honour; either, 1. Her prudent, and pious, and amiable behaviour, in which true honour principally consists. Or, 2. That good name and honourable esteem which she hath gained amongst all that know her by her virtuous disposition and carriage. Her clothing; these, and not her rich garments mentioned before, are her great ornament and glory. She shall rejoice in time to come: the sense is either, 1. In her old age she reaps the comfort and benefit of her youthful labours. Or rather, 2. She lives in constant tranquillity of mind, and a confident and cheerful expectation of all future events, how calamitous soever, partly because she hath laid in provisions for a rainy day, and chiefly because she hath the comfortable remembrance of a well-spent life, and, which follows thereupon, a just confidence in God's gracious providence and promises made to such persons.

26 She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

She openeth her mouth with wisdom; she is neither sullenly silent, nor full of vain and impertinent talk, as many women are, but speaks directly and piously, as occasion offereth itself. In her tongue is the law of kindness; her speeches are not froward and provoking, as those of foolish women frequently are, but most obliging and amiable, as being guided by wisdom and grace, and not by inordinate lusts and passions. And this practice is called a law in her tongue, because it is constant and customary, and proceeds from an inward and powerful principle of true wisdom, which in a manner necessitates and constrains her to discourse like herself, so that in a moral sense she cannot speak otherwise, unless she offer violence to herself, or the nature of the thing require sharp and severe expressions.

27 She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

She looketh well to the ways of her household; she diligently observeth the management and progress of her domestic business, and the whole carriage and conversation of her children and servants; whereby also he intimates that she spends not her time in gadding abroad to other houses, and idle discourses about the concerns of other persons, as the manner of many women is, but is wholly intent upon her own house and proper business. Eateth not the bread of idleness; that which is got by idleness, or without labour.

28 Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.

Her children; whose testimony is the more considerable, because they have been constant eye-witnesses of her whole carriage, and therefore must have seen her misdemeanours, if there had been any, as well as her virtues. Arise up; either, 1. In token of reverence to her, which agrees not to the following clause, wherein the same phrase is understood concerning her husband. Or rather, 2. That they may seriously and industriously apply themselves to the work of setting forth her praises, as this phrase is used, Gen. xxxvii. 25; Exod. ii. 17, and oft elsewhere. For sitting being commonly the posture of idleness, men that set about any work are said to rise in order thereunto. Call her blessed, both for her own excellency, and for many happy fruits which they have gathered from her wise and godly education. He praiseth her, in the following words.

29 Many daughters ‖ have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.

‖ Or, have gotten riches.

Daughters; daughters of men, i. e. women, so called also Gen. xxxiv. 1; Ezek. xxx. 18. Thou excellest them all: he esteems it but just that his praises should bear proportion to her real and manifold perfections.

30 Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the LORD, she shall be praised.

Favour; comeliness; or, as the next clause explains it, beauty, which commonly gives women favour or acceptation with those who behold them. These are the words either, 1. Of her husband, continuing to praise her. Or, 2. Of Bathsheba, giving the sum of what she had said in few words. Is deceitful; partly, because it gives a false representation of the person, being ofttimes a cover to a most deformed soul, and to many evil and hateful qualities; partly, because it doth not give a man that content and satisfaction which at first view he promised to himself from it; and partly, because it is soon lost, not only by death, but by many diseases and contingencies. That feareth the Lord; which character is here mentioned either, 1. As the crown of all her perfections. Or, 2. As a key to understand the foregoing passage of that wisdom, and fidelity, and diligence, which proceeded from or is accompanied with the fear of God.

31 Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates.

Give her of the fruit of her hands; it is but just and fit that she should enjoy those benefits and praises which her excellent labours deserve. Let her own works praise her; give her the praises which her own works may challenge. If men be silent, the lasting effects of her prudence and diligence will loudly trumpet forth her praises. In the gates; in the most public and solemn assemblies.

ECCLESIASTES;

OR,

THE PREACHER

THREE things in general are to be noted concerning this book: 1. The author of it, who was Solomon, as is manifest both from the common consent of Jewish and Christian writers, and from the express words of the first verse. Nor can any thing be opposed to it but bold and groundless conjectures. That he wrote it in his old age is more than probable from divers passages in it, as, that he did it after his buildings, chap. ii. 4, which yet took up twenty years of his life, 1 Kings ix. 10, and after some considerable enjoyment of them, and planting of gardens and orchards, and reaping the fruit of them, chap. ii. 5, 6, and after long and much consideration and experience of all those methods in which men expected to find happiness, and after he had been deeply plunged in impure and inordinate loves, chap. vii. 27, &c., and from many other places, which may be observed by any diligent reader. And so this book was written by him as a public testimony of his repentance and detestation of all those vain and wicked courses to which he had addicted himself; wherein he followed the example of his father David, who after his sad fall penned the 51st Psalm. And the truth of this opinion may be confirmed by that expression, 2 Chron. xi. 17, they walked in the way of David and Solomon, i. e. wherein they walked both before their falls, and after their repentance. 2. The form or method of it. For whereas there are some passages in it which may seem offensive and impious, for which some few persons have suspected its authority, it must be considered that it is in part dramatical, as was said before of the Book of Proverbs, and that Solomon speaks some and most things in his own name, but some other things in the names and according to the opinions of those worldly and ungodly men, as is undeniably manifest, both from the scope and design of the book, as it is expressed both in the beginning and in the conclusion of it, and from his serious and large disputation against those wicked principles and courses. And this way of writing is not unusual amongst both sacred and profane writers. 3. The design and business of it, which is to describe man's true happiness, and the way leading to it; which he doth both negatively, asserting and proving that it is not to be found either in secular wisdom, or in sensual pleasures, or in worldly greatness and glory, or in abundance of riches, or in a vain profession of religion; and positively, showing that it is to be had only by the fear of God, and obedience to his laws, which alone can give a man a contented and cheerful enjoyment of his present comforts, and assurance of his future and everlasting happiness.

CHAP. I.

All is vanity; our labour great and unprofitable, 1—3. The whole course of things is always going and returning, 4—7. Nothing in nature is satisfied, 8. Nothing new; old things are forgot, 9—11. The search after wisdom is itself a vain labour; cannot supply our natural wants, nor satisfy our desires; but increaseth sorrow: all this the Preacher found out by experience, 12—18.

B.C. cir. 977. a ver. 12. ch. 7. 27. & 12. 8, 9, 10. THE words [a]of the Preacher, the son of David, king of Jerusalem.

The Preacher; who was not only a king, but also a teacher of God's people, which he did both by words, upon some solemn occasions, and by writings; who having sinned grievously and scandalously in the eyes of all the world, justly thought himself obliged to preach or publish his true repentance for all his folly and wickedness, and to give public warning and wholesome counsels to all persons to avoid those rocks upon which he had split. The Hebrew properly signifies either gathering or gathered; and so it signifies either, 1. A preacher, as it is commonly rendered, whose office it is to gather in souls unto God or his church. Or, 2. A penitent or convert, or one gathered or brought back by true repentance to God, and to his church, from which he had so wickedly revolted. King of Jerusalem: this is added partly as a description of the person or author of this book, Solomon, who was the only man that was both son of David, properly so called, and king of Jerusalem; and partly as an aggravation of his sin, because he was the son of David, a wise and godly father, who had given him both excellent counsel, and, for his general course, a good example: and for the evil example which he gave him in the matter of Uriah, that also, considered with his hearty and effectual repentance for it, and the dreadful punishments of it upon his person and family, was a fair warning and most powerful instruction to him to learn by his father's example, and because he was a king, not by birth, for he was not David's eldest son, but by the special favour and designation of that God whom he had now so ill requited, and that in Jerusalem, a holy city, the place of God's special presence, and of his worship, where he had daily opportunities to know and obligations to practise better things, which place he had defiled by his horrid sins, and thereby made it, and all God's people, and the true religion, and the name of the blessed God, odious and contemptible amongst all the nations round about him.

b Ps. 39. 5, 6. & 62. 9. & 144. 4. ch. 12. 8. c Rom. 8. 20. 2 [b]Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities; [c]all is vanity.

Vanity of vanities; not only vain, but vanity in the abstract, which notes extreme vanity, especially where the word is thus doubled; as a king of kings is the chief of kings, and a servant of servants is the vilest of servants, and a song of songs is a most excellent song. Saith the Preacher, upon deep consideration and long experience, and by Divine inspiration. This verse contains the general proposition, which he intends particularly to demonstrate in the whole following book. All, all worldly things, and all men's designs, and studies, and works about them, is vanity; not in themselves, for so they are God's creatures, and therefore good and really useful in their kinds; but in reference to men, and to that happiness which men seek and confidently expect to find in them. So they are unquestionably vain, because they are not what they seem to be, and perform not what they promise, content and satisfaction, but instead of that are commonly the causes or occasions of innumerable cares, and fears, and sorrows, and mischiefs; and because they are altogether unsuitable to the noble mind or soul of man, both in nature or quality, and in duration, as being unstable and perishing things. And this vanity of them is here repeated again and again; partly, because it was most deeply fixed and perpetually present in Solomon's thoughts; partly, to show the unquestionable certainty and vast importance of this truth; and partly, that he might more thoroughly awaken the dull and stupid minds of men to the consideration of it, and might wean men's hearts from those things upon which he knew they excessively doted.

3 [d]What profit hath a man of all his labour which he taketh under the sun? d ch. 2. 22. & 3. 9.

What profit? or, as others render it, What remainder? What real and abiding benefit hath a man by it? None at all. All is unprofitable, as to the attainment of that happiness which Solomon here is, and all men in the world are, inquiring after. His labour, Heb. his toilsome labour, both of body and mind, in the pursuit of riches, or pleasures, or other earthly things. Which he taketh under the sun; in all sublunary or worldly matters, which are usually transacted in the day time, or by the light of the sun. By this restriction he implies that that profit and happiness which in vain is sought for in this lower world, is really and only to be found in heavenly places and things.

4 One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: [e]but the earth abideth for ever. e Ps. 104. 5. & 119. 90.

One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: men continue but for one, and that a short age, and then they leave all their possessions to the succeeding age; and therefore they cannot be happy here, because happiness must needs be unchangeable and eternal; or else the perpetual fear and certain knowledge of the approaching loss of all these things will rob a man of all solid contentment in them. The earth abideth for ever, i. e. through all successive generations of men; and therefore man in this respect is more mutable and miserable than the very earth upon which he stands; and which, together with all the glories and comforts which he enjoyed in it, he leaveth behind him to be possessed by others.

5 [f]The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and †hasteth to his place where he arose. f Ps. 90. 5, 6. † Heb. panteth.

The sun is in perpetual motion, sometimes arising, and sometimes setting, and then arising again, and so constantly repeating its courses in all succeeding days, and years, and ages; and the like he observes concerning the winds and rivers, ver. 6, 7. And the design of these similitudes seems to be, either, 1. That by representing the constant changes and restless motions of these particular things he might intimate that it is so with all other earthly things; and therefore no man can expect satisfaction from them. Or, 2. That by comparing the sun, and wind, and rivers, as, ver. 4, he compared the earth with man, he might show that man, considered as mortal, is in a more unhappy condition than these things, because when the earth abides, man goes; and when the sun sets, he riseth again; and so the wind and rivers return to their former place and state, but man, when once he dies, he never returns again to this life; of which comparison see Job xiv. 7, 12. Or, 3. To show the vanity of all worldly things, and that man's mind can never be satisfied with them, because there is nothing in the world but a constant repetition of the same things, which is so irksome a thing, that the consideration thereof hath made some persons weary of their lives; and there is no new thing under the sun, as is added in the foot of the account, ver. 9, which seems to me to be given as a key to understand the meaning of the foregoing passages. And this is manifest and certain from experience, that the things of this world are so narrow, and the mind of man so vast, that there must be something new to satisfy the mind; and even delightful things, by too frequent repetition or long continuance, are so far from yielding satisfaction, that they grow tedious and troublesome.

6 [g]The wind goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north; it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his circuits. g John 3. 8.

The wind goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north; the wind also sometimes blows from one quarter of the world, and sometimes from another; all of them being synecdochically comprehended under these two eminent quarters. But because this word, the wind, is not expressed in the Hebrew, but is only borrowed or understood from the latter clause of the verse, this first clause is by other judicious interpreters understood of the sun, of whom he last spake; the words being thus rendered according to the Hebrew, He (the sun) goeth towards the south, (which he doth one half of the year,) and turneth about unto the north, which he doth the other half. And so here is the whole motion of the sun towards the four quarters of the world particularly described; his daily motion from east to west, and back again, ver. 5; and his yearly motion from north to south, between the signs of Cancer and Capricorn. The wind returneth again according to his circuits: this clause is by all understood of the wind, which is fitly mentioned immediately after the sun, because it hath its rise from the sun, who is therefore called the father of winds, and the winds do usually rise with the sun, and are laid when he sets. But then it is rendered thus, and that very agreeably to the Hebrew, the wind goeth continually whirling or compassing about, and he returneth again to his circuits, being sometimes in one, and sometimes in another quarter, and successively returning to the same quarters in which he had formerly been.

h Job 38. 10. Ps. 104. 8, 9.

7 [h]All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full; unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they † Heb. return to go. †return again.

Is not full, to wit, to the brink, or so as to overflow the earth, which might be expected from such vast accessions to it; whereby also he intimates the emptiness and dissatisfaction of men's minds, notwithstanding all the abundance of creature-comforts. Unto the place from whence the rivers come; either, 1. Unto the sea, from whence they are supposed to return into their proper channels, and then, as it is expressed, thither (i. e. into the sea) they return again. Or, 2. Unto their springs or fountains, to which the waters return by secret passages of the earth, as is manifest from the Caspian Sea, and reasonably supposed in other places. Or rather, 3. Unto the earth in general, from whence they come or flow into the sea, and to which they return again by the reflux of the sea. For he seems to speak of the visible and constant motion of the waters, both to the sea and from it, and then to it again in a perpetual reciprocation; which agrees best with the former similitudes, ver. 5, 6.

8 All things are full of labour; man i Prov. 27. 20. cannot utter it: [i]the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.

All things, not only the sun, and winds, and rivers, which I have mentioned, but all other creatures, are full of labour; both subjectively, as they are in continual restlessness and change, never abiding in the same state or place; and efficiently, as they cause great and sore labour to men, in getting, and keeping, and enjoying of them, yea, even in the study of them, as is noted hereafter. Man cannot utter it; the labour is inexpressibly and unconceivably great. The eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing; as there are many things in the world troublesome and vexatious to men's senses and minds, so even those things which are comfortable and acceptable to them are not satisfactory, but men are constantly desiring some longer continuance or fuller enjoyment of them, or variety in them, and they never say, It is enough, I desire no more. The eye and ear are here synecdochically put for all the senses, because these are most spiritual and refined, most curious and inquisitive, most capable of receiving satisfaction, because they are exercised with more ease and pleasure than the other senses, whose satisfactions are oft attended with greater weariness and manifold dangers and inconveniences.

There is nothing in the world but a continued and tiresome repetition of the same things. The nature and course of the beings and affairs of the world, and the tempers of men's minds, are generally the same that they ever were and shall ever be; and therefore because no man ever yet received satisfaction from any worldly things, it is a vain and foolish thing for any person hereafter to expect it. No new thing, to wit, in the nature of things, which might give us hopes of attaining that satisfaction which things have not hitherto afforded. For otherwise this doth not restrain the God of nature, who hath frequently done, and still can do, new and miraculous works, and who can and doth discover to particular persons new inventions, when it pleaseth him.

10 Is there any thing whereof it may be said, See, this is new? it hath been already of old time, which was before us.

For the proof hereof I appeal to the consciences and experiences of all men. It hath been already of old time; the same things have been said and done before, though possibly we did not know it.

11 There is no remembrance of former things: neither shall there be any remembrance of things that are to come with those that shall come after.

There is no remembrance of former things: this seems to be added to prevent this objection, There are many new inventions and enjoyments unknown to former ages. To this he answers, This objection is grounded only upon our ignorance of ancient times and things, which is very great, and which if we did exactly know or remember, we should easily find parallels to all present occurrences in former ages. The latter clause tends both to illustrate and confirm the former. The sense is, There are many thousands of remarkable speeches and actions done in this and the following ages, which neither are, nor ever will be, put into the public records or histories, and consequently they must unavoidably be forgotten and lost unto succeeding ages; and therefore it is just and reasonable to believe the same concerning former ages, seeing the same causes are most likely to produce the same effects.

12 ¶ [l]I the Preacher was king over Is- l ver. 1. rael in Jerusalem.

This verse is a preface to the following discourse, that by the consideration of the quality of the speaker they might be induced to give more attention and respect to his words. Having asserted the vanity of all things in the general, he now comes to prove his assertion in all those particulars wherein men commonly seek, and with greatest probability expect to find true happiness. He begins with secular wisdom. And to show how competent a judge he was of this matter, he lays down his character, that he was the Preacher, which implies eminent knowledge and ability to teach others; or, the convert, who had learned by dear-bought experience what he now taught them; and a king, who therefore had all imaginable opportunities and advantages for the attainment of happiness, and particularly for the getting of wisdom, by consulting all sorts of books and men, by trying all manner of experiments, and many other ways; and no ordinary king, but king over Israel, God's own and only beloved people, a wise and a happy people, Deut. iv. 6, 7; xxxiii. 29, whose king he was by God's special and gracious appointment, and furnished by God with singular wisdom for the discharge of that great trust; and whose royal palace and abode was in Jerusalem, where were the house of God, and the most wise and learned of the priests attending upon it, and the seats of justice, and colleges or assemblies of the wisest men of their nation; of which see 2 Kings xxii. 14; 1 Chron. xxv. 8, &c.; Psal. cxxii. 5: all which helps concurring together in him, which very rarely do in any other men, makes the argument drawn from his experience more convincing and undeniable.

13 And I gave my heart to seek and search out by wisdom concerning all things that are done under heaven: [m]this sore travail hath God given to the sons of man ‖ to be exercised therewith. m Gen. 3. 19. ch. 3. 10. ‖ Or, to afflict them.

I gave my heart, which phrase notes his serious and fixed purpose, his great industry and alacrity in it, to seek and search out, to seek diligently and accurately, by wisdom, wisely, or by the help of that wisdom wherewith God had endowed me, concerning all things that are done under heaven; concerning all the works of God and men in this lower world; the works of nature, and their causes, effects, properties, and operations; the works of Divine providence, and God's counsels and ends in them; the work and depths of human policy in the conduct of personal, and domestical, and public affairs. This sore travail, this difficult and toilsome work of searching out these things, hath God given to the sons of man; God hath inflicted this as a just punishment upon man for his eating of the tree of knowledge, that instead of that sweet and perfect knowledge which God had freely infused into man at his first creation, he should now grope after some small parcels or fragments of it, and those too not to be gotten without the sweat of his brows and brains. To be exercised therewith; to employ themselves in the painful study of these things, which now is both their duty and their punishment. Or, as it is rendered in the margin, and by many others, to afflict them in or by it, to chastise their former curiosity, and to give them matter of continual humiliation and vexation. And therefore knowledge is so far from making men happy, that it exposeth them to trouble and infelicity.

14 I have seen all the works that are done under the sun; and, behold, all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

I have seen, i. e. diligently observed, and in great measure understood. Behold; for it was a great surprise to me, and therefore may seem strange to you. All is vanity and vexation of spirit; and not only unsatisfying, but also troublesome, and an affliction or breaking to a man's spirit or mind. Or, as others, both ancient and modern translators, render it, a feeding upon wind, as these very words, save only that there is the verb from which this noun seems most probably deduced, are rendered, Hos. xii. 1, where also it signifies a fruitless or lost labour, and a disappointment of their hopes and desires of satisfaction. And so this is a repetition of the same thing in other words, according to the manner of these books.

u ch. 7. 13. 15 [u] That which is crooked cannot be made straight: and † that which is wanting cannot be numbered.

That which is crooked cannot be made straight; all our knowledge serves only to discover our diseases and miseries, but is oft itself utterly insufficient to heal or remove them; it cannot rectify those confusions and disorders which are either in our own hearts and lives, or in the men and things of the world. That which is wanting, to wit, in our knowledge, and in order to man's complete satisfaction and felicity, cannot be numbered; we know little of what we should or might know, or did know in the state of innocency, or shall know in the future life.

16 I communed with mine own heart, saying, Lo, I am come to great estate, and have gotten [o] more wisdom than all they that have been before me in Jerusalem: yea, my heart † had great experience of wisdom and knowledge.

o 1 Kings 3. 12, 13. & 4. 30. & 10. 7, 23. ch. 2. 9.

I communed with mine own heart; I considered within myself in what condition I was, and what degrees of knowledge I had gained, and whether it was not my ignorance that made me unable to rectify those errors, and supply those wants, and wiser men could do it, though I could not. I am come to great estate, Heb. I am grown great, to wit, in wisdom; or, I have magnified, or greatly enlarged. Have gotten, Heb. have added. As I had a large stock of wisdom infused into me by God, 1 Kings iii. 12; iv. 29, so I have greatly improved it by conversation, and study, and experience. More wisdom than all they that have been before me, whether governors, or priests, or private persons; which was no vain boast, but a known and confessed truth, and profession hereof was necessary to demonstrate his assertion. In Jerusalem; which was then the most eminent place in the world for wisdom and knowledge. Had great experience, Heb. had seen much; which intimates that his knowledge was clear, and certain, and experimental, as that is which we have from our own eyesight. Wisdom and knowledge: two words signifying the same thing, as may be gathered from ver. 18, and from the promiscuous use of them in this book, and in the Proverbs, and elsewhere, and implying all manner of knowledge, Divine or human, speculative or practical, political or philosophical.

p ch. 2. 3, 12. & 7. 23, 25. 1 Thes. 5. 21. 17 [p] And I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly: I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit.

I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly, that I might thoroughly understand the nature and difference of truth and error, of virtue and vice, all things being best understood by contraries, and might discern if there were any opinion or practice amongst men which would give him full satisfaction. Vexation of spirit; or, feeding upon wind, as ver. 14.

q ch. 12. 12.

Grief, or indignation, or displeasure within himself, and against his present condition. Increaseth sorrow; which he doth many ways, partly, because he gets his knowledge with hard and wearisome labour, both of mind and body, with the consumption of his spirits, and shortening and imbitterment of his life; partly, because he is oft deceived with knowledge falsely so called, and oft mistakes errors for truths, and is perplexed with manifold doubts, from which ignorant men are wholly free; partly, because he foresees, and consequently feels, the terror of many miseries which are or are likely to come to pass, which are unobserved by less knowing persons, and which possibly never happen; partly, because he hath the clearer prospect into, and quicker sense of, his own ignorance, and infirmities, and disorders, and withal how vain and ineffectual all his knowledge is for the prevention or removal of them; and partly, because his knowledge is very imperfect and unsatisfying, yet increasing his thirst after more knowledge, and consequently after more dissatisfaction, because instead of that just honour, and delight, and advantage which he expects from it, he meets with nothing but envy, and opposition, and contempt, because his knowledge quickly fades and dies with him, and then leaves him in no better, and possibly in a much worse, condition than the meanest and most unlearned man in the world.

CHAP. II.

Pleasure and mirth also vanity, 1, 2; whether in wine, or buildings and gardens, or servants, or cattle, or silver and gold, or music, 3—8. This the Preacher searched out and found, and none need try after him, 9—12. Wisdom excelleth folly, 13, 14; but the like event is to both, and both are forgotten; therefore is wisdom also vanity, and life hateful, 15—17. Men labour they know not for whom, but the fool enjoyeth the wise man's pains: this rendered his toil irksome, that he reaped no fruit, and yet his days were travail and grief, 18—23. There is nothing better than to enjoy contentedly what God giveth us; and this also is of God, who giveth travail to the sinner, 24—26.

a Luke 12. 19. [a] I SAID in mine heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth, therefore enjoy pleasure: and, behold, [b] this also is vanity.

b Is. 50. 11.

I said in mine heart; being disappointed of my hopes from knowledge, I resolved in my own mind to try another course. I will prove thee, O my soul, I will try whether I cannot make thee happy, with mirth; by allowing to myself the free enjoyment of the present and sensible delights of human life. Enjoy pleasure; take thy fill of pleasure, and expect satisfaction thence. Is vanity; is vain, and unable to make men happy, because sensible pleasures are mean and unsuitable to the noble and heaven-born soul of man, and if excessively used, apter to cloy and glut men than to satisfy them, and are frequently mixed with, and most commonly end in, bitterness, as being the great instruments and occasions of sin, and of all its fatal consequences.

2 [c] I said of laughter, It is mad: and of mirth, What doeth it?

c Prov. 14. 13. ch. 7. 6.

I said of laughter; of excessive mirth, which discovers itself by immoderate laughter, and other outward gestures. It is mad; this is an act and sign of madness, more fit for fools, who know nothing, than for wise men, at least in this sinful, and dangerous, and deplorable state of mankind, which calls for seriousness and sorrow from all considerate persons, in which case it is like the laughter of one in a frenzy; and none but a fool or madman can take satisfaction in such light and frothy pleasures, or expect happiness from them. What doeth it? what good doeth it? or how can it make men happy? I challenge all the epicures in the world to give me a solid and satisfactory answer.

d ch. 1. 17. † Heb. to draw my flesh with wine.

3 [d] I sought in mine heart † to give myself unto wine, yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom; and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven † all the days of their life.

To give myself unto wine; to relax and gratify my flesh with delicious meats and drinks, synecdochically expressed by wine here, as also Prov. ix. 2; Cant. ii. 4, &c., as necessary food is by bread, Amos vii. 12, compared with viii. 11. Yet acquainting my heart with wisdom; yet resolving to use my wisdom; either, 1. To set bounds to my pleasures. Or rather, 2. That I might try whether I could not arrive at satisfaction, by mixing wine and wisdom together, by using wine to sweeten and allay the toils of wisdom, and wisdom to prevent that destruction which many bring upon themselves by intemperate pleasures whilst they seek for satisfaction, that so I might have the comfort without the danger and mischief of pleasures. To lay hold on folly; to pursue and addict myself to carnal pleasures, which was my folly. Till I might see, &c.; till by trying several methods I might find out the true way to contentment and satisfaction, during this mortal life.

4 I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards:

I made me great works; magnificent works for my honour and delight. I built me houses; of which see 1 Kings vii. 1, &c.; ix. 15, &c. I planted me vineyards: see Cant. viii. 11.

5 I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits:

I made me gardens, Heb. paradises, or gardens of pleasure. I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits, mixing pleasure and profit together.

6 I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

I made me pools of water, because the rain there fell but seldom. The wood that bringeth forth trees; the nurseries of young trees newly planted in the orchards, which for the multitude of them were like a wood or forest.

7 I got me servants and maidens, and had † servants born in my house; also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

† Heb. sons of my house.

Born in my house, of my bond-servants, which therefore were a part of my possessions: see 1 Kings x. 8; Ezra ii. 55.

e 1 Kings 9. 28. & 10. 10, 14, 21, &c.

8 [e] I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as † musical instruments, and that of all sorts.

The peculiar treasure of kings; either, 1. Vast riches, answerable to the state of a king. Or, 2. The greatest jewels and rarities of other kings, which they gave to me either as a tribute, or by way of present; of which see 1 Kings iv. 21; ix. 11; x. 2, 10. Of the provinces; which were imposed upon or presented by all the provinces of my dominions. Women singers; whose voices were more sweet than the men's. And the delights of the sons of men; either, 1. All other delightful things. Or, 2. That in which men generally delight, to wit, musical instruments, as it follows.

9 So [f] I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

I was great, in riches, and power, and glory. Also my wisdom remained with me; as yet I was not wholly besotted and seduced from God by these things, as I was afterwards; I still had the use of my reason, whereby I was capable of searching after and finding satisfaction, if it was to be had in those things.

Whatsoever mine eyes desired; whatsoever was grateful to my senses, or my heart desired. He ascribes desire to the eyes, because the sight of the eyes is the usual and powerful incentive of desires; of which see Josh. vii. 21; Job xxxi. 1; Matt. v. 28. I kept not from them; I denied myself nothing, at least of lawful delights, but went to the very utmost bounds of them; which was the occasion of his falling afterward into sinful pleasures. I withheld not my heart from any joy; as my heart was vehemently set upon pleasure, so I did not resist or curb it therein, but made all possible provisions to gratify it. My heart rejoiced in all my labour; I had the comfort of all my labours, and was not hindered from the free and full enjoyment of them by sickness or war, or any other calamities occurrent. This was my portion of all my labour; this present and temporary enjoyment of them was all the benefit which I could expect or receive from all my labours, so that I made the best of them. I had a heart to use them, which many men through covetousness have not; and I tasted the sweetness of them, which many others cannot do; and therefore if any man could arrive at happiness by this means, I had done it.

h ch. 1. 3, 14.

I made a serious review of my former works and labours, and considered whether I had obtained that satisfaction in them which I designed and expected; and, behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit; I found myself suddenly disappointed and wholly dissatisfied in this course. There was no profit; the pleasure was past and gone, and I was never the better for it, but as empty as before, and had nothing left but sorrowful reflections upon it.

12 ¶ And I turned myself to behold wisdom, [i] and madness, and folly: for what can the man do that cometh after the king? ‖even that which hath been already done.

i ch. 1. 17. & 7. 25. ‖ Or, in those things which have been already done.

I turned myself to behold wisdom, and madness, and folly; of which see chap. i. 17. Being frustrated of my hopes in pleasure, I returned to a second and more serious consideration of my first choice, to see whether there was not more satisfaction to be gotten from wisdom, than what I discovered at my first view. What can the man do, to find out the truth in this matter, to discover the utmost satisfaction which was possibly to be found in pleasures? So this is added as a reason why he gave over the thoughts of pleasures, and directed them to another object, and why he so confidently asserted their vanity from his own particular experience, because he had made the best of them, and it was a vain thing for any private man to expect that from them which could not be found by a king, and such a king, who had so much wisdom to invent, and such vast riches to pursue and enjoy, all imaginary delights, and who had made it his design and business to search this to the bottom. That cometh after the king; that succeeds me in this inquiry. That which hath been already done; as by others in former times, so especially by myself. They can make no new discoveries as to this point.

13 Then I saw † that wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness.

† Heb. that there is an excellency in wisdom more than in folly, &c.

Then I saw; or, yet I saw; for this is added to prevent an objection or mistake. Wisdom excelleth folly; although wisdom is not sufficient to make men truly and perfectly happy, yet it is of a far greater use and excellency than vain pleasures, or any other follies. As far as light excelleth darkness, i. e. vastly and unspeakably. Light is very pleasant and comfortable, and withal of great necessity and singular use to discover the differences of persons and things, to prevent mistakes and dangers, and to direct all a man's paths in the right way; whereas darkness is in itself doleful, and leads men into innumerable confusions, and errors, and miseries.

k Prov. 17. 24. ch. 8. 1.

14 [k]The wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also that [l]one event happeneth to them all.

l Ps. 49. 10. ch. 9. 2, 3, 11.

Are in his head; in their proper place, and therefore they can see, which they could not do if they were out of his head. He hath the use of his eyes and reason, and sees his way, and orders all his affairs with discretion, and foresees, and so avoids, many dangers and mischiefs. Walketh in darkness; manageth his affairs ignorantly, rashly, and foolishly, whereby he showeth that his eyes are not in his head, but in his heels, or, as it is expressed, Prov. xvii. 24, in the ends of the earth. And; or, yet; notwithstanding this excellency of wisdom above folly for our conduct in the matters of this life, yet at last they both come to one end. One event happeneth to them all; both are subject to the same calamities, and to death itself, which utterly takes away all difference between them.

15 Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it †happeneth even to me; and why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity.

† Heb. happeneth to me, even to me.

Why was I then more wise? what benefit have I by my wisdom? or, to what purpose did I desire and take so much pains for wisdom?

16 For there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is in the days to come shall all be forgotten. And how dieth the wise man? as the fool.

There is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; their name and memory, though it may flourish for a season among some men, yet it will not last for ever, but will in a little time be worn out; as we see in most of the wise men of former ages, whose very names, together with all their monuments, are utterly lost, as hath been oft observed and bewailed by learned writers in several ages. As the fool; he must die as certainly as the fool, and after death be as little remembered and honoured.

17 Therefore I hated life; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

I hated life; my life, though accompanied with so much honour, and pleasure, and wisdom, was a burden to me, and I was apt to wish either that I had never been born, or that I might speedily die. The work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me; all human designs and works are so far from yielding me that satisfaction which I expected, that the consideration of them increaseth my discontent.

18 ¶ Yea, I hated all my labour which I had †taken under the sun: because [m]I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me.

m Ps. 49. 10.

I hated all my labour which I had taken under the sun; all these riches and buildings, and other fruits of my labour, were the matter of my repentance, and aggravations of my misery, because I must, and that everlastingly, part with them, and leave them all behind me.

19 And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have shewed myself wise under the sun. This is also vanity.

A fool; who will undo all that I have done, and turn the effects of my wisdom into instruments of his folly, and occasions of ruin. Some think he had such an opinion of Rehoboam.

20 Therefore I went about to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.

I gave myself up to despondency, and despair of ever reaping that satisfaction which I promised to myself.

21 For there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he †leave it for his portion. This also is vanity and a great evil.

Whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; who useth great industry, and prudence, and justice too, in the management of his affairs, and therefore might as confidently expect God's blessing, and the comfort of his labours, as any other man. That hath not laboured therein, so as I have done; who hath spent his days in sloth and folly. A great evil; a great disorder in itself, and a great disgrace to this world, and a great torment to a considering mind.

22 [n]For what hath man of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the sun?

n ch. 1. 3. & 3. 9.

What comfort or benefit remains to any man after this short and frail life is once ended? or, what advantage hath he by all his labours above him who never laboured, and yet enjoyeth all the fruits of his labours?

23 For all his days are [o]sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.

o Job 5. 7. & 14. 1.

For all his days are sorrows; or, though all his days were sorrows, i. e. full of sorrows. For this seems added to aggravate the evil mentioned in the foregoing verse. Though he took great and unwearied pains all his days, yet after death he hath no more benefit by it than another man hath. His travail grief; the toils of his body are, or were, accompanied with the vexations of his mind. Taketh not rest in the night; either because his mind is distracted, or his sleep broken, with perplexing cares and fears.

24 ¶ [p]There is nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink, and that he ‖should make his soul enjoy good in his labour. This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God.

There is nothing better for a man; or, Is there any thing better for a man? which implies that there is nothing better, to wit, for man's present comfort and satisfaction; this is the chief, and indeed the only, considerable benefit of his labours. That he should make his soul enjoy good; that he should thankfully take, and freely and cheerfully enjoy, the comforts which God gives him. That it was from the hand of God; that this also is a singular gift of God, and not to be procured by a man's own wisdom or diligence.

25 For who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

Who can more freely and fully enjoy the comforts of this life than I did? This verse is added to confirm what he said in the foregoing verse from his own experience, which was the more considerable, because no man ever was a more capable judge of these matters, none could either have more creature-comforts, or more addict himself to the enjoyment of them, or improve them to better advantage, than he did; and therefore he could best tell what was the greatest good to be found in them, and whether they were able of themselves, without God's special gift, to yield a man satisfaction. Who else can hasten hereunto, to wit, to the procuring and enjoying of them? who can pursue them with more diligence, or obtain them with more speed and readiness, or embrace them with more greediness and alacrity?

26 For God giveth to a man that is good †in his sight wisdom, and knowledge, and joy: but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather and to heap up, q Job 27. 16, 17. Prov. 28. 8. that [q]he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

That is good in his sight; who not only seems to be good to men, as many bad men do, but is really and sincerely good. Or, who pleaseth him, as this phrase is rendered, Eccles. vii. 26, and oft elsewhere; whereby he seems to intimate the reason why he found no more comfort in his labours, because his ways had been very displeasing to God, and therefore God justly denied him that gift. Wisdom and knowledge, to direct him how to use his comforts aright, that so they may be blessings, and not snares and curses to him. Joy; a thankful and contented mind with his portion. He giveth travail, to gather and to heap up; he giveth him up to insatiable desires, and wearisome labours, to little or no purpose. That he may give to him that is good before God; that he may have no comfort in them, but leave them to others, yea, to such as he least expected or desired, to good and virtuous men, into whose hands his estate falls by the wise and all-disposing providence of God.

CHAP. III.

Every thing hath its time; in which, to enjoy it, and therewith do good to others, is our good, 1—13. God doth all according to his decree that we should fear him, and there is nothing new, 14, 15. The vanity of unjust judgment; God is the great Judge of all, 16, 17; and he will make men know that they are here but as brute beasts, 18—22.

a ver. 17. ch. 8. 6. TO every thing there is a season, and a [a]time to every purpose under the heaven:

A season; a certain time appointed by God for its being and continuance, which no human wit or providence can prevent or alter. And by virtue of this appointment or decree of God, all the vicissitudes and changes which happen in the world, whether comforts or calamities, do come to pass; which is here added, partly, to prove what he last said, chap. ii. 24, 26, that both the free and comfortable enjoyment of the creatures which some have, and the crosses and vexations which others have with them, are from the hand and counsel of God; partly, to prove the principal proposition of the book, that all things below are vain, and happiness is not to be found in them, because of their great uncertainty, and mutability, and transitoriness, and because they are so much out of the reach and power of men, and wholly in the disposal of another, to wit, God, who doth either give or take them away, either sweeten or imbitter them, as it pleaseth him; and partly, to bring the minds of men into a quiet and cheerful dependence upon God's providence, and submission to his will, and a state of preparation for all events. To every purpose, or will, or desire, to wit, of man; to all men's designs, attempts, and businesses. Not only natural, but even the free and voluntary actions of men, are ordered and disposed by God to accomplish his own purpose. But it must be considered, that he doth not here speak of a time allowed by God, wherein all the following things may lawfully be done, which is wholly besides his scope and business; but only of a time fixed by God, in which they would or should be done.

+ Heb. to bear. b Heb. 9. 27. 2 A time †to be born, and [b]a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted;

A time to die; a certain period unknown to man, but fixed by God, in which a man must unavoidably die; of which see Job xiv. 5; John xiii. 1. A time to plant; wherein God inclines a man's heart to planting.

3 A time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up;

A time to kill; when a man shall die a violent death, either by chance, as Exod. xxi. 13, or by the sentence of the magistrate, or by the hands of murderers. A time to heal; when he who seemed to be mortally wounded shall be healed and restored. A time to break down; when houses shall be demolished, either by the fancy of the owner, or by the rage of other men, or otherwise.

4 A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance;

A time to weep; when men shall have just occasion for weeping and mourning.

5 A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace, and [c]a time †to refrain from embracing;

c Joel 2. 16. 1 Cor. 7. 5. + Heb. to be far from.

A time to cast away stones; which were brought together in order to the building of a wall or house, but are now cast away, either because the man who gathered them hath changed his mind, and desists from his project, or by other causes or accidents. A time to embrace; when persons shall enter into friendship, and perform all friendly offices one to another. A time to refrain from embracing; either through alienation of affections, or grievous calamities. See Joel ii. 16; 1 Cor. vii. 5.

6 A time to ‖get, and a time to lose; a time to keep, and a time to cast away;

‖ Or. seek.

A time to lose; when men shall lose their estates, either by God's providence, or by their own choice. A time to cast away; when a man shall cast away his goods voluntarily, as in a storm to save his life, as Jonah i. 5; Acts xxvii. 18, 19; or out of love and obedience to God, as Matt. x. 37, 39; Heb. x. 34.

7 A time to rend, and a time to sew; [d]a time to keep silence, and a time to speak;

d Amos 5. 13.

A time to rend; when men shall rend their garments, as they did in great and sudden griefs, as Gen. xxxvii. 29; Joel ii. 13. A time to keep silence; wherein men will or shall be silent, either through grief, as Job ii. 12, 13, or by sickness or weakness, or because God denies a man ability to utter his mind.

8 A time to love, and a time to [e]hate; a time of war, and a time of peace.

e Luke 14. 26.

A time to love; when God will stir up the affection of love, or give occasion for the exercise or discovery of it to others.

9 [f]What profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth?

f ch. 1. 3.

Seeing then all actions and events in the world are out of man's power, and no man can at any time do or enjoy any thing at his pleasure, but only what and when God pleaseth, as hath been now shown in many particulars, and it is as true and certain in all others, hence it follows that all men's labours, of themselves, and without God's help and blessing, are unprofitable, and utterly insufficient to make them happy.

10 [g]I have seen the travail, which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it.

g ch. 1. 13.

I have seen, I have diligently observed and considered upon this occasion, the travail, or the occupation or business, men's various employments, and the differing successes of them, which God hath given to the sons of men; either, 1. Which God hath imposed upon men as their duty; and therefore men must labour, although it brings them no profit, as was now said. Or, 2. Which God hath inflicted upon mankind as a just punishment for their sins; to which therefore men ought quietly to submit. To be exercised in it; that hereby they might have constant matter of exercise for their diligence, and patience, and submission to God's will and providence, and for all other graces. Or, that they might be afflicted or humbled therewith, as the same phrase is rendered by divers, Eccles. i. 13.

11 He hath made every thing beautiful in his time: also he hath set the world in their heart, so that [h]no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end.

h ch. 8. 17. Rom. 11. 33.

He hath made every thing beautiful in his time: this seems to be added as an apology for God's providence, notwithstanding all the contrary events and confusions which are in the world. He (i. e. God, expressed in the last clause of the verse) hath made (or doth make or do, by his providence in the government of the world) every thing (which he doth either immediately, or by the ministry of men or other creatures, for God worketh in and with all his creatures in all their actions, as is agreed by divines and philosophers) beautiful (decently and conveniently, so that, all things considered, it could not have been done better) in his time; in the time which he had appointed, or which he saw most proper and fit for it; or, in its time or season, when it was most fit to be done. Many events seem to men's shallow and perverse judgments, at least for a time, to be very irregular and unbecoming, as when wicked men prosper in their impious and unrighteous enterprises, and good men are sorely oppressed and afflicted, and that for righteousness' sake; but when men shall come thoroughly to understand God's works, and the whole frame and contexture of them, and to see the end of them, they will then say that all things were done most wisely and most seasonably; whereof we have eminent instances in Joseph, and David, and Mordecai, and the Jews of his time. He hath set the world in their heart, i. e. in the hearts of men, as the following words show, where man is expressed. The sense is either, 1. Although all God's works are beautiful, yet men do not discern the beauty of them, because the world is in their hearts; their minds are so busied and distracted with the thoughts, and cares, and love, and business of this world, that they have neither leisure nor heart seriously to study God's works. But this inordinate love of the present world comes from man's own corruption, and not from God; and therefore it seems harsh to impute it to God, and improbable that Solomon would have phrased it thus, that God hath set or put the world, i. e. worldly lusts, in men's hearts. Or, 2. As God's works are beautiful in themselves, so men are capable of discerning the beauty of them, because God hath set the world in men's hearts; he hath exposed the world, and all his dispensations in the world, unto the view of men's minds; both because he hath wrought his works so evidently and publicly, that men might easily observe them; and because he hath given men reason whereby they may discover the wisdom and beauty of all God's works, if they diligently apply themselves to the study of them. So that no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end: so this is another reason why men do not discern the beauty of God's works, because they do not see the whole frame or course of them from the beginning to the end, but only some small parcels or fragments of them; the eminent works of God being oft begun in one age, and finished in another. Or, yet so that, &c. Or, except that (as this phrase properly signifies, and is elsewhere used) no man can find out, &c. Thus it is an exception to the next foregoing clause, and the sense is, It is true God hath put the world into men's hearts, or made them capable of observing all events and dispensations of God in the world; but this is to be understood with a limitation, because there are some more mysterious works of God which no man can fully understand, because he cannot search them out through or from the beginning to the end.

i ver. 22. 12 [i]I know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and to do good in his life.

I know, by clear reason, and my own long and certain experience, that there is no good, no other satisfaction or felicity which a man can enjoy, in them, in creatures or worldly enjoyments. To do good; either, 1. To himself, as it is fully expressed, Psal. xlix. 18. Or, 2. To others; to employ them in acts of charity and liberality towards others. Or, 3. Towards God; to use them, and to live in the fear of God, which is necessary to the happiness of this as well as of the other life.

k ch. 2. 24. 13 And also [k]that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.

That every man should eat and drink, i. e. hath power or a heart to use what God hath given him, as it is expressed, chap. vi. 2. It is the gift of God; of which see the notes on chap. ii. 24.

1 Jam. 1. 17. 14 I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: [l]nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.

Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever; all God's counsels or decrees are eternal and unchangeable, and his providence works effectually, so as men cannot resist or hinder it. Nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it; men can neither do any thing besides or against God's counsel and providence, nor hinder any work or act of it. That men should fear before him; not that men should make this an occasion of despair, or idleness, or dissoluteness, as some abuse this doctrine, but that, by the consideration of his sovereign and irresistible power in the disposal of all persons and things as pleaseth him, men should learn to trust in him, to submit to him, to fear to offend or rebel against him, and more carefully and industriously to study to please him.

m ch. 1. 9. † Heb. that which is driven away. 15 [m]That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth †that which is past.

That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; things past, present, and to come, are all of the same nature, and all ordered in the same manner by one constant counsel and settled course in all parts and ages of the world. There is a continual return of the same motions and influences of the heavenly bodies, of the same seasons of the year, and a constant succession of new generations of men and beasts, but all of the same quality. The same thing in substance was said before, chap. i. 9. Requireth, i. e. reneweth, as this word is used, Job iii. 4. That which is past; that time and those things which are irrecoverably gone in themselves, but are as it were recalled, because others of the same kind arise and come in their stead. Heb. that which is driven away with a mighty force, as time present is violently thrust away by that which comes after it.

n ch. 5. 8. 16 ¶ And moreover [n]I saw under the sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there.

This is mentioned, either, 1. As another vanity, to wit, the vanity of honour and power, which is so oft an instrument of injustice and oppression. Or rather, 2. As another argument of the vanity of worldly things, or a hinderance of that comfort which men expect in this life, because they are oppressed by their rulers. I saw; I perceived it by information from others, and by my own observation. The place of judgment; in the thrones of princes and tribunals of magistrates, where judgment should be duly executed. Wickedness was there; judgment was perverted, the guilty acquitted, and the innocent condemned. The place of righteousness; in which righteousness should be found and should dwell, if it were banished from all other places.

o Rom. 2. 6, 7, 8. 2 Cor. 5. 10. 2 Thes. 1. 6, 7. p ver. 1. 17 I said in mine heart, [o]God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for [p]there is a time there for every purpose and for every work.

I said in mine heart, mine heart was sorely grieved at this disorder, but I quieted it with this consideration, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked; absolving and saving the just, and condemning the wicked. A time, fixed by God's unalterable decree. He implies, that as this life is the sinner's time in which he doth whatsoever seemeth good in his own eyes, so God will have his time to reckon with them, and rectify all these disorders. There; in the presence or at the judgment-seat of God; which is easily understood out of the foregoing words, the relative being put for the antecedent, as it is Numb. vii. 89; Esth. ix. 25; Job i. 21; Psal. xiv. 5; cxiv. 2. Or it may be rendered then, as this particle is used, Psal. xiv. 5; Hos. ii. 15, and as it is usual in other authors for adverbs of place to be put for adverbs of time. For every purpose, and for every work; for the examining and judging, not only all men's practices or open actions, but also all their secret thoughts and purposes; all the evil which they either did, or designed, or desired, or endeavoured to do. The design of this verse is partly to strike a terror into oppressing potentates, and partly to satisfy the doubts and support the spirits of good men, who are oppressed in this life.

18 I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, ‖that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts.

I said in my heart; and further I considered with myself. Concerning the estate of the sons of men; concerning their condition and deportment in this present world. That God might manifest them; God suffers these horrible disorders among men, expressed ver. 16, that he might discover men to themselves, and by permitting these actions show what strange creatures they are, and what vile hearts they have, which men would not otherwise understand or believe. See 2 Kings viii. 13, 14. That they themselves are beasts, Heb. that they are beasts to themselves; either, 1. One to another, devouring and destroying one another. Or, 2. In their own judgment, or themselves being judges; that although God made them men or reasonable creatures, yet they have made themselves beasts by their brutish practices; and that men, considered only with respect unto the present life, which is the only thing valued and regarded by most men, and the vanity whereof is the principal subject of this book, are as vain and miserable creatures as the beasts themselves, the great differences between men and beasts being such as respect the other life. For men seem here to be called beasts in both these respects, and the latter he prosecutes more largely in the following verses.

q Ps. 49. 12, 20. & 73. 22. ch. 2. 16.

19 [q]For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity.

Befalleth beasts; they are subject to the same diseases, pains, and casualties. So dieth the other; as certainly, and no less painfully. One breath; one breath of life, which is in their nostrils; one and the same living soul, by which the beasts perform the same vital and animal operations. For he speaks not here of man's rational and immortal spirit, nor of the future life. A man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, in respect of the present life and sensible things. Nay, the beasts have quicker senses than men, and therefore enjoy more pleasure in those things, and that with less dangers and mischief, than men do.

20 All go unto one place; [r]all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.

All go unto one place; to the earth, as it is expressed, ver. 21, out of which they were both taken. All turn to dust again; which is meant only of their bodies, as it is explained, Eccles. xii. 7.

s ch. 12. 7. + Heb. of the sons of man. + Heb. is ascending.

21 [s]Who knoweth the spirit † of man that † goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?

It might be objected, that the conditions of men and beasts are vastly differing, because man's spirit goeth upward to God, chap. xii. 7, but the spirit of a beast goeth downward, together with its body, and perisheth with it. To this he answers, Who knoweth this? which is not to be understood as if no man did know it, or as if the thing were utterly uncertain and unknown, for he knew it, and positively affirms it, chap. xii. 7; but that few know it; as the same manner of expression is understood, Prov. xxxi. 10, Who can find? Isa. liii. 1, Who hath believed? &c.; which note the scarcity or difficulty, but not the nullity or impossibility of the thing. Besides, he seems here to speak not so much of a speculative as of a practical knowledge, as such words are most commonly used. Who considers or regards this, or layeth it to heart? True it is, there is such a difference, which also is known and believed by wise and good men; but the generality of mankind never mind it; their hearts are wholly set upon this life, and upon present and sensible things, and they place all their hopes and happiness in them, and take no thought nor care for the things of the future and invisible world. And as to them with whom Solomon hath to do in this matter, the argument is strong and good, being, as logicians call it, an argument to the man; and there is no considerable difference between sensual men and beasts, because their affections are set upon the same objects, and both of them are partakers of the same sensual satisfactions, and subject to the same sensual pains and miseries, and their hopes and felicity perish together, to wit, at death, and therefore such men are no more happy than the beasts that perish. Others understand it thus, Who knoweth this? to wit, by sense or experience, or merely by his own reason, or without the help of Divine revelation. But, with the leave of so many worthy interpreters, and with submission to better judgments, the former seems to be the truer sense.

22 [t]Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better, than that a man should rejoice in his own works; for [u]that is his portion: [x]for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?

x ch. 6. 12. & 8. 7. & 10. 14.

There is nothing better, to wit, for a man's present satisfaction, and the happiness of this life, than that a man should rejoice in his own works; that he comfortably enjoy what God hath given him, and not disquiet himself with cares about future events. He seems to speak this, not in the person of an epicure, but as his own judgment, which also he declareth, chap. ii. 24; v. 18, 19; viii. 15. That is his portion; this is the benefit of his labours; he hath no more than he useth, for what he leaveth behind him is not his, but another man's. Who shall bring him to see what shall be after him? when once he is dead he shall never return into this life to see into whose hands his estate falls, and how it is either used or abused; nor is he at all concerned in those matters.

CHAP. IV.

The vanity of oppression, by reason of which the dead and the unborn are better than the living, 1—3. Of envy, sloth, quarrel, 4—6. Of covetousness and selfishness, 7, 8. The advantage of society and friendship, 9—12. The poor better than foolish kings, 13. He is advanced, whilst one born king is made poor, 14. The people never contented, but rejoicing in changes, 15, 16.

SO I returned, and considered all the [a]oppressions that are done under the sun: and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the † side of their oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter.

I considered again more seriously all the oppressions that are done under the sun, whether by supreme magistrates or judges, of which he spake chap. iii. 16, or by any other potent persons. They had no comforter; none afforded them either pity or succour, either out of a selfish and barbarous disposition, or for fear of exposing themselves thereby to the same injuries. There was power, both in themselves, and because most men were ready to join with the strongest and safest side. So they were utterly unable to deliver themselves, and, as it follows, none else could or would do it. They had no comforter; which is repeated as an argument both of the great inhumanity of men towards others in calamity, and of the extreme misery of oppressed persons.

2 [b]Wherefore I praised the dead which are already dead more than the living which are yet alive.

b Job 3. 17, &c.

I praised; I judged them more happy, or less miserable; which he seems to deliver not only as the judgment of the flesh, or of the sense, or of men in misery, as this is commonly understood, but as his own judgment. For this is most true and certain, that setting aside the advantage which this life gives him for the concerns of the future life, which Solomon doth not meddle with in the present debate, and considering the uncertainty, and vanity, and manifold vexations of mind, and outward calamities of the present life, a wise man would not account it worth his while to live, and would choose death rather than life. The dead which are already dead; those which are quite dead; who possibly are here opposed to them that, in respect of their deplorable and desperate condition, are even whilst they live called dead men, Isa. xxvi. 19, and said to die daily, 1 Cor. xv. 31. The living which are yet alive; which languish under their pressures, of whom we can only say, as we use to speak of dying men, They are alive, and that is all.

c Job 3. 11, 16, 21. ch. 6. 3.

3 c Yea, better is he than both they, which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun.

Which hath not yet been; who was never born. How this is true, see on the foregoing verse. Not seen, i. e. not felt; for as seeing good is put for enjoying it, chap. ii. 24, so seeing evil is put for suffering it, as hath been more than once observed.

4 ¶ Again, I considered all travail, and †every right work, that †for this a man is envied of his neighbour. This is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

Every right work; all the worthy designs and complete works of wise and virtuous men. Is envied of his neighbour; instead of that honour and recompence which he deserves, he meets with nothing but envy and obloquy, and many evil fruits thereof.

d Prov. 6. 10. & 24. 33.

5 d The fool foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh.

Foldeth his hands together; is careless and idle, which is the signification of this gesture, Prov. vi. 10; xix. 24; xxvi. 15. Perceiving that diligence is attended with envy, ver. 4, he, like a fool, runs into the other extreme. Eateth his own flesh; wasteth his substance, and bringeth himself to poverty, whereby his very flesh pineth away for want of bread, and he is reduced to skin and bone; and if he have any flesh left, he is ready to eat it through extremity of hunger.

e Prov. 15. 16, 17. & 16. 8.

6 e Better is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit.

These are the words, either, 1. Of the sluggard making this apology for his idleness, that his little with ease, is better than great riches got with much trouble. Or, 2. Of Solomon, who elsewhere speaks to the same purpose, as Prov. xv. 16, 17; xvii. 1, and here proposeth it as a good antidote against the vanity of immoderate cares and labours for worldly goods, against which he industriously directs his speeches in divers places of this book; and particularly as a seasonable precaution against the sin of covetousness, of which he speaks in the following passage.

7 ¶ Then I returned, and I saw vanity under the sun.

8 There is one alone, and there is not a second; yea, he hath neither child nor brother: yet is there no end of all his labour; neither is his f eye satisfied with riches; g neither saith he, For whom do I labour, and bereave my soul of good? This is also vanity, yea, it is a sore travail.

f Prov. 27. 20. 1 John 2. 16. g Ps. 39. 6.

One alone; either, 1. Who lives by himself, as grudging that any other should partake of his provisions. Or rather, 2. Who hath none but himself to care and labour for, as the next words explain it. He hath neither child nor brother, to whom he may leave his vast estate. Yet is there no end of all his labour; he lives in perpetual restlessness and excessive toils. His eye, i. e. his covetous mind or desire, fitly expressed by the eye, partly because that is the incentive of this sin, Josh. vii. 21; and partly because he hath no good by his riches, saving the beholding of them with his eyes, as it is affirmed, Eccles. v. 11, compared with ii. 10; 1 John ii. 16. Neither saith he, within himself; he considers nothing but how he may get more and more. For whom do I labour? having no posterity nor kindred to enjoy it, as was now said. Shall I take all this pains for a stranger, possibly for an enemy, who will reap the fruit of all my labours? Bereave my soul of good; deny myself those comforts and conveniencies which God hath allowed unto me. A sore travail; a dreadful judgment and misery as well as a great sin.

9 ¶ Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour.

Two, who live together in any kind of society, and join their powers together in any enterprises; which he opposeth to that humour of the covetous man, who desired to live alone, as was now said. A good reward for their labour; both have great benefit by such combinations and conjunctions of their counsels and abilities, whereby they do exceedingly support, and encourage, and strengthen one another, and effect many things which neither of them alone could do.

10 For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up.

They; one of them, the plural being put for the singular, as Jonah i. 5; Matt. xxi. 7; 1 Tim. ii. 15. Or both of them successively. Fall, in any kind, into any mistakes and errors, or sins, or dangers and distresses. Will lift up his fellow; hold him up if he be falling, or raise him up if he be fallen.

11 Again, if two lie together, then they have heat: but how can one be warm alone?

They have heat; they will be sooner warm in a cold bed and cold season. How can one be warm alone? not so soon nor so thoroughly.

12 And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him; and a threefold cord is not quickly broken.

Against him; against either of them. A threefold cord is not quickly broken; if a man have not only one, but two or more friends, he is so much the safer and the happier.

13 ¶ Better is a poor and a wise child than an old and foolish king, † who will no more be admonished.

† Heb. who knoweth not to be admonished.

Better; more happy. Now he proceeds to another vanity, even that of honour and power, and of the highest places. A poor child; who is doubly contemptible, both for his age, and for his poverty. An old king; venerable both for his age and gravity, and for his royal dignity. So that the comparison is made with the greatest disadvantage that may be. Who will no more be admonished; who hath neither wisdom to govern himself, nor to receive the counsels or admonitions of wiser men, but is foolish, and wilful, and incorrigible.

Out of prison, into which he was cast for his poverty and debt, he, the poor and wise child, cometh to reign; is ofttimes advanced by his wisdom to the highest power and dignity; which was the case of Joseph, and Mordecai, and many others. He that is born in his kingdom, that old king, who was born of the royal race, and had possessed his kingdom for a long time, becometh poor; is deprived of his kingdom, either by the rebellion of his subjects provoked by his folly, or by the power of some other and wiser prince.

15 I considered all the living which walk under the sun, with the second child that shall stand up in his stead.

I considered all the living; the general disposition or humour of common people in all kingdoms, that they are fickle and unconstant, weary of their old governors, and desirous of changes. Which walk under the sun: this is a periphrasis, or description of living and mortal men, like that Eccles. vii. 11, that see the sun. With the second child: these words may be joined either, 1. With those which walk, or, that they walk under the sun, (i. e. upon the earth,) with the second child, i. e. follow, and favour, and worship him as the rising sun, upon whom the eyes and hopes of most people are fixed. Or, 2. With the first words, I considered all the living which walk under the sun, i. e. the temper of all subjects or people, together with the condition of the second child; which may be understood either, 1. In general, of a king's child, or son and heir, who is called second, in respect of his father, whose successor he is to be. Or, 2. That wise and poor child mentioned ver. 13, who is said to come to reign, ver. 14, and may well be called the second to the old and foolish king who became poor, ver. 15, being deposed from his kingdom, whom he succeeds, being put in his place either by the humour of the people, or by some higher power. Stand up, i. e. arise to reign, as that phrase signifies, Dan. viii. 22, 23; xi. 2, 3, 7, 20, 21.

16 There is no end of all the people, even of all that have been before them: they also that come after shall not rejoice in him. Surely this also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

There is no end of all the people: the sense is either, 1. The people which have this humour are without end, or innumerable, as this phrase signifies, Job xxii. 5; Isa. ii. 7; ix. 7. Or, 2. This humour of the common people hath no end, but passeth from one generation to another; they ever were, and are, and will be unstable and restless, and given to change; which sense the following words seem to favour. Before them; either, 1. Before the two kings above mentioned, the father and the son, or the predecessor and successor. All those who stood or desired to stand in their presence, and waited upon them, as this phrase is used, 2 Sam. xvi. 19; 1 Kings x. 8. Or rather, 2. Before the present generation of subjects, who earnestly desired and promoted the change of government here expressed; for these are evidently opposed to them that come after, which all interpreters understand of the people, not of the kings. And so here are three generations of people noted, the authors of the present change, and their parents, and their children, and all are observed to have the same inclinations in these matters. Shall not rejoice in him; they shall be as weary of the successor, though a wise and worthy prince, as their parents were of his foolish predecessor; the reason whereof is partly from that itch of novelty and curiosity which is natural and common to mankind, and partly from their vain and foolish hopes of advantage from such changes.

CHAP. V.

Vanities in divine matters, 1—7. In murmuring and repining, 8. In riches and covetousness, 9, 10; for riches rob men of ease, 11, 12, procure their death, 13, fly away, 14, cannot be carried with them into the grave, 15—17. A contented life best: this is the gift of God, 18—20.

The seven first verses of this chapter are inserted partly as the only effectual remedy against all the foregoing vanities, and partly as a caution to take heed of bringing vanity into the service of God, or of worshipping God vainly and foolishly.

a See Ex. 3. 5. Is. 1. 12, &c. b 1 Sam. 15. 22. Ps. 50. 8. Prov. 15. 8. & 21. 27. Hos. 6. 6.

KEEP [a] thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, [b] than to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil.

Keep thy foot; the feet of thy soul, which are the thoughts and affections, by which men go to God, and walk or converse with him. Make straight steps. See that your hearts be purged from sin, and prepared and furnished with all graces or necessary qualifications, as good intention, reverence, humility, &c. It is a metaphor from one that walketh in a very slippery path, in which there needs more than ordinary care to keep him from falling. The house of God; the place of God's solemn and public worship, whether the temple or synagogue. Be more ready, Heb. more near, more forward and inclinable. Prefer this duty before the following. To hear; to hearken to and obey God's word, there read and preached by the priests or prophets; for hearing is very frequently put in Scripture for obeying. The sacrifice of fools; such as foolish and wicked men use to offer, who vainly think to please God with the multitude and costliness of their sacrifices without true piety or obedience. They consider not that they do evil; they are not sensible of the great sinfulness of such thoughts and practices, but, like fools, think they do God good service; which is implied, as is usual in such expressions.

2 Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any ‖ thing before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth: therefore let thy words [c] be few.

c Prov. 10. 19. Matt. 6. 7.

Be not rash with thy mouth; speak not without good understanding and due consideration. Let not thine heart be hasty; do not give way to every sudden motion of thine heart, nor suffer it to break out of thy lips till thou hast well weighed it. To utter any thing before God; either, 1. In prayers directed to him. Or, 2. In solemn vows and promises made in God's presence; which were very much in use in those times, and of which he speaks in the following verses, where he presseth us to pay our vows when we have made them, as here he seems to caution us in making them. God is in heaven; is a God of infinite majesty, not to be despised or abused; of infinite holiness, not to be polluted or offended; of infinite knowledge, observing all our words and carriages, not to be deceived. Thou upon earth; thou art a poor earth-worm, infinitely below him, and therefore shouldst stand in awe of him, and fear to offend him. Let thy words be few; either 1. In prayer. Use not vain repetitions nor multitude of words in prayer, as if they were necessary to inform God of thy state, or to prevail with God to grant thy requests, or as if thou shouldst certainly be heard upon that very account, as Christ also cautions us, Matt. vi. 7. For otherwise it is not unlawful, nay, sometimes it is a duty, to use long prayers, and consequently many words, and to repeat the same words in prayer, as is manifest from Neh. ix. 3; Dan. ix. 18, 19; Matt. xxvi. 44; Luke vi. 12, and many other places. Or, 2. In vowing. Be not too prodigal in making more vows and promises than thou art either able or willing and resolved to perform, remembering that God looks down from heaven, and heareth all thy vows, and expects a punctual accomplishment of them. Compare the notes on ver. 3.

3 For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and [d] a fool's voice is known by multitude of words.

d Prov. 10. 19.

When men's minds are distracted and oppressed with too much business in the day, they dream of it in the night. A fool's voice is known; it discovers the man to be a foolish, and rash, and inconsiderate man. By multitude of words; either, 1. In prayer. Or, 2. In vowing, i. e. by making many rash vows, of which he speaks in ver. 4—6, and then returns to the mention of multitude of dreams and many words, ver. 7, which verse may be a comment upon this, and which makes it probable that both that and this verse are to be understood of vows rather than of prayers.

4 [e] When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: [f] pay that which thou hast vowed.

e Num. 30. 2. Deut. 23. 21, 22, 23. Ps. 50. 14. & 76. 11.
f Ps. 66. 13, 14.

A vow; which is a solemn promise, whereby a man binds himself to do something which is in his power to do. Defer not to pay it; perform it whilst the sense of thine obligation is fresh and strong upon thee, lest either thou seem to repent of thy promises, or lest delays end in denials and resolutions of non-performance. See Numb. xxx. 2; Deut. xxiii. 21; Psal. lxvi. 13, 14; lxxvi. 11. In fools; in hypocritical and perfidious persons, who, when they are in distress, make liberal vows, and when the danger is past, neglect and break them; whom he calls fools, partly because it is the highest folly to despise and provoke, to think to mock and deceive, the all-seeing and almighty God; and partly in opposition to the contrary opinion of such persons, who think they deal wisely and cunningly in serving themselves of God, by getting the advantage or deliverance which they desire by making such vows, and yet avoiding the inconvenience and charge of payment when once the work is done, whereas nothing is more impious or ridiculous than such an imagination.

5 [g] Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.

g Prov. 20. 25. Acts 5. 4.

That thou shouldest not vow; for this was no sin, because men are free to make such vows, or not to make them, as they think fit. See Numb. xxx. 3, &c.; Deut. xxiii. 22; Acts v. 4. But having vowed we cannot forbear payment of them without sin.

6 Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; [h] neither say thou before the angel, that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thine hands?

Suffer not thy mouth, by uttering any rash or foolish vow. Thy flesh, i. e. thyself, the word flesh being oft put for the whole man, as Gen. vi. 12; Isa. xl. 5; Rom. iii. 20, &c. And it seems to have some emphasis here, and to intimate either, 1. That such vows were made upon fleshly or carnal, and not upon spiritual and religious motives. Or rather, 2. That the flesh or corrupt nature of man, which is oft called flesh, was exceeding prone to set itself at ease and liberty from such bonds, and to neglect the chargeable duties of religion. The angel; either, 1. The blessed angels, the singular number being put for the plural, who are present in the public assemblies in which these vows were generally paid, Psal. lxvi. 13, where they observe both the matter and manner of men's religious performances, as appears from 1 Cor. xi. 10, who as they rejoice in the conversion of a sinner, Luke xv. 10, so are displeased with the sins of men, and especially such as are committed in or against the worship of God. Or, 2. Christ, who in the Old Testament is frequently called an angel, as hath been oft noted before, and the Angel of the covenant, Mal. iii. 1, because even then he acted as God's messenger, appearing and speaking to the patriarchs and prophets in his Father's name, as a presignification of his future incarnation, and who is and was in a special manner present in all religious assemblies; and being omniscient and omnipresent, exactly knew and observed all the vows which men made, and whether they did perform or violate them. Or rather, 3. The priest or minister of holy things, who was to require of the people the payment of their vows, to whom all sacrifices for sins of ignorance or errors about vows or other things were to be brought, Lev. v. 4, 5. For such persons are oft called angels, or, as this Hebrew word is commonly rendered, messengers, as Job xxxiii. 23; Mal. ii. 7; Rev. i. 20. And this title seems to be given to the priest here, not without some emphasis, because the vow made to God was paid to the priest as one standing and acting in God's name and stead, and it belonged to the priest, as God's angel or ambassador, to discharge persons from their vows when there was just occasion so to do. That it was an error; I did foolishly and unadvisedly in making such a vow, and therefore I hope God will excuse me, and instead of that which I had vowed, accept of a sacrifice for my ignorance, according to the law for sins of ignorance, Lev. iv. 2; v. 15; Numb. xv. 26. Wherefore should God be angry, why wilt thou provoke God to anger, at thy voice? either, 1. At the vows which thou hast hastily uttered with thy mouth, as he said above. Or rather, 2. At these frivolous excuses, wherewith thou deludest thy own conscience, and vainly imaginest that thou canst deceive God himself. Destroy the work of thine hands; blast all thy contrivances, and labours, and estate gotten by thy labours, and particularly that work or enterprise for the success whereof thou didst make these vows, which being, as thou thinkest, finished, thou refusest to pay thy vows; but know that God can quickly undo that which thou hast done, and plentifully repay thine indignities and injuries offered to him into thine own bosom.

7 For in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vani-
[i] ch. 12. 13. ties: but [i]fear thou God.

There is a great deal of vanity and folly, as in multitude of dreams, which for the most part are vain and insignificant, so also in many words, i. e. in making many vows, whereby a man is exposed to many snares and temptations. Fear thou God; fear the offence and wrath of God, and therefore be sparing in making vows, and just in performing them; whereby he implies that this rashness in vowing, and slackness in performing vows, proceed from the want of a just reverence and dread of the Divine Majesty, who is immediately concerned in these matters.

[k] ch. 3. 16. 8 ¶ If thou [k]seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel † Heb. [q] at the will, or, purpose. [l] Ps. 12. 5. & 58. 11. & 62. 1. not † at the matter: for [l]he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they.

Here is an account of another vanity, and a sovereign antidote against it. Marvel not, as if it were inconsistent with God's wisdom, and justice, and truth to suffer such disorders, or a just cause for any man to throw off that fear and service of God which I have now commended to thee. He that is higher than the highest, the most high God, who is infinitely above the greatest of men, and therefore, if he saw meet, could crush them in an instant, regardeth, not like an idle spectator, but like a judge, who diligently observes and records all these miscarriages, and will so effectually punish them, that neither they shall have any cause of triumph in their former successes, nor good men to be grieved at the remembrance of them. There be higher than they; either, 1. The high and holy angels, who are employed by God in the government of kings and kingdoms, as we read in the Book of Daniel, and elsewhere, and for the defence of God's people, Psal. xxxiv. 7; xci. 11; Heb. i. 14. Or, 2. God; and so it is an emphatical repetition of the same thing, which is frequent in Scripture; there is a higher than they. Or, as the words are by others fitly rendered, the Most High (for plural words are oft understood of God singularly) is above them, and therefore can control them, and will certainly call them to an account.

9 ¶ Moreover the profit of the earth is for all: the king himself is served by the field.

The profit of the earth, the fruits procured from the earth by the skill and labour of the husbandman, is for all; are necessary and beneficial to all men whatsoever. The wise man, after some interruption, returns to his former subject, to discourse of the vanity of great riches, one argument or evidence whereof he seems to mention in this verse, to wit, that the poor labourer enjoyeth the fruits of the earth as well as the greatest monarch, and that the richest man in the world depends as much upon them as the poorest. Is served by the field; is supported by the fruits of the field; or, as many others render it, serves or is a servant to the field, depends upon it, is obliged to see that his fields be tilled and dressed, that he may have subsistence for himself, and for his servants and subjects.

10 He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase: this is also vanity.

The greatest treasures of silver do not satisfy the covetous possessor of it; partly because his mind is insatiable, and his desires are increased by and with gains; partly because silver of itself sannot satisfy his natural desires and necessities as the fruits of the field can do, and the miserable wretch grudgeth to part with his silver, though it be to purchase things needful and convenient for him. That loveth abundance; or, that loveth it (to wit, silver) in abundance; that desires and lays up great treasures.

11 When goods increase, they are increased that eat them: and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?

They are increased that eat them; they require and are more commonly attended with a numerous company of servants, and friends, and retinues to consume them; which is a great torment to a covetous man, of whom he here speaks. What good is there to the owners thereof? what benefit hath he above others, who feed upon his provisions, and enjoy the same comforts which he doth, without his fears, and cares, and troubles about them? The beholding of them with their eyes; either, 1. With a reflection upon his propriety in them. Or, 2. With unlimited freedom. He can go and look upon his bags or chests of silver as long and as oft as he pleaseth, whereas other men are seldom admitted to that prospect, and see only some few of the fruits or purchases of it.

12 The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep.

Is sweet; because he is free from those cares and fears, wherewith the minds of rich men are oft distracted, and their sleep disturbed. Whether he eat little, then his weariness disposeth him to sleep, or much, in which case his healthful constitution and laborious course of life prevents those crudities and indigestions which ofttimes break the sleep of rich men. The abundance, Heb. the fulness, either, 1. Of his diet, which commonly discomposeth their stomachs, and hinders their rest; or, 2. Of wealth, which is commonly attended with many perplexing cares, which disquiet men both by day and by night. The Hebrew word is used in Scripture both ways, and possibly it is thus generally expressed to include both significations.

m ch. 6. 1. 13 [m]There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.

Because they frequently are the instruments and occasions both of their present and eternal destruction, as they feed their pride or luxury, or other hurtful lusts, which waste the body, and shorten the life, and damn the soul; and as they are great temptations to tyrants or thieves, yea, sometimes to relations, or servants, or others, to take away their lives, that they may get their riches.

14 But those riches perish by evil travail: and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

But, or for, or or, or moreover; for this particle is so rendered by divers others, both here and in other places of Scripture. Those riches perish: if they be kept, it is to the owner's hurt; and if not, they are lost to his grief. By evil travail; by some wicked practices, either his own, or of other men; or by some secret hand of God cursing all his enterprises. There is nothing in his hand; either, 1. In the father's power to leave to his son, for whose sake he underwent all those hard labours; which is a great aggravation of his grief and misery. Or, 2. In the son's possession after his father's death.

n Job 1. 21. Ps. 49. 17. 1 Tim. 6. 7. 15 [n]As he came forth of his mother's womb, naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand.

Return to go into the womb or belly of the earth, the common mother of all mankind. See the notes on Job i. 21; Eccles. xii. 7. And return to go, is put for return and go; and going is here put for dying, as Job xvi. 22; Psal. xxxix. 13. This is another vanity: if his estate be neither lost, nor kept to his hurt, but enjoyed by him with safety and comfort all his days, yet when he dies he must leave it behind him, and cannot carry one handful of it with him into another world.

16 And this also is a sore evil, that in all points as he came, so shall he go: and o ch. 1. 3. p Prov. 11. 29. [o]what profit hath he [p]that hath laboured for the wind?

This also, which I have last mentioned and shall now repeat. For the wind; for riches, which are empty and unsatisfying, uncertain and transitory, fleeing away swiftly and strongly, Prov. xxiii. 5, which no man can hold or stay in its course, all which are the properties of the wind. Compare Prov. xi. 29; Hos. xii. 1.

q Ps. 127. 2. 17 All his days also [q]he eateth in darkness, and he hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness.

All his days, to wit, of his life, also he eateth in darkness; he hath no comfort in his estate, but even when he eats, when other men relax their minds, and use freedom and cheerfulness, he doth it with anxiety and discontent, as grudging even at his own necessary expenses, and tormenting himself with cares about getting, and disposing, and keeping his estate. He hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness; when he falls sick, and presageth or feareth his death, he is filled with rage, because he is cut off before he hath accomplished his designs, and because he must leave that wealth and world in which all his hopes and happiness lie, and must go to give up a doleful account to his Judge of all his actions and acquisitions.

r ch. 2. 24. & 3. 12, 13, 22. & 9. 7. & 11. 9. 1 Tim. 6. 17. † Heb. there is a good which is comely, &c. 18 ¶ Behold that which I have seen: [r]† it is good and comely for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun

That which I have seen, i. e. learned by study and experience. Good and comely; good or comfortable to man's self, and comely or amiable in the eyes of other men, as penuriousness is base and dishonourable. His portion, to wit, of worldly goods; for he hath another and a better portion in heaven. This liberty is given to him by God, and this is the best advantage, as to this life, which he can make of them.

19 [t]Every man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice in his labour; this is the gift of God. t ch. 2. 24. & 3. 13. & 6. 2.

Hath given him power, Heb. hath given him the dominion; who is the lord and master of his estate, not a slave to it. Of this and the former verse, see the notes on Eccles. ii. 24; iii. 12, 13. To take his portion to his own use, to use what God hath given him.

‖ Or, Though he give not much, yet he remembereth, &c. 20 ‖For he shall not much remember the days of his life; because God answereth him in the joy of his heart.

He shall not much remember; so as to disquiet or vex himself therewith. The days; either, 1. The troubles; days being here put for evil or sad days, by a usual synecdoche, as Job xviii. 20; Psal. cxxxvii. 7; Obad. 12; Micah vii. 4. Or, 2. The time in general; which is irksome and tedious to men oppressed with discontent or misery, who usually reckon every hour or minute that passeth, and have their minds and thoughts constantly fixed upon the vanity and uncertainty of this life, upon the afflictions which they have already endured and may further expect; whereas to men of contented and cheerful minds the time is short and sweet, and passeth over them before they are aware of it, and they enjoy their present comforts without perplexing themselves about former or future events. Answereth him; answereth, either, 1. His labours with success, as money is said to answer all things, Eccles. x. 19, because it is equivalent to all, and able to purchase all things. Or, 2. His desires. In the joy of his heart; in giving him that solid joy and comfort of his labours which his heart expected and desired.

CHAP. VI.

The vanity of riches without use, 1, 2. Of children and old age without competent wealth; their obscurity is worse than not to have been, 3—6. All labour is for necessaries of life, which one getteth as well as another, 7, 8. It is good for us to enjoy what we have, and not to desire what we have not; for our portion is appointed us; and we ourselves are vain; and other things do but increase our vanity, 9—12.

a ch. 5. 13. [a]THERE is an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men:

b Job 21. 10, &c. Ps. 17. 14. & 73. 7. 2 A man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honour, [b]so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, c Luke 12. 20. [c]yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it: this is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

Wealth; all sorts of riches, as gold and silver, cattle and lands, &c. Of all that he desireth; which he doth or can reasonably desire. Giveth him not power to eat; either because they are suddenly taken away from him by the hand and curse of God, and given to others; or because God gives him up to a base and covetous mind, which is both a sin and a plague. Thereof, i. e. any considerable part of it: whereas the stranger eateth not thereof, but it, i. e. all of it; devoureth it all in an instant.

3 ¶ If a man beget an hundred children, and live many years, so that the days of his d 2 Kings 9. 35. Is. 14. 19, 20. Jer. 22. 19. e Job 3. 16. Ps. 58. 8. ch. 4. 3. years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and [d]also that he have no burial; I say, that [e]an untimely birth is better than he.

An hundred children, i. e. very many children, to whom he intends to leave his estate. Live many years; which is the chief thing that he desires, and which giveth him opportunity of increasing his estate vastly. The days; he saith days, because the years of men's life are but few. Be not filled with good; hath not a contented mind and comfortable enjoyment of his estate whilst he lives. Have no burial; and if after his death he hath either none, or a mean and dishonourable burial, because his sordid and covetous carriage made him hateful and contemptible to all persons, his children and heirs not excepted, and he was by all sorts of men thought unworthy of any testimonies of honour, either in his life or after his death. Thus he describes a man who lives miserably, and dies ignominiously. An untimely birth; which as it never enjoyed the comforts, so it never felt the calamities, of this life, which are far more considerable than its comforts, at least to a man that denied himself the comforts, and plunged himself into the toils and vexations, of this life.

4 For he cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness.

For; or rather, although, as this particle is frequently rendered. For this verse seems to contain not so much a reason of what he last said, that an untimely birth is better than he, as an answer to an exception which might be made against it. Although all that is here said be true of the abortive, yet it is better than he. He; either, 1. The covetous man. Or rather, 2. The abortive; of whom alone, and not of the former, that passage is true, he hath not seen the sun, ver. 5. Cometh in; into the world, this word being oft put for a man's being born, as Job i. 21; Eccles. v. 15. With vanity; or, in vain, to no purpose; without any comfort or benefit by it, which also is in a great measure the case of the covetous wretch. Departeth in darkness; dieth obscurely, without any observation or regard of men. Shall be covered with darkness; shall be speedily and utterly forgotten; whereas the name of such wicked men shall rot, and be remembered to their shame.

5 Moreover he hath not seen the sun, nor known any thing: this hath more rest than the other.

He hath not seen the sun; he never beheld the light, and therefore it is not grievous to him to want it; whereas the covetous man saw that light was very pleasant, and therefore the loss of it was irksome to him. Nor known any thing; hath had no knowledge, sense, or experience of any thing, whether good or evil. Hath more rest, because he is perfectly free from all those encumbrances and vexations to which the covetous man is long exposed.

6 ¶ Yea, though he live a thousand years twice told, yet hath he seen no good: do not all go to one place?

Live a thousand years twice told; wherein he seems to have a privilege above an untimely birth. Hath he seen no good; he hath enjoyed little or no comfort in it, and therefore long life is rather a curse and mischief than a blessing or advantage to him. Do not all, whether born out of and before their time, or in due time, whether their lives be long or short, go to one place; to the grave. And so after a little time all are alike as to this life, of which he here speaks; and as to the other life, his condition is infinitely worse than that of an untimely birth.

7 [f]All the labour of man is for his mouth, and yet the †appetite is not filled.

For his mouth; for meat to put into his mouth, that he may get food; and as bread is oft put for all food, so food is put for all necessary provisions for this life, as Prov. xxx. 8, and elsewhere; whereof this is the chief, for which a man will sell his house and lands, yea, the very garments upon his back. Is not filled: although all that a man can get by his labours is but necessary food, which the meanest sort of men commonly enjoy, as is observed in the next verse; yet such is the vanity of this world, and the folly of mankind, that men are insatiable in their desires, and restless in their endeavours, after more and more, and never say they have enough.

8 For what hath the wise more than the fool? what hath the poor, that knoweth to walk before the living?

The fool, to wit, in these matters. Both are equally subject to the same calamities, and partakers of the same comforts of this life. Before the living, to wit, before the poor, that doth not know this; which words are easily understood by comparing this clause with the former. And such defects are usual, both in Scripture and other authors, as hath been formerly noted, by a figure which the learned call anantapodoton. And by this phrase, that knoweth, &c., he means such a poor man who is ingenious and industrious; who is fit for service and business, and knows how to carry himself towards rich men, so as to deserve and gain their favour, and to procure a livelihood.

9 ¶ Better is the sight of the eyes †than the wandering of the desire: this is also vanity and vexation of spirit.
† Heb. than the walking of the soul.

The sight of the eyes, i. e. the comfortable enjoyment of what a man hath; for seeing is oft put for enjoying, as Psal. xxxiv. 12; Eccles. ii. 1; iii. 13, &c. The wandering of the desire; restless and insatiable desires of what a man hath not, wherewith covetous rich men are perpetually haunted and tormented. This, this wandering of the desire wherein most men indulge themselves, is also vanity and vexation of spirit; is not the way to satisfaction, as they imagine, but to vexation.

g Job 9. 32. Is. 45. 9. Jer. 49. 19.

This verse is added either as a proof of what he last said concerning the vanity and wandering of insatiable desires, or as a further instance of the vanity of all things in this life. That which hath been (or, is, for the Hebrew verb may be rendered either way, to wit, man considered with all his endowments and enjoyments, whether he be wise or foolish, rich or poor; man, who is the chief of all visible and sublunary beings, for whom they all were made) is named already, to wit, by God, who, presently after his creation, gave him the following name, to signify what his nature and condition was or would be. Heb. What is that which hath been, or is, it is, or hath been named already. Others understand it thus, All the several conditions which men have had or shall have in the world, riches or poverty, &c., are already named, i. e. appointed or determined by God's unchangeable counsel and invincible providence. But though this be true, it seems not to suit so well with the following clause as the other interpretation doth. It is known that it is man; this is certain and manifest, that that being which makes all this noise and stir in the world, howsoever magnified by themselves, and sometimes adored by flatterers, and howsoever differenced from or advanced above others, by wisdom, or riches, or the like, is but a man, i. e. a mean earthly mortal and miserable creature, as his very name signifies, which God gave him for this very end, that he might be always sensible of his vain, and base, and miserable estate in this world, and therefore never expect satisfaction or happiness in it. With him that is mightier than he, i. e. with Almighty God, with whom men are very apt to contend upon every slight occasion, and against whom they are ready to murmur for this vanity, and mortality, and misery of mankind, although they brought it upon themselves by their own sins. So this is seasonably added to prevent the abuse of the foregoing passage.

11 ¶ Seeing there be many things that increase vanity, what is man the better?

This seems to be added as a conclusion of the disputation managed in all the foregoing chapters, Seeing not only man is a vain creature in himself, as hath been now said, but there are also many other things in the world, which instead of removing or diminishing, as might be expected, do but increase this vanity, as wisdom, pleasure, power, wealth, and the like, the vanity of all which hath been fully and particularly declared. Seeing even the good things of this life bring so much toil, and cares, and fears, &c. with them. What is man the better, to wit, by all that he can either desire or enjoy here? Hence it is evident that all these things cannot make him happy, but that he must seek for happiness elsewhere.

h Ps. 102. 11. & 109. 23. & 144. 4. Jam. 4. 14.
i Ps. 39. 6. ch. 8. 7.

12 For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, †all the days of his vain life which he spendeth as [h]a shadow? for [i]who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?

Who knoweth what is good for man? no man certainly knows what is best for him here, whether to be high or low, rich or poor, because those great things which men generally desire and pursue are very frequently the occasions of men's utter ruin, as hath been noted again and again in this book. Vain life; life itself, which is the foundation of all men's comforts and enjoyments here, is a vain, and uncertain, and transitory thing, and therefore all things which depend upon it must needs be so too. A shadow; which, whilst it abides, hath nothing real, and solid, or substantial in it, and doth speedily pass away, and leaves no sign behind it. And as no man can be happy with these things whilst he liveth and enjoyeth them, so he can have no content in leaving them to others, because he knoweth not either who shall possess them, or how the future owners will use or abuse them, or what mischief they may do by them, either to others, or even to themselves.

CHAP. VII.

A good name desirable; and the house of mourning and rebuke better than songs and laughter, 1—6. Exhortations to patience and perseverance, 7—10. Wisdom and money a defence, 11, 12. God's providence should render us contented: our duty both in prosperity and adversity, 13, 14. Prudence and the fear of God necessary in this world, 15—18. The praise of wisdom, 19. All men are sinners, 20. Other men's opinions of thee not too much to be minded: the motive thereto, 21, 22. The Preacher's experience thereof, 23—25. An evil woman more bitter than death, 26—28. God created man good, 29.

Having largely discoursed of the vanity of all worldly things, and having now said in the foregoing verse that no man knew what was best for him, he now proceeds to prescribe some remedies against these vanities, and to direct men to the right method of obtaining that felicity which is not to be expected or found in this world.

A [a]GOOD name is better than precious ointment; and the day of death than the day of one's birth.

A good name; a good and well-grounded report from wise and worthy persons. Heb. a name, which is put for a good name by a synecdoche, that only being worthy to be called a name, because evil and worthless men quickly lose their name and memory. Thus a wife is put for a good wife, Prov. xviii. 22, and a day for a good day, Luke xix. 42, 41. Precious ointment; which was very fragrant, and acceptable, and useful, and of great price, especially in those countries. See Deut. xxxiii. 24; Psal. xcii. 10; cxxxiii. 2; Isa. xxxix. 2. The day of death, to wit, of a good man, or one who hath left a good name behind him, which is easily understood both from the former clause, and from the nature of the thing; for to a wicked man this day is far worse, and most terrible. Yet if this passage be delivered with respect only to this life, and abstracting from the future life, as many other passages in this book are to be understood, then this may be true in general of all men, and is the consequent of all the former discourse. Seeing this life is so full of vanity, and vexation, and misery, it is a more desirable thing for a man to go out of it, than to come into it; which is the more considerable note, because it is contrary to the opinion and practice of almost all mankind, to celebrate their own or children's birth-days with solemn feasts and rejoicings, and their deaths with all expressions of sorrow.

The house of mourning; where mourners meet together to celebrate the funerals of a deceased friend. That, to wit, death, the cause of that mourning, is the end of all men; it brings men to the serious consideration of their last end, which is their greatest wisdom and interest. Will lay it to his heart; will be seriously affected with it, and awakened to prepare for it; whereas feasting is commonly attended with mirth, and levity, and manifold temptations, and indisposeth men's minds to spiritual and heavenly thoughts. Hence it is evident that those passages of this book which may seem to favour a sensual and voluptuous life, are not spoken by Solomon in his own name, or as his opinion, but in the person of an epicure.

3 ‖ Sorrow is better than laughter: ‖ Or, Anger.
[b] for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better. b 2 Cor. 7. 10.

Sorrow; either for sin, or any outward troubles. The sadness of the countenance; which is seated in the heart, but manifested in the countenance. Made better; more weaned from the lusts and vanities of this world, by which most men are insnared and destroyed, and more quickened to seek after and embrace that true and everlasting happiness which God offers to them in his word.

4 The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth.

The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning, even when their bodies are absent. They are constantly, or very frequently, meditating upon sad and serious things, such as death and judgment, the vanity of this life, and the reality and eternity of the next, because they know that these thoughts, though they be not grateful to the sensual part, yet they are absolutely necessary, and highly profitable, and most comfortable in the end, which every wise man most regards. The heart of fools is in the house of mirth; their minds and affections are wholly set upon feasting and jollity, because, like fools and brutish creatures, they regard only their present delight, and mind not how dearly they must pay for them.

5 [c] It is better to hear the rebuke of the wise, than for a man to hear the song of fools. c See Ps. 141. 5. Prov. 13. 18. & 15. 31, 32.

The rebuke of the wise, though it causeth some grief, yet frequently brings great benefit, even reformation and salvation, both from temporal and from eternal destruction, both which are the portion of impenitent sinners. The song; the flatteries, or other merry discourses, which are as pleasant to corrupt nature, as songs or music.

6 [d] For as the †crackling of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of the fool: this also is vanity. d Ps. 118. 12. ch. 2. 2. † Heb. sound.

The crackling of thorns, which for a time make a great noise and blaze, but presently waste themselves, and go out without any considerable effect upon the meat in the pot. So; so vanishing and fruitless.

7 ¶ Surely oppression maketh a wise man mad; [e] and a gift destroyeth the heart. e Ex. 23. 8. Deut. 16. 19.

Oppression; either, 1. Active. When a wise man falls into the practice of this sin of oppressing others, he is besotted by it, and by the vast riches which he by his great wit gets by it. Or rather, 2. Passive. When a wise man is oppressed by foolish and wicked men, it makes him fret and rage, and speak or act like a madman; for the wisest men are most sensible of indignities and injuries, whereas fools are stupid, and do not much lay them to heart. A gift, a bribe given to a wise man, destroyeth the heart; deprives him of the use of his understanding, which is oft called the heart, as Exod. xxiii. 8; Deut. xvi. 19; Hos. iv. 8, or makes him mad, as was said in the former clause.

So this verse discovers two ways whereby a wise man may be made mad, by suffering oppression from others, or by receiving bribes to oppress others. And this also is an argument of the vanity of worldly wisdom, that it is so easily corrupted and lost, and so it serves the main design of this book.

8 Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof: and [f] the patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit.

[f] Prov. 14. 29.

If this verse relates to that next foregoing, it is an argument to keep men's minds from being disordered, either by oppression or bribery, because the end of those practices will show, that he who oppresseth another doth himself most hurt by it, and that he who taketh bribes is no gainer by them. But if this be independent upon the former, as divers other verses here are, it is a general and useful observation, that the good or evil of things is better known by their end than by their beginning; which is true both in evil counsels and courses, which are pleasant at first, but at last bring destruction; and in all noble enterprises, in the studies of learning, and in the practice of virtue and godliness, where the beginnings are difficult and troublesome, but in the progress and conclusion they are most easy and comfortable; and it is not sufficient to begin well, unless we persevere to the end, which crowns all. The patient in spirit, who quietly waits for the end and issue of things, and is willing to bear hardships and inconveniences in the mean time, is better than the proud; which he puts instead of hasty or impatient, which the opposition might seem to require, partly because pride is the chief cause of impatience, Prov. xiii. 10, and makes men unable to bear any thing either from God or from men, whereas humility makes men sensible of their own unworthiness, and that they deserve, at least from God, all the indignities and injuries which they suffer from men by God's permission, and therefore patient under them; and partly to correct the vulgar error of proud men, who think highly of themselves, and trample all others, especially such as are meek and patient, under their feet.

9 [g] Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry: for anger resteth in the bosom of fools.

[g] Prov. 14. 17. & 16. 32. Jam. 1. 19.

Be not angry with any man without due consideration, and just and necessary cause; for otherwise anger is sometimes lawful, and sometimes a duty. Resteth; hath its settled and quiet abode, is their constant companion, ever at hand upon all occasions, whereas wise men resist, and mortify, and banish it. In the bosom; in the heart, the proper seat of the passions.

10 Say not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these? for thou dost not enquire † wisely concerning this.

Say not thou, to wit, by way of impatient expostulation and complaint against God, either for permitting such disorders in the world, or for bringing thee into the world in such an evil time and state of things. Otherwise a man may say this by way of prudent and pious inquiry, that by searching out the cause he may, as far as it is in his power, apply remedies to make them better. Better; either, 1. Less sinful. Or rather, 2. More quiet and comfortable. For this, and not the former, is the cause of most men's murmurings against God's providence. And this is an argument of a mind discontented and unthankful for the many mercies which men commonly enjoy even in evil times, and impatient under God's hand. Thou dost not inquire wisely concerning this; this question showeth thy great folly in contending with thy Creator, and the sovereign Lord and Governor of all things, in opposing thy shallow wit to his unsearchable wisdom, and thy will to his will.

11 ¶ Wisdom ‖ is good with an inheritance: and by it there is profit [h] to them that see the sun.

‖ Or, as good as an inheritance, yea, better too. [h] ch. 11. 7.

Good, i. e. very good; the positive being put for the superlative, as it is frequently in the Hebrew text. When wisdom and riches meet in one man, it is a happy conjunction; for wisdom without riches is commonly contemned, Eccles. ix. 16, and wants opportunities and instruments of discovering itself, and of doing that good in the world which it is both able and willing to do; and riches without wisdom are like a sword in a madman's hand, an occasion of much sin and mischief, both to himself and others. By it there is profit; by wisdom joined with riches there comes great benefit; Heb. and it is an excellency, or privilege, or advantage. To them that see the sun, i. e. to mortal men; not only to a man's self, but many others who live with him in this world; whereby he intimates that riches bear no price and have no use in the other world.

12 For wisdom is a † defence, and money is a defence: but the excellency of knowledge is, that wisdom giveth life to them that have it.

Is a defence, Heb. is a shadow; which in Scripture use notes both protection and refreshment. And thus far wisdom and money agree. But herein knowledge or wisdom (which commonly signifies the same thing) excels riches, that whereas riches frequently expose men to death or destruction, true wisdom doth ofttimes preserve a man from temporal, and always from eternal ruin.

13 Consider the work of God: for [i] who can make that straight, which he hath made crooked?

[i] See Job 12. 14. ch. 1. 15. Is. 14. 27.

The work of God; not of creation, but of providence; his wise, and just, and powerful government of all events in the world, which is proposed as the last and best remedy against all murmurings and sinful disquietments of mind, under the sense of the great and many disorders which happen in the world, as is implied, ver. 10, against which wisdom is prescribed as one remedy, ver. 11, 12, and now here is another. Who can make that straight, which he hath made crooked? no man can withstand, or correct, or alter any of God's works; and therefore all self-tormenting frettings and discontents at the injuries of men, or calamities of times, are not only sinful, but also vain and fruitless. This reason implies that there is a hand or work of God in all men's actions, either effecting them if they be good, or permitting them if they be bad, and ordering and overruling them, whether they be good or bad. And God is here said to make things crooked, as he is said to make the hearts of sinners fat or hard, Isa. vi. 10, and elsewhere, not positively, but privatively, because he denies or withdraws from men that wisdom or grace which should make them straight.

14 [k] In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider: God also hath † set the one over against the other, to the end that man should find nothing after him.

Be joyful; enjoy God's favours with cheerfulness and thankfulness. Consider, to wit, God's work, which is easily understood out of the foregoing verse. Consider that it is God's hand, and therefore submit to it; humble thyself under his hand, be sensible of it, and duly affected with it; consider also why God sends it, for what sins, and with what design. This is a proper season for serious consideration, whereas prosperity relaxeth the mind, and calls it forth to outward things. But this clause may be, and is by some, rendered thus, and look for a day of adversity. In prosperity rejoice with trembling, and so as to expect a change. God also hath set the one over against the other; God hath wisely ordained these vicissitudes that prosperity and adversity should succeed one another in the course of men's lives. After him; either, 1. After man himself, or, as it may be rendered, after it, i. e. after his present condition, whether it be prosperous or afflictive. So the sense is, that no man might be able to foresee or find out what shall certainly befall him afterwards, and therefore might live in a constant dependence upon God, and might neither despair in trouble, nor be secure or presumptuous in prosperity, because of the frequent and sudden changes from one to the other. Or, 2. After God, that no man might come after God, and review his works, and find any fault in them, or pretend that he could have managed things better, because this mixture of prosperity and adversity is most convenient both for the glory of God's wisdom, and justice, and goodness, and for the benefit of mankind, who have an absolute need of this vicissitude, lest they should be either corrupted and ruined by perpetual prosperity, as many have been, or overwhelmed with uninterrupted adversity.

15 All things have I seen in the days of my vanity: [l]there is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness, and there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedness.

l ch. 8. 14.

All things; all sorts of events, both such as have been already mentioned, and such as I am about to declare. In the days of my vanity; since I have come into this vain and transitory life. In his righteousness; either, 1. Notwithstanding his righteousness; whom his righteousness doth not deliver in common calamities, Ezek. xxi. 3, 4; xxxiii. 12. Or, 2. For his righteousness, which exposeth him to the envy, and hatred, and rage of persecutors or wicked men. In is sometimes used for for; but it is not so taken in the next clause, which answers to this, and therefore the former seems to be the truer interpretation. In his wickedness; notwithstanding all his wickedness, whereby he provokes and deserves the justice both of God and men, who yet, for many wise and just reasons, is permitted to live long unpunished and secure.

16 [m]Be not righteous over much; [n]neither make thyself over wise: why shouldest thou †destroy thyself?

m Prov. 25. 16.
n Ecclus. 3. 21, 22. Rom. 12. 3.
† Heb. be desolate.

This verse and the next have a manifest reference to ver. 15, being two inferences drawn from the two clauses of the observation there recorded. And this verse was delivered by Solomon, either, 1. In the name and person of an ungodly man, who taketh occasion to dissuade men from the practice of righteousness and true wisdom, because of the danger which attends it, and is expressed in the middle of the former, and the end of this verse. Therefore, saith he, it is not good to be more nice than wise, take heed of strictness, zeal, and forwardness in religion. And then the next verse contains an antidote to this poisonous suggestion; yea, rather, saith he, be not wicked or foolish over-much; for that will not preserve thee, as thou mayst imagine from the last clause of ver. 15, but will occasion and hasten thy ruin. But seeing these words are very capable of another sense, and there is no proof or evidence of this sense in them, as there is in all other places where Solomon speaks in the person of an epicure, this interpretation may seem to be dangerous, and liable to misconstruction. Or, 2. In his own person. And so these words are a caution to prevent, as far as may be, that destruction which oft attends upon righteous men, as was observed, ver. 15. Be not righteous over-much; either, 1. By being too severe in observing, censuring, and punishing the faults of others beyond the rules of equity, without giving any allowance for human infirmity, extraordinary temptations, the state of times, and other circumstances. Or, 2. By being more just than God requires, either laying those yokes and burdens upon a man's self or others which God hath not imposed upon him, and which are too heavy for him, of which see on Matt. xxiii. 4, or condemning or avoiding those things as sinful which God hath not forbidden, which really is superstition, but is here called righteousness abusively, because it is so in appearance, and in the opinion of such persons. So he gives them the name, but by adding over-much denies the thing, because righteousness, as well as other virtues, avoids both the extremes, the excess as well as the defect. Or, 3. By an imprudent and unseasonable ostentation or exercise of righteousness where it is not necessary, as if a protestant travelling in a popish country should publicly profess his religion to all whom he meets with, or when a man casts the pearl of reproof before swine, against that caution, Matt. vii. 6. So this is a precept that men should manage their zeal with godly wisdom, and with condescension to others, as far as may be. But this is not to be understood, either, 1. Of such prudence as keeps a man from the practice of his duty, but only of that prudence which directs him in ordering the time, manner, and other circumstances of it. Or, 2. As if men could be too good, or too holy, since the strictest holiness which any man in this life can arrive at falls far short both of the rule of God's word, and of those examples of God and Christ, and the holy angels, which are propounded in Scripture for our imitation. Neither make thyself over-wise; be not wise in thine own conceit, nor above what is written, 1 Cor. iv. 6, nor above what is meet; which he here implieth to be the cause of being righteous over-much. Why shouldest thou destroy thyself? for thereby thou wilt unnecessarily expose thyself to danger and mischief.

17 Be not over much wicked, neither be thou foolish: [o]why shouldest thou die †before thy time?

o Job 15. 32. Ps. 55. 23. Prov. 10. 27.
† Heb. not in thy time.

Be not over-much wicked; do not take occasion, either from the impunity of sinners, ver. 15, or from the prohibition of excessive righteousness, to run into the contrary extreme, the defect of righteousness, or to give up thyself to the practice of all manner of wickedness, as the manner of many men is, chap. viii. 11. But this is not to be understood as if he allowed a lower degree of wickedness, no more than that prohibition of not letting the sun go down upon a man's wrath, Eph. iv. 26, permits him to keep his wrath all the day long; and no more than the condemnation of excess of riot, and of abominable idolatries, 1 Pet. iv. 3, 4, doth justify any kind of rioting or idolatry. Neither be thou foolish; which he adds to show that such sinners, howsoever they esteem themselves wise, yet in truth are egregious fools, as the following words prove. Die before thy time; either by the justice of the magistrate, or by the vengeance of God. For though I said that sometimes a wicked man prolongeth his days, &c., ver. 15, yet commonly such persons are cut off, and thou hast sufficient reason to expect and fear it.

18 It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this; yea, also from this withdraw not thine hand: for he that feareth God shall come forth of them all.

Take hold of, embrace and practise, this; this counsel last given, ver. 17. Also from this; from that foregoing advice, ver. 16. It is good to avoid both those extremes. Withdraw not thine hand from the practice of it. He that feareth God, who ordereth his actions so as to please God, and keep his commands, and walk by the rule of his word, shall come forth of them all; shall be delivered from both these, and from all other extremes, and from all the evil consequences of them. The word all is sometimes put for both, as being used of two only, as Eccles. ii. 14.

19 [p]Wisdom strengtheneth the wise more than ten mighty men which are in the city.

p Prov. 21. 22. & 24. 5. ch. 9. 16, 18.

Wisdom; true wisdom, which is always joined with the fear of God, and which teacheth a man to keep close to the rule of his duty, without turning either to the right hand or to the left. Strengtheneth the wise; supporteth him in and secureth him against troubles and dangers. Ten, i. e. many, uniting the forces together.

20 [q]For there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not.

q 1 Kings 8. 46. 2 Chr. 6. 36. Prov. 20. 9. Rom. 3. 23. 1 John 1. 8.

For; so this is a reason either, 1. Of the foregoing counsels, ver. 16—18, the 19th verse being interposed only as a proof of the last clause of ver. 18. Or, 2. To show the necessity and advantage of that wisdom commended ver. 19, because all men are very prone to folly and sin, and therefore need that wisdom which is from above to direct and keep them from it. But this particle may be, and elsewhere is, commonly rendered yet; and so the sense is, Although wisdom doth exceedingly strengthen a man, yet it doth not so strengthen him, as if it would keep him from falling into all sin. Or, because; or, seeing that; and so this relates to the following verse, Seeing all men sin, we should be ready to pardon the offences of others against us, either by word or deed. Or, surely; and so it is an entire sentence, such as there are many in this book. There is not a just man upon earth, whereby he manifestly implies that the just in heaven are perfect and sinless, that doeth good, and sinneth not; who is universally and perfectly good, and free from all sin.

21 Also †take no heed unto all words that are spoken; lest thou hear thy servant curse thee:

† Heb. give not thine heart.

Take no heed; do not severely observe nor strictly search into them, nor listen to hear them, as many persons out of curiosity use to do. Unto all words that are spoken, to wit, concerning thee, or against thee. Under this one kind of offences of the tongue, which are most frequent, he seems to understand all injuries which we suffer from others, and adviseth us that we do not too rigidly examine them, nor too deeply resent them, but rather neglect and forget them. Lest thou hear thy servant curse thee; which will vex and grieve thee, and may provoke thee to vengeance and cruelty against him.

22 For oftentimes also thine own heart knoweth that thou thyself likewise hast cursed others.

Heart; mind or conscience, as that word is frequently used. Hast cursed others; either upon some great provocation and sudden passion, or possibly upon a mere mistake, or false report; in which case thou hast both needed and desired the forbearance and forgiveness of others, and therefore by the rules of justice, as well as of piety and charity, thou art obliged to deal likewise with others.

23 ¶ All this have I proved by wisdom: [r]I said, I will be wise; but it was far from me.

r Rom. 1. 22.

All this, or all these things, of which I have here discoursed, have I proved, I have diligently examined and found all this to be true, by wisdom; by the help of that singular wisdom which God had given me. I said, I will be wise; I determined within myself that I would by all possible means seek to attain perfection of wisdom, and I persuaded myself that I should attain to it. But it was far from me; I found myself greatly disappointed, and the more I knew, the more I saw mine own folly and misery.

24 [s]That which is far off, and [t]exceeding deep, who can find it out?

s Job 28. 12, 20. 1 Tim. 6. 16.
t Rom. 11. 33.

No human wit can attain to perfect wisdom, or to the exact knowledge of God's counsels and works, and the reasons of them, because they are unsearchably deep, and far above our sight; some of them being long since past, and therefore utterly unknown to us, and others yet to come, which we cannot foreknow.

25 †[u]I applied mine heart to know, and to search, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things, and to know the wickedness of folly, even of foolishness and madness:

u ch. 1. 17. & 2. 12.

I applied mine heart; I was not discouraged, but provoked by the difficulty of the work to undertake it; which is an argument of a great and generous soul. To know, and to search, and to seek out; he useth three words signifying the same thing, to intimate his vehement desire and vigorous and unwearied endeavour after it. The reason of things, both of God's various providences, and of the differing and contrary counsels and courses of men. To know the wickedness of folly, that I might clearly and fully understand the great evil of sin, and all that wickedness and folly or madness which is bound up in the hearts of all men by nature, and which discovers itself in the course of their lives.

26 [x]And I find more bitter than death the woman, whose heart is snares and nets, and her hands as bands: †whoso pleaseth God shall escape from her; but the sinner shall be taken by her.

x Prov. 5. 3, 4. & 22. 14.
† Heb. he that is good before God.

I find, by my own sad experience; which Solomon here records, partly as an instance of that folly and madness which he expressed in general, ver. 25, and partly as a testimony of his true repentance for his foul miscarriages, for which he was willing to take shame to himself, not only from the present, but from all succeeding generations. More bitter; more vexatious and pernicious, as producing those horrors of conscience, those reproaches, and diseases, and other plagues, both temporal and spiritual, from God, which are far worse than simple death, and, after all these, everlasting destruction. The woman, the strange woman, of whom he speaks so much in the Proverbs, whose heart is snares and nets; who being subtle of heart, Prov. vii. 10, is full of crafty devices to insnare men; and her hands, either by gifts, or rather by lascivious actions, as bands; wherewith she holds them fast in cruel bondage, so that they have neither power nor will to forsake her, notwithstanding all the dangers and mischiefs which they know do attend upon such practices. Whoso pleaseth God, Heb. he that is good before God; either, 1. Whom God loves and favours. Or rather, 2. Who is good sincerely, or in the judgment of God, who cannot be deceived, whereas hypocrites are frequently good in the eyes or opinions of men; which sense seems to be confirmed from the opposition of the sinner to him, both here and Eccles. ii. 26. Hereby he intimates that neither a good temper of mind, nor great discretion, nor good education and instruction, nor any other thing, except God's grace, is a sufficient preservative from the dominion of this lust. Shall escape from her; shall be prevented from falling into that sin; or if by surprisal or strong temptation he be drawn to it, he shall be recovered out of it by true repentance. The sinner; the wilful and obstinate sinner, who gives himself up to the common practice of this or other sins; he who is a sinner before the Lord, as the Sodomites are called, Gen. xiii. 13, who is fitly opposed to him that is good before God; he in whom there is not a dram of true goodness; for otherwise all men are sinners, as was said, ver. 20. Shall be taken by her; shall be entangled and kept fast in her chains, as is implied, because this is opposed to escaping from her.

27 Behold, this have I found, saith [y]the preacher, ‖ counting one by one, to find out the account:

y ch. 1. 1, 2.

Behold; it is a strange thing, and worthy of your serious observation. The preacher; or, the penitent, who speaks what he hath learned, both by deep study and costly experience. Counting one by one; considering things or persons very exactly and distinctly, one after another; and not only in general and confusedly, in which case a man may very easily be mistaken; and comparing them together, whereby I was enabled to make the truer judgment of them. To find out the account, that I might make a true and just estimate in this matter. Or, as it is in the margin, and was rendered ver. 25, the reason, to wit, of that which I am about to say. I considered the persons severally and critically, that from thence I might understand the reason of the thing.

28 Which yet my soul seeketh, but I find not: [z]one man among a thousand have I found; but a woman among all those have I not found.

z Job 33. 23. Ps. 12. 1.

My soul seeketh; it seemed so wonderful to me, that I suspected I had not made a sufficient inquiry, and therefore I returned to search again with more earnestness and accurateness. I find not; that it was so he found out, as he now said, ver. 27, but the whole truth and reason of the thing he could not find out. One man; one worthy of the name of a man; a wise and virtuous man. Man is put for a worthy or good man, as name is put for a good name, above, ver. 1, and wife for a good wife, as was noted before. Among a thousand, with whom I have conversed. He is supposed to mention this number in allusion to his thousand wives and concubines, as they are numbered by parcels, 1 Kings xi. 3. A woman; one worthy of that name; one who is not a dishonour to her kind and sex, who is not brutish in her disposition and conversation. Among all those in that thousand whom I have taken into intimate society with myself; whereby he also passeth a severe censure upon himself that he had associated himself with such persons, and not with the virtuous women, which doubtless there were in his time, as appears from Prov. xxxi. It is not Solomon's design to disparage this sex, nor to make a general comparison between men and women in all places and ages, but only to suggest his own experience concerning it.

29 Lo, this only have I found, [a]that God hath made man upright; but [b]they have sought out many inventions.

b Gen. 3. 6, 7.

This only have I found; though I could not find out all the streams of wickedness, and their infinite windings and turnings in the world, yet I have discovered the fountain of it, to wit, original sin, and the corruption of nature, which is both in men and women. God hath made man, God made our first parents, Adam and Eve, upright, Heb. right, without any imperfection or corruption, conformable to his nature and will, which is the rule of right, after his own likeness, understanding, and holy, and every way good. They, our first parents, and after them their posterity treading in their steps, have sought out many inventions; were not contented with their present state, but aimed at higher things, and studied new ways of making themselves more wise and happy than God had made them, and readily hearkened to the suggestions of the devil to that end. And we their sinful and wretched children, after their example, are still prone to forsake the certain rule of God's word, and the true way to happiness, and to seek new methods and inventions of attaining to it, even such as Solomon hath discoursed of in this book.

CHAP. VIII.

Kings to be greatly respected, 1—5. Our times uncertain; death not to be resisted, 6—8. An evil magistrate buried and forgot, 9, 10. Men hardened in sin, because not presently punished; but they shall not escape, but it shall go ill with them, 11—13; as it doth also sometimes with the righteous, whilst the wicked prosper, 14. Mirth therefore, and a contented enjoyment of God's gifts, preferable to immoderate care and search, 15. God's work herein past finding out, 16, 17.

WHO is as the wise man? and who know-
[a] Prov. 4. 8, 9. & 17. 24. See Acts 6. 15. eth the interpretation of a thing? [a]a man's wisdom maketh his face to shine, † Heb. the strength. and †[b] the boldness of his face shall be [b] Deu. 28. 50. changed.

Who is as the wise man? who is to be compared with a wise man? He is incomparably the most excellent man in the world. Or rather, who is truly wise? the particle as being here not a note of similitude, but of reality, as it is John i. 14, and in many other places, as hath been noted. There are very few or no truly wise men in this world. This seems best to agree with the next clause, which is not, who is as he that knoweth, but who knoweth, &c. Who knoweth the interpretation of a thing? how few are there who understand the reasons of things, and can rightly expound the word and works of God, and instruct and satisfy himself and others in all the doubtful and difficult cases of human actions! A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine; maketh a man illustrious and venerable, cheerful, and mild, and amiable in his carriage to others. The face is put for the mind or inward frame, because the mind discovers itself in the countenance. The boldness of his face; the roughness or fierceness, the pride or impudence of his disposition, as this phrase is used, Deut. xxviii. 50; Prov. vii. 13; xxi. 29; Dan. viii. 23; shall be changed into gentleness and humility.

2 I counsel thee to keep the king's [c] 1 Chro. 29. 24. Ezek. 17. 18. Rom. 13. 5. commandment, [c]and that in regard of the oath of God.

I counsel thee; which verb is necessarily understood to make the sense full and complete. See the like defects of speech, Psal. cxx. 7; Isa. v. 9, &c. To keep the king's commandment; observe and obey all his commands; which is not to be understood universally, as if the king should have commanded them to deny or blaspheme God, or to worship idols, in which case every Christian man who reads and believes the Bible must needs confess that the Israelites especially were obliged to obey God rather than man, but only of such commands as are not contrary to the will of God. In regard of the oath of God; either, 1. Because of that oath which thou hast taken to keep all God's laws, whereof this of obedience to superiors is one; or, 2. Because of that covenant or oath of fealty and allegiance whereby thou hast engaged thyself to him, of which see 1 Chron. xi. 3; xxix. 24; Ezek. xvii. 16, 18. Though this may also be understood, and is by some learned interpreters taken, as a limitation of their obedience to kings, the words being thus rendered, as the Hebrew will very well bear, but according to the word of the oath of God; obey the king's commands, with this caution, that they be agreeable and not contrary to the laws of God, which thou art obliged by thy own and by thy parents' oaths oft renewed to observe in the first place.

stand not in an evil thing; for he doeth whatsoever pleaseth him.

To go out of his sight, Heb. to go from his face or presence, to wit, in dislike, or in discontent, withdrawing thyself from thy king's service or obedience, as malcontents use to do; for this will both provoke him, and lead thee by degrees into sedition or rebellion. Stand not in an evil thing; if thou hast offended him, persist not in it, but humbly acknowledge thine offence, and beg his pardon and favour. He doeth whatsoever pleaseth him; his power is uncontrollable in his dominions, and therefore thou canst neither resist nor avoid his fury.

4 Where the word of a king is, there is power: and [e]who may say unto him, [e] Job 34. 18.
What doest thou?

There is power; whatsoever he commandeth he wants not power nor instruments to execute it, and therefore can easily punish thee as he pleaseth. Who may say? Heb. who shall say? Who will presume or dare to say so? He doth not affirm that it is unlawful to say so, for Samuel said so to Saul, 1 Sam. xv., and Nathan to David, 2 Sam. xii., and several other prophets to the kings of Judah and Israel, but only that it is difficult and dangerous.

5 Whoso keepeth the commandment
man's heart discerneth both time and judgment.

The commandment; either, 1. Of the king, of which he hath hitherto spoken. Or, 2. Of God; for the word, or commandments, or law are oft used emphatically for the word, law, or command of God, as hath been formerly and frequently observed, and the commandment is put for the commandments, as is very usual. And so Solomon passeth from his former to a new subject. Shall feel no evil thing; shall be delivered from those mischiefs which befall the disobedient. Both time and judgment; both when, and how far, and in what manner he may or must keep the commands of the king or God. For the word here rendered judgment doth signify right, as Deut. xxi. 17, as also a cause or controversy, as Numb. xxvii. 5, and the manner or rule of actions, as Judg. xiii. 12. The sense is, A wise man knows both what he ought to do, and what are the fittest seasons for doing it, which he seeketh and embraceth.

6 ¶ Because [f]to every purpose there is [f] ch. 3. 1.
time and judgment, therefore the misery of man is great upon him.

There is time and judgment; there is a fit way and season for the happy accomplishment of every business which a man designeth or undertaketh to do, which is known to God, but for the most part hidden from man, as is implied and may be gathered from the following words. See the notes on chap. iii. 1. Therefore; because there are very few who have that wisdom which is necessary to discern this, as was now said, ver. 5, and most men do by their ignorance and loss of opportunities deprive themselves of many advantages, and expose themselves to manifold miseries.

7 [g]For he knoweth not that which [g] Prov. 24. 22. ch. 6. 12. & 9. 12. & 10. 14.
shall be: for who can tell him ‖ when it ‖ Or, how it shall be? shall be?

Men are generally ignorant of all future events, and of the success of their endeavours, and therefore their minds are greatly disquieted, and their expectations frequently disappointed, and they fall into many mistakes and miscarriages, which they could and would prevent if they did foresee the issues of things. Who can tell him? no wise man, no astrologer or other artist, can discover this.

8 [h]There is no man that hath power [h] Ps. 49. 6, 7.

Job 14. 5. [i]over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no ‖ discharge in that war; neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

The spirit, i. e. the soul of man, which is oft called a spirit, as Job vii. 7; x. 12; Psal. lxxviii. 39; civ. 29, &c. To retain the spirit; to keep it in the body beyond the time which God hath allotted to it. This is added as another evidence of man's misery. In the day; or, against the day, i. e. to avoid or delay that day. There is no discharge, as there is in other wars, when soldiers either are dismissed from the service, or escape by flight or otherwise. In that war; in that fatal conflict between life and death, between nature and the disease, when a man is struggling with death, though to no purpose, for death shall always be conqueror. Neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it; and although wicked men, who most fear death, use all possible means, whether good or bad, to free themselves from this deadly blow, yet they shall not escape it.

9 All this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.

All this; all these things before mentioned. Applied my heart unto every work; I have been a diligent observer of all actions and events. There is a time wherein one man ruleth over another; there are some kings who use their power tyrannically and wickedly, whereby they do not only oppress their people, but hurt themselves, by bringing the vengeance of God and men upon their own heads; which is here noted, partly for the terror of tyrants, and partly for the caution and comfort of subjects groaning under those heavy pressures which they are not able to remove, that they may forbear unlawful or rebellious courses, and quietly commit themselves and their cause to God, who judgeth righteously, and who both can and will call the greatest monarchs to a sad account for all their impious and unrighteous courses.

10 And so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done: this is also vanity.

And so, in like manner, or such another vanity or disorder, I saw the wicked; wicked princes or rulers, as the next clause limits this. Buried; die quietly in their beds, and afterward be buried with state and pomp, whereas in truth they deserved an untimely end, and no other than the burial of an ass. Who had come and gone; who had administered public justice and government, which is frequently signified by the phrase of coming in and going out before the people, as Numb. xxvii. 17; Deut. xxxi. 2. The seventy Jewish interpreters, whom some others follow, render the word, they were praised, applauded and adored, by the variation of one letter in the Hebrew word, which also is very like that letter which is in the text. The place of the holy; by which he understands either, 1. The holy city Jerusalem, or the Holy Land, where Israel dwelt; which may be added to aggravate the wickedness of such persons, from the obligations, and counsels, and examples which they had to do better things. Or, 2. The seat of majesty and judgment, which may well be called the place or seat of the Holy, i. e. of God, who is called the Holy One, Hab. iii. 3, and oft elsewhere, who is in a special manner present in and president over those places, whose work, and for whom, and in whose name and stead, magistrates act, who therefore are called gods; of all which see Exod. xxii. 28; Deut. i. 17; 1 Chron. xxix. 23; Psal. lxxxii. 1, &c. And the throne or tribunal seems to be so called here, to aggravate their wickedness, who being sacred persons, and advanced by God into so high and sacred a place, betrayed so great a trust, and both practised and encouraged that wickedness which by their office they were obliged to suppress and punish. They were forgotten; whereas they designed to spread and perpetuate their names and memories to succeeding ages, Psal. xlix. 11. Where they had so done, i. e. come to and go from the place of the holy; where they lived in great splendour, and were buried with great magnificence; which might have kept up their remembrance at least in that place. This is also vanity; that men should so earnestly thirst after and please themselves with worldly greatness and glory, which is so soon extinct, and the very memory of it quickly worn out of the minds of men.

11 [k]Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

k Ps. 10. 6. & 50. 21. Is. 26. 10.

Sentence against an evil work; or, the decree, &c. God's determinate counsel or sentence for the punishment of tyrants and all evil-doers. Therefore; because God's forbearance makes them presumptuous and secure, and confident of impunity. Is fully set, Heb. is filled, is carried on with full sail, as the LXX. understand it, like a ship with a strong and violent wind; or, is bold or presumptuous, as the same phrase is understood, Esth. vii. 5; Acts v. 3.

12 ¶ [l]Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that [m]it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him:

m Ps. 37. 11, 18, 19. Prov. 1. 32, 33. Is. 3. 10, 11. Matt. 25. 34, 41.

An hundred times; frequently and innumerably. His days; the time of his life and prosperity. It shall be well with them that fear God; whereby he implies, both that good men might for a time suffer grievous things from such wicked tyrants, and that it should be very ill with the wicked, which is manifest from the contrary course and condition of good and bad men, and which is expressed in the following words: compare Psal. ii. 12. Before him; or, at his presence; who stand in awe of God, and forbear and fear to sin out of a sincere respect and reverence to God.

13 But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

It shall not be well, i. e. it shall go very ill with him; great miseries are prepared for him; which is a figure oft used in Scripture, as hath been formerly and frequently observed. Neither shall he prolong his days, to wit, very long, or for ever, as he desireth. As a shadow; his life, though it may be or seem to be long, yet in truth is but a mere shadow, which will quickly vanish and disappear, and be as if it never had been; and many times, like a shadow, when it is longest, it is nearest to abolition. Because he feareth not before God; this is the punishment of his wickedness, and his casting off the fear and service of God. For although the lives of good men upon earth are short, as well as the lives of the wicked, yet their days are not like a shadow, because they are prolonged far beyond this mortal state, even to all eternity, and death itself doth but open the way for them to an endless life.

14 There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; that there be just men, unto whom it [n]happeneth according to the work of the wicked; again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous: I said that this also is vanity.

n Ps. 73. 14. ch. 2. 14. & 7. 15. & 9. 1, 2, 3.

Which is done; either by wicked potentates, who do commonly advance unworthy men, and oppress persons of greatest virtue and merit; or by God's providence, who sees it fit for many weighty reasons so to manage the affairs of the present world. Unto whom it happeneth according to the work of the wicked, i. e. the merit of their work; the work being oft put for the recompence given or belonging to it, as Lev. xix. 13; Job vii. 2; Psal. cix. 20. The sense is, who meets with such hard usage as the worst of men deserve. To whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous; who, instead of those just and dreadful punishments which they deserve by the laws of God and men, receive those encouragements and rewards which are due to virtuous and worthy men. This also is vanity; this is a very unreasonable and foolish thing, if it be considered without respect unto another life, as it is here, where Solomon is discoursing of the vanity of the present life, and of the impossibility of finding satisfaction and happiness in it.

15 °Then I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun, than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry: for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.

This he speaks, either, 1. In the person of a sensual man. Things being so, as was related, ver. 14, it is best to give a man's self up to eating and drinking, and all manner of carnal delights. Or, 2. In his own name and person. Upon these considerations I concluded that it was most advisable for a man not to perplex and torment himself with the thoughts of the seeming inequality of Divine Providence, and of the great disorders which are in the world, or with cares and fears about future events, or with infinite and insatiable desires of worldly things; but quietly, and cheerfully, and thankfully to enjoy the comforts which God gives him. See on Eccles. ii. 24; iii. 12, 13. That shall abide with him of his labour; this is the best advantage which he can make of this world's goods as to the present life.

16 ¶ When I applied mine heart to know wisdom, and to see the business that is done upon the earth: (for also there is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes:)

I applied mine heart to know wisdom: this he seems to add as the reason of that judgment which he had now passed, ver. 15, because he had diligently studied wherein man's wisdom did consist, and had observed the restlessness of men's minds and bodies in other courses. To see the business; either, 1. To find out the work of God, as the next verse may seem to explain it, and all the mysteries of God's providence in the government of this present and lower world. Or, 2. To observe men's various designs and employments, and their toilsome and unwearied businesses or labours about worldly things; which sense seems best to agree, both with the use of this Hebrew word, which is constantly used in this sense in all the places of Scripture where it is, which are Eccles. i. 13; ii. 23, 26; iii. 10; iv. 8; v. 3, 14; viii. 16, and never concerning the works of God; and with the foregoing and following words, as we shall see. There is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes: the sense of the words thus translated and pointed seems to be this, There is a certain man, whom it is needless to name, (which is a modest designation of himself, like that of St. Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 2, I knew a man in Christ, &c.,) who studied those matters day and night, and therefore is very capable of passing a judgment about them. But, with submission, there seems to be no need of a parenthesis to cut off these words from the former, with whom they have a fit connexion. For having now mentioned the business which is done, or which man doeth, upon earth, he further adds, as an evidence of man's eagerness in pursuing his business, for even by day and by night he (to wit, the busy man, which is easily understood from the foregoing clause) seeth not sleep with his eyes, i. e. he grudgeth himself even necessary refreshments, and disquiets himself with endless cares and labours, the fruit whereof he doth but little enjoy; and therefore it is better to eat and drink, &c., as I now said, ver. 15. As for the phrase of seeing sleep, it is a figurative expression used in other authors, and is like that of seeing death, Psal. lxxxix. 48.

17 Then I beheld all the work of God, that p a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun: because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it; yea farther; though a wise man think to know it, q yet shall he not be able to find it.

p Job 5. 9. ch. 3. 11. Rom. 11. 33.

q Ps. 73. 16.

Then, Heb. and, or moreover, I beheld all the work of God; I considered the counsels and ways of God, and the various methods of his providence towards good and bad men, and the reasons of them. A man cannot find out; no man, though never so wise, and inquisitive, and studious, as it follows, is able fully and perfectly to understand these things; and therefore it is best for man not to perplex himself with endless and fruitless inquiries about these matters, but quietly to submit to God's will and providence, and to live in the fear of God, and the comfortable enjoyment of his blessings.

CHAP. IX.

All things in the hand of God: his love or hatred not visible in them; but the like happeneth to good and bad in this life, and in death they know nothing hereof, and are themselves forgotten, 1—6. It is best therefore for a man to enjoy the gifts of God with cheerfulness, 7—9; to be diligent in his calling, 10, and leave the issue to God, 11, 12. The praise of wisdom, 13—18.

FOR all this † I considered in my heart even to declare all this, a that the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God: no man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them.

† Heb. I gave, or, set to my heart.

For; or, therefore, as the seventy interpreters render it. All this; all that I have said concerning the methods of Divine Providence towards good and bad men. To declare all this; to make this evident, first to myself, and then to others, as occasion required. The righteous and the wise; whom he mentions not exclusively, as if wicked men were not in God's hand, for the next clause relates both to good and bad men; but eminently, because by the course of God's providence towards them they might seem to be quite neglected and forsaken by God. Their works; either efficiently, all their actions and employments; or objectively, all things done to them, all events which befall them. Are in the hand of God; are subject to his power, and governed by his providence, as this phrase is used Prov. xxi. 1; John iii. 35, compared with Matt. xxviii. 18. And therefore although we cannot fully understand the reasons of all God's works, as he now said, chap. viii. 17, yet because they are done by his unerring hand, we may be assured that they are done both righteously and justly, and that no man hath cause to murmur at the prosperity of the wicked, or at the calamities of good men. No man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them; no man can judge by their present and outward conditions or dispensations of God's providence whether God loves or hates them, for whom he loves he chastens, and permitteth those whom he hates to prosper in the world. And this translation and interpretation agreeth well with the following verse. But I must confess it differs from almost all other, both ancient and modern, translations. And these words with the foregoing clause are translated otherwise, and that word for word according to the Hebrew, the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God; also love and hatred (understand out of the foregoing clause, are in God's hand. And this may be meant either, 1. Of God's love and hatred, which he disposeth when, and to whom, and in what manner he pleaseth. Or, 2. Of men's love and hatred, also their love and their hatred, the pronoun their being repeated out of the former clause, as is frequent in Scripture. And so the sense is, that not only men's works, as he now said, but even their inward passions or affections, which seem to be most in their own power, are as much in God's disposal as their outward actions. Then follows the last clause in the same order in which the words lie in the Hebrew text): no man knoweth all, or any thing, which is before him. Which I thus understand, Whereas all men, and all their affections, and actions, and the events of them, are perfectly known to God, and disposed by him, men know nothing, no, not such things as are most plain, and easy, and familiar to them, and can neither foresee the plainest things, nor dispose of the smallest things as they please; but all things are wholly ordered and overruled by God's providence, not as men imagine or desire, but as he sees fit.

ficeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.

All things come alike to all; the good and evil things of this world do equally happen to good and bad men. The clean; either, 1. Morally clean or holy men. Or, 2. Legally, who made conscience of keeping himself pure from all legal defilements, according to the law then in force, and consequently from all other sins upon the same ground. That sacrificeth; that worshippeth God sincerely, though it be to his cost. As is the good, so is the sinner, as to all outward things. That sweareth, to wit, customarily, unnecessarily, rashly, without due consideration and reverence, or falsely and wickedly. For otherwise that some swearing was then allowed, and in some cases required, none do or can deny. That feareth an oath; who is afraid of offending God, or abusing his name, by vain, or rash, or false oaths.

3 This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all: yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead.

An evil; a great trouble and temptation to a considerate and good man. The heart of the sons of men, of wicked men, such as the generality of mankind are, is full of evil; either, 1. Of grief upon this occasion. Or rather, 2. Of wickedness, as appears from the next clause, and by comparing this place with Eccles. viii. 11. Madness is in their heart; upon this account they go on madly and desperately in evil courses, without any fear of an after-reckoning. After that they go to the dead; after all their mad and wicked pranks in the whole course of their life, they die in the same manner as the best men do. So hitherto there is no difference. For Solomon here forbears the consideration of the future life. Only he seems to intimate, that as the madness, so the happiness of the wicked is ended by death, which is more fully expressed in the following words.

4 ¶ For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

That is joined to all the living; that continueth in the land and society of living men. Or, according to the reading of the Hebrew text, that is chosen or allotted to life, whom God hath appointed yet to live in the world, when he hath appointed that many others shall die; or who are written among the living, as the phrase is, Isa. iv. 3, which is borrowed from the custom of cities, where men are first chosen, and then enrolled citizens. There is hope; he hath not only some comfort for the present, but also hopes of further and greater happiness in this world, which men are very prone to entertain and cherish in themselves. Yea, they may have the hopes of a better life, if they improve their opportunities. But he seems to confine himself here to the present life. Better, i. e. much happier, as to the comforts and privileges of this world, though in other respects death be better than life, as was said, Eccles. vii. 1.

5 For the living know that they shall
[c] Job 14. 21. Is. 63. 16. die: but [c] the dead know not any thing, [d] Job 7. 8, 9, 10. Is. 26. 14. neither have they any more a reward; for [d] the memory of them is forgotten.

The living know that they shall die; whereby they are taught to improve life, whilst they have it, to their greatest comfort and advantage. The dead know not any thing, to wit, of the actions and events in this world, as this is limited in the end of the next verse. Compare Job xiv. 21; Isa. lxiii. 16. A reward; the reward or fruit of their labours in this world, which is utterly lost as to them, and enjoyed by others. See Eccles. ii. 21. For otherwise, that there are future rewards after death, is asserted by Solomon elsewhere, as we have seen, and shall hereafter see. Is forgotten, to wit, amongst living men, and even in those places where they had lived in great power and glory; as was noted, chap. viii. 10.

6 Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

They neither love, nor hate, nor envy any person or thing in this world, but are now altogether unconcerned in all things done under the sun. In any thing that is done under the sun; in any worldly thing; by which limitation he sufficiently insinuates his belief of their portion in the other world.

7 ¶ Go thy way, [e] eat thy bread with [e] ch. 8. 15. joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God now accepteth thy works.

Go thy way, make this use of what I have said, eat thy bread; thine own, the fruit of thy own labours, not what thou takest unjustly from others. Bread; necessary and convenient food; by which he excludes excess. With a merry heart; cheerfully and thankfully enjoy thy comforts, avoiding all distracting care and grief for the occurrences of this world. God now accepteth thy works; is gracious to thee, hath blessed thy labours with success, and alloweth thee a comfortable enjoyment of his blessings.

Always; in all convenient times and circumstances; for there are times of mourning, Eccles. iii. 4; vii. 2: compare Prov. v. 19. White; decent, and splendid, as far as is suitable to thy condition. The Eastern people of the best sort used white garments, especially in times of rejoicing, as Esth. viii. 15: compare Rev. iii. 4, 5; vi. 11. But by this whiteness of garments, he understands a pleasant and cheerful conversation. Let thy head lack no ointment; which upon joyful occasions was poured upon men's heads, Amos vi. 6; Luke vii. 46; John xii. 3.

9 †Live joyfully with the wife whom † Heb. See, or, enjoy life. thou lovest all the days of the life of thy vanity, which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity: [f] for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun. [f] ch. 2. 10, 24. & 3. 13, 22. & 5. 18.

Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest; so he limits him to lawful delights; whereby it is evident that Solomon doth not speak this in the person of an epicure, as some understand it. Of the life of thy vanity; of this vain and frail life; which expression he industriously useth to moderate men's affections even towards lawful pleasures, and to mind them of their duty and interest in making sure of a better life, and more solid comforts. Thy portion, allowed to thee by God, and the best part of worldly enjoyments, in this life; by which addition he is again admonishing him of seeking another portion in the future life.

10 Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, what thou hast opportunity and ability to do in the duties of thy calling, and in order to thy comfort and benefit, do it with thy might; with unwearied diligence, and vigour, and expedition; whereby he again discovers that he doth not persuade men to an idle and sensual life, but only to a sober enjoyment of his comforts in God's fear, and with an industrious prosecution of his vocation. There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave; thou canst neither design nor act any thing there tending to thy own comfort or advantage; therefore slip not thine only season.

11 ¶ I returned, [g] and saw under the [g] Amos 2. 14, 15. Jer. 9. 23. sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.

I returned, and saw: this may have some respect to the foregoing verse; for having pressed men to labour with all their might, he now adds, by way of caution, that yet they must not be confident of their own strength, as if they were sure of success by it, but in all, above all, to look up to God for his blessing, without which all their endeavours will be in vain. But it seems chiefly to be added, either, 1. As another instance of the liberty and power of God's providence in the disposal of human affairs, of which he spoke above, ver. 1—3. Or, 2. As another of the vanities of this present life. The race; either ability to run, or success and victory in running. The battle; the victory in battle. Men of understanding; who yet are most likely to get and to keep riches. Favour; good acceptance and love from men. Men of skill; who know how to manage themselves and all affairs, whereby they are necessary and serviceable to others, and therefore most likely to find favour in their eyes. Time and chance happeneth to them all; there are some times or seasons unknown and casual to men, but certain and determined by God, in which alone he will give men success.

12 For [h]man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men [i]snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

i Prov. 29. 6. Luke 12. 20, 39. & 17. 26, &c. 1 Thess. 5. 3.

His time, to wit, the time of his death, or of some other sore distress which God is bringing upon him; which is opposed to the time of success mentioned in the foregoing verse, and man is said to be ignorant both of the one and of the other. That are taken in an evil net; that whilst they are sporting and feeding themselves, are suddenly and unexpectedly insnared to their ruin. When it falleth suddenly upon them; when they are most careless and secure.

13 ¶ This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

This wisdom have I seen; I have observed this among many other instances and effects of wisdom; which he seems to add for the commendation of wisdom, notwithstanding its insufficiency for man's safety and happiness without God's blessing. It seemed great unto me; I judged it very praiseworthy, though others despised it, as it follows.

k See 2 Sam. 20. 16, —22.

14 [k]There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

It matters not whether this was a real history, or only a parable to represent the common practices of men in such cases.

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.

He was soon neglected, and his great service so far from being recompensed according to its merit, that both it and he were quite forgotten; which may be noted as another great vanity.

l Prov. 21. 22. & 24. 5. ch. 7. 19. ver. 18.

16 [l]Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless [m]the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.

Wisdom is better than strength, as was manifest in the foregoing instance. The poor man's wisdom is despised, because men are generally vain and foolish, and have a greater value for outward ornaments than for true worth.

17 The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

Wise men, though poor, as may be gathered both from the foregoing relation, and because he is opposed to the ruling fool in the next clause, are heard, to wit, by wise men; or should be heard, as such words are oft taken, as Mal. i. 6, and elsewhere; for that they were not always actually heard, he declared in the last words of the foregoing verse. In quiet; uttered with a modest and low voice, to which the following cry is opposed. The cry, the clamorous and senseless discourses, of him that ruleth among fools; of a rich and potent, but foolish man, who hath some influence upon fools, like himself, but is justly neglected, and his words disregarded, by wise men.

18 [n]Wisdom is better than weapons of war: but [o]one sinner destroyeth much good.

o Josh. 7. 1, 11, 12.

Than weapons of war; than armed power. Sinner; a wicked fool; by which expression and opposition of a sinner to a wise man he gives us a key to understand his meaning in divers places of his books, that by wisdom he means true piety, and by folly wickedness; and withal, showeth that sin, as it is the greatest folly, so it is more pernicious to men than mere folly properly so called. Destroyeth much good; by his wicked counsels and courses brings much damage and mischief, both to himself and others.

CHAP. X.

Observations on wisdom and folly, 1—3. Of rulers, 4—7. Of wrong and injustice, 8—10. Of talkativeness, imprudence, and its mischiefs, 11—15. Kings hurtful and desirable, 16, 17. Of sloth, 18. Feasts, 19. The king must not be cursed, 20.

DEAD †flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour: so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour.

† Heb. Flies of death.

Dead flies falling into it, and abiding and being putrefied in it, especially in those countries, where there were more filthy and venomous flies, and where the ointments were more pure, and where the air was more hot, than in these parts. So doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour; which comes to pass, partly because all the actions, and consequently the follies, of such men are most diligently observed, and soonest discerned, and tossed about in the mouths of men, whereas fools and all their carriages are generally disregarded; and partly because of that envious and malicious disposition of men's minds, which makes them quick-sighted to discover, and glad to hear and forward to declare, the faults of such as by their greater eminency did outshine and obscure them.

A wise man's heart, i. e. his understanding or wisdom, is at his right hand; is always present with him, and ready to direct him in all his actions. He manageth all his affairs prudently and piously. He mentions the right hand, because that is the chief and most common instrument of actions, which by most men are done with more strength, and expedition, and orderliness, and comeliness by their right hand than by their left. A fool's heart at his left; his understanding and knowledge serves him only for idle speculation and vain ostentation, but is not at all useful or effectual to govern his affections and actions. He acts preposterously and foolishly, like one without heart, as it follows.

3 Yea also, when he that is a fool walketh by the way, †his wisdom faileth him, [a]and he saith to every one that he is a fool.

a Prov. 13. 16. & 18. 2.

Walketh by the way; not only in great undertakings, but in his daily conversation with men, in his looks, and gestures, and common talk. His wisdom faileth him; or, he wants a heart; as if he had said, Did I say, his heart is at his left hand? I must recall it, for in truth he hath no heart in him. He saith to every one that he is a fool; he publicly discovers his folly to all that meet him, or converse with him.

4 If the spirit of the ruler rise up against thee, [b]leave not thy place; for [c]yielding pacifieth great offences.

b ch. 8. 3.
c 1 Sam. 25. 24, &c. Prov. 25. 15.

The spirit; the passion or wrath, as is manifest from the following words, which is oft called spirit, as Judg. viii. 3; 2 Chron. xxi. 16; Prov. xxv. 28; Eccles. vii. 9. Leave not thy place, to wit, in anger or discontent. Withdraw not thyself rashly and hastily from his presence and service, according to the advice, chap. viii. 3. Continue in a diligent and faithful discharge of thy duty, as becomes a subject; do not return anger for anger, but modestly and humbly submit thyself to him. Yielding, Heb. healing; a gentle and submissive carriage, which is of a healing nature; whereas pride and passion do exasperate and widen the breach already made. Pacifieth, Heb. maketh them to rest or cease; preventeth or removeth them. Great offences, Heb. great sins; either, 1. Such sins as the offended ruler might commit in the prosecution of his wrath against thee. Or rather, 2. Such as possibly thou hast committed against him, for which he is incensed against thee; or the greatest offences or injuries that one man commits against another, and much more those slight miscarriages of thine towards the ruler. Let not therefore a false opinion concerning his unreconcilableness to thee make thee desperate, and draw thee into rebellion.

5 There is an evil which I have seen under the sun, as an error which proceedeth †from the ruler:

I have observed another great vanity and misdemeanour amongst men. As an error which proceedeth from the ruler; so the sense is, like those errors which rulers commonly commit. Or rather, which is indeed an error proceeding from the ruler; for the following miscarriage must needs come from those who have power of conferring honour and power, &c. So the Hebrew caph is not a note of likeness, but of reality, as it is Judg. xiii. 23; Neh. vii. 2; Hos. iv. 4; v. 10, and oft elsewhere.

6 [d]Folly is set †in great dignity, and the rich sit in low place.

Folly is set in great dignity; foolish and unworthy persons are frequently advanced by the favour or humour of princes into places of highest trust and dignity, which is a great reproach and mischief to the prince, and a sore calamity to all his people. The rich; wise and worthy men, as is evident, because these are opposed to fools in the former clause; such as are rich in endowments of mind. The ground of the expression may be this, that rich men are capable of all the advantages of men or books for the attainment of wisdom, and therefore are supposed to be wise in some measure. Sit in low place; neglected and despised, or removed from those high places to which their merits had raised them.

7 I have seen servants [e]upon horses, and princes walking as servants upon the earth.

e Prov. 19. 10. & 30. 22.

Servants; men of a servile condition and disposition, who are altogether unfit for places of dignity. Upon horses; riding upon horses, as a badge of their dignity, as Esth. vi. 8, 9; Jer. xvii. 25; Ezek. xxiii. 23. Princes walking as servants upon the earth, which was the case of his own father, 2 Sam. xv. 30.

8 [f]He that diggeth a pit shall fall into it; and whoso breaketh an hedge, a serpent shall bite him.

f Ps. 7. 15. Prov. 26. 27.

He that diggeth a pit with this design, that another may unawares fall into it, shall fall into it; shall through God's just judgment be destroyed by his own wicked devices. Breaketh an hedge; whereby another man's fields, or vineyards, or orchards are distinguished and fenced, that he may either enter upon them, and take away their fruits, or by that means enlarge his own adjoining fields. Possibly he may have a particular respect unto magistrates or rulers, whom God hath hedged or fenced in, both with his own institution of magistracy, and with his laws, strictly requiring obedience from their subjects; and so he notes the danger of rising and rebelling against them. A serpent, which oft lurks in hedges, and bites those who come within its reach.

9 Whoso removeth stones shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood shall be endangered thereby.

Whoso removeth stones; either, 1. The stones which belong to others, and limit or distinguish their grounds, of which see Deut. xxvii. 17. Or, 2. Great stones too heavy for them; which rashly attempt things too high and hard for them; which seems better to agree with the following clause than the former interpretation doth. Shall be hurt therewith; may easily receive hurt by the stones falling unexpectedly and violently upon him. He that cleaveth wood, with an iron instrument, as the manner is, he being unskilful in that art. Possibly he designs a man who causeth discord and mischief among friends, or in a family, or kingdom. Shall be endangered thereby; may peradventure cut himself.

10 If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength: but wisdom is profitable to direct.

The iron, to wit, the axe whereby he cut the wood, in the former verse, which by the danger there mentioned may be supposed to be sharp; but now, saith he, if it happen to be blunt. Put to more strength; which is necessary to make it cut. But wisdom is profitable to direct, Heb. and wisdom, &c. And as wisdom instructs a man in the smallest matters, as in this very matter of cutting of wood, where it teaches him in this case to use his utmost strength; so it is useful for a man's direction in all his great and weighty affairs. And so he insensibly slides into the commendation of wisdom, and the censure of folly, which is the principal design and business of this chapter.

11 Surely the serpent will bite [g]without enchantment; and a †babbler is no better.

g Ps. 58. 4, 5. Jer. 8. 17.
† Heb. the master of the tongue.

Without enchantment; if not seasonably prevented by the art and care of the charmer; which practice he doth not justify, but only mention by way of resemblance. See on Psal. lviii. 5. A babbler, Heb. a master of the tongue; which may be understood, either, 1. Of the detractor or slanderer, who like a serpent bites secretly; who may be so called, because he takes liberty to use his tongue as he lists, without any regard either to the offence of God, or to the injury of others; like them who said, Our lips are our own; who is lord over us? But I do not see either why this phrase should be limited to the detractor, which equally belongs to all abusers of the tongue in any other way; or how this particular vice of detraction comes to be inserted here among things of a quite differing nature. Or, 2. Of an eloquent person, who may well be called a master of the tongue, or of speech, nothing being more usual in the Hebrew, than to call a man master of that which he excels in, or hath a full and free power to use. And this clause is and may be rendered thus, And there is no excellency or profit to the master of the tongue, i. e. the most eloquent person, who doth not understand and in due time use the charmer's art, cannot by all his eloquence afterward hinder the biting of the serpent, or mischievous effects of it; and so this agrees with the principal scope of the chapter, which is to show the necessity and usefulness of wisdom, and the mischief of folly.

12 [h]The words of a wise man's mouth are †gracious; but [i]the lips of a fool will swallow up himself.

h Prov. 10. 32. & 12. 13.
i Prov. 10. 14. & 18. 7.

Gracious, Heb. grace; as profitable, so also acceptable to others, procuring him favour with those who hear him. Will swallow up himself; his discourses are ungracious and offensive to others, and therefore pernicious to himself.

13 The beginning of the words of his mouth is foolishness: and the end of †his talk is mischievous madness.

All his talk from the beginning to the end is foolish and mischievous, and the more he talks, the more doth his folly appear; he proceeds from evil to worse, and adds wilfulness to his weakness, and never desists till he hath done mischief to himself or to others.

14 [k]A fool also †is full of words: a man cannot tell what shall be; and [l]what shall be after him, who can tell him?

k Prov. 15. 2.
l ch. 3. 22. & 6. 12. & 8. 7.

Full of words; either, 1. Talkative. Or, 2. Forward to promise and brag what he will do, which is the common practice of foolish men; he is a man of words, as we use to say. Who can tell him? these words contain either, 1. A mimical representation of his folly in using vain repetitions of the same words, such as those, a man cannot tell, &c., and who can tell, &c. Or, 2. A confutation of folly in promising or boasting of things which are wholly out of his power; for what shall be no man can either himself foreknow, or learn it from others.

15 The labour of the foolish wearieth every one of them, because he knoweth not how to go to the city.

Fools discover their folly, as by their words, of which he hath hitherto spoken, so also by their actions, and by their endless and fruitless endeavours after things which are too high and hard for them. For he is ignorant of those things which are most easy and most necessary for him, as of the way to the great city whither he is going, or obliged by his business to go, which being a great and beaten road, is known even to children and natural fools.

m Is. 3. 4, 5, 12. & 5. 11.

16 ¶ [m] Woe to thee, O land, when thy king is a child, and thy princes eat in the morning!

A child; either, 1. In age. Or, 2. (which is more agreeable to the following clause) In childish qualities, as ignorance, inexperience, injudiciousness, rashness, frowardness, fickleness, or wilfulness, and the like, in which sense this word is used, 2 Chron. xiii. 7, compared with 1 Kings xiv. 21; Isa. iii. 4, 12; 1 Cor. xiv. 20; Eph. iv. 14. Thy princes eat; give up themselves to eating and drinking excessively and intemperately, as it is explained in the next verse. In the morning; the fittest time for God's service, and for the despatch of weighty affairs, and for sitting in judgment, Psal. ci. 8; Jer. xxi. 12. Which circumstance is added as a plain evidence of men that wholly devote themselves to vanity and luxury; which must needs occasion gross neglect of the great concerns of the kingdom, the oppression of the people to support such extravagancies, and a woeful and general corruption of the people by their example, and otherwise; which makes him say, Woe to that people!

17 Blessed art thou, O land, when thy king is the son of nobles, and [n] thy princes eat in due season, for strength, and not for drunkenness!

n Prov. 31. 4.

The son of nobles; not so much by birth, as even the worst of kings commonly are, and have been, as by their noble and worthy dispositions, and endowments, and carriages; for such a one is opposed to the child in the former verse. Sons of nobles are put for noble persons, as the sons of men for men, and the sons of physicians for physicians. Eat in due season; so as may further, and not hinder, their main business. For strength; to refresh and strengthen their natures, that they may be fit for action and business. Not for drunkenness; not only nor chiefly to please their palates, and indulge themselves in sensuality.

18 ¶ By much slothfulness the building decayeth; and through idleness of the hands the house droppeth through.

That house which is neglected by its owner, and not repaired, must needs come to ruin; whereby he intimates that the sloth and carelessness of princes in the management of public affairs, which is a usual attendant upon that luxury of which he hath now discoursed, is most destructive, both to themselves and to their people.

19 ¶ A feast is made for laughter, and [o] wine †maketh merry: but money answereth all things.

o Ps. 104. 15. † Heb. maketh glad the life.

The design and effect of feasting and drinking wine is, that men may exhilarate their minds with the society of their friends, and with the use of the creatures. Money answereth all things; it procures not only meat and drink for feasting, but for all other things; as the heavens are said to answer the earth, when they give it those showers which it desires and needs to make it fruitful, Hos. ii. 21. And this clause seems to be added as an aggravation of the sin and folly of luxury, because princes do thereby waste that money and treasure which is so highly necessary for the support and preservation of themselves, and of their kingdoms, and are forced to squeeze money out of their people by oppressive, and dishonourable, and dangerous practices, that they may have more to spend in riotous courses.

20 ¶ [p] Curse not the king, no not in thy ‖ thought; and curse not the rich in thy bedchamber: for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter.

Curse not the king. Having spoken of the miscarriages of kings, he now gives a caution to their subjects, that they should not thence take occasion to speak irreverently or contemptuously of them, or wish or design any evil against their persons or government; for though vices may be condemned, wheresoever they are, yet both reverence and obedience are due to magistrates, as they are God's vicegerents and ordinances, notwithstanding their vices, as is manifest from Rom. xiii. 1, &c.; 1 Pet. ii. 13, &c. In thy thought; in the most secret manner, by giving way to such thoughts or affections; for these will very probably break forth into such words and practices. Curse not the rich; the princes or governors under the king, who are commonly rich; or any other rich men, who can oppress or punish thee by their wealth, as well as kings can do it by their power. In thy bed-chamber, where thy wife or servant may hear thee, and afterwards through folly or passion discover it to thy ruin. A bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter; the king will hear of it by unknown and unsuspected hands, as if a bird had chanced to be at the window when thou didst speak the words, and did hear them, and carry the report of it unto the king. It is a proverbial expression, as when we say, Hedges have ears, and, The walls will speak. Hence kings are said to have long ears.

CHAP. XI.

Liberality to the poor commanded. We know not what we may come to: God giveth rain plentifully; and our time of doing good is short: not too much regarding difficulties: the providence of God is full of mysterious events; which must quicken us to duty and diligence, 1—6. Life sweet; but the days of death shall be many, 7, 8. Young men are exhorted in the midst of their delights to think of the day of judgment, 9, 10.

CAST thy bread [a] †upon the waters: [b] for thou shalt find it after many days.

a See Isa. 32. 20. † Heb. upon the face of the waters. b Deut. 15. 10. Prov. 19. 17. Matt. 10. 42. 2 Cor. 9. 8. Gal. 6. 9, 10. Heb. 6. 10.

Cast thy bread upon the waters. Solomon having discovered divers vanities, and amongst others the vanity of heaping up riches, he now teacheth us that it is our interest as well as duty, not so much to lay them up, as to lay them out in pious and charitable uses; and having taught us the true and best use of worldly things, for our present comfort and benefit, which is to enjoy them with a cheerful and contented mind, he now directs us to the best improvement of them, for our future and greater advantage; and having acquainted us with our duty towards our superiors, he now directs us in our carriage towards our inferiors, and especially to such of them as are poor. The sense of these words is either, 1. Cast thy seed (which is here called bread, as it is also Job xxviii. 5; Isa. xxviii. 28, and elsewhere) beside (for so the Hebrew particle al is oft used) the waters, i. e. either by the river's side, or in moist and waterish grounds, which usually are very fruitful. Or, 2. Cast (freely and liberally bestow) thy bread (i. e. thy money or provisions, which are oft signified by the name of bread. By saying thy bread, he cautions us that we give away only that which is our own, and not that which is another's; as they do who give either what they get from others by fraud or power, or what they owe to others, and are unable to pay, and so exercise charity to the hinderance of justice, or of the payment of their just debts) upon the waters, i. e. upon those poor creatures upon whom, by reason of their unthankfulness or inability to make any returns to thee, it may seem to be as utterly lost as the seed which a man casts into the sea or river. This sense agrees much better, 1. With the words; for he doth not barely mention the waters, (for then the particle al might have been translated beside,) but the face, i. e. the surface or top, of the waters, in which and such-like cases al constantly signifies upon. 2. With the design and scope of the place, which is to persuade men to be liberal and charitable, notwithstanding the discouragements which they meet with in so doing, of which see the next clause, and the next verse. Thou shalt find it; it shall not be lost, as covetous men, or thine own corrupt heart, may suggest, but it shall certainly be restored unto thee, either by God or by men, and that with great honour and advantage. This is added to prevent an objection, and to quicken us to the duty enjoined. After many days; not immediately, but in due time, and when you least expect it. So you must be content to wait for it with patience, as the husbandman doth for the fruits of the earth.

c Ps. 112. 9. Luke 6. 30. 1 Tim. 6. 18, 19. d Mic. 5. 5. e Eph. 5. 16.

2 [c]Give a portion [d]to seven, and also to eight; [e]for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth.

Give a portion; a part of thy estate or provisions. He alludes to the ancient custom, whereby the master of the feast did distribute several parts to each guest, and withal sent portions to the poor; of which custom see 2 Sam. vi. 19; Neh. viii. 10, 12; Esth. ix. 22. To seven, and also to eight; to as many as thou art able; a certain number for an uncertain, as Micah v. 5, and oft elsewhere. Thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth; great calamities may come, whereby thou mayst be brought to poverty, and so both utterly lose that blessed opportunity of doing good, which now thou hast in thine hands, whereby thou mayst gain unspeakable honour, and comfort, and advantage to thyself, and moreover need the charity of others, which thou mayst comfortably expect, either from men, or at least from the powerful providence of God, disposing the hearts of men to pity and help thee, if thou hast been kind and merciful to others; as, on the contrary, they can expect no mercy from God or men, who have showed no mercy to others. Thus he not only answers, but retorts, the argument by which the covetous man excuseth his uncharitableness, because he must lay up against a rainy day.

If the clouds be full of rain, they empty themselves upon the earth: learn, O man, the practice of liberality from the very lifeless creatures, from the clouds; which when they are filled with water, do not hoard it up, or keep it to themselves, but plentifully pour it forth for the refreshment both of the fruitful field and of the barren wilderness. In the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be: these words contain either, 1. An argument to persuade men to charity, because they must shortly fall or die, and then all opportunity of being charitable will be lost, and they must expect certainly and eternally to reap whatsoever they have sown, whether it hath been mercy or unmercifulness. Or rather, 2. An answer to a common objection against it, because we are not certain whether the person who desires our charity doth really need it, or be worthy of it. To this he answers, As a tree when it falls, either by the violence of the wind, or being cut down by its owner's order, it is not considerable whether it falls southward or northward, for there it lies ready for the master's use; so thy charity, though it may possibly be misapplied by thee, or abused by the receiver, yet being conscientiously given by thee, it shall assuredly return to thee, and thou shalt reap the fruit of it.

4 He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap.

He who neglects or delays the necessary works of sowing and reaping, because the weather is not exactly suitable to his desires, may possibly lose his harvest; whereby he intimates what is easily understood out of the foregoing verses, that men will never do good here, which is expressed by sowing, Psal. cxii. 9; 2 Cor. ix. 6, and consequently not receive good hereafter, which is called reaping, Gal. vi. 7, 8, if they be discouraged and hindered from it by every doubt or difficulty, such as covetous worldlings object to themselves, that others either do not want their charity, or will abuse it, that they may possibly need it hereafter.

5 As [f]thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit, [g]nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child: even so thou knowest not the works of God who maketh all.

Of the spirit; of the spirit or soul of man, how it first comes into the body of the child in the womb, whether from God by creation, or from the parents by propagation; nor how it is united with and so fixed in the body, that it cannot get out of it when it would; nor how and whither it goes out of the body; all which things are great mysteries. Others translate it, of the wind, whence it cometh, and whither it goeth, as is observed John iii. 8, or how violently it will blow, or how long it will last. But the former translation seems to agree better with the following clause. The bones, i. e. the whole body, which is elsewhere signified by the bones, as Psal. xxxiv. 20; xxxv. 10, because they are a principal part, and the very foundation and support, of the body. Grow in the womb; how it comes to pass that one and the same small quantity of seed should diversify itself into skin, and flesh, and sinews, and veins, and bones, and entrails, or how it receiveth nourishment and growth. The works of God; what God is doing and will do with thee and others; the counsels and methods of God's providence in the future time of thy life, what evil God will send upon the earth, ver. 2, or what weather he will send, of which ver. 4, how long or how little a while God will continue thy life or estate, and how soon God will call thee to an account. These and many other future events thou canst not foresee, and therefore thy wisdom and duty is to cast off all distracting cares and distrustful fears about them, and cheerfully to commit thyself, and all thy affairs, into the hand of God in well doing.

6 In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether †shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.

In the morning, and in the evening; early and late, in all seasons and occasions; do it speedily and continually, be not weary of it. Sow thy seed; do all good works, and especially that of almsgiving, as sowing is understood, 2 Cor. ix. 6; Gal. vi. 7. Withhold not thine hand from working or giving. Whether shall prosper; which shall prosper most, as the next clause explains it; the positive degree being put for the comparative, or the superlative, which is not unusual in the Hebrew text. Which shall best answer thine end, or do most good to others, or which shall tend most to the comfort of thy great and last account; for thy morning alms may possibly be given to an unworthy person, or to one who did not need it, and will abuse it, and thy evening alms may fall upon a person of eminent worth, yea, upon an angel in human shape, which is remembered as a motive to hospitality, Heb. xiii. 2, or upon one in extreme necessity, who might possibly have perished both in soul and body, if thou hadst not comforted and relieved him: or one time thou mayst give with more sincere intention, and with more tender compassion, than another time, and so one will be more right and more acceptable to God than the other. Alike good; equally successful to the receiver, or to the giver.

7 ¶ Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes [h]to behold the sun:

h ch. 7. 11.

It cannot be denied that this present life (which is called light, Job iii. 20; xxxiii. 30; Psal. lvi. 13, and which is expressed synecdochically, by seeing the sun, Eccles. vi. 5; vii. 11) is in itself a great blessing, and very desirable; but it is not perpetual nor satisfactory; which is here implied and expressed in the next verse.

8 But if a man live many years, and rejoice in them all; yet let him remember the days of darkness; for they shall be many. All that cometh is vanity.

Live many years; which is a privilege granted but to few persons comparatively. And rejoice in them all; and suppose he enjoy all the comforts, and escape all the imbitterments, of human life, all his days; which also is a great rarity. Let him remember, it is his duty and interest seriously to consider, the days of darkness; of death, or of the state of the dead, which is oft expressed by darkness, as Job x. 21; Psal. lxxxviii. 12, &c., and here is opposed to the foregoing light. They shall be many, i. e. far more than the days of this short life, especially if to the time of lying in the grave be added that greater and utter darkness which is reserved for impenitent sinners, and which is everlasting, Matt. xxii. 13; xxv. 30; 2 Pet. ii. 17; Jude 13. And this is added for the caution of mankind, that they may not rejoice excessively in, nor content themselves with, the happiness of the present life, but may seek for something more durable, and more satisfactory. All that cometh; all things which befall any man belonging only to this life, whether they be comfortable or vexatious, they are but vain and inconsiderable, because they are short and transitory.

9 ¶ Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in i Num. 15. 39. the days of thy youth, [i]and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all k ch. 12. 14. Rom. 2. 6,—11. these things [k]God will bring thee into judgment.

This verse is to be understood either, 1. As a serious advice to this purpose, Seeing life is short and transitory, improve it to the best advantage, take comfort in it whilst you may, only do it with moderation, and the fear of God. Or rather, 2. As an ironical concession, such as are usual both in Scripture, as 1 Kings xviii. 27; xxii. 15; Ezek. xxviii. 3, 4; Matt. xxvi. 45, and in other authors; for this agrees much better with the context, and with the expressions here used. And so the sense is, I foresee what evil use some men will make of what I have now said. Things being thus, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die; as they also reasoned, 1 Cor. xv. 32. O young man; he speaks to young men particularly, because they have both the greatest ability and the strongest inclinations to pursue sensual pleasures, and are most impatient either of restraint or admonition. Let thy heart cheer thee; indulge thy frolic and jolly humour, and take thy fill of delights. Walk in the way of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; whatsoever thine eye or heart lusteth after, deny it not to them; as this phrase is taken, Numb. xv. 39, nor is it ever used in a good sense. Compare Job xxxi. 7; Psal. lxxxi. 12; Jer. xviii. 12; 2 Pet. ii. 14; 1 John ii. 16. But know thou; but in the midst of thy feastings and jollity it will become thee, if thou art a reasonable creature, to consider thy reckoning, and whether thou dost not purchase thy gold too dear. For all these things, for all thy follies and sinful lusts, which thou slightest as tricks of youth, God will bring thee into judgment; will force thee to appear before his judgment-seat, to give a serious account of all thy youthful and exorbitant courses, and to receive that sentence which thy own conscience will then say thou dost justly deserve. And if thou likest thy sensuality upon these terms, much good may it do thee; I do not envy thee, nor desire to partake of thy delicates.

‖ Or, anger. 10 Therefore remove ‖sorrow from thy
l 2 Cor. 7. 1. 2 Tim. 2. 22. heart, and [l]put away evil from thy flesh:
m Ps. 39. 5. [m]for childhood and youth are vanity.

Sorrow, i. e. sensual and disorderly lusts, which he elegantly and emphatically calls sorrow, with respect to the foregoing words, to intimate, that although such practices do at present gratify and delight men's senses and vain minds, yet they will shortly and certainly bring a man to intolerable and eternal sorrows, which it is thy wisdom to prevent. Sorrow; or, as it is rendered in the margin, and by divers others, anger; a passion to which men are most prone in the heat of youth; whereby he may understand either anger against him for this sharp admonition; or rather against God, who hath laid such severe restraints upon them, and threatens such punishments to them for following their own natural inclinations. So the sense is, Do not quarrel with thy Judge, but submit and make thy peace with him by declaring war against all thy sins. Evil; all evil concupiscences or lusts, which though now they seem good to thee, will another day appear to be very evil and bitter things. From thy flesh; from thy bodily members; which he mentions not exclusively, as if he would allow them their spiritual evils; but emphatically, because young men, to whom he is here speaking, are most given to fleshly or bodily lusts. Childhood and youth are vanity, i. e. most vain, either, 1. In their temper and dispositions. Young men are frothy, and foolish, and inconsiderate, whereby they run into manifold dangers, and therefore they shall do well to hearken to the counsels of those who by their greater wisdom and experience are more capable judges of these matters. Or, 2. In their condition. The time of youth is vanishing and transitory, and old age and death will speedily come, against which every man in his wits will take care to lay in solid provisions and comforts.

CHAP. XII.

Early piety recommended before old age come on and death be near: old age described, and death, 1—7. The conclusion: all is vanity, 8. The preacher's end in this book, 9—12. The sum of all learning, experience, and happiness is to fear God, and keep his commandments, because God will bring all to judgment, 13, 14.

REMEMBER [a]now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days a Prov. 22. 6. Lam. 3. 27. come not, nor the years draw nigh, [b]when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure b See 2 Sam. 19. 35. in them;

Remember, to wit, practically, or so as to fear, and love, and faithfully serve and worship him, which when men do not, they are said to forget God, Psal. ix. 17; cvi. 21, and in many other places. Thy Creator; the first author and continual preserver of thy life and being, and of all the perfections and enjoyments which accompany it, to whom thou hast the highest and strongest obligations to do so, and upon whom thou hast a constant and necessary dependence, and therefore to forget him is most unnatural, and inhuman, and disingenuous. In the days of thy youth; for then thou art most able to do it, and thou owest the best of thy time and strength to God; then thou hast opportunity to do it, and thou mayst not live to old age; then it will be most acceptable to God, and most comfortable to thyself, as the best evidence of thy sincerity, and the best provision for old age and death; and then it is most necessary for the conquering those impetuous lusts and passions which drown so many thousands of young men in perdition, both in this life and in that to come. The evil days; the time of old age, which is evil, i. e. burdensome and calamitous in itself, and far more grievous and terrible when it is loaded with the sad remembrance of a man's youthful follies and lusts, and with the dreadful prospect of approaching death and judgment, which makes him see that he cannot live, and yet dare not die, and with the consideration and experience of the hardness of his heart, which in that age is rarely brought to true repentance, and so generally expires either in vain presumption, or in hellish desperation. I have no pleasure in them; my life is now bitter and burdensome to me, and worse than death; which is frequently the condition of old age.

2 While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened, nor the clouds return after the rain:

While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars be not darkened, Heb. While the sun, and the light, and the moon, &c. That clause, and the light, seems to be added to signify that he speaks of the darkening of the sun, and moon, and stars, not in themselves, or in their own bodies, but only in respect of that light which they afford to men. And therefore the same clause which is expressed after the sun, is to be understood after the moon and stars, as is very usual in Scripture in like cases. And those expressions are to be understood either, 1. Literally, of the dim-sightedness of old men, by reason whereof the light of the sun, &c. seems dark to them; which seems not to agree with the context, partly because the dimness of their sight is expressed in the next verse, and partly because both this and the following verses are wholly allegorical. Or rather, 2. Figuratively, and that either, 1. Of the outward parts of the body, and especially of the face, the beauty of the countenance, the lightsome and pleasant complexion of the cheeks, the liveliness of the eyes, which are compared to the sun, and moon, and stars, and which are obscured in old age, as the Chaldee paraphrast understands it. Or, 2. Of the inward parts of the mind, the understanding, fancy, memory, which may not unfitly be resembled to the sun, and moon, and stars, and all which are sensibly decayed in most old men. For it may seem improbable that Solomon in his description of the infirmities of old age should omit the decays of the most noble part of man, which are commonly incident to old age. And yet, with submission to those worthy persons who think otherwise, it seems not necessary that he should here speak of those inward decays, partly, because they are not so general in old men as the decays of the body are; partly, because he here directeth his speech to sensual men, who are more affected with corporal than with intellectual maladies; and partly, because both the foregoing and following passages concern the state of men's bodies, and their outward condition. Or rather, 3. Of external things, and of the great change of their joy and prosperity, which they had in their youthful time, into sorrow and manifold calamities, which are usually the companions of old age; for this interpretation seems best to agree both with the foregoing verse, in which he describes the miseries of old age, and with the following clause, which is added to explain and determine those otherwise ambiguous expressions; and with the Scripture use of this phrase, which is the best key for the understanding of Scripture; for a state of comfort and happiness is oft described by the light of the sun, &c., as Judg. v. 31; 2 Sam. xxiii. 4; Isa. xxx. 26; lx. 20, and a time and state of great trouble is set forth by the darkening of the light of the sun, &c., as Isa. xiii. 9, &c.; xxiv. 23; Joel ii. 10; iii. 15; Matt. xxiv. 29, and oft elsewhere. Nor the clouds return after the rain: this phrase notes a perpetual succession and reciprocation of rain, and clouds bringing rain, and then rain and clouds again, and so without end; whereby he expresseth either, 1. The rheums or defluctions which do abundantly and incessantly flow in and from old men, for want of natural heat and strength to prevent or remove them. Or rather, 2. The continual vicissitude of infirmities, diseases, and griefs in old men, one deep calling upon another, and one affliction beginning at the end of another; whereas in young men after rain the clouds are dispersed, and fair weather succeeds.

3 In the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves, and ‖ the grinders cease because they are few, and those that look out of the windows be darkened,

The keepers of the house, i. e. of the body, which is oft and fitly compared to a house, as Job iv. 19; Psal. cxix. 54; 2 Cor. v. 1; whose keepers here are either, 1. The ribs and bones into which they are fastened, which are the guardians of the inward and vital parts, which also are much weakened and shaken by old age. Or rather, 2. The hands and arms, which are man's best instruments to defend his body from the assaults of men or beasts, and which in a special manner are subject to this trembling, by paralytical or other like distempers, that are most incident to old men. The strong men; either the back, or the thighs and legs, in which the main strength of the body doth consist, which in old men are very feeble, and unable both for the support of the body and for motion. The grinders; the teeth, those especially which are commonly so called, because they grind the meat which we eat. Cease, to wit, to perform their office, because they are few, Heb. because they are diminished, either, 1. In strength. Or, 2. In number; being here one, and there another, and not united together, and one directly against another, and consequently unfit for their work. Those that look out of the windows; the eyes. By windows he understands either, 1. The holes in which the eyes are fixed, Zech. xiv. 12. Or, 2. The eye-lids, which, like windows, are either opened or shut. Or, 3. Those humours and coats of the eyes noted by anatomists, which are the chief instruments by which the eye sees.

4 And the doors shall be shut in the streets, when the sound of the grinding is low, and he shall rise up at the voice of the bird, and all [c] the daughters of musick shall be brought low;

[c] 2 Sam. 19. 35.

The doors be shut in the streets; or, towards the streets; which lead into the streets. This is understood either, 1. Literally; because men, when they are very old, keep much at home, and have neither strength nor inclination to go abroad. Or rather, 2. Allegorically, as all the other clauses are understood. And so the doors are either, 1. The outward senses, which, as doors, let in outward objects to the soul. Or rather, 2. The mouth, or the two lips, here expressed by a word of the dual number, which are oft called a door, both in Scripture, as Psal. cxli. 3; Micah vii. 5, and in other authors, which, like a door, open or shut the way which leads into the streets or common passages of the body, such as the gullet, and stomach, and all the bowels, as also the windpipe and lungs; which also are principal instruments both of speaking and eating. And these are said to be shut, not simply and absolutely, as if they did never eat, or drink, or speak; but comparatively, because men in extreme old age grow dull and listless, having little or no appetite to eat, and are very much indisposed for discourse, and speak but seldom. When the sound of the grinding is low; or, because the sound, &c. So this may be added, not as a new symptom of old age, but only as the reason of the foregoing symptom. The sense is, When or because the teeth, called the grinders, ver. 3, are loose and few, whereby both his speech is low, and the noise which he makes in eating is but small. And this is one great cause of his indisposedness both to eating and to speaking. Some understand this of concoction, which after a sort doth grind the meat in the stomach, and in the other parts appointed by God for that work. But that is transacted inwardly, and without all noise or sound. He shall rise up, to wit, from his bed, being weary with lying, and unable to get sleep, at the voice of the bird; either, 1. Upon the smallest noise; which doth not consist with that deafness incident to old men, and described in the next words. Or rather, 2. As soon as the birds begin to chirp, which is early in the morning, whereas children and young men can lie and sleep long in the morning. The daughters of music; all those senses or parts of the body which are employed in music and song, as well those which make it, as the parts of and within the mouth, as those which receive it, to wit, the ears. Shall be brought low; shall be cast down from their former excellency; they are become incapable either of making music, or of delighting in it.

5 Also when they shall be afraid of that which is high, and fears shall be in the way, and the almond tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail: because man goeth to [d] his long home, and [e] the mourners go about the streets:

They shall be afraid; the passion of fear is observed to be most incident to old men, of which divers reasons may be given. Of that which is high; either, 1. Of high things, lest they should fall upon them. Or rather, 2. Of high places, of going up hills or stairs, which is very irksome to them, because of their weakness, and weariness, and giddiness, and danger, or dread of falling. And this clause, together with the next, may be rendered thus, and that agreeably to the Hebrew text, Also they shall be afraid and terrified (two words expressing the same thing, which is very frequent in the Hebrew) of that which is high in the way. When they walk abroad, they will dread to go up any high or steep places. And fears shall be in the way, lest as they are walking, they should stumble, or fall, or be thrust down, or some infirmity or mischief should befall them. The almond tree shall flourish; their heads shall be as full of grey hairs as the almond tree is of white flowers. Such metaphors are not unusual in other authors. Hence Sophocles calls a grey or hoary head flowery, and again, covered with white flowers. The grasshopper shall be a burden, if it doth accidentally hop up and rest upon them. They cannot endure the least burden, being indeed a burden to themselves. But the words may be, and are by others, rendered, the locust (as the ancient interpreters and many others render it; or, as ours and some others, the grasshopper, which comes to the same thing; for these two sorts of insects are much of the same nature and shape) shall be a burden to itself. And by the locust or grasshopper may be understood, either, 1. The old man himself, who bears some resemblance to it; in shape, by reason of the bones sticking out; in the constitution of the body, which is dry and withering; and in the legs and arms, which are slender, the flesh being consumed. Or, 2. The back, which fitly follows after the head, upon which the almond tree flourished, in which the strength of the body lay, and which formerly was able to bear great burdens, but now, through its weakness and crookedness, is a burden too heavy for itself. And some of the Jewish and other interpreters understand this word, which others render locust or grasshopper, to be some part of the body, either the back-bone, or the head of the thigh-bone, or the ankle-bone, any of which may well be said to be heavy or burdensome to itself, when it moves slowly and listlessly, and not without difficulty and trouble. Desire, to wit, of meats, and drinks, and music, and other carnal delights, which are vehemently desired by men in the heat of their youth, but are unsavoury to old men; of which see an instance 2 Sam. xix. 35. It is true, the former expressions are metaphorical, but the two next following are proper, and to be understood literally; and so may this clause also. Man goeth, is travelling towards it, and every day nearer to it than other, to his long home; from this place of his pilgrimage into the grave, from whence he must never return into this world, and into the state and place of the future life, which is unchangeable and everlasting. The mourners; either such as were hired to that end, of whom see on Jer. ix. 17; Matt. ix. 23; xi. 17, or true mourners, near relations, and dear friends, accompany the dead corpse through the streets to the grave.

This verse is to be understood either, 1. Literally, of the ornaments of life, such as chains, and jewels, and vessels of gold and silver, and of the instruments by which the necessary provisions and supports of life are conveyed to us, such as fountains of water, and pitchers, &c.; which may be said to be loosed or broken, because they are neglected as useless things to the dead man. Or rather, 2. Allegorically, of those inward parts of man's body which are the chief instruments of life, or sense and motion, and of the vital or animal operations, whether such from which they first proceed, or in which they are first elaborated and contained, which may fitly be compared to a bowl, and fountain, or cistern; or such by which they are derived or conveyed to the several parts of the body, which are very conveniently designed by the cord, and pitcher, and wheel; all which are truly said to be loosed or broken, i. e. dissolved, or become useless and insufficient for the performance of their several functions. This in the general. But it seems most probable that Solomon, who was so profound a philosopher, and doubtless had an accurate knowledge of all the parts of man's body, and their several offices and operations, doth by these several expressions describe so many particular parts and offices. By the silver cord, it is generally and most probably conceived that he understands the pith or marrow of the back-bone, which comes from the brain, and thence goeth down to the very lowest end of the back-bone, together with the nerves and sinews, which, as anatomists observe, are nothing else but the production and continuation of the marrow. And this is most aptly compared to a cord, both for its figure, which is very long and round, and for its use, which is to draw and move the parts of the body; and to silver, both for its excellency and colour, which is white and bright, even in a dead, and much more in a living body. And this may properly be said to be loosed, or dissolved, or broken, or removed, as others render the word, the sense of all these translations being the same, because it is relaxed, or obstructed, or otherwise disenabled for its proper service. And answerably hereunto, by the golden bowl he understands the membranes of the brain, and especially that innermost membrane which is called by anatomists the pious mother, because it doth with a motherly care defend the brain, and assist and govern its actions, which insinuates itself into all the parts of the brain, following it in its various windings and turnings, keeping each parcel of it in its proper place, and distinguishing and dividing one part from another, to prevent disorder and mischief. This is not unfitly called a bowl, partly because it is round, and partly because it receives and contains in it all the substance of the brain; and a golden bowl, partly, for its great preciousness and usefulness; partly, for its ductility, being drawn out into a great thinness or fineness, as gold is capable of being drawn forth into thinner plates than other metals can bear; and partly, for its colour, which is somewhat yellow, and comes nearer to that of gold than any other part of the body doth. And this is well said to be broken, as for the reason above noted, so because upon the approach of death it is commonly shrivelled up, and many times broken. And as these two former clauses concern the brain, and the animal powers, so the two following clauses of this verse respect the spring and seat of the vital powers and operations, and of the blood, the great instrument thereof, which hath been commonly conceived, and consequently is here understood, to be the liver, but more truly and certainly is the heart, which is now known and confessed to be the source of the blood. And so Solomon here describes the chief organs or vessels appointed for the production, and distribution, and circulation of the blood in man's body. For although the doctrine of the circulation of the blood hath lain hid and unknown for very many generations together, and therefore the honour of the invention of it is justly ascribed to a famous physician of our country, yet it is not improbably supposed by some that it was well known to Solomon, although after his times it was lost, as doubtless many other things were, which he wrote concerning plants, and other things. According to this notion the fountain here is the right ventricle of the heart, which is now acknowledged to be the spring of life, and of the vital spirits, and the pitcher is the veins which convey the blood from it to other parts, and especially that arterious vein, as anatomists call it, by which it is transmitted to the lungs, and thence to the left ventricle of the heart, where it is better elaborated, and then by the pulse thrust out into the great artery, called arteria aorta, and by its branches dispersed into all the parts of the body, to give them life and vigour, which being done, the residue of the blood is carried back by the veins into the right ventricle of the heart, whence it is disposed, as hath been now mentioned, and so runs in a perpetual round, unless it be obstructed by some disorder in the body. And the cistern is the left ventricle of the heart, and the wheel seems to be the great artery which is joined to it, which is very fitly so called, because it is the first and great instrument of this rotation or circulation of the blood, which by its pulse is forcibly thrust out into all the parts of the body, whence by various windings and turnings it returns thither again, and so is sent again upon the same journey, which in like manner it performs again and again, as long as life and health continue; and when any of these parts are disenabled for the discharge of their offices, then are they fitly said to be broken. The pitcher may be said to be broken at the fountain, when the veins do not return the blood to the heart, but suffer it to stand still and cool within them, whence comes that coldness of the outward parts, which is a near forerunner of death. And the wheel may be said to be broken at the cistern, when the great arteries do not perform their office of conveying the blood into the left ventricle of the heart, and of thrusting it out thence into the lesser arteries, whence comes that ceasing of the pulse, which is a certain sign of approaching death.

7 [f]Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: [g]and the spirit shall return unto God [h]who gave it.

[f] Gen. 3. 19. Job 34. 15. Ps. 90. 3. [g] ch. 3. 21. [h] Num. 16. 22. & 27. 16. Job 34. 14. Is. 57. 16. Zech. 12. 1.

The dust; the body, called dust, both for its original, which was from the dust, and to signify its vile and corruptible nature, Job iv. 19; xxx. 19; Psal. ciii. 14. Return to the earth as it was; whence it was first taken. He alludes to that passage, Gen. iii. 19. The spirit; the soul of man, frequently so called, as Gen. ii. 7; Psal. xxxi. 5, &c., because it is of a spiritual or immaterial nature. Return unto God; into his presence, and before his tribunal, that there it may be sentenced to its everlasting habitations, either to abide with God for ever, if it be approved by him, or otherwise to be eternally shut out from his presence and favour. Who gave it, to wit, in a peculiar manner, by his creating power; for in a general sense God giveth to every seed his own body, 1 Cor. xv. 38; hence he is called the Father of spirits, Heb. xii. 9.

8 ¶ [i]Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher; all is vanity.

This sentence, wherewith he began this book, he here repeateth in the end of it, partly as that which he had proved in all the foregoing discourse, and partly as that which naturally and necessarily followed from both the branches of the assertion now laid down, ver. 7.

‖ Or, the more wise the preacher was, &c.

9 And ‖ moreover, because the preacher was wise, he still taught the people knowledge; yea, he gave good heed, and k 1 Kings 4. 32. sought out, and [k]set in order many proverbs.

The preacher was wise; which he affirmeth not out of vain ostentation, but partly to procure the more credit and acceptance to his doctrine and counsel here delivered; and partly to declare his repentance for his former follies, and God's great mercy in restoring his wisdom to him. Taught the people knowledge; as God gave him this wisdom, that he might be a teacher of others, so he used it to that end; therefore despise not his counsel. He gave good heed; he did not rashly and foolishly utter whatsoever came into his mind or mouth, but seriously pondered both his matter and words. Sought out; both by the exercise of his own mind, and by reading and learning from others. Set in order; or, directed or fitted. He selected such as were most useful. Many proverbs; excellent and wise sayings, which are oft called proverbs, as was noted before upon the Book of Proverbs.

10 The preacher sought to find out
† Heb. words of delight. † acceptable words: and that which was written was upright, even words of truth.

Acceptable words, Heb. desirable or delightful, worthy of all acceptation, such as would minister comfort and profit to the hearers or readers. Written by the preacher in this and his other books. Upright, Heb. right or straight, agreeable to the mind or will of God, which is the rule of right, not crooked or perverse. Words of truth; not fables cunningly devised to deceive the simple, but true and certain doctrines, which commend themselves to men's own consciences or reasons; wholesome and edifying counsels.

11 The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, which are given from one shepherd.

The words of the wise; not of secularly or politicly wise men, but of the spiritually wise and holy men of God; of which, and not of the former, this whole context treats. As goads, and as nails, piercing into men's dull minds and hard hearts, and quickening and provoking them to the practice of all their duties. Fastened; which do not only amuse and startle men for the present, as the wise and grave counsels of moral philosophers frequently do, but make powerful and abiding impressions in them; which is the peculiar effect of God's word. By the masters of assemblies; by the teachers of God's church and people, whether prophets or others, appointed by God for that work. Which are given from one shepherd; from God, or from Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd and Teacher of the church in all ages, by whose Spirit the ancient prophets, as well as other succeeding teachers, were inspired and taught, Jer. iii. 15; 1 Pet. i. 11; 2 Pet. i. 21. And this clause seems to be added partly as the reason of that admirable harmony and agreement which is amongst all the men of God in all ages and places, because they are all taught by one Master, and guided by the same hand; and partly to oblige us to the greater attention and reverence to all their doctrines and counsels, which we are to receive as the word of God, and not of men only, as it is said, 1 Thess. ii. 13.

12 And further, by these, my son, be admonished: of making many books there is no end; and [l]much ‖ study is a weariness of the flesh.

By these; by these wise men, and their words or writings, of which he spoke in the foregoing verse. Be admonished; take your instructions from them, for their words are right and true, as he said, ver. 10, whereas the words of other men are false, or at best doubtful. Of making many books there is no end; I could easily write many books and large volumes upon these matters, but that were an endless and needless work, seeing things necessary to be known and done lie in a little compass, as he informs us in the next verse. Much study; the reading of many books written by learned philosophers about these things; which it is more than probable were then extant, though since lost, which also Solomon, being so curious and inquisitive a person, would in all likelihood procure and peruse as far as he had opportunity. Is a weariness to the flesh; it wasteth a man's strength and spirits, and yet (which is implied) doth not satisfy the mind, nor sufficiently recompense the trouble and inconvenience to which man is exposed by it.

13 ¶ ‖ Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: [m]Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.
‖ Or, The end of the matter, even all that hath been heard, is. m Deut. 6. 2. & 10. 12.

The conclusion of the whole matter; the sum and substance of all that hath been said or written by wise men, so far as it is necessary for us to know. Fear God; which is synecdochically put here, as it is very frequently in Scripture, for all the inward worship of God, reverence, and love, and trust, and a devotedness of heart to serve and please God, and a lothness to offend him, and an aptness to tremble at his word and judgments. Keep his commandments: this is fitly added as a necessary effect and certain evidence of the fear of God. Make conscience of practising whatsoever God requires, how costly, or troublesome, or dangerous soever it be. The whole duty; in the Hebrew it is only, the whole; it is his whole work and business, his whole perfection and happiness, it is the sum of what he need either know, or do, or enjoy.

14 For [n]God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.
n ch. 11. 9. Matt. 12. 36. Acts 17. 30, 31. Rom. 2. 16. & 14. 10, 12. 1 Cor. 4. 5. 2 Cor. 5. 10.

For God shall bring every work into judgment: this is added either, 1. As a reason of what he last said, this is the whole of man, because all men must give an account to God of all their works, and this alone will enable them to do that with joy, and not with grief. Or, 2. As another argument to press the foregoing exhortation, Fear God, and keep his commandments, for you must be called to judgment about it, &c. With every secret thing; not only outward and visible actions, but even inward and secret thoughts.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON

Before I come to the explication of this book, some things must be premised concerning it. 1. That it was of Divine inspiration is so clear and certain, that, as Jewish writers note, none ever questioned it, although some doubted of some other of Solomon's writings. And the same arguments which prove the divinity of other books are found here, such as the quality of the penman, who was confessedly a man inspired by God; the excellency and usefulness of the matter;

the sacred and sublime majesty of the style, and the singular efficacy of it upon the hearts of sober and serious persons, who read it with due preparation; and those other characters which are commonly known, and therefore it is needless here to enumerate. 2. The form of this book is dramatical, wherein several parts or parcels of it are uttered by or in the name of several persons, which are chiefly four, the bridegroom and the bride, and the friends or companions of the one and of the other. Nor is it declared what or when each of them speak, but that is secretly couched, and is left to the observation of the prudent reader, as is usual in writings of this nature. 3. The design of the book in general is to describe the passionate loves and happy marriage of two persons, and their mutual satisfaction therein, and the blessed fruits and effects thereof. But then it is not to be understood carnally, concerning Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter, as some have fancied, although the occasion of this love and marriage may be taken from that, or rather he makes an allusion to that; but spiritually, concerning God, or Christ, and his church and people. This is sufficiently evident from the descriptions of this bridegroom and bride, which are such as could not with any decency be used or meant concerning Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter, as when he is brought in like a country shepherd, chap. i. 7, and is called his bride's brother, chap. v. 2, and when he gives such high and excessive commendations to himself, as we shall see, and when she is made the keeper of vineyards and of sheep, chap. i. 6, 8, and is said to be smitten and abused by the watchmen, chap. v. 7, and to be terrible as an army, chap. vi. 4, and to be like Pharaoh's horses, and to have a head like Carmel, a nose like a tower, eyes like fishpools, teeth like a flock of sheep, &c., chap. vii. 4, 5. And there are many such-like expressions and descriptions, which being applied to them, are absurd and monstrous. Hence it follows that this book is to be understood mystically or allegorically, concerning that spiritual love and marriage which is between God, or Christ, and his church, or every believing soul. And this will be more than probable to any man who shall consider the following particulars. 1. That the Scriptures both of the Old and New Testament are full of mystical and allegorical passages; which being known and confessed, it is needless to prove. 2. That the doctrine of Christ, or the Messias, and of his being the Head, and Husband, and Saviour of God's church or people, was well known, at least to the prophets, and the wise and pious Israelites, in the time of the Old Testament; whereof we have many manifest and unquestionable evidences, not only in the New Testament, but in the writings of Moses, in the Books of Psalms and Proverbs, and in the prophets, as hath been noted in part, and will, God assisting, be further observed in the proper places. 3. That God compares himself to a bridegroom, and his church to a bride, Isa. lxii. 5, and calls and owns himself the Husband of his people, Isa. liv. 5; Hos. ii. 16, 19, 20. In which places, by comparing these with many other texts of Scripture, by God, or the Lord, is meant Christ, the second person in the Godhead, who then was to come down, and since did come from heaven to earth, for the consummation of that eternal project of marriage between God and his people; which also is fully confirmed by the writings of the New Testament, which were designed for the explication of the Old, in which Christ is expressly declared to be the Bridegroom or Husband of his church, as Matt. ix. 15; xxii. 2; John iii. 29; 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 23; Rev. xix. 7; xxi. 2; xxii. 17. 4. That the 45th Psalm, which is a kind of abridgement of this book, although it had its rise from or alludes to the marriage between Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter, was written concerning the Messias, as all interpreters, both Christian and Jewish, agree, and concerning the mystical marriage between Christ and his church; of which see my notes upon that Psalm. From these considerations, and many others which might be suggested, and which will offer themselves to our thoughts from several passages of it, it is sufficiently manifest, that the main scope and business of this book is to describe the mutual love, union, and communion which is between Christ and his church in the various conditions to which it is liable in this world, as in the state of weakness, and desertion, and persecution from foolish shepherds, and the like, chap. i. 6, 7; iii. 1—4; v. 2, 7, &c. Moreover it is to be considered, that Solomon doth here vary his speech, sometimes speaking of the church in general, as one person or body; and sometimes of the particular members of it, or of several believers, both of such as really and sincerely are so, or such as profess to be so, and of their various dispositions and conditions. And hence comes the difference of persons here mentioned, the mother or spouse, and the children or daughters of Jerusalem, sixty queens, and eighty concubines; some that are strangers to the bridegroom, and some that are well acquainted with him, &c. These things being premised will give great light to the several passages of this book.

CHAP. I.

A description of the earnest longing of the church after Christ, 1—4. A confession of her deformity; prayeth for direction. 5—7. Christ's direction and command, 8. He showeth his love to her both for her strength and comeliness, 9, 10, and giveth her gracious promises, 11. The church's commendation of Christ, both for the sweetness of fellowship with him, and the excellency of ordinances, 12—17.

B. C. written cir. 1014. THE [a]songs of songs, which is Solomon's.

a 1 Kings 4. 32.

The song of songs; the most excellent of all songs, whether composed by profane or sacred authors, by Solomon or by any other. So this Hebrew phrase is understood in other cases, as the holy of holies signifies the most holy; and the highest King is called King of kings; and there are multitudes of such instances, as hath been oft observed. And so this might well be called, whether you consider the author of it, who was a great prince, and the wisest of all mortal men, the two Adams only excepted; or the subject of it, which is not Solomon, but a greater than Solomon, even Christ, and his marriage with the church, as hath been noted; or the matter of it, which is most lofty and mysterious, containing in it the greatest and noblest of all the mysteries contained either in the Old or the New Testament; most pious and pathetical, breathing forth the hottest flames of love between Christ and his people; most sweet, and comfortable, and useful to all that read it with serious and Christian eyes. Nor is it the worse because profane and wanton wits abuse it, and endeavour to fasten their absurd and filthy senses upon some passages in it. The truth is, this book requires a sober and pious, not a lascivious and foolish reader; for which reason some of the ancient Hebrews advised young men to forbear the reading of it, till they were thirty years old. Which is Solomon's; which was composed by Solomon; but whether before his fall, or after his repentance, is not easy to determine, nor necessary to be known.

2 Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth: [b]for †thy love is better than wine.

b ch. 4. 10. † Heb. thy loves.

Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth. The beginning of this book is abrupt, and may seem disorderly; but is very suitable to and usual in writings of this nature, wherein things are not related in an historical and exquisite order, but that which was first done is brought in as it were accidentally after many other passages; as we see in Homer, and Virgil, and in the Greek and Latin comedians. These are the words of the spouse, as all acknowledge, wherein she breatheth forth her passionate love to the Bridegroom, whom she doth not name, but only intimate by the pronoun relative him, which is here put without and for the antecedent, as Psal. lxxxvii. 1; cxiv. 2; John xx. 15; which manner of expression she useth, because it was needless to name him, as being so well known to the person or persons to whom she speaks, and being the only person who was continually in her thoughts and speeches. By kisses, which were the usual tokens of love and good will, she means nothing else but the communications and manifestations of his love and favour to her, as the following clause explains this; his graces and comforts breathed into her from the mouth and Spirit of Christ. Thy love: this sudden change of the person is frequent, especially in such pathetical discourses. First she speaks of him as absent, and at a distance, but speedily grows into more acquaintance with him, and by ardent desire in faith embraceth him as present. Than wine; than the most delicious meats or drinks, or than all sensual delights, this one kind being synecdochically put for all the rest, as it is Esth. v. 6; Job i. 13; Prov. ix. 2; Eccles. ii. 3.

3 Because of the savour of thy good ointments thy name is as ointment poured forth, therefore do the virgins love thee.

Because of the savour of thy good ointments; because of those excellent gifts and graces of God's Spirit wherewith thou art replenished, and which flow from thee upon thy members. Thy name; either, 1. Thou thyself; names being oft put for persons, as Acts i. 15; Rev. iii. 4. Or rather, 2. Thy fame or report, the very mention of thee, and all those things by which thou makest thyself known to men, thy word, and particularly thine offers and promises of pardon and salvation made to sinners, and all thy works, both ordinary and miraculous, especially that great work of redemption. Is as ointment poured forth; most lovely, and acceptable, and refreshing. The virgins, called the companions of the bride, Psal. xlv. 14, particular believers, who are called virgins, 2 Cor. xi. 2; Rev. xiv. 4, who have their senses exercised to perceive this sweetness and fulness of Christ.

c Hos. 11. 4. John 6. 44. & 12. 32. d Phil. 3. 12, 13, 14. e Ps. 45. 14, 15. John 14. 2. Eph. 2. 6. ‖ Or, they love thee uprightly.

Draw me; by thy grace and Holy Spirit effectually inclining my heart to come unto thee, as this phrase implies, Jer. xxxi. 3; Hos. xi. 4; John vi. 44, 45. As thou hast outwardly called and invited me, so do thou inwardly move me, who am naturally averse and backward to follow thee. We; both I thy spouse, and the virgins my companions. And this change of numbers teaches us that the spouse in this book is one great body, consisting of many members, of whom therefore he speaks sometimes in the singular, and sometimes in the plural number. Will run after thee; will follow thee readily, and cheerfully, and swiftly; which is opposed to her former sluggishness and listlessness. We will not receive thy grace in vain, but will improve it, and co-operate with it, and stir up all our strength to serve and obey thee. The king; Christ, my Husband and Lord, the King of his church, as he is oft called, the King of kings, &c. Hath brought me, Heb. hath caused me to come, by drawing me as I desired. He hath answered my prayer. Into his chambers, where I may most freely and familiarly converse with him, and enjoy him. He hath taken me into intimate communion with himself. These chambers seem to note either, 1. Those heavenly mansions into which believers are sometimes said to be brought, even in this life, as Eph. ii. 6, because they have a lively faith, and a well-grounded hope and assurance, and some comfortable foretastes of that blessed state. Or rather, 2. Those places and conditions upon earth in which they enjoy the special favour and fellowship of God in Christ, as the public assemblies, in which Christ is in a peculiar manner present, Matt. xviii. 20, where his word and ordinances are dispensed, and where he poureth forth his Spirit and blessings, and speaks great peace, and gives forth his loves unto his people. Yea, even the private closets, wherein believers enjoy much of Christ by prayer, and praise, and reading, and meditation, are such chambers also; for it is not the place, but the state, or privilege, which is here signified, and which is considerable. In thee; or, for thee; in or for thy love and favour to us, which is the principal cause of our joy. Remember, or commemorate, or celebrate. This shall be the matter of our thoughts and discourses. The upright; those chaste and sincere virgins mentioned ver. 3, who are here opposed to hypocritical professors.

5 I am black, but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon.

I am black. It might be objected, Who art thou, that thou shouldst have or pretend to such a royal Bridegroom, and such honours and favours? To this the church answers, I confess, as to myself and outward appearance in the eyes of the world, I have not that pomp and beauty which men admire, but am black, contemptible and deformed, both for my own infirmities and disorders, and for the scandals of some of my own members, and for the reproaches and persecutions of worldly men. She alludes to the complexion of Pharaoh's daughter, who was black. But comely; yet I am glorious within, Psal. xlv. 13, and comely, through the beauty which my Husband hath put upon me, by his graces and blessings conferred upon me, such as justification and sanctification, &c. Daughters of Jerusalem; by which she understands particular believers, whose mother Jerusalem is called, Gal. iv. 26, who had joined themselves to her, especially young converts and weak Christians, who were startled and offended at the contemplation of her blackness. Of Kedar, i. e. of the wild Arabians, the posterity of Kedar, Gen. xxv. 13, who dwelt in tents, which were black and uncomely, both in themselves, and by the injuries of the weather, to which they were constantly exposed. As the curtains of Solomon; as the hangings wherewith Solomon's house was furnished, which none can doubt that they were most beautiful and glorious. So these two last clauses answer to the two first, and that in the same order in which they lie.

6 Look not upon me, because I am black, because the sun hath looked upon me: my mother's children were angry with me; they made me keeper of the vineyards; but mine own vineyard have I not kept.

Look not upon me, with wonder and disdain, because of my blackness, as it follows. Because the sun hath looked upon me: my blackness is not essential, and inseparable, but chiefly caused by the scorching beams of the sun, i. e. of sore persecutions and tribulations, which by God's permission have befallen me, which are represented by the sun, Matt. xiii. 6, 21. My mother's children; false brethren, who pretend that the church is their mother, when their actions demonstrate that God, the Husband of the church, is not their Father; hypocritical professors, who are, and ever were, the keenest enemies to the true church and people of God, Isa. lxvi. 5; Gal. iv. 29; false teachers, and their followers, who, by their corrupt doctrines, and divisions, and contentions which they raise, bring great mischief to the church. See 2 Cor. xi. 26; Gal. ii. 4. Were angry with me; or, fought against me, as the ancients render it, and so marred my beauty. They made me keeper of the vineyards, i. e. of their vineyards, for to these she opposeth her own, in the next clause. Having prevailed against me, they used me like a slave, putting me upon the most dishonourable and troublesome services, such as the keeping of the vineyards was esteemed, 2 Kings xxv. 12; Isa. lxi. 5; Matt. xx. 1—7. Mine own vineyard have I not kept; they gave me such a full and constant employment in their drudging work about their vineyards, that they left me no time to mind my own; they hindered me from doing my own duty, and from minding my own concerns; and therefore it is no wonder if in this posture and condition I be uncomely, and scorched by the sun. But because churches or societies of professors of religion, whether good or bad, are oft called vineyards, as Deut. xxxii. 32; Psal. lxxx. 8; Isa. v. 1, 2, 7, this and the foregoing clause may be thus understood, that they endeavoured to seduce and corrupt the church with false doctrines, and superstitious or idolatrous worship, and to oblige her to countenance and maintain them, and thereby disturbed and hindered her from her proper work, which was the propagation and advancement of the true doctrine and worship in particular assemblies and persons belonging, or to be brought in, to her.

7 Tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth, where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon: for why should I be ‖as one that turneth aside by the flocks of thy companions?

Whom my soul loveth, notwithstanding all these discourageements and afflictions which I suffer for thy sake, and for my love to thee. Being reproached and persecuted by others, I flee to thee, O my only refuge and joy, and I beg direction and help from thee. Where thou feedest, understand, thy flock, as Gen. xxix. 7; xxxvii. 16. Seeing false teachers and churches bear thy name, Mark xiii. 21, 22, and thy true church sometimes lies hid, Rev. xii. 14, discover to me which is thy true church, and which are those assemblies and people where thou art present, and where thine ordinances are dispensed in purity and power, and where thou dost and wilt command the blessing, even life for evermore, as it is expressed, Psal. cxxxiii. 3, that I may join myself to them. This is the request of particular believers. For it must be minded, as that which will be useful to explain many difficulties in this book, that the church in this book is sometimes considered, and speaketh, or is spoken of, as one entire body, and sometimes with respect unto and in the name of her particular members, and that promiscuously; and in which of these capacities each place is to be understood is left to the prudent and diligent reader to gather out of the words and context. At noon; in the heat of the day, when the shepherds in those hot countries used to carry their flocks into shady places; whereby he means the time of hot persecution, when it is hard to find and discover the true church, partly because she is deformed by it, and partly because she is obscured and driven into the wilderness, as is said, Rev. xii. 14. Be as one, i. e. be really one, the particle as being here a note of truth, as it is in many other places. Why wilt thou by withdrawing thyself from me, and denying thy direction to me, suffer me, or give occasion to me, to be such a one? One that turneth aside; or, a wanderer, or vagabond, like a neglected and forlorn creature, exposed both to censure and danger, from both which it belongs to thee, my Husband, to protect and save me. By, or about, or towards, as this particle is elsewhere used, the flocks of thy companions; the assemblies of corrupt and false teachers and worshippers, by which I am like to be insnared, if thou dost forsake me. These he calls Christ's companions, partly because they profess the name of Christ, and their conjunction with him in God's worship; and partly because they set themselves up in Christ's stead, and usurp his power in delivering and imposing their own laws and doctrines upon men's consciences, and behave themselves like his equals or companions, not as becometh his subjects.

8 ¶ If thou know not, [f]O thou fairest among women, go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds' tents.

If thou know not, to wit, where I feed my sheep. For this is Christ's answer to his spouse or people. O thou fairest among women; though thou art black in thine own and others' eyes, yet thou art very beautiful and amiable to me, as being washed white in my blood, and beautified with my gifts and graces. Go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock; observe and follow the paths which my sheep had trodden before thee, of my faithful servants, Abraham and others, whose examples are propounded for our imitation, Rom. iv. 12; Heb. vi. 12. For the church in all ages is one and the same, and there is but one way for the substance in which all the saints from the beginning to the end of the world do walk, Christ being yesterday, and to-day, and the same for ever, Heb. xiii. 8, and the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, Rev. xiii. 8. Feed thy kids; take care for the feeding or teaching of all, and especially of young and weak Christians, who do and shall associate themselves to thee, whom the Holy Ghost calls lambs, John xxi. 15, 16, as here kids. For although grown and wanton goats are commonly used in Scripture in a bad sense, yet the kids of the goats do sometimes note believers, as Isa. xi. 6. and kids were among those sacrifices which represented Christ, Heb. ix. 12—14. Beside the shepherds' tents; under the conduct, and according to the instruction, of my faithful shepherds, or pastors; first and chiefly those who have gone before thee, the prophets and apostles, and after, and in subordination to them, and to their writings, others whom I shall raise from time to time to feed my people with wisdom and understanding.

9 I have compared thee, [g]O my love, [h]to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.

h 1. 7. & 5. 2. & 6. 4. Josh. 15. 14, 15. 2 Chron. 1. 16, 17.

I have compared thee, Heb. I have made thee like; which may be understood either, 1. Verbally, by comparing. Or, 2. Really, by making a real resemblance in quality or condition. To a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots; either, 1. For comeliness; for a horse is a very stately and beautiful creature, and the Egyptian horses were preferred before others, 1 Kings x. 28; Isa. xxxi. 1, and Pharaoh's own chariot horses were doubtless the best of their kind. Or, 2. For excellent order and usefulness, as those horses did equally and orderly draw the chariot, and carried Pharaoh with ease and speed whither he designed to go. Or rather, 3. For strength and courage, to overcome all thine enemies. For horses are famous for that property, Job xxxix. 21, &c. And the strength of the battle was then thought to consist very much in horses, Prov. xxi. 31, and chariots, and especially in a company or multitude of them. And the church in this book is represented not only as fair and beautiful, but also as terrible to her enemies, Cant. vi. 10. Compare Rev. xix. 11, 14.

10 [i]Thy cheeks are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold.

i Ezek. 16. 11, 12, 13.

Rows of jewels; which being fastened to the heads of brides, used to hang down upon and to adorn their cheeks, according to the manner in those times. He mentions the cheeks as the chief seat of beauty; and he intimates that the church's beauty is not natural, nor from herself, but from the jewels wherewith Christ adorns her. Thy neck; which is mentioned as another visible part and seat of beauty, Hos. x. 11. But to accommodate every part and ornament named in this book to some particular thing in the church, seems to have more of curiosity and artifice than of solidity and use. Chains of gold; whereby, as well as by the rows of jewels, he may seem to design all those persons and things wherewith the church is made beautiful in the eyes of God and of men, such as excellent ministers and saints, righteous laws, holy ordinances, and the gifts and graces of God's Spirit, all which are given by God to the church, and are her best ornaments.

11 We will make thee borders of gold with studs of silver.

We; I thy Bridegroom, with the co-operation of my Father, and of the Holy Spirit. Such plural expressions are sometimes used in Scripture concerning one God, to note the plurality of persons in one Divine essence, as hath been noted upon Gen. i. 26, and elsewhere. Borders of gold with studs of silver; beautiful and honourable ornaments, such as those ver. 10. Variety of expressions are used to signify the various kinds and improvements of the gifts and graces which are bestowed by Christ upon the church. The phrase here used may be compared with that of apples of gold in pictures of silver, Prov. xxv. 11.

12 ¶ While the king sitteth at his table, my spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof.

The King, my royal Husband, sitteth at his table; either, 1. With the spirits of just men and blessed angels in heavenly glory, to which Christ was advanced after his sufferings, and from which he poureth down his Spirit upon his people. Or rather, 2. With me in his gospel and ordinances, in which Christ entertaineth his people, and is in a special, and gracious, and glorious manner present with them, Matt. xviii. 20; xxviii. 20, which also is oft represented in Scripture under the motion of a feast or banquet, of which see Prov. ix. 1—3, 5; Isa. xxv. 6; Matt. viii. 11; xxii. 2; 1 Cor. x. 21. My spikenard; the graces of his Spirit conferred upon me, and drawn forth by his powerful presence, which is here compared to those sweet ointments which the master of the feast caused to be poured out upon the heads of the guests, of which see Mark xiv. 3; Luke vii. 38, in which ointments spikenard was a chief ingredient, John xii. 2, 3. Sendeth forth the smell thereof; which notes the exercise and manifestation of her graces, which is a sweet-smelling savour in the nostrils of her Husband, and of her companions.

13 A bundle of myrrh is my wellbeloved unto me; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.

A bundle of myrrh; or, a bag of myrrh; in which there was a considerable quantity of the gum which droppeth from the myrrh tree. Myrrh is bitter to the taste, but sweet to the smell, and therefore was ever reckoned amongst the best perfumes. See Exod. xxx. 23; Psal. xlv. 8; John xix. 39. Is my Beloved unto me; he is most precious and comfortable to me, and the author of my sweet smell last mentioned. Betwixt my breasts; in the place where bundles or bags of myrrh or other perfumes hang down, being fastened about their necks, which yet were taken away and laid aside by night. But the church intimates that she will not part with Christ, neither day nor night. Or this phrase may note the church's intimate union with and hearty affection unto Christ.

14 My beloved is unto me as a cluster of ‖ camphire in the vineyards of En-gedi.

Camphire; or, cypress, as others render it. It was an odoriferous plant growing in vineyards, and some think that it was a most pleasant kind of vine, like that which bears muscatel grapes; yea, some very learned men understand it of that plant which dropped balm, which grew in or near the place here specified, as is affirmed not only by the Jews, but also by pagan writers, as Diodorus and Trogus. Nor are we concerned to know which or what it was; it being confessed and evident, that it was some pleasant and grateful plant, and that it sets forth that great delight which the church hath in the enjoyment of Christ. En-gedi; a pleasant and well-watered place in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 62; Ezek. xlvii. 10, where there were many pleasant plants, whence it was called Hazazon-tamar, 2 Chron. xx. 2.

k ch. 4. 1. & 5. 12. ‖ Or, my companion.

15 k Behold, thou art fair, ‖ my love; behold, thou art fair; thou hast doves' eyes.

Behold, thou art fair: this is the speech of Christ. The words are doubled, partly to note the certainty of the thing, notwithstanding her mean and modest opinion of herself; and partly to manifest his high esteem and fervent affection for her, and to assure her that, notwithstanding all her infirmities, he was very well pleased with her. Thou hast doves' eyes; which are, 1. Comely and pleasant. 2. Modest and humble, not lofty, as the looks of some other creatures are. 3. Mild and harmless, not fierce and fiery, not looking and watching for prey, as the eyes of ravenous birds are. 4. Chaste and faithful, looking only to their mates; so that if any of them cast a lustful eye upon another, her companions are enraged against her, and quickly tear her in pieces; as some natural historians write. And such are the church's eyes said to be. And by the eyes he seems to design partly her looks and outward behaviour or conversation, and partly and chiefly the inward disposition of her mind, which is commonly discovered, and in Scripture is oft signified, by the eye; in which sense we read of an evil eye, Prov. xxiii. 6; Matt. vi. 23, of a bountiful eye, Prov. xxii. 9, of a single eye, Luke xi. 34, of a proud or lofty look, all which signify such tempers of men's minds.

16 Behold, thou art fair, my beloved, yea, pleasant: also our bed is green.

Behold, thou art fair, my beloved. The church here again speaks, and retorts Christ's words upon himself: If I am fair, it is only by thy grace and favourable acceptation; thou, and thou only, art fair indeed, thy beauty is exquisite and perfect. Pleasant; as thou art beautiful in thyself, so thou art amiable and pleasant in thy condescension to me, and converse with me, in communicating thy blessed counsels, and graces, and comforts to me. Our bed; either, 1. Upon which we sit at meat, as the manner then was, Esth. i. 5, 6; Ezek. xxiii. 41. Or rather, 2. Upon which we lie, our nuptial bed; for the union and communion between Christ and his church is here represented under the notion of marriage. And accordingly the bed seems to denote the place or places where the church enjoyeth sweet fellowship with Christ, by his Spirit accompanying his ordinances, and imparting his merits, and graces, and comforts to her. Is green; is pleasant, as that colour is to the eye; is prepared for us, being adorned with green garlands, or boughs and herbs, as the manner seems to have been with country brides, such as the spouse in this book is represented to be. Or, as others, both ancient and later interpreters, render it, is flourishing, i. e. fruitful. So it is a happy presage, that the church should not be barren, but bring forth many children to Christ; of which see Isa. liv. 1, &c. By these and the following words the church invites Christ to her bed and house, where she may freely and fully enjoy spiritual communion with him.

17 The beams of our house are cedar, and our ‖ rafters of fir.

The beams of our house are cedar; not only strong and incorruptible, but also fragrant and delightful. Though I am in myself but a mean and rustic person, yet the house to which I invite thee, and where thou and I shall dwell together, is, by thy favour, built with cedar; whereby is here signified the stability of God's church upon earth, which is called God's house, 1 Tim. iii. 15, and the firmness and sureness of God's word and promises. Rafters; the lesser beams. Or, as it is rendered in our margin, and by others, galleries, wherein we may walk. Of fir; or, as the ancients and others render it, of cypress, which was used in buildings, which also was strong and fragrant, and therefore suits well with cedars.

CHAP. II.

The excellency of the majesty of Christ, 1, and of his church, 2. The benefits which the church receives from him, 3. Christ's love to his church, 4. The church sick of love; her prayer for help, 5. His care for her in this condition, 6. The hope and calling of the church, 10—13. Christ's care of the church, 14, 15. The profession of the church; her faith and hope, 16, 17.

I AM the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys.

These are the words either, 1. Of the spouse, continuing her discourse. Or rather, 2. Of the bridegroom, drawing forth the church's affections to him. He compares himself to the rose and lily, for fragrancy and beauty. Nor is it in the least degree indecent that Christ should thus commend himself, partly because his excellency is so transcendently great, that he is free from all suspicion of vanity and self-flattery; and partly because it is suitable to the style of such writings, and to the present design of recommending himself to the affection of his spouse. He mentions the rose of Sharon, which was a very fruitful place, as is evident from 1 Chron. xxvii. 29; Isa. xxxiii. 9; lxv. 10, and famous for roses, as may seem probable from Isa. xxxv. 1, 2. Or, as others translate it, the rose of the field, which may note that Christ is not only pleasant and beautiful, but free and communicative, offering himself to all that come to him. The lily is a beautiful and glorious creature, Matt. vi. 29, especially to one who beholds it through a magnifying glass. He saith, the lily of the valleys, because they grew and flourished best in such low and waterish grounds.

2 As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters.

As the lily among thorns; compared with thorns, which it unspeakably exceeds in glory and beauty; so is my love among the daughters; so far, and much more, doth my church or people excel all other assemblies or people. The title of daughter is oft given to whole nations; whence we read of the daughter of Babylon, and of Egypt, and of Edom, &c., Isa. xlvii. 1; Jer. xlvi. 11; Lam. iv. 21. These are Christ's words, to which the spouse makes the following reply. And it is observable here, that as Christ is here represented as a shepherd, and the spouse as a country virgin, so the similitudes here used are agreeable to that estate.

3 As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my beloved among the sons. †I sat down under his shadow with great delight, a and his fruit was sweet to my †taste.

As the apple tree, whose fruit is very pleasant and wholesome, among the trees of the wood, which are either barren, or bear ungrateful and worthless fruit. I sat down under his shadow; being weary and heavy laden with manifold sins and troubles, inward and outward, I confidently reposed myself under his protection, (which is commonly signified by a shadow, as Isa. iv. 6; xxv. 4, &c.,) and by him was defended from the scorching heat of God's wrath, and from the curse of his fiery law, and from the mischief or hurt of all sorts of distresses. His fruit; the benefits which I received by him, the clear, and full, and certain knowledge of God's will, and the way of salvation, adoption, and remission of sins, faith and repentance, and all manner of grace, and assurance of glory. Thus he was to me both a sun and a shield, as is said, Psal. lxxxiv. 11.

4 He brought me to the †banqueting house, and his banner over me was love.

† Heb. house of wine.

Banqueting-house, Heb. house of wine, or, by a common synecdoche, of feasting. By which he understands the places in which, or the means and instruments by which, believers receive the graces and blessings of Christ, to wit, the Holy Scriptures, ministers, and public assemblies, and all Christ's institutions. His banner over me; or, to or towards me; by the lifting up or displaying whereof I was invited and encouraged to come in to him, and to list myself under him, as soldiers are by the lifting up of a banner or ensign, of which see Isa. xi. 10; xlix. 22. Was love; the love of Christ crucified, which, like a banner, is displayed in the gospel, whereby sinners are drawn and engaged to come to Christ: see John iii. 14; xii. 32; 2 Cor. v. 14. The motto or device of Christ's banner was not like those of other great generals, a lion, or leopard, or eagle, but love, by which alone Christ made all his conquests.

5 Stay with me flagons, †comfort me with apples: for I am sick of love.

† Heb. straw me with apples.

Stay me; or, support me; keep me from sinking or fainting. The spouse speaks this to her bridemaids, the daughters of Jerusalem, as it is expressed, ver. 7, or to the servants or friends of the Bridegroom there waiting, and to the Bridegroom himself; as a person ready to faint cries to any or all that are near to him or her for help. With flagons; with wine, which is a good cordial, Psal. civ. 15; Prov. xxxi. 6, 7, and which was there present, ver. 4. Flagons are here, and 1 Chron. xvi. 3, put for flagons of wine, as it is fully expressed, Hos. iii. 1, or for the wine contained in them, as the cup is put for wine, Luke xxii. 20, by a common metonymy. Comfort me with apples; with odoriferous apples, such as pomegranates, or the like, the smell whereof was grateful and useful to persons ready to faint. By these metaphors understand the application of the promises, and the comfortable and quickening influences of the Spirit. I am sick of love; either, 1. With transports of joy, which sometimes causes a fainting of the spirits, as Gen. xlv. 26; 1 Kings x. 5. Or, 2. With grief for his departure from her, of which we read chap. iii. 1, 2, or for fear of it. Or rather, 3. With ardent desire of a stricter union, and clearer discoveries of his love, and perfect and uninterrupted communion with him in glory. That sickness is sometimes the effect of love hath been oft observed by physicians.

6 [b]His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth embrace me.

b ch. 8. 3.

Is under my head, as a pillow for me to rest upon. No sooner did I cry out for help, but he was at hand to succour me, and did manifest his tender care and dear love to me.

7 †[c]I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

c ch. 3. 5. & 8. 4.

This verse is spoken either, 1. By the Bridegroom, who having reposed the sick church in his arms, chargeth them not to disturb her till she please, as the last clause in this case must be rendered. Or rather, 2. By the bride, as may be gathered, 1. From the connexion, because both the foregoing and following words are hers. 2. Because it was more decent for the bride than for the Bridegroom to give this charge to the bridemaids, the daughters of Jerusalem; and therefore in all places in this book where they are mentioned the person speaking to them is the bride, and not the Bridegroom, and particularly chap. iii. 5; viii. 4, where this verse is repeated, and is confessedly and evidently spoken by the spouse. Daughters of Jerusalem; my bridemaids, friends, and members, over whom I have authority. By the hinds; either, 1. By the kindness you have to those pretty and amiable creatures, as you would not injure nor disturb them, nor drive them away, but please yourselves with the sight of them, as shepherds and country damsels commonly do. Or, 2. By the example of those creatures, which are pleasant and loving in their carriage towards one another. Of the field; which have their usual abode in the fields. That ye stir not up, nor awake; that you do not disturb nor offend him by your miscarriages, but permit him and me to enjoy a quiet repose. Do nothing to grieve him, or molest me. My love; my dearly beloved, called love emphatically, to express her great passion for him. So love is used Cant. vii. 6, and in other authors. Till he please, i. e. never, as this word until, in such like phrases, is commonly used, as Gen. xxviii. 15; 2 Sam. vi. 23; Isa. xxii. 14. For neither can sin ever please him, nor can the church bear it that Christ should ever be offended, or that her sweet fellowship with him should be interrupted.

8 ¶ The voice of my beloved! behold, he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills.

The voice of my Beloved! methinks I hear his voice. The spouse being now refreshed and revived with Christ's presence, awakes out of sleep, and breaks forth into this joyful exclamation. Christ's voice is nothing else but the word of grace revealed outwardly in the gospel, or the evangelical passages of the Old Testament, and inwardly to the heart of the spouse by the Spirit of God. Behold, he cometh; either, 1. He is coming, or will shortly come, into the world; which Solomon and the rest of the Old Testament prophets and saints did earnestly desire and confidently expect. Or, 2. He is coming to me for my support and comfort. Leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills; he saith leaping and skipping, to note that Christ came readily and swiftly, with great desire and pleasure; and he adds, upon the mountains and hills, either with respect to Mount Zion or Jerusalem, in and from which Christ first discovered himself; or to signify Christ's fixed resolution to come, in spite of all discouragements and difficulties which stood in his way; or to show that his coming was manifest and visible to the eye of her faith. Or in this phrase he may have a respect to the roes and harts here following.

9 [d]My beloved is like a roe or a young hart: behold, he standeth behind our wall, he looketh forth at the windows, †shewing himself through the lattice.

† Heb. flourishing.

Like a roe or a young hart; either, 1. In loveliness. Or rather, 2. In swiftness, by comparing this verse with the former. The swiftness of roes is noted 2 Sam. ii. 18; 1 Chron. xii. 8. He is coming to me with all speed, and will not tarry a moment beyond the appointed and proper season. He standeth behind our wall; and whilst he doth for wise and just reasons forbear to come, he is not far from us. Though he be not yet come into the door of our house, yet he stands behind the wall of our house, and is always at hand, to give me that succour and comfort which I do or may need or desire. Both this and the following phrases seem to note the obscure and imperfect manner and degree of Christ's manifesting himself to his people, either, 1. Under the law, in comparison of his discoveries in the gospel. Or, 2. In this life, in comparison of what he will do in the future life. He looketh forth, from his high and heavenly palace, towards me, to watch over me, and refresh me with the prospect of his favour. At the window: this phrase, and that, through the lattice, intimate that the church doth indeed see Christ, but, as through a glass, darkly, as it is said even of gospel revelations, 1 Cor. xiii. 12, and was much more true of legal administrations.

10 My beloved spake, and said unto me, [e]Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away.

My Beloved spake; invited and called me outwardly by his word, and inwardly by his Spirit. Rise up; shake off sloth and security, and disentangle thyself more fully from all the snares of this world, and of thy own lusts, that thou mayst be more ready to come to me, and more fit for my embraces. Come away unto me, and with me; follow me fully, serve me more perfectly, labour for a nearer union and more satisfying communion with me.

11 For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone;

The winter; which made the ways in some sort unpassable, and so might seem to hinder or affright thee from coming to me. This winter, and the following rain, may be understood either, 1. Of worldly tribulations, which he intimates to be past and gone, to wit, so far that they shall not destroy nor hurt the church, but, on the contrary, do her much good, both by multiplying her members, and increasing her graces, and promoting her eternal happiness. Or rather, 2. Of spiritual troubles arising in the minds and consciences of sinners, from a deep sense of the guilt of sin, the justice and wrath of God, the sentence and curse of the law; all which made them afraid to come unto God, and desirous, if possible, to run away from him. But, saith Christ, I have removed this great impediment, God is ready to be reconciled, and therefore cast off all discouragements and excuses, and come unto me.

12 The flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land;

The flowers appear on the earth: this and the following clauses are here alleged as evidences of the spring time, which in the mystical and principal sense seems to signify the day of grace, or the glad tidings of salvation proposed to sinners in the time of the law, by types, and shadows, and promises, but much more clearly and fully in the gospel, and all the discoveries and communications of God's grace to mankind in holy ordinances, in the gifts, and graces, and comforts of the Holy Spirit, vouchsafed unto and appearing in believers, as buds and blossoms do in the spring time. The time of the singing of birds; when birds sing most freely and sweetly, as they do in the spring. Or, as the ancient translators render it, of cutting or cropping, not trees, which agrees not with that season, but the flowers last mentioned, for nosegays, or other uses. The turtle; which changeth its place according to the season, as is observed, Jer. viii. 7, and by all other writers, who affirm that it disappears in winter, and appears in the spring, as some other birds also do; but this seems particularly to be mentioned, because it doth not only give notice of the spring, but also doth aptly represent the Spirit of God, which even the Chaldee paraphrast understands by this turtle, which appeared in the shape of a dove, and which worketh a dove-like meekness, and chastity, and faithfulness in believers. In our land; in Immanuel's land, as Canaan is called, Isa. viii. 8, in the church.

13 The fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape f ver. 10. give a good smell. [f]Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away.

Green figs; which it shooteth forth as soon as it doth leaves, in the spring time, Matt. xxiv. 32. A good smell; which, though not strong, is pleasant and grateful, and given by it in the progress of the spring. Come away: these words are here repeated, to show both the church's infirmity and indisposition, which needs so many calls and arguments to press so necessary and advantageous a duty; and Christ's tender compassion to her weakness, and fervent desire of converse with her.

14 ¶ O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the g ch. 8. 13. stairs, let me see thy countenance, [g]let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely.

My dove; so the church is called, partly for her dove-like temper and disposition, because she is chaste, and mild, and harmless, &c.; and partly for her dove-like condition, because she is weak, and exposed to persecution, and given to mourning, as doves are, Isa. xxxviii. 14; lix. 11; Ezek. vii. 16, and subject to many fears, and therefore forced to hide herself in rocks, as it follows, in the clefts of the rock; where she hid herself, either, 1. For fear of her enemies, whom to avoid she puts herself into the protection of the Almighty. Or, 2. Out of modesty, and a humble sense of her own deformities and infirmities, which makes her endeavour to hide herself even from her Beloved, as ashamed to appear in his presence, which is frequently the case of God's people, especially after falls into sin. And this sense seems to be favoured by the following words, in which Christ relieveth her against such discouraging thoughts. In the secret places of the stairs; in the holes of craggy and broken rocks, which resemble stairs. So the same thing is here repeated in other words. Let me see thy countenance; be not afraid nor ashamed to appear before me; come boldly into my presence, and acquaint thyself with me. Thy voice; thy prayers and praises. Sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely; thy person and services are accepted by me, and are amiable in my sight.

15 Take us [h]the foxes, the little foxes, h Ps. 80. 13. Ezek. 13. 4. Luke 13. 32.
that spoil the vines: for our vines have tender grapes.

The Bridegroom gives this charge to his bridemen or friends, whose office it is to attend upon him, and to observe his commands; by whom he understands those magistrates and ministers to whom, under Christ, the custody of the vineyards, to wit, the churches, principally belong. These he commands to take the foxes, i. e. to restrain them from doing this mischief. Us, Heb. for us, i. e. at our instance, and for our common good, as this spoiling of the vines was injurious and grievous to them both. The foxes; the disturbers of the vineyard, or the church; seducers or false teachers, who are fitly compared to foxes here, and Ezek. xiii. 4, partly to distinguish them from great tyrants and persecutors, who are compared to wild boars, or other wild beasts, Psal. lxxx. 13, as to lions, 2 Tim. iv. 17; and partly for their fox-like qualities and actions, because they are very crafty and deceitful, 2 Cor. xi. 13, 14; Eph. iv. 14, and very mischievous also, Ezek. xxxiv. 2, 3; 2 Tim. ii. 17; Tit. i. 10, 11; 2 Pet. ii. 2. He mentions foxes, because these abounded in that country, as is manifest from Judg. xv. 4; Psal. lxiii. 10; Lam. v. 18, &c., but under them he comprehends all noxious creatures, upon the same reason. The little foxes: this he adds, not as if the great foxes were excused or exempted, but for more abundant caution, to teach the church to prevent errors and heresies in the beginnings of them, before they spread and grow strong and incurable. That spoil the vines, which foxes do many ways, as those who write of them have observed, by gnawing and breaking the little branches and leaves, and the bark, by digging holes in the vineyards, and so spoiling the roots, by eating the grapes, and other ways. Have tender grapes; which gives us hopes of a good vintage, and which are easily spoiled, if great care be not used to prevent it.

16 ¶ [i]My beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth among the lilies. i ch. 6. 3. & 7. 10.

My Beloved is mine, and I am his: these are the words of the bride, who having come to him upon his gracious invitation, now maketh her boast of him, and of that intimate union and communion which was between them. He feedeth among the lilies; either, 1. He feedeth his flock in sweet and lovely pastures, where there is not only herbage to feed them, but lilies to delight them. Or rather, 2. He feedeth himself, i. e. he abideth and refresheth himself amongst his faithful people, which are compared to lilies, above, ver. 2, and Hos. xiv. 5, as Christ also is here, ver. 1.

17 [k]Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, turn, my beloved, and be k ch. 4. 6.
thou [l]like a roe or a young hart upon the l ver. 9. ch. 8. 14.
mountains ‖of Bether. ‖ Or, of division.

Until the day break, and the shadows flee away; until the morning of that great and blessed day of the general resurrection and judgment, when all the shadows, not only of ignorance, and sin, and calamity, but even of all ordinances and outward administrations, shall cease, and make way for the immediate enjoyment of my Beloved. And this clause may be joined either, 1. With the foregoing words; and so the sense is, Christ doth and will abide with his church as long as this life and world lasts; which agrees with Christ's promises of being with his church to the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20. But neither that nor this place imply that Christ will then forsake his people, but only secures God's people against that which was the chief, if not only, matter of their fear, to wit, lest Christ should leave them, and cast them off in this life, which, if he did not, they were assured that hereafter they should be ever with the Lord, 1 Thess. iv. 17. For it is well known, and hath been oft observed already, that the word until doth not always exclude the time to come. Or, 2. With the following words, Turn thou, my Beloved, until the day break, &c. Turn; return to me. For although Christ had come to her, and she had gladly received and embraced him, yet he was gone again, as is here implied, and evidently appears from the next following verse; which sudden change is very agreeable both to the nature and method of such dramatical writings and amatorious transactions, and to the state of God's people in this world, where they are subject to frequent changes and vicissitudes of Christ's withdrawing from them, and returning to them again. Like a roe or a young hart, in swiftness; make haste to help me, for I am ready to faint. Bether; a place in the Land of Promise, possibly the same called Bithron, 2 Sam. ii. 29, where it seems those creatures were in great abundance, or where they were commonly hunted, and so being pursued, they made all possible haste to escape.

CHAP. III.

The church seeking Christ, 1—3. Her great joy; she findeth him, 4. Her charge to the daughters of Jerusalem not to awake her Beloved, 5. The manner of Christ's coming out of the wilderness, 6. His bed, guard, and chariot, 7—9. Its maker, matter, and furniture, 10. An invitation of the faithful to the kingdom of glory, 11.

a Is. 26. 9. BY [a]night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

By night on my bed; either, 1. In a time of tribulation, which is commonly signified by the night, and sometimes by a bed, as Rev. ii. 22. Or, 2. When I expected to find him; for the husband who by his occasions is oft forced to be absent from his wife in the day time, but at night returns to her, and beds with her. Or, 3. When others compose themselves to rest and sleep, my thoughts were troubled and my affections were working towards him, and I was very desirous to enjoy him. I sought him; I sought for Christ's gracious and powerful presence, in and by the word, and prayer, and meditation. I sought him: this repetition notes her perseverance and unweariedness in seeking him. But I found him not; for he had withdrawn himself and the manifestations of his love from me, either because I had not sought him diligently, or because I had abused his favour, or to try and exercise my faith, and patience, and love, and other graces.

2 I will rise now, and go about the city in the streets, and in the broad ways I will seek him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

I will rise now; I will immediately apply myself to seek him, without whom my bed can give me no rest nor comfort. The city; the city of God, the church, in which Christ resides. In the streets, and in the broad ways: not finding him in private prayer and meditation, I sought him in the places of public assemblies and ordinances; for the people frequently met together in the streets, not only for civil, but for religious ends, 2 Chron. xxxii. 6; Neh. viii. 1, 3, 16; Prov. i. 20, 21; Luke xiii. 26. I found him not; he saw fit still to delay the discoveries of his grace, partly, to chastise my former folly; partly, to try my sincerity and constancy; and partly, that he might be more welcome when he came to me.

b ch. 5. 7. 3 [b]The watchmen that go about the city found me: to whom I said, Saw ye him whom my soul loveth?

The watchmen; the ministers of Christ, and rulers of the church, who are oft called watchmen, as Isa. lxii. 6; Ezek. iii. 17, and elsewhere. That go about the city, to prevent disorders and dangers by night. Found me, whilst they walked round about the city, according to their duty. To whom I said, without either fear or shame, as being transported and wholly swallowed up with love, Saw ye him whom my soul loveth? she doth not name him, because she thought it needless, as supposing that a person of such transcendent excellency could not be unknown to men in that public capacity. Their answer is not mentioned, either because they gave her no answer, at least no satisfactory answer, or because by their silence she gathered that they were unable or unwilling to inform her; and being eager in the pursuit of her Beloved, she would not lose time in impertinent discourses with them.

4 It was but a little that I passed from them, but I found him whom my soul loveth: I held him, and would not let him go, until I had brought him into my mother's house, and into the chamber of her that conceived me.

I found him; Christ met me, and manifested his love to me, according to his promise made to those that seek him constantly and diligently, Prov. viii. 17; Matt. vii. 7, &c. I held him, and would not let him go, being taught by my late experience how doleful a thing it was to lose him, and how hard it was to find and recover him when he was lost. Until I had brought him into my mother's house, that there I might entertain and embrace him, and gain my mother's consent, and so proceed to the consummation of the marriage. She saith her mother's rather than her father's house, because the men and the women had several and separated apartments in the house. For the mystical meaning, which is the principal sense intended in this book, as the spouse here, and in many other places of this book, signifies particular believers, so her mother is the universal church, or the true Jerusalem, which hath its rise from above, which is the mother of us all, Gal. iv. 26, in which Christ and believers are united, and have sweet communion together in holy ordinances, into which believers are said to bring Christ by faith and prayer, and the preparation of their hearts for him, whereby they invite and in some sort engage Christ to go with them into the public assemblies, and there to give them his loves, although otherwise it is Christ who properly brings believers into the church. But all particulars in allegorical scriptures are not to be strictly urged, as all learned interpreters agree, many being added only for the decency of the allegory. Her that conceived me; Christ is as it were the father that begets, and the church the mother that conceiveth and bringeth forth, believers.

c ch. 2. 7. & 8. 4. 5 [c]I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

This verse is repeated from chap. ii. 7, where it is explained. The spouse exhorts herself and all her fellow members to be very circumspect, lest by any unkind or provoking carriage they should give Christ any cause to depart from them. He is supposed to allude to the custom of awakening the bridegroom and bride by songs and musical instruments.

d ch. 8. 5. 6 ¶ [d]Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness like pillars of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of the merchant?

Who is this? the persons speaking seem to be the daughters of Jerusalem, who, upon occasion of the bride's speech to them, make this reply; or the friends of the Bridegroom. The person spoken of is the spouse or bride. That cometh out of the wilderness; from the country, which, in comparison of cities, is oft called a wilderness, as Isa. xlii. 11; Luke i. 80; iii. 2, and elsewhere, from whence we little expected to see so beautiful and glorious a bride to come, such persons being usually bred in courts or noble cities. This phrase implies that believers were, and were to be, called out of the world, which for its barrenness, and disorder, and replenishment with wild beasts, may fitly be compared to a wilderness; and not only out of the Holy Land, which was as the garden of God, but also out of the Gentile world, which in prophetical writings is frequently described under the notion of a wilderness, as Isa. xxxv. 1; xliii. 19, 20. Withal he seems to allude to the people of Israel, which to the wonder and astonishment of all those parts came up out of the wilderness into Canaan. Pillars of smoke; to which the church may not unfitly be compared, partly for its excellent order and comely proportions; partly, for its direct and constant motion towards heaven; and partly, to imply that though she was really and inwardly glorious, yet she was outwardly obscure and despicable in the eyes of the world. Possibly the words may be rendered thus, as with (which particle is very frequently understood, as hath been showed in divers foregoing texts) pillars, or a pillar, (for the plural number is oft put for the singular,) of smoke. And so the sense may be either, 1. Being conducted out of the wilderness as by a pillar of smoke going before them, as the Israelites were led through the wilderness to Canaan by a pillar of cloud and fire, Exod. xiii. 21, 22. Or rather, 2. Attended with many prayers and praises, and other holy performances, which are perpetually ascending from her and offered by her unto God. So he alludes to those pillars of smoke which all the day long ascended from those numerous sacrifices which were offered in the temple, which also was a type of the prayers of the saints offered by Christ unto his Father, as may be gathered from Rev. viii. 3—5. But this I only propose. Perfumed: this doth not belong to the pillars, as appears by the difference of the numbers in the Hebrew words, the pillars being plural, and this word singular; but to the person, to wit, the spouse, who is said to be thus perfumed, partly, for her good name or renown, which is compared to perfumes, Eccles. vii. 1; partly, for her excellent virtues and religious services, which are pleasant and acceptable to God, and to angels, and men; and partly, for the merits and graces of Christ, which are a sweet savour to God, Eph. v. 2, and wherewith she is enriched and beautified. Powders of the merchant; which are fetched by the merchants from Arabia, or other remote parts of the world, for the use of perfuming.

7 Behold his bed, which is Solomon's; threescore valiant men are about it, of the valiant of Israel.

Behold his bed: these are the words either, 1. Of the bridemen, who spake ver. 6, and here continue their speech, and from the admiration of the bride proceed to the admiration of the Bridegroom. Or, 2. Of the spouse, who being admired by the bridemen, turns their eyes and thoughts to the Bridegroom, and directs them to the study of his excellencies, and intimates that all her comfort and safety is from him. The bed, the place of rest and conjugal converse, seems to denote the church, which is comely through Christ's beauty, and safe by his protection, in which Christ is glorified, and believers enjoy sweet fellowship with him, both here in the church militant, and especially hereafter in the church triumphant. Which is Solomon's; which is the bed, not of an ordinary man, but of a great King, whom Solomon represents or typifies, and who is greater than Solomon. Nor is it hard to understand the Messias under the name of Solomon, his type and progenitor, seeing he is, upon the same reason, called David, Jer. xxx. 9; Ezek. xxxiv. 23, and elsewhere, especially considering that this whole book is by the confession both of Jewish and Christian interpreters to be mystically understood. Threescore, i. e. very many, the certain number being put for an uncertain, as is frequent. The valiant of Israel; he alludes to Solomon's guard, or watchmen, whereby he designs all those creatures, whether angels, princes, ministers, or others, whose ministry God useth for the protection of his church.

8 They all hold swords, being expert in war: every man hath his sword upon his thigh because of fear in the night.

Hath his sword upon his thigh; is prepared and ready to fight, as this phrase notes, Exod. xxxii. 27; Psal. xlv. 3. Because of fear in the night; to prevent those dangers and mischiefs which are most frequent and most dreadful in the night season. The night may note either, 1. The time of tribulation, temptation, or desertion. Or, 2. The whole time of this life, which may well be called night, in respect of that ignorance, and error, and other kinds of darkness wherewith it is attended, as the future life is compared to a day, this life being the only time wherein such a guard is necessary.

9 King Solomon made himself ‖ a chariot of the wood of Lebanon.

‖ Or, a bed.

A chariot, in which the royal Bridegroom and bride might ride together in state, as the manner was in the nuptial solemnities of such persons. By this chariot he seems to understand the word of Christ dispensed by his ministers in the church, whereby both Christ is exalted and rides triumphantly in the world, conquering his enemies, and subduing the world to the obedience of the gospel, and all believers are carried with safety and comfort through this present evil world, into those blessed mansions of heavenly glory. Of the wood of Lebanon, i. e. of cedars, for which Lebanon was famous; which wood, being incorruptible, doth fitly signify the word of the gospel, which endureth for ever, 1 Pet. i. 25, and is called the everlasting gospel, Rev. xiv. 6, in opposition to the legal institutions, which were to continue only until the time of reformation, as we read Heb. ix. 10.

10 He made the pillars thereof of silver, the bottom thereof of gold, the covering of it of purple, the midst thereof being paved with love, for the daughters of Jerusalem.

The pillars thereof; whereby the chariot is either supported or adorned; which may signify either, 1. Ministers, who are called pillars, Gal. ii. 9, and that of silver, because they are, or should be, pure and precious, like silver. Or, 2. The firmness and certainty of Christ's word, both of his doctrines and promises, which also are pure as silver, Psal. xii. 6. Although there is no necessity that either this or the following particulars should be distinctly applied to several things in or about the gospel; but this in the general may suffice, that as all these particulars are added to show the perfection and beauty of the chariot, so they do imply that Christ's word is every way amiable, and perfect, and able to make the man of God perfect. The bottom; either, 1. The couch or seat, which was made of or covered with cloth of gold. Or, 2. The under and lower part, which was at least covered with pure gold. Whereby he may seem to understand the foundation of the word and promises, which is either God's covenant, or Christ's mediation, in whom all the promises are yea and amen. The covering; either, 1. The curtains, whereby persons in the chariot are covered or hid from the sight of the people. Or rather, 2. The uppermost part of it, either in the outside or the inside of it. Some render the word, the seat or seats. Of purple; which represents Christ's blood, which is our propitiatory or covering to shelter us from God's wrath. The midst; the inward parts, especially those between the upper and lower parts, which have been already mentioned. Paved, covered and adorned, with love; with beautiful and lovely ornaments, such as curious embroidery, enriched with gold and precious stones; love being here put for lovely objects, as fear is oft put for terrible things, as hath been oft noted. Whereby we may understand the love of Christ to the sons of men, or his lovely life, and death, and resurrection, &c.; which is the most amiable part and matter of the word or gospel. For the daughters of Jerusalem; for their delight and comfort, who are all concerned and bear a part in this marriage.

11 Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, and behold king Solomon with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his espousals, and in the day of the gladness of his heart.

Go forth; the bride, to wit, the church, bids particular believers go forth to see this sight; whereby is implied that Christians must go out of the world, to wit, in affection, and out of themselves, by denying themselves, and putting off the old man, their corrupt nature, if they desire to see and enjoy Christ. Daughters of Zion; the same with daughters of Jerusalem; for Zion and Jerusalem are ofttimes promiscuously used in Scripture. Behold king Solomon; looking in and through him upon the Messias, who is the King of peace, and of whom Solomon was an illustrious type. The crown wherewith his mother crowned him; which being applied to Solomon, may design either, 1. The crown royal, wherewith his mother, Bathsheba, is said to have crowned him, because Solomon was crowned by David's order upon her suggestion, and by virtue of his promise confirmed by an oath to her, 1 Kings i. 16, &c. Or, 2. That garland or crown which was usually worn in nuptial solemnities, as may be gathered from Ezek. xvi. 12, and is expressly affirmed by divers ancient writers. But being applied to Christ, it notes that honour and glory which was given to him, which though principally done by his Father, yet is here ascribed to his mother, i. e. to the universal church, or congregation of believers, which in respect of his humanity may be called his mother, partly because he was born in and of her, and one of her members, and therefore was subject to her institutions, whence she is represented as a woman in travail, bringing forth a man child, to wit, Christ, Rev. xii. 1—5; and partly because in a spiritual sense she is said to conceive and bring forth Christ in particular believers, Gal. iv. 19. And this mother may be said to crown Christ, both because it is the great design and business of the church to advance Christ's honour in the world, and because she brings forth believers, whom Christ esteems as his crown and glory, as God calls them, Isa. lxii. 3. In the day of his espousals; when the church is betrothed or married to him, Jer. ii. 2; Hos. ii. 19; 2 Cor. xi. 2; which is done when the covenant is made or confirmed between them, or when faithful persons are converted and united to Christ, and more completely when they are received by Christ into his more full and immediate fellowship in the kingdom of glory. In the day of the gladness of his heart; when he rejoiceth over his bride, as the phrase is used, Isa. lxii. 5. So this is the same thing expressed in other words. The conversion and salvation of sinners is the joy of Christ, as appears from Isa. liii. 11; Luke xv. 32, and many other places of Scripture.

CHAP. IV.

Christ commendeth his church for her beauty, 1—7. He calleth her to go with him, 8, manifesting his love and affection for her, 9. A further commendation of her, 10—15. She prayeth for the effectual operation of his Holy Spirit on her to make her fruitful, 16.

[a] ch. 1. 15. & 5. 12 BEHOLD, [a]thou art fair, my love; behold, thou art fair; thou hast doves' eyes within thy locks: thy hair is as a [b]flock of goats, ‖that appear from mount Gilead.

These and the following words are evidently spoken by the Bridegroom to and concerning his spouse. Thou art fair, not in thyself, but by my beauty, being clothed with my righteousness, and adorned with all the graces of my Spirit, which I acknowledge to be in thee. Thou art fair; he repeats it, both to confirm the truth of his assertion, and to show the sincerity and fervency of his affection to her. Thou hast doves' eyes; thou art harmless, chaste, &c., as appears by thine eyes, which commonly discover the temper of the mind or person. See more of this phrase chap. i. 15. And whereas the beauty of the spouse is here described in her several parts, we need not labour much about the application of each particular to some distinct member or grace of the church, this being the chief design of this description of a bride which is beautiful in all points, to show that completeness and absolute perfection which the church hath in part received, and shall more fully receive from Christ in the future life. Yet because the church is a body, consisting of divers members, and enriched with variety of gifts and graces, I know no reason but the several parts of this description may have a more special regard to one or other of them. And so her eyes may here note, either, 1. Her teachers, who are instead of eyes to her, as the phrase is, Numb. x. 31, whence they are called seers and guides, &c. Or, 2. The disposition of her mind or heart, which is compared to the eye, Matt. vi. 22, 23, and is oft discerned in the eye. Within thy locks; which being decently composed, make the eyes appear more amiable: withal this intimates the modesty of her looks; her eyes are not wanton, and wandering, or lofty, but sober, and humble, and confined within their proper bounds, looking directly upon her husband, not looking asquint upon other lovers, nor minding other Gods or Christs. If the eyes signify teachers, the locks may note the people assembled together to hear their teachers, to whom they are a great ornament when they thrive by his teaching. Thy hair; the hair of thine head, which is a great ornament to the female sex, 1 Cor. xi. 15. This hair may signify either, 1. The inward thoughts and meditations; or rather, 2. The outward conversation and visible fruits of holiness, which do greatly adorn the professors and profession of religion, as hair doth the head, as is implied, 1 Tim. ii. 9, 10; 1 Pet. iii. 3—5. As a flock of goats; which are comely and orderly in going, Prov. xxx. 29, 31, and afford a goodly prospect. Or rather, as the hair (which word is here to be understood, as appears both from the comparison itself, and from divers places where goats are put for goats' hair, as it is in the Hebrew text, Exod. xxv. 4; xxvi. 7; xxxv. 26) of a flock of goats, which in these parts was of extraordinary length, and thickness, and softness, and comeliness, and much more like to the hair of a man or woman than the hair of our goats is, as is evident both from Scripture, as Gen. xxvii. 16; 1 Sam. xix. 13; and from the testimony of other ancient writers, as Apuleius, Martial, &c. That appear from Mount Gilead; that feeding there, or coming down thence, or going up thither, show themselves evidently to those who stand below it, or near them. Or, as it is rendered in our margin, and by others, that eat, or graze of, or upon. He mentions it as a very fruitful place, and fit for the breeding of all sorts of cattle, as is manifest from Numb. xxxii. 1; Jer. l. 19; Micah vii. 14; and especially of goats, partly because it was a hilly and woody country, and partly because it abounded with resinous, and oily, and gummy trees, as appears from Gen. xxxvii. 25; Jer. viii. 22; xlvi. 11, wherewith the goats are much delighted, as Dioscorides observes. And some affirm that the hair of these goats was commonly of a yellow colour, as may seem probable from 1 Sam. xix. 13, 16, compared with 1 Sam. xvi. 12, and from Cant. vii. 5; which also was in ancient times esteemed a beauty in men or women, as the learned know.

2 [c]Thy teeth are like a flock of sheep [c] ch. 6. 6. that are even shorn, which came up from the washing; whereof every one bear twins, and none is barren among them.

Thy teeth are like a flock, numerous, and placed in due order, of sheep; which is here fitly supplied out of Cant. vi. 6, where it is expressed. Even shorn; smooth and even, as also clean and white, whereas unshorn sheep retain much filth in their wool, even after their washing. Every one bear twins; which seems to note the two rows of teeth, like twins, one directly answering to the other; which is a great part of the beauty or comeliness belonging to the teeth. Nor let any wonder to hear of sheep bearing twins; for that there were many such in the Eastern countries is apparent, not only from Holy Scripture, but also from the express testimony of Aristotle, and other ancient writers. None is barren among them; not one tooth is lacking. By the teeth some understand the teachers, which may be compared to teeth, because they prepare, and as it were chew, spiritual food for the people, and to such teeth as are here described for their great number and excellent order, and for that purity and fruitfulness which is required of them. Others understand some gracious qualification or action of the faithful, either their faith, which is compared to eating, John vi. 41, &c., and elsewhere; which also purifies the heart and life, and produceth good works in abundance; or their meditation or study of God, and of his word, whereby, like the clean beasts under the law, they chew the cud; which also much promotes their purity and fertility. But, as I said on the first verse, there is no need of a distinct application of every particular, as it is in parables, where many things are added for decency, which belong not to the main scope, and therefore are neglected in the interpretation of them. The scope of this place is only to set forth the church's perfection and beauty by the resemblance of a beautiful woman, and one part of beauty consists in the colour and order of the teeth.

3 Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet, and thy speech is comely: [d]thy temples are like a piece of a pomegranate within thy locks. [d] ch. 6. 7.

Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet; fine, and smooth, and soft, and round, and red, in which the beauty of the lips consisteth. Thy speech is comely; which is added, partly as another ingredient of an amiable person, and partly to explain the foregoing metaphor. The communication or discourse of believers is edifying, and comfortable, and acceptable to God and to serious men. Compare Psal. xlv. 2; Col. iv. 6. Thy temples; under which doubtless he comprehends the cheeks, which are joined to them, and in which a great part of beauty lies, which therefore would not have been omitted in this description. Like a piece of a pomegranate; in which there is a lovely mixture of red and white. This may note both the church's beauty and her modesty, which showeth itself by blushes in those parts when she hath fallen into any sin, as the highest believers in this world sometimes do. Within thy locks; a further evidence both of beauty and modesty. See on ver. 1.

4 [e]Thy neck is like the tower of David [f]builded for an armoury, whereon there hang a thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men.

f Neh. 3. 19.

Thy neck: this may seem to represent the grace of faith, by which we are united to Christ, as the body is to the head by the neck, and through which Christians receive their spiritual food, and consequently their strength and ability for action. Is like the tower of David; round, and smooth, and white, long, and straight, and upright, firm, and strong; and moreover, adorned with chains of gold or pearl, or the like ornaments; all which things, as they set forth the beauty of the neck, so they may signify the various excellencies and uses of faith. By this tower he understands either, 1. The strong hold of Zion, of which see 2 Sam. v. 7. Or rather, 2. Some other tower built by David, when he repaired, and enlarged, and fortified his royal city, 1 Chron. xi. 8, and used by him as an armoury. See Neh. iii. 19, 25—27. A thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men; either, 1. Such as are fit and reserved for the use of mighty men. Or, 2. Such as had been used either by themselves, or by their enemies, from whom they took them by force, and were hung up there as trophies or monuments of victory; which is added, to show that the church is not only beautiful and glorious, but also strong and victorious over all her enemies, and to intimate the great power and exploits of faith, of which read Heb. xi., and which is compared to a shield, Eph. vi. 16. A thousand is here put indefinitely for a great number.

5 [g]Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins, which feed among the lilies.

g See Prov. 5. 19. ch. 7. 3.

Thy two breasts; another part in which beauty consists, Ezek. xvi. 7. By which some understand the two testaments, or the two sacraments; but these are rather Christ's than the church's breasts. Others, the church's fervent love to Christ, and to all the saints, for the breasts signify love, Prov. v. 19; Cant. i. 13. Others, her fruitfulness, both in good works, and in bringing up children unto Christ, like a nurse with her breasts. But the following similitude seemeth not to respect the use of the breasts, or the love which is signified or manifested by them, but their comeliness. And therefore this is generally to be understood of the church's beauty in all parts, as hath been said. Among the lilies, i. e. in the fields where lilies grew, as is evident, both from Matt. vi. 28, where they are called the lilies of the field, and from other scriptures, and from the testimony of other writers. The lilies being white and swelling, and the roes of a reddish colour, and their bodies being hid from sight by the lilies, their heads only appearing above them, bear some resemblance to the red nipples appearing in the top of the lily white breasts. But we must remember that this book is a sacred pastoral, and the Bridegroom is represented as a shepherd, and the bride as a country maid; and therefore such similitudes are used as are agreeable to persons of that quality, and such are usual in profane writers of this kind, as the learned have observed. They are compared to roes for their loveliness, of which see Prov. v. 19; to young ones for their smallness, which in breasts is a beauty; to twins for their exact likeness.

6 [h]Until the day †break, and the shadows flee away, I will get me to the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense.

h ch. 2. 17.
† Heb. breathe.

Until the day break, and the shadows flee away: these words are uttered by the bride, chap. ii. 17, and here returned by the Bridegroom, as an answer to that request. And this place may be understood either, 1. Of the day of the gospel, when all legal shadows shall vanish; or, 2. Of the day of glory, or of the general resurrection, when all manner of shadows and ordinances shall cease; till which time either the spouse feeds among lilies, as was now said, ver. 5, or the Bridegroom gets him to the mountains, &c., as it follows. For the words are by most joined with the foregoing, and by some with the following clause. To the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense; either, 1. To the temple at Jerusalem, which is oft and fitly expressed by the name of a mountain or hill, because it was built upon a mountain, and which may be called a mountain of myrrh and frankincense, because of the abundance of myrrh and frankincense which was there used and offered; in which place the church was to feed, and Christ would continue his presence, until the dawning of the gospel day. Or, 2. To my church upon earth, which was typified by the mountain of Moriah, and the temple upon it, and which in prophetical writings is called a mountain, as Isa. ii. 2, 3; Micah iv. 1, 2, and elsewhere; and which may well be called a mountain of myrrh and frankincense, both for the acceptable services which are there offered to God, and for the precious gifts, and graces, and comforts of the Holy Spirit, which are of a sweet-smelling savour to God and men, and which there, and there only, are poured forth. Thus Christ directs his bride, to wit, particular believers, where they may find and enjoy him, namely, in his church and ordinances.

i Eph. 5. 27.

Thou art all fair; it is needless to mention the several beauties of all thy parts, for, in one word, thou art wholly beautiful; and it may be said more truly of thee than it was of Absalom, 2 Sam. xiv. 25, that from the sole of thy foot to the crown of thy head there is no blemish in thee. There is no spot in thee; which is not to be understood simply and absolutely, as if the people of God were really perfect, and free from all sin; but either, 1. Comparatively, no such spot or blemish as is in wicked men, or as is inconsistent with true grace, of which Moses speaks, Deut. xxxii. 5. Or, 2. In regard of God's gracious acceptation, in which respect he is said not to behold iniquity in Jacob, Numb. xxiii. 21. God doth not look upon them with a severe eye, as they are in themselves, but in and through Christ, in whom he accepts them as if they were perfect, partly because it is their chief design, desire, and endeavour to be so, and partly because Christ hath undertaken to make them so, Eph. v. 25, 27, and they shall one day be such.

8 ¶ Come with me from Lebanon, my spouse, with me from Lebanon: look from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir [k]and Hermon, from the lions' dens, from the mountains of the leopards.

k Deut. 3. 9.

Come with me unto the mountains of myrrh, &c., mentioned ver. 6, from Lebanon, a known mountain in the north of Canaan, which is sometimes mentioned as a pleasant and glorious place, as Cant. v. 15; Isa. xxxv. 2; Hos. xiv. 6, &c., in regard of its goodly cedars; and sometimes as a barren wilderness, as Isa. xxix. 17, and seat of wild beasts, as 2 Kings xiv. 9, &c. Which latter sense seems more agreeable, both to the opposition which is here tacitly made between this mountain and the mountain of myrrh, and to the quality of the other mountains here joined with Lebanon, and to the last clause of the verse. My spouse; this is the first time that Christ gives her this name, which he now doth, both to encourage and oblige her to go with him. Look to the place to which I invite thee to go, which from those high mountains thou mayst easily behold, the sight of which will certainly inflame thee with desire to go thither. He alludes to Moses's beholding the Promised Land from Mount Pisgah. Amana; not that Amana which divided Syria from Cilicia, which was too remote from these parts, but another of that name, not far from Lebanon. Shenir and Hermon may be the names of two tops of the same mountain, as Horeb and Sinai seem to have been. Or, Shenir or (the copulative and being put disjunctively for or, as it is in many places, which have been observed before) Hermon, for this mountain is called both Shenir and Hermon, Deut. iii. 9, and the latter name, Hermon, may be added to the former, as being better known to the Israelites. From the lions' dens, from the mountains of the leopards; from these or other such-like mountains, which are inhabited by lions and leopards; which seems to be added as an argument to move the spouse to go with him, because the places where now she was were not only barren, but also dangerous, as being the habitations of tyrants and persecutors, and wild or savage people, who are oft described by the names of wild beasts, whose natures they have, and whose practices they imitate.

9 Thou hast ‖ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse; thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck.

Thou hast ravished my heart; I am overcome with thy beauty, and therefore am so desirous of thy company. My sister; so he calls her, partly because both he and she had one and the same father, to wit, God, yea, and mother too, being both at this time born in and of the commonwealth and church of Israel; and partly to show the greatness of his love to her, which is such as cannot be sufficiently expressed by any one relation, but must borrow the perfections and affections of all to describe it. With one of thine eyes; with one glance of one of thine eyes: by which phrase he intimates the modesty and humility of the church, which was ashamed or afraid to look fully and directly upon the Bridegroom with both her eyes; and withal alludes to the ancient custom of virgins, who used to cover their faces with a veil, and to look out only with one of their eyes for the direction of their steps. By this one eye he seems to mean that fundamental grace of faith, by which Christians look upon Christ, and discern his beauty, and which is precious in the sight of God and of Christ. With one chain of thy neck; with one of those other graces and perfections wherewith thou art adorned. How then should I be ravished if thou didst discover both thine eyes, and thy whole countenance, and all thy excellent gifts and graces!

How fair, how amiable and acceptable to me, is thy love! I do not disdain thy love, as I might do, but take it kindly, and prize it highly. How much better is thy love than wine! of which see on chap. i. 2, 4. Of thine ointments; of the gifts and graces of God's Spirit, wherewith thou art anointed. Compare Isa. lxi. 1; 1 John ii. 20, 27.

11 Thy lips, O my spouse, drop as the honeycomb: [m]honey and milk are under thy tongue; and the smell of thy garments is [n]like the smell of Lebanon.

m Prov. 24. 13, 14. ch. 5. 1.

n Gen. 27. 27. Hos. 14. 6, 7.

Thy lips drop as the honey-comb; thy speeches both to me in prayer and praises, and to men for their edification, are highly acceptable to me. Honey and milk; words more sweet and comfortable than honey or milk. Under thy tongue; by which phrase he may possibly intimate that her words were not uttered in hypocrisy, or with evil design, as many fair and smooth speeches are, but proceed from her very heart, which is under her tongue, as mischief is said to be under his tongue, Psal. x. 7, who devised it in his heart. The smell of thy garments; of that righteousness wherewith I have clothed and adorned thee. Christ and the graces of the Spirit are oft compared to garments, as Rom. xiii. 14; Eph. iv. 24; 1 Pet. v. 5. The smell of Lebanon; which is also mentioned and commended Hos. xiv. 6, which must needs be very sweet and grateful in regard of the great numbers of sweet-smelling spices and trees which grew in that mountain.

12 A garden †inclosed is my sister, my spouse; a spring shut up, a fountain sealed.

† Heb. barred.

A garden, for order and beauty, for pleasant walks, and flowers, and fruits. Enclosed; either, 1. Defended by the care of my providence; or, 2. Reserved for my proper use. She will not admit of other lovers, either false teachers or worldly lusts, but keeps herself close for me. She is chaste, and pure, and modest, as virgins are or should be. A spring; either, 1. For others, sending forth the wholesome streams of saving doctrine, for the refreshing, and healing, and cleansing of those who receive it. Or, 2. Within herself, being well watered, i. e. replenished with spiritual graces and blessings, which are frequently compared to waters, both in the Old and New Testament, as Isa. xliv. 3; John iv. 10; vii. 38, for which the church is compared to a watered garden, or spring of water, Isa. lviii. 11. Shut up; either, 1. To preserve it from all pollution or injury; or, 2. To reserve it for the use and service of its owner, for which reason springs were shut up in those countries where water was scarce and precious, as Gen. xxix. 3. A fountain sealed; the same thing is here repeated in other words.

13 Thy plants are an orchard of pomegranates, with pleasant fruits; ‖camphire, with spikenard,

‖ Or, cypress. ch. 1. 14.

Thy plants, the plants of thy garden, believers which are planted in thee, are an orchard; are like the plants or fruits of an orchard, which are pleasant to the eye, and delicious to the taste or smell, such as are here mentioned in the following words; whereby he signifies the variety and excellency of gifts and graces in the several members of the church. Spikenard; which he mentions both here with camphire or cypress, and in the next verse with saffron, because it is mixed with both these, and being so mixed, yieldeth the more grateful smell.

14 Spikenard and saffron; calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense; myrrh and aloes, with all the chief spices:

Trees of frankincense; such trees as produce frankincense. Or, as others, both ancient and modern, render it, trees of Lebanon; such sweet-smelling trees and plants as grew in Lebanon, of which see above on ver. 11.

15 A fountain of gardens, a well of [o]living waters, and streams from Lebanon.

o John 4. 10. & 7. 38.

These are the words either, 1. Of the bride, who returns this answer to the Bridegroom. Thou callest me a fountain, but in truth thou only art that fountain from whence I derive all my streams of comfort; or rather, 2. Of the Bridegroom, who hath hitherto been speaking to and of the church, and still continues his speech. He seems to add this by way of correction to or exposition of what he said, ver. 12. Though my spouse be in some sort a fountain shut up or sealed, yet that is not so to be understood as if she kept her waters to herself, for she is like a fountain or well of living or running water, which floweth into gardens, and maketh the flowers and plants to grow and flourish. The church conveyeth those waters of life which she receiveth from Christ unto particular believers and congregations. Streams from Lebanon; like those sweet and refreshing rivers which flow down from Mount Lebanon, of which Jordan is one.

16 ¶ Awake, O north wind; and come, thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out. [p]Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits.

p ch. 5. 1.

Awake; or, arise; either, 1. To be gone, as being commonly hurtful to plants and gardens; or rather, 2. To come, as the next clause explains it. For both the north wind and the south wind have their several uses in gardens; the former to purge and cool the air, and to bring fair weather; the latter to warm and moisten the earth, and cherish the plants. And these winds may signify the several dispensations either of God's providence, or rather of his Spirit, which is compared to the wind, John iii. 8, whereby the following effects are produced. My garden: this verse is spoken by the spouse, as appears from the last clause of it. And she calls the garden both hers and his, because of that oneness which is between them, chap. ii. 16, whereby they have a common interest one in another's person and concerns. That the spices thereof may flow out; that my graces may be exercised to thy glory, the edification of others, and my own comfort. Let my Beloved come into his garden, let Christ afford his gracious presence more and more to his church, and eat his pleasant fruit; and let him delight himself in that service and glory which is given to him, both by the religious worship and by the holy conversations of his people.

CHAP. V.

Christ answereth the church's invitation, and showeth her the delight he took in her fruit, 1. She acknowledges her negligence to Christ in not opening the door, 2—6. Of the harsh usage she met with, 7. She tells the daughters of Jerusalem she is sick of love to Christ, 8. Their question concerning him, 9. A description of Christ by his graces, 10—15, in whom she boasteth, 16.

‖ Or, and be drunken with loves. wine with my milk: eat, O [c]friends; drink, ‖yea, drink abundantly, O beloved.

I am come into my garden: this is the Bridegroom's answer to her request, delivered in the next foregoing words. I have eaten my honey-comb with my honey; I have drunk my wine with my milk; I have eaten of my pleasant fruits, as thou didst desire. I have taken notice of, and delight in, the service and obedience of my people. Friends; the friends of the Bridegroom; whereby he understands either, 1. The holy angels and glorified saints, who in a sublime and spiritual sense may be said to eat and drink in heaven, the happiness whereof is frequently represented under the name and notion of a feast. Or rather, 2. Believers or members of the church militant upon earth, who by the argument of Christ's gracious presence with them, and acceptation of their works signified in the last words, are here invited and encouraged with great freedom and cheerfulness to eat and drink their spiritual food, to feed upon God's holy word and sacraments, to eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of God, who here gives them a hearty welcome to this feast.

2 ¶ I sleep, but my heart waketh: it
d Rev. 3. 20. is the voice of my beloved [d]that knocketh, saying, Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled: for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night.

I sleep, Heb. I was asleep, i. e. I was dull, and sluggish, and insensible of his kind expressions and offers of grace. But my heart waketh; yet in my very sleep my thoughts were running upon my Beloved, as is not unusual in such cases, which at last awakened me. Thus she implies the conflict which was between the flesh and the Spirit, and the Spirit's victory in the combat. It is the voice of my Beloved; between sleeping and waking I fancied that I heard his voice. That knocketh, by his word, and providence, and Spirit, at the door of mine heart, desirous that I would receive him by faith and love. Compare Rev. iii. 20. Saying, Open to me; inviting me to accept of his gracious offers, and to let him in to my soul. My sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled: this heap of kind compellations signifies Christ's sincere and fervent affection to his people, notwithstanding her manifold imperfections and infirmities. The title of dove signifies her chastity and constant faithfulness to her Husband, for which doves are famous. How she is undefiled, see on chap. iv. 7. My head is filled with dew, whilst I wait without thy door. He alludes to the custom of lovers, which oft and willingly suffer such inconveniences for their hopes and desires of enjoying their beloved, and signifies his sufferings for the church's good. The drops of the night; the dew which falls in the end of the night, or towards the morning, whence it is called morning dew, Hos. vi. 4.

3 I have put off my coat; how shall I put it on? I have washed my feet; how shall I defile them?

I have put off my coat, my day clothes, as persons use to do when they go to rest. How shall I put it on? it is inconvenient and troublesome to do it at this time. Thus she tacitly reflects upon the Bridegroom for coming to her so unseasonably, and giving her such disturbance, and puts him off to another time, and excuseth her non-admission of him by her present indisposition, and the difficulty of the thing required of her. I have washed my feet; which the Eastern people commonly did when they went to bed, partly to cool their feet, and partly to cleanse them from that dust and sweat which they had contracted in the day time by labour and travel, as being used to go barefoot.

4 My beloved put in his hand by the hole of the door, and my bowels were ‖ Or, (as some read) in me.
moved ‖ for him.

My Beloved put in his hand by the hole of the door; he assayed to open the door. When his word would not prevail, his Spirit, which is called the finger of God, Luke xi. 20, compared with Matt. xii. 28, wrought inwardly upon my conscience, and affected mine heart. My bowels were moved for him, with compassion for him and his sufferings, and with affection to him; for both these ways is this phrase oft used, as Job xxxvii. 1; Phil. ii. 1, 2, &c.

5 I rose up to open to my beloved; and my hands dropped with myrrh, and my fingers with † sweet smelling myrrh, † Heb. passing, or, running about.
upon the handles of the lock.

I rose up to open to my Beloved; I repented of my former drowsiness and neglect, and went forth to receive him. My hands dropped with myrrh, i. e. with oil or ointment made of myrrh, which either, 1. She had taken out of her own stock to prepare herself for the entertainment of the Bridegroom; or rather, 2. Dropped from the Bridegroom's hand upon the door in great abundance, when he put it into the hole of the door, ver. 4, and consequently upon her hands and fingers when she touched the door to open it. By which she signifies that Christ, though he withdrew himself from her, yet left a sweet savour behind him, infusing into her, and stirring up in her, the graces of the Spirit, such as repentance, which is bitter as myrrh, earnest desire after Christ, &c. With sweet-smelling myrrh, upon the handles of the lock, Heb. with myrrh passing or flowing upon the handles of the lock, which place the Bridegroom had touched when he attempted to open it.

6 I opened to my beloved; but my beloved had withdrawn himself, and was gone: my soul failed when he spake: [e]I e ch. 3. 1.
sought him, but I could not find him; I called him, but he gave me no answer.

Withdrawn himself; denied me his gracious and comfortable presence, as a just punishment for my former neglect and folly. And was gone; either she repeats the same thing to show how deeply she was affected with it; or this is added to imply that he had not only stepped aside, but was quite gone away. My soul failed, Heb. went out of me. I fainted and was ready to die away through excessive passion, as this phrase is used, Gen. xxxv. 18; xlii. 28, and elsewhere. When he spake; or, for what he spoke; for those endearing expressions related ver. 2, which then I did not heed, but this sad occasion brings them to my remembrance; as ofttimes that word which is ineffectual when it is preached, is afterwards brought to a man's mind, and produceth blessed effects. I sought him by diligent inquiry and importunate prayer. He gave me no answer; that so he might both chastise her folly, and quicken her desires, and prepare the way for a more hearty welcome, and his longer abode with her.

city found me, they smote me, they wounded me; the keepers of the walls took away my veil from me.

The watchmen that went about the city; the governors of the church, as chap. iii. 3, who, though by their place and office they be obliged to comfort and protect the faithful, do frequently discourage and oppress them, as they manifestly did both in the days of Isaiah, and Jeremiah, and the other holy prophets, and in the time of Christ and his apostles, and in divers other ages. They wounded me with bitter calumnies and persecutions. The keepers of the walls; the same with the watchmen, whose office is to keep the gates and walls of the city. Took away my veil; which was an ornament of her sex, Isa. iii. 23, and a badge of her modesty, Gen. xxiv. 65, or an ensign of her relation and subjection to Christ, Gen. xx. 16; 1 Cor. xi. 5. And so the taking of this veil away signifies their contemptuous and injurious usage of her, their endeavours to blast her reputation, and to represent and treat her as a common and impudent prostitute, and as one that had no relation to Christ.

8 I charge you, O daughters of Jeru-† Heb. what. salem, if ye find my beloved, †that ye tell him, that I am sick of love.

Daughters of Jerusalem; of whom see on chap. i. 5; ii. 7. The church having passed the watchmen, and patiently borne, and in a manner forgotten, their injuries, proceeds in the pursuit of her Beloved, and inquires of every particular believer or professor whom she meets concerning him. That I am sick of love; that I am ready to faint for want of his presence, and the tokens of his favour. Use all your interest and importunity with him on my behalf.

9 ¶ What is thy beloved more than
g ch. 1. 8. another beloved, [g] O thou fairest among women? what is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?

What is thy Beloved more than another beloved? wherein doth he excel them? which professors of religion might ask, because they were ignorant of Christ's excellency; and true believers might ask it, that they might be more fully informed of it, and might give the spouse occasion to discourse of that subject which was very grateful to them. O thou fairest among women; whose beauty may command the respects and affections of the most worthy persons; and therefore we conclude it must be some person of transcendent excellency with whom thou art so highly enamoured.

† Heb. a standard-bearer. 10 My beloved is white and ruddy, †the chiefest among ten thousand.

White and ruddy; which two colours rightly mixed together make a face beautiful. Or the white may note his pure and spotless innocency, and the brightness of his glory and majesty, and the ruddy colour may intimate his bloody passion, which made him amiable both to God and men. The chiefest, Heb. the standard-bearer; for such are usually persons of great eminency, both for stature, and courage, and dignity. Among ten thousand; among all persons, angels or men. A certain number is put for an uncertain. There are other kings, and priests, and prophets, but none to be compared with him.

11 His head is as the most fine gold,
‖ Or, curled. his locks are ‖ bushy, and black as a raven.

His head is as the most fine gold; it shines like gold, not in respect of the hair, which is black, as it followeth, but by reason of his crown of pure gold upon his head, Rev. xiv. 14; whereby she implies that her Bridegroom was a King, which she declared above, chap. iii. 11. His locks; in which a part of man's beauty consists. I shall not trouble my reader with a distinct application of this and the following particulars unto some special part or excellency of Christ, because such things are mere conjectures without any solid grounds, and the only design of this description seems to be this, to set forth the beauty of Christ under the notion of a most complete and amiable person, in whom there is no defect nor blemish, from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet. Black as a raven; which is mentioned, partly because this was esteemed a beauty, and partly because it was an evidence of his youth and vigour, as grey hairs are characters of age and infirmity, Hos. vii. 9.

12 [h] His eyes are as the eyes of doves h ch. 1. 15 & 4. 1. † Heb. sitting in fulness, that is, fitly placed, and set as a precious stone in the foil of a ring. by the rivers of waters, washed with milk, and †fitly set.

His eyes are as the eyes of doves, lovely and pleasant, chaste and innocent. By the rivers of waters; where they delight to abide, and wherewith they bathe themselves, and wash their eyes; where also their eyes are most lively and beautiful, both by the reflection of the waters, and from that pleasure which they take in such places. Washed with milk; which may belong either, 1. To the eyes, which are supposed to be washed with water, as white and pure as milk; or, 2. To the doves, which are intimated to be of a milk-white colour, which in those parts was most esteemed, which colour also made the eyes appear more lovely. Fitly set; neither sinking into the head, nor standing out too much, but in a moderate and comely situation. Heb. sitting in fulness; which may note a full and competently large eye, which is esteemed one beauty of the eye.

13 His cheeks are as a bed of spices, ‖ Or, towers of perfumes. as ‖ sweet flowers: his lips like lilies, dropping sweet smelling myrrh.

His cheeks; his face or countenance, an eminent part whereof is the cheeks, in which the beauty or deformity of a face doth much consist. As a bed; which being higher than other parts of the garden, fitly represents the cheeks, which are higher than other parts of the face. Of spices; not of dry spices, for they are not in beds; but of aromatical flowers, which delight both the eye with a pleasant prospect, and the smell with their fragrancy. This may also signify the down or hair upon the Bridegroom's cheeks, which is the evidence of his mature and vigorous age, and may denote that Christ's sweetness and gentleness is accompanied with majesty, and gravity, and just severity. Sweet flowers: this may be added to explain the former phrase. Or, towers of perfumes, i. e. boxes in which perfumes were put, which by their height or form had some resemblance to a turret. His lips like lilies; beautiful and pleasant. Or this is meant of that sort of lilies which were of a red or purple colour, as ancient writers affirm, and so signify the grateful colour of the lips. This may note that grace which was poured into Christ's lips, and which flowed from them in sweet and excellent discourses. Dropping sweet-smelling myrrh; not only graceful to the eye, as lilies are, but also fragrant to the smell.

14 His hands are as gold rings set with the beryl: his belly is as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires.

His hands; the instruments of action and of distribution, which may design the actions of Christ, and particularly his distributing gifts and graces to his members. As gold rings set with the beryl; beautiful and precious, and richly adorned, as it were with gold rings set with precious stones. His belly; which seems to be here used, either, 1. Metonymically for the bowels, which are contained in the belly. Or rather, 2. Synecdochically, for the whole body, reaching from the neck to the bottom of the belly, which is distinguished from the face and the joints, which are described in the other clauses. For he speaks here of those parts which are visible to the eye. And thus here is a complete description of Christ's beauty in all parts, from his head to his feet. As bright ivory overlaid with sapphires; of a pure and bright white colour, intermixed with blue veins; for some sapphires are of a bright blue colour.

15 His legs are as pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold: his countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars.

His legs; the instruments of local motion, and the supporters of the body. As pillars of marble; white, and straight, and well shaped, and strong; which may note the firmness and stability of Christ's kingdom in spite of all opposition. Set upon sockets of fine gold; which add both beauty and strength to them. These may note his feet compared to gold, either for their great price and worth, or for their singular brightness, for which they are compared to fine brass, Rev. i. 15; or, as others, for his golden shoes, wherewith they were covered or adorned, as the spouse is commended from her shoes, Cant. vii. 1. His countenance,

Heb. his aspect or appearance; his form or person, as this Hebrew word is elsewhere used. As Lebanon, in respect of its cedars, as the next words explain it, to wit, tall, and upright, and stately, and withal pleasant to the eye.

16 † His mouth is most sweet: yea, he is altogether lovely. This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem.

His mouth is most sweet, which was said before in other words, ver. 13, and is here justly repeated, because it was a principal part of Christ's beauty, and the chief instrument of the spouse's comfort and happiness, which wholly depends upon his sweet and excellent speeches, his holy precepts and gracious offers and promises contained in the gospel. He is altogether lovely; not to run out into more particulars, in one word, there is no part of him which is not exquisitely beautiful. This is my Beloved, and this is my Friend, O daughters of Jerusalem, and therefore you have no cause to wonder or to blame me if I am transported with love to so excellent a personage.

CHAP. VI.

An inquiry after Christ, 1. The church's answer, 2. The church confesseth her faith in Christ, 3. Christ showeth the graces of his church, 4, and the beauty of several parts, 5—10. He acquaints her where he had been, and what he had been doing, 11; and discovers his affection to her, 12; with an invitation of her to return to him again, 13.

WHITHER is thy beloved gone, [a]O thou fairest among women? whither is thy beloved turned aside? that we may seek him with thee.

These are the words of the daughters of Jerusalem, last mentioned, whom this full and pathetical description of the Bridegroom's excellency had inflamed with love to him. Whither is thy Beloved turned aside, to wit, from thee, as thy words imply, ver. 6, 8; where dost thou use to look for him, and to find him, when thou hast lost him? O thou who art well acquainted with all the places both of his usual abode, and of his diversion, inform us who are ignorant of them. That we may seek him with thee; we ask not with any evil design, but only because we desire an interest in him.

2 My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies.

The spouse had hitherto been at a loss for her Beloved, but having diligently sought him, and inflamed both her own and others' affections with love to him by her just commendations, now at last she meets with a gracious answer from God, directing her where to find him, which also comes very seasonably, not only for her own relief and comfort, but also for the benefit of others, who inquired after him. The garden seems to signify the church catholic, and the gardens, as it follows here, as also the beds, may note the particular assemblies of the faithful, in which Christ affordeth his presence and his blessing. Beds of spices; in which the gifts and graces of God's Spirit, which are fitly compared to spices or aromatical flowers, do appear and grow. To feed; to refresh and delight himself, or to gather the flowers and fruits of it, as men use to do in their gardens. To gather lilies; which may note either, 1. Particular believers, whom Christ gathereth to himself in his church, who are compared to lilies, Cant. ii. 2. Or, 2. The prayers and praises tendered to him by his people in the public congregations, and all their gracious dispositions and actions.

3 [b]I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine: he feedeth among the lilies.

4 ¶ Thou art beautiful, O my love, as c ver. 10.

Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem, [c]terrible as an army with banners.

Thou art beautiful, O my love: these are the words of Christ, who had now again manifested himself to his church; whereby he declares, that though he had for a season hid his face from her, yet still he retained a sincere and fervent affection to her, and that, notwithstanding her manifold infirmities, she was yet beautiful in his eyes. Tirzah; a very pleasant city, as its very name signifies, and therefore made the royal seat of the kings of Israel; of which see 1 Kings xiv. 17; xv. 21, 33; xvi. 6, &c. Comely as Jerusalem; which was beautiful, both for its situation, Psal. xlviii. 2, and for its goodly buildings, especially the temple. See Lam. ii. 15. Terrible; either, 1. To strangers, whom by her grave and majestic looks and carriage she affrights from rude or bold attempts, whereas some women invite others to familiarity with them by their loose and wanton carriage. Or, 2. To her enemies, whom God will certainly destroy.

5 Turn away thine eyes from me, for ‖ they have overcome me: thy hair is [d]as a flock of goats that appear from Gilead.

‖ Or, they have puffed me up.

d ch. 4. 1.

Turn away thine eyes from me, for I can scarce bear the lustre of them. It is a poetical and amatorious expression, signifying how beautiful the church was in Christ's eyes, and how passionately he loved her. Thy hair is as a flock of goats that appear from Gilead: this clause, and the whole following verse, are repeated from chap. iv. 1, 2. And this repetition is not vain nor absurd, but very agreeable to the nature of a pastoral and song of love, as being an effect and testimony of vehement affection, and besides it confirms what was said before, and showeth that the church's miscarriages, and Christ's desertion of her upon it, had not made him change his opinion of her, or affection to her.

6 [e]Thy teeth are as a flock of sheep

which go up from the washing, whereof every one beareth twins, and there is not one barren among them.

7 [f]As a piece of a pomegranate are thy

f ch. 4. 3.

temples within thy locks.

This is also repeated from chap. iv. 3.

8 There are threescore queens, and fourscore concubines, and virgins without number.

Threescore queens, and fourscore concubines; a certain number for an uncertain. The sense seems to be this, There are many beautiful queens and concubines in the world, in the courts of princes, and particularly in Solomon's court; but none of them is to be compared with my spouse, and my heart is set upon none of them, but only upon my spouse, as the following verse declareth. Or the queens and concubines may note the particular congregations which are called by Christ's name, and the virgins may signify the particular believers or professors; all which do make up one catholic church, as it follows. Compare the notes on Psal. xlv. 10, 14, 15. Virgins; either, 1. Which wait upon the queens and concubines. Or, 2. Which were reserved as a nursery, out of which queens and concubines were to be taken.

9 My dove, my undefiled is but one; she is the only one of her mother, she is the choice one of her that bare her. The daughters saw her, and blessed her; yea, the queens and the concubines, and they praised her.

Is but one; the only beloved of my soul, my only spouse, in comparison of whom I despise all others. She is the only one of her mother; of Jerusalem above, which is the mother of us all, Gal. iv. 26. Or if this seem to confound the mother and daughter, the words may be thus rendered, she is the only one of her mother, i. e. she is as dear and as precious to me as only children use to be to their parents, and especially to their mothers. So there is only a defect of the note of similitude, which is frequently understood, as hath been formerly noted and proved by undeniable instances. Daughters, called virgins, ver. 8. They praised her; as more beautiful and worthy than themselves, which was so evident that they were forced to confess it.

10 ¶ Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, [g]and terrible as an army with

These are the words, either, 1. Of the Bridegroom; or,

2. Of the queens and concubines last mentioned, as praising of her. And they are either words of inquiry, or rather of admiration and commendation: Who, i. e. what manner of person, is this? how excellent and glorious! and so this pronoun who is understood Psal. xxiv. 8; Mark iv. 41, compared with Matt. viii. 27. As the morning; as the morning light, which coming after the darkness of the night is very pleasant and amiable, which also suddenly spreadeth itself from the east to the west. Fair as the moon, to wit, when it is full and walking in brightness, as the phrase is, Job xxxi. 26. But withal he seems to intimate that the church, like the moon, may have her eclipses, and be in darkness for a time. Clear as the sun; without any such spots or dark specks as are in the moon; which is to be understood in the same sense that she is said to be without spot, or wrinkle, or blemish, Eph. v. 27, which she is partly by God's gracious acceptation of her as such in Christ, and through his righteousness; and partly because she shall be such in the future life. Terrible as an army with banners: see above, ver. 4.

11 I went down into the garden of nuts
h ch. 7. 12. to see the fruits of the valley, and [h]to see whether the vine flourished, and the pomegranates budded.

I went down, to wit, when I went away from thee. So this is an account of the reason of his former departure from her. Or, I am come down to visit thee, my garden, Cant. iv. 12. Either way these are the words of the Bridegroom. Into the garden of nuts; in which nuts and other fruits are planted. By nuts may be meant, either, 1. Ordinary nuts; and so this is supposed to intimate the mean and contemptible condition of the church in her outward estate, and that her sweetness is all inward and spiritual. Or, 2. Aromatical nuts, to wit, nutmegs; and so this notes how acceptable the church and her productions are to Christ. The valley; which being low, and well watered, is most fruitful. To see whether the vine flourished, and the pomegranates budded; what beginnings or appearances there were of good fruits or works among believers; whether their practices answered their professions.

12 †Or ever I was aware, my soul ‖made me like the chariots of Ammi-nadib.

Or ever I was aware; I was surprised with a sudden and vehement desire of enjoying my spouse; which is to be understood figuratively, and so as to agree with the majesty and omnisciency of Christ. My soul made me; I made myself; which may signify Christ's activity in stirring up his affections to the church: or, I was made; for the active phrase is oft understood passively, and the soul is commonly put for the person. Like the chariots of Ammi-nadib; eager in my desire and swift in my motion towards the church. Ammi-nadib is supposed to be some eminent charioteer then well known, and famous for his speed in driving chariots. But this clause with the former is otherwise rendered, both in the margin and by others, and that very agreeably to the Hebrew words, my soul set me on the chariots of my willing (or, as others, noble or princely) people, i. e. which mine and the bride's friends had prepared to bring me to the bride with more expedition, into which I ascended with all my soul, as longing to come to my bride.

13 Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return, that we may look upon thee.
What will ye see in the Shulamite? As ‖ Or, of Mahanaim. Gen. 32. 2. it were the company ‖ of two armies.

Return: Christ recalls his spouse, who as when Christ was gone she pursued after him, so now when Christ was coming or come to her, she was ready to wander and go astray from him, according to the common and corrupt disposition and custom of mankind; and therefore he seeks to stop or to reclaim her, and to oblige her to return to her first love, and to repent more thoroughly than she had yet done. Return: this word is here repeated four times, to signify both Christ's passionate love to her, and earnest desire of her return, and her backwardness to it, which made so many calls necessary. Shulamite: this title signifies either, 1. One born in or belonging to Jerusalem, called also Salem, Psal. lxxvi. 2. Or, 2. The wife of Solomon, thus called after her husband's name: see Isa. iv. 1. And as Christ is called by the name of Solomon, chap. iii. 7, 9, 11, so the church is fitly described by the title of Solomon's wife. That we may look upon thee; that I and my companions and friends may contemplate thy beauty. What will ye see? but what do you my friends expect to discover in her? Christ proposeth the question, that he may give the following answer, and that they should take special notice of this as a very remarkable thing in her. The company, whereby he intimates that this one and only spouse was made up of the whole multitude of believers, of two armies; either, 1. Opposite one against the other; and so this may note the conflict between the flesh and Spirit which is in all the faithful in this life. Or, 2. Confederate together; and so this may signify either, 1. The re-collection and union of Jews and Gentiles which shall one day be under Christ as their common Head, Eph. ii. 15. Or, 2. The safety and strength of the church, which is compared to an army with banners, above, ver. 4, 10, and here to a numerous host distributed into two armies; wherein also there may be an allusion to that story, Gen. xxxii. 1, where this very word, here rendered two armies, is used.

CHAP. VII.

A further description of the church's graces, 1—7. His design to visit the church, with the blessed effect thereof, 8, 9. She professeth her faith and desire, 10. She inviteth him to communion with her, 11. The end thereof, 12, 13.

The Bridegroom, who spake the last words, here continueth his speech, and breaks forth into an elegant and particular description and commendation of the spouse, partly from the parts of her body, and partly from her ornaments; in which the same thing is to be observed which was noted concerning her description of the Bridegroom, that there is no necessity of a distinct application of every parcel of it, the design being only this, to describe the beauty and glory of the church under the representation of a beautiful and noble woman. This also is observable, that in the description of Christ she begins at the head, and so goeth downward, chap. v. 11, &c., but Christ in the description of the spouse proceedeth from the feet upwards.

HOW beautiful are thy feet with shoes,
thighs are like jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman.

Feet being the chief instrument of our motion from place to place, is oft used metonymically for the motion itself, and so may here signify either the inward motions, the workings of the affections, or the outward motions, the steps or actions of the life, both which are right and amiable in believers. Shoes were anciently evidences of a free and comfortable state, whereas slaves and mourners use to go barefoot, 2 Sam. xv. 30; Isa. xx. 4, which also in women of high quality were adorned with gold and other ornaments; of which see Isa. iii. 18. These may also signify that the feet of believers should be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, Eph. vi. 15. Prince's daughter, both by birth, being born of God, and by disposition and deportment agreeable to that quality. The joints of thy thighs; either, 1. The hollow place in which the hip or thigh-bone moveth and turneth itself; or rather, 2. The hip or thigh-bone which moveth there; for this is more fitly compared to a jewel well set. Some understand this of some ornaments worn by women upon those parts; for the word rendered joints may signify girdles, or any ornament which encompasseth any part of the body, and the same words which signify thighs are both in Hebrew and other languages sometimes used concerning the legs; which being admitted, this might seem to be understood of the bride's garters about her legs, which not unfitly follows the shoes upon her feet last mentioned. But this sense seems not to suit so well with the following comparison as the former doth. Like jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman; like jewels orderly and excellently set by a skilful artist. So this signifies the uprightness and decency of her going, which depends very much upon the right situation of the hip or thigh-bone, which when it is dislocated or disordered causeth a lameness or uncomeliness in going; whereby he understands the orderliness and amiableness of her conversation.

2 Thy navel is like a round goblet, which wanteth not † liquor: thy belly is like an heap of wheat set about with lilies.

† Heb. mixture.

Thy navel is like a round goblet, to which it is not unfitly compared, because it is of a round form, and hollow, and hath windings and circlings in it, which wanteth not liquor; thy navel is not only comely, but fruitful. For the navel is the proper instrument of nourishing the child or children which are in the womb. And so this seems to signify the church's fruitfulness, partly in herself, in cherishing and improving all the graces and good motions of God's Spirit within her; and principally in reference to those many children which she bears and feeds in her womb with the wholesome liquor of God's ordinances. Thy belly, in which thy children are for a time contained and fed, is like a heap of wheat, i. e. of wheat corn, round and swelling, as it is in women with child, and full of nourishment, not only of liquor, as was last said, but also of meat, which may note the various provisions which Christ hath laid up in his church according to the several capacities of her children, milk for babes, and stronger meat for those who are grown up. Set about with lilies; not for defence, which the church doth not need, having the strong God for her Protector, but for ornament and beauty; whereby is implied that she is not only fruitful, but beautiful, and that her children are not only numerous and well fed, but also comely and delightful to the eye, as lilies are, and withal pure and innocent, in which respect both Christ and the church are compared to lilies, Cant. ii. 1, 2.

b ch. 4. 5. 3 [b] Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins.

Which is repeated from chap. iv. 5, where it is explained.

c ch. 4. 4. 4 [c] Thy neck is as a tower of ivory; thine eyes like the fishpools in Heshbon, by the gate of Bath-rabbim: thy nose is as the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus.

Thy neck, of which see on chap. iv. 4, is as a tower of ivory, clear, and smooth, and long, and straight, and erected. Thine eyes, of which see on chap. i. 15; iv. 1, like the fishpools, full, and clear, and quiet, and pleasant. Possibly here were two fish-pools, which being conveniently seated in a large field, might bear some resemblance to the eyes placed in the head. Heshbon; a pleasant and well-watered city, beyond Jordan, as we may guess from Numb. xxxii., where doubtless there were some eminent and well-known fish-pools, as further appears by the exact description of the particular place here following, in which they were. Thy nose; the instrument of smelling, and discerning between pleasant and loathsome things; which may signify the church's sagacity in discerning between good and evil; is as the tower of Lebanon; which though it be not elsewhere mentioned, was in all probability built by Solomon in the mountain of Lebanon, which was the northern border of the land of Israel towards Damascus, and therefore a very fit place for a watch-tower. To this tower her nose is compared, not for its greatness, but for its comely and convenient proportions, and beautiful aspect, which doubtless were in this as well as in the rest of Solomon's buildings. Which looketh toward Damascus; which words seem to be added to distinguish this from another tower or building in or near to Jerusalem, which was called the house of the forest of Lebanon, 1 Kings vii. 2.

‖ Or, crimson. † Heb. bound. 5 Thine head upon thee is like ‖ Carmel, and the hair of thine head like purple; the king is † held in the galleries.

Thine head, which may signify the church's mind or understanding, which is seated in the head, upon thee, which is upon thee, or above the rest of thy body, is like Carmel, eminent and pleasant to the eye, and fruitful as Mount Carmel was, as hath been formerly noted; which may note that her mind was adorned and replenished with knowledge and other excellent gifts of the Holy Ghost. Or, as others render it, like crimson or purple, which is called Carmel, 2 Chron. ii. 7; iii. 14, because those fishes out of which they had their purple were taken in the sea bordering upon Mount Carmel. And so the same thing is repeated in the next clause in other words. Like purple; which colour was anciently much esteemed and commended, as by sacred, so also by profane writers. The king is held in the galleries; in which he walketh, and having once espied thee, is captivated by thee, and unable or unwilling either to depart or to take off his eyes from thee, as if he were fast bound and chained to thee. The galleries may note either the ordinances, or rather the churches, in which Christ walketh, Rev. ii. 1, in which Christ and believers converse together.

6 How fair and how pleasant art thou, O love, for delights!

How fair and how pleasant art thou! it were infinite to reckon up all the particulars of thy beauty; in one word, thou art universally amiable beyond expression. For delights; for those various lovely features which are in thee, and for the great and manifold delights which are or may be enjoyed in conversing with thee.

7 This thy stature is like to a palm tree, and thy breasts to clusters of grapes.

Like to a palm tree, tall and straight, or upright, as a tree. And he seems to mention the palm tree rather than any other, partly because it grows more directly upward than other trees; and partly because it is constantly green and flourishing, and groweth upward in spite of all pressures, and therefore was used in festival solemnities, Lev. xxiii. 40; John xii. 13, and was a symbol of victory, Rev. vii. 9; in all which respects it fitly represents the state of believers. Clusters, large, and round, and full of juice. See on ver. 3. This particular is added as an evidence of her maturity and married estate, and of her fruitfulness. Grapes; which word may easily be supplied out of the next verse. Although the fruit of the palm tree also is said to grow in clusters.

8 I said, I will go up to the palm tree, I will take hold of the boughs thereof: now also thy breasts shall be as clusters of the vine, and the smell of thy nose like apples;

I said within myself, I resolved, I will go up to the palm tree; I will climb up, that so I may take hold, as it follows, of the boughs, which do not grow out of the sides, as in other trees, but only at the top of it. I will take hold of the boughs thereof, partly to prune and dress them, and partly to gather the fruit; whereby is signified Christ's care of his church, and his delight in her. Of thy nose; of thy breath; which is oft called the breath of or in a man's nostrils, Gen. vii. 22; Isa. ii. 22; Lam. iv. 20. Like apples; either, 1. Common apples, which sometimes yield a very pleasant smell. Or, 2. Odoriferous apples. See on chap. ii. 5.

9 And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine for my beloved, that goeth down † sweetly, causing the lips ‖ of those that are asleep to speak.

† Heb. straightly. ‖ Or, of the ancient.

The roof of thy mouth; either, 1. Thy speech, the palate being one of the principal instruments of speech; or rather, 2. Thy taste, whereof the palate or roof of the mouth is the most proper and principal instrument, Job xxxiv. 3. But then this is not to be understood actively of her taste, but passively of the taste or relish which her Beloved had of her; as in the foregoing clause, the smell of her nose was not meant subjectively or actively of that sense of smelling which was seated in her nose, but objectively or passively of the breath of her nostrils, which was sweet to the smell of her Beloved. Like the best wine, grateful and refreshing. For my beloved; either, 1. For thee my beloved, who reapest the comfort and benefit of that pleasure which I take in thee; or, 2. For me thy Beloved, or, according to thy usual expression, for my Beloved; which words Christ takes as it were out of her mouth, and repeats them emphatically; which agrees very well to the style and usage of these dramatical and amatorious writings. And this clause further intimates the church's loyalty or faithfulness to Christ, that she reserves herself and all her loves for Christ alone.

That goeth down sweetly; whereas bad wine either goeth down slowly and tediously, or is not permitted to go down at all; Heb. that walketh directly; or, that moveth itself aright; which is given as the character of good wine, Prov. xxiii. 31. Causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak; causing the most dull, and stupid, and sleepy-headed persons to speak, and that fluently and eloquently, which is a common effect of good wine.

d ch. 2. 16. & 6. 3. e Ps. 45. 11. 10 ¶ [d] I am my beloved's, and [e] his desire is toward me.

This and the following verses contain the words of the bride, in answer to the Bridegroom's most endearing expressions delivered in the foregoing verses. His desire is toward me; I perceive, and am fully satisfied, that he heartily loves me. It is my duty to have my desire towards him as my Husband, according to God's sentence, Gen. iii. 16, but it is a wonderful condescension in him, that his desire is towards me.

11 Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field; let us lodge in the villages.

Let us go forth into the field; that being retired from the crowd, we may more freely and sweetly converse together, and may observe the state of the fruits of the earth. In the villages; in one of the villages, as cities is put for one of the cities, Judg. xii. 7.

f ch. 6. 11. + Heb. open. 12 Let us get up early to the vineyards; let us [f] see if the vine flourish, whether the tender grape †appear, and the pomegranates bud forth: there will I give thee my loves.

Let us get up early: the church having offended and lost her Beloved by her former laziness, now doubles her diligence, and discovers how earnestly she was set upon the following work. To the vineyards; to particular congregations. See Cant. vi. 11; Isa. v. 1. Let us see if the vines flourish, &c.; let us inquire into the success of our labours, what souls are brought in and built up, how they prosper and grow in grace, whether they abound in good works, &c. There will I give thee my loves; there I will discover the sincerity and fervency of my affections to thee, and maintain communion with thee in thy holy ordinances.

g Gen. 30. 14. h Matt. 13. 52. 13 The [g] mandrakes give a smell, and at our gates [h] are all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved.

Mandrakes: this Hebrew word is used Gen. xxx. 14, 15, and the signification of it is very much doubted and disputed by interpreters; of which see my Latin Synopsis on that place. But this is certain, that the word signifies sweet and pleasant flowers; and therefore if it be understood of mandrakes, they were of another sort than ours, as it is no unusual thing for flowers of the same kind in several climates to have very differing natures and qualities. At our gates; either, 1. Growing there upon the walls, or in gardens, or orchards, near the door of our dwelling-house. Or rather, 2. Brought thither by divers persons to congratulate and adorn our nuptials, or laid up for our entertainment, as may be gathered from the nature of the fruits, which were not only new, and growing, but also old, and laid up, as it here follows. Fruits new and old; fruits of this year and of the former, that the variety might delight; which seems to be spiritually meant of the various fruits and operations of the Spirit and degrees of grace in several believers. Which I have laid up for thee; which have been produced by my ministry for thy service and glory.

CHAP. VIII.

The church expresseth her desire of familiarity with Christ, 1, by the entertainment she would make him, 2, 3. She charges the daughters of Jerusalem not to disturb her Beloved, 4. A commendation of the church for her faith in Christ, 5. She prayeth for full assurance of his love; her invincible desire, 6; which is insatiable, 7. The calling of the Gentiles, with their intent, and her condition, 8—13. Christ's coming prayed for, 14.

O THAT thou wert as my brother, that sucked the breasts of my mother! when I should find thee without, I would kiss thee; yea, †I should not be despised. + Heb. they should not despise me.

Oh that thou wert as my brother, most intimate, and free, and familiar with me, as brethren and sisters commonly are, that sucked the breasts of my mother! that came out of the same womb, and sucked the same breasts, and consequently were brother and sister by father and mother too; for such are most dear to one another. See Gen. xliii. 29; Deut. xiii. 6. Heb. sucking the breasts, &c.; so she wisheth that he were as a little sucking brother, with whom she might innocently and inoffensively delight herself, as sisters do with such a brother. The church here expresseth her passionate desire of a stricter union and closer communion with Christ than yet she had attained. And in particular these may be the breathings of the ancient Jewish church after Christ's incarnation, whereby he was to be their brother, Rom. viii. 29; Heb. ii. 11, 12, and a sucking infant. Without; in the open streets; I might then express my affections to thee, and kiss thee openly, without any scandal or contempt. Or, without, i. e. come forth from the Father's bosom into the world, John xvi. 28. I would kiss thee; I would demonstrate my reverence, and subjection, and affection to thee, of all which kissing was a token in those times and places, as hath been oft observed in divers foregoing texts. Yet I should not be despised; then should I not be ashamed or censured, as if I had done an indecent or immodest action, because such expressions of love are usual amongst persons so nearly and dearly related.

2 I would lead thee, and bring thee into my mother's house, who would instruct me: I would cause thee to drink of [a] spiced wine of the juice of my pomegranate. a Prov. 9. 2.

Bring thee, with joy and triumph, as the bridegroom was usually brought to the bride's house. See Psal. xlv. 14, 15. Into my mother's house; either, 1. My mother's-in-law, my husband's mother, as the custom was, Gen. xxiv. 67; Judg. xii. 9. Or, 2. My own mother's, to show her extraordinary respect and affection to him. In the mystical sense both come to one; for the universal church was in some sort both his and her mother. Who would instruct me, to wit, how I should behave myself towards thee. Or, where she did instruct or educate me. I would cause thee to drink of spiced wine of the juice of my pomegranate; I would give thee the best entertainment which the house affords. My gifts and graces should all be employed to serve and glorify thee.

3 [b] His left hand should be under my head, and his right hand should embrace me. b ch. 2. 6.

The same expressions are used chap. ii. 6. The sense is, He would not despise me for my forwardness in showing my affections to him, as men commonly do in like cases, but would kindly accept of my love, and return love for it.

4 [c] I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, †that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, until he please. c ch. 2. 7. & 3. 5. + Heb. why should ye stir up, or, why, &c.

This verse is here repeated again, from chap. ii. 7; iii. 5, where see the explication of it.

5 [d] Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved? I raised thee up under the apple tree: there thy mother brought thee forth: there she brought thee forth that bare thee. d ch. 3. 6.

Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness? these words are repeated from chap. iii. 6, of which see the notes there. This and the next clause are the words either, 1. Of the daughters of Jerusalem, or the friends of the bride and Bridegroom, admiring and congratulating this happy conjunction. Or, 2. Of the Bridegroom, who proposeth the question, that he may give the answer here following. Leaning upon her Beloved; which implies both great freedom and familiarity, and fervent affection, and dependence upon him. If these be the Bridegroom's words, he speaketh of himself in the third person, which is usual in the Hebrew language. I raised thee up, when thou wast fallen, and laid low, and wert dead in trespasses, and in the depth of misery I revived thee. Under the apple tree; under my own shadow; for she had compared him to an apple tree, and declared that under the shadow of the tree she had both delight and fruit, Cant. ii. 3, which is the same thing with this raising up. There thy mother brought thee forth; under that tree either the universal or the primitive church did conceive and bring thee forth.

c Is. 49. 16. Jer. 22. 24. Hag. 2. 23.

6 ¶ [c]Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm: for love is strong as death; jealousy is ‖ cruel as the grave: the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame.

‖ Heb. hard.

Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm: these are undoubtedly the words of the bride. The sense is, Let thy mind and thy heart be constantly set upon me, let me be engraven upon the tables of thine heart. He seems to allude to the engraven tablets which are frequently worn upon the breast, and to the signet on a man's arm or hand, which men prize at a more than ordinary rate, as appears from Jer. xxii. 24; Hag. ii. 23, and which are continually in their sight. For love, my love to thee, from whence this desire proceeds, is strong as death; which conquers every living thing, and cannot be resisted nor vanquished. Jealousy, or zeal; my ardent love to thee, which also fills me with fears and jealousies, lest thou shouldst bestow thine affections upon others, and cool in thy love to me, or withdraw thy love from me; for true believers are subject to these passions. Cruel, Heb. hard; grievous and terrible, and sometimes ready to overwhelm me, and swallow me up; and therefore have pity upon me, and do not leave me. Are coals of fire; it burns and melts my heart like fire.

f Prov. 6. 35.

7 Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it: [f]if a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would utterly be contemned.

It is the nature of love in general, and of my love to thee, that it cannot be taken off, neither by terrors and afflictions, which are commonly signified in Scripture by waters and floods, Psal. xxxii. 6; xlii. 7, and elsewhere; nor by temptations and allurements. Nothing but the presence and favour of the beloved person can quiet and satisfy it. And therefore do not put me off with other things, but give me thyself, without whom, and in comparison of whom, I despise all other persons and things.

g Ezek. 23. 33.

8 ¶ [g]We have a little sister, and she hath no breasts: what shall we do for our sister in the day when she shall be spoken for?

These are manifestly the words of the bride, still continuing her speech. The present church, which was that of the Jews, speaks of another future church, which was to consist of the Gentiles, which she calls little, because she was the younger sister, and then scarce had a being; and she calls her her sister, partly because she was so in the purpose of God, their common Father, though at present she was a stranger to him; and partly to intimate that the Gentile church should be admitted to the participation of the same privileges with that of the Jews. She hath no breasts; no grown and full breasts, as virgins have when they are ripe for marriage, Ezek. xvi. 7. This signifies the present doleful estate of the Gentiles, which as yet were not grown up into a church estate, and wanted the milk or food of life, as for itself, so also for its members. What shall we do for our sister? teach us to know and perform our duty to them, which is to embrace them with sincere and fervent affections, to promote their coming in to Christ, and to rejoice in it, and not to envy it, and murmur at it, as the Jews did in the days of Christ and of his apostles. In the day when she shall be spoken for, to wit, for bringing her into the state of matrimony; when Christ and his apostles, and others, the first ministers of the gospel, who were members of the Jewish church, did speak and act for the conversion of the Gentiles.

9 If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver: and if she be a door, we will inclose her with boards of cedar.

This seems to be Christ's answer to the foregoing question of the Jewish church concerning their sister church of the Gentiles, for which they were very solicitous. Christ therefore engageth himself to take care of her, and to provide for her, as the matter doth require, and as suits best with her condition. If the Gentiles, when they are converted, shall be like a wall, strong and firm in faith, stedfast against all assaults and temptations, for a wall in Scripture use signifies strength, Isa. xxvi. 1; Jer. xv. 20, and elsewhere, we, my Father, and I, and the Holy Ghost, as the principal builders, and my ministers as workers with and under us, will build upon her a palace of silver; will add more strength and beauty to her, will enlarge and adorn her, make her more amiable in mine eyes, and more visible and glorious in the eyes of the world. And if she be as a door, which is weaker than a wall, and where the enemy doth or may break in upon her; if she be weak in faith, and sometimes overcome by the tempter, yet we will not therefore reject and forsake her, but we will enclose, or (as many others render the word) strengthen, or fortify, her with boards of cedar, which are not only beautiful, but also strong and durable. If she be sincere, and open the door of her heart to me, though she be weak, I will come in to her, and make her stronger.

10 I am a wall, and my breasts like towers: then was I in his eyes as one that found †favour.

†Heb. peace.

These seem to be the words of the Jewish church to Christ: O Lord, by thy grace I am what thou wouldst have my sister to be, a wall, and therefore do humbly beg and hope that, according to thy promise to her in that case, thou wilt build upon me a palace of silver. My breasts like towers; which stand out from and above the wall, and are an ornament and defence to it. Of the church's breasts, see before, chap. iv. 5; vii. 3, 7. Then was I in his eyes as one that found favour; when by his grace I was made a wall, he was well-pleased with me, and with his own workmanship in me.

h Matt. 21. 33.

11 Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon; [h]he let out the vineyard unto keepers; every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.

Baal-hamon; a place not far from Jerusalem, where Solomon had, as it seems, a noble vineyard. Every one was to bring a thousand pieces of silver; whereby he signifies both the vast extent of the vineyard, which required so many keepers, and its singular fertility, which afforded so great a rent.

12 My vineyard, which is mine, is before me: thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit thereof two hundred.

My vineyard; my church, which is oft compared to a vineyard, and is here opposed to Solomon's vineyard. It is much doubted and disputed whether this verse be spoken by Christ or by the spouse; the first clause seems to agree best to the former, and the following clause to the latter. Possibly the difficulty may be reconciled by ascribing the first clause to Christ, and the latter to the spouse; such interlocutions being familiar in this book, and in other writings of this kind. Which is mine: this repetition is not idle, but very emphatical, to show that Christ had a more eminent and special title to his vineyard, the church, than Solomon had to his vineyard, because it was purchased not by his money, but by his blood, and because it was his, not only for the short time of this present life, as Solomon's was, but to all eternity. Is before me; is under my own eye and care, and is not wholly committed to the care and management of others, as Solomon's was: I the Lord do keep it night and day, as we read, Isa. xxvii. 3. I am with it to the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20. Thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand: these are the church's return to Christ, who is here called Solomon, as he was chap. iii. 9, 11, as elsewhere he is called David. Dost thou, O Christ, keep thine own vineyard, which Solomon did not? Then surely it is meet that thou shouldst receive, and thou shalt receive, as large a revenue from thy vineyard as he did from his. Those that keep the fruit thereof two hundred; though the chief revenue belongeth and is justly given to thee, yet thy ministers who serve thee in thy vineyard shall have, and are allowed by thee to receive, some encouragement for their service. See 1 Cor. ix. 7.

13 Thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice: [i]cause me to hear it.

i ch. 2. 14.

Thou that dwellest: the Hebrew word is of the feminine gender, which plainly showeth that Christ speaks here to his spouse, being about to depart from her for a season, as the next verse showeth. In the gardens; not in the wilderness of the world, for believers are chosen or called out of the world, John xv. 19; but in the church, the garden of God, which God hath fenced and appropriated to himself. He saith gardens, because of the many particular congregations into which the church is divided. The companions, the friends of the bride and Bridegroom, hearken to thy voice; diligently observe all thy words and carriages towards me, and all the transactions between thee and me. Cause me to hear it; when I am gone from thee, let me hear thy prayers, and praises, and the preaching of my gospel in the world.

14 ¶ [k]† Make haste, my beloved, and [l]be thou like to a roe or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices.

k See Rev. 22. 17, 20.
l ch. 2. 17.

Seeing we must part for a time, make haste, O my beloved Bridegroom, and speedily finish the work which thou hast to do in the world, that so thou mayst take me to thyself, that I may live in thine everlasting embraces. The words of this verse are borrowed from chap. ii. 17, where they are explained.

THE ARGUMENT

THE teachers of the ancient church were of two sorts: 1. Ordinary, the priests and Levites. 2. Extraordinary, the prophets. These were immediately called by God, and inspired, as with other singular gifts and graces, so particularly with a supernatural knowledge of Divine mysteries, and of future things, and invested by God with an authority superior not only to the ordinary teachers of the church, but in some sort even to the civil powers of the nation. These holy prophets, whose writings are contained in the sacred Scripture, are sixteen. Of these Isaiah is first in place, and, as may seem probable, in time also. But undoubtedly he was contemporary with Hosea, whom others suppose to have been before him. Compare Isa. i. 1, with Hos. i. 1. The Jews tell us that he was of the blood royal of Judah, which is uncertain. But undoubtedly he was the prince of all the prophets, whether we consider the great extent and variety of his prophecies, the excellency and sublimity of those mysteries which were revealed to him and by him, the majesty and elegancy of his style, or the incomparable liveliness and power of his sermons. He doth so evidently and fully describe the person, and offices, and sufferings, and kingdom of Christ, that some of the ancients called him the fifth evangelist. And it is observed, that there are more testimonies and quotations in the New Testament taken out of Isaiah than out of all the other prophets.

CHAP. I.

Judah's sins, 1—4; her judgments, 5—9; her worship is rejected, 10—15. Exhortations to repentance; promises of grace and mercy; threatenings of sore judgments; and complaints by reason of their backsliding, 16—31.

B. C. cir. 760. THE [a]vision of Isaiah the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah.

a Num. 12. 6.

The vision, or, the visions; the word being here collectively used, as it is chap. xxii. 1; 1 Sam. iii. 1. The sense is, This is the book of the visions or prophecies. As prophets were called seers, 1 Sam. ix. 9, so prophecies are called visions, because they were as clearly and certainly represented to the prophets' minds as bodily objects are to men's eyes. Amoz; either the brother of Amaziah king of Judah, as the Hebrew writers fancy; or rather, some other person then well known. Saw, i. e. foresaw and foretold. But he speaks, after the manner of the prophets, of things to come as if they were either past or present. Concerning Judah and Jerusalem; principally, but not exclusively. For he prophesieth also concerning Egypt and Babylon, and divers other countries; which yet he doth with respect to Judah. In the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah; in the time of their reign; whence it may be gathered that Isaiah exercised his prophetical office above fifty years together: see 2 Kings xv., xvi.

2 [b]Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: for the LORD hath spoken, [c]I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me.

b Dent. 32. 1 Jer. 2. 12. & 6. 19. & 22. 29. Ezek. 36. 4. Mic. 1. 2. & 6. 1, 2.
c ch. 5. 1, 2.

Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: he directeth his speech to these senseless creatures, that thereby he might more awaken and affect the Israelites, whom he hereby proclaimeth to be so dull and stupid that they were past hearing, and therefore gives them over as desperate, and calleth in the whole creation of God to bear witness against them. The Lord hath spoken: this is his plea against them, of the equity whereof he is willing that all the creatures should be judges. I have nourished and brought up children; I first made them a people, and until this time I have sustained and blessed them above all other nations.

3 [d]The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel [e]doth not know, my people [f]doth not consider.

d Jer. 8. 7.
f ch. 5. 12.

The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; the most stupid brute beasts acknowledge and obey their Lord and Benefactor, as experience showeth. Israel doth not know, to wit, me, their Owner and Master, which is easily and necessarily understood out of the former clause. Knowing is here taken practically, as it is usually in Scripture, and includes reverence and obedience.

g ch. 57. 3, 4. Matt. 3. 7.

4 Ah sinful nation, a people †laden with iniquity, [g]a seed of evildoers, children that are corrupters: they have forsaken the LORD, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are †gone away backward.

† Heb. alienated, or, separated, Ps. 58. 3.

Ah: this particle implies both his wonder, and anger, and grief, and shame that they were such. Laden with iniquity, Heb. of heaviness of iniquity, i. e. of heavy or great sins; for heavy is commonly put for great or grievous, as Isa. xxi. 15; xxx. 27. Laden not with the sense of sin, as Matt. xi. 28, but with the guilt and bondage of sin. A seed of evil-doers; the children of wicked parents, whose guilt they inherit, and whose evil example they follow. That are corrupters, Heb. that corrupt, to wit, themselves, or their ways, or others by their counsel and example. Or, that destroy themselves and their land by their wickedness. They have forsaken the Lord, not in profession, but in practice and reality, neglecting or corrupting his worship, refusing his yoke and conduct. They have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger; they have lived as if it were their great design and business to provoke him. They are gone away backward; instead of proceeding forward, and growing in grace, which was their duty, they are all fallen from their former professions, and grown worse and worse, and have impudently turned their backs upon me.

h ch. 9. 13. Jer. 2. 30. & 5. 3.

5 ¶ [h]Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will †revolt more and more: the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint.

Why should ye be stricken any more? it is to no purpose to seek to reclaim you by one chastisement after another; and therefore I will utterly forsake and destroy you at once. Ye will revolt more and more; I see you are incorrigible, and turn even your afflictions into sin. The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint; your disease is mortal, as being in the most noble and vital parts, the very head and heart of the body politic, from whence the plague is derived to all the other members, as it follows. And this is to be understood either, 1. Of their sins; or rather, 2. Of their miseries. Which best suits, 1. With the foregoing words, this being added as a reason why it was in vain to strike them any more, or to expect any amendment that way, because he had stricken them already, and that very terribly, even in their head and heart, whose wounds are most dangerous, and yet they were not at all better for it. 2. With ver. 7, 8, where this metaphor is so explained.

6 From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores:
i Jer. 8. 22.
‖ Or, oil.
[i]they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ‖ointment.

From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; you have been all of you punished, from the highest to the lowest, from the worst to the best. They have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment; I have suffered you to lie under your maladies for a time, without applying any remedies, to try whether the length and continuance of your affliction might not work that cure which the strength of it could not do, but all in vain.

k Deut. 28. 51, 52.

7 [k]Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire: your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, †as overthrown by strangers.

All this and what follows was verified in the days of king Ahaz, 2 Chron. xxviii., in whose time, and upon which occasion, this prophecy seems to have been delivered, as more exactly agreeing with that time than with any other. If any object, that this being the first of his prophecies, must rather belong to the days of Uzziah, they must take notice, and it is agreed by interpreters, and it is undeniably true, that the prophecies of Isaiah, as also of the other prophets, are not set down in the same order in which they were delivered, but oftentimes the latter are put before the former. In your presence; which your eyes shall see to torment you, when there is no power in your hands to deliver you. As overthrown by strangers, Heb. as the overthrow of strangers, i. e. which strangers bring upon a land which is not theirs, nor likely to continue in their hands, and therefore they spare no persons that come in their way, and they spoil and destroy all things, which is not usually done in wars between persons of the same or of a neighbour nation.

8 And the daughter of Zion is left [l]as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, [m]as a besieged city.
l Job 27. 18. Lam. 2. 6.
m Jer. 4. 17.

The daughter of Zion, i. e. Zion, or Jerusalem; for these two names are promiscuously used of the same place; the name of daughter being frequently given to cities or countries. Thus the daughter of Babylon is put for Babylon itself, Psal. cxxxvii. 8; Isa. xlvii. 1. In the same sense we read of the daughter of Tyre, Psal. xlv. 12, and of Zidon, Isa. xxiii. 12, and of Egypt, Jer. xlvi. 11, 24, and of Edom, Lam. iv. 21. Is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers; is left solitary, all the neighbouring villages and country round about it being laid waste.

9 [n]Except the LORD of hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have been as [o]Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah.
n Lam. 3. 22. Rom. 9. 29.
o Gen. 19. 24.

If God, by his infinite power and goodness, had not restrained our enemies, and reserved some of us, the whole nation and race of us had been utterly cut off, as the people of Sodom and Gomorrah were; so great was the rage and power of our enemies, and so utterly unable we were to deliver ourselves.

10 ¶ Hear the word of the LORD, ye rulers [p]of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah.
p Deut. 32. 32. Ezek. 16. 46.

Hear the word of the Lord; I speak not my own fancies or passions, but the message of your Lord and Governor, to whom you owe all reverence and obedience. Rulers of Sodom; so called for their resemblance of them in wickedness: compare Deut. xxxii. 32; Ezek. xvi. 46, 48. The law; or, doctrine, as this word is commonly used; the message which I am now to deliver to you from God, your great Lawgiver, which ought to have the force of a law with you.

11 To what purpose is the multitude of your [q]sacrifices unto me? saith the LORD: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of †he goats.
q 1 Sam. 15. 22. Ps. 50. 8, 9. & 51. 16. Prov. 15. 8. & 21. 27. ch. 66. 3. Jer. 6. 20. & 7. 21. Amos 5. 21, 22. Micah 6. 7.

To what purpose? they are vain and useless, being neither accepted by me, nor beneficial to you. Unto me, who am a Spirit, and therefore cannot be satisfied with such carnal oblations, but expect to be worshipped in spirit and truth, and to have your hearts and lives, as well as your bodies and sacrifices, presented unto me. I am full of the burnt-offerings; I am glutted with them, and therefore loathe them. The blood; he mentions the fat and blood, because these were in a peculiar manner reserved for God, Lev. iii. 15, 16; xvii. 11, to intimate that even the best of their sacrifices were rejected by him.

12 When ye come †[r]to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts?
r Ex. 23. 17. & 34. 23.

When ye come to appear before me, upon the three solemn feasts, Exod. xxiii. 17; xxxiv. 23, or upon other occasions. Who hath required this at your hands, to wit, in this manner, and upon these terms? The thing that I commanded was not only nor chiefly that you should offer external sacrifices to me, but that you should do it with true repentance for all your sins, with faith in my promises, with hearty love to me, and sincere resolutions of devoting yourselves to my service, without which you offer me a dead carcass instead of a living sacrifice. My courts; the courts of my temple, which were two, that of the priests, and that where the people assembled, 2 Chron. iv. 9. So this reproof seems to be directed against both priests and people, as unworthy to enjoy this privilege.

a Matt. 15. 9.

13 Bring no more [a]vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, [t]the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is ‖ iniquity, even the solemn meeting.

t Joel 1. 14. & 2. 15.

‖ Or, grief.

Bring no more; I neither desire nor will accept of any upon these terms. Oblations, Heb. meat-offerings; of which see Lev. ii. 1; Numb. xv. 4. Incense is an abomination unto me; so far is it from being a sweet savour to me, as you foolishly imagine. The new moons; which were holy to God, and observed with great solemnity. See Numb. xxviii. 11, 14; Psal. lxxxi. 3. The calling of assemblies; all other solemn times wherein the people were obliged to meet together, as the three great yearly feasts, and other extraordinary seasons. I cannot away with, Heb. I cannot bear; it is burdensome and grievous to me. It is also iniquity; so far is it from pleasing me, that it is an offence to me; and instead of reconciling me to you, which is your design, it provoketh me more against you. The solemn meeting; the most solemn day of each of the three feasts, which was the last day, which is called by this very name, Lev. xxiii. 36; Numb. xxix. 35, and elsewhere; although the word be sometimes more generally used of any other solemn festival day.

14 Your [u]new moons and your [x]appointed feasts my soul hateth: they are a trouble unto me; [y]I am weary to bear them.

15 And [z]when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you: [a]yea, when ye †make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of [b]†blood.

When ye spread forth your hands; when you pray with hands spread abroad, as the manner was; of which see Exod. ix. 29, 33; Job xi. 13, &c. I will hide mine eyes from you; which is a gesture of contempt and loathing. I will take no notice of your persons or requests. Your hands are full of blood; you are guilty of murder, and oppression, and other crying sins, which I abhor, and have forbidden, under pain of mine highest displeasure.

16 ¶ [c]Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; [d]cease to do evil;

Make you clean; cleanse your hearts and hands from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and do not content yourselves with your ceremonial washings. Put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; reform yourselves so thoroughly, that you may not only approve yourselves to men, but to me, who search your hearts, and try all your actions.

e Jer. 22. 3, 16. Mic. 6. 8. Zech. 7. 9. & 8. 16.

17 Learn to do well; [e]seek judgment, ‖relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.

Learn to do well; begin and inure yourselves to live soberly, righteously, and godlily. Seek judgment; show your religion to God, by studying and practising justice to men, and neither give nor procure any unrighteous judgment. Relieve the oppressed; be not only just, but mereiful. Judge the fatherless; defend and deliver them, as this word is used, Psal. vii. 8, 11; ix. 4, and oft elsewhere. Plead for the widow; maintain the righteous cause of poor and helpless persons against their unjust and potent adversaries; whereby you will show your love to justice and mercy, and that you fear God more than men.

f ch. 43. 26. Micah 6. 2.
g Ps. 51. 7. Rev. 7. 14.

18 Come now, and [f]let us reason together, saith the LORD: though your sins be as scarlet, [g]they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

Come now, and let us reason together; I am willing to lay aside my prerogative, and to submit the matter to a fair and equal trial, whether I do not deal justly in rejecting all your services, which are accompanied with such gross hypocrisy and wickedness, and whether I do not deal very graciously in offering mercy and pardon to you upon these conditions. Though your sins be as scarlet, red and bloody, as theirs were, ver. 15, great and heinous, they shall be as white as snow; they shall be washed and purged by the blood of the Messias, whereby you shall be made white and pure in God's sight. It is a metonymical expression, as sins are said to be purged, Heb. i. 3, when men are purged from their sins, Heb. ix. 14. Shall be as wool; which for the most part is white, and is compared to snow for whiteness, Rev. i. 14.

19 If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land:

If ye be willing and obedient; if you are heartily willing and fully resolved to obey all my commands. Ye shall eat the good of the land; together with the pardon of your sins, you shall receive many temporal and worldly blessings.

20 But if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword: [h]for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

h Num. 23. 19. Tit. 1. 2.

If ye refuse and rebel; if you obstinately persist in your disobedience to me, as hitherto you have done. The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it; he hath said it, who can as easily do it as speak the words, and who cannot lie, and therefore will do it.

i Jer. 2. 20, 21.

21 ¶ [i]How is the faithful city become an harlot! it was full of judgment; righteousness lodged in it; but now murderers.

How, a note of admiration at so strange, and sad, and sudden a change, is the faithful city, Jerusalem, which in the reign of former kings was faithful to God, become an harlot! is filled with idolatry, which is commonly called whoredom. It was full of judgment; judgment was duly and truly executed in all its courts. Righteousness lodged in it; it was famous for being the seat of justice, which did not only pass through it, like a wayfaring man, but had its settled abode in it. But now murderers; under that one gross kind he comprehends all sorts of unrighteous men and practices, as may be gathered by the opposition. Only their connivance at that horrid crime of murder is noted, to assure us that other crimes of a lower nature were not only unpunished, but even encouraged.

k Jer. 6. 28, 30. Ezek. 22. 18, 19.

22 [k]Thy silver is become dross, thy wine mixed with water:

23 [l]Thy princes are rebellious, and [m]companions of thieves: [n]every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards: they [o]judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them.

Thy princes are rebellious against me, their sovereign Lord; they cast off my yoke, and make their own wills and lusts the rule of their life and government. Companions of thieves; partly by giving them connivance and countenance, and receiving a recompence from them for it; and partly by practising the same violence, and cruelty, and injustice that thieves use. Loveth gifts, i. e. bribes given to pervert justice, which are severely forbidden, Deut. x. 17; xxvii. 25. Followeth after rewards; pursuing them with all eagerness, and by all means possible. They judge not the fatherless, &c.; they are so far from doing them justice, that they will not so much as give them a fair hearing of their cause, because they cannot make their way to them by gifts.

p Deut. 28. 63. Ezek. 5. 13.

24 Therefore saith the Lord, the LORD of hosts, the mighty One of Israel, Ah, [p]I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies:

I will ease me, Heb. I will comfort myself; ease my mind, and satisfy my justice, by taking vengeance, as the next clause explains this. The same expression is used in the same sense Ezek. v. 13. Of mine adversaries; of the Israelites, who, though they have called themselves my children and friends, yet by their temper and carriage towards me have showed themselves to be mine enemies.

I will turn my hand upon thee, to chastise thee again, which God threatened that he would not do, ver. 5, but now promiseth that he will do it, not in fury, or so as utterly to destroy them, but in mercy, and with moderation, so as to purge them, as it here follows. And purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin; I will purge out of thee and destroy those wicked men that are incorrigible and infectious to others; and for those of you that are curable, I will by my word, and by the furnace of affliction, purge out all that hypocrisy and corruption that yet remains in you, and requires so sharp a cure.

26 And I will restore thy judges [r] as at the first, and thy counsellors as at the s Zech. 8. 3. beginning: afterward [s] thou shalt be called, The city of righteousness, the faithful city.

I will restore thy judges, I will give thee such princes and magistrates, as at the first, Heb. as thou hadst in the beginning; either, 1. Of thy commonwealth, such as Moses and Joshua; or, 2. Of thy kingdom, such as David. Thy counsellors; thy princes shall have and hearken to wise and faithful counsellors, which is a singular blessing to a prince and people. Thou shalt be called, to wit, justly and truly; thou shalt be such; for to be called is oft put for to be, as Isa. iv. 3; lxi. 6; Matt. v. 9.

27 Zion shall be redeemed with judg-

‖ Or, they that return of her. ment, and ‖ her converts with righteousness.

Zion, the Jews that live in or near Zion, and worship God in Zion, shall be redeemed, shall be delivered from all their enemies and calamities, with judgment; or, by judgment, i. e. by God's righteous judgment, purging out those wicked and incorrigible Jews, who by their sins hindered the deliverance of the people, and punishing and destroying their unmerciful enemies, who kept them in cruel bondage, as he did to the Babylonians, whereby he made the way open for their deliverance. Her converts, Heb. her returners, those of them who shall come out of captivity into their own land, with righteousness; or, by righteousness, i. e. either by my faithfulness, in keeping my promise of delivering them after seventy years; or by my goodness; for both these come under the name of righteousness in Scripture use.

t Job 31. 3. Ps. 1. 6. & 5. 6. & 73. 27. & 92. 9. & 104. 35. † Heb. breaking.

28 ¶ And the [t] †destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the LORD shall be consumed.

And; or rather, but, as that particle is oft used; for here is a manifest opposition. The destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together; though I will deliver my people from the Babylonish captivity, yet those of them who shall still go on in their wickedness shall not have the benefit of that mercy, but are reserved for a more dreadful and total destruction.

u ch. 57. 5.

29 For they shall be ashamed of [u] the oaks which ye have desired, [x] and ye shall be confounded for the gardens that ye have chosen.

They shall be ashamed; not with an ingenuous and penitential shame for the sin, but with an involuntary and penal shame for the disappointment of their hopes which they had in their idols. Which ye have desired; which, after the manner of the heathen, you have consecrated to idolatrous uses, that under them you might worship your idols, as they did, Ezek. vi. 13; Hos. iv. 13: see also Isa. lvii. 5; Jer. ii. 20; iii. 6. The gardens; in which, as well as in the groves, they committed idolatry; of which we read Isa. lxv. 3; lxvi. 17. That ye have chosen, to wit, for the place of your worship, which is opposed to the place which God had chosen and appointed for his worship.

30 For ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water.

As you have sinned under the oaks and in gardens, so you shall be made like unto oaks and gardens, not when they are green and flourishing, but when they wither and decay.

y Ezek. 32. 21. z ch. 43. 17. ‖ Or, and his work.

31 [y] And the strong shall be [z] as tow, ‖ and the maker of it as a spark, and they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them.

The strong; either, 1. Your idols, which you think to be strong, and able to defend you, as appears by your confidence in them. Or, 2. The strongest persons among you, who think to secure themselves against the threatened danger by their wealth, or power, or wisdom; and much more they that are weak and helpless. Shall be as tow; shall be as suddenly and easily consumed by my judgments as tow is by fire. The maker of it; the maker of the idol, who can neither save himself nor his workmanship. Or, his work; either all that he doth or can do, or that which he hath done, his wicked course of life, shall bring him to ruin.

CHAP. II.

A prophecy of Christ's kingdom, and the calling of the Gentiles, 1—5; and rejection of the Jews for their idolatry and pride, 6—9. The great majesty and power of God; and his terrors on the wicked; with an exhortation to fear God, and not to trust in man, 10—22.

THE word that Isaiah the son of Amoz saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem.

The word; or, the matter or thing, as this Hebrew word commonly signifies; the prophecy or vision.

a Mic. 4. 1, &c. b Gen. 49. 1. Jer. 23. 20. c Ps. 68. 15, 16. ‖ Or, prepared. d Ps. 72. 8. ch. 27. 13.

2 And [a] it shall come to pass [b] in the last days, [c] that the mountain of the LORD's house shall ‖ be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; [d] and all nations shall flow unto it.

And; or, now, as this particle is rendered, 1 Sam. ix. 1; Ezra i. 1, &c. In the last days; in the times of the Messias or the gospel, as the generality both of Jewish and Christian writers understand it, and as may further appear both from the use of this phrase in this sense, Jer. xlviii. 47; xlix. 39; Ezek. xxxviii. 8, 16; Dan. x. 14; Hos. iii. 5; Acts ii. 17; Heb. i. 2; 1 John ii. 18, and from the conversion of the Gentiles here promised, which was not to be till that time; and from the nature of the thing, for this really was the last time and state of the church in the world; the Jewish pedagogy was to be abolished, but Christ's institutions were to continue to the end of the world. The mountain of the Lord's house; the temple of the Lord which is upon Mount Moriah; which yet is not to be understood literally of that material temple, but mystically of the church of God, as appears from the next following words, which will not admit of a literal interpretation; and from the flowing of all nations to it, which was not to that temple, nor indeed was fulfilled till that temple was destroyed; and from the frequent use of this metaphor, the temple, or the house of the Lord, concerning the Christian church, both in the Old and the New Testament. Shall be exalted above the hills; shall be placed and settled in a most conspicuous and glorious manner, being advanced above all other churches and kingdoms in the world. All nations, those Gentiles, whom you now despise, and judge to be abhorred and quite forsaken by God, shall flow unto it, shall come in great abundance, and with great eagerness, like a river, as the word signifies.

e Jer. 31. 6. & 50. 5. Zech. 8. 21, 23.

3 And many people shall go and say, [e] Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: [f] for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

[f] Luke 24. 47.

Shall go; shall not only have some weak desires of going, but shall be ready to take pains, and shall actually go. And say; such shall be their zeal, that they shall not only go themselves, but shall persuade and press others to go with them. We will walk in his paths; they show the truth of their conversion by their hearty desire to be instructed in the way or method of worshipping and serving God acceptably, and by their firm purpose of practising the instructions given to them. For: this last clause contains the reason why the people should be so forward to go, and to invite others to go with them; and they may be the words either of the people, continuing their speech; or of the prophet, now returning to speak in his own name. O ye Israelites, to go with them, or before them. Whereby he secretly intimates their backwardness, and that when the Gentiles did come into the church, they would apostatize from it. Let us walk in the light of the Lord; take heed that you do not reject that light which is so clear that even the blind Gentiles will discern it.

6 ¶ Therefore thou hast forsaken thy people the house of Jacob, because they be replenished ‖ [k] from the east, and [l] are soothsayers like the Philistines, [m] and they ‖ please themselves in the children of strangers.

11 The [q] lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the LORD alone shall be exalted [r] in that day.

Shall be bowed down judicially, as they bowed down voluntarily before their idols. So the punishment is very suitable to the sin. Shall be exalted in that day; his justice and power shall be magnified, and the vanity and impotency of all other gods shall be detected.

12 For the day of the LORD of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up; and he shall be brought low:

The day of the Lord; the time of God's taking vengeance upon sinners, which is called God's day, Isa. xiii. 6, 9; Ezek. xiii. 5; xxx. 3, and oft elsewhere.

13 And upon all [s] the cedars of Lebanon, that are high and lifted up, and upon all the oaks of Bashan, Either, 1. Metaphorically, upon the highest and proudest sinners; or, 2. Literally, as may seem probable from the following verses, where there is distinct mention made of mountains and hills, ver. 14, of towers and walls, ver. 15, of ships and pictures, ver. 16. Whereby he intimates that the judgment should be so universal and terrible, that it should not only reach to men, but to things also, whether natural or artificial, in all which there should be manifest tokens of God's displeasure against the land. The cedars and oaks standing in the mountains shall be either thrown down by furious winds or earthquakes, or torn in pieces by thunder and lightning, and the stately houses built with cedars and oaks shall be destroyed.

14 And [t] upon all the high mountains, and upon all the hills that are lifted up,

To which men used to betake themselves in times of war and danger. It is usual with the prophets to describe God's judgments upon men by the shaking and smoking of the mountains, the trembling of the earth, and the like.

15 And upon every high tower, and upon every fenced wall,

To which you resorted and trusted for your defence.

u 1 Kings 10. 22. † Heb. pictures of desire.

17 [x] And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low: and the LORD alone shall be exalted [y] in that day.

This he repeats again, partly to assure us of the certainty of it, and partly to fix it deeper in men's minds, because they are very backward to believe and consider things of this nature.

‖ Or, the idols shall utterly pass away.

18 And ‖ the idols he shall utterly abolish.

God will discover the impotency of idols to succour their worshippers, and thereby destroy their worship in the world.

They, the idolatrous Israelites, shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth: their usual places of retreat in cases of danger; of which see Josh. x. 16; Judg. vi. 2; 1 Sam. xiii. 6. To shake terribly the earth; either properly, or rather figuratively, to send dreadful judgments upon the inhabitants of the land.

c ch. 30. 22. & 31. 27. † Heb. the idols of his silver, &c. ‖ Or, which they made for him.

20 [c] In that day a man shall cast † his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, ‖ which they made each one for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats;

Into the meanest and darkest places, in which moles and bats have their abode; whereas before they set them up in high and honourable places, where they might be seen and worshipped. This great and sudden change proceeded either from true repentance, which filled them with shame, and grief, and indignation against themselves, and all the instruments of their wickedness; or from a conviction of the vanity of their idols, which afforded them no help in the time of their need; or from a just fear lest God's judgment should have fallen more heavily upon them, if it had found them in the practice of idolatry; and that by this profession of repentance they might, if it were possible, either prevent or mitigate their calamity.

Behold; look upon it as a thing as certain as if it were already done. The stay and the staff; all the supports of their state and church. The whole stay of bread, called elsewhere the staff of bread; whereby is understood either, 1. The nourishing power of bread, which wholly depend upon God's blessing; or rather, 2. Bread itself, as this phrase is understood, Lev. xxvi. 26; Psal. cv. 16; Ezek. iv. 16, and directly explained, Ezek. v. 16, bread which is the staff of life.

2 [c] The mighty man, and the man of war, the judge, and the prophet, and the prudent, and the ancient,

The mighty man; strong and valiant men. The judge; the civil magistrates. The prophet; either strictly so called, the want of whom is matter of grief; see Psal. lxxiv. 9; or largely, so as to include all skilful and faithful teachers. The prudent; whose wisdom and conduct was necessary to preserve them from ruin. The ancient; whose wisdom was increased by long experience.

The captain of fifty; there shall not be a man left able to command and manage fifty soldiers, and much less such as could command hundreds or thousands, which yet were necessary. The honourable man; men of high birth, and place, and power, and reputation. The counsellor; wise and learned statesmen. The cunning artificer, who could make either ornaments for times of peace, or instruments for war; which therefore conquerors took away from those nations whom they subdued, 1 Sam. xiii. 19, 20; 2 Kings xxiv. 14. The eloquent orator, Heb. the skilful of charm; whereby he understands either, 1. Charmers, whom he threatens to take away, not as if such persons were blessings to a people, or the removing of such were a curse, but only because they made great use of them, and trusted to them. And so he signifies that God would remove all the grounds of their confidence, both right and wrong, and make their case desperate. As, in like manner, and for the same reason, God threatens the Israelites that they should be, as without a sacrifice, so without teraphim, Hos. iii. 4. Or, 2. As most understand it, such as could powerfully persuade, and, as it were, charm that ungovernable beast, the multitude of common people, by their eloquence, to do those things which were necessary for their peace and safety; for this word may be taken in a good sense, as divination is, Prov. xvi. 10.

d Eccles. 10. 16.

4 And I will give [d]children to be their princes, and babes shall rule over them.

Children; either, 1. In age, whose minority corrupt ministers of state commonly abuse to great mischiefs; or, 2. In understanding, experience, and manners; foolish, froward, unteachable, &c.

5 And the people shall be oppressed, every one by another, and every one by his neighbour: the child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient, and the base against the honourable.

The people shall be oppressed, by the command or connivance of such childish rulers. The child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient, and the base against the honourable; foolish and unworthy men shall by wicked arts gain the favour and abuse the power of the prince, and thereby behave themselves insolently towards their betters.

6 When a man shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father, saying, Thou hast clothing, be thou our ruler, and let this ruin be under thy hand:

A man shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father; whereas envy ordinarily reigns in near relations, when one brother is advanced far above all the rest. Thou hast clothing: we are utterly undone, and have neither food nor raiment; but thou hast something yet left to support the dignity which we offer to thee, and to enable thee to execute thine office. Be thou our ruler: he showeth that misgovernment should cause the dissolution of the government, and that the former governors should be removed either by foreign force, or by domestic insurrection. Let this ruin be under thine hand, to wit, to heal it, as it is explained in the next verse. Undertake the charge of this tottering state.

7 In that day shall he †swear, saying, I will not be an †healer; for in my house is neither bread nor clothing: make me not a ruler of the people.

He shall swear, Heb. he shall lift up; understand either, 1. His voice; he shall cry aloud, to show his earnestness in refusing the offer; or, 2. His hand, which was the usual gesture in swearing, Gen. xiv. 22; Deut. xxxii. 40, &c., to show his resolvedness. An healer; a repairer of the ruins of the state. In my house is neither bread nor clothing; I have not sufficient provisions, either of food or raiment, for my own family; much less, as you falsely suppose, for the discharge of so high a trust.

9 ¶ The shew of their countenance doth witness against them; and they declare their sin as [f]Sodom, they hide it not. Woe unto their soul! for they have rewarded evil unto themselves.

The show of their countenance doth witness against them; their pride, and wantonness, and impiety manifestly shows itself in their very looks and carriages, and will be a swift witness against them both before God and men. They declare their sin; they act it publicly, casting off all fear of God, and reverence to men, and they glory in it. They hide it not, as men do who have any remainders of modesty or ingenuity. They have rewarded, i. e. procured a fit recompence for their wickedness, even utter ruin. Or, they have done; for this word is oft so used, without any signification of a recompence, as Psal. vii. 4. They cannot blame me, but themselves; their destruction is wholly from themselves. Compare Hos. xiii. 9.

g Eccles. 8. 12. h Ps. 128. 2.

10 Say ye to the righteous, [g]that it shall be well with him: [h]for they shall eat the fruit of their doings.

Say ye: God hath said it, and doth now by me say it; and you, O ye priests and Levites, say it in your sermons to the people. They shall eat the fruit of their doings; let not them fear, for God will be their safeguard and portion in the common calamity.

i Ps. 11. 6. Eccles. 8. 13 † Het done to him.

11 Woe unto the wicked! [i]it shall be ill with him: for the reward of his hands shall be †given him.

Woe unto the wicked! these heavy judgments are designed against them, and shall certainly find them out, though here they be mixed with the righteous.

k ver. 4. l ch. 9. 16. ‖ Or, they which call thee blessed. † Heb. swallow up.

12 ¶ As for my people, [k]children are their oppressors, and women rule over them. O my people, [l]‖they which lead thee cause thee to err, and †destroy the way of thy paths.

Women; either, 1. Properly so called, by their favour and power with the rulers; or, 2. Weak and effeminate rulers, such being called women both in sacred and profane writings. They which lead thee; thy rulers, civil and ecclesiastical, whose duty it is to show thee the right way. Or, as others, they that bless thee, i. e. thy false prophets, which flatter thee, and speak peace to thee. Destroy the way of thy paths; keep thee from the knowledge or practice of that way which leads to thy salvation, and mislead thee into evil courses, by their wicked counsels or examples.

m Mic. 6. 2.

13 The LORD standeth up [m]to plead, and standeth to judge the people.

The Lord standeth up; he will shortly and certainly stand up as a judge, to inquire into the cause, and to give sentence. To judge the people, i. e. to defend and deliver them, or to judge for them, as this phrase is oft used.

n ch. 5. 7. Matt. 21. 33. ‖ Or, burnt.

14 The LORD will enter into judgment with the ancients of his people, and the princes thereof: for ye have ‖eaten up [n]the vineyard; the spoil of the poor is in your houses.

The ancients; the princes or rulers, as it is explained in the next clause, who are oft called elders, because such were commonly and fitly chosen out of those who were ripe in years. Eaten up; destroyed instead of preserving and dressing it, as you should have done. The vineyard; the church and commonwealth of Israel, which is oft called God's vineyard, as Psal. lxxx. 8, 14, 15; Isa. v. 1; Jer. ii. 21, &c., and here the vineyard, by way of eminency; or, the vineyard which was committed to your care to keep. The spoil of the poor; the goods which you have violently taken away from the poor.

o ch. 58. 4. Mic. 3. 2, 3.

15 What mean ye that ye [o]beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor? saith the Lord GOD of hosts.

What mean ye? what warrant have ye for it? how durst you presume to do it? Grind, or batter, as the word is used, Exod. xxxii. 20; smite them cruelly: see chap. lviii. 4.

16 ¶ Moreover the LORD saith, Because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with † Heb. deceiving with their eyes. ‖ Or, tripping nicely.

The daughters of Zion; the women; as hitherto he reproved the men. Walk with stretched forth necks; affecting stateliness, Psal. lxxv. 5, and to seem tall. Wanton eyes; or, as others, twinkling with their eyes in a lascivious manner. Walking and mincing as they go, after the manner of loose and wanton persons. Making a tinkling with their feet, by some ornaments which they wore upon their shoes.

Will smite with a scab the crown of the head; will by sending scabs, or by other ways, take off the hair of their head, which is a woman's glory, 1 Cor. xi. 15, and which doubtless ministered to their pride and wantonness. Others render it, he will make bald, &c. Discover their secret parts, by giving her into the power of those enemies that shall either strip her of all her raiments, not leaving her sufficient to cover her nakedness; or otherwise abuse her, by such immodest and contemptuous actions. Compare Isa. xlvii. 3; Ezek. xvi. 37; xxiii. 10, 26.

18 In that day the LORD will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments about their feet, and their ‖ cauls, and their r round tires like the moon.

‖ Or, net works. r Judg. 8. 21.

Cauls: as for this and the other Hebrew words here following, I judge it unnecessary and improper to trouble the English reader with the differing interpretations given of them by learned men, which the curious may find in my Latin Synopsis. It is agreed by all that they were ornaments used by that people in those times, and made fuel to their lusts. And it is of no concernment to the direction, either of our faith or manners, exactly to understand the nature and differences of them. And therefore I shall take them as they are in our translation. Round tires like the moon; there were in ancient time, and at this day there are, some jewels or other ornaments worn which carry a manifest resemblance to the moon or half moon. Compare Judg. viii. 21, 26.

19 The ‖ chains, and the bracelets, and the ‖ mufflers,

‖ Or, sweet balls. ‖ Or, spangled ornaments.

20 The bonnets, and the ornaments of the legs, and the headbands, and the † tablets, and the earrings, † Heb. houses of the soul.

The bonnets: these were ornaments to cover the head, common both to men, as Exod. xxxix. 28, and to women, as here. The tablets, Heb. the houses of the soul, or of life, or of breath; whereby he seems to mean boxes of excellent perfumes, which are of great efficacy to revive our drooping spirits, and to that end are oft applied to such as are ready to faint away.

21 The rings, and nose jewels,

Which were fastened to the head, and hung down upon the forehead to the beginning of the nose; of which see Gen. xxiv. 22, 47; Judg. viii. 24, &c.

22 The changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crisping pins,

Of silver or gold, either used to curl the hair, or rather fastened and worn in the hair; which custom is not altogether disused at this day.

23 The glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the vails.

The glasses; the looking-glasses, as we call them, though in truth they were not made of glass, but of bright and burnished brass.

24 And it shall come to pass, that instead of sweet smell there shall be stink; and instead of a girdle a rent; and instead of well set hair s baldness; and instead of a stomacher a girding of sackcloth; and burning instead of beauty.

s ch. 22. 12. Mic. 1. 16.

Instead of sweet smell, those perfumes mentioned ver 20, there shall be stink, from their scabs, mentioned ver. 17, or from other ill usages of their enemies. Instead of a girdle, which were fine and costly, and useful to gird their garments about them, a rent; either the rending of their garments for grief; or torn and tattered garments, not sufficient to cover their bodies. Burning, by the heat of the sun, to which they are now commonly exposed, from which they used formerly to guard themselves with great care.

26 t And her gates shall lament and mourn; and she being ‖ † desolate u shall sit upon the ground.

‖ Or, emptied. † Heb. cleansed. u Lam. 2. 10.

Her gates; the gates of Zion or Jerusalem, which, by a figure very usual in sacred Scripture and all authors, are said to lament, to imply the great desolation of the place, that there should be no people to go out and come in by the gates, or to meet together in the gates, as they used to do. Shall sit upon the ground, like a mournful woman bewailing the loss of her husband and children.

CHAP. IV.

a ch. 2. 11, 17. b 2 Thess. 3. 12. † Heb. let thy name be called upon us. ‖ Or, take away. c Luke 1. 25.

In that day, of which he hath hitherto been speaking, chap. ii., iii., and still continueth to speak. In that calamitous time. Seven; many. A certain number for an uncertain. Shall take hold; shall sue to him, and even lay hands upon him, contrary to their custom, and their natural modesty. Of one man; because few men shall survive that dreadful stroke. They who before were not contented with their own husbands, are now glad of a seventh part of a husband. We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel; we will ease thee of that charge, which otherwise would fall upon thee by God's law, Exod. xxi. 10. Let us be called by thy name; own us for thy wives. Reproach: virginity was esteemed a reproach, especially among that people, because it was a token of contempt from men, and of the curse of God; children, the usual fruit of marriage, being both an honour to their parents before men, and a great blessing of God, especially to that people, from some of whose loins the Messiah was to spring.

2 In that day shall d the branch of the LORD be † beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely † for them that are escaped of Israel.

d Jer. 23. 5. Zech. 3. 8. & 6. 12. † Heb. beauty and glory. † Heb. for the escaping of Israel.

In that day; about and after that time; when the Lord shall have washed away (as this time is particularly expressed, ver. 4) the filth of—Zion by those dreadful judgments now described. The branch of the Lord; either, 1. The church and people of Israel, oft called God's vine or vineyard, as we saw before, and the branch of God's planting, Isa. lx. 21. Or, 2. The Messiah, who is commonly defined in Scripture by this title, the Branch, Isa. xi. 1; Jer. xxiii. 5; xxxiii. 15; Zech. iii. 8, whose name is expressly said to be the Branch, Zech. vi. 12, of whom not only Christians, but even the Hebrew doctors, understand it. For after the foregoing miseries were brought upon the Jews, by the remainders of the Grecian empire, of which Daniel prophesies of exactly and particularly, and afterwards by the Roman empire, the Messiah was born; and after that utter destruction brought upon the Jewish city, and temple, and nation by Titus, the kingdom of the Messiah became beautiful and glorious, as it here follows. The fruit of the earth shall be excellent; the land which for the sins of the people was made barren, upon their repentance and return to Christ, shall recover its former fertility. Under this one mercy he seems to understand all temporal blessings, which, together with spiritual and eternal, God shall confer upon them; and withal to intimate the fruitfulness of the people (the earth or land being oft put for its inhabitants) in knowledge, and grace, and all good works. That are escaped; that shall survive all the foremention calamities.

3 And it shall come to pass, that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth e ch. 60. 21. in Jerusalem, e shall be called holy, even f Phil. 4. 3. Rev. 3. 5. ‖ Or, to life. every one that is f written ‖ among the living in Jerusalem:

Shall be called holy, i. e. shall be really holy, as is said, chap. lx. 21. To be called is oft put for to be, as Gen. xxi. 12; Isa. i. 26; xliv. 5. Every one that is written among the living: so this is a restriction of the foregoing indefinite proposition. Not all that are left, but a great number of them, shall be holy, even all that are written, &c., i. e. all the elect, who are frequently described by this character, that they are written in God's or the Lamb's book, or in the book of life, or of the living, Psal. lxix. 28; Dan. xii. 1; Phil. iv. 3; Rev. iii. 5; xiii. 8; xvii. 8, &c. But this last clause of the verse is by some learned interpreters rendered thus, all that are in Jerusalem (i. e. a very great number of them, as such general expressions are frequently used, or the generality of them) shall be written unto life, i. e. shall be such as are elected unto salvation through sanctification; which may deserve consideration. So he notes the singular privilege of this people at this time above the former ages, in which many were called, but few were chosen. In Jerusalem; of the people living in or belonging to Jerusalem.

g Mal. 3. 2, 3. 4 When g the LORD shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning.

When the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion: this shall be accomplished when God hath thoroughly cleansed the Jewish nation from their sins. The blood; the blood-guiltness, and especially that of killing the Lord of life, their own Messiah. By the Spirit of judgment, and by the Spirit of burning: this is opposed to the former legal way of purification, which was by water. By the Spirit he seems to understand the Holy Spirit of God, to which this washing and purging work is commonly ascribed, as 1 Cor. vi. 11, and elsewhere; which Spirit did accompany the preaching of the gospel, and did this work in part in some of the Jews, and will do it more fully in the body of the nation. And this Spirit may well be called a Spirit of judgment, because it executes judgment in the church, and in the consciences of men, separating the precious from the vile, convincing men of sin, and righteousness, and judgment, John xvi. 8—11, manifesting the secrets of men's hearts in the preaching of the word, 1 Cor. xiv. 25; accusing, and terrifying, and punishing some, witnessing for and with others, and filling them with peace and joy in believing; hardening some, and softening and subduing others to God, as this Spirit is particularly promised to do to the Jews, Zech. xii. 10. And the same Spirit may be fitly called the Spirit of burning, as he is compared to fire, Matt. iii. 11, because he doth burn up and consume the dross which is in the church, and in the minds and hearts of men, and inflames the souls of believers with love to God, and zeal for his glory.

5 And the LORD will create upon every dwelling place of mount Zion, and upon

i Zech. 2. 5. ‖ Or, above. † Heb. a covering. ch. 8. 14. day, and i the shining of a flaming fire by night: for ‖ upon all the glory shall be † a defence.

Will create; will in a marvellous manner produce, as it were by a new work of creation. A cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; a pillar of cloud and fire, like that wherewith the Lord directed, and protected, and honoured the Israelites, when they came out of Egypt; whereby he implies that God would be their protector and their glory. Upon all the glory; upon all that church and people, which God will make so glorious, not only in his own eyes, but even in the eyes of the world; upon all holy assemblies of sincere Christians.

6 And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the daytime from the heat, and k for a place of refuge, and for a covert k ch. 25. 4. from storm and from rain.

There shall be a tabernacle; or, he, i. e. the Lord, shall be a tabernacle, or a tent, to defend them from the violent heat of the sun, and other injuries of the weather, which was the use and benefit of tents.

CHAP. V.

Israel God's vineyard; his mercies, and their unfruitfulness; should be laid waste, 1—7. Judgments upon covetousness, 8—10; upon drunkards, and the lascivious, 11, 12. The great misery of the Jews, 13—17. Judgments on impiety, scoffers at God's threatenings, those who corrupt the notions of good and ill, strong drinkers, and unjust judges, 18—23. God's anger and the Chaldeans' army against them, 24—30.

NOW will I sing to my wellbeloved a song of my beloved touching a his vinea Ps. 80. 8. Cant. 8. 12. ch. 27. 2. Jer. 2. 21. Matt. 21. 33. Mark 12. 1. Luke 20. 9. yard. My wellbeloved hath a vineyard in † a very fruitful hill: † Heb. the horn of the son of oil.

Now will I sing; I will record it, to be a witness for God, and against you, as Moses did his song, Deut. xxxi. 19; xxxii. 1. To my Well-beloved; to the Lord of the vineyard, as appears by the last clause of the verse; to God or Christ, whom I love and serve, and for whose glory, eclipsed by you, I am greatly concerned. A song of my Beloved; not devised by me, not the effect of my envy or passion; but inspired by God, which therefore it behoveth you to lay to heart. His vineyard; his church, oft and very fitly called a vineyard, because of God's singular respect to it, and care of it, and his delight in it, and expectation of good fruit from it, &c. In a very fruitful hill; hills being places most commodious for vines: see Psal. lxxx. 10. Heb. in a horn (which may signify either, 1. The figure or shape of the land of Canaan, which resembles a horn; or, 2. The height and hilliness of that land, as horns are the highest parts of beasts; or, 3. The goodliness and excellency of it, as a horn, when it is ascribed to a man, signifies his glory and dignity, as Job xvi. 15; Psal. lxxxix. 17, 24, &c.) the son of oil, which, by a vulgar Hebraism, notes an oily or a fat soil.

2 And he ‖ fenced it, and gathered out
‖ Or, made a wall about it. the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also † made a winepress † Heb. hewed. therein: b and he looked that it should b Deut. 32. 6. ch. 1. 2, 3. bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes.

Fenced it, that neither men nor beasts might spoil it. Gathered out the stones thereof; which otherwise would have marred the land; of which see 2 Kings iii. 19. The sense is, He removed all hinderances, and gave them all the means of fruitfulness. Built a tower, for the residence of the keepers, that they might be obliged and encouraged to watch over it with more diligence.

3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, c judge, I pray you, c Rom. 3. 4. betwixt me and my vineyard.

I dare make you judges in your own cause, it is so plain and reasonable.

4 What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?

What work is there belonging to the office of a master or keeper of the vineyard which I have neglected? How unworthy and inexcusable a crime is it, that you have not only been unfruitful in good works, but also filled with all the fruits of wickedness!

5 And now go to; I will tell you what d Ps. 80. 12. I will do to my vineyard: [d]I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall † Heb. for a treading. thereof, and it shall be †trodden down:

I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard; he graciously warns them beforehand, that they may have space and invitation to repent, and so to prevent the threatened miseries. I will take away the hedge thereof, &c.; I will withdraw my presence and protection from them, and give them up into the hands of their enemies.

6 And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

It shall not be pruned nor digged: vine-dressers use to dig up and open the earth about the roots of the vines, for divers good purposes. The meaning is, I will remove my ministers, who used great care and diligence to make you fruitful. There shall come up briers and thorns; I will give you up to your own wicked lusts. I will also command the clouds, that they rain no rain upon it; I will deprive you of all my blessings, which are oft compared to rain, &c.

† Heb. plant of his pleasures. of Judah †his pleasant plant: and he looked for judgment, but behold †op-† Heb. a scab. pression; for righteousness, but behold a cry.

The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant; in whom God formerly delighted to dwell and converse. Compare Prov. viii. 31; Jer. xxxi. 20. Behold the cry from the oppressed, crying to men for help, and to God for vengeance.

e Mic. 2. 2. 8 ¶ Woe unto them that join [e]house to house, that lay field to field, till there † Heb. ye. be no place, that †they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth!

That join house to house, that lay field to field; that add new purchases of houses and lands to their former possessions; not that this was in itself unlawful, but because they did this from an inordinate and insatiable desire of riches, and with the injury of their brethren, as is manifest from the foregoing and following words. That they may be placed alone; that they alone may be the lords and owners, and all others only their tenants and servants.

f ch. 22. 14. ‖ Or, This is in mine ears, saith the LORD, &c. † Heb. If not, &c. 9 [f]‖In mine ears said the LORD of hosts, †Of a truth many houses shall be desolate, even great and fair, without inhabitant.

In mine ears said the Lord; I heard God speak what I am now about to utter. Heb. In the ears of the Lord; which may relate either, 1. To the foregoing words; The cry of your sins, and of the oppressed, is come into God's ears; he hears and sees it, and will certainly punish it. Or, 2. To the following clause, which being of great importance, he ushers in with an oath; I speak it in God's ears as well as in yours; I call God to witness the truth of what I say. Many houses shall be desolate; the houses which you have so greedily coveted shall cast you out, and become desolate.

10 Yea, ten acres of vineyard shall g See Exek. 45. 11. yield one [g]bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah.

Ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, to wit, of wine. The bath contained about eight gallons. Thus an acre did not yield one gallon. The seed of an homer shall yield an ephah; which was of the same quantity with the bath, only the bath was the measure of liquid things, the ephah of dry things; and an ephah was the tenth part of an homer, Ezek. xlv. 11. So instead of that great increase which that fruitful land commonly yielded, they should lose nine parts of their seed. Thus a fruitful land was made barren for their wickedness, according to God's threatening, Psal. cvii. 34; and they had as little comfort in their lands as in their houses; which were the two kinds of their purchases, ver. 8.

11 ¶ [h]Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine ‖inflame them!

h Prov. 23. 29, 30. Eccles. 10. 16. ver. 22. ‖ Or, pursue them.

That rise up early in the morning; which was unusual, and scandalous in that case, Eccles. x. 16; Acts ii. 15. They made drinking their daily trade and business. That continue until night; thereby wasting both precious time, and God's good creatures, and the health of their bodies, as well as of their souls. He useth this word partly to show their folly and misery, because the wine was so far from quenching and satisfying their appetites, that it did indeed inflame and increase them; and partly to prevent the vain excuse of them, who thought themselves innocent because they did not drink to drunkenness, although they cast themselves into an intemperate heat through their excess.

12 And [i]the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts: but [k]they regard not the work of the LORD, neither consider the operation of his hands.

k Job 34. 27. Ps. 28. 5.

They give up themselves wholly to luxury, and that in a very unseasonable time, as it follows. But they regard not the work of the Lord; what God hath lately done, and is yet doing, and about to do among them; his grievous judgments, partly inflicted, and partly threatened, which required another course of life, even to give themselves to fasting, and prayer, and reformation, that so they might remove the incumbent, and prevent the approaching calamities.

13 ¶ [l]Therefore my people are gone into captivity, [m]because they have no knowledge: and †their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst.
l Hos. 4. 6. m ch. 1. 3. Luke 19. 44. † Heb. their glory are men of famine.

Are gone into captivity; either, 1. Are actually gone, which was true of the ten tribes in Hezekiah's reign, 2 Kings xviii. 9, under whom this prophecy might be uttered; or, 2. Shall certainly and shortly go, as the two tribes afterward did. They have no knowledge; no serious consideration of God's works, and of their own duty and danger. Their honourable men, who thought themselves quite out of reach of famine.

14 Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure: and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it.

Hell; or, the grave, as this word most commonly signifies. Opened her mouth without measure, to receive those vast numbers which shall die by this famine, or otherwise, as is here implied. Their glory; their honourable men, as they were called, ver. 13, being distinguished both here and there from the multitude. Their pomp; all their glory, shall die with them. He that rejoiceth; that spendeth all his days in mirth and jollity, and casteth away all cares and fears.

15 And [n]the mean man shall be brought down, and the mighty man shall be humbled, and the eyes of the lofty shall be humbled:
n ch. 2. 9, 11, 17.

All of them, both high and low, shall be brought to destruction.

16 But the LORD of hosts shall be exalted in judgment, and ‖†God that is holy shall be sanctified in righteousness.
‖ Or, the holy God. † Heb. the God the holy.

Shall be exalted in judgment, by the execution of this just judgment upon his incorrigible enemies. Shall be sanctified, shall appear to be a holy God, in righteousness; by his righteous judgments.

17 Then shall the lambs feed after their manner, and the waste places of o ch. 10. 16. °the fat ones shall strangers eat.

Then; when God shall have finished that work of judgment upon the ungodly, he will extend mercy to a remainder. This is very usual in this prophet, in the midst of his threatenings, to insert something for the support of believers. The lambs; the poor and harmless people, who shall be left in the land when the rich are carried into captivity, as it fell out, 2 Kings xxv. 12. Feed after their manner; or, by their fold, as this word is manifestly used, Micah ii. 12, the only place of Scripture, except this, in which this word is found. The waste places; the lands left by their owners, who were either slain or carried into captivity. Of the fat ones; of the rich and great men, so called Psal. xxii. 29; lxxviii. 31; Isa. x. 16. Strangers; the poor Israelites, who were left to be vine-dressers and husbandmen, 2 Kings xxv. 12, who are called strangers, because they were so in reference to that land, not being the proper owners of it, nor related to them; as the Israelites of other tribes are called strangers, in opposition to the Levites, as Numb. i. 51, and elsewhere; yea, and the Levites are so called, in opposition to the seed of Aaron, Numb. xvi. 40.

18 Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart rope:

That draw iniquity; that are not only drawn to sin by the allurements of the world, or by the persuasions of wicked men, being surprised and overtaken by sin, as sometimes good men are, Gal. vi. 1, but are active and industrious in drawing sin to themselves, or themselves to sin; that greedily and steadily pursue sin, and the occasions of it, and are not at rest till they have overtaken it; that sin wilfully, and resolvedly, and industriously. With cords of vanity; or, with cords of lying, as the last word frequently signifies, i. e. with vain and deceitful arguments and pretences, whereby sinners generally draw themselves to sin; among which, one follows in the next verse, to wit, the impunity which they promise to themselves. Or these cords may note the means which they use to accomplish that iniquity which they have devised. With a cart rope; with all their might, as beasts commonly do that draw carts with ropes.

p ch. 66. 5. Jer. 17. 15. Amos 5. 18. 2 Pet. 3. 3, 4. 19 PThat say, Let him make speed, and hasten his work, that we may see it: and let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come, that we may know it!

Let him, to wit, God, in whose name thou and other prophets are always reproving and threatening us. Hasten his work, that we may see it; he only thinks to affright us with bugbears; but he either cannot or will not do us any harm: we do not fear him, let him do his worst; let him begin as soon as he pleaseth. Not that any of the Israelites were so impudent as to use these expressions; but this was the plain language of their actions; they lived as if they were of this opinion; their presumption and security showed their desperate contempt of God, and of all his judgments. The Holy One of Israel; who by his holiness is engaged to punish us. They scornfully repeated the title usually given by the prophets unto God.

† Heb. that say concerning evil, It is good, &c. 20 ¶ Woe unto them †that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!

That call evil good, and good evil; that take away the difference between good and evil; that justify and approve wicked men and things, and condemn piety, or virtue, or righteous persons. Compare Prov. xvii. 15. Thus many call serious godliness, humorous singularity; and justice, morosity; and meekness, stupidity, &c.; as, on the contrary, they call pride, magnanimity; and covetousness, good husbandry. And men are very apt to follow the course of the world in their false judgments of things; which therefore the prophet so severely forbids.

q Prov. 3. 7. Rom. 1. 22. & 12. 16. †Heb. before their face. 21 Woe unto them that are qwise in their own eyes, and prudent †in their own sight!

That being puffed up with an opinion of their own wisdom, despise the counsels and instructions of God by his prophets, and prefer their own vain fancies before the judgment of the all-wise God, as appears by the error before mentioned, ver. 20, that they affirmed that to be evil which God had declared to be good.

22 rWoe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink: r ver. 11.

That are mighty to drink wine; that can drink much without intoxication, in which they gloried, as too many do at this day. To mingle, i. e. to drink; the antecedent being put for the consequent, which is usual; for they mingled it in order to drinking.

23 Which *justify the wicked for reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him! s Prov. 17. 15. & 24. 24.

Justify the wicked for reward; not by mistake or incogitancy, but wilfully for bribes. Take away the righteousness of the righteous from him, to wit, juridically; they pronounce sentence against him, as if he and his cause were unjust.

24 Therefore tas †the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, so utheir root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust: because they have cast away the law of the LORD of hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel. t Ex. 15. 7. † Heb. the tongue of fire. u Job 18. 16. Hos. 9. 16. Amos 2. 9.

Their root shall be as rottenness; they shall be like a tree which not only withers in its branches, but dies and rots at the roots, and therefore is past all hopes of recovery. The sense is, They shall be destroyed both root and branch. Their blossom shall go up as dust; shall vanish (for so the word ascend or go up is oft used, as Exod. xvi. 14; Job v. 26; Jer. xlviii. 15; Ezek. xi. 23, 24) as the dust, which is blown away with every wind; or, shall be resolved into dust, and yield no fruit. They have cast away; which implies disobedience joined with contempt.

25 xTherefore is the anger of the LORD kindled against his people, and he hath stretched forth his hand against them, and hath smitten them: and ythe hills did tremble, and their carcases were ‖ torn in the midst of the streets. zFor all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still. x 2 Kings 22. 13, 17. y Jer. 4. 24. ‖ Or, as dung. z Lev. 26. 14, &c. ch. 9. 12, 17, 21. & 10. 4.

The hills did tremble; a metaphorical and hyperbolical description of a grievous calamity, familiar in the prophets, as Isa. lxiv. 1, 2; Jer. iv. 24, and in other authors. His hand is stretched out still, ready to give you another and a sorer blow. This is not the end, as you vainly imagine, but, if you repent not, the beginning, of your sorrows, and an earnest of further calamities.

26 ¶ aAnd he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will bhiss unto them from cthe end of the earth: and, behold, dthey shall come with speed swiftly: a ch. 11. 12. b ch. 7. 18. c Deut. 28. 49. Psa. 72. 8. Mal. 1. 11. d Joel 2. 7.

He will lift up an ensign, to call them together for his service, as generals used to do for the raising of armies, to the nations from far; either, 1. To the Assyrians, of whom he speaks more particularly chap. x., and that under this same character of a people that come from far, ver. 2 and who did not long after this prophecy invade Judea, and did much mischief in it. Although that part of the prediction, ver. 29, They shall lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it, do not seem to agree to them, nor that invasion; for the Assyrians were forced to retreat with great shame and loss, and the Jews were delivered from them. Or, 2. To the Chaldeans; for even Babylon is called a far country, Isa. xxxix. 3. And he saith nations, because the Chaldean army was made up of several nations. Will hiss unto them; or, will whistle unto or for them; will gather them together by his word, as shepherds gather their sheep. He intimates how easily and speedily God can do this work. From the ends of the earth; which is not to be understood strictly, but popularly, and with a latitude, from very remote places; although part of the Chaldean army did come from places not very far distant from the end of that part of the world, so far as it was then known.

27 None shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber nor e Dan. 5. 6. sleep; neither [e]shall the girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken:

None shall be weary, though their march be long and tedious. As I have called them to this work, so I will strengthen and assist them in it. None shall slumber nor sleep; they shall all be watchful and diligent to take all opportunities and advantages of executing my judgments upon my people. Neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken; which otherwise would hinder, or at least slacken, them in their march. I will take all impediments out of their way.

f Jer. 5. 16. 28 [f]Whose arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent, their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind:

Whose arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent; who are every way furnished and ready for my work, waiting only for my command. Their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, because they shall not be broken or battered by the length or stoniness and ruggedness of the way. Their wheels like a whirlwind; partly for the swiftness of their march, and partly for the force and violence of their chariots in battle.

29 Their roaring shall be like a lion, they shall roar like young lions: yea, they shall roar, and lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it.

They shall roar like young lions; which signifies both their cruelty, and their greediness and eagerness to catch and devour the prey. None; neither the Jews themselves, nor the Egyptians, to whose help they will trust, nor any of their confederates.

g ch. 8. 22. Jer. 4. 23. Lam. 3. 2. Ezek. 32. 7, 8. ‖ Or, distress. ‖ Or, when it is light, it shall be dark in the destructions thereof. 30 And in that day they shall roar against them like the roaring of the sea: and if one [g]look unto the land, behold darkness and ‖ sorrow, ‖ and the light is darkened in the heavens thereof.

Like the roaring of the sea; which is violent and frightful. Darkness and sorrow; darkness, to wit, sorrow: the latter word explains the former, and the particle and is put expositively, as it is frequently. The light is darkened in the heavens thereof; when they look up to the heavens, as men in distress usually do, they see no light there; their comforts are wholly eclipsed, and their hopes are like the giving up of the ghost.

CHAP. VI.

The glory of the Lord, 1—4. Isaiah is terrified, 5; is confirmed for his message, 6—8. The people's obstinacy unto desolation, 9—12. A remnant shall be saved, 13.

cir. 758. IN the year that [a]king Uzziah died I a 2 Kings 15. 7. [b]saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, b 1 Kin. 22. 19. John 12. 41. Rev. 4. 2. high and lifted up, and ‖ his train filled ‖ Or, the skirts thereof. the temple.

I saw in a vision or ecstasy. The Lord; either, 1. God the Son, who frequently appeared to the patriarchs and prophets, and that sometimes in the form of a man. Or rather, 2. The Divine Majesty as he subsisteth in three persons, as may be gathered both from the plural number us, used of this Lord, ver. 8, and comparing other scriptures; for God the Father is described as sitting upon a throne, Dan. vii. 9, 13, and elsewhere; and the glory of God here manifested is said to be Christ's glory, John xii. 41, and the words of the Lord here following are said to be spoken by the Holy Ghost, Acts xxviii. 25. Sitting upon a throne, in the posture of a judge, to hear causes, and give sentence. Lifted up towards the roof of the temple. His train; or, as the word properly signifies, and is here rendered by divers, the skirts or borders of him, or of it, to wit, his royal and judicial robe; for he is represented as a judge. Filled the temple; his glorious robes reached down to the bottom of the temple, and were spread abroad in the temple, which was an evidence of a more than ordinary majesty. The temple may be here taken either, 1. Largely, and so it includes the courts as well as the house, as that word is oft used; or, 2. Strictly, for the house itself, or for that part of the temple in which this vision was exhibited, which may seem to have been the porch, for that was much higher than the other parts.

2 Above it stood the seraphims: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and [c]with twain he covered his c Exek. 1. 11. feet, and with twain he did fly.

Above it stood, as ministers attending upon their Lord, and waiting to receive and execute his commands, the seraphims; certain holy and blessed angels, thus called from fire and burning, which this word properly signifies; to represent either, 1. Their nature, which is bright and glorious, subtile, and pure, and spiritual, like fire; or, 2. Their property, of fervent zeal for God's service and glory; or, 3. Their office and present employment, which was to execute God's vengeance upon the Jews, and to burn them up like dross. Covered his face, out of profound reverence, as being so sensible of the infinite distance between God and him, that he durst not presume to look directly upon him, and judged himself neither able nor worthy to behold the brightness of his glory. Covered his feet; either, 1. His secret parts, which sometimes come under that name, as Deut. xxviii. 57; Isa. vii. 20; xxxvi. 12; of which see more in my Latin Synopsis upon Exod. iv. 25. And so this is done for our instruction, to teach us modesty and chastity. Or, 2. Their feet properly so called, as that word is generally used; from which use we should not depart without necessity, which, with submission, seems not to be in this place. And so this may signify a sense of their own natural, though not moral infirmity, and a desire that God would not too severely examine all their ways and actions, which the feet commonly signify, because though they did not swerve from God's commands, yet they were not worthy of the acceptation, nor suitable to the dignity of so glorious a Majesty. Did fly; which signifies their great forwardness and expedition in executing God's commands. Compare Dan. ix. 21.

3 And †one cried unto another, and † Heb. this cried to this. said, [d]Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of d Rev. 4. 8. hosts: †[e]the whole earth is full of his † Heb. his glory is the fulness of the whole earth. e Ps. 72. 19. glory.

One cried unto another; singing in consort the praises of their Lord. Holy, holy, holy: this is repeated thrice, either, 1. To intimate the Trinity of persons united in the Divine essence; or, 2. That he was most eminently and unquestionably holy in his present work of judgment, and in all his ways; such repetitions being very frequent in Scripture, for the greater assurance of the thing, as Jer. vii. 4; Ezek. xxi. 9. The whole earth; not only Canaan, to which the Jews did vainly and arrogantly confine the presence of God, but all the world; which seems to have a respect to the conversion of the Gentiles, which did accompany the plenary and last execution of this judgment here threatened against the Jewish nation, ver. 10, as is evident by comparing this with Matt. xiii. 14, 15; Acts xxviii. 26, 27, and other places of the New Testament. Full of his glory; of the effects and demonstrations of his glorious holiness, as well as of his power, and wisdom, and goodness.

4 And the posts of the †door moved † Heb. thresholds. at the voice of him that cried, and [f]the f Ex. 40. 34. 1 Kin. 8. 10. house was filled with smoke.

The posts of the door, together with the door itself, as if the door was to be removed, and the temple thereby to be exposed to the view and rapine of profane persons. Such violent motions were commonly tokens of God's anger. Him that cried, to wit, the angel, which cried; ver. 3. Filled with smoke; which elsewhere is a token of God's presence and acceptance, as Exod. xl. 34; 1 Kings viii. 10, but here of his anger, as Psal. xviii. 8, and elsewhere.

5 ¶ [g]Then said I, Woe is me! for I am †undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the LORD of hosts.

I am a man of unclean lips; I am a great sinner, as many other ways, so particularly by my lips, which being in a special manner consecrated to God by my prophetical office, should have been entirely devoted to him; but, alas! my speeches, either to God in prayer, or from God in preaching and prophesying to the people, have been mixed and defiled with so much irreverence, dulness, distraction of thoughts and affections, carnal fear, and many other infirmities, that I dread the thoughts of appearing before thy judgment-seat, which I see erected in this place. For Isaiah had been a prophet before this time, chap. i. 1, and was now called, not in general to his prophetical office, but to the delivery of this special message. I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; I am an unclean branch of an unclean tree; and besides my own uncleanness, I have both by my omissions and commissions involved myself in the guilt of their sins, and therefore may justly fear to partake with them in their plagues. Mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts; the sight of this glorious and holy God gives me cause to fear that he is come to judgment against me, together with others. Whilst sinners are secure and presumptuous, the holiest persons have ever been filled with great reverence, and oft-times with doubts and fears, at any extraordinary manifestation of God's presence. See Gen. xvi. 13; xvii. 3; Judg. xiii. 22.

† Heb. and in his hand a live coal.
h Rev. 8. 3.

6 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, †having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off [h]the altar:

Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, by God's command, having a live coal; both a token and an instrument of purification, as the next verse explains it. From off the altar of burnt-offering, which stood in the court of the priests near the porch, and which had always coals of fire upon it, Lev. vi. 12, 13. Hence he took it, to show that men are to expect purification and expiation of sin only by such means as God hath appointed, and particularly by Christ, whom that altar did manifestly represent, Heb. xiii. 10.

i See Jer. 1. 9. Dan. 10. 16.

7 And he †[i]laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.

He laid it upon my mouth slightly, so as only to touch my lips, and not to burn them; which God could easily effect. Thy sin purged; this is a sign that I have pardoned and purged the uncleanness of thy lips, and do own and accept thee as a fit minister for my service.

k Gen. 1. 26. & 3. 22. & 11. 7.
† Heb. Behold me.

8 Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for [k]us? Then said I, †Here am I; send me.

Whom shall I send, and who will go for us, to deliver the following message? The change of the number, I and us, is very remarkable; and both being meant of one and the same Lord, do sufficiently intimate a plurality of persons in the Godhead. Here am I; send me: God's last and great favour to him did both encourage and oblige him to be forward in God's service.

l Ch. 43. 8. Matt. 13. 14. Mark 4. 12. Luke 8. 10. John 12. 40. Acts 28. 26. Rom. 11. 8.
† Heb. hear ye in hearing, &c.

9 ¶ And he said, Go, and tell this people, [l]Hear ye ‖†indeed, but understand not; and see ye †indeed, but perceive not.
† Heb. in seeing.

This people; not my people, for I disown them, as they have rejected me. Understand not, perceive not: the Hebrew words are imperative; yet they are not to be taken as a command what the people ought to do, but only as a signification and prediction what by their own wickedness, and by God's just judgment, they did and would do, as is manifest by Matt. xiii. 14; Acts xxviii. 26, where they are so rendered. And imperative words among the Hebrews are frequently put for the future, as is well known to the learned. The sense is, Because you have so long heard my words, and seen my works, to no purpose, and have hardened your hearts, and will not learn nor reform, I will punish you in your own kind, your sin shall be your punishment. I will still continue my word and works to you, not in mercy, and for your good, but to aggravate your sin and condemnation; for I will blind your minds, and withdraw my Spirit, so that you shall be as unable, as now you are unwilling, to understand or perceive any thing that may do you good.

m Ps. 119. 70. ch. 63. 17.
n Jer. 5. 21.

10 Make [m]the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; [n]lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed.

Fat, i. e. stupid and senseless; for the fat which is in the body is without sense; and fatness in the heart makes it dull and heavy. Thus this phrase is used Psal. cxix. 70. And this seems best to agree with the following words. This making of their hearts fat is here ascribed to the prophet, as it is ascribed to God in the repetition of this prophecy, John xii. 40, because God inflicted this judgment upon them by the ministry of the prophet, partly by way of prediction, foretelling that this would be the effect of his preaching; and partly by way of judicial operation, withdrawing the light and help of his Spirit, and giving them up to the power and arts of Satan, and to their own mistakes and lusts, whereby they are easily and commonly led to turn God's word, as they do other things, into occasions of sin. Make their ears heavy; make them dull of hearing, as Isa. lix. 1; Zech. vii. 11, as sometimes the ears are made by an excessive noise. Shut their eyes, Heb. daub their eyes, as the word is used also Isa. xliv. 18. Lest they see; that they may not be able, as before they were not willing, to see. Convert; turn from their sinful practices unto God. Be healed of sin, which is the disease of the soul, by remission and sanctification, and of all the deadly effects of sin.

o Mic. 3. 12.

11 Then said I, Lord, how long? And he answered, [o]Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be †utterly desolate, Lord, how long? an abrupt speech, arising from the prophet's great passion and astonishment. How long shall this dreadful judgment last? Until the land be utterly desolate; until this land be totally destroyed, first by the Babylonians, and afterward by the Romans.

p 2 Kings 25. 21.

12 [p]And the LORD have removed men far away, and there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land.

Have removed men far away; have caused this people to be carried away captive into far countries. And there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land; till houses and lands be generally forsaken of their owners, either because fled away from the sword into strange lands, or because they went into captivity.

‖ Or, when it is returned, and hath been browsed.
q Ezra 9. 2. Mal. 2. 15. Rom. 11. 5.

13 ¶ But yet in it shall be a tenth, ‖and it shall return, and shall be eaten: as a teil tree, and as an oak, whose ‖substance is in them, when they cast their leaves: so [q]the holy seed shall be the substance thereof.

A tenth; a small remnant reserved, that number being put indefinitely, as is very usual. Shall return, to wit, out of the Babylonish captivity, into their own land. Shall be eaten; that remnant shall be devoured and destroyed a second time by the kings of Syria, and afterwards more effectually by the Romans. As a teil tree, and as an oak, or, yet as, &c.; or, nevertheless as, &c.; such particles being frequently understood in the Hebrew, as hath been noted again and again. So the sense of the following words of the verse seems to be this, Although the Jewish nation shall undergo a second and a greater desolation by the Romans, yet there shall be another remnant, not such a one as that which came out of Babylon, which for the most part were corrupt and degenerate, as appears by the sacred histories and prophecies relating to that time; but a holy seed, a number of elect and godly Israelites, who shall afterwards look upon him whom they pierced, and mourn over him, as is said, Zech. xii. 10, and by me be received to mercy. Whose substance is in them, when they cast their leaves; who, when their leaves are withered and cast, as it is in winter, have a substance, or subsistence, or support within themselves, to wit, a vital principle, which preserves life in the root and body of the tree, and in due time sends it forth into all the branches. But others take the Hebrew word shallecheth for the proper name of a place, to wit, a causeway which led from the palace to the temple, 1 Chron. xxvi. 16; and so the place is and may be rendered thus, as a teil tree, (or, an elm,) and as an oak, (the singular number for the plural, as is very frequent,) as the elms and the oaks which are at or by Shallecheth (on both sides of which way such trees were planted, to beautify and to support that causeway, as some have observed) have subsistence or support in them; either, 1. For themselves; they stand fast and firm, when other trees are blown down: or, 2. For the way which they uphold. The substance thereof; or rather, the support (as the same word seems to be taken in the next foregoing clause) thereof, to wit, of the land or people, which, were it not for the sake of these elect persons, should be totally and finally rooted out; or, of that tenth part, which shall be delivered and preserved for the sake of that holy seed, those true-hearted Israelites which are among them.

CHAP. VII.

Ahaz, afraid of Rezin and Pekah, is comforted by Isaiah, 1—9; refusing to choose a sign, Christ is promised for one, 10—16: his judgment should come by Assyria, 17—25.

cir. 742. a 2 Kin. 16. 5. 2 Chron. 28. 5, 6.

AND it came to pass in the days of [a]Ahaz the son of Jotham, the son of Uzziah, king of Judah, that Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah the son of Remaliah, king of Israel, went up toward Jerusalem to war against it, but could not prevail against it.

In the days of Ahaz, a most wicked king; yet no prophecies are more comfortable than those which were delivered in his time; God so ordering it, partly for the encouragement of the faithful that lived under his tyrannical and impious reign; and partly to manifest the riches and freeness of his grace, in conferring such favours upon a most worthless generation. To war against it; which they attempted before in Jotham's reign, 2 Kings xv. 37, but now more seriously undertook, though without success, as is noted here, and 2 Kings xvi. 5.

2 And it was told the house of David, saying, Syria † is confederate with Ephraim. And his heart was moved, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind.

† Heb. resteth on Ephraim.

The house of David; Ahaz, and his royal relations and courtiers. He calls them the house of David, to intimate that the following comfortable message was sent to Ahaz, not for his own sake, but only for the sake of his worthy progenitor, David, to whom God had promised an everlasting kingdom. Ephraim; the kingdom of the ten tribes, commonly called Ephraim, as Isa. xxviii. 1; Hos. xii. 1, because that was far the most numerous and potent of all of them. Was moved with excessive fear, arising partly from the conscience of their own guilt, whereby they had put themselves out of God's protection; and partly from the consideration of the great strength and power of his enemies, who having prevailed against him severally, 2 Chron. xxviii. 5, 8, and having now united their forces, he, having no faith in God, nor confidence to desire or expect his help, concluded his case desperate and deplorable.

3 Then said the LORD unto Isaiah, Go forth now to meet Ahaz, thou, [b]and ‖ Shear-jashub thy son, at the end of the [c]conduit of the upper pool in the ‖ highway of the fuller's field;

b ch. 10. 21. ‖ That is, The remnant shall return: See ch. 6. 13. & 10. 21. c 2 Kin. 18. 17. ch. 36. 2. ‖ Or, causeyway.

Go forth now to meet Ahaz, though he do not seek nor send to thee, as he ought. This is an eminent instance of preventing mercy. Shear-jashub; whose very name carried in it a sign and pledge of the promised deliverance. At the end of the conduit of the upper pool in the highway of the fuller's field; whither he probably went to take care about the waters, which thence were brought into the city, either to secure them to himself, or to keep them from the enemy, as Hezekiah afterward did, 2 Chron. xxxii. 3, 4.

4 And say unto him, Take heed, and be quiet; fear not, † neither be faint-hearted for the two tails of these smoking firebrands, for the fierce anger of Rezin with Syria, and of the son of Remaliah.

† Heb. let not thy heart be tender

Take heed, and be quiet; see that thou be quiet, abandon thy fears, and settle thy mind by the belief of that joyful message and promise which I am now to deliver thee from the Lord. Smoking fire-brands; they are not whole firebrands burning in the fire, but small pieces or ends of them, taken out of the fire, in which there is more smoke than fire, and the fire will be speedily extinguished. They have more of show and terror than of strength. The son of Remaliah; Pekah king of Israel, ver. 1, whom here, and in the next verse, he calls only the son of Remaliah, to intimate that he was unworthy of the name of king, as having got that title and power by usurpation, and the murder of his master and king Pekahiah, 2 Kings xv. 25.

5 Because Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have taken evil counsel against thee, saying,

6 Let us go up against Judah, and ‖ vex it, and let us make a breach therein for us, and set a king in the midst of it, even the son of Tabeal:

‖ Or, waken.

Let us make a breach therein; either, 1. Break and divide that country into two parts, one for thee, and another for me; or rather, 2. Break their power and kingdom, and subdue it to ourselves: for, 1. The same word and phrase is so used 2 Chron. xxxii. 1, where there was no such division intended. 2. Because the next clause intimates that the kingdom of Judah was still to be united under another king, who should pay tribute to them severally, as they should agree. The son of Tabeal; some considerable captain, in whose fidelity both of them had good confidence; but whether he was an Israelite or Syrian is uncertain, and not material.

7 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [d]It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass.

d Prov. 21. 30. ch. 8. 10.

Their evil counsel, as it is called, ver. 5.

8 [e]For the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus is Rezin; and within threescore and five years shall Ephraim be broken, † that it be not a people.

e 2 Sam. 8. 6. † Heb. from a people.

Is Damascus; or rather, shall be Damascus; for the verb is not expressed in the Hebrew text, and therefore may be either way supplied. The sense is, Damascus shall still continue to be the capital and chief city of the kingdom of Syria; and therefore Jerusalem shall not be taken, nor become a part of Rezin's dominion; but he shall be kept within his own bounds, and be king of Damascus only, and not, as he hopes, of Jerusalem. Within threescore and five years; to be computed either, 1. From the prophecy of Amos, who prophesied in the days of Uzziah, two years before the earthquake, Amos i. 1, which the Jews affirm to have happened about the time of his usurpation of the priest's office, and being smitten with leprosy, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16, &c., which though it be not proved, yet it may be admitted, because it cannot be disproved. And it is more than probable that that action and accident was divers years before his death, during which time Jotham acted as his viceroy, 2 Chron. xxvi. 21. And the prophecy of Amos being express and full concerning the destruction of the people and commonwealth of Israel, being also fresh in the memory of many now living, the prophet Isaiah might well have respect to it. So the sense is as if he had said, There shall be but sixty-five years between the delivery and the execution of that prophecy. And so the number of years may be thus made up. Fix the beginning of them ten years before Uzziah's death, add the sixteen years of Jotham's reign, and then the sixteen years of Ahaz's reign, and then six of Hezekiah's reign, in which Israel was carried captive, 2 Kings xviii. 10, these make up forty-eight years; and for the seventeen years which yet remain of the sixty-five, they may be taken out of the rest of Hezekiah's reign. For although the transportation of that people began in the sixth year of Hezekiah, yet it might be continued or repeated divers years after, and completed seventeen years after, Jer. lii. 28—30. Or rather, 2. These years may be computed from the time of this prophecy of Isaiah. And whereas it may objected against this opinion, that the judgment here threatened was executed in the sixth year of Hezekiah, as was before noted, and therefore within eighteen or nineteen years of this prophecy, which was delivered in the third or fourth year of Ahaz; two things may be answered, 1. That the Israelites were not transported in the sixth year of Hezekiah; for although Samaria be said to be taken in the sixth year of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 10, and the transportation of the Israelites be mentioned immediately after it, ver. 11, yet it doth not thence follow that it was done immediately, and at that one time; because this is not unusual in Scripture, in historical relations to mention those things together which were done at a considerable distance of time one from another, as it is recorded, Acts vii. 15, 16, Jacob ——died, he and our fathers, and were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the sepulchre of Abraham, &c., although it was above two hundred years ere all which is said in those few words was done. And other instances of like nature might easily be produced. 2. That this work of transportation was not done at once, but successively, and by degrees. Thus it certainly was in the transportation of Judah, which was begun in Nebuchadnezzar's seventh year, continued in his eighteenth year, and perfected in his three and twentieth year, Jer. lii. 28—30. And thus it might be, and probably was, in this transportation. It might be begun presently after the taking of Samaria, and afterwards continued, until at last the whole body of the people was removed; and as soon as that was done, and not before, the king of Assyria brought into their place those new colonies mentioned 2 Kings xvii. 24. Which that it was not done at the time of the taking of Samaria, but many years after it, seems to me evident, because those colonies were not brought thither by Shalmanezer, who took Samaria, 2 Kings xviii. 10, no, nor by Sennacherib, his next successor; but by Esar-haddon, as is affirmed, Ezra iv. 2, who was the son and successor of Sennacherib, 2 Kings xix. 37, and reigned above fifty years; for he seems to have begun his reign about the fourteenth year of Hezekiah's reign, by comparing 2 Kings xviii. 13, and xix. 35—37; and so he reigned with Hezekiah about fifteen years, and with Manasseh above forty years, as the learned Sir John Marsham affirms in his Chronicus Canon, &c., p. 496. And this work of transporting the remainders of the Israelites, and bringing the new colonies, might not be done till towards the end of his reign; which delay might be occasioned by his wars, or other great affairs. And lest this should seem to be only my own private conjecture, if the reader consult Sir John Marsham's fourth and last chronological table, inserted after p. 589 of his work, he will find that learned chronologer to be of the same mind, and to make above fifty years' distance between the taking of Samaria, and the translation of the new colonies into those parts. And thus these sixty-five years might well be accomplished in his time. And so this place agrees with other scriptures, and the difficulties objected against other interpretations seem to be avoided.

9 And the head of Ephraim is Samaria, and the head of Samaria is Remaliah's son. [f] ‖ If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established.

[f] See 2 Chron. 20. 20.
‖ Or, Do ye not believe? it is because ye are not stable.

Is Samaria; or rather, shall be Samaria; and the sense is the same as in the foregoing verse, Samaria shall continue to be the chief city of the kingdom of Israel, and Pekah shall not conquer Jerusalem, as he hoped and designed to do. Ye shall not be established; if you do not believe this and the other promises of God, but, in distrust of God, shall seek to the Assyrians for succour, to which I perceive you are inclined, instead of that deliverance and settlement which you expect, you shall be distressed and consumed thereby; the accomplishment of which threatening is recorded 2 Chron. xxviii. 20. And by this threatening he implies, that if they did rely upon God's word and help, they should be established. Only he delivereth it in the form of a threatening, rather than of promise, partly because he foresaw that they would choose the worse part, and bring the judgment threatened upon themselves; and partly because this was most necessary for them, to affright them out of their present security and infidelity.

10 ¶ †Moreover the LORD spake again unto Ahaz, saying, † Heb. And the LORD added to speak.

11 [g] Ask thee a sign of the LORD thy God; ‖ ask it either in the depth, or in the height above.

[g] Judg. 6. 36, &c. Matt. 12. 38.

Ask thee a sign of the Lord; I perceive thou dost not believe God's word and message now delivered by me; yet God is so patient and merciful to thee, that he gives thee liberty to demand of him any signal or miraculous work, whereby thou mayst be assured of the truth and certainty of this promise. Thy God; both by right of dominion, and by virtue of his gracious covenant made with all Israel, of whom thou art a member and king; and by thy own profession, for he still worshipped God together with his idols; and by the continuance of his care and kindness to thee and to thy people, notwithstanding all your wickedness; whereof this promise and offer is a clear demonstration. Ask it either in the depth, or in the height above; demand some prodigy to be wrought, either in earth or in heaven, at thy pleasure.

12 But Ahaz said, I will not ask, neither will I tempt the LORD.

I will not ask: this refusal proceeded not from the strength of his faith, but from his contempt of God, and total distrust and disregard of his word, and inward resolution to take another course; as is manifest both from the following words, and from the history of Ahaz, 2 Chron. xxviii. Neither will I tempt the Lord; either, 1. By asking a sign, as if he questioned the truth of his word: so this was deep hypocrisy. Or, 2. By neglecting any means necessary for my preservation, which were indeed a tempting of God. And therefore I shall not sit still and rely upon God till I be destroyed, which will be the effect of thy counsel; but I shall do as becometh a wise king, seek for succour from potent allies, such as the Assyrian is. So this is flat rebellion against God.

13 And he said, Hear ye now, O house of David; Is it a small thing for you to weary men, but will ye weary my God also?

House of David; of which see above, ver. 2. He reproveth them all, because they were the king's counsellors, and promoted the design of sending for the Assyrian succours. Is it a small thing for you? is not that wickedness more than enough? must you add more to it? To weary men; to vex God's prophets and people, and the generality of your subjects, with your oppressions and horrid impieties. Will ye weary my God also, by your cursed ingratitude, and unbelief, and disobedience to his commands? He saith, my God, i. e. the God whose servant and prophet or messenger I am, to intimate that this heinous offence was not committed against a weak and foolish man, such as they might think the prophet to be, but against God himself, who sent the message. Compare Exod. xvi. 8.

14 Therefore the LORD himself shall give you a sign; [h] Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear [1]a son, and ‖shall call his name [k]Immanuel.

[1] ch. 9. 6. ‖ Or, thou, O Virgin, shalt call; [k] See Gen. 4. 1, 25. & 16. 11. & 29. 32. & 30. 6, 8. 1 Sam. 4. 21. k ch. 8. 8.

Therefore; because you despise me, and the sign which I now offer to you, God of his own free grace will send you a more honourable messenger, and give you a nobler sign, to try whether that will cure you of your infidelity. Or, nevertheless, as this particle seems to be understood, Isa. xxx. 18; Jer. xvi. 14; xxx. 16. Although you deserve no sign nor favour, yet, for the comfort of those few believers which are among you, and to leave you without excuse, I shall mind you of another and a greater sign, which God hath promised, and will in his due time perform; which also is a pledge of the certain accomplishment of all God's promises. Or, surely, as this particle is sometimes used, as Gen. iv. 15; Jer. ii. 33; v. 2; Zech. xi. 7. A sign, to wit, of your deliverance. Quest. How was this birth of a virgin, which was not to come till many ages after, a sign of their deliverance from the present danger? Answ. 1. Because this was a clear demonstration of God's infinite power, and goodness, and faithfulness, and consequently of the certain truth of all God's promises from time to time, which can never fail so long as those attributes of God stand; and men's faith is either strong or weak, as they believe them or doubt of them; of which see Psal. lxxvii. 8; lxxviii. 19, 20; Rom. iv. 20, 21. And so this was a proper remedy for Ahaz's disease, which was a secret suspicion that God either could not or would not deliver them. 2. Because that promise, I say not only the actual giving, which was long after, but even the promise, of the Messiah, which had been made long since, and oft renewed, and was universally believed by all the people, was the foundation of all God's mercies and promises unto them, 2 Cor. i. 20, and a pledge of the accomplishment of them. 3. Because this promised birth did suppose and require the preservation of that city, and nation, and tribe, in and of which the Messiah was to be born; and therefore there was no cause to fear that utter ruin which their enemies now threatened to bring upon them. 4. This is one, but not the only sign here given, as we shall see at ver. 16. Behold; you who will not believe that God alone is able to deliver you from the united force of Syria and Israel, take notice, for your full satisfaction, that God is not only able to do this work, but to do far greater and harder things, which he hath promised, and therefore both can and will accomplish. A virgin; strictly and properly so called. The Jews, that they may obscure this plain text, and weaken this proof of the truth of Christian religion, pretend that this Hebrew word signifies a young woman, and not a virgin. But this corrupt translation is easily confuted, 1. Because this word constantly signifies a virgin in all other places of Scripture where it is used, which are Gen. xxiv. 43, compared with ver. 16; Exod. ii. 8; Psal. lxviii. 25; Cant. i. 3; vi. 8; to which may be added Prov. xxx. 19, The way of a man with a maid, or a virgin: for though it be supposed that he did design and desire to corrupt her, and afterwards did so; yet she may well be called a virgin, partly because he found her a virgin, and partly because she seemed and pretended to others to be such, which made her more careful to use all possible arts to preserve her reputation, and so made the discovery of her impure conversation with the man more difficult, whereas the filthy practices of common harlots are easily and vulgarly known. 2. From the scope of this place, which is to confirm their faith by a strange and prodigious sign, which surely could not be that a young woman should conceive a child, but that a virgin should conceive, &c. Bear a Son; or rather, bring forth, as it is rendered, Matt. i. 23, and as this Hebrew word is used, Gen. xvi. 11; xvii. 19; Judg. xiii. 5. And shall call; the virgin, last mentioned, shall call; which is added as a further evidence of her virginity, and that this Son had no human father, because the right of naming the child (which, being a sign of dominion, is primarily in the husband, and in the wife only by his consent or permission, as is evident from Gen. v. 29; xxxv. 18; Luke i. 60, 63, and many other places of Scripture) is wholly appropriated to her. Immanuel; which signifies, God with us; God dwelling among us, in our nature, John i. 14, God and man meeting in one person, and being a Mediator between God and men. For the design of these words is not so much to relate the name by which Christ should commonly be called, as to describe his nature and office; as we read that his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, &c., Isa. ix. 6, and that this is said to be his (the Messiah's) name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness, Jer. xxiii. 6, although he be never called by these names in any other place of the Old or New Testament; but the meaning of these places is, He shall be wonderful, and our Counsellor, &c., and our Righteousness; for to be called is oft put for to be, as Isa. i. 26; iv. 3, &c.

15 Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil, and choose the good.

Butter and honey; the common food of children in that country, where they were in great abundance, and of the best sort. He; the virgin's Son last mentioned, who, though he be God blessed for ever, yet shall become man, and, to show the truth of his humanity, shall not only be conceived and brought forth, but also shall be nourished and brought up, by the same means and steps as other children; which is justly mentioned here as a stupendous and miraculous work of God. That he may know; that by this food he may grow up, and so may know, &c. Or, until he know, as it is rendered by divers learned men, and, among others, by the Chaldee interpreter, who best knew the use of this particle among the Hebrews. To refuse the evil, and choose the good; to discern between things morally good and evil; which children are capable of doing, in some measure, when they are five or six years old. Compare Deut. i. 39, where young children are described by this character, that they had no knowledge between good and evil.

16 [1]For before the child shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of [m]both her kings.

[1] See ch. 8. 4. [m] 2 Kin. 15. 30. & 16. 9.

For; or, yea; for so this particle is used by way of amplification or addition, Isa. xxxii. 13; Jer. xiv. 5, 18. So the sense is, Not only this land of thine shall be preserved until the virgin's Son be born, but thine enemy's land shall be sorely scourged, and these two kings destroyed, within a very little time. The child, Heb. this child; not the virgin's Son, but the prophet's child, Shear-jashub, whom in all probability the prophet, to prevent mistakes, pointed at, and who was brought hither by God's special command, ver. 3, and that for this very use; for otherwise his presence was wholly insignificant. The land; the lands, to wit, of Syria and Israel, as is evident from the next words. It is an enallage of the singular for the plural. That thou abhorrest, for its cruel designs and practices against thee. Or, which vexeth or molesteth thee, as this word is used, Exod. i. 12; Numb. xxii. 3, &c. Shall be forsaken of both her kings; so far shall Pekah and Rezin be from conquering thy land, that they shall lose their own lands, and their lives too; which they did within two years after this time, being both slain by the king of Assyria, 2 Kings xv. 29, 30; xvi. 9.

17 ¶ [n]The LORD shall bring upon thee, and upon thy people, and upon thy father's house, days that have not come, from the day that [o]Ephraim departed from Judah; even the king of Assyria.

[n] 2 Chron. 28. 19. [o] 1 Kings 12. 16.

The Lord shall bring; but although God will deliver you at this time for his own name's sake, yet he will remember and requite all your present and following wickedness, and hath a dreadful judgment in store for you. Upon thee; for part of this Assyrian storm fell in Ahaz's reign, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20. Upon thy father's house; upon thy sons and successors, the kings of Judah; the accomplishment whereof is recorded in their history. Days, to wit, evil days, by a synecdoche; or calamities; for days are oft put for the events which happen in them, and especially for judgments or tribulations, as Job xviii. 20; Psal. cxxxvii. 7; Isa. ix. 4; Obad. 12. The day that Ephraim departed from Judah; when ten tribes revolted from thy father's house, and set up another opposite kingdom. Even the king of Assyria; who may well be called their plague or calamity, as he is called the rod of God's anger, Isa. x. 5. Or, with (as this Hebrew particle oft signifies) the king, &c.; or, by the king, &c. And king is here put for kings, as Dan. ii. 37; viii. 21.

18 And it shall come to pass in that
[p] ch. 5. 26. day, that the LORD [p] shall hiss for the fly that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria.

In that day; known to God, and appointed by him for the execution of these judgments. Shall hiss: see on Isa. v. 26. The fly; the flies. So he calls these enemies, to imply either their great numbers, or their speedy march, or their unavoidable assault. In the uttermost part; in, or near, or towards their extremity or end, where they go out into the sea. Of the rivers; of the river Nilus, which may be called rivers, either for its greatness, for which cause the title of rivers is given also to Euphrates, Psal. cxxxvii. 1, and to Tigris, Nah. ii. 6; or because, towards the end of it, it is divided into seven famous streams, by which it emptieth itself into the midland sea, Isa. xi. 15. He seems plainly to design and describe the Egyptians, who were always dangerous neighbours to Judah, and did probably animate and assist the Philistines, and Edomites, and others against them, and at last made a formal invasion and conquest of their land, 2 Kings xxiii. 33, &c. Besides, when the Chaldeans had in good measure subdued the Egyptians, it is very probable that great numbers of the Egyptian soldiers did list themselves in the Chaldean army, and with them invade the land of Judah. The bee; the bees, the Assyrian army, who are compared to bees, as for their numerous forces and orderly march, so for their fierce attempts and mischievous effects. In the land of Assyria; in the empire of Assyria, or Babylon; for these two were united into one empire, and therefore in Scripture are promiscuously called sometimes by one title, and sometimes by the other.

19 And they shall come, and shall rest
[q] ch. 2. 19. Jer. 16. 16. all of them in the desolate valleys, and in [q] the holes of the rocks, and upon all thorns, and upon all ‖ bushes.
‖ Or, commendable trees.

They; the flies, and especially the bees. Shall rest all of them; they shall have an easy victory; few or none of them shall be slain in the attempt. The desolate valleys; either, 1. Such as were and had long been desolate. So it signifies the vast numbers of their enemies, which filled all places, both such as were well inhabited, and such as were in a great measure desolate. Or, 2. Such as they found very fruitful, but made them desolate. The rocks; to which possibly the Israelites fled for refuge. Bushes; which he mentions, partly because flies and bees use frequently to rest there, and partly to intimate that no place should escape the fury of this enemy.

20 In the same day shall the Lord shave
[r] 2 Kings 16. 7, 8. 2 Chron. 28. 20, 21. See Ezek. 5. with a [r] razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the king of Assyria, the head, and the hair of the feet: and it shall also consume the beard.

Shave with a razor, i. e. utterly spoil and destroy, as shaving takes away all the hair, and leaves not any thing of it visible, as there is when the hair is only cut or polled. Hired; either, 1. By Ahaz, who did hire them, 2 Kings xvi. 7, 8. And so the prophet notes the just judgment of God, in scourging them with a rod of their own making; and by this threatening he endeavours to prevent that wicked design which then was on foot, of hiring Assyrian succours. Or, 2. By God, who did stir them up, and send them upon his errand against Judah, as he threatens, Isa. x. 6, and paid them liberally for that service, as he did Nebuchadnezzar, of which see Jer. xxv. 9; xxvii. 6, 7; Dan. ii. 37, 38. The river Euphrates, called the river, by way of eminency, Psal. lxxii. 8; Jer. ii. 18, beyond which Assyria lay. By the king of Assyria; by the successive kings of the Assyrian empire, Sennacherib, 2 Kings xviii. 13, &c., Esarhaddon, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11, and especially by Nebuchadnezzar, who having subdued the Assyrian monarchy, from thenceforth was king of Assyria as well as of Chaldea. And the prophet rather mentions Assyria than Chaldea or Babylon, partly because the Assyrian began and continued to execute this judgment, although the Babylonian completed it; and partly to inform them that they laid the foundation of their own ruin, by opening the door to the Assyrian, who afterwards entered at his pleasure, and left it open for Nebuchadnezzar. The hair of the feet; of the lower or secret parts, which come under that name, Ezek. xvi. 7, 25, and elsewhere, as it hath been noted again and again; and which the Jewish writers affirm to have been shaved in the purification of lepers and Levites, Lev. xiv. 8, 9; Numb. viii. 7. The beard, which they highly esteemed, as a great ornament. By these metaphorical expressions he signifies the total destruction of their state, from head to foot, from the highest to the lowest.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, that a man shall nourish a young cow, and two sheep;

This and the following verse contain either, 1. A mitigation of the foregoing calamity, or some comfort for the remainders of the people, after the public devastation; or rather, 2. A further declaration of the threatened desolation; which best agrees not only with the foregoing, but also with the following verses. So the sense of this verse is this, They who formerly used to keep great herds of cattle, and many flocks of sheep, shall esteem it a great happiness if they can keep but one cow and two sheep, to keep themselves from extremity of famine.

22 And it shall come to pass, for the abundance of milk that they shall give that he shall eat butter: for butter and honey shall every one eat that is left † in the land.
† Heb. in the midst of the land.

For the abundance of milk that they shall give; because they shall have excellent and large pastures, by reason of the great scarcity of cattle; whereas formerly their lands were ofttimes overstocked with cattle. Butter and honey may be here mentioned, either, 1. As mean and vulgar food, being very common in those parts; which are opposed to that flesh and corn, and other excellent fruits of the earth, wherewith their land formerly abounded. Or, 2. As very good and pleasant food, which the poorer sort had formerly used to sell, to procure more necessary and cheaper food for themselves; but now the land should be so destitute of people, that there were none to whom they could sell them, and those few who did survive might freely eat all sorts of provisions.

[s] ch. 5. 6.

A thousand vines at a thousand silverings; or, pieces of silver, as the same word is commonly rendered. Whereby we may understand either, 1. So many pounds; a pound for each vineyard, to wit, for the annual rent. Or, 2. So many shekels, which word is most commonly understood, when no particular kind of coin is expressed, as 2 Sam. xviii. 11, 12; Matt. xxvi. 15; and then the meaning is, not that the thousand vineyards were let for a thousand shekels, a vineyard for a shekel, which is a contemptible price; but that each of the thousand vineyards might have been sold or let for a thousand shekels, which was the yearly rent of some excellent vineyards, as may be gathered from Cant. viii. 11; except we understand this not of so many vineyards, as other interpreters do, but of so many single vines, as the word properly and generally signifies, planted together in one large vineyard, which may be here meant by the place of the river, and then each vine may be valued at a shekel. But this place may possibly be otherwise rendered, and that exactly according to the Hebrew text, every place where there are a thousand vines, shall be for a thousand pieces of silver, i. e. it shall be valued or offered, either to be let, or rather to be sold, at that price; which was a very low price, and therefore fitly signifies the greatness of the desolation. It shall even be for briers and thorns, because it shall be utterly neglected, and therefore overspread with them. Or, yea, it shall be for briers and thorns. No man will either buy or hire it upon any terms.

24 With arrows and with bows shall men come thither; because all the land shall become briers and thorns.

With arrows and with bows; either to hunt, or to defend themselves from wild beasts, which commonly abide in such desolate and overgrown grounds.

25 And on all hills that shall be digged with the mattock, there shall not come thither the fear of briers and thorns: but it shall be for the sending forth of oxen, and for the treading of lesser cattle.

That shall be digged; or, that were digged, to wit, formerly; that used to be digged and dressed for the planting of vines, or other choice fruit trees. There shall not come thither the fear of briers and thorns: the words thus rendered sound like a promise, but that doth no way agree with the scope of the place. And they may be, and are by some, understood not of briers and thorns growing in those grounds, which would hinder the feeding of cattle there, but of such wherewith they were fenced, and by which the cattle were affrighted or hindered from breaking into them, which cause of their fear being now removed by the general devastation, they might now enter there, and feed at pleasure, as the next words imply. Or they may be rendered thus, as they are by a late learned interpreter, that there might not come thither, &c., which is mentioned as the reason why they were digged and dressed, that they might be freed from briers and thorns. And so there is only a defect of the Hebrew particle asher, which is frequent, and that not only as it signifies which, but as it is taken finally for that, as Isa. v. 11; x. 2, and elsewhere. It shall be; or, even (as this particle is oft rendered) there shall be, to wit, a place; which word is understood, 2 Sam. vii. 1; 1 Kings xviii. 12. Or the words may be thus rendered, and all hills that shall be digged—and thorns, even they or each of them shall be; the singular being taken collectively, as is very usual. For the sending forth of oxen, and for the treading of lesser cattle; all sorts of cattle may fairly enter, and feed there, the fences being broken down, and the owners generally slain, or carried into captivity.

CHAP. VIII.

Syria and Israel should be subdued by Assyria, 1—4. Judah also should be afflicted, 5—8. God's judgments irresistible, and to be feared, 9—13. The Lord is a sanctuary to the godly, a stone of stumbling to the wicked, 14, 15. The prophecy sure; God to be waited on; necromancers not to be consulted, but the prophecy; their misery, 16—22.

a ch. 30. 8. Hab. 2. 2. † Heb. in making speed to the spoil-he hasteneth the prey, or, make speed, &c.

MOREOVER the LORD said unto me, Take thee a great roll, and [a]write in it with a man's pen concerning †Maher-shalal-hash-baz.

A great roll; or, a great volume, because the prophecy to be written in it was large, and God would have it written in very large and legible characters. With a man's pen; with such a pen as writers use, Psal. xli. 6; Jer. viii. 6, that so all may read and understand it. Concerning Maher-shalal-hash-baz; concerning that thing which is signified by the name of thy child, which is here mentioned by way of anticipation, as not being given him till ver. 3, i. e. concerning that which God is making haste to do, the giving up the kingdoms of Syria and Israel for a prey to the Assyrian, as this name is explained, ver. 4.

b 2 Kings 16. 10.

2 And I took unto me faithful witnesses to record, [b]Uriah the priest, and Zechariah the son of Jeberechiah.

Persons of unquestionable reputation, who should bear witness that the following name and prophecy was written and published by me, according to God's command.

3 And I †went unto the prophetess; and she conceived, and bare a son. Then said the LORD to me, Call his name Maher-shalal-hash-baz.

I went unto, Heb. I came near to her. A modest expression of the conjugal act. The prophetess; so called, partly as she was the prophet's wife, wives being frequently denominated from their husbands' titles, as the wives of mayor, or doctor, &c., are commonly called mayoress, doctoress, &c.; and partly because she did concur with the prophet to the procreation of this prophetical child.

c See ch. 7. 16. ‖ Or, he that is before the king of Assyria shall take away the riches, &c.

4 [c]For before the child shall have knowledge to cry, My father, and my mother, ‖ [d]the riches of Damascus and the spoil of Samaria shall be taken away before the king of Assyria.

d 2 Kings 15. 29. & 16. 9. ch. 17. 3. cir. 741.

To cry, My father, and my mother; to speak, and to know his parents; which is within the space of two years. And this agrees with the other prophecy, Isa. vii. 16, Before the child shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good, which requires a longer time than to distinguish his parents from strangers; which suits well to Shear-jashub, who, being born some years before this, was capable of that further degree of knowledge as soon as this was capable of the lower degree. The riches of Damascus and the spoil of Samaria shall be taken away; the kingdoms of Syria and Israel, here signified by their two capital cities, shall be stripped of their wealth and power, as they were by Tiglath-pileser, within the time here limited, 2 Kings xv. 29. Before the king of Assyria; in his presence, and by himself and his forces; for in Scripture use that is said to be before a man, which is in or is put into a man's power, as Gen. xiii. 9; xx. 15, &c.; and men are said to be smitten before their enemies, when they are smitten by them, as Numb. xiv. 42; Deut. i. 42; Judg. xx. 39, and oft elsewhere. Others refer this phrase to the ancient custom of conquerors, of sending or carrying their spoils before them into their own country.

5 ¶ The LORD spake also unto me again, saying, e Neh. 3. 15. John 9. 7. f ch. 7. 1, 2, 6.

6 Forasmuch as this people refuseth the waters of [e]Shiloah that go softly, and rejoice [f]in Rezin and Remaliah's son;

This people; either, 1. The people of Judah, which are supposed to have grown weary of their present government, and out of distrust of God's protection designed to revolt from God, and from the house of David, and to put themselves under the power and protection of the kings of Syria and Israel. But there are no footsteps of any such design or practice of that people. And the following clause of rejoicing in Rezin, &c. cannot with any colour be ascribed to the Jews, whom at this time they sought to destroy. Or rather, 2. The people of Israel, of whom he last spake, ver. 4, and who are the chief subject of this whole prophecy, contained in this and the foregoing chapter; and who did rejoice not only in their own king Pekah, but also in the assistance of so powerful an ally as Rezin was. Refuseth; or rather, despiseth, as the word properly and most frequently signifies. The waters of Shiloah; that small and contemptible river or brook which ran by that city, which is here secretly opposed to the great rivers of Tigris and Euphrates, by which the Assyrian empire was fortified. Hereby he understands the munitions and strength of the Jews, which their enemies derided and contemned. That go softly; gently, as little rivers do.

7 Now therefore, behold, the Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even [g]the king of Assyria, and all his glory: and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks:

Therefore; because they despise the opposition which they have from Shiloah and Jerusalem, they shall have a more potent enemy. Upon them; upon Israel. See on the foregoing verse. Of the river of Euphrates, oft called the river, for its eminent greatness; whereby he understands the Assyrian forces, as the next words explain the metaphor. All his glory; his numerous and puissant army, in which he gloried. See Isa. x. 8. He shall come up over all his channels; this great river shall overflow its own proper channels. The meaning is, This great monarch shall enlarge his dominions, and add the lands of Syria and Israel to them. Some render the words, he shall come up with all his channels or streams; for the Hebrew particle all sometimes signifies with, as Job xxxviii. 32. But it seems hard to understand the same particle one way in this clause, and another in the last clause. Besides, the last clause favours the former interpretation, the same thing being repeated in it, as is usual in the sacred writings. Or this may be understood of the channels and banks of the people or land of Israel. The enemy being represented under the metaphor of a river breaking in upon their land, may fitly be said to overflow all their channels and banks, to wit, all places, both low and high, so that nothing shall be able to withstand his fury.

h ch. 30. 28.
+ Heb. the fulness of the breadth of thy land shall be the stretchings out of his wings.
i ch. 7. 14.

8 And he shall pass through Judah; he shall overflow and go over, [h] he shall reach even to the neck; and † the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O [i] Immanuel.

He; or, it, to wit, the river, ver. 7, which yet designs the same person and thing, to wit, the invasion of the king of Assyria. Shall pass through Judah; and when he shall have finished his work against you, he shall invade the land of Judah, as Sennacherib did some few years after his conquest of Samaria, 2 Kings xviii. 9, 13. He shall reach even to the neck; so as they shall be in great danger of being drowned or destroyed. He persists in the metaphor of a river swelling so high as to reach to a man's neck, and be ready to overwhelm him. Such was the danger of Judah's land, when Sennacherib took all the fenced cities of Judah, 2 Kings xviii. 13, and sent his army against Jerusalem. Of his wings; of his forces, or of the wings of his army, as they anciently were and still are called. Of thy land, O Immanuel; of the land of Judah, so called because the Messiah, who is called by God himself Immanuel, chap. vii. 14, should certainly be born, and live, and die there. And this is added emphatically for the consolation of God's people, to assure them, that notwithstanding this dreadful scourge, yet God would make a difference between Israel and Judah; and whereas Israel should be so broken by the Assyrian, that they should not be a people, as was threatened, chap. vii. 8, Judah should be restored and preserved, for the sake of the Messiah, to be the place of his birth and ministry, according to that famous prophecy, Gen. xlix. 10.

k Joel 3. 9, 11.

9 ¶ [k] Associate yourselves, O ye people, ‖ and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries: gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces.

O ye people; Syrians and Israelites. Immanuel's name inspireth the prophet with new courage, and makes him send a challenge to all God's enemies, and foretell their certain downfal. Ye of far countries; whosoever you be, whether far or near, who do or shall conspire against Immanuel's land. Gird yourselves with sword and belt; prepare yourselves for war. Ye shall be broken in pieces: this is repeated for the greater assurance of the thing, and the comfort of God's people, who are apt to despond upon such occasions.

Speak the word; declare and fix your purpose, and make your boast of it. God is with us; the almighty and only true God fighteth for us, and against you. He gives the interpretation of the name Immanuel expressed before, ver. 8; for though the word in the Hebrew be the same here and there, yet there it seems to be taken properly, and here appellatively.

11 ¶ For the LORD spake thus to me † with a strong hand, and instructed me that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying,

With a strong hand; with a vehement and more than ordinary inspiration, strongly imprinting it in my mind. Of this people; of the generality of the people of Judah; whose eminent danger and calamity he foretells, ver. 8, but withal gives them full assurance that God would deliver them out of it, ver. 9, 10; which he doth to aggravate the present sin of Ahaz and his people, in forsaking God, and seeking to the king of Assyria for help, as they did, 2 Kings xvi. 6—8.

14 And [s] he shall be for a sanctuary; but for [t] a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

Your sanctuary; a sure refuge to all that truly fear him, and rely upon him. For a stone of stumbling and for a rock of offence; an occasion of sin and ruin, at whom they will take offence and stumble, so as to fall and be broken, as it is expressed, ver. 15. To both the houses of Israel; to the two royal families of Israel, largely so called; that of Judah, to wit, the house of David; and that of Ephraim: or, to the two kingdoms, that of the ten tribes, and that of the two tribes. For a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem; which are distinctly mentioned, as a very observable and wonderful thing, because Jerusalem was the seat of the temple, and of God's solemn worship, where all the means of knowledge and grace were in greatest power and plenty, where the thrones of civil and ecclesiastical judicature were established, where the most wise and learned doctors had their constant or frequent abode. And that such a place and people should reject Immanuel, or their Messiah, when he should appear, was so great and strange an occurrent, that the prediction of it was highly necessary, lest otherwise, when it came to pass, it should shake the faith of all who did believe on him; whereas now the accomplishment hereof was a notable confirmation of their faith, and an evidence that Christ was the true Messiah.

u Matt. 21. 44. Luke 20. 18. Rom. 9. 32. & 11. 25.

15 And many among them shall [u] stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken.

Many among them; not all, for there shall be a remnant, as was foretold, Isa. iv. 2; vi. 13. Shall stumble at that stone or rock, mentioned ver. 14. This was accomplished at the coming of the Messias, whom the Jews rejected to their own destruction.

16 Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples.

These are, by the consent of all, God's words to the prophet. By the testimony and the law or doctrine (for so this word is frequently taken) he understands one and the same thing, as he doth also ver. 26, to wit, the word of God, and especially that which is the main scope and substance thereof, the doctrine of the Messias, which, though now professed by all the Israelites, shall be disowned by the generality of them, when the Messiah shall come. Bind up and seal are to be understood prophetically, Declare and prophesy that it shall be bound up and sealed; as Isaiah is said to make fat, and to blind, &c., Isa. vi. 10, and Jeremiah to root out and pull down, &c., Jer. i. 10, when they foretell these events. Moreover, bind up and seal design the same thing, and that is, either, 1. Security and certainty, as things are bound up or sealed that they may not be lost. So he signifies, that although this doctrine would be lost among the body of the Israelites, yet it should be preserved among his disciples. Or, 2. Secrecy, as many things are bound up or sealed that they may be hid from the eyes of others. And so he informeth them that this doctrine now was and should be hid in a great measure among all God's people, even till the accomplishment of it; and that even when it was accomplished, it should still continue to be as a secret and mystery, known indeed to his true disciples, but hid from the body of the nation, who would not see it, and therefore should be blinded by God's just judgment, that they should not see it, as was prophesied, Isa. vi. 9, 10. Or, 3. Both security and secrecy, signifying that it should certainly be fulfilled, yet withal kept secret from the unbelieving Jews. For why may not these two be joined in the exposition of this text, as they were in the event? By God's disciples he means those who were taught of God, as it is expressed, Isa. liv. 13, where this very word is used; or, every one that hath heard and learned of the Father, and therefore cometh unto Christ, as it is explained, John vi. 45.

17 And I will wait upon the LORD, that [x] hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I [y] will look for him.

y Hab. 2. 3. Luke 2. 25, 38.

And, or, as this particle is rendered Jer. ii. 32, 35, and elsewhere, yet, notwithstanding this dreadful prophecy concerning the unbelief and rejection of Israel, I will wait upon the Lord; I will refer myself and this matter unto God, casting my care upon him, and expecting the accomplishment of his promise in sending the Messiah, and in conferring upon me and all believing Israelites all his mercies and blessings, to be procured by and through his blood and merits. That hideth his face; that now doth, and threateneth that he will hereafter, withdraw his favour and blessing, as this phrase signifies, Psal. x. 1; xxvii. 9, and oft elsewhere. From the house of Jacob; from the family or people of Israel. I will look for him with an eye of faith and expectation, till his time cometh.

18 [z] Behold, I and the children whom the LORD hath given me [a] are for signs and for wonders in Israel from the LORD of hosts, which dwelleth in mount Zion.

z Heb. 2. 13.
a Ps. 71. 7. Zech. 3. 8.

Behold; it is worthy of your observation and admiration. These words are literally spoken by Isaiah concerning himself, but withal mystically concerning Christ, of whom he speaks more frequently and fully than any other prophet, and of whom he was an evident type; and therefore they are fitly applied to Christ, Heb. ii. 13. Children; either, 1. His natural children, whose very names were prophetical, and signs of future events, chap. vii. 3; viii. 3, 4; or, 2. His spiritual children, whom he had either begotten or brought up by his ministry. For the prophets were called fathers not only with respect to the young prophets, who were commonly called the sons of the prophets, but also in relation to others, as 2 Kings ii. 12; xiii. 14. And this sense seems more probable than the former, because it agrees best, 1. With the following words, which seem to be too lofty and emphatical to be used concerning his natural children; for their prophetical names, which, if they were signs, could not properly be called wonders. 2. With the context and scope of the place, which is to set forth the incredulity of the Israelites, and their contempt and rejection of Christ, and of all his faithful messengers, both the prophets, who were sent as harbingers before his coming, and the apostles, who were witnesses of his coming. 3. With Heb. ii. 13, where they are expounded of spiritual children. Are for signs and for wonders in Israel; are a gazingstock to and admired by them, for our folly in believing God's promises. For so the believing Jews now were to Ahaz and the generality of the people, who thought it their wisdom and interest to procure aid from Assyria, and esteemed those fools who, upon pretence of relying upon God, would neglect so great an advantage. And so the prophet foretells that they should be when the Messiah did come; which is the mystical, as the other is the literal sense; and so both of them may be meant in this place. In Israel; even amongst the Israelites, who have been taught and do profess better things. From the Lord of hosts; which come to pass by the wise counsel and providence of God, in which I willingly acquiesce. Which dwelleth in Mount Zion; where the temple now was, and where the Messiah was to set up his kingdom.

19 ¶ And when they shall say unto you, [b] Seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards [c] that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living [d] to the dead?

b 1 Sam. 28. 8. ch. 19. 3.
c ch. 29. 4.
d Ps. 106. 28.

When they, the Israelites, to whom I and my children are signs and wonders, who are fallen from God, and his true religion and worship, into superstition and idolatry, and will endeavour to seduce you into the same impiety, shall say unto you, my children, whom the prophet here arms against the common temptation. Seek unto them for advice and help, and seek no more to the prophets, who have hitherto deluded you with vain words. This was the counsel of the ungodly and unbelieving Jews. Wizards; of whom see Lev. xix. 31; xx. 27; Deut. xviii. 11. That peep, and that mutter; that speak with a puling and low voice, as these two words signify; which they affected to do, speaking rather inwardly in their bellies, than outwardly and audibly with their mouths and voice, as the title of ventriloqui, commonly given to them, signifies. Should not a people seek unto their God? this answer the prophet puts into their mouths, to the foregoing counsel. Doth not every nation, in cases of difficulty or distress, seek to their own gods for relief? Much more should we do so, that have the only true God for our God. For the living to the dead; shall they seek (which words are easily understood out of the foregoing clause) for the living, &c.? That living men should inquire of the living God is proper and reasonable; but it is highly absurd for them to forsake him, and to seek to dead idols, either to the images, or to the spirits of dead men, which are supposed to dwell and speak in them.

20 [e] To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because [f] there is †no light in them.

e Luke 16. 29.
f Mic. 3. 6.

To the law and to the testimony; let this dispute between you and them be determined by God's word, which is here and in many other places called the law, to signify their obligation to believe and obey it; and the testimony, because it is a witness between God and man of God's mind and will, and of man's duty; and so these two titles contain two arguments against these idolatrous practices. If they; your antagonists, that seek to pervert you, ver. 19. It is because there is no light in them; this proceeds from the darkness of their minds, because they are blind, and will not see, and God hath shut their eyes that they cannot see. But these words are by divers learned interpreters understood not as a declaration of their ignorance, but a commination and prediction of their misery, light being most commonly used in Scripture for comfort and happiness, and darkness for sorrows and calamities. And this sense seems to be much favoured by the following passages. And then the words may be thus rendered, assuredly (for the Hebrew particle asher is frequently used as a note of asseveration, as 1 Sam. xv. 20; Psal. x. 6; xcv. 11, &c., as hath been more than once observed before) no light or morning light shall be (for that may as well be understood as is) to them; a night of misery shall come upon them, and they shall never have a morning of deliverance from it; they shall be swallowed up in endless calamities.

21 And they shall pass through it, hardly bestead and hungry: and it shall come to pass, that when they shall be hungry, they shall fret themselves, and [g] curse their king and their God, and look upward.

g Rev. 16. 11.

And they, the idolatrous and apostatical Israelites, shall pass through it, or, in it, to wit, their own land, which is easily understood out of the context, and from the phrase itself; the pronoun relative being put without an antecedent, as it is in other places, which have been formerly noted. They shall either pass through it into captivity, or wander hither and thither in it, like distracted men, not knowing whither to go, nor what to do; whereas if they had not forsaken God, they might have had a quiet and settled abode in it. Hardly bestead; sorely distressed, as this word is used, Gen. xxxv. 16; Job xxx. 25; and hungry; destitute of food, and of all necessaries, which are oft signified by food. Curse their king; either because he doth not relieve them, or because by his foolish counsels and courses he brought them into these miseries. Their God; either, 1. The true God; or rather, 2. Their idols, to whom they trusted, and whom they now find too late unable to help them. Look upward to heaven for help, as men of all nations and religions in great calamities use to do.

22 And [h]they shall look unto the earth; and behold trouble and darkness, [i]dimness of anguish; and they shall be driven to darkness.

They shall look unto the earth; finding no help from heaven, they turn their eyes downward, looking hither and thither for comfort. Trouble and darkness, &c.; many words expressing the same thing are put together, to signify the variety, and extremity, and continuance of their miseries.

CHAP. IX.

Joy in the midst of affliction, 1—5. The birth, person, office, and kingdom of Christ, 6, 7. Judgments for their pride, 8—12; for their impenitency and hypocrisy, 13—21.

cir. 940. a ch. 8. 22. b 2 Kings 15. 29. 2 Chr. 16. 4. c Lev. 26. 24. 2 Kings 17. 5, 6. 1 Chro. 5. 26. cir. 771. cir. 740. ‖ Or, populous.

NEVERTHELESS [a]the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation, when at the [b]first he lightly afflicted the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali, and [c]afterward did more grievously afflict her by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, in Galilee ‖of the nations.

The dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation: the words thus rendered contain a mitigation of the foregoing threatening; and so the sense of the verse may be this, The calamity of this land and its inhabitants shall be great, yet not such as that which was brought upon the kingdom of the ten tribes by the king of Assyria, who at first indeed dealt more gently with them, but afterwards quite rooted them out, and carried them away into a dreadful captivity, from whence they were not to return, no, not when the Messiah came into the world; for after this darkness, of which I have now spoken, there shall come a glorious light, as it follows in the next verse. The Dutch interpreters take it in the same sense, and render the words thus, But the land that was distressed shall not be utterly darkened. To the same purpose they may be thus rendered, according to the Hebrew, But darkness shall not be (i. e. shall not abide or continue; for to be is sometimes put for to abide or continue to be, as 1 Sam. xii. 14; Prov. xxiii. 5; Matt. xvii. 4; Heb. viii. 4) unto her, (to wit, the land, which by the consent of interpreters is understood here, as it was chap. viii. 21,) to whom this distress is or shall be. She shall be distressed and darkened, as I said before, chap. viii. 22, but not irrecoverably, nor for ever. Some understand the words to be an aggravation of the darkness or misery threatened chap. viii. 22, rendering the words thus, for the dimness shall not be, &c. And so the sense is, This shall not be so slight an affliction as that which befell them by Pul, 2 Kings xv. 19, nor as that which succeeded it by Tiglath-pileser, who, at the desire of Ahaz, did about this time make another invasion into the land of Israel, 2 Kings xv. 29, and was a heavier stroke than the former; but this shall be far heavier than either of them. But the former sense seems better to agree, both with the following verses, and with Matt. iv. 14—16, where these words are expounded as a promise, and said to be fulfilled by Christ's preaching the gospel in these parts. At the first; in the first invasion which the king of Assyria made upon Israel. He, to wit, God, who is oft understood in such cases, and who is here supposed to be the author or inflicter of this judgment. Or it is an impersonal speech, he afflicted for was afflicted, than which nothing is more common in the Hebrew language. Lightly afflicted; either, 1. By Pul; or rather, 2. By Tiglath-pileser, who at this time invaded and subdued these parts, as it is expressed, 2 Kings xv. 29; the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali: these parts are particularly mentioned, because this storm fell most heavily upon them; but under them the other parts of the land are understood by a common figure called synecdoche. Did more grievously afflict her; either, 1. By Tiglath-pileser; or rather, 2. By Shalmaneser, who took Samaria, and carried Israel into captivity, 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6; of which calamity, though yet to come, the prophet speaks as if it were past, as the manner of the prophet is. By the way of the sea; in that part of the land which bordereth upon the sea, to wit, the lake of Gennesaret, which is very commonly called a sea, as Matt. iv. 18; John xxi. 1, &c., and upon which the portions of Zebulun and Naphtali bordered. Beyond Jordan; or, on this side Jordan; for this preposition is used both ways, and this land might be said to be either beyond or on this side Jordan, in divers respects. Galilee of the nations, or Galilee of the Gentiles, to wit, the Upper Galilee, so called because it bordered upon the Gentiles. But this last clause, and the two foregoing clauses, are otherwise rendered and interpreted by divers learned men, as a prophecy concerning the light of the gospel that should shine in those parts: As at the first time (to wit, in the former ages of the Israelitish church and commonwealth) he made the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali vile or contemptible; (as he might be said to have done, partly, by putting those people at so great a distance from his sanctuary; partly, by exposing them to some calamities which other tribes escaped; and partly, by denying them those honours and privileges which he afforded to other tribes, of which see John vii. 52, Out of Galilee ariseth no prophet; and John i. 46, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? which was an eminent city of Galilee;) so in the latter or last time (to wit, in the days of the Messiah, or of the gospel, which are frequently so called in the Scriptures both of the Old and New Testament) he made it (i. e. he will make it, for the prophet speaks of things to come as past, as he doth most commonly in this prophecy) glorious (to wit, by Christ's first preaching the gospel in those parts) in or towards the way of the sea, (to wit, of Galilee or Gennesaret,) beyond or on this side Jordan, in Galilee of the Gentiles: which interpretation I thought fit to propose, as deserving further consideration.

d Matt. 4. 16. Eph. 5. 8, 14.

2 [d]The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined.

The people; the people of God, Israel and Judah, and especially those of them mentioned in the foregoing verse. Walked; in Matt. iv. 16, it is sat. It notes not their gesture, but their state or condition, they lived or abode. Only walking in darkness is more perilous than sitting. Darkness: the expression is general, and so may well comprehend both the darkness of calamity, and the darkness of ignorance, and idolatry, and profaneness, in which those parts were eminently involved, by reason of their great distance from God's sanctuary, and by their frequent converse with the Gentiles, who bordered upon them, and of which this place is expounded, Matt. iv. Have seen, i. e. shall see, at the coming of the Messiah. The land of the shadow of death; which notes both extreme, and dangerous, or deadly darkness.

3 Thou hast multiplied the nation, and ‖not increased the joy: they joy before thee according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice [e]when they divide the spoil.

Thou hast multiplied the nation; thou hast made good thy promise to Abraham concerning the multiplication of his seed, Gen. xv. 5; xxii. 17, by adding his spiritual seed unto the carnal, by gathering in the Gentiles to the Jews, and making them both one people in Christ, John x. 16; Eph. ii. 14, &c. For in Scripture account the believing Gentiles are the seed of Abraham as well as the Jews; of which see Gal. iii. 7—9. Or, thou hast magnified the nation; honoured them with peculiar privileges above all other nations, and especially with this transcendent privilege, that the Messiah and Saviour of the world should be born of them, and live among them; of which he speaks more fully ver. 6, 7. And not increased the joy; or, yet not increased their joy; which might very truly and fitly be said of the Jewish nation upon this occasion, partly because they did not rejoice in the conversion of the Gentiles, as they should have done, but murmured, and grieved, and stumbled at it; and partly because, through their perverseness and unbelief, that would be unto them an occasion of their utter ruin, the conversion of the Gentiles being attended with the rejection of the Jews. But because this translation seems not to agree with the following words, which ascribe great joy to them, some render the words otherwise; either thus, and wilt thou not increase their joy? to which question the next words give an affirmative answer. So the Hebrew particle lo is put interrogatively for halo, as it is in many other places, which I have formerly observed. Or thus, and hast increased to it, or him, or them (to that nation) their joy. For though the Hebrew lo be written like an adverb, yet it may be read like a pronoun, as it is both by Jewish and Christian interpreters acknowledged to be in many places; of which see more in my Latin Synopsis. They joy before thee; in thy presence, and in the place of thy worship; not with a carnal and worldly, but with a spiritual and religious joy, giving thee the praise and glory of all thy favours afforded to them. According to the joy in harvest; when men receive with great joy that for which they have laboured much and long waited. See Psal. cxxvi. 5, 6. When they divide the spoil; when, after a bloody fight, and a glorious victory, they come to take the spoil.

4 ‖ For thou hast broken the yoke of his burden, and [f]the staff of his shoulder, the rod of his oppressor, as in the day of [g]Midian.

Thou hast broken: this notes the matter and occasion of the foregoing joy. The yoke of his burden; his burdensome and heavy yoke, as the throne of holiness is put for the holy throne, Psal. xlvii. 8. The staff of his shoulder; either the staff wherewith his shoulders were smitten, or the staff or staves by which he was forced to carry burdens upon his shoulders. The rod, wherewith he beat him. Or, the sceptre; the power and tyranny which he exercised over him. Of his oppressor; of all his oppressors, but especially of sin and of the devil. As in the day of Midian; when God destroyed the Midianites in so admirable a manner, and by such unlikely and contemptible means, by three hundred men, and they not fighting, but only holding lamps in their hands, and sounding their trumpets; which was an eminent type of Christ's conquering the devil, and all his enemies, by dying upon the cross, and by the preaching of a few unlearned and despicable persons, &c.

5 ‖ For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood; [h]‖ but this shall be with burning and † fuel of fire.

With confused noise; with the triumphant exclamations of the conqueror, and the bitter lamentations of the conquered, and the differing cries of the same persons, sometimes conquering, and sometimes conquered. And garments rolled in blood; with great difficulty and slaughter. But this shall be with burning and fuel of fire; but this victory which God's people shall have over all their enemies, shall be more easy to them, and more terrible to their adversaries, whom God will suddenly and utterly consume, as it were by fire.

6 [i]For unto us a child is born, unto us a [k]son is given: and [l]the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called [m]Wonderful, Counsellor, [n]The mighty God, The everlasting Father, [o]The Prince of Peace.

Having spoken of the glorious light, and joy, and victory of God's people, he now proceeds to show the ground of it, and by what person these things are procured. Unto us; unto us Jews, of whom Christ was born, and to whom he was primarily sent, Matt. xv. 24, for our use and benefit. A Child; the Messiah, by the consent of interpreters, not only Christian, but Jewish; for so the ancient Hebrew doctors understood the place, and particularly the Chaldee paraphrast; although the later Jews, out of opposition to Christ, wrest it to Hezekiah; which extravagant conceit, as it hath no foundation at all in this or any other text of Scripture, and therefore may be rejected without any further reason, so it is fully confuted by the following titles, which are such as cannot without blasphemy and nonsense be ascribed to Hezekiah, nor indeed to any mere mortal man, as we shall see. But all the following particulars do so truly and exactly agree to Christ, that they cannot without great violence be alienated from him, or ascribed to any other. Is born, for shall be born, as the prophets generally speak. A Son; so he determines the sex of the child. Or, the Son, to wit, of the virgin, of whom I spake before, chap. vii. 14. Is given; is freely and graciously given to us by God. Other children also are said to be given by God, Gen. xxx. 6; xlviii. 9, but this in a peculiar manner, and therefore he is called the gift of God, John iv. 10. The government, to wit, of Israel, or of God's people, to whom he is given, shall be upon his shoulder, i. e. upon him, or in his hands. He mentions shoulders, because great burdens are commonly laid upon men's shoulders; and as all government, if it be rightly managed, so this especially, is a very heavy burden, requiring extraordinary care, and diligence, and self-denial. Possibly here may be also an allusion to the ancient custom of carrying the ensigns of government before the magistrate upon the shoulders of their officers; or to the cross of Christ, which was laid upon his shoulders, John xix. 17, which also was the way to his kingdom or government, Luke xxiv. 26. His name shall be called; either, 1. He shall be called; for names are oft put for persons, as Acts i. 15; Rev. iii. 4; xi. 13. Or, 2. His name shall be; for to be called in Scripture is oft put for to be, as I have noted before on chap. i. 26, and oft elsewhere. But this is not to be taken for a description of his proper name, by which he should be commonly called, but of his glorious nature and qualities. See my notes on Isa. vii. 14. Wonderful, Counsellor: these words may be taken either, 1. Severally, as they are in our translation, and by many others. This the Jews apply to Hezekiah, who, as they say, is called wonderful, because of the miracle which God wrought for him, 2 Kings xx. 2, &c.; and counsellor, because he took counsel with his princes about God's worship, and the defence of the city, 2 Chron. xxix. 4, &c., and gave good counsel to others; which ridiculous account is sufficient to overthrow that exposition. But they agree most eminently to the Lord Christ, who is truly wonderful, in his person, and natures, and words, and works, being made up of wonders, in whom there was nothing which was not wonderful; who also may well be called Counsellor, because he knew the whole counsel of God, and (so far as it was necessary) revealed it to us, and is the great Counsellor of his church and people in all their doubts and difficulties. Or, 2. Jointly, wonderful Counsellor; which may seem best to agree both with the following titles, each of which is made up of two words, and with Isa. xxviii. 29, where God is called wonderful in counsel, and makes the title more full and emphatical. To call Christ simply a Counsellor, may seem too mean a character, being common to many others with him; but to say he is a wonderful Counsellor, is a singular commendation. And so Christ is, because he hath been the Counsellor of his church in all ages, and the author and giver of all those excellent counsels delivered not only by the apostles, but also by the prophets, as is evident from 1 Pet. i. 10, 11, and hath gathered, and enlarged, and preserved his church by admirable counsels and methods of his providence, and, in a word, hath in him all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, Col. ii. 3. The mighty God: this title can agree to no man but Christ, who was God as well as man, to whom the title of God or Jehovah is given, both in the Old and New Testament, as Jer. xxiii. 6; John i. 1; Rom. ix. 5, and in many other places. And it is a most true observation, that this Hebrew word El is never used in the singular number, of any creature, but only of the Almighty God, as is evident by perusing all the texts where this word is used. And although the title of Elohim, which is of the plural number, be twice or thrice given to some men, yet there is constantly added some diminishing expression to it, as when they are said to be afraid, Job xli. 25, and to die, Psal. xlix. 10; whereas here he adds the epithet of mighty, which is ascribed to the great God, Deut. x. 17, and elsewhere. The everlasting Father, Heb. the Father of eternity. Having called him a Child, and a Son in respect of his human nature, lest this should be misinterpreted to his disparagement, he adds that he is a Father also, even the God and Father of all things; the work of creation being common and commonly ascribed to each of the persons of the blessed Trinity, the Maker and Upholder of all creatures, as he is said to be, John i. 3; Heb. i. 3, and the Father of all believers, who are called his children, Heb. ii. 13, and the Father of eternity; either, 1. The first author (such persons being called fathers, as Gen. iv. 20, and elsewhere) of eternal salvation, as he is called, Heb. v. 9. Or, 2. As we render it, the everlasting Father, who, though as man he was then unborn, yet was and is from everlasting to everlasting. They who apply this to Hezekiah render it, the father of an age, and expound this of his long life and numerous posterity; which I the rather mention, to show what absurd shifts they are forced to use who interpret this text of any other but Christ. For he did not live very long, nor had he, that we read of, more than one son, Manasseh. And if both these things had been true of him, they were more eminently true of many other men. Besides, this Hebrew word being used of God, as here it is of him who was now called the mighty God, constantly signifies eternity, as Isa. xxvi. 4; lvii. 15, &c. The Prince of Peace: this title doth not fully agree to Hezekiah, whose reign was not free from wars, as we see, 2 Kings xviii.; but it agrees exactly to Christ, who is called our peace, Micah v. 5; Eph. ii. 14, and is the only purchaser and procurer of peace between God and men, Isa. liii. 5, and of peace between men and men, Jews and Gentiles, Eph. ii. 15, and of the peace of our own consciences, and leaves peace as his legacy to his disciples, John xiv. 27; xvi. 33.

q 2 Kings 19. 31. ch. 37. 32. forth even for ever. The [q] zeal of the LORD of hosts will perform this.

Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end; his peaceable and happy government shall be enlarged without end; either without end of duration, for ever; but that is expressed in a following clause of this verse: or without end of limitation, or without bounds. It shall not be confined to a narrow spot of ground, the land of Canaan, but shall be extended far and wide to all the ends of the earth. The throne of David; which was promised to David, and to his seed for ever. With judgment and with justice; not with oppression and tyranny, by which other kingdoms are commonly managed, but by the administration of justice. From henceforth even for ever; from the beginning of it unto all eternity. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this; this great work, which surpasseth all the power and skill of men, shall be brought to pass by Almighty God, out of that fervent affection which he hath to his own name and glory, and to the honour of his dearly beloved Son, and unto his church and people.

cir. 738. 8 ¶ The LORD sent a word into Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel.

Sent a word; a prophetical and threatening message by me; for now the prophet, having inserted some consolatory passages for the support of God's faithful people, returns to his former work of commination against the rebellious Israelites. It lighted, Heb. it fell, i. e. it shall fall, in the prophetical style. It shall certainly be accomplished. Israel; the same with Jacob in the former clause, the posterity of Jacob or Israel.

9 And all the people shall know, even Ephraim and the inhabitant of Samaria, that say in the pride and stoutness of heart, Shall know, to wit, by experience; they shall know whether my word be true or false; they shall feel the effects of it. Even Ephraim; the people of the ten tribes, and particularly Ephraim, the strongest and proudest of them all. The inhabitant of Samaria; the strongest place, and the seat of the king and court, who were most secure and presumptuous. That say within themselves, and one to another. They purpose and boast of it.

10 The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones: the sycomores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars.

The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones. It is true, we have received some damages from our enemies; but Rezin and the Syrians being now our friends and confederates, we doubt not we shall quickly repair them with great glory and advantage. Sycomores; wild fig trees, a contemptible sort of trees, if compared with cedars, 1 Kings x. 27. We will change them into cedars; putting cedars into our buildings instead of sycomores. See Jer. xxii. 13, 15.

11 Therefore the LORD shall set up the adversaries of Rezin against him, and † Heb. mingle. † join his enemies together;

Therefore; to chastise your pride, and defeat your hopes and resolutions. Set up, Heb. exalt; advance their power, and give them success against him. The adversaries of Rezin; the Assyrians, who, presently after this prophecy, fought and prevailed against him, 2 Kings xvi. 7. He mentions Rezin, partly because he was confederate with Ephraim, and so his enemies were their enemies also, and partly because the Israelites trusted to his powerful assistance. Against him; either, 1. Against Rezin last mentioned; or rather, 2. Against Ephraim or Israel, who may easily be understood either from the foregoing or following verse; for against them this prophecy is directed, and of them he speaks both in the next clause of this verse, and in the next verse; and it seems reasonable that him in this clause, and his in the next clause, should be understood of the same persons. Join, Heb. mingle, i. e. unite them so that they shall agree together to fight against Israel, and shall invade him from several quarters. His; not Rezin's, but Ephraim's, as appears from the next verse, which is added to explain this clause.

12 The Syrians before, and the Philistines behind; and they shall devour Israel † with open mouth. [r] For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still. † Heb. with whole mouth. r ch. 5. 25. & 10. 4. Jer. 4. 8.

The Syrians; for although Rezin king of Syria was destroyed, yet the body of the nation survived, and submitted themselves to the king of Assyria, and served under him in his wars, and upon his command invaded Israel afterwards. Before, Heb. on the east; for Syria stood eastward from Israel. The Philistines behind; on the western side of the land of Israel. With open mouth; like wild and furious beasts, with great greediness and cruelty. His hand is stretched out still; his justice is not fully satisfied, but he will yet take further vengeance upon them.

13 ¶ For [s] the people turneth not unto him that smiteth them, neither do they seek the LORD of hosts. s Jer. 5. 3. Hos. 7. 10.

Turneth not from their wicked courses unto God by true repentance. Neither do they seek the Lord of hosts; they do not study and endeavour to procure his favour by sincere and fervent supplication, and by removing the causes of his just displeasure.

14 Therefore the LORD will cut off from Israel head and tail, branch and rush, [t] in one day. t ch. 10. 17. Rev. 18. 8.

Head and tail; high and low, honourable and contemptible, as the next verse explains it. Branch; the goodly branches of tall and strong trees, the mighty and noble. Rush; the bulrush, the weakest and meanest persons. In one day; all together, one as well as another, without any distinction.

15 The ancient and honourable, he is the head; and the prophet that teacheth lies, he is the tail.

He is, i. e. signifies, as that word is commonly used in the Hebrew tongue, as Gen. xli. 26, 27, and every where. The prophet that teacheth lies; whose destruction he mentions, not as if it were a punishment to them to be deprived of such persons, but partly to show the extent of the calamity, that it should reach all sorts of persons; and partly to beat down their vain presumptions of peace and prosperity, by showing that those false prophets, which had fed their vain hopes, should perish, and all their false prophecies of peace with them. He is the tail; these I mean by the tail, as being in truth the basest part of the whole body of the people.

u ch. 3. 12. ‖ Or, they that call them blessed. ‖ Or, they that are called blessed of them. † Heb. swallowed up.

16 For [u] ‖ the leaders of this people cause them to err; and ‖ they that are led of them are † destroyed.

The leaders; their governors, both civil and ecclesiastical, and especially the latter, their teachers, even the false prophets last mentioned. Or, they that bless or praise them, to wit, the false prophets, that flatter them in their wicked ways, with hopes and promises of peace, as their manner was, Jer. vi. 14; xxviii. 9. Both ways the sense is the same. Cause them to err; either compelling them by power, or deceiving them by false doctrines and evil counsels and persuasions. Are destroyed; shall certainly perish; nor will it excuse them that they followed the counsel and conduct of their leaders.

Shall have no joy in their young men; shall not rejoice over them to do them good, as he doth to his people, Isa. lxii. 5; Zeph. iii. 17; will not have mercy or pity on them, as the next clause explains it. but will abhor and utterly destroy them; for more is here intended than is expressed, as Prov. xvii. 21. Neither shall have mercy on their fatherless and widows, who are the special objects of his care and pity, Deut. xvi. 11, 14; xxiv. 19, 20, and much less upon others. Every one; not precisely, for there were seven thousand elect persons among them, when they seemed to Elijah to be universally corrupt, 1 Kings xix. 18; but the body or generality of the people. Is an hypocrite; for though they professed to worship and serve the true God, yet indeed they had forsaken him. Or, a profane person, as this word is rendered, Jer. xxiii. 15, as also Isa. xxxii. 6. An evil-doer; elsewhere called a worker of iniquity, as Job xxxi. 3; Psal. v. 5; Matt. vii. 23; one that gives up himself to a constant course and custom of sinning. Speaketh folly, i. e. wickedness, which is commonly called folly. They are not ashamed to proclaim their own wickedness, and the corruption of their hearts breaketh forth into ungodly speeches.

18 ¶ For wickedness [a] burneth as the fire: it shall devour the briers and thorns, and shall kindle in the thickets of the forest, and they shall mount up like the lifting up of smoke.

Wickedness burneth, i. e. shall burn you, as it follows, shall devour. Your iniquity shall be your ruin, as God threatens, Ezek. xviii. 30. The briers and thorns; either, 1. The wicked, who are oft compared to briers and thorns, as 2 Sam. xxiii. 6; Isa. xxvii. 4; or rather, 2. The low and mean persons; for these are opposed to the thickets of the forest, in the next clause. In the thickets of the forest; in the wood, where the trees are tall, and stand thick, having their boughs entangled together, which makes them more ready both to catch and to spread the fire. Like the lifting up of smoke; sending up smoke like a vast furnace. Heb. with height or pride of smoke, i. e. with aspiring smoke, which in that case riseth high, and spreadeth far, and filleth all the neighbouring air.

b ch. 8. 22. † Heb. meat. c Mic. 7. 2, 6.

19 Through the wrath of the LORD of hosts is [b] the land darkened, and the people shall be as the † fuel of the fire: [c] no man shall spare his brother.

Darkened, either with the smoke last mentioned, or with misery. Or, burnt up, as the LXX., Chaldee, and Arabic interpreters render it. No man shall spare his brother; they shall destroy one another, as they did in their civil wars, which were frequent among them. The name brother is oft largely used among the Hebrews, even of the remoter kindred, yea, of the fellow members of one city, or tribe, or nation.

20 And he shall † snatch on the right hand, and be hungry; and he shall eat on the left hand, [d] and they shall not be satisfied: [e] they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm:

Shall snatch; every one shall greedily and violently seize upon any provisions that come in his way; which implies, either great scarcity, or insatiable covetousness, as is manifest from the next clause. Shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm; either, 1. Properly; so it notes extreme famine; in which case men are apt to eat their own flesh. Compare Jer. xix. 9. Or, 2. Metaphorically, which seems best to suit with the following verse, the flesh of his brethren by nation and religion, which are as it were our own flesh, and are so called, Isa. lviii. 7; Zech. xi. 9; and consequently, the flesh of their arm is in a manner the flesh of our own arm. And one tribe was to another as an arm, i. e. a support or strength, which is called an arm, 2 Chron. xxxii. 8; Jer. xvii. 5, and elsewhere.

21 Manasseh, Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh: and they together shall be against Judah. [f] For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

Manasseh, Ephraim; though more near and dear to one another than any other tribe, being both sons of Joseph. They together shall be against Judah; which might be accomplished either before Shalmaneser took Samaria, or afterwards. For though the Israelites were miserably destroyed at that time, yet they were not utterly rooted out; of which see my notes on Isa. vii. 8.

WOE unto them that [a] decree unrighteous decrees, and ‖ that write grievousness which they have prescribed;

Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees! unto those magistrates who make unjust laws, and give unjust sentences. That write; either, 1. The scribes, who were assistant to the magistrates, and ofttimes did promote or execute such decrees; or, 2. The unjust magistrates, whose decrees were usually written. So the same thing is repeated in other words. Only this writing may note their obstinacy or perseverance in their unjust decrees, and their proceeding to the execution of them. Grievousness; grievous things, such unjust decrees as cause grief and vexation to their subjects.

2 To turn aside the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless!

From judgment; or, from their right, as it is in the next clause; or, from obtaining a just sentence, because they either denied or delayed to hear their causes, or gave a wrong sentence. From the poor, whom I have in a special manner committed to your care. Of my people; of Israelites, who profess themselves to be my people, and whom I did take into covenant with myself; and therefore this is an injury not only to them, but to me also.

b Job 31. 14. c Hos. 9. 7. Luke 19. 44.

3 And [b] what will ye do in [c] the day of visitation, and in the desolation which shall come from far? to whom will ye flee for help? and where will ye leave your glory?

What will ye do to save yourselves? In the day of visitation; when I shall come to visit you in wrath, as the next words limit it, and as this phrase is oft used; although sometimes it signifies a visitation in mercy, as Luke xix. 44, and elsewhere. From far; from the Assyrians. This he adds, because the Israelites, having weakened the Jews, and being in amity with the Syrians their next neighbours, were secure. To whom will ye flee for help? to the Syrians, as now you do? But they shall be destroyed together with you, as they were, 2 Kings xvi. Where will you leave, to be kept safe for your use, and to be restored to you when you call for it, your glory? either, 1. Your power and authority, which now you so wickedly abuse; or, 2. Your wealth, got by injustice, as glory is taken, Gen. xxxi. 1; Psal. xlix. 16, 17, &c.

4 Without me they shall bow down under the prisoners, and they shall fall under the slain. [d] For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

Without me they shall bow down: the words thus translated seem to contain an answer to the foregoing questions: In vain do you seek for a refuge and help from others; for without me, without my favour and help which you have forfeited, and do not seek to recover, and which I shall withdraw from you, or because you are without me, or forsaken by me, you shall bow down, notwithstanding all your succours. In the Hebrew here is a change of the person and number, which is very usual in prophetical writings. The LXX., and some others, join these words to the foregoing verse, and translate them thus, that you may not bow down: so the sense of the place is, What will you do to prevent your captivity or slaughter? And it is true, that the first word is elsewhere taken for a negative particle. But the former translation seems more genuine. Under the prisoners; or rather, in the place (as this particle signifies, and is rendered by interpreters, Gen. xxx. 2; l. 19; Exod. xvi. 29; Josh. v. 8, and elsewhere) of the prisoners, or among the prisoners; and so in the next clause, among or in the place of the slain.

O Assyrian: so it is God's call or invitation to him to take the charge, and set upon the work. Or, Woe to the Assyrian! because though he do my work, yet he doth it in a wicked manner, and for wicked ends, as we shall see. The rod of mine anger; the instrument of mine anger, wherewith I shall chastise my people. The staff in their hand is mine indignation; mine anger against my people puts the weapons of war into their hand, and gives them strength and success in this expedition.

6 I will send him against [f] an hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I [g] give him a charge, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and †to tread them down like the mire of the streets.

f ch. 19. 17. g Jer. 34. 22. † Heb. to lay them a treading.

I will send him, not by express commission, but by the secret yet powerful conduct of my providence, giving him both occasion and inclination to this expedition. Hypocritical: see on chap. ix. 17. The people of my wrath; the objects of my just wrath, devoted to destruction. Give him a charge, by putting this instinct into his mind. To tread them down like the mire of the streets; which signifies that he should easily conquer them, and utterly destroy them, as he did after this time.

7 [h] Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so; but it is in his heart to destroy and cut off nations not a few.

h Gen. 50. 20. Mic. 4. 12.

He meaneth not so; he doth not at all design the execution of my will, and the glory of my justice, in punishing mine enemies; but only to enlarge his own empire, and satisfy his own lusts; which is seasonably added, to justify God in his judgments threatened to the Assyrian, notwithstanding this service. To destroy and cut off nations not a few; to sacrifice multitudes of people to his own ambition and covetousness; which is abominable impiety.

8 [i] For he saith, Are not my princes altogether kings?

i 2 Kings 18. 24, 33, &c. & 19. 10, &c.

Equal for power, and wealth, and glory to the kings of other nations, though my subjects and servants.

9 Is not [k] Calno [l] as Carchemish? is not Hamath as Arpad? is not Samaria [m] as Damascus?

k Amos 6. 2. l 2 Chron. 35. 20. m 2 Kings 16. 9.

Is not Calno as Carchemish? have not I conquered one place as well as another, the stronger as well as the weaker? Have I not from time to time added new conquests to the old? Calno seems to be the same with Calneh, Gen. x. 10; Amos vi. 2, a great and strong city. Carchemish was a city upon Euphrates, of which 2 Chron. xxxv. 20; Jer. xlvi. 2. Is not Hamath as Arpad? Hamath was an eminent city of Syria, not far from Euphrates, called Hemath, or Hamath the great, Amos vi. 2; of which see 2 Kings xiv. 28; xvii. 24; Jer. xlix. 23. Arpad seems to have been an obscure place, not being elsewhere named. Is not that as soon conquered as this? Is not Samaria as Damascus? or, shall not Samaria be as Damascus? Shall I not take that as I have done this city? For although Damascus possibly was not yet taken by the Assyrian, yet the prophet speaks of it as actually taken, because these words are prophetically delivered, and supposed to be uttered by the king of Assyria at or about the siege of Samaria, when Damascus was taken.

10 As my hand hath found the kingdoms of the idols, and whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem and of Samaria;

Hath found, i. e. hath taken, as this word is used, Prov. i. 13, and oft elsewhere, the antecedent being put for the consequent, because what men find they commonly take to themselves. The kingdoms of the idols; which worshipped their own proper idols, and vainly imagined that they could protect them from power. He calls the gods of the several nations, not excepting Jerusalem, idols, by way of contempt, because none of them could deliver their people out of his hands, as he brags, Isa. xxxvii. 11, 12, and because he judged them to be but petty gods, far inferior to the sun, which was the great god of the Assyrians. Excel them, to wit, in reputation and strength; which blasphemy of his proceeded from his deep ignorance of the true God.

11 Shall I not, as I have done unto Samaria and her idols, so do to Jerusalem and her idols?

I shall certainly do it, and neither God nor man can hinder me.

12 Wherefore it shall come to pass, that when the Lord hath performed his whole work [n] upon mount Zion and on Jerusalem, [o] I will †punish the fruit † of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks.

n 2 Kings 19. 31. o Jer. 50. 18. † Heb. visit upon. † Heb. of the greatness of the heart.

Wherefore; because of this impudent blasphemy. Hath performed his whole work, of chastising his people so long and so much as he sees fit and necessary for them. Punish, Heb. visit, to wit, in wrath, as before on ver. 3. The glory of his high looks; his insolent words and carriages, proceeding from intolerable pride of heart.

13 [p] For he saith, By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I am prudent: and I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treasures, and I have put down the inhabitants ‖like a valiant man:

p Is. 37. 24. Ezek. 28. 4, &c. Dan. 4. 30. ‖ Or, like many people.

He saith, not only within himself, but before his courtiers and others. By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; I owe all my successes to my own power, and valour, and wise conduct, and to no other god or man. I have removed the bounds; I have invaded their lands, and added them to my own dominions, as this phrase is used, Prov. xxii. 28; Hos. v. 10. Their treasures, Heb. their prepared things, their gold and silver, and other precious things, which they had long been preparing and laying in store. I have put down; deprived of their former glory and power.

q Job 31. 25.

14 And [q]my hand hath found as a nest the riches of the people: and as one gathereth eggs that are left, have I gathered all the earth; and there was none that moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or peeped.

Hath found as a nest; as one findeth young birds in a nest, the nest being put for the birds in it, as Deut. xxxii. 11. No less easily do I both find and take them. Eggs that are left; which the dam hath left in her nest. This is more easy than the former; for the young birds might possibly make some faint resistance, or flutter away; but the eggs could do neither. All the earth; all the riches of the earth or world. An hyperbole not unusual in the mouths of such persons, upon such occasions. That moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or peeped; as birds do, which, when they see and cannot hinder the robbing of their nests, express their grief and anger by hovering about them, and by mournful cries.

15 Shall [r]the ax boast itself against him that heweth therewith? or shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it? ‖as if the rod should shake itself against them that lift it up, or as if the staff should lift up ‖itself, as if it were no wood.

‖ Or, as if a rod should shake them that lift it up.
‖ Or, that which is not wood.

Shall the axe boast itself against him that heweth therewith? How absurd and unreasonable a thing is it for thee, who art but an instrument in God's hand, and canst do nothing without his leave and help, to blaspheme thy Lord and Master, who hath as great a power over thee, to manage thee as he pleaseth, as a man hath over the axe wherewith he heweth! As if the rod should shake itself against them that lift it up; or, as it is rendered in the margin, and by other interpreters, as if a rod should shake (i. e. shall pretend to shake, or should boast that it would or could shake; which may easily be understood out of the foregoing words) them that lift it up. As if the staff should lift up itself, as if it were no wood; as if a staff should forget that it was wood, and should pretend or attempt to lift up itself either without or against the man that moveth it; which is absurd in the very supposition of it, and were much more unreasonable in the practice. Nor are thy boasts less ridiculous.

16 Therefore shall the Lord, the Lord of hosts, send among his [s]fat ones leanness; and under his glory he shall kindle a burning like the burning of a fire.

The Lord of hosts; the sovereign Lord and General of thine and all other armies. Send among his fat ones leanness; strip him, and all his great princes and commanders, of all their wealth, and might, and glory. He shall kindle a burning like the burning of a fire; he will destroy his numerous and victorious army, and that suddenly and irrecoverably, as the fire doth those combustible things which are cast into it; which was fulfilled 2 Kings xix. 25.

17 And the light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame: [t]and it shall burn and devour his thorns and his briers in one day;

The light of Israel, that God who is and will be a comfortable light to his people, shall be for a fire to the Assyrians, who shall have heat without light, as it is in hell. His thorns and briers; his vast army, which is no more able to resist God, than dry thorns and briers are to oppose the fire which is kindled among them.

u 2 Kings 19. 23.
† Heb. from the soul, and even to the flesh.

18 And shall consume the glory of his forest, and of [u]his fruitful field, †both soul and body: and they shall be as when a standardbearer fainteth.

Of his forest; of his great army, which may not unfitly be compared to a forest, either for the multitude of their spears, which, when lifted up together, resemble the trees of a wood or forest; or for the numbers of men, which stood as thick as trees do in a forest. Of his fruitful field; of his soldiers, which stood as thick as ears of corn do in a fruitful field. Heb. of his Carmel; wherein it is not improbably conjectured by our late most learned Mr. Gataker, that there is an allusion to that brag of the Assyrian, who threatens that he would go up to the sides of (Israel's) Lebanon, and to the forest of his Carmel, and there cut down the tall cedars thereof: which though it was not uttered by the Assyrian till some years after this time, yet was exactly foreknown to God, who understandeth men's thoughts, and much more their words, afar off, Psal. cxxxix. 2—4, and therefore might direct the prophet to use the same words, and to turn them against himself; Whereas thou threatenest to destroy Israel's Carmel, I will destroy thy Carmel. Both soul and body, i. e. totally, both inwardly and outwardly, both strength and life. Heb. from the soul to the flesh; which may possibly signify the manner of their death, which should be by a sudden stroke of the destroying angel upon their inward and vital parts, which was speedily followed by the consumption of their flesh. See Isa. xxxvii. 35, 36. They shall be, the state of that king, and of his great and valiant army, shall be, as when a standard-bearer fainteth; like that of an army when their standard-bearer either is slain, or rather flees away, which strikes a panic terror into the whole army, and puts them to flight.

19 And the rest of the trees of his forest shall be †few, that a child may write them.

The rest of the trees of his forest; the remainders of that mighty host. That a child may write them; that they may be easily numbered by the meanest accomptant. A child may be their muster-master.

x See 2 Kin. 16. 7. 2 Chr. 28. 20.

20 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob, [x]shall no more again stay upon him that smote them; but shall stay upon the LORD, the Holy One of Israel, in truth.

The remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob; such Jews as shall be preserved from that sweeping Assyrian scourge, by which great numbers both of Israel and Judah were destroyed, and from their succeeding calamities. For that this place looks beyond the deliverance from the Assyrian army, and unto the times of the New Testament, seems probable, 1. From the following verses, which belong to that time, as we shall see. 2. From the state of the Jewish nation, which, after that deliverance, continued to be very sad and corrupt, and averse from that reformation which Hezekiah and Josiah prosecuted with all their might; and therefore the body of that people had not yet learned this lesson of sincere trusting in God alone. 3. From St. Paul's explication and application of these words, Rom. ix. 27, of which more may be said when I come thither. And for the words in that day, which may seem to restrain this to the time of the Assyrian invasion, they are frequently used in the prophets of the times of the gospel, as Isa. ii. 11; iv. 2; xi. 10, &c. Shall no more again stay upon him that smote them; shall learn by this judgment and experience never to trust to the Assyrians for help, as Ahaz and his people now did. In truth; not only by profession, but sincerely.

21 [y]The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God.

The remnant; or, a remnant; or, but a remnant; or, a remnant only; which particles are oft understood, as hath been formerly and frequently observed, and may be here supplied from the following verses. Unto the mighty God; unto the Messiah, expressly called the mighty God, Isa. ix. 6.

z Rom. 9. 27.
a ch. 6. 13.
† Heb. in, or, among.
b ch. 28. 22.
‖ Or, in.

22 [z]For though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, [a]yet a remnant †of them shall return: [b]the consumption decreed shall overflow ‖with righteousness.

Israel; or, O Israel; to whom by an apostrophe he directeth his speech. A remnant; or, a remnant only, as before; for that this is a threatening in respect of some, as well as a promise in respect of others, is evident from the rest of this and from the following verse. The consumption decreed shall overflow; the destruction of the people of Israel was already decreed or determined (as it is in the next verse) by the fixed counsel of God, and therefore must needs be executed, and like a deluge overflow them. With righteousness, as this word is rendered, Rom. ix. 28; the preposition in or with being here understood, as it is every where. And this is added, to show, that although this judgment of God may seem very severe, yet it is most just, not only by the laws of strict and rigid justice, but even by the rules of equity and clemency, as this word oft signifies, inasmuch as he hath spared a considerable remnant of them, when he might have destroyed them utterly. And so this word is added as a reason why a remnant, and why but a remnant, should return, because God would both glorify his justice, and manifest his mercy. And in this mixed sense the apostle seems to expound this place, Rom. ix. 27, 28.

c ch. 28. 22. Dan. 9. 27. Rom. 9. 28.

23 [c]For the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined, in the midst of all the land.

Shall make a consumption, even determined; the same thing is repeated in other words, with some addition; God will execute his own decree concerning the destruction of Israel, which he is well able to do, because he is the Lord of hosts. In the midst of all the land; in all the parts of the land, not excepting Jerusalem, which was to be preserved in the Assyrian invasion, when almost all the other fenced cities of Judah should be taken; but should afterwards be taken and destroyed, as it was, first by the Babylonians, and then by the Romans.

24 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, O my people that dwellest

d ch. 37. 6.

in Zion, [d]be not afraid of the Assyrian: he shall smite thee with a rod, ‖ and shall lift up his staff against thee, after the manner of [e]Egypt.

‖ Or, but he shall lift up his staff for thee.

e Exod. 14.

Therefore: this is an inference, not from the words immediately foregoing, but from the whole prophecy. Seeing the Assyrian shall be destroyed, and a remnant of my people preserved and restored. In Zion; in Jerusalem, which is frequently called Zion, as Psal. xlviii. 12; lxxxvii. 2; Isa. i. 8, 27; xxxiii. 20, &c.; which he mentions, because this was the principal object of the Assyrians' design and rage, and there were the temple, and thrones of justice, and the king and his princes, and multitudes had fled thither from the Assyrian. He shall smite thee with a rod; he shall afflict thee, but not destroy thee. Compare 1 Kings xii. 11. After the manner of Egypt; as the Egyptians formerly did, and with the same ill success to themselves, and comfortable issue to you.

f ch. 54. 7. g Dan. 11. 36.

25 [f]For yet a very little while, [g]and the indignation shall cease, and mine anger in their destruction.

The indignation; mine anger, as it is explained in the next clause; either, 1. Towards my people; which shall weaken the Assyrian, whose great strength lay there; of which see above, ver. 5. Or, 2. Towards the Assyrian, with whom God was very angry, ver. 12, &c., yea, so angry, as not to be satisfied without their destruction, as it follows. Shall cease; as anger commonly doth, when vengeance is fully executed.

26 And the Lord of hosts shall stir up

h 2 Kings 19. 35. i Judg. 7. 25. ch. 9. 4. k Ex. 14. 26, 27.

[h]a scourge for him according to the slaughter of [i]Midian at the rock of Oreb: and [k]as his rod was upon the sea, so shall he lift it up after the manner of Egypt.

Shall stir up a scourge; shall send a destroying angel, Isa. xxxvii. 36. According to the slaughter of Midian; whom God slew suddenly, and unexpectedly, and in the night, as he did the Assyrians. At the rock of Oreb; upon which one of their chief princes was slain, and nigh unto which the Midianites were destroyed. Was upon the sea, to smite and divide it, and so to make way both for thy deliverance, and for the destruction of the Egyptians. After the manner of Egypt; as he did in Egypt, to bring his plagues upon that land and people.

27 And it shall come to pass in that day, that [l]his burden †shall be taken away from off thy shoulder, and his yoke from off thy neck, and the yoke shall be destroyed because of [m]the anointing.

l ch. 14. 25. † Heb. shall remove. m Ps. 105. 15. Dan. 9. 24. 1 John 2. 20.

His burden; the burden of the Assyrian; for so it was actively, because imposed by him; though passively it was Israel's burden, as being laid upon him. Because of the anointing; out of the respect which I bear to that holy unction which I have established amongst you. And so this may relate either, 1. To the body of the people, who were in some sort anointed, being made by God a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation, Exod. xix. 6; or, 2. To that sacred kingdom which God had, by his positive precept and solemn covenant, established in David and his posterity for ever. The Jews therefore, and some others, understand this of Hezekiah, to whom God had a singular respect, and upon whose prayers God gave this deliverance, as we read, Isa. xxxvii. 15, &c. Possibly it might be better understood of David, who is oft mentioned in Scripture by the name of God's anointed, as Psal. xx. 6; lxxxix. 20; cxxxii. 17, and elsewhere; and for whose sake God gave many deliverances to the succeeding kings and ages, as is expressly affirmed, 1 Kings xi. 32, 34; 2 Kings viii. 19. And, which is more considerable, God declareth that he would give this very deliverance from the Assyrian for David's sake, 2 Kings xix. 34; xx. 6. But the Messiah, I doubt not, is here principally intended, of whom David was but a type, and who was in a peculiar manner anointed above all his fellows, as is said, Psal. xlv. 7. For he is the foundation of all the promises, 2 Cor. i. 20, and of all the deliverances and mercies granted to God's people in all ages; whence this very prophet makes use of this great promise of the Messiah, as an assurance that God would make good his promises of particular deliverances from their present or approaching calamities, as Isa. vii. 14, &c.; ix. 4, &c. And therefore the prophet might well say, that God would grant this deliverance for Christ's sake; especially if it be considered, that this was the very reason why God had promised, and did so constantly perform, his mercy promised unto the tribe of Judah, and unto the house of David, until the coming of the Messiah, because the Messiah was to come of the tribe of Judah, and of the posterity of David, and was to succeed David in his throne and kingdom; and he was to be known by this character; and therefore this tribe, and house, and kingdom were to continue, and that in a visible manner, till Christ came.

28 He is come to Aiath, he is passed to Migron; at Michmash he hath laid up his carriages:

He is come to Aiath: here the prophet returns to his former discourse concerning the Assyrian invasion into Judah; which he describes, after the manner of the prophets, as a thing present, and sets down the several stages by which he marched towards Jerusalem. The places here named are most of them towns of Benjamin, and some of Judah, as appears from other scriptures; of which it is needless to say more in this place. He, to wit, Sennacherib, king of Assyria, is come in his way to Jerusalem. He hath laid up his carriages; leaving such things there as were less necessary, that so he might march with more expedition. Heb. he visited his vessels or instruments; which may be meant of his taking a survey of his army and artillery, to see that all things were ready for his enterprise.

He shall shake his hand, by way of commination. But withal he intimates that he should be able to do no more against it, and that there his proud waves should be stayed, as it is declared in the following verses, and in the history.

y See Amos 2. 9 33 Behold, the Lord, the LORD of hosts, shall lop the bough with terror: and y the high ones of stature shall be hewn down, and the haughty shall be humbled.

The bough; the top bough, Sennacherib; or, the boughs, his valiant soldiers or commanders of his army, which he compareth to a forest, ver. 18, 34. With terror; with a most terrible and amazing stroke by an angel.

‖ Or, mightily. 34 And he shall cut down the thickets of the forest with iron, and Lebanon shall fall ‖ by a mighty one.

With iron; or, as with iron, as the trees of the forest are cut down by instruments of iron. And Lebanon; or, his Lebanon, the pronoun being oft understood in the Hebrew text; the Assyrian army, which being before compared to a forest or wood, and being called his Carmel in the Hebrew text, ver. 18, may very fitly, upon the same ground, be called his Lebanon here; especially considering that the king of Assyria is called a cedar of Lebanon, Ezek. xxxi. 3. By a mighty one; by a mighty angel, Isa. xxxvii. 36.

CHAP. XI.

Christ, a Branch out of the root of Jesse, endued with the Spirit of the Lord, should set up a kingdom by the preaching of his word, 1—5. The members of his church should live in peace and unity, 6—9; and be victorious over their enemies; and to him should the Gentiles seek, 10—16.

a ch. 53. 2. Zech. 6. 12. Rev. 5. 5. b Acts 13. 23. ver. 10. c ch. 4. 2. Jer. 23. 5. AND a there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of b Jesse, and c a Branch shall grow out of his roots:

The prophet having despatched the Assyrian, and comforted God's people with the promise of their deliverance from that formidable enemy, now he proceeds further, and declares that God will do greater things than that for them, that he will give them their long-expected and much-desired Messiah, and by him will work wonders of mercy for them. For this is the manner of the prophets, to take the occasion of particular deliverances, to fix the people's minds upon their great and everlasting deliverance from all their enemies by the Messiah. And having said that the Assyrian yoke should be destroyed because of the anointing, chap. x. 27, he now more particularly explains who that anointed person was. A rod, or twig, called a Branch in the next clause. Parents are oft compared to roots or trees, and their children to branches. He speaks of the most eminent Branch, of that famous Son of a virgin, Isa. vii. 14, of that wonderful Child, Isa. ix. 6; not of Hezekiah, as some of the Jews and judaizing Christians conceit; but of the Messiah, as will evidently appear from the following description. The stem, or trunk; or rather, stump; for the word properly signifies a trunk cut off from the root; or, root, as the LXX. here render the word, and as it is explained in the next clause. By which he clearly implies that the Messiah should be born of the royal house of David, at that time when it was in a most forlorn and contemptible condition, like a tree cut down, and whereof nothing is left but a stump or root under ground; which really was the state of David's family when Christ was born, as is notoriously known, but was in a far better condition when Hezekiah was born. Of Jesse; he doth not say of David, but of Jesse, who was a private and mean person, 1 Sam. xviii. 18, 23; xx. 30, to intimate, that at the time of Christ's birth the royal family should be reduced to its primitive obscurity. A Branch shall grow: he speaks of one not yet born, and therefore not of Hezekiah, who was born divers years before his father Ahaz (in whose time this prophecy was delivered) was king, by comparing 2 Kings xvi. 2; xviii. 2; but of the Messiah. Out of his roots; out of one of his roots, i. e. branches, as this word root is sometimes used, by a very usual figure called a metonymy, as it is here below, ver. 10; Isa. liii. 2; Hos. xiv. 5.

d ch. 61. 1. Matt. 3. 16. John 1. 32, 33. & 3. 34. 2 d And the spirit of the LORD shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the LORD;

The Spirit of the Lord; the Holy Ghost, wherewith he was anointed, Acts x. 38, and by whom his mother was overshadowed, Luke i. 35. Shall rest upon him; not only come upon him at certain times, as he did upon the prophets now and then at his pleasure, but shall have its constant and settled abode in him; although the same phrase be sometimes used of other prophets in an inferior sense, as Numb. xi. 17; 2 Kings ii. 15. The Spirit of wisdom and understanding; which hath these perfections in itself, and confers them upon him. It is neither easy, nor at all necessary, exactly to distinguish these two gifts; it is sufficient that they are necessary qualifications for a governor, and for a teacher, both which offices were to meet in the Messiah; and it is evident that they signify a practical and perfect knowledge of all things necessary for the discharge of his trust, and for his own and people's good, and a sound judgment, to distinguish between things that differ. Of counsel and might; of prudence, to give good counsel; and of might and courage, to execute it; which are two necessary qualifications of a ruler. Of knowledge; of the perfect knowledge of the whole will and counsel of God, especially that which concerns the salvation of men, the prosecution whereof was his great work, as also of all secret and hidden things, yea, of the hearts of men, the knowledge whereof is ascribed to Christ, Matt. ix. 4; Rev. ii. 23. Of the fear of the Lord; not a fear of diffidence or horror, but of reverence; a care to please him, and lothness to offend him, which well became the Messiah towards his God and Father.

† Heb. scent, or, smell. 3 And shall make him of † quick understanding in the fear of the LORD: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears:

Shall make him of quick understanding, Heb. he shall make him smell, i. e. perceive, as that word is used, Judg. xvi. 9; Job xxxix. 25; understand or judge, as it is explained in the next clause. Or, his smelling shall be. Smelling is put for judging, because the sense of smelling, where it is quick and good, is more exact and sure in the judging of its proper objects, than the senses of seeing and hearing are. In the fear of the Lord; which is added, either, 1. As the object of his judging; he is most perspicacious and judicious in the things which concern the fear, i. e. the worship and service of God, which he was to order and establish in his church. Or rather, 2. As the rule and manner of his judging, as may be gathered from the opposite and following clause. So the sense is, He shall not judge rashly and partially, but considerately and justly, as the fear of God obligeth all judges to do. He shall not judge, of persons or causes. And judging seems to be here synecdochically put for absolving or giving sentence for a person, as it is used Psal. vii. 8, 11, and in many other places, because this is opposed to reproving in the next clause. After the sight of his eyes; according to outward appearance, as men must do, because they cannot search men's hearts, 1 Sam. xvi. 7, or with respect of persons, but with righteous judgment, which is opposed to judging by appearance, John vii. 24. Reprove, i. e. condemn or pass sentence against a person; for Christ is here supposed to be a Judge, and so he speaks of a judicial reproof. After the hearing of his ears, by false or uncertain rumours or suggestions, but shall thoroughly examine all causes, and search out the truth of things, and the very hearts of men.

e Ps. 72. 2, 4. Rev. 19. 11. ‖ Or, argue.

4 But e with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and ‖reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall f smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.

f Job 4. 9. Mal. 4. 6. 2 Thess. 2. 8. Rev. 1. 16. & 2. 16. & 19. 15.

Judge the poor; defend and deliver them, as judging is oft used, as Deut. xxxii. 36; Jer. v. 28; xxii. 16, &c. Or, judge for the poor; the prefix lamed being understood out of the next clause, as is usual in the Hebrew language. He mentions the poor, partly to signify the justice of this Judge, because human judges commonly neglect and oppress the poor; and partly to declare the nature of Christ's kingdom, and the quality of his subjects, who should, for the generality of them, be the poor and contemptible sort of men, Matt. xi. 5; James ii. 5. Reprove; or, as this word seems to be taken, ver. 3, condemn, to wit, their malicious and furious enemies. For the meek; on their behalf, or giving sentence for them. He calls them meek, whom before he called poor, partly to show his justice in defending them who are most exposed to the contempt and injuries of men; and partly to signify that his subjects should be poor in spirit as well as in the world, and not poor and proud, as many worldly men are. Smite, i. e. slay, as this word is used, Isa. xxxvii. 36, and very commonly, and as it is expounded in the next clause. The earth; the men of the earth, the wicked, as it is in the next branch of the verse; fitly called earth, either because of their earthly minds and conversations, as they are called the men of this world that have their portion here upon the earth, Psal. xvii. 14, or because the far greatest part of the inhabitants of the earth is wicked; the whole world lies in wickedness, 1 John v. 19; for which reason they are oft called the world, as John xvi. 20; xvii. 9, 25, &c. With the rod of his mouth; with his word, which is his sceptre, and the rod of his power, Psal. cx. 2, which is sharper than a sword, Heb. iv. 12; by the preaching whereof he subdued the world to himself, and will destroy his enemies, 2 Thess. ii. 8. This he adds, further to declare the nature of Christ's kingdom, that it is not of this world, and that his sceptre and arms are not carnal, but spiritual, as it is said, 2 Cor. x. 4. With the breath of his lips; with his word breathed out of his lips, whereby he explains what he meant by the foregoing rod. Shall he slay the wicked; either spiritually, by inflicting deadly plagues upon their souls; or properly, which he doth very frequently by his terrible judgments executed upon many of them, and will certainly do, and that fully and universally, at his coming to judgment.

g See Eph. 6. 14.

5 And g righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

Shall be the girdle of his loins; it shall adorn him, and be the glory of his government, as a girdle was used for ornament, Isa. iii. 24, and as an ensign of power, Job xii. 18; and it shall constantly cleave to him, in all his administrations, as a girdle cleaveth to a man's loins, which is the prophet's similitude, Jer. xiii. 11. The girdle of his reins; the same thing in other words.

h ch. 65. 25. Ezek. 34. 25. Hos. 2. 18.

6 h The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, &c.; the creatures shall be restored to that state of innocency in which they were before the fall of man. But this is not to be understood literally, which is a gross and vain conceit of some Jews; but spiritually and metaphorically, as is evident. And the sense of the metaphor is this, Men of fierce, and cruel, and ungovernable dispositions, shall be so transformed by the preaching of the gospel, and by the grace of Christ, that they shall become most humble, and gentle, and tractable, and shall no more vex and persecute those meek and poor ones mentioned ver. 4, but shall become such as they; of which we have instances in Saul being made a Paul, and in the rugged jailer, Acts xvi., and in innumerable others. But how can this be applied to Hezekiah with any colour? A little child shall lead them; they will submit their proud and rebellious wills to the conduct and command of the meanest persons that speak to them in Christ's name.

7 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

Shall feed together, as it follows, without any danger or fear. The lion shall eat straw, the grass and fruits of the earth, as they did at first, Gen. i. 29, 30, and shall not devour other living creatures, as now they do.

8 And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the ‖cockatrice' den. ‖ Or, adder's.

The asp; a most fierce and poisonous serpent, Deut. xxxii. 33; Job xx. 14, 16, which also will not be charmed by any art of man, Psal. lviii. 5. The cockatrice; a serpent of more than ordinary cunning and cruelty, Prov. xxiii. 32. The meaning is, They shall not fear to be either deceived or destroyed by those who formerly watched all opportunities to do it.

9 i They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for k the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea. i Job 5. 23. ch. 2. 4. & 35. 9. k Hab. 2. 14.

In my holy mountain; in Zion, in my church. Wherever the gospel comes and prevails, it will have this effect. The earth; metonymically put for the inhabitants of the earth; and as before it was used for the greater part, ver. 4, so here it is used for the better part of the world. Of the knowledge of the Lord; of saving and practical knowledge; whereby he intimates that all that savageness and malignity which is in wicked men towards true Christians proceeded from their deep ignorance, and particularly from ignorance of God; and withal, that a right knowledge of God will make a marvellous and thorough change in the dispositions and conversations of men. The sea; the channel of the sea, the thing contained being put for the thing containing, by a metonymy common in Scripture and all authors.

10 ¶ l And in that day m there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the n Gentiles seek: and o his rest shall be †glorious. l ch. 2. 11. m ver. 1. Rom. 15. 12. n Rom. 15. 10. o Heb. 4. 1, &c. †Heb. glory.

A root; a branch growing upon the root; of which see on ver. 1. Shall stand for an ensign; shall grow up into a great and high tree, shall become a visible and eminent ensign. Of the people; which not only the Jews, but all nations may discern, and to which they may and shall resort. To it shall the Gentiles seek; as the gospel shall be preached to the Gentiles, so they shall receive it, and believe in the Messiah. His rest; his resting-place, as this word frequently signifies, as Gen. viii. 9; xlix. 15; Psal. cxxxii. 8, 14; Isa. xxxiv. 14; Micah ii. 10; his temple or church, the place of his presence and abode. Shall be glorious; shall be filled with greater glory than the Jewish tabernacle and temple were; of which see on Hag. ii. 9; only this glory shall be spiritual, consisting in glorious ordinances, in the plentiful effusions of the excellent gifts, and graces, and comforts of the Holy Spirit.

11 And it shall come to pass p in that day, that the LORD shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, q from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. p ch. 2. 11. q Zech. 10. 10.

The second time: the first time, to which this word second relates, seems to be, either, 1. The deliverance out of Egypt, as most both Jewish and Christian interpreters understand it; and then this second deliverance must be that out of Babylon. Or, 2. The deliverance out of Babylon; and then this second deliverance must be in the days of the Messiah; which, with submission to better judgments, seems to me more probable, 1. Because that first deliverance is supposed to be, like the second, a deliverance of the remnant of this people from several countries, into which they were dispersed; whereas that out of Egypt was a deliverance not of a remnant, but of the whole nation, and that out of Egypt only. 2. Because this second deliverance was universal, extending to the generality of the outcasts and dispersed ones, both of Israel, or the ten tribes, and of Judah, or the two tribes, as is evident from ver. 12, 13; whereas that out of Babylon reached only to the two tribes, and to some few of the ten tribes which were mixed with them, as is acknowledged, both by Jews and Christians. 3. Because this second deliverance was given them in the days of the Messiah, and did accompany or follow the conversion of the Gentiles, as is evident from ver. 9, 10; whereas that out of Babylon was long before the coming of the Messiah, and the calling of the Gentiles. From Assyria, &c.; from all places, both far and near, into which either the ten tribes or the two tribes were carried captives; for the places of both their captivities are here named; of which it is needless to discourse particularly, because they are well known, and have been considered in former texts. Only Pathros was not named before; and that was a province in Egypt, which yet is sometimes distinguished from Egypt strictly so called. See on Jer. xliv. 1, 15; Ezek. xxix. 14; xxx. 14.

12 And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together [r] the dispersed of Judah from the four † corners of the earth.

† Heb. wings.

For the nations; all nations, Jews and Gentiles, who shall then embrace the true faith and the Messiah, as was said, ver. 10. The outcasts; that were driven and banished out of their own land into foreign parts, as the word implies. Of Israel; strictly so called, or of the ten tribes, as is manifest, both from their opposition to Judah in this verse, and from the mention of Ephraim in the next verse.

13 [a] The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim.

[a] Jer. 3. 18. Ezek. 37. 16, 17, 22. Hos. 1. 11.

Of Ephraim, i. e. of the ten tribes, frequently called by the name of Ephraim, as hath been already and frequently observed, between whom and Judah there were great emulations and contentions. Shall depart; of enemies they shall be made friends, and of wolves lambs, as was said before on ver. 6; they shall be united together in one church, under the Messiah, keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. The adversaries of Judah; not the body of Ephraim, for they are supposed to be reconciled, and they shall not be cut off, but live in love with Judah, as we see by the next clause; but those few of them which possibly may continue in their enmity against them, together with all the rest of their adversaries. Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim; not only all outward hostilities shall cease, but also their inward animosities.

14 But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the west; they shall spoil † them of the east together: [t] † they shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; † and the children of Ammon [u] shall obey them.

t Dan. 11. 41.
u ch. 60. 14.

Shall fly upon the shoulders; either it is a metaphor from birds and beasts of prey, which commonly fasten upon the shoulders of cattle; or from wrestlers, who endeavour to catch hold of their adversaries' shoulders, that they may throw them down. Or, shoulder is put for a side, as Numb. xxxiv. 11; Josh. xv. 8, 10, or for part or quarter of a country, as Deut. xxxiii. 12. They shall spoil them; they shall subdue them; which is to be understood of the spiritual victory which the Jewish Messiah shall obtain by his apostles and ministers over all nations, in bringing them to the obedience of his gospel. For it is the manner of the prophets to speak of the spiritual things of the gospel under such corporal representations.

15 And the LORD [x] shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, [y] and make men go over † dryshod.

Shall utterly destroy; shall not only divide it, as of old, but will quite dry it up, that it may be a highway, as it is explained in the next verse. The tongue of the Egyptian sea; the Red Sea, which may well be called the Egyptian sea, both because it borders upon Egypt, and because the Egyptians were drowned in it, which is called a tongue in the Hebrew text, Josh. xv. 2, 5, as having some resemblance with a tongue; for which reason the name of tongue hath been given by geographers to promontories of land which shoot forth into the sea, as this sea did shoot out of the main ocean into the land. Shake his hand; he alludes to Moses's shaking of his hand with the rod of God in it over the sea; over the river, to wit, of Egypt, Nilus, as appears both from the foregoing and from the following words. The seven streams; for which Nilus is famous in all authors, and by which it emptieth itself into the sea.

16 And [z] there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; [a] like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

[z] ch. 19. 23.
[a] Ex. 14. 29. ch. 51. 10. & 63. 12, 13.

From Assyria; as there was another highway from Egypt in the former verse. So the sense is, that all impediments shall be removed, and a way made for the return of God's Israel from all parts of the world. He mentions Assyria, because thither the ten tribes were carried, 2 Kings xvii. 23; whose case seemed to be most desperate.

CHAP. XII.

A thanksgiving of the faithful for their redemption.

AND [a] in that day thou shalt say, O LORD, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me.

[a] ch. 2. 11.

In that day; when this great work of the reduction of God's Israel, and of the conversion of the Gentiles, promised in the foregoing chapter, shall be fulfilled.

2 Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the LORD [b] JEHOVAH is my [c] strength and my song; he also is become my salvation.

[b] Ps. 83. 18.
[c] Ex. 15. 2. Ps. 118. 14.

God is my salvation; my salvation hath not been brought to pass by man, but by the almighty power of God.

3 Therefore with joy shall ye draw [d] water out of the wells of salvation.

[d] John 4. 10, 14. & 7. 37, 38.

Your thirsty and fainting souls shall be filled with Divine graces and comforts, which you may plentifully draw from God in the use of gospel ordinances, which was oft signified by water, both in the Old and in the New Testament. He seems to allude to the state of Israel in the wilderness, where when they had been tormented with thirst, they were greatly refreshed and delighted with those waters which God so graciously and wonderfully afforded them in that dry and barren land, Numb. xx. 11; xxi. 16—18.

4 And in that day shall ye say, [e] Praise the LORD, ‖ call upon his name, [f] declare his doings among the people, make mention that his [g] name is exalted.

CHAP. XIII.

God's armies, 1—5. The destruction of Babylon by the Persians and Medes: their great distress and anguish; and their utter desolation, 6—22.

cir. 712. a ch. 21. 1. & 47. 1. Jer. 50. & 51.

THE [a]burden of Babylon, which Isaiah the son of Amoz did see.

The burden: this title is commonly given to sad prophecies, which indeed are grievous burdens to them upon whom they are laid. See 2 Kings ix. 25; Jer. xxiii. 33, 36. Of Babylon; of the city and empire of Babylon by Cyrus, for their manifold and great sins, and in order to the deliverance of his people.

b ch. 5. 26. & 18. 3. Jer. 50. 2. c Jer. 51. 25. d ch. 10. 32.

2 [b]Lift ye up a banner [c]upon the high mountain, exalt the voice unto them, [d]shake the hand, that they may go into the gates of the nobles.

Lift ye up a banner, to gather soldiers together for this expedition. Upon the high mountain; whence it may be discerned at a considerable distance. Withal he seems to intimate that their enemies should come from the mountainous country of Media. Unto them; to the Medes, who are named below, ver. 17. Shake the hand; beckon to them with your hand, that they may come to this service. That they may go into the gates of the nobles; that they may go and fight against Babylon, and take it, and so enter into the palaces of the king, and of his princes, and spoil them at their pleasure; which the Medes and Persians did. The manner of expression implies how easily and expeditiously they did their work, that, like Cæsar, they might say they only came, and saw, and overcame.

3 I have commanded my sanctified ones, I have also called [e]my mighty ones for mine anger, even them that [f]rejoice in my highness.

e Joel 3. 11. f Ps. 149. 2, 5, 6.

My sanctified ones; the Medes and Persians, fitly so called, because they were solemnly designed and set apart by God for his own service, and for this holy work of executing his just vengeance upon them. My mighty ones; those whom I have made mighty for this work. In my highness; or, as others render it, in my glory, materially considered, to wit, in the doing of that work which tends much to the advancement of my glory, in destroying of the Babylonian empire. For otherwise the Medes had no regard to God nor to his glory, but only to their own carnal ends.

4 The noise of a multitude in the mountains, †like as of a great people; a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together: the LORD of hosts mustereth the host of the battle.

† Heb. the likeness of.

The kingdoms of nations; the Medes and Persians, and other nations which served under them in this war; of which see Jer. xxv. 14; xxvii. 7; l. 41.

5 They come from a far country, from the end of heaven, even the LORD, and the weapons of his indignation, to destroy the whole land.

From the end of heaven; from the ends of the earth under heaven, as Matt. xxiv. 30; which is not to be understood strictly and properly, but popularly and hyperbolically, as such expressions are commonly used in sacred and profane authors. And yet in some respects this might be truly said of Persia, which on the south side was bounded by the main ocean; as for the same reason Sheba, a part of Arabia, is called the utmost parts of the earth, Matt. xii. 42. The weapons of his indignation; the Medes and Persians, who were but a rod in God's hand, and the instruments of his anger, as was said of the Assyrian, Isa. x. 5. To destroy the whole land, to wit, of Babylon, of which he is now speaking.

6 ¶ Howl ye; [g]for the day of the LORD is at hand; [h]it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.

g Zeph. 1. 7. Rev. 6. 17. h Job 31. 23. Joel 1. 15.

It shall come as a destruction; or rather, a destruction or devastation shall come, as the LXX. and vulgar Latin render it. For this was not as a destruction, but was a destruction indeed. And the particle as is not seldom used to express, not the likeness, but the reality of the thing, as John i. 14. From the Almighty; who fighteth for your adversaries, and against you, and therefore your destruction is unavoidable.

7 Therefore shall all hands ‖ be faint, and every man's heart shall melt:

‖ Or, fall down.

8 And they shall be afraid: [i]pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth: they shall †be amazed †one at another; their faces shall be as †flames.

i Ps. 48. 6. ch. 21. 3. † Heb. wonder. † Heb. every man at his neighbour. † Heb. faces of the flames.

They shall be amazed one at another, to see so populous and impregnable a city as Babylon was, so easily and unexpectedly taken. Flames, Heb. faces of flame; either pale with fear, or inflamed with rage and torment, as men in misery frequently are. Some render it the faces of Lehabim, a people descending from Mizraim, Gen. x. 13; 1 Chron. i. 11, i. e. black with pain, as men use to be; of which see Joel ii. 6; Nah. ii. 10.

9 Behold, [k]the day of the LORD cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy [l]the sinners thereof out of it.

k Mal. 4. 1. l Ps. 104. 35. Prov. 2. 22.

Cruel both with wrath and fierce anger; divers words are heaped together, to signify the extremity of his anger. The sinners thereof; the inhabitants of that city, who were guilty of so much idolatry and cruelty, and all sorts of luxury.

10 For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be [m]darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine.

m ch. 24. 21, 23. Ezek. 32. 7. Joel 2. 31. & 3. 15. Matt. 24. 29. Mark 13. 24. Luke 21. 25.

The constellations; which consist of many stars, and therefore give a greater light. The sun shall be darkened; either, 1. Properly and really, by an eclipse; for prodigies in heaven do sometimes go before or accompany great and public calamities upon earth. Or, 2. Figuratively, and in appearance. All things shall look darkly and dismally; men shall have no comfort nor hope. See the like descriptions of a most calamitous state, Isa. v. 30; xxxiv. 4; Joel ii. 10, 31, &c. In his going forth; as soon as he riseth, when he is most welcome to men, and giveth them hopes of a pleasant day. As soon as they have any appearance or hope of amendment, they shall be instantly disappointed.

11 And I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; [n]and I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible.

n ch. 2. 17.

The world; the Babylonish empire, which is called the world, as the Roman empire afterward was, Luke ii. 1, because it was extended to a great part of the world, and because it was vastly populous, and Babylon itself looked more like a world than one city. Of the terrible; of them who formerly were very terrible for their great power and cruelty.

12 I will make a man more precious than fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir.

The city and nation shall be so depopulated, that few men shall be left in it.

her place, in the wrath of the LORD of p Ps. 110. 5. Lam. 1. 12. hosts, and in p the day of his fierce anger.

I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place; a poetical and prophetical description of great horrors and confusions, as if heaven and earth were about to meet together.

14 And it shall be as the chased roe, and as a sheep that no man taketh up:
q Jer. 50. 16. & 51. 9. q they shall every man turn to his own people, and flee every one into his own land.

And it, to wit, Babylon, shall be as the chased roe; fearful in itself, especially when it is pursued by the hunter. As a sheep that no man taketh up; in a most forlorn and neglected condition. Every man; those soldiers of other and more warlike nations whom she had hired to assist her; which she used to do at other times, but especially upon this great occasion; of which see on Jer. l. 16; li. 9.

15 Every one that is found shall be thrust through; and every one that is joined unto them shall fall by the sword.

That is found in Babylon, at the taking of it; the expectation whereof made them flee away with all speed.

r Ps. 137. 9. Nah. 3. 10. Zech. 14. 2. 16 Their children also shall be r dashed to pieces before their eyes; their houses shall be spoiled, and their wives ravished.

Their children also shall be dashed to pieces before their eyes, as a just recompence for the like cruelty acted by them upon the Jews, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17, which also was foretold, Psal. cxxxvii. 9.

s ch. 21. 2. Jer. 51. 11, 28. Dan. 5. 26, 31. 17 s Behold, I will stir up the Medes against them, which shall not regard silver; and as for gold, they shall not delight in it.

The Medes; under whom he comprehends the Persians, who were their neighbours and confederates in this expedition. They shall not delight in it; which is to be understood comparatively. They shall more eagerly pursue the destruction of the people than the getting of spoil; whereby it shall appear that they are only the executioners of my vengeance against them; they will accept no ransom to save their lives.

18 Their bows also shall dash the young men to pieces; and they shall have no pity on the fruit of the womb; their eye shall not spare children.

Their bows; under which are comprehended their arrows, and possibly other weapons of war; for so generally sometimes is the bow used in Scripture, as 2 Sam. i. 18; Psal. lxxviii. 9; Isa. xli. 2. Shall dash the young men to pieces; or, shall pierce the young men through, as the Chaldee renders it.

The glory of kingdoms; which once was the most noble and excellent of all the kingdoms then in being, and was more glorious than the succeeding empires, whence it was represented by the head of gold, Dan. ii. 32. The beauty of the Chaldees' excellency; the famous and beautiful seat of the Chaldean monarchy. Shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah; shall be totally and irrecoverably destroyed, as is more fully expressed in the following verses; which yet was not done immediately upon the taking of the city by Darius and Cyrus, but was fulfilled by degrees, as is confessed by historians, and appears this day.

It shall never be inhabited, after the destruction threatened shall be fully accomplished. Neither shall the Arabian, who dwelt in tents, and wandered from place, where they could find pasture; but shall avoid this place, either because the land, once noted for great fruitfulness, is now become barren; or because the land is accursed by God, and abhorred by all men; or for fear of the wild beasts, as it follows.

Wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; the land being forsaken by men, shall be possessed by wild beasts, which love solitary places. What the Hebrew words used here, and in the next verse, signify, the learned may see in my Latin Synopsis; and for others, it may suffice to know that in which all the learned agree, that these are frightful and solitary creatures; of which if I should particularly discourse, I should rather perplex than edify the vulgar reader.

z Jer. 51. 33. her time is near to come, and her days shall not be prolonged.

Her time is near to come; so it was, though not according to man's rash judgment and impatient expectation, yet according to God's estimation, and to the eye of faith, whereby Abraham saw Christ's day as present, many ages before it came, John viii. 56: and comparatively; for it happened within two hundred years; which is but a small proportion of time, if it be compared either with the foregoing or following ages of the world, or with the immense duration of eternity, from whence it was decreed by God, and therefore might well be said now to be near the accomplishment of it. In like manner the apostles speak of the day of judgment as near in their time, though it was at many ages distance. Her days shall not be prolonged beyond the time prefixed and appointed by God. Compare Hab. ii. 3.

c ch. 60. 4, 5, 10. Eph. 2. 12, 13, &c. shall be joined with them, and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob.

The Lord will have mercy on Jacob; God will pity and deliver his people; and therefore will destroy Babylon, which hinders it, and set up Cyrus, who shall promote it. Will yet choose Israel; will renew his choice of them; for he had refused and rejected them. The stranger shall be joined with them: so they did in part at their coming from Babylon, being thereunto moved either by the favour which the Jews had in the Persian court, or by the consideration of their wonderful deliverance, and that exactly in the time designed by their holy prophets. But what was then begun was more fully accomplished at the coming of the Messiah.

2 And the people shall take them, d ch. 49. 22. & 60. 9. & 66. 20. d and bring them to their place: and the house of Israel shall possess them in the land of the LORD for servants and handmaids: and they shall take them captives, † Heb. that led taken them captives. †whose captives they were; e and they e ch. 60. 14. shall rule over their oppressors.

Which they might do literally, and sometimes did, after their return into their own land, either by their power with the Persian monarchs, as in the days of Cyrus and Darius, and especially of Ahasuerus; or by their own prowess, as in the time of the Maccabees. But this was more evidently and eminently verified in a spiritual sense, in the days of the gospel, when the apostles and other ministers, who were of the Jewish nation, conquered a great part of the Gentile world to the worship and obedience of their Messiah.

3 And it shall come to pass in the day that the LORD shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve,

From thy fear; for besides their present hard service, they were in perpetual fear of further severities and sufferings, at the pleasure of their cruel lords and masters.

f ch. 13. 19. Hab. 2. 6. ‖ Or, taunting speech. ¶ Or, exactress of gold. g Rev. 18. 16.

4 ¶ That thou [f]shalt take up this ‖proverb against the king of Babylon, and say, How hath the oppressor ceased! the ¶ [g]golden city ceased!

Shalt take up into thy mouth, as it is fully expressed, Psal. l. 16. How hath the oppressor ceased! this is spoken by way of astonishment and triumph. Who would have thought this possible? The golden city, as they used to call themselves; which therefore he expresseth here in a word of their own language.

h Ps. 125. 3.

5 The LORD hath broken [h]the staff of the wicked, and the sceptre of the rulers.

This is an answer to the foregoing question. It is God's own work, and not man's; and therefore it is not strange that it is accomplished.

† Heb. a stroke without removing.

6 He who smote the people in wrath with †a continual stroke, he that ruled the nations in anger, is persecuted, and none hindereth.

In anger; with rigour, and not with clemency, as many conquerors have done. None hindereth; neither the Babylonians themselves, nor their confederates, could withstand the power of the Medes and Persians.

7 The whole earth is at rest, and is quiet: they break forth into singing.

The whole earth; the inhabitants and subjects of that vast empire, who groaned under their cruel bondage.

i ch. 55. 12. Ezek. 31. 16.

8 [i]Yea, the fir trees rejoice at thee, and the cedars of Lebanon, saying, Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.

The cedars of Lebanon, which were felled down for the service of her pride and luxury, but now are suffered to stand and flourish. It is a figure usual in sacred and profane writers, called prosopopœia.

k Ezek. 32. 21. ‖ Or, The grave. † Heb. leaders. ‖ Or, great goats.

9 [k] ‖ Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the †‖chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

Hell; or, the grave, as the same word is rendered, ver. 11, and in innumerable other places; to which he elegantly ascribeth sense and speech, as poets and orators frequently do. The chief ones, Heb. the he-goats; which lead and govern the flock. From their thrones; from their several graves, which he seems to call their thrones by way of irony or derision, the only thrones now left to them. Thrones both paved and covered with worms, as is noted, ver. 11, instead of their former thrones made of ivory or silver, and adorned with gold and precious stones.

10 All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou also become weak as we? art thou become like unto us?

Thou, who wast king of kings, and far superior to us in power and authority, that didst neither fear God nor reverence man, that didst slay whom thou wouldst, and keep alive whom thou wouldst, Dan. v. 19.

11 Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols: the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee.

Thy pomp is brought down to the grave; all thy glory is lost and buried with thee. The noise of thy viols; all thy musical and melodious instruments, which were much used in Babylon, Dan. iii. 5, 7, 10, and were doubtless used in Belshazzar's solemn feast, Dan. v. 1, at which time the city was taken; to which possibly the prophet here alludes. The worm is spread under thee, instead of those rich and stately carpets upon which thou didst frequently tread.

l ch. 34. 4. ‖ Or, O day star.

12 [l]How art thou fallen from heaven, ‖O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations!

From heaven; from the height of thy glory and royal majesty. As kings are sometimes called gods in Scripture, so their palaces and thrones may be fitly called their heavens. O Lucifer; which properly is a bright and eminent star, which ushers in the sun and the morning; but is here metaphorically taken for the high and mighty king of Babylon. And it is a very usual thing, both in prophetical and in profane writers, to describe the princes and potentates of the world under the title of the sun or stars of heaven. Some understand this place of the devil; to whom indeed it may be mystically applied; but as he is never called by this name in Scripture, so it cannot be literally meant of him, but of the king of Babylon, as is undeniably evident from the whole context, which certainly speaks of one and the same person, and describes him as plainly as words can do it. Son of the morning: the title of son is given in Scripture not only to a person or thing begotten or produced by another, but also in general to any thing which is any way related to another; in which sense we read of a son of stripes, Deut. xxv. 2, the son of a night, Jonah iv. 10, a son of perdition, John xvii. 12, and, which is more agreeable to the present case, the sons of Arcturus, Job xxxviii. 32.

m Matt. 11. 23. n Dan. 8. 10.

13 For thou hast said in thine heart, [m]I will ascend into heaven, [n]I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, [o] in the sides of the north:

o Ps. 48. 2.

I will ascend into heaven; I will advance myself above the state of a weak and mortal man. Great monarchs are easily induced, by their own vain imaginations, and the flattery of their courtiers, to entertain an opinion of their own divinity; so far that many of them have received and required Divine worship to be paid to them. Above the stars of God; either, 1. Above all other kings and potentates whom he hath set up; or, 2. Above the most eminent persons of God's church and people, who are frequently called stars, as Dan. viii. 10; Rev. i. 16, 20; xii. 1, which sense the next words favour. I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation; I will establish my royal throne upon Mount Zion, where the Jews meet together to worship God. In the sides of the north: this is added as a more exact description of the place of the temple, which stood upon Mount Moriah, which was northward from the hill of Zion strictly so called, and was a part of the hill of Zion largely so called. See on Psal. xlviii. 2.

p ch. 47. 8. 2 Thes. 2. 4.

14 I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; [p]I will be like the most High.

Above the heights of the clouds, to wit, into heaven, as he said, ver. 13. Like the Most High, in the uncontrollableness of my power, and the universal extent of my dominion over all the earth.

q Matt. 11. 23.

15 Yet thou [q]shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.

16 They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms;

Shall narrowly look upon thee; as hardly believing their own eyes, because this change seemed impossible to them. The earth; all the nations of the earth.

‖ Or, did not let his prisoners loose homewards.

17 That made the world as a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof; that ‖ opened not the house of his prisoners?

Whereby he signifies both his irresistible power, and his continued cruelty. He neither was willing to give them any liberty or ease, nor could any force him to do it.

18 All the kings of the nations, even all of them, lie in glory, every one in his own house.

All of them; other kings most commonly do, as the word all is frequently used. Every one in his own house; are buried in their own sepulchres, having stately monuments erected to their honour and memory.

19 But thou art cast out of thy grave like an abominable branch, and as the raiment of those that are slain, thrust through with a sword, that go down to the stones of the pit; as a carcase trodden under feet.

Cast out of thy grave; or, cast from thy grave or burying-place; which very probably happened to Belshazzar, who was slain in the night, Dan. v. 30, when his people had neither opportunity nor heart to bestow an honourable interment upon him, and the conquerors would not suffer them to do it. Like an abominable branch; like a useless and rotten twig of a tree, which he that pruneth the trees cutteth off, and casteth away with abhorrency, and suffers to lie rotting more and more upon the ground; or, like a degenerate plant of a noble vine, which is abominable. As the raiment of those that are slain; which, being cut and mangled, and besmeared with mire, and defiled with blood, was cast away with contempt, and abominated as an unclean thing, as it was in divers respects, in that age and state of the church. That go down to the stones of the pit; which persons being slain, they, together with their garments, are cast into some pit. He saith, to the stones of the pit, either because such bodies are commonly thrown into the next pits, and pits were frequently made by digging stones out of their quarries; or because there usually are a great number of stones in the bottoms of pits, either naturally, or being cast in thither upon divers occasions; and when dead bodies are cast in thither, men use to throw a heap of stones upon them. As a carcass trodden under feet; neglected, like such a carcass. Or this might literally happen to Belshazzar's dead body, through military fury and contempt, or from other causes.

20 Thou shalt not be joined with them in burial, because thou hast destroyed thy land, and slain thy people: [r] the seed of evildoers shall never be renowned.

r Job 18. 19. Ps. 21. 10. & 37. 28. & 109. 13.

Thou shalt not be joined with them; not in place, for so the kings of several nations did not use to be joined in the same sepulchre; but in condition, not be buried as they are. Thou hast destroyed thy land, and slain thy people; thou hast exercised great tyranny and cruelty, not only to thine enemies, but even to thine own subjects; which it is more than probable Belshazzar did, and it is certain that his parents and predecessors had done, whose sins contributed, together with his, to bring down God's judgments upon that empire. The seed of evil-doers, such as Belshazzar was, being descended from that Nebuchadnezzar who had made such horrid slaughters and devastations in the world, merely to gratify his own unsatiable lusts, and who had been so impious towards God and his temple, and so bloody towards his church and people. Shall never be renowned; or, shall not be renowned for ever. Although I have long borne with thee and thy family, and suffered them to get a great name in the world, yet I will now put a period to the renown of thy family and empire.

21 Prepare slaughter for his children [s] for the iniquity of their fathers; that they do not rise, nor possess the land, nor fill the face of the world with cities.

s Ex. 20. 5. Matt. 23. 35.

Prepare slaughter for his children; O ye Medes and Persians, cut off all the branches of the royal family of Babylon. For the iniquity of their fathers; in the guilt whereof the children are justly involved, partly because of that community of nature and interest which is between parents and children, which makes them for the most part bear a share with them, as in their rewards and advantages, so also in their punishments and miseries; and partly because they justified their sins by their impenitency, and imitation of their wicked example. Do not rise, i. e. not recover their former splendour and power. With cities; erected by them, either as instruments of tyranny, to keep the country round about them in slavery, or as monuments of their power and riches, as Babylon was, Dan. iv. 30.

22 For I will rise up against them, saith the LORD of hosts, and cut off from Babylon [t] the name, and [u] remnant, [x] and son, and nephew, saith the LORD.

t Prov. 10. 7. Jer. 51. 62. u 1 Kings 14. 10. x Job 18. 19.

The name and remnant; the remembrance of those that are dead, and the persons of those who yet survive.

23 [y] I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water: and I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the LORD of hosts.

y ch. 34. 11. Zeph. 2. 14.

The bittern; a great water fowl, which thrusting its bill into some broken reed, or hollow thing, makes a great noise; which also delights in solitary places, as also in waterish grounds, such as those were about Babylon. Others render the word hedge-hog, or porcupine; but this being not considerable in itself, nor at all necessary for the clearing of the text, I shall not trouble the English reader with any discourse about it; and the learned may consult my Latin Synopsis. Pools of water: the ground about Babylon was of itself very moist and waterish, because of the great river Euphrates running by it, which was kept from overflowing the country with charge and labour; which being neglected, as it must needs be when the city was destroyed and dispeopled, it was easily turned into pools of water.

24 ¶ The LORD of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand:

I will not repent of this threatening, as I did of that against Nineveh, Jonah iii. 4, 10. And this solemn oath is added to confirm the faith of God's people, because otherwise the destruction of this vast and mighty empire might seem incredible. But it is to be diligently observed, that this verse doth not only concern this present prophecy of Babylon's destruction by the Medes and Persians, but is also to be extended unto the foregoing prophecy concerning the overthrow of Sennacherib and the Assyrian host, chap. x., as appears by the next verse, where the sum of that prophecy is repeated. Nor is this any digression, but very pertinent to the main design and business of this chapter; inasmuch as the overthrow of that great Assyrian host, and of the deliverance of God's people at that time, was a pledge of the certain accomplishment of that future destruction of the city and empire of Babylon, and of their deliverance out of that captivity.

25 That I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot: then shall [z] his yoke depart from off them, and his burden depart from off their shoulders.

z ch. 10. 27.

The Assyrian; Sennacherib, and his Assyrian army. In my land; in Judea, which is my land in a peculiar manner, being chosen by me, and consecrated to my use and service, and inhabited by my people. Upon my mountains; in my mountainous country, for such Judea was, Deut. viii. 9; Psal. cxxxiii. 3; Ezek. vi. 2, 3; xxxix. 2, 4, 17, especially about Jerusalem, Psal. cxxv. 2, upon some of which probably his army was lodged. Then shall his yoke depart from off them, and his burden depart from off their shoulders; which words are repeated from Isa. x. 27, where they are explained.

26 This is the purpose that is purposed upon the whole earth: and this is the hand that is stretched out upon all the nations.

Upon the whole earth; upon this vast empire, now in the hands of the Assyrians, and shortly to come into the hands of the Babylonians. The whole earth is put synecdochically for a great part of it. The hand; the providence of God executing his purpose.

a 2 Chro. 20. 6. Job 9. 12. & 23. 13. Ps. 33. 11. Prov. 19. 21. & 21. 30. ch. 43. 13. Dan. 4. 31, 35.

27 For the LORD of hosts hath [a]purposed, and who shall disannul it? and his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back?

b 2 Kings 16. 20.

28 In the year that [b]king Ahaz died was this burden.

726.

This following burdensome prophecy concerning the Philistines, who in Ahaz's time made an inroad into Judah, and took divers of their cities and villages, 2 Chron. xxviii. 18.

c 2 Chron. 26. 6.

29 ¶ Rejoice not thou, whole Palestina, [c]because the rod of him that smote thee is broken: for out of the serpent's root shall come forth a ‖cockatrice, [d]and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent.

d 2 Kings 18. 8.

Of him that smote thee: most understand this of Uzziah, who did them much mischief, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6; but he was dead thirty-two years before this time, and therefore their joy for his death was long since past. Others understand it of Ahaz; but he was so far from smiting them, that he was smitten by them, as was noted on ver. 28. It seems better to understand it more generally of the royal race or foregoing kings of Judah, who had been a terrible scourge to them, whose rod might be said to be broken, because that sceptre was come into the hands of slothful and degenerate princes, such as Ahaz was, who had been lately broken by the Philistines, and who probably was alive when this prophecy was delivered, because he here speaks of Hezekiah not as a present, but as a future king. It is said indeed that this burden was in the year that Ahaz died; but so it might be, though it was before his death. His fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent; from the root and race of David shall come Hezekiah, who, like a serpent, shall sting thee to death, as he did, 2 Kings xviii. 8.

30 And the firstborn of the poor shall feed, and the needy shall lie down in safety: and I will kill thy root with famine, and he shall slay thy remnant.

The first-born of the poor; the people of the Jews, who are brought to extreme poverty by the cruelty and the malice of other enemies. The first-born were the chief of all the children. Hence the title of first-born is given to persons or things which are most eminent in their kinds, as to the people of Israel, Exod. iv. 22, to David, Psal. lxxxix. 27, to a grievous death, Job xviii. 13, and here to persons eminently poor. Shall feed; shall have plenty of provisions, in spite of all thine attempts against them. I will kill thy root; I will utterly destroy thee both root and branch, so that there shall not be a remnant of thy people reserved, as it follows. It is a metaphor from a tree, which for want of nourishment is dried up by the roots.

31 Howl, O gate; cry, O city; thou, whole Palestina, art dissolved: for there shall come from the north a smoke, and ‖none shall be alone in his ‖appointed times.

‖ Or, he shall not be alone.

‖ Or, assemblies.

O gate: the gate is put either, 1. Metaphorically, for the people passing through the gates, or for the magistrates and others who used to meet in the gate for judgment, or upon other occasions; or, 2. Synecdochically, for the city, as gates are commonly put, as Jer. xxii. 19, and as it is explained in the next words. O city: city is here put collectively for their cities, of which see 1 Sam. vi. 17. Dissolved, Heb. melted; which may be understood either, 1. Of the fainting of their spirits and courage, as Exod. xv. 15; Josh. ii. 9, 24, &c.; or, 2. Of the dissolution of their state. From the north; either, 1. From Judea; which lay northward from some part of the Philistines' land. But in truth Judea lay more east than north from Palestine, and therefore the Philistines are said to be on the west, Isa. xi. 14, and never, so far as I remember, on the north. Or, 2. From Chaldea, as may be gathered, 1. From the Scripture use of this phrase, which generally designs that country, as Jer. i. 14, 15; vi. 1, 22, &c. 2. From Jer. xlvii., where destruction is threatened to the Philistines from the north, ver. 2, which all understand of the Chaldeans under Nebuchadnezzar. And whereas it is speciously objected, That this suits not with the next verse, which speaks of Zion's safety at the time of this destruction of the Philistines, whereas Zion and the land and people of Judah were destroyed together with the Philistines by Nebuchadnezzar; I humbly conceive it may be answered, that that verse is added to express the far differing condition of God's people and of the Philistines in the events of that Babylonian war; and that whereas the Philistines should be irrecoverably and eternally destroyed thereby, and no remnant of them should be left, as was said, ver. 30, God's people, though they should be sorely scourged, and carried into captivity, yet they should be strangely preserved, and after some years delivered, and restored to their own land and temple; whereby it would appear that Zion stood upon a sure foundation, and, albeit it was grievously shaken, yet it could not be utterly and finally overthrown. A smoke; a grievous judgment and calamity, which is oft signified by smoke, as Gen. xv. 17; Deut. xxix. 20; Joel ii. 30, either because smoke is generally accompanied with fire, or because it causeth a great darkness in the air; for afflictions are frequently described under the names of fire and darkness. In his appointed times: when God's appointed time shall come for the execution of this judgment, not one person of all that numerous army, which is signified by the smoke last mentioned, shall retire and desert his colours, or lag behind the rest; but they shall march with great unanimity and alacrity, and none of them shall withdraw his hand till the work be finished, till the Philistines be utterly destroyed.

e Ps. 87. 1, 5. & 102. 16. f Zeph. 3. 12. Zech. 11. 11. ‖ Or, betake themselves unto it.

32 What shall one then answer the messengers of the nation? That [e]the LORD hath founded Zion, and [f]the poor of his people shall ‖trust in it.

What shall one then answer the messengers of the nation? what shall a Jew say to the people of other nations, who shall either be sent or come to inquire concerning the state of Zion in that day, when not only the Philistines, but even the Jews themselves, shall fall by the hands of one and the same enemy? Nation is put collectively for nations, as gate and city for gates and cities in the foregoing verse. They shall give them this answer, That although Zion at present be in a very distressed and deplorable condition, and seems to be forsaken by her God; yet she stands upon a firm foundation, and God, who first founded her, will again restore and establish her, and his poor despised people shall resort to her, as to a strong and sure refuge.

CHAP. XV.

The destruction of Moab.

cir. 726.

THE [a]burden of Moab. Because in the night [b]Ar of Moab is laid waste, and ‖brought to silence; because in the night Kir of Moab is laid waste, and brought to silence;

a Jer. 48. 1, &c. Ezek. 25. 8,—11. Amos 2. 1. b Num. 21. 28. ‖ Or, cut off.

The burden of Moab; a prophecy of the destruction of the Moabites, the inveterate and implacable enemies of the Jews, begun by the Assyrian, and finished by the Babylonian emperors. In the night; or, in a night; suddenly and unexpectedly; for men sleep securely in the night, and therefore the evils which then overtake them are most terrible to them. Ar; the chief city of Moab, Numb. xxi. 28; Deut. ii. 9. Brought to silence; or rather, is cut off, as the word oft signifies, as Jer. xlvii. 5; Hos. x. 7, 15, and elsewhere. Kir; another eminent city of Moab, called more largely and fully Kir-heres, and Kir-hareseth, Isa. xvi. 7, 11; Jer. xlviii. 31, 36.

c ch. 16. 12. d See Lev. 21. 5. ch. 3. 24. & 22. 12. Jer. 47. 5. & 48. 1, 37, 38. Ezek. 7. 18.

2 [c]He is gone to Bajith, and to Dibon, the high places, to weep: Moab shall howl over Nebo, and over Medeba: [d]on all their heads shall be baldness, and every beard cut off.

Bajith signifies a house. It is supposed to be the name of a place, so called from some eminent house or temple of their idols which was in it. It is called more fully Beth-baal-meon, that is, The house of Baal's habitation, Josh. xiii. 17. Dibon; another city of Moab, as is manifest from Jer. xlviii. 18, 22, where also was their other eminent high place. To these two places they used to resort in case of great difficulties and troubles. To weep; to offer their supplications with tears to their idols for help. Over Nebo and over Medeba; two considerable cities, anciently belonging to the Moabites, from whom they were taken by the Amorites, and from them by the Israelites, and possessed by the Reubenites, Numb. xxi. 30; xxxii. 3, 38; but were, as it seems, recovered by the Moabites, in whose hands they now were, as is evident, for Nebo, Jer. xlviii. 1, 22, and for Medeba, from this text. On all their heads shall be baldness, and every beard cut off; the hair of their heads and beards (which was their ornament) was shaved, as was usual in great mourning, as hath been oft observed upon divers preceding texts. See on Lev. xix. 27, 28; xxi. 5.

e Jer. 48. 38. † Heb. descending into weeping, or, coming down with weeping.

3 In their streets they shall gird themselves with sackcloth: [e]on the tops of their houses, and in their streets, every one shall howl, †weeping abundantly.

Shall gird themselves with sackcloth: this was another practice of mourners. The tops of their houses, which were made flat, Deut. xxii. 8; to which men used to go up, either to walk, or to cry to God in heaven or to men for help. In their streets; publicly, without shame; whereas in ordinary sorrows men are wont to seek secret places for their mourning.

4 And Heshbon shall cry, [f]and Elealeh: their voice shall be heard even unto Jahaz: therefore the armed soldiers of Moab shall cry out; his life shall be grievous unto him.

Heshbon and Elealeh; two other Moabitish cities; of which see Numb. xxi. 25, 26; xxxii. 3, 37. Jahaz; another city in the utmost borders of Moab, Numb. xxi. 23, called also Jahazah, Josh. xxi. 36. The armed soldiers, who should be, and use to be, the most courageous. His life shall be grievous unto him; the Moabites shall generally long for death, to free themselves from those dreadful calamities which they perceive unavoidably coming upon them.

g ch. 16. 11. Jer. 48. 31. ‖ Or, to the borders thereof, even as an heifer. h ch. 16. 14. Jer. 48. 34. i Jer. 48. 5. † Heb. breaking.

5 [g]My heart shall cry out for Moab; ‖his fugitives shall flee unto Zoar, an [h]heifer of three years old: for [i]by the mounting up of Luhith with weeping shall they go it up; for in the way of Horonaim they shall raise up a cry of †destruction.

My heart shall cry out for Moab; their destruction approaching is so dreadful, that although they are a most vile nation, and by their implacable enmity against God and his people do abundantly deserve it, yet the respect which I have to human nature fills me with horror at the very thoughts of it. Compare Isa. xvi. 11. His fugitives; or, his bars, as others render it, and as this word is frequently taken, as Exod. xxvi. 26, 27; Psal. cvii. 16, &c.; whereby we may understand their valiant men, or their princes and rulers, who as they are called the shields of the earth, Psal. xlvii. 9, because, like shields, they do or should defend their people; so for the same reason they may be called bars, because bars are the strength of the gates of cities or castles, and therefore are mentioned as such, Psal. cxlvii. 13; Prov. xviii. 19; Jer. li. 30. Shall flee unto Zoar; or, shall cry unto Zoar; either shall cry as they go along the way, even till they come to Zoar; or shall cry so as they may be heard to Zoar; which may easily be understood out of the foregoing verse. Zoar was a town bordering upon Moab; of which see Gen. xix. 20—22; Deut. xxxiv. 3. An heifer of three years old; which some understand of the city of Zoar, so called for her strength and wantonness. But such a description of Zoar seems very improper and impertinent in this place. The words therefore are to be translated here, as they are by our translators, Jer. xlviii. 34. as an heifer of three years old; and so they belong to their cry, and signify that it is strong and loud, like that of such an heifer. In the way of Horonaim they shall raise up a cry; he signifies that the cry should be universal, in all places where they come, and reaching from one side of the country to another. Of Luhith, see Jer. xlviii. 4, 5. Of destruction; such a cry as men send forth when they are just falling into the pit of destruction.

The waters; either, 1. Properly, they shall be dried up; or, 2. Figuratively, the waterish grounds, as waters seem to be taken, Eccles. xi. 1; Isa. xxxii. 20. These being very fruitful, are commonly most inhabited and cultivated; but now they also, and much more the dry and barren grounds, shall be desolate, and without inhabitant. There is no green thing, by the just and special judgment of God. Thus God and man conspire together to destroy them.

7 Therefore the abundance they have gotten, and that which they have laid up, shall they carry away to the ‖brook of the willows.

Shall they, to wit, their enemies, which is plainly implied, carry away to the brook of the willows; unto some brook or river having great numbers of willows growing by it, by which they might convey them to some eminent and strong city built upon the same river. Possibly he means some such river which ran into Euphrates, and so gave them opportunity of carrying their spoils by water unto Babylon. Though the words may be rendered, into the valley of the Arabians; whither the spoils might be first carried, in order to their transportation into Assyria or Chaldea; for part of Arabia lay between Moab and those countries. But the former translation seems better, because these very words are so rendered, Lev. xxiii. 40.

8 For the cry is gone round about the borders of Moab; the howling thereof unto Eglaim, and the howling thereof unto Beer-elim.

Their cry fills all the parts of the country.

Dimon: this seems to be the same place with Dibon, mentioned ver. 2, here called Dimon for the great bloodshed in it, as it here follows; such changes of a letter being not unusual in proper names, as in Merodach for Berodach, Isa. xxxix. 1. More; either, 1. [a]SEND ye the lamb to the ruler of the land [b]from ‖†Sela to the wilderness, unto the mount of the daughter of Zion.

The prophet continues his prophecy against Moab in this chapter, and here turneth his speech to them, and gives them counsel what to do, to prevent, if possible, the threatened desolation. In these first words he adviseth them to the practice either, 1. Of justice; Pay that tribute of lambs and goats which you obliged yourselves to pay unto David, and to his posterity, 2 Sam. viii. 2, and pay it not unto Israel, as you have done, 2 Kings iii. 4, but unto the king of Judah, who is the rightful heir of David, and king of the land. Or, 2. Of piety; Send a lamb, for a sacrifice, unto God, who is Ruler of the land, to wit, of your land, no less than of ours; or, of the earth, as the word is commonly rendered, who is the God of the whole earth, as he is called, Isa. liv. 5, the God of all the kingdoms of the earth, Isa. xxxvii. 16. Make your peace with God, by sacrifice, for all your injuries done to him, and to his people. These words may be understood ironically, and the design of them may be to represent their miserable and desperate condition; as if he had said, You have tried all other ways, and sought to your idols, chap. xv. 2, and all in vain; now seek to the God of Israel, who alone can help you. But, alas! he is highly incensed against you, and coming to destroy you. But this seems rather to be a serious advice, by comparing these words with ver. 3, 4. Sela; an eminent city of Moab, seated upon a rock, which is here named, either because the king and his court at this time resided there, or for some other reason then evident, though now unknown. To the wilderness; to the wilderness of Moab, of which we read Numb. xxi. 11; Deut. ii. 8, and so onward to Zion, as it follows. Or this may be added as a description of the place called Sela. Hence some render the words, Sela of the wilderness; and others, Sela which lieth or looketh towards the wilderness. And this limitation might be the more necessary, to distinguish this from other places of Moab called by the same name, which, signifying a rock, might be common to several places in that rocky country. Unto the mount of the daughter of Zion; unto the temple upon Mount Zion.

2 For it shall be, that, as a wandering bird ‖ cast out of the nest, so the daughters of Moab shall be at the fords of [c] Arnon.

c Num. 21. 13.

For; or, otherwise, as this particle is sometimes used; if you do not follow my advice. As a wandering bird cast out of the nest; which knows not whither to go, nor what to do. At the fords of Arnon; which was the border of the land of Moab, where they were, either being carried that way into captivity, or rather with design to flee out of their own land, although they knew not whither, as the foregoing metaphor showeth.

† Heb. Bring.

3 †Take counsel, execute judgment; make thy shadow as the night in the midst of the noonday; hide the outcasts; bewray not him that wandereth.

Take counsel; consider seriously among yourselves what course to take to prevent your utter ruin. Execute judgment; do those things which are just and right, as to all men, so particularly to my people, to whom you have been most unrighteous and unmerciful. As the night; or, as the shadow of the night, large and dark, as the shadow of the earth is in the night season. The meaning is, Conceal and protect my people in the time of their distress and danger, as this metaphor is explained in the rest of this and in the following verse. The outcasts; mine outcasts, as it follows, ver. 4, those of my people which are driven out of their land. Bewray not him that wandereth unto their enemies, as thou hast treacherously done in former times.

4 Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler: for the †extortioner is at an end, the spoiler ceaseth, †the oppressors are consumed out of the land.

† Heb. wringer. † Heb. the treaders down.

Mine outcasts; whom though I have forsaken, and sorely chastened, yet I do, and still will, own for my people; and I do observe, and will requite, both the kindnesses and the injuries done to them. The extortioner is at an end; shall shortly be destroyed, and my people shall ere long be restored, and then thou wilt not lose the fruit of thy kindness. The present tense is put for the future, as it is usually in prophecies.

d Dan. 7. 14, 27. Mic. 4. 7. Luke 1. 33. ‖ Or, prepared. e Ps. 72. 2. & 96. 13. & 98. 9.

5 And in mercy [d] shall the throne be ‖ established: and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, [e] judging, and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness.

In mercy; by my mercy. Though they have sinned, and I am now punishing their sins, yet I will deliver them for my own mercy's sake. The throne; the kingdom of Judah. Therefore for thine own sake show them kindness in this day of their distress; for they will be capable of requiting thee. He; their king, which is easily and necessarily understood. Shall sit upon it in truth; which may respect either, 1. The manner of his government, exercising truth and justice. But that is more plainly and fully expressed in the last part of the verse. Or, 2. The continuance of it, in truth, i. e. firmly and constantly; for truth is oft put for the stability and certainty of a thing, as 2 Chron. xxxii. 1; Prov. xi. 18; Isa. lxi. 8. And this makes the argument more considerable to the present purpose. The kingdom shall not only be restored, but firmly settled; therefore it is your interest, O Moabites, to be kind to my people. In the tabernacle; in the house, or palace, which is called a tent, or tabernacle, either because houses are frequently so called in Scripture, as 2 Sam. xx. 1; 1 Kings viii. 66; xii. 16, or with respect unto the unsettledness of David's house, which now indeed was more like a tabernacle than a strong palace; and yet, notwithstanding its present imbecility, should be firmly established. Seeking judgment; searching out the truth of causes and things with care and diligence, which is the duty of a judge. Hasting righteousness; neither denying nor yet delaying justice. And these good qualifications seem to be here mentioned, partly to teach the rulers of Moab their duty towards their own people, and the Israelites which were among them; and partly as a reason and evidence of that stability which he had promised to the house of David.

6 ¶ We have heard of the [f] pride of Moab; he is very proud: even of his haughtiness, and his pride, and his wrath: [g] but his lies shall not be so.

f Jer. 48. 29. Zeph. 2. 10. g ch. 28. 15.

The prophet, having spoken to the Moabites, and acquainted them with their duty and interest, now he turneth his speech to God's people, whom he armeth and comforteth against their approaching misery. The scope and sense of the prophet in this verse is this, I do not expect that my counsels will have any good effect upon Moab, they will still carry themselves insolently and outrageously towards you, and they promise themselves that they shall now effect what they have long desired, even satisfy their malice in your total and final destruction; but they shall be disappointed of their hopes. It is well known to me, and you, and all their neighbours, that they are a haughty and furious people; and therefore they will scorn my advice, and doubt not to stand upon their own legs. His lies shall not be so; his vain imaginations, and false and crafty counsel, shall not take effect. But the words are and may be otherwise rendered, but his strength (as this word is rendered, Job xviii. 13; Heb. bars, which are the strength of gates or doors) is not so; not equal to his pride or fury. Or thus, exactly according to the words and order of the Hebrew text, not so lies. A concise speech, such as are very common in this and other prophets. And these words may possibly be brought in as the words of the Moabites, making this short reply to the prophet's counsels and threatenings, directed to them in the foregoing verses of this chapter: It is not or shall not be so as thou sayest; thy words are but lies, we fear not thy threats against us. But this I propose with submission.

7 Therefore shall Moab [h] howl for Moab, every one shall howl: for the foundations [i] of Kir-hareseth shall ye ‖ mourn; surely they are stricken.

h Jer. 48. 20. i 2 Kin. 3. 25. ‖ Or, mutter.

For Moab; for itself; the noun put for the pronoun, as is usual in the Hebrew text. Or, to Moab. One Moabite shall howl or lament to or for another. Kir-hareseth; an ancient and eminent city of Moab, called Kir, chap. xv. 1, and Kir-haresh, ver. 11, which signifies, The city of the sun, probably because there was the temple of the sun; which city was preserved when their other cities were ruined, 2 Kings iii. 25, and therefore the destruction of it was more lamented. Shall ye mourn; or, ye shall meditate or talk, as this word commonly signifies. Your thoughts and discourses will run much upon the ruin of such a city. Stricken; or, broken; overthrown or destroyed.

8 For [k] the fields of Heshbon languish, and [l] the vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof, they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are ‖ stretched out, they are gone over the sea.

‖ Or, plucked up.

The fields of Heshbon languish; either for want of rain, as chap. xv. 6, or because there are no men left to till and manure them. The lords of the heathen; the Assyrians or Chaldeans, the great rulers of the Eastern nations. The principal plants; the choicest vines; under which one particular he seems to understand not only all other fruits and goods, but even their persons and choicest people. They are come even unto Jazer; either, 1. The lords of the heathen are come as far as Jazer, which is the utmost border of Moab; or, 2. The people of Moab are going into captivity, and part of them are already gone as far as Jazer. Some understand this and the following clauses of the vines, which are here commended, to aggravate the loss and ruin of them, and render the words, which reached even unto Jazer, which vineyards were planted for many miles together, even as far as Jazer. They wandered through the wilderness; others of the Moabites fled away for their lives, and wandered hither and thither in the wilderness of Moab; of which see Numb. xxi. 11; Deut. ii. 8. Her branches, i. e. her people, called plants before. Are stretched out; or, are spread abroad, as this word signifies, Numb. xi. 32; Judg. xv. 9; 1 Sam. xxx. 16; are driven from their own homes, and dispersed into several countries. Over the sea; over the Dead Sea, which was the border of Moab. They were forced to flee out of their own country to save their lives.

m Jer. 48. 32. 9 ¶ Therefore [m]I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer the vine of Sibmah: I n ch. 15. 4. will water thee with my tears, [n]O Heshbon, and Elealeh: for ‖ the shouting for

‖ Or, the alarm is fallen upon, &c. thy summer fruits and for thy harvest is fallen.

I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer the vine of Sibmah: so the sense is, I will bewail Sibmah as I did bewail Jazer, which, they say, was destroyed before Sibmah: or, the weeping of Jazer might be a proverbial expression; for it is used also Jer. xlviii. 32, like that of the mourning of Hadadrimmon, Zech. xii. 11, though the reason of it be now unknown, as it is in many other proverbs. The words are by others rendered, and that more agreeably to the Hebrew text, I will bewail with weeping (which is a usual Hebraism for I will bitterly bewail) Jazer, and (which particle is oft understood) the vine of Sibmah. But our translation seems to be justified by the parallel place, Jer. xlviii. 32, where it is, O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer. The shouting for thy summer fruits and for thy harvest is fallen; those joyful shouts and acclamations, which were customary in the time of harvest and vintage, Isa. ix. 3; Jer. xxv. 30, shall cease, because thy land shall be wasted, and thy people destroyed. Or, as it is in the margin, the shout or alarm is fallen upon thy summer fruits and thy harvest, instead of that joyful shout which was then used, to which he here alludes; which seems to be the truer translation, not only because this Hebrew word is elsewhere used concerning the shout of an enemy falling upon a people, as Jer. xxv. 30; li. 14, but especially by considering the parallel place, Jer. xlviii. 32, where, for the shout is fallen, it is, the spoiler is fallen upon, &c. If it be objected, that the next verse speaks of the ceasing of their joyful shouts, and that this Hebrew word is there used for vintage shouting, which at first made me incline to the former interpretation, that seems to be fully answered from Jer. xlviii. 33, which speaks likewise of the ceasing of their joy and joyful shouts, but withal adds, in the close of the verse, what may end this controversy, their shouting shall be no shouting; they shall indeed have a shouting, but not such a one as they used to have, a joyful shouting of their own people, but an insulting shout of their enemies.

o ch. 24. 8. Jer. 48. 33. 10 And [o]gladness is taken away, and joy out of the plentiful field; and in the vineyards there shall be no singing, neither shall there be shouting: the treaders shall tread out no wine in their presses; I have made their vintage shouting to cease.

The treaders: in those times they used to squeeze out the juice of their grapes by treading them with their feet, in vessels appointed for that use, Judg. ix. 27; Neh. xiii. 15.

11 Wherefore [p]my bowels shall sound p ch. 15. 5. & 63. 15. Jer. 48. 36. like an harp for Moab, and mine inward parts for Kir-haresh.

Shall sound, through compassion to them; of which see on Isa. xv. 5. In excessive griefs the bowels are sometimes rolled and tumbled together, so as to make an audible noise. Hereby he signifies the greatness of their approaching calamity, which being so grievous to him, must needs be intolerable to them.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when it is seen that Moab is weary on [q]the high q ch. 15. 2. place, that he shall come to his sanctuary to pray; but he shall not prevail.

When it is seen that Moab is weary on the high place; when it shall appear to them and others that all their other devotions are vain and ineffectual. To his sanctuary; to the temple of his great god, Chemosh, Numb. xxi. 29; 1 Kings xi. 7; Jer. xlviii. 46, from whom he shall seek and expect succour. He shall not prevail; his god can neither hear nor help him.

13 This is the word that the LORD hath spoken concerning Moab since that time.

Since the beginning of God's revelation to me concerning Moab, and hitherto; which exposition seems to be confirmed by the following words, but now.

14 But now the LORD hath spoken, saying, Within three years, [r]as the years r ch. 21. 16. of an hireling, and the glory of Moab shall be contemned, with all that great multitude; and the remnant shall be very small and ‖ feeble.

‖ Or, not many.

Hath spoken; hath made this further discovery of his mind to me. Within three years; to be computed either, 1. From the time of Jerusalem's destruction by Nebuchadnezzar, who did, as is confessed by all, invade the Moabites at or about that time, and execute the judgment first foretold by this prophet, and afterwards by Jeremiah, chap. xlviii. Or rather, 2. From the time of the delivery of this prophecy; which being uncertain, leaves us the greater latitude for the determination of the precise time when this was fulfilled. But this is certain, from Isa. i. 1, that this prophecy must be delivered, at furthest, before the end of Hezekiah's reign. And then there ariseth this great difficulty, How this can consist with the prophecy of Jeremiah, who above or about a hundred years after this time speaketh of Moab as a people that had been at ease from their youth, and had not gone into captivity, Jer. xlviii. 11, and prophesieth against them in the very same words which Isaiah useth in this prophecy? The answer is, That they do not speak of the same time, nor of the same calamity; but Isaiah of a former tribulation, and Jeremiah of their latter devastation. It is true, Jeremiah useth the same words which Isaiah doth, and so do the later prophets sometimes use the words of the former, to other purposes than they were first delivered, as we shall see hereafter, and as is most evident from the Revelation of St. John, in which the same words are used concerning mystical Babylon, which were used by the foregoing prophets concerning the first and literal Babylon. And although the foregoing prophecy of Isaiah seems to speak of the same destruction threatened by Jeremiah, and inflicted by Nebuchadnezzar; yet this prophecy contained in this verse, and ushered in with another preface, seems to be of a differing nature, and to speak of a more speedy and less grievous affliction that should befall them, which should be as a pledge to assure them of the certain accomplishment of the other prophecy, and of their utter destruction. And therefore it is observable, that the prophet doth not here say, Within three years all that I have foretold and threatened shall be fulfilled; but only, the glory of Moab shall be contemned, &c., which is quite another thing; and as the terms here used are much milder, so the judgment here denounced seems much less, than in the foregoing prophecy. And therefore this verse may very well be understood of some great blow given to the Moabites, either by Sennacherib, or by his son Esarhaddon, from which notwithstanding they in a little time recovered themselves, and flourished again, and continued so to do till Nebuchadnezzar completed their destruction. And this may well enough consist with what is said of Moab's being at ease from his youth, Jer. xlviii. 11, which is not to be understood simply, as if they had been wholly free from war and other calamities; for the contrary is evident, both from Scripture, as 2 Sam. viii. 2; 2 Kings iii. 24, 25, and from other histories; but comparatively, that they had not been brought to desolation, nor carried away into captivity, as it is explained in the following words, and as Israel had been at that time, and Judah was threatened to be. As the years of an hireling, i. e. within three years precisely accounted; for hirelings are very punctual in observing the time for which they are hired; and their thoughts and desires run much upon it, because then they are to receive their wages; of which see Job vii. 1, 2; xiv. 6. And this exposition is confirmed by comparing this place with Isa. xxi. 16, where the same phrase is used of one year. So groundless is that opinion which the Jewish writers gather from this place, compared with Deut. xv. 18, that three years was the usual and appointed time for the generality of hired servants. The glory of Moab; their strength, and wealth, and other things in which they glory. Shall be contemned; shall be made contemptible to those who formerly admired them. With all that great multitude; with the great numbers of their people, of which they boasted. Shall be very small and feeble, comparatively to what they were before; which might be very true, and yet afterwards, in a hundred years' space, they might be sufficiently recruited.

CHAP. XVII.

Damascus, Samaria, Israel, and their cities, to be ruined by the Assyrians, 1—5. A remnant shall consider and repent, 6—8. The rest plagued for their impiety, 9—11. The woe of Israel's enemies, 12—14.

cir. 741. a Jer. 49. 23. Amos 1. 3. Zech. 9. 1. fulfilled 740, 2 Kin. 16. 9.

1 THE [a]burden of Damascus. Behold, Damascus is taken away from being a city, and it shall be a ruinous heap.

The burden of Damascus; both of that city and kingdom, as appears from ver. 2, 3. It shall be a ruinous heap: this was fulfilled by Tiglath-pileser, 2 Kings xvi. 9, although afterwards it was re-edified and possessed by another sort of inhabitants.

2 The cities of Aroer are forsaken: they shall be for flocks, which shall lie b Jer. 7. 33. down, and [b]none shall make them afraid.

The cities of Aroer; of that part of Syria called Aroer, from a great city of that name; of which see Deut. ii. 36; iii. 12. These cities were possessed by the Reubenites and Gadites, whom Tiglath-pileser carried into captivity, 1 Chron. v. 26. These he mentions here, as he doth Ephraim in the next verse, because they were confederate with Syria against Judah. None shall make them afraid, because the land shall be desolate, and destitute of men who might disturb them.

3 [c]The fortress also shall cease from Ephraim, and the kingdom from Damascus, and the remnant of Syria: they shall be as the glory of the children of Israel, saith the LORD of hosts.

The fortress; either Samaria, their chief fortress; or all their fortresses or strong holds, the singular number being put for the plural; or all their strength and glory, which answers to the kingdom in the next clause. And the remnant of Syria; or, and from (which particle is easily understood from the former clause) the remnant of Syria. So the sense is, The remainders of Damascus and Syria shall be a headless body, a people without a king. They shall be as the glory; an ironical speech, implying their contemptible condition; for their glory is supposed to be departed from them, by what he had already said of them. The sense is, Syria shall have as much glory as Israel, i. e. neither of them shall have any at all.

4 And in that day it shall come to pass, that the glory of Jacob shall be made thin, and [d]the fatness of his flesh shall wax lean. d ch. 10. 16.

Shall be made thin; or, shall be emptied, as this word is rendered, Isa. xix. 6.

e Jer. 51. 33.

5 [e]And it shall be as when the harvestman gathereth the corn, and reapeth the ears with his arm; and it shall be as he that gathereth ears in the valley of Rephaim.

Reapeth the ears with his arm; taking care, as far as may be, that all may be gathered in, and nothing left. So shall the whole body of the ten tribes be carried away captive, some few gleanings only being left of them, as it is in the harvest. The valley of Rephaim; a very fruitful place near Jerusalem, Josh. xv. 8; xviii. 16.

cir. 741. f ch. 24. 13.

6 ¶ [f]Yet gleaning grapes shall be left in it, as the shaking of an olive tree, two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough, four or five in the outmost fruitful branches thereof, saith the LORD God of Israel.

Some few Israelites were left after their captivity, who joined themselves to the kingdom of Judah, and were carried captive to Babylon with them, from whence also they returned with them, as we find in the history of their return in Ezra and Nehemiah.

g Micah 7. 7.

7 At that day shall a man [g]look to his Maker, and his eyes shall have respect to the Holy One of Israel.

Shall a man, those few men that are left, look to his Maker, they shall sincerely respect, and trust, and worship (all which are understood by looking to) God, and God only, as the next verse explains it. Their afflictions shall at last bring them to repentance.

8 And he shall not look to the altars, the work of his hands, neither shall respect that which his fingers have made, either the groves, or the ‖images. ‖ Or, sun images.

Not look to the altars; not resort or trust to them, or to the worship offered to idols upon them. The work of his hands; their own inventions; for otherwise the altars made by God's command were the work of men's hands. The groves, which were devised and planted by men, as fit places for the worship of their gods; and therefore were forbidden, Deut. xvi. 21; 1 Kings xiv. 15. The images, worshipped in their groves. The word properly signifies images of the sun, either having the form and shape of the sun, or at least erected to his honour and worship; of which see Deut. iv. 19; xvii. 3; 2 Kings xxiii. 5, 11; Jer. viii. 2; vii. 18; xliv. 17, 18.

9 ¶ In that day shall his strong cities be as a forsaken bough, and an uppermost branch, which they left because of the children of Israel: and there shall be desolation.

In that day; in the day of Jacob's trouble, of which he spake ver. 4, and continueth his speech unto these words, and afterwards. An uppermost branch; which he that pruneth the tree neglecteth, either because he esteems it useless and inconsiderable, or because he cannot reach it. Which they left because of the children of Israel: the sense is either, 1. Which they, to wit, the enemies, left, or, which shall be left, (the active verb being put impersonally, as it frequently is in the Hebrew text,) because of or for the children of Israel; which God inclined their hearts to leave or spare, out of his love to his Israel. Thus this is mentioned as a mercy, or mitigation of the calamity. But this seems not to agree either with the foregoing or following words, both which manifestly speak of the greatness of the judgment. And that their strong cities were not left for them, but taken from them, seems evident from ver. 3, 4. Or, 2. As the cities (which words are easily understood out of the former part of the verse, where they are expressed) which they (to wit, the Canaanites, as the seventy interpreters express it; and it was needless to name them, because the history was so well known to them to whom the prophet writes) left or forsook (which they did either by departing from them, or being destroyed out of them) because of (or before, or for fear of) the children of Israel. And this was a very fit example, to awaken the Israelites to a serious belief of this threatening, because God had inflicted the same judgment upon the Canaanites, and that for the same sins of which they were guilty.

h Ps. 68. 19.

10 Because thou hast forgotten [h]the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the rock of thy strength, therefore shalt thou plant pleasant plants, and shalt set it with strange slips:

Thou, O Israel. The Rock of thy strength; that God who was thy only sure defence. Pleasant plants; excellent flowers and fruit trees. Strange slips; fetched from far countries, and therefore highly esteemed. The sense is, Thou shalt use much industry and cost, but to no purpose, as it follows.

‖ Or, removed in the day of inheritance, and there shall be deadly sorrow.

11 In the day shalt thou make thy plant to grow, and in the morning shalt thou make thy seed to flourish: but the harvest shall be ‖ a heap in the day of grief and of desperate sorrow.

In the day shalt thou make thy plant to grow, and in the morning shalt thou make thy seed to flourish; thou shalt from day to day, beginning early in the morning, use all care and diligence that what thou hast planted and sown may thrive; and thou shalt see some effect of thy labours, and some hopes of success. But the harvest shall be a heap in the day of grief and of desperate sorrow: the sense of the words thus rendered is this, But in the time of your grief, &c., or when this grievous calamity shall come, all your harvest shall be but one heap, which in itself is very inconsiderable, and is easily carried away by your enemies. But the place is and may be otherwise rendered, and that very agreeably both to the words and order of the Hebrew text; But the heap (or, heaps, the singular number being most commonly put for the plural) of the harvest (i. e. instead of those heaps of corn which thou didst expect, and which men usually reap in harvest) in the day or time (to wit, of the harvest; or, in the day of calamity, of which I have spoken, ver. 4, 9; or, in a day, i. e. speedily or suddenly) shall be (or, thou shalt have) grief and desperate sorrow. This shall be all thy harvest, and the event of thy labours.

i Jer. 6. 23.

12 ¶ Woe to the ‖ multitude of many people, which make a noise [i]like the noise of the seas; and to the rushing of nations, that make a rushing like the rushing of ‖ mighty waters!

‖ Or, many.

This is a new prophecy, added for the present support and comfort of God's people. The multitude of many people, combined together against Judah. It matters not whether you understand this of the Syrians and Israelites who were united against Judah, or of the Assyrians, whose army consisted of vast numbers, and of men of several nations. The following words agree to either of them. Which make a noise like the noise of the seas; which invade my land and people with great force and fury, as the sea doth, either in its own channel, or when it enters into the land by a breach.

k Ps. 9. 5.

13 The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters: but God shall [k]rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and [l]shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like ‖ a rolling thing before the whirlwind.

l Ps. 83. 13. Hos. 13. 3.

Shall rebuke them; not in words, but deeds; shall discomfit and overthrow them. Like a rolling thing, which is easily moved by every slight touch, and much more by a violent wind. Or, like a wisp, to wit, of straw, which is sometimes rolled together.

14 And behold at eveningtide trouble; and before the morning he is not. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us.

Behold at evening-tide trouble; and before the morning he is not: at even there is a great terror and consternation among God's people, for fear of their enemies; and ere the morning cometh, their enemies are cut off by the hand of God. This was literally and eminently fulfilled in the destruction of Sennacherib's army before Jerusalem. Although the words may be more generally understood of any great and sudden change, and unexpected deliverance, granted to God's people, when their enemies were ready to devour them. And this place may be compared with that in Psal. xxx. 5, Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us: this is a triumphant conclusion, uttered by the prophet in the name of God's people.

CHAP. XVIII.

God, in defence of his church and punishing her enemies, will destroy the Ethiopians, 1—6: an access thereby shall be to the church, 7.

a ch. 20. 4, 5. Ezek. 30. 4, 5, 9. Zeph. 2. 12. & 3. 10.

WOE [a]to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia:

The land; either, 1. Of Arabia; or, 2. Of Ethiopia beyond Egypt; or, 3. Of Egypt, as some both ancient and later interpreters judge; of whom he speaks more darkly in this chapter, and then explains himself more clearly in the next chapter. But this controversy will be best determined by examining the following description. Shadowing with wings: the title of wings is oft given, both in Scripture and in other authors, unto divers things which have some general kind of resemblance to wings, as to the battlements of a house or temple, as Matt. iv. 5; to the skirts of a garment, as Ruth iii. 9, and oft elsewhere; to an army, as Isa. viii. 8; Jer. xlviii. 40; xlix. 22; and to the sails of a ship, as this word is here commonly understood, and as it is unquestionably used in other authors. And shadowing with wings is nothing else but overspread or filled with them; which title may be given either to Ethiopia or Egypt, in regard of the great numbers, either, 1. Of their armies; or rather, 2. Of their ships or vessels sailing upon the sea or rivers: for, 1. In these they exceeded most of those nations who had dealings with the Jews, whereas other nations equalled or exceeded them in numerous armies. But they had an innumerable company of ships or boats, not only because of the commodiousness of the river Nilus, and its many branches, and the Red Sea, and the Midland Sea, for navigation; but also because of the frequent overflowings of the river Nilus over their land, which made them absolutely necessary. 2. This best suits with the next verse. 3. Those ancient and venerable interpreters, the LXX. and the Chaldee, who best understood the Hebrew words and phrases, expound it so. Beyond; or, on this side, as this particle is rendered, Numb. xxi. 13; xxii. 1, and in many other places. Or, as others translate it, besides, which may comprehend both sides; and so the land of which he speaks is supposed to be situated on both sides of this river or rivers; which is most true both of Egypt and of Ethiopia. The rivers: a late learned writer understands this of three or four rivers of Arabia Chussæa, whereof one flows into the Red Sea, another into the Midland Sea, and a third into a great lake; which being obscure and very inconsiderable rivers, and running in so distant channels, it is not probable that this land should receive its denomination from them. And therefore it seems more reasonable to understand this of the great river Nilus, which comes from Ethiopia, and runs through the length of that land, and through Egypt, into the Midland Sea; and which is here called rivers, in the plural number, as it is also Exod. vii. 19; Isa. vii. 18; Ezek. xxix. 3, 4, and unquestionably Nah. iii. 8. And so it might well be called, either for its greatness, or for the many rivulets that run into it, or for the various streams or channels into which it is divided; as Tigris, upon the same reasons, hath the same title of rivers ascribed to it, Nah. ii. 6. Of Ethiopia, Heb. of Cush; by which he seems to understand either, 1. Arabia, which in many places of Scripture comes under that name, though not in all places, as some learned men contend. Nor doth this place seem to be understood here, because these rivers were not interposed between Judea, in which Isaiah wrote this prophecy, and Arabia; nor were the rivers of Arabia, mentioned before, interposed between Judea and Egypt or Ethiopia: and besides, those rivers were but small and inconsiderable; and therefore, as was noted before, this land, whatsoever it is, would not have been denominated from them, especially when it is not properly situated either beyond them, or on this side of them. But if this Cush be Arabia, peradventure it were better to understand the rivers, or the river, as it was explained before, of the Red Sea, beyond which indeed both Egypt and Ethiopia were, in reference to Arabia. And whereas it may be objected that the title of river or rivers is very improperly given to the sea, it may be fairly answered, that as rivers are sometimes called by the name of the sea, as Euphrates is, Isa. xxi. 1; Jer. li. 36; so this very word here rendered river is used concerning the sea in the Hebrew text, Jonah ii. 3, and indeed may not unfitly be given to the Red Sea, which both for its length and breadth hath a manifest resemblance unto some large rivers which are in the world. And so the words may be very truly understood either of Egypt or of Ethiopia, both which countries in this sense are beyond the rivers or river of Arabia. But this I only propose, and submit to the reader's judgment. Or, 2. Ethiopia, properly so called; for the Cushites or Ethiopians are distinguished by Herodotus, and divers other both ancient and later writers, into the eastern, which seem to be the Arabians, and the western, which seem to be the Ethiopians under Egypt. And it is probably thought that these Cushites were first planted in Arabia, and, upon their increase, part of them passed over into Africa by crossing the Red Sea, which was a very short and an easy passage, and settled there. And according to this interpretation of the word, the description of the land given in the last clause of this verse agrees either to Ethiopia or to Egypt, as is evident from what hath been already said for the clearing of this dark and difficult verse.

‖ Or, outspread and polished.
‖ Or, a nation that meteth out, and treadeth down.
† Heb. a nation of line, line, and treading under foot.
‖ Or, whose land the rivers despise.

2 That sendeth ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to [b]a nation ‖scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; ‖†a nation meted out and trodden down, ‖whose land the rivers have spoiled!

That sendeth ambassadors; that at this time are sending ambassadors, after their manner, to strengthen themselves with leagues and alliances, whereby they think to prevent those judgments and calamities which, notwithstanding all their endeavours, I will bring upon them. The first part of this verse seems to contain a further description of the people of the land, mentioned in the foregoing verse. By the sea; either by the Midland Sea, or by the Red Sea, or by great lakes which were both in and near the land of Egypt; it being usual among the Hebrews to give the title of seas to lakes, or any great collections of waters, as hath been oft observed before. In vessels of bulrushes; for both the Egyptians and Ethiopians, as Diodorus Siculus, and Strabo, and Pliny relate, did commonly use boats of rushes or reeds, which were more convenient for them than those of wood, because they were both cheaper, and swifter, and lighter for carriage from place to place, for which they had frequent occasion in those parts; and safer, because of the many rocks, and shelves, and waterfalls of Nilus. Upon the waters, Heb. upon the face or surface of the waters; which is properly expressed, because such vessels being very light, did not sink so deep into the waters as those of wood do. Saying: this word is supplied here, as it is in many other places. And the words here following are supposed to contain the commission and direction given by the people hitherto described unto their messengers, to go to the people described in the following words. But this word saying is not in the Hebrew text, nor is it supplied either by the LXX. or by the Chaldee; nor doth it seem necessary to be understood. And it seems very improbable that the people to whom the messengers were sent should be described in such general and ambiguous terms, and in so large a manner, and not a word said concerning their message. And therefore, with submission, I humbly conceive these to be the words of the prophet, who having in God's name pronounced a woe against the land hitherto described, here continues his speech, and gives a commission from God to these messengers following to go to this nation scattered, &c. Then he calls to all nations to be witnesses of the message sent by these messengers, ver. 3. And then the message follows in the succeeding verses. And so the coherence seems to be clear. Go, ye swift messengers: O you, my angels, or men, whom I have appointed for this work, go speedily to them, and tell them what I am about to do with them, or inflict the following judgment upon them. Scattered, not by banishment, but in their habitations; which agrees well to the Cushites or Ethiopians, both for the vastness of the land inhabited by them, to wit, Ethiopia and Arabia, and for the manner of their habitation, which is more scattered than that of other people. Or these people may be called scattered prophetically, not that they were so, but that they should be so. Or this word may be rendered, as it is in the margin, and by some others, outspread, or drawn out at length; which exactly suits to Egypt, which is much more extended in length than in breadth. Peeled; either, 1. Without hair; for so were the Ethiopians in a great measure, through the great heat of their country. Or, 2. Having their hair shaven or plucked off; for the word doth not signify a natural want of hair, but a violent taking away of hair, as appears from Ezra ix. 3; Neh. xiii. 25; Isa. l. 6. And this plucking or shaving of the hair is metaphorically used in Scripture, to signify some great calamity, whereby men are stripped of all their comforts, as Isa. vii. 20, and elsewhere. And this title may be given to them prophetically, to signify their future and approaching destruction. Terrible from their beginning hitherto; such were the Egyptians and Ethiopians or Cushites, as appears both from sacred and profane histories. And this may be here added as an aggravation of their impending miseries, that they who had been for a long time terrible to others, should now become a contemptible and wretched people. Meted out, Heb. of line, line, i. e. meted out as it were with lines to destruction; of which phrase and custom see 2 Sam. viii. 2; 2 Kings xxi. 13; Psal. lx. 6; Isa. xxxiv. 11. Trodden down by Divine sentence, and to be trodden down by their enemies. The rivers have spoiled: which may be taken either, 1. Literally, because Egypt and Ethiopia were frequently overflowed by those two great rivers Niger and Nilus; although that overflow was rather an advantage to the land, by making it fruitful, than a mischief. Or, 2. Metaphorically and prophetically, of the Assyrians or Babylonians breaking in upon them like a river, and destroying their land and people; of which see more on Ezek. xxx. For powerful enemies invading a country are oft compared to a river, as Isa. viii. 7, 8; lix. 19; Jer. xlvi. 7, 8.

3 All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, [c]when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.

c ch. 5. 26.

See ye; take notice of what I say and God will do. Or, ye shall see it; you shall be eye-witnesses of this dreadful woe or judgment which I am bringing upon the people of whom I have spoken. The prophet doth in a manner summon all nations to bear witness of his prophecy, and of the accomplishment thereof. When he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains, and when he bloweth a trumpet; when God shall gather together the nations, as it were, by the lifting up of an ensign, or by the sound of a trumpet, to execute his judgments upon this people. Heb. as when a man lifts up an ensign upon the mountains, which men can easily see; and as when a man sounds a trumpet, they can hear: no less visible and manifest shall this judgment of God be. Hear ye; ye shall hear it, as in the other branch.

4 For so the LORD said unto me, I will take my rest, and I will ‖consider in my dwelling place like a clear heat ‖upon herbs, and like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest.

‖ Or, regard my set dwelling.

I will take my rest; I will sit still, and not bestir myself, either to help this people, or to hinder their enemies. God is said in Scripture to rest or sit still, when he doth not work on the behalf of a person or people; as, on the contrary, he is said to bestir himself when he acts for them. I will consider; or, I will contemplate or look upon them, to wit, the people of whom I am here speaking. So it is only an ellipsis of the pronoun. Now God's looking in Scripture is variously used; sometimes in way of favour and mercy, as Psal. xxv. 18; Isa. lxvi. 2, &c.; and sometimes in a way of anger and judgment, as Exod. xiv. 24; Psal. xxv. 19, and, as I humbly conceive, in this place. I know some learned men render this and the next word, I will look upon my dwelling-place, and interpret the place of God's gracious respect to his church or people, to preserve and deliver it in the midst of all the confusions and combustions that happen in the world; which interpretation seems altogether unsuitable to the scope and business of the chapter, which in all the foregoing and following verses speaks of another sort of people, even of the Egyptians or Ethiopians, of whom therefore this verse also must be understood, or otherwise we make a breach in the context. In my dwelling-place; in heaven, the place where God dwells, and where he is said to hear prayers, 1 Kings viii. 30, 32, as here to consider men and things, as elsewhere he is said to hear and to look from heaven, as 2 Chron. vi. 21; Isa. lxiii. 15; the Hebrew particles beth, in, and mem, from, being put promiscuously one for another, as hath been noted before. Like a clear heat upon herbs, and like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest. The sense is, that God would look upon them, as the sun with clear heat looks upon herbs, &c. But this may be understood either, 1. In way of mercy, as most take it. And so the sense is, that God would look out and shine forth upon his church and people, and be as comfortable and refreshing to them as the clear heat which shines upon the herbs; or, as others render it, after the rain; or, as a cloud of dew is in the heat of harvest. Or, 2. In way of judgment. And so the sense is, that God would look upon them with as uncomfortable an influence as the sun with a clear heat upon the herbs, which are scorched and killed by it; and as a cloud of the dew, which brings dew or rain, in the heat of harvest, when it is unwelcome and hurtful. And this sense seems best to agree with the following verse, which continueth the metaphor of a harvest, and manifestly speaks not of refreshing, but of the destruction of the fruits thereof.

5 For afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, and the sour grape is ripening in the flower, he shall both cut off the sprigs with pruning hooks, and take away and cut down the branches.

Afore the harvest; before they receive the end of their hopes, and finish the work which they have designed and begun. When the bud is perfect, and the sour grape is ripening in the flower; when the bud or flower is turned into a perfect but unripe grape, which gives hopes of a good vintage. The body of this people are compared to a vine tree. He; the Lord, who is easily understood from the foregoing verse, and who is here represented under the notion of a husbandman or vine-dresser. Take away and cut down the branches; instead of the gathering of the grapes, he shall cut down the body and branches of the tree, and throw it into the fire.

6 They shall be left together unto the fowls of the mountains, and to the beasts of the earth: and the fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them.

The sprigs and branches being cut down and thrown upon the ground, with the unripe grapes upon them, they shall lie upon the earth neglected by men, as being unripe, and unfit for their use, so that either birds or beasts may shelter themselves with them, or feed on them, both summer and winter. You are not to understand that the summer is appropriated to the fowls, and the winter to the beasts; but this is only an elegancy of the Hebrew language to use such distributions, of which we have many instances in prophetical writings.

7 ¶ In that time [d] shall the present be brought unto the LORD of hosts of a people ‖ scattered and peeled, and from a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden under foot, whose land the rivers have spoiled, to the place of the name of the LORD of hosts, the mount Zion.

[d] See Ps. 68. 31. & 72. 10. ch. 16. 1. Zeph. 3. 10. Mal. 1. 11. ‖ Or, out-spread and polished; See ver. 2.

In that day; which is to be taken largely and indefinitely, as it is frequently in the prophets, as we have already seen, and shall more fully see hereafter. At or after that time, when the judgment threatened in the foregoing verses shall be fully and completely executed, whereby that people will be awakened to repentance. A people; the people of whom I am speaking shall present and offer themselves and their sacrifices unto the true God. He speaks of their conversion to God and Christ by the preaching of the gospel; the accomplishment of which promise is recorded in the histories of the church.

CHAP. XIX.

The confusion of Egypt; their intestine dissension; their idols deceive them; cruel lords over them; waters fail them; their trade dead; their princes and counsellors made foolish; their terror before the Lord, 1—17. The calling of Egypt to the church, 18—22. The covenant of Egypt, Assyria, and Israel, 23—25.

THE [a] burden of Egypt. Behold, the LORD [b] rideth upon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt: and [c] the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it.

[a] Jer. 46. 13. Ezek. 29, & 30. [b] Ps. 18. 10. & 104. 3. [c] Ex. 12. 12. Jer. 43. 12.

The burden of Egypt. Some learned men conceive that what was said more generally and darkly in the foregoing chapter, is here more particularly and clearly explained to be meant of Egypt; it being usual for the prophets to mix obscure and plain passages together, and to clear the one by the other. Others understand that chapter of Ethiopia, and this of Egypt. But this controversy must be decided by an exact consideration of all the passages of the former chapter. The Lord rideth, as a general in the head of his army, or as a judge riding the circuit to execute judgment. Upon a swift cloud; which phrase showeth that the judgment shall come speedily, unexpectedly, and unavoidably. And clouds being very unusual in Egypt, the appearance of a cloud was a kind of prodigy, and a prognostic of some grievous calamity. Shall be moved from their seats, and from their former reputation. Or, shall shake or tremble. So far shall they be from helping the Egyptians, as they expect, that they shall tremble for themselves; which divers of the Egyptian gods, being living creatures, might properly do. The heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it; they shall lose all their ancient strength and courage, for which they had been famous formerly.

2 And I will † [d] set the Egyptians against the Egyptians: and they shall fight every one against his brother, and every one against his neighbour; city against city, and kingdom against kingdom.

† Heb. mingle. [d] Judg. 7. 22. 1 Sam. 14. 16, 20. 2 Chron. 20. 23.

I will set the Egyptians against the Egyptians; I will raise civil wars among them. Kingdom against kingdom; for although all Egypt was now one kingdom, and under one king, yet not many years after this time it was divided into twelve several kingdoms, between whom there were many and cruel wars, as is related by the historians of those times, and particularly by Herodotus and Diodorus.

3 And the spirit of Egypt † shall fail in the midst thereof; and I will † destroy the counsel thereof: and they shall [e] seek to the idols, and to the charmers, and to them that have familiar spirits, and to the wizards.

† Heb. shall be emptied. † Heb. swallow up. [e] ch. 8. 19. & 47. 12.

The spirit; either, 1. Their courage. But of that he spake ver. 1. Or, 2. Their understanding, as it is explained in the next clause; for the word spirit is oft put for the reasonable soul, as Eccles. iii. 21; xii. 7, and for the thoughts of the mind, as Prov. xxix. 11; Ezek. xiii. 3. They shall seek to the idols, as not knowing what to do without the help of a higher power.

Or, shut up.
f ch. 20. 4. Jer. 46. 26. Ezek. 29. 19.

4 And the Egyptians will I ‖ give over [f] into the hand of a cruel lord; and a fierce king shall rule over them, saith the Lord, the LORD of hosts.

A fierce king; either, 1. The king of Assyria or Chaldea; or, 2. Those twelve petty kings, the singular number being put for the plural; or, 3. Psammetichus, who being at first one of those twelve kings, waged war with the rest, and subdued them, and conquered all the land of Egypt, and ruled it with rigour.

g Jer. 51. 36. Ezek. 30. 12.

5 [g] And the waters shall fail from the sea, and the river shall be wasted and dried up.

The waters shall fail from the sea; which may be understood either, 1. Metaphorically, of the taking away of their dominion or commerce, &c.; or rather, 2. Properly, as may be gathered from the following words and verses. For as the river Nilus, when it had a full stream, and free course, did pour forth a vast quantity of waters by its seven famous mouths into the sea; so when that was dried up, which is expressed in the next clause, those waters did truly and properly fail from the sea. So there is no need of understanding by sea either the river Nilus, or the great lake of Mœris, which, after the manner of the Hebrews, might be so called. The river, to wit, Nilus, upon whose fulness and overflow both the safety and the wealth of the land depended, as all authors agree; and therefore this was a very terrible judgment. Dried up, not totally, but in a very great measure, as such phrases are commonly used.

h 2 Kings 19. 24.

6 And they shall turn the rivers far away; and the brooks [h] of defence shall be emptied and dried up: the reeds and flags shall wither.

They shall turn the rivers far away; which is to be taken impersonally, as such expressions are very frequently, for, the rivers (those small rivulets by which the waters of Nilus were conveyed and distributed into several parts of the land) shall be turned far away, as they must needs be, when the greater river Nilus, which fed them, was dried up. The brooks of defence; the several branches of the river Nilus, which were a great defence to Egypt, as is well known. The reeds and flags; which were very useful to them for making their boats, which were absolutely necessary in that country, and divers other things. Shall wither; as they commonly do for want of water.

7 The paper reeds by the brooks, by the mouth of the brooks, and every thing sown by the brooks, shall wither, be driven away, † and be no more.

† Heb. and shall not be.

The paper reeds; which by a needle, or other fit instrument, were divided into thin and broad leaves, which being dried and fitted, were used at that time for writing, as our paper is; and consequently was a very good commodity. Sown by the brooks; and much more what was sown in more dry and unfruitful places.

8 The fishers also shall mourn, and all they that cast angle into the brooks shall lament, and they that spread nets upon the waters shall languish.

Because they could catch few or no fish, by which trade they got their living; which also was a great plague to the people, whose common diet this was, because out of superstitious conceits they killed and eat but few living creatures, as appears both from sacred and profane writers.

i 1 Kings 10. 28. Prov. 7. 16. ‖ Or, white works.

9 Moreover they that work in [i] fine flax, and they that weave ‖ networks, shall be confounded.

That work in fine flax; that make fine linen, which was one of their best commodities; of which see 1 Kings x. 28; Prov. vii. 16; Ezek. xxvii. 7.

† Heb. foundations. † Heb. of living things.

10 And they shall be broken in the † purposes thereof, all that make sluices and ponds † for fish.

Thereof, i. e. of Egypt, or of the Egyptians. They shall lose their ends and hopes; for the fishes in them shall die for want of water.

k Num. 13. 22.

11 ¶ Surely the princes of [k] Zoan are fools, the counsel of the wise counsellors of Pharaoh is become brutish: how say ye unto Pharaoh, I am the son of the wise, the son of ancient kings?

Zoan; the chief city, in which the king and court frequently resided. See Psal. lxxviii. 12. Brutish; exceeding foolish, and destructive to themselves. How say ye unto Pharaoh? why do you put such false and foolish words into Pharaoh's mouth? I am the son of the wise; wisdom is hereditary and natural to me. This vain opinion of himself they cherished by their flatteries, although he undid himself and his people by his folly. The son of ancient kings: he derides the vanity of the Egyptians, who used to make great brags of the antiquity of their nation, and especially of their kings, who, as they pretended, had reigned successively for above ten thousand years; which number of years they made up by this craft, by making those successive kings, which reigned together at the same time, in their several Nomi, or provinces.

12 [l] Where are they? where are thy wise men? and let them tell thee now, and let them know what the LORD of hosts hath purposed upon Egypt.

Thy wise men; who pretended that either by their deep policy, or by their skill in astrology or magic, they could certainly foresee things to come.

m Jer. 2. 16. ‖ Or, governors. † Heb. corners.

13 The princes of Zoan are become fools, [m] the princes of Noph are deceived; they have also seduced Egypt, even ‖ † they that are the stay of the tribes thereof.

Noph; another chief city, and one of the king's seats, so called also Jer. ii. 16; xliv. 1; called also Moph in the Hebrew text, Hos. ix. 6; and by other and later authors, Memphis. Even they that are the stay, Heb. even the corner, or the corner-stone, which is the chief support of the building. Whereby he may design either, 1. The king; or, 2. Some eminent statesman of that age, upon whose counsels both king and people depended; or, 3. Their chief counsellors, the singular number being here put collectively, as it is in many other places. The tribes of the provinces, which he calls by a title borrowed from the Hebrews, in whose language he spake and wrote this prophecy.

† Heb. a spirit of perverseness. n 1 Kings 22. 22. ch. 29. 10.

14 The LORD hath mingled † [n] a perverse spirit in the midst thereof: and they have caused Egypt to err in every work thereof, as a drunken man staggereth in his vomit.

Hath mingled; or, hath poured out or given them to drink, as appears from their drunkenness, expressed in the end of the verse; which also suits with the Scripture phrase, whereby a cup signifies God's judgments, as Isa. li. 17, 21, 22; Jer. xxv. 15. A perverse spirit, Heb. a spirit of perversities or crookednesses; or, as the LXX. and Chaldee render it, of error or delusion; a disposition of mind very apt to mistake, and to mislead them into foolish and crooked counsels and courses; which God could easily effect, partly by laying occasions of stumbling in their way, and partly by withdrawing or darkening that wisdom which he had infused, by which alone men can discern their way. In every work thereof; in all their designs and undertakings. Staggereth in his vomit; when he is so excessively drunk, that he reels to and fro, and vomits up his drink.

15 Neither shall there be any work for Egypt, which [o] the head or tail, branch or rush, may do.

All people, both high and low, shall be at their wits' end, not knowing what to do.

p Jer. 51. 30. Nah. 3. 13.

16 In that day shall Egypt [p] be like unto women: and it shall be afraid and fear because of the shaking of the hand of the LORD of hosts, [q] which he shaketh over it.

q ch. 11. 15.

Like unto women; feeble and fearful, as it follows. Because of the shaking of the hand of the Lord of hosts; because they shall perceive that they do not fight with men only, but with the Lord of hosts, who now lifts up his hand against them, as he did against their forefathers, Exod. xiv., the very remembrance whereof is very terrible to them.

17 And the land of Judah shall be a terror unto Egypt, every one that maketh mention thereof shall be afraid in himself, because of the counsel of the LORD of hosts, which he hath determined against it.

The land of Judah shall be a terror unto Egypt; either, 1. Because of Judah's calamities and desolations; for Judah was their bulwark against the Assyrians and Babylonians; and when this bulwark was removed, the Egyptians, their neighbours and confederates, had just cause to fear. Or, 2. Because of their manifold both former and later injuries against Judah, for which they now apprehend that God is calling them to an account; which interpretation seems to be favoured by the following words; for their fear of mentioning Judah's name seems to have proceeded partly from the sense of their guilt and miscarriages towards Judah, and partly from their apprehensions and experience of the irresistible power and justice of the God of Judah, whom they had provoked, and who was now marching to plead his own and Judah's cause against them. Compare Jer. xxiii. 34, &c. Which he hath determined; because God is now about to execute his appointed judgment. Against it; against Egypt.

18 ¶ In that day shall five cities in the land of Egypt [r] speak †the language of Canaan, and swear to the LORD of hosts; one shall be called, The city ‖of destruction.

r Zeph. 3. 9.
‖ Or, of Heres, or, of the sun.

In that day; after that time, as this phrase is used, Isa. iv. 2; xviii. 7, and oft elsewhere. In the times of the gospel, which are oft noted in the prophets by that very expression. Five cities; a considerable number of their chief cities, a certain number being put for an uncertain. Speak the language of Canaan; profess the Jewish religion, agree with them in the same mind; which is fitly signified by speaking the same language, because out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. Thus the changing and purifying of a people's lips is used to signify the change of their hearts and lives, Zeph. iii. 9; and praising God with one mouth, to note their unity or consent in the faith, Rom. xv. 6. Swear to the Lord of hosts: it is well observed by some learned interpreters, that he doth not say swear by the Lord, which is the most common phrase, and which, being one eminent part and act of worship, is put for the whole; but swear to the Lord; which phrase is also used 2 Chron. xv. 14; Psal. cxxxii. 2; Isa. xlv. 23; and it implies the dedication, or oblation, and yielding up of a person or thing to the Lord, by a solemn vow, or covenant, or oath, as appears by the places now quoted. In like manner God is said to swear to a man, Deut. xxvi. 15, and one man to another, Gen. xxi. 23, when they oblige themselves by oath to do such or such a thing for them. And therefore what is called swearing to God, Isa. xlv. 23, is rendered or expounded bowing the knee (which signifies the subjection of a man's self) to God, and confessing to God, Rom. xiv. 11. One; not one of the five, for they are supposed to be saved in the foregoing clause; but one city, or another city, the sixth city. As divers cities shall be converted and saved, so some other cities shall continue in their impenitency, and be destroyed. Others render this clause thus, one of them shall be called, (or, shall be; for to be called is oft put for to be,) The city of the sun; or, as the Grecians call it, Heliopolis; which the Egyptians called On, Gen. xli. 45; which was a very eminent city, and a chief seat of idolatry, being a city of priests, as Strabo reports; and therefore its conversion to the faith was more wonderful.

19 In that day [s] shall there be an altar to the LORD in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the LORD.

s Gen. 28. 18. Ex. 24. 4. Josh. 22. 10, 26, 27.

An altar for God's worship; not a Levitical, but a spiritual and evangelical altar, as appears from hence, because that was confined to one place, Deut. xii. 13, 14. The altar is put for the worship of God, as it is in many places both of the Old and New Testament. And nothing is more common in the prophets than to speak of gospel worship in the phrases of the law. A pillar; a monument of the true religion. Here also he alludes to the ancient custom of erecting pillars to God; of which see Gen. xii. 7; xxviii. 18, &c.; Josh. xxii. 10; xxiv. 26, 27. At the border thereof; as before, in the midst of it. The meaning is, There shall be evidences of their piety in all places.

20 And [t] it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the LORD of hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the LORD because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a saviour, and a great one, and he shall deliver them.

t See Josh. 4. 20. & 22.

And it, the altar or pillar last mentioned, shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord, to testify that they own the Lord for their God. They shall cry unto the Lord because of the oppressors; being sorely distressed, and finding the weakness of their idols, they shall turn unto the true God. A Saviour, and a great one; a great or mighty Saviour, by a common figure called hendiaduo, as a cloud and smoke is put for a smoking cloud, Isa. iv. 5; or, a Saviour and a Prince, even Christ, who is so called, Acts v. 31, as is evident from the whole context, which apparently speaks of gospel times. And the emphatical phrase here used directed them to look for an extraordinary Saviour.

21 And the LORD shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the LORD in that day, and [u] shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall vow a vow unto the LORD, and perform it.

u Mal. 1. 11.

Shall know the Lord; shall acknowledge, and love, and serve him; for words of knowledge in Scripture commonly include affection and practice, as hath been often observed. Shall do sacrifice and oblation; shall worship God spiritually; which yet is signified by typical phrases, as it is Mal. i. 11, and in many other places. And perform it; they shall not only profess and promise piety, but shall seriously and diligently practise it.

22 And the LORD shall smite Egypt: he shall smite and heal it: and they shall return even to the LORD, and he shall be intreated of them, and shall heal them.

He shall smite and heal it; God will afflict them by oppressors, ver. 20, and otherwise; and by those afflictions he will convert and save them.

23 ¶ In that day [x] shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.

x ch. 11. 16.

The Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria; they who were implacable enemies one to another, and both to the church and people of God, shall now be reconciled and united together in the service of God, and love to his church. Shall serve, to wit, the Lord, who is easily understood from ver. 21, 25.

24 In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land:

The third; the third party, to wit, in that sacred league, whereby all of them oblige themselves to God. With Egypt and with Assyria: these people are named because they were the most obstinate and malicious enemies to God's church, and therefore in a special manner accursed by God; but they are here put synecdochically for all the Gentiles. Even a blessing: this is peculiar to Israel, who is not only a third party, as the others are, but is the most eminent and blessed of the three, as being the fountain, or rather the conduit-pipe, by which the blessing is conveyed to the other two, because Christ was to be born of them, and the gospel church and ordinances were first established among them, and from them derived to the Gentiles. In the midst of the land; or, of the earth; which may be added, to imply that God's blessing should be conveyed from and by Israel, not only to the Egyptians and the Assyrians, but to all the nations of the earth, in the midst of which the land of Israel might well be said to lie. Or, of that land of which I am here speaking; or, the singular number being put for the plural, of those lands, Egypt and Assyria, between which Israel lay.

25 Whom the LORD of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria [y] the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance.

y Ps. 100. 3. ch. 29. 23. Hos. 2. 23. Eph. 2. 10.

Whom the Lord of hosts shall bless; whom, i. e. which people, to wit, Israel, Egypt, and Assyria, expressed both in the foregoing verse, and in the following clause of this verse; of whom he speaks as of one people, in the singular number, because they are all united into one body and church. Or, For or because (as this particle is taken, 1 Sam. xv. 15, and elsewhere) the Lord of hosts shall bless him or them. So this is added as a reason why he said Israel should be a blessing to them all. My people: this title, and those which follow, that were peculiar to the people of Israel, shall now be given to these and all other nations of the world.

CHAP. XX.

The captivity of Egypt and Ethiopia represented, to take off the Jews from seeking to them for help.

IN the year that [a] Tartan came unto Ashdod, (when Sargon the king of Assyria sent him,) and fought against Ashdod, and took it;

a 2 Kings 18. 17.

Tartan; a great commander in Sennacherib's army, 2 Kings xviii. 17. Ashdod; an eminent and strong city of the Philistines, Josh. xiii. 3; 1 Sam. v. 1, in the utmost part of the land of Canaan, towards Egypt. Sargon: what king of Assyria this was is much disputed. It is well known, and confessed, that one and the same person hath frequently several names, both in Scripture, as hath been observed again and again, and in other authors. And therefore this may be either, 1. Shalmaneser, who, when he took Samaria, might also by Tartan take this place. Or, 2. Sennacherib, who, before he came to Jerusalem, came up against and took all the fenced cities of Judah, 2 Kings xviii. 13, of which Ashdod might be reckoned one, as being in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xiii. 3; xv. 47, and taken by Hezekiah from the Philistines, as it seems very probable from that passage, 2 Kings xviii. 8, He smote the Philistines, even unto Gaza, and the borders thereof, from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city. Or, 3. Esarhaddon, Sennacherib's son, who, by cutting off the first letter, is called Sarchedon, Tob. i. 21, and thence possibly, by abbreviation, Sargon; who might do this thing in Hezekiah's time, some years after his father's death, and his coming to the empire, although it be not recorded in Scripture; for no man doubts that there were many great actions in those times which are wholly omitted in the sacred writings.

2 At the same time spake the LORD † by Isaiah the son of Amoz, saying, Go and loose [b] the sackcloth from off thy loins, and put off thy shoe from thy foot. And he did so, [c] walking naked and barefoot.

b Zech. 13. 4. c 1 Sam. 19. 24. Mic. 1. 8, 11.

Loose the sackcloth; ungird it and put it off; the antecedent put for the consequent, which is very usual, as hath been often noted. God would sometimes have his prophets to add to their word a visible sign, to awaken people's minds to a more serious consideration of the matters proposed to them. The sackcloth; either, 1. His coarse and hairy garment, which the prophets used to wear, 2 Kings i. 8; Zech. xiii. 4, as many understand it. But that is expressed by another word in the places quoted, and never, to my knowledge, by this word. Or, 2. His mournful habit, which was commonly made of sackcloth, and which he wore in token of his hearty grief for the great calamities which were already come upon Israel, and were either come or coming upon Judah. From off thy loins; upon which the upper garments were commonly girt, 1 Kings xx. 32; 2 Kings ix. 1. Walking naked; not wholly naked, which had been indecent and scandalous, and withal very dangerous, at least to do so for three years, as he did, ver. 3; but without his upper garment, as slaves and prisoners used to do, whose posture he was to represent, ver. 4. And so the word naked is used 1 Sam. xix. 24; 2 Sam. vi. 20; John xxi. 7. Thus also men are said to be naked when they are ill clothed, as Job xxii. 6; Matt. xxv. 36; 1 Cor. iv. 11; James ii. 15. Barefoot; after the manner of mourners, 2 Sam. xv. 30, and captives, Jer. ii. 25.

3 And the LORD said, Like as my servant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoot three years [d] for a sign and wonder upon Egypt and upon Ethiopia;

d ch. 8. 18.

Walked naked and barefoot three years; not constantly, but when he went abroad among the people, to whom this was appointed for a sign. Some think it was only three days, a day being usually put for a year in prophetical scriptures, as Numb. xiv. 33, 34; Ezek. iv. 4—6. But although a day be put for a year, yet a year is never put for a day. A sign; either, 1. When this judgment should come, to wit, three years after this prophecy. Or, 2. How long it should continue, for three years; for some have observed that the Chaldeans spent so much time in conquering Egypt and Ethiopia.

4 So shall the king of Assyria lead away † the Egyptians prisoners, and the Ethiopians captives, young and old, naked and barefoot, [e] even with their buttocks uncovered, to the † shame of Egypt.

† Heb. the captivity of Egypt.
e 2 Sam. 10. 4. ch. 3. 17. Jer. 13. 22, 26. Mic. 1. 11.

Lead away, like beasts, of which this word is commonly used. Their buttocks uncovered; having their garments cut off by the middle, to the discovery of their buttocks and their secret parts. Compare 2 Sam. x. 4; Isa. xlvii. 2.

5 [f] And they shall be afraid and ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory.

f 2 Kings 16. 21. ch. 30. 3, 5, 7. & 36. 6.

They; all they that shall trust to them, and glory in them, as appears from the following words; the pronoun they being put indefinitely here, as it is Isa. ii. 19, and elsewhere. But under this general expression the Israelites not only are comprehended, but seem to be principally intended, because to them this prophecy was delivered, and they were eminently guilty of this sin; of which see Isa. xxx. 2; xxxi. 1.

6 And the inhabitant of this ‖ isle shall say in that day, Behold, such is our expectation, whither we flee for help to be delivered from the king of Assyria: and how shall we escape?

‖ Or, country, Jer. 47. 4.

Of this isle; of this land, in which the prophet was, and to whose inhabitants these words were uttered. For the title of isles or islands in Scripture is frequently given not only to lands encompassed with the sea, but also to such countries as lay upon the sea-coasts, as Psal. lxxii. 10; Ezek. xxvi. 15, 18, as Palestina or Canaan did, yea, to such countries as are remote or separated from that place in or of which the words are spoken, as Esth. x. 1; Isa. xxiv. 15; xlii. 4, 10, &c., as Canaan was from Egypt, or at least from Ethiopia. Add to this, that Canaan had some resemblance with an isle, either because it was almost encompassed with the Midland Sea on one side, and with the Dead Sea, and the Sea of Galilee or Tiberias and Jordan on the other side; or because, as isles are separated from other lands by the sea, so this land and people were separated from all the rest of the world by God's special providence, and presence, and worship. Such is our expectation; so vain is our hope placed upon such a people as are unable to deliver themselves, and much more to deliver us. Whither we flee for help; to whom we now and usually trust; for this was the common disease of the people of Israel, although Hezekiah was in a good measure free from it, as we read, 2 Kings xviii. 5. How shall we escape? either by their help, who cannot defend themselves; or by our own strength, seeing they who were much more potent than we are could not escape.

CHAP. XXI.

The prophet's fear and trouble at his vision of Babylon's ruin by the Medes and Persians, 1—4. He mocketh Babel, 5—9. Edom, scorning the prophet, is called to repentance, 11, 12. The time of Arabia's calamity set, 13—17.

THE burden of the desert of the sea.
a Zech. 9. 14. As [a]whirlwinds in the south pass through; so it cometh from the desert, from a terrible land.

The desert of the sea; Babylon, as is evident both from her destroyers, the Medians, ver. 2, and especially from ver. 9, where she is named. She seems to be called desert prophetically, to intimate, that although she was now a most populous city and kingdom, yet shortly she should be turned into a desolate wilderness, as was threatened, chap. xiii. 19, &c. But the word here rendered desert sometimes signifies a plain, as a very learned interpreter hath observed, and thus it most properly agrees to Babylon, and the land about it, which geographers note to be a very plain country, without any considerable mountains in it. It is called the desert of the sea, because it is situate by the sea, as the isles of the sea, Esth. x. 1, are those countries which were beside the sea. And the title of the sea might well be given to the waters of Babylon, because of the great plenty and multitude of them, the great channel of Euphrates, and the several several lesser channels cut out, and the vast lakes of water; in which respects it is said to sit upon many waters, Jer. li. 13, the name of sea being given by the Hebrews to every great collection of waters. In the south; in those parts which lay southward from Judea, where there were many and great deserts, in which the winds have greater force. See Job i. 19; Jer. iv. 11. Pass through; as meeting with no stop or opposition. It; the burden or judgment. Or, he, the Median, as it is in the next verse. Cometh from the desert; from Media and Persia; thus expressed, either because those countries were full of deserts, or because a great desert lay between them and Chaldea, as geographers and historians report. From a terrible land; from the Medes, a warlike and formidable people, as appears both from sacred and profane writers.

† Heb. hard. 2 A †grievous vision is declared unto b ch. 33. 1. me; [b]the treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously, and the spoiler spoileth.
c ch. 13. 17. Jer. 49. 34. [c]Go up, O Elam: besiege, O Media; all the sighing thereof have I made to cease.

A grievous vision; a vision or prophecy, containing dreadful calamities which were to fall upon Babylon. The treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously, and the spoiler spoileth: this is spoken either, 1. Of the Chaldeans, as their sin, for which God sends the following judgment. So the sense is, The Chaldeans still persist in the practice of treachery and rapine, to which they have been so long accustomed. Or, 2. Of the Medes and Persians, who are here noted to pay the Babylonians in their own coin, and to use the same treachery and violence towards them which they had done to others. To which purpose the words are and may well be rendered otherwise; either thus, the treacherous dealer hath found a treacherous dealer, and the spoiler hath found a spoiler; or thus, O thou that dealest treacherously with the treacherous dealer, and that spoilest the spoiler, go up, O Elam, &c., as it followeth. These words will be much illustrated by compared them with Isa. xxxiii. 1. There is no doubt to be made but the Medes and Persians used treachery as well as force against Babylon. And besides other instances now unknown, we have one upon record, of their entertaining those two traitors, Gadatas and Gobrias, and following their counsel and conduct in taking the city, which made them partakers of their treason. Go up, to fight against her. These are God's words, either giving them command and commission to do so, or rather foretelling what they would do; which is oft done in this form of speech. Elam; Persia, called Elam synecdochically, because Elam was an eminent province of Persia, bordering upon the Medes. Besiege, to wit, Babylon, ver. 9. All the sighing thereof; either, 1. Babylon's sighing, which shall cease, because they shall have no time to sigh, or lament their miseries, being suddenly surprised, and cut off in a moment, as they were. As God is said to seek out the wickedness of wicked men till he find none, Psal. x. 15, when he utterly destroyeth them in or with their sins. Or, 2. The sighing and groanings of God's people and other nations under the heavy oppressions of that potent and cruel empire; the pronoun her, or thereof, being taken here not passively, as commonly it is; but actively, or efficiently, as sometimes it is, as Deut. xi. 25, your fear, i. e. the fear of you; and Job xxxiii. 7, my terror, i. e. the terror or dread of me upon thee.

3 Therefore [d]are my loins filled with
d ch. 15. 5. & 16. 11.
pain: [e]pangs have taken hold upon me,
e ch. 13. 8.
as the pangs of a woman that travaileth:
I was bowed down at the hearing of it;
I was dismayed at the seeing of it.

My loins; which he mentions with respect to the following similitude of child-bearing, in which the loins are sorely pained. And this the prophet speaks, either, 1. In the name and person of the Babylonian. Or rather, 2. In his own name; which is most natural, and agrees best with the last clause of the verse, which plainly speaks of the torment which he had in the mere hearing of the word, and seeing the vision, and not of that which they had in the feeling of it; although the latter is implied in the former; and the prophet expresseth his horror in hearing and seeing, to intimate the dreadful horror which should seize upon them when it came upon them. As the pangs of a woman that travaileth; sharp and grievous pains.

4 ‖My heart panted, fearfulness af-‖ Or, My mind wandered.
frighted me: [f]the night of my pleasure f Deu. 28. 67. hath he †turned into fear unto me.
† Heb. put.

The night of my pleasure; the night, in which I used to have a sweet repose and sleep. He seems to have had this vision in a night. But withal this horror of the prophet by night was typical, and did signify that grievous horror and destruction which should befall the Babylonians in a night of great feasting and jollity, as it did, Dan. v. 1, 30. Hath he, God, who showed him that vision, turned into fear unto me; into a time and matter of fear.

5 [g]Prepare the table, watch in the g Dan. 5. 5.
watchtower, eat, drink: arise, ye princes, and anoint the shield.

Prepare the table; furnish it with meats and drinks, as it follows. The prophet foretells what the Babylonians would be doing when their enemies were at their doors, that they would give up themselves to feasting and security. Watch in the watch-tower, to give us notice of any approaching danger, that in the mean time we may more securely indulge ourselves in mirth and pleasures. Arise, ye princes; either, 1. Ye Medes and Persians; whilst your enemies the Babylonians are feasting securely, prepare to make your assault. Or, 2. Ye princes of Babylon; arise from the table and run to your arms. Which sudden alarm and change of their posture proceeded from tidings out of the watch-tower, as may be gathered from the former clause, and is more fully expressed in the following verses. Anoint the shield; prepare yourselves and your arms for the battle approaching. The shield is put for all their weapons of offence and defence. They used to anoint their shields with oil, partly to preserve and polish them, and partly to make them slippery, that their enemies' darts might not fasten in them, but slide off from them.

6 For thus hath the LORD said unto me, Go, set a watchman, let him declare what he seeth.

Thus hath the Lord said unto me; I speak not my own fancies, but what God hath made me to see and hear in a vision; the particulars whereof are related in the following verses. A watchman; either, 1. A prophet; such being oft so called, as Ezek. iii. 17; xxxiii. 2. Or rather, 2. A military watchman. For this was now done only in a vision, which yet did foresignify what should be done really afterwards. Let him declare, to thee in vision, to them really.

7 [h]And he saw a chariot with a couple of horsemen, a chariot of asses, and a chariot of camels; and he hearkened diligently with much heed:

And he saw; a short speech for he told me that he saw. A chariot, not for burden, but for war, in which chariots were then much used. With a couple of horsemen; attended with two horsemen. So there were both chariots and troops of horsemen. Or, with a couple of horses, as this word is sometimes used, as 1 Sam. viii. 11; 2 Sam. i. 6. The chariot was drawn with two horses. A chariot of asses, and a chariot of camels; two chariots, one drawn by asses, (under which title some understand mules, as being engendered of asses,) and the other by camels; whereby he signifies the variety and abundance of warlike provisions which the Medes and Persians should have for this expedition, and particularly of chariots, whereof some were for the carriage of necessary things, and others for the battle. He hearkened diligently; he carefully observed what he saw, and what he could further discover.

f Or, cried as a lion.
i Hab. 2. 1.
‖ Or, every night.

8 And ‖he cried, A lion: My lord, I stand continually upon the [i]watchtower in the daytime, and I am set in my ward ‖whole nights:

And he cried, A lion: the sense of the words thus rendered is this, The watchman cried out, I see also a lion, to wit, marching before the horsemen and chariots already mentioned; which they suppose to represent Cyrus or Darius marching in the head of their armies. Or, as it is rendered in the margin, and by divers others, he cried as (which particle is oft understood, as hath been formerly and frequently noted) a lion, with a terrible cry, as being affrighted with the vision, and withal signifying the dreadfulness of that judgment which was here represented as coming upon Babylon. My lord; the watchman speaks these words either to God, or to the prophet, who by command from God had set him in this place and station; to whom therefore he gives the following account of his discharge of the work wherewith he was intrusted. I stand continually upon the watch-tower in the day time, and I am set in my ward whole nights; according to thy command I have stood, and do yet stand, continually, both day and night, upon my watch-tower.

9 And, behold, here cometh a chariot of men, with a couple of horsemen. And he answered and said, [k]Babylon is fallen, is fallen; and [l]all the graven images of her gods he hath broken unto the ground.

Behold; the sum of what I have discovered is this. A chariot of men; not filled with goods, as chariots of burden used to be; but provided with men, to fight from or with them. With a couple of horsemen; understand, and a chariot of asses, and a chariot of camels; which is easily understood from ver. 7, where they are expressed. He; the prophet Isaiah, who set the watchman; or the Lord, by whose command he was set, ver. 6, who here gives an explication of the vision. All the graven images of her gods; which is mentioned as an evidence that she was fully conquered, because otherwise they would not have suffered their idols to have been thrown to the ground. He hath broken; God, by the hands of Cyrus, his instrument. Or it is an indefinite speech, he hath broken, &c., for they are broken, &c.

m Jer. 51. 33.
† Heb. son.

10 [m]O my threshing, and the †corn of my floor: that which I have heard of the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, have I declared unto you.

Threshing is here put for the corn threshed, as it is explained in the following words; the act being frequently put for the object, as captivity for the captives, fear for the thing feared, &c., as hath been noted before. And the corn threshed is here metaphorically put for people sorely afflicted and punished, which is oft expressed by threshing, as Isa. xxv. 10; xli. 15; Micah iv. 13, &c. This is spoken either, 1. Of the Jews, to whom he now turneth his speech, whom God did grievously thresh and afflict by the Babylonians, and whom he here comforts with these tidings, as if he had said, Though thou wilt be threshed first, yet Babylon shall be threshed last, and most dreadfully, and their threshing shall be thy deliverance. This interpretation is thought necessary, because of the latter clause of the verse, wherewith this is to be joined. Or, 2. Of Babylon. O my threshing; or, thou art my threshing, whom I have undertaken to thresh and punish. And so this is fitly mentioned here, to assure them that this prophecy of Babylon's fall must necessarily be accomplished, because the Almighty was engaged in the work. And this interpretation seems not to be inconsistent with the rest of the verse, as we shall see. The corn of my floor; the corn which I will cause to be threshed upon the floor, Heb. the son of my floor. For the title of son is oft given to lifeless things, as arrows are called the sons of the bow, or of the quiver, Job v. 7; xli. 28, &c. That which I have heard of the Lord of hosts have I declared; what I have foretold is not my own invention, but the word of God, and therefore shall infallibly come to pass. Unto you; either, 1. Unto you my people, or hearers; for all the prophecies, even concerning other nations, were published to them, and for their use and comfort: or, 2. Unto (or concerning, as this Hebrew particle is sometimes used, as the learned know) you Babylonians, to whom this was in some sort declared, because it was published amongst the Jews, and by their means might easily come to the knowledge of other people, and consequently of the Babylonians. Nor is it unusual for the prophets, in their prophecies delivered to God's people concerning Babylon, by an apostrophe to turn their speech to the Babylonians themselves; of which we have instances, Jer. l. 24, 31; li. 13, 14, 25, 26.

n 1 Chr. 1. 30. Jer. 49. 7, 8. Ezek. 35. 2. Obad. 1.

11 ¶ [n]The burden of Dumah. He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night?

Of Dumah; either, 1. Of a part of Arabia, so called from Dumah, one of Ishmael's race, Gen. xxv. 14; 1 Chron. i. 30. Or rather, 2. Of Edom or Idumea, as seems most probable from the mention of Mount Seir, which was a part of Edom; which may here be called Dumah, either by an abbreviation, or cutting off the first letter from Idumea, as Ram is put for Aram, 1 Chron. ii. 9; Job xxxii. 2, or rather prophetically and sarcastically; for Dumah signifies silent; whereby he intimates that Edom, which was much given to vain boasting and railing against God, and against his people, as we read elsewhere, should be brought to silence and utter ruin. And such new, and enigmatical, and significant names are elsewhere given by the prophets to divers known places, as Babylon is called Sheshach, Jer. xxv. 26, and Egypt Mazor, &c. He, to wit, Dumah, or the people of Dumah, of whom he speaks, or one of them in the name and by the appointment of the rest. Calleth to me; to the watchman, as appears by the following words; for the prophet delivers his prophecy in the form of a dialogue between the people and the watchman. Out of Seir; out of Edom, which is frequently called Seir as Gen. xxxii. 3; xxxvi. 8; 2 Chron. xx. 10; xxv. 11, &c. Watchman; whereby he means either, 1. The prophet Isaiah, whom they call watchman, either seriously, or in scorn, because the prophets were so called by God, and by the people of the Jews; or, 2. The watchman of Edom, whom they had set, as people use to do in times of great danger. What of the night? the night is taken either, 1. Metaphorically, for a time of tribulation. So they ask the prophet what he hath to say concerning that night of calamity which he had so long and oft threatened to them, whereof as yet they saw no appearance. Or, 2. properly, the night being the proper and chief time in which the watchman's care is most necessary, because then their enemies had opportunity to do them most harm. So the people are supposed to come to him very early in the morning, to inquire what had happened in the night; which shows a state of great perplexity and fear, which might well be called a burden, both because fear in itself is a great torment, and because this fear was a sign or presage of their approaching miseries. What of the night? the repetition of the same words shows the greatness of their solicitude and fear.

12 The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will enquire, enquire ye: return, come.

The morning cometh, and also the night: the night is past without any great mischief to you, and the comfortable light of the morning is approaching, which freeth men's minds from the terrors of the night; but although the morning be coming, it will be gone, and the night will return, and your fears with it. The night seems to be here taken properly, as the morning is; yet so that he alludes to the metaphorical signification of the word, and intimates that the night of affliction was coming upon them. If ye will inquire, inquire ye: return, come. If this watchman be the prophet Isaiah, then the sense of these words is this, If you will be inquiring, inquire sincerely and seriously of God, by me, concerning your danger, and the way to prevent it; return unto the Lord by true repentance, who alone can secure you, and come unto me for direction. But if it be their own watchman, which, with submission, I conceive most probable, the sense is, If you will inquire, inquire: I perceive, by what I have observed this night, that your danger is not passed, and there will be occasion for further inquiries from time to time; and therefore return, come, i. e. either return to them that sent you with this message, and then come to me for further tidings; or come again, as return, lie down, is put for lie down again, 1 Sam. iii. 5; come to me the next morning, as you have reason to do, and so from morning to morning, for I see every night is likely to bring some evil tidings to you.

o Jer. 49. 28. 13 ¶ °The burden upon Arabia. In the forest in Arabia shall ye lodge, O ye p 1 Chron. 1. 9, 32. travelling companies p of Dedanim.

In the forest; not as you used to do, in the houses or tents of the Arabians; whereby he implies that that populous country should be turned into a desolate wilderness. Travelling companies: in those parts travellers then did and still do go together in companies. See Gen. xxxvii. 25, 28; Job vi. 19. Dedanim; or, Dedamites; of whom see on Gen. xxv. 3; Jer. xxv. 23; xlix. 8. These were merchants, and used to trade with Tyre, Ezek. xxvii. 20; xxxviii. 13, and their way lay through the same parts of Arabia.

14 The inhabitants of the land of Tema ‖ Or, bring ye. ‖brought water to him that was thirsty, they prevented with their bread him that fled.

Tema; a part of Arabia; of which see Job vi. 19; Jer. xxv. 23. They prevented with their bread him that fled; whereby he implies that those other Arabians, against whom this prophecy is principally directed, should be reduced to great scarcity of all necessary provisions, and forced to flee for their lives from a bloody enemy, as is more fully expressed in the next verse.

‖ Or, for fear. † Heb. from the face. 15 For they fled ‖ † from the swords, from the drawn sword, and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war.

Within a year, from the time of this prophecy. According to the years of an hireling, to wit, an exact year; for hirelings diligently observe and wait for the end of the year, when they are to receive their wages. All the glory; their power, and riches, and all things wherein they used to glory. This was executed by the Assyrians. Kedar; of whom see on Psal. cxx. 5; Jer. xlix. 28.

17 And the residue of the number of † Heb. bows. †archers, the mighty men of the children of Kedar, shall be diminished: for the Lord God of Israel hath spoken it.

Archers; bows and arrows were their chief weapons, and they were expert in the use of them, both against beasts and men, as occasion required.

The anguish of Judah: the prophet much grieved, 1—5, by the Persians, Medes, and Assyrians, 6, 7. He reproveth their human wisdom, 8—11, and profane joy, 12, 13; which God would certainly punish, 14. Shebnah's deprivation for his pride, 15—19. Eliakim put in his place: his glory, 20—25.

THE burden of the valley of vision. cir. 712. What aileth thee now, that thou art wholly gone up to the housetops?

Of the valley of vision; of Judah; and especially of the city of Jerusalem, as the next verse showeth; which is called a valley, because a great part of it stood in a valley, and comparatively to those higher mountains wherewith it was encompassed; of which see Psal. cxxi. 1; cxxv. 2; Isa. lii. 7; and the valley of vision, because of the many and clear visions or revelations of God's mind in that place, above all other parts of the world. As the prophets are called seers, 1 Sam. ix. 9, so prophecy is frequently called vision, as 1 Sam. iii. 1; Isa. i. 1; Ezek. vii. 13, 26. Gone up to the housetops, as they used to do in times of great confusion and consternation, that they might mourn, and look, and cry to Heaven for help. Compare Isa. xv. 3; Jer. xlviii. 38.

2 Thou that art full of stirs, a tumultuous city, a joyous city: thy slain a ch. 32. 13. men are not slain with the sword, nor dead in battle.

Thou art full of stirs; or, thou who wast full of stirs, or noises, to wit, of joyful shouts, as the following words limit it, and as this word is used, Zech. iv. 7, though elsewhere it be taken for doleful cries. Tumultuous; or, streperous; full of noise and clamour, through revelling and jollity. See Prov. xx. 1; Zech. ix. 15. Not slain with the sword, nor dead in battle, but either by famine or pestilence in the siege, as many died, Jer. xiv. 18; xxxviii. 2, or in their flight, as others were; both which were inglorious kinds of death.

3 All thy rulers are fled together, they are bound † by the archers: all that are † Heb. of the bow. found in thee are bound together, which have fled from far.

Thy rulers; Zedekiah and his chief commanders, whose flight he foretells. They are bound by the archers, Heb. from the bow, i. e. so as they were disenabled from using the bow; which is a usual Hebraism; as from a king is put for from being a king, 1 Sam. xv. 23; and from seeing, Psal. lxix. 23, is rendered that they cannot see, Rom. xi. 10. But this word is by some, and may very well be, joined to the foregoing clause; for the words in the Hebrew lie thus, All thy rulers are fled together from the bow, (or, bow-men, as this word is rendered, Isa. xxi. 17,) they are bound; which seems most plain and unforced, and suits best with the following words, as also with the prophet's use of the same phrase, chap. xxi. 15, they fled——from the bent bow, &c. All that are found in thee; that remained there with Zedekiah in the siege; for those who had fled to the Chaldeans saved their lives and liberties. Are bound together in fetters, Jer. lii. 11. Which have fled from far; which fled to Jerusalem from the remotest parts of the land. But he rather speaks of those who fled from Jerusalem, and from their enemies, whereof some had fled away, but were pursued and overtaken by their enemies, and bound, as others had been. And the words seem to be well rendered, they fled far away, as this very word is used, Isa. xxiii. 7; which may be understood either of the same persons who fled, but were taken in their flight, as was now said; or of others, who fled away, when others abode there and were bound.

4 Therefore said I, Look away from b Jer. 4. 19. & 9. 1. † Heb. I will be bitter in weeping. me; b †I will weep bitterly, labour not Look away from me; take off your eyes and thoughts from me, and leave me alone, that I may take my fill of sorrows. Labour not to comfort me; for all your labour will be lost, I neither can nor will receive any consolation. Of the daughter of my people; of that city and nation whereof I am a member. The title of daughter is oft given both to cities and nations, as hath been noted before.

d Lam. 1. 5. & 2. 2. treading down, and of perplexity [d] by the Lord God of hosts in the valley of vision, breaking down the walls, and of crying to the mountains.

Of treading down; in which my people are trodden under foot by their insolent enemies. Of perplexity by the Lord God of hosts: this is added, partly to show that this did not happen without God's providence; and partly to aggravate their calamity, because not only men, but God himself, fought against them. Breaking down the walls of the strong cities of Judah; which was done by Sennacherib, 2 Kings xxv. 10. Crying to the mountains, with such loud and dismal outcries as should reach to the neighbouring mountains, and make them ring again therewith.

Elam; the Persians, who now, and for a long time after, were subject to the Assyrian and Chaldean emperors, and were employed by them in their wars. Bare the quiver, being expert bow-men, as appears from Jer. xlix. 35, and from Strabo's testimony. With chariots of men and horsemen; as some of them fought on foot, so others fought from chariots and horses. Kir; the Medes, so called by a synecdoche from Kir, an eminent city and region of Media, of which see 2 Kings xvi. 9; Amos i. 5. Uncovered; prepared it and themselves for the battle; for in times of peace arms were wrapt up and covered, to preserve them clean, and fit for use. The shield; their defensive and offensive weapons.

† Heb. the choice of thy valleys. 7 And it shall come to pass, that † thy choicest valleys shall be full of chariots, and the horsemen shall set themselves in ‖ Or, toward. array ‖ at the gate.

Thy choicest valleys shall be full of chariots: valleys were the most proper places for the use of chariots: see Josh. xvii. 16. The horsemen shall set themselves in array at the gate, to assist and defend the footmen whilst they made their assault, and withal to prevent and take those who endeavoured to escape.

8 ¶ And he discovered the covering of Judah, and thou didst look in that day to g 1 Kings 7. 2. & 10. 17. the armour [g] of the house of the forest.

He; the enemy, Sennacherib, of whose invasion he seems to speak. The covering of Judah: he took those fenced cities, which were a covering or safeguard both to the people of Judah, who fled to them, and to Jerusalem, which was begirt and defended by them. Thou didst look in that day to the armour; thy hope and trust was wholly or chiefly placed in the arm of flesh. For although Hezekiah was commended for his trust in God, yet the generality of the people were guilty of distrust in God, and confidence in the creature. The house of the forest; more fully called the house of the forest of Lebanon, 1 Kings vii. 2, not because it was built in Lebanon, for it was in Jerusalem; but either because it was built of the trees of Lebanon, for which cause the temple is called Lebanon, Zech. xi. 1, or for other reasons. See my notes on 1 Kings vii. 2.

h 2 Kings 20. 20. 2 Chron. 32. 4, 5, 30. 9 [h]Ye have seen also the breaches of the city of David, that they are many: and ye gathered together the waters of the lower pool.

Ye have seen, i. e. observed or considered, as this word is used, Exod. xxxii. 9, and elsewhere, in order to the reparation of them, and to fortify the city, as the next words manifest. Ye gathered together the waters of the lower pool, that you might both deprive the enemy of water, and supply the city with it; of which see on 2 Chron. xxxii. 4, 5.

10 And ye have numbered the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses have ye broken down to fortify the wall.

Ye have numbered the houses of Jerusalem; that they might exactly know their own strength, and the number of their people, and so lay the burdens more equally upon them, and make sufficient provisions for them. The houses which stood upon or without the walls of their city, and so gave their enemies any advantage against them, and hindered the searching or fortifying the walls and city.

11 [i]Ye made also a ditch between the two walls for the water of the old pool: i Neh. 3. 16.
but ye have not looked unto [k]the maker thereof, neither had respect unto him that fashioned it long ago. k See ch. 37. 26.

The two walls; either those 2 Kings xxv. 4, or those 2 Chron. xxxii. 5, in both which places we read of two walls. For the water of the old pool; to receive the waters conveyed into it by pipes from the old pool. The maker thereof; either, 1. Of the water; for both the springs and the rain which filleth the pools are from God alone: or, 2. Of Jerusalem, expressed in the foregoing verse, and easily understood here, because all these works were undertaken for Jerusalem's defence and provision. And it is usual in Scripture for the pronoun relative to be put by itself, without any express mention of the person or thing to which it belongs, which is left to the reader to gather out of the foregoing or following words; of which see the notes on Psal. lxxxvii. 1; Cant. i. 1. Him that fashioned it, Heb. the former or framer of it, God; who made it a city, and the place of his special presence and worship; which also he had undertaken to protect, if the people would observe his commands; to whom therefore they should have resorted and trusted in this time of their distress. Long ago; which clause may be added to aggravate their sin, in distrusting that God who had now for a long time given proof of his care and kindness in defending this city.

12 And in that day did the Lord God of hosts [l]call to weeping, and to mourning, and [m]to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth: l Joel 1. 13. m See Ezra 9. 3. ch. 15. 2. Mic. 1. 16.

Call; invite and oblige them by the course of his providence, and require this by the precepts requiring these things in such times and conditions. To baldness; to make themselves bald, by plucking or shaving off the hair of their heads, as was usual in great sorrows, as Ezra ix. 3; Job i. 20; Micah i. 16, although it was forbidden in case of the death of relations, for a special reason; of which see on Lev. xix. 27, 28; xxi. 5.

13 And behold joy and gladness, slaying oxen, and killing sheep, eating flesh, and drinking wine: [n]let us eat and drink; n ch. 56. 12. Wisd. 2. 6. 1 Cor. 15. 32.
for to morrow we shall die.

Eating flesh; not only for necessity, but to excess and luxury, as eating and drinking are taken, Matt. xxiv. 38. Let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we shall die: the prophets tell us that we shall certainly and suddenly be destroyed; it concerns us therefore to make our best of the present time, and to be merry whilst we have the opportunity. A most perverse and desperate conclusion, proceeding from obstinate profaneness, and contempt of God's judgments.

14 [o]And it was revealed in mine ears o ch. 5. 9.
by the Lord of hosts, Surely this iniquity [p]shall not be purged from you till ye die, p 1 Sam. 3. 14. Ezek. 24. 13.
saith the Lord God of hosts.

It was revealed in mine ears; what I am saying is not my own invention, nor uncertain reports, but what I heard with these ears of mine. The like phrase we have 1 Sam. ix. 15, the Lord had told Samuel in his ear. This iniquity shall not be purged from you till ye die; you shall feel the sad effects of this wickedness, and my just displeasure for it, as long as you live. This is not spoken exclusively, as if it should be purged after their death, which is absurd and impious to imagine, at least concerning such as lived and died in this desperate and impenitent condition; but emphatically, to show that God will have no mercy upon them in that time of life, in which he useth and delighteth to give repentance and remission of sins to mankind.

15 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD of hosts, Go, get thee unto this treasurer, even unto [q]Shebna, [r]which is over the house, and say, q 2 Kin. 18. 37. ch. 36. 3.

r 1 Kings 4. 6.

Get thee unto this treasurer; which the prophet might boldly do, because he had the protection not only of God, who sent him upon this errand, but probably of Hezekiah also, who at the time of this prophecy was either king, or his father's viceroy, or at least heir-apparent to the crown. Shebna; who seems to have been advanced by wicked Ahaz, and to have been a great patron of impiety and injustice in his reign, and by politic compliance with Hezekiah thought to gain his favour, and so to keep his place and power at court. Over the house; over the house of David, as is more fully expressed below, ver. 22. Possibly he was not only the lord treasurer, but also the king's prime minister of state.

16 What hast thou here? and whom hast thou here, that thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, ‖ as he [s]that heweth him out a sepulchre on high, and that graveth an habitation for himself in a rock?

s See 2 Sam. 18. 18. Matt. 27. 60.

What hast thou here? or, What dost thou here? what right hast thou to this place and office? Whom; either, 1. What friends, in whom thou canst confide? Thou hast so ill managed thyself and thy affairs, that thou art universally hated. Or, 2. What kindred or relations? For the Jews say he was a stranger by birth; which is the more probable, because his pedigree is not mentioned in any of those places of Scripture where he is named. Hewed thee out a sepulchre, as great and ambitious men used to do. Here; not in thine own country, the proper place for such a monument; but in Jerusalem, which should not be defiled nor disparaged with it. On high; in a high and eminent place, as Isa. lvii. 7. An habitation; either, 1. A sepulchre, which is called a man's house, Job xxx. 23; or, 2. A dwelling-house. He erected, or is compared to one that doth erect, a stately house to live in, and a stately sepulchre to receive him when he dies. And these two are fitly joined together, because their sepulchres were commonly built in or near their houses. See Isa. xiv. 18; John xix. 41. In a rock; a fit place both for strength and state. Thus we read of a sepulchre hewed out of a rock, Matt. xxvii. 60.

17 Behold, ‖ the LORD will carry thee away with †a mighty captivity, [t]and will surely cover thee.

‖ Or, the LORD who covered thee with an excellent covering, and clothed thee gorgeously, shall surely, &c. ver. 18.
† Heb. the captivity of a man.
t Esth. 7. 8.

Will carry thee away with a mighty captivity; will cause thee to be carried into captivity by a strong hand, or by the hand of a mighty man, from which therefore thou shalt not be able to escape. Or, will cast thee away with the casting of a mighty man, i. e. with great force; or, in casting will cast thee away, O thou mighty man. Will surely cover thee, to wit, with confusion, as is here implied, and as this phrase is more fully expressed, Psal. lxxxix. 40; cix. 29. Or covering may be put for obscuring his glory, which he designed to publish, and to that end erected stately monuments, &c. Or this may be an allusion to the ancient custom of covering the faces of condemned persons; of which see Esth. vii. 8. Compare Job ix. 24; Ezek. xii. 6, 12.

18 He will surely violently turn and toss thee like a ball into a †large country: there shalt thou die, and there the chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy lord's house.

† Heb. large of spaces.

He will surely violently turn and toss thee like a ball, Heb. Wrapping he will wrap thee up like a ball, which consists of materials wrapped and bound together, that it may be tossed far away. Or, Rolling he will roll thee with the rolling of a ball. Into a large country; like a ball which is cast into a large and plain spot of ground, where being thrown by a strong man, it runs far and wide. Or, to a far country, which seems to be here called large of spaces, not so much in itself, for that was inconsiderable to him, whether the land of his captivity was large or little, as in respect of its distance from the place of his birth and abode. The chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy lord's house. The sense of the words thus rendered seems to be this, Thy glorious chariots, wherein thou didst ride in great state at Jerusalem, shall then and there be turned into shame to thyself, and to thy master, to whom it is just matter of reproach, that he was so foolish as to advance and trust such a faithless and unworthy person. But the words are by divers others fitly rendered, there the chariots of thy glory shall be, (or, shall die or vanish, i. e. that shall be the end of all thy pompous chariots, and other monuments of thy pride,) O thou who art the shame of thy Lord's house; who by thy unjust and wicked practices hast exposed thy king and master, and the royal family, to reproach and contempt.

19 And I will drive thee from thy station, and from thy state shall he pull thee down.

And I; the Lord, whose words these are, ver. 15, as is manifest from the following verses. Shall he; the Lord; such sudden changes of persons being very usual in these writings.

20 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will call my servant [u]Eliakim the son of Hilkiah:

u 2 Kings 18. 18.

I will call, by my Spirit fitting him, and by my powerful providence moving Hezekiah's heart to call him.

21 And I will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and I will commit thy government into his hand: and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah.

I will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle: there was a peculiar sort of robe and girdle which was the badge of his office, which should be taken from him, and given to Eliakim. He shall be a father; he shall not only have the authority of a father, which thou now hast, in which respect all rulers are called fathers, as Exod. xx. 12; Numb. xxxvi. 1; but shall also govern them with fatherly care and affection, and not with rigour and cruelty, as thou dost.

22 And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall [x]open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open.

x Job 12. 14. Rev. 3. 7.

The key; the government, the power of opening and shutting, of letting men into it or putting them out of it, whereof a key is a fit emblem; whence the delivering of the keys of a house or city into the hands of another, is a sign to signify and confirm the giving him the power and possession of it. Lay upon his shoulder; he mentions the shoulder rather than the hand, in which keys are commonly carried, either from some ceremony then in use, of carrying a key upon the shoulder, either of the officer of state himself, or of another in his name and stead; or to signify that this was a key of greater weight than ordinary, and that government, which is designed by this key, is a heavy burden, and therefore in Scripture phrase said to be upon the shoulder, as Isa. ix. 6. None shall shut against his will, or without his commission or consent.

23 And I will fasten him as [y]a nail in a sure place; and he shall be for a glorious throne to his father's house.

y Ezra 9. 8.

I will fasten him; I will establish the power in his hands. In a sure place; in the strong walls, or solid timber, in the house; which is opposed to Shebna's instability, signified by a ball, ver. 18. He shall be for a glorious throne to his father's house; by his prudent and righteous government he shall procure great glory, not only to himself, but to all that have any relation to him. This also is opposed to what is said of Shebna in the end of ver. 18.

24 And they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house, the offspring and the issue, all vessels of small quantity, from the vessels of cups, even to all the ‖ vessels of flagons.

‖ Or, instruments of viols.

Of his father's house; of his own kindred and family, who shall all depend upon him, and receive glory from him; of the house of David, which is called his father's house, either because kings are called the fathers of all their subjects, both in Scripture, as 1 Sam. xxiv. 11; 2 Kings v. 13; xvi. 7, and in other authors; or, as Calvin ingeniously conjectures, because he was of the blood royal. Otherwise this had been no great commendation to him, that he studied so much the advancement of his own private family. And this seems more probable, because this character is opposed to that of Shebna, who was the shame of his lord's, to wit, the king's, house or family, ver. 18. The offspring and the issue; great and small, the children and grandchildren of his father's house. All vessels of small quantity; the meanest of them shall receive a lustre and advantage from their relation to him. From the vessels of cups, even to all the vessels of flagons; all sorts of vessels, great or small, mean or precious, may be hanged upon him, without any fear of falling; whereas ordinary nails or pins, if they be oppressed with too great weight, are easily broken down, and the vessels fall with them.

25 In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, shall the nail that is fastened in the sure place be removed, and be cut down, and fall; and the burden that was upon it shall be cut off: for the LORD hath spoken it.

The nail that is fastened in the sure place; Shebna, who seemed to be so, both in his own eyes, and in the eyes of others. The burden that was upon it; all those wicked officers that were advanced and supported by his power.

CHAP. XXIII.

The destruction of Tyre, from God, for their pride, 1—14. The time of her rising again, 15—17, and conversion to God, 18.

cir. 715. THE [a]burden of Tyre. Howl, ye ships of Tarshish; for it is laid waste, so that there is no house, no entering in: [b]from the land of Chittim it is revealed to them.

[a] Jer. 25. 22. & 47. 4. Ezek. 26, & 27, & 28. Amos 1. 9. Zech. 9. 2, 4.
[b] ver. 12.

The burden of Tyre; the prophecy of the heavy calamity and destruction of Tyre; which now stood in its strength and glory, being seated in an island, upon a rock, abounding in riches, mighty in naval power, having lately conquered that navy which the Assyrians brought against them. Yet this city was, according to this prophecy, destroyed; and that twice, first by Nebuchadnezzar, and long afterward by Alexander the Great. And although this prophecy seem directly and properly to respect the former destruction, yet it seems to have some reference to the latter also; only it is intimated, that after seventy years Tyrus should recover her former power and glory, before her second and final destruction. Howl, ye ships; either, 1. Properly; to which howling and lamenting is ascribed by a known figure called prosopopœia: or, 2. Metonymically, the merchants and owners of ships, who had much commerce with this illustrious mart. Of Tarshish; either, 1. Of Tarsus, a great port of Cilicia, which anciently had the dominion of that part of the sea; or, 2. Of the ocean, which is so called, 1 Kings x. 22; Psal. xlviii. 7; Isa. ii. 16. It is laid waste; it shall shortly be laid waste; which was fulfilled not by Shalmaneser, as some would have it; for though he straitened it for some time, yet he never took it; but by Nebuchadnezzar. No entering in; so effectually wasted, that there is not a house left in it, nor any merchants or others that go into it, either to trade in it, or to repair it. It is revealed to them: the sense of the words thus rendered may be this, it, i. e. this burden or destruction of Tyre, is, i. e. shall be, revealed, declared or made known, unto them; either, 1. To the Tyrians, to whom this notice should be sent concerning the preparations of their enemies against them: or, 2. To the ships, by which he means their owners or merchants, from the land of Chittim; which may be here mentioned, either because they first had and gave them notice of it, as was now said; or because their last and sorest destruction was brought upon them by Alexander, who was of the land of Chittim, as is affirmed by that very ancient and venerable, though apocryphal writer, 1 Mac. i. 1; viii. 5. But this place is otherwise rendered, both by ancient and later interpreters, which seems to be more natural and easy, and no less agreeable to the Hebrew text; either thus, that she is laid waste, so that there is no house, nor entering or coming in (to wit. for traffic) from the land of Chittim, is made known to them, to wit, to the ships or merchants that used to resort thither for traffic: or rather thus, for it is laid waste, so that there is no house, (not any houses left for the citizens to dwell in,) nor entering or coming in (to wit, of merchants) from the land of Chittim; she (to wit, her people) is removed or gone into captivity, as this word properly signifies, and is rendered, Isa. xxxviii. 12. And for the last Hebrew word, lamo, which is rendered to them, (which is the only objection against this interpretation,) it is only added as an elegancy of the Hebrew language, and hath no further signification, as it is also Psal. lviii. 7, and as the particle lo, which signifies the same thing, and such other pronouns, are frequently redundant and insignificant in the Hebrew text, as hath been oft observed by grammarians and interpreters. He mentions the land of Chittim, because this was an eminent place for shipping and trading, as is manifest from Numb. xxiv. 24; Ezek. xxvii. 6; Dan. xi. 30, and therefore doubtless had great dealings and commerce with Tyre, and may here be put synecdochically for all other countries which traded with her. It is not necessary, for the understanding of this text, to determine what Chittim is, whether it was Italy, or Greece, or the islands in those parts; it is sufficient to know that it was a seafaring place in the Midland Sea, and so much startled and concerned in the destruction of Tyre.

2 Be † still, ye inhabitants of the isle; thou whom the merchants of Zidon, that pass over the sea, have replenished.

† Heb. silent.

Be still, Heb. Be silent, as one confounded, and not knowing what to say, or as mourners use to be, Job ii. 8, 13; Isa. xlvii. 5; boast no more of thy wealth and power, as thou usedst to do. Of the isle, Heb. of Tyrus, which now was an island, Ezek. xxvii. 3; xxviii. 2, till Alexander joined it to the continent, as Pliny reports. Although the title of islands is oft given by the Hebrews to places bordering upon the sea. Zidon; an eminent city of Palestina, nigh unto Tyre, much concerned with her and for her. That pass over the sea; that are a seafaring people. Have replenished; with mariners, Ezek. xxvii. 8, and commodities.

3 And by great waters the seed of Sihor, the harvest of the river, is her revenue; and [c]she is a mart of nations.

c Ezek. 27. 3.

By great waters; by the sea, which is very fitly called the great waters, Psal. cvii. 23; understand, cometh, or is brought to her. The seed of Sihor; the corn of Egypt, wherewith Egypt abounded, and furnished divers other parts of the world, whence it was called the granary of the Roman empire; which also was easily conveyed by sea from Egypt to Tyre, and thence to divers other countries. This is called seed here, as also Hag. i. 10, and elsewhere, by a usual metonymy; and the seed of Sihor, because it grew up the more abundantly because of the overflow of the river, as all sorts of authors have noted. For Sihor is nothing else but Nilus, as appears from Jer. ii. 18, which is called Sihor, as by the Greeks it was called Melas, from its black colour. And this and no other river seems to be that Sihor, which is so oft mentioned as one of the bounds of the land of Canaan, as Numb. xxxiv. 5, &c., because that land, at least in that extent which God allotted and gave it to the Israelites, though they through neglect or cowardice might not actually possess it, did reach to one of the branches of that river. And indeed, if Sihor be not Nilus, that great and neighbouring river is not named in all the Scripture, which seems very improbable. The harvest of the river: this clause explains the former; that plentiful harvest of corn which comes from the influence and inundation of Nilus, which is emphatically called the river, as here, so also Exod. i. 22; Isa. xix. 5; Ezek. xxix. 3, 9, as Euphrates is in other texts of Scripture. Is her revenue; is as easily procured and plentifully enjoyed by her, as if it grew in her own territories. A mart of nations; a place to which all nations resort for traffic.

4 Be thou ashamed, O Zidon: for the sea hath spoken, even the strength of the sea, saying, I travail not, nor bring forth children, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins.

Be thou ashamed, O Zidon; for Zidon was a great city near Tyre, and strongly united to her by commerce and league, and called by some the mother of Tyre, which they say was built and first inhabited by a colony of the Sidonians; and therefore she must needs be greatly concerned in the destruction of Tyrus. The sea; that part of the sea in which Tyrus was, and from which ships and men were sent into all countries. The strength of the sea: this is added to explain what he meant by the sea, even Tyrus, who might be called the strength of the sea, either actively, because it defended that part of the sea from piracies and injuries; or passively, because it was defended and strengthened by the sea, which encompassed it. And this title is here given to Tyrus, to show what great cause of confusion and fear Zidon had from this example, which for strength was much inferior to Tyrus. I travail not, nor bring forth children, &c.; I, who was so exceeding fruitful and populous, that I sent forth colonies into other countries, (of which the famous city of Carthage was one,) am now become barren and desolate.

d ch. 19. 16. 5 [d] As at the report concerning Egypt, so shall they be sorely pained at the report of Tyre.

According to this translation the sense is, All the neighbouring nations shall be no less terrified at the tidings of the destruction of Tyrus, than they were of old upon the report of God's former and dreadful judgments upon the Egyptians, of which see Exod. xv. 14—16; Josh. ii. 9, 11, because they shall despair of resisting that enemy against whom that vast and potent city, which was deemed impregnable, could not defend itself. But the words are by the LXX., and other both ancient and later interpreters, rendered otherwise, and that very agreeably to the Hebrew text, When the report (to wit, of the destruction of Tyre) came, or shall come, (which word is easily understood, as it is above, ver. 3, and in other texts of Scripture before mentioned,) to the Egyptians, they shall be sorely pained according to the report of Tyre; their grief shall be answerable to the report; as the report is very dreadful, so their grief and anguish shall be very great: or, they shall fear lest they should be destroyed in like manner as Tyrus was destroyed.

6 Pass ye over to Tarshish; howl, ye inhabitants of the isle.

Pass ye over to Tarshish; flee from your own country to Tarsus of Cilicia, and there bewail your calamities. Or rather, as others render the place, Pass over the sea, which is oft called Tarshish; of which see on ver. 1. Of the isle; of Tyrus, as before, ver. 2.

e ch. 22. 2. 7 Is this your [e] joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days? her own feet shall carry her † afar off to sojourn.

† Heb. from afar off.

Is this your joyous city, that formerly lived in so much pomp, and pleasure, and security? Whose antiquity is of ancient days; being built before Joshua's time, as is manifest from Josh. xix. 29. Her own feet shall carry her; whereas before, like a delicate lady, she would not set the sole of her foot to the ground, as the expression is, Deut. xxviii. 56, but used to be carried in stately chariots, or magnificent vessels. To sojourn; to seek for new habitations. For as some of the Tyrians were taken and carried captive into Chaldea, and other places, so others fled by sea into several parts of the world, Carthage, and divers other towns of the Midland Sea, as is recorded by ancient historians.

8 Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, [f] the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth?

f See Ezek. 28. 2, 12.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre? words of admiration: who and where is he that could imagine or durst attempt such a thing as this? This is the work of God, as is expressed, ver. 9, and not of man. The crowning city; which was a royal city, Jer. xxv. 22, and called a kingdom, Ezek. xxviii. 2, 12, and carried away the crown from all other cities, and crowned herself and her citizens with glory and delights. Whose merchants are princes; equal to princes for wealth, and power, and reputation.

9 The LORD of hosts hath purposed it, † to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honourable of the earth.

† Heb. to pollute.

The Lord of hosts hath purposed it; this is the Lord's own doing; therefore do not doubt it, nor wonder at it. God's design is by this one example to abate and abase the pride of all the potentates of the earth, that they may see and know what weak and wretched creatures they are, when God leaves them, and sets himself against them

10 Pass through thy land as a river, O daughter of Tarshish: there is no more † strength.

† Heb. girdle.

Pass through thy land; tarry no longer in thy own territories, but flee through them, and beyond them, into other countries, for safety and relief. As a river; swiftly, lest you be prevented; and continually, till you be all gone; and in shoals and multitudes. O daughter of Tarshish; O Tyrus; for of her he speaks both in the foregoing and following words. And Tyrus might well be called the daughter of Tarshish, i. e. of the sea, as that word is used, ver. 1, and elsewhere, because it then was an island, and therefore as it were born of the sea, and nourished and brought up by it. No more strength, Heb. no more girdle: the girdle, which strengthens the loins of a man, is put for strength, as Job xii. 21; xxxviii. 3. It behoveth you, O people of Tyrus, to flee away, as I advise you; for your city is unable to defend you; your wealth, the sinews of war, is lost; your walls broken down; the sea, which, like a girdle, surrounded and defended you, is now in part filled up by your enemies, who have joined you to the main land; your former friends and allies forsake you.

11 He stretched out his hand over the sea, he shook the kingdoms: the LORD hath given a commandment ‖ against † the merchant city, to destroy the ‖ strong holds thereof.

‖ Or, concerning a merchantman. † Heb. Canaan. ‖ Or, strengths.

He, the Lord, expressed ver. 9, stretched out his hand to strike it, the antecedent being put for the consequent, over the sea; or, against the sea, i. e. against Tyrus, the daughter of the sea, as she was now called; and consequently against all those ships and men which used to traffic with Tyrus, and were enriched by that trade, and therefore suffered in her fall. He shook the kingdoms, Heb. he made the kingdoms to tremble; either, 1. The two kingdoms of Tyre and Sidon; or rather, 2. The neighbouring and confederate kingdoms, as appears by comparing this with Ezek. xxvi. 15—18, who might justly quake at her fall, partly, for the dreadfulness and unexpectedness of the thing; partly, because Tyre was a bulwark, and a refuge, and a great advantage to them; and partly, because her fall made way for their ruin, as being destroyed by their common enemy. Hath given a commandment; hath contrived and purposed it, as was said, ver. 8, 9; hath put this design into the heads and hearts of her enemies, and given them courage to attempt, and strength to execute, so difficult an enterprise. Against the merchant city, Heb. against Canaan; the word Canaan being taken either, 1. For a merchant, as it is used, Job xli. 6; Hos. xii. 7; or rather, 2. For the proper name of a place or people, as it is generally used; for the Tyrians and Sidonians were descended from Canaan, Gen.

x. 15, and were the only considerable remainders of that cursed race whom God had devoted to destruction. And so this phrase may be here used both as an evidence and as an argument of their intended and approaching ruin.

g Rev. 18.22. 12 And he said, [g]Thou shalt no more rejoice, O thou oppressed virgin, daughter of Zidon: arise, [h] pass over to Chittim; there also shalt thou have no rest.

h ver. 1.

O thou oppressed virgin: so he calls her, either for her pride and beauty, and living in great ease and pleasure; or because she had hitherto never borne the yoke of a conquering enemy; though withal he declares that she should be oppressed or defloured very suddenly. Daughter of Zidon; whereby he understands either, 1. Zidon herself, who suffered in and with Tyre: for so this phrase seems generally to be used, the daughter of Zion, or of Jerusalem, or of Babel, or Egypt, &c., being nothing else but Zion, Jerusalem, Babel, Egypt, &c. Or rather, 2. Tyrus, as most interpreters, both Jewish and Christian, understand it, of whom this whole context and prophecy speaks; which may well be called the daughter of Zidon, because she was first built and possessed by a colony of the Sidonians; as Pliny calleth Carthage the daughter of Tyre, because she was built by a colony of Tyrians. And the title of daughter is ofttimes given in Scripture to towns or cities which had their being from or dependence upon other cities; in which sense we read of the daughter of Heshbon, Numb. xxi. 25, and of Rabbah, Jer. xlix. 2, 3, and of Sodom, and of Samaria, Ezek. xvi. 46, 49, 53. And the daughter of Tarshish here above, ver. 10, is not meant of Tarshish itself, but of Tyrus, which had a relation to and dependence upon Tarshish. Pass over to Chittim; of which place see on ver. 1. There also shalt thou have no rest; thither thine enemies shall pursue thee, and there shall they overtake thee, although thou wilt think thyself secure when thou art fled to remote parts beyond the sea.

13 Behold the land of the Chaldeans; this people was not, till the Assyrian founded it for [i]them that dwell in the wilderness: they set up the towers thereof, they raised up the palaces thereof; and he brought it to ruin.

i Ps. 72. 9.

Behold the land of the Chaldeans; you Tyrians, who think your city impregnable, cast your eyes upon the land and empire of the Chaldeans, or Babylonians; which though now it be a flourishing kingdom, and shall shortly grow far more glorious and potent, even the glory of kingdoms, as it is called, Isa. xiii. 19, yet shall certainly be brought to utter ruin; and therefore your presumption is most vain and unreasonable. This people was not: the Chaldeans at first were not a people, not formed into any commonwealth or kingdom. Till the Assyrian founded it for them that dwell in the wilderness; till Nimrod, the head and founder of the Assyrian monarchy, built Babel, Gen. x. 10, now the head of the Chaldean monarchy, which he built for those people, who then lived in tents, and were dispersed here and there in wild and waste places, that he might bring them into order, and under government, and thereby establish and promote his own empire. They set up the towers thereof, they raised up the palaces thereof; the Chaldeans being by this means brought together into a body, fell to the work of building their city, and its towers and palaces, and thereby got power and dominion over their neighbours, till at last they grew the greatest of all the monarchies that then were upon earth. He; the Lord, who is expressed before, and is frequently designed in Scripture by this indefinite pronoun he, as hath been many times observed; whereby he insinuates the true reason why neither the Chaldeans nor the Tyrians should be able to stand, because the Almighty God was engaged against them. Brought it to ruin; will infallibly bring that great empire to ruin. He speaks of a future thing as if it were already past, as the prophets use to do. The Chaldeans shall now return to their first nothing, and become no people again.

k ver. 1. Ezek. 27. 25, 30. 14 [k]Howl, ye ships of Tarshish: for your strength is laid waste.

Your strength; the city of Tyre, where you found safety and wealth.

15 And it shall come to pass in that day, that Tyre shall be forgotten seventy years, according to the days of one king: after the end of seventy years †shall Tyre sing as an harlot.

† Heb. it shall be unto Tyre as the song of an harlot.

Forgotten; neglected and forsaken by those who used to resort thither. Seventy years; during the whole time of the Jewish captivity in Babylon. For Tyrus was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xxvii. 3, 8; Ezek. xxvi. 7, a little after the taking of Jerusalem, and was restored by the favour of the Persian monarchs after the return of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon. Of one king; either, 1. Of the kingdom of Babylon, which lasted so long after this time; the word king being put for kingdom, as it is Dan. vii. 17; viii. 21; or, 2. Of one royal race, of Nebuchadnezzar, including his son, and his son's son, in whom his family and kingdom were to expire. After the end of seventy years shall Tyre sing as an harlot; she shall by degrees return to her former state of prosperity and traffic, whereby she shall easily entice the merchants of the world to converse and trade with her, as harlots use to entice their customers by lascivious songs.

16 Take an harp, go about the city, thou harlot that hast been forgotten; make sweet melody, sing many songs, that thou mayest be remembered.

Take an harp, go about the city; as harlots use to do, to allure customers. Thou harlot; so he calleth Tyre, partly because she enticed merchants to deal with her by various artifices, and even by dishonest practices, as harlots use; and partly because of the great and general uncleanness which was both committed and tolerated in it. That thou mayest be remembered by those who had forgotten thee, ver. 15.

17 ¶ And it shall come to pass after the end of seventy years, that the LORD will visit Tyre, and she shall turn to her hire, and [l]shall commit fornication with all the kingdoms of the world upon the face of the earth.

Visit Tyre, to wit, in mercy, as this phrase is used, Ruth i. 6; Psal. lxv. 9, and elsewhere. Her hire: the Hebrew word properly signifies, the hire of an harlot; which agrees well with the fornication in the next clause; although these phrases are not to be understood properly, but metaphorically, of trading or commerce with others. Shall commit fornication with all the kingdoms of the world; shall trade promiscuously with people of all sorts of nations, as harlots entertain all comers.

18 And her merchandise and her hire [m]shall be holiness to the LORD: it shall not be treasured nor laid up; for her merchandise shall be for them that dwell before the LORD, to eat sufficiently, and for †durable clothing.

m Zech. 14. 20, 21.

Her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the Lord: he speaks not here of what the Tyrians would do immediately after their restitution, but some time after it, even in the days of the Messiah; of which even some of the Jewish rabbies understand it, and to which the prophets have a special respect in their several prophecies, and Isaiah among and above the rest of them. So this is a prophecy concerning the conversion of the Tyrians to the true religion, of the accomplishment whereof something is said Acts xxi. 3—5, and more in other authors. It shall not be treasured nor laid up, either out of covetousness, or for the service of their pride and luxury, as they formerly did; but now they shall freely lay it out upon pious and charitable uses. For them that dwell before the Lord; for the support and encouragement of the ministers of holy things, who shall teach the good knowledge of the Lord, who dwell in God's house, and minister in his presence; the support of such persons being not only an act of justice and charity, but also of piety, and of great use and necessity to maintain and propagate religion in the world. Although this doth not exclude, but rather imply, their liberality in contributing to the necessities of all Christians.

CHAP. XXIV.

Judgments on Judah for their defilements and transgressions, 1—12. A remnant shall praise God, 13—15. God, by his judgments on his people and their enemies, will advance his kingdom, 16—23.

cir. 712. BEHOLD, the LORD maketh the earth † Heb. perverteth the face thereof. empty, and maketh it waste, and † turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof.

The earth; or, the land, to wit, of Canaan, or Israel, or Judea. It is usual with all writers, when they write of their own country, to call it the land, by way of eminency. There are many things in this prophecy which manifestly concern this land and people; and nothing, at least before ver. 21, which may be taken as a new and additional prophecy, which is necessary to be understood of other nations. But this I speak with submission, and due respect to those learned and judicious interpreters who take this to be a prophecy against Judea, and all the neighbouring nations. Maketh it waste; he will shortly make it waste, first by the Assyrians, and then by the Chaldeans. Turneth it upside down; bringeth it into great disorder and confusion.

2 And it shall be, as with the people,
‖ Or, prince. [a] Hos. 4. 9. so with the ‖ [a] priest; as with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so [b] Ezek. 7. 12, 13. with her mistress; [b] as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him.

It shall be, as with the people, so with the priest; the approaching calamity shall be universal, without any respect or distinction of persons or ranks of men; the priests themselves, having been partakers of the people's sins, shall also partake with them in their plagues. As with the buyer, so with the seller; the purchaser of lands shall have no more left than he that hath sold all his patrimony; and all persons shall be made equal in beggary and slavery.

3 The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled: for the LORD hath spoken this word.

4 The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth † Heb. the height of the people. away, † the haughty people of the earth do languish.

The world: from this word some infer that this prophecy concerns not only the land of Judea, but also the neighbouring countries. But if the proper signification of that word be urged, this prophecy must be extended to all the parts of the world, which these learned men will not allow. And the world, both in Scripture and other authors, is often used synecdochically for that which in truth is but a small part of it, at least in comparison with the whole; as it is not only of the Roman empire, as Luke ii. 1; Acts xi. 28, but also of Babylon, Isa. xiii. 11, and, which cometh nearer to the point, of this very land of Judea, as John xii. 19; xviii. 20, and elsewhere. And therefore it may well be so understood here, especially when this word world is explained by those other words the earth and the land, which the very next verse showeth to be meant of Israel or Judea, as we shall there discover. The haughty people; not only common people, who use to be of low spirits; but the high and lofty ones, who use to be stout in their words and carriages towards me, and to deride my threatenings.

[c] Gen. 3. 17. Num. 35. 33. 5 [c] The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.

The earth also, Heb. And the land; or, this land; for here is an emphatical article in the Hebrew text. Is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; by the wickedness of its people; of which see Lev. xviii. 25, 27; Numb. xxxv. 33, &c. The laws; the laws of God revealed to them, and pressed upon them in a singular manner, called simply the laws, as the word of God is ofttimes called the word, by way of eminency. The ordinance; God's ordinances concerning his worship and service; the singular being put collectively for the plural. The everlasting covenant; the covenant made between God and Abraham, and all his posterity, renewed with the Israelites at Sinai, which was everlasting, both on God's part, who, upon the conditions therein expressed, engaged himself to be a God to them and to their seed for ever; and on Israel's part, who were obliged thereby to constant and perpetual obedience through all generations. All these clauses clearly prove that the earth or land which this prophecy concerns, is no other than the land of Israel and Judah.

6 Therefore hath [d] the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left. [d] Mal. 4. 6.

The curse; the curse of God threatened to transgressors, Deut. xxviii. 15, &c; xxix. 20, and imprecated by and upon themselves, if they should not persist in their obedience to God, Deut. xxvii. 26, and elsewhere. Are burned; are consumed by the wrath of God, which is commonly compared to fire.

7 [e] The new wine mourneth, the vine languisheth, all the merryhearted do sigh. [e] ch. 16. 8, 9. Joel 1. 10, 12.

The new wine mourneth, because there are either none, or none but the enemies of God and Israel, to drink it. Grief is ascribed to senseless creatures by a figure usual in all authors. The vine languisheth; either because there are no people left to dress it, or gather its grapes; or because it is broken down and spoiled by the enemy. All the merry-hearted, that made their hearts merry with wine, Psal. civ. 15.

8 The mirth [f] of tabrets ceaseth, the noise of them that rejoice endeth, the joy of the harp ceaseth. [f] Jer. 7. 34. & 16. 9. & 25. 10. Ezek. 26. 13. Hos. 2. 11. Rev. 18. 22.

Tabrets; which they used in their feasts and revellings. The noise: the word properly signifies a roaring noise and confused clamour, such as drunken men make, Psal. lxxviii. 65; Zech. ix. 15.

9 They shall not drink wine with a song; strong drink shall be bitter to them that drink it.

Because of the fears and miseries wherewith it is mixed.

10 The city of confusion is broken down: every house is shut up, that no man may come in.

The city; Jerusalem, and other cities; for the singular word may be here taken collectively. Of confusion; or, of vanity, or emptiness, or desolation; for this Hebrew word signifies all these things. And the city may be thus called, either, 1. In regard of the judgments of God coming upon it, as if he had said, a city devoted to desolation or destruction, to be emptied of its goods and people; or, 2. For its sin, a city of confusion or disorder, breaking all the laws and orders which God had established among them; or a city that walketh with or after vanity, as the Scripture speaks, Job xxxi. 5; Jer. ii. 5, that loveth and speaketh vanity, as they did, Psal. iv. 2; xii. 2. And this may seem most convenient, that the sin of the city should be noted in this word, as the punishment is expressed in the next. Every house is shut up; either for fear of the enemy who have entered the city; or rather, because the inhabitants are either fled, or dead, or gone into captivity, and so there are none to go into it, or come out of it.

11 There is a crying for wine in the streets; all joy is darkened, the mirth of the land is gone.

There is a crying for wine; for the want or loss of their wine, and spoil of their vines, whereby they were deprived of the means both of their delight and profit; whereby he intimates their gross sensuality and sottishness, that instead of crying for their sins, and humbling themselves under God's judgments, did only howl for their corn, and wine, and oil, as they did, Hos. vii. 14.

12 In the city is left desolation, and the gate is smitten with destruction.

The gates of the city are totally ruined, that the enemy may enter when and where they please.

13 ¶ When thus it shall be in the midst
g ch. 17. 5, 6. of the land among the people, [g]there shall be as the shaking of an olive tree, and as the gleaning grapes when the vintage is done.

When thus it shall be, when this judgment shall be executed, in the midst of the land; in the land. But withal this phrase may intimate that the judgment should not be slight and superficial, and in the skirts of the land; but that it should reach their very heart, their most inward and best defended parts. There shall be as the shaking of an olive tree, &c.; there shall be left a remnant, and that but a very small remnant; as there are some few, and but a few, olives or grapes left after the vintage is over; which, by comparing this with the following verse, seems to be added by way of mitigation, to signify that God would in judgment remember mercy.

14 They shall lift up their voice, they shall sing for the majesty of the LORD, they shall cry aloud from the sea.

They; the remnant preserved. For the majesty of the Lord; for his glorious power and goodness manifested in their deliverance. They shall cry aloud, in way of exultation and thanksgiving to God. From the sea; from the isles of the sea, as this is explained in the next verse; from those parts beyond the sea, into which they were carried captive, and in which they were miraculously preserved.

15 Wherefore glorify ye the LORD in ‖ Or, vallies. the ‖fires, even [h]the name of the LORD
h Mal. 1. 11. God of Israel in the isles of the sea.

Glorify ye the Lord: these are the words either, 1. Of the remnant, who being themselves delivered, do encourage and exhort their brethren to glorify God with them; or, 2. Of the prophet, directing and exciting God's people to glorify God in their afflictions, because of that deliverance which he had promised, and would assuredly give to them. In the fires; when you are in the furnace of affliction; although this word is never used in Scripture in this sense. Others therefore render the word, in the valleys; and others, in the holes, you that are now forced to hide yourselves in holes. Possibly it may be better rendered, for light or illumination; which may be understood either of the light of the truth which God would reveal to them, or for the comfort and felicity which God would confer upon them; light being frequently taken both ways in Scripture. For this Hebrew word, in all other places of Scripture where it is found, signifies that Urim which was in the high priest's breastplate, and which properly signifies illumination, as both Jews and Christians render it, whereof that was both a sign and instrument; of which see on Exod. xxviii. 30. Add to this, that this part of the prophecy seems to concern the days of the gospel, and that light which the Jews should then receive by the Messias, of whom the high priest with his ephod and Urim was a type. And so this is an exhortation to the converted Jews to bless God for the true Urim, even for Christ and the gospel. And some of the ancient translators had this signification of the word in their eye, as the vulgar Latin, who render it, in doctrines; and the Chaldee, who translate it, when light shall come to the just. But this I propose with submission. In the isles of the sea; in remote countries beyond the sea, which in Scripture are commonly called isles, as hath been formerly and oft observed; whereby he seems to imply that he here speaks not so much of a temporal felicity which the Jews should receive and enjoy in their own country, as of a spiritual advantage which they should have by the Messias in the places where they were dispersed.

† Heb. wing. 16 ¶ From the †uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs, even glory to † Heb. Leanness to me, or, My secret to me. the righteous. But I said, †My leanness, i Jer. 5. 11. my leanness, woe unto me! [i]the treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously; yea, the treacherous dealers have dealt very treacherously.

From the uttermost part of the earth, from all the parts of the earth or land in which the Jews are or shall be, have we heard songs, songs of joy and praise. Even glory to the righteous; or, glory be to the righteous; which may seem to be the matter of the song. By the righteous may be understood either, 1. The generation of righteous and holy men, who formerly were despised, but now upon this eminent deliverance shall be highly honoured; or, 2. The Lord, whom they were exhorted to glorify in the foregoing verse, and who may well be called the righteous one, as he is frequently styled the Holy One, as Hos. xi. 9; Hab. iii. 3, &c.; or, 3. The Messiah, to whom this title of just or righteous is frequently given, as Isa. liii. 11; Jer. xxiii. 5; Zech. ix. 9, &c. And the believing Jews call him righteous emphatically, partly to intimate that he is the author and procurer of all true righteousness, and partly in opposition to their unbelieving brethren, who rejected and condemned him as a malefactor; all which the prophet foresaw by the Spirit of prophecy. But I said; but in the midst of these joyful tidings I discern something which interrupts my joys, and gives me cause of bitter complaint and lamentation. My leanness, my leanness; I faint and pine away for grief, for the following reason. The treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously; the Jews, who have been frequently guilty of great perfidiousness towards God, are now acting the same part; which he speaks either, 1. Of those who lived in his time; or rather, 2. Of those who should live when the Messias was upon earth, of whom he foresaw by the Spirit that they would forsake God, and reject their Messiah, and thereby bring utter destruction upon themselves. For even the Hebrew doctors expound this place of the perfidiousness of some Jews in the times of the Messiah. And it is not strange that so sad a sight made the prophet cry out, My leanness, &c. The treacherous dealers have dealt very treacherously; he repeats it to show the horridness of the crime, and how deeply he was affected with it.

17 [k]Fear, and the pit, and the snare, k See 1 Kin. 19. 17. Jer. 48. 43, 44. Amos 5. 19.
are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth.

Great and various judgments, some actually inflicted, and others expected and justly feared, as the punishment of their last-mentioned treachery.

18 And it shall come to pass, that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for [l]the windows from on l Gen. 7. 11.
high are open, and [m]the foundations of m Ps. 18. 7.
the earth do shake.

He who fleeth from the noise of the fear; upon the report of some terrible evil coming towards him; the act, fear, being here put for the object, or the thing feared, as it is in many places. And thus this very phrase is taken Job xv. 21. Shall fall into the pit; when he designs to avoid one danger, by so doing he shall plunge himself into another and a greater mischief. The windows from on high are opened, and the foundations of the earth do shake; both heaven and earth conspire against him. He alludes to the deluge of waters which God poured down from heaven, and to the earthquakes which he ofttimes causeth below.

19 [n]The earth is utterly broken down, n Jer. 4. 23.
the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly.

This is repeated again, partly to show the dreadfulness and certainty of these judgments, and partly to awaken and affect the stupid Israelites, who greatly needed it.

20 The earth shall [o]reel to and fro like o ch. 19. 14.
a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again.

The earth; the people of the earth. Shall reel to and fro like a drunkard; shall be sorely perplexed and distressed, not knowing whither to go, nor what to do. Like a cottage; or like a lodge in a garden, of which this word is used, Isa.

i. 8, which is soon taken down, and set up in another place, as occasion requires. Or, as others render it, like a tent, which is easily and commonly carried from place to place. The transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; those sins which they formerly esteemed light and pleasant shall now be most burdensome and grievous to them, because of the dreadful punishments which shall follow them.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall †punish the host of the high ones that are on high, [p]and the kings of the earth upon the earth.

p Is. 76. 12.

In that day; either when God shall punish the apostatical Jews, or about or after that time, or in a time known to God; for this phrase is oft used indefinitely, and without any respect to the time designed in the foregoing passages. The high ones that are on high; the proud and potent enemies of God, and of his people, who possess the high places of the earth. The kings of the earth; either, 1. The great monarchs of the world, who now scorn and trample upon God's people; or, 2. The princes and rulers of Israel or Judah; for the name of king is frequently given in Scripture unto mean and inferior rulers, as Judg. i. 7; 1 Kings xx. 1, 12; Psal. cxix. 46, and elsewhere.

22 And they shall be gathered together, †as prisoners are gathered in the ‖pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be ‖visited.

They shall be gathered together, by God's special providence, in order to their punishment, as the following words show. And thus the unbelieving Jews were generally gathered together at Jerusalem, to their solemn feast, when Titus came and besieged, and after some time took and destroyed them; which was a very remarkable hand of God, as Josephus and other historians observed. And I know nothing to the contrary but this very thing may be meant in this place, it being confessed that divers passages of this chapter concern the times of the Messiah. Shall be shut up in the prison; as malefactors, which are taken in several places, are usually brought to one common prison, where they are reserved in order to their trial and punishment. Shall they be visited; either, 1. In judgment, as visiting is oft used. So the sense is, After they have been punished with long imprisonment, and tormented with expectation and fear, they shall be brought forth to receive condign punishment. Or rather, 2. In mercy. And so the sense may be either, 1. After the Jews shall have suffered many and grievous things from the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, and others, at last their Messiah and Deliverer shall come into the world, &c. Or, 2. After the unbelieving and apostate Jews shall have been shut up in unbelief and in great tribulations for many ages together, they shall be convinced of their sin in crucifying their Messiah, and brought home to God and Christ by true repentance.

23 Then the [q]moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the LORD of hosts shall [r]reign in [s]mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and ‖before his ancients gloriously.

The moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed. The sun and moon are here considered either, 1. As they were abused to idolatry; for these two were most eminent idols, and most generally worshipped, especially in those Eastern countries, Deut. iv. 19; xvii. 3; Job xxxi. 26, &c., and so may be put for all idols, which were confounded by Christ at his coming, as was foretold in Scripture, and verified by the testimony of ancient, yea, even of heathen historians. Or, 2. As they were the most eminent and glorious lights of the world, and were oft used, both in Scripture and other authors, to signify the great kings, and potentates, and glories of the world, as hath been formerly noted, and we shall have further occasion to remember. So the sense is, that all earthly powers and glories should be obscured with the far greater splendour of Christ, the King of kings, at whose feet even the kings of the earth shall fall down and worship, as we shall see in other parts of this prophecy. The Lord of hosts; the Messiah, who, though man, yet is also God, and the Lord of hosts, and is so called, Zech. ii. 8, 11. Shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem; shall come in the flesh, and set up his kingdom, first in Jerusalem, and afterward in all other nations. Before his ancients; before his ministers, who are in some sort the courtiers of this King of glory, as being continually attending upon him, and enjoying his presence, and executing the powers and offices of his kingdom; and especially before his apostles, who were the witnesses of his Divine words and works, and particularly of his resurrection and ascension, by which he entered upon his kingdom; and of this exercise of his royal power, in subduing both Jews and Gentiles to himself. The word ancient or elder is not a name of age, but of office, as it is in very many texts of Scripture. And the ancients are here put synecdochically for the whole church, in whose name and for whose service they act. Gloriously, Heb. in glory, for that preposition is very frequently understood.

God glorious in his judgments on Babel, 1—5, and his people's salvation, 6—12.

a Ex. 15. 2. Ps. 118. 28.
b Ps. 98. 1.
c Num. 23. 19.

The prophet reflecting upon those great and glorious prophecies which he had delivered concerning the destruction of his enemies, and the protection and deliverance of his people, and the sending of the Messiah, and the establishment of his own kingdom in spite of all opposition, interrupteth the course of his prophecies, and breaketh forth into a solemn celebration of all these wonderful works. Thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth; thy counsels, from which all thy works proceed, and which thou hast from time to time revealed to thy prophets and people, which were of old, being conceived from all eternity, and long since made known by thy threatenings and promises, are true and firm, and therefore shall certainly be accomplished.

2 For thou hast made [d]of a city an heap; of a defenced city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city; it shall never be built.

d ch. 21. 9. & 23. 13. Jer. 51. 37.

A city; which is put collectively for cities. He speaks of the cities of strangers, as the following clause explains it, or of enemies of God, and of his people. And under the name cities he comprehends their countries and kingdoms, of which cities are an eminent and commonly the strongest part. A palace of strangers; the royal cities, in which were the palaces of strangers, i. e. of the kings of strange people, or of the Gentiles. It shall never be built; their cities and palaces have been or shall be utterly and irrecoverably destroyed.

3 Therefore shall the strong people [e]glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

e Rev. 11. 13.

Thy stoutest enemies observing thy wonderful works, in saving thy people, and in destroying others of thine and their adversaries, shall be either converted, or at least convinced, and forced to acknowledge thy power, and shall tremble before thee.

4 For thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, [f]a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.

f ch. 4. 6.

For thou hast been a strength to the poor, &c.; for thou hast defended thy poor and helpless people against the fiercest assaults of their enemies. When the blast of the terrible one is as a storm against the wall; or, for (as this particle commonly signifies; or rather, therefore, as it is frequently used, because thou art their defender) the blast of the terrible, or strong, or violent one, was like a storm (of hail, or rain, or wind) against a wall, which makes a great and terrible noise, but without any effect, for the wall stands firm in spite of it. It is probable the prophet in these words had a special respect to that miraculous deliverance of Jerusalem from the rage and attempt of Sennacherib; although the words be general, and include other deliverances of a like nature.

5 Thou shalt bring down the noise of strangers, as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low.

The noise; the tumultuous noise, as the word properly signifies, which he called their blast in the foregoing verse; by which he means their rage and furious attempts, which are commonly managed with much noise and clamour. Of strangers; of those strange and heathen nations that fought against God's people. Even the heat with the shadow of a cloud; with as much ease as thou dost in the course of thy common providence allay the heat of a dry season and place, either by the shadow of thy clouds, or by the rain which falleth from black and shadowy clouds. The branch; the arm or power, as a branch is the arm of a tree. Or, the prince or commanders; for the word branch is sometimes put for a person of eminent place and power, as Psal. lxxx. 15; Isa. iv. 2; Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12. But others render the word, the song, as it is used, Cant. ii. 12, their jovial and triumphant song.

6 ¶ And in [g]this mountain shall [h]the LORD of hosts make unto [i]all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined.

In this mountain; in Mount Zion, to wit, in God's church, which is very frequently meant by the names of Zion and Jerusalem, both in the Old and in the New Testament. Make unto all people, both Jews and Gentiles, who shall then be admitted to the participation of the same privileges and ordinances, a feast of fat things; a feast made up of the most exquisite and delicate provisions; which is manifestly meant of the ordinances, graces, and comforts given by God in and to his church. Of wines on the lees; which have continued upon the lees a competent time, whereby they gain strength, and afterwards drawn off from the lees, and so refined, as it is explained in the next clause.

The face of the covering; which is put either, 1. For the covering of the face, by an hypallage, as silver of shekels is put for shekels of silver, Lev. v. 15; or, 2. For the covering or veil, as the next clause expounds it; the word face being oft superfluously used in the Hebrew language, as Gen. i. 2, 29, and elsewhere. The veil; the veil of ignorance of God, and of the true religion, which then was upon the Gentiles, and now is upon the Jews, 2 Cor. iii. 14—16, which, like a veil, covers men's eyes, and keeps them from discerning between things that differ. It may be also an allusion either to the veil which was put upon Moses's face, Exod. xxxiv. 33, 34, or to the veil of the sanctuary, by which the persons without it were kept from the sight of the ark. This is a manifest prophecy concerning the illumination and conversion of the Gentiles.

8 He will [l]swallow up death in victory; and the Lord GOD will [m]wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the LORD hath spoken it.

He, the Lord, expressed both in the foregoing and following words, even the Messiah, who is God and man, will swallow up death; shall by his death destroy the power of death, as is said, Heb. ii. 14; take away the sting of the first death, and prevent the second death, and give eternal life to the world, even to all that believe in him. In victory, Heb. unto victory, i. e. so as to overcome it perfectly; which complete victory Christ hath already purchased for, and will in due time actually confer upon, his people. Will wipe away tears; will take away from his people all sufferings and sorrows, and all the causes of them; which is begun here, and perfected in heaven. The rebuke of his people; the reproach and contempt which was daily cast upon his faithful people by the ungodly world, and, among others, by the apostate and unbelieving Jews, who accounted the Christians to be the scum and offscouring of all things. From off all the earth; or, from off all this land, i. e. from all the church and people of God, wheresoever they shall be, from all their faces, as was said in the foregoing clause. The Lord hath spoken it; therefore doubt not of it, though it seem incredible to you.

9 ¶ And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; [n]we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the LORD; we have waited for him, [o]we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.

n Gen. 49. 18. Titus 2. 13.
o Ps. 20. 5.

It shall be said by God's people, in way of triumph and reply to their enemies, Lo, this is our God: your gods are senseless and impotent idols; but our God is omnipotent, and hath done these great and glorious works, which fill the world with admiration. We may well boast of him, for there is no God like to him. Possibly it may be an intimation that God should take flesh, and become visibly present amongst men. We have waited for him; our Messiah or Saviour, long since promised, and for whom we have waited a long time, now at last is come into the world, bringing salvation with him.

10 For in this mountain shall the hand of the LORD rest, and Moab shall be ‖trodden down under him, even as straw is ‖trodden down for the dunghill.

‖ Or, threshed.
‖ Or, threshed in Madmenah.

Shall the hand of the Lord rest; the powerful and gracious presence of God (which is oft signified in Scripture by God's hand) shall have its constant and settled abode; it shall not move from place to place, as it did with the tabernacle; nor shall it depart from it, as it did from Jerusalem; but shall continue in his church even to the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20. Moab; the Moabites, which having been constant and implacable enemies to Israel, are synecdochically put for all the enemies of God's church, as the Edomites upon the same account are, Isa. xxxiv. 6; lxiii. 1. Under him; under his feet, as appears by the following similitude. Even as straw is trodden down for the dunghill; as easily and as effectually as the straw, which being left upon the ground, and mixed with the dung which lies there, is trampled upon by the feet of men and beasts.

11 And he shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim: and he shall bring down their pride together with the spoils of their hands.

He; either, 1. Moab, who being plunged into a sea of troubles, shall endeavour to swim out of it, but to no purpose; or rather, 2. The Lord, who is designed by this very pronoun he, both in the latter clause of this verse, and in the following verse; whose power they shall be no more able to resist, than the waters can resist a man that swims, who with great facility divides them hither and thither. Shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them; or, stretch forth his hands to the utmost, to smite and destroy them. As he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands, which he doth to the uttermost. With the spoils of their hands; with all that wealth which they have gained by rapine, and spoiling of God's people, and others. But the words are otherwise rendered by others, with or by (as this Hebrew particle is used, Esth. ix. 25,) the arms of his hands; which he may mention, because the strength of a man, and of his hands, consisteth in his arms; whence also the arm in Scripture is oft put for strength: or, by the motion or stroke of his hands, as all the ancient translators do in effect render it. And this seems to agree best with the metaphor here borrowed from one that swimmeth, which is performed in that manner.

[b] ch. 60. 18. city; [b]salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

In that day, when God shall do such glorious works for the comfort of his people, and for the ruin of his and their enemies, as he hath described in the foregoing chapter. In the land of Judah; in the church of God, which in Scripture is oft signified by the titles of Judah, and Jerusalem, and Zion, or the like. A strong city; Jerusalem, or the church, which is oft called or compared to a city, as Psal. lxxxvii. 3; Rev. iii. 12; xi. 2; xxi. 2. Salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks; God's immediate and saving protection shall be to his church instead of walls, &c. But I conceive, with submission, the words may very fitly be thus rendered, He will send, or put, or make her walls and bulwarks salvation, i. e. as safe as salvation itself; or, in safety, there being only a defect of the preposition, which is very frequent in Scripture.

[c] Ps. 118. 19, 20. † Heb. truths. 2 [c]Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the †truth may enter in.

Open ye the gates of the city, mentioned ver. 1. The righteous nation; either, 1. Those godly Jews who are returning from Babylon; or, 2. The whole body of righteous and holy men, whether Jews or Gentiles. For he seems to speak here, as he apparently did in the foregoing chapter, of the times of the gospel. Which keepeth the truth; which is sincere and stedfast in the profession and practice of the true religion.

† Heb. peace, peace. ch. 57. 19. ‖ Or, thought, or, imagination. 3 Thou wilt keep him †in perfect peace, whose ‖mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee.

Heb. The fixed thought or mind (i. e. the man whose mind and thoughts are fixed and settled upon thee by faith, as the next clause explains it, the qualifications being put for the person so qualified, as folly and wisdom are put for a fool and a wise man, Prov. xxiv. 9; Micah vi. 9, and peace for a man of peace, Psal. cxx. 7) thou wilt keep in peace, peace, i. e. in all manner of peace, in constant and perfect peace. In the foregoing verse the righteous were admitted into the city, and here they were preserved and defended in it by God's almighty power.

[d] ch. 45. 17. † Heb. the rock of ages. Deut. 32. 4. 4 Trust ye in the LORD for ever: [d]for in the LORD JEHOVAH is †everlasting strength:

For ever; in all times and conditions. Everlasting strength, Heb. the Rock of ages; a sure refuge to all those that trust in him, through all generations; therefore you may safely trust in him, and that for ever.

[e] ch. 25. 12. & 32. 19. 5 ¶ For he bringeth down them that dwell on high; [e]the lofty city, he layeth it low; he layeth it low, even to the ground; he bringeth it even to the dust.

He bringeth down, Heb. he hath brought down, which yet may be put for the future, he will bring down, &c. You may trust him; for he can and doth raise some, and throw down others, according to his own good pleasure. Them that dwell on high; he speaks not so much of height of place as of dignity and power, in which sense also he mentions the lofty city, in the next clause. The lofty city; which may be understood either of proud Babylon; or collectively, of all the strong and stately cities of God's enemies.

6 The foot shall tread it down, even the feet of the poor, and the steps of the needy.

God will bring it under the feet of his poor, and weak, and despised people.

7 The way of the just is uprightness: [f]thou, most upright, dost weigh the path of the just.

[f] Ps. 37. 23.

Is uprightness; or, most even or plain. Heb. evenness or plainness. Which is understood either, 1. Of the rectitude or goodness of his actions or course; or rather, 2. Of the good success of his affairs; for this suits best with the coherence. When the way of the wicked is rugged, in which they easily stumble and fall into mischief, of which he spoke, ver. 5, 6, the path of just men is plain and smooth, and they walk safely and comfortably in it. Thou, most upright, dost weigh the path of the just: the sense of the words thus rendered is, Thou, O God, who art most upright in all thy ways, and therefore a lover of uprightness, and of all upright men, dost weigh (i. e. examine) the path of the just, the course of his actions, and, which is implied, dost approve of them, and therefore direct them to a happy issue. But the words are otherwise rendered by some late learned interpreters, to this purpose, Thou dost level or make plain (as this very word signifies, Psal. lxviii. 50) the path of the just exactly, Heb. with evenness, or evenly, so as to make it very even. Thus the first clause declares that it was even or plain, and this showeth whence or by whom it is made such, even by God.

[g] ch. 64. 5. 8 Yea, [g]in the way of thy judgments, O LORD, have we waited for thee; the desire of our soul is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee.

Yea, in the way of thy judgments, O Lord, have we waited for thee: and as we thy people have loved and served thee when thou hast made our way plain and easy for us; so we have not forsaken thee, but waited upon thee, when thou hast made it rugged and troublesome by thy judgments. He speaks of the same just men ver. 7—9, though it be with a change of the numbers and persons, which is usual in prophetical writings, the just, ver. 7, we, ver. 8, I, ver. 9. To thy name, and to the remembrance of thee, Heb. to thy name and thy memory; which by a known figure called hendiadduo may be put for the remembrance of thy name. And the name of God is here, as it is in many other places, put for God himself, as he hath made himself known by his word and works. And so the sense of this clause is, Our affections are not alienated from thee by thy judgments, but we still continue to desire thy presence and favour, and we support and comfort ourselves with the remembrance of what thou art, and what thou hast done, and what thou hast promised to be and do to thy people.

[h] Ps. 63. 6. Cant. 3. 1. 9 [h]With my soul have I desired thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early: for when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.

With my soul; sincerely and most affectionately, as Psal. lxiii. 1, and elsewhere. Have I: the prophet speaks this in the name of all God's people, by comparing this with the foregoing verse. In the night; either, 1. Figuratively, in the time of affliction, which is often called night or darkness; or rather, 2. Properly, as appears from the next clause, wherein early or in the morning is opposed to it. When others are sleeping, my thoughts and desires are working towards God. Will I seek thee, by fervent prayer for thy loving-kindness. Early; betimes in the morning, as the word signifies. For when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness: and good reason it is that we should thus desire and seek thee in the way of thy judgments, because this is the very design of thy judgments, that men should thereby be awakened to learn and return to their duty; and this is a common effect of them, that those who have been careless in prosperity, are made wiser and better by afflictions. The inhabitants of the world seem to be here taken not in opposition to God's people, as if not they only, but even the wicked world, would do thus; but in a general notion, so as to include, yea principally to design, God's people, as may be gathered both from the former part of this, and the foregoing verse, in which he describes their pious carriage under affliction; as also from the two following verses, in which he speaks of the wicked, whom he seems to oppose to these inhabitants of the world, because these learn righteousness, whilst those wicked men remain incorrigible both under mercies and judgments, ver. 10, 11.

i Eccles. 8. 12. Rom. 2. 4.
k Ps. 143. 10.

Let favour be showed to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness. this is the carriage of thy people; but the course of wicked men is directly contrary in all conditions; for if thou dost spare them, when thou punishest thine own people, they will not accept of that gracious invitation to repentance, nor walk worthy of so great a mercy. In the land of uprightness; even in God's church, and among his people, where righteousness is professed and taught, and by many practised; and where unrighteousness is discountenanced and punished; all which things are aggravations of his sin. Will not behold the majesty of the Lord; although God gives such plain and clear discoveries of his majesty and glory, not only in his word, but also in his works, and especially in this glorious work of his patience and mercy to wicked men, yet they wilfully shut their eyes at it, and will not acknowledge it.

11 LORD, when thy hand is lifted up, [l]they will not see: but they shall see, and be ashamed for their envy ‖ at the people; yea, the fire of thine enemies shall devour them.

l Job 34. 27. Ps. 28. 5. ch. 5. 12.
‖ Or, toward thy people.

When thy hand is lifted up, they will not see; and they are guilty of the same obstinate blindness when thou dost smite and punish them, which is commonly signified by lifting up the hand, as Ezek. xliv. 12; Micah v. 9. Compare also 2 Sam. xx. 21; 1 Kings xi. 26. Or, as others render it, when thine hand is high or exalted, i. e. when thy works are most evident and most glorious, when thou appearest most gloriously for the defence of thy people, and for the punishment of thine and their enemies, they will not see. They shall see: the same word is repeated in another sense. They shall feel and know that by sad and costly experience, which they would not learn by other and easier ways. Seeing is oft put for feeling; in which sense men are said to see affliction, Lam. iii. 1, and to see death, Psal. lxxxix. 48, and the like. At the people; or, at or towards thy people, the pronoun thy being repeated out of the following clause, as it is in many other places of Scripture, as hath been before noted. Their envy and hatred against God's people blinded their minds, that they neither could nor would see that God was on their side, though the tokens of it were most manifest and undeniable; which was the case of Pharaoh and the Egyptians, who were not sensible that the Lord fought for Israel against the Egyptians, as they said, Exod. xiv. 25, till it was too late. The fire of thine enemies; not efficiently, but objectively; such fire or wrath as thou usest to pour forth upon thine implacable enemies. As my wrong, Gen. xvi. 5, is not the wrong done by me, but to me; and my violence, Jer. li. 35, is the violence done to me, as we translate it, not by me.

12 ¶ LORD, thou wilt ordain peace for us: for thou also hast wrought all our works ‖ in us.

‖ Or, for us.

Thou wilt ordain peace for us; as thou wilt destroy thine and our enemies, so thou wilt bless us thy people with peace and prosperity. All our works; either, 1. All the good works done by us, which are the effects of thy grace; or rather, 2. All the good and great works which have been wrought for us, all our wonderful deliverances and singular blessings, come from thee. And so the argument is this, God hath delivered us formerly upon all occasions, and therefore he will still deliver us, and give us peace; which inference is frequently made by holy men in Scripture. In us, Heb. to or for us.

13 O LORD our God, [m]other lords beside thee have had dominion over us: but by thee only will we make mention of thy name.

m 2 Chron. 12. 8.

Other lords beside thee; others besides thee, who art our only Judge, and King, and Lawgiver, Isa. xxxiii. 22, and besides those governors who have been set up by thee, and have ruled us for thee, and in subordination to thee, even foreign and heathenish lords, such as the Philistines, and lately the Assyrians. Have had dominion over us; have exercised a tyrannical power over us. By thee only; by thy favour and help, by which alone (and not by our strength or merits) we have been rescued from their tyranny. Will we make mention of thy name; we will celebrate thy praise, and trust in thee for the future. Thou only hast given us both ability and occasion to magnify thy name, whereas without thy succour we had gone into the place of silence, where there is no remembrance of thee, as is said, Psal. vi. 5.

14 They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise: therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish.

They shall not rise; those tyrants and enemies are utterly and irrecoverably destroyed, so as they shall never live or rise again to molest us. Possibly he speaks of the miraculous destruction of Sennacherib's army before Jerusalem. Therefore, that they might be so effectually destroyed, thou didst undertake the work. Or rather, because (as this particle is used, Numb. xiv. 43; Psal. xlii. 6) thou hast, &c., as it follows. Destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish; thou hast destroyed both them and theirs, and all the monuments or memorials of their greatness and glory.

15 Thou hast increased the nation, O LORD, thou hast increased the nation: thou art glorified: thou hadst removed it far unto all the ends of the earth.

Thou hast increased the nation, Heb. Thou hast added to the nation; which may be understood either, 1. In way of mercy, of adding to their numbers, as our translation takes it; and so we have in effect the same phrase 2 Sam. xxiv. 3, The Lord add to the people, &c., and Psal. cxv. 14, in the Hebrew text, The Lord shall add upon or to you. Or, 2. In way of judgment, of adding to their plagues or miseries, of which we read Rev. xxii. 18, in which sense the phrase is found in the Hebrew text, Psal. cxx. 3, What shall be added to thee? and in that usual form of imprecation, The Lord do so to me, and more, Ruth i. 17; 1 Sam. iii. 17, &c., where it is in the Hebrew, The Lord do so to me, and add. And this sense seems to be favoured by the context, as also by the ancient Greek translators, who render the words, add to them evil or punishments. And so the word adding may be used emphatically and sarcastically. God indeed will add to them; but what? Not numbers, and power, and glory, as they expected, but plagues and judgments one after another. This nation is supposed by the current of interpreters to be the people of Israel, emphatically called the nation. Possibly it may be the Assyrians, of whom he spoke in the last verse. But this I propose with submission. Thou art glorified; thy justice is glorified in their punishment or destruction. Thou hadst removed it far unto all the ends of the earth; which may be understood either, 1. Of Israel, and that either in a way of mercy, Thou hast by destroying the Assyrians enlarged thy people, who were shut up in Jerusalem, so that now they may go to the remotest parts of the land; or in way of judgment, Thou hast removed thy people out of their own land, and suffered them to be carried captive to the ends of the earth. Or, 2. Of the Assyrians; Thou hast removed them from Jerusalem, which they had besieged, and caused them to flee into their own country, which in Scripture phrase was in the ends of the earth; of which see Isa. v. 26; xiii. 5.

16 LORD, [n]in trouble have they visited thee, they poured out a †prayer when thy chastening was upon them.

n Hos. 5. 15.
† Heb. secret speech.

They, to wit, thy people, as appears both from the matter of this verse, and from the following verses. Visited thee; come into thy presence, with their prayers and supplications, as the next clause explains it. They poured out; which notes the plenty or rather the earnestness of their prayers, as Psal. xlii. 4; cxlii. 2. A prayer, Heb. a muttering or lowly speech, such as charmers use, and such as Hezekiah used when he was in great distress, Isa. xxxviii. 14, Like a crane or swallow, so did I chatter: I did mourn as a dove; and such as is usual in case of great humiliation and dejection of mind. When thy chastening was upon them; when thou wast punishing them for their sins.

o ch. 13. 8. John 16. 21.

17 Like as °a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out in her pangs; so have we been in thy sight, O LORD.

So have we been, such was our anguish and danger, in thy sight; whilst thou didst only look upon us like a mere spectator, without affording us the least degree of pity or help. Or this phrase notes only the reality of the thing; God was witness of this our misery, and knoweth the truth of what I say.

18 We have been with child, we have been in pain, we have as it were brought forth wind; we have not wrought any deliverance in the earth; neither have p Ps. 17. 14. pthe inhabitants of the world fallen.

We have been with child, we have been in pain, we have as it were brought forth wind; we have had the torment of a woman in child-bearing, but not the comfort of a living child, John xvi. 21, for we have brought forth nothing but wind; all our labours and hopes were vain and unsuccessful. The prophet here represents their deplorable and desperate condition before God appeared so eminently to deliver them. We have not wrought any deliverance; we found that we were utterly unable to deliver ourselves. In the earth; or, in the land, in our own country, where yet we had far greater advantages than we could have had elsewhere. The inhabitants of the world; the Assyrians, or our other enemies; for they are here opposed to God's people.

q Ezek. 37. 1, &c.

19 qThy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise.

r Dan. 12. 2. rAwake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead.

Thy dead men shall live. The prophet here turneth his speech to God's people, and gives them a cordial to support them in their deep distress, expressed in the foregoing verse. Thy dead men are not like those ver. 14, for they shall not live, as I there said; but thine shall live. You shall certainly be delivered from all your fears and dangers. Nothing is more frequent, both in Scripture and other authors, than for great calamities to be compared to death, and deliverance from them to life, and reviving, and resurrection; and particularly the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, and their deliverance out of it, is largely expressed by this very similitude, Ezek. xxxvii. 11, &c. Together with my dead body; as I myself, who am one of your number, and of these dead men, shall live again. You shall be delivered together with me. Which he might add, to meet with an objection; for they might think that God would take some special care of this holy prophet, and would preserve him when they should be destroyed. No, saith he, as I am at present like a dead carcass no less than you, so you shall be restored to life no less than I. If the supplement of our translation seems to be too literal, it may be rendered to the same purpose, as my body, the particle as being oft understood, as I have divers times observed: As my dead body shall rise, so shall theirs also; we are equally dead, and shall equally live again. Shall they arise unto life, as appears from the former clause. Awake out of your sleep, even the sleep of death, as it is called, Psal. xiii. 3; death being oft compared to a sleep, as John xi. 11; Acts vii. 60, and restoration to life unto awaking, as 2 Kings iv. 31. Ye that dwell in the dust; you that are dead and buried in the dust, as the dead are said to sleep in the dust, Dan. xii. 2. Thy dew; the favour and blessing of God upon thee, which is oft compared to the dew, as Hos. xiv. 5; Micah v. 7. The pronoun thy is here taken not efficiently, but objectively, as thy curse, Gen. xxvii. 13, is the curse coming upon thee. Is as the dew of herbs, which gently refresheth and reviveth them, and maketh them to grow and flourish. The earth shall cast out the dead, as an abortive birth is cast out of the womb, to which the grave is compared, Job i. 21. But because the verb here used doth not signify to cast out, but to cast down, which seems not proper here, these words may be, and are, both by ancient and later interpreters, rendered otherwise, and thou wilt cast down the land of the giants, or of the violent ones, of the proud and potent tyrants of the world. For the word here rendered dead is elsewhere rendered giants, as 2 Sam. xxi. 16, 18. See also Job xxvi. 5; Prov. ix. 18; xxi. 16. But then the words seem to be better rendered, and thou wilt cast the giants down to the ground: either, 1. Thou, O God, who is oft understood in such cases; or rather, 2. Thou, O my people, to whom he speaks in the foregoing clauses of the verse, thy dead body, and thy dew. and here continueth his speech, thou wilt or shalt cast, &c., thou shalt subdue even the most giant-like and mighty enemies; which though it be properly God's work, the church is oft said to do, because she by her prayers engageth God to do it. And so as the former clauses of the verse speak of the deliverance and prosperity of God's church and people, so this clause speaks of the destruction of their enemies, which usually accompanieth it.

20 ¶ Come, my people, senter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were tfor a little moment, until the indignation be overpast.

t Ps. 30. 5. ch. 54. 7, 8. 2 Cor. 4. 17.

Having foretold the wonderful deliverance and great happiness of God's people, and the utter destruction of their enemies, lest they should think they were now entering into the possession of this felicity, he adds what here follows, and intimates, that for the present they were to expect storms, and to prepare for them, and patiently to wait God's time for the accomplishment of so great a mercy. Enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; withdraw thyself from the company and conversation of the wicked world, lest partaking with them in their sins thou dost also partake of their plagues; pour out thy prayers to God in thy closet, as this may be explained by comparing Matt. vi. 6; put thyself under the protection of my providence and grace by faith and prayer. He alludes to the common practice of men, who when there are storms or dangers abroad, betake themselves into their own houses or chambers for safety; or, as some think, to that history, Exod. ix. 19, 20, or to that command of not going out of their houses, Exod. xii. 22, or to the like charge given to Rahab, as the condition of her preservation, Josh. ii. For a little moment; whereby he intimates that all their afflictions, how long and tedious soever they may seem, are but short and momentary, in comparison of that happiness which is reserved for them. The indignation; the dreadful effects of God's anger, those sore judgments of God mentioned in the following verse.

21 For, behold, the LORD ucometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her †blood, and shall no more cover her slain.

u Mic. 1. 3. Jude 14.

Cometh out of his place; cometh down from heaven; which God in Scripture is frequently said to do, when he undertaketh any great and glorious work, either of delivering his people, or of destroying their enemies. The speech is borrowed from the manner of princes, who come out of their palaces either to sit in judgment, or to fight against their enemies, which is the case here. The inhabitants of the earth; all the enemies of God and of his people; for these are here opposed to God's people. Therefore take heed you be not found in the number of them. The earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain; the innocent blood which hath been spilled upon the earth shall be brought to light, and shall be severely revenged upon the murderers. For the phrase, see on Gen. iv. 10; Job xvi. 18; Ezek. xxiv. 7.

CHAP. XXVII.

God's care over his vineyard, 1—6. His chastisements on them, 7—9. His severe judgments against them, 10, 11. Their return, 12, 13.

IN that day the LORD with his sore and great and strong sword shall punish leviathan the ‖piercing serpent, [a]even leviathan that crooked serpent; and he shall slay [b]the dragon that is in the sea.

‖ Or, crossing like a bar.
[a] Ps. 74. 13, 14.
[b] ch. 51. 9. Ezek. 29. 3. & 32. 2.

Shall punish leviathan; what kind of creature the leviathan is, see in my notes on Job xli. 1, &c.; whence it is evident that it was a very great and terrible sea-monster. But here it is certain that the expression is metaphorical, and that by this leviathan, serpent, and dragon (for all signify the same thing) he understands some very powerful enemy or enemies (for the singular number may be here put for the plural, as it is in many other places) of God, and of his church or people, which may well be called by these names, partly for their great might, and partly for the great terror and destruction which they cause upon the earth, as the leviathan doth in the sea. He seems to have a special respect to some particular enemy and oppressor of God's people; either the Assyrian emperor, who now was so; or rather the Babylonian, who should be so. Some understand this of the devil; but although it may be applied to him in a mystical sense, it seems to be literally meant of some potent and visible adversary; which seems more agreeable to the following verses, and to the usage of this and other prophets. The piercing serpent; which by its sting pierceth quickly and deeply into men's bodies. Or, the bar (as this word is elsewhere used) serpent, as this may be called, either for its length, or strength, or swift motion. That crooked serpent; winding and turning itself with great variety and dexterity; whereby he seems to signify the craftiness and activity of this enemy, which being added to his strength makes it more formidable. The dragon; or rather, the whale, as this word is rendered, Gen. i. 21; Job vii. 12, and elsewhere; which agrees better with the following words, that is in the sea, which possibly were added only to limit that general and ambiguous word to a sea-monster, and not to describe the place in which the enemy signified by this dragon had his abode. Although the sea, which here follows, may be metaphorically understood of the great largeness of his empire, and the multitude of his subjects, by comparing this with Rev. xvii. 1, 15.

2 In that day [c]sing ye unto her, [d]A vineyard of red wine.

[c] ch. 5. 1.
[d] Ps. 80. 8. Jer. 2. 21.

In that day; when this potent enemy shall be destroyed. A vineyard of red wine: the words in the Hebrew text lie thus, A vineyard (Behold, a vineyard; or, Jacob or Israel, my church and people, which is sufficiently understood from the next verse, and is expressed ver. 6, shall be a vineyard, shall be defended and dressed, shall thrive and flourish like a vineyard) of red wine, (i. e. of the choicest and best wine, which in those parts was red, as appears both from Scripture, as Prov. xxiii. 31, whence it is called the blood of the grape, Gen. xlix. 11; Deut. xxxii. 14, and from other authors,) sing ye (O you faithful souls, sing with joy and thanksgiving to God) to (or of, or concerning, as this prefix is elsewhere used) her, or it, to wit, the vineyard, or church, (which is frequently compared to a vineyard, as Psal. lxxx. 8; Isa. v. 7, and elsewhere,) now delivered from her great enemy, and blessed with peace and prosperity.

3 [e]I the LORD do keep it; I will water it every moment: lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day.

[e] Ps. 121. 4, 5.

I the Lord do keep it; I will secure it, that neither men, nor beasts, nor drought shall spoil it; which alone are the things that can hurt it. I will protect my church from all the assaults of her enemies, and supply her with all necessary provisions, with my ordinances, and with my Spirit and grace.

4 Fury is not in me: who would set [f]the briers and thorns against me in battle? I would ‖go through them, I would burn them together.

[f] 2 Sam. 23. 6. ch. 9. 18.
‖ Or, march against.

Fury, to wit, against my vineyard, or my people; which is easily understood both from the foregoing and following verses. I have been displeased with them, and have chastised them; but I am not implacable towards them, and resolved utterly to destroy them, as their enemies are, and would have me to be. I would go through them, I would burn them together: this is added as a reason of the foregoing clause and assertion; which may be conceived either, 1. Thus, I rather desire to contend with briers and thorns, i. e. with the wicked enemies of my church, who are thus called, Isa. x. 17; Ezek. xxviii. 24; and if my wrath was now kindled against them, as it is against my people, I would be furious towards them, and never leave till I had utterly consumed them; but I will deal more indulgently with my people. Which exposition seems to receive some light and strength from ver. 6—8. Or, 2. Thus, For I consider the weakness of my people, that if I should let loose my fury upon them, they could no more stand before me than briers and thorns (to which God's people, when they fall into sin, and provoke God, are not unfitly resembled) can stand before a devouring fire, and therefore they would in an instant be utterly destroyed; which I will not do. And this consideration of man's imbecility is elsewhere alleged as a reason of God's indulgence, as Psal. ciii. 13—16; Isa. lvii. 16. But this I deliver with submission.

[g] ch. 25. 4.
[h] Job 22. 21.

Or, or if at any time fury be, or seem to be, in me against my vineyard or people, let him, my people, as is clearly implied from the following words; for there is no peace to those who are not God's people, or to the wicked, Isa. lvii. 21, and is expressed in the following verse; take hold of my strength, i. e. take hold of my arm, which is metonymically strength, and stay it from giving the blow, not by force, which is impossible, but by humble submission and earnest supplication. Or, strengthen himself, or be strong, (as this word properly signifies, and is elsewhere used,) by my strength; not by his own strength, which he will oppose to mine, but by my strength, which he may by humble and frequent prayers not only restrain from doing him hurt, but effectually engage to assist him, and do him good. He seems to allude to that history of Jacob's wrestling with the angel of God, Gen. xxxii. 28, which he could never have done but by a strength received from God. That he may make peace with me; that instead of opposing me, he may in this manner reconcile himself to me. Or, and he shall make peace with me, as the same words are rendered in the next clause; which may be repeated to assure them of that great and important favour, that God would make peace with them. Or the words may be rendered in both clauses, let him make peace with me, yea, let him make peace with me; this future verb being taken imperatively, as the other is in the former clause of the verse.

6 He shall cause them that come of Jacob [i]to take root: Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit.

[i] ch. 37. 31. Hos. 14. 5, 6.

To take root; to be firmly settled in their possessions, and not tossed hither and thither, as they have been. Fill the face of the world with fruit; their posterity shall be so numerous, that their own land shall not be sufficient for them, but they shall be forced to seek habitations in other countries, and shall replenish them with people. But this seems to be understood of the spiritual seed of Jacob, or of believers, who are oft called God's Israel, as Rom. ix. 6, and elsewhere.

7 ¶ Hath he smitten him, † as he smote those that smote him? or is he slain according to the slaughter of them that are slain by him?

† Heb. according to the stroke of those.

Hath he smitten him, as he smote those that smote him? the question implies a denial; he hath not so smitten him, to wit, Jacob. He hath not dealt so severely with his people as he hath dealt with his and their enemies, whom he hath utterly destroyed. This may look either, 1. Backward, upon times past. If you consult former experiences, you will find that God hath done so, hath spared and restored his people, and in judgment remembered mercy to them, when he hath totally ruined their enemies. Or, 2. Forward, upon the time to come, of which he speaks as of a thing past, after the manner of the prophets, and of which he speaks in the next verse. Of them that are slain by him; of those who were slain by Israel, or rather by God at the prayer and on the behalf of Israel. Heb. of his slain ones, i. e. of those of his smiters or enemies who were slain; which exposition is favoured by comparing this with the foregoing clause.

8 [k] In measure, ‖ when it shooteth forth, thou wilt debate with it: ‖ [l] he stayeth his rough wind in the day of the east wind.

k Job 23. 6. Ps. 6. 1. Jer. 10. 24. & 30. 11. & 46. 28. 1 Cor. 10. 13.
‖ Or, when thou sendest it forth.
l Or, when he removeth it. 1 Ps. 78. 38.

In measure; with moderation, in certain proportions which God meteth out and fitteth to their strength. When it shooteth forth; when the vine shooteth forth its luxuriant branches, he, like the vine-dresser, cutteth them off, but so as not to spoil or destroy the vine. Or, as divers interpreters render it, and the word properly and frequently signifies, in or by casting, or dismissing, or sending her or it out; or, when thou dost cast or send her out, to wit, out of her own land, in which she was planted, into captivity. He alludes to a man that divorceth his wife, which is expressed by this word; but withal intimates that this shall not be peremptory and perpetual, as other divorces were. Thou wilt debate with it; God is said to debate or contend with men, when he executeth his judgments upon them, as Isa. xlix. 45; lvii. 16; Amos vii. 4. He stayeth his rough wind; he mitigateth the severity of the judgment. But I must confess I do not meet with any of the ancient or modern translators that agree with ours in this version; nor is the Hebrew verb used, so far as I know, in the signification of staying or restraining; besides, our translation takes no notice of the Hebrew preposition. But this word unquestionably signifies to remove or take away, as 2 Sam. xx. 13; Prov. xxv. 4, 5, and thus most interpreters understand it. And so the place is very fitly thus rendered, he (or, when he, which particle may easily be understood out of the former clause, as is usual) removeth (understand either it, to wit, the vine; or them, to wit, the enemies of God and his people. And so this agreeth with the former verse, in representing the different way of God's proceeding against his people, and his and their enemies. Either way there is only a defect of the pronoun, which I have before showed in divers places to be very usual in the Hebrew language) with or by his rough wind; by which sometimes vines and other trees are pulled up by the roots, as that did, 1 Kings xix. 11, whereby he understands his most terrible judgments. In the day of the east wind; in the time when he sendeth forth his east wind; which he mentions, because that wind in those parts was most violent, and most hurtful to trees and fruits, as hath been oft observed, and therefore is used to signify the most grievous calamities.

9 By this therefore shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged; and this is all the fruit to take away his sin; when he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalkstones that are beaten in sunder, the groves and ‖ images shall not stand up.

‖ Or, sun images.

By this, by this manner of God's dealing with his people, therefore, that the difference between Jacob and his enemies in their several sufferings may appear, shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, Heb. expiated or forgiven upon their true repentance, which shall be the happy effect of their chastisement. This is all the fruit to take away his sin; the effect hereof shall not be to destroy the sinner, as it is in other men, but only to take away the guilt and power of their sins. When he maketh; which sin of Jacob's shall be purged and taken away, and the judgment removed, when he shall truly repent of all his sins, and especially of his idolatry, to which they were most inclined, and for which the most of God's judgments which they had hitherto felt had been inflicted upon them. The altar; which by a usual enallage may be put for the altars, to wit, their idolatrous altars, as is evident from the following words. Possibly he may say the altar with respect to that particular altar which Ahaz had set up in the place of God's own altar; and this prophecy might be delivered either to the prophet, or by him to the people, in Ahaz's time, while that altar stood and was used. As chalk stones; when he shall break all those goodly altars in pieces, which God by his law had enjoined. That are beaten in sunder; which kind of stones are of themselves apt to break into small pieces, and by the artificer are broken into smaller pieces for making mortar. He seems to allude to that fact of Moses, who, to show his detestation of idolatry, took the golden calf, and burnt it, and ground it to powder; and intimates, that when their repentance should be sincere, it would discover itself by their zeal in destroying the instruments of their idolatry. The groves; which were frequently erected to the honour of idols, of which we have many instances in Scripture, which God therefore commanded his people to destroy, Deut. vii. 5; xii. 3. Shall not stand up; shall be thrown down with contempt and indignation.

10 Yet the defenced city shall be desolate, and the habitation forsaken, and left like a wilderness: [m] there shall the calf feed, and there shall he lie down, and consume the branches thereof.

m See ch. 17. 2. & 32. 14.

Yet; yet before this glorious promise concerning the removal of Israel's sin and calamity be fulfilled, a dreadful and desolating judgment shall first come upon them. The defenced city; Jerusalem, and the rest of the defenced cities in the land, the singular number being put for the plural. The habitation; the most inhabited and populous places. Or, as the Hebrew word properly signifies, their pleasant habitations, whether in the city or country. Forsaken and left like a wilderness; which was fulfilled in the time of the Babylonish captivity. The calf; which is synecdochically put for all sorts of cattle, which may securely feed there, because there shall be no men left to disturb or annoy them. The branches thereof; of their pleasant habitation; of the young trees which shall grow up in that ruinated country.

11 When the boughs thereof are withered, they shall be broken off: the women come, and set them on fire: for [n] it is a people of no understanding: therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and [o] he that formed them will shew them no favour.

n Deut. 32. 28. ch. 1. 3. Jer. 8. 7.
o Deut. 32. 18. ch. 43. 1, 7. & 44. 2, 21, 24.

When the boughs thereof are withered; when they shall begin to wither, as they will when they are thus gnawed and cropped by cattle. They shall be broken off, that there may be no hopes nor possibility of their recovery. The women; he mentions women, either because it is their usual work in the country to make fires, and to gather fuel for them, or to signify that the men should be generally destroyed. It is a people of no understanding; they do not understand either me or themselves, either my word or works; they know not the things which concern their own peace and happiness, but, like brute beasts made to be destroyed, they blindly and wilfully go on in those courses which will bring them to certain ruin. He that made them; both as they are creatures, and as they are his people; for this also is expressed by making or forming, as Psal. c. 3; cii. 18; cxlix. 2. Thus he overthroweth their false and presumptuous conceits, that God would never destroy the work of his own hands, nor the seed of Abraham his friend for ever; and plainly declareth the contrary.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall beat off from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel.

Shall beat off; or, shall beat out; which is not meant in a way of punishment, which is rather designed by threshing, as Isa. xxi. 10; xxv. 10, than by beating; but as an act of mercy, as is evident from the following clause of this, and from the next verse. It is a metaphor from some grains which were beaten out with a rod or staff, of which see Isa. xxviii. 27, 28, and then were carefully gathered and laid up for the use of man. From the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt; from Euphrates to Nilus, which were the two borders of the Land of Promise, Josh. i. 4; xiii. 3. All the Israelites which are left in the land; which are here opposed to those of them that are dispersed into foreign parts, such as Assyria and Egypt. Ye shall be gathered one by one; which signifies either the smallness of the remnant of that numerous people; or rather God's exact and singular care of them, that not one of them should be lost.

13 [p] And it shall come to pass in that day, [q] that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship the LORD in the holy mount at Jerusalem.

The great trumpet; which may be heard even to the remotest parts of the earth. God shall summon them all together as it were by sound of trumpet, to wit, by an eminent call or act of his providence on their behalf. He alludes to the custom of calling the Israelites together with trumpets; of which see Numb. x. 2, 3. The land of Assyria, where the ten tribes were carried captive. The land of Egypt, where many of the Jews were, as is manifest both from Scripture, as Jer. xliii. 7; xliv. 28; Hos. viii. 13; Zech. x. 10, and from other authors.

† Heb. broken.

WOE to [a] the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim, whose [b] glorious beauty is a fading flower, which are on the head of the fat valleys of them that are † overcome with wine!

The crown of pride; that proud and insolent kingdom; for the crown is oft put for the kingdom, as Jer. xiii. 18, &c. The drunkards; either, 1. Metaphorically, drunk with proud self-confidence, and security, and prosperity; or rather, 2. Properly, by comparing this with ver. 7; Hos. vii. 5; Amos vi. 6, where the Israelites are taxed with this sin. For having many and excellent vines among them, they were exposed to this sin, and frequently overcome by it. Of Ephraim; of the kingdom of the ten tribes; which is commonly called by the name of Ephraim, as hath been oft noted before. Whose glorious beauty is a fading flower; whose glory and greatness shall suddenly wither and perish. Which are; which proud and drunken Israelites have their common and chief abode. Or, which is, i. e. which flower is; or which beauty or glory is. The head of the fat valleys; either, 1. In Samaria, which might well be called the head, as being seated upon a mountain; and the head of the kingdom, and the head of the fat valleys, because it was encompassed with many fat and rich valleys. Or, 2. Upon the chief or choicest (as this word signifies, Exod. xxx. 23; Cant. iv. 14; Isa. ix. 14, 15, and elsewhere) of the fat or rich valleys; which they made occasions and instruments of luxury. That are overcome, Heb. that are smitten, or broken, or overthrown, or knocked down; all which significations of this word fitly agree to drunkards.

c ch. 30. 30. Ezek. 13. 11.

2 Behold, the Lord hath a mighty and strong one, [c] which as a tempest of hail and a destroying storm, as a flood of mighty waters overflowing, shall cast down to the earth with the hand.

The Lord hath, to wit, at his command, prepared and ready to execute his judgments, a mighty and strong one; the king of Assyria. Shall cast down; understand it, the crown of pride; or them, the drunkards of Ephraim. With the hand; or, by his hand; either by that king's force or strong hand; or by the hand of God, which shall strengthen and succeed him in this work.

† Heb. with feet.

3 [d] The crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim, shall be trodden † under feet:

The expression is emphatical; the crown which was upon their own heads shall be trodden under the feet of others; and they, whose drunkenness made them stagger and fall to the ground, shall be trodden down there.

e ver. 1.
† Heb. swalloweth.

4 And [e] the glorious beauty, which is on the head of the fat valley, shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the summer; which when he that looketh upon it seeth, while it is yet in his hand he † eateth it up.

As the hasty fruit; which coming before the season, and before other fruits, is most acceptable; which as soon as a man sees he covets it, and plucks it off, yet doth not long enjoy it, but through greediness devours it almost as soon as he can get it into his hand. And so shall it be with Ephraim's glory, which his enemies, as soon as they observe, shall covet and spoil, and devour it greedily, and with delight.

5 ¶ In that day shall the LORD of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, unto the residue of his people,

In that day; when the kingdom of Israel shall be utterly destroyed. For a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty; God shall give them eminent glory and beauty. Unto the residue of his people; unto the kingdom of Judah, who shall continue in their own country, when Israel is carried into captivity.

6 And for a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that turn the battle to the gate.

He explains how, or wherein, God would glorify and beautify them, even by giving wisdom to their rulers, and courage to their soldiers; which two things contribute much to the strength, and safety, and glory of a nation. To them that turn the battle to the gate; to their warriors; whom he describeth by this phrase, to intimate that their valour should be crowned with success, and that they should not only drive their enemies from their own gates and land, but should pursue them into their own lands, and besiege them in their own cities, which Hezekiah did; 2 Kings xviii. 8.

f Prov. 20. 1. Hos. 4. 11.
g ch. 56. 10, 12.

7 ¶ But they also [f] have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way; [g] the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink, they are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment.

But, alas! Judah is guilty of the same sins with Israel, and therefore they also must expect the same calamities; of which he speaks afterward. They run into the same excess of wine and strong drink, whereby they besot themselves, and fall into many errors and miscarriages, both in sacred and civil things. The many emphatical phrases and repetitions of the same thing in other words, in this verse, seem to evince that he here speaks of drunkenness, properly so called, although he afterward chargeth them with ignorance, and error, and stupidity; which also were the companions, and in part the effects, of that sin. The priest, to whom strong drink was expressly forbidden in the time of their sacred ministrations, lest they should thereby be led into errors in their work, Lev. x. 9, 10. The prophet; the teachers, who should have been patterns of sobriety to the people, and to whom sobriety was absolutely necessary for the right discharge of their office. Have erred, in their conversation, and in their holy administrations. They are swallowed up; they are, as we say, drowned in it; their senses and reason are swallowed up and lost in it. They design only to swallow it, but indeed are swallowed up by it. They err in vision; the prophets miscarry in their sacred employment of prophesying or teaching, which is called vision, Prov. xxix. 18, and elsewhere. They stumble in judgment; the priests mistake in pronouncing the sentence of the law, which was their duty, Deut. xvii. 9—11.

8 For all tables are full of vomit and filthiness, so that there is no place clean.

All tables; at which the priests, and prophets, and other Jews did eat and drink. They hardly made one sober meal; drunkenness was their daily practice. No place; no table, or no part of the table; no, not so much as the holy places, in which the priests did frequently eat their meals.

h Jer. 6. 10.

9 ¶ [h]Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand † Heb. the hearing. †doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts.

Whom shall he, to wit, the teacher, which is easily understood out of the following verb; either God, or his prophets, or ministers; teach knowledge? who is there among this people that are capable and willing to be taught the good knowledge of God? A minister may as soon teach a young child as these men.

‖ Or, hath been.

10 For precept ‖must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little:

Precept must be upon precept; they must be taught, like little children, slowly, and by leisure; the same things being oft repeated, because of their great dulness. Line upon line; one line of the book after another, as children are taught to read.

† Heb. stammerings of lips. i 1Cor. 14. 21. ‖ Or, he hath spoken.

11 For with †[i]stammering lips and another tongue ‖will he speak to this people.

For; or, therefore, as this particle is oft used. For this seems to be the punishment of their dulness. With stammering lips; either, 1. In way of condescension, as mothers and nurses teach children, lisping and stammering with them. Or, 2. In way of judgment; which suits best with the next clause. And another tongue; by people of a strange language, whom he shall bring among them, and into whose power he shall deliver them; which is a great aggravation of their misery: see Deut. xxviii. 49; Jer. v. 15; Ezek. iii. 5. Will he speak to this people: seeing they will not hear him speaking by his prophets and ministers, in their own language, they shall hear their enemies speaking to them in a strange and rough language.

12 To whom he said, This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear.

To whom he said, to which people the Lord, by his ministers, said, This, this doctrine or precept, as it is expressed, ver. 9, 10, or the word of the Lord, as it follows, ver. 13, is the rest; the only way, in the observation of which you will find rest and satisfaction. Cause the weary to rest, Heb. cause the weary (understand either soul or country) to rest. As rest is offered to you by the prophets in God's name, do you embrace it; which is to be done by hearkening to God's word, as appears by the following clauses. So shall this people, which hath been so oft and so long wearied and harassed by great and manifold calamities, find rest and peace. Yet they would not hear; they are wilfully ignorant, and obstinately refused the very means of instruction.

13 But the word of the LORD was unto them precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken.

The sense of the words thus rendered may be this, They spake of God's word with scorn and contempt, repeating the prophet's words in a scoffing manner, and with a stammering and ridiculous tone, saying, Precept upon precept, &c.; as if they had said, It seems the prophet takes us to be mere children, that need to be taught our first rudiments, and that but slowly. That these were scornful men and mockers is affirmed, ver. 14, 22; and as scoffers frequently catch the words out of other men's mouths, and use them in way of derision, so it may be thought they did with the prophet's words. But the words may be, and by divers learned men are, rendered a little otherwise; And the word of the Lord shall be unto them precept upon precept, &c. As this method hath been used by them, and was altogether necessary for them; so it still is, and for the future shall be. As they were children in understanding, they shall still continue to be such; they shall be ever learning, and never come to the knowledge of the truth; as they formerly would not, so now they shall not, profit by the word; and their sin shall be their punishment. And this seems to suit with the following clause, which notes the dreadful design and effect of that judicial blindness, that they may or might go and fall backward, &c. That they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken: according to the former, which is our translation, this clause notes only the event or consequent of their sin; according to the latter, it notes the judgment of God designed and inflicted for it; that God's word being so horribly abused by them, might be an occasion at which they might stumble and fall, and that backward, which is the worst and most dangerous way of falling; and so be broken to pieces, or by which they might be snared and taken.

14 ¶ Wherefore hear the word of the LORD, ye scornful men, that rule this people which is in Jerusalem.

Ye scornful men; which make a mock at sin, and at God's words and threatenings; and doubt not by your witty devices, and by your wicked practices, to escape God's judgments, of which we read in the next verse.

15 Because ye have said, We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us: [k]for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves:

k Amos 2. 4.

Because ye have said in your hearts, We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; we are as safe from death, and hell, or the grave, as if they had entered into covenant with us, that they would not invade us. The word rendered hell most commonly signifies the grave; which also seems most proper in this place, that so the same thing may be repeated in other words, as is most usual in prophetical writings. The overflowing scourge; the judgment of God, which is called a scourge, for its sharpness and severity; and overflowing, for its universality; two differing metaphors being joined together; which is not unusual, both in Scripture and in other authors. Shall pass through, to wit, the land. We have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves; we shall secure ourselves by lying and dissimulation, by compliance with our enemies, and with their religion too, if it be necessary, and many crafty devices. Or by lies and falsehood he means their riches and strength, to which they trusted, to which he giveth these titles, not that they called or thought them such, but that he might signify what they really were, and would appear to be: see the notes on Prov. i. 11.

16 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation [l]a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste.

1 Gen. 49. 24. Ps. 118. 22. Matt. 21. 42. Acts 4. 11. Rom. 9. 33. & 10. 11. Eph. 2. 20. 1 Pet. 2. 6, 7, 8.

Therefore: the coherence is something obscure and difficult. It may be made either, 1. Thus, Therefore I will bring most terrible judgments upon you; which are fully expressed, ver. 17—21. But before he comes to the commination, to which therefore properly belongs, he first propoundeth a comfortable promise concerning the sending of the Messiah, partly for the support of believers, who are apt to tremble at God's word, and might otherwise be apt to despond at the prediction of such dreadful things; and partly to aggravate their misery, by comparing it with the safety and happiness which the godly and believing Jews, whom they despised and mocked, should find in Zion; and by signifying that that blessed and sure Foundation laid in Zion should yield them no support nor benefit, nor secure them from the vengeance of God. Or, 2. Thus, Because your refuges are so mean, and vain, and deceitful; therefore I will direct you to a better and surer Refuge, which will never fail those that trust to it, which God hath made in Zion. But if you shall despise and reject that Refuge, which I now offer to you all, if you will believe, then know that I will lay judgment to the line, &c., as it follows, ver. 17. And this seems to me to be the most natural and easy connexion. I lay; I have purposed and promised it, and will, in the fulness of time, actually perform it. In Zion; in my church, which is commonly called Zion; and in Jerusalem, where this Stone shall be first laid, which afterwards spread further, and filled the whole earth, as it is said of it, Dan. ii. 35. For a Foundation, upon which I will build my church, consisting both of Jews and Gentiles, the Foundation of all the hopes, and comfort, and happiness of my people; the Foundation of my covenant made with my church, and of all my promises. A Stone; not Hezekiah, but the Messiah, as appears, 1. From those Scriptures of the Old Testament, in which Christ is called a Stone, as Psal. cxviii. 22; Isa. viii. 14; Dan. ii. 34, 35, 45; Zech. iii. 9. 2. From the New Testament, where this text is directly expounded of Christ, as Rom. ix. 32, 33; 1 Pet. ii. 4. 3. From the last clause, wherein he requires faith in this Stone, which is not to be given to any mere man, Jer. xvii. 5; and wherein he implies that this Stone was not yet come, nor to come speedily, into the world; whereas Hezekiah was king at the time of this prophecy. 4. From the usual practice of the prophets, and especially of this prophet, which is to comfort and fortify God's people against the dread of approaching calamities by that great and fundamental promise of the Messiah, in whom alone all other promises are yea and amen; whereof we have seen some instances already, and shall see more hereafter. A tried Stone; which I have tried, and approved as every way sufficient to be a Corner-stone, and a Foundation-stone. Such stones in buildings use to be chosen with care, and to be thoroughly examined by the builder. Precious; giving not only strength, but beauty and glory, to the building, as corner-stones frequently do, Psal. cxliv. 12. Corner-stone; uniting the several parts of the building together, making Ephraim and Judah, now sadly divided, one stick, Ezek. xxxvii. 19, 24; and Jews and Gentiles, now implacable enemies, one church and people, Eph. ii. 14, &c. A sure Foundation, upon whom you may securely rest; one who will not fail nor deceive you, as your lying refuges will. He that believeth, to wit, this promise, or in this Stone, as it is explained, 1 Pet. ii. 6, shall not make haste; shall not make more haste than he ought, or, as we say, more haste than good speed; shall not hastily and greedily catch at any way of escaping his danger, whether it be right or wrong, but shall patiently wait upon God in his way till he deliver him. Withal, here is a plain intimation that the mercy here promised was not to be given presently, but after some considerable time; and therefore that they should quietly and patiently submit to God's will under their present difficulties, and expect the accomplishment of it in God's due time: compare Hag. ii. 3. The word here rendered make haste, is by the seventy interpreters rendered be confounded, whom the apostles follow, Rom. ix. 33; 1 Pet. ii. 6, either because they thought it most convenient, in a matter where the difference was not considerable, to follow that translation which was most used and best understood by the generality of Jewish and Gentile Christians; or because the same word hath both these significations in the Eastern languages, as the most learned and worthy Dr. Pocock hath proved; or because the one follows upon the other, and precipitation or haste commonly exposeth men to shame and confusion; which also is implied in the following verses, wherein the dreadful judgments of God are denounced against those who should not believe, and would make haste to prevent or remove their dangers by any means whatsoever.

17 Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away [m] the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place.

[m] ver. 15.

Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet; I will execute just judgment, as it were by a line and plummet annexed to it, i. e. with exactness and care. And this may be understood either, 1. That God would so order and settle things in his church, that justice and judgment should prevail, and not iniquity, as hitherto it had done; or rather, 2. That as God would build up and preserve all believers upon that Foundation-stone, so he would severely punish and utterly destroy all those unbelieving Jews who should reject that Stone. For the line and plummet, or the plumb-line, was not only used in erecting buildings, but also in pulling them down; those parts of the building being thus marked out which were to be demolished; and therefore is used in Scripture to signify the destruction of a place or people, as is evident from 2 Kings xxi. 13; Isa. xxxiv. 11; Lam. ii. 8; Amos vii. 7, 8. And this sense agrees best with the following clause and verse. The hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding-place; my judgments, which in Scripture are compared to a storm of hail or rain, shall discover the vanity of all your crafty and wicked devices, and shall sweep you away with the besom of destruction in spite of them.

18 ¶ And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be †trodden down by it.

† Heb. a treading down to it.

Disannulled; made void, or of none effect; it shall stand you in no stead. Ye shall be trodden down by it; which you flattered yourselves that it should not come unto you, ver. 15.

19 From the time that it goeth forth it shall take you: for morning by morning shall it pass over, by day and by night: and it shall be a vexation only ‖to understand the report.

‖ Or, when he shall make you to understand doctrine.

From the time that it goeth forth it shall take you; as soon as this overflowing scourge or judgment shall go forth from me into the land, it shall assuredly, and with the first, take or seize upon you scoffers, or carry you away, which agrees well, both with the Hebrew word, which is frequently taken in that sense, and with the metaphor of a flood, which is here used. Morning by morning it shall pass over; it shall not only come to you, contrary to your presumption, ver. 15, but it shall abide upon you; and when it hath passed over you, it shall return again to you, morning after morning; and shall follow you day and night, without giving you the least respite. It shall be a vexation only to understand the report; so dreadful shall the judgment be, that it shall strike you with great horror when you only hear the rumour of its approach, or of the sad effects of it upon other persons or parts of the land.

20 For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it: and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it.

For those lying refuges to which you trust will not be able to give you that protection and comfort which you expect from them, no more than a man can stretch himself (as these luxurious Israelites used to do, Amos vi. 4) upon a bed which is too narrow for him, or wrap or keep himself warm with a covering or bed-clothes which are not large enough for him.

21 For the LORD shall rise up as in mount [n] Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of [o] Gibeon, that he may do his work, [p] his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act.

n 2 Sam. 5. 20. 1 Chron. 14. 11.
o Josh. 10. 10, 12. 2 Sam. 5. 25. 1 Chron. 14. 16. p Lam. 3. 33.

Shall rise up, to act and fight against you; as he is said to sit still, when he doth forbear to act. Mount Perazim;

where he fought against the Philistines, 2 Sam. v. 20. The valley of Gibeon; where he fought against the Canaanites, Josh. x. 10, &c., and afterwards against the Philistines, 1 Chron. xiv. 16. His strange work; the execution of his judgment against Israel, which he calleth his strange work, to intimate either, 1. That God would punish them not with ordinary punishments, but in a most dreadful, and singular, and extraordinary manner; such a judgment being called a marvellous work, Isa. xxix. 14, although the Hebrew word there used be not the same with this, but of a much differing signification. Or rather, 2. That this work of bringing total and irrecoverable destruction upon Israel was contrary to the benignity of his own nature, and to the usual way of dealing with his people, whom he used and delighted to protect, and spare, and bless; and whom, even when he is angry with them, and punisheth them, he handleth more gently than he doth other persons, in judgment remembering mercy to them, as was noted, Isa. xxvii. 7, 8: see also chap. xxvi. 11.

22 Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong: for I have heard from the Lord GOD of hosts [q] a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth.

[q] ch. 10. 22, 23. Dan. 9. 27.

Be ye not mockers; for your own sakes do not make a mock of God's word and threatenings, as you use to do. Lest your bands be made strong; lest thereby you make the judgments of God, which are oft compared to bands, as Psal. lxvi. 11; lxxiii. 4, and elsewhere, more sure and unavoidable, and more severe and terrible, as bands are when they are tied faster and more strongly upon a prisoner. I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth; God hath assured me that he will utterly root out and destroy the people of Israel; as indeed he did in Hezekiah's reign.

23 ¶ Give ye ear, and hear my voice; hearken, and hear my speech.

Observe what I say, and do you judge if it be not reasonable.

24 Doth the plowman plow all day to sow? doth he open and break the clods of his ground?

Doth the ploughman plough all day to sow? the ploughman doth not spend all his time in ploughing the ground, in order to the sowing it, or, as it follows, in opening it, and breaking its clods; but he hath several times for several works, a time for ploughing, and a time for sowing and harrowing, and a time for reaping, and a time for threshing, or beating, and bruising the corn for his own use; which wisdom God hath put into him. This is the sum of the similitude propounded here and in the following verses; the design and meaning whereof seems to be this, to teach them that God had his times and seasons for several works, and that the methods of his providence were various at several times, and towards several persons or people; and therefore that those scoffing Israelites were guilty of great folly, in flattering themselves, and despising God's threatenings, because of God's long patience towards them, and because of their present impunity and prosperity; for God would certainly and speedily take a time to thresh and break them with his judgments, as at present he ploughed and harrowed them, and so prepared them for it by his threatenings. Doth he open; understand, all day, or continually, out of the foregoing clause. And break the clods of his ground; which they used to do with a kind of harrow, or other proper instrument. See Jer. iv. 3; Hos. x. 11, 12.

25 When he hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not cast abroad the fitches, and scatter the cummin, and cast in ‖ the principal wheat and the appointed barley and the ‖ rie in their † place?

‖ Or, the wheat in the principal place, and barley in the appointed place. ‖ Or, spelt. † Heb. border?

Made plain the face thereof, by breaking the clods, which made it ragged and uneven. The principal wheat; either, 1. The wheat, which is the principal or chief of all these grains; or, 2. The best wheat, which he prudently chooseth for seed. The appointed barley; that proportion of barley which he appointed. Or, as others, the marked barley; or, the choice barley, which they laid aside in a sack for seed; and therefore set aside with a peculiar mark upon it. In their place, Heb. in his border; each seed in a several and proper place.

26 ‖ [r] For his God doth instruct him to discretion, and doth teach him.

‖ Or, And he bindeth it in such sort as his God doth teach him. r Eccles. 7. 15.

The sense of the words thus rendered is this, All this he performeth by that discretion which God hath put into him; and therefore be assured that God will order all his affairs with judgment, and will in due season execute the punishments which now he threatens, and will perfect his own works. But the words by some are rendered otherwise. And he beateth it out (as this word may be rendered, 1 Kings xii. 11; Prov. xix. 18; xxix. 17) in such sort as his God doth teach him; in a discreet manner, which being generally mentioned here, is particularly described in the following verse.

27 For the fitches are not threshed with a threshing instrument, neither is a cart wheel turned about upon the cummin; but the fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cummin with a rod.

A threshing instrument; which then and there was made like a sled shod with iron, which was drawn by men or beasts over the sheafs of corn, to bruise them, and beat the grain out of them. A cart wheel; a lesser and lower wheel than a cart wheel, but of the same form, upon which possibly the threshing instrument was drawn. The fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cummin with a rod, as being unable to bear harder usage.

28 Bread corn is bruised; because he will not ever be threshing it, nor break it with the wheel of his cart, nor bruise it with his horsemen.

Bread corn is bruised with a threshing instrument, by comparing this with the foregoing verse and the following words. Because; or rather, but, or nevertheless, as the word is frequently used. The sense is, The husbandman doth indeed thresh the bread corn, but he doth it with moderation, and only for a time, not for ever. Nor break it; understand, for ever, out of the foregoing clause, as is usual in Scripture. With his horsemen; which governed the horse or horses that drew the threshing instrument. Or, with horses; for it is evident, and hath been observed before, that this Hebrew word signifies horses as well as horsemen. And this was another way of threshing out the corn, by driving horses, or other cattle, over the sheaves to tread it out; of which see Deut. xxv. 4; Micah iv. 13.

29 This also cometh forth from the LORD of hosts, which is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working.

s Ps. 92. 5. Jer. 32. 19.

This also; this part of the husbandman's discretion, expressed ver. 27, 28, as well as that expressed ver. 24, 25. Which is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working: these words contain the application of the similitude. The husbandman manageth all his affairs with common discretion; but God governs the world and his church with wonderful wisdom; he is great and marvellous, both in the design or contrivance of things, and in the execution of them.

CHAP. XXIX.

The temple and city of Jerusalem destroyed, 1—6. Her enemies unsatiable, 7, 8; their senselessness, 9—12, and deep hypocrisy, 13—17. The scorner and oppressor being cut off, the rest shall be converted, 18—24.

WOE ‖ [a] to Ariel, to Ariel, ‖ the city [b] where David dwelt! add ye year to year; let them † kill sacrifices.

cir. 712. ‖ Or, O Ariel, that is, the lion of God. a Ezek. 43. 15, 16. ‖ Or, of the city. b 2 Sam. 5. 9. † Heb. cut off the heads.

Woe to Ariel! this word signifies a strong lion, or the lion of God; and is used concerning lion-like men, as it is rendered, 1 Chron. xi. 22; and of God's altar, as it is rendered, Ezek. xliii. 15, 16, which seems to be thus called, because it devoured and consumed the sacrifices put upon it, as greedily and as irresistibly as the lion doth his prey. If the altar be here meant, it is put synecdochically for the temple, and the words may be rendered, Woe to Ariel, to Ariel of or in the city! or, and the city; for that conjunction is sometimes understood, as Isa. xxii. 6; Hab. iii. 11. And so the threatening is denounced both against the temple and against Jerusalem. But he seems rather to understand it of Jerusalem, as may be gathered, 1. From the next words, which seem to be added by way of apposition, to explain what he meant by that obscure and ambiguous term, Woe to Ariel, to Ariel, even to the city! 2. From the following verses, which plainly declare that this Ariel is the place which God threatens that he would distress and fill with heaviness, ver. 2; and lay siege against her, ver. 3; and that the nations should fight against her, ver. 7; all which expressions agree much better to Jerusalem than to the altar. And this city might be called Ariel, or the strong lion, either, 1. For its eminent strength in regard of its situation and fortifications, by reason whereof it was thought almost impregnable, both by themselves and others, Lam. iv. 12. Or, 2. For its lion-like fierceness and cruelty, for which she is called the bloody city, Ezek. vii. 23; xxii. 2, and, in effect, Isa. i. 15; lix. 3; Jer. xix. 4; and for which her princes are called lions, Ezek. xix. 2; Zeph. iii. 3. Or, 3. In respect of the altar of God, which was erected in and confined to that city, and in which the strength and glory of that city did chiefly consist. The city where David dwelt; the royal city, and seat of David and his posterity; which is here mentioned as the ground of their confidence; and withal, it is implied that their relation to David, and their supposed interest in the promises made to him and to his seed, should not secure them from the destruction here threatened. Add ye year to year; let them kill sacrifices; go on in killing sacrifices from time to time, one year after another, whereby you think to appease me, and to secure yourselves; but all shall be in vain.

2 Yet I will distress Ariel, and there shall be heaviness and sorrow: and it shall be unto me as Ariel.

Yet, notwithstanding all your sacrifices, I will distress Ariel, by bringing and strengthening her enemies against her. It shall be unto me as Ariel: the sense is either, 1. I will treat her like a strong and fierce lion, which the people among whom it is endeavour by nets, or pits, and all other ways, to take and to destroy; or, 2. I will make Ariel the city like Ariel the altar, filling it with sacrifices, even with men, whom I will slay in my anger; which act of God's is called his sacrifice, Ezek. xxxix. 17, 19.

3 And I will camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee.

By those enemies whom I will assist and enable to destroy thee. This was fulfilled either, 1. By Sennacherib, as some learned men think. But what is here affirmed of these enemies is expressly denied concerning Sennacherib, Isa. xxxvii. 3. Or rather, 2. By the Chaldeans, 2 Kings xxv. 1, &c.

4 And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, [c] out of the ground, and thy speech shall [†] whisper out of the dust.

[c] ch. 8. 19. [†] Heb. peep, or, chirp.

Thy speech shall be low out of the dust; thou who now speakest so loftily and scornfully against the Lord's prophets and others, shalt be humbled and confounded, and afraid and ashamed to speak aloud, and shalt in a submissive manner, and with a low voice, beg the favour of thine enemies. Thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground; who, that they might possess the people with a kind of reverence and horror, used to speak and deliver their answers with a low voice, either out of their bellies, or from some dark cave under the ground.

5 Moreover the multitude of thy [d] strangers shall be like small dust, and the multitude of the terrible ones shall be [e] as chaff that passeth away: yea, it shall be [f] at an instant suddenly.

[d] ch. 25. 5. [e] Job 21. 18. ch. 17. 13. [f] ch. 30. 13.

Of thy strangers; either, 1. Of the strangers that encamp and fight against thee. Or, 2. Of the Egyptians, and other strangers, whom thou hast hired to assist thee, as indeed they did, when the Chaldeans came against them. This exposition seems to agree best, as with the phrase, thy strangers, so with the scope of the place, and with the whole context, especially the foregoing verses; which plainly shows that this is not a promise to Jerusalem, but a threatening against it. Like small dust; quickly blown away with the least wind, by comparing this with the following clause. Of the terrible ones; of thy great commanders and stoutest soldiers. It shall be; this dissipation and destruction of thy strangers and terrible ones shall come to pass.

6 [g] Thou shalt be visited of the LORD of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire.

[g] ch. 28. 2. & 30. 30.

Thou, O Ariel or Jerusalem, of or to whom this whole context manifestly speaks, shalt be visited with dreadful judgments, which are frequently expressed in the prophets by these and such-like metaphors.

7 ¶ [h] And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her, shall be [i] as a dream of a night vision.

[h] ch. 37. 36. [i] Job 20. 8.

Wherein it shall be so is explained in the next verse.

8 [k] It shall even be as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion.

[k] Ps. 73. 20.

His soul is empty; his appetite or desire (as the soul is taken, Psal. xli. 4; lxxviii. 18, and elsewhere) is unsatisfied. Or, his stomach or body (as the soul is used, Psal. xvi. 10) is empty. So shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against Mount Zion; no less unsatisfied and unsatiable shall the enemies of the Jews be, with all the cruelties which they have committed against you; and they shall be always thirsting after more of your blood, as if they had never tasted any of it.

9 ¶ Stay yourselves, and wonder; ‖ cry ye out, and cry: [l] they are drunken, [m] but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink.

‖ Or, take your pleasure, and riot. [l] See ch. 28. 7, 8. [m] ch. 51. 21.

Stay yourselves, and wonder; pause upon it, and you will see cause to wonder at the stupidity of this people, of which he is now about to speak. He directeth his speech, either to the religious part of the people, or to those particular persons who heard him when he delivered this prophecy. Cry ye out, and cry; cry out again and again, either in way of supplication for them; or rather through astonishment and horror. Or, they take pleasure or sport themselves, (as this word most commonly signifies,) and riot; in the midst of all these threatenings and dangers, they are secure, and give up themselves to sensuality; which is matter of just wonder. They are drunken, but not with wine; but either, 1. With drinking the cup of God's fury, wherewith they are said to be made drunk, Isa. li. 17, 20. And then, they are drunk, is put for, they shall be drunk, after the manner of the prophets. Or, 2. With the spirit of giddiness or stupidity, which makes them like drunken men, insensible of their danger, and not knowing what to do.

10 For [n] the LORD hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath [o] closed your eyes: the prophets and your [†] rulers, [p] the seers hath he covered.

[n] Rom. 11. 8. [o] Ps. 69. 23. ch. 6. 10. [†] Heb. heads: See ch. 3. 2. Jer. 26. 8. [p] 1 Sam. 9. 9.

Hath poured out upon you; which phrase notes the plenty and vehemency of this judgment. The spirit of deep sleep; hardness of heart, and insensibleness of your danger and misery, which God is said to send, because he denies or withdraws his light and grace, which alone can cure those maladies. The prophets and your rulers, the seers; your magistrates and ministers, whose blindness or stupidity is a great curse and plague to the people. Or, the prophets, even the chief (for the head is oft put for the chief of persons or things, as Exod. xxx. 23; 1 Chron. xii. 18, and elsewhere) of your seers. Hath he covered with the veil of ignorance and stupidity, or as to their eyes, which is understood out of the former clause. And this last clause is and may be rendered thus, The eyes (which may be repeated out of the foregoing clause) of your prophets, and of, or even of, your principal seers, (or, and of your most intelligent rulers,) hath he covered.

11 And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a ‖book [q]that is sealed, which men deliver to one that [r]is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: [r]and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed:

‖ Or, letter.
[q] ch. 8. 16.
[r] Dan. 12. 4, 9. Rev. 5. 1, —5, 9. & 6. 1.

12 And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am not learned.

The vision of all; of all your prophets, whether the true or false ones. As the words of a book that is sealed; in which no man can read whilst it is sealed up, as books then sometimes were, 1 Kings xxi. 8; Esth. iii. 12, 13, being made in the form of rolls, which was convenient for that purpose. The book is delivered to him that is not learned; unsealed and opened, as the following clause implies. God so orders the manner of delivering this book, that neither the learned nor unlearned could read and understand it.

13 ¶ Wherefore the Lord said, [s]Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by [t]the precept of men:

[s] Ezek. 33. 31. Matt. 15. 8, 9. Mark 7. 6, 7.
[t] Col. 2. 22.

Draw near me, to wit, in acts of worship, with their mouth and with their lips; with outward devotions, and the profession of religion. But have removed their heart far from me; they do not pay me that love, and fear, and obedience which I require, and prefer before all sacrifices and external services. Their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men; they worship me not in such way and manner as I have commanded and prescribed, but according to their own and other men's inventions, preferring the devices and traditions of their false prophets before my institutions. For this was a common error among the Jews, as we learn from Jer. vii. 31; Hos. v. 11, and many other scriptures; and thus our blessed Saviour expounds this very place, Matt. xv. 7—9.

14 [u]Therefore, behold, †I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder: [x]for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.

[u] Hab. 1. 5.
† Heb. I will add.
[x] Jer. 49. 7. Obad. 8. 1 Cor. 1. 19.

Shall disappear and vanish; for this answers to, shall perish, in the former clause. A veil shall be cast upon the eyes of their minds; they shall give no evidences or proofs of their wisdom, but their folly shall be made manifest. And this was indeed a wonderful thing for their wise men to be made fools.

15 [y]Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and [z]they say, [a]Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?

[y] ch. 30. 1.
[z] Ps. 94. 7.
[a] Ecclus. 23. 18.

That seek deep, Heb. that make deep. A metaphor from men who use to dig deep into the earth, that they may hide any thing there which they would keep safe and unknown. To hide their counsel from the Lord; vainly imagining that they can keep all their hypocrisy and secret wickedness out of God's sight, and that they can deceive, not only man, but God, by their external professions and services. Their works are in the dark; their wicked counsels are contrived, and their idolatry is practised, in secret and dark places, of which see Ezek. viii. 12. Who seeth us? and who knoweth us? we act so cunningly, that neither God nor man can discover us.

16 Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the [b]work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?

[b] ch. 45. 9. Rom. 9. 20.

Your turning of things upside down; all your subtle devices, by which you turn yourselves into all shapes; and turn your thoughts hither and thither, and pervert the order which God hath appointed. Shall be esteemed as the potter's clay; it is no more to me than the clay is to the potter, who can not only discern it thoroughly, but alter and dispose it as he seeth fit. Shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not, &c.? and no less absurd and ridiculous is your conceit, that I, your Maker and supreme Governor, cannot discover and control all your artifices at my pleasure.

17 Is it not yet a very little while, and [c]Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?

[c] ch. 32. 15.

The forest of Lebanon, which was a barren mountain and a desolate wilderness, shall by God's wonderful providence become a fruitful and populous place; and these places, which are now fruitful and populous, shall then become as barren and desolate as that forest. The sense is confirmed by that parallel place, Isa. xxxii. 15. And from both places compared together, this seems to be a prophecy of the rejection of the wicked and unbelieving Jews, whose sins and marvellous judgments, and particularly infatuation, are declared in the foregoing verses; and of the calling of the Gentiles, of which he speaks in the following verse, as appears further by comparing that verse with Isa. xxxv. 5. And this opinion may receive some countenance from Matt. xv. 7, &c., where Christ expounds the foregoing words, ver. 13, upon which these have a dependence, of his own times.

18 ¶ And [d]in that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness.

[d] ch. 35. 5.

The deaf; who were deaf before God by his word and grace did open their ears; even the deaf and blind Gentiles, as was now noted. Compare Isa. xxxv. 5. Shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness; being, by God's grace, brought out of that gross and worse than Egyptian darkness of ignorance and wickedness, in which they formerly lived, unto a clear and saving knowledge of the truth.

19 [e]The meek also † shall increase their joy in the Lord, and [f]the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.

[f] Jam. 2. 5.

The meek; the humble and meek believers, opposed to those proud and scornful Israelites or Jews, of whom he speaks in this and in the foregoing chapter. Shall increase their joy in the Lord; shall greatly rejoice in this, that the Lord and Holy One of Israel is now their God and portion. The poor; either, 1. Spiritually, of which Matt. v. 3. Or, 2. Outwardly, mean and despicable people, such as the Gentiles were in the opinion of the Jews, and such as the greatest part of the first believing Christians were, Matt. xi. 5; 1 Cor. i. 26; James ii. 5.

20 For the terrible one is brought to nought, and [g]the scorner is consumed, and all that [h]watch for iniquity are cut off:

[g] ch. 28. 14, 22.
[h] Mic. 2. 1.

The terrible one; the proud and potent enemies of those meek and poor believers now mentioned, such as the unbelieving Jews and the heathen potentates were in the first age of Christianity. The scorner; the scornful opposers of God's word and people. That watch for iniquity; that early and diligently apply themselves to the practice of wickedness, or to do mischief to others.

21 That make a man an offender for a i Amos 5. 10, 12. word, and [i] lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the k Prov. 28. 21. just [k] for a thing of nought.

That make a man an offender; that condemn and punish a man as if he were a great criminal. For a word; for a verbal reproof, as appears from the next clause. For him that reproveth; for God's faithful prophets and ministers, whose office it is to reprove ungodly men, such as these were. In the gate, publicly; which they took for a great affront and disgrace; although the reproof ought to be public, where the sin is public and scandalous. He mentions the gate, because there the people used to assemble, both upon civil and sacred accounts, and there prophets used to deliver their prophecies; of which see Jer. vii. 2; xvii. 19. Turn aside, to wit, from judgment, as this phrase is more fully delivered, Isa. x. 2, or from his right; which is elsewhere called the perverting, or overturning, or overthrowing of a man's right or judgment, as Deut. xxvii. 19; Prov. xvii. 23; Lam. iii. 35. The just; the faithful prophets and ministers of God, and among others Christ, who is oft called the just or righteous one, both in the Old and New Testament. For a thing of nought; not for any great advantage, but for a trifle, which is a great aggravation of their injustice. Or, with vanity, i. e. with vain and frivolous pretences, or without any colour of reason or justice.

22 Therefore thus saith the LORD, l Josh. 24. 3. [l] who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale.

Who redeemed Abraham from manifold dangers, and especially from that idolatry in which his family and ancestors were generally involved, Josh. xxiv. 2, 3. Jacob; the Israelites or posterity of Jacob, who are oft called Jacob in Scripture, who had great cause to be ashamed, for their continued infidelity, and for their persecutions of God's prophets and righteous servants, and for their rejection of their own Messiah; but shall at last be brought back unto the God of their fathers, and to their Messiah. Neither shall his face now wax pale, through fear of their enemies, who, from time to time, have molested them; but now they shall be delivered from them all, and shall serve God without fear, as is said, Luke i. 74.

n ch. 28. 7. 24 They also [n] that erred in spirit † Heb. shall know understanding. † shall come to understanding, and they

They also that erred in spirit; those Gentiles whose spirits or minds were ignorant of and erred from God's truth, and who were led aside by a lying spirit, or by the spirit of error and delusion, to idolatry, and all manner of impiety. Shall come to understanding; shall come to the knowledge of the truth. They that murmured shall learn doctrine; they that would not receive the doctrine of God, but murmured at God's faithful prophets and teachers, who delivered it, which was the practice of divers, both Jews and Gentiles, shall now learn doctrine, and receive God's truth in the love of it.

CHAP. XXX.

The prophet threateneth the people for their confidence in Egypt, 1—7, and contempt of God's word, 8—11; wherefore they shall be destroyed, 12—17. God's mercies towards the church, 18—26. God's wrath and his people's joy in the destruction of Assyria, 27—33.

sin:

The rebellious children; the Jews, who call themselves God's children, though they are rebellious ones, as was said, Isa. i. 2. That take counsel; that consult together, and resolve to do what follows, ver. 2. Not of me; not following nor asking my advice, which they had command and encouragement from me to do. That cover with a covering; that seek protection. Not of my Spirit; not such as by my Spirit, speaking in my word, I have directed and required them to do; but such as I have severely forbidden to them; for the contrary affirmative is frequently implied in the negative; of which I have formerly given many instances. That they may add sin to sin; that unto those sins, by which they have deserved and procured my judgments upon them, they may add distrust of my power and mercy to save them, and confidence in an arm of flesh, which also is rebellion against my express command to the contrary.

Egypt!

That walk to go down into Egypt; that send ambassadors to Egypt for succour, as we read, ver. 4, which the Jews were forward to do upon all occasions, and did now upon the invasion of the king of Assyria, as is evident from Isa. xx. 5, 6, and did the like against the king of Babylon, Jer. xxxvii. 7; Ezek. xvii. 15. Have not asked at my mouth; either by the priests or prophets, as they were to do in weighty cases; of which see Numb. xxvii. 21; Josh. ix. 14; 1 Sam. xxiii. 9, 10; 1 Kings xxii. 7; Jer. xxi. 2; xlii. 2, 20; or by studying my word, which plainly directs them to another course, and forbids them this practice. In the shadow; in their power (as it is in the foregoing clause) and protection, which is oft signified by the shadow, as Judg. ix. 15; Psal. xvii. 8; xci. 1, 4.

pent, they will carry their riches upon the sures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that shall not profit them.

The burden; either, 1. The prophecy; which is oft called the burden; or rather, 2. The burden of riches or treasures, as it is explained in the latter part of the verse. Of the beasts of the south; which is carried upon asses or camels, as it follows, into Egypt, which lay southward from Judea. Into the land of trouble and anguish; into Egypt and Ethiopia or Cush; for both are joined together in this matter, Isa. xx., whose land seems to be called a land of trouble and anguish prophetically, because they should distress them, and not help them; as was said of the Assyrians in the like case, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20. Some render it, by or through the land, &c., and understand it of the vast wilderness which lay between Judea and Egypt. But it was more proper and important to speak of the land to which these men and beasts went, than of that through which they were to pass; which it was needless so particularly to describe. Nor was the direct road from Judea to Egypt such a place as is here described. The young and old lion; which may be understood properly, because these and the following creatures did abound, and were very fierce and mischievous, in Egypt and Ethiopia; but withal, seems to design the craft and cruelty of that people, and the danger of their confederacy with them, and the harm which they should have from them. Fiery flying serpent: that there were flying serpents in those parts, is affirmed, not only in Scripture, but also by Herodotus, Cicero, and Ammianus, and divers other authors. They; the Jews, designed by the same pronoun, they, ver. 5, will carry their riches; either, 1. To secure them; or rather, 2. To procure their assistance. Upon the shoulders of young asses; much used there for carrying burdens, as is evident from Gen. xxxii. 15; xlv. 23, &c. Upon the bunches; upon the backs, which were strengthened with bunches, by a synecdoche.

k Jer. 37. 7.

7 [k]For the Egyptians shall help in vain, and to no purpose: therefore have I cried ‖concerning this, [l]Their strength is to sit still.

‖ Or, to her. l ver. 15. ch. 7. 4.

Concerning this; concerning this counsel or practice. Or, to her; to Jerusalem or Judah. Their strength is to sit still; it is safer and better for them to sit quietly at home, seeking to me for help, than to go or send to Egypt for help. He seems industriously to use an ambiguous word, Rahab, which signifies both strength, as Job ix. 13; Psal. xc. 10, and Egypt, as Psal. lxxxvii. 4; Isa. li. 9, so called from its singular strength; to intimate that if they did not go to Rahab, Rahab, or what they expected from Rahab or Egypt, which was powerful succour, should come to them.

† Heb. the latter day.

Write it; write this prophecy and warning which I have now delivered. Before them; in their presence, in the public assembly; for the prophets were many times commanded to do such actions, as well as to deliver their messages. In a table, and note it in a book: so this was to be written twice over; once in a table, to be hanged up in some public place, that all that were then and there present might read it; and again in a book, that it might be kept for the use of posterity. That it may be for the time to come, as a witness for me and against them, that I have given them fair warning, and that they have wilfully run upon their own ruin.

n Deut. 32. 20. ch. 1. 4. ver. 1.

9 That [n]this is a rebellious people, lying children, children that will not hear the law of the LORD:

Lying children; which profess one thing, and practise another. The law of the Lord; the commands of God, either contained in Scripture, or delivered by my mouth, whereby these practices are expressly forbidden to them.

o Jer. 11. 21. Amos 2. 12. & 7. 13. Mic. 2. 6. p 1 Kings 22. 13. Mic. 2. 11.

10 [o]Which say to the seers, See not; and to the prophets, Prophesy not unto us right things, [p]speak unto us smooth things, prophesy deceits:

He speaks not of the words of their mouths; for none could be so mad or impudent as to have or profess a desire to be cheated, but of the language of their actions. They do so discourage and threaten God's faithful prophets, and so encourage their own false prophets, as if they had rather be deceived to their destruction, than hear the truth for their preservation and salvation. They prefer the pleasing of their humours before the saving of themselves.

11 Get you out of the way, turn aside out of the path, cause the Holy One of Israel to cease from before us.

Out of the way in which you now walk, out of your present course of preaching unsavoury and frightful things to us. Cause the Holy One of Israel to cease from before us; do not trouble us with harsh and repeated messages from God, as you use to do.

12 Wherefore thus saith the Holy One of Israel, Because ye despise this word, and trust in ‖oppression and perverseness, and stay thereon:

‖ Or, fraud.

In oppression; in the wealth which you have gotten by oppression, whereby you now think to procure Egyptian succours; of which see on ver. 6. And perverseness; and in your perverse and rebellious course of sending to Egypt for help.

13 Therefore this iniquity shall be to you [q]as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall, whose breaking [r]cometh suddenly at an instant.

q Ps. 62. 3. r ch. 29. 5.

This iniquity, of sending and trusting to Egypt for succour. Whose breaking cometh suddenly at an instant; like a wall which is high, and seems to be strong, but swelling forth in some parts, which upon the least accident falleth down suddenly to the ground. Such shall be the issue of your high and towering confidence in Egypt.

14 And [s]he shall break it as the breaking of †the potters' vessel that is broken in pieces; he shall not spare; so that there shall not be found in the bursting of it a sherd to take fire from the hearth, or to take water withal out of the pit.

s Ps. 2. 9. Jer. 19. 11. † Heb. the bottle of potters.

He shall break it; he, either God, or he whom God shall send against them. Or, it shall be broken; for such phrases are oft taken indefinitely and passively; it, this iniquity last mentioned, ver. 13, your carnal confidence, and all the grounds of it, and you that lean upon it.

15 For thus saith the Lord GOD, the Holy One of Israel; [t]In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength: [u]and ye would not.

t ver. 7. ch. 7. 4. u Matt. 23. 37.

In returning, either from your present purpose of sending to Egypt, or unto God, as the LXX., and Syriac, and Arabic translators render it. Or, in quietness; for the verb from which this word comes is elsewhere used in that sense, as Psal. xxiii. 2; Jer. xxx. 10; xlvi. 27. In quietness; in sitting still, and quieting your own minds. In confidence, to wit, rightly placed upon me and my promises for your deliverance.

16 But ye said, No; for we will flee upon horses; therefore shall ye flee: and, We will ride upon the swift; therefore shall they that pursue you be swift.

We will flee out of this land from the king of Assyria; which it is very probable divers of the richer sort did, having sent their treasures before them, as we read, ver. 6.

17 [x]One thousand shall flee at the rebuke of one; at the rebuke of five shall ye flee: till ye be left as ‖a beacon upon the top of a mountain, and as an ensign on an hill.

x Lev. 26. 8. Deut. 28. 25. & 32. 30. Josh. 23. 10. ‖ Or, a tree bereft of branches, or, boughs; or, a mast.

Shall flee; which words are fitly supplied out of the following clause. At the rebuke; either, 1. At his real rebuke, upon his assault or onset; or rather, 2. At his verbal rebuke, upon his mere threats, as fearing that he will proceed from words to blows. Shall ye flee; all of you, how numerous soever. Till ye be left as a beacon, &c.; till you be generally destroyed, and but a few of you left.

18 ¶ And therefore will the LORD wait, that he may be gracious unto you, and therefore will he be exalted, that he may have mercy upon you: for the LORD is a God of judgment: [y]blessed are all they that wait for him.

y Ps. 2. 12. & 34. 8. Prov. 16. 20. Jer. 17. 7.

Therefore; because of your general destruction and great misery; which is frequently mentioned in Scripture as a motive to God's mercy, as Deut. xxxii. 36, and in many other places, as hath been oft observed already. But some rendered this Hebrew particle yet, or notwithstanding, as it is supposed to signify, Isa. li. 21; Jer. xvi. 14; Ezek. xxxix. 25; Hos. ii. 14. Wait; patiently expect your repentance, and stop the course of his judicial proceedings against you, that you may have an opportunity of making your peace with him, and of preventing your utter ruin. Will he be exalted; he will lift up and bestir himself, and will work gloriously in your behalf, as this phrase is used, Psal. xxi. 13; xlvi. 10; Isa. xxxiii. 10, and oft elsewhere; and as the following verses explain it. Is a God of judgment; who carrieth himself towards his people (for of them only he speaks in this place) not with furious passion, but with judgment and discretion, or with equity and moderation; for judgment is oft opposed to fury and rigorous justice, as Psal. cxii. 5; Jer. x. 24; xxx. 11. Blessed are all they that wait for him; this waiting upon God, in his way, with faith and patience, is a surer way to your safety and happiness, than seeking to Egypt, or any other carnal remedies.

19 For the people [z]shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem: thou shalt weep no more: he will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he will answer thee.

z ch. 65. 9.

For the people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem; for although the time is coming, when the people shall be banished from Jerusalem, and carried captives into Babylon; yet after a set time they shall return to Jerusalem, and have a fixed and comfortable abode there: which was in part accomplished upon their return from Babylon; but more fully in the times of the gospel, when many of them were, and the whole body of them shall be, brought into Christ's church, which is oft called Zion and Jerusalem, both in the Old and New Testament. He will answer thee; whereas now he seems to be deaf to thy prayers.

20 And though the Lord give you [a]the bread of adversity, and the water of ‖affliction, yet shall not [b]thy teachers be removed into a corner any more, but thine eyes shall see thy teachers:

a 1 Kings 22. 27. Ps. 127. 2.
‖ Or, oppression.
b Ps. 74. 9. Amos 8. 11.

And though the Lord give you the bread of adversity, and the water of affliction; and although in that time and state of the church you will be subject to many outward straits and afflictions. This phrase is borrowed from Deut. xvi. 3; 1 Kings xxii. 27. He seems to allude to the condition of besieged cities, and particularly of Jerusalem, as it was straitened and distressed by Sennacherib, and as it should be far more straitened by the Chaldeans; of which see 2 Kings xxv. 3. Heb. And the Lord will give, &c. Or, the Lord indeed will give, &c. Yet shall not thy teachers be removed into a corner any more; as they have been in former times, both in Israel and Judah, when the godly prophets and ministers were but few, and when they were persecuted and banished by their wicked rulers. But in the New Testament God hath made better provision for his church, sending his Son, the great Teacher of the church, into the world, and pouring forth the gifts and graces of the Spirit in abundance, and increasing the number of able and faithful ministers, and promising a continued succession of them to the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Thine eyes shall see thy teachers; thou shalt have their presence, and their instruction and assistance.

21 And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye [c]turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left.

c Josh. 1. 7.

Thine ears shall hear a word; as oft as need requires thou shalt hear the voice of God's word and Spirit directing thee in thy course. Hear a word behind thee; a metaphor borrowed either, 1. From the custom of shepherds, who use to follow their sheep, and to recall them when they go out of the way. Or, 2. From travellers, who when they are gone out of the right way, are ofttimes recalled and admonished of their error by some other passenger or person who is behind them, and therefore discerns their mistake; which he could not so easily discover if he were before them.

22 [d]Ye shall defile also the covering of † thy graven images of silver, and the ornament of thy molten images of gold: thou shalt †cast them away as a menstruous cloth; [e]thou shalt say unto it, Get thee hence.

d 2 Chr. 31. 1. ch. 2. 20. & 31. 7.
† Heb. the graven images of thy silver.
e Hos. 14. 8.

Ye shall defile, to show your contempt of it, and to make it unfit for your own or any other's use. The covering; the leaves or plates wherewith their wooden images were frequently covered; of which see Exod. xxxviii. 17, 19; Numb. xvi. 38, 39. The ornament; or, the coat or covering. Heb. the ephod, as this very word is rendered, Exod. xxviii. 8; xxxix. 5, which was a costly and glorious robe. The idolaters spared no cost in the making and adorning their idols; and, among others, the image of Jupiter in Sicily had a coat put upon it made all of massy gold. Thou shalt cast them away as a menstruous cloth; thou shalt so deeply abhor idolatry, that thou shalt cast away with indignation all the monuments and instruments thereof.

23 [f]Then shall he give the rain of thy seed, that thou shalt sow the ground withal; and bread of the increase of the earth, and it shall be fat and plenteous: in that day shall thy cattle feed in large pastures.

f Matt. 6. 33. 1 Tim. 4. 8.

The rain of thy seed; or rather, as others render it, to or for thy seed, when thou hast newly sown thy seed, which was called the former rain; or such as thy seed requires, which may include both the former and the latter rain. Their sins, the cause of all God's judgments which had befallen them, being removed by their sincere repentance, and God's gracious pardon, God showereth down all his blessings upon them. Bread of the increase of the earth; which shall be the fruit of thy own land and labour; which is a great mercy and comfort. It shall be fat and plenteous; thy bread shall be excellent for quality, which is called fat, Deut. xxxii. 14, and abundant for quantity.

24 The oxen likewise and the young asses that ear the ground shall eat ‖ † clean provender, which hath been winnowed with the shovel and with the fan.

† Heb. leavened.

Clean provender; or, as learned Mr. Gataker renders it, threshed, which agrees well with the following clause, corn being first threshed, and then winnowed. The sense is, there should be such plenty of corn, that their very beasts, instead of straw, should eat corn; and that not in the ear, or with the straw, but the pure grain.

25 And there shall be [g]upon every high mountain, and upon every †high hill, rivers and streams of waters in the day of the great slaughter, when the towers fall.

g ch. 2. 14, 15. & 44. 3.
† Heb. lifted up.

Upon every high mountain, and upon every high hill; which are commonly dry and barren, and destitute of rivers. In the day of the great slaughter; when God shall destroy the enemies of his people, he will shower down his blessings upon his church. The towers; either properly, the towers of Babylon, for which she was famous; or metaphorically, the high and mighty potentates, which fought against God's people, as Isa. ii. 15.

26 Moreover [h]the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days, in the day that the LORD bindeth up the breach of his people, and healeth the stroke of their wound.

h ch. 60. 19, 20.

As the light of the sun, for constancy and brightness; which, as also the following clause, is to be understood metaphorically, of the most glorious and comfortable condition of God's church, far surpassing what it was in former ages. And so this, as well as other passages in this chapter, concerns the times of the gospel. As the light of seven days; as if the light of seven days were combined together in one. Its light shall then be transcendently more bright and glorious than it hath hitherto been. Which magnificent expressions seem to be too high for the deliverance of the Jews, either from Sennacherib or out of Babylon; and do much better agree to the times of the gospel, in which the light is far more clear, and the grace of God much more abundant, than ever it was in former times. And this exposition seems the more probable, because it is the manner of the prophets, and especially of this, who is rightly called the evangelical prophet, to take all occasions to speak of the days of the Messiah, and of the blessed privileges of that time and state of the church, among which they constantly reckon light, whether you take it for knowledge or for comfort, to be one. In the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people, and healeth the stroke of their wound; when God shall effectually cure the wounds and breaches of his people, first making up the breach between him and them, then making Israel and Judah to be one, who now are sadly divided; and making Jew and Gentile to be one fold under one Shepherd, even the Messiah, which the prophets foretell that it shall be in the times of the gospel.

27 ¶ Behold, the name of the LORD cometh from far, burning with his anger, ‖ and the burden thereof is †heavy: his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire:

‖ Or, and the grievousness of flame. † Heb. heaviness.

Here begins the last part of the chapter, wherein he gives them an earnest of those greater mercies promised for times to come, by assuring them of the approaching destruction of the Assyrian forces. The name of the Lord; the Lord himself; for as the names of men are oft put for the men themselves, as Numb. xxvi. 53; Acts i. 15; Rev. iii. 4; xi. 13; so the name of God is frequently put for God, as Gen. iv. 26; Deut. xxviii. 58; Psal. xx. 1, 7, &c. Cometh from far; from a very remote place, even from heaven, whence God sent his angel to destroy them, Isa. xxxvii. 36. Possibly this expression may respect the judgment of the Assyrians, who looked upon God as one afar off, not only in his presence, which they thought to be confined to heaven, but in his care of and affections to the Jews; and therefore no more expected any opposition from him than from them who live in the ends of the earth. The burden thereof is heavy; he will inflict heavy judgments upon them. His lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire; he hath pronounced a severe sentence against them, and will give command for the execution of it.

28 And [i]his breath, as an overflowing stream, [k]shall reach to the midst of the neck, to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity: and there shall be [l]a bridle in the jaws of the people, causing them to err.

i ch. 11. 4. 2 Thess. 2. 8. k ch. 8. 8. l ch. 37. 29.

His breath; either, 1. The breath of his nostrils, as it is called, Job iv. 9; or the blast of the breath of his nostrils, as Psal. xviii. 15; in both which places it is mentioned as a sign and effect of God's anger, and the cause of the destruction of those against whom it is directed. And the expression seems to be borrowed from hence, that men discover their anger by a strong and vehement breathing through their nostrils. Or, 2. The breath of his lips or mouth, to which the destruction of God's enemies is elsewhere ascribed, as Job xv. 30; Isa. xi. 4, which may be the same thing with his lips and tongue in the foregoing verse, or may design a strong blast coming out of his mouth; for God is frequently said to destroy wicked men by blowing upon them, as Isa. xl. 7, 24; Ezek. xxi. 31; xxii. 21. As an overflowing stream; coming from him as vehemently as a mighty torrent of waters. Shall reach to the midst of the neck; shall bring him into a most dangerous condition, as a man who is in deep waters which reach to his neck is in danger of being drowned; and afterwards, as is related in the following verses, will utterly destroy him. And this was fulfilled in Sennacherib, who was highly endangered, when he lost so great a part of his army, and shortly after slain by his own sons. Although these words may be added as a description of the overflowing stream now mentioned, and may be thus rendered, which reacheth even to the midst of the neck; for the relative particle is frequently understood in Scripture. To sift; to shake and scatter, as it were, with a sieve; or to try and vex, as this metaphor signifies, Amos ix. 9; Luke xxii. 31. The nations; the Assyrian army, which was made up of the people of several nations. With the sieve of vanity; not with an ordinary sieve, which casteth away the chaff only, but keepeth the corn; but with a sieve which should shake them so long and so vehemently as to cast away all together, and to make a full end of them. There shall be a bridle in the jaws of the people; God will restrain and overrule them by his secret and powerful providence. Causeth them to err; whereas other bridles guide the bridled creatures into the right way, this shall turn them out of the way, by giving them up to their own mistakes, and foolish counsels, and wicked courses, which shall bring them to sore and certain ruin.

29 Ye shall have a song, as in the night [m]when a holy solemnity is kept; and gladness of heart, as when one goeth with a pipe to come into [n]the mountain of the LORD, to the †mighty One of Israel.

m Ps. 42. 4. n ch. 2. 3. † Heb. Rock, Deut. 32. 4.

Ye shall have a song; you shall have occasion of great joy and songs of praise for your stupendous deliverance from that formidable enemy. As in the night when a holy solemnity is kept: he mentions the night, either because the Jewish feasts begun at the evening, and were celebrated with great joy in part of the night season, as well as on the following day; or because he hath a particular respect to the solemnity of the passover, in which they spent some considerable part of the night in feasting, and rejoicing, and singing of psalms and songs before the Lord. As when one goeth with a pipe; like the joy of one that is going up to the solemn feasts with music, and the voice of joy and praise, as they used to do, Psal. xlii. 4, to cheer up themselves in the way, which to many of them was long, and would otherwise have been tedious.

30 [o]And the LORD shall cause †his glorious voice to be heard, and shall shew the lighting down of his arm, with the indignation of his anger, and with the flame of a devouring fire, with scattering, and tempest, [p]and hailstones.

o ch. 29. 6. † Heb. the glory of his voice. p ch. 28. 2. & 32. 19.

His glorious voice; his thunder, which is called God's voice, and said to be full of majesty, Psal. xxix. 4. But then thunder is metaphorically taken for some terrible judgment, as it is in many places of Scripture. The lighting down of his arm upon the Assyrian, whom he will smite with a deadly blow in the face of the world. The phrase is taken from the gesture of a man who is about to smite another, who first lifts up his hand, and then lets it fall with great force upon him whom he designs to strike. With the indignation of his anger; with great wrath; which is signified by the heaping of so many words of the same signification together.

31 For [q]through the voice of the LORD shall the Assyrian be beaten down, [r]which smote with a rod.

q ch. 37. 36. r ch. 10. 5, 24.

The voice of the Lord; that voice mentioned in the last verse. Which smote with a rod; which was the rod wherewith God smote his and other people, Isa. x. 5, 6. He who used to smite others shall now be smitten himself. Or, as the words may be, and by others are, rendered, he (the Lord last mentioned) shall smite him with a rod, or with his rod.

‖ Or, against them.

shall † lay upon him, it shall be with tabrets and harps: and in battles of [a] shaking will he fight ‖ with it.

The grounded staff, Heb. the founded rod; the judgment of God, which is frequently called a rod in Scripture, and may be here called a founded rod, or the rod of foundation, either because it was firmly established, and certainly to come, by God's immutable purpose and appointment; or because the rod should not slightly touch him, and pass over him, but strike deep, and be fixed, and as it were grounded or founded in his flesh, and made to rest upon him, as it follows in the next clause. Shall lay, Heb. shall cause to rest; which is contrary to the manner of God's dealing with his people, upon whom he will not suffer the rod of the wicked to rest, Psal. cxxv. 3. Upon him; upon the Assyrian, mentioned in the foregoing verse. It shall be with tabrets and harps: the sense is either, 1. Their destruction shall be celebrated by God's people with joy, and music, and songs of praise. Or, 2. The victory shall be got, not by warlike instruments and achievements, but as it were by tabrets and harps; wherein he may possibly allude to the victory which Jehoshaphat got against Moab and Ammon, not by fighting, but only by singing and praising God with the voice, and with musical instruments, 2 Chron. xx. 19, 21, 27, 28; God being pleased to fight for them by his own immediate power; which also was the case here, which made the people of God sing a triumph before the fight, Isa. xxxvii. 22. In battles of shaking; or, with battles or fightings of shaking, to wit, of shaking of the hand, of which kind of shaking this Hebrew word is constantly used, such as are performed by the mere shaking of the hand; namely, by God's shaking his hand against them, as he threatens to do against others, Isa. xi. 15; xix. 16, in which last place this very word is used, and in the former the verb from whence it comes. For that this shaking is an act of God seems more than probable, and from the following words, will he, i. e. God, as all understand it, fight against it. And so the sense of the place may be this, God will fight against them, and destroy them by his own hands. Will he, to wit, the Lord, who declareth himself to be the enemy of the Assyrian, both in the foregoing and following verses, fight with it; with the army of the Assyrians: or, according to the other Hebrew reading, with them; with the Assyrians.

† Jer. 7. 31. & 19. 6, &c.

33 [t] For Tophet is ordained † of old; yea, for the king it is prepared; he hath made it deep and large: the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the LORD, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it.

Tophet was a place near Jerusalem, in which the idolatrous Israelites used cruelly to offer up their children to Moloch, 2 Chron. xxviii. 3; xxxiii. 6; see also Jer. vii. 31; xix. 6; and it may be put synecdochically for any place of torment or misery; and particularly it is put for hell, as well in the writings of the ancient Jewish doctors as in Holy Scripture, as Matt. xviii. 8, 9; xxiii. 15; Mark ix. 43, 44. And so this place may be understood either, 1. Literally, of Tophet in the valley of Hinnom, in which the Assyrian host was either slain by the angel, as Josephus reports, or buried or burnt. For although the Assyrians did not make any great attempt upon Jerusalem, Isa. xxxvii. 36, yet Rabshakeh came very near it with a great army, Isa. xxxvi. 2. Or, 2. Figuratively, of hell. Is ordained; or, was ordered or prepared. And it might be said, in some sort, to be prepared by Hezekiah for this end, by the care which he took to purge this and other places abused to idolatry, which made them more fit to receive so great a favour and deliverance from God. But for hell, that doubtless was ordained or prepared by God for the punishment of impenitent sinners. Of old, Heb. from yesterday; which phrase is sometimes used of a time but lately past, as 2 Sam. xv. 20; Job viii. 9, and sometimes of any time past, without limitation. For the king; for the king of Assyria; either, 1. For the kings, the singular number being put for the plural, whereby he may understand the princes or chief commanders of the host, by comparing Isa. x. 8, Are not my princes altogether kings? Or, 2. For Rabshakeh, the general of this army, who, according to the style of Scripture, might very well be called king. Or, 3. Sennacherib, for whom this place might be said to be ordained or prepared, partly because it was ordained for the destruction of his host; nothing being more ordinary, both in sacred and profane writers, than to entitle the king or general of the army to all the victories procured, or losses or slaughter sustained, by his army; and partly because the sudden destruction of the Assyrian army, supposed to be in this place, was the occasion of the conspiracy of that king's sons, and so of the king's death. But if this Tophet design hell, this is emphatically denounced against him, to intimate, that although he escaped that sudden plague which cut off his army, yet there was a more terrible judgment appointed for him, which he should be utterly unable to escape. He; the Lord, who is oft designed by this pronoun, as in the next foregoing verse, and elsewhere; and who is expressed in the following words. Or it is an indefinite expression, for, it is made deep and large. Hath made it deep and large, capable of receiving vast numbers; whereby he intimates that he designed to make a great and general destruction of the Assyrians; and withal, that it was a vain and foolish confidence which the Assyrians had in their numerous host, seeing the greatest numbers of God's enemies are wholly unable, either to oppose him, or to save themselves from his wrath and power. The pile thereof is fire and much wood; whereby he further implies that he intended to make a great slaughter among them. And he alludes in this phrase to the ancient custom, either of burning sacrifices, and particularly of burning children to Moloch, or of burning the dead bodies of men. The breath of the Lord; the immediate hand of God, or his word of anger: see on ver. 28. Like a stream of brimstone; he seems to allude to that shower of fire and brimstone, Gen. xix. 24. Doth kindle it; the pile of fire and wood now mentioned.

That go down to Egypt for help; as the Jews did, contrary to God's command, Deut. xvii. 16; xxvi. 68. And stay on horses; for Egypt had many and choice horses. They look not unto the Holy One of Israel, neither seek the Lord; their confidence in the creature was accompanied with and did produce a distrust of God, and a neglect of seeking to him by prayer for his help.

† Heb. remove.

2 Yet he also is wise, and will bring evil, and [d] will not † call back his words: but will arise against the house of the evildoers, and against the help of them that work iniquity.

He also is wise: you think you are wise, and act wisely in engaging the Egyptians, who are a wise and warlike people, to help you; but God is not inferior to them in wisdom nor in strength, but much their superior; and therefore you have done foolishly and wickedly in preferring them before him. Will bring evil; will execute his judgments upon you, notwithstanding all that you or your allies the Egyptians can do to hinder it. Will not call back his words, his threatenings denounced against you, but will infallibly execute them. Will arise; though at present he sit still, yet he will bestir himself and fight. Against the house of evil-doers; against this wicked and rebellious people of the Jews. The help; the helpers, as it is explained in the next verse; the abstract being put for the concrete.

c Ps. 146. 3, 5.

3 Now the Egyptians are [c] men, and not God; and their horses flesh, and not spirit. When the LORD shall stretch out his hand, both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together.

Are men, and not God; and therefore utterly unable to defend you, either without or against my will. Their horses flesh; weak and frail; as that word signifies, Psal. lxxviii. 39; Heb. v. 7, and elsewhere. Not spirit; not like spiritual substances, such as the angels, who are immortal, and invisible by men; whereof we have instances, Exod. xii. 29, 30; Isa. xxxvii. 36.

4 For thus hath the LORD spoken unto me, [f]Like as the lion and the young lion roaring on his prey, when a multitude of shepherds is called forth against him, he will not be afraid of their voice, nor abase himself for the ‖noise of them: [g]so shall the LORD of hosts come down to fight for mount Zion, and for the hill thereof.

f Hos. 11. 10. Amos 3. 8.
g ch. 42. 13.

For; or, but; or, nevertheless, as this particle is elsewhere used, as hath been proved before. Although you have done evil in sending to Egypt for help, and they shall not be able to help you; yet the Lord himself will, of his own grace, and for the glory of his own name, give you that help and deliverance which you do not deserve, and have no reason to expect from him. And therefore desist from those evil counsels and courses, as those which are both unnecessary and pernicious. Roaring on his prey; when he is ready to seize upon it, and devour it. He will not be afraid of their voice, nor abase himself: it hath been observed of lions, that when they are pursued, they do not run away with all speed, as other creatures do, but march away slowly, and make an honourable retreat. For: although this Hebrew particle might be rendered against, and so this place might be understood of God's fighting against the Jews and Egyptians, of which he speaks ver. 3; yet it is better rendered for, as it is taken in many other places, as is manifest from the following similitude and verse.

5 [h]As birds flying, so will the LORD of hosts defend Jerusalem; [i]defending also he will deliver it; and passing over he will preserve it.

h Deut. 32. 11. Ps. 91. 4.
i Ps. 37. 40.

As birds flying; which come from above, and so cannot be kept off; which fly swiftly, and engage themselves valiantly and resolutely, when they perceive that their young ones are in eminent danger. He seems to allude, and to oppose this, to those boasting expressions of the Assyrian, Isa. x. 14: compare Deut. xxxii. 11, 12; Matt. xxiii. 37. Passing over; the destroying angel shall pass over Jerusalem untouched, and shall fall upon the Assyrians. He seems to allude to the history of God's passing over and sparing the houses of the Israelites, when he slew the Egyptians, in which this word is constantly used, Exod. xii. 12, 23, 27.

6 ¶ Turn ye unto him from whom the children of Israel have [k]deeply revolted.

k Hos. 9. 9.

Turn ye unto him; let the consideration of this gracious promise engage you to repent of your carnal policies, in seeking and trusting to Egypt for help, and sincerely to return to God. The children of Israel; either, 1. The Israelites, strictly so called, who are now utterly destroyed for their apostacy; and therefore take heed that you do not follow their example. Or, 2. You Jews, who are the children of Israel; which title he here gives them, partly to admonish them of their great and many obligations to God, and partly to aggravate the sin of their apostacy. Have deeply revolted, in neglecting and forsaking him, and seeking to Egypt for help; which he calls a deep revolt, partly because it was a heinous sin, being contrary to God's express command, and highly dishonourable to God; and partly because it was carried on with deep dissimulation, and with a public profession of cleaving to God, and with a design of seeking deep to hide this their counsel from the Lord, wherewith he charged this people, Isa. xxix. 15.

7 For in that day every man shall [l]cast away his idols of silver, and †his idols of gold, which your own hands have made unto you for [m]a sin.

m 1 Kings 12. 30.

For when the Assyrian shall invade your land, you shall find the vanity of those idols to which you have trusted; and therefore shall cast them away with indignation, and be forced to seek to me for help. So this is added as an argument to persuade them to practise his counsel of turning to God. Which your own hands have made unto you for a sin; which you have made as instruments of your sin of idolatry. Or, which your sinful hands (by a common Hebraism, called hands of sin) have made for you. Or, the sin (as an idol is called, Deut. ix. 21) which your hands have made for you. So there is only a transposition of one word, which is very usual in the Hebrew text.

8 ¶ Then shall the Assyrian [n]fall with the sword, not of a mighty man; and the sword, not of a mean man, shall devour him: but he shall flee ‖from the sword, and his young men shall be ‖†discomfited.

n See 2 Kin. 19. 35, 36. ch. 37. 36.
‖ Or, for fear of the sword.
‖ Or, tributary.
† Heb. for melting, or, tribute.

Then; when you have cast away your idols, and seriously sought to me for help; both which things were performed by Hezekiah. With the sword, not of a mighty man; and the sword, not of a mean man; by the sword, not of any man, either mean or mighty, but of an angel. From the sword; from, or for fear of, that plague which so strangely and suddenly destroyed his army. His young men, Heb. his choice young men; his guards and valiant commanders and soldiers. Shall be discomfited, Heb. shall melt away, a great part of them being destroyed by the angel; and the hearts of the rest melting for fear.

9 And °†he shall pass over to ‖his strong hold for fear, and his princes shall be afraid of the ensign, saith the LORD, whose fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem.

o ch. 37. 37.
† Heb. his rock shall pass away for fear.
‖ Or, his strength.

He shall pass over to his strong hold; Sennacherib shall flee away, with all speed, from Jerusalem, to his strong city of Nineveh, Isa. xxxvii. 37. Or, as it is in the margin, and as the words lie in the Hebrew text, his rock (i. e. his strength, the greatest champions of his army, to whom he trusted) shall pass away (shall flee with all speed from Jerusalem) for fear, lest the sword of the destroying angel should overtake them. Of the ensign; either, 1. Of any ensign. This dreadful judgment shall strike them with such a terror, that they shall not dare to look any enemy in the face. Or, 2. Of the Lord's ensign, which he hath lifted up against them. Whose fire is in Zion: so the sense is either, 1. Whose fire is continually burning upon the altar in Zion; which signifies his presence and residence there. Or rather, 2. Who is and will appear to be in Zion, like a fire, to defend his people, and to consume their enemies; for which end God promiseth that he would be unto Jerusalem a wall of fire round about, Zech. ii. 5, &c.; and that he would make the governor of Judah like a hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and that they should devour all the people round about. Possibly these and the following words may be thus rendered, and that very agreeably to the Hebrew words, who will be a fire (to wit, a consuming fire) to him (to the king of Assyria, of whom he is here speaking) in Zion, (from whence he will send forth that fire which shall consume his army: or, for Zion; for Zion's sake; for the prefix here rendered in frequently signifies for, as hath been proved,) and a furnace to him in or for Jerusalem. But this I only propose, leaving it to the judgment of the intelligent reader. His furnace in Jerusalem; the same thing repeated in other words.

CHAP. XXXII.

Christ's kingdom, and its blessings, 1—8. Careless women shall be troubled, 9—11, and the land laid waste, 12—14, until a restoration, 15—20.

BEHOLD, [a]a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment.

cir. 713.
a Ps. 45. 1, &c. Jer. 23. 5. Hos. 3. 5. Zech. 9. 9.

This seems to me to be a distinct prophecy from the former, and delivered at another time, and probably before that which is related in the former chapters. For this is certain, and confessed by all, that the prophecies are not always set down in that order in which the prophets delivered them. The foregoing prophecy seems to have been delivered, not in the time of Ahaz, for he sent to the Assyrian, and not to the Egyptian, for help; but in the days of Hezekiah, who rebelled against the king of Assyria, as is said, 2 Kings xviii. 7, and was too prone to trust upon the staff of Egypt, as the Assyrian expressly chargeth him there, ver. 21; to which course it is likely he was drawn or tempted by some of his wicked princes and counsellors, whom the prophet therefore severely censures and condemns in the two foregoing chapters. And this seems to have been delivered in the time of Ahaz, and to speak of Hezekiah, and of his righteous and happy government. But withal, as Hezekiah and his reign was an eminent type of Christ, and of his kingdom; so this prophecy looks through Hezekiah unto Christ, as many other scriptures in their literal sense do unquestionably concern David, which yet have a mystical sense, and are also meant of Christ, in whom those things were more fully and eminently accomplished. A king; Hezekiah, a type of Christ, and Christ typified by him. Shall reign; therefore Hezekiah was not king when this prophecy was delivered. And whereas some say that he speaks of the good government of Hezekiah after the destruction of Sennacherib, it is easy to observe that his government was as good before that time as afterward; and that in the very beginning of his reign he ruled with righteousness and the fear of God, as the history plainly declareth. Princes; the ministers of state, and justice, and war under the king. For a wise and good king will take care to have like ministers.

2 And a man shall be as an hiding
b ch. 4. 6. & 25. 4. place from the wind, and [b]a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry † Heb. heavy. place, as the shadow of a †great rock in a weary land.

A man; either, 1. The man or king spoken of. Or, 2. Each or every one, to wit, of his princes. That king shall not patch up an old garment with new cloth, nor mingle good and bad together; but shall take care to purge out all the corrupt magistrates, and, as far as he can, to settle good ones in all places. A man is oft put for every or any man, as Isa. ii. 20; iii. 5, 6, and elsewhere. Shall be as an hiding-place unto the people under their government, especially to such as are oppressed or injured by those who are more potent than they. From the wind; from the rage and violence of evil men. As rivers of water in a dry place; no less refreshing and acceptable shall this king and his princes be to their subjects. In a weary land; in a dry and scorched country, which is called weary here, as also Psal. lxiii. 1, metonymically, because it makes travellers weary; as death is called pale in other authors, because it makes men's faces pale.

c ch. 29. 18. & 35. 5, 6. 3 And [c]the eyes of them that see shall not be dim, and the ears of them that hear shall hearken.

This is meant either, 1. Of the princes or magistrates, who are instead of eyes and ears, both to the king and to the people, who, by their office, are to see and observe all things, and to hear all causes. These, saith he, shall not shut their eyes, nor suffer them to be blinded with gifts, to favour a rich man in an unjust cause; they shall not shut their ears against the complaints of the poor oppressed ones, as wicked princes commonly do. Or, 2. Of the people; they shall not shut their eyes and ears against the good counsels and examples of their religious king and rulers, as they have done formerly: both princes and people shall be reformed. This was done in some poor measure in Hezekiah's time; but far more fully and eminently in the days of the Messiah, who, by his grace, changeth men's hearts, and cureth them of that wilful and obstinate blindness whereof they had been guilty before; which clearly showeth that this prophecy looks through Hezekiah unto Christ. And the like may be said of the following verse.

† Heb. hasty. 4 The heart also of the †rash shall understand knowledge, and the tongue of the stammerers shall be ready to speak ‖ Or, elegantly. ‖plainly.

The rash; who were hasty and heady in judging of things; which is an argument of ignorance and folly. Shall understand knowledge; shall become more knowing and considerate in their judgments and actions. The stammerers; that used to speak of the things of God darkly, and doubtfully, and unwillingly. As men's understandings shall then be enlightened, so their speech shall be reformed; which though it was in part fulfilled in Hezekiah; this reformation being effected in some measure by his counsel and example, and by the powerful preaching of the Levites, whom he excited and encouraged to teach the good knowledge of the Lord, as is said, 2 Chron. xxx. 22; yet was truly and fully accomplished only by Christ, who wrought this wonderful change in an innumerable company both of Jews and Gentiles.

5 The vile person shall be no more called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful.

The vile person; base and worthless men. Heb. the fool; which in Scripture use commonly signifies a wicked man. Shall be no more called liberal, or noble, or a prince, or lord, as this word is used, Psal. cxviii. 9; cxlvi. 3, and elsewhere. The sense of the place is, either, 1. Unworthy men shall not be advanced to places of honour and power, as the LXX. and some others understand it; for to be called is oft put in Scripture for to be, as hath been frequently observed. Or, 2. Vicious and worthless persons shall no longer be reputed honourable and virtuous because of their high and honourable places, as commonly they are under wicked princes by means of flatterers; but wickedness shall be discovered and punished wheresoever it is, and virtue shall be manifested and rewarded, and all things shall be managed with sincerity and simplicity; which was eminently fulfilled under the gospel; by the preaching whereof, and by Christ's Spirit, hypocrites are detected, and men are enabled to discern between good and evil, both persons and things. The churl; the sordid and covetous man; which is a great vice in any man, but especially in magistrates; who therefore must be men hating covetousness, Exod. xviii. 21. But under this one vice all vices are understood by a synecdoche, very frequent in Scripture and in other authors; as under the opposite virtue of bountifulness all virtues are comprehended.

6 For the vile person will speak villany, and his heart will work iniquity, to practise hypocrisy, and to utter error against the LORD, to make empty the soul of the hungry, and he will cause the drink of the thirsty to fail.

For the vile person will speak villany: so this is a reason of the assertion, ver. 5; either thus, Such shall not be advanced to places of trust and dignity; for if they were, they would abuse them by unjust sentences and practices. Or thus, Men shall no longer be miscalled; for every one will discover what he is by his words and actions; which also shall be narrowly observed. But these and the following words are and may be otherwise rendered: But (as this particle oft signifies) he shall be called or said to be (which words are easily understood out of the former verse, as is very frequent in Scripture) a fool, who (which relative particle is understood in very many places) shall speak villany, and whose heart shall work iniquity, &c. His heart will work iniquity; he will, from time to time, be devising wickedness, that he may execute it when he hath opportunity. To practise hypocrisy: to do bad things, but with a pretence of religion and justice, which he shall use to keep himself from the disfavour of his prince, and from the lash of the law. Or, to practise profaneness or wickedness, as this word, at least sometimes, seems to signify. To utter error against the Lord; to pass unjust sentences, which is directly contrary to the will and command of God. To make empty the soul of the hungry, and he will cause the drink of the thirsty to fail; whereby they take away the bread and drink of the poor, and give it to their rich oppressors.

7 The instruments also of the churl are evil: he deviseth wicked devices to destroy the poor with lying words, even ‖ when the needy speaketh right.

‖ Or, when he speaketh against the poor in judgment.

The instruments also of the churl are evil, Heb. The vessels, &c., which is a word of a very general signification among the Hebrews, and signifies any person or thing which is employed in a man's use and service. I say person, for the name of vessel is given to such persons as are instrumental to another, as to the Babylonians, who were God's instruments in executing his vengeance, Isa. xiii. 5; to God's ministers, Acts ix. 15; 2 Cor. iv. 5; and to useful Christians, 2 Tim. ii. 20; and to wives, 1 Pet. iii. 7. And so it may be here noted, that such covetous or wicked princes most willingly choose and employ wicked men in their affairs, because such men will, without any regard to conscience or justice, serve all their exorbitant desires or lusts. But withal, it seems to include his counsels, and practices, and arts, which are here declared to be generally evil. But this verse is and may be otherwise rendered, as the former was; And (repeat, he shall be called) a churl (as indeed he is one) whose instruments are evil, and who deviseth, &c.; which agrees with the order of the words in the Hebrew text, and with the order of the foregoing verses: for as he speaks of the vile person, and of the churl, ver. 6; so he gives a description of the vile person, ver. 6, and then of the churl, in this verse. He deviseth wicked devices; he useth all his wit and art to do injury to others, without any inconvenience to himself. With lying words; with false and unrighteous decrees. When the needy speaketh right; when their cause is just and good.

8 But the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he ‖ stand.

He who is truly liberal and virtuous will show it by designing and practising liberal or virtuous actions; and he who doth so will not destroy himself thereby, as wicked men falsely suppose, but establish and advance himself. But this verse also, as well as the former, is and may be otherwise rendered; And (repeat, he shall be called, as before) liberal, who deviseth liberal things, and persisteth or continueth in liberal things. If it be thought strange that so many verses should be spent in affirming that which in effect was said ver. 5, it must be considered that these verses do not only contain an affirmation, that they should be called vile persons, or churls, or liberal that were so; but also a description of their qualities and practices, which was useful for their conviction, and for the instruction of others.

9 ¶ Rise up, ye women [d] that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters; give ear unto my speech.

[d] Amos 6. 1.

Rise up; bestir and prepare yourselves to hear, as it follows, and shake off sloth and carelessness. That are at ease; that indulge yourselves in idleness and luxury. Careless, Heb. confident or secure, who are insensible of your sin and danger. Daughters; the same before called women; whom he here reproveth and threateneth for their sins, as he did the men before for seeking to Egypt for help, and divers other sins, whereof the men were most guilty.

10 † Many days and years shall ye be troubled, ye careless women: for the vintage shall fail, the gathering shall not come.

Many days and years, Heb. Days above a year, i. e. a year and some days; which notes either, 1. The time from this prophecy to the beginning of this judgment; or rather, 2. The time of the continuance of it, that it should last for above one year; as indeed this did, and no longer; for Hezekiah reigned in all but twenty-nine years, 2 Kings xviii. 2, and Sennacherib came in his fourteenth year, and after his defeat and departure God promised and added to him fifteen years more, 2 Kings xx. 6. The vintage shall fail, during the time of the Assyrian invasion. And this commination is here added to qualify the foregoing promise, and to warn them, that although God would give them so good a king, and there should be some reformation of their former abuses under the government of Ahaz; yet as there were many sins among them not yet repented of, so they should be severely chastised for them. The gathering, to wit, of the other fruits of the earth; as that feast which was observed after the gathering of all the fruits was called the feast of ingathering, Exod. xxiii. 16.

11 Tremble, ye women that are at ease; be troubled, ye careless ones: strip you, and make you bare, and gird sackcloth upon your loins.

Strip you, and make you bare; put off your ornaments, as God commanded upon a like occasion, Exod. xxxiii. 5, that you may put on sackcloth instead of them, as mourners and penitents used to do.

12 They shall lament for the teats, for † the pleasant fields, for the fruitful vine.

† Heb. the fields of desire.

They shall lament for the teats; either, 1. Properly, because through famine your teats are destitute of milk for the nourishment of your poor children. Or rather, 2. Metaphorically, as the following words explain it, for the pleasant and fruitful fields, which like teats yielded you plentiful and excellent nourishment, for which the land was said to flow with milk, Ezek. xx. 6. And the earth being compared to the womb that bare us, Job i. 21, it is not strange if its fruitful fields be compared to the breasts which nourish us.

13 [e] Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers; ‖ yea, upon all the houses of joy in [f] the joyous city:

[e] ch. 34. 13. Hos. 9. 6.
‖ Or, burning upon, &c.
[f] ch. 22. 2.

Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers. If any of you think there is no great cause for such trembling and lamentation, which shall last but for a year and some days, know that this calamity by the Assyrians is but an earnest of further and sorer judgments; for the time is coming when this land shall be laid desolate, and instead of vines and other fruits, it shall yield nothing but briers and thorns; of which see on Isa. vii. 23, 24. Upon all the houses of joy; upon that ground where now your houses stand, in which you delight, and take your fill of mirth and pleasure.

14 [g] Because the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; the ‖ forts and towers shall be for dens for ever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks;

[g] ch. 27. 10.
‖ Or, clifts and watch-towers.

The palaces, Heb. the palace; the king's house, and other magnificent buildings in the city. Shall be left; or rather, shall be forsaken, to wit, of God, and given up into their enemies' hands. And the verb in the foregoing clause may be rendered, shall be left. A joy of wild asses; desolate places, in which wild asses delight to be, Job xxxix. 5, 6; Jer. ii. 24.

15 Until [h] the spirit be poured upon us from on high, and [i] the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest.

[h] Ps. 104. 30. Joel 2. 28.
[i] ch. 29. 17. & 35. 2.

Until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high: and this calamity and desolation shall, in a manner, continue until the time come, in which God will pour, or, as the Hebrew word properly signifies, reveal, i. e. evidently and plentifully pour out, his Spirit from heaven upon his people; which was done in some sort upon the return of the people from Babylon, when God, by his Spirit, stirred up the spirit, both of Cyrus to give them liberty of returning to Jerusalem, and of the people to return and build the city and temple; but was far more clearly and fully accomplished in the days of the Messiah. And indeed the promises contained in these and the following words and verses were not fulfilled upon their coming out of Babylon, after which time they had but a little reviving in their bondage, as is said, Ezra ix. 8, and continued in servitude and distress under the Persian emperors, Neh. ix. 36, 37, and afterward suffered many and grievous calamities from the kings of Syria and Egypt, and from the Romans; which suits very ill with that glorious promise here following, ver. 18. And therefore these promises concern the times of the gospel, when God's Spirit was in a most evident and glorious manner poured forth upon the apostles, and other believing Jews, to the astonishment of their very adversaries; and when the following promises were in a good measure fulfilled, and are more fully to be accomplished in God's due time. The wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest; which is allegorically understood. The meaning may be this; God's people, who were desolate and destroyed, shall be revived and flourish, and their flourishing enemies shall be brought to desolation and destruction. It may also signify the conversion of the barren and despised Gentiles, and the rejection of the Jews, in the time of the Messiah.

16 Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field.

Judgment; just judgment, as the next clause explains it. Justice shall be executed in all the parts of the land, both in the barren and fruitful places, and shall be practised by all my people; which agrees with that promise, Isa. lx. 21, Thy people shall be all righteous, &c.

k Jam. 3. 18. 17 [k]And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever.

The work of righteousness shall be peace; the effect of this prevailing practice of righteousness shall be prosperity and outward felicity. Quietness; tranquillity, both of mind and outward estate. Assurance; or, confidence. The observation of God's precepts will beget in them a confidence and assurance of God's mercy, and the fulfilling of his promises.

18 And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places;

My people; either the Gentiles, who then shall be my people; or the Jews, to whom this promise shall be made good upon their conversion to Christ in the latter times of the gospel.

l ch. 30. 30. m Zech. 11. 2. ‖ Or, and the city shall be utterly abased. 19 [l]When it shall hail, coming down [m]on the forest; ‖and the city shall be low in a low place.

When it shall hail, coming down on the forest, Heb. And it shall hail, &c. As my blessings shall be poured down upon my people, who from a wilderness are turned into a fruitful field, as it is said, ver. 15; so my wrath and judgments (which are signified by hail, Isa. xxviii. 2, 17, and elsewhere) shall fall upon them, who were a fruitful field, but are turned into a forest, as was said, ver. 15, i. e. upon the unbelieving and rebellious Jews, who seem there to be designed under that notion. The city; either, 1. Babylon, the great enemy and oppressor of God's people. Or, 2. Jerusalem, which, though now it was the seat of God's worship and people, yet he foresaw by the Spirit of prophecy that it would be the great enemy of the Messiah, and of God's people. Shall be low in a low place, Heb. shall be humbled with humiliation; which by an ordinary Hebraism signifies, shall be greatly humbled, or brought very low.

20 Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, that send forth thither the feet of n ch. 30. 24. [n]the ox and the ass.

Blessed are ye that sow: as the barren forest shall be destroyed with hail, ver. 19, so the fruitful field shall be improved, and bring forth much fruit; which is signified by a declaration of the blessedness of them that sow in it. Beside all waters; in all moist and fat grounds, which are like to yield good fruit. But this passage, as well as others in the foregoing verses, is to be understood mystically, and seems to respect the times of the gospel. The prophet reflecting upon his own unsuccessful labours, of which he complains, Isa. xlix. 4, and elsewhere, and foreseeing by the Spirit the great and happy success of his successors, the ministers of the gospel, tacitly bewails his own unhappiness, who sowed his seed upon dry and barren ground, by congratulating the happiness of the apostles, who sowed their seed more generally, upon all fit grounds, without any distinction between Jews and Gentiles; and who found the ground, to wit, the hearts of the people, more moistened and softened, and better prepared to receive the good seed of God's word. The ox and the ass; which creatures they employed in ploughing and sowing the ground, Deut. xxii. 10; Psal. cxliv. 14; Isa. xxx. 24.

WOE to thee [a]that spoilest, and thou mast not spoiled; and dealest treacherously, and they dealt not treacherously with thee! [b]when thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled; and when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee. a ch. 21. 2. Hab. 2. 8. cir. 713. b Rev. 13. 10.

Woe to thee that spoilest! to Sennacherib, who wasted the land of Judah. Thou wast not spoiled; thou didst not meet with any considerable opposition, but wast victorious over all thine enemies; of which the Assyrian boasteth, Isa. x. 8, 9; xxxvi. 18, 19. Dealest treacherously; as Sennacherib did with Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 14, 17. They dealt not treacherously with thee; none of thine enemies could prevail against thee, either by force, of which he speaketh in the former clause, or by treachery, as here. Or, when they dealt not, &c.; when Hezekiah did not deal treacherously with thee. If it be said that Hezekiah dealt treacherously with him, in breaking his faith, and rebelling against him, it may be answered, that Hezekiah neither promised nor owed him any service or subjection. What was done in that kind was done by Ahaz only; and he only begged his assistance for a particular work, and paid him well for it, 2 Kings xvi. 7, 8, and the king of Assyria did not keep his conditions with him; for he distressed him, but strengthened him not, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20. When thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled; when thou hast performed the work of chastening my people, for which I sent thee, thou also shalt be spoiled by thine enemies.

2 O LORD, be gracious unto us; [c]we have waited for thee: be thou their arm every morning, our salvation also in the time of trouble. c ch. 25. 9.

O Lord, be gracious unto us; the prophet contemplating the judgment which was now coming upon God's people, directeth his prayer to God for them. Their arm; our arm or strength. The change of persons is most frequent in prophetical writings. Every morning; when we offer the morning sacrifice, and call upon thee; which yet is not meant exclusively, as if he did not desire God's help at other times; but comprehensively, the morning being put synecdochically for the whole day. The sense is, Help us speedily and continually.

3 At the noise of the tumult the people fled; at the lifting up of thyself the nations were scattered.

At the noise of the tumult, which the angel shall make in destroying the army. The people; those of the army who escaped that stroke. The nations; the people of divers nations, which made up his army.

4 And your spoil shall be gathered like the gathering of the caterpiller: as the running to and fro of locusts shall he run upon them.

Your spoil, that treasure which you have raked together by spoiling divers people, shall be gathered by the Jews at Jerusalem, when you shall be forced to flee away with all possible speed, leaving your spoils behind you. Like the gathering of the caterpillar; either, 1. Passively, with as much ease, and in as great numbers, as caterpillars are gathered and destroyed. Or rather, 2. Actively, as appears from the next clause; as caterpillars or locusts (for the word signifies either) gather and devour all the fruits of the earth; which was a common plague in those countries. As the running to and fro of locusts; as locusts, especially when they are sent and armed by commission from God, come with great force, and run hither and thither, devouring all the fruits of the earth, wheresoever they find them.

5 [d]The LORD is exalted; for he dwelleth on high: he hath filled Zion with judgment and righteousness. d Ps. 97. 9.

Is exalted; will get great glory by the marvellous destruction of so proud and potent an army, and by the defence of his people. For he dwelleth on high; for he is and will appear to be superior to his enemies, both in place and power. He dwelleth in the heaven, whence he can easily and irresistibly pour down judgments upon his enemies. Although these words may be, and by some are, joined with those that follow, thus, for he that dwelleth on high hath filled, &c. He hath filled Zion, he will fill Jerusalem, with judgment and righteousness; either, 1. With a glorious instance of his just judgment against the Assyrians. Or, 2. With the execution of justice by good Hezekiah, as before it was filled with impiety and injustice under Ahaz. The city shall not only be delivered from that wicked enemy, but shall also be established and blessed with true religion and righteousness; which was a great addition to that mercy.

6 And wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and strength of †salvation: the fear of the LORD is his treasure.

Wisdom and knowledge, to govern thyself and thy people well, shall be the stability of thy times; of thy reign; times being oft put for things done in those times, as 1 Chron. xii. 32; Psal. xxxi. 15; xxxvii. 18, &c. He turneth his speech to Hezekiah. The sense is, Thy throne shall be established upon the sure foundations of wisdom and justice. Strength of salvation; thy saving strength, or thy strong or mighty salvation. The fear of the Lord is his treasure: and although thou shalt have great treasures of gold and silver, &c., yet thy chief treasure and delight is, and shall be, in promoting the fear and worship of God; which shall be a great honour and safeguard to thyself and people. He saith, his treasure, for thy treasure, by a sudden change of the person, usual in these books.

‖ Or, messengers. e 2 Kings 18. 18, 37.

7 Behold, their ‖valiant ones shall cry without: [e]the ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly.

Behold: that the mercy here promised might be duly magnified, he makes a lively representation of their great danger and distress, in which it found them. Their valiant ones; or, their heralds or messengers, as the Hebrew doctors expound the word: either, 1. Those whom the king of Assyria sent to Jerusalem, 2 Kings xviii. 17. Or rather, 2. Those whom Hezekiah sent to treat with the Assyrian commissioners, 2 Kings xviii. 18, as the next clause showeth. Shall cry without, through grief and fear. The ambassadors of peace, whom he shall send to beg peace of the Assyrian, shall weep bitterly, because they cannot obtain their desires.

8 [f]The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth: [g]he hath broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities, he regardeth no man.

The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth, because the Assyrian soldiers possessed and filled the land. He hath broken the covenant; Sennacherib broke his faith, given to Hezekiah, of departing for a sum of money, 2 Kings xviii. 14, 17. He hath despised the cities; the defenced cities of Judah, which he contemned and easily took, 2 Kings xviii. 13. He regardeth no man; either to spare them, or to fear them, or to keep faith with them. He neither feareth God, nor reverenceth man.

9 [h]The earth mourneth and languisheth: Lebanon is ashamed and ‖hewn down: Sharon is like a wilderness; and Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits.

The earth mourneth, being desolate and neglected. Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down by the Assyrians. Or, as the word signifies, and is here rendered by others, withereth or languisheth, because its trees are not now used by the Jews for their buildings, as they have been; and because they are spoiled and destroyed by the Assyrians. Sharon; a pleasant and fruitful place, as appears from 1 Chron. xxvii. 29; Cant. ii. 1; Isa. xxxv. 2. Bashan and Carmel; two places eminent for fertility, and especially for good pastures, Deut. xxxii. 14; 1 Sam. xxv. 2, which are here synecdochically put for all such places. Shake off their fruits; are spoiled of their fruits. Or, as it is rendered by some others, yell or roar, as this word is rendered Jer. li. 38.

11 [k]Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble: your breath, as fire, shall devour you.

k Ps. 7. 14. ch. 59. 4.

Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble, instead of solid corn. Your great hopes and designs, O ye Assyrians! shall be utterly disappointed. Your breath, as fire, shall devour you; your rage against my people shall bring ruin upon yourselves.

12 And the people shall be as the burnings of lime: [l]as thorns cut up shall they be burned in the fire.

l ch. 9. 18.

Shall be as the burnings of lime; shall be burnt as easily and effectually as chalk is burned to make lime.

13 ¶ Hear, [m]ye that are far off, what I have done; and, ye that are near, acknowledge my might.

m ch. 49. 1.

My power and justice in destroying the Assyrians shall be so evident, that people, both far and near, shall be forced to acknowledge it.

14 The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

The sinners in Zion are afraid: this is spoken, not of the Assyrians, as some would have it, but of the Jews, as appears both from the words themselves, and from the following verses. The prophet having foretold the deliverance of God's people, and the destruction of their enemies, ver. 10—12, for the greater illustration of that wonderful mercy, here returns to the description, and gives a lively representation of the dismal and frightful condition in which the Jews, especially such of them as were ungodly and unbelieving, were before this deliverance came. Although the godly Jews were, in some measure, supported by the sense of God's favour, and by God's promises delivered to them by Isaiah; yet the generality of the people were filled with horrors, and expectation of utter destruction. Who amongst us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? how shall we be able to abide the presence, and endure or avoid the wrath, of that God, who is a consuming fire; who is now about to destroy us utterly by the Assyrians, and will afterwards burn us with unquenchable fire? For seeing it is sufficiently evident, from both Old and New Testament, as hath been formerly observed and proved, that the Jews, except the Sadducees, did generally believe the rewards and punishments of the future life; and these temporal judgments, as they did frequently cut men off from this life, so they transmitted them into that future and endless life; it is not strange if their guilty consciences made them dread both the present judgment here, and the terrible consequences of it hereafter. Heb. who shall dwell for us, &c., i. e. in our stead? who will interpose himself between God's anger and us? How shall we escape these miseries? That this is the sense of this question may be gathered from the answer given to it in the following verse; in which he directs them to the right course of removing God's wrath, and regaining his favour.

15 He that [n]walketh †righteously, and speaketh †uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of ‖oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of †blood, and [o]shutteth his eyes from seeing evil;

n Ps. 15. 2. & 24. 4. † Heb. in righteousnesses. † Heb. uprightnesses. ‖ Or, deceits. † Heb. bloods. o Ps. 119. 37.

He that walketh righteously; who is just in all his dealings with men, of which the following clauses explain it: which is not spoken exclusively, as if piety towards God were not as necessary as righteousness towards men; but comprehensively, this being one evidence and a constant companion of piety. Speaketh uprightly; who speaks truly and sincerely, what he really intends. That despiseth; that refuseth it, not for politic reasons, as men sometimes may do, but from a contempt and abhorrency of injustice. From holding; or, from taking or receiving; as this verb signifies, Prov. iv. 4; v. 5; xxviii. 17. That will not receive, much less retain, bribes. That stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood; who will not hearken or assent to any counsels or courses tending to shed innocent blood. And shutteth his eyes from seeing evil; that abhorreth the very sight of sin committed by others, and guardeth his eyes from beholding occasions of sin; of which see on Job xxxi. 1.

† Heb. heights, or, high places.

16 He shall dwell on †high: his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks: bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure.

He shall dwell on high; out of the reach of danger. Bread shall be given him, his waters shall be sure; God will furnish him with all necessaries.

† Heb. the land of far distances.

17 Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty: they shall behold †the land that is very far off.

Shall see the king; first Hezekiah, and then Christ, as before. In his beauty; triumphing over all enemies, and ruling his own people with righteousness; in which two things the beauty and glory of a king and kingdom doth chiefly consist. They shall behold the land that is very far off; thou shalt not be shut up in Jerusalem, and confined to thine own narrow borders, as thou hast been; but thou shalt have free liberty to go abroad with honour and safety, where thou pleasest, even into the remotest countries, because of the great renown of thy king, and the enlargement of his dominions.

p 1 Cor. 1. 20. † Heb., weigher.

18 Thine heart shall meditate terror. [p]Where is the scribe? where is the †receiver? where is he that counted the towers?

Thine heart shall meditate terror: this is either, 1. A premonition concerning a future judgment, as if he said, Before these glorious promises shall be accomplished, thou shalt be brought into great straits and troubles. Or rather, 2. A thankful acknowledgment of deliverance from a former danger; as if he had said, When thou art delivered, thou shalt, with pleasure and thankfulness, recall to mind thy former terrors and miseries. Where is the scribe, &c.? these words are either, 1. Words of gratulation, and insultation over the enemy. Thou shalt then say, Where are the great officers of the Assyrian host? They are no where, they are not, they are dead or slain. Or rather, 2. The words of men dismayed and confounded, such as proceeded from the Jews in the time of their distress, and are here remembered to aggravate the present mercy. For the officers here mentioned seem not to be those of the Assyrian army, who were actually fighting against the Jews and Jerusalem, (for then he would rather have mentioned the captains of the host, as the Scripture commonly doth in these cases, than the scribes and receivers, &c.,) but rather of the Jews in Jerusalem, who, upon the approach of Sennacherib, began to make military preparations for the defence of the city, and to choose such officers as were necessary and usual for that end; such as these were, to wit, the scribe, whom we call muster-master, who was to make and keep a list of the soldiers, and to call them together, as occasion required. The receiver; who received and laid out the money for the charges of the war; and he that counted the towers, who surveyed all the parts of the city, and considered what towers or fortifications were to be made or repaired for the security of the city. And unto these several officers the people resorted, with great distraction and confusion, to acquaint them with all occurrences, or to quicken them to their several works, or to transact matters with them, as occasion required.

Thou shalt not see a fierce people: as Moses said of the Egyptians, Exod. xiv. 13, so I say of the Assyrians, that fierce and warlike people, whom thou hast seen, with great terror, near the walls of Jerusalem, Thou shalt see them again no more. A people of a deeper speech than thou canst perceive; a foreign nation, whose language is abstruse and unknown to thee. Of a stammering tongue; of which see on Isa. xxviii. 11.

Look upon Zion; contemplate Zion's beauty and safety, and her glorious and peculiar privileges; it is an object worthy of thy deepest meditation. The city of our solemnities: this he mentions, as the chief part of Zion's glory and happiness, that God was solemnly worshipped, and the solemn assemblies and feasts kept in her. A quiet habitation, &c.; which was but very obscurely and imperfectly fulfilled in the literal Zion; but was clearly and fully accomplished in the mystical Zion, the church of God in the times of the gospel, against which, we are assured, that the gates of hell shall not prevail, Matt. xvi. 18.

† Heb. broad of spaces, or, hands.

21 But there the glorious LORD will be unto us a place †of broad rivers and streams; wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby.

There, in and about Zion, the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams: though we have nothing but a small and contemptible brook to defend us; yet God will be as sure and strong a defence to us, as if we were surrounded with such great rivers as Nilus or Euphrates, which were a great security to Egypt and Babylon. Wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby; but although they shall have from God the security of a great river, yet they shall be freed from the disadvantage of it; which is, that the enemies may come against them in ships; for no galleys nor ships of the enemy's shall be able to come into this river to annoy them.

‖ Or, They have forsaken thy tacklings.

23 ‖Thy tacklings are loosed; they could not well strengthen their mast, they could not spread the sail: then is the prey of a great spoil divided; the lame take the prey.

Thy tacklings are loosed; he directeth his speech to the Assyrians; and having tacitly designed their army under the notion of a gallant ship, ver. 21, he here represents their broken and undone condition by the metaphor of a ship tossed in a tempestuous sea, having her cables broken, and all her tacklings loose, and out of order, so as she could have no benefit of her masts and sails; and therefore is quickly broken or swallowed up by the sea. They; the Assyrians, of whom he still speaks, as in the first clause he spake to them. Then is the prey of a great spoil divided; the lame take the prey; they who came to spoil and prey upon my people shall become a prey to them, and shall be forced to flee away so suddenly, that they shall leave so many spoils behind them, that when strong and active men have carried away all that they desired, there shall be enough left for the lame, who come last to the spoil. The general sense of the place is, that God's people shall be victorious over all their enemies.

a Jer. 50. 20.

24 And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: [a]the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity.

The inhabitant, to wit, of Jerusalem, God's people, shall not say, I am sick; shall have no cause to complain of any sickness or calamity; shall be fully delivered from all their enemies and evil occurrents; shall enjoy perfect tranquillity and prosperity. The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity: this may be added, either, 1. As the reason of the foregoing privilege. Their sins, the main causes of all their distresses, shall be pardoned; and therefore their sufferings, the effects of sin, shall cease. Or, 2. As an additional favour. They shall not only receive from me a glorious temporal deliverance; but, which is infinitely better, the pardon of all their sins, and all those spiritual and everlasting blessings which attend upon that mercy.

All the trees and fruits, and other productions of it; for it is usual with the prophets, by a figure, to turn their speech to these senseless creatures. Or, 2. All the inhabitants of the world, as the Chaldee and other ancients restrain and understand this general expression; which also is emphatical, and admonisheth the proud and insolent sons of men of their mean and obscure original, that how great and glorious soever they may seem to themselves or others, yet in truth they are but a better sort of mushrooms springing out of the earth; for dust they are, and unto dust they must return, as was said, Gen. iii. 19.

2 For the indignation of the LORD is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them, he hath delivered them to the slaughter.

Upon all nations; not only upon the Assyrians, and those nations which were confederate with them in this expedition, but upon all other enemies of my people whatsoever. He hath utterly destroyed them; he will infallibly destroy all of them.

All the host of heaven; the sun, and moon, and stars, which frequently come under this name in Scripture, as Deut. iv. 19; xvii. 3, and elsewhere. Shall be dissolved; shall seem to be dissolved. So great shall be the confusion and consternation of mankind, as if all the frame of the creation were broken into pieces. Some understand this of the general judgment; which some passages here following will not permit. But it is a very usual thing for prophetical writers, both in the Old and New Testament, to represent great and general calamities in such words and phrases as properly agree to the day of judgment; as, on the contrary, the glorious deliverances of God's people are set forth in such expressions as properly agree to the resurrection from the dead. See Ezek. xxxvii. 7; Joel ii. 31; iii. 15; Rev. vi. 12, 13. The heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, Heb. as a book; for books were then written in scrolls, which they usually rolled up together; and when they were so, no man could read any word in it; and no more shall any man be able to see those goodly lights of heaven, for they shall all be obscured and confounded. This phrase is used also Isa. viii. 1; Rev. vi. 14. As the leaf that falleth off from the vine, when it is withered. As a falling fig; which falleth, either through great maturity, or being thrust out by green figs coming forth, or by any other accident.

h Jer. 46. 10. i Jer. 49. 7, &c. Mal. 1. 4.

5 For [h]my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold, it [i]shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment.

Shall be bathed in the blood of these people; Heb. is or shall be made drunk. In heaven; either, 1. In my church, which is called heaven, Dan. viii. 10; Rev. iv. 1; xii. 1, in and against which these enemies are said to be gathered together. Or, 2. In the highest heaven, where God dwells; in which this is said to be done, because it was there decreed and appointed to be done. Upon Idumea; upon the Edomites, who, though they were nearly related to the Israelites, and were circumcised as well as they; yet were their most inveterate and implacable enemies, watching all opportunities, and being ready to join with all those that attempted, to destroy them; whereof we have many intimations and instances in Scripture. But these are not named exclusively, but rather comprehensively, and synecdochically, for all the enemies of God's church, of whom they were a considerable part, and an eminent type. Upon the people of my curse; to whom my curse belongs; or, whom I have cursed, and devoted to utter destruction, as this Hebrew word properly signifies.

k ch. 63. 1. Jer. 49. 13. Zeph. 1. 7.

6 The sword of the LORD is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for [k]the LORD hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.

Is filled with blood; shall drink its fill of blood. The metaphor is here taken from a great glutton or drunkard, who is almost insatiable with meat and drink. With the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: by lambs, and goats, and rams, he means people of all ranks and conditions, high and low, rich and poor. A sacrifice; so he calleth this bloody work, because it was done by God's command, and for his honour; and therefore was a service acceptable to him. Bozrah; a chief city of Edom, Isa. lxiii. 1; Jer. xlix. 13, and a type of those cities which should be most opposite and mischievous to God's people.

‖ Or, rhinocerots. ‖ Or, drunken.

7 And the ‖ unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be ‖ soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness.

The unicorns, Heb. the reemim. But what kind of beast this is, whether that beast which is commonly called an unicorn, which seems to be but a fiction in the judgment of the learned, or a rhinoceros, or a wild ox or bull, it is needless to trouble the ordinary reader about it; and the learned may consult my Latin Synopsis upon Numb. xxiii. 22 about it. It is confessed that it was a beast of great strength and fierceness; and it is certain that it is metaphorically used in this place, to signify their princes and potentates. Shall come down; shall be humbled and cast down. The LXX. and Syriac render it, they shall fall down, as such beasts do when they have received a deadly blow. With them; with the lambs, and goats, and rams, last mentioned, ver. 6. With fatness; with the fat of the slain sacrifices, which shall be mingled with it.

and the stones of emptiness.

The cormorant and the bittern shall possess it, the owl also and the raven shall dwell in it; the inhabitants shall be wholly cut off, and it shall be entirely possessed by those creatures which delight in deserts and waste places. See the same or like expressions in the like case, Isa. xiii. 21, 22; xiv. 23. He shall stretch out upon it the line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness; he shall use the line, or the stone or plummet joined to it, not to build them, but to mark them out to desolation and destruction, as workmen commonly use them to mark what they are to pull down.

12 They shall call the nobles thereof to the

They shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom, but none shall be there; they shall endeavour to heal their breaches, but in vain; the remnant of the people shall seek for any fit person, and offer the kingdom to him; but they shall not find any such who shall be willing to undertake the government. Shall be nothing; either shall be lost and cut off, or shall have no courage or strength left in them.

The satyr shall cry to his fellow: see on Isa. xiii. 21, 22. The screech owl also shall rest there, because there shall be no men left to disturb or affright them, Isa. xvii. 2.

15 There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow:
there shall the vultures also be gathered, every one with her mate.

The great owl; whether this or what other creature is meant by this Hebrew word, the learned reader may find largely discoursed in my Latin Synopsis upon this place; for others, it may suffice to know, what all agree in, that, whether it be a bird or a serpent, it is a creature that lives in desert places. Make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow, as fearing no disturbance from any men.

16 ¶ Seek ye out of [t] the book of the t Mal. 3. 16. LORD, and read: no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate: for my mouth it hath commanded, and his spirit it hath gathered them.

Seek ye out of the book of the Lord, and read; when this judgment is executed, if you peruse this book of holy writ, and particularly this prophecy of mine, you will find that all things shall exactly come to pass as I have told you. No one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate: as I have said, that the vultures should each have their mate, so shall it be; and this prophecy shall be exactly fulfilled, even in its smallest circumstances. His Spirit; my Spirit; such sudden changes of persons being frequent here. And God's Spirit may be put for his might and power, as it is in many places of Scripture. Hath gathered them; hath brought all these creatures together, as he formerly brought the creatures to Adam and to Noah, by an instinct which he put into them.

17 And he hath cast the lot for them, and his hand hath divided it unto them by line: they shall possess it for ever, from generation to generation shall they dwell therein.

He hath divided the land to them, as it were, by lot and line, as Canaan was divided among the Israelites.

CHAP. XXXV.

The joyful flourishing of Christ's kingdom, 1, 2. The weak he strengthens and comforts, 3, 4. His miracles, 5, 6. The prosperity and peace of his people, 7—10.

THE [a] wilderness and the solitary place cir. 713. a ch. 55. 12. shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose.

And as the land of God's enemies, which was exceeding fruitful, shall be turned into a desolate wilderness, as was declared in the foregoing chapter; so, on the contrary, Emmanuel's land, or the seat of God's church and people, which formerly was deserted and despised like a wilderness, and which the rage and malice of their enemies had brought to desolation, shall flourish exceedingly. For them; for the wilderness and solitary place; or, for these things, which were prophesied in the foregoing destruction, concerning the ruin of the implacable enemies of God and his church. But that Hebrew letter which is in the end of this Hebrew verb, and is here rendered for them, is by all the ancient translators, and by divers others, neglected in their translations, as if it were only added to the verb paragogically, as grammarians speak; and therefore those two words may well be omitted.

2 [b] It shall blossom abundantly, and reb ch. 32. 15. joice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the LORD, and the excellency of our God.

The glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; the wilderness shall be as pleasant and fruitful as Lebanon, and Carmel, and Sharon; which were eminent parts of the land of Canaan, as hath been oft noted. They, who are understood by the wilderness, shall see the glory of the Lord; the glorious discoveries and effects of God's power and goodness to his people.

3 ¶ [c] Strengthen ye the weak hands, c Job 4. 3, 4. Heb. 12. 12. and confirm the feeble knees.

Ye prophets and ministers of God, comfort and encourage God's people, who are now ready to faint, with hopes and assurance of that salvation which, in due time, I will work for them. He mentions hands and knees, because the strength and weakness of any man eminently appears in those parts.

† Heb. hasty.

4 Say to them that are of a †fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompence; he will come and save you.

Your God will come; though he seem to be absent, and departed from you, he will come to you, and abide with you. He will shortly come in the flesh. For although this and the following promises may be metaphorically taken, concerning the temporal deliverance of his people from Babylonian and other oppressors; yet they are much more emphatically and literally understood concerning the redemption of God's people by Jesus Christ, as is sufficiently manifest, both from the words and phrases themselves, and from divers places of the New Testament, where they are so expounded by Christ and the apostles. With vengeance; to execute vengeance upon the enemies of God, and of his people; which also was verified in Christ, who was set for the fall as well as for the rising of many in Israel, Luke ii. 34, and who did accordingly inflict most dreadful judgments, both temporal and spiritual, upon the unbelieving and apostate Jews, who were the great persecutors of Christ and of his people.

5 Then the [d]eyes of the blind shall be opened, and [e]the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped.

The most ignorant and stupid creatures shall be forced to acknowledge the wonderful works of God. Or rather thus, The poor Gentiles, who before were blind and deaf, shall now have the eyes and ears of their minds opened to see God's works, and to hear and receive his word. And in token hereof, many persons who are corporally blind and deaf shall have sight miraculously conferred upon them; all which being so fully and literally accomplished in Christ, and applied by Christ to himself, it is a plain proof that this prophecy belongs to the times of the gospel.

6 Then shall the [f]lame man leap as an hart, and the [g]tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall [h]waters break out, and streams in the desert.

Then shall the lame man leap for joy, or go nimbly and readily. And this clause also, and that which follows, are to be understood both spiritually and literally, as in the former verse. In the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert; the most dry and barren places shall be made moist and fruitful; which is principally meant of the plentiful effusion of God's grace upon such persons and nations as had been wholly destitute of it.

7 And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in [i]the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be ‖ grass with reeds and rushes.

i ch. 34. 13. ‖ Or, a court for reeds, &c.

Those dry and parched deserts, in which dragons have their abode, shall yield abundance of grass, and reeds, and rushes, which grow only in moist grounds, Job viii. 11.

k ch. 52. 1. Joel 3. 17. Rev. 21. 27. ‖ Or, for he shall be with them.

8 And an highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called The way of holiness; [k]the unclean shall not pass over it; ‖ but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.

An highway shall be there, and a way: the highway and the way are not to be taken for two different ways, but for one and the same way, even a causey or cast-way, which is both raised ground, as the first Hebrew word signifies, and a way; both signifying a convenient, prepared, plain, and common road or path for travellers, such as the doctrine of the gospel is, which is frequently compared to a way, both in the Old and New Testament, as hath been often observed. It shall be called the way of holiness; it shall be a holy way, trodden by holy men, and filled with holy practices. The people (walking in it) shall be all (i. e. a very great number of them, not so few as in the times of the law) righteous, as is declared and prophesied afterward, Isa. lx. 21. The unclean shall not pass over it, either to disturb or defile it. Unclean persons shall, in a good measure, be kept or cast out of my church, by the strict exercise of good discipline, here, and hereafter not one unclean person shall enter into my kingdom. It shall be for those; but this way shall be appropriated unto those persons above mentioned, the weak, and blind, and lame, whom God will heal and save, ver. 3—6. The pronoun relative is put without an antecedent, as it is in many other places. But this, and the following clause, is, and may well be, rendered otherwise, and he (to wit, God, who is oft designed by this pronoun, and is easily understood out of the context) shall be to or with them walking in the way, (their companion and guide in their way, which is a great felicity,) that fools may not err therein. The way-faring men, though fools, shall not err therein; the way shall be so plain and straight, that even the most foolish travellers (who are described by this character, that they know not the way to the city, Eccles. x. 15) cannot easily mistake it.

1 Lev. 26. 6. ch. 11. 9. Ezek. 34. 25.

9 [l]No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there:

It shall not only be a plain, but a safe way, free from all annoyance or danger from mischievous creatures. This is the same promise, for substance, with that Isa. xi. 9, They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain.

m ch. 51. 11.

10 And the [m]ransomed of the LORD shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and [n]sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

n ch. 25. 8. & 65. 19. Rev. 7. 17 & 21. 4.

The ransomed of the Lord; they whom God shall rescue and redeem from their corporal slavery in Babylon, and especially from their spiritual bondage under sin and Satan. Shall return, and come to Zion; shall come again to Zion, from whence they had been carried away captive. Or, shall return, to wit, to the Lord now mentioned, and come to Zion, i. e. join themselves to God's church and people. Sorrow and sighing shall flee away; which expressions are too magnificent and emphatical to be satisfied by the return of the Jews from Babylon to their own land, which was accompanied and followed with many sighs and sorrows, as appears, both from sacred and other historians; and therefore must necessarily be understood of gospel times, and of the joy and happiness purchased by Christ for his people, begun here, and continued to all eternity.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Sennacherib invadeth Judah, 1. He sendeth Rabshakeh, who by his blasphemous persuasions tempteth Hezekiah to despair, and the people to revolt, 2—22.

713. a 2 Kings 18. 13, 17. 2 Chr. 32. 1.

NOW [a]it came to pass in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, that Sennacherib king of Assyria came up against all the defenced cities of Judah, and took them.

710.

2 And the king of Assyria sent Rabshakeh from Lachish to Jerusalem unto king Hezekiah with a great army. And he stood by the conduit of the upper pool in the highway of the fuller's field.

3 Then came forth unto him Eliakim, Hilkiah's son, which was over the house, and Shebna the ‖ scribe, and Joah, Asaph's son, the recorder.

‖ Or, secretary.

b 2 Kings 18. 19, &c.

4 ¶ [b]And Rabshakeh said unto them, Say ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

5 I say, sayest thou, (but they are but †vain words) ‖ I have counsel and strength for war: now on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

† Heb. a word of lips. ‖ Or, but counsel and strength are for the war.

6 Lo, thou trustest in the [c]staff of this broken reed, on Egypt; whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that trust in him.

c Ezek. 29. 6, 7.

7 But if thou say to me, We trust in the LORD our God: is it not he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar?

8 Now therefore give ‖pledges, I pray thee, to my master the king of Assyria, and I will give thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

‖ Or, hostages.

9 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

10 And am I now come up without the LORD against this land to destroy it? the LORD said unto me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

11 ¶ Then said Eliakim and Shebna and Joah unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and speak not to us in the Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

12 ¶ But Rabshakeh said, Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

13 Then Rabshakeh stood, and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of Assyria.

14 Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you.

15 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

16 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, ‖†Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me: [d]and eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern;

‖ Or, Seek my favour by a present. † Heb. Make with me a blessing.

d Zech. 3. 10.

17 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards.

18 Beware lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The LORD will deliver us. Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

19 Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim? and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?

20 Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

21 But they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

22 ¶ Then came Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah, that was over the houshold, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah, the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh.

The history related here, and in the three following chapters, is, for the substance of it, and almost wholly in the same words, contained 2 Kings xviii., xix., xx. It is fitly inserted here, to explain and confirm some of the foregoing predictions. It may seem to have been first written by this prophet, and from him to have been taken into the Book of Kings, to complete that history.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Hezekiah mourneth, and sendeth to Isaiah to pray for them, 1—5. He comforteth them, 6, 7. Sennacherib, called away against the king of the Ethiopians, sendeth a blasphemous letter to Hezekiah, 8—13. His prayer, 14—20. Isaiah's prophecy, 21—35. An angel slayeth the Assyrians, 36. Sennacherib is slain at Nineveh by his own sons, 37, 38.

AND [a]it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the LORD.

a 2 Kings 19. 1, &c.

2 And he sent Eliakim, who was over the houshold, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests covered with sackcloth, unto Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of ‖blasphemy: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.

‖ Or, provocation.

4 It may be the LORD thy God will hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God, and will reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is †left.

† Heb. found.

5 So the servants of Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say unto your master, Thus saith the LORD, Be not afraid of the words that thou hast heard, wherewith the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will ‖send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

‖ Or, put a spirit into him.

8 ¶ So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And he heard say concerning Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, He is come forth to make war with thee. And when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God, in whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands by destroying them utterly; and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden which were in Telassar?

b Jer. 49. 23. 13 Where is the king of [b]Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah?

14 ¶ And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up unto the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah prayed unto the LORD, saying,

16 O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth: thou hast made heaven and earth.

c Dan. 9. 18. 17 [c]Incline thine ear, O LORD, and hear; open thine eyes, O LORD, and see: and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of As-

20 Now therefore, O LORD our God, save us from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD, even thou only.

21 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent unto Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria:

22 This is the word which the LORD hath spoken concerning him; The virgin, the daughter of Zion, hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

23 Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the Holy One of Israel.

d ch. 30. 28. Ezek. 38. 4. 29 Because thy rage against me, and thy tumult, is come up into mine ears, therefore [d]will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

30 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such as groweth of itself; and the second year that which springeth of the same: and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruit thereof.

† Heb. the escaping of the house of Judah that remaineth. 31 And †the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward:

† Heb. the escaping. e 2 Kings 19. 31. ch. 9. 7. 32 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and †they that escape out of mount Zion: the [e]zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.

33 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with †shields, † Heb. shield. nor cast a bank against it.

34 By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the LORD.

f 2 Kings 20. 6. ch. 38. 6. 35 For I will [f]defend this city to save it for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

37 ¶ So Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

38 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword; and they escaped into the land of †Armenia: and † Heb. Ararat. Esar-haddon his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Hezekiah in his sickness receiveth from Isaiah a message of death, 1. By prayer, 2, 3, hath his life lengthened: the sun goeth backward for a sign thereof, 4—8. His song of praise to God, 9—20.

713. a 2 Kings 20. 1, &c. 2 Chron. 32. IN [a]those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, [b]†Set thine house in order: for thou shalt die, and not live.

b 2 Sam. 17. 23. 1 Mac. 9. 55. † Heb. Give charge concerning thy house.

2 Then Hezekiah turned his face toward the wall, and prayed unto the LORD,

3 And said, [c]Remember now, O LORD, I beseech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept †sore.

c Neh. 13. 14.

† Heb. with great weeping.

4 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD to Isaiah, saying,

5 Go, and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears: behold, I will add unto thy days fifteen years.

6 And I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria: and [d]I will defend this city.

d ch. 37. 35.

7 And this shall be [e]a sign unto thee from the LORD, that the LORD will do this thing that he hath spoken;

e 2 Kings 20. 8, &c. ch. 7. 11.

8 Behold, I will bring again the shadow of the degrees, which is gone down in the †sun dial of Ahaz, ten degrees backward. So the sun returned ten degrees, by which degrees it was gone down.

† Heb. degrees by, or, with the sun.

9 ¶ The writing of Hezekiah king of Judah, when he had been sick, and was recovered of his sickness:

Hezekiah was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost, and inspired by him to write this, both as a testimony of his own gratitude to God, and for the instruction of after-ages.

10 I said in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave: I am deprived of the residue of my years.

I said, to and within myself, I concluded it. In the cutting off of my days; when my days were cut off by the sentence of God, related here, ver. 1. I shall go to the gates of the grave; I perceive that I must die without any hopes of prevention. The grave is called a man's long home, Eccles. xii. 5, and the house appointed for all living men, Job xxx. 23, and death opens the gates of this house. We read also of the gates of death, Psal. ix. 13; cvii. 18. I am deprived of the residue of my years; which I might have lived, according to the common course of nature, and of God's dispensations; and which I expected and hoped to live, for the service of God and of my generation.

11 I said, I shall not see the LORD, even the LORD, [f]in the land of the living: I shall behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world.

f Ps. 27. 13. & 116. 9.

I shall not see the Lord; I shall not enjoy him; for seeing is put for enjoying, as hath been frequently noted. In the land of the living; in this world, which is so called, Psal. xxvii. 13; cxvi. 9; Isa. liii. 8; in his sanctuary: which limitation is prudently added, to intimate that he expected to see God in another place and manner, even in heaven, face to face. I shall behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world; I shall have no more society with men upon earth.

12 [g]Mine age is departed, and is removed from me as a shepherd's tent: I have cut off like a weaver my life: he will cut me off ‖with pining sickness: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

g Job 7. 6.

‖ Or, from the thrum.

Mine age is departed; the time of my life is expired. As a shepherd's tent, which is easily and speedily removed. I have cut off, to wit, by my sins, provoking God to do it. Or, I do declare, and have concluded, that my life is or will be suddenly cut off; for men are oft said in Scripture to do those things which they only declare and pronounce to be done; as men are said to pollute, and to remit and retain sins, and the like, when they only declare men and things to be polluted, and sins to be remitted or retained by God. Like a weaver, who cutteth off the web from the loom, either when it is finished, or before, according to his pleasure. He; the Lord, who pronounced this sentence against him. With pining sickness; with a consuming disease, wasting my spirits and life. Some render this word, from the thrum; from those threads at the end of the web, which are fastened to the beam. So the similitude of a weaver is continued. From day even to night wilt thou make an end of me: the sense is either, 1. This sickness will kill me in the space of one day. Or rather, 2. Thou dost pursue me night and day with continual pains, and wilt not desist till thou hast made a full end of me; so that I expect that every day will be my last day.

13 I reckoned till morning, that, as a lion, so will he break all my bones: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

When I was filled with pain, and could not rest all the night long, even till morning, my thoughts were working and presaging that God would instantly break me to pieces, and that every moment would be my last; and the like restless and dismal thoughts followed me from morning till evening. But he mentions only the time before morning, to aggravate his misery, that he was so grievously tormented, when others had sweet rest and repose.

14 Like a crane or a swallow, so did I chatter: [h]I did mourn as a dove: mine eyes fail with looking upward: O LORD, I am oppressed; ‖undertake for me.

h ch. 59. 11.

‖ Or, ease me.

Like a crane or a swallow; or, a crane and a swallow; the conjunction and being here, as it is Hab. iii. 11, and elsewhere, understood, as is manifest from Jer. viii. 7, where it is expressed with these very words. So did I chatter; my complaint and cry was like to the noise of a swallow, quick and frequent; and like that of a crane, loud and frightful. And this very comparison is used of mourners, not only in Scripture, but in other authors; concerning which the learned reader may consult my Latin Synopsis. I did mourn as a dove; whose mournful tone is observed Isa. lix. 11; Ezek. vii. 16, and elsewhere. Mine eyes fail with looking upward; whilst I lift up mine eyes and heart to God for relief, but in vain. I am oppressed by my disease, which like a serjeant hath seized upon me, and is haling me to the prison of the grave. Undertake for me; stop the execution, and rescue me out of his hands.

15 What shall I say? he hath both spoken unto me, and himself hath done it: I shall go softly all my years [i]in the bitterness of my soul.

i Job 7. 11. & 10. 1.

What shall I say? I want words sufficient to express my deep sense of God's dealings with me. He hath both spoken unto me, and himself hath done it; he did foretell it by his word, and effect it by his hand. This clause and verse is either, 1. A continuance of his complaint hitherto described: God hath passed this sentence upon me, and hath also put it in execution, and to him I must submit myself. Or, 2. A transition or entrance into the thanksgiving, which is undoubtedly contained in the following verses. So the sense is, God hath sent a gracious message to me by his prophet, concerning the prolongation of my life; and he, I doubt not, will make good his word therein. And this sense seems the more probable, 1. Because here is mention of his years to come, whereas in his sickness he expected not to live to the end of a day. 2. Because the Chaldee paraphrast, and the LXX., and Syriac, and Arabic interpreters expound it so in their versions. 3. Because this suits best with the context and coherence of this verse, both with the former and with the following verse. For as he endeth the foregoing verse with a prayer to God for longer life, so in this verse he relates God's gracious answer to his prayer. And if this verse be thus understood, the next verse hath a very convenient connexion with this; whereas it seems to be very abrupt and incoherent, if the thanksgiving begin there. I shall go softly; I shall walk in the course of my life, either, 1. Humbly, with all humble thankfulness to God for conferring so great a favour upon so unworthy a person; or, 2. Easily and peaceably, with leisure, not like one affrighted, or running away from his enemy; or, 3. By slow and gentle paces, as men commonly spin out their days by degrees unto a just length, which is not unfitly opposed to his former state and time of sickness, wherein his days were swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and than a post, as Job complained upon the same occasion, Job vii. 6; ix. 25, and were cut off like a weaver's web, as he complained, ver. 12. In the bitterness of my soul; arising from the remembrance of that desperate condition from which God had delivered me; for great dangers, though past, are ofttimes very terrible to those that reflect upon them. But the words may be rendered, upon or after (as this particle is rendered, Isa. xviii. 4) the bitterness of my soul; after the deliverance from this bitter and dangerous disease; which may be compared with ver. 17, where he saith, for or after peace I had great bitterness, as here he presageth and assureth himself of the contrary, that he should have peace after his great bitterness. The Chaldee paraphrast renders the words, because of my deliverance from bitterness of soul; bitterness being put for deliverance from bitterness, as five is put for lack of five, as we render it, Gen. xviii. 28, and fat for want of fat, Psal. cix. 24, and fruits for want of fruits, Lam. iv. 9. And other such-like defects there are in the Hebrew, which is a very concise language.

16 O Lord, by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit: so wilt thou recover me, and make me to live.

By these things; by virtue of thy gracious word or promise, and powerful work; by thy promises, and thy performances of them, mentioned in the foregoing verse. This place may be explained by comparing it with Deut. viii. 3, Man doth not live by bread, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord. The sense is, Not I only, but all men, do receive, and recover, and hold their lives by thy favour, and the word of thy power; and therefore it is not strange that one word of God hath brought me back from the very jaws of death. In all these things is the life of my spirit; and as it is with other men, so hath it been with me in a special manner; for in these above all other things is the life of my spirit or soul, i. e. either the comfort (which is sometimes called life) of my spirit; or rather, that life which is in my body, from my spirit or soul united to it. So wilt thou recover me, and make me to live; or, and or for thou hast recovered me, &c., to wit, by these things.

‖ Or, on my peace came great bitterness. † Heb. thou hast loved my soul from the pit.

17 Behold, ‖for peace I had great bitterness: but †thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.

For peace I had great bitterness; my health and prosperity was quickly changed into bitter sickness and affliction. Or, as others render it, my great bitterness was unto peace; was turned into prosperity, or became the occasion of my safety and further advantages; for that drove me to my prayers, and prayers prevailed with God for a gracious answer, and the prolonging of my life. In love to my soul; in kindness to me, the soul being oft put for the man. This is an emphatical circumstance; for sometimes God prolongs men's days in anger, and in order to their greater misery. Thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back; thou hast forgiven those sins which brought this evil upon me, and upon that account hast removed the punishment of them; which showeth that thou didst this in love to me. The phrase is borrowed from the custom of men, who when they would accurately see and observe any thing, set it before their faces; and when they desire and resolve not to look upon any thing, turn their backs upon it, or cast it behind them.

k Ps. 6. 5. & 30. 9. & 88. 11. & 115. 17. Eccles. 9. 10.

18 For [k]the grave cannot praise thee, death can not celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth.

In this and the following verse, he declares God's design in delivering him, that he might praise him in his church, which if he had died he could not have done. The grave cannot praise thee; the dead are not capaple of glorifying thy name among men upon earth; which I desire and determine to do. See the like expressions, Psal. vi. 5; xxx. 9; lxxxviii. 10, &c. The grave is put for the persons lodged in it by a metonymy. Cannot hope for thy truth; they cannot expect nor receive the accomplishment of thy promised goodness in the land of the living.

19 The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day: [l]the father to the children shall make known thy truth.

l Deut. 4. 9. & 6. 7. Ps. 78. 3, 4.

He shall praise thee; they are especially obliged to it, and they only have this privilege. The father to the children shall make known thy truth; they shall not only praise thee whilst they live, but take care to propagate and perpetuate thy praise and glory to all succeeding generations.

20 The LORD was ready to save me: therefore we will sing my songs to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the LORD.

Was ready to save me; was a present help to me, ready to hear and succour me upon my prayer in my great extremity. We; both I and my people, who are concerned in me, and for me will sing forth those songs of praise which are due especially from me, for God's great mercy to me. Will sing my songs to the stringed instruments, according to the custom of those times.

21 For [m]Isaiah had said, Let them take a lump of figs, and lay it for a plaister upon the boil, and he shall recover.

m 2 Kings 20. 7.

This was rather a sign appointed by God, than a natural means of the cure; for if it had a natural faculty to ripen a sore, yet it could never cure such a dangerous and pestilential disease, at least in so little time.

22 [n]Hezekiah also had said, What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the LORD?

n 2 Kings 20. 8.

Hezekiah also had said; or, For Hezekiah had said; had asked a sign, which is here added as the reason why Isaiah said what is related in the foregoing verse, to wit, in answer to Hezekiah's question. That I shall go up, within three days, as is more fully related, 2 Kings xx. 5, 8, to the house of the Lord; for thither he designed in the first place to go, partly that he might pay his vow and thanksgiving to God, and partly that he might engage the people to praise God with him, and for him.

CHAP. XXXIX.

The king of Babel sendeth ambassadors with letters and a present to Hezekiah; who showeth them all his treasures, 1, 2. Isaiah foretelleth him of the Babylonish captivity, 3—7. His resignation, 8.

AT [a]that time Merodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present to Hezekiah: for he had heard that he had been sick, and was recovered. cir. 712. a 2 Kings 20. 12, &c.

2 [b]And Hezekiah was glad of them, and shewed them the house of his ‖precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his ‖†armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah shewed them not. b 2 Chron. 32. 31. ‖ Or, spicery. ‖ Or, jewels. † Heb. vessels, or, instruments.

3 ¶ Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from a far country unto me, even from Babylon. 713.

4 Then said he, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All that is in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

5 Then said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD of hosts:

e Jer. 20. 5. 6 Behold, the days come, [e]that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store until this day, shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

7 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and ‖they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

‖ Fulfilled, Dan. 1. 2, 3, 7.

d 1 Sam. 3. 18. 8 Then said Hezekiah to Isaiah, [d]Good is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken. He said moreover, For there shall be peace and truth in my days.

The history contained in this chapter is related in the same words, 2 Kings xx. 12, &c., only he who here is called Merodach is there called Berodach, merely by the change of one letter, which is very usual in the Hebrew language, especially in proper names, as Dimon is put for Dibon, Isa. xv. 9, and the same man is called Nebuchadnezzar and Nebuchadrezzar. This king is called Merodach from the idol so called, Jer. l. 2, and Baladan from his father's name. But whether this man was an Assyrian, or a Mede, or a Babylonian, it is not easy to determine, nor worth while to inquire. But this is certain, that about this time there were wars between the Assyrians and the Babylonians, the issue whereof was, that the latter subdued the former.

CHAP. XL.

The prophet having now foretold the Babylonish captivity, chap. xxxix. 6, 7, doth here arm his people against it by the consideration of their certain deliverance out of it, and their blessed condition after it, as in other things, so especially in the coming of the Messiah, and the great and glorious privileges conferred upon God's church and people in his days.

The preaching of the gospel by John Baptist and the apostles, 1—11. The power and wisdom of God in governing the world, 12—17. The folly of idolatry, 18—26. God knoweth the state of his people, and both can and will protect them, 27—31.

cir. 712. COMFORT ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God.

Ye prophets and ministers of the Lord, which now are, or hereafter shall be, deliver this comfortable message from me to my people, that they may not sink under their burdens.

+ Heb. to the heart. ‖ Or, appointed time. 2 Speak ye +comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her ‖warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: [a]for she hath received of the LORD'S hand double for all her sins.

a See Job 42. 10. ch. 61. 7.

Cry unto her; proclaim it in my name. Her warfare; the time of her servitude, and captivity, and misery. Her iniquity is pardoned; I am reconciled to her; I will not impute sin to her, to punish her any longer for it. Double for all her sins; not twice as much as her sins deserved, for she herself confessed the contrary, Ezra ix. 13; Lam. iii. 22; but abundantly enough to answer God's design in this chastisement, which was to humble and reform them, and to warn others by their example. Double is oft put for abundantly, as Isa. lxi. 7; Jer. xvi. 18; xvii. 18. God here speaks of himself after the manner of men, and compareth himself to a tender-hearted father, who when he hath corrected his child for his misdemeanour, relenteth and repenteth of his severity, and casteth his rod away.

b Matt. 3. 3. Mark 1. 3. Luke 3. 4. John 1. 23. c Mal. 3. 1. 3 ¶ [b]The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, [c]Prepare ye the way of the LORD, [d]make straight in the desert a highway for our God.

d Ps. 68. 4. ch. 49. 11.

The voice; an abrupt and imperfect speech, such as there are many in the Hebrew language. Methinks I hear a voice; or, a voice shall be heard. Of him that crieth in the wilderness; which words declare the place either, 1. Where the cry was made; or, 2. Where the way was to be prepared, as it is expressed in the following clause, which is added to explain this. And such places being commonly pathless, and many ways incommodious to passengers, it was the more necessary to prepare a way there. But both come to one thing, for the cry was to be in that place which was to be prepared. This place seems to be understood immediately of the deliverance of the Jews out of Babylon, and of smoothing their passage from thence to Judea, which lay through a great wilderness; but ultimately and principally concerning their redemption by the Messiah, whose coming is ushered in by the cry of John the Baptist, who did both cry and prepare the way in the wilderness, as we read, Matt. iii. 1, &c.; where this text is directly expounded of him. But withal the terms of wilderness and desert seem to be here chiefly used in a metaphorical sense, to express the desolate and forlorn condition of the Jewish nation, and especially of the Gentile world, when Christ came to redeem them; for so these words are frequently used in prophetical writings, as hath been noted in divers places. Prepare ye the way; you to whom this work belongs. He alludes to the custom of princes, who send pioneers before them to prepare the way through which they intend to pass. The meaning is only this, that God shall by his Spirit so dispose men's hearts, and by his providence so order the empires and affairs of the world, as to make way for the accomplishment of this promise. Of the Lord; for the Lord, as it is expounded in the next clause, that the Lord may walk in it; which though it may be understood of their coming out of Babylon, when God might in some sort be said to march in the head of them, conducting and preserving them, yet it was much more evidently and eminently fulfilled when Christ, who was and is God blessed for ever, came into the world in a visible manner. Straight; either direct, in opposition to crooked, or even and level, in opposition to the mountains and valleys mentioned in the next verse.

e ch. 45. 2. ‖ Or, a straight place. ‖ Or, a plain place. 4 Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: [e]and the crooked shall be made ‖straight, and the rough places ‖plain:

This is only a more particular explication of that which was generally expressed ver. 3. The sense is, All obstructions shall be removed, and the way made in all respects convenient and easy for the passenger.

5 And the glory of the LORD shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

The glory of the Lord shall be revealed: so it was in some sort, when God brought them out of Babylon, which was a glorious work of God; but far more properly and eminently when Christ, who was the glorious God, was manifested in the flesh, and gave much clearer and fuller discoveries of God's glorious wisdom, and holiness, and goodness, and other Divine perfections, than ever yet had been imparted to mankind and to the church. All flesh; all nations, both Jews and Gentiles. For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it; though this may seem incredible, yet God is able to accomplish it.

f Job 14. 2. Ps. 90. 5. & 102. 11. & 103. 15. Jam. 1. 10. 1 Pet. 1. 24. 6 The voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? [f]All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field:

The voice said: God speaks unto his prophets or ministers. He said, What shall I cry: the prophet desires to know God's mind, and his message. All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field: the prophet having foretold glorious and wonderful things which God had declared and determined to do, and suspecting that men would hardly believe them, he confirmeth their faith and the certainty of the thing in this and the two next verses, by representing to their minds the vast difference between the nature, and word, and work of men and of God. All that men are or have, yea, their highest accomplishments, are but like the grass or flower of the field, weak and vanishing, soon nipped and brought to nothing; but God's word is like himself, immutable and irresistible; and therefore as the mouth of the Lord, and not of man, hath spoken these things, as was said, ver. 5, so doubt not but they shall be fulfilled.

7 The grass withereth, the flower
g Ps. 103.16. fadeth: because [g]the spirit of the LORD bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass.

The Spirit of the Lord; or, the breath, &c., as this word is rendered, Psal. cxlvii. 18; the wind, as it frequently signifies, which hath this effect upon grass and flowers, Psal. ciii. 16; James i. 11. The people; the same which he called flesh, and said they were grass, ver. 6; which, that he might prove, in this verse he first declares the frail nature of grass and flowers, and then he applies this to the people. Or, this people; the Jews no less than the Gentiles; for here is an article in the Hebrew text, which is frequently emphatical and restrictive.

8 The grass withereth, the flower
h John 12. 34. 1 Pet. 1. 25. fadeth: but [h]the word of our God shall stand for ever.

Whatsoever God hath said shall infallibly come to pass.

‖ Or, O thou that tellest good tidings to Zion. ch. 41. 27. & 52. 7. ‖ Or, O thou that tellest good tidings to Jerusalem. 9 ¶ ‖O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; ‖O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!

O Zion, that bringest good tidings; O Zion, to whom the glad tidings of the coming of Christ into the world, and of the salvation of mankind by him, were first published by Christ and his apostles, and by whom they were published to all nations. But the words are otherwise rendered in the margin, and by others, O thou (whosoever thou art, prophet or apostle) that bringest good tidings to Zion. So Zion is not the deliverer, but the receiver, of these good tidings, as she is in the parallel place, Isa. lii. 7. But our translation seems to agree better with the Hebrew text, in which the particle unto is not here expressed, as it is in the latter part of the verse; by comparing which part with the former, it seems most probable that Zion or Jerusalem is the speaker or publisher, and the cities of Judah the hearers. Get thee up into the high mountain, that thy voice may be better heard, as appears from the next branch of the verse: see Judg. ix. 7; 1 Sam. xxvi. 13, 14. Be not afraid, lest thou shouldst be found a false prophet; for it shall certainly be fulfilled. Say unto the cities of Judah; to all my people in the several places of their abode, whether cities or countries. Only he names cities, to intimate that they also, though they should be destroyed, yet should afterwards be rebuilt, and inhabited again. Behold your God! take notice of this wonderful work and glorious appearance of your God, who will be visibly present with you, so that men may point at him, and say, Behold, here he is.

Or, against the strong. i ch. 59. 16. k ch. 62. 11. Rev. 22. 12. ‖ Or, recompence for his work. ch. 40. 4. 10 Behold, the Lord GOD will come ‖with strong hand, and [i]his arm shall rule for him: behold, [k]his reward is with him, and ‖his work before him.

With strong hand; with invincible strength, conquering all his enemies. The word hand or arm may very well be understood out of the following clause. His arm shall rule for him; he shall need no succours, for his own power shall be sufficient to govern his people, and to destroy his adversaries. His reward is with him; he comes furnished with recompences, as well of mercy and blessings for his friends and followers, as of justice and vengeance for his enemies. His work before him; he carrieth on his work or design effectually, so as none can hinder him; for that is said in Scripture to be before a man which is in his power, as Gen. xx. 15; xxiv. 51, &c. Or work is here put for the reward of the work, as it is Isa. xlix. 4; lxv. 7, and elsewhere. And so the same thing is repeated in other words, as is very usual.

11 He shall [l]feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those ‖that are with young.

He shall perform all the offices of a tender and faithful shepherd towards his people, carrying himself with great wisdom, and condescension, and compassion to every one of them, according to their several capacities and infirmities.

12 ¶ [m]Who hath measured the waters
m Prov. 30. 4. in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in †a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance?

† Heb. a three.

Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand? i. e. who can measure them? for indicative verbs in the Hebrew language are oft taken potentially. Who can do this and the following things but God? And this discourse of God's infinite power and wisdom is here conveniently added, to give them the greater assurance that God was able, as he had declared himself willing, to do these great and wonderful things which he had promised; and that neither men nor false gods were able to hinder him in it. God is here compared to a mighty giant, supposed to be so big that he can take up and hold all the waters of the sea and rivers of the whole world in one hand, and span the heavens, and then take up and weigh the whole earth with the other hand.

Who did God either need or take to advise him in any of his works, either of creation or the government of the world? were they not all the effects of his own sole wisdom? Therefore though all the nations of the world contrive and conspire against him, and against this work of his, as indeed they will do, yet his own counsel shall confound all their devices, and carry on his work in spite of them.

14 With whom took he counsel, and † Heb. made him understand. who †instructed him, and taught him in the path of judgment, and taught him knowledge, and shewed to him the way of †understanding?

† Heb. understandings?

Taught him in the path of judgment; how to walk and manage all his affairs with good judgment and discretion.

15 Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance: behold, he taketh up the isles as a very little thing.

The nations, all the nations of the world, are as a drop of a bucket, compared with all the water in the bucket, wherein are innumerable drops: such are they if compared with God. And are counted by him, and in comparison of him, as the small dust of the balance; which accidentally cleaves to the balance, but makes no alteration in the weight. The isles; those numerous and vast countries to which they went from Judea by sea, which are commonly called isles, as hath been oft observed.

16 And Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, nor the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt offering.

And although he is pleased to accept of poor and small sacrifices from his people, yet if men were to offer a sacrifice agreeable to his infinite excellency, the whole forest of Lebanon could not afford either a sufficient number of beasts to be sacrificed, or a sufficient quantity of wood to consume the sacrifice.

Before him; either in his eyes, or being set against him, as this Hebrew word properly and most usually signifies. Counted to him, either in his judgment, or in comparison of him. Less than nothing; less than a thing of nought, or of no account or worth; or, as others render it, for nothing.

q ver. 25. ch. 46. 5. Acts 17. 29. 18 ¶ To whom then will ye [q]liken God? or what likeness will ye compare unto him?

This is a proper inference from the foregoing discourse of God's immense and infinite greatness; from whence he taketh occasion to show both the folly of those that make mean and visible representations of God, as not the Gentiles only, but even some of the Jews did; and the utter inability of men or idols to give any opposition to God in the doing of these great works. And this discourse of the madness of idolaters, prosecuted both here and in the following chapter, was designed by God, as a necessary antidote whereby the Jews might be preserved from the contagion of idolatry, to which God saw they now had strong inclinations, and would have many and great temptations when they were in captivity.

r ch. 41. 6, 7. & 44. 12, &c. Jer. 10. 3, &c. 19 [r]The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold, and casteth silver chains.

The workman melteth a graven image; he melteth some base metal into a mould, which giveth it the form of an image, which afterwards is graven or carved to make it more exact and amiable. Thus the image oweth all its excellency to the earth for the matter of it, and to the art of man for the form or fashion of it. Spreadeth it over with gold, beaten out into leaves or plates. Casteth silver chains; either for ornaments; or rather for use, to fasten it to a wall or pillar, lest it should fall down, and be broken in pieces; which is spoken in way of scorn and derision of such ridiculous deities as needed such supports.

s ch. 41. 7. Jer. 10. 4. ning workman [s]to prepare a graven image, that shall not be moved.

That he hath no oblation; that he can hardly procure money sufficient to buy the meanest sacrifice for his God. He seeketh unto him a cunning workman; he is so mad upon his idols, that he will one way or other find money to procure the choicest materials, and the help of the best artist, to make his idol. That shall not be moved; which after all this cost and art cannot stir one step out of its place to give you any help.

t Ps. 19. 1. Acts 14. 17. Rom. 1. 19, 20. 21 [t]Have ye not known? have ye not heard? hath it not been told you from the beginning? have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth?

Have ye not known, to wit, God to be the only true God, the Maker and Governor of the world, and all its inhabitants? how can you be ignorant of so evident a truth? He addresseth his speech to the idolatrous Gentiles. From the beginning, to wit, of the world, as the next clause explains it. Were not these infinite perfections of God manifestly discovered to all mankind by the creation of the world?

‖ Or, Him that sitteth, &c. u Job 9. 8. Ps. 104. 2. ch. 42. 5. & 44. 24. & 51. 13. Jer. 10. 12. 22 ‖It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers; that [u]stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in:

That sitteth, as a judge or governor upon his throne, upon the circle of the earth; or, above the circle, &c.; far above this round earth, even in the highest heavens; from whence he looketh down upon the earth, where men appear to him like grasshoppers. He alludes to one that looks down upon the earth below him from some high place. As here we have the circle of the earth, so elsewhere we read of the circle of heaven, Job xxii. 14, and of the circle of the deep, or sea, Prov. viii. 27, because the form of the heaven, and earth, and sea is circular and round, as is evident both from sense, and from the principles of philosophy. As grasshoppers; small and contemptible in his sight. Compare Numb. xiii. 33. Stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in, for the benefit of the earth and of mankind, that all parts might partake of its comfortable influences. See on Job ix. 8; Psal. civ. 2.

x Job 12. 21. Ps. 107. 40. 23 That bringeth the [x]princes to nothing; he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity.

That bringeth the princes to nothing; that can at his pleasure destroy all the great potentates of the world.

24 Yea, they shall not be planted; yea, they shall not be sown: yea, their stock shall not take root in the earth: and he shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble.

They, the princes and judges last mentioned, shall not be planted; yea, they shall not be sown: they shall take no root, as it follows; for planting and sowing are in order to taking root, and are necessary to it. They shall not continue and flourish, as they have vainly imagined; but shall be rooted up and perish, as is declared in the rest of the verse. Blow upon them; blast them, as a vehement east wind doth plants.

y ver. 18. Deut. 4. 15, &c. 25 [y]To whom then will ye liken me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One.

He repeateth what he said ver. 18, that he might oblige them to the more serious and frequent consideration of the absurdity of the idolatry.

26 Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things, that bringeth out their host by number: [z]he calleth them all by names by the greatness of his might, for that he is strong in power; not one faileth.

z Ps. 147. 4

Lift up your eyes on high; to the high and starry heaven as appears from the following words. These things which you see on high, the host of heaven, as it follows. That bringeth out; that at first brought them out of nothing, and from day to day brings them forth, making them to rise and set in their appointed and fixed times. Their host by number, as a general brings forth his army into the field, and there musters them. He calleth them all by names, as a master calleth all the members of his family. For that he is strong in power; which work is a certain and evident proof of God's infinite power. Not one faileth, either to appear when he calleth them, or to do the work to which he sends them.

27 Why sayest thou, O Jacob, and speakest, O Israel, My way is hid from the LORD, and my judgment is passed over from my God?

Why sayest thou in thy heart? why dost thou give way to such jealousies concerning thy God, of whose infinite power, and wisdom, and goodness there are such evident demonstrations given to all mankind, and to thee in a singular manner? My way; the course and condition of my life. He takes no notice of my prayers and tears, and sufferings for his name, but suffers my enemies to abuse me at their pleasure, and doth not attempt to rescue me out of their hands. This complaint is uttered in the name of the people, being prophetically supposed to be in captivity. My judgment; either, 1. My punishment; or rather, 2. My cause, as this word is most commonly used. God hath neglected to plead my cause, and to give judgment for me against mine enemies, as he hath formerly done. Is passed over from my God; God hath dismissed it, and left it and me in the hands of mine enemies, and now our case is so desperate that God cannot help us; for which reason they compared themselves to dry bones lying in the grave, Ezek. xxxvii.

28 ¶ Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the LORD, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? [a]there is no searching of his understanding.

a Ps. 147. 5. Rom. 11. 33.

Of the ends of the earth; of all the earth, and the inhabitants thereof, from one end to another. He seems to mention the ends or utmost bounds, because they might seem to be more out of the reach and care of God's providence, as being most remote from Jerusalem, the only place of God's solemn and public worship in the world, and being then thought to be uninhabited. The argument is clear and strong: God, who made all, even the most desolate and barbarous parts of the earth, and consequently takes care of them, will not neglect his own land and people. Fainteth not, neither is weary; he is not by age or hard labour become weak and unable to help his people, as men are apt to be. There is no searching of his understanding; his counsels, by which he governeth all the world, and in a most particular manner thine affairs, are far above the reach of thy understanding; and therefore thou dost ignorantly and foolishly in passing so rash a censure upon the ways and works of the infinitely wise God.

29 He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength.

He hath strength enough not only for himself, but for all, even the weakest of his creatures, whom he can easily strengthen to bear all their burdens, and to vanquish all their oppressors.

30 Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall:

The youngest and strongest men, left to themselves, or without God's help, or which do not wait upon God; which is easily understood from the opposition in the following verse.

31 But they that wait upon the LORD [b]shall †renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint.

b Ps. 103. 5. † Heb. change.

That wait upon the Lord; that rely upon him for strength to bear their burdens, and for deliverance from them in due time. Shall renew their strength; shall grow stronger and stronger in faith, and patience, and fortitude, whereby they shall be more than conquerors over all their enemies and adversities. They shall mount up with wings as eagles; which fly most strongly, and swiftly, and high, out of the reach of all danger. They shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint; they shall be enabled to run or walk in their way as they please, without any weariness.

CHAP. XLI.

God called Abraham, and was with him: the nations idolatrous, 1—8. Israel encouraged by promises of safety and deliverance, 9—20. The vanity of idols, 21—24. Redemption by Christ, 25—29.

a Zech. 2. 13. [a]KEEP silence before me, O islands; and let the people renew their strength: let them come near; then let them speak: let us come near together to judgment.

Keep silence before me; attend diligently to my plea, and then answer it if you can. O islands; O you inhabitants of islands, as the next clause explains this. By islands he here means, as he doth chap. xl. 15, and elsewhere, countries remote from Judea, inhabited by the idolatrous Gentiles, with whom he here debateth his cause. Let the people renew their strength; strengthen themselves to maintain their cause against me; let them unite all their strength together. Let them come near unto me, that we may stand together, and plead our cause before any indifferent judge. Let them speak; I will give them free liberty to say what they can on their own behalf.

† Heb. righteousness. b ch. 46. 11. c See Gen. 14. 14, &c. ver. 25. ch. 45. 1.

2 Who raised up †the righteous man [b]from the east, called him to his foot, [c]gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings? he gave them as the dust to his sword, and as driven stubble to his bow.

Who? what man or god? Was it not my alone work? The idols were so far from assisting me, that they did their utmost to oppose me in it. Raised up into being and power, stirring up his spirit, and strengthening him to the work. The righteous man, Heb. righteousness, which is put for a man of righteousness, as pride is put for a proud man, Psal. xxxvi. 11, and deceit for a deceitful man, Psal. cix. 2; for it is evident from the following words that he spake here of a person. But who this person is, is much disputed by interpreters. Some understand it of Christ. And doubtless the person here spoken of was an eminent type of Christ, and so in a mystical sense it may belong to him. But the things here said to be done by this righteous man, seem to agree much better unto a man of war than unto the Prince of peace. And therefore this place is immediately understood either, 1. Of Abraham, who was a person eminently righteous, and came out of Chaldea, which sometimes seems to be called the east, as Isa. ii. 6; Zech. viii. 7, who did the things here mentioned; partly in his own person, conquering five kings, and the nations with them, Gen. xiv., and following God he knew not whither; and partly by his posterity, whose exploits may well be ascribed to him, not only because they came out of his loins, but also and especially because all their successes and victories were given to them for Abraham's sake, and by the virtue of God's promise and covenant made with Abraham, for the giving of Canaan to him and to his seed for ever. And this interpretation may seem to receive some countenance from ver. 5, 6, which agrees well to the practice of the Canaanites and neighbouring nations; who upon Israel's march towards them were filled with great consternation, and used all possible diligence in seeking both to their idols and to men for help against them, as we read in that sacred history. And thus God's argument against idolatry is taken from an illustrious example of God's infinite power, put forth in saving his people, and destroying their enemies before them; and of the impotency of idols to hinder him in that work. Or, 2. Of Cyrus, who might be called a righteous man; or, as it is in the Hebrew, a man of righteousness; because he was raised up in righteousness, as it is said of him, Isa. xlv. 13, and was God's great instrument to manifest his righteousness; both his faithfulness, in fulfilling his promise of delivering his people out of Babylon after seventy years (righteousness being often put for faithfulness); and his justice, in punishing the enemies and oppressors of his people, the wicked Babylonians; upon which account the Medes, who served under Cyrus in his expedition against the Babylonians, are called God's sanctified ones, Isa. xiii. 3. And all the other expressions here used are very applicable to him, and were verified in him. He came from the east; from Persia, which was directly eastward, both from Judea and from Babylon, and which is called the east in this very case, Isa. xlvi. 11. He was raised up by God in an eminent and extraordinary manner, as is noted both by sacred and profane historians; and therefore this very word is used concerning him and his army, not only here, but elsewhere; as Isa. xiii. 17; Jer. l. 9; li. 1, 11. To him also all the following passages agree, as we shall see. And although this great person and action were yet to come, yet the prophet speaks of them as if they were already past, as the prophets most frequently do. And as in the clause of the former chapter he speaks of God's people as if they were actually in the captivity of Babylon, ver. 27, so here he speaks of them as if they were actually brought out of Babylon by Cyrus. And by this instance he pleads his cause against the Gentiles and their idols, because this was an evident proof of God's almighty power, and of the vanity and weakness of idols, which eminently appeared in the destruction of the Babylonians, who were a people mad upon their idols, as is said, Jer. l. 38, and yet were destroyed together with their idols, Jer. li. 47. From the east; from a country eastward from Judea, as Chaldea was in part, but Persia more directly. Called him to his foot; to march after him, and under God's banner, against Babylon. Thus Barak's army is said to be at his feet, Judg. iv. 10. Compare also Gen. xxx. 30. Gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings; subdued nations and their kings before him. He gave them as the dust; to be beaten by him as small as dust, as is said, Psal. xviii. 42. Or, to be put to flight as easily as the dust is scattered by the wind, as the following clause expounds this.

3 He pursued them, and passed †safely; even by the way that he had not gone with his feet. † Heb. in peace.

He pursued them, and passed safely; went on in the pursuit with great ease, and safety, and success. Even by the way that he had not gone with his feet; which is added as a further evidence of God's wonderful providence, in encouraging and enabling him to march by unknown paths; which hath oft proved dangerous and destructive to great armies. This also was verified both in Abraham and in Cyrus, as is well known.

4 [d]Who hath wrought and done it, calling the generations from the beginning? I the LORD, the [e]first, and with the last; I am he.

Who hath wrought and done it? whose work was this but mine? Calling; either, 1. Calling them out of nothing, giving to them breath and being; or, 2. Calling them to his foot, as he said above, ver. 2, disposing and employing them as he sees fit, sending them upon his errands. The generations from the beginning; all persons and generations of mankind from the beginning of the world to the end of it. The first, and with the last; who was before all things, even from eternity, and shall be unto eternity; whereas the idols, to whom God herein opposeth himself, were but of yesterday, being made by men's hands, and shall within a little time vanish, and be destroyed.

5 The isles saw it, and feared; the ends of the earth were afraid, drew near, and came.

The isles, even remote countries, as ver. 1, saw it; discerned the mighty work of God in delivering his people, and overthrowing their enemies, in so wonderful a manner. Feared, lest they should be involved in the same calamity, as being conscious to themselves that they also were enemies to God's people. Drew near, and came; they gathered themselves together to consult for their common safety, and to maintain the cause of their idols, whom by this instance they perceived in great jeopardy.

The carpenter, who brought wood to compose the body of the idol. The goldsmith, who was to prepare golden plates for covering and adorning of the image, which some of them beat out upon the anvil, and others smoothed or polished, as it follows. It is ready for the sodering; that we may put the several parts together, and set it up to be worshipped. He fastened it to the wall or pillar, lest it should fall down, or go, or be carried away from them. 8 But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have [i]chosen, the seed of Abraham my [k]friend.

But thou, Israel, art my servant: thus the Gentiles show themselves to be the servants of their idols, and own them for their god; but thou art my people, and I am and will be thy God. Whom I have chosen, out of the heap of the idolatrous nations, to be my peculiar people. Abraham my friend; with whom I made a strict league of perpetual friendship; of which see Gen. xii. 2, 3; xv. 1, 18.

9 Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away.

Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth; thou, Israel, whom I took to myself, and brought hither in the loins of thy father Abraham from a remote country, to wit, Chaldea; or, whom I brought back out of Babylon into thine own land, which though yet to come, he may speak of as of a thing past, as the prophets use to do, as was noted before. But the former interpretation seems to agree better with the foregoing verse. From the chief men thereof; from the midst of many great and noble persons, among whom he lived in Chaldea. So this notes God's singular mercy to Abraham, and consequently to the Israelites descended from him, that he passed by many of Abraham's betters, and called him into fellowship with himself. I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away; I have chosen thee not for a small moment, but for ever, by making an everlasting covenant with thee and thy seed through all generations. Or the sense is this; As I have chosen thee at first, so I have not since that time cast thee off, as thou hadst frequently given me sufficient occasion to do. Or, and did not refuse thee, as this word is elsewhere used. So the same thing is repeated in other words, not without some emphasis; for he intimates that he chose them when he had just cause of refusing them.

s ch. 35. 6,7. & 43. 19. & 44. 3. t Ps. 107. 35.

18 I will open [s]rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the [t]wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water.

In high places; upon the mountains, where by the course of nature there are no rivers. In the midst of the valleys; or, in the valleys, to wit, in such of them as are not well watered. I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water: these people, who are like a dry and barren wilderness, I will abundantly water with my blessing, and make them fruitful and beautiful, as the next verse showeth; which may be understood, either of the Jews, who were in a wilderness condition, till God brought them out of it; or of the Gentiles converted to the true religion under the gospel.

19 I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah tree, and the myrtle, and the oil tree; I will set in the desert the fir tree, and the pine, and the box tree together:

Trees which are both useful and pleasant to the eye, and giving a good shadow to the traveller, which in those hot and parched countries was very comfortable. Thus much is evident and confessed. But what particular trees these Hebrew words signify seems to me improper to discourse here, because only the learned are capable of judging in this case, and they may consult my Latin Synopsis upon this and other places of Scripture where they are mentioned.

u Job 12. 9.

20 [u]That they may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of the LORD hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it.

That they may see; or, that men may see; for it is an indefinite expression. The sense is, that all that see this wonderful change may consider it, and may know that this is the work of God alone.

† Heb. Cause to come near.

21 †Produce your cause, saith the LORD; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob.

Produce your cause: the prophet having pleaded God's cause against the idolatrous Gentiles, whom he challenged to a dispute, ver. 1, he now reneweth the challenge, and gives them liberty and invitation to speak whatsoever they can on the behalf of their idols. Bring forth your strong reasons, to prove the divinity of your idols.

x ch. 45. 21.

22 [x]Let them bring them forth, and shew us what shall happen: let them shew the former things, what they be, that we may †consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come.

† Heb. set our heart upon them.

Let them; either the idols; or, which is all one, the idolaters in the name and by the help of their idols. What shall happen; all future events; which he divides into two sorts in the following clause, the former and the latter, as we shall see. Let them show the former things; which is not to be understood of such things as are past, for such things might easily be known by men from history, much more by the devils who possessed and acted in their idols; but of such things as should shortly come to pass, which may be better discerned than those things which are yet at a great distance. So he propounds the easiest part first. Let us try whether they can foretell those things which are even at the door, and if so we will try them further. Let them tell us what things shall happen, and in what order, which first, and which last. That we may consider them, Heb. and we will set our heart to it; we will allow the argument its due weight, and either fairly answer it, or give up our cause against idols. And know; that we may know, or let us know by their information. The latter end of them; the consequence of them, whether the events did answer to their predictions, or what things happened next after those former things. Declare us things for to come, to wit, hereafter, or after a long time; which limitation may be easily gathered, both from the opposition of this clause to the former, and from the next following clause, where it is so limited and explained.

y ch. 42. 9. & 44. 7, 8. & 45. 3. John 13. 19. z Jer. 10. 5.

That we may know that ye are gods; that we may have, if not a certain proof, yet at least a probable argument, of your deity. It may be objected that the devil hath foretold future events by idols; but it may be answered, that such predictions were but rare, and oftentimes were false, and confuted by the event; and generally were dark and doubtful, as hath been noted; and when they were verified by the event, that was only done by Divine permission and revelation, for the trial or punishment of wicked men, of which we have an instance, Deut. xiii. 1—3, and therefore doth no more prove them to be gods than the predictions made known by God unto the prophets proved them to be gods. Do good, or do evil; protect and bless your worshippers whom I intend to destroy, and destroy my people whom I intend to save, and then you have some colour to assert your deity. But, alas! you can neither do good nor evil. That we may be dismayed, and behold it together; that I and my people may be astonished, and confounded, and forced to acknowledge your godhead.

a Ps. 115. 8. ch. 44. 9. 1 Cor. 8. 4. ‖ Or, worse than nothing. ‖ Or, worse than of a viper.

24 Behold, [a]ye are ‖of nothing, and your work ‖of nought: an abomination is he that chooseth you.

Ye are of nothing; you lately were nothing, without any being at all, and now you have nothing at all of divinity or virtue in you. Your work; either, 1. Passively, your workmanship, all the cost and art which is laid out upon you. Or, 2. Actively, all that you can do. Your operations are like your beings; there is no reality in your beings, nor efficacy in your actions. He that chooseth you; he that chooseth you for his gods, is most abominable for his folly as well as his wickedness.

b Ezra 1. 2. c ver. 2.

25 I have raised up one from the north, and he shall come: from the rising of the sun [b]shall he call upon my name: [c]and he shall come upon princes as upon morter, and as the potter treadeth clay.

I have raised up; you neither foreknow nor can do any thing; but I do now foretell, and will certainly effect, a great revolution and change in the world, which you shall not be able to hinder. One; which word, though not expressed in the Hebrew, must necessarily be understood, as being oft designed in the following words by the pronoun he. He understands one people; or rather one person, prince, or general, together with his people or forces, as appears from the latter part of the verse. Some conceive that the prophet in this place speaks of two several persons; in the first clause of Nebuchadnezzar, who in Scripture is commonly said to come from the north, as Jer. i. 13, 15; iv. 6; and the next clause of Cyrus, who came from the east, Isa. xlvi. 11. And then the words may be thus rendered, one from the north, and he shall come; and one from the rising of the sun, he shall call, &c. But it seems more natural and easy to understand the whole context of one and the same person, even of Cyrus, of whom he spake before, ver. 2, &c., who might well be said to come, both from the north and from the east: from the north rather, because he was a Mede by his mother, as he was a Persian by his father; or because a great part of his army was gathered out of Media, which was, and in Scripture is said to be, northward in reference to Judea, Jer. l. 9, 41; li. 48; and because Darius the Mede was joined with him in this expedition: and from the east, because Persia was directly eastward from Judea. And peradventure this work of calling upon or proclaiming God's name is here ascribed to him as he came from the east, rather than as he came from the north, because that work was not done by Darius the Mede, but by Cyrus the Persian. Shall he call upon my name; or rather, as others render it, who shall call upon; or rather, proclaim my name, which Cyrus did in express and emphatical terms, Ezra i. 1, 2. He shall come upon princes as upon mortar; treading them down as easily as a man treadeth down mortar.

d ch. 43. 9. 26 [d]Who hath declared from the beginning, that we may know? and beforetime, that we may say, He is righteous? yea, there is none that sheweth, yea, there is none that declareth, yea, there is none that heareth your words.

Who hath declared from the beginning? which of all your idols did or could foretell such things as this from the beginning of the world unto this day? They never yet did nor can foretell any such things, further than I think fit to reveal it to them. Beforetime; either in time past, or before the things come to pass. That we may say, that we may be convinced and forced to acknowledge, He is righteous; his cause now pleaded is just and good; he is a God indeed as he pretends to be, he claims his Divinity by a good title. Yea, there is none; Heb. surely there is none of your gods that hath done or can do this, and therefore their claim to the Deity is false and foolish. There is none that heareth your words; none of your worshippers ever heard any such thing, either from you or of you; nor indeed doth any man hear your words, because you are dumb, and cannot speak.

e ver. 4. f ch. 40. 9. 27 [e]The first [f]shall say to Zion, Behold, behold them: and I will give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings.

The first; I who am the first, as I said before, ver. 4, and therefore capable of declaring or foretelling things to come from the beginning, which your idols cannot do, ver. 26. Shall say to Zion; do and will foretell unto my people by my prophets things to come. Behold, behold them; I represent things future as if they were present, and to be beheld with your eyes. By them he means either, 1. These things which are to come: or, 2. These men; either Cyrus and his forces, who came to deliver the Jews out of Babylon; or, which is the same thing in effect, the Jews returning from their captivity in Babylon. One that bringeth good tidings; a messenger or messengers, the singular number being here put for the plural, as it is in many other places, to wit, my prophets, who shall foretell the good tidings of their deliverance from captivity.

g ch. 63. 5. + Heb. return. 28 [g]For I beheld, and there was no man; even among them, and there was no counsellor, that, when I asked of them, could †answer a word.

For I beheld, Heb. And I beheld; I looked about me to see if I could find any man of them that could certainly and of themselves foretell such future events. No man; not any, to wit, of the idols; for the word man is sometimes used by the Hebrews of brute creatures, and even of lifeless things, as Isa. xxxiv. 15; xl. 26, and elsewhere. There was no counsellor; though these idols were oft consulted, and by the help of the devil did sometimes deliver oracles, yet none of them were able to give any solid and certain advice concerning future things. That, when I asked of them, could answer a word; when I tried their divinity by this character, they had nothing to say for themselves.

h ver. 24. 29 [h]Behold, they are all vanity; their works are nothing: their molten images are wind and confusion.

They are all vanity: this is the conclusion of the whole dispute, and the just sentence which God passeth upon idols after a fair trial; they are vain things, and are falsely called gods. Their works are nothing: see ver. 24. Their molten images; which he mentions, because their materials were most precious, and more cost and art was commonly bestowed upon them; for after they had been molten, they used to be carved, or polished, and adorned: but under these he synecdochically comprehends all images whatsoever. Are wind; empty and unsatisfying things, which also, like the wind, do quickly pass away, and come to nothing. And confusion; confused, and deformed, and useless things, like that rude heap in the beginning of God's creation, of which this very word is used, Gen. i. 2.

CHAP. XLII.

The person and office of Christ appointed by the Father, 1—9. A new song to God for his gospel among the Gentiles, 10—16. The idolatry of the heathen, and obstinacy of the Jews, 17—25.

a ch. 43. 10. & 49. 3, 6. & 52. 13. & 53. 11. Matt. 12. 18, 19, 20. Phil. 2. 7. b Matt. 3. 17. & 17. 5. Eph. 1. 6. c ch. 11. 2. John 3. 34. BEHOLD [a]my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul [b]delighteth; [c]I have put my spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.

The prophet, having in the former chapter detected the vanity of idols, by their gross ignorance of future things, and having given one eminent instance of God's certain foreknowledge of things to come, in the prediction of the destruction of Babylon, and the deliverance of the Jews out of it by Cyrus, he now addeth another more eminent and remote example of it, and foretelleth the coming of the Messiah, and several great effects or consequences thereof; which he rather doth, because this was the person by whom the idols were to be utterly abolished, as was foretold, Isa. ii. 18, compared with ver. 2—4, and as it fell out in the event; this having been observed not only by Christians, but even by the learned heathens, not without astonishment, that at that time when Christ came into the world idols were generally struck dumb, and the oracles ceased. My servant; the person of whom he here speaketh is by some supposed to be Cyrus, and by others Isaiah himself, and by others the people of the Jews. But the most and best interpreters understand this place of Christ. And although I am sensible that some learned men have done wrong to the sacred text, and to the Christian cause, by expounding some places of Christ without sufficient evidence, yet this is one of the many places in this prophecy which cannot without manifest violence be applied to any other; which is so evident, that not only the generality of Christians, but divers of the most learned Jews, understand it of the Messiah, and of him alone; and pass a severe censure upon their brethren that expound it of any other person, and affirm that they are smitten with blindness in this matter. Moreover this place is expressly interpreted of Christ, Matt. xii. 18, &c.; and to him, and to him only, all the particulars here following do truly and evidently belong, as we shall see. Whom I uphold; whom I will assist and enable to do and suffer all those things which belong to his office to do. Mine elect; chosen by me to this great work of mediation and redemption, to which he is said to be sealed and sent, John vi. 27, 29, and predestinated, 1 Pet. i. 20, and chosen of God, 1 Pet. ii. 4. Delighteth; or, as this same word is oft rendered, is well-pleased, both for himself and for all his people, being fully satisfied with that sacrifice which he shall offer up to me. I have put my Spirit upon him; I have furnished him with that abundance and eminency of gifts and graces which are necessary for the discharge of his high and hard employment. Shall bring forth; shall publish or show, as this word is translated, Matt. xii. 18; shall bring to light what before was hid in his breast, or in his Father's bosom. Judgment: this word is very ambiguous, and elsewhere is put for punishment, which cannot be meant here, because the whole context speaks of his mercy and sweetness, and not of his severity; but here it is clearly put for God's law, as this very word is expounded here below, ver. 4, and as it is frequently used in the Holy Scriptures, as Psal. cxix., and elsewhere: which also best agrees with the bringing forth or publishing of it here mentioned, publication being necessarily required and constantly used about laws. And this interpretation is confirmed by the following words, to the Gentiles. For the great things which Christ published unto all the world, both Jews and Gentiles, was nothing else but the law, and will, and counsel of God concerning man's salvation, and the way and means of obtaining it. To the Gentiles; not only to the Jews, to whom the knowledge of God's laws had been hitherto appropriated, but to the heathen nations of the world.

2 He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.

He shall not cry; either, 1. In a way of contention, as anger is oft accompanied with clamour, Eph. iv. 31. Or, 2. In a way of ostentation. It seems to be meant both ways, by comparing this place with Matt. xii. 16, 17, 20. He shall neither erect nor manage his kingdom with violence and outward pomp and state, as worldly princes do, but with meekness and humility. Nor lift up his voice, which is easily understood out of the following clause, and from many other scriptures, where that word is added to this verb to complete the phrase. Nor cause his voice to be heard in the street; as contentious and vain-glorious persons frequently do.

3 A bruised reed shall he not break, and the ‖ smoking flax shall he not † quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth.

‖ Or, dimly burning. † Heb. quench it.

A bruised reed shall he not break; he will not break it to pieces, but rather will strengthen and bind it up. It is a common figure, whereby more is understood than was expressed, and one contrary is left to be gathered from another, of which many instances have been given in former texts. The sense is plainly this, Christ will not deal roughly and rigorously with those that come to him, but he will use all gentleness and kindness to them, passing by their greatest sins, bearing with their present infirmities, cherishing and encouraging the smallest beginnings of grace, comforting and healing wounded consciences, and the like. The smoking flax shall he not quench; the same thing is repeated in other words, to give us the greater assurance of the truth of it. That wick of a candle (called flax metonymically, because it is made of flax) which is almost extinct, and doth only smoke and not flame, he will not utterly quench, but will revive and kindle it again. He shall bring forth judgment unto truth: judgment may be here taken either, 1. For the law or will of God, or the doctrine of the gospel, which he will bring forth, i. e. publish, which he will do unto, or in, or with, or according to (for this preposition is used all those ways) truth, i. e. truly and faithfully, not concealing nor corrupting it, as false teachers commonly do. So this is a character like that which is given to Christ, Matt. xxii. 16, Thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth; and thus this phrase of bringing forth judgment is taken here, as it is ver. 1. Or, 2. For the cause which is debated, or for the sentence which is given in the cause, as this word is most frequently used, which he will bring forth, i. e. bring to light, or discover, or publish; and this he will do according to truth and equity, and not unjustly and partially, as corrupt judges use to give sentence against the poor and meek. In this sense this very phrase of bringing forth judgment is taken Psal. xxxvii. 6. And this sense seems to be favoured, both by the consideration of the quality of the persons, to whom this judgment is here implied to be brought forth, who are called bruised reeds, and smoking flax, whereby they are supposed to be persons discouraged and oppressed, and in a contest with themselves, or with their spiritual adversaries, about the state of their souls; as also by comparing this place with Matt. xii. 20, where these very words are quoted, and thus rendered, till he send forth judgment unto victory, i. e. till judgment or sentence be given for him, in which case a man is said to be victorious in judgment. If it be said for the former interpretation, that it seems most reasonable to understand judgment here as it is understood ver. 1 and 4, and bringing forth judgment here as it is taken, ver. 1, it may be truly and fairly answered, that it is a very common thing in Scripture for the same words or phrases to be used in several senses, not only in two neighbouring verses, but sometimes also in the very same verse, whereof I have formerly given divers instances.

4 He shall not fail nor be † discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth:
[d] and the isles shall wait for his law.

d Gen. 49. 10.

He shall not fail, nor be discouraged; though he be thus meek, and gentle, yet he is also courageous and resolute against all the great and many difficulties and conflicts to which he will be exposed, and will not give over till he have finished his work; or, as others render the words, He shall not be darkened (this glorious light shall not be eclipsed or obscured; or, He shall shine forth brightly and gloriously, as the LXX. render this word) nor broken by all the attempts and vigorous endeavours of his enemies who design it. Till he have set judgment in the earth; till he have published and established his law or doctrine (as this judgment is expounded in the next clause) among the nations of the earth. And this word till respects only the time past, but not the time to come, as if he would then fail, or be discouraged, when once he had set judgment on the earth; which is contrary to reason, and to other evident scriptures. And so this word is used, Gen. xxviii. 15; Psal. lxxi. 18; Matt. i. 25. The isles; the countries remote from Judea, to which God's law was now confined, as this word is oft used. Shall wait for his law; shall gladly receive his doctrine and commands from time to time.

5 ¶ Thus saith God the LORD, [e] he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; [f] he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; [g] he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein:

e ch. 44. 24. Zech. 12. 1.
f Ps. 136. 6.
g Acts 17. 25.

This large description of God's infinite power is here seasonably added, to give them assurance of the certain accomplishment of these great and wonderful promises, which otherwise would seem incredible.

6 [h] I the LORD have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, [i] and give thee for a covenant of the people, for [k] a light of the Gentiles;

h ch. 43. 1.
i ch. 49. 8.
k ch. 49. 6. Luke 2. 32. Acts 13. 47.

Have called thee in righteousness; to declare my righteousness, as is said, Rom. iii. 26, or my faithfulness, which is frequently called righteousness in Scripture; according to my promise long since made, and oft renewed. As the former verse asserted God's power, so this clause declares his will and firm purpose and obligation to effect this work, and both together evince the certainty and necessity of it. Will hold thine hand; will give thee counsel and strength for thy high and hard work. Will keep thee, that thou shalt not fail in, nor be hindered by, thine enemies from the accomplishment of thy work. Give thee for a covenant; to be the Angel of the covenant, as Christ is called, Mal. iii. 1; or the Mediator, in and by whom my covenant of grace is made and confirmed with mankind. Of the people; either of my people, the Jews; or, indefinitely or universally, of all people, not only Jews, but Gentiles also, as it follows. For a light of the Gentiles; to enlighten them with true and saving knowledge, and to direct them in the right way to true happiness, from which they had miserably wandered. He alludes to God's fiery pillar, which enlightened and directed the Israelites in the wilderness.

7 [l] To open the blind eyes, to [m] bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in [n] darkness out of the prison house.

m ch. 61. 1. Luke 4. 18. 2 Tim. 2. 26.
Heb. 2. 14, 15.
n ch. 9. 2.

The blind eyes; the eyes of their minds blinded with long ignorance, and deep prejudice, and inveterate error, and by the power and policy of the god of this world, 2 Cor. iv. 4, which nothing but the almighty power of God could cure. The prisoners; sinners, who are taken captive by the devil at his will, as we read, 2 Tim. ii. 26, and as daily experience showeth, and who are enslaved and chained by their own lusts, and made free-men only by Christ, John viii. 32, 36. Compare this portion of Scripture with Isa. lxi. 1, and both with Luke iv. 17—21, where it is said to be fulfilled in and by Christ.

8 I am the LORD: that is my name:
and my [o] glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images.

o ch. 48. 11.

I am the Lord, Heb. Jehovah; who have all being in and of myself, and give being to all my creatures, and to all my promises, as this name signifies. The everlasting, and unchangeable, and omnipotent God, who therefore both can and will fulfil all my promises, and plead the cause and set up the kingdom of my Son in spite of all opposition, and destroy all those idols which are set up against him and me.

That is my name, which I must own and justify to the world. He seems to allude to Exod. iii. 14, 15; vi. 3. My glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images; I will not any longer suffer that honour and worship which is peculiar to me to be given to idols, as it hath been, but I will by Christ and the gospel abolish idolatry in the world.

9 Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them.

The former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: as all things which I have formerly promised or foretold have exactly come to pass in their proper seasons, and not one of them failed, as was noted, Josh. xxiii. 14; so you have great reason to believe that what I now promise, though it be new and strange to you, shall infallibly be accomplished. Before they spring forth I tell you of them, that when they come to pass, you may know that I am God, and that this is my work. Compare John xiii. 19.

p Ps. 33. 3. & 40. 3. & 98. 1.

10 [p]Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth, q Ps. 107. 23.

[q] ye that go down to the sea, and † all that is therein; the isles, and the inhabitants thereof.

† Heb. the fulness thereof.

Sing unto the Lord a new song, upon this new and great occasion, the calling and salvation of the world by Christ. From the end of the earth; all nations, from one end of the earth, to another, who shall be sharers in this mercy. Ye that go down to the sea, &c.; you that go by sea, carry these glad tidings from Judea, where Christ was born, and lived, and died, and published the gospel, unto the remotest parts of the earth, that they may join with you in singing forth God's praises for his marvellous kindness and grace to them.

11 Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice, the villages that Kedar doth inhabit: let the inhabitants of the rock sing, let them shout from the top of the mountains.

The wilderness; those parts of the world which are now like a wilderness; not literally, for he speaks of their cities in the next clause, but spiritually, desolate and forsaken of God, dry and destitute of the waters of God's grace, and barren of all good fruits. Kedar; the Arabians; which were a heathenish and barbarous people, and well known to the Jews, and are synecdochically put for all nations in the same circumstances. Let the inhabitants of the rock sing, let them shout from the top of the mountains: having mentioned cities and villages, he now adds those who dwell upon rocks and mountains, which are commonly more savage and ignorant than others, and therefore harder to be taught and reformed.

12 Let them give glory unto the LORD, and declare his praise in the islands.

In the remotest parts of the world, as well as in Arabia, which was near to them.

13 The LORD shall go forth as a mighty man, he shall stir up jealousy like a man of war: he shall cry, [r]yea, roar; he shall ‖prevail against his enemies.

r ch. 31. 4.

‖ Or, behave himself mightily.

Shall go forth, to wit, to war, or battle, as this phrase is used, Numb. i. 3, 28; 2 Sam. xi. 1. He shall stir up jealousy; he shall stir up himself, and his strength, and anger, against the obstinate and implacable enemies of his Son and gospel. He shall cry, yea, roar, as a lion doth upon his prey, and as soldiers do when they begin the battle.

14 I have long time holden my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself: now will I cry like a travailing woman; I will destroy and † devour at once.

† Heb. swallow, or, sup up.

I have long time held my peace; I have for many ages suffered the devil and his servants, tyrants, and idolaters, and persecutors to prevail in the world, to afflict my people, and to hinder the entertainment of my doctrine and worship in the world. Now will I cry like a travailing woman; now I will bring forth and accomplish that glorious work which I have long conceived in my mind. I will destroy and devour at once; I will suddenly and utterly destroy the incorrigible enemies of my truth, and of my Son's kingdom. He alludes to those wild beasts which open their mouths wide, and devour all their prey at one morsel, or at one time.

15 I will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools.

I will make waste mountains and hills; not dry and barren ones, for these were waste already, but such as are clothed with grass and herbs, as the following words imply; which is to be understood metaphorically, of God's destroying his most lofty and flourishing enemies, who are oft compared in Scripture unto mountains and hills. I will dry up the pools; I will remove all impediments out of the way; which is expressed in the prophetical dialect, by drying up Euphrates, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared, Rev. xvi. 12. He seems to allude to that which God did in drying up first the Red Sea, and then Jordan, to give his people passage into Canaan. And this exposition is confirmed by the following verse.

16 And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things † straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them.

† Heb. into straightness.

The blind; the Gentiles, who were blind, and were called so, above, ver. 7, and in many other places of Scripture, and were so accounted by the Jews. By a way that they know not; by the way of truth, which hitherto hath been hidden from them, until by my word and Spirit I revealed it to them. I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight; I will take away all hinderances, and give them all advantages and conveniences for their journey. I will direct them in the right way. I will enlighten their dark minds, and rectify their perverse wills and affections. And not forsake them, until I have brought them with safety and comfort to the end of their journey.

17 ¶ They shall be [s]turned back, they shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods.

s Ps. 97. 7. ch. 1. 29. & 44. 11. & 45. 16.

This may be understood either, 1. Of the converted Gentiles; who shall be turned back from their former sinful course, and shall sincerely grieve, and be ashamed that they did trust, &c., as the word may be rendered; that they should ever be guilty of such wickedness and madness to worship and trust in idols. Or rather, 2. Of those Gentiles who, when their brethren embraced the true God and Christ, persisted obstinately in their idolatrous courses, who shall be confounded and destroyed; for this phrase of being turned back is generally used in Scripture in a bad sense; or of them who are overthrown, or put to flight in battle, as Psal. ix. 3; xxxv. 4; lxx. 2, 3, &c. And the like I may say of being ashamed, or confounded, or put to shame, especially where this phrase is joined with the other, as it is in the two places of the Psalms last quoted.

18 Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see.

O you, whosoever you are, whether Jews or Gentiles, which shall resist this clear light, and obstinately continue in your former errors, attend diligently to my words, and consider these mighty works of God.

19 [t]Who is blind, but my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind as he that is perfect, and blind as the LORD's servant?

t ch. 43. 8. Ezek. 12. 2. See John 9. 39, 41.

Who is blind, but my servant? but no people under heaven are so blind as the Jews, who call themselves my servants and people, who will not receive their Messiah, though he be recommended to them with such evident and illustrious signs and miraculous works, as force belief from the most unbelieving and obstinate Gentiles. My messenger; my messengers, the singular number being put for the plural, as it is commonly in Scripture. That I sent; the priests and other teachers whom I appointed to instruct my people in the right way. As he that is perfect; as the most eminent teachers and rulers of the Jews, whom he calleth perfect, either because it was their duty to know and teach the way and truth of God perfectly; or rather sarcastically, because they pretended to greater perfection, and proudly called themselves rabbies and masters, as our Saviour observed, and despised the people as cursed, and not knowing the law, John vii. 49, and derided Christ for calling them blind, John ix. 40. As the Lord's servant; which title, as it was given to the Jewish people in the first clause of the verse, so here it seems to be given to the priests, because they were called and obliged to be the Lord's servants in a special and eminent manner.

u Rom. 2. 21. 20 Seeing many things, [u]but thou observest not; opening the ears, but he heareth not.

Thou dost not seriously and impartially consider the plain word and the wonderful works of God, of which thine ears and eyes have been witnesses, which are abundantly sufficient for the conviction of any considering man.

21 The LORD is well pleased for his righteousness' sake; he will magnify the law, and make ‖it honourable.

‖ Or, him.

Is well-pleased, to wit, with you; or, as this word is most commonly used, hath a good-will to you or to this people; which may be understood out of the following verse, as is very usual in sacred Scripture. The meaning seems to be this; Although thou art a wicked people, that rebellest against the clearest light, and therefore God might justly destroy thee suddenly; yet he is very unwilling to do it, and will patiently wait for thy repentance, that he may be gracious unto thee. For his righteousness' sake; not for thy sake, for thou deservest no such thing from him, but for the glory of his own faithfulness, in fulfilling that promise and covenant which he made with thy pious progenitors for themselves and for their seed. He will magnify the law, and make it honourable; he will maintain the honour of his law, and therefore is not forward to destroy you, who profess God's law, and the true religion, lest his law should upon that occasion be exposed to contempt.

‖ Or, in marking all the young men of them. + Heb. a treading. 22 But this is a people robbed and spoiled; ‖they are all of them snared in holes, and they are hid in prison houses: they are for a prey, and none delivereth; for †a spoil, and none saith, Restore.

But this is a people robbed and spoiled: but notwithstanding this great respect which God hath to his law, and to his people for the sake of his law, it is apparent that God hath severely scourged you for your sins; and therefore take heed that you do not provoke him by your obstinate infidelity, lest he cast you off for ever. They are all of them snared in holes, and they are hid in prison-houses; they are, or have been, taken in snares made by their own hands, and by God's just judgment delivered into the hands of their enemies, and by them cast into pits, or dungeons, and prisons. None delivereth; none saith, Restore; none afford them either pity or help in their extremities.

+ Heb. for the after time? 23 Who among you will give ear to this? who will hearken and hear †for the time to come?

Oh that you would learn from your former and dear-bought experiences to be wiser for the future, and not to provoke God to your own total and final ruin!

24 Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the LORD, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law.

Do not flatter yourselves with a conceit of impunity, because you are a people whom God hath favoured and endowed with many and great privileges, which the Jews were very prone to do, as we see, Jer. vii. 4, &c., and elsewhere; for as God hath punished you formerly, doubt not but if you continue to sin, he will proceed in punishing you more and more for your sins.

25 Therefore he hath poured upon him the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle: [x]and it hath set him on fire round about, [y]yet he knew not; and it burned him, yet he laid it not to heart.

x 2 Kings 25. 9. y Hos. 7. 9.

The fury of his anger, and the strength of battle; most grievous judgments. Yet he knew not; they were secure and stupid under God's judgments, neither fearing them when threatened, nor truly sensible of God's hand in them, and of the causes of God's displeasure against them, and of the means of cure.

CHAP. XLIII.

Promises to protect and enlarge the church, 1—7. God appealeth to them as witnesses of his power and knowledge, 8—13. He foretelleth them the destruction of Babylon, and a new deliverance of his people, 14—21; whose sins, 22—24, against God's mercies, render them inexcusable, 25—28.

BUT now thus saith the LORD [a]that created thee, O Jacob, [b]and he that formed thee, O Israel, Fear not: [c]for I have redeemed thee, [d]I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine.

a ver. 7. b ver. 21. ch. 44. 2, 21, 24. c ch. 44. 6. d ch. 42. 6. & 45. 4.

But now thus saith the Lord; but notwithstanding thy gross insensibleness under former judgments, for which I might justly send far heavier ones upon thee, yet I will deal mercifully with thee. That created thee; that made thee his people, and that in so miraculous a manner, as if he had created thee a second time out of nothing; and therefore he will be gracious to his own workmanship. I have redeemed thee from the Egyptians, and divers other enemies; and therefore I will redeem thee again. By thy name; by the name of God's people, which was as proper and peculiar to them as the name of Israel.

2 [e]When thou passest through the waters, [f]I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou [g]walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.

e Ps. 66. 12. & 91. 3, &c. f Deut. 31. 6, 8. g Dan. 3. 25, 27.

Though I will chastise thee for thy sins, yet I will not suffer thine enemies utterly to destroy thee: compare Jer. xxx. 11.

3 For I am the LORD thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour: [h]I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.

h Prov. 11. 8. & 21. 18.

I gave Egypt for thy ransom: this was fulfilled either, 1. When God smote the Egyptians, both first-born and others, in Egypt, and drowned Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea, for the safety and benefit of his people; or, 2. When the king of Assyria, either Sennacherib, as many think, or rather Esar-haddon, who designed to revenge his father's disgrace and loss before Jerusalem upon the Jews, but was diverted and directed by God to employ his forces against Egypt, and Ethiopia, and Seba, as it follows. See the notes upon Isa. xx. 1, &c. Ethiopia and Seba; the Sabæans, who were confederate with the Ethiopians or Cushites.

4 Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable, and I have loved thee: therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy ‖life.

‖ Or, person.

Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable, and I have loved thee: so the sense is, From that time that I chose thee for my precious and peculiar treasure and people, I have had a great esteem and affection for thee. But the words may well be, and by some are, rendered thus, Since that (or, For that; or, Because) thou wast precious in my sight, thou wast honourable, (the same thing repeated in other words,) and I love thee. Therefore will I give men for thee; as I did give up the Egyptians, so I am ready to give up others to save thee, as occasion requires.

5 [i]Fear not: for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west;

[i] ch. 41. 10, 14. & 44. 2. Jer. 30. 10, 11. & 46. 27, 28.

Although the Jews shall for their sins be carried captives out of their own land northward and eastward into Babylon and the adjacent countries, and others of them shall flee southward and westward, and shall there pine away in their iniquities, as I threatened; yet their posterity I will bring back into Canaan, from all the places where they are dispersed.

6 I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth;

Give up; thou who hast so long had and held my people in bondage, resign them to me, and permit them to return to their own land. He speaks either to the countries themselves by a prosopopœia, or to the inhabitants of them. Bring my sons; do not only permit, but assist and further, their return.

7 Even every one that is [k]called by my name: for [l]I have created him for my glory, [m]I have formed him; yea, I have made him.

[k] ch. 63. 19. Jam. 2. 7. [l] Ps. 100. 3. ch. 29. 23. John 3. 3, 5. 2 Cor. 5. 17. Eph. 2. 10. [m] ver. 1.

Even every one that is called by my name: They are called by my name; I own them for my people and children; and therefore what kindness or cruelty you exercise to them I take it as done to myself. So it is an argument to move those people to let their captives go; or it is an argument to confirm the faith of God's people, that God would deliver them, because they are his own. I have created him for my glory; and therefore I will glorify my power, and goodness, and faithfulness in delivering them. I have made him; I have not only created them out of nothing, as I did all other people, but I have also formed and made them my peculiar people.

8 ¶ [n]Bring forth the blind people that have eyes, and the deaf that have ears.

[n] ch. 6. 9. & 42. 19. Ezek. 12. 2.

The sense is either, 1. Bring out of captivity my people who were blind and deaf, but now have their eyes and ears opened by my grace. So this verse relates to the foregoing passages. Or rather, 2. O ye idolatrous Gentiles, produce and bring forth your false gods, which have eyes, but see not; and ears, but hear not, as is said, Psal. cxv. 5, 6. So this verse belongs to the following context, in which God reneweth his contest with idols; which in this verse he calleth blind, and in the next verse proveth them so to be.

9 Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled: [o]who among them can declare this, and shew us former things? let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or let them hear, and say, It is truth.

[o] ch. 41. 21, 22, 26.

Let the people be assembled, to plead the cause of their idols with me. Who among them can declare this? this wonderful work of mine in bringing my people out of captivity, which I have already foretold, and shall further declare; and that so exactly, that I shall name the person by whom this work shall be begun, even Cyrus, who is yet unborn, and shall be so for above two hundred years: let any of your heathen gods do the like. Former things, not things already past, but such things as shall happen long before the return from the captivity, which yet your blind idols cannot foresee. See on Isa. xli. 22. Their witnesses, who can testify the truth and certainty of any such predictions of theirs. That they may be justified; that they may be owned for true gods, which in that case I allow them to expect. But of this argument see on Isa. xli. 22, 23. Or let them hear and say, It is truth; or if they can produce no evidence of any such thing, as I am well assured that they cannot, let them be silent, and hear me and my witnesses, as it follows in the next verse; and let them confess that what I say is truth, that I only am the true God, and that they are but vanity and falsehood.

10 [p]Ye are my witnesses, saith the LORD, [q]and my servant whom I have chosen: that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: [r]before me there was ‖no God formed, neither shall there be after me.

[p] ch. 44. 8. [q] ch. 42. 1. & 55. 4. [r] ch. 41. 4. & 44. 6. ‖ Or, not any formed of God.

Ye are my witnesses; they can produce no witnesses for themselves, but you my people are able to witness for me, that I have given you many plain demonstrations of my certain foreknowledge of future events, by my predictions and promises delivered to you from time to time. My servant whom I have chosen; either, 1. Isaiah, and other prophets, the singular word being put collectively: or, 2. Cyrus, who is an eminent instance and proof of God's foreknowledge: or, 3. The Messiah, as not only Christians, but even the Chaldee paraphrast, understands it, who is called by this very title, Isa. xlii. 1, who also is the most eminent witness in this cause; and that both passively, as he, and the time, and place, and other circumstances of his birth, and life, and death were particularly foretold by God in Scripture; and actively, as many future things were foretold by Christ, of which we have many examples in the New Testament. I am he; he of whom the present dispute is, or he whom I have affirmed myself to be. That I only am that true God whom we are now seeking in this debate. Before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me; the gods of the heathens neither had a being before me, nor shall continue after me: wherein more is understood than is expressed, that whereas the Lord is God from everlasting to everlasting, these false pretenders to the Deity are but of yesterday, and shall shortly be abolished. And withal he calleth them formed gods, in way of contempt, and to show the ridiculousness of their pretence to the Divinity, which are formed by the hands of men.

11 I, even I, [s]am the LORD; and beside me there is no saviour.

[s] ch. 45. 21. Hos. 13. 4.

That can and doth save his worshippers: whereby he implies that the false gods were not only weak, and unable to save their people, but also were the destroyers of their people, as being the great cause of their ruin.

12 I have declared, and have saved, and I have shewed, when there was no [t]strange god among you: [u]therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the LORD, that I am God.

[t] Deu. 32. 16. Ps. 81. 9. [u] ch. 44. 8. ver. 10.

I have declared, and have saved; I first foretold your deliverance, and then effected it. I have showed; I foretold it. This branch he repeated, because this is the principal argument used here, and chap. xli., to determine this controversy between God and idols. When there was no strange god among you; and this I did when you did not worship any idols, and therefore it could not be pretended that you had this knowledge from them.

13 [x]Yea, before the day was I am he; and there is none that can deliver out of my hand: I will work, and who shall †[y]let it?

[x] Ps. 90. 2. John 8. 58. † Heb. turn it back? [y] Job 9. 12. ch. 14. 27.

Before the day was; before all time; or, which is all one, from all eternity: or, since the day was; since the beginning of time and things, in all ages since the creation of the world. I am he; I am God, and I have proved myself to be so. There is none, none of those which are called gods, that can deliver out of my hand; that can save them whom I will destroy. Therefore they are impotent, and consequently no gods. I will work, and who shall let it? nor can they hinder me in any other work which I resolve to do.

14 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, your redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; For your sake I have sent to Babylon, and have brought down all their †nobles, and the Chaldeans, whose cry is in the ships.

† Heb. bars.

I have sent to Babylon; I have sent Cyrus, and the Medes and Persians with him, to war against Babylon, to this very end and purpose, that he might deliver you out of captivity, and restore you to your land according to promise. Have brought down from that height of power and glory to which they were advanced. All their nobles; their princes and great commanders, who as they are called shields, Psal

xlvii. 9, so here they are called bars, for the same reason, because of that strength and defence which they give to their people. The Chaldeans; the common people of Chaldea, together with their great men who had palaces in Babylon. Whose cry is in the ships; who make fearful outcries, as they flee away from the Persians in ships; which they had opportunity to do, because of their two great and famous rivers Euphrates and Tigris, and the several branches of them.

15 I am the LORD, your Holy One, the creator of Israel, your King.

Your Holy One; the Holy One of Israel, as he frequently styleth himself, who sanctify and glorify myself in this and such other glorious works, with respect to you, or for your benefit.

16 Thus saith the LORD, which [a] maketh a way in the sea, and a [a] path in the mighty waters;

a Ex. 14. 16, 22. Ps. 77. 19. ch. 51. 10. a Josh. 3. 13, 16.

Who as he formerly made a pathway for his people through the Red Sea, so he will in no less wonderful manner remove all impediments or difficulties out of the way of his people, when they return from Babylon.

17 Which [b] bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army and the power; they shall lie down together, they shall not rise: they are extinct, they are quenched as tow.

b Ex. 14. 4, —9, 25.

Which bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army and the power; or rather, Who brought forth the chariots, &c., i. e. Pharaoh, and his chariots, and horses, and army; as may be gathered from the next verse, where the things here mentioned are called former things, and things of old. They shall lie down together, they shall not rise; or, they did lie down together, (to wit, in the bottom of the sea,) they did not rise; they sank like lead, as it is said, Exod. xv. 10, and they never rose again to molest the Israelites, as God promised, Exod. xiv. 13. These two Hebrew verbs are of the future tense, but that seems to be put for the preter tense, because the two following verbs, which treat of the same thing, and are added to explain these, are of the preter tense. They are quenched as tow; as the wick of a candle when it is put into the water is wholly extinguished, and not the least spark of fire left, so were they utterly destroyed, and not one of them remained.

18 ¶ [c] Remember ye not the former things, neither consider the things of old.

c Jer. 16. 14. & 23. 7.

But although your former deliverance out of Egypt was in itself a most glorious work, which you ought always to remember and consider; yet this other work of your deliverance out of Babylon by Cyrus, and those blessings which shall follow upon it, and particularly that inestimable mercy of sending the Messiah, shall be so transcendent a favour, that, in comparison thereof, all your former deliverances are scarce worthy of your remembrance and consideration. Which exposition is confirmed by two parallel texts, Jer. xvi. 14, 15; xxiii. 7, 8. From all which texts laid together, it appears that this latter deliverance, compared with that out of Egypt, is not to be confined to their freedom from the Babylonish captivity, but to be extended to the consequences of it, and especially to the redemption by Christ, because otherwise that Egyptian deliverance was more glorious and wonderful in many respects than the Babylonian.

19 Behold, I will do a [d] new thing; now it shall spring forth; shall ye not know it? [e] I will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert.

d 2 Cor. 5. 17. Rev. 21. 5. e Ex. 17. 6. Num. 20. 11. Deut. 8. 15. Ps. 78. 16. ch. 35. 6. & 41. 18.

A new thing; such a work as was never yet done in the world, even the redemption of the world by the Messiah. Now; shortly, although it was not to be done till after some hundreds of years. For so the Scripture oft speaketh of things at a great distance of time as if they were now at hand, as Hag. ii. 6; James v. 9; Rev. xxii. 20, and elsewhere; which it doth to correct our impatience, and to make us willing to wait till God's time come; and to assure us that the mercy shall come as soon as ever it is fit for us, and we for it; and to make us sensible of the inconsiderableness of time, and all temporal things, in comparison of God, and of the eternal things; upon which account it is said that a thousand years are in God's sight but as one day, Psal. xc. 4. Shall ye not know it? certainly you Jews shall know it by experience, and shall find that I do not deceive you with vain hopes. I will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert; I will give you direction and provision in the wilderness, where there is commonly no path, and where all necessaries are wanting; which as it literally speaks of God's conducting them in the way from Babylon to Jerusalem, which lay through a great desert; so it is mystically meant of those spiritual blessings which God in and through Christ will confer upon all his people, not the Jews only, but also the Gentiles, who in prophetical language are oft compared to the wilderness, as Isa. xxxv. 1, and elsewhere.

20 The beast of the field shall honour me, the dragons and the ‖† owls: because [f] I give waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, to give drink to my people, my chosen.

‖ Or, ostriches. † Heb. daughters of the owl. f ch. 48. 21.

The beast of the field shall honour me; shall have cause, if they had abilities, to honour and praise me for their share in this mercy. Possibly the beast of the field may mystically signify the Gentiles, whom the Jews reputed as beasts, and who were as destitute of all saving knowledge as the beasts which perish, yet should become the Lord's people, as they seem to be called, ver. 21. The dragons; which live in dry and barren deserts, and are very thirsty, and therefore more sensible of this mercy. To give drink to my people; to whom these waters were principally designed, but the beasts fared better for their sakes. Thus Christ was primarily sent to the lost sheep of Israel, Matt. xv. 24; yet the Gentiles, there compared to dogs, fared better for the children, picking up some crumbs of their bread; and the Jews generally rejecting Christ, the Gentiles came in their stead.

21 [g] This people have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth my praise.

g Ps. 102. 18. ver. 1, 7. Luke 1. 74, 75. Eph. 1. 5, 6.

This people; my people, as he now called them, ver. 20, consisting in part of the Jews, but especially of the Gentiles; have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise; I have created as it were out of nothing, I have called them into my church, that I might have glory and praise from them for so stupendous a mercy.

22 ¶ But thou hast not called upon me, O Jacob; but thou [h] hast been weary of me, O Israel.

h Mal. 1. 13.

But; or, for, as this conjunction is oft used. So this may be added as a reason why God called the Gentiles to be his people, because the Jews forsook him. Thou hast not called upon me; thou hast grossly neglected or very slightly performed the duties of my worship. Thou hast been weary of me; thou hast not esteemed my service to be a privilege, as in truth it is, but as a burden and bondage. Compare Mal. i. 13.

23 [i] Thou hast not brought me the † small cattle of thy burnt offerings; neither hast thou honoured me with thy sacrifices. I have not caused thee to serve with an offering, nor wearied thee with incense.

i Amos 5. 25. † Heb. lambs, or, kids.

Thou hast not brought me the small cattle of thy burnt-offerings; either, 1. Because thou didst not offer thy sacrifices to me, but to idols. Or rather, 2. Because what thou didst offer was not done to me, not for my sake, not from a principle of love and obedience to me, not to please and honour me with it; but merely for thine own ends: which interpretation seems to be favoured by the following clause, and by comparing this with Zech. vii. 5, 6, Did ye fast unto me, even to me? And when ye did eat—did ye not eat for yourselves? Neither hast thou honoured me with thy sacrifices, because thou didst either neglect this work of sacrificing to me; or didst perform it merely out of custom or ill design, and not with a purpose to please and glorify me; or didst dishonour me, and pollute thy sacrifices by thy wicked course of life. I have not caused thee to serve with an offering, nor wearied thee with incense: so the sense may be this, I did not require these wearisome services of thee, to wit, upon these terms, or to be offered in such a manner, as God speaks, Isa. i. 11—13. But the words may very well be rendered, although I did not cause thee to serve with offerings, nor weary thee with incense; the particle although being here understood, as it is in many other places, as hath been formerly noted. And so this is an aggravation of their former sin, of being weary of and negligent in his service; although God hath not laid such heavy burdens upon them, nor required such hard services or costly offerings from them, as might give them cause to be weary, nor such as idolaters did freely and greedily perform in the service of their idols.

24 Thou hast bought me no sweet cane with money, neither hast thou †filled me with the fat of thy sacrifices: but thou hast made me to serve with thy sins, thou hast [k]wearied me with thine iniquities.

†Heb. made me drunk, or, abundantly moistened.
k ch. 1. 14. Mal. 2. 17.

Thou hast bought me no sweet cane; or, calamus, as this word is rendered, Exod. xxx. 23, which was used in the making of that precious ointment, Exod. xxx. 34, and as a perfume, or for the incense, Exod. xxx. 7: see Jer. vi. 20. The meaning of this clause seems to be this, Thou hast been niggardly in my service, when thou hast spared for no cost in the service of thine idols, as is elsewhere noted. Neither hast thou filled me with the fat of thy sacrifices; thou hast offered no more sacrifices than were simply necessary; thou hast not multiplied thy thank-offerings and freewill-offerings, though I have given thee sufficient occasion to do so. Thou hast made me to serve with thy sins; thou hast made me to bear the load and burden of thy sins, which are very grievous and oppressive to me, Amos ii. 13, and great exercises of my patience. Yea, thou hast made it necessary for me to take upon me the form of a servant, that I might bear and carry away thy sins. This clause and that which follows are opposed to and aggravated by what he said, ver. 23. I did not make thee to serve or weary thee with offerings, though that work was honourable and beneficial to thee, as well as conducing to my service; but thou hast made me to serve in the vilest manner, with such things as are not only offensive to me, but also pernicious to thee.

25 I, even I, am he that [l]blotteth out thy transgressions [m]for mine own sake, [n]and will not remember thy sins.

l ch. 44. 22. & 48. 9. Jer. 50. 20. Acts 3. 19.
m Ezek. 36. 22, &c.
n ch. 1. 18. Jer. 31. 34.

I, even I; I whom thou hast thus despised, and wearied, and provoked to destroy thee. That blotteth out thy transgressions out of my book, in which they were all written, and to be read unto thee and charged upon thee another day. See Jer. xvii. 1; Rev. xx. 12. Sins are oft compared to debts, Matt. vi. 12, 14, &c., which are written in the creditor's book, and crossed or blotted out when they are paid. For mine own sake; being moved thereunto not by thy merits, but by my own mere goodness and free mercy. Will not remember thy sins; so as to punish them, and destroy thee for them, as thou deservest.

26 Put me in remembrance: let us plead together: declare thou, that thou mayest be justified.

Put me in remembrance: I remember nothing by which thou hast deserved my favour and the pardon of thy sins; if thou knowest any such thing, bring it to my mind, I allow thee free liberty to plead with me, as it follows; and if thou hast right on thy side, I will justify thee. It is an ironical speech, whereby he insulteth over those who were puffed up with an opinion of their own innocency and merit; which was the case of many Jews, as this and other prophets have oft observed.

27 Thy first father hath sinned, and thy †teachers have transgressed against me.

†Heb. interpreters.
Mal. 2. 7, 8.

Thy first father; either, 1. Adam, from whom the guilt and filth of sin is propagated to thee; or rather, 2. Abraham, who might well be called the first father of the Israelites, because they all descended from him, had all their right and title to God's ordinances and promises, and other special privileges, from God's covenant made with Abraham and with his seed, and who is oft emphatically called their father, as Josh. xxiv 2; Isa. li. 2, &c; and the Jews gloried in and trusted to that relation which they had to Abraham, as we read, Matt. iii. 9; John viii. 33, and elsewhere. And this agrees well with the foregoing context. For having sufficiently intimated that they had no merits of their own, he now addeth, that even their father Abraham, to whose merits they trusted, had no merits of his own, nor any occasion of boasting; for he also was a sinful man, and hath left some instances of his failings. Or the first father may be put collectively for their forefathers; and so he tells them, that as they were sinners, so also were all their progenitors, yea, even the best of them, Abraham, and David, and others, for whose sakes they expected to be pardoned and rewarded. And this indeed is usual with God, to upbraid the Israelites with the sins of their fathers. Thy teachers; thy priests and prophets; who were their intercessors with God, and who were generally presumed to be the holiest part of that people; and therefore if these were transgressors, the people had no reason to fancy themselves to be innocent.

28 Therefore [o]I have profaned the ‖princes of the sanctuary, [p]and have given Jacob to the curse, and Israel to reproaches.

o ch. 47. 6. Lam. 2. 2, 6, 7.
p Ps. 79. 4. Jer. 24. 9. Dan. 9. 11. Zech. 8. 13.

I have profaned; as they have made themselves profane, so I have dealt with them as such, without any regard to the sacredness and dignity of their functions. I have exposed them to contempt and destruction. The princes of the sanctuary; the highest and best of your priests, whose persons were most sacred, and therefore supposed by themselves and others to be the furthest from danger. To the curse; to utter destruction, to which persons or things accursed were devoted, of which this Hebrew word is comstantly used. To reproaches; to be the objects of their enemies' scorn and reproaches.

A further promise of spiritual blessings, 1—6. The vanity of idols, and folly of idol-makers and worshippers, 7—20. An exhortation to praise God, 21—23, our Redeemer and Maker, 24, for his wisdom, 25, truth, 26, power, 27, and goodness, 28.

YET now hear, [a]O Jacob my servant; and Israel, whom I have chosen:

clr. 712.
a ver. 21. ch. 41. 8. & 43. 1. Jer. 30. 10. & 46. 27, 28.

Although I have chastised thee for thy sins, and had just cause utterly to destroy thee; yet in judgment I will remember mercy, and will still own thee for my servant and chosen people.

2 Thus saith the LORD that made thee, [b]and formed thee from the womb, which will help thee; Fear not, O Jacob, my servant; and thou, [c]Jesurun, whom I have chosen.

b ch. 43. 1, 7.
c Deut. 32. 15.

From the womb; from the time of thy birth, or coming out of the womb. From that time that I first took thee to be my people, I have been forming and fashioning thee, by giving thee laws, and ordinances, and teachers, by threatenings and corrections, and many other ways. He seems to allude to the practice of midwives, who use to compose all the parts of the new-born infant into a right frame. Jesurun; another name of Jacob or Israel, given to him Deut. xxxii. 15; xxxiii. 5, 26.

3 For I will [d]pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring:

d ch. 35. 7. Joel 2. 28. John 7. 38. Acts 2. 18.

I will pour water; my Spirit and blessing, which is frequently compared to water; and so it is expounded in the latter part of the verse. Upon him that is thirsty: either, 1. Upon him that desires it. Or rather, 2. Upon him that is destitute of it; for what is here thirsty, in the next clause it is called dry ground. My Spirit; the gifts and graces of my Spirit; which expression he seems designedly to use, to lift up the minds and hearts of the Jews from carnal and worldly things, to which they were too much addicted, unto spiritual and heavenly blessings, and thereby to prepare them for the better entertainment of the gospel. My blessing; all the blessings of my covenant, both spiritual and temporal.

4 And they shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water courses.

They shall spring up as among the grass; they shall increase and flourish like grass, and those herbs and plants which grow up in the midst of it.

5 One shall say, I am the LORD's; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the LORD, and surname himself by the name of Israel.

The blessing of God upon the Jews shall be so remarkable, that the Gentiles shall join themselves unto them, and accept the Lord for their God, and own themselves for his people.

6 Thus saith the LORD the King of Israel, [e] and his redeemer the LORD of hosts; [f] I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God.

e ver. 24. ch. 43. 1, 14.
f ch. 41. 4. & 48. 12. Rev. 1. 8, 17. & 22. 13.

Here God reneweth his contest with idols; which he insisteth upon so oft and so much, because his own people were exceeding prone to idolatry.

7 And [g] who, as I, shall call, and shall declare it, and set it in order for me, since I appointed the ancient people? and the things that are coming, and shall come, let them shew unto them.

g ch. 41. 4, 22. & 45. 21.

Who, which of all the heathen gods, as I, shall call, and shall declare? shall by his powerful call or word cause it to be, and by his infinite foreknowledge declare that it shall be. Or, shall publish and declare; two words expressing the same thing, as is usual. It; that which shall come to pass, whatsoever it be; which is easily understood out of the following clause. Set it in order; orderly relate all future events in the same manner as they shall happen. For me, Heb. to me, so as I may hear it, and thereby be convinced of their Divinity. Since I appointed the ancient people; since the time that I appointed or called the Israelites to be my people, whom he calleth the ancient people, because they were his people long before this time; or, as the words may be rendered, the everlasting people, because he determined that he would never totally and finally cast them off and destroy them, as he would do other nations. But the words are and may well be otherwise rendered, since I constituted or made (as this word is elsewhere rendered) the people of the world; since I first made man upon earth, as the LXX. and others understand it. Let them give me an account of any of their predictions of future events from the beginning of the world to this day. The things that are coming, and shall come; such things as are near at hand, and such as are to come hereafter. Unto them; unto their worshippers, who consult their oracles about future events, as I have told them unto thee, O Jacob, as it follows in the next verse. So the pronoun relative is put for the antecedent, which is left to be understood out of the following clause. Or, to or for themselves, in their own defence. Although these words might have been omitted in the translation, as being insignificant; such pronouns being oft redundant in the Hebrew language, as Gen. xii. 1, and oft elsewhere, as also in the Greek and Latin.

8 Fear ye not, neither be afraid: [h] have not I told thee from that time, and have declared it? [i] ye are even my witnesses. Is there a God beside me? yea, [k] there is no †God; I know not any.

h ch. 41. 22. i ch. 43. 10, 12. k Deu. 4. 35, 39. & 32. 39. 1 Sam. 2. 2. 2 Sam. 22. 32. ch. 45. 5. † Heb. rock, Deut. 32. 4.

Have not I told thee? thee, O Israel, whom he bids not to fear. The sense is, I call you Israelites to bear me witness, whether I have not, from time to time, acquainted you with things to come, such as your sojourning in a strange land for four hundred years, and your deliverance and happiness after that time, Gen. xv. 13, 14, and many things of the like nature? From that time; from the time when I appointed the ancient people, as I now said, ver. 7. These were pregnant instances of God's prediction of things to come, not only from the beginning of the Jewish commonwealth, but even from the first ages of the world, as unto Enoch, Jude 14, and unto Noah, Gen. vi. 13, to say nothing of what other authors relate concerning Adam and Seth. Have declared it; have published it to the world in my sacred records. My witnesses, both of my predictions, and of the exact agreeableness of events to them. Is there a God besides me? judge by this character whether I be not the only true God. Yea, there is no God; I know not any; if any of you be wiser than I am, I am willing to be informed. It is a sarcastical speech. But this clause may be, and is by others, taken interrogatively, do not I know it? Is it not a certain and undeniable truth, that there is no other God?

9 ¶ [l] They that make a graven image are all of them vanity; and their †delectable things shall not profit; and they are their own witnesses; [m] they see not, nor know; that they may be ashamed.

l ch. 41. 24, 29. † Heb. desirable. m Ps. 115. 4, &c.

Are all of them vanity; hereby discover themselves to be vain, empty, or foolish men. Or thus, They that make graven images, all of them make (which word may fitly be repeated out of the foregoing clause, as is very usual in Scripture) a vanity, or a thing of nought. Which translation seems better to agree, 1. With the following clause, which is added to explain this, in which, not the idol-makers, but the idols themselves, are said to be vain or unprofitable. 2. With the use of the Hebrew word in Scripture, which is never applied to persons, but constantly to things, and sometimes to idols, as 1 Sam. xii. 21. Their delectable things; their idols, in the sight and worship of which they take so much pleasure. They are their own witnesses; they that make them are witnesses against themselves, and against their idols, because they very well know that they are not gods, but the work of their own hands, in which there is nothing but mean matter and man's art. They see not, nor know; or, that they (to wit, their idols) do not see nor know, have neither sense nor understanding. That they may be ashamed; therefore they have just cause to be ashamed of their folly and stupidity, in worshipping such senseless things.

10 Who hath formed a god, or molten a graven image [n] that is profitable for nothing?

n Jer. 10. 5. Hab. 2. 18.

What man in his wits can esteem that a god which his own hands have formed, or melt a graven image (understand out of the former clause, to be his god) which is profitable for nothing? He speaks of melting a graven image, because the image was first molten and cast in a mould, and then polished and graven with a tool, as was observed before. Or thus, Who art thou, O man, that formest a god, or meltest a graven image to worship it, which is profitable for nothing? Come hither, and let me reason the case with thee; which he doth in the following verses. So this verse is a kind of summons to idolaters to come and plead their own cause.

11 Behold, all his fellows shall be [o] ashamed: and the workmen, they are of men: let them all be gathered together, let them stand up; yet they shall fear, and they shall be ashamed together.

o Ps. 97. 7. ch. 1. 29. & 42. 17. & 45. 16.

All his fellows; either, 1. The workmen, as it follows, who in this work are companions or partners with him, by whose cost and command the work is done. Or, 2. Those who any way assist and encourage him in this work, and join with him in worshipping the image which he maketh. They are of men; they are of mankind, and therefore cannot possibly make a god. Or, they are of the meanest sort of men; for so the Hebrew word adam sometimes signifies. They shall be ashamed together; though all combine together, and stand up with all their might to maintain the cause of their false gods, they shall be filled with fear and confusion, when God shall plead his cause against them.

12 [p] The smith ‖with the tongs both worketh in the coals, and fashioneth it with hammers, and worketh it with the strength of his arms: yea, he is hungry, p ch. 40. 19. & 41. 6. Jer. 10. 3, &c. Wisd. 13. 11, &c. ‖ Or, with a saw.

and his strength faileth: he drinketh no water, and is faint.

Both worketh in the coals, and fashioneth it with hammers; first he makes the metal soft and pliable, by putting it among burning coals, and then he taketh it out, and beateth it into what form he pleaseth. It must be here noted, that some of these images were made of brass and iron, as others were of gold and silver, Dan. v. 4. He is hungry, and his strength faileth; he drinketh no water, and is faint: this is mentioned, either, 1. As an argument of the vanity of idols, which cannot relieve their poor workmen, when they are ready to faint away through hunger, and thirst, and weariness. Or, 2. As an evidence of great zeal and industry in carrying on this work, so that they forget or neglect to eat and drink when their necessities require it. This I prefer, 1. Because it suits best with the next foregoing clause, he worketh with the strength of his arms, i. e. fervently, and putting forth all his might in the work. 2. Because the prophet in this, and in the next following verses, is only describing the mechanical part, or the matter of images, and the art and labour of the workmen in making them; and afterwards proceeds to the theological consideration of the thing, and the confutation of these practices, as we shall see.

13 The carpenter stretcheth out his rule; he marketh it out with a line; he fitteth it with planes, and he marketh it out with the compass, and maketh it after the figure of a man, according to the beauty of a man; that it may remain in the house.

He here speaks, either, 1. Of the same image, which is supposed to be made of wood, and then covered with some metal; or, 2. Of another sort of images made of wood, as the former might be made of iron. It is not material which way you understand it. He marketh it with a line; he measureth and marketh that portion of wood by his rule and line of which the idol is to be made. According to the beauty of a man; in the same comely shape and proportions which are in a living man, whom he designs to represent as exactly as is possible. That it may remain, or sit, or dwell; which implies either, 1. That it cannot stir out of its place; or, 2. That when the image is made, it is set up and fixed in its appointed place. In the house; either in the temple appointed for it; or in the dwelling-house of him that made it; that he and his family might more frequently give worship to it, and might receive protection from it, as idolaters vainly imagined.

14 He heweth him down cedars, and taketh the cypress and the oak, which he ‖strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest: he planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it.

‖ Or, taketh courage.

The cypress and the oak, which afford the best and most durable timber. Which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest: the sense of the words thus rendered is, that he planteth, and with care and diligence improveth, those trees among and above all the trees of the forest, that he or his posterity may thence have materials for their images, and those things which belong to them. And this sense seems to be favoured by the following clause, wherein it is said, he planteth an ash, for this very reason. Or the sense may be this, which he suffers to grow to greater strength and largeness than other trees of the forest, that they may be better and fitter for his use. Heb. and he strengtheneth himself, &c.; and he useth all his strength among the trees of the forest, in planting such as are proper for this end, in walking hither and thither to survey which is the best of them, in hewing them down, and in other things relating to them.

15 Then shall it be for a man to burn: for he will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread; yea, he maketh a god, and worshippeth it; he maketh it a graven image, and falleth down thereto.

Having related the practices of idolaters, he now discovers the vanity and folly of them; that he maketh his fire and his god of the same materials, distinguished only by the art of man.

16 He burneth part thereof in the fire; with part thereof he eateth flesh; he roasteth roast, and is satisfied: yea, he warmeth himself, and saith, Aha, I am warm, I have seen the fire:

He eateth flesh; he dresseth flesh for his eating. I have seen the fire; I have felt the warmth of it. Seeing is oft put for other senses, as feeling, hearing, &c., as hath been oft observed before.

17 And the residue thereof he maketh a god, even his graven image: he falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and prayeth unto it, and saith, Deliver me; for thou art my god.

18 [q]They have not known nor understood: for [r]he hath †shut their eyes, that they cannot see; and their hearts, that they cannot understand.

[q] ch. 45. 20.
[r] 2 Thess. 2. 11.

They have not known nor understood: this showeth that they want common discretion, and have not the understanding of a man in them. He, to wit, God; who is easily understood, and is oft expressed by this pronoun he; and to whom this very act is frequently ascribed in other places of Scripture. And therefore men need not to be shy in ascribing it to God here. Which yet is to be soberly understood; not as if God did make men wicked, but only permits them so to be, and orders and overrules their wickedness to his own glorious ends. And such passages as these are added in such cases to give an account of the prodigious madness of sinners herein; because, as they wilfully shut their own eyes, and harden their own hearts, so God judicially blinds and hardens them, and sends strong delusions upon them, and gives them up to believe lies, and then it is no wonder if they fall into such dotages.

19 And none †[s]considereth in his heart, neither is there knowledge nor understanding to say, I have burned part of it in the fire; yea, also I have baked bread upon the coals thereof; I have roasted flesh, and eaten it: and shall I make the residue thereof an abomination? shall I fall down to †the stock of a tree?

[s] ch. 46. 8.
† Heb. that which comes of a tree?

None considereth in his heart; whereby he implies that the true cause of this, as well as of other absurd and brutish practices of sinners, is the neglect of serious and impartial consideration of things.

20 He feedeth on ashes: [t]a deceived heart hath turned him aside, that he cannot deliver his soul, nor say, Is there not a lie in my right hand?

[t] Hos. 4. 12. Rom. 1. 21. 2 Thess. 2. 11.

He feedeth on ashes, which is an unsavoury, unprofitable, and pernicious food, and no less unsatisfying, uncomfortable, and mischievous is the worship of idols. A deceived heart; a mind corrupted and deceived by long custom, deep prejudice, gross error, and especially by his own lusts. Hath turned him aside from the way of truth, from the knowledge and worship of the true God, unto this brutish idolatry. Cannot deliver his soul from the snares and dangers of idolatry. This cannot is to be understood morally, so as to note the great difficulty, but not the utter impossibility of it; for if idolaters would consider things, they might be convinced of and turned from that gross way of wickedness, as is implied from the foregoing verse. Is there not a lie in my right hand? what is this idol, which I have made with my right hand, i. e. with all my strength? as was said before; the right hand being the strongest and the chief instrument of this and other actions: which I set at my right hand, as the true God is said in Scripture to be at the right hand of his people, Psal. xvi. 8; cix. 31; cxxi. 5: which I highly honour; for the most honourable place was on the right hand, as is known: to which I look and trust for relief and assistance, which God in Scripture is said to afford to his people, by being at and holding of their right hand, Psal. lxxiii. 23; cx. 5. What, I say, is this idol? Is it not a lie, which though it seems and pretends to be something, and to be a god, yet in truth is nothing but vanity and falsehood, deceiving all that put their trust in it?

21 ¶ Remember these, O Jacob and u ver. 1, 2. Israel; for [u]thou art my servant: I have formed thee; thou art my servant: O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of me.

Remember these; either these men; or, which comes to one, these things, the deep ignorance and stupidity of idolaters; which may be a warning to thee. Thou shalt not be forgotten of me; I will not forget nor forsake thee; and therefore thou shalt have no need of idols. Or, as the ancient interpreters and divers others render it, do not forget me; what I am, and what I have done, and can and will do, for thee; the forgetting whereof is the ready way to idolatry.

I have blotted out, as a thick cloud; as the sun commonly dissolveth, or the wind scattereth, the thickest and blackest cloud, so as there is no remnant nor appearance of it left. Return from thine idolatry, and other wicked practices. I have redeemed thee; therefore thou art mine, and obliged to return and adhere to me.

By such invitations to the senseless creatures to praise God with and for his people, he signifies the transcendent greatness of this mercy and deliverance, sufficient to make even the stones, if it were possible, to break forth into God's praises; and withal, that as the brute creatures were sufferers by man's fall, so they should receive benefit by man's redemption.

That frustrateth the tokens of the liars; of the magicians, and astrologers, and sorcerers, who were numerous, and greatly employed and esteemed in Babylon, Isa. xlvii. 12, 13; Dan. ii. 2, 48, and who had foretold the long continuance and prosperity of the Chaldean empire. But, saith God, I will confute their tokens or predictions, and prove them to be liars. And maketh diviners mad with grief for the disappointment of their hopes and predictions, and their disgrace and loss which followed it. That turneth wise men backward; stopping their way, thwarting and blasting their designs, so as they can proceed no further, but are forced to retreat and take new counsels, and giving them up to such counsels and courses as are foolish and pernicious to themselves.

g Zech. 1. 6. 26 [g]That confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built, and I will raise up the †decayed places thereof:

† Heb. wastes.

Of his servant; of his servants, the prophets, as appears from the next clause, which answers to this, where he useth the plural number, his messengers; Isaiah and other prophets, whom God sent upon this errand, to foretell the destruction of Babylon, and the redemption of his people.

27 [h]That saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers: h See Jer. 50. 38. & 51. 32, 36.

That with a word can and will dry up the sea (which in Scripture is very frequently called the deep, as Psal. cvii. 24; Isa. lxiii. 13; Jonah ii. 3, &c.) and rivers, and remove all impediments, and make the way plain, that my people may return. Some think these words relate to that stratagem of Cyrus, whereby he diverted, and in a great measure dried up, the river Euphrates, and made it passable for his army. But he seems rather to allude to that great action of God's drying up the Red Sea and Jordan, to give passage to the Israelites.

28 That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure: even saying to Jerusalem, [i]Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid. i 2 Chron. 36. 22, 23. Ezra i. 1, &c. ch. 45. 13.

Cyrus, whom God here designeth by his proper name two hundred years before he was born, that this might be an undeniable evidence of the certainty and exactness of God's foreknowledge, and a convincing argument, and so most fit to conclude this dispute between God and idols. He is my shepherd; him will I set up to be the shepherd of my people, to rescue them from wolves or tyrants, to gather them together, to rule them gently, and to provide comfortably for them. All my pleasure; all that I command him to do, even to give leave and order for the rebuilding of the city and temple of Jerusalem, as it here follows.

The treasures of darkness; such as have been stored up and long kept in dark and secret places, as well in Babylon, Jer. l. 37; li. 13, as in other countries, which Cyrus conquered; and from which he took infinite treasures, as Pliny and others relate. That thou mayest know, by the accomplishment of these predictions.

Let the skies pour down righteousness; the righteous and gracious acts of God for his people shall be so many and illustrious, as if God rained down showers of righteousness out of heaven. Let the earth open; open itself, either to receive those showers of righteousness to be poured down from heaven, or to bring forth those fruits which might be expected from such showers. Let them, the heavens and the earth conspiring together, bring forth salvation; the redemption of God's people. Let righteousness spring up together; together with salvation. Whereas persons or people are sometimes delivered from their troubles by unjust courses, this shall be effected with righteousness, both on God's part, who will hereby assert his own justice and faithfulness to his people; and on Cyrus's part, who will do a most righteous and worthy action in rescuing a righteous and oppressed nation from cruel tyrants and oppressors. I the Lord have created it; this great work of salvation and righteousness; whereof, though Cyrus is the instrument, I am the chief author.

9 Woe unto him that striveth with q ch. 29. 16. Jer. 18. 6. Rom. 9. 20. the potsherds of the earth. q Shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What makest thou? or thy work, He hath no hands?

Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker! This woe is denounced, either, 1. Against those Jews who, hearing this and many other prophecies and promises of their deliverance out of captivity, and yet continuing in captivity, were ever prone to distrust God, and to murmur at him for punishing them so grievously, and for not making more speed to deliver them. Or, 2. Against the Babylonians, the great opposers of Cyrus, and of the deliverance of God's people, whom they were resolved to keep in bondage, in spite of God and men. And therefore as God here makes many glorious promises to Cyrus, in order to this work; so he pronounceth a curse upon them who should endeavour to hinder it, and admonisheth the Babylonians, that they did not only fight against Cyrus, a man like themselves, but against God, the Maker and Governor of the world. For what Nebuchadnezzar spoke with respect to those three Jews, Dan. iii. 15, the Babylonians spoke in their hearts, in reference to the people of the Jews, Who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands? Let the potsherd strive with the potsherds of the earth; contend, if you please, with your fellow creatures, but not with your Creator. Thy work: he turneth his speech to the potter, of whom he spake in the third person in the foregoing clause; such sudden changes of persons being usual in prophetical writings. He hath no hands; the potter that made me had no hands, i. e. no ability or skill to make good work.

10 Woe unto him that saith unto his father, What begettest thou? or to the woman, What hast thou brought forth?

As it were an absurd and impudent thing for a child to quarrel with his parents, either simply for begetting him, or for begetting him of this or that sex, contrary to his desire; no better is it for any persons to quarrel with God the Maker and Father of all things, as God is called, 1 Cor. viii. 6, for disposing of them and their affairs by his providence as he sees fit, and otherwise than they desire or expect; as the Jews quarrelled with God for bringing them into captivity, and the Babylonians for translating the empire from them to the Persians.

11 Thus saith the LORD, the Holy One of Israel, and his Maker, Ask me of things to come concerning r my sons, and con- r Jer. 31. 9.
cerning s the work of my hands command s Is. 29. 23. ye me.

His Maker; Israel's Maker, who not only created him, as I did all others, but made him a new creature, and a peculiar people to myself. Ask me of things to come concerning my sons, and concerning the work of my hands command ye me: the words thus rendered contain a concession or permission; and the sense may be this, Although the potter doth not give an account to the clay, nor parents to their children; yet I will so far condescend to you, as to be at your command in this matter, to give you an account of these great actions of mine, for which you quarrel with me. As for the expression, command ye me, though it seem to be harsh, yet there are instances in Scripture of such wonderful condescensions, as when it is said, that the Lord will make his people in heaven to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them, Luke xii. 37. But the words seem to be better rendered interrogatively, as they are by some interpreters, Do you, or will you, ask me of things to come concerning my sons, and concerning the work of mine hands will ye command me? Will you not allow me that liberty which yourselves take, of disposing of my own children and works as I see fit? Must I give you an account of these matters? Will you set bounds to me by your commands, that I shall do this, and not that, according to your good pleasure? This is intolerable boldness in you; and yet I am able to give a good account of my actions. And the account is given in the following verse.

12 t I have made the earth, and u cre- t ch. 42. 5. Jer. 27. 5.

stretched out the heavens, and x all their x Gen. 2. 1. host have I commanded.

I have made the earth, and created man upon it; they are wholly and solely my creatures, and therefore absolutely at my disposal. All their host have I commanded; I have commanded them to be, or made them by my command, or the word of my power: compare Psal. cxlviii. 5.

13 [y]I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will ‖direct all his ways: he shall [z]build my city, and he shall let go my captives, [a]not for price nor reward, saith the LORD of hosts.

I have raised him; Cyrus, who was named before, ver. 1. In righteousness; not in a way of absolute sovereignty, as I might have done, but most justly, to punish the wicked Babylonians, to plead the cause of the innocent oppressed ones, to manifest my own righteousness, and truth, and goodness. Direct all his ways; guide and assist him in all his travels and marches, in all his attempts, and battles, and sieges, crowning him with success in all his undertakings. Not for price nor reward; freely, without requiring any ransom for or from them, as is usual in such cases. Such an exact prediction of these things, which depended wholly upon the mind and will of Cyrus, is mentioned here, as an infallible evidence of the certainty of God's foreknowledge, and of his being the only true God, because idols could discover no such things at such a distance of time.

14 Thus saith the LORD, [b]The labour of Egypt, and merchandise of Ethiopia and of the Sabeans, men of stature, shall come over unto thee, and they shall be thine: they shall come after thee; [c]in chains they shall come over, and they shall fall down unto thee, they shall make supplication unto thee, saying, [d]Surely God is in thee; and [e]there is none else, there is no God.

The labour of Egypt; the wealth gotten by their labour. Men of stature; a tall and strong people, who yet shall use their strength not to oppose thee, but to serve thee, and to bring their labour to thee. Shall come over unto thee; either, 1. To thee, O Cyrus: because thou wast so generous as to dismiss my people freely, I will give thee another and a better recompence, even the labour of Egypt, &c. Or, 2. To thee, O my city, or my captivity or captive people. For it is not to be neglected, that there are no less than six pronouns in this verse, all which are of the feminine gender; which seems not to agree to Cyrus. It is true which is objected by the most learned author of this part of the English Annotations, that the Scripture oft speaks of states and kingdoms in the feminine gender; but when it speaks of any particular king or emperor, it constantly speaks of him in the masculine gender, as it doth of Cyrus in this very chapter, ver. 1, and elsewhere. And thus the sense of the place seems to be this, Jerusalem shall not only be rebuilt, but the wealth and glory of other countries shall be brought to it again, as it was in former times; which although it was in part verified in Jerusalem, yet it was much more fully accomplished in the church of the gospel, which is oft expressed in Scripture under the name of Jerusalem; and in the accession of the Gentiles to that church, which began in Jerusalem, and from thence spread itself into all the parts of the world. And this sense seems best to agree with the latter part of this and with the following verse, as we shall see. In chains they shall come over; they shall be taken captive by thee, and willingly submit themselves to thee; which was accomplished in the conversion of the Gentiles, whose subjection to God's church is oft expressed in Scripture under such metaphors as this; as Psal. xlv. 5; cxlix. 8, &c.; Psal. lxviii. 18, compared with Eph. iv. 8. They shall make supplication unto thee; to obtain thy favour and society. Surely God is in thee, or, with thee. We plainly discern that God is on thy side, or in the midst of thee; and therefore we desire to join ourselves with thee. There is none else, there is no God; we are now convinced that thou art the only true God, and that idols are vain and empty nothings; which was but very obscurely fulfilled in Cyrus's time, but was most evidently and eminently accomplished in the days of the Messiah, of whom Cyrus was a type; as also this deliverance of the Jews from Babylon by Cyrus was a type of the redemption of God's people by Christ.

[f] Ps. 44. 24. ch. 8. 17. & 57. 17.

15 Verily thou art a God [f]that hidest thyself, O God of Israel, the Saviour.

These are the words of the prophet, drawn from him by the contemplation of the great and various works and dispensations of God towards his church, and in the world. That hidest thyself, to wit, from thy people for a season. Thy counsels are deep and incomprehensible, thy ways and carriages are past finding out, and full of beautiful variety. Sometimes thou hidest thy face, and withdrawest thy help from thy people, and sometimes thou dost show thyself to be their God and Saviour, as it follows. And therefore it is meet that we should patiently wait for the accomplishment of these glorious things here promised to us. And this admonition is most fitly inserted here, to prevent the mistakes of God's people, and to intimate that these promises were not to be speedily executed, but that they must expect and prepare for many and sharp afflictions before that time should come, which yet should end in their salvation.

16 They shall be ashamed, and also confounded, all of them: they shall go to confusion together that are [g]makers of idols.

They; the idolatrous Gentiles, as it is explained in the end of the verse, opposed to Israel in the beginning of the next verse. Makers; either the artificers, or the chief masters that set them on work, and consequently all their worshippers; although the makers being most guilty, and the cause of the sins of others, might justly expect a higher degree of confusion.

[h] ch. 26. 4. ver. 25. Rom. 11. 26.

17 [h]But Israel shall be saved in the LORD with an everlasting salvation: ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end.

With an everlasting salvation; not for a short time, as it was in the days of the judges and of the kings, under whom their dangers and calamities did frequently return upon them; but unto all ages, as it follows; whence it appears that he speaks not only nor chiefly of their deliverance out of Babylon, which was far from being complete or perpetual, as appears both from Scripture, as Ezra ix. 8, and elsewhere, and from other authors; but of their redemption by Christ, by which this was truly and fully verified unto a great number of Israelites after the flesh, and especially unto the mystical, God's church and people, who are frequently called in Scripture by that name; as the ordinances and privileges of the gospel are commonly described in the Old Testament by expressions borrowed from the Levitical dispensation. And that this is the meaning of the place is evident from ver. 22, wherein all the ends of the earth are said to be sharers in this salvation.

[i] ch. 42. 5.

18 For thus saith the LORD [i]that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited: [k]I am the LORD; and there is none else.

[k] ver. 5.

This description of God is here added, either, 1. To detect the vanity of idols, by asserting that none was to be owned as the true God besides that one God who made the heavens and the earth, and the inhabitants thereof. Or, 2. To demonstrate God's sufficiency to fulfil all these glorious promises made to his church, because he made the world of nothing, and upholds it by the word of his power; and withal to discover God's goodness to mankind, inasmuch as he did not create the earth in vain, but for the use and comfort of men, that it might be a fit habitation for them; whence it was easy to infer that God would much more be gracious to his own people.

[l] Deu. 30. 11. ch. 48. 16. [m] Ps. 19. 8. & 119. 137, 138.

19 I have not spoken in [l]secret, in a dark place of the earth: I said not unto the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me in vain: [m]I the LORD speak righteousness, I declare things that are right.

I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth: the heathen idols deliver their oracles darkly and doubtfully, in obscure cells and caverns of the earth, or out of the bellies of their priests; but I have delivered my oracles to Israel publicly and plainly, as one that was neither afraid nor ashamed to utter my mind, lest I should be convinced of folly and falsehood; which was the case of idols. Seek ye me in vain; serve and worship me for nought. As I appointed them work, so I promised, and from time to time have given, and shall give, them abundant recompence for their service; whereas the Gentiles seek to their idols in vain, for they can do them no good, as is observed in the next verse. I the Lord speak righteousness, I declare things that are right; I require nothing of my people which is not highly just and good; whereas the idols commanded their worshippers to do many sinful and shameful things, even in their worship, as is notoriously known.

20 ¶ Assemble yourselves and come; draw near together, ye that are escaped n ch. 44. 17, 18, 19. & 46. 7. & 48. 7. Rom. 1. 22, 23. of the nations: [n]they have no knowledge that set up the wood of their graven image, and pray unto a god that cannot save.

Assemble yourselves and come; draw near together; to debate the business with me concerning the divinity of your idols, and hear what I have said, and am now about to say again, in that matter. Ye that are escaped of the nations; the remnant of the Gentiles, which shall survive those great and many destructions which I am bringing upon the heathen nations for their abominable idolatries and other wickedness. Let these dreadful judgments upon others, and God's singular mercy in sparing you, awaken you to a more impartial and serious consideration of this point, and cast off those idols, which have now discovered their own vanity and inability to help those who serve them and trust in them. They have no knowledge; they hereby discover their deep ignorance and stupidity. That set up in a high place, where it may be seen and worshipped.

21 Tell ye, and bring them near; yea, o ch. 41. 22. & 43. 9. & 44. 7. & 46. 10. & 48. 14. let them take counsel together: [o]who hath declared this from ancient time? who hath told it from that time? have p ver. 5, 14, 18. ch. 44. 8. & 45. 9. & 48. 3, &c. not I the Lord? [p]and there is no God else beside me; a just God and a Saviour; there is none beside me.

Let them take counsel together, to maintain the cause of their idols. Who hath declared this? this great work of which I have spoken, concerning Babylon's destruction, and the redemption of God's people. A just God and a Saviour; whereas the gods of the heathens are neither just nor saviours to their people, but wicked, and the authors and abettors of all sorts of wickedness; and so far from being either able or willing to save their worshippers, that they are the chief occasion of their utter destruction.

q Ps. 22. 27. & 65. 5. 22 [q]Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else.

Upon these considerations, I advise all people upon earth, from one end to the other, to cast away their idols, and to turn their eyes and hearts to me, expecting salvation from me, and from me only; and their labour shall not be in vain; for they shall be saved: the imperative being put for the future, as Gen. xlii. 18, and oft elsewhere. And this is not only an exhortation to the Gentiles to turn from idols to God, but a prediction that they shall turn to him, and look upon Christ, who shall be the author of salvation to all that obey him, whether Jews or Gentiles, which is confirmed by the following verse.

r Gen. 22. 16. Heb. 6. 13. s Rom. 14. 11. Phil. 2. 10. t Gen. 31. 53. Deut. 6. 13. Ps. 63. 11. ch. 65. 16. 23 [r]I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every [s]knee shall bow, [t]every tongue shall swear.

I have sworn by myself, which is the highest and most solemn oath that is possible, Heb. vi. 13, and therefore signifies that the matter here sworn is of an extraordinary importance. The word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness; it is not a vain word rashly uttered, and afterwards never remembered nor observed, but what I sincerely speak, and will most faithfully and infallibly perform. Shall not return, to wit, unto me void, or without effect, as this phrase is more fully delivered, Isa. lv. 11. It is a metaphor from ambassadors, who sometimes return to their princes without any success in their business. Unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear; not only the Jews, but a people of all nations, shall worship me, and submit to my laws; which is signified by an outward act, the bowing of the knee, which is a posture of reverence and subjection; and by one eminent part of God's worship, which is swearing by his name.

24 ‖Surely, shall one say, in the Lord have I [u]†righteousness and strength: even to him shall men come; and [x]all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed.

‖ Or, Surely he shall say of me, In the Lord is all righteousness and strength.
u Jer. 23. 5. 1 Cor. 1. 30. † Heb. righteousnesses. x ch. 41. 11.

Shall one say; or, shall he say; each or every one of those whom he now said that they should bow their knees to God, and swear by him, ver. 23. Or, it shall be said; such active verbs being oft used impersonally. In the Lord; by or from God alone, or the Messiah, who is the true Jehovah as well as man. Have I righteousness, to justify me from all things, from which I could not be justified by the law of Moses, as is said, Acts xiii. 39. This plainly points us to the Messiah, whose very name is, The Lord our Righteousness, Jer. xxiii. 6, and whose great business it was to bring in everlasting righteousness, Dan. ix. 24, and who is made unto us of God righteousness, 1 Cor. i. 30. Strength; support and assistance to bear all my burdens, and overcome all my enemies, and perform all my duties. The sense is, the Gentiles shall expect and obtain from Christ both justification, or forgiveness of sins by his blood, and sanctification by his Spirit. To him shall men come; the Gentiles shall come to God and Christ, either, 1, By constraint or necessity, to be judged by him at the last day; or, 2. Willingly, by prayer to seek, and by faith to receive, righteousness and strength from him; which seems better to agree with the foregoing clause, which speaks of true believers only. Coming to Christ is put for believing on him, Matt. xi. 28; John v. 40; vi. 35—37, and elsewhere. And all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed; or, but (as this particle is oft rendered) all that are, &c. But all his implacable enemies shall be brought to shame and punishment.

25 [y]In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and [z]shall glory.

y ver. 17. z 1 Cor. 1. 31.

All the seed of Israel; all Israelites indeed, whether Jews or Gentiles; all believers, who are frequently called God's Israel in Scripture, as Psal. xxiv. 6; Rom. ix. 6; xi. 26; Gal. vi. 16. Justified; acquitted both from real guilt before God, and from all false aspersions before the world; for this justification of the true Israel is opposed to their enemies being ashamed, ver. 24, which seems to design their public shame and confusion before God and men. Shall glory; shall not only receive him, but shall rejoice and triumph in him as their God and portion.

CHAP. XLVI.

The ruin of Babylon and her idols, 1, 2. God's love and faithfulness to the Jews, 3, 4. Idols not to be compared with God, 5—8, for power, knowledge, and sure salvation, 9—13.

BEL [a]boweth down, Nebo stoopeth, their idols were upon the beasts, and upon the cattle: your carriages were heavy loaden; [b]they are a burden to the weary beast.

cir. 712. a ch. 21. 9. Jer. 50. 2. & 51. 44. b Jer. 10. 5.

Bel; the chief idol of the Babylonians, Jer. l. 2; li. 44, called by profane historians Jupiter Belus. Boweth down; as the Babylonians used to bow down to him to worship him, so now he boweth down and submits himself to the victorious Persians. Nebo; another of the famous idols, which used to deliver oracles, as his name signifies. Their idols were upon the beasts; were taken and broken, and the materials of them, which were gold, and silver, and brass, as both Scripture and other authors witness, were carried upon beasts into Persia. Your carriages, O ye Persians; to whom he suddenly turneth his speech, as is usual; were heavy laden; they lie upon the backs of your cattle like dull, and unprofitable, and heavy burdens to the beasts, as they had been to men before.

2 They stoop, they bow down together;
c Jer. 48. 7. † Heb. their soul. they could not deliver the burden, [c]but †themselves are gone into captivity.

They; either, 1. The idols, of whom these words are used, ver. 1. Or, 2. The Babylonians, who are sufficiently implied in that expression, their idols, ver. 1. They bow down together; either, 1. One as well as another; or, 2. The Babylonians and their idols together, neither could help the other. They could not deliver the burden; either, 1. The idols could not deliver themselves, who were now a burden to the beasts, and carried away by them; or, 2. The Babylonians could not deliver their idols, which he now had called burdens. And this sense seems most probable from the following clause, which clearly speaks of the same persons or things; but themselves, &c., Heb. their souls; for although the soul is here put for the person, as it commonly is, yet that title is never given to any idol or lifeless thing, but only to such creatures as have or had souls within their bodies. So the meaning of this and the foregoing verse is this, that neither the Babylonians nor their idols could either save themselves or one another, but both are bowed down and gone into captivity together.

3 ¶ Hearken unto me, O house of Jacob, and all the remnant of the house of d Ex. 19. 4. Deut. 1. 31. & 32. 11. Ps. 71. 6. ch. 63. 9. Israel, [d]which are borne by me from the belly, which are carried from the womb:

All the remnant of the house of Israel; fitly so called, with respect either, 1. To all the tribes of Israel, ten of which were now lost and gone; or, 2. To the state of the Jews at their return from Babylon, there being only a remnant of the two tribes which did return. Which are carried from the womb; whom I have nourished and cared for from time to time, ever since you were a people, and came out of Egypt, and that as affectionately and tenderly as parents bring up their own children.

e Ps. 102. 27. Mal. 3. 6. f Ps. 48. 14. & 71. 18. 4 And even to your old age [e]I am he; and even to hoar hairs [f]will I carry you: I have made, and I will bear; even I will carry, and will deliver you.

And that care and kindness which I have had for you from the beginning, I will continue to you to the end; never forsaking you, unless you wilfully and obstinately cast me off, as the Jews did when their Messiah came. You are my workmanship, both as you are men, and as you are my peculiar people; and therefore I will preserve and deliver you.

g ch. 40. 18, 25. 5 ¶ [g]To whom will ye liken me, and make me equal, and compare me, that we may be like?

If you are tempted or inclined at any time to exchange me for an idol, do me and yourselves this right, seriously to consider, whether you can find another God who will be more able and more ready to do you good than I have been; which if you can do, I am content you should prefer him before me; but if not, as will appear by what I am now saying, ver. 6, 7, then it is best for you to adhere to your ancient God and Friend.

k ch. 45. 20. not remove: yea, [k]one shall cry unto him, yet can he not answer, nor save him out of his trouble.

They carry him; either, 1. In pomp upon solemn occasions; or, 2. From that place where he is made, unto that place where they intend to set him up, as it is expressed in the following words. Shall he not remove; or rather, he cannot remove. He can stir neither hand nor foot to help his people.

8 Remember this, and shew yourselves men: [l]bring it again to mind, O ye trans- l ch. 44. 19. & 47. 7. gressors.

Remember this, consider these things which I now speak, O ye Israelites, and show yourselves men; act like reasonable creatures, and be not so brutish as to worship your own works; be so wise and courageous as to withstand all solicitation to idolatry. Bring it again to mind; think of this again and again. O ye transgressors; you who have been guilty of this foolish sin; and therefore are obliged to take the better heed that you do not relapse into it again.

9 [m]Remember the former things of old: m Deut. 32. 7. for I am God, and [n]there is none else; n ch. 45. 5, 21. I am God, and there is none like me,

Remember the former things of old; what I have done for you, and in the world, my evident predictions of future things justified by the event, and those other miraculous works whereby I have abundantly proved my Divinity.

10 [o]Declaring the end from the begin- o ch. 45. 21. ning, and from ancient times the things p Ps. 33. 11. Prov. 19. 21. & 21. 30. Acts 5. 39. Heb. 6. 17. that are not yet done, saying, [p]My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure:

Declaring the end from the beginning; foretelling from the beginning of the world, or from the beginning of your nation, those future events which should happen in succeeding ages, even to the end of the world, or to the end of your commonwealth; for such predictions we find delivered by Moses, the first founder of their commonwealth. My counsel shall stand; as I will not, so no other power can, disappoint my purposes and predictions.

11 Calling a ravenous bird [q]from the q ch. 41. 2, 25. east, †the man [r]that executeth my counsel † Heb. the man of my counsel. from a far country: yea, [s]I have spoken r ch. 44. 28. & 45. 13. s Num. 23. 19. it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it.

Calling a ravenous bird; Cyrus, called a bird for his swiftness and great expedition, and ravenous for his fierceness and victoriousness over his enemies. From the east; from Persia, as Isa. xli. 2. That executeth my counsel, concerning the deliverance of my people, and the destruction of their cruel oppressors, the Babylonians. From a far country; from Persia, which was far from Babylon, but much farther from Judea.

12 ¶ Hearken unto me, ye [t]stout- t Ps. 76. 5. hearted, [u]that are far from righteousness: u Rom. 10. 3.

Ye stout-hearted; or, ye whose hearts are proud, or hard, or stubborn. He speaks either, 1. To the Babylonians, You who are stout against God, and say or think that neither God nor any man can deliver my people out of your hands: or rather, 2. To the house of Jacob, expressed ver. 3, where he bespeaks them in the same words here used, hearken to me; and to whom alone he directeth his speech in this whole chapter; for though he speaketh of the Babylonians, yet he doth not speak to them; and to whom the prophet, for the most part, turneth his speech in all his prophecies, unless where there is something in the text or context which determineth it to some other person or people. And this very crime of stoutness or hardness of heart is most justly and most frequently charged upon the Jews by their own prophets every where, because of their gross contempt of and incorrigibleness under all God's words and works. And the prophet speaks this either to the Jews of his generation, or rather to that generation which was carried captive to Babylon, whose stout-heartedness is particularly noted and reproved, Zech. vii. 11, 12. Compare Mal. iii. 13—15. That are far from righteousness; that are not only void of, but enemies to righteousness and true holiness; that give up yourselves to wickedness, that despise my counsels, and promises, and threatenings.

13 [x]I bring near my righteousness; x ch. 51. 5. Rom. 1. 17. & 3. 21. it shall not be far off, and my salvation y Hab. 2. 3. z ch. 62. 11. [y]shall not tarry: and I will place [z]salvation in Zion for Israel my glory.

I bring near my righteousness: though you are most unrighteous persons, and have given me just cause to make you to know my breach of promise, as I threatened in the like case, Numb. xiv. 34; yet I will show myself to be a righteous and faithful God, making good my promise of delivering you out of Babylon after seventy years; and though you think the time long, and are apt to distrust the thing itself, yet it shall come, and that speedily, I will bring it near, or cause it to approach or come unto you, and, as it follows, it shall not tarry beyond the appointed time. It shall not be far off; my work of saving you from the Babylonish captivity. I will place salvation in Zion; I will bring my people from Babylon to Zion, and there I will save them from all their enemies. For Israel my glory; in whom I will once again glory as my people, and the illustrious monuments of my glorious wisdom, and power, and truth, and goodness; whom I will make a great and glorious people, though now they are mean and contemptible, and in whom I will once more settle my glorious presence and ordinances.

CHAP. XLVII.

God's judgments upon Babylon and Chaldea; for their cruelty towards God's people, 1—6; their pride and other sins, 7—10. Their enchantments shall not deliver them, 11—15.

cir. 712. a Jer. 48. 18. b ch. 3. 26. COME [a]down, and [b]sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon, sit on the ground: there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate.

Come down from thy throne, as it follows, and sit in the dust; either necessarily, because thou shalt have no higher seat; or voluntarily, as mourners do, bewailing thine approaching calamities. O virgin daughter of Babylon; so called, either, 1. Because she had not yet been humbled and conquered; or rather, 2. Because she was tender and delicate, as the next clause informeth us. There is no throne, to wit, for thee. The empire is taken away from thee, and translated to the Persians. Thou shalt no more be called; either be reputed so, or rather be so; for to be called is frequently put for to be, as hath been divers times noted. Thou shalt be reduced to great hardships and miseries.

c Ex. 11. 5. Judg. 16. 21. Matt. 24. 41. 2 [c]Take the millstones, and grind meal: uncover thy locks, make bare the leg, uncover the thigh, pass over the rivers.

Take the millstones; betake thyself to the millstones; as we commonly say, Take thy bed, or, Betake thyself to thy bed. The meaning is, Thou shalt be brought down to the basest kind of slavery, which grinding at the mill was esteemed; of which see on Exod. xi. 5; Judg. xvi. 21; Job xxxi. 10; Lam. v. 13. For this work was not performed by horses, as now it is, but by the labour of slaves and captives. Grind meal; grind bread corn into meal for thy master's use. Such metonymical expressions we find Isa. xxviii. 28; Hos. viii. 7, and elsewhere. Uncover thy locks; or, thine hair. Take off the ornaments wherewith such women as were free and of good quality used to cover and dress their heads. This and the following passages, though delivered in the form of a command, are only predictions of what they should be forced to do or suffer, as appears from the next verse. Make bare the leg, uncover the thigh; gird up thy garments close and short about thee, that thou mayst be fit for service, and for travelling on foot, and, as it follows, for passing over those rivers, through which thou wilt be constrained to wade, in the way to the land of thy captivity.

d ch. 3. 17. & 20. 4. Jer. 13. 22, 26. Nah. 3. 5. e Rom. 12. 19. 3 [d]Thy nakedness shall be uncovered, yea, thy shame shall be seen: [e]I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man.

Thy nakedness shall be uncovered; either, 1. For want of raiment to cover it; or rather, 2. By thine enemies in way of scorn and contumely, by comparing this place with Ezek. xvi. 37; xxiii. 29. Thy shame shall be seen upon thee for thy many and great injuries done to my people. I will take vengeance, as a man meets his enemy in the field, to contend with thee. I will not meet thee as a man, with moderation and gentleness, as those men who have not quite put off humanity use to do; but like a lion tearing thee to pieces, to which God in such case compareth himself, as Hos. v. 14; xiii. 7, 8: compare Hos. xi. 4.

f ch. 43. 3, 14. Jer. 50. 34. 4 As for [f]our redeemer, the LORD of hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.

According to this version, the prophet inserteth this passage in the midst of this prophecy against Babylon, as Jacob inserteth a like passage in the midst of his blessings and prophecies concerning his children, Gen. xlix. 18. And this may be here interposed, either, 1. As the reason why the judgment here denounced should be certainly inflicted, because he who had undertaken it was the Lord of hosts, and therefore able to effect it, and the Holy One, and the Redeemer of Israel, whom the Babylonians had cruelly oppressed, whose quarrel God would avenge upon them, and whom he had determined and promised to deliver out of their hands. Or, 2. As a pathetical exclamation or acclamation of God's people for this wonderful work of breaking the staff of their oppressors, which they here ascribe to God, as he is their God and Redeemer, whom they here make their boast of, and whom they celebrate for this glorious deliverance. But because these words, as for, are not in the Hebrew text, and therefore another word may be as conveniently supplied, this verse may be, and is by some learned interpreters, otherwise rendered, and joined with the foregoing words thus, I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man, saith our Redeemer, whose name is the Lord of Hosts, the Holy One of Israel. For the word saith or saying is frequently understood, and therefore supplied by translators, as 1 Kings xx. 34; Psal. xxvii. 8; cv. 15, and in this very prophecy, as Isa. v. 9; xlv. 14, and elsewhere.

g 1 Sam. 2. 9. 5 Sit thou [g]silent, and get thee into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans: [h]for thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms. h ver. 7. ch. 13. 19. Dan. 2. 37.

Sit thou silent, through grief and shame, and as mourners use to do, Job ii. 13. Cease thy vaunting and insolent speeches; thou canst say nothing for thine own justification. Get thee into darkness; thou shalt go into an obscure, disconsolate, and calamitous condition. Thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms; the chief and glory of all kingdoms, as Isa. xiii. 19, the most large, and potent, and glorious empire of the world, as thou hast been.

i See 2 Sam. 24. 14. 2 Chr. 28. 9. Zech. 1. 15. k ch. 43. 28. 6 ¶ [i]I was wroth with my people, [k]I have polluted mine inheritance, and given them into thine hand: thou didst shew them no mercy; [l]upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke. l Deut. 28. 50.

I have polluted mine inheritance; I cast them away as an unclean thing; I stained their glory; I removed them from the Holy Land, and from the place of my presence and worship, which alone made them a holy and peculiar people; I banished them into a polluted land, amongst uncircumcised and unclean persons, by whom they were many ways defiled; I rejected them from being my people, and so were in my sight no better than the rest of the heathen nations. Given them into thine hand, to punish them, and deal with them as thou sawest fit. Thou didst show them no mercy; thou hast exceeded the bounds of thy commission, and instead of that compassion which humanity teacheth men to show to such as are in misery, thou didst add to their afflictions. Upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid the yoke; who besides their common calamity were afflicted with the miseries of old age, and therefore did require both pity and reverence.

m ver. 5. Rev. 18. 7. n ch. 46. 8. o Deut. 32. 29. 7 ¶ And thou saidst, I shall be [m]a lady for ever: so that thou didst not [n]lay these things to thy heart, [o]neither didst remember the latter end of it.

These things; thy cruel usages of my people, and the heavy judgments which thou hadst reason to expect for them. The latter end of it; of that lady, or of Babylon, and her glory and empire, or of thyself; here being a sudden change of the person, of which I have noted many examples in this prophet. The sense is, Thou wast besotted with the sense of thy present felicity, and didst not consider, as thy duty and common discretion obliged thee, what might and was likely to befall thee afterward; thou didst neither expect a change nor prepare for it.

8 Therefore hear now this, thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelessly, that sayest in thine heart, [p]I am, and none else beside me; [q]I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children:

p ver. 10. Zeph. 2. 15.
q Rev. 18. 7.

I am; I am independent, and self-sufficient, and unchangeable, as that phrase implies, which therefore is appropriated to God, Isa. xli. 4; xliii. 10, and elsewhere. The prophet doth not here use the very phrase which the Babylonians used, but expresseth their sense in a Scripture phrase. None else beside me; which is not either subject to me, or far inferior to me in power and glory; so that in comparison of me it may be said not to be, because it disappears like stars at the presence of the sun. I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children; I shall never want either a king or people to defend me from all dangers.

9 But [r]these two things shall come to thee [s]in a moment in one day, the loss of children, and widowhood: they shall come upon thee in their perfection [t]for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments.

r ch. 51. 19.
s 1 Thess. 5. 3.
t Nah. 3. 4.

In their perfection; in the highest degree. Thy king and kingdom shall be utterly and eternally destroyed. For the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments; for thy superstitious and magical practices, which were very frequent there, as we see below, ver. 12, 13, and as was observed before. Or, as it is in the Hebrew, in the multitude of thy sorceries, &c.; in the midst of and notwithstanding all thy diabolical artifices, whereby thou thinkest to foresee any dangers, and to secure thyself from them.

10 ¶ For thou [u]hast trusted in thy wickedness: [x]thou hast said, None seeth me. Thy wisdom and thy knowledge, it hath ‖perverted thee; [y]and thou hast said in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me.

u Ps. 52. 7.
x ch. 29. 15. Ezek. 8. 12. & 9. 9.
‖ Or, caused thee to turn away.
y ver. 8.

Thou hast trusted in thy wickedness; confidently expecting to preserve thyself by these and other wicked arts and policies. Thou hast said, None seeth me; my counsels are so deeply and cunningly laid, that God himself can neither discover nor prevent the execution of them. Thy wisdom and thy knowledge in state policy, and the arts mentioned above and below, hath perverted thee; hath misled thee into the way of transgression and perdition. Thou hast said in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me; which was said ver. 8, and is here repeated, to note their intolerable arrogancy and self-confidence.

11 ¶ Therefore shall evil come upon thee; thou shalt not know †from whence it riseth: and mischief shall fall upon thee; thou shalt not be able to †put it off: and [z]desolation shall come upon thee suddenly, which thou shalt not know.

z 1 Thess. 5. 3.

Therefore shall evil come upon thee; or rather, when it shall come: Heb. the morning of it, the day or time of its approach. And they are justly upbraided and derided for this ignorance, because the astrologers, the star-gazers, and the monthly prognosticators, mentioned here, ver. 13, pretended punctually to foretell the particular time of all future events. And this explication agrees with the history, Babylon being surprised by Cyrus when they were in deep security, as is manifest, both from Scripture, Jer. li. 31; Dan. v., and from other histories. Desolation shall come upon thee suddenly; or, when thou shalt not know it. Thou shalt not apprehend thy danger till it be too late.

12 Stand now with thine enchantments, and with the multitude of thy sorceries, wherein thou hast laboured from thy youth; if so be thou shalt be able to profit, if so be thou mayest prevail.

Stand: this word notes either, 1. Continuance. Persist or go on in these practices. Or, 2. Their gesture. For those that inquired of their gods by any of these superstitious practices used to stand; this being a posture, both of reverence, and waiting for an answer. But this is not a command or concession, but a sacred irony or scoff at the folly of these men, who having so oft been disappointed by these impostures, yet were as forward to use them and trust to them as if they had never deceived them. From thy youth; from the beginning of thy commonwealth or kingdom. For the Chaldeans in all ages were famous, or rather infamous, for the study and practice of these arts.

13 [a]Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels. Let now [b]the †astrologers, the stargazers, †the monthly prognosticators, stand up, and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee.

a ch. 57. 10.
b ch. 44. 25. Dan. 2. 2.
† Heb. viewers of the heavens.
† Heb. that give knowledge concerning the months.

Thou art wearied; thou hast spent thy time and strength in going from one to another, in trying all manner of experiments, and all to no purpose. Stand up, and save thee; to succour thee, or to inquire for thee.

14 Behold, they shall be [c]as stubble; the fire shall burn them; they shall not deliver †themselves from the power of the flame: there shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it.

c Nah. 1. 10. Mal. 4. 1.
† Heb. their souls.

They shall not deliver themselves, and much less thee, from the power of the flame; they shall be totally consumed, and all the comfort which thou didst expect from them shall utterly vanish.

15 Thus shall they be unto thee with whom thou hast laboured, even [d]thy merchants, from thy youth: they shall wander every one to his quarter; none shall save thee.

d Rev. 18. 11.

Thus, such comfortless and helpless creatures, shall they be; either, 1. Thy merchants, as it follows, with whom thou hast trafficked. Or, 2. Thy sorcerers, astrologers, &c., with whom they are said to have laboured, both here and ver. 12, who also may possibly be called their merchants, because they traded so much with them, and because of their deceitful practices; for which Ephraim is called a merchant, Hos. xii. 7. And so the following clause may be rendered, who have been thy merchants from thy youth. Or the last clause may be understood of merchants, properly so called, who came from several countries to trade with Babylon, as is noted in Scripture, and by other authors; and the verse may be thus rendered; Thus (vain and unprofitable) shall they (thy sorcerers, &c.) with whom thou hast laboured be unto thee: (so here is only a transposition of words, than which nothing is more usual in Scripture. Then follows another matter in the next clause:) also thy merchants, or they with whom thou hast traded from thy youth, shall wander every one to his own quarter. None shall save thee; they shall all leave thee, and flee away with all possible speed to their several countries and habitations.

CHAP. XLVIII.

God reproveth their hypocrisy and obstinacy by his prophecies, 1—8. He spareth them for his name's sake, and that they may learn to know him aright, 9—11. God's powerful salvation a motive to obedience, 12—15. God lamenteth their backwardness, 16—19. Deliverance out of Babylon, 20, 21. No peace to the wicked, 22.

HEAR ye this, O house of Jacob, which a Ps. 68. 26. are called by the name of Israel, and [a] are come forth out of the waters of Judah, b Deut. 6. 13. ch. 65. 16. Zeph. 1. 5. [b] which swear by the name of the LORD, c Jer. 4. 2. & 5. 2. and make mention of the God of Israel, [c] but not in truth, nor in righteousness.

Hear ye this, what I am now going to say against thee, that thou mayst be assured that that great deliverance which I have determined and declared to give thee is not for thy own sake, but for my name's sake. Which are called by the name of Israel; which are Israelites in name, but not in truth, as it follows. Out of the waters of Judah; from the lineage of your progenitor, Judah, as waters flow from a fountain, and as the Israelites are said to be of the fountain of Israel, Psal. lxviii. 26. Compare also Deut. xxxiii. 28; Prov. v. 15, &c. Which swear; which profess the true religion; one act of religion being put for all. Make mention of the God of Israel; either in oaths or otherwise; that own him and seem to glory in him as their God, and call themselves by his name. But not in truth, nor in righteousness; which are the two chief ingredients of a lawful oath, Jer. iv. 2. They are guilty of falsehood and injustice, both in oaths, and in their whole conversation.

d ch. 52. 1. 2 For they call themselves [d] of the holy e Mic. 3. 11. Rom. 2. 17. city, and [e] stay themselves upon the God of Israel; The LORD of hosts is his name.

For; or, as others render it, and this particle frequently signifies, Though. And so this is added as a great aggravation of their want and neglect of truth and righteousness. They shall call themselves of the holy city: they glory in this, that they are citizens of Jerusalem, a city sanctified by God himself to be the only place of his true worship and gracious presence; which as it is a great privilege, so it laid a great obligation upon them to walk more holily than they did. Stay themselves; not by a true and well-grounded faith, but by a vain and presumptive confidence, flattering themselves, as that people commonly did, that they should enjoy peace and safety, notwithstanding all their wickedness, because they were the Lord's people, and had his temple and ordinances among them; which disposition the prophets frequently observe and sharply censure in them. The Lord of hosts is his name; or, whose name is the Lord of hosts.

f ch. 41. 22. & 42. 9. & 43. 9. & 44. 7, 8. & 45. 21. & 46. 9, 10. g Josh. 21. 45. 3 [f] I have declared the former things from the beginning; and they went forth out of my mouth, and I shewed them; I did them suddenly, [g] and they came to pass.

I have declared the former things from the beginning; those things which have formerly come to pass, which I punctually foretold from time to time before they came to pass; whereby I gave you full proof of my Godhead. They came to pass; what my mouth foretold my hand effected.

4 Because I knew that thou art †ob-† Heb. hard. h Ex. 32. 9. Deut. 31. 27. stinate, and [h] thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass;

Because I knew: therefore I gave thee the more and clearer demonstrations of my Divine nature and providence, because I knew thou wast an unbelieving and perverse nation, that would not easily nor willingly be convinced. Thy neck is an iron sinew, which will not bow down to receive my yoke, nor to obey my commands. It is a metaphor taken from untamed and stubborn cattle; of which see also Neh. ix. 29; Zech. vii. 11; Acts vii. 51. The sense is, I considered that thou wast unteachable and incorrigible. Thy brow brass; thou wast impudent, and therefore wouldst boldly pretend that thou didst forsake me, for want of full conviction of my Divine authority, and of thy duty; therefore I determined that I would leave thee without excuse.

i ver. 3. 5 [i] I have even from the beginning declared it to thee; before it came to pass I shewed it thee: lest thou shouldest say, Mine idol hath done them, and my graven image, and my molten image, hath commanded them.

I foretold these things, that it might be evident that they were the effects of my counsel, and not of thine idols, as I knew thou wast very inclinable to believe.

6 Thou hast heard, see all this; and will not ye declare it? I have shewed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them.

Thou hast heard, see all this; as thou hast heard all these things from my mouth, from time to time, so now I advise thee to see, i. e. seriously to consider them, and to lay them to heart. Will not ye declare it? I call you to witness; must you not be forced to acknowledge the truth of what I say? Deny it if you can. Or, have ye not declared it unto all people, as occasion required it? Have you not boasted unto the Gentiles of this as your honour and privilege? I have showed thee new things from this time; and I have now given thee new predictions of secret things, and such as till this time were wholly unknown to thee, as it follows, concerning thy deliverance out of Babylon by Cyrus.

7 They are created now, and not from the beginning; even before the day when thou heardest them not; lest thou shouldest say, Behold, I knew them.

They are created now, i. e. revealed unto thee by me; brought to light, as things are by creation. Things are frequently said to be made or done in Scripture, when they are declared or manifested. Job v. 3, I cursed, i. e. I pronounced it cursed. Psal. li. 4, That thou mightest be justified, i. e. declared and acknowledged to be just. Hos. v. 15, Till they acknowledge their offence; which in the Hebrew is, till they be guilty. Not from the beginning, Heb. not from thence; not from these ancient times, when other things were revealed unto thee. Even before the day, Heb. and (or, or, as this particle is frequently used) before this day. Such pronouns are oft understood, as we have seen; and this day answers to nor in the first clause; and this clause seems to be added as an exposition of the next foregoing clause, which is more general and ambiguous, not from then or before this day. When thou heardest them not, Heb. and thou didst not hear them, to wit, before this time, in which God hath revealed them to thee by my ministry. Lest thou shouldest say, Behold, I knew them; either by thine own sagacity, or by the help of thine idols. The sense is, That it might appear that thou hadst the knowledge of these things only from me, who made known unto thee only what and when I pleased.

8 Yea, thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not; yea, from that time that thine ear was not opened: for I knew that thou wouldest deal very treacherously, and wast called [k] a transgressor from k Ps. 58. 3. the womb.

Yea, thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not; the same thing is repeated again and again, because this was so illustrious a proof of the infinite power and providence of the God of Israel, and so clear and full a discovery of the vanity of idols. Yea, from that time that thine ear was not opened; Heb. yea, from then (of which phrase see the foregoing verse) thine ear was not opened, i. e. thou didst not hear, to wit, from me; I did not reveal these things unto thee; for so this phrase of opening the ear is understood, 1 Sam. ix. 15; 2 Sam. vii. 27. I knew that thou wouldest deal treacherously; I knew all these cautions were necessary to cure thine infidelity and apostacy. Wast called, to wit, justly and truly; or, thou wast indeed such a person; to be called put for to be, as we have oft noted.

9 ¶ [l] For my name's sake [m] will I defer
l Ps. 79. 9. & 106. 8. ch. 43. 25. ver. 11. Ezek. 20. 9, 14, 22, 44. m Ps. 78. 38. mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off.

For my name's sake will I defer mine anger: and although thou dost justly deserve my hottest anger and most dreadful judgments, which also, if thou repentest not, I will in due time inflict; yet at present I will spare thee, and deliver thee out of captivity, not for thy sake, be it known to thee, but merely for my own sake, and for the vindication of my name and glory, as it follows, ver. 11. For my praise;

that I may be praised and magnified for my power, faithfulness, and goodness, and other perfections. Will I refrain, to wit, mine anger; which is easily understood out of the foregoing clause.

n Ps. 66. 10. ‖ Or, for silver, See Ezek. 22. 20, 21, 22. o Ecclus. 2. 5.

10 Behold, [n]I have refined thee, but not ‖with silver; I have chosen thee [o]in the furnace of affliction.

I have refined thee; or, I will refine thee. Although I will not cut thee off, or utterly destroy thee, as I now said; yet I will put thee into the furnace, not to consume thee, but to purify thee from that dross which cleaveth to thee, and needs such afflictions to purge it away. Not with silver; or, not among silver; or, not as silver; which is put into and kept in the furnace so long till all the dross be purged away from it. I will not deal so rigorously with thee, for then I should wholly consume thee; in judgment I will remember mercy. I have chosen thee; or, I will choose thee; or, I will yet choose thee, as it is expressed, Isa. xiv. 1; Zech. i. 17. Or, I will choose thee again, as Zech. ii. 12. For it must be considered that God had in a manner rejected Israel, when he sent them into captivity, and given her a bill of divorce, as he saith, Jer. iii. 8; see also Isa. l. 1; and therefore it was necessary that God should choose this people a second time, that they might be betrothed to him again, as is expressed and promised, Hos. ii. 19, 20. This seems to me the true sense; although it may be thus understood, I will choose thee, i. e. I will manifest by my carriage to thee that I have chosen thee; or, that thou art my chosen people. Things are oft said to be done when they are manifested, as was observed on ver. 7.

11 [p]For mine own sake, even for mine own sake, will I do it: for [q]how should my name be polluted? and [r]I will not give my glory unto another.

Will I do it; this great work of delivering my people out of Babylon. My name is here fitly supplied, both out of ver. 9, where it is expressed, and out of the following clause of this verse, where he saith, my glory, which is equivalent to it. The sense is, If I should not spare and deliver my people, my name would be sadly profaned and blasphemed, as if I were either impotent or implacable to them. I will not give my glory unto another; I will not give any colour or occasion to idolaters to ascribe the Divine nature and properties, which are my peculiar, unto idols, as they would do if I did not rescue my people out of their hands in spite of their idols.

Hath spanned; or, doth span, i. e. mete out the heavens with a span, as the phrase is, Isa. xl. 12, although that be expressed there in other Hebrew words. Or, hath spread them out with its palm, or like a palm, when the hand is stretched out. When I call unto them, they stand up together; either they stood up and arose out of nothing, when I commanded them to do so; or they are still continually in readiness to execute my commands.

14 [y]All ye, assemble yourselves, and hear; which among them hath declared these things? [z]The LORD hath loved him: [a]he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be on the Chaldeans.

All ye; ye Jews, to whom he addressed his speech, ver. 12, and continueth his speech, ver. 16, 17, &c. Assemble; I challenge you all to answer what I have said before, and am now going to say again. Which among them hath declared these things? which of the gods whom any of you have served or do still hanker after? The Lord hath loved him, to wit, Cyrus, who might easily be understood out of the foregoing context, in which he is frequently mentioned. The pronoun is put for the noun, as is usual both in Scripture and in other authors. Now God loved Cyrus, not with a special, and everlasting, and complacential love, for he was a heathen, and had some great vices as well as virtues; but with that general love and kindness which God hath for all his creatures, as is observed, Psal. cxlv. 9; and moreover with that particular kind of love which God hath for such men as excel others in any virtues, as Cyrus did; in which sense Christ loved the young man, Mark x. 21; and with a love of good-will and beneficence. God had such a kindness for him, as to make him a most glorious and victorious general and king, and the great instrument for the deliverance of his own people; which was a singular honour and advantage to him, and might have been far greater, and extended to the eternal salvation of his soul, if he had not wanted a heart to use the price which God hereby put into his hand. And as anger being ascribed to God is not meant of the affection, for such passions are inconsistent with the perfection of God's nature, but of the effect; so the love of God, when it is applied in Scripture to such persons as Cyrus, is not so much to be understood of an inward affection, as of the outward effects of it; and so this love is explained in the following words, by that prosperous success which God gave him against the Chaldeans. He will do his pleasure on Babylon; Cyrus shall execute that I have appointed him to do for the destruction of Babylon, and for the redemption of my people; which was in itself a good work; and therefore this is added as the reason why God loved him. His arm shall be on the Chaldeans; he shall smite and subdue them.

I, even I; both the foreknowledge and the execution of this great achievement cannot be ascribed to idols, but to me only. He shall make his way prosperous; God will give him good success in this undertaking. Here is a sudden change of the person from I to he, which is very usual. Or, as others render it, he shall prosper in his way; the preposition in being most frequently understood.

16 ¶ Come ye near unto me, hear ye this; [c]I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; from the time that it was, there am I: and now [d]the Lord GOD, and his Spirit, hath sent me.

Come ye near unto me, that you may the better hear me, as it follows. A speech of God after the manner of men. I have not spoken in secret; I have not smothered the counsel and word of God, but have plainly and publicly declared it unto you; or, I have openly revealed my mind to you. See the note on Isa. xlv. 19, where these very words are spoken by God in his own name, as here by the prophet in God's name; and so all comes to one. From the beginning; either, 1. From the first time that I began to prophesy until this time. Or, 2. From the beginning of my taking you to be my people, and of revealing my mind to you. See on Isa. xli. 26. From the time that it was: these words also, as well as the former, are the words, either, 1. Of the prophet; and so the sense seems to be this, From the time that I was first called to be a prophet, I have been there, i. e. I have diligently pursued my prophetical function; I have hearkened from time to time, to hear what God would speak to me, that I might impart it to you. Or, 2. Of God; and then the sense may be this, From the time that I first spoke of it, or foretold it, I am or was there, to take care to effect what I had foretold; I minded it carefully from that time, as being then more especially obliged to do it, lest my truth or power should be questioned. Or the words may be thus rendered and explained, from the time that this shall be, when the time appointed for the doing of this work shall come, there I will be, to encourage and assist Cyrus in the work. There am I: this is opposed to those foregoing words, from the beginning. God and his Spirit; God by his Spirit; or, God, even the Spirit or the Holy Ghost, to whom the sending and inspiring of God's prophets is ascribed, 2 Pet. i. 21. Hath to profit, [f]which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go.

Which teacheth thee to profit; which from time to time have made known unto thee, not vain and frivolous things, but all necessary and useful doctrines; which, if believed and observed by thee, would have been infinitely profitable to thee, both for this life and that to come. So that it is not my fault, but thine own, if thou dost not profit. Which leadeth; which acquainteth thee with thy duty and interest in all the parts and concerns of thy life; so that thou canst not pretend ignorance.

g Deut. 32. 29. Ps. 81. 13. h Ps. 119. 165.

18 [g]O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! [h]then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea:

O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! the failure hath not been on my part, but on thine: I gave thee my counsels and commands, but thou hast neglected and disobeyed them, and that to thy own great disadvantage. Such wishes as these are not to be taken properly, as if God longed for something which he gladly would but could not effect, or as if he wished that to be undone which was irrevocably past and done; which is a vain and foolish wish even in a man; and much more are such wishes inconsistent with the infinite perfection and happiness of the Divine nature; but they are only significations of God's good and holy will, whereby he requires and loves obedience, and condemns and hates disobedience. As a river, which runs sweetly, strongly, plentifully, and constantly; and such had been thy prosperity. Then thou hadst never gone into this Babylonish captivity, nor needed such prodigies of my power and goodness to deliver thee out of it. Thy righteousness; not properly so called, (for he is not now speaking of their virtues, but of their privileges,) but thy peace and prosperity, as appears by the foregoing clause, to which this manifestly answers; which is called righteousness here, as it is also 1 Sam. xii. 7; Hos. x. 12, and elsewhere, by a metonymy, because it is the fruit of righteousness, both of God's righteousness and of man's righteousness; as by the very same figure iniquity is very frequently put for the fruit and punishment of iniquity. As the waves of the sea; infinite and continual.

i Gen. 22. 17. Hos. 1. 10.

19 [i]Thy seed also had been as the sand, and the offspring of thy bowels like the gravel thereof; his name should not have been cut off nor destroyed from before me.

Thy seed also had been as the sand, to wit, for multitude, according to my promise made to Abraham; whereas now I have, for thy sins, made thee to know my breach of promise, as is said, Numb. xiv. 34, and greatly diminished thy numbers. The offspring of thy bowels; which come out of thy bowels, or belly, or loins; for all these are but various expressions of the same thing. His name; which is continued in a man's posterity, and commonly dies with them; and so the name here is the same thing in effect with the seed and offspring in the former clauses, which, for the most part, are only the memorials of men, and of their names, when they are dead and gone. Should not have been cut off, as now it hath been in a great measure; and should have been totally and finally cut off, if I had not spared them for my own name's sake, as he said before. From before me; or, out of my sight; out of their own land, the place of my special presence and residence.

Go ye forth of Babylon: the imperative is here, as it is very frequently, put for the future, Ye shall go forth, &c.; for this is not so much a command as a promise; although this form of speech may be the rather used to intimate that it was their duty to go forth, as well as God's promise to carry them forth. With a voice of singing; with joy and songs of praise to the Lord. Declare ye; publish God's wonderful works on your behalf to all nations.

21 And they [m]thirsted not when he led them through the deserts: he [n]caused the waters to flow out of the rock for them: he clave the rock also, and the waters gushed out.

This is part of the matter which the Jews are obliged to declare to all people, as they have opportunity, to wit, that God took the same care of them in their return from Babylon to Canaan, which was through many dry and desolate places, as he did in their march from Egypt to Canaan. They thirsted not, &c., i. e. they shall not thirst. He speaks of things to come, as if they were already past or present, as the prophets commonly do.

o ch. 57. 21.

22 [o]There is no peace, saith the LORD, unto the wicked.

God having in the next foregoing verses foretold that peace and blessed deliverance which he would certainly give to his servant Jacob, ver. 20, he here adds an explication and limitation of this mercy, and declareth that wicked men should not enjoy the benefit of this mercy; where, by the wicked, he means either, 1. The Babylonians, who well deserved that title; who shall be destroyed, when God's Israel shall be delivered: or rather, 2. The unbelieving and ungodly Jews, of whom these very words are used again, Isa. lvii. 21, and to whom such a denunciation as this was far more proper and necessary, at least in this place, than to the Babylonians; for he had already said far more and worse things than this concerning them, having again and again declared that Babylon should be destroyed, in order to this deliverance of God's people out of it. But there was great need why he should say this to the ungodly Jews, because they were exceeding prone to cry, Peace, peace to themselves, when there was no solid ground of peace; and they confidently expected a share in this great deliverance. This therefore was a very seasonable caution to the Jews in Babylon to take heed to themselves, and to prepare for this mercy, and to purify themselves from all wickedness; because those of them who should either wickedly tarry in Babylon, when God invited and required them to go out of it, and when their godly brethren returned to their own land, and to the place of God's worship; or continue in wickedness, when they were restored to their own country; should not enjoy that tranquillity and comfort which they promised to themselves. And the necessity of this commination appears from the event; for the Jews that returned to Canaan did, for the most part, relapse to many of their former sins, and therefore fell short of that peace and prosperity which otherwise they might have enjoyed.

CHAP. XLIX.

Christ, being sent to the Jews, complaineth of them, 1—4. He is sent to the Gentiles with gracious promises, 5—12. God's love to his church perpetual, 13—17. The ample restoration of the church, and its enlargement, 18—23. Powerful deliverance out of captivity, 24—26.

a ch. 41. 1. b ver. 5. Jer. 1. 5. Matt. 1. 20, 21. Luke 1. 15, 31. John 10. 36. Gal. 1. 15.

LISTEN, [a]O isles, unto me; and hearken, ye people, from far; [b]The LORD hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name.

Listen, O isles. God having in the last words secretly signified the wickedness of the Jewish nation, after so glorious a deliverance, and foreseeing that, for their wickedness, he should cast them off, he here turneth his speech to the nations of the Gentiles, who are frequently described in this prophecy and elsewhere under the title of isles, as hath been formerly noted, and inviteth them to hearken to those counsels and doctrines which the Jews would reject. Unto me; unto Christ; for it is apparent from ver. 6, and other passages of this chapter, that Isaiah speaks these words in the name of Christ, by whose Spirit they were dictated to him, 1 Pet. i. 11, and unto whom alone they belong, as we shall see. So this chapter is a prophecy of Christ, which also is very proper and seasonable in this place. The prophet having at large prophesied of the deliverance of the Jews out of Babylon, he now proceeds further, and prophesieth of the redemption of the world by Christ, of which that deliverance out of Babylon was a type and forerunner. Hearken, ye people, from far; which live in countries far from Judea, now the only place of God's special presence and worship. It is evident from the foregoing clause, and many other passages following, that he speaks of distance of place, not of time. The Lord hath called me from the womb: this or the like expression is used of Jeremiah, chap. i. 5, and of Paul, Gal. i. 15; but it was far more eminently true of Christ, who, as he was chosen to this great office of redemption from eternity, so he was separated and called to it before he was born, being both conceived and sanctified by the Holy Ghost in his mother's womb, and sent into the world upon this errand; of which see Matt. i. 21; Luke i. 31, &c.; ii. 11, &c. Made mention of my name; called by my name, and by such a name as signified my office and work, in the places now mentioned.

2 And he hath made [c]my mouth like a sharp sword; [d]in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me [e]a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me;

He hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; as he made me the great Teacher of his church and of the world, so he assisted me by his Spirit, and made my word or doctrine quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, &c., as it is said to be, Heb. iv. 12, killing men's lusts, convincing, humbling, and converting their souls; and mighty to the pulling down of strong holds, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ, as we read, 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. In the shadow of his hand hath he hid me; he will protect me by his power from all mine enemies, until I have finished the work for which he sent me. Made me a polished shaft; like an arrow, whose point is bright and polished; which therefore pierceth deeper. This metaphor signifies the same thing with the former, Christ's piercing of men's hearts by his word and Spirit. Quiver; where arrows are hid and kept. The quiver signifies the same thing with the shadow in the foregoing clause, even God's powerful and gracious protection of him from dangers and mischiefs.

f ch. 42. 1. Zech. 3. 8. g ch. 44. 23. John 13. 31. & 15. 8. Eph. 1. 6.

3 And said unto me, [f]Thou art my servant, O Israel, [g]in whom I will be glorified.

As the name of David is sometimes given to his successors, 1 Kings xii. 16, and particularly to Christ, Jer. xxx. 9; Ezek. xxxiv. 23; Hos. iii. 5, and Jacob is called, as many think, by the name of his grandfather, Abraham, Acts vii. 16, and the name of Isaac is given to his posterity, Amos vii. 9; so here the name of Israel may not unfitly be given to Christ, not only because he descended from his loins, but also because he was the true and the great Israel, who, in a more eminent manner, prevailed with God, as that name signifies, of whom Jacob, who was first called Israel, was but a type. And as the name of Christ, the Head, is sometimes given to the body, the church, as 1 Cor. xii. 12; so it is not strange if, on the contrary, the name of Israel, which properly belongs to the church, be given to Christ the Head of it. But this word may be otherwise rendered, being joined either, 1. With the foregoing words, Thou art my servant unto, or in, or for Israel, i. e. to bring them back unto me, from whom they have revolted; or, 2. With the following words; it is Israel, in whom I will glorify myself by thee.

h Ezek. 3. 19.

4 [h]Then I said, I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, and in vain: yet surely my judgment is with the LORD, and ‖ my work with my God.

‖ Or, my reward, ch. 40. 10. & 62. 11.

Then I said, by way of objection. Lord, thou sayest thou wilt be glorified by my ministry; but I find it otherwise. I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, without any considerable fruit of my word and works among the Israelites. My judgment; my right, the reward which by his promise and my purchase is my right. Judgment is oft put for that which is just or right, as Exod. xxiii. 6; Job viii. 3, and in many other places. And so this clause agrees with the next; and the sense of both is this; Though I see no fruit of my labour among the Jews, and meet with nothing but contempt, and reproach, and ill usage from them; yet God sees my fidelity and diligence in my work, and he will give judgment for me, and my reward is laid up with and by him, which he will give me in due time.

5 ¶ And now, saith the LORD [i]that formed me from the womb to be his servant, to bring Jacob again to him, ‖ Though Israel [k]be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the LORD, and my God shall be my strength.

i ver. 1.

‖ Or, That Israel may be gathered to him, and I may, &c.

k Matt. 23. 37.

To bring Jacob again to him; to convert the wicked and apostate Israelites unto God. Though Israel be not gathered; not brought home to God by my ministry. This word implies that the Israelites were divided and scattered from God, and divided among themselves, as they were in a high degree when Christ came into the world, and turned every one to his own way, as is said, Isa. liii. 6, and therefore needed to be gathered. Either it is a metaphor from wandering sheep, which the good shepherd diligently seeketh, and bringeth home to the fold; or it is an allusion to the state of the Israelites, who either now were, or shortly were to be, dispersed into several parts of the world, from whence God had promised to gather them, and bring them into their own land, and unto his temple, Isa. xliii. 5, 6, and elsewhere. The sense is, Though Israel, God's own and only people, reject me, which will be an occasion of great wonder and scandal. Yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord; God will not despise me for the unsuccessfulness of my labours, but will honour and glorify me, both with himself and in the face of the world, in crowning my endeavours with glorious success among other people. My God shall be my strength, to support and strengthen me under this and all other discouragements and difficulties in the discharge of mine office.

6 And he said, ‖ It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the ‖ preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a [l]light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth.

‖ Or, Art thou lighter than that thou should-est, &c.

l ch. 42. 6. & 60. 3. Luke 2. 32. Acts 13. 47. & 26. 18.

He; the Lord, expressed both in the foregoing and following verses. It is a light thing; this is but a small favour in comparison of what follows. To raise up the tribes of Jacob; that remnant of them which shall survive all their calamities and desolations. I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation; I will make thy labour effectual for the illumination, and conversion, and salvation of the Gentiles in all the parts of the world; which cannot be said of Isaiah with any truth or colour, and therefore must be understood of Christ, by whom this was literally and fully accomplished. By my salvation he means the great instrument and author of that eternal salvation which I will give to the Gentiles.

7 Thus saith the LORD, the Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One, [m] ‖ to him whom man despiseth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a servant of rulers, [n]Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the LORD that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose thee.

m ch. 53. 3. Matt. 26. 67. ‖ Or, to him that is despised in soul.

n Ps. 72. 10, 11. ver. 23.

His Holy One; the Holy One of Israel, as he is frequently called. To him whom man despiseth; to Christ, to whom, as he was in the days of his flesh, this description doth most truly and fully agree, being the same in effect with that, Isa. liii. 3; for men, both Jews and Gentiles among whom he lived, did despise him from their very hearts and souls, as is here implied; and the whole nation of which he was a member, and among whom he conversed and preached, abhorred both his person and his doctrine; and he was so far from being a great temporal monarch, as the Jews vainly imagined, that he came in the form of a servant, and was a servant of rulers, professing subjection and paying tribute unto Cæsar, Matt. xvii. 24, 25; xxii. 21, and being treated by the rulers, both of the Jews and the Romans, like a servant, being despitefully used and crucified, which was the proper punishment of servants. Kings shall see: though for a time thou shalt be despised, yet after a while thou shalt be advanced to such royal majesty and glory, that kings shall look upon thee with admiration and reverence, and arise from their seats in token of reverence, as was usual, Lev. xix. 32; Judg. iii. 20; Job xxix. 8, or to worship thee, as the next clause explains it: shall see and arise, may be put for when they see thee they shall arise to thee; which is a common Hebraism. Because of the Lord that is faithful; because God shall make good his promises to thee concerning the raising thee from the dead, and concerning the effusion of his Spirit upon thy disciples, by whose assistance they shall preach most powerfully, and confirm their doctrine by evident and glorious miracles, and concerning the giving unto thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession, as he promised, Psal. ii. 8. These and such-like considerations were the great motives which prevailed with the princes and people of the Gentiles to receive thee as the true Messiah and Saviour of the world. He shall choose thee: and although thou shalt be rejected by thine own people, and refused by their builders or rulers, as was prophesied, Psal. cxviii. 22, and for a time and in some respects forsaken by God himself, Matt. xxvii. 46; yet God will return to thee and choose thee again, and manifest unto the world, that thou, and thou only, art the person whom God hath chosen to be the Redeemer of mankind, and whom, in spite of all opposition, he will make the Head-stone of the corner. For the phrase, see on Isa. xlviii. 10. But these words are well rendered by others, who will choose or hath chosen thee, the conjunction and being put for the pronoun relative, as Isa. xliv. 14, and in many other places, as hath been observed before.

covenant of the people, to ‖establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages;

Thus saith the Lord, God the Father, unto Christ, In an acceptable time, Heb. In a time of good-will; in that time when I shall have, and in a special manner manifest, my good-will unto the sons of men; in the day of my grace, and of man s salvation, as this phrase is explained in the next clause; in the time of the gospel, which is the time of God's good-will towards men, as the host of heaven declared at the birth of Christ, Luke ii. 14; In the days of thy flesh, when thou didst offer up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save thee from death, as we read, Heb. v. 7, which text is a good comment upon this place. Heard thee; though not so as to deliver thee from death and from the sense of my wrath, yet so as to keep thee from sinking under these burdens, and so as thou shouldst not be holden under the pains or power of death, Acts ii. 24, and so as to crown thee with glory and honour, and a blessed success of all thy labours and sufferings. In a day of salvation; in the time of grace and of the gospel, which I have appointed for the working out of man's salvation by thee. I will preserve thee upon earth till thy work be finished, and unto that eternal kingdom and glory which is prepared for thee. Give thee for a covenant; to be the Mediator and Surety of that covenant, which is made between me and them; as Christ is called, Heb. vii. 22; viii. 6; to renew and confirm the covenant, which the Messiah is said to do, Dan. ix. 27, by his own blood, by which God and men are reconciled and united one to the other. And therefore he may well be called the covenant by a known metonymy, which is very usual in such cases, as upon the same account circumcision, the sign of the covenant, is called God's covenant, Gen. xvii. 10, and the paschal lamb is called the passover, Exod. xii. 11, and the sacramental cup is called the new testament, Luke xxii. 20, and the communion of the blood of Christ, 1 Cor. x. 16. Of the people; indefinitely of all my people, not only Jews, but also the Gentiles, as may be gathered from the context, and by comparing this place with Isa. xlii. 6, where the same phrase is used; from both which places it is most manifest that the Messiah is designed, and not Isaiah, to whom this and divers other phrases here used cannot be ascribed without great force. To establish the earth; to compose and settle the earth, and the inhabitants thereof, by making peace between God and men, and between Jews and Gentiles, and by establishing truth, and righteousness, and holiness upon earth, and by subduing those lusts and passions which are the great disturbers of human society; which was the design of God in sending, and of Christ in coming into the world. To cause to inherit the desolate heritages; that desolate places may be repaired and repossessed. That Christ may possess the heathen, according to Psal. ii. 8, who were in a spiritual sense in a most desolate and forlorn condition.

9 That thou mayest say ᵠto the prison- ers, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves. They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places.

q ch. 42. 7. Zech. 9. 12.

That thou mayest say, to wit, with power and effect, as when God said, Let there be light, &c. To the prisoners; to the Gentiles, who are fast bound by the cords of their sins, and taken captive by the devil at his will, as this same phrase is understood, Isa. xlii. 7. Go forth; come forth to the light, receive Divine illumination and consolation. They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places; they shall have abundant provision in all places, yea, even in those which commonly are barren and unfruitful, and such are both common roads and high grounds.

10 They shall not ʳhunger nor thirst; ˢneither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them ᵗshall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them.

r Rev. 7. 16.
s Ps. 121. 6.
t Ps. 23. 2.

They shall not hunger nor thirst, neither shall the heat nor sun smite them; they shall be supplied with all good and necessary things, and kept from all evil occurrents. He that hath mercy on them shall lead them; God who hath magnified his mercy to them will conduct them with safety and comfort.

11 ᵘAnd I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted.

u ch. 40. 4.

I will remove all hinderances, and prepare the way for them, by levelling high grounds, and raising low grounds; of which see on Isa. xl. 3, 4.

12 Behold, ˣthese shall come from far: and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim.

x ch. 43. 5, 6.

These shall come from far; my people shall be called and gathered even from the most remote parts of the earth. He speaks here, and in many other places, of the conversion of the Gentiles, with allusion to that work of gathering and bringing back the Jews from all parts where they were dispersed into their own land. From the north and from the west; from the several parts of the world; which are here synecdochically expressed, as they are in many other places. From the land of Sinim; either of the Sinites, as they are called, Gen. x. 17, who dwelt about the wilderness of Sin, which was southward from Judea; or of Sin, a famous city of Egypt, called the strength of Egypt, which may be synecdochically put for all Egypt, and that for all southern parts. And so he here mentions the several quarters of the world, where the generality of the Jews were dispersed; the north, which is every where named as the chief place of their banishment and dispersion, as Jer. xvi. 15; xxxi. 8, and elsewhere; the west, the western countries and islands; and the south.

mountains: for the LORD hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted.

The Lord hath comforted his people; God hath now sent that long-desired consolation of Israel.

14 [a] But Zion said, The LORD hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me.

[a] See ch. 40. 27.

This is an objection against all these glorious predictions and promises hitherto mentioned. How can these things be true, when the condition of God's church is now so sad and desperate? as it was when the Jews were captives in Babylon, in which the prophet here supposeth them to be.

15 [a] Can a woman forget her sucking child, †that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, [b] yet will I not forget thee.

[a] See Ps. 103. 13. Mal. 3. 17. Matt. 7. 11.
† Heb. from having compassion.
[b] Rom. 11. 29.

Earthly parents sometimes are so unnatural and monstrous; but do not entertain such unworthy thoughts of me. I will remember thee effectually, to bring thee out of Babylon, and, which is infinitely greater, to send my Son into the world to work out eternal redemption for thee.

16 Behold, [c] I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.

[c] See Ex. 13. 9. Cant. 8. 6.

I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; mine eye and heart is constantly upon thee. He alludes to the common practice of men, who use to put signs and memorials upon their hands or fingers of such things as they dearly affect, and would remember. See Exod. xiii. 9; Deut. vi. 8; Prov. vi. 21; Cant. viii. 6; Jer. xxii. 24. Thy walls are continually before me; my thoughts run continually upon the walls of Jerusalem, which are now broken down, that I may repair them as soon as ever the set time cometh, and then proceed to do far greater things for thee.

17 Thy children shall make haste; [d] thy destroyers and they that made thee waste shall go forth of thee.

[d] ver. 19.

Thy children; or, as others render it, thy builders; which is favoured by the next clause, where the destroyers are opposed to them. Howsoever, the sense is the same; for her children were her builders, as we read in Ezra and Nehemiah. Shall go forth of thee; shall be separated and driven from among thee, and so shall neither hinder nor annoy thee.

18 ¶ [e] Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold: all these gather themselves together, and come to thee. As I live, saith the LORD, thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all, [f] as with an ornament, and bind them on thee, as a bride doeth.

[e] ch. 60. 4.
[f] Prov. 17. 6.

All these, to wit, the Gentiles, as sufficiently appeareth from what hath been already said, and from that which followeth. The sense is, Thy church shall not only be restored and established in Jerusalem, but it shall be vastly enlarged and adorned by the accession of the Gentiles to it. Come to thee, to receive instruction from thee, and to be incorporated with thee into one and the same church. As with an ornament; they shall not be a burden, as the Gentiles formerly were when they mixed themselves with the Jews; but an ornament, in respect of those excellent gifts and graces wherewith they shall enrich and honour thy church.

19 For thy waste and thy desolate places, and the land of thy destruction, [g] shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that swallowed thee up shall be far away.

[g] See ch. 54. 1, 2. Zech. 2. 4. & 10. 10.

Thy waste and thy desolate places; thy own land, which is now waste and desolate, and whereof divers parts lay formerly waste and desolate for want of people to possess and manage them. The land of thy destruction; or rather, thy land of destruction; so called because it is devoted and shall be exposed to destruction. Shall be far away, to wit, from thee.

[b] ch. 60. 4.
[i] Matt. 3. 9. Rom. 11. 11, 12, &c.

The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, Heb. The children of thine orbity or barren and childless state. Those children which thou shalt have when thou art grown past the ordinary age and state of childbearing, as Sarah was made the mother of a most numerous posterity; to which he seems here to allude. Those Gentiles which shall be begotten by thee, to wit, by the ministry of thy children, Christ and his apostles, when thou shalt be deprived of thine own natural children, when thou shalt become barren and unfruitful as to conversion of natural Jews, when the generality of the Jews shall cut themselves off from God, and from his true church, by their apostacy from God, and by their unbelief and obstinate refusal of their Messiah. Shall say again, or rather, shall yet say, though for the present it be otherwise.

21 Then shalt thou say in thine heart, Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? and who hath brought up these? Behold, I was left alone; these, where had they been?

Then shalt thou say, not without admiration, Who hath begotten me these? whence or by whom have I this numberless issue? Seeing I have lost my children; seeing it is not long since that I was in a manner left childless. Am desolate; without a husband, being forsaken by God, who formerly owned himself for my Husband, Isa. liv. 5; Jer. xxxi. 32, and elsewhere. A captive, and removing to and fro; which condition is in many respects a great impediment to the procreation of children. Who hath brought up these? the same thing repeated again to express the miraculousness of this work, and the great surprisal of the Jews at it; which showeth that he speaks of the conversion of the Gentiles.

22 [k] Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their †arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.

[k] ch. 60. 4. & 66. 20.
† Heb. bosom.

I will lift up mine hand; I will call them to me, and command them to do this work, as men commonly signify their calls and commands by this gesture. Set up my standard, as generals do to gather their forces together. See on Isa. xi. 12. To the people; unto thee, or to thy church and people. Shall bring thy sons; those which shall be thine, if not by natural generation, yet by adoption, that shall own God for their Father, and Jerusalem for their mother. In their arms; with great care and tenderness, as nurses carry young infants. The sense is, Even the heathen shall contribute to the increase and preservation of those children which shall be begotten to thee. Thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders; as sick or infirm persons used to be carried. See Mark ii. 3; Luke xv. 5.

23 [l] And kings shall be thy †nursing fathers, and their †queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and [m] lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD: for [n] they shall not be ashamed that wait for me.

[m] Ps. 72. 9. Mic. 7. 17.
[n] Ps. 34. 22. Rom. 5. 5. & 9. 33. & 10. 11.

Kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers; kings and queens shall have a sincere affection and tender regard unto thee and thy children, which was in some sort fulfilled by Cyrus, Ahasuerus, and some few others of the Persian kings or queens, but much more truly and fully by those many kings and emperors of the Gentile world, which after Christ's time did both themselves embrace the true religion, and also set it up in their several dominions. They shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; they shall highly reverence and honour thee, and shall most humbly and readily submit themselves unto thee, which was not verified in any of the Persian kings, but only in these kings who were converted to the Christian faith and church. The expressions are borrowed from the practice of the Eastern people in their prostrations and adorations, when they bowed so low as to touch and kiss the ground, whereby they did or might seem to lick up the very dust of the ground which was about or under the feet of those whom they adored. They shall not be ashamed that wait for me; their hopes and expectations shall not be disappointed, but abundantly satisfied.

o Matt 12. 29. Luke 11. 21, 22. + Heb. the captivity of the just.

24 ¶ °Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or †the lawful captive delivered?

Shall the prey be taken from the mighty? here he starteth an objection against the forementioned promises: How can God's church be delivered, when she is become a prey to, and is in the hands of, her most potent enemies? Or the lawful captive delivered? he who was taken captive in a just war, as God's people might in some sort be said to be, because God himself had delivered them into their enemy's hands, and that justly for their sins. So here is a double impediment to their deliverance out of their corporal and spiritual bondage; the great power of the enemy which kept them in bondage, and the justice of God, which pleads against them and against their deliverance.

25 But thus saith the LORD, Even the †captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children.

The prey of the terrible; or, of the violent; which is opposed to the lawful captive in the foregoing verse; and it is hereby intimated, that although God was just in delivering them into captivity, yet their oppressors were guilty of injustice and violence, both in desiring and endeavouring to keep them in perpetual bondage beyond the seventy years which God had fixed, and in their cruel usage of them. I will contend; I the Almighty God will undertake thy quarrel and this work, and therefore it must necessarily be accomplished.

p ch. 9. 20.

26 And I will ᵖfeed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; and they shall be drunken with their own ᵠblood, as with ‖sweet wine: and all flesh ʳshall know that I the LORD am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty One of Jacob.

q Rev. 14. 20. & 16. 6. ‖ Or, new wine. r Ps. 9. 16. ch. 60. 16.

I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; I will make them eat their own flesh, either through hunger, as Lev. xxvi. 29; Isa. ix. 20, or through rage and madness. Or, I will make thine enemies to destroy one another, and that greedily and with delight, as the next clause implies. All their enemies are here represented as one body; and so when one part of them devoured another, it was their own flesh that was destroyed.

CHAP. L.

The dereliction of the Jews is not of Christ; for he hath power to save, 1—4; and was obedient in that work; and God is present with him, 5—9. An exhortation not to trust in ourselves, but in God, 10, 11.

a Deut. 24. 1. Jer. 3. 8. Hos. 2. 2. b See 2 Kin. 4. 1. Matt. 18. 25. c ch. 52. 3.

THUS saith the LORD, Where is ᵃthe bill of your mother's divorcement, whom I have put away? or which of my ᵇcreditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities ᶜhave ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away.

Thus saith the Lord: this is another sermon begun here, and continued in the next chapter. The main scope of it is to vindicate God's justice, and to convince the Jews that they were the causes of all their calamities which they imputed to God. Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement? God had formerly espoused the Israelites to himself in a kind of matrimonial covenant, but seemed to cast them off when he sent them to Babylon, and did wholly reject them afterward from being his people, and took the Gentiles into their stead; which great and wonderful change was foretold in the Old Testament, as hath been already observed, and we shall see again, and accomplished in the New. And because God foresaw that those strange dispensations would provoke the Jews to murmur and quarrel with God for casting them off without sufficient cause, as indeed they were always prone to accuse God, and to vindicate themselves, he bids them produce their bill of divorce; for those husbands which put away their wives merely out of levity or passion were obliged to give their wives a bill of divorce, which vindicated the wife's innocency, and declared that the husband's will and pleasure was the cause of the divorce; of which see the notes on Deut. xxiv. 1; Matt. xix. 3. Which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? have I any creditors to whom I was obliged or willing to sell you for the payment of my debt? Produce then the bill of sale to witness against me. Parents might, and in some cases were forced to sell their children to their creditors; of which see on Exod. xxi. 7, and 2 Kings iv. 1. For your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, &c.; you can blame none but yourselves and your own sins for all your captivities and miseries.

2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? ᵈwhen I called, was there none to answer? ᵉIs my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, ᶠat my rebuke I ᵍdry up the sea, I make the ʰrivers a wilderness: ⁱtheir fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst.

The general accusation delivered in the last words he now proveth by particular instances. When I came; when I, first by my prophets, and at last by my Son, came unto them, to call them to repentance, and to redeem and deliver them, as it is explained in the following clauses of this verse. No man that regarded and received me, that complied with my call and offer of grace, as it follows; whereby he implies that the generality of the Jews were guilty of gross infidelity and obstinate disobedience, and therefore might justly be rejected. When I called; called them to repentance, or to come unto me, or to do my will, as masters call their servants. None to answer; to come at my call, to obey my commands. Have I no power to deliver? what is the reason of this horrible contempt and rebellion? Is it because you expect no good from me, but think that I am either unwilling or unable to save you? Because you see no miracles wrought for you to save you from the Babylonians; and because my Son, your Messiah, cometh not with pomp and power, as you expect, but in the form of a servant, poor, and exposed to contempt and death; do you therefore believe that my power to deliver you is less than it was? At my rebuke: this phrase is borrowed from Psal. cvi. 9, and it is used Matt. viii. 26. At my word or command, whereby I rebuke and check its proud waves. I dry up, Heb. I will dry up; or, I can dry up; the future verb being put potentially. As I did it once, so I can and will do it again, when occasion requires it. I make the rivers a wilderness; as dry and fit for travel as a wilderness.

k Ex. 10. 21. l Rev. 6. 12.

3 ᵏI clothe the heavens with blackness, ˡand I make sackcloth their covering.

I clothe the heavens with blackness; or, I will or can clothe, &c. What I once did in Egypt, when I drew black curtains before all the heavenly lights, and caused an unparalleled and amazing darkness for three days together, to the great terror of mine enemies, so I can and will do still when it is necessary to save my people. And therefore you have no reason to distrust me. I make sackcloth their covering; I cover them with thick and dark clouds, black as sackcloth, as is said, Rev. vi. 12, or as that stuff of which the tents of Kedar were made, Cant. i. 5. From this and some other expressions it appears that they wore a black sackcloth, which also was most suitable to the state of mourners, by whom it was used.

m Ex. 4. 11.

4 mThe Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is nweary: he wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned.

n Matt. 11. 28.

God having asserted his own power, to show the groundlessness of the infidelity of the Jews, he proceeds to show what excellent and effectual means he used to bring them to repentance and salvation; which he mentions as a great aggravation of their unbelief and rebellion, which by this means was without all excuse. This and the following passages may be in some sort understood of the prophet Isaiah, though but obscurely and imperfectly; but they are far more evidently and eminently verified in Christ, and indeed seem to be meant directly of him. For seeing there are many other passages in this prophecy which are directly meant of Christ, and of his ministry, and not at all of the prophet, why may not this be added to the number of them? especially considering that there is nothing here which forceth us to understand this place of Isaiah, and several of these passages are expounded of Christ in the New Testament, as is confessed. Besides, this seems to suit best with the coherence; for according to this exposition the same person speaketh here who hath spoken in all the foregoing verses of the chapter, even the Lord himself considered as man, because he was both God and man, as is abundantly evident from many scriptures, both of the Old and New Testament, as hath been already proved, and will hereafter be more fully evinced. The tongue of the learned; an ability of speaking plainly, and convincingly, and persuadingly, and in all points so as becometh a person taught of God, and filled with all Divine and heavenly wisdom and knowledge, and with a singular skill of winning souls, and of working upon men's hearts and consciences. Him that is weary; burdened with the sense of his sad and deplorable condition, in which case a word of comfort is most seasonable and acceptable. This was the proper and principal design of Christ's ministry, to give rest and comfort to distressed souls, according to what is said with respect to this place, Matt. xi. 28; and all the doctrines, reproofs, and threatenings of Christ were directed to this end, to make men fit for comfort and salvation. He wakeneth, to wit, me, the pronoun being oft understood; or, as it follows, mine ear. Morning by morning; from time to time, and continually. He wakeneth mine ear to hear; because human nature is of itself weak and slothful, he by his Divine power assisteth and stirreth me up to the observation and practice of all his commands and my duties. As the learned; either, 1. As learned men or teachers use to awaken their scholars to hear and learn of them from time to time; or rather, 2. As those that are or desire and endeavour to be learned use to hear with all possible attention and diligence; for this title of learned is in the former part of the verse given not to the teacher, who is said to be God, but to the person taught by him.

o Ps. 40. 6, 7, 8. p Matt. 26. 39. John 14. 31. Phil. 2. 8. Heb. 10. 5, &c.

5 ¶ The Lord God ohath opened mine ear, and I was not prebellious, neither turned away back.

Hath opened mine ear; hath revealed unto me; or rather, hath given me a power and will to hear and receive his commands, as this phrase is used, Psal. xl. 6; Isa. xxxv. 5, and elsewhere. I was not rebellious; I readily did and suffered what he required of me. Neither turned away back: the same thing repeated in other words. I did not turn away mine ear from hearing any of God's commands, nor my feet from going where God sent me, how difficult or dangerous soever my employment was. He seems to allude to the former prophets, who had, divers of them, shrunk back, and for a time refused such work as God called them to, as Moses, Exod. iii. 11, 13, Jonah, chap. i. 3, and others.

q Matt. 26. 67. & 27. 26. John 18. 22.

6 qI gave my back to the smiters, and rmy cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; I hid not my face from shame and spitting.

r Lam. 3. 30.

I gave my back to the smiters; I patiently yielded up myself, and turned my back to those who smote me. I was willing not only to do, but to suffer, the will of God, and the injuries of men. This and the following passages were literally fulfilled in Christ, as is expressly affirmed, Matt. xxvi. 57, 67; xxvii. 26, 30, and elsewhere; but we read of no such thing concerning Isaiah. And therefore it is most safe and reasonable to understand it of Christ; the rather, because it is not usual with the prophets to commend themselves so highly as the prophet here commends the person of whom he speaketh. Plucked off the hair; which was a contumely or punishment inflicted upon malefactors, Neh. xiii. 25. I hid not my face from shame, from all manner of reproachful usages; but did knowingly and willingly submit myself thereunto. And spitting: spitting in a man's face was used in token of contempt and detestation, Numb. xii. 14; Job xxx. 10; and this was litterally fulfilled in Christ, Matt. xxvi. 67.

7 ¶ For the Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded: therefore have sI set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed.

s Ezek. 3. 8, 9.

For; or rather, But, as this particle is oft rendered. For God's favour is here opposed to the injuries of men. The Lord God will help me; though as a man I am weak and inconsiderable, yet God will strengthen me to go through my great and hard work. Therefore shall I not be confounded; therefore I assure myself of success in my employment, and of victory over all mine enemies. Therefore have I set my face like a flint; I have hardened myself with resolution and courage against all opposition. So this or the like phrase is used Ezek. iii. 8, 9, which elsewhere signifies obstinacy and impudence, as Jer. v. 3; Zech. vii. 12; so that it notes any settled and unmovable purpose, whether good or evil.

8 t*He is* near that justifieth me; who will contend with me? let us stand together: who is †mine adversary? let him come near to me.

t Rom. 8. 32, 33, 34.

† Heb. the master of my cause.

He is near; God, though he seem to be at a distance, and to hide his face from me, yet he is in truth at my right hand, and ready to help me. That justifieth me; that will publicly acquit me from all the calumnies of mine adversaries, who say that I am a transgressor of the law, a false teacher and deceiver, a blasphemer, and a devil, and the like, in which opinion they are confirmed by my death and sufferings. But God will clear up my righteousness, and show by many and mighty signs and wonders that he is well pleased with me, and that I lived and died his faithful servant. Let him come near to me; I challenge all my accusers to stand and appear before the Judge face to face, and to produce all their charges against me; for I am conscious of mine own innocency, and I know that God will give sentence for me.

9 Behold, the Lord God will help me; who is he that shall condemn me? ulo, they all shall wax old as a garment; xthe moth shall eat them up.

u Job 13. 28. Ps. 102. 26. ch. 51. 6. x ch. 51. 8.

That shall condemn me; that dare attempt it, or can justly do it. They all, mine accusers and enemies, shall wax old as a garment; the moth shall eat them up: shall pine away in their iniquity, as God threatened, Lev. xxvi. 39; shall be cut off and consumed by a secret curse and judgment of God, which is compared to a moth, Hos. v. 12, whilst I shall survive and flourish, and the pleasure of God shall prosper in my hands, as is said, Isa. liii. 10.

10 ¶ Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that ywalketh in darkness, and hath no light? zlet him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God.

y Ps. 23. 4. z 2 Chron. 20. 20. Ps. 20. 7.

Who is among you that feareth the Lord? he now turneth his speech from the unbelieving and rebellious Jews to those of them who were or should be pious. Of his servant; of the same person of whom he hath hitherto spoken; of Christ, who is called God's servant, Isa. lii. 13; liii. 11, partly by way of eminency, and partly to intimate that although he was God, yet he should take upon himself the form of a servant, as is said, Phil. ii. 7. He hereby signifies that the grace of God, and the comfort here following, belongeth to none but to those that hear and believe this great Prophet of the church; which also was declared by Moses, Deut. xviii. 15, compared with Acts iii. 22, 23. In darkness; not in sin, which is oft called darkness; as walking in darkness is put for living in wickedness, 1 John i. 6; but in misery, which also frequently cometh under the name of darkness: that liveth in a most disconsolate and calamitous condition, together with great despondency or dejection of spirit. No light; no comfort nor hope left. Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God; let him fix his faith and hope in the name, i. e. in the most excellent and amiable nature, and infinite perfections, and especially in the free grace, and mercy, and faithfulness, of the Lord, declared in his word; and in his propriety or interest in God, who by the mediation of this Servant is reconciled to him, and made his God.

11 Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks: walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled. [a] This shall ye have of mine hand; ye shall lie down [b] in sorrow.

a John 9. 39.
b Ps. 16. 4.

All ye that kindle a fire, that you may enjoy the light and comfort of it, as it is explained in the following words. You that reject the light which God hath set up, and refuse the counsel of his servant, and seek for comfort, and safety, and the knowledge of God's mind, and the enjoyment of his favour, by your own inventions; which was the common error of the Jews in all ages, and especially in the days of the Messiah, when they refused him, and that way of righteousness and salvation which he appointed, and rested upon their own traditions and devices, going about to establish their own righteousness, and not submitting unto the righteousness of God, as is expressed, Rom. x. 3. That compass yourselves about; endeavouring to warm and refresh yourselves on all sides. With sparks; or rather, with firebrands, as this very word is fitly rendered, Prov. xxvi. 18, which is better than sparks or flames, which is there put in the margin, because firebrands only, and not sparks or flames, are capable of being thrown by one man at another. And this word is no where else used in Scripture. He mentions firebrands, either to imply that these fires yielded more smoke than heat or light, or because these were the usual materials of a fire. Walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled; use your utmost endeavours to get comfort and satisfaction from these devices. This shall ye have of mine hand, ye shall lie down in sorrow; this shall be the fruit of all, through my just judgment, that instead of that comfort and security which you expect by these means, you shall receive nothing but vexation and misery, which shall pursue you both living and dying; for this word, which is here rendered lie down, is frequently used for dying, as Gen. xlvii. 30; Job xxi. 26, and elsewhere. Or it is a metaphor from a man that lying down on his bed for rest and ease, meets with nothing but trouble and pain, as Job complained, chap. vii. 13, 14.

CHAP. LI.

Abraham our pattern to trust in Christ; in his promises, and righteous salvation: this is constant, but men are transitory, 1—8. A prayer of the godly in affliction, 9—11. The Lord's answer, 12—16. He bewaileth Jerusalem, 17—20. The bitter cup taken from her, and given to her enemies, 21—23.

[a] HEARKEN to me, [b] ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the LORD: look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged.

b Rom. 9. 30, 31, 32.

Hearken to me, ye that follow after righteousness: now he turneth his speech again to the believing and godly Jews. That seek the Lord; that make it your chief care and business to seek favour and help from God. Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged; consider the state of Abraham and Sarah, when they procreated Isaac, from whom Jacob and all of you sprang; for so he explains the metaphor in the next verse. He compareth the bodies of Abraham and Sarah unto a rock, or pit, or quarry out of which stones are hewed or digged, thereby implying that God in some sort actually did that which Christ said he was able to do, Matt. iii. 9, even of stones to raise up children unto Abraham; it being then as impossible by the course of nature for Abraham and Sarah in that age to procreate a child, as it is to hew a living child out of a rock, or to dig one out of a pit of stone.

2 [c] Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you: [d] for I called him alone, and [e] blessed him, and increased him.

c Rom. 4. 1, 16. Heb. 11. 11, 12.
d Gen. 12. 1, 2.
e Gen. 24. 1, 35.

I called him from his own country and kindred to follow me to an unknown land, where I promised that I would multiply and bless him, as is particularly explained, Gen. xii. 1—3. Alone, Heb. one; either, 1. Him only of all his kindred; for though he carried some few of them with him, yet I called none but him. So this notes God's singular favour to their progenitors above all the rest of the world. Or, 2. Him when he was alone or solitary, to wit, as to any issue; when he neither had nor was likely to have any child by Sarah. And this word alone seems to belong not only to this word wherewith it is joined, but also unto the two following words, especially if we consider the order of the words in the Hebrew text, where they lie thus; for one (or alone, or when he was alone, or but one) I called him, and blessed him, and increased him. Increased him into a vast multitude, when his condition was desperate in the eye of reason. And therefore God can as easily raise and deliver his church when they are in the most forlorn condition, and seem to be dead, and buried, and consumed, so that nothing but dry bones remain of them, as it is declared at large, Ezek. xxxvii.

3 For the LORD [f] shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert [g] like the garden of the LORD; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody.

f Ps. 102. 13. ch. 40. 1. & 52. 9. ver. 12.
g Gen. 13. 10. Joel 2. 3.

For: so this comes in as a reason why they should look unto or consider that famous example of Abraham and Sarah, because they should find the like wonder wrought on their behalf. Or, Therefore, or for the sake of Abraham, my friend, and of that covenant which I made with him, and by which I promised to bless him and his seed for ever. Shall comfort Zion; his church, which is frequently called by that name, both in the Old and New Testament. He will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord: although she shall be waste and desolate like a wilderness or desert for a time, yet she shall be restored, and be made as pleasant and flourishing as the garden of Eden was.

4 ¶ Hearken unto me, my people; and give ear unto me, O my nation: [h] for a law shall proceed from me, and I will make my judgment to rest [i] for a light of the people.

h ch. 2. 3. & 42. 4.
i ch. 42. 6.

Hearken unto me, my people: seeing the Gentiles will hearken to me, as I have formerly told you, take heed that you Jews, whom I chose to be my peculiar people, do not reject my counsel, nor forsake your own mercies, as I fear you will do. A law; a new law, even the doctrine of the gospel, which ought to have the force of a law with you, and I expect your obedience to it, no less than to my law delivered by Moses. I will make my judgment to rest: judgment is here the same thing with law in the former clause, the word of God, which is frequently called judgment, as hath been observed again and again, or the evangelical doctrine, of which he saith that he will make it to rest, i. e. settle and establish it; whereby he may possibly intimate the stability and perpetuity of this light in the church, that it shall not be like the light of the Mosaical dispensation, which was only to shine for a season, even until the time of reformation, Heb. ix. 10, when all those dark shadows were to vanish and give place to the Sun of righteousness, and to that kingdom and state that should never be moved, as we read, Dan. ii. 44; Heb. xii. 26—28, and in many other places. For a light of the people, Heb. of or to the peoples; not only to you Jews, but unto people of all sorts and nations, who shall receive and walk in that light which you will reject, and use all possible endeavours to extinguish.

k ch. 46. 13. & 56. 1. Rom. 1. 16, 17. l Ps. 67. 4. & 98. 9. m ch. 60. 9. n Rom. 1. 16.

5 [k]My righteousness is near; my salvation is gone forth, [l]and mine arms shall judge the people; [m]the isles shall wait upon me, and [n]on mine arm shall they trust.

My righteousness; my salvation, as it is expounded in the next clause, the redemption of all my people, both Jews and Gentiles, which is the effect of his righteousness; either his justice, or his faithfulness, or his mercy and goodness; for all these are called by the name of righteousness in Scripture, and all these contributed to the work of man's redemption. My salvation is gone forth; shall shortly go forth; my secret and eternal purpose of saving my people shall speedily be fulfilled. Mine arms shall judge the people; either, 1. Shall destroy those people who obstruct or oppose this work. Or rather, 2. Shall subdue the Gentiles to mine authority, and rule them by my word and Spirit; which agrees best with the following clause. The isles; the remote countries of the Gentiles, as Isa. xli. 1; xlii. 4, and elsewhere. Shall wait upon me; shall confidently expect and hope for this promised righteousness and salvation from me, and from me only, and not from idols, as they have done, nor by any other way.

6 [o]Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath: for [p]the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, [q]and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner: but my salvation shall be for ever, and my righteousness shall not be abolished.

The heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment; the heavens and earth shall pass away, either, 1. Simply, and by a substantial corruption or annihilation, which is yet to be understood comparatively or conditionally, that these should sooner vanish into nothing than God's promised salvation should not be accomplished; as when it is said, Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away, Matt. xxiv. 35. It is thus expounded, It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than (for) one tittle of the law to fail. Or, 2. In regard of their present state, and properties, and use, as smoke is here said to vanish, although the substance of it be not destroyed. They that dwell therein shall die in like manner; as they shall be dissolved, as we read, 2 Pet. iii. 11, and death is nothing else but a dissolution.

7 [r]Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness, the people [s]in whose heart is my law; [t]fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings.

That know righteousness; that love and practise it, as knowing is commonly used. In whose heart is my law; who are tacitly opposed to the carnal Jews that had the law written only in tables. Compare 2 Cor. iii. 3; Heb. viii. 10. The reproach of men; the censures of the carnal Jews, who will load their believing and godly brethren with a world of reproaches: but let not these things discourage you.

u ch. 50. 9.

8 For [u]the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wool: but my righteousness shall be for ever, and my salvation from generation to generation.

The moth shall eat them up; your reproachers shall be easily destroyed, and so God will revenge your cause upon them, and deliver you from their reproaches. Like wool; like a woollen garment, which is sooner corrupted by moths or such creatures than linen.

Awake, awake, thou who hast carried thyself like one asleep, and unconcerned for thy people, and unable to save them. The prophet having foretold what great things God would do for his church, and longing for the accomplishment of them, and knowing that prayer was one means by which God fulfils his promises, he poureth forth his prayer to God in his own name, and in the name of God's people. Put on strength; clothe and adorn thyself with mighty works; put forth thy strength. That hath cut, Heb. hewed, with thy sword, Rahab; Egypt, so called here, and Psal. lxxxvii. 4; lxxxix. 10, either from its pride or strength, or from the shape and figure of that land. The dragon; Pharaoh, so called Psal. lxxiv. 13; Ezek. xxix. 3; xxxii. 2.

10 Art thou not it which hath [d]dried the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over?

Art thou not it which hath dried the sea? art not thou the same God, and as potent now as then thou wast? For the ransomed; for thy people, whom thou didst redeem and bring out of Egypt.

e ch. 35. 10.

11 Therefore [e]the redeemed of the LORD shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head: they shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away.

Therefore; or, So; Heb. And. This verse contains an answer to the prophet's prayer. It is true, I did these great things, and I will do the like again. Everlasting joy shall be upon their head, like a crown of glory. But for the accomplishment of this magnificent promise we must needs look beyond their return from Babylon into their own land, when they met with many discouragements, and troubles, and calamities, and extend it unto the coming of Christ, by whom these great things were procured and actually conferred upon his people.

Who art thou? how unreasonable and distrustful art thou, O my church! how unlike to thyself! how unsuitable in these despondencies unto thy own professions and obligations! Of the son of man which shall be made as grass; of a weak mortal and perishing creature.

And forgettest the Lord thy Maker; and dost not consider the infinite power of that God who made thee, and who will plead thy cause. As if he were ready to destroy; as if it were in his power to destroy thee in a moment. Where is the fury of the oppressor? what is become of the power and rage of the Babylonians? Is it not all gone? Are not they broken, and thou delivered? He speaks of the thing as if it were already done, because it should certainly and suddenly be done. Where is it? It is no where, it is quite lost and gone, as this phrase is frequently used, as Psal. xlii. 3; Zech. i. 5; 1 Cor. xv. 55.

14 The captive exile hasteneth that he
1 Zech. 9. 11. may be loosed, [l]and that he should not die in the pit, nor that his bread should fail.

God is not slack, as you think, but maketh haste to fulfil his promise, and to rescue his captive and oppressed people from all their oppressions and miseries.

15 But I am the LORD thy God, that m Ps. 74. 13. Job 26. 12. Jer. 31. 35. [m]divided the sea, whose waves roared: The LORD of hosts is his name.

I have put my words in thy mouth; these great and glorious promises which are in thy mouth are not the vain words of man, a weak, and inconstant, and unfaithful creature, but the words of the almighty, unchangeable, and faithful God, and therefore they shall be infallibly accomplished. These words are manifestly spoken by God, either, 1. To Isaiah, by whom these promises were delivered. Or, 2. To Christ, of whom and to whom many things are said in this prophecy, as we have already seen, and will further appear. And such abrupt and sudden apostrophes to persons not mentioned in the foregoing words are not unusual in this prophecy, as hath been observed. Or rather, 3. To Israel, to God's church and people, to whom he speaks both in the foregoing and following verses. For God's word is frequently said to be put into the mouths, not only of the prophets, but of the people also, as Isa. lix. 21; as also Deut. xxx. 14; Josh. i. 8, &c. Have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand; have protected thee by my almighty power. See the same phrase Isa. xlix. 2. That I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth; I have given thee these promises and this protection in all thy calamities, to assure thee of my care and kindness to thee, and that I will reform thee in a most glorious manner, and bring thee unto that perfect and blessed estate which is reserved for the days of the Messiah, which in Scripture phrase is called a making of new heavens and a new earth, Isa. lxv. 17; lxvi. 22; 2 Pet. iii. 13, and elsewhere. And say unto Zion, Thou art my people; that I may own thee for my people, in a more illustrious manner than ever I have done.

Awake; either, 1. Out of the sleep of security. Or, 2. Out of the sleep of death. Heb. Rouse up thyself; come out of that forlorn and disconsolate condition in which thou hast so long been. This sense suits best with the following words. Stand up upon thy feet, O thou who hast fallen, and been thrown down to the ground. Which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury; which hast been sorely afflicted; for so this metaphor is used. Psal. lxxv. 8; Jer. xxv. 15, &c.; xlix. 12. The cup of trembling; which striketh him that drinketh it with a deadly horror. Wrung them out; drunk every drop of it. See on Psal. lxxv. 8.

18 There is none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth; neither is there any that taketh her by the hand of all the sons that she hath brought up.

When thou wast drunk with this cup, and not able to go, neither thy princes, nor prophets, nor priests were able or willing to lead and support thee.

These two things; either, 1. Those which were now mentioned: 1. That she was drunk with the cup of God's wrath, ver. 17. 2. That she had none to support or comfort her in that condition. Or, 2. Those which here follow, which although they be expressed in four words, yet they may fitly be reduced to two things, the desolation or devastation of the land, and the destruction of the people, by famine and sword. So famine and sword are not named as new evils, but only as the particular ways or means of bringing the destruction there mentioned; and the words may be thus rendered, desolation and destruction, even (this Hebrew particle being oft taken expositively, whereof many instances have been given) famine (or, by famine) and sword. Or two may be put indefinitely for many, as double is put for abundantly more, Job xi. 6; Isa. xl. 2; lxi. 7; Zech. ix. 12, and elsewhere. By whom shall I comfort thee? I cannot find any man who is able to comfort and relieve thee.

20 [x]Thy sons have fainted, they lie at x Lam. 2. 11, 12. the head of all the streets, as a wild bull in a net: they are full of the fury of the LORD, the rebuke of thy God.

Thy sons have fainted; they are so far from being able to comfort thee, as was said, ver. 18, that they themselves faint away for want of comfort, and through famine. They lie dead by famine, or the sword of the enemy, at the head of all the streets; where men enter in or go out of the streets, where the enemy found them either opposing their entrance, or running out of them to make an escape. As a wild bull in a net: those of them who are not slain are struggling for life; and although they murmur at God, and fight with men, yet they cannot prevail or escape.

21 ¶ Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted, and drunken, [y]but not with wine: y See ver. 17. Lam. 3. 15.

But with the cup of God's fury, mentioned above, ver. 17.

22 Thus saith thy Lord the LORD, and thy God [z]that pleadeth the cause of his people, Behold, I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink it again: z Jer. 50. 34.

Thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people; who though he hath fought against thee, is now reconciled to thee, and will maintain thy cause against all thine adversaries.

23 But [a]I will put it into the hand of a Jer. 25. 17, 26, 28. Zech. 12. 2. b Ps. 66. 11, 12. them that afflict thee; [b]which have said to thy soul, Bow down, that we may go over: and thou hast laid thy body as the ground, and as the street, to them that went over.

Bow down, that we may go over; lie down upon the ground, that we may trample upon thee, as conquerors used to do upon their conquered enemies. See Josh. x. 24; Psal. cx. 1.

low estate, and be strong and courageous. Put on thy beautiful garments: thy sorrows shall be ended, and thou shalt be advanced into a most glorious and blessed condition. O Jerusalem, the holy city; O my church, which is every where called by the name of Zion or Jerusalem. For henceforth there shall no more come into thee, either to molest thee, or to associate themselves with thee, or to defile or corrupt thee, the uncircumcised, heathens or infidels, who are commonly called uncircumcised; and the unclean; nor any others, who though they be circumcised, as the Jews generally were, are unclean in any thing: whereby he intimates that there should be a greater purity and reformation in the church than formerly there had been, which was eminently accomplished in the church and kingdom of Christ.

Shake thyself from the dust, in which thou hast lain as a prisoner, or sat as a mourner. Sit down upon thy throne. Or, sit up, as this word is rendered, Gen. xxvii. 19. Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck; the yoke of thy captivity shall be taken off from thee. It is a metaphor from beasts that have the yoke fastened by bands to their necks.

g Ps. 44. 12. ch. 45. 13. Jer. 15. 13.

3 For thus saith the LORD, [g]Ye have sold yourselves for nought; and ye shall be redeemed without money.

Ye have sold yourselves, by your sins, into the hands of the Chaldeans, for nought; without any price or valuable consideration paid by them, either to you or to me, your Lord and Owner. Ye shall be redeemed without money; without paying any ransom.

h Gen. 46. 6. Acts 7. 14.

4 For thus saith the Lord GOD, My people went down aforetime into [h]Egypt to sojourn there; and the Assyrian oppressed them without cause.

My people went down aforetime into Egypt to sojourn there; where they had protection and sustenance, and therefore owed subjection to the king of Egypt. And yet when he oppressed them I punished him severely, and delivered them out of his hands. Which is easily understood from the following words. And; or, but; for here is an opposition made between these two cases. The Assyrian; the king of Babylon, who is called the king of Assyria, 2 Kings xxiii. 29, compared with chap. xxiv. 7, as also the Persian emperor is called, Ezra vi. 22, because it was one and the same empire, which was possessed, first by the Assyrians, then by the Babylonians, and afterwards by the Persians. Oppressed them without cause; without any such ground or colour, by mere force invading their land, and carrying them away into captivity. For although it be said that God gave this land and people into his hand, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17, by his counsel and providence; yet that was neither known to nor regarded by the king of Babylon, nor was it a good and lawful title, God's word, and not his providence, being the rule by which men's rights are determined; otherwise a robber hath a right to my purse, which he cannot take from me upon the highway without God's providence.

5 Now therefore, what have I here, saith the LORD, that my people is taken away for nought? they that rule over them make them to howl, saith the LORD; and my name continually every day is [i]blasphemed.

i Ezek. 36. 20, 23. Rom. 2. 24.

What have I here? Heb. What to me here? the sense is either, 1. What do I here? Why do I sit still here, and not go to Babylon to punish the Babylonians, and to deliver my people? Or, 2. What honour have I by suffering this injury to be done to my people? Is taken away, were carried away captive by the Babylonians, for nought; without any provocation or pretence of right. See before on ver. 3. They that rule over them, who by their office are obliged to deal justly and tenderly with their subjects, make them to howl, by their tyrannical and unmerciful usage of them. My name continually every day is blasphemed; instead of that praise and service which the Babylonians owe me for all their successes and conquests, they blaspheme me, as if I wanted either power or good-will to save my people out of their hands.

6 Therefore my people shall know my name: therefore they shall know in that day that I am he that doth speak: behold, it is I.

My people shall know my name; they shall have sensible experience of my infinite power and goodness in fighting for them and against you; whereby they shall be able to put your blasphemous tongues to silence. They shall know; which word is understood from the foregoing clause, as is very frequent in Scripture. In that day; when I shall redeem my people: which work was begun by the return of the Jews from Babylon, and afterwards carried on, and at last perfected, by the coming of the Messiah. That I am he that doth speak: behold, it is I: that all these promises are not the words of a weak, or fickle, or deceitful man, but of him who is the omnipotent, and unchangeable, and covenant-keeping God. Or thus, That I who have formerly spoken to you by my servants the prophets, (for it was the Spirit of Christ which was and spake in them, 1 Pet. i. 11,) do now speak to you in my own person, being clothed with flesh; which agrees well, as with the analogy of faith, and with divers other scriptures, so particularly with the next verse, and with divers following passages, which so evidently speak of the person and kingdom of Christ, that they cannot without great force be understood of any other.

7 ¶ [k]How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, [l]Thy God reigneth!

l Ps. 93. 1. & 96. 10. & 97. 1.

How beautiful! these are words of rejoicing and admiration. They are exceeding precious and acceptable. Upon the mountains of Zion and Moriah, which are sometimes mentioned as one mountain, and sometimes as two. Or in the mountainous country of Judea, to which these glad tidings were brought, and from which they were spread abroad into other countries. Are the feet, which carry this welcome messenger; or the messenger himself. Of him; or, of them; for the singular number is oft put for the plural: although it may be here emphatically used, to signify, that although there were many messengers, yet one was the chief and Lord of the embassy, whose coming was more acceptable than the rest; which suits excellently to the Messiah, who is called the Messenger of the covenant, Mal. iii. 1, and is oft said to be sent by God, as John vi. 38; viii. 16, 18, &c., to publish the glad tidings of salvation. That bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation: these emphatical and repeated expressions are a sufficient evidence that something further and better is here intended than their deliverance out of Babylon, which in itself was but a very imperfect work, and reached at first but to a few of that numerous people, and was attended with many fears, and sorrows, and remainders of their bondage, Ezra ix. 8, 9; Neh. i. 3; and that although that was the beginning of these glad tidings, yet they extended much further, even to the coming of Christ, by whom alone true peace and salvation were procured. That saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth: it is true, this might in some sort be said when God so overruled the affairs of the world, and the heart of Cyrus, that his people were freed from the Babylonish captivity, and restored into and settled in their own land. Although he that considers the state of God's people in their own land after their return, will find that the reign of God in and over the world was not then either very conspicuous or glorious. And therefore it seems far more reasonable to understand it of the days of the Messiah, when God did discover and exercise his dominion over the world far more eminently than ever he had done from the beginning of the world until that time.

8 Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the LORD shall bring again Zion.

Thy watchmen, thy ministers, who shall descry the approach and coming of this heavenly King and kingdom, shall lift up the voice; partly to give notice to all people of these glad tidings; and partly by way of exultation, to sing forth the praises of God for this glorious day and mercy, as it here follows. They shall see; they shall understand, and so be able to teach, Divine mysteries. Eye to eye; very distinctly, and clearly, and familiarly, their eyes beholding the eyes of this King of glory; as it is said of Zedekiah, Jer. xxxiv. 3, Thine eyes shall behold the eyes of the king of Babylon; and as it is said, mouth to mouth, Numb. xii. 8, and face to face, Gen. xxxii. 30; Exod. xxxiii. 11; Numb. xiv. 14. They shall see with their bodily eyes the King of the church, or the Word made flesh, as they are said to have done, John i. 14; 1 John i. 1. They shall be eye and ear witnesses of the words and works of Christ, and therefore their testimony of these things shall be more certain and valuable. When the Lord shall bring again Zion; when God shall complete the work of bringing his church out of captivity; which was begun at the return out of Babylon, and perfected by Christ's coming into the world.

Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence; make haste, O ye banished Jews, to depart out of Babylon into your own land, that there I may meet with you, and bless you, and perform those further and greater things which I have promised there to do for you. And this invitation was the more necessary, because God foresaw that a great number of the Jews would upon worldly considerations continue in those foreign countries in which they were settled, and be very backward to return to the Holy Land. Touch no unclean thing; and when you go thence, take heed that you carry not along with you any of their superstitions or idolatries; but purify and prepare yourselves, that so God may return to you in mercy, when you return into your own land. Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord; and especially you priests and Levites, whose office it is to minister in holy things, and to carry back the holy vessels of the temple, keep yourselves from all pollution.

13 ¶ Behold, [x] my servant shall [‖] deal prudently, [y] he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high.

This is the beginning of a new prophecy, which is continued from hence to the end of the next chapter; and therefore it is well observed by divers, both ancient and modern interpreters, that the fifty-third chapter should have begun here. My servant. Quest. Of whom doth the prophet here speak? It is apparent that these three last verses of this chapter, and all the following chapter, speak of one and the same person. And that that person is Christ is so evident, that the Chaldee paraphrast, and other ancient, and some later Hebrew doctors, understand it directly of him, and that divers Jews have been convinced and converted to the Christian faith by the evidence of this prophecy. And there is not a verse in this whole context which doth not afford a clear and convincing proof of this truth, as we shall see. And there needs no other argument to confirm it, than the variety and vanity of the pretended expositions of the Jews, who use all possible wit and art to wrest all these passages to other persons. Those who would seem wiser than the rest, and confute the other expositions of their brethren, understand it either of the Jewish people in general, or of the prophet Jeremiah in particular. But both these conceits are so groundless and absurd, that there is scarce a verse but confutes them, as we shall clearly discern in the exposition of them. And therefore other Jews reject them both, and understand it of Abraham, or Moses, or Josiah, or Ezra, or Zorobabel; and they might as well have named twenty persons more, to whom this place might be applied upon as good grounds as to any of these. But there is not one clause in all this context which is not most truly and fitly applied to Christ, as I shall make apparent, step by step. And first this title of God's servant is in an eminent and peculiar manner given to Christ in this very prophecy, as Isa. xlii. 1; xlix. 6; liii. 11; Ezek. xxxiv. 23; Zech. iii. 8. Shall deal prudently; shall manage his kingdom with admirable wisdom. Or, shall prosper, as it is in the margin, and as this word is frequently rendered, and particularly in this very case, and of this same person, Jer. xxiii. 5; which also seems best to agree with the following clause, and with chap. liii. 10, 11. And this intimation concerning the future prosperity and advancement of the Messiah is fitly put in the first place to prevent those scandals which otherwise might arise from the succeeding passages, which largely describe his state of humiliation and deep affliction. He shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high: here are three words signifying the same thing, to express the height and glory of his exaltation; which agrees most fitly to Christ, but cannot without great force be applied to Jeremiah, who had no greater honour or favour done him by the Chaldeans at the taking of Jerusalem, than to be left at liberty to go where he pleased, Jer. xl. 4, and who after that time met with great contempt and hardship from his own countrymen, Jer. xlii., xliii., xliv.

z Ps. 22. 6, 7. ch. 53. 2, 3.
14 As many were astonished at thee; his [z] visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men:

Were astonished; were struck with wonder, either, 1. At his glorious endowments, and the excellency and power of his doctrine, and his miraculous works. Or rather, 2. At his great deformity, and stupendous humiliation and calamity, as may be gathered both from the following words, and from the use of this word in Scripture, which is generally used in a bad sense, or of wondering at some extraordinary evil, as Jer. xviii. 16; xix. 8, and oft elsewhere; and never in a good sense, or of wondering at any thing which is extraordinarily good. At thee; at thee, O my servant, to whom he now turneth his speech, and then turneth his speech from him, and speaks of him in the next words; such sudden changes of persons, and speaking of one and the same man sometimes in one person, and then presently in another, being very frequent in the writings of the prophets, as we have already seen in divers instances. His visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men; he was more deformed or uncomely than any other man; which was undoubtedly verified in Christ, who, in respect of his birth, and breeding, and manner of life, was most obscure and contemptible, and therefore said to be a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people, Psal. xxii. 6; who was more hated and vilified by the generality of the Jews than any man upon earth, and was accounted and called by them a deceiver, a Samaritan, a blasphemer, and a devil, &c.; whose countenance also was so marred with frequent watchings, and fastings, and troubles, that he was thought to be near fifty years old when he was but about thirty, John viii. 57; and was further spoiled with buffetings, and crowning with thorns, and other cruel and despiteful usages from men, and with the deep and continual sense of the burden of men's sins, and of God's displeasure due unto them; all which did not only oppress his spirit, but had a great influence upon the very constitution of his body.

15 [a]So shall he sprinkle many nations; [b]the kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that [c]which had not been told them shall they see; and that which they had not heard shall they consider.

a Ezek. 36. 25. Acts 2. 33. Heb. 9. 13, 14. b ch. 49. 7, 23. c ch. 65. 1. Rom. 15. 21. & 16. 25, 26. Eph. 3. 5, 9.

So; his exaltation shall be answerable to his humiliation. Shall he sprinkle; either, 1. With his blood, which is called the blood of sprinkling, Heb. xii. 24; or, shall justify them, as it follows, Isa. liii. 11, which is frequently expressed by washing, as Psal. li. 2, 7; Ezek. xvi. 9, and by sprinkling clean water, Ezek. xxxvi. 25. Or, 2. With his word or doctrine; which being oft compared to rain or waters, as Deut. xxxii. 2; Isa. lv. 10, 11; Hab. ii. 14, &c., may be said to be sprinkled, as it is said to be dropped, Deut. xxxii. 2; Ezek. xx. 46; xxi. 2. And this sense seems to be most favoured by the following words. The kings shall shut their mouths at him; shall be silent before him, out of a profound humility, and reverence, and admiration of his wisdom, and an eager desire to hear and receive counsels and oracles from his mouth. Compare Job xxix. 9—11, 21. They shall no more contend with him, nor blaspheme the true God and religion, as they formerly used to do. For that which had not been told them shall they see; for they shall hear from his mouth many excellent doctrines, which also will be new and strange to them, such as men are very desirous to hear. And particularly they shall hear from him that comfortable doctrine concerning the conversion and salvation of the Gentiles, which was not only new to them, but was strange and incredible to the most of the Jews themselves. Shall they consider; or, they shall understand; which is added to show that the seeing in the former clause was meant of discerning these things with the eyes of their minds.

CHAP. LIII.

The incredulity of the Jews: the death of Christ, and the blessed effects thereof, 1—11; his exaltation and glory, 13—15.

WHO [a]hath believed our ‖ †report? and to whom is [b]the arm of the LORD revealed?

a John 12. 38. Rom. 10. 16. ‖ Or, doctrine. † Heb. hearing. b ch. 51. 9. Rom. 1. 16. 1 Cor. 1. 18.

Who hath believed our report? the prophet having in the three last verses of the former chapter made a general report concerning the great and wonderful humiliation and exaltation of Christ, of which he intended more largely to discourse in this chapter, before he descended to particulars he thought fit to use this preface. Who, not only of the Gentiles, but even of the Jews, will believe the truth of what I have said and must say? Few or none. The generality of them will never receive nor believe in such a Messias as this. Thus this place is expounded by Christ himself, John xii. 38, and by Paul, Rom. x. 16. And this premonition was highly necessary, both to caution the Jews that they should not stumble at this stone, and to instruct the Gentiles that they should not be surprised, nor scandalized, nor seduced with their example. The arm of the Lord; either, 1. The word of God, called the report in the former clause; the doctrine of the gospel, which is expressly called the power of God, 1 Cor. i. 18, because of that admirable virtue and success which accompanied the preaching of it. Or, 2. The Messiah, who also is called the arm or power of God, 1 Cor. i. 24; and that most fitly, because the almighty power of God was both seated in him, and declared and exercised by him in his powerful words and mighty deeds, as Simon for some great works wrought by him was called by the Samaritans the power of God, Acts viii. 10. Revealed; not outwardly, for so Christ was revealed and preached to vast numbers, both of Jews and Gentiles, as is evident from this context, and from divers other places of Scripture; but inwardly and with power to their minds and hearts, of which kind of revelation see Eph. i. 17—19, and compare it with 2 Cor. iv. 4. Thus even Moses, though sufficiently revealed to the eyes and ears of the Jews, yet is said to be unrevealed or hid from their minds and hearts, 2 Cor. iii. 14, 15. The sense of the place is, few or none of the Jews will believe the gospel, or receive their Messiah when he comes among them.

2 For [c]he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: [d]he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him.

c ch. 11. 1. d ch. 52. 14. Mark 9. 12.

For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground; and the reason or occasion why the Jews will so generally reject their Messiah, is because he shall not come into the world with secular pomp and power, like an earthly monarch, as they carnally and groundlessly imagined; but he shall grow up (or, spring up, Heb. ascend, to wit, out of the ground, as it follows, brought forth, and brought up) before him (before the unbelieving Jews, of whom he spake ver. 1, and that in the singular number, as here, who were witnesses of his mean original; and therefore despised him, according to Christ's observation, John iv. 44; or, as others, according to his face, or outward appearance, as he was man; whereby he sufficiently implies that he had another, a far higher, and a Divine nature in him) as a tender plant, (or, as this very word is translated, Ezek. xvii. 4, a young twig, which is a small and inconsiderable thing,) and as a root (as Christ is called, Rom. xv. 12, and elsewhere; or, as a branch; the root being put metonymically for the branch growing out of the root, as it is apparently used, where Christ is called the root of Jesse, and of David, Isa. xi. 10; Rev. v. 5, and in other places, as 2 Chron. xxii. 10) out of a dry ground; out of a mean and barren soil, whose productions are generally poor and contemptible: either, 1. Out of the womb of a virgin; but that was no ground of contempt; or, 2. Of the Jewish nation, which was then poor, and despised, and enslaved; or, 3. Out of the poor, and decayed, and contemptible family, such as the royal family of David was at that time. He hath no form nor comeliness; his bodily presence and condition in the world shall be mean and contemptible. When we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him; when we shall look upon him, expecting to find incomparable beauty and majesty in his countenance, and carriage, and condition, we shall be altogether disappointed, and shall meet with nothing amiable or desirable in him. This the prophet speaketh in the person of the carnal and unbelieving Jews, we, i. e. our people, the Jewish nation.

3 [e]He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and [f]acquainted with grief: and ‖ †we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and [g]we esteemed him not.

e Ps. 22. 6. ch. 49. 7. f Heb. 4. 15. ‖ Or, he hid as it were his face from us. † Heb. as an hiding of faces from him, or, from us. g John 1. 10, 11.

He is despised and rejected of men; accounted as the scum of mankind, as one unworthy of the company and conversation of all men. A man of sorrows; whose whole life was filled with, and in a manner made up of, an uninterrupted succession of sorrows and sufferings. Acquainted with grief; who had constant experience of and familiar converse with grievous afflictions; for knowledge is oft taken practically, or for experience, as Gen. iii. 5; 2 Cor. v. 21, and elsewhere. We hid as it were our faces from him; we scorned and loathed to look upon him. Or, as others, he hid as it were his face from us, as one ashamed to show his face, or to be seen by any men, as persons conscious to themselves of any great deformity do commonly shun the sight of men, as lepers did, Lev. xiii. 45. He was despised, and we esteemed him not: here are divers words expressing the same thing, to signify both the utmost degree of contempt, and how strange and wonderful a thing it was, that so excellent a person should be so despised.

h Matt. 8. 17. Heb. 9. 28. 1 Pet. 2. 24.

4 ¶ Surely [h]he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: and whereas it may seem an unreasonable and incredible thing, that so excellent and glorious, and so innocent and just, a person should meet with this usage, it must be known that his griefs and miseries were not laid upon him for his own sake, but wholly and solely for the sake of sinful men, in whose stead he stood, and for whose sins he suffered, as it here follows. Yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted; yet our people, the Jews, were so far from giving him the glory and praise of such a prodigious condescension and compassion, that they made a most perverse construction of it; and so great was their prejudice against him, that they believed that he was thus disgraced and punished, and at last put to death, by the just judgment of God, for his blasphemy and other manifold wickednesses.

‖ Or, tormented. i Rom 4. 25. 1 Cor 15. 3. 1 Pet. 3. 18. k 1 Pet. 2. 24. † Heb. bruise.

5 But he was ‖[i]wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his [k]†stripes we are healed.

But; but this was a most false and unrighteous sentence. He was wounded; which word comprehends all his pains and punishments, and his death among and above the rest. For our transgressions; not by them, which is expressed by another particle, not by the wickedness of the Jews; but for or because of them, as this particle commonly signifies, for the guilt of their sins, which he had voluntarily taken upon himself, and for the expiation of their sins, which was hereby purchased and procured of God for men. Which interpretation is confirmed, 1. By the opposition of this truth to the false opinion mentioned in the foregoing clause, that he was smitten of God for the guilt of his own sins. 2. By the following clause, as we shall see. 3. By the nature of the thing; this being evident from scriptures both from the Old and New Testament, that Christ was not to suffer for his own, but for other men's sins. See Dan. ix. 24, 26. The chastisement of our peace; those punishments by which our peace, i. e. our reconciliation to God, and salvation, or happiness, was to be purchased. Was upon him; was laid upon him by God's justice with his own consent. With his stripes we are healed; by his sufferings we are saved from our sins, and from the dreadful effects thereof.

l Ps. 119. 176. 1 Pet. 2. 25. † Heb. hath made the iniquities of us all to meet on him.

6 [l]All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the LORD †hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.

All we, all mankind, the Jews no less than the Gentiles, like sheep, which are simple and foolish creatures, and exceeding apt to straggle and lose themselves, have gone astray from God, and from the way of his precepts, in which he put our first parents, and in which he commanded us to walk. To his own way; in general, to the way and course of sin, which may well be called a man's own way, as sins are called men's own lusts, James i. 14; 2 Pet. iii. 3, and elsewhere, because sin is natural to us, inherent in us, born with us, and very dear to us; and in particular, to those several paths of divers lusts which several men choose and follow, according to their differing opinions, inclinations, occasions, and circumstances. Hath laid, Heb. hath made to meet, as all the rivers meet in the sea. The iniquity; not properly, for so he knew no sin, 2 Cor. v. 21; but the punishment of iniquity, as that word is most frequently used, as Gen. iv. 13; Lev. xx. 17, &c.; that which was due for all the sins of all his people, whether Jews or Gentiles, which must needs be so great and heavy a load, that if he had not been God as well as man, he must have sunk under the burden of them. This was actually verified in Christ. And both this and divers other passages here do as manifestly and fully point at Christ, as if they were not a prophetical representation of things to come, but an historical relation of them after they were done. Nor do I see how they can be excused from the fearful wresting of the Scripture that expound these places of the prophet Jeremiah, of any other person but Christ.

7 He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet [m]he opened not his mouth: [n]he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth.

m Matt. 26. 63. & 27. 12, 14. Mark 14. 61. & 15. 5. 1 Pet. 2. 23. n Acts 8. 32.

He was oppressed, and he was afflicted; he was sorely punished for our sins. But there is another translation, which seems to be more emphatical, and more agreeable to the Hebrew text; It (to wit, our iniquity last mentioned, or the punishment of all our sins) was exacted or required, (as this word most properly and frequently signifies, of which see my Latin Synopsis. God's justice expected and required satisfaction from us for our sins; which, alas! we could not make to him,) and he was afflicted or punished; he bore the guilt and punishment of our sins in his body upon the tree, as is said, 1 Pet. ii. 24; or, as others render this last word, and he answered, i. e. became our surety, or undertook to pay the debt, and to suffer the law in our stead, and for our sake. Yet he opened not his mouth; he neither murmured against God for causing him to suffer for other men's sins, nor reviled men for punishing him without cause, nor used apologies or endeavours to save his own life; but willingly and patiently accepted of the punishment of our iniquity. Is dumb; bears the loss of its fleece or life without any such clamour or resistance as other creatures use in such cases.

‖ Or, He was taken away by distress and judgment: but, &c. o Dan. 9. 26. † Heb. was the stroke upon him.

8 ‖He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for [o]he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people †was he stricken.

He was taken from prison and from judgment: these words are understood either, 1. Of Christ's humiliation or suffering; and then the words are to be thus rendered, He was taken away (to wit, out of this life, as this word is used, Psal. xxxi. 13; Prov. i. 19, and elsewhere; he was put to death) by distress (or violence, or tyranny, as this word is used with this preposition before it, Psal. cvii. 39) and judgment; by oppression and violence, under a form and pretence of justice. Or rather, 2. Of Christ's exaltation, because of the following clause; which is not unseasonably mentioned in the midst of his sufferings, to take off the scandal which might have arisen from Christ's sufferings, if there had not been a prospect and assurance of his victoriousness over them, and his glory after them; and so the words may be rendered, He was taken up (or, taken away, freed or delivered) from prison (i. e. from the grave, which being called a house, Job xxx. 23, and a pit, in which men are shut up Psal. lxix. 15, may fitly be called a prison; or, from distress, or affliction, or oppression, from the power and malice of his enemies, and from the torments of his own soul, arising from the sense of men's sins and God's displeasure) and from judgment, i. e. from all the sufferings and punishments inflicted upon him, either by the unrighteous judgment of men, or by the just judgment of God, punishing him for those sins which he had voluntarily taken upon himself; or, which is the same thing, from the sentence of condemnation, and all the effects of it; for in this sense judgment is very commonly taken both in Scripture and other authors. Who shall declare? who can declare it? the future being taken potentially, as it is frequently; no words can sufficiently express it. His generation; either, 1. His age, or the continuance of his life. So the sense is, that he shall not only be delivered from death, and all his punishments, but also shall be restored to an inexpressible or endless life, and to an everlasting kingdom. Thus great interpreters understand it; with whom I cannot comply, because I do not find this Hebrew word to be ever used in Scripture of the continuance of one man's life. Or rather,

2. His posterity; and so this word is unquestionably used, Gen. xv. 16; Exod. xx. 5; Deut. xxiii. 2, 3, 8, and in many other places. And so the sense of the place is this, that Christ's death shall not be unfruitful, and that when he is raised from the dead, he shall have a spiritual seed, as is promised, ver. 10; a numberless multitude of those who shall believe in him, and be regenerated and adopted by him into the number of his children, and of the children of God, John i. 12; Heb. ii. 10, 13, 14. He was cut off, to wit, by a violent death. And this may be added as a reason, both of his exaltation, and of the blessing of a numerous posterity conferred upon him, because he was willing to be cut off for the transgression of his people; and, as it followeth, ver. 10, made his soul an offering for sin; Christ's death being elsewhere declared to be the only way and necessary means of obtaining both these ends, Luke xxiv. 26, 46; John xii. 24, 32, 33; Phil. ii. 8, 9. But these words may be rendered, although he was cut off, to signify that his death should not hinder these glorious effects. For the transgression of my people was he stricken: this is repeated again, as it was fit it should be, to prevent men's mistakes about and stumbling at the death of Christ, and to assure them that Christ did not die for his own sins, but only for the sins and salvation of his people.

9 [p]And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his †death; because he had done no violence, neither was any [q]deceit in his mouth.

p Matt. 27. 57, 58, 60.
q 1 Pet. 2. 22. 1 John 3. 5.

He made his grave with the wicked; and although he did not die for his own, but only for his people's sins, yet he was willing to die like a malefactor, or like a sinner, as all other men are, and to be put into the grave, as they used to be; which was a further degree of his humiliation. He saith, he made his grave, because this was Christ's own act, and he willingly yielded up himself to death and burial. And that which follows, with the wicked, doth not note the sameness of place, as if he should be buried in the same grave with other malefactors, but the sameness of condition; as when David prayeth, Psal. xxvi. 9, Gather not my soul (to wit, by death) with sinners, he doth not mean it of the same grave, but of the same state of the dead. With the rich in his death: this passage is thought by many to signify that Christ should be buried in the sepulchre of Joseph, who is said to be both rich, Matt. xxvii. 57, and honourable, Mark xv. 43, which they conceive to be intimated as a token of favour and honour showed to him; which to me seems not probable, partly because this disagrees with the former clause, which confessedly speaks of the dishonour which was done to him; and partly because the burial of Christ, whatsoever circumstances it was attended with, is ever mentioned in Scripture as a part of his humiliation, Acts ii. 24, 27. And it seems more reasonable, and more agreeable to the usage of the Holy Scripture, that this clause should design the same thing with the former, and that by rich he means the same persons whom he now called wicked, not as if all rich men were or must needs be wicked, but because for the most part they are so; upon which ground riches and rich men do commonly pass under an ill name in Scripture; of which see Psal. xxxvii. 10; xlix. 6; Luke vi. 24; xviii. 24; James i. 11; v. 1. In his death, Heb. in or at (or after, as this particle is frequently taken, as hath been already noted) his deaths; for Christ's death might well be called deaths, in the plural number, because he underwent many kinds of death, and many deadly dangers and pains, which are frequently called by the name of death in Scripture, of which instances have been formerly given; and he might say, with no less truth than Paul did, 1 Cor. xv. 31, I die daily, and 2 Cor. xi. 23. I was in deaths oft. Because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth: this some suppose to be added as a reason of the last branch of the foregoing clause, why God so overruled matters by his providence, that Christ should not be buried in the same grave, or in the same ignominious manner, as malefactors were, but in a more honourable manner, in Joseph's own tomb. But the last part of the foregoing clause cannot, without violence, be pulled asunder from the former, wherewith it is so closely joined, not only by a conjunction copulative, and, but also by being under the government of the same verb; and therefore this latter clause of the verse, if thus rendered, must be added as the reason of what is said to be done in the former. And so the sense of the place may be thus conceived, This was all the reward of the unspotted innocency of all his words and actions, to be thus ignominiously used. But these words may well be and are otherwise rendered, both by Jewish and Christian interpreters, either thus, although he had done, &c., or rather thus, not for (as these two same particles placed in the very same order are rendered by our translator, and others, Job xvi. 17) any violence (or injury, or iniquity) which he had done, nor for any deceit which was in his mouth; not for his own sins, but, as hath been said before, for his people's sins; in which translation there is nothing supplied but what is most frequent in Scripture also.

10 ¶ Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: ‖when thou shalt make his soul [r]an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, [s]he shall prolong his days, and [t]the pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in his hand.

‖ Or, when his soul shall make an offering.
r 2 Cor. 5. 21. 1 Pet. 2. 24. s Rom. 6. 9.
t Eph. 1. 5, 9. 2 Thess. 1. 11.

Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; but although he was perfectly innocent, it pleased God for other just and wise reasons to punish him. He hath put him to grief; God was the principal cause of all his sorrows and sufferings, although men's sins were the deserving cause. When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin; when thou, O God, shalt make, or have made, thy Son a sacrifice, by giving him up to death for the atonement of men's sins. His soul is here put for his life, or for himself, or his whole human nature, which was sacrificed; his soul being tormented with the sense of God's wrath, and his body crucified, and soul and body separated by death. Or the words may be rendered, when his soul shall make, or have made, itself an offering for sin; whereby it may be implied that he did not lay down his life by force, but willingly. He shall see his seed; his death shall be glorious to himself, and highly beneficial to others; for he shall have a numerous issue of believers reconciled to God, and saved by his death. He shall prolong his days; he shall be raised to immortal life, and shall live and reign with God for ever; he shall die no more, Rom. vi. 9, and of his kingdom there shall be no end, Luke i. 33. The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand; God's gracious decree for the redemption and salvation of mankind shall be effectually carried on by his ministry and mediation.

11 He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: [u]by his knowledge shall [x]my righteous [y]servant [z]justify many; [a]for he shall bear their iniquities.

y ch. 42. 1. & 49. 3.
z Rom. 5. 16, 19.
a ver. 4, 5.

He shall see, he shall receive or enjoy, as this word commonly signifies, of the travail of his soul, the comfortable and blessed fruit of all his hard labours and grievous sufferings, and shall be satisfied; he shall esteem his own and his Father's glory, and the salvation of his people, an abundant recompence for all his sufferings. By his knowledge; either, 1. Actively, by that knowledge of God's will, and of the way of salvation, which is in him in its highest perfection, and which by him is revealed unto men, and by his Spirit is imprinted in the minds and hearts of his people, so as to produce faith and obedience in them. Or, 2. Passively, by the knowledge of him, as my fear and thy fear are put for the fear of me and of thee, Psal. v. 7; Jer. xxxii. 40; knowledge being here, as it is most frequently in Scripture, taken practically, for that kind of knowledge which worketh faith, and love, and obedience to him. So the sense is the same in both cases. My righteous servant; which title is here given to Christ, partly to vindicate him from those false imputations of wickedness which were fastened upon him by his adversaries, and which found the more belief because of his most grievous and unexampled sufferings both from God and men; and partly to show his fitness for this great work of justifying sinners, because he was exactly holy, and harmless, and undefiled, Heb. vii. 26, and fulfilled all righteousness, according to his duty, Matt. iii. 15; and therefore his person and performance must needs be acceptable to God, and effectual for the justification of his people, which was the great design of his coming into the world. Justify; acquit them from the guilt of their sins, and all the dreadful consequences thereof; for justification is here opposed to condemnation, as appears from the following clause, and from many other passages in this chapter, and as it is used in all places of Scripture, one, or two at most, excepted, where it is mentioned. And Christ is said to justify sinners meritoriously, because he purchaseth and procureth it for us; as God the Father is commonly said to do it authoritatively, because he accepted the price paid by Christ for it, and the pronunciation of the sentence of absolution is referred to him in the gospel dispensation. Many; which word is seasonably added, partly by way of restriction, to show that Christ will not justify all, but only such as believe in him and obey him; and partly by way of amplification, to declare that this blessed privilege shall not now be, as hitherto it had in a manner been, confined to Judea, and the Jews, but shall be conferred upon an innumerable company of all the nations of the world. For he shall bear their iniquities; for he shall satisfy the justice and law of God for them, by bearing the punishment due to their sins, and therefore by the principles of reason and justice they must be justified or acquitted, otherwise the same debt should be twice required and paid.

12 [b]Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, [c]and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death: and he was [d]numbered with the transgressors; and he bare the sin of many, and [e]made intercession for the transgressors.

Therefore will I, God the Father, the Spectator and Judge of the action or combat, divide him; give him his share; or, impart or give to him; for this word is oft used without respect to any distribution or division, as Deut. iv. 19; xxix. 26, and elsewhere. A portion; which is very commodiously supplied out of the next clause, where a word which answers to it, the spoil, is expressed. With the great; or, among the great; such as the great and mighty potentates of the world use to have after a sharp combat and a glorious victory. Though he be a very mean and obscure person, as to his extraction and outward condition in the world, yet he shall attain to as great a pitch of glory as the greatest monarchs enjoy. He shall divide the spoil with the strong: the same thing is repeated in other words, after the manner of prophetical writers. The sense of both clauses is, that God will give him, and he shall receive, great and happy success in his glorious undertaking; he shall conquer all his enemies, and lead captivity captive, as is said, Eph. iv. 8, and set up his universal and everlasting kingdom in the world. Because he hath poured out his soul unto death; because he willingly laid down his life in obedience to God's command, John x. 17, 18, and in order to the redemption of mankind. Death is here called a pouring out of the soul, or life, either because the soul or life, which in living men is contained in the body, is turned out of the body by death; or to signify the manner of Christ's death, that it should be with the shedding of his blood, in which the life of man consists, Lev. xvii. 11, 14. He was numbered with the transgressors; he was willing for God's glory and for man's good to be reproached and punished like a malefactor, in the same manner and place, and betwixt two of them, as is noted with reference to this place, Mark xv. 27, 28. He bare the sin of many; which was said ver. 11, and is here repeated to prevent a mistake, and to intimate, that although Christ was numbered with transgressors, and was used accordingly, yet he was no transgressor, nor did submit to and suffer this usage for his own sins, but for the sins of others, the punishment whereof was by his own consent laid upon him. Made intercession for the transgressors; either, 1. By way of satisfaction; he interposed himself between an angry God and sinners, and received those blows in his own body which otherwise must have fallen upon them. Or, 2. In way of petition, as this word is constantly used. He prayed upon earth for all sinners, and particularly for those that crucified him, Luke xxiii. 34; and in heaven he still intercedeth for them, not by a humble petition, but by a legal demand of those good things which he purchased for his own people by the sacrifice of himself, which, though past, he continually represents to his Father, as if it were present.

CHAP. LIV.

The blessings and fulness of the gospel church, 1—3; the Gentiles becoming Christ's spouse; to whom his love is everlasting, 4—10. Her glories, 11, 12. The gifts of the Holy Ghost, 13. Her sure preservation, 14—17.

SING [a], O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for [b]more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the LORD. a Zeph. 3. 14. Gal. 4. 27. b 1 Sam. 2. 5.

Sing, O barren. The prophet having largely discoursed of the sufferings of Christ, and of the blessed fruits or effects thereof, among which one is, that he should have a numerous seed that should believe on him, and that when the Jews rejected him, the Gentiles should gladly receive him, and here foreseeing by the Spirit of God that glorious state of the church, he rejoiced in it, as Abraham did upon the like occasion, John viii. 56, and breaks forth into this song of triumph. He turneth his speech to the church and spouse of God, or of Christ, as is manifest from the following words, and especially from ver. 5, and from Gal. iv. 27, where it is so expounded. And although this chapter is by some understood of the flourishing condition of the Jewish church and state after their return from Babylon, yet the magnificent and glorious promises here following do so vastly exceed their condition at that time, which was full of uncertainties, and distractions, and troubles, as all the histories of those times assure us, and far from that glory and lasting tranquillity which is here assured to her, that it must necessarily be referred to the times of the gospel, in which all that is here said was or will be remarkably fulfilled. And therefore as the foregoing chapter doth directly and literally speak of Christ, so doth this literally speak of the church of Christ, or of the kingdom of the Messiah, of whom the ancient Hebrew doctors understood it. And this church, consisting at first of the Jews, and afterwards of the Gentiles, who were incorporated with them into the same body, he calleth barren, not because it now was so, but because before and until the coming of Christ it had been so; as Simon is called the leper, Matt. xxvi. 6, after he was cured. Now this church of the Jews might well be called, and had been, barren, because the sincere converts brought forth to God by her ministry had been but few among the Jews comparatively, and simply few among the Gentiles. More are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife: the church or congregation of the Gentiles, which in the times of the Old Testament was desolate, having neither husband nor children, doth now under the gospel bring forth unto God a far more numerous posterity than the church of the Jews, which had been married to God for many ages, until by her apostacy from God, and from her Messiah, she provoked God to put her away. He alludeth here either to the history of Sarah, who was long and naturally barren, but by the supernatural power of God was enabled to bring forth a numberless issue; or to that remarkable passage of God's providence concerning Hannah and Peninnah, 1 Sam. ii. 5, The barren hath born seven, and she that hath many children is waxed feeble.

2 [c]Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes; c ch. 49. 19, 20.

Enlarge the place of thy tent, that it may be capable of the Gentiles, which shall flock to thee in great numbers, and desire to associate themselves with thee. Let them, those to whom that work belongs, stretch forth. The meaning is, they must and shall be stretched out. Lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes, that they may be able to support that great weight which the tents thus enlarged shall be upon them.

3 For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; [d] and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited.

d ch. 53. 5. & 61. 9.

Thou shalt break forth; thou shalt bring forth a multitude of children; for this word is commonly used of any great and extraordinary propagation of living creatures, whether beasts or men, Gen. xxx. 30; Exod. i. 12. On the right hand and on the left; on every side, in all the parts of the world. Thy seed; either, 1. Thy spiritual seed, the church of the new testament, which is accounted Abraham's seed, or children, Gal. iii. 7—9, 29. Or, 2. Thy natural seed, Christ and his apostles, and other ministers, who were Jews, by whom this work was first and most eminently done. Shall inherit the Gentiles; shall subdue the Gentile world to the church, and to the obedience of the faith. The desolate cities; those cities and countries which in a spiritual sense were desolate and forsaken by God.

4 Fear not; for thou shalt not be ashamed: neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame: for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth, and shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more.

Thou shalt not be ashamed for that barrenness and widowhood, which once was the matter of thy grief and shame, because now thou shalt be delivered from it, and God will own thee for his wife, and beget children of thee; as it is explained in the following words. Thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth; it shall be forgotten both by thee and others: thou shalt not be upbraided with thy former barrenness in thy youthful state, nor confounded and tormented with the remembrance of it; both remembering and forgetting in Scripture use connote or comprehend those affections which naturally and usually follow upon them; so great shall be thy fertility and felicity, that it shall cause thee to forget thy former unfruitfulness and misery, as men commonly do in like cases, as Gen. xli. 51; Job xi. 16; Isa. lxv. 16; John xvi. 21. The reproach of thy widowhood; that time and state when thou wert like a widow, disconsolate and desolate, forsaken by her husband, and having in a manner no children; which was a great reproach, especially among the Jews.

5 [e] For thy Maker is thine husband; the [f] LORD of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel; [g] The God of the whole earth shall he be called.

e Jer. 3. 14.
f Luke 1. 32.
g Zech. 14. 9. Rom. 3. 29.

Thy Maker; he who made thee out of nothing, and therefore can easily fulfil all these promises, how unlikely soever they seem to be; and he who made thee a people, and, which is far more and better, his people, and therefore will not easily nor utterly forsake thee. Is thine husband; he will own thee for his spouse, and will do the part of a husband to thee. The Lord of hosts; who hath the sovereign command of all men and creatures, and therefore can subdue the Gentiles to thee, and can make thee to increase and multiply in so prodigious a measure, even in thine old age, notwithstanding thy barrenness in the days of thy youth, of which he speaketh in the foregoing verse. The God of the whole earth; the God and Father of all nations; whereas formerly he was called only the God of Israel, and the Gentiles had no special relation to him, nor interest in his covenant and favour, as was observed, Psal. cxlvii. 19, 20, and elsewhere.

6 For the LORD [h] hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God.

h ch. 62. 4.

The Lord hath called thee, to return and come again to him. As a woman forsaken; when thou wast like a woman forsaken. Or, as a husband recalleth his wife. Forsaken by her husband, who hath given her a bill of divorce. Grieved in spirit, for the loss of her husband's favour and society, and for the reproach attending upon it. And a wife of youth; or, and as (which note of similitude is supplied here by the LXX. and Chaldee interpreters, and is easily understood out of the foregoing clause, in which it is expressed) a wife of youth, i. e. as readily and affectionately as a husband recalleth his wife which he married in her and his own youth, of whom see on Prov. v. 18, whom though he might through a sudden and violent passion put away, yet he soon repents of it, and his affections work towards her, and he invites her to return to him. When thou wast refused; when thou wast in a desolate estate, and hadst been for some time rejected by me, then I recalled thee. Or, although thou wast refused, or dismissed, or despised by me, and that justly; yet I had mercy upon thee, and freely offered reconciliation to thee. Saith thy God; who will again be, and still show himself to be, thy God, and will renew his covenant with thee.

7 [i] For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee.

i Ps. 30. 5. ch. 26. 20. & 60. 10. 2 Cor. 4. 17.

For a small moment; for the space of some few years, as seventy years in Babylon, and some such intervals, which may well be called a small moment in comparison of God's everlasting kindness mentioned in the next verse. Forsaken thee; withdrawn my favour and help from thee, and left thee in thine enemies' hands. With great mercies, such as are most precious and sweet for quality, as is here said, and such as are of long continuance, as is said in the following verse, will I gather thee from all the places where thou art dispersed, from all the parts of the world.

8 In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; [k] but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the LORD thy Redeemer.

k ch. 55. 3. Jer. 31. 3.

I hid my face; I removed the means and pledges of my presence and kindness. With everlasting kindness; with kindness to thee and thy seed through all succeeding generations, here and unto all eternity.

9 For this is as the waters of [l] Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.

l Gen. 8. 21. & 9. 11. ch. 55. 11. See Jer. 31. 35, 36.

This is as the waters of Noah unto me; this covenant of grace and peace made with thee shall be as certain and perpetual as that which I made with Noah, that there should never be another flood of waters to drown the world; of which see Gen. ix. 11. Would not be wroth with thee, to wit, so as I have been, or so as to forsake thee utterly.

10 For [m] the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; [n] but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the LORD that hath mercy on thee.

m Ps. 46. 2. ch. 51. 6. Matt. 5. 18. n Ps. 89. 33, 34.

The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; which hath been verified in some mountains and hills, that by earthquakes, or otherwise, have been removed from their places. But these kind of absolute expressions are ofttimes comparatively understood, of which see on Isa. li. 6; and so the sense is, The mountains shall sooner depart from their places, than my kindness shall depart from thee. As when it is said absolutely, I desired mercy, and not sacrifice, it is meant comparatively, I desired mercy more than sacrifice, as it is explained in the following clause. The covenant of my peace; that covenant whereby I have made peace and friendship with thee, and have promised unto thee all manner of happiness, which frequently comes under the name of peace in Scripture. The sense of the place is, that God will not cast off his Christian church, as he did cast off the church of the Jews; and that the new covenant is established upon better and surer promises than the old, as is observed, Heb. viii. 6, 7, &c., and elsewhere. That hath mercy on thee; who doth thus with thee not for thine own merits, but merely for his own grace and mercy.

11 ¶ O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with [o] fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.

o 1 Chron. 29. 2. Rev. 21. 18, &c.

O thou afflicted, tossed with tempests, and not comforted; O thou my poor church, who hast frequently been, and wilt again and again be, in a most afflicted and comfortless condition for a time, be not discouraged thereby. I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires; I will make thee exceeding beautiful and glorious. Which yet is not to be understood of outward pomp and worldly glory, as is evident from many places of Scripture, which assure us that Christ's kingdom is of another nature, and that the external condition of God's church is, and for the most part will be, mean and calamitous in this world; but of a spiritual beauty and glory, consisting in the plentiful effusion of excellent gifts, and graces, and comforts; although these shall be followed with eternal glory in heaven. See the like description of the church's glory, Rev. xxi. 11, &c.

12 And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.

Agates; one kind of which stones was transparent like glass, as Pliny writes in his Natural History, b. 37. ch. 10. But some render this word crystal, and the LXX., and some other of the ancients, translate it jasper. But the proper signification of the Hebrew names of precious stones is unknown to the Jews themselves, as hath been noted before. It may suffice us to know that this was some very clear, and transparent, and precious stone. Thy borders; the utmost parts or walls. The church is here evidently compared to a building, whose foundation, pavement, gates, and windows were named before.

13 And all thy children shall be [p] taught of the LORD; and [q] great shall be the peace of thy children.

p ch. 11. 9. Jer. 31. 34. John 6. 45. 1 Cor. 2. 10. 1 Thess. 4. 9. 1 John 2. 20.
q Ps. 119. 165.

Shall be taught of the Lord; not only outwardly by his word, which was made known to all the Jews under the Old Testament, but inwardly by his Spirit, which is poured forth under the New Testament, both upon a far greater number of persons, and in a far higher measure, and with much more efficacy and success, than it was under the Old. The peace: 1. Inward peace of mind or conscience arising from the clear discoveries of God's love and reconciliation to us, and wrought by the Spirit of adoption, which is more abundantly given to believers under the gospel, whereas the spirit of bondage was more common and prevalent under the law. 2. Outward peace, safety, and happiness, which is more fully promised in the following verses, and which God, when he sees fit, will confer upon his church.

14 In righteousness shalt thou be established: thou shalt be far from oppression; for thou shalt not fear: and from terror; for it shall not come near thee.

In righteousness; either, 1. As the means of thy establishment. This kingdom shall not be set up and settled by fraud or tyranny, as other kingdoms frequently are, but by justice. Or rather, 2. As the effect of the establishment. Thine affairs shall be managed with righteousness, which is the glory and felicity of any society, and not with oppression, as it follows. Justice shall be freely and impartially executed. Thou shalt be far from oppression; either by thine own governors, or by foreign powers. Thou shalt not fear; thou shalt neither have any just cause of fear, nor be given up to the torment of fear without cause.

15 Behold, they shall surely gather together, but not by me: whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall for thy sake.

They shall surely gather together; it is true, there will not want some that shall combine and make an attempt against thee. But not by me; as they do this without any such commission from me, as Sennacherib and Nebuchadnezzar had, Isa. x. 6, 7; Jer. xxv. 9; so they shall not have my help in it, without which all their endeavours will be vain and unsuccessful. Whosoever shall gather together to battle, as is manifest from the following words, of which kind of gathering this word is used, Psal. cxl. 2, and elsewhere. Against thee, Heb. with thee. But to fight with a man is all one with fighting against him. Shall fall for thy sake; for that respect and love which I bear to thee. Or, before thee, as this particle is sometimes used, so as thine eyes shall behold it.

16 Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy.

Both the smith that maketh all warlike instruments, and the soldier that useth them, are my creatures, and totally at my command, and therefore they cannot hurt you without my leave. To destroy; to destroy only whom and when I please.

17 ¶ No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the LORD, [r] and their righteousness is of me, saith the LORD.

r ch. 45. 24, 25.

No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and as they cannot do any thing against thee without my leave, so I assure thee I will not suffer them to do it; and if any smith shall make any weapons to be employed against thee, he shall not succeed in it. And every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn; and I will deliver thee not only from the fury of the war, but also from the strife of tongues, from all the threatenings, and boasts, and reproaches of thine enemies, and from all the claims and pretences which they have of any right and power over thee. So thine enemies shall neither prevail against thee by violence, nor by pretences of justice. This is the heritage; this blessed condition described in this chapter is the portion allotted to them by me. Their righteousness; either, 1. The reward or fruit of their righteousness, as righteousness is used, Psal. cxii. 3, 9. Or, 2. Their right or the righteous administration of all their concerns, whereby they are preserved from all manner of oppressions, as righteousness was used, ver. 14. Is of me; I give it, and I will continue it to them; and who then can take it away from them?

CHAP. LV.

An invitation to seek for spiritual blessings from Christ, whom the Father sendeth, 1—5; to come to him speedily, and by repentance, 6, 7. His grace infinite, 8, 9. His word powerful, 10, 11. The joy of believers, 12, 13.

HO, [a] every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; [b] come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price.

a John 4. 14. & 7. 37. Rev. 21. 6. & 22. 17. b Ecclus. 51. 25. Matt. 13. 44, 46. Rev. 3. 18.

Ho, every one; not only Jews, but Gentiles. The prophet having largely discoursed of Christ, chap. liii., and of the church of Christ, chap. liv., doth here invite all persons to come to Christ, and to his church. That thirsteth for the grace of God, and the blessings of the gospel. This thirst implies a vehement, and active, and restless desire after it, not to be satisfied with any thing short of it. Come ye to the waters; which are mentioned, either, 1. As the place where they were to buy the following commodities, it being usual to convey provisions to cities by rivers. Or rather, 2. As the commodity to be bought, the graces and comforts of God's Spirit, which are frequently compared to waters, as Isa. xii. 3; xxxv. 6, 7; John vii. 37, 38, and elsewhere, and which are designed by all these metaphorical expressions of waters, wine, milk, and bread. He that hath no money; even those who are most poor in the world, and those who are most worthless and wicked, if they do but thirst, may be welcome. Buy, i. e. procure or receive that which is freely offered to you, if you do but come for it, and are willing to take it. Thus buying is used Prov. xxiii. 23; Rev. iii. 18. Nor can this be understood of buying properly, because here is no price paid. Buy wine and milk; which are synecdochically put for all sorts of provisions; which also are to be understood of spiritual and gospel blessings, as is evident from the following words.

2 Wherefore do ye †spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness.

Money; all your time, and strength, and cost in seeking it. For that which is not bread; for those vain or foolish things which can never nourish or satisfy you, such as worldly goods, or your own inventions, superstitions, and idolatries. Hearken diligently unto me; unto my doctrine and counsel. Eat ye that which is good; that which is truly, and solidly, and everlastingly good, and not such things which though they be called and seem to be good, yet really are evil, and most pernicious to men. In fatness; in this fat and most pernicious to men. In fatness; in this fat and most pleasant food of gospel enjoyments.

c Mat. 11. 28. d ch. 54. 8. & 61. 8. Jer. 32. 40. e 2 Sam. 7. 8, &c. Ps. 89. 28. Acts 13. 34.

3 Incline your ear, and [c]come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live; [d]and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the [e]sure mercies of David.

Hear; hearken attentively and obediently to my counsel; hearing being oft put for obeying, as Deut. xviii. 15; 1 Sam. xv. 22, 23; Psal. xcv. 7, &c. Your soul shall live, to wit, comfortably and happily; which only is worthy of the name of life. I will make an everlasting covenant with you; that everlasting covenant of grace and peace which I made with Abraham, and his seed the Israelites, I am ready to make it with every one of you thirsting Gentiles. Even the sure mercies of David; even that covenant which was made first with Abraham, and then with David, concerning the exhibition of those glorious and sure mercies or blessings which God hath promised to his people, one and the chief of which mercies was the giving of Christ to die for their sins, and to rise again for their justification. This exposition may receive light and strength by comparing this place with Acts xiii. 33, 34. He mentions David rather than Abraham, either, 1. Because these promises, and especially that great promise, which is the foundation of the rest, concerning Christ and his eternal kingdom, were far more frequently, and expressly, and fully made and revealed to David than they were to Abraham. Or, 2. Because David was a more evident and illustrious type of Christ than Abraham was, as being raised from a mean condition to the highest honour, being made a great and most victorious and righteous king, and the first king of that throne upon which the Messiah was to sit. Or, 3. Because the name of David is not here put personally for the king of that name, but patronymically for the Messiah, who was to be David's Son and successor, and who is therefore called David in the prophetical scriptures, as Jer. xxx. 9; Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24; xxxvii. 24, 25; Hos. iii. 5; as Rehoboam upon the same account is called David, 1 Kings xii. 16. And this is the more probable, beause the next verse, which hath a manifest relation to this verse, is confessedly understood of Christ.

4 Behold, I have given him for [f]a witness to the people, [g]a leader and commander to the people.

I have given, I have already appointed, and will in due time actually give, him; the David last mentioned, even Christ, the Son and successor of David, as is plain and certain from the titles and works ascribed to him in this and the following verse. But of this see the last note upon the former verse. For a witness; to be a Prophet or Teacher, to declare the counsel and will of God concerning the duty and salvation of men; to bear witness unto the truth, as Christ himself affirmeth, John xviii. 37; to confirm God's promises, Rom. xv. 8, and, amongst others, those which respect the calling and reconciliation of the Gentiles; to be a witness for both parties of that covenant made between God and men. To the people; not only to my people of Israel, but to all people, Gentiles no less than Jews, as is evident from the following verse, and from Isa. xlix. 6, and divers other places. A Leader and Commander; a sovereign Prince to give them laws, and exact their obedience, and in case of their obedience to give them protection and rewards.

h ch. 52. 15. Eph. 2. 11, 12. i ch. 60. 5.

5 [h]Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, [i]and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the LORD thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; [k]for he hath glorified thee.

k ch. 60. 9. Acts 3. 13.

Thou; thou, O Messiah, of whom he now spake, ver. 4, and to whom he suddenly turneth his speech, as is very common in the prophets; shalt call a nation, to wit, unto thyself, and to the knowledge of thyself, as appears from the following words, and by thee unto acquaintance and fellowship with God. That thou knowest not; or rather, didst not know, to wit, with that special knowledge which implies approbation, and tender care and affection, as words of knowledge are most frequently used in Scripture; the Gentiles, to whom in former times thou didst not make known thy law and covenant, and the way of salvation, Acts xiv. 16; xvii. 30. Nations that knew not thee, that had but little knowledge of God, and no knowledge of the Messiah, shall run unto thee; upon thy call shall speedily and readily come to thee, to receive instructions from thee, and to follow thee whithersoever thou shalt lead them. Because of the Lord thy God; because the Lord shall by many evident and unquestionable tokens manifest himself to be thy God, and thee to be his Son and faithful Servant. For he hath glorified thee; because the God of Israel, who is the only true God, will highly honour thee, by his singular presence with thee, by his almighty power accompanying thy word, and making it wonderfully effectual for the conversion of an innumerable company, both of Jews and Gentiles, and by confirming thy word with illustrious signs and miracles, and particularly by thy resurrection and glorious ascension. These and other like considerations were the motives which convinced the Gentiles that Christ was the true Messiah, and the religion which he taught was the true religion.

l Ps. 32. 6. Matt. 5. 25. & 25. 11. John 7. 34. & 8. 21. 2 Cor. 6. 1, 2. Heb. 3. 13.

6 ¶ [l]Seek ye the LORD while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near:

Seek ye the Lord: having discoursed of the office and work of Christ, and showed that he should call people and nations to himself, and to God, he now endeavours to persuade the people to hearken to his call, and to seek the Lord, i. e. to labour to get the knowledge of God's will, and to obtain his grace and favour; neither of which things were to be done but in and through Christ. And this invitation or exhortation is general, like that ver. 1, reaching to all nations, both Jews and Gentiles, implying that both of them had lost him and his favour, and were gone astray from him. Seek him, ye Gentiles, whom he now inviteth so to do, and will assist in finding him. And seeing the Gentiles seek him earnestly, let their example provoke you Jews to imitate them therein, and take heed that you do not reject him, whom they will receive and own. While he may be found; in this day of grace, whilst he offereth mercy and reconciliation to you; which he will not always do. Compare Prov. i. 24, &c.; Luke xix. 44; 2 Cor. vi. 2. While he is near; near to you by his gracious presence and offers in his ordinances, ready and desirous to receive you to mercy upon the following conditions.

m ch. 1. 16. † Heb. the man of iniquity. n Zech. 8. 17. o Ps. 130. 7. Jer. 3. 12. † Heb. he will multiply to pardon.

7 [m]Let the wicked forsake his way, and †the unrighteous man [n]his thoughts: and let him return unto the LORD, [o]and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for †he will abundantly pardon.

Let the wicked man, any wicked man, either Jew or Gentile, forsake his way; his evil or wicked way, as is evident from the foregoing word, and as it is more fully expressed, Jer. xviii. 11; xxv. 5; which is called his way, because it is natural, and customary, and dear to him, and in opposition to God's good way; his sinful course or manner of life. Let him cease to do evil, as it is Isa. i. 16. This he adds, to intimate that men's seeking and calling upon God will do them no good without reformation of their lives. His thoughts; the sinful devices and purposes of his mind. Thus he strikes at the root of sinful actions, and showeth that the heart must be purged and changed as well as the outward actions. Let him return unto the Lord; as he hath departed from God by sin, let him turn to him by sincere repentance, and the practice of all God's precepts; whereby he intimates that a mere abstinence from wicked courses is not sufficient, without the exercise of the contrary graces; that we must not only cease to do evil, but also learn to do well, as it is prescribed, Isa. i. 16, 17. To our God; to the God of Israel, who is and hath showed himself to be a most merciful and gracious God. For he will abundantly pardon: he useth so many words and arguments to encourage them to repentance, because the persons here invited were guilty of idolatry, apostacy, and many other gross wickednesses; which he knew, when they came to themselves, and to a serious sense of their sins, and of the just and holy nature and law of God, would be an insupportable burden to their awakened consciences, and make them very prone to conclude that God either could not or would not pardon such horrid delinquencies, and therefore would rather drive them from God, than draw them to him.

p 2 Sam. 7. 19. 8 ¶ [p]For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the LORD.

My disposition and carriage is vastly differing from yours. If any man provoke or injure you, especially if he do it greatly, and frequently, and maliciously, you are very slow and backward to forgive him; and if you do or seem to forgive, and promise to forget, and pass it by, yet you retain a secret grudge in your hearts, and upon the least occasion and slight offence you forget your promise, and you are soon weary with forgiving, and prone to revenge yourselves upon him: but it is not so with me; for I am slow to anger, and ready to forgive all true penitents, how many, and great, and numberless soever their sins be; and my promises of mercy and pardon shall be infallibly made good to them. And therefore you need not fear to come to me, or to find mercy and acceptance with me.

q Ps. 103. 11. 9 [q]For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.

Higher than the earth; inexpressibly and infinitely; for the distance between the earth and the highest heavens is unmeasurable by any man upon earth.

r Deut. 32. 2. 10 For [r]as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater:

And the snow, which in its season contributes to the fruitfulness of the earth as well as the rain. Returneth not thither, to wit, void, or without effect, as it is expressed in the next verse; or immediately; it is not drawn up again as soon as it is come down, but abides for a convenient time upon the earth, until it do that work for which it was sent. That it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; that it may bring forth store of bread corn, both for men's present supplies, and for seed for the next year.

s ch. 54. 9. 11 [s]So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

So shall my word; my promises before recited concerning the sending of the Messiah, and the blessing of his labours with such wonderful success, and concerning the reconciliation and pardon of the greatest sinners, and concerning the redemption and salvation of his people. It shall not return unto me void; without success. It is an allusion to an ambassador who returns without despatching that business for which he was sent. It shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it; it shall have that effect which I intended; it shall certainly be fulfilled in manner before expressed.

For; or, Therefore; because God hath promised it, and therefore will effect it. Ye shall go out; ye shall be released from the place and state of your bondage. He alludes to their going out of Egypt, which was a type of their succeeding deliverances, and especially of their redemption by Christ from the power of sin and of the devil. Be led forth; or, be led along; be conducted by the gracious and powerful presence of God, as you were in the wilderness. With peace; safely and triumphantly, without fear of being retaken and brought back into slavery by your enemies. And all the trees of the field shall clap their hands; there shall be a great and general rejoicing at your deliverance, so that even the senseless creatures shall seem to rejoice with you and for you.

y ch. 41. 19. z Mic. 7. 4. 13 [y]Instead of [z]the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the LORD [a]for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.

a Jer. 13. 11.

Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; whereas your land was filled with thorns and briers, as was foretold, Isa. vii. 24, they shall be rooted out, and it shall be planted with fir trees and myrtle trees, and such other trees which are useful either for fruit or for delight. Or this promise may be answerable to that Ezek. xxviii. 24, There shall be no more a pricking brier unto the house of Israel, nor any grieving thorn, &c., but instead of them shall be such trees as shall yield shade and refreshment. The meaning is, The church shall be delivered from pernicious men and things, and replenished with sincere and serious believers, and with all sorts of Divine graces and blessings. It shall be to the Lord for a name; this wonderful change shall bring much honour to that God by whom it is wrought. For an everlasting sign; for a monument or evident and glorious token of God's infinite power, and faithfulness, and love to his people unto all succeeding generations. That shall not be cut off; which shall never be abolished, but shall always live and flourish in the minds and mouths of men.

CHAP. LVI.

Blessedness of the godly, without any respect of persons, 1—8. Blind watchmen shall be destroyed, 9—12.

THUS saith the LORD, Keep ye ‖judgment, and do justice: [a]for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed.

‖ Or, equity.

a ch. 46. 13. Matt. 3. 2. & 4. 17. Rom. 13. 11, 12.

This verse and the rest of this chapter, until ver. 9, seems to belong to the foregoing prophecy. From the consideration of God's promises made to them he moveth them to perform their duty to him. Keep ye judgment, and do justice: this phrase elsewhere signifies the duties which one man oweth to another, but here it seems to signify the duties which men owe to God, as it is explained in the following verses. My salvation; that eminent salvation by the Messiah, so largely promised and insisted upon in the foregoing chapters; for which it behoves you to prepare yourselves, and in which, without this condition, you shall have no share nor benefit. Is near to come: so the Scripture useth to speak of things which are at a great distance, as if they were present or at hand: see Hab. ii. 3; James v. 8, 9; Rev. xxii. 20. My righteousness: the same thing which he now called salvation, and here calleth his righteousness, because it is an evident demonstration of God's righteousness, as in the fulfilling of his promises, so in the punishment of sin, and in the salvation of sinners upon just and honourable terms.

2 Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; [b]that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil.

b ch. 58. 13.

Blessed is the man; every man, not only Jews, but Gentiles, or strangers, as it is explained in the following verses.

Thus even this; judgment and justice, mentioned ver. 1. That layeth hold on it; or, that holdeth it fast; that is resolute and constant in so doing; that not only begins well, but perseveres in it. That keepeth the sabbath from polluting it; that guardeth the sabbath from profanation, and doth not defile it, either by forbidden practices, or by the neglect of commanded duties. And the sabbath seems to be put here, as sacrifice is elsewhere, synecdochically for the whole worship of God, whereof this is an eminent part, and the bond of all the rest. Keepeth his hand; which being the great instrument of action, is put for all the kinds and means of action. From doing any evil, to wit, to one's neighbour, as it is more fully expressed, Psal. xv. 3.

c See Deut. 23. 1, 2, 3. Acts 8. 27. & 10. 1, 2, 34. & 17. 4. & 18. 7. 1 Pet. 1. 1.

3 ¶ Neither let [c] the son of the stranger, that hath joined himself to the LORD, speak, saying, The LORD hath utterly separated me from his people: neither let the eunuch say, Behold, I am a dry tree.

The son of the stranger; the stranger, as the son of man is the same with the man, ver. 2; the Gentile, who by by birth is a stranger to God, and to the commonwealth of Israel. That hath joined himself to the Lord; that hath turned from dumb idols to the living God, and to the true religion; for such shall be as acceptable to me as the Israelites themselves, and the partition-wall between Jews and Gentiles shall be taken down, and repentance and remission of sins shall be preached and offered to men of all nations. The eunuch; who is here joined with the stranger, because he was forbidden to enter into the congregation of the Lord, Deut. xxiii. 1, as the stranger was, and by his barrenness might seem no less than the stranger to be cast out of God's covenant, and cut off from his people, to whom the blessing of a numerous posterity was promised. And under these two instances he understands all those persons who either by birth, or by any ceremonial pollution, were excluded from the participation of church privileges; and so he throws open the door to all true believers, without any restriction whatsoever. A dry tree; a sapless and fruitless tree, accursed by God with the curse of barrenness, which being oft threatened as a curse, and being a matter of reproach among the Jews, might easily occasion such discouraging thoughts as are here expressed.

4 For thus saith the LORD unto the eunuchs that keep my sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant;

Choose the things that please me; that observe my commands, not by custom, or force, or fear, but by free choice, and full consent, with love to them and delight in them. Take hold of my covenant; that resolvedly and stedfastly keep the conditions of my covenant.

d 1 Tim. 3. 15. e John 1. 12. 1 John 3. 1.

5 Even unto them will I give in [d] mine house and within my walls a place [e] and a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off.

In mine house; in my temple, to serve me there as priests, which eunuchs were not allowed to do, Lev. xxi. 17, &c.; Deut. xxiii. 1. Within my walls; in the courts of my temple, which were encompassed with walls. This seems to be added with respect to the people, who were admitted into the court, but not into the house itself. A place and a name better than of sons and of daughters; a far greater blessing and honour than that of having posterity, which was but a temporal mercy, and that common to the worst of men; even my favour, and my Spirit, and eternal felicity.

6 Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the LORD, to serve him, and to love the name of the LORD, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant;

That join themselves to the Lord; that with purpose of heart cleave unto him, as is said, Acts xi. 23. To serve him, and to love the name of the Lord; to serve him out of love to him, and to his worship.

f ch. 2. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 1, 2. g Rom. 12. 1. Heb. 13. 15. 1 Pet. 2. 5. h Matt. 21. 13. Mark 11. 17. Luke 19. 46. i Mal. 1. 11.

7 Even them will I [f] bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: [g] their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for [h] mine house shall be called an house of prayer [i] for all people.

To my holy mountain; to my house, as it is explained in the following clause, which stood upon Mount Zion, largely so called, including Mount Moriah. Formerly the Gentiles neither had any desire to come thither, nor were admitted there; but now I will incline their hearts to come, and I will give them admission and free liberty to come into my church. Make them joyful, by accepting their services, and comforting their hearts with the sense of my love, and pouring down all sorts of blessings upon them. In my house of prayer; in my temple, in and towards which prayers are daily made and directed unto me, 1 Kings viii. 28, 29. Their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; they shall have as free access to my house and altar as the Jews themselves, and their services shall be as acceptable to me as theirs. Evangelical worship is here described under such expressions as agreed to the worship of God which then was in use, as it is Mal. i. 11, and elsewhere. See also Rom. xii. 1; Heb. xiii. 15. Mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people; Jews and Gentiles shall have equal freedom of access to my house, and shall there call upon my name. Possibly he may call it a house of prayer, either to imply that prayer to God, whereof thanksgiving is a part, is a more considerable part of God's worship than sacrifice, which being considered in itself is little valued by him, as he frequently declareth; or to signify that in the New Testament, when the Gentiles should be called, all other sacrifices should cease, except that of prayer, and such-like spiritual services; which also is confirmed from the nature of the thing. For seeing sacrifices were confined to the temple at Jerusalem, and it was impossible that all nations should resort thither to offer up Levitical sacrifices in such time and manner as God appointed, it was necessary upon supposition of the general conversion of the Gentiles, that that way of worship should be abolished, and such a way prescribed as they were capable of practising.

k Ps. 147. 2. ch. 11. 12. l John 10. 16. Eph. 1. 10. & 2. 14, 15, 16. † Heb. to his gathered.

8 The LORD God [k] which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, [l] Yet will I gather others to him, †beside those that are gathered unto him.

Which gathereth the outcasts of Israel; which will gather to himself, and bring into their own land, those poor Israelites which are, or shall be, cast out of their own land, and from God's presence, and dispersed in divers parts of the world. Yet will I gather others to him, beside those that are gathered unto him; as there are some few Gentiles whom I have made proselytes, and added to the Jewish church, so I shall make another and a far more comprehensive gathering of the Gentiles, whom I shall bring into the same church with the Jews, making both Jews and Gentiles one fold under one Shepherd, as it is promised, John x. 16.

m Jer. 12. 9.

9 ¶ [m] All ye beasts of the field, come to devour, yea, all ye beasts in the forest.

This invitation or proclamation is a prediction of Israel's destruction by their cruel enemies, which are oft expressed in Scripture under the names of ravenous beasts. But the great question is, What connexion this part of the chapter hath with the former? Which may be thus conceived: The prophet having largely discoursed concerning the Messiah, and his church and kingdom, and particularly of the great accession and conversion of the Gentiles to it, and of the infidelity, apostacy, and manifold wickednesses of the Jewish nation, and having comforted and encouraged the Gentiles with God's gracious promises made to them, he now proceeds to terrify the unbelieving and ungodly Jews, and to show that as the Gentiles should believe, and be saved, so they should reject their Messiah, and be utterly destroyed; although we need not labour much about the coherence; for this may be a new sermon, and therefore many learned interpreters make this the beginning of the 57th chapter.

10 His watchmen are [n]blind: they are all ignorant, [o]they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; ‖sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber.

n Matt. 15. 14. & 23. 16.
o Phil. 3. 2.
‖ Or, dreaming, or, talking in their sleep.

His; Israel's, as is evident from the following verses; the pronoun relative being put without and instead of the antecedent; of which I have given divers instances before. Watchmen; priests and prophets, or other teachers, who are commonly called watchmen, as Ezek. iii. 17; xxxiii. 2; Hos. ix. 8. He mentions only the teachers, because ignorance was most shameful in them; but hereby he supposeth the gross ignorance of the people, who neither pretended nor desired to be wiser than their teachers. They are all ignorant of God's will and word, and of their own and the people's duty, and of the true Messiah. They are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; they are also slothful and negligent in instructing the people, and do not faithfully reprove them for their sins, nor warn them of their dangers, nor keep them from errors and corruptions in doctrine, and worship, and conversation, as they ought to do. Sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber; minding their own ease and safety more than the people's benefit.

11 Yea, they are †[p]greedy dogs which †[q]can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand: they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter.

p Mic. 3. 11.
† Heb. know not to be satisfied.
q Ezek. 34. 2, 3.

Greedy dogs which can never have enough; insatiably covetous. That cannot understand, Heb. that know not to understand; that do not care, or love, or desire (as knowing is frequently taken) either to understand the law or word of God themselves, or to make the people to understand it. They all look to their own way; they regard neither God's command and glory, nor the people's good, but only the satisfaction of their own base lusts. See on Isa. liii. 6. Every one for his gain, from his quarter; in their several places and stations, as they have opportunity. Heb. from his or their end or extremity, i. e. universally, or all from one end of that body or society of men unto the other; as the same word signifies, Gen. xix. 4; from one end of the city to the other; or, as we there render it, from every quarter; and as the same word is by divers learned men rendered, 1 Kings xii. 31, not of the meanest of the people, but out of all the people, or indifferently out of every tribe; of which see my note there. But if that phrase be rightly rendered there, out of the meanest of the people, as divers also expound the same phrase, Gen. xlvii. 2, of the meanest of his brethren, why may it not as well be rendered here, even from the meanest or poorest of his flock? which is a great aggravation of their covetousness and cruelty, to extort gains from such as needed their charity.

12 Come ye, say they, I will fetch wine, and we will fill ourselves with strong drink; [r]and to morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant.

r Ps. 10. 6. Prov. 23. 35. ch. 22. 13. Luke 12. 19. 1 Cor. 15. 32.

Say they, unto their brethren, by office and in iniquity; unto their fellow priests, or other jolly companions. We will fill ourselves; we will drink not only to delight, but even to drunkenness, as the word signifies, Nah. i. 10, and elsewhere. To-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant; which showeth their dreadful security and contempt of God, and of his judgments, and their total and resolved abandoning of all care of their own or people's souls.

CHAP. LVII.

The blessed death of the righteous not duly lamented by the Jews; who also commit idolatry, and trusted in man: they are threatened, 1—12. Evangelical promises to the penitent, 13—19. No peace to the wicked, 20, 21.

cir. 698.

THE righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and †[a]merciful men are taken away, [b]none considering that the righteous is taken away ‖from the evil to come.

† Heb. men of kindness, or, godliness.
a Ps. 12. 1. Mic. 7. 2.
b 1 Kings 14. 13. See 2 Kings 22. 20. Wisd. 4. 20, &c.
‖ Or, from that which is evil.

The righteous; just and holy men, who are the pillars of the place and state in which they live; yea, as the Jews call them, the pillars of the world. No man; few or none of the people. So he showeth that the corruption was general, in the people no less than in the priests. Layeth it to heart; is duly affected with this severe stroke and sad sign of God's displeasure. Merciful; or, godly; the same whom he now called righteous, whose duty and practice it is to exercise both mercy or kindness, and justice. From the evil to come; from those dreadful calamities which are coming upon the nation.

2 He shall ‖enter into peace: they shall rest in [c]their beds, each one walking ‖in his uprightness.

‖ Or, go in peace. Luke 2. 29.
c 2 Chron. 16. 14.
‖ Or, before him.

He shall enter into peace; this just and merciful man shall enter into a state of peace and rest, where he shall be out of the reach of the approaching miseries. Or, He shall go (to wit, to his fathers, as it is fully expressed, Gen. xv. 15; or, he shall die; going being put for dying, as 1 Chron. xvii. 11, compared with 2 Sam. vii. 12; Job x. 21; xiv. 20; Luke xxii. 22, and elsewhere) in peace. They; just men. Here is a sudden change of the number, which is very frequent in the prophets. In their beds; in their graves, which are not unfitly called their beds, or sleeping houses, as their death is commonly called sleep in Scripture. Walking; or, that walketh or did walk, i. e. live. In his uprightness; in a sincere and faithful discharge of his duties to God and men. Or, before him, i. e before God, according to the usual phrase of Scripture, as Gen. xvii. 1; 1 Kings ii. 4; viii. 25. For God is oft understood where he is not expressed, but only designed by this or the like pronoun, as Gen. xv. 13, and elsewhere.

3 ¶ But draw near hither, [d]ye sons of the sorceress, the seed of the adulterer and the whore.

d Mat. 16. 4.

Draw near hither, to God's tribunal, to answer for yourselves, and to hear what I have to say against you, and to receive your sentence. Sons of the sorceress; not by propagation, but by imitation; such being frequently called a man or woman's sons that learn their art, and follow their example: you sorcerers, either properly or metaphorically so called; for the Jews were guilty of it both ways. The seed of the adulterer and the whore; not the genuine children of Abraham, as you pretend and boast, but begotten in fornication upon a common whore; which is not to be understood properly, but figuratively, because their dispositions and carriages were far more suitable to a bastardly brood than to Abraham's seed.

4 Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? are ye not children of transgression, a seed of falsehood,

Against whom do ye sport yourselves? consider whom it is that you mock and scoff when you deride God's prophets, as they did, Isa. xxviii. 14, 22, and know that it is not so much men that you abuse as God, whose cause they plead, and in whose name they speak. Make a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue: these are the known and common gestures of mockers, of which see Job xvi. 10; Psal. xxii. 7; xxxv. 21. Are ye not children of transgression, a seed of falsehood? either an adulterous brood, as was said before; or a generation of liars, whose practices grossly contradict your principles and professions, who deal deceitfully and perfidiously both with God and with men.

5 Enflaming yourselves ‖with idols [e]under every green tree, [f]slaying the children in the valleys under the clifts of the rocks?

‖ Or, among the oaks. ch. l. 29.
e 2 Kin. 16. 4. & 17. 10. Jer. 2. 20.
f Lev. 18. 21. & 20. 2.
2 Kings 16. 3. & 23. 10. Jer. 7. 31. Ezek. 16. 20. & 20. 26.

Inflaming yourselves with idols, Heb. Being inflamed, &c.; lusting after them, and mad upon them, as the phrase is, Jer. l. 38; fervent both in making and in worshipping of them, as was observed, Isa. xliv. 12, &c. It is a metaphor borrowed from whoredom, to which idolatry is oft compared. Under every green tree; wheresoever you see an idol erected, which was commonly done in groves, or under great and shady trees, which both defended the worshippers from the heat of the sun, and were supposed to strike them with a kind of sacred horror and reverence. See on Deut. xii. 2; 2 Kings xvi. 4; xvii. 10. Slaying the children, in way of sacrifice to their idols, after the manner of the barbarous heathens; of which see on Lev. xviii. 21; Deut. xii. 31; 2 Kings xxi. 6; xxiii. 10. In the valleys; or, beside the brooks, which run in the valleys; which was most commodious for such bloody work. He seems to allude to the valley of Hinnom, in which these cruelties were practised, Jer. vii. 31, through which also the brook Kidron is supposed to have run. Under the clifts of the rocks; which they chose either for shade, or for those dark vaults and hollow places which were either by nature or art made in rocks, and which were convenient for and frequently appointed to idolatrous uses.

6 Among the smooth stones of the stream is thy portion; they, they are thy lot: even to them hast thou poured a drink offering, thou hast offered a meat offering. Should I receive comfort in these?

Among the smooth stones of the stream is thy portion; thou hast chosen for thy portion those idols which were either made of those smooth stones which were cast up by rivers, or which were worshipped upon altars made of such stones, or which were worshipped by the sides of brooks or rivers, where such smooth stones commonly lie. They are thy lot; thou hast forsaken me, and chosen idols for the great object of thy worship and trust. To them hast thou poured a drink-offering, thou hast offered a meat-offering; for the devil is God's ape, and idolaters used the same rites and offerings in the worship of idols which God had prescribed in his own, Numb. xv. 4, &c. Should I receive comfort in these? should I be pleased with such a people and such actions? must I not needs be highly provoked, and show my displeasure by an exemplary punishment of such wicked and foolish actions? This is a usual figure, called meiosis, or litotes, when less is said, and more is understood.

7 [g] Upon a lofty and high mountain hast thou set [h] thy bed: even thither wentest thou up to offer sacrifice.

g Ezek. 16. 16, 25.
h Ezek. 23. 41.

Upon a lofty and high mountain, in high places, which were much used for religious worship, both by Israelites and by heathens, hast thou set thy bed; thine altar, as appears from the sacrifice here following, in which thou didst commit spiritual whoredom with idols. Compare Ezek. xxiii. 17, 41.

8 Behind the doors also and the posts hast thou set up thy remembrance: for thou hast discovered thyself to another than me, and art gone up; thou hast enlarged thy bed, and ‖ made thee a covenant with them; [i] thou lovedst their bed ‖ where thou sawest it.

‖ Or, hewed it for thyself larger than their's.
i Ezek. 16. 26, 28. & 23. 2,—20.
‖ Or, thou provident room.

Behind the doors also and the posts; which by a figure called hendiaduo may be put for the door-posts, as it is expressed, Deut. xi. 20. Behind the posts of the doors of thine house; where the heathens are said to have placed their tutelar gods, to whose protection they committed themselves and their houses, that so they might have their eyes and minds upon them, whensoever they went out or came in. Here also the Israelites might put them in some close corner, that they might keep them secret, it being opprobrious, and ofttimes dangerous, for them to worship idols. Thy remembrance; those images or monuments and tokens which thou didst make and set up there as remembrances of those idol-gods whom they represented, or to whom they belonged. He saith, thy remembrance, in opposition to God's remembrances, or to that writing of God's law upon their door-posts, which God prescribed to keep him and his law in their remembrance, Deut. vi. 9; xi. 20. Thou hast discovered thyself to another than me; thou hast uncovered thy nakedness, i. e. prostituted thy body, (as the phrase commonly signifies,) to others besides me, thine Husband. Heb. from with me (departing from me, or as it were rising out of my bed) thou hast uncovered or prostituted thyself to others, like an impudent and insatiable strumpet. Art gone up into the adulterous bed, as this very word is used, Gen. xlix. 4. Thou hast enlarged thy bed, that it might receive many adulterers together. Thou hast multiplied thine idols and altars. Made a covenant with them; thou hast covenanted to serve them, and to expect help from them. But because the verb here used being thus put by itself never signifies to make a covenant, it seems to be better rendered in the margin of our Bible, and by others, hast hewed it (to wit, thy bed, which is expressed both in the next foregoing and in the next following words) for thyself (for thine idolatrous uses) larger than theirs; than their bed, as it follows: or thus, didst hew down (to wit, trees, which is easily understood, both from the verb, and from the nature of the thing) to or for thyself (to make images or other things relating to thy false gods) more than they; more than the heathens, of whom thou hast learned these practices, as God complains, 2 Kings xxi. 9; Ezek. xvi. 46, 47, 52. Thou lovedst their bed where thou sawest it; no sooner didst thou see their idols but thou wast enamoured with them, and didst fall down and worship them, like an unchaste and lewd woman, who upon all occasions, and at the very first view of any man, is inflamed with lust towards them. Heb. thou lovedst their bed (i. e. their filthy conversation) in the place (for so this Hebrew word frequently signifies, as Deut. xxiii. 12; Isa. xxii. 18, and elsewhere) where thou sawest it. Or thus, thou lovedst their bed, thou didst provide (as this word signifies, Exod. xviii. 21, and so doth a word of the very same signification, Gen. xxii. 8) a place for it, to receive their bed, to set up their idols in thine own house.

9 And ‖ [k] thou wentest to the king with ointment, and didst increase thy perfumes, and didst send thy messengers far off, and didst debase thyself even unto hell.

‖ Or, thou respectedst the king.
k ch. 30. 6. Ezek. 16. 33. & 23. 16. Hos. 7. 11. & 12. 1.

Thou wentest, either by thyself, or by thy messengers, as it follows. Or, thou didst look, to wit, earnestly, with expectation and vehement affection. To the king; either to Moloch, which was as it were the king or chief of their idols, and which signifies a king. Or to the great king of Assyria, called the king by way of eminency, to whom the Israelites in the days of Isaiah were very prone to seek, and trust, and send presents. Although the word king may be here taken collectively for the kings of Assyria or Egypt, or any other king, from whom they desired or expected help in their straits. And so the prophet passeth here from their idolatry to another sin, even to their carnal confidence in heathen princes, for which they are oft severely reproved; although these two sins were commonly joined together, and they easily received idolatry from those kings whose help they desired. With ointment; with precious ointments, and particularly with balm, which was of great price, and was a commodity peculiar to those parts, and was sometimes sent as a present: see Gen. xliii. 11; Jer. viii. 22; xlvi. 11. Didst increase thy perfumes; didst send great quantities thereof to them to procure their aid. Didst send thy messengers far off; into Assyria, which was far from Judea. Didst debase thyself even unto hell; thou wast willing to submit to the basest terms to procure their aid.

10 Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way; [l] yet saidst thou not, There is no hope: thou hast found the ‖ life of thine hand; therefore thou wast not grieved.

‖ Or, living.

Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way; thou hast not ceased or relieved, but only tired thyself with all thy tedious journeys and laborious endeavours. Yet saidst thou not, There is no hope; and yet thou wast so stupid under all thy discouragements and disappointments, that thou didst not perceive that thy labour was lost, and that thy case was not mended, but made worse and desperate by these practices. Thou hast found the life of thine hand; thou hast found (i. e. thou falsely imaginest that thou hast found, or shalt assuredly find by these courses) the life (i. e. the strength and vigour) of thine hand, that thine hand is strengthened by these practices; or, life by thine hand, i. e. by these endeavours and applications of thyself to others for help. Or, thou hast sometimes found success in these ways. Therefore thou wast not grieved; therefore thou didst not repent of thy sin and folly herein, but didst persist and applaud thyself in such courses.

m ch. 51. 12, 13. 11 And [m]of whom hast thou been afraid or feared, that thou hast lied, and hast not remembered me, nor laid it to n Ps. 50. 21. thy heart? [n]have not I held my peace even of old, and thou fearest me not?

And of whom hast thou been afraid or feared? and what or who are they the fear of whom drives thee to these wicked and desperate courses? Are they not men, weak and mortal creatures, such as wholly depend upon me, and can do nothing to thee either against me or without me? That thou hast lied; that thou hast dealt thus disloyally and perfidiously with me, and sought for such foreign assistances, contrary to my command, and thy solemn covenant, and hast not remembered me: hast thou forgotten all those great things which I have done for thee, and all those promises which I have made to thee, and constantly performed, when thou hast not grossly violated the conditions upon which they were made? Nor laid it to thy heart; or thus, nor set me upon thine heart, as these very words are rendered, Cant. viii. 6. And so this is a repetition of what is said in the foregoing clause in other words. The sense is, Thou hast not seriously and affectionately considered what I am, how all-sufficient, and faithful, and gracious, for then thou wouldst not have distrusted or disobeyed me. Have not I held my peace even of old? have not I forborne to reprove and punish thee for this and for other sins, from time to time, ever since thou wast my people, that by this goodness I might oblige thee to love me, and to cleave unto me? And thou fearest me not; or, therefore thou dost not fear or regard me. Thus thou abusest mine indulgence and long-suffering, taking occasion from thence to despise me.

12 I will declare thy righteousness, and thy works; for they shall not profit thee.

I will declare; I will no longer be silent and patient towards thee. Thy righteousness and thy works; which may be put for the righteousness of thy works, by that known figure, of which see the first note on ver. 8, whereby he means their wickedness, which he calleth their righteousness, either ironically, or because it was covered with a pretence of righteousness, and they alleged that this was a just and lawful thing, when they were distressed to seek for help from their neighbours or allies. The sense is, I will discover whether thy works be righteous, as thou pretendest they are; my punishments shall manifest the wickedness of thy actions. They shall not profit thee; these actions shall do thee no good, but much hurt.

13 ¶ When thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee; but the wind shall carry them all away; vanity shall take them: but he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land, and shall inherit my holy mountain;

When thou criest, to wit, unto me for deliverance, let thy companies deliver thee; expect it not from me, whom thou hast forsaken and despised, but from those foreign troops to whom thou hast sought and trusted for succour. But the wind shall carry them all away; but they shall be so far from saving thee, that they shall not be able to deliver themselves, but shall be carried away suddenly and violently by the blast of mine anger. Vanity; a vapour or puff of breath which quickly vanisheth away. It is the same thing in effect with the wind. Shall take them; or, take them away, as this verb signifies, Hos. iv. 11, and elsewhere. Shall inherit my holy mountain; shall enjoy my favour and presence in my temple.

o ch. 40. 3. & 62. 10. 14 And shall say, [o]Cast ye up, cast ye up, prepare the way, take up the stumblingblock out of the way of my people.

And shall say, Heb. And he shall say; or, And one shall say. God will raise up a man who shall say these words, and that with authority and efficacy, so as the thing shall be done. Cast ye up; make causeways, where it is needful, for their safe and easy passage. Take up the stumblingblock out of the way of my people; remove all things which may hinder them in their return.

15 For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, [p]whose name is Holy; [q]I dwell in the high and holy place, [r]with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, [s]to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones.

p Job 6. 10. Luke 1. 49.
q Ps. 68. 4. Zech. 2. 13.
r Ps. 34. 18. & 51. 17. & 138. 6. ch. 66. 2.
s Ps. 147. 3. ch. 61. 1.

Whose name is Holy; who is omnipotent, everlasting, and unchangeable, holy in all his words and ways, and therefore both can and will deliver his people, as he hath promised to do. With him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit; with such also whose spirits are broken and humbled by afflictions, and by a sense of their sins for which they were afflicted; which doubtless was the case of many of the Jews in the Babylonish captivity; whom therefore he here implies that God would pity and deliver out of their distresses.

16 [t]For I will not contend for ever, neither will I be always wroth: for the spirit should fail before me, and the souls [u]which I have made.

t Ps. 85. 5. & 103. 9. Mic. 7. 18.
u Num. 16. 22. Job 34. 14. Heb. 12. 9.

I will not contend for ever; I will not constantly proceed to the utmost severity with sinful men in this life, and therefore I will put an end to the miseries of the Jews, and turn their captivity. For the spirit should fail before me, and the souls which I have made; for then their spirits would sink and die under my stroke, and I should do nothing else but destroy the works of mine own hands. Therefore I consider their infirmity, and spare them. Compare Psal. lxxviii. 38, 39; ciii. 13, 14.

17 For the iniquity of [x]his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him: [y]I hid me, and was wroth, [z]and he went on †frowardly in the way of his heart.

x Jer. 6. 13.
y ch. 8. 17. & 45. 15.
z ch. 9. 13.
† Heb. turning away.

Covetousness; of which sin the Jews were eminently guilty, as is expressly affirmed, Jer. vi. 13; viii. 10. But this is not mentioned exclusively as to other sins, but synecdochically, so as to comprehend all those sins for which God contended with them. I hid me; I withdrew my favour and help from him, and left him in great calamities. And he went on frowardly in the way of his heart; yet he was not reformed by corrections, but in his distresses trespassed more and more, as was said of Ahaz, and obstinately persisted in those sinful courses which were chosen by and were most pleasing to the lusts of his own corrupt heart.

18 I have seen his ways, and [a]will heal him: I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him and to [b]his mourners.

a Jer. 3. 22.
b ch. 61. 2.

I have seen his ways; I have taken notice of these evil ways in which he seems resolved to walk, and that he is neither bettered by mercies nor judgments. And will heal him; or, yet I will heal him. Although I might justly destroy him, and leave him to perish in his own ways, yet of my mere mercy, and for my own name's sake, I will pity him, and turn him from his sins, and bring him out of his troubles. And, or, to wit, the copulative conjunction being put expositively, as it is frequently, to his mourners; to those who are humbled under God's hand, that mourn in Zion, Isa. lxi. 2, 3, for their own and others' sins, Ezek. ix. 4, and for the calamities of God's church and people, Isa. lxvi. 10.

19 I create [c]the fruit of the lips; Peace, peace [d]to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the LORD; and I will heal him.

c Heb. 13. 15.
d Acts 2. 39. Eph. 2. 17.

I create, I will by my almighty power and in a wonderful manner produce, the fruit of the lips; Peace: either, 1. Praise or thanksgiving, which is called the fruit of our lips, Hos. xiv. 2; Heb. xiii. 15, and peace: or rather, 2. That peace which is not wrought by men's hands, but only by God's lips or word; peace with God, and in a man's own conscience, which God hath promised to his people, and which he hath published and offered to all sorts of men by the preaching of the prophets, and especially of the apostles; as may be gathered both from the object of this peace in the following words, and by the exclusion of all wicked men from this peace, ver. 20, 21. Peace: the doubling of the word signifies the certainty and abundance of this peace. To him that is far off, and to him that is near; to the Gentiles, who are far from God and from salvation, Acts ii. 38, 39; Eph. ii. 12, &c., as well as to the Jews, who are called a people near unto God, Psal. cxlviii. 14.

e Job 15. 20, &c. Prov. 4. 16.

20 e But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt.

Their minds are restless, being perpetually hurried and tormented with their own lusts and passions, and with the horror of their guilt, and the dread of the Divine vengeance due unto them, and ready to come upon them.

f ch. 48. 22.

21 f There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.

Though they may have as great a share of prosperity as the best of men have, as appears from Psal. xxxvii. 35; lxxiii. 3, &c.; Eccles. viii. 14; ix. 2; yet they have no share in this inward, and spiritual, and everlasting peace.

CHAP. LVIII.

The Jews' hypocrisy in their fasts, 1—5. A true fast described, 6, 7. Promises to godliness, 8—12; to the keeping of the sabbath, 13, 14.

† Heb. with the throat.

CRY †aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and shew my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins.

The prophet having in the foregoing chapter noted and censured divers gross miscarriages of the Jews, proceeds upon the same subject in this chapter, and in God's name expostulates with them for other misdemeanours. Spare not; forbear not to speak whatsoever I command thee for the conviction of this people.

2 Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinance of their God: they ask of me the ordinances of justice; they take delight in approaching to God.

They seek me daily; they cover all their wickedness with a profession of religion, from time to time resorting to my house, pretending to ask counsel of me, and to desire and seek my favour and blessing. Delight to know my ways: either, 1. They seem to delight in it; for men are oft said in Scripture to be or do that which they seem or profess to be or do; as Matt. xiii. 12, that which he hath, is thus explained in Luke viii. 18, that which he seemeth to have; and Rom. vii. 9, I was alive, i. e. I falsely thought myself to be alive. See also Phil. iii. 9. Or, 2. They really delight; for this is evident, that there are many men who take some pleasure in the knowing of God's will and word, and yet do not conform their lives to it. As a nation that did righteousness; as if they were a righteous and godly people. And forsook not the ordinance of their God; as if they were not guilty of any apostacy from God, or neglect of or disobedience to God's precepts. They ask of me the ordinances of justice; as if they desired and resolved to observe them. They take delight, of which see the second note upon this verse, in approaching to God; in coming to my temple to hear my word, and to offer sacrifices.

a Mal. 3. 14.

b Lev. 16. 29, 31. & 23. 27.

3 ¶ a Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? wherefore have we b afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge? Behold, in the day of your fast ye find pleasure, and exact all your ‖ †labours.

Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? They complain of hard usage from God, that although they prayed, and fasted, and kept the rest of God's ordinances, all which are synecdochically comprehended under the title of fasting, all their labour was lost, and God neither regarded nor delivered them. Afflicted our soul; defrauded and pinched our appetites with fasting, of which this phrase is used, Lev. xvi. 29; xxiii. 27, 29. In the day of your fast; in those solemn days of fasting which I have appointed; or, in those times when I have called you by the course of my providence, and counsels of my prophets, unto fasting, and weeping, and mourning, &c., Isa. xxii. 12. Ye find pleasure; either, 1. You indulge yourselves in sensuality, as they did, Isa. xxii. 13. But this doth not agree with that afflicting of their souls which they now professed, and which God acknowledgeth, ver. 5. Or rather, 2. You pursue and satisfy your own lusts; though you abstain from bodily food, you do not mortify your own sinful concupiscences; and when you are restrained from outwards acts, yet even then your thoughts and affections are set upon and working toward those things which gratify your fleshly inclinations and worldly interests. Your labours; your money got by your labour, and lent to others, either for their need, or your own advantage; for labour is oft put for wealth, as Deut. xxviii. 33; Isa. xlv. 14, &c. Heb. your griefs; not passively, those things which are grievous to you; but actively, such as are very grievous and burdensome to others; either hard service, above the strength of your servants, or beyond the time limited by God for their service, of which see an instance, Jer. xxxiv. 13—16; or debts, which you require either with usury, or at least with rigour and cruelty, when either the general law of charity, or God's particular and positive law, commanded the release, or at least the forbearance, of them; of which see an instance, Neh. v. 1, 2, &c.

c 1 Kings 21. 9, 12, 13.

‖ Or, ye fast not as this day.

4 c Behold, ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickedness: ‖ ye shall not fast as ye do this day, to make your voice to be heard on high.

Ye fast for strife and debate; your fasting days, wherein you ought in a special manner to implore the mercy of God, and to show compassion to men, you employ in a great measure in injuring or quarrelling with your brethren, your servants, or debtors, or in contriving mischief against them, as if the design of your fasting and praying to God were only to obtain a licence to oppress men. Compare Matt. xxiii. 14. With the fist of wickedness; or, with a wicked fist; a genitive of the adjunct. To deal rigorously and injuriously with your servants or debtors; which servants, it may be, had sold themselves to the year of redemption, Exod. xxi. 2; Lev. xxv. 39, 40, 50. You handle them with a hard hand; the word is used for fist, Exod. xxi. 18; the LXX. add the humble, poor, or inferior person; and that not only their debtors, with a summum jus, exact rigour, which seems elsewhere to be expressed by grinding the face, chap. iii. 15, and in that parable by taking by the throat, Matt. xviii. 28; but also their servants out of mere will and pleasure, and in contempt of them, treating them opprobriously, as Christ was handled in contempt and scorn, Matt. xxvi. 67, 68; John xviii. 22. Your voice; either, 1. In strife and debate, in which men's passions show themselves by loud clamours. Or, 2. So as to cause the cry of the oppressed, by reason of your injuries, of what kind soever, to enter into the ears of God; which is a crying sin, whether it proceed from unmercifulness, Exod. xxii. 25—27, which sometimes increaseth to rage, 2 Chron. xxviii. 9; or from injustice, chap. v. 7; or from fraud and deceit, James v. 4. The Scripture doth frequently express whatever sin is against charity in special, as also general complex sins, by crying, Gen. xviii. 20, 21; Jonah i. 2. Or, 3. By way of ostentation, to note their hypocrisy; they love to be taken notice of by others, Matt. vi. 2, 5, 16; or their folly, supposing that they shall be heard for their much speaking, upon which account Baal's priests are mocked by Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 27, 28. 4. Voice here relates principally to their prayer; it is a synecdoche of the kind: so the sense is, This is not the way to have your prayers heard; if you desire that, you must fast in another manner, and abstain from all kind of oppression. And this seems best to suit the context, which is to show what kind of fast the Lord reproves, and what he approves in the following verses.

f to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the LORD?

That I have chosen; approve of, accept, or delight in, by a metonymy, because we delight in what we freely choose. A day for a man to afflict his soul; or, to afflict his soul for a day. It is an hypallage, and so it may be understood either for a man to take a certain time to afflict his soul in, and that either from even to even, Lev. xxiii. 32, or from morning to evening, Judg. xx. 26; 2 Sam. iii. 35; or else to afflict his soul for a little time. To afflict, or keep himself low, or chastise the body for want of food, viz. outwardly, without any inward sorrow, or compunction for sin, working a true humiliation in the sight of God. His soul, put here synecdochically for the body or person, as is usual in Scripture, Gen. xlvi. 18, 22, 25; Lev. v. 2, 4; vii. 20, 21, 27; xxii. 11. To bow down his head as a bulrush: here the prophet sets down those external gestures and postures in particular which they did join with their hypocritical fasts, as he had mentioned it before in general. To bow down; bowing is the posture of mourners, Psal. xxxv. 14; and here it is either, as if through weakness of body their heads did hang down; or counterfeitly, to represent the posture of true penitents, moving sometimes their heads this way, and that way, as the word signifieth, not unlike the balance of a clock, as the bulrush moved by the wind boweth itself down, waving to and fro, in a kind of circular or semicircular motion; the contrary motion of lifting up the head being an indication of pride, chap. iii. 16. It is the guise of hypocrites to put on affected countenances, Matt. vi. 16. To spread sackcloth and ashes under him. The Jews, to express their sorrow, made use of sackcloth and ashes two ways. 1. Sometimes by putting on sackcloth upon their bodies, as 1 Kings xxi. 27; Psal. lxix. 11, and casting ashes upon their heads, 2 Sam. xiii. 19. And, 2. Sometimes by spreading sackcloth under them, and lying down upon ashes, Esth. iv. 3; Job ii. 8. The intent of sackcloth was to afflict the body by its unpleasing harshness, and of ashes to represent their own vileness, as being but dust and ashes; their putting of them on might note their uneasiness under sin, and laying on them their self-abhorrency, shaming themselves for it. Quest. Are such rites now convenient on a day of humiliation to help us in our afflicting of ourselves? Answ. Gospel services neither require them nor need them, respecting more the inward afflicting of the soul with godly sorrow and deep contrition; yet may they carry this instruction along with them, that our ornaments, our best and gaudy apparel, ought to be laid aside, as not suiting either the ground and cause, or the end and design, of days of humiliation. Wilt thou call this a fast? i. e. canst thou upon a rational account as a mere man call it so? canst thou think, suppose, or believe it to be so? it being such a one as has nothing in it but the lifeless skeleton and dumb signs of a fast, nothing of deep humiliation appearing in it, or real reformation proceeding from it. Not that the prophet blames them for these external rites in this outward way of afflicting themselves; for, this he commands, Lev. xxiii. 27, 31, 32, and appoints certain rites to be used, Lev. xvi. 19, 21. And these particular rites were frequent in their solemn humiliations, 1 Kings xxi. 27; Esth. iv. 3; Dan. ix. 3; used also by the heathen, Jonah iii. 5, 6. See Matt. xi. 21. But that which he condemns is their hypocrisy in separating true humiliation from them, for bodily exercise profiteth little, 1 Tim. iv. 8. An acceptable day to the Lord; a day that God will approve of, as before. Heb. a day of acceptance, or that will turn to a good account on your behalf.

g Neh. 5. 10, 11, 12. † Heb. the bundles of the yoke. h Jer. 34. 9. † Heb. broken.

6 Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, g to undo † the heavy burdens, and h to let the † oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?

Is not this the fast that I have chosen? or, approve, as before, ver. 5: or, Ought not such a fast to be accompanied with such things as these? where he is now about to show the concomitants of a true fast, with reference to the thing in hand, namely, to exercise works of charity, consisting partly in acts of self-denial, in this verse, and partly in doing good to those in distress, in the next. In this verse he instanceth in some particulars, and closeth with a general. The bands of wickedness, viz. the cruel obligations of usury and oppression. The heavy burdens, Heb. bundles; a metaphor possibly pointing at those many bundles of writings, as bills, bonds, mortgages, and acknowledgments, which the usurers had lying by them. The former may relate to unjust and unlawful obligations extorted by force or fear, which he would have cancelled; this latter to just debts contracted through poverty and necessity, the rigour whereof he would have abated, whether by reason of loans upon too hard conditions, called a drawing them into a net, Psal. x. 9, and so much is implied, Prov. vi. 5; or under too hard circumstances, whether they were loans of food or money, of which the people so bitterly complained, Neh. v. 1—4, and is expressly forbid, Exod. xxii. 25. For debts may be called burdens, 1. Because they lie as a great load upon the debtor's spirits, under which whoever can walk up and down easily doth not so much excel in fortitude as in folly. 2. Because they usually introduce poverty, slavery, imprisonment, &c. The oppressed; either in a large sense, viz. any ways grieved or vexed, whether by the gripings of usury, or the bondage of slavery accompanied with cruel usage; or more peculiarly (according to some) relating to their being confined and shut up in prisons, which latter sense the word free may possibly seem to favour, the former being comprised in that general expression that follows of breaking every yoke. Heb. broken, i. e. like a bruised reed, so crushed and weakened, that they have no consistency or ability, either to satisfy their creditors, or support themselves; and we usually call such insolvent persons broken that cannot look upon themselves to be sui juris, but wholly at another's mercy: you have the same kind of oppression, and the same words used, Amos iv. 1. That ye break every yoke, namely, that is grievous, a metaphor; i. e. free them from all sorts of vexation, whatever it is that held them under any bondage. The LXX. refer it to bonds and writings; but it seems more general: the word properly signifies that stick or cord that holds both ends of the yoke, that it spring not out, or fall off from the neck on which it is laid, Exod. xxv. 14, where the same word is used for staves; and called the bands of the yoke, Lev. xxvi. 13, I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you go upright; the same thing that God would have them do here.

i Ezek. 18. 7, 16. Matt. 25. 35. ‖ Or, afflicted. k Job 31. 19. l Gen. 29. 14. Neh. 5. 5.

7 Is it not i to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are ‖ cast out to thy house? k when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from l thine own flesh?

Is it, viz. the fast that pleaseth me, supplied from the former verse. Having showed the evil they are to abstain from in order to an acceptable fast, viz. cruelty, he here speaks of the duty that is required, viz. mercy, as a manifestation of repentance, Dan. iv. 27; Luke xix. 8. For there are two parts of justice, one to do no man wrong, the other to do good to all; which two ought always to accompany each other, and cannot be parted, especially in acts of humiliation: and as by those evils mentioned he understands all other evil whatsoever, that they are to be abstained from as the consequence of a day of humiliation, so under these duties mentioned are comprised all the duties that we are to set upon as the effect of true repentance; and he instanceth rather in those of the second table than those of the first, not that they are to be neglected, but because cheerful performance of external duties to our neighbour is the clearest discovery and indication of our inward piety towards God, 1 John iv. 20. To deal: the word properly signifies to divide, or break into parts, for the more equal and expeditious doing whereof they were wont of old to bake their loaves with cuts or clefts in them, more or fewer according to the bigness of the loaf, not much unlike that which we ordinarily call buns. It implies, that as none is obliged to give away all, so none is exempted from giving some, but a distribution to be made according to the abilities of rich and poor; or the meaning is, What thou sparest on thy fasting day from thine own belly, thou give it to refresh the bowels of the hungry; what thou takest from thyself give to another, that thy poor neighbour's body may be refreshed by that from the abstinence whereof thine own is afflicted. Thy bread: bread is taken for all necessaries for the support of human life, and here for all kind of food; and it is here limited by a term of propriety, thy, which may seem to have some emphasis in it: see my note on Eccles. xi. 1. Speaking of their grinding and oppressing the poor, he would have them be sure to give of their own, not that which of right is another's, and thou hast, it may be, unjustly gotten. For to refresh some poor with that which thou hast gotten by the oppressing of others, and thereby possibly made them poor, will turn but to a bad account; it will bring a curse upon thy house, or family, Prov. xv. 27, or will transfer thy estate over to such strangers that will manage it as thou shouldst have done, Prov. xxviii. 8. That thou bring, i. e. voluntarily, without pressing. Invite, encourage, freely accommodate. The poor, viz. that are not only needy and necessitous as to their present condition, but helpless and shiftless as to the means of getting out of it. That are cast out; and thereby become wanderers, having no abiding place; or rather, suffered to abide no where, such are mentioned Heb. xi. 37, 38. Or, this word coming from a root that signifies to rebel, it may be applied to such as have been adjudged, whether wrongfully or no, rebels, and therefore cast out, viz. of favour and protection, and so become as banished ones, or pilgrims in another country; or afflicted, as in the margin, viz. grievously oppressed by the cruelty of great men, whereby they are cast out of their possessions, and so become wanderers, seeking relief abroad. To thy house; that thou be hospitable, and make thy house a shelter to them that have none of their own left, but, as we usually say, cast out of house and home: see Acts xvi. 34. The naked, i. e. either that have no clothes, or that are so meanly clothed that they have scarce enough to cover their nakedness, 1 Cor. iv. 11, where naked is to be taken as hunger and thirst is, not absolutely starved, so neither quite stripped; but either in a ragged and undecent condition, as to others' sight, or so thinly and insufficiently clothed as not to defend him from the injury of weather, as to his own sense of feeling. That thou cover him, i. e. that thou give him raiment suited to these wants, or that wherewith he may procure it, James ii. 15, 16: most of these circumstances we find were the cases of the apostles, 1 Cor. iv. 11. That thou hide not thyself; that thou not only seek no occasion to excuse thyself, either by absence, or discountenancing and disowning of him; but that out of compassion thou apply thyself heartily to his speedy relief; that thou be not like that priest and Levite, Luke x. 31, 32, but like the good Samaritan, ver. 33—35, not giving him occasion to complain as David, Psal. cxlii. 4. From thine own flesh: some confine this to our own kindred, and relations, and family; and this the LXX. seem to favour, who render it, those of thine own house, of thine own seed, overlook not; agreeable to that of 1 Tim. v. 8, where the apostle useth the same word that the LXX. doth for kindred: but this would confine our charity within too narrow a compass, inasmuch as often, nay, most commonly, the necessities of others are greater than our own; neither is it congruous that the other words should be taken in the greatest latitude, and this alone confined within so narrow a compass. It is true the Hebrews by their own flesh do mostly understand those who are of the same stock, or lineage, and tribe, as Gen. xxxvii. 27; 2 Sam. xix. 12, 13; and thus many understand Paul's meaning, Rom. xi. 14. But here it is to be taken more generally, for every man, he being thine own nature; and in this latitude our Saviour interprets the relation of neighbour to that lawyer, Luke x. 29, 30, &c. We can look on no man but there we contemplate our own flesh; and therefore it is barbarous, not only to tear, but not to love and succour, our own flesh, Neh. v. 5. In which soever of these two senses you take it, there is a note of similitude to be understood; so that the sense is this, break thy bread, &c. to them as unto thine own flesh; be not more severe to them than thou wouldst be to thyself; and thus it agrees with that of our Saviour, Matt. xxii. 39, and with that of the apostle, Eph. v. 29. In short, feed him as thou wouldst feed thyself, or have it fed; shelter him as thou wouldst shelter thyself, or have it sheltered; clothe him as thou wouldst clothe thyself, or be clothed; if in any of these respects thou wert in his circumstances.

8 ¶ [m]Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily: and thy righteousness shall go before thee; [n]the glory of the LORD †shall be thy rereward.

m Job 11.17.

n Ex. 14. 19. ch. 52. 12.

Thy light: it is put in general for all happiness and prosperity; as all kind of adversity and calamity is set forth and resembled by darkness: but here more particularly for a comfortable and free estate after their dark and calamitous condition in the Babylonish captivity; for the like reason Josephus tells us, lib. 12. cap. 11., that the Jews instituted a feast to be observed by their posterity, upon the account of the service of the temple being re-established, which they called the feast of lights, because, saith he, so great a happiness broke forth upon them beyond their hope. Break forth as the morning: here is a metaphorical allusion in a metonymical expression, viz. of the efficient, describing the comfortable effect of humbling themselves in a right manner, which like the daylight shall break forth from the blackness of their night of affliction, and bring with it the joy and comfort of all good things; and he doth not only say this light shall appear, but break forth, dart itself forth, notwithstanding all difficulties, as the sun breaks and pierceth through a cloud, noting how ready God is to help his people when they are rightly humbled, how quickly and how clearly salvation shall break forth upon them. Thine health shall spring forth speedily: another metaphor to express the same thing, unless there may be this difference, the light with reference to their outward state, and health with reference to the inward delight of their minds, in both to describe the complete satisfaction they should have. Deliverances out of great pressures are often in Scripture represented by the recovery of health, as chap. lvii. 18; Jer. viii. 22; and this prophet especially delights in this metaphor, because all affliction is as it were a sickness to the soul, altering the heart and countenance; see Neh. ii. 2, 3; and a recovery out of this estate maketh the heart glad, and the countenance cheerful, Esth. viii. 16, 17; Jer. xxxiii. 6: compare ver. 10, 11. Hence the LXX. render it medicines. Thy righteousness; either, 1. Thy uprightness and sincerity, Gen. xxx. 33. Or, 2. The reward of thy righteousness, by a metonymy, chap. xlviii. 18; Psal. xxiv. 5; and here perhaps it may particularly relate to their works of mercy and charity, it being the thing in hand, and often so called, Psal. cxii. 9, and applied by the apostle to this purpose, 2 Cor. ix. 9. It brings temporal, spiritual, and eternal blessings, and all this not of desert, but free grace, as a reward that naturally springs forth from the faithfulness of his promises, as the harvest from the earth, when the seed is sown; see Hos. x. 12; so the fruit and reward of our righteousness springs not from our deserts, but from God's righteousness, Heb. vi. 10. Or, 3. The witness of thy righteousness; by what thou doest thou wilt appear to be righteous, Psal. xxxvii. 6. For such a notion as this was vulgarly sucked in, that adversity did never befall a person or people but for their sins, and was strongly urged by way of argument against Job's integrity by his friends; therefore they being delivered shall be as a testimony of thy righteousness. Or, 4. The fruit and effect of thy righteousness, viz. the due, just, and right order of thy government, which, as Calvin saith, is a sign of God's fatherly kindness; things that are now in a confusion he will bring into right order again, i. e. justice shall be duly administered, and men shall carry themselves justly all the land over: see Isa. xxxii. 16—18. Or, 5. Christ's righteousness, Jer. xxiii. 6, compared with xxxiii. 16. Then the meaning is, He shall go in and out before thee. Shall go before thee; as it were making way for thy better state, as the break of day or the morning star goes before the sun. The glory of the Lord, i. e. the glory of his power and providence, or his glorious power, shall be seen in bringing thee up from captivity, and defending thee free from their pursuit; or, as some, a glorious state shall succeed this thy calamitous condition, and called the glory of the Lord to express the greatness of this glory, as very great mountains are called the mountains of God, and tall cedars the cedars of God. The glorious Lord, by a metonymy of the adjunct. Shall be thy rereward, Heb. shall gather thee: thus the word is used concerning Dan, who was appointed to bring up the rear, or to close up the march of the Israelites, when they marched from the wilderness of Sinai, Numb. x. 25. This office God takes upon himself; for it argues great skill and courage, and makes much for the honour and glory of a commander, both to gather up all the stragglers, that none be picked up by the enemy, which relates to the Hebrew word of gathering, and to secure and cover the rear of his army; thus the angel of his presence secured the Israelites when they came up out of Egypt, Exod. xiv. 19.

9 Then shalt thou call, and the LORD shall answer; thou shalt cry, and he shall say, Here I am. If thou take away from the midst of thee the yoke, the putting o Ps. 12. 2. forth of the finger, and °speaking vanity;

They make great complaint, ver. 3, that God took no notice of their services, which complaint God seems now to satisfy: q. d. These conditions observed, call upon me, and thou shalt see I will regard, Psal. xxxiv. 15. See Isa. i. 18. The Lord shall answer; he will give an effectual demonstration, that he hears thee, by the real answer that he will give to thy request, Psal. xxxiv. 17; xcix. 6; cxviii. 5. Here I am; a phrase that notes a person to be ready at hand for work, as Isa. vi. 8; or for help, as God here, and Psal. xlvi. 1; or both, Psal. cxlv. 18, 19. From the midst; not a geometrical middle or centre, but having a place among others; the meaning is, from among you. The yoke, i. e. all those pressures and grievances before mentioned, ver. 6; all that barbarous slavery they brought their brethren into; the particulars expressed by that one Hebrew word motah, three times used in this chapter. The putting forth of the finger: there being often an indication of a man's mind by the postures of several parts of the body, as of lust, malice, scorn, revenge, &c., Prov. vi. 12—14, this putting forth of the finger may point at divers things all springing from two roots; either the secret malice of the heart, or just and open violence. It is used, 1. Sometimes by way of scoff, reproof, or disdainful insulting, as the Pharisee seems to point at the publican, Luke xviii. 11; pointing with the finger, like winking with the eye, seeming to indicate something that may cause shame in another; and this is reckoned among great afflictions, Heb. xi. 36. See 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16; Jer. xx. 7. 2. Sometimes for beating, or other injurious treating men, seizing either their persons or estates: such a putting forth of the hand you have mentioned 1 Sam. xxii. 17; and this agrees well to the fist of wickedness, ver. 4; and so the finger may be put by a synecdoche for the hand, and that which before was called the fist may be here called the finger. 3. Sometimes as a token of putting suitors by, and refusing to hear their petitions and requests, seeking to them for mercy and pity. 4. Sometimes to express an angry mind, stirring up itself, either to the imperious commanding of a thing, or to revenge, whether by the gesture alone, or accompanied with menacing expressions, signifying thereby a purpose to put our power in execution. Speaking vanity, Heb. aven; it signifies a lie, or iniquity, as Psal. v. 5; vi. 8; and so the sense may be, If thou dost not proceed to indecent expressions in thy strifes, brawls, and threatenings with thy finger, which seldom is done without sin; and thus the counsel here may suit with our Saviour's, Matt. v. 21, 22, viz. not only not stretch out thine hand against thy brother, but not so much as be lavish with thy tongue: so speaking vanity may be a meiosis, for not railing; the LXX. render it muttering, which is an incomplete kind of speaking, whereby we reproach another in low, unformed, undigested expressions. But it seems here rather to signify affliction, not only because the word used in this place doth properly so signify, but because it is most agreeable to the matter discoursed of, and the Chaldee render it violence; and then the sense is, speaking words of affliction, or that will vex and grieve, like those words of Nabal to David's servants, 1 Sam. xxv. 10, 11; Prov. xviii. 23. And thus it relates to their harsh and unjust commands, wherewith they were wont to burden their servants; a synecdoche of the kind.

10 And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon day:

Draw out; or, open; as when we break open a store or magazine to satisfy the wants of the needy: it implies bounty and liberality. A phrase contrary to that of shutting up of the bowels, 1 John iii. 17. Thy soul; thy affection, i. e. thy pity and compassion; a metonymy of the subject, as one that condoles with them in their misery; affectionately, and with delight, Rom. xii. 8; 2 Cor. ix. 7. God loves a cheerful giver as well as a liberal giver. Not grudgingly, not of constraint, not because thou must, but because thou wilt; not out of necessity, but of choice. Compassion and mercy in a work is more than the work of mercy itself; for this is something only without a man, but the other is something from within, and of himself. This argues a sympathy, which the other doth not; all without this being as nothing, 1 Cor. xiii. 3. And satisfy: here the prophet notes the work that is to be done, as in the former expression the affection wherewith it is to be done, otherwise it would be no more than what the apostle James reproves, James ii. 15, 16; and the psalmist joins them both together, Psal. xxxvii. 21. And then further it implies a complete and proportionable answering of his wants, that the supply answer the necessity; that is, be such as may satisfy, not barely keep him from starving. The afflicted soul, i. e. the person afflicted with wants. Then shall thy light rise: this is the same promise, and expressed in the same figure, as in ver. 8. See the same phrase opened there. The Hebrews delight to express the same things often by a little altering of the phrase; only here it seems to be carried to a higher degree: there the light shall break forth, but here light shall be in obscurity. And thy darkness be as the noon-day; in the very darkness of the affliction itself thou shalt have comfort, Psal. cxii. 4. There it shall be as the morning, still increasing, here as the noonday, in its zenith and height of perfection, which shall be without so much as any shadow of affliction.

11 And the LORD shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in †drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters †fail not.

† Heb. lie, or, deceive.

Shall guide thee, viz. like a shepherd, Psal. xxiii. 1—3; or, as the Vulgate, shall give thee rest; and so it may relate to the rest that God would give them in Judea, upon their return from captivity, as answering to their complaints in Babylon, Lam. v. 5. And he adds continually, to show that his conduct and blessing shall not be momentary, or of a short continuance, but all along, as he did to Israel in the wilderness, not leaving them till he brought them into Canaan. Drought, Heb. droughts; or, drought of droughts; which being in the plural number, notes extremity of drought; Psal. lxxviii. 72, skilfulnesses, that is, great skill; and Prov. i. 20, wisdoms, i. e. excellent wisdom; and consequently great scarcity and famine. The meaning is, that when thy lot shall fall in the extremity of such a condition, either as to time or place, he will abundantly satisfy thy soul, i. e. thee, by a synecdoche; thou shalt have plenty, when others are in scarcity. Make fat thy bones; or, make nimble; and so the expression relates to bones full of marrow, which causeth agility and nimbleness, a state of health and strength: see Prov. xv. 30. Or it notes cheerfulness, which is often the cause of bones well covered with fat; therefore a broken or a sorrowful spirit is said to dry up the bones, Prov. xvii. 22. This may be spoken in opposition to the sad effects of famine, whereby the flesh is consumed away, that it cannot be seen, and the bones that were not seen stick out, Job xxxiii. 21; they cleave to the skin, Psal. cii. 5. And thus it may have respect to their afflicted estate in Babylon, where they complain that their bones were broken, Lam. iii. 4; but now in their return their bones should not only be made whole, but strong, and in good condition: see Psal. li. 8. Our English Annotations, after divers senses given, choose to close with the vulgar translation, he will deliver, or set free thy bones, and so the word doth signify, Prov. xi. 8, 9. Some make each expression of these promises to answer as suitable and conditional rewards of their several duties: e. g. If thou conduct the cast-outs and harbourless to thy house, ver. 7, God will guide and conduct thee continually. If thou draw forth thy soul to the hungry, so as to satisfy them, ver. 10, God will satisfy thee in a time of drought, and in famine thou shalt have sufficient, Psal. xxxiii. 19. If thou let the oppressed go free, and break every yoke, ver. 6, 9, then God will make thy bones to rejoice, by delivering them from their burdens; i. e. if thou wilt free them, he will free thee. And if thou continue thus to draw forth thy soul, that it be ever running to the refreshing of the needy, thou shalt be as a spring of waters that shall never fail thee, but like the widow's oil, ever flowing. If thou relieve the poor, thou shalt never be poor, but as a well-watered garden, always flourishing: see Prov. iii. 9, 10. Like a watered garden; like a garden for the pleasure and beauty of it, a paradise; like a garden watered for the continual flourishing of thy estate; there shall be no withering or decay upon thy prosperous condition, Psal. i. 3, contrary to what is said of the wicked, Psal. xxxvii. 2, 10, 20, 35, 36. And thus Jeremiah speaks of the return of this same people, Jer. xxxi. 12. Like a spring of water, whose waters fail not, Heb. deceive not; a metaphor which further notes also the continuance of this flourishing state, which will not be like a land flood, or brooks, that will soon be dried up with drought; see Job vi. 15; but will be fed with a spring of blessing that will never fail: a very significant metaphor; it being the nature of springs, spontaneously and freely, as it were, to pour out their bowels to all that upon their wants come to receive it; neither is ever scanty, but flows still like fresh milk to the breast the more it is drawn; hence God is called a Fountain of goodness.

p ch. 61. 4. 12 And they that shall be of thee [p] shall build the old waste places: thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations; and thou shalt be called, The repairer of the breach, The restorer of paths to dwell in.

They that shall be of thee, i. e. either, 1. A remnant of thee among the captivity, that shall be as persons raised from the dead; or, 2. Thy posterity, expressed thus, because they sprang or proceeded from them. The old waste places, Heb. wastes of eternity, i. e. which have lain long waste; for holam doth not always signify what is bounded by no time, but what respects a long time, looking either forward, as Gen. xiii. 15; Exod. xxi. 6, or backward, as here, viz. the space of seventy years, and so may truly be rendered the wastes of an age. By waste places he means the city and temple, with cities and places adjacent, turned as it were all into a waste, or wilderness, void and untilled, and which was done not only by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, but by Sennacherib also, and the other kings of Assyria. They had lain so long desolate, that the foxes inhabited them instead of men, Lam. v. 18. And it was turned so much into a desert, that they were forced to fight with the beasts that possessed it to get their food, Lam. v. 9. The foundations of many generations; either the foundations that were laid many generations ago, as those of Jerusalem, which was not only built, but was the head of a kingdom, in the days of Melchizedek, who was king thereof in the days of Abraham, as appears, Gen. xiv. 18; if that Salem were Jerusalem, as is generally agreed, and Josephus writes, lib. 1. Antiquit. cap. 10; who was born about the three hundredth year after the flood: the superstructures were now destroyed, viz. of Jerusalem, and divers other cities. Or, that shall continue for many generations yet to come. Thou shalt be called; thou shalt be honoured with this title, as we use to say the father of our country, i. e. deservedly so called, because thou art so; the like phrase chap. xlviii. 8. The repairer of the breach: breach is put here collectively for breaches, which were made by God's judgment breaking in upon them in suffering the walls of their towns and cities to be demolished, and their state broken, chap. v. 5. The restorer of paths; such a one was Moses, Psal. cvi. 23. And this tends to the same sense with the former expression, because men were wont to make paths over those breaches, to go the nearest way. Or it may more particularly point at the recovering of the ancient paths, and bringing them into their wonted course, which were either those chief streets through the gates of the cities, or other lanes out of those streets, which were now forgotten and lost, partly by being covered with rubbish, and partly by those shorter paths that were trod and made over the breaches; such a restorer of paths was Nehemiah, Neh. vi. 1. And we read of the several repairers he made use of, Neh. iii. Or those paths that led from city to city, which being now laid desolate, and uninhabited, were grown over with grass and weeds, for want of travellers, or safety of travelling, (of something a like case we read in the time of the judges, Judg. v. 6, 7,) and so lost as in a wilderness, wherein there is no way; and by building up those cities again the several paths leading to them would be restored. To dwell in; these accommodations being all recovered, their ancient cities might be fit to be reinhabited.

q ch. 56. 2. 13 ¶ If [q] thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the LORD, honourable; and shalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words:

If thou turn away thy foot: this is taken either properly, i. e. If thou take no unnecessary journeys, or do any servile works, either of hand or foot, that are forbidden on the sabbath day, the instrument being here put for the work; or metaphorically, i. e. If thou keep thy mind and affections clear, and restrain thyself from whatever may profane it, as David did concerning the word, Psal. cxix. 101. Feet are often put for the affections, Eccles. v. 1, because the mind is moved by the affections, as the body is by the feet; If we do not let our thoughts be extravagant either upon impertinencies or unlawful things. The sum is, If thou be careful not to break the sabbath. From the sabbath; or for the sabbath's sake, whether we understand it more largely, of the occasional sabbath in solemn humiliations or otherwise set apart for sacred services, which is called a sabbath, Lev. xvi. 31; xxiii. 32. Days of this nature were set apart before the captivity, chap. xxii. 12; Jer. xxxvi. 9, and also in the captivity, Zech. vii. 5. And thus it may be pertinent to the occasion of this discourse, ver. 3. And further, though sabbath be here only mentioned, yet it may take in every institution of God that they were in a capacity of observing during their captivity; thus I conceive it is understood chap. lvi. 1, 2. Or whether we take it more particularly, for the weekly sabbath, such a carriage doth God expect as doth become it. From doing thy pleasure, satisfying thy lusts, and the corruption of thy will, on my holy day, i. e. on my sabbath, which is a holy day. A delight; full of delights in thy judgment, not looking on it as a burden; and practice, performing the duties of it with cheerfulness, delighting in the ordinances of it: and so the sabbath by a metonymy is put for the works of the sabbath, the time being put for the things that ought to be done in that time; therefore calling here is not only a verbal, but affectionate calling, the understanding assenting, the will consenting, and the actions conforming thereto: this delight appears in the saints of God, in their breathings after it, as it did frequently in David, Psal. xxvii. 4; xxxvi. 8; xlii. 1, with many more. The holy of the Lord; or to the Lord, i. e. dedicated to him, consecrated to his service. The Jews had a law that no man might take from the sabbath to add to the profane days, but he might on the contrary. Honourable, viz. the chief of days; worthy of all honour, and therefore honourable, because holy; and so shall honour, either it, i. e. the day; or him, i. e. the Lord, whose day it is. For to sanctify God and to sanctify his day is all one; compare chap. viii. 13, with Exod. xx. 8; thus esteem it an honour as well as a pleasure. Not doing thine own ways, or works, or course of life; a man's whole course being described by a way or walk, Gen. xvii. 1; Eph. v. 8. Nor speaking thine own words, viz. that are properly thine own, i. e. thine own in opposition to what God commands, proceeding from the corruption of nature, and vanity of the mind; or not speaking words, i. e. vainly, impertinently, and not suitable to the work of the day, tending neither to thy profit nor pleasure; or rather injurious, revengeful, or reproachful words, contrary to rest, quiet, and sedate composedness of the sabbath. And thus it refers to what was their usual practice upon their solemn assemblies or sabbaths towards their poor brethren, which they are charged with, ver. 3, and is called speaking vanity, ver. 9; see there; and accordingly the LXX. render it, if thou speak not a word in anger.

t ch. 1. 20. & 40. 5. Mic. 4. 4. father: t for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord: this hath reference to the foregoing verse. If thou wilt delight thyself in the sabbath, then thou shalt delight in the God of the sabbath; or thou shalt have cause to delight in the Lord, viz. in his goodness and faithfulness to thee, and so shalt live by faith in him as the Fountain of all good, as Psal. xxxvii. 4, in the assurance of his love and favour, Psal. xxxiii. 21, and that in great abundance, Psal. xxxvi. 8; such delights as no wicked man can have, Prov. xiv. 10. I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth; thou shalt be above the reach of danger, chap. xxxiii. 16. Or it may have respect to their being brought out of Babylon, which lay very low in respect of Judea, called the earth, as it is elsewhere, Luke xxiii. 44; and high, both in respect of the situation of it, as also its mountainousness. Or the expression may import the subduing of their enemies, as it is Deut. xxxiii. 29. Riding is oft used for conquering, Psal. xlv. 4; see the note there; Rev. vi. 2. The sense is, they shall come out of Babylon, not sneakingly, as on foot, but triumphantly and gloriously, riding, as God brought Israel out of Egypt harnessed, in good order, and with a high hand; or, they shall ride to and fro in their chariots at their pleasure. And feed thee with the heritage of Jacob, i. e. thou shalt enjoy the good of the land of Canaan, which God had promised as a heritage of Jacob and his seed, Gen. xxxv. 12, and feed on the fruits of it. Quest. Why doth he say of the heritage of Jacob, and not of Abraham or Isaac. Answ. Because the whole posterity of Jacob was within the covenant, but Ishmael and Esau, one the seed of Isaac, the other the seed of Abraham, were both excluded. For the mouth of the Lord: this is to express the certainty and indubitableness of it, being from the mouth of him who cannot lie: see of the same expression of assurance, chap. i. 20; xl. 5. And this Calvin refers both to what was spoken in the beginning of the chapter, that it was in vain for those hypocrites to contend with God; and also as the confirmation of his promise, if they would rightly observe those promises. The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it: he speaks of himself, as of a man, by a prosopopœia; or it may relate to the prophet, the Lord, whose mouth and instrument I am.

CHAP. LIX.

Sin separates between God and us, 1, 2. Murder, theft, falsehood, injustice, cruelty, 3—8. Calamity for sin, 9—15. Salvation only of God, 16—19. The covenant of the Redeemer, 20, 21.

a Num. 11. 23. ch. 50. 2. BEHOLD, the LORD's hand is not a shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear:

The Lord's hand is not shortened; he is not grown weaker than in former times, as omnipotent as ever he was: hand is here by a synecdoche put for arm, and so for strength, because the strength of a man doth generally put forth itself in his arm; and thus it is applied to God in his bringing Israel out of Egypt, Psal. cxxxvi. 12. Neither his ear heavy; or thick of hearing; he is not like your idol gods, that have hands, and cannot help, and ears, and cannot hear. The phrases are much to the same purpose, save only that they seem to be appropriated to the double cavil, or quarrel, that the Jews might have with God; as, 1. Surely if God were not heavy or hard of hearing, he could not but hear those strong cries that we put up in the days of our fast; or, 2. If he did hear, certainly he could not help us; and thus it may have respect to the beginning of the 58th chapter. Or the words may be by way of confirmation and establishment, and so may relate to the close of it, to let them know that if they sought him as they ought, and was before prescribed, he was not inexorable, but willing to hear, and able to make good all those promises that he had made from ver. 8 to the end. The sum is, to show that the fault was not in God, that their fasts and cries were not regarded, for his ear was as quick to hear as ever; nor their services rewarded, for his hand was as able to help as ever; but the obstruction lay in their sins, which is positively asserted, ver. 2, and a more particular account given of them in the sequel.

2 But your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins ‖ have hid his face from you, that he ‖ Or, have made him hide.
will not hear.

Have separated; have been as a thick wall between God and you; have set him at a great distance, Prov. xv. 29. Have hid his face: this may be put synecdochically for the whole person; and the prophet speaking of God by an anthropopathy, may understand his presence; and then it is, hath made him hide or withdraw his presence, as one that turns away his face from some noisome thing; or rather his favour, that though you cry to be delivered out of Babylon, yet you shall not find that favour. He will not hear, i. e. he will not grant it; thus it is used Psal. xlv. 12; Hos. v. 15: see on chap. i. 15: see Judg. x. 13.

3 For b your hands are defiled with b ch. 1. 15.
blood, and your fingers with iniquity;
your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness.

Your hands are defiled with blood: here the prophet comes from a more general to a more particular charge against them; by blood we are to understand either murders and bloodshed properly so called; or ways of injustice, extortion, oppression, and cruelties, whereby men are deprived of a livelihood; hence hating our brother is called murder, 1 John iii. 15, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem called murderers. See how the prophet phraseth their oppression, Micah iii. 1—3. Your fingers: this is not added to protract the discourse, but to aggravate their sin: q. d. Not only your hands, but your fingers; you are not free from the least part of injustice. Your lips have spoken lies; not only properly so called, but perjuries, and wronging your neighbours by slanders and false accusations; wherein he shows they did not only offer violence by the hand, but they had ways of circumventing with their lips. Your tongue hath uttered: the verb doth properly signify to muse, or meditate; then the meaning is, that what they mutter, or utter with the tongue, they do it out of premeditated malice, from a perverse spirit; you may have a larger comment upon this Jer. ix. 3—6. Perverseness: perverse words are such as are contrary to God's word, and it is put here in the abstract, to intimate that their words were every way contrary to God's will.

4 None calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth: they trust in vanity, and speak lies; c they conceive mischief, c Job 15. 35. Ps. 7. 14.
and bring forth iniquity.

None calleth for justice, i. e. none seek to redress these wrongs and violences; they commit all rapines and frauds under impunity; either, 1. Because the judges are corrupt. Or, 2. Because none will warn the judges of their duty. Or, 3. Because none seek to bring offenders to justice. Or, 4. Because none will plead a righteous cause, or plead it righteously, or countenance goodness; and this the next expression favours; and so justice suffers, which the Hebrew word mispat, being in the passive voice, seems to intimate: the sense is the same, and whereas it is said none, it is as much as to say very few, as we say few or none; the like Psal. xiv. 3. Quest. How could this be charged upon them, when in the time of their captivity they had no courts? Answ. It is probable they had courts among themselves, to judge between one another, by leave of the Babylonish kings. They trust in vanity; either, 1. Relating to their lies, which are words empty and void of all consistency; and so it is the same with the next expression, and speak lies. Or, 2. In their idols, which are stocks and stones, and so oft called vanity and nothing, 1 Cor. viii. 4. For even in Babylon they worshipped idols, as appears by Jer. xvi. 11, 12, 18. Or rather, 3. In their power, and craft, and policy, whereby, laying aside justice, they can oppress others; and so he calls it vanity by a metonymy of the adjunct, because it would prove all vain in the end, and either, 1. Frustrate their ends. Or, 2. Not justify them against God's proceedings with them. Or, 3. Bring all into emptiness and confusion: the word is tohu, whereby the confusion and mingling of all things is expressed, before the world was brought into order and form, Gen. i. 2. Speak lies: it may refer both to the judges, and to the lawyers and false prophets, that tell them they shall not go into captivity; they speak that which they know to be false. They conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity: these two words of conceiving and bringing forth note their whole contrivance, and perfecting their wickedness; the former notes their plotting, the latter their execution of mischief; whatever is in the mind, only out of sight, warmed and formed there by cogitating and meditation, is called conception, which being ripe, and produced to view, is called a birth; intimating that the wicked sin not occasionally and accidentally, but premeditatingly and professedly; they grow big with it. The expression is allegorical, and in the two next verses compared to the cockatrice' eggs for the wickedness of it, and to a spider's web for the vanity of it.

‖ Or, adders'. ‡ Or, that which is sprinkled is as if there brake out a viper.

5 They hatch ‖cockatrice' eggs, and weave the spider's web: he that eateth of their eggs dieth, and ‖that which is crushed breaketh out into a viper.

They hatch cockatrice' eggs; or adder, or basilisk; one kind put for any venomous creature; a proverbial speech, signifying by these eggs mischievous designs, and by hatching them their putting them in practice: this is to show that mischief is natural to them, and they can do no otherwise, as poison is natural to these eggs. Weave the spider's web; another proverbial speech, whereby is taught, both how by their plots they weave nets, lay snares industriously, with great pains and artifice, whereby they may entangle and involve their poor neighbours in intricacies and perplexities, and so devour them, as the spider weaves her web to catch flies, and then to feed on them; and also how that they contrive nothing but what will tend to their own ruin, as the issue of the viper is the death of the mother, and they and their designs will come to nothing, and not answer their end, as the spider's web is soon swept away, and is seen no more, which doth well agree with what follows. He that eateth of their eggs dieth: here is a catachrestical allusion, noting that he who hath commerce with them, and approves their counsels, which are the eggs which they hatch, will be poisoned with them. And that which is crushed breaketh out into a viper: if and be copulative here, then the sense is either, If any seek to crush and disappoint their plots, or if they be sprinkled or dispersed abroad, (as the margin seems to favour,) they will seek his ruin, will be as a viper to him. But if and be causal, as it often is, and may be here, then the sense is, q. d. He dieth, because the eggs being crushed, a poisonous viper proceeds from it; the more you partake of their counsels, the more you are infected, there lies such a dreadful poison embodied in them.

d Job 8. 14, 15.

6 d Their webs shall not become garments, neither shall they cover themselves with their works: their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands.

Their webs shall not become garments, i. e. their contrivances and deep designs shall not advantage them, they being like a thin and raw garment, either through which all their wretchedness and malice will appear, as the next words intimate; or, for want of solidity and substance, shall not be able to defend them from their impending evils. Works of iniquity, i. e. works of injustice, whereby they grieve and vex their brethren, which the next words do clear. The act of violence is in their hands, i. e. they exercise themselves in all acts of violence and oppression.

e Prov. 1. 16. Rom. 3. 15.

7 e Their feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood: their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and †destruction are in their paths.

† Heb. breaking.

Their feet run to evil: this seems to be taken from Prov. i. 16. See the note there. He had spoken of their hands, lips, and heart, &c. before, and now of their feet, to show that they were wholly set upon mischief. Their thoughts, i. e. their heart and mind, is set upon doing wrong and injury; they not only do evil, but do it deliberately. You have the wicked described by this kind of working of their thoughts, Psal. lxiv. 6; they meditate on little or nothing else. Wasting and destruction are in their paths; a metaphor put for the behaviours and carriages of men; in what way or work soever they are engaged, it all tends to ruin and destruction. A metaphor taken from an overspreading torrent, or sweeping plague, or beasts of prey, that tear and devour whatsoever comes in their way.

8 The way of peace they know not; and there is no ‖judgment in their goings: ‖ Or, right.
f they have made them crooked paths: whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace. f Ps. 125. 5. Prov. 2. 15.

The way of peace they know not; they are of such turbulent spirits, living in such continual contentions and discords, that, breaking in pieces the very bonds of society, they neither know, 1. How to make and keep peace; neither, 2. Do they feel or enjoy the sweet fruits of it; and therefore by consequence, 3. They take not the course that leads to prosperity and happiness. They are not friends to peace. There is no judgment, i. e. no justice, equity, faith, or integrity, which are the foundation of judgment, in their goings; as paths did note their habitual way or manner of living, so goings do signify their actual progress in that way, or their works; thus Job xiv. 16. They have made them crooked paths; they walk by no rule, which should discover the crooked from the straight; they are full of unevennesses and uncertainties, contrary to what David speaks, Psal. xxvi. 12. The LXX. render it perverse. Moses joins them both together, Deut. xxxii. 5; and so doth Solomon, speaking what wisdom shall deliver from, Prov. ii. 15; and it stands in opposition to them that walk uprightly, Prov. xxviii. 18. It may note, 1. Their hypocrisy, that pretend one thing and do another, that oppress under a pretence of justice. Or, 2. Their professed and owned irregularities and deviations from the rule of justice. Shall not know peace, i. e. shall not experience it; whosoever do as they do will be turbulent and perverse, as they are, and have as little peace within, or happiness without, as they have, chap. lvii. 21. They shall be poisoned by having converse with them, as in ver. 5, which the next words do intimate.

9 ¶ Therefore is judgment far from us, neither doth justice overtake us: g we wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness. g Jer. 8. 15.

Therefore is judgment far from us: this seems to be spoken in the person of those Jews that did partake of these sins, giving the reason by way of complaint of those evils that they groaned under. Justice: judgment, and so justice, is here taken for deliverance, Isa. i. 27: q. d. God doth not defend our right, nor revenge our wrong, nor deliver us, because of these outrages and acts of violence, injustice, and oppression that are committed among us; so that deliverance is called here judgment and justice by a metonymy of the efficient: q. d. If we had executed judgment and equity among one another, they would not now have been far from us. As works are sometimes put for the reward of works, Job vii. 2; Psal. cix. 20, so judgment and justice is put for the reward of judgment and justice. Or wicked men are in power and seats of judicature, that execute no judgment or justice in the behalf of the oppressed. We wait for light: how the Hebrews use light and darkness, see before on chap. lviii. 8, 10. But we walk in darkness; or, mist; we are in such a thick mist, that which way soever we look, we see no way out, no hope of deliverance; we are still in captivity, and like so to be, till we see judgment and justice executed, and then we may expect good days.

10 h We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes: we stumble at noon day as in the night; we are in desolate places as dead men. h Deut. 28. 29. Job 5. 14. Amos 8. 9.

We grope: as a blind man that hath no other eyes than his hands feels for the wall, from whence he expects either direction or a resting place to lean on; so they expect salvation as it were blindfold, not taking direction from the prophets, but hoping to obtain it by their cries and fasts, though they continued in their sins, and therefore may well be said to grope after it. See Deut. xxviii. 28, 29; Job xii. 25. And we grope as if we had no eyes; as if we were stark blind; and being here put for yea, thereby aggravating the misery in repeating the expression. We stumble at noon-day: this notes their exceeding blindness, as it must needs be with one that can discern no more at noon-day than if it were midnight, Job v. 14. We are as dead men: he compares their captivity to men dead without hope of recovery; their bonds render them as free among the dead, Psal. lxxxviii. 5. They can see the way, or get out of their captivity, no more than dead men can get out of their graves; thus a calamitous estate is set forth, Psal. xliv. 19, great calamity and despair oft going together: they are as men cast out, no more to be looked after. Compare Lam. iii. 6. All darkness is uncomfortable, but that of the grave terrible.

i ch. 38. 14. Ezek. 7. 16.

11 We roar all like bears, and [i]mourn sore like doves: we look for judgment, but there is none; for salvation, but it is far off from us.

We roar: this signifies the greatness of their anguish, that forced from them these loud outcries. And mourn: this notes some sense of their condition, that wrought in them these sorrowful lamentations; or it may relate to the condition that both sorts of people were in under their oppressing governors. It made the wicked roar like bears, and the godly mourn like doves. It is thus expressed because these properties are peculiar to these creatures. The bear, when robbed, goes into his den and roars; the dove, when absent from her mate, sits solitary and mourns. For salvation, but it is far off from us: see the exposition of this last part of the verse ver. 9.

12 For our transgressions are multiplied before thee, and our sins testify against us: for our transgressions are with us; and as for our iniquities, we know them;

Our transgressions: the word here signifies sins of a high nature, such as wherein there is much of man's will against light; rebellious sins. Are multiplied before thee: q. d. They admit of no excuse; for they are acted before thee, and multiplied against thee, whereby thou art justly provoked to deny us all help. Our sins testify; every sin that is charged upon is like so many witnesses produced to prove the guilt of our consciences; or, as the Hebrew word, do answer; and so some make it an elegant metaphorical allusion to the echo, which, as it returns the voice again, so those judgments they cry out of are but the meritorious repercussion of their sins. They had been cruel to others, neither had they executed judgment and justice, and here they suffer all kind of cruelties and indignities from the Chaldeans, as the true and just representation or echo of their own works: see a personal instance in Adoni-bezek, Judg. i. 6, 7. Our transgressions are with us, i. e. we lie under the guilt of them, they are a burden to us; God hath not yet forgiven them. As for our iniquities, we know them; we are convinced of them; our guilty consciences must own and acknowledge them, Psal. li. 3. It notes either their conviction or sorrow, or both. See Jer. xiv. 7. Or, we know what are those sins thou art so angry with us for; and this is favoured by the sequel, where they seem to particularize those sins in the following verses.

13 In transgressing and lying against the LORD, and departing away from our God, speaking oppression and revolt, conceiving and uttering [k]from the heart words of falsehood.

k Matt. 12. 34.

He now enumerates some of those particular sins they profess themselves to be convinced of, whereby he doth not mean the sins of some particular persons, or some slight sins, but a general defection and corruption of the whole body.

In transgressing: properly, we rebel against God, so the word is chap. i. 2, and have persisted in our rebellion. Lying; being true to none of their engagements, vows, and promises. Some make transgressing here and lying to be one and the same thing, inasmuch as in their transgressing of the law of God they did break their solemn engagement to God upon Mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 8; xxiv. 3, and elsewhere frequently, which is a downright lying against God; for wherein do we more lie to God than in a perfidious withdrawing from him? So that by transgressing here he doth mean not a breach of one or another of the laws of God, but their being as it were fugitives, that would be under no yoke. Departing, i. e. turning from God to idols. Speaking; as it were talking of little else one among another but how to oppress their neighbours, and apostatize from God. Conceiving and uttering, i. e. first contriving and forging in their heart false accusations to the ruin of their neighbour, and false worship to the dishonour of God, laying the contrivance so that it might be effectual; and then uttering it, or venting themselves one to another in their discourses, thereby encouraging each other in their perverse ways; see ver. 3; and whereas it is said from the heart, it notes a resoluteness in their wickedness, being a great deal worse than now and then to deal falsely upon some occasion or temptation. From the heart words of falsehood: they are called words of falsehood, both with reference to men, and so signify slanders and false accusations; as also to God, and so signify their dealing falsely with God, as an adulteress doth with her husband: hence idolaters are called the seed of falsehood, chap. lvii. 3—5; and it is said from the heart, to show that when they dealt with men in ways of fraud, it was from the heart, but when they spake with God, it was but from the lip.

14 And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter.

Judgment is turned away backward: he speaks here of the sentences and decrees in courts of judicature, which are carried quite contrary to right and justice. God denies you justice, as you have denied help to others. Justice standeth afar off: it notes the same thing with the former, to show that justice and judges are far asunder. Truth is fallen; a metaphor taken from a feeble person that wants support, without which he falls; thus truth hath none to support or patronize it: the same, only otherwise expressed, with ver. 16. Truth is cast upon the ground, and justice trampled under foot. In the street, i. e. in public. Equity cannot enter; no such thing will be admitted in their courts; all corrupt, so that all equity and justice is violently kept off by the authority of the great ones.

15 Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil ‖maketh himself a prey: and the LORD saw it, and †it displeased him that there was no judgment.

‖ Or, is accounted mad. † Heb. it was evil in his eyes.

Truth faileth: q. d. Truth is more than fallen, which he had said in the former verse; it faileth. For being only fallen it may recover itself again, but failing notes the loss of its very vitals; as being every where neglected, in court, in city, in country, in inferior as well as superior ranks, in the streets, in the gates, in the markets, in the fairs, in all public places of commerce, the condition much like that under the beast coming out of the earth, Rev. xiii. 11, &c. See Psal. x. 7, 8, &c. All things are amiss, neither judgment, nor justice, nor truth is to be found among us, but fraud and deceit; yet none troubled at it. He that departeth from evil, that separateth himself from evil things and persons, will not be as vile as others, maketh himself a prey; or, is accounted mad; is laughed at that talks of justice, so some. Josephus tells us that immediately before the destruction of Jerusalem, it was matter of scorn to be religious. Though there be no solid ground for nor need of that marginal reading, yet is it a truth. The translators reach the meaning by prey; the wicked, like wild beasts, endeavouring to devour such as are not as bad as themselves: where wickedness rules, innocency is oppressed: in bargaining, as buying and selling, they that are simple and innocent are outwitted by the crafty and fraudulent, as not willing, or rather daring, to oppose fraud with fraud, but to do all things in sincerity. The Lord saw it, i. e. took notice of it: it is spoken of God after the manner of men, as Gen. xi. 5; xviii. 21, and many other places. It dis- pleased him: q. d. If you would know why God is so angry with you, it is for such things as these; the Lord takes notice of it, and it is a great evil in his eye.

n Ps. 98. 1. ch. 63. 5.

16 ¶ [l]And he saw that there was no man, and [m]wondered that there was no intercessor: [n]therefore his arm brought salvation unto him; and his righteousness, it sustained him.

No man, viz. to intercede, which is supplied from the following words; or no man to help in such a case, to show himself and appear in such a corrupt state in the behalf of equity, as ver. 4; the like circumstances we have Ezek. xxii. 29, 30; or none fit to intercede. Wondered, Heb. iistomen, was amazed, astonished, as it were, not knowing what to do. This notes both God's solicitousness about their condition, and their hypocrisy, as if God took no notice of them, together with their dulness and blockishness, in not concerning themselves about it, especially considering they had been a people so well instructed, and yet under the guilt of such gross sins should be no more solicitous about pardon, which God would readily have granted, if any such could have been found, Jer. v. 1. Therefore; or, yet, as it is used, chap. vii. 14; li. 21. His arm brought salvation unto him: this may relate, 1. To the parties thus oppressed. Or, 2. To God, as that either, 1. He would do his work without help from any other, chap. li. 5. Or, 2. He would avenge himself, his own honour; thus the word is used 1 Sam. xxv. 26; and this may and seems to be the meaning of the next clause. Or, 3. He had made provision for the maintaining his own righteous cause and people's interest: this sense, that phrase, so like this, favours, chap. lxiii. 5, Salvation unto me. His righteousness, viz. his justice: q. d. Seeing there could be no justice found among them, he would avenge the innocent himself, which agrees with ver. 8, and is justified by chap. lxiii. 5, where speaking of the destruction of the Idumeans, you have the same words, only the word fury changed for righteousness. The literal meaning is, God's taking vengeance on the Chaldeans for the people's sake; the mystical is, Christ's making use of his own righteousness for the redemption of lost man, being destitute of all other.

o Wisd. 5. 18, 19. Eph. 6. 14, 17. 1 Thess. 5. 8.

17 [o]For he put on righteousness as a breastplate, and an helmet of salvation upon his head; and he put on the garments of vengeance for clothing, and was clad with zeal as a cloke.

He put on righteousness as a breastplate; God, resolving to appear as a man of war against Babylon, that did now oppress his people, puts on his arms, Heb. wrapped himself, and particularly his breastplate, which he calls righteousness, to show the justness of his cause, as also his faithfulness in making good his promises to his people. An helmet: as the breastplate is to defend the heart and vital parts, whereby God doth signify the innocency and justness of his cause, as well as his faithfulness; so the helmet is to defend the brain, the fountain of the animal spirits, and therefore by this piece of armour would have us know that he is invincible: as by the other, that he defends a just cause in his truth and faithfulness; so by this, that he cannot be disappointed in it by reason of his power and invincibleness. The garments of vengeance, or garments made of vengeance; as God is said to put on the former for their sakes whom he would preserve, so he puts on these for their sakes whom he will destroy, viz. his people's enemies, the Chaldeans, and other enemies of the Jews. Was clad with zeal; either, 1. Zeal to his own honour, which had been given to idols; or, 2. Zeal for his own people, who were now in distress; or, 3. Zeal and indignation against the Babylonians, who were such great oppressors of his people, which are the materials that his garment of vengeance and his cloak of zeal is made of. It may be trifling to follow the metaphor of garments too close: see of the phrase Judg. vi. 34, margin. The sum of all these expressions is this, to describe both the cause and effect together; the cause was righteousness and zeal in God, the effect salvation to his people, and vengeance on his enemies, as is evident from the next verse.

p ch. 63. 6. † Heb. recompences.

18 [p]According to their †deeds, accordingly he will repay, fury to his adversaries, recompence to his enemies; to the islands he will repay recompence.

Deeds, Heb. recompences or deserts, i. e. he will recompense his adversaries with those effects of his fury that they have deserved. Fury; a metonymy of the efficient, for the effects of his fury. Islands; or, islanders; a metonymy of the containing for the contained; either Mesopotamia, and other adjacent islands, encompassed by Tigris and Euphrates; or those remoter nations (for the Hebrews call nations remote from Judea islands, Gen. x. 5; chap. xli. 1. See on chap. xx. 6, and the reason of it) under the king of Babylon, that thought themselves secure.

q Ps. 113. 3. Mal. 1. 11.
r Rev. 12. 15. ‖ Or, put him to flight.

19 [q]So shall they fear the name of the LORD from the west, and his glory from the rising of the sun. When the enemy shall come in [r]like a flood, the Spirit of the LORD shall ‖lift up a standard against him.

Fear the name of the Lord, i. e. either worship the Lord; for the name of God is put for God himself, as hath been often showed, and fear is put for his worship; or make his name renowned. From the west, viz. the western part of the world. His glory, or the glorious God. From the rising of the sun, viz. the eastern parts of the world. The sum is, the whole world, either a synecdoche of the part for the whole, or if you divide the world through the poles, the one half will be east, and the other west, and so compriseth the whole world. It shall fear and worship God, and make his name renowned, laying aside their idolatries; whether you refer it to the deliverance of his people out of Babylon, when they shall hear how God hath executed vengeance on his enemies; or to the redemption by Christ, and his calling of the Gentiles, Mal. i. 11. When the enemy shall come in like a flood; either against the Babylonians, as some understand it, and so it is probably meant of Cyrus, who shall come like a violent flood, against whom there is no head to be made; him God would stir up against the Babylonians for the deliverance of the Jews. Or against his own people; and so it may have either, 1. A more particular respect to Jerusalem, when Sennacherib came up against it; which suits well with what God saith of him, chap. viii. 7, 8. Or, 2. More general, at what time soever the devil or his instruments shall make violent irruptions upon the church, Rev. xii. 15; for powerful enemies invading a country are oft compared to a river. See on chap. xviii. 2. It is an allusion to the overflowing of Euphrates, which by its violent inundations was wont to do much hurt and damage to the Babylonians. The Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him: and here again, if it be taken in the first sense, viz. against the Babylonians, then the meaning is, God himself shall as it were carry the standard in the midst of Cyrus's army, the Medes and Persians, and that with a great deal of fury, intimated here by the Spirit of the Lord; for spirit is often used among the Hebrews for the passions of the soul, as anger, wrath, fury, &c. Or, as a violent blast or gale of wind, shall help forward the violence of the torrent; and if so, then him, by an enallage of the number, which is frequent, is put for them. But if in either of the other two senses, viz. with particular respect to Sennacherib, then the Spirit of the Lord, as with a blast, only shall puff him away, which was made good, Isa. xxxvii. 7, 36, 37. Or with more general reference to the violence of enemies against the church; then the meaning is, God shall make known himself to take their part and defend them, Psal. xlviii. 3—5, and cause the enemies to give back, or put them to flight, as in the margin, Isa. xvii. 12—14, and that without power, but by his Spirit alone, as easy as by a puff of wind, Zech. iv. 6. Again, if you take this (as some learned men do) in a spiritual sense, then it notes the suddenness of the gospel's spreading itself by the Spirit in the ministry of the apostles and evangelists, bearing down like a flood all that opposes it, the Lord Jesus Christ being lifted up in it as a banner or ensign: but this sense, though true, seems to be more forced, and as it relates to temporal deliverances, more genuine and natural: however, the prophet being about to speak of the spiritual deliverances and state of the church by Christ, he seems to slide, as it were, into it by such plain allusions and types, being to speak of it more directly in the following chapters.

a Rom. 11. 26.

20 ¶ And [a]the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the LORD.

And, moreover, or to wit; and being here not so much copulative as expositive. The Redeemer: the word notes a redemption with power, viz. 1. Cyrus, the instrument for the efficient, viz. God the Redeemer, chap. xliii. 14; xlv. 13. Or, 2. Christ, of whom the apostle expounds it, Rom. xi. 26; the prophets usually concluding their promises of temporal deliverances with the promises of spiritual, especially such of which the temporal were evident types. To Zion, viz. Jerusalem, to which though Cyrus came not in person, yet his favours, and the good effects of his conquest over Babylon, reached it, setting free the citizens of Zion, as Christ also his church, which is often called by the name of Zion, and Jacob, and Israel, &c. In Jacob, viz. among the Jews, who were the children of Jacob; and he describes to whom of these, namely, to them, and none else, that turn from transgression; such only whose hearts God touched, and turned to righteousness; and so to come to Zion here by the prophet, and out of Zion by the apostle, is one and the same thing; see on Deut. xxxiii. 2; for the Hebrew lamed is not only an article of the dative case, but put often for mim, of or from, so that letsion is out of Zion; and for Christ to be given a Redeemer to Zion is the same thing as his coming to take iniquity from Jacob. And so the apostle doth by this expound that, taking an apostolical liberty not only to quote, but to expound this text; and so by laying them together, and making them one, would teach us that God must do for us what he requireth of us, Acts iii. 26: or else, which is the opinion of some, he takes the last clause from some other text, or texts, as Isa. iv. 4. I incline to the former, partly because there is no need of searching for any other text, and partly because, as the apostle quoteth it, it is agreeable to the LXX., which he frequently makes use of; and this the apostle improves as an allegory to prove that the Jews toward the end of the world shall be converted and saved, when the fulness of the Gentiles shall be brought in: q. d. As this people of old were delivered out of a dark and dolesome estate, when they seemed as it were extinct; so toward the end of the world the remnant of the Jews, that seem to be rejected, God will again bring home unto himself. Saith the Lord; or, thus it is decreed and determined by the Lord: the prophets are wont to set down these words as a sacred seal of certainty, security, or confirmation of such signal promises as this is of the Redeemer, like to that of the apostle, 1 Tim. i. 15.

t Heb. 8. 10. & 10. 16.

21 [t]As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the LORD; My spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the LORD, from henceforth and for ever.

This is my covenant, or what I have promised, and so am engaged to see fulfilled, viz. to them that turn from their iniquity; or rather, the promise of his word and Spirit to abide in his church, upon which account it is also that the Spirit is promised in the next words, by which is understood either the gift of prophecy, or the prophecy itself, given here to Isaiah, and so to the church: and being here, as in the foregoing verse, explicative, not copulative; unless it note that in an ordinary way the Spirit and the word go together wherever either of them are effectual, the Spirit impressing what the word expresses, John xiv. 16—18; and it is the spirit of Satan that is different from the word. My Spirit that is upon thee. See on Numb. xi. 17, 25, &c.; 2 Kings ii. 15. Which I have put in thy mouth; which thou hast uttered by virtue of my Spirit, it being the church's great treasure and happiness to have God present with his word. Shall not depart out of thy mouth, &c.: the sense is either, these words, and the fulfilling of them, shall be always talked of, wherever the mention of this deliverance shall come, as is said of Mary's ointment, Matt. xxvi. 13. Or rather, he seems to promise the perpetual presence of his word and Spirit with the prophets, apostles, and ministers, and teachers of the church to all succeeding ages thereof, and may have a special reference to the gospel, or new covenant in Christ. For ever, i. e. for a long, though yet a definitive, space of time, as it is often used.

CHAP. LX.

The glory and blessings of the new church after a short affliction.

ARISE, [a]‖ shine; for thy light is come, and [b]the glory of the LORD is risen upon thee.

a Eph. 5. 14. ‖ Or, be enlightened; for thy light cometh.
b Mal. 4. 2.

Arise; a word of encouragement accommodated to the Jewish or Hebrew style, wherein, as by lying down is described a servile and calamitous condition, chap. xlvii. 1; so by rising, and standing up, a recovery out of it into a free and prosperous one, as may be seen frequently. Rouse up; intimating her deliverance to be at hand. And here under a type, or hieroglyphical description of Jerusalem's restoration, is displayed the flourishing state of the Gentile church under the Messiah, and that in the greatness, for quality, and also the number of her proselytes; in the description whereof the evangelical prophet, whatever he doth in other parts of his prophecy, doth here most briskly sparkle forth in Divine eloquence. Shine; discover thyself as one breaking forth from a dark night; or, look out, as men do at sea, who use to look out sharp, to see what they can discover after a dark and stormy season; or, be enlightened with more knowledge; or, be thou filled with joy; a metaphorical metonymy of the efficient; as thou art about to change thy condition, change thy countenance; be cheerful in that light or salvation that is approaching. Thy light; either, 1. Thy flourishing and prosperous estate; an allusion to people's rising, when after a dark night the light breaks forth, they begin to rise. Or, 2. The causer of thy light, the effect for the efficient, viz. thy God, or Christ, because the fountain of all happiness, as the sun and moon are called lights, because they give light, Gen. i. 16. Thus Christ is called the true Light, John i. 9; and compare John viii. 12, with Eph. v. 14, and you will find these words quoted to that purpose. The glory of the Lord, i. e. the greatest glory, as the cedars of God, the mountains of God, &c.: compare Rev. xxi. 11: or, the glorious Lord, or the Lord of glory, or Christ, who is the glory of the Father, is come unto thee; he is at hand to make himself glorious in some wonderful work for thy salvation, either in his doctrine, or miracles, or work of redemption, that his glory may rest upon thee, suitable to the psalmist's prayer, Psal. lxxxv. 6, 7, 9. Is risen; like as when the sun spreads itself into every place, leaving none dark: thus it refers to the glorious gospel, called such a glorious light, 2 Cor. iv. 4.

2 For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the LORD shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.

The darkness; either affliction and misery, a known metaphor; or ignorance and idolatry; as also all kinds of errors and immoralities, with which all that are out of the church are smutted and polluted: compare Eph. iv. 18, 19. Shall cover the earth; either, 1. General, all the inhabitants of the earth, such as through ignorance reject the gospel. Or rather, 2. More particular, the Babylonians, by a synecdoche of the whole for a part, in that dismal condition being harassed by Cyrus, whereby the Jews were delivered; this being also a type of the deliverance of God's people by the Messiah, which this text principally intends. Gross darkness; an allusion to that Egyptian darkness, Exod. x. 21, &c.; palpable ignorance, the inlet and nursery to gross idolatry and all profaneness. The Lord, i. e. Christ, Mal. iv. 2; Luke i. 77—79. His glory shall be seen; shall be wonderfully conspicuous: as the Lord's arising answers to the darkness covering the earth, so the glory being seen answers to that gross darkness. The sense is, that whereas the time was, that the people of God were under great calamities, while their enemies were in ease and prosperity, now it shall be quite contrary; now these shall be in adversity, and those in prosperity, a great turn of providence; and withal implies that this light of grace is a peculiar to his people, in respect of which all other prosperity is but darkness and misery; as light was peculiar to Goshen, when darkness was in all the Egyptian houses, Exod. x. 23.

c ch. 49. 6, 23. Rev. 21. 24.

3 And the [c] Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.

The Gentiles shall come; either to congratulate thy deliverance, or to note the respect that should be shown them by other nations upon their deliverance; or rather, shall be allured by thy light to come to thee: as travellers in a dark night, and out of their way, when a light discovers itself, do make to it; so the doctrine of the gospel shall shine so bright, and be made so conspicuous by preaching and miracles, that they shall not only congratulate them, and wish them much joy, but rejoice and participate with them in their happiness, Rev. xxi. 24. A plain prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles, which promise was made to Christ, chap. xlix. 6. And, or yea, or even, kings, which was fulfilled under Cyrus, Darius, Alexander, and the Egyptian kings. Kings: to add to thy lustre, thou shalt not be honoured only by the conversion of mean persons, but even of honourable personages, embracing the Christian faith, and submitting themselves to Christ's sceptre and government; see chap. xlix. 23; to observe thy progress, and how thou shalt increase by degrees, as the sun in its ascending. In Christ's time there were twelve apostles, afterwards one hundred and twenty disciples, in a short time many thousands, then the church grew into congregations, and then spread to nations.

d ch. 49. 18.

4 [d] Lift up thine eyes round about, and see: all they gather themselves together,

e ch. 49. 20, 21, 22. & 66. 12.

[e] they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side.

Lift up thine eyes round about; or in a circle; into all parts of the earth: it seems to relate to the apostles and disciples, with their successors, carrying the gospel into all parts of the world. And in regard it would be as it were a thing incredible, he bids them lift up their eyes, as if they were to behold it in some vision, or upon some watch tower in Jerusalem: there is the like expression chap. xlix. 18. All they gather themselves together: he speaks more particularly, either of the Jews flocking from all parts to Jerusalem, when they shall hear of their return from Babylon, which may be true in the type; or especially, of the coming in of some of all nations to the gospel. Thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side; the same thing, only for elegancy' sake expressed in its parts; the sense respects both persons and place; as to persons, Thy sons and thy daughters also shall be brought unto thee tenderly, as it were in arms, Isa. xlix. 22, where by thy side, by equivalent expressions of arms, bosoms, and shoulders, is supplied with reference to them both, and may import they shall be brought unto the church of Christ as unto their mother; and it may be further observed, that where the masculine gender is joined with the feminine of the same species, it notes multitude and variety, as Eccles. ii. 8, men singers and women singers, i. e. all sorts and variety of vocal music: and as to place, Both thy sons and thy daughters that are not only near, but also afar off, shall come to thee, as we say, far and near, Acts ii. 39; or it is the same with what was said before, round about in all quarters of the world; from far noting the longitude, and ad latus, at or on thy side, the latitude, and even those that perhaps were before at enmity one with another.

f Rom. 11. 25. ‖ Or, noise of the sea shall be turned toward thee. ‖ Or, wealth. ver. 11. ch. 61. 6.

5 Then thou shalt see, and flow together, and thine heart shall fear, and be enlarged; because [f] the ‖ abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the ‖ forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee.

Then shalt thou see, viz. with a great deal of delight, the multitudes of thy children running to thee. Flow together; as when one river meeting with another and joining waters, run sweetly together, as one and the same river: this notes the abundance of their united joys and delights; or they shall flock together to behold such an amazing sight. Thine heart shall fear; as standing amazed to see such multitudes come in to the Lord Christ; see on chap. liv. 1, 2, &c.; as it were surprised with it, as those Acts ii. 7, or overwhelmed with the joyful sight, as Jacob was with the tidings of Joseph, Gen. xlv. 26, and those of the circumcision that were with Peter, Acts x. 45: such a mixture of fear and joy you have expressed Jer. xxxiii. 9; the sense is much the same with chap. xlix. 18. Be enlarged, both with joy and love; joy within at the coming in of the Gentiles, and this outwardly expressed in the enlargedness of love and charity towards them. Fear doth properly contract the heart, therefore this expression intimates it to be a fear mixed with such an affection as will dilate it. The abundance of the sea; either the islands of the sea, viz. the nations, as before, a metonymy of the subject, shall turn to thee, in religion or affection; they that formerly so much hated thee (they that live by the sea-coasts being usually noted for the worst of men) shall now love thee: or the wealth and traffic of those that trade by sea, the riches of the merchant; and so possibly the prophet may allude to Psal. lxxii. 10, for Tarshish is sometimes taken for the sea, as hath been before showed: see on 1 Kings x. 22. Shall be converted unto thee; thy traders shall not so much convert their riches to their own use as to thine. The forces; or, wealth; thou shalt not have only the wealth, but the strength of the nations, to stand by thee, which hath also an eye, as in the type, to that readiness and willingness that would be in the nations to help them out of Babylon.

g Gen. 25. 4. h Ps. 72. 10. i ch. 61. 6. Matt. 2. 11.

6 The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and [g] Ephah; all they from [h] Sheba shall come: they shall bring [i] gold and incense; and they shall shew forth the praises of the LORD.

The multitude of camels, i. e. the abundance of wealth and treasure that is brought upon camels; this being the creature the Eastern people used for carriage of their gold and spice, and other rich treasure, which are said to cover them; the like phrase with that Judg. vi. 5: or whereby is understood those people that did use to ride on camels, as the Arabians and the bordering countries; for by these and such-like figurative and borrowed expressions in several verses of this chapter is particularized several nations, and by them is implied the coming in of all nations unto Christ; and therefore they are brought in as presenting the chiefest commodities of their respective countries, so that we may be the better excused from speaking particularly to them in their respective places. The dromedaries; or, also or even the dromedaries, which are a lesser sort of camel, so called from their swiftness in running, to which they are the better enabled, because, as Pliny observes, they can endure thirst four days together: q. d. They shall make all the haste imaginable in bringing their riches to thee. Of Midian and Ephah: both these Midianites and Ephaites descended from Abraham by Keturah, Gen. xxv. 2, 4; they dwelt beyond Arabia; and camels are mentioned coming from hence, because of all places they were the most numerous here, Judg. vii. 12. Sheba: this Sheba descended from Cush, the son of cursed Ham, the son of Noah, Gen. x. 6, 7, from whom a certain country in Arabia Felix took its name, whose queen it was that came to visit Solomon, 1 Kings x. 1; and her bringing gifts might be a type of this, Solomon being a type of Christ, of which the wise men might be the first-fruits, Matt. ii. Shall bring gold and incense; the principal commodities with which this country abounded, and by which we are to understand whatever is precious; and frankincense is only peculiar to Arabia. They shall show forth the praises of the Lord; the motive drawing them thither being more for religion than trade.

k Gen. 25. 13.

7 All the flocks of [k] Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, the rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee: they shall come up with acceptance on mine altar, and [l]I will glorify the house of my glory.

l Hag. 2.7,9.

All the flocks of Kedar; the people whereof descended from Ishmael, and lived in Arabia Petrea, who were principally shepherds. The rams; q. d. nay, the chief of the flock, viz. for sacrifice; this Nebaioth being put for the people thereof, and sprang from Ishmael also, Gen. xxv. 13; rich as the other were in flocks, and inhabiting the same country. As the Sabeans offered the proper commodities of their country, as gold and spice; so these of theirs, viz. cattle, showing that each country, and so each person, should bring that wherewith they did most excel. Of Nebaioth: this shows that Abraham's children according to the flesh should also be brought in to the gospel: compare Mal. i. 11. They shall come up with acceptance; being offered, they shall not now, as heretofore, be rejected; and hereby they shall be distinguished from the profane oblations of the Gentiles, i. e. in the name of Christ, who is the true and only gospel Altar. The house of my glory, i. e. the temple, or my house; glory being put here by a metonymy of the adjunct for God himself, who is glorious. God shall become glorious by the multitude of sacrifices that shall be offered and accepted here, Psal. xxix. 9. And it is a type how glorious his New Testament spiritual worship shall be; this altar pointing at Christ, out of whom nothing is accepted, and that his church should be glorious, being built of living stones, 1 Pet. ii. 5.

8 Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?

In the 4th verse he spake to them as upon some high watch tower, whereby they might behold as in a circle all the parts of the world. Now espying from all parts, he brings them in calling out with admiration, Who are these? partly with reference to the number, or partly with reference to the persons; so the Heb. What are these? they being not Jews, but strangers, and so directly intimating the Gentiles flocking into the church, that come so swiftly, and in so great flocks: the same thing still. The former metaphor of clouds imports their number as well as their speed, Ezek. xxxviii. 9: thus abundance of witnesses is called a cloud of witnesses, Heb. xii. 1; the scope is to note the great confluence of people that should come into the church, that should be begotten by the apostles' doctrine; which the LXX. translation seems to point at, who render it as doves with their young ones unto me; and by flying may be noted their spiritual state, being elevated above the world, as the clouds above the earth, and doves when upon the wing.

9 [m]Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, [n]to bring thy sons from far, [o]their silver and their gold with them, [p]unto the name of the LORD thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, [q]because he hath glorified thee.

The isles: see chap. xli. 1; lix. 18. The ships, viz. to convey them to me. Of Tarshish, i. e. those that traffic by sea, as before; see chap. ii. 16; these lying most convenient for that employment. In naming this he implies by a synecdoche all that had commerce with other nations. First; preferring this before any other business they take in hand. This hath undergone the various senses of divers interpreters; such as are not futilous and vain, I conceive, may run into one of these two: either, 1. By reading it with a supplement of the note of similitude, which is frequent, as at first, or formerly, viz. as in the days of Solomon, who was a type of Christ, the matter here spoken of seeming to suit with it, 1 Kings x. 12: see 2 Chron. ix. 21, &c. Or rather, 2. By taking the word first, as the Hebrews mostly do, not so much with reference to time or order as to dignity; namely, they shall have the precedency and honour of bringing themselves and conducting others: this may be true also as to time, and so verified in the wise men coming the first to Christ when he was born, and as the first-fruits of the rest of the Gentiles. To bring thy sons, begotten by the word, from far, from the remotest parts: this may be understood with reference either to place or state; at how great a distance soever either in place or state, they shall come to Christ, who hath sons abroad in God's decree, not yet called, other sheep that he will bring into his fold, John x. 16. Their: their may refer either to the merchants bringing traffic with them, as ver. 6; or the Jews, as Israel came out of Egypt with all their treasure with them, and what others gave them, Ezra i. 4, as also the vessels that were sent back with them, Ezra i. 7. Unto the name, i. e. to the Lord himself, by a periphrasis; or to his temple, where his name was placed, the type of the church; compare 2 Sam. vii. 13, with 1 Chron. xvii. 12; or in the name of the Lord; or for his sake, who is the Holy One; the like metonymies having been formerly and frequently pointed at. He hath glorified thee; he will spread thy fame, and make thee honourable in the eyes of the world, and that especially in setting up the ministry of the gospel in the midst of thee. The name of God, and so also of Israel, were contemptible among the Gentiles before the coming of Christ and spreading of the gospel, but (as a consolation to his people) it is promised they shall both be honourable; and here God by an enallage of the person speaks of himself in the third person.

10 And [r]the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, [s]and their kings shall minister unto thee: for [t]in my wrath I smote thee, [u]but in my favour have I had mercy on thee.

u ch. 54. 7, 8.

The sons of strangers, viz. such as were not Israelites; and he puts sons of strangers by a usual Hebraism for strangers, properly termed alienigenæ: see chap. lvi. 3. This was literally fulfilled in repairing the walls of Jerusalem; he spake before of the temple, now of the city; and spiritually in the ministers of the gospel, who are the walls and bulwarks of the church by preaching and writing for her; and ecclesiastical history affords us many instances of kings and princes that were great benefactors to her, among whom Constantine did greatly excel, not caring what he bestowed on her, Valentinian and Theodosius, &c. Shall minister; shall administer all necessaries to thee: as they had been demolished by the Babylonians, so they were repaired by the favour of Cyrus, Darius Hystaspes, Artaxerxes, &c., all strangers, Ezra vi. 7, &c., or strangers becoming proselytes: see chap. lvi. 6. In my wrath I smote thee, but in my favour have I had mercy on thee; as I afflicted thee in my anger, so out of my compassions I will abundantly bless thee.

11 Therefore thy [x]gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the ‖forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought.

‖ Or, wealth. ver. 5.

Therefore; for that end and purpose; or by reason of the conflux of people that shall be continually flocking thither, arguing abundance of peace and security, and great enlargement of the church, and that the Christian church shall be always open to the godly, to receive all comers freely. The forces; or, wealth; either all wherein they excel, or all the prey taken in fight. May be brought, as it were, captives in chains, such as they took in war, being made victorious, so say some; but rather, such as were led and conducted in state.

12 [y]For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted.

y Zech. 14. 17, 19. Matt. 21. 44.

That will not serve thee; do offices of kindness; so is the word used, chap. xix. 23; or rather, that will not submit to Christ's sceptre. Shall perish; shall be no more sui juris, but subdued to thee; and as refusing subjection to Christ, shall perish everlastingly; as they all perished in the deluge that were not in the ark: they that should be saved were added to the church, Acts ii. 47; Rev. xxi. 24. Utterly wasted, Heb. wasting be wasted, viz. by the sword: accordingly we read of many victories in Josephus that the Jews obtained, and in the Book of the Maccabees, as a fulfilling of this prophecy; but this doth principally relate to the spiritual Jerusalem, and this seems to anticipate an objection, If the gates stand continually open, we shall be in danger of enemies. Not so, saith he, for they shall either serve thee or perish.

13 [z]The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make [a] the place of my feet glorious.

a See 1 Chr. 28. 2. Ps. 132. 7.

The glory of Lebanon; the box, the fir, the pine, and the cedar, on account whereof Lebanon grew so famous; a metonymy of the efficient: kings and great ones, the glory of the world, and also persons of a lower rank, the pines, firs, and box trees, as also the choicest persons, endued with the special gifts of the Holy Ghost, shall be the materials and members of Christ's church, as those also of a lower size and measure. We find the godly called trees, chap. lxi. 3. They shall have sweet communion together; the box shall not envy the pine, nor the pine despise the box, they shall worship the Lord together. To beautify: this is the reason and end why the glory of Lebanon is to be brought hither: by these trees understand the beauty and nobility of the church;* trees being both for building and for beautifying. The place of my sanctuary; the temple, wherein was the sanctuary; this being a type of the church, both actively, as that which his presence sanctifieth; and passively, as that wherein he is worshipped and sanctified. The place of my feet, viz. the ark, 1 Chron. xxviii. 2, described here by a periphrasis; so called, because, supposing God after the manner of man to sit as on a seat between the wings of the cherubims, his feet would rest upon the ark, and therefore called the mercy-seat, Exod. xxv. 17—20. The temple and Zion is called his rest, Psal. cxxxii. 13, 14, and all this is made good in the gospel church, 2 Cor. vi. 16.

14 The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall [b] bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the LORD, [c] The Zion of the Holy One of Israel.

b ch. 49. 23. Rev. 3. 9.

c Heb. 12. 22. Rev. 14. 1.

The sons; either their posterity, acknowledging their fathers' sins in afflicting thee; or themselves; for it is the manner of the Hebrews to put the sons of a thing for the thing itself. Bending; humbling themselves, as penitents; this being the sign of reverence and respect; and that either for love or fear submit to the yoke of Christ; they shall be like Christ, of a humble and meek spirit, and the degree of this is mentioned in the next clause. Bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet: this notes that great degree of submission, that even despisers and enemies shall yield to the church, prostrating themselves as humble suppliants; see chap. xlix. 23; or rather to Christ, the Head, King, and Husband of the church. They shall call thee, The city; they shall give her that honourable title, or acknowledge her to be so, and so called, both from the love that God had for her, and from the temple of God that was in her.

15 Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations.

Forsaken, both of God, i. e. as to outward appearance; and of her inhabitants, being upon the matter depopulated. Hated; either slighted and neglected, or suffering actual miseries and slaughters: thus was she dealt with, Lam. i. 2. No man went through thee; thy streets were left desolate. An eternal excellency: the abstract is put here for the concrete, whereby the Hebrews were wont to express the superlative degree; and in this happy estate we find the church, Zech. ii. per tot.; ix. 9, &c.; which refers to the coming of Christ; and it is said to be eternal, i. e. for a great while; it being an hyperbolical expression, frequent with the Hebrews, who express a long time by eternity. A joy of many generations; the church's happiness should be the rejoicing and comfort of succeeding generations; she would be the matter of their great rejoicing; a metonymy of the object.

16 Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, [d] and shalt suck the breast of kings: and thou shalt know that [e] I the LORD am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty one of Jacob.

e ch. 43. 3.

Thou shalt also suck, &c.; a metaphor taken from children sucking nourishment from the breast. The sense is, that the church should draw or drain the wealth of nations, and the riches and power of kings, and whatever is most excellent, and that it should come freely and affectionately, as milk flows from the breast of the mother; the same thing intended chap. xlix. 23, and in the foregoing verses. Thou shalt know, i. e. experience it; knowing is often put for an experimental knowing. The mighty one of Jacob; styled so either with reference to Jacob's person, he being the first that gave God this title, Gen. xlix. 24; or with reference to Jacob's posterity, viz. the Jews. These things will certainly be accomplished; for he is the mighty God, and so able; and the God of Jacob, so obliged by covenant and relation.

17 For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron: I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness.

For brass I will bring gold: here is the effect of the former promise, Thy poverty shall be turned to riches, all things shall be altered for the best; an allusion to the days of Solomon, when gold was as brass: thus, on the contrary, when they change for the worse in the state, it useth to be expressed by the like metaphors, chap. i. 21—23. I will also make thy officers peace, i. e. loving, meek, and peaceable; the abstract put for the concrete, as is usual, whether you understand it of under officers, they shall be officers of peace, or of governors, thou shalt have a peaceable government, as it was made good to them under Ezra, Nehemiah, Zorobabel, and such like. And thine exactors righteousness; most righteous, as before peace for peaceable. The church is not freed from taxes and payments, that is given by Christ and Peter unto Cæsar, but it shall be without oppression and grinding; no more than is necessary, and not exacted rigorously. Though all these were made good in their return out of Babylon, yet doth it more properly relate to the meliorating of the church under the gospel, wherein instead of carnal ceremonies, she had spiritual ordinances, which is the scope of the apostle, Heb. ix., and larger measures of the Holy Spirit, and should have such officers as would speak peace to the consciences, by discovering the complete and perfect righteousness of him who fulfilled all righteousness.

18 Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call [f] thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise.

f ch. 26. 1.

That this and what follows must necessarily be understood of the church triumphant (though there only it will be complete) I see no necessity, neither will obtrude my judgment, but leave it to the judicious, as being more proper in a comment: none to offer violence to this quiet state thou shalt attain to, either within thee, to oppress by injustice, rapine, or fraud, or without thee by hostile invasions; and this the prophet mentions as the effect of good officers in the former verse. Wasting nor destruction within thy borders; no havoc made among thy people. Thou shalt call thy walls Salvation; they shall be safe, and able to defend thee; thou shalt be as safe as salvation itself can make thee. When a thing is said in Scripture to be called so, it often signifies as much as to be so, chap. xxvi. 1; xlvii. 1; lxv. 7, and it intimates as much as that God will be salvation to his church: when they shall be without gates and walls, he will be their safety, and the matter of their praise; see Isa. xxvi. 1; and God's care of his church is the matter of that exhortation to praise him, Psal. cxlvii. And thy gates Praise; a double metonymy, viz. of the effect, as salvation will cause praise; and of the adjunct, as it is worthy of praise; so that within or upon thy gates and walls thou shalt sing praises.

h Zech. 2. 5. light, and [h] thy God thy glory.

The sun shall be no more thy light, &c.; these shall not be at all esteemed in comparison of the spiritual light of the church; and this is laid down as the assurance of the church's comfort, as the former was for her safety, so that God will not only be a shield, but a sun to her, Psal. lxxxiv. 11; not that they shall not have the sun and moon among them, but that the light of the godly, as such, should principally consist in what is spiritual. The Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light; Christ shall scatter all darkness and ignorance, enlightening thee with the doctrines of the gospel, and graces of his Spirit; and this shall be everlasting, not wax and wane, and suffer eclipses and settings, as the sun and moon do, but it shall be constant, without shadow of change; no night; which will be undoubtedly true of the church in heaven, whatever it will be, or how near soever it will come to it, here, which I presume will bear its analogy. Thy God thy glory; always ministering matter of thy glorying in him; or, thy interest in this God shall be great honour to thee; or else it is the same thing with the sentence immediately before in other words, that will make thee glorious, a metonymy of the efficient; thus he is said to give glory, Psal. lxxxiv. 11.

i See Amos 8. 9. 20 [i] Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the LORD shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.

Literally he means the Jews' mourning in Babylon, but especially the uninterrupted happiness of the church: the Hebrew here for ended signifies recompensed; their days of rejoicing shall abundantly recompense all their days of mourning.

k ch. 52. 1. Rev. 21. 27. l Ps. 37. 11, 22. Matt. 5. 5. m ch. 61. 3. Matt. 15. 13. John 15. 2. n ch. 29. 23. & 45. 11. Eph. 2. 10. 21 [k] Thy people also shall be all righteous: [l] they shall inherit the land for ever, [m] the branch of my planting, [n] the work of my hands, that I may be glorified.

Thy people also shall be all righteous, i. e. the greater part; the word in this use hath been shown frequently; or, altogether righteous, completely righteous. As this respects the Jews, the sense may be, they went into captivity wicked, but most of them being dead, and many of the survivors tarrying behind, they that are returned are said to be righteous, chap. i. 25—27; iv. 4: but principally as it respects the church, they shall be all saints, either by profession, as Paul calls them frequently saints by calling; or rather by an inherent righteousness, or perfectly by the imputed righteousness of Christ: see on chap. xxxv. 8. They shall inherit the land for ever, i. e. for a long time, as you have many instances; and this is spoken, lest that poor remnant should be afraid of being driven out again; but with reference to the church, that they should for ever be continued as God's peculiar people. The branch of my planting; put by apposition, viz. Thy people being of my planting, and so also the next clause, the work of my hands, and therefore cannot miscarry, being what I shall take delight in; and thus the children of God are said to be his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus, Eph. ii. 10. That I may be glorified; either that I may make them glorious in being thus planted, or myself glorious in thus planting them.

o Matt. 13. 31, 32. 22 [o] A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the LORD will hasten it in his time.

A little one shall become a thousand; though of very small beginning, and contemptible, yet shall greatly multiply. Though the church at first will be but a very few, yet will it increase into many thousands; this plant or seed will spring up to many. Some understand it, that many shall be converted, and brought into the church, by men of very few, low, and mean parts; however, these things seem to agree better to some state of the church here, than to the state of the church triumphant. A small one a strong nation: if this signify not the same with the other, as probably it may, the word strong signifying numerous, Joel i. 6, then we may understand it, that as the former respected their number, so this their strength. Will hasten it in his time, viz. in due time, the time that I have appointed: q. d. Let not this be doubted, because I have undertaken it, to whom nothing is difficult. When the time of the promise comes, he will make haste, it will be done speedily; or as soon as it begins it shall hasten apace, as it did in Peter's sermon, three thousand in one day, Acts ii., and five thousand in another, Acts iv., and so soon filled the whole world, and one Paul planted whole churches, as the people in Egypt increased from seventy persons to a vast multitude.

CHAP. LXI.

Christ and his blessed office, 1—3. The church's repair and increase, 4—6; and joy, 7—11.

THE [a] Spirit of the Lord GOD is upon me; because the LORD [b] hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me [c] to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim [d] liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound;

a ch. 11. 2. Luke 4. 18. John 1. 32. & 3. 34. b Ps. 45. 7. c Ps. 147. 3. ch. 57. 15. d ch. 42. 7. See Jer. 34. 8.

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, as it were, to accomplish that which is foretold and promised in the foregoing chapter, whereby this appears to be either the Holy Ghost; see on 1 Kings xviii. 12; or the Spirit of prophecy, i. e. the gift of prophecy; so we are often to understand by the Spirit, viz. the gifts; as the Spirit upon Samson, viz. the gift of valour, and courage, and strength: see 1 Cor. xii. 4, &c. Though the prophet may speak this of himself in person, yet that it is principally understood of Christ is evident, because he applieth this text unto himself, Luke iv. 18, being the first text he preached upon after his baptism, at which time the Holy Ghost did descend upon him in a visible shape, of which that John, who baptized him, was an ocular witness, John i. 32, 33, and so making good the truth of this prophecy; and it is said to rest upon and dwell in him, according as it is prophesied, chap. xi. 2; xlii. 1. Hath anointed me; set me apart, i. e. both capacitating him with gifts, and commissioning him with authority; and yet more, as it is applied to Christ, a power to make all effectual, from whence he hath also the name of Messiah among the Hebrews, and of Christ among the Greeks; nay, Christ alone among the prophets hath obtained this name, Psal. xlv. 7: and the prophet seems here to describe first who Christ is, and then what are his offices; this being the usual ceremony for the designing persons to the offices of prophets, priests, and kings, as hath been divers times shown, in all which respects it doth most eminently belong to Christ; so that the prophet doth hereby intimate both the final cause of his unction, viz. that he should execute these offices to which he was anointed; and the effect of it; that unction being upon him as the Head, it would flow from thence to his members, and so is an unction more peculiar to them; and in a more general way it hath respect unto all the faithful, 2 Cor. i. 21, 22; 1 John ii. 20, 27. To preach good tidings unto the meek: being meant of Christ, this relates to his prophetical office. Literally this points at the good news that Isaiah brought of Cyrus's being raised up to bring them out of Babylon, now they are become meek and humble; but if it be thus taken, it must be understood of his prophecies left behind him, for he died many years before the captivity. But they chiefly signify the good tidings of the gospel, that discovers Christ come in the flesh to redeem poor sinners from the captivity of sin and Satan, such as are meek, and humble, or afflicted, as the word signifies, because ordinary afflictions make men meek and humble; called also the poor, and our Saviour expresseth it by that word, Luke iv. 18. To these the gospel, these good tidings, are brought, Matt. xi. 5. Whether by poor you understand, 1. The Gentiles, void of all grace and salvation, or tenders of it, till now. Or, 2. Properly so called, indigent and needy persons, of which sort were the greatest number that followed Christ, of which the reason might be, because Christ preached the contempt of the world and riches, which the poor would therefore sooner embrace, and the rich be more likely to oppose. Or, 3. The poor in spirit. To bind up: now follow several particular expressions to describe the same thing that he mentioned before more generally: a metaphor taken from chirurgeons, that carefully and tenderly roll up a broken bone, Hos. vi. 1; and this relates to Christ's priestly office. The broken-hearted; the heart dejected and broken with sorrow. I am sent to ease their pains, whose consciences are wounded with a sense of God's wrath. To proclaim liberty to the captives; those captives in Babylon, but principally to Satan, that they shall be delivered; and this appertains to Christ's kingly office, whereby he proclaims liberty from the dominion and bondage of sin, and from the fear and terror of hell. See chap. xlii. 7. The opening of the prison to them that are bound, i. e. supposing them to be in chains and fetters, yet they should be delivered, though in the greatest bondage. The further explication of these things will be found upon Luke iv. 18, because there are some passages expressly mentioned here.

e See Lev. 25. 9. f ch. 34. 8. & 63. 4. & 66. 14. Mal. 4. 1, 3. 2 Thess. 1. 7, 8, 9. g ch. 57. 18. Matt. 5. 4.

2 e To proclaim the acceptable year of the LORD, and f the day of vengeance of our God; g to comfort all that mourn;

To proclaim; to declare, as it respects the Jews, that their liberty is at hand. The acceptable year, viz. the happy age of God's grace, either which will be grateful and welcome news to them, or acceptable to God, a time wherein it pleaseth him to favour them; but this must be understood of a further extent than to Babylon, and rather unto mankind in Jesus Christ, Gal. iv. 4; Tit. iii. 4, called a time of God's good-will in that angelical song, Luke ii. 14, on the account of those good tidings which the angel brought, ver. 10, 11; called so possibly from the arbitrariness and good pleasure of God, having no respect to any satisfaction from man. Year; not precisely, as if Christ preached but one year, the mistake of some ancients, mentioned and refuted by Irenæus, lib. 2. ch. 38; but for time indefinitely, and may include the whole time of preaching the gospel; see Rom. x. 15; which I take to be the meaning of that now, 2 Cor. vi. 2, and probably hath a pertinent allusion to the year of jubilee, which was a general release proclaimed by sound of trumpet, which relates also here to the word proclaiming, Lev. xxv. 10. The day of vengeance, viz. on Babylon, it being necessary, that where God will deliver his people, he should take vengeance on their enemies; but mystically and principally on the enemies of his church, and the spiritual ones chiefly, viz. Satan, sin, and death. That mourn; either by reason of their sufferings, or of their sins, Matt. xi. 28; or the miseries of Zion. See on chap. lvii. 18.

h Ps. 30. 11. i ch. 60. 21. k John 15. 8.

3 To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, h to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, i the planting of the LORD, k that he might be glorified.

To appoint; supply it, viz. comfort or joy; or else it may refer to those accusative cases following, beauty, oil, garments. In Zion; put by a metonymy for the Jews; q. d. among the Jews; and they for the church of God, or, according to the Hebrew, for Zion. Beauty for ashes: by ashes understand whatever is most proper for days of mourning, as sackcloth sprinkled with ashes; and these ashes, which were sprinkled on their heads, mixing themselves with their tears, would render them of a woeful aspect, which was wont to be the habit of mourners; as by beauty whatever may be beautiful or become times of rejoicing. The oil of joy for mourning: the sense is the same with the former; he calls it oil of joy, in allusion to those anointings they were wont to use in times of joy, Psal. civ. 15; and also the same with what follows, viz. gladness for heaviness; gladness brings forth praise to God: and it is called a garment in allusion to their festival ornaments, for they had garments appropriated to their conditions, some suitable to times of rejoicing, and some to times of mourning; or else an allusion to comely garments; and the spirit of heaviness, because heaviness doth oppress and debase the spirits. It is all but an elegant description of the same thing by a threefold antithesis. That they might be called; that is, that they may be so, as it is usually expressed, chap. lviii. 12; lx. 18; they shall be acknowledged so, ver. 9. Trees of righteousness: he ascribes righteousness to trees, understanding thereby persons by a metaphor, by which he means that they shall be firm, solid, and well-rooted, being by faith ingrafted into Christ, and bringing forth fruit suitable to the soil wherein they are planted, that had been as dry trees; see on Isa. lvi. 3; viz. the church, the vineyard of God, and the hand by which they are planted, as in the next words. The planting of the Lord; planted by the holy Lord, who being himself holy and righteous, would plant none but such; which notes also their soundness and stability, an allusion to that passage in Moses's song, Exod. xv. 17. That he might be glorified; either in that glory which he should confer upon them, or that glory he may expect and receive from them, that so it may be evident whose handiwork it was. See chap. lx. 21.

1 ch. 49. 8. & 58. 12. Ezek. 36. 33,—36.

4 ¶ And they shall l build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.

See chap. lviii. 12. As it is applied to gospel times, the meaning may be, that Gentilism, which was as a wilderness overgrown with briers and thorns, shall be cultivated; and those cities and provinces of the Gentiles that lay as it were waste, void of all true religion, shall now by the ministry of the word be edified in the true worship of God.

m Eph. 2. 12.

5 And m strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vinedressers.

Strangers, viz. Gentiles, such as are not of the natural race of the Jews, but Gentile converts. Or such as shall have no more than an outward profession, strangers to the true work of grace. Shall stand; ready to be at thy service; a like expression chap. xlviii. 13. Feed your flocks, the churches, with the word of God. The sons of the alien; the same with strangers, or their successors. Shall be your ploughmen and your vine-dressers: as the words describe the prosperous estate of the Jews, the meaning of them is, that they should be in such a flourishing and prosperous condition, that without their own labour they should have all inferior offices executed, either by slaves taken in war, or by persons hired for reward, which they should have riches and wealth enough to accomplish; but as they principally relate to the spiritual state of the church, so probably by strangers we may understand converted Gentiles, with their successors, meant by the sons of aliens, which should be ready to discharge all offices for the advantage of the church, feeding the flocks, viz. the churches of Christ, with the word of God, and should manage the whole work of God's spiritual husbandry therein: see 1 Cor. iii. 6—9. Or by strangers may be meant members of the church only by an outward profession, even they shall be some way serviceable to her in ordinary and inferior matters: The earth shall help the woman, Rev. xii. 16.

n Ex. 19. 6. ch. 60. 17. & 66. 21. 1 Pet. 2. 5, 9. Rev. 1. 6. & 5. 10. o ch. 60. 5, 11, 16.

6 n But ye shall be named the Priests of the LORD: men shall call you the Ministers of our God: o ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.

But ye shall be named the Priests; for your part, ye emphatically shall be as priests; either, 1. For maintenance; as the priests of old were plentifully provided for without their labour, so shall you by the labour of strangers. Or, 2. For countenance; you shall be every where as greatly valued as the priests were wont to be; you shall be esteemed as princes; for so the word is often used, the word priest being applied not only to the sacred function, but to one that was of great note among the people, and was supplied with all necessaries from others, without any labour of his own. Thus David's sons were called priests, or princes. Or rather, 3. For privilege; the whole body of them shall now be as peculiar and as near to God as the priests were formerly, and shall be a royal priesthood, 1 Pet. ii. 9. This is most certainly true of all the faithful under the gospel; hence they have also their spiritual sacrifices, Rom. xii. 1; Heb. xiii. 15, 16; 1 Pet. ii. 5. Ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles: it relates to the riches of the Gentiles, which did consist most in flocks and herds: or, what you eat shall be purchased by the riches of the Gentiles. Shall ye boast yourselves; you shall exalt yourselves, or be renowned by others. The LXX. render it, you shall be wonderful, or to admiration; or grow high by the access of that glory which they shall bring unto you, viz. in riches, parts, learning, chap. lx. 5, 11.

p ch. 40. 2. Zech. 9. 12.

7 ¶ [p]For your shame ye shall have double; and for confusion they shall rejoice in their portion: therefore in their land they shall possess the double: everlasting joy shall be unto them.

For your shame ye shall have double: see on chap. xl. 2. Supply honour. Though you have been little accounted of among your enemies, yet now you shall be greatly in their esteem, Zech. ix. 12; you shall have double damages. In their portion, viz. of honour that God will give them; the same thing with the former: or, in their inheritance which God shall restore to them; and that either, 1. For worth and value through God's blessing upon it. Or, 2. For room and space, and that possibly by reason of the few that will return to inhabit there, viz. only a tenth part, chap. vi. 13; or that which he shall give them out of their enemy's land. Therefore; or rather, because; being rendered as a reason of their rejoicing, because of the doubling of their portion, in which sense it is taken chap. xvi. 14. Everlasting joy; of long continuance here, and everlasting hereafter; or to be perpetually remembered on their anniversary festivals: though this had its accomplishment in their return from Babylon, yet was it most signally made good in that great change for the better which they should find in the gospel state, in the enlargement of Christ's kingdom and increase of his people, with whom they should ever rejoice together.

8 For [q]I the LORD love judgment, [r]I hate robbery for burnt offering; and I will direct their work in truth, [s]and I will make an everlasting covenant with them.

For I the Lord love judgment: q. d. They have suffered a great deal of hardship under their enemies, and I will do them right; for I love justice in myself, and in them that practise it. Or he gives a reason why he will recompense those strangers that did so freely minister to his people. I hate robbery; all things gotten by injustice, though it be for sacrifice. As God will not accept of that which cost nothing, so much less of that which is the effect of rapine and oppression; a foundation whereon most of our abbeys and monasteries were built, viz. to expiate some great crimes. And thus by making God a receiver, they did interpretatively make him a confederate. I will direct their work in truth; either, I will lead and guide them so that they shall do all things in sincerity; they shall do good works, and to good ends; they shall now love truth, and walk in truth, and serve him in spirit and truth: or, I will reward them: or, I will make their work stable and firm. Truth notes stability; see the notes on chap. xvi. 5; work being here put metonymically for the reward of work, proportionably to their work. I will make an everlasting covenant: q. d. Though you have broken covenant with me, and I have seemed to forsake you in giving you up to captivity; yet I will renew my ancient covenant made with your fathers, confirmed with the blood of Christ, and it shall be everlasting, never to be abrogated, viz. it shall be continued in the Gentiles that shall come in your rooms, that for breach of covenant were broken off.

9 And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them, [t]that they are the seed which the LORD hath blessed.

Their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, i. e. eminently; a promise of the increase of the church; such shall be their prosperity and multiplying, that they shall be known abroad by their great increase. Or else the meaning is, The church shall have a seed of the Gentiles, the borders of the church shall be enlarged; whereas it hath been confined as it were to one corner of the world, now it shall remain in one nation alone no more, but shall fill all the nations of the earth. They are the seed which the Lord hath blessed; they shall be known to be the seed of Abraham, partly by their holy conversation, and partly by their exceeding blessings, it being the seed that the Lord had so often promised to bless. There shall be such visible characters of God's love to them, and of God's grace in them.

u Hab. 3. 18. x Ps. 132. 9, 16. y ch. 49. 18. Rev. 21. 2. † Heb. decketh as a priest.

10 [u]I will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for [x]he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, [y]as a bridegroom †decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

I will greatly rejoice: this by a prosopopœia is spoken in the person of the church, wherein she doth thankfully acknowledge God's kindness to her in the forementioned promise, expressed here in the greatness of her affection, with reference both to her present deliverance from Babylon, and to the happiness of her gospel state. In the Lord; or, because of the Lord, or of the goodness of the Lord towards me; a usual form of gratulation, 1 Sam. ii. 1; Hab. iii. 18; Luke i. 47: or thus, I will not rejoice so much in my deliverance as in the Lord. My soul shall be joyful in my God: this clause is to the same purpose, save only she varies the expression: q. d. Yea, I do it with my whole soul. With the garments of salvation; with salvation as with a garment; so in the next with righteousness as with a robe. The meaning is, The salvation that God will work for me will render me as beautiful and considerable as they are that are clothed with the richest garments, as bridegrooms usually are, and brides with their jewels, or as venerable as kings in their princely robes; my sackcloth will now be turned into robes; or, I shall be compassed about with glory, as garments do compass the body. With the robe of righteousness, i. e. either with the fruits and effects of his love and many favours to the church, in which sense righteousness is taken, Psal. cxii. 3, 4, 9, compared with 2 Cor. ix. 9; chap. li. 6, 8; she should see the righteousness of God in fulfilling all these promises. Or that righteousness of Christ imputed to us, which we are said to put on, Rom. xiii. 14; or those graces imparted to us, and acted in a holy life.

x Ps. 72. 3. & 85. 11. a ch. 60. 18. & 62. 7.

11 For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord GOD will cause [x]righteousness and [a]praise to spring forth before all the nations.

As the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth: by this and the other metaphor he shows not only the reviving of the blessings of the church after they had been as it were dead in the winter of affliction, but the great plenty and abundance of blessings that should break forth; that which had been as a wilderness shall be as a paradise, pointing at the effects of his grace and bounty. So the Lord God will cause righteousness to spring forth, i. e. his great work of salvation shall break out and appear. And praise, as the natural product and fruit of it; his own glory being the principal end of making his righteousness to appear and manifest itself. Before all nations: these things will not be done in a corner, but will be eminently conspicuous in the sight of all the world, for which purpose those hymns penned by the godly will ever be famous in the churches of Christ to all ages, as of Moses, Hannah, Mary, Zacharias, Simeon, &c.

CHAP. LXII.

A prayer of the watchmen for the church in confidence of God's gracious designs and promises to it.

FOR Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth.

For Zion's sake, viz. the church's sake; Zion and Jerusalem being both put for the church, Heb. xii. 22. Will I not hold my peace: these seem to be the words of the prophet, strongly resolving, notwithstanding all difficulties, to solicit God for the church's happiness, and constantly excite to the belief of it by his preaching, though it were long ere it came, for Isaiah lived near two hundred years before this was accomplished; but his prophecy lived, and the tenor of it was continued by other prophets, whom the Lord stirred up to be still establishing his people till this salvation was wrought: his meaning might be, as long as he lived he would never hold his peace; or he might include himself among those who should be then alive, as Paul doth among the other saints, 1 Thess. iv. 17, we which are alive. Thus may we also include God speaking these words, as some would have it, viz. by the mouth of Isaiah, and other of his holy prophets, that never held their peace, till they saw this blessed state of the church appear. Until the righteousness: with reference to the Babylonians, understand it of the righteousness of God, who hath promised his people deliverance, and he must be righteous, and so understand salvation before; or rather the vindicating of his people's cause in the eyes of the nations by the ruin of the Babylonians; he will show that his people have a righteous cause: or with reference to the church, till Christ, who is her righteousness, shall appear and be manifested in the gospel. Go forth as brightness; clearing up their miserable and dark estate, which the church might be supposed to be in before Christ's coming, with much joy and happiness. As a lamp that burneth; and to that purpose is set up where it may be seen continually, to signify how eminently conspicuous this prosperous estate of the church should be among the nations, and as it may particularly relate to revealing of Christ unto the world.

a ch. 60. 3. 2 [a]And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: [b]and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the LORD shall name.

b See ver. 4, 12. ch. 65. 15.

Thy righteousness: see what is said in the foregoing verse: some read, thy Just One, viz. Jesus Christ. Kings, those that were wont to scorn thee, shall now be taken with the admiration of thy glory. Thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name; not the seed of Abraham, or the children of Israel, but of God; that whereas they were by nature the children of wrath, now by grace they shall be the children of God. Or, another name, as it is said of tongues. Compare Mark xvi. 17, with Acts ii. 4. Or, a name, the honour whereof shall make them famous, as Gen. xi. 4; they shall be called Christians. Or, the church shall be more renowned than ever, both in respect of her condition, and so called Hephzi-bah; and of her relation, and so called Beulah; and this new name the Lord gives them accordingly, ver. 4.

c Zech. 9. 16. 3 Thou shalt also be [c]a crown of glory in the hand of the LORD, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

A crown of glory; an expression to set forth the dignity of her state. In the hand of the Lord, i. e. either as placed upon thee by God's hand, that he will dispose of or dispense to thee; a usual form of speech in Scripture, as Hag. i. 1, by the hand of Haggai: so Mal. i. 1. Or, in the hand of God; he shall so manage thine honourable estate, that thou shalt be a crown, a credit, and honour to him; and so the word crown may be used for any kind of ornament, or matter of honour. Or, preserved and defended by God's hand; a phrase that expresseth it to be out of all danger, as to put a man's life in his hands is to expose it to dangers, Judg. xii. 3; 1 Sam. xix. 5; xxviii. 21. A royal diadem; the same thing with the former for substance. Or, the royal priesthood, whereof the apostle speaks, 1 Pet. ii. 9.

d Hos. 1. 10. 1 Pet. 2. 10. e ch. 49. 14. & 54. 6, 7. f ch. 54. 1. 4 [d]Thou shalt no more be termed [e]Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed [f]Desolate: but thou shalt be called ‖Hephzi-bah, and thy land ‖Beulah: for the LORD delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.

‖ That is, My delight is in her. ‖ That is, Married.

Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; as a woman forsaken by her husband, contemptible, and of low esteem. Neither shall thy land, i. e. the inhabitants of the land, a metonymy of the subject, any more be termed Desolate; though it be now almost void of inhabitants, it shall be impeopled again. Thou shalt be called, i. e. be, as you have frequently had such instances. Hephzi-bah; My delight is in her; a new name, agreeing with her new condition. Beulah; Married, agreeing to her new relation; she shall be as one well married, to the great improvement of her state, Jer. iii. 14; Hos. ii. 18—20. Thy land shall be married; thou shalt see the increase of thy children again in thy land, as the fruit of thy married condition, which by reason of thy being forsaken of thy husband were in a manner wasted and decayed; and this refers to the great enlargement of the church in the gospel days. Or rather, shall be possessed, as the word baal properly signifies; and so it answers to desolate, Thou shalt be no more desolate, but possessed; and this helps to solve a difficulty in the next verse, which otherwise may seem an impropriety, that the sons would marry the mother.

5 ¶ For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee: and †as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so [g]shall thy God rejoice over thee.

† Heb. with the joy of the bridegroom. g ch. 65. 19.

As a young man marrieth a virgin: this is delivered as a demonstration of what was said in the close of the 4th verse; and it is said young and virgin to note their suitableness; not old and young, but such as may delight each in other, signifying that mutual content that would be in all parties; thus it was at the first preaching of the gospel, Acts ii. 41—47. So shall thy sons marry thee. Whereas it is improbable that the Spirit of God should carry on so sacred a prophecy by a similitude so abhorrent to nature, the son should marry the mother, the scruple is easily satisfied by taking the word in its right signification, to possess, as in the foregoing verse, reading it thus, As a young man marrieth or possesseth a virgin, so shall thy land be inhabited or possessed by thy sons; they shall dwell with thee as a man dwells with his wife; and thus the LXX. And it is said sons, to distinguish them from strangers, by whom she should not any longer be inhabited, but by her own natives; and expressed by marrying, to signify not only their unity of affection in the evenness of their living, but of faith in their common profession, called the common faith, Tit. i. 4, according to which Paul calls Titus his son. As the bridegroom rejoiceth, taketh delight in her; so shall thy God, viz. Christ, God and man, in thee: see ver. 4. Christ is often called a bridegroom, and his church a bride, 2 Cor. xi. 2; Rev. xxi. 2, 9.

h Ezek. 3. 17. & 33. 7. ‖ Or, ye that are the LORD's remembrancers. 6 [h]I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ‖ye that make mention of the LORD, keep not silence,

Watchmen; understand by these, either, 1. Angels, as they are called, Dan. iv. 13, 23. Or, 2. Magistrates: see chap. lvi. 10. Or rather, 3. Ministers. When once the church shall be restored again, God will undertake for its safety and protection, partly by magistracy, and partly by ministry, whom he here by a metaphorical allegory calls watchmen; but the next words seem principally to intimate spiritual watchmen, thy spiritual safety, Heb. xiii. 17, and said to be upon the walls, as being thence able to espy dangers at the greater distance, Cant. i. 7. Which shall never hold their peace day nor night; there shall be a most vigilant and industrious ministry, their constancy being intimated by day and night, either in praying, or teaching, or warning, this being their office. That make mention, i. e. are his servants. To make mention of one is, according to the Hebrew phrase, to be servant to him of whom we make mention, chap. xxvi. 13. And here especially are meant his servants in ordinary, his remembrancers; either such as put God in mind of his promise, like such officers that great men have about them on purpose to mind them of the public affairs; or such as make the Lord to be remembered, putting his people in mind of him. Keep not silence: this seems to be the charge that he gives to his watchmen, that they never prove remiss or negligent.

† Heb. silence. [i] ch. 61. 11. Zeph. 3. 20.

7 And give him no †rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem [i]a praise in the earth.

Give him no rest; the same with the foregoing verse, and very acceptable to God, Luke xi. 8—10. Till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth, by sending the Messiah and those labourers into his vineyard, whereby the church may be established and settled on sure foundations, and so become matter of praise to God. All the nations may praise him for her, Psal. lxvii. 3, 4. Or, that she may be praised, and become renowned and famous in the eyes of the world: see chap. lx. 9; lxi. 9, 11.

8 The LORD hath sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength, †Surely I will no more [k]give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast laboured:

† Heb. If I give, &c. [k] Deut. 28. 31, &c. Jer. 5. 17.

This and the next verse are much to the same purpose, wherein the prophet, to encourage them to their industrious endeavours, tells them that the Lord had sworn to see to the prosperity of Jerusalem; and he names the hand, to signify his faithfulness, as the giving of our hand notes our fidelity; and arm, to signify his power, the arm of his strength, i. e. his strong arm: these being eminently to be engaged and put forth for his people, he swears by them. Surely I will no more give; or, If I give; a usual aposiopesis; an abrupt form of swearing, implying something of an imprecation, as great as can be expressed: q. d. Never account me faithful or almighty, if I accomplish not this. The sons of the stranger: see chap. lxi. 5. Shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast laboured: the meaning is, That meat, and drink, and all necessaries that thou hast laboured for, the Babylonians took away from thee; but now it shall be so no more, he will not give thee up to the will of thine enemies.

9 But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it together shall drink it [l]in the courts of my holiness.

[l] See Deut. 12. 12. & 14. 23, 26. & 16. 11, 14.

They that have gathered it, i. e. the wine mentioned in the former verse, that have brought it from their several vineyards, and laid it in their cellars, every one shall eat the fruit of his own labours; thou shalt not sow, and another reap, as formerly. And praise the Lord; they themselves shall praise him, viz. for his bounty and goodness; and others also that shall be partakers with them; God will be bountiful, and they shall be thankful. In the courts of my holiness; as I have commanded, Deut. xiv. 23; in my courts; holiness being put for God himself by a metonymy of the adjunct; alluding to those anniversary feasts and thank-offerings that were to be eaten in those places about the temple, and perhaps in special to that part which was appropriated to the priests, implying herein that they should be all priests; and, for aught I know, here may be an allusion to the great gospel feast, or thank-offering in the Lord's supper, these promises being not only applicable to, but do point at, the soul protections and the soul provisions of the church of Christ.

10 ¶ Go through, go through the gates; [m]prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; [n]lift up a standard for the people.

[m] ch. 40. 3. & 57. 14. [n] ch. 11. 12.

Go through, go through the gates; it is doubled by way of emphasis: q. d. Make haste to your own land; as if Cyrus should say, Get you out of captivity as soon as you will, chap. xlviii. 20. Or it may intimate an invitation issued out from them at Jerusalem to those that were scattered about in the captivity; therein possibly typifying the going of Christ's disciples into the various parts of the world, to bring those that were scattered up and down into the church. Or, Go meet the Gentiles, whom God purposeth to bring into the church, that by pure doctrine and your holy lives they may be the sooner won. Prepare ye the way; let them not have any obstructions in their way: he seems to call upon others to prepare the way for them; thus John was sent to prepare the way for Christ, as was prophesied, chap. xl. 3; accordingly it is ordered to be cast up: see chap. lvii. 14. Gather out the stones, that there be no stumbling-stone or offence in their way; or, q. d. Go to and fro, and remove every scandal that they may boggle at, Rom. xiv. 13. The former notes the certainty of their deliverance, harbingers sent before; this the speed of it, no impediment. Lift up a standard; an allusion to soldiers, that usually set up their standard, that the army may know whither to repair from all quarters; see chap. xlix. 22; and lifting of it up is, that it may be more visible; see chap. xi. 10—12; and this is Christ held forth in the preaching of the gospel. For the people; or, over the people.

11 Behold, the LORD hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, [o]Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his [p]reward is with him, and his ‖work before him.

[o] Zech. 9. 9. Matt. 21. 5. John 12. 15. [p] ch. 40. 10. Rev. 22. 12. ‖ Or, recompence.

The Lord hath proclaimed: this may be understood of Cyrus's proclamation, being thereunto directed by God: see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 22, &c. To the daughter of Zion, i. e. to Jerusalem, or the church; the sum of which proclamation is in the following words. Thy salvation cometh; either, 1. The time of it is come, chap. lvi. 1; lx. 1. Or rather, 2. The person that effects it, thy Saviour, by a metonymy of the efficient, Luke ii. 30. His work, i. e. the reward due to the work, the same thing with the former: see of this on chap. xl. 10. Or, his work is ready cut out for him which he is to do. Or, he will industriously set himself about the work that is before him, John iv. 34; and he is said to bring it with him, viz. the reward that he will give to his true worshippers; or, he brings eternal salvation with him, or the reward of redemption, which is the subject of the next chapter.

12 And they shall call them, The holy people, The redeemed of the LORD: and thou shalt be called, Sought out, A city [q]not forsaken.

[q] ver. 4.

They shall call them, The holy people; or, they shall be called, or they shall be, a peculiar, separate people, chap. iv. 3. Sought out; or, one found that was lost: see Ezek. xxxiv. 16. Or, sought out, or for, or one in great esteem, one that the Gentiles should seek to join themselves withal, so as to be one church with her. That reproach should be wiped off from her, that this is Zion whom no man seeketh after, Jer. xxx. 17. Or, cared for, viz. by God, whom he hath out of infinite love gathered to himself. A city not forsaken: see ver. 4. The meaning is, that thus they shall esteem the gospel church; she shall be accosted with such salutations as these are, the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord, &c.

CHAP. LXIII.

Christ's victory over his enemies, 1—6, and mercy towards his church; in judgment remembering mercy, 7—14. The church's prayer and complaint in faith, 15—19.

WHO is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? this that is †glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save.

† Heb. decked.

In these two verses either the prophet, as in some vision or ecstasy, is put probably upon inquiry by God himself, rather than by Christ, or Michael, or Judas Maccabæus, as some have thought; and the rather, because this place doth thus suit best with chap. lix. 16, 17. Or the church makes inquiry, and that with admiration, who it is that appears in such a habit or posture, ver. 1, and why, ver. 2. Edom; that is, the country of Idumea, where Esau dwelt, and Esau himself was sometimes called by this name, Gen. xxv. 30; and it is put synecdochically for all the enemies of the church, as Moab is, Isa. xxv. 10: see the notes. With dyed garments; or, stained: thus Christ is described, Rev. xix. 13, and so also ver. 3: LXX., the redness of garments. Bozrah; the capital city of Idumea; see further chap. xxxiv. 6, a parallel text; and Edom and Bozrah here are mentioned, either, 1. Not as relating to the places so called, but by way of allusion to the garments of this conqueror, Edom signifying red, and Bozrah a vintage; the one relating to his treading the winepress, and the other to the blood sprinkled upon his garments, ver. 3: the like manner of speaking you have Psal. cxx. 5. Or rather, 2. Put synecdochically for all the enemies of the church, among whom, though antichrist be not particularly designed, yet may be reckoned, being one of the chief of them; thus typifying Christ's victories over all the enemies of the church, Rev. xix. 19—21; and this is usual. Babylon is put for any detestable city, and Moab for all that are vile and abominable, Isa. xxv. 10; so Edom here for all God's enemies. And he mentions these Idumeans rather than the Chaldeans, who were the Jews' chief and particular enemies, 1. Partly to set forth the greatness of the enmity, being of old standing, and an inbred malignity, Gen. xxv. 22, 23, and irreconcilable, and perpetual, Amos i. 11, and particularly put forth when the Babylonians took Jerusalem, Psal. cxxxvii. 7. 2. Partly to comfort the Jews, both because God would take particular revenge upon Edom, as he had threatened, and prophesied by Obadiah, which is the substance of that whole prophecy; and also these being their near neighbours, God doth give them security, that they shall not only be delivered from the Chaldeans, those remoter enemies, but from the Idumeans also, whose vicinity and neighbourhood might have been troublesome to them. Glorious in his apparel; such as generals are wont to march before their armies in, or great conquerors, that walk in state and gallantry from their conquests. In the greatness of his strength; in or according to the majesty of his gait, being an indication of the greatness of his strength, and intimating that he hath thoroughly done his work, and fears no pursuing enemy, as the lion that keepeth his majestic gait without the fear of any other beast, Prov. xxx. 30: this notes the invincibleness of his power, and that it is his own strength, he needeth not the help of armies or other instruments, and thus he will travel through all the countries of his enemies. I that speak in righteousness: here the Lord Christ gives an answer, wherein he both asserts his fidelity, that he will faithfully perform what he hath promised, and that he will truly execute justice, Rev. xix. 11; and hereby also he distinguisheth himself from all idol gods, Isa. xlv. 19, 20. Mighty to save; I have power to accomplish salvation, as powerful as faithful, Isa. xix. 20.

2 Wherefore [a] art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the winefat?

[a] Rev. 19. 13.

Having inquired of the person, now he inquires the reason of his habit being thus sprinkled.

3 I have [b] trodden the winepress alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment.

[b] Lam. 1. 15. Rev. 14. 19, 20. & 19. 15.

I have trodden the winepress, i. e. I have destroyed the enemies of my people, I have crushed them as grapes are crushed; this being a usual metaphor to describe the utter destruction of a people, Psal. xliv. 5; Isa. xxv. 10; Rev. xiv. 19, 20; and the easiness of doing it, no more than to crush a bunch of grapes. Alone, to note his good-will and great power. The masters of vineyards are not willing to do this drudgery themselves; neither, if they would, could they be able to manage a whole vintage by themselves: but Christ was willing to undertake it, and able to go through it, without calling in the help of any other. Of the people there was none with me: 1. Not that he excludes the Jews, but the other nations that dwelt about them; therefore he saith of the people there was none with him; but God and his own people may be reckoned as one, Judg. v. 23. And though this be true of his passion, in which sense some would carry it, yet doth it not so well suit with the design; for Christ is described here not as a priest sacrificing, or shedding of his own blood, but as a king, conquering and shedding the blood of his and his church's enemies; hence it is said their blood, not his own, to show that it cannot fairly relate to his passion: besides Christ could expect no help in that, for he knew none could; but here he looked, and wondered that there was none, ver. 5. And though it may be said that he makes use of instruments both in his conquering of temporal enemies, and also spiritual, consider, 1. That here he speaks as a general, and therefore the whole victory is ascribed to him alone. 2. They do it not only by commission and authority derived from him, but by strength conveyed to them from him, without which they could do no more than a watch without a spring, or tool without the workman's strength and skill: and that Christ may make it appear they are no coadjutors that he needs, he makes them bring about such things as they never designed, as he speaks of the Assyrian; see on chap. x. 6, 7; and this is to be understood in like manner of Christ's conquest over spiritual enemies, 2 Cor. iv. 7. See Acts iii. 12, 13. And trample them in my fury: this latter expression is but an aggravating of the former; it implies a kind of insulting, an allusion to conquerors, who were wont to make the conquered to lie down, that others might trample on them, chap. li. 23. Shall be sprinkled; or, was sprinkled; as in treading of grapes the juice sparkles upon the clothes: q. d. in his answer, Thus came my garments to be sprinkled. I will stain; it shall not be, or it was not, only sprinkled, but perfectly stained, as it were rolled in blood, chap. ix. 5.

4 For the [c] day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come.

[c] ch. 34. 8. & 61. 2.

The day of vengeance, designed and purposed by me to take vengeance on the enemies of my church; or particularly the posterity of Esau. Day and year is all one, save the latter may have some respect to the length of their captivity. Is in mine heart; or, was in my heart; a desire of execution, Psal. xl. 8. I have meditated or studied revenge; being long forborne, hath wrought in me resolutions of revenge; therefore wonder not that I am so bloody: noting the severity of his proceedings against his enemies. My redeemed: the Jews have this title, because he redeemed them out of Egypt, and would also out of Babylon. Is come; is at hand: see Psal. cii. 13; chap. xxxiv. 8. The former part of the verse shows that Christ is still about his work, though he defer the execution till the fit time come; he may allude to the year of jubilee.

5 [d] And I looked, and [e] there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own [f] arm brought salvation unto me; and my fury, it upheld me.

[d] ch. 41. 28. & 59. 16. [e] John 16. 32. [f] Ps. 98. 1. ch. 59. 16.

There was none to help; not that he needed it, for help implies a defect of power, or wisdom, or wealth, or opportunity, &c.; but to see what men would do, in regard his people needed it; therefore the standing or not standing by his people is the same thing with standing or not standing by him, Judg. v. 23; Matt. xxv. 35, 40, 42, 45. None to uphold; a metaphor taken from a staff, that is a help to one that leans on it. My fury, or zeal, viz. against the adversaries of the church. God's arm notes his strength and power, and his zeal sets this power on work, chap. ix. 7; but see on chap. lix. 16, 17.

6 And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and [g] make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth.

[g] Rev. 16. 6.

Make them drunk: the Hebrew often expresseth calamities by a cup of wine, or strong drink, by which the distressed persons are made drunk, Psal. lxxv. 8; chap. li. 21, 22; they go as it were to and fro, not knowing what to do with themselves; and in special drunk with their own blood, chap. xlix. 26; Rev. xvi. 6. I will bring down their strength to the earth; whatever it is wherein their strength lies, their strong ones, or their strong places, or deep counsels, &c., he will bring to the very dust, to nothing; like drunken men, they shall fall to the ground, not being able to stand; the most miserable condition that men can fall into, Psal. xxxvi. 12.

7 ¶ I will mention the lovingkindnesses of the LORD, and the praises of the LORD, according to all that the LORD hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his lovingkindnesses.

Whether this ought to be the beginning of a new chapter, or no, is not material; but certainly here begins a new matter, which contains the prophet's prayer, either in his own name or the church's, to the end of chap. lxiv.; wherein he begins with mentioning the great kindnesses that God had shown the Jews, and that emphatically, setting it forth with the greatest advantages; and the more, either to aggravate their great unkindness, or to give them some hope of finding him the like again in their distresses, or by way of argument with God to show them mercy, because he had been so good to them.

8 For he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Saviour.

For he said, viz. within himself of old, when he made a covenant with our fathers, and brought them out of Egypt, Surely they are my people, in covenant; though they are unworthy of me, yet I cannot but look upon them as my people. Their enemies would persuade themselves, O they are not God's people, but cast-outs, that none cared for or looked after; but God will own them. Children that will not lie; that will keep my covenant; they will not deal falsely with me, that are under such obligations: or, I presume they will not; though they did go after their idols, and prove unfaithful to me in serving Baal and Ashteroth, &c., now I presume they will do so no more. Thus parents are apt tenderly to think of those children that they have been indulgent to, that they will not offer to abuse their kindness; thus God thinks the best of them. Or, he intimates here what they are obliged to do, though he knew they would do otherwise. Or, they will not degenerate after I have renewed them. So he was their Saviour, viz. on these hopes and on these conditions he undertook the charge of them, Exod. xix. 5, 6; Psal. lxxxi. 8—10; or, he; so he alone was their Saviour; when none to save, none to uphold, then he saved them; not Cyrus, Zerubbabel, Nehemiah, &c., but Christ himself.

9 [h] In all their affliction he was afflicted, [i] and the angel of his presence saved them: [k] in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and [l] he bare them, and carried them all the days of old.

h Judg. 10. 16. Zech. 2. 8. Acts 9. 4.
i Ex. 14. 19. & 23. 20, 21. & 33. 14.
Mal. 3. 1. Acts 12. 11.
k Deut. 7. 7, 8.
l Ex. 19. 4. Deut. 1. 31. & 32. 11, 12. ch. 46. 3, 4.

In all their affliction he was afflicted; because of all the afflictions they endured in Egypt: this notes the sympathy that is in Christ, he having the same Spirit in him that the church hath, and her Head and Father. Or, In all their afflictions no affliction; so the words may be read; their afflictions were rather favours than afflictions; all that befell them from the Red Sea through the wilderness; and then tzar is taken actively, he afflicted not: this may note his clemency, their sting was taken out; either way it may be read according to the different spelling of lo, whether by aleph or vau. The first seems the more genuine; they that list to drive this notion further may consult the Latin Synopsis, and the English Annotations. The angel of his presence; the same that conducted them through the wilderness, called an angel, Exod. xxxiii. 2, and his presence, ver. 14, and Jehovah, Exod. xiii. 21; so that it must be the Lord Jesus Christ, who appeared to Moses in the bush, as Stephen doth interpret it, Acts vii. 35, &c. Other angels are in his presence, but they were not always; he was ever so, therefore so called by way of eminency; hence the LXX. express it not a legate, or angel, but himself. Saved them from the house of bondage; brought them through the Red Sea, the wilderness, &c. Their Rock was Christ, 1 Cor. x. 4. In his love and in his pity: this shows the ground of his kindness; they were a stubborn, superstitious, idolatrous people, yet Christ's love and pity saved them for all that; it was because he loved them. He bare them, and carried them; he left them not to shift for themselves, but bare them as a father his child, or an eagle her young ones; he carried them in the arms of his power; see chap. xlvi. 4; and on the wings of his providence: see Deut. xxxii. 10—12; and the notes on Deut. i. 31. And he is said to do it of old, to remember his ancient kindness for many generations past; olam signifies an eternity, or a long time past, as well as to come; from the days of Abraham or Moses, from their bondage in Egypt, to the time of Isaiah; and it is used as an argument to move him to do so still; he will carry her till he bring her unto his Father.

10 ¶ But they [m] rebelled, and [n] vexed his holy Spirit: [o] therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them.

m Ex. 15. 24. Num. 14. 11. Ps. 78. 56. & 95. 9.
n Ps. 78. 40. Acts 7. 51. Eph. 4. 30.
o Ex. 23. 21.

They rebelled: many of their rebellions we read of in Exodus and Numbers in their travels. The Lord tells Moses that they had tempted him ten times, and therefore severely threatens them, Numb. xiv. 22, 23. There were three principal times of their rebellion: 1. In the wilderness, where they murmured for want of bread and water. 2. In Canaan, in not destroying, but only making tributary, such nations as God commanded them to destroy. 3. Before the Babylonian captivity, when they set themselves against the prophets, which Stephen chargeth upon them, Acts vii. 51, 52. Among which also we may reckon all their behaviours under their judges and their kings. Or we may understand it of their not answering God's end and expectation. Vexed his holy Spirit; Spirit of his holiness; they vexed him by their obstinacy against his will and mind, and walking contrary unto him: not that there are such passions in God, but it is spoken after the manner of men, as they are vexed when their will is crossed. He was turned to be their enemy; overthrew them not only in the wilderness, Psal. lxxviii. 31, 33, 59, 60, &c., sending among them fiery serpents, Numb. xxi. 6; but even in Canaan, stirring up against them adversaries, sometimes the Philistines, anon the Midianites, and then the Moabites, &c.

11 Then he remembered the days of old, Moses, and his people, saying, Where is he that [p] brought them up out of the sea with the ‖ shepherd of his flock? [q] where is he that put his holy Spirit within him?

p Ex. 14. 30. & 32. 11, 12. Num. 14. 13, 14, &c. Jer. 2. 6.
‖ Or, shepherds, as Ps. 77. 20.
q Num. 11. 17, 25. Neh. 9. 20. Dan. 4. 8. Hag. 2. 5.

Then, or yet, he remembered: this relates either, 1. To the people, and then he is collectively taken; and so it looks like the language of the people in Babylon, and must be read, he shall remember. Or, 2. It may look back to their condition in the wilderness; and thus they may properly say, Where is he? or that God that delivered his people of old, to do the like for us now? there is a like phrase used by Elisha, 2 Kings ii. 14. Or rather, 3. To God, as it were recollecting himself in a pathetical prosopopœia: q. d. Where is he? Where am I with my former bowels, that moved me to help them of old, that I would now turn to be their enemy? Or. Is my hand shortened that I cannot do it? And so in the following verses he gives a particular description how kind he had been to them formerly, the times mentioned ver. 9; and thus God seems to work upon himself. Moses and his people; or what great things he had done for them by Moses. Where is he that brought them up out of the sea? here God speaks of himself, as in the former clause, viz. that divided the sea for them, being one of the greatest miracles that ever God wrought for his people; it is therefore frequently mentioned by way of encouragement to them, when they are in sore troubles. The shepherd; or, shepherds; viz. Moses, that brought out his people as a shepherd doth his flock; he and Aaron are both joined, Psal. lxxvii. 20. His holy Spirit, i. e. those abilities and gifts wherewith God furnished Moses, as properly proceeding from the Spirit, he can do the like again, and qualify instruments for his work.

12 That led them by the right hand of Moses [r] with his glorious arm, [s] dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting name?

r Ex. 15. 6.
s Ex. 14. 21. Josh. 3. 16.

The right hand, viz. the strength and power that God gave to Moses, expressed by the right hand, that being usually esteemed the stronger, Psal. xvi. 8; xx. 6. Or, the rod in his right hand; by which understand also all the wonders that he did for them in Egypt. With his glorious arm; or that arm wherewith God gained to himself so much glory, being always present at the assistance of Moses, Deut. iv. 34; or Moses's right hand, led by God's glorious arm, as parents lead their children, that God may have all the glory in the using of his instruments. Dividing the water; the Red Sea, Exod. xiv. 21, and also Jordan, Josh. iii. 15, 16. To make himself an everlasting name; with reference both to his power and providence, as respecting either his aim and end in doing what he did, or the effect of it when it was done, it got him renown.

t Ps. 106. 9.

13 t That led them through the deep, as an horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble?

That led them through the deep; showing that God did not dry up shallow places, but the very depth of the sea, the very channel, which is the deepest part. Or, between those heaps of waters that stood up as a wall on each side of them, which might make it seem terrible, and therefore it is ascribed to their faith, Heb. xi. 29. As an horse in the wilderness; or, plain; for so wilderness is sometimes taken, and may be here meant, by comparing it to a valley in the next verse, viz. with as much safety as the horse runs up and down in the plain ground; or, with as much ease and tenderness as a horse led by the bridle; not as men affrighted, but soberly and orderly. That they should not stumble: this may be taken metaphorically, they came to no harm; or properly, that though the sea were but newly divided, yet it was so dried, that the mud, as also the unevenness of the ground, was not any occasion of their stumbling, or their sticking in it; probably so dried and smoothed by the wind that God sent as it were to prepare the way before them. See chap. xl. 3—5.

14 As a beast goeth down into the valley, the Spirit of the LORD caused him to rest: so didst thou lead thy people, u to make thyself a glorious name.

u 2 Sam. 7. 23.

As a beast goeth down into the valley; a laden beast goeth warily and gently down the hill: or, as a beast goeth down to the valley for grass, that being a mountainous country: or going down for going along; so the word is used Isa. xxxviii. 8; noting the evenness of their passage; or alluding to their going down from the shore into that great channel (as the coming out of it is called a going up, ver. 11) now made through the sea, orderly, and composedly, not like the Gadarenes' swine, through consternation, ready to break their necks for haste. The Spirit of the Lord, i. e. the Lord himself, caused him to rest; led them easily, that they should not be over-travelled, or fall down, or come to any injury through weariness; thus Jeremiah expresseth it, chap. xxxi. 2, and thus God gave them rest from their enemies, drowning of them in the sea, and in their safe conduct, that they could not annoy or disturb them, leading them till he found them a place for resting; the word for leading and resting being much of a like notion, Zech. x. 6; pointing at their several rests by the way, Numb. x. 33: or it may be read by way of interrogation, as all the foregoing words, and be the close of that inquiry, And where is the Spirit that caused them to rest? or he led them to Canaan, the place of their rest; so called Deut. xii. 9; Psal. xcv. 11. So didst thou lead: the prophet here by an apostrophe doth only repeat the words in the name of the Jews that he had spake before, ver. 12: q. d. As thou didst then, so mayst thou do again if thou pleasest.

15 ¶ x Look down from heaven, and behold y from the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory: where is thy zeal and thy strength, ‖ the sounding z of thy bowels and of thy mercies toward me? are they restrained?

Look down from heaven: now they, or the prophet, begin to pray, and expostulate with God, and to argue both from the goodness of his nature, and from the greatness of his works that he had done. God sees every where and every thing, but he is said to look down from heaven, because there is his throne, whereon he sits in great majesty and splendour. Behold is added to note that he would not only barely see and look on, but that he would behold with regard, and respect his poor people in captivity. The habitation of thy holiness; a description of heaven by a periphrasis, frequently used and explained, Deut. xxvi. 15. Where is thy zeal? what is become of that love which of old would not let thee suffer thy people to be wronged? chap. xxxvii. 32. Thy strength; that power of thine manifested in those valiant acts which thou didst put forth for thy people, Psal. cxlv. 11, 12; cl. 2: see Jer. xiv. 9. The sounding of thy bowels: by the sounding thereof may be understood those sympathizing sighs and compassionate groans that proceed from the bowels when they are affected, which being thought the subject of pity are often by a metonymy put for compassion, and hence proceed those rumblings of the bowels occasioned by strong passions called yearnings: it is spoken of God after the manner of men. Is all this shut up from me? Thou art naturally so compassionate, dost thou lay a restraint upon thyself, that thy bowels shall not move towards me? Are they restrained? or canst thou be thus straitened? Psal. lxxvii. 7—9; Isa. lxiv. 12; an expostulation, that agrees very well with the next verse, Doubtless, &c. How can this come to pass?

a Deut. 32. 6. 1 Chron. 29. 10. ch. 64. 8.
b Job 14. 21. Eccles. 9. 5.
‖ Or, our redeemer from everlasting is thy name.

16 a Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham b be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: thou, O LORD, art our father, ‖ our redeemer; thy name is from everlasting.

Doubtless thou art our Father: thus they urge God with that relation he stands in unto them, Mal. ii. 10; therefore we as thy children expect the bowels and compassions of a father. Though Abraham, he who was our father after the flesh, though he be dead, and so ignorant of our condition. And Israel; or, Jacob; who was also our father; and therefore a vain thing to call upon them; or if they were not dead, they could not help us out of our straits; or if they were alive, we are so much degenerate that they would not own us. Some say Abraham and Israel are here mentioned, and not Isaac, 1. Because the covenant was made more solemnly, and the promises more frequently renewed, with them, than with Isaac. 2. Because with Abraham the covenant was first made, and the whole seed of Israel was taken into it; but not so of Isaac. Or else, 3. Abraham and Israel being named Isaac is included. Thou art our Father, our Redeemer: this is urged as another argument for pity, and the more because their Father was their Redeemer, Deut. xxxii. 6. Thy name is from everlasting; or, Redeemer is thy name from everlasting; thou hast been our Redeemer of old.

17 ¶ O LORD, why hast thou c made us to err from thy ways, and d hardened our heart from thy fear? e Return for thy servants' sake, the tribes of thine inheritance.

Made us to err from thy ways, commandments. It is the language of the godly among them being troubled, and therefore complaining that so gracious a Father should leave them to such exigences. Made us to sin by withdrawing thy Spirit, and leaving us to ourselves, Psal. lxxxi. 12. It is not to be understood as if God did force them to it, but either letting loose their hearts, or by giving occasion to their hearts, being naturally too apt to apostatize by their severe afflictions: see this more cleared in the Latin Synopsis. Or, make us desperate, by leaving us so long under the oppression of the adversary, thereby casting off thy worship. From thy fear, or fear of thee, viz. as the object, Psal. v. 7; or, that we may not fear thee; as seeing, that they may not see, Psal. lxix. 23; or, thy service, chap. xxix. 13, so as to go after other gods. Return for thy servants' sake; either our godly forefathers, or particularly to Abraham, Isaac, &c., viz. for the sake of thy promises made to them; or rather, our sakes, that little remnant that are thy servants, be reconciled to us, Psal. xc. 13; for the next words seem to be put by apposition to the former. The tribes of thine inheritance; either, 1. The people themselves, which were divided into tribes; or, rather, 2. The land of Canaan, which God gave them as an inheritance, as appears by the next verse: q. d. What will thine enemies say if thou suffer us to perish, or thine inheritance to be destroyed. Or rods, meaning their rulers, see chap. xliii. 28, or heads of their tribes.

f Deut. 7. 6. & 26. 19. ch. 62. 12. Dan. 8. 24. g Ps. 74. 7.

18 f The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: g our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary.

The people of thy holiness; or, thy holy people, as being set apart for his servants; holiness being to be understood for a covenant separation from other people. But a little while, i. e. 1. Comparatively to the promise, which was for ever, though they had possessed it about one thousand four hundred years. Or, 2. It seeming to them so, as things, especially such as are desirable, seem when they are past, Job ix. 25, 26; Psal. xc. 4. Or, 3. They enjoyed but small spaces of time in quietness, so they had small enjoyment of it. Or, 4. It may respect the temple, which stood but four hundred years. Have trodden down thy sanctuary; the temple, called the sanctuary from the holiness of it; this our adversaries the Babylonians have trodden down, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 19; and this also implies their ruining of their whole ecclesiastical policy.

‖ Or, thy name was not called upon them. ch. 65. 1.

19 We are thine: thou never barest rule over them; ‖ they were not called by thy name.

We are thine; we continue so; we are in covenant, which they never were; and thus it is an argument they use with God to look upon them. Or, the word thine, being not in the text, some do otherwise interpret it; We are even in the same condition we were in at first, either in Egypt, or Ur of the Chaldees, before thou broughtest us into covenant, and are accordingly dealt with; we are become even as they, whom thou didst not bear rule over. Or, we are as if thou hadst never ruled over us of old. Thou never barest rule over them; not in that manner, or in that relation to them, that thou didst over us. They were not called by thy name; neither owned thee, nor owned by thee: this phrase implies a near relation in some circumstance or other, as wife, or servant, or child, &c., chap. iv. 1.

CHAP. LXIV.

The church's prayer continued, for the illustration of God's glory, 1—5: with a confession of their sins, and complaint of their afflictions, 6—12.

a Ps. 144. 5.

OH that thou wouldest a rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down, b Judg. 5. 5. Mic. 1. 4.

that b the mountains might flow down at thy presence,

Oh that thou wouldest rend the heavens: either the earnest desire of the prophet, or the Jews' strong wish, for the coming of the Messias: or rather, their cry to God for vengeance upon their adversaries, on consideration of the enemy's unmerciful dealing with them, and their insolent and opprobrious usage of God in his temple; partly expressing their haste and earnestness, and partly intimating that God would do it with violence and fury, implied in the word rending them, Psal. xviii. 6, 7, &c., spoken after the manner of man, who, if he were shut up, must have room made for his coming forth. This God is said to do, when he puts forth some signal manifestation of his power, Psal. cxliv. 5; a metaphor taken from men, that when they would resolutely and effectually help one in distress, break and fling open doors, and whatever may hinder coming to their relief. That the mountains might flow down; or melt, Psal. lxviii. 1, 2; xcvii. 5; Micah i. 3, 4; that all impediments might be removed out of the way: possibly an allusion to God's coming down upon Mount Sinai in those terrible flames of fire, Judg. v. 4, 5.

2 As when † the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil, to make thy name known to thine adversaries, that the nations may tremble at thy presence!

As when the melting fire burneth; come with such zeal for thy people, that the solid mountains may be no more before thy breath than metal that runs, or water that boils by the force of a vehement fire; and thus, for the most part, when God will take vengeance of his enemies, the Scripture expresseth him coming with fire. Thy name known; thy power known, that thine enemies and persecutors of thy church may know thy power, and that thy name may be dreaded among them; his name put for his power, Psal. cvi. 8. The nations; not the Babylonians only, but the nations round about.

c Ex. 34. 10. Judg. 5. 4, 5. Ps. 68. 8. Hab. 3. 3, 6.

3 When c thou didst terrible things which we looked not for, thou camest down, the mountains flowed down at thy presence.

When thou didst terrible things: this may relate to what he did among the Egyptians, though it be not recorded, and afterward in the wilderness. Which we looked not for, viz. our forefathers, of whose race we are; before we expected them; or such things as we could never expect. The mountains flowed down: q. d. Seeing thou hast made the mountains thus to melt, thou canst do the same again. This may allude either, 1. To those showers of rain that fell with that terrible thunder and lightning, and so ran violently down those mountains, and the adjacent, as is usual in such tempests. Or rather, 2. The running along of the fire upon the ground, Exod. ix. 23, 24. It is possible it may allude to those mountains that do cast forth sulphureous matter, running down into the valleys and sea, like melted streams of fire. And kings, princes, and potentates may also metaphorically be understood by these mountains.

d Ps. 31. 19. 1 Cor. 2. 9. ‖ Or, seen a God beside thee, which doeth so for him, &c.

4 For since the beginning of the world d men have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye ‖ seen, O God, beside thee, what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him.

Whereas there are but three ways whereby men ordinarily come to the knowledge of a thing, viz. by the ear, either our own hearing, or by hearsay; and by the eye; and by reason, which the apostle adds, where he makes use of this text, 1 Cor. ii. 9; two of them are mentioned here. Besides thee; with reference either to the gods that do them, never any other god could do like thee; or to things done, never any besides thee could do such things as were never seen or heard of. He refers to those terrible things mentioned in the former verse. It seems to be clear by comparing this with Deut. iv. 31—35. Not to be restrained to these, but to be applied to all the wonderful works that God at all times wrought for his people. And thus they are a plea with God, that they might well expect such things from him now, that had done such wonderful things for their fathers of old. That waiteth for him; the apostle hath it, that love him, 1 Cor. ii. 9, to show that none can wait on him that love him not; so all that love him will wait on him. This may be taken with reference both to the state of grace and glory, those incomprehensible things that are exhibited through Christ in the mysteries of the gospel, as well as the good things of this present life, which the prophet may here literally aim at; it being not unusual for the prophets in mentioning these temporal things to point at spiritual, especially being things that do so well suit with each other.

e Acts 10 35. f ch. 26. 8. g Mal. 3. 6.

5 Thou meetest him that rejoiceth e and worketh righteousness, f those that remember thee in thy ways: behold, thou art wroth; for we have sinned: g in those is continuance, and we shall be saved.

Thou meetest him; or, wast wont to meet him; or, thou preventest him, chap. lxv. 24; Psal. xxi. 2, 3, as the father the prodigal. That rejoiceth and worketh righteousness, viz. that rejoice to work righteousness; the same thing expressed by two words, by a figure called hendiadis. That remember thee in thy ways; an amplification of the former words: q. d. To walk in thy ways, whether of providence, precept, or counsel, by virtue of the covenant they have with thee. Thou art wroth; for we have sinned: or, greatly angry; for or because we have sinned, and provoked thee to wrath thereby, 1 Kings viii. 46. In those is continuance, i. e. to those that work righteousness; in for to. We shall be saved, viz. in so doing, in working righteousness. Or, as some, by way of interrogation; in those, i. e. in our sins, is continuance, and shall we be saved? Or, in those, viz. works of righteousness, in keeping in them, is our continuance and means to be saved. Or, thou continuest to show mercy, and or therefore we shall be saved. The meaning of the place is to comfort the godly, that though they may have provoked God by their sins, yet, looking upon the ways of God's former proceedings, (in which he still continues, being unchangeable,) they may find hopes of salvation; and this is that which is amplified in the three following verses.

6 But we are all as an unclean thing, and all [h]our righteousnesses are as filthy [i] rags; and we all do [i]fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away.

[h] Phil. 3. 9.
[i] Ps. 90. 5, 6.

We are all as an unclean thing: he alludes either to things unclean under the ceremonial law, wherein the leprosy was found, and was to be burnt, Lev. xiii. 55; or rather to persons unclean. They compare their present state with the former: q. d. Formerly there were some that feared thee, and walked uprightly before thee, and were in thy favour; but now we are all as one polluted mass, nothing of good left in us, by reason of a universal degeneracy, Isa. i. 4, 6. Our righteousnesses: this, according to the most commentators, refers either to the observances of the rites and ceremonies of the law, wherein they thought their righteousnesses did much consist; or to the best work and actions that can be performed by us; or to our natural, universal depravities: but the best interpreters, and such as aim at the peculiar sense of the place, refer it to the gross provocations that this people were guilty of, causing God to cast them out of their habitations; or else to their persons, i. e. the most righteous among us; and being plural, it raiseth it up to the highest degree, the Scripture frequently putting the abstract for the concrete, as wisdoms for the greatest wisdom, Prov. ix. 1, and many the like instances formerly given; so that the meaning is, the very best of us all are no better than the uncleanest things or persons; see Micah vii. 2—4; and the rather, because he lived about the time of Isaiah. As filthy rags; a cloth made up of patches, or such as come from a putrid sore, or defiled with the menstruous blood of a woman; the LXX., as a rag of one that sits down, possibly alluding to Rachel, Gen. xxxi. 34, 35, or whatever may be most filthy. As a leaf blown off the tree, and so withers. Taken us away; carried us away to Babylon from our habitations, as leaves hurried away by a boisterous wind; our iniquities have been the procuring cause.

7 And [k]there is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee: for thou hast hid thy face from us, and hast †consumed us, †because of our iniquities.

[k] Hos. 7. 7.
† Heb. by the hand; as Job 6. 4.

And there is none; or, yet there is none, i. e. few, Psal. xiv. 3; they are not to be discerned among the multitude. That calleth; such as call upon thee as they ought, as Jacob, and Moses, and David, &c. did, which often prevents the ruin of a state or kingdom: it points out the universal apostacy of the last times of the Jewish state, for which they were cut off. To take hold of thee; either to stay thee from departing from us; see Luke xxiv. 28, 29; or to fetch thee back, when departed, Jer. xii. 7; or it is an allegorical allusion to one struck down and still smitten, but never stirs to lay hold on the arm that smites him, chap. xxvii. 5; it notes their great slothfulness and carelessness, and some refer it to their lukewarmness and dead-heartedness, relying upon their privileges before they went into captivity, and so a great presage of their approaching judgments. For, or when; so the particle is used Job v. 21; Psal. lxxv. 2. Consumed us; or, melted us; our sins have kindled such a fire of thy wrath, that we are melted with it. Because of our iniquities, Heb. in the hands of our iniquities, i. e. either, in the place of our iniquities, the land wherein they were committed; or, into the hands of our iniquities, to be punished by them, and as it were consumed, or melted down, or our strength exhausted by them, as wax before the fire, Lev. xxvi. 39; Ezek. xxxiii. 10; or, as we translate it, our iniquities being the procuring cause of it.

8 [l]But now, O LORD, thou art our father; we are the clay, [m]and thou our potter; and we all are [n]the work of thy hand.

[l] 1 ch. 63. 16.
[m] ch. 29. 16. & 45. 9. Jer. 18. 6. Rom. 9. 20, 21.
[n] Eph. 2. 10.

But now, O Lord, thou art our Father; an argument or pathetical plea for pity; or, Notwithstanding all this, thou art our Father, both by creation and by adoption, therefore pity us thy children. We are the clay; a metonymy of the matter, clay for the vessels made of clay; or, we are clay, pointing at our original matter; or it may relate to their state, that God framed them in a body civil and ecclesiastical, out of a confused multitude; they plead at the same time their own frailty, why they would be pitied; and God's covenant interest in them, why he should pity them. We all are the work of thy hand; another argument of the same nature with the former, Psal. cxxxviii. 8; not only as men, but as a body of men made thy peculiar people.

9 ¶ Be not [o]wroth very sore, O LORD, neither remember iniquity for ever: behold, see, we beseech thee, [p]we are all thy people.

[o] Ps. 74. 1, 2. & 79. 8
[p] Ps. 79. 13.

Be not wroth very sore, O Lord, neither remember iniquity for ever, viz. Thou hast been angry with us a long time, be not so for ever; but deal with us as may best consist with a father's bowels. It hath reference both to quantity and time, that it might not be very great, nor of long durance. See on Psal. lxxix. 8. We are all thy people; thy peculiar people, chap. lxiii. 19. Another argument to back the former petition, Psal. xxviii. 9. Though we are very bad in ourselves, and very badly handled by our enemies, thou sufferest in our sufferings, for thou hast no people in covenant but us, and wilt thou not leave thyself a people in the world?

10 Thy holy cities are a wilderness, Zion is a wilderness, [q]Jerusalem a desolation.

[q] Ps. 79. 1.

Thy holy cities; either Zion and Jerusalem, being the cities they instance in: q. d. Thy holy cities, viz. Zion and Jerusalem: or rather, other cities also in the land of Judea besides those two; called holy, either, 1. Because they were built upon God's inheritance, chap. lxiii. 17. Or, 2. Because they were inhabited by the Jews, who were a holy people, Deut. vii. 6; Dan. xii. 7. Or, 3. Because God had his synagogues in them, Psal. lxxiv. 8. For all which reasons also they are called thy cities. A desolation; utterly waste; not only the ordinary cities, but even Jerusalem and Zion themselves; the one called the upper Jerusalem, or the city of David, because it was built upon Mount Zion; the other the lower city, because it lay under the hill of Zion in the valley: he particularizeth Zion and Jerusalem, though he had mentioned the other cities before, because the chiefest of the cities; it being usual, notwithstanding the mentioning of generals, in which all the particulars or individuals are included, to name the particular again; as, and from the hand of Saul, Psal. xviii., title.

11 [r]Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, is burned up with fire: and all [s]our pleasant things are laid waste.

[r] 2 Kings 25. 9. Ps. 74. 7. 2 Chron. 36. 19.

Our holy and our beautiful house; the temple, chap. lx. 7: q. d. Not only our cities, and our principal cities, but even our temple, which we thought sacred and inviolable, in which we have gloried, because it was thine, and our fathers', and ours, the place where thy holy service was performed, and thy glory and presence was manifested. Our fathers; not presuming to mention themselves, they had been so every way abominable, but their fathers. All our pleasant things; the king's palace, and the houses of the nobles, and other places of state and magnificence, 2 Kings xxv. 9; Lam. i. 7, 10; or, their synagogues; or, those stately pieces about the temple.

t ch. 42. 14. u Ps. 88. 1. 12 tWilt thou refrain thyself for these things, O LORD? uwilt thou hold thy peace, and afflict us very sore?

Wilt thou refrain thyself for these things, viz. that are done by the Babylonians? do none of these things move thee to take vengeance on them? Wilt thou hold thy peace; wilt thou be as one that regards not? Wilt thou be still, and suffer them? And afflict us very sore: see ver. 9: for these our sins, or for these our sufferings; shall we feel the smart of it, that have done no such things, but have been sufferers under the Babylonians? to which God answers in the next chapter.

CHAP. LXV.

The calling of the Gentiles, 1. The Jews, for their incredulity, idolatry, and hypocrisy, rejected, 2—7. A remnant shall be saved, 8—10. Judgments on the wicked, and blessings on the godly, 11—16. The flourishing and peaceable state of the new Jerusalem, 17—26.

a Rom. 9. 24, 25, 26, 30. & 10. 20. Eph. 2. 12, 13. I aAM sought of them that asked not for me: I am found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, behold me, unto b ch. 63. 19. a nation that bwas not called by my name.

That in the primary sense of this text it is a prophecy of the conversion of the Gentiles, upon the rejection of the Jews, for their contempt and crucifying of Christ, cannot be doubted by any who will not arrogate to themselves a greater ability to interpret the prophecies of the Old Testament than Paul had, who, Rom. x. 20, expressly so interpreteth it, and applieth it, which showeth the vanity of the Jews in their other interpretations of it.

I am sought: the word signifies properly a diligent inquiry in things relating to God, 2 Chron. xiv. 4; Psal. xxxiv. 4; Jer. xxxvii. 7. I am diligently inquired of by them that asked not for me; that in times before made no inquiry after me (as the Gentiles, who are said to be without God in the world, Eph. ii. 12). As seeking may more strictly relate to prayer, as the word is used, Isa. lv. 6, so this word translated asked may also be so taken, and is so, 1 Sam. i. 20; xxii. 13, but (possibly) it is better interpreted more generally. I am found of them that sought me not; yea, I was found of them before they sought me; those who formerly did not seek me now seek me; but they were found of me before they sought me; I prevented them by my grace, sending my Son to preach peace to those that were afar off, Eph. ii. 17. and my apostles to entreat them to be reconciled to God, 2 Cor. v. 20, and my Spirit to convince the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment, John xvi. 8. I said, Behold me, behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name; I invited whole nations by the preaching of my gospel to behold me; and I invited them with importunity, doubling my words upon them; and this I did unto a nation not called by my name, with whom I was not in covenant, and which did not profess any relation to me, which none of the Gentiles could pretend unto. The prophet speaks of a thing to come many years after as if it were a thing then done, to signify the certainty of it. God doth the same thing yet in every soul that is converted. But the text is manifestly to be interpreted of the conversion of the Gentiles.

c Rom. 10. 21. 2 cI have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts;

I have spread out my hands; applied to the Jews, Rom. x. 21, I have stretched out my hands; that is, I have used all probable means to reduce them, I have stretched out the hands of a passionate orator to persuade them, of a tender mother to protect and defend them, of a liberal benefactor to load them with my benefits; this I have done continually in the whole course of my providence with them, yet they are a rebellious people; Paul expounded it by, ἀπειθοῦντα καὶ ἀντιλέγοντα, a people not persuaded, not believing, but contradicting the will of God. Which walketh in a way that was not good; that term, is not good, often signifies what is very bad: see 1 Sam. ii. 24; Prov. xxiv. 23; xxviii. 21; Psal. xxxvi. 4. Though all sins be not equal, yet what is not good is bad. After their own thoughts: what is here called after their own thoughts, is elsewhere called a walking after the imaginations of their hearts; an ordinary phrase, by which sins (especially sins in the matter of the worship of God) are expressed. Eight times in the prophet Jeremiah sinning is thus expressed, Jer. iii. 17; vii. 24; ix. 14; xi. 8; xiii. 10; xvi. 12; xviii. 12; xxiii. 17; so also Deut. xxix. 19. Errors in matter of worship are ordinarily thus expressed, certainly to let us know that all worship must be according to God's revealed will, and of such errors this text seemeth, by what followeth, to speak; though indeed the reason of all sin is men's fondness of their own imaginations in opposition to God's revealed will, whence it is that self-denial is made the law of a discipleship to Christ.

d Deut. 32. 21. e ch. 1. 29. & 66. 17. See Lev. 17. 5. † Heb. upon bricks. 3 A people dthat provoketh me to anger continually to my face; ethat sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense †upon altars of brick;

A people that provoketh me to anger: that the Jews are the people here intended is without question; the prophet, speaking of the calling of the Gentiles upon their rejection, reckons up their sins which were the causes. For though their rejecting and crucifying of Christ was that sin which was the proximate cause; yet God did but visit on that generation their iniquities, and the iniquities of their fathers together, they having by that act filled up their measure. They had provoked God continually to anger to his face. To my face; either in his temple, the place where he used to manifest himself; or (considering what followeth) more probably the phrase signifieth their impudence, not taking notice of God's omnipresence and omniscience.

The particular provocations instanced in are deviations in the matter of Divine worship. Sacrificing in gardens is one thing instanced in; and burning incense on brick, or altars of brick, is another, Deut. xii. 13: there was a particular altar of gold appointed for incense, Exod. xl. 5. God commanded, Exod. xx. 24, 25, that his altars should be made of earth, or rough stone. This people transgressed both these laws; sacrificing in gardens, for which the prophet reflected on them, chap. i. 29, and again chap. lxvi. 17; whether in gardens consecrated to idols, or in such gardens as the heathens worshipped idols in, is not much material for us to know; and burning incense upon altars of brick, directly contrary to the Divine rule. Their worship was doubtless idolatrous, and these phrases signify committing idolatry; but the expressing that sin by these phrases lets us know that the doing contrary to the direction of the Divine rule in God's worship is a great part of the sinfulness of idolatry.

f Deut. 18. 11. g ch. 66. 17. See Lev. 11. 7. ‖ Or, pieces. 4 fWhich remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments, gwhich eat swine's flesh, and ‖broth of abominable things is in their vessels;

They remained among the graves, either there expecting revelations by dreams, or there consulting with devils, who were thought to delight in such places; or to practise necromancy, all which were forbidden, Deut. xviii. 11; chap. viii. 19. And they lodged in the monuments; the Hebrew word here used gives advantage to interpreters to vary in their senses. The word signifies only places kept or observed; some interpret it of idol temples; some of caves and dens, in which the heathens used to worship their idols; some of tombs or monuments for dead persons: besides the idolatry of the thing, there was in it a sinful imitation of the heathens, and a swerving from the rule which God had given them. They also ate swine's flesh, contrary to the Divine law, Lev. xi. 7; Deut. xiv. 8; and they endured in their vessels broth of abominable things; so the word is used, Judg. vi. 19, 20: others read it, parts or pieces of abominable things; that is, broth, or pieces of such flesh as was to the Jews unclean by the law, Lev. xi. Every creature of God is good, but God's prohibition had made the flesh of divers creatures an abominable thing to the Jews, they might not touch their flesh, Lev. xi. 28; but they, taking the measures of their duty from their appetite, or from their reason, concluding from natural principles, made no conscience of the positive law of God. This was their iniquity, which is further aggravated in the next verse.

h See Matt. 9. 11. Luke 5. 30. & 18. 11. Jude 19. ‖ Or, anger.

5 [h]Which say, Stand by thyself, come not near to me; for I am holier than thou. These are a smoke in my ‖ nose, a fire that burneth all the day.

Though they were so exceedingly guilty, yet they pretended to a singular sanctity, so as they would not suffer others to come near or touch them. The Samaritans are usually charged with this uncharitableness, and the use of this form of words; but as some do more excuse the Samaritans than the other Jews as to this rigour, so it may be questioned whether they were not at this time carried into captivity; and certain it is, that among the Jews there was such a generation from whom the Pharisees in our Saviour's time were derived, and this was the reason of their not eating, except they washed, when they came from the market, Mark vii. 4, lest peradventure they should there have touched some heathen, or some person who was legally unclean. Thus they esteemed themselves holier than others, though all their holiness lay in these rituals, and those too such as God never commanded. And indeed those who most exceed in such ritual holiness (lying merely in a separation from others, by the usage of some unwritten traditions) come most short in moral and true holiness; for of these God saith, These are a smoke in my nostrils, a fire that burneth all the day; that is, a continual provocation to me; as smoke is an offence to our noses, Prov. x. 26; which seemeth to be the sense rather than what some make, who make it a threatening of God's wrath smoking against them, which is sufficiently expressed in the following verses.

i Deut. 32. 34. Mal. 3. 16. k Ps. 50. 3. l Ps. 79. 12. Jer. 16. 18. Ezek. 11. 21.

6 Behold, [i]it is written before me: [k]I will not keep silence, [l]but will recompense, even recompense into their bosom,

They may think that I take no notice of these things, or if I take any notice, I will forget them, or at least not enter into judgment with them for them; but I as certainly know and will remember them, as princes or great men that record things in writing which they would not forget. And they shall know that I know and take notice of and will remember them; for I will not keep silence; I will not long neglect the punishment of them, though for a while I have delayed it, like a man who bites in his wrath, for some wise reasons which are known unto himself best, Psal. l. 21. Will recompense into their bosom; my punishment of them shall be severe and certain, but yet it shall be just, but a giving them what is their own, as they are obnoxious to my justice, Deut. vii. 10; Jer. xxxii. 18; like the payment of an ox for an ox, Exod. xxi. 36 (where the same word is used); they have been froward against me, and I will show myself froward against them, Psal. xviii. 26.

m Ex. 20. 5. n Ezek. 18. 6. o Ezek. 20. 27, 28.

7 Your iniquities, and [m]the iniquities of your fathers together, saith the LORD, [n]which have burned incense upon the mountains, [o]and blasphemed me upon the hills: therefore will I measure their former work into their bosom.

Yea, and when I reckon with them, I will punish them, not only for their personal sins, but for the sins of their parents, which they have testified their approbation of by continuing in them, and so made them their own, by an apish, sinful imitation. Which have burnt incense upon the mountains: their fathers burnt incense upon the mountains, there performing to idols that homage which I obliged them to pay unto me; or if any of them pretend it was to me, though before an image, yet it was in a way which I directed them not, who had appointed them the place where I would be worshipped. And blasphemed me upon the hills; so as that, instead of blessing, they indeed blasphemed me upon the hills; instead of speaking well, they spake ill of my name, worshipping me in a way which I had not appointed, and for which they only took their copy from idolaters. Therefore will I measure their former work into their bosom; therefore I will punish them, and that justly, as he that rendereth another his due by measure, giving measure for measure, and weight for weight; only they must expect that I should not only punish the late sins that they have committed of this nature, but the former sins of this kind which those in this nation, that went before this present generation, did commit, and the present age hath continued in the guilt of.

8 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not; for [p]a blessing is in it: so will I do for my servants' sakes, that I may not destroy them all.

p Joel 2. 14.

These words must be conceived as a gracious answer from God to the prophet, saying as Abraham, Gen. xviii. 23, 25, or as Moses, Exod. xxxii. 11—13, pleading God's covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Israel. To this God replieth that he intended no such severity, the unfaithfulness of men should not make his promise of no effect, Rom. iii. 3. His threatening should be made good upon the generality of this people, whose vine was of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah, Deut. xxxii. 32. But yet, as in a vineyard which is generally unfruitful, there may be some particular vine that brings forth fruit; or, as in a vine which is full of luxuriant branches that bring forth no fruit, there may be here and there a branch that bringeth forth fruit, and hath the hopes of new wine in the cluster; and as to such, the gardener bids his servant Destroy it not, or them not, for they are fruitful; there is in them what speaketh God's blessing, or what may be of use, and do us good. So (saith God) will I do for my servants' sake, that I may not destroy them all; either for the sake of my servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with whom I anciently made a covenant; or for my servant David's sake; or for the sake of such as are my elect at this time amongst them: see Jer. xxx. 11; Amos ix. 1.

q ver. 15, 22. Matt. 24. 22. Rom. 11. 5, 7.

9 And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains: and mine [q]elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there.

I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob; no seed beareth a proportion to the tree or plant that it produceth, but in comparison with that is very little; yet it is enough, through the virtue which the God of nature hath put into it, to preserve and uphold the species to which it doth relate. They are but a remnant (saith God) that shall be saved; see Rom. xi. 5; but a small number that shall come out of the captivity of Babylon: or, (which I rather choose,) they will be but a few that shall believe in my Son, yet they shall be enough for my promise to live in: this Paul argueth, Rom. xi. As the plant yet lives in the seed, when the root is plucked up, the leaves dropped off, and the stalk is burnt up; so the promise of God lives in a few, when the generality of the people for their sins are cast off and destroyed. The favour of God to men, and the promise of God to good men, lived in one family of Lot, when the five cities were burned, and in the one family of Noah, when the world was drowned; the favour and promise of God to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and David lived in the few that returned out of Babylon, and in those few who under the gospel received Christ, and believed in him, though the generality of them rejected the counsel of God against themselves. God further promiseth to bring out of Judah an inheritor of his mountains, which the most and best interpreters do interpret of the Jews' return out of the captivity of Babylon to Jerusalem, and into their own country, and particularly to worship God in his temple upon Mount Zion. My mountains: the country of Judea was a mountainous country, Ezek. xxxvi. 1, 8. The mountains were round about Jerusalem, Psal. cxxv. 2. See also Ezek. xxxviii. 8. God calls these mountains his mountains, because he had chosen that country before all others, and was once truly worshipped there. Mine elect signifieth here God's chosen ones, as in Psal. cvi. 23; chap. xlviii. 10. The term doth not always signify such as belong to the election of grace, but such as are dignified with some special favour. The whole nation of the Jews are called a chosen people. But possibly this promise is to be interpreted with relation to the sincerer part of that people, after that the others should be wasted by the captivity.

r ch. 33. 9. & 35. 2. s Josh. 7. 24, 26. Hos. 2. 15.

10 And [r]Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and [s]the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in, for my people that have sought me.

Sharon was a place of great fruitfulness for pastures. David's herds were kept there, 1 Chron. xxvii. 29. It was become like a wilderness, Isa. xxxiii. 9; God here promiseth that it should again be a place for the flocks. So Jer. xxxi. 27, God promiseth to sow again the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast. The valley of Achor had its name from the stoning of Achan there, Josh. vii. 26. It is thought to have been the first place the Jews set foot in when they had passed Jordan; hence, Hos. ii. 15, God promised to make it a door of hope; and here the text saith, the flocks shall lie down. But lest the wicked, idolatrous Jews should apply this promise to themselves, God limiteth it in the last words to the people that had sought him; that is, that had truly worshipped him, according to his own institution; and that the words have the force of such a limitation appeareth from what followeth.

11 ¶ But ye are they that forsake the LORD, that forget [t]my holy mountain, that prepare [u]a table for that ‖troop, and that furnish the drink offering unto that ‖number.

Do not you that are idolaters think that these promises belong to you, ye are they that forsake the Lord, that is, the way of the Lord; it is a phrase opposed to a walking with God. Our walking with God is in the way of his statutes, forsaking of him signifieth a declining or turning aside from that way. To forget God's holy mountain, signifies not to regard the true worship of God, or not to mind it. God calleth Zion his holy mountain, Joel iii. 17, and Jerusalem is called God's holy mountain. The hill of Zion is called the mountain of God's holiness, Psal. xlviii. 1; as the temple is called the beauty of holiness, Psal. xxix. 2; xcvi. 9: their not regarding the worship of God there, but worshipping God or idols in gardens, amongst the graves and monuments, is what is here called a forgetting his holy mountain. Isaiah prophesied in the time of Ahaz, chap. i. 1; of whom it is said, 2 Chron. xxviii. 23—25, that he sacrificed to the gods of Damascus, that he cut in pieces the vessels of the Lord's house, shut up the doors of the house of the Lord, and made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem; and in every several city of Judah he made high places to burn incense to other gods. See also more of his practices ver. 2—4 of that chap., and 2 Kings xvi. 3, 10—12. And there were certainly many of his people that joined with him in his worship, who are all here said to forget God's holy mountain, and to prepare a table for that troop; the idols of the ten tribes, 2 Kings xvi. 3, and of the Assyrians, 2 Chron. xxviii. 23, which were a troop, whereas the God of Israel was one God. And as God had altars, which are sometimes called a table, as in Ezek. xli. 22; so they prepared altars for the idols, as may be read in the aforementioned story of Ahaz; though by preparing a table here seems rather to be meant the feasts they made upon their sacrifices in their festival days, which was in imitation of what the true God had commanded his people, Deut. xvi. 14, 15. Idolaters also made feasts in honour to their idols, as appears from Judg. ix. 27; Ezek. xviii. 6, 11; Amos ii. 8; 1 Cor. viii. 10. Nor did they only feast in honour to the idols, but they furnished drink-offerings unto their number. God had appointed drink-offerings for his honour, and as a piece of homage to him, Exod. xxix. 40, 41; Lev. xxiii. 18, 37; these people had paid this homage to idols. See Jer. vii. 18; xix. 13; xxxii. 29. What we translate number in the Hebrew is la Meni, to Meni. Avenarius translates it Mercury, an idol whom merchants worshipped for good success in trading; others understand it of the host of heaven; others of the multitude of their idols; our translation reads it their number. The word coming from a Hebrew root, which signifieth to number, is no where else found in Scripture, which makes it hard too positively to assert the true meaning of it.

x 2 Chron. 36. 15, 16. Prov. 1. 24, &c. ch. 66. 4. Jer. 7. 13. Zech. 7. 7. Matt. 21. 34,—43.

12 Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: [x]because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not.

You have offended in number, worshipping a multitude, a troop of idols; there shall be a great number of you perish by the sword; or possibly the term number may refer to all in the next phrase, to let them know that none of them should escape. God saith he will number them, tell them out one by one to the sword. You shall all bow down to the slaughter; as you have bowed down to idols, Isa. xliv. 17, (which are mine enemies,) I will make you bow down to your enemy's swords. I called you by my prophets, Zech. vii. 7, 11, 12: you did not answer by doing the things which I by them spoke to you for; but not considering that I saw you, or if considering it, yet not regarding it, you impudently did evil; yea, you sinned deliberately, choosing sinful courses, the things which I hated, which are (here as often) expressed by a meiosis, and called the things in which God delighteth not. In matters of worship we ought to choose nothing wherein God delighteth not; and reason as well as Scripture will assure us he can delight in nothing of that nature which himself hath not directed. It is observable, that ruin is here threatened to this people, not for their immoralities or lewd lives, but for their errors and superstitions in Divine worship. Other sins provoke God to wrath, but those of this nature alone are enough to ruin souls and nations.

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed:

As there are a party amongst you who, instead of serving God, are the servants of men, in complying with idolatry and superstition; so I have some servants amongst you who have distinguished themselves by keeping close to my institutions from the rest of you, I will distinguish them from you in the dispensations of my providence: those that have eat bread at their idol feasts shall be hungry; my people, that would not do so, they shall have enough: those who have furnished a drink-offering to Meni, or that number of idols, shall want that drink by which they have so profaned my name; but my servants, from whose mouths you pulled the drink, because they would only furnish a drink-offering to me, they shall drink. My servants, whom now you make to mourn, and upon whom you pour shame and contempt, shall rejoice, and you shall be ashamed; you that now rejoice and shout, while my servants that cannot comply with you are afflicted, and by you made to mourn, you shall cry for sorrow, and howl through vexation, whilst my servants who keep close to my institutions shall sing for joy of heart. Those who in an hour of persecution for religion can have patience under the enemy's triumphs and rage, will find that the rod of the wicked shall not always rest upon the lot of the righteous.

14 Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and [y]shall howl for †vexation of spirit.

15 And ye shall leave your name [z]for a curse unto [a]my chosen: for the Lord GOD shall slay thee, and [b]call his servants by another name:

Your name shall rot, as Prov. x. 7, or only be used when men would curse others, saying, Let them be made like such persons. As the names of Leah and Rachel, Ruth iv. 11, and others of God's servants, were used in blessing; so your names shall only be used in cursing; or when men will curse themselves, they shall use your names as examples of the eminent wrath of God upon sinners. For you shall not perish by an ordinary hand, but by the hand of the Lord God; and as is the God, so is his justice, so is his strength; yea, God himself shall look upon your name as accursed, and not suffer his people to be called by it; they shall not be called Jews, but Christians, Acts xi. 26, the children of God, John i. 12. So detestable a sin is idolatry, that God will not suffer himself to be called by a name given to idols, how proper soever it be to express his perfection,

Hos. ii. 16, 17; nor yet suffer his own people to be called by a name by which idolaters are known.

c Ps. 72. 17. Jer. 4. 2.

16 c That he who blesseth himself in the earth shall bless himself in the God of truth; and d he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by the God of truth; because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes.

d Deut. 6. 13. Ps. 63. 11. ch. 19. 18. & 45. 23. Zeph. 1. 5.

I will bring it to pass, that over all the world, if any man bless himself, or bless another, it shall be in God Amen. So the Hebrew (we translate it the God of truth). Amen is a name given to Christ, Rev. iii. 14, These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness; being here applied to God, many think it makes a great proof of the Godhead of Christ, and judge the sense of this text to be, that under the times of the gospel men should not bless themselves (as before) in the names of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, but in the name of Christ, in the God Amen; nor is this an improbable sense. Others taking it more appellatively, by Elohim Amen, here understand that God who shows himself true and faithful in his promises. In like manner it is prophesied, that those that swear (by which some understand worship God, others, calling God to be a witness) should swear by the God of truth, or in the God of truth; either worshipping God in Christ the Amen, or calling the faithful God to attest their sincerity, or swearing by that God who hath approved his truth and faithfulness by saving and delivering his people. Because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes; because they shall see what God promised is fulfilled, the troubles of his people are at an end, and they are hid from God's eyes, that is, they are at an end.

e ch. 51. 16. & 66. 22. 2 Pet. 3. 13. Rev. 21. 1. + Heb. come upon the heart.

17 ¶ For, behold, I create e new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor † come into mind.

For, behold, I will tell you yet a more admirable thing, I am about wholly to alter and change the state not only of my people, who are now afflicted, restoring them to a more lightsome state, more free from trouble and afflictions; but I create new heavens and a new earth, bringing a new face upon the world, sending my Son to raise up a new church, and to institute a new worship, John iv. 21, 24, and giving out my Spirit in a more plentiful manner, Acts ii. 17, which new state shall abide until a new heaven and earth appear, in which shall dwell nothing but righteousness, 2 Pet. iii. 13; Rev. xxi. 1. And that state of things shall be such, and so glorious, as the former state of my people shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. Whether this new heavens and new earth here promised signifies such a state of the church wherein Christ shall personally reign upon earth over his saints, the wicked being destroyed, (as some have thought he shall for a thousand years,) I very much doubt, and do not see how from this and the parallel texts any such thing can be concluded.

18 But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.

You that are my people, though you cannot rejoice with that degree of joy that attendeth a present fruition of good; yet be glad, and rejoice with the rejoicing of hope, for the thing is certain what I am already doing. Nor let your present state, or the discouragements you have from seeming improbabilities, spoil your joy; for it is not a work to be produced in an ordinary course, or by an ordinary power, but by the power of me, who bring something out of nothing, or out of what hath no fittedness to such a production; and I will create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy: by Jerusalem here must be meant the church, as well under the gospel as under the law (because the gospel church is grafted into that olive); or else this prophecy must be understood as fulfilled in the coming of Christ, Luke ii. 10; or else it referreth to a more full calling of the Jews than we have yet seen or heard of.

19 And f I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the g voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

The nature of joy lying in the satisfaction and well-pleasedness of the soul in the obtaining of the thing it hath willed, agreeth unto God, and joy and rejoicing are applied to him, chap. lxii. 5, and in this text; so also Jer. xxxii. 41; Zeph. iii. 17. The voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying: such kind of promises are to be found chap. xxxv. 10; li. 11; Jer. xxxi. 12; Rev. xxi. 4, which must be understood either comparatively, they shall endure no such misery as formerly; or (if interpreted to a state in this life) as signifying only some long or eminent state of happiness; if as to another life, they may be taken strictly, as signifying perpetuity and perfection of joy and happiness.

20 There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; h but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.

h Eccles. 8. 12.

Whereas God hath made many promises of long life to the Jews, they should all be fulfilled to God's people among them, so as there should be rare abortions among them, Exod. xxiii. 26; few infants should be carried out to burial, nor but few that should not have filled up their years; those that were now children should die at a great age; yet none of these things should be of any advantage to wicked men, but if any of them should live to be a hundred years old, yet they should die accursed. This seemeth to be the plain sense. If any desire to read more opinions of these words, he may find enough in the English Annotations.

And not only a blessing to them, but also to their offspring. But what is here promised which wicked men do not ofttimes enjoy, and God's people ofttimes want? Answ. 1. Wicked men may have them for their good parents' sake, and good men may sometimes want them for evil parents' sake. 2. Bad men may have some of these things, but they cannot expect them; good men may at present want them, but they may expect them from the hand of God if they be good for them. 3. Bad men may have them in wrath; the blessing of God gives them to good men, and adds no sorrow therewith.

24 And it shall come to pass, that o before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.

o Ps. 32. 5. Dan. 9. 21.

God promised, chap. lviii. 9, to answer them when they called; here he promiseth to be so ready to answer, as to answer the words as soon as they should be formed in their hearts, before they should get them out of their lips, Psal. xxxii. 5; Dan. x. 12; yea, while they were speaking, Dan. ix. 20, 23; Acts x. 44. Nor doth God say only they shall have the things they would have, (for so wicked men may sometimes have from the bountiful hand of Divine Providence,) but they shall have them as an answer or return unto their prayers.

[q] Gen. 3. 14. the bullock: [q] and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the LORD.

This verse containeth a promise much like that chap. xi. 6, 9, and relates to the ceasing of persecution. The people of God for their whiteness and innocency are often compared to lambs and sheep, wicked men to wolves and lions, for their antipathy to the seed of the woman: God here promiseth to take off the fierceness of the spirits of his people's enemies, so that they shall live quietly and peaceably together. Wicked men are compared to serpents, Micah vii. 17, compared with Psal. lxxii. 9; God promiseth a time of tranquillity to his church under the metaphor of serpents eating the dust, their proper meat, Gen. iii. 14, instead of flying upon men: it signifies such a time when wicked men should mind their proper business, and not make it their work to eat up the people of God like bread. For the last phrase, see chap. xi. 9, what is there noted. But will some say, When shall these things be? The Scripture gives us no record of any such period of time yet past. And it is very probable that this is a promise yet to be fulfilled, and it is not for us to know the times and seasons, but in the mean time to let our faith and patience be seen. In the mean time, we may learn that it is God's work to restrain the wolves and serpents of the world, who would else be always doing what they are sometimes doing; and it is a sad sign that God is not yet at peace with that people, where we see wolves devouring lambs, and serpents destroying men instead of licking up dust, nor well-pleased with that part of his holy mountain where there is nothing but hurting and destroying, biting and devouring one another. When God shall be at peace with a people, these things shall not be found amongst them.

The heaven is my throne; the heaven, that is, the highest heavens, are the place where I most manifest my power and glory, and show myself in my majesty. So Psal. xi. 4; ciii. 19; Matt. v. 34. Hence we are taught to pray, Our Father which art in heaven. And the earth is my footstool, or a place wherein I set my feet, Matt. v. 35. Where is the house that ye build unto me? can there be a house builded that will contain me, who can encompass the heavens and the earth with a house? Where is the place of my rest? or, where is the place wherein I can be said to rest in a proper sense? The ark is indeed God's footstool, and the place of his rest, in a figurative sense, because there God manifested himself, though in degrees much beneath the manifestations of himself in heaven; but properly, God hath no certain place of rest.

For all those things hath my hand made; the heavens and the earth are the work of my hands, Gen. i. 1; John i. 3. (Some expound it of the temple and the sacrifices.) All those things have been; they were not only made by God, but subsisted and were kept in being by him. These things were not therefore valued by him, nor could he have any need of or respect to any house, which is but a very little part of the earth; he having made the heavens and the earth, had all them at his command; and how could he need a temple, or wherein could he be advantaged from it? But God will look with a respect, and with a favourable eye, to him that hath a broken and contrite spirit, whose heart is subdued to the will of God, and who is poor and low in his own eyes, Matt. v. 3; Luke vi. 20, and who trembleth when he heareth God's threatening words, nor ever heareth any revelation of the Divine will without a just reverence.

Yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations.

‖ Or, kid.

† Heb. maketh a memorial of, Lev. 2. 2.

Solomon, Prov. xv. 8, gives us a short but full commentary on the whole verse, The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord. He that killeth an ox, that is, for sacrifice, as it is expounded by the next words, he that sacrificeth a lamb. The comparisons show God's detestation of ceremonial performances from men of wicked hearts and lives. He that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol: from hence it is plain that the prophet is not here reflecting upon idolatrous worship, but formal worship; for to say, he that burneth incense to an idol is as he that blesseth an idol, is but to say, he that blesseth an idol blesseth an idol; but upon those who in a formality worshipped the true God, and by acts which he had appointed, such were offering sacrifices, oblation, incense. God by the prophet declares that these men's services were no more acceptable to him than murder, idolatry, or the most horrid profanation of his name. Such would cutting off a dog's neck for sacrifice have been, or offering swine's blood; so little do ritual performances, though instituted by God himself, please God, when they are but mere formalities, as they always are when those that perform them live as they list, lewd and loose lives, and think to save themselves by their prayers, like the whore, Prov. vii. 14, 15; not only sinning by human frailty, but taking pleasure in their sins, Prov. xv. 26. To offer a sacrifice with a heart resolved (when it is offered) to go on in sinful courses, is to offer it with an evil mind. This is a dreadful text to those persons who will murder, and steal, and swear, and curse, and lie, and commit adultery, and then come and stand before God in his house, which is called by his name, that is, come to serve him in acts of worship, Lev. x. 3; see Psal. l. 16—18; Isa. i. 11—14; Jer. vii. 9, 10; Matt. vii. 21—23; John iv. 24; 1 Tim. iv. 8.

‖ Or, devices.

[g] Prov. 1. 24. ch. 65. 12. Jer. 7. 13. 4 I also will choose their ‖ delusions, and will bring their fears upon them; [g] because when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear: but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not.

They had made their choice, they chose not the ways of God, but their own ways, that which God delighted not in, as in the latter part of this verse; therefore (saith God) I will also choose their delusions, or illusions, or devices. Montanus translates it, ad inventionibus; it is a noun derived from a word which signifies to speak childishly or corruptly; the word in this form is only used in this text, and in 1 Sam. xxv. 3; it signifies studies, or works, Psal. xii. 4; Isa. iii. 4; Hos. iv. 9. It is an ordinary thing for God thus generally to declare his justice against men, that he will deal with sinners as they deal with him; so Psal. xviii. 25, 26; Lev. xxvi. 27, 28; Jer. xxxiv. 17; Prov. i. 24, 28. The meaning is, I will be no kinder to them than they have been to me; they have chosen to mock and delude me, I will choose to suffer them to delude themselves; or they have chosen to work wickedness, I will choose the effect. Their fears; that is, (say some,) the things which they feared, and did these things to avoid, as Jer. xlii. 16; Ezek. xi. 8. Others by their fears choose rather to understand such terrors and affrightments as are natural to men upon the prospect of great evils, as Jer. xx. 4: as God in mercy delivereth his people from their fears, Psal. xxxiv. 4; so in judgment he causeth fears as a great judgment to possess sinners, Lev. xxvi. 16; Deut. xxviii. 66. Because when I called, none did answer; because when by my prophets I exhorted you to your duty, very few yielded obedience: see Prov. i. 24; chap. lxv. 12; Jer. vii. 13. When I spake, they did not hear: hearing here signifieth hearkening or obeying; not hearing is expounded by doing evil, and choosing that wherein God delighted not. God accounts that those do not hear who do not obey his will.

name's sake, said, [i] Let the LORD be glorified: but [k] he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed.

The prophet turneth his discourse from denouncing judgment against the idolaters and formalists amongst the Jews to such as feared God, whose religion is described by a trembling at his word, as ver. 2; such a turning of the prophet's discourse was chap. l. 10; li. 1, 7. The same words belong not to saints and presumptuous sinners. Your brethren, by nation, or by external profession in religion, though false brethren, Gal. ii. 4. Thus Paul calls all the rejected Jews brethren, Rom. ix. 3. That cast you out; that either shut you out of their intimate society, or (which is more probable) excommunicate and cast you out of their synagogues, or cast you out of their city, and some of you out of the world, John ix. 22, 35; xvi. 2. For my name's sake, i. e. for my sake, for your owning me and adherence to my law. Said, Let the Lord be glorified; either mocking you, as the Jews did Christ, when hanging upon the cross, Matt. xxvii. 43; Luke xxiii. 35; thus they mocked at David, Psal. xlii. 3. Or, Let the Lord be glorified, thinking they did God good service, John xvi. 2. But he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed; there will come a day when God shall appear and let them know his judgment concerning their violence and rage, then you shall have joy, and they shall be ashamed, 1 Thess. iv. 16—18.

6 A voice of noise from the city, a voice from the temple, a voice of the LORD that rendereth recompence to his enemies.

A voice of noise from the city; the expression of a prophetical ecstasy, as much as, Methinks I already hear a voice of noise, rather a sad and affrighting noise, than the noise of triumphers (as some think); yea, it comes not from the city only, but from the temple, wherein these formalists have so much gloried, and reposed so much confidence. There is a noise of soldiers slaying, and of the priests or poor people fled thither shrieking or crying out. A voice of the Lord; not in thunder, which is sometimes called so, Psal. xxix. 3—5, &c., but that rendereth recompence to his enemies. Thus the noise of soldiers, the roaring of guns, the sound of drums and trumpets, are the voice of the Lord. Thus the prophet seemeth to express the destruction of the Jews by the Roman armies, as if a thing at that time doing.

7 Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child.

The whole verse is expressive of a great and sudden salvation, which God would work for his church, like the delivery of a woman, and that of a man child, before her travail, and without pain. The only doubt is, whether it referreth to the deliverance of the people out of Babylon, or the world's surprisal with the Messiah, and the sudden and strange propagation of the gospel, and it is a question not easily determined. The delivery of the Jews out of Babylon, indeed, was without strugglings or any pain; not like their deliverance from Egypt, after the wasting of their enemies by ten successive plagues, but by the kind proclamation of Cyrus. But it seems not to have been sudden, only as to the day, and hour, and manner; for Daniel understood by books that the time was come, Dan. ix. 2, and the people had a prospect of it seventy years before, Jer. xxv. 12; xxix. 10. The prophecy therefore seems rather to refer to the coming of Christ, and the sudden propagation of the gospel. The popish interpreters applying it to the Virgin Mary bringing forth Christ, is like other of their fond dreams.

8 Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children.

The prophet calls either to the whole world, or to such as feared God amongst the Jews, to admire God in his stupendous works of providence, either in the easy manner of the deliverance of the Jews out of the captivity of Babylon, without any pain, without so much as one throe; or else in the erecting of his gospel church, into which all the Jews that received Christ were gathered as well as Gentiles, making both one, Eph. ii. 14; which seems to be meant by the earth's bringing forth in one day; as great a work of Providence as if all the women in the world should have brought forth in a day, or as if all the plants of the earth had brought forth their flowers and fruit in one day. As soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth children; as soon as the church of the Jews began to move out of the captivity of Babylon, God put it into the hearts of multitudes to go up, Exod. i. 5; chap. ii. 1, 2, &c. Or, as soon as the voice of the gospel put the church of the Jews into her travail, in John the Baptist's, Christ's, and the apostles' times, it presently brought forth. In John Baptist's time, the kingdom of heaven suffered violence, and the violent took it by force, Matt. xi. 12; and it continued so, as three thousand were converted at Peter's sermon, Acts ii. The Gentiles were the children of Zion, being planted into their stock, the law of the gospel first going out of Zion.

9 Shall I bring to the birth, and not ‖ cause to bring forth? saith the LORD: ‖ Or, beget. shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God.

The work before spoken of seemeth not after the manner of men, who do things that are great gradually, nor in an ordinary course of nature, whose motions also bring things by degrees to their perfection; but you must consider who it is that speaketh, saith the Lord; now as is the God, so is his strength. Again, men may undertake things, and for want of power not bring them to perfection; but shall I do such a thing? I have by many prophecies and promises secured you in the expectation of such a thing, and shall I not by my providence effect it? I, that in the ordinary course of my providence use to give a birth to women, to whom I have given a power to conceive, shall I not give a birth to Zion, to my people, whom by my prophecies and promises I have made to conceive such hopes and expectations? Nor shall Zion once only bring forth, but she shall go on teeming; her womb shall not be shut, she shall every day bring forth more and more children; my presence shall be with my church to that end, to the end of the world.

10 Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her:

There is nothing more ordinary amongst men, than for friends and neighbours to meet together with their friends recovered from affliction, or brought into a better state, to rejoice with them, especially such friends as in their afflictions have mourned with them. Thus Mary, Luke i. 40, went to rejoice with Elisabeth, and Job's friends came to rejoice with him, Job xlii. 11. The prophet in like manner calls to all the friends of Jerusalem, especially such as in the days of her affliction had mourned for her, to come and rejoice and be glad with her, upon the prospect of her better state after the Babylonish captivity; or at least in the time of the Messiah; for though joy and gladness be the affection of the soul that works upon its union with its desirable object, and the deliverance of the people out of Babylon was not to be for many years after this, nor the Messiah to come for many years after that; yet faith being the evidence of things not seen, there is a rejoicing of hope, hope giving the soul a union with its object hoped for; and these things were now present to believers, who by faith called the things that were not as if they were, because they had the security of a Divine revelation for them, and they were already existent in their necessary causes.

11 That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the ‖abundance of her glory.

‖ Or, brightness.

Jerusalem is here set out as the mother of us all, as indeed she was; for out of Zion went forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, Isa. ii. 3. Christ was of the seed of Abraham, he was sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and is called, Rom. xv. 8, the minister of the circumcision: they were the olive, the branches; the Gentiles but a wild olive, grafted in amongst them, Rom. xi. 17; we sucked at their breasts; Christ was first preached to them; the twelve, the seventy, were all of them. The breasts of her consolations: the gospel doctrine was their breasts of consolation. Christ was in the first place. Her glory; the glory of the people Israel, though he was also a light to lighten the Gentiles, Luke ii. 32; we are required to rejoice with Jerusalem. That ye may suck, and be satisfied, &c.; intimating that our joy should not be a mere act of charity to them, but a proper expression of our sense of God's goodness to ourselves, who should suck and be satisfied from the glad tidings of the gospel first published unto them, and ourselves be enlightened from what was at first the glory of Israel.

12 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, [l] I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: then shall ye [m] suck, ye shall be [n] borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees.

m ch. 60. 16.
n ch. 49. 22. & 60. 4.

That this promise respects the times of the Messias seems plain, not only from the consideration that no history giveth us any account of any great or long peace or prosperity the Jews had before that time, nor indeed then, if we understand it not of a spiritual gospel peace, which Christ preached to them that were nigh as well as to those afar off, Eph. ii. 17. It also appears from the mention of the glory of the Gentiles as a flowing stream, which can hardly be understood of any thing but Christ, and the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles. But I leave it to the issues of Providence to expound and determine whether the prophecy of this text doth not relate to a further conversion and calling of the Jews than hath yet been seen. When Christ was revealed to the Jews, not those only of the Gentiles, but those of the Jews who belonged to God's election sucked gospel doctrine; the Gentiles were borne upon the sides of Jerusalem, and dandled upon her knees, as first hearing from the apostles, who were some of the daughters of Jerusalem, members of the Jewish church, the glad tidings of salvation.

13 As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

That is, in the most tender and compassionating way imaginable; the husband doth not comfort his wife with that tenderness and those bowels that the mother comforteth the child after it hath received some fall or mischief. Jerusalem now mourneth, and you mourn with her; but she shall recover from her affliction and from her sorrows, and shall be comforted; and you that mourn for her shall partake of her joys, as you now share with her in her afflictions; God, in the day that he wipeth tears from her eyes, shall also wipe them from yours; and you shall have as great an occasion of joy from the happy, as now you have of sorrow from the afflicted, state of Jerusalem.

14 And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and [o] your bones shall flourish like an herb: and the hand of the LORD shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

o See Ezek. 37. 1, &c.

The peace and tranquillity of the church, and the propagation of the kingdom of Christ, is always the cause of a heart-rejoicing to such as fear God, Psal. cv. 3; the reason is, because it is the greatest object of their desires, which are then satisfied, and their thoughts are then at rest; and besides they are members of the same body, so as their own bones, which before are dry and withered, Ezek. xxxvii. 1, 2, and the sinews, and the flesh, come again upon them, and the skin covers them above, so as they flourish like an herb in the spring, all whose verdure and beauty in the winter was concealed in the root hid in the earth. And the hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants; and in this the power, protection, and influence of God for, of, and upon such as truly serve and obey him shall be made manifest and known. And his indignation toward his enemies; but the wicked shall be under a quite contrary dispensation, Psal. i. 4. As they have had a day which hath been to you the power of darkness, so you shall have a day which shall be to them the power of darkness; as God's hand shall be upon and towards such as fear me, to cover, and bless, and influence them, so his indignation shall in that day be showed towards those of your nation who have declared themselves the enemies of the Lord.

15 [p] For, behold, the LORD will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire.

p ch. 9. 5. 2 Thess. i. 8.

Here the prophet comes more particularly to expound what indignation should be showed towards his enemies. The Lord will come with fire; that is, with terrible judgments, nothing being more terrible and wasting than fire; or with fire in a proper sense, understanding it of the fire with which enemies use to consume places brought under their power. With a whirlwind; with a sudden sweeping judgment that like a whirlwind shall destroy this people. With fury; that is, with fervour; for fury properly so taken is not in God, chap. xxvii. 4, but God sometimes executes justice and judgment more smartly and severely. His rebukes: by rebukes he means punishments, for it is said God will execute them with flames of fire. They had contemned the rebukes of his law, now God will rebuke them with fire and sword.

16 For by fire and by [q] his sword will the LORD plead with all flesh: and the slain of the LORD shall be many.

q ch. 27. 1.

This kind of rebuking is also called a pleading with them; so he threatens to plead against Gog with pestilence and blood, Ezek. xxxviii. 22. God at first pleads with sinners by words; but if he cannot so prevail, he will plead with them in a way by which he will overcome by fire, pestilence, and blood. With all flesh; thus he threatens to do with all sinners, or with all the wicked Jews. The slain of the Lord shall be many; to the fire he threatens to add the sword, so as the slain of the Lord, that is, those whom God should cause to be slain, should be many.

17 [r] They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens ‖ behind one tree in the midst, eating swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the LORD.

r ch. 65. 3, 4.
‖ Or, one after another.

That the Jews might not think that the judgments threatened concerned only the heathen, he tells them they concerned them, the idol worshippers amongst them; and not idolaters only, but such as broke his laws about meats, which he had prohibited them to eat. Those that sanctified and purified themselves in gardens, gardens in which they worshipped idols, chap. i. 29; lxv. 3, 4; 1 Kings xiv. 23; xv. 13: the word translated gardens signifieth such as were thick planted with trees, and had groves in them, where they set their idols, 1 Kings xv. 13; hence the idol is called the grove, 2 Kings xxiii. 6; they had also in these gardens pools, where they washed themselves in a way of preparation for their idol worship, as the priest by God's ordinance was to bathe himself, Numb. xix. 7. Behind one tree in the midst; behind one of the trees, or one by one behind the trees. Some think that Achar is here a proper name of an idol, behind which or behind whose temple these idolaters were wont to purify themselves. These gardens were places too as well for brutish lusts as idol worship, as may be learned from 1 Kings xiv. 24; 2 Kings xxiii. 7, and they by these washings thought to make themselves clean. Eating swine's flesh, forbidden Lev. xi. 7; Deut. xiv. 8. And the abomination; either any abominable things, or all those beasts forbidden the Jews for meat, Lev. xi. 9, 10, &c. Some think a particular abominable thing is here meant, and think it is the weasel, which, Lev. xi. 29, is joined with the mouse, which is here next mentioned. The word which we translate mouse being no where found but there, and here, and 1 Sam. vi. 4, 5, 11, 18, some think it is not that creature we call a mouse, (because a mouse is properly no creeping thing; but the word, Lev. xi. 29, signifieth a creeping thing,) they therefore think it rather signifieth some serpent. It is a matter of no great consequence. The sense is, that God would not only destroy the open and gross idolaters and superstitious persons, but all those also who had made no conscience of yielding obedience to the law of God in such things as seemed to them of a minute nature, and such as they easily might have yielded obedience to; he saith that they shall all perish together. In the day of judgment, the idolatrous pagan and papist, and the lewd and disobedient protestant, shall fare alike. It will be a hard thing for a thinking soul to see how baptism, and a membership in the Christian church, should save men from God's wrath, without holiness, more than circumcision and membership in the Jewish church.

18 For I know their works and their thoughts: it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory.

The Hebrew is thus word for word. And I their works, and their thoughts, coming together all nations and languages, and they shall come and see my glory. So that it is necessary for interpreters to supply some words to make out the sense. And the sense will differ according to the nature and sense of those supplied words. We supply the verb know, as Amos v. 12; others supply, I have noted. Others make it a question; And I, should I endure their thoughts and their works? Others, But as for me, oh their works and their thoughts! Some make these words, for I know their works and their thoughts it shall come, one sentence, and to relate to the judgments before threatened, ver. 15, 16, and the latter words a new sentence, and a promise of the call of the Gentiles. If we thus divide the words into two sentences, the former part doth but assert the certainty of the judgment that should come upon this people, and the confirmation or reason of it from the omniscience and justice of God. They have done these things, and I know it, and am of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. I know I have marked their thoughts and works (before mentioned). Oh the vileness of them! Should I suffer, should I endure them? No. It shall come; either the judgments before threatened shall come; or it shall come to pass, that I will cast them off, and then I will gather all nations, &c. So it shall come may either refer to the threatening of judgments in the former part, or the promise of calling the Gentiles in the latter part of the verse. Others make the verse one entire sentence, and the sense thus, Seeing I know their works, &c., or when the time shall come that I shall let them by my vengeance know that I know their works, I will gather all nations and languages. I will gather all nations, I will call the Gentiles into my church, and they shall see my glory; my oracles, my holy institutions and ordinances, which hitherto have been locked up in the church of the Jews, Rom. iii. 2, and been their glory, shall be published to the Gentiles, Psal. xcvii. 6; Isa. xl. 5.

s Luke 2. 34.

19 [s]And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; [t]and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

t Mal. 1. 11.

It is on all hands agreed that this verse is a prophecy of the conversion of the Gentiles. I will set a sign: by sign here some understand an ensign, as the word signifies, Psal. lxxiv. 4, which is a military sign to gather people together; by this may be understood Christ, Luke ii. 34. See Isa. xi. 10. Or, as others, the ministry of the word attended with miracles (often called signs); these were set up among the Jews first, then among the Gentiles. Others (but less probably) understand by sign a mark of distinction, like that mentioned Ezek. ix. 4; so as, saith he, some shall escape and not be destroyed; and for those that shall escape, I will send them to Tarshish, Pul, Lud, Tubal, Javan, to Europe, Asia, and Africa, to all the quarters of the world, (see the Latin Synopsis, and the English Annotations, large discourses of these particular places,) to all nations that had never before heard of God or his true worship. And they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles; and they shall every where preach the gospel, and set up my gospel ordinances and institutions. This was eminently made good upon the apostles leaving the Jews, and turning to the Gentiles, Acts xiii. 46, and more fully after the destruction of Jerusalem, when the believers among the Jews, as well as the apostles, went about publishing the gospel to all people, which was the declaring of the Lord's glory.

20 And they shall bring all your brethren [u]for an offering unto the LORD out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and in ‖litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the LORD.

u Rom. 15. 16.

‖ Or, coaches.

Those who are the children of Abraham (not considered as the father of the Jewish nation only, but considered as the father of many nations, and as the father of the faithful, or who are the children of God, being believers, and receiving Christ, and so are your brethren, how contemptible soever you judge them) shall be brought out of all nations for an offering to the Lord. God will have no more offerings of bullocks, and rams, or lambs, but of men and women, reasonable services, Rom. xii. 1; he will have an offering up of the Gentiles, Rom. xv. 16. And because the Gentiles are many of them far off from Jerusalem, and as yet farther off from God, Eph. ii. 17, God will find out fit means for this end, as horses, and litters, and mules, and swift beasts are, to bring men and women long journeys. And they shall be brought into the church, which began at Jerusalem; and this you may be assured of, for the Lord hath said it, who cannot lie nor repent. And they shall come with as much joy and gladness, with as much sincerity and holiness, as the godly Jews use and exercise when they bring their offerings in clean vessels.

21 And I will also take of them for [x]priests and for Levites, saith the LORD.

x Ex. 19. 6. ch. 61. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 9. Rev. 1. 6.

Lest the Jews, being assured that the tribe of Levi, which God anciently chose to minister before him, was among them, should say, Alas, if the Gentiles should be brought in, where would they have priests or Levites? God here by his prophet tells them he would provide priests, he would take of them, of these converted heathens, for priests and Levites, that is, for gospel ministers, to teach and to instruct people, which was the priest's work of old, Deut. xxxiii. 10; 2 Chron. xvii. 7, 9; Mal. ii. 6; for they are mightily mistaken that think the priests among the Jews had nothing to do but to sacrifice and burn incense, which work is ceased. Saith the prophet, God will find amongst the converted Gentiles those who, though they be not of the tribe of Levi, or house of Aaron, yet they shall do the true work of priests and Levites.

22 For as [y]the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the LORD, so shall your seed and your name remain.

y ch. 65. 17. 2 Pet. 3. 13. Rev. 21. 1.

This whole verse is only a promise of the perpetuity of the gospel church, and the not failing of the additions to it of such as shall be saved till the world shall have an end.

The new heavens and the new earth; the new state of the church to be raised up under the Messias. As I intend that shall abide, so there shall be a daily succession of true believers for the upholding of it; for if believers could fail from the earth, the church, made up of them only, as the true members of it, must fail also.

a Zech. 14. 16. † Heb. from new moon to his new moon, and from sabbath to his sabbath. a Ps. 65. 2.

23 And [a]it shall come to pass, that [†]from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, [a]shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD.

In the gospel church there shall be as constant and settled a course of worship (though of another nature) as ever was in the Jewish church. Christians are not bound to keep the Jewish sabbath or new moons, Gal. iv. 10, 11; Col. ii. 16; but New Testament worship is often expressed by Old Testament phrases. The Jews were only obliged to appear three times in a year at Jerusalem, but (saith the prophet) the gospel church shall worship God from one sabbath to another.

24 And they shall go forth, and look b ver. 16. upon [b]the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their [c]worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh. c Mark 9. 44, 46, 48.

Either the Gentiles, or the sincerer part of the Jews, shall go forth from their places, or from Jerusalem, or go out of their graves, at the last day, and look upon the vengeance I have taken upon these vile idolaters and formalists, for their satisfaction, Psal. lviii. 10; they shall see none of them alive, but they shall see their carcasses. For the worms that feed on their slain carcasses shall not suddenly die, and the enemy's fire burning upon their habitations shall not go out till they be wholly consumed; and after this life, and at the day of judgment, they shall go into eternal torments; see Mark ix. 44, 46, 48; where they will feel a worm of conscience that shall never die, and a fiery wrath of God upon their souls and bodies that shall never go out

OF

THE ARGUMENT

IT was the great unhappiness of this prophet to be a physician to, but that could not save, a dying state, their disease still prevailing against the remedy; and indeed no wonder that all things were so much out of order, when the book of the law had been wanting above sixty years. He was called to be a teacher in his youth, in the days of good Josiah, being sanctified and ordained by God to his prophetical office from his mother's womb, chap. i. 5, in a very evil time, though the people afterward proved much worse upon the death of that good king. He setting himself against the torrent of the corruptions of the times, was always opposed and unkindly treated by his ungrateful countrymen, as also by false prophets, and the priests, princes, and people, who encouraged all their impieties and unrighteousness. At length he threatened their destruction and captivity by the Chaldeans, which he lived to see, but foretells their return after seventy years; all which accordingly came to pass. He doth also, notwithstanding his dreadful threatenings, intermix divers comfortable promises of the Messiah, and the days of the gospel; he denounceth also heavy judgments against the heathens nations that had afflicted God's people, both such as were near, and also more remote, as Egypt, the Philistines, Moab, Edomites, Ammonites, Damascus, Kedar, Hazor, Elam, but especially Babylon herself, that is made so great a type of the antichristian Babylon in the New Testament. Upon the murder of Gedaliah, whom the Chaldeans had made governor of Judea, he was forcibly against his will carried into Egypt, where (after he had prophesied from first to last between forty and fifty years) probably he died; some say he was stoned.

Whatever else we hear mentioned of his writings, they are either counterfeit, as the Prophecies of Baruch, &c., or it is likely we have the sum of them in this book, though possibly some of his sermons might have had some enlargements in that roll which, by his appointment, was written by Baruch, chap. xxxvi. 2, &c.

CHAP. I.

The pedigree, time, and calling of Jeremiah; confirmed against his excuses, 1—10. His visions of an almond rod and a seething pot, 11—14. His heavy message against Judah, 15, 16. God promiseth him his assistance, 17—19.

B. C. cir. 629. a Josh. 21. 18. 1 Chro. 6. 60. ch. 32. 7, 8, 9. THE words of Jeremiah the son of Hilkiah, of the priests that were [a]in Anathoth in the land of Benjamin:

The words, i. e. sermons or prophecies, which he received from God, (as being his mouth to declare them unto the people,) and comprised all in the volume of this book going under his name, as the matter and substance of them. See on Isa. ii. 1. The son of Hilkiah: as this serves to distinguish him from other priests, so his being of Anathoth ranks him among the common priests; not that high priest mentioned 2 Kings xxii. 8, under whose progeny Jeremiah is not named, 1 Chron. vi. 13; who, it is probable, would have been named, being one of so much note, and who always lived at Jerusalem, not at Anathoth, which was a city three miles from Jerusalem, lotted out of the tribe of Benjamin for the priests, Josh. xxi. 18. Of an ordinary teacher he was made a prophet, not so the rest. In the land of Benjamin, i. e. that part of Canaan that fell to Benjamin's share.

2 To whom the word of the LORD came in the days of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, [b]in the thirteenth year of his reign. cir. 629. b ch. 25. 3.

The word of the Lord; either that commission from God that did authorize him to his prophetical work, as it may probably be taken, John x. 35, was actually given unto him, ver. 10; or, command of God, as it is used, 1 Kings xii. 24; or rather, the materials of which his prophecies were to consist, for the space of forty-one years successively, in Judea, viz. from the thirteenth year of Josiah to the eleventh year of Zedekiah, besides the time that he prophesied in Egypt. See chap. xliii., xliv., as Isa. ii. 1. In the days of Josiah, i. e. during his reign and reformed state of religion. Amon; who corrupted again that religion by those idolatries that his father Manasseh had in the latter part of his reign so well reformed by rooting of them out, 2 Chron.

xxxiii. 21—23. In the thirteenth year; by which it appears that Jeremiah prophesied the last eighteen years of Josiah's reign; for he reigned thirty-one years, 2 Kings xxii. 1.

3 It came also in the days of Jehoiakim c ch. 39. 2. the son of Josiah king of Judah, [c]unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah d ch. 52. 12, 15. the son of Josiah king of Judah, [d]unto e 2 Kings 25. 8. the carrying away of Jerusalem captive [e]in the fifth month.

It, viz. the word of the Lord, as ver. 2, came also in the days of Jehoiakim; called at first by Josiah, Eliakim, 2 Kings xxiii. 34. Jehoahaz and Jehoiachin, whereof the former reigned before him, 2 Kings xxiii. 31, the latter succeeded, 2 Kings xxiv. 8, are conceived not to be mentioned, because they reigned but each of them three months, and therefore not considerable, the Scripture often taking little notice of a small time, as of six months: compare 2 Sam. v. 5, with 1 Kings ii. 11: see ver. 2. Zedekiah; of whom read 1 Chron. iii. 15, 16. Unto the carrying away of Jerusalem captive, i. e. the inhabitants of Jerusalem, namely, under Zedekiah, 2 Kings xxv. 11, during all which time, things standing in that state and condition, Jeremiah prophesied. This doth not terminate the time of his prophecies, for he prophesied also both in Judea, and in Egypt afterwards; but only relates to what he prophesied while the city and temple were standing, the rest seeming rather to be added as a supplement, than to be reduced unto this general title of his prophecies. In the fifth month, viz. of that present year; for though the year end not at the fifth month, yet it might end the year of Zedekiah's reign, because he might begin his reign at the fifth month of the year.

4 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

Then, i. e. when he was first called to his office; or, The Lord then began to speak unto me. Me; a change of the person, a thing very usual with the prophets.

Before I formed thee in the belly, i. e. womb, Isa. xlvi. 3. Having spoken before of the time of his call, ver. 4, he now speaks of the manner of it. I knew thee, i. e. approved and appointed thee, as a fit minister for this work. Words of knowledge among the Hebrews note affection, as hath been formerly noted. I sanctified thee, viz. not with saving grace, though that need not to be excluded; but accordingly I prepared and ordained thee for this public service; and thus with Paul, Gal. i. 15, where both are expressed. See the like use of the word Isa. xiii. 3. He speaks thus to Jeremiah, not to the other prophets, because he stood in need of greater and more direct encouragement than they, both in respect of the tenderness of his years, and also of those insuperable difficulties which in those most degenerate and corrupt times he must unavoidably encounter with, which might cause him to decline the work, ver. 6. Unto the nations; either with reference to place, to other nations besides the Jews, as appears, chap. xliii., xlvi., xlvii., &c., taking the Jews in among them, as chap. xxv. 17, 18, and so unto may be taken for against, as it is often expressed in those places and elsewhere; or with reference to time, to people of all times, who may be instructed by this book, or whose words are made use of, both by several prophets of the Old Testament, as Daniel, Ezekiel, Nehemiah, &c., and by our Saviour in the New; by Matthew, chap. ii. 17, 18; by Paul, 2 Cor. vi. 18; and by St. John, Rev. ii. 23.

i Ex. 4. 10. & 6. 12, 30. Is. 6. 5.
6 Then said I, [i]Ah, Lord GOD! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child.

Ah! an introductory interjection, making way for his excuse in a way of grief and complaint, endeavouring with all reverence to clear himself of undertaking such a work rashly, it being properly the sigh of one that hath too great a weight upon his shoulders. I cannot speak; not dumb, as Zacharias, Luke i. 20, 22, nor stammering, as Moses, Exod. iv. 10, 14; but not with that becoming gravity and commanding majesty as is suitable to a prophet; he modestly excuseth himself, from a consideration of the weight of the work, and the tenderness of his age, as in the next expression. I am a child; either, 1. In years, and so not ripe or apt for the declaring of great things, and that to princes and nobles. Or, 2. In experience, being altogether unskilful in such affairs, not having been used to prophesy, and therefore in neither respect likely to be much regarded.

7 ¶ But the LORD said unto me, Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and [k]whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.
k Num. 22. 20, 38. Matt. 28. 20.

Say not, I am a child; do not plead excuses. Thou shalt go: this is God's answer to Jeremiah, in respect of his sense of his own inability. This may be by way of command, and then it is a check to his timorousness; Thou shalt go, therefore draw not back. Or by way of promise, and then it is a satisfactory answer to his excuse, as both proceeded from a sense of his own insufficiency: q. d. Fear not, I will make thee eloquent and courageous. To all: this relates either to persons or things. To all, i. e. to all persons to whom I shall send thee; thou shalt balk none: see Rev. x. 11. Or, upon all, so is the Hebrew; and then it is, Thou shalt go upon all errands and messages that I shall send thee. See Isa. lv. 11; Acts xxvi. 16.

8 [l]Be not afraid of their faces: for [m]I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the LORD.
l Ezek. 2. 6. & 3. 9. ver. 17.
m Ex. 3. 12. Deut. 31. 6, 8. Josh. 1. 5. ch. 15. 20. Acts 26. 17. Heb. 13. 6.

Be not afraid of their faces; their fierce looks, Ezek. iii. 9, the indication of their enraged minds, Dan. iii. 19; neither when thou deliverest my message to them, nor when thou mayst be cited before them, Matt. x. 18, 19. This is God's answer to Jeremiah's fears in respect of the persons he was to deal with, as the other was in respect of his own consciousness of insufficiency; and he mentions their faces, because the majestic countenance of princes and magistrates is apt to strike a great awe and terror upon children. I am with thee; I will not only send thee as other kings do their ambassadors, but I will go with thee. This God promises to Moses, Exod. iii. 12; Deut. xxxi. 6, 8. To deliver thee: here God promises his protection for encouragement.

9 Then the LORD put forth his hand, and [n]touched my mouth. And the LORD said unto me, Behold, I have [o]put my words in thy mouth.
n Is. 6. 7.
o Is. 51. 16. ch. 5. 14.

Then the Lord put forth his hand: God having before excited the prophet to his work by command and promise, doth now in a vision establish and confirm him, either by the hand of an angel, Isa. vi. 6, 7, or rather, by himself in some visible shape. Touched, Heb. came upon, as the word is used, Judg. xx. 41, hereby enabling him to speak; or, Thou shalt be my mouth to deliver my words; partly, to let Jeremiah understand that they were God's words; and partly, to intimate that they should be effectual; and partly, that he should never be without them, but continually supplied. See the like kind of phrase chap. v. 14. And he adds, Behold; q. d. Attend to what I am about to say; or, Look upon this outward sign, and let it assure thee of the thing signified.

10 [p]See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to [q]root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.
p 1 Kings 19. 17.
q ch. 18. 7. 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.

I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms: having now received his commission, he is directed to whom he is to go, viz. to the greatest, not only single persons, but whole nations, as the Babylonians, Persians, and Egyptians, and exhorted to greatness of mind, as being sent as an ambassador from God, to deliver his messages without flattery or cowardice; and that he might make that proud people sensible of their folly, that looked upon themselves as above reproof, he gives unto his prophet this large authority. To pull down, i. e. to prophesy that I will pull down; which I will as certainly effect as if thou hadst done it thyself; for, according to Scripture usage, the prophets are said to do that which they foretell shall come to pass, Gen. xlix. 7; Ezek. xliii. 3, i. e. to pronounce destruction; hence God is said to slay them by the words of his mouth, Hos. vi. 5; and so are all the following expressions to be understood. To build and to plant; metaphors taken from architects and gardeners. Either the former words relate to the enemies of God, and the latter to his friends; or rather, to both conditionally. If they repent, he will build them up, i. e. he will increase their families, and plant them, viz. settle them in the land, chap. xxiv. 6. If they do not, he will root them up, and pull them down, &c. He will do the contrary. Compare this with chap. xlii. 10, and xlv. 4. The reason why God useth so many words to the same purpose seems to be, partly to show how deeply all kind of wickedness and contempt of God had taken root; which possibly may be one reason why he placeth pulling down and rooting up before building and planting, to show what a deal of rubbish there was to be removed before he could reform and repair his church and state; or rather, because the prophet was to begin with these in his prophecy, as appears by his second visions, ver. 11, 13; and partly to quicken the prophet's zeal against them.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, what seest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond tree.

This and the boiling caldron, ver. 13, is thought to be at the same time, and in the same vision, when he was first appointed to his work. A rod of an almond tree, viz. that had leaves, and possibly blossoms, on it, like Aaron's, Numb. xvii. 8; for without leaves at least it is possible he had not so readily guessed of what kind it had been. This is a tree that blossoms early and speedily, and hence hath its name in Hebrew soaked, signifying watchful, forward, nimble, or quick; and so it may point at either God's readiness to smite, ver. 12, which is described elsewhere by summer fruit, Amos viii. 1, 2; or Israel's ripeness to be smitten, as we have the like Ezek. vii. 10, 11; or both; this rod being like a portentous comet, showing to Jeremiah the miseries that were at hand, as the death of Josiah, which soon followed this vision, 2 Kings xxiii. 29, and the taxing them by Pharaoh-nechoh, 2 Kings xxiii. 35, and presently after the breaking in of the Chaldees, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, 2 Kings xxiv. 2, and then the Babylonian captivity, 2 Kings xxiv. 10, which happened in the eighth year of Jehoiachin, 2 Kings xxiv. 12, when Nebuchadnezzar took him with others, and carried them away, about twenty-three years from hence; and about the fortieth year Jerusalem was taken, and the temple burnt.

12 Then said the LORD unto me, Thou hast well seen: for I will hasten my word to perform it.

Thou hast well seen; or, Thou hast seen and judged right; or, as the Hebrew, Thou hast done well to see, i. e. in seeing so. I will hasten; word for word, I will almond-tree it, i. e. I will be upon them speedily, in a short time, and suddenly, ere they are aware; or, I will watch, and be ready to accomplish this in due time. My word, i. e. my word of threatening against Judah and its inhabitants.

13 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying, What seest thou? And I said, I see [r] a seething pot; and the face thereof is [†] toward the north.

[r] Ezek. 11. 3, 7. & 24. 3.

After the smaller punishment from the Lord follows this of the boiling pot, by which understand Judea and Jerusalem, as may appear by the application that they themselves make of it in a way of scorn and derision, Ezek. xi. 3, 7. Some put the face of the pot for the pot itself; as the face of the cold, the face of his anger, for cold and anger itself: q. d. I see a pot coming, meaning the Babylonian army flowing in upon them, like boiling or scalding water, as some interpret it: but this seems not to be so congruous to the vision; but rather thus, the Babylonians should besiege; as a fire plays round the furnace when it is to be made boil, so should these Chaldeans begirt it, as ver. 15, and reduce the inhabitants to most miserable extremities, with unspeakable cruelty, as if they were like flesh roasting by the fire, or boiling in a pot, as their sufferings are described, Micah iii. 3. The face, or front of the pot, or furnace, the place where the fire was put in or blowed up to make it boil; as a pot, hanged in the form of a furnace, seems to be all but one and the same pot or vessel, the face of which may be easily conceived to stand toward the north, not the mouth of the pot, for that looks directly upward, unless we conceive it to be represented in the vision leaning, of which conceit there is no need. Is toward the north; indicating from whence their misery should come, ver. 14, viz. from Chaldea, which lay north from Jerusalem.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, Out of the [s] north an evil [†] shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land.

[†] Heb. shall be opened.

The Lord said; explained this vision. Out of the north, i. e. from Babylon, a metonymy of the subject; for though it lie eastward, yet it is north from Jerusalem, as lying four degrees more from the equinoctial. See ver. 13. Shall break forth; it shall be withheld or restrained no longer in my treasure; I will let it out, viz. that evil of punishment represented by the fire. Of the land: though God gave almost all the then known world to the king of Babylon, yet here he understands the land of Judea, chap. xxv. 9.

15 For, lo, I will [t] call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall [u] set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah.

[t] ch. 5. 15. & 6. 22. & 10. 22. & 25. 9.
[u] ch. 39. 3. & 43. 10.

I will call; or, I am upon calling, it is at hand, I am about to incline the northern countries to join together in this work, chap. vi. 22; x. 22; xxv. 9, 26. The families, or kindreds, viz. those divers countries and nations that were under one lord, as a chief ruler is called the father of his country. The kingdoms, viz. the Babylonians and their assistants, the Medes also being in confederacy with them, whose king's daughter Nebuchadnezzar married. They shall set every one his throne; their seats, pavilions, or tents shall be pitched, which shall be as so many thrones, where I will see my judgments executed by the Chaldeans, chap. lii. 4. At the entering of the gates; at the entering to the gates, or way leading to the gates, Judg. ix. 35; 2 Kings vii. 3; chap. xliii. 9, which besiegers have always a special regard to, that there be no going in or coming out, Isa. xxii. 7. Against all the walls thereof round about; they shall begirt it round, noting the great multitude, power, and courage of the Chaldeans. Against all the cities; there were none of them should fare any better than Jerusalem.

16 And I will utter my judgments against them touching all their wickedness, [x] who have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands.

[x] Deut. 28. 20. ch. 17. 13.

I will utter my judgments; cause sentence to be passed according to my threatening. See chap. xxxix. 5. Or, I will place my bounty and their unworthiness before them. Or, I will upbraid them with their ingratitude, rebellion, and breach of covenant, &c. I will speak with them by thee, Jeremiah, and others of my prophets. Who have forsaken me; either noting the persons against whom, or rather the cause for which, because they have forsaken me; the same particle being so used chap. xiii. 25, and elsewhere; or their sins whereby, as it is also expressed, chap. xvi. 11; xxii. 9. Burnt incense unto other gods, i. e. worshipped strange gods; a synecdoche of the part for the whole. The works of their own hands, i. e. their idolatrous images, expressed here by a periphrasis, Isa. ii. 8.

17 ¶ Thou therefore [y] gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee: [z] be not dismayed at their faces, lest I ‖ confound thee before them.

[y] 1 Kings 18. 46. 2 Kings 4. 29. & 9. 1. Job 38. 3. Luke 12. 35. 1 Pet. 1. 13.
[z] Ex. 3. 12.
‖ Or, break to pieces. ver. 8. Ezek. 2. 6.

Gird up thy loins: by this expression God quickens and hastens him upon his work, not to stand hesitating, but to be doing; prepare thyself: for it is a speech taken from
